QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise to a question of privilege, for the purpose of correcting a misstatement in a report contained in a very respectable journal indeed, the Toronto Mail, and I have no doubt the misreport was in consequence of an accident or misapprehension. The report is as follows:—

"Mr. BOWELL. That statement is made for a purpose. May I tell the hon, gentleman it is just as false—

"Mr. CHARLTON. As false as hell? (Laughter)." I did not use that language, and I do not wish to take from the Minister of Customs the laurels that belong to him in that regard.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: "That the Resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means on Tuesday last, the 23rd instant, be read a second time:" and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the House on a subject which has engaged its attention for the last few days, I must claim the indulgence of members on both sides. There has been an exhaustive debate on questions of particular interest to this country, on questions on which hom, members on both sides of the House do not see eye to eye. Probably we have been brought up in different atmospheres and under different political circumstances, and while the members of each party are endeavouring to do what they believe to be right and in the interest of the country we cannot agree, it is therefore important that a full, complete and ample discussion should take place on all these important questions. We have heard during the last few days many eloquent speeches from the other side of the House lauding the financial policy of the Government, and particularly landing the fiscal policy of the Government. We on this side of the House are opposed both to the financial and fiscal policy of the Government, believing they are both contrary to the best interests of this country. We believe that the financial administration of public affairs by the Government now in power, has not been in the interests of the country. We were told yesterday by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) that the policy of the Government deserved the endorsation of every individual in the country, that, when compared with the financial policy of the Liberal Government, under the able leadership of the hon, monber for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), the Conservatives had a right to be proud of their policy. The hon, centleman proceeded to show that during the Liberal Administration there was a succession of deficits, and he quoted from the Public Accounts to show that, during four years out of the five years the Liberals were in power, there was no less than $6.500,000 of deficit incurred. In connection with that statement he said that during that time the taxation of the people did not decrease. If the hon, gentleman will turn up the Public Accounts, on page 30. Roman numerals, he will find he was mistaken in that statement, and I am astonished that he did not notice that the taxation of the people during those four years of deficit did decrease. The hon, gentleman has said that we had $6,500,-(80) of deficits during the years 1874-75, 1875-76, 1876-77, 1877-78, and 1878-79, while the taxation remained fully as high as before. The taxation during the first year of the Liberal Administration was $20,644,878, and the average taxation of the other four years during which there were deficits was only $18,159,000, or more than $2,500,000 less than during the first year of the Administration of the Liberal party. But the hon, member did not tell the House that there were deficits during the

did not tell the House that during four years of their Administration deficits occurred, not of $6,500,000, but of $10,500,000, an average deficit of $2,500,000, as compared with one of $1,600,000 during the Administration of the Liberal party. But the hon, gentleman did not tell the House that the taxation of the people increased largely when the Conservatives had the deficits. average taxation during the Liberal regime was $18,195,000, but under the Tory Administration during the years of their deficits the taxation of the people was $24,317,000, or an increase of over $6,000,000, with a deficit of $10,500,000. I ask the hon, gentleman to compare the statement in that light, and he has the figures before him, and I am sure he will conclude that I am giving a fair statement of the facts of the case. But the hon. gentleman, passing away from the deficit, sought to prove that the debt of this country did not bear more heavily on the people of Canada than did the debt of the United States on the American people. When we consider the cause of the debt of the United States to be the great war which was commenced in 1861, and raged with tremendous force for four long years, and increased the public debt of that country to $2,700,000,000 odd, and when we remember that during the last thirty years they have reduced that extraordinary debt down to $924,000,000, as it was on the 30th June, 1890, we must see that this reduction is indeed remarkable. If the hon, gentleman divides that debt amongst the population of the United States, he will find there is only an average of $14.60 per capita, or, if he divides it as to families, he will find there are only $73 for each family in the United States; and if he takes the interest upon that debt, which amounts to $36,000,000 at the present time, he will find that the per capita rate is only 57 cents, or $2.85 per family. Now, Sir, I will throw in the State debt, in order to show you the extraordinary difference between the rate per capita in this country and in the United States. This State debt of the United States amounts to $229,000,000, the country debt amounts to $200,000,000 and adding thereto. the $924,000,000 national debt, it makes a total of $1,353,000,000. But, Sir, if we divide that by the population of the United States, we will find that the per capita tax upon the people of the United States is only $21.50, whereas the per capita tax on our debt in Canada amounts to $46 per head, $230 per family, and the interest amounts to $1.85 per head, or $9.25 per family, as compared with $2.85 per family in the United States. The hon. gentleman made another comparison. He stated that the expenditure last year in the United States was something like $346,000,000, but he must remember that he included in that $346,000,000, $48,000,000 which was credited to the sinking fund, so that if he subtracts $48,000,000 from $346,-000,000 he will find that in all the other departments of the Government there were only expended $297,000,000 by the United States. But he told the House that we had a great many payments in Canada which they had no corresponding payments for in the United States, and, therefore, the comparison between the two countries, without throwing out these extra expenditures, would not be a fair and just one. Well, that is true. Let us throw out from both accounts the expenditure which one bears, and which the other does not. The hon, gentleman spoke in regard to the subsidies to the provinces amounting last year to $3,905, - pected that I should follow the member for Mr Macdonald (Huron)

L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins), who spoke for such a long time yesterday, on the various ways in which he presented his conclusions. likely that I will read to you from Mr. Gladstone's answer to Mr. Blaine's letter, from which the hon, gentleman read very copious extracts yester-day. It is not very likely, or is it expected from me, that I will follow him into the relations of the continental powers and spend half an hour talking on that subject, as he did yesterday. We are not here for the purpose of discussing the questions arising in foreign countries, but we are here as practical men for the purpose of considering the questions before us, in reference to the interests of our own country, and in reference to its advancement; and in order to be practical we must come down to practical things. We were told yesterday that the National Policy had accomplished a great deal. We were told that it had raised this country from a period of depression to a period of progression. We were told that it brought us from a condition of despondency to a condition of hopefulness. We were told that it brought us from a condition of financial stringency to a period of cash in abundance; from a period of declining foreign trade to a period of enlarged commerce; from a period of emigration to a period of immigration, and from a period of dependence on the United States markets to an independence of the United States markets. Sir, we were told yesterday that we were brought from a period of a desire for reciprocity, to a period of repudiation of reciprocity even in natural products. But, Sir, I want to examine this National Policy in some of its details, and ascertain, if possible, if the benefits attributed to the National Policy have been realized by the people of Canada. We have been told frequently in eloquent language by the hon. Minister of Finance, by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, by the hon. Minister of Justice, and by their followers in this House and in different parts of the country, that our foreign trade was being increased; that although the protective policy had tended to prevent us realizing the markets of the United States to the extent we desired, yet in their absence there were markets beyond the sea and in other parts of the world which were being opened up to the export trade of Canada. Let me read to you some remarks made by Sir John Macdonald in 1882 in reference to this particular question. He was pointing out the great efforts being made under the National Policy to extend our trade with for-He made reference to the efforts eign countries. made by the Liberal party, and in asserting their failure, he proceeded to express himself in these words:

"I am not aware—my memory may be at fault—that those gentlemen opposite ever made a single advance to any foreign nation, or sought to develop the trade of Canada in any port of the civilized or uncivilized world. I believe it was in our time that the development and extension of our trade was commenced, and I am proud to say that our mother country is truly a mother country in the best sense of the word, always assisting us, especially of late, in any attempt or any expressed desire of Canada for the development of her trade with any and every country in the world. " We commenced at once to extend our trade. In the first place we went to a nation on this side of the Atlantic, and we have got the official, the not estentatious, but, to a great extent, the expressed assistance of Her Majesty's representative at the Court of Brazil, and we have now a line running monthly between Canada and Brazil, and although that trade is in its infancy, I think the indications are clear that one of our best markets in the future will be Brazil. The commodities of the two countries are of such diverse nature that we can profitably send our productions to Brazil and receive hers in exchange."

Now, Sir, that was a very plausible speech. Government attempted to establish a trade with Brazil, and what assistance had they in that attempt? First, they had the assistance of the mother country; secondly, they had the assistance of the British Minister at the Court of Brazil; thirdly, they had a diversity of products to exchange with that country, one product being the complement of the other; fourthly, they had a line of steamers running between the ports of the Maritime Provinces and Brazil at that time; and fifthly, they had the advantage of the National Not a single word could be said against that speech in 1882 when Sir John Macdonald delivered it; it appeared plausible from the first line to the last. But eight years have since passed; and the course of that trade will show what hon. gentlemen opposite have accomplished during that time under the National Policy and by all the favourable circumstances to which Sir John Macdonald referred. Let us see. In 1882, when Sir John Macdonald spoke, our export trade with Brazil was $493,000. This was the trade which he expected to enlarge almost beyond bounds. Now, let us see what all this assistance has brought to the Government during these eight years. Our trade last year with the same country was $352,200, or $141,000 less than it was when Sir John Macdonald made this speech, and our average annual trade with Brazil for these eight years was only $352,700. I ask the members of the Conservative party if they are satisfied with the condition of this export trade, which has depreciated 30 per cent. during those eight years? But, Sir, the hon. Minister of Finance has been particularly eloquentalso in pointing out the prospects and possibilities of trade in other directions. Hear what he has said in regard to our trade with the West Indies. On that subject he has spoken eloquently in every Budget speech which he has delivered, and 1 think I have heard them all. He says that the West Indies produce a great many things which we require in this country, and that we produce a great many things which they require. That is They want flour, but they go to the United States for it; they want pork, but they go to the United States for it: they want to sell sugar, but they sell it principally in the United States; and so on through all the lines of trade. But, Sir, the hon. Minister said:

"I have had something to do with steamship lines to the West Indies, and I am able to state that a very profitable market stands open in that direction for nearly every product."

Now, what has been the result? When the hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was at the head of the Government, it was said by Sir John Macdonald that he was doing nothing at all in the direction of extending our foreign trade. Now, Sir, I find that in 1878 we sent to the West Indies $3,765,000 worth of goods. But in order to consider this question in a fair way, I have divided the years from 1873 to 1890, inclusive, into three periods of six years each. The first period extends from 1873 to 1878, inclusive, the second from 1879 to 1884, inclusive, and the third from 1885 to 1890, inclusive; and when I speak of the first, second and third respectively, hon, gentlemen will know to what divisions of time I refer. In the first period our annual average exports to the West Indies were $3,765,000—that was under the Liberal Administration; in the second they were $3,239,-000; and in the third period, $2,469,000; or a decrease under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite and the regime of the National Policy, and with the advantages of two steamship lines, one from St. John and the other from Halifax to the ports of the West Indies, of 34 per cent. Surely hon, gentlemen opposite are not satisfied with such fruits of the National Policy. Then, Sir, we have been told that our trade is largely extending with Australia, that country far across the seas. Now, Sir, in the first period our trade with Australia amounted to $160,000, not a very large trade; in the second period it amounted to $268,000, showing an increase for which I give the Government credit; and in the third period it amounted to $420,000. But, between the year before last and last year, there was a decrease of $190,000 in our export trade with Australia. And you must bear in mind, Sir, that this export trade is largely from one of the western provinces. $170,000 of the total went from British Columbia, and not one single dollar's worth of farm products was shipped from this country to the markets of Australia; so that these markets have not been opened to our farmers and do not furnish an outlet for our agricultural products, which can only find an embargoed market in the United States. How often have you heard, Sir, hon, gentlemen opposite speak eloquently of the trade established, or about to be established, with China and Japan. We were told, last year, and the year before that, and then it was reiterated this year again by the hon. Finance Ministhat there are great possibilities establishing a permanent and profitable trade with those countries across the Pacific Ocean. Well, we find in the first period to which I referred, that our average trade with those countries was $46,000 annually, and that was the period during which we had not the facilities of to-day. We had not at that time the Canadian Pacific Railway spanning the continent, and the Canadian Pacific Railway steamships crossing the Pacific Ocean; and, consequently, we could not reasonably expect our trade to be, ten or twelve years ago, anything like what it should be now. But what is the result? In the second period to which I referred, our trade with China and Japan was $64,500, or an increase of about $22,000. the third period, our trade amounted to $73,500; an increase over the first period of only $27,500; but under the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), when we had no communication with the western route at all, we sent, in 1878, from this country $102,500 worth, although we had not the Canadian Pacific Railway or a line of steamers on the Pacific Ocean. This does not show that the foreign trade policy of the Government has been a success to the country, considering the advantages they had at their disposal, which the Liberal Administration had not. But, again, look at the efforts made to establish a trade with France. France is a country with which we should have a large foreign trade. She is a country whose language, customs and manners are the same, and who worship at the same shrine as one-third of our people, and, therefore, it would be reasonable to expect that we would send to Company.

Mr, MACDONALD (Huron).

France a large portion of the articles they consume, and import from that country much of the goods we consume. But what has been the result of the Government's policy in regard to France? In the first period, our exports to France amounted to $389,000, and in the third period to $365,000, or a decrease of $20,000; and in 1878, when the Mackenzie Administration was in office, our exports to France were $369,400, whereas in 1890, the last year of the present Administration, they only amounted to $278,500, a decrease of $90,900.

ROYAL ASSENT TO BILLS.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I next come to deal with our export trade with our sister colony of Newfoundland. During the first period, our average export to the Province of Newfoundland was $2,064,000; during the second period it fell to $1,795,000; and during the last period of six years, under the influence of the National Policy, it fell to $1,523,000, showing a decrease from the first period to the third period of 26 per cent. But it may be said by some of the supporters of the National Policy that it increased our trade relations with Great Britain, the country with which we are so intimately connected, and with which I hope we shall continue to be intimately connected. But even with Great Britain the National Policy has failed to extend our trade. Let me draw your attention to the following facts, which are at the disposal of any one who will examine the record placed at our disposal by the Government. During the first period, under the administration of the Liberal party of Canada, our total average trade with Great Britain amounted to $93,617,000, in the second period it was $84,526,000, and in the last period it was $84,419,000, or a decrease of our trade with Great Britain from the first period to the third period of $9,198,000, or about 10 per cent. we will take the exports to Great Britain and see how they stand. In the first period the average export amounted to $42,003,000, in the second period to $45,312,000, and in the third period to $42,426,000, or an increase between the first and the third period of $423,000, or only I per cent. Then take the imports from Great Britain, and you find that during the first period they amounted to $51,633,000, during the second period to $42,516,000, and during the third period to $41,996,000, or a decrease from the first to the third period of $9,637,000, or about 19 per cent. What was our trade with the United States during the same periods? Our total trade with the United States in the first period amounted to $81,670,000, in the second period to $81,770,000, and in the third period to $88,172,000, so that the increase of our trade with the United States from the first to the third period was $6,502,000, or 8 per cent. Then take our export trade. We exported to the United States in the first period $31,863,000, in the second period $37,639,000, and in the horizon a cloud the size of a man's hand, indicating a third period $40,102,000, or an increase from the change of policy to our advantage."

first to the third period of \$8,239,000, or 25 per cent. Then, if we take the imports from the United States, we find that in the first period they amounted to \$49,823,000, in the second period to \$44,434,000, and in the third period to \$48,072,000, or a decrease between the first and the third period of \$1,751,000, or about $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Now let us compare the condition of our trade with the United States with the condition of our trade with England by percentages. I have shown that the decrease in our total trade with Great Britain has amounted to about 10 per cent., while our total trade with the United States has increased by 8 per cent. I have shown that the exports to Great Britain have only increased by 1 per cent., while there is an increase in our exports to the United States of 25 per cent. Further, I have pointed out that the imports from Great Britain have decreased by 19 per cent., while the decrease in our imports from the United States only amounts to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The English markets are free. There is no barrier to keep us out. The markets of the United States are barred against the introduction of many of the products of Canada, and yet in spite of the National Policy our trade with the United States is growing, while our trade with free trade England is decreasing, proving, beyond a doubt, that the United States market is the natural market for Canada. My hon, friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) spoke the other night in these words:

"The National Policy is calculated to develop foreign

If it has been calculated to develop foreign trade, it has certainly come very far short of the calculation. Further, the hon. gentleman said:

"Its aim and purpose is to develop foreign trade." If that is so, it has come far short of its aims and purposes. In view of the figures I have quoted, and in view of the returns which have been laid on the Table of the House, I will ask the hon. member for Albert if he believes that the foreign trade of our country is being developed. The hon, member for Albert tells us what his impression is as to the English markets. He says:

"The English market for our farmers, as every one knows who will study our statistical tables, has been a growing market. We sell twice the bulk of agricultural products in the British Islands than we did forty years ago, and during the same interval the American market has shown no growth whatever."

I do not think it is a very extraordinary development of our foreign trade that it should be doubled with Great Britain in forty years, but, when the hon, gentleman says that our market with the United States has been at a standstill ever since, it is clear that he has not understood the statistical tables which show that our whole trade with the United States derived from the fisheries, the forests, the minerals and every other source of export amounted to only $8,931,000 forty years ago, while now in agricultural products alone our export trade with them amounts to nearly $14,-000,000. Yet, the hon. gentleman tells us that our trade with the United States was practically at a The hon, gentleman was not satisfied standstill. with that, and he thought he might hold out some hope for the future. He says:

I suppose he took this idea from what the prophet of old saw after three years of drought. He goes on:

"That may not afford our hon, friends opposite as much pleasure as it does us, but it excites in some of us the hope that, before we are many years older, we may, by means of new political adjustments, find in the old country, for the products of our farms, a larger market than we have hitherto found. A very small difference of duty, a duty of 5 or 7 per cent, in the English market in favour of our wheat, and our barley, and our beef, and our mutton, and our poultry, and our eggs, and our lumber, would guarantee the very rapid building up of this country."

Sir, he believes that the English people are going to come to the rescue of Canada, because Canada, under its own fiscal policy, has failed to extend its But, Sir, do you believe that such an event willever transpire in Britain? Does the hon, member believe for a moment that from that cloud will come a party actuated by the protective spirit of fossil Tories of fifty years ago, and roll back the wheels of British progress fifty years? No, Sir, rain will come from that cloud that will drown out every one of those protectionists, and the English free trade sky will be clear again, and a rainbow will appear which will indicate that no such fossil Tories will ever appear again. And what does that policy mean? Supposing that England adopted a policy giving a preference to colonial goods in the British Li would mean an addition of £40,000,000 market. sterling to the price of the food supply of the English people, or $200,000,000,$5 for every man, woman and child in England, $25 additional expenditure every year for each family in England. Sir, what would be the consequence? They say the English farmers would be benefited by an increased price of farm products, and if there were an increased price in England the colonies sending in their products would receive the same price in the English markets, and an increased price in the colonies means an increased price to every man, woman and child who consumes food in Great Britain. what would be the consequence if the English farmers were more prosperous than they are now? The landlords would raise the rents, the farm labourers would ask for additional wages. The labourers, mechanics and factory hands of England, on account of this additional expense of would demand from their employers additional wages, and the manufacturers would have to put on an increased price upon manufactured goods throughout England, and then that would handicap the manufacturers of England in the oreign markets in competition with the other nations of the world. Do you suppose that England would ever consent for a moment to consider a policy that, from first to last, would injure every class of the people, and not only injure the classes of people living in the country, but would injure to a great extent that renowned position which England occupies in the various markets of But, Sir, that policy of Imperial fedthe world eration is not entertained in England by the leading statesmen of that country. A few days ago a deputation from the Federation League called upon the Premier of England, Lord Salisbury, in reference to this policy, and he answered them in the following words:-

"The league, however, said the Premier, must work hard to convert their countrymen to the league's way of thinking, for it was impossible for England to give preferential treatment to the colonies at the expense of the rest of the world. The league must first ascertain how Mr. MacDonald (Huron).

far the country would support the policy of which, he imagined, a prominent feature was a preferential tax on grain, wool and meat. Englishmen, in his opinion, would never consent to legislation of a vague or indefinite kind, especially where their dearest daily interests were concerned."

Still further, he says:

"The difficulties have been often stated, but I will just refer to them again. If you give preferential treatment to your colonies it must be, of course, as Sir John Macdonald said, that you tax the similar goods of the rest of the world. If you give a preferential treatment—that is, a better price—to your colonies, it must be a better price than that which, with unrestricted competition, is obtaining now. A better price to the producer means a more disagreeable price to the consumer."

Sir, I do not see much hope for the hon, gentleman in the cloud, and if he puts his hope and his aspirations in a cloud that is rising over Britain, as a means of improving the prosperity of the people of this country, it is time that the party he is supporting on the Government benches should be placed on the Opposition side of the House, and allow abler and better men who can grasp the necessities of the country, to formulate a policy better calculated to further the interests and the prosperity and advantage of this great country. Now, I think I have demonstrated that the National Policy has not been successful in establishing a foreign trade, and I will next consider it from another standpoint. The question may be asked, why the Liberal party is opposed to the National Policy. Well, the first reason is the one I gave, namely, that the National Policy has not been successful in establishing a foreign trade; in the next place the National Policy has been a failure because it has not given to the farmers of this country what was promised them in 1878. The National Policy, it was promised, would benefit and foster the agricultural industries of this country. Now, I ask, in presence of facts and figures which cannot be disputed, if it has accomplished the ends which it had in view? Mr. Speaker, there are only three ways in which the agricultural interests of this country can be bene-The first, if the fertility of the soil can be increased, the farmers of the country will be benefited, and I do not suppose the most ardent supporter of the National Policy will say that it has ever increased the fertility of the Canadian soil. The second way in which the farming industries will be benefitted and fostered, is by giving the agricul-turists a better price for what they produce. Now, has the National Policy given a better price for what they have produced?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). My hon. friend from West Assiniboia says "yes." Now, I think I can prove in a very few moments, from facts and figures which cannot be disputed, that the prices given to the farmers since the National Policy was adopted have been far less than the prices they have obtained under the tariff of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). I have gone to considerable trouble in getting figures upon this matter; I have examined fyles of the papers for the last fifteen years; and I have taken the same date, namely, the 5th day of March each year. I have examined fyles of the Mail, I have examined fyles of the Monetary Times, so that I might have correct statements from the farmers' markets in the city of Toronto on the 5th of March of each of these years. I have taken the average price from 1874 to 1878 for five years, and I have taken the average price from 1878 to 1889, ten years, and I will now give to my hon. friend the results of my hard work in the following table:—

Article.	Old Tariff.	National Policy.
	S ets.	S ets.
Wheat	1 11 ·	0.96
Barley	$\begin{array}{c} 1 & 11 \\ 0 & 55 \end{array}$	0 65
Oats	0 42	0 38
Pease.	0 71	0 66
Dressed hogs, per cwt	7 04	6 80
Butter	0 23	0 20
Apples, per barrel	2 69	2 30
Hay, per ton	18 00	11 00
Wool	0 34	0 22

In the face of these figures, and I guarantee their correctness, I ask if under the National Policy there has been an increase in the prices of those principal agricultural products? On an average crop each farmer of the Dominion will lose, from the reduction in prices, about $90. the National Policy, in the face of these facts, brought prosperity and advancement to the farmers of this country? But I object to the National Policy, next, on the ground that it does not keep our people at home. I will be told by the hon. gentlemen opposite that I am commencing the old tirade against my country. Tirade against my country! How could I do that? There is no country under the face of Heaven so dear to me as Canada, and if I am constrained to show that our country is in a depressed condition, it is because I feel that I have a duty to perform to Canada, the condition of our people commercially and financially, and suggest a plan for the improvement of their circumstances, and it is the present duty of the Government to discard the present policy and give the country one more suited and beneficial to the interests of the people. How often have we heard from the Treasury benches that we are disloyal to our country, that we are unpatriotic, that we declare that our people remove to a foreign country to add to its strength, dignity and advancement; and that, when these statements of ours go before the world and are read in Britain, Germany and other countries, the people no longer propose to come to Canada, but turn their faces to Africa, Australia, or elsewhere. Then, we are told that we have sent more people into the United States, by our speeches and arguments, than have been sent there by American agents; that those agents have taken our speeches and printed them and circulated them to people passing across the continent, many of whom, instead of settling in Manitoba, have become settlers in Northern and Southern Dakota, or other parts of the Western States. is unpatriotic, on our part, to thus speak of our country, was it not equally unpatriotic on the part of the late leader of the Government, who, in 1877-78, travelled from one end of the country to the other, making statements of a similar nature when the necessity for them was not so urgent as at the present time? He told the people from every public platform, and from his place in Parliament, that the country was going to the dogs, and that hundreds and thousands of people were flocking to the American States. I am not overdrawing the picture, and in order to prove that the Conservative party can be charged with disloyalty and unpatriotic conduct if the Liberal party can, I will read some extracts from speeches delivered by Sir John Macdonald during that period.

Mr. DAVIN. No.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon, gentleman does not want me to read them because they will not be palatable to him. Sir John A. Macdonald delivered a speech in Montreal on 7th July, 1877, to which I desire to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance. I do not suppose there is an hon, gentleman opposite who is more ready to point out that we are decrying our country, belittling our country, telling the world that our people are going away, than is the Minister of Finance, and I ask him to listen to what his late leader said so frequently. In that speech as reported in the Mail, which at the time was a good Conservative paper, Sir John Macdonald said:

"Our credit was good in England, in the United States and all the world over, but, gentlemen, what do we see now? Instead of confidence there is distrust. Instead of solvency, look at the official Gazettes, and every Saturday they show a long string of insolvencies."

I might remark there were one thousand more insolvencies in Canada during the last six months than there were during the first six months of the preceding year. He continued:

"Look around you, and you see the horny hands of toil asking leave to labour. They are now beggars. They do not desire to have silver spoons placed in their mouths, but they desire to have a fair day's wages for a fair day's work."

The poor Canadian people at that time were beggars. What a splendid speech this would have been to send to Germany and England to induce immigrants to come here. He proceeded:

"But what do we see? We see them drifting off to the United States. We see the skilled artizans, the stronghanded young men and the active young women of Lower Canada drifting off to Lowell, to New Hampshire, to Maine, to Connecticut, adding to the wealth, to the power and the strength of a foreign nation, and depleting poor Canada."

Great tears no doubt dropped from the old man's eyes when he had pronounced the words "poor Canada." There was the patriotism of the great man who has lately, I am sorry to say, left us; there was the patriotism and spirit of loyalty that permeated the breast of the man who built up and led the Con-Was he acting servative party for 40 years. as a disloyal man? And was he the only disloyal man among them? I do not think so. There was another great man, who filled the position of Min-ister of Finance several years, and from whom great things were expected, Sir Leonard Tilley, and it could scarcely be thought that he, too, would be unpatriotic and decry his country as he did. It is said that history repeats itself, and after reading an extract from that gentleman's speech, I will show how history repeats itself. Sir Leonard, in his Budget speech delivered on March 14, 1879, referring to what he had said in his Budget speech of 1873, spoke as follows :-

"I could point with pride and satisfaction to the increased capital of our banks and the large dividend they paid to-day I regret to say that we must point to depreciated values and to small dividends. Then I could point to the general prosperity of the country. To-day we must all admit that it is greatly depressed.

"Then we could point to the agricultural interest as most prosperous, with a satisfactory home market and satisfactory prices abroad. To-day they have a limited market with low prices, anything but satisfactory market abroad abroad.

"Then everything appeared to be prosperous. To-day, although it looks gloomy, I think there is a silver lining to the cloud that we may yet see illuminating the whole of the Dominion and changing our present position to one of happiness and prosperity.

If that were true in 1879, how true is it now in the light of the experience of the last ten years. possesses greater truthfulness and fairness to-day, when we have this picture: Now, depressed values; 1879, greater prosperity. Now, depressed agricultural condition; then, a satisfactory home His silver lining was the great National Policy which has absolutely failed to benefit the people. Our gold lining is brighter; it is that of broader trade relations with the greatest market in the world. Before long the Liberal party will change seats in this House with those who occupy the Treasury benches, because the people of the country are commencing to see the golden lining, and are stretching forth their hands to grasp it, and they will put into power the party which they know is capable of carrying out to full completion the arrangements which will place at our disposal larger and better markets, upon an equitable basis, with the great nation to the south of us. We were told the other night by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that although our people were removing from the country, it was on account of their nomadic tendencies. He says: They were born so; they were born in one part of the east and they were sure to wander westward. Do we not belong to the same class of people now that we belonged to ten years ago? If that argument is good now, it was equally good ten years ago, when Sir John Macdonald charged the exodus upon the shoulders of what he called the insane Government of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie). Now matters have changed around, and we are told by gentlemen upon the other side that the exodus is owing to our peculiar nature: we are told that it is the nature of the white people to go westward, and that they are now taking the advice of Horace Greeley when he said: "Young man, go west." It appears to me that a large portion of the people of Canada are taking that advice and going west. But the hon member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) says, that although the people are moving westward, they have gone to Manitoba, to the Canadian North-West or to British Columbia. Is that the case? Do all our people go to the far West; do they take up their habitation in Manitoba, the North-West Territories and in British Columbia? Why, Sir, there are not over 200,000 in the whole of the North-West provinces, and for the last twenty-one years the efforts of the Government have been directed towards populating those territories, and they have spent over $3,000,000 in bringing immigrants from the old country to Canada and the North-West. Where have those people gone?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They are like the blue bonnets—over the border.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Sir, during the last few years the Government would insist that these people were all in the North-West Territories, but it was shown by the last census that no less than 123,000 people were lacking in the North-by the Government. Where have those people gone? We were told by W. C. B. Graham, immigration agent of the Government in Winnipeg, that no less than 10,000 of those, whom we put there at a great expenditure of money, had gone from British Columbia to the cities in the United States: to Seattle, San Francisco, Sacramento, Tacoma and other cities on the Pacific. The people have gone into the North-West, but they have gone again into the United States; because they find it a cheaper country to live in, and because those young men and young women who leave us find better prospects there for the future. Sir John Macdonald told us that the National Policy, or, as he called it, "a just and equitable adjustment of the tariff," would stop this movement. Has the exodus ceased since the National Policy came into force? I call upon any hon. gentleman in this House to say if it has ceased. It is no use giving us learned disquisitions upon political economy, but let hon. gentlemen opposite come down to solid facts in connection with our own country, and let them show us that the National Policy has been beneficial on the whole to the varied interests of the country. How many of our people left our country during the years of the Liberal Administration? The highest estimate given by the Conservatives of that day was 22,000 each year. No person was more sorry than I was to see our able-bodied men and women, the flower of our population, leaving us to find a home in a foreign land. But, Sir, since the time of the Liberal Administration there have been nearly four times 22,000 leaving this country every year and going to the United States. These figures may be denied, but it is the simplest thing in the world to make a calculation to show as nearly as possible the exact number of people who have left Canada for the United States since 1882. We know that in 1881, the year of the last official census, we had a population in Canada of 4,345,293. The natural increase in any country should be nearly two per cent. of births over deaths, but I only estimated one and a half per cent., so as to be under rather than over the number, and one and a-half per cent. of natural increase would give us 651,784 persons of an increase since 1881. Now, by turning up the report of the Minister of Agriculture, I find that 917,977 immigrants came to Canada who stated their intention of remaining here. If we add these numbers together we should have a population of 5,913,054, but the estimated population to-day by the Government is 5,150,000. If you subtract 5,150,000 from the population which we should have of 5,913,054, we find that there are 763,054 of our population unaccounted for. Where are these people gone? They have left our country, they are not here, and, therefore, we have an exodus of 76,300 every year under the influence of the National Policy, whereas we had only an exodus of 22,000 under the policy of the Liberal Administration, led so ably and so honestly by the hon member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). Father Hamon lately placed a book on the French Canadians before the public, and in that book he states that not less than 400,000 French Canadians are in the Eastern States, and that there are no less than 200,000 in the Western States, making a total of 600,000 French Canadians who are now in the United States and who ought to be with us here. But. West Territories who were counted as being there Sir, when you find that the corner-stones of our whole national fabric have been leaving us to become the foundation stones of a foreign country, need we wonder that there is a depression in this country, and that the policy which has been inaugurated by hon. gentlemen opposite has been a complete failure in keeping our people at home. In fact, Sir, the lines of "Fidelis" addressed to the Old party, are particularly applicable here:

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

"Ye send our best and brightest forth, our nation's hope and pride—

More precious to our country's weal than all her wealth beside—

To be the strength of alien states, of empire not our own,

And all to 'build the nation up' without its corner-stone!"

Yes, Sir, the corner-stones of our national fabric are moving away from us. There is no expense so great as the education of the young men and women in this country. We give them an education in our colleges and universities to prepare them for the period of manhood and womanhood, and when they arrive at that period when their influence should be of vast importance to our country, they move to a foreign state to add to the dignity, power, wealth and moral character of a foreign power, instead of using their influence to advance their native country.

They were drawn away before. Mr. DAVIN. Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Not in such num-They are drawn away more now; the moving power is stronger now. But, Sir, the National Policy has not only failed in this respect, but it also discriminates against the poor man in favour of the rich man. When I say that the National Policy discriminates against the poor man, I mean this: that the prime necessities of the people are the articles on which the Government has placed the highest tariff rates. But I know what argumen; will meet me here. I know that my hon. friend from the far West, who is looking so intently at me, would suggest, if he spoke his mind, that these articles of prime necessity are manufactured in our country, and that, therefore, not a single dollar of duty is paid upon them by the consumer. I do not say that a single dollar of duty is paid on them; it would be better if duty were paid upon them, because it would go into the public treasury to meet the expenses of the country. Instead of that the amount goes into the pockets of the manufacturers in increased prices; but all the same it comes, out of the pockets of the consumers. And, Sir, the greatest authority on finance whom the Conservative party ever had in this country, is one of my authorities for this statement. Sir A. T. Galt, than whom the Liberal-Conservative party never had an abler man sitting on the Treasury benches, stated that whenever a tariff was levied, it increased the price of every article upon which a duty was imposed, whether imported from abroad or manufactured in the country. I place on one side his authority, and on the other side I place that of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and I ask the country to choose between

Mr. DAVIN. I have got a letter from Sir Alexander Galt saying that the prices have been lower.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Now, let me give you a few specimens of tariff discrimination against the poor man. If a poor man requires a few common pictures to put on the wall of his room, he has to pay 20 per cent. duty on them; but if my hon, friend from West Assiniboia wants to import from abroad a picture of high art, he gets that picture free of duty. If I want a cheap coat in which to go into the country to see my patients, I take Canadian tweed, on which I have to pay 45 per cent., but if my hon. friend, dressing as well and stylishly as he generally does, and as popular among the ladies as he generally is, chooses to put on better clothing than I can afford, and, consequently, buys broadcloth, he gets it at a duty of 25 per cent. I need a heavy overcoat because I have to drive out in inclement weather, and I get Canadian tweed, on which I have to pay 45 per cent.; but the hon. gentleman, who walks about the streets of the great city of Regina, buys a finer coat, on which he has to pay only 25 per Now, Sir, he being a rich man and I a poor man, does not this prove that the tariff discriminates against the poor? Then, the labouring man who works on the farm, in the lumber woods, or on the public works of Canada, needs strong shirting, on which he has to pay 65 per cent., while my hon. friend gets the fancy shirting which he puts on during the summer at 24 per cent. My musical friends, if they cannot afford to buy grand pianos like the rich people, but who nevertheless are fond of music—because musical taste is not confined to the rich-they have to buy a cheap organ on which they pay from 50 to 70 per cent.; but if my hon. friend who is rich wants to buy a grand piano to adorn his parlour and to afford amusement to his daughters, he gets it at a duty of from 35 to 50 per cent. Now, he may be rich in daughters and rich in many things, but the tariff discriminates in his favour and against the poor man. The poor men who go into the lumber districts want heavy, grey shoddy blankets to keep them warm in the shanties; they have to pay upon them a duty of from 80 to 100 per cent.

Mr. DAVIN. They do nothing of the kind.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I beg pardon. Take one of these shoddy blankets which the retailer buys for a dollar, it weighs 8 pounds. The duty would be 10 cents for each pound in weight and 20 per cent. on its value. Now, 8 times 10 are 80, so that upon that blanket the poor man has to pay 80 cents along with 20 cents on the dollar, which amounts to 100 per cent. There it is proved to you. But if my hon friend wants a fine, soft French blanket of great value but very little weight, for his delicate skin, he pays on it from 60 to 70 per cent., whereas the poor man who has to lie on a board in the wilderness covers himself with a shoddy blanket on which he has to pay 100 per cent. You cannot get over it, because it is the truth, and the man who gets over the truth has to do it in a dishonest way.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He gets under the blanket.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Then, Sir, take earthenware. I am sure that the hon, gentleman does not sit down to a breakfast table on which there is common earthenware. I have no doubt he sits down to a table furnished with China cups and saucers and dishes, which he gets for 30 per cent.; but the poor man has to pay 35 per cent. upon his common crockery. I might go on almost ad infinitum, giving item after item in which the National Policy discriminates against the poor and in favour of the rich man. Therefore it is a policy not adapted to this country. But, Sir, passing on, I am opposed to the National Policy on the ground that it increases the prices of the prime necessities of the Canadian people, which I can prove, and I have the figures here to prove it. I have quotations of prices which I have obtained from independent parties who did not know for what purpose I wanted to use them. I got a quotation from the city of Detroit and one from the town of Windsor on the same day, on the 5th of December last, showing the price in the two places of a clotheswringer, an article very largely used among the poor people of this country to save manual labour; and the article which was $3.75 in Windsor was selling on the same day in Detroit for $2.50, a difference of $1.25 on this single article of general utility: and if you estimate the number of wringers used in this country at 200,000, you have $250,000 that the users of clothes-wringers in this country pay more than a similar number pay in the American Union. Now take the article of solid steel spades. I have a quotation from Jones, of Gananoque, in December, and I have an independent quotation from Busy, Binns & Co., of Pittsburg, on the same day. According to the quotation from Gananoque, spades are sold there for $10.65 to the retailer per dozen, and according to the quotation from Pittsburg they are sold in that city at $7.80 per dozen to the retailer. Add 30 per cent. for the profit of the retailer, and a spade sells in this country for $1.16 which, with the same profit to the retailer, sells in the American Union for 85 cents, or a difference of 31 cents in favour of the American article. When we consider the number of steel spades used in this country upon our public works and canals and by every farmer in the community, we will find that no less than one million are used, which, multiplied by 31 cents, makes no less than $310,000 which our people pay for solid steel spades more than the same number of people pay for for a like number of these implements in the United Yet, in the face of those facts, we are told that prices have not increased under the National Policy. Again, take the article of coal oil. I have independent quotations of that, too. have quotations from Canada in the month of January, showing that coal oil sold in this country, No. 1 white Canadian oil, to the retailer for 131 cents per imperial gallon; and I have a quotation from the United States, showing that, at the same date, a better article was sold there at 7½ cents per wine gallon. Add one-fifth, being the difference between the two measures, and you have 9 cents for the imperial gallon in the United States, as against 131 cents in Canada. Give the retailer 50 per cent. profit, and you can obtain in the American market a much better oil at 13½ cents than that for which you have to pay 20 cents in Canada. We consume no less than 20,000,000 gallons of oil per year. Multiplying that by 61 cents, and you have no less than $1,300,000 which the people of this country pay more for an inferior, article of coal oil than the same number of people in the United States pay for a superior article. Yet we are told by those hon, gentlemen who give us learned essays on protection, without coming down to solid facts, that the National Policy lowers prices. But that is not all. Take the article of barb wire, which | Eastern Provinces on account of the free trade is manufactured in this country and in the United On the 5th of December I had a States. quotation from the town of Windsor, giving the price of barb wire at retail, at $4.80 per hundred pounds, and I have also a quotation from the city of Detroit on the same date, a city only a quarter of a mile across the river, showing the price there to be $3.30 per hundred pounds. What made the difference? It was the $1.50 per hundred pounds of duty placed upon it by the Canadian Government. Let me give you the experience of two farmers in connection with barb wire, which will show the great difference between living on this side and the other side of the line—the great difference between having free trade and a protective policy. Farmer A left his house, in the neighbourhood of Windsor, on the 5th of December, 1890. He wanted to buy 500 pounds of wire to build a fence 80 rods long. He had no ready money, so he put 50 bushels of barley into his waggon and went to the market. He sold his barley at the market price in the town of Windsor, on the 5th of December, at 50 cents per bushel, realizing $25. He went then to a hardware store and bought the 500 pounds of wire he required, and for which he had to pay $4.80 per hundred pounds, making $24, and leaving him $1 to pay his expenses and take him home. That was his experience. Farmer B, on the same day, required 500 pounds of barb wire for the same purpose, and on the same day left his farm in the vicinity of Detroit with 50 bushels of barley, as he had no ready cash. That 50 bushels he sold in the market at Detroit at 80 cents per bushel, or $40, and he then went to a hardware store and bought his 500 pounds of wire at $3.30 per hundred pounds, making $16.50 for the wire, and leaving him with a balance of $23.50 in pocket. He purchased a suit of clothes for himself at $12, bought stuff for a dress for his wife at $5, bought 40 pounds of sugar at 5 cents per pound, 20 pounds of rice at 5 cents per pound, 2 pounds of tea at 50 cents per pound, and 3 pairs of shoes at 50 cents per pair, and he still had $1 left to pay his expenses. There is a practical fact. How did that come to be known? Farmer A and Farmer B happened to be brothers, and they corresponded, and each gave the other his experi-I would ask the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) who he thinks now, in view of these facts, became the "nomad." I would ask the hon. gentleman which of those men took up stakes and moved westward. Was it the Canadian farmer or the Michigan farmer? I need hardly say it was the Canadian farmer who pulled up his stakes and went to the country where he could sell at the highest price and buy at the lowest. Take the article of salt. The hon. Finance Minister proposes to reduce the duty on salt. There has been a combination among the salt men, not from any dishonest motives, let me tell you, Sir, for I know every one of them, but with the motive of saving their own property and investments. Now, how does the National Policy destroy the salt interests? I come from a county which is the centre of the salt interest. Government have two policies with regard to salt —a free trade policy in the east and a restrictive policy in the west. The manufacturers of Ontario are prevented sending salt to the American market on account of the duties imposed by the United States, and are prevented sending their salt to the

from England and her colonies into this country free, and they reasoned thus. They said: If the farmers of duty. Not only that, but they admitted from other countries last year no less than 40,000 barrels free of duty, not from England and her colonies, but from Italy, Spain, Portugal, St. Pierre and other places, and no less than 600 barrels came from the United States, free of duty, to the eastern How is it possible, our salt industries being shut out of the western and eastern markets by the policy of the Government, they can be suc-More than that, out of the consumption of 800,000 barrels last year in the Dominion, 532,000 were admitted free into the markets of Canada, and those 532,000 barrels carried westward largely by the Intercolonial Railway at reduced prices. No less than 224,000 barrels came free into Quebec, and 210,000 barrels into Nova Scotia, thus supplying the markets in the east at the expense of the markets in the west. But that is not all. The Nova Scotia coal mines are protected in order to enable them to send their coal as far west as possible. They never have sent their coal as far west as the salt pits of the County of Huron, or even as far as the city of Toronto, and still the amount of 60 cents a ton duty is placed on the importation of coal, and consequently the salt interests are to that extent embargoed, for the benefit, it is said, of the maritime coal interests, although no coal comes from Nova Scotia to western Ontario. The salt works would use about 20,000 tons of coal each year, and have to pay a duty of 60 cents a ton on that, which means $12,000 a year and which gives protection to the coal interests of Nova Scotia, but, at the same time, burdens the coal user in Ontario. The fisherman's interests, and the coal interests, and other interests in the east are protected, while the interests in the west are allowed to languish under the policy which now exists. Now, if we are to have protection, let it be just. Let it protect all interests equally, for, in the words of Sir John Macdonald: "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. matter to be considered in connection with the salt manufacturers is that they have frequently to replace the evaporating pans, and each time at considerable expense, which are composed of boiler plate which is not manufactured in Canada, but is imported from Germany, Scotland and the United States, and on which they have to pay a heavy I think the Minister should take off the duty on that article, and place at the disposal of the manufacturers of salt what is a raw material and that they cannot obtain in this country. cost of that duty comes to about $3,000 a year, and the duties they have to pay on rivets and matters of that kind make up the total to over $16,000, which they have to pay, practically, on the raw Is there any fairness in such a policy as material. this, which discriminates against the western salt interests in favour of the people down by the sea, and, at the same time, while we are paying 60 cents a ton duty on soft coal we cannot get that coal from Nova Scotia so far west? The National Policy has brought the salt industry into financial difficulty, in the first place; into an undesirable combination, in the second place; and the consumers into an increased price of many thousands of dollars, in the third place. For a time, in consequence of the great competition, the price of salt was very much reduced. It was sold two years ago for 50 cents a barrel, and everyone was selling it at a loss. The producers then said: Let us come be ground to come in free for the people of policy of the Canadian Government in allowing salt together and let us reason. They came together and the labourers and others who use salt in this country are such confounded fools as to support a National Policy which is killing us, we will combine and put up the price and make these men pay, as we are dissipating our capital at those ruinous rates at which we have been selling in our limited market. We cannot sell salt for 10 cents less than it costs us. They, therefore, agreed together, and the fifteen salt wells went into an arrangement. This causes a difference of 30 cents a barrel on the salt which was used, which amounted to 30 cents a barrel on 232,000 barrels, or $69.600, which the farmers had to pay last year which they would not have had to pay if the National Policy did not exist. They are nearly all Tories who are engaged in the salt industry, but, being embargoed in this way, being able to work only about five months in the year, being shut off from their natural markets, they say they must make reasonable profit for a year in the five months, and the result is that the National Policy has brought the salt interest to the condition in which it is now. Let me read what is said by one of the principal manufacturers. No doubt it will be said that I am speaking for the salt men, but I will give the House a statement made by Dr. Coleman, who was a supporter of the National Policy and is a member of the Conservative party. What does he say?

"To recapitulate—Our capital is sunk or gone. Our industry is tottering. It is unjustly discriminated against by our tariff. Our labourers are leaving the country for want of employment. English salt is coming into this country free of duty, or almost free, at the rate of 200,000,000 pounds a year, while all other goods, or nearly all, are taxed to our detriment. The loyalty cry will not stop the movement of the people across the line, and there must be a halt or else there may be a smash." be a halt or else there may be a smash.'

I think the halt is not likely to come, but the smash is not far in the future. Speaking in regard to the people who are leaving the country, he says:

"It is a sad sight for every thinking Canadian to wit "It is a sad sight for every thinking Canadian to witness, at we did a few days ago in this town, the exodus of a large batch of artizans, and mechanics to Alabama, Dakota, and other states, for the want of employment at home, and to see the town band at the station cheering them on their iourney. There were no tears or lamentations such as I witnessed in other lands where men are expatriating themselves. I venture to add that where the young go some of the aged will soon follow. And why should it be otherwise? They cannot purchase a stove, a pound of soap, a pound of sugar, a pair of boots, a yard of cotton, or a pound of oatmeal, that is not subject to a combine."

This was said before he went into a combine himself.-

"I am, and have been, a faithful believer in the National Policy, but I want to see it work equitably for all. When it leads up to an attack on the rights and liberties of the masses, it brings itself into contempt.

That is the expression of one of the largest salt dealers in the country, and I might go further, but I will not delay the House. I suppose I have given a sufficient number of articles to the House to convince the member for Assiniboia that articles are dearer under the National Policy than they It was announced the other day that were before. sugar was higher on account of the National Policy. It was acknowledged last year, when duties were imposed upon pork, that the duties would increase the price to the New Brunswickers, but that there was a compensation given by reducing the duty on molasses and allowing corn brought in to those provinces. The price of pork was increased on the one hand, and the price of corn and molasses was reduced on the other. I have an objection to the National Policy on the ground that it places a very heavy embargo upon the exports of the farm products of this country. Now, the farmers of this country export a large number of potatoes, no less than 1,054,000 bushels. There is a duty imposed upon potatoes of 25 cents a bushel. I am not going to argue that the Canadian farmer loses the 25 cents, because that might be a matter of controversy. I will divide the duty in order to avoid that point of controversy, and I will say that he loses 15 cents. Now, 15 cents on 1,054,000 bushels is $158,000, that, it will be admitted, the farmers of Canada lose upon their potatoes, which they would save if we had free trade with the Americans. Out of that $158,000, $112,000 comes out of the pockets of the farmers of that little Island from which my hon. friend the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) comes, or $1 for every man, woman and child in that province. I cannot understand for the life of me how that little province elected two staunch Tories to support the Tory Government. Their little province produces over 7,000,000 bushels of potatoes, for which they have no other market in the world than the United States, with the exception of a few thousand bushels sent to Nova Scotia, when three-quarters of a million bushels of those potatoes go into the American markets upon which they cannot help but admit that the farmers lose 15 cents out of the 25 cents duty, and this encumbers their prosperity to the extent of $112,000. Now, Sir, there is more, and I think the Minister of Finance, although he is busy now chatting about something else, would do much better to attend to some solid sense when it is delivered from this side of the House. Let me enlighten him in his further advances along the line which he intends to pursue before long. I will call his attention to the barley question. Now, there has always been a dispute in this House as to who pays the duty on barley. That question has all been settled last fall. You will remember when the McKinley Bill came into operation on the 6th of October, that for a whole month previous to that date, every farmer in this country was quickening his steps in order to get first to the owner of a threshing machine to engage him to bring his machine to his parn which his barley as early as possible. All the farmers were vieing with each other as to who would get him to bring his machine to his barn to thresh out first to the owner of the threshing machine. Why any such hurry? Because the McKinley Bill was coming into operation on the 6th of October, and they wanted to get their barley threshed in order that they might get it to market before that date, and before the McKinley tariff reduced the price of their barley. That fact is enough to satisfy every man as to who pays the duty on the barley. These farmers were not acting from political bias, they were considering solely their own personal interests. Blind political partisanship was wiped away, they saw things in their true light, and then they came to the conclusion that they were losing that much money more on their barley than they got for it previous to the 6th of October. Barley in my town fell from the moment the Mc Kinley Bill went into operation, 20 cents a bushel in one day. But we are told: Oh, the price rose afterwards and we got just as much after the Mc this year, and he received 12 cents and 12½ Mr. MacDonald (Huron).

Kinley Bill took effect as we did the year before. That is only begging the question. Barley was scarce in the United States the year before, the suppply was not equal to the demand, and they were paying more on the other side than they did in the previous year, and that in-fluenced the price to some extent in the Canadian market, and, therefore, to compare the price of the year before to the price of last year was no comparison at all, because the two prices were under different conditions altogether. Now, Sir, how much did the farmers lose on their barley? Counting the loss at 20 cents a bushel, in order to avoid discussion upon the point as to who pays the duty, they paid $1,987,000 to get their barley into the American markets, or in other words the farmers would realize that much less by the effects of the McKinley Bill on an equal exportation to last year, namely, 1889-90. Then I come to eggs. We have heard a good deal about the egg market. The Minister of Finance has sent a gentleman to the old country to investigate the matter and to ascertain if it would be a profitable market for Canadian eggs. I think the agent brought back a favourable report; of course he was told to bring back a favourable report. But I am going to give you practical experiments. We have in our county the largest egg buyer, no doubt, in the Dominion of Canada. He ships annually 1,550,000 dozen. He tried the English markets as early as 1878, when he went there with 10,500 dozen, or over three hundred barrels, and he found on taking them there, that he lost $5 on every barrel, losing $1,500 on the experiment. A year ago last June he sent to the British market a carload of picked or selected eggs. Now, you will understand by picked eggs that they are selected according to size, the largest ones picked out and the smaller ones left behind, in order to have uniformity in size. He sent a carload to England in June, 1890, and he went to England so as to be there when the eggs arrived and push their sale. He says they came in good condition, there were very few breakages, and he sold them and realized a certain sum. On the same day he shipped a carload to the city of New York, consigned to his agent there, and told him to push the sale. He netted 4 cents a dozen more on the mixed eggs he sent to New York than he did on the picked eggs he sent to England. Now, there is a practical experience, and it is worth a whole ton of theory in regard to this matter. Now, Sir, we are told that we are getting as high a price this year as we were last year for our eggs, and the markets of Canada are quoted last year and the corresponding markets this year. That is begging the question. In order to ascertain whether we are getting as much as we should get, we should compare the markets of last year in Toronto and in New York, and see the difference in the margin. I find a difference in the margin last year of from 2 to 2½ cents, which is sufficient to send them to market and dispose of them. In the markets to-day we find the margin runs from 4½ to 6½ cents, making an average of 5½. Taking 2½ from 5½ leaves 3 cents that the Canadian farmer loses by the action of the McKinley Bill upon the egg trade. Sir, I have here a letter from one of the dealers in the County of Huron, and he says that he sent one lot of eggs to the English market this summer, but he has received no return yet. He has sent several lots to the American market cents net, free on board, at Seaforth. He tells me that he was speaking to a Montreal buyer who sent several lots of eggs to the English market this year, and he netted on the first lot 9 cents a dozen and for the second lot 11 cents a dozen, free on board in Montreal, and the western buyer realized 12 and 12½ cents free on board in the town of Seaforth, 500 miles further west than Montreal. He tells me that if the McKinley Bill was not in operation, instead of 10 cents, the average price paid this year, he could pay from 12 to 15 cents. Three cents a dozen on 1,550,000 dozen would be $46,500 that egg buyers would be able to pay into the pockets of the Canadian farmers more than they are now paying for their eggs. And does any hon. gentleman tell me that in face of these substantial and experimental facts, reported by men who have been engaged in that business, that the English market is as profitable to us as the American market at the present time? And what is the reason? Why, we are told that the English market affords a very large demand, and we can find a sale for eggs in the English market at any time. But we cannot find a sale in the English market at as high a price as we can in New York at any time, and that is the essence of the argument. It is estimated by the egg exporters that it takes from five to six weeks from the time the eggs are laid until they are laid down in the English markets. When these eggs go into the English market they are looked upon as stale by consumers, and only second class prices are Eggs from France, Portugal, and Germany, are taken over to England in two or three days, and being considered as fresh, they realize the highest prices, while, I repeat, the Canadian eggs are only reckoned as second class. Eggs, however, can reach New York in a few days at most, and sell there as fresh eggs and bring the highest price. This is the condition of the egg business, and I challenge hon, gentlemen to dispute these facts, because I have taken the trouble to gather them from parties who are thoroughly posted. Then there is the question of horses. It is very well known that England is not the proper market for our horses. We import horses of a certain class from England, but she imports very few from this country. Several attempts have been made to ship horses profitably to England, but they have proved failure. The truth is, that the class of horses we raise here is not the class used there, and unless we change our breed we cannot obtain a market for them. Instead of sending a large number to England, only 125 were shipped last year, while about 17,000 went to the United States, showing that, notwithstanding the high tariff against our horses, the adjoining Republic is our natural mar-The previous tariff had proved prejudicial to the trade, but the McKinley tariff has nearly destroyed it. I am not a horse buyer or a horse dealer, and I do not come before this House to express my own opinion on this matter, but the opinions of practical men who understand their business and know which market is the best. desire now to quote the opinions of some of our horse dealers. Mr. Isaac Rattenbury, of Clinton, says:

"There has been a drop in prices of $25 a head at least, and this during the last month or six weeks since the McKinley Bill menaced the trade."

Let me give the opinion of another large horse buyer in the County of Huron, A. M. Polley, who says:

"The McKinley Bill has knocked the horse trade higher than a Gilderoy kite. The new duty has put a dead stop to the trade. I have been doing and I can do, nothing until the farmers can be brought to see that they must sell for $20 or so less than in previous years."

Let me now give the opinion of a very respectable Conservative, an experienced horse buyer, John McMann, who says:

"Each year there has probably gone out of this section 1,300 horses, which would average $150 to $160 each. Now those horses would not bring more than $125 to $160 each. Or instead of those 1,300 horses at the old price putting into the pockets of the farmers say, $195,600, at present prices they would only bring $162,500, or $31,500 less."

Can hon, gentlemen, in the face of that fact, stated by a man who duderstands the subject, declare that the National Policy has brought prosperity to the farmers and filled their pockets with sufficient money to enable them to maintain their families in comfort? Do not these facts prove that the National Policy has largely injured the farmers in respect to horses? Take next the article of wool. The hon, member for Albert, I think, said that he remembered the time when our farmers sheared sheep in New Brunswick, which was equivalent to saying that it was not worth while to shear sheep there now. Before the National Policy came into force it was worth while doing so, because the farmers got 34 cents to 40 cents for wool, whereas last year they only received from 20 to 22 cents. It will be remembered how eloquent were the Conservatives in 1877-78 in telling the farmers: You are fools to support the Liberal party, for you are only getting 34 cents per pound for your wool, whereas under a national policy, which we propose to introduce, all your wool will be manufactured at your own doors, adding one-third at least to present prices. The farmers, always anxious to get money into their own pockets, believed these assertions, and they are now sorry they did so. At the present time, instead of the farmers receiving increased prices under the National Policy, their wool realizes only one-half what it did at that time. Hon, gentlemen will judge from what I say that the National Policy is a two-edged sword. It cuts into the farmer by preventing him obtaining as much for his products as he otherwise would do, and it cuts into him also by preventing him buying goods in the cheapest market.

Mr. AMYOT. Then they go to the United States.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Why should they stay in Canada? Another objection to the National Policy is that it has been one of the chief causes of the depression in values in this country. I suppose I am touching on another subject in regard to which it may be declared I am decrying the country. I have facts on this subject, gathered from my personal knowledge, not merely guesswork. I know that the sum for which certain farms were sold several years ago, and the prices they have realized during the last one or two years, and as I will give both prices, hon, members will obtain an idea of the depreciation in farm property in my neighbourhood. When I say my neighbourhood, I refer to it with pride. I believe the county I represent is one of the finest in Canada, I believe it is the garden of the Dominion; and when I find that the farmers even in the very best portion of this country are failing to make both ends meet, and have not five cents in their pockets as a surplus at the close of each year, there is something wrong in the policy of the Government. When the industrious farmers of that section, with the push and for $5,500, two years ago it re-sold for $4,200; energy they exercise every day, with the skill and Farm "B" sold three years ago for $4,500, re-sold talent they display in the management of their two years ago for $3,500; Farm "C" sold four farms, fall behind each year, they pick up stakes and go to a foreign land. Has that been the case? Yes. I have known farmers in that section, as every hon, gentleman has known farmers in some other sections of the Dominion, to leave this country. It is no use keeping back the facts from the people. It is just as well to tell the country that the people are in a depressed condition, and putting aside politics and partisanship, we should come together and see if we can devise some method by which the farmers can be raised from the state of depression in which they now are, and placed upon a higher level of prosperity. Well, Sir, the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) told us the other night that property was not depreciating, and he took up a book and he read there the testimony from Mr. Blue, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in Ontario, that in 1882—I think that was the year-the estimated value of lands in Ontario was $632,000,000, and in the year 1888 the estimated value was $640,000,000. That is true, but the report for 1889, as the hon, gentleman said, showed that the total value of land in Ontario in 1889 was only $12,000 more than it was eight years before. Do you think that the 300,000 people, working day in and day out for eight years, going to their work early in the morning and leaving it late at night, putting forth their energy and skill for the purpose of enlarging clearings, and improving their farms and reclaiming waste lands during these eight consecutive years, do you think that the efforts and energy of these 300,000 people did not increase the value of their lands more than $12,000 in eight long consecutive years? Then, Sir, go up into the Rainy River district; some of our people have gone there and made large clearings and extended the acreage brought under cultivation. Go into Muskoka and into Algoma, and you will find some of our people who have wandered out there, and made new clearings and cultivated the land in various ways since 1882. Can any reasonable man contend that all this energy, all this skill and all this application of industry and perseverance by 300,000 people, for eight long years, only increased the value of land in Ontario by $12,000. Sir, if the value of the land was $632,000,000 in 1882, and if you consider all the improvements which have been made, and the expenditure which has been laid out on these lands since then, you will find that they have depreciated nearly $100,000,000 from 1882 to 1889. If the land increased by that sum, then the farms of Ontario are actually worth $100,000,000 less, and of whatever proportion each farm has in that $632,000,000 of total value, each farmer loses that proportion as soon as the farm'goes into the hands of another man. It may be said that if a farmer is left in possession of his farm, it is his homestead, and it is as good for cultivation as it was many years ago; but whether that can be the case or not, the fact remains that the value of the farm has decreased, and that if the farmer wants to realize upon it, he loses money. But, Sir, let me give some of my own knowledge as to the sales of farms which have taken place within a circuit of thirty miles of the neighborhood from which I I need not mention the names of the far-Mr. Macdonald (Huron).

years ago for $4,000, was re-sold two years ago for $3,200; Farm "D" sold five years ago for $5,150, re-sold two years ago for $3,200; Farm "E, comprising 214 acres, sold six years ago for $15,-000, was re-sold two years ago for $11,200; Farm "F" sold five years ago for $7,500, re-sold two years ago for $6,200; Farm "G" consisting of 150 acres, sold six years ago for $11,000, and was resold two years ago for $7,500; Farm "H" sold five years ago for $4,000, re-sold two years ago for $2.700. The total aggregate value of the farms I have mentioned sold during the former period was $49,650, and the total aggregate of their re-selling was $41.700, or as near as possible, $1.000 loss on each farm, or $10 on every acre. Now, Sir, that is the condition of things in the best section in the Dominion of Canada, and if such depreciation takes place in such a section as that, how much more the depreciation must be in the poorer sections of the country. In many places where far-mers are unable to make a living they sell their farms for almost a bagatelle, and move off to the Western States and settle on the prairie That is largely, although lands of that country. not altogether, the effects of the National Policy. But, Sir, the National Policy has done worse than that. I am sorry to learn from the official records that the farmers of our country are mortgaging their lands and chattels to an alarming extent. am not one who would make incorrect statements before this House or any other place. I know that every word I utter is taken down in Hansard, and the public and the farmers of this country can peruse these statements, and easily correct them if they were wrong. If I feel that the Government should relieve the condition of the farmers of this country in some way, then it is my bounden duty as a representative of the people to tell those in authority, that the farmers are suffering from over taxation, and if they can improve their condition in any way, it will be a great blessing to the farmers. We have a statement of the chattel mortgages in Ontario, prepared by the various county clerks, as orderedby the Legislature of Ontario. Let me tell you that a chattel mortgage is about the very last thing a farmer or anybody else will give. When you find the farmer going into a store and buying his goods for the year, and at the end of that year has to give a chattelmortgage upon his personal property, it shows that the farmer is in a very bad condition indeed. If he had any credit, if the farm stood behind him, the storekeeper would not require a chattel mortgage because his credit would stand upon the books, as the farm would be an equivalent for the debt. I was told recently by a practical business man, not far from where I live, that he went to the registry office in the town of Goderich for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the farmers within a circuit of eight miles of the place at which he was doing business. He examined into the circumstances of thirty-seven farmers, and he said to me: How many out of the thirty-seven do you think have their farms mortgaged? I said: I cannot tell you; I suppose half of them, and he replied: Well, there are thirtysix out of the thirty-seven who have their farm mers, for it will suffice to indicate them alphabemortgaged, and he told me further, that there tically. Farm "A" sold fourteen years ago was no mortgage standing against a farm for less than $1,000. I said to him: The thirty-secenthman must be a happy man; but I discovered that he was only happy because he had not yet received his patent from the Crown and he, therefore, could not mortgage the farm. I was acquainted with these farmers to which my friend referred, and nothing surprised me so much as when he told me that such and such parties had mortgages upon their farms, for I was always of the opinion that they were in a prosperous condition and doing well. Let megive you a few tigures here in regard to chattel mortgages, which I take from the official statement prepared by order of the Ontario Government. the County of Brant, from which my hon, friend (Mr. Paterson) comes, out of 437 chattel mortgages there are 238 on the farms. In the County of Essex, out of 540 chattel mortgages 345 are on the farms. In the County of Grey-represented by the gentleman who speaks so eloquently from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), let him listen and learn—out of 1,130 chattel mortgages 921 are on the farms. In the County of Hastings, out of 833 chattel mortgages 589 are on the farms. In the County of Middlesex, out of 723 chattel mortgages 316 are on the farms; Middlesex is doing pretty well in comparison. the County of Victoria, out of 352 chattel mortgages 257 are on the farms. In the County of Wellington, out of 497 chattel mortgages, 317 are on the farms. We, therefore, find that over 60 per cent. of the chattel mortgages in each county rests against the chattels of the farmers, and we find that on the authority of an official document prepared by the order of the Legislature of Ontario.

WAYS AND MEANS-THE TARIFF.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron.) When you left the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I was concluding my arraignment of the National Policy. I will conclude that arraignment by a corroboration from a man who is well known to every public man in this county; a man who has been in public life for many years, and whose ability is acknowledged by friend and foe; a man whose eloquence has often been heard inside of this House, and whose opinions have been quoted by both sides of the House upon every great question upon which he gave an opinion; a man who has received particular prominence at the hands of the Liberal-

Conservative party, especially this session: a man whose abilities have been more highly appreciated by them this year than they have ever been before; and I am sure that when I mention the name of that gentleman, hon. gentlemen will acknowledge that whatever opinion he has expressed on this great question is entitled to much weight. I have pleasure in quoting the opinion of the Hon. Edward Blake upon the effects of the National Policy, in corroboration of what I have said this In his letter to his late constituents in afternoon. West Durham, he set forth his views on this subject in very plain and positive language. Speaking of the National Policy in that letter, he says:

"Its real tendency has been, as foretold twelve years ago, towards disintegration and annexation, instead of consolidation and the maintenance of that British connection of which they claim to be the special guardians. It has left us with a small population, a seanty immigration and a North-West empty still; with enormous additions to our public debt and yearly charge, an extravagant system of expenditure, and an unjust and expensive tariff; with restricted markets for our needs, whether to buy or to sell, and all the host of evils (greatly intensified by our special conditions) thence arising; with trade diverted from its natural into forced and, therefore, less profitable channels, and with unfriendly relations and frowning tariff walls, even more and more estranging us from the mighty English-speaking nation to the south, our neighbours and relations, with whom we ought to be, as it was promised we should be, living in generous amity and liberal intercourse. Worse, far worse, It has left us with lowered standards of public virtue and death-like apathy in public opinion; with racial, religious and provincial animosities rather inflamed than soothed; with a subservient Parliament, an autocratic executive, debanched constituencies and corrupted and corrupting classes; with lessened self-reliance and increased dependence on the public chest and on legislative aids, and possesses withal by a beastful jingo spirit far enough removed from true manliness, loudly proclaiming unreal conditions and exaggerated sentiments, while actual facts and genuine opinions are suppressed. It has left us with our hands tied, our future compromised, and in such a plight that, whether we stand or move, we must run some risks which else we might have either declined or encountered with greater promise of success."

Now, his arraignment of the whole National Policy thoroughly endorses every position have taken this afternoon. It only remains to me. as far as my arraignment is concerned, to recapitulate the points. I have proven this afternoon. have proven that the National Policy has not increased our foreign trade. I have shown that it has not increased prices of farm products. I have shown that it has increased the prices of many goods manufactured in this country and largely used by the poorer classes. I have proven that the National Policy has failed to prevent the exodus of our people by thousands into the United States. I have shown that it prevents our farmers from selling in the dearest and buying in the cheapest markets, and I have proven that under it the value of farm lands have greatly decreased. If that is not a sufficient arraignment, supported by the best authorities, what more can be required to condemn any system or policy of such a character? But, passing from the consideration of the National Policy, we are frequently asked, what policy has the Liberal party to present to the country? Well, Sir, we have that to present to the country? policy which is known as an enlargement of the trade relations between this country and the United States. That is our policy: we do not define it down to the very articles that will be permitted to come into this country and to go into the other, but we, as a Liberal party, have favour of free trade in natural products: but if the United States refuse to grant us that, we are will-We are willing to allow a large ing to go further. proportion of manufactured articles in the United States to come into this country free, provided we are given the same privilege of sending the manufactured articles of this country into their markets We do not say that we can formulate to the very letter the terms of a treaty that might be formed, after consideration of the whole question, but we are liberal on this side of the House, and if we were in power, I am satisfied that, within two years, we could place upon our Statute-books a treaty which would give us great advantages in the United States markets, and give the Americans great advantages in ours. But we are told that we could not get that. We do not know, we are not positive of anything in the future. It was said in 1849 that we could not get a treaty along the lines of the Treaty of 1854. It took us seven long years of continuous negotiations every year to secure that treaty. were refused, year after year, and ultimately, after a thorough consideration of the relations between the two countries, we succeeded, in 1854, in getting a treaty beneficial to Canada. But hon, gentlemen opposite appear to think they can get a treaty in one month. They dissolved Parliament last winter at a very unseasonable period. For what purpose? For the purpose of having a Parliament fresh from the people to consider the treaty they were to formulate with the United States; and yet, in the face of that appeal to the country, not a single step has been taken in order to secure such a treaty. My opinion is, that hon, gentlemen opposite are not in favour of a treaty at all with the United States which will materially widen our commercial intercourse. I make bold here to state definitely, from my place on the floor of Parliament, that it is my candid opinion they have no more intention of seeking a treaty with the United States than they had of getting a treaty with the Sandwich Islanders. Why, their wholehistory for the last two or three years proves that to a demonstration. We were told repeatedly, upon the public platforms and in this House, that they have been in favour of reciprocity for the last twenty years, and that they have placed upon the statutes of this country an offer of reciprocity to the United States. And what is that offer? They place a list of scheduled articles on the statutes, and say to the United States: If you will allow those articles to go into your country free, we will allow similar articles to come into Canada free; or if you will allow them to go into your markets at a less rate of duty than the ordinary duties charged, we will lower the duty on similar articles brought into this If these hon, gentlemen believe what they have been stating for the last few years, namely, that a treaty in natural products would destroy the farmers of this country, what are they offering the United States to-day? They are telling the United States that if they accept that offer placed upon our statutes, it will ruin our farmers, but, they say, we place the ruination in your hands, and if you wish to ruin accept our offer. Does the Conservative party to-day say they are in favour of a treaty in natural products? Not one of them does. I challenge any hon. gentleman opposite to say that he is in favour of a treaty in natural products with the United Mr. Macdonald (Huron).

And if they are not in favour of a treaty, States. and if they are not in favour of interfering directly or indirectly with the National Policy-if, on the one hand, they exclude raw materials or the natural products of the country, and, on the other hand, they exclude the manufactured articles of the country, I would like to know what articles the treaty is going to include. But we were told that Sir Charles Tupper, in 1888, made an unrestricted offer, to the United States, of reciprocity. Now, Sir Charles Tupper never made a bond fide offer to the American Government with regard to a treaty at all. I make that assertion here, as I have made it before, that Sir Charles Tupper never made a bond fide offer to the commissioners appointed by the Washington Government in 1888? And why did he not? He had no power, he had no authority delegated to him to make any such offer to the American Government. Sir, previous to the appointment of the commissioners for the settlement of the fishery question in 1887, Secretary Bayard wrote to Sir Charles Tupper in the month of May. His letter congratulated Sir Charles Tupper upon his patriotism-of course he knew that was one of his weak-He hoped he would be appointed as one of the commissioners who were to meet in Washington the following fall, for which appointment Sir Charles Tupper afterwards asked, according to his own letter, and he was appointed one of the commissioners for Canada to settle the difficulties existing between the two countries. Now, according to the tenor of that letter, a private letter sent by Mr. Bayard, who knew the policy and views of the American Government upon the trade question, who knew what they were willing to do at that very time, Secretary Bayard suggested to him that the whole trade relations of the country should be discussed when those commissioners were appointed, and these are the words of his letter. After preliminary congratulations upon his ability and patriotism, &c., he says:

reatriotism, &c., he says:

"The immediate difficulty to be settled is found in the Treaty of 1318 between the United States and Great Britain, which has been a questio vexata ever since it was concluded.

"I am confident we both seek to obtain a just and permanent settlement—and there is but one way to procure it—and that is by a straightforward treatment, on a liberal and statesmanlike plan, of the entire commercial relations of the two countries.

"I say commercial, because I do not propose to include, however indirectly, or by any intendment, however partial or oblique, the political relations of Canada and the United States, nor to affect the legislative independence of either country."

of either country.

There was an offer just as if he had said to Sir Charles Tupper: You are about to be appointed commissioner; seek to impress upon your own Government, and through them upon the British Government, that they should give powers to the commissioners to negotiate on these lines. But the British Government did not give these powers at all. I believe that Sir Charles Tupper was in favour of more extended trade relations with the United States, but the Government at Ottawa were not in favour of that policy, and no such instructions were given. How do I know that? Here are the instructions issued to the commissioners:

question that may arise which the respective plenipotentiaries may be authorized by their respective Governments to consider and adjust."

"May be authorized." That instruction was issued on the 24th October, 1887. The United States remained for eighteen days after these instructions were issued to the British plenipotentiaries, and then they issued instructions couched in almost the same language, and bestowing the same authority as that which had been bestowed by Great Britain on her plenipotentiaries. Therefore, the whole trade question was outside of the authority which the commissioners obtained from their respective Governments. Let me read the instructions which were given to the Washington plenipotentiaries:

"To meet and confer with plenipotentiaries representing the Government of Her Britannic Majesty for the purpose of considering and adjusting in a friendly spirit all or any questions relating to rights of fishery in the seas adjacent to British North America and Newfoundland which are in dispute between the Gevernments of the United States and that of Her Britannic Majesty, and any other question which may arise and which they may be authorized by their respective Governments to consider and adjust."

You will observe that the language is nearly ver-Sir Charles Tupper said that he made an offer to the plenipotentiaries to settle the question on a wider basis of the trade relations between the two countries. He had no power to make such an offer, and the offer nor the answer to the offer was It was said that it might be put in the protocols. found in these protocols, but, when the protocols came down to this House, I found that the offer was printed on a fly-sheet and was not signed by anyone, but was issued, as it was marked, "By the authority of the Privy Council." Can it be Can it be said that Sir Charles Tupper made a bond fide How could be do that when on the floor of this House every man who rose condemned, at the very time Sir Charles was in Washington, reciprocity, stating that it would the interests of the Canadian farmers? true that, when Sir Charles Tupper came back he knocked the bottom out of many of their speeches. It was rumoured that there was a fracas in one of their cancus meetings and that Sir Charles Tupper said that, if the policy he advocated was not in accord with the views of the Conservative party, he would step down and out, and did step down and out and went back to his office and. At that time the party in in the United States was in favour trade. They were Democrats, and the in England. power of free trade. President and the Secretary of State were in favour of extending their commercial relations, and many of the Republicans of that day were strongly in favour of widening the trade between Canada and the United States. But it was not expected that in 1890 a little star would appear from which the Ministers here thought they could see a little light. They found that the colony of Newfoundland was trying to obtain extended trade relations with the United States, and they decided that this great Canada could not allow that little Island to settle its own affairs without their interference, so they wrote to Lord Knutsford stating that they desired that no further step should be taken by Newfoundland in regard to that treaty, until Canada was placed in the same position. Then Lord Knutsford was instructed to inform Sir Julian Pauncefote, and by this side wind our Government tried to get an introduction of some scheme of reciprocity. Then they went to the country and told the again that people that the whole of the negotiations were initiated by the United States Government, and Mr. Blaine gives the lie to that in a communication which came from him and was placed on the Table of the House. Let me read what he said. This is in a letter which he addressed to Sir Julian Pauncefote. After referring to several other matters, he says:

"In view of the fact that you had come to the State Department with these proposals, and that the subject was then for the first time mentioned between us, and in view of the further fact that I agreed to a private conference, as explained in my minute, I confess that it was a surprise to me when several weeks later, during the Canadian canvass, Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper both stated before public assemblages that an informal discussion of a reciprocity treaty would take place at Washington after the 4th of March, by the initiation of the Secretary of State. I detail these facts because I deem it important, since the matter has for some weeks been open to public remark, to have it settled that the conference was not 'initiated' by me, but, on the contrary, that the private arrangement of which I spoke was a modification of your proposal, and in no sense an original suggestion from the Government of the United States."

That proves that Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper falsified the facts on the public platforms of this country, and Secretary Blaine stated in an open letter to his friend Mr. Baker that he was not the first initiator of the interview that was proposed to be held after the 4th March, showing that the whole scheme from beginning to end was an electioneering dodge. I am informed on good authority that before the elections came off, one gentleman was sent west to interview the leaders of the party there and ascertain whether it would be wise to bring on the elections a year before the expiration of the constitutional limit of Parliament: and that another was sent east to ascertain the opinion of the leaders of the party in that direction; and I understand that these two gentlemen brought back the statement that unless the Government went to the country at once, the popularity of the free trade policy would be such that they would be swept from office. Then they said to themselves: If we go to the country we must have some plea along the lines of reciprocity: we will make out that we are just about going to Washington to negotiate a treaty along the lines of 1854. And what were the lines of 1854? That treaty included the natural products of the farm. Now. Sir, I can prove from speeches of hon, gentlemen opposite that nearly every single one of them are opposed to the establishment of a treaty along the lines of 1854. Let me call attention to this fact, that even during this debate, many of those who have spoken upon the question have stated that the United States are not our natural markets. Why, then, seek to get our natural products into a market that is not our natural market? The Finance Minister stated in this House the other day that the United States were not our natural The Minister of Agriculture has stated on different platforms, in various parts of the country, that they are not our natural market. Here we have statements from prominent men in the Government who have told us that the United States are not our natural market, that their market is glutted, that they have far more than they can use of every particular article that our farmers send there, consequently there is no use Members and seeking a market in that direction. followers of the Government have stated time and they were opposed to procity in natural products. I see an hon, gentleman opposite me, the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who, I am sure, would never support a treaty along the lines of 1854. The hon, gentleman made an eloquent speech here last year and the year before, in which he stated that it would destroy the interests of the Canadian farmers if we had a treaty in natural products. And in order to enlighten him, as he has forgotten it, and in order to enlighten his party, and to show the inconsistency that prevails among them, I will read a few extracts which will edify him and instruct my hon. friends on this side, as to the position that the would-be Minister of Agriculture takes upon this question. On page 3045 of the Hansard of 1890, he says:

"I would like to ask the farmers of Canada whether they would be willing to allow the bogus cheese and butter that is made by millions of pounds over in that country, to be sent into our own country to the destruction of one of our most important industries."

Well. Sir, reciprocity along the line of 1854 would destroy that industry, according to your doctrine, and, therefore, you are opposed to the proposition of the Government. Then he goes on:

"There is no farmer in Canada to-day that could prose-cute that industry profitably as he now does, if we had unrestricted reciprocity."

Now, unrestricted reciprocity would not affect that more than restricted reciprocity, because reciprocity, according to the principle of 1854, would include this very article as well as the other, so that he is opposed to reciprocity in natural products. Then, speaking of pork, the hon. gentleman says further on:

"If the price advances only half a cent a pound, and it will be that at the very lowest computation, it means on 15,000,000 pounds of pork, $76,030 for the farmers. Taking other lines of products, and beef, on which there would be a duty of three cents a pound, it is easily understood what an important advantage is given to our farmers" what an important advantage is given to our farmers. Again he says:

"In my part of the county there is a great deal of attention given to raising plums; we ship about 10,000 bushels a year, and if it was not for this duty of 30 cents a bushel, our orchard owners would be brought in direct competition with the American fruit raisers."

Now, see what he says. He takes up butter and cheese and says it would destroy the interests of the farmer in that trade to have reciprocity. He takes up pork and says it would destroy the pork trade of our farmers if we had reciprocity. takes up the fruit trade and says that reciprocity would destroy the interests of our farmers in the fruit trade. It shows to my mind that the hon. gentleman is supporting a Government whose policy he does not understand. But let me quote from another authority on the matter. Last year, you will remember, there was an able and popular gentleman belonging to the Government. He represented an eastern constituency, he was a very eloquent man, a man very popular among his colleagues, and he was put up last year to propound the policy of the Government upon the trade question. During that eloquent speech he was asked a question by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and in reply to that question he made use of these words:

"I am sure the farmers of this country will endorse me when I say that free trade between Canada' and the United States in all agricultural products, would be the worst possible thing that could happen to the farmers of our country."

That was the policy of the Government last year.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

they wanted that very policy to be established between the two countries that he condemned last year. But I will come still nearer to the Government We were told from platform after platform that unrestricted reciprocity would destroy our cattle trade; we were told it would destroy our flour trade, that it would reduce the price of pease and oats to a corn standard by the introduction of free corn. We were told it would introduce cheap American flour and destroy the Canadian market for flour, and we were told that by supporters of the Government high up in the esteem of the party. But the paper that supports them, the organ of the Conservative party in the city of Teronto, that great organ which is the mouth-piece of Conservative public opinion, the organ that has been supported by the Conservative party, yea, built up from its very foundation by the Conservative party, and every word it says is supposed to be the echo of the leaders of the party-what has it said in regard to reciprocity in cattle? It said that such a policy would destroy the cattle trade, and it published that announcement in its columns with large display letters in order to attract the attention of the farmers to that particular point. We saw an advertisement that was put into that paper and kept there for weeks during the election campaign, headed with large Here is what the Empire says: display letters.

"Facts!—Farmers!—It would kill the cattle trade!!—This is no exaggeration, but a sober solid fact.—This is exactly what unrestricted reciprocity would do.

"Why? Because Canadian cattle are now allowed the special privilege of entering Great Britain alive and of being taken into the interior of the country for sale.

"The United States cattle are scheduled, that is, must be killed immediately on arrival, because there is cattle disease in that country and none in this.

"This privilege is worth to you, Canadian farmers, at least $10 per head of cattle!!

"We could not keep out United States disease from this country under unrestricted reciprocity, because we would be virtually one country.

be virtually one country.

"Great Britain for protection of her own farmers, and through no ill-will ito us, would be forced to schedule yourcattle:

"And you would lose over $650,000 per year on your cattle alone!"

Sir, now, in face of all these facts, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite how can they be consistent in telling the people of this country that they are going to Washington on the 12th of October, to negotiate a treaty along the lines of a policy which they assert will destroy the interest of the farming community of this country? Sir, we are not of that opinion on this side. We believe that a reciprocity in natural products would be a great advantage to our farmers, that it would give them an open and a freer market, it would give them two strings to their bow, the English market for what it would take, and the American market for what it would take, and in this way it would largely increase the prosperity of the Canadian That is one advantage coming from reciprocity in natural products only. But we go further, and we say that if the manufactured articles of the United States were permitted to come in free and our own to go in there free, then we would be able both to sell in the dearest market for our products and buy in the cheapest. But, Sir, is it possible that the Government of the present day are seeking to gull the people of this country? Is it posible they are telling the people in one part of the country that the policy is recipro-They went before the country this year saying that city, and they are telling the people in another part of the country that their policy is the old National Policy? Sir, that is the case. The present Minister of Justice, when he delivered his first speech in the late campaign, said they were going to enter into reciprocity with the United States, along the lines of the treaty of 1854. Sir John A. Macdonald, in his letter to the electorate of Canada a few days afterwards, never mentioned, from one end of it to the other, anything about reciprocity with the United States. But he did say something in regard to the National Policy. He said: We go to the country on the same policy as in 1879, in 1882, in 1887, and in 1891 with the same policy also. Here was the leader of the Government telling one story and his first lieutenant another story, and the people of the country waiting for the great meeting to come off for the purpose of getting at the Gov-ernment's policy. In my own town a little occur-rence took place, which I will mention. Just after the Minister of Justice delivered that speech in which he declared that the Tories were in favour of reciprocity in natural products, a Tory in the town said that his party had always been in favour of reciprocity in natural products; but, when Sir John Macdonald's letter came out, he and several Tories went back on their opinion and said they would stand by the National Policy. It is our duty to ask the Government for a declaration of their policy, because they are in a responsible position and we are The people have a right to know from their mouths what kind of policy they intend to pursue, so that the people can judge them. We are often asked what our policy is. It is as clear and distinct as the light of day. We want reciprocity of the widest character with the United States. not want to hand over any of our legislative power to the United States. What is reciprocity, as I understand it—and I have discussed reciprocity on the public platform before it became a political or party question? Unrestricted reciprocity, to my mind, means this: Our political position will remain as at present, and we will impose any duties we please on articles coming from foreign countries, and the United States will do the same; but goods from the United States will come in free, and the same liberty will be given to Canada to send her goods free to the American markets. So we would have complete control of our tariff; we would place any duties we pleased on goods from foreign countries, and the United States would follow the same course with regard to themselves. In reviewing the whole question we must come to the conclusion that the policy of the Government is still the National Policy, and that they are determined to stick by the manufacturers and the combines of this country who have extracted millions from the pockets of the people and placed them in their own pockets to enrich themselves. Mr. Redpath, the great sugar refiner, after he had made millions out of the Canadian people, did not feel disposed to remain and spend the money here, but he went to England, purchased a great castle and is living there in luxury on the money he has taken out of the pockets of the people of Canada. So it is in regard to many other manufacturers of the country. The Government stick to the manufacturers because they have plenty of money and are capable of contributing large sums to the boodle fund as has been proved this session by the investigations going on. I predict that The committee was directed upon the question.

the day is not far distant when all this corruption will be unearthed, and that the characters of those who have been guilty of corruption and dishonesty will be exposed before the righteous indignation of the people, and then more honest and better men will be placed in positions to govern this great country. The Liberal party has been accused of being narrow-minded. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), in his speech the other night, referred to the hon member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who is one of the broadest and most liberal-minded statesman of this country, and who possesses a greater grasp and deeper insight into its affairs probably than any other man in it, pointed to him with a finger of scorn and said, referring to our party, and to the hon, gentleman as one of our leaders, that the political sky is too near his head and the political horizon too near his fingers. What a charge to bring against the Liberal party! The hon. gentleman has studied the constitutional history of Canada. Has he not found therein the great works the Liberal party have done? Who fought in 1837-38-39 for the great principles of responsible government against the strong arm of the Family Compact? Who was the party, with that spirit of broad liberalism which stepped into the breach, who fought and won the great battle of responsible government and made it one of the corner stones of the constitution of the country? It was the Liberal party, still further down in our history, that declared that the various municipalities should have local government to manage their affairs, so that they might expend their own money for local purposes and assess themselves to meet their obligation for local improvements? The Tory party, ever lagging behind, declared that the Liberals were opposed to British principles, that they were seeking to follow the customs and habits of the United States, and the Conservatives went so far as to call the municipal institutions sucking republics, and they called the Liberal party disloyal and unpatriotic. What was the result? These institutions were established, and to-day there is not a single Tory in this country who would look back and say that the Liberals of that day were wrong. Still further down in the history of this country which was the party that first agitated and largely carried out our system of free education? It was the Liberal party, and under our system the sons and the daughters of the poor man are educated side by side with those of the rich, and are educated to take part in working out the destiny of this country. Again, it was the Liberal party that suggested the confederation of the provinces, and was largely instrumental in its successful consummation. We have often heard it from public platforms, as well as from the members of this House, that the late leader of the great Liberal-Conservative party was the father of Confederation. The Tories of that day fought against the principles of Confederation, and when a dead lock took place between the people of Upper Canada and of Lower Canada, who was the man who saw and suggested the remedy? It was the late George Brown, the great leader of the Liberal party. He came to the front; he asked Parliament to appoint a committee of twenty to take into consideration the propriety of uniting the separate provinces into one great country. That committee considered all the details of this question.

Two reports were submitted to Parliament in favour of Confederation. The report of the majority was signed by seventeen, the report of the minority opposed to Confederation was signed by three, and the first name on the minority report was that of the Hon. Sir John Macdonald, late leader of the Conservative party. The second name was that of John Sanfield Macdonald, and the third name was that of Mr. Scoble, who then represented Elgin. The next day after these reports were presented, the Government was defeated on a resolution moved by the Hon. Win. Macdougall for paying in the interim of the session, $100,000 to the city of Montreal without the assent of Parliament. Then came forth the magnanimity of the Reform party in this country. They might have taken office then, but George Brown with that magnanimity of soul which ever characterised him—and he was a fitting representative of those who followed him—went to the Conservative party and offered them his support if they would take up Confederation and carry it out. After that, both parties united together and made Confederation a success. Tell me after these great measures and these great accomplishments by the Liberal party that our political sky is near our heads, and that our horizon is near the point of our fingers. Speaker, I am sorry to have detained the House so long. I thank hon, gentlemen on both sides of the House for the kind attention they have given me: and I thank you especially, Mr. Speaker, for the cordial courtesy you have extended to me during my remarks.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, we have listened for a good many hours to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. We have heard from him the same old story, which we have heard for a number of years past repeated on every plat-form in this country. We have heard his denunciations of the National Policy; a policy which has been approved by the people of this country on four different occasions, and a policy which I believe the people would again endorse to-day if the question were submitted to them. We have heard from the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) that the National Policy was a fraud, and that protection was a delusion and a snare, and had worked great injury to the people of this country. But, Sir, after all his denunciation of the National Policy generally he made one little exception in That, Sir, is characteristic of hon. its favour. gentlemen on the other side of the House. He went over a very great variety of arguments to try to show that protection was injurious to the people of this country, but when he came to the question of salt, he made a pause, and I believe he reversed in this particular the decision he had given on all other matters. Salt, according to the member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) was the one article in this country that required protection, and the only denunciation that he could find for the Government in reference to this matter was, because salt did not receive sufficient protection. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that other hon. gentlemen on that side of the House are in the same position as the member for Huron, in regard to special commodities of their own. The hon, member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), for instance, was last year loud in his contention that pork and bacon should have a high duty placed upon | that his sympathies are not with Great Britain, Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

them, although, according to him, all other duties were wrong. We have also the member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) in a similar position. He is not satisfied with the immense duties which are now placed upon candies and upon biscuits. He is engaged in that business himself and he is so badly satisfied with the 25 and 35 per cent. duty on these articles, that the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) himself goes into a combination to increase the price enormously, in addition to the protection received by this 25 and 35 per cent. duty. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) also denounces the National Policy. He denounces all kinds of protection, but when he comes to the question of oil, he says: Oh, 100 per cent. is too little protection for oil. Then, Sir, we come to the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlhon. He is against protection through and through, but he is interested in the wrecking-tug business, and he made a most vigorous speech not very long ago in this House, advocating that protection should be given to the Canadian wrecking tugs. And so, Sir, it goes through all the lists, until we come to-night to the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) who after declaiming against all kinds and forms of protection, says, that the article of salt upon which we had a duty of 15 cents per 100 lbs., or 42 cents per barrel, is not sufficiently protected. Why, I remember that for many years, salt was delivered on the cars at the railway stations in the county which the hon. gentleman represents, for 55 cents a barrel, and it was undoubtedly sold at a profit then, or else they could not continue to sell salt for so many years at that price. Now, if there is one combination in this country that is utterly indefensible, a combination that is doing more injury to the people and making them more dissatisfied than anything else, it is this combination on salt, which the member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) upholds and protects here this afternoon. Why, Sir, what is the history of that question? Two years ago, salt was sold for 55 cents a barrel delivered on the cars, but a combination was formed—an illegal combination as I contend-and salt was raised first to $1 and then to $1.10 per barrel delivered on the cars. The hon. gentleman told us that there were about 800,000 barrels of salt produced in his district, and if salt could formerly be sold at 55 cents per barrel, then there was an illegal, exorbitant and unnecessary profit to the men engaged in this business, of at least $440,000 over the old price. Notwithstanding this the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) thinks that all protective duties are indefensible, and he gets up in his place to-night and upbraids the Government because they have made salt from Great Britain free of duty. He says that we have no protection for our salt in the eastern part of this Well, Sir, we have a law which Dominion. operates equally in every part of the Dominion, to the effect that salt from Great Britain comes in duty free, and the people of every part of the Dominion do, as they have a right to do, take the advantage of having the British salt free of duty. I presume that the objection the hon. gentleman makes is that the American salt is not brought in free of duty, instead of the British salt. We learned from his speech to-night that the hon. gentleman is wholly American in his views, and but entirely with the United States. I will refer very briefly to one or two matters on which the hon, gentleman dwelt in his speech to the House He started out with the assertion, which has been frequently made in this House, and frequently made throughout the country, that the duty increases the price of the article by exactly the amount of that duty. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite, if that is the case, how did it happen that in the United States for many years, while there was a duty of $28 per ton on steel rails, they were sold there for from $28 to $30 per ton. If what the hon, gentleman says is correct, the manufacturers of steel rails in the United States produced and sold them for nothing. I think that that one case is sufficient to dispose of the argument of the hon. gentleman that the duty imposed by the Government increases the price by The hon. gentleexactly the amount of the duty. man went on to say that he buys Canadian tweeds on which there is a duty of 45 per cent. one does not need any particular intellect to know that Canadian tweeds do not pay any duty at all. They are made here. The hon, gentleman also referred to Canadian blankets, on which he said there was a duty of from 80 to 120 per cent. Why, Sir, you can buy a Canadian white blanket to day at 40 cents per pound; it takes one and one-fifth pounds to make a blanket, which would cost about 261 cents; the cost of manufacturing added would bring it to about 36 cents; add the manufacturer's profit and the wholesale dealer's profit, and yet the blanket is sold for 40 cents. Now, I ask any man in this House where does the duty of from 80 to 100 per cent. on that article come in? I contend, Sir, that there is not a farthing of duty upon it. The competition among the woollen manufacturers of this country is so keen to-day that there is not a farthing added to the price on account of the duty. But, Sir, there is this advantage in the duty, that it gives the Canadian manufacturers the whole of the home market. There is no combination among these men; and the competition has kept down the price to the lowest point at which these articles can be sold, I do not care where they are made. The hon, gentleman says that plain shirting pays a duty of 65 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you of my own knowledge that better shirting is sold in Canada to day at 12½ cents a yard than was sold for 22 cents a yard several years ago, during the time of the 171 per cent. duty on these goods. At the same time, these articles are made in this country and give employment to our own people. Another important consideration is that the price of the raw material is not materially advanced in consequence of the duty; and what is known to every woman in this country who handles these articles is that the Canadian manufactured article is much superior in quality to the imported goods which we used to have before the National Policy was inaugurated. The hon, gentleman went on to refer to some other articles. He said that solid steel spades are sold at Gananoque at $10.60 a dozen, while those of the Pittsburg make are sold there at $7.80. Now, we all know that there are a dozen different qualities of spades made, so that to compare these prices without knowing anything about the respective qualities of the two articles is absurd. But under the impetus given to the manufacture of these articles by the National Policy, Canada from 25 to 35 per cent. cheaper than they were before the introduction of the National Policy, besides which they are of a superior quality to what our people used before. The hon. gentleman refers to coal oil, and says that No. 1 white is sold in Canada at 13½ cents a gallon, while United States oil is sold at 7½ cents per gallon. There are two or three points that deserve consideration in this connection. The wine gallon by which American coal oil is sold, being one-fifth less than the Imperial gallon, 7½ cents per wine gallon would be equal to about 9 cents per Imperial gallon. Then in the United States the barrel is paid for extra, while in Canada coal oil is universally sold at so much a gallon, and the barrel is thrown in.

No, no. An hon. MEMBER.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member who says "no" does not know anything about it. No man can show an invoice for Canadian oil in which the barrel is charged extra. I have dealt in it for 24 years, and I have never heard of such a case. The barrel costs about 3 cents a gallon, and if you add that to the 9 cents, that brings the cost of American oil up to 12 cents a gallon; then add the freight, which will be a cent or two, and you will find that the price of American oil is really higher than the price of Canadian oil, which costs from 12½ to 13½ cents per gallon. Then, Canadian oil had to pass two tests which American oil is not subjected to. To salt I have already made some reference. most preposterous to think that an article of consumption in every house in the country, particularly on every farm should be increased in price from 55 cents to $1.10 per barrel. It is an indefensible impost on the farmers of Canada, resulting from an illegal combination; and yet we find the hon, member for East Huron justifying that combination and the exorbitant prices which it has exacted. But the Government have come to the rescue of the people, and have reduced the duty onehalf; so that instead of being 15 cents per 100 lbs., it is now 7½ cents per 100 lbs. And what is the result? On the 2nd of July a circular was sent out by this illegal combination saying that the price of $1.10 a barrel has been reduced to 85 cents a I think the Government would have been barrel. justified in going still further and abolishing the duty altogether; in that way to teach these men that they cannot defy the laws of Canada with The hon, gentleman refers also to the impunity. question of sugar, saying that the duty was imposed on account of the National Policy. Now, everyone knows that the duty on raw sugar was imposed for revenue purposes, and brought in several million dollars a year to the treasury. But the Government felt this session that their surplus was large enough to enable them to abolish the duty on raw sugar, which was no protection to the manufacturers whatever, because while the duty on raw sugar is abolished the protection to the Canadian manufacturer remains. What is that protection? The hon: member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) represented most unfairly that the cost of the raw sugar, with the duty added, amounted to $4.40 per 100 lbs., and then he made the assertion that the average selling price in Canada during the year ending 30th June, 1890, was $6.64 per 100 lbs., and he asked: Who gets the balance of $2.24? He did not say that the we find that all articles of that kind are sold in refiners pocketed that money, but he left that inference and made that insinuation. Does not that hon, gentleman know that the difference is not $2.24 at all? The hon, member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) gave the figures here, and he is in a position to know them, being interested in the sugar busines himself and having an accurate knowledge of it; and he showed that sugar, instead of costing the refiner $4.40, cost him $5.14 per 100 lbs. He insinuated that $2.24 per 100 lbs. go not into the Dominion treasury, but into the pockets of the refiners. What are the facts? Does the hon, gentleman not know that the prices quoted are the prices at the place where the sugar is Does he not know that a hundred ships are employed carrying a thousand tons each, or carrying one hundred thousand tons of sugar into Canada? Does he not know still further that there are 800 men employed in the manufacturing of this sugar, and there are 800,000 barrels required to hold it, costing 32 cents per barrel, making a value of $256,000. Does he not know that 50,000 tons of coal are used in the refining of that sugar, making an additional value of $200,000 to this country, representing the wages of the men employed in the mines less the profits of those who employ them? These enormous sums are to be deducted out of the imaginary $2.24 which the hongentleman mentioned. More than that, does the hon. gentleman not know that the prices he quoted are the prices at which sugar is sold by the wholesale dealers, and we have sworn evidence to prove that the profits of the wholesale dealers are from 40 to 50 cents per 100 lbs. I believe the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) is one of the men who pocketed these profits, and when, in making that quotation, he did not state that 40 or 50 cents out of the $2.24 went partly into his own pockets and partly into the pockets of those who were with him in the combine, I do not think he was treating this House fairly. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) says he is opposed to the National Policy because it promised a market to the farmer and presumably did not give the farmer that promised market, and he returned to the question of wheat. He said that wheat was dearer between the years 1873-74 than it has been Well, if it was dearer then, that was due to the fact that the markets of the whole world were higher; but I say we have in this question of wheat this advantage: Last year there were about 207,000 barrels of flour exported from this country to Great Britain, and there were imported from the United States almost exactly the same quantity, The imports of and exports of or 205,000 barrels. wheat flour being about the same, it follows that the whole production of the wheat of Canada was consumed in Canada. How much is that? It is estimated that it requires 27,000,000 bushels of wheat to feed the people of Canada, and we have this gratifying fact, that out of that 27,000,000 bushels at least 26,000,000 were supplied by the Mr. WALLACE.

that this 15 cents of duty on wheat has given almost entire control of the Canadian market to the Canadian farmer and miller. But these gentlemen will tell you that has raised the price of flour to the consumer, and I will quote what the hon. leader of the Opposition has to say on that point. These gentlemen are always very solicitous about the interests of the farmers. They claim that the manufacturers are robbers, and that the farmers are their own special care. Here is what the leader of the Opposition said last July at Ste. Anne, in the County of Montmorency, Quebec:

"This tax, however, was not imposed of public necessity, as it is alleged that there is a surplus of $7,000,000, but rather in the interest of the Ontario and Manitoba farmers, who raise wheat in great quantities. In other words, it takes the money out of the pockets of those who bay the flour, and puts it into the pockets of those who produce it. These are the tactics of our Tory Government."

Now, these gentlemen, when speaking to the farmers of Ontario, ridicule the idea that the protection on wheat is of any benefit to the Canadian farmer. But when they come to the Province of Quebec where the farmers are not straight wheat-growers, but are consumers of flour, we have the leader of the Opposition saying that this tax is put on for the benefit of the Ontario and Manitoba farmers. In reply to the assertion that the duty increases the price to the consumer in the Province of Quebec and the lower provinces, I would say that there are 1,200 to 1,400 flour mills in Ontario alone, that these millers have no combination of any kind whatever, for it would not be possible for them to have a combine. They are competing with each other in buying wheat as cheaply and selling flour as dearly as they can. There is no combination among them but the strongest competition, and, therefore, the consumer in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces gets the article at the lowest price. Then they ask, what benefit is the duty to the Manitoba and Ontario farmers? It gives to the Canadian farmer the control of the Canadian market, almost exclusively. The returns show this year that there will be about 60,000 barrels of flour, or less than 300,000 bushels of wheat, imported into this country, while the consumption being 27,000,-000 bushels, we control almost the entire supply of the products of wheat to the people. What we have always contended for, and what we can demonstrate from history, is that the home market is the best, not only in the case of flour and wheat. but for every other product of the farm; and by keeping this home market for the benefit of Canadian farmers, we are helping to enrich an impor-tant industry of the country. I will read what evidence was given by Mr. W. G. Blaney, a miller in the city of Boston; before the Committee:

"The general tenor of the evidence may be gathered from W. G. Blaney's testimony." He said: 'Until the Canadian Government placed a duty upon flour and grain bushels at least 26,000,000 were supplied by the Canadian farmers, so that we have almost the full control of the Canadian market. It is the more gratifying to find that although last year there were about 167,000 barrels of flour imported into the country, that from the nine months up to the first of April of the financial year the return show 45,000 barrels imported into this country. That would be for the whole year 60,000 barrels, while for the previous year there were 200,000 barrels imported, including wheat, showing Mr. Wallace.

Now, the National Policy, as we have it here today, prevents that from being American flour, and keeps the supply of this article in the hands of the Canadian farmer, and therefore benefits the Canadian people. As with flour, so with all the other products of the farm; but the hon, member for South Oxford, like all hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House, is continually inveighing against the manufacturer. The most polite term he can apply to them is that of legalized robbers. In a speech delivered at Chatham not long ago he said:

"We pay $31,000,000 or $32,000,000 of taxes every year into the treasury and we are really taxed $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 a year, counting what we pay to the legalized robbers whose hands are never out of your pockets at your downsitting or your uprising:—whether you eat or drink, or work or play, or sleep or fall sick, even."

In the same speech he went on further to say:

"King Solomon would have said: Let me have famine, let me have pestilence, let me have red war—nay, if I must, let me have all three together, but spare me! oh spare me a high protective tariff! (Loud cheers and laughter)."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I represent a constituency which had a population of 18,800 according to the last census. We are confident that the census for 1891 will show that, with the same geographical boundaries, that constituency will have a population of over 40,000 people, or an increase of 22,000. The hon, member for South Oxford says the agricultural population is decreasing. If that is so, these must be manufacturers or those who depend on manufacturers. The hon. gentleman says that manufacturers are legalized robbers. How, in that case, could I go back to my constituents, if I supported the hon, gentleman, and tell them that 22,000 of them were legalized robbers? But it is not only the manufacturers who have protection given to them. Our tariff shows that the farmers are also protected. They are protected by a duty on wheat of 15 cents, flour 75 cents a barrel, oats 10 cents, corn 7½ cents, pork 1½ to 3 cents, beef 3 cents, cheese 3 cents, butter 4 cents, lard 2 cents, cattle and sheep 30 per cent., live hogs 20 per cent., and all other animals 20 per cent.; tomatoes 30 cents a bushel and 10 per cent., apples 40 cents a barrel, vegetables in general 25 per cent. product of the farm receives a pretty fair protection, and if the manufacturers are legalized robbers it follows that the farmers are legalized robbers also, so that instead of having 22,000 legalized robbers in my riding we must have over 40,000. We are all legalized robbers, according to the hon member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I state that the best market in this country was the home market, and I say that for many reasons. There are many products of the farm which cannot be exported, but which are consumed by the home market, where better prices are obtained. We find that the products of the farm amount to about \$400,000,000. Suppose the farmers consume half of that themselves, what becomes of the other We export to Great Britain \$200,000,000? \$22,000,000 worth, to the United States \$13,000,000, and to other countries \$5,000,000, making altogether \$40,000,000 out of the surplus of the products of the farm which are exported to foreign countries. What becomes of the \$160,000,000 worth, which is the balance of the \$200,000,000? Through the National Policy we have built up manufactures, and those engaged in manufacturing, those engaged in lumbering, those engaged in commercial pursuits | 115,000 tons to the United States, because we sent and in all the other pursuits in this country who have been assisted by the National Policy consume \$160,000,000 worth out of the \$200,000,000 of the surplus products of the farmers of this country. If that be the case, it is evident that our home market is enormously the best market we have. It has been computed by Mulhall that in 1880 the total production in Great Britain was \$172 per capita, of which \$136 was consumed there and \$36 exported. Nimmo, in the United States, considers that the produce of that country is \$200 per capita, of which \$183 goes to home consumption and only \$17 is used for export. Evidently the home market in each country is the best market. We produce many articles which cannot be exported to other countries, and, therefore, we have endeavoured to build up other industries in this country. If the census of $1881\,\mathrm{showed}$ that there were $254,000\,\mathrm{people}$ employed in mechanical operations, I have no doubt that the census of 1891 will show an increase of 100,000 people engaged in manufacturing pursuits, and representing a total population engaged in and depending on mechanical pursuits of one million and threequarters or two millions of people. Hon, gentlemen opposite say that we want free trade with the United States, that we want our most valuable markets thrown open to the American farmer as well as our own. I do not believe in that. I think we should keep our own markets for ourselves as far as possible. Of course, there are two or three articles that we could send to the United States with advantage to ourselves, but any Government should be exceedingly careful before making any bargain which will throw open our markets to the American farmer and drive the Canadian farmer away from his home and from his most profitable market. I read in the speech made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) a number of most extraordinary statements. was quoting ostensibly from the trade returns of past year, and he said:

"We sold to the United States 9,939,000 bushels of bar-ley on which the duty, the trifling duty, amounted to $2,982,000: of beans and pease we sold 710,000 bushels, on which the duty amounted to $284,000."

The duty on barley was 10 cents, and he makes it out to be 30 cents. I think he was going a year or two ahead of time. The duty on beans and pease he makes out to be 40 cents a bushel. As the McKinley Bill only puts a duty of 20 cents a bushel on pease, and pease form the greater portion of this export, he is evidently getting ahead on that also. Then he says:

"Of horses we sold 16,000, on which the duty was $566,000."

How does he know that? We know that a large proportion of the horses that we send to the United States are for breeding purposes, and they enter free of duty. Where did he get his figures? drew them from his imagination. He says further that :

"Of the article of eggs alone, we sold 12,835,000 dozens, on which the duty amounted to $640,000."

The duty did not amount to anything, because at that time there was no duty on eggs. The duty was not imposed until about four months after these got in there. He says further:

"Of hay we sold 115,000 tons, on which the duty was $400,000.

We did not export the whole of that amount of some 10,000 ton's to Great Britain. The hon. gentleman ridiculed the idea of sending any hay to Great Britain, but we sent that amount last year, and it is now an established fact that we can profitably send hay to England. He makes the duty out to be $4 a ton, whereas it was only $2 a ton any-Then he says: way.

"Of sheep we sold $251,000, on which the duty was $502,000.

Where did he get the duty of $2 apiece on sheep? The old duty was from 15 to 20 per cent., and the new duty is $1.50 for sheep and 75 cents for lambs. When we consider that these 251,000 sheep that are recorded were sold for $760,000, which is $3.02 apiece, we must conclude that they were not very large-sized sheep, especially when we consider that the sheep sent to England during the same year averaged, according to the trade returns. $8.50 apiece. The duty on lambs was exactly 75 cents apiece; he puts the duty at $2 apiece, and such a statement as that goes to the country. What more does he say? He says:

"There is no doubt whatever that most of that comes out of the pockets of the Canadian farmers. It is perfectly true, I have never denied it. I do not deny it now, that the American consumer pays the duty likewise.

We pay the duty and the American consumer pays the duty. This is a new doctrine. The old doctrine was that the Canadian consumer always paid the duty; recently they have revised it, and say that the producer pays the duty if he happens to be a Cana-He goes on to say:

"But let the hon. gentleman and his friends lay this to heart: while the American consumer pays the Canadian consumer loses."

That is strange doctrine, and I think we had better call upon the member for South Oxford to explain it further. He says:

"There is some $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 paid by the farmers of Canada."

I have added up these figures and they come to just $5,637,000, according to his own estimate. He calls it seven or eight millions; he is not particular about a few millions. I added up what the duty was according to the returns, not considering who pays the duty—but simply what the duty was on these articles, and I find it amounted to $2,089,-Now, I think the hon gentleman is trifling with this House and the country when he gives utterance to such statements. But we come to the next question of who pays the duty. I do not see the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in his seat, but I have a speech delivered by him in 1878, when he was a member of the Government, when he had the figures at his command and had leisure to study them, and here is what he says, speaking at Fergus, Ontario. on 18th July, 1878: I find his remarks in a pamphlet setting forth the policy of the Government. These gentlemen always assure us that the Canadian farmer pays the duty—that it cannot be otherwise. Here is what the Hon. David Mills said, discussing the question of who pays the duty on exports:

"I had better give you some evidence of the fact that the duties imposed by the American Government upon the various products of the agriculturists of Canada have in no wise affected the price of the various articles which have been sent into the American market. I have here the prices of the various farm products for the twenty-two years from 1854 to 1876, during eleven of which years reciprocity prevailed, and during the other eleven our produce was subject to high duties. In 1854 the Canadians received on the average for the horses they sold $65.27 per head."

Mr. WALLACE.

I will not trouble the House with all his figures, but he arrives at this result: that during the time of the reciprocity treaty, when there was no duty on horses, the average price was $77.74. Then he quotes the price of horses for the next twelve years, when there was no reciprocity treaty, but when there was a duty on horses, and the result was that horses averaged $94.73, or an increase during that period of $17 per head. Then he says, speaking of horned cattle:

"We received in 1854 an average price per head of $23.83."

And so on. He winds up with the conclusion that the average in these latter years was quite as high as when they were admitted free of duty. then, pays this tax of 20 per cent. on cattle exported to the United States? Then he comes to sheep, and after going into a calculation he concludes that the average was just as high during the 11 years that duties were imposed as when sheep were admitted Next he takes up some of the cereals:

"In 1854—and mind this was the period of the Russian war—we received for wheat an average price per bushel of $1.45"

And he quotes prices for various years and gives the total result, showing that the prices were as high during the period when there was no duty as during the period when there was a duty. He winds up his whole statement in this way:

"I might go over the prices of barley, rye and other cereals with much the same result, thus establishing the incontrovertible fact that the duties imposed by the American Congress upon the produce of Canada do not fall upon the people of Canada, but are paid by the consumers of these articles in the United States."

That was the statement the hon, gentleman made as to who paid the duty. Now, we will go still further. On the question of barley, these gentlemen are most persistent that the Canadian producer, as was stated by the hon, gentleman who has just spoken, pays the duty on barley. In 1883 the duty on barley was 15 cents a bushel. The American brewers and maltsters went down to Washington and spent large sums of money lobbying, and induced the American Congress to reduce the duty to 10 cents a bushel. What was the result? gentlemen will say, of course, according their theory, that barley went up 5 cents in Canada. Not so. I have the figures here, but I will not trouble the House with quoting the details. show, however, that, instead of barley being dearer, after the duty was lowered from 15 to 10 cents, it was cheaper in the following year. At Toronto, in February, 1883, the average price of barley was 72 cents, and in February, 1884, the average price was 62 cents. I will take the two last years which are covered by the returns. In 1889 the average price for barley in the Toronto market, and in all the markets of Ontario, was at least 8, 10 or 12 cents a bushel less than in 1890, though in the meantime the duty was raised from 10 cents a bushel to 30 cents per bushel. According to the law these gentlemen have enunciated, during, the last year, barley ought to have sold at a lower price, after the duty was put on, than it did at the corresponding dates of the previous year. This shows, to my mind, that the Americans themselves pay the duty upon these articles. But there are other articles very important to the Canadian farmers—there is the article of cattle, for instance. Last year the returns show that we sent 123,000 cattle to Great Britain. We know that Canadian cattle have an immense advantage in the markets of Great Britain over American American cattle have to be slaughtered within a few days after they arrive in port, while Canadian cattle can be kept there as long as the shipper pleases, when he can take advantage of the market in other places and at other times. American Agricultural Commissioner, whose report I have here, gives it as his opinion that the advantage to the Canadian shipper is from $10 to $15 per head. Now, an average of $12 per head on 123,000 cattle would represent $1.476,000, which represents the advantage the Canadian farmer has over the American farmer in the British cattle market. Then they tell us the advantage this country would derive if we had commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. Would we have the same advantage still? at all. It is with great difficulty we retain this advantage over the United States in the markets of Great Britain. We know there are large areas in the United States not affected by pleuro-pneumonia, and in Canada our herds are not so affected. Strong efforts are made by interested parties in Great Britain to have Canadian cattle scheduled, the same as American cattle: but it is altogether on account of our being a portion of the British Empire, of which the people of this country are proud, we occupy our present favoured position. Suppose we declare to the people of Great Britain: We do not want to trade with you, but only with the United States; we will increase our tariff by 100 per cent. over what it is now against you, while we will have free trade with the United States, and take their manufactures and exclude yours, how long would we retain that privilege in the British markets? Not forty-eight hours. We have that advantage, therefore, because we have our present fiscal arrangements, and because we do not have free trade with the United States. As the price in Great Britain is $12 more than the American price, that affects the value of all the cattle in this country. It is estimated that we have 5,000,000 head We will not say that they are of the same value as the cattle exported, but we will take half the price, and say that the increased value of each is not $12, but $6, and then that calculation would show that $30,000,000 are added to the wealth of the Canadian farmers by the present arrangement, which would be destroyed if we adopted the policy agitated by hon. gentlemen opposite. With regard to sheep, I have already mentioned the fact that the exports of the United States last year have averaged $3.02 each; while the exports to Great Britain, numbering 57,000, averaged $8.50 each. That would show there is a better sale for our animals in Great Britain. have here a remarkable letter written by Mr. Thos. Mills, who a few years ago I knew as a very strong commercial unionist, and I think he is now getting very well over it. He went to the old country with Mr. Frankland with a number of Canadian lambs. He now admits that the English market is immensely superior to the American market. And says:

will please them even better. These lambs were good, but not so good as this country can furnish. He says further:

" It is to be hoped that our farmers will give this matter the attention which its importance demands. There are, doubtless, great possibilities connected with the future of this trade. It may yet become one of the most important industries of Canada. I go further, and say that it is likely to become one of the most important industries of likely to become one of the most important industries of this country; nay, it is almost certain to become one of our most important industries, and I ask the farmers of all Canada to note this fact and to weigh it well. If each farmer of this province were to fatten but six lambs a year for this market he would get a return of about $54 for good average lambs for his outlay. This is a paying return, as our farmers very well know. We would then have 1,200,000 lambs for annual shipment. This would bring annually into the country more than $10,000,000 of British money—a larger amount than is now obtained from our export of cheese from the whole Dominion. The chief obstacles would arise in connection with the transport of the lambs, and these would relate to the lack of shipping the lambs, and these would relate to the lack of shipping accommodation. Notwithstanding, it is certainly true that there are splendid possibilities in reference to this trade.

I think we have an opening there, as we have an opening for every agricultural product we raise, in the British market. With respect to eggs, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) decried the idea of the availability of the British market for eggs. He says it would take six weeks to send them, and they would be no good when they arrived there. I have a letter from Mr. Flavelle, in which he says:

"We ship from Lindsay to England one to three cars of eggs per week and do better than by sending them to the States, and are now making more out of them than we ever did. Warrington, of Belleville, has a standing order for 2 cars of eggs per week to England, 12,000 dozens in a car."

These two dealers alone require 3,000,000 dozen of eggs per year. Last year there were 93,000,000 dozen of eggs imported into Great Britain; we sent to the United States 12,000,000 dozens. We have, therefore, an unlimited market in the mother country. With regard to the price of eggs, hon. gentlemen opposite predicted that eggs would be almost valueless and that all the hens would be killed off. I have prepared a statement of prices given in the Toronto Globe for a period of six months from November, 1889, and for six months from November, 1890. I will simply quote the results. The average price in November, 1889, was 211 cents; November, 1890, 22 cents; December, 1889, 225 cents; December, 1890, after the Americans had imposed their duty, 25½ cents; January, 1889, 20 cents ; January, 1890, 211 cents ; March, 1889, 135 cents; March, 1890, 183 cents; April, 1889, 103 cents; April, 1890, 153 cents. These figures show that the market for eggs did not go to pieces after the McKinley Bill came into operation. All through this season the prices have been higher than at corresponding dates last year. We know that we have still a market for our eggs, that we have the home market, which is a very important and valuable one, and the English market as well; and, more than that, the Americans have to pay the duty on the eggs they take from us. I have here also quotations of other articles, of American and Canadian hogs, and of the prices of oats, which "I never did feel so much concern regarding the price that would be paid for the lambs, as regarding their acceptability in the English market. This matter I regard as forever set at rest. In addition to what Ald. Frankland has stated so well in his letter regarding the quality of these lambs, I may add that the English press have been loud in their praises. Since these lambs have pleased the people of England so well, I have no hesitation in saying that we can easily give them lambs in the future which 871

Hon. gentlemen opposite, however, say that the American market is our natural market. Mr. Goldwin Smith dilates on that view, as do hon. gentlemen opposite. Why is it our natural market? Is it because the United States are contignous to us and lie alongside of us? Why do not the nations of Europe find their best markets with their next neighbours? If our natural market is our next neighbour, then of course you would go down to Spark street to a grocery store, and the best market for the proprietor would be with his neighbouring grocer; you could go to the dry goods man, and his best market would be with the dry goods man who is opposition over the way; then you go to the farmer, and his best market is his neighbouring farmer, who produces exactly the same articles as he does. According to the hon. gentlemen opposite, the neighbouring farmer would be the best customer for the farmer next to him. No, Sir, the only market for any community, or for any person, is the market which demands what you produce and the market which produces what you require. We find that that is true as regards Great Britain and other countries. Hon. gentlemen opposite may sneer if they like, but they cannot explain away these facts. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said the other day: "What have you got in the West Indies only receive and process and process and buff breeds and dies, only negroes, and creoles and half-breeds, and what could you trade with them?" Well, we get our sugar and spices and a great many other articles from these coloured gentlemen, and why should we not supply them with our products in return. We go to China and we buy tea from the miserable Chinese, as the hon. gentleman would say, and why should we not sell the Chinese what they want from us in return. The West Indies require $48,000,000 worth of protherefore, have a large market in these countries; but we certainly have at our command the British market, which, next to our own Canadian market, is the most valuable market for the farmers of Canada. We have been told by the hon, gentlemen opposite that there is a great exodus, that the people of Canada are leaving by thousands and tens of thousands, and as a consequence that the farms of Canada are depreciating in value. I have here the official report of the Ontario Government for 1887-88, a report which is compiled by Mr. Blue, who is no lover of the Conservative party and no lover of the National Policy. I find in this report the following information, which is interesting, and which proves that Ontario is a prosperous province rather than the reverse, as hon. gentlemen opposite would try to make us believe:-

VALUE OF FARM PROPERTY. 1888. Increase. Value of farms..... Value of farm buildings....... Value of farming $640,480,000 $636,$83,000 $3,597,000 188,293,000 184,753,000 3,540,000 implements.... 49,754,000 49,248,000 506,000 Value of live stock 102,839,000 104,406,000 $981,366,000 $975,290,000 $7,643,000 Increase...... $7,643,000

These statistics were certainly not made for a purpose, or if they were made for a purpose it was not a purpose friendly to the National Policy, for it was made by the official of the Ontario Government (Mr. Archibald Blue), who, as I said, is no lover of the National Policy. I have still further evidence here to show that our farmars are not in the condition represented by hon, gentlemen opposite. I have a carefully-prepared editorial article of the Toronto Mail of 7th November, 1890, a paper not particularly friendly to the Dominion Govern-They take Mr. Blue's statistics, and they show that the assessed value of the farms in Ontario was $824,000,000, and that the mortgages amounted to about $74,000,000, or 9 per cent. Every one knows that the assessed value of farms, which is given here at $824,000,000, is never more than two-thirds of the actual value, and that being the case, if we make a calculation we will find that the mortgages on the actual value of the farms would not amount to more than 6 per cent. consider that that shows that the farmers of Canada, instead of being the poor, helpless and despondent people that gentlemen opposite picture them to be, are the most prosperous people on the face of the earth to-day. I contend that there is no class of the community that can show as good a record as the farmers of Ontario can, according to this report of the Ontario Government. What more do we find? We find that according to the official returns, in the State of Ohio the mortgages represent 26 per cent. of the value of the land, instead of 6 per cent., as in Ontario. In Illinois the mortgages are 29 per cent.; in Michigan, 22 per cent., and in Kansas 83 per cent. of the farms are mortgaged. The figures quoted by the hon. gentlemen opposite to show the depreciation in the value of the lands in Ontario prove exactly the opposite of what their contention is, for they show that the farmers are in a very prosperous condition in the Province of Ontario. But, Sir, hon. gentlemen opposite tell us of the exodus from this country. We had some pretty wild statements from the hon. member from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) on this subject, but the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) outdoes him in this. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Chariton) says that between 1871 and 1881 nearly 400,000 immigrants came into Canada, and that in 1881 we had only 15,000 more persons of foreign birth than we had in 1871, so that we lost mostly all the foreign immi-That is rather a peculiar statement. What about the immigrants who came here forty or fifty years ago? According to the statement of the hon, gentleman none of them had died at all. The hon, gentleman says further: "I calculate that between 1871 and 1881 we have lost 3,600,009 people." That appears to be a large estimate, but the hon. gentleman says: "We will call it 3,000,000 people," and he kills off 600,000 at one blow. He continues to say: "If Canada to-day had 8,000,000 instead of 5,000,000, and had profitable employment for them and markets for their labour, would not my hon. friend get more revenue out of 8,000,000 than he would out of 5,000,000 people?" Then the hon, gentleman goes on to argue that we have lost 3,000,000 people in this country during ten years. I do not think we need stop to seriously reply to that. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that our population is going away from our country, but they do not give any evidence of it, and I do not see myself that such is the case. I have stated to the House before that in my own county the population of 18,800 last census will be increased That is the case in this census to perhaps 40,000. the West Riding of York, with exactly the same geographical boundaries as it had ten years ago. In that riding, at all events, we have increased more than 100 per cent. These people must have come from somewhere. They did not go off to the States: they are living here in Canada. More than that, Mr. Speaker: the city of Toronto and all our cities are growing; but we find these hon, gentlemen still sounding dismal tones and saying that the people are going off to the States. I have here an editorial from the Toronto Globe of the 28th April. 1891, headed: "Mr. Phipps' Letter," referring to which that paper says:

"In an interesting letter printed elsewhere, Mr. R. W. Phipps gives his personal experience of the exodus of population to the United States."

They do not go into particulars here: they contend themselves with bewailing the exodus of people

They do not go into particulars here; they contend themselves with bewailing the exodus of people from Canada, but where is the proof of it? Here is one proof of an exodus, but not from Canada. It is taken from the same number of the Toronto Globe, only it is from the news columns, whereas the other is from the editorial columns. It is dated Winnipeg, 27th April, and is as follows:—

"People still continue to flock into Manitoba from South Dakota with stock and effects. A large contingent arrived this morning, their train being decorated with legends as follows: 'No more 2 per cent. a month.' 'No more five-mile water haul.' 'No more two bushels to the acre,' 'No more exaline fuel.' 'No more grinding machine agents,' 'Good-bye. South Dakota.' Bound for the Canadian North-West,' 'Free land, plenty of timber, plenty of water, interest 8 per cent. per annum,' 'Hurrah for Yorkton.'"

Their editorial columns invariably contradict their news columns. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have here a very interesting article, by an eminent Canadian writer, Mr. E. E. Sheppard, editor of the Toronto Saturday Night, and I will trouble the House by reading a portion of it:

"At one time Canadian farmers went to the United States believing that cheap land and an immense market would soon make them rich. They have all been undeceived. The imaginary line which separates the Canadian North-West from Minnesota, Dakota, Montana and Washington Territory is now cut up by the waggon tracks of those who come to us. We have a country infinitely more productive than theirs: the gods have given us two hours more sunlight to mature our grain than shines upon their wheat districts. The north-east end of this continent is greater in extent, grander in scenery, more noble in the exploits of the men who settled it, and it must become attractive to the people to the south of us. Until now we could not hope to look for emigrants from the people of the United States. Canada has waited until the United States has achieved its limit of speculative population. No longer will that country be the Mecea of those journeying towards a gold mine: it has ceased to be the land in which sovereigns can be picked up by strangers. Chiefest amongst those who recognize this are the Americans themselves. We are not waiting for their overflow: it is not desirable; but we are receiving the best and most frugal element that is being created by a wave of foreign aggressors unwelcome in the United States as it was distasteful at home. Canada is slowly but surely building herself up. It is only the brave who will venture into the north: it is the idle that cluster neath the palms of the south. As we develop and strengthen ourselves, money, everything will be ours. Our cities will grow; those stretches now uninhabited will be peopled; and while it takes longer to accomplish the task of settling our prairies, yet when they are settled there will be no reconstruction, no flitting, and the northern part of North America is as certain to dominate, as sure to absorb the wealth of those who are careless and luxurious people of the south without a single reverse. We cannot reckon the ratio of the past to be the progress of the future. The northern lands succeed after the warmer climes have exhausted their energies. We have had to wait, but we shan't have to wait much longer. Even now the tide has turned our way; the tracks of the waggons which cross the lines are drawn by horses whose hoofprints point northward. Everything is coming to us; this is a moment of transition; those men who protect what they have and acquire the property of those who think that the world is going to turn backwards will, in the near future, be successful. From the old song which adjures us never to take the horseshoe from the door we might at least learn this lesson, never to be discouraged when all the horseshoes are turned towards Canada."

I think, Sir, we have reason to be hopeful of our future. We have reason to be hopeful, not only for the older provinces, but also for our great North-West. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to trouble the House any longer. I thank you and the House for your careful attention to these few remarks.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, as I have not trespassed upon the time of the House thus far during this session, I think I may fairly ask the indulgence of hon, members for a time, while I attempt as best I can to give expression to my views upon the question now under debate. Twelve years ago, when it was my privilege to occupy a seat in this House, I recollect well the memorable night on which the vote was taken which launched the National Policy on its way in this Canada of ours. I recollect well the predictions then made as to the advantages that were to be conferred upon this country by the introduction of that policy. On that occasion I felt it my duty to oppose that policy. Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my views since. I must admit, however, that in the years 1880 and 1881, when large amounts of capital were being invested in my native province, when brick and mortar was being piled up in all directions, when I, as a humble member of this House, heard the hon, gentleman who has since retired from political life addressing this House year after year and lauding the National Policy to the sky, devoting one-half of his Budget speeches to the laudation of that policy, and pointing out what it was doing and what it was destined to do for his native province, for a time I and some of my friends may have had some misgivings as to the course we were pursuing. But, Sir, if in those years a doubt crossed our minds, that doubt has been dispelled. We are no longer of opinion that the National Policy was calculated to benefit the Province of New Brunswick at least; and here I may say that in the few remarks I shall address to the House on this question I purpose following the course I have taken on previous occasions. I believe it is my and my privilege to discuss a question of this kind from the standpoint of the province from which I come. I understand that there are in this country diversified interests, so that what is best for one part of Canada is not always best for another part; and I am here to assert that the policy which was adopted in 1879 and which has been contined from that time to this has proved detrimental to the Province of New Brunswick. Mr. Speaker, I notice that a marked change has taken place in the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite on this question. I remember that when I had the pleasure of liscening to their speeches from 1879 to 1887, invariably when they rose to their feet they not only predicted what would be the outcome of that policy, but pointed to the good results which had already flowed from it. Sir, it that the sugar refiners shared largely in that has been my privilege during this session to listen $1,500,000. I regret the hon, gentleman is not to the speeches of hon, gentlemen opposite, and present, but I have his words here, and he said what do they say to-day? Do they point out the that 25 per cent, went into the pockets of the good results that flow from this policy? Not at retail sugar dealers in this country. I wonder did all: but they are on the defensive, and are anxious to show that this policy has not proved as detrimental to the interests of this country as we thought it would. Mr. Speaker, I could not help remarking, in listening to the eloquent speech of the hon. Minister of Finance, whom I am always proud to hear in this House, that not one word in it was devoted to the National Policy. This was in marked contrast to the speeches delivered by him a few years ago in this House, and by his honoured predecessor, the present Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, when he occupied the position of Finance Minister. Sir, I do not think that I need waste time to-night in attacking the National Policy from the standpoint of my province. I am satisfied that among the thirteen gentlemen from that province representing the Conservative party in this House there is not one who will rise to his feet and say clearly and distinctly that that policy has proved the success in the Province of New Brunswick which its advocates predicted it would. No. Sir, any hon, gentleman on that side who will address himself to this question must honestly admit that so far as that province is concerned the policy has not been a success. I shall, perhaps, before sitting down, take occasion to make some further remarks on this question, but for the present I propose to address myself to the other and more important subject. I had the honour and the pleasure, a few nights ago, of listening to a lengthy speech from the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). I confess I was anxious to hear that gentleman speak, as I had not enjoyed that privilege before, and I supposed he would have advanced some argument which might have gone far to settle this question as to what is the best policy for the Province of New Brunswick. I confess I was disappointed in the hon. gentleman's speech. I am not going to read extracts from the Toronto Globe or the St. John Sun or any other paper, but I am going to give my own practical experience of the working of the National Policy, and of what I believe would be the effects of the adoption of the other policy which is mentioned in the amendment before the House. But before going further, I desire to call attention to some statements made by the hon, member for Albert. I am not disposed to go over the old ground and discuss this sugar question afresh, and I think I may fairly be excused doing so, as the hon, gentleman has summed up the whole question in a few words. The hon. Minister of Finance said in his Budget speech that by his action he was relieving the people of this country of $3,500,000 taxes. The hon member for Albert went $1,500,000 better, and put the amount at $5,000,000. Now, I would like that hon. gentleman or some other hon, gentleman to reconcile these two statements. It is true the hon. member for Albert attempted to explain what he meant, and where did his explanation land him? He had to account for $1,500,000 in some way, that being the difference between $3,500,000, the estimate of the Minister of Finance, and the $5,000,-000 which the hon, gentleman asserted was saved by the action of the Government. The hon. gentleman was not disposed to place it on the

he expect any retailer to believe that statement. Every business man who handles sugar knows that no such profits go to the retailer in this country, and I think the hou, gentleman will have to invent some better explanation of the statement he made to this House than the one he has given. But I want to put this matter a little plainer. During my political life it has been my aim, and I have been honest in it, to convince the people of this country that increased tariff meant increased taxation. My hon, friends opposite have been attempting to instil into the minds of the people that increased tariffs do not mean increased taxation; and when this Government was compelled, at the dictation of Washington, to drop $3,500,000 from the revenue of the country, then they turn around and say that they have relieved the people of a burden of $3,500,000 taxation. I could leave the question there, but I propose to follow it further, and put it in a way that will bring it home to the minds of the people. The hon, member for Albert has, I believe, during the past twelve years, though not in this House all that time, been giving his support to the party now in power; and if that hon, gentleman's contention is correct, what, in the light of the past twelve years, does that tariff policy which was repealed the other day and which has been in existence all those years mean? It means that the people of Canada, during all those years, have been paying a dollar per head on sugar. It means that in a county like Albert, whose population is some 12,000 persons, they pay $12,000 sugar tax per year. That means $144,000 in twelve years. I understand that the reason why the hon, gentleman received the support of his people in his county is that they have a railway debt hanging over them, and that hon, gentleman's mission here is to obtain for them relief from that railway debt. I am sorry, in the interests of his constituents, both Liberal and Conservative, that he has not succeeded so far; but I wish to point out to the people of his county that during those twelve years this Government, by their sugar tariff, have extracted from them a sum equal to double the railway debt which they owe. was another statement made by the hon, member for Albert to which I wish to call attention. think it my duty to that hon, gentleman to put him right on this question before it goes any fur-He is not now in his place, but my statement will go to his county, and in addressing the House to-night I recognize the fact that I stand here in a minority from my province, supported only by two other gentlemen. That, however, will not deter me from giving expression to the views I hold, and which are held by a large number of people behind us in the Province of New Bruns-Now, as the hon, gentleman is not present. I shall take the liberty of reading an extract from his speech:

"I am not going to an extreme length when I say that the National Policy is calculated to develop foreign trade. That is its aim and purpose, and I submit that in a rea-sonable degree it has accomplished its purpose."

He is the first gentleman I ever heard make such shoulders where it should be placed, and to admit | an assertion infavour of the National Policy. During all my time in this House a different doctrine was preached. It was said that the National Policy was intended to curtail foreign trade, that we were to do our own manufacturing at home, but the hon. gentleman now attempts to prove it has increased our foreign trade. He then adds:

"It has done this in respect to our foreign trade: It has advanced the production of the materials which we ourselves grow, which we handle by our own labour. In the article of household furniture, school furniture, church furniture, and all that, the effect of the National Policy was to cut off the export of that birch and ash timber, to cut off the drain of our sons who were going away to the American States to work up that wood and send it back to our provinces, and to cut off the supply of food products that was leaving our provinces as food for our own boys who were there in those foreign mills and factories making up that furniture." up that furniture.

I deny the truth of that assertion. The hon, gentleman referred us to the Trade Returns of this Govern-I would ask the hon, gentleman to again consult the Trade tables, and he will find that, in place of an decrease in the export of the kinds of lumber to which he has alluded, there has been a large increase. Sir, in 1879 we exported from Canada of birch and ash, square timber-mark you, not sawn lumber, but the kind which the trade returns specify -to the amount of $176,980. If I am correct, as I believe I am—and if I am incorrect I expect some hon, gentleman opposite will put me right, though I have taken considerable pains to verify my figures -the returns for 1890 show that there has been no decrease in the export of birch and ash timber from the Dominion of Canada. In 1879 the export amounted to $176,980, while in the last year of which we have any record, 1890, it reached the amount of $328,457. That was not all. The hon, gentleman is still further astray. I admit that perhaps he is not to blame: perhaps the Trade Returns are to day blame: but if I am wrong the Minister of Customs are can put me right. I know of what I am speaking. as I am engaged in the lumber trade myself, and I say that since this National Policy has been introduced a trade has sprung up in New Brunsmick and New Sprung up in the little with the little was the li wick and Nova Scotia which did not exist before. and what is that? It is the manufacture and export of sawn birch lumber. This year it is somewhat less than it was the year before. because the price is not sufficient to warrant the export, but a year ago millions of feet of sawn birch lumber were exported from ports in New Brunswick to ports in Great Britain, I do not suppose there is any pretension on the part of anybody to cover that up in the Trade Returns, and if the Minister of Customs can point it out to me in those returns I will withdraw the statements I made in that respect. I find that pine deals are specified, but when you come to spruce it says "spruce and other," and I think I am correct in believing that under this "spruce and other," is contained this large export of sawn birch from New When an hon, gentleman who is as Brunswick. capable as the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) undertakes to address the House on this subject I think he should post himself a little better. If he lived in the county which he represents he would have known better, because I know myself that a large quantity of birch lumber which is exported from the port of St. John is manufactured in the hon. gentleman's county. But the hon. Confederation, I find that the people of Canada, gentleman says that we are manufacturing the taking the Trade Returns, because the hon. furniture at home, and he refers us to the Trade gentleman has referred to them, and looking Returns in proof of that. I have referred to the carefully under the heading of agricultural pro-

Trade Returns, and I find that in 1878-79 Canada imported $247,970 worth of house, cabinet and office furniture, while in 1890 we imported $352,-430. Does that look like a decrease in the imports? I would be disposed to call it an increase. I admit that there has been some falling off in the imports in furniture in the province from which I come, and that in the city of St. John there was more American furniture imported than there is to-day, but is the furniture which takes its place supplied by the manufacturers of St. John or by the manufacturers of Ontario? I believe that the furniture is supplied by the manufacturers of Ontario. I do not object to that; but in the city of St. John, before the adoption of the National Policy, we had more and larger furniture factories, employing more hands, than we have to-day. I do not believe that we have to-day more than one establishment in that city which can be fairly considered a furniture factory. I am aware that there is some cheap furniture manufactured in Nova Scotia and that some of it finds its way into St. John, but the hon, gentleman's contention was that this large export of hardwood was stopped, and that the furniture was being made in Canada, and that our own boys were finding employment close to their homes. I am not going to delay the House at present by dealing with the question of the exodus. I am willing to leave that question to be settled by the people who understand it best, and who know the vacant chairs which exist in almost every home in the province from which I come. I say that in the county I represent and in the county represented by the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), and in other counties, there is scarcely a family with grown-up sons and daughters in which some members of the family labouring and toiling beneath not foreign flag. In Boston alone, if the figures do not lie, there are probably to-night lying on their couches some 75,000 people who first saw the light of day in the Maritime Pro-That is the answer to that question. But the hon, gentleman made another comparison, and assured us that the market of the United States was not to be compared to the market of Great Britain. He went further, and instituted a comparison—and for all practical purposes he might as well have taken us back to the time of the flood, or to the time when Christopher Columbus landed on the shores of America—he compared the trade of Canada to day with that of forty years ago. Did the hon, gentleman forget that the Dominion of Canada did not exist forty years ago! Would it not have been sufficient for him to go back twentyfour years and contrast the trade of Canada then with its trade to day! I have done that, and I propose to give my figures to the House and let the people judge for themselves. Here, again, it may be well to read an extract from the hon, gentleman's speech, in which he says:

"The English market for our farmers, as everyone knows who will study our statistical tables, has been a growing market. We sell twice the bulk of agricultural products in the British islands that we did torty years ago, and during that same interval the American market has shown no growth whatever."

Now, going back to 1867-68, the first year after ducts, we exported to the markets of Great Britain to the value of $4,050,175. In 1890 Canada exported to Great Britain $3,661,826 of agricultural products. I admit that perhaps the hon, gentleman made a mistake here again. believe that his intention, though he did not say so. was to include in that statement all farm products. I submit that if you include the two items the showing will be entirely different. I think in the delivery of the speech made by the hon, member for Albert, a man who is so thoroughly educated and so well posted, considering, too, that he followed my hon, friend from South Oxford, after having a week to prepare himself—I say that, in making a statement to this House, he should have been more accurate, and if he meant to include animals and their products along with agricultural products. he should have so stated. But the hon, gentleman has not done so. The facts are, that taking the articles named under the headings in which they appear in the returns, it will be found that in place of an increased export of agricultural products to Great Britain there has been a falling off of $389,-000. But I will do him the justice now to give the other figures. Looking back to 1867-68 I find that animals and their products amounted to $2,673,039. The latest Trade Returns show that this amount has been swollen to $18,578,000. admit that is a very large increase, but I want to point out to you that nearly the whole of that increase is due to the export of cheese and beef cattle from the Province of Ontario, a trade in which that hon, gentleman's constituents do not participate, I may say, at all, or, if at all, to a very limited ex-I believe that some efforts have been made tent. in the Lower Provinces to encourage that trade, and my hon, friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) will be able to inform the House as to the success of those efforts. Now, I propose to call attention to the trade between New Brunswick and Great Britain and the United States. I find that in 1867-68 the exports of farm products, including all agricultural products, and animals and their products, amounted to $3,103. This growing trade with Great Britain in twenty-four years has reached the enormous sum of $4,987. But I will go further, and I desire now to call attention to the trade beween that province and the United States. gret that on the whole it does not make a better showing, but when I make the statement, and hon. gentlemen contrast, as they will, the increase in these twenty-four years in the trade of agricultural and in farm products from that province to the United States, and when I tell them that in that same year our trade in those products with the United States amounted to $31,879, I am able to point to the fact that that trade has increased, as shown by the Trade Returns of 1890, to $401,143, or in twenty-four years, while trade with Great Britain in farm products has increased $1,884, trade in the same products to the United States from the same province has increased $369,264. Now, I propose to deal more fully with the trade of New Brunswick as a whole; and let me say at the outset that the Trade Returns of the last year show that our total exports from New Brunwick in round figures amount to $7,000,000. I might every dollar of that $3,500,000 represents products of the forests of New Brunswick. There you have the trade with Great Britain that has been built up in all these years. Now, let me call attention to the trade with the United States. In the last year, according to the Trade Returns, our trade with the United States amounted to $3,100,000. I admit-for I want to state the matter fairlythat included in that sum is $800,000 or $900,000 for lumber which is not the produce of our province. But it cannot be said that we do not derive very great benefit from handling that lumber. I may state that in the production of this lumber in the State of Maine our people assist in cutting, in hauling, in driving and rafting and sawing that lumber in the city of St. John; and I go further, and I tell you that out of that eight or nine hundred thousand dollars representing the lumber which is exported from New Brunswick, the produce of the State of Maine—I will not say the whole of it, but I will say the major part of it is carried in the coasting vessels built and owned and sailed by the people of New Brunswick. Sir, I think I may safely include that in my statement. The lumber exported to the United States amounts to $1,733,068, including that item from the State of Maine. To all other countries we sent $162,105 of lumber to the West Indies, to South America and to Australia, showing that of the total exports from New Brunswick, amounting to $6,977,885, $5,266,996 are forest products. Now, you will readily understand that any policy which goes into operation in this country must seriously affect, either for good or for evil, a trade which is so large, compared with our whole trade, as the lumber trade of New Brunswick. But, Mr. Speaker, there is still $1,710,889, exclusive of forest products, exported. Let us see where that goes, and in what proportion that reaches the markets of Great Britain and the markets of the United States. In 1879 we exported products of the mine to Great Britain to the amount of $3,473; the United States took $112,166. Of the fisheries Great Britain took $27,475, and the United States took $476,638. Of farm products Great Britain took $4,948, and the United States $404,892. Of manufactured goods Great Britain took $91,904, and the United States $362,961. To sum it all up, Great Britain took $127,970, and the United States $1,356,657 of the products of the mine, the fisheries, the farm and manufactures. Sir, does it lie in the mouth of any hon, gentleman coming from New Brunswick to undervalue the markets of the United States to the people of that province after I have submitted these figures for their consideration? I do not believe, notwithstanding that the Conservative party are represented in this House by 13 gentlemen, that there is one among the number who will have the hardihood to follow me and say that the United States is a market to be despised by the people of New Branswick. Sir, I regret that we did not have in the last campaign a few Ontario speeches made in the Province of New Brunswick, such we have listened to to-night from the hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace). One dose of what that hon, gentleman has given the House to-night would have changed the result in New go further, and point out to this House that one-half of that total amount goes to Great Britain; but while making that statement I desire also to coming from the north shore, did in the last election, Brunswick, and hon. gentlemen know it. I am not point out that, with the exception of $127,000, but I am here to-night to say that any number of Conservatives in my province ran their election squarely, as I did, upon a reciprocity platform: The only difference between us was this: They said we can get reciprocity in natural products, and we said you cannot. Time will tell who is right. We expected a long time before this that we would have had something tangible in regard to these negotiations. We have had two visits by Ministers to Washington, and there will be another in October. I hope hon, gentlemen opposite may succeed in their efforts, and I am here to-night to admit that if hon, gentlemen can secure from the United States reciprocity in natural products I for one will be willing and anxious to accept it. But I wish to call attention to another matter which I think of great importance, I will not say to the whole of New Brunswick, but to the major part of the province, and I am sure in the statement I am about to make I will be borne out by the junior member for the City and County of St. John, and that is, that in the trade carried on between New Brunswick and the mother country, which is principally in spruce deals, we have to compete in freights with the world, and that the cargoes are principally carried in iron steamers and the balance mainly in Norwegian vessels. It is true that occasionally a large ship is launched in Nova Scotia or elsewhere, that finds her way across the bay, and I am proud to be able to state that there is loading in St. John to-day the largest ship ever launched in the Maritime Provinces. She will take a cargo of deals to the other side of the water; but we have to compete in that trade with iron steamships, with ocean tramps, as they are called in St. John. But is that the case in regard to the export of lumber to the United States? Not so. I hold that 75 per cent. of our whole export of lumber from St. John to the United States is carried in vessels built, owned and operated by people in New Brunswick. What does that mean? When you send $1,700,000 of lumber to the American market do you get only that money back? No. The average rate of freight to Boston and New York is $2.50, while the average price of lumber, as shown by the Trade Returns, is about $8 per 1,000; call it $10 per 1,000, if you like; so the freight is equal to 25 per cent. of the value of the cargo. round numbers, I believe, the people of New Brunswick have returned to them every year from that trade $500,000 by way of freights. This does not apply to the same extent to the trade carried on across the Atlantic. Let me point to another feature of this business worthy of the attention of the House, and it is this, that our exports from New Brunswick which are not carried by our coasting vessels are very largely carried by a line of steamships which has been in existence for a great many years, and which has been run successfully all those years. There is no better stock to-day in Boston than that of the International line of steamers between St. John and Boston. Does any hon, gentleman recollect any application to Parliament asking for a subsidy in order to establish or perpetuate that line? Not a bit of it. The trade between the two countries, in spite of the tariff walls, has maintained and kept running that splendid line between St. John and Boston, a line which the people of St. John would not care to lose. What is a further fact? It is, that last year two lines were put on between that port and the port of New York. I confess I look on this as a great boon. But this line does not come here asking a subsidy from this Parliament. It is established because the trade wants it. While I do not desire to trespass on the patience of the House, I feel it necessary to point, not to industries that are being carried on in New Brunswick at the present time, but to some industries which have been killed by the policy of the Government, and which would be revived if we could secure free trade with the United States. Let me call the attention of the House and of the members for St. John to the lime business in the city they represent. The hon. gentlemen will pardon me for alluding to it, but I do so because my county is as much interested in the lime-burning business as is their county. What are the facts? In 1881 St. John had a trade in lime of less than $2,000 with the United States. In 1890, the Trade Returns show that, in spite of a heavy tariff, the trade had increased to $143,000. The figures in the Trade Returns do not, however, indicate the value of that trade to St. John. major part of it is carried in St. John vessels. am not prepared to make any prediction with respect to the actual outcome of the summer work in the lime business at St. John, but I will venture to say, from what I know, that instead of lime to the value of $150,000 being shipped to the States from St. John, the value will fall below $15,000. Why? I charge this reduction upon hon, gentlemen opposite, and I ask them to defend it if they It will be remembered that St. John, in the last Parliament, was represented by hon, members sitting on this side of the House, and it will be fresh in the memories of some hon, members that Mr. Weldon asked the Government and pressed the Government, when the McKinley tariff was before Congress, to reduce the duty here from 20 to 10 per cent. Had they done so it is firmly believed that no increase in the duty on lime would have been made in the United States. But our Government declined to do so, and then the McKinley Tariff Bill became law, and instead of a duty of 10 per cent. in the manufacture of lime that industry is taxed to the extend of 40 or 45 per cent., the duty being 6 cts. per 100 lbs., including the weight of the barrel. I will not say there would have been as much lime shipped to the United States as formerly, on account of the condition of affairs in New York and Boston, for I am free to confess that on account of the labour strike business is somewhat depressed and the demand may have fallen off somewhat. But, Sir, I think I will be prepared to establish one fact, that whenever there is a market in New York or Boston for lime the people of St. John are prepared to compete in that market with any people on the face of the globe. I am not going to ask the House to take my statement for that, and although at the outset I said I did not propose to trouble the House with many extracts, yet this is an important matter, and I want the House thoroughly to understand it. I will read briefly from the report of a commission appointed by the State of Maine on this subject. The people of St. John, at all events those engaged in the business, pretty thoroughly understand the question, but I wish that others should understand it as well. First of all, let me say that in St. John we have, I believe, the largest quantity and the best quality of limestone to be found anywhere in the known world. That is a pretty big statement.

Mr. FORBES. Cape Breton is just as good.

Mr. KING. Even suppose it is, we have in St John limestone towering mountains high alongside fifty feet of water. We have got it in St. John towering mountains high, almost in sight of Boston and New York, and capable of being transferred there at less expense than from any other place in this Dominion. We have got in the country behind this limestone immense quantities of wood. true that we have a market for that wood in the United States, but it could be equally well employed at home burning lime; and to prove my statements I will now quote from the third annual report of the Bureau of Industry and Labour Statistics of the State of Maine. The report says:

"Most of the quarries in Knox County are very deep, requiring a great expense for the pumping of water. A good steam engine and a set of pumps are indispensible for every quarry of any extent. Much expense, now and then, is incurred in clearing away chips (small pieces of rock) and other loose débris from the quarries."

Nothing of that kind happens in St. John, for, as I before said, the limestone is towering up mountains high, and instead of mining it, as they have to do in the State of Maine, we have simply to quarry it in St. John. This report continues to say the State of Maine, we have simply to quarry it in St. John. This report continues to say:

"There were in Knox County, in 1888. 92 patent kilns, which produced 1,800,000 casks of lime, and in this producin the kilns consumed 85,000 cords of wood. Of the 85,000 cords of wood, about 52,173 were imported from our neighbours in the Maritime Provinces. The wood was invoiced from about $1.50 per cord. Our domestic manufactures paid on an average of $3.75 per cord. The gross sum paid to foreign producers of kiln wood was $195,648,75. To freight this 52,173 cords of wood there were 604 foreign arrivals at Rockland alone. This wood was brought in what is known as St. John wood-boats. The boats will carry 50 to 60 cords on an average per load. The crew generally consists of three or four men to a vessel. The lime is put into casks that will hold about two busnels and a peck. It will take about five coopers working nearly all the year through to supply the lime casks for a kiln, or about 460 coopers to make all the casks required for the kilns in Knox County for the year 1888. These casks are made within a radius of twenty miles of the kilns. To burn, fill, cooper and put on board of vessels and cars for shipment requires about six men to a kiln, or about 644 men to the kilns in Knox County. To distribute this lime to the various markets it takes 275 vessels. These vessels on an average, for the Boston market, will carry 700 casks; vessels for the New York market will freight 1,500 casks. This gives employment to over 800 sea-faring men. Boston and New York are the two principal distributing points for the lime. The Knox and Lincoln Railroad transported; for the year ending 31st December, 1888, over their road 114,000 casks of lime. To run these plants requires an active capital of over three-quarters of a million dollars annually, giving employment directly and indirectly to 3,000 men. These employés, as a class, are very intelligent. There are but few foreigners employed in this industry. The employés, as a class, are And yet hon, gentlemen tell us that we have reason to fear that under unrestricted reciprocity we cannot compete in manufactured goods. I notice, Sir, that in our trade and navigation returns lime is set down as a manufactured article, and I claim that it fairly has a right to appear under that head. I have not asked the House to take my word, but I give them a good authority to show that the only thing the people of Maine have to fear is the competition of the St. John line burners. The report continues:

"Good authorities estimate that in the year 1888 there were shipped to the States 225,000 casks of this St. John lime. The duty on this lime is ten per cent. ad valorem, Mr. KING.

but the lime is invoiced for 35 cents per cask, which gives a specific duty of only 3 cents per cask."

Be it remembered that this was before the Mc-Kinley tariff became law:

Kinley tariff became law:

"The following are some of the advantages our province neighbours have over the manufactures, viz., the rock is dug and placed at the kilns for 10 cents a cask; rock costs our lime burners at the kilns 22 cents per cask. Wood, at the kilns at St. John. cost on an average from $2 to $2.25 per cord. Nor is this all; the cord at New Brunswick must have the following dimensions: when wood is 4 feet long it must be 4 feet high and 12 feet in length of pile, making 192 cubic feet, or equal to one and a-half cords of our wood. Wood, per cord, on an average, costs the Knox County manufacturers $3.75, 128 cubic feet for a cord, or it costs the above lime burners $5.62 for the same amount of wood that it costs the St. John lime burners from $2 to $2.25. Labour, which is the largest item in this industry, is certainly 25 per cent. less at $t. John than at the Knox County plants. For the first few months in the year, at $t. John, it is the custom to pay at the rate of $1.40 per day; later in the season they advance the wages of their employés. The highest wages they ever paid to kiln men, as far as we can learn from personal investigations, were $1.80 per day. The general average would be $1.50 per day, while in the Rockland personal investigations, were $1.80 per day. The general average would be $1.50 per day, while in the Rockland lime industry labour in and about the kilns is paid at the rate of $2.

And yet this is in the State of Maine, that place in which we have heard so much from the other side of the House, about the deserted farms, and the misery and the poverty with which that State is affected at the present moment. Yet, Sir, we have it on the authority from which I am quoting that the labouring man in St. John's gets $1.40 per day, while the men engaged in the same occupation of burning lime in the State of Maine are getting $2 per day, notwithstanding that the lime burner in Maine is paying two and a-half times as much for his fuel as the lime burner in St. John. I am not charging it on the lime burners of St. John that they are oppressing their men, but I am here to night to state that if free trade could be secured between the United States and Canada in that article of lime alone it would be worth more to the city of St. John than all the cotton factories that ever were built in New Brunswick under the National Policy. Sir, I am perfectly safe in stating that in the last year to which our trade returns refer the lime trade was worth from $200,000 to $250,000 to that city and province alone. Is that trade not capable of expansion? Have I not pointed out from the returns that that trade between Rockland, Boston and New York is worth $2,000,000 per annum, and will anybody tell me, after the facts I have given to the House, that if we had free trade in lime alone that we would not in less than five years transfer to the city of St. John the capital and the enterprise of Rockland. I believe, Sir, that we have capital and enterprise of our own; but, if it were necessary, I am sure that that free trade would be sufficient to induce the Rockland manufacturer to transfer his plant to St. John and manufacture the lime for the American market. Sir, it is not too much to say that inside of ten years at the most that trade, in place of amounting to the paltry sum of $10,000 or $20,000, would run up to at least a million dollars a year. Sir, that is not all. I propose to call attention to some industries which might be promoted in the Province of New Brunswick under free trade, while not interfering with the lumber industry, which is the leading industry of that province, next to farming. We have in the Province of New Brunswick an inexhaustible quantity of freestone of a variety of colours, a stone which is much sought after in the markets of Boston and New York. To-day it is taxed by the found in this continent or elsewhere. The only stone McKinley Bill $1.50 per ton. And it appears strange and inconsistent on the part of the hon. member for Albert to stand up in this House and defend the National Policy and condemn reciproity, when the hon, gentleman knows that he cannot House that there is a market for it in the United make a canvass of his county without seeing in open daylight a number of freestone quarries now closed down which were worked successfully a few years ago. I am not able to give the exact figures of free trade in that article. They are afraid to to-night, but if you consult the Trade Returns of face the competition in the American market. twenty-four or twenty-five years ago you will find They are much more willing that the National twenty-four or twenty-five years ago you will find that we exported from New Brunswick to the States at that time about $85,000 worth of freestone. Do the Trade Returns that this has been growing? Not a bit of it. They show that it has dwindled down to $11,000 a year. Now, we know that twentyfour years ago Boston, as it stands to-day, was scarcely built. New York had an existence and a large population, but who will say that the best and finest edifices in the city of New York have not been erected during those twenty-four years. And yet during all those years we have been barred out by a tariff from sending our freestone to those cities. I do not hesitate to say that had this country enjoyed free trade during that time, in place of our export of freestone to the United States amounting to the paltry sum of $11,000 there is not a shadow of doubt that it would have amounted to from half a million to a million of dol-I took the trouble a few days ago to look over the census returns of the United States, in which I find that every quarry of any extent in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is referred to; and in those returns our freestone holds a place as high as any except one particular kind—I do not remember the kind. The freestone of our province has much to commend it. gentlemen can see a sample of it in the new departmental block in this city. Now, give us free trade with the United States and you will see a trade in freestone spring up with the ports of Boston and New York which will do more for the Province of New Brunswick than the National Policy could ever hope to do, if it should meet the highest possible expectations of its friends and advo-But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. body knows that in the county of my hon. friend who sits at my right, the County of Charlotte, there are immense deposits of red granite. I may be told that there is red granite in the United States: but in quality, in quantity or in the size of the block which can be taken out of the quarry there is nothing in the United States that can compare with To-day, in spite of the McKinley Bill, some two or three hundred men are engaged in Charlotte County in the occupation of preparing red granite for the United States and the local market. The McKinley Bill has had the effect of stopping entirely the importation of the finished article into the United States. In St. John we have a factory today engaged in the polishing of that granite, the proprietor of which states that he will be obliged to move his works across the line to escape the He has moved in part, and I believe he contemplates moving the balance at no distant date. There is no telling what the possibilities of the trade in that stone would be under free trade. Every one knows that that stone is admired the world over, and the New Brunswick article is equal to any have got the capital and the enterprise among our-that compares with it is the Scotch granite. When I tell you that our granite has been shipped by rail all the way to Chicago I think that I have said sufficient to convince the members of this States, provided that market were open to us. Now, with regard to coal, I know that our friends who support the Government are somewhat afraid Policy should be maintained, and that this country should be muclted in the sum of $600,000 annually for the purpose of transporting Nova Scotia coal to the markets of Ontario and Quebec, or as far west as they can. But I wish to state to-night that'we have in the Province of New Brunswick immense undeveloped coal fields. I presume there is not an hon, gentleman from that province who will venture to rise in his place and depreciate its coal fields. If he chooses to do so, I am willing that he should do so. In the county which I represent we have to-day, according to the most authentic account, millions -yes, hundreds of millions-of tons of coal. I will not say that it is as good as the Pennsylvania coal, or even the Nova Scotia coal; but I will say that that coal is being produced at the mines at $1 a ton, and is being hauled by team 14 miles and delivered to the railways at $2.75 a ton, and that coal is being used successfully on two lines of railway in New Brunswick. I challenge anybody to show a coal in North America which has its equal for ordinary forge purposes. That coal is within four hours by express train of Bangor, Maine, and within a day of that point by freight train, from which it is to-day shut out by a duty of 75 cents per ton. It is true we have not the railways necessary to enable us properly to develop these mines, though a considerable quantity finds a local market. But give us free trade with the State of Maine, which has a climate like ours, which has extensive manufacturing facilities, and which is well supplied with railroads, and that coal, which lies alongside of that State, will find a large market there, and the duty of 75 cents per ton, if removed, would pay the freight. Even if it should go no further, that would be an immense benefit to the country and to the province from which I come. Now, with regard to the lumber business, I know something about it, and I am prepared to say to-night that under present conditions there is a great waste of lumber in our Province. I do not know whether the legal gentlemen who represent the City and County of St. John know anything about it; but I know that every manufacturer, every tanner, and every shipper of lumber in St. John, knows something about it. When the treaty of 1854 was abrogated bark was left on the free list; and what has since gone on in our province? Millions of hemlock trees have been felled and stripped of their bark, and the bark has been going to the American market to supply the American tanner, and because we have no market for hemlock lumber the trunk of the tree has been allowed to lie and rot in the woods. Give us free trade in hemlock lumber with Boston and I do not hesitate to say—and I know what I am talking about—that all this waste will be utilized. We selves, but we are cramped, crippled and shackled by these restrictions on trade. I know that capitalists from Boston have visited my section of the country several times, and I know that the only thing which prevents their going in for the manufacture of hemlock lumber in that section is the fact that import duty prevails in the American market, which closes us out. There is no teliing under free trade what the export of that particular article might reasonably be expected to amount to. Coming back to hardwood: it is all very fine to talk of manufacturing our own furniture, but let me make this statement, that there is being erected at the Chaudière Falls in this city a mill which, when running on hardwoods, such as are used in the manufacture of furniture in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, I will guarantee will, in twenty days, stock the market and leave a surplus. That one mill will produce enough in three weeks to supply all the furniture factories in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. We have mills all over New Brunswick and Nova Scotia seeking a market, and none to be found, except when the English market will afford a price which will enable us to ship to that market, and this year I regret it does not. I have pointed out some interests which have lapsed under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite and some which might be promoted under a different policy, and I now desire to point to some interests which exist in New Brunswick and which are suffering from the evil effects of the National Policy. Take the most important—that of lumber. What are the facts? Hon. gentlemen opposite say if we had free trade we would not get the full benefit of the reduction in duties. I would not be so unreasonable as to claim we would, but I say that we would increase our production, and if you will give us the market we are prepared to divide with Americans that two dollars duty, and be still better off than we are. While on this point I think it is but fair I should call attention to an act of which this Government has been guilty, with reference to the lumber interests of New Brunswick. Hon, gentlemen will remember that a measure was introduced here some years ago. authorizing the Government to impose an export duty on logs, for the avowed purpose of compelling the Americans to lower or wholly abolish their import duty on lumber coming from Canada to the United States. Sir, had we no claim on this Gov. ernment? Does the hon. Minister of Finance think that the people of New Brunswick engaged in the lumber business have no claim on him or his Government. I recollect, after that hon. gentleman and his esteemed leader, who has since departed, were in St. John last fall, their first official act, when they came back to Ottawa; was to abolish the export duty, in order that our friends on the Ottawa should get their pine lumber into the American market for $1 per thousand, forgetting that 95 per cent of our lumber is spruce, and that the great lumbering industry in New Brunswick had some claims on the Government as well as the gentlemen who lumber on the Ottawa river. have the best evidence possible, right in the city of St. John, as to what free trade in lumber will do for our province. I am in that business, and when I go to St. John to make a sale of 2,000,000 or Mr. KING.

year, but which in other years we have got, I find that American logs bring in the St. John market $10 per thousand feet, the difference of duty going into the pocket of the producer in Maine. This is the best possible proof of the advantage the reduction of the duties would be to the lumbermen of the Maritime Provinces. But that is not all. It may be said that to the men who supply the parties who go into the woods and haul the logs it makes no difference; but I will tell you where the shoe pinches. In New Brunswick I can only pay my hired men $16 per month, while the American operator across the line, in sight of my shanty, can afford to pay $26 per month. That is the way the labouring men are affected by the tariff, and it shows what a relief it would be to us if we could secure reciprocity with the United States. It may be said that I am too fast in making these predictions, but I am willing they should go on record in Hansard, because I do expect the time is not far distant when we will be able to avail ourselves of that market. I remember that I am here in a minority from my province, but I recollect that I have stood here in a minority from all Canada, when the Government possessed ninety of majority, and I realise to-night that the times have somewhat changed. Notwithstanding the proud boasts of hon gentlemen opposite, I realise that I am face to face with a Government who dare not count on more than twenty to twenty-three of a majority. They tell us the country is with them. Sir, it is gradually slipping from their grasp, and I have the proud satisfaction of knowing that while in the past I looked jealously around on my friends from Quebec and Ontario, and felt that we would be better out of this Confederation than in it, feeling that they might be a selfish lot—I speak of both Liberals and Conservatives—only disposed to consider their own interests, and that to them this National Policy might be some advantage, I am proud to be able to stand here with a majority from the two great provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which have both pronounced against the Government. It is true that my province pronounced March election against the Liberal in the party and their policy. But my province is a province which generally takes time to consider, and I venture to say that when the opportunity is offered us again we will pronounce a different verdict. referred a short while ago to the trade in bark, which has been carried on owing to that article having been left on the free list when the treaty was abolished in 1866. I will now call attention to another industry in the Province of New Brunswick, which stands exactly in the same position. I refer to the export of Rockland wood, to which I alluded when reading the extract from the report of the commission in Maine. A large trade is carried on in that trade of soft wood, which has not a commercial value, but is of great value to the people of the county I represent. Here again the price, as shown in the trade returns, does not indicate the value of that trade to the people of New Brunswick. can multiply it two and a-half times. If we export $100,000 of wood from the Maritime Provinces to Rockland, Maine, that means a quarter of a million dollars returned to us. What I said before with regard to lumber I now 3,000,000 spruce logs, and the mill owner offers me repeat; and I say further, that in that particular $8 per thousand feet—a price we cannot get this locality, when we talk about the exodus, in my county and in the other counties that participate in this trade there is no exodus; the people find employment, they stay at home; it gives the farmers employment in the winter in preparing the lumber, it gives their sons employment in building ships; but how much better would it be if we could do the whole business, if we could use the wood and manufacture the lime for export to the foreign market, and bring back three or four times the amount in cash which we now do. I have pointed out these different industries, and if my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) were in his place I would challenge him, as I do any other hou, gentlemen from New Brunswick, to say where on the face of the globe a market can be found for lime, freestone, plaster, hemlock lumber, coal or cord-wood outside of the United States. My hon. friend from Albert said something which seemed to foreshadow the idea of Imperial Federation, because he pointed to a cloud in the sky, and spoke of a differential duty of 5 per cent. being put on in favour of the people of this country, which he though would be of great benefit to the lumbermanand the fisherman. Supposing we got the benefit to which he referred, it would amount to about 50 cents a thousand feet superficial measurement on lumber. I think hon. gentlemen on both sides would agree with me that the reduction of $2 a thousand in the United States is far preferable to the duty of 5 per cent. in our favour in Great Britain, which also we are not likely to get. The industries to which I have been referring would be in addition to the industries which are prosecuted at the present time; and I agree with one remark of the speaker who preceded me (Mr. Wallace), that the home market is the best market for our farmers. There is nothing clearer or truer than that, but I want to put the matter squarely before this House. If, as I believe, under free trade our industries can be developed, they would give a home market for the farmers. believe that in New Brunswick, if the business were carried on as it should be, we would have no necessity to export many of our farm products to the United States, because our farmers would have at their doors a market infinitely preferable to that of the United States. But hon gentlemen opposite tell us that we cannot get free trade. That is a question upon which neither they nor I am prepared to pass judgment to-night. If it is true that they are attempting to get free trade in natural products do they or do they not believe that they will succeed? They say that we cannot succeed on the basis which we propose. Do they intend to humbug the people by stating that they can succeed on the basis they propose? We know with whom we have to deal, and we know that, unless we make some sacrifices, we cannot expect to secure a trade which would be so valuable to us. They tell us it would be treason to make such sacrifices. I deny it. If freestone can be exported from Albert County to Boston, and if our people should invest their money in manufactured goods and bring them back to New Brunswick, I do not see anything treasonable in that. During the last campaign those hon. gentlemen said they were going in for reciprocity in natural products and such other articles as the changed condition of the two countries would admit of. Where do they draw the line? Where does the treason begin and where does it end? I adoption of free trade with the United States. and palaces built by the sugar refiners and the

First of all, the farmers of New Brunswick would be helped, next the lumbermen would be helped, the miners, the fishermen, the coasters would be helped, and in fact ever other class in New Brunswick would be helped. I would like some hon. gentleman from my province on the other side to rise and point out who would be hurt. It is true that we have some cotton factories in New Brunswick, but the most extensive of them is owned by Mr. Alexander Gibson, and though he opposed the policy of the party on this side of the House in the last election—and I suppose he had good and sufficient reason for doing so—I know that he has stated that he was not afraid to compete with the cotton manufacturers of the State of Maine, or any other part of the United States. ask why that gentleman, with his enterprise and energy, a man who built a railway from the Province of New Brunswick to Aroostook, in the State of Maine, and operated it until of late the Canadian Pacific Railway has got hold of it, and carried the products of the northern part of that State to the seaboard by a railway built by a citizen of New Brunswick, could be afraid to compete in the open market in the manufacture of cotton. We have some cotton manufacturers in St. John. I admit that some people might be hurt by this policy being put into operation. Possibly some law-yers might be hurt. There has been a suit going on for some time before the Equity judge in the city of St. John in connection with these cotton factories, and I believe there have been some twenty-one lawyers engaged in that pro and con. Possibly these lawyers might be hurt. There is a cotton factory in Charlotte County, and I regret to say that New Brunswickers were induced to invest their capital in that factory, and they lost their investment. It passed into the hands of American capitalists, and is now being run by American capital and American enterprise. Will any hon. gentleman dare to tell me that a factory situated on the borders of the State of Maine, with cheaper coal and cheaper labour than can be obtained in the State of Maine, cannot manufacture the article cheaper than it can be manufac-tured in that State. I know of no one else who will be hurt, unless it is the lawyers from St. John, by adopting free trade; certainly it cannot hurt the cotton factory very much. Now, I have not the slightest objection to express my views in regard to the loss of revenue which our friends predict would be the result of the adoption of a policy of this kind. I am here to-night to say that no system which can be devised—and I want to guard my words well-taking matters as they stand today, while I do not favour a system of direct taxation, I defy my hon. friend from South Oxford, if he had the reigns of power, to devise a system of taxation which would press more heavily upon the people of that province than the policy which is in existence to-day. What are the facts? In St. John and elsewhere what are we doing? present we are forced to export our surplus products for which we have to receive gold, and we are compelled, under the present system, to send that gold to Montreal and elsewhere to buy manufactured goods. I ask if that does not bear heavily upon us. I would like my hon. friends to take their constituents and visit some of the streets' have pointed out who would be helped by the in Montreal, and look at the fashionable residences cotton lords, and other men who have been enriched by the National Policy. They can point to nothing like that in New Brunswick. Another matter which was referred to in the election campaign was the loyalty question. I know my hon, friends opposite do not here, and I do not believe they did elsewhere, charge the Liberal party of New Brunswick with being disloyal. But I have one remark to make. I notice on every occasion when those hon. gentlemen rise in this House to speak, instead of pointing out what they think would be beneficial to their province, they always and invariably attempt to deal with what was said in a speech of the hon. member for South Oxford-that is, they charge that he has given utterance to disloyal sentiments. Sir, that hon, gentleman does not need any defence at my hands, and I am not here to defend him; but I do say that in the campaign which terminated in New Brunswick on the 5th of March last an unfair use was made of an extract taken from the speech delivered by that hon, gentleman at a banquet in Boston, and the unfair use that was made of that speech contributed largely to the success of some of the Conservative candidates in that province. I have read that hon, gentleman's speech through from end to end; I have read it more than once. I am proud of that speech and I am proud of the man who made it, and I think in justice to him, if it was not so late, I would only do right to read it word for word. But I will say this, that never before has a Boston audience heard a more patriotic Canadian speech, or a speech more in sympathy with Canadian interests, than the speech the hon. gentleman delivered on that occasion. speech of which every Canadian has a right to be proud. Did he belittle this country? Not a bit of If he erred at all it was in lauding the country too much. Sir, our friends forget that it was in the interest of Canada that the member for South Oxford was addressing a Boston audience. I do not say that he was attempting to pull the wool over their eyes; but our friends opposite are oversensitive, and they pretend that because the word "St. John" and the word "Halifax" are not mentioned in that speech, but that his reference was mainly to the future of Boston, therefore an attack was levelled at St. John and Halifax. Nothing of the kind. These gentlemen are at fault in their geography. Look to the west of us, and what do you find? There is a North-West in the United States as well as in Canada. There are Maritime Provinces as well as a Province of Ontario and a Province of Quebec; and, Sir, will not free trade in the Maritime Provinces help the City of Boston? Certainly it will. Boston to-day, I admit, is circumscribed, compared with the City of New York, but Boston to-day in the matter of trade is competing with the City of New York. New York at the present time is getting more than its fair share of trade. If you can convince the citizens of Boston that under unrestricted reciprocity there would come from Western Canada, and their own North-West, and the Maritime Province, a large influx to their city and a large addition to their trade, you have done a good service to Canada; and I do not believe that the citizens of St. John or the citizens of. Halifax are the men that our friends opposite take them to be: I do not believe they are afraid to face this free trade question.

is the most desirable market to-day, outside the home market, for the people of the Maritime Provinces, and under unrestricted reciprocity a large increase in that trade must naturally take place. Our export trade to-day with the United States, speaking from memory, I believe, is something like $40,000,000. Can anyone doubt that if we had free trade with the United States for the next ten or fifteen years that trade would not reach $80,000,000? And do you tell me that the hon, gentleman from South Oxford was not warranted in saying to the people of Boston that under the free trade relations which would exist if we negotiated a treaty of that kind. Boston would benefit more than any other city in the United States? Sir, our friends from St. John and Halifax are over-sensitive when they attack that speech of the member for South Oxford. Suppose we fall back upon the National Policy, and suppose that the Chinese wall which is now erected should be raised considerably higher between St. John and Boston, where would we be? Cut off completely. I ask my hon, friends to reconsider that speech, and when next they address a St. John audience to read, not an extract from the speech, but the whole speech. Thanking the House for their kind attention to my remarks, I now resume.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. (Saturday).

CONSOLIDATED REVENUE AND AUDIT ACT.

Mr. MULOCK moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 139) to amend the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. He said: It will be within the memory of hon. gentlemen that at the commencement of this session a statement was laid upon the Table of the House showing the amount of Governor General's warrants issued during the recess since last session, for carrying on the public service. A reference to that statement shows that the gross amount of the warrants so issued was $1,310,876.38, and it appears from this statement that there was only expended of that a sum of $750,646.60. I am not finding fault with the fact that there was not more spent, but I merely mention the circumstance that only that amount was spent to show that the Governor General was moved to grant authority to his Ministers to expend a sum of $560,000 more than they had any occasion to spend under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. When They have no fear you look at this statement I think you will be that they will be ousted from the trade they now have struck with many features in connection with it, in the ports of St. John and Halifax. Isay that Boston | showing on its face, and I am afraid in substance as well, an exercise of the prerogative far beyond the spirit of the Act in question. For example, the very first item for which there was a Governor General's warrant was on the 30th May, 1890, within one week after Parliament prorogued last session? That item was for "Contingencies, Exchequer Court, $2,000." was it necessary for the Government, the moment Parliament prorogued, to ask the Governor General for a warrant to expend this money? Why, I say, was not Parliament consulted the week before, when The very next item is Parliament was in session. on the 30th May, 1890, within thirteen days after the prorogation, and is a warrant for $24,231.59 for, as described in this statement, "House of Commons Contingencies." I am unable to understand how, within thirteen days after prorogation, the Government could have called upon the Governor General to give that authority for twenty-four thousand odd dollars, for something, which they must contend at all events, was within the spirit of the Act; for something unforeseen, something unprovided for, something urgent. We go on through this whole statement of Governor General's warrants issued from that time down to the present, and we are confronted with these extraordinary entries. find just prior to the general elections and at the close of the elections large expenses for public works. For example, we find here, on the 26th March, 1891, "Cape Breton Railway, Grand Narrows, $95,000;" we find on the 26th March, 1891, "Cape Breton Railway construction, $100,000;" 17th April, "ditto, $32,000;" 17th April, "Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, $65,000;" 17th April, "Intercolonial Railway construction, $1,000;" 17th April, 1891, "St. Charles Branch, $3,000;" "Y at Truro, $10,000;" and "Rolling Stock, $33,000." How comes it that it was necessary, fourteen days before the assembly of Parliament, to obtain a Governor General's warrant for the purchase of $33,000 worth of rolling stock? Under what part of the Revised Statutes does that come in? Was it urgent; was it unforeseen; was it to repair some public work or building? I should like to know how the Government came to move His Excellency to issue a warrant such as this. the statement goes on: 17th April, "Increased accommodation, St. John, $4,600; "and so on through the whole statement, which I will not take up the time of the House to read, but upon which I will say: that so far as I can judge, and so far as any explanations that have been offered the committee have gone, there has been no valid reason given for the exercise of the power I complain of. I asked the Minister of Finance, in regard to some of these items, if he would lay upon the Table of the House the reports of the Ministers upon which the Governor General was induced to put his hand to these What was the answer? It was: The Audit Act provides for it: and that I may not misinterpret what the Act provides, I will briefly quote the words of the Act itself. The Audit Act itself says: There shall be no expenditure of public money except there be authority of Parliament, except under certain circumstances; and what are these circumstances? In sub-section (b), section 32, the special circumstances that warrant such procedure as this are set forth as follows:-

"If when Parliament is not in session any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure not foreseen or provided for by Parliament is urgently and immediately required for the public good "——

Why urgently? The point of that is, that the urgency must be of such character as will not admit of the Government waiting until the representatives of the people can be consulted on the proposed expenditure. That must be the degree of urgency. The section goes on to say:

"Then upon the report of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General that there is no parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the service in question that the necessity is urgent, the Governor General may order a special warrant to be prepared to be signed by the Governor General, &c."

