prompted by honourable feeling and could be accepted without the slightest stain upon the honour of the great public man to whom it was presented. The hon, gentleman admitted, for example, that the impulse which led to the gathering of that testimonial and its presentation to Sir John A. Macdonald, was due to the fact that at that moment he was supposed to be upon his death-bed, he was supposed to be about to close a career which had been magnificent for Canada and for British America, and the testimonial was about to be presented to him under a general impression that his family needed the provision which grateful fellow-countrymen could make for them, and which the patriotism and self-sacrifice of the head of that family had prevented him from securing for them. I might refer to another circumstance to convince the House, as I am myself convinced, that the hon, gentleman felt that he should not throw the slightest stain upon the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald, in connection with that transaction, or to impute any tendency even, with regard to that testimonial, to corrupt those who were connected with the late Sir John Macdonald's department; for, if I am not mistaken, it is a matter of fact that the hon. member for South Oxford himself was one of the contributors to that testimonial. Now, Sir, I beg to say further, that this is not the first time that this subject has been discussed in this House by any I beg to call the attention of the House to the fact that after that testimonial had been presented, and after some bitterness had been aroused in consequence of the keen and critical state of politics in this country at that time, an enquiry into all the transactions connected with the testimonial was conducted by a committee of this House, with a result which has ever since been satisfactory to this Parliament and to this country. So much for that particular instance. I must refer now, very briefly indeed, to another instance which the hon. gentleman gave—the instance of the testimonial to the ex-Minister of Public Works. The hon, member for South Oxford forebore, himself, to criticize in terms of great severity the conduct of the ex-Minister of Public Works in accepting that testimonial, or the conduct of those who joined in making it; but he read to the House some words which he thought would commend themselves to members upon this side of the House on account of the great authority of the gentleman from whom they came. Well, Sir, with regard to those observa-tions which were put forward in a past session by the Hon. Edward Blake upon that question, I have this to say: That Mr. Blake's abilities and Mr. Blake's services are admired by many members on both sides of the House; but the hon. gentleman need not suppose that we are to accept everything that Mr. Blake has said in the bitterness of a political conflict—and no man could be more bitter, and at times more unjust than he-merely because since then that gentleman has assumed an attitude of the most direct hostility, upon some public questions, to the gentleman with whom, and over whom, and under whom, he formerly served. public man upon the other side of the House undertakes to make statements against the policy of his party, and when he undertakes to warn the country against the policy of his party, we have a right to quote his opinions, and to give them all their due weight, without being saddled with said in a long political lifetime, and in all the development than they have in the past, they will political struggles in which he has engaged. The terms in which Mr. Blake alluded to the testimonial to Sir Hector Langevin, in my humble opinion, were unjustly severe, and the observations which the hon, member for South Oxford himself made this afternoon with regard to Sir Hector Langevin, were, I submit, simply uncalled for. The Rules of the House would not permit me, even if I were disposed, even if I thought it necessary to enter into an elaborate explanation of the circumstances connected that testimonial, as they have been detailed else-I should feel disposed, even if they did permit, to refrain from doing so, for the simple reason that in a few days the report of the committee, sitting with judicial functions with regard to that whole question, will be laid upon the Table of this House, and this House will surely suspend its judgment, and the members of the committee even will suspend an expression of their opinions, upon every branch of the case, the testimonial branch being one of them, in the meantime. But I have this to say, as has been stated in this House, and to the public again and again, that up to a few days ago the late Minister of Public Works was not in the slightest degree acquainted with the names of any but one of those who contributed to this testimonial. The hon, member for South Oxford has declared to the House that that makes the case worse. We will discuss that in due time, when the case of the late Minister of Public Works comes before this House; but in the meantime I must add this, and every man whose judgment is not warped by the most dreadful pre-judice, will agree with me, that if it is true, as cannot be doubted or denied, that the names of the contributors to that testimonial were unknown to the late Minister of Public Works, it cannot be said that his judgment was blinded, that his judgment either concerning those who were in his department, or those who were contracting with the Government, was in any degree warped by the circumstance of that testimonial having been presented to him. Another observation which the hon. member made, to which I must take exception, is his allusion to the present state of public morality in Canada. I understood the hon, gentleman to say that while the fame of Canada had been great for purity in public life, its name had lately become a by word among the nations. As one member of the House I must protest against that statement. I declare for my part that nothing which has transpired of late in connection with the public service of Canada warrants any such expression here or abroad. I am aware, Sir, that there are ru-mours in the air, that there are statements made, with respect to a case which the hon. member for South Oxford forgot in choosing the illustrations by which he wished to embellish his case to the House this afternoon, not con-nected with the public life of the Dominion of Canada, but connected with one of its provinces, which, if half true would cause the reputation of that province to become a by-word throughout the rest of the Dominion. But, so far as the public life of this Dominion is concerned the ward, and if they meet with no greater success or speech, I must refer to some observations connected not elicit anything which will justify any man here or elsewhere saying that the public life of Canada is a by-word or reproach. No one is disposed to deny or will deny that irregularities have existed in the public service, all of which have been condemned by members on both sides of the House as soon as the irregularities have been discussed. But they have been magnified abroad in a way that could only be regarded as wilful slan-For example, when it der on this country. was stated a little while ago that violations of the Civil Service Act had been committed, inasmuch as certain officials receiving regular salaries had received additional emoluments for additional work, their cases were promptly dealt with, and, perhaps, severely dealt with. what was the statement made abroad with respect to these cases? The statement made was that it had been discovered that, in one of the great departments of this country, the regularly paid officials, while receiving the regular salaries given to them by Parliament, were receiving. nearly every one of them, an additional salary for his wife and an additional salary for his sister out of the work which he did himself. Any person who is disposed, I will not say to magnify, but to falsify circumstances in connection with public life in Canada, can bring stain and reproach on its reputation. But, thank Providence, they have to do that before establishing that the allegation of the hon, member for South Oxford this afternoon, that the name of Canada has in any degree become a by-word or reproach as to impro-priety in public life, is in the slightest degree justi-fied or justifiable. The hon, gentleman likewise referred, and this is another observation to which I must take exception, to a case which we had under consideration last session; and the hon. gentleman, although he has admitted on former occasions that ample justice was done in that case by this whole House, has raked up an expression which was used by the individual against whom the censure of this House was expressed. This was done for what purpose? For the purpose of casting a stigma on a large number of members of this House. The hon. gentleman has stated that when Mr. Rykert was practically expelled from this House, he went out and publicly declared that the great hardship of his case was that he was singled out for individual punishment, while the cases of many members of Parliament were as bad as his own. Mr. Rykert did make that statement. Mr. Rykert made it in his own vindication, or in mitigation of the sentence pronounced upon him by this House, and which was likely to be pronounced by the public throughout this country, and he made several other statements which I know to be destitute a particle of truth. Although the hon. gentleman charged that member with falsehood, charged him with corruption, charged him with the most discreditable and corrupt conduct, he now undertakes to use his assertion here for the purpose of throwing an insult across the House, at the very time he is asking the deliberate and honest judgment of the House on a great moral question which, he says, should be kept entirely free from party bias and animosity. Now, Mr. Speaker, havinvestigations which hon, gentlemen are disposed to make can go on from this time for-bound to take exception in the hon, gentleman's tion which I think we are bound to take into which must be conceded as to every country, namely, that this resolution is not intended to be aimed, and intended to be aimed at those who in public life receive from political admirers or for legitimate political purposes contributions or testimonials such as he has mentioned. But the hon, gentleman has asked the judgment of this House on this resothe abstract and, apart from anything connected with the past, has asked this House, as being an entirely new House, to adopt and affirm not a new but a broad and general principle. If the resolution which the hon, member for South Oxford put forward contained half that his speech contained in reference to the past, half the insinuations which his speech contained in reference to the past, it would be necessary to ask this House, out of self-respect and out of justice to vote it down. But the hon, gentleman has declared that such is not his intention; that he invites the House simply to affirm the abstract principle contained in this resolution; he has, notwithstanding the objectionable features of his speech to which I have alluded, shown considerable restraint for him in commenting on transactions which he has stigmatized very severely, very vigorously, and very unjustly elsewhere and in times past. The hon. gentleman has likewise stated that the resolution is not proposed as a vote of want of confidence, notwithstanding that it is put forward to intercept us for the moment in going into Supply. dering these circumstances, and apart altogether from the observations which I have commented on as being undue and, as I thought out of place, I have to say that, as regards the general principle of this resolution, accompanied as it is by the disclaimer of the hon, member for South Oxford, it is one which the House may, in my opinion, adopt, and as it is not put forward as a vote of want of confidence, so far as the Government is concerned, we are disposed to accept the resolution.