These are the conditions. Now, under these conditions, before the warrant could issue it was the duty of the Minister whose service was in question to have laid a report before the Governor General in Council within the spirit of that Act. Is it within the spirit of that Act for the Minister having charge of the service in question to simply say to the Governor in Council: The public service requiresso much money because there is some urgency, without setting forth the urgency, the need of it, the circumstances and facts, in order to enable both the Government and His Excellency to draw conclusions; and further than that, as another safeguard, Parliament required the Minister of Finance to add his report to that of the Minister in question to the effect that there was no ap-These reports, in order to give propriation. an intelligent idea of what is required, should, in my judgment, not be merely an echo of the statute, not copy merely the words of the statute, but should state the circumstances and the facts that warranted the Minister in question drawing the conclusion or inference which the Act requires to be drawn in order to the exercise of this preroga-Well, when we came the other night to one of these items and asked that the reports on which certain expenditure had been made should be laid before the Committee of Supply, what were we That I may not be charged with making any mistake, I will quote, for the information of the House, the discussion that took place:

"Mr. MULOCK. Why should not the reports of Ministers on which Governor General's warrants are issued be laid on the Table? We have simply a statement, but not a report.

"Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the hon. gentleman would obtain much more information if that were done.

"Mr. MULOCK. Then what is the use of the reports to the Governor General?

"Mr. FOSTER. The report, if the hon, gentleman got it, would inform him that so much money was required, and there was no appropriation out of which it could be taken, and it was so declared on the report of the Minister of Finance, and therefore a Governor General's warrant do issue."

The report contains, as a rule, no statement whatever of the circumstances which moved the Minister in question to ask for this special grant. The Minister went on to say that in some cases there might be a more detailed statement, and then added that he himself had been impressed with the fact that there had been more or less laxity in the matter of these grants, and that he was struggling with the difficulty and intended adopting some means to meet it. I want to strengthen his hands in his endeavour to remedy this abuse. If it is possible for abuses of this kind to take place it is time that the people's representatives endeavoured to provide extra safeguards against their recurrence. We have placed the Treasury under the care of the Finance Minister, and we have the Minister in charge of the service for which the warrant is required, and these two gentlemen are supposed to present to His Excellency the reports which will warrant His Excellency, if he is to take any responsibility at all, in determining whether he shall or shall not issue his warrant. At present what do we find? We find His Excellency, so far as appears here, signing recommendations from the Government practically in blank. It would be as reasonable, it seems to me, for His Excellency _to give an unlimited power of attorney in this matter at once to the Government as to go on signing recommendations which, judging by what has taken place, are without justification. To the extent of over half a million dollars at least the advice of the Government to His Excellency was without justification. That is not a state of affairs which should exist, and I propose, since the Minister of Finance and the individual Minister who has to do with this have disregarded the spirit of the law, to put some extra guards on the public It is somewhat late in the session to do that, but the occasion for the reform only became known to us on the 3rd of July, for it was on that day that the hon. Finance Minister made known to the House for the first time that these reports were practically valueless; and a few days afterwards, as soon as I could, I gave notice of this Bill which I have now the honour to introduce. I would ask the Government, if they do not approve of the measure, if the precautions I have suggested do not commend themselves, to prepare a Bill themselves --and I will be glad to defer to their judgment if they can improve on my measure—and let it become law before the close of the session. It is our duty to take every possible means to guard the treasury. We would not be doing our duty now if we allowed the laxity which the hon. Minister of Finance has permitted to creep into the Administration to continue until another session.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the call of several hon. members was that the hon, gentleman should explain his Bill. I do not think he has done anything of the kind, but he has gone into a long argument to show that certain abuses have existed which he feels called upon to reform. He has not, however, given the House any inkling of the provisions of his Bill, and that is the explanation we require just now.

Mr. MULOCK. I propose that, in addition to the precautions existing at present, that the report of the Minister having charge of the service for which the special warrant is required shall set forth all the facts and circumstances which warrant him in asking for a special grant, and that his report shall be referred to the Finance Minister, who will endorse the recommendation, and that these two reports shall be laid before the Minister of Justice, who will report thereon as to whether a case has been made out, within the spirit as well as the letter of the Act, by these reports, and whether the grant should be given. Then, and not until then, shall the Governor in Council be at liberty to issue the special warrant.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not enter into a discussion as to the necessity for this resolution, or into a reply to the allegations of the hon. gentleman, until the Bill comes before the House on its second reading. The hon. gentleman has given the outlines of his

Bill, and those the House can consider in the mean-

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FRAUDULENT MARKING.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 140) in restraint of fraudulent marking. He said: This measure deals only with the article of white lead, but it takes power to deal with other articles by Order in Council; but any Order in Council dealing with other articles besides white lead, after this session, will have to be confirmed at the next session of Parliament, or else the Order in Council will fall through and the articles so dealt with will no longer be subject to the Act. This Bill establishes a certain standard at which white lead is to be sold as pure, and provides a penalty in cases where white lead is marked pure and the standard not up to that required.

Mr. LAURIER. Has this Bill been suggested by the Boards of Trade?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE COPYRIGHT ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 141) to amend the Copyright Act. He said: This is merely to amend section 19 of the original Act, which provides as to the rights of parties in the Exchequer Court intervening at the relation of any person interested, and I propose to substitute therefor "at the suit of any person."

Mr. EDGAR. I hope the hon. Minister of Justice will not require the assent of the Imperial Government, because if he does we shall never have it, I suppose.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE PATENT ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 142) to amend the Patent Act. He said: This is for the purpose of making the same provision regarding patents which the other Bill makes regarding copyrights.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, an approved Minute of Council, appointing the Honourable Sir Hector Langevin, K.C.M.G., Minister of Public Works, the Honourable Mackenzic Bowell, Minister of Customs, the Honourable John Costigan, Minister of Inland Revenue, and the Honourable George Eulas Foster, Minister of Finance, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons, as Commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of the 13th Chapter of the Revised Statutes of Canada, intituled: "An Act respecting the House of Commons."

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA, 7th July, 1891.

GREAT NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Bill comes before the House on its second reading. Mr. DALY asked, 1. Has the Chief Engineer The hon. gentleman has given the outlines of his of Government Railways duly certified to the com-Mr. MULOCK.

pletion and equipment of the first fifty miles of the Great North-West Central Railway? 2. If so, can the acting Minister of Railways say why the said fifty miles of railway have not been operated? 3. When will the company operate the said fifty miles?

Mr. BOWELL. To the first part of the question the answer is, yes. In answer to an enquiry made a little while ago, Mr. Codd, the president of the company, stated that the railway had not been operated owing to the contractor having failed to deliver up to the company the fifty miles completed, in accordance with the agreement between the company and the contractor. Mr. Codd states that the company will operate the road as soon as it is delivered up by the contractor complete, according to the contract with the company.

QUEBEC AND LAKE ST. JOHN RAILWAY.

Mr. AMYOT (for Mr. Frémont) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to grant a subsidy to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway for the twenty miles of the Eastern or Chicoutimi extension of the railway to complete the seventy miles of distance between Chambord Junction and St. Alphonse, and also for the expensive bridging on the above Chicoutimi Extension Railway?

Mr. BOWELL. The question of railway subsidies has not yet been considered by the Government.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

Mr. AMYOT (for Mr. FREMONT) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to abolish the duty on vessels for the relief of sick and distressed mariners?

Mr. TUPPER. This subject has not been considered by the Government, but enquiries are now being made by the Department of Marine as to whether ship-owners would prefer to take care of their own sick mariners and pay no sick mariners' tax, thus avoiding the payment of corresponding tonnage dues in the United States.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—RELIEF FOR INJURIES.

Mr. AMYOT (for Mr. Frémont) asked, What was the amount paid by the Government for relief afforded to the passengers on the Intercolonial Railway, at the time of the disaster at St. Joseph de Lévis? Has the Government paid the cost of medical attendance on, and the board of the wounded while they were suffering? Why have not the doctor's bill and the charges for board against Eugène Robitaille, of the parish of Ancienne Lorette, one of the victims of the said accident, been settled?

Mr. BOWELL. The amount paid to doctors and others was $2,560.02. No services were paid for except in cases in which the claimants were called upon by the railway officials to take charge of the patients. The Government cannot recognize any liability for injuries caused by this accident.

FISHERY OVERSEER LAVALLEE.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. Beausoleil) asked, 1st. given? Giving the name of the person or persons Whether the Government has been informed of the in each case. 3rd. What amount was paid to the difficulties which have been raised for the first time by the fishery overseer for the County of Richelieu, Mr. N. Lavallée, who denies to licensed fishermen from the other counties surrounding Lake St. Peter, the right of fishing in the waters of the County of Richelieu? 2nd. Whether the Government gave authority to Mr. Lavallée, fishery overseer for the district of Richelieu, to issue to the licensed fishermen of the adjoining counties the following notice:—

" NOTICE.

"You are strictly prohibited from fishing within the County of Richelieu.
"By order of the Overseer.

"Under pain of fine, as I cannot grant you licenses.
(Sgd.)
"N. LAVALLÉE,
"Fishery Overseer."

3rd. Whether the Government are aware that the said Lavallée has refused, and still refuses to grant fishing licenses in the waters of the County of Richelieu to fishermen holding licenses, or otherwise, to fish in the waters of the adjoining counties, and has refused to take the price of such licenses? 4th. If so, what steps do the Government purpose taking in order to put a stop to the abuse of power committed by the said Lavallée since his appointment as fishery overseer for the County of Richelieu?

Mr. TUPPER. The Fisheries Department was a few days ago informed of the difficulties which had arisen in Overseer Lavallée's district regarding the issue of fishery licenses on Lake St. Peter. The department didnot give authority to Mr. Lavallée to issue the notice mentioned. The department is not aware that Overseer Lavallée has refused, and still refuses, to grant licenses to fish in the waters of the County of Richelieu to fishermen holding licenses, or otherwise, to fish in the waters of the adjoining counties, and to take the fees for such licenses. Mr. Lavallée has been called upon for an explanation of his action, and upon receipt of his report such steps will be taken as are deemed necessary.

MILITIA AT WELLINGTON, B.C.

Mr. GORDON asked, 1st. Whether the pay of the active militia called out by Lieutenant Colonel Holmes, ostensibly in aid of the civil power at Wellington, on the 5th of August last, was guaranteed before the troops left Victoria? If so, by whom? And by whom paid? Have the expenses of said military expedition been collected from a municipality; and if so, from which municipality? If there are no details of those payments in the department, as indicated by the return brought down to this House, will the Minister of Militia obtain an answer to the following questions by telegraph? 2nd. Did any person or persons become responsible for, and guarantee the payment of the active militia under the command of Colonel Holmes, that were ordered to Wellington on the 5th of August last? Did such guarantee, if any, include cost of transportation, the rent of cars used as quarters for the force while at Wellington, the board and lodging of officers, and board of the men at the Wellington hotel? And the blankets and other camp equipments required by the troops while there? If so, by whom was such guarantee given? Giving the name of the person or persons Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company for transportation and use of their cars for quarters for the troops while at Washington? 4th. What amount was paid for the board and lodging of the officers and for board of the men under the command of Colonel Holmes, at the Wellington hotel? 5th. What amount was paid for active service of officers and men? What amount in lieu of subsistence? 6th. What amount was paid for blankets and other camp equipage while so stationed? 7th. Whether any sum or sums were paid to either officers or men in excess of the regulation rates for active service? If so, what amount? And to whom paid? And any other information in his possession pertinent to this enquiry.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In reply to the first question, I may say that the pay was guaranteed by R. Dunsmuir & Sons before the troops left Victoria. I cannot say who paid them. I am not aware that the expenses were collected by a municipality. In answer to the second question, I may state that the guarantee given by R. Dunsmuir & Sons included all reasonable expenses in connection with the trip of the militia force to Wellington. In reply to the third question, I may say that the expenses not having been paid by the Government, I cannot state what amount was paid. No account has been presented for board and lodging of officers, and for board of the men at the Wellington hotel. The amount paid for active service of the officers and men of the British Columbia Brigade of Garrison Artillery and for cartage, &c., was $198.08. Nothing was paid for "C" Battery detachment. There was a small bill of $4 for the commanding officer, and 75 cents for his master gunner for cab hire, which was also paid. The receipts in each case of the parties receiving the money were sent to Messrs. Dunsmuir & Sons. In reference to the sixth question, I do not know what amount was paid for blankets or other camp equipage while they were stationed there, as no account was submitted for these items. I am not aware of any sums being paid other than those I have mentioned. The claim for pay was made out under the supervision of the deputy adjutant general and was strictly in accordance with the regulations.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he does not know by whom the money was paid.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The department never knows except when the amount is paid by the commanding officer.

Mr. LAURIER. Then in this case, it was not paid by the commanding officer?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, it was paid to the commanding officer.

Mr. LAURIER. And the Minister cannot say by whom it was paid?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I see it was paid by the firm of Dunsmuir & Sons, and I cannot say anything further.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a very grave question, and the correspondence ought to be laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. Gordon.

OVERSEER LAVALLEE.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. Beausoleil) asked, On what date, under what circumstances, and on whose recommendation was Mr. Lavallée appointed fishery officer for the County of Richelieu.

Mr. TUPPER. Narcisse Lavallée was, on the 4th November, 1890, appointed fishery overseer for that portion of the waters of the River St. Lawrence fronting on the County of Richelieu, including the islands therein, on the recommendation of the late J. A. Massue, ex-M.P.

LAKE ST. PETER—DIVISION OF FISHERY DISTRICTS.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. Beausoleil) asked, Has the Government considered the inconvenience resulting from the division of the waters of Lake St. Peter into six fishery districts,—thereby creating six concurrent jurisdictions over the same waters, with the clashings which necessarily arise? Is it intended to make one district of Lake St. Peter, and to grant fishing licenses valid in all parts of the said lake for the price of a license in one district?

Mr. TUPPER. The Government has considered the system of licenses for this district, and believes that no inconvenience has resulted from the division of the waters of Lake St. Peter, and that no clashing will arise if licensees keep within the limits prescribed in their licenses. It is not intended to make one district of Lake St. Peter nor to grant fishing licenses valid in all parts of the said lake for the fee of a single license.

MONUMENT TO SIR JOHN MACDONALD.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) (for Mr. Taylor) asked. Is it the intention of the Government to have a monument of the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, P.C., G.C.B., &c., erected on the Parliament grounds at Ottawa? If so, when, and where will the same be located?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the intention of the Government to ask Parliament to vote a sum of money for that purpose.

ILLEGAL SEIZURE OF LIQUOR.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. CHOQUETTE) asked, Whether the Government ordered an enquiry respecting an illegal seizure of liquor effected on the premises of F. X. Lamonde, hotel-keeper, Montmagny, a few weeks ago by Eugène Hammond, preventive officer for the said town; and if so, what was the result of such enquiry?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government did order an investigation under date of the 18th June, and the inspectors reported that a seizure had been made on insufficient grounds, and recommended that the amount should be refunded to Mr. Lalonde, amounting to the sum of $15. That amount was refunded to him, and the officer who made the seizure was ordered to pay the amount out of his own pocket.

ATLANTIC CATTLE TRADE.

Mr. SPROULE asked, When will the regula-Mr. SPEAKER. I must rule that it is out of tions be issued concerning the Atlantic cattle trade?

Mr. TUPPER. The regulations which have been made, in addition to those which are now in force, will be issued after the Bill now before Parliament becomes law.

RELIEF OF DISTRESSED CANADIANS ABROAD.

Mr. INNES asked, What reasons had the Government for refusing to refund expenses incurred for the relief of distressed Canadians abroad, as indicated in a circular issued by the Imperial Government to Her Majesty's Consuls abroad as follows:—

"Foreign Office, 31st May, 1890.

"Sir,—With reference to previous circulars relative to the relief of distressed British subjects, I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to state that, in view of the refusal of the Governments of Barbadoes and the Dominion of Canada to refund expenses incurred for the relief of distressed Barbadians and Canadians, you should hereafter refrain, under all circumstances, from affording them any relief on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, as the Treasury have intimated that claims for the repayment of sums advanced for the relief or repatriation of British Barbadian or Canadian subjects cannot in future be entertained.

"I am. Sir.
"Your most obedient humble servant,

" Her Majesty's Consuls."

And what actuated the Government in revoking their former instructions in this matter, as indicated by a circular issued from the Foreign Office, London, dated 1st April, 1891, in which it was stated that the Government of Canada would assume the responsibility of affording relief to distressed Canadians in all foreign countries except the United States of North America?

In 1882, it was considered that Mr. TUPPER. there were difficulties in the way of assuming the responsibility for the relief of distressed Canadians abroad, for this, among other reasons: That there was no fund out of which such money could be paid, and it would not be expedient to ask Parliament to vote money for such purposes; that the popula-tion of Canada is largely composed of persons not born within the Dominion, and immigrants are constantly arriving from all parts of the world; that it would be impracticable to provide only for the relief of distressed Canadians abroad, who have been born in Canada, as no particular means could be provided for proof of birth, and to assume the burden of relieving every person in distress, abroad, who might claim Canada as his home—no matter what his nationality—would be to assume indefinite Subsequently, it was, however, responsibility. decided by the Government to assume the responsibility of affording relief to distressed Canadians in foreign countries, except in the United States, the exception in this case being due to the contiguity of that country, the long border line, and the difficulty of adjusting and ascertaining the merits of each particular case that might be pre-The Foreign Office circular, I may add, of 1st April, 1891, has not been received in the Department of Marine.

Mr. INNES. It has been published; I have a copy of it.

MANAGEMENT OF GRAVING DOCK, LÉVIS.

Mr. DELISLE asked, (a.) Is the Government Captain J. E. Bernier's management of the affairs informed that the following facts are consigned in of the graving dock would not bear investigation; 684 the minutes of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners at the date of the 24th October, 1890, viz.:

"It was decided to eall in the engineer-in-chief and his assistant, who were in attendance, and ask them some questions relative to the graving dock management. Mr. George Boswell was thereupon introduced and asked by the chairman if he had heard any complaints against Captain J. E. Bernier, the Commissioners' dock master, and answered, 'No.' Mr. H. Laforce Langevin was then called in, and the following questions were, by the direction of the board, put to him by the acting secretary-treasurer: 1st. 'You have been in the employ of the Harbour Commission all summer: during that time did you make reports against any other employé of the Commission direct to Ottawa?' Answer, 'Yes: against Captain J. E. Bernier, the graving dock master.' 2nd, 'What right had you to make any report except through this Commission or through Mr. Boswell, your chief engineer?' Answer. 'That having been allowed by Mr. Boswell to superintend work at the graving dock, that he considered he had a right to make this report to his chief. Mr. L. Coste of the Department of Public Works, Ottawa.' 3rd. 'Did you receive a salary from the Public Works Department, as well as from the Harbour Commission?' Answer. 'No: not as a salary, but I received pay for services rendered.'"

(b.) What was the nature of the services rendered by the said Laforce Langevin? (c.) What is the amount of money received by the said Laforce Langevin from the Department of Public Works since January, 1888, up to date, and for what services was the amount paid? (d.) What was the nature of the report made to the Public Works Department against the said J. E. Bernier, the graving dock master, by the said Laforce Langevin?

Şir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (a.) The Government is not informed that the above was consigned on the minutes of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. (b.) By Act of Parliament, chapter 6, 51 Vic., assented to on the 22nd of May, 1888, the management of the Lévis Graving Dock was vested with the Department of Public Works, which undertook certain works of construction and repairs, such as the roofing of the engine house, the building of a fence around the dock property, the erection of a coal shed, &c., under the direct control of its chief engineer and officers, during the fiscal years 1889-90 and 1890-91. The question of placing someone in charge was left to the acting chief engineer of the department, Mr. Louis Coste, who found that Mr. J. E. Bernier, the late dock-master of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, was not qualified to take charge of the engineering work, and who therefore requested Mr. H. Laforce Langevin, who had previously been employed on this work as assistant engineer, to act as superintendent of the work for the short period required. Laforce Langevin having obtained permission from his chief, Mr. St. George Boswell, assumed the work of superintendent on the 1st June, 1890, and performed his functions to the satisfaction of the department until the 13th October, 1890, when Mr. U. Valiquet, C.E., was placed in charge of the graving dock after the resignation of Captain J. E. Bernier had been accepted by the department. (c.) The amount of money received by Mr. Laforce Langevin from the Department of Public Works since January, 1888, up to date, has been $618, as follows: $540 for services as superintendent of the work, $78 for travelling expenses in connection therewith. (d.) On the 10th of October, Mr. Laforce Langevin verbally informed Mr. Louis Coste, of the Public Works Department, then in Quebec on a tour of inspection, that he had been told that Captain J. E. Bernier's management of the affairs and Mr. Coste having reported to the department, was subsequently authorized to make an investigation into the management of the dock, which investigation resulted in Captain Bernier resigning his position as dock master.

CLERK OF WORKS, WALKERTON,

Mr. TRUAN asked, Did John Talton, clerk of works at Walkerton Public Buildings, resign his position prior to or during the election contest in February or March last? If so, what was the date of his resignation, and when was he reappointed, and did he continue to draw his salary after he resigned and up to the time of his reappointment, and is he still in the employ of the Government as clerk of works at the Walkerton Public Buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The name of that man is J. S. Talton. He did not resign his position, and continued his work. He is still in the employ of the Government as clerk of works.

CASCUMPEQUE HAEBOUR.

Mr. PERRY asked, What amount of money has been expended in blasting rock and improving Cascumpeque Harbour, P. E. I., up to 30th of June, 1891?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $16,906.81.

WELDFORD POST OFFICE, N.B.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. GILLMOR) asked, Have any complaints been made to the Postmaster General about the post office business at Weldford Post Office, in Kent County, N.B., being conducted in a room at the rear of a store kept by the postmaster's wife? Has the department been informed of the postmaster's failure in his mercantile transactions and of the nature of that failure?

Mr. HAGGART. Mrs. Sarah J. Livingston made a complaint to the above effect on the 29th of May last, alleging that the postmaster derived a business advantage from the necessity that people were under of passing through his store to get at the post office. An answer was given under date the 3rd June, to the effect that the case did not seem to call for the interference of the department, as it was not uncommon for post offices to be kept in stores. The department received intimation from the same source that the postmaster had made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors.

CARRIAGE OF MAILS FROM CAMILLA TO WHITTINGTON.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (for Mr. McMullen) asked, Who has the contract at present for carrying the mails beween Camilla Post Office and Whittington Post Office, County of Dufferin, Ontario, and the price paid? How many tenders were put in, and who was the lowest? When was the contract let? What was the price paid to the previous contractor? Did it expire or was it cancelled, and when? Was the new contract advertised, and where and how long?

Mr. HAGGART. Contractor, Joseph Howard, senior; present rate, $95 per annum; number of tenders, one; the lowest, Joseph Howard, senior; British Columbia Loan: Sir Robert George Wyndontract let, in February, 1891; price under former ham Herbert, K.C.B., Sir Montague Frederick Sir Hector Langevin.

contract, $75. This service was performed under a memorandum of agreement terminable at the Postmaster General's pleasure, which was not exercised until the 31st of March, 1891. The new contract was advertised between the 10th December, 1890, and the 23rd of January, 1891, by placards posted up in Camilla and Whittington post offices, and by notices in the local newspapers.

FISHERY LICENSES.

Mr. FAUVEL asked, 1st, What is the amount of fee levied on each salmon net fishery license in the County of Bonaventure for 1890? 2nd. What is the amount of fee levied on each salmon net fishery license for the County of Restigouche in 1890? 3rd. Is it the intention of the Government to levy a uniform fee on each salmon net fishery license in the Counties of Bonaventure and Restigouche for the year 1891?

Mr. TUPPER. On the salmon net licenses in the County of Bonaventure a fee of 40 cents per barrel of fish caught was levied in some districts, and in others 3 cents per fathom on nets. In Restigouche County the fee levied on each salmon net was 3 cents per fathom. The Government has instructed its officers to levy a uniform rate or fee (3 cents per fathom) on each salmon net fishery license in the Counties of Bonaventure and Restigouche in 1891. The reason of the difference in Bonaventure and in Restigouche, and in that of the districts in Bonaventure itself, was due to the fact that instructions changing the old rate from 40 cents per barrel did not reach the officers of certain districts until the licenses under the old system had been granted to the fishermen and the fee exacted.

PUBLIC DEBT OF CANADA—SINKING FUND.

Mr. MULOCK asked, 1. Who are the trustees of the Sinking Fund with respect to the Public Debt of Canada? 2. What is the amount of such Sinking Fund? 3. What amount of such Sinking Fund consists of Canada Dominion Stock? 4. What amount consists of debentures? 5 What amount consists of any other securities or assets? 6. What part of said Sinking Fund is payable to bearer? 7. If any Dominion Government debentures have been purchased or redeemed to form part of such Sinking Fund, in whose custody are such debentures? 8. What is the amount of the interest on said Sinking Fund? 9. Is such interest paid to the trustees? If so, what application do the trustees make of the interest so paid them? 10. What commission, if any, is paid by the Government on interest on the Sinking Fund?

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to state in the first place, that the Sinking Fund is divided into two parts; one is held for the guaranteed, and the other for the unguaranteed. 1. Guaranteed loans: The Permanent Under Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Permanent Secretary of the Treasury, the High Commissioner of Canada for England (by appointment of the Dominion Government), Lord Revelstoke. Unguaranteed loans: The hon. the Receiver General of Canada, Messrs. Baring Bros. & Co., Messrs. Glynn, Mills, Currie, & Co. British Columbia Loan: Sir Robert George Wyndham Herbert, K.C.B., Sir Montague Frederick

Ommanney, K.C.M.G., Ernest Edward Blake, Esq. 2, $25,959,225.32 on 30th of June, 1891. 3. $19,613,706,15. 4. $6,259,506,66. 5. $85,958,51. 6. $6,259,506,66. 7. In the custody of the Bank of England in trust for the trustees, 8, 8982,461.45. Invested in securities for Sinking Funds. 10. As the Canadian securities form part of the principal of the loan, one-half of 1 per cent, commission is paid on the amount invested in Sinking

POSTMASTER AT ALLISONVILLE.

Mr. EDGAR asked, 1. Have any charges been made against Benjamin C. Ainsworth, postmaster at Allisonville, Prince Edward County, Ontario, which have been investigated since the Dominion election? Is the result of such inve-Is the result of such investigation to support the charges, or otherwise? 2. Has any order been given by the Government for the removal of the Allisonville post office from the postmaster's house to one James Boyd's shop? If so, when was such order given?

Mr. HAGGART. Charges have been made against B. C. Ainsworth, postmaster at Allisonville, County of Prince Edward, since the date of the last Dominion election. An investigation has been held, and the charges have not been substan-No order has been given for the removal of tiated. the Allison post office to the shop of one James Boyd.

CORNWALLIS VALLEY RAILWAY CO.

Mr. FORBES asked, Has the Cornwallis Valley Railway Company applied to the Dominion Government for a subsidy to assist in extending its line westward from Centreville, on the line of the said railway, to a point at or near Middleton, on the Mova Scotia Central Railway, being for a distance of about 30 miles?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

POST OFFICE AT YAMASKA EAST.

Mr. MIGNAULT asked, At whose instance and for what reasons have the Government closed the post office of Yamaska East?

Mr. HAGGART. The post office of Yamaska East was closed owing to the postmaster's resignation and sudden departure from the place; and as, during the time it was in operation, a good deal of confusion in the distribution of correspondence had arisen from the close proximity of this office to the Yamaska post office, it was not thought advisable to reopen it.

IMPERIAL FEDERATION.

Mr. AMYOT asked, Whether the High Commissioner for Canada, at London, is authorized by the Government to promote Imperial federation, and to afford to that scheme his active, public, officious and official concurrence; or is he acting solely on his own responsibility? Are the Government of Canada in favour of the establishment of Imperial federation? Have the Government a fixed policy as to the establishment of an Imperial federation; are they hostile, favourable or indifferent thereto?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon, gentleman I may say, to the first question, that the High Commissioner had no authority from the Government. The Government have not considered the subjects mentioned in the remaining questions.

NAPANEE PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. Allison) asked, Was the tower of the Napanee public buildings built according to the plan, that is, is the height the same as required by the plans? If not, what change was made? If lower than the contract required, how much lower, and was any deduction made in the contract price on account of any such change? From whom was the clock in such tower purchased? What was the amount paid for same? Were tenders asked for, for the clock? Who tendered, and the amount of each tender?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1. No; it is higher. 2. The roof of the tower, which is of wood covered with galvanized iron, is 18 inches high, and the additional amount allowed in final estimate is $33. 3. Messrs, F. W. Smith Bros., of Napanee. Clock complete, $1,850; fitting up same, $125; total, $1,975. 5, Messrs, F. W. Smith Bros., Napanee, were invited to furnish specifications and tenders, it being conditional that the clock be of Canadian manufacture, that it have four illuminated dials, &c. The department has previously supplied and fitted up a number of tower clocks at Cornwall, Sorel, Woodstock, N.B., and was thoroughly conversant with the values of works required, and as the tender of Smith Bros. was reasonable, it was recommended for acceptance. 6. Messrs, F. W. Smith Bros.

QUEBEC COLONIZATION LOTTERY.

Mr. FORBES asked, Has the following publication, which has appeared in many newspapers. come to the notice of the Government, or any member thereof?

"VERY PERTINENT QUESTIONS."

"VERY PERTINENT QUESTIONS."

"A correspondent of L'Echo des Deux Montagnes, writing on the subject of the 'National lottery under the patronage of the Rev. Curé Labelle,' asks a number of interesting questions, among others being the following: 'How much money has that lottery given to the Diocesan Colonization Societies?' 'Has Mr. A. A. Audet, who signs the advertisement of a drawing, really got an office at 19 St. James' Street, Montreal?' 'Is he not, rather ex-Colonel Audet, residing in Ottawa and custodian of the Federal Archives, with a salary of $2,000 or thereabouts?' 'Is the Hon. J. A. Chapleau head of the department in which the said Mr. Audet is, and is it to his knowledge and with his consent that the said Mr. Audet takes part in the said lottery?' 'What does that lottery do with the funds which are not employed for colonization, and to whom does it pay them?''

Is the person named therein as Mr. A. A. Audet an employé of this Government? If so, what steps do the Government intend to take in the matter?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The answer I have from the department is: That the publication referred to has not come to the notice of the Government otherwise than its having been brought to it by the hon, gentleman's question; and that Mr. A. A. Audet, the person referred to, is not Lieutenant Colonel Audet, the Keeper of the Records, nor is he an employe of the Federal Government.

NAVIGATION OF THE GRAND RIVER.

Mr. MONTAGUE moved for :

Copies of reports of engineers as to improvement in the navigation of the Grand River.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I make this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the Government here, as I have done privately, to the manner in which the navigation of the Grand River above the dam at Dunnville is interfered with by the dam. I need scarcely say, Sir, that the Grand River is one of the most important rivers of the province, and at one time bore the greater portion of the carrying trade of the district through which it passes. Nor need I say, Sir, that it for years performed a most important part in connection with that great public work, the Welland Canal, its waters being utilized for the purpose of supplying the canal with water. to which end a dam had to be constructed, and which dam destroyed the continuous navigation of the river. When the work was taken over by the Government from the private company under whose auspices it was begun, one of the first improvments made was the digging of a channel from the feeder to the river mouth, by which means the difficulty of the dam at Dunnville was gotten over. At first, Sir, the feeder and the link I have referred to, afforded eight feet of water, which was quite sufficient for the class of boats engaged in the But by the washing of the banks and other accumulations the water is reduced now to a depth in many places of four or five feet. Hence boats cannot be profitably chartered for the large grain and plaster trade of the upper river, because they cannot load to anything like their full capacity. The dredging of the canal feeder would, I understand, cost something like $800,000. construction of a lock in the dam would serve the same purpose and would cost only $50,000. Something should be done in this matter at once. spectfully urge this question publicly, as I have privately, upon the attention of the acting head of the department.

Motion agreed to.

JOSEPH DESMARTEAU'S CLAIM.

Mr. LAURIER moved for:

Copies of the petition of right presented to the Minister of Justice for his hat by Joseph Desmarteau for improvements alleged to have been made by him on a piece of land forming part of the property heretofore known as Logan's Farm, and being a portion of the lot number eleven hundred and thirty-six (1136) of the official plan and book of reference of St. Mary's Ward, in the city of Montreal, measuring one hundred and fifty-six feet in width by a depth of four hundred and fifty-two (452) feet on the south-west side and four hundred and eighty-seven on the south-west side, and four hundred and eighty-seven on the south-west side, and four hundred and eighty-seven (497) feet on the north-east side, English measure, and more or less, and being bounded on the north-east side by the highway known as Papineau Road, on the south-west side by a portion of the said lot number eleven hundred and thirty-six (1136), on the south-east by the lot number eleven hundred (1100) of said plan and book of reference, and on the north-west by Sherbrooke Street, being another receiver of the said lot eleven hundred and thirty-six; of portion of the said lot eleven hundred and thirty-six; of the decision of the Minister of Justice; and of all correspondence on the same.

He said: I understand that this man Joseph Desmarteau had bought this property which is described here, from a man named P. O. Bones, and that he had made upon it improvements which he valued at several thousands of dollars. It appears, however, that the land, instead of belonging to Bones,

Sir John Thompson.

Government of Canada, and Desmarteau was sued in ejectment by the Government. By his answer to the action, he did not contest the action of the Government, he acknowledged it, but he pleaded that he had to that extent been deceived by the vendor to whom he had paid, as he alleges in his plea, $800. Then he set up a plea which is admitted by the laws of Lower Canada, setting forth that he had improved the land by building, levelling the ground, making sewer works, and some other improvements which he valued at a sum of $5,000 or $6,000. I have no conception at all of the value of the works which he pretends to have made; perhaps he asks more in order to obtain less. However, this plea was set aside by the court on a demurrer by the Crown; the Crown holding that such plea could not be urged against it. There is no doubt, however, that if the suit had been between subject and subject, the plea would have been a good one, and the determination of the suit would have resulted on the single question: Whether the possessor who had made the improvements had been, or had not been in good faith. The law of Lower Canada enacts that under such circumstances, if the improvements are made by the possessor in good faith, the owner could not be placed in possession of his property unless he had previously paid to the possessor the value of his improvements, or, at all events, the increased value of the property. As I have said, however, the Crown held that this plea which might have been good between subject and subject, could not be set up against the Crown. I understand that Desmarteau has asked the Minister of Justice for his fiat of petition of right, in order to claim the value of the improvements which he has made upon the lands which are now in possession of the Crown, and that this pat has been denied by the Minister of Justice. simply bring up the question in order to ask the Minister of Justice if he would give the House the reasons which induced him to refuse his fiat in this instance. I have no opinion at this moment to express, as to whether the flat should have been allowed or not allowed, but if the man has really made improvements on the property in good faith, and if in consequence the value of the land has been improved to a certain extent, then under such circumstances he would be entitled at least to compensation to the amount which the property of the Crown has been benefited by his action.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman has been misinformed as to the facts of this case, or else I have been. I would not hesitate to recommend the granting of a fiat on a petition of right, if the petitioner would have the right of compensation if the case had been between subject and subject. I understand this case, however, to stand in a totally different position. the first place, Desmarteau has not presented any petition of right or requested any flat to be given. He has sent to the Governor in Council, a petition for the payment of $6,580, not as a right, but as a matter of grace. The facts, I am informed, are these. So far from Desmarteau having made any improvements on the property, it has suffered a great deal of detriment from his operations. I had not understood, until the hon, gentleman stated it just now that we avoided a judgment on the merits of the case by a demurrer raising the who had sold it to Desmarteau, belonged to the objection that the Crown is not liable for improvements. That may be so. But the facts are, as I understand, that this is a piece of Ordnance land in Montreal, known as Logan's Farm, that it was leased for a term of years to the city of Montreal, that while it was so leased this man Desmarteau squatted on a portion of it, and turned it into a brickyard; and that, so far from making any improvements that would benefit the property, he devastated it by making excavations for the purpose of carrying on the brick business. An action was taken against him in the Superior Court of Montreal, and after a great deal of litigation, judgment was given compelling him to pay $850, being $200 for sand removed for brick-making, $400 damages owing to his excavations, and $250 for rental at the rate of $50 a year for five years, and giving the Crown possession of the property. He appealed against this judgment, and the appeal was dismissed; and then he presented the petition, which, as I have said, asks as a matter of grace that he should be paid this large sum. As a matter of fact the Crown have never been able to get from him the taxable costs in the suit. Some bricks were seized, but they realized only

Mr. LAURIER. I know nothing of the facts, but simply state them as they were given to me by Desmarteau himself. However, the answer the hon. Minister gives, that he would not take advantage of any plea which could be raised between subject and subject, is quite satisfactory.

Motion agreed to.

THE STEAMER ADMIRAL.

Mr. EDGAR (for Mr. TARTE) moved for:

Copies of any Order or Orders in Council, adopted between the years 1883 and 1888, in relation to the steamer Admiral and the service performed by the said steamer between Dalhousie and Gaspé or other points, in connection with the Intercolonial Railway.

Copies of the contract or constructs between the owners or owner or person in possession of the steamer Admiral and the Government, between the years 1883 and 1888; also copies of all deeds of transfer, &c., filed with the Government, in respect of the said steamer: also a statement of all sums paid during the said period of time for the service of the said steamer, with the names of the persons to whom the said sums were paid, and the dates of such payments.

He said: I would suggest that the Government should, as soon as possible, bring these papers down, because an enquiry is going on elsewhere in which they are involved.

Mr. BOWELL. There is but one contract in connection with this service, that is with Mr. Julien Chabot, dated November, 1883, and no other. There have been no deeds of transfer filed with the Government. The accounts in favour of the Intercolonial Railway for coal supplied to the steamer, repairs to steamer, and for back charges on freight and passengers, exceed the amount of the subsidy. The amount of the subsidy was, therefore, credited against these accounts, and the balance was paid over by Mr. Julien Chabot to the Intercolonial Railway. Whatever papers there are in connection with this matter will be brought down.

Motions agreed to.

LACHINE CANAL.

Mr. PRÉFONTAINE moved for:

1. Copies of the specifications prepared by the Government and which formed the basis of the call for tenders which the Conservatives made to him, he promised for the work of constructing a drain from Lachine to Côte St. Paul, along the Lachine Canal; 2. Copies of all tenders filed for the said work, and of the reports of officers of the Department of Railways and Canals thereupon; 3. Copies of the report awarding the contract for the said work, and of the said contract.

Mr. BOWELL. The papers referred to will be brought down, but no contract has yet been entered into, owing to the town of Lachine not having yet complied with the terms it agreed to with the Government regarding the providing of the lands for the construction of that drain. As soon as the Department of Justice has reported upon the title for the land sent in by the corporation, a contract will be entered into and the work proceeded with. Meantime all papers will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF WILLIAM SAUNDERS AND Mr. MUTTART.

Mr. PERRY moved for:

Copies of all correspondence and orders relative to the dismissal of William Saunders and Mr. Muttart, section foremen of the Prince Edward Island Railway, in March or April last.

He said: I may say, in connection with this motion, that these two gentlemen have been section men on the Prince Edward Island Railway since the inauguration of that railway. As far as I know, these men have not been guilty of neglect of duty; and about two or three weeks after the elections in March last they were dismissed, and for what reason I am not aware. I do not know whether I will be able to get that information now, but I would like very much to get it. It appears that they must have been discharged under the impression that they had either canvassed or voted for the Liberal candidates. Well, I do not know how the Department of Railways has found that out. I believe the elections there are carried on under the ballot system, and I am not aware, unless certain gentlemen who were pretty busy on the day of the election were looking in through the windows or behind screens, how it could have been found out on which side these gentlemen voted. Admitting that they did vote for the Opposition candidate, is that a good reason for their dismissal? Is that the way the Railway Department is being managed? No wonder that the headship of that department has been going abegging these last two or three months. there no gentleman on that side competent to take control of that department? There ought to be a head to it, and we ought to be able to get the information we require. I do not admit that these gentlemen voted for the Opposition candidate, and I have no right to know how they voted. I saw these gentlemen every day during my campaign, and I am not aware that they attended one public meeting, nor am I aware that they canvassed any one for either party. Were they, then, dismissed to gratify the defeated Government candidates, in order to punish someone for their defeat? If a proper investigation was held, and it was found that these men had been derelict in their duty, of course I can have no objection to their dismissal. If there is no other reason given but that they voted for the Opposition candidate, it is a wrong principle. In Tignish, which is a mile from where I live, a gentleman went to work on the railway. He used to be a Liberal, but, by certain promises to vote for the Tory candidate. Of course, it was his privilege to vote for whom he chose, but, when he came back to work on the railway, he was told that he had not voted for the Tory candidate, and he was told to go to the other side of the street in Tignish, to a Tory magistrate, and swear that he did vote for the Tory candidate. Is that independence? When a man issues a card to the electors, how does he address it? "To the free and independent electors." Is that what is practised in connection with this Government railway? I find that the same thing was practised in Westmoreland, N.B. I find that a certain gentleman, who voted for the two Opposition candidates in the local election, who were friends of the present Government in the Dominion, was told, he being an employe of the Intercolonial Railway, to go and swear before a magistrate that he voted for the Government candidate. How many more instances are there of this kind of thing? That is, no doubt, why Liberal constituencies are so difficult to carry, when this sort of thing takes place throughout the length and breadth of the land. Men are told that if they vote for the Liberal candidates they will be dismissed. In 1887, I remember a gentle-man living in Prince Edward Island who was a tidewaiter, and no fault could be found with him except that he voted for myself and my colleague, and an investigation was held at Summerside, a very farcical one, it is true, but we find that this is the practice carried on in Prince Edward Island at the last election. These two men have been dismissed, and for what? We find this Government railway is being used-for what? We find a man in Charlottetown, who was acting as agent for the Association in King's County, Conservative writing to his friends there to say that there would be trains leaving on the morning of the election day at 10 o'clock to convey the electors, and that it would be all O K, and that they had made arrangements to pay $100 to bring the voters there from the three counties, but it would be refunded, though they must keep it all dark. I ask the Minister if this money has been refunded? The promises were made by this gentleman that the Department of Railways would refund the money, and the same parties also made use of the railway to carry the whiskey which they obtained at $6.50 a case for election purposes from Charlottetown to Montague, and I should like to know how much freight was paid on that. Very likely the railway carried this whiskey for nothing, and I have no doubtif the money was paid it has been refunded. I think I am safe in saying as I do, and in making the charge I do against the Minister of Railways that the money has been refunded. We are living in an age when presents are made and when gentlemen take spells of weakness very often, and we will show by the returns of the revenue of the Prince Edward Island Railway whether this money was returned or not. It is not surprising that the deficit on that railway should be as it has been for some time if the favoritism is so great and electors are taken free to the polls on election day. It is due to these gentlemen, Mr. Saunders and Mr. Muttart, that a proper investigation should be held, and if they are not guilty of any serious political crime, more than having voted according to their conscience, they should be put back in the places from which they were so unjustly driven. The country expects candidate. It is true there was a sham trial in Mr. Perry.

fair-play in these matters, and if these men do not get fair-play the country will blame the Department of Railways. If these men had been found guilty of any dereliction of duty, or of standing on public platforms agitating the electors in favour of the Opposition candidates,—if they had been found guilty of all these great crimes, then they might be dismissed; but if they simply recorded their votes in the ballot box, the Minister of Railways nor anyone else has any right to know how they did vote, and they have a right to occupy the positions from which they were driven away. Mr. Unsworth is not a man who is likely to do that kind of a thing; he is too much of a gentleman for that, and I do not accuse him of that, but I am inclined to accuse other men, because, when they were disappointed and could not carry the election, they were willing to blame anyone whatever, even presidents of rail-ways and the Minister of Railways, or somebody else, for leaving the candidates 300 or 400 behind. I think the Minister of Railways, or the administrator of that department, should satisfy the House on this question. I am told that all the charges against Mr. Saunders amounted to this: that he was ordered to clear a certain portion of the track and had to hire men to do that; that he hired all he could, and he got, amongst others, Mr. Peters, who lives near there, but who is a Liberal, and this was one of the great crimes committed by this gentleman and one of the reasons why he has been turned out of his employment, simply that he hired a Grit to go on this work on the railway when the section man could not find anyone else. Now, has it come to this in the Dominion of Canada, that the Government, before they will give a man a day's work, are going to swear him to know whether he is a Grit or a Tory? Has it come to this? I believe it has, in some parts of Canada, I believe it has come to that in Prince Edward Island, and, Sir, if it has come to that, the sooner we have a change the better. I do not know how this change is to come about, but one of these days, perhaps, there may be a vote of want of confidence in these gentlemen. But, all these jokes apart, I know very well that it is easy for the department to make reasons where there is no reason, and I say that unless they are able to satisfy this House and the public generally, that they were justified in dismissing these two men, they have a right to give them redress by replacing them in the position from which they were driven without rhyme or reason. I, for one, would not be satisfied, and the country will not be satisfied, until it is known publicly what were the faults for which these two men were dismissed. When I am at home I see them often, but I never heard a word against them. I made enquiry and could not find out one single reason why the department had dismissed them, except the political reason that I have mentioned. lieve Mr. Saunders was told to be very particular not to hire a Grit, but to hire all Tories, but as he could not go out of the place to look for hands, as he had no horse and sleigh, he had to hire the men he found on the spot, and one of them happened to be a Grit. Something in the same line was done to a gentleman in Summerside in 1887, a Mr. Ronald Summerside, but Mr. Campbell was not invited to attend, and the result was that he was dismissed and another man appointed in his stead. I await with some interest to see what information the department will bring down.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken referred to the treatment of railway employes in Prince Edward Island by the Government. I know very little of what occurs in Prince Edward Island, but I understand the hon. gentleman, in the course of his remarks, intimated that the same practices had occurred in the County of Westmoreland. There may be, of course, some mysterious practices in Prince Edward Island-I confess that it has always been somewhat of a mystery to me to know what practices did prevail there, from the fact that the hon. gentleman has been so long representing the constituency that sends But so far as the County of Westmorehim here. land is concerned, I am prepared to give a most distinct denial to what the hon, gentleman has stated. I can tell the hon, gentleman that in the County of Westmoreland, railway employés are left in all cases perfectly free to vote just as they choose. I can tell the hon, gentleman more than that. In the election of 1887 every effort was made by my opponents in the county to coerce the railway employés to vote against the Government, and so effectual were those efforts, so thoroughly did my opponents convince many of the employes on the Intercolonial Railway that the Government was going to be defeated, and if the Government was defeated, every one who voted for the Government would be discharged, that a number of the employes were afraid to vote at all, and in these wards of the city of Moncton where the railway employés did vote, there was a majority against the Government. These were the facts in 1887, and they resulted from the threats that were circulated in the county by my opponents in that contest.

Mr. MULOCK. Could you name some of the persons who circulated those threats?

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). Yes, I could, but I do not know whether it is fair to do so. I believe my opponent in the contest was one, and his agents in the town of Moneton certainly did. These reports were zealously reported in the workshops in the town of Moncton, and among the employes everywhere on the line of the Intercolonial Railway, and the results, as the returns will show, were just as I have stated to this House. Now, what has happened since? Why, the hon. gentleman cannot point to one instance in the County of Westmoreland where a railway employé has been discharged who voted against me in that contest, and I can show him letters by the score which have been written to me since, complaining that those people who voted against me in that contest, and who took an active part in the election, are still retained in the employment of the Government. I am able to say that I have not in one instance asked the Government, or asked the Minister of Railways, or any official in the department, to discharge one person who voted against me in that or in any other contest.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is very satisfactory to find at last, that we have a Minister of Railways to answer for the Government. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Perry) desired information from the Minister of Railways as to why certain Mr. Perry.

officials, or certain paid servants of that department, on the Intercolonial Railway, were dismissed, and my hon, friend suggested as a possible cause, that it was because these men had voted against the Government candidate and in favour of the Liberal candidate. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) undertakes to reply for the Government. He replied by stating that his opponent in the election of 1887, and some others, had threatened these railway employés that if they voted for the Government they would be dismissed. That is not the charge made by the hon. member from Prince (Mr. Perry). The charge is that the Government, on the supposition that these men had voted against the Government candidate, without an enquiry, without investigation, without giving them an opportunity of being heard, relieved them from the discharge of the duties in which they were engaged. Well, it is just as well that we should understand the position in this matter. I think I understand it from the language made use of not long ago by the Minister of Customs. He laid down the rule broadly--I am not disposed to quarrel with it so far as I am individually concerned—he laid down the rule broadly, that the employés of the Government, the salaried officials of the Government, had a right to vote, and vote, of course, for the Government candidate. He went further than that, and he declared that not only the employés of the Government, the paid servants of the people of this country, not paid by the Conservative party, but paid by the Liberals as well as the Conservatives—not only did they have a right to vote, but they had a right to work, for the Conservative candidate at the general election, or at any other election. He justified the resignation of the officials, their taking part during the contest on behalf of the Government candidate, and reappointing them after the elections were over, their absenting themselves from the offices here, perhaps their pay going on, and taking part in the election, and sometimes an effective part, and coming back to their offices and discharging their duties as if nothing had happened. I do not quarrel with that position. It may be, of course, the rule that to the victors belong the spoils, and what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. What satisfies hon, gentlemen opposite, may satisfy us when the occasion comes, as come it will before long, when we can put that practice into operation; and I tell my hon, friend before me (Mr. Laurier) that if, when he assumes the reins of government, he does not cut off the head of every Tory official who has taken an active part in politics, an offensive part in politics, against a Liberal candidate, he shall not receive my support for 24 hours. have no objections to this rule. The hon. gentlemen chose to introduce it, and they will find it will work both ways. They have not only introduced it with respect to large offices, but they have come down to the contemptible meanness of dismissing workingmen engaged on Government railways. They have done so on more than one The hon, gentleman challenged us to occasion. point to an instance where an official, an employé of the Government, was dismissed or relieved from the discharge of his duties for the reason that he had taken part in politics, or was supposed to have taken part in politics. I will give the hon. gentle-man one; I have one in my hand now. I will give the Minister of Public Works had no hand in the matter. From what I have known of him during 25 years, and from, considering he is a Conservative, a somewhat intimate acquaintance with the hon, gentleman, I hope his hands are clean in this small matter. In my town there is a person of the name of McIver, who has been for years engaged on the Government dredge at $2.50 per day, I believe, under the Department of Public Works. He faithfully discharged his duties for many years. I do not believe, there ever was a complaint against him, or a word said against him: I am quite sure there was not truthfully. He did not vote at the last election. His father and brothers voted for me. This servant of the Government, I repeat, did not vote, but he is supposed to have had strong sympathies on my behalf. On 2nd March, two days before the election took place, he wrote to Mr. Arnoldi, who, I believe, is in the service of the Public Works, and in reply received from Mr. Arnoldi the following letter:

"I note what you say, that you had been to see Mr. Porter, that you were to get a letter from him. Please do so as early as possible, after receipt of which there will be no difficulty in arranging your matter.

"Yours truly,

"JNO. B. ARNOLDI,

" Chief Mechanical Engineer."

That is to say, he was to continue in the service of the Government on the Government dredge. I do not know whether my friend, Mr. McIver, saw Mr. Porter or not, but I am quite sure, if he did see him, he was not at all likely to obtain a letter of recommendation from him to the Minister of Public Works. Mr. McIver tells me that he did see Mr. Porter, and Mr. Porter promised, if my memory serves me, to give him a letter, but subsequently he did not do so. He again wrote to Mr. Arnoldi on 9th April, 1891, and a letter was received by him from the Chief Mechanical Engineer. Recollect that in the first letter Mr. Arnoldi says: "It is all right; if you get a letter from Mr. Porter you will remain in the service of the Department of Public Works."

Mr. MULOCK. That was before voting.

Mr. CAMERON. On 9th April, the Chief Mechanical Engineer wrote as follows:—

"CHIEF MECHANICAL ENGINEER'S OFFICE, 9th April, 1891.

" Mr. D. McIver, Goderich.

"Sir.—I have the honour toacknowledge your letter of 5th instant, further inquiring about your being re-engaged on dredging staff. In reply I have to say that your engagement on the dredging staff terminated with the close of navigation last fall, and this spring the department has made some changes on the staff by which the position you held last year is now filled by another.

"Yours truly,

"JOHN R. ARNOLDI,

" Chief Mechanical Engineer."

Before the election Mr. Arnoldi wrote that if Mr. McIver obtained a letter from Mr. Porter his services would be continued. After the elections, and when he had not obtained the letter, he was informed that the department had made some changes on the staff "by which the position you held last year is now filled by another." Will the Minister of Public Works tell the House why he dispensed with Mr. McIver's services on 9th April, when he promised on 10th March that he would continue him if he obtained a letter from Mr. Porter? Had politics anything to do with it? There were no complaints against Mr. McIver.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

Mr. TUPPER. What was the promise on 10th March?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The words are:

"I note what you say, that you had been to see Mr. Porter, that you were to get a letter from him. Please do so as early as possible, after receipt of which there will be no difficulty in arranging your matter."

The promise is as clear as a pike-staff: "After you get a letter from Mr. Porter there will be no difficulty in arranging the matter." Mr. Arnoldi subsequently replied: "The department has made some changes in the staff, by which the position you held last year is now filled by another." was the reason? It is true the season was over in the fall of 1890. So it was in the fall of 1889, and yet this man has continued for several years to occupy the same position and the same salary without any question. Between the season of 1888-89 his services were continued. On the 5th of March he had, in fact, the promise of the Government that his services would be continued. After the election his services were dispensed with because, as I gather from the tone of the letter from Mr. Arnoldi and from what Mr. McIver said, he was supposed to be an active partisan on my behalf and to He was neither an active partihave voted for me. san nor did he vote for me. Unless there is some justification for this petty spite, the Government do not occupy a particularly enviable position. I go back again to the old position, and I say that, so far as I am individually concerned, I am glad the Minister of Customs laid down that rule. am glad that he did not assume this responsibility without consulting the other members of the Government, and that the policy of the Administration is that every man supporting the Government has not only a perfect right to vote, but a perfect right to take the stump and advocate the cause of the Government, and make himself offensive on the stump and work in the best way he knows how for the Administration, and the Liberal party has no redress. It is a bad rule that will not work both ways, and so far as I am concerned, sitting as I have always sat in the ranks and where I hope to remain during the remainder of my life, I will support no Liberal Government which will not cut off the heads of men who make themselves justly offensive against a Liberal candidate during a political contest.

Mr. BOWELL. I am sure the leader of the Opposition must be trembling in his boots at the threat made by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), that he will not support him unless he will cut off the heads of all the Tories.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I did not say that. Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will have something to do, and it will occupy him more than the remainder of his natural life.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I said officials.

Mr. BOWELL. And they are very numerous.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Yes, they are.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, gentleman is also quite incorrect, and I think he will find some difficulty in establishing the fact that I have laid down any such doctrine or principle as that which he lays to my charge. There are certain portions of his statement that are quite correct; there are other portions which are not correct. If the hon. gentleman refers to the remarks to which he has alluded, he will find that I challenged any one to show that in the administration of the Customs Department any man had been dismissed for political reasons or for interfering in elections. That is my recollection of what I said. If I were understood to say anything more, I was misunderstood. I take the responsibility of my own acts, and I spoke for myself Does the hon, gentleman think the remarks he made were fair and courteous to the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood). Is it to be laid down as a principle that when a member of the Opposition rises in this House and prefers charges against the Government, and drags into the discussion acts done in other counties which affect materially the representatives of those counties, those members are to be denied the right rising and defending themselves without having it said: "We are glad there is somebody here to speak on behalf of the Government." Now, that may be the Liberal doctrine, and I have no doubt it is: that no man has a right to defend himself, or to say anything unless it is in accord with their sentiments. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) was strictly in accord with his right as a member of this House in contradicting the statement made by the member for Prince, (Mr. Perry). The charges as made, in addition to those brought against the Government, affected his own constituency and were equally strong against the Government for something that the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry) said had been done in the County of Westmoreland. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) repudiated that, and I do not think he has stepped without the bounds of propriety, nor did he interfere in any way with the functions of any member of the Government, in defending himself and that county in this respect. I have no sympathy myself with the doctrine laid down by the member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) to the extent to which he carries it, and I hope the time is far distant when any Government will adopt the principle in this country that he has advocated to-day. I have very little to complain of in the statements of the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry) providing they are accurate, but I have no knowledge of their accuracy, and I venture the assertion that when an investigation is had upon this question, it will not be found that anyone in connection with the Prince Edward Island Railway ever asked a man to swear how he cast his vote before that man could obtain employment.

Mr, MULOCK. If the statements are correct what will you do?

Mr. BOWELL. When the statements are laid before me, and if I am in that department, I will act as I usually do in matters of all kindsproperly and correctly, and I feel sure my action will meet with the approval of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock). The hon. gentleman has told us that some person—I did not catch the name, and I might say that it would be much good and sufficient cause. I have no objection to easier to have the investigation made, if the hon. gentleman will supply the name of the person who wrote the letter to which he referred.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

Mr. BOWELL. I am not speaking about you, I am speaking of the member for Prince (Mr. Perry). I hope you do not deny him the right to make charges, even if you do deny the right of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) to defend The statement was made that some person—if he gave the name I did not catch it—had paid $100 for the use of a train to convey voters, and that it was stated in that letter that the $100 would be refunded—I presume after the election and the hon, gentleman said that he had no doubt The hon. that the $100 had been refunded. gentleman then complains that the Minister of Railways does not give him an answer at the present moment to the charges. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that the head of the Railway Department, or of any other department, can by any possibility keep within his memory all that he desires investigated; the payments made for tickets, or the employment of trains in different parts of the country? If he does think this, I am inclined to believe that if ever he attains to the position of a Minister, he will find that he would have more to carry in his head, large as it is, than it is capable of holding. I have made enquiries of the chief engineer, who came into the Chamber behind the Speaker's chair a few minutes ago, if he had any knowledge of this transaction, and he assures me that he has not and that he knows nothing However, as the matter has been brought about it. before Parliament, and as a charge has been made, it will be my duty to instruct the chief engineer to make enquiries into the charge. I know that the member for Prince (Mr. Perry) is fertile, not only in his denunciations of the Government, but also in the charges which he prefers against them on all questions; but the hon, gentleman did not tell me who the tidewaiter, preventive officer, or Customs official, I forget which, that was dismissed because he voted for him. I inform the hon, gentleman that no such dismissal ever took place, and if any officer was dismissed it was for cause. If an officer was dismissed it was because, as I read in a report to the House two or three years ago, a number of officials on Prince Edward Island who had no work to do were dismissed. All the dismissals were made upon the responsibility of the inspector who made a thorough investigation into the working of the Customs Department all over Prince Edward Island.

Mr. PERRY. They immediately appointed another officer in this man's place.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know to whom you refer, but if the hon. gentleman gives me the name, instead of making broad charges, then I will be able to tell him how correct he is in the statement As I told the hon, gentleman before, I he makes. cannot be expected to remember what has transpired in reference to the cases of individual officials among the thousands throughout this whole Dom-I repeat the statement I made a few moments ago, namely, that if any one in his locality, or upon the Island, was dismissed, it was not on account of the vote which he gave, but for bring down whatever papers there may be in the department on this subject, and I have no doubt that in this, as in every other case, it will be found that these men were dismissed for proper and good cause, and not, I am quite sure, for the reasons alleged by the hon, gentleman.

Mr. FRASER. I shall be more specific. the hon. Minister of Railways that at Port Mulgrave Station, in the County of Guysborough, within two days after the election, every Liberal there who was in the employ of the Government was dismissed, and orders given that none should be employed but Conservatives.

Repeat that statement please. Mr. BOWELL. I was engaged at the moment and did not hear you.

Mr. FRASER. I said that I would be more specific in my charges, so that the hon. Minister of Railways will have no cause to complain of not knowing who the parties are. I said that at Port Mulgrave every Liberal employed at the station was dismissed, and orders given to the station master to employ none but Conservatives. I state that a Mr. Murray who was employed there was dismissed among others, and his brother or unclea man of some influence—who was collector of Customs, made it so hot for the superintendent that Mr. Murray had to be restored to his position, and with that exception no other person is employed

An hon. MEMBER. You mean no Liberal.

Mr. FRASER. Not one single Liberal, and I further say that that statement was put in writing by the superintendent and that since that time—I will not go into that question just now, but I will take it up afterwards-that many other things have been done; changes made without investigation, and salaries reduced without one single charge or investigation into the reason why. That is specific enough.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; that is specific.

Mr. TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), whether he is aware of the political opinions of the agent at that The hon, gentleman said that all the station? employés at Port Mulgrave were dismissed. Does he include the agent there?

Mr. FRASER. Not at all. I mean the poor men who were working outside on the railway, at very small salaries. Since that time, the agent at that place was removed to a smaller office and his salary reduced from $50 a month to $35 a month, because he was suspected of political leanings against the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. The answer given by the Minister of Customs would have been more satisfactory if he had been ready to lay down some principle upon which it would be understood that the Government were prepared to act upon all occasions. The charge made by my hon, friend from Prince (Mr. Perry) is, that two labouring men, men who from their station in life I suppose had not much found that many of the post offices and office holders influence, have been dismissed from the service simply because they were suspected of having voted in favour of the Liberal Government. The hon. Minister says he knows nothing about these two county knows that he is just as free to vote as I men, but he will make enquiries. But the hon, gentleman is asked by my friend from his office. But I have a right to expect that the North York (Mr. Mulock): "Supposing the facts interference of these officials in elections shall cease Mr. BOWELL.

to be as stated, what would you do?" and the only answer the hon, gentleman is able to give at present is, "I will act: I will not say now what I will do, but I will act."

Mr. BOWELL. I said a little more than that. I said I would act in such a way as to meet his approval.

Mr. LAURIER. That is very vague. If the hon, gentleman is prepared to act in a way which would satisfy my hon, friend, then he should be able to say at once that if these facts are as stated by my hon, friend from Prince Edward Island, these two men will be reinstated in office, and the man who discharged them, after having enquired how they had voted, will be dismissed from office. I am sure that the hon, gentleman will not controvert this proposition, that no officer of the railway has a right to enquire as to how a man in his employ has voted. The law gives the ballot to officers in the employ of the Government, and, therefore, it implies that they have a right to use the ballot in whatever way they think proper; and if an officer above them ventures to enquire as to how they have voted, and dismisses them because he believes they have voted in a certain way, then this man should be dismissed, and not the men who exercise their right under the ballot. I would have expected the hon. Minister, not merely to say that he will act in future in a way to satisfy my hon, friend, but to lay down a general rule that no man is to be subject to enquiry as to how he has voted or exercised his franchise. More than that. in these matters, if the law is to be respected at all, as it is conceived to be, every man in the service should be able to cast his vote unchallenged, and without giving any reasons except to his own con-I am not prepared to say that I underscience. stand the hon, member for Huron to be as radical as the hon. Minister of Customs made him out to be; but at all events, I would agree with him in this, that every officer has a right to a vote, but every officer in the service who goes out of his way to make an offensive campaign ought not to be retained in the service. Nothing in my estimation is more calculated to bring the service into contempt than to allow an officer, while in the public service, whether high or low in station, to go offensively into a campaign. Let every man in the Civil Service vote; that is his right; but it seems to me unjust and intolerable that a man should go out of his office to canvass or to take any prominent part in elections. This is going beyond the right the law gives him; and with these remarks I quite agree with my hon, friend from Huron that these things, although tolerated by this Government, ought not to be tolerated at all by any Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Well, Sir, I do not think that any one on this side of the House will find fault with the rule which the hon, leader of the Opposition has just laid down; and so far as my experience with public officers goes—and I have had a pretty extensive experience, having houses in my constituency have been made the committee rooms of my opponents—that is the rule I have observed. Every public officer in my So far so good. am, without the slightest danger to his salary or there; and I shall be perfectly satisfied to have the rule which the hon, gentleman lays down applied to my own county. Just one word with regard to the case which the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Forbes) has mentioned. If the rule which has just been laid down by the hon. leader of the Opposition had been observed in that case, Mr. McLeod would have been dismissed years ago, as he is one of the most offensive partisans in that part of Nova Scotia, and his offensiveness is not confined to election time, for he can hardly avoid being offensive even when the election is five years With regard to public employés—workmen at Port Mulgrave-being dismissed, I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken, for I happen to know some of the facts. I may state that the station-master was authorized to give employment to men on the arrival of steamers in removing baggage between the steamer and the station. He was given a list by his superiors of perfectly proper and efficient persons to do that work, but he refused to employ them because they were friends of the Government and not friends of the Opposition; and it would be exceedingly difficult for a friend of the Government in that locality to get one hour's work from Mr. McLeod, even if he had the written order of his superior to give it to him. I myself, after the election, saw his answer to an order given by his superintendent almost in these words: "You are instructed, whenever you have employment of any kind, to give it to the following persons, unless you know any reason why they are unfit for that service;" and his answer was an impertinent refusal to employ those persons, and a statement that he would continue to employ certain other persons. Not only has he done that, but he makes an unfair discrimination against the Government in the exercise of the little patronage he enjoys in that way. I do not think that an order has been given that Liberals should not be employed there. gentleman must have been misinformed by a colouring of the set of facts which I have given.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N. S.) matter which has given me a great deal of trouble, because in my county more than one-half the officers were appointed at the instance of my opponent when his friends were in power, and have been active canvassers against me; they attended the revision of the voters' lists, and they were actually engaged in bringing voters outside of the province and even outside of the Dominion, to vote against me. I also found that the principal office-holders in the country were writing letters stating that if Mr. Ross were returned and the Liberal party brought into power, they would resign and have the persons to whom they were writing appointed to office. One of these letters, which was written by a Dominion official, who holds the most important and lucrative office in his county, was written to a friend of mine in the county, a gentleman supposed to have considerable influence, asking him to pursue a certain course. Then the writer proceeds:

the situation unless I was assured a friend would get the place; and if it would suit you to take it. I could make you pretty sure of it, as I know of no one I would so soon see in my place as yourself, or one who could fill it better. John A. Macdonald is a sworn enemy of mine, and if he is again returned for the county, will do his utmost to have me dismissed; and I am sure you would not like to see me and my family sent adrift without a pension. Now, my friend, I know you have no personal interest in the matter that could not be better served on the Liberal side than on the Tory side. Free trade is going to carry the than on the Tory side. Free trade is going to earry the day everywhere. I see by the papers that the Americans have gone free trade in Congress by 1.000 majority at the elections last month. It will be so in Canada, and the Liberals will be in power before very long."

I may say that there is considerably more in the letter; but the writer winds up by asking his friend to write him a letter as soon as he can, and if he is too late by the mail, to telegraph at his expense, as the winter would pass much more cheerfully if he had an affirmative that he would support Mr. Ross in the election. I never in my life asked for the discharge-

Mr. FORBES. Give the name of the writer.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N.S.) have it very soon, I presume, and will have something to do with it by-and-bye. I am not at liberty to give the name of the official just now. I never asked for the removal of that gentleman. He would be the last man in the county I would ask to have removed, and no person knew it better than he did when he wrote that letter. He expressed himself to me as perfectly satisfied that I was returned in 1887, and expressed himself as glad to hear that my opponent was defeated, as he felt safe in my hands and the hands of the Government. Nothing could have surprised me more than to have received that letter, because he is a gentleman for whom I would have done everything rather than see him removed from his position. But that was not the worst. There were a number of other officials in the county, and I was in a peculiar position. My opponent and his partner represented the county from Confederation until 1882 in this House, and although they were returned as Liberals they found it convenient to support the party in power, and thereby secured the patronage of the county for 15 years. For 15 years they controlled the appointment of officials in that county. All the officials appointed by the Liberal Government did everything they could, even acting as agents in different parts of the county against me; and some of them said they were willing to spend next year's salary in order to have Mr. Ross returned, as they knew he would increase their salary when he got in. They even sent parties to ask me if I would leave I said I did not intend to dismiss them in office. any person, no matter how he voted, but I did not like any person holding office to come out in such a way as to give my friends an excuse for asking for the dismissal. When that answer came to some of them, they came and asked if I would guarantee their salaries would be increased if they voted for Of course, I would not agree to that. With regard to railway passes, several parties came over "It would assist Mr. Ross for the Dominion. You can scarcely understand how largely interested I am in Mr. Ross' election. This is becoming an important office: and if I had a friend at hendquarters, I would get $200 added to my salary. Then I am getting old, and would like to leave here altogether. If Ross was returned I could be pensioned, as in a few years I will be thirty-five years in the service. So you see it is almost life or death to me who is returned by the County of Victoria at the next Dominion election. Then, again, I would not give up the railway in my interest, but, as far as I know, every one of them paid his fare. The hon. member resigned that office, he still held on to it, until one of the officials took it from him and tore it up on one of his trips. Here is a gentleman getting up in this House to talk about passes to others, when he himself travelled back and forth on a pass which he had no right to hold, once he had resigned his seat in the Executive Council.

Mr. FRASER. I would say in explanation that I did get a pass as a member of the Government, and travelled on it once. The first time I travelled on it, after I resigned, the conductor said he would take it up and did so, in which he was perfectly right. I was a member of the Government until that occurred, and did not travel on the pass after I had resigned.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N.S.) Let the hongentleman say that he travelled back and forward on that pass in his county during the election, and then back and forward to Halifax, and here to Ottawa and back again, and then it was taken from him.

Mr. FRASER. I was in my county the whole time of the election. I can well understand the hon, gentleman's remark, from the character of the constituents who sent him here, as depicted by himself.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N.S.) The hon. gentleman himself tried for a number of years to get a nomination for the county without success.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). There are quite a number of Dominion officials in my county who are Liberals or Reformers as you may choose to put its They are Liberals simply because they were appointed by my opponent during the time he was in Parliament. Of that I do not complain. I think that every Liberal official of the Dominion Government has a perfect right to vote against me, but when I heard the leader of the Opposition laying down a rule, which will probably cut off the heads of many of them, I think it is my duty to call the attention of this House and the Government to the actions of some of them during the late Dominion election. I never complained of the conduct of any one of them, although I felt that their conduct at elections was frequently so offensive to myself and to the party I supported that they deserved dismissal. I shall call attention to the correspondence of the Island Reporter, which was anonymously signed "more anon;" and dated from Hastings, 25th December, 1890, and published in the Liberal paper called the Island Reporter, on 7th January, 1891. The writer says:

"Ever since the fishery bounty became in vogue it was customary for the people of Creignish, Long Point, and very largely for the people of Judique, to enlist their names as fishing claimants in Port Hastings. But recently the scene has changed. D. F.'s business has much developed: every new bounty man means a fresh customer to him, and modestly he whispered to Dr. Hugh Cameron to stop the fishing tide to Hastings in order to expand his mercantile scope from sea to sea. On being checked, Mr. Forbes rose for an explanation, asking Dr. Hugh, Why depart from the good old rule—that fishermen are not allowed to get their bounty here? With cloquence not very lofty, yet very pointed, the doctor did reply: Our pets must be fed, no hunger, no cold, must they suffer."

Mr. Forbes is a Customs official at Port Hastings, and he assists the agent of the Railway Department at the same place. Mr. Forbes, at the time, was actively engaged in canvassing against myself. A few days after this publication appeared in the paper, I met him in the streets of Hastings, and called his attention to this letter. I pointed out to him the fact that I never knew there was any change in the manner of disposing of the fishery bounties, that he never wrote to me with reference to it, and that I never gave him an answer. admitted that such was the case. I said to him: As an honest man, it is your duty to contradict that false report published in the Island Reporter of 7th January, and unless you do so I will have reason to believe that, if the letter was not written by you, it was at least suggested by you. He promised he would do so. Not many days afterwards Parliament dissolved, and after the dissolution I happened to meet him again in Hastings, and asked him why he did not contradict the false statement published in the Island Reporter. His answer was that he did not see very well how he could do it. My reply was simply this: Mr. Forbes, it may be perfectly true that you had nothing to do with the writing of the letter; but whether you had or not, you are now equally guilty with the writer, because you are an accessory after the fact. This is one of the cases in question, whose head the leader of the Opposition would cut off immediately. I believe that such officials do deserve immediate dismissal. I have not lodged any complaint against him and I would not have mentioned it had not such cases been brought before the House. I say that the agent of the Railway Department, in whose office he worked, is the most vigorous and active designer in the Liberal interest in the party. I also say, that a number of the postmasters have gone to a greater length in attempting to defeat me than this official of the Government. A very respectable lady, a Mrs. Macdonald, has the post office in the village of Whycocomagh, and it was asserted by her friends that I had secured her dismissal about the time that Parliament was dissolved. I made no complaint against her, and as a matter of fact she was not dismissed. A brother-in-law hers who occupies the position of postmaster at West Bay, made use of the report referred to, and another brother-in-law of hers at Port Hastings travelled from house to house complaining of my having dismissed their who was a widow. This was sister-in-law. This was without any foundation, in fact she was not dismissed at all, and yet a personal canvass was made against me on the ground of her dismissal, and that false report was the cause of a considerable loss to me in regard to votes in that constituency. If the principle laid down by my hon, friend the leader of the Opposition is to be carried out, I have no doubt that all these officials will be summarily dismissed. It is not only the officials of these districts that I have found in very active opposition to the Government candidates. There are a large number of officials in other parts of the county, the friends of whom, it is true, do not go so offensively to work as these did, also vigorously opposed me. I always concede that they have a perfect right to vote against me, and also I say they have a perfect right to advise their friends that the policy of the Opposition, if they feel it is right, is one which would subserve the general interests, but, when they take such a prominent part in their party contests as those to whom I have referred, I feel that an investigation should be made, and that they should be dealt with as they deserve, and in exact accordance with the rule which has been laid down

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is somewhat remarkable to listen to the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite and to learn from them how many Reform officials there are in the public service of the Dominion. I had no idea that the service was stuffed to repletion with officials who were opposed to the Government of the day. It is true that there has been no Reform Administration for thirteen years, but it seems that a Reform official The Tory Government lives and the never dies. Reform officials live in order to spite that Adminis-I am rather incredulous, however, as to the statements which have been made by the hon. gentlemen. I think they must be labouring under some delusion or hallucination. They may have been timid in that election, but I had no idea that the timidity of a Tory candidate reached the dimensions indicated by the speeches of the two hon, gentlemen who have just addressed the House. The hon, gentleman (Mr. Cameron) says that the Reform officials in his constituency and everywhere else-for it appears there were no others in his constituency except Reform officials--laboured with every possible means to defeat him, but he is a Christian gentleman and would not think of attempting to dismiss them. He continues these men in office for the purpose of showing to his political opponents how generous and good he is.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I might change my mind at your suggestion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He desires to change those who were his political opponents into his supporters. I suppose now he has fallen from grace, and it may be in a moment of weakness, but I have no doubt the hon, gentleman will recover his equanimity when the discussion is over and will extend to these people the same magnanimous conduct which has characterized him in the past. My experience is that Reform officials are "like angels' visits, few and far between." They are a class whom it is not easy to discover, and here in the public service at Ottawa, I do not think the hon, gentleman will say that the Government have been injured by the number of Reform officials who have taken an active part against the Administration. No one is complaining that, as long as you give to the men in the public service the right to exercise the franchise, that franchise is exercised, or that a man should write a letter stating what he desired, just as the British ambassador at Washington wrote to a person in California, who asked for some information from him. The complaints which are made in regard to officials who, at the instance of the Administration, have gone on the public platform, neglected the duties of their office and canvassed in support of one party and against another. If there were a change of Administration, if an official had gone into the county of my hon, friend beside me (Mr. Laurier) and had succeeded in obtaining the votes of a member of the people against him, what would be the relations of my hon. friend to that official in the case of a change of Government to which I have alluded, and how much confidence would he be able to place in him, and how far would he be able to trust him as a faithful servant of the Crown under the guidance of the party to which he was politically opposed? It is impossible to maintain the system of permanent officers in the public service if the officials are permitted to take part in elections on behalf of one Bills, I may say that we generally take a vote on one party or the other. The two things cannot be maintained.

RETURN ORDERED.

1. Copies of all claims presented to the Government since 1880, by Mr. Joseph Antoine Maurice, merchant, of the Village of Chambly Basin, and Dame Julie Fournier, his wife, for losses suffered by them in reference to lands purchased by them from the Government in 1875: 2. Copies of all correspondence and letters addressed to any department of the Government by any person or persons, in relation of the said matter: 3. Copies of all correspondence between any of the said departments, or between any department and the claimants, or any persons acting for them or in their interest, in relation of such claims: 4. Copies of the order of reference made by Government referring the said claims to Joseph Simard. Esq., then Dominion Arbitrator, and of his award: 5. Copies of the opinions given on the subject by the hon. Minister of Public Works, and of the opinion of the hom. Minister of Justice. (Mr. Préfontaine.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

RELIEF OF JAY SPENCER CORBIN.

Mr. REID moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 30) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of Jay Spencer Corbin.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I find on reading this Bill that there was no evidence taken by the Committee. The great object in referring the Bill to the Committee was that evidence should be taken in support of the statements of the petitioner. I therefore move in amendment that the order for the third reading be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for further consideration.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LAURIER. This is not a question of party, and anything the hon, gentleman may suggest in regard to the matter will be acceptable.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I make this suggestion because these Bills have no reference to party. I do it in order to set myself right, because we generally divide on some of these Bills.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There may be a difference in regard to some of these Bills themselves and it may be that some of them are not entitled to pass.

SAWDUST ON LA HAVE RIVER, N.S.

House resumed further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Kaulbach:

That an Order of the House do issue for Return of all letters, correspondence, petitions and papers between all persons and the Department of Marine and Fisheries relating to sawdust on the La Have River, Lunenburg County, N.S., with the object of having the river relieved from the operation of the said Act, and the motion of Mr. Flint in amendment:

That the following words be added at the end thereof: "Also, a list of rivers and streams exempted from the operations of the Act, and a Return of all letters, correspondence, petitions and papers between all persons and the Department of Marine and Fisheries relating to such

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I shall have to trespass on the House for some length in discussing this question, although I occupied a good deal of the time of the House when the subject was up on a previous occasion. The reason I was compelled to do so I mentioned at that time, and I need not repeat it now. My remarks, I think, at that time were confined largely to the river that is mentioned in the motion before the House in connection with the administration of this law so far as regard La Have River in the Province of Nova Scotia. I have endeavoured to point out to the House, whether rightly or wrongly, whether guided by a proper appreciation of the spirit of the Sawdust Act or not, that I have endeavoured, so far as I possibly could, to see that the wishes and intention of Parliament were carried out, in reference to that river, whether the county at that time happened to be represented by a political opponent as it was when first this question came up, or whether it is represented as it is now, I am glad to say, by an hon. gentleman who is in accord with the trade policy and general policy of this Government. It was, and it is much to my regret that I have not | considerably handicapped by the operation of the Sir Hector Langevin.

had the support of either of these gentlemen in connection with the administration of this law. will not repeat the many careful and elaborate enquiries which have been made, and to which the attention of the House has been drawn, but just now I happen to have in my possession a recent report from Lieut. Gordon which I will read to the House. I stated the other day that the inspector for that district had, in a late report, given his reasons for suggesting that the law should be suspended in the River La Have. That is the result which both my friends, the member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) and Mr. Eisenhauer, in this House were very anxious should come about. I cannot myself appreciate the reasons given by the inspector of the district. The facts upon which his report was based seem to me to be entirely contradictory to the enquiry that had taken place a very short time previously under the auspices of a man in whose opinion I have certainly the very greatest confidence; that is Lieut. Gordon, the present commander of the fishery protection fleet on the coast of Nova Scotia, a man who for years has been entrusted with that great responsibility, and who during that time has given intelligent and unremitting attention to the question, relating to the fisheries on the coast. I am sure his reports placed before this House from year to year, elaborate as they have been, have commanded the respect and confidence of all the members of the House who have had their attention drawn to them. That gentleman made a careful enquiry—a much more elaborate enquiry than the present inspector-he took his ship, the Acadia, into the river as far as he could, and taking the boat and a gauge he proceeded up the river, with I believe some of these gentlemen who are especially interested in having the river exempted from the operation of this law. Having made this investigation he reported his conclusions in the Annual Report for 1889, and he gave then, not only a statement as to the result of his soundings, but he gave also the profiles of these soundings, showing the actual depth of the river now, as well as the depth shown by the admiralty charts, and consequently the change that had taken place because of the heavy and large deposits of Now, I wish to mention to the House that at this date, having before him the arguments which have been so strongly urged by the different hon, gentlemen who have addressed the House on this subject: having these placed before him in the newspaper of the district, he is as strong as ever in his opinion and in his advice to me, that the law should be carried out and enforced, and his reasons summarized are briefly as follows. I hope the House will bear with me while I read these reasons from a memorandum which I have drawn up from his report which will be brought before the House:

"Lieutenant Gordon contends the La Have should not be exempted from the operation of the Act respecting sawdust and mill rubbish, because a stream frequented by anadromous fish should not be exempt, for if so harm will be done these fish, and the welfare of the coastal sea-fishing depends very much upon the success of anadromous fishing. This year owing to the scarcity of bait anadromous fishing would have been specially valuable, and instead of having to get bait from elsewhere as was the case, bank fishermen would have been able to procure it at their own doors. This state of things on the La Have is due to the deposit of sawdust in the river."

I may explain, although to many members of the House the facts are well known, that we have been

Newfoundland Bait Act, and that at certain times of the year when fresh bait, so absolutely necessary now-a-days to the successful operation of the bank fishing, happens to fail on our coast, it usually is found on the Newfoundland coast, and rice rensa. Hitherto our bank fishermen have been able to resort for bait to either coast, to enable them to engage in the fierce competition with our American neighbours, and with the French people operating these fisheries, and it was of great importance that we should have access to these bases of bait supply. This year, unfortunately, the Newfoundland Government have prevented our fishermen from the access hitherto enjoyed by them to Newfoundland ports for the purpose of obtaining bait, and Lieut. Gordon points out, in this connection, that the question now before the House becomes of the greatest importance to the coast fisheries in the Province of Nova Scotia. In the extract from his report, to which I have alluded, he argues that it is most desirable that our fishermen should have all these sources of bait supply fostered careful possible manner, and that, had this river been in the condition it was by nature, and before these enormous deposits of sawdust were there, then the benefits would have been incalculable in securing to us a supply of bait. There were, as my hon, friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) is aware, at one time this season no less than ten, perhaps more, bank fishermen with their large crews, their costly outfit, and their splendid ships, lying idle at anchor, and unable to go on with the bank fishery because there was no run of fresh bait in our rivers; the bait being on the opposite coast. To prevent a repetition of this it becomes the duty of Parliament, in my humble opinion it becomes the duty of all representatives of these fishing counties, and all representatives of our coast fisheries, to sink individual interests for a time, so far as they clash with the general interest of the fishery. It is in my judgment necessary that we should sink for a time the interests of the lumbermen, who are endeavouring to save here and there a few dollars, and to conserve the greater, the larger, and in my opinion the more important industry, if it is properly looked after, namely, the fishery interests of the Maritime Provinces in general. Lieutenant Gordon very properly draws attention to the great importance of carrying out the Act which prohibits the deposit of sawdust and the consequent pollution of the rivers which are frequented by anadromous fish. He goes on to say:

"The intention of the Act was that its operation should be as general as the necessities of the case demand, and even more so in waters frequented by anadromous fishes than in inland waters. Witnesses in previous La Have investigation testified that gaspereaux were formerly plentiful there and that cargoes were shipped to West Indies, but the mills have stopped this by running sawdust into the river. Were the reverse the case it would be found to be of greater benefit to the people than the saw-mills and timber industry. (Value of bait supply.) Navigation is seriously impeded in the river by sawdust deposits."

Lieutenant Gordon contends also, and no one knows better than himself, that the navigation has been, and is, seriously impeded in the river by the sawdust deposits; and as one hon. gentleman has already drawn the attention of the House to the fact, the interests of navigation are specially concerned in this as well as the fishery interest, to which most attention has been given in this debate. He goes on to say:

"Mr. Kinney's contention that the question of damage caused fish by sawdust is still undecided, is offset by experience in the case of St. Mary's River, where the water has been made turbid and nauseous by rotting sawdust and which effectually prevents fish proceeding up the river. The mills on the La Have could be fitted up to comply with the law—two out of the three lower mills easily, and the other mills at some cost—but all could comply with the law, and it is not impossible for them to do so."

I have called the attention of the House to this river. I have also asked the attention of the House to the fact that the question is frequently agitated in this country. But it is by no means singular to Canada to have this question agitated as often as it can be agitated. The same thing occurs in other The mill-owners, strong in their capicountries. tal and strong in their position, endeavour, of course, to produce the product of their mills at an economical cost; and, consequently, so far as they can shape the laws, they will naturally do so, so that the obligations imposed upon them will be as light as possible, and their profits as great as possible; and we find that in England and the States, the same agitation occurs at exactly the same time. In one of those countries it is chiefly chemical pollution that is complained of; but the manufacturers, uniting their influence and their wealth, and retaining able counsel on their behalf, endeavour to drive their coaches and fours through many Acts of Parliament, and in many cases, I am sorry to say, they have succeeded to such an extent that the fisheries have received great and permanent injury. But so far as this country is concerned, let me ask the attention of the House to the careful consideration which has been given to this question by the Governments of both parties. This is not a political question, although some gentlemen have endeavoured to make it so. Some gentlemen have attacked me upon this question; but I care little for that so long as I can show that my skirts are clean from the charge of having used any Act of Parliament for mere political gain. But I wish to point out that this cannot be made a political question, that this law is not a law of the present day or of the present Government, and that the enforcement of this law is not peculiar to the present regime or to the present incumbency of the department upon which devolves the administration of the law. The hon, leader of the late Government was one of the loudest in bringing the attention of Parliament to this question; and as long ago as April, 1870, after there had been legislation on the Statute-book, previous to Confederation, in 1865 and 1868, to prevent the pollution of rivers by sawdust, he drew the attention of Parliament most vigorously, as he was well able to do at that time, to the question, and called for more legislation and a more effective enforcement of that legislation. He was supported in 1871 by the present hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) who at that time brought the subject formally before Parliament in the shape of a Bill. In February of that year, that hon, gentleman having asked Parliament to legislate in the very direction of the present law, supported by members of this House wholly regardless of their political proclivities. He was supported by eminent gentlemen, among whom was Mr. Mackenzie, in calling the attention of the House and the country to the necessity of legislation and the enforcement of that legislation in order to serve the interests of navigation and the fisheries. that we have Parliament legislating on the subject previous to Confederation in 1865, and subsequently on no fewer occasions than in 1868, 1872 and 1873; and on every occasion the mill-owners combined to resist the enactment of that legislation, using the very arguments we hear to-day-saying that it was impossible to comply with such a law without ruin to the lumber industry, that this sawdust was swept down the channels of rivers and did not interfere with navigation, that fish rather than otherwise liked the substance of sawdust, that it was nonsense to talk about sawdust affecting the life of fish. They used all these arguments, published them through the press, and brought them before Parliament; and with their well known influence they succeeded oftentimes in staying the hand of Parliament, in preventing legislation and in inducing enquiries to be made. were enquiries made previous to 1874 and also during the time of Mr. Mackenzie's Administration. The representations of the mill-owners, which were never despised or put aside carelessly, induced the Government of that day to order another formal enquiry. There was a formal enquiry, the result of which was put in the blue-books. That enquiry has not been alluded to in this discussion, and I doubt if the report of it has been studied by the hon, gentlemen who have attacked the present policy, which was also the policy of that day. The men who made that enquiry, including a Mr. Mather, who was himself, I understand, interested in the lumber trade, gathered facts which, to my mind, place beyond dispute the necessity of having this Act on the Statute-book and enforcing that Act. With regard to the Ottawa River, to which allusion has been made, I do not hesitate to say that I am in accord, so far as my understanding of the question goes, with the necessity of removing the exemption from that river; but still, that river had been exempted before I came into office. subject has been brought up in the other House of Parliament as well as here. It is now being considered, and a careful enquiry, which is necessary, is to be made, as I understand, with a view of ascertaining whether there are any exceptional reasons why this river should enjoy exemption. But I may say that, coming, as I do, from the Province of Nova Scotia, and the House remembering that the greater part of my argument has reference to the importance of the coastal fisheries, many of the arguments which render it necessary to put into operation a law the enforcement of which brings a great deal of unpopularity and a great deal of suspicion with it, in reference to the rivers flowing into the sea, do not apply to the case of the Ottawa River. We have not, in such a case, the question of coastal fisheries; we have not the question of keeping up the bait supply for the larger and more valuable fish; so that it is burdening this question considerably to come down to a detail of that kind; and I mention that case to point out that in reference to the river about which enquiry is being made as to whether it should be exempted No doubt other rivers might not. be mentioned where the exemption should never have been applied; and Parliament will remember that last year I introduced a Bill—which for various reasons I was unable to proceed with, not being here—taking away from the Governor in Council the power to exempt rivers. I feel that this is a most difficult responsibility to discharge in many great as I should like to see them, and I doubt Mr. TUPPER.

ways. It is calculated to create in the public mind a distrust in the Government of the day, that favouritism is shown to this river or that, according to the political complexion of the Government; and it seemed to me that when mill-owners endeavoured to make a case for an extraordinary power, for dumping these deposits into clear and navigable water, they should be bound to come to Parliament like other people and ask that that exemption should be given by special legislation, after they had put all the facts of the case before Parliament. Parliament could then deal with the subject, and the department would be beyond the suspicion which attaches, unfairly I claim, to the administration of this Act at present. In the Senate this whole question came up again, and the representations which hon gentlemen have advanced with regard to other rivers were advanced there by gentlemen interested in the mill industry on the Ottawa River. They argued that it was impossible to save this sawdust except at great cost, and advanced other arguments. Hon, gentlemen who care to pursue the enquiry into that case further will find the results of the enquiry in the reports of 1888. And after taking all the evidence, that House of Parliament came to the conclusion that the law was a good law, and that its enforcement was necessary on that river, as well as other rivers in the Dominion of Canada. This legislation, as I have said, is not peculiar at all to Canada, either before or since Confederation. It is found in the different States of the Union; it is found in the mother country, where the trouble with sawdust is comparatively insignificant compared with ours. Nevertheless, in the mother country, eminent men have been engaged, at much higher salaries than any of our officials command, investigating this question over a long period of years, and we find the results of their labour, not only in the Statute-book, but all through the Government reports. They have gone into the question scientifically and shown the reasons why this pollution is most hurtful to fish, and particularly to the fish of the kind with which the La Have River is stocked, the king of fish, the salmon. As regards the enforcement of the Act and the statements made that in one district it is in force, and that in another it is not, leading to the suspicion that the department first looks to ascertain who represents a particular district before deciding whether to put the law in force or not, if hon, gentlemen will look to the report of 1888, the first report made after I became Minister of Marine and Fisheries, they will find that the Act, so far as the department can cause it to be enforced, has been generally enforced, or that instructions for its general enforcement have been issued, save in the cases I have mentioned, and with regard to which all the papers will be brought down, which have been exempted, under that power of exempting a river or stream, or part of a river or stream. The reasons, in such cases, which have been given and which have decided the department to issue orders of exemption, are on file and open to inspection. An hon, gentleman mentioned that the Act was a dead letter in the Counties of Guysborough and Pictou. Pictou I know something about, and I can only say this, that the fishing interests are of comparatively minor importance in that county. They are not so whether we could do very much in the County of Pictou by improvement in this direction. Nevertheless, the instructions to the officers in that county, as well as in the County of Guysborough, have been the same, and, judging from the reports under my hand, I fancy that the hon, gentleman who made that statement is talking without the book. tainly no officer except under special instructions, for the reasons I have given, and which are open to inspection at any time, has had any authority or information, direct or indirect, from the head of the department to permit, for one moment, any violation of the law.

Mr. FRASER. I did not mean at all that they had. My statement was that the law was a dead letter, simply because there was no necessity for putting it in force, and they did not think it was

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman may have said that, and I quite accept that: but, according to the reports, it is clear, that unless the officers entrusted with the enforcement of the Act in those counties have directly contravened the instructions of the department, the law is not a dead letter there: and I am endeavouring to clear my own skirts, as it is only right I should, with reference to the indirect charge—a charge which has not been very bold or open or straight in this House—that I have maladministered the Act, though such charge has been made directly outside the House by the Messrs. Davies and others. In 1888, I find that the officers for the district of Guysborough reported:

"The sawdust order gave the mill-owners a scare, and the most of them went to work to put their mills in order and prevent the rubbish and sawdust slipping into the river.

Another says:

"The law has been in force, and there has been a general though reductant acquiescence.

That is all I have to go by until any hon, gentleman states to me in this House that these officers have not reported correctly, and notice of course will be taken of that without delay. But in the County of Pictou, which I have the honour to represent, the officer reports:

"The rivers and streams of the district have been kept clear of sawdust and other mill rubbish."

Those are the reports with reference to the two counties singled out. Similar reports will be found with reference to Cape Breton Island, all the counties of which are represented, I may say, by steady, intelligent, and earnest supporters of the present Administration. There has been no exception made in their favour. It has been reported to me by the officer in that district, and his report is not disputed, that that order reached them and that it was obeyed. In the Georgian Bay and in Manitoba, I am glad to say, that public opinion supports the department. In the west, where the milling industry cannot be said to be very small, public opinion is in that condition, that the mill-owners are not sufficiently strong in the communities in which they live to have these good beneficent laws in the interests of the fishermen set aside; but, so far as I can judge, all the reports show a very vigorous enforcement of the law, and we know that all kinds of contrivances are used throughout the Province of Ontario for the dis-position of sawdust as well as mill rubbish. The position of sawdust as well as mill rubbish. general instructions appear in the report for 1890, formerly threw into the river:

and at page 78 in the appendix will be found from various districts, not the statements made by hon. gentlemen from incorrect information, but the statement that this law has been in force and is being carried out, and I had it put in the report for the benefit of the mill-owners. 1 do not wish to oppress them, I know the law is vexatious to many, I like popularity as well as most gentlemen, but I cannot believe that the law is bad, and cannot find an argument on which I could ask the House to repeal it; and that being so, I am compelled to see that the law is carried out. I have had in the report of 1890 inserted the reports of various officers as to the methods adopted by various mill-owners to dispose of their mill rubbish, so that those who desire to comply with the law may be enabled to do so. In the mother country, the same difficulties exist and the same arguments are used; and as I do not pretend to be an expert in the matter, I wish to put the House in possession of much of the information which induces me to believe it my duty to enforce the law. In support of the statement I made that the arguments against the law are always advanced by the manufacturers or those interested in manufacturing as cheaply as possible. I wish to refer to the last report on the salmon and fresh water fisheries of England and Wales for 1890. I wish to point out particularly the reports made by Mr. Barrington and Mr. Fryer, gentlemen holding high and responsible offices as inspectors of fisheries in the mother country, who allude to similar difficulties which have confronted them in regard to what is still a great source of wealth in the British isles: the fisheries. Speaking of the mines, which cause an obstruction of a somewhat similar nature to the sawdust to the fisheries, Mr. Barrington says:

"The mischief done by these mines affords a very good illustration of the difficulty of dealing with cases of pollution under the Fishery Acts. The refuse matter is not necessarily of such a nature as to 'poison or kill' fish, but it practically does as much or even more harm in deterring the fish from entering, or in driving them from the river, while it completely destroys the spawning beds, thus causing more paramagnet mischief than the disclosure. thus causing more permanent mischief than the discharge of a directly poisonous liquid."

"It certainly is anomalous that in all cases of river pollution the excuse of poverty in the one case, and of wealth in the other, should be urged, and be accepted, as of equal weight as a reason for non-interference.

Then again :

"In other parts of the country county councils are showing an active interest in the question of the prevention of river pollution. In addition to the cases referred to in my last report, I may meation that the Northumberland council have directed that all deposit of solid matters in streams should be taken cognizance of by the policy with a view to preventing at any rate one source. police with a view to preventing, at any rate, one source of evil."

But Mr. Gladstone's remarks will be of great service in this connection, in view of his vast experience, his knowledge of this legislation and of the agitation which has existed in the mother country for so many years, and representing as he does so many varied interests in the mother country. This is the result of his matured opinion. In his speech in October last to the employes of the Pumpherston Oil Company, at their works near Edinburgh, he referred to the case of a papermaker in the south of England, who now makes a profit by the treatment of the refuse which he

"That," said Mr Gladstone, "is the practice in many trades, and then when a Bill is brought in to prevent it, they declare it will ruin them. But what happened? A Bill was passed to prevent their poisoning the river by throwing into it their refuse. They were obliged to set to work to consider how they could turn it to account: they found a means of turning it to account which brought found a means of turning it to account which brought them £3,000 a year net, and enabled them to give me an answer that they were doing a rattling trade in this way.

That is so far as other refuse or rubbish is concerned. But, in the State of Maine, we know that they are using sawdust in a very useful commercial way. They have used it for making brick in some places. At all events, the ingenuity of those who are engaged in the trade soon finds the means of turning anything of this kind, which has at one time been supposed to be rubbish, to good and profitable account. I must ask the House to allow me to place on record for reference in this debate, or for the consideration of the country generally, some further extracts to show the reasons which have induced Parliament so often, whether under a Reform or a Liberal Conservative régime, whether before or since Confederation, to place this legislation upon the Statute-book and to maintain it. As I said before, if the country has changed its wishes on this matter, that can be shown after this debate, and my only surprise is that gentlemen rise and attack the Act in this Parliament, but Parliament has not been asked to reverse its opinion and to take away the power from the Government or to repeal the legislation In the face of scientific enquiries altogether. which have been made the world over and having only to meet the statements of those who are interested in having as few possible obstacles as possible placed in the way of carrying out their work, I think it would be found very difficult for any hon. gentleman to get the Parliament of Canada to Mr. Fryer, one of the remove this legislation. inspectors of fisheries for England and Wales, in his report of 1887, makes a statement which I will quote, though it is rather long, but his experience on this point is very valuable, and it is upon reports of that kind that I have formed my own opinions and that probably Parliament will form its opinion. He says:

"It is at any rate clear that there must be a point beyond which the pollution of the estuary of any salmon river cannot be carried without extinguishing its salmon fisheries: for, however pure the upper waters may be, however unobstructed by weirs, and however abundant and excellent the spawning grounds, they are useless so long as the fish are prevented by the polluted state of the tideway from reaching them: while even if artificial propagation in the fresh waters were resorted to it would produce no result if the smolts were to be poisoned entropagation of rivers ago, the Royal Commission on the pollution of rivers expressed their deliberate opinion that the pollution of rivers, instead of being a necessary consequence of commercial enterprise, is an easily preventible nuisance. Summarizing the result of their inquiries into the effects of the existing system of disposing of mining, manufacturing, and town refuse, they reported that in every case efficient remedies exist and are available, so that the present use of rivers and running waters for the purpose of carrying off the sewage of towns and populous places, and the refuse arising from industrial processes and manufactures can be prevented without risk to the public health or serious injury to such process or manufactures. In an earlier report dealing specially with the Mersey and Ribble, the Commissioners had gone further than this, stating that of the many liquids polluting and poisoning these rivers, there is not one which cannot be either kept out of the streams altogether, or so far purified before admission as to deprive it of its noxious character, and this not only without unduly interfering with manufacturing operations, but even in some instances with a distinct profit to the manu-Mr. Tupper.

facturers; and even in those cases where a certain amount of expense must be incurred in unremunerative operations, the use of the purified stream will more than recompense this expenditure. Recent scientific and industrial research has multiplied processes for converting waste products which now pollute our streams into valuable marketable commodities. In a few cases the enterprise of manufacturers has led to the adoption of these processes to their own profit, but, generally speak-these processes to their own profit, but, generally speaking, the waste of such products, with the accompanying evils of impure rivers, goes on increasing.

"If this were a mere matter of the waste of the material thus carelessly or deliberately thrown away, it would probably be in accordance with the prevalent doctrines of political, if not of commercial, economy, to leave the waste unchecked until the self-interest of the manufacturer stepped in to stop it. But the question does not end with waste. Every gallon of liquid refuse, and every ton of solid matter, east into a river tends to render its waters more incapable of supporting fish life; more unwholesome for animals to partake of; more unfit for man's use for manufacturing and often for agricultural purposes; more poisonous for him to drink, and more conducive to the contamination of the atmosphere and the spread of disease. In addition to all this, the riverbed gets silted up to the obstruction of its free flow and to the consequent aggravation of the injury caused by to the consequent aggravation of the injury caused by floods."

Some hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. TUPPER. Did an hon, gentleman say "hear, hear"? Because there is no comparison whatever, between the relative importance of these interests in the mother country and in the Province of Nova Scotia in which this river under consideration is

If it were a mere question of the interest of the fisheries against those of manufacturers and miners, no doubt the former, being of inferior value, would have to succumb—though in estimating the relative values of the two in-terests, it would be unfair to the fisheries, to take them at their present worth, handicapped as they are by pollutions their present worth, handicapped as they are by pollutions and in other ways, and not to take into account the great developments which they would undergo if they were allowed fair-play in the matter of pure water. But to the interests of the fisheries pure and simple, whether they are assessed at their present or their prospective value, are added those of public health, for which a pure water supply is essential; of agriculture, which is similarly concerned in the question, and, in many cases of inland navigation, to which the deposit of solid refuse in streams is frequently detrimental, while in the same scale may be placed the interests of the manufacturers themselves who would be the first to benefit by the application of a general law prohibiting the pollution of streams."

It seems to me that this extract, although long, is useful; it is material, and certainly, within my knowledge, it has not been placed before this House or the country in a consideration of this question before. Now, then, a few brief references to other reports. In 1888, the Chie! Inspector of Fisheries, Mr. Barrington, reporting to the Board of Trade, specially says:

"Sawdust is deadly to fish from its choking their gills." Now, I have heard men by the score in my own province laugh at the idea that a fish could be choked by sawdust in the gills. They have an extraordinary idea of the intelligence of fish, and they argue that a fish would have no occasion to open its gills so as to take in the sawdust. But, nevertheless, this is the statement of an expert, of a man who has not merely studied the art of catching fish, but has studied the habits of the fish thoroughly, and the conditions which are required for its propagation and for its increase in the waters where it is desired. So Spencer Baird, a man of great standing in the United States, a com-missioner, now dead, whose evidence and whose influence were of great weight in the Commission that sat at Halifax in connection with the old Washington Treaty, has placed on record, in 1886, in part 15 of his report, at pages 157 and 158, opinions which it would be worth while for any one to peruse who is interested in this subject, and which opinions support the principle upon which this legislation is based, and which agree with the opinions of similar officers in England. In 1872, Professor Baird, writing of the destructive agencies in connection with the depletion of fish life in New England, a subject of tremendous importance, from which we can draw a great lesson, attributed it to the reason which I repeated, and to the falling off of anadromous fish by the attraction that they have for each other when they go together into their accustomed haunts. That is the opinion of our own superintendent of fisheries, Mr. Wilmot, who has spent a lifetime in the study of this question, a gentleman whose reputation, where he is best known, is such as to enable him to claim and obtain great confidence in every respect so far as this subject is concerned. He is most pronounced upon it in every report, whether dealing with the La Have or with the Otonabee up in Ontario, where we have the same difficulty as on the La Have, and where we have overcome that difficulty, and where these mill-owners who said they could not save the sawdust, have found that they could save it, and are prosecuting their business just as well as ever, and the people at the same time are enjoying greater pleasure in their streams and better fishing in the rivers and in the lakes. As in this case, Mr. Wilmot found all the authorities to be in accord with the extract which I have given. But I will draw particular attention to his report for 1889. For the benefit of gentlemen who are giving attention to this subject, I asked him to arrange all these authorities, and he has given them from the different States of the Union, from men who are employed in connection with the fisheries, not to embrace the manufacturers, not to embrace fishermen either in the restriction found necessary in this connection, but to add to the benefits of the people in the various localities. These men who, in the interest of the country have pursued their enquiries, have all come to the conclusion that the rivers must be kept pure and clean, for the clean fish are the most valuable fish; therefore, while the manufacturers may here and there object to it, it is ultimately not a bit to their detriment to comply with the law. me remark that the Morning Chronicle, a good sound Liberal organ in the Province of Nova Scotia, representative of Liberal opinion, has persistently attacked me with reference to the La Have River, and has denounced me as a most vindictive man, endeavouring to prosecute this poor Mr. Davison, a gentleman, whom I never saw until casually once last winter, saying that I had selected him for martyrdom—that paper the other day stated, as a news item, after we had enforced this law in the La Have against the wishes of my friends, who were equally down upon me, I may confess with my political opponents—the Morning Chronicle a day or two ago stated that the salmon in the La Have River was never so good as this year, and I may say that in most places salmon fishing has been far poorer this year.

Mr. FORBES. Does he know in what part of the La Have the salmon was taken?

Mr. TUPPER. It does not matter for him to know the exact spot, any more than it does to the is an attempt at enforcement being made, so much editor of the Chronicle, who states that salmon fishing in the La Have was never so good as now. As the sawdust goes from the mill to the mouth of the river, and the salmon must come in at the mouth, it is not necessary for me to fix the exact mathematical point at which these particular salmon were found. If hon, gentlemen care to see other opinions of eminent men who have looked into this subject in all countries, they will find in the report of 1889, on pages 13, 16, 17, 20 and 21, copious references and extracts that certainly will satisfy them that if these men know anything of the subject from which they speak, the only attack that could be made against myself in connection with the law is that I did not ask Parliament for sufficient power, that I have not control of sufficient money to enforce that law as it should be enforced, rigidly and to the letter, in every place. One weakness in my armour is, as I frankly confess, that here and there a fishery officer may not find it worth his while to make a careful investigation, may not find it safe to be as active in reference to his neighbour's business as the law requires him to be. While we have so little money placed at our disposal for carrying out these laws, that difficulty may occur, the law may be, in some places, not known to the department, a dead letter, and in some places it is enforced in a perfunctory manner, and that is the only point of attack that it will be found I am open to. Now, then, these authorities to which I allude, are chiefly from the Commissioners of the various States of the Union. Lieutenant Gordon, in a most elaborate report—and it is, perhaps, superfluous that I should be adding my little mite to the literature on the subject-in his report for 1889, goes fully into these matters on pages 263, 264, 267 and 268, and deals with the statements made by the petitioners from that district giving their reasons why this law should not be enforced on La Have River. I have met them, I think, conclusively in the light of the authorities, and I have no doubt whatever on the subject. But it is very gratifying in connection with the consideration of this subject after this debate, and after hearing the speeches of hon. gentlemen who are well able to submit the other side of the case, that I have not found any of them undertaking even to meet these points I have And here let | mentioned, which must be discussed, and which must be overcome before I can reach a decision in the direction which hon, gentlemen suggest. In Forest and Stream, a leading paper published in the United States, in a number published on 24th October, 1889, it is reported that a special committee of the Oregon Legislature strongly recommended the prohibition in that State of sawdust in streams. In the Boston Journal of October 24, 1889, "Shooting and Fishing," referring to Pleasant River and salmon, says: "They must soon die from the quantity of sawdust in river; no fish could long survive said pol-Sackville River, Nova Scotia, in 1868, which was a splendid salmon river, was absolutely ruined by the erection of a saw-mill six miles from the sea, which was permitted in the day when fishery laws were made to be broken, as all hon. members from Nova Scotia know was the case previous to Confederation, and for a long time after the Fishery Department was organized. I do not pretend that there is no room for improvement, but there so that politicians opposed to the present Administration have in many counties played as their strongest card: enforcement of fishery restrictions; oppression of the poor lobster and mackerel fisher-men, who should have the right to put up traps where they please! There is, judging by the where they please! There is, judging by the attacks made on the Government for the enforcement of the Act, an entire change taking place in the condition of affairs. But to come back to scientific opinion, I may refer to Willis Bond, chairman of the Severn Fishery Board, who, in a paper read at a sanitary conference at Worcester on standards of purity for effluents from sewage works, said: "Salmon avoid filthy waters at expense of forsaking birthplace." Many hon, gentlemen have been taught to believe, and I always was so taught, that it was almost impossible to prevent salmon from overcoming any obstruction except an impassable dam to return to the place of their nativity. But on enquiry it is found that salmon will even overcome their strong natural inclination and disposition when the waters are made filthy. Certainly the La Have River has been made filthy. It is not unfair for me to refer to the Morning Chronicle. which informs me on these questions, and which I read with very great delight; when on one sheet I find I am the subject of an attack for attempting to prevent mill rubbish being cast into La Have River, and then I find on another page an account of how an excursion party from Halifax had visited that river, and on disturbing the sawdust were made as sick as if they had attempted to cross the Bay of Fundy or the English Channel. may, therefore, be pardoned for saying that the products of sawdust do tend to make the rivers, which were formerly splendid salmon streams, filthy and to change their character as fishing rivers. One man, and one man only, so far as I am aware, who has been connected in any official capacity with this matter in the Province of Nova Scotia, is on record as saying that the fish are not injured by sawdust. He is the gentleman to whom I alluded on a previous occasion when I spoke, and his name is Mr. Rogers. But I find that gentleman is on record time and again with a contrary opinion. In 1869, page 81 of his report referring to Cumberland County, he says: "Mill rubbish and sawdust have nearly depopulated both rivers and coasts, and but little business is done in fishing." It is to overcome that state of affairs that the department has been recently It is to overcome that state directing its attention to the condition of the fisheries, although there is much still remaining for improvement in connection with keeping the rivers pure and in a better condition than that described in 1869. That gentleman is also on record in 1878; but I will not weary the House with his observations. I refer to them only as showing that any opinion given since he has been attacking the department, and all the officials connected with it, from the head down to the most insignificant member of the staff, should be carefully considered and weighed before any further attention is given to it. We find in 1875 under the good Liberal régime that some hon. gentlemen would like to see renewed, the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), the father of this legislation, stated in answer to a question asked in the House: "It was part of the duty of the officers of the Fisheries Department to enforce the Sawdust Act and the Govern-Mr. TUPPER.

The then inspector for Nova Scotia reported that he had given formal notice of a strict enforcement of the law. It is a matter for regret that, from that day to this, there has not been a more vigilant, determined and conscientious enforcement of the law. Thus we have all the authorities, Wilmot, Venning, Duvar, Fortin, Veith and Whitcher, concurring in their testimony and agreeing with the testimony of hon, gentlemen on both sides of the House, and with the opinions quoted by me, given by experts in other countries. There have been, I say, many enquiries. There was the enquiry by a special commissioner in this country. There was the enquiry under Order in Council in 1871, when a vast amount of information was collected. There was the inquiry in 1877, with a similar result. There was the enquiry and formal report in 1874. There was the enquiry in 1888, in the Senate. desire to refer hon, members to the report of the Fisheries Department, 1890, Appendix No. 5, pages 79, 80, 81, where the methods of disposing of sawdust are pointed out, and where mill-owners who wish to make an effort to save their sawdust, can ascertain the means of doing so. In a prize essay on "Salmon Disease, its Cause and Prevention," submitted at a gathering in connection with the International Fisheries Convention in London, at which the eminent men of all countries in Europe read papers and discussed these different questions, it is stated at page 71: "If the sawdust from a saw-mill, or the chaff from a flour-mill, are permitted to add however little to these suspended particles, the irritation is no longer discomfort but frequently death. I will not further trespass on the good nature of the House, already shown in permitting me to go so uninterruptedly through these various points to which I have been obliged to refer. I will merely state to the House that as far as having formed any obstinate opinion upon this subject, I found the law as it is, I have studied all the opinions upon which I can lay my hands, from the time the duty was imposed on me of carrying out this law to the present, and I would be exceedingly glad to find that there was a solution of this question which would satisfy all parties, the manufacturers, the fishermen and the public. But the result of the authorities to which I have directed attention leads me to the conclusion, as I have more than once stated in regard to this question of the La Have, as well as other rivers, that the only charge that can be laid at the door of this department, in my own time, as well as at the time of my predecessors from the passing of the Act down to the present day, and for the special reasons to which I drew attention, is, that the Act has not been enforced sufficiently rigidly, and mill-owners have been induced to believe that by this influence or that, by their influence as carrying on the richest and largest industry, and their influence with this Government and other Governments, they might hope by agitation and obstruction to have that law changed. I have not seen any evidence on the part of this Parliament, or on the part of any other Parliament in which I have sat, of a disposition to change that law; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that before the policy can be attacked, legislation should be promoted and supported in this House, with the object of repealing that Act and wiping it from the ment to enforce the Sawdust Act and the Govern-Statute-book. I would not have travelled into ment intend to enforce it more rigidly in future." the merits of the question on a motion of this kind, had it not been that hon, gentlemen were good enough to mention in this House, points mentioned for other purposes outside of the House, and which involved a consideration of the general policy of the Government on this question, and the administration of that Act in particular. There is one amendment I would like to make; it is hardly an amendment, it is a verbal alteration. I would ask the hon, gentleman to add after " papers " the words " not already brought down," because we have brought down a great deal of the information asked for in a return last session.

Mr. FLINT. -Mr. Speaker-

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to the amendment.

The hon, gentleman has Mr. SPEAKER. already spoken to the amendment.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Marine has just moved another amendment.

Mr. TUPPER. I have made a suggestion for a verbal alteration on the motion, which I suppose hon, gentlemen will assent to.

Mr. LAURIER. This is an important question, and if it is necessary, to enable the hon, gentleman to speak, I shall move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman can speak with the consent of the House, but, of course, it is contrary to the rules.

Mr. TUPPER. I would be very glad to hear the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FLINT. My first remarks were made on the motion of the hon, member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), and the observations which I propose to make at the present time will be made as a matter of form on the amendment proposed by I do not rise to reply to the observations myself. of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, because, according to my observation, the very able address we have had from that hon, gentleman has been directed in a large degree to phases of this question which are not strictly before the House in connection with the motion or amendment. The motion, backed up by the appeals of the hon, members for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) and Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach), have reference to the La Have River, and the desirability in the interests of the people living upon that river and transacting business in connection with the lumbering of that river, for the exemption of that river from the general operation of the law. The amendment I had the honour to move was in order to have before the House information as to the reasons which actuated the Administration in exempting a large number of rivers in various portions of this Dominion from the operation of this Act. I have not had an opportunity of finding out the bases upon which the petitions were laid before the Government asking for these exemptions, nor the number and names of the various rivers already exempted from the operation of the Act. The address of the Minister, for which I for one desire to thank him, has been very able, very candid and very thorough, but it dealt almost entirely with the Act itself, and was a defence of the propriety of the legislation now upon the Statutebook. With a great deal which the hon, gentleman references to the pleasures of the sportsman, he has said I am disposed to agree. That the Act in itself is well intended, and that it would in the main, if properly enforced, have a beneficial effect as regards the fisheries of the country, I think no one can possibly doubt; but the Minister has travelled into regions of argument which do not at all refer to the circumstances appertaining to the La Have River. For instance, the mass of evidence he has given in regard to English and Scotch rivers can scarcely be said to apply to the La Have River or to any of the rivers in the Dominion of Canada. The pollutions in the English rivers are probably very much more serious than we have to contend with here. They arise from flour mills, from factories and from the various establishments on the banks of these rivers, and are not at all similar in their effects to the pollutions which are alleged to arise from sawdust. In order to discuss this question intelligently, it is necessary to make a large amount of discrimination as to what we are dealing with. In the first place, there is the effect of sawdust on the river, and, in the second place, there are the effects caused by other rubbish. Gentlemen who are at all cognizant with this subject, even in a superficial way, know that the effect of bark in a river is far more serious in its pollution and its effect upon fish life and the habit of fish, than is sawdust. Then, also, there is the question as to the effect of edgings and heavy material which block up the rivers and give the sawdust an opportunity for producing any ill effects it may produce. Allusion was made to the steamer Halifax having grounded in the La Have River.

Mr. TUPPER. Will the hon, gentleman allow I did not elaborate on the sawdust as distinguished from other rubbish, because I feared to trespass too much on the time of the House. gave reference to pages and reports which specially dealt with sawdust as distinguished from rubbish, and which say that one is equally as bad as the other.

Mr. FLINT. I think the Minister was perhaps too apprehensive of the effect of a continuance of his remarks on the House, because, although the subject may not be interesting to a number of the members, yet it is one upon which a great deal of information is needed and desired by a large number of the members of this House. I do not speak as taking sides very strongly in opposition to the views of the hon. Minister, but at the same time it is only fair to point out to the House that there are two sides to the question, and I have been amazed in reading the evidence to find how seriously and how strongly persons who might be called experts differ on this very subject as to the effect of sawdust on fish life. I have not had an opportunity to arrange, as it would be desirable, the evidence I have had in my possession for the last few days; but I will venture to read the opinions of one or two gentlemen who are, presumably, well qualified to speak on this subject, in order to show that even practical men differ on the question. Now, at one of the early stages of this controversy, a gentleman well known in Nova Scotia as a sportsman and fisherman, and also gifted with some literary talent, sent a communication on the subject of the effect of sawdust on the La Have River to the Halifax Herald, a few extracts from which I will read to the House. After some happy speaks of the effect of sawdust upon salmon, saying:

"I think that I can prove conclusively that sawdust is innocuous to trout and salmon. I have fished mercilessly all my life a charming little river not ten miles from Halifax. Some ten years ago a sawmill was erected on this stream, after an interval of fifteen years during which there was no sawmill and consequently no sawdust. Since then there has always existed in the river a plentiful supply of sawdust. There is an excellent natural fishway—a sluice brook from the lake—a kind of fish-way that far surpassed the highly vaunted but always doubtful fish-ladder. Since the erection of this sawmill the numbers of salmon have very largely increased. I attribute this remarkable increase, not to sawdust, but to Mr. Wilmot's occasional tribute of young fry from his hatchery at Bedford."

I think this is one of the points largely overlooked by the gentlemen who have been quoted by the hon. Minister of Marine. It must be remembered that these gentlemen are particularly devoted to the interest of fishing, so that their minds are very much bent in the direction of considering the effects of all sorts of so-called pollutions upon fish; and when men come to have remarkably strong opinions in one direction, they are not likely to be influenced in the contrary direction by any evidence that can be brought. I will call the Minister's attention to the fact that the inspector who preceded the present inspector in that district took strong issue with the gentleman whose report he has quoted. The late inspector of fisheries, Mr. Rogers, no matter what may be his differences with the de-partment and his connection with the controversies with regard to the benefit of fish ladders of various kinds, is a gentleman of great ability and wide observation; and, although he reported to the department originally on the same lines as quoted by the Minister, yet in subsequent years, after careful investigation of the matter, he saw reason to alter his opinions. Then, the present inspector of fisheries, also a gentleman of keen observation, who has devoted considerable attention to this matter, and who threw himself recently into it with a great deal of energy, has come to the same conclusion that the hon. member for Lunenberg (Mr. Kaulbach) and the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills) have reached in regard to the comparative harmlessness of sawdust upon fish life, at any rate in the La Have River, and he joins with these petitioners in favour of exemption. Now, this fact ought to have a great deal of weight with the Minister and with this House, that men who are greatly interested in this matter, who are careful observers, and who have been in the past strenuous agents of the Minister of Marine in enforcing the law, and in educating those about them in the principles of the law, have differed from the gentlemen who have reported on the subject. will, however, continue to read a few extracts from Mr. Silver's letter, showing his opinion on the subject:

"But this marked increase in the number of fish visit-ing this river of late years proves effectually that sawdust does not check their increase or drive them from a stream when other conditions are favourable. Impassable mill dams are the great factors in the destruction of our river fisheries."

This is a point on which Mr. Rogers dwells with a great deal of ability. It may be true that his mind was influenced to a great extent by being the owner of a fish ladder of whose merits he made great claims; but at all events the evidence strongly supports him that a good fish-way would go far to the hon. Minister of Marine, it appeared that these keep the river free from rubbish. That sawdust gentlemen—who have strong political feelings, Mr. Flint.

does become innocuous and harmless to fish to a large degree, Mr. Silver shows:

"Pour in all the sawdust you please, gentlemen in the lumber trade, but do not vex the lordly soul of the salmon by fencing him off from the upper reaches of his river where the spawning beds lie, and without reaching which his aspiring spirits droops and dies, and his race becomes extinct. See that his onward passage is not barred by cruel mill dams, without means of further ascent, and he will grow fat and flourish in spite of sawdust. In further confirmation of my opinion I may state that in the small river referred to one of the best pools for years was immidiately below the saw mill, where I have seen salmon dart out from a bed of sawdust where they have been resting, at my fly. It is true that the sawdust has of late filled up this particular resting spot, and the fish have moved to another part of the pool, but this would have happened had there been a deposit of gravel on the place, or any other substance than sawdust. In further support of my views. I may also mention that in a brook near Windsor, part of the stream is full of sawdust and the upper part is free: that trout are found in larger numbers in the waters that are sometimes of the consistency of pea soup with sawdust than in the clear stream, and that the best pool of all, the mill pond, is lined with sawdust, has sawdust on the sides, sawdust on the bottom, and sawdust floating, and the bellies of the fish are yellow from resting on sawdust. Also, that in the Gaspereaux River, near Benjamin's mill, salmon are caught with the fly in water often thick with sawdust floating. Piscator asserts that the current is 'too strong where a salmon or trout would spawn to allow sawdust to remain on the spawning bed.' Now, I do not agree with caught with the fly in water often thick with sawdust floating. Piscator asserts that the current is 'too strong where a salmon or trout would spawn to allow sawdust to remain on the spawning bed.' Now, I do not agree with this statement. I know spawning beds that could easily be ruined by a deposit of sawdust, but I do not consider this important. For there are always other spawning beds to be found, and even in a short river new places favourable for spawning ground would not be far to seek. In the Port Medway River, near Greenfield, an excellent pool has been much injured by partially filling up with sawdust, but there are scores of other pools on the river where the fish can rest. It is surprising how nice they are about their resting places. I have known a good pool ruined by a freshet depositing gravei in little hollows where they were wont to call a halt on their march. I heartily agree with the views quoted from Charles Hallock. I have never quite forgiven him for publishing a list of salmon many years ago (see 'the Fishing Tourist,' page 30) including 'spring silver salmon,' weak toothed,' 'white,' 'square tailed.' 'spring,' hooked nose' (running in the autumn) 'humpbacked,' 'dog, or spotted salmon;' for each of which so-called variety he adduces a specific Latin name. He has doubtless since much condensed this formidable category. He has earned a reputation that gives weight to his utterances on fish; and Mr. Davison may congratulate himself on having 'smoked out' such a widely recognized authority on his side of the fence. As to the effect on navigation of sawdustat the mouths of streams, I am hardly qualified to give an opinion. But I have stood where the following rivers empty into the sea: The Ingraham, the La Have, the Port Medway, the Liverpool, the Sable, the Jordan, the Ship Harbour stream, and I have failed to observe that navigation has been interfered with in any degree that can attract serious attention. At the mouth of the La Have is navigation has been interfered with in any degree that navigation has been interfered with in any degree that can attract serious attention. At the mouth of the La Have is the only place where I have heard any complaints at all and these struck me as of a very trivial nature. A steam dredge could in a few days remove the accumulations of a long series of years—if they were found to be inconvenient to vessels loading or unloading.

Now, the Minister did not dwell to a very great extent upon the question of inconvenience to navigation, although this has been a strong argument in regard to La Have River. I think any objection made on the ground of the tendency of sawdust to injure navigation, can be completely met on the ground that in this particular case the mill-owners, the Messrs. Davisons referred to, and other millowners on that river, are the parties most interested in preserving the navigation of the river, and that it is not to their interest to ask for an exemption from the general operation of this Act, which would tend to hamper, if not destroy, their business. Now, in former public correspondence with the hon. Minister of Marine, it appeared that these though at the same time they are gentlemen of high personal character, and have shown unusual ability in dealing with this subject-made a statement which I presume the Minister is familiar with; and in order to place it on record as part of the literature on this subject, I will read it to the

"There is another and much more important letter bearing on the navigation of La Have, to which we do not notice any reference in your communication. I refer to that of Capt. Cashon of the tugboat La Have, who from the nature of his business would naturally be watchful of the managements of sandast in the channel. As contracted the managements of sandast in the channel. the movements of sawdust in the channel. As your attention may not have been called to it, we herewith reproduce it:

"C. H. Davison, Bridgewater:

"SIR,—I am in receipt of yours of 20th inst. You wishme to inform you by letter how the depth of water in the channel of the La Have compares now with the time I first took charge of the tugboat; also if I can or cannot now bring as large vessels to the wharves as I could years ago? In reply, I may say that I have been towing on the La Have every season since 1878, and have noticed but little variation in the depth of the channel during that time, and I find no more difficulty in bringing large vessels to, or taking them from the wharves now, than I vessels to, or taking them from the wharves now, than I did when I first took charge of the tugboat. I took the barque Montreal, from the wharf this senson drawing over 17\(\frac{1}{2}\) feet, the greatest draught I have taken down the channel since I have had charge of the tugbout.

"W. H. CASHON.

"As Captain Cashon may well be considered an authority on the subject, and besides is deeply interested in having the channel kept perfectly clear, he being an owner and manager of the tugboat, we think his statement is sufficient to show that the 'prevalent feeling that the harbour was being ruined,' to which Mr. Rogers refers was and is entirely groundless."

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Rogers, of whom the hon. gentleman has spoken, said with reference to the Messrs. Davisons that they admitted that vessels had been stopped by this sawdust of which there were several feet in the Medway River.

Mr. FLINT. I did not refer to the fact that the largest vessel that ever took cargo in the La Have River, a vessel drawing 17 feet 8 inches of water, loaded at Davison's mill, I think, in the year 1888 where, for a great many years previously, vessels of her tonnage were obliged to load partially and then drop down the river to complete their load. Every gentleman familiar with the subject must know that from the nature of things sawdust of itself cannot offer any obstacle to navigation, because it is very light and easily moved. With regard to the steamer grounding and a disagreeable odour being stirred up by her screw on the occasion referred to, this would occur in any harbour or river, because all those at all familiar with that subject are aware that the bottoms of harbours and rivers always do create a very unpleasant odour if they are stirred up by screw steamers or paddle wheel steamers, and the fact that there happened to be a certain quantity of sawdust there had nothing I am going to read a few quoto do with the odour. tations from the report of a former inspector of fisheries, Mr. Rogers, not giving his opinion, because that might be received, under the circumstances, with a certain amount of suspicion, but he quotes from persons of undoubted standing in connection with the subject of fisheries, whose opinions are diametrically opposed to those given in the very able address we have had from the hon. Minister Dr. James S. Miller, overseer of this evening. fisheries, at Canning, King's County, says:

"In regard to the question of sawdust and its effects on fish, in my opinion in cannot be poisonous. If it was, the fish would be found in numbers, dead or dying, floating on the surface of the water in rivers where sawdust in large quantities is allowed to run. But I have never heart of the registration of the registration of the registration of the registration of the registration. of any reliable person having seen such a state of things. I have seen shad on more than one occasion opened in which was found sawdust, but whether the shad swallowed the sawdust in the ordinary way as food, or whether it was swallowed in the death struggles, I am not prepared to say. This, however, I do know, that in no way did these fish appear different from their fellows. They were as fat, as large and as plump as any. Now if the sawdust was poisonous, one would expect to see some effect from it. Sawdust being woody fibre could not become poisonous without decomposition or fermentation. The cool spring waters that form our rivers, as well as the motion of the water, the currents, would prevent anything like fermentwater, the currents, would prevent anything fixe termentation, as the water at any given place is constantly being renewed. I take it, therefore, that decomposition would be about impossible under these circumstances, and I believe the idea of sawdust poisoning fish will have to be abandoned when the question is more fully understood. From what I have seen and read, I am satisfied that sawdust does not kill fish."

Mr. Rogers, further in his report, says:

"The following from a paper by Prof. H. Rasch. of Norway, published in the United States Fishery Reports for 1880, page 517, gives an idea of how the sawdust question is viewed in a country where they have had a much more extended experience than we could have in a country so young: That the rivers on which there is considerable cutting of timber gradually become more and more destitute of salmon is an undeniable fact, but while it is asserted that the sawdust introduced into the river from the saw mills causes the salmon coming from while it is asserted that the sawdust introduced into the river from the saw mills causes the salmon coming from the sea either to forsake its foster stream because of meeting the sawdust to seek another river not polluted, or else when the fish attempt to pass through the areas quite filled with sawdust, then this by fixing itself into the gill opening or between the gills causes its death, yet later appreciages grows to entitle us to the assumption that experience seems to entitle us to the assumption that sawdust neither causes the salmon to forsake its native stream nor produce any great mortality among the as-cending fishes."

He then proceeds to give a large number of statistics with which I will not trouble the House at present. I may say this is a report made to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and probably he may explain on a future occasion why it was not published among the other reports of his Department. Mr. Rogers proceeds to state:

"I beg next to call attention to the state of the river fisheries in many parts of Nova Scotia where there is abundance of sawdust, and also to the river fisheries of Cape Breton where there is substantially no sawdust at all. The Margaree River, in Inverness County, Cape Breton, which has neither mill-dams nor sawdust to interfere with its fisheries, and which used to be one of the most prelific fish producing streams in Nova Scotia, has terfere with its fisheries, and which used to be one of the most prolific fish-producing streams in Nova Scotia, has given a yield of salmon during the ten years, 1870-79, of 67,927 lbs. per annum, and for the eight years from 1880-87 of 36,991 lbs., an average yearly decline of nearly fifty per cent. The catch of alewives on the same river during the former period was 1,431 brls. per annum, and during the latter only 826 brls., a decrease of 505 brls. per annum. Should there have been a few saw-mills on this river, the decline would have, of course, been attributed to sawdust, and demands that the law be enforced would be made. The four counties of Cape Breton, whose rivers are comparatively clear of sawdust, produced of salmon per annum, from 1870-79, 284,792 lbs., and from 1880-87 but 125,292 lbs., a decrease of 159,400 lbs. per annum. The following table shows the catch of salmon in the rivers of Nova Scotia proper where sawdust generally abounds, and Nova Scotia proper where sawdust generally abounds, and also in the rivers of Cape Breton where the opposite is the

"This shows that while there has been an increase during this period of nearly three hundred per cent. in Nova Scotia proper in the catch of salmon, there has been none whatever in the comparatively clean rivers of the Island of Cape Breton. The alewive fishery tells about the same story:

"There is surely no evidence here of injury to the alewive fishery of Nova Scotia from sawdust nor of benefit to that of Cape Breton from its absence."

Mr. TUPPER. I understood the hon gentleman to admit that sawdust is nocuous to the fish.

No; the point I make is that a distinction must be drawn between the sawdust itself and a combination of causes of which sawdust is one. I say that the injury to fish is caused, first, by inadequate fish-ways or fish-passes or by none at all; second, by sawdust, combined with mill rubbish and other refuse which is thrown into the river. The result of my own enquiry is that, given proper fish-ways and with no other mill rubbish, the sawdust is innocuous or nearly so. While I admit that the authorities quoted by the Minister of Marine are very strong, they can only be answered by authorities of equal eminence, who take opposite ground on this subject, and here is the difficulty which laymen, who are desirous to reach a fair conclusion on the matter, have to contend with. I am now endeavouring to impress upon the mind of the Minister-for he and his colleagues must settle the question, unless there is legislation—that the exemption of this river is desirable on the ground that there is no reason why it should be kept under the regulations because of the deposit of sawdust. I quote again from the report:

"The Medway River in Queen's County has been afflicted with sawdust for a full century. The dams were opened for the ascent of fish in the year 1873-74, with the following results, and in spite of sawdust:—

Years.	Salmon.	Trout.	Alewives.	Smelts.

that is of any practical value, it goes to show that the effect of sawdust in the river is rather to increase and improve the facilities for fishing. I do not go so far as that, but I say that there is no proof of any injury being done to the fish by the sawdust itself. There must have been other causes to injure the growth and development of fish life. As was stated the other day by the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), the question of the migration of fish and their reappearance is not yet understood even by the experts. We find every few years, as the Minister is aware, that there is an outcry that for some reason there has been a depletion of certain fish. One year it is the herring, Mr. Fint.

another year it is the salmon, and another year the lobster, and yet, after volumes of complaints have been filed and long enquiries have been made, you find suddenly that the shell fish or other fish are pouring in again. Perhaps after some time we may be able to discover some of the laws which govern the migration of fish from one quarter to another. No doubt, if year after year fish are prevented from returning to their haunts for spawning purposes, they will not come to those grounds for some time, but it is very difficult to find the reasons for the extraordinary changes which take place in the migration of fish. I will read a quotation from one of the reports of the official overseers, written by a very efficient officer under the Minister:

"Overseer John Fitzgerald, of Mill Village. Queen's County, an officer of eighteen years' experience and an efficient and reliable one, writes of the Medway: 'There is, without doubt, an increase in salmon, alewives and trout during the past eight years. This is a matter of notoriety, and I have no hesitation in saying that sawdust is no impediment whatever to the ascent of fish of any kind. In rivers in which other mill rubbish, slats, edgings and bark are deposited, I firmly believe any decrease is due to the obstructions caused by these and the dams and not in the least degree by sawdust. Where sawdust is from any cause deposited on the spawning places and remains in such quantities as to cover up the gravel in which the ova are deposited, it might and probably would cause injury to the natural increase of the fish; but I know of no case of this kind, and can confidently assert that no sawdust was deposited on the spawning ground in the Medway. I have spoken with a score or more of persons, all of whom have spent their lives on the Medway River, some of them old men and all past middle life, and they are unanimous in the opinion that sawdust in the Medway causes no damage to fish of any kind, nor does it affect the spawning grounds in the least.""

I think I will have the same consideration for the House and for other hon. gentlemen who may desire to speak as the Minister of Marine had. might be interesting to me and to some few other gentlemen to continue these quotations, but it is only fair at this late hour that I should simply say that I could extend them for another hour if I thought fit to weary the members who are here. The point I make is this, authorities differ on this question and the facts seem strongly to show that the effect of sawdust itself, if the other rubbish to which I have referred is kept out of the river and the fish-ways are kept in good order, is not such as the gentlemen whose reports have been read to the House by the Minister of Marine would indi-I trust the result of this motion and the return will be to bring the whole question before the House and the country for consideration. If any river in the Dominion is exempted, I think the La Have River should be exempted. I agree with the hon. the Minister that the power of exemption ought to be taken from the Administration, and I think he will acknowledge that I have carefully avoided making this a political issue. It ought not to be make a political issue, but should be settled on its own merits upon an intelligent and intelligible principle. I think the Ministry is placed frequently in an embarrassing position in consequence of the power given to them by the law, and I believe that either the law should be made uniform, permitting of no exemptions at all, or that, if any exemptions are permitted, a complete case has been made out in favour of the La Have River. In the first place the lumber interests are very extensive. Taking those who handle the finished product, if I am not mistaken, at least 2,000 men obtain their livelihood in this business, and a large amount of capital is invested in some of the finest mills of the Dominion of Canada on different portions of this magnificent river. We are informed upon good authority that, at any rate in regard to the majority of these mills, they are so situated that it is absolutely impossible for the owners to undertake to burn this sawdust without endangering their property, endangering the forests, and endangering the villages to an extent entirely disproportionate to the benefit that would accrue from that manner of disposing of the sawdust. They are also satisfied that the inventions which have been referred to by the Minister cannot be operated in those localities. Notwithstanding the strong opinion the Minister has on the general subject, and on which I am inclined to agree with him, I trust that he will consider all these facts, and bear in mind the strong pressure put upon him by his own political friends, the vast interests at stake and the large number of men whose means of livelihood are imperilled, with a view to seeing whether he cannot give the La Have River the benefit of all the arguments that have been offered in regard to nineteen or twenty other rivers in the different portions of the Dominion which are already exempt. I believe that the general argument, with which I am inclined to agree, to a certain extent, in regard to the effect upon fish of sawdust, combined with other mill rubbish and refuse, will be unaffected by the favour being given to the La Have River which we are now asking for, and I think the political argument will disappear entirely. I am sure the Minister will find that both sides of politics, in the region where these mills are situated, would feel that their interests had been consulted, and that the benefits accruing to them would redound to the credit of the Administration, if the Minister took into consideration the strong representations made by these petitioners and would kindly accede to their request.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the very elaborate explanations made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and to the flood of information which he cast upon this very interesting subject. I have been surprised to hear from time to time the insinuations that have been made as to the motives which actuated that hon, gentleman in carrying out the policy of the Government, because I may say that in the county which I have the pleasure to represent, we have some streams upon which are situated a number of mills, manufacturing a very large quantity of lumber, and the owners of these mills, without exception, so far as I am aware, carry out the provisions of the Act and the regulations, save the sawdust, and prevent rubbish of every kind from falling into those streams. It is not necessary for me to say that those people are not of the same stripe of politics; no discrimination is made whatever, no discrimination has ever been thought of upon such a subject. The reason why the millowners in that county accede to the provisions of the statute so readily, is that the County of Shelburne is also one of the largest fishing counties in that province, and the people being interested in fisheries are extremely anxious to see that they

by this mill rubbish. That is almost the universal desire not only of the mill-owners, but of the large body of the people who engage in the deep sea fisheries of the coast-because, as has well been said, the coast fisheries are dependent almost entirely upon the increase of the anadromous fish which frequent these streams. The moment these fish cease to come into our rivers and streams, that moment the coast fisheries will fall off. Now, with regard to the particular river which has been spoken of so frequently in this discussion, I express no opinion, because I am not sufficiently acquainted with that stream. I know the La Have River is one of the best in the province; I know there are a large number of mills upon it, and I know that a large quantity of logs and lumber have been manufactured upon it for a great number of years, and whether that stream should be exempted from the operation of this Act, I leave for those to judge who are better acquainted with it and who know more about its peculiar circumstances than I do. I feel, however, that in case that river is exempted from the operations of this Act, you will find applications coming from mill-owners on many other streams in the Province of Nova Scotia, and they will then urge their claims with a very fair reason. Now, I had almost imagined although I know a great many very diverse opinions have been expressed, I had almost imagined that at the present time, at all events, it had come to be almost universally admitted that the casting of sawdust and other rubbish into the streams was extremely injurious to the fisheries. Mr. Rogers, the late inspector, has been cited here at considerable length, but we must remember that Mr. Rogers has expressed opinions differing considerably at different times. His opinion, when he was inspector of fisheries, differs very much from the opinion he expressed after he ceased to be inspector; and as to his statistics, whenever he attempts to show that the fisheries have increased in these streams in which there is no sawdust, you will find, if you look at some of his many contributions to the press and his reports, that he quotes those very same statistics to show that the fisheries have increased in those streams where there is no sawdust, in consequence of the wonderful fish-ladder he has invented which he seems to think is a panacea for all the ills that affect fish Now, I am also of the opinion that this rubbish and sawdust is very injurious to the navigation of these streams, and of the harbours into which they flow. I am satisfied through my own observation that the sawdust which floats down the river and sinks to the bottom, affects navigation very materially, and that the harbours in many of these places are much shallower than they used to be, and if we pushed our investigations further we would find that in many cases they have become not only shallow, but applications are often made to the Minister of Public Works to send a dredge there to deepen them. Inasmuch as this matter has been very clearly and fully discussed, and after listening to the exhaustive remarks which have been made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I do not think it well for me to weary the House on this subject. I merely rose to express my approbation, not only of the remarks made by the Minister, but of the policy of the Government, and of the manner in which he has carried out that policy.

in fisheries are extremely anxious to see that they Mr. KENNY. It will be within the recollection shall be preserved and increased, and not injured of many hon, gentlemen who are now present that this question was under discussion in the session of 1889. It was then very fully discussed, and on that occasion, as on the present, I am happy to say that the debate did not assume a partisan shape. The question was then discussed, as it has been to-night, very largely on its merits. I came to the conclusion in listening very carefully to all the arguments which were advanced on previous occasions when the sawdust question was under discussion in this House, that sawdust is injurious to fish life. I was surprised to hear from the hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) this evening, that a correspondent of his, a sportman, in the Province of Nova Scotia, writing of a river on which there is a natural fish-way, had actually stated that sawdust had increased the quantity of salmon on that river. Such a statement I must now say—

Mr. FLINT. I do not think he went so far as that. I think he says that salmon had increased, although there was sawdust in the river.

Mr. KENNY. I quite recognize that the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), did not endorse the statement of his correspondent, and I think from the general tenor of his remarks that he admitted himself that the contention which has been made by the Minister of Marine, that sawdust is injurious to fish life, commends itself to his judgment; but I understood from him in quoting the statement of his correspondent, that this gentleman stated to him that the presence of sawdust had increased the quantity of salmon in that river. The hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) must remember that as regards this particular river to which he refers, he himself admits there was a natural fish-way whereby the salmon could pass up to the spawning grounds, and that consequently the spawning grounds were not destroyed by the presence of sawdust, and therefore I can readily understand that salmon still frequent that river. But as the anglers of Nova Scotia have been referred to, I must say that I have discussed the question with gentlemen who fish in our rivers regularly every season, and there is a general consensus of opinion among them that sawdust is injurious to fish life. The hon, member for Yarmouth has expressed the opinion that sawdust per se is not injurious to fish life, but that the injury is done by edgings, bark, and so forth, and that these are the injurious substances. I will agree with the hon, member to this extent, that as regards the obstruction of the navigation, these deposits of bark and edgings are infinitely more injurious than sawdust : but I must repeat, with all due respect to him, that from what I have heard in this House, from the discussions I have had with practical men on the subject, and from information gathered from my reading, I am forced to the conclusion that sawdust is injurious to fish life. We all know, even those among us who are perhaps the least informed on this question, that where the waters of a river are habitually and constantly polluted, the fish, salmon particularly, will avoid those waters, and hence it is that in most of the rivers where sawdust is deposited the salmon fishing has very perceptibly declined. Reference has been made to the Medway River, and to the effect that lumber mills are now operated on the river. I think there is only one mill, but I am not very positive, the one worked by Messrs. Davisons-

Mr. FORBES. It is not operated.
Mr. KENNY.

Mr. KENNY. I was under the impression that they were carrying on operations on the Medway River. I am quite prepared to admit that under certain conditions the depositing of sawdust may be harmless in a river, but the conditions are very I refer to a stream which is a short one, where the mill is actually at the head of the tidal waters, where there is a rapid current, and a certain configuration of the banks of the river, where the banks rise abruptly and where the river is deep; in such a locality the depositing of sawdust where it is immediately carried into the ocean is comparatively harmless. I do not for a moment say that the depositing of sawdust in the La Have has been any obstruction to navigation. Speaking from the information I have gathered from others, because I cannot profess to have any personal knowledge on the subject, I am rather of the opinion that so far the depositing of sawdust has not been very injurious to the navigation of the La Have; I do not think it has been a very serious obstruction to the navigation of that river. I must say, knowing Messrs. Davisons as I do, that they are men of great enterprise and great energy, who have developed the lumbering business of Nova Scotia with perhaps more zeal than any other firm in the province, that I felt very great sympathy with them when they were unable to carry on their business on the La Have The Minister of Marine in the concluding portion of his remarks-I was sorry I had not the pleasure of hearing all his remarks—referred to the enquiries held in 1871, 1877 and 1884 to ascertain the means for removing sawdust. I may say here to the Minister, that in my conversation on the subject with the Messrs. Davisons, those gentlemen intimated to me that they were quite willing to construct any apparatus which would effectually destroy the sawdust, but that they had not been able to ascertain of their own knowledge any plan whereby that could be effectually done on the La Have River. I took the liberty on a former occasion when addressing the hon. Minister on this question, the matter then being one relating to another river in our province, to say that if some officers of the Fisheries Department would visit the rivers in some of the northern states of the union, where the fisheries are now preserved and where the sawdust is not allowed to be deposited in the rivers, and if the plan of the apparatus which prevents the sawdust passing into the rivers from those mills was communicated to our mill-owners throughout the Dominion, because this is not a Nova Scotia question by any means. then they would have a plan which might be adapted to their own lumbering operations.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, gentleman evidently was not in the House when I explained that the officers of my department had already explained how to save the sawdust. It is not necessary to go to the United States to ascertain how this is to be done, because in the various provinces of the Dominion, not only in Ontario, but in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, this is being done; and Messrs. Davisons themselves are saving their sawdust. The plans for this purpose are given in the last annual report of my department; I gave the pages of the report to the House, as I did not wish to weary hon, members with the particulars. As regards saving the sawdust on the La Have River.

I quoted from the report of Lieutenant Gordon that the Messrs. Davisons can do this with their mills as other mills are doing.

Mr. KENNY. I was not aware of it. Certainly it was not the condition of affairs when I last had a conversation with the Messrs. Davisons. Since then Captain Gordon has made a survey of the La Have River; and now that the Messrs. Davisons have the information, I am quite sure, if the apparatus for saving sawdust can be supplied for any moderate sum of money, those gentlemen will take advantage of this information which has been given them by the Department of Marine and Reference has also been made to the invidious power which the Minister now holds of permitting mills on a certain river to deposit their sawdust and prohibit others. I think that last session, or the session before, the Minister intimated to the House his desire to be relieved from that responsibility and a Bill, with that object was introduced into the House; but I must say, that, in discussing this question with the mill-owners in Nova Scotia, they were generally of the opinion that it would be better that the power should remain as it is, vested in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of the day, recognizing, as all fair-minded men must recognize, that in discharging these duties, the Minister is simply actuated by a desire to do what he best can in the public interest. Therefore, while I have very great sympathy with the Messrs. Davisons, and regret exceedingly to see that important industry in the La Have River suspended-because I hope it is only suspended-yet I am quite sure that the Minister will give their case the most careful consideration, as it has now been so prominently placed before him during this debate.

Mr. FORBES. I have already spoken on this subject, but I would like for a few moments to refer to one or two points on which the hon. Minister digressed from the subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman has already spoken. I would draw the attention of the House to this irregular mode of proceeding.

Mr. LAURIER. This has been an irregular discussion all through.

Mr. SPEAKER. It has been regular, except that the hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) was allowed to speak a second time, which he had not the right to do.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think that in a matter of this kind so important to the interests of all, a very thorough and full discussion should be had on the subject. I do not think the House will object to the member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes) being heard, and I should like to offer a remark or two myself.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) has a right to speak on this amendment. He has not already spoken, but the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes) has.

Mr. TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks myself when the others get through.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have listened during this debate with very great attention to the able remarks made by my hon. friends in connection with this subject, as to sawdust polluting the waters of the various streams and injuring the condition of the fish. I their means of living interfered with, more partiwant to have the House clearly impressed with the idea that the persons engaged in the industry of lumbering on the La Have River do not object to a proper disposal of mill rubbish, such as slabs, edgings, and so forth, which I believe are injurious to rivers, and which cause obstructions in some causes almost as great as a mill dam. I feel satisfied that after the remarks which have been made by the various speakers, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that the lumbering industry on the La Have, is very seriously crippled because of the river not being exempted from the operation of this Acts. The Messrs. Davison have a very earnest desire not to do anything that they can help with regard to depositing this sawdust in the river, that is, they wish to avoid its deposit, and much credit is due to them for the manner in which they have promoted the lumbering industry on the La Have from its inception up to the present time. They are willing and desirous to prevent as far as possible the sawdust going into the river, but unfortunately for them, and for others interested in the industry, the construction of their mills prevents them putting in such machinery as would be necessary to destroy or utilize the sawdust. The situation of their mill is in a deep ravine where there is no possibility at all of disposing of the sawdust in such a way that it will not get into the stream. Under these circumstances the position of the Messrs. Davisons should be recognized, and should be carefully weighed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I think that the fishery overseer should be instructed to make such a report as would enable them to be relieved from their disability, and to have their grievance in some way The hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. removed. Flint) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) referred to the condition of the River Medway. That river adjoins the county which I have the honour to represent, and as a portion of its head waters pass through Lunenburg County, I have some knowledge of the habits of the fish in that I can state without hesitation, that small fish, such as the gaspereaux, frequent that river as far as thirty miles from its mouth, and are now caught in quantities quite as great as at any time during the last twenty years. If the gaspereaux, which is not so active a fish as the shad, and far less active than the salmon, can get to the head waters of the Medway, I cannot understand why it is that the La Have River should not be exempted as well as the Medway. The Medway has been exempted, and the sawdust in that river has not offered any obstruction sufficient to cause the overseer of that river to make objections. On the contrary, as was quoted by the hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), the overseer on that river has reported that the sawdust in the Medway was not an obstruction or a grievance. As I have already contended, I cannot understand why it is that some of the rivers are exempted from the operation of this Act, while others are not. The Ottawa River has fifty times as much sawdust deposited in its bed as the La Have ever had, and I certainly cannot conceive why the La Have should not be exempted the same as the Ottawa. The people living on the banks of the La Have River have been for years obtaining a living from lumbering operations there, and I cannot understand why their industry should now be crippled and cularly in this case, when the people along that river have expressed their wish to sacrifice whatever injuries might result to the fishing, if any, by the depositing of sawdust in the river, rather than they should be compelled to sacrifice the lumbering industry by which they make a living. I say that, after careful consideration, they have come to the conclusion that they will undergo all that sacrifice in order that the lumber industry on the La Have River may be preserved to them. Under these circumstances, I again press most strongly that their wishes be complied with.

Amendment (Mr. Flint) agreed to, and main motion as amended agreed to.

FIRST READING.

—(Sir John Thompson.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11-p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 14th July, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS

PRIVATE BILLS—REPORTS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That as the time for the reception of reports from Committees on Private Bills expires to-day, the same be extended to Tuesday, 28th inst., in accordance with the recommendation contained in the report of the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. SOMERVILLE moved:

That all accounts in the Department of the Interior for salaries paid and for extra work done between the year 1884 and 1st July, 1891, inclusive, together with all cheques and other youchers for the payment of the same, be produced forthwith before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. DEWDNEY. When will the hon, gentleman require them?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. As soon as possible.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I will get them as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) to amend "The Indian Act," chap. 43 of the Revised Statutes. He said: This Bill consists of four sections. The first section is in regard to trespasses on reserves, and the offences are made punishable by fine, which has not been the case heretofore. The second section is with regard to surrenders made of Indian lands in British now?

Mr. KAULBACH.

Columbia, North-West Territories or Manitoba. It is provided to make the certificates on oath before the Indian Superintendent at Victoria, or some other officer specially authorized by the Governor in Council. Heretofore the oath had to be taken before a Supreme Court judge, which has proved very inconvenient, as the Indians had sometimes to travel two hundred or three hundred miles. Section 3 provides that the judge shall have the power to order payment of costs by a certain party to a suit. This is not the case at present, and each party has to pay his own costs. The last section has reference to shooting privileges on reserves. In several of the provinces, especially in Ontario, shooting clubs lease portions of reserves for shooting purposes, and this gives them protection against poaching.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SCRIVER. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to make a statement to the House. It will be remembered that in the debate on the prohibition question which took place some days ago, I made some quotations purporting to be from a speech which the Minister of Finance delivered some years ago on the prohibition question. I have discovered since, that in making those quotations I was in error, that the quotations really were from the speech of the late member from Brome (Mr. Fisher) instead of from the speech made on the occasion by the Minister of Finance. I may say that in making the quotations which I did, I made them, not as I ought to have done from the official report of the Debates, but from a pamphlet purporting to give a full report of the speeches made on that occasion and of the proceedings. In that pamphlet the name of Mr. Fisher unfortunately appeared in very small type, and I did not notice, as I ought to have done, where the speech of the Minister of Finance ended and where Mr. Fisher's speech commenced. I was thus led into the error into which I fell. I may say that so soon as my attention was called to the fact by the chief of the reporting staff, I spoke to the Minister of Finance on the subject and expressed my willingness to make such acknowledgment and statement as might seem to be called for under the circumstances; but at his suggestion, I delayed doing so until he should have an opportunity of examining the report himself and to say whether he considered the error of sufficient importance to demand this acknowledgment and statement on my part. hon, gentleman intimated to me this morning that he thought it well under the circumstances, as the quotations were not his utterances at all, but were those of Mr. Fisher, the late member for Brome, I should make the statement which I have made. trust it will be considered sufficient by the hon. gentleman and by those of my fellow members who have been unwittingly led into error by the mistake which I made, and it only remains for me to express my sincere regret that I committed the mistake I did commit.

Mr. FOSTER. The facts are exactly as stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Scriver). I should not have known that the quotation—

Mr. SPEAKER. Does my hon, friend think that there should be a discussion on this matter now?

Mr. FOSTER. One moment, Mr. Speaker. should not have known that the quotations were not my own, if it had not been that my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Seriver) drew my attention to the matter.

WINNIPEG AND HUDSON'S BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Dewdney for second reading of Bill (No. 119) respecting a certain agreement therein mentioned with the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company.

Motion agreed to: Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. I am not aware that the House has been informed as to what would be the precise location of this railway, nor the length of the portion of it which the hon, gentleman now proposes to subsidize from the city of Winnipeg to the River Saskatchewan. Would the hon. gentleman give us information as to that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have mislaid my memorandum, but my recollection is that I gave the distance from Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan as about 300 miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did the hon, gentleman obtain the information as to the amounts of stock which were held by the various persons in the list which he supplied to me? I have returned him the list in order that that information might be obtained, and my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) also made the request.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I find I am not able to get the necessary information asked for by the hon. gentleman, but I have this information for him which I will pass over in a few moments. It shows the names of the shareholders; the total shares issued (paid-up), 10,500; total amount realized for same, $285,793; the names of the directors of the company, and it also gives the following memorandum:

"The Special Act authorizes the company to issue paid-up shares 'at such prices and upon such conditions as the company by by-law determines.' All shares have been issued in accordance with the terms of the 'Special Act' as 'paid-up shares,' and consequently there is no liability to the company by any shareholder. As most of the share-holders are transferees of the original purchasers; the shares having frequently changed hands, the company has no knowledge of the amount the present shareholders have paid for their holdings. It would be impossible to get that."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was not asked for. What we want to get is the amount of stock held by each individual, the amount subscribed and the amount paid thereon. The hon. gentleman will see that that is a necessary piece of information in order to judge of the strength of the company, and the chance of its being able to carry to a successful issue the enterprise it has undertaken.

Mr. DEWDNEY. To do that you have to go back to the original shareholders, and they are The stock has changed not now in existence. hands, and it is impossible to get any information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have they furnished no list at all? There are good names, other private company to which such a right has and bad names, and indifferent names in that list, and the value of the holdings depend a good deal on who holds the stock and what amount has been It was stated by my hon, friend behind me, that since it was alleged-I know nothing about that matter myself-that certain members of this House were interested in this company, and I see that a number of shares are held in trust, we ought to know distinctly and exactly what members of the House are interested in promoting this railway. There is no doubt about that; and such statement having been made by my hon. friend, it is absolutely necessary that full information should be given as to who are the holders of the stock.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I had heard a rumour of that nature, and that such an accusation had been made. I hold in my hand a letter from the president of the company in regard to that, and which letter I will now read :

"SIR,—Referring to Hansard of the 9th inst., Mr. M. C. Cameron, M. P., is reported to have said, relative to the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway, as follows:—' As there are many stories floating about as to how the stock of this company was disposed of " 'I have since learned that the stories he referred to were, that I had distributed and the stories he referred to members of Parliament. that the stories he referred to were, that I had distributed paid-up stock of the company to members of Parliament, and others, without any consideration, other than the promise of support in obtaining legislation. In answer to the above permit me to say: 1st. No stock of the company has ever been given or promised to any person, member of Parliament or otherwise, directly or indirectly, for the purposes alleged. 2nd. No stock has ever been issued or disposed of otherwise than for cash or as part of the consideration of a contract made by the company, as authorized by the Act of incorporation and amendments thereto. 3rd. Only two members of Parliament are stockholders in the company; both these gentlemen purchased stock hona fide—one in the year 1882, and the other in the year 1885."

I think this disposes of that point.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The statement was made to me some time ago that this company had the power by Act of Parliament to issue paid-up stock. It was further stated to me that a portion of the stock had been disposed of without a money consideration—in fact, that it had been disposed of to persons having influence with a view to securing that influence to promote the railway. I do not know whether, as a matter of fact, that is true I am bound to say that the president of the company stated to me, not long ago, that he was prepared to make an affidavit that no portion of the stock had been disposed of in that way; and on examining the list of shareholders, I found the names of only two members of Parliament as holding stock in the company. But it must be remembered that this company has peculiar and extraordinary privileges preserved to it-privileges which I think are enjoyed by no other private company that ever obtained incorporation from the Canadian Parliament. In 1880, a company was incorporated called the Nelson Valley Railway and Navigation Company. granted the right to bond the road to the extent of $25,000 a mile, and the right to issue paid-up stock for various purposes-to pay the engineer, to pay the contractor, to pay for the right of way, to pay for material, plant and rolling stock, and also—and this is a point to which I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Institute for the story of Institute for the sto ter of Justice-for the services of such persons as may be employed by the directors in the furtherance of the undertaking. Now, I do not know any been reserved. Under this provision of the law the board of directors could issue paid-up stock and hand it over right and left to members of Parliament and others as payment for services rendered to the company for the furtherance of the undertaking in any way the directors might see fit. 1880, another Act was passed incorporating the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company. It also granted to that company power to bond the railway to the extent of $25,000 a mile; but the right to issue paid-up stock was not granted to that company. But in the year 1883, by Act of the Parliament of Canada, these two companies were amalgamated and formed into one company, called the Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company; and the objectionable clause, taken from the old statute incorporating the Nelson Valley Railway and Navigation Company, formed part of the Act amalgamating the two companies. So that the amalgamated company was granted the right in 1883 to issue paid-up stock for the purpose of furthering the operations of the company. The third section of the amalgamating Act provides that all the rights which were reserved to the old companies should be preserved to the united companies. That Act was subsequently amended by an Act passed on the 19th of April, 1884, entitled "An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company;" and even in that Act the rights which were reserved to the old Nelson Valley Railway and Navigation Company were continued in these words:

"All the rights, privileges and franchises of the Nelson Valley Railway and Navigation Company shall vest in the company incorporated in 1883 by the Act of amalgamation and amended in 1884 by the Act of that year."

So that, up to that time, if I read the statute aright, the right to issue paid-up stock for the purpose of furthering the interests of the company, was still reserved to the Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company. In 1886 the Act was again amended, and the rights that were reserved to the Nelson Valley Railway and Navigation Company were still reserved by section 5 and by section 1 of that Act. That is substantially the statute under which this company operates. It was amended again in 1887, when the name was again changed, and it was thereafter known, as it is known now, as the Hudson's Bay Railway Company. But the hon, gentleman will find that, through all these Acts there is still reserved to the company the right to issue paid-up stock for the purpose of furthering the interests of the company. Whether the directors have excreised that right or not, I do not know beyond what I have been told; but I think it is an exceedingly objectionable right to vest in any railway company. Under that right a company might issue paid-up stock on which not a farthing has been paid, and might utilize that privilege for the purpose of doing things which ought not to be done by any corporation, and which no corporation ought to have the power to do. I think, therefore, it is important that we should have the information which the hon, member for South Oxford has called for. So far we have practically nothing except a list of the stockhold-We do not know to what date that list is brought down--whether to the meeting of this Parliament or to this day. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows that; at all events, we do not market, and upon whose bonds money has been Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

know it. I do not know that, without the information, it would be advisable at present to discuss the merits of the scheme itself, as no doubt amendments will be made on the third reading of the Bill. I may say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I am entirely opposed to the scheme. I will not call it a wild-cat scheme. I have no right, so far as my personal knowledge goes, to say anything of the sort : but, upon a somewhat cursory examination of the reports which have been placed at our disposal, it does look to me to be, if not a wild-cat scheme, at all events a scheme which the Parliament of Canada ought not to support or countenance. If this were a purely colonization railway, and if it could be shown that it would be in the general interest of the people of the North-West Territories, that it would open up fertile and valuable lands, that it would give to a large settlement access to markets in Canada and elsewhere, the objections to the grant would not be so obvious. But it must be remembered that this is the third railway running almost parallel to the others that we have bonussed. There is one from Calgary and one from Regina, and now we are asked to bonus a road which is called a colonization railway, but we know very well that it is more than that. hon, member for Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald) and the hon, member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) are aware of that. They know that perfectly well, and yet they ask us to bonus a railway from Winnipeg to Hudson's Bay, when we have not the necessary information to justify us in doing it. The only information we have so far shows the utter inadvisability of bonusing such a road. The information that we have from those who were sent to report on the possible navigation of the Hudson's Straits, shows that those Straits are not navigable at any rate for more than two months in the year, and yet we are asked to vote $20,000 a year for twenty years in order to give this supposed outlet for the productions of the North-West. I think that every hon. member will find the objections which are made to that grant very difficult to be got over. It is estimated that that railway will cost about $15,000,-000. It has got a grant of $1,500,000 from Manitoba, and they ask $3,000,000 from this Government, that is, taking the amount per annum capitalized. That will be a very small proportion of the $15,000,000 which, it is said, the road will cost, and they must raise the balance of the money in some way. The only way in which that can be done is by bonding the road. They will issue bonds on the road to the extent of $25,000 a mile. That money cannot be obtained in Canada. The bonds will have to be floated in the English money market, and, unless we are satisfied that the undertaking is a bonû fide undertaking, entered into with the determination of completing it to the end, and unless we are satisfied that the outlet on Hudson's Bay will be available for the earriage of the trade of the country, we are simply misleading the English investors. There has been a good deal of that kind of action on the English money market, as the hon. gentleman knows very well. There was that undertaking in reference to that Three Rivers Company which did not reflect any credit upon this country, and we know that nearly the whole of the money invested in that was lost. We know of many other companies that have been pushed in the English money obtained simply because the Dominion Government had made grants to them, and necessarily the English investors came to the conclusion that the particular undertaking was reasonably good or the Dominion Government would not have come to the conclusion to vote them a subsidy. money without any reasonable certainty that the undertaking will be completed, or will be successful when it is completed. Those gentlemen who made a survey of the Hudson's Straits have said that there is no reasonable evidence that these Straits are open for more than two months of the year. The evidence which was submitted by my hon. friend from Sincoe two weeks ago is clear. The reports which were published by the gentlemen who had charge of that undertaking in 1885, make that point quite clear. If the hon. gentlemen will refer to page 38 of the report of 1886, they will find very conclusive evidence on that subject, but the whole evidence contained in the reports show that it is only in part of the month of July, and perhaps the whole of August and part of the month of September, that these Straits are open for navigation. During the rest of the year they are utterly unfit for navigation, and the principal difficulty is that the time when they are open for navigation is so uncertain. Sometimes they are open early in July, and sometimes late in July. Sometimes they close in September, and sometimes in October. being the case, it leaves it uncertain when the Straits are open for navigation, and therefore uncertain for those who are buying grain and cattle when they can with reasonable certainty make their shipments. If that is the case, it is impossible for the farmers of the North-West to derive any benefit from a road of this kind, because the crop of this year could not, with certainty, be shipped through the Hudson's Straits until the next year. What advantage will that be to the farmer? purchaser of the crop is not going to keep it over on the chance of selling it the succeeding year. is not necessary for me to read the reports which have been made, but if hon. gentlemen will read them they will see that for not more than two months in the year can it be said with certainty that the Hudson's Straits are open for navigation. that case, is it not the height of folly to vote an enormous amount of money for the construction of a railway there, and, beyond that, to hold out to English investors the inducement to place their money in it because it is subsidized by the Canadian Government? I had hoped that the hon. gentlemen opposite would have considered the matter with greater deliberation. If this receives the sanction of Parliament I fear that a loss will follow to our securities, and that we will have the English investors blaming the Canadian people, so that our credit will be seriously injured thereby.

Mr. CASEY. My hon, friend has evidently approached the question of a subsidy to the Hudson's Bay Railway with a prejudice already formed against it. He has admitted that in the course of his remarks. He has heard from somebody that corrupt means have been used to promote the interests of this company, and that the powers conferred on the Hudson's Bay Railway Company have been used to bribe members of Parliament as well as others. Of course he does not pledge his personal to assist has no more necessary connection veracity to such a statement, and I need scarcely say that he can have no personal knowledge of any such thing, and can have no personal ground even to suspect that anything of the kind has taken place. He has simply made the statement on the basis of a vague rumour that has reached his ears. I think that Parliament ought not to vote this He has repeated and emphasized the words "members of Parliament" as if he still retained that suspicion as strongly as ever, notwithstanding the statement that has been read to this House by the Minister of the Interior. Now, I am one of the two members of this House who have shares in this railway, the other gentleman being the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan). The fact that we hold such shares is no secret, as our names are on the list which is on the Table of the House. Being a shareholder, therefore, I beg leave to state that I did not get my shares for nothing, and that I have done nothing for the promotion of the company except to watch with the greatest interest the company's chances of success as a commercial undertaking. I have also taken pains to know what has been written and discovered in connection with the practicability of this route, and that is the extent to which I have promoted this Bill. But on the present occasion, when I think the company has been rather unjustly attacked on the basis of a vague rumour, the injustice of saying things as if they were proven, things for which not the slightest tittle of proof exists, of which not the slightest suspicion exists, except in the mind of my hon. friend who has just spoken, compels me to speak in its favour. It is not often that a member on this side of the House has to speak in support of a measure promoted by the Government, but on this occasion I think it is inevitable that those of us who have given the matter our most earnest consideration, should do so. What is proposed to be done for the Hudson's Bay Railway Company is not a new thing; it is not a startling thing; it is exactly what has been done for two or three railroads in the North-West in regard to which no trouble has been made in this House. When we passed through this House a similar grant to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, to the Regina and Long Lake Railway, nobody that I am aware of called for the names of the shareholders, or made any inquisition into the private affairs of the shareholders of those companies before granting them what was asked. I am quite unable to find out from any quarter what reason there is for feeling greater suspicion, for trying to institute a more severe inquisition into the affairs of the individuals composing this company, than in respect of any other company. that the House has a right to satisfy itself of the bond fides of the company beyond all doubt, but that is all, I think, that the House has a right to Now, I want to refer to the question demand. that has been raised as to the navigation of We have spent already a good deal Hudson's Bay. of time in discussing that, and it may be necessary for the credit of the company to spend some more time at a later stage; but I will begin by saying that the question of the navi-gation of Hudson's Bay has no more to do with the propriety of passing the grant now before the House, than the question of the navigability of Behring's Straits or the sea around the North Pole. The piece of road which we are now asked with a road to Hudson's Bay than the Calgary Edmonton, or the Regina and We are asked at the present time simply to assist a colonization railway, to take advantage of the land grant which this House has already seen fit to give to it, in fact to realize upon its assets for the purpose of going on with the That is what we are asked to do, and this House has no concern with the question of whether that road will ever go any further, or whether it will go to Hudson's Bay or not, or whether if it goes to Hudson's Bay, the Straits will be found navi-The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) says that unless we know that the railway will be completed to Hudson's Bayand that it will be successful, we are doing wrong to the English investors by bonusing the road. I do not see how he makes out the connection. If this road does proceed towards Hudson's Bay they will have a right of bonding that part of the road, of course, as he has pointed out, but what connection there can be between the bonus given to this part of the road to the Saskatchewan now, and the bonding problematic extension of that to Hudson's Bay, I cannot see for the life of me, and I do not believe the hon. gentleman can point it out. The piece of road which we are now asked to assist may be all right, may be a commercial success, may be the greatest possible boon to that part of the country, while its extension from that point to Hudson's Bay might prove to be a total failure, though I propose to point out later on that in all probability it would not be so. But even supposing it were a total failure, I do not see how the faith of the Government is involved, or injured in any way, by bonusing this first part of the road which we know passes through a habitable and rich country, which only needs a railway to be prosperous and well peopled as well as rich. what is it we are asked to do for that part of the road? I have not the map before me, but I understand that, in round numbers, 40 miles of the road are already built out of Winnipeg in a northern direction, and it is estimated that the distance is about 260 miles from that point to the Saskatchewan, at the point where it is intended to touch it, making about 300 miles in all. But I understand it is only from the end of the existing track to the Saskatchewan that this bonus is to apply. what are we asked to do for it over that extent? I have in my hands the agreement entered into between the Government and the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, and I am informed that the proposed agreement with the Hudson's Bay Railway will be similar in all respects to this. I am aware that most of the members of this House who have discussed the question do not know what that agreement is, I propose to read some of the essential points:

"1. Whereas the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company have become entitled to a land grant from the Dominion Government, under the Act 53 Victoria, chap. 4, to the extent of 6,400 acres per mile of their railway between the town of Calgary and a point on the North Saskatchewan at or near Edmonton; and also by virtue of the said Act have become entitled to a land grant from the Dominion Government of 6,400 acres per mile of their railway from the town of Calgary to the International boundary between Canada and the United States of America.

"2. And whereas by an Act of the Parliament of Canada intituled: 'An Act respecting a certain agreement therein mentioned with the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company,' assented to on the 16th May, 1890, it was enacted that the Governor in Council may enter into a contract with such company for the transport of men, materials, supplies, and mails, for twenty years, on the company's line between Calgary and a point on the North Saskatchewan at or near Edmonton, and may pay for such service during the said term, eighty thousand dollars per annum, to be paid annually, on the construction of the railway from a point within the town of Calgary to a point on the North Saskatchewan at or near Edmonton, such payment to be computed from the date of the completion of the railway to such last-mentioned point."

Now, here is a proviso which obviates the difficulty as to the solidity of the railway company. If the railway company here spoken of were not able to build the road to the Saskatchewan, they would have got nothing, and if the Hudson's Bay Railway Company are not able to finish this colonization section of the road, then they will not get this $80,000 a year; and they will not get it, in any case, until after they have completed the road to the Saskatchewan. I will proceed to quote further from the agreement:

And whereas, in view of the fact that the speedy construction of a line of railway direct from Calgary to the North Saskatchewan is a matter of very great importance in the interests of the public and of the Government, both as affecting the maintenance of good order in the northern district of the North-West and the development of the rising centres of those districts, including Edmonton, and of the country along the route to be traversed Therefore, the Government, under the authority of the said Act, has agreed to enter into this contract with the company. That the company hereby bind and oblige themselves to complete 100 miles of their railway northerly from the town of Calgary by the 1st day of November, 1891, and complete the said railway to a point on the North Saskatchewan at or near Edmonton within two years thereafter, and carry by their regular trains for the Government for a period of twenty years all mail supplies and material as before recited "In consideration thereof, and with a view to assisting the company to make the financial arrangements necessary for the conmake the financial arrangements necessary for the construction of the said railway, the Government hereby binds and obliges itself to pay each year to the said company the sum of $80,000. Such payments to be computed from the date of the completion of the said railway as before recited and be made in half-yearly payments, &c." Then, the next clause affects the rates of freight on the road, and is not material. And finally, at the end of the bargain, by way of indemnity to the Government, in case the amount earned by the company for such services should not amount to the sum paid by the Government:

"The Government, as the land grant of the company is earned, from time to time, shall retain one-third of the land grant so earned, which shall be held by the Government as a first charge or lien, securing the repayment of ment and the company, under this agreement, shall be made every year, and interest, if any, shall be computed at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on such annual deficit."

Then there are other provisions in detail for carrying out this basis of agreement. Now, what does this amount to? It amounts simply to a loan by the Government of $80,000 a year to the company, for which the Government take as security one-third of the land grant already voted by this House to the company, and which the company have the right to claim as fastas they build the road. That land is now hardly the property of the company, but it will become so as fast as they are able to build the road. In order to enable the company to make the financial arrangements to build the road and open up the country, the Government now propose to lend to the Hudson's Bay Railway Company, as they have lent to the Calgary and Edmonton, and the Regina and Long Lake Railway Companies, this annuity of $80,000 a year for twenty years, less any services which the railway company may perform for the Government, the Government being secured all the time by the retention of 2,133 acres of land per mile of the railway. is a very simple calculation for any one to make, to show that this quantity of land retained will amount to over 550,000 acres, on which the Government will have a mortgage for this $80,000 a year annuity for twenty years. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), estimated the present value of the annuity, the other day, as being in the neighbourhood of $1,100,-000, and his estimate is probably correct. we consider that this road will have mails to carry for the Government, supplies to carry for the Mounted Police, and a great deal of other work to do for the Government during the twenty years, it is only reasonable to assume that this 550,000 acres of land, at the end of twenty years, will be worth very much more than what the Government advanced to the company, and be ample security for the said advance. the rate at which land is selling, within any reasonable distance of the Canadian Pacific Railway, equal to this, and you will see, Sir, that my estimate is by no means overdrawn, and that the amount of land retained by the Government is amply sufficient to secure them for the advance they propose to This is not a bonus, in the ordinary sense, which is offered to the Hudson's Bay Company. It is an advance secured upon landed property, which is the best class of security the Government could My hon. friend beside me says it is a dona-The terms of the agreement show it is not. He knows very well that good land in Manitoba near a railway is very good security for an advance of money, and the land through which this railway will pass is of such a nature that it will be made valuable by the railway passing through it. some extracts from Government reports proving this, on which I cannot lay my hands at present, but I will refer to them at a later period. Summarizing, however, I may say that the road, at its start, passes through a country settled to a very large extent in anticipation that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway would have gone that way, as arranged by my hon. friend in front (Mr. Mackenzie). After that, it strikes a good open prairie country, graduating off to a district containing a very considerable quantity of timber, some of it in scattered bluffs and some in wide belts along the shores of the lakes and rivers. I distinctly remember Professor Macoun and others stating in these reports that there was spruce timber there of four feet in diameter, but I shall try to lay the extract from the report before the House on a later occasion. This district, not being sub-divided yet into townships, we are deprived of the assistance of the surveyor's field notes in showing the quality of the land. To resume what I have said, the country through which this railway passes is valuable, according to the reports of all the explorers. The country is not asked to advance any money until the road is completed, and immediately the road is completed the land served by it will Five hundred and fifty thoubecome valuable. sand acres of that land, made valuable by the construction of a railway, are then to be pledged to the Government for an annuity of $80,000 a year for twenty years, out of which the road will earn

The road is, as far as we have anything to do with it, a colonization road. We are not concerned with whether it goes on to the Mackenzie River or to the Hudson's Bay after it passes the Saskatchewan. I believe it would be a good thing to take it to Hudson's Bay, as the season of navigation there, according to Commander Gordon's report, is at least double what my hon. friend opposite me has said it could only be; but that discussion has nothing to do necessarily with what we are speaking of now. Another objection has been raised by my hon. friend. I was surprised that he should have raised it. He said two other roads parallel to this had been already similarly bonussed. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman's objection. surprised that a gentleman so well acquainted with the North-West, as the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) is, and so well acquainted also with the districts through which these railways we have bonussed runs, should make the objection. I know he is very well acquainted with the country along Long Lake, and knows how much that railway has benefited that district, because he has been an investor there, but when he finds fault with bonusing this road because it runs par-allel to these others, I am astonished. What is the distance between them? I cannot give it off-hand, but I know it is a good many hundreds of miles between the proposed route of the Hudson's Bay Railway and the route of the most easterly of the others, the Regina and Long Lake Railway, and to oppose this measure because the road will be parallel to another railway several hundred miles away, running through a totally different country, seems to me absurd. My hon. friend forgets that this road taps the Saskatchewan just at the foot of its navigation. He forgets that the Saskatchewan valley is the coming promised land of the North-West, and that there are many millions of acres there only waiting facilities to be settled. Heforgets that a thousand miles of navigation extend westward from the point this railway will touch, and that at the same point there is a water power quite equal, if not superior, to the Chaudière Falls in this city. He forgets that at that point there is every probability of building up a city as large and prosperous as the one in which we are holding our meeting to-day, based on an equally solid foundation, the cutting of timber and the grinding of grain for Europe, because the Saskatchewan is not merely a grain-growing country, but it taps the pine and spruce forests of the Rocky Mountains, and this railway will pass through a well-wooded country. With this water power, with the supplies of timber and grain to be brought by water to this point on the Saskatchewan, with railway connection from that point to Winnipeg, there is every reason to expect that a very large and prosperous city and surrounding settlement will be established at that point. My hon, friend has given notice of amendment.

money until the road is completed, and immediately the road is completed the land served by it will become valuable. Five hundred and fifty thousand acres of that land, made valuable by the construction of a railway, are then to be pledged to the Government for an annuity of $80,000 a year for twenty years, out of which the road will earn a great deal by doing business for the Government.