Mr. LAURIER. I congratulate the Minister of Justice upon what I conceive to be the very wise course he has now taken, but I still more congratulate the hon, member for South Oxford on the signal victory he has obtained. He has laid down a principle which has been long contended for on this side of the House, which has always been refused on the other side of the House, but which, at last, circumstances compel the Government to While I congratulate the Minister of Justice on the attitude he has taken, it seems to me that his conduct would have been still more praiseworthy if he had accepted the amendment, not only in its terms, but also in the same spirit in which it was offered to the House by the hon, member for South Oxford. The hon, gentleman admits himself, to some extent, that every word of the speech made by the hon, member for South Oxford, with one or two exceptions, to which I will allude, is correct. Certainly, nothing whatever said by my hon. friend with respect to the testimonial given to Sir John A. Macdonald, by his that testimonial, he was the only man in Canada Sir John Thompson.

with that speech and connected with that resolu- friends, could be found fault with. Every word which he said will be endorsed, not only by his consideration in voting on this resolution. The friends, but by his opponents as well. The testifirst is that the hon, gentleman has expressed in monial to Sir John Macdonald, as was said by my connection with his resolution a limitation, which friend (Sir Richard Cartwright), was conceived in it was absolutely necessary he should concede, and a very proper and laudable spirit, at a critical time in his life, when his life was despaired of, and with a view of providing for his family, since he had not the censures which the mover has expressed are not been able himself to provide for them. So far so good. The only thing, however, with which my hon, friend found fault in regard to what was done on that occasion by the friends of Sir John Macdonald, was that instead of it being done publicly, as it should have been done, it was done in secret. I lution and upon the principle of this resolution in assume, and I have no doubt, that at that time there was no intention on the part of those who started the movement, to conceal anything whatever: but at all events the circumstances that afterwards developed showed, that if the testimonial and everything that was done in connection with it had been done in open and broad day, certain facts which took place would not have taken place; certain contributions which then were offered would not have been accepted, because public opinion would have resented it. Of course in the matter of this testimonial, it is an act absolutely indifferent in itself. It may be wrong or it may be good, according to circumstances, but if such an act is done in the open light of day, then, Sir, it is the best prohibition that there can be against any wrong taking place, but, Sir. with regard to this testimonial, and the testimonial offered a few years afterwards to the late Minister of Public Works, the member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), between them there is a marked distinction. The Minister of Justice said a moment ago in reference to the testimonial offered to the hon. Minister of Public Works, the member for Three Rivers, that that hon, gentleman did not know who were the subscribers. Sir, if he did not know, why did he not look at the list? If the hon, gentleman did not know, it was because he chose to remain ignorant of who were the names on the list, and if he chose to be ignorant of the names which were on that list, is it not because his moral sense told him that he might there find names of persons giving contributions, which should not be accepted at all? Is it not simply because his conscience told him that if he were to look at that list he would find there the names of men who were every day suppliants in his office for favours? That is the reason why the hon. Minister of Public Works did not choose to have a look at that list. If that is not the reason why did he choose to be blind on that matter? Then I call upon hon, gentlemen opposite to tell what is the reason, if there could be any good reason for it. Certainly there could be nothing, wrong in the admirers of a manin public life coming to his help and rescuing him; but it seems to me that the recipient of such favours would naturally be too glad to know who are the persons to whom he owes gratitude, and if he does not choose to know who are those to whom he owes gratitude, it must be because his moral sense tells him that he would find there names which would be a condemnation of his accepting such a testimonial. may say this to the Minister of Justice: If the member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), if the then Minister of Public Works, did not know who were the names of persons who subscribed to who was so ignorant. He was the only man in Canada, I say, because it was a fact of public notoriety that the subscribers to that testimonial were the contractors of the Public Works Depart-The fact was known in the press at that time, and it was made known, not in the press of the Opposition, but made known in the press of the Government. It was made known in the public press of Montreal, and some few years ago a series of articles were published in the organ of the Government, La Presse of Montreal, which afterwards were collected in pamphlet form, and I have the pamphlet in my hands, and this is what I read in

"By the aid of this ingenious system which is called public subscription' in the case of a Minister, and blackmail' in the case of a poor devil, Sir Hector was able to add $25,000 to his economics, and the public works of the country cost to the country $500,000 more than it would have paid if the contractors had not been friends." Sir, after this, could the Minister ignore who were the subscribers to his fund, and is it possible to say at this day, after this statement was made and published, not in the press of the Opposition, but in the press of the Government, that the member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) the then Minister of Public Works, did not know who were those who were tendering him the money for this testimonial? I repeat, Sir, that if the then Minister of Public Works did not know who were those who gave him that testimonial, it was because he chose to remain blind, for what he did not know, every man not only in the House but in the country at large, was aware of. Then the pamphlet goes on furthermore to say:

"The name is kept in the Public Works Department of a well-known contractor who had been soliciting for two years an indemnity for public works in the city of Quebec, and who had been most anxious while petitioning to subscribe $1,000 in favour of the chief. That contractor knew yery well how men are taken, and when he was asked for the amount of his subscription he declared categorically, that he would not ray one cout unless his claim against that he would not pay one cent unless his claim against the Government was settled. Lucky man: his claim was settled within three days.

And, Sir, I repeat, that is not in the press of the Opposition, but in the press of the Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I beg my hon. friend's pardon-It is too often this statement has been made. At that time La Presse was the bitterest enemy of the Government, and the pamphlet which my hon. friend is quoting from, and which is called "Le Métier de Ministre," is the strongest and the most bitter charge ever made against the Government. La Presse was then a paper which was the bitterest enemy of the Government.

Those are very big words, Sir, Mr. LAURIER. but I know what is in them; they are perfectly hollow. That newspaper, La Presse, at that time was against the Government on the Riel question, and upon no other question. That paper, La Presse, had done like ministerial members whom I see here, protested against the execution of Louis Riel but came down underneath at the proper time. That paper, La Presse, was the subsidized organ of the Government at all times, and when the hon. gentleman says it was the bitterest opponent of the Government let him tell me one question, except the Rie question, on which it was against the Government. I will ask the hon, gentlemen furthermore, if it is not true that a few months afterwards, when we were in the thick of the election, La Presse, as usual? If these statements, as I said a moment ago, had been said in the press of the Opposition, I could well understand that no value could be attached to them on the other side of the House, because I am sorry to say the press has become so partizan on both sides of politics, that, for my part, I would not be bound by anything said by a journal opposed to my views. But, Sir, this is not one of the Opposition papers which were fighting It was from one of the papers which were supporting the Government that the charge first came, and again I say, Sir, that in the face of that, it is preposterous to tell us that the Minister of Public Works did not know who were the contributors to his fund. Now, Sir, upon this question I will say no more for the present time. There are other questions to which my hon, friend has alluded simply to say that they were a reproach to the name of Canada, and I will not discuss these questions to-day. The only thing I would say in reference to this is that I am sorry to see that the Minister of Justice has already, perhaps, anticipated what will be the judgment of the House in a few days. I shall not do anything of the kind. I shall keep my judgment perfectly unbiassed even to that time; but if only one-tenth of the charges made by the hon, member for Montmorency are proved, and more than one-tenth are proved already, they will cause the name of Canada to be a by-word and a reproach.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I listened with attention to the remarks made by the hon, mover of the resolution in amendment to going into Supply, now before the House, and I must say that I have no reason to complain of that hon, gentleman's speech. I have perhaps reason to feel somewhat gratified that he made no personal allusion to me; but, on reading the resolution, I find that I am indicated as one of the parties who received a testimonial. The resolution refers not only to Ministers who have received testimonials from contractors, but it includes members of the Government who receive contributions from contractors or other persons having pecuniary relations with the Government, as well as officials. Now, I may state briefly the circumstances under which I became the recipient of a testimonial in the shape of a house. Hon, gentlemen may not be aware, or, the fact may be of little interest to them, that I at that time had served as the representative of my constituency for about twenty-four years. I had served that constituency as a poor man. My coming here in the first place was not the result of any personal ambition on my part to enter public life; but I was induced to do so by my constituents for their interests rather than my own. I accepted the position, however, and I have held the confidence of that constituency for upwards of thirty years; and during that time I have endeavoured to discharge my duty faithfully. While not posing as a man of perfection, while professing to be human, and liable to err like all men, I do not plead guilty to any dishonest or dishonourable conduct; I do not plead guilty to any improper motives, or even to the possibility of being improperly influenced in the discharge of any public duty. I could not be guilty of that, because whatever other faults I have, I thank God that I havestrength enough to prevent me from disgracing myself in was in the forefront supporting the Government | that way, as well as disgracing the men who have reposed confidence in me for so long a time. was first intimated to me some seven years ago, or thereabout, that a resolution had been formed to provide a house for me by my friends. When I say my friends, I refer to special circumstances. I think I have explained to the House before that when the late leader of the Government, Sir John A. Macdonald, called me to accept a seat in his Cabinet, I did not at all flatter myself that I was selected because of any special ability which I possessed over others who might have been called to fill that position; but I believe my selection was due to special circumstances. A vacancy having occurred in the Cabinet for New Brunswick, and the principle having been established that there should be a representation of Catholics in the Cabinets of our country, I was called in on that ground more than on the ground of any special ability I possessed, to take charge of a department. And when the testimonial of a residence to me was discussed, I took for granted that it was coming from those gentlemen who sympathized with me, and who looked upon me, though I might perhaps unworthily fill the position, as their representative, I had not the slightest objection to accept that token of their esteem and confidence. In accepting that present from them, I had not thought that it could in the slightest degree affect my honour or my standing in this House, or in the country as their representative. Without that testimonial I felt it to be my duty to devote myself to their interests and to promote their interests in every legitimate way I could; and all the testimo-nials that they might give me, and all the millions of money they might pile up for me, could not strengthen my hands or induce me to do more than I would have done if this testimonial had never been given. I have one more statement to When the Government decided to accept this motion on the general principle as laid down by the mover, I think they did perfectly right. have one thing further to state, to be short, and not to weary the House. I accepted that testimonial in good faith, believing that I had not failed in the obligations I owed to the country or to my constituents. I did not know at the time who the subscribers were. The hon, member for South Oxford, in dealing with this question so far as it affects others, says that they should have known who the subscribers were. Well, the subscription to my testimonial went on for some time. I was not in a position to know who the subscribers were. I was under the impression that the subscriptions were coming from friends of mine whose particular representative I might be considered to be. Less than two years ago the gentleman who managed the legal part of the matter, called my attention to the fact that upon the house which had been presented to me, a balance of $1,000 remained unpaid; and it was then that I became aware of the contributions which had been sent in, and I arranged for the payment of the balance due on the property in order that the matter might be On that list there are only two or perhaps three names of contractors, principally Irish Catholics. There is the name of at least one firm of distillers in this country; and there are the names of one or more officials who might look for promotion in my department. Now, I propose to meet that in a very satisfactory way, I think, if to the practice of giving previous notice of import-

I propose to hand to the mover of this resolution that subscription list, which will show every dollar that has been paid in for the purchase of that property; and I will ask him to associate with himself, not a Conservative or a friend of mine, but any two gentlemen he may choose from his own side of the House to go over that list and take the records of my department and examine them at the same time. He will find there, for instance, the name of the firm of Messrs. Gooderham & Worts; all our dealings in the department with them are a matter of record. And if the hon, gentleman finds that there has been any transaction in that department on which a suspicion might be based-I will not ask him to prove a charge or to take evidence to establish a charge; but if he, or the gentlemen associated with him, will, after examination, say that they find a reasonable ground even to suspect that some favour has been shown to Messrs. Gooderham & Worts-though I deny it entirely-then, in that case, and in every other case in which they find any ground for suspicion, I will undertake to refund the money which was subscribed. Not that they could prove any case, because it would be impossible to prove that I was influenced in any improper way; but, if on the face of these facts, as they find them, they can say: Here is a concession made to a man who contributed to that fund, and from which they could draw a conclusion that I was influenced by the fact of that contribution-if they even go only so far as to find the slightest suspicion that I was influenced thereby—I will refund the money to every man affected. I have no more to say than that.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion I desire to say that some time ago the Hamilton Spectator stated that I had contributed $400 to the Langevin testimonial. I would not take this opportunity of denying it-because the Hamilton Spectator, on seeing my denial, at once took back the assertion-were it not that the St. Catharines Standard still persists in repeating the story promulgated by the Hamilton Spectator: and as the hon. Minister of Public Works evidently did not know, nor the country generally, who the subscribers to that testimonial were, I wish to state most distinctly to the House and the country that I never subscribed a single cent to the Langevin testimonial, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and with the permission of the House, I wish to add something which I forgot to mention. I covered three points. Some officials, I thinkvery few-contributed to that fund. I would ask the hon, gentlemen to take the Civil Service list and look very closely through the promotions in my department; and if they find that any officer who contributed to that fund received one dollar in the way of promotion or increase of salary, which might possibly lead to the conclusion that I was influenced by his contribution in giving him that increase or promotion, I am prepared to refund in that case also.

Mr. OUIMET. Before this motion is adopted I wish to say a few words, and would preface my remarks by saying that it is very much to be regretted that the practice of the House of Commons in England should not be followed here. I refer the hon. gentleman will meet me in a fair spirit. ant motions such as this, which here are always Mr. Costigan.

sprung on the House, without the members being given any opportunity of knowing what the subject under discussion will be. I do not charge the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) with being discourteous to the House, for he has followed the practice which obtains here of giving private notice to the leader of the House of motions he intends to present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I gave public notice from my place last night.