Mr. CASEY. My hon. friend says he has not, but he said that no doubt amendments would be moved on the third reading, and that, therefore, there would be no object in going into the matter fully just now. I call that giving notice of amendments will be moved, I will reserve what I have to say for the present about the navigation of Hudson's Bay, because I think I have taken as much time of the House as the House is willing to grant at one time, reserving my right to speak on the third reading or again in this committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have been rather surprised at the speech of the hon, member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). I do not know whether, in his address to the House this afternoon, he was speaking for West Elgin or for George E. Casey. appears to me that if I were an elector of West Elgin and my hon. friend appealed to me for a renewal of confidence, I would hesitate to give it When we come to discuss questions of this kind, we should discuss them on their merits, and not allow personal interests to induce us to lead the course which should be followed in a matter of this kind. In the first place, I wish to refer to some remarks that have been made with regard to the shareholders. I have read over the list of shareholders; I am happy to say, with regard to many of them, that they may be very decent, respectable men. I contend, however, in the first place, that before we grant this money, if we should decide to grant it, we should have a detailed statement of the financial status of the company. company has been in existence some years, and I contend we should know the entire amount of their receipts and expenditures and their present con-They are asking now, by a clause in this Act, for the privilege of issuing paid-up stock. would like to know to what extent promises of paidup stock have been made and the amount they intend to issue, and I think it is wrong that we should give power to enable the company to carry out a pernicious issue of paid-up stock to those to whom they wish to grant it. My hon. friend has made some remarks with regard to Hudson's Bay. I am sorry he was not in his place in this House when we had an extended discus-sion. the other day, on this point. I think it was proved most conclusively to this House by gentlemen who have studied the question, that the navigation of the Hudson's Bay is not to be depended upon for a longer period than three months in the year. I fancy it is not disputed that navigation is open for that length of time; but those three months are not very clearly defined. Sometimes, we are told, it is not closed until October, sometimes till November, and sometimes earlier than October. In my humble opinion, we are not in a position financially as a country to grant this money, without crippling ourselves or drawing upon the resources of the people to too great an extent. At any rate, until there is a much larger development of the North-West, and until an additional outlet for the produce of that country becomes an absolute necessity, not a dollar of this money ought to be granted. We have already spent in the development of the North-West not a dollar short of a hundred millions. When you take every item of expenditure upon that country-for Indians, for the Mounted Police, for the Government of the North-West, for land expenses and other expenses—and put all these items together, including the grant made to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I contend that this Dominion has contributed fully a hundred millions of money towards the development of that it their support. Now, I hold that it is time we country. In the face of that, and in the face of the enormous amount of land which is information we should have with regard to the Mr. CASEY.

now surveyed and open for settlement-land which has been declared to be of good quality and the most desirable within the limits of this Dominionamounting to hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of acres, and no settler asking on what terms it can be occupied, I say it is folly and worse than folly to ask this House to pledge itself to a grant of $1,600,000 towards the construction of a railway to Hudson's Bay. When we entered into the work of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway, what was the argument by which the claims of that undertaking were presented to this House and the country? It was that this would be the great iron band that would bind together the several provinces of this Dominion, that it would promote increased trade between these provinces, that the wheat of the North-West would come down to the harbours of Montreal and Quebec, and Toronto, and bring about such a development of trade as would tend to enrich the towns and cities of the older provinces. Even supposing the Hudson's Bay should be open for a longer period than three months, and we could send by that route a large quantity of the produce of the North-West to the markets of Liverpool, I ask, would we not be doing an injustice to the older provinces if we took away from their cities, and ports, and shipping companies, which are now anxious to get trade, much of the advantage which they expected to derive from their expenditure of money on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the North-West generally, and provided means for sending the surplus produce in the other direction, where we will never see it, and where we will never reap a dollar of advantage from it? In that view of the case it is imprudent to grant this money, even if the scheme were a feasible one. But I contend that we are bound as sensible men to accept the arguments which have been presented to this House, and which have not been confuted, showing that the Hudson's Bay is not a desirable route by which to export the produce of the North-West. In the present era of rapid transit, it is folly to think that any man will be found in any part of the world ready to invest money in produce that will have to lie at one port frozen up for seven or eight or nine months in the year, from which not a bushel could be got even to keep off starvation. I do not think either that men will be disposed to ship produce by that route. But when we come to consider the present financial condition of this country, the amount of our annual outlay, the enormous expenses we have incurred, and the demands of other sections of the country which have been rapping at the doors of Parliament for relief on the ground that since the inauguration of the system of subsidizing railways they have a right to be reimbursed for the money which they have granted to their own railways without receiving a dollar of aid from the Parliament of Canada,—I say that to ask that those people should be subject to a further drain in order to grant $80,000 a year for twenty years to a railway to Hudson's Bay, is a monstrous proposition; and I am satisfied that the representatives of the people in this House who will sanction this measure will not receive the thanks of their constituents when they go back to them and try to explain to them the grounds upon which they give route of this railway, the quality of the lands, and the prospects of the company as to getting the means of constructing the railway; but we are asked to grant this money for the purpose of enabling these people to unload their bonds on the London markets and induce people there to embark in this undertaking. I am exceedingly sorry that there is a single member to be found on this side of the House disposed to sanction this grant. I feel humiliated, and I cannot help expressing my humiliation, that we have one man who is willing to support it. We have had in the past men interested in railroads, advocating the granting of charters to them, and supporting donations for them taken from the Dominion treasury; but I had earnestly hoped that the day of such things had passed away, and I am sorry that we have an exhibition of the same thing on this occasion. think this House should set its foot on the efforts of any member, I care not which side of the House he belongs to, either to promote his own interests or the interests of the company in which he is interested as a shareholder, by using his voice or vote for that purpose. I earnestly hope that we shall soon reach the day when the people of this country will frown most severely on members of Parliament guilty of conduct of that kind. I have used harsh language in speaking on this subject, perhaps too harsh; but I felt humiliated that we had a man on this side of the House who would dare to get up and advocate such a scheme in this House to-day—one that has been pronounced, and justly pronounced, a wild-cat scheme—a scheme of which we know one end, but not the other. I have nothing to say against the men who are associated in this scheme; I dare say they are trying to make a speculation out of it, both in their own interest and in the interest of the country; but I do hope that the day is not far distant when we shall not see repetitions of such scenes as we have had here this afternoon.

Mr. CASEY. I cannot very well sit still under my hon. friend's imputation, that I am working for G. E. Casey rather than for the county I represent. My hon, friend has amplified that by the statement that he feels humiliated that such a person as I should exist on this side of the House, and he thinks it is abominable that any member of this House should use his voice, or his vote, or his influence, in order to advance the interests of a company in which he is interested. I will not take refuge behind the law of Parliament that any member of a joint stock company is allowed to speak and vote on questions concerning that company of which he is a member, but, apart from the legal rule, if it is to be insisted upon that a member of this House is not to say anything in favour of any company in which he may have an interest, I think we would have very bald debates in this House on such a subject. The members who are interested in that company are best qualified to present the condition of that company to the Their business interests have forced them to satisfy themselves as to the soundness or unsoundness of the investment. As to voting, that is a matter of taste whether a shareholder in a company should vote or not on legislation affecting it, though I shall not vote on this matter. But as to this question I have no idea that any vote in this House or any subsidy granted by the Government from the north in the early spring or during June will put any money into the pockets of those who first had the pluck to invest their money in this railway. I have not the slightest idea that I will ever get any money out of the Hudson's Bay Railway Company. I think the question the hon. gentleman has referred to, of whether I am speaking for myself or for my county, may be safely left between myself and my constituents. The hon. gentleman also objects that the Hudson's Bay Railway would divert trade from Montreal. I am altogether opposed to this idea of sectionalism. I believe that, in advancing the interests of any part of the country, you are advancing the interests of the whole country. In advancing the interests of Manitoba, we who live in Ontario are advancing our own interests. It is by the expansion of Manitoba and the North-West that we can advance the interests of the country at large and of our own constituencies. I also protest against the use of a phrase which was used by my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron), and that is the term "wildcat scheme." That word has been constantly used in reference to this railway, and I say it is unjust and insulting, and outside of this House it would be libellous to use it in regard to any undertaking, unless it was proved. I ask hon. gentlemen to what they can point in regard to this road which would justify the use of such a term in reference to it?

Mr. MACDOWALL. I would not have troubled the House were it not that the hon. member for Wellington had spoken, as he admitted, very harshly in reference to this railway which is very important to the people in the West, from the great lakes to the Rocky Mountains. The hon. great lakes to the Rocky Mountains. gentleman spoke as one of the leaders of the Liberal party, and it will be understood in the North-West that he has enunciated the policy of the Liberal party, or of one section of it, in regard to the North-West. He said that my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) was interested in this matter, but he forgot that he had given notice of an amendment that this scheme should not receive any assistance until his constituents had received similar consideration for the railways which they had constructed. Had he not a personal interest in that matter? Is it fair for him to make a personal charge against the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casay), when he showed that he had a personal interest in the matter? In the North-West, we are not concerned with the spirit of sectionalism which the member for Wellington has shown, and this claim that the Hudson's Bay Railway would take trade away from Toronto or other ports in the east shows that we cannot depend on hon. gentlemen on the other side for any consideration in any cause we may lay before the House. I am perfectly justified in making that statement, and I adhere to it unless one of the leaders of the Liberal party contradicts the statement of the hon. member for Wellington. hon, gentleman said that the navigation of Hudson's Bay was shown to be altogether out of the question. I do not think he can have read any of the reports which have been made as to the navigation of Hudson's Bay. Lieutenant Gordon says there will be three months navigation there. Captain Markham, now Admiral Markham, says there are four months navigation there, and all the reports show that the only danger is from the ice which is let loose winter months there is anything to interrupt the navigation, and I believe that, if we had boats constructed to cut the ice between the shore and the vessels that would arrive in the bay, there would be ample means of carrying on the trade by means of lighterage, and that this would be of great benefit to the North-West, and in fact to the whole of Canada. If this scheme were carried out, coupled with a vigorous immigration policy, we should be able to place such a large number of people in the North-West who would be a great consuming population, as all immigrants are during the first few years after their arrival, that it would test the ability of the manufacturing industries of the east to supply them. If you look at this from a Dominion point of view, you will see that it will provide an immense market for the manufacturing industries of the east, as well as an immense population who will raise such an amount of produce as will increase the material wealth of The amount which is asked for, and estimated at $1,600,000 is a very small sum in comparison with the financial benefit which Canada will derive from this road, even as a colonization road, but we in the west believe that it will be continued, and it is our intention that it shall be continued to Hudson Bay and thus become a great avenue of commerce. But, from a financial point of view, if we take one of the greatest authorities on colonial affairs, Sir Charles Dilke, who, I believe, is one of the very greatest authorities in all the financial affairs of the colonies and the British dependencies, we find that he made an analysis of the financial standing of Canada and declared that it was one-third less in debt than the Australian and New Zealand colonies, and yet he considers the Australian and New Zealand colonies in a good sound financial position. Therefore, if we were to ask this Parliament for $50,000,000 towards railway development in the North-West and towards assisting immigration to that country, we would still be within the mark, and, therefore, our demand of $1,600,000 is very small and very moderate indeed, considering the great advantages this Dominion is going to reap.

Mr. LAURIER. You must be surprised at your moderation.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Yes, I am surprised at our moderation; but we have had a hard row to hoe, and in hoeing that hard row we have found it better to walk first and run afterwards, and we hope to run very soon. Now, with respect to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from West Huron (Mr. Cameron) regarding those who are connected with this Hudson's Bay scheme. The connected with this Hudson's Bay scheme. hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) says that he has not proved that they are not respectable We hope and believe that they are respectable men; we also believe that they have sufficient encouragement from those who are not only respectable men, but also men who stand financially high, to enable them to promise that that railway will not only be completed as far as this guarantee covers, but that it will be continued in the future on to Hudson's Bay; and I think that when he demands that information should be given him of the character of these gentlemen, and of the character of the undertaking which is before the House, he himself should be very careful before he McMullen), opposes it simply because he wants a Mr. MACDOWALL.

There is nothing to show that during the finds fault with their respectability. We may leave it to the western members to enquire into these things, because the hope and the salvation of that western country is dependent on the Hudson's Bay route. There is, Sir, one great difference between Canada and the United States, and that is, that whereas the United States has its ports on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, as well as to the south on the Gulf of Mexico, we in Canada have our ports not only on the Atlantic and the Pacific, but the western country has its ports on Lake Superior, and we also have this great sea to the north of us which cuts directly into the centre of our territory, and which we believe is capable of being made one of the great arteries of commerce for that great western country, a commerce which can only be developed by this House giving the means to develop it. I recollect that before I was a member of this House, I heard an hon, gentleman, who was then a member, discussing the question of giving assistance to North-West affairs, when he said: "Why should we give assistance to North-West affairs? we have bought that country and gave $3,000,000 for it, and we got it very cheaply." I replied to him: "Yes, sir; but when you bought that country you assumed the responsibility of governing the country, and if you, in the Canadian Parliament, do not understand the responsibility of governing that country, we who come from that country will very soon teach you," and that is what we are doing here just now in discussing this Hudson's Bay Railway—we desire to teach you your responsibilities. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has time and again found fault with the present Administration. says: We have listened to the speeches of Sir Charles Tupper and the roseate hues in which he has painted the early prospective development of the North-West, and he asked: Why has that development not taken place? I answer that the reason why it has not taken place has been the opposition of the Liberal party; it has been because the Liberal party say that we do wrong to spend money in that country, that we have already spent too much money there; they complain that the Government is bringing the country to financial ruin by developing the North-West. But I have already shown you that Sir Charles Dilke, one of the greatest authorities on this subject, says that Canada is one-third less in debt than the Australian and New Zealand colonies, and we know that for every dollar of money that is spent in the North-West there will be an increase of population and an increase in the material wealth of that country which will react upon the prosperity of older Canada. I think, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. members on your left desire ever to stand high in favour with the people of the North-West, it would be well for them, when they consider questions that affect that country, if they were to place themselves in the position of the people who live there, if they were to endeavour to appreciate the possibilities of that country. If they were to place themselves in that position they would better understand the sentiments of the people of the North-West. But when they oppose a small two-penny-ha'penny grant of $1,600,000 to a road which may possibly be the means of developing the resources and increasing the population of Canada, and when their spokesman, the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr.

personal favour to his own constituency in the shape | None but the Liberals on this side of the House, cipalities, or simply because he wants to develop some of the remote ports in the older provinces of Canada, then I say to the hon. gentlemen sitting on your left. Good-bye for ever to support from the North-West. I only returned to-day from Prince Albert, and when I was up there some of my fiercest opponents during the last campaign said to me: Well, the Conservative party has certainly done one good thing for the Dominion." I asked them what that was. They said: "Why, they have passed the resolution granting aid to the Hudson's Bay Railway Company." I said: "Well, but wait a little, the Grits are going to oppose that;" and they answered me: "Oh, send them up here and we will strangle them." It is a pity they were not strangled on the 5th of March, for then there would be no difficulty, and the Hudson's Bay Railway would become an accomplished fact. It is all very well for hon, members to laugh at this statement, but I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that although hon. gentlemen on your left may take pleasure in deriding the honest aspirations of the hard-working toilers of the western country, the people of the North-West are able to estimate at their true value every word that is uttered by those hon. gentlemen in this House. I shall have the greatest pleasure, for one, in sending hundreds of copies of the hon. gentleman's speech throughout that western territory in order that the people may understand what one of the most influential members of the Grit party thinks about the development of that country.

Mr. WATSON. At the present stage of the debate I did not intend to say anything further on this subject, having expressed my opinion upon it when the resolution was before the House a few days ago. I do not think the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat, has taken the wisest course to obtain the favour of the House in support of the Bill now before us. He says that the people of the North-West can never look to the Liberal party in the House of Commons for any favour on behalf of that country. Now, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who was the party that in days gone by have stood up for the rights and interests of the North-West?

Mr. MACDOWALL. The Conservatives.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has demanded that the petitions of the people of the North-West should receive consideration at the hands of this House? I would like to ask him who has advocated the principle that the Government of the day should grant the concessions asked for by the North-West Council, which body, I suppose, he will admit represents the people of the North-West? I should like to ask the hon. gentleman who has advocated the demands of the Province of Manitoba? None but the Liberal party. I asked who, when the Government voted large subsidies to the Canadian Pacific Railway, demanded that the principal portion of that money should be spent on constructing lines of railway in Manitoba and the North-West Territories? The Liberal party did so against the action of hon. gentlemen opposite. While the people of the North-West were being kept down by the monoply granted by hon. members opposite to the Canadian Pacific Railway, who advocated the doing away of that monopoly?

of a repayment of the moneys voted by those muni- and it was not until the Government were forced --I say, advisedly forced-to yield to the demands of the people of Manitoba and the North-West, that the Government gave a guarantee of $15,000,000 in consideration of the abolition of that monopoly. In regard to the grant given to the Canadian Pacific Railway for doing away with that monopoly, the members of this side of the House felt that Manitoba had been unjustly placed at a disadvantage in regard to railway construction within the province by the disallowance of her railway Acts. The hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) voted on that occasion in favour of that grant, and by that vote he did more for the people of the North-West than the hon. gentleman opposite has done by his speech to-day. The people of the North-West, I consider, have not fully appreciated the policy which has been advocated by hon, members on this side of the House. We may be told that public questions have been submitted to the people, and that only one member of the Opposition has been returned, and he by a narrow majority. Let me say that if the ballot was extended to the North-West there would be a different result; and it that occurred, the hon, representative from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) would not be here to speak as he has spoken to-day. I hope the present Bill will pass, and it has my support. No doubt there are differences of opinion on this side of the House as to this scheme. I hold, however, it is as much entitled, if not more entitled, to this aid than are many other roads in the Dominion. As I have stated on a previous occasion, the Government have seen fit to grant a bonus to the Calgary and Edmonton equal to this amount, and to the Long Lake road $80,000 a year for 20 years on the same conditions and terms, and as we hope this road will be continued to Hudson's Bay, there is strong reason for giving it greater assistance than has been granted to the small roads running from Calgary to Edmonton and from Regina to Prince Albert. For this reason, I am in favour of the measure before the House. So far as the navigation of Hudson's Straits is concerned, it is a matter of no interest to this House. I consider that this railway is as much and more entitled to the assistance asked than were other roads which have been bonussed, and which may more appropriately be called wildcat schemes. As a member of the Liberal party, I consider that our party has done more in advocating the interests of Manitoba and the North-West than gentlemen on the other side can claim credit for doing. They have done much by their votes in this Parliament, and by their criticisms the people of the North-West have attained greater liberties and privileges than they would have received if hon, gentlemen opposite had had all to do with the matter. Hon, gentlemen opposite would not yield on questions affecting the North-West until they were forced to do so by the advocacy of the Opposition and by petitions sent from the North-West and Manitoba, setting out what legislation was required by that country. As a supporter of the scheme under consideration, I hope no hon. member from the North-West will make such foolish remarks as were made by the hon, member for Saskatchewan on this matter.

> Mr. MACDOWALL I rise to make an explanation. The hon, gentleman does not come from this province, but he seems to think that the "shreds and patches" when they have extended into the territories should not be allowed to express an opinion. I spoke very moderately and directly to the point. From the tone of the remarks of the hon, gentleman one would think I should not have spoken at all. The hon, gentleman has said the Liberal party have done everything for the people of the North-West. I deny it directly and distinetly, and I will prove that such is not the case. I will tell this House what the people of the North-West have realized. They have watched the life of this country during the last ten years, even before they had representation in this House;—and I was a member of the North-West Council long ago and took an active part in drawing the memorials to the Government at Ottawa. There were certain things we thought were required and these were embodied in our memorial, but we found that the Liberal party made use of these memorials to damn the North-West. They made use of them in such a way as only to make political capital for themselves, to be used in the older provinces; and, in consequence of that, we in the North-West Council came to the conclusion that it was better to have these memorials directed to the Governor in Council, where everything would be kept secret, where nothing would be given away to the press, because such base use was made of those memorials by the Liberal party. In what way did the Liberal party do anything with regard to half-breed scrip in the North-West Territories? During the last election this question was a very lively one in Saskatchewan; and I published in my address a statement that the leader of the Liberal party had declared himself against granting the scrip to halfbreed children born up to 1885; and as that hon. gentleman had thus declared the policy of his party, the only party to which the half-breeds of the North-West could possibly look was the Conservative party. To my astonishment, at a meeting I held shortly afterwards, a telegram was read from the leader of the Liberal party which, so far as I can remember, and I have a pretty fair memory, said that the statements contained in the Conservative address were false in every particular, and that on ever yoccasion he (Mr. Laurier) had urged a special grant to the half-breeds.

Mr. LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I base my statement on what the hon gentleman said in the House of Commons on April 14, 1890. During a discussion on this question the hon gentleman said:

"If my understanding of it is right, it would mean that the half-breeds who were not residents of either Manitoba or the North-West Territories at the time of the acquisition of the Territories in 1870, who did not belong to the ceded territories, but who afterwards removed to Manitoba and the North-West Territories, should be put exactly on the same footing as the half-breeds who were residents of Manitoba and the Territories at that time. I would be prepared to favour such a construction."

The leader of the Government explained to him that that had been done. The leader of the Opposition went on to say:

"The only claim upon which the half-breeds could rest any pretension to any grant by this Government, was the extinguishment of those titles. The extinguishment of those titles can apply only to the Indians who were residents of Canada at the time the territories were ceded to Canada."

That is a particular date. He continued: Mr. MACDOWALL.

"We cannot admit the principle to any Indians who have removed from the other side of the line to our own territory, and the same principle applies equally to the half-breeds. The half-breeds' title cannot be extinguished in the same manner as that of the Indians, because they had moved out of the ceded territory."

Then the hon, gentleman went on to say, and this is the gist of the matter:

"In my judgment, this individual compensation could apply only to such half-breeds as were residents of our territory at the time it became the possession of Canada that is to say, in July, 1870."

The leader of the Opposition said, in effect, that those were the only half-breeds who should receive scrip, and he laid down the policy of the Liberal party in regard to the half-breeds in the North-West, for, I presume, he announced the policy of the party.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon, gentleman knows I was not enunciating a policy. I simply said that the statute passed by this House applied only to Indians and half-breeds who were residents in Canada, in 1870.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Well, then, Mr. Chair man, if that is the case I suppose it is fair for me to assume that when my motion comes before the House, referring to the half-breeds in the North-West Territories, that I shall have the support of the hon. the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We will discuss that when your motion comes up.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I presume he will agree with me in asking for a further grant of scrip to the half-breeds.

Mr. LAURIER. I will join with you, as I have done time and again in this House, in urging upon the Government to carry out the statute passed by this Parliament, granting scrip to the half-breeds of the North-West. If that had been done long ago we would have had no rebellion in the North-West Territories.

Mr. MACDOWALL. If the hon, gentleman is ready to do that, I presume he will go a little further, and I think it is fair for me to assume that he will endorse whatever I may say in urging upon the Government to give further scrip to the half-When this matter breeds of the North-West. comes up I shall be able to explain then the grounds on which I desire this scrip shall be given. The hon, gentleman said that my statement was false in every particular. I say that my statement was not false in every particular, and I maintain and contend that my statement was perfectly true, and that it was perfectly fair for me to assume from these words that the half-breed population should not be granted scrip. I will go further and say that the hon. gentleman said, in concluding his

"The inference is that the scrip should be given, yet not in the manner contemplated by the law, that is, to heads of families and to children born before 1870, and also to children born since. Now, I am not quite sure that this would be judicious, because, unless you draw the line somewhere, these claims will continually arise, and the children who are born next year will have the same claim as those that were born last year, and who have been settled with. I think, on the whole, if we adhered to the policy prescribed in 1870, that no cause of discontent would remain."

When these remarks were made on the resolution of the North-West Assembly asking that scripshould be given to the half-breed children up to 1885, I Territories in a way admirably suited to the wants should like to ask, then, what support the leader of the people of that country who are so much the Opposition has given to the requirements of the people of the North-West in this matter? As repealed to the Administration is the Administration had so much confidence in the people, that it carried gards the personal reference that the hon, member through this House a special Act authorizing the for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has made to me, that Lieutenant Governor to disarm the population of if the ballot existed in the North-West I should the North-West Territories. The hon, gentleman not be here, I may say that I do not think that must have a very bad opinion indeed of those who either he or I are competent judges of that. But sit on this side of the House, when he exhibits so suppose the ballot were instituted in the North-much confidence in men who have dealt in such a way West, I should have no objection at all to stand a with the people of the North-West Territories, that tussle with him in my constituency; and if he desires they are at any moment liable to break out into very much to put it to the proof, I shall have no insurrection. The hon, member spoke as if no one

Now, with regard to the measure which he thinks cannot be entrusted with arms. before us, let me say that I agree with my hon. Therefore, after their excellent administration of friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) when he says is not necessarily a part of a railway extending to of real estate in the Province of Ontario alone to Hudson's Bay, and may never reach that water. It is perfectly plain to any man who chooses to exercise his ordinary intelligence, that the Government have come to the conclusion that this railway will never go to Hudson's Bay-that they do not look upon a railway to Hudson's Bay as, in our day at all events, a feasible enterprise; that nothing will be done to push a railway in that direction, and that if it were extended to Hudson's Bay, there would be nothing special for it to do. We have already a very large mileage of railways connected with the North-West Territories. We have a railway system capable of doing very much more than there is to be done, and it does seem to me that this country, through its representatives in Parliament, can make a better use of the money that the people may place at their disposal than to expend further sums at the present time on railway enterprises in that country, when there is so much distress and so much necessity in other portions of the Dominion. Why, Sir, we have hundreds of miles of railway in the North-West Territories, opening up millions of acres of land for settlement, lands which are still unoccupied; and why should we go on and expend larger sums of money in the construction of other railways when the lands along those already built are not yet occupied? I say it would be little short of madness to adopt such a policy. Are the people of this country so wealthy, is money with them so abundant, that they are prepared to take another 80,000 a year from their private property—for there is where the money is to come from—and make a present of it to a rail-way company in the North-West Territories?

Mr. CASEY. That is not asked.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman says it is not asked. Why, Sir. it would be the merest infatuation on the part of any member of this House to assume that $1 of that $80,000 a year will ever be returned to the public treasury of The Government of this country are the trustees of the people of this country, and it is their. duty to take from the pockets of the people so much of their money as may be required for the necessities of the state, but beyond that they have no right to go; and it is improper to take money without compensation or without a consideration from the pockets of one portion of the community and make a present of it to another portion of the That is what the hon, gentlemen community. propose to do; and a very strong case requires to be made out to justify such a course being taken. We admitted it in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We knew that that road was of the utmost consequence to the people of the North-West Territories, and the people of this country have ungrudgingly contributed towards the construction of that railway, and the union of the various sections of this country by means of that railway. But that being done, it is for the people of the North-West Territories, as it is for the people of every other portion of the Dominion, to depend now upon private enterprise and private energy for the further development of their resources. Sir, there is no doubt that the contribution of $100,000,000 odd from the public treasury of Canada towards railway construction and other public enterprises in the North-West Territories, and the other newer districts of this country, has diminished the value which is called by one name, but is intended to Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

nearly double the amount of that contribution. Are you going to continue that? Are you going to engage in the imposition of further burdens on the people and the further impoverishment of districts already settled? Who helped the people of Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces to construct their public works and develop their resources? They had to depend on their own resources, and it was by means of their own exertions, and by means of private agencies, that many of those improvements were made. The people of the North-West Territories must exercise patience, and they must depend upon the energy and enterprise of those who go in to take possession of the country, for a very large portion of the public works and undertakings of this character which they may require. The hon, gentleman has proceeded upon the assumption that we have 3,000,000 square miles unoccupied, and that we must open it all up for settlement at one instant of time. I do not admit that. I think that the construction of the two railways spoken of was altogether unnecessary for the time being. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway and its immediate tributaries, which were built without this active interference, were quite enough, and will be quite enough for many years to come. Look at the proposed road. There are people settled to the west of Lake Manitoba, and they are entitled to consideration: but that consideration is rather local than a consideration devolving upon the Dominion of Canada at large. Rut this road does not afford them any accommodation. It is a railway in search of a grant, in search of contributions from the public treasury. Where does it begin? At Winnipeg. Where does it end? No-body knows where. Nobody knows precisely what direction it is going to take. Forty miles have been built, and beyond that the railway may continue between Lake Winnipeg and Lake Winnipegoosis, or it may pass at the Narrows of Lake Manitoba and continue until it reaches the Saskat-That is a point on which the Government chewan. have not informed us. This railway is not for the accommodation of the settlers; it is for the accommodation of the gentlemen who subscribe the stock. How did this railway begin? Why, it was proposed many years ago to construct a railway to Hudson's Bay. It was to be a great commercial undertaking—not a colonization railway, but one of a wholly different character; and efforts were made to float the stock in New York, and in London, and in all parts of the United Kingdom, but no stock was taken; nothing was subscribed. Now, Sir, after several years have expired and nothing done, we have here a proposition to construct a road of a wholly different character. We have a proposition to construct a road, not running towards Hudson's Bay, but towards the Pacific Ocean. So far as it is to be carried, and in the direction it is proposed to carry it, it is to reach the Saskatchewan, but no one knows at what point. The hon. Minister of the Interior will not stand up and say that the location of this road is known. Whether it will accommodate any settlers or not is not known. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) proposed a colonization scheme last year, where the settlers are—west of Lake Manitoba—and that was rejected; and now a scheme is proposed here, serve another purpose. On what grounds are well asked for this appropriation? Because this road will go to Hudson's Bay? Not at all, but because it will go to some point on the Saskatchewan, and the justification is that it will afford accommodation to some parties who have settled west of Lake Winnipegoosis. That is not an enterprise we are prepared to aid by large contributions from the public treasury. The circumstances of the country, the state of the public revenue, the policy it may be necessary to adopt in the future—all make it improper to inaugurate further burdens and responsibilities of this sort, and impose further permanent burdens on the public treasury. The people of this country ought to be free for the purpose of determining what taxation they will endure, and what policy they will adopt in the future. Those who are rotting in the churchyards ought not to be taken any longer to govern those who are sitting in the pews. That is the policy that hon, gentlemen opposite are marking out for the people of this country, and it ought not to be tolerated any longer

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Had I been here when this motion was moved, I would certainly have taken the opportunity of remonstrating with the hon. Minister of Finance and the Government generally on the very extraordinary course they have seen fit to pursue with respect to the present debate. They are well aware that the motion I have moved is in the nature of a motion of want of confidence. They have so accepted and treated it, and they must know that the invariable practice of the House has, for obvious reasons, always been, although it is not a law of Parliament, that when a motion of that kind is moved, unless some extraordinary occasions of urgency arises, such as arose here owing to the termination of the fiscal year, that the Government should go on with the motion of want of confidence and have that decided before proceeding to ordinary business. That is, as everybody knows, the invariable practice of the English House of Commons, and has been ours, unless some extraordinary case arises, in which both parties are agreed as we were the other day. I really think the hon. Minister of Finance ought to terminate this matter and allow us to proceed with the regular business of the Budget debate, which ought to be got rid of; and I would suggest, as it is quite clear this thing may go on in secula secu-lorum, the Committee should rise and we should proceed with our ordinary business, or else the Government should explain why it is they depart sostrangely from the ordinary custom of Parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a little late in the day for my hon, friend to raise this objection. In the first place, he was not in his place when the debate arose and the House went into Committee, and a very large part of the discussion has taken place.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By no means.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon, friend will consider, he will recollect that five or six days ago this question came up, and my hon. colleague. the Minister of the Interior, explained the urgency for the passage of the Bill. His resolution was passed, and the Bill is founded on that resolution. At the time my hon, friend had no objection on the ground that his motion was pending, although it was then pending as it is to-day. He, however, took the ground I related briefly before, I think it would be well at that certain information which he thought the this stage to put the Bill through Committee.

House should be in possession of, had not been given to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has it been Let;

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend the Minister of the Interior has the information, and I understand he has so stated across the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No.

Mr. FOSTER. He has the information which, he thinks, ought at least to be satisfactory to any reasonable judgment of the House. Now, although I agree with my hon, friend that it is not usual to take up any important legislation whilst a motion of want of confidence is pending, the House came to a tacit agreement the other day, that this Bill, being a matter of importance and urgency, might be taken up and disposed of; and as no objection on the ground taken by the hon, gentleman was made then, but delay was merely asked in order that information might be brought, my hon, friend is rather late now in making his objection.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the first place, the information asked for, and which we understood would be brought down, has not been brought down: and, in the second place, I certainly did think that the Government would have proceeded with the debate on the Budget before going further with this other matter. I did not think it necessary to state to the Government, containing old and experienced parliamentarians, what the practice of Parliament was. They knew that as well as I. However, if it be their desire to go on with the discussion, so be it. It then becomes our duty to enquire minutely into the position of this road, and ascertain what surveys have been made, what the Government can tell us as to the probable cost, and what are the grounds on which they ask for this Bill, In short, on what we may reasonably expect this road can be constructed, if we make this grant, and why they deem it expedient to single this out, which, it now appears, is not a grant for the purpose of building a railway to the Hudson's Bay, but, as stated by several speakers, really for a coloniza-tion road. Those matters we can go into in detail, but this is a very inconvenient mode of dealing with an important debate affecting questions of public policy of the highest order, and I would like to know when the hon, gentleman thinks that, with all these interruptions, we are likely to terminate Even supposing, which is not likely, that we will get through this matter by six, you will have just one speech to-night, or at the most two, and there are a score of gentlemen known to me who are desirous of expressing their opinions on the motion of want of confidence; and the hon, gentleman knows that after this Bill goes through Committee, if it comes up for third reading, there will be further amendments and discussions. I must say I cannot possibly see what urgency there is for a matter of this kind, and I think a strict case of urgency ought to be made out before our existing debate is interfered with for the purpose of discussing this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the circumstances, which

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. the information.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly my hon, friend has a perfect right to ask for any information he desires. and I have no doubt that the hon. Minister of the Interior and others who will speak will give it to him. With reference to the currency of the Budget debate after that, it will be my proposition, and my hon, friend will agree with me, that as soon as we have finished this stage, we shall proceed with the debate the die in diem. I shall be glad if my hon, friend opposite can indicate the possible date at which we can dispose of that,

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. Minister of Finance has not rightly apprehended the objection raised by my hon, friend from South Oxford. His objection is that it is contrary to rules and precedents to intervene another debate while a motion of want of confidence is pending. The hon, gentleman is aware of that as well as my hon, friend. I did not raise the point because, unfortunately, it has been my experience this session that this loyal Conservative Government is constantly breaking every British rule and precedent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If we are going into this matter, I would like to learn from the hon. Minister of Railways or the hon. Minister of the Interior, in the first place, what he expects this road, which I understand is about 300 miles long, is going to cost, and whether he is prepared to make a statement to the House as to its cost?

Mr. DEWDNEY. If I remember correctly, this question was put to me when the matter was first brought before the House by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and I told him then that an estimate had been made of the cost and that a contract had been signed by Messrs. Ross, Holt & Mann for the construction of the road at a price of $11,000 a mile.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is for the permanent way--the road-bed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Exclusive of the rails?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No: including the rails. It is almost entirely a prairie road.

Mr. WATSOX. Does that include the bridge across the Narrows?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; it does not include that.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention to cross at the Narrows?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I believe that is the intention.

Mr. WATSON. If the contract has been letit must define the route which is to be taken.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I fancy there is very little difference in the nature of the road between the two lakes and that across the Narrows.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to mean that there has been a survey made on the ground of the projected road, and that it has actually been located from one point to the other?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; and it would be unnecessary for anyone who has been accustomed to Mr. FOSTER.

We must get before the tenders were made. It was not done in connection with the Long Lake road or the Calgary road.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then this is not a colonization road?

> Mr. DEWDNEY. It is a colonization road, and I would like the House to disabuse its mind of any idea as to the Hudson's Bay road proper. Government told the promoters of this road that they would give nothing more than the proposed guarantee for twenty years, for this is a colonization road.

> Mr. LAURIER. We are anxious to have more information on this subject, and this is the language which is used in different places. In Manitoba this is called the Hudson's Bay Railway from Winnipeg to the Hudson's Bay. In the House of Commons here it is simply a colonization road from Winnipeg to some point on the Saskatchewan River; but the Minister is not able to tell us where it is to be located. The only information he can give us is that it will run from Winnipeg in the direction of Long Lake, and to some point on the We are only asking for Saskatchewan River. information which ought to be amply given before the moneys of the people are voted in this way. I do not know, after all, that it might not be good as a colonization road. The hon, member knows that this side of the Honse offered no opposition last year to the Calgary road, but the information was given, and it was stated that it was intended to serve one section of that country. If the hon. gentleman can give us full and accurate information, he may be entitled to this money, but so far he has not placed himself in a position to ask for a cent of money, because he has not given any information upon which the money of the people can be voted.

> Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the line has not been located. I would ask him if there has been any survey between the end of the forty miles of road which have been already built and the point on the Saskatchewan to which it is expected this road will go, and if he has any report of the surveyors as to the character of the country through which the road will run! Of course, there may be three or four surveys of different lines, but I would ask him if surveys have been made between the proposed termini ?

> Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; there have been thorough explorations made.

> Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I mean surveys; not explorations.

> Mr. DEWDNEY. The surveyors have not been over both lines, and I stated that either line would end on the Saskatchewan. One is indicated on the map at the eastern end of the Saskatchewan River, and the other is, I think, a little further east. stated to the House that it was proposed to take one of those two lines and to build this road on a colonization scheme, either to the Grand Rapids or to the Saskatchewan River, on the western side of Cedar Lake. The navigation at the one place is six weeks or two months earlier in the season than it is at the other.

necessary for anyone who has been accustomed to Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman miscontract in that country to have such a location apprehends my question. I have no doubt in reference to the exploratory surveys, but I want to know if lines have been run showing the cuttings and the grades?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; that would be a location survey. There has been no location survey. There has been a trial line run.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there a contract let for $11,900 a mile?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. And there has been no location survey at all?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; and there was none on the Calgary road before the contract was let.

Mr. DALY. There has been a survey made, which has been filed in the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Between what points?

Mr. DALY. Between Lake Winnipeg and Lake Manitoba. The plans were filed in the department a year ago.

Mr. WATSON. This question of the location would make a great difference. I understand from the Minister that the road is to run west of Cedar Lake. If it is to run between Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg, it will go through a country where there is practically no settlement. I think the Minister of the Interior made a mistake when he stated that the navigation was open west of Cedar Lake six weeks or two months earlier than it is on the Saskatchewan.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is not open at that point until some time in July.

Mr. WATSON. When does the ice get out of the river?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Early in May.

Mr. WATSON. If the road is to run between Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg, it would make a great deal of difference as to the benefit to be derived from this subsidy, and I think the Govern-ment should insist on the line running west of Manitoba where there are settlements now in ex-

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand the Minister to say that the contract is already let?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then, who are the contractors?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Ross, Holt & Mann, who are building two other roads to the west of this road, from Calgary to Edmonton, and from Regina to Prince Albert.

Mr. CASEY. Did these contractors take these two other roads in the same way, without any survey at all?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Without any survey.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As I understand the position, the parties who have taken the contract may locate the road between Lake Winnipegoosis and Lake Winnipeg, extending it between the lakes where there are no settlers at all, or they may cross the Narrows, and the Government have no control over the matter. These parties may build where they please and they will get the $80,000 granted by which location may be chosen. The one may run through a settlement, the other may run where there are no settlers at all yet. Then the hon. Minister said—I am not sure whether it was a mere slip or whether he intended it—that the road may be located west of Lake Manitoba. Now, the 40 miles that are built are built east of Lake Mani-

Mr. DEWDNEY. The road crosses the Narrows.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then it will be located west of Lake Winnipegoosis and will run altogether north of Lake Manitoba.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Government has control of the line in this regard, that the company will receive no land grant until the line is adopted and agreed to by the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But as to this $80,000 portion, no such restriction exists, if I understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is in the proviso.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But as to this money grant we are now dealing with. According to the statement of my hon. friend, which the Minister did not deny, it would be in the option of these contractors to take this road exactly where they please without the Government being able to control them.

Mr. FOSTER. The money is not paid until the road is finished.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am taking the statement of the Minister of the Interior as he made it; if I am wrong, it rests with him to correct me. But there is another side to this question. It appears to me to be almost an absurdity to say that there can be any very great urgency warranting the interruption of such a debate as was going on, in order to grant $80,000 a year for twenty years to a purely colonization road which the Minister has told us is not intended by the Government to go to Hudson's Bay at all. Now, all through this discussion—and the very form of the agreement warranted the assumption—we have been discussing the question as to whether it was desirable to aid a road to the Hudson's Bay, and, until this explanation just made by the Minister, a great num-ber of gentlemen on both sides of the House were under the impression that this was a necessary link in the construction of the Hudson's Bay Railway. Now it turns out that, in the eyes of the Government, as voiced by the Minister of the Interior, this is purely a colonization road, and I ask where is the urgency, what is the reason for departing from our usual custom and practice to press for-ward a scheme for a colonization road which has been so far unlocated as that the Minister is not able to tell us whether it will go to Grand Rapids, or whether it will go to a point, so far as I can judge from looking at the map, 70 miles west of it. Now, it does appear to me that it is rather absurd to talk of urgency in a matter of that kind I cannot for the life of me see where the argency comes in. There may be urgency on the part of a lot of speculators who are interested in this matter, but there can be no urgency for the people of Can-ada, or the Parliament of Canada to alter their usual rules for the purpose of discussing this measure. Why, the Ministers themselves are very this House every year for twenty years, no matter much at sea as to the details of it. It does not appear that they have made any very careful analysis of the route, or that they know exactly where it is going to go. My hon, friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) states that one of these projected lines will serve a population—he did not say how much, perhaps the Minister can tell me; but the other, he says, will serve no population at all. Now, a colonization road which may go through the country entirely uninhabited is not a matter of urgency for us to consider.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of the Interior has already mentioned that the Government will see that the money is not granted to the company unless the road is located where they may desire, and yet he begins by saying that either of the two lines may be taken that are projected. Now, I do not think there is any rule better established than this one: that the one thing over which the House of Commons ought to exercise control is the appropriation of public money. We do not delegate to the Government our right to judge of the propriety or fitness of an appropriation, and it is not for the Government to give the House an intellectual holiday and to assume the responsibility on its behalf of locating this road after the appropriation is made. It is the business of the House to see that the road is located on a line where they think it will justify the appropriation asked for, if any location can justify such an appropriation. But what the Minister is asking the House to do, is to vote this money without knowing anything about the location of the road, whether it is to be located where there are settlers or where there are none, where it is possible that settlers may not be able to go, in a very narrow district hemmed in by water on both sides. Now, I say this is a matter that the House must judge for itself and cannot shift the responsibility from its own shoulders to the shoulders of the Administration.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think that point is well taken. I think it is a safe rule that we should not hand over to the Government the control of money that belongs to the people until we know how that money is to be expended. I do not see myself where the urgency is in this matter, as the of money already expended on railway construction. and the road is not likely to be built before the end of the session. Then, over and beyond the question of building this road, there are many matters to be considered before we grant the money for the construction of this road. If the Government say that all the land in the North-West that is open for settlement has been sold, that all the land that lies along the railway has been sold and is now occupied, that, in my opinion, would be a cause of urgency. If the land is not all settled even where they have railway facilities already provided at an enormous cost by the people of this country, then I consider there is no urgency. One of the great difficulties in the settlement of the North-West that has been complained of by people who go there, is the distance that settlers live apart. It is desirable in the interest of settlement that we should get the settlers to live close together, as a matter of protection, as a matter of improvement and progress in the different communities. Now, if we open up a new settlement, open up other lands, we will tend still further to increase the evil that has been complained of all along in the settlement of Maniwhere they have built their own railways with their own money without being aided in a single dollar by this Government, the people of those counties will have reason to complain of the conduct of this Government in aiding railways in localities where settlement is not demanded, when the Government have any amount of land now unoccupied, and yet possessing railway facilities. I think those counties that have built their own roads will have great cause to complain of the grant to this railway for so many years. I do not know how the Government can justify to this House or to the people of this country the granting of this $80,000 for twenty years for this railway, to open up a new settlement, which must be a sparse settlement, in the North-West, when they neglect to refund any portion of the money that has been given by many counties the Province of Ontario, the population of which, in some cases, are justly entitled to a refund of some portion of the money they have paid. I am one of those who believed, and I still believe, and I know it was the belief of the hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) that it would retard the settlement of the North-West if the Canadian Pacific Railway was built too rapidly. If that railway had been built more slowly, the people employed in its construction would have acquired lands and settled in the country; but the rapidity with which the work was prosecuted caused the contractors to employ men from the United States, Norway, Sweden, China, and elsewhere, and they never became permanent settlers on the land. Now we have the fact that the general settlement of Manitoba and the North-West has not progressed as rapidly as we would have desired, especially in view of the large amount of money expended on the Canadian Pacific Railway, which we are glad is now built and is completed as a substantial road. We believe that if much more land is opened for settlement and more railways are aided, settlement will be diverted, and we will not be doing as much good as we think we are doing. The Government should consider well before they grant this aid, and they should especially consider the claims of the people in other portions of the country for the refund

Mr. DEWDNEY. I desire to offer a few words in reply to the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The hon, gentleman mentioned that he could not see the urgency of this Bill being proceeded with now, and he had not been able to see the arguments for it. I stated some time ago that English capitalists were here and expected to sail by a certain steamer which would leave in a few days, and I was anxious on that account, as some of the promoters of the undertaking wished to accompany them, that the measure should be pushed forward. There was also the additional reason that the financial season was about closing in England.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has closed. Mr. DEWDNEY. That is one of the explana-There is another in regard tions I desire to offer. to the debate that has taken place on the Hudson's Bay scheme. If the hon, gentleman had heard what I said when I brought the Bill before the House, he would know it was not my wish and my consent that the debate took the turn it did. We know that in many counties in Ontario | read what the terms were on which we proposed

"The conditions upon which we ask the assistance of this House, and the terms upon which we propose to give this House, and the terms upon which we propose to give assistance to the company who propose carrying out the work, are precisely the same as those given to previous companies. We propose that the company shall contract for the transport of men, materials, supplies and mails for twenty years from Winnipeg to a point on the Saskatchewan, at $80,000 per annum, to be paid on the construction of the railway from a point within the city of Winnipeg to a point on the Saskatchewan River, such payment to be computed from the completion of the railway to such last-mentioned point. The subsidy will be made payable in half-yearly payments and be assignable to trustees to secure the company's bonds on the whole or any part of the undertaking. The tariff rates will be the same as those agreed upon for the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company, and remain undisturbed for six years. And in case the amount earned by the company between Winnipeg and the point on the Saskatchewan River for Government service should not amount to the sum paid by the Government, one-third of the land grant earned will be kept to recoup the Government. At the same time the Government wish it to be distinctly understood that they are assisting this railway, not as the great Hudson's Bay Railway which we have heard so much about lately, but on its merits as a colonization road. It is also understood that the company shall at no future time make any demand on the Government for financial assistance for the eonstruction of the railway northward from the Saskatchewan River."

To my astonishment, one of the members from To my astonishment, one of the members from Ontario occupied two or three hours in speaking on the navigation of Hudson's Straits, which had noth-With regard to the ing to do with this project. construction of the 300 miles, I have said I had no doubt the company would then be in a position to extend the line to Hudson's Bay, and if they were able to do so, I would be glad.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not hear the hon, gentleman make that statement, and it was made on one of the comparatively few occasions when I was not in my place. I am glad to hear it. not because I am opposed, or any member of the House is opposed, to a proposition to aid Manitoba per se, but because we thought, looking at this project, looking at the large amount required to complete our connection with Hudson's Bay, it was a matter which required very grave and serious consideration on the part of the Government of Canada before they put their imprimatur on it. If it were found to be possible, on mature consideration, to open up communication between the North-West and Great Britain and other countries by way of Hudson's Bay, I would be exceedingly glad to hear that it had been done; but as hon, gentlemen who have paid any attention to the question know, it is one which, to say the least of it, has a very considerable number of difficulties to be considered and examined. It is one on which especially and specifically it is the duty of the Government of Canada to form an opinion and to state an opinion. They obtained large grants of the public money, I think $150,000 or $200,000, some years ago for the purpose of sending out an expedition to investigate the possibility of navigating Hudson's Bay by steamers carrying grain. We all know perfectly well that Hudson's Bay navigation in a sense has been known to be open for probably 250 years. It has always been pierced by vessels of the Hudson's Bay Company and by vessels of war, time and again, and I think some of our settlements were captured in Hudson's Bay as long ago as 200 years or more, although I am not quite sure of the date. That point was not disputed. But the Government undertook to make a very careful examination of the Bay and Straits. best one possible under the circumstances. This is

From that day to this the Government have been very chary, and rightly so, I dare to say, of expressing the conclusion at which they had arrived with respect to the proposed Hudson's Bay Railway. Although the Government, as the Minister of the Interior has very properly stated, declined entirely to commit themselves to the project, everybody knows it has been used, as an hon, member has just told the House, as an electioneering cry, and a very unfair election cry, throughout the North-West. I desire to take this opportunity of stating here for myself, and I think I speak for hon. members on this side also, that every well-considered scheme for the improvement and development of the North-West will have our most hearty and earnest co-operation; but as guardians of the public purse we require and will demand that we should see our way clearly, and that we should not vote away millions of the public money for purposes which may not be for the general advantage of Canada, but which may be simply for the purpose of promoting this or that particular railway enterprise. And, therefore, it is that, particularly when a scheme comes before the House which is supposed by the public to involve our sanction of a very much larger scheme, which the Minister tells us it does not, but which the general public believe it did, we require full time to consider and full time to gather information. for instance, if this is a colonization scheme, and if it be possible to construct this road for $3,000,000 or $3,500,000, as the Minister has just told us, then possibly the corporation, which is undertaking this scheme on a subscribed capital of, I think, about $1,000,000, may have financial strength enough to earry out the work with such assistance as it may obtain from the Manitoba Government. By-thebye, the assistance which is to be obtained from the Provincial Government is not stated. But it is obvious that the company would be utterly unable to properly grapple with the difficulties of extending this road to Hudson's Bay.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not understand that the company will get any assistance from Manitoba unless they carry the road to Hudson's Bay.

Committee rose; and, it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself in Committee on Bill

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. Chairman, before the clause is adopted I would like to say a few words on the Bill. I regret very much that whenever any question affecting Manitoba or the North-West comes up, and when members on this side take the liberty, as they are in duty bound to do, to enquire into it and to criticize it, they are always accused of opposing anything that relates to the North-West. I protest against any such procedure as When any measure has been shown to be really for the good of the North-West, never found members on this side of the House opposed to it, but, on the contrary, they have always tried to do their best to forward any such measure. But Sir, it is their bounden duty when any measure is proposed, to canvass it in all its bearings, and especially to see that the measure proposed is the what we are doing to-day with the measure before the House. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that it would simplify matters very much if we really knew positively what road we are discussing now. Minister of the Interior tells us, and I am bound to accept his statement, that it is a colonization road, the hon, member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) declares that it has nothing to do with the Hudson's Bay Railway at all, that it is purely and simply a colonization road, but the hon, member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) gets up and tells us that it is part and parcel of the Hudson's Bay Railway proper, and he argues in favour of it from that particular standpoint. The Bill itself says, in the first clause, that it is:

"In order to enable the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway to construct so much of the railway as reaches from the city of Winnipeg to a point on the Saskat-chewan."

Now Sir, every hon, member in this House knows that many years ago the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company was incorporated. that time a grant of land has been made in their favour, and up to the present time they have been in active negotiations getting the company formed, and trying to secure the means to build that railway from Winnipeg to Hudson's Bay; and the Bill now before us purports to be to assist them in building a part of the Hudson's Bay road. The same company that for years has been trying to negotiate to obtain funds and the means to build the whole road to Hudson's Bay; the same company is now offered a grant of $80,000 a year for twenty years, to help to construct a part of the road; and by so doing, the Government, and this House if it agrees to it, give a certificate of character to the Hudson's Bay road proper. That is just what it amounts to. They give that scheme a standing, and they say to the moneyed people of the world: We have so much faith in this scheme that we are going to assist the company as far as we can, that we are going to assist them at least to build a part of the road, and allow them to find the funds for the construction of the other part of it, if they can. When we look at the matter in that light, we are bound to consider the feasibility of the Hudson's Bay road as a route for the transportation of the produce of the West. Now, Sir, when that scheme came before the House in 1884, I think, the Government were doubtful whether the scheme was practicable or not. They were doubtful whether the navigation of the Hudson's Bay and Straits was such as to warrant this House in endorsing such a scheme as the building of the Hudson's Bay Railway. order to test the matter, and in order to get the fullest information, they sent, for three consecutive years, an expedition to examine into the whole question, and that expedition was entrusted to the charge of a man whom they chose themselves, as they supposed, on account of his peculiar fitness for the office to which he was appointed. Not only did this gentleman navigate the whole of these waters during three consecutive seasons, but he established points of observation along the Straits. so that information might be taken as to the conditions favourable or unfavourable, to navigation, during the whole term of the three years. Now, Sir, after three years of patient observation, after collecting all the facts that he could, after observing himself, and securing the experience of others, | charge to bring against a manin Lieutenant Gordon's Mr. Armstrong.

what conclusions does he come to? In 1886, at the end of the season, he says:

"The season for navigation commences from the 1st to the 10th of July and closes in the first week in October. In his report for 1885, he places the period for navigation at four months in the year, but he points out that the navigation of the Straits in July was very difficult and quite dangerous; that it was retarded by the floating ice, and that it was also impossible to get through before the end of July. Now, I do not want to say that there are not certain years when the season of navigation is not longer than indicated here, but these years are exceptional and the general rule is as stated. When I say that Lieutenant Gordon fixes the first week in October as the time that navigation closes, I may say that he also points out that the difficulty is not so much from new ice forming then, as from the old pack ice congealing together, and making it utterly impossible for vessels to go through, and he adds that during that short time when navigation is opened, it can only be performed successfully as a commercial venture by ships especially built for that purpose and which have a capacity of about 2,000 tons only. He states that navigation is impracticable for ships of a larger capacity than that. Now, Sir, there is another fact which we must take in connection with this matter. Lieutenant Gordon availed himself of all the information that he could get from those who had been in the habit of navigating the Straits and Hudson's Bay, and he gives the testimony of Captain Hawes, who had fourteen years' experience navigating these waters, who places the season of navigation between the middle of July and the middle of October, so that at the very outside there are only three months of navigation, and, as I have pointed out before, navigation during the month of July is difficult and dangerous. Now. Sir, in confirmation of that, let me draw the attention of the Committee to the fact that the Hudson's Bay Company has been for the last two hundred years carrying on a steady and regular trade with that part of the world. They send their ships from Britain over there every year, and it is of the most vital importance that their ships should get to Hudson's Bay at the earliest possible moment, because if they are detained until navigation closes they would have to winter in the ice, and that is very dangerous and very tedious. Now, Sir, Lieutenant Gordon went to York Factory, the point from which the Hudson's Bay shipping is done, and he examined the shipping records there and took the arrivals of 116 vessels. Now, these were not occasional ones which he picked out; but he gives the record of the arrival of 116 vessels, all consecutively, and he tells us that the earliest arrival was on August 6 and the latest on October 7, and the latter was compelled to winter there. He states also that the average of all the arrivals was September 4. Taking all these things into consideration, we are inevitably driven to the conclusion that it is only possible for a vessel of a certain construction to make one round trip between Great Britain and the terminus of the railway in Hudson's Bay in one season. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) tried to throw some doubt on the evidence of Lieutenant Gordon. He said he could only believe that he was prejudiced in the conclusions he drew. I regret that the hon. gentleman is not in his seat to-night, for it is a grave

The Government no doubt honestly tried to get the best man for the position, and I have no doubt that they considered Lieutenant Gordon to Now, Lieutenant Gordon has his be that man. character to maintain, and it is a serious thing even to hint that he had prejudged the case, and had based his conclusions, not on the facts as he found them, but on his preconceived opinions. Therefore, I think we may accept as authoritative his statement that the season of navigation is very short, and that only one trip from Great Britain and back again can be made in one season. Now, Sir, anyone can see at a glance that this fact makes the railway an utter failure as a commercial under-Well, suppose we take the other horn of the dilemma. As I pointed out before, by making this grant at the present time this House gives the company a certificate of charter. It says, in effect, to the capitalists of the old country, that we have confidence in the venture, that we are satisfied that the Hudson's Bay Railway will be a success. We are told now, however, that it is simply a colonization road. Well, Sir, if it is to be a colonization road, and if it is located in the proper place, I see no reason why we should oppose it. have never opposed a colonization railway in Manitoba or the North-West. I have found fault with the system of making grants of land to railway companies without setting any limit to the price at which those companies must sell those lands; but I have never once opposed making grants to colonization railways. Now, what is the first requisite in a colonization railway? It is, it seems to me, that it should run through a country fit for colonization. Now, it will not be denied that the country through which almost the entire length of this projected railway runs is a country not fit for colonization; and when we argue that if it is to be a colonization railway land and money should be granted to it only on condition that it is located in the best place for colonization purposes in that part of the country, we are accused of opposing grants to North-West enterprises, and standing out against North-West interests. I protest against any such assumption. This railway, as originally surveyed, is 250 miles in length. If it crosses the Narrows of Lake Manitoba, as it must, under the present scheme, its length will be so greatly increased as to make it nearly 300 miles long. For what purpose is that We are told that some alluvial route taken? lands lie along the line; but the great bulk of them are flat, marshy lands, with a good deal of timber, which is not particularly needed at Winnipeg at the present time. Now, the very portion of country where a colonization railway is most needed, and where people are now settled and settling, will not be served by this railway at all—that is; to the south and west of Lake Dauphin. This route passes by the Narrows of Lake Manitoba and to the east of Lake Dauphin, and does not touch the country which is fit for settlement and where settlement is going on. By building a railway of about onethird its length the same objective point could be reached. If you start from anywhere between Gladstone and Minnedosa, on the line of the Manitoba and North-Western Railway, you could, with a railway a little more than onelength of the proposed the road, reach the very same point, and have railway com-same time pass through a country all fit for colonization; and would it not be the part of wisdom to select the route most likely to prove a success for a colonization railway? By the other route it never can be a success as a colonization road. Again, if this railway is intended to be a part of the Hudson's Bay scheme, it is all wrong in conception. As I have already pointed out, the great object in railway construction at the present day is to shorten the lines of communication instead of lengthening them. Where does this railway start from? The hon, member for Saskatchewan (Mr. McDowall) is right: he says the railway ought to run through the middle of the country. Certainly it should, if it is to be a through line for carrying produce. But it really starts on the very eastern verge of the wheat-growing country, and it runs for about 150 miles to the west. What is the result? If you want to ship produce by that route to Hudson's Bay you would have to bring the produce over the Manitoba and North-Western Railway, or other railways, for two or three hundred miles to Winnipeg, and then you would have to turn back at anacute angle and carry it back about 150 miles in nearly the same direction before it started towards Hudson's Bay. Whoever heard of such a stupid project? If the railway is to run to Hudson's Bay, although I do not admit it to be practicable, the part of wisdom would be to start it from the point where freight is to be found and run it by the most direct route to the point of delivery. For all of these reasons, I feel it to be my duty to oppose this Bill, and I intend to oppose it at every stage.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before this Bill passes, I just want to say that while we in Ontario would like to see the North-West improved just as rapidly as the interest of the country would permit, and while we wish to afford all the opportunities for colonization that the people of that country require, yet we find that the people there have a certain amount of railway accommodation at present, and that even the choice sections are as yet very sparsely settled; and we know that one of the reasons why a great many people have left the North-West country is that the settlement has not been contiguous. All who have had experience of the early settlement of the Province of Ontario, as I have had, know that wherever a country is thinly settled the inhabitants cannot get along as well as they can in a closely-settled country, either with regard to roads, schools, churches or local improvements. So that it is in the interest of the country that those portions which are already provided with railway communication should be more rapidly settled up. I think we, in the Province of Ontario, have some cause to call a halt. In the early days of settlement in that province the people suffered as great hardships as the people of the North-West do to-day. I can go back to the time when we had no railway accommodation, when we had no such things as markets, when the whole of our grain-I speak of the County of Huron-had to be stored on the shores of Lake Huron during the winter; and I was very much amused when I heard the hon, member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) state that it did not injure the farmer to have his grain kept in store during the winter. like asking him who paid the interest and the storage of grain, and who suffered the loss by munication all the way to Winnipeg, and at the shrinkage. It is not the grain dealer, because he makes his calculations, and the farmer has to take that much less for his produce. To such an extent was that the case, that after I settled in the west of Ontario we sold good wheat for three York shillings a bushel time and again, and oats at a York shilling a bushel, and had to take a bill at six months. Before we got railway accommodation in the county I have the honour to represent we had to come forward and subscribe ourselves, and the County of Huron gave $240,000 to assist in building the Buffalo and Lake Huron branch of the Grand Trunk Railway. Since Confederation became an accomplished fact, we believed that it was only roads of national importance which were going to be built by the Dominion Government, and that all roads of provincial importance only would have to be assisted by the local municipalities and Governments; and the Province of Ontario, in good faith, went to work, both Government and municipalities, and subsidized railways, until over $9,000,000 have been granted by the municipalities alone of Ontario to subsidize local roads, believing that the other provinces would do the same, and that the Dominion Government would only build such roads as the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Intercolonial Railway, and other roads of national importance. Since Confederation the County of Huron has given $390,000 in bonuses to build local roads, and many of the municipalities are not clear of that debt yet. They have been paying interest and sinking fund for over twenty years on their subsidies to obtain railway accommodation for themselves, and now we are asked to come forward and build, not only leading roads in the North-West, such as the Canadian Pacific Railway, but colonization roads also. I say it is in the interests of the country that we should look well to what we are doing at present, considering the position of Canada, considering the circumstances of the older provinces and the commercial depression they have been passing through; it is certainly time the Government should call a halt, and only spend money where it is absolutely necessary. As has already been said, the expenditure cannot be shown to be a necessity in that country, where there is very little land in reality fit for settlement. If the Government pursue such a course of giving large money grants to a road not even located, and allowing contractors to locate their own roads, and build where it suits them best, that is a condition of things which should come to an end in Canada—and the more rapidly the better. We all desire to see the North-West, where many of us have our friends and relations, grow and prosper along with ourselves, but now that they have railway accommodation in many parts, and that the resources of this country are not in the most flourishing condition, they should not call on us for further sacrifices. And I am afraid, from the statements given in the two discussions that have taken place, this is not a road leading to Hudson's Bay at all; and even if it were, from the statements made and not successfully contradicted, it is not a practical route over which to carry the produce of the North-West to the English market. If this is only a colonization road, I hope the Government will consider what the older provinces have done, and allow the people in the North-West to assist themselves, as we in the older provinces have done.

Mr. LAURIER. The other day, the hon. Minister of the Interior promised to lay on the Table consecutive arrivals.

of the House, not only the list of shareholders, but also a statement of the number of shares held by each shareholder. The promise the hon. gentleman made on that occasion was very distinct, and I am not aware that he has complied with it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. At the time I said I would endeavour to get the information asked for by the hon, member for South Norfolk, and I was under the impression I would be able to get it from the president of the company. But he told me he could not get the information down for a week or ten days, and on my return I think I stated that to the House. Subsequently I received a memorandum from him which I read to-day, which showed me that the position of the company was different from what I understood it to be when speaking to him, and the subsequent memorandum I have produced to-day shows that it was impossible to get that information. But the president gave what information he possibly could in the memorandum I have read, in which he states that, as most of the shareholders are purchasers from the original purchasers, and that the shares have frequently changed hands, the company has no knowledge of the amount the present shareholders have paid for their stock. When I made the statement that I would endeavour to get that information I expected to be able to get it from the company.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand it, the amount which appears to have been paid by the shareholders, $285,795, does not appear to have been all paid for in money. I have been told that shares were given for services rendered as well as for money. Could the hon, gentleman tell me what proportion was given for each?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hon. Minister could tell us how much money the company have on hand?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot say.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Have they any at all?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That I do not know.

Mr. MULOCK. What amount in all has been paid in cash by the shareholders, on account of their shares?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That question has been put to me by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before recess the hon. Minister stated that a contract had been entered into, although the line had not been located, between the railway company now incorporated and a contracting firm, for the construction of the road. Is the hon, gentleman prepared to lay that contract, or a copy of it, on the Table?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have it here, and will submit it now.

Mr. CASEY. I have already said that I did not intend to discuss in detail the question of the navigability of Hudson's Bay at this stage, but I want to say a few words in reply to my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong). He said that Lieutenant Gordon obtained at York Factory the dates of the arrival and departure of vessels for a period of 116 years.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. A hundred and sixteen consecutive arrivals.

Mr. CASEY. These were, of course, the arrivals and sailings of the Hudson's Bay Company's own schooner, which comes out annually from England. Now, this schooner is a small sailing vessel, and her captain naturally wishes, having only one trip to make in the summer, to make it at the time when it can be made with the least trouble and with the greatest speed. Consequently, this vessel starts from ; Scotland every year at such a time as to reach the Straits when they are practically clear of ice, so that she may be able to sail in and sail out without being bothered by ice at all. My hon, friend draws the conclusion from this that only one trip a year would be practicable between Great Britain and York Factory or Fort Churchill. That statement is not justified by the facts. This vessel makes only one trip, and that at the time when it is most easily made. It does not follow that the channel is not navigable at other times. If my hon, friend's rule were followed, I think the arrival of ocean steamers at Montreal in the spring would be much later than it is now. I have here a letter which I will read at length, on another occasion, from a captain who has commanded the Hudson's Bay vessel for twenty years, and who gives his opinion of the navigability of the Straits, and that differs entirely from the opinion expressed by my hon, friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong). This captain, who has been there for twenty years, thinks those waters are navigable for a much longer time than does my hon. friend from South Middlesex, who has never been there in his life, and probably never enquired into the matter until this session, when he felt he should oppose this Bill. I have also here a paper which was read by Commodore Markham, of the Royal Navy, before the Royal Geogra-phical Society of London. He came out with Commander Gordon on the Alert, and went through the Straits with him and through Hudson's Bay. His opinion, also, differs very much from that of my hon. friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong), and also from that of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who seem to think they know more than this eminent Arctic Commodore Markhain was with Sir John Nares in his polar expedition in 1874-5, and has had great experience in regard to ice navigation. I might quote from a speech of Sir Charles He said: Tupper at the same meeting.

"Under these circumstances, it was very gratifying to learn that Commodore Markham was able to add his personal testimony to the experience of those who had endeavoured to open up that country, and to give so many reasons for entertaining the belief that it might be found practicable to establish a comparatively safe route for the trade for several months of the year. It was true that the officers sent there by the Canadian Government had not taken so sanguine a view, but Commodore Markham was a higher authority than any one who had been employed there by the Government."

I only quote that to show that Sir Charles Tupper knows that Commodore Markham is a far better authority than Commander Gordon. My hon, friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) takes it for granted that the Government got the best man when they got Commander Gordon. I am not disposed to admit that, although this evening I am speaking somewhat in support of the policy of the Government. Commander Gordon had no better qualification for this work than any other officer of his rank. He had no experience of ice work, and, as Commodore Markham shows, he did not know how to handle a vessel in the ice or how to find the shortest channel through it. I have also letters, which I will quote on another occasion, from nearly all the observers who were left by Commander Gordon on the shores of Hudson's Straits while observations were being carried on there, and nearly every one of them contradicts the conclusions which Commander Gordon arrived at from those observations. And I think those who made the observations at first should have more authority than the gentleman who simply made conclusions from those observations. I was astonished to hear my hon, friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong), and I would have been more astonished to hear my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) suggest that we must not even hint that Commander Gordon could be prejudiced in this matter; that he must be an impartial witness and must be absolutely trusted. Considering the amount of feeling and of animus which has been shown in this debate, I was surprised to hear hon, gentlemen who oppose this Bill pleading in this manner for Commander Gordon. If it is not to be endured that we should hint at any prejudice or anything of that sort on the part of Commander Gordon, what are we to say when the hon, member for North Wellington thinks it proper and gentlemanlike to hint at, or rather to impute, in plain language, the basest motives to those who are promoting this Bill. shall we say to those-I will not say those, but rather that gentleman, for I am only alluding to one—who has been so insultingly careless of the reputation of members of this House, of members of his own party, and of his own personal friends, as to say that those persons or that person, as it may be, are actuated by improper and base motives? I say that charity should begin at home, and that before we are so peculiarly careful of the reputation of Commander Gordon we should look after our own reputation here, and should not cast upon members of the same House the stigma of being actuated by interested motives, and that without a particle of proof to sustain such an accusation. My hon, friend from South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) said that if we voted this we would be giving our pledge that this railway would be a success. We would not be doing anything of the kind. It would simply be an expression of our opinion that the part of the railway to the Saskatchewan would be a success. Beyond that, we are informed that this Government does not propose to give any assistance. The Government of Manitoba, which may be supposed to be better informed than this Government is in reference to that country, has made a grant of a large sum of money for the Hudson's Bay extension, which is only to be paid when the road is completed. I have found a memorandum which I had lost which answers another part of my hon. friend's statements, viz.: that the land was not good. Mr. Macoun, speaking of the country between Porcupine Mountain and Winnipegoosis, says:

"My own observations and the knowledge I could pick up from other sources led me to believe that valuable spruce and poplar forests are found around every point of the Porcupine Mountains.

"I know the eastern and northern sides are a continuous spruce forest, along the base and up the sides. At the southern end I penetrated the hills and found fine spruce in groves, and of very considerable size. White spruce never grows on wet or marshy ground in the West, and wherever these spruce are found there is no swamp.

"On the slope of the mountain I saw balsam poplar six on the slope of the mountain I saw balsim popular six feet in diameter, while in some cases the spruce reached a thickness of nearly four feet. This forest is more ancient looking than any other that came under my observation in the North-West.

"I conclude that the land here is well suited for culti-

"Mr. Frank Moberly, a Civil Engineer, Canadian Pacific Railway survey, who ran the lines on part of the Mackenzie route, says:

"From Swan River, the country along north of Duck and

"From Swan River, the country along north of Duck and Riding Mountains was found on examination to be nearly level, thickly wooded with spruce, poplar and some maple. A few small lakes and marshes were also found. Soil, sandy loam, and admirably fitted for farming."

"Mr. J. W. Spencer, of the Geological Survey, speaking of the country around Duck Bay, in the northern part of Lake Winnipegoosis, says:—

"As we went north of Duck Bay the richness and luxuriance of the vegetation increased. The banks became higher and the forest trees of larger size. As we proceeded up the lake the country constantly improved. The shore marshes became less and less, and finally disappeared. The timber increased in size, and at Pine River spruce of large size were abundant. Very fine forests were noticed at Duck Bay, but oak had disappeared and the balsam fir has taken its place."

These are a few samples of what can be drawn from the reports of the explorers of that country, and they are worth infinitely more than the wild guesses of these gentlemen, who have never been there, and have never taken the means of ascertaining from reliable reports what the country is like, or whether it is fit for settlement. Apparently they do not wish to think it is fit for settlement, because they have made up their minds to oppose this Bill. Some of those who have spoken against this measure speak as if they were open to reason on the subject; others speak as if they had made up their minds beyond all peradventure, as the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says he has. He declares that all sensible men have made up their minds against the Bill, and, therefore, everybody who thinks otherwise has not an atom of sense in his composition. Well, it is a very enviable state of mind to be in-to believe that all sensible men must think as you do. I confess, although there is a tendency in that direction in human nature, I have never been able myself to arrive at that sublime pitch of selfappreciation, and I must say that I envy the hon, member for North Wellington the calm serenity with which he sits in his chair and feels that all the sensible men in the House must speak his sentiments and agree with his opinions. I am sure I should gladly forfeit several years of my parliamentary existence to be able to attain to that subline condition of mind. I shall not, therefore, say that all sensible men believe as I do on this matter, but I believe that those who will go into the matter with unprejudiced minds, looking at the facts on both sides, will not be so positive as some of them appear to be now in opposing this measure. Now, that is all I wish to say upon the matter at present. After so many challenges have been directed from gentlemen opposing this measure, challenges to say anything in reply to their assertions, I did not think that I should let the Bill go out of Committee without pointing out what I intended to prove at a later stage of the measure.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister is kind enough to put the contract in my hands that I asked for. I find it is pretty much as he stated himself, that the line which has been contracted to be built is one entirely within the control of the than 20 miles in width in many places, situated Mr. CASEY.

company itself, and the location of that line is not in any way subject to the approval or direction of the Government for the time being. One section of the contract that I think the Committee should consider at the present time is the fourth, from which it appears that, so far as the contract itself goes, the House is not in a position to know whether the line runs east or west of Lake Mani-A subsequent clause in the contract provides that if the company is determined that the line shall cross the Narrows and go west of Lake Winnipegoosis a certain consideration shall be paid to the contractors. That is a matter to which I merely wish to draw the attention of the Committee, that the location of that line is one entirely in the control of the company, and the House has no guarantee whatever that the line will be built either east or west of Lake Manitoba, or that it will cross the Narrows at all, and we are voting this entirely in the dark. Of course, I speak with great diffidence in the matter, because I have not heard from the Minister or any gentleman support-ing the Bill a statement as to the character of the country on the east side of this lake. But supposing it is built east of the lake, I have not heard anybody undertake to say that there is any positive information assuring the House that the country east of Lake Winnipegoosis is such a one as will justify this House in voting such a large sum of money to open it up with a colonization road. It seems to me that all the conversation that has taken place in the last hour with reference to the navigability of the Hudson's Bay is entirely wide of the mark. is now admitted, it is now stated explicitly by the Minister, that there is no intention on the part of the Government to subsidize a road having in view at all the opening up of a line of communication with Hudson's Bay. This road for which we are asked to vote this money is purely and simply a colonization road, and the objections which seem to me to be very strong with reference to the proposition now before the House are, that the locality which that road is going to open up is an unknown locality, and the Government themselves do not know where it is going to run, and they are subsidizing a road which may run either east or west of this lake, which may cross the Narrows or may not cross the Narrows; and so we are to vote that money in the dark.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wish to say one word with regard to the location of the road east of the lake. If the road went across the Narrows and was located west of the lake it would go into a district in which, I believe, there are already a number of settlers; if it is located east of the lake and extended beyond the point where it is now constructed northward to the Saskatchewan River it runs through a country that is not yet surveyed, that the Government have not seen proper to open for settlement. I am now speaking of the locality between the two lakes. It would run through a district where, if it is fit for settlement, the settlers would be within easy access of navigable waters, and where, without a railway, they would not be seriously incommoded. I think that where our means are limited, and our territory is well nigh unlimited, it is a mater entitled to the serious consideration of the House whether you propose to build a road in a narrow strip of land, not more where, if it is fit for settlement, there are navigable waters which will enable those who settle in the country to reach, during the season of navigation, the principal centres of trade and commerce.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I must say I agree with a great deal of what has been said by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). My impression is that the best line for colonization would be to cross the Narrows and go on the west side of Winnipegoosis. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman when he says that the country between Lake Winnipegoosis and Lake Manitobais a country unknown, and respecting which no surveys have been made. I admit that through a certain portion of it there is water on both sides within some miles distant, but it is only navigable for a certain portion of the Exploration surveys have been made on the east and west of the lake. I will read an extract from a report made by Mr. Neilson to the directors of the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Rail. way Company some years ago. The surveyor says:

"The country between these points (Winnipeg and Grand Rapids on the Saskatchewan), a distance of 242 miles, is very flat and almost free from rock, except in the immediate neighbourhood of certain parts of Lake Winnipeg shore. The first 30 miles of it is prairie land similar to that in the rest of Manitoba, After passing through this there is a well-wooded country with many open plains extending as far as Fairford on the Partridge Crop River. All of this country offers great inducements to the settlers, and it is already occupied by farmers and fishermen along a large portion of the lakes and Swan Creek, which flows into Lake Manitoba, north of Oak Point Mission. It is well watered with many lakes, round which there are splendid hay lands and clearings for Point Mission. It is well watered with many lakes, round which there are splendid hay lands and clearings for cattle grazing; especially is this the case at the Rat Lakes, about 75 miles from Winnipeg. After leaving these, the line passes close to Dog Lake, an offshoot of Lake Manitoba. This lake is about 14 miles long, and drains the best piece of farming land on Lake Manitoba. From this point to Fairford Mission (which is about 132 miles from Winnipeg) there is a little muskeg; otherwise the same good country prevails. There will be little or no difficulty in constructing the line so far, as the country is so level that, beyond raising the track and draining, no further construction would be required. There are no rivers to bridge. Fairford itself has already a good settlement, and only awaits a means of outlet to rapidly establish itself as an important agricultural and lumbering centre. It is one of the oldest missions in the country. There is a great quantity of exceedingly fine spruce and poplar all of the oldest missions in the country. There is a great quantity of exceedingly fine spruce and poplar all through this country, the spruce attaining to an enormous size, often growing from three and four feet across the stump. After leaving Fairford, the Partridge Crop River is crossed by the line at a point about 2½ miles from its exit from Lake Manitoba. The whole section of this country is excellent for settlement, and there is plenty of fine timber in its vicinity. A bridge 250 feet long would be required to cross the Partridge Crop, which here has high banks of clay and a gravel bottom. From Fairford to the Saskatchewan is about 110 miles, and, with the exception of the first few miles after leaving Fairford, the country round the Fish Lakes and the head waters of the War Path and Twin Rivers is a lumbering country."

That report is as to the land running up between The character of the country on the two lakes. the west side of Lake Winnipegoosis is very well known, for settlement has extended from the Canadian Pacific Railway as far as Dauphin Lake, and is continually growing north.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman say that the land between the two lakes north of the Narrows has been surveyed?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.

Mr. WATSON. In what year was that report made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Seven or eight years ago, country on the west side of Lake Winnipegoosis, I have here a report made by Mr. Cunningham in He says:

"It is in the Swan River Valley, however, t...at the richest and most extensive area of agricultural country is found. The valuable part of this valley, or rather basin, begins at the eastern slope of Thunder Hill and extends in a north-easterly direction to Swan Lake. It is bound on the north and north-west by Swan Lake and Porcupine Mountains; on the west by Thunder Hill; on the south by Duck Mountains, and on the east by an elevated ridge which lies between it and Lake Winnipegoosis. Its extent is about 60 miles in length by 20 miles in width (768,000 acres). The soil is remarkably rich and productive. Throughout it consists of plains clothed with tall succulent grasses, alternating with clumps and strips of timber, well-grown and admirably adapted for building purposes. At the lower end, that is near Swan Lake, the timber is more varied than in any part of the country yet described. Here one may see spruce, tamarack, oak, elm, poplar, maple and birch, each species being represented by trees of very considerable growth. In the gardens attached to a few houses forming a little hamlet at the mouth of Swan River I had occular demonstration of the productive newer of the soil. This really

In the gardens attached to a few houses forming a little hamlet at the mouth of Swan River I had ocular demonstration of the productive power of the soil. This valley is looked upon by the natives as the garden of the district. First autumn frost noticed 15th September, when the thermometer registered two degrees of frost. Early summer frost (so the half-breed settlers say), is unknown, and that in every way the climate is well adapted for agricultural purposes.

"The country from Lake Dauphin to the Swan River Valley may be described as alternate strips of timber land and meadow, a proportion of about two to one. This character of country and timber gradually changes as we ascend towards Duck Mountain—the timber becomes larger and the 'opens' fewer. At about 5 miles from Mossy River (the discharge of Lake Dauphin) we meet with spruce and tamarack. As we continue, the size and quantity increases. At 30 miles many white spruce, 30 inches in diameter, of thoroughly sound quality, can be obtained. From here on for 50 miles, when we turn the north-east corner of Duck Mountain, this heavy character of timber is maintained. On the banks of Mossy River there is a strong loamy clay, producing rich vegetation. Further on we reset the meadow before alluded to where there is a strong loamy clay, producing rich vegetation. Further on we reach the meadow before alluded to, where there is a very luxuriant growth of long grass."

With respect to the country on the western side of Lake Winnipegoosis, from reports in possession of the Department and from the reports made by surveyors in connection with the Indian reserves, I am led to believe that within twenty years that portion of Manitoba will be the garden of our western country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not wish to be misunderstood by the hon, member for Elgin (Mr. The reasons for my opposition to this Bill are as follows: In the first place, I consider the expenditure of the money proposed is, under present circumstances, unnecessary. We have in the North-West a sufficient quantity of land open for settlement, in the meantime, without any further expenditure of money, even for colonization railways. In the next place, I contend that the utilization of Hudson's Bay as a route for the exportation of grain from the North-West is not a necessity. The Minister of the Interior says it is only as a colonization road he asks this subsidy, and not with the intention of extending the road to Hudson's Bay. If I have read the Act aright on which the Province of Manitoba has granted aid, I am led to conclude that the people of that Province anticipate its extension to Hudson's Bay. If the Minister will carefully look into the Act he will find that the Manitoba Government have made their grant with the full understanding that the road will ultimately reach Hudson's Bay. That is the condition of their grant. Accordingly, the position of their grant is, probably nine years ago. With respect to the apparently, different from that of the grant now asked. contend that, in the meantime, the period has not arrived, even supposing that Hudson's Bay was navigable for many more months in the year than is the case, when this expenditure should be made, and the application is premature. place. I contend that there are whole sections in this Dominion where the people have been compelled to place themselves under very serious financial embarrassment for the purpose of constructing interest of the country. lines for their own immediate accommodation, and that these people are now, and have been for the past ten years, contributing to the construction of railways in every section of the country, including Manitoba and the North-West, and have never received one single farthing towards the construction of their own lines or towards relieving the debt which has been incurred by them for the construction of these lines. I contend that, under that condition of things, it is unjust and unfair to these people to continue subsidizing lines in sections of the country where there is no immediate necessity for them, while you leave these people struggling under heavy embarrassments and compel them to contribute their mite towards the construction of such schemes as the Hudson Bay Railway. Now, with regard to the principle which I expressed my regret should have been adopted by my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey), it is this: We have continuously, and I think unitedly, advocated on this side of the House for the last ten years, that members of Parliament personally interested in the promotion of any railway or other scheme should not take an active part in urging upon the House the granting of aid for that particular scheme. Take the case of the late member for Lincoln, who was compelled to present to this House his resignation, and to return to his constituency. That gentleman stated in his address to his constituents afterwards that there dozens of men in this House guilty of the charge for which he had been tried and virtually dismissed. Now, I do not want, and I should be sorry to see any member on this side of the House who could have a finger pointed at him in the same direction. or who could be charged with similar action. hope that the hon, member has seen his way to adopt the course he has taken, but at the moment I thought it was not in line with the principles which we have adopted on this side of the House. I know that on the other side of the House I have seen members of Parliament, who I believe are conscientious and honest men, withdraw from the House when questions came up in which they were personally interested, and decline to either speak or vote upon them. I give them credit for that, and I could name these members, but I have no desire to mention names. I believe that that is the principle which should be followed out. tend that under present circumstances, and in view of the condition of things which I have described as existing in the section of the country from which I come; in view of the struggle of these people who have been compelled to build their own roads, there should be no public money put into a scheme of this kind, which virtually will amount to $1,600,000 altogether, for the construction of a road which is not needed at present. If all the North-West were settled up, if our land that is now open for settlement was pretty well taken hold

Whatever the result of that may be, I House to provide for the influx of settlers into new sections, but while we have an enormous quantity of land open for settlement we should not go on spending money in building colonization roads, and committing the people of this country In the next to a further indebtedness, in order to carry out schemes of this kind. I am opposed to that policy, and I do not care who advocates it, whether it be a Reformer or a Conservative, I say it is not in the

> Mr. CASEY. I rather thought, when my hon. friend from North Wellington commenced his remarks, that he was going to apologize for the most improper and unfair attack which he made upon me at an earlier stage of the proceedings. I was quite prepared to accept any sort of an apology, because I did not expect the hon, gentleman would go very far in that direction; but since he has attempted to draw some sort of a parallel between the action of members of Parliament who lay before the House facts connected with a corporation of which they happen to be members, and the conduct of Mr. Rykert, he has put himself in such a position that no member of this House, with any self-respect, can make any reply to his accusations. I reiterate my belief that it is perfectly parliamentary, perfectly fair, and perfectly proper that those members of the House who are connected with any corporate body which is asking a favour at the hands of this House should lay before the House such facts bearing on the case as are in their possession. It is perfectly proper that a member should do so. As to my having a direct personal interest in this matter, I may say that I have no more interest in it than any other shareholder, and what member of this House is not a member of some company that might come before this House asking for legislation? What member of the House so connected with a company would hesitate to lay the facts before hon. gentlemen? I do not urge the House to do one thing or the other; I tell them what I know on the subject, and what I suppose some other gentlemen do not know, and I leave it to them to decide. I do not intend to vote on this question: I never had the slightest intention of voting upon it, for I feel in that respect as other hon, gentlemen have felt under similar circumstances. I may mention that when the present Premier (Mr. Abbott) had a seat in this House, and when he was solicitor for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, he did not vote on any question affecting the company, although he gave information and explanations about them. Again, our former Speaker, the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), is now a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I do not think that he is to be precluded from discussing matters connected with that corporation. Parliamentary usage has always been consistent in this respect: That no member shall be shut off from expressing his views on any question by the fact that he may happen to be a shareholder in any company whose affairs were being discussed in this House. My hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is mis-taken in supposing that the Liberal party have ever held that a member's mouth should be stopped in that way.

Mr. LISTER. I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was rather of, I would not say that it was not the duty of this unfortunate in the comparison he made when he compared my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) with the late member for the County of Lincoln. The late member for the County of Lincoln received substantial advantages from his position as a member of Parliament, while my hon, friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey), so far as I am able to judge, will receive no advantages at all.

Mr. CASEY. I will receive substantial losses.

Mr. LISTER. So far as I can see, this stock that my hon, friend has is not worth half a cent a bushel if he had the whole of it; so that he can hardly be charged with trying to advance his own personal interests in the scheme now before Parliament. I agree to a great extent with what has been said, that if a member of this House is personally interested in a scheme before the House it would be bad taste on his part to vote in favour of the proposition; but even if my hon, friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) thought proper to vote, under all the circumstances, and from the experience we have had of the past, it can be safely said that he has no substantial interest whatever in this railway, even if he owned the whole stock. bondholders I fancy will after a time own whatever there is. So far as the position of members is concerned, I infinitely prefer the position of my hon, friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald), who I understand has a judgment for $30,000 against this road. His position will be far better than the position of the hon, member for Elgin (Mr. Casey), and if I were asked to select as between the two, I would certainly take the position of my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Macdonald). I am not prepared to say whether this scheme is one which ought to be subsidized by this Parliament or not. The Minister of the Interior read a very glowing account of the fertility of the soil in that section, and of the prospective advantages of this road. I have been long enough in this House to know that these are rose-coloured representations to a certain extent, and that when the matter; comes down to a solid basis we find that a good many of the representations are not borne out by the facts. There is no doubt that this House is determined that the Bill

Mr. WATSON. Before the discussion closes I wish to say that after listening to the remarks of the hon. Minister of the Interior I have come to the conclusion that this debate would not have lasted as long as it has done if that hon, gentleman had been in a position to give this House the information to which I think it is entitled for the proper consideration of this measure. It appears to me that, in view of the action of the Government both this session and last session, they should be prepared to state that this railway will run either not further north than the Narrows of Lake Manitoba or else south of Lake Manitoba, for this reason: At the last session of Parliament I promoted a Bill for the incorporation of a strong company, which I railway through that country last year; and that i only fair that the Government should give some Bill was defeated at the instance of the promoters assurance that the people in the Lake Dauphin

is, that if it is to become law, and the Government having so determined; if the statement of the Minister of the Interior is to be received, the Government has determined that this Bill shall become law, and I do not see that its continued discussion will do any particular good. I, for one, would be prepared to have the discussion closed up now.

of the Hudson's Bay Railway. The railway which I promoted was intended to run from Portage la Prairie to the Lake Dauphin country and to the west of the country described by the hon. Minister of the Interior. The reason given at that time by the late First Minister for his refusal to grant a charter to that company was that it was for the construction of a railway which might conflict with the Hudson's Bay Railway. If that argument was good then, I think it is the duty of this House to see that the people who were intended to be accommodated by that railway shall be accommodated by the Hudson's Bay Railway to which it is proposed to make this grant of $80,000 a year for twenty years. Now, the hon. Minister has given a glowing report of the tract of country between the two lakes. Personally, I know nothing of it, and I believe that personally he knows nothing of it either, because the report from which he read is in a pamphlet which was written eight or ten years ago by a gentleman who passed throught that country. The country has never been surveyed, and, therefore, the hon. Minister cannot have any field-notes to guide him in form-ing an opinion of it. The country to the west of Lake Manitoba and Lake Dauphin has been surveyed; it is a good country; and several townships in it are so well settled that to day you cannot find a vacant section. But the people there are a hundred miles from any railway communication. They went there with the prospect of railway accommodation, which has not yet been furnished to them; and the Government appear willing to allow the Hudson's Bay Railway to be constructed in another part of the country altogether. I am rather surprised that the hon. Minister of the Interior, who represents the district of East Assiniboia in the North-West, should not insist, in the interest of his constituents, that that railway should be built to the west of Lake Winnipegoosis; because he can easily understand, as can any member of this House by looking at the map, that if this railway is built to the west of Lake Winnipegoosis and through the Dauphin settlement it will afford accommodation to the greatest number of settlements in the North-West Territories—to the Regina, the Brandon and the Prince Albert settlements. By the proposed route the distance to Grand Rapids, the hon. Minister states, will be 242 miles. If that is the case, it must be at least 300 miles to the crossing of the Saskatchewan west of Cedar Lake. should like to see this House insist that the Hudson's Bay Railway Company shall carry their road either across the Narrows of Lake Manitoba or to the south of Lake Manitoba, to accommodate that settlement, which, as the hon. Minister knows, is a good country. There are probably a dozen townships of six miles square each where you will hardly find a vacant section, and notwithstanding that the odd sections are reserved for railway purposes, the land is so good that the people have squatted on them, with the chance of getting them at a fair price when they are disposed of by the railway company. Notwithstanding the hon. Minister's statement that this is only a colonization railway, a great many people hope that it will be continued to Hudson's Bay, and will become a competing line for the wheat and cattle trade of the believed was prepared to build a hundred miles of North-West. With all these reasons before us, it is district will receive some accommodation from a company which was the means of preventing their getting that accommodation a year ago. I think that before this Bill receives its third reading the Government should, in all fairness, give us this assurance.

Mr. CAMPBELL(Kent.) Before this debate closes I want to say a word or two. When the resolutions on which this Bill is founded were before the House some two weeks ago the arguments then addressed to the House in support of the resolutions were in favour of the Hudson's Bay Railway as an additional outlet for the grain and cattle products of the North-But I fancy that the speech of my hon. friend from East Sincoe (Mr. Spohn), in which he showed the impracticability of that water way, has induced the hon. Minister of the Interior to change his mind on the subject; and he has told us now that the Government have no intention at all of making this railway a part of the Hudson's Bay Railway, but that it is to be purely a colonization road. Therefore, all the arguments addressed to the House the other day have fallen to the ground. considering the question of the advisability of aiding this railway as a colonization road, several questions arise. In the first place, a colonization road should only be built in a country fit for settlement. Upon that point there seems to be quite a difference of opinion. It has been stated by the hon. member for South Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong) that the country through which this road will run is altogether unfit for settlement, and it has been stated by the hon. Minister of the Interior that it is a good country, heavily timbered with spruce, poplar and other kinds of wood, some of which are as much as four feet through. Of course, if the country is fit for settlement and heavily timbered it ought to be a great deal easier to construct a railway through it, and it will pay much better than if it passed through a country from which no local traffic could be derived; and if the country is as good as the hon. Minister states there ought not to be much difficulty in constructing the railway with the amount of aid which has already been given to it by the Manitoba Government, amounting, I believe, to $1,500,000, which would be equal to about $2,400

Mr. DEWDNEY. The Manitoba Government are giving nothing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand they have guaranteed $1,500,000 when the road is completed to Hudson's Bay. Am I right?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent.) That would be a grant of $2,400 a mile to the road. Then this Parliament has already made a grant of 6,400 acres of land per mile within the Province of Manitoba. Outside the Province of Manitoba, I believe the grant is 12,000 acres per mile. Now, supposing the land is valued at $1 per acre—and if it is heavily wooded, as the hon. Minister of the Interior says it is, it will be worth double that amount; but even taking it at $1 an acre, then the land grant would amount to $6,400 a mile, and the grant by the Manitoba Government would be $2,400 a mile, which would make $8,800 a mile already pledged to the building of this road. Now, the hon. Minister of the Interior has produced a contract, under which the whole road is to be built at $11,000 a Mr. Warson.

mile, so that it seems to me the amount already pledged to the building of this road is quite sufficient to ensure its completion, and if we go on and grant this $80,000 for the next twenty years, or, in round numbers, $1,600,000, we will be giving an additional $7,600 a mile cash bonus to this road. So that when the Manitoba grant, our land grant made, and the bonus proposed to be given in this Bill, are considered, this road will receive altogether about $16,400 a mile, and the contract now let for its completion calls for only $11,000 a mile. In other words, the Government propose to give this road $5,000 a mile more than it will cost to build it, and then the company will own the road and we will have no control whatever over it. It seems to me that is a poor way of doing business. If we have $1,600,000 to invest there are a thousand ways in which we can invest it with far more benefit to the people of the Dominion than in voting money to this scheme; and if the road is to run through such good country as described, the grant we have already made, of 6,400 acres per mile, ought to be sufficient, without our being asked to give $1,000,-000 more. For these reasons, I think this Bill should not receive the support of this House.

On section 1,

Mr. WATSON. Can the hon. Minister give some assurance that the road will pass a point not further north than the Narrows of Lake Manitoba?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not in a position to make that promise.

Mr. WATSON. Do you think you will be in that position before the third reading?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am afraid not.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the gross amount of the various subsidies, Dominion and Provincial, cash and land, per mile?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have not made the calculation. We have not taken into consideration the bonus given by the Manitoba Government at all, because it is perfectly distinct fom this proposition. If the estimate made by the hon, member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) is correct, I shall be very glad, because he considers that, with the bonuses, there will be no difficulty building the road. I hope he will prove correct in that regard, but I have not such a glowing opinion of the scheme as he has in that respect. I do not think the northern portion, that is, from the Saskatchewan to Hudson's Bay, is going to be built at anything like the figures proposed from Winnipeg to the Saskatchewan.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the present value of $80,000 a year for twenty years?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is estimated at $1,600,000.

Mr. MULOCK. That is the gross amount; but what sum of money should be invested by the Government, say at four per cent., to produce this amount net per year? That is the way to ascertain the present cash bonus we are giving.

Mr. FOSTER. About $1,100,000.

Mr. MULOCK. These things ought to be worked out, and we ought not to be giving guess work.

the Manitoba Government would be $2,400 a mile, which would make $8,800 a mile already pledged to the building of this road. Now, the hon. Minister expect to make for the people west of Lake Manitoba and in the Lake Dauphin district? I introduced a Bill last year to give railway which the whole road is to be built at $11,000 a on account of the objections raised by the promoters of the Hudson's Bay Railway.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I was not aware that the opposition came from the Hudson's Bay Company; I understood there was a rival company running alongside the one for which the hon, member applied for a charter, and the opposition came from that company. One of those companies was chartered last year, the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, and that charter exists to-day, and the company has aland grant of 6,400 acres per mile, and I have no doubt that in a short time that railway will be built and will accommodate the whole country mentioned by the hon, gentleman.

Mr. WATSON. The reason given last year by the late First Minister was the fact that this charter, if granted, would interfere with the construc-The same reason tion of the Hudson's Bay road. was given in the Railway Committee, when in that committee it was moved and seconded by the hon. members for Lisgar and Selkirk that this Bill should not be reported to the House because it would interfere with the Hudson's Bay road. Surely the Government ought to see that the people who were deprived of railway communication a year ago on account of the Hudson's Bay road should receive the benefit they ought to derive from that road. That road will run up between the two lakes, and will be of no benefit at all to the people of Lake Manitoba and the Lake Dauphin district. If the reason given a year ago be correct, the Government must have had some policy at that time for the purpose of accommodating these people.

Mr. McMULLEN. I heard the remarks of the hon. Minister of the Interior with regard to my hon, friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell) as to his calculation of the subsidies, and I consider that the statement presented to the House by my hon. friend is quite correct. If you will take the $1,500,000 granted by the Manitoba Government, and calculate the proportion due on this extent of road, now proposed to be built, some 640 miles, you will find that will give $2,043 a mile.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is right.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then you grant a subsidy in land of 6,400 acres to every mile of the road that is built and 12,800 acres outside of the province. Take that at $1 an acre, which is a very low estimate, if you include the land and the timber and everything else which is on it, that would amount to $6,400. Then take the grant which is made by this resolution of $1,600,000 for 210 miles, which is the extent supposed to be built by this grant. That amounts to $7,619 a mile for the 210 miles. Of course, I am aware that it is only payable in instalments extending over twenty years. I do not suppose the question of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) can be answered off hand, but I suppose that this grant of money will amount to $1,300,000, or somewhere about that. That gives $16,362 a mile for the 210 miles which are supposed to be built under the grant now being made under this Bill. If the Minister will carefully look over the figures I think he will find that statement correct, and it is rather singular that we are asked to consent to this grant, when the Minister states that the contract is already let for $11,000 a mile, which I understood includes rails, ballast and which I understood includes rails, ballast and extend to traffic or running arrangements made with the stations, and everything necessary to complete the assent of the Governor in Council."

line, with the exception of one bridge. That would leave a very large margin to be divided amongst the promoters.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I may say, in the first place, that this has to be earned and has to be paid back. In the next place, the hon, gentleman is not quite correct as to the cost of the construction. It is true that the $11,000 includes the amount required for station grounds and rails up to the standard of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but it was estimated that the rolling stock when the road was in working order, and some other matters, would make the total cost $15,000 a mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is the completed line, rolling stock and all. Supposing they are unable to pledge this grant, and this Act allows them to do that, even if the cost is $15,000 a mile, it gives them $1,362 a mile over and above the cost of the

Mr. MULOCK. Apart from the financial features of the scheme, there is another matter about which I would like to have some assurance. would like to know what precautions have been adopted, if any—if the Government sees fit to adopt any-to prevent this road becoming part of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It may be considered by some people desirable that it should be, but I think we are arriving at that state of affairs in the development of the North-West when it is not wise to place any more power than is necessary in the hands of one corporation. I rejoice know that the Canadian Pacific Railway has been able to extend its line from ocean to ocean, but I think it has acquired as many lines by subsidies granted to it by this Government, directly or indirectly, as is in the public interest. I understood that the Hudson's Bay Railway came into existence as a rival road, an independent road, and that it was especially intended to afford some relief to the people of the North-West from the monopoly of which they complained. If that is correct, it is now due to the people who brought this Hudson's Bay Railway into existence with that hope and that expectation that some precaution should be adopted. Otherwise, there will be disappointment., I think there can be too much power vested in one railway company, and I would venture to prophesy that, if we place the great North-West, limitless in its size, and, as we hope, almost limitless in its population and its power in the future, if we place that vast territory, almost that great empire, in the grip of one corporation, we will lose control of our cherished institutions.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It may save the time of the House and possibly may save the hon, gentleman a long speech if I read to him clause 30 of the charter of 1887, which is to this effect:

"The Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway shall not, nor shall any of the branch lines thereof, or any line of railway leased by the company or under its control, be at any time amalgamated with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any of its branch lines, or with any branch lines leased by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or under its control; and such amalgamation and any arrangement for making a common fund or pooling the earnings or receipts of the said two railways or their or any of their branch lines, or of any railway lines or parts thereof leased by the said companies, or either of them, shall be absolutely void; this provision, however, shall not account to traffic or running arrangements made with the

Mr. MULOCK. The saving clause, if they can call it such, gives the whole case away. The Governor in Council can consent to a traffic arrangement, which is the same as a pooling arrangement. I object to this Parliament delegating more powers to the Governor in Council than are absolutely necessary.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Why did you not oppose that?

Mr. MULOCK. It is one thing to give corporate existence to a company, and it is another thing to give money to that company. If the Minister of the Interior contends that that gives the guarantees which the people expect, why did · he not oppose it ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I was not here.

Mr. MULOCK. He was not here, but was he not a citizen of Canada; was he not in the North-West at that time? Why did he not send representations to his colleagues here, and point out to them that the proper guarantees should be given? I am surprised that the Minister of the Interior, instead of sympathizing with this contention, should give such a flippont reply as he has. It is not worthy of him, it is not worthy of the subject under discussion, it is not worthy of the people who have fanned this railway into existence in order to create a rivalry with the Canadian Pacific Railway; and now the only ground they have to stard upon is the strength of the Governor in Council to resist the importunities of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I would not blame the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for trying to bring about traffic arrangements with this new company, They have a right to try to do that if possible, but we know that the Executive is weak, as no doubt all executives are likely to be weak, and it will be left in a very awkward position. There should be another condition put in, providing distinctly that this road shall not fall into the lap of the Canadian Pacific Railway, directly or indirectly, except by the consent of the Parliament of Canada, which brings it into existence. In two other cases of a somewhat similar nature, what have we seen? The Parliament of Canada gave subsidies to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, and to the Regina and Long Lake Railway. Where are these rail-ways to-day? I understand that they are being operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Is not that correct?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They had six years running arrangements, but they have none now. That is ended.

MULOCK. There are no precautions the Interior to deal with this matter except in the best interests of the people. He must understand for Queen's, N. R. (Mr. King). that he and his Government while in office are going to be held responsible. They cannot escape responsibility by attempting to throw it upon somebody else. They are now negotiating legislation, and it is of the first importance in connection with the scheme, in my judgment, that the perfect independence of this road shall be secured, so far as its independence can be secured. If it is left as it is proposed to leave it, under the law the Minister Mr. DEWDNEY.

seen fit to impose in connection with the granting of the charter, we are now at a very different stage in the matter; we are now giving out public money, and giving out public money for the benefit of the people of the North-West, and, we hope, indirectly, for the benefit of the whole Dominion; and we now, representing the people as a whole, are bound to impose proper conditions in connection with this gift. Therefore, I think that the Minister ought to give us pledges that before the House is asked finally to give effect to these proposals there shall be guarantees of the character I have mentioned, and if he will not move them, perhaps somebody else will: perhaps some gentleman representing the North-West or Manitoba will take upon himself the responsibility of seeking to engraft a section, such as I have suggested, upon this obligation. No matter what terms we imposed in granting the charter, we are now granting something of a very much more substantial character. I would like to know whether the Minister of Interior proposes to take any steps in this direction?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I do not.

On section 2,

Mr. DEWDNEY. There was a controversy between the hon, member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) and the hon member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) in reference to the land grant, in which it was stated that there was no provision made by which a third of the land grant could be retained to guarantee the settlement of any arrears which may occur at theend of the 20 years. Consequently, I propose this amendment:

In contracting with the company for the aid given in accordance with the first section of the Act, the Governor in Council shall take from the company an obligation for in Council shall take from the company an obligation for the transport of mails, supplies and materials for 20 years on the company's line between Winnipeg and its terminus on the Saskatchewan River, in consideration of the said aid, and the Governor in Council shall stipulate that in case land so earned by the company by the transport, as aforesaid, shall not amount to the sum to be paid by the Government, the deficiency is to form a lien on the line for one-third of the land grant which may be carned by the company on the line between the end of the 40 miles of said railway as now constructed and the Sasktehewan River.

Bill reported.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: "That the resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means on Tuesday, the 23rd of June, be read the second time: and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). When the House adopted here, and it will not do for the Minister of adjourned on Friday evening we had just listened to a very interesting speech from the hon, member That gentleman, I may say at the outset, in discussing the questions to which he directed our attention, dealt with them in a very fair and practical manner. I am glad to know that that hon, gentleman is a practical business man, and a successful business man, and, as I would naturally expect, he discussed these question which relate to trade matters in the Province of New Brunswick in a practical and business-like manner. The hon, gentleman told us has read, to the Governor in Council, then it is at the outset of his remarks that he did not intend practically leaving it to the Canadian Pacific Rail- to deal generally with the subject referred to in the way. I say that whatever conditions we may have | resolutions we are considering, but that he intended to devote his attention exclusively to matters in which the Province of New Brunswick was particularly concerned. I may say that the hon, gentleman redeemed his promise, and I would desire to commend the very wise discretion which that hon. gentleman used in the selection of the questions to which he directed our attention. The object of the hon, gentleman's specch appeared to be to impress on the House the views, first, that reciprocity with the United States was desirable for New Brunswick, and second, that the National Policy had been a serious injury to that province. The hon, gentleman, I say, very judiciously selected those few among the branches of tradein New Brunswick which gave some colour to the views he endeavoured to give to the House, and he very judiciously avoided making any reference whatever to the great variety of subjects which would entirely have upset his theories and proved that his conclusions were entirely erroneous. The hon, gentleman devoted a great deal of attention to the lumber trade of New Brunswick, to the export trade in line, to the trade in freestone and granite. He gave the House a number of valuable statistics regarding these various industries, and the object he seemed to have in view. from the statistics he presented to the House and the arguments he based upon them, was to show that it would be of advantage to the Province of New Brunswick if we had reciprocity with the United States and had free admission of those articles to the American markets. Well, I may say at the outset, that so far as that portion of the hon, gentleman's speech was concerned I am not disposed to disagree with him. I am not aware that anyone on this side of the House has ever disputed this proposition. I believe, on the contrary, it has always been the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party to obtain a fair reciprocity treaty with the United States, that we have always advocated reciprocity with the United States Grand Lake mines. The city of St. John is not in natural products. The articles to which the more than half the distance from the Grand Lake hon, gentleman referred are all natural products of the Province of New Brunswick. They have been included in every proposition for reciprocity that has ever been made, so far as I am aware. In all negotiations that have taken place these very articles have stood at the head of the The hon, gentleman himself frankly admitted that this was the policy advocated by the candidates in the interests of the Government in the late elections, and he frankly admitted also that he was fully in accord with the Government in this part of their policy. He told us that the only difference between himself and the supporters of the Government was that we thought we could get reciprocity and he did not believe we could. I do not know why the hon, gentleman has come to the conclusion that we cannot get reciprocity. I, for my part, have not reached that conclusion. The hon, gentleman may, of course, be correct. I cannot say positively that we will get reciprocity: but I will say this, that in my opinion we have a better prospect of obtaining reciprocity on fair terms at the present time than we have ever had before since this question was discussed. It is the first time since 1866, when the old reciprocity treaty was terminated, we have had an invitation from the United States to gothere and discuss this question. It is the first time the Government of the United States have expressed any willingness to Bangor or any other American city, even if the discuss with us the terms of a treaty for reciprocal duties were removed. I do not think, as I said at trade between the two countries. The hon, gentleman goes further. He tells us, in relation to the negotiations which are going on, that he hopes hon. gentlemen opposite may succeed in their efforts, and "I am here to night." he says "to admit that if hon. gentlemen can secure from the United States reciprocity in natural products I, for one, will be willing and anxious to accept it." It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that the hon, gentleman on this question is perfectly in accord with the Government of the day. The only inconsistency I discover in the hon, gentleman's position is the position he occupies in this House. I think he should on this question be giving the Government a cordial and generous support. The hon, gentleman tells, and tells us frankly, that he desires the negotiations in October next to succeed; and yet by his conduct in this House he is doing all he can to prevent that success. He tells us he will be satisfied if the negotiations are brought to a successful conclusion, and yet he is doing all he can to defeat the Covernment and prevent those negotiations coming to a successful termination. There was another matter to which the hon, gentleman referred, and which I desire briefly to notice. He referred to the present position of the Grand Lake coal mines, and the hon. gentleman told us that the coal at those mines could be produced for $1 per ton. He told as that if the 75 cents duty, which was the duty imposed at the present time in the United States, were removed, this coal could be taken in considerable quantities and sold in Bangor, Maine, and no doubt other cities in the State of Maine. Knowing the hon, gentleman to be a shrewd, practical business man. I can hardly give him credit for seriousness when he submitted that statement to the House. The hon, gentleman knows he has already a better market then Bangor, Maine, or any other city in the United States can give him, for all the coal they can produce at the mine that Bangor is. He has communication with St. John, not only by rail, but cheap communication by water, and yet those mines are not worked to any great extent; and St. John, which requires coal both for its factories, railways and steamboats. and for domestic purposes, and for forge purposes as well, for which the hon gentleman says this coal is specially adapted, is supplied altogether by mines at a much greater distance than this onefrom the Spring Hill mines, Picton mines, and mines on the Island of Cape Breton. If I am correctly informed, a company was organized not many years ago for the purpose of developing these I am informed they spent a great deal of money in that district, but for some reason or other the project was abandoned. The hon. gentleman probably knows better than I do why that company abandoned the proposal to develop these mines—whether it was because the seams were so thin that the coal could not be produced in sufficient quantities to make it pay, or whether it was due to the quality of the coal, I am not prepered to say: but this, at all events, is evident to any intelligent man, that the same reason which prevented the Grand Lake coal being sold in the market of St. John and other markets in New Brunswick to-day, where there is a large demand for it, would prevent it being sold in first, that the hon. gentleman could, with these facts before him, seriously present this argument to the House as an argument in favour of recipro-city with the United States. Let me say a few words with respect to the effect of the National Policy upon the Province of New Brunswick. hon. gentleman says he opposed the National Policy twelve years ago; he has opposed it since, and I believe he says that he is more opposed to it to-day than he ever has been. The hon, gentleman further volunteered the statement that he did not think any one of the thirteen members from New Brunswick who were supporting the Government in this House would venture to rise in their places and express the opinion that the National Policy had been beneficial to New Brunswick. Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman may be very much surprised, but I wish to inform him that I, for one, have risen in my place, and one of my objects in addressing the House is to assure him, and to assure the House, and to assure the country, that I, for one, am prepared to say that I believe the National Policy has been a benefit to the Province of New Brunswick, as well as to all the other provinces of the Dominion. I further say that I believe every one of these thirteen members who represent constituencies in New Brunswick and who support the Government in this House will endorse the statement which I have just made. The hon, gentleman, in order to impress upon the House the view he takes on this question, selected those industries which he conceived would best support his theory. In addition to this, he endeavoured to leave the impression upon the House that in some way or other—although he did not, I confess, make it very clear to my mind just howbut that, in some way or other, the National Policy prevented the free admission of the articles to which I have referred into the United States' How the hon. gentleman can establish that is something that I have not yet been able to comprehend. Every person in this House knows that the duties upon lumber, the duties upon lime, and the duties upon stone, were imposed by the Congress of the United States at the termination of the old reciprocity treaty, and have been in existence ever since, with, I believe, but very little change. The National Policy was not introduced here until 1879, and I cannot see how the National Policy is in any way responsible for the imposition of the United States duties to which I have referred. But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss this matter a little further with the hon. gentleman. I claim that, taking the very industries, the very trades to which he referred, he did not succeed in one single case in showing from the present condition of any one of these branches of trade that the National Policy had been an injury to New Brunswick. I will ask the indulgence of the House while I take up these very branches of trade which the hon. gentleman selected from all the industries in the Province of New Brunswick, to best support his theory; and I trust I shall be able to show to the House that even in these branches of trade the National Policy has not only been no injury to the Province of New Brunswick, but that it has been a material benefit in many respects, even in those branches of trade. I will first ask the House to Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

think this House will not be able to see, how it is possible that the National Policy could have injured the export trade in lime to the United States. I have only to remind the House that our export trade in lime has been brought into existence, and has enjoyed all the prosperity which the hon. gentleman claims it has enjoyed during the last few years, under the National Policy. If any member of this House chooses to go back to the Trade and Navigation Returns of 1878 he will find that in that year-the year preceding the introduction of the National Policy—we not only had no export trade in lime to the United States, but, on the contrary, we actually imported lime from the United States into the Dominion of Canada; and perhaps the House will be surprised to learn that in 1878 we imported, even into the Province of New Brunswick, over 10,000 barrels of lime from the United States. The National Policy was introduced in 1879, the duty on lime was somewhat increased, and the effect has been, not only to shut out the imports of lime from the United States, but the industry in St. John has greatly increased since The manufacturers of lime in St. that time. John have been able to gain possession of the home markets under the National Policy, and they have greatly extended their operations, and greatly increased their exports to the United States, until last year, as the hon. gentleman said, the exports of lime, after supplying all the home demand, amounted to the value of $140,000. With these facts before us, I think the intelligence of this House will admit that, at all events, the condition of this industry does not furnish the least shadow of proof that the National Policy has been an injury to New Brunswick. With regard to the granite trade—I am not so familiar with it as the hon, gentleman is-from all the statistics I have been able to obtain I believe that the statement I have made in regard to the export trade in lime applies in a very large degree to the granite trade. I desire further to ask the attention of the House to the effect of the National Policy upon the lumber trade in New Brunswick. The duties upon lumber were, as I have already observed, imposed long before the National Policy was thought of, and they have not materially changed since then. National Policy has not affected in the slightest degree the export trade of lumber to the United States, but it has in other ways benefited that trade in the Province of New Brunswick. My hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), when he addressed the House a few days ago, pointed to the fact that in years gone by we imported large quantities of furniture from the United States; he pointed to the fact that after the National Policy was introduced these imports of furniture ceased, that furniture factories were started in the Province of New Brunswick, and that the demand for our native woods was in that way greatly increased. I may say that the effect of the National Policy has not only been to establish a number of manufacturing industries which use the native woods of the Province of New Brunswick as raw material, but that there is scarcely an industry in the whole Maritime Provinces, there is scarcely an industry in the whole Dominion, which has been established under the National Policy—and there are many of them—which do not to a greater or less extent require, directly or indirectly, to use the lumber consider the condition of the export trade in lime require, directly or indirectly, to use the lumber to the United States. I can hardly see, and I which is produced in the provinces of this Dominion.

So that while the National Policy has not in the least affected the export trade to the United States either for better or worse, it has vastly improved the condition of the lumber trade, by greatly increasing the demand for our lumber at home. Let me next ask the House to consider the condition of the trade in stone, to which the hon. gentleman also referred. Every person who knows anything of that trade knows that before the introduction of the National Policy the duties which were imposed upon stone in the United States had practically closed our stone quarries in the Province of New Brunswick. I was surprised myself when I turned to the Trade and Navigation Returns, after listening to the hon. gentleman's speech, to find that in the year 1878 we were supplying our own wants. I find that in 1878 we actually imported from the United States into Canada nearly 40,000 tons and to my great surprise, in the Province of New Brunswick, where stone is so abundant in every section of the province, we actually imported, in 1878, 4,600 tons of American stone. At that time we had no duty on imported stone. The National Policy was introduced in 1879, and duties were then imposed. The present Government said to the people of the United States: we are willing to trade with you in stone, and if you admit our stone into your markets free we will admit yours into our markets free; but if you refuse this offer, and shut us out of your markets, we will do the same: we will at least give to our manufacturers the advantage of their own market. And what has been the result? Not only have the imports of stone been entirely stopped, but the quarries which for years were closed have been in almost every case opened, and are to-day being profitably and successfully worked, and are supplying the demand which exists in the Maritime Provinces. And let me here say that the effect of the National Policy has been to build up in every section of the Maritime Provinces large, important, flourishing and pros-perous manufacturing towns, and in this way to create a large home demand for building stone. But I am glad to find that the quarries are doing even more than supplying the demand in the Maritime Provinces. I need only remind the House that we have here in the city of Ottawa, on Wellington street, a beautiful public building, the stone for which was quarried on the banks of the Miramichi, in the Province of New Brunswick; and I may tell the House that we have in the County of Westmoreland, within five miles of my own home, a stone quarry which has been opened and successfully worked during the last few years, which is prospering to-day, and which not only finds a large demand for all the stone it produces in the cities and towns of New Brunswick, but also shipped last year 1,900 tons of stone to the city of Toronto, and is shipping this year double that amount. By a telegram which I have just received I am informed that this year the shipments to Toronto and other cities in the west will reach 4,000 tons. I may say further, for the information of the House, that I have in my possession letters from stone manufacturers in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, leading men in that industry, who are asking, not I might also remind the hon. gentleman that the that duties shall be reduced, but that they may be inter-provincial trade between the east and the increased, so as to give them still greater control of west, in which the Province of New Brunswick has the markets of the west.

have dealt with every branch of trade and industry to which that hon, gentleman referred in order to support the position he took in this House; and I trust that I have made it plain to the House that not only has the hon, gentleman failed to prove that the National Policy has injured these industries in the Province of New Brunswick, but I have shown, from the very illustrations which he himself brought to our notice, that the National Policy has, even so far as they are concerned, been of great benefit, both directly and indirectly, to the Province of New Brunswick. But, Sir, I might refer in addition to a number of industries which have grown up under the National Policy as illustrations of the great benefits which have resulted from the adoption of that policy. The hon, gentleman himself referred to the cotton mill on the bank of the Nashwauk River. I may say in regard to the owner of that mill, Mr. Alexander Gibson, that there is no more practical, successful or broad-minded business man in the Province of New Brunswick. That gentleman is successfuly carrying on the manufacture of cotton in the large mill which he has built. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. King) stated that Mr. Gibson did not fear competition with the United I believe that gentleman possesses unusual facilities for carrying on his business. may not be able to compete successfuly in the United States; I am not in a position to decide that point; but I do know that that gentleman, who has a practical knowledge of business affairs, and is as good a judge as we can find in Brunswick as to what would be most New advantageous to that province, is an advocate of the National Policy, believes in its principles, and is a supporter of my hon. friend who represents the constituency in which he lives. I might also refer not only to the cotton factories and the sugar refineries which have been established in the Maritime Provinces as a direct result of the adoption of the National Policy, but I might include as well the rolling mills, the nail factories, the carriage factories, the furniture factories, and numberless other industries, which are prosperous to-day in that province as a result of the policy of the present Administration. I might also direct the attention of the House to the fact that we have a number of manufacturing towns in the Maritime Provinces. I might point to Moncton, to Amherst, to Truro, to Windsor, to Pictou, to New Glasgow, and to a number of other thriving manufacturing towns which owe their prosperity to day to the adoption of that policy—towns which, since its adoption, have doubled their population, and more than doubled and trebled their wealth. I might also point to the enormous increase in the output of our coal I believe that, with the exception of the Grand Lake mines to which the hon. gentleman referred, there is scarcely a coal mine in the Maritime Provinces which is not in a prosperous condition to-day. I might also remind the House that the trade of the city of St. John has increased within the last ten years at least 25 per cent., and is to-day greater than the trade of every other seaport on the Atlantic coast between New York and Eastport, with the exception of the city of Boston. Now, Mr. Speaker, I a large share, has doubled, and in many instances trebled, since the adoption of the National Policy. I can point to all these as clear and conclusive proofs of the enormous advantages which have resulted to the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia through the adoption of the policy of the present Administration. I am willing to admit, and I regret to have to make the admission, that in one respect, perhaps, the Province of New Brunswick is not as prosperous as we might desire it to It is a fact, as everyone knows, that the shipbuilding trade, which was once the principal in-dustry of that province, has declined. We know that steel and iron have taken the place of wood. We know that the steamships of to-day have taken the place of the old sailing ships, and that the ship-building industry has declined in consequence, and we cannot hope for its revival. We know, too, that the lumber trade of New Brunswick has been one of the most important, perhaps the most important, industry in that province for many years; but we must admit, if we look honestly at the condition of that trade, that it is not a growing trade at the present and it cannot be in the future. The forests of the country are being cut down and the operations of our lumbermen are becoming every year more and more circumscribed, and that industry, though it must, for many years to come, retain a very important place among the industries of New Brunswick, can never again have the importance it had in days gone by; it never can become a great and growing industry; it never can furnish employment for the increased capital and the increase in population of the country. must look to other sources for our prosperity in the future. It is the industries which have been established in the Province of New Brunswick as a result of the National Policy, it is the growing foreign trade of the country, it is the great interprovincial trade that is being developed, which are the chief sources of the prosperity we enjoy in that province at present, and to which we must look for our growth and prosperity in the years to The hon, gentleman made some references to the speech which was delivered by my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon). He referred, among other things, to the fact that some of our population had left the country and made their homes in the city of Boston. He told us that 70,-000 or 75,000 Canadians could be found in the city of Boston at present. He reminded the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that many who were born in the County of Albert would be found at present residing in the city of Boston; but the hon. gentleman did not tell us why those people had gone from Albert to make their homes in the city of Boston. I will tell the hon. gentleman why. It was because they desired a change of employment. Every person knows that young men brought up on a farm become, many of them, dissatisfied with farm labour, and determine to engage in manufacturing or commercial pursuits. Those young men who, in days gone by, desired a change of employment, were obliged to go to Boston and to the manufacturing cities of the New England States to obtain the change of employment they The National Policy has for one of its objects the correction of that evil. If that hon. gentleman could have told us that the farmers of the County of Albert had gone to the New England States to improve their condition in farming there might be some force in his argument; but he may tuents that he will never run again. Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

search the New England States through, from one end to the other, and he will not find half a dozen farmers there who have gone from New Brunswick to improve their condition by farming. On the contrary, those who go there and work in factories or engage in commercial pursuits, when they desire a change of employment and to return to invariably return to their homes in the Maritime Provinces. The National Policy has for one of its objects the prevention of this evil, and to a large extent it has been success-The hon. gentleman may go to the manufacturing towns in Canada to which I have already referred, and he will find scores and hundreds of people employed there, who, if it had not been for the industries established under the National Policy, would have been obliged to go, as those to whom he referred were obliged to go, to the New England States to obtain the change of employment they desired. The hon, gentlemen made some other references, which were not so fortunate as those portions of his speech in which he dealt with the business matters in which he is so well versed. The hon, gentleman referred to the member who formerly represented the city of St. John, in this We all remember Mr. Weldon, to whom House. he referred, whose genial face we have been accustomed to gaze upon across this House for so many years, and we regret to think he is absent at present. The hon, gentleman, when he reminded us of that fact, gave the very best answer that could possibly have been given to his whole speech. Why is it that that hon, gentleman, who represented the city of St. John in this House for so many years, is absent to-day? He knows that the city of St. John is the centre of the export trade in lime to the United States. He knows it is the one place of all others in New Brunswick which is most deeply interested in the export of lumber to the United States; and if the theory of my hon. friend is correct, why was the gentleman who represented the city of St. John in this House three years ago buried in the last election under a majority of something like 1,000 adverse votes. In 1887 we had three representatives of New Brunswick in this House supporting the Liberal party of the day, and but one of them is here now. That is my hon. friend who usually sits in front of me (Mr. Skinner), and he is here simple because, when that absurd and impracticable policy of unrestricted reciprocity was proposed in 1888, he had the wisdom and the courage to refuse to accept it, and to sever his relations with hon. gentlemen opposite. There is no argument which so completely answers the theories set up by my hon. friend as the fact that we miss the old familiar faces we have gazed on for so many years. I see before me to-day but two remaining, and I am not so very sure we will have them very The hon, member for Queen's (Mr. King) himself holds his seat to-day by a majority of something less than fifty votes; and with regard to my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), with whom we know we would not like to part, for there is no gentleman on that side for whom we have greater regard than my venerable friend, even thathon, gentleman, if I am correctly informed, esteemed and respected as he is throughout the county from which he comes, holds his seat in the present Parliament on a promise given his consti-

Mr. GILLMOR. I made no such promise, and you will find me ready to run when the occasion presents itself.

Mr. FOSTER. Which way?

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I will apologise to the hon, gentleman if I have not been correctly informed. I had the information that he made that announcement on the hustings. However, if he succeeds in getting back here I am sure no gentleman on that side of the House will be more welcome. I have only one point further to refer to in connection with the hon, member's speech, and that I think was by far the most important allusion which that hon. gentleman made. referred to the patriotic speech delivered by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in the city of Boston. I have noticed that hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House from the other side have carefully and studiously avoided, as a general rule, any reference to that speech. The hon, member for North Norfolk, in replying to the attack made by the hon, member for Albert, offered the very best apology he could, but my hon-friend from Queen's, N.B., has been the first man so bold as to venture to endorse that speech. The hon, gentleman tells us that he has read the speech three times, has read it from beginning to end—that he only regretted that time did not permit him to read it in this House. No doubt the House would be glad to hear that speech, but the hon, gentleman can have it printed and circulated throughout the country. I will give the hon. gentleman another suggestion. He may perhaps have read the whole proceedings at that meeting, he may have read the speech delivered by Governor Bullock on that occasion, when he said that the object the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was advocating could best be accomplished by making that hon. gentleman a Senator for the State of Ontario. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should incorporate Governor Bullock's speech in his pamphlet. There was another speech delivered on that occasion to which I would also invite the hon. gentleman's attention, as it may have escaped him. That is the speech delivered by the chairman of that meeting. The chairman said:

"Our Liberal friends, Fielding and Longley in Nova Scotia, Davies in Prince Edward Island, Mercier and Laurier in Quebec, Cartwright in Ontario, look to us, the people of the United States, for the sign by which they shall conquer."

I desire, as one of the representatives of New Brunswick in this House, to congratulate that humble little province on the fact that there is not the name of any public man from that province mentioned in the company of patriots who are described in that speech, and I venture to hope that my hon. friend from Queen's, N. B. (Mr. King), who I believe to be a loyal and patriotic man, will join me in that congratulation. but one other suggestion to offer to my hon. friend. While he is circulating the speeches of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) I would call his attention to the remarkable letter which that hon. gentleman addressed to his constituents after the late general election. In order that my hon friend may not mistake the one I mean, I will read a portion of it:

remnants from half a dozen varied provinces, the great majority of whom do not even pretend to be actuated by any principle save that of securing a good slice of booty for themselves and the sections or constituencies they respectively represent, and who know besides that popular feeling in those very provinces is strongly and distinctly in favour of our policy, though actual cash in hand or in the shape of railway subsidies has proved too much for the virtue of a majority of the retire population in for the virtue of a majority of the voting population in many instances."

I would suggest to my hon. friend, if he desires that these speeches should be read, that he should have them printed in pamphlet form and circulated broadcast throughout the whole Dominion. not wish to belittle the services of my hon, friend in this House or in the country, but I think, if he will do that, it will be the most important service he has ever rendered to this country, and the crowning act of his political career. Now, having said that much in regard to the speech of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. King), I desire to make some reference to the Budget speech of the hon. the Minister of Finance, and to the resolution of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), which is now under consideration. And first, let me ask the indulgence of the House for a short time if I make a brief reference to the This was one of the prominent sugar question. features—indeed, the most prominent feature—in the Budget speech of the present session. question has received more or less attention from nearly every hon. gentleman who has addressed the House in this debate. At the outset I desire to correct an error which my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and myself also, fell into the other evening. That hon. gentleman, whom I am sorry not to see now in his place, was endeavouring to show that the protection to the sugar refiners under the present tariff was greater than the protection they enjoyed under the former tariff. To do this the hon, gentleman, while he admitted that, under the former tariff, the refiners hada protection of 1 cent a pound and that under the present tariff they had only a protection of \mathbf{r}_{ij} of a cent per pound, contended that, if we took the ad valorem duty, the protection was increased, and he took the duty-paid price in New York at 6 cents, and made out that the ad valorem duty under the old tariff was 163 per cent., while it amounted to 20 per cent. under the present tariff. I ventured at the time to suggest to him that he should take the price of sugar in bond in the United States. I inadvertently said that that was the price upon which the duty would be charged when the sugar was imported. In that I was wrong, for I had at the time forgotten the change in the law; but I was correct in saying that he should take the bond price in the United States in order to calculate the ad valorem protection which our refiners had to pay at that time. If he were here, I believe he would admit that my contention is right. If a dealer in Canada was purchasing sugar under the former tariff he would not pay 6 cents a lb. but 4 cents, the bonded price. In Canada the duty would be 1½ cents specific and 35 per cent. on the duty-paid price in New York. If the hon, gentleman had made that calculation he would have found that the ad valorem protection, instead of being 16g per cent., amounted to from 40 to 50 per cent. I see that the hon. gentleman has now come in, and I will, therefore, add this. The hon. gentle-"Our opponents' array, on the other hand, is mostly, man was wrong in going to New York to prove the literally, a thing of shreds and patches, made up of ragged theory he was advancing. Under the old tariff no Under the old tariff no sugar dealer would go to New York to purchase granulated sugar, because, if he did, he would have to pay the duty in Canada upon the duty-paid price in New York. The Canadian dealer would go to Glasgow or London, where there was no duty upon the sugar. They would purchase at a price equal to the bond price in New York, and the specific duty would be the same, and the ad ralorem duty would be estimated upon 4 cents, instead of upon 6 cents, if it came from New York. If the hon, gentleman had calculated his nd valorem protection on that basis he would have found that the protection under the old tariff was 25 per cent., or about that, whereas now it is, as he says, 20 per cent. It might, I think, have naturally been expected that when the Government of the day were able to reduce the expanditure of the country and to reduce the taxation which the people were paying by so large an amount as $3,000,000 or $3,500,000 annually the proposition would have merited the unqualified support of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. We were, however, disappointed in our expectations in this regard. Hon gentlemen are not satisfied with the reduction in taxation. They demand that the Government should go further, and remove the protection which enables the sugar consumed in the country to be refined in our refineries. The hon. gentlemen use the same arguments which they used when the National Policy was first introduced. They told us that the effect of this protective policy was to make a few people millionaires at the expense of the consumers of sugar in the country. Hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House upon this subject have merely satisfied themselves with the bald statement of that proposition. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), it is true, went into a calculation in order to support that theory. In this calculation, however, the hon, gentleman fell into a more serious error than he did in the other calculation to which I have re-The hon, gentleman told us that he had taken the price of sugar during the last six months of 1889 and the first six months of 1890 from the Journal of Commerce; that he had taken the price of granulated sugar and he had taken the price of yellow sugar; he had assumed that we used half of each; he had added the two together and divided by two, and the average price of the sugar which the refiners received, he found, was $6.64 per hundred. He made the average cost of the raw sugar, duty-paid, $4.40 per 100 lbs. In that he was correct, but in the other calculation he made these two serious errors: In the first place, he was wrong in assuming that we used half granulated and half yellow in the Dominion of Canada. I can tell him on the authority of the refiners of the Dominion, on the authority of the sugar dealers of the Dominion, and on the authority of the Journal of Commerce itself, if he will refer to the Journal of Commerce of the 3rd of July last, where he will find it stated that the relative proportions of sugar used in the past have been two barrels of yellow to one barrel of granulated. That is one of the errors which the hon, gentleman made. The other was apparently merely an error in calculation, and he will see it when I point it out to him. He told us that he lbs., or 1½ cents more than the price of granulated. This is evidently a mere error in calculation, for the hon. gentleman sees that the average price of the two could not be higher than the price of the highest—the granulated sugar.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is my hon. friend who is mistaken, not I—I think so.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). Well, I cannot see where I am mistaken; perhaps the hon. gentleman may afterwards point it out. gentleman, in that calculation, however, made the difference between the cost of raw sugar, dutypaid, in the Dominion of Canada, and the price which the refiners receive, \$2.24 per 100 lbs., or something over four millions on the consumption of the country. Now, if the hon. gentleman will correct the two errors to which I have referred he will find that the amount will be reduced by just about one-half: he would have something like two million dollars, which would be about I cent per pound upon the sugar consumed in the country. Moreover, the figures given by the hon. member for South Oxford, although he did not go into the calculation, bear out my He made the difference just about the statement. same, \$2,000,000, or 1 cent a pound upon the sugar consumed in the country. Now, taking that to be a correct calculation, in order to find out the profits of the refiners we have first to take from that the freight upon the sugar. Hon. gentlemen spoke of this as an unimportant item. Let me tell the House that a large portion of our sugar comes from Germany, and that the freight varied from 10s. to 15s. per ton; that a still larger portion comes from South America, and the freight upon that varies from 17s. 6d. to 22s. 6d. per ton; something over 10 per cent. of our sugar comes from the East Indies, upon which the freight is as high as \$6 to \$8 per ton. If hon, gentlemen choose to go into that calculation they will find that the freight charges for the sugar used in Canada, from the port of shipment till it reaches our refineries, are something over a quarter That is by no means an insigof a cent a pound. nificant item in this calculation. Then we have to add to that the other costs of importation; we have to add the insurance on the voyage, we have to add the insurance during the process of refining. we have to add the insurance while the sugar remains in the warehouse until it is delivered to the consumers in the country. We have also to account for the loss in weight from drainage, and every hon, gentleman knows that upon the low grades of sugar this is a very important item. We have to take into account the cost of the packages which contain the sugar, and all the expenses of refining, and if any man will add those together, and take them from that I cent a pound, they will see that the margin of profit which the refiner enjoys is a very small one upon the large amount of capital invested in these industries. Then there is another and a complete answer to the arguments of the hon. gentleman upon this point, and that is the experience of the past. If their arguments have any force they must have had more force under the old protective tariff than they will have in the future; because, as I found the lowest average price of granulated to be have already shown, the protection to the refiners has been reduced from 1 cent to $\frac{8}{10}$ of a cent upon of granulated and yellow together \$6.64 per 100 high grades, and upon grades under No. 14 Dutch Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

standard it has been taken away altogether. But what are the facts? Sugar refineries have been established for several years. Have they been the means of making millionaires at the expense of the consumers of the country? Every person who is acquainted with that business knows that during that time no excessive dividends have been declared, that the stocks of the refineries have, on a number of occasions, been placed upon the market and have seldom sold above par; they have, in the great majority of cases, sold below par, and in two cases at least in the Maritime Provinces the original capital invested has been entirely lost, and the business has passed into other hands.

Mr. GILLMOR. The National Policy has done harm all around, then.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). No; not at all. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that because one refinery fails and another refinery under the same conditions succeeds is not a proof that the National Policy is responsible for the one that The responsibility lies in the difference of the business management, and it is there alone. Let me call the attention of the House to another fact. The gentlemen who invest their money in these industries are, as a general rule, men of wealth; these industries are managed by gentlemen of more than ordinary business ability. They devote to that business their whole time, they bring energy and business ability to these industries, which would achieve success in any business in this country. And yet with all these circumstances in their favour the facts are that no large dividends have been declared, and that the gentlemen engaged in this business have not made any excessive profits; and any fair-minded man, who will consider the facts which I have stated and the condition of the business in the past and at the present time, must admit that the statements which are made in this House and made throughout this country, that a few persons are becoming millionaires at the cost of the consumers of sugar in this country are utterly false and un-The article of sugar perhaps illustrates founded. more clearly than any other article in our commerce the difference between the policies of the two political parties in this country. I know of no article to which I can refer which more clearly exhibits the contrast between the policies which govern the two parties. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite has been to have the sugar used in this country refined in New York, London or Glasgow—to give the profits of refining, the profits of merchants, the profits of railway companies, the profits of handling, and the profits of manufacturing to a foreign people; and while they gave to the people of our own country none of these indirect advantages, they placed a direct tax on our consumers of $2.37 per 100 lbs. for every pound of sugar purchased by the consumer. Under the policy of the present Administration tration that condition of things has entirely We have the benefit of the import trade, changed. which brings to our seaports many thousands of tons of shipping annually; we have created a demand for 800,000 barrels annually, all of which are manufactured in our own country and from our own lumber; we give to our own railways the carrying traffic; we give the handling of this great or of any suggestion that comes from the Minister of traffic to our own people; we give to the people of Finance, and I for one felt exceedingly gratified when Canada all the indirect advantages, and they are very important, which result from this great industry, and at the same time we reduced the absolute taxation which the people of the country pay from $2.37 per 100 lbs. to $1.63 per 100 lbs. in 1890, and in 1891 we have removed it altogether. I say that is a record of which any Government may feel proud. It is a record on which we may safely challenge adverse criticism, and it is a record on which we may safely appeal either to this House or to the country for approval and for support. I desire to ask the indulgence of the House for a short time while I refer to the resolution which we are considering. resolution consists of two parts. The first portion says that "the situation of the country requires that the Government should forthwith reduce all duties on articles of prime necessity, and more particularly those most generally consumed by artizans, miners, fishermen and farmers." am not disposed to find very serious fault with that portion of the hon. gentleman's resolution. I think the Government, and the Conservative party in this House, may feel generally satisfied with the tone of this debate. The presentation which the Minister of Finance was able to make to the House should be satisfactory to every hon. member, and I for one experienced unusual satisfaction in listening to the remarks of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have had the honour of a seat in this House for nine years. I have had the privilege of listening to that hon. gentleman during nine sessions criticizing the Budget speech and delivering his opinions upon the financial condition of the country. I have always listened to him attentively, and many of his speeches have made a deep impression on my mind. I have always regarded him as a man of great ability, and I have always admired the skill with which he discussed financial questions. During the earlier sessions I had the honour to have a seat in this House I was in some cases particularly impressed with the hon. gentleman's remarks. I can recollect to-night the speech he delivered in 1885. It was, in my opinion, one of the most forcible speeches he ever delivered in this House. I remember very well in what language he described the enormous debt, the very large expenditure which had been made, the enormous taxation the people were called upon to bear, and the very great alarm he expressed at our prospects for the future. The opening words of the speech and the closing remarks made a deep impression on my mind, and I have never forgotten them. The hon. gentleman said that "this country had lost more in six years from evil government, relative to population and its resources, than the people of the United States did in the four years of dreadful civil war which immediately preceded the formation of our Confederation." admit that I felt then, and I remember my feelings well to-day, that I really trembled when I heard the hon. gentleman deliberately make that statement; for I felt, in view of his large experience and great ability, we might then be standing on the very verge of ruin. But six years have passed since then, and when I listened to the hon. gentleman on this occasion I could not but contrast his tone with the tone of that speech delivered six years ago. The hon. gentleman does not usually speak in very flattering terms of the policy of the present Administration that hon. gentleman commended the action of the Government in reducing expenditure and in reducing taxation by the removal of the sugar duties; and he even went so far as to offer his assistance and co-operation in our efforts at reform in this direction. As the hon, gentleman proceeded, before he reached the close of his address, on that occasion, he said: "If, unhappily, the present harvest should prove inadequate, we would be within a measurable distance of a great financial crisis." I confess, when he made that statement I experienced a feel-I did not see any prospect of a ing of relief. failure of the harvest, and felt we could not be in any immediate danger. And, when reflecting upon it afterwards, and recalling the fact that, if after six years of Conservative Government in 1885 we had sunk so low that we were in a worse condition than the United States at the close of the civil war, that we were on the very verge of ruin, and if, after six years more, we had so far recovered our position, we had so far regained what we had lost, that, unless we had a failure of the harvest, we were not even within measurable distance of a financial crisis, I thought, according to the hon. gentleman's own estimate, we had at last reached a position of safety; and, Mr. Speaker, that statement did inspire me with hope for the future. I believe that we can look forward to six more years of Conservative rule, and if we can advance in the future as we have, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, advanced in the last six years, we will reach a position where our prosperity will stand upon so solid a foundation that not even a bad harvest or any other ordinary calamity can seriously affect us. Now, with regard to the first portion of the resolution of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), as I said, I, for one, do not feel disposed to find very much fault with it. present Government have never had as a part of their policy the imposition of high taxation upon articles of prime necessity, or upon articles which our artizans, and miners, and fishermen, and farmers usually consume; on the contrary, their policy has been just the reverse. Their policy has been to reduce that class of duties, and it was in pursuance of that policy that years ago they removed the duties from tea and coffee; and that policy has its consummation this year in the removal of the sugar duties. Let me ask the attention of the House, and I will do it very briefly, to the sources from which our revenue is derived. Our taxation consists of Customs and Excise duties. find from the Trade and Navigation Returns of last year that the revenue from these sources amounted to $31,500,000; of that sum $10,500,000 was derived from liquor and tobacco; $4,000,000 more was derived from taxes on articles which may fairly be classed as luxuries; and about $4,000,000 more was derived from a class of articles which, if they cannot be considered as luxuries, cannot, at all events, be said to be articles of prime necessity or articles which are commonly used by people of this country. We have remaining $13,000,000, and in this $13,000,000 are included duties upon provisions and breadstuffs, duties collected on cotton, woollen and hardware manufactures, and a variety of others, including the duties upon sugar and By the action of the Government this session $3,000,000 of that $13,000,000 is swept away by the removal of the sugar duties, and any gentle-Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

man who examines the returns will find that we can make another large reduction on the $10,000,000 remaining by taking out this expensive class of woollen and cotton goods, and some classes of hardware, and a good many articles included under the head of provisions, which are consumed exclusively by the wealthier classes of the people, and are not in general use among the class of the people described in the resolution of the member for South-Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). And, Sir, if my calculation is correct, half of even that $10,000,000 would be taken away by eliminating the articles to which I refer, and that would leave about $5,000,000 of a revenue which is raised upon articles of prime necessity, and upon articles which our artizans, and miners, and fishermen, and farmers ordinarily consume. Hon, gentlemen will observe that this is about $1 per head of our population. They may say that I have made too low an estimate; it is possible that I have, but I have made it as near as I could to the correct estimate. Let us suppose that this is a $1.25 or even $1.50 taxation per head of our population, and I do not think there is any fair-minded man in this House who will say that this is an excessive amount of taxation for even the poorest classes in this country to pay. I will remind the House that there is an offset even to that, for it must be remembered that from our Dominion treasury we pay back to the treasuries of the different provinces 80 cents per head of their population, to be used in keeping up their roads and bridges, maintaining their schools, and for other local purposes; so that anyone who will go into a fair examination of the sources of our revenue at the present time will find that the classes of people referred to in this resolution, our artizans, miners, fishermen, and farmers, contribute a mere insignificant fraction upon articles of prime necessity and common use to the revenues of this country, and that the poorer classes of the people contribute almost nothing to the interest on our public debt, to the cost of maintaining our Federal Government, or to the construc-tion of our public works. I, therefore, do not object very much to the policy proposed in the first part of the resolution of the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), because I say it is the very policy which this Government have been pursuing for the last twelve years. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), if he wished to introduce that policy, might have introduced it fifteen years ago. He might have introduced it in 1876-77 or 1878 with very great advantage to the country, but in these years the hon. gentleman had a different policy. state of the country was such, to use his own words, that it was necessary then to increase the duties on tea, and coffee and sugar, upon woollen manufactures, and cotton manufactures, and hardware manufactures, and upon every article you could name which our artizans, our miners, our fishermen, and our farmers commonly use in this Dominion. It is gratifying to know that the hon, gentleman is able at this late day to come to the conclusion that the circumstances of the country at last justify a change of policy. It is gratifying to know that after twelve years of experience the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has at last arrived at the conclusion that the policy which this present Government have been pursuing for the last twelve years is the correct policy to be adopted for the future in this country. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish before I close to ask the indulgence of the House while I refer to the latter part of the hon. gentleman's resolution. This deals with our trade relations with the United States, and it is, I suppose, the most important question, the most live issue, which we have to discuss at the present time. As my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) pointed out the other day, this portion of the resolution is rather indefinite in its character. It may mean the unrestricted reciprocity which the hon, member for South Oxford has been advocating since 1888, or it may mean the more restricted reciprocity which my hon. friend from Queen's, N.B. (Mr. King) expressed himself anxious and willing to accept. However, taking the language which the member for South Oxford used in the speech delivered in connection with this resolution, we are perhaps safe in assuming that the hon. gentleman still adheres to the policy of 1888, and that this resolution means the adoption of unrestricted reciprocity. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to express the surprise which I felt in 1888, and which I felt from that time to the present, that gentlemen occupying the position in this House which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) do should submit to this House a proposal so utterly absurd and impracticable as is unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. These hon, gentlemen have on more than one occasion defined their position on this question. tell us that their policy is for these two countries to have free and unrestricted trade in natural products and manufactured articles; and my answer to them is: that two countries situated as Canada and the United States are, living under different governments, having different laws, having different tariffs, with each free to regulate and change its own tariff as it wishes, could not possibly, under any considerations, adopt unrestricted reciprocity or free trade. I can perhaps best illustrate my view of this question by referring to the effect of unrestricted reciprocity upon one or two leading articles of commerce between these two countries. Take, if you will, woollen goods. Every person knows that the United States imposes high duties upon woolupon some classes 11 cents, and upon other classes 12 cents a pound. Upon washed wools the duty is double that amount, and upon scoured wools it is three times that amount. The duties on weollen yarns are also very high, varying from 125 to 140 per cent. The duties on knitted and other classes of manufactured woollen goods vary from 100 to 150 per cent. The United States import annually upwards of 100,000,000 pounds of wool. Now, we all know that in Canada wool is imported free of Wool is a natural product of both of these countries. If under the circumstances I have described unrestricted reciprocity between the United States and Canada were adopted, it must be evident to anyone that that 100,000,000 pounds of wool, instead of being imported directly into the United States, where it would pay a duty of 11 or 12 cents a pound, would come into Canada free and be here converted into woollen yarns or fabrics, which would pass into the United States free of duty. What would be the result? The United States would lose the import trade in wool, they would the opinions of these men, for they have been read lose the revenue they derive from it, their at different times by those who have addressed manufacturing industries would be injured, and the whole trade of the country would be disturbed. I could give other illustrations of the same thing. I might refer to the article of flax, which is a natural product of both countries. United States import annually 8,000 tons of flax, on which there is a duty of 1 cent a pound, or $20 a ton on undressed, and 3 cents a pound, or $60 a ton, on dressed. In Canada undressed flax comes in free, while dressed pays a duty of 1 cent a pound, or $20 a ton. It is evident that in that case the result of unrestricted reciprocity would be precisely the same as that which I have already described in the case of wool. I might give other illustrations, but I do not wish to weary the House. The same results would follow from a change in the tariff duties of either country at any time. illustrate this, let me point to the iron industries of the two countries. Iron is a natural product of both Canada and the United States. We have manufactures in this line established in both coun-The duties in the United States are much tries. higher than they are in this country. The American duties are 75 cents a ton on iron ore, 86 a ton on pig iron, from $16 to $20 a ton on bar iron and 40 per cent. on steel ingots. The Canadian duties are $2 a ton on ferro-manganese, $4 a ton on pig iron, $13 a ton on bar iron, and 30 per cent. on steelingots. Suppose unrestricted reciprocity were adopted by these two countries, and either country removed these duties; suppose Canada removed the duties entirely, what would be the result? Iron would be brought into this country from Europe; it would be converted here into different classes of hardware; then it would go into the United States free of duty; and the result on the import trade, the revenue, the manufactures and the domestic trade of the United States would be precisely the same as in the other cases to which I have referred. Now, it must be apparent to any intelligent man that the United States, a proud and independent people, would never be willing to place themselves in such a position with respect to this Dominion that their import trade could be cut off, their revenues reduced, their manufactures injured, and their domestic trade affected by a change in the tariff regulations of this country. And, Sir, I claim that it is equally absurd to suppose that we in this Dominion, though we are the smaller and the weaker people, would ever be willing to place ourselves in a position so humiliating in relation to our neighbours to the south. Why, Sir, it must be apparent to any intelligent man who has given even the most superficial study to this question that we can have unrestricted reciprocity or free trade between these two countries in natural products and manufactured goods on one condition, and one condition only—that is, on the condition of uniformity of tariff. That is the opinion ex-That is the opinion expressed by every intelligent statesman in the United States who has ever expressed an opinion on the question. That is the opinion expressed by every leading newspaper in the Repub-It is the opinion expressed by Mr. Goldwin Smith; it is the opinion expressed by Mr. Wiman; and it was, at all events at one time, the opinion expressed by my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). It is not necessary for me to read this House. Now, Sir, what does uniformity of tariff involve? The first question that presents itself is, how are the tariffs to be assimilated, and how is this uniformity in the tariffs to be maintained in the future? That is a question to which hon. gentlemen opposite have not yet given a definite answer; it is a question which they have not discussed, for they very wisely avoid its discussion. When they reach this point in their argument their more serious difficulties begin. We have had, however, suggestions on the subject. We have been told by Mr. Wiman and Mr. Hitt that the only way in which this arrangement can be brought about is to have a joint commission which shall assimilate our tariffs and regulate them in the future, and on which the two countries shall be fairly represented. Now, Mr. Speaker, what does that mean? The United States have 65,000,000 people and we have 5,000,000. That means that they will have thirteen representatives on this commission and we shall have one. I would like to ask any member of this House if he would be willing to leave any matter in which he is personally interested to any commision on which the other side would have thirteen representatives and he would have one. Does he think he would get justice from such a tribunal? With such proportions, whose opinions would prevail? If this commission is to assimilate the two tariffs, does any man think that the tariff of the United States would be assimilated to the tariff of Canada, or the tariff of Canada to that of the United States? Why, Sir, the result is too obvious to admit of argument. It simply means that this country must adopt the tariff of the United States, that we must for all future time submit the regulation of our tariff to a tribunal in which that country would have the controlling interest. I do not believe that that proposition would ever be seriously entertained by the people of this country. If the people of this country would ever consent to any such arrangement as that, I confess that the spirit of liberty must indeed be dead among us. The power to regulate our tariff is the power to regulate our taxation. This is a right which every free and independent people prize. It was to secure this very right that the people of the United States themselves, more than a hundred years ago, took up arms against Great Britain. They demanded, fought for, and secured their independence, simply because the British Government, without their authority and against their will, sought to impose a tax upon their commerce and restrictions upon their trade; and we, who live in this Dominion, have in the past years not been less jealous of this sacred right than our neighbours across the line. The battle for self-government was fought out in this country just as it was there-not, it is true, in the battle-field, but in the halls of our own Provincial Legislatures, in the press, upon every platform and from every pulpit in this country; and as the result, we have in this country to-day the fullest measure of liberty and freedom which any proud and independent people could desire. We have the perfect and absolute control of our own affairs; we have a constitution framed by our own statesmen we make our own laws, regulate our own tariffs, and we fix for ourselves both the methods and the measure of our taxation. These are rights, these are privileges, which no free or independent people would barter away for any trade priv-Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

ileges or any commercial advantages, however great they might be. Why, Sir, rather than place ourselves in that position, annexation itself would be preferable. Under annexation we would, at least, have some voice in making the laws by which we would be governed: whereas, under this arrangement, we have absolutely none. Hon. gentlemen may endeavour to conceal it as they will, but the sure and inevitable result of adopting this policy, in any form you wish, whether as unrestricted reciprocity, or free trade, or commercial union, must be the political union of the two countries. restricted reciprocity without uniformity of tariff is a practical absurdity. Unrestricted reciprocity with uniformity of tariff means that we must adopt the tariff of the United States and submit the regulation of our tariff for the future to a tribunal in which they would have a controlling influence. That would place us in a position, in relation to our neighbours to the south, so helpless and so dependent that we must sooner or later yield to the inevitable fate and become part and parcel of the great Republic. I feel that this argument alone is sufficient to condemu the proposal of my hon. friend. I believe that such a policy is utterly repugnant to the feelings of the true and loyal people of this country. If the House will indulge me, although it is getting very late, I would like, before I close, to offer a few observations upon the commercial aspects of this question, and I will endeavour to make my remarks as brief as possible. If this policy of unrestricted reciprocity or free trade is practicable, is it desirable? What would be the effect of adopting it upon the great and important interests of this country? Take, first, the manufacturing interest. Under the policy of the present Administration our manufactures have had great growth and prosperity. I do not wish to enlarge upon this point, for it can be proved by the growth of our manufacturing towns, by our imports of machinery for manufacturing purposes, by our increased consumption of coal, and by the increased traffic on our railways. It can be most conclusively proved by the increase in the imports of raw material. The imports of raw material in 1878 for manufacturing purposes amounted to $5,000,000; in 1890 they reached $16,500,000. I have already referred to the sugar trade and the 200,000,000 lbs. of sugar we consume, nearly every pound of which is refined in our own country and distributed by our own merchants to our own consumers. All the wool grown in the country we manufacture, and we import 8,000,000 lbs. besides. We manufacture annually in the country 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 lbs. of raw cotton. Last year we imported of raw cotton $3,760,000, and we imported manufactured cotton goods to the extent of $3,840,000, after deducting the exports. These amounts are practically the same; and if you will allow for the difference between the values of the raw material and the manufactured goods you will find that three-fourths of all the cotton used in the country is the manufacture of our own cotton mills. We manufacture all the hides produced in the country, and $1,000,00 worth besides. Our imports and exports were about the same, so that practically we manufacture all the leather goods consumed in the country. We manufacture nearly all the tin goods consumed in the country. We manufacture all the iron produced, and besides import upwards of 150,000 tons of pig iron and scrap iron and steel for manufacturing purposes. These are great and important industries, and very many, if not all of them, owe their exist-ence and prosperity to the National Policy. They can only continue to exist and prosper while that policy is maintained. Unrestricted reciprocity, or free trade, and the National Policy are directly antagonistic. If you have the one you must abandon the other. If you adopt unrestricted reciprocity you strike a death blow at all those great and important industries which owe their very existence and prosperity to the National Policy, and will undo all that has in this direction during The effect upon our trade the past twelve years. and upon our manufacturing industries will be equally disastrous. I will not enlarge upon this point, as I have already spoken too long. sugar trade gives us a direct import trade with sugar-producing countries. Previous to 1879 the tea consumed in Canada was bought in London and New York. Under the policy of this Administration, of the 18,000,000 lbs. we consumed last year more than half came direct from China and Japan. The cotton we use came direct from the southern cotton fields. The raw materials imported into this country for manufacturing purposes, under the policy of the present Administration, bring to our seaports thousands of tons of shipping annually, which is the direct result of tariff legislation. Free trade with the United States would simply transfer this trade from our own seaports to New York and Boston. The hon, member for South Oxford, in that speech which he delivered in Boston, said this:

"You lie within very easy distance of our chief cities and of the most populous portions of our Dominion." This was addressed to the merchants of the city of Boston-

"In one word, given free trade with Canada, and you rise at one stride from the position, in some respects, of a frontier city, with no great extent of territory secured to you, to that of a central entrepot, with the practical monopoly of a great region behind you, whose commerce no man can take away from you."

The hon, gentleman perhaps never uttered a more unpatriotic sentiment, but at the same time he never made a more truthful statement than he made in the city of Boston. Adopt unrestricted reciprocity or free trade with the United States, and in less than ten years you will transfer the great import trade of the river St. Lawrence, and also a large portion of the export trade, to New York and Boston, and you will leave the seaports of the Maritime Provinces as bare of shipping as the seaports of the New England States are to-day. Let me ask attention to the effect of this policy upon the development of our mineral resources. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) referred the other day to the great value of the mineral resources of this country. He did not over-estimate them; it is impossible to over-estimate our mineral resources. It is impossible to estimate the great wealth that lies buried beneath our soil in every portion of this Dominion. Our mineral resources should be one of the greatest sources of our wealth, if not the greatest source of our wealth, in the future. It is of the utmost importance that our mineral resources should be developed in such a try, and that wealth does not consist only in the value of the ores which lie beneath the soil, or the labour of those who dig the ores from the bowels of the earth, but the chief value of this mineral wealth lies in the labour required to convert that raw material into articles of use and articles How is that to be accomplished? It is desirable that manufactories should be established in this country for the purpose of converting the raw material into manufactured goods, and that can only be done by maintaining the absolute control of our tariff legislation. Adopt the policy which hon, gentlemen opposite advocate, and you at once place it in the power of American capitalists to come here, to purchase our valuable mines, to obtain control of the means of transportation, to dig our valuable ores from the bowels of the earth and carry them away as fast as rail and steam can carry them, and furnish the raw materials for the manufactures of other countries. That may be the policy of hon. gentleman opposite, but it is a policy to which I, for one, am entirely opposed. Under that policy we would be placed in the position that we would be so bound by the terms of a solemn treaty that we could not place an export duty on the raw material or an import duty on the manufactured goods. Now, let me say a few words as to the effects of this policy on the agricultural interest of the country, and I admit that in treating this branch of the subject I am coming to what hon, gentlemen consider their great stronghold. They appeal to the farmers to support their policy because they say the farmers will be greatly benefited by it. Many of them admit that our manufacturing industries may be injured and our trade disturbed by the adoption of such a policy, but they contend that the benefits which will result to the farmers, that great and important class of the community, will be so great as to more than compensate for any loss which may otherwise take place. I propose to test the soundness of that argument. They tell us that the United States is the natural market for the natural products of this country. How do they prove that? They point to our export of agricultural products to the United States. It is true that we export some sixteen millions and a-half of dollars' worth to the United States. Of that, barley is nearly one-half, and the rest is comprised of horses, sheep, eggs, potatoes and hay. These articles embrace nearly all our exports of agricultural products to the United States. Now, let us see what there is on the other side. we imported upwards of 15,000,000 lbs. of pork against a duty of 1 cent. a lb.; of bacon and hams we imported 3,653,000 lbs. against a duty of 2 cents a lb.; of beef we imported 3,795,000 lbs. against a duty of 1 cent a lb.; of lard we imported 8,287,000 lbs. against a duty of 2 cents a lb.; of tallow we imported 615,000 lbs. against a duty of 1 cent a lb., and of butter we imported 492,000 lbs. against a duty of 4 cents a pound. If, from those figures which I have read, it can be fairly argued that the United States is the natural market for Canadian barley, eggs, potatoes and hay, by the same reasoning it can be proved that the Dominion of Canada is the natural market for American pork, beef, butter, lard and Hon. gentlemen tell us that if the duties were removed the increased exports of agricultural products would benefit our farmers. By the same manner as to contribute to the wealth of the coun- reasoning, the increased imports of the American any arrangement which obtains for us free access to the markets of the United States opens our markets this Parliament increased the duty on American beef and pork, and I believe that met the approval of the agricultural portion of the community. we had free trade with the United States, American beef, and pork and corn would come in here free, and would destroy the advantages which our farmers enjoy in that regard at the present time. may be told that we produce here all the beef we require for local consumption, and that we export large quantities of it to Great Britain, and that therefore we are in a position to compete successfully with any other country in that article. admitthat as a general rule that theory is correct, but I contend that there are exceptional circumstances in regard to this article. The production of beef for Great Britain and the production of beef for our local markets are two different things. Those who are engaged in raising cattle for export to the English markets are the wealthier and the smaller portion of the farmers of this country. I believe nine-tenths of the whole farming community depend, not upon the English market, but upon the local market for the sale of their productions, and a very large proportion of those farmers would be injured if these duties were removed. It is true that the removal of the duties between the two countries would increase the trade between them. The fair way is to take on the one hand the advantages which would result from our having free access to the American markets and the disadvantages which would result if we gave the Americans free access to our markets, and then to decide upon which side the balance of advantage lies. I admit that in deciding that question there would be great diversity of opinion. If I may be allowed to express my individual opinion, I believe the balance of advantage, if there were any, would be very small inded in favour of the farmers in this country; and I believe that if this policy is ever adopted no class of people in this country will be more bitterly disappointed with the result than those who expect that greater advantages and more prosperity will result from its adoption. It is true that trade would increase, but that trade in the nature of an would be We would sell them barley and we would buy their corn. There would be a large and, no doubt, a profitable business done in the small classes of agricultural products, such as eggs, fowls, vegetables and some other articles of that kind, but the trade would be merely in the nature of an exchange, and the advantage, if any, might be in favour of either one country or the other, according as favourable crops or other local circumstances affected the relative supply and demand in the two countries in different years. The United States can no more be said to be our natural market for the agricultural products of this country than Canada can be said to be the natural market for the agricultural products of the United States. Every person knows that Great Britain is the natural market for the surplus products of both countries. Now, it would appear to me that if we cannot obtain a reasonable arrangement with the United States for the exchange of agricultural products it is of the very greatest im-Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

agricultural products to which I have referred would should retain control of our own markets. Our injure our farmers; and it must be remembered that Jown markets are our most important and our most valuable markets at the present time. The home market of this country to-day takes the great bulk to the products of the United States. Last session of all the agricultural produce of this country; it is not only a large market, but it is a growing market, and every year in the future it will be larger than it is at the present time. I say I believe it is for the interest of the farmers, if they cannot get a fair treaty with the United States, to retain control of their own markets first, and then to devote their attention to the cultivation of such classes of agricultural products and securing such means of communication with Great Britain and other foreign countries as will enable them to place their surplus products in foreign countries where there will be a permanent demand at remunerative prices. There is no doubt that the McKinley Bill, in its operation at the present time, is injuriously affecting some of the agricultural interests of this country, and I desire to say a few words in regard to the operation of that Bill. In my opinion, at least, it is a Bill of a most extraordinary character. If I may be allowed to express an opinion here, I will say that I believe the provisions of that measure, so far as they affect the agricultural interests of this country, reflect no credit either upon its author or upon the Congress which made it law. That Bill professes to be a protective measure; in very many respects it is a most highly protective measure. It surrounds many of the manufacturing industries of the United States with a wall of protection over which it is absolutely impossible for any foreign competitor to climb. But when it deals with the agricultural products of this country it assumes a different character; it cannot be said in any true sense to be a protective measure; it is rather a prohibitory measure. American farmers, under the old tariff, had all the protection that was of any advantage to them. They had almost the absolute monopoly of their home markets under the old tariff, and the increased tariff cannot give them any better markets than they had before. There is, perhaps, one exception, and that is the article of barley. And what are the facts with regard to that article? There is no reasonable man in this House who will not say that 10 cents a bushel duty upon barley, as under the old tariff, was not a sufficient protection in any country for one farmer against his neighbour. The reason, if I am correctly informed, that they continued to import barley under a duty of 10 cents a bushel into the United States was, because the quality of Canadian barley was superior to that of American barley. Now, Sir, the increase of duty cannot improve the character of the American barley, and if it has the effect, as it probably will have, of shutting Canadian barley out, it simply compels the American brewers to use an inferior grain and the American consumer to drink an inferior class of beer. But when we leave that article, and take the article of wheat, we find that the Americans not only controlled their own market, but they exported 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 bushels besides. Their total imports only amounted to less than 130,000 bushels. In horses their imports were less than 20,000; in sheep their imports were less than 400,000; in potatoes there were only three-quarters of a million bushels imported, and in hay about 100,000 tons. Now, as the memportance to our farmers that, in the first place, we ber for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) pointed out the other evening, these imports are so small they are | events, I do not believe there is any necessity for utterly insignificant, compared with the productions the Dominion of Canada to sacrifice any of its of the United States, and compared with the enormous consumption of 65,000,000 of people, that they could not affect the market prices. If these articles are shut out altogether, as they may be under the McKinley Bill, the prices of these articles generally will not be affected in the markets of the United States. That additional protection is of no advantage to the farmers; it does not increase their prices in ordinary years; it does not tend in any way to develop the agricultural interests of that country. Of course there will be exceptional years, when crops may fail, when the supply may not be equal to the demand; but in those years, what will be the result? The American consumer will be obliged to pay the Canadian price, and the enormous duty added. The only result would be to tax the country heavily, and the only other effect would be to reduce the consumption by this insignificant amount, and to that extent injure the trade of this Dominion. Now, Mr. Speaker, I felt curious to know what motive could induce the Congress of United States to adopt such extraordinary legislation, and I confess that I have not been able, up to the present time, to find a satisfactory answer to that question. I have taken the trouble to read the speech of Mr. McKinley, who was the author of that Bill. I find that he defended his measure in many cases with very great ability, and I believe with very great success, where he could show that by the increase of duties he would be able to encourage the establishment of new industries in the United States and give employment to more capital and more labour, and that the people gene-But when he came to the rally will be benefited. part of his Bill which dealt with the agricultural products of this Dominion, those arguments failed him, and I find that he dismissed this part of the subject by simply quoting an extract from a speech delivered by Professor Goldwin Smith, and several extracts from the speeches delivered in this Parliament by "the Hon. John Charlton, a member of the House of Commons of Canada." Even those speeches furnished him with no arguments to show that the American people could be benefited by this increased duty. The extracts which he read merely showed that if our farmers were shut out from the American markets they could be injured by this increase of duties. Now, Sir, it has occurred to me, although I am not in a position to prove it, that Mr. McKinley had been reading from that remarkable pamphlet which was written by We all know what Mr. Farrer, in a Mr. Farrer. pamphlet which he addressed to some of the prominent men in the United States, advised as the means by which this country could be forced into annexation—that Congress should place very high duties upon everything we produce. Well, Sir, it may be that Mr. McKinley has had access to that pamphlet, or he may not; I cannot say. It may be that Mr. McKinley is acquainted with Mr. Farrer, or he may not be; I do not know. It may be that Mr. McKinley is desirous of seeing this country annexed to the United States, or he may be indifferent on that subject; I do not know his opinion. But it is at least to my mind a significant fact that what Mr. Farrer advised in that pamphlet was precisely what Mr. McKinley did. Before leaving this branch of the subject I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, at all possible limit, provided it can be done on fair, important interests to obtain relief from the provisions of that Act. I believe we can look for relief from a different source. I believe we can rely upon the common sense and sound judgment of the American people themselves. I believe the great mass of the American people are honest, honourable and practical men, that they desire to be governed in their commercial dealings and in their legislative actions towards this country by honourable and generous motives, and not by selfish I do not believe that the great mass of the American people, when they come fully to consider this subject, will consent to allow to remain on their Statute-book the provisions of an Act which, while it cannot benefit their own farmers or any interests in their own country, simply has the effect of injuring to some slight extent the trade of a neighbouring and a friendly people. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), in his speech the other day, said that:

"If there be any truth in the indication of popular sentiment in the United States, there is a very strong probability that the United States are more likely to reduce their tariff a great deal than to raise it, and here the diffi-culty which hon, gentlemen opposite fear is likely to a great extent to disappear in the course of the next few months, or, at furthest, in the course of the next year or two."

If I understand the view which the hon, gentleman has expressed in these words correctly, I fully agree with him. I believe there already are indications that this result will very soon be brought It must be remembered that the elections which have taken place in the United States since the passage of that Bill have entirely changed the political complexion of the legislatures of that It must be remembered that the people of the United States have told Mr. McKinley, and those who supported him in passing that measure in Congress, that they do not believe in that policy, and that they will dispense with their services in the future, for their usefulness as legislators has gone. I do not wish it to be understood from my remarks that I am opposed to extending our trade with the United States.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is well you said

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I am very glad the hon, gentlemen opposite endorse that statement, and I hope they will endorse the few remarks I have yet to make. I say to the hon, gentleman for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) that I do not oppose, I never have been opposed—the Government which I am supporting, I believe, have never been opposed to extending our trade relations with the United States. On the contrary, I am desirous, and I believe the Government is desirous, of seeing our trade extended to the very fullest possible extent.

Mr. McMULLEN. You are disloyal.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). The hon. gentleman will change his opinion if he hears me through.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You talk like Farrer.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). To the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) I say that I desire to see our trade extended to the fullest possible limit, provided it can be done on fair, equitable and mutually advantageous terms. I should be glad to see our trade extended to the very fullest equitable and mutually advantageous terms. should be glad to see our trade extended to the trade, to promote the largest exchange of commodiance of our own independence as a people. I do do it by adopting and by maintaining the protecnot object to the policy of hon, gentlemen opposite because it proposes to extend our trade with the United States. That is not the reason that I obcontrol of the trade and commerce of this country. Hon, gentlemen claim that if their policy were adopted our trade with the United States would be increased. I admit it. There is nothing more certain than that, if they place us in that position, we will be compelled to buy everything from the United States, and compelled to go there to sell every single article we have to dispose Hon, gentlemen propose to give us free admission to the markets of the United States, but on what terms? At the same time they raise around this country a wall that practically shuts out the trade of Great Britain and of all the world besides. If we are to have free trade. I say let us have free trade with Great Britain and all the world. Let us, last of all, adopt a policy of free trade that, while it has none or very few of the advantages of absolute free trade, has all its disadvantages and imposes on us all its burdens. Hon, gentlemen opposite think I am sympathizing with their policy in this matter; but I may tell them that I have always, and so do at the present time, very strongly sympathize with those who advocate free trade principles. Let me tell hon, gentlemen more than that. I believe free trade principles are perfectly sound, and that the arguments or many of them by which they are supported are perfectly unanswerable, but at the same time I do not believe that free trade principles can be applied to all countries, at all times and under all circumstances. I can say to the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) that I entirely differ with him when he says that free trade can be safely applied in the Dom-inion at the present time. I believe free trade is applicable to a country like Great Britain, a country which after years of protection has concentrated within itself great wealth, mechanical akill, the most improved machinery, and has placed herself in a position that she can, as she has done in the past, maintain for years to come her commercial and manufacturing supremacy against the world. I believe free trade might be adopted in the United States to-day with very much greater safety than it could be adopted here. If there is one country among the three to which this principle is not applicable at the present time it is this Dominion, a young country with a large territory, with great resources yet undeveloped, with limited capital and with a sparse population. Under these circumstances it would be, in my opinion, atterly foolish for this Dominion at the present time to adopt free trade either with the United States or with Great Britain. If we wish in this country to develop our resources, and to utilize them to our own advantage; if we wish concurrently to settle our agricultural land, to develop our mineral resources, and to establish manufacturing industries in this country; if we wish to give to the farmers of this country the largest possible home market, and the very best market which they can have; if we wish a.m. (Wednesday).

Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

I to develop to the fullest possible extent our internal very fullest possible extent consistent with the pre- ties between the different classes of our people and servation of our own interests and the mainten-different sections of our own country; we can only tive policy. And, Sir, at the same time, if we wish to extend our foreign trade; if we wish to direct it into those channels where it will be of the greatest ject to it. I object to the policy because it pro-ladvantage to ourselves; if we wish to use it to build poses to give to the United States the absolute up our own seaports in preference to those of a foreign country; if we wish it to be the means of building up in this country great commercial cities, of enlarging and extending the transactions of our wholesale merchants, of furnishing traffic to our railways and employment to our working classes, we can only accomplish these results by judicious tariff legislation. That, Sir, has been the policy of this Government in the past, and it has been eminently successful. We have, during the past twelve years, under that policy, enjoyed a prosperity which has been almost a marvel to ourselves, and which has commanded the admiration and called forth the praise of every civilized nation on the face of the earth. That policy has been called the National Policy, and it has been well named, for it has not merely contributed to our material prosperity, but it has created our national life. It has given birth to national hopes and to nacional aspirations; it has created in this country a national unity, a national independence, to which we were utter strangers a quarter of a century ago, and of which we are justly proud to-day. There are, Mr. Speaker, two courses for this country to pursue in the future. We can go on in the same course that we have been travelling in the past. We can continue to develop our resources, to establish new industries, to extend our trade according to our own methods and for our own advantage, and we can build up on the northern portion of the continent a great, powerful, prosperous and independent people—a portion of the British Empire owing allegiance to the British flag, and enjoying its protection. Or, Sir, we can take the opposite course. We can adopt the policy which hon, gentlemen opposite advise. We can abandon the policy which we have pursued for the last ten years, and hand over the enormous wealth of our mines, our forests, our fields, to build up the manufacturing industries of a foreign country, to build up great manufacturing cities, to furnish both food and employment for their people, and, ultimately, we can sever the ties that bind us to the mother country, and losing even our identity and independence as a people, become a very insignificant fringe upon the outskirts of the neighbouring Republic. I trust, Sir, that this House of Commons will not hesitate in deciding which of these two policies they will adopt, trust we will on this occasion pronounce, as the people of this country have already pronounced, a most emphatic condemnation upon this policy, which is both unpatriotic and impracticable, and fraught only with the greatest danger to every important interest in this country.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DERATES.

Mr. DESJARDINS presented the third report of the Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates.

MR. McLEOD, OF PORT MULGRAVE.

Mr. FRASER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice with reference to a question I raised on Monday respecting Mr. McLeod, of Port Mulgrave, and to say that my information is that the information given by the hon. Minister is not correct. I had no opportunity of saying anything about it at the time, but the gentleman referred to is quite willing the fullest investigation should be made, and he asks that one, should be had to see whether or not the statements made are correct.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not speak from my personal knowledge, but from what I regarded as very good authority, coming from a number of sources. I think it is desirable there should be an investigation into the charges made.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to call the attention of the Government to the fact that up to the present the correspondence with reference to what has been done at Washington has not been printed or put into the hands of members, and I do not see any reason why that has not been When papers of this description are brought down they should be printed at the earliest date; a considerable number of newspapers published them within a few hours after they were laid on the Table. If not printed, their printing ought to be attended to without delay.

As soon as papers of this kind Mr. FOSTER. are laid on the Table they are sent to the Printing Committee, and, for my own part, I have been looking for them as well as my hon. friend, and the Clerk informs me they have been sent to the Printing Committee.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE WEST INDIES

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We have not seen the correspondence yet relating to the hon, gentleman's mission to the West Indies, which we have been It is important we should have it. promised.

Mr. FOSTER. I supposed the correspondence had been brought down, and will look into the matter and have the papers laid on the Table.

with the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company, be concurred in. He said: Yesterday, when this matter was up, we had some talk as to the urgency of this Bill. I then stated we would pass the Bill through a stage, and then go on with the Budget debate de die in diem, but I understand there will be no objection to our taking it up now and disposing of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not so understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. I was led to understand that by the leader of the Opposition.

Amendments concurred in, and Bill read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: "That the Resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means on Tuesday last, the 23rd instant, be read a second time;" and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. BORDEN. In the very carefully prepared speech to which this House listened last night from the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), I was sorry to find that he began with a statement which is not borne out by the facts. I think, if the hon, gentleman had taken the trouble to read the papers which have been laid upon the Table of the House, and which contain all the correspondence relating to the negotiations with the Government at Washington in relation to the question of reciprocity, he would not have stated that this Government, for the first time for many years, had received an invitation from the Government at Washington to negotiate a treaty of reciprocity. We all know that that statement was given a certain official character just before the late elections by a statement which emanated from the Government to the effect that negotiations had been invited from Washington—that this Government had been invited to negotiate a treaty with the Washington Government; but this session we have learned from the correspondence which has been brought down that, so far from the invitation emanating from the Government at Washington, we would never have heard anything of these reciprocity negotiations had it not been for the accident that there happened to be negotiations going on between Newfoundland and the Washington Government for a reciprocity treaty, and that this Government, having heard of those negotiations, interposed and asked the British Government to secure for them a hearing at Washington. That I understand from the papers themselves, and I will give the Minister of Justice credit by saying that, in his speech which I heard before the election in the Province of Nova Scotia, he stated nothing to the contrary. But the official statement was made that the invitation came from Washington, and that has been stated on every hustings in the country, and has been repeated in this House, and it was repeated again by the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), that the negotiations were initiated there. Now we learn a very important fact from the discussion which took place last night, Mr. FOSTER moved that amendments made in and from the speeches which have already been the Committee of the Whole to Bill (No. 119) re- made on the other side of the House, and that is, specting a certain agreement therein mentioned | while hon, gentlemen who support the Government repeat over and over again that they are in favour of a reciprocity treaty in natural products—and that was the statement of the hon. member for Westmoreland—the whole of their arguments tend to prove that reciprocity of every kind and description would be inimical to the interests of this country. The speech of the hon, member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) pointed clearly in that direction, and the speech of the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) corroborated that in every respect. They say, forsooth, that they are favourable to a reciprocity treaty in natural products. When are they favourable to that? Just at the time of a general election—then, and at no other time. Then they go before their constituents and pose as friends of reciprocity. The hon, member admitted that thirteen members came from New Brunswick who had stated that they were favourable to a reciprocity treaty. We have heard from one of those thirteen members, and I hope we shall hear from more of them, and, if they will state in this House what that hon. gentleman has stated, I venture to predict that, when the people have another opportunity to pronounce their opinion, they will declare that they have gone back on their pledges in endeavouring to prove how that reciprocity of every kind, including reciprocity in natural products, would be the worst thing that could happen to this country. These gentlemen have found the word reciprocity an excellent word to conjure with at elections in this country ever since 1878. In that year the people were told that the National Policy was to be brought into effect for the purpose of forcing a reciprocity treaty from the United States. We were told that we were allowing the United States to make this country a slaughter market, and that we must exclude their productions, and so bring them to terms and induce them to agree to a reciprocity treaty later on. We find now that the National Policy, which was called into existence for the purpose of wringing from the United States a system of reciprocity, is made an excuse by these hon. gentlemen for our not getting reciprocity. The National Policy was to be the means to an end: it was to be the means by which we were to secure that great boon of reciprocity to this country. Now we are told that because we have a National Policy we cannot have reciprocity with the United States. The whole of the arguments of these hon. gentlemen point to this one conclusion: that, whatever may be the professions they make on the public platform, they are one and all opposed to reciprocity of every kind and description, and that we have between the two parties in this country to-day this distinct issue—on the one side the party favours reciprocity, and on the other side the party is strongly opposed to reciprocity. We do not complain of these gentlemen being opposed to reciprocity, or of their being prepared to stick to their National Policy; but we say that they write upon their banners at the time of an election the word "reciprocity," when in their hearts there is a determination to drag that banner in the dust. While they pretend to be in favour of reciprocity they do it in order to delive the elecprocity they do it in order to delude the electors of this country and to enable them to retain their official positions a little longer. The hon. gentleman devoted a portion of his time to a criticism of the very able speech delivered by the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. King), and it Mr. Borden.

points in his criticism of that speech. He failed to show that any of the figures or arguments presented by my hon. friend was not well founded, but he complained that my hon, friend had charged against the National Policy that it was responsible for the fact that certain industries, such as the lime industry, the lumber industry and the building stone industry, had not prospered. My hon, friend from Queen's (Mr. King) made no such charge against the National Policy, but he pointed out that under a system of reciprocity those industries would enormously increase, and I think he made a perfectly good point in reference to that. My hon, friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) said he would show from the Trade and Navigation Returns that, whereas in 1878, the last year before the inauguration of the National Policy, there were 10,000 casks of lime imported into New Brunswick, immediately afterwards we became exporters of lime. So, he said, with reference to building stone, that in the year 1878 4,600 tons of building stone were imported, and after the inauguration of the National Policy, which, he says, gave protection to that industry, we had a large export of building Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the fact? am certain that that hon, gentleman did not intend deliberately to mislead the House; but has he forgotten that in the city of St. John, in the year 1877, there was that memorable fire which destroyed nearly the whole of the city, one of the greatest disasters that ever befell any city on this continent; and did he not know, or might he not have known, that these imports which he has pointed out to us were the result of the unnatural demand which was created in the city of St. John for lime and for building stone in the year 1878, which could not be supplied by the home market? Yet the hon, gentleman seriously presents that statement to this House to show that the two industries of lime and building stone had been greatly improved and developed by the National Policy. The hon. gentleman did not point out, nor will I detain the House at any length upon that subject, that the great natural industries of that province not only receive no benefit by the National Policy, but they are possibly injured by that policy. It only requires a single word to show that. How can you protect the great natural industries of this Dominion? Why, by enabling those who are engaged in them to live as cheaply as possible and by means of the National Policy that hon. gentleman's party has enormously increased, to the persons engaged in developing those industries, the cost of living, and therefore have diminished to them the result of their labours. Now, the hon. gentleman told us that his province had received great benefits from interprovincial trade, but he failed to point out, and I do not think he can point out, one single article that his own province exports to any other provinces of this Dominion. Then, where is the benefit from interprovincial trade? Trade, to be beneficial, Trade, to be beneficial, must be in both directions. I grant you that by this policy the people of that province have been forced to purchase, at a loss, goods from the other provinces; but he cannot point out that that province has gained a corresponding advantage. He says that we must rely largely upon our foreign trade to build up this country. Well, I agree with is only proper that I should allude to one or two him there; but I think he failed to point out, and I think it will be very difficult for any hon, gentleman on that side of the House to point out, how the National Policy can increase our foreign trade. In order to have an extensive foreign trade we must have large imports, and the very object of the National Policy is to curtail our imports. is impossible to sell largely unless we buy largely. He pointed out that one of the prime objects of the National Policy was to prevent the exodus, but he did not bring any figures to prove that it had succeeded in that object. My own opinion is, that when the census returns are laid on the Table of the House they will reveal to this country the fact that the exodus has been greater during the time of the existence of the National Policy than it ever was during the same number of years before. I do not think that any previous census which has been taken in this country has shown a falling off in the population to any considerable extent, or in any number of districts in this country; but I fear very much, from what I have heard, that when we come to see the census which was taken a few months ago we will find that in a very considerable number of counties of every province in this Dominion there has been a large falling off in the population. And then, not-withstanding the fact pointed out by the hon. gentleman, that interprovincial trade had been fostered, that the foreign trade of the country had been fostered, and that the exodus was being prevented-notwithstanding all that, the hon. gentleman had to conclude his references to his own province by the admission that New Brunswick was not as prosperous as might be wished. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman referred for a moment to the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance. He took up the question of the sugar duties, and he said, what was quite true, that there had been a reduction of over $3,000,000 in taxation, and he felicitated the Government and the country upon the fact. Well, Sir, this is an extraordinary change in the doctrine preached by those hon, gentlemen. I have been engaged in a number of elections in this country, and in every election I have had to meet this argument upon the public platform: that the National Policy had resulted in cheapening all the great commodities of life; that sugar was cheaper than it used to be, flour was cheaper than it used to be, that every single article was cheaper. Why? Because of the imposition of the taxes under the National Policy. Surely, there is a very great change of base. If hon, gentlemen have been right in this House and in the country during past years, then they are wrong now; I apprehend that they are right now, and that they have been attempting to delude the people of this country, and they have succeeded in doing so during the last thirteen years by telling them that the imposition of taxes made the goods they consumed cheaper. We have heard a great deal about a free breakfast-table. A free breakfast-table !--free, I presume, Mr. Speaker, from the fact that there is nothing free on it, or in connection with it. What is there about a breakfast table which makes it free? There are the articles of tea and coffee free, and no other article can be mentioned that is free, either upon the table or in the room, or that is on the persons of those who sit at the table—everything else is taxed by this National Policy.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Bread and butter.

Mr. BORDEN. Bread is not free; there is a tax of 75 cents upon every barrel of flour, so bread is taxed. Now, my hon. friend from Inverness has treated this House before during the present session to that very able argument which he presented here last session, I believe, and the dialogue which took place between that hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Halifax at that time, and another hon. member from New Brunswick—

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Was he wrong? Mr. BORDEN. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to inflict it again upon the House, and if he does, I would beg him to take some other opportunity, and to allow me to get through the few brief remarks I am going to make. Now, Mr. Speaker, the free breakfast-table that these hon. gentlemen talk about is free only in respect of the articles of tea and coffee. They say that sugar has been made free. The hon, member for West-moreland (Mr. Wood) stated last night that the tax upon sugar had been reduced to nil. The only obnoxious and objectionable tax upon sugar still remains, and that is the tax which discriminates against the consumer in favor of the refiner, and enables him to take in of a cent out of the pockets of every man who uses a pound of sugar. A free breakfast table! Why, the table itself is taxed 35 per cent., the table cloth is taxed, the dishes are taxed, the knives and forks are taxed, the chairs are taxed, and, as I have shown you, the sugar is taxed, and the bread is taxed; the coal which makes the fire upon which the breakfast is cooked is taxed 60 cents a ton; the stove itself is taxed, everything in connection with it is taxed; and the breakfast table is called free, I fancy, from the fact that, as I have said, there is nothing free in connection with it. The hon, gentleman then came to the consideration of the resolution moved by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance that the House resolve itself into a Committee of Ways and Means. The amendment reads as follows :-

"Resolved, That the situation of the country requires that the Government should forthwith reduce all duties on articles of prime necessity, and more particularly on those most generally consumed by artizans, miners, fishermen and farmers; and further, the negotiations which the House has been informed are to open up at Washington in October next should be conducted upon the basis of the most extended reciprocal freedom of trade between Canada and the United States, in manufactured as well as natural products."

The hon, gentleman began his criticism of this amendment by saying that the first part of it was the Government's policy, the part which declared that the duties on articles of prime necessity, more particularly on those most generally consumed by the artizan, miner, fisherman and farmer, should be lowered. The hon. gentleman probably does not recognize the fact that there are two kinds of taxation—the kind of taxation that goes into the treasury, and the taxation which goes into the pocket of the combines, and of those in whose behalf the National Policy has largely been created. hon. gentleman has pointed out that about $10,-000,000 of taxes which goes into the treasury are drawn from the various interests referred to in the resolution which I have just read—the artizans, miners, fishermen and farmers. His estimate of $10,000,000 out of $31,000,000 paid into the revenue is ridiculously small. When those different classes of the community comprise nineteen-twentieths of the whole population, the hon, gentleman will not pretend to say that only $10,000,000 out of $31,000,000 are collected from them. If he had said over $20,000,000 I would have been more inclined to agree with him. I would, however, ask him to add $20,000,000 more. which go into the pockets of the manufacturers, and do not appear anywhere in the Trade and Navigation Returns. It is in order to relieve this class of the community from this tax, as well as some of the taxes which go into the treasury, that the amendment of my hon. friend was framed. I have already pointed out what some of the taxes are. have pointed to the sugar tax, not one dollar of which goes into the treasury, but millions go into the pockets of a few favoured individuals. I have pointed to the flour tax, scarcely any of which goes into the treasury, but hundreds of thousands of dollars go into the pockets of the millers. I point now to the tax on agricultural implements, a large tax which goes not into the treasury, but into the pockets of the manufacturers, and is, therefore, a direct charge on agriculture. I might go on through the whole category, taking woollen and cotton goods and various articles to be found on the list of goods protected by the National Policy. are taxed, and these taxes form a heavy burden on the artizans, miners, fishermen and farmers, and it is with a desire to remove these taxes that my hon. friend has moved his resolution. That resolution is entirely opposed to the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) then came to the second part of the resolution that relates to reciprocity, and the hon. gentleman said that the policy of the Liberal party on this question was indefinite. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman what is the definition of his policy? The hon. gentleman says that they are in favour of reciprocity in natural products. What natural products? Does the hon. gentleman include coal as one of them? The Minister of Marine and Fisheries would object to coal being included; yet we know there is a letter from the late Premier in the archives at Washington which directly signifies his willingness to enter into a treaty with the United States to make coal free. Thus, hon. gentlemen opposite are the last men to charge upon this side of the House indefiniteness in our policy. The hon, gentleman next proceeded to say that unrestricted reciprocity, which is the policy of the Liberal party, is absurd and impracticable. says it is impracticable because we cannot have reciprocity in natural and manufactured products with the United States without having uniformity of tariff. I ask the hon. gentleman if we can have reciprocity in natural products without having uniformity in tariff? Can you not have duty on English coal and admit American coal free? I see precisely the same difficulties with regard to natural products that present themselves in respect to What was the fact under the old manufactures. treaty? In the very province from which the hon. gentleman comes, the Province of New Brunswick, under the old reciprocity tariff American coal was admitted free while there was a tax on British The hon. gentleman will not deny it. does not credit my statement, I refer him to the Trade and Navigation Returns for New Brunswick for 1866, where it is distinctly stated that there was discrimination on the tariff of New Brunswick

in favour of American coal and against English

Mr. McDOUGALL. Was that anthracite coal?

Mr. BORDEN. All kinds of coal. The hon. gentleman later on, I think, was a little disingenuous in his observation that the resolution proposed by Mr. Hitt in the House of Representatives at Washington was a resolution under which commissioners were to be appointed to arrange and administer the tariff of the two countries. If he will read that resolution he will find that all it means is this: It is suggested that commissioners should be appointed by the United States Government to meet an equal number of commissioners to be appointed by the Canadian Government to arrange a plan by which reciprocal trade arrangements might be had between the two countries, and to report each to their respective Governments, and their power ceases when that report has been made. hon. gentleman then took up the commercial aspect of the reciprocity question. He said our manufacturers would suffer. I grant that in certain instances our manufacturers would suffer. He says they could only continue under the fostering influence of the National Policy. I deny that absolutely. believe the better class of our manufactures can be more successfully carried on under a system of reciprocity with a larger market than at present. course, they would have to change to a large extent, their system of manufacturing. They would have to limit themselves to certain lines, instead of attempting to do what they attempt to do now, namely, manufacture a large number of lines; and they would have to adopt the modern methods of manufacturing. I have in my hand what I think is the very best evidence in support of the position which I take with reference to the attitude of the manufacturers, and as to the effect of a reciprocity treaty with the United States upon the husiness of this country. It is a letter written by a gentleman engaged in the manufacture of clothing, which I will trouble this House by reading, because I think it is a letter very strongly to the point. It is as follows:

"It is, I presume, generally supposed that those whe are conducting manufacturing industries in Canada are protectionists, and the supposition is no doubt correct, especially in regard to manufactured goods coming from Europe; but I, for one, would welcome unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, which is the policy of the great Liberal party of Canada.

"Permit me to state that in the manufacture of clothing—a leading industry—we have at present to work on some three hundred different lines, and spread our travellers over a vast territory, extending from the Atlantic to —a leading industry—we have at present to work on some three hundred different lines, and spread our travellers over a vast territory, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which entails on us at present extraordinary labour and detail, and enormous cost in obtaining orders.

"Our present system of long credits is a source of weakness and great anxiety.

"My object in writing this is to explain my views as a manufacturer as to why I should favour reciprocity, as, should this take place with the United States, my firm would immediately devote ourselves to the manufacture of a few special lines. Instead of three hundred, it could be less than thirty; and instead of spreading men over an immense territory containing a small population, there would be no reason why our factory should not be fully employed in filling the orders of a few large buyers, who could keep us at work on a few special lines, thereby saving at end of each season the disposing of the large number of remaining lines unsold at a loss. For these few special lines we would receive payment in cash or on a thirty days' basis, thereby enabling us to figure on smaller profits.

"This system cannot be adopted by us in our present restricted position, and can only be attained through open markets with the United States.

"At present our firm gives employment to about 300 persons, and I fail to see why—should we have reciprocity

—we should not supply double that number, as it must be admitted by all that we have a cheap labour market.

"Reciprocity in this industry would, therefore, in my opinion, be of benefit to Canada.

"The secret in cheapening production is to be found in the manufacturers working on a few special lines—the fewer the better, provided the market will allow it; hence, I venture to believe that there are other industries in Canada that would benefit through a free market with the United States. United States.

"G. F. BURNETT,

Of G. F. Burnett & Co., Clothing Manufacturers."

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is valuable testimony as to what effect unrestricted reciprocity, and the consequently enlarged markets, would have on the manufacturers of this country. I think it proves, on the part of one who has practical experience in business, that unrestricted reciprocity would benefit our manufacturing industries. the statement made by my hon, friend from West moreland (Mr. Wood) be true, that the manufacturers of this country can only be upheld by a continuation of the National Policy, then that means that the manufacturers of this country are at present getting more for their goods than these goods are worth; for if the manufacturers of Canada are able to sell as cheaply as the manufacturers of other countries, what can they be afraid of? Is it because they want an advantage, which advantage must be given to them out of the pockets of the people, and at the expense of the people of this country? The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) also pointed out that our ships were largely engaged in bringing raw materials to this country for manufactures, and he said that unrestricted reciprocity—I believe he said that reciprocity of any kind—would cause us to lose that valuable trade. We all know, the hon. gentleman knows, and no one knows better than he, that it is a part of the policy of the Liberal party to obtain free coasting privileges between the United States and this country, and he knows that no greater boon could be given to the owners of our vessels which are sailed about the shores of our Maritime Provinces than to give them free coasting privileges with the United States. knows that our large ships, when they are built, sail away from Canada, and that they are probably never seen by their owners again; or, if they are seen again, it is when they come back for repairs after ten or fifteen years trading to the various parts of the globe. The hon, gentleman has referred to the effect which reciprocity would have upon our natural products, and he says that it is true that trade will be increased by reciprocity; but he contended that it would only be a trade which would be in the nature of exchange. was under the impression that all trade was exchange, that the very essence of trade was exchange, and that the most profitable kind of trade is to sell certain products that you have to another country, and to bring back some other products which that country, has and which you have not. That is the most profitable kind of trade; and yet the hon. gentleman brings that forward as rangument to show why the agricultural industry of this country would be injured by free trade with the United States. Although the hon. gentleman says he is in favour of reciprocity in natural products, yet his list of articles is limited. Those hon, gentlemen opposite are restricting their list of restricted articles, in which they are willing gress. Now, the hon. gentleman said that he to have restricted reciprocity, down to a very hoped that later on better counsels would prevail restricted limit. It is so restricted that they call it restricted reciprocity, and I think they could not get a better name for it. Their policy is, in fact, becoming so restricted that it is difficult to discover one single item on which these hon. gentlemen are willing to trade with our neighbours to the south of us. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) went on to say that our home market was the best. Let us see why our home market is the best. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) pointed out to this House why the home market was the best. He told us that the home market is the best because it is the nearest; and if that principle is correct, then the next best market to the home market must surely be the market in the country which is nearest to us-that is, the market of the United States. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) also made some allusions to the McKinley Bill, and he said that Mr. McKinley, in introducing his Bill, had quoted the speeches of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I understood the hon. gentleman to say so, and to-day I went to the library and looked through Mr. McKinley's speech, as reported in the Congressional Record, but I failed to find the allusion to which the hon. gentleman referred. It may be there, but I could not find it; and as I understood him, his object was to attempt in some way or other to fasten upon the Liberal party the responsibility for the McKinley tariff. Well now, Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to accept that statement, because I think it would be very much nearer the truth to say that the McKinley tariff was due very largely to the tinkering interference of hon, gentlemen opposite with our tariff. What do we find are the real facts? The year before the McKinley Bill was passed these gentlemen opposite withdrew from their standing offer three or four very important articles which they had hitherto said they were prepared to have reciprocity with the United States in. Long before the McKinley Bill became law the hon, gentlemen on the Treasury benches brought down to this House a tariff Bill which was hostile in very many of its provisions towards the United States, and which invited the United States to retaliate in just the kind of legislation which is contained in the McKinley Bill. But, Sir, I do not say that the McKinley Bill is the result entirely, or to any considerable extent, of the policy which has been adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not think it is; but I think it was very uncandid and unfair on the part of the hon. gentleman to attempt to charge on the Liberal party the slightest responsibility for that Bill. What are the facts? Why, Sir, the hon. Minister of Finance himself last session stated in this House that the McKinley Bill had no reference whatever to our legislation on this side of the line. pointed out that that Bill was introduced for the purpose of carrying out the deliberate policy of. the United States, regardless of the policy of any country in the world, and I believe that is largely the case. The party to which Mr. McKinley be-longs wished to get the friendship of the agricultural class in certain States of the Union, and wished also to get rid of a certain portion of the surplus. These are the reasons why Mr. McKinley brought down his Bill and carried it through Con-in the United States, and that when a change of Government came about there, or perhaps without a change of Government, the United States would reduce largely their taxes against us. seems that the hon. gentleman, notwithstanding that he has been arguing for two hours against the United States being a market for our products, is still anxious that their tariff should be reduced in order that our products might go there. Speaker, running through the whole of my hon. friend's speech there seems to be this one idea, that he is willing that we should trade with the United States if we can get the advantage of them. If we can keep up our tariff to the highest point, and get the United States to take down theirs, he is willing that we should trade with them. He is willing to have a jug-handled reciprocity, such as we used to hear so much about. It seems to me that that is not the statesmanlike way to approach a great subject like this. We must be prepared to give as well as to take; we must be prepared to give as much as we take; and every fair-minded, honest man in this country will, I believe, be prepared to enter into trade relations with the United States on that basis. What, then, is the position of the two parties in this country? It seems to me to be this: the policy of the Liberal party is reciprocity; the policy of the Conservative party is the National Policy without reciprocity. The lines are distinctly and clearly drawn. But it has suited the convenience of hon, gentlemen opposite to conjure with the word reciprocity once more for the fourth or fifth time, and to come back to this House upon the reciprocity cry. What is the result? The result is that the vast majority of the members of this House to-day are pledged to reciprocity of some sort or other. Now, the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite is reciprocity of no kind whatever; and I ask those hon, gentlemen who have come here pledged to do their utmost to obtain reciprocity-and I know that numbers of the members from the Maritime Provinces have done so—how they are going back to their constituents to justify their course. believe that a vast majority of the people of this country favour freer trade relations with the United States. In fact, you can scarcely mention a single industry, except the manufacturing industry, that is not in favour of reciprocity with the United The great mass of the people are unquestionably in favour of it. But there are certain interests which seem to be or osed to it. The Canadian Pacific Railway is a great interest—I do not know as it can be called an industry—and it is opposed to reciprocity; the combines of this country are opposed to it for very obvious reasons; and the Government oppose it, as we know from the speeches of their leaders. Well, I admit that this is a very formidable array—the combines, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government. We might almost speak of those as the Canadian trinity -the three in one, and the one in three. It is certainly difficult and almost impossible to separate them, and up to this moment, at any rate, they have been all-powerful in this country. Now, what is the policy of the Opposition? Our policy, as I understand it, is to have the freest possible trade relations with the United States that can be obtained. We propose, however, that they shall be obtained with the retention by this country of absolute control of its own tariff arrangements. Mr. Borden.

My hon, friend argued last night that it was absolutely impossible that we could have reciprocity with the United States and retain control of our own tariff. Where is the impossibility? I cannot see it. I cannot see why two countries cannot agree that they shall trade together freely, so far as the different products of each country are concerned, while retaining power to tax the imported products of other countries. I cannot see where the difficulty is. The hon, gentleman says that certain articles would come into Canada and pass through into the United States free of duty, and that by that means the United States would be defrauded of their revenue. Why, the hon, gentleman knows very well that to-day the United States have a means of tracing the point from which every one of the articles imported into that country proceeds. Every package which passes into the United States from this country has to be stamped or labelled to enable the officers on the American side of the line to trace its origin. Now, as it is not intended to sweep away the Custom-houses, the same opportunity will exist under reciprocity that exists now for the United States to prevent themselves being defrauded. But the hon, zentleman has spoken of discrimination, and, like many of his friends, he is greatly shocked that it should be proposed to discriminate against the mother country. Now, I have already pointed out to the hon. gentleman that in the old treaty of 1854 there was discrimination against the mother country in his own province; and I propose now to show that in the recent negotiations between Newfoundland and Great Britain the principle of discrimination was involved. I would call the attention of the House to the following passage in a despatch from Lord Knutsford, on behalf of the British Government, to Sir Terence O'Brien, the representative of the Newfoundland Government:

"Her Majesty's Government have raised no objection in principle to a separate negotiation with a foreign power on behalf of one colony only. It may be in some cases possible so to define the limits of the proposed commercial arrangement as to procure what the particular colony desires, without prejudicing the interests of those other portions of the Empire which are not included in the arrangement. It will be within your recollection that this subject was discussed with much attention at the Colonial Conference held in London in 1887; and, although the balance of opinion in the conference was against such separate arrangements, it was admitted that Her Majesty's Government could not, having regard to the precedents which had been established, refuse to consider the merits of a commercial arrangement desired by one colony only, and the effect which it might have on other British and colonial interests."

What do we find, further? We find that after this Government had interfered in the negotiations between Newfoundland and the United States for a separate treaty, provision was made that this Government should negotiate a separate treaty also; and mark these words:

"And it also became apparent that the United States Government was not disposed to extend to Canada the same limited arrangement as it might be willing to adopt in the case of Newfoundland alone. It was, therefore, determined to consider whether, pari passu with the Newfoundland negotiation, an arrangement for reciprocity on a broader basis between Canada and the United States could be negotiated."

These two separate treaties, the one for the colony of Newfoundland and the other for the Dominion of Canada, were to go on pari passu, being different treaties conceding different advantages to the respective negotiators:

"And until it has been more definitely ascertained whether this latter negotiation can now proceed, the Newfoundland convention must remain in abeyance."

Again, I find further in this despatch that the Government of England were prepared to ratify this treaty with Newfoundland, which discriminated against Canada and against Great Britain. In a telegram to Lord Stanley, our Governor General, sent 23rd January, 1891, Lord Knutsford says:

"I have to inform you that Her Majesty's Government have given fullest consideration to the representations of Canada against the proposed Newfoundland convention. As Canadian negotiations with the United States could not, even in the absence of the further delay arising from the dissolution of the Dominion Parliament, he commenced before March, and may not be carried through this year, Newfoundland's interests should not be indefinitely postponed."

And then Lord Knutsford says, in a later telegram to Sir Terence O'Brien:

"If Canada assents, the difficulty now standing in the way of the ratification of the convention with the United States would be speedily removed."

I think I have proved that Great Britain, at any rate, has recognised the principle that the colonies may negotiate separately with the United States, and may discriminate against another colony, or even against the mother country herself. the hon, gentleman has not referred to the question of loss of revenue. He did seem to be somewhat anxious, because he felt that the Government of the United States might lose revenue through goods being imported improperly or fraudulently through the Dominion, in the event of a treaty being ar-Most of the speakers who preceded me laid great stress on the fact that, under our system of unrestricted reciprocity, even supposing it could be carried on with the United States, or that the United States would agree to it, it would entail an enormous loss of revenue. They claimed that we would lose $8,000,000 of revenue now collected on American goods; and it was argued by, I think, the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that we would lose in addition the revenue now collected upon a large quantity of goods imported from other countries. I deny that there would be much loss in that respect, because we find that the United States, with an average duty upon manufactured articles of 45 per cent., import enormously from Great Britain now. Our average duty upon manufactured articles is about 20 per cent., and if the United States, with their high tariff, import about one-half of their manufactured goods to-day from Great Britain, surely, under unrestricted reciprocity, we, retaining control of our tariff-assuming it will not be increased, and it will very likely be diminished—would continue to import from other countries as much as now. Yes, I think we would import more, because under unrestricted reciprocity our people would flourish and gain so much increased wealth that they would be able to buy much more largely than they do now those goods which come from Great Britain and Germany, and that there would be sufficient revenue received from this source at least to make up for the loss in other respects. Still, there are other ways in which this loss of revenue can be made up. A very obvious way is by economy and by honesty. Judging by the revelations we have had in the investigations now going on before a committee of this House, nobody will deny there is the greatest need for honesty as well as economy. But we have member for South Oxford, and this is the language been charged with disloyalty. Those charges have which he used:

not been pressed so formidably here as they were on the public platforms during the elections; but I was surprised and pained to find that my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) should have exceeded the limits within which all the gentlemen on that side have kept in referring to this question of loyalty. I was surprised at this attack coming from him, a gentleman of well-known ability; but, somehow or other, my hon, friend from South Oxford seemed to have inspired my hon, friend from Albert with the idea that some very dangerous conspiracy was going on.

Mr. WELDON. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. My hon, friend says "hear, hear," but I can scarcely believe he is serious. hon. friend said that if time had permitted him he would have read to this House the speech delivered at Boston, which was apparently the speech which contained all the iniquity he described. Well, I am certain that if that hon, gentleman had taken the trouble to read that speech before he came in he would never have made the remarks he did. But I venture to say no more statesmanlike, no more patriotic ideas were ever put forth by any statesman in Canada than are to be found in the speech delivered by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). Why was it such an iniquitous thing for the hon. gentleman to go to Boston, by invitation, I presume, to deliver an address before a mercantile association in that city? Is this the first time a Canadian gentleman has done this? Does not my hon, friend remember when the Hon. Joseph Howe went to the Detroit convention in the interests of this country, and made perhaps the greatest speech ever delivered on this continent? And I will show the hon. gentleman, before I sit down, by reading from the speech of the hon, member for South Oxford and from the speech of the Hon. Joseph Howe, that these speeches were made very much on the same I am sure the hon, gentleman will not deny that Mr. Howe held the foremost place among the statesman of this country; and, in my estimation, he is generally considered as having held that place among our statesmen. Now, I have here the speech of my hon. friend from South Oxford, and as my hon. friend from Albert did not read it to the House, and I honestly believe he never has read it-

. Mr. WELDON. I have read the entire speech as reported in the Boston papers.

Mr. BORDEN. Then I am sorry you did not take it in. At all events, for the benefit of those who have not read the speech, and to enable them to judge of the fairness of the criticism of my hon. friend from Albert, I propose to put on the records of this House some of the remarks made in that speech by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); and I will leave it to the people of this country to say whether they are the utterances of a parish politician or a traitor, or the utterances of a statesman and a patriot. He was speaking to an audience in Boston, and with the object of showing to the people there that Canada had something to give to that country in exchange for what Canada might receive. This is the disloyal and unpatriotic argument of the hon.

"Sir, this matter has unquestionably two aspects, the business aspect and the political one. And, speaking to an assemblage of business men, it is with the former I would deal to-night. As to the advantages which perfect free trade with the United States would confer on Canada it is not necessary for me to speak here. It is pretty certain you all entertain a wholesome belief that it would be a very fine thing for Canada, and I will not dispute the fact—on the contrary, I recognize it fully and frankly. Only, while I admit it will be a good thing for us, I think I can show that it will also be a good thing for you.

"Sir, I have no wish to mislead you. The trade of the United States is certainly worth more to us collectively than ours is to them. That is a manifest truth. But so is this also—free trade with Canada will benefit quite as many of the people of the United States as of the people of Canada, and to quite as large an extent. Man for man, you will gain quite as much as we will; and Canada does not come as a beggar, asking for the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table. Canada offers and Canada desires only a fair exchange and no robbery, and I for one you will gain quite as much as we will; and Canada does not come as a beggar, asking for the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table. Canada offersand Canada desires only a fair exchange and no robbery, and I for one am as anxious as yourselves that in such exchange you make dollar for dollar, because I know well that thus, and thus only, can any lasting and permanent arrangement be secured. Moreover, I believe, indeed I know, that free trade with us would be of great value to the entire northern portion of the United States, and trebly so to the people of New England and to the good city of Boston.

"Even as it is, your trade with Canada is not to be despised. Per head you sell more goods to Canada than to any other country. Absolutely we buy as much from you as France does, and more than any other country except Great Britain and Germany. I think, in fact, we stand third on the list of countries to which you export your productions, and we alone, 5,000,000 as we are, buy from you as much as 50,000,000 of Mexicans and South Americans do all put together. Surely, if we do this in the teeth of two hostile tariffs, it is no idle word of mine to say that you cannot measure or bound the possibilities which lie before both countries if only these artificial walls were thrown down.

"And now, sir, a few words as to our political future. I would despise myself, and you as true men would have a right to despise me, too, if I were to tell you that it was my purpose to advise my countrymen to offer themselves for sale to the best bidder or to barter their independence for trade privileges. But I will tell you frankly where we Canadians stand and what it is many of us do desire very sincerely. Ours is a very peculiar position. We are free to do as we see fit, and no British statesman at this time of day would ever dream of attempting to coerce us. Now, we have our past history as you have yours. We stand in a fashion midway between the two great English nations; we admire and respect the mother country of both of us a which speak the English tongue, which should, humanly speaking, make it impossible that they should ever again come into hostile conflict; and we have further ventured to hope that the peculiar position of Canada, especially if close trade relations were established between her and you, might enable her to play some part in bringing about this consummation. Now, all this may prove only a devout imagination, but it surely is no unworthy one, and I do not herate to tell you that it is one which I greatly desire to see brought about.

"I know well enough there are obstacles. I have long felt that England needs above all things to secure these two objects—first, to regain the good-will of the United States, and, secondly, to conciliate the people of Ireland, and that these two most desirable ends can hardly be attained in either case without the other. Sir, I speak under the shadow of Bunker Hill, and it may be to the descendants of some of the very men who fought there, as I myself am the descendant of those vanquished Loyalists who chose to go into exile rather than haul down the British flag: and looking back across the gulf of that 120 years we may venture to express the hope that as Massachusetts led the van then in the resistance to what the best minds in England of that day, to what Chatham and Burke alike characterized as unjust oppression, so Massachusetts may again lead the way in restoring that friendly alliance between the United States and the mother country which the best minds in both countries would so greatly desire to see.

Mr. BORDEN.

Mr. Borden.

"However this may be, gentlemen, be sure at least of one thing, that every true Canadian does and must sin-cerely desire the prosperity of the United States: that we recognize that to a very great extent our prosperity is bound up with yours; that we are powerfully affected by your example for good or ill, and that in spite of all mischievous legislation can do to interfere with it, the progress of science and the mere fact of our geographical position are daily and hourly forcing us into ever closer communication, even in spite of ourselves."

I think the House will agree with me that in these utterances we have what is not unworthy of a Canadian statesman. Now, one more point in reference to this matter. My hon. friend from Albert is a student of history, and he knows well the history pertaining to the negotiations of the old Treaty of 1854. He knows well how a gentleman of the name of Andrews, from the United States, travelled for years through the different provinces which now make up the Dominion of Canada, and interviewed the different Governments, and familiarized himself with the productions of Canada. He knows that Mr. Andrews laid before the American Congress important papers, which threw light on the trade between the two countries, and he knows that it was largely and, in fact, almost entirely, due to the labours of that gentleman that the Treaty of 1854 was negotiated. If that Mr. Andrews had lived in these days, and had come to Canada on such an errand, I suppose he would have been classed as a spy or a traitor and driven out of the country; but in those times we find no whisper or suspicion that that gentleman was doing anything except serving the best interests of his own country and of ours. I have said that I would read a short extract from a speech delivered by the Hon. Joseph Howe on the memorable occasion of the Commercial Convention at Detroit in 1866. Referring to reciprocity, Mr. Howe said:

Detroit in 1866. Referring to reciprocity, Mr. Howe said:

"What is that question? Sir, we are here to determine how best we can draw together, in the bonds of poace, friendship and commercial prosperity, the three great branches of the British family. In the presence of this great theme all petty interests should stand rebuked—we are not dealing with the concerns of a city, a province, or a state, but with the future of our race in all time to come. Some reference has been made to 'elevators' in your discussions. What we want is an elevator to lift our souls to the height of this argument. Why should not these three great branches of the family flourish, under different systems of Government, it may be, but forming one grand whole, proud of a common origin and of their advanced civilization? We are taught to reverence the mystery of the Trinity, and our salvation depends upon our belief. The clover lifts up its trefoil leaves to the evening dew, yet they draw their nourishment from a single stem. Thus distinct, and yet alter foil leaves to the evening dew, yet they draw their nourishment from a single stem. Thus distinct, and yet alter of our favour—in the earlier and flourish. Why should we not?

"For nearly two thousand years we were one family. Our fathers fought side by side at Hastings and heard the our few toll. They fought in the same ranks for the sepulcative of our Saviour—in the earlier and later civil wars. We can wear our white and red roses without a blush, and glory in the principles those conflicts establish. Our common ancestors won the great Charter and the Bill of Rights—established free Pariisments, Habeas Corpus, and Trial by Jury. Our jurisprudence comes down from Coke and Mansfield to Marshall and Story, rich in knowledge and experience, which no man can divide. From Chancer to Shakespeare our literature is common inheritance. Tennyson and Longfellow write in one language, which is enriched by the genius developed on either side of the Atlantic. In the great navigators, from Cotterel to H vinces which the fortune of war decided they could not control. But it may be said we have been divided by two wars. What then? The noble St. Lawrence is split in two places—by Goat Island and by Anticosti—but it comes down to us from the same springs in the same mountain sides; its waters sweep together past the Pictured Rocks of Lake Superior, and encircle in their loving embrace the shores of Huron and Michigan. They are divided at Niagara Falls, as we were at the Revolutionary War; but they come together again on the peaceful bosom of Ontario. Again they are divided on their passage to the sea; but who thinks of the divisions when they lift the keels of commerce, or when drawn up to heaven they form the rainbow or the cloud? It is true that in 85 years we have had two wars; but what then? Since the last we have had 50 years of peace, and there have been more people killed in a single campaign in the late civil war than there were in the two national wars between this country and Great Britain. The people of the United States hope to draw together the two conflicting elements to make them one people. And in that task I wish them God speed! And in the same way I feel that we ought to rule out everything disagreeable in the recollection of our old wars, and unite together as one people for all time to come. I see around the door the flags of the two countries. United as they are there, I would ever have them draped together, fold within fold, and let 'their varying tints unite and form in heaven's light one arch of peace."

Mr. MASSON. Considering the importance of this subject, I beg permission of the House to make a few remarks bearing more particularly upon the question of unrestricted reciprocity. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Borden) has charged the members on this side of the House with being in favour of reciprocity in natural products generally, when seeking re-election before the people, and with being opposed to it when in this House. Now, Sir, that is certainly a very serious charge. If any party should be guilty of going before their constituents and presenting one set of opinions and asking the support of the people upon that policy, and then when they came back to this House were deliberately to advocate an entirely different policy, they would deserve severe condemnation. The hon, gentleman made the bold assertion, but I failed to see in the whole course of his speech any evidence to prove it, that we favoured reciprocity while seeking the suffrages of the people, and that we favour a different policy here. Now, Sir, if there is one thing that the Liberal-Conservative party, that has so long held the reigns of Government in this fair Dominion, has reason to be proud of, it is the consistency with which it has adhered to one We lay down no cast iron rule as to reciprocity, we lay down no cast iron rule as to tariff, but the policy as enunciated by our late leader in the resolution he presented to this House in 1878, is the same policy that we support to-day on this side of the House. For the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite who, perhaps, never read that resolution, who, perhaps, never heard of it, I will read an extract from it, and at the same time I would call the attention to it of those hon. gentlemen, some of whom made speeches in favour of that resolution, some of whom made speeches in favour of the policy enunciated the session before, some of whom spoke in favour of it then, and who speak in an entirely opposite sense to-day. That policy did not declare a desire not to trade with the United States, but in plain and explicit language it set forth:

"That this House is of opinion that the welfare of Canada requires the adoption of a National Policy which, by a judicious readjustment of the tariff, will benefit and foster the agricultural, mining, manufacturing and other interests of the Dominiou."

Without reading the whole resolution, let me call attention especially to this paragraph:

"And moving in the direction of reciprocity of tariffs with our neighbours so far as the varied interests of Canada may demand."

There was the policy enunciated in 1878, and there is the policy of to-day—"reciprocity with our neighbours so far as the varied interests of Canada may demand." Such was the policy enunciated in 1879 when the Liberal-Conservative party came into power, such was the policy placed upon the Statute-book, where it has since been retained; such was the policy presented to the country and endorsed by the country in 1882. There was the same desire to trade with our neighbours on a fair basis, a desire for reciprocity where the interests of Canada required it. Such was the policy presented again in 1887, and such was the policy endorsed by the people then. But we are told that a change has in some way come over the Government of this country, that a change came over the grand old chieftain who led the party to so many victories, and that, whatever the rank and file of the Liberal-Conservative party may have thought, the Government and its leader had changed their policy and were seeking for unlimited Where is there any evidence that our reciprocity. late leader sought reciprocity, or that his Government sought reciprocity, or that his supporters have spoken in favour of reciprocity except on the basis laid down in 1878? Let me refer to the official despatch, one line of which has been quoted, I suppose, by every speaker that has spoken on that side of the House in this discussion: First, "A renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854." That line has been quoted and dwelt on, but, whether wilfully or accidentally, hon, members stop short there, they do not read on through the whole clause, which reads as follows :-

First, "A renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, with the modifications required by the altered circumstances of both countries, with the extension deemed by the commission to be in the interests of Canada and the United States."

There was a reference to the Treaty of 1854; there was the same principle of reciprocity in trade with our neighbours, so far as the interests of Canada should require or demand. There was no giving away of our vast inheritance, no giving away of the benefits of twelve years of National Policy, but an adherence to the same old policy. There was We sometimes have no other language used. heard quoted the proposition of reciprocity in named products. This had the same meaning, a readjustment by arrangement. Such is the proposal made by Mr. Blaine to the people of Brazil, Columbia, and the Central and South American Republics. Such, I repeat, is the reciprocity which Mr. Blaine proposed with these countries, not unrestricted reciprocity, but reciprocity in the named products, the articles to be agreed upon to be for the mutual advantage of both countries. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) also referred to our advocacy of reciprocity in natural products, and especially to reciprocity in agricultural products. I am free to admit that in 1878 a very large proportion of the people, especially those engaged in agriculture, believed that reciprocity in farm products would be the very best thing that could happen. I am free to admit that such was the universal belief, and it is not to be wondered at that in the speeches delivered here by the leaders of the Opposition of that day such expressions were used jour natural market. In fact, we could truthfully as have been quoted by the hon. member, "that it was a means to an end," "that it was not a thing to be permanent," "that it was to bring about reciprocity in trade." How did it come about that the people of the country had that idea at the time? It is easy to understand why they entertained it. They had during four or five preceding years passed through very hard times. They had years passed through very hard times. been placed in a position of one-sided free trade. The reciprocity treaty, which prevailed from 1854 to 1866, had been abrogated. We had had all the evil effects that followed the reaction that set in from the high prices which prevailed during the great American war. We had had this series of hard times, and it was not unreasonable for the agriculturists of the country to look back to the good times of the past, and say that while we had reciprocity we had better times, and to at once jump to the conclusion that if we had reciprocity again we would have the same good times. It does not at all follow that because we had good times between 1854 and 1866, during the period of the old reviprocity treaty, the same good times would be renewed if we framed a similar treaty. We have to consider the different circumstances in which the country is situated, and the different state of affairs that prevailed at home and abroad. Any person looking back thoughtfully over that period and at the high prices of farm products, and the high prices of wheat, which was then the special product of Ontario, will not hesitate to agree with me that it was not the reciprocity treaty which enhanced the price of our farm products at that time and gave us high prices for our wheat during those twelve years, but it was due to other and outside influences entirely. During the first few years of that reciprocity treaty the great Russian war prevailed. It was the great Russian war we had to thank for the high price we obtained for our farm products and for our wheat, not the reciprocity treaty with the United States. Immediately after the Russian war closed we had the year 1857, a year that has only to be recalled to cause a shudder to run through most hearts in Canada, a year written in the darkest letters of all the years in the financial records of Canada, and that year occurred in the midst of the reciprocity treaty. In that year we had the Indian mutiny, and later the great American civil war; and these great wars enhanced the prices of farm products, and especially the price of wheat, then a large product in Ontario. But, in addition, we had throughout Ontario and Quebec, and throughout Ontario especially, large public works under construction. We had the Grand Trunk Company constructing its road with great energy and with a large expenditure. The Great Western Railway was also built during that period, and the enhancement of the value of farm products made good times for the farmers of Ontario. I am, therefore, satisfied that no hon. gentleman opposite will question that but for those outside influences the times in Canada would not then have been so good as they were. But we must also consider the condition of the country when reciprocity was entered into. At that time we had not one mile of railway by which to carry our farm products to the sea. We had not our canals enlarged. We had only our river navigation in We were then in such a position that we could truthfully say the United States constituted say that the United States formed our only market during half the year, as we were entirely shut out from any other market. Even during the other half of the year our means of transport were such that the expense of moving the products was entirely out of the question. Moreover, we had not then our great line of transatlantic steamers olying to our ports. All these things have changed. We have communication, not by one, but by two great trunk lines to the sea. Our canal and river navigation has been improved, and while we continued up to 1866, when the treaty was abrogated, to send our farm products by way of the United States to other markets, the embargo they placed on them in the shape of duties materially interfered with such trade, and we have since opened up other markets and established other communicacion with them. It is alleged by hon. gentlemen that the United States is our natural market. In what way they can contend that it is the natural market, I have always been at a loss to find out. If it is not because that a market is alongside of us, in what other way can they make their claim? My hon. friend from King's (Mr. Borden) told us this afternoon that the hon. member for North York (Mr. Wallace) stated that the home market was the best because it was the nearest, and that is absolutely true in fact; but the deduction which the hon, gentleman sought to draw from that was The best market for the producer is incorrect. the consumer's market. The consumer pays the highest price for any product, and the producer sells at the lowest price, and the producer benefits by the home demand for what he has to sell; and every system of legislation, or any policy which tends to bring the consumer nearer the producer has a tendency to benefit both. Therefore, if we carry out a policy in this country which establishes a home market, and which increases the number of consumers, that home market is the very best market that the producer can obtain, and it is all the more beneficial because of its proximity.

Mr. LISTER. Suppose you produce too much?

Mr. MASSON. I will deal with that question immediately. We hear hon gentlemen on the other side put forward the argument, that if you have one bushel of agricultural produce to export, that one bushel has got to govern the price of the whole. The export market is all desirable, ready access to the export market is very desirable, and the more expeditious and cheaper the communication with that market, the better for the producer. But the export market never does govern the prices of our products until it takes a large share of them. I will deal with that question more in detail when I take up some of the articles which we export, but I will at present lay down this principle for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite, namely, that the market which secures the bulk of our produce governs the price; other markets have got to compete afterwards, but they do not regulate the price. Now, so far as Canadian products are concerned, our exports, except in a few articles, have been very small, and although they have been increasing during the last few years they are still, especially with reference to our grain products, comparatively small. I shall call the attention of hon. gentlemen to some of these points later on, but I will now follow up the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden), so that I may cover as nearly as possible After acthe points which he sought to make. cusing the Liberal-Conservative party with preaching one policy at the polls and another policy in this House, he charged my hon. friend from Westmoreland with having claimed that the National Policy had benefited the export trade in lime and stone and other such articles. What my hon friend from Westmoreland did say was: That prior to the National Policy the trade in these articles did not exist, and that it was after the duty was imposed that our home markets were protected from the inroads of the American products of the same kind, that these industries sprung up, that the placing of a duty on our goods going there, when we had not the trade estab-lished in those articles, did not develop the trade in Canada, so long as the American articles were allowed to come in free. He contended that the placing of a duty on American imports coming into this country established these industries in Canada, and therefore my hon. friend from Westmoreland truly argued, that it could not be urged that the National Policy had had a tendency depreciate the trade in these products because it was under the National Policy that such trade had been developed. My hon, friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) stated further, that the development of that trade created a home market which was to the benefit of all classes concerned. My hon, friend from King's (Mr. Borden) has also charged the Liberal-Conservative party with a change of base by saying that in former years they had contended that the placing of a duty on goods decreased the price of articles. That is putting up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking him down, because the Libert Contended to the price of articles. because the Liberal-Conservative party never contended that the placing of a tax—I think the hon. gentleman used the word tax—would render an article cheaper. What they did say was, that protecting an industry would render the products of that industry, in many cases, cheaper; and we have practical evidence of the fact that the protected industries are now giving their products cheaper to the consumers of this country than the consumers could obtain these articles before. hon. gentleman applied this argument to the duty on sugar, and he said that the removal of this duty was urged by hon, gentlemen on this side of the House in order to make sugar cheaper. Now, let me ask, was the duty on raw sugar a matter of protection at all? It never was, because it was not imposed for the purpose of fostering that industry. The duty on raw sugar was imposed long before the National Policy, as a matter of revenue and as a tax direct upon raw material which was not produced in this country, or which was not produced, at all events, in sufficiently large quantities for our necessities, and, consequently, had to be imported here. We had to seek a foreign market for our raw sugar, and, as we were the seekers of the market and brought that commodity here, in that way we paid the duty. We hear a great deal of loose talk, on both sides of the House, perhaps, as to who pays the duty. At one time you hear it said that the consumer pays the duty, and, in the same breath, almost, hon, gentlemen turn around and urge that the producer pays the duty. I consider that the drawing producer in this respect, is all unavailing. person, or the nation that seeks a market, pays the duty and has to overcome all obstacles between him and that market, whether he seeks to buy or If we produce in this country in such abundance that we have got to get our produce out, and to find a market for it, then we have got to seek a foreign market and without question we have to pay the duty, and we would have to pay the whole duty unless the nation that we were sending to was also in turn seeking a market in which to purchase. In that case, as in many other cases, the duty would be divided, both parties, as it were, meeting half-way. Then, in regard to raw sugar, if it is bought in the outside market, there is no question that in the first place the manufacturer, who buys it as his raw material, pays the duty, and it is afterwards added to the price of the manufactured article which the consumer has to pay, but that duty was imposed in revenue-tariff days; it was an inheritance handed down to the present Government for the purpose of producing a revenue, and it was left for the purpose of sustaining the revenue; and it is only now, when the Government, feeling itself financially strong, can afford by a stroke of the pen to sweep away $3,500,000 of taxation, that that duty is removed and returned to the pockets of the consumers. There can be no more fallacious argument than the statement that we are changing our base because we now claim that the removal of the duty on raw sugar is a benefit to the consumer. It is exactly on a par, we claim, with the removal of the duty on tea and coffee. The hon, gentleman says there is no free breakfast-table, because there is still a duty on sugar; but we claim that the duty on the finished article does not enhance the price; if it does, it will only be very slightly and for a very short time. Our manufacturers will reduce the prices of sugar in Canada, as they did before, to a point as low as they are in the United States, and there is nothing in the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite that would tend to bring the price of sugar in Canada to a lower point than it is in the United States. Now, we are told that our tea is not free, because there is still a duty on what does not come direct from the country of growth. While my hon. friend was arguing that the breakfast table was not free, that there was not a free article on it, I looked at the returns and found that. during the last year we imported 17,500,000 lbs. of tea direct, and three-quarters of a million pounds indirect, on which a duty was paid. Now, will any person presume to say that the three-quarters of a million pounds enhanced the price of the 17,500,000 lbs., or did the 17,500,-000 lbs. force those who brought in the threequarters of a million pounds to compete with it, to reduce their price accordingly? We find that the larger quantity governs; and whether in importing or exporting, the rule is the same. Then, the hon. gentleman stated that there were two classes of duties—one class that goes into the public treasury, and the other that goes into the pockets of the manufacturers. If I understood the hon. gentleman aright, he did not object to the duties that went into the public treasury; but he alleged that duties on articles manufactured in Canada went into the pockets of the manufacturers. that would be so if the manufacturer sold in of hard and fast lines between the consumer and the | Canada at the price charged in the outside market with the amount of the duty added. But in what line of manufactured articles do you find that to be the case? Take we ollen goods. Do you find that the price of woollen goods in Canada is the price of those goods in the United States plus the duty? Why, the hon, gentleman knows that it is entirely different. He knows that these goods are cheaper in Canada to-day than they are in the United States. Almost every class of goods into the composition of which wool enters are cheaper in Canada than in the United States. The same is true in other fabrics: I will not weary the House with going over them. But the hon, gentleman, posing as the farmer's friend, singled out one article in particular. He declared that agricultural implements were a class of goods the tax on which went into the pockets of the manufacturers. That would be true if the price of agricultural implements in Canada were the price in the United States plus the duty. But what are the facts? Go anywhere you like in the United States and compare the retail prices paid there by the farmers with the prices paid by the farmers in Canada. I do not want any such comparison as an hon, gentleman on the other side of the House gave two years ago, when he compared the wholesale price of the American manufacturers with the retail price in Canada. Shortly after that speech was delivered, I happened to be in Western New York; and with that speech ringing in my ears I made enquiries, and I found, what I was not surprised to find, that the hon. gentleman had been quoting the manufacturers' prices as against the retail prices here, and that the retail prices of agricultural implements in Western New York were from 10 to 15 per cent. higher than they were in my own constituency of North Grey. I found further, that if a farmer were unable to pay cash and had to ask for time, whereas in Ontario he could get credit for one or two or three years at 7 per cent., in that empire state, where hon. gentlemen opposite would have us believe the farmers are so well off, he would have to pay 10 per cent. for one, two or three years. I found on enquiry that the rates in New York State were the lowest that prevailed in any state in the Union-that in many states as high as 15 per cent. was charged. If, then, our agricultural implements are cheaper in Canada than they are in the States, and the duty prevents the Americans making this country their slaughter market now and again in order to wipe out our manufacturers, so that they may have the field to themselves—as it is well known many large manufacturing establishments in the United States would not hesitate to do-there is no such tax going into the pockets of the manufacturers as the hon. gentleman would have us suppose. The hon. gentleman also stated that we were making a great cry about unrestricted reciprocity involving a uniformity of tariffs as against the rest of the world. When he said that that was done with reciprocity in natural products, he gave away his whole case, and admitted, as far as he is concerned, that unrestricted reciprocity would involve a uniformity of tariffs as against the rest of the world. The hon. gentleman also stated in that same connection, in dealing with our manufactures, that the manufacturers must be looking for that tax, and they must want it, that they were afraid to enter on a fair field of competition, and for that reason the tax was that it is no uncommon thing in the United States, with which he seeks unrestricted reciprocity, for weak establishments to be crushed out by the stronger. He must have been aware, when talking about combines, that this nation with which he seeks unrestricted reciprocity is the very mother of combines, and that combines flourish there to a greater extent than anywhere else. And he must know that the reason why agricultural implements and manufactured products in the United States are so high, as compared with Canada and the rest of the world, is because of these combines. No person living so near the border, as does the hon, gentleman, can fail to learn that these combines are all powerful on the other side, that they fix the quantity of production and the prices of all they manufacture; and when it is said that our manufacturers do not wish to enter into trade competition with them, those who say so know that our manufacturers would not have to compete with individual manufacturing establishments, but with a combine of the manufacturing establishments of the whole United States. The hon, gentleman would place it within the power of the United States to crush our manufacturers,-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then, protection has not made things cheap over there.

Mr. MASSON. Protection, as administered in the United States, has, in many cases, tended to make things dear. Let the hon, gentleman note my words exactly: protection, as administered in the United States, if you can call the tariff of the United States a protective tariff, has had a tendency to make things dear. The tariff of the United States never was a protective tariff, in the true sense of the word. It started as a high tariff for the purpose of raising extraordinary revenue, and it has been continued, irrespective of whether it was required for the protection of native industries or not. But we find that in many of the articles, with reference to which their duties are adjusted in such a way as to give honest protection, the prices have decreased. But I shall deal with that when speaking of the McKinley tariff, and will point out some articles on which duties have been placed without protection being required. The next point I wish to notice is the hon. gentleman's statement that the McKinley tariff was due to our tinkering interference with our tariff. I do not know exactly what the hon, gentleman intended to impute or intended the House to understand, but it would seem that he thinks this Dominion should not arrange its tariff without consulting the statesmen across the line, and that, because we dare to deal with our own tariff-

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has misrepresented what I have said. I said that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) had charged that the McKinley tariff was the result, to a certain extent, of the speeches of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton); and I contended that we have as good a right to claim that the Mc-Kinley tariff was the result of the tinkering on the part of the Government with our tariff, but I went on to explain what my views with regard to the McKinley tariff were, and that it had nothing whatever to do with Canadian politics.

field of competition, and for that reason the tax was maintained. Now, the hon. gentleman surely knows explanation of what he intended to say.

Mr. BORDEN. What I did say.

Mr. MASSON. I took down the hon, gentleman's words, and after saying he might as well charge the hon, gentlemen on this side of the House with being the cause of the McKinley Bill, he went on to show that the motive power, in his opinion, was due to the tinkering interference with our tariff, which invited retaliation. What were those tinkering interferences? I think, from the references the hon, gentleman made, the interference consisted in this, that there were small fruits and other articles taken from the free list and put on the other. So that if we find a certain industry languishing because of the unfair competition it has to contend with through the Americans being able to glut our markets with their produce before our own has reached maturity, and we take means to prevent that unfair competition by making a change in our own tariff, the hon. gentleman calls that a tinkering interference. I claim that, as British subjects, as a free and independent people, we have a right to frame our own tariff, and that is a right we on this side are determined not to surrender. The hon, gentleman says it is unfair to charge the Liberal party with having had anything to do with the McKinley tariff. Well, it does seem strange, if they had nothing whatever to do with it. does seem strange that the very thing which was counselled by the gentlemen who were acting as go-betweens in this matter, between the statesmen on the other side of the line and those on the other side of this House, was adopted by the American That, indeed, is very strange. -statesmen.

Mr. CHARLTON. To whom does the hon, gentleman refer as go-betweens?

Mr. MASSON. I will try and enlighten my hen, friend. I do not wish to weary this House with very long extracts, and in fact I intended to limit myself to passing references; but since the hon, gentleman has challenged me to give the names, I shall ask the indulgence of the House while I read a few extracts. We find that Mr. Farrer, now connected with the Toronto Globe, and to whom the hon, gentleman who has made this challenge referred, only a few days ago, as the best political writer in America,—

Mr. CHARLTON. British America.

Mr. MASSON. My hon, friend says British America. He excepts his American friends and countrymen. Mr. Farrer, writing to Erastus Wiman, the gentleman who, on the 1st July, 1887, made the pioneer commercial union speech in Canada, and who may, therefore, be looked upon as the father of commercial union, says that he believed a very large number of people "are inclined to think that we had better make for annexation at once instead of wasting our time in making two bites of a cherry." He said further:

"Then, again, the truth is that every man who preaches commercial union would prefer annexation, so that the party is virtually wearing a mask."

From the same pen we find the statement that "whatever course the United States may see fit to adopt, it is plain that Sir John's disappearance from the stage is to be the signal for a movement towards annexation, and that a leader will be forthcoming when the time arrives." That letter is addressed to Erastus Wiman. It would appear that he sent that letter to Mr. Hitt, or that a similar letter was written to that gentleman, for we find, under the date of the 20th April, 1889, that Mr. Hitt writes to Mr. Wiman:

"There is some logic in what Farrer says, of not making two bites of a cherry, but going straight for annexation at once."

But Mr. Hitt was a more cautious gentleman than "the best political writer in British America." He advises a little more prudence and patience and a more indirect movement. He says:

"We must be patient with the slow-moving popular mind. If the Canadian public of farmers, artizans, lumbermen, miners and fishermen can be argued up to a point of voting commercial union, it will be a great progress." The same Mr. Farrer, in the pamphlet which apparently he thought only would be seen by the favoured few, urged that steps should be taken to force the Canadians in, and that, by not moving in the direction of reciprocity but by a policy of indifference, slightly tinged with retaliation, this pressure could be brought to bear on Canadians in such a way as to force them to come to time. that through all this time these gentlemen have been acting in accord. I will go further. Mr. Ritchie, of Ohio, speaking of the Canadian House of Commons, says, in reference to commercial union, that "there is not a single one of the Opposition against Mr. Butterworth's Bill, and every man who is in favour of annexation in Canada will tell you that is the proper way to bring it about. The Hon. Benjamin Butterworth, who is the father of the scheme on the other side, says:

"We will be practically one people for all the proper purposes of this life, and when the time shall come and an attempt be made to tear us asunder, that attempt will be futile."

We might quote still further from Mr. Erastus Wiman, who says that "commercial union will change the political complexion so entirely that nothing could contribute so much to bring about annexation." We will take other friends of the hon, gentleman. The Hon. Mr. Carlisle says:

"Commercial union, in my opinion, means ultimate political union."

Chauncey M. Depew, perhaps the greatest orator in the United States, said in November last:

"The protectionist who believes that tariffs should be levied upon the principle of protection, the revenue reformer, who believes that they should be exacted only for revenue, the free trader, who thinks that they should not be imposed at all, could all agree upon the principle that whatever tariff laws existed in the United States should be adopted by the Canadian Parliament and become applicable alike along all the coasts of this republic and Canada, as against the rest of the world.

Then, still further, we have Mr. Goldwin Smith's statement, where he says:

"The proposed assimilation of tariffs on the seaboard is aimply an arrangement to prevent reciprocal smuggling.

Let me say once more that commercial union and unrestricted reciprocity mean the same—the removal of the Customs line between Canada and the States."

These are statements made by the friends of the hon. gentleman. But to refer to the opinions of the American press. Take the New York Mail and Express, which says:

"If Canada agrees to a commercial union, she must face a probable abandonment by Great Britain and then annexation with the United States. So it is really annexation that is involved in this commercial union discussion."

The Philadelphia Record says:

is addressed to Erastus Wiman. It would appear in the determination of taxation could be tolerated. She that he sent that letter to Mr. Hitt, or that a would have to accept the position of a state in the Union."

The Buffalo Commercial says:

"So far as all practical trade relations are concerned, Canada would become a state in the American Union.

The Detroit $\it Evening News$ has this :

"No real friend of political union can intelligently or honestly oppose commercial union, for a very slight consideration of the certain and speedy results of commercial union must show that it must be followed in a very short line by religion lynion." time by political union.

The Cleveland Leader, speaking of the effects of commercial union, says:

"We would swamp their (Canadian) markets with manufactured goods and wipe out their manufacturers in many branches at one stroke."

The Chicago Inter-Ocean says:

"We protest against any except the most complete, in-clusive and identical tariff conditions in both countries." The Chicago Tribune says:

"There can be no middle course between allowing things to remain as they are and adopting a common tariff against the rest of the world."

All these extracts, from statements made by public men on the other side and by newspapers favouring this scheme, tend to show that unrestricted reciprocity and commercial union mean the same thing, and that same thing is annexation. I have here a telegram from Mr. Horace E. Crawford, of Winnipeg, who was brought up in Ontario, and he says this:

"I had an interview with Erastus Wiman in New York, March, 1890, in which he told me they would force Canada into commercial union by raising the tariff. That he, Butterworth, Hitt and others met Cartwright in Washington and changed name to unrestricted reciprocity for election purposes, and they had fully agreed on policy to carry elections in Canada. He said that he knew no could not carry it so long as Sir John remained in power. It is a scheme for annexation."

Now, I think it is only fair to say that I under stand that the hon, member for South Oxford stated that he was no party to the arrangement mentioned in that telegram his denial; I believe, was published during the time of the election. If the hon, gentleman is not a party to it we find, however, that the statement is made by the friends of these men who are negotiating this commercial union; that statement is made by this man Wiman who is the father of the scheme in Canada, and whose leadership they are following to-day as to the means to bring about that object. further say that I have no doubt in the world that the hon, gentleman from South Oxford, remained at the banquet after he delivered his great speech from which we have heard so many quotations. Without attempting to discuss the merits of that speech, without going into an analysis of it-for I, like other hon, gentlemen, have read the whole speech, and not merely the choice sentences repeated here to-day-without attempting to analyze that myself, I say we have got to take the opinions expressed by those who heard that speech as to what it really meant, and whether it was patriotic or otherwise. I have no doubt the hon, gentleman was present when the President of that Chamber of Commerce said:

"The ready road to reciprocity with our neighbours would be to accept Sir Richard Cartwright as Senator for the State of Ontario."

I have no doubt that the member for South Oxford heard those remarks, and if the President of the Chamber of Commerce had in any way misconstrued his meaning, it was then his place to Mr. Masson.

cluding part of Mr. Bullock's address must certainly have brought a blush of shame to the hon, gentleman's face, because he says: "Until the lines of division existing between nations are obliterated and the whole world becomes one, each nation must guard the best interests of her people."

misrepresented; but we have no record whatever that the hon, gentleman complained of the praise that was given him in that speech. But the con-

Now that is the policy enunciated in the presence of this hon, gentleman by those who heard him speak, and I contend that no patriotic man could have listened to words which imputed that he was not guarding the best interest of his own nation without a protest. Sir, was the hon, gentleman looking after the best interests of his country when he heard without protest his host making use of those words, saying that the surest way for Canada to get reciprocity was to make Sir Richard Cartwright a Senator for the Province of Ontario, that is to say, when Ontario was annexed. Why, Mr. Blaine tells us that the only way for Canada to obtain reciprocity is to give it a voice in the Senate, and that without political union commercial union would not be possible. The hon, gentleman, on the occasion referred to, went on to speak of the benefits to be derived by the United States, how it would give to the United States another tier of Northern States, how it would make Boston the entrepot for all this vast territory behind—by which, no doubt, he meant Canada; that it would give them the trade of that vast Dominion, and once they had it, he assured them, no man would be able to take it from them, no power on earth would ever wrench it from them, Now, that being the case, was it patriotic, was it statesmanlike, to speak of giving our trade to another country, to give it to them in such a way that if ever we rued the bargain and wanted to get out of it, no power on earth could break the bargain? Was that the act of a patriot? It is a misnomer to apply the words statesman and patriot to one who advocates the giving away of the entire trade of the country for the benefit of a neighbouring state, and to get what in return? The privilege of being hewers of wood and drawers of water for the states, the privilege of sending our raw material to the states and buying from them the manufactured article, increasing the trade of the neighbouring states and destroying our own industries, destroying them absolutely and irretrievably. The hon, gentleman then went on to say that they had a great trium virate here opposed to reciprocity, namely, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the combines and the Government. Well, as to the Government, they certainly are opposed to unrestricted reciprocity, we certainly have a Government opposed to giving away all the trade of our country to the Americans, the closing of our industries for the sake of building up the large manufacturing cities on the other side. As to the combines, if we have combines in Canada to any great extent, I have no doubt they also are opposed to it, because their interests would be to encourage and foster the industries they are combined to carry on, and they know that opening the door to the manufacturers of the United States, to those great and wealthy corporations, would destroy the interests which they are combined to preserve. The combines in this country would be destroyed, of course, by those huge corporations in the United States which exhave explained to the meeting that he had been | tend their sway over the 60,000,000 people in that country, and wield such a power as they have help the English farmer, that the landlords would never been able to wield in any other country: therefore, I have no doubt that the combines of higher wages, and the farmers would get nothing. Canada would be against such a treaty. But what If there are those three classes to be benefited, they about the combines of the United States? Are the must all be benefited if any advantage is to be combines of the United States in favour of it? Cer- obtained. If it be admitted that the value of farm tainly they are, because it would be for their benefit. I could give you many newspaper statements agricultural labourers to strike for higher wages, in reference to that, how they would have the would that really be an injury to Great Britain? power, how they would crush out the Canadians, how they would add a population of 5,000,000 to the number of their customers, but I will not detain the House reading these extracts. When the hon, gentleman drew near the close of his speech he said that he would give us the policy of the Opposition. Well, I listened attentively to him, but I failed to learn the hou. figures certainly displayed a great amount of ingentleman's view of the policy of the Opposition. He certainly did not give it so that any one could understand it. He was almost as explicit as the hon, member for South Oxford was, when asked how he would raise a revenue, and he answered by saying: "Wait till we get over on to that side of the House." I have no doubt that the hon, gentleman would prefer not to give us his policy until he and his party got over on to this side of the House. He says his policy does not mean the sweeping away of the Customs wall. During the election campaign we had a statement of the leader of the Opposition thrown in our faces on every hustings, we had it printed in large type that the Liberal party was going to sweep away all Customs walls, and there was a gentleman on the hustings explaining to us exactly the names of the different Customhouses along the line that were going to be wiped away, and we had a statement of what a great saving it would be to the country. He says that we are going to send over there our raw material! and allow the finished article to come in free. For what purpose have those Custom-houses to be retained? In order to obtain systematic returns, to keep track of the trade passing backwards and forwards, not for the purpose of collecting money for the treasury, but for the purpose of taking notes of the greatly increased trade between the two countries. I will not further follow the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden), for I think I have dealt with nearly all the subjects to which he alluded. I will now briefly refer to some points in the speech of the hon, member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald). The hon, member a few days ago delighted this House with a five hours' speech, or nearly so. I congratulate the hon, gentleman on the length of his speech, and also on the amount of preparation he gave it, because he certainly did gather together a great many facts and figures. am sorry I cannot congratulate the hon, gentleman on the use he made of those figures. I was a little surprised to hear him in his opening remarks refer to Imperial Federation, or closer alliance with Great Britain. He told us in very positive language that we could not expect it to be brought about, and that England would have none of it. Ten years ago we were told that such a scheme was not to be mentioned, that Policy. It would appear that the hone member for it was impracticable and impossible, and that England would have none of it. We are quite prepared to hear such statements. But the hon, gentleman went further, and said that the farmers of England would not be benefited by such a scheme, that on one narrow line, he has not searched for discrimination in forces of the calculation would not be benefited by such a scheme, that discrimination in favour of the colonies would not the truth or for general information, but, I obtain increased rents, the labourers would strike for products would be increased and would cause the Would it be a very grievous matter for the under-paid labourers of Great Britain to have their wages increased? I do not think the hon, gentleman intended to say that it would be. I will now deal with the hon, gentleman's calculations and figures with respect to the prices of grain, which he has gathered for 5th March for fifteen years, and these dustry. Why the hon, gentleman selected the 5th March I am at a loss to know. Certainly, it was not because that is the one market day to the Canadian farmer, a day of all days in the year when the price of grain is most important. If one day was to be selected, I would have advised a day in October, or November, or December, which would have been far more important to the farmers of Canada than 5th March. The hon, gentleman, however, took the price of grain for a number of years from 1874 to 1878, and from 1878 to 1889, and the prices are tabulated in the report of his speech in the Debates. The hon, gentleman argued that because the prices were higher in the first period than in the second, the National Policy had had the effect of reducing the price, and consequently diminishing the profit to the Canadian farmers. As a lawyer, I like to refer to authorities, and I do not know that I could give the hon, gentleman a better authority than the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). Last session we had a debate of this nature, and some hon, gentleman en this side adopted a similar line of argument to that followed by the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) and claimed that because the prices were in favour of the National. Policy during a certain period, this result had been accomplished by the National Policy. The hon, member for North Victoria disposed of this question in a very summary manner. He said:

"We are told that because the prices of some articles which the farmers consume are less to-day than in 1878, protection must be a good thing. That is a most fallacious argument. It has been said. I believe, by the hon, member for East Durham, but it is perfectly preposterous, as all such articles are cheaper to-day in foreign markets."

The hon, gentleman says that because certain articles are cheaper to-day than they were then, that is, the products which the farmer has to sell, the National Policy caused it, or, was to blame for it, as the case might be, and therefore the National Policy should be condemned. If the hon, gentleman had remembered the strictures of the hon. member for North Victoria, he would have known that his argument was false, that if those articles were cheaper in foreign markets they would necessarily be cheaper here, with or without the National repeat, he has searched for evidence to condemn the National Policy; and when he stumbled on the fact that certain products were cheaper today in Canada than they were years ago before the National Policy was introduced, he declared that this was primâ facie evidence that the National Policy was wrong. Like a detective, the hon. gentleman has shut his eyes to other facts which must have stared him in the face, because on the very page on which he obtained his prices there appeared the prices in New York, Chicago and Liverpool. I will not follow the hon. gentleman over the whole of his figures, because I have already given to the House on a previous occasion prices in Toronto, Chicago, New York Montreal, not for one day in one month, but for the three selling months in year, commencing 15th September, and giving the average prices of the various farm progivducts in New York, Montreal, Toronto and Chiacgo before the National Policy and after it. If the hon, gentleman would look at the price of wheat on the 5th March, 1879—that is, the last 5th March before the National Policy came into forcehe would find that the price of wheat in Toronto was then from 80 to 93 cents for the different qualities, while in New York the price of the same kinds of wheat was from $1.08 to $1.20 per bushel. He will notice that there was a difference of 28 cents in the price then, and if he takes a week back of that he would find that there was a difference of 27 cents per bushel, and a week back again a difference of 22 cents in favour of New York as compared with Toronto. Now, if the hon. gentleman would look at the price of wheat on the 5th March, 1889, he would find that wheat in Toronto was quoted at from $1.07 to $1.20 and Manitoba "No. 1 Hard" at $1.40, while the price in New York at that date was from 95 cents to $1.06 a bushel. I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to that comparison. On the 5th March, 1879, New York had the advantage over Toronto by at least 22 cents per bushel, and on the 5th March, 1889, Toronto had the advantage over New York, in the lower grades of wheat, by 12 cents per bushel. would ask the hon. gentleman to consider this question a little further, and he will find that while wheat was quoted at from 80 to 93 cents at Toronto on the 5th March, 1879, at Liverpool the price was from $1.18 to $1.31, and if he comes down to the 5th March, 1889, he will find that while wheat was $1.07 and as high as $1.40 in Toronto, the average price in Liverpool was $1.14. I will not detain the House by going through many details, but I wish also to refer to one or two other articles which the hon, gentleman mentioned in his speech. He referred to the question of oats. In 1879 if he had only looked he would have found the difference in the price of oats in favour of New York, but if he had looked up the price in 1889, ten years afterwards, he would have found the difference in favour of Toronto. I will now take the much-questioned item of barley. On the 5th March, 1879, the price of barley quoted in Toronto was from 45 cents to 74 cents, while in New York it was from 85 cents to $1.10, while on the 5th March, 1889, the difference of price in favour of New York was barely 30 cents. That shows us that while the difference in favour of New York in the former period was 40 cents between the lowest grade in one and the lowest grade in the other, and to buy depends upon the means the purchaser has Mr. Masson.

36 cents between the highest grade in one and the highest grade in the other, yet in 1889, ten years after the National Policy, the price of barley is scarcely affected, and if it is affected at all, it is in favour of our home markets. The hon, gentleman referred to the prices for dressed hogs, and I will make a comparison in the prices of pork, because we have the best market returns for that article. We find that in March, 1879, pork was $10 and $11 per barrel in Toronto, $11.50 in New York, $10 in Chicago, or the same as the lowest price in Toronto. Now, on the 5th March, 1889, we find that pork was $13.50 in Toronto, $11.40 in New York, and $11.20 on the Chicago market. While the hon. gentleman, by the fallacious and preposterous argument that he resorted to, would insinuate, if he did not deliberately assert, that the National Policy had caused a reduction in the price of our agricultural products, if he had carried his researches further, he would have found that during these many years under the National Policy, the price of agricultural products had increased in the home market to the benefit of the producer. If the hon. gentleman, instead of seeking for the prices on a particular day when the markets were unsettled and when the produce was in the hands of speculators, had searched carefully through the price lists during the season when the farmers sold their produce, he would have found that in 1879 the prices were all in favour of New York, and that New York was paying a larger price for these products than Toronto. If he takes the prices from that year to the present time he will find that difference in price in favour of New York gradually diminished, until he finds the tables turned the other way, and in the article of pork especially he will find that it is higher today in Toronto than in New York, while the prices in other articles have become on a par with New York. Now, what does this change show? It shows that our home markets have improved as compared with the other markets of the world; that they have improved as compared with the great market of Liverpool; that they have improved as compared with the great market of New York, because it is undoubtedly a great market and it consumes a great deal, but it has in its almost boundless western country resources from which to draw, and from which it has drawn, and drawn so cheaply that we find in later years that the prices have been gradually reducing. Why has the price of our agricultural products increased in the home markets? It is because we have adopted the National Policy, and from that National Policy many benefits have accrued to the country. We have adopted the National Policy, and we have created a home market which consumes nearly all our products in these various lines I mention. By the adoption of the National Policy we have created a home market, and we have sustained and stimulated that market; we have encouraged our industries, created new ones, and we have encouraged, sustained, stimulated, and increased these industries that were in existence before. But hon. gentlemen say: The population is decreasing. I do not believe any such statement as that, and, at all events, the home market is not entirely a market depending on numbers. power to buy in the market does not depend entirely upon the number of purchasers; the power at his command. The wages the labouring man earns limits or increases his capacity to buy according as these wages be great or small, and therefore in saying that the home market has increased, we do not merely say that the number of consumers has increased, but that their power to purchase has increased as well.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

Mr. MASSON. At six o'clock, I was referring to what constituted a home market. I was explaining that a home market consisted, not only in the numbers of consumers, but in the means the consumers had to purchase. Now, the means of purchasing, especially among the working classes, depend upon the wages they earn. If they are well employed, at full time, and earning good wages, their purchasing power is strong, the market they supply is a good market; and it is in establishing such a market and in protecting it from outside competition that protection is beneficial. Had my hon. friend from East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) not limited his investigation to merely finding what the prices of products were in Canada at a certain time before the introduction of the National Policy and at corresponding dates in the years that followed, he would have found that the home markets had become, under protection, so increased and developed, that instead of being far below the markets created by protection in the United States—the great market that had grown up in New York, while New York had been gradually improving its condition as compared with Liverpool and other outside markets—they had steadily improved and now compared favourably with the American market. Taking the average of five years before Confederation—the period taken by the hon. gentleman, starting at the 15th of September and continuing on to the end of the year, I found that in these the selling months—taking, not one day in the year, but every fifth day of each month—that the average price during these years was 18½ cents, in the case of wheat, in favour of New York. Starting from that point the difference became less and less, until within the last two years we have reached had been adopted, and I want to point out this proud position, that the market of Toronto is higher than the markets of New York. I made the comparison also with Chicago, and I found that in the former period, which the hon, gentleman took as his first period, that Chicago and Toronto quotations were about on a par. The fluctuations quotations were about on a par. The fluctuations were greater in Chicago than in Toronto, but the average during the selling months—not the speculative months such as March and April-but the selling months in the fall of the year, in Toronto and Chicago, was about the same. But what do we find since the National Policy was introduced and our home market protected and developed? We find the difference increasing in favour of Toronto, until we have on an average, for the last ten years, a difference of 10 cents in favour of Toronto in wheat, and from 10 to 12 cents on oats, and we have a difference in the last year of from $2 to $3 a barrel on pork in favour of Toronto, and those changes have been brought about by the protection given to our home market by the National Policy. One reason why protection has tended to produce that gratifying result is this, that prior to the duty being placed on farm products, the American products of the soil came in before ours, the harvest of the American growers being earlier, and they being thus enabled to put their grain on the market before we could market ours, so that all our great milling establishments were filled with American western wheat before our wheat was ready for the market. The same may be said with regard to their pork. Americans filled our lumber institutions with pork. In the early part of the year, during the season of navigation, while transport was cheap, they poured in their cheap pork of the West and glutted our Canadian markets, and when the Canadian farmer came to sell his pork, he found a glutted market and he had to take the export prices. He was thus deprived of the best of all markets, the home market. Now, in the matter of grain we know that millions and millions of bushels—I will not detain the House by going over the details—came into Canada, while we had, on the other hand, to export sometimes more and sometimes less, but, on the average, very nearly the same quantity. Now, what was the result? That gave us a carrying trade; that was all right; but was the carrying trade for the benefit of the farmers? Now, Sir, it placed the farmers' market, an export market, below the New York market, and far below the English market, and the result was that we had to seek a foreign market; and no matter how well our grain might stand as compared with the grain of other countries, we had to seek an outside market for it. The farmer had to sell to the grain buyer, who looked forward to shipping it to England, directly or in-directly, by way of Montreal or by way of New York. That buyer had to take the Liverpool or New York price and deduct the expense of getting his grain there, he had to deduct the duty the Americans placed on it, and the cost of carrying across the Atlantic. The facts will prove to any hon. gentleman who will investigate the matter, that our grain was below the price of other markets. Now, with a home market developed, we are in the proud position of saying that we are on a par with New York in many things. Now, I said that I have contrasted these things from year to year before the National Policy

hon, gentlemen that there is but one exception to the statement I made that our markets have been improved, as compared with the American markets, since a good home market has been protected and developed. I want to point out that exception clearly to hon, gentlemen, so that they may apply it to prove the rule that I have laid down. Last year the harvest in the states, especially the harvest of corn, was so much below the average that the price of corn for the last season's growth has been nearly double the price of the season before. The great production of corn in the Western States has rendered corn the staple and standard of prices for the coarser grains, and the products of the coarser grains in the United States. Hon, gentlemen will see that the high price of corn for the last year's crop in the United States gave us, during the latter months of last year and the first months of this year, the position of being below the American markets in those respects. That is the first time in fifteen years that a general failure of the corn crop has taken place in the United States, that general failure brought about that home demand, and increased the home price, and the consequence was that we, though having a protected market, had not as high a home market as the United States. It was not the effect of the McKinley Bill. A strong supporter of protection might argue that this change of prices between Canada and the United States had been brought about by the McKinley Bill; but that would be following along the fallacious line of argument that hon, gentlemen opposite have adopted, the line that it was the McKinley Bill that gave us the high prices in the United States last year. But high as those prices were, they never yet reached the height of allowing us to sell to the Americans, considering their high duty. Notwithstanding the fact that United States prices were high, the Globe, in dealing with the subject about the 1st of January, treated that matter very clearly, and showed our prices here were too high for export. It stated then, quoting from a Chicago paper, that the amount of corn visible was not over one bushel in ten compared with what it was the year before. They gave that as a reason why these grains were commanding such high prices then, and dealing with it as a commercial, not as a political matter, they gave the real, honest interpretation of the reason the market was so high. Then hon, gentlemen will say if such is the case, reciprocity in farm products would not be advantageous to the farmers. I most emphatically say that reciprocity in farm products as a whole, even including barley, would be very much otherwise than beneficial to the farmers. want first to point out two distinct views of the Let us admit in the first place that we have to pay every cent of the duty on barley, that barley has been reduced down to a price that we virtually cannot sell it, and that we have got to find another market for it. A duty of 30 cents a bushel is prohibition, and that means that we shall have to look for other markets, and that will cause a depreciation in the price. We have, then, to set off our nine or ten million bushels of barley against our wheat, our pease, our oats, and in that way we are setting off ten bushels to one. In Ontario alone, the only province that has furnished these statistics, the produce of those four grains amounted to from ten to twelve million bushels on the one side, and the ingenuity in following up the articles in regard to Mr. Masson.

total of the other three amounted to about one hundred million bushels. Now, it is not to be expected that farmers are, for barley alone, going to depreciate their whole sale of wheat, their whole sale of oats and pease, because the depreciation in pease will be enormous; if corn is allowed to come in, it will be as great in oats and pease as it is in the states. Two years ago we had oats selling in Chicago for 17 cents; corn was at 20 and 22, and oats bore a relative position according to weight, and 17 and 19 cents was the average through that year. The introduction of corn free into this country would have brought our oats down from 12 to 13 cents below what the price was before. We had oats here selling at 33 and 34 cents in Owen Sound and other places in Ontario, while they were selling in Chicago at 17, 18 and 19 cents. Now, it was the competition of free corn that brought them to that low ebb. If we look through the American papers, if we look at the Amerian markets for quotations for pease, we do not find them. All the Eastern, Northern and North-Western States were in a position to grow pease as well as Canada. The imaginary line does not prevent the growth of pease on one side or the other; besides, we know that these states already grow pease, but circumstances have changed, the growth of corn in the Western States has developed so greatly that the circumstances have entirely changed, and those who in former years could, as a Canadian farmer can to-day, grow a profitable crop of pease, now find that pease are driven from the market and they grow them no more. Such would be the loss sustained in corn. But reciprocity in natural farm products would go further still; it would let in all the cheap American pork, and we would have to stop entirely our raising of pork. If pork came in free our farmers would have to close up that industry altogether. Reciprocity in farm products would also bring in free cattle and free beef, and that would destroy an industry that has been developed by the National Policy, and is being developed year after year to the great benefit of the Canadian farmers. We are told, on the other side, that our farms are being depleted, that they do not grow the amount of grain they used to grow, that the prices of grain are low, and, for all these reasons, the farmers are hard up. There is no doubt that the product of grain has depreciated, there can be no reason to doubt that the price of wheat has greatly fallen. It has fallen the world over. The best we can hope to do by the National Policy is to keep the price relatively high, and that is all we ever promised to do, and that promise we have absolutely fulfilled; but if the grain yield and the grain price are falling, it behooves the farmers to look for some other sources of revenue, and they look for that in live stock, in cattle, in sheep and in hogs, and if reciprocity in farm produce were adopted, it would be ruinous to them. If the hon, gentleman had followed his researches a little further, instead of being satisfied when he dropped on to what he thought was a little piece of evidence against the National Policy, he would have come to the conclusion that the National Policy had relatively kept up the prices. Was it for lack of knowledge that he made his statement, or did he reserve the evidence which he obtained? He must have exercised a good deal of which he made the comparison. He says in regard to the article of eggs that it was unfair to compare one year with another. We are told that eggs are as high this year as they were last, but he says that proves nothing. He may be right there, but why does he not apply that to wheat, to oats and to pork? He would apply that to eggs, because he said the McKinley Bill, that friendly Bill which was passed on the other side of the line to aid certain gentlemen to get into power on this side of the line, had a detrimental effect upon eggs. He should also compare the price of barley on this side with the price of barley on the other side, and he would find that there had been an increase of 20 cents on the bushel, and that barley was 30 cents higher on the other side than on this. Wherever it was to the advantage of the hon. gentleman, he had ingenuity, forethought and knowledge enough to make the comparison, but where such a comparison would score a mark for the National Policy, he very carefully avoided making the comparison. The hon, gentleman would also make a comparison in regard to horses, and he led us to believe that this McKinley Bill was knocking the horse trade sky high—I think his expression was "as high as Gilroy's kite." As a matter of fact, there is very little change in that matter. I know that in my section of the country horses are selling as well as they were before. I find that our export of horses is so small, compared with the number of horses we produce, that the American duty, even if it shut out the American buyers entirely, would not appreciably affect our farmers. It might affect them for a time, it might have an effect of short duration, but, on the whole, it could not materially affect us. We are told that we send 16,000 horses to the United States. How many do we produce? produce far more than that. The estimate a few years ago was that 200,000 were produced in Ontario, and later than that, 225,000. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) made an estimate that we were losing $30 a horse on 1,000,000 horses. That might be a fair estimate of the number we produce, but the farmers are not selling 1,000,000 horses, and when they sell the 200,000 horses, they find a home market in our cities, towns and villages for the great proportion, and when the American buyer, the English buyer, the foreign buyer, wherever he comes from, comes into Canada to buy horses, he has got to go one better every time than the Canadian buyer or he does not get the horse. He must go $1 better and then he will get the horse, but if the duty was thrown off, surely my hon. friend is not going to say that the farmer would get $30 more for his horse. He is not surely so impressed with the generosity of the American buyer that he would argue that the American buyer would voluntarily pay $30 more than he, by competition with his home buyer, would be forced to pay. Where there is a small percentage of 8 or 10 per cent. of the produce sold abroad, the remaining 90 or 92 per cent, will govern the price. I want to point out another feature of this. Americans wish to get the better class of horses, and they are not importing very many horses. They are by no means hungry for horses. Americans only imported, according to their own Trade and Navigation Returns, 17,000 horses the year before last from Canada, and only 38,000 all told. Of that number 20,000 came from Mexico, and those came at an average of $10 a head. We find, then, that the Americans are not, according to these figures, so terribly hard up for horses, and it is only the better classes of horses they want. The duty on a $150 horse is no higher under the McKinley Bill than it was under the old tariff. The same thing is true as to lambs. There is no doubt that all the lambs we export go to the United States, and, looking at their Trade and Navigation Returns, we find that nearly every lamband sheep they import comes from Canada. They want the better lambs, and the duty on a $3.50 lamb is just the same as it was before. So, on these two articles the McKinley Bill has been particularly guarded, so as not to hurt the American consumer too much. The hon. gentleman went on to say that the National Policy was to be condemned because it discriminated against the poor man in favour of the rich, and he waxed eloquent on the subject of pictures. He said the millionaire could buy a picture in high art at $20,000 and bring it in free, but the poor man had to pay a duty of 25 or 30 per cent. on the chromo, or the cut, or the steel engraving he might purchase. Is there anything discriminating against the poor man in allowing high class art pictures to come in free at a price of $20,000, or $10,000, or $5,000? Does the poor man pay any more for his pictures because these valuable works of art come in free? Unless it can be proved that he pays more than the farmer of the United States pays for his chromos and small pictures there is no point made against the National Policy, and certainly there is none in favour of unrestricted reciprocity. Further, the hon, gentleman said that 45 per cent. was charged on Canadian tweeds, and only 25 per cent. on the finer cloths. Does he argue that the farmer pays that amount of 45 per cent.? If the hongentleman were advocating absolute free trade, or free trade with England, he might have some figures which he could quote to show that the price of tweeds was higher here than it would be if that duty were taken off, but if he compares the price of tweeds in Canada with the price in the United States he will find that the price is from 20 to 25 per cent. less here than it is there. If he wants proof of that, let him go to any seaboard town and watch seamen landing from a vessel. What do the crews do when they come ashore? Immediately each man buys a suit of tweed, some underwear and coarse boots, for they know where they can buy them the cheapest. No doubt tweeds are buy them the cheapest. No doubt tweeds are cheaper in England and Scotland than they are here, and free trade, it might be urged, would benefit our people in the tweed line. But does the hon. gentleman propose free trade with Great Britain? Not by any means. He and his party propose to erect a tariff wall double the height we have it now against Great Britain, and at the same time have free trade with the United States, where tweeds are higher than they are in Canada. The same remarks apply to shirtings. They may be cheaper in some countries, but not in the country with which it is proposed to arrange reciprocity. The hon, gentleman waxed very eloquent on the subject of organs. I do not know where he got his figures, but that part of his speech was no doubt prepared four or five years ago, when the duties were different to what they are now. The hon. gentleman told the House that the duty on organs ranged from 50 to 70 per cent. The duties are $10 specific and 15 per cent. ad valorem. What price of organ would that make 50 or 70 per cent.? On a higher class the specific duty is $15 and 15 per cent. ad valorem; on a still higher class $20 specific and 15 per cent.; on a still higher class $30 specific and 15 per cent., and on the highest class, more expensive than ordinary pianos, $30 specific and 15 per cent. I should like the hon, gentleman to explain how he can obtain 50 or 70 per cent. out of these duties? No doubt he was referring to an old tariff. But the hon, gentleman said that the rich man's piano was allowed to come in at a greatly reduced duty. A comparison of the duties shows that the hon. gentleman is again astray. The duties on pianos are $25 and 20 per cent. ad valorem, on an extra quality $30 each and 20 per cent. ad valorem, and on a still higher quality $30 each and 20 per cent. So the hon, gentleman's contention that there is a discrimination against the poor man in regard to organs and pianos is an entire mistake. In regard to the organ and piano question I may say that the National Policy has developed in Canada one of its finest industries, an industry that employs hundreds of men, pays them good wages and exports its products to all quarters of the world. The hon gentleman referred to blankets, to the blanket of the poor man, to the shoddy blanket, on which there was a duty of from 50 to 80 per cent. Were blankets ever cheaper than at present? An affirmative or negative answer would prove nothing I admit, but we may fairly ask, are blankets cheaper in Canada than in the United States? are decidedly cheaper; I am told they are 40 per cent. cheaper. Are blankets cheaper to-day as compared with England than they were formerly? In making this comparison it appears that blankets were never cheaper in this country than they are to-day, in comparison with the English prices. I would not weary the House with the calculations, but the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) was very specific. He hunted all over the list of articles the farmers buy, and he claimed that they were paying a higher price on account of the duty than the American farmers had to pay. Yet the American farmers, mechanics, miners and lumbermen pay more for these very articles mentioned by him than the same classes of our people do in Canada. But he discovered in going through the long list of articles that farmers do occasionally purchase, that a certain clothes wringer could be bought in Detroit cheaper than in Windsor-an article which a farmer does not buy more than once a year or once in five years. He also made a statement that spades could be bought cheaper in the United States. I am informed that the spade which the hon, gentleman said could be bought at retail for $1.16 could actually be bought at from 90 to 95 cents. However, it is a small matter to cavil about, and I am quite willing for the sake of the argument to admit his figures, but I have no doubt the clothes-wringer is protected by a patent, and but for the patent laws the difference would disappear. Our spade industry is a new one. It has been fighting against strong competition, and the tariff amendment in its favour was only passed recently. If we have not yet developed it so as to be able to compete favourably with American spademakers, we certainly will soon do so. We have heard the old story about barley and barb wire. We have heard it during election campaigns Mr. MASSON. The hon, gentleman makes the year after year, and I will not touch on the matter in detail. I will just say that I interest in Canada, but I make the assertion just have always contended that the greater part of the barley duty was paid by Canadians, but when it has come to 30 cents, the additional 20 cents added by the McKinley tariff, I see that this has proved that such is not the case. No doubt the farmers were afraid of it, and had reason to be so, and accordingly they marketed their barley before the McKinley Bill came into operation, and immediately afterwards there was a sudden change. But how long did it remain? We find barley again higher than it was before, and I want to point out why it was so. It was not on account of the McKinley tariff, nor on account of the National Policy, but it was because the production of barley in the United States has so developed, and the American brewers have been able to utilize the western grain in such a way that the prices have sunk so low, that not for the last year only, but for the last three, or four, or five years, perhaps, the Canadian barley has been reduced down to a feed basis. It does not owe its existing price to the matter of brewing and malting at all, but to its value as a coarse grain for feeding purposes. No change in the American tariff, no change in any tariff, will sink it below that price, for if it goes below that price as an article for feed, pease and oats will go down also. Now, with reference to the question of oil, I shall not enlarge upon it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is a dangerous subject. Mr. MASSON. Did the hon. gentleman say it was dangerous?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes; for you.

Mr. MASSON. Not at all. I had something to do with law suits in which the wholesale price of oil came up, and I know that Canadian oil can be bought wholesale as cheap, or nearly as cheap, as the American oil; but the great difficulty seems to be that our retail buyers have, I have no doubt, formed a combine in every town; and, of course, we know that the oil combine is entitled to the defence of some hon, gentlemen on the other side. The hon, member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) gave us a sample of a combine that should be defended, and he very eloquently and very warmly defended the salt combine. He gave very reasonable arguments in favour of the salt combine as a proper and legitimate transaction. He was complaining of the reduction of the salt duty, but he might have gone further and shown that the manufacture of salt had dropped into a monopoly, that it had dropped into one man's hands, and that that one man was paying the manufacturers but a trifle more than they were getting before, when they were competing with one another and cutting one another's throats, as the hon. gentleman said. This man steps in and he takes the salt from them at their price, and he, and he alone, gets the extra profit and the great benefits of this combine. I congratulate the Government on the firm stand they have taken on this question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). No one man had ever control of the salt interests in this country. I know that to be a fact, and you are entirely mistaken, so that you nad better get on to another subject as quickly as possible.

as boldly as the hon, gentleman makes it, that one man did control the salt interest, and the product of the salt wells of Ontario. I will say, further, that the grangers of Ontario started into the salt business, and that they succumbed to the influence of this man, and one well after another was swallowed up by this man, until the last well which was opened was allowed the privilege, that the patrons of that well in the immediate vicinity could buy in bulk at what prices they choose, but the rest of the output was to go to him. That is a pure business and a legitimate transaction which the hon, gentleman from Huron (Mr. Macdonald) would defend. This man went to the manufacturer and said: I will buy your total output, and in this way, by going from one to the other, he succeeded in getting the total production. The hon. gentleman said that the Government was not honest when they spoke of getting a reciprocity treaty on the lines of the treaty of 1854, and that if the Government had made the bold statement that that is what they offered they would never have got the support of the agriculturists of Ontario. I may say that it was from adyed-in-the-wool Reformer that I got the first hint to make researches in the direction of how the National Policy was benefiting the country, and how wrong it was to keep the statutory offer of reciprocity in farm products on the Statute-Now, in all these articles which I have mentioned, I say that we have to admit the fact, that no matter what the supposition was in 1878 or in 1854, the experience of the last twelve years has taught us that our markets for farm produce have relatively improved—not actually increased in price, because we remember what the Globe said about the National Policy in 1882. When some persons were clamouring and using the fallacious arguments of hon, gentlemen opposite that because wheat reached again to a dollar a bushel that the National Policy had done this, the Globe said that "it was no more possible for the National Policy to raise the price of wheat than for a common house fly to raise a saw log." A common house fly— I have no doubt a very much smaller class of fly than that aristocratic kind of fly which sat on the Government wheel for five years when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power in this country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you aware that it was Sir John Macdonald who called himself a fly on the wheel?

Mr. MASSON. I would refer hon, gentlemen opposite to this statement which was made by the Globe, and I would ask them to consider that if the National Policy cannot raise the price of wheat it cannot lower it; hon, gentlemen opposite cannot blow hot and cold at the same time. What we say is, that the National Policy has relatively raised the prices; we do not say that it will make the price of wheat a dollar here if it is selling in New York for 80 cents, but we do say that it will increase the prices relatively. The hon. gentleman specially referred to our trade in eggs, and we must remember that we have a new market opening for us in this trade, a market which I feel certain will develop, and will be a substitute for the American market. If we cannot find a market for the "six-rowed" barley which the farmers are now raising, beyond the price which they could get for it as coarse grain, the farmers will grow a "two-rowed" barley which they will find a ready market elsewhere for. They will do in regard to these matters as they did some years ago, change their mode of farming to suit the necessities of the time. remember that when the American duty was placed on cattle, we were exporting our cattle to the United States for $13 and $15 per head, and we had no other market but the United States for that class of cattle. Our farmers then did a wise thing, and they commenced raising a class of cattle which would find a market elsewhere. The result is that one of the most profitable lines of industry the Dominion is our export cattle trade to Great Britain, an industry which has grown up in consequence of the Americans abrogating that treaty; and, therefore, the policy of the United States which was considered as a menace to us, which was intended as a menace by the Americans, and which was looked on with dread by the Canadians, has turned out to be one of the greatest blessings to the Canadian farmers, because it has started them in a new and profitable industry. Then, we have the growth of the trade in swine and pork, as a new departure for the Canadian farmer to enrich himself and to compensate himself for his reduced grain product. We have in cattle and their products an enormous export trade with Great Britain; and we have also in hogs and their products an enormous trade with Great Yet we are told that the United States is our natural market. Now, I trust that I shall not weary the House by referring to some of the returns in this connection. The United States, according to their own returns, imported from Canada last year the enormous number of 9.016 horned cattle, valued at $61,000; our returns put the value at $104,000. But at the same time they were exporting to Great Britain of cattle and their products no less than $29,000,000 worth. Now, let me give the returns with regard to grains. The United States, according to their own returns, imported from Canada under their old tariff 155,-000 bushels of wheat out of a total importation of 157,000 bushels. Yet we are told that these very energetic Americans, who are not afraid to tackle the rest of the world, are so afraid of a few thousand bushels of Canadian wheat that they are forced, as a measure of protection to their own agriculturists, and not for the advantage of one political party in Canada, to increase the duty from 20 to 25 cents a bushel. At the same time they were exporting to Great Britain alone-not taking into consideration at present what they exported to other countries-38,000,000 hushels of wheat, and 7,500,000 barrels of flour, equivalent, when reduced to wheat, to 36,500,000 bushels more; or a total of about 75,000,000 bushels of wheat exported by the United States to Great Britain alone. In the face of these figures, how can it be reasonably said that the United States are the natural market for our wheat? No more than it can be truthfully said that England is the natural market for our Nova Scotian coal. Then, of oats, we find according to their own returns, the United States imported from Canada 18,000 bushels, while at the same time they exported to Great Britain, 6,912,000 bushels of oats, and 24,000,000 pounds of oatmeal. How can it be reasonably said that a country which thus exports to Great Britain about 7,000,000 bushels of oats and the product of oats is our natural market for oats? The United States do not deal in pease, for the reason I have stated. We find that they export to Great Britain no less than 54,500,000 bushels of corn, and about nearly an equal quantity to other countries, making a total export of corn of 101,973,000 bushels. Can such a grain-producing country as that be for a moment claimed to be the natural market for our grain? As another proof that the United States are not our natural market, compare their export price with ours. Taking their Trade and Navigation Returns on one side and ours on the other, you will find that their export price for grain is about 2 cents a bushel lower than ours. But we are told that our cattle trade has become so largely developed that that would not be injured by unrestricted reciprocity. We know that the United States have not been exporting many cattle to Canada on account of the quarantine regulations, not on account of the duty; but they manage to get over the quarantine regulations by sending their cattle here in the shape of beef, in spite of the duty, to the extent of some 8,000,000 lbs.; they also send pork, bacon and hams to the extent of 29,711,000 lbs.; and if you add lard, you will find that in beef, pork and lard they send to Canada no less than 44,500,000 lbs. in spite of the duty. But let us see what they are doing with the rest of their cattle and hogs. According to their own returns, they sent to England and Scotland $29,750,000 worth of cattle, and $21,750,000 worth of the products of cattle in the shape of fresh beef, canned beef, salt beef, &c; or a total of cattle and their products to Great Britain alone of $51,000,000 While they are sending such a large worth. surplus to Great Britain to compete with us in our natural market, how can the United States be claimed to be the natural market for Canadian cattle and beef? I think no one can for a moment argue that it is our natural market. Then, coming to the question of hogs, we find that they sent a few, not many, live hogs, but they sent in bacon and ham and pork to the extent of no less than 532,000,000 lbs., besides over $10,000,000 worth of lard, amounting to a total value of $52,000,000 worth, to Great Britain alone, besides the great quantity they sent into Canada. And they sent into Canada, in one shape or another, 34,500,000 lbs. of pork, bacon and lard. That is the total that was sent in, of which 26,750,000 lbs. went into consumption in Canada. Thus, in spite of the duty, they encroached on our home market and supplied our lumbermen and others with pork, bacon, lard and so on, to the extent of 26,750,000 lbs. of the product of the hog. On the face of all these imports, can it then be for a moment contended that the United States is the natural market for our farm produce? But besides that, we have the products of the dairy. We find in that we hold the proud position, so far as cheese is concerned, of exporting to Great Britain more than the United States all told. We find our cheese is sought for in the English market, where it commands I to 14 cents a pound more than the American What about cheese? Do we send cheese to the United States? We send a few thousand lbs., I believe. But do they send any to Canada? They sent to Canada last year over 13,500,000 lbs. True, that did not all enter into consumption. True, a very small portion of it entered into consumption, the greater portion hav-Mr. Masson.

knowledge they can get by having it pass in England as Canadian cheese. Considering the reasons for the good times that did exist while the reciprocity treaty of 1854 lasted, it was not unnatural that our people generally, at first sight, in 1878, when the renewal of the treaty was proposed, should suppose it was the best thing they could get; but, looking at the facts and figures staring us in the face and dealing with them as practical men, our farmers have, time after time, and especially in the last election, declared they believed it in their interest to support the party and the policy that gives them protection. But it is said, then you are departing from your own policy of the renewal of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, with modifications to meet the changed circumstance of Canada. Not at all. Take for instance, the question of coal. There is no doubt the people of Nova Scotia at one time firmly believed that reciprocity would be for their benefit in the matter of coal. Do they think so to-day? No; because during the interval the production of coal has increased to such an extent, and the price of coal in the United States has sunk so low, that the United States market is no longer any benefit to us. So in the matter of farm produce. The time was when the farmers of Ontario did think the United States was their natural market, and their only market, but these times have changed. The progress made by this country in the matter of railways and river and canal navigation have changed the circumstances, and given us direct access to the market we were actually bidding for before, but to which we had to send through the United States. And while these circumstances have been changing here to our benefit, other changes have been taking place. The production of farm products in the United States has increased to such an extent, and the prices have sunk so low that the United States market is no longer any use to These are things which must be taken into account in the adjustment of any tariff or the making of any treaty. We are bound to consider what effect the tariff, as it now is, is having on the people, and not what ten or twelve years ago they expected it would have. What is the result the change would bring about now? Men have to deal with this question practically and not theoretically. They have to deal with things as they are, and they have to consider what effect a change would have on farm produce. Would it increase the price of any of our other products? If it would, these products are either few or the quantities we have to export are small. In the matter of horses, it would practically not affect us at all, but even if it did, the number we export is small compared with the total product. It amounts to a good round sum reduced to dollars, $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 a year—$2,000,000 may perhaps be taken as the average for the last four years—but, as compared with the total product, the amount exported is small, and besides it has to be borne in mind that when the Americans come here to buy in such small quantities we have to compete with our home buyers. In the matter of grain, barley excepted, it would be prejudicial to us. But, it is said, you claim as a party that you are in favour of extended trade relations. There are many subjects reciprocity in which would not only benefit Canada, but ing been sent here for the purpose of shipment also benefit the United States. In some things it from Canadian ports, to get the benefit they ac- would benefit us and be no benefit to the United us, but when the time comes for making that readjustment we will have to get, on the one side, what will be beneficial, and to give, on the other, what will not be a loss. And if a loss has been suffered for a gain, let it be carefully ascertained that the loss does not exceed the gain. Do not, for the sake of getting a benefit on barley, give away all the benefit we have on wheat and oats. Do not give away more than we are getting. These are the things to be considered. I have occupied more time than I intended, but the subject is a large one and worth the time spent discussing it. to consider this question as fully as possible, and it is well that both sides of it should be put in a plain and straightforward manner, and that hon. gentlemen should make researches, not with the purpose of condemning or upholding one particular line, but of placing the matter fairly and squarely before It my hon. friend, in his researches the public. on grain, had gone further than he did, he would men with whom they are negotiating to carry out have found an exception in last year's crops. would have found, in to-day's papers, that wheat in Toronto brings $1.02 to $1.03 for No. 2 White; No. 2 Winter, $1.01 to $1.02; No. 2 Hard, $1.07; and No. 1 Northern, $1.08; and then if he would refer to New York he would find the price quoted there at 99½ cents., and in a fuller return he would find that No. 2 Chicago was quoted there at 89 cents, and the highest price quoted for No. 1 was $1.02. He would find that Toronto had again recovered the Then again, advantage she lost in regard to that. if he referred to Chicago he would find the same discrimination of 10 cents. He would find that while wheat was $1 and $1.07 in Toronto, it was only 98 cents or 99 cents in Chicago. I will not trouble you with any further details. I congratulate the Government upon the grand financial statement they have presented to the country, and upon the power which that financial statement gives I congratulate them upon being able from their financial standing to put their hands in their pockets and strike off, in the interest of the country and of the consumer, no less than $3,500,000 of direct taxation, as direct taxation as it is possible to have under the tariff system. I might express a regret that some other changes were not made in the tariff, but considering the lateness of the session and the hurry that no doubt was felt by Ministers in preparing their new schemes on the Budget for this session, I will not dwell on the details which I would like to have seen changed. I congratulate the Government upon the measure they have adopted to recoup some of the revenue which is given away on the sugar duties, and, on behalf of the constituency I represent, I express my confidence in the Government as a Government of progress and development, as a Government whose aim and object has been to advance the interests of the country in every conceivable shape. It is the same spirit of progress and development which, at the commencement of Confederation, set forward with a determined hand to bind together by means of the Intercolonial Railway the provinces which then formed the new Confederation. It is the same spirit of progress and development that gave strength to the Government of the day to proceed with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to bring in the North-West Territories and British Columbia, and to unite the and we may take the language of Goldwin Smith,

States and perhaps no loss. In other things it Atlantic with the Pacific by a continuous line of would benefit the United States and be no loss to railway. This policy of progress and development is based upon faith in the country. They believed, as has been expressed in the words of Mr. Bullock, quoted to the hon, gentleman opposite, that, as long as the lines of division between nations exist, until they are actually obliterated, until the whole world becomes one, it is the duty of every nation to guard well the interests of its own people. They have acted on that patriotic principle of guarding well the interests of their own people, and they have shown that they have faith in the resources of the country. What have we presented to us on the other side? Have we a policy presented to us that is worthy of confidence, a policy that would invite the old Canadian or the young Canadian to adhere to the banners of that party? What is that policy? It is indefinite. One says it means this, and another says it means that, but read in the light of the speeches of their associates, and of the statesthe schemes they would propose, we find that it is a policy that would give to a foreign state an advantage that would be denied to England. The late leader of that party, upon visiting Washington to negotiate a treaty in 1866, had something of the same kind propounded to him, and his statement was that he would scorn to consider any proposition that would give to a foreign country an advantage which was denied to Great Britain. On a later occasion, the same late leader of that party stated that he would scorn to lay before a Canadian Parliament any measure that would discriminate in favour of a foreign country against the mother We have now for the first time in the history of Canada the would-be leaders of that once great party not hesitating to propose to us to give to a foreign country the privileges which they deny to Great Britain, or to lay before a Canadian Parliament a policy that would discriminate in favour of that foreign country against the mother land. find on one side the views of Mr. Farrer, who says to the Americans: Coerce, increase your tariff; and we find the Americans, whom these gentlemen choose to quote and to associate with, increasing that tariff, and resorting to coercion. We find an American statesman telling the Canadians and the Canadian party who are in accord with him and that he admits are in accord with him, that they must argue up the popular vote of the farmers, mechanics, miners and fishermen to vote for commercial union, that that would be great progress; and we find that in the campaign which began on the 1st July, 1877, when Mr. Erastus Wiman, the pioneer of commercial union, addressed a meeting at Dufferin Lake, in the Province of Ontario, the same effort was made to argue up the popular vote of Canada for commercial union; and we also find the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) starting on a tour of education, to educate the public mind, to educate the farmers, the mechanics, the miners and the fishermen of Canada, as he had been instructed by the gentlemen from across the line, to vote for unrestricted reci-This may be accidental, but we find these gentlemen acting exactly in accord with one another whether it be accidental or not. We have to judge from all these circumstances what is the policy of gentlemen on the other side of the House, one of the professors and solons of that party, when he said that commercial union and unrestricted reciprocity meant the same thing. find the same statements made by American statesmen, who add that annexation must be the outcome directly or indirectly. What is the policy of those gentlemen opposite? Is it a single plank? Is it simply one pole on which they would erect a flag. And, if they did erect a flag, what would be the flag? Would it be the Union Jack? Would it be a flag with the maple leaf and the beaver, but one from which the crosses of St. George, St. Patrick and St. Andrew had been torn? Would it be the Stars and Stripes? To judge of their policy more in detail, and as shown by them during the late campaign and throughout their whole career, it may be said that it has been a policy of trying to set province against province. At the beginning of the late campaign, in the early skirmishing of that campaign, the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) visited my constituency. There, he could not, in the face of a flourishing town, in the face of the number of welloff farmers who assembled to hear his oratory, say that the National Policy was ruining them. told them that they were prospering in spite of the National Policy, but, he said, you are more favoured Then he goes on to say how terribly than others. hard up were the people down by the sea, how much this National Policy was abusing them. He referred to them in this language:

"Bear in mind you now pay more than your share of taxes to assist the pauperized provinces in the east." There was a bait held out for the Province of Ontario to rise in arms against the eastern pauperized provinces. Later on he refers to them as "impoverished communities"; he says, "these impoverished communities are asking you to pay a still greater share." Now, such has been their policy, a policy of setting race against race, creed against creed, trade against trade, capital against labour and labour against capital: one story to one class and another story to another. By trying to set every man against his brother, every province against the other, every race against the other, they have, out of these various broils, tried to win some. Now, is there anything in such a policy that would encourage the people to flock to their standard? They may say that in the last election they won some seats. It would be wonderful indeed if, after four years of arguing the people to vote for them, they had not succeeded in making some But hon, gentlemen opposite must remember, and they must frankly admit, that while they were busily engaged in educating the public mind on that question, for one reason or another the Government supporters were not equally diligent, they were not going about the country, they were not even active in their own constituencies, so that the Opposition had had an open field for nearly four years and, to use an expression which those hon, gentlemen are fond of using, they "loaded up the people one way." But in the short space of a few weeks the Government were strong enough, and their supporters in the country were strong enough, to "load them up the other way," and they succeeded in doing so in a great many constituencies. We have won many constituencies, and some we lost, but those that we lost Mr. MASSON.

market town an American city right at its door, no doubt the influence would be very strong; but there were other border constituencies that did not change their mind, that remained true to the old policy, conscious of the fact that they were being benefited by it. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will apologize for having occupied so much of the time The subject is a large one, and in of the House. attempting to follow some of the hon, gentlemen opposite, I have been led into many subjects that I had not intended to touch upon. I have many other figures that I would like to present to the House, but considering the lateness of the hour and the time that I have already taken up, I will not trespass longer on your attention. I may, however, before concluding, say that Canada has nothing to be afraid of, either from the McKinley Bill or from any other source. Let me quote a few sentences of encouragement from an address delivered by the Hon. George Brown in 1874:

"Neither politically nor commercially does Canada need to change her position to secure a high degree of prosperity. In all that conduces to personal comfort and happiness, in the steady development of home and foreign trade, in the extension of public enterprise, in the flourishing condition of our farmers, in the unlimited scope for the employment of a vast population, Canada has all that a nation can desire."

However, as the Hon. George Brown has long been laid to rest, it is possible that some hon. gentlemen may prefer to read the opinions of a living leader of the Liberal party, and I will read a short extract from an address delivered by the hon. member for South Oxford, speaking in Prince Edward Island when he held the responsibility of a Minister of the Crown:

"They say we must have reciprocity, and we cannot live without it as a Dominion. I take exception to that statement. While reciprocity is desirable, we are not in such a state of subjection to the United States that we cannot live without it. We have men and ships, and will carry the war into Africa. We will find new markets for ourselves and cut them out. There is nothing better calculated to prevent the bringing about of reciprocity than to tell the Americans we cannot live without them. It would induce them to believe that they had the power to drive us into their own terms."

Such was the statement of the hon. gentleman when unquestionably he breathed the language of a natriot, when he told the Americans, when he told the world, that while reciprocity was desirable we could live without it, that we could find new markets for ourselves and cut them out. Sir, we have a country that we all might be proud of. We have resources that are for us to develop, and all that is necessary is a determination to develop them, and a confidence in the resources of our country, a confidence in the nation we belong to, and a determination that, come weal or come woe, we will stand by the flag under which our fathers fought and bled and died, and we will build up in this great Dominion a country that we may all be proud of.

for nearly four years and, to use an expression which those hon. gentlemen are fond of using, they "loaded up the people one way." But in the short space of a few weeks the Government were strong enough, and their supporters in the country were strong enough, to "load them up the other way," and they succeeded in doing so in a great many constituencies. We have won many constituencies, and some we lost, but those that we lost are what hon. gentlemen opposite call border constituencies. Wherever a constituency had for its snow will begin to fall before we get out of Ottawa. I shall not, therefore, follow the example of the hon, gentleman in taking up much time of the House. I think it is quite clear from the remarks that have fallen from my hon. friends, as well as from the remarks that have fallen from a great many on that side of the House who have spoken on these trade questions which are of vital importance to this country, that they are not now, they have not been, and they will not be in favour of reci-procity of any kind. I think it is quite clear from the remarks that we have heard dropped on this point, not only from a member of the Government last year who is not now a member of this House, but from the fact that his sentiments have been reiterated by hon, gentlemen opposite in the addresses they have delivered, that we have evidence that will clearly satisfy any unbiassed mind, at least, that they are not in favour even of reciprocity in natural products with the United States. I contend in that case they have perpetrated a gross fraud upon the people of this Dominion. what way? Last year when an appeal was made to the people for a renewal of that confidence which the Government had enjoyed for so many years, what was the ground of their appeal? The First Minister came to Toronto, the most central and important city of Ontario, and he there stated that the Government were appealing to the people to grant them authority to send a delegation to Washington to negotiate trade relations with the United States. The Minister of Justice in addressing the citizens of Toronto, stated at the same meeting that the Government intended to obtain reciprocity with the United States along the lines of the reciprocity treaty which prevailed from 1854 to 1866 in natural products. Hon, gentlemen have endeavoured to show by their arguments, that even in natural products it would be injurious to our farmers to enter into such trade relations, that in the matter of pork and other commodities we produce, it would inflict a very serious blow on the farmers. It is quite clear from this fact, that hon, gentlemen opposite are not in favour of reciprocity of any kind with the United States. reason why they are not in favour of it is simply this. The manufacturers or a very large percentage of them have been enjoying very large and lucrative profits under the present policy, and so long as they can persuade hon, gentlemen opposite to uphold them by their votes and grant them assistance of that very desirable and valuable kind which is generally given at elections, the probabilities are that hon, gentlemen opposite will pursue the course they are now following. At the same time they are leaving the farming community to struggle with their difficulties, and are allowing them to drag along with the inconvenience arising from the lack of large and lucrative markets for their products and are attending solely, only and simply to the interests of those who are largely interested in the existence and operation of the National Policy. My opinion is this, that the farming community are being educated. The last general election showed very clearly they are be-coming educated. When you refer to the border counties of Ontario, and when you look around this Chamber and observe many well known faces absent, there is evidence furnished to every reasonable man that there has been a decided change among the border them to believe that we were willing to open our counties. They have had there an object lesson of the operation of the pernicious National Policy. The people, for instance, in Lincoln, which Mr. Rykert represented for so long, have sent a man of a different political stripe to represent the county Where are the Fergusons, the Wigles and the Pattersons who represented the border counties in Ontario? They have been left at home, simply because the border counties have come to the conclusion that under the operation of the National Policy they were not prospering to the extent they should prosper, and they have changed their minus with respect to their representatives, and have sent other men here. Just as the agricultural districts become educated on this great and important question you will find they will send men here, not merely to effect a renewal of the old reciprocity treaty, but to advocate reciprocity on a broader and more extended basis than we have ever before enjoyed. The hon, gentleman said something with respect to the consistency of the Conservative If they have been consistent in any party. thing, it is in their inconsistency. They have ever since the inception of the National Policy taken unscrupulous advantage of the simple-minded electors of this country, and have endeavoured to mislead them. They have done so. They did so with respect to the introduction of the National Did they say they were going to raise the tariff on everything from year to year and continually change it? No. What did the First Minister telegraph to the Maritime Provinces? He said they were merely going to readjust the tariff and not increase it. Has that promise been fulfilled? No. It has been increased every year. The late Premier also stated that the Government would find a home market for the most important portion of the commodities that farmers produce, and they would obtain increased prices for these commodities. Have the farmers realized the fulfilment of that promise? No. Then, when in 1882 the Government were again appealing to the country, they became scared that in the agricultural districts, where the National Policy did not benefit the condition of the farmers, the farmers would rebel, and in order to bring together the friends of the Government in some constituency, the First Minister gerrymandered the ridings so as to secure representatives to keep the party in power. From one period to another, by one dodge to another, from 1878 to the present time, the people have been fooled, humbugged and misled, and they are beginning to realize, the farming community more particularly, that their interests have been sacrificed to the interests of the manufacturers, and whoever may reap any advantage under the operation of the National Policy the farmers do not at That has been the policy in the past, all events. it is the policy of the present, and it is to be the policy of the future. Hon, gentlemen opposite tell the House that they have followed the same policy, that they have not made any change, that they are going to adopt the same line and grant the same protection to manufacturers that they have enjoyed from the first, and will support them in every advantage they have enjoyed. The Minister of Finance visited Jamaica for the purpose of trying to open up trade relations with that colony. offered, no doubt, very important and very desirable concessions to the people of Jamaica. He led ports and admit commodities which they might be willing to send us, and we in return would send them commodities which they required. A gentleman came to Montreal recently for the purpose of opening up trade between Jamaica and Canada, he being a very large sugar producer. He was no doubt led to understand from those who attended to our exhibition on that island that every inducement would be offered to open up What does he now trade with that country. find? He finds that the grade of sugar produced in Jamaica is, by the tariff adopted by the Minister of Finance, shut out of Canada for the purpose of giving an advantage to the refiners in this country, for the purpose of pleasing the senior member for Halifax who is largely interested in the refining of sugar. I have on my desk a sample of that sugar. It is a raw sugar, unrefined, merely cleaned. The people of Jamaica ask that Canada should accept this as raw material from their hands, in exchange no doubt for what they require from us. But the Minister of Finance has framed his tariff in such a way as to shut the people of Jamaica out of our market in the matter of raw sugar. I say that the attempt he has made has been an attempt in vain, because the tariff he has introduced has virtually closed the door in the face of those people, when they come here and ask to do trade with us. It is the general rule followed by gentlemen on the Treasury benches that every change made in connection with the National Policy is a change in the interest, not of the people generally, but of the manufacturer. take, as an example, the sugar refineries. are told that we must have a duty, and that the tariff is necessary to provide money to meet the demands upon our treasury. But, Sir, not one single farthing of the tariff levied on refined sugar coming into this country, and which has to be paid by the people, will go into the Dominion treasury; for every single dollar of it will go into the pockets of the Canadian sugar refiners. The average quantity of sugar consumed by the people of this country is about 200,000,000 lbs. a year, and the duty of $_{15}^{8}$ of a cent per pound on the refined sugar would amount to about $1,600,000. That sum has to be paid by the consumers of sugar, and it is a very important question for us to consider where that $1,600,000 goes. Not a cent of this money goes into the Dominion treasury, but every single farthing goes into the pockets of the sugar refiners. We have many other items in our tariff which tend in the same direction, and are shaped for the same purpose; and the result is, that through the operations of this pernicious tariff the people of this country are not only compelled to pay taxes to meet the demands upon the Dominion treasury, but they are paying an enormous sum which is also extracted from them, and which finds its way secretly into the pockets of the manufacturers. Our people have, from year to year during the last twelve years, been subjected to an enormous drain on their resources, and the result to day is, that a very large portion of the people of this Dominion are beginning to realize that they are getting poorer every year, and that a change has got to be made in our fiscal policy. I have been rather amused at some of the remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to our propose to remedy it, and until we abolish that

Mr. McMullen.

The hon, member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) entered into a very extensive argument with regard to the indebtedness of the United States, the indebtedness of the several states and counties, the mortgages and the enormous per capita debt, which he maintained the people had to pay in that country. He also went on to show that in many countries in the world farmers were worse off than they are in Canada. He brought us across the Atlantic, and he pointed to Germany and to France, and he said: "Are not the farmers in these countries in a worse condition than our farmers are? Does my hon, friend not know that the people of these countries live under the same pernicious policy that we live under here? Does he not know that they have been robbed under the operation of a protective tariff as we have been robbed He did not refer us to a country where there was no protective tariff, but he always compared the farmers of Canada with the farmers of a protected country who have been for a longer time subjected to the same system of robbery that we have been. I have often been amused at the manner in which the Empire, the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite, has held up to ridicule the idea of asking our farmers to associate with the farmers of the United States in the matter of an interchange of trade. That paper says: Do you want to go into partnership with a people who are a hundred per cent. worse off than yourselves; they are in an impoverished condition across the border, and you had better have nothing to do with them. Let me ask why are the people of the United States in an impoverished condition, why are they mortgaged to the extent they are, why are the farmers of the United States to-day, Republican and Democrat, joining hands to cast off the shackles of restriction to which the protective tariff subjects them? That protective policy is the secret of their impoverished condition, and if the Canadian farmers are subject to the operation of the tariff which has been in force in this country for twelve years, for another eighteen years as the Americans have, I contend that our condition then will be worse than the condition of the American farmers The longer you have got that policy in force the more impoverished will become the people who have to live under its operation. My hon, friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) made a very unfortunate comparison when he compared the farmers of France and Germany with the farmers of Canada, because they have been subject to the same extortion and restriction that we have experienced in this country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How do you propose to remedy it?

Mr. McMULLEN. We propose to remedy it by casting off these shackles of restriction; we propose to remedy it by taking the duties off commodities which are necessary to the people, and which duties do not find their way into the Dominion treasury; we propose to remedy it by giving to the people of this country every commodity they require at the lowest possible price: we propose to remedy it by declaring that we will not uphold the pernicious law which takes the money out of one man's pocket and puts it into the pocket of another man without value. That is the way we going into partnership with the American farmers. abominable law which inflicts such extortions on the people of this country, we will not have a happy, contented and prosperous people. My hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Masson) found fault with my hon, friend from Huron (Mr. Maedonald), by saying that that hon, gentleman had taken a wrong period of the year in order to quote his prices. If the hon, member for North Grey (Mr. Masson) wished to challenge the statements of the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald), it would be quite in place for him to take another period of the year rather than the month of March, but he did not do so. I contend that my friend from Huron (Mr. Macdonald) has presented to this House a very valuable tabulated statement of the experience of the people of this country for many years under the operation of this tariff law, and I think that statement will investigation of men of brighter bear the ideas and better minds than those who undertake to criticize it. My hon, friend from North Grey (Mr. Masson), however, made a very candid and a very sensible admission when he said that all the restrictions that were placed between the producer and his getting his products to the consumer, had to be paid by the producer. That is quite true. to be paid by the producer. That is quite true. We contend that all the restrictions, whether it be freight or duty, which is placed between the purchaser and the consumer, have to be removed by the producer, and that he has got to pay every farthing on account of these restrictions, until he reaches the consumer. That is the principle which we have declared in the past and which we hold to at present, and we claim it cannot be successfully contradicted. Therefore, on every article sent to the United States, under the operation of their tariff, the Canadian has to pay the duty in order to reach the consumer. Now, Sir, we know quite well that the Americans, if at all disposed to enter into trade relations with us, are not disposed to do so on the basis of the treaty of 1854-66. hon, friend who spoke last tried to persuade the House that we were attempting to interfere with the success of the efforts which hon, gentlemen opposite promise to put forth, in October next, to secure a reciprocity treaty. I do not think the hon, gentleman can produce a single tittle of evidence to show that any man on this side of the House has made any such attempt. For my part, I should rejoice to know that they wereable to secure a treaty even in raw commodities. But, Sir, from what Mr. Blaine has said in his letter to Mr. Baker, it is nonsense to talk of approaching the American Government with the expectation that we are going to get a treaty on the old lines. I think it is futile to make such an attempt in the face of that statement, and if hon. gentlemen enter into negotiations determined to keep within those lines, their efforts will be in vain. There is no man on this side of the House who desires to throw any obstacles in their way; we would be glad to see them succeed; but under these circumstances we cannot help expressing our The Americans in the course they have pursued on this question have virtually said to us: We are not prepared to treat with you for reciprocity in the products of the forest, the fisheries, the field, and the mine, for the simple reason that we have not the products of the forest to send to you in exchange for your products of the forest, nor have we the products of the field to send to you in exchange for your products of the field, nor horses Policy. He was only a newly-born babe in our

to send to you in exchange for your horses, nor lambs to send to you for lambs, nor cattle to send to you for cattle; we cannot exchange with you on that basis; but if you are prepared to take from us such commodities as we have in abundance in exchange for the commodities which you want us to take from you, we are prepared to consider a treaty on those lines. That, virtually, has been the position of the Americans on this question, and we contend that any attempt to get a treaty from them on different lines cannot succeed. Now, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) was able to mention one item in which we had developed an export trade; that was lime, of which he stated that we had exported about $150,000 worth last year. I am glad to hear that we have been able to develop an export trade in lime to that extent; but there were many other articles in which we had an export trade before we heard of the National Policy. My hon, friend from North Grey (Mr. Masson), speaking of woollen goods, said that they were sold at a lower price in Canada than in the United States. I am very glad to learn that under the proposed unrestricted reciprocity we would have such a market for the woollen goods of this country opened to us. What an impetus would be given to the manufacture of woollen goods in Canada, if what the hon, gentleman says is true? would have an outlet in the United States for all the woollen goods we could manufacture in this country, and we would be able to sell them to the Americans cheaper than they could get them in any other The hon, gentleman also said that blankets were cheaper in Canada than in the United States. If so, what an advantage it would be for us to manufacture our coarse woollen blankets and send them to the United States? If we could only teach hon, gentlemen opposite what we mean by unrestricted reciprocity, what a system of trade we would inaugurate with the United States had we the opportunity, I think we would lead them into a great light while they now appear to be in almost absolute darkness. I really cannot think hon, gentlemen opposite are so blind on this question as they claim to be. I believe they assume the course they take for the purpose of mystifying the public mind, and leading people to believe that we intend, by the changes we propose, to bring about annexation with the United States. Well, Sir, it is a gross injustice to the Reform party of this country to charge them with any intention of that kind. I think I have had a good opportunity of knowing the true sentiments of the leading men on this side of the House, and I have never heard an utterance public or private that could give the slightest indication of such an intention; and I say that it is an open insult to charge men on this side of the House with being disloyal and trying to sell their country to the Americans under the pretense of bringing about better trade relations. Hon, gentlemen opposite have referred to Mr. Farrer. We heard a great deal during the election campaign about that gentleman and about a pamphlet he had written and sentiments he had expressed to Americans. Why, Sir, that pamphlet was written and those sentiments were expressed when that gentleman was in the ranks of the Conservative party, when he had not discarded the pernicious views of hon. gentlemen opposite ranks when the party of hon, gentlemen opposite discovered this pamphlet, which had been written by Mr. Farrer while he was still in the Tory ranks where he had been for twenty years before. alleged on the stump that he was in league with the leaders of the Reform party for the purpose of selling this country to the United States. I heard that charge frequently myself. Well, Sir, I do not know how we would be able to accomplish that end even if we were the traitors that hon, gentlemen say we are. We could only do it by means of a treaty with the United States, which would have to be ratified, not only by this House, but by the Senate, which has a large Conservative majority; and I am sure that if those Senators thought we were handing this country over to the United States, they would not give legal effect to any such disloyal measure. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson) said that the duty would not increase the price of sugar. Why, that is contrary to all our past experience. We know perfectly well that the duty has increased the price in the past. We know that up to the very day my hon, friend announced he was going to take the duty off raw sugar, the price was kept up to the highest notch to which the duty enabled the manufacturers to keep it and compete successfully with the imported refined sugar; and I have no doubt that, under the operation of the present tariff, the refiners of this country will extract out of the pockets of the consumer the highest price the tariff will enable them to extort. They have done that in the past. They have done it in the article of binding twine; and with respect to this article, I would like to ask the hon, junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) what is the price at present? I see that on the American side the Government have done the farmers the kindness of allowing binding twine to come in free. The manufacturers there made a determined struggle against this change, but the feeling of the farmers had! been aroused to such an extent that the Republican party became convinced that unless they took off the duty they would suffer very seriously at the next elections, and, under the influence of that fear, they decided to make binding twine free. If the hon. Finance Minister of this Government had followed the American example in twine as he did in sugar, he would have given a great boon to our farmers. My hon, friend has taunted us with the idea of allowing the Americans to control our But do they not control it at present? tariff. wonder whether our Finance Minister would have come down this year, as he has done, and allowed us free importation of raw sugar, had the Americans not taken the duty off first? The Americans having taken off the duty, our Finance Minister saw that the Government would not be able to stand the ridiculous exhibition which they would produce, all around our border, when our people saw they had to pay $1 for twelve pounds of sugar, when, just on the other side of the line, twenty pounds could be got for the same money, and he felt himself reluctantly compelled to place raw sugar on the free list. Hon, gentlemen opposite say, if you make any such arrangement as the one you contemplate with the Americans, they will have the making of your tariff. But, Sir, they are doing that to a considerable extent now. They have compelled our Finance Minister to make Mr. McMulle .

that in a short time he will be under the necessity of following a similar course with regard to binding twine, because, I am satisfied, if our manufacturers, who at present are protected, will put on the screws to the full extent and extract from the farmers every farthing they can, the farmers will rise in their might and say to the Government, you must take the duty off binding twine, and the Government, realizing that the farmers are in earnest, will be compelled to yield to their just demand. But they will not do this until they are obliged to do it, because they will give to the manufacturers the advantage as long as they can. My hon, friend compared the price of agricultural implements in Canada with the prices in the United States, and he said that, in making that comparison, he had taken the prices here and the retail prices there. He may have done so, but the protection given to the manufacturers of agricultural implements in Canada enables them to extract out of the pockets of the people enormous profits every year. I know for a certainty that there is a manufactory in this country which turned out 4,000 binders last year, and I know that the cost of manufacturing them was about $72 to $74 apiece. They were sold to the farmers in this country at $110 to $120 apiece, and I know that you can in Chicago to-day buy a binder for $70. If, however, you should do so and enter it for import into Canada, instead of being charged duty on the price paid, $75, you will be charged a duty on the price of the article in this country, as, under the operations of the Customs Act, our Minister of Customs revalues that binder and you have to pay the duty on his valuation. He will not accept the price at which you bought it, but will value it in proportion to what you would have to pay in Canada. Not only does he protect the manufacturer in this country legitimately, under the operation of the tariff, but gives him additional protection by this system of revaluing and charging a duty on a price higher than that at which the article is purchased. Now, to show how the farmers of the United States have been robbed, under the operation of their tariff I will read to the House the cost at which the American manufacturer produces these articles and also the prices he charges the American consumer and those at which he sells for export. There is a manufactory in Ann Arbor, in the State of Michigan, owned by a very large joint stock manufacturing company, which turns out, I believe, the largest lot of agricultural implements of any establishment on the continent. They have two prices—the one for export and the other for the American consumer, and the following is their list:-

	Price to For gg'rs.
Advance plough	•	$18.00
Advance plough	4.00	8.0)
Hay tedder	30.00	45.00
Mower	40,00	65.00
Horse rake	17.00	25.00
Cumming feed cutter	60.00	90.00
Ann Arbor cutter, No 2	28,00	40.00
Ann Arbor cutter, No 1	16.00	28.00
Clipper cutter	9.50	18.00
Lever outter	4.25	8.00
Cultivator	\dots 22.00	30.00
Sweep:	60.00	90.00

It will be seen by this list that the American farmer under the operation of their tariff law, have to pay the prices the manufacturer chooses to demand, his tariff suit theirs on sugar, and I have no doubt simply because they cannot obtain the articles and pay the duty at a less price. We are placed in the same position in this country. Our farmers are compelled to buy from the manufacturers and to pay the price they demand, simply because they cannot import and pay the duty at less cost.

Mr. IVES. Did the hon, gentleman give the price of self-binders exported and the price to the American farmer?

Mr. McMULLEN. The price for export o binders is $70, and to the American farmer $120 That is the result of the operation of their law, and it is the very same law which is applied to our people. As I said a few moments ago, the manufacturers of binders in this country produce their binders at an average cost of $72 to $75, and they are placed in the hands of the user at $110 to $120. One factory in this country turned our four thousand last year. Say they make a clear profit of $20, which would bring the price to $94, but they are sold at $110 to $120. However, taking a clear profit of $20 per binder, that would make $30,000 profit in one year on four thousand binders. I say that is a very decided advantage for those people to enjoy in that industry. My hon, friend from Grey (Mr. Masson) said that the change in the tariff would not affect barley. was rather amused in my riding last year to hear those in sympathy with hon, gentlemen opposite make a similar remark. I know one man who is a very large dealer in barley, but, notwithstanding the fact that he was preaching that doctrine, when it came near the 6th October, he was urging the railway companies to give him cars so that he might get his barley into the United States before the duty was put on. He would try to persuade the farmers that the consumer paid the duty, that, as soon as barley went up in the United States on the 6th October, the Canadian would get the same price as before, but at the same time he was trying to get his barley into the United States before the duty was raised. He thus showed that he was not sincere because he did not practise what he preached. I was rather amused at the manner in which my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague)-although I must compliment him upon his speech—went into a repetition of so many stale arguments which have so often been produced in this House. In fact it seems that hon, gentlemen opposite have to go back into the old political history of this country whenever they address the House, and rake up items which have been so often brought before us and to which our ears are so well accustomed, that it would be a relief if they could bring forward some new material. He referred to the course of the Mackenzie Government from 1874 to 1878, and said that they never could congratulate the House on having a surplus, that they were always in financial embarrassment, and so on. Well, if they were not able to use those congratulatory remarks which hon, gentlemen opposite are so fond of using, no matter whether they increase the duty or take it off, they, at all events, did not increase the duty. they did not increase the exactions which existed upon the people.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is exactly what they did.

Mr. McMULLEN. We claim they did not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But they did.

Mr. McMULLEN. I stated a few moments ago that the people were deceived in regard to the promises made when the National Policy was introduced. They were led to believe that the incidental protection which would be given to native industries would never work the pernicious results it does now, or lead to the extortions which the people have to submit to. If merely incidental protection had been given to those industries that were in need of it, and no attempt had been made to collect from the people more revenue than has been needed for the service of the country, we would have a very different condition of affairs in Canada than we now have, but from year to year every change has been in the direction of extorting from the people more money in the way of taxation than is necessary to meet the demands of the Dominion treasury. Hon, gentlemen deserted the principle they laid down that they would simply redistribute the tariff, and that what they were seeking to do was to protect our manufacturing industries in that way. The fact has been that every advantage which the manufacturers have chosen to ask for has been granted, whether the sum collected was more than was necessary to meet the demands of the public service or not. Thus, one year, they had a surplus of six millions and another year of four millions, and the Minister of Finance did not besitate to state that the Government had a large revenue which was not obtained by increased taxation. Where did they get the money from ? Did they contribute it themselves, or was it not money which they took from the people by the operation of the law which they put on the Statute-book? I was rather amused last fall to see that, at a meeting held in Toronto by the manufacturers of this country, when they undertook to deal with this question, and they professed to have given this question of unrestricted reciprocity great consideration, they passed in sclemn earnest a resolution stating that it would be injurious to the farmers of Canada to adopt any such policy; and immediately afterwards, in order to show the hollowness of their professions they passed another resolution declaring that unrestricted reciprocity would be a serious blow at the manufacturing interests of this country. If this was to be a blow at the manufacturing interests of this country it would reduce the price of manufactured goods and the consumers would get the benefit of that, so that, while they said the farmers would suffer by that policy, they acknowledged that the manufacturers would suffer very seriously, and, undoubtedly, if they did, the farmers would have derived the advantage from that. My hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) tried to show that an exchange of natural products would injure the farmers, that American pork would be admitted free to this country, and that would interfere with our pork. If we take the price of corn, we find that the average price in the United States is not above 23 cents a bushel. If that is admitted free into Canada, I want to know why our farmers cannot produce as good pork as the Americans. If we are able to send in our eggs and horses and other articles which we can conveniently send to them, and can bring back corn, we can produce pork as cheaply as they can in the United States, because labour in this country is as cheap as it is there, and the cost of living is as cheap, and I have no doubt that we can compete successfully with them. Hon.

gentlemen opposite would try to make us believe that the English market was the market for everything, that we should look to England entirely, and shut our eyes to any further relations with the United States and should give up any expectation of sending them any more of our commodities, that we should look across the Atlantic for a market for our produce. Well, we send potatoes to a very large extent to the United States. We did so last year, and later on I shall show that for six months after the McKinley Bill passed, we shipped more potatoes to the United States than we did in the corresponding period of the previous year. It is a fact that England and Scotland have shipped enormous quantities of potatoes to the United States last year and this year. Surely we could not send our potatoes to the Liverpool market and have them reshipped to the United States with any advantage to us. The fact is that the American market is the only market for us to send our potatoes to, and, if we can get the existing embargo removed, it will be of very great advantage to Canada. They harp considerably upon our discriminating against England. Well, it is late in the day to talk about discrimination of that kind. has more than once remonstrated with Canada with regard to the pernicious results of the policy we have introduced. The ironmongers in England, when we introduced our law increasing the duties on iron, presented very strong resolutions against the policy of that tariff. But hon, gentlemen opposite paid no heed whatever to those resolutions, they gave them not the slightest attention, they allowed the duty on iron to remain, and it is in force to-day. Now, the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) said something regarding tin-plates. I do not know whether to charge hon. gentlemen opposite with not having given unrestricted reciprocity fair, reasonable and intelligent consideration, or whether it is that they really do not want to know what we mean by it. asked, what would we do with tin-plate? But he we were manufacturing tin-plate in Canada, it was largely imported from England, and they were now munufacturing tin-plate in the United States. Well, I was rather amused when he put that question; and the Minister of Finance also put the question: What were we going to do with woollen goods, and how would we arrange with regard to their introduction from Canada to the United States? Every man knows that under the operations of unrestricted reciprocity, you would have, in the first place, to enter your woollen goods as the product of Canada, you would have to satisfy the Customs officer that they were the product of Canada; and you would have to satisfy him that the tin-plate was a product of Canada; not only would you have to make that statement, but undoubtedly you would have to testify to the fact under oath. Now, when you import goods into Canada you have got to make the same statement, you have got to present to them the invoice, you have got to prove it is a correct invoice, you have to fyle a duplicate of that invoice, you have got to attest to it before you can get your goods out of bond. On the same principle you would have to pass your tin-plate and woollens into the United States; but hon. gentlemen opposite do not appear to be able to get that idea into their heads, and I have no doubt that the Mr. McMullen.

operation on the heads of some of his hon. friends before they will be able to see through unrestricted reciprocity. Possibly he sees it himself, but I do not think that he does. I have no doubt he will have some difficulty in opening the heads of those people to enable them to see what it is. The hon. gentleman from Albert (Mr. Weldon) made some statements with regard to farm lands. He challenged the statement we had made on this side of the House, that farming lands were reduced in price. Well, Sir, I would like very well to exchange experiences with my hon. friend; I would like very well to turn over to him some of the farms that I have on hand in western Canada—and he will see by the papers the authority under which I hold those lands, the price paid—I should be very much pleased, indeed, to transfer them to him without interest for the last number of years. I am afraid that he would hesitate to take them. That there has been a very serious reduction in the value of farm lands, I think will be admitted by every money loaning company in the Dominion of Canada. There is not a money loaning company in Toronto to-day that is not carefully investigating and criticizing every investment in real estate and farming lands; they have to ascertain whether they are safe on those investments or not. Undoubtedly farm lands may be improving, it is a good thing for the investors that they are. The farmers are not idle, they are a very industrious class of people; they are always making new fencing, or improving their houses and barns, or making new ones, and all this tends to keep up the value of the property. But I say that, as a rule, where farms are allowed to stand without improvements, a very serious reduction has taken place in their value. I am satisfied that the cause of that reduction is largely owing, if it is not altogether due, to the results of the National Policy that has been in force in this Farming has not paid, our farmers have been restricted in the advantages that they might have enjoyed. My hon, friend from Albert also spoke with regard to shipping eggs to England. He went on to show that England imported not less than 93,000,000 dozen in a year, and that there is in that country a market to any extent and for any quantity of eggs. My hon. friend seems to forget the difficulty of packing eggs so as to enable them safely to reach the English market. If he will enquire of any man who has made the experiment, he will find that it will cost, at the very least calculation, about two cents a dozen more to pack eggs to send to the English market, than it will cost to send them to the American market. You have got to put them up in boxes, with 12 or 24 dozen in each, and you have got to make strong shelves inside, so that you can build layers of eggs on top of each other. Then, when the box reaches the English market, it must be made in such a manner that you can saw it in two and sell half of a box to one man, and the other half to another. They have got to be put up in that way, you cannot ship eggs there in any other way, nor can you successfully handle them in the English market in any other way. They do not count upon opening every box, and you have to take your own risk to some extent. You have not got to do all that to ship to the American market. got to do all that to snip to the American market. Then we have to consider the point raised by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald), with doctor himself will have to perform a surgical regard to the stale condition of the eggs. After having remained in the hands of the first retail merchant, they are bought up by the egg dealer, and repacked, all which operations take time and cause delay in the transport of these eggs, so that when they reach the market they are not in a condition to be classed as of first quality, and you have got to take a reduced price.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Turned into chickens.

Mr. McMULLEN. Very possibly chickens in some cases. However, they cannot unquestionably arrive in the same condition as they could if sent to a market very much nearer. Now, notwithstanding the fact of the increased duty under the McKinley Bill, my present impression is, and I believe it is the impression of egg dealers in this country, that we will still have to seek a market in the United States for these commodities. Why, Sir, when you come to consider the advantage of trading with those enormous centres of population, such as New York, Boston and Philadelphia, reaching there within 24 hours from the time the train starts from any station, almost, in the Province of Ontario, any person will easily understand what an advantage unrestricted reciprocity would be to our farmers in respect to those commodities. I do hope that the hon. gentlemen opposite, in their efforts to secure an extended trade, will at least secure the free admission of these things that we have got to sell there, if they make any trade relations at all, and I shall congratulate them on the result of their efforts if they accomplish that. Now, I was rather amused that the hon, member for Albert did not know the difference between unrestricted reciprocity and commercial union. I will not endeavour to give any more explanation to the House upon that question than what has already been given. The Conservative organs have generally tried to mystify the public mind upon the whole question, they have tried to show that it is annexation in disguise, they have tried to show that we intend to procure annexation under the operation of unrestricted reciprocity; but it is not so. Now, I will give you the amount of potatoes that we have shipped into the United States since 6th October, 1890, when the McKinley Bill went into force. We shipped into the United States 1,850,190 bushels, upon which the duty paid under the operation of the McKinley tariff, amounted to $462,547.50. all the rest of the world we only shipped 275,446 bushels, or we sent seven bushels to the United States, over a tariff wall of 25 cents a bushel, as against one shipped to other parts of the world. Now, the Minister of Finance in making his statement to the House, said that the iron bounty had had the expected result, that it had secured in some measure at least the fulfilment of the promises that were made to this House when Sir Charles Tupper introduced his iron duties. He pictured to us in the most glowing terms what the result of the increased duty on pig iron would be. We are now paying $2 a ton as a bounty for the production of pig iron in Canada, and there is also a duty of $2 per ton, which gives the producer $4 per ton in bounty and duty. Under the operation of that protection and that duty I should like to know from the Minister of Finance if more tons of pig iron were produced last year than the pre-vious year as a result of the change in the law. I do not think there has been any increase. Our importations of pig iron are about basis. Yet they challenge us with respect to our the same as before. Our farmers, however, have been subjected to an enormously increased tax under the law. The Minister of Finance uses, no doubt, very little iron, only the iron in his pen; the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) uses very little iron, except that in his instruments, but the farmer uses more iron in his plough than a doctor does in everything in a year. The result is that a heavily increased burden is placed on the farmers by the increased duty imposed on iron, which the farmers have to pay. When Sir Charles Tupper proposed the iron duties I said that if we were going to attempt to produce iron in Canada, the Government should do so by means of a bounty and not by a duty, for if it is done altogether by a bounty every man in Canada contributes to it. such a case, every man who wears a coat or a hat contributes a certain amount to the general taxes, and it was very desirable that this assistance should be given in the shape of bounty, as in the United States. The Minister of Finance said that the people of this country so far have stood the strain of the McKinley tariff well. No doubt he and his associates were afraid the people would not stand it very long, and if they are subjected to the operations of that Bill and are compelled to find markets for their horses and many other commodities which have hitherto been sent to the United States, they will begin to rebel, and they will rather surprise hon. gentlemen opposite when they get an opportunity. The hon, gentleman also told the House that he has sent a man to England for the purpose of working up the egg trade. I was amused that, notwithstanding the large staff in England—I could hardly expect Sir Charles Tupper to undertake such a small matter as the working up of the egg trade, but his very expensive staff might have found a man to attend to that very particular duty-there was no man capable of performing that particular duty, and the Finance Minister must send, at the expense of the country, a man to England to ascertain if our farmers can send their eggs profitably to the English market. The Minister of Finance also spoke with respect to fostering trade with the West Indies. I have endeavoured to point out what a muddle he made with Jamaica, and if he does not foster any other trade better than he has fostered hitherto he will not accomplish very much. He will, no doubt, be compelled to make some changes in the tariff before the House closes in order to open up our ports to Jamaica for its raw sugar, and I shall be very glad if he does that, in order to carry out the promise he made when in Jamaica with respect to our disposition to trade fairly with them. The hon. gentleman said that a steamship line should have been established between Canada and the West Indies long ago. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been twelve years in power and have not introduced the question of a steamship line to the West Indies, and if there has been any delay it has been their fault. The Minister of Finance also spoke of establishing trade with the United States on a broad basis. I am at a loss to understand what hon, gentlemen opposite Some of them rise and declare that trade with the United States in any shape would be injurious, others rise and say we should make a trade arrangement in natural products, and the Minister of Finance says we must trade on a broad policy. I would recommend hon, gentlemen opposite, before engaging to criticize the policy we propose to inaugurate, to set their own house in order, and come to an understanding among themselves. They do not appear to understand themselves the question, for one member talks one thing and another member talks another thing, and the Minister of Finance takes a different view from all the rest. The hon, member said something with respect to the public debt. We are very sorry to think that we are subjected to such an enormous debt; I do not know any country enjoying the full privileges of responsible government which is subjected to such an enormous debt as is Canada. It is high time we should stop increasing the debt, and I hope hon. gentlemen will not add to it any further. We have added $120,000,000 during the last 12 years, and in many cases the money has been squandered and spent on projects that have not yielded any revenue. The hon, gentleman stated that we are now paying $1.65 per head for annual interest on the debt. cannot find out the basis on which this calculation is made; for the present census has not been completed. The hon, gentleman stated that the amount paid for interest was $8,898,000. The Auditor General says the amount is $9,567,410. Undoubtedly we have some revenue from investments, but, on the other hand, the hon. gentleman said nothing about the cost to this country of handling our public debt. Placing that with the interest we pay we obtain the sum of $9,887,250. Taking that and the per capita amount of $1.65, we would require to have in this country 6,000,000 population within a few hundreds. I shall be glad to know that we have that number of people in the country, but I believe such is not the case. We have an annual expenditure of $38,000,000, and investigations with respect to unnecessary expenditures that I am very sorry indeed to witness in some of the departments are in progress. I have taken the trouble to go over the expenditure with respect to the North-West. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when we were asked many years ago to consent to an increased grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway, a glowing statement was made with respect to the amount of money we would be drawing from that country by 1891. Sir Charles Tupper presented a statement to the House that was very enticing. He calculated that a certain number of farmers would be occupying a certain number of acres of land, and then he figured up the grain crop. The First Minister declared we would have $58,000,000 at least to our credit by 1891. I take the items as shown by the Auditor General's Report for this year under the head of the Department of the Interior, and they show the following facts: We have expended altogether in the North-West, including the Land Board at Winnipeg, registrars, sheriffs and all officials there, including homestead inspectors, and colonization inspectors, also expenses at Ottawa in connection with the Interior Department, inside and outside service, last year, $445,521. Our net receipts from the North-West for last year, including our receipts for the sale of lands, payments on land, coal mines, timber limits, grazing grounds, the Banff Park and all other sources, are $462,302.26, and we have therefore a net sum out of the entire North-West for last year of $16,780.88. Now, Sir, that is a deplorable condition of things so far | which he had handled the affairs of the country, Mr. McMullen.

as the great North-West is concerned. Let us now take the condition of our railways. We find that we have spent about $50,000,000 on railwaysand we will add to that about $2,000,000 this yearthe interest on the $50,000,000 at 4 per cent. would be $2,000,000; the loss on operating Dominion lines last year was $640,000, so that the net loss to the country on railways is $2,640,000. To show the difference in the earnings of our Dominion railways, compared with other lines, I will quote the per mileage carnings of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Dominion railways. The Grand Trunk Railway earned $1.11 per train per mile for every train, and the Canadian Pacific Railway earned $1.17 per train per mile, while the Dominion railways only earned 631 cents per train per mile, which shows very clearly that our railways are operated at rates far below what The Grand Trunk Railway they should be. operates 3,122 miles of railway; its gross earnings were $18,300,606; its earnings per mile $5,861; its gross operating expenses $12,842,046; its operating expenses per mile $4,113, and its prefit per mile $1,748. The Canadian Pacific Railway operates 5,085 miles of railway; its total gross earnings were $15,572,985; its earning per mile $3,062; its gross operating expenses $9,424,166; its expenses per mile $1,853; and its profit per mile $1,209. Now we come to the Government rail-We have 1,181 miles of Government railways. ways in Canada. The gross earnings were $3,173,-711.65; earnings per mile $2,685; operating expenses per mile $3,263.50; leaving an absolute loss in the operation of $578.50 per mile. the Canadian Pacific Railway carried 591 tons of freight per mile; the Grand Trunk Railway carried 2,533 per mile, and the Government railways carried 1,202 per mile, or a mile, or a little over double the amount of tonnage per mile on the Canadian Pacific Railway; but, notwithstanding that fact, the Canadian Pacific Railway earned $1,209 per mile profit, while the Government railways lost $578.50 per mile. I think that fairly shows that there is some very bad management in connection with our Government railways. It is quite clear that it would be highly in the interest of the people of this country, if the Intercolonial Railway was sold out to a syndicate or got rid of in some way so as to relieve the people from the enormous drain which it subjects them to. But in spite of the experience which we have had for years, the Government have given their aid to the building of lines which virtually duplicate the main line of the Intercolonial Railway, and instead of improving the prospect of that line being able to pay running expenses, the policy of the Government has jeopardized all hope of the country being relieved of the burthen of maintaining this railway. Now, an-other very deplorable fact is, that the Government is spending $500,000 a year on immigration, and I find from the Trade and Navigation Returns of last year that we shipped out of this country $79,346 worth of household effects; the goods of people leaving this country and going to the United States. Hon. gentlemen opposite promised, when they introduced their policy, that they would put a stop to this condition of things. They black-guarded and abused and vilified my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) for the manner in because, as they said, the population was going out of the country. But, Sir, to-day, after their twelve years in power, we have a deplorable exhibition of the exodus from Canada. The emigration from our country at present is double what it was when the Government of my hon, friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) occupied the Treasury benches. I shall not take up the time of the House in referring to many matters which could well and properly be brought into this debate, further than to say that we are now investigating a condition of things which I am exceedingly sorry it should ever have been necessary to bring before Parliament. Until the reports with regard to these investigations are brought down, and until members have an opportunity of reading and studying them, I shall not venture to deal with these matters. Sir, I say that the whole thing tends to show with what looseness the affairs of this country have been handled, and how very desirous it is that a change should take place, and that the people of this country should be relieved from the burthens they have had to bear for many years. I will not refer either to the extraordinary manner in which we have subsidized many lines of railway. We have in the past absolutely thrown away a great deal of money in introducing railways into several parts of this Dominion, which railways are useless. They stand as monuments to the folly of hon. gentlemen opposite in endeavouring to keep in power by subsidizing railways which to-day are not paying their running expenses. I shall now refer to the proposal of the Minister of Finance to grant a bounty for the production of beet root for one year. I consider that, if we are to offer a bounty for anything at all, the poor farmers of this country should be granted a bounty, to meet the enormous duties they are subjected to in sending their products to the United States. I urged this question last year, and I contend that, after the enormous sums which have been taken out of the pockets of these people under the operation of the iron duties, the Government should divide some of that money, in the shape of a bounty, among the exporters of barley, and horses, and lambs, and articles of that kind. If that were done, it would in some way compensate them for the enormous duties they have to pay, until such time as the Government can find a better market for their products. the bounty were given to the poor farmers who have lost their market in the United States, through the conduct of the Government, it would be a step in the right direction. But, Sir, we could not persuade them to do that. But in order to meet the views of those who are attempting to raise beets in this country for the purpose of manufacturing sugar, they have granted them a bounty. I do not think it is right that a bounty should be granted to one industry of that kind, which is not so much entitled to it as the farmers of this country are to be relieved from their present burdens and disadvantages. Sir, when we carefully examine the condition of our trade with the outside world, and compare the value of what we send to the United States with the value of what we send to all other countries, we cannot fail to come to the conclusion that this country is suffering very seriously from our hampered trade relations with that country. We find that our exports, the produce of Canada, to all countries, are as follows:-

Great Britain	$41,499,149
United States	33.291.207
France	277.827

In all..... $82,335,514 This shows very clearly that the American market is a most important market for this country, and that in place of doing anything that would irritate and annoy the American people and prevent them entering into closer trade relations with us, which would be advantageous to them as well as to us, we should attempt to cultivate a friendly spirit towards them. The year before last the hon. Minister of Finance brought in a Bill, imposing duties which tended to irritate the Americans. Had the hon, gentleman waited until after the passage of the McKinley Bill, perhaps it would not have passed entirely in its present form. The probabilities are that the people in the United States who are in favour of extended trade relations with Canada, would have been able to get it framed in a more friendly spirit. The hon. Minister was remonstrated with at the time, but he would not consent to alter his course. Hon, gentlemen opposite insinuated that hon, members on this side of the House were perfectly aware that the McKinley Bill was going to be introduced, and encouraged its introduction. It is a gross injustice to this side of the House to make that insinuation, and not single tittle of evidence has ever been produced to show that there is any truth in it. On the other hand, hon, gentlemen opposite are quite aware that they refused to take the duty off small fruits coming into Canada from the United By means of those duties they exasperated and annoyed the Americans until they were challenged across the floor of this House, and eventually agreed to put small fruits on the free list. But they did not do it until for shame's sake they durst not refuse any longer. Now, Sir, I have endeavoured to show how important it is that we should, if possible, secure the markets of the United States. We know perfectly well that from the position we in Ontario occupy, it is most desirable that those markets should be opened to us. Now, the commodities we exported in 1890 were as

Products of the Mine	$ 5,126,131
do Forest	27,289,264

Now, it is gross injustice to the agriculturists of this country to ask them to submit to the extortions to which they are subjected, while they are the principal exporters of commodities in this country. They produced last year nearly $45,000,-000 worth of products for export, while the manufacturers who are receiving the entire attention of hon, gentlemen opposite exported only about $6,000,000 worth. Last year the Province of Ontario exported altogether $25,736,617 worth, of which we sent $20,414,304 worth to the United The Province of Quebec exported to the United States $4,659,308 worth; the Province of Nova Scotia $2,936,656 worth: the Province of New Brunswick $3,100,188 worth; the Province of Manitoba $330,070 worth; the Province of British Columbia $3,125,176 worth, and the Province of Prince Edward Island $595,252 worth. In other words the Province of Ontario exported to the United States $20,414,306, and all the rest of the provinces $14,746,650; so that Ontario exported to the United States $5,667,656 more than all the rest of the provinces together. This clearly shows that the McKinley tariff strikes more directly at the farming community of the Province of Ontario than at any other community in the Dominion. When we come to consider the articles which we send to that country and the duties to which they are subjected, these become very serious consideration to our farmers. Of barley last year we sent to Great Britain 27,132 bushels, valued at $12,017, while we sent to the United States 9,939,743 bushels, valued at $4,582,562, on which we paid a duty of $993,974. Under the McKinley tariff the duty on that same quantity of barley would be $2,981,922, or an increased duty of $1,987,948 which our people will have to pay if they send the same quantity of barley to the United States this year. We sent to the United States 251,640 sheep, valued at $761,565, on which a duty was paid under the old Under the McKinley tariff the tariff of $152,313. duty upon the same number of sheep would be $188,730, an increase of $36,417. We sent horses to the number of 16,118, the value of which was $1,887,895, and on which a duty of $377,579 was paid. Under the McKinley Bill, if we should send the same number of horses to the United States next year, we will have to pay a duty of $483,540, or an increased duty of $105,561. The Americans use up a very large quantity of horses in the year, about a million, and there is no other outlet apparently at present for our surplus except the United States.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many horses do the United States import in a year?

Mr McMULLEN. They import 16,118, and they use up about a million each year. The entire stock of horses in the United States is about 10,000,000, and the average life of a horse there is about ten years. They import a very large number from other places as well as from Canada.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many from other places ?

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the figures just now, but I have no doubt some one on this side, who will follow me, will be able to give the hon. gentleman the information he Last year we exported to the United States 1,053,230 bushels of potatoes, valued at $308,915, on which we paid a duty of $61,783. Under the McKinley Bill, if we should export a similar quantity next year, we will have to pay a duty of $263,307 or an increased duty of $191,524. We sent to the United States 101,713 tons of hay, valued at $922,792, on which we paid a duty of $2 per ton, or $203,426. Under the McKinley tariff we will have to pay a duty of $4 per ton, which on at $104,623, on which we paid a duty of to the commodity of eggs, which we shipped to the United States last year to the extent of 12,825,735 dozen, valued at $1,793,104, and no duty was charged; but should we be under the necessity of sending the same quantity of eggs to the United States next year, the farmers of this country will have to pay in duty, under the McKinley tariff, $641,286. This becomes a matter of very vital importance, and however hon, gentlemen opposite may belittle our remarks with regard to the increased duties, under the operation of the new tariff, they will realize, when the farmers become fully aware of the results of its operation, that they will have a hard job in persuading them that they should patiently and willingly submit to these exactions. Now, taking the increased duties under the McKinley Bill and the duties I have mentioned, the result sums up as follows:--

This shows the exact extent to which this tax is going to affect the resources of our farmers. would be exceedingly pleased indeed, and I give the Minister of Finance credit for any little efforts he has made to try to secure a new outlet for a number of those commodities; but I am afraid that, after beating all around the bush, after going to Jamaica and Australia and China, and travelling all over creation, he will be compelled to return to his own country and foster closer trade relations with the United States. Should be fail and in default of being able to carry out his promising statements that he had every confidence of securing better markets, he will have to come back and say to this House: Gentlemen, I made that statement in a moment of weakness, and have not been able to accomplish what I anticipated. We sent last year horned cattle to Great Britain to the extent of 66,965 head. Great Britain is our best market for horned cattle and I earnestly hope that the kindly relations existing between us and the mother country with regard to the admission of our cattle will long continue. If any embargo should be placed on them, it would undoubtedly be a serious matter for our farmers, and I hope every effort made by the Government will be successful to promote the continuance of the free admission into that market of our cattle. To the United States we sent of horned cattle 7,840 head, valued the same quantity, will be $406,852. Now we come | $20,925. Now, I have not by any means exhausted the list of commodities we send to the United States. Last year we sent berries to the value of $36,117, and canned fruits to the value of We sent beans to the United States last year to the extent of 183,638 bushels, valued at $249,323, on which a duty of $24,900 was paid. Under the McKinley Bill that duty would amount to $73,455.20. We sent pease largely to Great Britain, our export amounting to 1,857,970 bushels, valued at $1,890,836, and to the United States we sent 437,735 bushels, on which we paid a duty of 20 cents a bushel, or $87,565. We sent split pease to Great Britain to the extent of 148,960 bushels, valued at 95,209, and I notice we sent quite a quantity also to the United States, namely, 90,277 bushels, valued at $74,215. My reason for quoting these items is to show that, not only in the articles of horses, sheep, barley, hay and eggs have we had a large and desirable outlet in the United States, but also for a great number of other commodities, and that therefore the American market, which has taken so much of our surplus, is one we should cultivate as much as possible. Last year we sent 237,000 bushels of rye to the United States, on which, under the McKinley Bill, we would have to pay 10 cents per bushel. We also sent 13,600 barrels of oatmeal to the United States, on which the duty under the McKinley Bill is raised from 1 cent to 2 cents per pound. Of malt we sent 258,891 bushels to the United States, valued at $150,000, on which the duty, under the McKinley Bill, will be 45 cents, or $116,500. In the article of maple sugar, our export to the United States amounted to 233,958 pounds, valued at $16,644. This shows that many things, for which otherwise we would have great difficulty in finding a market we have been able to dispose of in the United States. I am glad to see that we are increasing very largely our export of cheese to the English market, and that we obtained good results. the United States we sent but a small quantity, about $6,500 worth. We sent also hides to the English market to the value of $28,082, and to the United States last year we sent $470,465 worth and paid a duty of $94,093. Last year we sent poultry and game to the United States of the value of $49,233, under a duty of $9,846. The duty on that is also increased. Of sheep pelts, we sent to the United States 33,096, of the value of $7,103, on which the duty would be $1,420.60 under the new We sent a very large quantity of wool to the United States, no less than 1,046,894 lbs, of the value of $233,466, and the duty on that has also been increased. We also sent flax to the United States of the value of $175,566, and we also sent 61,927 barrels of apples, of the value of $149,479. I am glad to see that we also sent a large quantity of apples to England, amounting to 313,684 barrels, valued at $835,545. We thus find that many commodities which we send to England, we also send to the United States, which shows that there is there a very large market and outlet for the commodities we have to spare. There is another matter that has not been touched upon. There is no country in the world that carries freight at such a low rate as the United States. The railways of the United States carry freight from point to point within their own territory for about one-third the price charged in England, so that once we get our commodities across the into the most hopeless condition of any country get freight rates one-third the amount of those charged in any other country. We have a large population at our doors. In the State of New York there are some six millions of a population, who are consumers of the very best commodities we produce and are willing to pay a good round price for them.

Mr. GILLIES. I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman is reading his speech, and has been for the last half hour.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite willing to send my notes to you, Mr. Speaker, for your inspection. It is highly desirable that we should retain the people of the United States as the consumers of the commodities we have to sell. I will not delay the House much further. I have considered it my duty to present these statements to the House because I represent an agricultural district, and I do not think I would be discharging my duty if I did not point out the unfortunate results which the tariff put in force in the United States will have if it should remain on their Statute-book. I think the farmers of this country have been misled, and especially at the last election. I will give hon, gentlemen opposite every credit for any attempt they make to obtain reciprocity, but I have no hopes in that direction; and I agree with the views that have been expressed that there is no prospect of hon. gentlemen opposite being able to make satisfactory trade relations with the United States in the face of the statements they have put in black and white in regard to reciprocity in natural products. It is clear that they are not ruled by any desire to benefit the farmers, but will be guided only from the manufacturers' standpoint, and, as long as the manufacturers can manage by their wily manœuvring to pull the wool over the eyes of the farmers, and to persuade them that reciprocity is not in their interests, but that they should keep the present party in power, I fear we shall have the same state of affairs as we have had in the past. Hon. gentlemen opposite have had the best opportunity given to any Government to inaugurate one of the happiest and best and most comfortable nations on the face of the earth. Had they started in 1878, when they got the reins of power, had they economized with the care and attention they should have displayed in public affairs, had they kept down our expenditure instead of increasing it from $23,000,000 to $38,000,000, had they not increased our public debt by $120,000,000, had they secured in each department of the service that economy, that attention to duty on the part of all the officials which is desirable, and had they abstained from inaugurating the unfortunate policy they have adopted in the North-West, an exhibition of which is fully presented to the House in the figures I have quoted here, they had the most glorious opportunity of making a record for them-selves which would be handed down to coming generations as a credit to the Liberal-Conservative party. But they have abused their opportunities. They have recklessly handled the finances of the They have deceived the people, and they have deceived the farming community. They have done nothing in regard to trade relations but what is contrary to the interest of the farmer; and today they have brought the affairs of the country border and reach the American railway system, we that is a dependency of the British Crown.

You cannot put a finger on any other portion of the British Empire which presents the unfortunate position which Canada does at this time. We have an enormous debt, amounting to about $50 per capita. We have an outlay of $38,000,000. We pay $10,000,000 of interest, $8,000,000 of which is sent across the Atlantic. Here, at the end of twelve years of the administration of affairs by the hon. gentlemen opposite, the condition in which we find this country at present is so bad that, if we were to go on in the same line, in the same course of extravagance, in the same reckless administration of public affairs for the next twelve years, we would be in the most hopeless condition that any country ever reached which enjoyed the privilege of a free government and the right of the people to exercise the franchise. I hope the people will wake up to the condition they are in, and will take action in order to prevent a perpetuation of the recklessness which has characterized this Administration, and that they will not permit hon. gentlemen opposite to go on in the direction they have for the next twelve years. I have been rather amused to notice with what a degree of comfort and consolation a number of manufacturers on the other side have accepted the changes which have been made in the tariff this year. We find this amongst made in the tariff this year. We find this amongst those who are interested in the sugar refining business, and who, no doubt, dictated the changes which should be made in the tariff if the Finance Minister desired to secure their adherence. night we have the fact before us that, notwith-standing that the Finance Minister went to Jamaica in order to open up trade with that country, no sooner does he return and re-adjust his tariff, but he closes the door fast in the face of the sugar considered it my duty to present this statement on producers in Jamaica, and says: You shall not behalf of those who sent me here, who are chiefly send your sugar into Canada without paying duty on it. That has been done for the purpose of meeting the wishes of the refiners of this country. The refiners of this country knew that if Jamaica sugar was permitted to come in here in a condition which is virtually raw it would strike a very serious blow at the volume of the consumption of white ment of the House. sugar in this country, it will virtually be closing the Motion agreed to door upon the importations of Jamaica sugar, and when the representative of Jamaica comes here and finds that our doors are practically closed against him, he has nothing to do but to step across the border and he finds the doors of the Americans are open to him. There they only exclude what is over 16 Dutch standard, here we exclude all over 14 Dutch standard. I hope that the Minister of Finance, before the House rises, will alter the duty upon sugar and will allow the people of Jamaica an opportunity of sending in those commodities. wish to tell the hon. gentlemen opposite that unless they make a treaty that will secure to the farmers of this country a better condition of things than they are enjoying at the present time, that will secure to them better prices than they are now get-ting for the products they have got to sell, that unless they relieve the farmers from the necessity of paying high duties under the McKinley Bill, by which they are now hampered, and allow them the opportunity of selling in the best market and buy-ing in the cheapest market—I say that unless the Government procure these advantages for our farmers there will be nothing left for the farming community but to look forward to a hopeless struggle to get out of the financial embarrassments in which they are involved. I say they are standing to-day in a condition which is, as has been proved by statements presented to this House, a deplorable one. The hon, member for Huron pointed out the number of chattel mortgages that the farmers have given upon their effects. Now, there is no evidence in the world pointing more truly to the financial embarrassments, either of individuals or of communities, than the fact that they are reduced to the necessity of giving chattel mortgages. Now I say that unless some effort is made to improve that condition, the outlook for them will be a hopeless one indeed. I am sorry that in the efforts that have been put forth to bring settlers into this country, there has not been a proper effort made to bring in such a class of settlers as will take up our lands in the older provinces, which can be bought cheaply by a proper class of tenant farmers from the old country, and allow our Canadian farmers that are embarrassed to go to the North-West and people that country. Our Canadian farmers would make the best pioneers and the best settlers in that country, and while I should be rejoiced to see a large influx of population into the North-West, I would prefer to see some effort made to bring tenant farmers from England into this country who would buy out many of the improved farms in the older provinces, thus making comfortable homes for themselves, and let those that are financially embarrassed sell out and go to the North-West and take up new homes for themselves. I believe that would be a better system to adopt than to bring people from the old country and send them directly to the North-West. Now, I will not detain the House any further. farmers, and who are the ones suffering the most from the policy of this Government.

Mr. CHARLTON presented the first report of the Special Committee on Bill (No. 2) to secure the better observance of the Lord's Day.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COM-MITTEE.

Mr. GIROUARD moved that the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, providing for a reduction of the quorum to eleven, be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

PAYMENT TO G. A. BOURGEOIS.

Mr. CHOQUETTE moved:

That leave be given to the Committee on Public Accounts to enquire about the payment of $600 made to G. A. Bourgeois, late Post Office Inspector of the Three Rivers division, as such payment appears in the Auditor General's Report for 1889, page F—25, and that permission be given to said Committee to ask for papers, vouchers, &c., and to cite the said G. A. Bourgeois to appear before them, and such person or persons as will be necessary to investigate the circumstances of this payment, with power to examine these persons under oath if deemed necessary.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that motion will have to remain for the present until we know something more about it. The documents in connection with this matter are not on the Table of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Minister of Justice will find that objection is hardly ever taken referring to the Committee on Public Accounts an item belonging to a previous year. No doubt this motion is in an unusual form, and some of those things which are asked belong to the Committee on Public Accounts as a matter of right.

Mr. SPEAKER. The objection having been taken, I must rule the motion out of order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My recollection is, that motions are very frequently made to refer a particular item belonging to previous years to the Committee on Public Accounts. Would it not be better to allow the motion to pass? I think the latter part of the motion is unnecessary.

Mr. SPEAKER. Objection having been taken, the motion is out of order, Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not want to oppose any objection to this motion, but I think in the meantime it should stand till to-morrow.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice asks that this should stand as a notice of motion until to-morrow. If it goes on the Notice paper as a notice of motion, it can only be reached in its proper order.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I said that the hon. gentleman had better let it stand until to-morrow. We have not yet seen the motion, but after we see it we may allow it to pass.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not understand that there is any objection to the motion, except to the last part, which refers to the parties being summoned and examined. That follows as a matter of course.

Mr. MULOCK. If this is made a notice of motion in the ordinary way, it will hardly be reached this session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I could only hear half of the motion as it was read.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that this discussion should be renewed at the same time to-morrow.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will waive any objection to this being taken up to morrow.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I have already given notice of a motion for the production of the papers.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) further to amend the Electoral Franchise Act. He said: I would like to make a short explanation as to the four Bills that stand in They are introduced my name on the paper. somewhat out of the usual course, because, if I were introducing Government measures on these subjects, I would have introduced them at an earlier period in the session. The House will perhaps remember that there were several Bills to amend the Dominion Elections Act, the Controverted Elections Act, and the Franchise Act, all of which were referred to a Special Committee. That Committee had instructions to amalgamate one or more of the Bills, or parts of one or more of the Bills, and it seems that in reporting their Bills back to the House a slight irregularity occurred. It would have been more consistent with the practice of the House if they had, by way of report, introduced new Bills on these subjects, instead of which they have amalgamated them, and the old Bills remain undisposed of on the Order paper, while the amalgamated Bill has not been introduced. Instead, therefore, of transferring all these old Bills to the Government Orders, as the Committee wished me to do, in order to expedite their passage it seems better and simpler for me to introduce these four Bills on the subject myself. The Bills, therefore, that I have introduced will embrace the principal features of those Bills which were referred to the consideration of a Special Committee. I desire, however, as a matter of precaution, to say that, in introducing the Bills in this way, I have not followed entirely the conclusions arrived at by the Committee. There are two or three points in respect of which, I think, it would be impossible for the House, considering all the difficulties, to concur in; nevertheless, by introducing them in this way and bringing up these subjects, an opportunity will be given to the hon. gentlemen who have had charge of the original Bills, or who sat on the Committee, or who have taken an interest in the subject, to call the attention of the House, at a subsequent stage, to any clauses I have omitted in these Bills, and to ask the sense of the House thereon. I do not wish, for the present, to take the responsibility of incroducing certain clauses. I beg, therefore, to introduce the Bill to amend the Electoral Franchise Act. That is, I think, just as it passed the Committee. For the information of the House, I will explain that it amends the Franchise Act as to the putting on the list of persons qualified as being British subjects, by leaving out the words "by birth or naturalization," and requiring them to be British subjects at the time they are put on the list. Then it is proposed to extend the time for the preliminary revision by giving fifteen more days. At present the time expires on the 1st of August, and it is proposed to extend the time to the 15th. I understand that the Committee are satisfied that the change will not result in the extension of the time when the lists are finally completed. Then there is a provision that no person shall be removed from the list by reason of his qualifica-There was such tion being incorrectly stated. There was such a provision made with regard to the preliminary revision, but it seems there is no provision applying to the final revision. Then there is a section providing that the revising officer, as a further security, shall state in the qualified list the number of names the list contains, and there is a final provision that section I of the Act, as regards a voter being a British subject, shall not come into force until the 1st of January next, the reason of that being that at present forms have been prepared and filled in, and depositions and declarations made, all in conformity with the present law, which it would be very inconvenient to alter, and impossible to alter in many cases, and the work would have to be done over again if we changed that clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. May I ask if the provision for extending the time for the preliminary revision applies to the present year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: This Bill comprises nearly all the clauses which the Committee agreed to, except that I am suggesting a modification in the provision they made as regards the oath to be taken by an agent or officer whose vote has been transferred. It may be worth while to call attention now to the subjects dealt with in the Bill. There are several provisions in the Bill to enable all deposits that have to be made to be made in legal tender, or in bills of any chartered bank doing business in Canada. Then there is a provision restricting the number of transferred voters as agents from one polling booth to another, and a special oath is provided for that. There is also a provision for adjourning the hearing for making the return of the returning officer in case the returns of his deputy officers have not been enclosed in the ballot boxes, or in consequence of their loss, in order to obtain more accurate information as to the number of votes that were cast and the number of votes which each candidate has received. There is also a provision, in case of the loss of ballot boxes, for taking evidence by the returning officer. There is also a provision for getting an order from the Superior Court judge to compel the County Court judge to make a recount, when any party aggrieved is entitled to a recount. There is also a provision that, upon the returning officer completing the returns and transmitting the name of the candidate having the highest number of votes, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall, as I believe he always does, publish the returns in the order in which they come in.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 147) further to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act. He said: I have omitted from this Bill several of the provisions which the Committee thought it well to insert, and I will state now the reason why I did so. The Committee thought it well to follow as closely as possible the English Acts on these subjects, but in 1883 a special Act was passed relating to illegal and corrupt practices, and the draftsman had introduced into the Bill before the Committee many of the provisions which were taken from the Illegal and Corrupt | we should have in the great majority of cases Sir John Thompson.