Mr. OUIMET. I must admit that I am then in the wrong; but I, in common with a great many people, believe in going to bed early. But, Sir, if notice had to be given to the House generally, it would appear in the Journals of the House, and then every member would have to take notice of it: and I think when important questions such as this come up for debate, every member should know it in advance, and not only two or three on each side; for I do not suppose that this House is a ring, and that we are here to witness two or three members on each side fighting for the flag. I think if notice were given in the Journals, the House would be in a better position to discuss these matters and pronounce a sound judgment on Now, Sir, with regard to the question under discussion, the principle laid down in the proposition of the hon, member for South Oxford certainly commends itself to the common sense and the good judgment of the House; and I for one am ready to endorse it. For my part, I wish it had been followed in the past. But, Sir, things have To-day, in another part of this gone differently. building, a great state trial is going on. Two hon. members of this House are now under trial before a Special Committee, and I think it would be premature—not only premature but unwise -for this House to pass judgment in advance on those hon, gentlemen. We have not before us, as members of this House, the evidence which has been adduced, and I do not think it is right for the hon. leader of the Opposition to pass judgment, in the name of his followers, in the name of the House, and in the assumed name of the country, on those The motion gentlemen now undergoing trial. in itself I am ready to accept; but when I am told by the leader of the Opposition, that, by accepting this motion, I am going to endorse the remarks he has addressed to the House to-day, I say that I am not ready to do that. I am not ready to do what is not fair, and it is not fair now, when we have no evidence or documents before us, when the case for the defence has not been closed, to pronounce judgment, not a direct but an indirect judgment, and to say in advance that we should, on one point of that trial now in issue before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, namely, the testimonial presented to the ex-Minister of Public Works, pass our condemnation. I am not ready to do that, and I am sorry that we should be given a lesson of morals here. We all know what morality teaches, and we are supposed to know, just as well on the right side of this House as on the left; and these general want to thrust down our throats, I say if I am going to swallow them at this manner. want to thrust down our throats, I say if I am going to swallow them at this moment, I will do so with a certain amount of distrust if not disgust. We know what the teachings of morals are as well from Quebec. That was an independent paper as the Opposition, and I say this is not the right | before, and it was continued in Montreal as 1211 time for them to give us these teachings, the more especially when they couple a resolution, which in itself is very good and cannot be refused by any one, with condemnations against hon, members of this House who are now undergoing their trial elsewhere, and upon whom we will be called in a few days to pass judgment. With these restrictions, I am disposed to say that the resolution is in itself acceptable and commendable, although the speeches with which it has been accompanied are not acceptable.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, leader of the Opposition inferred from my remarks that I had formed a judgment on certain matters with regard to a case not concluded. In speaking of irregularities, scandals and so forth, I left that case entirely out of consideration as on which we ought not to speak, and was referring to a case on which I suppose we are entitled to speak.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I rise only for a word of explanation, which is not exactly connected with the subject of the motion, but which is necessary after the remarks made by the hon, leader of the Opposition. I think it is my duty to do so, as some effort has been made to connect me with disparaging writings that have appeared, in some time past, in the public press of this country. The leader of the Opposition, speaking of subscriptions and testimonials given to Ministers, quoted a pamphlet which he says emanated from La Presse, a Conservative organ. This is most unfair. That pamphlet was published during the Riel excitement by La Presse, which then headed the movement against the Government. The pamphlet is well known in the Province of Quebec as one of the most bitter attacks ever circulated during an election, a pamphlet which has been quoted to me again and again in the elections that took place from the latter part of 1885 until the elections of 1891. The little pamphlet I hold in my hand is the same as that which has been quoted by my hon, friend, and I may say misquoted. This is not the way in which a leader of a great party ought to instruct public opinion. He has not the right, in quoting from a pamphlet violently attacking the Government, to say it was an expression of Conservative ideas in the country. Here is the pamphlet, "Le Métier de Ministre," the most bitter, the most venomous pamphlet that was ever written against a man, and against the party with which he was connected. It was written against Sir Hector Langevin in particular, but it was also against Sir John Macdonald, and against the colleagues of Sir John Macdonald, and it extended its blame as far back If my hon, friend will take the trouble to as 1858. read the book, he will find that it goes back to the condemnation of the "double shuffle," in 1858; of what it calls the stealing of the elections in Quebec in 1871. I repeat that the newspaper which published that pamphlet was at the time the bitterest enemy of the Government of which I was a member. The reason of the explanation I am making is the position of La Presse. Up to 1884 La Presse did not exist. There was a newspaper called Le Monde, which was the property of the Conservative organ. Immediately afterwards, Nouveau Monde, was published. An action was taken against those who had sold the good-will of Le Monde by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard), enjoining them not to publish the the window of Mr. Dawson, in Montreal, for nearly paper Le Nouveau Monde, because the use of that name was not in accordance with the bargain made by those who had bought Le Monde. To put an end to the lawsuit, the title Le Nouveau Monde was dropped, and La Presse was published. paper remained for a time a Conservative newspaper, but in 1885, when that unfortunate outbreak happened, that paper took such a strong stand in regard to the matter of Riel that it became not a Conservative but an independent organ. and in November, 1885, after Riel's execution, La Presse was the strongest and bitterest enemy the Government had. It was in the middle of that turmoil and of that opposition that this little pamphlet was published, and I remember, and my hon, friend opposite knows it well, that, at a meeting held at Longueuil, when the mob that had been excited against me, the mob that had been made drunk in order to drive me from the platform and to drown me if possible, burned me in effigy, whilst extracts of the pamphlet were read in order to show the indignity which was intended for myself and the Conservative party. My hon, friend from South Oxford seems to think that the recollection of these past times might be amusing, but it was hardly amusing to me. I regretted that my friends had opened that bitter campaign against the Government, and I remonstrated with them so that a few months afterwards La Presse came back not as a Conservative paper-it has not been a Conservative paper except for a short time, about three years ago-but as an independent paper. I wish to state this because it has been often said that La Presse is the expression of the opinion of my humble self, and people have often been quoting it in that way for appreciations of men and measures, at a time when the paper was in opposition to the Government. I acquired some interest in it in 1888, and since that time, if it is not altogether orthodox, it is good enough to be called Conservative. I state this in order to show my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition that in the fair warfare of politics, when a man accuses another man it is within his right to use severe language; and I forgive even violence of language of which no doubt I have often been guilty outside of this House if not inside this House, but I will not allow anyone to give any quotations calculated to mislead the House. As to the motion which is under discussion, I may say that I have received two or three times testimonials in my public life, and at one time it was for an act of which I have not yet repented. I was a member of the House in Quebec at the time, and I think I was then a member of the Government which resigned in 1874. I went to the North-West and pleaded a case there, the case of Ambroise Lépine, one of the leaders of When I came the Manitoba rebellion of 1870. back my friends gave me, not for my fees, which I refused, a testimonial on the occasion of my I never knew the names of those who subscribed to that testimonial, but I was aware that from the smallest newsboy to the highest was another occasion on which I was presented think the next day, another paper, called Le with a testimonial, in regard to which I cannot plead ignorance, because the names of the contributors are inscribed on an address which hangs on the wall of my house and which was exhibited in a month, and that was a handsome set of tableware. In regard to all these matters, I think there has been a kind of extravagant severity in the way in which public opinion has been manufactured, in the way of creating scruples that are not natural and are not true, in saying that whatever was done in favour of a public man means secret bribery or corruption. In other countries testimonials have been given to public men. It is true that the leader of the Opposition says that sometimes testimonials have been given to men in high public positions which redounded to their glory instead of their being blameable for having accepted them. I have stated this as a general proposition. It may be that considering how public opinion stands at the present moment, that it is time to make a new departure, as I may say. Taking that view, I would accept this motion as the expression of a new departure. I think it is right that Ministers should not receive testimonials presented by those over whom they have special control, and whose position, pecuniarily speaking, depends upon them, and this remark applies to those who have contracts with the Government, or who furnish supplies to the departments presided over by the Ministers accepting the testimonials. I say that is a good rule, and it is in that spirit that I shall accept the motion of the hon, member for South Oxford. But I say again that those who, in the past, have accepted such testimonials have only their own consciences to consult, and if they have accepted testimonials, knowing full well those presentations were inspired simply by gratitude for the kindness and courtesy received at the hands of those to whom they were presented. If there is any wrong proved to If there is any wrong proved to have been done in consequence of these testimonials, that would alter the view which should be taken of them. We know very well that the great object which certain members of this House have in view is to influence the decision in a case which is now pending before one of the Standing Committees of this House. On that case I can express no opinion; it would be contrary to my duty as one of the judges sitting on that case, as a member of this House, to express an opinion upon it at this moment. No judge has a right prematurely to express his opinion upon a case before him until all the evidence has been put in. I endorse the observations of my hon. colleague, the leader of the House, in accepting this proposition; but I desire to qualify my acceptance on the understanding that the resolution does not apply to the past, that it does not condemn the acceptance of testimonials which have been made in years gone by.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Secretary of State has made one or two observations which require to be noticed. The hon, gentleman tells us that he accepts this motion on general principles, but he does not accept it as applying to any act in the Sir, it is the acts committed in the past that have led to the moving of this resolution; it is because of the fact that events have transpired in banker in Quebec, people contributed to that the history of this country of a character to debase testimonial, but I never asked for names. There public morals, that this resolution at the present moment is offered to this House. The hon. gentleman is quite willing that the resolution should be accepted, if it does not apply to him, if it does not apply to anybody else. Sir, the resolution must apply to those who have sinned against the principle that is condemned by this resolution; it must apply to the hon, gentleman himself, if he has accepted testimonials in a manner contrary to the principles of the resolution; it must apply to any member of the Government sitting in this House who has violated the principle of this resolution; and I for one do not intend to vote for this resolution without protesting against the statement of the hon, gentleman that the resolution does not apply to the past, that it does not apply to him, that it does not apply to any member of the Government. I repudiate that statement, and I shall vote for the resolution as one that does apply to the past, does apply to every case where the principles that are condemned in this resolution have been violated. We are told by the hon, member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) that the evidence was not before the House upon which this resolution, is based. Sir, this is a general resolution, it condemns certain acts, and in the course of the discussion upon this resolution, the fact that a testimonial has been received by a Minister of the Crown not very long ago, has been alluded to. There is no question as to the fact of the acceptance of that testimonial; there is no question as to the names of the parties who contributed to that testimonial. The question now under investigation before a Committee of this House, is, what were the results of the acceptance of that testimonial? To what extent did it lead to the failure on the part of that officer to discharge the trust that he owed to the people? The question is, whether a large loss to the public occurred in consequence of the acceptance of that testimonial? There is no question about the individual accepting the testimonial, and this resolution condemns, not the consequences that followed the acceptance of that testimonial, but it condemns the acceptance of it under circumstances such as these by officials of the Crown. Now, my hon, friend the Minister of Justice asserted, in the course of his speech, that no influence had been produced by these charges upon public sentiment abroad, that the charges had had no effect whatever in prejudicing the interests of Canada, or in lowering the character of Canada, or the character of the public men of Well, Sir, I do not Canada, in foreign countries. think that the statements of British newspapers, of American newspapers, of continental newspapers bear out the Minister of Justice in the insertion he has made. I believe, Sir, that the revelations made in connection with the investigation of the Public Accounts Committee and the Privileges and Elections Committee, have produced a profound sensation abroad, wherever Canadian interests receive attention. I believe these revelations have injured our character, have injured our credit, and have earned for us the reputation of being, perhaps, scandals unearthed by the investigations at Ottawa. The Gazette says: 'One of the most prominent arguments against the annexation of Canada to the United States has been the value of the Canadian experiments in Government. It was thought by those opposed to annexation that it would be an advantage to have each country work out its own institutions and thereby teach others.'