Practices Act of England, of 1883, much of the language of which was arbitrary, subject to special interpretation clauses, and would not, I think, have been suited to our Act. In other respects I may say the Dominion Controverted Elections Act contained provisions on the subject which amounted in the end to the same thing as the clauses herein That is my explanation for a good introduced. deal that is left out of this Bill which the Committee seemed inclined to favour, Then, to state shortly the provisions of the Bill as I have introduced it, in order that the House may be warned beforehand, I will say that the Bill makes provision for the trial of all election petitions by two judges instead of one, as formerly—that is a new clause, The practice in some three or four of the provinces is, that election petitions shall be tried by one judge as in the case of federal election petitions. In the Province of Quebec, I think, three judges try them; in the Province of Ontario, two, and the British system is to have two judges. We propose that the petitions shall be presented not later than thirty days after the declaration of the return of the candidate. There is a further provision, in accordance with the English system, to extend slightly the exemption as regards the liability of the candidate for corrupt practice committed, not by himself, nor with his connivance, but against his will or or 'er, by his agents, namely: The provision that no election shall be declared void if it is shown to the court that the candidate has proved that no corrupt practice was committed at such election by him personally, and that the offences mentioned in the report were committed contrary to the order and without the sanction or connivance of such candidate, and that such candidate took all reasonable means for preventing the commission of corrupt practices at the election, and that the offences mentioned in the said report were of a trivial, unimportant and limited character; and that in all other respects the election was free from any corrupt practice on the part of such candidate and his agents. These are all the important provisions of the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to ask the Minister of Justice with respect to the declaration of the return of members, whether any provision is made in the Bill for uniformity of return? One member may be returned by default of a returning officer two or three weeks later than other members, and this has led to serious abuses in the past; and the provisions of the Bill do not seem to provide a remedy. I did not understand the Minister of Justice distinctly on this point.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know how it is possible to do that when we come to consider all the difficulties that arise in the discharge of the duties by a returning officer. The most prominent causes are differences of distance, inclemency of the weather, the state of the roads, and so forth; other causes are loss of ballot boxes, and in cases of recount, which, of course, more rarely occur. think it is impossible to secure uniformity as to the date on which returning officers should complete their duties, and, therefore, it is impossible to secure uniformity as to the date when petitions should be presented. In ordinary cases if we make it thirty days from the date of the declaration, the time for fyling the petitions expiring pro-bably within thirty-five or forty days after polling day, but if we were to make the days to run from polling day it would be exceedingly unequal. In some counties there would be only one or two days left after the return before the time for the fyling of the petition, and in other cases there would be three or four weeks.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then, if I understand rightly, there is this change proposed to be made in the law: that the time will be calculated not as at present from the gazetting of the members, but from the declaration by the returning officer.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If we were to fix a uniform time, say thirty days from the return of the last person elected, especially as we have one day for the elections, the returning officers would have no motive for keeping back the returns. In my own election this time, after the declaration had been made, the returning officer kept back the returns for a fortnight before he forwarded them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Bill would cover that case.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But it would not cover the case where a returning officer made a declaration two, three or four days afterwards, and another returning officer not until the end of a fortnight. Seeing we have one day for the general election, the last declaration might be taken as the one from which the count should be made, and we would in that way adopt a uniform rule.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In consequence of the delay in some large districts, like Algoma, the time would hardly be expired yet for any of us.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The election in Algoma did not take place at the same time as the other elections. I am speaking of the districts in which the elections took place on the same day, and the time might be placed at something less than thirty days.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why should not the time be two months from the date of polling, in which case it would be uniform? By dating it from the day on which the members were returned, a returning officer on some technical error or some intentional error might adjourn the declaration from week to week, and it might not take place until two weeks afterwards. We would, therefore, have very serious difficulties to meet, as at present. A petition now can be fyled within thirty days from the gazetting of a member. If we make it thirty days after the date on which the declaration is made, it is left to the returning officer to extend the time of making the declaration. He may say, when all the polling boxes have been returned, that some irregularity has occurred with respect to one of them, irregularities that might have been done intentionally and for a purpose, and he then could adjourn the declaration for the purpose of getting that irregularity adjusted. When that irregularity was adjusted he would then make the declaration, but it might be one or two weeks after the time when the member in an adjoining constitu-ency had been declared. The same difficulties and the same advantages lie at the door of the returning officer or the deputy returning officer under the provisions of this Bill as at the present moment. to take away from the returning officer that discre-The measure simply transfers the work from the tionary power under which he may declare an elec-

Clerk of the Crown of Chancery to the returning officer and his deputy.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The explanation given by the Minister of Justice shows, as has been pointed out by the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), that the Bill transfers the power of committing irregularities from the Clerk of Crown in Chancery to the returning officer. I believe the Minister desires to make this measure a fair one, and to remove the abuses that have existed under the present system for some time. If so, the time should be made uniforn in all cases. If the time is left to the returning officer, an advantage will then be given to the party in power. It is well known that the returning officer may de-lay the return from day to day. In South Grey at the last local election the declaration was made the day after the polling. There is no reason why in the Dominion election it should not be made at the same time; yet in the last two Dominion elections the declaration has not been made until about eighteen days after the election. This system leads to fraud and tempts men to commit improper acts in order to obtain a verdict which the people have not given. If the Minister of Justice desired to make the people believe that he seeks to reform an abuse which has become a crying shame, he must frame the Bill so as to give a uniform time and thereby give no advantage either to a supporter or an opponent of the Government. It is desirable to cultivate a spirit of fair-play between parties, and if the Government control the returning officers and allow them to say when the declaration shall be made, they will find it very easy to hold back the declaration of opponents of the Government, and consequently do injustice. I hope this will be remedied, and that the system of making invidious distinctions between the parties will be wiped out. I think it is a crying shame for the Government to allow a system that places them in a position of probably being misjudged. If they desire to carry out the elections fairly, if they desire to act fairly between the" parties, they will have the law so that it will be applicable to both parties alike, and then it will be satisfactory. As it is now, it is very unsatisfactory. Another matter I would like to speak about is in connection with the return of the ballot Under the present system, the returning officer sends out people, or goes out himself from place to place after the ballot boxes; whereas under the local law in Ontario, the ballot boxes are brought in by the deputy returning officers.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is a Bill respecting the Controverted Elections' Act, and not respecting the Election Act itself. I think the hon, gentleman is not discussing the Bill before the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understood from the manner in which hon. gentlemen were discussing it, that it had reference to the returning officers.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is with reference to the trial of controverted elections.

Mr. AMYOT. I hope the hon. Minister of Justice will not stick to that disposition which will leave in the hands of the returning officer the same power to which we have objected. The object of the Bill which I had the honour to introduce was to take away from the returning officer that discretion carried by such or such candidate, and delay the time after the final adjudication of that application transmitting of the certificate to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, when delay for the contestation will count only from the date of the publication in the Official Gazette. By the new law, the delay will date from his declaring the election carried by such a candidate, but he still remains at liberty to declare when he pleases, and to choose his own time for the declaration as to the election being carried by such a one. It is to that discretionary power we object. We want the time to be settled by the law, independent of the action of the returning officer. I understand the objection of the Government is that, in some counties, thirty days after the publication of the be sufficient. If it is will not sufficient, let us make it forty days, or fifty days, or two months, if we like, but we want to have the same chances for every one, and I think we are in duty and honour bound to grant fair-play to all parties. The law, as proposed, would not materially change the existing system, and it will leave in the hands of the returning officers the powers which they have abused considerably already. In my own county, it is only about a month after the election that the certificate reached the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. We have been, I think, all satisfied this year with the way in which the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has fulfilled his duty. He has published the returns as soon as they reached him, but what we We comcomplain of is very clear and distinct. plain that there is not a uniform delay for every one, and we complain of the discretionary power left in the hands of the returning officer; and I am sure that the Government, if they desire to be really fair to everybody in the country, will understand our reasons and pass the Bill as the Committee reported. Let them extend the delay, if they like, but let them put everybody in the same position.

Mr. BARRON. As one of the Committee to whom this matter was referred, permit me to give my views briefly. It seems to me that the only difficulty in the way of fixing a definite time for the date of an election, is the possibility of a recount being had before a County. Court judge. Now, if the recount is had, or refused, and any omission or neglect is made on the part of the County Court judge, the dissatisfied party has the right to apply to the Superior Court judge for redress under a mandamus, and that all causes de-That, of course, might interfere with a fixed and definite time being laid down by statute within which from the date of the election the petition had to be fyled. If that is the only difficulty in the way, and it seems to me, from a consideration of the matter, it is the only difficulty, then I think the law might be made that in all cases a petition must be fyled within thirty days; but in cases where there is a recount before a County Court judge the petition must be fyled within thirty days from the final adjudication of that recount. If that is the only difficulty, and I think it is the only difficulty, in the way of a petition being fyled within a certain period from the date of the election, an exception might be made in cases where a recount is being had. The law might be made so that where there is a recount before a County Court judge, or application made for a recount county two or three weeks would be consumed by before a County Court judge, then within a certain unintentional delays and accidents in transmission, Mr. Amyor.

for recount, the petition must be fyled. In all other cases the petition must be fyled within a period of thirty days, or whatever period Parliament fixes, from the date of the election.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Permit me to say a few words more by way of explanation, because it is well to have all the points urged at this stage of the Bill, so that they can be well thought over before this Bill comes to another stage. The difficulty which hon. members apprehend would arise altogether from actual misconduct on the part of the returning officer. the difficulty arose from many other causes and from several unintentional delays. The returning officer made his declaration of the candidate elected, and parties went about their business: the member was returned, and there was an end of it, so far as the watchfulness over the returning officer was concerned. After that, the return perhaps lay in his office, or he fell sick, or it was delayed in transmission to Ottawa, or after having arrived in Ottawa, there was delay in publication in the Gazette. time for making the petition was dependent upon all these accidents and contingencies. It seems to me that if we say the period shall be thirty days from the day the returning officer makes his declaration, we get rid of a great many of the accidents which practically have made the trouble heretofore, and there can be no undue delay then, except by actual misconduct of the returning During the time between polling day and officer. declaration day the returning officer is under the eye of the candidates and under the eye of the constituents, who are on the spot to watch kim and to insist that he performs his duty and performs it promptly. If we suppose the case of the returning officer desiring to act improperly and to delay the return and declaration in order that the time for petitioning may be extended, we find a set of facts which it is almost impossible to anticipate by legislation, and which ought to be dealt with by punishment. The hon, gentleman will see that if we fix the date at thirty days from polling day the following may occur: Suppose, as an example, in my county, the returning officer is a friend of mine and desires that I shall be returned and not petitioned against, he can make his return on the twenty-fifth or twenty-ninth day after polling day, and give my opponent but one for petitioning against me. If, on the other had, he is not a friend of mine, but an opponent; he declares me elected two days after the election and exposes me to be petitioned against for twenty-eight days. Therefore we do not secure uniformity by that at all. I am speaking of cases of intentional wrong-doing, but it seems to me it will secure practical uniformity except when there are cases of intentional wrong-doing, and these should be met by punishment. But besides that, the case is open to difficulty and want of uniformity from all the causes that make a difference of time in the declaration, such as the delays that I have mentioned as to recounting, the delays of bad roads and storms in some parts of the country, and not in others, and in some parts of the province, and not in others. These things would make a want of uniformity even if we declare the rule to be thirty days from polling day, because in one and in another county there would be nearly thirty clear days for fyling the petition. The law will work unequally unless we fix a definite number of days. In that way we shall avoid all accidents, to which, generally speaking, are attributable the delays and inconveniences that have occurred.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A great deal of the trouble which has arisen, and the complaints which have been justly made as to the actions of the returning officers, have been due to the fact that a former Government, in which the hon. Minister had not a place, chose to alter the position of the returning officers. In former times the same man continued to be the returning officer in election after election, having been usually an official such as a sheriff or a registrar, who was well known and had a serious responsibility. Now the system is practically that the Government candidate appoints the returning officer as a piece of patronage. He is consulted, and he appoints a man to suit himself. That practice is productive of a great many evils; and I would suggest to the hon. Minister, in addition to the other improvements which he appears to be honestly desirous of making, for the purpose of procuring impartiality in these matters between both sides, that he should see whether he cannot, in the major provinces at any rate, arrange to have a returning officer appointed who would hold office continuously. I think several similar suggestions could be made, which could be easily carried out, and the adoption of which would relieve the Government from the somewhat invidious position of appointing returning officers practically as nominees of the candidates, a practice which the Minister must see, and which the House on both sides will, I think, see, lends itself very easily to grave abuses both before, during and after the election.

Mr. FRASER. It seems to me that there is a good deal in the objection raised by the hon. Min ister of Justice; but, I think, it could be met in this way: You have a certain number of days after the nomination in which to fyle your petition. Then you could also have a limitation as to the return. Suppose you provide that within forty or fifty days after nomination the petition shall be fyled; you could also provide that the return must be made within twenty or thirty days, unless there is a recount. In that way you would meet the difficulty.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Bill as proposed—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman has spoken already.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I spoke on the other Bill

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is a very simple way in which the difficulty might be met. I think there ought to be a limit of time for the making of the declaration. Of course, it is impossible to have exact uniformity, but, I think, a limit should be fixed. I know of one case in which the returning officer, certainly from no desire to injure the candidate, but simply to suit his own convenience and in order that he might, at the least expense to himself, collect the ballot boxes, delayed the return for more than thirty days. He might as well have made it within ten or fifteen days. I should think fifteen days would be an ample limit, and that would prevent the returning officer doing harm to anybody. But as long as he has the power to delay the return as long as he pleases there is always a liability of his acting under improper motives.

Mr. AMYOT. I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was going to say that the Bill as proposed will leave the law in precisely the same position that it is in at present—that is, the returning officer will be able to delay the declaration as he has done. Take, for instance, the practical operation of the law in the last election. The return in East Grey was gazetted seven days after In North Bruce it was the same; in the election. North Grey, I think, it was the same; while in my case the declaration was not made until eleven days after the election. In East Bruce it was about the Now, if you leave it optional with the returning officer to decide when the declaration shall be made the law will remain practically as it is now, and the hon. Minister of Justice will be placed in the position of being willing to allow the returning officer to continue the system which was fraught with so much fraud and disgrace to this country as occurred in the last election. I do hope the time will be fixed within which it will be necessary for the returning officer to make the declaration. In all the six elections that I have come through, until the last two elections, the declaration was made on the second day. On election day in 1874 there was a great snowstorm, one of the greatest of the season, and yet every poll book was brought in and the declaration was made on the second day. In 1872 the declaration was made on the second day; in 1878 it was made on the second day, and in 1882 it was also made on the second day; but in the election of 1887 the declaration was delayed for eighteen days; and it is my opinion that if we had an opportunity of looking at the ballots, which I believe were destroyed afterwards, we would find that the ballot boxes on that occasion were stuffed. Then, in the last election, with the same returning officer, the declaration was adjourned again and again for eleven or twelve days, and there was no reason for it, except to afford an opportunity to the returning officer to stuff the ballot boxes, and they were stuffed. If the hon. Minister of Justice wishes to remove from himself the suspicion of desiring that, he has to make this law applicable to both parties on the same basis. It will never do to give one party an opportunity of delaying the declarations, or leave open to people a temptation to do wrong. This should not be permitted by the hon. Minister of Justice, who I believe is anxious to make the law better than it is at present.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon, member for South Grey is, making a most unwarrantable charge against the returning officer in South Grey. I do not think he is doing it without a knowledge of the facts or the situation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the point of order?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman has imputed improper motives to the hon, member for South Grey.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think he made it without knowledge. That is my opinion, and I certainly have a right to it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has not the right to express an opinion attributing discreditable and dishonest motives to the hon. member. That is what he has done.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I only stated that in both cases the returning officer was the same, and that in 1887 the declaration was delayed eighteen days, and on this occasion it was delayed eleven days. I did not mention the returning officer, but the system.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon, gentleman said this detention took place for the purpose of stuffing the ballot boxes, and that they were stuffed. That was a direct statement, and an hon, member ought to have very strong evidence before making such a My knowledge is, that the deputy statement. returning officers had not made the return at the time the returning officer had set for making the declaration.

Mr. SPEAKER. A point of order has been raised. What is the point of order?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That the hon, gentleman has imputed dishonest and discreditable motives to an hon, member.

Some hon. MEMBERS. How ?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). By declaring that the returning officer was not guilty of the charges which the hon, gentleman has made, and that the hon, gentleman knew it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the hon, member relieved himself of that imputation when he said that the returning officer was not open to the charge which had been made, and that the hon. gentleman could not have spoken without a knowledge of the facts, and then went on to say that the hon, gentleman must have forgotten what the facts were—that he had had a knowledge of them but had forgotten.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That, I submit, does not make the statement orderly, which was before disorderly. The point of disorder is the motives which the hon, gentleman has attributed, and which, under the rules of the House, he has not the right to attribute.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not aware that I was attributing any motives when I spoke of the statements made. I said that the hon, gentleman made these statements, and that he knew the facts would not warrant them.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon, gentleman said that the hon, member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) had made an unwarrantable attack, and that he knew, from his knowledge of the facts, that the attack was unwarrantable, the statement was without warrant.

Mr. SPROULE. If the remark I made was out of order I withdraw it; but I must say my understanding of the situation was this: that when the time for making the return had arrived certain deputy returning officers had not brought in their There had been a very severe snowballot boxes. storm, and the roads were blocked up in different directions. Whether it was the cause or not of the delay, I am not prepared to say, but, at any rate, the ballot boxes were not forthcoming at the proper time. An adjournment took place until another day, and when that day arrived still a few of the returning officers' returns were absent, and the de-Mr. Mills (Bothwell.)

sub-divisions to get the returns, so that he might make his declaration, and the return was given in that way, on the assumption that the ballot boxes had not arrived. Before he could make his return the returning officer was obliged to leave his locality on important business and go to the city of Guelph, and he was detained there three or four days. When he came back to make the the ballot boxes were not then returns, forthcoming. Whatever law may be passed to compel returns being made on a certain day, you cannot compel men to do an impossibility. There cannot compel men to do an impossibility. may be storms which will prevent the deputy returning officers from getting through for a certain number of days. Some of these officers may be courageous and start out, while others, believing it impossible, do not start. As to the allegation that the ballot boxes were stuffed, I do not know on what grounds the hon, gentleman based that, for certainly I do not think the facts warrant it. If they do, the hon. gentleman can take advantage of the law. Why does not he or some of his friends prosecute? With regard to the time he gave for the returns of East Grey and North Bruce, I do not know anything of North Bruce, but I know he has not given the correct time with reference to East Grey. Perhaps the returning officer made the return before the time he should by law. There was considerable discussion on that point, and he still contends that he was carrying out the law as he understood it. But the return was not made as early as the hon. member said. No provision of the law here will prevent the same thing happening in South Grey again under similar circumstances.

Mr. MADILL. So far as the returning officer is concerned, he fixes the date of the declaration in the proclamation before the election, so that it is impossible for him to tell which candidate will be elected. You cannot impute improper motives to him. I am in the same position as the hon. member for South Grey. My election came off on the 5th March last and the declaration was fixed for the 17th March. I had to wait one day longer than he, and still did not impute improper motives to the returning officer.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me that the proposition to make a fixed day for the declaration is one which would obviate nearly all the difficulties we have been discussing. Formerly the declaration was made publicly, and the electors were summoned to hear it made on the day fixed by law. If we had an arrangement of that kind now, if we had a clause in the law providing that a certain number of days after balloting declarations should be made, we would all start at the same point.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would be in favour of having a declaration day not later than one week after bulloting, subject to adjournments from causes beyond control.

Mr. CHARLTON. And have the same days fixed for all in all cases.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Hochelaga). I think there is a difference between the law as it existed formerly and as it is now. Formerly, when a proclamation day was fixed and made uniform there was no objection to it, because we had the system of open ballot; but now, when the returning officer has in his possession all these boxes, it is very important that as soon as possible the declaration should be made. puty returning officer telegraphed to the polling The day should be fixed for each county, according to the time needed in each county to collect all the returns, so that, as soon as the returning officer is able to make his returns, he should send the whole thing to Parliament and secure the ballot boxes from being tampered with, or against any accident which might occur, if the boxes and contents were kept by the returning officer longer than necessary. I know that in my county there were over eighty boxes in one room which were not sufficiently protected, and I was very glad when the declaration was made and the return sent to Ottawa. I think the protection was much better, and I think if the law would fix that the delay would count from the declaration day, whatever that day might be, it would be far better; because, after all, it is impossible for the returning officer to fix in advance who will be the winning party; the proclamation fixes the nomination day and the polling day, and also it fixes the declaration day at the same time. Then there is no undue preference given to anybody, and I think the sooner the returning officer makes his declaration the better.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think one of the difficulties arises from the indefiniteness of the law as to the return of the ballot boxes to the returning There is officer by the deputy returning officers. no provision as to who is to collect the ballot boxes. The deputy returning officers are, of course, appointed by the returning officer, and the returning officer, in order to earn the mileage himself, instead of allowing the deputies to earn it, instructs them to retain the ballot boxes until he collects them, and that involves a considerable de-If it were provided that the deputy returning officers should return the ballot boxes to the returning officer within a certain time there would be less delay than there is now. I mention this at present, because there will be an opportunity of considering this question when the Bill is before us again, but I think that the deputy returning officer ought not to transmit the bollot box by the hand of any other party. The ballot box should not be out of the possession of the deputy returning officer until it is in the possession of the returning officer. At present the returning officer may send A., B. or C. to collect the ballot boxes; he may send people who have no responsibility in the performance of that duty, and I know that, in my own constituency, the returning officer instructed the deputy returning officers to retain the ballot boxes until he collected them.

Motion to adjourn (Mr. Amyot) negatived, and Bill read the first time.

N.W.T. REPRESENTATION ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 148) further to amend the North-West Territories Representation Act. He said: This Bill is merely intended to make the deposits payable in bills of chartered banks, legal tender as well as Dominion notes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a provision which might be extended to the general law.

Sir JOHNTHOMPSON. Yes; but we have made a similar provision in the other Acts.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. WALLACE moved:

That the evidence now being taken by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts with reference to the payments made in the Department of the Interior for extra service be printed for the use of the members of that Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the first report of that Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should amend his report.

Mr. SPEAKER. You cannot amend a report.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, I would suggest that he would amend his motion. I think it reads, "with respect to payments made for extra service." I would suggest that he should add, "and in regard to the Langevin Block." We have commenced an enquiry in regard to that matter, and I spoke in the Committee about having the evidence printed, and I understood that it would be incorporated in the report. I suppose my hon, friend will have no objection to add that to his motion.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not the report of the hon, gentleman (Mr. Wallace); it is the report of the Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. Then it is perfectly in order for me to propose to amend the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. This motion is in express terms made in accordance with the repe t of the Committee on Public Accounts, and if this amendment is made it will not be in accordance with that report.

Mr. MULOCK. Then I can move it afterwards.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I understood that the intention was that the evidence would be printed from day to day for the use of members, and not that the evidence is to be printed afterwards as a whole

Mr. WALLACE. No; it is to be printed, of course, from day to day.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MULOCK moved:

That the evidence taken, and to be taken, in regard to the Langevin Block, before the Public Accounts Committee, be printed for the use of members, and that Rule 94 be suspended.

Mr. WALLACE. That motion should be brought before the Committee first, and not before the House. It is not very respectful to the Committee to bring up such a motion here, and therefore I object.

Mr. MULCCK. I think I have cause of complaint. I was about to move an amendment, which was perfectly in order, to the motion of the member for West York (Mr. Wallace). He was moving a motion which, it is true, had the endorsement of a committee, and was based upon the report of a committee; but it is perfectly in order for this House to give instructions to any committee, whether that committee had reported or not. When Mr. Speaker asked me to defer my amendment and not present it as an amendment, but to move it as a substantive motion as soon as the hon, gentleman's motion was voted upon, now to have the point of order taken I consider is an unfair advantage to take. As regards respect for the Committee, I think I am not lacking in respect for the Committee. I made the request of the Committee on a former occasion, and it was conceded by the Committee that it was a perfectly proper request, and I deferred proceeding with my enquiry because other enquiries were proceeding before that Committee: moreover, I was also engaged in the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and there was no objection taken. I think that my request might very properly have been incorporated with this Bill, and I have no doubt it was an omission that the Committee did not incorporate it in the Bill.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the only reference the hon, member for North York made in this connection was a statement made after the Committee had adjourned.

Mr. MULOCK. I move that the evidence taken, and to be taken, before the Public Accounts Committee, in regard to the Langevin Block, be printed for the convenience of members, and that Rule No. 94 be suspended.

Mr. SPEAKER. It can only be put with the unanimous consent of the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. These motions are inconvenient when they are not reported here by the Committee. When they are reported by the Committee the House knows that the Committee has considered the whole subject, and knows the necessities of the case. But the House knows nothing, without the report of such a Committee, about what is going on; we do not know what enquiries are proceeding about the Langevin Block. The motion will be adopted, of course, but there can be no objection to taking the sense of the Committee on the subject first. If the Committee, after consideration, do not recommend it, and the hon, member wishes afterwards to present his case to the House, it would be perfectly proper.

Mr. MULOCK. Do I understand that objection is taken to my motion without notice been given? Some hon, MEMBERS. We all object.

THE WASHINGTON CONFERENCE.

Mr. LAURIER. I observe that the papers about the Washington Conference have not been presented.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the fault of the Government or the fault of the clerk. I believe they are to be distributed to-day. There was a delay in printing.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that the Superintendent of the Printing Bureau is away. I would like to know whether he is away on leave of of absence?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He has been granted leave of absence, on a medical certificate.

Mr. LAURIER. He has leave of absence at a very inconvenient season.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The business can be carried on just as well in his absence.

WAYS AND MEANS-THE TARIFF.

House resumed consideration of the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: the United States or any other country upon any except such terms as will submit our people to unfair competition, such as would be destructive to Mr. Mulock.

read the second time," and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. IVES. Since the delivery of the Budget speech, which was unusually full and complete in its discussion and review of the whole question, several speeches have been delivered upon this side of the House which have been also exceedingly comprehensive and marked with great ability. Under that state of facts, it is not my intention to occupy the time of the House at any great length, or to undertake to go over the whole field raised by the Budget, and by the motion in amendment. After referring to the hon, gentleman who immediately preceded me, I shall confine my attention exclusively to one branch of the discussion. The hon, gentleman who spoke last night, the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). in rising, reproved us on this side of the House for consuming so much time by making long Budget speeches; and he proceeded to give us his idea of what was a fair length for a Budget speech at this stage of the debate by making a two hours' speech. While he was speaking some of my friends in the House took the trouble to count up from Hansard how many times the hon, gentleman from Wellington had addressed Mr. Speaker during the present session, and if an hon, gentleman asks me how many times, I can tell him that the hon, member for North Wellington has spoken 132 times. I think, therefore, that a gentleman who has spoken 132 times in 46 sittings of the House is better qualified than almost any other member of the House to judge as to the fitness of speeches in length or frequency. The hon, gentleman says that he has come to the conclusion, from the speeches he has heard from this side of the House, that we are opposed to any measure of reciprocity, and he thinks the reason is, that we are unwilling to deprive the manufacturers of their rich harvest. can inform the hon, gentleman that so far as I myself am concerned, and I think I am speaking in accord with the feeling of most of us on this side of the House, it is true that we are unwilling to approve of any measure of reciprocity, or of trade, or of convention, or of treaty, with either the United States or any other country, that would be ruinous to any important Canadian interest. While we approve of extending our trade with the United States and all other countries, while it is to the advantage of Canada and the Canadian people that it should be done, we do not approve, and will object, in spite of hon. gentlemen opposite, to this Government or to any other Government adopting a trade arrangement and a line of policy that will be destructive to any of the great Canadian interests. There are branches of trade where, I fancy, most of us will be quite willing-in fact, will hail with delight an arrangement for reciprocal trade. There are the forest products of the two countries; there are the fishing interests and products of the two countries; there are the bulk of the mineral interests of the two countries; there are certain agricultural products; there are certain productions which are the raw material of Canadian manufactures that might be brought from the United States, and rice versa, under a tradearrangement. But if we cannot have reciprocal trade relations with the United States or any other country upon any except such terms as will submit our people to un-any important interest in Canada, then it becomes a question for serious consideration whether the advantages outweigh and overbalance the disadvantages or the disadvantages ontweigh and overbalance the advantages. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said the reason why we take this course, which he thinks is an erroneous course, is that we are unwilling to de-prive the manufacturers of their rich harvests. That is a statement which was made over and over again last session, and which was made over and over again by the hon, gentleman last night, a statement which had more or less effect on the people during the last general election, and a statement which we on this side of the House did not take the trouble to contradict frequently enough in the last Parliament. It would be impossible to conceive any body of men making a statement so frequently as that statement was made without someone being deceived by it. Perhaps the hon. gentleman who repeated it last night, will be kind enough to tell us where the manufacturers of this country have reaped a rich harvest at the expense of the agriculturist or any portion of the population. It is exceedingly easy to deal in generalities, to make charges of that description, but hon, gentlemen opposite for years have not condescended to give us, and have not attempted to give us, any details to support the charges they have made. I say, without wasting the time of the House by going further into this matter, it is impossible, either for the hon. member for North Wellington or any other hon, member opposite, to show by facts and figures that the policy of protection, which we have extended not only to the manufacturing but to every other interest, has given a rich harvest to the manufacturers of this That the manufacturers have been fairly successful and fairly prosperous as a whole I admit. Does the hon, gentleman regret that fact? I am proud to say, on behalf of this side of the House, that our policy does not make it necessary for us to make an attack on any great interest of the Dominion. In the course of the last general election hon, gentlemen opposite pictured to the farmers that the manufacturers were leeches bleeding their lives out. Those hon, gentlemen threw the manufacturers overboard. They made up their minds that there were more votes among the farmers than among the workingmen, artizans and manufacturers. They said: We will make our selection and capture the agriculturist vote and throw the manufacturers overboard. We do not have to resort to any such course as that. policy is a policy of equal protection, equal fostering care given to all industries and all classes of the population. The hon, gentleman says that we have frequently taken advantage of the simple-minded electors, that we did so at the last election once more, but that the farmers are agitated now, and they showed it at the last election. gentlemen on the other side of the House are in the habit of being complimentary to the different classes of the electorate of this Dominion. the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. Mc-Mullen) who referred to the people of this country as being "simple-minded." It was only a little while ago that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) referred to the electorate of very important portions of the Dominion as be willing to have a comparison made between the having been bought and purchased by promise of condition of our farmers and the condition of the subsidies and other improper influences. dent there were a large number of simple-minded voters among the electorate who sent to this House the hon. member for North Wellington. But were they simple-minded men who sent hon. gentlemen who sit with us on this side of the House, or did hon, gentlemen opposite, by frequently reiterating statements, which are not founded on fact, succeed in imposing on some simple-minded people in their own constituencies? The trouble with hon, gentlemen was this, and the reason why they did not succeed in carrying the country at the last general election was, that were not simple-minded people enough in the country. The hon, gentleman says that the people are agitated. I think it it quite evident that the agitation is cooling down, and I have no doubt when the time for the bye-elections arrives we shall find that the agitation among the farmers has entirely disappeared, and any of them who were led away at the last general election will come back to their sober senses and approve of our policy, which has been so successful during the last twelve years. The hon, gentleman did what he could last night to allay the agitation. He said to the House, and I presume he was talking to the country, that even if the Liberal party came into power and were to recommend annexation to the United States it would be necessary to pass a Bill to carry into effect the convention; it would have to pass this House and the Senate, and receive the assent of His Excellency the Governor General; and the hon, gentleman, in order further to allay the agitation, stated that the Senate, which is Conservative, would most likely reject such a I think the hon, gentleman contributes a valuable idea tending to allay the agitation which, he says, existed at the last general election. The hon, gentleman next proceeded to find fault with the hon, member for Haldimand for having compared the condition of the Canadian farmer with the farmers of France, Germany and the United States, where the farmers were cursed by a higher protection than the Canadian farmer labours under, and the hon, gentleman distinctly admitted that the United States farmers are in an impoverished condition, owing to the protective tariff of that country. If the hon, gentleman's admission is correct, as I think it is, perhaps either he or his friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) will tell us whether those impoverished farmers of the United States have, or have not, access to that sixty-five million market which we are told would be such a relief to our farmers if they had access to it. Perhaps he will tell us also how it would relieve the difficulty of the over-production of agricultural products in this country to be united in trade relations with a country which already produces $532,000,000 of agricultural products for export every year over and above the home consumption, and a country in which the farmers are at the present time, as he says, in an impoverished condition. But if my hon, friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague) was wrong in comparing the condition of the farmers of Canada with the condition of the farmers in the United States, and in France and Germany, which are protective countries, would my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) agricultural classes in free-trade England, for example? If not, perhaps he, or some hon. gentleman on that side of the House, would like to point out some civilized country on the face of the globe where he would wish to have a comparison made between its farmers and the farmers of Canada. As I am speaking more upon the agricultural question than any other, I think it is important that the farmers of this country should have conclusive evidence laid before them that the agricultural classes in England are labouring under greater depression than they are, and that there is a greater falling off in the value of agricultural products, and in the value of rents, and the value of agricultural lands in England, than there ever has been claimed to be in this country. I hold in my hand the Fair Trade papers for the year 1888, and I propose to quote from a speech made by Mr. Bateman, the President of the National Association for the Preservation of Agriculture, and who, speaking only a short time ago upon this burning question, in the County of Essex (Eng.), said:

"When agriculture prospered, as a rule all the other industries prospered, and he thought there was not a man in the room would deny that, when £50 an acre land had gone down to nearly £10, and farms were going out of cultivation on every side, there was certainly something wrong in the state of agriculture in this country. The farmers of England were a very long-suffering race. When wrong in the state of agriculture in this country. The farmers of England werea very long-suffering race. When anything occurred to hamper or distress them, as a rule they did not even hold a meeting, but simply exercised the constitutional privilege of every Englishman to grumble, and grumble they did, but nothing more came of it. He was talking now about the days when he was a ten-year old. When free trade first took possession of this country, and they were chastised by King Solomon's whips in the shape of free importation of grain, the farmers did go a little beyond grumbling—they held a meeting or two, but nothing much more came of it. But when they had a transfer from the reign of King Solomon to that of King Rehoboam, and were chastised not with whips but with scorpions; when they found that the British farmer had not only to put up with unrestricted foreign competition, but that the foreign came into England almost absolutely free of freight, then he really did something more than growl, for he saw nothing but the workhouse staring him in the face, and he thought it really time to stir, and he (the Chairman) thought this movement of Mr. Poynter was the most promising way of stirring a real grievous question in the country. In this district of Colchester if they once reduced the land to such a state that it could no longer carry the farmer and the labourer—for the two things ran hand in hand—they the stirring a real grievous question in the country. In this district of Colchester if they once reduced the land to such a state that it could no longer carry the farmer and the labourer—for the two things ran hand in hand—that the labourers were driven off the land, then that indeed would be a distressful time for Colchester. He had met and talked with many tradesmen of this town, and they complained one and all that the country people were not ordering the clothes that they used to do, or eating the dinners they used to do, or doing anything for the good of the town. They told him there was many a respectable farmer who used to have his thousands at the bank who now at the most went in for one new coat a year. And these tradesmen were beginning to wonder how it was.

"Mr. S. W. Poynter then delivered a lengthy and forcible address. He remarked that it was no new thing for one farmer to say to another that the condition of their business at the present time was one of unmitigated distress. He did not know any farmer who, if one spoke to him individually, could hold out one single ray of hope as to the condition of English agriculture, unless something were speedily done to rescue them from their difficulties. Those who knew nothing about agriculture, and who travelled about the country, would point to the glorious fields just before harvest and they would talk with farmers in the train and say that they looked pretty healthy and stout, and had a pretty good coat upon their backs, and that, take it altogether, they thought the farmers were doing fairly well. But if those men looked at the farmer's banking account and if they went to the managers of the different branches of the country banks and asked them how these farmers' accounts stood in comparison with how they stood ten years ago, they would not think the farmers were now in anything like a fairly prosperous condition. Further than that, if they took the trouble, as some of them might do, to go into the Mr. IVES.

farmer's stock yard at the present time and take each stack, one after another, in rotation, and ask the farmer how many acres it came off, how many quarters, honestly, as a man, he thought he was going to gather off his fields, and as farmers say 'tottled' up the amount, if that man was not surprised and dismayed at the result of one year's business he mould handly he as Englishman, with a heart business he would hardly be an Englishman with a heart

"He only knew this speaking for himself—and he believed that every farmer would say the same—that the drop in prices during the last four years amounted to over £2 an acre on every acre of land on his farm. Indeed, he knew in some cases it had been £3 or £4 per acre, and not through any drop in the yield, but owing to the drop in prices

"They had to look these things fairly in the face, and they had to ask themselves, and to ask their opponents, who objected to the position they took up, they had to ask them if they were prepared to see the agriculture of England stifled, crushed and stamped out

He continues:

"But he wanted to impress upon them this point, that the present rent on agricultural land was in a number of cases not three per cent. upon the value of buildings upon the land, let alone the value of the buildings and the land together. They could go and take plenty of farms with the houses, barns, sheds, stables and cottages upon them, and the rent that was paid would not amount to three per cent. of the money spent upon the buildings alone. Some gentlemen would say: 'Of course, if it won't pay five per cent. you must take one per cent.' They admitted that, to a certain extent. But remember, if the landlord found that he could not get three per cent. interest on his buildings, let alone the value of his land, what amount of buildings would he undertake in the next ten years? What amount of labour would he employ in doing those things which "But he wanted to impress upon them this point, that

And, gentlemen, you have not alone to depend upon the speeches of these gentlemen belonging to this society which has been organized, and which has been agitating the agricultural classes in England for some years, but you may take the final report of the Royal Commission that was issued two or three years ago, and over which the Earl of Iddesleigh presided. You have only to take this report, and in it you will find laid down by this Royal Commission in their report to the Imperial Parliament that the value of agricultural lands in England decreased by about 50 per cent., and that the result was that it was impossible for agricultural operations to be carried on profitably or suc-This report gives the cause of this state cessfully. of things to be: the enormous increase of production in different parts of the world, where grains of all kinds, and food products of all kinds, can be more cheaply raised than they can upon the lands of England. Now, Mr. Speaker, I doubt if anyone in this House believes that agriculture is not in a more distressed condition in free-trade England than it is in this Canada of ours. If my hon. friend is not satisfied with a comparison with France, or Germany, or the United States, or free-trade England, perhaps he or some of his friends will tell us what country in the world they would have us compare the agricultural condition of Canada with. This great depression, admitted by my hon. friend to exist in the United States, in France and in Germany, admitted by us to exist to a certain extent in Canada, proved by the documents I have read to exist in England, what is its cause? It is evidently one that can easily be found out, and it should be clearly understood by the farmers of this country that the depression which they feel is more acutely felt by the farmers of almost every other country in the world, and that it is from a common and natural cause, namely, the over-production of natural and food products. The development of the Western States, the opening up by railways of large areas of grain-producing lands in India, South Africa and South America, have worked together within the last few years to throw upon the consuming markets of Europe an enormous overstock of agricultural products. This has produced the depression; and no form of government, no form of policy, no convention that we could make with any country, much less with a country which produces a surplus of similar products, would possibly help that condition of things. My hon, friend then says that the great bulk of the goods which the United States have to exchange with us are manufactured goods, and that if we do not receive manufactured goods from them we cannot hope for any measure of reciprocity. My hon, friend is slightly mistaken in his statement, because from 78 to 80 per cent. of the exports of the United States are agricultural products; and my opinion is, that if the Congress of the are in the United States. And I was pleased to United States could have their choice between a more extended market for their agricultural products and securing the same for their manufactured products they would, without a moment's hesitation, decide in favour of securing a wider field for their agricultural products. If, however, it can be proved that we cannot make any arrangement with the United States except by admitting their agricultural products and their views of the case, and if such an arrangement will be injurious to the Canadian people, then I say by all means let us make none. My hon, friend at this point made a sudden change in his style of speech. He made some reference to Mr. Farrer. He said that Mr. Farrer was a new-born Liberal convert, and that he was now only about six months old as a Liberal. I was rather pleased to observe that the first shout of a new-born Liberal convert is for annexation, and it struck me to enquire of my hon. friend what iniquity a fully-confirmed Liberal would be guilty of if a new convert shouts in that way for annexa-He says that Mr. Farrer was a Conservative when he wrote the pamphlet that figured so largely in the last general election. Well, he was rather an odd Conservative. He fought for my hon. friend from South Oxford and the Liberal party as far back as 1873. He was nominated at Lennox on the 24th November, 1873, as a candidate to help Sir Richard Cartwright, then running in Lennox as Finance Minister. After that he held office for two or three years as immigration agent in Ireland under the Liberal party; and on his return from Ireland, long before this pamphlet was written, he had succeeded in seducing a paper mill and a leading newspaper from the Conservative ranks to the Liberal ranks. Therefore, it is curious to observe that this Liberal, who is claimed by my hon. friend to be a convert of only six months, became Liberal about the same time as his bosom friend the hon. member for South Oxford, and I think it is only fair to say that they are twin and contemporary It is rather mean, though, for my hou. friend from Wellington and all his colleagues on that side of the House to continue to heap all the dirt and blame of their defeat, and everything on the voyage? Is the hon, gentleman anxious else, on poor Farrer and Wiman. If those gentlemen were human I should say they would be inclined to stand from under when the bye-elections come on; and possibly, if they could be received back in the fold they would be disposed to cross to our side of the House. My hon. friend said that we need not be afraid of annexation, because the Senate would not pass that measure. I am pleased to know that an additional reason has been given by the hon, gentleman why the Senate should be continued. The hon, gentleman having left the personal question, comes back to such plain matters as binders and mowers, and he tells us the prices of these articles at Ann Arbor, in Michigan, at that great manufactory which has combined with it all the agricultural implement works of the United States-the McCormack concern. He tells us what are the prices for export and the prices to the American farmer, and I was pleased that the hon, gentleman was frank enough to admit that the price at which the farmer secures his binders, and mowers, tedders, reapers, horse-rakes and other farming implements are as low in Canada as they have from him the admission that, even if we had unrestricted reciprocity and were buying our binders and tedders from Ann Arbor instead of Ontario, we would not gain anything by it, but our farmers would pay the same prices, and the only difference would be that all the manufacturing of our implements would be done in Michigan instead of its being done in Ontario. The hon, gentleman says that the manufacturers passed two very ridiculous resolutions at their meeting before the last general election. They resolved first that unrestricted reciprocity would be a disadvantage to the farmers, and then, in a scond resolution, that it would be a disadvantage to the manufacturers. But my hon, friend could hardly bring the charge of inconsistency, because it is our pretension that the interests of the manufacturers and the farmers are identical, and we see no reason why the manufacturers' association should not have passed a resolution recording their opinion as to the effect of unrestricted reciprocity both upon the farmers and themselves. My hon, friend said it would take a surgical operation to make us on this side understand unrestricted reciprocity. Well, I would suggest to the hon, gentleman and his friends that, in the first place, they should understand it themselves and agree upon its details, and that some of them should, once and for all, tell us what they mean by it. There is one thing, however, I can say, and that is that the people seem to have got some understanding as to what it is, whether right or wrong, and were able to get rid of it without any ipecac. The hon, gentleman then referred to the egg shipments to Great Britain, and it is curious to see how anxious he was to show that it will be impossible for us to get along without the United States markets. Why should the hon. gentleman try to make the farmers believe it is going to be so difficult for us to establish a market for eggs in England? Why should he magnify the difficulties? Why should he be so anxious to inform us that the boxes will have to be made in two parts, and be of such a size and such a shape, and that, with all these precautions, there is great danger of the eggs being broken or spoiled to prevent the development of this trade? he anxious to compel our farmers to submit to the operations of the McKinley Bill without any recourse or escape? Why should he, on the contrary, not tell us something to help us out of the Why should he not encourage our difficulty? farmers in attempting to open up this new market? Then, with regard to potatoes, he said that since the McKinley Bill, and in spite of the McKinley Bill, so natural a market are the United States for us that we have shipped seven bushels of potatoes there to every one we have shipped to all other countries in the world. What does that prove? Is it in his favour or against him? Does it not show that the consumer is paying the duty under the McKinley Act? Does it not show that, with a short crop of their own, they are bound to have our potatoes; and judging by the fact, which he must admit, that the prices since the McKinley Act came in force for potatoes have been as good as before during the same period of the year, and certainly far above the average year, is it not evident that, instead of our farmers paying the duty, the duty is paid by the American consumers? Our hon. friend goes on in his pitiful wail to enumerate what articles of agricultural production we exported to the United States in 1889-90, and placing the McKinley rates of duty on these, he tells the farmers that now they will have to pay some $3,166,592, which might be avoided if we only had unrestricted reciprocity. What does that mean? It means that he contends the Canadian farmer pays all the duty and the American consumer none. It means that we can find no other possible market for any part of our produce except the United States, and that our produce must go there free of duty, or the Canadian farmer must pay the whole duty; and he says this with a full knowledge of the fact that, since the McKinley Act came into force, our eggs and potatoes have been sold at higher prices than usual. Hay, also, has sold at better prices than usual; so that it is not the Canadian farmer, but the American consumer, who pays the duty. An hon. gentleman, in the course of the last election contest, told the farmers who have hay to sell that until the Liberal party was returned to power they would never be able to sell hay; and what was the result? It was, that some people were silly enough to believe that statement and sold their hay early in the season, before a foreign demand sprung up, at a nominal price; and to-day and for the last few months, owing to the foreign demand for hay, good prices have ruled, so that these people who were deceived by the orators of the Liberal party, will not likely be so simple-minded on another occasion. The hon. gentleman then, referring to the question of immigration, said we were spending too much money, and also that we had spent too much money, on railroads; but these objections have been so ably dealt with by the speakers who have preceded me on this side, that I shall not dwell on them as I intended to do. But, Sir, I will take for my text, if you will allow the expression, certain statements made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in his speech on I do so because they express the ideas which have been the leading ideas of hon. gentlemen on the opposite side. I refer to his remarks on the agricultural question. He stated Mr. IVES.

and more difficulty in making both ends meet, and he added that in Ontario, in nine out of ten counties, the population is decreasing, and that, in forty-nine out of fifty, farm lands are worth from 25 to 33 per cent. less than they were twelve years ago. The reasons he gave were two: first, an inadequate home market; and second, the enormously increased burden of taxation under the National Policy. Before giving us the cure, he stated what would not be a cure. He said that no foreign market except the market of the United States offered any tangible prospect of relief, and then he states that the cure is unrestricted reciprocal trade with the United States. I am not going to stop-I have not the time to do so-to discuss the fairness or the truthfulness of the representations of the hon. gentleman as to the state and condition of the farmers in the Province of Ontario. I know that, for my own Province of Quebec, that statement is grossly exaggerated. In fact, there is no truth whatever in it. So far as the farmers in the Eastern Townships are concerned, there is only this that is true: There is not the same number of applicants for farms, and it is not so easy to sell farms or to obtain the price that could be obtained a few years ago, and the farmers know the reason. They know that they are not able to sell so readily because of the millions of acres of free lands, and cheaplands, and untimbered lands, that purchasers or would-be purchasers can obtain in the great West. But our farmers have been making money, and those of them who work and are industrious have been doing so constantly. On the whole, they have obtained better prices. They are not burdened with debt, as the hon. member represented, and, as far as the Province of Quebec is concerned, we do not produce a surplus of the articles he referred to. But the hon, gentleman who drew this gloomy picture presented the other side of the shield, the silver side of the shield, not very long ago. I find, in a quotation from a Toronto newspaper which a friend here has handed me, that the hon. gentleman, as president of the Frontenac Loan and Investment Society, no longer ago than the 18th March last, stated that several properties in Manitoba had been sold at satisfactory prices, and that the values were continuing to improve. Referring to the whole country, he said:

"Land is in great demand, and at better prices than at any previous period."

That was the silver side of the shield, but he presented the bronze side when he was addressing the House on the Budget. I ask if farmers find it harder to make ends meet from day to day and hour to hour, and if they do, why? What is the comparative cost of what farmers have to buy now and eight or ten years ago? What is the comparative price received for what they have to sell? What is the comparative rate of interest, and what are the comparative facilities for the distribution of their produce, the comparative rate of freight and the comparative rate of taxation as between the present time and 1878? If I can succeed in showing to this House that the farmers of this country can buy what they have to buy as cheaply or more cheaply to-day than in 1878, that what they have to sell brings on the whole better prices than in 1878, that the rate of interest they have to pay has decreased while the facilities for the distribution of that the farmers are finding from day to day more | what they raise are infinitely improved and the rate of freight is much lessened; and if I can show that the burdens of taxation they carry are very much less than they were in 1878 I think I will have made out a case which will call upon the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to prove his statement that the farmers find it harder every day to make both ends meet. In regard to what the farmers have to buy, every farmer who goes to a store and buys goods knows that they are cheaper now than they were ten years go. Take what he buys for his table, what he buys to eat and drink. The chief articles that the farmer buys Those table are sugar, and tea and coffee. which cost him the most are the articles money. As a rule, he raises his own vegetables and his own flour, but even if he did not he would find that as cheap as it was in 1878. However, he has to buy sugar and tea and coffee. How do the prices of those articles compare now with the prices of 1878? In 1878 Japan tea, choicest, was 50 cents, now it is only 43 cents a pound; Hyson tea, the finest, was from 50 to 70 cents in 1878, and now it is from 30 to 60 cents; the finest Gunpowder tea was from 65 cents to 75 cents, and now it is from 35 cents to 45 cents; the finest Souchong was from 50 cents to 70 cents, now it is from 35 cents to 60 cents. So much for tea—and there is a good reason for that. At that time both tea and coffee were heavily taxed for revenue purposes by the Liberal Government, but those taxes have since been removed. In regard to coffee, we find that green Mocha was at that time from 28 to 29 cents. and is now from 30 cents to 33 cents, and green Java was from 27 to 30 cents, and is now from 24 cents to 26 cents. There is a slight increase in the Mocha, but there is a decrease in the Java. Sugar is an item of considerable expense to the farmer, and we find that granulated sugar, which cost 9§ cents to 10 cents in 1878, was sold last spring for 61 cents to 6½ cents; yellow refined sugar, which was sold at $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents to $8\frac{7}{8}$ cents, cost last spring only $5\frac{1}{2}$ cents to 6 cents. The change in the price of sugar owing to the new tariff means a reduction of 11 cents to 13 cents per pound on yellow sugar and about 2 cents per pound on granulated sugar. I undertake to say that hon, gentlemen will find a reductionall through the list of what the farmer has to buy, and I defy the hon, gentleman opposite to point out any item which the farmer is not able to buy for his table cheaper to-day by a considerable percentage than he could in 1878. Then the hon, gentleman from South Oxford fails in that particular to show that the present system costs the farmer more than it would cost him under the system he advocates. Then, as to what he has to wear. Grey cotton, one of the things that farmers have to buy most frequently, which cost in 1878 $7\frac{1}{3}$ cents, now cost $5\frac{5}{3}$ cents; those which cost $7\frac{3}{4}$ cents now cost $5\frac{5}{3}$ cents: those which cost 81 cents now cost 61 cents; those that cost 85 cents now cost 63 cents; those that cost 93 cents now cost 7 cents; those that cost 9\frac{3}{5} cents now cost 7\frac{3}{5} cents; those that cost 10\frac{1}{5} cents now cost 8 cents; those that cost 111 cents now cost 82 cents. When you come to wide sheetings, you find that those which, in 1878, cost 25½ cents now cost 19 cents; those that cost 28½ cents now cost 20\frac{3}{2} cents. Canton flannels, which cost 10½ cents in 1878 now cost 8½ cents; those which cost 11½ cents now cost 8¾ cents; those which cost 12 cents now cost 10 cents; those which cost 14 cents now cost 11½ cents; and those which cost 17 cents now, cost 13½ cents. Cotton yarns, which cost 23½ cents now cost 18 cents; and cotton yarns, coloured, which cost 33½ cents, now cost 27½ cents. The bags the farmer has to buy to put his grain in have been reduced in the same proportion. Those which cost \$24.50 now cost \$20.50, and those which cost \$22.50 now cost \$17. I have here tables, which I will read, showing the reduction in prices since 1878, in several articles of cotton goods in universal use by the people:

In fact, the reduction has been all the way from 22½ to 40 per cent. upon everything the farmer has to buy to clothe himself and his family in the way of cotton or woollen goods of any description. In the way of prints, also, the reduction has been in the same proportion. When you come to woollen goods, grey flannels cost 35 cents a yard in 1878, and you can now buy them for 27. Lower grades of these goods not made then are now selling at from 15 to 17 cents.

35c.	26c.	57½c. to 62½c.	42½c. to 45c. per lb.

Previous to 1878 a large quantity of English flannels were imported, especially English flannel blankets. They continued to be imported for some little time afterwards, but now the market is entirely supplied by our own mills. Now, coming to what the farmer wears himself, etoffes and tweeds, the following shows the difference in values of a few leading lines in tweeds:—

Etoffes		35 50
Fine, 12 oz	1.10	85
9 oz 9 oz		45 50
" 9 oz	85	60

Thus, for every single article that the farmer has to buy for himself or family in the way of either cotton or woollens the prices are less by 22½ to 40 per cent. than they were in 1878. Now we come to furniture and house furnishing. Furniture is 50 per cent. cheaper now than it was in 1878. Wall paper, paints, oils, house furnishings of all descriptions, and house hardware, are from 35 to 50 per cent. cheaper than they were in 1878. Now I come to farm implements. An hon. gentleman last night gave us the prices that farm implements are sold for in the United States to the American farmer, and those prices, I was pleased to see, ranged over the prices at which the Canadian farmer at the present time can buy Canadian manufactured articles. I have been at the pains to ascertain accurately and exactly the range of prices from 1878 to the present time upon mowers, self-binders, reapers, horse rakes, seed drills, top buggies, and The difference is seen in the folfarm waggons. lowing table:

Mowers	$85	$45
Self-binders	$225 to $250	$100 to $120
Reapers		$65
Horse rakes		$22 to $27
Seed drills	$90	$65
Top buggies	$100 to $125	$60 to $75 $45 to $55

Then, both as to what the farmer has to buy for his table, what he has to buy to clothe himself and his family, what he has to buy to use, all things are cheaper under the operation of the National Policy than they were in 1879. Now, how is it with regard to interest? We all know that the rate is reduced by about 2 per cent. from what it was in 1878, and you can get money at 6 per cent. now upon a class of security for which, in 1879, you would have had to pay not less than 8 per cent., and the farmer gets the advantage. Then take our railway facilities. Our railway mileage has been largely increased since 1878, and the number of tons carried has largely increased, while the freight rates upon agricultural products carried to market are not more than 50 per cent. now what they were in 1879, and any leading transportation company will tell you so. Mr. Speaker, the Government of this country, within the last thirteen years, has expended, under and with the consent of this House, over $96,000,000 to build railways and canals to carry the products of this country to market, and that policy has shown the results that were expected of it, in the reduction by 50 per cent. of the cost of transportation. Those gentlemen in this House who are in the habit of indulging in pessimistic speeches, and representing everything as going to rack and ruin, should read the first table in the Report of Railway Statistics of Canada for 1890, where the department gives the number of miles in operation, the number of passengers carried, the tons of freight carried, and the earnings and working expenses of Canadian railways from 1837 to 1890. I shall not take up the time of the House by reading these statistics, further than to say that the number of passengers and the number of tons of freight carried has more than doubled since 1878. The number of passengers carried in 1878 was about 6,500,000, and in 1890 it was over 12,800,000. The number of tons of freight carried, and that represents the condition of the country better than anything else, which was 8,348,000 tons in 1879, rose to the enormous total of 20,787,000 tons in 1890. The earnings of those railways were $20,500,000 in 1878, and last year they had reached the sum of nearly $47,000,000. The working expenses, which were a little over $16,000,000 in 1878, are now $32,913,000; so you see that the increased mileage of railways, which has run up in twelve years from 6,500 miles to 13,250, has had its effect in doubling the tonnage of freight, and more than doubling the number of passengers carried throughout the Dominion of Canada; and that tells you the story of what the National Policy has done, what the railway policy has done, in the way of creating an interprovincial trade between the various provinces of this Dominion. Now, as regards taxation, which is the only other question that arises, I undertake to say that every man may pay more or less taxation as he chooses; Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was, that no for-Mr. IVES.

that unless it can be shown that Canadian-made goods, such as the farmers must use, are dearer than similar foreign goods can be laid down here, there is no ground for the idea that our taxation is a burden to the country. I have not heard any other hon, gentleman opposite go into any details on this point. They speak in generalities about the burdens of taxation; but they cannot play any longer with the people with this general talk. The time has come when the people desire to know and hear something more than mere generalities, and it is incumbent on hon. gentlemen opposite to give us details to show that a burden rests on the farmers resulting from the National Policy. What does a farmer have to pay? He has to pay for his coffee, sugar and tea. These He has to pay for his coffee, sugar and tea. are all infinitely cheaper now than in 1878. Everything else is cheaper, however, and I fail to see how it can be made out that the burden of taxation on the agricultural class is heavier than it was in 1878. On the contrary, it is lighter. It follows, therefore, that hon, gentlemen in stating that the farmers are finding it harder and harder to make ends meet are stating what is not founded In my opinion the whole difficulty in Ontario, or the chief difficulty at all events, namely, the drop in the price of farms and the trouble in finding buyers, is due to causes which no Government and no fiscal policy can possibly change. Is it due to the fact that since 1878 we have opened up enormous areas of territory and cheap lands, which the people purchase instead of buying farms at the prices charged in Ontario? As to the other premises of the hon, gentleman, I need not spend much time in discussing any of them except The hon, gentleman says that our population is decreasing. Possibly it may be so: the census will tell us the story. The population is certainly not decreasing in the cities and towns. But I would refer the House and that hon, gentleman to an editorial in the Globe on the 26th of last month on the same subject, and from that article the hon, gentleman and the House will see that, in the opinion of the Globe, the decrease of population in rural parts is not confined to this country nor to any country which has such a policy as our National Policy. The Globe says:

"The United States census shows that whilst the population in the cities and towns increased during the last decade at the rate of 45 per cent., the farming population increased only 14 per cent. This in itself tells the story of the agricultural depression, though such statements as that the gold price of wheat in England averaged only 95 cents between 1884 and 1889 as compared with $1.64 in the year 1875 help one to perceive the causes. The Canadian census will furnish a similar tale. The rural districts have been almost standing still, and the smaller towns, or most of them, have suffered in consequence. Toronto, Montreal and other centres have drained these towns of their well-to-do inhabitants, and have profited also by an influx of store-keepers, farmers and farm labourers who have abandoned the struggle. It looks as if parts of the Province of Quebec were destined to be overtaken by the decay which has seized rural New England. The annual exodus from Quebec, which in 1865 was estimated in Parliament to amount to 12,000 persons, is now four or five times that much. In Ontario, where we have a better soil and climate, wheat-growing is giving place to all-round farming, especially to the production of cattle and cheese for the British market. But in Quebec progress in that direction is slow. The farmers as a body seem unable to get out of the old routine of coarse products, and as these are hit by the McKinley Bill their condition is steadily growing worse." The United States census shows that whilst the popu-

The hon. gentleman did not vouchsafe to tell us why He did not explain why England, that imported $700,000,000 worth of food products in 1890, could not buy some of ours. He did not tell us why other countries besides the United States on the American continent, Mexico and the South American republics, who together have a population of 52,000,000, and who have a foreign trade $1,201,000,000, largely importing breadstuffs, could not buy some of our products. He simply made the bald statement that no foreign country except the United States afforded any tangible prospect of relief. We have the evidence of our own efforts before us as regards Great Britain. We have in the matter of cheese established the fact that it is possible to build up a trade with Britain. If we have done it under great difficulties in the matter of cheese, why cannot we do it in the matter of butter and other products that are so greatly troubling hon. gentlemen opposite. It is estimated that the consuming population of Europe will require 100,000,000 bushels of wheat this present year to provide for their wants. The consuming population exists. We are as near it as is the United States. We have the same ocean to sail over; it does not belong to them, all mighty as they are, and we have the same air to fill the sails of our ships; we have the same route; we have the same facilities; we have a surplus and they have a surplus; they will not buy from us and we do not want to buy from them. Why not go to the common market? Will the hon, member for South Oxford give us his reason for the statement he so broadly made, that no foreign country except the United States offered any tangible hope of relief, or any tangible hope of a market for our surplus agricultural products? The hon, gentleman gave us no argument, no fact and no reason.

Mr. GILLMOR. The fact is, we do not send it.

Mr. IVES. The fact is, we do send it. We have been sending our cheese for years, and we have now We are sending our cattle by built up that trade. We are sending our cattle by thousands. We have commenced to send our eggs, and we will build up that trade, and we will build up a trade in one branch after another until the hon. gentleman's round of complaints will be entirely removed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman does not want reciprocity.

We want reciprocity when it will be good for the country. I further point out that the United States, with productions similar to our own, raising a surplus in 1889 of $532,000,000 worth of food products, or 78 per cent. of their total exports, exported that surplus to foreign countries, to the markets in which we can sell our products, and all this talk about opening up to us a market of 65,000,000 people is balderdash. Gentlemen opposite talk about 65,000,000 people. Where are they? You have got about 8,000,000 or 10,000,000 in New England, which are within measurable distance of us, but what about the remainder? Are you going to send your wheat to Illinois, Ohio and Kansas? Are you going to send your cattle to Texas and Missouri? Are you going to send your cattle to Texas and Missouri? The cost of the transportation of our products to 45,000,000 of the 60,000,000 which are outside your reach would of food products, or 78 per cent. of their total prevent our trading successfully with Why, Sir, the unfairness and the disutterly them. honesty of the statement of the Liberal party, in the public press and elsewhere, that unrestricted reciprocity would give us a market of 65,000,000 people, is enough to make a man blush. We know, and every body knows, that the cost of transportation would render it impossible for us to send our products outside of the New England States, and the States on the Atlantic seaboard. Even in these States chances would have to be taken in competition with the wheat from Ohio, Illinois and Kansas, and all these other States which have already succeeded in crushing out the New England farmer. Is it to be supposed that we could succeed better than the New England farmers? Now I want to give hon. gentlemen opposite an idea of the condition of the New England farmers who have had this market of 65,000,000 people. I hold in my hand a letter from Judge Charles C. Nott, of the United States Court of Claims, to the New York Evening Post. It is dated at Washington, and in this letter Judge Nott makes the following statements:

"A GOOD FARM FOR NOTHING.

"Specific Instance of New England Agricultural Values-Two-Thirds, the Cost of Buildings and FENCES WILL BUY A FARM.

"In a late number of The Evening Pent appears an advertisement of a Massachusetts farm, with the suggestive editorial comment that, as the buildings and fences are worth as much as the price asked for the farm, the land really 'must have no saleable value.' Inasmuch as neither the editor nor readers of The Evening Post know anything about the farm in question, I will now supply a specific illustration of the market value of the better class of the Massachusetts farms, giving names and places.

"There is now a farm for sale—the Foster farm, on the Cold Spring road, a mile distant from the most beautiful village in New England, Williamstown, Berkshire County, and within two miles of the station, at which twenty passenger trains a day stop. To the station runs one of the best Berkshire gravel roads, and upon an almost continuous down grade. The farm has, I believe, twice taken a premium as the best managed farm in the town, and the owner for more than twenty years has been 'putting on more than he has taken off'—that is to say, he has sold butter and bought grain. The price of all agricultural products in the neighbouring villages of Williamstown and North Adams are about the same as in the towns of Aibany and Troy, excepting hay, butter and mutton. The farm contains 100 acres, and has upon it the well-known New England farmhouse (white, with green blinds, and two large maple trees before the door), and ten farm buildings. All of these buildings have been kept painted, and are in good condition. The farm is well fenced, chiefly post and board.

"This farm-house, these ten farm buildings, and the post and board.

"This farm-house, these ten farm buildings, and the fences probably could not be replaced for $10,009. In their present condition I call them fairly worth $6,500. Yet this farm, to which a good farmer has given a lifetime of intelligent care, has been offered to me, and can be bought by anybody, for that amount. In other words, if you will pay the owner what the buildings and fences are reasonably worth, or two-thirds of what they actually cost, he will give you 106 acres of good land, in high cultivation, for nothing.

hay in one day than four men with seythe and pitchfork could formerly do in two, he will blandly reiterate that 'farming pays worst of all,' and that he 'can do better.'

"Yet, during this same period in which Mr. Foster has been an 'extraordinary boom in real estate' in Williamstown, and land within half a mile of the village, commanding fine views, has quadrupled in value. Tested by actual cash purchases, the encroaching cottager has paid $4,000 for ten acres without a building on them. Midway between Williamstown and Brattleboro', a few years ago. I saw on the summit of a hill against the evening sky what seemed a large cathedral. Driving thither, I found a huge, old-time two-story church, a large academy (which had blended in the distance with the church), a village with a broad street, perhaps 150 feet in width. I drove on and found that the church was abandoned, the academy dismantled, the village descrted. The farmer who owned the farm on the north of the village lived on one side of the broad street, and he who owned the farm on the south lived on the other, and they were the only inhabitants. All of the others had gone—to the manufacturing villages, to the great cities, to the west. Here had been industry, education, religion, comfort, and contentment, but there remained only a drear solitude of forsaken homes. ment, but there remained only a drear solitude of forsaken homes "And here I have placed before you the three distinctive and essential facts of this New England problem—the farm of Mr. Foster, the boom in Williamstown, the deserted village in Vermont.

"The deserted village was the old-fashioned 'Centre' of the town—on a high hill, remote from railways and mill streams, unknown to summer boarders—an agricultural village, dependent upon the agriculture around it and from which it sprang. The causes which operated upon Mr. Foster's farm and the surrounding agriculture upon Mr. Foster's farm and the surrounding agriculture struck it, and, indeed, seemed to strike it sooner, and a more effective blow.

"It should also be noted that these causes have been so overwhelming that their effects have not stopped at the seaboard, and that the term 'East of the Alleghanies' really extends to the English Channel. The ruin has not been as complete in England as in New England, and the chances of adaptation to the new order of things are there incomparably better: but, nevertheless, during the twenty years between our civil war, 1866, and the Queen's jubile 2, 1886, one-seventh of the arable lands of the British Isles was abandoned to 'permanent pasture.'"

The letter gives the causes for this state of things, and goes on to say

"The fourth and fifth are natural causes, which, unhappily, can never be averted. Nature has made the New England farm a small farm, and its owner is confronted by a winter seven months in length. That is to say, the hill-sides and narrow valleys, and broken table-lands are not adaptable to 'wholesale farming,' and the man who raises cattle must house and feed his stock through seven long months, or, if he changes to sheep, ordinarily for six. In all parts of the country some of these five causes are, of course, more or less operative; but there is no part of the country, save New England, where they form so complete and relentless a combination. It is the extraordinary combination which has produced the extra-form so complete and relentless a combination. It is the extraordinary combination which has produced the extraordinary and long-to-be-regretted result.

"What, then, shall the New England farmer do? He cannot compete in cereals with the West; in fruit and vegetables with Delaware and New Jersey; in cattle, with men whose herds run summer and winter on the free ranches of the Government: in wool, with the unhoused flocks of Texas and California, of New Zealand and Australia: in butter, with Nebraska and Iowa; in dressed beef, with Armour's syndicate. What, then, shall he do? The gentlemen who have kindly advised him have in the end come down to saying that he must work as early and late as his fathers did, and live on as little as the Irish or the French. He thanks them for their good advice, but anwers that he can do better. And so he can. His industry, probity, intelligence, good sense and general handiness are in demand everywhere. The loss is not his, but ours.

"It is very sad that the highest, purest, noblest agricultural population that this world has ever possessed is being dissipated, and, as a race, merged and lost. As a race it has been rich beyond comparison in human products—in clergymen, soldiers, statesmen, scholars, poets, merchants, inventors, and men who believe in honesty and work. Such statesmen as Webster, such college presidents, past and present, as Mark Hopkins. Eliphalet Nott, and Stanley Hall, such poets as Whittier, such generals as Lyon, such merchants as Edwin D. Morgan, have been born and bred on these small farms, which to-Mr. IVES.

day can hardly be given away. Worthless though they be, according to our material standard, they have done more for the elevation of American thought and character and intelligence and happiness than all the railroads and and intelligence and happiness than all the railroads and milionaires, and stocks and seccurities, and corn and hogs, that the great cities and the great West contain.

"Yet the last act of the New England farmer is not unworthy of his sturdy and upright lineage. He faces the situation, and closes his accounts and pays his debts like a man: it is the business which has become bankrupt, not he. When we remember how hard it is for any of us to give up an undertaking on which we have spent time and money, or to throw away a foolish purchase, instead of storing it in the attic; and when we consider how the poor of this world cling to their poverty, how the peasants and crofters of other races obstinately hold fast to their small holdings, and divide and subdivide their insufficient farms only to entail intenser misery on their descendants, we must acknowledge that there is something grand in the farmer of these mountain towns, who, rising to the heroic farmer of these mountain towns, who, rising to the heroic treatment of his case, turns away from the fields and fences upon which he has toiled through the better part of his life, and, by a decree as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, writes upon the closed door—ABAN-DONED."

" Danvers, Mass., December 1, 1889.

"My Dear Friend,—I thank thee for thy noble 'testimony' in regard to the sad decline of New England agriculture. Every year when I go to the N. H. hill country, I find more and more abandoned farms, and the sight takes away much of the pleasure of a sojourn in view of the mountains.

"I hope thy article, with which I fully agree, will be widely read. It should be published in pamphlet form

" I am very faithfully thy frd., "John G. Whittier."

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. IVES. Mr. Speaker, did time permit, I could prove, by official reports of commissioners appointed by State Legislatures, that the competition of the great West has produced the same results in the case of the farmers of the States of New York and Pennsylvania as I have described as having been produced by that competition in the New England States. I think it is incontestably established that in the size of the farm, in the scale upon which farming can be carried on, in the greater facilities for using machinery, in the greater fertility of the soil, in the absence of stones, and trees and stumps, the western farmer has advantages which enable him, in the production of food products, to drive the farmer of the eastern seaboard entirely out of the market, when they attempt to compete upon equal terms. Leaving this subject, I ask the indulgence of the House while I go back to a matter to which I ought to have referred before, dealing with the last subject to which I have alluded, that is, the relative prices of farm productions the day before yesterday and on the same date in 1879. I have dealt with the prices of the things they have to buy, the railway facilities they enjoy, and the burden of taxation which rests upon them to-day as compared with 1878. Now, on referring to the Toronto Globe of 14th July, 1891, and to the same newspaper of 14th July, 1879, I find that the prices of almost all the leading agricultural productions of this country are higher, and higher by considerable amounts in July, 1891, than they were in July, 1879. The market I have selected in both in July, 1879. The market I have selected in both cases is the Toronto street market. As to beef, the price is much higher now than it was in 1879, and higher than it has been at almost any time from 1879 till the present time. The prices of other leading productions compare as follows:

I have also taken the prices of these same articles on the same date in 1890; and I find that the variation between 1890 and 1891, is, on the whole, in favour of 1891, showing that the operation of the McKinley tariff, so far at least, has not affected these articles of agricultural production. With regard to lambs, I find no quotations upon the Toronto Exchange, but everybody knows, both in Ontario and the other provinces, that the price of lambs is better, if anything, than it ever was before, so that I think I have successfuly controverted the position taken by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and shown that he was inaccurate when he stated that it is becoming harder and harder every day for our farmers to make ends meet. I have shown, I think successfully, by quotations and figures, that it costs the farmer less for what he has to buy, and that he is getting better prices for what he has to sell since the introduction of the National Policy. I have shown that his railway facilities for the distribu-tion of his products are better, and that the bur-den of taxation is less than in 1878; and if we see evidence of depression, especially in Ontario, it is due to the fact that the demand for high-priced cultivated farms in Ontario is necessarily less than it was in 1878, owing to the opening up for settlement of the cheap and fertile lands of the North-West. Now, there remains just one further consideration. I have shown also that, although our market is inadequate, to a small extent, for the consumption of our agricultural products, yet it should not be forgotten that it is only a very small proportion of our agricultural products which we require to export at all, and that a small increase to our urban population would place us in the position of consuming all our agricultural products, with a very few exceptions. Further, it should not be forgotten that it is incontestably established that, instead of our not having any foreign markets available except in the United States, there are in England and other countries consuming populations which always import the very articles both we and the United States have to sell. I am, therefore, brought to the conclusion of my speech with the consideration of the same question with which the hon, member for South Oxford concluded his, and that is the question as to whether unrestricted reciprocity with the United States would be beneficial to our farmers and workingmen. Now, Sir, you must bear in mind that the climate, the soil and the conditions in New England are almost precisely similar to the climate, the soil and up the prices and furnishes the green-grocer the conditions in the Provinces of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, and that Ontario and the State of New York are also similar in these respects. The question, then, naturally arises: If the farmers of New York State, whose conditions are similar in every respect to those of Ontario, have not been able to hold their own in competition with the farmers of Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Iowa, how can the farmers of Ontario sustain more successfully that competition? And if the farmers of New England have failed in competition with the great West, how can the farmers of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec be successful under similar circumstances? We claim to have the same intelligence, the same industry, the same economical habits, but I think it would be going too far to pretend that our farn ers will succeed where those similarly situated hav. o signally failed. Coming to the question of how unrestricted reciprocity would affect our farmers, and passing by the consideration of how it has affected the farmers who have that market of 65,000,000 people, and whose conditions and circumstances are similar to those in which our farmers would be placed, we must look at this question from two points. First, from the point of our home market; and second, from the point of the market for our surplus productions. Because we must not lose sight of the fact that although weexportsome $35,000;000 of agricultural products our total production is over $300,000,000 worth, and that by far the largest proportion is bought, paid for and consumed by the Canadian people. Now, Sir, as to how it would affect our surplus. Our surplus agricultural production which we export averages $35,000,000. What proportion of that went to the United States? A little over $13,000,000, or, in other words, a little more than one-third of our total exports of agricultural products went to the United States. Of what was that one-third chiefly composed of? It was made up of these very articles upon which hon, gentlemen opposite are constantly harping—barley, hay, potatoes, horses, eggs and lambs. What was the balance of our agricultural exports composed of? It was composed of beef and cheese chiefly, and other items scattered over the whole list. The question then arises, how would the two-thirds be affected by unrestricted reciprocity? How would the beef market, the butter market, the cheese market, the pork market, the bacon market, the ham market, the tallow market, the lard market, be affected by unrestricted reciprocity with the United States? They would be affected precisely as they have been in New York, Pennsylvania and New England. What has been the effect in the New England States, and in New York and Pennsylvania? So far as all the food products are concerned, the effect has been that Mr. Armour has erected his cold stores in every town, village and city throughout the length and breath of the Eastern and Middle States, and sent his products, first-class in every particular, butchered and cared for in a first-class manner, to those centres, where he has put them in his cold storage under charge of men with instructions to sell at all hazard, no matter at what prices, and they have been sold at prices which have driven the local butcher and producer entirely out of the field and given Mr. Armour full control of the market. What does he do then? He puts with meat, and instead of meat being bought from the butcher, as it is here, it is bought from the green-grocer who sells tea, coffee and sugar. The same thing which has happened in regard to beef has happened in regard to pork, butter and cheese, and the result is that the farmers of that section of the country have had to stop raising cattle and pork altogether. The cow and her products are no longer raised for the market, except in the form of milk, butter and cheese, and that only to a limited If a dairyman there wants to dry up a cow he sells her to the sugar refiner for what her bones are worth. In this country he sells her to the local butcher for beef, and gets his money. Here, if a farmer has more pigs than he desires to keep, he fattens them and sells them for pork, but that is entirely swept away on the other side by the policy of Mr. Armour. If you have unrestricted reciprocity the whole trade of raising cattle here for food would pass into the hands of the Chicago producer.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. IVES. My hon. friend says "hear, hear." He may say that the consumer would get his meat cheaper in consequence, but would that suit the farmer?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What kind of reciprocity are you going to ask for in October next?

Mr. IVES. I am arguing this question from my point of view. In October we will get reciprocity in what we want, or we will not have it at all.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What do we want it in?

Mr. BOWELL. Manners, for one thing.

Mr. IVES. In anything that will benefit Canada.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). The exportation of Grits.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That would ruin Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must call the attention of hon, gentlemen to the fact that interruptions are entirely out of order.

Mr. IVES. Last session, when we put an additional duty on fresh meats, Mr. Armour was at that time supplying some of our leading hotels, to the exclusion of our own people, and if the protection had not been put on I believe the whole of this trade would have passed into the hands of Mr. Armour. Even in Sherbrooke an arrangement was made by the leading butcher to get his supply from Armour instead of from the local farmers. That is what would happen in regard to all the products of the hog and of the cow, including butter and cheese, if we had unrestricted reciprocity. With the example before us of what has happened in New England, New York and Pennsylvania, with the fact that two-thirds of what we want to export would be disadvantageously interfered with by unrestricted reciprocity even though the other third might be benefited, the question is, shall we injure and perhaps sacrifice the two-thirds for the sake of the one-third. That applies with greater force to the larger portion of our products which we consume ourselves. Then, there is the question of transportation, and other questions would come in, and the result would be, as it was before 1878, that our market would be supplied by the United States to the exclusion of our own producers, and Mr. IVES.

American middle man to sell our products in the English market. I will be perfectly frank with the House. The hon, gentleman has asked me two or three times what I would be in favour of our having reciprocity in. I would be in favour of reciprocity in those articles which hon, gentlemen so frequently call our attention to. I would like to see reciprocity in horses, in lambs, in hay, in barley and in eggs. I would like to give the hon. gentleman's constituents in Prince Edward Island a good market for their potatoes, but we cannot afford to sacrifice the greater interest for the less, and I tell him that his market for his potatoes, even if he had it, is a most unreliable market for a farmer'to expect to get rich upon. When the crop of potatoes is not good in the United States the hon. gentleman's constituents can sell their potatoes in the United States for a good price, but when there is a large crop of potatoes there the hon. gentleman's constituents cannot sell their produce in that market at a good price. Otherwise, with the McKinley Bill in force, the people in the United States will buy the potatoes and pay the price, as they have done this year. Then, The northern lamb is a choicer and as to lambs. better lamb than that which is raised in the west or in any other part of the American continent. The New York, Michigan and Canadian lamb is worth more on the market by long odds than the southern or western lamb. The flavour is better, the character of the meat is far better, and I tell the hon, gentleman that the Boston merchant and the Boston broker are going to have the northern lamb, no matter if Mr. McKinley does put an extra tariff on it; and if our people have the stamina to ask a proper price for their lamb, and are not fooled by speculators, who tell them that because of the McKinley Bill and because of the failure of the Liberal party in the elections last spring they will get just as much for their lamb as ever, the Canadian lamb will take care of itself in spite of Mr. McKinley and in spite of the Liberal party. As to hay, everyone knows it is a very poor crop to raise, and if we were to adopt unrestricted reciprocity, and turn all our farms to the raising of hay and potatoes, I should like to know what condition our farms would be in after ten years? If the hog and the cow were driven out of the country, what condition would your farm be in? I say that hay is an unwise and unprofitable crop to raise, but whenever the crop is short in New England towns the people there will come and buy our hay and pay the duty on it. The consumer and not the producer will pay the duty. When there is not a good demand, even without any tariff, so bulky a product as that could not be shipped at And so with regard to all these matters, I say if we can get reciprocity with the United States with reference to these articles, let us have it. I admit that for the present it would be an advantage to have it, but if we can only have it at the sacrifice of, or a direct injury to, the great bulk of our agricultural productions, then I say we do not want it. Now, so far as horses are concerned, let us not forget that the American market is rapidly lessening its demand for horses, and in a very short time it will not require our horses. The business of growing ranche horses is only in its infancy in the United States, for one thing; it is growing rapidly that we would have to pay a commission to the every year; and, in the next place, the use of electricity is reducing the number of horses employed in cities very materially. You must remember that the million of horses which the hon, member for North Wellington mentioned last night as the annual number of horses used up in the United States every year—if they used up 1,000,000 of horses they only imported some 18,000; and what is 18,000 horses in a year to 1,000,000 horses, which the hon gentleman says they use up and destroy every year? They have nearly reached the limit of their demand for horses, and the hon. gentlemen in this House would endanger our beef, and butter, and cheese, and pork, and all those great staple articles, for the sake of getting the chance for a year or two more to sell cheap horses to the United States. Surely this would be a very foolish bargain. As for good horses, there is an ample market anywhere; the Yankees will have them, and they will pay Mr. McKinley's charge; the English people will buy them, and there is no troubleat all in disposing of good horses. Now, if anything is required to show what the course of trade would be with reference to some of our agricultural products that we export, it is shown by the imports and exports of agricultural products for the year ending 30th June, 1890. Now, we find that the United States import duty and ours was almost identically the same upon pork, bacon and ham, beef, lard, tallow, butter and cheese, wheat, oats, corn and flour. On pork the duty was I cent a pound both ways—I am speaking of the old duty; on bucon and hams it was 2 cents both ways; on beef, it was the same, 1 cent; on lard it was the same, 2 cents; on tallow, the same, I cent-and so on; the duty is almost identically the same. Now, if I can show you that the United States forced upon our market 50 times as much of those articles as we forced upon theirs, does it not show conclusively that there was a bigger surplus there, and a greater anxiety to sell, than there was here? Certainly it does. Now, what was the course of trade under precisely the same rates of duty? The course of trade was, that in pork they sent us nearly $900,000 worth, and we sent them $195; in bacon and ham, they sent us $323,000 worth, and we sent them $106; in beef, they sent us $258,000 worth, and we sent them $1,843; in lard, they sent us $301,000 worth, and we sent them $1 worth; in tallow, they sent us $34,718 worth, and we sent them none; in butter, they sent us $61,000, and we sent them $5,000; in cheese, they sent us $16,000 worth, and we sent them $6,425; in wheat, they sent us $149,994 worth, and we sent them $6,587; in oats, they sent us $97,970 worth, and we sent them $8,527; in corn, they sent us $1,170,000 worth, and we sent them $21; in flour, they sent us over half a million, nearly $600,000 worth, and we sent them $32,055. Now, under precisely the same duty on both sides, so great was the surplus pushing for export in that country that in spite of our duties they sent us that amount of produce. What would be the state of things if the duty was wiped out altogether, instead of being increased, as it was last ses-I say we would be flooded, as we were flooded by American manufactures prior to 1878, I say we would be made the slaughter market. The member for North Wellington told us last home market price and the export price, and he 3 cents per pound if fresh, 2 cents if salted; on took it for granted that the export price was the cost price. Now, the export price is not necessarily the cost price; the export price is the price at which Mr. McCormick will send his surplus to foreign countries to dispose of; it means that that is the price at which he will slaughter. I say that, so far as these agricultural products are concerned, if we cannot get reciprocity in what would do us good without getting reciprocity with what would ruin our farmers, then I for one would say, let us go without reci-procity altogether. Now, we hear very often from theother side that this Government has always been a Government for the manufacturers, and that they never have had a thought for the farmers; in fact, I found that to be one of the most frequently used arguments on the stump by hon. gentlemen opposite. They tell us that there is a sort of understanding between the manufacturers and the Government, that the Government are to put the farmers under tribute to them, in order that they might make money out of them, and in return these bloated monopolists would furnish the campaign funds to help to elect myself and my friends on this side of These are statements that it is very easy to make, but we have never heard any proof of them, and I trust that somebody who will follow me will show in dollars and cents where the Canadian farmer is injured by what he has to buy by the National Policy. He may be able to show that a wringer may cost four or five cents more on one side of the river than it does on the other, but I undertake to say that the Canadian farmer at the present day, under the National Policy, gets his goods of all descriptions as cheaply as he could if we had unrestricted reciprocity with the United States; and if the contrary can be shown, I hope some gentleman will come down to the definite point and show it to us in dollars and cents. Now, it is said that the Government nothing for the farmers. in 1879, when the National Policy was first adopted, we put a protection upon all grain and products of the farm: upon barley, 15 cents; upon wheat, 10 cents; upon Indian corn, 7½ cents; upon oats, 10 cents a bushel; and I can tell the hon, gentleman that the duty upon oats is a protection, and if it was not for the duty upon oats and the duty upon corn neither oats nor corn, nor pease, would be raised in this country at all. Upon rye we have put a duty of 10 cents; upon wheat, 15 cents; upon beans, 15 cents; upon buckwheat meal and flour, I cent a pound; upon Indian meal, 40 cents a barrel; oatmeal, half a cent a pound; rye flour, 50 cents a barrel; wheat flour, 50 cents a barrel; rice and sago flour, 2 cents a pound; flax seed, 10 Then upon apples, cranberries and cents a bushel. all fruits, there is a protection; upon all vegetables, &c., a protection. Meats fresh or salted, bacon and ham, all have their protection. In 1880 changes in the direction of protection were made; in 1886 still other changes; in 1887 still other changes. In 1890, it being felt that Chicago beef was interfering with the legitimate market of the Canadian farmers, the duty was raised, and upon cattle and sheep 30 per cent. was imposed, instead of 20 per cent.; on hogs, living, 2 cents per pound; on mutton, 3 cents per pound; on night of the great difference that Mr. McCormick pork, 1½ cent per pound; on bacon and ham, 3 had made in agricultural implements between the cents per pound if fresh, 2 cents if salted; on beef, flour, 75 cents per barrel; and on fruits the duties; were also increased. The Government have constantly endeavoured, and, as I claim, endeavoured with success, to give the Canadian farmers the home market, and if they have not done so it is because the protection has not been sufficiently high. Instead of departing from the National Policy, my idea would be, in negotiating for any reciprocity arrangement, to adhere to the National Policy, to protect Canadian industries, to sacrifice no important Canadian industry, and to make no trade when the balance of advantage is not in favour of the Canadian people. I think the statement made by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that the burden of taxation is one of the reasons why the farmers are depressed, was a very dangerous Sir, what would become of the one to make. Canadian farmers, with respect to the question of taxation, if we had unrestricted reciprocity? What would that hon, gentleman do, I ask, as Minister of Finance of the Dominion, in order to provide for the necessary revenue, if we had unrestricted reciprocity with the United States? He never yet has told us. The hon, gentleman who leads the Opposition has not yet told us, and I challenge you, Mr. Speaker, if it is a proper thing to do, to state any case in history under constitutional government where the leaders of a great political party have asked the people of a country to change their whole fiscal policy and at the same time refuse, when lenged, to tell the people how they are going to provide the revenue necessary for government. The nearest the hon, member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) ever got to it, to my knowledge, was at a meeting he did me the pleasure and honour to attend at Sherbrooke, and when I asked him the question there he said: "The financial matters in our party are in the hands of Sir Richard Cartwright." I do not know what explanation Sir Richard Cartwright might have made. I heard the same hon, gentleman, speaking during the last campaign, state that they were going to economize the amount lost by taking duties off goods coming in from the United States, variously estimated at from $10,000,000 to $18,000,000. He said we had a surplus, and the Liberals were not particular about having a surplus and would economize. But still they failed then and have failed during this debate to tell us, as they are bound to tell us, how they are going to raise the money necessary to meet the public expenditure of the country. is a most important matter, and we have a right to call on them to answer it, and to answer it clearly and distinctly.

Mr. McMULLEN. You will steal our clothes as you did before.

Mr. IVES. I do not think the reason why hongentlemen opposite do not give up their policy is because they are afraid we would steal it, for they have not yet succeeded in finding it. Sir, they would have to reimpose the duties on tea, coffee and sugar. The good work which the Minister of Finance did the other day with respect to sugar would have to be undone, and hon gentlemen opposite would have to double that duty, while Mr. IVES.

fail, and it would be necessary to impose heavy taxation on the necessaries of life as well as on the luxuries. Besides the heavy taxes on tea, coffee and sugar and the other necessaries of life which the public generally use, and which can create a large revenue, there would still be left several millions which would have to be made up by direct taxation. Let the farmers consider well before they propose to change the policy of this country, a policy under which they need not pay one dollar in the course of the whole year unless they choose, for a policy under which direct taxation would compel them to contribute to the revenues of this country. In apologizing to the House for the very long speech I have made I desire to say that with the prospect of good crops all over the Dominion, more especially in the great West, and with the prospect of a first-rate market for the coming year, with wheat certainly over $1 a bushel, the prospects of this country are good, and I think the prospects of the party are good—as good as wheat; and when the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) goes back at the bye elections, which I believe he will have to go through, as is the case with other hon. gentlemen opposite, he and other gentlemen will find less and fewer simple people than they did on 5th March last.

Mr. McMILLAN. In rising to address the House on this very important question I must confess I was very much surprised to hear the arguments advanced by the hen, gentleman who has just taken his seat. I was astonished at the arguments he brought forward and the statements he made with respect to the National Policy and its effect on the people of this Dominion, and especially on the farmers of Ontario. The hon, gentleman told us that one of the first effects on a young convert of a desire for reciprocity was the creation of a very strong feeling for annexation. I have been wondering if that hon, gentleman's breast in times past has been animated with that feeling, and if it was not called out by a residence and experience down in Mexico.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMILLAN. In Texas. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but I am going to tell them something which they have not heard before. We must go to the United States with our agricultural products if we are to have reciprocity even in agricultural products, and we would suffer from that cause the same as we suffered in manufactured goods before the National Policy was introduced. Now I will tell them the effect of the free trade in 1878, the last year we had free trade between the United States and Canada in agricultural products. I will tell them that we imported from the United States in that year, 302,147 bushels of barley; we bought it at 451 cents per bushel and we sold it at 59½ cents, and we made \$42,400 upon that transaction, or 14 cents a bushel. I think I will be able to prove the condition of the market then, from a report which was got up to show the effect which the tariff had upon the agricultural industry of this country. I will also be able to show that two years after the National Policy had been imposed the balance was on the other side, as far as barley was concerned, and that it was higher in the certain it is that the farmers would have to bear a larger measure of taxation to make up that deficit, because all the incidental taxation imposed would 7,387,507 bushels of Indian corn; we bought it at $47\frac{3}{4}$ cents, and we sold it at $67\frac{3}{4}$ cents, gaining 20 cents per bushel, or \$1,477,501 upon that transaction. That was the effect the free market between Canada and the United States had upon American grains coming into this country. We imported grains coming into this country. 2,162,294 bushels of oats; we bought it at 30 cents per bushel and sold it at 41 cents, and we gained \$237,852, or 11 cents per bushel on the transaction. Oats at that time was 11 cents per bushel higher in Canada than in the United States, and before I sit down I will be able to show the change that took place in relation to the price of oats between 1878 and 1881. We bought in that year 5,635,411 bushels, and we paid $$1.15\frac{1}{2}$$ and sold it at $$1.36\frac{1}{2}$$ per bushel. I will be able to show from the returns placed in our hands by the Minister of Agriculture that this was the price of wheat in Canada at that time, and so we gained upon our import of wheat 21 cents per bushel. I believe I will be able to show also that the wheat was 21 or 22 cents per bushel higher in Canada before the National Policy was imposed than it was in the United States, but that since the National Policy was introduced the Canadian farmer has not had the good Canadian market to the same extent that he had before, and that now wheat has been as high, or higher, in the United States during the last year than it was in Canada. Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the first arguments to which my attention was very strongly drawn during this debate was the statement from Conservative members that the price of land has not fallen in the Province of Ontario to the extent which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has stated. We got a quotation from the member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), showing how far land in Ontario had improved since 1882. Now, Sir, I have the advance report of the Bureau of Industries of Ontario sent out by Mr. Blue annually, and that report tells me that in 1890 land in Ontario was valued only at We have a perfect right to go back \$622,896,000. and take the year in which land in Ontario was valued highest at, and we find, according to the report of the Bureau of Industries, that land was highest in the year 1883. We find that in 1883 land in Ontario was valued at \$654,793,025. We find, when we come to 1889, that it was valued at \$632,329,433, but when we come to 1890 its value is only \$622,896,000, or a reduction of \$31,897,025 since 1883. But this does not tell the whole tale, and I would advise the member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) the next time that he begins to examine details in respect to the value of land, or any other values, to examine them carefully and to give his statements correctly In Ontario there were 1,364,019 acres When you more land settled in 1889 than in 1883. take that at the average price that land is at now in Ontario, of \$29.64 an acre; it gives us another reduction of \$39,809,063, making a total reduction since 1883 of \$71,706,088; and yet the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) turned round and asked if the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) would go back and tell his constituents that the value of land had fallen in the Province of Ontario after his statement. I will ask the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) if he will have the honesty to go back to his people and teli them that he made a misstatement and that he did not give a correct statement of the facts? We find, Sir, that that is not the best criterion of what the value In all countries we find that the rental of land is.

of land is considered a correct indication of what the value of land is, and I find that in 1883 the rental of land in the Province of Ontario was $2.75 per acre, while in 1889, the last year for which we have a return, the rental of land was $1.96 per Here is a reduction in the value of land of 281 per cent., which is one proof that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) made a correct statement. I have another proof to give, and one which will show best the great reduction in the value of land, because we know that land is only valuable for what it can produce, and the value of land is regulated by the products that come from that land. Now, Sir, we find that in the year 1882 the crop of wheat, oats, barley, rye, pease and corn, was valued in Ontario at $94,235,379, but the value of these crops, both on account of shrinkage in price and shrinkage in quantity, has been going steadily, until 1889 the value was $57,548,802. Let us take this and see what reduction in the value of land this would give, and I hold this to be a correct criterion of what the value of land is. That would That would reduce the value of land in Ontario by 39 per cent. Will the hon, member for Albert go back and tell the people in his locality that the value of land has been reduced to that extent in the Province of Ontario? Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman also told us that there was a little cloud not much larger than a man's hand upon the horizon, and he told us that if we could only get discriminating duties of 5 or 7 cents per bushel on grain, what benefit it was going to be to Canada. I will give the hon. gentleman the views of one who is well fitted, from his experience or from his position, to give correct information upon such a question. When I mention formation upon such a question. the name of the Marquis of Lansdowne every hon. gentleman in this House will admit that, from his position as the Governor General of this country and his position as a landowner in the old country, he is well qualified to give a correct judgment upon this commercial union fad, as they call it. lid he say?

"There was another question which had lately engaged a great deal of public attention. That was the question of the defence of the Empire. Numerous proposals had been framed with a view to improving the defences by altering the amount of responsibility which at present devolves on the different quarters of the Empire. A great deal could be done in great colonies to strengthen Imperial defences. For example, there might be a more distinct understanding as to the division of the responsibility between colonial and Imperial forces; but if he was asked to go further, and to say whether the great colonies should bind themselves, in certain eventualities, to provide a certain force of men for the Imperial service, he would say that he doubted the wisdom of such a policy. He would prefer to take his chance of getting 50,000 men from Canada, spontaneously placed in line by the Dominion, than 5,000 men because the country is bound by the rigid terms of a covenant to supply them. There was another proposal on which he would like to say a few words; that was the proposal that the United Kingdom and the colonies should join hands to protect their own people by the collection of the necessary revenue from the pockets of foreigners. That was a very taking proposal at first sight, but those who talked about a fixed fiscal system for the Empire should remember that there is no such thing. It was at present in chaos, each part of the Empire having a different tariff. If he was asked if there was any possibility of evolving order out of that chaos, he would answer frankly that he believed the thing was impossible. In the first place, public sentiment in Canada had to be taken into account; in the next place, public sentiment in the old country. The United Kingdom did three-quarters of its business with foreign countries and one-quarter only with British possessions. Was it not to be feared that the people of the United Kingdom would look askance at a proposal to disturb their relations with three-fourths of their customers on the chances of improving their relations with the remaining quarter? Then, again, England grew only one-third of the wheat required; of the remaining two-thirds, three-fourths came from foreign countries and one-fourth from British possessions. If the people of England were asked to tax the foreign wheat imported they would probably ask if it would be wise to raise the price of their bread on a chance of that kind. Nor would it be possible to persuade the colonies to adopt such an arrangement. However able a Canadian delegation might be sent to Westminster to arrange the Imperial tariff, he would not envy its feelings on its return to Canada."

These are the views of one of the leading states men in Britain; and I might refer to other leading men there to show the feeling that exists among the British people and in the British Parliament with respect to giving the colonies any special trade privileges over foreign countries. Hon, gentlemen are aware that some two years ago there was considerable feeling in the different countries on the continent of Europe with respect to the sugar sent into the British market, and a convention was held to which Great Britain sent delegates; and at that convention an arrangement was entered into that no more than one shilling per hundred pounds of bounty should be given by any country for the sugar exported from that country. But it was found that some countries, instead of taking a shilling for 100 pounds, took a shilling for 150 pounds, thus causing a disadvantage to those countries that were honest. Then it was agreed that if all countries did not give an equal bounty the British Government should be asked to impose a duty on sugar, so as to level up all the inequa-When that proposition came into the House of Commons Lord Bramwell and the rest admitted that if the foreign bounty-fed sugar were excluded from Britain, Britain would receive more cane sugar from her colonies; but they asked why the British people should be pinched for the benefit of the colonies; and nobody, not even the Imperial federationists, could give a satisfactory reply. Now, Sir, when an attempt was made to bring into the British House of Commons a motion even with respect to this little cloud that appeared in the sky, what was the result? Mr. Howard Vincent, a federationist, placed on the Notice paper the following resolution:

"That, in the opinion of this House, the commercial union of the British Empire will be favourable not only to its permanent consolidation, but to the material interests of all its peoples, and that every practicable step should be taken to secure that end."

Mr. Vincent did his best to get a chance of bringing up this motion, and at last it was set down for a certain evening, but the members withdrew—the House was counted out. Commenting on this, a British paper remarks:

"Parliament has something more important on hand than to debate the dreams and vapourings of ill-informed enthusiasts."

So much for the fad of Imperial Federation. You were told also by the hon. member for Albert that in this country a great change had taken place—that long ago, before the National Policy was imposed, very large quantities of lumber had been sent out of the country, but that all that had been stopped, that now our young men were kept at home manufacturing our lumber into furniture in our own country, and that the importation had almost ceased. I am sorry the hon. gentlemen had not the forethought to examine the Trade and Navigation Returns before making such a statement. I will not deal with the question of the exportation of lumber from the Maritime Provinces, after the able address given by the hon. member for Mr. McMillan.

Queen's (Mr. King). I will only state that the importation of furniture into Canada in 1882 was $196,138, and that in 1890 it was $352,430. Verily that is a great shrinkage in the importation of furniture; and remember, there is a duty of 35 per cent. upon furniture coming into this country. I am afraid that if all the statements the hon, gentleman makes in the profession of law are as unfounded as the statements he made with respect to reciprocity, the people of his province will not think him a very able professor or teacher in that profession. Then, Sir, he told us that the export trade in manufactured goods was increasing. me go back to the time that our opponents are so fond of talking about, the year 1873. I find that in that year the manufactured goods exported from Canada amounted to $2,921,802 worth; but when we come to 1876, the year which hon, gentlemen opposite point to as that of our greatest depression, I find that our exportation of manufactured goods had increased to $5,353,367—a sum which, with all the prosperity, all the new industries, and all the tall chimneys which the National Policy was to have brought into existence, when a fair calculation is made, has not been reached yet; because, when we come to the year 1890 we find that there has been exported only $5,741,184 worth of manufactured goods. But what further do we find? I have examined the two years, 1873 and 1890, very carefully, and I could find no ice exported in 1873, nor in 1876; but I find that in 1890, $247,000 worth of manufactured ice was exported. I also find that $818,000 worth of household goods which the people leaving this country had taken away with them is put among the exports of manufactured goods. Sir, taking these two items from the amount of our exports of manufactured goods, we find that the true exportation amounts to only $4,676,139, or in reality $677,228 less than the exportation of 1876, during that desperate period when the Grits held rule in this country. Now, Sir, we were told this afternoon by the hon, member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives) that if we could show that large sums of money had gone into the pockets of the manufacturers and that the people of Canada had not received a corresponding benefit, then some importance might be attached to the statements we made. Now, I will take the question of iron. We all remember the boasting indulged in by hon, gentlemen opposite in 1887 when the duty was taken off anthracite coal. were then told that the remission of the duty would cause blast furnaces to be erected in Kingston, in Toronto and elsewhere, and that it would add twenty thousand workmen and a hundred thousand souls to the population of Canada. Where are they? Echo answers, where! and our hon. friends opposite are unable to answer from the other side of the House. The following table will show clearly how utterly the policy of the Government, in protecting our iron manufactures by both duty and bounty, has failed in its purpose:-Dig Tron

Year		made-tons
1876	No duty; no bounty	4.000
1877	********
1878	66 66	16:00
1879	Import duty $2 a ton	16.500
1880		23 000
1881	Duty $2 a ton and bounty $1.50 a to	on. 18,550
1882	••	21,500
1883	46 66	32,000
1884	'46 46	29.389
1887.	Duty $4; bounty $1.50	24,829
1888		21,799

In 1889, with a duty of $4 per ton and a bounty, if I am not mistaken, of $2 per ton, we manufactured only 25,921 tons. So that we find that, from 1878 up to 1889, we increased the output not quite 10,000 tons. And what did that increase cost us? In 1878, when we manufactured 16,000 tons, we paid nothing in the shape of duty or bounty, but in 1890 we paid in duty $103,684 and in bounty $51,842, making a nice little total of $155,526, which went into the pockets of the iron manufacturers, and we only manufactured 10,000 tons of iron extra. When we take that 10,000 increase, we find that it costs us in duty and bounty $15.50 per ton. The iron that we imported into this country was then only worth $13.36 per ton, so that we could have bought that 10,000 tons, which cost us in duty and bounty $15.55 per ton, at $13.36 per ton, and had $20,000 in the treasury besides, if we had not given a single cent to that industry. That is the way in which the predictions of hon. gentlemen opposite have been falsified; that is the way the tariff bears hardly upon the farmers of the Dominion and upon the other members of the community, because I hold there is no class of the community; which requires more iron to carry on its operations than farmers, as all their implements are made of iron. I find there has been a great deal said about the farmers of Ontario and the farmers of the Dominion generally not being in a depressed condition. took the trouble to get up a little table, which I compiled from the statements sent in to the Bureau of Industry in 1877 by something like 190 farmers of the Province of Ontario, showing the cost of producing the different varieties of grain per acre; and I find that, in 1882, when we take the whole cost and the amount of production, there was a surplus of $2,946,104 upon fall wheat, spring wheat, barley, oats and pease, the principal crops that the farmer raises in the Province of Ontario, and that gave a nice little surplus to each farmer—counting 100 acres to each farm-of $15 over the cost of production; but when we take the average as given in the Bureau of Industry from 1882 to 1889, what do we find? We find that in fall wheat, costing $19.43 peracrefor producing and marketing, there was a loss per acre of $2.23 during the whole eight years from 1882 to 1889. We find that the total loss in fall wheat was $2,081,061. How long, I ask, will a farmer continue to farm if it costs him more to raise his crop annually than what it is worth in the market? In spring wheat, we find it costs $15.50 to produce an acre of wheat, and that there was a loss of $1.64 per acre. We find that in fall wheat each farmer from the Province of Ontario, supposing them all to have equal amounts of cleared landthat is, on an average, 51 acres to the hundred-would lose $9.66 on fall wheat and $4.07 per acre on spring wheat. Then, with regard to barley, we find that the cost of producing an acre amounts to $14.83, and that there was 31 cents of a loss in producing barley. That is the crop which has come nearest, during that eight years, to paying the farmers; it is a crop that has been largely raised in the Province of Ontario, and one of which, I am afraid, the present condition of things will deprive the farmers of the benefit in the future. The farmers only lost on barley $1.38 on each farm, taking it as spread all These are statements sent in by the farmers themselves, Conservatives and Reformers, from all these returns. In oats we lost $2.30 per acre, or $3,710,878, or $17.41 on each hundred acres of land. In pease, the cost is $15.47 per acre, and we lost $2.91 per acre on pease, or $1.875,726, or $8.78 We find, when those are added up, that the annual loss upon fall wheat, spring wheat, barley, oats and pease, during the years 1882 to 1889, is $8,839,951. We find, then, that for eight years the total loss to the farmers of the Province of Ontario in growing these grains was $70,719,608. Is it possible, when such a condition of things exists, that the farmers of that province can be in as good a position as that in which they stood in 1878, when the National Policy was imposed? Is it possible they can be in the same condition to either buy or sell? When hon, gentlemen opposite tell us that the National Policy has nothing to do with this, I answer that it has not given us the market we were promised. I claim it has not even enabled the Canadian farmer to hold his own market in his own province in the manner he did before the National Policy was imposed. Now, I come to the prices of grain, and we have been told that the price of grain is higher to-day in Canada, when compared with the United States, than at the time the National Policy was imposed. I go back, and I take a record which I think hon, gentlemen will not dispute. It was quoted yesterday, and I have no reason to dispute the statements made. Here I have statements with reference to the prices of fall and spring wheat, dated January 10, May 10, September 10, and December 10, 1877. This book is a Report of a Select Committee appointed by the House of Commons to enquire into the operations of the tariff on the agricultural interests of the Dominion of Canada. I find there that wheat was $1.38 in Canada in 1877, while I have another statement showing that it was only $1.16 in the United States. The same thing is shown in the year 1878. I have another book here showing the prices of grain in Canada and the United States. This is the Statistical Record for 1886, and to that I will appeal to show that we have not been able to hold the market in our own country in the same manner as we did before the National Policy was adopted. In the year 1881 wheat in Montreal was $1.33, while it was $1.11 in the United States, a difference of 22 cents per bushel in favour of Canada. In 1882 it was $1.30 in Montreal and $1.18 in the United States, a difference of 12 cents. In 1883 it was $1.14 in Montreal and $1.12 in the United States. Coming down to 1886, we find that wheat was 85 cents a bushel in Montreal and 87 cents in the United States. Here is a fall of 48 cents per bushel in Canada during the time that there was only a fall of 24 cents in the United States, and that is a document placed in our hands by the Minister of Agriculture. When I come to the year 1889 I find that wheat was 89 cents a bushel in New York while it was 88 cents in Canada. The last three years I have referred to in regard to Canada, 1887, 1888 and 1889, I have taken from the report of the Bureau of Industries, as I could not find the price of Canadian wheat in our records. There is a peculiar matter to be remarked in reference to the year 1888. In that 'year wheat was 85 cents in the United States and $1.02 in Canada, showing that there were local causes affecting the market. The reason was, that in 1888 we did not raise a sufficiency of wheat for our own purposes. over the province, and my calculation is based on We bought about 130,000 bushels of wheat in that year, and that was the cause of the price of wheat when that document is closely examined it proves going up above the price in the United States. From the Empire of 5th December, 1890, I find not been able to hold his own market against the that the price of wheat in Toronto was 87 cents, when in Buffalo it was 97 cents; instead of our wheat being 10 or 20 cents higher in the United States than it was in Toronto. Another statement of the arguments advanced by hon, gentlemen I have from the Port Hope Guide, that fall wheat on poposite to show that our markets are more closely 30th April last was worth $1.20 to $1.22 in Rochester, when in Toronto it was only worth $1.12 to $1.13. Here was wheat 8 or 9 cents higher in the United States than in Canada; and yet hon, gentlemen will tell us that Canada has been able to keep her own in the markets of the world in regard to wheat. This shows that wheat has fallen over 20 cents a bushel in Canada more than it has in the United States since the National Policy was imposed. We had a market there for years, and I have shown that we made over $2,400,000 in 1878 by selling grain that we had bought in the United States and had sent out again. In regard to oats, I go back to the same record, and I find that in 1877 oats in Toronto were at 43 cents, while in Chicago they were 313 cents, or 114 cents higher in Toronto than in Chicago. In 1881 they were 393 cents in Chicago and 374 cents in Toronto, so that they were nearly of an equal price. When we calculate the difference between the price of oats in Canada and in the United States we must always remember that a bushel of oats in Canada is 34 pounds and a bushel of oats in the United States is 32 pounds. difference was, therefore, 111 cents in 1877 in favour of Toronto, and, without allowing for the difference in weight, only 2 cents in 1881, showing that within two years after the National Policy was in operation we had lost something like 8 cents a bushel on oats. Let us compare the article of rye. The argument has always gone forth that if we were to allow corn to come in free from the United States it would destroy our market for coarse grains. We find that over 4,000,000 bushels of corn were imported in 1877, and over 3,000,000 bushels in 1878, and yet our oats were 11 cents higher in Canada than they were in Chicago, with free corn coming into this country, which hon. gentlemen tell us would destroy the market for our coarse grains. In 1877 rye in Toronto was 70 cents and in Chicago 621 cents; a difference of 74 cents in favour of Toronto. In 1881 rye in Toronto was 89 cents, while in Chicago it was 913 cents, or a difference of 23 cents in favour of Chicago, when there had been a difference in favour of Toronto of 73 cents before the introduction of the National Policy. Now, we will take barley. In 1877, in Toronto, barley was bringing 733 cents, in Chicago, at the same, time it was 5815, a difference of 15 cents per bushel between those two cities. But when we come to 1881 we find that barley in Toronto was selling at 95 cents, and in Chicago it was selling at $1.09. On June 1, in 1877, there was a difference of 15 cents in favour of Toronto, but in 1881 there was a difference of 18 cents in favour of Chicago, proving conclusively that the National Policy has not assisted the Canadian farmer to hold his own market among the nations of the world. These are arguments that cannot be set aside. I find, then, in a document that was published to prove to the farmers of Canada that the National Policy had been favour-Mr. McMillan.

the contrary-it proves that the Canadian farmer has United States, and I hold that the United States is the only country with which we can make a fair comparison. I have been astonished to hear some assimilated at the present time to the markets of Great Britain at Liverpool than they were at the time the National Policy was established. Why, Sir, do hon, gentlemen take credit to the National Policy for that? Surely they do not mean to tell us that it is the National Policy that has caused our markets to come so very close to the markets of the old world. I have a statement here taken from the Contemporary Review of April, 1888, which shows that in the year 1880 it cost 9d. to send a bushel of grain from New York to Liverpool, whereas in 1886 that same bushel of grain could be carried for a penny; yet hon, gentlemen opposite would lead us to believe that the National Policy had brought about this change. We find that flour, per ton, was carried in 1880 for 25s., whereas in 1886 it was carried for 7s. 6d. find that cheese was carried for 50s, a ton in 1880. and for 15s. in 1886; we find that bacon and lard were carried for 45s. in 1880, and now they are carried for 7s. 6d. Now, there is another argument that I have heard used, and it is this: They tell us how much cheaper we can get our agricultural implements now; they tell us that we get them cheaper now than ever before in the history of the world. But do hon, gentlemen opposite attempt to make the intelligent members of the House of Commons believe that it is all on account of the National Policy? Why, Sir, let me tell them that in 1874 the cost of producing a ton of steel in Great Britain was £12 ls. ld., and when we come to 1887, a ton of steel could be produced for £4, yet hon, gentlemen take credit to the National Policy for bringing about this great change. Then we have been told about the price of cotton goods. Two hon, members have told us that never before could we get goods so cheap as at the present time. Is it to be wondered at that these goods are cheaper in Canada now than at the time the National Policy was imposed? But I want to ask those hon, gentlemen if goods are as cheap now as they would be under a tariff of 174 per cent. Sir, there is not a single hon, gentleman on that side of the House who will have the assurance to stand up and tell me that our goods are just as cheap as they would be if we had the tariff that existed in 1878. Then, next, we were told how cheap cotton goods are now. The cotton, after it has been cleaned, is spun into threads by rotatory spindles; they used to be worked by manual labour, one man to each spindle, but now one man can work machines carrying two or three thousand spindles. In 1874 those spindles made 4,000 revolutions in a minute, but in 1886 they ran up to 10,000 revolutions per minute. Why, Sir, under the old system one man had to attend every loom, and they could only produce 42 to 48 yards per day; but under the new system one individual can produce 1,500 yards per day. In the last fifteen years, while the population of this globe has increased 15 per cent., the production of cotton goods has increased 86 per cent. able to the agricultural interests, and I hold that hon. gentlemen take the credit of that to the National Policy also? Will they tell us that it is the National Policy that has brought about all these changes? Will they tell us that it is the National Policy that has cheapened the price of cotton goods and woollen goods, when we see that one man can produce 1,500 yards now, while under the old system he could only produce 42? Why, Sir, I have been astonished at hearing such talk. I have been astonished that hon, gentlemen should dare to produce such arguments before the House of Commons of Canada arguments before the House of Commons of Canada. They are upon the horns of a dilemma; they must either confess to gross ignorance of the question they are discussing, or dishonesty with respect to the results. Now, Sir, we have heard a little with respect to the consumption of wheat. We have heard it stated, and I believe correctly stated, that we consume 27,000,000 bushels of wheat in Canada annually. I think that quantity, when made into flour, will give us 7,999,670 barrels of flour. when he told us that the last 25 cents additional duty had given the home market to the millers of the Dominion of Canada he did not tell us with what effect; he did not tell us that it was at the cost of an additional 25 cents a barrel, and he did not tell us what the millers themselves have said in respect to this. When the millers met in association before the new duty was imposed, the more honest gentlemen belonging to that occupationand I am happy to say that there were honest gentlemen attending that association, and many of them—they said that if the Government would reduce the duty upon wheat and reduce the duty upon flour they would be perfectly able to compete with the United States, or any other nation on the face of the earth. They stated that one reason why the milling industry was depressed was that far too much money had been invested, that they could produce 18,000,000 barrels of flour annually in their mills, while the consumption was only 7,000,000, and they wanted the Government to reduce the duty on flour and wheat both; but the Government chose to increase the duty upon flour, and with what effect? I believe that hon, gentlemen from the lower provinces are beginning to find, even on the other side of the House, that they have been misled by this feature of the tariff. They say, some of them, on the floor of the House, that it was in the interest of the farmers of Ontario. As a farmer of Ontario, I say it has most certainly injured us; it has placed a duty upon the wheat that we raise and upon the flour that is placed upon our table; so that they can no longer say that we have a free table. taking the wheat of our own production, if we calculate the duty upon it we find it would give $5,999,761, provided all the wheat grown in Canada was ground in our own mills. But the farmers in some parts of Canada have found milling to be such a grievance that I have seen one little mill put up by farmers themselves, who formed themselves into a joint stock company and built a mill to grind their own grain, and thus not be called upon to pay such a large sum for milling. I hold that even the millers have been injured by the National Policy. In that industry large amounts of money were invested, even larger sums than the business would appear to warrant; but it is only one of farmer with 100 acres will pay $2.40 on binding twine; the businesses that have been injured. I am happy on flour, 6 barrels with a duty of 75 cents per barrel, to say that the statements I made with respect $4.50; barbed wire, 40 rods of fence. $4.93, using to the loss that the Ontario farmer meets in 6 strands of wire, the prices in the United States raising grain were confirmed by a communication that appeared in the Empire a short time ago, which shows that the loss is even more than I stated, I taking the years 1882 to 1889 and the correspondent taking the period from 1885 to 1889. As hon, gentlemen opposite are always willing to credit the Empire, I trust they will consider my statement was under and not over the mark. I hold that the duties we have had to pay have injured the farmer to a very great extent. I gave a statement last year of the duty paid on a set of implements used by every farmer. That statement was criticized yesterday, when it was stated that farm implements coming into Canada paid no duty. It was stated that binders were sold for export from the United States for $70, whereas from $110 to $120 was charged to farmers in the United States. I find from the Trade and Navigation Returns that harvesters costing $69 coming into Canada were estimated at $109. Is it correct that they sell for export cheaper than they sell to the farmers, and is it true that the Minister of Customs has instructed his officials to collect duty on a value of $100 when the invoice shows a value of only $70? If so, so much extra duty is taken out of the pockets of the farmers of Ontario. This goes further to prove that the statement I made was a correct one. I hold that the owner of every farm in Ontario lost $34 a year, or in eight years some $270; and if you consider that a farmer will be doing seventy acres of clearing during the eight years, he will lose $500 on each 100 acres of land. Truly the farmer is not in a prosperous condition. are told by hon. gentlemen opposite that we cannot show a statute to benefit the farmers that was placed on the Statute-book during the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mac-But we do not ask the Government to continue to place Acts on the Statute-book. All we ask is fair-play and the removal of legislation that is injurious to the farmers, and although we cannot show that the present Government have benefited them, we can show that the Government have adopted legislation that has injured them. During Mr. Mackenzie's occupancy of office a carefully prepared clause was passed providing that all agricultural implements required in this country for the encouragement of agriculture could be brought in free of duty through agricultural some This Government placed a duty on agritural implements, and they have raised it to 35 per cent., which involved a payment by the average farmer of a duty of $32 annually. A full set of implements costs $1,000, and the duty, at 35 per cent., is over $300. These implements will not serve their purpose more than 10 years, and thereforethe tax on the farmer is equal to $32 per year. And there is binding twine. If the Government of the hon. member for East York had remained in power I feel confident we would never have had this grievance. No less than 8,000,000 pounds of binding twine will be used in Canada during the coming harvest, and from quotations obtained from the other side the difference in cost is between 3 and 4 cents per pound; and while $1,200 will go into the treasury, from $240,000 to $250,000 will go into the pockets of the manufacturers and combines. Each being $3.30, as compared with $4.86 in Canada. Coal oil is an article which farmers largely use. The average quantity estimated to be consumed by each family is placed at 15 gallons, and as gas and electric lighting is taking the place of oil in cities and towns, a farmer's family must consume more than 15 gallons, on which a duty of $2.50 is paid. The duty on furniture will amount yearly to $5. If the Government had thrownoff these duties—that on agricultural implements, realizing $48,000; that on binding twine only $1,200, that on furniture $340,000, that on coal oil $200,000 or $300,000—the Government would have enabled the farmers to have held their own, notwithstanding the loss they have sustaind in the price of grain, because they would have saved to each farmer $51.33, while the loss on account of the reduction in the value of grain was only $34. have been told by hon, gentlemen opposite a great deal about clothing, wool and other articles. has been stated that clothing is higher in the United States than it is in Canada, and that on woollen goods the National Policy does not compel the farmers to pay higher prices than if that policy did not exist. I was astonished to hear such a statement. Do not hon, gentlemen remember that last session the duty on coarse woollen goods was advanced from 5 cents per pound and 20 per cent. to 10 cents per pound and 20 per cent., and I have reliable information from a merchant who imports goods from the old country and purchases goods here that it has had the effect of raising woollen goods, both of Canadian and English manufacture, from 5 to 10 per cent. And yet hon, gentlemen opposite will tell us that we pay no revenue; we grant that we pay no revenue on goods of Canadian manufacture, but it is all the more grievous that large amounts of money are taken out of our pockets, and put into the pockets of manufacturers, for which we derive no benefit. Let me say, Sir, on the matter of wool, that there is a double injustice done to the farmer in the tax on woollen goods, and the state of the tariff on the wool which they sell. When I look at the Trade and Navigation Returns I find that we import over 8,000,000 lbs. of wool into Canada; over 3,500,000 lbs. come from the United States; over 3.000,000 come from Great Britain, so much from Germany, so much from France, and so much from Cape Colony, and it all comes in duty free-notwithstanding the fact that the Government have always said that if we cannot have reciprocity in trade we will have reciprocity in tariff. Why do they allow wool to come from foreign countries to displace the wool grown by the farmers of Canada to such an extent that our Canadian wool has to find a foreign market. That wool to-day going into the United States has to pay a duty of 11 and 12 cents per pound, while we have to pay 30 and 40 and 50 per cent. duty on the coarse woollen clothing which we, the farmers, wear. That is a gross injustice, and one which I hope the Minister of Customs will take into his consideration. It is an injustice that the farmers of Canada are beginning to feel keenly; and if I do not mistake the drift of their opinions, if they can get another opportunity, and if these evils are not redressed, the Government will hear from the farmers of the Province of Ontario. Now, Sir, in clothing every family uses $90 worth a year, and I have gone to the Bureau of Statistics again to heavily on them, because a horse worth under $100 Mr. McMillan.

get the average value of clothing used by each individual, and I find it to be $15 a year. upon $90 worth of clothing will be $33.34, which the farmer has to pay; upon groceries he annually pays $3.20 duty; upon hardware $4.50 duty, and upon earthenware $2.50. The farmer therefore has to pay $102 a year on the articles I have enumerated, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the farmers are not injured by the duty they pay upon these things. Now, let us see what the duty is on that which the farmer sells, under the Mc-Kiniey Bill. I will give a statement of what I believe the average farmer of the Province of Ontario with a fairly good clearance sells yearly, and then we will balance the books and see how the account stands. I will first for a moment refer to the condition of the horse trade in Canada. We have been told by gentlemen on the other side of the House that this is not a country for raising horses, and that the day is fast approaching when horses from Canada would not find a market in the United States. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, from my own experience and my own knowledge of breeding horses in Canada, and from the knowledge of what kind of horses they breed in the United States, that the day will never come when our best horses in Canada will not find a market there, and for the simple reason that Ontario is one of the best-fitted countries on the face of the globe for raising horses. We have a limestone soil, we grow oats to feed our horses, we build them up with plenty of bone and muscular system, and Canadian horses will always find a higher price in the States than horses bred on the western prairies. Our Canadian horses have more endurance than horses bred in the United States, and I heard an American horse buyer say, who was a great lover of the United States, and who believed everything that existed there was noble and good, that in taking a team of horses from the Province of Ontario worth $400 into the United States on the seaboard, and selling them there in competition with a team of equal appearance from the Western States, that the team from Canada would always command $50 more than the team from the Western States. Now, Sir, the whole evil about the duty on horses has not yet been told in this House. It is true that the duty is increased on horses, but it is true also that a very large number of horses that went into the United States for breeding purposes before the McKinley Bill was passed are prevented from going in now, and the duty has to be paid on them. There was a buyer from the United States who bought a carload of horses in Canada and took them down to Windsor. The duty was imposed, and he found the duty so grievous that he took the horses back, and paid 30 per cent. to the people he bought them from to take them from him again, rather than he would take them across to the United States and pay the duty. We are told that while the duty at the present time means $30 on every horse valued under $100, it does not make a great deal of difference on the horses from $120 to $149 value; but; when you go over $149 there is a great difference. The horse that is bought at $149 pays $30 duty, but the horse that is bought at $150 pays $45 duty, and that is 30 per cent. increase upon a horse worth $150. When we come to the poorer class of horses the duty bears very has to pay the same amount of duty as a horse worth $149; the injury is doubled, so far as that is concerned, and the farmers of Ontario are greatly injured by this duty. Now, as a rule, each farmer in Ontario will sell one horse in a year on which the duty is $30; he will sell ten lambs—and, let me say, I was pleased to hear the gentleman who preceded me state that our lambs would always find a market in the United States; but he forgot to tell us that if the 75 cents duty was taken off our pork. farmers would get that increased price for our lambs in the United States market. Well, each farmer sells ten lambs, on which the duty is $7.50. Now, Sir, I hold that Canada at the present time is the very best spot in America for breeding animals of all descriptions for export to the United States. As Mr. Wells, the great authority on these subjects, said: "Canada is the home of the long-wooled sheep; it is there that our short-horned and thoroughbred cattle are brought to the greatest perfection, and to Canada the Americans turn their attention when they want to improve their own flocks." Therefore, a closer intercourse between the two countries would be most beneficial and profitable to Canada in the matter of raising stock. Hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken about beef, but they know nothing about it. The hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) told us that the animals exported from Canada had an advantage of $12 and $15 per head in the English market over those exported from Boston and New York. I was down in Montreal on Tuesday last. I have a son who had been in the old country with cattle, and I instructed him before he left England to go and see the American cattle sold, and to pay strict attention and to give me a correct statement of the difference in price between the American and Canadian cattle on the English market. He did so, and he told me that ten shillings was the very highest he had ever seen any of our Canadian animals sell for over the American cattle, and that in a great many instances there was not more than five shillings a head difference. Now, Sir, to such an extent has this been the case that people who have paid any attention to the public press will remember that last spring a syndicate of American buyers came over here, and within a few days bought 7,000 or 8,000 fat cattle, mostly in Ontario. What have been the facts with respect to these cattle? 'A great many of them have been taken from Ontario to Boston, and shipped from Boston to Liverpool, London and Glasgow, for the reason that the exporters find that the cheaper freight they get for the cattle from Boston more than pays them for the disadvantage of their cattle having to be slaughtered within ten days of arrival at the port of debarkation. I hope hon, gentlemen will pay attention to such statements as this, and remember them in the future. The hon. gentleman who preceded me stated that our beef trade would be injured if we had unrestricted reciprocity. I speak advisedly when I say that no greater blessing could befall the farmers of Ontario than unrestricted reciprocity. The Americans with their cheap corn can raise beef 1 cent per pound cheaper than we can, and pork at from 1 cent to 11 cents per pound cheaper than we can; and if any hon, gentleman doubts my statement I would refer him to the statement made by Professor Robertson before the Committee on Agriculture the other day, in regard to his experiments in fattening he will have to pay a duty of $15. Let him sell 30

hogs. I found that the pork he spoke about was produced by the Americans at a cost of I cent per pound cheaper than we could produce it with either pease or barley. And I hold that we could compete with the Americans successfully in raising either pork or beef provided we got their cheap corn. I have a statement from Mr. John White, of Mitchell, a large farmer, who fattens both cattle and hogs and converts them into beef and He states that he fed three or four thousand hogs during the past year, and that to do so he paid a duty on corn to the tune of $1,000. Will any hon, gentleman tell me that that $1,000 would not have gone into his pocket if he had not been obliged to pay it in duty on corn? will anyone tell me that he would not be able to compete at much greater advantage with the Americans in the sale of pork if he had not that duty to pay? If hon. gentlemen would answer such questions as these among the farmers of Ontario they would do a great deal to satisfy them; but I would not envy their feelings if they attended two or three meetings of the farmers in western Ontario and attempted to teach them some of the doctrines they set forth in this House. Now, every farmer would send on the average to the United States ten lambs, on which he would pay a duty of $7.50. He would sell on the average 150 bushels of barley, on which he would pay a duty of $45. He would send 100 bushels of wheat, on which he would pay $25 of duty. Now, I believe that a very large quantity of our wheat would go to the United States if we had unrestricted reciprocity. In 1888, 777,698 bushels of our wheat, most of it from the Province of Ontario, went to the United States, although 20 cents a bushel was paid on it. Hon. gentlemen opposite may ask me how that was. I will tell them how; and I have a statement in my possession from a correspondent in the North-West, which shows that even Manitoba would be benefited in a few years to the extent of millions of dollars if we had a free market for wheat in the United States. I believe that every bushel of the surplus wheat of Ontario would go to the United States for seed, and I believe that large quantities of our oats would go there for the same purpose. We know that our oats are stronger, and at least two pounds to the bushel heavier than theirs. The United States would be greatly benefited by having our wheat free, and we would be greatly benefited by having their corn free; and yet we are told that the United States is not our proper market. Every farmer would sell to the United States an average of 50 bushels of oats, on which he would pay a duty of $7:50. He would send 50 bushels of pease on which he would pay a duty of $10. A very important industry in Canada has been ruined by the McKinley Bill—that is, the export of split pease to the United States. We have been told that if American corn came into Canada free it would destroy our market for pease. Thompson, an oatmeal miller in Mitchell, states that if corn came in free it would not injure the pea market of Canada, because England would take all our surplus peaes, provided we produced a better quality. Let every farmer sell 5 tons of hay, and he will have to pay a duty of $20. Let him sell 60 pounds of wool, and he will have to pay a duty of $6.60. Let him sell 300 dozen of eggs, and pounds of poultry, and he will have to pay a duty Let each farmer sell 60 bushels of potatoes, and the duty will be $15. There is $158 which each farmer would pay in duty on these articles going into the United States under the present tariff. And when we consider the increased prices which he has to pay for the goods he buys as well as the reduced prices he gets for what he sells, there is a difference to him, according to that calculation, of $260; but let us put it at one-half of that—$130. That much kept in the pockets of the farmers of the Province of Ontario would enable them to turn the tide of adversity, and once more place themselves upon a solid foundation. But I have not yet told all the evils which the tariff inflicts upon the farmers. Let a farmer go to build a common house and it will cost him $81 for hardware, upon which he will pay $16 of duty. Let him build anything like a bank barn and it will cost him $52 for hardware, on which he will have to pay $10 of duty. If he wishes to put up a comfortable house, with a wash-room, bath-room and all modern improvements, such as our dwellings of late years have, he will have to pay a much larger amount of duty. Then a kit of tools will cost at least $20, on which he will have to pay $5 of duty; so that he will have to pay from $30 to $50 duty on a house, a barn and a kit of tools. There are many other articles I could enumerate in regard to which the tariff bears heavily upon the farmers. The farmers of Ontario begin to feel the effect of the National Policy to such an extent that they are enquiring on all hands how they are to improve their condition. Now, I want to make a short statement in regard to the exports of Canada. Every hon, gentleman in discussing our exports to England and the United States should bear in mind that there is a duty of something like 18 or 19 per cent. on all goods going to the United States, while the goods we send to Britain go there free of duty. I was told by a large cheese dealer that if it were not for the duty of 4 cents a pound which Canadians had to pay in order to send cheese to the United States large quantities of our cheese would be sold there, because they admit that it is superior to theirs. One of our butter dealers who was running three creameries went to New York two years ago and sold butter there at 1 cent a pound less than he could get for it in Canada. after paying a duty of 4 cents a pound on that article. A great deal of our butter would go there also if it were not for the duty. Now, our total exports in 1890 was $82,335,514. To Great Britain we sent $41,499,149, and to the United States $32,291,207. In animals and their produce, the export was $25,106,995. To Britain we sent $18,578,722, and to the United States $5,996,474. But remember, Sir, that upon all our animals there was a duty of 20 per cent., and that the United States, in days gone by, have taken a very large number of animals from Canada. Of agricultural produce we exported to the value of $11,908,000, of which Great Britain took $3,666,826 and the United States $7,519,253, just nearly double the amount that England took, although the Americans themselves raised products of the same decription to an enormous extent. In fact, of our agricultural produce two-thirds were taken by the Americans, although they had to pay, a duty of 17 or 18 per cent. But let me state that of our entire export of animals and their produce, the West of animals and their produce, the West selve into an association and made an arrangement Indies, of which we have heard so much, took with the other companies to take the salt at the Mr. McMillan.

$23,132 worth, and other countries took $531,000 worth, out of the total $25,000,000, showing that Great Britain and the United States are the only markets to which we can pay much attention after all. In agricultural produce the West Indies took $229.822 worth, and all other countries $727,921 worth, of a total of $11,000,000 worth. Now, when we come to Ontario we find that Province exported to the extent of $25,128,494, of which Great Britain took $4,621,689 and the United States $20,007,423. In animals and their produce, Ontario exported $6,780,137, of which Great Britain took $3,033,594 and the United States $3,745,025. In agricultural produce she exported $7,098,324, of which Great Britain took $915,818 worth and the United States $6,158,389 worth. The West Indies took of animals and their produce $442 worth, and of agricultural products $684 worth. Now, let me just examine a statement I have here, by which I find that from the Province of Ontario the West Indies took $522 worth of agricultural produce and $242 worth of animals and their produce, and Japan and China took $27 of agricultural products from that Province and not one cent's worth of animals and their produce. Now, when we take these facts into consideration, what nonsense it is for the hon. Minister of Justice, and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to talk about their finding markets in these countries for our exports. When they went down to Halifax they said that the policy of the Government was to build railways and canals and other public works and to find And where were these markets to be markets. found? They were to be found in Australia, which does not take one cent's worth of agricultural produce from us, and in China and Japan, which only take $27 worth, and not one cent's worth of animals and their produce. These are the markets these hon, gentlemen direct our farmers to in lieu of the United States, and then tell us that the markets of the United States are not our natural markets. Why, the facts I have just shown, that we send from Ontario $6,159,389 worth of agricultural products and only $915,000 into the free markets of Great Britain, are stronger than any argument any hon, gentleman opposite can bring to show that the United States are not our natural market. Sir, if the duties were removed the Americans would take all the produce we have. What does it matter to us what they do with our products, so long as they come in and buy, and are willing to give us better prices than we can get anywhere else. I have a few arguments yet remaining. One of them is with respect to salt. The hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) said that my hon. friend from East Huron (Mr. McDonald) made the statement that we manufactured 800,000 barrels of salt. I cannot think my hon, friend could have made such a statement, because that is the whole consumption of salt in the Dominion. My hon, friend stated, on the contrary, that that was the total amount consumed in Canada, but that the amount produced was in the neighbourhood of 250,000 barrels. Our hon, friends have stated that one man controls the whole salt industry of this Dominion. That shows again that they were talking of something they knew nothing about. There was a company formed, composed of Dr. Coleman & Sons., of Seaforth, Ransford Bros., of Clinton, and R. Wrightmeyer, of Kincardine, who formed themselling price. It was stated also by the hon, member for West York that it paid well to manufacture salt at 55 cents par barrel. I have not lived in the County of Huron for forty-eight years without knowing something about the condition of that I have seen the first well started there, and have witnessed the development of that interest since; and I state here, from my own knowledge, that the salt industry, at the time this combination was formed, was tottering and going to the wall, and they had to that he knew of to the old country this spring, form a combination in order to preserve their own property, because it did not pay to make salt at that price. One reason why it did not pay was the duty on the coal they used, and besides they had to pay double the freight the Americans do. If our Government wish to do justice to the salt industry, as I hope they do, if they want to see the salt industry flourish and placed upon a solid basis, so as to compete with the salt imported from other countries, they should give free coal and a rebate upon the plates used for the pans, and the rivets and bolts used in putting the pans together, and the tubing used to convey the brine to the tanks and from the tanks to the boiling pans. Our salt manufacturers would then be willing to compete with any country in the world, and could afford to sell their salt at 60 cents per barrel and have a better living profit than they have to-day. I hold that, in the present readjustment of the tariff, the salt industry has not received the consideration it ought to receive. The Government ought to have swept away the duty altogether upon the raw material, so as to place that industry upon a solid basis. I hold that the salt industry requires fair-play for more than one reason. There are some 550,000 barrels of salt that come into Canada free of duty-so much from England, so much from France, and even so much from the United States. Our salt manufacturers have their field confined within very narrow limits. They have not the whole market of Canada because of this salt that comes in free. I was opposed to their raising the price to $1.25 a barrel, and I told one of them that if they had kept the price at $1 a barrel no one would have said anything against it; but they did too much. There is no doubt that during the time the duty was in existence, they made money. They made $60,000 or $70,000 a year, which they put into their pockets, out of the hard earnings of the farmers of Canada, while the combine was in existence, and the Government did right to put an end to the combine; but they should do the same with all the combines. Why do they single out one combine and allow all the rest to go on and prey upon the farmers, as well as the other members of the community? Then we have heard a great deal in regard to eggs. I have in my pocket invoices from New York and from London, England. Eggs were shipped to the old country in the month of May last year, before the McKinley tariff came into operation, and others were shipped to New York. Perhaps those that were shipped to New York were a little cleaner, but they were large and small. Those that were sent to London were all picked. There were 11,610 dozen eggs sent to New York. The total cost of sending them there was $101.35, not quite I cent per dozen. The shippers had their returns from New York twentythree days earlier than they had on the eggs shipped Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was within the

to London. The latter amounted to 10,550 dozen, and the cost upon them was £64 12s.1d., or a little under 3 cents a dozen, so that the eggs that went to London cost 2 cents a dozen more to put upon the market there than the eggs that went to New York, and the return from the eggs that went to London was 10°28 cents per dozen, while on those that went to New York it was 14°26 cents, just a fraction under 4 cents a dozen difference. The same gentleman, Mr. Wilson, told me of two shipments and the one netted a little over 3 cents, and the other a little over 11 cents a dozen. He has another shipment there now, and I sent to ask him about the result. He telegraphed me in reply that he could not tell the exact result, but he did not expect to make as well as to New York. He sent two shipments to New York. These were placed on board at Seaforth, and $1,200 of duty paid, and he netted upon one shipment 12 cents and on the other 12½ cents. This gentleman has attempted to place eggs on the English market many times in the last few years, and he has never found the English market profitable. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that there is a market for our eggs in England, and Mr. Wilson will agree with them that there is a market; but it is not a paying market, it is not a market where our eggs will pay as well as they do in New York. Is it to be supposed that eggs going to London or any other port in England will be in the same condition as they are when they are put on board in Montreal, and yet it takes as long to get them to Montreal as to New York or Boston. Further, Mr. Wilson had to place refrigerators on the vessel at his own cost. They had not that accommodation, though: if they found it a paying trade they might find it worth their while to provide that accommodation. Then, as to coal oil. A gentleman who is well acquainted with that trade says:

"This American oil is sold wholesale to the retailers at 23 cents and by them to the consumer at 30 cents, and I find that Canadian Peerless is sold at 19 cents, another quality at 15 cents, and the cheapest of all at 12 cts. per gallon by the wholesale, and to the consumer at 25 cents. 19 cents and 15 cents per gallon. The plain fact remains that the best water-white American oil could be sold here for 12½ cents wholesale and, say, 15 cents retail; but by the enhanced cost caused by the tariff it is sold wholesale for 23 cents and retail for 30 cents per gallon." cents and retail for 30 cents per gallon.

I say that also in the article of coal oil we suffer a large amount of injury. There is over a million dollars paid on coal oil, and $600,000 of that goes to the manufacturers. There is a duty paid upon our implements, and if it were not for the increased duty placed on iron and on implements we would be able to get them at something like the cost price at which they are sent out by the American manufacturers, because it is certain that they will not send to Canada these articles at less than the cost of production. As a Canadian farmer, I have no doubt that we can compete with the Americans or with any other country on the face of the earth, and when the hon gentleman who spoke before me gave a statement in reference to the condition of the English farmer he described the condition of the Canadian farmer as plainly as language could describe it. Any one who says the Canadian farmer is not at the present time in straitened circumstances talks of what he knows nothing about. I say that my hon. friend from South mark when he said that Canadian farm lands had on the same day, wheat was selling for 97 cents a depreciated 27 or 28 per cent. The decrease in value bushel, is more than that. I know of a farm which was sold not long ago, with a brick house on it and bushels good outbuildings, for $4,150, and it was bought a would be few years ago with nothing but a log shanty and a frame barn on it for $5,000, and the improvements cost at least $1,500. I know another farm that was bought for $10,000 ten years ago, and was sold two years ago for $7,500. I could enumerate a great many more, but let that suffice. I think I have proven that the Canadian farmer has not received the same price for his products in the markets of the world, when compared with the prices received by the American farmer, that he did before the National Policy was imposed. I think, also, that I have proven that he has lost in what he has to sell to a greater degree. I hold that unrestricted reciprocity is the only way that the farmers of Ontario can be benefited. With the other provinces I cannot say that I am acquainted; but I do know this, that nature has placed us in a position that we can supply the Eastern States with all the agricultural produce they require much more cheaply and much more easily than even the Western States. We are people belonging to the same race, we are people of the same language, our laws are founded upon the same basis, and I hold that it is to our interest, while retaining our nationality, to have the closest trade relations and the most friendly relations with that country we possibly can. I believe all the talk of our friends opposite about going to Washington, and about disloyalty, is complete humbug, and nothing else. Hon, gentlemen opposite say that it was at the instance of Secretary Blaine that negotiations were opened at Washington last year, but we have heard Mr. Blaine declare emphatically that it was the British Minister who first introduced to him the subject of a conference at Washington; and if this Government has only put this before the people as a red herring they will find they have gone too far, and the people will find that they have been humbugged long enough. They tell us that when the National Policy was imposed it was for the purpose of giving us a market for all our coarse grains, all our beef, all our mutton and other produce; yet we find the Government are telling us now they will have to seek out markets in foreign countries at the very antipodes of Canada, when we have a market close at hand. I believe the statement is correct that the home market is the best market we can get, and when we cannot get a home market the next best market we can find is to step across the imaginary line. A gentleman who spoke last night gave away the whole argument when he said that certain border constituencies along the frontier had changed their political complexion in the last election because they were well acquainted with the benefits of the market of the United States, and that shows that the people no longer believe in the tales told them by the Government and their supporters. Now, I want to give another statement that I have taken from the Empire newspaper, and one taken from the Port Hope Guide, respecting the price of grain at certain periods. I find, according to the Empire, that on the 5th of last December—and that was one of the days that my hon. friend from North York has mentioned as being a good day—that in Toronto wheat was selling at 87 cents a bushel, whereas in Buffalo, markets that is all we want.

Mr. McMillan.

We will take a 10-acre field of wheat. Last year an acre yielded, on an average, 19 bushels: that would be 190 bushels that the farmer would be able to take to the Toronto market, and he would sell that for $165. But the Buffalo farmer, taking the same quantity of wheat to market, would get for it 97 cents, or $190—he would have $19 more than the Canadian farmer for his 10-acre field of fall wheat. Now, take barley. I find that barley in Toronto on the same day was 53 cents a bushel, and in Buffalo it was 90 cents. Now, let the Toronto farmer sell the produce of a 10-acre field, 22 bushels per acre: that would give him 220 bushels, which would yield him $116; but the Buffalo farmer, selling the same number of bushels, would get $198, or $82 more than the Canadian farmer. Let me take oats, and I find that in Toronto on that day oats were selling for 39 cents and in Buffalo they were selling for 49 cents. The average crop of oats was 28 bushels per acre; this would give each farmer 280 bushels of oats. The Canadian farmer would get for his oats $109.20, while the Buffalo farmer would get $137.20, or $28 more than the Canadian farmer. On these three crops of wheat, barley and oats the Buffalo farmer would carry home in his pocket $128.40 more than the Toronto farmer, both having cropped the same number of That was the effect of the McKinley tariff last fall on the farmers of Ontario, and I hold that every farmer who sold barley last fall lost 15 cents a bushel on account of that Bill. Mr. Speaker, you can remember, and so can every hon, gentlemen in this House, that there was a time when it was uncertain at what date the McKinley tariff would come into force, and if it had come into force while the grain-buyers had a large amount of barley on their hands they would have lost 20 cents a bushel. Now, let me take another statement from a Port Hope paper, giving the relative prices, on 30th April, for grain at Rochester and Toronto:

		Toronto.
Fall wheat	1 20 to $1 22	$1 12 to $1 13
Spring wheat		1 04 to 1 05
Barley (York State)		0 55 to 0 58
Oate		0.58 to 0.60
Potatoes:	1 25 to 1 30	0 95 to 1 05
Butter, per lb.	0 23 to 0 25	0 25 to 0 28
Eggs, per doz	0 15 to 0 15	0 12½to 0 13
Wool	υ 28 to 0 30	0 22 to 0 22}

Now, a farmer selling the produce of 10 acres of wheat in Toronto would get $205; selling 10 acres of barley he would get $124, because barley was 83 cents a bushel; and selling 10 acres of oats he world get $134. The Canadian farmer, selling the produce of 30 acres would take home $464; while the American farmer, selling the produce of 30 acres, would take home $571, or $107 more for his grain than the Canadian farmer. And so with regard to wool: we find that the price of wool in the United States was 28 to 30 cents, whereas it was only 22½ in Toronto. Take potatoes. The Rochester farmer would take home $15 more than the Toronto farmer upon a lot of 59 bushels. That is the way the tariff works against the farmers of Canada as compared with the farmers of the United States. Let me say that it does no good to the farmers of Ontario to be told that the farmers of the United States are in a worse condition. If it can be proved that we can get a better price in their We do not enter into partnership with the Americans, but we go into not have done so had not the hon, member for their markets to compete with them, and they in return can come here and compete with us. One reason why we can always compete successfully with them is that we have a more fertile country and produce larger crops, and what we desire is to obtain a better price. Taking all these matters into consideration, I contend that the hon. gentlemen opposite have not made out a good case, and bushel on corn no less than $1,500,000 worth of that if we obtain unrestricted reciprocity one of cornmeal and corn were brought into this country. the greatest possible blessings will be conferred on the Dominion of Canada in general, and on the farmers of this country in particular.

Mr. CORBY. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to imports entered for home consumption of farm promake any remarks on this question, and I would duce, for 1890, was $12,659,720, as follows:—

South Huron (Mr. McMillan) touched on the question of free corn. I must say I was surprised that the hon, gentleman, who is a farmer, advocated free corn, which must come into competition with the coarse grains of the farmers of the Dominion. I find, on looking over the imports for 1890, that although we had a protective tariff of $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents per I repeat that when the hon, gentleman advocated free corn he must have known that corn would come into direct competition with our oats, barley, rye, and all our coarse grains. In this statement of imports from the United States there is nothing on the list that cannot be raised in this Dominion; and if our American neighbours will not meet us on a fair basis, and if they are bound to go on increasing their tariff, as was done by the McKinley Bill, I, for one, although an importer of corn, would advocate a prohibitory duty against everything imported from the United States. As a distiller, I import 70,000 bushels of corn annually, to be used in the manufacture of spirits, on which I pay a duty of 7½ cents per bushel. I was accused by my opponent at the last general election with bringing in my corn free ef duty. I want on the floor of this House to deny that statement. I want to deny that statement because it is not correct. I pay just the same duty as the farmer or any other man pays. I pay 7½ cents per bushel on all corn that I bring into this country for the purpose of manufacturing spirits. During the last general election campaign it was brought against me by the member for East Hastings (Mr. . Burdett) who, I am sorry to see, is not in his seat to night, that I stood up in this House and voted to allow the distillers a rebate on spirits exported from the manufactured grain. I deny that from my seat in this House to-night. It was reported that I voted when I did not vote, and I can leave it to a number of members who are present here to-night to say that I refused to vote on that question. I stated then that I was an interested party, and that I refused to vote, and I referred the Speaker to Rule 16 of the House of Commons. The vote was correctly recorded in the Hansard, and I wish to make this statement here, as it was brought against me by the member for East Hastings (Mr. Burdett), who signed a letter to the effect that he saw me get up in this House and vote on that question last session.

An. hon. MEMBER. He is a liar. Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; take it back-

I find when looking over the Mr. CORBY. reports of the Inland Revenue for 1890 that the distillers of the Dominion of Canada used last year 66,790,421 lbs. of American corn, on which they paid a duty of 7½ cents per bushel. It has also been stated throughout the whole Dominion that the distillers have been receiving their corn free of duty when the farmers have to pay 74 cents per bushel duty. I deny that statement, and I state here what is the fact, that the distillers paid the same duty as the farmers or anyone else. We not only pay a duty on corn, but we pay a duty on malt, and we pay an Inland Revenue tax of about $5 a bushel on every bushel of grain that we manufacture into whiskey. Idonot know of any other class of the community which pays more into the Dominion treasury than the distillers of this Dominion do. Last session it was stated here from the Opposition benches that we could not raise hogs in this country fit for mess pork. I want to give the hon. gentlemen opposite to understand that we can raise hogs in this country fit to make any mess pork that the lumbermen may require. I tell the hon, gentlemen opposite that the reason the farmers of this country were driven out of the industry of raising heavy hogs was that the Americans flooded this country

ernment should put the same duty on mess pork as they do on any other pork, and that would compel the Canadian lumbermen to buy our Canadian hogs. We can raise the hogs in this country if they give us sufficient protection, and the only reason we ever lost that pork trade has been that the duty was too low, and the cheap American pork flooded the market, I hardly think that the member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) or any of the Liberal party would advocate free trade in this country if they took into consideration the fact that we have a home market here in Canada for farmers products to the extent of $500,000,000 a year. If the hon, gentleman wants me to give an explanation of how we have this market of $500,000,556 I am ready to give it.

An hon, MEMBER. Give them some light over there.

Mr. CORBY. I will give how I figured out this, and I think that the House will agree with me that I am correct in this calculation. Before we exchange this market of $500,000,000 a year for the products of the farmers, and allow the Americans to come in here and compete with our farmers, I think we should seriously take into consideration the extent of our home market. I stated before my election that I would advocate anything that is for the interest of this Dominion, and I am here prepared to do it. If the House will allow me, I will state how I make up this estimate. To make this estimate, I obtained the cost of feeding the steerage passengers and others on the steamship lines between Great Britain and Canada and United States. The managers of the continental lines estimate the cost of feeding the steerage passengers to be about 25 cents per diem per head; the White Star Line at about 50 cents; the Allan Line, 25 cents for steerage and 65 or 75 cents for intermediate and first-class passengers. I also got the statements of directors of penitentiaries, prisons, asylums, &c., and concluded that from 20 to 25 cents per head of our population would represent the consumption, and that our imports of farm products would about equal the amount required for seed, and thus, if our annual consumption is at 25 cents per diem per head, our total consumption of the products of the farm, and animals and their products, and agricultural products, would amount to about five hundred millions of dollars. The House may think 25 cents per diem per head too high, but it seems to me that these steamship lines, with their three classes of passengers, feed with economy their steerage passengers. I may state that an investigation was made by the Department of Agriculture in connection with assisted immigration a few years ago, which resulted in fixing the amount at 25 cents as the cost per head per diem, which corroborates my estimate as to the value of our home market. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up the time of the House any longer, nor did I intend to make any remarks on this question, had not the hon. gentleman who last spoke brought up the question of free corn, in which I am interested. Hon. gentlemen can all see that free corn means $5,000 a year direct profit in my own pocket, but I do not believe that it is to with mess pork, and I state here that our Govern-ment have not yet given us the protection they should have free corn; and although if the duty should give on pork. I claim that the Gov- were removed on corn it would put money in my own pocket, and be to my own personal advantage of money went into the coffers of the Government vet I will not stand up in this House and advocate the case would not be so had, because it would what I think is against the interests of the country then relieve the people's burdens in other as a whole. I am not sent here to legislate to put directions; but while such a small amount goes money in my own pocket: I am sent here to legis- into the treasury and such a large amount into the late for what is to the interest of the whole Dom- pockets of the manufacturers it is certainly a tax inion, and so long as I hold my seat in this House that should be removed altogether. The hon. as the member for West Hastings the policy junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), in discusswhich I will advocate is a policy which will bene- ing this question, attempted to prove that hinding fit all the people of Canada. I beg to thank you, twine was cheaper in Canada than in the United Mr. Speaker, for the attention with which the States. It struck me as strange, if that was the House has listened to me.

Some hon, MEMBERS. Go on. Speak now.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I may say that the whip informed me that there would be no more speeches to-night, and asked me if I would move the adjournment of the debate. Otherwise I would not have done it.

Mr. BOWELL There is no desire to urge the hon, gentleman to speak at an unseasonable hour; but really, if we are to sit here until Christmas, we had better adjourn every night at ten o'clock, and take matters easily. I think we might spend another hour, and I do not suppose the hon. gentleman desires to speak any longer than that.

Mr. CAMPBELL I did not intend to address the House on this subject to-night; but as hongentlemen desire to continue the discussion for some time longer, perhaps I may as well say what little I have to say now as on any other occasion. The resolution which has been placed in your hands by the hon, member for South Oxford may be divided into two parts. The first part proposes that the duties on goods which are the prime necessaries of the artizans, the miners, the lumbermen, the fishermen and the farmers of this Dominion, should be reduced to the lowest possible point: and the second part proposes that in the negotiations which are expected to take place at Washington in October next any treaty with the United States should be arranged on the widest possible basis. For my part, I believe that that resolution should receive the sanction of this House. If we want to build up this Dominion I think we must reduce to the lowest possible points the duties on those articles of prime necessity to the miners, the fishermen, the lumbermen, the artizans and the farmers, who are the bone and sinew of the country, and the classes from which we expect that the country will be built up. Now, our friends on the other side state that this has been the policy pursued by the Government of the day. I differ very much from that statement. I believe that a great many different articles which are of prime necessity to the working classes are very much higher than they should be, and that the duties are arranged in such a way, that while the Government receives a very small amount of revenue, the people pay the taxes all the same. One article I might mention is binding twine, which formed a subject of discussion here a few days ago. The duty on that article, which nearly every farmer requires, is quite a serious tax; and while we receive from it a revenue of only a little over $1,200, it was shown conclusively that it compelled the farmers of this country to pay from $250,000 to $300,-000 a year to the manufacturers. If that amount arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite case, that he, as president of the combination manu-Mr. LANDERKIN moved the adjournment of facturing that article, was so anxious that the Government should retain the duty. article that I might mention is salt. I quite approve of the course the Government have taken in removing half the duty on salt, but I say that they should have gone further and removed it altogether. Salt is an article of prime necessity. which every family in this Dominion requires to use, and while a portion of the duty goes into the public treasury a large proportion of it goes to the manufacturers of salt in this Dominion. I believe there is no reason why salt cannot be manufactured as cheaply in Canada as in the United States. I know that within a short distance of the town in which I live is one of the largest salt wells in Canada; and on the other side of the river, in the State of Michigan, there is another salt well. bought 400 barrels of salt from the American well at 60 cents a barrel, brought it to Canada and paid the duty, and it cost us less than we could buy salt for in Canada, where the price was $1.10. The manufacturers of the American salt told us that the net average price they received the year previous was 57 cents a barrel, and that out of that they defrayed all expenses, paid a fair dividend to their stockholders, and laid by a little for Now, if they can manufacture salt on one side of the river for 57 or 60 cents a barrel I cannot, for the life of me, see why they cannot do it on the Canadian side as well. I believe they can; and, therefore, I think it was the duty of the Government to have removed the duty on salt altogether, and thus break down the combination which has been oppressing the farmers and the people of this country for some years past. Then there are other articles of prime necessity to the people of this country. For instance, there is coal oil, an article which has been frequently mentioned during the course of this debate. Now, that is an article of prime necessity to every family in this Domnion. There is none which does not require to use more or less coal oil, yet the duty to-day is over a hundred per cent., and the combine existing in Canada has forced the price of Canadian oil a great deal higher that it would be were it not for the duty. This is one article from which the Government should have removed the duty, and thus have reduced the price to every consumer. Besides, while the revenue from the duty on coal oil is considerable, it is not at all in proportion to what the people pay, and that is a most objectionable feature in this policy. If the duty all went to the State it would not be so bad, but when a large proportion goes, not to the State, but into the pockets of a few manufacturers, it is not in the interests of Canada that the duty should be maintained. I might go over many other articles, but I will not weary the House by doing so at present. The

have been, to my mind, very conflicting. find one gentleman will get up and talk against unrestricted reciprocity in any shape. We had the hon, member for North Grey (Mr. Masson) last night taking, to my mind, the most consistent course of any gentleman who has yet addressed the House from the other side during this debate. He took the same line as that which was taken last year by the Hon. Mr. Colby, then President of the Council, and opposed reciprocity in any shape. He did not believe even in reciprocity in natural He held it was not in the interests of this country that we should have any reci-procity at all with the United States, and argued that we should stand by the old policy, the old flag and the old humbug. Now, if that is really the opinion of the hon, gentleman from North Grey, his first duty should be to take the Government to task for having taken any steps to obtain reciprocity. Why did the Government dissolve the House last year? Their pretext was that they desired to go to Washington to negotiate a reciprocity treaty and wanted to have the approval of the people before going there. That was the reason given by them to the people of this country for a dissolution at that time. But I fancy that no sooner was that intimation made by them than the manufacturers raised such a hue and cry that the Government felt it necessary to make a They brought such a pressure on the Government that the Government were compelled to change their programme altogether, and the result was that, a few days later, the then First Minister issued an address to the people, in which, from beginning to end, there was not one word said about reciprocity. Now, Sir, the only conclusion I can come to is this, that when the Government announced their intention of negotiating a reciprocity treaty with the United States our manufacturers, as we know, all came to Ottawa and informed the Government that any such treaty with the people of the United States was out of the question. We have put up our money, they said; we have stood by you from year to year, and now, if you propose to negotiate a treaty with the people of the United States, you need not, in your appeal to the people, expect any support or assistance from us; and the consequence was, that when the First Minister issued his address not one word could be found in it about reciprocity at all. Now, the question has been often asked on the other side, and although it has been answered a great many times, in my opinion, from this side, yet I may mention the difference that exists between the two political parties. The Liberals come out boldly and squarely before the people and say that if they are returned to power their aim and object will be to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the United States upon the broadest possible terms, under which all the manufactured and raw products of both countries shall pass freely from the one to the other, but they do not propose for one moment to lose control of their own tariff. On the contrary, we propose to retain control of our own tariff, so that we can admit goods from England, Ireland, France, Germany or any country free, if we like, or tax them if we choose; but so far as the trade and commerce of this country and the United States is concerned, there shall be the greatest freedom of intercourse between the two countries, and trade will flow between them as freely as the waters between the while we are sending a large quantity of coal into Mr. CAMPBELL.

two great lakes. That is the policy advocated by the Reform party, and on which they went to the country, and which they propose to carry out when returned to power. But what is the policy of the Government? They talk about reciprocity. One gentleman gets up and says he is opposed to reciprocity in natural products or anything else. other says it would be foolish for us to negotiate a treaty with the United States, as it would ruin our farmers and manufacturers, and then turns round and says the Government propose to negotiate a treaty if they can obtain a fair, reasonable and equitable treaty. It is for the Government to tell us what they consider a reasonable, fair and equitable treaty. If they propose to negotiate a treaty on the lines of the treaty which existed from 1854 to 1866, all the arguments advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite would be futile and fall to the ground. The great argument advanced by them is that such a treaty would reduce the price of coal; that it would ruin our farmers, by the admission of free corn to compete with their coarse grain. But if we should negotiate a treaty on the lines of the treaty of 1854 we would admitall the raw products of the United States freely, and thus the same injury would be inflicted on our farmers, so far as the products are concerned. While we are willing to admit—while I, for my part, am quite free to say that, so far as corn and pork, and some of these things are concerned, it is possible that our farmers might receive a little less if we had free trade with the United States, contend that for every dollar they would lose on those things they would gain $10 on other things by having free trade with the United States. When we look at the position of these two great countries, extending for 4,000 miles alongside one another-people of the same nationality, speaking the same language, following the same pursuits, and trading to such a large extent as we have for the past two years—it seems to me foolish and almost absurd to say that the trade between these two peoples would not be a benefit to them both. In the Trade and Navigation Returns I find that the total value of our exports last year, to all countries, was $82,000,000, and of that amount we exported to the United States over $33,000,000, while we sent nearly $42,000,000 to Great Britain. There is a whole argument in itself. Why did we export $33,000,000 worth of goods to the United States? We could scarcely send a dollar's worth in there without paying a heavy duty. We could send all our goods to England free, but we did not, because it paid us better to send that quantity to the United States. We sent them there and paid the duty upon them, and then found that we realized more than we would That being if we had sent them to England. the case, it appears to me that if the duties were removed on those goods passing into the United States it would be far better for us, and we would get a much larger amount for our goods. Then again, if we take up the articles in detail we find that it is still more explicit. Of coal, we sent to the United States last year 574,000 tons. sent that coal there and paid 75 cents a ton duty on it, and yet it paid us to send it there and to pay the duty. If that duty were removed, and we could send that coal into the United States free, I argue that we would realize just that much more for our coal. Let me remind the House that, the United States, we are at the same time importing from the United States a large quantity of coal. From Nova Scotia we sent nearly 80,000 tons of coal to the United States, and from British Columbia we sent 495,000 tons. It was cheaper for the people of San Francisco and California to get their coal from British Columbia, and the people of New England took their coal from the mines of Nova If it were not for the duty which exists, I say that trade would largely increase, and the miners of Canada would receive more for the article they have to export. Then there is the article of horses, which has been mentioned very frequently. Last year we sent more than 16,000 horses to the United States. To Great Britain we only Remember this, that we could have sent all our horses to England free, but we sent 16,000 to the United States, and paid 20 per cent. duty upon them, rather than send them to England free of duty. Why did we do that? It was because the people of Canada knew where the best market was, and so they sent their horses to the United States though they had to pay the duty. It may be that next year's Trade and Navigation Returns may show that a larger proportion of horses have gone to England, because, under the McKinley tariff the duty has been raised so enormously that possibly the horses may be sent to England; but it simply shows that, as far as horses are concerned, the United States is our best market, and has been for years, and that if both countries were free from the duty upon horses, if we could send our horses into the United States free as we can send them to England, the great majority of our horses would go to the United States and not to England. Unrestricted reciprocity would therefore largely benefit the people of this country in regard to horses, because there is no country in the world where such good horses can be raised as in Canada, and there is no question about the development of that trade. It is a most profitable trade for our farmers. I question if there is an animal on a farm that gives so much profit If we had the to the farmer as the horse. markets of the United States open to us we could double and treble the industry of raising horses. Of horned cattle, we last year exported 7,840 to the United States, and we sent about 67,000 to Great Britain. So far as our cattle are concerned, we have two strings to our bow. fat cattle all go to the English market. market is and always will be open to us upon the same terms as it is to the whole world. We do not have any special favours in the English mar-kets, and if we adopted unrestricted reciprocity there would be no change in that respect. But we also have a market for a poorer class of cattle that it does not pay to send to the old country, and animals of that description have found a market in the United States, in Buffalo and in New York, with its three millions of people that have to be fed every day. If we had free trade with the United States our trade in that respect would largely increase, and our farmers would still have the market for fat cattle and the best grades in the old country, while they would have a market for the other class at home. Last year we sent 250,000 sheep to the United States. Why did we send them there? Because it paid us better to pay the duty and send our sheep there than to send them to the old country, where they would be and we cannot get it anywhere else than in the admitted free of duty. Yet we only sent 57,000 sheep to England. There is no single article which shows this point so well as the article of eggs. Eggs have been going from Canada to England free and to the United States free, and what has been the result? Last year we sent to the United States 13,000,000 dozen of eggs and to England only 3,600 dozen. Now, that shows that while the markets both of the United States and of England were open to us, we sent the greater proportion of our eggs to the United States; the McKinley Bill has put such a heavy tax upon our eggs that, possibly, next year we will be forced to find a market for a large portion of our eggs in the old country. Now, if we had free trade, I venture to say there would be scarcely any eggs sent to the old country at all. The facts show that while the two markets have been open the people know where their best market is, and has been, and consequently they have sent their eggs to the best market, and that has been the market of the United States. Now, take the article of cheese, and the very contrary result is shown. The facts show that we have been exporting our cheese to the old country much more than to the United States. Why? Because there is the best market for cheese. We have sent our cheese there, we have sent our eggs to the United States, and consequently I say that the markets of the United States are our natural markets for eggs, and England is our natural market for cheese. One gentleman said to-night that we would imperil our cheese trade if we adopted unrestricted reciprocity. Nothing of the kind. The English market is open to all the world, and we would still have the English market for our cheese and our butter, and everything we would like to send there, as freely and as readily as we do now. Then, take the articles of game and poultry. Last year we sent to the United States $154,000 worth, while England only took $1,600 worth. The United States market would be open to us if we had free trade with that country, and I can assure this House that in the county from which I come the little article of poultry and game is of very great importance to the people. We are within reasonable distance of the city of Detroit, and our farmers have been in the habit of raising poultry and game and bringing it to the American market in an hour or so, where they can obtain a good price; consequently, to be shut out of the markets of the United States will be quite a loss to us. Then take wool. Our farmers export a large quantity of wool, and although that wool goes into the old country free we did not send any there at all last year. We sent over 1,000,000 pounds of wool into the United States and paid the heavy duty upon it. Now, that shows to my mind clearly that the United States for wool is our natural market, and with free trade between the two countries our wool would go there and our farmers would receive a much larger price than they do now. Then, we send a large quantity of apples, green and ripe, to the United States, and in respect of this article there is no question that free trade will benefit both countries. We require a good deal of fruit from the United States. It comes in earlier than our fruit does. There are a great many kinds of fruit that we cannot raise; we cannot raise in our colder climate bananas, oranges, lemons, &c., that we require for the good health of our people. We must go elsewhere for that fruit,

United States, unless we go to the more southern countries. Now, if we had free trade in fruit it would benefit both Canada and the United States, because we have a large quantity of fall apples that come in early in the fall; and we cannot ship these apples to the old country, because they will not keep, but we can ship them to the United States. We have a great variety of fruit that ripens early in the fall-fall apples, for instancebut we cannot send them to the old country because they will not bear the voyage. Now, we have in Ontario ready access to the cities of Buffalo, New York and Boston, and all the large cities, within a few hours from any part of Ontario, from the great grain or fruit-growing districts of that province, and you can reach those cities within a few hours, where there is a very large consumption of these very articles, and if we had free trade we could obtain a good market for all the different varieties of fruit, and that would largely enhance the profit to our fruit-growers. Then another article that we export largely is barley, which has been mentioned frequently. Now our natural market for barley is in the United States; facts Notwithstanding that we can send that barley free into the old country, we do not send it there, because it has paid us better to pay the duty and send it into the United States. paid 10 cents a bushel duty upon all the barley we exported last year, and we realized more for it than we would if we had sent it to the old country, where it went in free. Now, I fear that the duty has been raised so high upon barley that it will force us to send it to the old country or somewhere else, where we cannot get as much for it. I know that last year in the town of Chatham, in the neighbourhood of which a very large quanneighbourhood of which a very large quantity of barley is raised, the very day the McKinley Bill came into effect the price of barley fell from $1.25 per 100 pounds to 90 cents. This shows clearly that the duty that it paid comes out of the pockets of the Ontario farmers. Hon. gentlemen contend that the farmers are getting as high a price now as they did last year. That does not prove anything at all. The argument is to show whether they would get any more if there was no duty at all, and that cannot be shown by comparing the prices of this year with the prices of last year. We know that prices fluctuate and change. Wheat, for instance, may be $1 this year, and next year it may be 80 cents, and the year afterwards it may rise to $1.25. not prove anything by the prices from one year to another, but we must compare the prices in one country with the prices in the other country in the same day, and then you can institute a fair comparison. If you take the markets of Toronto and the markets of Buffalo you can make a very fair comparison, and you will find that the price in Buffalo is just about the amount of the duty higher than it is in Toronto. Now, the item of barley is a very large one in our export. We exported last year nearly 10,000,000 bushels, and it is a very serious thing for our farmers to be shut out of that market, and it is a serious question to know what they are going to do with their barley. If they have to pay 30 cents a bushel duty upon it, it will make a very great difference in their profits in the course of a year. Now, another article that we export very largely is the articles of beans. That article is, perhaps, of more importance to the on the ship-building yards of the Maritime Prov-Mr. Campbell.

people of the county I have the honour to represent than it is almost to any other part of the country. We raise, in the County of Kent, between four and five hundred thousand bushels of beans every year. The duty upon beans now is 40 cents a bushel. It has been 10 per cent., and, notwithstanding this 10 per cent. duty, nearly every bushel of our bean crop has been exported to the United States. There is no market for that in the old country. I may say that when the McKinley Bill came into force, last October, two of our bean buyers in the town of Chatham, finding they had a market for more beans than they could handle, opened an agency in the State of Michigan, and they actually paid, in the State of Michigan, 40 cents more for the beans that they bought there than for the beans they had bought in the town of Chatham. All those beans went to the markets of Philadelphia and St. Louis, and other points. could send beans from Chatham to those cities, but we would have to pay 40 cents per bushel on them. Consequently, they could pay the farmers of the United States better than the farmers of the County of Kent. If we had free trade with the United States this duty would be removed, and we would realize so much more on that product. I could follow this matter through every page of the Trade and Navigation Returns and show that, in the large variety of articles, our best market is the United States. I desire to point out the fact that in only one respect are we enjoying unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, and that is with regard to our railways. Our railways have unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. They can load a car at Chicago or Detroit and carry it to New York free of duty. I observe the hon. member for East Elgin in his seat, and I should like to ask him how many trains would pass through the town of St. Thomas if the railways did not enjoy unrestricted reciprocity. The whole traffic over the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific Railway and Michigan Central would cease and be annihilated, and there would simply be a local train passing backwards and forwards along the line. Our railways have to pay 60 cents a ton on all the coal they consume, a heavy duty on locomotives and cars, oils and other materials that are necessary for operating the roads, but notwithstanding all those difficulties they are able to hold their own and compete successfully with the railways in the United States. Year after year they are increasing their traffic and doing an increased volume of trade. Compare for a moment our railways with our shipping. Of all the millions of tons of shipping that come down the great lakes from the west to the east only about 5 per cent. is carried in Canadian bottoms. Why? Because our vessels do not enjoy unrestricted reciprocity. They are not placed in the same position as our railways. A vessel loading in Buffalo cannot unload at Detroit without first touching a Canadian port and unloading. The consequence is, as I have said, that our share of the shipping trade on the great lakes only amounts to about 5 per cent. Remove that obstruction, give us unrestricted reciprocity, and immediately our vessels will be placed in the same position as our railways. And what will be the consequence? Immediately a great demand will spring up for Canadian vessels. New vessels will be constructed; there will be a demand made inces and Ontario, and vessels will be constructed because there will be business for them to do, and thus the trade and commerce of the country will be greatly increased. I want to notice some of the arguments advanced against this proposed measure of unrestricted reciprocity. Some of our friends say this would be a disloyal measure, that it would discriminate against Great Britain, that it would lead to annexation, that it would lead to direct taxation. I do not intend to dwell very long on these points, but merely to touch on them, first, as to its being disloyal. There is no need to discuss that point. I consider myself as loyal as any man in this House or the country; but I do not think it is necessary for a man to be constantly preaching his loyalty. Whenever you find a man continually saying he is an honest man and very trustworthy it is desirable to look after your pocket, for if he can he will have his hand in it. Soit is in respect to loyalty. Hon. gentlemen opposite who are always talking about their loyalty and saying we are disloyal, are, I think, loyal for revenue purposes. As to the point that this measure would lead to annexation, I do not think there is anything in that objection. With unrestricted reciprocity we would obtain all the advantages we possibly could obtain by annexation, without any of its disavantages. I believe our institutions are better that those of the United States, that our laws are better in many respects, and are better administered, and I like the position we occupy. But we want enlarged trade relations with the United States, we want the privilege of buying articles we can obtain cheaper there, and we also want the privilege of selling them our products which we can dispose of to advantage; and consequently we do not want their laws and their institutions, but their trade and their money. If we had unrestricted reciprocity by which we would have the privilege of buying and selling in those markets as it might suit us, that is all we want. So there is no danger of unrestricted reciprocity leading to annexation. When we had a reciprocity treaty in force from 1854 to 1866 it did not lead to annexation. In fact the feeling and desire for annexation which prevailed to a considerable extent in Canada immediately on the negotiation of that treaty died away, and when the treaty was abrogated, in 1866, every one will admit there was very little feeling in favour of annexation. I am sorry to say I believe that feeling is growing in Canada, that there are a great many people who are looking with a good deal of favour on closer associations with the people of the United States, and the reason of it is that they want freer trade with that people, and immediately we open the United States markets I believe that feeling will pass away altogether. Canada is one of the richest countries in the world in minerals. We have in Nova Scotia, what I believe is not elsewhere to be found, an abundant supply of the richest coal and iron at the same time. These minerals are close together on the lines of railway, close to the border and close to the seaboard, and if we had the privilege of sending the iron into the United States, I believe an immense development of the iron industry would take place. I see no reason why this should not occur; we have these minerals and the very best facilities for shipping them, and all we want is a market in which to sell our products. At the present time these producers have only the ton duty on pig iron which he uses, $13 a ton on markets of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and part of the Province of Quebec. They cannot send iron to British Columbia or Ontario because the freight would eat up the profits, and we can even get iron from England cheaper than we can get it from there if it were obtained for nothing. So that they are limited, and the reason that they do not develop their mines is that they have not a market for their goods. It is the same way along the shores of Lake Superior. Every one knows that we have the richest mines on the north shore of Lake Superior that are to be found in any country in the world; they are far richer than those on the southern shore, and yet, strange to say, on the south shore there is bustle and activity and towns and cities are growing up, and factories and mines and rolling mills are established, and the immense product of that country is coming down the lakes every year; while on the Canadian side there is all desolation, and no towns or cities are growing there at all. The reason for that is that it would not pay a man, if he had the money, to develop these mines, and erect rolling mills, and put in the necessary capital, because he has not a market for the products of these mines; but the moment you open up a trade with the United States, the moment you remove the barriers between those two countries, you have almost an unlimited market, and a great development would take place so far as our minerals and mines are concerned. Now, with regard to our manufactures. I look upon our manufacturers with a good deal of faith, I am glad we have the enterprising manufacturers that we have in Canada, I believe they are helping to build up this country, and to make it great and prosperous, and, I believe, that once you remove the duties, a great proportion of them at least, will be benefited thereby. I know the great milling industry, which, perhaps, is one of the greatest industries in this Dominion to-day, and as a miller I have no hesitation in saying, that if we have free trade with the people of the United States, it would be one of the best things that could happen to the millers of this country. have, as was stated here to-day, a very large amount of capital invested in our mills and mill plants, but we have not a market to sell our flour in. If you open up the Eastern States to us, and give us the markets in Buffalo, New York, Boston, and the New England States, where they do not raise one-tenth part of the quantity of flour they consume, the millers of this country would immediately find that a great impetus would be given to that industry; a larger number of men would be employed, and a great development would take place. short time ago I was speaking to one of our largest carriage makers in the town of Chatham, Mr. Grey, of William Grey & Sons, a firm known all over the Dominion as one of the largest and best manufacturers of carriages that are to be found in any country, and Mr. Grey told me himself that if he had free trade with the United States he would be immediately able to employ 74 more hands, because, he said, we could manufacture buggies and waggons just as good and as cheap in Canada as in any other country in the world, if we were placed on the same terms as the other manufacturers. He says to-day that he cannot do this, for the reason that he has to pay $4 per round iron, 35 per cent. duty on oils and paints, and 60 cents per ton on coal, and consequently he cannot manufacture a buggy as cheap as he would under other circumstances. He said that if we under other circumstances. were to take off the duty on these goods and give free trade we would be able to get our iron and coal and paints and oils upon the same terms as the American manufacturers, and we would be able to make as cheap a buggy as they did. Consequently, he said, that immediately the restrictions on this trade were removed he would be able to employ 75 more men. I have no doubt that the other manufacturers would be in the same position. also another large carriage factory there, belonging to Mr. Robert Milner, who also manufactures carriages and buggies on a very large scale, and they would be enabled to enlarge their plant and increase their output, and give employment to many more men if these duties were taken off. do not wish at this late hour to detain the House too long, and I will only refer to one or two I wish to say a few words on the quesmore items. tion which has often been raised as to how we are to get our revenue under unrestricted reciprocity. It seems to me that our friends on the other side should not ask us how we are going to raise a revenue, and I do not think it is necessary to tell them. I do not think that the doctor is obliged to tell the prescription which he is giving to the We say we can raise all the revenue we patient. require, and we can do it without direct taxation. We have no fear but what we can raise the revenue and carry on the affairs of the country just as well with unrestricted reciprocity as the Government is doing to-day, and we can do so without direct taxation at all. Now, after all it is only a question of which shoulder you put the burthen on. It seems to me that it does not make very much difference to the people of Canada whether they take it out of one pocket or out of the other; as long as the money comes out of their pockets it does not make any particular difference which pocket it comes out of. I do not think anybody will contend that the amount of duties paid on goods coming in from the United States does not come out of the pockets of the people of Canada. I believe that every dollar of it does come out of our pockets. I believe that in the first place it is not necessary to spend as much money as the present Government is spending in carrying on the affairs of this When we find that the Mackenzie country. Administration carried on the affairs of this country at an expense of $23,500,000, and that we are today expending nearly $37,000,000, it seems to me that there is a great waste of money in some way. I will refer to just a few of the items in which a very unwarrantable increase of the expenditure has taken place. For instance, the interest on our public debt in 1878 was only $7,000,000, and to-day it is $9,656,000. In 1878 the administration of justice cost us $564,000, and this year it has increased to $709,000; Civil Government in 1878 cost $823,000, while last year it amounted to $1,300,000 in round numbers; the protection of our fisheries in 1878 was only $82,000, and last year it increased to $328,000; in 1878 our Indians cost $489,000, while last year the cost had increased to $1,107,000. We also had a very large increase last year in the cost of our North-West Mounted Police. For militia and defence we spent in 1878-9, $779,000, and last year that expenditure had crept up to Mr. CAMPBELL.

$1,287,000. Right here I might say that in my opinion a very large saving might be made under that head. I do not believe that it is necessary to spend so much money as we do on that service, and I call to mind the speech addressed to this House by the late member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie), in which he stated that out of the million and a quarter that was spent on the force, about $250,000 went to the men and about $1,000,000 to the officers. I think that was wrong, and a great saving should be made under that head. Then, the Royal Military College at Kingston is costing us about $100,000 a year, and I would like to ask what good that is to the people of this country? Then the revision of the voters' lists cost about $300,000 a year; this year I venture to say it will not be done for less than $300,000 or $400,000 besides; I think I may safely say that it will cost the two political parties at least $400,000. Now, I believe that is an utter waste of money, and it should be done away with altogether. I believe that the time has come in this country when we should give every man who is 21 years of age the right to vote. The old principle of compelling a man to own $200 or $300 before he is given a right to vote is wrong. Every young man in this country, no matter what his colour or his creed, or his nationality is as long as he is a British subject, should have a right to vote, because it must be remembered that these young men are contributing to the support of the country as well as anybody else. When the news was flashed across the wire a few years ago that a rebellion had broken out in the North-West it was the young men who left their farms, their workshops and their counting houses and went to suppress it; and many of them dyed the snows of the North-West with their blood; and if to-morrow a war should break out the Government would say to the young men: take your musket and go to the front, and do not dare to let the enemy cross that line except over your dead body. I ask if any man upon whom such a responsibility is placed, should be debarred from saying how or by whom this country should be governed. Many other ways might be pointed out in which the expenses of this country could be largely reduced; but seeing that the hour is so late I will not weary the House by dwelling upon the subject. I have only to say in conclusion that I believe that the very best thing that could happen to the people of this country would be to get unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. It is possible that we may not be able to obtain a fair and equitable treaty. All we can do is to try. If we try and fail we cannot blame ourselves; but I believe, from the statements made by the leading men in the United States, that we can obtain such a treaty. At all events it is the bounden duty of the Government of this country to try to obtain such a treaty. If we can sell our raw products in the United States to advantage it would certainly, in my opinion, be much better for us if we could also buy what manufactured goods we could to advantage. Therefore, I believe it is the bounden duty of the Government to try in every possible way to secure large trade relations with the United States, and in that way promote the general welfare of the people of this country.

Mr. McLENNAN moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. BOWELL moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 17th July, 1891.

PRATERS.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT—CON-TRACTS.

Mr. GIROUARD moved that a Message be sent to the Senate to request their Honours to grant leave to the Hon. Theodore Robitaille, one of their members, to attend and give evidence in the investigation now proceeding before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. GIROUARD moved that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting their Honours to grant permission for the temporary occupation of one of their Committee rooms, by the officials employed in connection with the investigation now proceeding before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

G. A. BOURGEOIS.

Mr. CHOQUETTE moved that leave be given to the Committee on Public Accounts to enquire about the payment of $600, made to G. A. Bourgeois, late post office inspector of the Three Rivers division, as such payment appears in the Auditor General's Report for 1889.

Motion agreed to.

DREDGING AT ST. JEAN DESCHAILLONS.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to enquire from the hon. Minister of Public Works when the report and documents concerning the dredging of the beach at St. Jean Deschaillons will be brought down? I have been told that these documents were ready.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I think that I shall be able to put them before the House on Monday next. I have enquired and I have been told that they were being prepared.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. LAURIER. I enquired yesterday about the absence of the superintendent of the Printing Bureau, and I was told by a member of the Government that the superintendent referred to has gone away on leave of absence. I would like to enquire whether the leave of absence is still running, and when it is to expire?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Leave of absence was asked upon a special order of the physican of Mr. 77½

Senecal, Dr. Clarence Church, of Ottawa. The leave of absence has not expired. I have communicated with the deputy superintendent of printing, who advises me that there is no absolute need of the presence at the office of the superintendent at the present time. The work of the office is going on very well and smoothly. I expect the superintendent back in a day or two, according to the last letter that he wrote himself to Mr. McMahon.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the services of the superintendent are not necessary at the present time when the House is in session, I would enquire whether it would not be quite easy to do without the services of a superintendent altogether? It seems to me that it is more necessary to have him here at the present than at any other time.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that no discussion is allowed on a question like this, under the circumstances.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I desire, however, to say that the leave of absence was given on an order of the physician.

WAYS AND MEANS-THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: "That the resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means on Tuesday, 23rd ultimo, be read a second time;" and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. McLENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the indulgence of this House for a short time while I make a few remarks on the subject before the This is my first attempt at speaking in Chair. this House, and I shall need the kind consideration of hon. members. I would begin by saying that the ways and means of raising a revenue for the requirements of the country, and the manner in which it is expended, are matters of very great importance. We must also bear in mind that the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), which is also under discussion at the present time, involves the political and national existence of our country. At the last general election, in my county, and I suppose it was the same in all other sections of the Dominion, the great issue before the people was that of unrestricted reciprocity, or commercial union, and, I suppose, political union, as a great many people believed that that would be the ultimate result of unrestricted reciprocity. On every occasion when I met my opponents on the platform, I asked them to explain how they were going to carry on the Government of the country in case unrestricted reciprocity was adopted, and our revenue from the present tariff was wiped away. On every occasion they refused to give me an explanation as to how this policy was to be carried out if they succeeded. We claim that it would create a deficiency in the revenue an ounting to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $15,000,000, and we asked our opponents to explain how this money was going to be raised if their policy were successful. They refused to do so. Now, Sir, I claim it is most unfair to the electors to ask them to vote on any question upon which a thorough explanation has not been given. It is most unfair on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to place a policy before the country that they are unwilling, in fairness to the electors, to explain how they propose to carry out, if they should succeed in obtaining power. In 1878, when the Conservative party was in Opposition, they placed a policy before the country and explained it, and they gave the electors an opportunity of voting on it intelligently, knowing what they might expect if the Conservatives carried the country. have asked throughout my county how the policy of the Opposition was to be worked out? I have asked, on behalf of the electors, not only the Conservative electors but the Reform electors, this question, and I ask that same question here, Sir, and it is quite right that every Canadian should ask hon, gentlemen opposite to explain to the country how they propose to make up the deficiency in the revenue? An hon, gentleman, in this debate, stated the other day that they would explain their policy when they crossed over to the Government side of the House. If the honest electors have to wait till hon. gentlemen get on the Treasury benches, they will have to wait a long time, and it is necessary that they should know how the Opposition propose to carry out their policy before then. During the early part of my canvass I found there was a feeling in favour of unrestricted reciprocity between the United States and Canada, because that policy was either insufficiently explained or improperly explained by it advocates. An hon, gentleman on this side of the House said the other day the electors seem to have been loaded on one side for some years. But when we met the electors of my county, and I suppose it was the same in other counties, when the matter was properly explained to them, and when the Opposition leaders refused to explain what they meant by unrestricted reciprocity, the people began to see that there was something wrong, that hon, gentlemen opposite were wearing a mask and were treating the electors most uncandidly. It is unfair to place a policy or an issue before a constituency without giving the people an opportunity of knowing how that policy or issue is proposed to be carried out. An hon, member said last night, I think the hon. member for Kent, that we were not in favour of any kind of reciprocity with the United States. say this: I have nothing against the United States. I do not think there is any hon, gentleman on this side of the House who has anything personally against the United States. We want to do business with them. We want to deal fairly with them, and we ask them to deal fairly with us; but we do not propose to give away everything we have and to get nothing in return. In regard to what the hon, gentleman said the other night, that we were not in favour of any kind of treaty with the United States, I remind the House that the hon. gentleman quoted all the natural products of the country, and I ask permission of the House to read from the statute which was passed in 1879 by this Government, the following section:

"Any or all of the following articles: that is to say, animals of all kinds, green fruit, hay, straw, bean seeds of all kinds, vegetables (including potatoes and other roots), plants, trees and shrubs, coal and coke, salt, hops, wheat, pease and beans, barley, rye, cats, Indian corn, buckwheat, and all other grain, flour of wheat and flour of rye, Indian meal and oatmeal, and flour or meal of any other grain, butter, cheese, fish (salted or smoked), lard, tallow, meats (fresh, salted or smoked), and lumber, may be imported into Canada free of duty, or at a less rate of duty than is provided by this Act, upon proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar articles Mr. McLennan.

from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty, or at a rate of duty not exceeding that payable on the same under such proclamation when imported into Canada."

It is clear from this that we are willing to enter into any reasonable treaty with the United States. I do not want this to be forgotten, that I insist on hon, gentlemen opposite explaining how their policy will work if they succeeded in carrying the country, and especially how they propose to make up the deficiency in the revenue. If it means direct taxation on the people, and if hon, gentlemen are afraid to tell the people what it really means, I, with every honest elector, must say that it is dishonest for any party to place a policy before the country of which they are afraid to show the true meaning. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has moved an amendment, in which he states:

"That the situation of the country requires that the Government should forthwith reduce all duties on articles of prime necessity, and more particularly on those most generally consumed by artizans, miners, fishermen and farmers."

Everything that comes into the country is an article of prime necessity, and everything imported is because the people require it. We find there is a treaty likely to be made in October next. it not be a sensible and businesslike proceeding to wait and see what that treaty will amount to before we forthwith give everything we have and take the duty off everything in this country, and afterwards be compelled to ask Uncle Sam to do something for us? That is not a business-like way of doing business. If hon, gentlemen opposite want us to enter into reciprocal trade relations with the United States, why should not one side of the House advise the other as to the best course to adopt in the interest of the country, instead of placing the subject in such a position that it will be impossible to make any treaty with the United States. Would it not appear that the Government should be allowed to have matters in their own hands until the negotiations at Washington have been concluded, and we ascertain that a treaty might have been entered At least it would be desirable to discuss the question here as the clauses of a Bill are discussed one by one by both sides of the House, and thus endeavour to secure the best interests of Canada in any negotiations entered into with the United States. I think that would be a fair thing to do. Now, I wish to condemn the speeches which have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, when they stated that we in Canada are altogether helpless, and cannot live without the assistance of the United That is not a very patriotic argument, and such statements as that only tend to humiliate us as a nation, and may place in an awkward position the representatives of Canada when they go to Washington to negotiate a treaty. There was quite a discussion in the House the other night with regard to the amendment proposed by the hon member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) in amendment to the motion of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I will refer to a few points in that amendment of the hon member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins), and I will ask hon. gentlemen opposite what they were afraid of in it. That amendment asks the House-

"To approve of the policy of the Liberal-Conservativ Government in permitting the free importation of raw materials into Canada." Do the hon. gentlemen opposite object to that? Have they an objection to the free importation of raw material, in order that labour may be employed in the manufacture of articles required in this country? Surely they should have no fault to find with that. The amendment then asks the approval of hon. gentlemen—

"To the liberal aid which has been granted to important and necessary public works, notably railways, canals and steamship lines, which have proved such important factors in developing our resources and facilitating our commerce."

Are the hon. gentlemen opposite opposed to developing the resources of the country, and to the wise and prudent management of our finances?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As in the Quebec Harbour Works.

Mr. McLENNAN. I hardly think they can have any objection to the prudent management of the finances of the country in an economical way. This amendment of the hon, member for L'Islet then asked the concurrence of the House in approving—

"Of the wise and prudent management of the finances which, adequately providing for the public service, has maintained and advanced the credit of the country, and while producing substantial surpluses for capital expenditure, has made no appreciable addition to the public debt during the last two years."

Do the hon, gentlemen opposite object, because there has been scarely any increase in the debt of the country for the last two years? Would they like that the Conservative Government should pile up a debt upon the country as the Liberal Government did when it was in power? Do they approve of the action of the Government in taking the duty off tea and coffee? Hon. gentlemen opposite may object to this, but I am quite sure that the people of the country will not object to it. After the wise and generous policy of this Government in taking a duty to the extent of $3,500,000 off raw sugar, we have heard hon, gentlemen opposite say that this left the matter in a worse position than it was If that is the case, I would like to know how it is possible for any Government to satisfy hon, gentlemen opposite. The amendment to which I refer then says:

"That this House, while approving of the special efforts made by the Government to increase Canadian trade with the far East, with the West Indies, with Great Britain and with the United States, desires to express its confidence that any negotiations for the extension of commercial relations with the United States will be so conducted that their result will be consistent with that proper control of our own tariff and revenue which every self-respecting people must maintain, and with the continuance of those profitable business and political relations with the mother country which are earnestly desired by all intelligent and loyal Canadians."

Do hon, gentlemen opposite object to that; do they object to our carrying on our negotiations as any self-respecting people should do; if they do not object, and I do not see how they can object, I cannot see why there should be a row kicked up by them on that matter. Now, in 1873, when the Government of my hon, friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was in power, they had a duty on tea and coffee, and some of the hon, gentlemen opposite told us the other day that tea and coffee were the proper articles on which to place a duty. That may be so, from their standpoint, but they must remember that tea and coffee are articles which are used by the poor people of this country more largely than by the wealthy class, and it is well that the people throughout this country should know that the placing of duties on tea and coffee is part and parcel of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for hon. gentlemen opposite. Bothwell (Mr. Mills) gave us the other night some of his experience during the administration of the Reform party, and he said that during that period there were Singer sewing machines coming into this country, and that on enquiry he found that a sewing machine was manufactured at a cost of $9 and that it was sold in Canada for $48. That was during the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I do not think it would be possible for any man to give a stronger argument in favour of the National Policy and of protection than that. It shows that when we were not manufacturing that machine in this country that they charged us 4331 per cent., I think, on the manufacturing cost of that article. Now, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is not such a free trader as you would suppose, if you take his past record during the administration of the Liberal Government. I have here a campaign sheet that was used in the elections of 1878 by the hon, gentlemen opposite, and it contains all their picnic speeches throughout Ontario. The hon. gentlemen had picnics in Canada in 1878, and they did not succeed in returning to power. Their picnics at that time were not a success, and previous to the last general election in 1891 they tried picnicking in the United States instead of in Canada. believe that some of the hon, gentlemen opposite went down to New York, and the very first meeting they had there they talked a man to death. only that, but the annexationist, Mr. Longley of Nova Scotia, made a speech there as was reported in some of the New Brunswick papers.

Mr. FOSTER. The Nova Scotia papers.

Mr. McLENNAN. No; the New Brunswick papers. Moncton is in New Brunswick. There is a report here of the speech that Mr. Longley made on that occasion, interlarded with applause, and showing how his speech was appreciated by the audience; but the fact is that Mr. Longley never made that speech at all, for the gentleman who was to introduce the great orator from New Brunswick died suddenly at the meeting before he could make his speech. New I will quote to the House what Mr. Mills of Bothwell said in 1878. He says:

"It is said the Americans have been injuring us by sending into Canada wheat, flour and Indian corn, and I wish to call your attention to this question. Before doing so, perhaps I had better give you some evidence of the fact that the duties imposed by the American Government upon the various products of the agriculturists of Canada have in nowise affected the prices of the various articles which have been sent into the American market from Canada."

There are a number of figures given here which I will not tire the House by reading, and if there be no objection, Mr. Speaker, I will hand them in. He says further:

"I have here the prices of the various farm products for the twenty-two years from 1854 to 1876, during eleven of which years reciprocity prevailed, and during the other eleven our produce was subject to high duties. In 1854, the Canadians received on the average for the horses they sold $65.27 per head; in 1855, $74.26; 1856, $77.08: 1857, $76.09: 1858, $79.07: 1859, $84.77: 1860, $81.97; 1861, $81.40; 1862, $77.13: 1863, $75.79: 1264, $78.46; 1865, $79.61. These were the years during which reciprocity was in force. In 1866 we received for horses, on an average, per head the sum of $92.79; 1867, $78.68: 1868, $82.14; 1869, $82.97; 1870, $87.97: 1871, $93.96: 1872, $101.38; 1873, $105.01; 1874, $107.44; 1875, $104.62; 1876, $102.89. Now, if the 20 per cent. duty on horses had been said by the Canadian farmer, he would have received smaller prices during the years protection was in force than he did receive in the eleven years of reciprocity. But the fact was, he received higher prices. In regard to the prices of horned cattle, we received in 1854 an average per head of $23.83; 1855, $23.28; 1856, $24.20; 1857, $26.11; 1858, $22.24; 1859, $26.36; 1860, $27.70; 1861, $24.50; 1862, $20.31; 1863, $23.63; 1864, $30.70. These were during the years of reciprocity. Since then, under protection, we received for horned cattle, in 1865, $29.01; 1866, $22.85; 1867, $24.86; 1868, $24.77; 1869, $21.88; 1870, $27.91; 1871, $22.62; 1872, $28.12; 1873, $2.57; 1874, $24: 1875, $21.13; 1876, $23.70; the average in these latter years being quite as high as when they were admitted free from duty. Who, then, pays this tax of 20 per cent. on cattle imported into the United States? The average price per head that we received for sheep in 1854 was $1.75; 1855, $2.16; 1856, $2.83; 1857, $2.88: 1858, $2.20; 1859, $2.29; 1860, $2.76; 1861, $2.72; 1862, $2.47; 1863, $2.75; 1864, $4.58; 1865, $3.61; 1866, $3.40; 1867, 2.33; 1868, $2.28; 1899, $2.32; 1870, $2.63; 1871, $2.64; 1872, $2.87; 1873, $3.03; 1874, $2.74; 1875, $2.63; 1876, $3.59; the average being just as high during the eleven years when duties were imposed as when the sheep were admitted free. Next, take the 1874, $2.74: 1875, $2.63; 1876, $3.59; the average being just as high during the eleven years when duties were imposed as when the sheep were admitted free. Next, take the prices of some of the cereals. In 1854—and mind, this was the period of the Russian war—we received for wheat an average price per bushel of $1.45; in 1855, $1.86; 1856, $1.39; 1857, $1.09; 1858, $0.96; 1859, $1.06; 1860, $1.10; 1861, $1.08; 1862, $0.96; 1863, $0.85; 1864, $0.93; 1865, $0.94; 1866, $1.32; 1867, $1.62; 1868, $1.15; 1869, $1.13; 1870, $1.04; 1871, $1.13; 1872, $1.30; 1873, $1.37; 1874, $1.34; 1875, $1.13; 1876, $1.11. I will now give you the price got for our wool during the same period: 1854, 24c.; 1855, 25c.; 1856, 26c.; 1857, 21c.; 858. 22c.; 1859, 30c.; 1860, 28c.; 1861, 28c.; 1868, 27c.; 1869, 28c.; 1870, 31c.; 1871, 29c.; 1872, 42c.; 1873, 46c.; 1874, 35c.; 1875, 34c.; 1876, 32c. I might go over the prices of barley, rye and other cereals with much the same result, thus establishing the incontrovertible fact, that the of barrey, the and other cereats with much the same result, thus establishing the incontrovertible fact, that the duties imposed by the American Congress upon the products of Canada do not fall upon the people of Canada, but are paid by the consumers of these articles in the United States."

Now, for a number of years there was a protective duty on horses in the United States of 20 per cent., and if that duty had been paid by the American farmer, he would have received smaller prices during the years protection was in force than he did receive in the eleven years of reciprocity; but the fact was, he received higher prices. The average price of a horse paid during the time of the Treaty of 1854, by the figures of the hon: member for Bothwell, was $77.57. The average price during the subsequent eleven years was $94.71. Horses brought, according to these figures, 22 per cent. more during the years of 20 per cent. protection, than during the eleven years of reciprocity. Horned cattle were about the same during the eleven years of reciprocity, and during the eleven years The prices of sheep were about the The average price of wheat during reciprocity was $1.14, and the average price during the eleven years after reciprocity was $1.24, being an increase of 9 per cent. during the eleven years following reciprocity. Wool during reciprocity was 30 cents a pound, and during the eleven years following it was 34½ cents a pound, being 15 per cent. higher during protection than during reciprocity. These are the statements of the hon member for Bothwell made at a picnic held at Fergus, Ontario, on Saturday, July 7, 1878, at which speeches were delivered by Hon. Messrs Mackenzie, Cartwright and Mills. Now, Mr. Speaker, you will see from this that when hon gentlemen opposite were in power they did not believe in this free trade principle that they advocate so strongly now. had a large majority in this House between 1873 and 1878; but in 1878 we placed a policy before the country, and explained to the people what we proposed to do. We appealed to the people, and they elected us by a very large majority. Hon. do not look out they will be in danger of losing their Mr. McLennan.

gentlemen opposite were not satisfied with that, and there was another appeal to the electors with regard to the conduct and legislation and management of the public affairs of this country by the Conservative party; and the electors again decided in our favour. Four times they decided in our favour, and nothing can show a justification of our policy more clearly than that; and as long as hon, gentlemen opposite refuse to tell the electors of the country what they mean by the policy they lay before them, they will continue to remain in the cold shades of Opposition. Now, a good deal has been said in this House about the High Commissioner coming to this country to take part in the elec-tions. The High Commissioner is not an ordinary man. He is the representative of the Government and of this country, and he is supposed to protect its interests; as a Privy Councillor he is sworn to be true and loyal to its institutions, and that being the case, if he thought there was an attempt made by hon, gentlemen opposite to do anything that was against the interests of this country, he was perfectly justified to come to this country and take part in our elections. Now, ashon, gentlemen are so particular about matters of that kind, I would like to say to them that if they want to do away with all interference of officials in elections, they should commence at home. In my county we have a large number of officials of the Provincial Government, who are the most active election agents for the Grit party. I will give you a list of the number of officials we have in Ontario, and every man of them is an active man in elections. There are 321 division court clerks, 347 division court bailiffs, 297 liceuse commissioners, 52 jailers, 45 sheriffs, 43 deputy sheriffs, 52 turnkeys, 41 clerks of the peace, 61 registrars, 61 deputy registrars, 100 license inspectors, 90 police magistrates, 50 wood rangers, foremen on colonization roads, and employees whom they engage at election times, and many more too numerous to mention, paid at the expense of the province, all making up several thousand men; and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, from my experience there is not one of these men who is not most active in the fray when there is an election. The very moment an election is announced, they are up in arms, and when there is a close and tight election, they are not satisfied with the officials in a constituency, but they send the provincial officials all over the country. In my election, a man of the name of Mr. Patullo, from Woodstock, who was the organizer of the party opposite in 1878, and who was then, and is now, county registrar of Oxford, came to my county. I think he also visited the Counties of Stormont, Dundas and Huntingdon. He travelled through the whole of my county taking part in the election, although he was a paid official, as I have said, of the Mowat Government. He is only one of thousands, and you can put them all on a par; there is no difference between them in regard to interfering in elections. Now, there are very many of such in my constituency, but I will simply give the names of certain parties so that their actions may be enquired into. There is one McNab, the license inspector in my constituency, who is the most active man we have in the county. He was a member of this House at one time, and he makes special visits to hotels at election times and intimidates hotel-keepers, telling them that complaints have been made against them and that if they licenses. Morethan that. I tell you, Sir, that neither I nor any other Conservative can afford to even loan money in my constituency upon hotel property, because if I did, and if the property should fall into my hands, I could do nothing with it, as anyone to whom I would lease or rent it could not get When there is an election or an election protest, this commissioner goes around with his hat collecting money; and it is not left to these men to give what they are willing to subscribe, but they must give what the commissioner says they must subscribe, so that a hotel in that county is not worth anything unless it is owned by a Reformer, no Conservative being able to get a license. There is but one exception, and that exception was due solely to the strong fight which was made through the press for the last three years. A widow who has the best hotel in the County of Glengarry, the best hotel, I may say, in the eastern counties, could not get a license, and her only sin was that her husband, who died a few years ago, was a Conservative. But public feeling became so strong that they had at last to give her a license. That is the way the Mowat Government officials are dealing with the hotel-keepers and the people of this country; and I tell you. Sir, the hotel-keepers and everybody under the power of that Government, are not men but slaves, in this province. Now, there is in the County of Glengarry a man named John Macdougal, who was disqualified for seven years on account of his corrupt acts, who was deprived of his franchise during that time, but he was made division court clerk by Mr. Mowat, and in that capacity is most active in promoting the interests of his friends during the elections. He was the chief organizer of the party in the county; he was a stumper and a buttonholer, and he buttonholed every man who came into the county, and the officials of Mr. Mowat buttonhole every man who comes into the county, from one end of it to the When a farmer comes in, this man will ask him: How are the crops? Well, they are not very good, will be the reply. Oh, that miserable Conservative Government, we must get rid of it, they are ruining the country, he will tell the farmer; and the price of grain is so low, we cannot get a good price for anything, and you will never have any luck while the Conservative party are in power. That sort of thing has been going on for years. This man has been the chief organizer and one of the chief stumpers of the Grit party, and, owing to his good conduct in supporting the party and making himself so officious in the elections, he was promoted by Mr. Mowat to the position of County Court clerk, in which position he enjoys, not a salary, but an income of about $3,000—all owing to his being a good boy and getting himself disqualified on account of his corrupt acts during elections. Again, these hon gentlemen talk about interference in elections. The Electeur, one of the organs of the leader of the Opposition, during the last elections, said:

"Two trains of the Grand Trunk Railway, one with twenty-three and another with twenty-seven cars, drawn by three locomotives, arrived at Lévis conveying two thousand Canadian voters, who had come to exercise their right of franchise. All these voters were unanimous in their support of Mr. Laurier and reciprocity, and at all the stations along the road they cheered for Mr. Laurier and commended him to their friends."

Mr. McLENNAN. Hon, gentlemen opposite say, "hear, hear;" that pleases them, but if it was on the other side, would it please them as well? It was all right for the Grand Trunk Railway to do this and bring in voters under their influence, but hon, gentlemen opposite think differently with regard to Sir Charles Tupper and the Canadian Pacific Railway; there is no doubt of that. I have a letter here from a man in my constituency, who writes as follows:—

"The following is a true and unexaggerated statement of the influence brought to bear on me by the Grand Trunk Railway at the last general elections. About the 1st of February I was engaged under C. Durocher, as station hand on the Lancaster section, and about two weeks before the election, the road master, J. McGovern, came to me and asked me which way I was going to vote. I said I was going to vote right, to which he replied: See that you do. His manner and tone implied a threat, and Durocher, the foreman, told us the next day, that he was told to discharge every man who voted for the Conservative candidate. I voted on March 5th, and marked my ballot for the Government candidate. I made no secret of it. The next day, the road master, hearing of this, discharged me, giving no reason for doing so. I am perfectly satisfied the only reason McGovern had was that I had not voted for the Reform party.

(Signed) "R. D. McCORMICK."

Now, I listened the other night to hon, gentlemen speaking on the opposite side, trying, of course, to justify the action of the Reform party during their term of office, and making a comparison with regard to the expenditure and increase of debt, and so forth. I did not expect, when coming to this House as a new member, that I would find any hon, gentleman opposite who would dare to make any comparison between the Government which held office from 1873 to 1878 and the present Goverament. I think they had better let that matter rest. However, an hon. gentleman took upon himself to make a comparison—an unfair comparison, I Now, let us see how this debt has come about, and what we have to show for it. Well, at the time of Confederation in 1867, the Federal Government assumed the debts of the provinces. They assumed the debts of Upper and Lower Canada to the extent of $62,500,000, the debts of Nova Scotia to the extent of about $8,000,000, and of New Brunswick to the extent of about $7,000,000. Dominion Government started in then with a net indebtedness of $75,728,000. We find now that we have a net debt in 1890 of $237,500,000. Since 1867 we have assumed other debts, making in all assumed for them $109,000,000, and we have paid subsidies to the provinces of something over $80,000,000. This will leave a net indebtedness of $47,500,-000-taking out the debts assumed by the Federal Government and the subsidies paid to the provinces, and there can be no objection to charging the subsidies paid to the provinces, because the leader of the Opposition has stated that he is in favour of carrying out the terms of the Quebec conference, let us see what the debt amounts to outside of these items. As I have stated, the debt was $75,728,000 in 1867, and it was $237,500,000 in 1890, an increase of $161,000,000 since Confederation. During the Reform administration of five years, the increase was $40,500,000. I want the party opposite, and the country to distinctly understand that they must be held responsible for the time that they were in office, and we are willing on this side of the House to be responsible for any increase of debt during the time that the Conservative party have been in power. Between 1873 and 1878, they added to the debt $40,500,000. We will add to that the Fishery Award which was paid to those hon, gentlemen during the last year of their administration, amounting to $4,500,000, which makes a total increase of $45,000,000 during their five years of office, or an average increase in the debt of $9,000,000 a year. The increase in the debt during the Conservative Government, for eighteen years, was $121,000,000, less the provincial debts assumed since 1867—and, as there is no such charge against hon, gentlemen opposite and it is not an ordinary transaction, we have a right to credit ourselves with that amount—and that leaves a total increase in the debt, in the eighteen years, of $90,000,000, or a Conservative annual increase of $5,000,000, or $4,000,000 less than the average increase during the administration of hon, gentlemen opposite. Between 1873 and 1878, the increase in interest was 27 cents, or an average increase of 5% cents per capita a year. From 1878 to 1890, the increase has been 7½ cents a year against 53 cents a year during their term of office. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) made a statement in 1884, which is reported in Hansard, vol. I, page 597, in which he said it would be better for this country to borrow three or four hundred million dollars and throw it into the ocean or blaze it away in fireworks than to have this Government in power and to have the money spent in that way. I am surprised that any hon, gentleman holding the position socially and politically that the hon. gentleman from South Oxford holds, and the chief critic of the Reform party, should make such reckless statements. Even supposing our railways and canals, and the Parliament buildings where we are now standing. were of no use at all, as stated by the hon. gentleman, still the money which had been expended in the country on those works is a benefit to the people. That was a reckless statement, and an hon. gentleman holding such a position as he does in this country and in this House, whether his position is to be envied or not, at all events holding the position he does in his party, ought not to make such a reckless statement; and when he does make such a statement, what faith can you have in any statements he makes afterwards upon other subjects? The expenditure of the money of this country has not been recklessly carried on. In the United Kingdom the railways cost $216,000 a mile, in Belgium $177,000, in France $143,000 a mile, in Germany $103,000, in Russia $97,000 a mile, in Austria $97,000 a mile, in Victoria $66,000 a mile, in India over $64,000 a mile, in New South Wales $64,000 a mile, and in Canada only $56,900 a mile. So you can see that our railways have not cost any way as much as those in other countries, and the rates charged for our carrying trade are much cheaper than in any other country in the world. In England it is 2 cents per ton per mile, in Germany 1.70 cents, in Belgium 1:57 cents, in France 2:14 cents, in Italy 2:40 cents, in Holland 1:50 cents, in Russia 2.32 cents, in the United States 1.04 cents, and in Canada only 93 cents per ton per mile. We have more miles of railway in proportion to our population than any other country. In Great Britain and in Europe, the population per mile of railway averages 3,224, and in Canada it averages 491, while our carrying trade is cheaper than in any country in the world. Now, as the hon gentleman opposite at that time in regard to the building of said he thought it would be better that money the Canadian Pacific Railway? I say it is a most Mr. McLennan.

should be thrown away in the ocean or blown away in fireworks than spent as it has been by this Government, let us see what we have done with that money. Our canals and river improvements have cost us about $36,000,000. We have the finest lakes and rivers in the known world; we have a chain of navigation from Port Arthur and Duluth to the Straits of Belle Isle and through to Liverpool, a distance of 4,500 miles. Nature has done a great deal for this country in the way of lakes, rivers and harbours, and she also placed difficulties in the way which had to be overcome, and that could only be overcome by the use of large sums of money. Unconnected these lakes and rivers would not make an open chain of navigation, and we have connected them by the expenditure of a large sum of money in building artificial waterways in the way of capals. We have the Intercolonial Railway, which has cost us somewhere in the neighbourhood of $46,000,000; and I think every hon, member in this House will admit that it was necessary in the interest of this country to build that road. Again, the debts of the provinces have been assumed, since 1867, to the extent of $31,000,000, and we have expended on the Canadian Pacific Railway about $62,000,000, and these four items make a total expenditure of $175,500,000. In these four items alone we have $13,500,000 more than the total increase of the debt, and if we include the amounts paid in subsidies to the provinces since 1867, $80,000,000, we will have $93,000,000 more than the whole increase of the debt, to say nothing about all the other public works, Parliament buildings, post offices, Custom-houses, railway subsidies to other railways, light-houses, docks. wharves, and a thousand other improvements of an expensive and useful character, necessary for the improvement and development of the country. So far as the expenditure of our money is concerned, I think any reasonable man in this House or in the country will admit that it has been properly and wisely expended. Now we will come to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have done considerable work on railways myself as a contractor, not only upon that railway but others as well. Between 1873 and 1878 hon, gentlemen opposite tried to introduce a scheme to build that road. They wanted to build it by water, to utilize the water stretches. Well, you can understand a man going up to the North-West Territories with his family, and furniture, and various effects of all descriptions; you can understand what a time he would have getting to that country through this route the hon, gentlemen proposed to build. Go by rail, then a piece by water, then cross a bridge by tramway, then take a scow, then another tug or a Red river cart, and he might get there, but he would have a pretty lively time of it before he got to his journey's end. A few years ago there was a great cry throughout the country that we did not have cars enough to bring down here all the wheat they had in the North-West. Well, now I would ask how would you get down 15,000,000 bushels of wheat by this line that the hon. gentlemen proposed to build? It is only for a few months during the summer that their line could be used; and how would you be able to get that wheat down here? Is there any man in this House or in the country who will justify the policy of the hon, gentlemen fortunate thing for this country that they did not get anybody with confidence enough in the scheme to enter into a contract with them and to put their money into it. It would be just throwing so much money away if they had succeeded in getting anybody to build that road. Well, when they started out, they could not get anybody to take the contract, and they started out to build it themselves, and at the rate they were going on it would take them about 100 years to complete the road, and we would never see it completed. However, the elections came round and the people saw the fallacy of their scheme and the mismanagement of their administration during the time they were in power. They were turned out, and Sir John and his Government came into power in 1878. Confidence was restored to the country, and Sir John's Government entered into a contract to build and equip the road from ocean to ocean. During the letting of the contract hon, gentlemen opposite placed every obstacle they could in the way, and they brought forward a company which was said to be a bogus company at the time. I do not know why the gentlemen composing that company should lend themselves to anything of that kind. You will understand the dishonour of a thing of that kind if you were to let a contract and then allow another man to follow and say, I will do it cheaper than this man, and then you took it away from the first man and give it to the second I tell you that a man, or a railway company, or any other corporation that would do that sort of thing are not deserving of any trust or confidence in any way whatever. The moment the contract was let, hon, gentlemen opposite at once commenced crying down the country, and injuring its credit and preventing this Government, if possible, building the road. They said the North-West was a barren wilderness and that Dakota and Texas were more suitable States in which our people should settle. Unfortunately very many people in this country took this advice and went, but they are returning as rapidly as they can and are settling in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. They said the construction of the road would plunge us into bankruptcy, that it would not pay the axle grease, and that it would cost $8,000,000 a year to run it, that it was impossible to build it within ten years, that British Columbia was "a sea of mountains." They further said the whole credit of the country could not build the road; and if we loaned $30,000,000 to assist in constructing the road we would never get it returned to the treasury. In fact, they painted every-thing as black as possible. Let me now pre-sent the other side of the case. What would have happened to this country if this $30,000,000 loan had not been granted? But it was granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and we have got it back. The contract was let as stated, and completed in five years, not in ten years as hon. gentlemen said it was impossible to complete it in, and not in 100 years, the time it would have taken hon; gentlemen opposite to build it if the task had been left in their hands, and if from a farming standpoint, but they forget to make they had proceeded with the work as they were doing it when they were routed from office. And it has paid the axle grease for the wheels and it has not better cultivated than is the land in Canada, not cost the country $8,000,000 a year to run it, and does not give as large a yield; and from the

and it has been found that our North-West lands are better than Texas or Dakota. The road is paying well, the stock is advancing, the $30,000,000 loan has been paid back, and many millions of dollars have been circulated through the country. Let me ask what would have happened the country if this $30,000,000 loan had not been granted. The Canadian Pacific Railway would have been bankrupt, the financial institutions of the country would have been bankrupt, the wholesale men would have been bankrupt, as would have been the manufacturers, and, in fact, the position of the country would have been such that fifty years would have been required to recover. Let me now show the amount of money expended on the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. From Montreal to Vancouver the distance is 2,906 miles. The average cost of our railways is about $57,000 This would make on the main line a per mile. cost of $165,642,000, and taking $62,000,000, which the country has paid for the building of the road, it would leave on the main line an outlay of outside capital of $103,642,000, which was expended in this country. Again, there are about 4,000 miles more of branch lines built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which, taking the average cost of railways in Canada at $57,000 per mile, would necessitate a capital expenditure of $228,000,000. After deducting the $62,000,000 paid the Canadian Pacific Railway in cash, there was actually expended an outside capital of $103,000,000 and $228,-000,000, making in all $331,000,000 spent in the country by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We have the railway, and they cannot take it away from us, and it is as useful to us as if it had been built by the Government. The land we gave is open for settlement and cannot be taken out of the country, and every dollar received for land The Opposition is invested in the railway. desired that the Government should build this road and increase the debt of the country by over $100,-000,000 on the main line. Again, they said the Government should operate the road, because it would not pay the axle grease and would cost $8,000,000 a year to run it. This alone would be 4 per cent. on $200,000,000. This would be verily a prontable investment for the country, first increasing the debt by $100,000,000, then operating it at a cost of $8,000,000 a year. Thus we are saving 4 per cent. on $200,000,000 by allowing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to run the road. Such were the predictions of hon, gentlemen opposite in connection with this great enterprise, and these, as well as their predictions regarding the developments of this country, have proved erroneous. This is their past record, and this is the only means we have of judging of their ability. They have opposed everything and they have accomplished nothing themselves. They say that Mr. Abbott should not be Premier of this Government. because at one time he was chief adviser of this great enterprise, which they could not carry out successfully. This is, I consider, the greatest certificate of ability that could be given to Mr. Abbott. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about the United States and want us to join hands with them, comparisons between this and any other country. Let me say that the land in the United States is statistics that have been presented to the House, it does not appear that the American farmers are to be envied even although they have a market of Wisconsin 500,000,000 " 30,000,000 " 34,020,000 " 30,000 " 30,000 " 30,000 " 30,000 " 30,000 " 30,000 " 60,000,000 people at their doors. They are hopelessly in debt and they have chattel mortgages, land mortgages, bills of sale, and mortgages on their crops growing in the fields before they are harvested. I have a statement here showing the mortgages on the farms in some States of the United States which I will read to the House. In ten States of the American Union an examination was had as to the amount of farm mortgages, with the following result as reported by the New York

It is estimated that there are mortgages in the United States to the extent of $9,000,000,000, or at the rate of $144 per head for every man, woman and child in the United States. That is the state of things in that country. Now, if we take the States bordering on Canada, we find that they are not increasing in population, according to the last census, at the same rate as the population of Canada is increasing. According to the last census, the acreage of land cultivated in the United States increased by only 11 per cent., whereas the acreage of land under cultivation in Canada increased by 43 per cent. If you compare the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, with the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Massachusetts, you will find that the population of these Canadian provinces has increased a great deal faster than the population of the States I have mentioned. During the last twenty years the decrease in crops in these States has been 3,500,000 bushels, whereas the increase in the Canadian provinces I have mentioned has been 16,000,000 bushels. Therefore, our provinces are going ahead, while those States are drying up and becoming deserted by the farming community. The Department of Agriculture at Washington gives the yield of the same four States since 1880, and it shows a falling off in their crops to the extent of 1,300,000 bushels in eight years, while our provinces have improved. Dakota, that land of milk and honey to which hon. gentlemen opposite advised our farmers and young men to go, is in a terrible state of destitution. Their lands, teams, implements, horses, cattle, growing crops and everything they possess are mortgaged. They are paying 2 and 3 per cent. per month on their mortgages, and the farmers in that State are now leaving their lands in the hands of the capitalists, and returning to be prosperous in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. The following report is furnished by the Bankers' Monthly, a United States publication of excellent reputation, entirely free from party or faction, and it presents a sad spectacle. The mortgage indebtedness of:

Summing it all up shows us that the farms of these States alone are mortgaged to the tune of $3,441,-000,000 and of which the interest alone, computed at 6 per cent., which is much below the usual rate paid there, would amount to $206,406 per annum-and yet the farmers of these States have enjoyed all the advantages of the 60 million market at their very doors. This is the point I wish to bring out. It will be seen that with all these advantages, their future is one of abject poverty "if not slavery." The six States mortgaged for $3,441,-000,000, and the average mortgage per State is $573,500,000. Now let us see about England. In England the average yield in grain is 29 bushels per acre, but owing to the amount of grain raised in other countries and the reduction in price, this became unprofitable and the area of wheat acreage has decreased about 27 percent, during the last ten years. Before the Depression Committee in England, Sir James Cairn and others, the highest authorities in England on agricultural matters, have estimated that the tenants' capital in ten years (1875) to 1885) £81,000,000 has been reduced by That the tenant farmer had actually sterling. lost in ten years a sum equal to over $400,000,000. That since 1885 there has been no improvement whatever in the condition of the farmers of Great Britain but they are still on the down grade. According to the annual returns of the Loan Companies and Building Societies in Canada, the amount overdue in 1880 was $4,130,557, and in 1890 only $2,055,427. This shows over $20,000 less than half overdue principal on the mortgages in favour of 1890. This will show the condition of the farmer and his ability to pay now as compared with some years ago. The amount of foreclosures was, in 1880, $2,096,956, and in 1890, $2,062,033. Here are less foreclosures in 1890 than in 1880 by over $34,000. By looking carefully into statistics of both countries I find that the mortgage indebtedness in the United States is at least over per cent. higher than We have settlements in Canada, Sir, with not a dollar of mortgage. The people have comfortable brick houses, substantial outbuildings and good furniture, with pianos and organs; they have covered carriages, and our young men can smoke their Havana cigars and drive their girls to the picnics. We have prosperity in our country, and we have no depression and misery such as they have in the States of the American Union. Hon. gentlemen opposite have told us that there has been a great depreciation in the value of land in Canada of late years. But we must remember that we have opened up a great deal of new land in the North-West and many of our young men are going to the North-West and taking up farms, and that would naturally throw a good deal more land upon the market in this section of the country. But take the North-West, and take the Dominion of Canada from one end of it to the other, and you will find that the value of our property has largely increased if we consider the value of the land, the implements, the stock, and the improvements. Now, a great deal has been said about the manufacturers, and hon. gentlemen opposite try to make the farmers believe that they should be driven clean | ment at the time. That report shows that in April, out of the country. Well, the farmers do not be- 1880, the price of wheat was 711 cents, while in lieve that. I know myself, of my own personal September of the same year the price was $2, knowledge, that in my constituency there is not a Therefore, according to the argument of hon. town or village or cross-roads but would be glad to gentlemen opposite, in April we would have a very have a manufacturing industry started there; and poor Government, because the price of wheat was although hon, gentlemen opposite call them legal- so low, and in September, when the price was high, ized robbers, we would be glad to get some of these we would have the most magnificent Government legalized robbers to start business among us. Now, in regard to the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, though the comparison made by the hon, member for Bothwell was not favourable to that treaty, there were circumstances at that time that should be taken into considera-The Russian war was going on, and there was also fighting in the United States. The people were not producers at that time, either in the United States, in Russia, or in Great Britain; so that we had an open market for everything we wished to sell; and I believe that if the same condition of things existed now, it would be a great benefit to this country, whether we had reciprocity or not. Now, when hon, gentlemen opposite speak of the depression in Canada—and they certainly take a great deal of trouble to show that there is a depression in our own country-I think it would look reasonable and fair if they made a comparison with some other coun-Their whole aim seems to be to belittle their own country; they seem as if they would like the outside world to believe that we are paupers, and cannot live without the assistance of our American friends across the border. Now, with regard to reciprocity in natural products, I have no doubt we should derive some advantage from it in the case of many articles, and I am in favour of it if it can be got upon fair and honourable terms. I am in favour of reciprocal trade relations with the United States in a fair way; but I am not in favour of giving away everything we have and receiving nothing in return. I am bound to stand by my nationality and my country, and our connection with the British Empire. We will always uphold that and stand by it. At the same time, anything! we can do that is in reason, and consistent with the best interests of the country and with maintaining our rights, I am in favour of. I think it is quite proper that we should enter, as early as possible, into a fair treaty, such as the Government are anxious to get with the United States. But I am opposed to the United States having the management of our revenue and taxation; I am opposed to adopting their Customs duties, which are twice as high as ours, and direct taxation along with them; and under the principle which hon. gentlemen opposite are advocating, we would not have the management of our Customs duties. something has been said about the price of wheat, and one hon gentleman opposite, I think from Huron, tried to make out that when grain was cheap the policy of this Government was to blame Now, I have a statement of the prices of for that. wheat from 1873 to 1889, showing the highest price and the lowest price for every year; and I would just say that this report was taken from the books of Ogilvie & Co., Montreal, the largest grain dealers in Canada. I got it some time ago, and they did say about your tobacco and whiskey. Mr. Wiman,

You see that kind of argument goes any attention to it. We know that the home the production of grain in other countries has been so great of late years that it is perhaps the cause of the falling off in price here. Although you hear hon, gentlemen opposite saying a great deal about our young men going across to the United States, you find that very few of them are doing business there in a farming way. I find that the average of our wheat growth per acre in Canada is about 8 bushels more than it is in the United States. Now, with regard to this issue of unrestricted reciprocity which has been before the country, I shall have to say a few words concerning that. The Hon. Edward Blake said that unrestricted reciprocity would be discrimination against England and would lead to political union with the United States. Now, there are many hon, gentlemen opposite who should not refuse to accept the opinion of Mr. Blake. Mr. Blake was a very honest man in their estimation; he has been the leader of that party for many years, and that is what he says of unrestricted reciprocity. Now, Mr. Blaine says that you cannot remain under the British flag and deal with the United States; that if you want the advantages of the market of the United States, you must become Americans. is no uncertain sound about that, so far as Blaine and the Republicans of the United States are concerned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is the reason of the two visits to Washington.

Mr. KENNY. By whom?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Finance and Sir Charles Tupper, if you want to

Mr. McLENNAN. But the Minister of Finance and Sir Charles Tupper went in the day-time. The hon, gentleman opposite from South Oxford went between two days. Perhaps the hon, gentleman does not like to hear this. The Hon. Mr. Hitt had reported a resolution from the Committee of Foreign Affairs to the House of Representatives, proposing commercial union with Canada. described that union in these terms:

"What is commercial union with Canada. It means, as set out in this resolution, the adoption by both countries of precisely the same tariff of duties or taxes to be levied on goods coming from abroad, abolishing altogether our line of Custom-houses on the north, by which we collect tariff duties on goods coming from Canada; abolishing their Custom-houses along the same line by which they collect duties on goods we send into Canada, and leaving intercourse as unrestricted between this country and Canada as it is between the States. The line of Custom-houses will follow the sea and include both countries. The internal revenue system of taxes on liquors and tobacco internal revenue system of taxes on liquors and tobacco in the two countries would also have to be made uniform in both."

They will not even allow you to have anything to not know what I wanted it for; I was not in Parlia- in the United States, pointed out the means to capture Canada; and I am sorry to have to say it, but the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has been agitating, in and out of Parliament, the doctrine which will bring utter ruin to Canada and dependence upon the United States, and his party are agitating in that line as well. In the Boston Herald of the 22nd January, it was reported that Mr. Murray, the celebrated American author, found fault with unrestricted reciprocity, as introduced by Mr. Wiman, on the ground that it did not ensure the annexation of Canada to Mr. Wiman, who was the the United States. originator of the schene, who is the real leader of the party opposite, briefly replied to the arguments used by Mr. Murray. He pointed out that if it was desired to lessen the power of England, that end could not be accomplished better than by Canada trading with the United States and ceasing to trade with Great Britain. thing Mr. Murray wants to accomplish," said Mr. Wiman, "will be better accomplished by the plan I propose than by the plan he proposes." there is no uncertain sound about that to anybody who understands the meaning of the language used by these gentlemen. What does Mr. Farrer say in a letter dated Toronto, 22nd April, 1889, to Mr. Wiman? Mr. Farrer says:

"Secondly, the general belief is that the Republicans would not listen to any such scheme. Thirdly, a very large number of persons are inclined to think we had better make for annexation at once instead of wasting two bites on the cherry. Lastly, the old parties here are rapidly breaking up, and when Sir John goes, we shall be adrift without a port in sight, save annexation. Moreover, although the Liberals have taken up commercial union they are not pushing it with any vigour."

"When Sir John is dead, there will be no port in sight save annexation," is the opinion expressed by the leading editor of the leading organ of the Reform party, who was engaged by one of the leaders of the Reform party, who now sits in this House. Sir, newspaper men are supposed to be the educators of public opinion; and this is the direction in which this gentleman, the mouthpiece of the Liberal party, is educating the people of Canada. If hon, gentlemen opposite are not in sympathy with the opinions of their editor, who is managing their leading journal, it is their duty at once to get rid of him; and so long as they keep him in their employment as leading writer on their chief organ, they endorse the policy he advocates A little further on, in the through that paper. same letter, Mr. Farrer says:

"The littleness and half-heartedness of the Liberals is also very disheartening. Then, again, the truth is, that every man who preaches commercial union would prefer annexation, so that the party is virtually wearing a mask."

Now, hon, gentlemen opposite began preaching commercial union and then changed to unrestricted reciprocity. The editor of their chief organ says that every man who advocated commercial union would prefer annexation, and that they were wearing a mask. They were wearing a mask in mine and other constituencies, when they would not explain what they meant by this policy of unrestricted reciprocity. And he adds:

"Can't you come around this way and have a talk?
"Yours very truly,

(Signed) "E. FARRER."

Mr. Hitt says:

"There is some logic in what Farrer says of not making two bites of a cherry, but going for annexation at once."
Mr. McLennan.

Now, Sir, you will see the conspiracy that is being worked against the people of this country, and you will see, from the very facts I have given and the letters that changed hands between these parties, that there was a conspiracy working, and that these gentlemen were wearing a mask; and they said that if they could only get Sir John-our late lamented leader, whom we are all sorry to lose, and who was so good, and true, and loyal to the interests of this country-out of the way, there would be no port in sight but annexation. hon, gentlemen opposite have been to the United States very often previous to the last election. We never noticed that disposition on their part before. We never before saw our Canadian politicians parading the United States to such an extent as the hon, gentlemen opposite did. They included in banquets there, and were going to hand over our country to the United States, and some of them were going to be elected senators and all that sort of thing, and they were having a grand And, as I said before, they time generally. speeches and had speeches of theirs reported which they did not make. Why were they over there? They ask what authority has this Government to send representatives to Washington? This Government has authority to negotiate with the United States and enter into a treaty with regard to trade relations with the United States, if it thinks such a treaty advisable. But the Opposition had no authority to pledge this country to anything; and if they did pledge this country, it must have been on the understanding that they would receive some assistance from the Americans in return for the sacrifice they were going to make to the United States of this country. Here are Mr. Longley of Nova Scotia, and Mr. Wiman, and Mr. Farrer, and the Ontario and Quebec representatives, down in Boston, New York and Washington. Here are these letters which I have read. It is right and proper, and I have always understood it so, to judge men generally by the company they keep. Now, the company that the hou, gentleman has kept was hostile to the interests of this country. have here an extract from a Buffalo paper. find that the press of the United States, and the press of Great Britain, and of all other countries have pronounced upon this subject, and they say this would lead to political union, that it would lead to annexation. Here are disinterested opinions, and disinterested opinions on matters of this kind are certainly of some value. The Buffalo News says:

"There are many Canadians now in the Liberal party who favour free trade relations, but are not prepared to go so far as to support unrestricted reciprocity because they regard it as the first step towards annexation, for which they are not prepared. Their opinion on this matter cannot be successfully combatted. Commercial union would compel Canada to adopt our tariff policy, and the loss of fiscal independence would pave the way for the loss of political independence. Besides, under such conditions there would be a discrimination against England in favour of the United States, and that would about snap the loose tie that now binds Canada to the mother country. Every vote cast for the Liberal candidate in most of the constituencies at least will be, in effect, a vote for annexation, since commercial union must lead to that. We have never been able to form any idea over here just how much feeling for annexation there is in Canada, but this contest will give something of a notion. Should the Liberals triumph all doubts will be set at rest as to what is Canada's destiny. It will not be so many years before she will be knocking at the door of Uncle Sam."

Now, as I have stated, unrestricted reciprocity would cause a considerable falling off of revenue, say $12,000,000, and the goods which now come from Great Britain would be manufactured in the United States, and we would lose the benefit of that revenue or at least two-thirds of he Customs duty on the goods that now come from England. We would practically surrender nearly all our Customs revenues. Worse than that, our import trade would be destroyed and transferred from the St. Lawrence and ports in Canada to ports in the United States, such as Portland, Boston and New York. Now let me make a comparison between the Governments of this country and the United States. The Federal Government at Washington collect all Customs and Excise duty. They assume no State debts. They grant no subsidies to States. Upon the State Governments fall the charges of administration of justice, civil and criminal; they maintain the militia, the quarantine and public health; they provide the penitentiaries. If they want public works, they must provide them at their own expense. Take, for illustration, the canals in a few of The State of New York has the States. paid about $65,000,000, Pennsylvania about $44,000,000, Virginia about $8,500,000, Ohio $20,000,000, Delaware over $3,500,000, Maryland about $11,500,000, Illinois about $6,500,000, Indiana $7,000,000, New Jersey $7,000,000, and the same thing throughout the remainder of the United States. The Federal Government of Canada collect all Customs and Excise duty, they have assumed the debts of the provinces to the extent of $109,000,000, they pay $4,000,000 to the provinces every year, they build railways and canals, they provide for the administration of justice, the militia and penitentiaries and other mat-ters of that kind. Thus you will see that, under government in the the system of States, if adopted here, the Provincial Governments would have to raise this by direct taxation, were we put under the same system of government as that of the United States, by directly taxing the people in the same way as nunicipal taxes are levied. In the next place, the farmers and property holders would have to pay an indirect tax in proportion to the taxes levied upon the people of the United States, which are much higher than those levied upon the people of Canada. I think this would be jumping out of the frying pan into the fire. There would be a deficiency in revenue amounting $16,000,000 which would have to be collected by direct taxation; there would be the interest on $109,000,000 of provincial debts, amounting to $4,500,000 a year; there would be the subsidies to provinces of $4,000,000; and as the leader of the Opposition says he endorses the Quebec conference, the result of that would add about $2,000,000. Then for canals and public works we would have to pay $5,000,000, for the administration of justice, militia, &c., $2,000,000. Then there would be the expense in collecting this revenue, the cost of collectors and bailiffs to make seizures in collecting this money from the poor farmers, which would amount to, say, $1,000,000 more. This would make a total of $34,500,000, or a payment of $7 per head upon the whole population of Canada. At that rate, a county with a population of 22,000 would

$3,500,000. My experience is that the property holders do not believe in this enormous taxation, and I doubt very much if they will ever endorse the policy of hon.gentlemen opposite while it leads in that direction. And this you will see accounts for the indebtedness of the United States, because they have to pay a high duty and an indirect tax. They have to pay a direct tax to support the State Government, and they have to collect their municipal tax besides, and this accounts for their great mortgage indebtedness, and they will never get out of it unless things are very much changed. Now, as I stated before, the Provincial Governments will have to make their own improvements and build their own railways and canals. And I draw the attention of the hon, gentleman for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), to the condition his province would be in, and he had better consider this before going into an agreement of this kind if he wants the Prince Edward Island tunnel built. We know that the State of Massachusetts had to build its own tunnel, and under this new system the Province of Prince Edward Island would be allowed to build its own tunnel, and that would have to be done by an assessment on property. Now, they talk about free trade. A gentleman here last night talked a good deal about free trade. Well, it is a very fine thing to preach free trade to the people throughout the country if it meant free trade and nothing more; if they could run this Government without any money, and build their railways and canals for nothing, then certainly a free trade Government would be a very fine Government. But I cannot see for the life of me how the Government of this country can be carried on with much less money than it is now. I cannot see how the position can be any better. Hon. gentlemen opposite certainly did not do very well when they were in power before, and we can only judge them from their past record. Free trade, of course, sounds very fine, but money must be had to carry on the affairs of the country. England is a free trade country, but it is not such a cheap country to live in after all, and it is not such a free trade country as people generally suppose. In the first place, they collect over $100,-000,000 revenue on what they call luxuries, and one of the luxuries is tea. They collect over $25,000,000 on tea alone, which we consider a necessity. Every poor man in that country uses tea, and every poor man in this country uses tea. Then on excise, the license system, carriage tax, they collect $130,-000,000. There is a charge against every carriage a man uses in that country. I think it is 2 guineas for every four-wheel carriage with two horses, and l guinea for a four-wheel carriage with one horse. The farmers in this country generally have plenty of carriages, and they would find it expensive if they had to pay 2 guineas on every two-horse carriage, and I guinea on every single-horse carriage. England raises on stamps alone $69,000,000. Now, that is nearly double the whole amount of money that we spend in this country. They pay for every note of hand, every agreement, every insurance, every arbitration, and everything that represents money or in which money is mentioned, they have to put on stamps in proportion to the amount, that means a tax of about $2 per head. Then there is the income tax, a house and land tax which amount to $381,000,000, or $10 per have to pay $154,000 a year, or intwenty-three years head. That is free trade. But I do not think that the people of this country would care about such free trade as that. Remember that with a direct tax you cannot catch the masses of the people, you cannot catch the floating population. A man might be able to live grandly, he might entertain his friends in a club or in some fine hotel with the best champagne, but you cannot reach him by direct taxation; so the property holder would not only have to pay his own proportion of taxes by a direct tax, as hon. gentlemen opposite propose to levy upon him, but he would have to pay a proportion of every other man's taxes, and it would come pretty hard upon him. As I said, Mr. Speaker, there are a great many public works going on in the country, and it is necessary to know who we should entrust with the responsibility of building and administering them. Now I want to draw your attention to a statement that was made by an hon, gentleman opposite a few days ago, that reflects upon the honour and credit of the nationalities of this country. I have it here, it is not necessary for me to read it, but I take this opportunity of saying a few words about the utterances of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman that I allude to is the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). In this House on the 24th of June, he spoke of the untrustworthiness of Scotchmen, Englishmen and Irishmen in consequence of their excessive use of intoxicating liquors. The hon. gentleman said that Scandinavians, Bavarians, Italians, and even Chinamen, were superior, or were considered so by contractors and by captains of steamers, who preferred them to Scotchmen, Irishmen, Englishmen, Americans, Frenchmen or any other people of this country, When I say Americans, these are the people I have referred to. Scotchmen will regard with just indignation and resent the words which have been spoken by a man of their own nationality. Scotchmen in their early days, were pure and honest. Scotchmen do not deserve any such treatment, particularly from We can go back a man of their own nationality. to the days of Prince Charlie when there were £30,000 offered for his head. There were hun: dreds of people in that neighbourhood who knew The people at that time well of his hiding-place. were so poor that many families had to live on the milk of one cow, but not one of them was so dishonourable as to betray their trust. I say, then, that no man can make any insinuations or truthful charge against Scotchmen, and he is making a mistake if he does it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I believe I was the gentleman who made the statement, and what I stated was that Scotchmen, Englishmen and Irishmen, when they were working on a bridge across the Firth of Forth, went from work into a hotel and put themselves into such a state of intoxication that they could not be trusted when they came back to their work, and the contractor who was building the bridge had to employ foreigners who would come back sober to their work; and I stated that they were superior to Scotchmen, Englishmen and frishmen only when men of these nationalities indulged in the national evil of intoxication.

Mr. McLENNAN. If I am allowed the privilege, I would be very glad to read what the hon. gentleman said:

ment from the contractor for the construction of the bridge over the Firth of Forth, in which it was stated that in building the bridge, it was found that the workmen of Brechin had fallen into such a condition that when men Brechin had fallen into such a condition that when men were required who were prepared at all times to do their duty, the contractor had to employ Italians and Bavarians. After the Scotchmen had worked two or three hours, which was the time they were able to work on the foundations of the bridge, the moment they left work they went to the hotels, and when they again returned to take their places they were not capable of performing their duties. Hence foreigners were put in their places, and the long-boasted British workmen had to give place to men who were not, I believe, superior, but interior, except for this drinking evil. I also saw recently the statement of a sea captain sailing between the old country and Australia. When asked what kind of sailors he preferred, he said he would not have Englishmen, Irishmen, Scotchmen or Americans. When asked his reasons, he said they went ashore when the vessel reached port and got drunk and fell into the hands of the police, and there was no satisfaction in employing them. Then he was asked as to the nationalities of the men he employed. He replied Italians, Danes and Norwegians, with whom he said he had no trouble: and for cooks he chose Chinese. These nationalities are superseding British sailors in sailing British vessels."

The pages of history are full of the records of Scotchmen, and there never was a battle fought by the British that was creditable to them but Scotsmen took a foremost part in it. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) the other day acted in even a worse manner in regard to the Scotch nationality. He appeared to be insulted because he was called a Scotchman and said to speak broad Scotch. I am a Scotchman, and I am proud of my nationality, and if a man refers to me as a Scotchman and says I talk Gaelic, it is the greatest compliment he can confer on me. I have been a contractor for many years, and my knowledge of Scotchmen does not bear out the statement of the hon. member for South Huron. I have talked to other contractors and they agree with me. It may be that the hon. member for South Huron is not the originator of the statement he made in this House, but he is the man who dragged it into the Parliament of Canada to be placed in Hansard, to be spread broadcast from one end of the Dominion to the other, and to be placed on our records for generations to come. I would say this, that a Scotchman or a Canadian Scotchman going to United States cannot carry with him a better certificate of character than the fact that he is a Scotchman or the son of a Scotchman. Although the hon. member for Huron may not have originated the statement he made, he is legally and morally responsible for the words he used. Another hon, gentleman, I refer to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), insulted the Highlanders of this country a few years ago. They resented that insult, and the result, and the consequence has been that the hon. gentleman has gone through the country like a wandering Jew, trying to find a constituency that would take him ir. It is not necessary to say anything respecting the qualities of Scotchmen, or as to what they have done. Speaking of Scotchmen, I may say, that the progress and development of this country is largely due to Scotchmen. They have filled the most responsible and important positions in this country and the world. Even the greatest financial institution, the Bank of England, was founded and run by Scotchmen. Scotchmen have been the most prominent men in the Parliament of Great Britain and in this country. They "I heard the other day of a condition of things in my have been the most prominent men financially, native land for which I was ashamed. I read a state-commercially and in every position of life. It is an Mr. McLennan.

ill bird that fouls its own nest. Hon, gentlemen opposite have for years spoken disparagingly of this country and its people. It is time there should be an end to it, and the electors of South Huron, and the country generally, will resent with just indignation the words which have been spoken by the hon, member. Let me read to the House a few words from the introductory remarks taken from the history of the 42nd Highlanders. Speaking of the character of the Highland soldier, the writer says:

"He was taught to consider courage as 'the most honourable virtue, cowardice as the most disgraceful failing; to venerate and obey his chief, and to devote himself to his native country and clan and thus prepared to be a soldier, he was ready to follow wherever honour and duty called him. With such principles and regarding any disgrace he might bring on his clan and district as the cruelest misfortune, he appreciates the value of a good name.
His aim is fixed and must terminate in victory or death.
He goes on the field resolved not to disgrace his name, be victorious or die on the ground he maintains. The striking characteristic of the Highlander is that all his actions seems to flow from sentiment. By kind treatment you can lead him to mouth of cannon if properly directed.
Will rather die than be unfaithful to his trust."

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have gone into the subject more fully than I expected. I thank you and the House for your patience and kindness in listening to me so long. I have dealt with the tactics of the Opposition at the last election, the increase in the debt, and the improvement and development of the country; the building of our public works, notably the Canadian Pacific Railway; the depression and misery among agriculturists in the United States; the decrease in acreage and value of property in England; the agricultural condition of Canada; unrestricted reciprocity and discrimination against Great Bri-I would say, Mr. Speaker, that taking everything into consideration and making a fair comparison between all countries, that we are better off than any other country in the world. Our forests are worth many millions a year. Our minerals are worth many millions. Our fish are worth many millions. Our agricultural and animal products are worth many millions. Our North-West Territory wheat lands are the best in the world and they produce more to the acre than any other country in America. They produce the best class of wheat which commands the best price and makes the best flour. Our insurance companies and all financial institutions have increased during the last few years. We have a good country. If we stand true to our country our country will stand true to us, and we will build in Canada a country second to none in the world. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the attention you have given to my remarks.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. Speaker, I purpose making some observations on this very important subject. It is no doubt quite true, Sir, that very much has been said, and very much well said, on both sides of the House on this question. It is natural, it appears, that matters of a political character should strike our minds in different directions, and we are prepared to expect a certain latitude in discussing questions of great import to this country. In the speeches that have been delivered on this subject by members on the other side of the House; taking them collectively, we find that they all agree to this fact: that the condition of the farmers in the United States is most deplorable. I may, perhaps, make an exception of the Minister of Finance, but, with that exception, all the other speakers on the Government side of the House have led the House and country to believe that the condition of the farmers in the United States is most deplorable. thought it a strange thing for the Government of this country to dissolve the House for the avowed purpose of making a treaty with a people so de-plorably poor as the people of the United States are said to be by hon, gentlemen opposite. It strikes me as a very peculiar thing that the gentlemen who decry everything in the United States, dissolved Parliament and placed in the mouth of His Excellency the story that they did so for the purpose of asking a reciprocity treaty with the United States. One and all of the gentlemen on the other side of the House who have spoken in this debate have complained that we, on this side, have not given them a full, and clear, and definite idea of our policy, and yet we have listened, and you, Mr. Speaker, have listened in vain to find out what the Government and their supporters mean by their proposed treaty, or to find out how they expect to get a better treaty by all the time throwing deprecatory observations in the face of the people of the United States. It does look to me a most singular thing that the Government of this country should ask the Governor General to dissolve Parliament for the purpose of making a treaty with the United States, when nearly all of the followers of the Government in this House say that they will not submit to a treaty in natural products at all. It is a singular thing that gentlemen on that side of the House, who claim to possess a great deal of loyalty, and who are loud in proclaiming their loyalty, not only in this House but out of this House, should make the conduct of affairs in this country contingent upon the action of the United States. Why, Mr. Speaker, we find that even in a matter of a general election, they asked His Excellency to dissolve the House so that they might be able to have a new Parliament to deal with this question. new Parliament to deal with this question. During the first two or three days of the late campaign the Government told the people that they wanted a treaty with the United States on the lines of the old Reciprocity Treaty; but the sugar men and some others of that ilk met in Montreal, and they said that they were opposed to reciprocity in any form. The first days of the campaign the Conservative cry was the old flag, the old treaty, the old policy and the old leader; but after three or four days, when the sugar men had met in Montreal, the old policy was continued, but not a single word about the object for which they stated that His Excellency dissolved the House. They had dropped the question of reciprocity with the United States. Then the First Minister issued a manifesto to the people of this country, an I from one end of that manifesto to the other, he made no reference, or no allusion whatever to the supposed object for which Parliament had been prematurely dissolved. It appears his friends in the Red Parlour, and his friends in the sugar combine, had intimidated the Government, and not a single word was afterwards said in reference to reciprocity. Then they had an alternative policy; they were to have the old policy in one place where they thought it was popular with the people, and they were to have the advantage of a treaty where they thought a off any expression of opinion that was growing in honour and good faith of the Crown of England; this country in favour of more extended trade relations. Now, Sir, we find they went to the polls and they elected a new House of Commons, upon the old electoral lists. It appears to me, Sir, that the Government were afraid to have the lists revised because many of those who had favoured the Government had left Canada, and had settled in the United States. Although we heard hon, gentlemen on that side of the House tell us we have no exodus before the election, yet since the election they tell us that a great many people came back to Canada to record their votes on that occasion. They practically admit what they heretofore denied. Now, Sir, I listened to the Budget speech of the hon. Minister of Finance, and I have listened to the Budget speeches of several other Ministers of Finance, and I have found that whenever they have raised the duty on any article, they have invariably claimed that that would make the article cheap; and their followers have always echoed that sentiment. But this session, after we had been agitating for a reduction of the duty on sugar year after year, the hon. Finance Minister comes down and proposes a reduction of the duty. Why does he do that? Not because the country wanted Not because the Opposition asked for it, but he does it because the United States did it. It was the dictation from Washington that compelled him to do it; and this is not the first time that this Government has bent and yielded to the dictation of the Government at Washington. They may talk of their loyalty; they may say that this Government exists only for Canada; but there has never been a Government in this country which has yielded so abjectly to the dictation of the United States as this Government. But on this occasion they have done it neither well nor gracefully. The hon. Minister of Finance boasts that he is saving to the people by this act $3,500,000 a year. other words, he tells the people of this country that for the past twelve years the Government have extorted from them on the item of sugar alone $42,000,000 more than they should have taken from them. Then, again, we find that the American Congress in the McKinley Bill provided that any nation which had an export duty on logs should not have the benefit of the reduction of duty on lumber which they were making by that Bill; and the Government of Canada, that Govern ment who boast of their British connection, of being under British rule and subject to Queen Victoria, dropped down humbly on their knees at the dictation of the Government at Washington, and took off the export duty on logs. Then, this Government of ours placed in their Customs Act of 1879, the National Policy measure, a statutory offer in which they pledged the Crown and Canada to the United States that, with regard to all the articles enumerated in the schedule of that offer, as soon as the United States would remove the duty from any of them, Canada would do likewise. The Government of the United States took the duties off several of those articles mentioned in the schedule, and our Government, claiming to be loyal, disregarded their own statutory offer, and allowed the duties to remain on those articles after the Government of the United States had taken them off. We brought up the question in this House, and showed the Government that as our aspect to this case. To those who are born in British subjects they were bound to maintain the Canada and who love Canada it is a disgrace to the Mr. Landerkin.

but it was not until pressure was brought upon them by the Imperial Government that they took the duty off those articles. In several other matters we find this Government going humbly down on their knees to the United States. Why, Sir, they get very amusing when they talk about any of our friends who have large business connections chancing to visit Washington or any other city in the United States. Then they are sure that a conspiracy must be brewing. These gentlemen, who appear so loyal on the outside, have an idea that it is very disloyal for any of our friends to visit the United States. After they dissolved the House on the pretence of making a treaty not later than the 4th of March last, when the commissioners were to go to Washington, what did they do? The High Commissioner came over at the invitation of the Government to aid them in the elections, and what did he do? He made a tirade against some of the best institutions we have in this country, and decried the credit of the country in every way. He represented that overtures had been made by the Washington Government to Canada for a treaty. Then he went to Washington, came back again, and a few days afterwards returned to Washington, taking with him the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Justice, as a deputation to meet the Government of the United States to negotiate the reciprocity treaty which they had promised to the people. The Government of the United States had never had any official notice of the subject at all; and when it was known by telegraph that this deputation had started from Ottawa, the Government of the United States sent word back for them not to come. However, they persevered. They went down there like a cavalcade, prepared to stay all The High Commissioner, with all the summer. pomp and glory attaching to him from his achievements as a Minister at the Court of England, took with him the two Ministers. It was a matter of some comment at the time that the only men he took with him were from the Maritime Provinces. Those provinces had not responded so strongly for reciprocity at the election as had the other provinces; and when these two Ministers were sent, was it an admission that neither in the great and glorious Province of Quebec, nor in the greater Province of Ontario, had they a Minister fit to go on an embassy of that kind, and they had to take two from the Marytime Provinces?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) To say nothing of the North-West.

Mr. LANDERKIN. To say nothing of the North West. It was announced and heralded in the press that they were coming. They had to make a show of carrying out what they had promised and what they had dissolved the House for. did not want their dissolution to appear to be a false or a lying dissolution. So they made a show of carrying out what they had promised, and this is the way they carried it out. They went there; the Minister showed them in, and the Minister showed them out, and the time occupied was only three minutes. It was a three minute treaty. It beats the record in the diplomatic history of the world. There is a humorous, but there is also a seri-

Canadian people—we can hold no other view—for men to trifle as they were doing for political purposes, and to try to bring the Government in the United States into the scheme with them. the Government of the United States were quite as wary as they were, and were not going to be entrapped by our Government into becoming parties to any frauds which they might wish to perpetrate upon the Canadian people. We have changes in the tariff nearly ever year, to such an extent that it is getting to be the normal state of things to have changes. I notice that hon. gentlemen on the other side are continually charging some hon, members on this side with changing their views, and seem anxious to make it appear that if hon, gentlemen on this side have, within the las forty years, held at any time different views on any political subject, that it is an indication that their views now are neither right nor sincere. Suppose we applied that rule to the other side. We find, by the changes made in the Budget this year, that the hon. Finance Minister has decidedly altered his views. Why, when he first came into the House he would not touch whiskey with a tenfoot pole; he would not hear of any trifling with the tariff at all, and would have nothing but immediate and absolute prohibition. We have his resolution in Hansard, in which he placed himself squarely before the people as a prohibitionist, but to day we find him, in his tariff, making a slight increase in the articles of whiskey and rum, and other strong spirits, and doubling the tariff on beer. He has so changed his views that he wishes to put it out of the power of the people to use beer, and to drive them into the use of strong drink. That must be them into the use of strong drink. the result of his temperance legislation. He is injuring the barley industry by greatly increasing the Excise duty on malt, and thus restricting the manufacture of beer, while he deals very gingerly with brandy and whiskey, and other strong liquors. He is going to improve the condition of the country, and further the cause of temperance, by giving the people dearer beer and cheaper whiskey. That certainly is a most decided change from the prohibitory legislation which he, at the outset of his career in this House, brought before Parliament.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

that if the Government were sincere in asking His Excellency to dissolve the House before its time, in order that the Government might negotiate a reciprocity treaty, they should have taken the country into their confidence, and let the country know what sort of a treaty they intended endeavouring to obtain. There are many people who believe that had the Government gone to Washingston and arranged with the authorities there a treaty on the lines on which they intended arranging one, and then appealed to the country, that would have been a higher form of statesmanship than the course they did pursue. This deputation, or delegation, or embassy, or whatever you choose to term it in diplomatic circles went to Washington and stayed there three minutes. They completed no treaty. They came back. They came together as far as New York. they parted. Was the High Commissioner ashamed of his allies, or were his allies ashamed of the High Commissioner? Why was it that the High Commissioner dared not come back to Canada? that, being an old politican, and able to some extent to discern the feelings of the people of Canada he did not dare to come back here and meet the frowns of the people, so that he went direct to England via New York? I will not adopt the language of our Tory friends and call these gentlemen arch-conspirators, because I think our friends opposite sometimes get out of order when they are speaking of their political opponents. However, they came back together as far as New York, and there they parted. I believe they had some difficulty in sorting their trunks in New York. Some of the High Commissioner's trunks got mixed up with those of the Minister of Justice, and some of those belonging to the Minister of Justice got mixed up with those of the Minister of Finance. But at all events we learn that from Coteau they had a special car, and that their trunks were so numerous that they had to be brought in by a freight train, No. 16. I do not know how many trunks they had, but I know it is said they had to attach this special car to a freight train, and the locomotive must have been a very strong one to bring those of them who came back to Canada. They came back in the night, and got here about five o'clock in the morning, and I believe they were here for three or four days before they dared to come out of the house, and that is to their crodit, because, if they had any shame when they had done wrong, they should be unwilling to meet the people face to face. It seems to me a little peculiar for the Government to advise His Excellency to dissolve Parliament for a purpose without making known that purpose to the House or the country, and that they should not only have trifled with His Excellency but with the whole people of this country, that they should have dissolved Parliament, if I may say so parliamentarily, with a lie in their mouths, and should have put a falsehood into the mouth of His Excellency and led him to dissolve the House for a purpose they never intended In such a case, the House should be to carry out. re-dissolved. I think, if His Excellency looks into the matter and sees that he and the country have been deceived, as a constitutional Governor he will consider it his duty to again dissolve Parliament and let the matter be fought out again before the people.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We do not want another election.

elections. I have had enough elections myself, but I would like to see the case properly presented to the people, and, if hon, gentlemen opposite appeal upon a false issue and deceive the people on the grounds on which they asked His Excellency to dissolve, if they are loyal and true to Canada and to the Empire to which we belong, His Excellency should at once dissolve the House and let us go to the country on this issue again. Imagine such a thing taking place in the Imperial Parliament, imagine such a fiasco as that to which we are witnesses, imagine the British people being humiliated as this Government has humiliated the Canadian people. Why, it would not be tolerated in England. The people would rise in their might and would hurl from power any Government, no matter of what party, that trifled with their followers and trifled with the country as these hon. gentlemen have done. The Minister of Finance has been at times somewhat severe on those who have held in years gone by opinions different from those they now hold. In regard to some members he goes back twenty years, and he thinks a change of views on their part lessens their power and influence in the House and in the country. To show the way in which the tariff has been tinkered with, and changes have been made, I wish to show the position of the Minister of Finance and his views on that subject a short time ago. I have in my hand a book which was published under the title of "The Canadian Temperance Manual and Prohibitionists' Handbook," by Professor George E. Foster, and I will read some of his views contained in that book. This was published in 1881, and I will show the House and the country how that gentleman's views have materially changed on this vital issue which has been before the country for a number of years. If the changes in his views and principles are against the interests of the country, I think it is due to the House and the country to state them. In speaking about prohibition in the State of Maine, the Minister of Finance at that time used these words:

"It seems really strange that people should be found who will reiterate the statement that prohibition has not succeeded in Maine. In almost every instance they will be found to be persons who either are determined to believe all prohibitory laws a failure, or are entirely unread as to the history and results of the Maine law, or who set up the preposterous plea that the law fails it in a single instance or a number of instances it can be proven that its provisions are violated. First, then, it becomes necessary to fix a standard of success. What shall it be? Are we to believe that every law is a failure which does not entirely suppress and eradicate the evil against which it directed? Suppose we judge other laws by that standard, what one of them should we find a success? People steal and our gaols contain burglars, breakers, robbers and petty thieves—is, therefore, the law against theft a failure? petty thieves—is, therefore, the law against theft a failure? People gamble, engage in lotteries, run places of vice. sell diseased meat, violate health ordinances, &c., but no one thinks of declaring that therefore we are to conclude that the laws which prohibit these things are failures and ought to be repealed."

Now, in reference to the revenue, it will be remembered that a short time ago a deputation waited on the hon. Minister and he stated that prohibition at this time was impossible owing to the loss of revenue which would be entailed. What did he say on that subject a few years ago?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am not very fond of fused to patronize their bars, the liquor sellers would starve or else have to do houest work for a living as do other people. So the people have to pay into the liquor sellers till the amount he gives to the treasury, plus the sellers till the amount he gives to the treasury, plus the amount necessary for the keep and enriching of the liquor seller and his family. What do the people get for it? Shoes, blankets, flour, meat, clothing? No, they get whiskey, beer, rum and the like, which not only gives them no strength. no warmth and no food, but makes many of them foolish, dissipated, idle and drunken, and adds in every way to their general burdens. Suppose that in a certain city there are thirty liquor sellers, and they pay $100 each for a license, a sum equal to $3,000. This goes into the city treasury. But it comes out of the pockets of the people. Suppose each of these liquor sellers takes in over his bar, $2,000 per year. This is a total of $60,000. Where does this come from? Out of the pockets of the people. So that the people actually pay, not only the $3,000 which the sellers hand over to the treasury, but $57,000 in addition, which the sellers put in their own pockets. How infinitely better it would have been if the people had paid the $3,000 tax directly, and kept the $57,000 in their own pockets. The rumsellers were simply tax-gatherers, who took $60,000 from sellers were simply tax-gatherers, who took $60,000 from the tax-payers, gave over one-twentieth of the amount to the people's treasury, and keep nineteen-twentieths to themselves."

Now, you see he fears that if we were to enact a law which he said in this article was essential, and which he believed could be carried out, we would lose a revenue, but according to his views, as enunciated a few years ago in the book which he published over his own signature, he says that would be no objection at all. Now, speaking to the objection of some people that prohibition would ruin the country, he says:

ruin the country, he says:

"Let us ask this objector to give us a 'Bill of Particulars' as to just what will be ruined if the Act passes, and the dram-shops are closed up.

"(a.) Will the labourer be ruined? Nay, the dram-shop gives no tools for better work, no strength to the arm, no steadiness to the purpose, no noble ambition. If the dram-shop gets a hold on the labourer it steals his earnings, breaks down his energy, palsies his strong arm, unsettles his brain, makes his home miserable, and ends, if possible, in ruining him.

"Will the home be injured? The question answers itself. If the saloons could be shut, what a flood of light and joy would sweep into the homes in Canada, chasing out the evil spirits of neglect, discord and revel, which the saloon has introduced into many of them, lighting up the wan face of Despair with the warm rays of Hope, bidding plenty enter across the threshold where poverty has long crouched, and touching anew the chords of Love's harp, so long covered with the dust of sensuality and hate. Ah, no; the homes would not weep if the saloons were closed." no; the homes would not weep if the saloons were closed."

The question came up in the House to close these saloons and the Minister of Finance told us that he voted for that, but he did it in a moment of He further says: weakness.

"Will society, the school or the church be injured? Nay. But all these would rejoice if this, their persistent plague, could be swept away. Not one element of social purity, not one impulse to intellectual endeavour, not one aspiration towards heaven and God come from the rum shop. But as its doors shut and open, open and shut, disorder, crime, filth, apathy of intellect, tendencies to idleness, germs of immorality and temptations to sin, do constantly pour forth upon society, school and church. These help to lift men upward; the saloon continually pulls down and degrades." tinually pulls down and degrades.

These were the views of the Minister of Finance on this question but a few short years ago. Now he has changed. What accounts for the change? He will be willing to judge my friends on this side if Was it office that changed him with they change. its allurements and caused him to go back on the principles which he advocated in this House and which he has written in this book over his own signature? Is it office that lures him away from "You will lose the revenue and increase the taxes.
"Who pays the license revenue? The liquor sellers, says our objector. Where do the liquor sellers get it? Out of the pockets of the people. And if the people re-Mr. Landerkin. the change in his views has been very material. He said:

"As the eye of citizen, philanthropist or Christian, sweeps the present or gazes out into the future, what curse looms up so darkly? What enemy of man works so incessantly or with such fatal results? To measure all the waste of wealth, the destruction of labour power, and the burdens caused by that poverty, crime and disease which are its constant outgrowths, would overtask the strongest powers of the most gifted political economist. To estimate the pain, the shame, the suffering and death of soul and body whichever follow in its wake, would simply call for more than human capacity. For a vice which mocks the hopes of humanity, withstands the beneficence of Deity, this has no equal. What fatal inactivity is it which allows any good man to be for one moment idle or unconcerned in the face of so monstrous an evil, and one which stands full across the pathway of our country's progress?" "As the eye of citizen, philanthropist or Christian,

These were the views that the Minister of Finance held a year or two before he entered this House and before he became a member of this Govern-Then he speaks of all the influences that tend to lead him to this conclusion, and speaking of the home, the school and the church, he says:

"This blessed trinity of influences joins hands with our humanity, and leads it upwards towards the rest.

"But over and against all these the drink traffic pol-

"But over and against all these the drink traffic pollutes its hostile camp, and gives them perpetual battle.

"It robs the homes of its tenderness, fouls its purity, vitiates its teachings, blasts its hopes, and turns its memories into a burden of bitterness.

"It antagonizes the school by locking up intellects in apathetic idleness, by barring the path of knowledge to thousands of little children, by lulling all ambition in the dull lap of sensuality, and filling the same with images of evil and degrading desires.

"It undermines the church by its subtle attractions, which leads the child from the Sabbath school, the worshippers from the sanctuary and the preacher from the pulpit; by its unhallowed appetites and passions, which eat into the better moral nature, deaden the conscience and drown in their mad contentions every whisper of the better and heavenly."

These were the views of the Minister of Finance a few short years ago. He wound up with this appeal:

"Reader, think, ponder, resolve and act.
"This greatest of preventable evils can be prevented, this worst of slavery can be abolished, this most crying of all national disgrace can be forever done away with.

"And if we will but recognize in this the great, work of our age, and undertake it cheerfully, courageously and hopefully, this century may behold in Canada a victory which shall immeasurably add to the sum of human good, and remain for all time the fairest gem in all the coronal and remain for all time the fairest gem in all the coronal of our country's history."

These were the views of the Minister of Finance a few years ago. The Minister of Finance did not tell us, in the speech he delivered, of the grounds upon which he changed those views or why he neglected to attain the object he seemed to think so desirable after he entered the Government. is a singular thing indeed, it is a startling thing indeed, to find a gentleman who held those views, who put his pen to paper to record those views in a volume—it is a singular thing indeed to find that as soon as he gets into office, then he pleads that the revenue requirements of the country will not allow him to proceed. How much more honourable it would be in the Minister of Finance, when he found that the Government held different views from his, how much more honour it would reflect upon that gentleman, had he resigned his portfolio and gone into the ranks to fight for what he advocated in his book, and what he has advocated in this House. Now, Sir, I will, for a few moments, review some of the speeches that have been made in support of the policy of protection in this country; I will review them shortly, because I hold that it is my object, and my used, as is shown daily by the revelations, aim, and my determination, and my line of conduct in public life, to do all I possibly can do to help the party I belong to in order to get for the people of, this country better markets. The policy that I approve cf, and that I uphold, is the policy that will enable the people of this country to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market. That is the end to which we are tending, that is the end for which I am fighting, and for which I intend to fight as long as I remain in public life. I believe in liberty and I believe in freedom. I believe not only in liberty of speech, and freedom to do and to act in accordance with our conscience, but I believe in liberty and freedom of trade. I believe that while we have fought in the past for freedom and liberty of speech, it is just as essential now to the welfare and to the development of this country that we should fight for freedom of trade and to take away the shackles. They tell us on the other side of the House that the National Policy, that is the high protective policy, the policy that taxes us $16,000,000 more than we were taxed before it was introduced, is a cure for hard times, that when the industries of the country are suffering it makes good times. How? The Government put up the tariff and add to the burdens, and take $16,000,000 more out of the pockets of the people during one year than before the introduction of that policy. We say that any such policy is calculated to stifle the industries of this country, that it is calculated to do incalculable injury all round, because this country with its population of 5,000,000 cannot tolerate burdens of $39,000,000 annually for the government of the country. That sum is what was calculated as the public expenditure for either last year or the previous year. When this country was governed from 1876 to 1878 for $23,000,000 annually, we had as good a service as we have had since. has been stated by a member of this House that of that grant for a certain public work and a certain contract amounting to $5,000,000 there is very little to show, and the revelations we have day after day indicate that the hon. gentleman's opinion is likely to be verified, and people who come from that section bear out the contention that very little is to be seen for the $5,000,000. The hon member for Albert had one speech and one wail. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) acted on him as a kind of nightmare. The hon, member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) followed in his wake, and they united to condemn that hon. The hon, member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) joined in that song, and the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) took up the refrain. They all pointed to the hon. member for South Oxford, and every time they spoke of him their warmth seemed to increase and their indignation to rise. Why all this indignation against the hon. member for South Oxford: Simply because he is trying to get better markets for the people of this country, simply because if his policy should prevail we would have fewer cross-walls or wet basins in this country. That is why, these hon, gentlemen do not like him. Probably they will have to put their hands in their own pockets and pay their own election expenses, instead of having sums oranted out of the pockets of the people. If we before the committees, will be taken away from hon. gentlemen. Thus they do not like the policy of that hon. gentleman. Hon. gentlemen opposite complain of blue ruin. That is something of which I like to hear them complain. I like them to be consistent, even in their blue ruin. Whenever they speak of the period when this country was governed by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), they speak of starvation, of ruin and of blue ruin, in its various forms. You would not imagine that there was anything in this country at that time; you would think that everyone had gone away to the United States, that there was no industry or business going on here. Let me show the House the result of the National Policy, as depicted by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), in the county he now represents. Here is what the hon. gentleman said of his old home:

"Those of us who saw it remember very well when in each village there were the blacksmiths making ploughs, and harrows, and horse shoes, and horse nails. As my hon, friend reminds me, we saw the people shearing their own sheep, and carding and spinning and weaving the wool. Well, some of us left our homes in our boyhood and took no particular note of the strange industrial changes that the country was undergoing, but when we went back twenty years later we found that artizan class had gone from the village; we found that where there were three or four shoemakers making boots and shoes for the people of the village there was now but one cobbler left repairing boots; we found that where there were three or four tanneries, tanning skins, taken from the cattle of the country round about, there was now but one or none."

He depicts the state of affairs that results under a

He depicts the state of affairs that results under a high tariff throughout the rural parts of the country. He thus shows conclusively, and hon. gentlemen say he endeavours to be honest politi-cally and is fond of making statements which appear to be true. If he will travel through many other rural districts he will find that the same state of things exists as he has described, and he will find that the policy he endorses is calculated to bring about that state of ruin he has depicted. The hon, gentleman speaks of ruin. Does any member on this side of the House know a locality where such ruin stalks about as is depicted by the hon, member for Albert? That hon, gentleman is very much down upon the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) because he made a speech in Boston. It seemed to me, after hearing what the hon member for Albert said, he could not have read that speech. It does appear to me that if he had read that speech he would not have used the language he did in regard to it. I have here a report of the speech which the hon. member for South Oxford delivered in Boston, and I say it was a very creditable speech and did honour, not only to the hon. gentleman, but to Canada as well. The hon. member said that in any treaty we would make with the Americans—and he was speaking to an American audience—for every dollar the Americans got under a treaty, we proposed to obtain a dollar in return. What objection can the hon. member for Albert have to that speech?

An hon. MEMBER. He wants a dollar and a quarter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I dare say; but it is no use talking about making a treaty on those terms. You must make a treaty equally advantageous to both parties, or not make a treaty at all. What position does the hon, member for Albert occupy now? Does he uphold this system that gives the province from which he comes dollar for dollar with the Mr. LANDERKIN.

Americans? The hon. gentleman was not a member of the House at the time, but the contention of the Conservatives was that in the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway we were to have an allrail Canadian road running through our own terri-They were too loyal to think of having any connections with the United States: they wanted nothing but an all-rail Canadian line. The people of Canada built the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it was a noble work. The Government take great credit for the work, but the people paid for it. After we built it we gave it to the company, and the company have shown a good deal of energy in operating it. What did the company do? They did not go round by the Intercolonial Railway for patriotic reasons, but they ran a line across the State of Maine. Was this to make a winter port at Halifax or St. John? No. It was to make a winter port at Boston, and lately they have made another arrangement whereby they get access to New York. The very gentlemen who contended and stated over and over again that this road was to be an all-Canadian one, that it was not to pass through any territory except Canadian territory, have found that the wisdom of the managers of that company was greater than their wisdom, that it was necessary, if the company was to keep pace with other companies, that it should reach the seaboard, and the inland waters as well. The company had the shrewdness, sense and judgment to see that point. What did they do at the other terminal end? They now go by the "Soo" branch to the twin cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis. Now, what do the produce dealers in Halifax or in St. John say?

An hon. MEMBER. They say they are all right.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They do not say anything of the kind. They say that the produce from Boston is taken cheaper to western Canada than it is from the city of Halifax or St. John; and they say again, that the produce from St. Paul and Minneapolis and from Dakota is taken cheaper to the Eastern market than it is from Manitoba and the North-West. That is the true position, and the hon: member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) sustains that position, and supports a Government which allows a company which we have built a road for, to adopt this system towards our people. not finding any fault with the Canadian Pacific Railway for doing this, but when the hon. gentleman opposite will take upon himself to make charges against the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) on a matter of this kind, he ought to study the position in which that railway places his people in relation to trade, and in relation to other matters. Is St. John a winter port now; is Halifax a winter port now? What will these cities get? They will get at best, under this system, the crumbs that fall from the rich man's Then, again, we have sunk $60,000,000 in table. the Intercolonial Railway, and the Government built a road across the State of Main with Canadian money, to cut the throat of the Intercolonial Railway as well as to cut the throats of the cities of St. John and Halifax. Is there any intelligent man who cannot understand that? Why, there were complaints about this made only a short time ago, which I read in the press, about a Mr. Chipman, of Halifax, who is a supporter of the Govern-things. So much for the member for Albert (Mr. The member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) spoke about the unity that existed between the party that is behind the Government, and among the members of the Government. He said there never was a time in which the Government and their supporters were so firmly and solidly united as at present. There never was in the history of Canada a time when "Uncle Thomas" had such influence as now; there never was a time in which he had as much influence, or as much power as he has now. It is delightful to witness the unity and the concord of interest over there. Sometimes hon, gentlemen opposite refer to difference of opinion on this side of the House, but they have had an opportunity of seeing that the difference is only in a very slight degree, and that the members on this side of the House are united on this policy, which is to give better and more extended trade than we have now to the farmers, the artizans, and every other class in this country. They have their fads on the other side of the House. They have their Imperial federationists, and I think the member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) said he was an humble member of that body. I think the member for Haldimand also spoke several times about going down the halls of memory to find things against hon. gentlemen over here. I would not wonder if before I am done I will go through the halls of memory, in order to satisfy that gentleman that he was doing a very dangerous thing when he took that subject up. Now, let us see the harmony that exists on the other side of the House. Take the Minister of Public Works and the Secretary of State; two lovely berries moulded on a single stem, you might No discord there: harmony, unity, concord there, both united; their policy is office, but not love or friendship, i am afraid. Then we see the harmony that exists between the Minister of the Interior and his subject from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who sits behind me. Both of them are from Assiniboia, and you see the harmony and love The member for that exists between them. Haldimand (Mr. Montague) did not look over the whole ground, I think. I do not think he surveyed the trade question either. I do not think he had ever given his sanction or consent to neglected, exploded theories which he is trying to uphold in this House. He has not looked over the political aspects of the case when he tries to make everybody believe that everybody over there is happy and contented, and that all the members of the Government are united, and all their followers are satisfied. Is the hon member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) satisfied himself? Do you suppose he would like to see this Government stay in forever, unless he can be in there himself? I wonder how long the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) will be loyal to the Government, if he does not get into the Cabinet? That is a question I would like to see solved. find there was a little difference of opinions between the hon member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) and the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn). The member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) made some allusion of a very friendly character to the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) the other night, which indicates the unity and friendship in the party. Now, I will just show the House the unity and harmony which exists between the Department of the Interior and the member for Assini- records of the courts show.

boia (Mr. Davin). Here is an article from a paper called the Regina Leader. It is headed "A Peddling Minister," and it says:

"Dewdney's management of the Interior Department has always had two very patent features. The first is gross inc mpetency, and the second, a conspicuous disregard of the interest of the settler."

Did you ever see a party so firmly united as that?

"The first fact is one that strikes every observer of the hon, gentleman's course in the House of Commons. His appearance when answering the questions of members, or trying to reply to attacks, is pitiable in the extreme, and if he had possessed even an ordinary amount of common sense, he would long ago have withdrawn himself from an arena for which he is utterly unfit, and where he is at once discredited and commiserated. He adds no strength to the Ministry."

Now, I would not go so far as that; not by any means. I am only bringing these matters up to see if I cannot heal these divisions in the ranks of the Then the hon, member for party over there. Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) speaks of himself.

"We succeeded in smashing the regulations withdrawing cancelled pre-emptions from homestead entry, and we venture to say that these obnoxious orders will not long be suffered to make other laws a laughing-stock, or proclaim a brainless, oppressive, incompetent, and altogether ridiculous departmental figure-head."

I could go on reading for a good while just to show how united that party is behind the Government. I will not do it. There are enough other matters to attend to without attending to that. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) did say one good thing. He said, it was necessary to have sentiment; that it is necessary for us to be loyal. Now, the member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has good reasons for being toyal. I do not know there has ever been any member in this House who has been so signally marked by Her gracious Majesty the Queen as the member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague). Why, Her Majesty has even gone so far as to issue an address to assist the member for Haldimand in one of his elections. Here is a copy of his address. At the head of it is the British coat-of-arms, and it reads thus:

"FOR INDIANS ONLY.

"To the Indians:—The Queen has always loved her dear, loyal subjects, the Indians. She wants them to be good men and women, and she wants them to live on the land that they have, and she expects in a little while, if her Great Chief, John A., gets into Government again, to be very kind to the Indians, and to make them very happy. 'She wants them to go and vote and to all vote for Doctor Montague, who is the Queen's agent. He is their friend, and by voting for him every one of the Indians will please will please "QUEEN VICTORIA."

There are to be found some people with old-fashioned ideas of morality, who would call this use of Her Majesty's name a forgery. I will not so designate it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I do not object at all-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think I am in order. It is a personal explanation. I do not object to the hon, gentleman having his joke; I am sure we all enjoy his pleasant banter across this chamber

Mr. MULOCK. What is the point of order?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I had nothing to do with that circular, as the

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will leave that with the hon, gentleman and those who know more about it than I do. I will not say that he did or did not issue that circular: but I know that a great many people say that he not only issued, but penned it himself. Scarcely any one else on the other side of the House would have enough genius to do it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I rise to a point of order. I have already stated that I did not pen that cir-I have stated that it is a matter of record before the courts that I had nothing to do with it. After I made that statement, the hon. gentleman said that I did draw it up. I must ask him to withdraw that.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not understand the hon. member for South Grey to say that the hon, member for Haldimand drew it. He said there were people who said he did.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then the hon. gentleman denies that he is the agent of Her Majesty. thought he claimed that virtue. But no; when the matter is brought up, he declares that he is not Her Majesty's agent, and we all know that he is not, nor is any other man or party who advocates protection. They are not the Queen's agents; they are the Queen's enemies. Now, the hon. member for Haldimand said that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie had done nothing for this country, and he further said that they had piled up deficits year by year. Is it not extraordinary that he would get up and talk in that way when he knows that all the taxes raised from every source in the last year Mr. Mackenzie was in power were $23,000,000 odd, whereas last year, or in 1889, the taxes from all sources amounted to $39,000,000, or $16,000,000 more than they were in Mr. Mackenzie's last year. But the hon, gentleman said that Mr. Mackenzie's Government had never done anything for the country. I will tell you what Mr. Mackenzie did. He gave to this country honest government, and that is what we want again. He went into power at a time when the corruption and mismanagement that had been festering in the government of this country for years had come to be realized, and he had scarcely time to clear the decks and get things organized when the people in a moment of frenzy left him at home. But I tell you that to-day the people regret the act, as they feel the blush of shame at the rascalities which are being brought to the surface every day in the committees of investigation now going on. I am astonished to hear hon, gentlemen who should know better getting up and making these statements about the Government of Mr. Mackenzie. That Government, in addition to what had been left to them by their predecessors, had to govern British Columbia and the North-West; yet, notwithstanding that, as well as all the heavy. engagements and burdens which had come to them through the mismanagement of the previous Government, they managed the affairs of the country so economically and well that they kept the taxation and expenditure down to what they were when they took office. But in the first year after they left office, the expenditure sprang up $5,000,000, and last year it was $16,000,000 more than in the last year of Mr. Mackenzie's Government. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about surpluses deficits. Mr. LANDERKIN.

bad government nor a surplus a sign of good or prudent government. It is very much safer for the people to have the money in their own pockets than to have it in the pocket of the Finance Minister, because he might in a moment of weakness spend a good deal more than is necessary. do not think a surplus is a sign of strength or statesmanship or good government. Let me quote what the deficits in Mr. Mackenzie's time were. In 1875-76 there was a deficit of $1,900,000,; in 1876-77, $1,400,000 ; in 1877-78, $1,128,000 ; making in all $4,488,959.90. Hon, gentlemen opposite say that that Government should also be charged with the deficit of 1878-79. They were not in office in that year; but even if we added that, their total deficits would be $6,424,959.50, whereas the present Government had deficits amounting to $12,-365,889.20 in five years. If you are going to condemn one Government because it had deficits, you certainly have to condemn the other much more on the same ground. Now, the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), speaking on this subject, referred to the hom, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), and here is the modest estimate he made of that hon. gentleman:

"Now, the hon, member for Brant had a good deal to say upon the question of sugar. He knows a good deal about it. I remember that in a previous year I had the pleasure of discussing this subject in the House. I am only sorry the hon, member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) is not in his seat to-night, because the statements he made were so absurd, and the conclusions at which he arrived so monstroug that I am confident when he gets the real so monstrous, that I am confident when he gets the real facts of the case, and he will do it if he takes the trouble to read what I say, he will freely admit that in discussing this question he came to the House without any knowledge of the subject he was going to discuss."

This is a pretty modest paragraph from the junior member. It would hardly be modest in the senior member to use such language towards the hon. member for South Brant. He goes on:

"The next statement made by the hon. member for Brant to which I wish to refer is one that proved most clearly that he had no knowledge whatever of the subject on which he spoke. He not only did not know the facts, but he did not know where to go for his knowledge, which I dare say is just as bad."

It is rather amusing to hear the kindly way in which our hon. friends across the House speak of the hon, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson). He did not know anything about the sugar business, he did not know where to go. He really did not know the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) was in the House, or he would have gone to him and got his opinion. The hon, junior member for Halifax also said that sugar was cheaper in Montreal than in New York. If it is, why does the Finance Minister keep the duty on it? If we can make sugar cheaper here, why do our manufacturers want protection? Why does the Finance Minister not take the duty off sugar if our refiners can make it cheaper than can the refiner in New York, and why not give our people the opportunity of buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest? I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) the other night, who spoke at a reasonable length. was out one day, shortly afterwards, on the cliff overhanging the river here, and saw a tug making her way up stream with a scow in tow, and somehow or other I could not help being reminded of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins). The tug was and deficits. It would be very easy indeed to prevent towing a scow up against the current and was I do not think a deficit is a sign of struggling to make headway. In like manner the hon, member for L'Islet was struggling with his thrown on his college was so injurious that he made subject and pulling all he could to make way a public statement that Mr. Farrer was never in against the current. The tug was driven back by that school. the waves and the current, just as the hon. gentleman was drifted back in his attempt to make headway with his cumbersome subject; but the current of reciprocity in this country was such that he could not succeed, and the hon, gentleman will find that that current will drive the Government out of power just as the tug the other day was driven down the current. I have heard hon, gentlemen on the other side say that because they tax the people of this country $16,000,000 a year more than is necessary to govern the country, or more than perhaps we would require to govern it with, they have made better times, and that in keeping up the burden of taxation they have necessarily increased the value of real estate. They say that increased taxation has increased the price of realestate throughout the country. Why, Sir, everybody knows that is not the case. The other day, in the county I have the honour to represent, a farm was sold. I saw the gentleman who bought it, and asked him what price he paid. He said he gave $2,800, and he added that ten years ago the farmer who made the sale was offered $5,000 for that farm and declined the offer. Instances like these are common and are daily becoming more common, because if you increase the prices of the commodities that the farmers use, if you do not give them the advantage of lower prices in the things they buy, of course you will depreciate the value of their property. The hon. Minister of Finance and his supporters tell us that when they increase the taxes, they lower the prices of articles used by the people. Then, when they take the duty off sugar, they turn around and say that they have lessened the taxes by $3,500,000. I do not see how they can reconcile these statements, or prove such a paradoxical proposition. I believe it is the duty of the Liberal party to stand true to the traditions of free trade. Gentlemen on the other side lose themselves altogether in a maze and a labyrinth when they discuss our policy; but our policy is so clear and easily defined, that there is not the slightest difficulty in understanding it on the part of those who approach it with a view of understanding it. They say they can make a treaty whereby they can exchange horses with the United States, and that is perfectly loyal; but then they say, that if you put a manufactured article, if you put a saddle on that horse, and take him across, that is disloyal and that the party who propose that are in favour of annexation. speak of Messrs. Wiman and Farrer. I believe Mr. Farrer was trained in the same political school as the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny); and if he is an annexationist I would like my hon. friends opposite to understand that it is only a question of a very little time when he will be in the Government.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has stated, that Mr. Farrer attended the same college in England that I did.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). The same political school.

Mr. KENNY. No, I know what he meant, because it was mentioned in the English papers, and I may say, for the information of my hon. friend, to his notice, considered that the reflection thus (Sir Richard Cartwright). We have every confi-

Mr. LANDERKIN. That may be true, as the hon, gentleman has said.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds.) Courtesy.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is speaking truly, and I do not know why the hon. member for Leeds should doubt him; but there is this to be said, that if Mr. Farrer is an annexationist or has signed any document to that effect, he will be a Tory premier before ten years. Of that, hon, gentlemen can be as certain as they can be of anything. The fact is our Tory friends have the greatest respect for anybody who holds peculiar views on that question. Why, they would not make the hon. Minister of Justice Premier, although he has great claims, but he has not as strong claims as Mr. Abbott, who signed the annexationist manifesto—a fact which commended him to hon, gentlemen opposite. The Minister of Justice had been a solicitor for the United States Government, and that also was a great recommendation in the eyes of hon, gentlemen opposite. As a general rule, hon, gentlemen opposite like statesmen who are trained in the Liberal school. Mr. Abbott was trained in that school and so was the hon. Minister of Justice, and these are the only two men of prominence they have on that side. They have the idea that others are not fit to rule this country.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) was also trained in that school.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I thought there was something good about him. Now, I will just say, in conclusion, that we quite understand the policy we are advocating. We believe it is a practical We believe it is a policy which will go a long way towards relieving the distress that prevails in this country. We believe it will restore values to land. We believe it will bring better wages to the workingman, and that it will supply what is wanting in the fiscal policy of this Government, namely, a better market for our people. We have now the British market free, and if we would get the American market, we will have two strings to our bow. We are, in every way, much better able to meet the requirements of the people, if we adopt the policy of the Liberal party, than we otherwise can be. The Liberal party are not afraid of discriminating against the mother country because the National Policy and high taxes does that now, as everybody, who examines the question at all, must know full well. We can ship our products to the mother country, and they go in free, but when we ship them to the United States they are charged a high duty; and by our tariff we charge just as high against England as against the United States. Willany hon, gentleman tell me, that under those circumstances, our tariff does not discriminate against the mother country? Will anybody tell me that it has not lessened our trade with the mother country which we enjoyed before? We have no fear in meeting the objections of hon. gentlemen opposite to our policy, led, as we are, by practical statesmen, led by the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Laurier), our devoted and cherished leader, and by that the rector of that college, when it was brought his colleague the hon. member for South Oxford dence and we believe that this country has every confidence in that hon. gentleman and his colleagues. We are proud of them. In all the years they have been in public life, have their opponents fastened a single charge on their political or personal characters? They stand up as proud ornaments in this House, as an honour to this House and to this country. And, if the people had got their way, as they would if it had not been for gerrymanders, for a bogus Franchise Act, for cross-walls and wet basins, they would have been ruling the destinies of this country to-day.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The remarks I have to address to the House will be exceedingly few. I wish to take this opportunity, as perhaps the best opportunity that will offer, of calling the attention of the Government and the House to a matter which is of very serious importance in view of the negotiations which may take place in October next, or whenever they may take place, with the American Government. I refer to the condition of our timber trade. It is not perhaps exactly germane to the subject now under discussion, but I think it is certainly more germane to that subject than many matters which have been referred to in the very long and discursive addresses to which we have listened in this debate. It will be in the recollection of the House that, shortly after the passage of the McKinley Bill, when the American import duty on lumber was reduced, the Government, evidently after a good deal of hesitation, decided to abolish the export duty on saw-logs. I want to call the attention of the House to the very unsatisfactory condition in which our lumber trade is placed under the present conditions, and I do that in the hope that, when the Government consider this matter with the United States Government, they may be able to place this on a more satisfactory footing. I refer to this as a matter which affects a very important element in our future national interests. The Government of this country, as I have said, after a good deal of hesitation, decided, in deference to the wishes of the lumber trade, to abolish the export duty on saw-logs. That has brought us into this condition, that at the presentmoment there is going on from a large part of the timber country of the Dominion, and especially in the Province of Ontario, and especially from that portion of the province which I represent and in which I feel the most interest, a two-fold diminution of our timber property. In the first, place we have a very large quantity of the raw material being exported to the other side, there to be manufactured into lumber. This has already grown to such proportions that I am assured upon excellent authority that during the next season the export of saw-logs will amount to a quantity variously estimated at from 80,000,000 to 140,000,000 feet. That means a very large diminution in the employment of labour and capital upon our side of the line, and it means a corresponding benefit to the saw-mill owners upon Lake Michigan and elsewhere on the American coast. Further, it means a much more rapid diminution in the production of our forests, and besides that we have the stimulus given to the trade on our side by the reduction of the duty to $1 a thousand. There is, therefore, as I have said, a two-fold stimulus given to this trade, which, however beneficial it may be at present to the pockets of some individuals en- was able to present his case so ably, both in regard Mr. LANDERKIN.

gaged in that trade, must result disastrously to the best interests of the country. I admit that the subject is a very difficult one. It would be exceedingly injurious to the present owners of saw-mills to at once reimpose the export duty, because that would subject them to a duty of $3 a thousand feet upon their produce going to the other side, whereas at present I am told by lumbermen who are largely engaged in the trade that the reduction of the duty has enabled them to dispose of a large quantity of inferior lumber which was previously unsaleable in the American market. If we continue the system of allowing the export of our raw material to go on, it will cause the depletion of our forests more than it has taken place in the past, a depletion which no Government, provincial or otherwise, has yet seriously tried to remedy; and it appears very extraordinary that, with all the experience we have before us of the action of European and other governments, with all the evidence that we have to guide us, that those forests whence there has been a continued export have still suffered no diminution, yet we have not taken the first stop towards replacing that vast and important production which we are so rapidly losing, and which now will go from us faster than it ever did before. The Ontario Government have, I think, done wisely in providing that, in certain limits which may be sold hereafter, the lumber must be manufactured in this country. That, however, applies to but a very limited portion, and does not affect the very large limits which are rapidly passing into the hands of American speculators and manufacturers, and the result is being very seriously felt. There is the small town of Midland, in the riding represented by my hon. friend from East Simcoe, and the trade there is paralysed. Three or four saw-mills are shut up in consequence of this export. In Parry Sound, one of the principal saw mills has been shut up because an American firm has purchased the mill and all the limits, and, undoubtedly, if any of the lumber is cut at all, it will be cut of the qualities not worth exporting, but the chief production of those limits, hundreds of millions of feet, will be sent across the line and will be lost to us. The same thing is true in regard to various portions of the Georgian Bay, and will apply to all the waters running into the Georgian Bay and extending to the headwaters of the Ottawa, so that the result will be more serious even than I have mentioned. I hope the Government will take this matter into their serious consideration. Everyone will admit that the difficulties are great, but it is the business of the Government to meet difficulties. That is what they are there for, and I trust they will find some means of meeting this difficulty in such a way that if we are compelled to dispose of our lumber, it will be disposed of to the best interests of the people of this country, and that we will not be reduced to the condition of mere exporters of the raw material when we should use it ourselves to the best advantage. I have very little more to say. I have only to say a word to the hon, member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) whose speech last night listened to with very great interest, and I do not think that any hon. gentleman on that side has stated his facts and marshalled his figures with greater effect than he did. I think it was very gratifying to gentlemen in this House who are professional farmers to observe that one of their class to the breadth of his views and the force and ability with which it was presented, which I consider was a credit to the class to which he belongs. But I think the hon, gentleman made a mistake. think he did protest too much. There was one remark to which I desire to refer, where he proved from his figures, proved to his own satisfaction if not to the satisfaction of the House, that every farmer has, for the past eight or ten years, been losing $500 a year upon 100 acres of land, so that in that case every farmer must have lost in that time about $5,000. That is the necessary conclusion from the words of the hon, gentleman. He, put the loss to a farmer at $500 a year, calculating on 70 or 80 That is how I understood him, and acres of land. if I am wrong I am open to correction. He, therefore, has evidently proved too much, for I do not think he can convince the people of this country, or any farmer in this country, that he has been losing at the rate the hon. gentleman has mentioned. The thing is absolutely impossible, we should all be paupers and we should neither have clothes to wear nor food to eat were his contention correct. But the hon, gentleman could see no good thing at all in the National Policy. If prices were high, the National Policy was to be blamed for it; if prices were low, the National Policy was equally at fault. Every misfortune, whether it was midge, or rust, or blight, or failure of crops, or general lowness of prices—all was attributable to the evil effects of the National Policy. As I say, the hon. gentleman said a little too much, and he weakened his case most decidedly by what I am quite sure was an unintentional exaggeration, or at any rate by a use of figures of speech which he could not justify or warrant. Now, I would like to say in this House what I said to my constituents when I was arguing these questions at the last general election -I said what I say now, that I do not understand how a system of protection is, in principle, compatible with reciprocity. With the best reason I can bring to bear upon the subject, they seem to me a contradiction in terms. Now, the National Policy, I say as a supporter of it, is a highly artificial system, there can be no question about that; and if you once interfere with the National Policy it will be exceedingly difficult to avoid bringing about a general disruption of the whole system. Now, I am not in favour of reciprocity upon any terms that seem to me at all likely to be adopted, either by this Government or by the Opposition, because you cannot have reciprocity, even in natural productions, without sacrificing somebody. And who are you going to sacrifice? Are you going to sacrifice the farmer for the sake of the coal owner, or the coal owner for the sake of the lumberman? How are you going to overcome these difficulties? I can quite understand that there are many things which naturally form a subject of reciprocity. Now, coal seems to me to be one of these, because we both buy coal and sell coal, and, therefore, we can have reciprocity in coal; but in almost every other article that you can mention you cannot have reciprocity, because we sell it and do not buy it. Now, if any of our manufacturers feel that they have so strengthened themselves, under the operation of the National Policy, that they can extend their trade to other countries without any necessity of the aid of pro-

If our agricultural implement makers can sell their wares in the United States, supposing the duty was taken off and reciprocity in those articles was established, by all means let them have an opportunity of doing so, and if our woollen manufacturers can do the same, by all means let them do so. But I say that reciprocity is not a true basis upon which to place our trade with the United States. Reciprocity can never be a true basis of trade where people are both trading in the same market, where they are competitors, where they produce and export the same articles. the term does not apply, and we are misleading ourselves and misleading the country in thus talking about trade under the term of reciprocity when that term does not, in any logical sense, apply. have only one further remark to make. I was told by a gentleman who, I think, was very familiar with the commercial position of the country, that when the lamented death of the late leader of the Government took place it produced a complete paralysis in the general business of the country, because the merchants and the manufacturers and the business men generally were uneasy at the possibility of hon, gentlemen opposite taking their places upon this side of the House, and bringing about a general change in our commercial relations. It was felt that such a change would be disastrous, and so unquestionably it would have been, and so unquestionably it will be, if ever those hon, gentlemen have an opportunity, and at the same time have the will, to carry out the principles which in Opposition they have advocated. Now, some of my hon, friends on this side of the House are exceedingly afraid of the possibility of these gentlemen succeeding in their very laudable political ambition. Now, Sir, I, for one, have a very strong objection to their taking that place, for a number of reasons. But I think the dread need not be so great as is generally supposed. I believe that the responsibility of office, the effect of public opinion, and public opinion in their own party, would prevent those gentlemen from doing at least one-half of what they profess their desire to do.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). Dis-

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not know that we need justly charge them with dishonesty, even supposing they failed to carry out their programme. Of one thing I am sure, that they never would carry out their programme, because I am sure they never could make a treaty with the United States, if we may judge of the opinions prevalent in that country, upon the terms which they themselves say they are willing to carry out. I say that it is just as impossible for them to make a treaty with the United States, after the declarations the leader of the Opposition made in this House a few nights ago, as it is for hon, gentlemen on this side of the House to make a treaty.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like, with the consent of the hon. gentleman, to ask him what he thinks, then, are the chances of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches?

manufacturers feel that they have so strengthened themselves, under the operation of the National Policy, that they can extend their trade to other countries without any necessity of the aid of protection, by all means give them an opportunity of doing so. It is very desirable that they should believe they will try to do it, and I hope that they may succeed, because if they succeed, according to their professions, they will succeed in procuring a benefit without causing any injury, and I say if they can accomplish that-

Mr. MULOCK. I thought you were entirely opposed to reciprocity.

Mr. O'BRIEN. So I am in any sense of the term in which it is generally used, but I say if those gentlemen can bring about a greater measure of free trade without interfering with any interests which are protected by the National Policy—if they can do that, by all means I for one shall be exceedingly pleased. Hon. gentlemen opposite, with the responsibilities of office upon them, and influenced by the force of public opinion by which they must in office be guided far more strongly than in Opposition, would be very different gentlemen to what they are now sitting upon that side of the House. I think that that terrible curse of pessimism which is upon them would very much disappear; I think that clothed with the responsibilities of office we should find the then Minister of Finance occupying a different position to what he does to-day; I think that under such circumstances "Richard would be himself again," and we should find him using the same manly and independent language towards the people of the United States, and in defence of the interests of Canada, which he did upon a former occasion under somewhat similar circumstances—I believe that instead of finding him the cringing, craven pessimist that he is to-day, with not a word to say for this country, with no confidence in the present and no hope in the future, we should find him a very different character. Now, Sir, I think that the probabilities are altogether in the direction which I have indicated, but I think that the hon, leader of the Opposition, in all that he has said, and that his followers have said, has at any rate allowed us to arrive at the conclusion that, taking them at their own words, they are in the position of gamesters who have staked everything upon one single cast of the dice. They say the country is in a miserable, depressed, wretched condition; that is the basis upon which they start, and no remedy is to be found for it, they have suggested none, they have hinted at none, but this unrestricted reciprocity. Well, now, suppose they cannot get this unrestricted reciprocity, where are they?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Honesty and retrench-

Mr. O'BRIEN. They are completely stranded, they are lost, according to their own showing they would have to give up the attempt to govern this country, just as before they had to give up the attempt to govern, because the people would not submit to be governed by men who could suggest no remedy for the existing evils. They would be compelled at once to resign their office, because if they fail to do that which was the only salvation of the country, according to themselves, they would have to go back into Opposition. But we are not dependent at all upon the tender mercies of the framers of the McKinley tariff. In the first place, I deny the extravagant propositions that have been laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite as to the general depression which exists in this country. the whole appearance of the country is against it. Instead of a farmer losing $500 a year, all the the goose that laid the golden egg. No one knows farmers with whom I am acquainted, if they are better than I do, as I have closely watched the Mr. O'BRIEN.

not making money, are certainly not going into When you travel through the country debt. you see great improvements, new barns, new dwellings, new school-houses, better roads and farm buildings, newer agricultural implements and every sign of improvement go where you will. When they talk about depreciation in value of farm property, hon. gentlemen opposite certainly should know better than use language that is not justified by the facts. Everyone knows that before the opening of lands in the North-West, farm lands, especially in Ontario, had reached at least double their value. Land is only worth what it will produce per acre. A field that produces twenty bushels of wheat is worth a sum according to the value of those twenty bushels of wheat; but at that time when a farm of 100 acres was put on the market it was generally sold at a pre-posterous and fancy price. That was the condition of affairs in Ontario owing to the scarcity of land and to the fact that our people had no outlet for the increasing population. The high prices of produce prevailing during the Crimean war had, moreover, given the people an extravagant idea of the profits to be obtained from farming, and to this was added the inflation consequent on the American war. A change has taken place, and property has come down to its real value. I believe that to-day any farm in Ontario for sale will find a purchaser at its real value, that is, a value based on the crop the farm will produce, and that is its real value. Of course, the opening of the North-West changed the position of affairs. It put millions of acres of land on the market, and hon. gentlemen must recollect, and no one knows it better than the hon. member for South Oxford, that farmers in Ontario will not be content with less than a hundred acres for each of their sons, and if they cannot get it at home they will go elsewhere to obtain it. That led to the settlement of the free grant district. Although the region was unfavourable in many respects, yet 30,000 people found their way into it during a few years. Our people will not be content with small farms, and they will go where they can obtain all the land they require. If you have an emigration from a limited area like the best part of Ontario, where the land has been held at its enormous value, and if one farmer out of eight or ten goes and seeks farms elsewhere, farm property must decrease in value; at all events, it must come down to its real value, and I contend that is exactly the value to which it has come down. Under these circumstances, first to lay a foundation, which is as utterly baseless as that of assuming that the depreciation exists, and then to build on that foundation an argument, for which only one remedy is to be found, is to adopt a view which certainly is not statesmanlike and does not commend itself, and will not commend itself, to the common sense of the people of the country, as it has not done on past occasions when public opinion has been tested. With regard to the lumber question, I have for years looked upon it as a very serious one. I think it is very little to our credit as statesmen that neither in any of the provinces nor in the Dominion has any practical attempt been made to bring about a better condition of things. We have been in the position of the old woman who killed consumption during ten years, how our forests have been depleted, and how we are now dependent on inferior grades of lumber which some years ago we would not have looked at, and it is very little to our credit that we have not been able to overcome this condition. It is a matter that the Do-minion Government should take into its serious consideration, and if they cannot do it themselves, let them try and induce the Provincial Governments to unite with them to bring about a more satisfactory condition of affairs. This is most important, not only as regards our supply of timber, but also as regards our farming interests, because we all know how very strongly the climatic conditions are affected by the permanence of our forests. modern scientific research nothing is more clearly established than that the climate and the rainfall and the quantity of the rainfall are affected by the We have seen in the Western States, especially in the treeless regions, how storms and cyclones have devastated towns and cities, destroying property and life. That is what we will come to when our forests are destroyed, and, therefore, this question deserves serious consideration, not only from the economic point of view as regards the value of our timber, but as regards the general production of the soil.

Mr. DAWSON. In rising for the first time to address this House I assure you, Mr. Speaker, I am not repeating an idle form in craving the indul-gence of hon. members. If I listened only to the nervous tremor of my heart I would have kept my seat and taken no part in this debate; but the trade question is so pre-eminently important a one that a man would be a coward indeed who refrained from discussing it. I take it that the duty of the House is to so legislate as to develop the resources of this country, to stimulate the trade of the country and to render the people so prosperous that each resident will become a voluntary immigration agent, and in his correspondence with those across the seas induce others to come here and share in the prosperity which he finds on this side of the water. Parliament can do much to bring this about, but it can do nothing to bring it about as freely and as surely as by securing for this country the priceless boon of unrestricted reciprocity with the country to the south of us. I am sure that all of us must heartily agree with the sentiment which was uttered by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) in the early part of the session, when he said:

"The relations and the interests of the people of the two countries which compose the northern part of this continent, are, in the commercial way, in a social way and in a friendly way, closely interwoven in many respects, and I believe that if a fair reciprocity treaty can be effected along the lines of the old treaty of 1854, it will be of considerable benefit to both countries, and that it will meet with favour from all parties in the Dominion of Canada."

We will also, I am sure, agree with the hon. member for New Westminster when he stated:

"I am aware that Canada was very prosperous under the treaty of 1854. These hon, gentlemen both advocated a renewal of that treaty. But at this day, what has been the cause I know not, a change has come over the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) distinctly declared

(Mr. Wood) argued strongly against reciprocity in either minerals or farm products. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), drew piteous pictures of the farm population of the United States; in fact, he would lead us to believe that that nation is a nation of beggars and paupers. He turned from this piteous and gloomy picture to the prosperity of the farmers in his section of the Dominion. He assured us that in his youth he was reared or lived in a rural section, and that he was accustomed to visit that section and note the wonderful progress it had made. As a result of twelve years of unremitting toil during 365 days of each year, because the farmer's toil is daily, he discovered that the farmer was able to purchase an organ, and the hon. gentleman endeavoured to prove that the farmer is prosperous because during those twelve years he has been able to place in his home a musical instrument. It will, perhaps, be well to hear what some farmers have to say, and I will quote from statements made by some of the farmers with whom I am myself most familiar. Mr. Joslin, of Wolfe Island, says:

"Farms are not worth near as much now as they were ten years ago. The land on Wolfe Island is far better than the land on the American side from Cape Vincent to Clayton, but it won't bring nearly as much acre for acre. Clayton, but it won't bring nearly as much acre for acre. I can remember the time—and it is not far back to remember—only fifteen years or so—when the farms on Wolfe Island were worth far more than the farms between Cape Vincent and Clayton, but ours have gone down in price. The manager of a western loan company recently wrote their agent to realize, if possible, the amount of their loan upon a certain Wolfe Island farm, but if this could not be got, to sell at any price and send on the money. The farm was valued for loan at $5,500—and the loan was only $3,200. To-day I believe that our whole Township of Wolfe Island would not sell for the mortgages on it. We are simply struggling on and hoping for better on it. We are simply struggling on and hoping for better times to come. And the way to bring the good times is to give us reciprocal trade with the United States. We are tired of being bled for the benefit of other people. We want to be loyal to this country, but if we are to remain so this country's got to give us a chance to live and provide decently for the people that depend on us."

There is another farmer in the same neighbourhood and he stigmatizes protection in no unmeasured terms.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. What is the Christian name of this Mr. Joslin?

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Joslin is his name, I will give the hon. gentleman his Christian name later. I have a statement from another farmer named Robert Bullis, also of Wolfe Island. He says:

"Protection is to Canada what landlordism is to Ireland: the beggary of the many for the benefit of the few."

He also says:

"On the produce of my farm I paid into the revenue of the United States last year about $300 to be permitted to sell in the only market seeking my products. This year I presume, my contribution will be nearly double. The politician who adapts his policy to the exigencies of the hour tells us that much good may come of this great loss, and points to markets that will doubtless be opened up in future ages in a land beyond the sun. This is about as consoling to the struggling farmer as a life-preserver doating at an unreachable distance is to the drowning man going down for the last time."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I presume it will be admitted there is a North-West in the United States, as well as a North-West in Canada. When the fact of the depreciation in the value of farm lands in Ontario was mentioned here, it was met by the statement of hon. gentlemen opposite, that the North-West had that he does not believe in reciprocity in natural been opened up, and that the immigration to the products. The hon, member for Westmoreland North-West has drawn so many of our farmers from the Province of Ontario, as to cause a great depreciation in the value of lands in that province. But there has been as large an immigration from the eastern parts of the United States to their North-West, and yet, while our lands on Wolfe Island, in the County of Frontenac, have been steadily depreciating in value, the lands just across the little silver stream that separates us from the State of New York, have been steadily increasing in value. The argument of the hon. gentleman opposite breaks down here. The cause of the shrinkage in land values in the Province of Ontario is not wholly, or in any considerable measure, due to the immigration westward, but it is because farming can no longer pay, under the disadvantages with which the farmer has to contend in this country. I have given you, Mr. Speaker, the ideas of the farmers themselves as to their condition, and yet the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) assured us in speaking of the National Policy the other night that, "we have during the past twelve years under that policy, enjoyed a prosperity which has been almost a marvel to ourselves"; and all hon, gentlemen opposite unite in saying, that we cannot be more prosperous, that we are just about right as we are, that we do not in fact desire reciprocity or any other measure that would disturb the existing state of things. If we are so prosperous in this country of ours, I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to tell me why it is, or how it comes, that during the first half of the year 1891 there were 996 failures in this country, against 869 for the corresponding period of the year 1890; that the liabilities involved were $8,702,781 in 1891, against $7,224,502 in 1891, and that the assets in 1890 amounted to $3,618,227 against $3,614,172 in 1891, or in other words, that in the first half of the year 1890 the assets amounted to 50 per cent. of the liabilities, whereas in the first half of the year 1891, the assets amounted to only 42 per cent. of the liabilities? do not think that this shows that the country is in quite as prosperous a condition as hon, gentlemen opposite would fain have us believe. If the United States is such a wretchedly poor place as has been pointed out by hon, gentlemen opposite, it has struck me as rather marvellous that we should be subsidizing tunnels under the River St. Clair, subsidizing railways to bridge the St. Lawrence, and that the great and ever patriotic Canadian Pacific Railway should be so anxious to make American connections. I am sure that the hon, gentlemen opposite will fail to convince the public of the truth of the assertions they make with reference to that country. They cannot get. us to believe that the United States is a nation of Now, I am prepared to admit that bankrupts. reciprocity in natural products would be a considerable benefit; that is, if we cannot get the larger, and, as I believe, more beneficial measure of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. there is one thing that must surely strike all fairminded men, and that is, that a reciprocity treaty like that of 1854 is simply impossible between these two countries. If frequent refusals to renew that treaty will teach men anything, it ought to teach us that the United States have determined never again to grant us the advantages we had under the reciprocity treaty of 1854; a treaty which they very properly, from their point of view, stigma tized as a jug-handled treaty. But hon, gentlemen what he says about the vast mineral wealth of this Mr. Dawson.

may say that we have no assurance that we can secure for this country the boon of unrestricted reciprocity. My reply to them is, that we have not yet tried, and until we have tried and failed it is too soon to say that it is impossible for us to secure such a treaty. I can hardly imagine that it would be in the power of any man to over-estimate the benefit of unrestricted reciprocity to this country. Under the item of lumbering, at present it costs us 20 per cent. on the value of all cedar railway ties and cedar telegraph poles, to enter that United States market; a tax of 35 cents on every 1,000 shingles, equivalent to $1.40 per cord on every cord of shingle bolts cut in our That is the duty which is levied under the McKinley Bill, and here I would remark, that it is the shipper into the United States who pays this duty; as a certain shipper discovered last When it was known that this clause in the McKinley Act would come into operation on the 1st March, great efforts were made to get into that country all the cut of the past year, that was destined for the United States. A friend of mine had 3,000 telegraph poles which he found it impossible to get across the line before the McKinley Bill came into operation, and upon these 3,000 telegraph poles he paid a sum of $600 before he could enter them into that country. He paid the money, and was perfectly satisfied who it was who paid the duty. Now, if the Americans would imitate the Canadian laws, it would be worse still for those of us who desire to ship cedar into the United States. I understand that it is the duty of the Minister of Customs to collect a duty for 11 cents value on 8 cents worth of binder twine, and also we are told that a reaper shipped to this country and bought for $70 had to pay duty on a value of $110, when crossing the line. If the Americans adopted this principle, their tariff would be prohibitive indeed. The hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) assumes that the National Policy assists lumbering. How the National Policy, which puts a duty on the blankets, the axes, the saws, the pork and the iron which the lumbermen use, and on oats too-because the hon. gentleman said that under the operation of the National Policy oats were 8 cents a bushel higher on this side than they were on the other side of the line—can assist the lumbermen, I fail to see; and yet the hon, member for West York said that the National Policy assisted the lumbering industry. Perhaps he wanted to assume all the responsibility of the McKinley Bill, because since the McKinley Bill came into operation our lumbermen have been able to buy hay at a very much lower price than before. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) objects to selling raw materials to the Americans. He says, adopt the policy of unrestricted reciprocity, and the Americans would come over and buy up our mines, and thus furnish our raw materials for the manufacturers of other countries; to this the hon, gentleman strongly objects; and yet he supports an Administration which was responsible for the removal of the export duty on saw-logs. A saw-log is certainly a raw material; and when hon. gentlemen opposite are desirous of putting this raw material into the hands of the Americans, surely they should not object to the shipment into country, and as I do not pretend to be in any degree as able a speaker as he is, I will read his remarks on that subject, which I think are well worthy of being put on record a second time:

It is impossible to over-estimate our mineral resources. It is impossible to over-estimate our mineral resources. It is impossible to estimate the great wealth that lies buried beneath our soil in every portion of this Dominion. Our mineral resources should be one of the greatest sources of our wealth, if not the greatest source of our wealth in the future. It is of the utmost importance that our mineral resources should be developed in such a manner as to contribute to the wealth of the country, and that wealth does not consist only in the value of the ores which lie beneath the soil, or the labour of those who dig the ores from the bowels of the earth, but the chief value of this mineral wealth lies in the labour required to convert that raw material into articles of use and articles of commerce. How is that to be accomplished? It is desirable that manufactories should be established in this country for the purpose of converting the raw material into manufactured goods, and that can only be done by maintaining the absolute control of our tariff legislation. Adopt the policy which the hon, gentlemen opposite advocate, and you at once place it in the power of American capitalists to come here, to purchase our valuable mines, to obtain control of the means of transportation, to dig our valuable ores from the bowels of the earth and It is impossible to estimate the great wealth that lies to dig our valuable ores from the bowels of the earth and carry them away as fast as sail or steam can carry them, and furnish our raw materials for the manufactures of other countries."

In defending the policy of unrestricted reciprocity, I could not do better than repeat these words, which contain a very strong argument in favour of that policy. If the effect of that policy would be to introduce American capital into this country for the development of our mines and for the purchase of our minerals, of which we have such an abundance that it is impossible for this country to require anything like a tithe of the mineral wealth we possess, the advantage to the country would be inestimable. Now, I have always been led to believe that in developing our mineral resources the first thing we require is a market, and next, facilities for reaching that market. Vast sums of money have been spent by the Dominion Government, by the Ontario Government, and by the various municipalities in providing railway facilities in our mining regions. The city of Kingston and the County of Frontenac between them gave nearly $500,000 towards the construction of a railway running back into that county—the Kingston and Pem-Railway. Shortly after that railway was built, the iron mines were opened. once several hundred men were employed in and about those mines. Some years ago, however, a duty of 75 cents a ton was placed on the ore being shipped to the United States, and the immediate effect of that tax was to close every mine in that county, because the men carrying on the work were obliged to pay a direct tax of 75 cents a ton, not into the treasury of the Dominion, but into the treasury of the United States. They found the payment of this tax greater than the industry could bear, so that the mines were shut down, the men discharged and the capital withdrawn, and since that time the mining industry in that county has been paralysed. Just before every election, however, we hear about smelting works that are to be erected in different cities along the frontiers of the counties where iron ore is found; but these smelting works are never erected. I understand that in Nova Scotia where both iron and coal are found, the smelting industry has not attained such proportions as we might have expected it would in view of the fostering care which has been given to it for many years. | when he said that agriculture was the mainstay of

No smelting furnaces have yet been established in the Province of Ontario, and where have the men gone who have left the mines? During the late campaign, in looking over the voters list in the different polling sub-divisions in my constituency. I found that my friends had marked the lists with many black marks, crossing out name after name. On enquiring where those people were, the answer invariably was: Gone to the United States. I found that scores of men had left the riding and had all gone to the United States. Now, the object which we aim at, and which is not satisfactory to the hon. member for Westmoreland, is the opening up of these mines to the capital of the Americans and the sale of the ore, if we can find a market for it, in the United States, and there is a market there for all the ore we can produce. In the section of the country in which I am interested, we have marble in the township of Barrie, plumbago in Denbigh, mica in Miller and Loughborough, iron in Palmerston and Clarendon. Every township is rich in mineral resources, and the policy I am advocating is one that will develop these resources and open a market for the product in the United States or anywhere else where we can find purchasers for it. Now, I would like to place on record the opinion on this subject of Mr. C. H. Waterous, of Brantford, one of our largest manufacturers. He says:

Last summer I was up in Northern Michigan and was told that they expected to ship three millions of tons of iron ore from Escanaba alone this year. From St. Ignace it was believed 1,500,000 tons would be sent out, besides many tons of charcoal pig iron. Other places were shipping great quantities. Escanaba, St. Ignace, Sheboygan, to are thriving towns, and that country is almost penmany tons of charcoal pig iron. Other places were shipping great quantities. Escanaba, St. Ignace, Sheboygan, &c., are thriving towns, and that country is almost peopled with Canadians. From that iron district so prosperous and rich, go to Belleville and through the Hastings iron districts or up to the Irondale mines. At Belleville there is timber for charcoal as plentiful as at Escanaba, and shipment is easy from the Bay of Quinté, but practically nothing is being done. The same story applies to Irondale. The iron ore is remaining in the ground and the Michigan ore is being hauled to Obio and the Eastern States yet those markets are closer to Belleville and Irondale. To my mind the most deplorable thing at present is the exodus of Canadians. Last week three boys went from our shop, and they are going continually as fast as we make men of them. We are keeping our raw material in the ground, but we are driving our young men out of the country. I have heard it said that we must not ship our ore out of the country, but must keep it until we can manufacture it ourselves. Why not say the same of our lumber, barley, oats and other natural products? Why not keep our lumber until we can manufacture it into furniture? Why not keep our barley and malt it ourselves? Why not feed our grain to cattle and stock in our own country and then kill them here? Why not carry this protest against the shipment of ore, because it is a raw product, to its logical conclusion? When I see our great resources lying idle and our young men going over to the Americans to find employment in opening up their country, I am convinced there is something wrong that can and should be righted. Would reciprocity help the matter? It would result in the development of our resources. There is no doubt in my mind of the splendid results."

And yet hon, gentlemen opposite will tell us that we are hewers of wood and drawers of water for the Americans. Our sons, who are every day finding their place among the Americans, are, indeed, hewers of wood and drawers of water over there, because there are very few of them, under the present condition of Canada, able to leave this side with money in their pockets, and they have to begin at the lowest rung of the ladder and to work themselves up to the top. Surely we all agree with the hon, member for St. John (Mr. Hazen)

the population, and that the quality of the harvest is the guarantee of the wealth of the people, and with his advocacy of a reciprocity treaty in the interest of agriculturists. My hon, friend seems to differ from an hon, gentleman, who at one time had a seat in this House. I refer to the Hon, Mr. Colby. That great man, whom a greater people punished for his heresy on this trade question, and he also differs from the hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who placed himself on record as follows:—

"Hon, gentlemen opposite say that we want free trade with the United States, that we want our most valuable markets thrown open to the American farmer as well as our own. I do not believe in that. I think we should keep our own markets for ourselves, as far as possible. Of course, there are two or three articles that we could send to the United States with advantage to ourselves, but any Government should be exceedingly careful before making any bargain which will throw open our markets to the American farmer and drive the Canadian farmer away from his home and from his most profitable market."

My hon, friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) also differs from the sentiments expressed by the hon, member for St. John, when he says:

"If I may be allowed to express my individual opinion, I believe the balance of advantage, if there were any, would be very small indeed in favour of the farmers of this country; and I believe that, if this policy is ever adopted, no class of the people in this country will be so bitterly disappointed with the result than those who expected that greater advantages and greater prosperity would result from its adoption. The United States can no more be said to be our natural market for the agricultural products of this country than Canada can be said to be the natural market for the agricultural products of the United States."

Yet we are told hon, gentlemen opposite are a perfect unit in opinion with reference to the policy they wish to adopt. Now, as to whether it would benefit the farmers or not, it seems to me idle, after all that has been said and proven on this side, to go over the arguments again. It cannot be alleged that the receipt of from $30 to $40 or $60 apiece more on horses than they are now getting would not benefit the farmers of this country, or that the receipt of 30 cents a bushel on their barley or 5 cents a dozen on their eggs more than they are now getting, would not benefit them. But there is a way out The McKinley Bili has placed a of this difficulty. prohibitory duty on hay, but the hon. Minister of Finance tells our farmers that they can escape this evil by shipping their hay to England. I commend the hon. gentleman's project to our farmers, but I am sure that, if he asked them frankly their opinion concerning the advice he gives, they would say the remedy was a very questionable one indeed. It would also be useful to our farmers to receive those things which they require to use in their calling at a lower rate than they have to pay for them at present. Hon. gentlemen opposite have laboured very severely indeed to prove that such articles were not any dearer on this side than they were in the United States. Well, I will not argue that question with them, but my experience is this, that in the cases where American manufactures are sold in competition with Canadian manufactures, our farmers give the preference to the American goods, and the merchants who sell them say that they derive better profits from the American article, and the farmers say that the American article is superior to the Canadian. Now, it seems almost silly to waste the time of Parliament in arguing who pays the duty for the entry of agricultural products into the United States. Until hon. Mr. DAWSON.

gentlemen opposite can tell us how it is that the addition of comparatively speaking, a very small amount of Canadian products controls the American markets, it will be impossible for us to see the truth of their contention that our farmers do not pay the duty. If any farmer or any hon, gentleman desires to try the experiment for himself, I would advise him to wait until next winter, and then let him cross to the other side with a horse, and he will soon find out who pays the duty. him try to enter that horse on the market there before the duty is paid, and he will find that it will be confiscated. He will have to pay the duty before he can enter the horse into the American market; and when he gets it there, he will receive no more for that horse than an American would for an animal of similar value. Let him bring a load of barley across the ice, and after he has paid the 30 cents a bushel duty, he will find that he will receive exactly the same price as the American farmer does for his barley. I would commend this little experiment to any hon, gentleman who doubts the truth of our assertion that the Canadian farmer pays the duty on the products he Mr. Speaker, disends to the United States. vest this question of all side issues, extinguish the false, misleading sidelights that were flashed upon it during the last campaign; let the orators who shout treason and mislead the people with false and foundationless cries, place the question of reciprocity versus protection on their pure merits, before the people, and I am certain and I believe hon, gentlemen opposite are certain, that their monstrous, deformed, abortive and hideous offspring, the National Policy, will be buried deep beneath the votes of an indignant people. It would then be in order for these hon. gentlemen to go on their knees, and, after repudiating their unhappy child, confess that it was conceived and brought forth in a moment of weakness. They will find that the farmers will vote for unrestricted reciprocity, that the villagers will vote for unrestricted reciprocity, that the townspeople and the people in the cities too, if wise, but it is not always in the cities that you find the most wisdom, will vote for Why, Sir, when the Empire announced the dissolution of the House last winter, and said that the object of dissolution was to ask the judgment of the Canadian people on certain proposals, the chief of which was the renewal of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, certain friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, living in the village of Tamworth, a village in my riding, went wild with joy, and rushed through the streets expressing their delight at learning that the Government at Ottawa had announced the fall of the National Policy. I have never been in the Red Parlour, and do not know what the weight of influence of that august chamber may be; but, after the late leader of the Government had visited that chamber we find, on reading his manifesto, that there was not one word in it regarding the renewal of the reciprocity treaty of On the contrary, that hon, gentleman determined to run that election, as the preceding elections had been run, on the National Policy. His words were as follows:-

"As in 1878, in 1882 and again in 1887, so in 1891 do questions relating to the trade and commerce of the country occupy a foremost place in the public mind. Our policy, in respect thereof, is to-day what it has been for the past thirteen years."

Not a word of reciprocity in the manifesto. Why, Sir, this was a dreadful blow to the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite in the village of Tamworth, and it required very persistent efforts to whip them into line; and despite the cries of treason, discrimination and disloyalty, we succeeded in reducing the protectionist majority there from 52 to 40. Now, the hon member for North Grey (Mr. Masson), put himself on record with reference to protection. He said:

"Protection, as administered in the United States, has, in many cases, tended to make thinks dear. Let the hon, gentlemen note my words exactly; protection as administered in the United States, if you can call the tariff of the United States a protective tariff, has had a tendency to make things dear. The tariff of the United States never was a protective tariff in the true sense of the word. It started as a high tariff for the purpose of raising extraordinary revenue, and it has been continued, irrespective of whether it was required for the protection of native industries or not."

Now that is exactly what we have to say with re-

Now, that is exactly what we have to say with reference to the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. These hon, gentlemen are noted for their magnifi-It was necessary that they cent expenditure. should gather together a magnificent revenue so that they might have the pleasure of a magnificent expenditure, and it was necessary to bleed the country in order to keep this up, and so they framed this policy and misnamed it the National Policy. The effect of that policy is summed up in the concluding words of my friend opposite. We will apply them to the National Policy, and I think the majority of the people of this country will agree with me that the application is right in regard to our National Policy:

"It started as a high tariff for the purpose of raising an extraordinary revenue, and it has been continued, irrespective of whether it was required for the protection of native industries or not."

Now, this protection fails to protect. It does not protect many of the industries which it is said to The manufacturers of stoves know this to their cost. The duty on pig iron is $4 a ton. There is a factory in the west where 1,000 tons of pig iron are used in a year, and they contribute $4,000 a year to the revenue in addition to the duty which they pay on the coal and coke which they consume. These men say, remove the duty on pig iron and on coal and coke, and they are ready at once to compete, and to compete successfully, with the manufacturers of stoves in the United States. Believing that they were to receive a measure of protection, the stoves manufacturers of this country have so increased their facilities that their foundries are equal to supplying twenty millions of people. They have only five millions to supply, and the result is a depression in that trade which we all deplore. The manufacturers of boilers, engines, agricultural machinery and agricultural implements are also depressed. These are cases in which the so-called protection fails to protect. There is a duty of $13 per ton on boiler plates, 15 per cent. on tubing, 121 per cent. on thin sheet iron and $13 per ton on thicker sheet iron, $13 per ton, which is equal to 30 per cent: on bar iron, 1½ cent a pound and 30 per cent. ad valorem on rivets, 1 cent a pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem on bolts, and the manufacturers find this duty on the raw material so excessive that they are manufacturing at a great disadvantage, and, while their output must be sold at a considerable price above that of the manufacturers in the United States, they are not deriving such a profit | crimination;" I want to know whether it is my from their manufactures as we all would like to see them receive. They also say that, if the raw material, which they put into their works, were allowed to come in free—and that raw material is in many cases the finished product of some one elsethey would be ready to compete with the manufacturers of similar lines of goods in the United I was greatly amused and somewhat pained during the late campaign when I saw some of the caricatures that were posted in every barroom and on nearly every wall in Canada. was one caricature which was called "The Inundation," which represented Canada as being in a deep valley surrounded by high walls which were being pierced by the industries of the United States, which were to sweep out the industries of Canada. When I have lost all faith in the thrift, integrity, courage and noble manhood of Canadians, I will be prepared to endorse a caricature of that kind. The painter of that caricature, and the protectionist party who endorsed it, must believe that Canadians are inferior to Americans, that we are deficient in brain, in muscle, and in energy, that we are lacking in self-respect and are distrustful of ourselves. I cannot agree with hon. gentlemen opposite in that view of the Canadian The Minister of Finance exhorted us to cultivate faith in Canadians. It is hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who have faith in Canadians, and we have reason to have faith in Canadians, because they have been tried and not found The Canadians who have gone to the wanting. United States have not been swamped there. boys who have gone across the line have made their mark, and we have no reason to be ashamed of them. We have no reason to be ashamed of Munro, the publisher, or Hill, the St. Paul railway king, neither need any Canadian be ashamed of Wiman, the Toronto newsboy, who is now New York's millionaire. We believe that Canadians, if they had access to a larger market, could greatly increase the value of the industries of this country. We believe that it would be easier to get cheap English capital if we had a larger market. Americans have no difficulties in obtaining English capital. Day after day we have seen vast sums of British capital invested in American enterprises. What the British capitalist desires above all things is to invest his money safely where it will yield a sure revenue, though it may be a small one. Take the stove manufacture for instance. With a facility for supplying a market of twenty million people, and with only five million to supply, is it reasonable to suppose that English capitalists would desire to back that industry up, but if we had access to the market on the other side it would largely increase the chances of the manufacturers of this article, as it would enlarge the market for the manufacturers in this country as well as for other classes. We could manufacture for the increasing population there as well as for the population we have here, and I believe that the English capitalists have a higher faith in the Canadian people, knowing them to be remarkably skilful, sober and industrious, than hon, gentlemen opposite showed they had in the late campaign, and I believe they would back them up as readily as they now do the Americans in their manufacturing enterprises. Now, I would like to know—I am here to be taught-what is the meaning of this term "dis-duty to teach my sons that they are disloyal to Great Britain and untrue to the Crown if they decline to regard their destiny in this country as consisting solely in furnishing a market for goods sent here by the merchant princes of Manchester, the manufacturers of Birmingham and the cutlers of Sheffield. Am I to tell them that the only reason for their existence on this continent is to provide a market for the merchants I have named? If, perchance, the Angel of Death should hover over the home of one of our people and call away an inmate, is the mourning parent to be branded as a traitor, as disloyal to his Queen and untrue to his country, if he should bury his dead in an iron coffin of American manufacture instead of in one of honest English oak? There seems to be a great deal of nonsense in this talk about discrimination, and in saying that, if we should discriminate against British trade, we are therefore disloyal to Great Britain. that Canada has done much for Great Britain, and Great Britain knows and acknowledges the debt which she owes to Canada. We have provided Great Britain with a western entrance to her possessions in the east. We have constructed a great highway which may any day prove to be of vast advantage to the Imperial Government, and they know it. Another benefit which we have given to Great Britain is to provide homes With our great terrifor her surplus millions. tory in the west, we can furnish homes for the millions who are annually crowded out from that country, and I believe that the highest act of loyalty that we can do is to make this country so prosperous as to provide good homes for their people when they come to our soil. It is the old cry of annexation. Every step that we take in advance is branded as a step in the direction of annexation. Why, Sir, when the question was under discussion of changing the currency of this annexation. country from the old clumsy method of pounds, shillings and pence to the decimal system, timid souls cried out that it was a step in the direction of annexation; and when it was determined to change the gauge of the Grand Trunk Railway, from the broad to the narrow, so as to assimilate our own to the gauge prevailing in the United States, we were again told—I heard it was even stated in the Legislature—that it was a step in the direction of annexation. These timid souls supposed that the yellow freight cars of American roads traversing the Grand Trunk Railway would so debauch our people that they would cry out for annexation. The Liberals can afford to sit still when they are branded as traitors. The whole history of the Liberal party gives the lie to any such charge as that. Conscious of our loyalty, and knowing the debt that this country owes to the noble stand which in the past has been taken by the Liberal party, we can afford to remain silent and treat with contempt the stigmas sought to be fastened upon us by hon. gentlemen opposite and their followers throughout the country. Now, it is well for us to see what is thought in England of this National Policy that hon. gentlemen say is so loyal. Let me read to you the opinion of the Railway News upon that subject:

"It is something startling to hear of the Premier holding up his hands in pious horror at the iniquity of the States in passing the McKinley tariff, while altogether ignoring the existence of a similar fiscal policy inaugurated by himself in Canada. There is a touch of the 'Pecksniff' Mr. DAWSON.

in his denunciation of 'the ignorance and vice' which in the United States have passed the new tariff, and the pleasant dream of the Dominion sitting 'calmly and quietly under the British flag, and looking out with philosophy upon the struggles of a fierce democracy.' Who could suppose that this unctuous Premier, congratulating himself and his hearers that they were not like other men across the frontier, was himself the advocate and founder of a system of prohibition and protection which was directed against the mother country, under whose flag it is his delight to sit in tranquil security and philosophic ease?'"

Now, Sir, I think we can dispose of that question. It is mockery and hypocrisy for those hon. gentlemen to talk about discrimination against Great Britain. If it is necessary in working out the destiny of this country, that we should discriminate against Great Britain, we need not cry out until we hear some sound from across the sea, and I am sure that we shall wait a long time before Great Britain will ever attempt to interfere in the least degree with the free working out of our destiny. Now, hon, gentlemen opposite detest any allusion to '49, but the Liberals are justified in alluding to that little incident of '49. Men whose sentiments of loyalty were so shallow, that in a fit of spleen they were ready to sign an annexation manifesto, may be excused for being very anxious about the loyalty of their fellow-citizens. We must allude to this little incident of '49, it is necessary as an apology for the attitude which hon, gentlemen opposite have taken. The hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) quoted in very lusty tones, a sentiment which is contained in the manifesto of the late Premier, in which he said: "A British subject I was born and a British subject I will die.' Now, Sir, one end and aim of our policy is to bring back our sons and our relatives who have been driven into exile in the United States by the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite; our policy is aimed at bringing them back, so that, upon their natal soil, they may be in a position to re-echo the sentiment of the late Premier, and say "British subjects we were born and British subjects we will die." Now, Sir, it may be somewhat daring in me to allude to the revenue question, as I am a new member, but perhaps the House will indulge me while I do so. The attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite has puzzled me. They tell us their policy is to admit into this country all raw materials free and to tax manufactured goods; their object is to keep out of this country all manufactured goods and admit all raw materials free. Where, then, is their revenue to come from, if they are not to admit any manufactured goods upon which to raise a revenue? If they are successful in realizing the professed aim of the National Policy, I would ask them to tell us how they will replace the millions that would be lost to the revenue if the National Policy were successful in keeping out all manufactured goods? Now, I do not know whether hon. gentlemen contemplate the adoption of a policy of direct taxation in the working out of the policy which is advocated by the Liberals. It is alleged that it must lead necessarily to direct taxation. Whether that is the case or not, I will not argue to-night, but I will say that in one of my meetings an opponent of mine pressed this view very strongly indeed. A farmer got up in the meeting and said: "I think nothing of the contention of the gentleman who has last spoken. I have a horse to sell, and under the policy that is being advocated by Mr. Dawson and the Liberals, the value of that animal will be increased by $30. It is alleged by his opponent that an annual tax equivalent to $15 each family must be levied to replace the revenue that would be lost under the operation of unrestricted reciprocity, therefore when I sell my horse I will have two years' taxes in my pocket, and I will have in additionall the tax that I am paying upon imports from that country." These were the views of an intelligent farmer, he was not afraid of direct taxation, and he thought we had better adopt it rather than allow matters to go on as they are at present. Whether it is necessary to adopt direct taxtation, I will not discuss to-night; abler men have answered that question for us, and have shown that in the great increase of population and wealth which would take place in this country under a better fiscal system, it would not be necessary to resort to direct taxation. I believe those hon, gentlemen, I have faith in the future of Canada, and I think that under a proper management of our affairs the population of this country would so increase that the revenue would be amply sufficient to carry on the government, even with the loss of the millions which certainly would be sacrificed under the operation of this measure. I would say to those hon, gentlemen who are crying out about loyalty, that in England it is not considered that we are very loyal to the mother country in refusing, practically, to provide homes for her people who are constantly leaving that country. sees thousands of them passing along our Canadian Pacific Railway, by way of Sault Ste. Marie, into the United States, instead of going to our own North-West, and she is dissatisfied with the condition of things under which that movement takes place. Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment which has been proposed to this House; I support it because I believe that it will help the farmers of this country, that it will stimulate the lumbering industry, that it will revive our mining industries, that it will increase our manufacturing industries and extend our trade, and that the result will be to surround our homes with that degree of prosperity which ought to obtain in a country so rich, and of natural resources so great as those we possess in this beloved Canada of ours.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I have listened with attention to the remarks which have been made by the hon, gentleman who has just preceded me, and I am sure that in the first speech he has delivered as a new member he has indicated, whether his principle and contentions be right or wrong, that, at all events, he is a very fluent speaker. hon. gentleman, although fresh indeed from the electors, seems to have entirely forgotten the result of the elections. The hon, gentleman told us that he is in favour of unrestricted reciprocity, and that if it was left for the people to say whether we should have unrestricted reciprocity or protection, he pledged his faith to the House that the voice of the people would be in favour of unrestricted reciprocity. Does the hon gentleman forget that the people have already spoken on the subject to which he referred? Does he forget that the people have just returned a House with a large majority of members pledged to support a policy diametrically opposed to that which the before. So it is all over the country. I guarantee hon, gentleman is advocating? Does he forget that every housekeeper has made a greater quantity also that in 1887 the people pronounced most of preserve this year than ever before. This ques-79 forcibly in opposition to the policy of the hon, gentlemen opposite? Does he forget that in `1878 and in 1882 the people pronounced as they did last April? Sir, it is only a vaunted boast of hon, gentlemen opposite to ask again for an appeal to the people, prognosticating a verdict different from that of which they have already had five lessons. The hon, member for East Grey, when he addressed the House, also craved for another dissolution, and he announced what the result of an election would be if Parliament were dissolved. We never can please hon, gentlemen opposite. If we dissolve Parliament, they declare from the first day after dissolution until the day after the elections are over, that it is an unfair proceeding, and if we do not dissolve Parliament we are treated to the like rebuke. I do not know how we can please hon, gentlemen opposite unless we sacrifice the country's interests and allow them to come over here. But I do not think we will ever be found guilty of betraying our trust, and so long as the people are of the opinion they hold to-day, hon. gentlemen will remain on your left hand, Mr. Speaker. I have also the privilege of congratulating the Minister of Finance upon the record he exhibited in the Budget speech he delivered a few days ago. That hon gentleman has proved himself to be a thorough political financier, a man in whom to-day the country has unlimited confidence, a man who by his character and ability has fastened himself on the people of this country as strongly as any other Finance Minister that I remember of in my short political experience. I have to congratulate him especially on what he undertook to do, and which he says was a bold stroke for a Minister of Finance to make, to sweep from the revenue some $3,500,000. I congratulate the hon, gentleman not only on the step he took, but also that the position of the country enabled him to do so. I have to congratulate the people of the country on the fact that they have in the hon, gentleman and in the Cabinet a body of men who were willing to deal with the subject of sugar when it arose in the way those hon, gentlemen have done. The hon, member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) said he could see no advantage that had been gained by the reduction of the sugar duty, that no benefit would accrue to the people, that the Minister of Finance had claimed $3,500,000 of benefit, but he could not see any. If he can see no benefit I do not see who is to blame for it. He must be very oblivious if he cannot, without looking at figures, know that the people are benefited directly by the removal of this duty. I need not go into the question of the sugar duties, into the statements made by the Minister of Finance, but I will state this, that while a purchaser in any store at Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto a few weeks ago would obtain 12 or 13 lbs. of granulated sugar for $1, he now obtains 20 lbs., which, at 7 cents a lb., means 49 cents more for the dollar than formerly. The hon, member for South Grey says he cannot see how the people are benefited by the reduction in the sugar duties. received a letter from a lady the other day, who wrote that shortly after the removal of the sugar duty she took advantage of that act and purchased double the usual quantity of sugar and had made double the quantity of preserves she had ever made tion impresses me much more in another aspect, not only in the financial view affecting our individual pockets but as to how the National Policy has increased the industry of manufacturing sugar in this country. It gave me pleasure when the Minister of Finance was able to present a tabulated statement from which it appeared that in 1878 we imported 6 per cent. of raw sugar for refining and 94 per cent. of the refined article, while to-day the position is absolutely reversed, and now we import only 6 per cent. of the refined article and 94 per cent. of the raw material. I am also glad to be able to state for the information of this House, that at the present moment we are in the proud position of being able to say that, we are not paying a fraction more to-day in Canada for sugar than is a person who buys sugar in the city of New York or in any other place where the American sugar refineries are located. If you take the New York papers to-day, you will find that the price of granulated sugar is 43 cents per pound, and if you look at the Montreal papers you will find that the price there is just about the same. There is not an eighth of a cent difference between the Montreal and New York quotations. also told, although I do not know it myself, that there is 2 per cent. discount for cash in dealing with the Montreal merchants, while there is only l per cent. discount in dealing with the New York merchants. I am also told another fact, that granulated sugar made in this country has more saccharine matter in it than that made on the other side of the line. In addition to making this tremendous reduction in the revenue of the country, the Minister of Finance tells us that the interest per capita does not to-day exceed six cents more than in Sir, that is a wonderful state of things, and 1879. if the Government are not to have credit for that, amongst one of their small benefactions-I suppose hon, gentlemen opposite will call it a small benefaction to this country—then, I am very much mistaken in my opinion of the people of Canada. A little while ago, the hon, member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) was reviewing the unity of the Conservative party, and said that he thought it would be interesting to look across here, and describe the unity that exists amongst the ranks of the Conservatives. Before I refer to the harmony which exists on his own side of the House, I will tell the hon. gentleman that there is unity amongst our ranks here to-day; there is a unity that any leader ought to be proud of, there is a unity as strong to-day as there was when our late leader was with us; we are keeping up his memory in this country in following his footsteps, and in holding loyal allegiance to the Premier whom we have undertaken to support. But, Sir, although the hon. gentleman from South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) chose to make a little ridicule in his own mild way, as to some little personal difficulties between the hon member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and the Minister of the Interior, there is no question of national importance involved. If the hon member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has some misgivings, or some little differences, with the Minister of the Interior, what has that to do with any national issue? Can you call that a division in the ranks? Certainly not. I will tell you where there is a division in the ranks of a political party. I can see division on the other Where did the hon, gentleman make the agreement side of this House; I can see two great parties whereby he could come back to the electors of amongst you; I can see a party lead to-night by your present leader, a gentleman for whom I have the very greatest respect, a gentleman who I believe is conscientious in advocating what he believes to be for the interests of this country. I can see him supported in that policy by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). These two gentlemen have a large following on the other side of the House, but let me ask: Are they followed by all the Liberal party? I tell them they are not. You have the shadow of Edward Blake hanging over you, and I tell you to-night, gentlemen, that there are members in your ranks who will not support the policy of your leader, and if the Hon. Edward Blake were amongst you now, you would show that you were divided into two parties. More than that, if the Hon. Edward Blake had only spoken to this country a week before he did, there are many of you on that side of the House to-night who would not be occupying a seat in this Parliament. If he had spoken earlier, if he had announced the views of many of you, because your views are his views to-day, you would have been elected upon a different policy, and upon a different platform than that on which you secured your election. Let me refer to the division in your ranks. Your hon, leader heads the party composed of members of the same class as the gentleman who spoke last to-night—a party wedded to unrestricted reciprocity pure and simple, for the hon, the leader of the Opposition has pledged himself to unrestricted reciprocity. He says there are to be no Customs walls between here and the United States, and that there is to be discrimination between the United States and Great Britain. Above all you have the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), your coming Finance Minister when your time comes to occupy the Treasury benches, proclaiming that he will raise the revenue by direct taxation. I tell you, gentlemen, there is not a solid body of you on that side of the House who are supporters of that policy. Let me read a few remarks of the hon, member for South Oxford, because I do not like to take up the time of the House with many quotations. I have, however, one or two extracts from the speeches of that hon, gentleman which will probably establish thoroughly the position I take. As the hon, gentleman for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) said, I will try to show the unity that exists between gentlemen on the other side of the House. I will quote briefly from the speech of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) delivered at Chatham last winter, and when I am referring to his Chatham speech, let me tell you that that speech was first published in the Globe, and that it appeared again in the Globe of the following Saturday. It had been revised in the meantime, and it was kept as a standing advertisement in the Globe, with his corrections made in it. It must, therefore, be an authentic document, which we have a right to quote from. The hon. gentleman speaking to the farmers of Chatham.

"We propose to obtain for you the power to trade freely with the rest of this continent; to have leave to make the best use you can of your great natural advantages, which can only be done by full, free and unrestricted reciprocity with our kinsmen in the United States. This is what the Liberal party offers you, and they can get it, too."

this country and tell them, that that was the policy of the Liberal party and that "they could get it for them, too?" Sir, that is an assumption which, surely the hon, gentleman would not use, unless he had been in negotiations with someone who had, on the other side of the line, the power or the authority to give him such an assurance. The hon, leader of I the Opposition adopts the very same policy. His platform has been laid down in his own speeches as full, free and unrestricted reciprocity, and it is also to have the effect of removing the Custom-The hon, gentleman, the other evening, in anwer to the hon, member for Haldimand, said, that in substance that statement was correct. So that these two hon, gentlemen, one in Quebec and the other in Ontario, laid that policy down as the fast policy of the Reform party, which they would carry out when they came into power. Another hon. gentleman on that side of the House, to whom, I suppose, they like to hear reference made, and whose speeches they like to hear quoted, I refer to the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who also took his lesson from the hon. leader ! of the Opposition. Although sometimes there seems to be a little difference between them, at the same time when the hon, member for North Oxford (Mr. Charlton) has an opportunity of lauding his leader he lays it on so thick that I suppose that the hon. leader of the Opposition would wish he was out of the room at the time. That hon. gentleman, when addressing the Young Liberals of the city of Toronto, made this remark:

"With commercial union between the two countries we could dispense with a standing army—."

I tell you the volunteers and the militia are going

I tell you the volunteers and the militia are going as well as the Custom-house officers—

"for under the new relations that would be established between ourselves and our neighbours, there would be no necessity for one, for we could do away with our Customhouse officers, who would have to seek other fields of usefulness."

So that the hon, leader of the Opposition has the company of the hon, member for North Norfolk in this proclamation of their policy. This hon. gentleman declares it as strongly as does the hon, leader of the Opposition, and I do not suppose that hon. gentleman now wishes for a moment to retract. suppose he holds his position on the floor of this House, and contends to-day that that is the only policy that will relieve the suffering people of this country. I mentioned a moment ago that a part of that policy was the direct taxation hobby of the hon, member for South Oxford. That hon, gentleman has been wedded to that hobby for a very long Away back in 1878 he said: while.

"Well, Sir, I would say at once that if we possessed in Canada any tax equivalent to the income tax now in use in England, I would not hesitate to advise the House to have recourse to that means of increasing the revenue." Dare that how gentleman go to the country now upon the question whether we should have direct taxation instead of indirect taxation such as we have at present? If he did, he would come back with fewer men behind him, I can assure you, than he has at present. In the Globe newspaper, we find his speech at Chatham reported thus:

"Sir, we hear a great deal from time to time of the difficulty of raising a revenue by direct taxation, and, looking at the incomprehensible stupidity of certain of our taxpayers, I am bound to admit that the objection to direct taxation has weight."

To-day the hon, gentleman is as thoroughly wedded | most recesses of any person's heart, but I can say

to that hobby as he was when he told his audience in Chatham that if it were not for their incomprehensible stupidity they would adopt it. What does the hon, gentleman have to say when he thinks of the remark made by his respected friend, the Hon. Mr. Blake, when he said that the question of direct taxation in this country was a thing removed altogether from the domain of practical politics? Sir, they are a united body indeed. Now, in reference to the fourth branch of the policy of the hon, gentleman, which is discrimination against British goods, we know perfectly well that the adoption of their policy must necessarily result in that; it cannot be anything else. The hon. gentleman has been asked on several occasions whether it would have that effect. I do not want to accuse him of not knowing the effect of the English language. I certainly could not do that, for I have too much respect for his intelligence. But I do know this, that he knows it would discriminate against British goods; and judging from what he says here, he intends to carry out his policy irrespective of what it may do in the way of discriminating against Great Britain. The hon, gentleman, who last addressed this House, in speaking about his children, if I recollect right, said he would not like to teach them to assist in making trade for the merchants of England. Well, Sir, I can say this much that to so instruct his children, to say the very least of it, is unneighbourly towards the mother country. I hope for myself that I shall never teach my children such a doctrine. I hope that I am able to teach my children to encourage trade between this country and the mother country. trust, Sir, that I shall never teach my children to favour a treaty of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, by which the Custom-house walls are to be taken down, and discrimination to be made against the mother country; I trust I shall never teach them to say: We will not deal with you at all; we will only deal with the United States; and we will put a tariff wall so high around our country that not one of us can trade with you if we want to. Now, Sir, the hon. gentlemen who lead the Opposition, or that portion of the Opposition which I have taken the liberty of calling the right wing, are supported by gentlemen whose names have often been mentioned in this House. They are supported unquestionably by Mr. Wiman. His policy and theirs are in accord. He has been, for aught I know, the very one who laid the reciprocity egg which I saw one time in a newspaper called Grip. I know that they are in harmony with Mr. Goldwin Smith; I know that their opinions and his are alike; I know that commercial union, unrestricted reciprocity and continental free trade are all one and the same; and I know that Mr. Goldwin Smith has said that the manifest destiny of the two countries, Canada and the United States, is to come together, and that commercial union is but a step, though a large step, towards that end. We also know that some of these hon, gentlemen largely share the opinions expressed by a man called Farrer. Now, it has been said that we have charged hon. gentlemen opposite with disloyalty. I wish for my part to say that I do not charge them with disloyalty, because I have no right, standing on the floor of this House, to think that I can look into the innerthis, without fear of contradiction, that the policy they advocate is not a patriotic policy. I can say this, that the policy they advocate is one that tends directly to a union with the United States. I need not refer to the language used by any hon, gentleman in the House to-night, but I can refer to that used by a gentleman in whom hon, gentlemen on that side certainly have confidence, the Hon. Edward Blake; and it will perhaps do no harm if I take the liberty of quoting his words and putting them again on record in Hansard. In his manifesto, he said:

"The tendency in Canada of unrestricted free trade with the United States, high duties being maintained against the United Kingdom, would be towards political union, and the more successful the plan, the stronger the tendency, both by reason of community of interests, the intermingling of the population, the more intimate business and social connections amounting to dependency which it would create with the United States, and the greater isolation and divergency from Great Britain which it would produce, and also and especially through inconveniences experienced in the maintenance and apprehensions entertained as to the termination of the treaty. Assuming that absolute free trade with the United States, best described as commercial union, may and ought to come, I believe that it can and should come only as an incident, or at any rate as a well-understood precursor of political union, for which indeed we should be able to make better terms before than after the surrender of our commercial independence."

I simply give you his expressions, and I tell you, Sir, that in this respect he and I agree. Now, I will also give two or three lines from the utterances of a gentleman, whose opinion carries weight on this side, and whose opinion is highly valued on the other side, though that gentleman has passed away. In his manifesto, the last one he issued, in speaking of commercial union and this policy of unrestricted reciprocity, he said:

"It would, in my opinion, inevitably result in the annexation of this Dominion to the United States." Sir, the opinion of that gentleman is the opinion we on this side all hold. Who was it that discovered this policy? Hon. gentlemen opposite have been in search of a policy for a number of years. They found three or four policies, to my recollection, and when they discovered their last policy they found three or four names for it. Who was it that discovered the policy, who was it that laid the egg, I do not know, but he certainly is to be found amongst the men I have named; but of one thing I am certain, that whichever of them did lay the egg, they all sat on the nest and kept it warm and hatched the egg, and they are, in that respect, political incubators. Sir, I will now deal with the left wing of hon. We have found the right gentlemen opposite. wing, and we will now find out where the left wing is. To begin with, I find in the left wing such men as the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) and the hon, member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald). We will content ourselves with taking up these three leaders and prospective Cabinet ministers who advocate another side of the question We find that the hon. member for West Ontario, on the hustings, delivered an address to his constituents at his nomination, which was published in the Globe and circulated all through his county. And I feel satisfied that if his address had been couched in different language, he would not have the honour of occupying his seat in this House tonight. Let me give you, Sir, a small quotation from his address, I am now referring to that section restricted reciprocity, who stated to their electors that they would not support such a policy, and who also declared that unrestricted reciprocity, as described by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), was really not the policy of the Reform party in this country. The hon. member for West Ontario stated:

"I do not understand unrestricted reciprocity to mean an abolition of the Custom-houses on the border, but an enlargement of the free list to as great an extent as commissioners appointed by the two countries should decide to be in the interest of those they represented. This was clearly to the advantage of the farmers both in buying and in selling, and the manufacturers who were truly of value to the country desired it also."

By these expressions, the hon, gentleman repudiates the policy laid down by the leader of the Opposition, and he tells the farmers of his riding that unrestricted reciprocity does not mean what it has been stated to mean by the hon, leader of the Opposition, but that there are to be commissioners appointed who shall put upon the free list such articles as shall be deemed in the interests of the two contracting parties. Why, Sir, that is pretty nearly the policy of the Conservative party. Neither the hon, member for Huntington (Mr. Scriver) nor the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) could have been returned to this House, if they had advocated for one moment discrimination against Great Britain. It is a fact, with which every person is thoroughly conversant, that they never adopted the unrestricted reciprocity plank of the platform of the gentlemen who lead the right wing of the Opposition. Then we had the hon, member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald), and I am sure that the hon, leader of the Opposition must be very thankful to him for having laid down so clearly and positively the platform of the Reform party the other evening. What did that gentleman say? He said:

"But, passing from the consideration of the National Policy, we are frequently asked, what policy has the Liberal party to present to the country?"

Why, he is speaking for the leader of the Opposition, and he added:

"Well, Sir, we have that policy which is known as an enlargement of the trade relations between this country and the United States. That is our policy; we do not define it down to the very articles that will be permitted to come into this country and to go into the other, but we, as a Liberal party, have always proclaimed on the public platform and in the legislatures of this country that we are in favour of free trade in natural products with the United States; but if the United States refuse to grant us that—"

That is trade alone in natural products.--

"we are willing to go further. We are willing to allow a large proportion of manufactured articles in the United States to come into this country free, provided we are given the same privilege of sending the manufactured articles of this country into their markets free."

Macdonald). We will content ourselves with taking up these three leaders and prospective Cabinet ministers who advocate another side of the question. We find that the hon, member for West Ontario, on the hustings, delivered an address to his constituents at his nomination, which was published in the Globe and circulated all through his county. And I feel satisfied that if his address had been couched in different language, he would not have the honour of occupying his seat in this House tonight. Let me give you, Sir, a small quotation from his address, I am now referring to that section of hon, gentlemen opposite who do not adopt un-

Premier of England, his friends about him smiled, and I think it must have been the same smile which spread over the face of the leader of the Opposition when he heard the policy laid down by my hon. friend from East Huron (Mr. Macdonald). Disraeli's aspirations came to be fulfilled. must take care of your laurels, or the hon. gentleman behind you may come forward and replace I was courted by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Landerkin) to enter upon this enquiry. He says they are a united people and a united party. If you are, then discord and not harmony should be the definition of the word "unity." There is another branch of this question of a united party which I may touch upon for a To recall a few remarks made in the debate by hon. gentlemen opposite, I may point out that the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) advocated the other evening a protective tariff on salt, but he was very particular to con-demn the tariff upon coal oil. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) was determined to have the tax put back again upon salt, and said that industry would be destroyed and that the salt combination had been formed for the purpose of saving the industry and not to rob the people, and he practically asked that the salt duty should be reimposed, and in the next breath he condemned the Government for keeping the duty on oil. The hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) argues strongly for protection on pork and bacon, but he is in favour of free corn and meal. The hon, member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) advocated the duty upon flour and Indian corn, and after that I do not think he cared much what came in free. The former member for Essex (Mr. Brien) also was a protectionist on Indian corn, but he was free trade in regard to all classes of agricultural implements. The hon, member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) carefully expressed his policy. He said that, as long as a protective policy existed, he wanted protection on oil, but he is satisfied to let wheat and oats come in free. The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) advocated protection in wrecking, but I suppose he was willing to have free trade in everything else. The hon, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) likes his protection sweetened just as well as anybody. There is a list indicative of a little more unity. It is a very strange list and could be continued a little further if we had time. I am curious myself to know, and I think the country has a right to know, which section of the party on the other side of the House, when they come to change places, which, I suppose, they expect to do some day, intends to take the Treasury benches. The two wings cannot take the place at the same time with the two policies.