"The Gazette questions that there is any ground for satisfaction in the Canadian experiments. 'As just exposed, the Gazette declares, 'a more sordid spectacle of corruption has never been presented by a free people. Whatever defence individual officials and politicians may make in the United States, it is abundantly clear that the cancer of corruption has eaten deep into Canadian institutions. Political life in the United States is not particularly pure, but we would be exceedingly surprised if the Canadian record could be beaten.'

"The Gazette expressed satisfaction that it is the avowed intention of the investigating committees to probe the intention of the investigating committees to probe the scandals to the bottom, and concludes with the words: 'In a free country with a healthy public opinion, the exposure of scandals means their cure at no distant date.'" And so, Sir, one of the hopeful indications of the present is that these scandals have been exposed that Ministers of the Crown rise here this afternoon and confess their sins, and apologize to the country and say they will not do it again, and deprecate the wrath of the country being visited upon them, and accept the resolution that is offered condemning this principle in general terms. am glad that the resolution has been accepted, I am glad that the Government have not done on this occasion as they did a few days ago in connection with the timber limit scandals—have not decided to place themselves on record as condoning and approving the practice. It is highly satisfactory to find the Government taking this course. do not wish to go into a general discussion of this question, but I will refer for a moment only to a position taken by the Minister of Justice with regard to an investigation alleged by him to have taken place in this House with reference to a testimonial presented to the late Sir John A. Macdonald. Now, the Minister of Justice not in the House at that time, and I error, is memory think in if he my serves me right, in asserting that the matter was referred to a committee. The question of the propriety of the presentation of the testimonial to Sir John, so far as my memory goes, was not passed upon by the committee. The committee did investigate the question of the payment by the Northern Railway of Canada of $2,500 to Sir John A. Mac donald, and it did decide that the payment was improperly made. Further than that I am not aware that this matter, or any of its bearings, has been the subject of investigation by any committee of this House. Now, as the ground was taken that Mr. Blake had never condemned the acceptance of that testimonial on the part of Sir John, and had never pointed out any of the evil consequences resulting from that acceptance, I may, in conclusion, call the attention of the House to that portion of Mr. Blake's speech referring to the payment of this testimonial, and to the influences produced by the payment of a testimonial to an officer through whom corporations had dealings with the Government. Mr. Blake said:

the most corruptly governed country in the world that professes to be a free country. I find a quotation from the Pall Mall Gazette showing the estimation in which we are held in England by the editors of that paper. I will read what it says:

"London, Aug. 10.—The Pall Mall Gazette to-day in a long and prominent editorial headed 'Canadian Experiments and Corruption,' refers in a caustic manner to the

which they declared could supply only a small composition on their debt to the public, to pay $2,590 towards the testinonial to the First Minister. (Cheers.) There was not money to pay you, but there was money to subscribe for him. What happened? That which you might expect to happen. Shortly afterwards a Bill was brought in by this same (fovernment for the relief of the Northern Railway (applause), under which it was proposed to accept in full a small proportion of the debt. It came down very late in the session. Mr. Mackenzie, the leader of the Opposition, objected to the concession and insisted that it was foo late in the session to press such a Bill and declared that if it was pressed he would fight it. (Applause.) The terms were too favourable to the company which should have been required to pay more. I heard the First Minister tell Mr. Mackenzie that he ought not to resist the Bill: that he would be responsible before the people for obstructing wise and useful legislation and that the people would condemn him for it. (Laughter.) However. Mr. Mackenzie took the responsibility. (Cheers.) He was not a man to flinch from responsibility, and he thus defeated the measure. (Renewed cheers.) What ensued? Mr. Mackenzie attained office a year or two later and he had to deal with this question, the settlement of which he had prevented on the terms proposed. His Government made a settlement with the Northern Railway Company $500,000 better than the settlement which was proposed by Sir John Macdonald which we had obstructed. We saved the public that amount. (Loud cheers.) But we received no testimonial from the company. (Cheers and laughter.) I could give you other instances of those who subscribed to this testimonial and what their relations with the Government were, but one is, perhaps, enough for a sample." The assertion made that the testimonial referred to by the hon, gentleman to my right was a perfectly proper one, and that the receiving of it was not of a character to work any injury to this country, will hardly be borne out by the fact, and I felt perhaps it would be proper to make allusion to the matter in face of the assertion made by the Minister of