Mr. BAIN. We will be there.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. It would be absurd to suppose that the Conservative party can remain in power forever; but, as long as the Conservative party keeps on in the even tenor of its way, as it now does, I believe it will remain there. Looking at the resolution we are discussing to-night, what is it? I hardly know what it is. The speech the hon member made in introducing it was one thing. It was in favour of free and absolutely unrestricted reciprocity. The resolution he introduced was another thing. Does the hon, gentleman, as an exhaust of Eamston, I do not that locality, but I want to speak of it as belonging to the whole Dominion. Let me preface my remarks by directing attention to a statement that was made by an hon, gentleman who preceded me in this debate, yes, by three or four hon, gentlemen, who have made an attack upon the oil industry and the protection which has been afforded it in this country. I do not think I should have spoken to-night as long as I have, had not that industry been so unjustly and Finance Minister, as a man of ability, undertake to tell the House that the way to carry out his policy is to give away what we have to trade with before we commence to make our bargain? If that is the way to make a treaty, I have yet to learn how to make treaties. If I want to get reciprocity with another country, am I first of all to put on the free list the articles I want to get that reciprocity in? The resolution practically says that we are at once to put on the free list all such articles as may be classed under the head of the necessities of life. By this resolution we are asked to allow American cattle to come into this country free, while our cattle have to pay an enormous duty when they cross the We are asked to allow American swine, pork and bacon and other articles of that class to come in free, while we cannot take a pound over there without paying a large duty upon it. are asked to do the same thing in regard to butter and cheese, which are prime necessities, and also in regard to wheat. Does the hon, gentleman who spoke a short time ago think it would be proper to take down the tariff wall on wheat and allow American wheat to come in here free while our farmers have to pay 15 cents a bushel upon all they send to the United States? That is what you are asking us to vote for, and I have no doubt you will vote for it. Does the hon, gentleman want to let American oats in here free while we have to pay 15 cents a bushel on the oats we send in there? I remember, in Port Sarnia, before the National Policy was inaugurated, to have seen American oats coming in by the ship load, and dumped on the wharf at Sarnia at 16 cents a bushel, and our farmers taking their oats back to the bins Then, as to rather than sell at such a price. potatoes, we are asked to allow American potatoes to come in here free.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No; read the resolution.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. You do not put it in distinct terms, you say "largely reduced," but it is practically free. You have been advocating free trade all along, and you have couched this resolution not in such a way as to back up the speech of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), but in order to catch all your votes. It seems to me that I have occupied a good deal of your time. A good example has been lately set us of making short speeches. We have had three speeches lately of reasonable length, and I would not like to transgress the excellent rule that has been recently initiated by several speakers. cannot sit down without making a few remarks upon an interest of great importance to my section of the country. Hon, gentlemen will know in a moment what I refer to, and in speaking as I do now of the petroleum interest of Lambton, I do not want to consider it as the individual interest of that locality, but I want to speak of it as belonging to the whole Dominion. Let me preface my remarks by directing attention to a statement that was made by an hon. gentleman who preceded me in this debate, yes, by three or four hon. gentlemen, who have made an attack upon the oil industry and the protection which has been afforded it in this country. I do not think I should have spoken to-night as long as I unfairly attacked. Not only has it been attacked in this House, but it has been the subject of still greater assaults outside. It was used during the last election by hon, gentlemen opposite for, I may say, all it was worth to catch a vote. The protection that we have has been misstated, the price of American oil has been misstated, the price of Canadian oil has been misstated, and no person was more guilty in that respect than the hon, member for South Oxford. Sir, I wish now to state that the oil we make in Canada is as good a burning oil, as good in every quality that is essential to a petroleum oil, as any oil made to-day in the United States. It is true that some years ago we did not make as good an oil, because we laboured under difficulties which the Americans had not to contend The Americans have a lighter quality of crude oil, which yields a larger percentage of illuminating oil than does the Canadian crude. Our Canadian oil is charged with a greater proportion of sulphur than is the American crude, and consequently we had difficulties to overcome that the Americans never had at all. Sir, when I make the assertion here that our oil is as good as that made in the United States, I do so without fear of contradiction. I do so the more freely because the hon, member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) only a session or two ago, in speaking upon the subject in the same debate in which he made the remarks that I referred to a little while ago, said "that the oil manufactured here is equal to any petroleum oil manufactured anywhere else in the world. I frankly admit that in the past our oil was inferior, but the difficulties which the refiners encountered have been overcome, and we are manufacturing to-day as fine a burning oil as can be produced anywhere else in the world." If my testimony does not carry that weight with the hon. gentlemen opposite, which every speaker likes to obtain for his remarks, I am sure those hon, gentlemen will accept the testimony of the hon. member for West Lambton as to the quality of our burning oil. Now, when you take up an American paper you will probably see oil quoted at 7½ cents, as has been mentioned by a previous speaker. I do not say every newspaper may quote it at that price, but if you take up a trade newspaper you will find that 7½ cents is the ordinary line of American oil, but it is an oil that will not stand the test that we require for safety purposes in The oil that we admit into this country country. to-day from the United States is not of that class that was referred to by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. Macdonald) when he said that American oil was sold at 7½ cents a gallon, because he had seen it in the newspapers. Now, other gentlemen have referred to the price of oil as well as the hon, member for East Huron. The hon. member for East Huron stated that in the United States, allowing what he considered a fair profit, a better oil could be sold for 131 cents than an article for which we would have to pay 20 cents in this country. Now, if the price is 13½ cents in the United States, retail, I presume he meant, I would like to know how that statement is to be reconciled with statements that have been made by other hon. gentlemen concerning oil. I wish the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) had remained in his seat, because I was particularly desirous that he should know something about the much about it; I wished to give him a little light upon the subject, and to throw a little oil upon his troubled waters, but the hon gentleman would not permit me to do so, for he left the Chamber when I commenced to speak on this subject. Now, that hon, gentleman, in addressing an audience in the town of Chatham, speaking to the farmers

"Does he want a gallon of coal oil? He will have to pay 150 or 200 per cent. more than he could buy it for if we had free trade with the United States."

Now, Sir, my education teaches me that 200 per cent. upon the price of an article is equivalent to multiplying the price by three. If the hon, member for East Huron was right in stating that the retail price of oil in the United States was 1312 cents, then the hon, member for South Oxford told the farmers of Chatham that they are paying now for their oil three times higher than Americans are paying, and that under free trade they would receive oil one-third less than they were paying for it now, either way you like to take it. Sir, if the farmers are now paying three times more for their oil than they would pay under free trade with the United States, they must be paying for it 40 cents per gallon; while the fact is that the Canadian farmer at Chatham can get his oil for 15 cents a I am not responsible for the price at which the retail merchant sells it in towns or villages, where he may put upon it any price he chooses; but I can say this, that the oil that is used all through that district—and I have a sample of it here—is as nice an article as any one would wish to look at, and it is sold at 12 and 121 cents at the place of manufacture. It does not cost over 1 cent a gallon to deliver it at Chatham, and there is a discount of 2 per cent. off for cash; this would bring oil wholesale not over 13 cents or 13; cents in Chatham, while the hon. gentleman tells the farmers that if we had free trade with the United States they would get their oil for one-third of the price. That, I think, is not a fair statement for anyone to make. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) had a very nice business on hand during the last election. He went through the County of Oxford setting the farmers against the oil trade. He did there what he did in Chatham, but in Oxford I am told he carried around two sample bottles of oil. He had a bottle of American oil, the finest sample he could get, and I do not know but that after all it was Canadian oil, as I am told that American and Canadian oil can be taken out of the same cask according to the price the purchaser wishes to pay; and he had also a sample of Canadian oil, yellow, dirty, inferior oil. The hon, gentleman exhibited these samples and told the farmers, referring to the Americanoil, that if we had free trade that was the oil they would get. Let me now follow the prices a little further. The Let me now follow the prices a little further. hon. member for South Huron stated the other day, and his statement was almost correct, that Canadian oil was sold for 12 cents per gallon, that there was another quality for 15 cents—wholesale at the point of manufacture he meant—because in the oil industry, like the coal industry, the question of freight has very much to do with the question of price, but I will deal with that matter before I get through. The hon, gentleman was about right in giving 12 cents—it was 12½ cents. Then 15 cents he gave as the price of a better quelity: oil business, for I do not think that he does know quality; at the present day it is about 16 or

But the hon. gentleman also told the House that American oil was quoted wholesale at 23 cents in this country, and it was asserted that if we had free trade with the United States, the best water white oil could be sold here in this country for 12½ cents per gallon. The quotations he gave of the prices at which oil was sold in this country, 12, 15 and 23 cents are about correct; but I dispute the other statement, and I will prove its fallacy by a calculation which will satisfy every hon, gentleman that the fine superior quality of American oil would not be sold here for 12½ cents. The hon, gentleman well knows that in the United States a gallon of oil is a wine gallon, in Canada it is an imperial gallon, and there is one-fifth difference between one and the other. read in the newspapers that a certain quality of oil is quoted in Cleveland at 9 or 10 cents, that does not mean delivered in Canada. The oil has does not mean delivered in Canada. to be brought here and bear the freight here, just as much as our Canadian oil has to bear the freight from the place at which it is manufactured. The oil must be inspected and there is no hon. gentleman who will advocate doing away with the inspection Again, hon. gentlemen must of American oil. remember that there are the barrels to be provided and the duty charged on them. Unless we have free trade in barrels, there is a duty of 20 per cent. ad ralorem imposed, or 40 cents a barrel. hon, member for Huron said the wholesale price of American oil to-day in Canada was 23 cents. suppose the reason it is 23 cents is because of the duty added. If you were to buy it ex-duty, would it not be 7½ cents less than the 23 cents? That is a fair calculation. Freight, testing and barrelling must go on as at present, every expense connected with it applies whether there is a duty or not. So if the wholesale price is 23 cents in Canada—I do not know at what point of delivery he meant, but it does not matter for the sake of the illustration—and if we deduct 73 cents, what will be left as the price of the oil? The net price will be 153 cents in Canada. How can hon, gentlemen make the statement that we would have American oil sold here for from 73 cents to 9 cents when I prove from their own calculations it would sell at about 15\frac{1}{3} cents if there is no duty imposed? The hon, member for Huron—although I desire to give him credit for having given the prices very fairly—would find in the Globe any day this week the following prices in Canada:—Refined oil, Petrolia, 12½ to 13 cents f.o.b., 2 per cent. off for cash; American oil, 25 cents per gallon at Toronto, wholesale, water white, photogene the best quality of American oil, 27 cents. These quotations from the Globe are nearly correct. If you take 25 cents per gallon as the price in Toronto and deduct from it the whole duty, 7½ cents, it will be found that the merchants would charge 17½ cents ex-duty. Photogene, which is equal to our oil selling at about 16 or 16½ cents, would be sold at 19\frac{1}{2} cents ex-duty. I hope this explanation will induce people when about to make statements in regard to the price of American oil as compared to Canadian, at least to make enquiries and ascertain whether the statements and calculations I have made are correct or not. I make the statement broadly that in the United States there are special classes of oil which are sold in Canada, including duty, at from 25 cents to 27 cents as per the quotations I have given. We have also their Budget speech, and they told the people of a special brand of Canadian oil that the people of this country that they had concluded to reduce the

the class such as those who buy the photogene of the United States purchase. They certainly have to pay more for these high brands, and the reason is that there is a less percentage taken out of the crude, and probably double treating to make this extraoil, but there are people who can afford it and will pay a high price, many of whom have been accustomed to take American oil to the exclusion of the Canadian product, which was not formerly so good. But I will tell this House that you can buy the oil referred to by the hon. member for East Huron at Petrolia for 12½ cents, a first-class burning oil, fit to go into any lamp in the country; and when the people want a barrel of oil at that price all they have to do is to calculate what the freight is to the point of delivery. The freight of oil to Halifax is not more than 2½ cents per gallon, 1½ cents to Ottawa and Montreal and 2 cents to Quebec. You know what the oil costs, what the freight is, and if you pay more than these prices, except a reasonable profit to the retailer, you have yourselves to blame. Now, Sir, I might also say that in the United States the oil trade is confined practically to one concern. The Standard Oil Company of the United States is to-day one of the most aggressive, one of the richest and one of the greatest monopolies that exists on the face of the American continent. If you refer to a small book called "Cook on Trusts," where there is an exposition given of the combines in the United States, you will find that two years ago the capital of that company was $150,000,000, and last year I am informed they divided in profits amongst themselves between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000. I see lately that they have got control of the Southern Pacific Railway, and that they control two or three of the railway lines They are doing in the United States besides. business in Canada to-day; all the gas produced from the gas wells in the County of Welland is taken by the Standard Oil Company and distributed in the city of Buffalo. They lay the gas pipes to the centre of the river, and they supply the city of Buffalo with Canadian gas. I am glad to see such enterprising people, but I want that they shall not get such a foothold in this country that, when they have once got it, they would be able to pinch us close, or fasten around our throats. hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), speaking in that same debate, in reference to the Standard Oil Company and in reference to the necessity for a duty on oil if we want to protect our own industries, made these remarks:

"I do say, however, that if you take off the duty, the Standard Refining Company have but one object, and that is to secure the Canadian market, one way or the other, and if they succeed in doing that, the people of Canada would have to pay a much greater price for their oil than they are paying to-day."

Now, Sir, there is no person in this House of Commons who knows better than the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) what the effect would be, in taking off the duty on refined oil, and I have a matter here to tell you that I think will be rather interesting. In the year when the protection on oil was reduced from 10 cents to 6 cents in this House, that gentleman was previously asked, what action the Government intended to take on this question. The Government tended to take on this question. asked time for consideration, and when they had considered it, they came down to this House in their Budget speech, and they told the people of duty and protection on oil from 10 cents to 6 There was 5 cents Inland Revenue, but I will not complicate matters by referring to that. It will be interesting, I think, to read the remarks of the hon. gentleman upon that occasion, for they will bear out what I have to say, that it would be the complete ruination of the industry if a fraction more of the protection the trade now enjoys were taken off. He said, in 1877, as reported in Hansard:

"The Government, therefore, have carefully considered this whole question with a desire to remove the burdens of the people as much as they could and yet not utterly to wipe out of existence a Canadian industry which had grown up under the protection of the law as enacted by hon, gentlemen opposite, the conclusion we arrive at is this: We propose to abolish the Excise duty altogether and to reduce the duty on imported petroleum from 15 cents per gallon as it is at present to 6 cents. It is necessary for us under existing circumstances to take back an equivalent for that amount."

Remember there was a little loss of revenue here, and he continues:

"We think that we may fairly ask the country to recom-pense us by paying an additional duty of one penny sterling or 2 cents a pound on tea imported into the country."

So that the hon, gentleman was prepared to make up the deficiency in the revenue out of the duty upon tea. Sir, the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) then told us, that he did this to reduce the burdens of the people. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) anxious to relieve the people, indeed! Did he relieve the people? I will tell you what he did, Mr. Speaker, and then you can conclude for yourself. The whole reduction on the revenue by lowering the duty on oil, or if you like to call it, the whole gain to the people by that reduction was $72,000; there happened that year to come into the country 11,000,000 lbs. of tea, and the people lost by the additional duty, not only the $72,000, that they had gained in oil by the duty being lowered on the oil, but the difference between that sum and $220,000, the duties they had to pay upon That is the way the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) relieved the people from the burden of taxation by taking off $72,000 on oil and putting on $220,000 on tea. I will quote to the House what a paper published in the County of Lambton, which I may tell you by no means supported the person who is now addressing the House, says upon this oil question. The Sarnia Observer of the 6th February, 1891, said:

"If there is an industry in the Dominion more entitled on its merits to such protection as a Government could reasonably give, than is the oil industry, we have no knowledge of it. Taking the amount of capital at stake; the peculiar disadvantages under which it is carried on, beginning with the extraction of the crude material from the bowels of the earth to its completion as a manufactured product, no other purely native industry can compare with it in extent and the difficulties it has to overcome. In a broad, sweeping measure of reciprocal free trade its sacrifice, under such circumstances, would be a matter of regret, and one that the most ardent free trader could find reason to deplore." could find reason to deplore.

Mr. Moncrieff.

States to almost every part of the known world where it can find an entrance. I will take the liberty of referring you to the different tariffs that are existing in countries all over the known world against petroleum. But first, Sir, let me read you an extract from a lecture that was delivered by probably the greatest scientist on petroleum in the world. It is from a lecture delivered in 1888 by Mr. Charles Marvin, before the Royal Engineers in Chatham, England, in reference to the petroleum industry of the United States. Upon page 20 of this book, he says:

trade of Canada, imports and exports combined, amounts to about 15,000,000 gallons of refined oil a year, of which we manufacture in this country about 10,000,000 gallons and import about 5,000,000 gallons. Before our protection was lowered the importation of American oil wasata minimum compared with what it was when the tariff was reduced to 6 cents a gallon; then the imports from the United States immediately doubled and have since quadrupled. It is true that hon. gentlemen's policy would do a great deal more than affect simply the present development of the industry. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House must be aware that the favoured oil district in the County of Lambton is not the only place in Canada where petroleum is to be found. The hon, member for Gaspé has just shown me a sample of crude petroleum which we have just taken over to the Geological Department, and which I guarantee is as good if not better, than Pennsylvania oil; and he informs me that a company of Englishmen and Americans have in a short period spent $50,000 in trying to develop the oil-fields in that district. Then, as hon, gentlemen who have paid attention to the geological reports must know, we have in the Kootenay district, in British Columbia, and near the Crow's Nest Pass, very strong indications of oil; and I am informed that Professor Selwyn is at the present time on his way to the Crow's Nest Pass for the purpose of enquiring into the extent and value of the mineral deposits of that district. On top of that we have the great undeveloped oil-fields of the Athabasca region. It might be interesting here to read a few lines from a report on this subject made by a Committee of the Senate a few years ago, founded on information as to the marvellous extent of that district. It says:

"The evidence submitted to your Committee points to the existence in the Athabasca and Mackenzie Valleys of the most extensive petroleum field in America, if not in the world. The uses of petroleum, and consequently the demand for it, are increasing at such a rapid rasio, that it is probable that this great petroleum field will assume an enormous value in the near future, and will rank among the chief assets comprised in the crown domain of the Dominion. For this reason your Committee would suggest that a tract of about 40,000 miles (the area of the Russian deposits at Baku is only 1,600 square miles) be, for the present, reserved from sale, and that as soon as possible its value may be more accurately tested by explora-In passing on now, Sir, to the magnitude of this particular industry, let me call your attention to the trade in the United States. Why, Sir, the volume of trade in the United States in that one article alone is almost incomprehensible. They export to-day oil that they do not need for their own consumption, to the extent of $50,000,000 a year. That oil is carried from the United Mr. Moncrieff. Speaking of the present Canadian oil-fields, Mr. Marvin says:

"The general area is larger than that of all the petroleum di tricts of the present oil-producing countries put together, and the selection of the best southern section as a Crown domain is a measure that should be copied by the Indian Government without delay."

Now, you propose, by your unrestricted reciprocity, to crush out of existence in Canada, not only the existing industry and the capital invested in it, but forever to transfer from this country to the United States the work of supplying oil for the people of Canada. Sir, when the American fields run dry, which experience tells us will happen some day, we in this country, I am warranted by the highest geological authorities in the world in saying, will have an oil territory in the bosom of this Canada of ours larger than is to be found in any other part of this continent. Mr. Marvin has made a careful investigation of our Canadian petroleum resources, and I will take the liberty, for I could not put it in any shorter language than to quote his words. Speaking of the Ontario oil region, he says:

"The Ontario oil deposits cover an area of 50 by 100 miles, but the developed fields are confined to a belt 2 miles in width and 16 in length, situated about 16 miles cast of Port Sarnia, and extending nearly parallel with the St. Clair River."

Here let me remark that this was written two or three years ago, and since that time you might say that it includes a territory five by twenty miles instead of two by sixteen.—

"The territory is divided into two districts, about 7 miles apart, called Petrolia and Oil Springs, in which collectively, 3,200 wells have been sunk. Petrolia produces the greater proportion of the 25,000,000 gallons obtained every year, and also owns nine out of the thirteen refineries at work in Canada. Although, when compared with the United States, where the average production of crude amounts to about 1,000 million gallons every year, the industry may seem insignificant, it yet gives employment to 3,000 men, and sustains a population of 8,000.

* * I venture to predict, therefore, that when the great oil-fields of Canada are opened up, the oil will be found to have an affinity with the Pennsylvanian, and will afford light not only for the future millions of the Dominion, but also for the present millions of the Pacific sea board, both on the American side and in China and Japan."

Now, Sir, to speak of our own industry at home, which I shall be pardoned, I suppose, for feeling a little pride in and making some remarks upon, it consists at the present moment of about 4,000 wells, not to speak of the abandoned wells. When I went there at first, hundreds of wells were put down at a cost of $1,500 to $2,000 apiece. At the present time it costs far less. You could put down five or six wells now at the cost of one in those days. But if you estimate the 4,000 wells in existence to day at $500 each, that will amount to $2,000,000; the machinery at $500,000, the land—about 100,000 acres averaging in cost and value say $100 per acre-$10,000,000, and the abandoned wells at $2,500,000. That would make altogether about $15,000,000. Now, Sir, what revenue does this oil industry return to that district a year? The total proceeds from oil in the country are $7,500 a day; that is from the sale of refined and crude oils and the different products of the crude article. In the town of Petrolia large warehouse companies have established carry the surplus oil from time to time, which have a capacity for storing half a million barrels There are several refineries, representing a capital of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. Then, there duty, Portugal charges 25 cents per gallon, Spain, are large cooper shops that make the barrels. 22 cents per gallon, and Italy, 31 cents per gallon.

There are chemical works in the city of London making acids for the purpose of refining the oil. There are two large manufactories at Petrolia, for manufacturing nitro-glycerine, which give employment to a number of hands. There are also boiler works established there, amongst the largest in the Dominion, and these works have been busy for years past, not only supplying Petrolia, but shipping car loads of boilers to Australia itself. They have shipped car loads of machinery to Australia, to Gallicia, to Italy, and foreign countries. There are large machine shops there. There are labourers employed in running the wells as well as in the manufacture of oil, and they are still at work commanding high wages, and I presume there are about 5,000 people to-day engaged, directly and indirectly, in the production and manufacture of oil and other articles in conjunction with it. A large population is also maintained, not only in the town, but throughout the country, where the trade has its connections and branches. I can also tell you this, Sir, and it will be of interest to the Finance Minister, as showing the advantages of protection, that within the last year a company from the United States came to Petrolia and bought out one of the largest refineries there, and within the last year have spent fully a quarter of a million dollars in developing the industry there. In this connection, I wish to refer to the policy of other countries with reference to this oil industry, and that is something which will interest the Minister of Finance. We are asked by those who are agitating for free trade, and who wish to close up our industries and stop the future development of the country, to allow American oil to come in free. Let us see what the policy of the United State has been. It is only a few years ago since the Americans took down the bars and allowed our oil to enter their country at a lower duty. Formerly they had a high tariff, which they have reduced to 20 per cent. ad valorem on refined, and 10 per cent. ad ralorem on crude oil. When did they make that reduction? They did it, but not until their oil was as low as it is at present. They did not do it so long as they saw a single chance for a single gallon of Canadian petroleum going into their country. At that time what was the duty? We have been told that the duty we have upon American oil is about 100 per cent., and that it is an enormous taxation. Sir, what will those hon, gentlemen think when I tell them that the United States formerly levied a specific duty of 20 cents a gallon upon crude oil, which, at the present prices of 40 or 60 cents a barrel, instead of being 100 per cent., would be about 2,000 per cent, and their duty on refined oil was, until, I think, 1884, 40 cents per gallon specific duty, which, taking the oil at 10 cents per gallon, would be 400 per cent. That is the lesson given to us by statesmen on the other side desirous of developing their country, and whom hon. gentlemen opposite are constantly asking us to imitate. Now, let me see them imitate them in this respect; but let me refer you, Sir, for a moment, to the high duties which prevail in other countries where oil is produced. I find that Russia, having one of the largest oil territories in the world, charges a specific duty of 18 cents per gallon. I would like to see how you could get our oil in there in face of that duty. France charges a duty of 17 cents per gallon specific

Austro-Hungary charges a specific duty of 17 cents, Greece 25 cents, and the United States' tariff I have given you. In referring to Austro-Hungary, I cannot help referring with feelings of pride to the great number of our young Canadians who are over there. I suppose that in the County of Lambton there will be found the most skilled lot of workingmen to be found on the American continent; and Austria and Gallicia and Italy and even Russia, have taken our young men from the town of Petrolia-at high wages, $4, $5, and $6 a day—with the tools and machinery used by them, and in Gallicia to-day there is a settlement of over 50 Canadians at least. We will be told that the National Policy has driven these men out of the country. But I say, that is not the case. The protective tariff, however, has this much to do with it, that, under its influence, the education of these young men was acquired by them in our own country and they have become the most skilful oil workmen and artesian well drillers in the world, and the skill they have acquired, owing to our protective tariff, has created a demand for them in all parts of the civilized world where artesian wells have to be drilled. I forgot to mention Australia, which is a country greatly in need of water, and where the sheep often die by thousands for want of that element; and I can tell you, Sir, that it was not until about six years ago that substantial relief was obtained in that country from the drougth, and that relief was obtained by means through the skill of Canadians from the town of Petrolia. American workmen and others had endeavoured to bore deep wells in Australia, but had practically failed. But one of our Canadians went over there with a gang of some eight men and machinery, and he put down a well, and succeeded in obtaining water, and the Australian sheep-fields to day are teeming with artesian wells drilled by Canadians and by Canadian machinery. In reading a letter, which I received from one of those men, I felt very much pleased with a little incident he related. He said:

"The beautifully coloured birds of the Australian regions, when the wells are nearly done, and the instincts of these birds, strange to say, tell them when we are near water, and as we are about striking the water, thousands of those lovely plumaged birds hover round the derrick and cheer us in the centre of the wilderness of Australia with their songs. They wait until the great deluge breaks out, and pour down in myriads to drink."

I must not forget to say, in advocating this duty on oil, that I do not consider the oil industry for one moment, as a local interest in Canada. Like all other industries in Canada, it must go hand in hand with the others in the development of this country. It is in this respect like the coal industry and the iron industry, and the only drawback know about it at present is the fact that it is centred in one locality. There are no combines, nor has there been one in existence in that industry for years. In fact, I believe oil to-day is made too cheap, and I do not believe there is half a cent profit per gallon in it to the manufacturer. I was saying that the freights are unquestionably against the trade. If fortune favours this country and develops the oil-fields of Gaspé, we will have oil produced in the east. We have oil in the west, and we have oil in the central part of the coun-Then we will have the heavy rates of freight reduced which are now an obstacle in the way of this particular trade. But are we alone in that? Across the line, where do we find the oil-Mr. Moncrieff.

fields? Do we find them in Georgia, in Carolina, or in the State of Maine? No; we only find them in the favoured districts of Ohio and Pennsylvania, and I believe in a small part of the State of Cali-If they get oil in California, they will do what we are trying to do in British Columbia, and then this objection as to freight will be re-This is, therefore, not a sectional question, but is one in which each province is alike interested. Protection has been placed and maintained on oil for the purpose of holding in its entirety the interest we now have and further developing the other sections of this country which have been found to be rich in oil. I have taken up a great deal of time in discussing this subject and I ask pardon of the House for having detained it so long. My only excuse is that, residing in that part of the country which is so rich in oil, I might be supposed to know more about it by experience than people who reside in other portions of the country.

I should like to ask the hon. Mr. O'BRIEN. gentleman a question. Are we to understand from his figures that the difference we pay throughout the country in the retail price of Canadian oil, which I understand is about 25 cents a gallon, and the figures which he has quoted as the price in the coal oil district of Petrolia, is due entirely to the profit made by the retailer?

Mr. MONCRIEEF. The hon. gentleman from South Huron gave the correct prices the other evening. The price in Petrolia is 12½ cents. If you add the freight on that to where you live -- I do not know where it is-it cannot be more than 2 cents, and then I can only say that all over and above that would be profit to somebody outside of those who manufacture it. It is a mere matter of calculation. The hon, member for South Huron says the price is 25 cents a gallon retail for that which costs only 12½ cents. If the freight is added, the difference between what is paid to the refiner and the amount charged by the retailer is profit, and the barrel is always left, and that is worth about $1.

Mr. HYMAN moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 20th July, 1891.

Mr. WALLACE moved:

That the Order of the House of the 25th June last, to the effect: "That it is desirable that any witnesses called before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts be examined under oath or affirmation touching any matter coming before them," should be rescinded, as in the opinion of the Committee such an order should not be asked for from the House except upon the recommendation of the Committee.

He said: I am aware that this motion can only be moved by the unanimous consent of the House. may say it is asked by the Committee unanimously.

Mr. SPEAKER. This motion cannot be proceeded with out of its usual order. I understand it is objected to.

Mr. FOSTER. Does any hon. gentleman object?

Mr. LAURIER. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I object on principle to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I call attention to the fact that it was passed by the unanimous consent of the Committee, after discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. If objection is taken to the moving of a motion already on the Notice paper, it cannot be moved out of its regular order. I understand objection is taken.

Mr. WALLACE. But we are passing motions adopted unanimously by committees every day. If any hon, gentleman rises to object to this

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. WALLACE Do I understand objection has been raised?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; objection has been raised to the motion which the hon, gentleman has just moved.

Mr. WALLACE moved:

That the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts be empowered to investigate all accounts paid to or through J. E. Têtu, or in connection with any office or public service under his charge, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the fourth report of said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BARRON. With the consent of the House, I beg to move:

That all accounts for salaries and extra services or otherwise with the Post Office Department in regard to the following persons: namely, J. G. Poston, A. C. McDonald, M. P. Wright, E. A. LeSueur, Miss Kate E. Falconer, Miss J. Craig, Miss A. Graham, and A. E. Meighen, together with all cheques given in payment of such accounts, and any and all cheques, vouchers, receipts and other papers in any way relating to their respective services for the fiscal year 1888-89, and up to year ending 30th June, 1891, be produced before Public Accounts Committee. mittee.

Mr. LAURIER. Is objection taken?

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is not exactly in order. The accounts ought to be sent down to the House and then referred.

Mr. WALLACE. The motion is quite unnecessary, as the hon. member secured the passage of a similar resolution in the Public Accounts Committee to-day.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. gentleman is quite istaken. The motion made before the Public mistaken. Accounts Committee to day referred merely to what was in the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1890. This motion refers to matters prior to that.

Mr. BOWELL. It is quite clear that the only mode to obtain that is to move that they be laid before the House, and then they could be referred to the Committee. The hon. gentleman has not given any notice of the motion, and I take it that it is out of order.

AMBER DEPOSITS IN NORTH-WEST.

Mr. BAIN asked, Has any person applied for or received from the Government the privilege of purchasing or working an amber mine or deposit in the North-West? If so, who has applied for or received such privilege or right? Where is the mine or deposit located? Was it granted to the first applicant therefor?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes. Twenty-three applications have been made, but no privilege of purchasing or working an amber mine has been granted. Messrs. McFarlane & King, who claim to be the discoverers and were the first applicants, have been granted until the 1st of January next, the right to explore within the tract covered by their applica-The following twenty applicants made twenty-three applications for amber locations at Cedar Lake: - McFarlane, King & Co.; P. LEASE OF BUILDING ON SPARKS STREET.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Has the Government a lease of the building on Sparks Street formerly occupied by the Dominion Analyst? If so, from whom leased, how long, and what rent is paid per year? Is it at present occupied by any officer of the Government? If so, by whom, and for what purpose is it used?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Government did lease the building referred to for $500 a year. It was so leased for the Assistant Dominion Analyst, and for the manufacture of methylated spirits, for five A portion of it is now occupied by a messenger of the Inland Revenue Department, who is there as caretaker, without salary. It is leased from Mr. Perkins.

POSTMASTER AT NELSON, B.C.

Mr. DEVLIN asked, What was the salary of the postmaster of Nelson, B.C., during the year 1890? Was there an increase made during the current year? If so, how much, and what reasons were given by the post office inspector recommending such increase?

Mr. HAGGART. During the year 1890 the salary of the postmaster of Nelson was $30. The salary has lately been increased to $200, the books of the department showing that the revenue of the office is more than sufficient to warrant such a salary according to the ordinary scale. The attention of the department was drawn by the post office inspector to the rapid increase of postal business at Nelson, justifying, as he believed, a considerable increase of salary.

TORONTO HARBOUR WORKS.

Mr. GERMAN asked, 1. Who are the contractors for the Toronto Harbour Works? Mr. SPEAKER. I rule the motion out of order. When was the contract let? 3. When was the work to be completed? 4. What was the amount of the contract? 5. What progress has been made, to date, with the dredging and timber work? 6. What amount of work remains to be done? 7. What is the cause of the delay? 8. When will the work be completed? 9. What changes have been made, if any, since the contract was let? 10. If changes have been made, will they increase or decrease the cost of the work and to what extent, or have any changes been made in the contractors' price? If so, state what changes have been made in this respect?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1. Messrs. Murray & Cleveland, of St. Catharines, Ont. 2. On the 21st May, 1889. 3. Thirty months from date of contract, or on 21st November, 1891. contract was a schedule price one. Applying Messrs. Murray & Cleveland's prices to the quantities as per original plan, their tender would amount to $192,810. 5. The quantity of dredging done to date is 253,037 cubic yards. It should be stated, however, that the dredging done during the summers of 1889 and 1890, amounting to 199,914 cubic yards, was done for the purpose of keeping the eastern channel open during the time of navigation and not as part of the permanent 16-foot With regard to the progress of the timber work, the following may be stated:-The work as originally designed consists in the construction of two entrance piers, respectively 2,280 feet and 2,420 feet in length, and a protection pier 1,500 feet in length, from the east pier to the end of Fisherman's Island. Up to date, 900 feet of the work is built up to one foot above zero, and 20 cribs 100 feet in length are framed 18 feet in height and ready to be placed in position. In addition a large quantity of materials are delivered in Toronto, such as: 61,733 lineal feet of cumber 12 x 12; 46,144 lineal feet of timber 10 x 10; 18,000 lineal feet of poles for ballast floors, &c. quantity of dredging yet to be done to obtain the 16-foot channel, is estimated at 350,000 cubic yards, and from the above it would appear that 5,300 feet of crib work have yet to be placed in position, but it is expected that when the east pier and the protecting work are built, there will be no neces-7. The very rough state of the Lake Ontario during the summer of 1889-90 and the exposed position of the work. 8. It will depend on the state of the weather; it is expected, however, that the whole of the work will be completed in 1893. 9. In the original plan it was intended to place the crib work on the natural bed of the lake, and to open up a channel 12 feet. in depth between the two lines of crib work. June, 1890, it was decided to sink the crib work to a depth of 16 feet below zero, so that it might be permanent and permit of a channel 16 feet in depth being dredged, and to correspond with the lake and river entrance to the Welland and St. Law-rence Canals. Mr. Page, late Chief Engineer of Canals, was consulted, and recommended that the east pier be sunk to a depth of 16 feet, and an Order in Council authorizing this change was passed. The sinking of the cribs to the depth of 16 feet necessitated a change in their construction, their width being increased from 25 to 30 feet. Mr. GERMAN.

ing the sinking of the eastern pier to a depth of 16 feet below zero, will increase the cost of the work by the value of extra materials required for the change, and that of the extra dredging, the estimated increase being $35,000. The change due to the increase in the width of the cribs will entail an extra expenditure of about $25,000. It is probable, however, that owing to these beneficial changes, and the fact that the eastern pier will be of a more substantial character than originally intended, it will not be necessary to construct the whole of the western pier, and that a saving of $75,000 will thereby be effected. None of the contractors' prices have been changed; they are paid at the schedule rates of their tender.

DEPARTMENTAL PAY-SHEETS.

Mr McMULLEN asked, Was it not the rule of some or all of the departments some years ago that pay-sheets had to be executed by each Civil Service officer, whether temporary or permanent, in payment of salary? When was the system abolished? On whose recommendation? And what were the reasons given for such abolition? Does the Government intend to reintroduce this system, in face of the developments which have taken place before the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. FOSTER. I must say to the hon. gentleman that I cannot get from his questions a clue to the kind of information he wants. I do not understand his question—my head is a little thick, I suppose—and if he will take the trouble to explain it to me and let the question stand, I will try to get an answer for him at a later day.

GUYSBOROUGH CUSTOMS COLLECTOR.

Mr. FRASER asked, Has the collector of Customs for Guysborough been superannuated? If so, for what reason? Have charges been preferred against him by any person? If so, by whom? Why was he deprived of the office of overseer of fisheries? Who has been appointed to these two offices, and at what salary? Has any investigation taken place, by order of the Government, into any charges made against the said collector?

Mr. BOWELL. The collector of Customs for Guysborough has been superannuated, and Mr. William Cameron appointed sub-collector at that place, at a salary of $400 per annum. Mr. Cameron has also been appointed overseer of fisheries, at a salary of $150 per annum. It is almost impossible to answer the remaining portion of the question, certainly not satisfactorily, unless by the production of the correspondence, which will be brought down if the hon, gentleman will move for it. It is too voluminous to be read here.

proceeds of such seizures, or any of them, refund the money when such seizures were declared illegal? What were the names of the officers or parties who refunded the money comprising their share of such seizures upon declaration of the illegality of the same, and what was the date in each case of the payment of the same? What were the names of the officers or parties who did not refund the money comprising their share of such seizures after the declaration of the illegality of the same?

This question is one which Mr. BOWELL. should have been asked by a motion, and then I could have given the information. If the hon. gentleman would move for any particular case, I would be glad to give him full information upon it. In the meantime, I will give him what information I have. The only cases that can be brought to mind without a search through something over 8,000 seizures, in which seizures of goods have been made, and which come within the category of the questions mentioned, are the following, in which judgments were rendered against the Crown :-The Ayer Patent Medicine Company; Carter, Macy & Company, teas; The Bell Telephone Company, switchboards; and the Grinnell sprinklers; but as in none of these cases was any distribution ever made, there was nothing to refund. The case of the Vacuum Oil Company, in which judgment went against the Crown for a portion of the amount deposited, and which it was supposed was settled years ago, was brought into court on a fiat. As the matter still remains unsettled, awaiting the voting of funds to pay the amount of judgment, no call has been made for a refund of the proportionate amount covered by the judgment; but this will be done as soon as a final settlement is arrived at. I may say that this is the only case I can recollect at present in which the distribution has taken place and the decision of the courts was against the department. may be added that in this case the portion of the award that went to the informer cannot be refunded, the party-having died several years since. have been two or three cases, as, for instance, the Fuller & Co. (dynamite), and the Noble's Explosive Company (dynamite), in which, on a revision and additional evidence being obtained from England and Germany to settle the actual value of the article, the department refunded the amount deposited, but in these cases, as in those above referred to as having been decided by the court, no distribution had ever been made of the proceeds.

PURCHASE OF CEMENT.

Mr. LISTER asked, Has the Government entered into any agreement or agreements for the purchase of cement? If so, what is the date of contract or contracts; the total quantity agreed to be purchased; the names and addresses of each person or corporation with whom any such contract has been entered into; the price to be paid, and when to be delivered?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I enquired about this in my department, and there is no arrangement or contract for the purpose mentioned.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BONDS.

Mr. FREMONT asked, When is it the intention of the Government to bring before the House the and have been grossly misrepresented in the press promised legislation regarding the bonds on that part of the Canadian Pacific Railway formerly known as the "North Shore Road?" Why has not the measure been brought before the House at an earlier period of the session?

Mr. BOWELL. The resolutions dealing with this question will be placed upon the Notice paper in a day or two. The reason this was not done before is because they were not ready.

THE LIEVRE AND OTTAWA RIVERS.

Mr. DEVLIN asked, Is it the intention of the Government: 1st. To dredge and deepen the Lièvre River between the town of Buckingham and the lock recently constructed at High Rapids, so as to permit steamers and boats drawing eight feet of water to circulate, and to render the depth of the river the same as that at the new lock? 2nd. To dredge and deepen the Ottawa River at and about the wharf of the town of Aylmer, so as to permit steamers to approach the same in low water?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I require more information than I have in my department about the first portion of the question, but attention will be given to the subject. With regard to the second portion, we have nothing in the department to show that more water is required at the Aylmer wharf.

CANADA STATUTES—DISTRIBUTION.

Mr. GUAY (for Mr. Brodeur) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to supply to numicipal councils and justices of the peace, copies of the statutes of Canada?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The statutes are not given to justices of the peace. This matter was discussed a couple of years ago, and it was decided not to distribute them to justices of the peace. The criminal laws, however, and the amendments thereto are distributed, and a certain number of municipal officers receive the statutes.

MR. JENNINGS-CHIEF ENGINEER.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before we proceed with the Notices of Motion, I would like to have information on a point which is of urgency. It is reported the Government have appointed, or are about to appoint, Mr. Jennings as Chief Engineer of the Public Works Department. I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works whether there is any foundation for that statement, because it would certainly affect his functions as an engineer employed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Sir HECTOR, LANGEVIN. I saw that mentioned in the papers, but that is all the information we have about the matter.

INVERNESS AND RICHMOND BAILWAY.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, petitions and memorials relating to the construction of a line of railway by the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company (Limited), in the County of Inverness, up to date.

He said: Before the motion is put, I desire to say a few words in explanation. Railway discussions in Inverness have been frequent for a number of years, and on the platform. For thirty-five years the people of Cape Breton have been agitating for railway extension through that Island, but, for various reasons, not until January last has a line of railway been completed, and that was built by the present Dominion Government. Unfortunately for our Island, we were in former times divided among ourselves, and the Local Governments of Nova Scotia took advantage of that disagreement. In fact, whenever a railway project was contemplated in any part of the Island, we found that designing politicians always managed to defeat our hopes. I will not refer to what transpired previous to 1884, when, as many of the older members of this House may recollect, an agitation for assistance from this Parliament was commenced in this At that time we felt it would be possible to put an end to the rivalry existing among various sections of the Island, and I am happy to say that, to a large extent, we have succeeded in this Parliament; but unfortunately, or possibly fortunately for the Island, disagreement among the different sections of the country was very ingeniously brought about in the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia. When railway matters in the Island were under consideration in this House in 1884, and an agitation continued for the purpose of constructing a main line through the Island by a Company, we found, to our great surprise, the announcement that a rival company had been chartered by the Local Legislature. When the charter was under consideration in the Local Legislature, Mr. Campbell, who then represented Inverness in that body, spoke as follows:-

"He was astonished at the course of the hon. Attorney General in introducing this Bill. That hon gentleman must see the insincerity of this company in coming here must see the insincerity of this company in coming here and simply asking for a charter and a grant of Crown lands for the privilege of building a railway through the Island of Cape Breton, when companies in the past, with grants of moneys and Crown lands and mineral lands, had failed to build a mile of road in the Island. There was nothing in this Bill, it was simply to embarrass a company that was somewhat likely to build that road,—a company which contemplated the building of roads through several of the provinces of the Dominion,—a company backed up by the Dominion Government."

To this complaint and appeal on behalf of Inverness particularly, the Premier of Nova Scotia (Hon. Mr. Fielding) replied as follows:

"He thought the suggestion of the hon, the Attorney General ought to meet the wishes of hon, gentlemen opposite. The Bill was not being passed through, a final stage. He did not agree with the hon, member for Inverness, as he thought it was no harm to have more companies than one chartered for railway purposes. He had seen a telegram in a Cape Breton paper suggesting that the granting of this charter was going to embarrass the Dominion Government; but though he, for one, was inclined to look to the Dominion Government to assist in railway building in the Island of Cape Breton, he did not see how the passage of this Bill, on the conditions suggested by the hon, the Attorney General, could have any such effect as had been spoken of."

Notwithstanding the remonstrances of Mr. Campbell, who then represented Inverness, the Bill passed all its stages through the Legislature and became law. The following year the railway affairs connected with Cape Breton generally, and Inverness particularly, were under discussion in the Nova Scotia Legislature, and Mr. Fielding, the Premier, on the 10th April, 1885, said:

the question, of the rival routes in Cape Breton is a more serious question than the rivalry between the mainand Cape Breton. I have my own opinions on the subject, but I would be quite willing to grant aid to either of those routes, if the company, on commercial principles, was ready to build on either of them. If we were forced to decide between the routes as we would be by this resount difficulty in the property of the p to decide between the routes as we would be by this resolution, then I see great difficulty in the way. I am quite willing to admit the strong claims of Cape Breton. If this resolution had the approval of all the members from the Island, if it could be taken as a fair indication of the interests of Cape Breton, then it might be an indication of the line of policy which this Government would adopt. But I am afraid it does not; I am afraid it brings up the question of the rival routes, an exceedingly difficult question. On behalf of the Government I have to say that if any company be found to build a railway in Cape Breton, this Government will be ready to aid in that work to the this Government will be ready to aid in that work to the extent of their power."

In this way it will be seen that the Premier of Nova Scotia was aware of the manner in which any railway enterprises could be defeated on the Island, as he admitted the manner in which that had been practised in the Local Legislature for some For some reason or other—I cannot well explain it myself—the Local Government of Nova Scotia has paid considerable attention to myself for some years past. In December, 1886, two members of the Local Government advertised a meeting in my county, in the village of Whycocomagh, in order to organize the Liberal party in that county against me, and the Local Government were represented by the Hon. J. W. Longley, Attorney General, and the Hon. D. McNeill. In 1887 it was proved that their efforts had failed to defeat me. In 1887 the Local Government granted two charters to rival companies in that county, and I have no hesitation in saying that was for the purpose of defeating the extension of a branch line of railway in the County of Inverness. Both charters were practically over the same ground. It is true they were differently worded, but the charter of one of the railway companies would enable the other, if they had the means, to build a railway over exactly the same ground from one end of the county to the other. The effect, however, was altogether to defeat the prospect of building a road at all. In 1891, the Premier of Nova Scotia paid some attention to the County of Inverness, as well as to other counties in the province. He addressed two public meetings in that county, and he did not fail to discuss Inverness railway matters at both those meetings, but he found that the people made it so hot for him that, though he had two or three other meetings advertised, he failed to put in an His action there obtained a large majority for me, and I have no doubt that, if he had appeared at the other meetings, my majority would have been 1,000. But as all these ques-But as all these questions have been misrepresented, not only in the County of Inverness, but throughout the Province of Nova Scotia, and even in Ottawa, I deem it my duty to place on record, with such correspondence as I have called for, correct statements in regard to these railway matters. In the early part of the session there was a manifesto published in the Citizen of Ottawa in which, over the signature of Henry N. Paint, it was alleged that a report of meeting which took place in the village of Whycocomagh, in February last was correct, but the gross misrepresentations which were made in "It has been the fact in times past that a skilful political leader could knock the heads of the two divisions of Cape Breton together, and prevent anything like the united action on the part of Cape Breton members by raising the question of the rival routes. In fact Mr. Cameron (Inverness).

secretary of that meeting. I may say that, although Mr. Paint's report purported to be the correct report of the meeting held at that time, and was signed by the chairman and secretary of the meeting, only a very small portion of what took place was published. The preamble of one resolution was placed before another resolution, and what I stated was grossly exaggerated and misrepresented in his report. This is my excuse for reading to the House the correct report of that meeting, which I would rather place in the hands of the reporters if the Rules of the House did not prevent that being done, unless the report was read in the House, as published by the secretary in the North Sydney Herald:

' RAILWAY MEETING AT WHYCOCOMAGH.

"Pursuant to notice given by the warden of the county a meeting was held in Whycocomagh on the 3rd instant. a meeting was need in whycocomagn on the 3rd instant, for the purpose of considering the best method of obtaining railway extension from Orangedale Station on the C.B.R. to Cheticamp. Neil McAuley, warden, was elected chairman, and Andrew A. Munro, secretary.

"L. S. McKeen then moved the following resolution, which he supported in a few well-chosen sentences, relative to the great results which would arise from railway extension poeth:—

tive to the great results which would arise from railway extension north:—

"" Whereas the C.B. Railway, recently opened for traffic, is located near the border of the county and does not traverse the leading districts; therefore, it affords but comparatively little accommodation to the people and trade of Inverness, unless a branch is built extending from, or near, Orangedale Station, on the C.B.R., to the northern part of the county; and

"Whereas such extension, passing at or through Whycocomagh, through or near the important districts of Mabou and Lake Ainslie, through Broad Cave and its immense coal-fields, through the thicky-peopled districts of Margaree, and terminating at the Eastern Harbour of Cheticamp, whould develop such large railway traffic as to Choticamp, whould develop such large railway traffic as to pay not only the cost of such branch extension, but largely increase the carnings of the main line by being so important's feeder;

"Therefore, resolved: That the Dominion Government be respectfully requested to undertake the building of such branch as a Government work.'

"The resolution was seconded by J. S. Hart, and carried unanimously. The above resolution was ably discussed by Dr. Cameron, M.P., John McKinnon, M.P.P., Dr. McLellan, ex-M.P.P., Rev. J. Rose, J. S. Hart, James Mc

Phail and others.

"Dr. Cameron, in addressing the meeting, laid particular stress upon the advisability of the branch referred to being built under the auspices of the Dominion Government, and proved conclusively, to the satisfaction of present, that if the Government could be induced to carry on this work, it would be far preferable to having the line operated by any company whatsoever.

"Jos. McKinnon. M.P.P., in supporting the above reso-lation, gave a stirring speech, and dwelt particularly on the mineral and agricultural resources of the county, and the great need of further railway facilities.

"The next resolution, moved by Dr. McLellan, ex-M.P. P., seconded by Councillor J. P. McDonald, of Orangedale, read as follows:—

"Resolved, that if the Dominion Government decline to build such a branch railway as a Dominion work, that it be requested to provide the necessary legislation for such liberal subsidy as will enable the rond to be built by a chartered company able and willing to do so within a reasonable time, and that a petition be forwarded to the Government in accordance with the above resolutions. In introducing the above resolution, Dr. McLellan argently advocated the measures therein contained, and declared that he knew the people of the northern districts to be a complete unit in their desire for further railway communication north from Orangedale. He dwelt at length on the great advantage the proposed line would prove to the farmers of North Inverness in transporting their chief marketable commodity, namely, stall-fed cattle; and closed with a powerful appeal to all interested in the welfare of Cape Breton, to unite heartly in the endeavour to obtain this much-needed convenience.

"The warden then read a pithy communication from Alexander Campbell, ex-M.P.P., explaining his absence on the score of illness and expressing his full and hearty sympathy with the object of the meeting. He lamented the miserable management of former railway onterprises declared that he knew the people of the northern districts in Inverness and the manner in which the county had been mulet by those whose chief aim seemed to be to plunge it into a sea of debt and difficulties.

"Afterwading the above communication Mr. McAnley

After reading the above communication, Mr. McAulay

"After reading the above communication, Mr. McAulay asked if there were any further resolutions to lay before the meeting, whereupon H. N. Paint, ex-M.P. for Richmond, moved the following resolution:

"'Whereas the electors of the County of Inverness residing at Orangedale, Broad Cove, Margaree and Cheticamp, are most anxious to have railway connection with the present Cape Breton Railway at Orangedale, which would place Port Hood, the county town, within eighteen included."

eation;
"Therefore resolved, that this public meeting called by the warden of the county, ask the Dominion Government, should it decline to build such branch as a Government work, to grant a charter to the Inverness Railway Company who made application for a charter at the last session of the Deminion Parliament, and whose corporators are: H. N. Paint, James H. Longhead, Duncan McMillan, William A. Allen, J. G. Butterworth, James Isbester, P. K. Hyndman, Hiram Duncan, J. S. Hart, John McKeen, G. C. Lawrence, and J. K. McDonald; providing they satisfy the Government of their ability to build, equip and operate such line, and to commence active operations within one year.'

The above resolution was seconded by Dr. Cameron,

"The above resolution was seconded by Dr. Cameron, M.P., and almost unanimously carried.

"John McKeen, of Mabou, in speaking to the above resolution, expressed the opinion that in deference to justice H. N. Paint and his associates should be preferred to any other company who might apply for aid to carry on the work, on account of time, trouble and money already expended in making surveys, preparing charts and bringing the matter before the public.

"The meeting being non-partizan undoubtedly contributed largely to its success. The greatest interest was manifested during the whole of the session. The most pleasing feature, however, appeared to be the perfect forbearance and unanimity which prevailed throughout.

"ANDREW A. MUNRO,

" Whyco'h, Feb. 5th, 1891."

Those hon, gentlemen of this House who choose to compare that report as published in the North Sydney Herald of February 18th, 1891, with the garbled statement which was published in the Citizen of Ottawa in the early part of the session, will not fail to see the gross injustice which has been done to myself in that connection. On the very day of the meeting, and before it was known to us down by the sea that Parliament was dissolved, and also, I believe, before Parliament was dissolved, I addressed a letter to the late lamented Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, to which I received a reply, and I now desire to place it on record for fear it might not be in the correspondence which will be presented to this House in answer to the motion which I have just made:

" EARNSCLIFFE, OTTAWA, 10th February, 1891.

"My Dear Sir.—I have your letter of the 3rd instant, on the subject of the construction of a line of railway from Orangedale to Broad Cove in Inverness. From your description of the line it is evidently one having great merits, and the moment the general election is over I shall bring the matter before my colleagues with every desire to meet your views. At present my colleagues are all scattered looking after their elections. I sincerely trust that you will be elected, and thus have an opportunity of pressing the construction of this line with your usual energy and perseverance upon the Government. usual energy and perseverance upon the Government.
"Yours sincerely,
"JOHN A. MACDONALD.

H. CAMERON, Esq., M.D.,
"Mabou, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia."

Mr. MULOCK. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). February 10. was in answer to a letter written by me on the 3rd of February, the day on which that meeting was held in Whycocomagh, at the request of the meeting, which was presided over by the warden of the County of Inverness, called by him and addressed by myself, so that the letter and the answer were simply owing to that meeting which had been called, not by my friends, by any means, but by the most bitter opponents I had in the county. Having written that letter and received the answer, I felt that I had discharged my duty in that connection. But the Local Government did not discontinue to pursue me; they followed me till 1891, and I hold in my hand a circular which was issued by a member of the Local Government, the Hon. Daniel McNeil, I believe, in answer to a circular which I issued relative to railway matters in Inverness.

"After admiting, for the first time, I believe, 'that in 1887 the Local Government of Nova Scotia promised a subsidy of $3,200 a mile to the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company,' he proceeds to say that he gave this company 'all the assistance in my [his] power.' I deny that he gave such or any assistance; I feel confident that all of you who have perused his series of correspondence published in the Halifax Chronicle, during the early months of 1888, or who have privately or publicly heard him discourse on the subject, will agree with me in characterizing this statement as a bold, unblushing falsehood. Apart ing this statement as a bold, unblushing falsehood. Apart from his letter to the Chronicle, he wrote other letters which are conclusive evidence that he was inimical to the Inverness and Richmond Railway enterprise at its inception. These were written to the Hon. W. Ross from Ottawa in reply to an application made by him on behalf of that railway company for the usual Dominion subsidy, after their Act of incorporation had received the assent of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. The first of Dr. Cameron's replies is dated 21st May, 1887, in which he imposes the following extraordinary and unreasonable condition upon the company, after acknowledging the receipt of a telegram, letter and copy of their Act of incorporation: 'As there is no provision for a subsidy from the Local Government embodied in that Act it is simply a delusion and a snare.' The Hon. Mr. Ross very properly pointed out to him that no such provision had been embodied in the charters granted the previous year by the same Legislature to the Lansdowne and Stewiacke, the Joggins, the Cornwallis Valley and other railway companies, to each of which the Dominion Parliament had granted the usual which are conclusive evidence that he was inimical to the Cornwallis Valley and other railway companies, to each of which the Dominion Parliament had granted the usual subsidy of $3,200 per mile, the same year the charters were granted, before even they had organized; that each of those companies not only had that subsidy granted, but had a contract entered into with them by the Dominion Government before they applied to the Government of Nova Scotia for a contract: and he further pointed out that inasmuch as the Goneral Railway Act of 1856 granted a subsidy of $3,200 to such railway companies as the Inverness and Richmond, it was superfluous to have the same embodied in the Act. Mr. Ross then quoted the section of that Railway Act which empowers the Government of Nova Scotia to subsidize such railways. It is as follows:

"The Governor in Council may grant to any company offering to construct any line of railway in the Province of Nova Scotia, not already subsidized by the province, a cash subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and a land subsidy not exceeding $3,000 per mile. Provided that such subsidiy shall not in any case be granted until the company offering to construct the railway shall have that it has at its disposal either from grante provided by the constituency which I represent that this correspondence should be published, in order to show the gross injustice which has been done me by these The first correspondence I misrepresentations. received from Mr. Ross was dated 18th May, 1887, as follows :-

" HALIFAX, N.S., 18th May.

"McKam here. Full power from New York. Incorporated company to complete arrangements with you and the Local Government. Only municipal concession asked is right of way and tax exemption. Council meeting, Port Hood, Friday. Other company requiring municipal bonds for four per cent, interest on $100,000 for twenty years. Will you wire to Council to present this writing?

"W. ROSS."

At a glance, on reading that telegram, there is not an intelligent elector on the Island of Cape Breton but would realize from his past experience that the object of creating those two companies and sending them to the municipal council of Inverness, and to this Parliament also, for aid, was for the purpose of destroying, if possible, any prospect of railway extension in the County of Inverness. Smarting under that feeling, I replied to Mr. Ross, as set out in the circular from which I have quoted. On 18th May, 1887, I received a letter to which this telegram relates. It was dated Halifax, 18th May, 1887, as follows :--

" HALIFAX, 18th May, 1887.

"My Dear Sir,—I have not troubled you with any letters of mine this session, but have watched that so far you have been silent on Cape Breton interests. Mr. McKam is here from New York with full powers to negotiate and enter into contract for the building of the branch lines of railway in your county. I understand that Mr. McNeil, a member of the Local Government, took some care to have the anglesed incorporation. Act passed and views with the enclosed incorporation Act passed, and views with much favour the lines of railway to be opened up, so that through him the co-operation of the Local Government, to the extent of $3,200 per mile and some other concessions, will be assumed. The company, comprised of wealthy enpitalists, require no municipal concessions or guarantees for the other than the relationship of the company. will be assumed. The company, comprised of wealthy capitalists, require no municipal concessions or guarantees further than the right of way and exemptions from taxation, while I notice that some other incorporated company requires municipal guarantees which, at the outset, shall create doubt and distrust of their being able to successfully complete any great undertaking of this kind. My object in writing you is that you had some correspondence with Mr. McKam, and also with A. McKay, Esq., a member of the Legislative Council. We saw the Provincial Secretary here and explained to him the object of commencing soon in order to have the line completed in the time mentioned in the Act. He stated that the first move should be by the Dominion Government, in procuring the subsidy either in the Estimates or by resolution, and once the contract would be entered into then that his Government would be prepared to do their part. In the absence of his council he was not prepared to give any written guarantees until further progress was made at Ottawa, but that he would view with favour these important lines, and once the company would show that they had made proper arrangements with the Dominion Government and prove to their satisfaction their ability to build this road within a reasonable time than they that they had made within a reasonable time than they that they had made within a reasonable time them that they had made within a reasonable time them that they had made within a reasonable time them that they had made within a reasonable time them that they had made within a reasonable time them that they had made within a reasonable time them that they had made within a reasonable time them they had the reasonable time them that they had made within a reasonable time them they had the reasonable time them they had the reasonable time them they had the reasonable time they had the reasonable time them they had the reasonable time them they had the reasonable time they had the reasonable time them the reasonable time they h the Parliament of Canada, or from private capital, or from both, funds sufficient, with the subsidies authorized by this part of this Act, to complete such raitway, and shall have given ample security for such completion."

"Dr. Cameron's reply to this is dated 30th May, 1887, in which he says: 'In answer to your favour of the 25th instant, I beg to say that at the outset I assured Mr. Mc Kam that I could not deal with any company that would not have a reasonable subsidy granted to it by the Local Government in the Act of incornoration.' This same statement is repeated in another letter from Dr. Cameron to Hon. W. Ross, dated Ottawa, 7th June, 1887. The quotations in both extracts are mine except the word 'gnaranteed,' which the doctor himself quoted. I have the original letters in my possession, which can be seen on application to me."

The very fact that Mr. Ross of Halifax, who was at one time Minister of Militia in the Government of Canada, placed the correspondence relative to this matter in the hands of my political opponents in this country, makes it due to myself and due to Mr. Cameron (Inverness). there so that the contract may be entered into soon. The engineer and staff are ready now to come to locate the line as soon as matters are pressed forward a step or two. You may understand that I have no direct interest in this matter only as far as it tends to the general development and prosperity of our common country.

"In haste,
"Yours very sincerely,
"W. R("W. ROSS."

About the same time I had an application of a very similar character from the Inverness and Victoria Railway Company, and I felt it was not only an insult to myself, but it was an insult to the intelligent people of the County of Inverness, to have two railway companies sending here representatives, each with a promise from the Local Government of a subsidy of $3,200 per mile. I answered the letter as follows:-

" OTTAWA, 21st May, 1887. "My Dear Sir.—I received your telegram and your favour of the 18th instant, enclosing copy of 'An Act to incorporate the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company (Limited).' As there is no provision for a subsidy from the Local Government embodied in that Act, it is simply a delusion and a snare. It is evident that the object of chartering two rival railway companies to build a railway through Inverness is to play the one against the other. This game may deceive a few, but there is intelligence enough in Inverness to comprehend the deception.

"Vourstruly "Yours truly,

"H. CAMERON.

"Hon. W. Ross."

The next letter which I received, under the guidance and direction of the Hon. Wm. Ross and the members of the Local Government to whom he referred in the first letter, was from L. G. McKam, and was as follows :-

"HALIFAX, 25th May, 1887. "Hugh Cameron, Esq., M.P., "Ottawa.

"Ottawa.

"Dear Sir,—I understand that our mutual friend Mr. Ross, has written you, sending you a copy of the charter of Mr. Bell's company. At first, I was afraid that there would be some trouble with the municipal council of Inverness, but from the information received and the explanation that will be made at their next meeting in June, I have every reason to believe that everything will be right. We only want from the council exemption from taxation and the free right of way. There are no guarantees of interest wanted: As far as matters stand at present, much, if not all, will depend upon your personal exertion and influence at Ottawa, so the success of this enterprise is largely in your hands. The first thing to know, will the Dominion subsidy be provided for, and if not, all our efforts will for a time fall to the ground. If the money will be voted by your Parliament, and it will if the Government say so, then, with this assurance, that contract will be secured, then the survey would be proceeded with and the work commenced as early as the proper arrangements will be perfected. Mr. Bell, and those associated with him, will send such explanations to the Inverness council as will satisfy them that they are prepared to begin at once as soon as contract business is settled. I will be pleased to hear from you stating how far you can be successful in securing success in Ottawa. If there is will be pleased to hear from you stating how far you can be successful in securing success in Ottawa. If there is anything that you would suggest or desire me to do while here, please mention it. There will be no trouble with Local Government as there is a general Act which empowers the Local Government to subsidize any railway in any part of the province. Mr. Bell & Co. are quite capable with their own means to build this railway and are prepared to subscribe the stock and commence operations just as soon as the Dominion contract is secured. They just as soon as the Dominion contract is secured. They have their office secured in the city of New York, the engineer engaged for the whole time, they have no interest in no other company, and all they require is the Dominion subsidy and the contract. There will be no trouble with the Local Government; of that I am assured, as the general Act covers the whole ground for all railways in this province.

"Yours truly,
"L. G. McKAM." Here, again, I may say that about the same time the other company was pressing me, on similar grounds, to secure a subsidy for that company, and to that letter I replied as follows:-

"OTTAWA, 28th May, 1887.

"My Dear Sir,—I have carefully examined your charter for the 'Richmond and Inverness Railway Company,' in connection with the Local Railway Act of 1886. My opinion of 'Lobster' section 5 of that Act was published in answer to Mr. W. J. McCurdy last year in the North Sydney Herald. There is not one dollar guaranteed for your company in that Act. It it permissive, and therefore delusive in the hands of dishonourable and dishonest political tricksters. At the outset I assured you that I could not deal with your company nor with any other company that would not have a reasonable subsidy guaranteed to it by the Local Government in its Act of incorporation. Do not rely on promises of Local Government. poration. Do not rely on promises of Local Government.

"Yours truly, "H. CAMERON.

"L. G. McKam, Esq."

On the 27th May, I received the following letter from my friend Mr. Ross:-

"HALIFAN, 27th May, 1887.

"H. Cameron, Esq., M.P., "Ottawa.

"H. CAMERON, Esq., M.P.,

"Ottawa.

"My Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter was written, stating that the charter granted to Messrs. Bell & Co. was 'a delusion and a snare,' as it did not provide any subsidy frem the Local Government, that you are all astray in your hasty conclusions, forgetting that there is a general Act, passed in 1888, which gives full power to deal with such charters. You will find the Acts of 1888 in your library there, but section 5 of chapter 1st reads as follows:—'The Governor in Council to grant a cash subsidy, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and aland subsidy not exceeding 2,000 acres per mile. Provided, that such subsidy shall not in any case be granted until the company offering to construct the railway shall have furnished to the Governor in Council satisfactory evidence that it has at its disposal, either from grants provided by the Parliament of Canada, or from private capital, or from both, funds sufficient, with the subsidy authorized by this Act, to complete such railways, &c.' Surely there is nothing delusive or dishonest in the reading of this Act; and to include in a charter what is already provided for, is entirely unnecessary.

"You will see, therefore, the Government here can do nothing however willing to aid the Inverness Railway enterprise until either a Dominion subsidy has been obtained or the company is able to satisfy the Government that it has funds at its command ample to finish the undertaking.

"Take the two railways now under contract, viz., Joggins and Stewiacke Valley, there was no provision for a subsidy from the Local Government in the charter, and, in fact, they never 'demanded the subsidy until they brought their contract from the Dominion Government, it was then that they received the assurance of the Local Government that the subsidy being secured under the general Act to which I now direct your attention. From what Mr. McKam informed me, I concluded that you were, heart and soul, favourable to this road, and that you could at any time secure the Dominion subsidy, but the tone of your letter has made a different impression on my mind. It is needless to say that the Local Government must do certain things; I am aware that they are ready to do all that the general Act requires of them. If you and the Dominion Government will not move, that at once settles the extension of railways in Inverness for Take the two railways now under contract, viz., you and the Dominion Government will not move, that at once settles the extension of railways in Inverness for some time to come. I have no doubt but there is intelligence enough in the council of Inverness to understand the difference between a bogus company wanting a municipal guarantee of 5 per cent. interest for twenty years on $100,000, and one who requires nothing more than exemption from taxes and the free right of way. This company are moneyed men who will require no money grants being ever paid them until every 10 miles of the road is completed. The Bell Company is composed of men of high personal reputation who do not desire to play into the hands of any other company. With you, I fully believe that there is intelligence enough in Inverness to comprehend the wisdom of adopting the requirements of one company and rejecting the unreasonable demands of the other. Believe me, I have no personal interest in the building of railways in your county more than the general good of our common country. I used to consider you more than reasonably hopeful of having railways constructed in your part of the Island, but the tenor of your letter, which, in some of the expressions used, is strong and unreasonable, compels me to conclude that the Inverness railways are yet in the dark future.

"Yours truly, "W. ROSS."

To this I very curtly replied under the stimulation of such a political letter. There is no person who would read that letter but would infer at a glance, that it was not a letter from a person who desired railway extension through that county, and, on the 30th May, I replied as follows :-

" OTTAWA, 30th May, 1887.

"My Dear Sir,—In answer to your favour of the 27th instant, I beg to say that, at the outset, I assured Mr. McKam that I could not deal with any company that would not have a reasonable subsidy 'guaranteed' to it by the Local Government in its Act of incorporation.

"I shall not accept either his or your dictum as to what the Local Government may do in any circumstance, as they repeatedly deceived me through similar agencies.

"Yours truly,

"H. CAMERON.

"Hon. W. Ross."

"HALIFAY, 3rd June, 1887.

"My Dear Sir.—I have already stated that I had no personal interest in any railways in Inverness. Mr. McKam read me your letter, from which I concluded that you were favourable to the building of the proposed lines and it was merely to assist him that I attempted to explain the situation to you. I have now concluded that you are opposed to the proposed line and company, inasmuch as you ask the Local Government to have their guarantee in the Act of incorporation, when the law passed in 1886, to which I have already referred, provides for all such companies. No better proof of that need be mentioned than that two other companies are working under said Act and were satbetter proof of that need be mentioned than that two other companies are working under said Act and were satisfied that this incorporation Act, without subsidy being guaranteed, was all that was necessary. Neither of the two companies mentioned in my former letter approached the Local Government until the contract with the Dominion Government had been executed. For the Local Government to do more than what the general Act provides for would be illegal and unreasonable. Supposing that Mr. McKam, acting for W. H. Bell & Co., had the Dominion contract, then without the Local Government's subsidy the work would not go on and then there would be no money paid by the Dominion Government. In that case you could justly charge the Local Government with violation of their own Act, but there being no Dominion subsidy or contract, both which are necessary under the Provincial Act, then the blame can justly be attached to the want of action on your part. I would certainly say do not accept anything on my dictum,' but still I would suggest that the law in force and covering this case should be respected, because it binds the Local Government to certain action, but not until the Dominion Government do their part. I because it binds the Local Government to certain action, but not until the Dominion Government do their part. I read your letter to Mr. McKain and I have concluded that you are unfavourable to this line and charter, as well as extremely prejudiced against the Local Government. This Act speaks for itself and they are bound by its provisions, but not until the first move is made there: but you refusing to act kills the whole project for an indefinite period.

"Yours truly,

"W. Ross.

"H. CAMERON, Esq., M.P., "Ottawa."

To this letter I replied, on the 7th of June, as follows :--

" OTTAWA, 7th June, 1887.

"My Dear Sir,—In answer to your favour of the 3rd instant, I beg to call your attention to the fact that the law passed by the Local Legislature in 1886 does not cover this case, nor provide for fall such companies, only for such companies as the Local Government may' determine. I am in a position to prove that you and Mr. McKam have been deceived by the Local Government. In all my letters, telegrams, and private conversations I assured Mr. McKam and other promoters of railway charters through Inverness, that I would deal with no company that could not secure a reasonable subsidy from the Local Government in its Act of incoporation. What right, then, have you to say that I am opposed to this company? I have dealt fairly by him; and he should not allow the Local Government to deceive him,

"Hon. W. Ross, "Collector of Customs."

This did not satisfy my learned friend, who was one of the late Ministers of Militia in this Dominion; so on June 10 he addressed me as follows:-

" HALIFAX, 10th June, 1887.

"Halifax, 10th June, 1887.

"My Dear Sir,—At the risk of being again considered intrusive, permit me to say, in reply to your letter of the 7th inst., that I do not believe the statement that Mr. McKam and I have been deceived by the Local Government. The separate interviews we had with others before the Premier and Attorney General were of the most satisfactory character, and, notwithstanding your doubts, I have every reason to believe in the honour and truthfulness of the gentlemen. I refer you with much pleasure to the liberal intelligence and unanimous action of the council of Inverness, notwithstanding the influence at work to prevent them granting the concessions asked for. You ask by what right I have to say that you are opposed to this company? My answer is: You refused to take steps to secure the Dominion subsidy, and this done the Government would not be bound to enter into any contract until the proper guarantees are received from the Local Government. This would be, I hope, safe in the hands of the member of Government from your own county. Much more I might write, but our views and opinions are so far apart that I will not offend your dignity by placing them before you. I have again to repeat, on the honour of a man, that I have no direct or indirect interest in the proposed railway to the value of a cent.

To this I replied as follows:—

"OTTAWA, 13th June, 1887.

"My Dear Sir.—The Local Government promised the Richmond and Inverness Company a subsidy, but promised the Inverness and Victoria Company more than double that subsidy.

"The Inverness Municipal Council promises the Richmond and Inverness Company some concessions, but guarantees twice as much to the Inverness and Victoria

"Yours truly,
"H. CAMERON.

"Hon. W. Ross, "Collector of Customs."

Notwithstanding the repeated assurance of my friend Mr. Ross that he had no interest, direct or indirect, in this company, it was found when the company was organized that he had a direct interest, and the company was not long in existence when he turned up as its president. Shortly after, on receipt of my last letter, they sent me, jointly, the following telegram:-

" HALIFAX, 10th June, 1887.

"H. CAMERON."

This ended my correspondence with the Hon. William Ross, and if it had been published in the press or in a circular, instead of being placed in the hands of one of my most active opponents in the county, and used to grossly misrepresent me in that election campaign, I would not have been put to the trouble of reading it on this occasion. As various other misrepresentations have been circulated in the county in reference to my action on this question, I beg the indulgence of the House while I read from a circular on railway matters which I published in the county, and which explains my position fully in reference to Inverness railway matters, and railways of a similar character in all parts of this Dominion. It is dated 4th February, 1891, and in it I said:

"Before I left for Ottawa last winter, I addressed several public meetings, at which I pointed out that only one company should be encouraged to complete the Inverness railway system in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, which is a Government system. I pointed out that the main line to Cheticamp, and the branch to Orange-dule should be built by the same company; and if not the main line to Cheticamp, and the branch to Orange-dale, should be built by the same company; and if not, that the branch should be built by the Government, so that there would be only two systems at most to deal with. On this question I entertain very decided views, which I forced on the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, so successfully, that I received the following telegram from them in April last:—

"HALIFAX, N.S., 1st April, 1890.

"House of Commons, Ottawa.

"' If the Local Government sign contract for our com-pany, as promised, we are prepared to begin the branch from Orangedale to our main line, concurrently with that line as soon as the spring opens.

" OAKES, GREY & WHEATON. (Sgd.)

"This telegram was highly satisfactory to me, and I feel disappointed very much at their failure to proceed with their undertaking, as promised in that telegram.

"Occasionally companies operate railways even more

"Occasionally companies operate railways even more satisfactorily than the Government. But my own opinion is, that the Parliament of Canada should undertake all branches in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I is, that the Parliament of Canada should undertake all branches in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I urged this view strongly when a company failed to build the main line through the Island. And the Government, in 1886, decided to make the Eastern Extension, so-called, and the Cape Breton Railway a part of the Intercolonial. I would be glad, indeed, if I could only prevail on the Government to make the whole of the Cape Breton system a part of the Intercolonial also. At present a majority in Parliament are opposed to that policy, including Hon. Edward Blake and other prominent leaders on both sides of politics in Ontario. When the subsidy for the Inverness and Richmond Railway was under consideration in the House of Commons, on the 13th of May last. Mr. Blake said:

"I am glad to hear the statement of the hon. Minister of Justice, because those who recollect the first stage through which a little scheme passed, will remember that it was urged that the Cape Breton Railway was to be a simple subsidized road, and that we were to provide the necessary railway communication at very small cost. We recollect that in the end the Dominion Parliament were called on to undertake the building of that railway, certainly not with any view that we should be called to give further aid to Cape Breton. On the same day Mr. Blake further said:

"This is a positive censure on the Government giving any further aid to Cape Breton. On the same day Mr. Blake further said:

"Take the lines to which I have referred in the Counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou, and take the Cape Breton Railway, which is being constructed wholly at the expense of the Dominion; take the line in connectreasury.

"Although the Inverness and Richmond Railway Com-"Although the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company failed to fulfil their promise to me, to commence operations at Orangedale and Hastings' as soon as spring opens,' I am satisfied it was the fault of their directors, the majority of whom are bitterly opposed to me in politics, and, with Mr. Blake, opposed to granting further aid to railway extension in Cape Breton. They stopped the railway. The company would not dare go on without their consent. The president of the company is Hon. W. Ross, who cares only for W. Ross. Alfred Smith, the vice-president, is only a tool in the hands of President Ross. The other directors are Willoughby Anderson, L. McKeen and S. McDonnell, Q.C. An impartial observer can perceive at a glance that all the directors but one, are violent, if not unscrupulous political opponents of myself and the Government I support. If they thought it would injure me, politically, they would advise and even compel the company to stop the railway. They did it. The directors have, therefore, placed the company in a very false position in the eyes of the public generally, and in the eyes of the tax-payers of Inverness particularly, who are doomed to pay dearly for their political gambling.

"Yours truly."

"Yours truly,
"H. CAMERON."

This, then, was the position I had taken with reference to these railways in the County of Inverness; this was the position I had taken several years previous on this question in the House, and this is the position I intend to maintain as long as I have the honour of a seat in this Parliament. I have now only to conclude, for the purpose of pressing for these documents and reports, by reading a letter which I received from the existing president of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company. I may previously state that the railway was a very unfortunate one, when it fell into the hands of tricksters, as I must call them who were deceiving the people. The company was first organized under the presidency of W. J. Bell, a gentleman of whose honesty and integrity I have a very high opinion, a gentleman who would not lend himself to trickery of that kind for the purpose of deceiving the people and fleecing the ratepayers of Inverness out of money to serve his own personal ends. Next we find that one F. B. Allan, and a member of the Local Government, ran away with the charter and all the papers in connection with the company, and left Mr. Bell out in the cold. They organized under the presidency of one Mr. Ward, a fictitious name, which they secured—a gentleman who, I do know, never had any stock in the company and never was qualified to be president. I had access to the books of the company and had the evidence of the transfer of that branch of the company to a third branch of the company, to prove that the said Ward, who was then said to be president of the company, never had any stock ir it, and possibly never existed, except in the imagination of F. B. Allan and the member for the Local Government who ran away with the charter of the company for the purpose of making money out of it. Then, with reference to my friend the Hon. W. Ross, I may here state that if there is any person in this Dominion who should not use correspondence relative to railway matters or any other matters against me in the constituency of Inverness, that gentleman is Wm. Ross. On a future occasion I may justify myself by reading to this House and results.'
"This was a decided appeal to the prejudices of all the rest of the Dominion against Cape Breton Railway particularly. Unfortunately for us, Mr. Blake has a majority between that gentleman and myself; but whether 802

I do so or not, I here reiterate that he, of all others, should have been last to place this correspondence in the hands of my opponents for use during a campaign which was a bitter one, and when I could not contradict the very disgraceful manner in which it I shall conclude by reading was used against me. a letter from the existing president of the company, and you will observe that there was an annual president for this unfortunate railway company. object of having an annual president, I assume, and I believe I have the right to assume, was for the purpose of annoying and embarrassing me in my capacity as representative of the county. I know nothing about this gentleman, I never heard of him before, but he addressed me this letter, dated Halifax, 12th June, 1891:

"Dr. H. CAMERON, Ottawa.

"Dear Sir,—We write to ask you to present our claim to the Government for the usual subsidy of $3,200 per mile for the Inverness and Richmond Railway, on the fifty miles to Broad Cove, and also for the Orangedale branch. We claim the latter is a part of our undertaking and would be ruinous to us if we did not get it. We were not aware of any rival company until we had expended about $45,000, when Mr. Paint put in an application to defeat us. We have not bothered the Government in this matter, and only want fair-play in getting the subsidy, and if you will have it arranged for us, we will guarantee to go on at once with the construction of the branch, as well as the main line. We have all the capital required to carry on the work as soon as the subsidy is granted, and we only claim it as being just and right, and the same that has been granted heretofore to other comthe same that has been granted heretofore to other comthe same that has been granted heretofore to other companies. If it is necessary we can show that we have the backing to carry on the work to completion. As you are aware, we have a large amount of work done, and it is very necessary that we are sure of the subsidy, and also want the branch. You will understand it would be difficult for the company to place bonds on the main line, without the branch being included.

"Mr. Paint has made some hard assertions, which are calculated to do our company harm. If he had shown his hand when we were going on with the work we might have acted differently, but we were not aware then of another company, and as the country was anxious for a railway, we pushed on with the work, expecting in good faith to receive the usual subsidy granted to other roads.

"We are, dear sir.

"We are, dear sir,
"Your obedient servants, "B. M. DAVIDSON, President. "JOHN R. MURRAY, "Secretary,

"P.S.—When the subsidy is granted, our company will purchase the Inverness Coal Company's areas at Broad Cove, which the enclosed paper shows is not out of their hands, and for which they will not have anything to do with Mr. Paint.—J. R. M."

Since then, I find, I am sorry to say, the Local Legislature, of NovaScotia, under the direction of Mr. Mc Kinnon, who is a member of the Locai Legislature, rejected the amendment which was before the Legislature on the subject of the Inverness and Richmond Railway. I fear very much that the opposition then given to the road by a member of the Local Legislature, and by a large majority in the Local House, has been the cause of my not having had an answer from the president of the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company since. Whether or not, any person with a reasonable head on his shoulders must frankly admit that the chartering of these two rival companies as has been stated by the president of the Inverness and Richmond road to be not only embarrassing this Government, but also to the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company, which expended a large amount on the branch line in that county. As I am not certain as to whether the local Act of incorpora-Mr. CAMERON (Inverness).

to build the branch line, and as there are two other companies incorporated to build the branch line from Orangedale to Broad Cove, I would suggest that at this juncture, the only course to secure railway extension in this part of the Dominion is, first, as I have always urged in this House, that the Government should undertake to build they failed to do that, these branches. If let them grant a subsidy for that road, as I asked them to do in 1877, as the correspondence will show when it is brought down, as I also asked them to do in 1888, and 1889, and 1890, and in Notwithstanding that I have had no direct or indirect interest in the enterprise of either of these companies, and that I am determined never to have any direct or indirect interest in any such enterprises, I feel the enormous resources of the north-west coast of Cape Breton require the construction of a railway from Hawkesbury to Cheticamp, with a branch to Orangedale. When my hon. friends realize that there are fifty miles along the shore, from which it is impossible to ship coal, but where coal mines exist within three or four miles of each other, and within thirty or forty miles of the Government line of railway, I think they will realize that the building of the road by the Government would unquestionably be of advantage to the country, and, if the Government do not see their way clear to build it themselves, I think they should subsidize a company at $3,200 a mile from Hawkesbury to Cheticamp, with a branch to Orangedale. In that way, the freight traffic would increase in such a manner that as a surplus is shown on the Eastern Extension Railway where deficits have existed in the past, in the same manner the construction of this road would ensure the feeding of the Intercolonia! Railway to a large extent, and I believe would, to some extent, make up for

Mr. FRASER. Of course the hon, member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) must feel well in producing his yearly, or perhaps his biennial, budget in regard to the Inverness Railway. I would not address the House on this occasion but for one or two things which the hon, gentleman has said. He spoke of certain matters being embarrassing to the Local Government. I think he will find that the Inverness road in his county will be more embarrassing to himself than to any Government. He has spoken of the use of certain documents as being cowardly, but I think the House will agree with me that his attacks on people who are opposed to him and are not here to defend themselves are more cowardly, and that his reading of these private despatches and letters was not in the best possible Leaving that aside, however, as far as the Local Government of Nova Scotia is concerned, he has the best evidence, even in his own county, of how they stand. For two elections their supporters have been returned in that county by large majorities, and at the last election, as I am informed, by a larger majority than the hon. gentleman himself. As to his statement in regard to a member of the Local Government running away with a charter, I can only say that I never heard of it, but, so far as the Local Government's action is concerned, while the hon. gentleman's great exertions in this House managed to obtain a subsidy of $1,000 a mile for this railway, tion enables the Inverness and Richmond Company | the Local Government gave a subsidy of $3,200 a the large deficits which now exist on that read.

The question of the rival roads is for him to decide with his constituents. I do not know much about the merits of the case, but I submit that what he read in regard to that meeting would tend to show that he was in favour of both the roads. The policy of the Local Government in regard to that and every other bond fide railway enterprise in the province, though their ability is small as compared with that of this Government, has been to give $3,200 a mile to open up railways in the Province of Nova Scotia where the bond fides of the promoters was clear, and I submit that it ill-became the hon, gentleman representing Inverness (Mr. Cameron) to attack the Local Government of Nova Scotia on their railway policy. The Local Government need no one to defend them here. Government, either in the province or in this House or elsewhere, are quite able to defend themselves.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). In reply to my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), I may say that it will always give me much pleasure to discuss this matter with my learned friend, and we may have to exchange courtesies hereafter as I often have had to do with his predecessor, who, I may say, never spoke in the same tone that he has. If I attacked the Local Government of Nova Scotia, I was aware that I had to meet a member of that Local Government in this House. My hon. friend from Guysborough was a member of the Local Government, and I think, as I have reason to believe, he did as much to deceive the people of Inverness as the other members of that Government.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that in order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I do not refer to anything that was done in this Parliament. I am an older member of Parliament than my hon. friend from Queen's.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not object to your age at all.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). He may not be old enough to see it, either. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) says that the Local Government, by a lobster clause in the law passed in 1886, is in a position to promise every company that has a charter by the Local Legislature, $3,200 per mile.

Mr. FRASER. No, I did not say any such thing; I said the Local Government gave a subsidy to companies that showed their bond fides.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Any company that shows its bond fides will be awarded a subsidy of $3,200 per mile. The Local Government of Nova Scotia passed an Act in 1886, I have no hesitation in saying, for the purpose of deceiving the people, and since that time, strange to say, no enterprise has been undertaken in the Province of Nova Scotia. It is true that the Joggins, the Cornwallis Valley, and the Stewiacke and Lansdowne were started on a basis which existed before the passage of that Act, but since the passage of the law of 1886, no railway enterprises have been undertaken in any part of the province. They deceived the east, they deceived the west, and they deceived the central counties, and they will continue to deceive them. The success which crowned their efforts in preventing the construction of railways on the Island of Cape Breton for 35 years, has enabled them to pursue a course which will strangle of them.

the construction of railways not only in Inverness, in Cape Breton, but in every section of the Province of Nova Scotia as well. That lobster clause 5 was passed for that purpose, and my hon.friend's party was responsible for it. It was a method by which they might possibly save money, and they did actually save it. The east suffers, the west also suffers, and no railway enterprise has been undertaken in the province since the passage of that Act, except such enterprises as were under way previous to the passage of that Act.

Mr. BORDEN. I wish to correct the hon, gentleman in regard to one railway, at any rate. I can assure him that had it not been for the Act of the Local Legislature which he is now condemning, the Cornwallis Valley Railway would not have been undertaken, and would not have been built. It was not undertaken until the year after the passage of the law to which he refers.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I quite agree with my hon, friend that that road would not have been undertaken unless they had secured aid from the Local Legislature.

Mr. FORBES. I would like to interrupt the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER. The. hon. member will have a right to reply afterwards.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I would like him to say now what he has to say. I wish to add that not a road has been undertaken since the passage of that Act, excepting the roads to which I have referred—I referred to the road which my hon. friend from King's has mentioned.

Mr. BORDEN. No, I beg your pardon.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Yes, I named distinctly the Cornwallis road, the Joggins road, and the Stewiacke and Lansdowne road. These roads were undertaken on subsidies granted in this Parliament in 1887, and on the strength of the Act of 1886, which passed the Local Legislature, they secured the local subsidies. That was such an Act as would enable the Local Government to build roads wherever they pleased; whenever a company showed its bond fides, then the Government granted the subsidy, and not until then. It placed power in their hands absolutely to burke the undertaking of any branch line in any part of the province, with the exception of those which I have named, even before my hon. friend had spoken; and they have so effectually, succeeded that as a matter of fact they have refused to accept the bond fieles of any other company in any part of the province up to the present time, and therefore no road has been undertaken.

Mr. FORBES. With reference to the statement of the hon. member for Inverness that no local road in Nova Scotia had been undertaken since the passage of that Act in 1886, I desire to make this correction: The Oxford and Spring Hill was built since that Act was passed, and money was paid over by the Local Government, $3,200 per mile.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Which one?

Mr. FORBES. The Oxford and Spring Hill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. And Pugwash.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I named the whole of them.

Mr. FORBES. These roads have been undertaken and built by the companies on the strength of local subsidies granted to them by virtue of power given to the Local Government in 1886.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I admit all that. Mr. FORBES. Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman's statements; I failed to see the force of the hon, gentleman's remarks, and everybody else failed to see them, I think. The Local Government have granted subsidies in favour of local enterprises whenever they have been requested by the companies who desired to build the line, and the subsidies have been paid over by the Local Government the very moment the companies showed their bond fides. The Local Government, as a rule, look to the strength of the company and assure themselves of the honest intention of the company to build the line proposed before they pay over the money, and in this respect the Local Government's policy differs from the policy of the present Federal Government, who subsidize roads from point to point irrespective of the ability of the company to go on and complete the work. The Local Government have adopted the wise policy of ascertaining, first of all, whether the parties applying for the subsidies are fit and proper persons receive these subsidies, and in every case where the application has been made and the Government have afterwards satisfied themselves by investigation, the subsidies have been paid over to the companies as they were in the case of Cornwallis Valley, Nova Scotia Central, Stewiacke Valley and Lansdowne, Springhill and Oxford, and the Pugwash, and also in the case of the Annapolis and Atlantic Line-there they have made a definite promise, and they intend to pay the money out the very moment the company shows its bond fides; I may also include in this statement the Hants Central. By virtue of the Act which has been mentioned, the Local Government have made a promise to pay over a subsidy, and upon the condition of the company showing their bond fides, they are able to receive the money. Consequently, I think the hon. gentleman is in error when he says that the Local Government is not ready to grant all the aid that the people of Inverness might require for their road.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I quite agree with my hon. friend, when he says that the Local Government grants $3,200 per mile to any company that satisfies the Government that they will build the road; but, unfortunately, all these companies that satisfy the Local Government happen to be in districts where they themselves are personally interested in the road.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Surely the hon. gentleman will not say that the Local Government were interested in the Pictou and Colchester.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I must take issue with the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes), when he says that the Local Government have made a promise with respect to the Annapolis and Atlantic Railway. I have no hesitation in saying that strenuous efforts have been made to induce the Local Government to make definite promises, but they have entered into no arrangement. They have refused to make a Minute of Council, and the only promise Mr. Forbes.

Mr. Mowat? Is it because in the presence of the policy of aggression and persecution inaugurated and advocated by Mr. Meredith in the Province of Ontario, Le Canada, a French Canadian and Catholic newspaper, refused to support this policy of proscription against its countrymen and its correligionists? If such is the case the French Canadians would like to know it, and ascertain whether the Post Office Department is so bound up in they have made, and it is the promise to which I presume the hon. gentleman refers, is a promise made by Mr. Fielding on a public platform during the election.

Mr. FORBES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—made on the floor of the Local Legislature.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). The promise was also made in the County of Shelburne by that hon. gentleman, and, strange to say, all the electors of the County of Shelburne have one idea of that promise, and the constituents of the hon. member for Queen's have a totally different one. He says that Mr. Fielding has made the promise in the House of Assembly, but it is a very vague one, and does not bind the Government unless it is incorporated in a Minute of Council.

Motion agreed to.

ADVERTISING OTTAWA MAIL SERVICE IN LE CANADA.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL (translation) moved for:

Copies of correspondence between the proprietor or proprietors of the newspaper Le Canada, published at Ottawa, and any member of the Government; also, of any correspondence between any member of the Government and any other person in relation to the suspension of the publication in the said newspaper Le Canada, of the table showing the arrival and departure of mails at the Ottawa post office.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I desire to protest at the outset against the assertion published in certain newspapers, under the inspiration of I know not whom, that this motion is the result of a quarrel, or of an intention to make a general attack against one of the representatives of the City of Ottawa in this House. I must declare that such was never my intention, nor is it in my mind to-day. I have not now, nor have I ever had any but very agreeable relations with the members for the City of Ottawa. I would not demean myself by taking the time of the House for a moment for a personal quarrel. The aim of my motion is to find out the reason for which, in the month of April last, the French population in the city of Ottawa and its surroundings, which has no other organ than Le Canada, was deprived of the public information through its columns, which is to be found in three English newspapers of this I do not believe that this can have been prompted by a motive of economy. The hon. Minister has declared to the House that he only paid $50 to Le Canada while he was giving $100 to the Citizen and other papers which have no wider circulation nor more importance than Le Canada. The budget of forty millions which we vote every year has, until now, borne this $50 expenditure, and I do not see why in 1891 it should be less able to meet it than in 1890. Is the reason to be found in the fact that at the last provincial election Le Canada broke with the Conservative party of Ontario, and gave its support to the Hon. Mr. Mowat? Is it because in the presence of the policy of aggression and persecution inaugurated and advocated by Mr. Meredith in the Province of Ontario, Le Canada, a French Canadian and Catholic newspaper, refused to support this policy of proscription against its countrymen and its coreligionists? If such is the case the French Canadians would like to know it, and ascertain whether

Mr. Meredith's policy that a newspaper cannot oppose the latter without incurring the wrath of the hon. Minister. Would the reason, perchance, be found in the course taken by this paper towards one of the present members for the City of Ottawa at the last federal election? The election took place in the month of March, the campaign was conducted in the month of February, and it is only at the end of April that the hon. Postmaster General withdrew his patronage from Le Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, the two hon members for the City of Ottawa who were then running as Government candidates were elected, and it would be a meanness unworthy of gentlemen, it would be a great disappointment to their friends, if either of the hon, members for the City of Ottawa had used his political influence, I will not say in order to deprive Le Canada of a trifle of $50, but to deprive the French population of information relating to the arrival and departure of the mails in Ottawa, when the Government considers it to be of public interest to give the same information through the medium of three English newspapers. I hope that the Postmaster General, in furnishing the correspondence asked by the motion that I have the honour to make, will be in a position to satisfy the House and the French population of the Province of Ontario, that in withdrawing its patronage from La Canada, the Government has had no intention to show hostility to, or contempt for, this population, but that the thing was done for grave state reasons which the House and the French race will know how to appreciate at their proper value.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not aware of any correspondence between the proprietors of the newspaper Le Canada and any member of the Government. Le Canada was paid the amount of money usually allowed to papers of that class for publishing the arrival and departure of the mails, and the patronage was withdrawn from the paper and given to other papers, which was thought to be in the public interest. I have no knowledge of any correspondence at all except the notice sent to the paper to discontinue the publication of the advertisement.

Motion agreed to.

SUBSIDY TO A RAILWAY BETWEEN NAPIERVILLE AND ST. REMI.

Mr. MONET (translation) moved for:

Copies of all petitions, letters or communications whatsoever received by the Government from any of the municipalities of the County of Napierville, or from any person in the said county, and of any answers made by the Government thereto, up to the 5th March last, in relation to the granting of a subsidy in aid of the construction of a railway between the village of Napierville and the village of St. Rémi.

He said: Mr. Speaker, here is the reason for which I have I ask the House to adopt the motion which I have just read. In the month of December last we had a by election in the County of Napierville. It was much less the questions of politics that ruled the campaign than that of the construction of a railway between the two extremities of the County of Napierville, and of the granting by the Federal Government of a subsidy for the construction of that railway. If there had been any believing the Ministerial orators it would have been sufficient for the County of Napierville to elect my opponent, Mr. Paradis, in order to be entitled to this subsidy.

Mr. Paradis was elected, several petitions were signed on behalf of the municipalities of the county, and sent to Ottawa. I would like to learn what answer the Government has given to these several petitions, in order that we may know if, when we were harangued about a railway in the County of Napierville, and a grant by the Federal Government for its construction, the purpose was to bluff the electors, or whether the promises made were sincere. For, Mr. Speaker, in the matter of promises, it can be said that the Government showed, on this occasion, a truly paternal bounty. The Quebec Government had already voted a subsidy of over $100,000 for the construction of this road, but the work had not been commenced, for in order to commence the work ready money—a thing that takes the shape of subsidies more easily in Ottawa than in Quebec-was needed. So the circumstances lent themselves admirably to the generosity of the Conservative party, which, desiring to carry this election, sent into the County of Napierville about the greatest men they had—those especially, on the word and promises of whom people had formed the habit of defending, even in election time. course, I mean the hon. Secretary of State, the hon. Deputy Speaker, and a great number of other Ministerial orators, who came to fight the battle of their party in the County of Napierville. All these orators, without binding themselves directly to cause a subsidy for this railway to be obtained from the Federal Government, were nevertheless ready to recognize the usefulness, the equity and even the necessity of such a subsidy. I remember very well that at a meeting held at St. Edouard the the hon. Deputy Speaker, Beauharnois' representative, made the remark to the electors that it was very ungraceful for him, in particular, to do his electioneering travels over December clods, and that the only means of remedying such a state of things would be to get a subsidy from the Federal Government for the construction of a railway. He added that he had obtained one for the County of Beauharnois, and that Mr. Paradis, once elected by the Conservative party, would certainly obtain one for the County of Napierville. The hon. Secretary of State, for his part, doubtless foreseeing that directly after the death of Sir John Macdonald the railway portfolio would be his, recognized also the importance, the utility, and even the indispen-sability of this railway. He recognized the equity for the Federal Government of granting a subsidy to the County of Napierville, which had never had any favours from this Government, even at the time the county was represented by the old chief of the Liberal party, Sir Antoine Aimé Dorion. wish to lead this House into error; I do not mean to say that the hon. Secretary of State came and promised directly a subsidy to the electors of Napierville. Here are the words he used: "I cannot promise a subsidy for the construction of this railway, but what I have a right to do, and what I am doing, what I have a right to desire, and what I do desire, is to be a member of a syndicate which would be formed to work your railway." question was therefore very serious, since the hon. Secretary of State spoke of the formation of a syndicate, and of being a member of the same. Now, Mr. Speaker, the electors of the County of Napierville are very anxious to-day for news of that syndicate. I never contended, neither did our friends, that it was not equitable for the Federal County of Napierville. As I said a moment ago, the county has never had any favours from the Government, although it always furnished its share of the revenue; but I said to the electors to be somewhat wary of promises that we heard for the first time during a campaign. I was answered by a circular which was distributed to all the electors of the county, so that they might be all well convinced of the good disposition, the generous disposition of the Conservative party towards them. Here is that circular. I do not mean to insinuate that it was intended to serve as a means of corruption; this has never been in my mind, and the proof is that I did not contest the election of my opponent, which was due, I believe, to this circular, and to the promises made on the hustings. The circular reads as follows :-

"TO THE ELECTORS OF THE COUNTY OF NAPIERVILLE.

"To the Electors of the County of Napierville.

"Gentlemen,—You are, on Tuesday, to decide which of the candidates for your suffrages you will choose to represent you in the House of Commons.

"This election, under the present circumstances, has a very important significance for the interests of your county. When, in June last, Mr. Ste. Marie left his seat in Ottawa to go and sit in the Legislature of Quebec, he declared that he wanted to endow your county with a railway, which is indispensable to three of the five parishes of the County of Napierville. So much importance did he attach to this enterprise that he persuaded the Government of Quebec to grant, through its Prime Minister, the Hon. Mr. Mercier, an important subsidy for the construction of this railway.

"You do not doubt that the action of Mr. Ste. Marie was sincere, and that he was working in the interest of your county. You know now that this road can hardly be built if additional help is not granted. You are now to judge whether you have a better chance to see this work accomplished, by electing as your representative in Ottawa Mr. Paradis or Mr. Monet.

"Mr. Paradis, while he declares that he means to keep in the House that independence of which the farmers are all so proud, says that he will support in a general way the policy of the Federal Government, and that he will all so proud, says that he will support in a general way the policy of the Federal Government, and that he will especially devote his efforts to the success of your rail-

"Mr. Monet has not only contented himself with railing in the most violent way at the Federal Government and its measures, but he has insulted in an unqualified and its measures, but he has insulted in an unqualified manner important men who lead the country, some of whom came to support Mr. Paradis in the county. You know that it is not by such conduct as his that enterprises which interest you so vitally can be achieved.

"This is not a matter of private interest, but of the public interests of the county. Prove, on Tuesday, by the yote you will give Mr. Paradis, that you understood these great interests, and that you intend to see them secured.

"Give your vote early, one and all, for the candidate of the people, Mr. F. X. Paradis."

Mr. MONET.

Well, my opponent was elected. It is true that he never sat in this House, but it was not the fault of the electors, but rather of the Government who dissolved Parliament, and by that means refused Mr. Paradis an opportunity of taking his seat. The electors fulfilled their obligation, they voted for him and elected him. I, therefore, expect—although the County of Napierville has another representative now—that the Government also will to-day fulfil its promises, and I would not be surprised to find in the correspondence that will be brought before the House the promise of a subsidy for the construction of this railway. It would be nothing but the redeeming of the pledges given by important men who came into the County of Napierville. As to the accusation brought against me of having insulted these important men who came into the county, I do not believe that that should be a reason why this subsidy should be so now. On another hand, so many important men came into the county that I have not been able to trace the victim of these imprudent insults, and, notwithstanding all my good-will, I am still seeking whom to apologize to. In any case, even should this be counted against me, I hope that the punishment therefor will not be visited upon the electors of the County of Napierville, who still have the same rights to the granting of a subsidy, for the reasons given by others and by myself on the occasion above referred to.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no objection to bring down all the papers that are in the department in connection with this matter, consisting of petitions from the electors in the county which were forwarded by Mr. Paradis, and the petitioners were informed their application would receive the same consideration as was given to others. Beyond that, there is no other information that I have to give to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. (Translation.) The hon. member for Napierville has given himself the pleasure, quite legitimate, of re-editing for this House a little bit of an election speech, to memorize one of his elections, not the one, the remembrance of which is the pleasanter to him, but one of his elections. He did not miss the opportunity of saying that the Government, which had been represented during this campaign by many of its friends, and by one of its members, had responded to requests made in the county for a work of public interest, in such a manner as to satisfy the electors. There is no harm in this, and I must congratulate my young friend for not having said more, at least for not having put more than a certain colouring on what happened. It is true, that during this campaign in which I took a part—the one in which the hon. member was not the successful candidate—the question of a public improvement in which all the electors were interested, was discussed. I may, and I must, have said that the only way for the electors of Napierville to obtain a subsidy was to do in Ottawa what had been done in Quebec: to ask for it; that if the scheme was good-and I must have added that I had no reason to think that it was not an excellent scheme,—the Ottawa Government was surely no worse advised than that of Quebec, and that we would do for this railway and county what the Ottawa Government had done for other railways and counties, without any party or political consideration. I surely must have said that, as it was my duty to do. Promises were wanted, and I was asked for promises and my direct support with the Government and with my colleagues. This I could not give and did not give. What was done, was that petitions were sent to the Government, the reception of those petitions was acknowledged to those who had sent them, and they are now in the hands of the Minister of Railways. My hon. friend says that I went, perhaps, a little too far in saying that I had no objection to be a member of the syndicate or the company that was to build this road. My hon, friend knows what was the company, which, from information which I got from his own friends in the county was to construct this road. He must know that I could not, and that I should not belong to that company. The railway was to be built by a powerful company in existence in Canada. I have no right to refused; for, if the same was just then, it is equally say whether the Government of Canada will be disposed to grant a subsidy now. I cannot say more to-day than I said at the time. Those who went with me into the county, the hon. Deputy-Speaker (Mr. Bergeron) and the Hon. Senator Tassé, said the same thing as I did, and will have no more cause to repent. hon, friend has read an election circular. Well, we would have very funny things to bring before the House if we were to read all the circulars which come to light during election campaigns. My hon. friend is still young, and when he will have acquired a little more parliamentary experience, he will indulge no more in this practice of bringing before the House hustings squabbles and campaign He did not do wrong if he did it with the view of drawing the attention of the Government to an undertaking which interests his county. He did well; and let him be sure that I am to-day, as I was at the time, one of those who have much sympathy for the County of Napierville, which, it is true, has not had many favours from Governments, even at the time when the chief of a party in power was its representative here. I have much sympathy for his electors, and for the undertaking of which he has spoken.

Motion agreed to.

KINGSTON POST OFFICE.

Mr. GERMAN (for Mr. Amyor) moved for:

Copies of the annual report of the postmaster of Kingston, including the year 1889, and containing a list in detail of the several lessees of the boxes in the Kingston Post Office; also copies of the list of said lessees for the said year 1889, containing the names of the said several lessees for the said year, beginning at the letter "B."

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman's motion I may state that there are no names of lessees of that year, 1889. The person who was to keep the list, a man by the name of Burns, I think, the deputy postmaster, neglected to keep it and there was no record kept. That answer I gave to the House before, but I promised the House when that question was put to me the other day, to send to the inspector in Kingston and ask him to find out by any possible means he could, who was the lessee of the particular box that the gentleman required to get the name of. The inspector went to the different letter carriers, and found out that there was evidence that the party who had leased the box, at the particular time mentioned by the hon. gentleman, was a man named Bancroft, and after his giving up the box after the lapse of two or three months, there were some letters came directed to Bancroft and Connolly, and Connolly & Co., and these letters were delivered to the clerk of Mr. Connolly on the works at the graving dock. That is all the information possible I can get on this subject.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the Postmaster General state that Connolly succeeded as the lessee of the

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think it.

Mr. MULOCK. That would be some information.

Mr. HAGGART. I can get the information for the next year, but there was no record of the lessees kept that year at all.

Mr. MULOCK. But inasmuch as the enquiry would not a similar enquiry disclose who succeeded Bancroft as the lessee of the box?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. I do not think there will be any trouble finding that out.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the Minister be good enough to obtain that?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. BARRON. I observe the Minister does not say that the inspector reported that any letters were received, addressed to Bancroft alone, but simply to "Bancroft & Connolly." It would appear that although Bancroft leased that box in that name, he himself has never received letters at all, and the only letters that were received were addressed "Bancroft & Connolly," and evidently written from the department here.

Mr. HAGGART. This is the effect of the letter and telegram I got from the inspector, that letters were addressed to Bancroft & Connolly, but there is indubitable evidence found from the letter carriers and from other parties, that a man named Bancroft had the box for three months during that year; that letters came; that he seemed to have given up the box, and that letters came to Bancroft & Connolly, and Connolly & Co., and that they were delivered by the letter carriers to the clerk of Connolly on the works of the graving

Mr. LAURIER. Are we to understand that no record is to be found in the post office as to who paid the rent of the box, as to when it was rented, and when the lease ended? Is there no record to be found containing that information.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no record at that particular time of the boxes which were let. person in whose particular charge that was, was charged with misappropriating the moneys, and is at present in the penitentiary for the crime.

Motion agreed to.

THE CLAIM OF HUGH MUNROE.

Mr. FRASER moved for:

All papers in reference to the claim of Hugh Munroe, of River John, Pictou County, for damages for injuries caused to his farm by the building of the Short Line Rail-

He said: In moving for those papers I have simply to add, that at the time the Short Line Railway was built, a swamp was drained on Mr. Munroe's land. They failed to build a culvert to carry away the water that was put on his land from this swamp, and he suffered a good deal of damages. I would call the attention of the Government to the case of Mr. Munroe, who is a poor farmer, and I trust that the Government will at once send an engineer and see that justice is done him. It is a case in which I think damages ought to be given, as damage was caused to his land through no fault of his own, and he is a poor man and ought to be compensated. In moving for these papers I wish to call the attention of the Government to the matter, and I know that as soon as they make enquiries they will see that justice is done to Mr. Munroe.

Mr. BOWELL. I have caused enquiry to be made in the records of the Department of Railways and Canals, and I am sure there is no correspondiscloses the fact that Bancroft was the lessee, dence with regard to the claim of the character referred to by the hon. gentleman. There is, however, a complaint that the farm-crossing on the railway is too steep to meet the views of Mr. Munroe. It is one in eight, and he desires to have it made one in ten. It was originally built one in ten, but since the track was laid and ballasting done, it has reduced to the extent I mention. Beyond that information we have nothing further, so far as I can learn, in the department. Whatever information there is on the matter referred to by the hon, gentleman will be laid before the House. If there has been any damage of the character the hon, gentleman referred to, it will be the duty of the department to investigate it, and to see that the man is compensated if he really has any claim.

Motion agreed to.

HALIFAX COUNTY COURT JUDGE.

Mr. FRASER moved for:

All correspondence relating to application for increase of salary of Judge Johnson, County Court judge for Halifax County, N.S.

He said: In moving for these papers I wish to bring before the House a case which I think demands the attention of the Government. I beg to state that Judge Johnson is the judge for the City and County of Halifax. The judges, who have county court jurisdiction in Nova Scotia, or in the Lower Provinces, are paid the same salary; and that salary cannot increase beyond $2,400 a year. The salary begins at $2,000, and is raised I think Judge Johnson, as every man who practices at the bar in Nova Scotia knows, is a painstaking, hard-worked judge. I venture to say that no judge of the Supreme Court in the city of Halifax does more work than he does. He certainly does more than Judge Watters, County Court judge for St. John, N.B. I think that a judge in a large city should receive more than an ordinary County Court judge. Some time ago the salary of Judge Watters was increased by $600, to bring it up to $3,000; he is besides the judge of the Admiralty Court, in which position he receives $600 more; and the Government saw. fit, while taking one county from his jurisdiction, to make him revising barrister, and thereby to give him $300 or $400 more; so that altogether he is getting from $3,600 to $4,000 a year. Judge Johnson was not appointed revising barrister, one of the reasons given being that he was too busy. I submit that if he was too busy to act as revising barrister, his salary ought to have been increased. The County Court judges in Ontario are also judges of probate, and their fees, I am informed, amount to about $600 a year each; so that the average salary of a County Court judge in Ontario is about $3,000, and that of the judge of the County of York, about $7,000. It is perfectly clear that a judge in a city like Halifax, who has so much work to do, ought to receive more than a judge who lives in the country; and while I know that I shall not have the approval of one hon. gentleman in this House in saying that the salaries of all judges are too low, I submit that Judge Johnson is entitled to as large a salary as other judges. He is a man of ability, and he devotes his whole time to his work; and when he does that and is not in a position to practice before the courts, or to engage in other business, the Government should enquire seriously whether Mr. Bowell.

Detailed statement of work done on the wharves at Vaudreuil and Boucherville, in the County of Chambly, since the commencement of the said works in 1886. 2. A detailed statement of the several sums expended by the Government in connection with the said works, showing the names of persons to whom such several sums were paid, and why and under what arrangement or contract such payments were made. 3. Copies of all reports of en-Mr. Bowell.

he is fairly recompensed by a salary of $2,400. is in no fault-finding spirit that I bring the matter to the notice of the Government, but because I believe that a man who gives satisfaction should receive fair-play in comparison with others; and I know that in doing so I shall have the sympathy and support of the hon. Minister of Justice, who understands the position of the matter. I think the Government ought not to hesitate for a moment to put Judge Johnson in such a position as to compensate him for the large amount of work he does. As it is near six o'clock, I will not prolong my remarks by going into matters, as I had intended, to show the amount of work he does. An examination of the calendar will show that he does more work than any other County Court judge in the Province, and I commend his case to the Government and trust that they will deal favourably with

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not a word to say against any of the statements of fact made by the hon, member for Guysborough with respect to the qualifications of Judge Johnson or the duties he discharges. I have no doubt that they are all that the hon. gentleman states them to be, and it may be that a good case exists for an increase of salary in his case. Nor do I intend to take up the broad question to which he very casually referred, of the salaries of the judges generally. That is a very large question, upon which, as we have already experienced, a good deal can be said on both sides. I rise more for the purpose of calling attention to the case of the County Court judge of Queen's County, P.E.I., who stands in the same relative position that Judge Johnson does. He receives the same amount of pay as the County Court judges of Prince and King's, although he does more work than both of them together—yes, more than they do when their work is doubled and doubled again. But it is necessary to have judges in those counties, and I do not say that they are overpaid; but in a comparatively large county like Queen's, which has a population of nearly 65,000, and with a very fair extent of jurisdiction for the County Court, a very large amount of litigation which took place in the Supreme Court a few years ago, now comes before the county judge. He is a man of good experience and legal attainments, and discharges his duties satisfactorily; and having no jury, but acting as a judge of law and fact, he himself attends to a large amount of business which was formerly done at a great expense in the Supreme Court. The system we have adopted of bringing near to the homes of the people the courts before which they can have justice, has operated in this case, as in many others, in giving that gentleman a large amount of work; and I would respectfully suggest to the hon. Minister of Justice that if he has the intention of increasing the salaries of any of the County Court judges of the Maritime Provinces, Judge Alley, of Queen's County has a very strong claim to be considered among the very first.

RETURN ORDERED.

gineers on the said wharves, and of the estimates, and also of all letters addressed to the Department of Public Works in relation to the said works.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

RELIEF OF THOMAS BRISTOW.

Mr. O'BRIEN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 133) for the relief He said: I wish to call of Thomas Bristow. the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice and the House generally to one or two circumstances connected with this Bill, and which affect very materially the whole subject of divorce, as now carried on in this country. I may premise my remarks by saying that the facts I am about to state in no way affect the standing of the petitioner in this case. On the contrary, if anything, they increase the right of the petitioner to relief. The facts are that the wife from whom the divorce is sought, without apparently just cause, left her husband and went away with another man. She remained away from her husband five or six years, and then went through a regular form of marriage with this other She is reported by one of the witnesses to have said that she considered that the fact of her having been separated from her husband five or six years was sufficient justification for marrying again; and she stated she was confirmed in this view by the advice of her lawyer. As I happen to know the solicitor in question very well and intimately, I venture to say that statement is absolutely false, so far as he is concerned; but what I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice, and, if possible, that of the Attorney General of Ontario, to, is this: that this woman has derived all possible benefit already which she could derive now from the action of the committee, as she has been subjected to no penalty, she has gained all the relief she desired, and she is now living, I suppose, with this man to whom she is married. do not know whether this divorce has made that second marriage legal or not, but at any rate she is living with a man to whom either she has not been legally married or was not legally married when the second alleged marriage took place. I say it is a scandal upon the administration of our criminal justice if not upon our legislation, that this woman, or if the case were reversed, any man in such a position, should be allowed to contract the form of a second marriage, and should get benefit of the form of a second marriage without any punishment being awarded. This is a blot on our criminal administration or upon the legislation which permits it. I know of a case almost precisely similar, which took place some years ago, where a man had notoriously abused and ill-treated his wife. After separation, he went through the form of a divorce in Chicago and coolly, after this divorce, which, of course, would not have any force in Canada, came back and married another woman in Canada, with whom he is living to-day. After this second outrage, the woman applied for a divorce and obtained it, but there was no punishment inflicted on the man, and no prosecution for bigamy ever took place. Of course, neither the wife nor the husband, in such a case, would like to enter a prosecution for bigamy, but there ought to be some machinery by which some person, as public prosecutor, should intervene and take proceedings, in a case like this, against the offending party. It is outrageous that the offending party should get the benefit which is desired from the proceedings of the Divorce Com-mittee. I think the case is one which calls for close examination, either at the hands of the Minister of Justice or of the Attorney General of Ontario, so that steps should be taken to prevent matters of this kind being any longer tolerated.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I agree with what the hon, gentleman has said, and I will call attention to the subject.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) About two years ago attention was called in this House to the mode of dissolving these marriages, and it was thought that the language used in the Bill was broader than was necessary, that is, that if the conduct of one party was such as to justify the dissolution of the marriage tie, that was hardly sufficient to justify Parliament in allowing both parties to marry again. .The provision that the marriage is "null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever" is certainly broad enough to enable the offending party to marry again, but I question that it was the intention of Parliament to do that. I remember it was stated that probably the draftsman in the other House had drafted these Bills under the old language, and that some change should be made.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to call attention to an important matter. Hon. gentlemen on the front benches when they address each other across the House do so in such a low tone of voice that we, sitting on the back benches, might just as well be in the corridor. When a Minister is speaking we cannot hear him, and I presume it is the same when members on the front benches of this side are speaking, that hon, members opposite cannot hear them. I wish hon, members on both sides would remember that the matters on which they speak are of interest to the whole House and should be heard. It is, I am aware, without any discourtesy intended to the members on the back benches, but, if members on each side would speak loud enough to allow members sitting on the rear benches on the other side to hear them, then they would be heard by the whole House.

Bill considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed, on a division.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 133) for the relief of Mahala Ellis, on a division.—(Mr. Wallace.)

Bill (No. 134) for the relief of Isabel Tapley, on a division.—(Mr. Wallace.)

Bill (No. 30) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of Jay Spencer Corbin.—(Mr. Reid.)

ANGLO-CANADIAN ELECTRIC STORAGE COMPANY.

Mr. MACKINTOSH moved that the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 92) to incorporate the Anglo-Canadian Electric Storage and Supply Company, be concurred in.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the amendment?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. A reduction of the capital from $500,000 to $300,000.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask that hongentleman what power this company has to expropriate, or to carry on its business on the highways, without the consent of the municipalities?

Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. SPEAKER. Discussion can only take place in regard to the amendments that are under consideration.

Mr. MULOCK. I quite understand that we are discussing the amendment only, but the Bill does not become an Act until the amendment is concurred in. I observe that the original Bill proposed to confer very extensive powers upon the company, powers to erect poles and wires on the highways. I wish to know—it might affect my judgment about this amendment—whether those powers can now be used without the consent of the municipalities?

Mr. MACKINTOSH, I think the Bill provides that no expropriation can take place, no wires and no poles can be erected, except with the consent of the municipality.

CONSOLIDATED REVENUE AND AUDIT ACT.

Mr. MULOCK. Before you proceed with the Public Orders I desire to call the attention of the Government to the fact that Bill (No. 139), which I had the honour of introducing a week ago to-day, a very short Bill, is not yet printed in English. The Bill is only one page in length, and I hoped it would be printed, so that, if possible, I could have proceeded with it to-night. We have only one day in the week now for Public Bills and Orders, and I think it is too bad that these Bills should be neglected in this way—it means a week's delay. I think some explanation ought to be given of the delay.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Enquiry will be made, and the hon. gentleman will be informed of the result.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. WALLACE moved second reading of Bill (No. 15) to amend the Act for the prevention and suppression of combinations formed in restraint of He said: This Bill is precisely of the same trade. nature as the Bill of the session before last which was then rejected by the Senate. The object of the Bill as now brought in is the suppression of combinations in restraint of trade and is exactly the same as it was when passed through this House two years ago. We then accepted amendments made by the Senate because the last days of the session had arrived, and we either had to accept the Bill somewhat weakened by the amendments made by the Senate, or to reject it altogether. It was considered advisable to accept the measure, although mutilated by the Senate, rather than have no measure on the Statute-book relating to these combinations in restraint of trade. The two years that have elapsed since the Bill was passed have shown the necessity of the legislation that we are asking to-day from this House. Combinations have been broken up by the Act as it was passed, and warnings have been given to other combinations which have had the effect of compelling them to dissolve their organizations. There are, however, organizations still existing which are illegal, which are contrary to the best interests of the people of this country, and if the amendments that we ask for to-day are granted, they will effectually crush them out.

think that we have some reason to find fault with the Attorneys General of the various provinces for not having seen fit to enforce the law as it stands against those who are breaking it. Public attention has been called, both in this House and out of it, to the fact of the existence of a combination by which salt was doubled in price at the salt wells. For many years salt has been sold at the wells, delivered on the cars, for 55 cents a barrel. Then a number of persons formed some kind of a combination; they went around to the salt manufacturers and said to them: Now, we will give you 70 cents a barrel for the salt you have been heretofore selling at 55 cents a barrel. That offer was, of course, accepted by the salt manufacturers, and these men immediately raised the price of salt to $1 per barrel, and a little later to $1.10. Every one will allow that the manufacturers of salt or any other article, or men engaged in any kind of commerce should have a fair and reasonable profit in their business. No business can subsist very long unless reasonable profit bemade. The salt manufacturers made a profit of 15 cents additional, which I do not think the people would think was too much, because 70 cents per barrel for salt including the barrel, which cost 25 or 30 cents, is not an excessive price. But these men form a combination, do no work of any kind, have no capital invested in the enterprise. The salt manufacturers deliver the salt in cars to these men for 70 cents; they immediately send invoices to the purchasers, charging $1.10; they send 70 cents to the manufacturers, retaining 40 cents for themselves, although, I repeat, they have no capital invested, no men employed, no interests in the industry. That is an exorbitant and unreasonable price; the combination itself is illegal and should be broken up. It is quite true that within the last few days the dealers in salt reduced the price 15 cents and 7½ cents per 100 lbs., and these men have reduced the price of barrel salt to 85 cents. But their whole operations are wrong in principle; they are doing an injury to the people of the country, and if this Act is amended as proposed and the words "unduly and unreasonably" are struck out, they will find they will have to change their operations and work by more just and fair methods.

Mr. LISTER. When the hon, gentleman introduced his Bill last session or the session before, he was told in this House that the Bill if passed by this Parliament would not have the effect he desired it should have. The hon gentleman, I notice, is always anxious to find fault with the Local Governments, and he intimates that the fact of his Act passed last session not having been enforced is attributable to the Attorneys General of the several provinces. I desire to say to the hon. gentleman that from the moment the Bill became law it was not worth the paper upon which it was printed, and the hon. gentleman knew it perfectly well. It was never intended to be operative. I desire to say further that so far as regards the Attorneys General of each province is concerned, that the hon. gentleman ought to know that it is not the duty of the Attorney General to enforce the criminal law. It must be put in motion by some individual in the state; and if the hon gentleman is as keen and the purpose of having the law enforced? But the hon, gentleman knew that the Act could not be enforced, that no one could be convicted under it; and it is doubtful if the law were amended as he proposes to-day it could be enforced any more than the law passed last session. The only way to destroy these pernicious combinations is to repeal entirely the duties that protect them.

Mr. WALLACE. Do you propose to take the duties off coal oil?

Mr. LISTER. Never mind coal oil. Some hon. MEMBERS. Answer.

Mr. LISTER. I will attend to coal oil in due I want this House to understand that the coal oil industry is nothing to me, and that I owe nothing to it, and I am here independent of it, and am as independent as any man to vote against the coal oil industry. If the hon, gentleman were as zealous, as he professes to be, to enforce the law as he is to make himself prominent in certain sections of the community, he himself would have gone before a magistrate and laid an information against, this oppressive salt monopoly and other monopolies. Why does he not go and have the binder twine monopoly proceeded against?—a monopoly which is one of the most oppressive in this country. The industry here is closed up; it is under the control of an American firm, which is paying gentlemen, some of whom are sitting in this House, large sums of money; it has thrown hundreds of men out of employment, and is compelling every farmer to pay a great deal more than he otherwise would for the binding twine which of necessity he must use. If the hon, gentle-man is so honest, if it is really desired by the Government and its followers to destroy the combinations which exist in this country in almost every branch of trade, why does not the Minister of Finance do as he said he would do the other day, whenever he found there were combinations he would take off the duty? I do not know whether the hon. Minister intends to carry out that promise or not. That is the method and the only successful method by which the trade combinations of this country can be wiped out. A word so far as oil is concerned. I said in this House several sessions ago that you have no right to single out the oil industry, that if you propose to reduce the duties, to abolish as it were the National Policy, I would hold up my hands for it, no matter whether it destroyed the oil industry or not. That is the position I take to-day. I say, again, that you have no right to single out one particular industry, and say that whatever protection you have given it shall be taken away and that particular industry closed. As regards the industry in coal oil, it is the only industry in Canada that can be protected by an Act of Parliament, and this must be apparent to anyone who gives it a moment's thought. We produce in Canada an inferior raw material, a material that produces less illuminating qualities and which costs more to refine than does the American. The result would be that as the American crude produces a greater percentage of illuminating qualities, costing less to refine, it would come into this country. Many men hold that instead of Canadians trying to make desirous as he would wish this House and the country to understand he is in suppressing combinations of this kind, why did he not take some steps for cerned, to manufacture lubricating oils. Whether that be true or not I am not prepared to say, but I am sure I appeal to the common sense of every hon, gentleman when I say that for that particular reason, namely, its being an inferior raw material, is the only reason for the protection of that industry, the protection of it in a sense of protecting the manufactured article so far as its being an illuminating oil is concerned. I have no question that, for the reason that the Americans are able to manufacture illuminating oils cheaper, as their raw material is better, if you removed the duty the American oil would find a market here and would in all probability destroy our oil-refining industry. But there are many men who are familiar with the trade who hold that if we cease to refine for illuminating purposes, an ample market would be found for our oil in the United States as lubricating oils, if we could succeed in getting the Americans to remove the high duty standing against it in their markets. I repeat, Sir, that the only way to dissolve the combines is, as I have stated before, to abolish the high duty which protects the particular industries which are made the subject of combines.

Mr. SPROULE. I am a little surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), for if he had paid any attention to this subject, he would not have made the statement that the only way to dissolve combines is to take the duty off any article in respect to which a combination is formed. If the hon, gentleman had paid any attention to the subject, he would know that trusts and combines exist in countries where there is no protective tariff. Take, for instance, England: these combinations have existed in England, not only for the last fifteen years, but for the last one hundred years, and they are to be found in every other civilized country.

Mr. LISTER. They do not exist in England.

Mr. SPROULE. I tell the hon, gentleman that they do, and if he goes to the library he can find out for himself that they do exist. If the hon. gentleman does not know the facts, he might have qualified his statement by saying so far as his knowledge exists, but it is quite clear that his knowledge does not extend so far as it ought on this subject. Other countries have tried his method of doing away with the duty on articles to prevent combines, and, as they have failed, we are justified in supposing The United that his is not an effectual remedy. States have to deal with this same subject as we have, and they have endeavoured to do it in the same way. They are endeavouring to do as we are doing to-day, namely, making laws to attack the combines in another direction. Only two or three years ago, not less than 47 Bills were introduced into Congress in one year, with the object of doing away with these combinations. There were several members of Congress who held the same views that the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) does, and they tried his remedy in reference to certain articles, but they found that this remedy was not effectual.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where?

Mr. SPROULE. In the United States.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman say that free trade was tried in the United States?

Mr. LISTER.

Mr. SPROULE. I say that the duty was taken off some articles in the United States, for the purpose of trying if it would be effectual against combines, but this method was found not to be a remedy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What articles are these?

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman on the spur of the moment from memory, because it is two or three years since I studied the subject, but if he is anxious to know, I can get him the information later on and give it to him. If the hon, gentleman will wait until I am finished he can give his own version on the subject. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has asked: Why does not the member for York (Mr. Wallace) pros-It is not the duty of a private individual to proscute under a criminal law in all cases where some injury is done to the public. It is the duty of the Attorney General of the province; it is the duty of the Provincial Government to prosecute, and I say, therefore, that we have just ground for complaint that when we have made a law and put it on the Statute-book, that the provincial authorities have not attempted to enforce that law for the purpose of doing away with these injurious combinations. It is the duty of the Provincial Government to enforce that law, just as it is their duty to enforce any other criminal law which we pass here. This matter has been brought to the attention of the Provincial Government at different times, and I say that they have never attempted to enforce this law. Therefore, we have the right to complain that they did not attempt to enforce this law, no matter how good or how bad it may be. The member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) further stated that the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) knew that this Bill was of no use, and that it never was intended to be of any use. If I understand the rules of debate in this House, no member has any right to attribute improper motives to another in reference to what he does or says in this House, and if the remarks of the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) do not attribute improper motives, then I do not understand the use of the English language. I am satisfied that the member for York (Mr. Wallace) was just as sincere in his endeavour to have his Bill made law, and just as honest in his conviction that if the Bill had passed as he introduced it, it would have been effectual for its object, as the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) ever was in reference to any Act which he has supported during his parliamentary term. I am satisfied that the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) was thoroughly sincere, and I believe that if the Bill had been passed in the form in which it was originally introduced, it would be effectual. The Bill was unfortunately amended in several ways, and it passed this House, not as the hon. member for York Mr. Wallace) wished it should pass. It was allowed to pass that it might be got through the House, and leaving it to us the chance of amending it in the future so as to render it more effectual. The Bill was again changed in the Senate, and when it came back to this House at the last hour of the session, we were placed in the position, that if we did not accept the Senate amendment we would be unable to get the Bill through at all. The following session an effort was made to amend the law, but it I remember correctly, the contention both in this House and in the Senate was: "You have passed a law, and you have that law on the Statutes which, in the judgment of the legal experts in this House, would be effectual to carry out its purpose if you would only prosecute under that law; but seeing that you have not prosecuted under the law, and that there has not been any failure of justice, you have no right to ask for this amendment." Upon these grounds we were defeated again in endeavouring to amend the Bill in the direction which we believe would best accomplish the object which was intended. Now, the hon, member for York (Mr. Wallace) again introduces the Bill, and he endeavours to secure this amendment which he believes is necessary in order to make the Bill as valuable and effective as it ought to be. When the hon, gentleman does so, there is no member in this House who has a right to impate improper motives to him, or to say that his aim is not to dissolve these combinations; or to insinuate in any way that he is here for the purpose of pastime in introducing a Bill that he believes to be no good. No member has a right to say that he is introducing this Bill for the purpose of making pastime for himself, or to gain a little cheap popularity out of it. That imputation is unjust and unfair. That is not the aim of the hon. member so far as my judgment goes, and certainly it is not the aim of other members in this House who have endeavoured to make this law as perfect as possible, because we believe it is very much needed.

Mr. McMILLAN. With respect to the remarks of the hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) in reference to the association which held the whole of the salt trade of Western Ontario in their hands, I trust that I may be permitted to correct the statements of that hon, gentleman. He said that this association had no money invested in the industry, and that they employed no hands. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that Dr. Coleman & Sons are the only manufacturers now at Seaforth, and they belonged to the association; Ramsford Bros. are the only manufacturers of salt in Clinton and they were members of the association; Mr. Wrightmeyer, of Kincardine, one of the largest exporters of salt in the west, was another member of the association, so that they all had money largely invested in it. Not only that, but a good many of the other salt wells have been unable to survive in the country at the low prices formerly obtained. In my own riding some years ago there were five salt wells in operation, but three of them went down and only two of them survive at the present time. The chants Salt Wells in Seaforth went The Mer-Kidd, of Dublin, Ont., went down, and Roger, in Brussels, went down and the works were bought by Dr. Coleman & Sons, the time that salt was sold at 55 cents per barrel. While I am bitterly opposed to all monoplies, and to all associations to raise prices, I want everything placed on a fair level in this House. I say today that, considering the duties that have been removed from sugar, and the half duty removed from salt, that the salt interest has not received justice yet. They are charging 85 cents per barrel it is true, but all they desire is for you to give them free coal, give them free iron to make their rebate on the duties on these articles, and the salt | makes its production elsewhere impossible, then manufacturers tell me that they are perfectly sure that they can manufacture salt at 60 cents a barrel and make a fair living profit. The true remedy for the combiners, as will be found out in the end is, to remove the duties from the manufactured articles and from the raw materials. That is the only remedy that you can have for these combines.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did not the removal of the duty in the United States break up the sugar trust? That combine is in existence there still.

An hon. MEMBER. We will take all the duty off salt.

Mr. McMULLEN. When this question was before the House last session, the hon. member from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) introduced a Bill for the purpose of enabling the Excutive to remove the duty off any article, that they had just reason to believe was the subject of a combine. I believe that a Bill of that kind would be much better than the Bill which my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) has introduced, although I intend to support that Bill because I am desirous to assist in every possible way I can to put an end to combines in this country. If the expunging of the word "unduly" will improve the Act now in force, I shall certainly support that action. I am exceedingly anxious that every effort should be put forth, I care not from what quarter it comes, to prevent combinations in trade; but I think the best way to suppress them would be to give the Executive power by Order in Council to place on the free list any commodity which they have just reason to believe is the subject of a combine. I regret that the Government did not consent to take the duty off binding twine, as the United States Government has done, for I am satisfied that the duty on that article this year will cause a very serious drain on the resources of our people, as it is at present the subject of a combine, as well as salt.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot speak a second time to this motion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is, I think, mistaken in saying that the imposition of high duties has nothing to do with the production of combinations; and I think that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who has informed the House that combinations of this sort exist in England, will have a great deal of difficulty in presenting to the House an example. Combinations of this sort have existed in the United States, but wherever the duty has been removed on an article the combination has disappeared. I might refer to the well known instance of the manufacture of quinine. A few years ago the price of that article in the United States, as in this country, was $5 an ounce; but when the protection which was given to the manufacturers at Philadelphia was removed, the price was reduced to little more than one-tenth of what it had been before. What is true in that instance is true in every other instance where the experiment has been tried. Whenever a similar article may be imported from abroad, it will be brought into competition with the article which is the subject of combination. It is true, if an article is produced pans, and the piping that goes into their wells in this country which is to be found in no other and brings the brine to the tanks; give them a part of the world, if some peculiar circumstance there will be in the nature of things a monopoly in that article, which could not be reached by the removal of the duties. But that will not apply to salt. The salt men of Canada have before called the attention of public men to this fact, that the amount of capital invested and the number of wells sunk are capable of producing far more salt than will supply the Canadian market; and so combinations under a protective tariff were formed for the purpose of reducing the quantity put upon the market and keeping up the price. The same thing has happened in the United States. I might mention the salt wells in Kentucky which were rented at some $50,000 a year, and which were closed altogether by the Onondaga salt manufacturers. What has happened there has happened here, and exactly from the same cause, that is, because the Legislature of the United States, like the Parliament of Canada, has imposed a high protective duty which made a combination possible. Now, the hon, gentleman, instead of proposing to reduce the duty where combinations take place, undertakes to make the taking advantage of legislation which he himself has assisted in putting on the Statute-book, a The hon, gentleman helps to imcriminal offence. pose a very high duty, and makes it possible for the manufacturer to increase the price to the extent of that duty or very nearly so, and then he says: If you will do that, I will introduce a measure making your act criminal. Why, Sir, ought not the hon. gentleman's act to be regarded as criminal that makes such a state of things possible? Why should you make it possible by a protective tariff to impose an additional price of 50 or 60 cents on a barrel of salt, and then pass an act which says that if any party undertakes to avail himself of the advantage that has thus been created by the as guilty of a crime. That is what this is a proposes. Now, I say that this is a strivance, and one interference of the legislature, he shall be punished that will be very far from being as satisfactory as the other that is open to the hon. gentleman, that is, to repeal the law imposing the protective duty, or to diminish the duty, and to that extent you will make a combination impossible; because whenever a party forming a combination here undertakes to ask more than the ordinary market price plus the duty, the foreign article will come By simply reducing the duty, the hon. gentleman can accomplish in an effective way, and without calling into operation a criminal law, what he proposes by this Bill. Then, I would invite the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to the change which the hon. gentleman proposes. He says he proposes to repeal the word "unduly." Why, Sir, if he has made a combination illegal, the addition of the word "unduly" has not added anything to the character of the law. It simply introduces a word that is surplusage. If the hon, gentleman has not made the combination illegal, then the removal of this word "unduly" will simply make his Bill absolutely harmless, so far as regards the party against whom it is directed. Now, I have seen a telegram from a prominent salt manufacturer, who says that if you will give him free fuel, he is perfeetly willing that you should remove the duty altogether, and by so doing, you would give to the community cheap salt. But the hon. gentleman does not propose to do that. He imposes high duties which make combinations and high prices desire; and, perhaps, as suggested by the hon. Mr. MILES (Bothwell).

possible; and when he sees parties taking advantage of his legislation to do what is the obvious result of that legislation, he comes here and proposes to make their act criminal. I say that the combinations in many cases may be wrong, but in many cases they are the necessary expression of selfpreservation, and they may not be anything more than that; and the hon. gentleman, by proposing legislation of this sort, may satisfy his constituents, but he will never accomplish the results at which he aims.

Mr. BARRON. I am considerably surprised at the hon, member for East Grey saying that the Attorney General of one of the provinces has repeatedly refused to take proceedings under the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman misrepre-I never made such a statement.

Mr. BARRON. Of course, if I misunderstood the hon. gentleman-

It had been brought to the Mr. SPROULE. attention of the Committee with the object of its reaching the Attorney General.

Mr. BARRON. The hon, gentleman certainly created the impression on my mind, though, of course, I must have misunderstood him, that the attention of the Attorney General was brought to the different breaches of the law. It does seem to me there is more of a desire to place the Governments of the respective provinces in a false position by this Act than a real desire to prevent combines. Take the Act the hon, gentleman proposes to amend. He proposes to strike oduly "in several sub-sections. He proposes to strike out the word "un-Why, Sir, you might strike out this word, and yet the statute, as the hon, gentleman read it, will be entirely ineffective. I would draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to this fact. What is the Act the hon. gentleman proposes to amend?

"Every person who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any person or any railway, steamer, steamship or transportation company, unlawfully—" The hon, gentleman still leaves the word "unlawfully "in-

'to limit the facilities for transport-

So that by striking out the word "unduly," he does not go far enough. He does not make the act of combining itself unlawful. He must declare in the Act itself, or by some means or other, what is an unlawful Act, because a judge or anybody else trying for a breach of this statute is brought face to face with the question: What is an unlawful Act? The statute does not say what is an unlawful Act; and the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), evidently does not desire the passing of an Act to stop these combines, because when he amends the Act he does not go far enough. He does not strike out the word "unlawfully," as he should, in order to make the Act effective. If the word "unlawwas out, then every person who conspires or combines to limit the facilities for transport, &c. would be guilty of misdemeanour; but when he leaves in the word "unlawful," he leaves the law as it is, which he declares is not effective. We have a right, therefore, to declare on this side that there is no evidence of a bond fide desire on the part of the hon. gentleman to destroy combines but rather to make capital by professing such a member for West York himself or rather to be drawn from a suggestion of his, to place the Governments of the different provinces in rather a false position by trying to find fault with them for not prosecuting the different combines under the Act. My hon. friend beside me suggests that the provinces have no authority to prosecute under the Act. and that is so; but I am merely answering the point made by the hon. member for West York, when I say that the word "unlawfully" left in the Act leaves the Act entirely ineffective, so long as it does not declare what is an unlawful act.

Mr. GILLMOR. It is my impression that the hon, member for West York is quite sincere in his desire to prevent combines. I was on the committee with him, and I thought he was very anxious to ascertain all about these combines; and, therefore, I think he is sincere in his desire to prevent But when this Parliament undertakes to regulate the trade of this country and decide how much profit a man shall make, they undertake a very difficult and extensive task. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says they have combines where they have not protection. I have never heard of any combine in England since they did away with protection. It was all combines for a hundred years when they had protection. There were guilds and protected monopolies for everything; and those monopolies paid contributions to the Crown for the privilege of producing, and this was a source of great revenue to the Crown and the political party in power which absolutely sold these privileges. Now, when did we hear of any com-bines in Canada until protection was introduced? Did you, Sir, before Confederation, hear of any combines being formed in Canada to put up the price of an article and buy out certain industries? I never heard of it in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, and I have been many years in Parliament. Neither did I ever hear of them in Quebec or Ontario. In fact, they were never heard of until after this pernicious system of protection was introduced, since which time they have grown up like mushrooms. When did you, Sir, first hear of combines in Canada? It was just two years after we introduced this protective system. This system is the prolific mother of combines, and this Parliament is undertaking a heavy work when it undertakes to regulate trade. In the Parliament of Great Britain, which is the greatest commercial nation in the world, there is no time lost in dealing with matters of trade, but they allow people to trade, without regulating by legislation what profit a man shall make and what this industry or the other shall be allowed to do. They legislate there on broad principles, and let the people do the trading. These matters should be managed by merchants and indi-We are all traders: to trade is a natural right. To buy and sell where you can do so the best is a natural right, but we have undertaken to regulate these things, which are much better let alone. We ought not to interfere with trade at all in this Parliament, because trading is a natural right which belongs to everybody. Is there any moral wrong in buying or selling? There is a moral wrong in putting a law on the Statute-book which allows people to rob their neighbours, but there is no wrong, either in the law of God or the moral law, in buying and selling where you can and in making the most you can. But this Parliament has undertaken | Britain. What I meant to say was, that the con-

to regulate everybody's business. The hon. member for West York pretends there are combines in England. There may be, because it is possible for a combine to be formed among individuals, even where there is no protection.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no room for it. Mr. GILLMOR. The whole world has to be in the combine where you have free trade, but when you come down to a locality and there put on a protective tariff, you afford facilities for combines. You appeal to men's selfishness, and they will tell you how generous they are going to be, but they combine in order to make money for themselves.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he remembered the brewers' company who came over here to buy out the breweries in Canada and Chicago?

Mr. GILLMOR. Of course, they are coming here, but they are coming here to make money. What I wish to convey to the House is, that you are undertaking to do something that you cannot You pretend to say that, as soon as you see a combine, you will take off the duty. Is that the remedy you propose? There was a combine in salt, and, therefore, you took off the duty. If you took off the duty on every other article in regard to which combines are formed, perhaps there would be no combines at all.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) ventured to make a statement that there were no combines in Great Britain, and the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), cheered him on in that assertion. Did he never hear of the arrangement which was made a year or more ago by the thread manufacturers of Scotland? Was not that a combine, and were not thread agencies in this country closed up in con-sequence of it? Was it not also a fact that the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was a party to bringing about a combination amongst the manufacturers of screws? However, what I desire is to cite that case of the thread manufacturers in Take the case of the oil industry, of Scotland. which the hon, gentleman said the duty should be taken off and then the combines would disappear. Suppose we took off the duty on oil, and allowed the American oil to come in here free. Would we in that way get rid of a monopoly? On the contrary, we would be at the mercy of the monopoly of the Standard Oil Company in the United States. While there may be some basis of truth in the contention of the hon. gentlemen opposite, from their point of view, that, if we swept away all the protective duties there would be fewer combines, still, apart from all that, there would be combinations formed, and this Bill, while working in harmony with the protective system, is intended to provide that no illicit and illegal combinations shall take place in restraint of trade. In conclusion, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has rather reflected upon me in regard to the remark that passed from my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) who said that in a free trade country there was very little opportunity for combines to be formed. I did not mean to say that there were no combines formed in Great ditions for the formation of combines under a free trade policy are minimized while they are increased under a protective policy. I think that his refer-Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's screws was rather unfortunate, as that is one arising simply from a question of patent rights. I am not aware of the circumstances in regard to thread combinations.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). If you admit one case, you give away the whole argument.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was natural to suppose that this Bill would excite some debate, as it touches slightly on questions of free trade and protection, but to assert that combines owe their existence to protective tariffs is without any ground in philosophy or history.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) says "oh," but I can appeal to either of those sciences, and he is a master in both. To refer to the first: a combination is only the result of active competition and an attempt to check competition. It may arise from a protective tariff or from many other reasons. It may arise from the protection which is given by the tariff or from the distance and difficulty of transportation from competing countries. In this country it might arise from a highly protective tariff, and in Great Britain it might arise from the distance from sources of production. The hon, gentleman must know from history that, ever since Great Britain has had a Parliament at all, she has made laws on this subject. From the commencement of the statute law you will find laws against forestalling, against regrating, combining, huckstering, and so on, everyone of these being intended to put down combinations, nearly all of them in articles which had no protection under the tariff, but were articles of abundant home production. The hon. gentleman will find that prosecutions were the result of these laws, but they had no relation to a protective tariff, and many of them occurred after free trade. These combinations arise occasionally from underproduction, from storms which impeded transportation, from war, and other circumstances. Nearly all these were in regard to articles on which there was no protection at all. To come to modern we all remember the debate whole subject place when this investigated here, when instances were given, and repeated over and over again, of combinations which existed in Great Britain in regard to articles in which there was no competition, and in the United States in regard to articles for which there was no protection. As to the screw manufacture in Great Britain, the hon. gentleman opposite gives another instance of a combination which arose to check competition, not in consequence of a protective tariff, but from a very different cause. I wanted particularly to call attention to the fact that my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) has been accused of insincerity in pressing this Bill. The foundation of this charge was that he leaves the word "unlawfully" in the Bill, and they say he must be insincere, because it is impossible to tell what is the exact meaning of "unlawfully." My hon. friend goes the length of saying that those who administer the law do not know what the common law of the country is, because when we Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

follow the doing of an unlawful act we simply declare that those penalties shall follow the infraction of the common law, and nothing else. Therefore, when the hon, member for West York proposed to strike out the words of the Act, which he thinks ought not to be in the Act, and leaves the word "unlawfully," I venture to say that instead of making himself liable to the imputation of insincere motives in introducing his Bill he tries to put upon the Statute-book an Act which anybody who is fit to administer a law can administer and interpret without any difficulty. But if the Bill is not to be passed, if we are to have no law upon the subject of unlawful combinations, if we are to repeal the tariff, as the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) insists we should do, then, as the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) says, instead of declaring a remedy for the abuse which is declared to exist in this country we shall simply be folding our hands and leaving our people at the mercy of foreign combinesters without attempting any remedy at all, either as regards foreign or domestic combinations.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that the historical allusions of the Minister of Justice are rather against him. The hon, gentleman knows very well that the legislation of England with regard to forestalling is legislation that existed when almost every man in England held to the doctrine of protection, and the cases he mentions grew up at the same time; they were called into existence at the same time, and the propriety of legislation of this sort at the present day is more than questionable. The hon, gentleman knows very well that for years there has been no attempt to enforce the law with regard to these particular offences, and whether they ought now to be regarded as offences, even, has been seriously questioned. The hon, gentleman knows, too, that when these provisions were inserted in the statutes of the United Kingdom it was thought the proper thing to fix the price of every article that was put upon the market; the sheep had its price, and the prices of the ox, the cow and the horse were fixed by law, and so the parties who formed combinations for the purpose of increasing their value, were persons who acted contrary to the law. Then there was the further rule laid down that it was improper to purchase articles that were necessary to the maintenance of life, such as articles of food, and to hold them with a view of obtaining for them a higher price than they would ordinarily bring in the market. Now, I remember very well that the first work I ever read on political economy was directed against legislation of that sort, and I think, if I remember rightly, it was a work written by the late Archbishop of Dublin, Dr. Whately, in which he undertook to show that it was one of the means by which starvation was prevented amongst the population, that food was not wasted when it was taken out of the market and that by being purchased and held for a higher price, it was held to be sold out to the population when it was most necessary; so that I think the historical allusion of the Minister of Justice is rather unfortunate for his argument, and not at all in support of the Bill proposed by the hon gentleman who sits behind him. It has been pointed out by the Minister of Justice that there are other things than pass a statute and declare the penalty that shall protection which may produce or may render combinations possible. No one has denied that. The copyright of a particular book or literary work may add largely to its price, and so long as the copyright is maintained a monopoly exists; in that case it is only a means devised to compensate the party for his right in literary property. Then, again, patent rights produce the same effect. But what is proposed to be legislated against here are not patent rights or copyrighted articles, but other articles that are ordinarily produced in the country, regardless of patent rights or copyrights, that enter into competition with articles that are purchased from abroad, and foreign competition is effectively excluded by the high duties that have been imposed, and we say to the hon. gentleman: If you will reduce those duties then you will accomplish the object that you have mainly in view by this measure. Besides that, a still more important matter is that the measure which the hon, gentleman put upon the Statute-book two years ago, and the amendment which he now proposes will not at all make the measure of the character which he intends it to be.

Mr. SPROULE. As the hon, member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) called in question the correctness of a statement I made, I would like to quote from a work written by a Mr. Cook, of the New York Bar:

"In England the principle of 'trust' has existed for many years, but it has been confined to legitimate purposes. It has been in vogue in that country for forty years in carrying on mining operations."

Now the hon, gentleman said, in answer to the Minister of Justice, that combinations existed in England during the time of a protective tariff, but not in recent years, when England was under free trade. Now, the period of the last forty years has been a free trade period. The writer then goes on to say:

"And the modern trust seems to be but an outgrowth of their plan of organization. These old English trusts were called Cost-Book Mining Companies."

Then he goes on to cite a number of different kinds of trusts which led to litigation and caused frauds. He continues:

"In more recent times, in England, the genuine 'trust' has been used for legitimate investment purposes. The trustees are authorized to invest the funds of the 'trust' in the stocks and bonds of miscellaneous corporations."

Thus, these combinations to which the writer refers have had their existence since free trade was adopted in England, because the writer here expressly states "it has been in vogue in that country for forty years." Then the writer goes on to say that it had its origin in France, then was extended to England, and trusts were brought about by a number of people putting their money together in order to control operations on a large scale. gives the history of a number of these combinations, not only in England, but, if I remember rightly, in Prussia, Russia and other countries. point out this fact to show that because the hon. member for Bothwell and the hon, member for Lambton were not conversant with this author and with this statement it is no reason why they should get up and flatly contradict every member in the House who dares to differ with them in their opinion regarding the origin of these combines.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no doubt, as stated by the Minister of Justice, that combines, as they are called now, have had many other causes besides protection and tariffs. There is no doubt that distance may be a cause of combines. If an article is manufactured in one country and the same class of article is manufactured in another country, and if the distance is such as to increase greatly the cost of transportation, then a combination may develop naturally. But distance is not the act of man; distance is the act of nature, of God himself. On the other hand, protection is the hand of man. Protection is the very condition created by man in which combinations will flourish, and it is contended by this side of the House that the best method to take away combinations existing under protection is to remove the protection on those special articles. There is no answer to this argument; it is logic itself. That is exactly what is stated by my hon. friends. You, the Government, have created a monopoly, not by distance, not by nature, but simply as the effect of your legislation, and the best way to remove the evil which has been created by legislation is to remove the legislation which has made it possible. Moreover, with respect to the screw monopoly: I remember that in an address delivered by Mr. Chamberlain in New York, after the negotiations of the last Washington treaty, speaking of the absurdity, as he called it, of the protective tariff, he stated, as an instance, that the combinations in screws in the United States paid to his firm or to the monopoly in England a sum, if I remember rightly, of $100,000 a year, just to prevent the exportation of English screws to the American market.

Mr. BOWELL. £30,000 sterling.

Mr. LAURIER. That goes to justify the condition of things which the American tariff made possible. It therefore proves to me that, whatever may be the merit of this Bill, upon the question of free trade and protection, in this instance, the point is made that clearly the best way to remove this combination is to remove the protection itself.

Mr. BOWELL. Hon, gentlemen opposite have based all their arguments upon the suggestion and declaration that combines do not exist in a free trade country. The hon, member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) said that in a country like England there was no reason or rather no foundation on which to base trade combinations.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I said the inducements were much fewer.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to say that. The hon. gentleman says that inducements are not so large there as in a protective country. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) gave a strong illustration of the incorrectness of that statement when he referred to the Coats spool-cotton combination. It is a very wealthy combination, and it is its wealth that enables it to buy up and control the whole of that industry in the kingdom. The hon. gentleman must not have forgotten there was a wealthy combination that controlled the copper of the whole world.

Mr. LISTER. It came to grief.

Mr. BOWELL. Never mind; the fact that it came to grief—most of these combinations come to grief in the end—does not remove the fact that wealth enables a number of people in any country, whether protective or free trade, to form combinations to control the market for at least a certain portion of time. Another combination existed in respect to tin. I speak from a little practical knowledge, owing to the fact of having to do a good deal with the tariffs of the different countries in which these combinations existed. There was brought to the notice of the Department the world. of Customs the fact that, when these combinations existed, prices in the home market were much higher than in the foreign markets to which they exported the products of their industries, whatever they might be. If hon, gentlemen wish to have a striking illustration they have it in the article of dynamite. Although Germany is a highly protected country, dynamite was taken from that country to the markets of England to such an enormous extent that it undersold the productions of Scotland and of England, and the result was a combination between the free trade manufacturers in England and the protected manufacturers in Germany in order to secure higher prices in the different mining districts of England for that particular article. It is an article used very extensively, as hon, gentlemen know, because in England the mining industry is very extensive and those con-nected with it are very wealthy. Now, there was a case in which the wealthy manufacturers in free trade England joined with the protected manufacturers of Germany and Belgium to keep the price at a higher rate in free trade England, Scotland and Wales, where they sold the dynamite, than they sold it to the mining people of Canada. Strange to say, this combination did not extend to either Germany or Belgium, protected countries, but was confined to free trade England. I speak of what I know, from the fact that we have had the best possible evidence that the price at which the manufacturers sold this article in the mining districts in England was higher than the rate at which they sold it in Canada. We found that the combination only extended to England, that the Germans and Belgians reserved to themselves the right to export the products of their countries to any foreign country other than England at lower prices than those at which it was sold in England. Consequently, we were obliged under our law to allow it to be entered at German prices, because it was exported from Germany. This example proves this fact, that in a free trade country like England, where wealth is sufficient, the manufacturers are able to form combinations. Wherever wealth is sufficiently great to control the raw material, just in proportion will they raise the price of the article into which it is manufactured in the country, and this principle extends especially to a country like England, where the manufacturers are so wealthy. So the position assumed by the Minister of Justice was practically correct, apart from history and philosophy. These instances to which I have called the attention of the House have occurred within two years; therefore, it was not necessary to go back forty years, or before free trade was established in England.

Mr. LISTER. They are not parallel cases.

Mr. BOWELL. If this is not a parallel case I do not know what constitutes one. I may be too stupid to draw the distinction, but I see difference between a combination to raise prices in dynamite and a combination to raise prices in salt. There may be a distinction which the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) can draw, but I am forced to say | an offence on his part against the law. Mr. Bowell.

I cannot. I do not wish to detain the House, but I could give several instances in the practical working of the Customs Act to show that combinations do exist, and that they prevail to nearly as great an extent in free trade England as in any part of

Mr. DAVIN. I have no doubt whatever that the amending Bill of my hon, friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) will be a great improvement on the law passed a year or so ago. In regard to the point taken by the Minister of Justice, I have to join issue with my hon, friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills). Those customs that were legislated against in England were customs that came into existence wholly independent of any protection whatever. What occurred was this: Here was a market in the heart of England. A rich trader could go down there and buy up everything coming in; he could make a corner in it in a small way, and do what is done in Chicago in a large way in wheat. While there was not any particular law in existence in England at that time in regard to iron, a law might have been introduced to deal with that custom. It is, as the hon. Minister of Justice said very properly, to guard against an offence of that kind that this legislation of my hon. friend is intended, so that the illustration taken by my hon, and learned friend was strictly to that point, and the contention of the hon. member for Bothwell cannot be sustained. These customs are very interesting in their history. They show how under every condition, a man or a tradesman, or a body of tradesmen, will, if they possibly can, take an advantage. The broad principle laid down, that a combination can be formed whether you have free trade or whether you have protection, is irrefragable. The question of making a combination is merely a question of the power of wealth that you command. Take any trade you like, and if you can find a man with boundless wealth, and if he will go around to all the persons engaged in that trade, and make it worth their while to surrender their rights to him, he can make a "corner" in that special industry for all the world.

Mr. LAURIER. A "corner" is not a "combine."

Mr. DAVIN. My hon, friend makes a distinction without a difference; and I will show him that he does. What is a combine? A combine is a number of persons acting together to make a circle around a certain trade, within which circle they would control that trade so that they will put up the price. What in the name of goodness is the difference, whether one man can wield the money power that is wielded by a dozen men and make the same circle around a given industry? There is no difference whatever, so that my hon. friend makes a distinction without a difference.

Mr. BARRON. One man cannot be guilty of a conspiracy or combination.

Mr. DAVIN. Ah! a single man cannot be guilty of a conspiracy, but here again it is quibbling with words. What is a conspiracy but an offence against the law on the part of a number of persons; and the customs that were referred to by the Min-ister of Justice are making a "corner" by a single individual, where the law is against that. That is

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. And he would be a conspirator by joining with these other parties in making a combination.

Mr. DAVIN. Certainly he would. I contend that the various positions taken by my hon. friends on the Opposition cannot be sustained, and I am surprised that two hon, gentlemen of such distinction in this House as the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the distinguished leader of the Opposition should be deceived by phrases as they have been in this debate. I say they have been deceived by phrases, and my hon. friend (Mr. Barron), the budding hope of the party behind these hon. gentlemen, has also been deceived by phrases. However, I merely rose to say that, at a glance, the amending Bill of the hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is a great improvement in the law; and for once, and only once-and I have no doubt it will never occur again as it has never occurred in the past—for once the vast historical knowledge of my hon. friend for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has been at fault.

Mr. BARRON. I am sure it will be conceded by everyone in this House that the object of everyone is to put down combines; and, of course, with that object in view we are anxious to make that law as effective as possible. It is because we on this side of the House—I am speaking for myself—have thought that this Bill is not effective that we have raised the objections which have been raised. have had perhaps some reason for concluding that the hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) was not as desirous of reaching the root of the evil as he professed to be, because a session or two ago, when this matter was before us, we then pointed out objections to this Bill as it was then introduced. He did not choose to accept the suggestions that came from this side of the House, and the result has been that the amendment made in the Senate has rendered the Act wholly inefficacious. Tonight we point out again that his Bill as proposed is an absolute nullity. Now, the Minister of Justice, for whom, of course, I have the greatest possible respect, finds fault with the remarks I made a few moments ago, when I stated that a judge or a magistrate, or any judicial officer trying a case of this kind, would have, first of all, to ask himself the question: What is an unlawful combination? The Minister says that he can easily ascertain that by looking at the common law, because there is and always has been a common law against unlawful combinations. Then, if there has always been a common law, why not leave it as before, because this Act, in effect, according to his own statement, is only crystallizing into a statute what has been the common law. appeal to hon. members in this House to adopt a little common sense in looking at the matter before us. What does this Act say? It says:

"Every person who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship, steamboat or transportation company, who refully to do certain things......" unlawfully, to do certain things-word "unlawfully;" for, whosoever combines together to unduly do a thing, these people shall be guilty of a misdemeanour. A judicial officer, trying a case, would then have no difficulty, unless the difficulty in finding out what should be the construction of "unduly." He could find that they were "unduly" combined together, and, if they were so "unduly" combined, it would bring about the ends aimed at by the statutes. These persons doing these things "unduly" shall be guilty of a misdemeanour and are liable to penalties; but, when you leave in the word "unlawfully," the question at once arises in the mind of the judge: What is an "unlawful" doing under this Act? The Minister says that all the judge has got to do is to consult the common law of the land, and there he would find what was an unlawful combination. If the common law of the land is against unlawful combinations, why has any other law been introduced? It is said the common law has been proved to be inefficient for the purpose, and so you want to introduce a statute, and I am glad to have a statute introduced; but in introducing a statute why not introduce one that will have some effect. Do not introduce a statute which will clearly be ineffective, and be of no good whatever in aiming at the evils. If you leave this word "unlawfully in it will be ineffectual. I say, strike out the word "unlawfully," and leave in the word "unduly," and then you will have an effective statute. Why not say "whoever combines tostatute. gether to unduly prevent or lessen competition, &c., shall be guilty of a misdemeanour." If you leave the word "unlawfully" in, and strike out "unduly," then I say, with all respect to the Minister of Justice, you leave the Act as it was before, and as it has been under the common law of the land, as the Minister of Justice intimated when he said "hear, hear" to my remarks a few moments ago. If you do not take out the word "unlawfully" and leave the word "unduly" in the Act it will be no good whatever. We therefore think, we have reason to say, that the hon. n. or open for West York (Mr. Wallace) does not show that desire which would lead us to believe that he is sincere in aiming at the destruction of these combines. He can only have that desire if he adopts the suggestion made from some members on this side of the House, to take out the word "unlawfully" and leave the word "unduly" in the statute.

By leaving the word "unlawfully" in the Act it does not do any good at all. What you want to do is to leave that word out, and say:

"Every person who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person or with any railway, steamship, steamboat or transportation company, to unduly," &c.

When they combine to "unduly" do a thing, then these persons are so combined to unduly do it.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not intend to reply to the statements made by the hon, member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), as to the motive with which I introduced this Bill into Parliament; but, Sir, I do not think it would be very hard to distinguish the motives which actuated that hon. gentleman in his attack upon me when he was afraid to attack You will always find some half-lawyer the Bill. sort of argument introduced against a Bill by members of this House who dare not attack the Bill itself, and who want to attack the promoter of the Bill; and that is the case with the hon. member for West Lambton. He will pose as a promoter of this Bill when he goes back to his constituency, and will be able to boast that he only opposed the With reference to the statement that author of it. I knew it would be a dead letter, how could I know that? The Bill, as it stands on the Statute book, is Leave the word "unduly" in, but take out the not the Bill which I introduced, or the Bill which passed this House almost unanimously; but it is the Bill as it was changed by the Senate, and for which I assume no responsibility whatever. The Bill which was passed by this Parliament, and for which this Parliament assumed the full responsibility, has not yet had an opportunity to be tested. Now, the hon, member for Bothwell stated that there were no combinations in England. A good many have been mentioned already. Mr. Blaine, the Republican leader of the United States, when he came back from England in 1888, said that England was literally plastered with trusts and com-The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has mentioned the English combination on cotton We all know that a couple of years ago, when this combination began operations in this country, competition ceased, the thread had to be bought from one man, and the price advanced in one day 33½ per cent. Another English combination was the copper combination, the most gigantic in the world, with the exception, perhaps, of the Standard Oil Company. It is true that it has broken down, as combinations will sometimes break down. It is said that of thirty-six articles sold in this country by the wholesale grocers there are more than twenty in which combinations exist; and these are in English goods only, and the English manufacturers set the prices at which their customers in this country must sell. Hon. gentlemen say: abolish or diminish the duties and then the combinations will cease. Well, Sir, what was the most prominent result of the investigations made by the Committee of the House of Commons? It was this: The Parliament of Canada abolished the duty on anthracite coal; and yet after that coal came free into Canada the most indefensible combination which was examined by that Committee was the combination in anthra-The abolition of the duty had the cite coal. opposite effect from what was intended. Therefore, the arguments of these hon. gentlemen fall to It may be that there are cases where the abolition of the duty will operate; but that is not a rule of universal application. The wholesale grocers are not manufacturers, and there is no duty which gives them a protection in their business; yet they have formed a combination in many articles in conjunction with the manufacturers in England and elsewhere, by which prices are raised to the consumers in this country. Therefore, the abolition of the duties in these cases would not effect one particle of reduction in the prices nor break down the combinations. Now, the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) was defending the salt men the other night; but he admitted, if I heard him aright, that they took about $70,000 needlessly from the people of this country, and he justified their combination for this reason. He stated that the salt men of Huron say: If you will reduce the duty on fuel we will agree to have the salt duty abolished altogether, and have free trade in salt. Now, Sir, what is the duty on fuel to which the hon, gentleman refers? Cordwood was used in making salt the last time I was up there, and I am sure there is no duty on cordwood to interfere with the operations of the salt manufacturers. But suppose they use coal wholly, as I am told they do, the coal which they use is coal dust. Anthracite coal dust is altogether free of duty, and bituminous coal dust pays a duty of 20 per cent.; but as this sells as low as 10 cents per ton at the place of pro-

Mr. WALLACE.

2½ cents per ton, so that it is pretty nearly free. I think the hon. Minister of Finance might easily remove that 2 cents per ton, and make it free altogether; but that is the only duty that the salt men can pay on their fuel; and yet the hon. member for South Huron says, that if you give them their fuel free of duty they will consent to the duty being taken off salt.

Mr. McMILLAN. What I stated was, that if the duty were taken off fuel, off the plates out of which they made their pans, and off nuts, bolts and pipes, then they would be perfectly willing to have the duty taken off salt, and they could sell it at 60 cents a barrel.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not hear the hon. gentleman to-night speak of pipes and plates, but he made that statement the other night. But then the pipes and plates are not renewed every year, or perhaps for half-a-dozen years; we know that they last a long time; and boilers and boiler plates are as cheap in Canada as in the United States; so that they have no grievance in this respect. Now, the hon. member for Bothwell doubted if it was wise to adopt this kind of legislation. I inferred from his remarks that he favoured no restrictions of any kind upon manufacturers, but was willing that they should form as many combinations as they please. United States, to which hon, gentlemen opposite appear very anxious we should join our fortunes, are awakening to the enormity of these combinations, and none too soon, because there they have attained to greater strength and power than in But the authorities there having passed Canada. legislation to put down combinations, the proper authorities are taking active steps to enforce that legislation. Let me read an article to show what is being done on this subject:

"Washington, 14th July.—The Attorney General is bent on enforcing to the utmost the law against trusts enacted by the last Congress. Assistant Attorney General Maury is busily engaged in formulating instructions which will be forwarded to all officers of the department in every part of the country. These instructions are comprehensive in nature and direct a stringent execution of the law. United States officers will be requested to forward at once to the department information in regard to any form of trust or combination which can be suspected of falling under the provisions of the Sherman Act, and the Act covers all combinations of any kind organized to restrain trade among the several states or with other countries. In every case where civil process is found insufficient the criminal penalties of the law will be fully imposed."

The Attorney General of the United States does not require the urging that he requires in Ontario. I think we can fairly call upon the Attorney General of the various provinces to enforce this law. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) asked why did I not become an informer. My hon. friend beside me says it is because I am not a Grit. Well, I do not think it is necessary for a private individual to undertake the responsibility and trouble of prosecuting in a matter which concerns the interests of the whole people, because that would involve a large expense, which the state, and not the individual, should be called upon to undertake. I think we can fairly call upon the Attorney General of the various provinces to enforce the law, whether we get this amendment passed through the Senate or not, because I believe the law, as it stands duction the duty would amount to only 2 cents or now, would prove effective against evil-doers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How can the Attorney General do that, if no complaint or information be laid before him?

Mr. WALLACE. I can point outmany instances where the Attorney General has instructed officials to lay the information and prosecute.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Without any complaints being made?

Mr. WALLACE. We will make the complaint in a moment, if that is all that is required. We will take very good care to do that.

Mr. FRASER. I would not make any remarks on this subject, but the hon. gentleman who has just sat down spoke as if he had discovered some charge to fling against our Attorney General, when he mentioned that the Attorney General of the United States conducts the prosecution there. Does the hon. gentleman not know that it is the Attorney General of the United States, and not the Attorney General of any separate state, who takes action; and it is quite as easy for the Attorney General of the United States to carry out the laws of the central government as it would be for our Minister of Justice to carry out any law passed by this Parliament. The Attorney General of the United States carries out the laws passed by Congress himself, and sees that informations are laid, just as the Minister of Justice might do in the case of laws passed here. I wish to refer to this matter, to show that the Attorney General of a province is not called upon to lay the information; and I am sure the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), or some other gentleman on that side, would be the first to raise a hue and cry if an Attorney General of one of our provinces did anything to one of their darling children brought into existence by the National Policy. They would say: This miserable Grit of an Attorney General is trying to throttle the bantams we have brought That is not the duty of the into existence. Attorney General, but if the hon. member for West York or anybody else in Ontario or elsewhere will give such information as would satisfy the Attorney General that a combine exists he can very quickly have the law put into force. Surely it is not the duty of an Attorney General to go round the country in order to discover if No man can there is a combine in existence. expect that. I only mention this because there really appears to be a disposition on the part of the last speaker to lay the blame on the Attorneys General, and to make it appear, if the proposed amendment be passed, that, be the law perfect or imperfect, he has performed his duty, and the whole responsibility rests with the Attorney When a law is passed by this Parlia-General. ment it is the duty of every good citizen, as well as the Attorney General, to see that it is executed, and I am sure every good citizen, were the law effectual and operative, would see that the com-With reference bines are brought to their senses. to combines under protection and free trade, there is this distinction: In a free trade country they cannot exist as they can in a protective country when there is an abundance of material in the country.

Mr. WALLACE. You have just come in, I guess.

Mr. FRASER. No; I understand what I am talking about. I say you could not, in a free trade country, have a combine in salt, for example, if there was plenty of salt in the country.

Mr. BOWELL. Why?

Mr. FRASER, The argument may not be satisfactory to hon, gentlemen opposite, but it is an argument all the same. I agree with what the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) said, that you must strike at the root of the evil. Is it not a pitiful spectacle to see Parliament called on to legislate combines into existence and then called upon to destroy them? I thought there was a striking lesson in the remarks of the Minister of Finance the other day, when he said that, finding there was a combine in salt, he had to reduce the duty in order to free the people, and when he made the overt threat that if combines were attempted before the end of the year he would repeat the same thing. After giving protection which enabled the parties to form a combine, he has to take some means to get rid of the evil. I thought it much better to make it possible, by general legislation, to do away with these combines. I admit that the legislation introduced by the hon, gentleman is intended to be honest and strike at the evil, but in order to eradicate the evil we must do, as the hon. member for Charlotte has said, strike at its very source.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

Mr. MULOCK. I only wish to make one obser-I understood the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) to reproach the Senate for the amendments to the Bill as passed by this House. I am not going to enter into a discussion as to whether protection is or is not the parent of combines or trusts. I think there is no doubt on this point. If we deal with individual articles we can point to many combines that exist in Canada to-day which could not exist if Canada were a free trade The hon, member referred to iron. country. would like to know what would become of the combines in the manufacture of steel if the Canadians were free to purchase the foreign article? What would become of the combine in pigiron, for example? It would be impossible to have a combine in iron or steel, or the products of iron or steel, as long as they are manufactured in a free trade country, as they are to-day in England if they could be imported into Canada free. What would become of the combine in sugar which existed and still exists pro tanto?

Mr. WALLACE. That was a combination made by the wholesale grocers.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman is too astute and intelligent to think, for one moment, that there could have been a combine in sugar if it had been on the free list. He will not venture to say there could have been a combine for one week, had it been possible for sugar to come in free from Glasgow. He will not say the grocers could have controlled the combine.

Mr. WALLACE. How is it there are combines in other articles of groceries?

Mr. MULOCK. It is true that combines and trusts exist in free trade countries, but they are not so possible in these countries. The protection that hedges in a country renders combines possible, which would not be possible under other conditions. What, for instance, makes combines in rice possible? Rice is a necessary article of food and is used in large quantities in Canada. Does the hon, gentleman know that every poor man in this country who uses rice has to pay the combine price for his rice? Does he suppose that that would be possible if rice were admitted free? Rice is produced in various parts of the world, and if it could be imported into Canada free, as wheat is imported into England free, it would be as impossible to form a combine in rice in Canada as it is to form a combine in wheat in England. statement that combines exist because of the cussedness of the people themselves will not go down. The one reason which leaves combines possible is the policy of protection, which places the consumer at the mercy of a limited market. And now the Government, these combines and trusts being their own progeny, are endeavouring to commit infanticide. They have these children floating around, and they are trying to smother them. They are and they are trying to smother them. the legitimate offspring of illegitimate conditions.

Mr. BOWELL. May I ask the hon. gentleman if there is a combine in rice?

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Customs must know that there are very few places in this country where rice can be cleaned, and that no one can import cleaned rice without paying a duty.

Mr. BOWELL. I thought you said there was a duty on cleaned rice.

Mr. MULOCK. The consumer has either to pay the combine price in Canada on cleaned rice or import the rice, and pay the Customs duty plus the import price.

Mr. SPROULE. What about the mining trusts in the old country?

Mr. MULOCK. Binding twine is one of the items which the Minister of Agriculture—I was about to say-I mean the prospective Minister of Agriculture, thinks he is conferring a blessing in disguise upon the farmers in supporting a duty upon. He is so much in favour of a duty on binding twine that he has become entangled in its meshes.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say binding twine; I said mining trusts.

Mr. MULOCK. What does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. SPROULE. I mean persons in the old country who have combined in regard to mining.

Mr. MULOCK. You can discuss that question yourself. I wish to refer to the good nature that the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has shown in regard to the legislation which he proposes. As we all remember, he introduced a Bill in 1889 which was very materially altered in the It came back to the House in the last days of the session; and, as I wish to be fair to the hon. gentleman, I will say that he stated that he had to concur in the amendments that were made because it was so late when the Bill came back that it might not be passed if he did not. But he did not confine himself to accepting those amendments, under protest, as it were, but he went out of his way to a large extent and endorsed those amendments. He was warned at the time on the floor of the House that he was bringing the law into a worse state than it was before; that if his measure, | House resolved itself into Committee.

with the amendments of the Senate, became law, it would greatly interfere with the condition of the workingmen which they possessed under the protection given to them under the Trades Unions Act. Notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding the caution which was given to him then, he not only once but three times in committee, when we were dealing with that amendment, endorsed it.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon, gentleman has not yet stated what the amendment was.

Mr. MULOCK. I presume the hon. gentleman knows what his amendment was, but I will read his remarks. He said:

"As we are within one day of the end of the session, and as this Bill, if it were returned to the Senate, would no doubt be thrown over to another year. I have consented to the amendments made by the Senate, because I consider that still, with these changes made, which weaken its effects somewhat, it is an effective Bill, that it will be a terror to evil-doers, and it will show that the Parliament of Canada have put on record their condemnation of the illegal practices we have been legislating against. I, therefore, consent to the Bill being passed as amended by the Senate, and if after the experience of a year it should be proved that further amendments are necessary, and that it is desirable to restore the Bill to its original shape, then that should be done."

Here he declared that it was an effective Bill, and yet he comes here to-day and says it is not an effective Bill.

Mr. WALLACE. You do not carry out your former contention at all.

Mr. MULOCK. Keep your head covered. When it was shown that he was promoting a law that would produce embarrassment, later on he goes on to say:

"I believe this bill will prove very effective---"

It was only "effective" a little while before, but now he is more confident, and says it is "very effective."—

"I believe this Bill will prove very effective, just as the Abbott Act proved effective last year, although in many cases not put into operation. Those men who are acting illegally were warned that they were breaking the law and warned to desist, and this Bill would exactly have the same effect on the combinations."

What are we doing here to-night? This Bill was to have the same effect as the Abbott Act. combines were to desist, as the speculators in stocks had to desist. The bucket shops had to disappear under the Abbott Act and the combinations were to disappear under the Wallace Act.

Mr. WALLACE. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. MULOCK. He goes on to say:

"I have no doubt that the effect of the Bill will be to prevent combinations, and that it will prove beneficial throughout the country."