Mr. DAVIN. The debate on this motion submitted by the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has taken a course which illustrates the difficulty of having in this House, what pleased the soul of the hon, member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) a night or so ago, a debate purely on the merits of any question that may be brought before it. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech of the hon, member for South Oxford and I listened with pleasure and surprise, because I think to the utmost of his power, considering what must be the inveterate habit of his rhetoric, he confined himself pretty much to the motion. I was glad when the Minister of Justice rose and stated that, fencing the motion round with a statement that everything that was said or might be said in debate must not be imported into that motion, the motion would be accepted by the Government. I think that here in this House, and on the part of the Government and of all Governments, we ought to act on the principle that Casar's wife should be above suspicion. I do not want to say one word respecting, nor would I condone, anything that has taken place in the past. What has gone on in the past is not before us, by this resolution; but it is of happy augury on this the first session of this new Parliament that we should unite unanimously on a motion that will, I suppose, lead to such action as will prevent Ministers of the Crown from even the appearance of evil. There is no harm in a Minister of the Crown or a public man receiving such a testimonial as was described by the hon member for South Oxford from warm admirers expressing admiration and endorsation of his course; but it is apt to mislead, to put it in the mildest form, the public mind, and it is apt to lead to misconception if men in important positions accept testimonials of a character peculiarly | that way and in that sense has been accepted by Mr. CHARLTON.

valuable. I do not think the fact that the names of contributors were not known, that the Minister should have avoided knowing the names, should lead us to endorse the practice in future. that Ministers of the Crown are not properly paid. great responsibilities thrown Considering the considering the labours thrown on them, and considering what salaries are given to Ministers of the Crown elsewhere, I am quite certain Ministers of the Crown in this country are not properly paid. Then again, we have not the practice in this country that has obtained in England. In England, when an eminent Minister dies, if he leaves debts unpaid, if he leaves a family unprovided for, his family is taken care of, and the And, if we had been country pays his debts. accustomed to act with anything like that generosity, there might not have been the temptation, on the part of strong supporters of Ministers, to get up contributions for them. In regard to the contribution to Sir Hector Langevin, I can say that certainly one or two persons subscribed very small and modest sums indeed to that testimonial who were not contractors, and in one case the gentleman had at the time never spoken a single word to Sir Hector. But the gentleman who waited on one of those persons respecting the testimonial, told him that Sir Hector Langevin had been twenty years in public life, that, if he went out of public life to-morrow, he would not have a roof over his head; and this person said to him: "Well, if a man has been in public life all that time and held office so long as Sir Hector Langevin has, and is thus poor, he must be an honest and faithful servant of the public, and I for one am ready to give my mite to the testimonial." At that time the person of whom I At that time the person of whom I speak knew nothing whatever as to who were to be the persons who would swell that testimonial. We cannot help forming an opinion even now on evidence that is not before us, on informal evidence, and even while a case is sub judice, because, after all, political transactions are not exactly on all-fours with a case in court. There is a very distinguished precedent for that. When Lord Melville was impeached, while his case was subjudice, before judgment was given—and you will remember, Mr. Speaker, he was acquitted—Mr. Pitt had, as he declared with tears in his eyes, done the hardest act of his life, namely, caused Lord Melville's name to be erased from the list of Privy Councillors. I merely rose to say this, that I agree with the motion taken in the abstract; I do not want, it is not the place to do it, especially as we might anticipate what will have to be considered soon, to throw any reflection on anything done in the past; but I will say this, generally, that it is a pestiferous custom to give testimonials and presents to men in high places and persons connected with men in high places. The result of such examples is that they will be followed by poor people, and thus we may see the poor driven into the ditch, while the rich and those highly paid go scot free from all censure whatever. part believe in dealing out equal justice to rich and poor, high and low, distinguished and obscure, and I do not believe in visiting some obscure persons with condign punishment while other persons go free. So, I say, I approve of the motion in the abstract, and I am glad it was brought forward in the Government. I regret that after it was so accepted by the Government, after it was accepted in a speech placing it in a true light before this House and the country, the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should have so spoken as to endeavour to give to what has occurred to-day a party character and to wring a party advantage from it. If I were to discuss the motion in that spirit I would depart from those happy lines that pleased the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) so much: but if I were, Sir, then we could go into the actions of these hon, gentlemen at another time, and I am afraid that the position of the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) here to-day, in the speech which he made, would be like that of the Pharisee, who thanked God that he was not as other men, and not like that poor Publican who stood afar off. I do not want to go into any party discussion of the question, but I repeat: I am glad that, even at this inconvenient time, the broad principle has been affirmed; I am glad that the foundation has been laid for preventing even the appearance of evil in the future. If it is necessary for the friends of the Ministers to get up substantial testimonials, then, it is for the people of this country to consider, whether, if they have public servants, they ought not so to pay them as to remove them from the influence of such loyal attentions on the part of their friends.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the House do forthwith resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that is rather an unprecedented motion.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Intercolonial Railway $323,200

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It will be very inconvenient, and contrary to all our usual practice after a motion of this kind has been passed which declared that the Speaker should not leave the Chair, to proceed at once with the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. But the House has declared that the Speaker should leave the Chair, and in obedience to that he has left the Chair. The only reason why last night, and the night before, we took one item is that the Opposition took so long in discussing the question before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I like that, upon my conscience. Upon my word, Mr. Chairman, I may say to the Minister of Finance: If you will hand over to us all the gentlemen who spoke last night as members of the Opposition, I am not quite sure that we will not call it square. The hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) was the man who commenced the discussion, and if my recollection serves me, half a dozen gentlemen whom I see behind the Government were the persons who continued it. It was not our doing last night, if you spent from half-past nine until half-past one o'clock, or thereabouts, in debating an interesting question of public policy, but one that did not very specially appertain to the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. It is quite true, I think, that more gentlemen on this side of the House took part in the debate last night than on the other side; but that was because it was a non-party debate. If it had been otherwise I imagine it would have been the other way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, just at present, I do not want to stand in the way of doing some work, but there are a number of our friends absent who want to say something about this particular item.

Mr. FOSTER. That certainly is not our fault. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is quite true, but the custom of the House, as the hon. Minister knows very well, is that when an amendment of this kind has been accepted you usually change your position.

Mr. FOSTER. Not necessarily.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not mean to say that it is invariably the rule, but it has been our custom.

Mr. FOSTER. That is only the case very late at night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have known the matter to occur at an hour in the evening which would allow a reasonable amount of business being put through. However, give an explanation of why you want this increased accommodation at Halifax?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Better wait until we read all the items through.

Some hon, MEMBERS, Take them one at a time, Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Then we will keep to that rule.

Increased accommodation at Halifax $136,800

This is done in order that the business may be conducted more satisfactorily than at present. It is proposed to procure a block of land bounded on the north by North Street, and on the east by Water Street, on the south by Cornwallis Street and on the west by Lockman Street. This block of land is about 2,500 feet by 330 feet. I may state that the assessed value of this property is about $450,000, much higher than the sum we are taking at present. The tracks and buildings are estimated to cost about $175,000, making a total cost, with the land if it is all purchased, of about $625,000. Of the sum now being voted, about $2,000 is intended to provide additional machinery in the The accommodation in the city shops at Halifax. is too small for the business done there, and it is deemed not only advisable but absolutely necessary to procure more land.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it proposed to increase the passenger and freight station accommodation?

Mr. BOWELL. It is not proposed to extend the passenger station, the land lies to the north of it.

Mr. FLINT. Is not this property covered with buildings?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, I fancy that is why it is assessed so high.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. Minister give us any idea of the amount of money that has been expended there, and the extent of terminal accommodation provided, such as station grounds, storage, wharfage and everything of that kind?

Appendix of the Control of the Contr

Mr. BOWELL. There are two freight sheds, one flour shed and a passenger station at that point, besides a wharf, an elevator and a large shed at the deep water terminus. We propose building another shed which may be termed a sufferance warehouse for Custons purposes. We have found it difficult to provide for passengers goods landed in winter. There is no place to put them, and for years I have been demanding this accommodation from the Railway Department. The goods will be placed in the sufferance warehouse, for distribution afterwards or for Customs inspection. The total amount expended in Halifax up to the 1st of June, 1891, was $1,395,666.16.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is possible that this large expenditure was necessary to enable us to properly utilize the Intercolonial Railway at the port of Halifax. At the same time I understand that from the point where a junction is made with the Canadian Pacific, a very large amount of freight is carried over the road and landed at Halifax. That is virtually carried on the Canadian Pacific Railway, instead of over the entire line of the Intercolonial Railway. If that is the case, it is time that we should have some understanding with the other railways which are participating largely in the accommodation there furnished, so as to make them bear a share of the expense. As the hon. Minister has stated, we have expended $1,300,000 in terminal accommodation, and he is asking us for an additional sum of $150,000. It may be advisable, in order to secure additional yard accommodation, to purchase the property he has referred to; but before consenting to an increased expenditure at that particular point, we should be sure that there is an absolute necessity for it. Therefore we should have some idea of the increased traffic necessitating it, the amount of tonnage received and removed at that station on account of the Intercolonial and also on account of the Canadian Pacific. I would like to know what running arrangements there are between the Canadian Pacific and the Intercolonial at that point.

Mr. BOWELL. The remarks made by the hon. member who has just spoken apply with greater force to St. John than to Halifax, because the Canadian Pacific Railway, Company in carrying their freight over the Short Line, take it direct to St. John, and thence to Halifax over the Intercolonial. So that, in fact, the terminal point in Halifax is exclusively Intercolonial Railway or Government property; the Canadian Pacific Railway, in taking their goods over our portion of the line, will be treated in the same manner as any other foreign line. I do not think the remarks made would apply with any force as to any portion being paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the use of freight trains in Halifax, because they have to pay for passing over the Intercolonial Railway from St. John to Halifax, and the goods ware-housed there will be treated precisely the same as if they came over our own line. I am not in possession of the tonnage to which the hon. gentleman refers. I think he desires to have the tonnage, not only carried by the Intercolonial Railway from Quebec to Halifax, but also from St. John, which passes over the Short Line to Halifax.

Mr. McMullen.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would ask the hon, gentleman to furnish the Committee with the tonnage received at the port of Halifax for a number of years, so as to show the increased amount of work performed, and in order to give us some idea why the hon. Minister asks for the $150,000 increased expenditure, to provide accommodation at that point. We could then come to some reasonable conclusion as to whether the demand was necessary or not, but without having some specific return of the amount and freight and tomage received at that particular point, we are in the dark as to the work done. I have been told that it is the custom of the department to contract for the delivery of freight at Halifax at the same price as for its delivery at St. John. I understand they deliver flour at Halifax as cheaply as at St. John, although the distance from St. John to Halifax is 278 miles.

Mr. BOWELL. That is not the case. ference to the tonnage the statement the hon. gentleman requires could be procured, but I would have to send to Moncton for it, as there is no record If the hon, gentleman deems it advisable, I will obtain such a statement. The Grand Trunk Railway, in making contracts in the west for the carrying of flour to the east, has a minimum rate at which the Intercolonial Railway will carry it over their portion of the road, and the Canadian Pacific Railway has precisely the same arrangement. The same arrangement is made with these two companies regarding freight from the east over the Intercolonial Railway. They can make any arrangement for carrying freight westward, but the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway have a minimum rate, below which the Intercolonial Railway cannot go in making rates.

Mr. McMULLEN. A large shipper of oatmeal told me that he was surprised that he could ship to Halifax as cheaply as to St. John, and I wish to know what particular reduction the Intercolonial Railway gave in order to enable the other lines to carry oatmeal to St. John?

Mr. BOWELL. The manager says that information is not correct, and that oatmeal or any other freight is not carried from the west as cheaply to Halifax as to St. John.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the volume of flour from the west received at Halifax larger than that received at St. John?

Mr. BOWELL. It is larger at Halifax.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand a report is being made by the chief engineer upon this proposed extension.

Mr. BOWELL. He says he has made a report, but it is not here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If I understand the proposition, it is to expropriate two blocks of inhabited houses to the south or south-west of the present station. Is this estimate of $150,000 made upon any valuation of the expropriators, or a mere assumption?

Mr. BOWELL. It is expected the lot to be expropriated will cost at least $450,000; and with the improvements and work to be done, the cost will be about $625,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So that this $150,000 is a mere vote on account of a contemplated expenditure of at least $600,000, and that is assuming the lands will be expropriated for the figures the chief engineer has given. We may, judging the future by the past, assume that this expenditure will reach in the neighbourhood of a million dollars, for when you come to expropriate a large number of small holdings in a large city like Halifax, you will find that the sum you will be called on to pay will be considerably in excess of the chief engineer's estimate. It is well the House should know that we are entering on a scheme involving the expenditure of over $600,000 to $1,000,000. I would like to ask the hon, gentleman whether, after the land has been expropriated and becomes part of the railway station, a new station will be built for passengers at the south end. This is the scheme as understood by the citizens of Halifax; and whether the present station will then be turned into a freight station.

Mr. BOWELL. That is not the present intention.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.L.) I will be glad if the hon, gentleman will lay on the Table the report of the engineer upon this contemplated scheme for increased accommodation.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Intercolonial Railway-Increased accommodation at Halifax... $136,800

Mr. AMYOT. I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that I have received a letter from my county stating that, during the last election, Mr. McDonald, superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway, wired to the chiefs of the Conservative party in the parish of St. Michel, about four days before the voting, stating that a station would be built in that parish similar to that in the parish of St. Eloi.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are on the item of increased accommodation at Halifax, and I have been requested to take up these items one by one. When the hon, gentleman comes to Rivière du Loup, he may be in order, but we will go on by items.

Mr. AMYOT. I am speaking on the subject of the Intercolonial Railway, and I am opposed to spending any more money in Halifax if other places do not receive justice. If it is a ruling of the Chairman that I am out of order, that is one thing: but, if it is only an expression of his opinion, I will go on. I desire to inform the Minister that St. Michel is one of the finest parishes in that part of the country below Quebec, and there is no accommodation whatever in that parish for the people who want to take the Intercolonial Railway train. Those people have been asking for a long time for a station, and now that the elections are over, and that no political influence should prevent these people from obtaining justice, I think the Government should pay some attention to that part of the Intercolonial Railway. There is a great deal of commerce at that place. I do not object to all the other parishes or to cities like Halifax having their stations and all the accommodation possible, but I object to the systematic deprivation of accommoda-lis time for the House to take action in regard to tion in our portion of the country. I must take advantage of this occasion to inform those who are in charge of the Intercolonial Railway that, doubtless without their knowledge and certainly without any malice on their part, the hours of the running of the trains are not at all suitable to the people. In fact, I know that the farmers prefer to drive fifteen or sixteen leagues rather than to take the trains to Quebec, because the hours are not suitable. As to St. Michel, it is too bad that it has not a proper station. No lady, for example, can possibly wait at that place. I know the Minister is well disposed, and I think it will suffice that he should be made acquainted with the facts in order to see that justice shall be done.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, gentleman did not inform the House who sent him the telegram to which he referred $M_{\rm L}$, AMYOT. I am informed it was a telegram from Mr. McDonald, the superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway, who resides at Fraserville. I do not complain of it because it did not prevent me from being elected. All these promises which have not been fulfilled did not prevent me from carrying the county; but I go a step further and I say that some people do not believe themselves bound by electoral promises, but the people at St. Michel are entitled to a station at that place, and I ask the Minister to give them one as a matter of justice.