That was the position the hon, gentleman took, and now he is obliged to come and tell us that his Bill has proved ineffective, and he is endeavouring to assign other than the real reasons for that. may beat about the bush as much as you like, but you must come back to the real cause, which is, that under the policy of the Government you cannot prevent the ingenuity of man enabling him to overreach his fellow man if you put the weapons into his hands.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and

On section 1,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Bill, as it was introduced by the hon. gentleman, did not create any new offence, but was simply declaratory of the common law of the land, which provides that any parties to a combination which increases the price of a commodity are guilty of a mis-demeanour. The Senate intervened, and said: If you will declare the law of the land in this matter so that it may be applied to the conditions of modern life we think it fair and reasonable that you should modify that law, so that in its broadest and fullest sense it may place a limit to any impro-per exercise of that combination, and therefore they said: We will only punish a man when he combines unduly or unreasonably to raise the And now you want to strike out that, and say that you want to punish a man if he combines with another reasonably to raise the price. If that is the hon. gentleman's object he is doing a most unjust and unfair thing. The law now says, as amended by the Senate, that a combination unreasonably to raise the price shall be punishable; but he says: I am going to punish you if you combine to raise it reasonably. I say, therefore, that the hon. gentleman is not, in my humble opinion, taking a course calculated to further the real object he has in view. The real object he has in view, as declared here, was to punish combinations which had for their object the intent of withdrawing enormous and improper sums from the people's pockets, of forming corners and making the people pay double the price, to use his own expression. for an article which they ought to have for one-half the price. That is all right. The Senate Bill reached every case where the price was unreasonably increased; it reached every case where the price was unduly increased, and that reached what the hon. gentleman said his object was. But now he comes in and wants to strike this out, and to aim at honest and reasonable combinations, not having for their object the unreasonable raising of the price, but the reasonable raising of it. This law at first was framed to punish an unreasonable rise in the price, and the Senate struck that out, and have given notice to you that their object was to punish a combination having for its object an unreasonable increase of price. There seems to me to be a reasonable increase in the price if two men go into partnership and agree to raise the price so as to give them a fair profit on their trade; there is nothing wrong in that, morally or legally. If men combine with their neighbours to raise the price of sugar half a cent a pound, that may be a reasonable, a right and proper rise; but if they create a corner in the market, and raise the price four or five cents, or two cents, that law would enable you to get at them, because it would be an unreasonable rise. You are going to strike at the combinations of honest merchants having an honest and reasonable object in view. I consider the hon, gentleman is acting hastily and without reflection, but I believe this amendment to the Bill made in the Senate has been made with some reflection; it is calculated to do good, and I think the hon. gentleman will see himself, if he reasons this thing out, that if he wants only to punish an unreasonable or an undue rise in the price the Bill as it stands now achieves that object.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman's criticism of the Bill, every one of us must conclude, was perfectly sincere from the earnestness from which he delivered it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I made the same last year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman would not, I think, make that criticism if he reflected a little-upon another word of the Bill to which I must call his attention. The hon. gentleman's argument is this: that these words have been inserted by the Senate to prevent and punish that which is unlawful or which is immoral, and to exempt from the operations of this Bill lawful combinations, honest and fair combinations, which only reasonably enhance prices. Now, that is not the effect of the Senate amendment, and I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me when he reads the first paragraph of the first section, in which the word "unlawfully" appears as a condition, and that will still remain in the Act as a condition preliminary to the establisment of any offence whatever under the Act. So that if you strike out the word "unduly" and the word "unreasonbly, I say that under this Act a man who makes a lawful combination cannot be punished, a man who makes a reasonable combination cannot be punished, a man who makes a fair and an honest combination to get an honest price cannot be punished, because these things are not unlawful combinations. We all know that precedents on this subject are well established, some of them as late as two or three years ago, and that in every case, and especially in the most recent one of all, emanating from the House of Lords, the question whether the price was enhanced unduly and unreasonably entered into the consideration of the question as to whether it was an unlawful combination or not. And what class of cases is more familiar to lawyers than that class of cases in which it has been held that it is no violation of public policy when two partners dissolve business and one of them agrees with the other that he shall not carry on the same business in the same town.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Special exceptions to the

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; it is in complete harmony with the principle on the subject. These two men have entered into an agreement, the result of which may be that the price of the article which they were producing, whether it was a manufactured article or not, was raised in that locality, but it was for an honest purpose. The business was previously carried on by the two in an honest combination, and it was agreed when they dissolved that one of them should go out of business in that particular place; but inasmuch as it was done with an honest motive, and not merely for the purpose of enhancing the price, that has been held to be not against the public policy which puts down these combinations in restraint of trade—it is not an unlawful combination. The hon. gentleman's view seemed to be a moment ago that it would be punishable under this Act, unless the words "unduly" and "unreasonably" were left in the Act; but it will not, because that will still not be an unlawful combination; so that the hon gentleman will see, I think, and will admit on reflection, that the word "unlawfully" will still leave this Act declaratory as a part of the common law. In that sense it is a very great question whether the insertion of the words "unduly" and "unreasonably" make any difference in that regard. Those who have undertaken to administer the law have told me, or those who desire its execution have declared from time to time, that the multiplication of these words upon the Statute-book has led to confusion in the interpretation of the Act; and I believe they have had legal opinions on the subject to the effect that it is not sufficient in a prosecution under the Act is establish that a combination was distinetly unlawful at common law, but that in addition the burden of proof lies upon the prosecutor to show that the price has been unduly and unreasonably enhanced thereby. Let us leave the offence as it is stated at common law. Let us only declare what penalties shall attach to the common law offence, and if we do that we omit these words in the Bill, which may amount to nothing, but which are only surplusage and will not weaken the Act by their removal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Those hon, gentlemen who did me the honour to listen to my argument will remember that I prefaced it with the remark that this Bill was not intended to create any new offence whatever. It was alleged to be a Bill declaratory of the common law, and while it declared what the common law was, it did it using the words "whoever unlawfully." Therefore, the hon, gentleman gave away his whole argument when he admitted that while stating what the common law was it said "whoever unlawfully."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I said the Bill declared what penalties should be attached to the common law offence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I remember that, in previous discussions, the hon. gentleman argued as a reason why the Bill should pass that it did not declare any new offence, that it was to be a legal bogey, that the law of conspiracy was not understood in modern days as other branches of the law were, and it was advisable, even while it did not declare any new offence, that there should be this formal declaration of the law. The hon. gentleman said it was necessary to use the word "unlawful." and, therefore, it was to be an unlawful combination respecting transportation that was to be a legal offence at common law. But, if there is a breach in the slightest particular the offence becomes that of a misdemeanour. The amendment of the Senate was that the mere limiting of transportation shall not be unlawful unless there is an unlawful conspiracy unduly to limit the facilities. There is no hon, gentleman but will believe in the common sense view taken by the Senate, and who would wish to punish a man for misdemeanour when the offence is of so small a degree as not to be worthy notice. Parliament wants to get at the real offenders, and not at offenders in a small degree in matters which affect the pockets of people in the transportation of goods from one place to another; and I, therefore, submit, with every respect, after thinking the matter over, that the Senate limitation upon this declaration of the common law is a fair and just limitation, and it is only when men offend by combining unduly or unreasonably to commit the offence to which it refers, or hamper transportation, that they should be punished. I am with the Senate when they so define the law, done. Sir John Thompson.

and hon, gentlemen opposite are making a mistake when they take out these words and leave the bare, bald statement that the limitation of transportation or hampering it in any degree constitutes a misdemeanour.

Mr. BARRON. Do I understand the Minister of Justice to say that the effect of the Bill is no more than the enacting of an Act stating what the common law is, except adding penalties?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; the Bill is not so elaborate as to define what the common law is; but it defines what penalties attach to common law offences.

Bill reported.

CANADA TEMPERANCE AMENDMENT ACT.

Order for second reading of Bill (No. 34) to amend the Canada Temperance Act, 1888, read.

Mr. FLINT. If the House is not going to adjourn, I will ask for the consideration of this Bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Adjourn.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 21st July, 1891.

IRON BOUNTIES.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to enquire of the Government whether a return of the persons to whom the iron bounty of last year was paid, together with the other information prescribed by the statute, has been laid on the Table of the House this session? To the best of my recollection, the statute requires that this should be done within fifteen days of the meeting of Parliament. I do not think it has been done this year, and I do not remember whether it was done last year or the year before. If it has not been done, and the statute has not been repealed, of course it ought to be complied with, and it ought to be complied with as well for the past years as this year. The statute passed in 1883 contained an express provision that within fifteen days after Parliament met, the names of persons to whom these iron bounties were paid, together with other information, should be laid on the Table of Parliament. doubt very much whether it has been attended to regularly; I do not know whether it has been attended to at all.

Mr. FOSTER. As the hon, gentleman has called my attention to it, I will make enquiry and see. I do not recollect having taken charge of it any year. If the proper officer has not put it down I have no cognizance of it, and it may not have been done. I will see that it is done, if it has not been done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the statute of 1883 the hon. Minister will see the fact set out—46 Victoria, chapter 14—and I think that is still in force. I am not aware that it was repealed. I would ask the Minister in the first place, then, to bring down in accordance with the law the returns for 1890, and if the returns for previous years have not been brought down—and I rather think they have not—I presume he will consider this sufficient information to see that the necessary returns are brought down for each of these years.

Mr. FOSTER. I will bring them all down; I will bring all down that can be obtained.

ENQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I moved for a return in the earlier part of the session in reference to the late election. When will it be brought down?

Mr. FOSTER. Was that a general return of the late election?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The Secretary of State will be in the Chamber in a moment and he will answer.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I also moved for a return in reference to the expenditure of public money by the Public Works Department, in the different constituencies, since Confederation. When will that be brought down?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I enquired about these returns about two or three days ago, and the deputy of my department stated they were being prepared. As soon as ready I will bring them down.

Mr. GERMAN. I would ask the acting Minister of Railways and Canals when the return will be brought down showing the number of extra men employed on the Welland Canal, which return was moved for early in the session.

Mr. BOWELL. When the hon. gentleman called the attention of the House to it a few days ago I wrote a note immediately to the department to ask whether the return was prepared, and I have not yet been informed. The chief engineer will be here very shortly on some other business, and I will make the enquiry. I will see that it is brought down at the earliest possible moment.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster: "That the resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means on Tuesday, the 23rd ultimo, be read a second time;" and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment thereto.

Mr. HYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure, Sir, that the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) is deserving of congratulations, not only from his own side of the House but from this side of the House as well, for the very clear and concise manner in which he brought his arguments before the House; and if at times he did impart the impression that he was pleading the case of a single client, rather than speaking from the broad platform of a member of this Parliament, I am sure that the particular industry which he so eloquently pleaded for has no reason to be ashamed of its champion. I am free to confess, Mr. Speaker, that, so far as I myself am personally concerned, I do feel that if there is an interest in Canada which is entitled to protection, so long as protection is continued in this country, I think the oil industry has a peculiar and special claim to a mite of protection. But, Sir, if we are to consider the broad question, and if we are to consider that industry simply as a component part of the whole, I do not hesitate for one moment to say that I would not permit it to stand in the way The hon. member for of an extension of trade. East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) was very eloquent with regard to the advantages that protection has brought the oil industry, but he forgot to tell the House the cost to the country of that protection. I submit that in an argument of that kind it would have been better, first of all, to have told the House what the cost was, and afterwards to have told us what the benefits were. The hon, gentleman has supplied the argument in regard to the benefits, and if you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to supply the argument in regard to the cost. In the first place, I find, Sir, that in the year 1890 we imported from the United States coal oil to the amount of 5,073,-000 gallons, valued at $515,421, upon which this country paid $365,295 duty. The value of the oil barrels was $201,139, the duty upon which was $49,829, or a total in duty paid on oil imported from the United States of $415,124. Now, Sir, in addition to this we have to take into account the extra cost which the duty compelled the consumer to pay to the Canadian refiner for their oil. We find that the consumption of refined oil in Canada was, in round numbers, about 10,060,000 gallons, and let us see how much extra this cost on account of the duty. In the first place, I have made the calculation on the average cost per gallon of the American oil imported in 1890 in the market in which it was purchased. I find that out of the total of 5,073,000 gallons imported, and valued at $515,421, 521,925 gallons of that amount were imported into Manitoba, British Columbia and the North-West Territories. If we deduct this latter quantity from the total—and I submit, Sir, that it is only fair that this should be deducted, because I find that the cost of the oil imported into these provinces amounted to 17:70 cents per gallon, while the cost of the whole amount imported, deducting importations into those provinces, was only 9:30 cents per gallon in the market in which it was purchased—we find that the total amount of oil brought into the other provinces was 4,551,583 gallons, at a cost of $423,060, or 9:30 cents a gallon in the market in which that oil was purchased. Now, having found the value of the Canadian oil, and the value of the American oil in the market in which it was purchased, we have to take one common point where we are to compare the value of the two. I have chosen Montreal as a central point. We have the oil manufactured at Petrolia—and I have taken it at the hon. gentleman's own figure, 161 cents a gallon in Petrolia; and I put the cost of the American oil, that imported in 1890, at 9.30 cents a gallon—plus, in both cases, the freight from the point where the oil was pur-I have taken the city of Cleveland as being a fair relative shipping point for the American oil; and a glance at the map will show that the city of Cleveland is very little further from Montreal than are the oil regions of Canada; and, besides, of having water as well as rail communication. I have allowed on the cost of the American oil 2 cents a gallon for inspection, and barrel. This calculation makes a difference in the cost of 5:20 cents on every imperial gallon of oil consumed in Canada, plus the difference in the value of the American oil. the hon, gentleman says that Canadian oil is quite as good in value and quality as the American oil. I do not desire to take exception to that statement; but I would simply point out the fact that in the city of Toronto American oil brings on the average 25 cents a gallon, while the Canadian water-white is quoted at 20 cents a gallon. But taking 5.20 cents as the difference in the cost, and multiplying that by the 10,000,000 gallons which we consume, that amounts to $520,-000, which, added to duty paid on imported oil of $415,124, proves that it costs this country each year $935,125 to maintain the oil industry; and I submit that these figures, if anything, are rather under than over the mark. Now let us look at the benefit which we derive from this in-I have endeavoured to show fairly what the cost of it is, and let us suppose that the hon. member for East Lambton has been as fair in showing the benefit. Just here let me remark that whenever hon. gentlemen opposite make extravagant and unreliable statements, and when we on this side endeavour to correct those statements, they immediately endeavour to fasten on us the stigma of trying to decry the interests of this country. So far as I am concerned, I feel it to be my duty to take exception to some of the statements of the hon, member for East Lambton, and I am not to be deterred from doing so by any insinuations of that kind thrown across the House. I find that the hon. gentleman made the following somewhat remarkable statements:-

"But if you estimate the 4,000 wells in existence to-day at $500 each, that will amount to $2,000,000; put the machinery at $500,000, the land—100 acres at, say $100 per acre—$10,000,000"—

-"and the abandoned wells at $2,500,000. That would make altogether about $15,000,000."

This statement is so utterly extravagant that I do not think it necessary to go into any argument to disprove it. Speaking in regard to the revenue, the hon, gentleman said:

"Now, Sir, what revenue this oil industry returns to that district in a year? The total net proceeds of the oil refined in the country are $7,500 a day—that is, from the sale of refined oil and its different products."

Now, the hon. gentleman had stated before that only 10,000,000 gallons of oil were refined in this country. He told us that the price was about 12½ cents at Petrolia, but that there was a better quality of oil that was worth 16 cents. If we put 7,500,000 at 12½ cents and 2,500,000 at 16 cents this would give us a revenue of $3,450 a day, or only about one-half of what the hon. gentleman states. But it is only fair to take into account, in addition, a small quantity of crude oil which is sold for other than refining purposes, parafine, and refuse to make up the other half, or $3,850; but this would not make up one-third, or even one-fourth of that sum. The hon. gentleman goes on further to say: barrels of oil. There are several refineries, representing a capital of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. Then there are large cooper shops that make the barrels. There are chemical works in the city of London making acids for the purpose of refining oil of petroleum and employing their component of hands. There are two large manufactories at Petrolia for manufacturing nitro-glycerine, which give employment to a large number of hands. There are also boiler works established there, amongst the largest in the Dominion, and these works have been busy for years past, not only supplying Petrolia, but shipping carloads of boilers to Australia itself. They have shipped carloads of machinery to Australia, to Gallicia, to Italy, and foreign countries. There are large machine shops there."

"In the town of Petrolia a large warehouse company has established tanks to carry the surplus oil from time to time, which have a capacity for storing half a million Mr. HYMAN.

Now, I would like to ask any hon. member of this House who is not acquainted with the facts what size he presumes the city to be in which all these machine shops are situated and all this capital invested. When I tell you that nine-tenths of the oil-refining interests of this country are confined to the town of Petrolia and the village of Oil Springs; and when I tell you that in the town of Petrolia, according to the census of 1888—the last that I can find—the population was only 3,497, and the total assessment, in which all these millions must be included, was only $988,150; and when I tell you further that the total population of the village of Oil Springs in 1888 was only 918, and the assessment $231,233, you will see how much ground there is for the hon. gentleman's statement. The hon. gentleman also makes the statement that there are 5,000 hands employed in manufacturing oil and the necessary articles in conjunction there-Now, Sir, outside of Petrolia and Oil Springs I venture to say that there are not 300 men * so employed, and I also venture to say that it will be found somewhat difficult, in the present total population of these two places, amounting, at the very most, to 6,000 people, to account for the 4,700 men who, the hon. gentleman says, are employed in the oil industry. It seems to me that the proportion is too great. say there are not 2,000 men so employed; I say that there are not 1,500; and I doubt very much if there are 1,000 all told employed in the way the hon. gentleman states. But if we assume that 1,000 hon. gentleman states. men are employed in these industries, and take the cost of the oil, as I have shown it to be, at something over $900,000, the conclusion at which we must come is that the people of this country could afford to pay every man, woman and child employed in that industry $500 a year, and at the same time be able to keep in their pockets nearly as much money Now, Sir, a few words in regard to the comparisons of prices made by the hon. gentleman. He says:

"The hon, member for Huron—although I desire to give him credit for having given the prices very fairly—would find in the Globe any day this week the following prices in Canada. Refined oil, 12½ to 13 cents f.o.b., 2 per cent. off for cash; American oil, 25 cents per gallon at Toronto, wholesale; water-white, photogene, the best quality of American oil, 27 cents."

Now, Sir, I submit that, according to this statement of the hon. gentleman, any proper comparison would have to be made between 12½ cents for Canadian oil and 25 cents for American oil. I took the trouble to turn up the quotations in the Toronto Globe of Thursday morning, the last quotations received before the hon. gentleman addressed the House, and I find the oil at Toronto quoted 16 to 17 cents, and not 12½ cents, as stated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. The words "at Petrolia" are left out of my remarks in the Hansard.

Mr. HYMAN. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should have the words "at Petrolia" put in the Hansard.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I have done so.

Mr. HYMAN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, but I did not know of the correction. We will proceed to take the next stage, in which he says:

"These quotations from the Toronto Globe are nearly correct, but they are rather under the mark. If you take 25 cents per gallon as the price in Toronto, and deduct from it the whole duty, 71-5 cents, it will be found that the merchants would charge 171-5 cents ex-duty. Photogene, which is equal to our oil, setting at 16 or 16½ cents, would be sold at 194-5 cents ex-duty."

I see there is a mistake of # of a cent, but I presume that is not material. It is very easy to see that the hon, gentleman is not used to importing goods, for if he were he would not, when endeavouring to figure up the cost of the goods and the cost of the duty on those goods, start at the wrong end, but would figure up on an entirely different principle. I have taken the trouble to figure it out in order to show this House what the cost of the duty of 71 cents per gallon is by the time the oil reaches the I have taken, for the purposes of comparison, the average cost of the American oil which this country imported in 1890, and which I have shown the House to be 9.30 cents per gallon. we add to that 7½ cents per gallon of duty, that makes a total of 16.50. Now, I have added the importer's profit of 15 per cent., and I do not think any hon. gentleman in this House will say that goods can be handled at less profit. That would make the cost to the retailer of 21.27. Then I have given the retailer a profit of 20 per cent., which is not a high mark, which would make the cost to the consumer 25.52. Let us see exactly, under the same conditions as to freight and profit, what that oil would cost, provided we had reciprocity, taking 9:30 as the first cost in the Ameri-I add no duty, and add can market. same freight, 2 cents per gallon, and the importer's profit of 15 per cent., which brings cost to the retailer at 13 cents, and then add the retailer's profit of 20 per cent., which makes the cost to the consumer 15.60. Therefore, we find that this duty of 7½ cents which is paid in the first place by the importer, when the importer's profit and the retailer's profit is added, costs the consumer, apart from the value of the oil itself, 9.92 per gallon. That is the extra charge on the consumer which the duty amounts to; and I will tell the hon. gentleman that if, in the future, he desires to figure backwards instead of forward, in a matter of this kind, he will have to deduct from the price to the consumer 9.92, or the price to the retailer, 8.27, if he wishes to get at the cost of the oil. This statement is so interesting that I have prepared one, showing the working of the same principle in ad valorem instead of specific duty; and I have taken an average duty of 30 per cent. We find that an article which would cost $1 in the United States, if we add 30 per cent. duty, would cost $1.30 here duty paid. Then the 15 per cent. importer's profit makes the cost $1.50, and the 20 per cent. retailer's profit brings the cost to the consumer at $1.80. If we take the cost under reciprocity, we will find that while we would pay the dollar, we would have no duty to pay, and the 15 per cent. importer's profit would make the cost $1.15, and the 20 per cent. retailer's profit would bring the cost to $1.30 to the consumer. So that an article upon which the country received a duty of 30 per cent. would, by the time it reached the consumer, have cost him 42 per cent. I have here an invoice sent me by a wholesale firm, in which the actual transaction has already taken place. goods were purchased in the market, they were sold to the retailer, and then to the consumer. The average duty paid by the importer was 30 per cent. ad valorem, but by the time those goods got into the hands of the consumer they cost the consumer. in the one case 50 per cent., and in the other case 55, and in a third case 60 per cent. on original cost of goods. A good deal has been said on the other side of the House with regard to differences existing on this side with reference to our policy. Now, in any broad, comprehensive policy there must be some differences of opinion amongst the different promoters thereof. Doubtless there are some on this side of the House in regard to our policy, and certainly differences exist on the other side with regard to theirs. But, Sir, I do think that the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), whom I see just entering the Chamber, must be accorded the palm in this particular. Surely he has reached the highest point of inconsistency, because he has succeeded not only in differing with almost every gentleman on the other side of the House, but in differing with himself. I find that in the speech which he delivered in the present debate he says, in the first place:

"It is of the very greatest importance to our farmers that, in the first place, we should retain control of our own markets. Our own markets are our most important and our most valuable markets at the present time."

There is no expression of anything but certainty here. The hon, gentleman is sure that our own are our most important markets. He then goes on to say:

"I admit that in deciding that question—(referring to the question of reciprocity)—there would be great diversity of opinion. If I may be allowed to express my individual opinion, I believe the balance of the advantage, if there were any, would be very small indeed in favour of the farmers of this country."

Now, the hon. gentleman is not very sure in regard to this, but he believes the advantage would be very small indeed in favour of our farmers. Discussing the effect of the McKinley Bill, the hon. gentleman then says:

"That additional protection is of no advantage to the farmers; it does not increase their prices in ordinary years; it does not tend in any way to develop the agricultural interests of the country."

He is quite sure here that protection is of no advantage to the American farmer. It does not increase their prices in ordinary years, and does not tend in any way to develop the agricultural interests of their country. Then he goes on to say:

"If we wish to give the farmers of this country the largest possible home market and the very best market which they can have, we can only do it by adopting and maintaining the protective policy."

And he winds up by saying:

"I beg to say to the hon, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) that I do not oppose, I never have been opposed, and the Government which I am supporting, I believe, have never been opposed to extending our trade relations with the United States. On the contrary, I am desirous, and I believe the Government is desirous, of seeing our trade extended to the very fullest possible extent."

In the first place, he points out the great importance of keeping our own markets; in the second place, he is not very sure whether any advantage will accrue to our farmers from reciprocity; in the third place, he is certain that protection does not help the farmers on the other side, but he is positive it does help the farmers on this side; and he ends practically by saying that he believes in reciprocity in natural products. And I desire to add, lest there might be some hon. gentleman here who might not thoroughly understand the policy of the hon, member for West-moreland (Mr. Wood), that previously in his speech he declared that in principle he was a free trader. In the course of the address which the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) made to the House the other day—one which I am sure we all enjoyed very much—he read the following somewhat remarkable document:

"To the Indians:—The Queen has always loved her dear, loyal subjects, the Indians. She wants them to be good men and women, and she wants them to live on the land that they have, and she expects in a little while, if her Great Chief, John A., gets into Government again, to be very kind to the Indians, and to make them very happy. She wants them to go and vote, and to all vote for Doctor Montague, who is the Queen's agent. He is their friend, and by voting for him every one of the Indians will please Queen Victoria."

The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) objected to this statement, and, rising to a point of order, he said:

"Mr. Speaker, I think I am in order. It is a personal explanation. I do not object to the hon. gentleman having his joke; I am sure we all enjoy his pleasant banter across this chamber."

Later on, he says:

"I rise to a point of order. I have already stated that I did not pen that circular. I have stated that it is a matter of record before the courts that I had nothing to do with it. After I made that statement, the hon, gentleman said that I did draw it up. I must ask him to withdraw that."

Now, I have taken occasion to follow the course of the hon. gentleman, and I have gone down the halls of memory and have extracted certain evidence which the hon. gentleman gave before a certain court, and I find in his own evidence the following occurred:—

"Dr. Montague, sworn: I recognize circular; think I saw it the first time the day before the elections, and can almost swear it was the first time I saw it."

He is not so very sure, but he can almost swear that was the first time he saw it. He goes on:

"It was on the Sunday before the polling day that circular was written."

Surely the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) must have had this in his mind when he introduced his Bill in reference to Sunday observance. Then the hon, gentleman goes on to state under oath:

"I wrote part of the circular; I do not think I wrote more than one-half of it. I was aware on election day that they were distributed."

I submit that this is conclusive proof that the hon. member had nothing to do with it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would ask the hon. gentleman to pursue the evidence still further, and to read the finding of the court on the question.

Mr. HYMAN. I have not the finding of the court here, but I have the sworn evidence given by the hon. gentleman before the court. Of course, if the hon. gentleman says that what he swore abour to be employed on the one hand while count Mr. Hyman.

there was wrong, I will apologize. He goes on to say:

"I must have got the circular on Monday morning. I gave a few away to show what nonsense they were."

Then we have the statement of Mr. R. W. Muchmore, and he says:

"The doctor wrote it; I dictated it."

What a fund of humour the hon, gentleman must have had in those days, when he was writing and distributing circulars just to show what nonsense there was in them. In later years his bump of humour seems to have given away to his bump of imagination. In fact, I only know of one other who has as great a bump of imagination.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That question was investigated in connection with the contested election when I was the respondent in 1887. The whole question came before His Lordship Chancellor boyd, and so far from any condemnation being passed upon me in relation to that matter, I received the compliments of the court for my course in connection with it.

Mr. HYMAN. I am sure that, after the denia of the hon. gentleman in the House that he wrote the circular and his sworn testimony in court, the finding of the court has nothing to do with the question. He gave his word in this House that he did not write the circular, and I bring forward his own sworn evidence that he did write at least a part of the circular.

Mr MONTAGUE. Give the balance of the evidence.

Mr. HYMAN. If he can draw any consolation from having made one statement in this House and another in the courts, he is welcome to it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Give the balance of the evidence.

Mr. HYMAN. In the few remarks which I still desire to make I would like to consider the fiscal policy of the Government almost entirely in its relation to manufactures. Before we fully consider the protectionist policy of 1878 I would like to ask, what is protection and what is the proper principle on which it should be applied? As I understand it, protection is simply a tax and a burden of taxation undertaken by the many for the certain and sure benefit of the few, with a possibility that it may indirectly be for the benefit of the many. If this is conceded, and if in the one case the tax is actual, and in the other case the benefit is only possible, should not the greatest care be taken in the application of the principle? I would ask, as an illustration, if you, Mr. Speaker, happened to be the mayor of this fair city of Ottawa, would you not, with that acute business ability and that vigil-ance for which you are so noted, and which, if I may be permitted to digress, in addition to your courtesy and amiability of temper and impartiality, have rendered our stay in this House so pleasant during this session, if a manufacturer should come to you desiring to establish a manufactory in this city, and should ask that you should pay him a certain bonus, would you not consider that, while the bonus was certain, the benefits to be derived from the manufactory were uncertain, and would you not go into the question of the machinery to be used and the capital and ing up the cost on the other hand, remembering the certainty of the cost and the uncertainty of the benefit? I admit that, if this policy, from the time of its adoption in 1878, had been carefully followed out on the principles then enunciated, if the principles of protection had been applied only where the benefits were certain and the cost distinctly and decidedly within the benefits, we would not have the state of affairs we now have; we would not have the monopoly in sugar, the monopoly in cotton, and the other monopolies which bear so hard upon the consumer. It is only at this late date that the Government have thought of proceeding upon this principle. It appears to me-and I am open to correction if I am wrongthat this is the first time since the inception of the National Policy in 1878 that the Finance Minister has applied that principle to his policy. In his Budget speech he says:

"There is another article in which we have decided to make a change, and that is the article of salt, which is now at 10 cents and 15 cents per 100 pounds, and which we propose to reduce one-half, making it 5 cents and 7½ cents. This we have been impelled to do because we considered that, owing to the protection which was given and certain combinations which have been entered into, it is a wise and prudent thing for us to meet that state of things by reducing the duty one-half."

If I am not in error, this is the first time in thirteen years that the Government have attempted to apply this principle. Will the Minister take us into his confidence, and will he tell us if he intends to proceed upon that policy in the future? he tell us the particular reasons that this industry was selected, against which were to be directed all the forces of the Government, so far as protection applied? What were the principles upon which this industry was selected? Was it because in this applied? case the benefits were the smallest and the costs were the greatest? It has been charged during this debate that the subscriptions made to the Conservative party campaign fund by some of these largely-protected manufacturers have been very numerous and very large, and that has not been denied. And so, in the absence of other information, we surely have a right to know if the Government have proceeded upon that principle in dealing with this case. We have a right to know whether the salt industry has not subscribed to the election expenses of the Government, and whether they have found that other sources of revenue from which subscriptions were derived are in danger of being closed, the Government have threatened to leave the monopolists to their fate if they do not continue their subscriptions. Now, let us consider for a moment the additional burden which the National Policy has imposed upon the country since its inception. It is to be remarked that all the arguments which have been used on the other side of the House are directed solely to show the advantages of the National Policy, and in no single instance that I can remember have those hon. gentlemen considered the cost of that policy. will endeavour, in part, to supply that deficiency in a table which I have prepared; and I have prepared it under the supposition that this country, under a prudent system of government, could have maintained since 1878 the same rate of taxation which was in force in that year. The rate of taxation in that year was 14 03 per cent. on the total importations entered for consumption. That was over 3 per cent. higher than the average of the is no great stretch of statesmanship to attain that four years of the administration of the hon. member for East York, and I have taken 1878 as being the highest of the whole four years:

	$	$	8
1879	12,929,540 14,138,849 18,500,785 21,708,837 23,172,308 20,164,963 19,133,558 19,448,123 22,469,705 22,209,641 23,784,523 240,14,908	11,271,927 10,083,690 12,853,108 15,804,644 17,276,123 15,177,740 14,410,215 13,974,257 14,821,211 14,429,448 15,387,184 15,821,011	1,667,613 4,055,159 5,647,677 5,9 4,193 5,896,185 4,987,223 4,723,343 5,473,866 7,648,494 7,780,193 8,397,339 8,193,897

This amounts to a total average per year of $5,864,-598, to which we must add the cost to the consumer of the goods manufactured in Canada caused by the increase in duty. Now, when we consider the arguments advanced in favour of continuing the National Policy we should also consider that, taking the last year as a basis, that policy cost this country between eight and nine million dollars. If we look at the effect of the policy upon our exports of manufactures we find that in 1878 we exported $4,127,000, and that was not the largest sum in any year reached under the administration of the hon. member for East York; in 1890 we exported $5,741,000, or an increase of $1,613,000. And, Mr. Speaker, if we analyze the exports for 1890 we find that the largest item which appears in the Trade and Navigation Returns is the item of household goods, amounting to $818,001. This item finds no place in the returns of 1878, and surely, for purposes of comparison, it is not an item that should remain there; so I have deducted it. There is also another item that seems very strangely to have found its way into the Returns, and that is the item of ice. Now, I do not understand that ice is exactly what may be considered a manufactured product of this country; if it is, we should expect to find supplies and machinery for its manufacture, and we should be able to find who is the proprietor of that indus-I am sure that if we did find the proprietor, whatever may have been his position in the past towards the political parties of this country, I think that, in the light of the events of the present day, we could confidently count upon his support on this side of the House. Now, if we deduct these two items from the total of the exportations of 1890 we find that the balance amounts to $4,676, 000, or only $584;384 greater than in 1878. Surely there is nothing here to prove that we have received, in that particular at least, any great benefits for the extra burdens which the people have had to Now, let us consider for a moment what is bear. the general effect of that policy as applied to our own market. A great deal has been said during the debate of the advantage and the desirability of retaining control of our own markets. Now, Mr. Speaker, if that is the only object to be desired it object; if that is what our manufacturing industries require, all you have to do is to make the tariff high enough to shut out all foreign trade. But what follows that? In the first place, we would find, and we have found, and we would find again, that all these industries which were in command of the market at the time the tariff was established would benefit very largely, outside competition being withdrawn, at least until such time as they had competition at home. You would find, in the second place, that the cupidity of capitalists would be aroused when they found these industries making more profit than the value of the money which they had invested would otherwise bring, and you would find other investors going into the same line of business. Then would come the overproduction, and, unfortunately, the Government having framed their tariff solely for the purpose of keepingour own market, they would have no safetyvalve for over-production, because we could not export anything, because we could not compete in foreign markets on account of the high tariff. Now, I submit to this House that that has been exactly the history of a very large number of industries in this Those who know the facts of the case know perfectly well that this has been the cause of combines: when the manufacturers get into the position I describe they combine, and the fittest survive. We know that has been the history of the sugar industry; we know that has been the history of the binding twine industry; we know that has been the history of the oil industry, of the rubber goods industry, of the agricultural implements industry, of the stove and tinware industry, and we know that it will be the history, if we continue this policy, of a great many other industries in the Dominion of The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in the amendment which he moved in this House divided it into two parts. The first states:

"That the situation of the country requires that the Government should forthwith reduce all duties on articles of prime necessity, and more particularly on those most generally consumed by artizans, miners, fishermen and the formers."

Some members on the other side of the House have gone so far in their arguments as to freely translate the words "forthwith reduce" to mean "free." But surely there is no license of debate which will permit so free a translation as that. Hon. gentlemen opposite complain that there is nothing definite in this, that they cannot find out what it means. Surely there is no difficulty in telling what this It seems to me it means that the time had gone past when the tariff should any longer be manipulated in the interests of the many. It means that we should not continue to keep the duties on cheap goods at so high a rate and the duties on dearer goods at so low a rate, comparatively speak-It means, on the one hand, that there should not be a duty on shirts of cotton, 50 per cent.; on the other hand, velveteens, 20 per cent.; socks and stockings, over 40 per cent.; against linen damask, 25 per cent.; winceys, 40 per cent.; against feathers, 25 per cent.; hoes and scythes, 50 per cent.; against mineral waters, 20 per cent.; spades, 43 per cent.; against precious stones, free and 10 per cent.; coal oil, over 70 per cent.; cheap wall paper, 60 per cent.; blankets, 50 per cent.; cheap tweeds, 50 per cent.; against doeskins, 30 per cent., and finer tweeds, 30 per cent. Mr. HYMAN.

Let us consider for a moment the effect on manufacturers, and in a general sense what they would have to fear providing the second part of the resolution became a matter of fact. In the general argument the Conservatives allege the fact that because American manufacturers have been long established, because they have larger establishments, our manufacturers would not be able to compete with them. I am quite willing to admit that they could not compete certainly so long as they manufacture a hundred different kind of cottons in a mill, so long as they manufacture three or four hundred kinds of shoes in a factory, and so long as they manufacture one hundred kinds of machinery in a factory. But there is no country on the face of the earth other than Canada in which manufacturing is carried on in this way, and sooner or later the consumer will demand that our manufacturers be placed in a position so that they at least can continue their trade and manufacture as cheap as their neighbours. I desire, for one, to see that change brought about while our tariff is at least lower than the American tariff, rather than it should be left until the tendency which we know prevails in the United States to reduce their tariff is carried into effect, and their tariff became lower than our tariff. While hon, gentlemen opposite, in their general arguments, argue in favour of protection and against reciprocity, when they come down from the general to the specific arguments they always demolish the chief argument that can be alleged against reciprocity. I have found in the course of the debate two special cases in which this is most clearly shown. The member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), in his speech, stated:

"The relative difference in values of granulated sugars made in New York and Montreal is 12½ cents per 100 lbs. If you will take these items into the calculation you will find that, instead of comparing as near as 4·19 per 100 lbs. in New York with 4·50 per 100 lbs. in Montreal, as he said, 4·38 in Montreal compares with 4·52½ in New York, showing a difference in favour of Montreal of 14½ cents per 100 lbs."

If I may be permitted to use the expression which peculiarly belongs to the hon. member for St. John, and if I may ask, what is the logical conclusion of this? surely it is not very hard to find. If we take Montreal and compare it with New York as a distributing point, I have no doubt that Montreal, so far as relates to a very large portion of the people on the other side of the line, is the better distributing point of the two; and I say that the logical conclusion must be, that, if the sugar manufacturers of our country can deliver their sugar at Montreal at 14½ cents cheaper than the sugar manufacturers on the other side can deliver sugar at New York, our manufacturers can, without doubt, not only retain control of their own markets, but, from the special facilities they possess, they can reach Chicago, and from that point the southern and western states, and also by water and rail the northern and north-western markets, and have no real reason to fear the adoption of our We had exactly the same argument from policy. another hon. gentleman. While the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) directed his general argument against reciprocity, when he came to the specific part of the argument he said:

"The hon. member who says 'no' does not know anything about it. No man can show an invoice for Canadian oil in which the barrel is charged extra. I have dealt in it for twenty-four years, and I never heard of such a case. The barrel costs about 3 cents a gallon, and if you add that to the 9 cents, that brings the cost of American oil up to

I may say that this is very unfair, for he does not credit the value of the barrel, which is about twothirds of the 3 cents-

"Then add the freight, which will be a cent or two, and you will find that the price of American oil is really higher than the price of Canadian oil, which costs from 11½ to 13½ cents per gallon.

That the price of American oil imported is higher than Canadian oil is the specific argument, and it affords a strong argument in favour of reciprocity. It must not be supposed that all, or nearly all, the manufacturers are opposed to reciprocity. the honour to represent in this House what may be termed a peculiarly manufacturing constituency, and in the election just passed we fought the battle fairly and squarely on the ground of reciprocity as opposed to the National Policy. I found that the manufacturers of the city were very largely divided in their opinions. There were those who, while they felt that after a time they could compete with American manufacturers, gave, as the main reason of their opposition, that a certain time must elapse between the abrogation of the National Policy and the time they could bring themselves into the manner of manufacturing that the Americans follow. But, in addition to that, there were a very large number of manufacturers who gave me their hearty support, feeling and believing that with the extended markets, with the raw material at the same price as the American manufacturers, with the same condition of market and the same size of market, they could compete, and I submit that, when the compete successfully. people of this country are giving a decision on this question, they should remember this fact, that while the manufacturers who desire protection say to the people: "You must continue paying taxes and continue paying tribute, that we may do as we are doing," those who desire reciprocity say: "We do not desire your taxes, give us an extended market and we are able and competent to increase our trade." The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) seriously complains that our policy is very indefinite; he asks for information in one breath, and in the next he answers it: He asks how we propose to arrange the tariff details, and how we propose to reconcile the difference in the American tariff on those articles on which we seek reciprocity and our own tariff; and he answers by saying that he presumes it will be arranged by a tribunal of fourteen in which the United States will have a representation of thirteen and we will have a representation of only one. Does the hon. gentleman forget that they on the other side of the House have a reciprocity scheme on their hands, too? Have the Government of the day taken the hon. gentleman into their confidence, and have they told him that that is the way in which they purpose making their arrangements? If they look they will find that if they bring about reciprocity in the articles which I understand they desire to; that is, in articles which are named in the schedule of the Treaty of 1854, they will find the following diffi-culties in the way. They will find that the Cana-dian duty on wheat is 15 cents per bushel, while the American duty is 25 cents; they will find that the Canadian duty on wheat flour is 75 cents per barrel, while the duty on the other side is 25 per cent.; that the duty on barley is 15 cents here and in buttermilk, and does it end in molasses?

30 cents per bushel in the United States; that the Canadian duty on horses is 20 per cent., and the United States duty 30 per cent. on horses up to $150 value; that the Canadian duty on bacon is 2 cents per pound, and the United States duty 5 cents; that our duty on slates is 80 cents a square and their duty 25 per cent.; that our duty on flax fibre is 2 cents and their duty 3 cents; and so on through the whole list. The last article which the hon. gentleman desired special information about, that of flax, is an article which is one of the scheduled articles in the Treaty of 1854. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will just say that when the time comes we are quite capable of arranging that question, but I further say, that we will not do as the hon, gentleman assumes the Government will do. We will not agree to any commission of thirteen Americans and only one Canadian; we will make a treaty one to one, and we will make a fair treaty to both countries. We will make an honourable treaty, or we will make no treaty at all. Now, Sir, the Government of this country took the responsibility of dissolving this House; and what did they give as a reason for the dissolution of the House? Why, Sir, they gave as the main reason for the dissolution of the House, that they desired a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, with modifications required by the altered circumstances of both countries. So, Sir, no matter what the hon, gentlemen may say on the other side of the House, both parties in this House are committed to reciprocity. The only possible difference, then, is as to the degree of reciprocity that the two parties are committed to. But, Sir, let me tell you, that whatever discrimination against England is in the reciprocity that we desire on this side of the House, that very amount of discrimination is in the reciprocity they desire on the other side of the House. Whatever of disloyalty there is in the reciprocity that we desire from this side of the House, there is the same measure of disloyalty in what they desire on the other side of the House; unless, Sir, they are prepared to lay down the principle that all the loyalty of this country is contained in the schedule of articles in the Treaty of 1854, and that all the disloyalty is contained in the articles outside of that treaty. And, Sir, if you lay down that principle what do you find? You find that while it may be lawful to sell the people of the United States a chicken, which is one of the articles included in the Treaty of 1854, we would be disloyal on this side of the House if we sold them a baby-carriage; while on that side of the House it would be loyal to sell them pop-corn, on this side of the House it would be disloyal to sell them a coffin; while there would be no discrimination in selling them a carrot, on that side of the House, there would be discrimination, if we on this side of the House sold them a tallow candle. While on the other side of the House there would be no disloyalty in selling them a pumpkin, on this side of the House there would be disloyalty if we sold them chewing-gum. Let me ask hon, gentlemen opposite, where does their discrimination start, and where does their discrimination end; where does their loyalty start, and where does their loyalty end? Does their loyalty start at a mule, which can be sold to the Americans under the Treaty of 1854, and does it end at a cake of soap, which we desire to sell? Does their discrimination start

Now, Sir, as regards the second part of the resolution, surely it is explicit enough, and there cannot be any mistake as to the meaning of its language. Are the Conservative party a unit in regard to their reciprocity scheme? If they considered that reciprocity scheme of sufficient importance before the election, to give it as the chief reason to warrant the dissolution of the House, why is it that we have not heard one single gentleman on the other side of the House stand up in his place and defend that reciprocity? It was of sufficient importance before the election to warrant the dissolution of the House; but, Sir, it is not of sufficient importance after the election to warrant one single word being said in its favour. Iask, Mr. Speaker, have the Conservative party met the point, and have they boldly faced the dilemma of their policy of reciprocity? I say, Sir, they have not. I submit, Mr. Speaker, in all humility, that they have not boldly taken the bull by the horns, but, in my opinion at least, they have preferred to take the animal by the tail, believing that by that means they could get just as good a grip, and that they could let go whenever they pleased. Mr. Speaker, the greatest contrast between the party on your right and the party on your left, is not, I submit, the difference in regard to their respective policies, but rather the difference in regard to their leaders. I do not suppose that on that side of the House at this moment, there is a gentleman who can tell us who the actual leader of the Conservative party is. We know very well who the nominal leader is, but I doubt if the actual leader can be found. If we were desirous of finding him, we might have quite a journey. If, Sir, we desire to find the Conservative leader, I would like to know whether we would have to go to the Chamber which is so gorgeous in scarlet and gold on the other side of this building, or would we have to go across the ocean to find that actual leader? Would we have to go to the Court of St. James, and would we there find him disporting himself in most gorgeous apparel; at one time advocating such a chimerical policy as that of Imperial Federation, and at another moment bolstering up bogus joint-stock companies? we to go outside to look for the leader of the Conservative party, or are we to look for the leader on the Conservative benches in this House? Are we to look for their leader in the serene and tranquil person of the hon. the Minister of Justice, or are we to look for their leader, sinking amidst the stormy and tumultuous waters which surround the hon. Minister of Public Works? Or, have these special and peculiar Chinese methods which the hon. Minister of Finance has developed this session of Parliament, so endeared him to the Conservative party, that in him and in him only, they see their saviour and their hope? Let me ask you, Mr. Speaker, to turn from the discordant elements of leadership over there, and see what you find upon this side of the House. We, Sir, have a leader of whom we are proud; we have a leader in whom we recognize a man whose kindly disposition has endeared him to every one of us; we know him, Sir, as a man to be all that he should be, and we know faithful to his principles. I speak the feelings of every member on this side of the House, when I say we honour him as a leader, and we revere him as a man, and I believe, and I think we all believe, in writing of Dante that the Sardinian soil was so Mr. Hyman.

that the large majority of the people of this country see in him, to-day, the one man in public life who is pre-eminently fitted to occupy the highest position in their gift.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, at the opening of this session the hon leader of the Opposition accused this side of the House of having a hazy, misty, undulating, fluctuating, shifting, contradictory policy. Now, if there is any Government or any party which has stood by its policy year in and year out, it is the party on this side of the House. It has stood constantly by the National Policy for years and has gone to the country upon it repeatedly; and I think it does not become the hon. leader of the Opposition to charge this side of the House with want of steadiness in its policy, because I am certain that monotonous uniformity cannot be charged against the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, as various hon, members on this side of the House have proven. Now, there is one thing in the hon. leader of the Opposition that I admire, and that we all admire, which is, that he never preaches blue ruin to the country, as do some of his most important and trusted lieutenants. I must say this, however, that there is this session a certain despairing petulance about the hon. gentleman's fault-finding that is unusual to him. I believe that the hon, gentleman thinks himself to be the man of destiny; but he may rest assured that so long as unrestricted reciprocity is the main plank in his platform, the signs of his future will not be read in the political heavens. Now, with regard to the past history of his party. Many of us who have been in this House for some years, know that the ex-leader of the Opposition handed over the reins of his party to the present leader of the Opposition, just as an eminent English statesman is stated to have done to a junior member of his party, and was compared to an old coachman handing over the reins to a promising novice. He gave the novice the box seat, but sat beside him in order to see that the coach was driven properly. This was done in this House; but the ex-leader saw that the coach was being driven more wildly and crratically than he wished - in fact, that there were other hands guiding the reins, that the leader of the Opposition was between good and evil counsellors—that he was between the angel of light and the angel of darkness, and that the angel of light did not prevail. So the ex-leader became at war with the tendencies of his own party. He saw that to win votes by a deliberate sacrifice of principle, or by paltering with economic truths, was deliberately to sow to the wind with a certain knowledge that the whirlwind would be the harvest; and what atti-tude did he assume towards them? Only one of mere sympathetic aloofness. After the elections he retired; and there he is waiting for the reaction to set in in his own party, in favour of sound economic principles, just as he had waited for years for the reaction to set in throughout the country in favour of his party and the principles he advocated. It is true, the hon. gentleman took a gloomy view of the situation, and of the destiny of his own noxious that even its bitterness was found in its honey, so the ex-leader of the Opposition, having sat for years in the impenetrable gloom of hon. gentlemen opposite, and beside the hon. member for South Oxford, how could he but take a gloomy view of the situation? But the hon. gentleman has now thrown off the environment of party exigencies. He has taken a trip to the far west, where he will see monuments erected like milestones over the graves of promises broken, pledges unfulfilled, predictions unrealized, and calculations gone wrong, all made by the Opposition, and before starting out he doubtless read some of the speeches made by himself in this House, and also some by his former lieutenants, as well as some of the editorials which appeared in the prominent papers of his own party, predicting blue ruin to the Canadian Pacific Railway, predicting that that railway would never run to the north of Lake Superior, which they asserted was such a wilderness that no road constructed there would ever pay; and if constructed large portions would be annually carried away by He doubtless also remembered that they had described the far west as a perfect desert, which would not yield enough to the railway to grease the axles; that they had declared the road would never cross the Rocky Mountains, and that if it did it would be returned to the befooled tax-payers, that the railway would never be built across the Selkirks to the Pacific Ocean, and that if it should be it would be returned to the Government and the people of Canada, and they would have to keep it up, which would be a great burden on the country. It was also predicted that the trade with China and Japan was a perfect myth and would never pay. Now, he will doubtless learn that the section running to the north of Lake Superior is to-day becoming one of the best paying portions of the road, and that one of the richest mining countries in the world is being opened up there. He will also learn that in Manitoba the people are contented and happy, and are doing well, He will also hear that the people are returning from Dakota that that the people are returning from Dakota, that land which to the hon. gentlemen's party is the materialization of the land of Beulah, as seen in a vision by John Bunyan. He will also find in the great west, which his party so loudly asserted to be unfit for settlement, towns and cities springing up all along the line; and he will discover that British Columbia, which was described as a sea of mountains, has potential resources, which will make it one of the strongest provinces in the Dominionthat new towns are springing up there and the old towns growing enormously. He will also find that the Chinese trade, which his party predicted would never amount to anything, has already developed into vast proportions, and that to-day the Canadian Pacific is doing as much trade with China and Japan as the Union Pacific, which has been established for many years. He will also remember that in the very year and week that the railway was to have been finished by contract, the largest and finest steamship on the Pacific Ocean arrived at Vancouver, and rendered possible the carrying of the mails between Yokohama and Liverpool in several days shorter time than they had ever been carried before. He has returned, doubtless, with more faith in his country and its future. Now, with in the United States. Who are its fathers? It has a sort of three-fold fatherhood. First, there is a wealthy Canadian living on the other side of the line, who, for reasons best known to himself, espoused the policy of unrestricted reciprocity. But to-day there is a rift in the Wiman lute. The second father is a peripatetic professor and nebulous politician, a man who suffers from intense splenetic egotism, who is at war with everything except it be that of his own creation, needless to say I refer to Professor Goldwin Smith. The third father is the hon, member for South Oxford, the embryotic Senator from Ontario, who evolved this policy from his own inner consciousness, and not because the people desired it. The embryotic Senator from Ontario, in dealing with our North-West, in his speech this year, has made statements which are not founded on facts, and he has misrepresented the evidence to a great extent. There is one thing, however, that I should say of him, and that is he believes thoroughly in the potency of audacity as a motive power in politics. Grenville, contemporary of Pitt, was called the raven of the House of Commons, always croaking defeat, ruin, bankruptcy in the midst of peace and plenty. Burke compared him to the evil spirit whom Ovid described as hanging over the stately temples and wealthy haven of Athens, and she could scarcely refrain from weeping because she could see nothing at which to weep. Grenville has a worthy successor in the member for South Oxford. Now, Sir, he said that the people of this country were decreasing in numbers in the farming districts, and that, therefore, there should be a change in our trade policy. Well, if the principle advocated by the hon, gentleman were carried to its entirety, what would be the state of things in England? According to the last census taken in England, the farming population in nearly the whole of England arming population in nearly the whole of England and in large portions of Ireland and Scotland have decreased considerably in numbers; and if the hon, gentleman's contention be correct, then the people of England should change their trade policy and go in for protection. If we go to the United States, we find that in nearly every state, even in the Middle States, the farming population has decreased considerably; and if it he true that in England and the United States be true that in England and the United States the trade policy existing in those countries should continue in order that both countries may pros-per, then there should be no change in the policy of this country, because our farming popula-tion has decreased. There are three reasons for this decrease, both in Canada and the United States. One is cheap lands in the West; the second is increased railway communication be-tween the East and West, and the cheapness of transportation; the third is the saving in labour by the use of improved agricultural implements, which were not in use twenty or thirty years ago, and by means of which the number of men employed on a farm to-day is not at all equal to that required formerly. Those are the three reasons why, to-day, in the eastern and older states of the Union and in some parts of Eastern Canada, the farming population is decreasing. If we look to the United States, we find that in New York State, according to the census of this last year, the farming population decreased, between regard to unrestricted reciprocity, what is it? It is 1880 and 1890, to the extent of 62,459. In Masan amphibolia, meaning one thing in Canada, another sachusetts, the farming population decreased

67,034, and in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont taken together it decreased 54,129. nois, which is comparatively a very new state and which has vast prairies, shows a decrease in the farming population in 1890, as compared with 1880, of 2,823. In Ohio, which is a new state, the farming population has increased but 2 per cent., according to the last census. In Connecticut, it has only increased 3 per cent.; in Indiana it has only increased 3 per cent.; in Dakota, between 1880 and 1885, it increased 207 per cent., but between 1885 and 1890, it increased only 23 per cent., showing a great change. In looking at the crop reports recently issued in Manitoba the estimated returns, per farmer, will be from 1,000 to 1,200 bushels of wheat, a showing that has never been equalled by any state in the Union, and I believe has never been equalled by any country in the world. In Dakota, in 1885, which year gives the best showing to the farmers of that country they ever had, the average yield per farm was only 450 bushels. In 1881, when they had a population about equal to that in Manitoba at present, the yield per farm was only 200 bushels. In Minnesota, in 1870, when that state had a population of 439,706, the number of bushels grown amounted to 16,-600,000 less than we are growing this year, and only equal to our crop of last year. In Iowa, in 1870, with a total population of 674,913, the total crop was 20,445,000 bushels, just about our crop of this year, although it had four times our population. In Kansas, with a population of 1,500,000 (and Kansas is a wheat-growing state) this last year their crop only amounted to 28,000,000 bushels. It, therefore, cannot be said that we are suffering in Mani-toba to any extent in comparison with other The farmers of that province are doing much better than those in Dakota. In fact, the people are moving from Dakota to our North-West, and every farmer who comes over says that the farmers get more for their produce on this side than on the other, and that farm implements are bought at about the same rate here as there. Mr. Louisbery came across as a delegate from two townships of Dakota last year, and he said in an interview:

"I was a Reformer in the County of Elgin, and moved to Pakota through the representations of the United States Government and railway agents. I am convinced the representations of the pross of my own politics in this country are misleading and untrue, as a farmer can live just as cheaply in Manitoba as Dakota, considering food, clothing and implements, and he has four times the return in crops for his labour. There is no grinding of the tariff or taxation here. In the States, in addition to taxes on the farm there are taxes on every chattel a man possesses. Even his household goods aretaxed, the gun he shoots with and the watch in his pocket—there is none of that here." The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said that the National Policy had resulted in a most pitiable failure, in the development of the North-West, and in Manitoba particularly. I think I can effectually disprove that statement with regard to Manitoba. In 1881, when the census was taken, there were only 230,260 acres cultivated in Manitoba. In 1891, this year, there are 1,334,697 acres under cultivation, showing an increase in ten years of 500 per cent.; and whereas the yield of wheat in that year was 1,039,673 bushels, the yield this year is estimated at from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 bushels. Now, the increase of acreage cultivated from last year to Mr. Ross (Liegar).

this year is 267,141 acres. That is the number of acres cultivated this year over last, according to the return of the Manitoba Government, shows 25 per cent. of an increase, which I consider a most favourable showing for Manitoba, and which proves that we, at any rate, are not suffering in any respect whatever. The hon member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) in a speech he delivered in Toronto two years ago, declared that the population of Dakota was 1,500,000. Now, the actual population of that state, according to the census taken one and a half years later, and after nearly two years of immigration going into that country, was only 511,527, or about one-third of the number stated by the hon. member for Queen's. The hon, gentleman may declare that he was speaking in hyperbole, but we maintain that it is just by such hyperbolical statements hon. gentlemen opposite seek to mislead the people. Now, in Maine, according to the report of the Bureau of Industrial and Labour Statistics just issued, the abandoned farms in 1890 numbered 3,318 and the number of acres in those farms amounted to Reports were sent out to the various counties to ascertain how many farmers were making a living and how many were losing or gaining by their occupation. Out of 370 farmers who sent in returns to the Bureau, 98 only were making profits, the number showing a loss was 270, and two were stationary. These are the facts in the State of Maine, and I do not believe that in any province of Canada, or in any portion of any province, will such results be shown as are shown to day in that state. That is also the position of the farmers in a large portion of Dakota, and this spring, when a whole train load came over from Dakota and settled in the North-West, what were the mottoes on the cars? Here were the mottoes: "Good-bye, Dakota," "No more oxaline fuel," "No more five-mile water haul," "No more grinding machine agents," "No more 6 per cent. per month," "Free land, plenty of timber, pure water, good crops, interest 8 per cent. per annum," "Hurrah for Southern Manitoba," "Bound for the land of freedom." Another charge which has been made with reference to Manitoba is that we are at a disadvantage with regard to the people of the south, as to our land laws. I have stated time and again in this House that in Manitoba we have had for some years past the most liberal land laws in the world. It is true that in the past we have had some obnoxious land regulations, and I will refer to them. The first was passed by an Order in Council of the 26th December, 1874. The Government which was then in power passed an Order in Council by which all lands for twenty miles on each side of the railway could not be allowed for settlement. You could not buy them, or settle on them. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who was then Minister of the Interior, visited our country in 1877. A number of us waited on him and represented the hardships of the case to him and told him it was utterly impossible to get settlers into that country so long as no settlement was allowed within twenty miles on each side of the Canadian Pacific Railway line. He heard our statement and came back to Ottawa, and what was the change he made! The change was that settlers were allowed to go into they were not told what they were to pay. When they made their entry they had to pay $1 an acre, and when all the lands in this belt were taken up and settled upon, then, and only then, the Government would fix the price and grant them their patents. They did not get any information as to what they would have to pay when they settled upon these lands. We asked for bread and got a This was the land policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and this was the first of the obnoxious land regulations put in force in the Province of Manitoba. That obnoxious law was in force from the 26th December, 1874, to the 28th June, 1879, The next obnoxious land regulation five years. was passed by the present Government, by which the number of acres for one settler was reduced from 160 to 80. That was passed on the 28th June, 1879, and was repealed on the 9th October of the same year, so that it was in force only three Hon. gentlemen opposite had their obnoxious land regulations in force for five years, and the first of the obnoxious regulations of the present Government was only in force for three months. The next obnoxious regulation was the reservation of the mile belt, which was passed on the 11th March, 1882, and cancelled on the 29th November, 1883, so that was in force just a year and a-half. Contemporaneously with that, there was the reserve in Southern Manitoba, which was passed on the 5th July, 1882, and cancelled on the 29th November, 1883. Both of these were cancelled at the same time and were in force only one and a-half years, while the obnoxious land laws of hon. gentlemen opposite were in force for five years. This is a comparison between the obnoxious land laws passed by the two parties in this House. Another statement made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), was that the people were leaving the country so rapidly that the Canadian population in the United States had reached enormous proportions. It is true that the Canadian population are leaving faster than they should, or than we desire them to do, but this did not com-mence with the adoption of the National Policy, or with the coming into power of the present Government. It has been going on ever since Confederation, and even before Confederation as much as it is now. During the time of the Mackenzie Government, it was as great as it has been since, this Government came into power, and I believe, in the last three or four years, it has not amounted to anything like it did ten or fifteen years ago. According to the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), there are from 1,200,000 to 1,400,000 Canadians in the United States. I do not believe there are so many. not believe there are more than 1,000,000. He refers to the number of Canadians who have left Manitoba and gone into the United States, and he makes it out that tens of thousands have left that province for the south. I have the reports of Mr. Nimmo, who states that in the ten years ending 30th June, 1884, there were only 4,637 Canadians who crossed the line from Manitoba and settled in the United States. From 1850 to 1860, there were 102,-000 who went from this country to the United States; from 1860 to 1870, there were 23,000 a year, and from 1870 to 1880 there were about 22,000 a year who went to the United States. This is according to the Now, the hon. gentleman further stated that American statistics taken every ten years. regard to the statement of the hon, member that we in the North-West have cost the country $100,000,000, and he adds a number of other things to show that we are an annual charge of $7,000,000 a year. I desire to say that we have not cost the Dominion anything of the The first cost was $1,500,000. That is the £300,000 which the Dominion of Canada paid to the Hudson Bay Company for the North-West Territories. I suppose the next charge the hon. gentleman makes is the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That railway cost the country a great deal, but it was not built for the Province of Manitoba or for the Province of Ontario, or for the Province of New Brunswick, or for any other province, but for all the provinces, in order to bind them together by an iron band and to unite them in one Confederation. If, however, we are charged with what was expended throughout Manitoba and the North-West, let us see what the cost was through Ontario, because the road through Ontario, north of Lake Superior, opened up a very valuable mineral region and valuable farming lands. and Ontario is reaping the benefits. From Callander to Port Arthur, the subsidy amounted to $10,000,000; from Port Arthur to Cross Lake, the cost of the work was $10,084,145; the total cost in Ontario being thus $20,084,145. From Cross Lake to the Gap in the Mountains through Manitoba and the North-West, the cost was as follows:— Cross Lake to Red River, including the Pembina branch, $6,767,419; and from the Red River to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, the subsidy amounted to $9,000,000. Therefore, the cost through Manitoba and the North-West Territories only amounts to $15,767,419. In British Columbia, from the Gap to Savona's Ferry the subsidy amounted to $6,000,000; from Savona's Ferry to Port Moody, the cost of the work was $13,483,-874. Therefore, the total cost in British Columbia was $19,483,874. It will, therefore, be seen that the entire cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway was $55,335,438, so that, if we were charged with every cent which that railway cost in Manitoba and the North-West, in Ontario, and British Columbia, it would only amount to a little over $55,000,000. But I claim that we should not be charged with one cent more than any other province, and that, even if we are, Ontario should charged just as much for the money which was spent in that province as we would be charged for the amount spent in Manitoba and the North-West. The hon. gentleman further said that literally we find hundreds of people in Manitoba and the North-West where there ought to be millions to-day. Now, Sir, does the hon, gentleman know what that means? Hundreds of people only where there ought to be millions—as we have about two thousand hundreds, therefore, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, we ought to have two thousand millions in Manitoba and the North-West, which is five hundred millions more than the entire population of the world. But the hon. gentleman will say this is hyperbole again, or perhaps it is an orientalism. However, what we object to is that these statements should be scattered broadcast throughout the country to its great detriment, and especially when these statements are not correct.

Canada was a bad country in which to try the experiment of the National Policy, on account of the extent of our territory, and the fact that our pop-He says: ulation is scattered.

"If there be one thing clearer than another it is this: that the position of the United States is such, the extent of their territory is such, the mass of population is such, that there cannot possibly be conceived a country in which the experiment of protection, the mistaken and mischievous experiment, I believe, can be tried with less risk to the inhabitants than in the United States; and per contra, and conversely, there is no country on the face of the earth of which I have ever read, heard, or seen, so utterly unsuited to try the experiment of protection as this Canada of ours."

Now, what are the facts? In the United States they tried the experiment. In 1789, the first tariff Act was passed, and signed by George Washington and Alexander Hamilton, their great financial authority, said it was a protective policy that would be continuous, that it had come to stay. Now, at that time the United States had not the population we have now, or they had at most very nearly our present population. Their population was scattered over a vast extent; their 13 states covered a territory extending into the unknown west, still they adopted the experiment. In 1816, they further enlarged the protective policy; in 1824, they still more enlarged the principle of protection; in 1828 they went on enlarging that policy; in 1830 they reduced it to a perfect system, just as we have done with our National Policy. In 1832 there was a reverse, and the Nullification Act of South Carolina was passed, and the reverse amounted almost to the adop-In 1833, there was a comprotion of free trade. mise, and in 1842, the United States again returned to the principle of protection. In 1832 and in 1846, there were victories for free trade in the United States, and what was the result? The mills were closed, the furnace fires were put out, the merchants became bankrupt, and the labourer became a tramp; but after this experience they returned once more to the policy of protection, under which they have gone on progressing, and the result has been that in the last nine years the balance of trade in favour of that country has been $1,300,000,000, and the 13 original states of the Union have multiplied until they cover the whole belt of the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific. At first their manufacturing plant amounted to only $500,000, but now it has reached the enormous value of six billions of dollars. This is the result of the adoption of protection in the United States, and we can safely try that policy in our own country, because our country is in circumstances very similar to theirs; we have a great west, as they have, and we have a very large extent of fertile country, as they have. There is this turther similarity in our circumstances, that in the United States the very party that was in favour of a high tariff was also in favour of making a strong central government, while the low tariff party was the party infavour of increasing the power of the various states, and believed in state sovereignty; the party that was in favour of a strong protective policy was the party that was in favour of a strong national government and a strong national sentiment. In our country the party that is in favour of free trade, or something bordering upon it, is the party that has always been in favour of sectionalism and fostered it. In the United States the sectional feeling existed the same as it does here, and it was device in election matters which can be thought of, Mr. Ross (Lisgar).

only crushed out after a civil war. Lincoln grappled with the spirit of sectionalism and throttled it, and to-day there is no more united people on the face of the earth than the people of the United They look upon their country as a whole, and not upon each state as a separate country. Now, in reading the speeches of the hon, member for South Oxford I have come to the conclusion that no public man in this country makes speeches that bristle more with statements, inaccurate in substance and theatrical in form; startling phrases, a grandiloquent programme, promises incapable of realization, a thorough belief in himself and in the gullibility of his fellow-countrymen are his stock-in-trade. And the disproportion between his denunciations and the facts with which he supports his denunciations, is painfully obvious to the country. There is only one excuse for that hon, member, "hope deferred maketh the heart sick," and he has been struggling so long to get at the Treasury benches and he has been so often disappointed, that he reminds one very much of the mythological hero Sisyphus who was forever and forever uselessly endeavouring to roll a stone up the mountain. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be satisfied with the result of the elections; we on this side are also satisfied with the result. course, they have not come up to the expectations of some, but on the whole we are satisfied. Some of the counties have gone wrong, but doubtless on the first opportunity they will return to their first love, and perform works meet for repentance by returning gentlemen to support the Conservative party. Now, after the elections were over the hon. member for South Oxford wrote a letter in which he spoke of "our opponents array." Although it has been quoted before, I will venture to quote it once more:

"Our opponents' array, on the other hand, is mostly, literally a thing of shreds and patches, made up of ragged remnants from half a dozen varied provinces, the great majority of whom do not even pretend to be actuated by any principle save that of securing a good slice of booty for themselves and the sections or constituencies they respectively represent, and who know besides that popular faciling in these very province is strongly and distinct lar feeling in those very provinces is strongly and distinct-ly in favour of our policy, though actual cash in hand or in the shape of railway subsidies has proved too much for the virtue of a majority of the voting population in many instances."

Evidently the hon, gentleman's desire is to arouse local prejudices, and he would have this great country gangrened by provincial jealousies. the other hand, hon, gentlemen on this side of the House are possessed with the strong conviction that Canadianism as a whole is going to do away with provincial differences and jealousies; we are looking to the interest of Canada as one country from ocean to ocean. This is the principle that has been distilled into the members of the Conservative party, and it is a principle which we will never desert. At the opening of the session the leader of the Opposition stated that the methods of carrying elections on this side of the House were very doubtful; he speaks about bribing the constituencies, about the iniquitous measures passed in previous Parliaments, and about all the methods which have been adopted in order to sustain our Now, I do not know whether that hon. gentleman has adopted the role of an American humourist or not, but I can say this, that in our province and in the North-West there was no which the Liberal party did not adopt, there was nothing to which they did not condescend in order to win votes. They can be charged on one hand with misrepresentations, and on the other hand with unfulfillable promises. In my county I know that policy was adopted to the fullest extent, as I can say in the words of the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain: "The Opposition lied with a freedom and an unanimity which raised mendacity to the rank of a fine art." The line of argument we adopted in the North-West was this: We were opposed to the McKinley Bill; we believed the McKinley Bill was passed largely with the object of coercing Canada, and for that reason we could not agree to any measure of unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union with that country, as that would be tantamount to allowing ourselves We preferred to bear the ills we to be coerced. have than to submit to dictation from the United States. We are not a class of people who will submit to any infamy, no matter from what quarter, or how great, and we would rather submit to our present taxation than to adopt the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite and surrender our commercial independence to a foreign country. In the North-West the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite went about saying that the country was going to ruin, that everything was going wrong, not only in the North-West but throughout Canada; in fact, they reminded one very much of the grandmother of Satan in the Scotch proverb, "who laughs at all ills and cries at all good." Now, with regard to Manitoba, the issue was one largely of unrestricted recipro-When we went to our constituents the people were saturated with the idea of unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union. But the more and more that question was discussed the more and more the people came to the conclusion that they would have none of it, and the fact that the people in Manitoba and the North-West returned the members representing them in this House by such very large majorities was largely owing to unrestricted reciprocity being the policy of the Opposition; in fact it was more largely owing to that circumstance than anything else. The selfcomplacent member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) never would have been here had it not been for his own attitudinizing and the enormous amount of padding given him by the most powerful paper in the province, the Manitoba Free Press. Although that paper was in favour of unrestricted reciprocity, or some liberal measure of reciprocity with the United States, we went to the country with that paper opposed to us on that question, though partly supporting us on some other grounds, and yet the Conservative members were elected against all this power, simply because the people of the North-West, after reading the question, intelligently came to the conclusion that they would have none of unrestricted reciprocity but would stand by Canada as a whole and by the National Policy. One factor that made us determine to adopt that line of policy in the North-West was this': On reading the papers in the United States, and the statements made by leading politicians, our people came to the conclusion that those views were not in the interests of the people of Manitoba and the North-West.

be called unrestricted reciprocity instead of commercial union. • Political union is, in fact, the only condition which will secure to Canada free trade with the United States."

Mr. Goldwin Smith says:

"I never conceal my belief that the ultimate result of commercial union will be political union, and England must be content with our friendship."

The New York $\it Evening \, \it Post \, says:$

"If Canada agrees to have the same tariff as the United States the making of it must of necessity be left to the American Congress, or, in other words, the power to tax the Canadians must be ceded to the United States, and the power to tax soon carries all other powers with it. It is just as well for everybody who is interested in this movement on either side of the line to bear this in mind. The United States cannot allow a small province like The United States cannot allow a small province like Canada to say what their import duties thall be."

The Chicago Times says :

"It must not be forgotten that this proposition implies a complete surrender by the Dominion Parliament to the American Congress of all control over the principal sources of the Dominion's revenue, the tariff. Whatever it may please the American Congress to do regarding the tariff, that the Dominion Government must forthwith accept. Our Congress would have even more power over the Dominion under this arrangement than it would in the event of political union, because the people of the Dominion would have neither vote nor voice in Washington under the proposed commercial union." ton under the proposed commercial union.

The Chicago Times reports Erastus Wiman as saying,—and it will be observed that Mr. Wiman expressed one set of views before the Canadian electors and another set of views before the American people:

"What Michigan has done for the East in the shape of development of natural resources, what Minnesota has achieved towards the enrichment of the West—that Manitoba and the North-Western Territories would do for Chicago and the North-Western States. The exhaustion of arable lands in the North-West is a fact which Chicago and all who are interested in trade and transportation in and all who are interested in trade and transportation in that region are intensely interested in. The good God above us all has provided in the Canadian North-Western above us all has provided in the Canadian North-Western Territories a magnificent stretch of the most productive wheat-growing soil in the world. Here is room for the accommodation of the immigration of 50,000,000 of people, who should all be customers of the manufacturers, merchants and transportation agencies of the Western States. It seems pitiable that people do not arise to a comprehension of the fact that a limitation of the United States is reached by the northern line of Minnesota, and that Chicago, Milwaukee, the twin cities, and all the vast aggregations of people in these Western States, in order to have room for expansion, must have the barrier obliterated that divides this continent in twain."

The Chicago Times again says:

"If the Dominion will take our tariff laws as they are and as Congress may choose to modify them, and as our Treasury Department and courts may construe them, well and good."

The Chicago Tribune says:

"The main point, however, is for Congress to come to the support of the Liberals. They are in splendid fighting condition."

The Chicago Inter-Ocean says:

"Short of commercial absorption, we see no safe basis of reciprocity.

Senator Carlyle says:

"There is now, as everybody knows a very powerful political party in Canada in favour of reciprocity with the United States, and a large part, at least, of the members of that party are now, or will be ultimately, in favour of political union.

"I think it is our duty to encourage and support this continuent as far as we can without injustice to our can sentiment as far as we can without injustice to our own people."

The Washington Post says: San Francisco Call, for instance, says:

"The success of the Liberal party in the coming March election would probably be considered a declaration of a desire on the part of Canada for such commercial union as is outlined in Mr. Hitt's resolution. In Canada it will way for a political union."

Here it is evident that unrestricted reciprocity and annexation is intended to form a palindrome. The Buffalo News says:

"Every vote cast for the Liberal candidate in most of the constituencies at least, will be, in effect, a vote for annexation, since commercial union must lead to that." President Lane, at a banquet given by the Boston Chamber of Commerce, said:

"Our Liberal friends, Fielding and Longley, of Nova Scotia; Davies, of Prince Edward Island: Mercier and Laurier, of Quebec; Cartwright, of Ontario, and a host besides, look to us, and the people of the United States, for 'the sign by which they shall conquer.' Can we deny them?"

Judging from the manner in which the "signs by which they shall conquer" was distributed throughout the counties, they did not look in vain. With respect to predictions made, one hon, member said that we on this side had made predictions that have never come true. That may be. The difference, however, between predictions made on this side of the House and predictions made by hon. gentleman opposite is simply this: On this side of the House there have been predictions made which have not come true in the time they were predicted to be verified, but many of them are going to come Even the prediction of 600,000,000 true after all. bushels of wheat raised in Manitoba and the North-West will come true. Predictions made by hon. gentlemen opposite have not come true, the time has passed for their verification, they have been denied by the facts that have occurred since. come now to another phase of the question on which we in the North-West are in some respects not at one with the Government. I look upon it that the Act of Confederation is but the vestibule to the temple to be erected. There are other parts to be completed. One is the building of railways, another is the construction of canals, another is the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is one of the most important portions of the work, another is steamship lines, and still another is the adoption of the National Policy—all these are to complete the building which was intended to be erected by the fathers of Confederation. It is still incomplete, and because it is incomplete to-day, hon, gentlemen opposite would with rude hands tear down the scaffolding before the building is finished, because it does not come up to promised splendour. But we will not allow them, nor will the electors give them an opportunity. They are like men who stand with their backs to the rising sun and gaze mournfully at their own shadows. There are two subjects of very great importance to this country, in the opinion of the people of the North-And these two most important subjects to deal with are, first, immigration, the settling and filling up of the fertile plains of the North-West; and second, the development of our vast latent resources. On the question of immigration we believe that frugality may become profligacy and that saving money is not the true policy to adopt in regard to immigration, because "there is that scattereth and yet increaseth and there is that withholdeth more than is meet but it tendeth to poverty." question is this so true as on the question of immigration, especially in a country like ours, where we have such vast lands to be settled and resources capable of being developed. Yet the people of Canada to-day are not up to the mark on this subject, and our policy at present is largely one of "do nothing" and "masterly inactivity," whereas a with a prosperous, happy and contented people. Mr. Ross (Lisgar).

great deal might, could and ought to be done. believe, in order to fill out the National Policy and to complete the scheme of Canada as a great country, that a wide, liberal, broad, progressive and vigorous immigration policy should be adopted, and that is the only way the work can be accomplished. We have various countries competing with us, which have similar vast fertile lands to ours. Queensland the Government last year spent $1,250,-000 for immigration purposes. Mexico is spending money, so is New Zealand, and the Argentine Republic is spending over a million dollars a year for immigration purposes. The Canadian Gazete. London, speaking on this subject, says:

"Canada is not doing what she might and ought to do, because, as a matter of fact, she is doing practically nothing at all as compared with the other caterers for European immigrants."

We believe that immigration is simply a matter of business; it is not enough for us to say: We have got the land, go and possess it; but, on account of this competition for immigrants on the continent of Europe and in Great Britain, we must do more than that. We must bring the people here, no matter how they are brought, so long as they are fit settlers. We do not want paupers unable to work; we want energetic men, men of energy and muscle, who are prepared to put up with whatever is in store for them, and who are willing to seek and make a home for themselves amongst us. If we get a class of people, whether they are poor or not, who are determined to work for themselves, we will accept them, for our country is so great that we can absorb an enormous number of them. We have in the North-West millions and millions of acres ready for the plough, we have the largest coal-beds in the world undeveloped, we have vast petroleum regions which, so far as is known, are unequalled in the civilized world, and which can be easily developed, and would be if we had sufficient people. The members for Manitoba and the North-West look with deep interest on this question of immigration; we do not wish to be "faddists" upon it, but we are determined to "prod on," and to get the people into that country, because we believe it is the hope of Canada that our western country should be successfully settled and developed. We consider that Canada will never become as great and prosperous a nation as she is destined to be, unless the North West is filled up with people as it should be, then the North-West will be the glory of our common country. We believe that Canada possesses all the elements of a great country which are possessed by the United States; and that there is only one way of developing our country to its fullest extent, and that is by erecting a building on the foundations which were laid by the fathers of Confederation, and helping the policy of the present Government in developing the progress of our great North-West. Some say: You have railways running into that country, and why not leave it to the people to avail themselves of its advantages. As I have said before, the different nations of the new worlds are competing so fiercely for immigrants in the old world, that we must enter into the competition energetically and do something to bring the people to our country. I believe that all the questions which vex us now, of whatever kind they may be, will be solved the moment the North-West is developed and filled up

We have great advantages for promoting immigration in our country to-day. In the old days of the United States the settler had to travel in a prairie schooner for hundreds of miles often, and he had to break camp every morning, but to-day we can bring our settlers into fertile regions in a sleeping car, so that even out of the sleeping car window they can almost see the home-steads which are destined to be their future homes. We have every means to bring people into the North-West, but, at the same time, we should not rest on our oars and do nothing further. true we have had ills and troubles in the North-West, but we have now got rid of them. Our ills were only like spots on the sun, which neither obscure nor impair the light of day; we have got over them, and the country is now There is no more prosperous people in the world to-day than are the people of Man-itoba during the present year. We are midway between Liverpool and Yokohama, on one of the highways of the commerce of the world, and on the highways of commerce you always find wealth and an enterprising and intelligent people. When we get the people into that country, all the rest of our advantages will follow. The United States in the past has been the granary of the world, but it is gradually ceasing to occupy that position. able writers of that country tell us that, in ten years from now, the United States will cease to export any wheat, and the North-West of Canada will then assume the position of the granary of the world, if we have the people to develop the soil. With the rapid railway development we now have going on in that country, and with a large number of immigrants going in there, should we adopt a vigorous immigration policy, it cannot be told how rapidly we will progress, because, as I pointed out in a former part of my address, the people of the North-West to-day are prospering as much as they are in any other part of the new world. What we want to do in this whole Dominion of Canada is to get rid of our sectionalism, to feel that we are Canadians bound together by the broad tie of our nationality, to feel that Confederation is not a rope of sand; but a broad band of union between the people of the different provinces. I think that in the North-West that bond of union is being created and developed more than in any other part of Canada; for the reason that in the North-West we have people from New in the North-West we have people from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Ontario pouring in there, settling side by side, and working out their destiny together as Canadians. We in the North-West will encourage that sentiment of Canadianism more than in any other part of Canada, and when the North-West is settled up, we will have a prosperous, a happy and a contented people from the Atlantic to the Pacific. On this side of the House we believe in the policy of Canada for the Canadians, in frowning down sectionalism, in obliterating as far as we can the boundary lines of prejudice between the various provinces. We believe in standing by the National Policy in its development of native industries, in keeping Canada an integral part of the British Empire and in standing by our country. We do not go in for disintegration. We do not believe in giving up our control over our own finances or revenue, but in keeping that for rights, by remaining a part of the British Empire, by remaining true to our country and what God has provided for us, by supporting the policy of this side of the House, which has pledged itself to the development of the North-West in railway and other matters, we believe that the entire population of Canada will become great, and prosperous, and a contented and happy people.

Mr. RIDER. Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the motion of the hon, member for South Ox-It is ford (Sir Richard Cartwright) now under discussion, I will only ask for a brief indulgence on the part of hon. members while I state my views on this subject. This question has been very ably and fairly discussed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, and it would seem, at this late stage of the debate that little room remains in which to introduce new matters. I feel, however, that I would not be doing my duty by the county which I have the honour to represent in this House, did I not openly state what I believe to be in the interests of the country generally, and my own county in particular. The motion of the hon. Minister of Finance, and the motion, in amendment, by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), involve a discussion on the socalled National Policy, a policy which was given to this country twelve years ago, as a Tory remedy for the commercial evils then said to exist. will not take up the valuable time of this House in discussing the merits or demerits of the political contentions of that remote period in our political history, but I will largely confine my remarks to the general, well-known results which have flown from the National Policy adopted in 1879, and which is the policy still insisted on by the Government of the day, and supported by hon. members opposite. The county which I have the honour to represent has long held a prominent, honourable, and enviable position among the oldest and most influential of the Eastern Townships; a position honourably attained by the intelligence and industry of its inhabitants, and although considered as an agricultural county, it is none the less remarkable for its various manufacturing industries. And I wish it to be distinctly understood, that nothing would please me better than to see all of our industries flourish as they deserve to do. I desire here to remark, that I have sufficient confidence in the business ability of our manufacturers and business men, to believe that if they are placed on an equal footing, they need not fear competition with any other people on this continent. I believe that the business of the world at the present day demands the removal of all limitations and restrictions on trade. no good ground for contention between the manufacturing and farming industries of this country: unless it be a friendly competition as to which will best serve and promote the interests of the country, but we must not lose sight of the fact that agriculture is the only safe and sure foundation of our country's prosperity. My county, fortunately in some respects, unfortunately in others, is situated on the American border, a position which enables the farmers there fully to comprehend the desirability of having the fullest and freest commercial relations with our neighbours in the United States. Now, I know of no better way to determine the value of a market than by considering the use we ourselves. Then, Sir, by maintaining our national make of such a market. I am, therefore, compelled to trespass on the indulgence of the House while I inflict on it a number of figures, gathered from the Trade and Navigation Returns for the year ending 30th June, 1890. The total imports entered for home consumption were $112,765,584. The total imports from Great Britain, the United States and all other countries were respectively as follows:-

Duty paid. Imports. $43,390,241 52,291,973 Great Britain..... $9.576,665 $.126,625 6.217.643 United States..... 52,201,973 17,083,370 All other countries.....

In other words, we imported from Great Britain $8,901,732 less than from the United States, upon which we collected a duty of $1,450,040 more. Now, in order to be as brief as possible, I will confine my comparisons to Great Britain and the United States, these being the two principal countries with which we trade. I find that our exports in 1890 were as follows :--

To United States. To Great Britain. Produce of mines, fisheries, forests, animals and agricultural pro-$39,677,650 $30,547,152 Miscellaneous 5,352 Manufactures 1,816,147 2,667,282

If we include our exports of coin and bullion, and the amount estimated in the last Trade Returns as short at inland ports, this will bring the total of our exports to the United States for 1890 to $38,653,061. Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is my duty on the present occasion, in what I have to say on this important subject, to speak with reference to the farming industries of our country, and the statements I give have reference principally to the productions of that industry. I find that in horses we exported to Great Britain 125, valued at $17,925; to the United States 16,118, valued at $1,887,895; and to all other countries 307, valued at $30,253. Now, this is an industry which is of great interest to the county which I have the honour to represent. The County of Stanstead has, for a long time, enjoyed the reputation of raising fine horses, for which we have an excellent demand from the United States. Our position on the border is not only convenient, but owing to the high reputation which our horses have attained, we have been able to sell them at good prices in the United States market; and the horses best suited to the American market are the only horses which a Canadian farmer can in a general way afford to raise; because the most profitable horses are those which can be utilized while they are being raised, and there is always a good demand on the other side of the line for our light draught horses. In sheep we sent to Great Britain 57,006 head, at a valuation of $486,299; to the United States, 251,640 head, valued at $761,565; and to all other countries, 7,285 head, valued at $26,083. This is another industry in which my county is particularly interested, as nearly all the lambs and sheep raised in the Eastern Townships find a profitable market on the other side. The system of farming adopted generally in the Eastern Townships is mixed farming. All our farmers so divide up their business, some specially raising sheep, some cattle, butter and cheese, and some horses, that we find it makes a great difference to our people whether they have a free entrance into the market which is best suited to their needs, or whether they are hampered by trade restrictions of our farmers if the restrictions on trade were Mr. RIDER.

imposed by the McKinley Bill; and we feel that the fiscal policy of the late Government has in a large measure brought us face to face with the McKinley tariff. As the duty levied on sheep going into the United States has to be paid by the Canadian farmer, our people understand that that means so much less to them in the results of their production. We have the opportunity of knowing this on account of our close proximity to the American border, for the American buyers offer two prices. They will give so much for lambs on the Canadian side, but, if they are delivered two feet further on the other side, they will give 75 cents to $1.50 more per head for them. Now, this seems to me to be positive proof of the advantage of freer commercial intercourse. With regard to horned cattle, we sent to Great Britain 66,935 head, valued at $6,565,315, and to the States 7,840 head, valued at $104,623, and to all other countries 6,649 head, valued at $279,479. In connection with this trade, Mr. Speaker, we have been told by a gentleman very prominent in the cattle export trade, Mr. Bickerdike, a cattle shipper of Montreal, that nearly 60 per cent. of the cattle shipped from Canada are what is known as "stockers," and the reason he gave is that Canadian farmers could not compete with British farmers in the fattening of cattle, owing to the difference in the cost of corn; because, while the Canadian was paying 7½ cents per bushel duty on his corn, the English farmer was getting the same corn duty free, and this compelled our farmers to part with their goods in an unfinished condition and leave the profit of fattening to the foreign farmers. In this respect I maintain the farmer is a manufacturer. farmer is converting his corn into beef, pork, butter, cheese, &c., he is, in that sense, a manufacturer, and should enjoy every other advantage enjoyed by the manufacturers of this country. Now, the corn is the raw material of the farmer, and when he has more to pay for his corn than his neighbour on the other side of the line, he is driven out of the market since he cannot produce his beef or pork as cheaply. The best way to protect the farmer is to give him the opportunity of buying in the cheapest and selling in the dearest markets. Referring to grains, I find that we shipped barley to Great Britain to the extent of 27,132 bushels, at a valuation of $12,017; to the United States, 9,939,745 bushels, valued at $4,582,561; and to all other countries we sent 9,031 bushels, at a valuation of $3,830. We were told by the hon, member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby) that it would be a very bad thing to allow the free importation of corn, because it would compete with our coarse grains and drive them out of the market; but we find by the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, one of the best commercial and financial papers published in the United States, that in the New York market. while other barley is quoted at 90 to 92 cents per bushel, Canadian barley is quoted from $1 to $1.05 per bushel; and at the same time, we find that corn, Western mixed No. 2, which is a good quality of corn, is worth from 70 to 71 cents. It will be seen by this that one bushel of our Canadian barley, fit for malting purposes, is really worth a bushel and a-half of corn. Now the corn is worth, according to the present quotations, about 20 cents per bushel more for feeding purposes than barley, and, therefore, it would be greatly in the interests removed to such an extent that they could exchange their barley, for the raising of which our country is so admirably adopted, for American corn. Of beans we exported to Great Britain none, to the United States 183,638 bushels, valued at $249,323, and to all other countries 357 bushels, valued at $721. Of potatoes we exported none to Great Britain; to the United States we exported 1,053,230 bushels, at a valuation of $308,915, and to all other countries 405.567 bushels, at a valuation of $184,830. Now, it seems to me that, so far as our trade in potatoes is concerned, the only natural and convenient, the only market to which we can export them profitably, is the United States. This is a matter which is of great interest to the farmers in many parts of Canada. It was brought to my attention very particularly this past winter, when I saw an actual illustration of how the duties are adjusted. Buvers came to us from the New England States and offered our farmers from 40 cents to 50 cents a bushel on the Canadian side of the line, but said if our farmers would take their potatoes two feet further and cross into the United States they would give 65 to 75 cents per bushel. This meant an evident loss to the Canadian farmers of 25 cents a bushel. With regard to wool, we send to Great Britain none; to the United States we send 1,046,891 lbs., valued at $235,466, and to all other countries we send 863 lbs., valued at $203. In connection with this allow me, Sir, to here draw your attention to this fact: that the farmers, in the question of wool like most of other questions, are given very poor consideration indeed under our National Although they are contributing more to the wealth of the country, although they are the very best distributors of wealth we have in the country, yet, for some reason unexplained by hon. gentlemen opposite, they are given no consideration whatever in connection with the so-called National Now, wool is allowed in free. This is an advantage to the manufacturer, but it seems that the kind of wool which it is most profitable for our people to raise finds its best market in the United States, and upon it there is now a duty of 12 cents per pound, and the need of that market is made very clear to us when we find we have used it to the extent I have just quoted. Now, with regard 111,534 tons, valued at $243,519. It seems to to the item of eggs, though this item has been several times brought to the notice of the House, I could not pass it over when I found there was such a great difference in favour of more free and extensive trade arrangements with the United States. I find that we shipped 3,600 dozen of eggs to Great Britain, at a valuation of $820, while we shipped to the United States 12,825,735 dozen, at a valuation of $1,793,104, and to all other countries we sent 10,325 dozen, at a valuation of $1,290. Now, with regard to maple sugar, we shipped to Great Britain 958 lbs., valued at $103; to the United States, 233,958 lbs., at a valuation of $16,644, and to all tity of 3,242,391 bushels imported, at a valuation other countries 255 lbs., at a valuation of $21. I must of $1,170,022, on which a duty was paid by the confess that, when I had the pleasure of listening people of this country of $243,174, being 7½ cents to the able and exhaustive argument of the Minister a bushel. The hon member for West Hastings of Finance in moving his resolutions on the Budget, I had a little glimmer of hope that in this article at all events he was going to do justice to the Canadian farmer. When he spoke about sugar, he acknowledged there was a necessity to provide a little compensation by way of assistance to the farmers who were labouring with the crop of sugar no mistake, I will quote his words on that subject. He said:

"So that I have this to recommend, that for one year, this season only, whatever beet-root sugar is made wholly from the beet in the Dominion of Canada, shall be paid, out of the finances of the country, a bounty equal to the protection which it would have enjoyed if the tariff had remained for the year as it was when the farmers planted their beets and went into that industry. When I make that statement, I also wish it to be accompanied by this emphatic statement: that this proposition does not commit me or the Government to the principle of bounty with mit me or the Government to the principle of bounty with reference to the culture of beet root sugar in this country. We do not propose to commit ourselves to that principle, and the legislation we ask for now is for this season only."

In reply to the hon, member for Huntingdon (Mr-Scriver), who asked:

"What about maple sugar?"

Mr. Foster replied:

"Maple sugar remains just as sweet and just as good as it was without any bounty.

It seems to me, if I may be allowed the expression, that this is very shabby treatment, indeed, for our Eastern Township farmers especially. Maple sugar is a very important product of the farmers throughout the Province of Quebec, and par-ticularly in the Eastern Towaships, and when the Government under which we live cannot extend to the people of this country as many inducements to remain here and toil as they see their brothers enjoy on the other side of the line. there is very little inducement for them to remain. On the other side the farmers are encouraged to raise maple sugar by a bounty of 2 cents a pound, and that is granted not for one year only, which is no inducement whatever, but for five years. seems to me that, if we could by any reasonable inducement get our farmers to produce sugar at home, even if we gave them a bounty to induce them to start the industry, the amount of the bounty would be spent at home where the country would get some benefit from it, rather than that which is sent to the Sandwich Islands or the West India Islands by the inducements held out to obtain raw sugar from them. I find that of coal we shipped to Great Britain 28,974 tons, valued at $78,417; to the United States, 574,856 tons, valued at $2,126,000; and to all other countries, me that the hon, member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), who has just taken his seat, should be pleased to have a larger market for this valuable production of the North-West Territories and British Columbia. It appears from these figures that the United States, although it is a great producer of coal, yet, owing to the means of communication, finds it convenient to take from us coal to the amount of 574,000 tons, at a valuation of over $2,000,000. Now I will briefly refer to the goods which are imported into Canada for home consump-I find that of Indian corn there was a quan-(Mr. Corby) was perfectly satisfied with the justness of this duty. He claimed that he was a manufac-turer and paid 7½ cents a bushel the same as others on all the corn he used in his business, and he seemed to have a smile on his face when he approached this subject. That smile seemed to have some connection with the remark made by the Minister beets that they had sown, and, that there may be of Finance in explaining the increase in the Excise duties on spirits, when he made the following

"I propose to ask the distillers to consent to the imposition of a slight increase in the Excise duty upon distilled spirits, which will add but very little, 20 cents per called to the cost of that article; and if it is necessary. I gallon, to the cost of that article; and if it is necessary, I want to ask the distillers, and the wholesale sellers, and the retail traders, and the drinkers as well, to divide this equitably among them and make a pleasant face over the operation.

It seems to me that the hon, member for West Hastings was well satisfied with this. He could realize clearly that, though he paid the duty, he charged it over to the dealers, that this duty did not come out of his pocket, and that was no comparison at all with the position of the farmer who converts the corn into beef, pork, butter or cheese, and, when the product is ready for the market, has to sell it at the market price, whereas the distiller can hold his production in wooden casks, and it is said that, like some other things, it improves with age. It is, therefore, very clear to my mind, at least, that the comparison is hardly a fair one. In order to more fully understand this matter, I have taken the pains to find out the amount of whiskey which has been exported from this country, so as to make a comparison and arrive at the volume of the business as between the distiller and the farmer. I find that the export of whiskey, or "distilled damnation," as it was termed by the Minister of Finance at a former period, amounted to the value of $25,383. The farmers' exportations during the same time amounted to $37,015,025; and I must submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is as great a difference in the character and desirability of this business, as there is in the amounts involved, and it would seem that in this case at all events, it is no particular hardship to the brewer. Then, in regard to bituminous coal, I find that we imported from the United States 1,346,678 tons, upon which $808,009 were paid in duties; I find that the Province of Ontario consumed of this quantity 1,304,867 tons, upon which a duty tons, upon which a duty $2,920. Now, it would seem was collected of $782,920. that the absurdity of placing a duty of 60 cents a ton on coal is fully illustrated, because this will not compensate for a difference in freight. The convenience to the American market compels the people of Ontario to get their coal from the other side, and virtually compels them to pay this duty: therefore it is a tax upon the manufacturing industries of Ontario without affording any relief whatever to the coal producers of the Lower Provinces.

After Recess.

Mr. RIDER. When you left the Chair, Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock, I was endeavouring to show the value of a freer and broader trade arrangement with the United States. I will now call your attention to another very important item, that of kerosene and coal oil, of which we imported for the year mentioned, 5,033,580 gallons, upon which duties were paid to the extent of $365,450. the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff), who represents in this House the principal coal oilproducing section in this country, speaking to this item the other evening, used the following words:

"In fact I believe oil to-day is made too cheap; I do not believe there is half a cent profit per gallon on it."

Mr. RIDER.

Now, I submit, if this is the result that flows from the National Policy, why should we subject the people of this country to a taxation upon an article so largely used by the farmers generally, when it affords a meagre profit to the producers of only half a cent per gallon? We must remember that this is the only available light in use by the farmers and wage-earners of this country; in cities the rich are favoured with electric lights and gas lights, but in the country parts the only available light is to be had from the use of kerosene oil; therefore, it must seem very clear that with all this duty upon oil it yet fails to protect the oil producer of this country. Again, the same result is found with oranges and lemons, upon which we find the people of Canada are taxed to the extent of 356,664. Now, it can be truly said that this tax protects no Canadian industry. The climate is against us, and it is very evident that this is taxation pure and simple. Well, now I believe that the people of Canada would be quite willing to submit to whatever taxation is necessary to carry on an economical and an honest system of Government. but they do feel that in face of the extravagance which is being brought to light by the investigations now going on by committees of this House. they are unjustly taxed, and they are taxed not to build up any industries of the country, but that the Government of the day may have so much more funds to dispose of. It has been well and truly stated that we are possessed of great natural wealth, consisting of mines, fisheries, forests, &c. Now, in regard to the item of logs, of which the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) spoke so truthfully the other evening. I find this article was the subject of about the first attempt ever made by this Government towards negotiating something like a reciprocity treaty with the United States. The export duty was removed from logs as a concession for a portion of the duty being removed from the manufactured lumber imported into the United States, and what is the result? We find that our forests, hitherto so valuable, are fast disappearing under the woodman's axe, and instead of logs being manufactured in this country, instead of being worked up here and thus furnishing labour to the very best classes of our wage-earners, and thereby providing a home market for the produce of our farmers, the raw material is being taken away from our forests to the other side of the line, and with it goes our labouring men, and there they build up homes and settle with their families to the great loss of this country. Our minerals are passing in the same We see not only car-load after car-load, but way. train after train taken away in a raw and unmanufactured condition. And what does this mean? It means that the present trade barriers are soarranged as to compel the exportation of natural products in a raw and unmanufactured condition. Had we a freer and broader trade arrangement with the United States, such as is sought by the motion of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), it would not only admit but would really compel the manufacture of these valuable products in our own country. The saving in freight alone would bring those who now use those valuable products to manufacture them here and help to build up this country, and thereby create not only a home market for our labouring men, but for our farmers who have produce to spare.

progress of this discussion, the charge of disloyalty so industriously, and if I may be allowed to add. so dishonestly hurled against the leaders of the great Liberal party during the late election for advocating freer and broader trade relations with the United States, is rapidly passing away, and the people at large, if not hon, gentlemen opposite, are beginning to realize that the so-called National Policy is proving to be a most mischievous piece of legislation. It seems that any policy which would assist in the manufacture of our raw material in our own country could not but help to build up the industries of the country. When we talk about loyalty to the mother country, when we talk about disloyalty, what do we find when we go over to the other side of the water? Do we find that there is where the first breath of disloyalty is raised? We find her capitalists leaving England with their capital, their energy, and their enterprise to build up industries in the United States. Because we have no Why? market to offer them. With all our vast natural wealth would it not be far better had we trade arrangements which would admit of our raw materials being manufactured in our country? Again, it does seem to me, that when we do not enjoy so many privileges as our neighbours living alongside of us, we cannot expect peace to prevail. Why are the people of this country, after paying 50 per cent, more for postage than do our neighbours, also called upon to pay so much more also for almost all necessary articles entering into our daily wants? It would seem from all that has been said that it would be greatly in the interests of Canada had we freer trade relations with the United States. Our interests are in common, we are of the same stock, and it seems to me that in the interests of the two countries our trade relations should be widened. We might as well endeavour to erect trade barriers between the provinces or between the municipalities of this country. were told by the Minister of Finance that interprovincial trade was growing. It seems to me that international trade should also be growing. In conclusion. I have to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you, the House, for the kind attention which has been extended to me by the hon, members of this House.

Mr. CRAIG. If it were not for the kind indulgence which is always extended to new members, I would not venture to address the House on this question, which has been so thoroughly discussed already. However, I have a few remarks to offer, and I will not occupy very much of the time of the House. I wish to say, first, that I was exceedingly it as if it were a great evil, and they talk of progratified, as I think every one must have been gratified, with the speech of the Minister of Finance. I was exceedingly pleased with his Finance. I was exceedingly pleased with his thorough and clear exposition of the finances of this country. I was pleased to learn that the predictions he had made some time ago had been fulfilled, and that a balance between expenditure and revenue was now established. I was also pleased with the hopeful tone of his speech—hopeful, but are lower in price now under the policy of not extravagant. I was pleased to learn, as no the Conservative Government than they were doubt we all were, that the credit of Canada stands under the policy of our predecessors, which policy, so high. But I believe that what pleased the it may be remarked, was a policy of protection in greater part of the people was the announcement part. A great many articles that have now a duty that the Government decided to take the duty off of 20 per cent. on them, had a duty of 17½ per cent.

From what I have been able to learn during the raw sugar and thereby relieve the country of great taxation. I am satisfied, also, that among the farmers general satisfaction was felt, as it was among members of this House, that the Government was about to take part of the duty off salt. During the late election, we heard a good deal of complaint in regard to the price of salt, arising, not so much from the duty, as from the monopoly that existed in that article, and we are glad to learn that the removal of part of the duty on salt has ied to a reduction in the price of the article. I was also glad to learn that the Government intend to make up the greater part of this deficiency, not by imposing any new taxes on the people, but by the practice of economy in all departments of the public service. I am sure that we on this side of the House, and I believe members on the other side, will give their assistance in carrying out this economy. While I do not believe in the charges of extravagance which are sometimes made. and made for party purposes, by hon, gentlemen opposite, still I am gratified to learn that the Minister of Finance and the Government desire to economize as much as possible, at the same time seeing that the public service does not suffer in any respect. During the short time I will occupy the attention of the House, I do not intend to go into any details. I think we have had a great array of figures presented to us. I think we have had a sufficient number of statistics presented; but I wish in a very brief space of time to say why I support the policy of the Conservative party. The first reason that occurs to my mind is this: the policy is a definite policy. I know what it is, and I think the people of the country understand what it is. We recognize that this country must have a revenue. I have been reminded of this fact, because in some of the speeches made by hon, gentlemen opposite they have talked as if a revenue was quite unnecessary in the government of this country. They have talked as if we could get along without any money at all; they have talked a great deal about free trade, about people being relieved of almost all their burdens, about goods coming in without paying any duty, and I wondered where the revenue was to come from. We do not talk in this way, because we know, as every one knows, that no country can be governed without a revenue. Then our policy is definite, because when we find we have to raise a revenue we place it where it will do the most good. We believe in a revenue, and we believe in placing our revenue where it will protect home industries. I have heard a great deal from hon, gentlemen opposite about protection; they do not seem to like protection at all, they look upon tection as if it raised the prices to a very large extent. I do not agree with that at all. There is no doubt that protection in some cases does raise the prices of articles, but I believe that if a careful examination is made, we shall find that in the great majority of the articles manufactured in this country, protection has not raised the price at all. In fact, I know that some articles under the Mackenzie Administration, so that it does not very well become hon, gentlemen opposite to talk so much about free trade. However, I am arguing the point that protection, in a great many cases, does not raise the prices at all. What is the effect of protection? It keeps the market for the home manufacturer, and instead of having goods made outside of this country, instead of having goods manufactured in foreign countries and brought into Canada, these goods are made here and our artizans and labouring men have the benefit of That is what I consider the true doing this work. policy, and the true effect of protection. After listening to the hon, member for Stanstead (Mr. Rider), I must admit that many of his statements were correct, and I do not wish to dispute them. We all admit that in some things the McKinley Bill was a great disadvantage to us, but this Government is not to blame in any way for that measure. We have always been ready, and we are ready to-day, to negotiate a fair reciprocity treaty with the United States; our Government and our party have always taken that stand. Some hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House have said that they do not believe we want reciprocity at all, and that in fact we are opposed to it. Well, Sir, I do not know where they find their authority for that statement. It may be that certain individual members have made the statement, but the policy announced by the Minister of Finance, and the policy announced by the Government, is, that we are ready to-day, and that we have been ready all along to make a fair reciprocity treaty with the United States. I believe, Sir, that in many things a reciprocity treaty of that kind would be of advantage to this country. I know that in the section of the country from which I come, a great deal of barley is raised, and a large trade has been done in horses and in eggs, and I know that many of the farmers feel the effects of the McKinley Bill. But, Sir, at the same time I have been told—I do not know it from my own knowledge, but I have been told-by those who live in other sections of the country, that a reciprocity treaty in all products would not be an advantage to some parts of the country. However, I am willing to say here, that we are in favour, and that I myself am in favour, of a fair reciprocity treaty in natural products. was rather surprised to hear the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Rider) say that this country does not object to taxation, but that the taxation which is now levied is not levied to protect home industries, but is levied to give the Government a corruption fund and more money to spend dishonestly. I am sorry to hear a remark of that kind made in this House, and I may say now that I am also sorry to see and read in some papers, the wholesale charges of corruption made against the Government. I believe, Sir, that the Government in power at the present time is an honest Government, and that they desire to do what is right. We all admit that there have been irregularities, we cannot close our eyes to that fact; but, Sir, I wish to say, that if we were to look back to other Governments, for instance the Government of the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House when they were in power, we might find just as grave irregularities there. Now, Sir, I say that I because it is a definite policy, and I cannot endorse articles, the manufacturers of the United States the policy of the Opposition because it is an inde-would swamp our markets. They would sell their Mr. Craig. believe in the policy of the Conservative party, finite policy. I find their policy has been called commercial union, it has been called unrestricted reciprocity, it has been called continental free trade, it has been called a general reduction of the duties, and some have gone so far as to talk about absolute free trade itself. When hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House were asked the question how they would raise the revenue, the reply was made: Change places with us and we will tell you. I do not think the country will be satisfied with an answer like that. I think that before hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House ever come to occupy the Treasury benches, they will first have to explain definitely to the country what their policy is, and how they intend to raise the revenue required for carrying on the public service of this country. It seems that their policy is a secret, because all they tell of it is: Change places and we will tell you what that policy is. Why do not they announce their policy now, for I am sure they cannot be ashamed of it? Why do not they tell us how they will raise the necessary revenue? We say that if hon, gentlemen opposite adopt this policy of unrestricted reciprocity, they must have direct They do not seem anxious to face that, yet under their policy they must face it, and if they have some other method, it is only fair to the country and fair to us on this side of the House that they should tell us what their policy is. Now Sir, what do they mean by unrestricted recipro-Do they mean a discriminating tariff against Great Britain and all the rest of the world in favour of the United States? That has been announced by some members of the Opposition, but it has been denied by others. I maintain that some of the hon, gentlemen opposite do mean discrimination against England, and I maintain that their coadjutors in the United States do mean it also. They mean that if we have unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, we must have commercial union; and that we cannot have our own duties with Great Britain and all the rest of the world, if we have free trade with the United States. I object to the policy of the Opposition, because I believe that unrestricted reciprocity, whatever it may mean, means taking the protection away from our manufacturers. It cannot mean anything else but that. I object to that, because I believe that if protection were taken away from our manufacturers they would be ruined. It has been said by some hon. gentlemen: Surely Canadians are able enough and capable enough to compete with the manufacturers in the United States. Undoubtedly they are able to compete in natural ability; but, Sir, I say that they have not the plant, and they are not doing the amount of business which would enable them to compete successfully. You take a factory in this country that is doing a business of $100,000 a year, and a factory in the United States that is doing a business of $1,000,000; and I maintain that the factory doing the business of $100,000 is not able to compete with the factory doing a business of $1,000,000. Not only do I say this, but I will add my own experience of what I have seen in the past, and I state that if our markets were thrown open, if there was absolute free trade between this country and the United States in manufactured goods in this country below cost, in order to kill out every manufacturer in Canada, and when they would have the market to themselves they would charge their own prices. That is no fanciful picture; it is what has been done before and what these men would do again. Hon gentlemen opposite may smile, but lam satisfied that every manufacturer in this country will tell you that this is the case. I heard lately about a manufacturer in Peterborough, who does quite a large business, and who is a Reformer belonging to the party of hon. gentlemen This gentleman had never before the last election cast anything but a Reform vote, but when he was told that the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite was to throw open the markets of this country to the manufacturers of the United States, then for the first time in his life he cast a Conservative vote. He had to vote that way because he was voting for his own interest; and while hon. gentlemen opposite may tell us that unrestricted reciprocity would not injure our manufacturers, and that they would be able to compete with the manufacturers of the United States, I maintain that the manufacturers themselves know best whether that is the case or not. Now, Sir, suppose our manufacturers were blotted out, our young men, our labouring men, and our artizans, working in these factories would have to go to the United States. Then the home market, which the farmers of this country appreciate so highly, notwithstanding the attempts of hon. gentlemen opposite to belittle it, would be entirely gone. But I can imagine hon, gentlemen opposite saying: Why could not the manufacturers of this country enlarge their mills and do a larger business? I answer that it would not be safe, for this reason: that that treaty might terminate at any time. How could we know how long it would last? I was myself talking to a manufacturer some time ago when this question first came up, and he said to me: "I would prefer annexation to unrestricted reciprocity, because I would know what I was doing, whereas under unrestricted reciprocity I might enlarge my capacity so as to compete in the larger market, but I might be obliged soon to close down again and lose all I invested." But I approve of the Liberal-Conservative policy, not only because it is definite, but because it is progressive. What do I mean when I say it is progressive? I mean that it keeps pace with the requirements of the I mean that it is not a cast-iron system. It sees the needs of the country and applies the remedy. Why, Sir, a few days ago a member of the Opposition taunted the members on this side with applauding when duties were put on and applauding when duties were taken off. That is That is just what we do. Our policy is to put on duties when it is in the interest of the country to put them on, and to take off duties when it is in the interest of the country to take them off. We have no cast-iron rule. We believe in protecting the industries of this country. We believe in encouraging every part of the country. We believe in encouraging the manufacturers, the labouring men, and the farmers, too. This differs very much from the policy of hon gentlemen opposite when they were in power. Why, Sir, they would not listen to advice at all. They knew all about the situation without anybody telling them anything; and when the manufacturers came to them and represented that Canada was being made a slaughter market and that their trade was being ruined, the Government offered them no relief at all; a deaf ear was turned to them. The policy of hon, gentlemen opposite was one of blindness and inaction. But I believe in the policy of this Government, not only because it is definite and progressive, but because it is patriotic. Now, I am not going to discuss the question of loyalty, or deny the loyalty of hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe they are loyal; I hope they are loyal; I have no right to arrogate loyalty to myself, and I do not intend to do so, while denying it to others. But I am not referring at this time to loyalty to the Empire, but I am referring to loyalty to Canada. What is the difference between the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party and the policy of the party represented by hon, gentlemen opposite? The party on this side of the House are hopeful of the future of this country They recognize its resources; they believe that it is a great country; and they believe that it is to Sir, we see the good become a great nation. features of this country; we see that it has good prospects; but what do we find hon, gentlemen opposite doing? We find them gloomy and disopposite doing? We find them gloomy and dispairing; we find them depreciating our country. This may be denied by some hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not mean to say that all of them do it, but I do mean to say that their representatives do it, that some of the leaders of their party do it, and the leaders to whom we look for the exposition of their policy. In order to prove this, as it may be denied, I intend to read a few selections from speeches of hon, gentlemen opposite; and in doing so I shall not go back to ancient history, but I shall read from the speech made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in this very debate. In that speech, the hon. gentleman, referring to the hon. Minister of Finance,

"Although the hon, gentleman in his time has been a professional philanthropist, nevertheless I have never believed he was at bottom a cruel-hearted man, and therefore I think it is ignorance on his part which has induced him to describe the present condition of this country as one of considerable and great prosperity, what he called a united, a happy, a prosperous, a right-minded, a progressive people. He described our prospects as of the brightest, the condition of trade a sound one, and everything was going well. Sir, I take issue in the strongest possible manner with the hon, gentleman. I do not mean to say that to-day in Canada we have reached the last stage of degradation."

The hon, gentleman was asked where all this degradation was, and he replied:

"From one end of Ontario to the other, in what were the most prosperous portions of Canada."

Again, he says:

"Well, Sir, after all said and done, why should our hon. friend desire reciprocity so long as the Government has funds? So long as the till is full that is all that the hon. gentleman feels bound to regard. It is no concern of his, it is no concern of his colleagues, it is no concern of his colleagues' paymasters and bottle-holders, how the mass of the people fare."

Sir, that is a very fine picture to draw of Canada and the Government. Then he goes on to say, and I wish hon, gentlemen opposite to notice this particularly:

"Sir, I hope and trust that the anticipations of the hon. gentleman as to a good harvest, may be fulfilled. I hope and trust that all over this country there will be a good harvest, although I am bound to say that the accounts which have reached me do not entirely confirm the statement which I understood the hon. gentleman to make."

You see the hon. gentleman is taking the pessimistic view. Then he says:

"Certain towns and cities have done well so far, although it is extremely likely they will speedily experience a check."

Then he draws a most doleful picture:

"I tell the hon, gentleman this! that were an honest national balance sheet to be struck, were we to set on one side the additional national debt, the additional municipal debt, the additional provincial debt, the additional railway debt, the immense depreciation of farm property in all the older provinces of Canada, the immense depreciation in the value of real estate in almost all the towns and villages in Canada during the last twelve years, and were we to put on the other side all that can be imagined as to the growth of wealth in a few hands, and as to the growth of wealth in two or three pet towns and cities—if such a statement were made, the result would be a demonstration that we have made no progress at all during the last twelve years in national wealth; at the best we have been but marking time."

I have but one more selection to read from the speech of the hon. gentleman. Talking about chattel mortgages, he says:

"If that proportion be extended to the other counties, it means that in prosperous Ontario, a county which, under good government, under honest government, ought to be among the most prosperous sections, not merely of North America, but of the world, one farmer in every twelve is reduced to the extremest distress, is hoisting what is a true equivalent to the black flag."

Now, Sir, I will ask hon, gentlemen on both sides of the House, whether this is a true picture of Canada to-day, whether it gives a true representation to people outside of the country, in England, in the States, in other parts of the world? I think not. I prefer the picture drawn by the hon. Minister of Finance, a picture which I maintain is not at all exaggerated, but which represents the true condition of affairs. I shall read a very few selections from that speech to confirm what I have said. The hon. Minister of Finance says:

"The decrease in trade with some of these countries was because of reasons which I have previously stated, and I may say as well in this connection, that carrying out the promise of the preceding year, the current year which we have now completed will show, not a slight but a large degree of increase of exports over the very large increase of the previous year. Our home trade, taking our country through, so far as it appears to one looking with a broad glance at it, is, on the whole, in sound condition. Some branches of our industries are flourishing, while others are not so fortunate in that respect. But taking it all in all, I think it is an opinion which will be borne out by financial men, that the trade condition of the country is a sound one if it is not a very flourishing one. Our inter-provincial trade, which year by year has been becoming more and more a factor and an incident of our development, has its steady increase, and although we have not at hand an unerring means of denoting by statistical records what the exact, increase in volume of this trade is, yet from certain large indications that we get we are assured that it is a constantly increasing factor, and that it carries with it all that increased energy and life and prosperity which comes from such a branch of industry."

Then the hon. Minister of Finance says again:

"I think we can congratulate ourselves upon the buoyant nature of the revenue of the past financial year, a revenue the largest in the history of this country, a revenue which did not come from increased taxation as a result of changes and additions to the tariff, but which is an evidence of the power of the people to buy, and consequently marks to a certain extent their prosperity and the soundness of their financial condition."

He adds further:

"I think we may say that we have a happy, a united, a progressive, and a right-minded people, who are glad to live in this country and under these institutions, who have a hopeful regard with reference to the future, and who are full of progress and activity at present."

And with reference to our exports, he says:

"And I do not fear to assert and stake my reputation on the future turn of events, when I say that, just as that waiting his opportunity.

market which, for live stock, cheese and certain other commodities, was a few years ago, very limited and has since expanded until to-day it gives to our trade millions of dollars and the certainty of remunerative prices, so it will, in regard to these other articles, follow the same line and be productive of equal profit to this country."

I have only two more selections to read from what follows:

"It, therefore, appears that the statement I made in this House three years ago, and which met with severe ridicule from hon, gentlemen opposite, comes out very nearly verified. I stated that I thought by 1891 an equilibrium ought to be had between the expense and income, taking in capital expenditure as well as expenditure on Consolidated Fund account, and this has taken place with the simple exception of $3,170, which is merely nominal."

Then, referring to the debt of the country, he says:

"The average per capita on the net debt, which is the burden of the debt on the people as shown by the payment for interest, was, in 1887-88, 179; in 1888-89, 174; in 1889-90, 165, or only 6 cents more per head than it was in 1879, before the Canadian Pacific Railway was begun to be built or the vast expenditure on canals was made."

I have read these selections from these speeches to show the difference in the picture of this country as presented by hon, gentlemen on this side compared with that presented by hon, gentlemen opposite, and to confirm what I have said regarding the gloomy and descairing view of our country taken by the Opposition. In reading over the selections from the speeches of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), I ask myself what must be the effect of these speeches abroad and what must be their effect at home. I thought, if such speeches are read by young Canadians, who are ambitious to get on, they would say: This is no country for us, a country that is sinking down lower and lower is a country we must leave; and such speeches would have the effect of driving Canadians out of the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite have many times complained that people were not coming into our country as fast as had been predicted by hon, gentlemen on this side. I believe the reason why many have not come is that they have read the speeches of the lion. member for South Oxford and the articles in the organs of the Opposition. I know that if I was living in England, Ireland or Scotland, or in any other country of the old world, and was looking out for a country to go to, I would, after reading the speeches of the hon, member for South Oxford, say that Canada is a country I must keep away from, because I have no wish to go to a country where people are hanging out the black flag, where they are burdened down with mortgages, where distress is visible on every hand. But I deny the statements of the hon member for South Oxford, and I believe that his view of the situation is not taken by very many members on his own side of the House. When I read these selections from the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford, I was reminded of a story I once heard about a missionary from India, who attended a dinner in the city of London, England, and at this dinner was a certain officer who had also spent some time in India. The missionary was talking about his work in that country, and the officer said: I have lived in India many years and have been round the people a great deal, but do not believe that missionaries do much good there, because in all my travels I never saw a single convert. The missionary was nonplussed, but controlled himself and said not a word, patiently After a while the officer began to talk about tigers, and his exploits chasing these animals. The missionary quietly said: I have lived in India many years and have travelled around a great deal, yet in all my travels I never saw a tiger; and he came to the conclusion that people only saw what they looked for. hon, member for South Oxford, in looking over this country, seeks for depression and mortgages and chattel mortgages, and wants to see these things, in order to show the people that they are being ruined by this Government. It is all done for party effect, but I think it is not at all patriotic. I think it is the very opposite, and I do not approve of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, because it is not a patriotic policy. I say that this policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and their gloomy and despairing speeches, have the very effect of preventing any good trade relations being made with the United States. I maintain that their speeches lead the people on the other side of the line to think that we must come some day and ask to be annexed to that country. I had occasion to spend a short time in the State of California, and while I was there I made several friends, and many of them asked me: Do you not think Canada will soon be annexed to the United States. I said: "No." They were surprised, as they thought there was a strong annexationist sentiment on this side. My children were there attending school, and the teacher taught in the school that Canada would soon be annexed to the United States; and not only that, but on a holiday there, Washington's birthday, they had a celebration in which a great many ladies belonging to the school were dressed to represent the different states of the Union; and at one part of the performance a young lady came representing Canada, and asked if she would not be admitted. I mention these facts to show that the people of the United States, many of them, do think that in a short time we must come into the Union, and, therefore, they do not care to make a treaty with Canada at all. Where do they get this idea? Not, I am sure, from any speeches made on this side; not from any speeches made by Conservatives, not from any articles written in Conservative organs, but from speeches made by gentlemen on the other side, representing this country as going down so fast that it will soon be willing to drop into the arms of the Americans. After all, Sir, annexation is the logical inference to be drawn from the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, Sir, if the United States are so prosperous as hon, gentlemen opposite keep repeating to us they are, and if we are so impoverished, if in the United States prosperity reigns supreme at all times and everybody rich and there are no depressions, and if Canada is going fast to ruin, what better could we do than to join with them; and the people of the United States see that and argue from that point, and judge entirely Canada from the speeches made by hon, gentlemen opposite. The Liberal-Conservative party does not believe in the ruin and despair We have faith in our country. There are not so many millionaires here as in the United States. but I do not believe that is any disadvantage. lieve that, take the masses of the people all over the country, and I have had some opportunities of observation, they are as prosperous as the people of the United States. Our record in the past few might point to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I might point to the many towns which to-day are growing rapidly. I have in my mind to-day one town which is rapidly advancing, which I have occasion sometimes to see, and I do not doubt many other towns all over the country are advancing just as rapidly. Our prospects for the future are bright. We have a great deal to contend with, there is no doubt of that, but Canadians are not easily daunted, and what we want at the present time is a rest from new schemes and new plans. I believe these new schemes have been a great drawback to the country. The country is frequently agitated by one thing and another being brought forward in order to disquiet the people. What we want is a progressive and economical Government, and that I believe we have, and, if we wish to succeed, the people must have what gentlemen on this side of the House have, faith in our country and a patriotic desire to serve it.

Mr. FLINT. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, listened as I did with a great deal of interest to the very straightforward and pleasing address of the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Craig), but I have no doubt that you, like myself, were somewhat surprised and perhaps pained to learn that so patriotic a gentleman is educating his children in the neighbouring republic, and that these interesting scions of his flock are growing up amid such dangerous surroundings. have no doubt that my hon. friend, who has no greater admirer in this House than myself, will soon withdraw his children from such dangerous associations and will bring them up more correctly from a political point of view. The bulk of his remarks in reference to the trade policy of the country will doubtless be more or less extensively referred to by other speakers, and I will not, therefore, dwell at length upon his speech in that respect. The first observation I refer to is not peculiar to the hon. gentleman himself, but has, I believe, been dwelt upon with more or less effusiveness and declamation, in proportion to the disposition and temperament of the speaker, by every hon, gentleman on the other side who has addressed the House, and that refers to the relations of the Liberal party to the neighbouring republic. The opinion is advanced without hesitation on the other side of the House and has been elaborated by almost every speaker on that side, that the leaders of the Liberal party and the bulk of the Liberal party are at heart annexationists, and that the whole tendency of their policy is to bring about political union with the United States. Of course we do not expect those hon, gentlemen to produce evidence of this. They produce what they think is evidence, but it can be easily shown that the few scraps of what they call evidence are unworthy of the attention of any candid mind. The House must have been amused at the solemn manner in which that eloquent gentleman, the hora member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), warned this House against the machinations of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and his friends. He was followed by the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), whose abilities are known and respected in this House, and who, notwithstanding the calm and deliberate manner in which he gave his views, uttered them with a force and an years has not been one of standing still. I intensity which probably gave more weight to them than if they had come from almost any other member of this House. The hon, member said, referring to the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton):

"The hon, gentleman tells us that he has read the speech three times, has read it from beginning to end, that he only regretted that time did not permit him to read it in this House. No doubt the House would be glad to hear that speech, but the hon, gentleman can have it printed and circulated throughout the country. I will give the hon, gentleman another suggestion. He may give the hon, gentleman another suggestion. He may perhaps have read the whole proceeding at that meeting. He may have read the speech delivered by Governor Bullock on that occasion, when he said that the object Bullock on that occasion, when he said that the object the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was advocating could best be accomplished by making that hon, gentleman a Senator for the State of Ontario. I would suggest that the hon, gentleman should incorporate Governor Bullock's speech in his pamphlet. There was another speech delivered on that occasion to which I would also invite the hon, gentleman's attention, as it may have escaped him. That is the speech delivered by the chairman of that meeting. The chairman said:

"Our Liberal friends, Fielding and Longley in Nova Scotia: Davies, in Prince Edward Island: Mercier and Laurier in Quebec: Cartwright in Ontario, look to us, the people of the United States, for the sign by which they shall conquer."

I desire to say, and I think I am speaking the unanimous sentiments of the members on this side of the House, that we recognize in the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) not only an able and consistent but a truly patriotic public man, and that we fail to discover in any line that he has addressed either to the people of Canada or the people of the United States, either at banquets in the United States, or in this House, or on the hustings, or the public platform in the late campaign, anything which will give cause for the animadversions which have been cast upon him. I have carefully studied the course of that hon. gentleman, and I believe there is no more devoted servant of the people of Canada, no truer friend of the best interests of the people of Canada, than the hon, member for South Oxford. I defy any hon, gentleman opposite, by any fair mode of criticism, to place his finger upon one syllable or one line which will give colour to their contentions in respect of his loyalty to Canada and its people. Though it may take some time, I propose to read those portions of the speeches at the meeting in Boston which have been so severely animadverted upon. The banquet was given by some of the prominent merchants of Boston for the purpose of promoting reciprocity in trade between this country and the United States. That was the object of the meeting. A great many very influential gentlemen were invited to attend it. It was ential gentlemen were invited to attend it. presided over by one of the foremost merchants of Boston, the Hon. Jonathan Lane, who is well known in many of the cities in this country. first speaker called upon was the Hon. Henry H. Sprague, president of the State Senate of Massachusetts, who, after referring to the general trade. relations which the United States had with several countries, said:

"The people of Massachusetts especially rejoice to clasp the hands of their neighbours to the north and the south, who share the same desires for constitutional libeatt."

That is, that those in Canada share the same feelings and desires for constitutional liberty in Canada as those to the south do in their respective count-

"For that liberty protected by law which our ancestors sought to secure, and which promotes the political, social and material welfare of all the people. Difference of Mr. FLINT.

climate, of geographical position, of race, make our fruits, our products, our manufactures often diverse, but a common continent and common wants and common aspirations unite us by ties stronger than those of race or climate. And so the merchants of Boston and all the citizens of Massachusetts cordially sympathize with the recent efforts which have been made to strengthen the bonds of brotherhood between the nations of this continent, to open great highways by land and by sea from Hudson Bay to Cape Horn, and to unite all the people—" son Bay to Cape Horn, and to unite all the people-To unite the people in political union?

"to unite the people in friendly and commercial alli-nce. They believe that locomotives and ships are the messengers of peace, and steel rails the bonds of friend-

Do gentlemen opposite deny these statements? Are they prepared to say that there is one syllable in the observations of the President of the State Senate, which looks even remotely to political union? He went on to say:

"I assure your guests that the state unites with you-The hon, member for South Oxford was one of the guests.-

-"in welcoming them here to-night in the bonds of reciprocal interests and extend to them its heartiest hospitality."

The speech following was by a prominent alderman of the city of Boston, Mr. Carruth, and he stated, after his introduction by the president, that it was an agreeable duty to him to extend to the honoured guests the welcome of the city of Boston. went on to say:

"To our friends and the representatives of our kith and kin beyond our northern frontier, partners with ourselves in the development of this magnificent continent, I bid a most hearty welcome. To our brothers from our sister commonwealths of the south who have been the promoters of that magnificent development of that section which causes a joy and rejoicing to every true American heart (applause) I bid, also, a most hearty welcome. Mr. President, the merchants of Boston are practically a unit in favour of a larger and a freer, and in fact the freest possible trade with our neighbours of Canada and of Mexico."

Will hon, gentlemen opposite stand up and say that there is a scheme going on for the political union of Mexico with the United states, and that the speeches at this meeting which were to promote reciprocal trade, had also the underhand design of promoting the political union with the United States, of Cuba, of the South American Republics?--for the observations in the speeches and the addresses made at the meeting treated Canada in precisely the same terms and in the same language as they treated these other great states and republics in various portions of the world with which they were seeking reciprocal trade re-lations. The president finally addressed the meeting in introducing the honoured guest of the evening, and if there is one line or syllable in the whole of his address which even remotely looks to political union, I, for one, would be thankful, and I believe gentlemen on this side of the House would be thankful, if those who are so constantly quoting from that speech, giving shreds and patches here and there from his remarks, would quote a word or two, which looked even remotely to a connection of a political character between Canada and the United States. At the risk of being tedious, I will read quite extensively from the remarks of the president of that meeting. He savs:

"And now, gentlemen, we are about to present to you one of the most eminent of the Liberal party of Canada, and the subject upon which he will speak—'the unrestricted exchange of all the products of both countries'—will insure to the man and the cause alike your instant appreciative and, I trust, enthusiastic confidence and good-will.

The "cause" that he refers to, the cause that all the speakers at the banquet are referring to, is not political union, to which there is not an allusion or a hint, but the cause is unrestricted reciprocity between Canada and the United States.

"Indeed, I may say that the Liberal Englishman is an old friend to all of us. He makes us recall those early days when on the school-house rostrum we declaimed the stirring words of Isaac Barre and Edmund Burke, those ancient Whigs and Liberals of the days of George III. And in our own generation how thoroughly identified he And in our own generation how thoroughly identified he is in our minds with his contemporaries in the mother country, Bright, Foster. Cobden, Tom Hughes (your illustrious townsman), Goldwin Smith, and a host of others, who saw so much clearer and wiser the nature of the conflict in our great civil war, and to whom north and south are alike indebted for its safe issue.

"In this presence may I not appropriately add that we deem it just to include in the great political influences which in this struggle we count on the Liberal side, the steady, sagacious mind, and the truth-discerning womanly heart of England's illustrious Queen."

Is that a sentiment expressed by the chairman of this meeting which would not be received with rapturous applause by any audience in the Dominion of Canada, that he counted in favour of reciprocal trade relations and the cultivation of this brotherly feeling between the two countries which was alluded to throughout the meeting, upon the noble influence of the Queen of England? Would any man, standing before an intelligent and cultivated audience in the Athens of America, venture to treat his Canadian guests with that disrespect which would be implied in his alluding to political union? He goes on to say:

"The situation and the question, so far as Canada is

"The situation and the question, so far as Canada is concerned, are not what they were three years ago, when on this spot we had so vigorous and varied a discussion of the subject, which we then called 'better commercial relations with Canada,' with special reference to the fishery difficulty.

"There has been a great onward movement in the public mind. Nobody here thinks of a new treaty, and, although the Conservative party of Canada may cling to that hope, it is in vain. Note Mr. Blaine's reply to Representative Baker in this morning's papers. A free exchange of all products is the simple plan embodied in that well-known resolution reported from the Committee on well-known resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and now lying on the Speaker's table of the House of Representatives at Washington."

He goes on, speaking of this Bill:

"If it shall pass both Houses of Congress it would become the vital issue in the next general election in Canada."

Then comes in the quotation that has been harped upon by intelligent and educated gentlemen on the other side of the House, that has been torn entirely from its context and read to this House time and again as if it referred to political union. Immediately after referring to the resolution which was reported to the House of Representatives, and which lay upon the table of the House of Representatives at that moment, he says:

"Our Liberal friends, Fielding and Longley of Nova Scotia, Davies of Prince Edward Island. Mercier and Laurier of Quebec, Cartwright of Ontario, and a host besides, look to us, the people of the United States, for 'the sign by which they shall conquer.' Can we deny them?"

And yet gentlemen sitting in this House have the assurance to quote this language away from its context, as if the eloquent chairman of that meeting was referring to some scheme of political union between this country and the United States. The remark made in that connection by the chairman we have to meet, and the great obstacles which the

If we, upon this side of the line, are looking for better trade relations than hon, gentlemen opposite are willing to ask for or to seek, then is it not perfectly justifiable that we should look to the merchants of the United States, that we should look to influential members of Congress of the United States, for the sign by which we should endeavour to encourage our own people in the hope and expectation that we could secure the relations that we believe to be most favourable to the interests of the people of this country? Are we not constantly taunted from the other side of the House, and upon every political platform in the Dominion, that we have no evidence that the people of the United States would ever accept unrestricted reciprocity? Are we not told time and again that we are seeking an illusion, that we are chasing a will-o'-the-wisp, that the people of the United States will have nothing whatever to do with our scheme? I could give hundreds of quotations, if time permitted, from public men and from the press of the United States, which show abundant signs that we have great reason to expect that the people of that country will go in for full and unrestricted reciprocity between the two coun-But the chairman went on further to speak of the Dominion of Canada:

"The whole region of Canada will, when this commercial union is established, become as if she were so many vast territories added to our domain."

And yet hon, gentlemen take this from its context and state that it refers to a political union. There is not a syllable in all the speeches made on that occasion to give any hint that any such meaning was intended. Canada was to be added commercially to their domains. Is not the opposite entirely true, that if we, under a treaty of reciprocity of any kind, are added to the domain of the United States for commercial purposes, then the whole vast continent of the United States is added to our domain likewise, and because we commercially add a population of 65,000,000 to our domain for commercial purposes, are we therefore disloyal to the people of Canada, disloyal to the manufacturers of Canada, or disloyal to any interest of Canada? I think, on the other hand, it is clear we are most loyal to the true interests of the Dominion of Canada and of every man seeking to obtain a livelihood in this country. He adds:

"This plan does not mean Customs union."

Mr. Lane's opinion is in direct opposition to the opinion advanced by many hon, gentlemen opposite. He says:

"The Custom-houses are likely for a time at least to remain, and so far as importations of non-American goods and products are concerned, can well frame a tariff to meet her need." her needs.

These are the views of the chairman of the meeting, a man of great intelligence and wide influence. He also went on to speak in high terms of a gentleman connected with this House at one time, and of Conservative leanings, and he spoke highly of the late Senator Macdonald, of Toronto. He alludes to another matter:

We are not unmindful of the fact that the agricultural interests of this country are claimed to be opposed to this Canadian reciprocity."

I believe that is correct. I have quotations which I may read to show that the great obstacles which of that meeting was perfectly just and proper. Government will have to meet, even in their partial reciprocity, are the objections made by the agricultural interests of the United States. And the reason why the agriculturists of the United States are imbued with these objections are the very reasons which are actuating hon, gentlemen opposite to oppose reciprocity in natural products. They are saying of the farmers of Canada precisely what hon gentlemen opposite are saying of the farmers of the United States. Both of these statements cannot be true. Either the farm products of the United States are so much cheaper than our own, that they will come in and ruin our farmers, or the farm products of Canada are so much cheaper that they will flood the United States and reduce the prices of farm products in that country. We will leave hon, gentlemen opposite to argue themselves out of the dilemma in which this statement places them. He goes on to say:

"To this demonstration against Canada we reply: These votes against Canadian reciprocity, by the returns, are shown to have come from the farmers of New England and the Middle States, a majority of whom, no doubt, honestly imagine they will lose a real present advantage, while the central, north-western, western, Pacific and great southern states either are not heard from to any extent in this tabulated statement or vote the other way. Again, I beg to suggest what would be the probable result of the same enquiry, put to vote among the 1,250,000 people living in the cities alone of this commonwealth." this commonwealth.

There is no doubt of the substantial truth of this statement. The agricultural products of the Dominion will be sold to a very large extent in the great cities which are located and developing along and near the boundary between the United States and Canada. Then, after the observations made by those gentlemen on commercial topics alone, without the slightest allusion made to political topics, the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) rose to accept the honours which were conferred on him by that fine meeting. I must say that I am surprised that hon, gentlemen of the education, of the talent, and of the influence of some of those who have spoken on the other side of the House, should have referred to the able, masterly, statesmanlike and patriotic speech of the hon, member for South Oxford, delivered in that distant city, in the terms they have used. One would suppose the hon. member for South Oxford had offered to sell his country, to give it away freely to the United States, and had generally acted the part of a craven and a traitor before an alien people. The hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) used very strong language in reference to the speech of the hon, member for South Oxford on that occa-I will read a few remarks from the speech of the hon, member for South Oxford, although they may have been read already, because I think any candid student of these speeches could not find in it any statement which would convey the idea that the hon, member was less patriotic than the most burning patriot on the other side of the House. The hon, gentleman opened his observations by stating that this matter of reciprocity between the two countries had two aspects, a business aspect, and a political aspect, and speaking to an assemblage of business men he would only speak of its business aspect. Consequently, throughout the whole of the speech of the hon, member for South Oxford, it must be borne in mind that he was speaking solely and purely upon the business aspect of Canada, after enlarging on her resources, he says: Mr. FLINT.

unrestricted reciprocity between Canada and the United States. He says:

"As to the advantages which perfect free trade with the United States would confer on Canada it is not necessary for me to speak here. It is pretty certain you all entertain a wholesome belief that it would be a very fine thing for Canada, and I will not dispute the fact—on the contrary, I recognize it fully and frankly. Only while I admit it will be a good thing for us, I think I can show that it will also be a good thing for you."

"But of late, Sir, there has been a curious inversion of ideas, the old doetrine, of which I confess myself an humble believer, was that all true commerce was a mutually profitable exchange."

But hon, gentlemen opposite are arguing constantly as if they believed that trade and commerce meant loss to the purchaser inevitably, and inevitably loss either to the purchaser or to the seller. They speak of a certain amount of purchase of goods by the people of Canada from the people of the United States as if it meant some great sacrifice and loss, as if a purchaser would purchase one dollar's worth if it was not to afford him either some fancied or some real profit, either some pleasure to the imagination or some actual physical benefit to himself personally. All trade, then, must be considered as mutually profitable to the buyer as well as to the seller, to the consumer as well as to the He continues: producer.

"By which both parties benefited, and that the fewer obstacles between such exchange the richer the world would be."

He went on in eloquent and strong terms, that I need not quote here, to elaborate this thought. He says:

"Sir, I have no wish to mislead you. The trade of the United States is certainly worth more to us collectively than ours is to them. That is a manifest truth. But so is this also—free trade with Canada will benefit quite as many of the people of the United states as of the people of Canada, and to quite as large an extent. Man for man, you will gain quite as much as we will, and Canada does not come as a beggar, asking for the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table. Canada offers and Canada desires only a fair exchange and no robbery, and I for one desires only a fair exchange and no robbery, and I for one am as anxious as yourselves that in such exchange you make dollar for dollar, because I know well that thus, and thus only, can any lasting and permanent arrangement be secured."

For about two pages in the most eloquent eulogy I ever read of the resources, of the hopes, of the aspirations, of the boundless capacity and ability of the people of Canada, the hon, member for South Oxford regaled that influential and intelligent as-He spoke of what Canada had to offer sembly. by way of trade, of her mighty water stretches, of her great resources in the North West, of her fisheries, of her mines, of her shipping and her agriculture, and he painted Canada as she has never before been pictured to the American mind, probably in language not surpassed since the famous speech of the famous Nova Scotian orator at Detroit. Yet hon, gentlemen opposite stand up and say the hon, member for South Oxford and his followers are always preaching blue ruin and taking a pessimistic and gloomy view of the situation. I could quote from the speeches of the hon, member for South Oxford, if time permitted, and if it were appropriate, more eloquent remarks on the resources, and abilities, and energies, and hopes, and aspirations of Canada, than could be cited from all the observations made from the other side of the House during the last ten years. Speaking of

"I think I may claim that we have something to give as well as you, and that there is very good reason to think that between two such countries as yours and ours there is room for much profitable exchange. As to who on your side would profit most, I cannot speak as to the future. But in the present, I take it the immediate gainers would be, first, the whole northern belt of states which adjoin the Dominion of Canada, and second and especially the group of North-Eastern States, of which your good city of Boston may fairly be called the commercial capital. The advantages of your position for securing a very large part of our trade are great. You own, as I have said, much of our mineral wealth, Many of our chief trade routes centre here. You are the natural shipping port, especially in winter, for very large sections of our territory. You lie within very easy distances of our chief cities, and of the most populous portions of our Dominion. In one word, given free trade with Canada, and you rise at one stride from the position in some respects of a frontier city, with no great extent of trade territory secured to you, to that of a central entrepot, with the practical monopoly of a that between two such countries as yours and ours there of a central entrepot, with the practical monopoly of a great region behind you, whose commerce no man can take away from you."

And yet, gentlemen on the other side of the House have quoted these words, as if they meant that the city of Boston, that the States of New England, and that the entrepot of New York were to take away the trade of the whole Dominion of Canada. They quoted these remarks as if they meant ruin and decay to the people of the Dominion of Canada, instead of signifying as they do the upbuilding of vast industries, the incoming of unnumbered thousands, the development of the mines to an unlimited extent, and the awakening up of the whole of the Dominion of Canada, to new hopes, new life and new possibilities. Gentlemen on the other side of the House take a narrow, a dismal, and a hopeless view of the situation under reciprocal trade arrangements. If there were any charges of narrowness to be made, I think we could easily show that these charges could be levelled with great force against gentlemen on the other side of the House. They do not seem to appreciate the position under free trade: they are looking upon the state of things which would exist under a full measure of reciprocity, with narrow and purblind vision. They seem to think they will then be living under the stagnant and restricted conditions under which we are living at present, when, on the contrary, the whole continent will be awakened into new life and vitality, when our railways, our canals and our water reaches will be alive with traffic, and all kinds of unlimited possibilities are opened up by this free, full, easy and natural interchange of all products between the United States and the Dominion of Canada. I might here refer to the speech of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) in which he took the same despondent line of argument, and in which he referred to the leaders of the Liberal party in this House, and to some who professed to act with the Liberal party outside of this House, but who are not the exponents or spokesmen of the Liberal party. He spoke of the visits of politicians and others from the Dominion of Canada to the United States; he referred to letters passing back and forth, and he indicated that they were signals directing how the plot was going on to annex this country to the United States, and that these interchanges of communications were nothing but signals thrown out by which these conspirators and plotters could betray their country. I can tell the hon, gentleman that all that has been done by the public men of the two countries has been done openly and above board, and I will quote some of the remarks made by prominent politicians on the other side of the line, in connection with this subject, to prove to him what is intended by the leading men on both sides of the line. We have the reports of Congressional Committees on this subject, and let us glance at them to see how far the insinuations, for they are nothing else; how far the suspicions, for they are nothing else: how far the fears, for they are nothing else, of hon, gentlemen opposite are supported by the remarks of gentlemen on the other side of the line, who spoke on the question of reciprocity between these two great countries. The resolution moved by Mr. Butterworth of the United States Congress was called "A Bill to provide for full reciprocity between the United States and the Dominion of Canada." The preamble recited amongst other things:

"Whereas controversies have arisen and are now exist-ing between the Government of the United States and the Government of the Dominion of Canada, growing out of Government of the Dominion of Canada, growing out of the construction of treaties affecting fishing interests; and whereas, by reason of the contiguity of the two countries and the similarity of the interests and occupations of the people thereof, it is desired by the United States to re-move all existing controversies and all causes of contro-versy in the future, and to promote and encourage busi-ness and commercial intercourse between the people of both countries, and to promote harmony between the two Governments, and to enable the citizens of each to trade both countries, and to promote harmony between the two Governments, and to enable the citizens of each to trade with the citizens of the other without restriction, and irrespective of boundaries, as fully and freely as though there was no boundary line between the two countries: Therefore, be it enacted that when it shall be certified to the President of the United States by the proper officials of the Government of the said Dominion of Canada that the said last-named Government, by Act of Parliament, has authorized the admission into the ports of said Government of all articles of trade and commerce produced in the United States, free of duty, the President shall make proclamation thereof, and shall likewise proclaim that all articles produced in the said Dominion of Canada shall be admitted into all the ports of the United States free of duty, and such articles shall be so admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty so long as the said Dominion of Canada shall admit the products of the United States, as herein provided for, into her ports free of duty. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President of the United States, in connection with the proper officials of the Government of the said Dominion of Canada, to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Act, and to protect the said respective Governments against the importation of foreign goods through either, into the other; and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall farnish to the Customs officers of the United States such rules and regulations for the purpose of guiding them in the discharge of their duties in respect to the protection of each of the said Governments against improper importation of foreign goods as herein contemplated."

Could anything be more laudable on the part of Governments, and to enable the citizens of each to trade herein contemplated

Could anything be more laudable on the part of the United States than that? We have a formal letter written by Mr. Hitt on this subject, and we see that, throughout the whole of that letter, dealing very thoroughly with this question, there is no allusion, no intimation, that political union is looked to or intended:

"Partial arrangements and half-way measures must fail hereafter, as they have all failed heretofore, and troubles arise again. The reason lies in the position and circumstances of the two nations. Canada, however large it may appear on the map; is really a long, unequal strip of population, extending from east to west thousands of miles, everywhere right beside us. The portions or provinces along the line differ widely, in many respects, but they agree in this, that they seem to be less to each other than to the states close at hand.

"The natural lines of commerce for the exchange of products are not so much east and, west as north and south. It is the unlike products coming from different latitudes that seek exchange. Intercourse, active and profitable, there will always be between this country and Canada. Restrictions irritate, and are always liable to breed troubles. Now, if they can be removed without injury to either party the Canadian question will disappear, and two harmonious peoples will flourish beside each other with mutual good-will and respect."

Does that look like a scheme to mingle those two harmonious people into one nation? He goes on to say:

"Many of our people distrust reciprocity treaties and changing revenue laws by diplomacy. That is the proper work of Congress, and of Congress alone. Some would fear that a common tariff with a foreign country would make the whole system unchangeable in any particular without the consent of both, and thus practically put it beyond the power of Congress, where the constitution puts it. But we can at any time withdraw from a commercial union if it works unfairly, and no power can be taken from Congress, or be even limited, except by the action of Congress itself. Perhaps a vague apprehension of annexation would be felt, but with general discussion of the subject, and its business aspects, this would disappear. They would soon realize that our citizens are no longer eager to incorporate new peoples. * * *"

If time permitted I could give a large number of quotations from the statements and writings of leading men of the United States, who favour reciprocity solely upon the grounds of its commercial advantages, of its removing all causes of dispute between this country and Great Britain, or between Great Britain and the United States, and its creating a brotherhood of nations upon this continent. While upon this subject it may perhaps be well to finish my remarks which come within the limit and scope of the argument I intend to propose to-night, on the whole question of loyalty or disloyalty as connected with reciprocity. It has been pointed out from this side of the House, how absurd and ridiculous it is to say that upon one side of a trade line, you will find loyalty, and by the addition or subtraction of some other elements in that trade, you will find the most blatant disloyalty. The subject of reciprocity between Canada and the United States is one of the most familiar to the political student of Canadian history. From 1854 to 1866, we had a reciprocity treaty which on all hands was acknowledged to have been of great advantage to the Dominion of Canada, and on many hands, to have been of great advantage to the United States. After that treaty expired, negotiations were on foot, on four or five separate occasions, looking to a renewal of that treaty, with extensions and modifications, as suggested by the Government preceding the late elections. I would like to call the attention of the House to the very peculiar circumstance, that the predecessors of the Liberal Government, led by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), actually entered into negotiations, through formal channels, with the people of the United States, for the very unrestricted reciprocity that the Liberals upon this side of the House now advocate; in fact that they entered into negotiations for reciprocity of a character more open to criticism than that which the Liberal party to-day is advocating in this House and in the country. In 1870 Mr. Huntington moved a resolution demanding the right on the part of the Dominion of Canada to negotiate treaties on its own behalf, and also in favour of more extended commercial relations with other portions of the world, including the United States of America. In the course of his very able speech, Mr. Huntington said:

"I say that in the preliminary negotiations between the Hon. Mr. Rose and Mr. Secretary Fish it was agreed that the manufactures of both countries should be admitted duty free, and hon, gentlemen cannot deny it.

" It was the intention of the Government to include the manufactures of the United States in the preliminary agreement for reciprocal trade. " I was placed in possession of these facts."

Mr. FLINT.

This startled the House somewhat, because the public were generally unaware that such negotiations had been entered into. Sir Francis Hincks stated that the hon, gentleman had been misinformed as to the scope of the negotiations. The Hon. Mr. Huntington then repeated his statement, and Sir John Macdonald stated in reply:

"The communications were altogether unofficial and confidential, and the hon. Minister of Finance would be guilty of a breach of honour. &c., if he revealed confidential communications, unless he had the consent of the parties."

The Hon. Mr. Huntington nevertheless repeated and insisted upon his statement. The Hon. Mr. Dorion, since deceased, then advocated a large measure of reciprocity between the two countries, looking to an exchange of manufactured goods as well as natural products. The Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, during the same debate, referred to the arrangement proposed in 1865, mentioned by Mr. Huntington, and stated that, in his opinion, the Government of the day had gone too far in seeking reciprocity of the character they had. Sir John Macdonald stated that it was not the Canadian Government which had sought the extended reciprocity alluded to, but that it had been proposed by the United States Minister, the Hon. Mr. McCullough, the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Mackenzie said :

"The hon, gentleman will not get away from me in that way. There was a Minute of Council which I saw when I was invited to join the Government—which proposed a system of reciprocal legislation."

He went on to say:

"What I wish to point out is: that this hon, gentleman at that time was willing to go beyond his powers in order to accomplish by unlimited reciprocal legislation the objects which a treaty would otherwise have obtained."

The subject then seemed to pass from discussion. There was the statement made by the Hon. Mr. Huntington that in the negotiations between the Conservative Government of that day and the United States Government, the former had offered to admit United States' manufactures free of duty on reciprocal terms, together with assimilation of the Excise and Customs tariffs of the two countries, the enlargement of the canals, and a joint arrangement for the management and keeping in repair of the canals, and other particulars; but the matter had to rest on the assertions of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie and the Hon. Mr. Huntington on the one hand, and the partial denials of the late Premier on the other hand. In 1875 this whole subject was revived by the late Hon. George Brown in the Senate of Canada; and I will quote at length the language he used on that occasion in describing the nature of the negotiations which had been under-Mr. Brown said, confirming the statements of Messrs. Huntington and Mackenzie:

"Since 1866 there have been several negotiations with the United States for the renewal of the old treaty. In the negotiations of 1865-66 for a renewal of the treaty, offers were made to the American Government by our then Finance Minister, Sir A. T. Galt. which, in my opinion, ought not to have been made. The Government then existing in Canada was the Coalition Government, formed in 1864 for the special purpose of carrying Confederation of the whole British North American provinces. I was a member of that Government, and, as is well known, it was in consequence of the policy adopted by my hon, colleagues in the conduct of the reciprocity negotiations, that I felt compelled to resign my position as President of the Executive Council. I resigned because I felt very strongly that though we in Canada derived great advantage from the treaty of 1854, the American people derived still greater advantage from it. I had no objection to that, and was quite ready to renew the old treaty, or even to extend it largely on fair terms of reciprocity. But I was not willing to ask for a renewal as a favour to Canada—I was not ing to ask for a renewal as a favour to Canada—I was not willing to offer special inducements for renewal, without fair concessions in return—I was not willing that the canals and inland waters of Canada should be made the joint property of the United States and Canada, and be maintained at their joint expense. I was not willing that the Customs and Excise duties of Canada should be assimilated to the prohibitory rates of the United States, and very especially was I unwilling that any such arrangement should be entered into with the United States, dependent on the frail tenure of reciprocal legislation, repealable at any moment at the caprice of either party. repealable at any moment at the caprice of either party.

* • My colleagues determined to proceed in the manner I deprecated: I could not be responsible for such a policy, and to avoid responsibility for it I resigned office.

• • More than one effort was made by the late (fovernment for the renewal of the old treath between 1966). ernment for the renewal of the old treaty between 1866 and 1869. In 1869 formal negotiations were entered into with the American Government, and the project of a treaty was presented for discussion. The negotiations continued from July, 1869, to March, 1870. This project included the cession, for a term of years, of our fisheries to the United States; the enlargement and enjoyment of our canals; the free enjoyment of the navigation of the St. Lawrence; the assimilation of our Customs and Excise duties; the concession of an import duty caual to the induties; the concession of an import duty equal to the internal revenue taxes of the United States; and the free admission into either country of certain manufactures of the other. This negotiation ended abruptly in March, 1870, but it is instructive to observe the Gov-ernment has always held the most liberal views as to the considerations in any treaty of reciprocity.

What will the country and this House think of hon. gentlemen who are now so vigorously denouncing as traitors of the blackest dye men who are proposing a scheme of reciprocity by no means as extensive as that proposed by Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues on two occasions to the Government of the United States—a scheme wherein they offered and pressed their offer, notwithstanding the warnings of the Hon. George Brown and his resignation—not for a treaty for a definite term of years, with powers of extension, not a treaty which must be adhered to only so long as the terms were kept by the two countries, but a scheme of reciprocal legislation by which the Customs and Excise taxes were to be assimilated, and canals enlarged and managed jointly by the Governments of the two countries? And I venture to say, from the temper that I have noticed on the part of a large number of Conservatives of the Dominion of Canada for the last few years, that if the present Government were now to wheel around and accept such a proposition as this, their supporters would follow them blindly without a word of remonstrance. At any rate, the whole Conservative party of that day, for the purpose of building up this Confederation, among its first acts, pressed upon the United States Government a scheme of reciprocity infinitely more dangerous, even from their own standpoint, than the scheme of reciprocity advocated on this side of the House on the present occasion; and I would like to know how hon, gentlemen opposite, having this piece of history in their minds, are able to laud to the skies the patriotism and the nobility of character of their late lamented leader, and in the same breath denounce the hon, member for South Oxford as the craven of cravens for advocating a scheme of reciprocity infinitely superior to the scheme proposed by the Government of that day. But hon, gentlemen insist and continue to insist that at the present time they are united, that they are a happy family, that they know exactly what they want, that they have definite views on all these subjects, and have always had them. The hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), in his able speech, said that strong and clear declaration made on the part of the the Government, as far back as 1878, when in Opposition, had well-defined views as to what they wanted and the results to which their policy would But, Sir, we had the strange spectacle no later than last session, or, at any rate, the session before, of a Government openly divided against itself-of leading members of the Government opposing the policy of the Government upon this very ground. We found a number of members of the Government pronouncing in favour of reciprocity in natural products, and we found at the same time Mr. Colby, then the President of the Council, openly denouncing reciprocity in natural products. We found the esteemed Minister of Marine and Fisheries denouncing upon every platform in Nova Scotia, particularly in the eastern portion of that province, the very idea of any reciprocity in coal; we found him scouting the very idea that the duties would ever be taken off coal, to the detriment of the mining interests of the eastern portion of Nova Scotia; and we found him stating that, no matter what sort of reciprocity would be adopted, the coal duties would be retained. But, on the other hand, we found his then leader, the late Premier of this country, putting himself upon record in a letter to a congressman, dated July 1890, in which he lays down his views with regard to the duties on coal, as follows:-

"My Dear Sir,—In answer to your esteemed note of this date, I desire to say that I am assured that the Par-liament of Canada will be ready to take off all Customs duty on coal, ores and lumber imported from the United States whenever Congress makes these articles free of

What a spectacle have we witnessed during this very discussion in this House? The Government went to the country upon the express desire to secure the opinion of the people upon the subject While everyone must deprecate of reciprocity. the terms and the tone in which the proclamations were made through the press and by the Government in connection with that subject, and must feel humiliated at the position in which the Government has been placed by the statements of the Secretary of State of the United States regarding who made the first overtures, yet there is no doubt the Government professed itself before the people of this country to be in favour of a renewal of the reciprocity treaty of 1854 substantially, with some modifications yet undecided. Yet we have seen member after member at the back of the Government rise in this House and denounce the very idea of reciprocity, in language as strong as that used by the ex-president of the Council. find a divided party, and we are not certain at this hour whether there is not a divided Government. We have had no declaration from the members of the Government on this important subject; and I think that long ere this in the debate, there should have been a Ministers themselves as to whether they are united and the extent to which they are united upon the project of reciprocity with the United States. What guarantee have we that, at this very hour, the Government are not divided when we find their followers are divided? At any rate, we know that, at the very time the elections were going on, at the very time the people were being summoned to pronounce their opinion upon the important subject of reciprocity, dissensions of a most extraordinary character existed in the Cabinet itself. Do they exist to-day? It is fortunate, perhaps, for the consistency of the Government that it is called by courtesy a new Government, yet I will quote the language used in this House by a very distinguished man as to the immorality and impropriety of a Government standing before the people when they are not united upon the main principles of their policy connected with trade or other great ques-A certain statesman, in 1878, used this strong as an assertion of principle, although it did not apply particularly to the case at that time in question. As an abstract statement of principle, however, I think we can accept it:

"But, however we may differ on the question of coalition from that point of view, there is one ground upon which we all agree, or ought to, and that is—that no more demoralizing spectacle can be exhibited in this country than the formation of an administration or secombination of men, who, on important leading public questions, are in open and avowed antagonism. There can be nothing more monstrous, nothing more corrupt, and nothing more disgraceful than that of a combination of men who take office for the sake of office, and who, for the sake of office, sink their differences upon leading and important public questions, doing all this for the sake of combining together and sharing office and power."

We find hon, gentlemen on that side, at this very hour, differing on the most important public question before the people, and yet combining together for the sake of office and power to uphold an Administration in favour of which we have every evidence to lead us to believe they are not united. I am quoting the language of Sir Charles Tupper, and I think hon, gentlemen on that side, at any rate, will not say that his opinion is not worthy of their serious attention. At any rate, it is a very extra-ordinary spectacle which is here displayed of a Government staking its existence upon a policy which is repudiated by nearly one-half of the gentlemen who are professing to support it. Now, when I glance over the record and find how the present Administration came to occupy the position they do, I would like to allude to the boasting statements of hon. gentlemen opposite to the effect that this Government, when it obtained power, had a well-defined policy on which they were agreed and upon which the people pronounced, that they always took a hopeful view of the situation of the country, and that in consequence of the position that they took during the tenure of office of the late Liberal Ministry, and in consequence of the confidence they inspired among the people, they were replaced in power. Now, I differ from a great many members opposite as to the duties of the Opposition. I have no doubt whatever that it is the duty, the solemn and bounden duty of the leading members of the Opposition, to indicate, whatever they find grounds for doing so, the failure of the policy of the Government and point out that it is not working the from having a population of 14,000 to over 500,000, effects claimed for it. It is their duty to show, and has been admitted among the great sisterhood when the facts exist, that there has been an of states as two states of the union. Is this a Mr. FLINT.

increased exodus, that the debt has been increased beyond all propriety, that taxation has been unduly increased and that the people are feeling the effects of this taxation. I contend that the Opposition are simply doing their duty in pointing out these evils. According to the doctrine laid down or hinted at by the previous speaker, it would seem that no matter what rascality we might discover in the administration of public affairs, no matter what extraordinary extravagance we might see in the conduct of any department of Administration, no matter what evil effects we might find produced by the policy of the Administration, it is our duty to keep profound silence and to de-clare that all is well, and prosperous and happy. No nobler duty can be performed to the public than that of showing up public abuses, and revealing the rottenness of the administration of public departments, and although it may look somewhat harsh to those outside, yet the ultimate effect is curative and beneficial. Although we are always glad to hear representatives speak highly of the resources and prosperity of any portion of the country, when they have evidence to support them, yet, it is the duty of members who differ from them, to indicate where failure may exist. We have heard statements throughout this debate and in almost every debate in connection with the subject of trade, as to the terrible conditions of things across the border. And yet it is almost as much as the political life of a gentleman on the Opposition side is worth if he undertakes to combat such statements. No matter what foul slander is uttered as to the prosperity of any of the states of the union, no matter what observation is made detrimental to the people of the United States, if any hon, gentleman on the Opposition side stands up in the interest of truth and veracity, he is pointed out as an annexationist at heart and as being disloyal to Canada. Scarcely a speaker has risen on the other side without flinging taunts of this kind at the two states of Pakota. I know very little about those states. I simply believe them to be, like most of the new states of the union, struggling with some difficulties, having occasional drawbacks here and there of a temporary character, but upon the whole we know that those states have been and are prosperous, and though they have the same difficulties to contend with to some extent that we have, difficulties caused almost entirely by the high protective policy of the United States, yet we know that they are prospering more than our own provinces which are situated near them. While the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) was speaking so very fluently the other night, and was referring to Dakota as if it were a wilderness, I had the curiosity to send to the Library for the Statistical Abstract of the United States, and even while he was trying to prejudice the people against obtaining reciprocity in natural products with our neighbours in the United States by referring to the . State of Dakota, I glanced over the statement I found in that abstract. I found that in 1870 there were 14,000 people in the Territory of Dakota, in 1880 there were 135,000 people, and in 1890 there were 511,000 people, and that territory had become two states of the union. We find, therefore, that in twenty years this wilderness of Dakota has grown sign of decay or lack of prosperity? Look at some of the agricultural products of Dakota. I know that I am laying myself open to being charged with being disloyal to this beloved Canada of ours and with being an annexationist in disguise because I make these references. In 1890, I find that Dakota had $20,000,000 worth of horses, $1,500,000 of mules, $5,000,000 worth of hogs, $14,000,000 of cattle and oxen, and $2,500,000 of In these few articles they had a value of nearly $43,000,000. Is this an indication of decay, and of the horrors which we have been told the people of Dakota are suffering from? Is this the reason why these train loads of immigrants are rushing to Manitola from that state? I must say that I receive with a great deal of suspicion the statements of hon, gentlemen from the North-West as to the rash of immigrants from Dakota to Manitoba. We hear it from them. and we see it nowhere else, and I think it is very improbable, to say the least, that a train load of immigrants would, without any influence brought to bear upon them, take the trouble to placard their cars with the mottoes which were read this afternoon by the hon, member for Lisgar (Mr. It looks very much like the tricks of land agents and boomers. I think it is not unlikely that, taking advantage of depression in some parts of Dakota, land agents and boomers may have endeavoured to get up a land boom for Manitoba in this way. In 1890 Dakota produced $6,000,000 worth of Indian corn and $8,000,000 worth of oats. Comparing the population of those two states with the population of our fair Province of Manitoba, which I do not wish to disparage in any way, whose prospects are great, whose future I hope may be bright, and whose prosperity I crave, still I do not think it lies in the mouths of representatives of the North-West to throw taunts against Dakota with its 500,000 population as compared with the Province of Manitoba with 150,000. We had a Liberal Government in power in Canada during five years, and during that time the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was Minister of Finance. We know that he had great difficulties to encounter. There was a widespread depression throughout the whole civilized The Dominion of Canada was under obliworld. gations to carry out great public works at the time the Liberal party came into power; and, to spare the feelings of hon, gentlemen opposite, I will not refer to the circumstances under which that party came into power, because the circumstances which are now surrounding us are so similar that I would not like to harrow their feelings. But, during that period, when the Liberal party were struggling with all the difficulties they had to encounter, how were they met by Her Majesty's loyal Opposition of that day? Did they stand up and say that this country was prosperous, that it had a great future before it? Was it not exactly the opposite? Did they not, with all the ability at the command of the High Commissioner and of the late lamented Premier, denounce, in every possible way and at every possible time, in every mood and tense and on every occasion, the conduct of the Finance Minister at that time, and preach the bluest of blue ruin during those five years? Did they not alarm the people and did they not make the most extravagant promises as to the economy which would be practised when they would be heart, one after another, in denunciation of the returned to power? A glance at the Debates will show. On the 20th February, 1877, Sir John Macdonald said:

"The hon, gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie) knows, because he is, of course, owing to his position, in communication with Montreal and the great centres and manufactures in the country, that the cloud is darkening, and that, notwithstanding the hope expressed by the Premier—"

You see the Premier then was hopeful that we might pull through the depression. -

-" notwithstanding the hope expressed by the Premier there is no light in the sky-

No gloom there, no pessimism.—

-"there is no light in the sky as yet, and no sign exhibited of the disappearance of the present state of depression and distress. Sir, all these industries, and not only the manufacturing classes, but the workingmen, the labouring classes and the whole commercial community were looking forward for financial relief as a consequence of the mosting of this logislature, and I say that when the of the meeting of this legislature, and I say that when the news is flashed over the wires to-morrow, west, east, north and south, that there is no such alteration as is required, and no relief-

That is, no protective tariff.—

-"many a man who has been keeping up his heart and keeping pen his warehouse and place of business at a ruinous sacrifice in order that his workmen might not starve, will be obliged to close his factory and dismiss his employés and perhaps be driven to the insolvent court owing to the policy adopted by the hon, gentlemen oppo-site."

There is no preaching of blue ruin there. never knew such a thing from hon, gentlemen opposite. I doubt if you will find in the whole records of this Parliament such a pessimistic speech as that delivered by Sir John Macdonald on the 20th February, 1877, except the equally pessimistic speeches of Sir Charles Tupper who was aiding him at that time. In 1878 Mr. Charlton seconded the Address, and, speaking hopefully of the state of manufacturing industry, he thought they were comparatively prosperous. The Address contained the following clause :-

We receive with pleasure His Excellency's congratulations on the abundant harvest reaped in all quarters of the Dominion and that under this and other influences there has been some improvement in the revenue returns, thus indicating, as we trust with His Excellency, that the commercial depression that afflicted Canada in common with other countries, is passing away."

This was the Government resolution, a hopeful resolution and an optimistic resolution. How was this met by the late Premier, the then leader of the Opposition? He said:

"I do not hear the passing bell. I think the depression still exists. If hon, gentlemen will look at any of the evidences that are patent before them. I think they must agree with us that the depression exists still. Look at the city of Montreal, at the state of the lumber trade in Ottawa, at the number of insolvencies here compared with the number in the United States, look at all or any of the evidences and you will see we are called on to be most desperate believers to believe that the depression is passing away. I would be glad if I could agree with that opinion, I would be happy to think that our abundant harvest or any other cause would remove the commerant harvest or any other cause would remove the commercial depression or was likely to remove it. The members of the Government are very modest. They claim no merits for removing it themselves. The 'fly on the wheel' policy still exists. The Government still feel they must trust to the harvest, trust to atmospheric influences, trust to everything but statesmanlike conduct and administration." ministration.

And so on, followed by Tray, Blanche and Sweet-

Government raising the cry of blue ruin from necessarily be in favour of high taxes. The hon, gentleman assumes that it is the tariff that imposes the taxation on the country. Why, the tariff does in connection with the extravagant promises made by the Opposition, that it had a large amount of influence in returning that Opposition to power. Now, let me call the attention of the House to some of the promises made at that time which influenced the public mind, and let us see how these promises were subsequently fulfilled. In 1877 the following resolution was moved by Sir John A. Macdonald, seconded by Sir Charles Tupper:-

"Regrets that the financial policy submitted by the Regrets that the maneral poncy submitted by the Government increases the burthen of taxation on the people without any compensating advantage to Canadian industries; and further that this House is of opinion that the deficiency in the revenue should be met by a large diminution of expenditure aided by such a readjustment of the tariff as will benefit and foster, &c., &c.

Upon that Sir Charles Tupper made the following observations along with others :-

"I have shown that they have increased the expenditure of the country nearly $3,000,000, in three years, over our largest expediture. I trust I have satisfied the House our largest expediture. I trust I have satisfied the House that it is not a question of high taxation or low taxation any further than this, that inasmuch as we governed the country with a small taxation, and inasmuch as we are prepared to govern the country again without those extravagant expenditures made by the present Government since they have been entrusted with power. All we ask is—not that the taxation of the people shall be increased (because we do not require so much money as the hon, gentlemen opposite), as we have shown by our economy in the past, and which we are prepared to practise in the future * * What we ask is not the increase of taxation but the readjustment of taxation."

I had the curiosity to look over the speeches, and I see he was followed by an hon, gentleman who is not present in the House, but I presume it would not be improper to mention his name. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) said:

"We had to raise a certain amount of taxation, $22,000,000 to $23,000,000.
"He did not propose that one dollar more should be raised; but to so distribute it as to afford protection to the industries of the country."

I have every reason to believe that the member for Simeoe is one of the most honourable, straightforward and upright men on the other side of the House, and I have no doubt whatever that he was completely deluded and mystified by his leaders in their statements upon this question, and I do not blame him in the same way that I do the High Commissioner and the late Premier, for making these assertions by which the people were then deceived. He was followed by Mr. Gibbs, who appeared to be a gentleman of considerable strength in the same line, influenced, no doubt, by the statements and arguments of his leader. He said, in 1878:

"These gentlemen, when they addressed the House and when they addressed their constituents; when they went forth to public meetings, endeavoured to instil into the minds of the public that the Opposition desired to increase the taxation of this country. They wanted such an arrangement of the tariff as should take off the duties on goods which they could not produce and put them cathose which they did. The revenue would not be altered; all the Government required was that a revenue of $23,000,000 should be raised."

Again, Sir Charles Tupper said:

" Now, what is it that the hon, gentleman says: He says Mr. FLINT.

not impose taxation."

Now, here are some of those broad and statesmanlike political economies laid down by Sir Charles Tupper, which are quite characteristic of that gentleman:

"The tariff does not impose taxation."

Well, we will all be delighted to know that. He says that the tariffonly collects taxation. I thought it was the Custom-house officers who collected taxation, and that they collected it for certain purposes, on a scale regulated by the tariff. However, it appears we were mistaken:

"The tariff collects taxation. What does impose it? The taxation is imposed by the debt of the country. The taxation is imposed for the purpose of maintaining the public credit.

Taxation is already imposed by the debt. Customs duties are merely the best mode of collecting taxes.

We all remember the howls made by Sir Charles Tupper during the whole of that period over the extravagance of the then Government. While I am upon this subject of taxation, I might as well illustrate it by showing how they kept their The average amount of taxation from promises. 1868 to 1872 was $15,170,185; the average amount of taxation during the Mackenzie period for five years was $18,989,668, or nearly $19,000,000. Now, this was the taxation that was denounced in every mood and tense, with all the eloquence, and power, and fervour which those distinguished men could bring to bear upon the subject. They stated emphatically that this taxation would not be increased: it would only be readjusted in the interests of the people and in the interest of certain manufacturing industries. The average taxation of $19,000,000 for the five years of the previous Administration sprang up to an average taxation of $23,500,000 during the next five years. But that was not suffi-During the last five years the average takation has sprung up to $28,858,000-in other words, the enormous taxation under which the country was groaning, and which caused these good men to weep and wail, during the five years of the Mackenzie Administration, amounting to $19,000,000, has, for the last five years, reached an average of nearly $20,000,000. Yet, in face of this fact hon, gentlemen in this House will stand up and say that the Government had a definite policy when they entered upon this propaganda, and that they fulfilled all the promises they made to the people at that time. But perhaps some may say that these large amounts were not a fair measure of the annual taxation of the country. Taking the Customs taxation alone, which was only to be readjusted and not increased, we find that the average percentage of duty, from 1868 to 1879, amounted to 13.67, and during the five years from 1880 to 1884 the average percentage of duty on imports was 17:38, and during the last five years 19:74, showing that in Customs duties on the total value of goods imported the taxation had sprung up from 13.67 to 19.74. But, perhaps, that may not be considered a fair way of measuring it, as some of those goods were subsequently sent to other countries, and this tax may be paid by some other persons. Now, take the because our policy is a protective policy we must Customs duties on goods entered for consumption, and we find the average from 1874 to 1879 was of extravagance. But what do we find? We find 13:88, during the next five years 19:10, and the following averages:during the last five years 21 03-in other words, the average increase upon goods entered for consumption is about 8 per cent, higher in 1890, during the last five years, than it was during the five years of the Mackenzie regime. The Customs duties per head during the first seven years of Confederation were $3.15. Owing to the depression and falling off in prices and values of exports, and consequently the volume and values of imports, the Mackenzie Administration were compelled to increase slightly the taxation of the country, in order to preserve its credit. were denounced, of course, in the usual strong language to which we are accustomed from the leaders of hon, gentlemen opposite for increasing the taxation from $3.15 to $3.31 per head; and some of the people of that day, perhaps the larger number of them, thought this to be a large increase. Could they have looked forward and seen that during the following five years the very men who had denounced this increase would have themselves advanced the amount from $3.31 to $4.54 per head they might have been somewhat astonished; and at that average it remained during the last five years, the amount being $4.48 per head as against $3.31 per head during the Mackenzie régime. had during the whole period the extravagant pro-mises I have described. Not only so, but during before the people. The first declaration was that the period the hon, member for East York (Mr. the Conservative party would establish a policy Mackenzie) was in power the expenditure of the which would not increase the taxation, but by re-Government was made the subject of the most minute and exhaustive criticism. The expenditures were denounced as extraordinarily extravagant, and the Opposition of that day promised that, should they ever be entrusted with power, a great reform in the matter of expenditure would immediately follow, and that the people of the country would have no more of such extravagant expenditures. In 1887 Sir Charles Tupper, referring to this subject, said:

"The true and just comparison would be to compare the last whole year we were in power with the first whole year these hon, gentlemen were in power, and what does that show? The House will be startled when I teil them that our expenditure was $19.174,141 in 1872-73; but no that our expenditure was $19.14.441 in 18.2-13; but no sooner were these hon, gentlemen for one whole year in power than they managed to spend a much larger sum without any difficulty. Their enormous additional taxation, the greatest extravagance, the most wasteful expenditure of the public money—and not only wasteful, but corrupt—and levying that out of the additional taxation wrung from the people of Canada."

The increased expenditure of the Mackenzie Administration was denounced, and changes were rung on it every session of Parliament by the able critic of the Opposition of that day. Sir Charles 935,656 per annum. This was denounced by the Tupper would gloat over the fact that Civil Government cost $10,000 more in 1875 than in 1874, and details were entered into in Parliament, in the that the administration of justice had increased $38,000, that superannuation had increased $13,000, militia, $35,000, ocean and river service, $45,000, miscellaneous, $39,000, Customs collections, $24,-000, post office, $134,000, mounted police, $134,-000, North-West organization, $14,000; and upon fessed to be, that after making due allowance for these increases, made under circumstances over which no Administration could have any control, the able, industrious, indefatigable financial leader. Yet hon, gentlemen say that during the time of the Mackenzie Government the Opposition had a definite policy, and that they have since abundantly carried out their promises. Is it not clear that when they made those denunciations of the Government they promised that if they were entrusted with power they would make a decided reform? But the figures clearly show they have not done so. The elections adjusting it in such a manner as to meet the requirements of certain interests would benefit the general interests of the country. We had every evidence that they intended to reduce the expenditure instead of increasing it, and that an era of economy would be introduced, which, taken in connection with the readjustment of the duties, would greatly benefit the people. We all remember well that during the elections a remarkable telegram was sent to St. John by the Premier, saying that those who stated that taxation would be increased slandered the Opposition; that taxation would not be increased, but only be readjusted. Sir Leonard Tilley, who afterwards became Minister of Finance, stated on the public platform, and it was heralded far and wide during the election, that the annual expenditure would not exceed $22,500,000. He promised that the expenditure would probably be reduced, and that the incoming Administration, if entrusted with power, would carry on the Government of the country at a reduced expenditure as compared with that cf their predecessors. Now, the expenditure during the régime of the Mackenzie Government for five years was $23,-Conservative party as being utterly extravagant, press, and upon the platform, to show that it was extravagant, and that the Government of the country could be carried on for less. taxation, an increase of Excise taxation, an increase of the interest upon the debt, an increase of the debt itself, an increase in the expenditure, and an increase in the revenue from every quarter. Instead of spending twenty-two and a-half millions a year they spent on an average $29,-But that was not sufficient, for during the last five years of the administration of the present Government the average expenditure of the party, brought into power upon the solemn pledge of distinguished men like Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir Charles Tupper, and the late hon. Premier, upon the solemn pledge of these men before the people of Canada that the expenditure of the country would not exceed $22,500,000, yet, notwithstanding that, the average expenditure during the last five years has been $36,820,000. We find the hon, member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) stating a short time ago, on his own responsibility as a member, that, from this time henceforward, the average expenditure must be considered to be about $40, 000,000 per annum, and that in the face of the declaration upon which this Government and party came into power in 1878. If they had carried out their promises substantially, as I maintain that honourable and upright public men should endeavour to carry out the promises upon which they obtained power, we would find this result: The average expenditure for the last eleven years at twenty-two and a-half million dollars a year would have been $247,500,000, but the actual expenditure has been $356,595,000, showing an increase over the amount they promised the country the expenditure would be of $109,000,000. For the sake of having round numbers, I will throw off about $9,000,000, caused by the expenditure in the North-West, for which this Government was entirely blamable-money which need not be expended and which was a waste caused by the cruel, callous neglect and misgovernment of the Conservative party in relation to that country. I will throw off $9,000,000, and we find, that after the solemn promises made by the leaders of the Conservative party, promises upon which they obtained power, the net amount of increase in the expenditure has been $100,000,000 of the hard-earned money of the people of the Dominion of Canada. Now, Sir, how have the party opposite administered the affairs of this country after having come into power on these promises? Election followed election, and members opposite are never tired of standing up in this House and, as I presume it is natural, of boasting of the success they have had at the polls. Well, probably an examination of the means by which this success has been obtained would not be so creditable to the Conservative party as they endeavour to make out. The success in 1878 certainly does not redound to their credit, after the brief exposition that I have made of the manner in which they then obtained power; and we all know, that having once obtained power under these extravagant promises, and after the hopes they made to spring up in the public mind, they then had in their hands the power, which they have used mercilessly ever since, to retain possession of the Treasury benches. I entirely differ from a great many, even of those on my own side of the House, who are disposed to give credit to the Conservative Government for an honest desire to have a protective tariff. My own opinion has always been that the word protection, and the term protection, and the policy of protection, has young hope of the country, but he took mighty Mr. FLINT.