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that no person had any authority to send a telegram such as has been referred to by the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot). As to the merits of the case, the department has not thought it necessary in the past to build a station there in the interests of trade; but, if it should be thought necessary or advisable that there should be a station at that place -a small one I suppose would answer the purpose —in the interest of the country and of the Intercolonial Railway such a station will no doubt be I am not prepared to give an opinion mybuilt. self on this subject, because, during the short time I have been administering that department I have not had time to look into all the matters which are involved, but the representations of the hon. gentleman shall have all the consideration they deserve.

Mr. AMYOT. I am very glad to hear that the officer had no authority to send that telegram, because, if he had any authority and his promise had not been fulfilled, it would place the Government in a bad position; but now that the Government have been informed in regard to the matter. I hope they will take the necessary steps, so that officials may not in future endeavour to buy or unduly influence votes by making promises which they are not authorized to make.

Mr. BOWELL. I am thoroughly in accord with the hon, gentieman on that point. No official of this or any other department has any authority to make promises which he is not authorized to make, and I shall instruct the chief engineer to make enquiry in order to find out how any officer came to make this promise, if ever made.

Mr. MULOCK. I am very glad to hear the statement of the Minister. I hope we shall hear more about this before the House rises. I think it officials who so grossly abuse their positions as this not of the tonnage; because, if the hon, gentleman official appears to have done. I hope the decision of the Government will be reported to the House before prorogation. I may remind the Minister that he promised to give some information as to this vote for Halifax, and in order to place the Committee in a position to deal with the matter, I suggest that it would be well to lay on the Table an outline of the plans of the increased accommodation at Halifax, and that we should have also the survey. The Minister will understand that it is owing to the fact that there has been so much money expended on the Intercolonial Railway in the past that we feel it our duty to criticise further expenditures in connection with that road, because they may be investments upon which interest will have to be paid. It was said last night that this extension was in the general interests of Confederation; but, while we may admit that, we say that we should be very careful in adding to the sums we have already invested in that particular enterprise. Now, I am not going to challenge a vote. Possibly there is a necessity for increased accommodation at Halifax; I have no doubt the engineer has come But the to the conclusion that it is necessary. Committee themselves want to be satisfied that it is necessary, and we only ask to be furnished with information which will enable us intelligently to decide for ourselves that it is necessary. afternoon the acting Minister of Railways stated that the probabilities are that it might cost four or five hundred thousand dollars before it is completed. Now, we know that in the past we have sanctioned extensions and expenditures in connection with the Intercolonial Railway that have cost us, in some cases, two or three times the anticipated outlay. Now, it is understood, this outlay will be above half a million. My hon, friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) stated this evening, that from past experience we might look forward to contributing, possibly before this matter is completed, a million of money. Now, as I have already stated, we have already expended $52,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, and it is not paying a farthing to the people in return for the outlay and interest. I say, in the face of that fact, we ought carefully to examine and investigate any further expenditure we are asked to make. In the first place, we would like to know if the engineer is prepared to state to the Committee the increased quantity of business done at Halifax for two or three years? evidence is there to show that this expenditure is necessary? Is the acting Minister prepared to say that they have been so far cramped during the last year for accommodation, that this extension has become absolutely necessary? Perhaps the acting Minister, from his limited experience, has not been able to make that investigation without consulting the engineer. I daresay he has tried to post himself upon all the items connected with the vote, and that he has done his best; but all the same, we would like to know if the past volume of business has so increased that it has become absolutely necessary that this expenditure should take place.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, gentleman is in error when he states that I promised to lay before the Mr. MULOCK.

will remember it, I stated it was impossible to get the statistics he asked for without first communicating with the head office at Moncton, and that might take some days. However, I recognized the propriety of laying the figures, which the hon. gentleman asked for, before the Committee, and I must express my regret that they have not been prepared sooner, so that they might be given to the House for its information. The hon, gentleman and the Committee, upon this occasion, will have to take the information which I myself have gained in my limited connection with the department. We may take it for granted that the engineer, or the manager, has recommended this increased accommodation from a knowledge of the fact that it is an absolute necessity. Certainly there can be no other object in increasing the accommodation in Halifax than to provide for an increased The engineer tells me just now that at traffic. the present moment the freight sheds are filled almost to the roof, with freight, which prevents, as the hon, gentleman well knows, the expeditious shipping of goods when it is required to do so. The shipment of a certain consignment might necessitate the overhauling of a pile of goods reaching almost to the roof, in order to get at the particular goods required. I may say, however, that the land which is shown in the rough diagram I have given, is not all required to be used at present, as the engineer tells me, at the present moment; but the rapid increase of business on that road, more particularly since the Short Line has been constructed, taking it both ways, is so great that, ultimately, all the land would be required, and he thinks it is in the interest of the railway and the country, financially, that the whole land should be secured. If we only purchase a part of it now, a few years hence the rest will have so increased in value that it will cost a great deal more money than it would at the present time. If, however, an equitable arrangement cannot be made with the city of Halifax, then the Intercolonial Railway will have to go further out of town to the northward, in order to obtain the necessary accommodation or expropriate the land.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister will quite understand that before recess I asked for the information in regard to tonnage, with regard to the volume of trade done. I did not for a moment expect that he would have this information at his fingers' end, but I expected that the engineer in charge, certainly, would be so familiar with the gross tonnage at all points besides Halifax, that he would be able to give the Committee that information at once. Now, the hon, gentleman is quite aware of the facts I have already stated in regard to the character of the investment, and he should have expected, at least the engineer should have expected, that the Committee would ask for and require minute information in regard to this proposed expenditure. In my humble opinion the engineer should have been prepared to lay before this Committee a better drawing, a better outline of the property we are asked to purchase, than the mere pencil drawing which has been given us. The engineer must certainly have known that this Committee were going to be asked to consent to Committee, after dinner, the figures of the increased the purchase of a property, the first instalment of tonnage of the trade in Halifax. I spoke then in which would be $1.50,000, a property that he virreference to a report which had been made, and tually admits will eventually cost the country half a million of money. Now, does he really think that this Committee is so indifferent to the duties devolving upon us as an Opposition, that we are going to accept from the engineer's hands a pencil drawing on a piece of paper of that kind, and be asked to assent to the initiation of the purchase of a property, and the extension of railway accommodation, that is going to cost the country half a million dollars? I do not think it is treating this Committee with the courtesy that we have a right to expect, to ask them to accept a drawing of that kind to show us the position of the property in question. The engineer in charge is a very excellent officer; I do not wish to criticise his capabilities for a moment, and I am satisfied he is able to present to this Committee something like a respectable drawing of what we are asked to consent to. I say it is playing with the Committee, in my humble opinion, to ask us to accept that draw-

Mr. BOWELL. I will not repeat the courtesy again. It was a rough draft made by the engineer a few minutes ago, for my own information, and I thought it would be a courtesy to the hon, gentleman to show him the draft in pencil such as it was, and the thanks received are the remarks the hon. gentleman has just made. It is true that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) asked for certain particulars as to the increased tonnage at Halifax, in order to form an opinion as to the necessity of increased accommodation. It is equally true that I told him plainly that such a statement could not be laid before the House until we had received it from Moncton. Having received that answer, I do not see any point in the hon, gentleman repeating the demand. The Committee must not consider that any discourtesy has been shown because a rough draft was shown to a member of the Committee. Had it been suggested that a plan would be wanted, a more scientific one might have been prepared. This information was never asked before, and I did not think it necessary to obtain it. It is somewhat singular that this item should have aroused so much dis-This is the third season it has cussion now. appeared in the Estimates. It was placed there in order that there might be some money at the disposal of the Government to acquire land when they could do it in an economical manner; but we have not succeeded up to the present, nor are we yet sure we can accomplish the object in view in securing the land indicated by the plan. The House is asked to revote $150,000 and to place that sum at the disposal of the Government in order to effect some arrangement with the city of Halifax, if possible, for the securing of more land required for the increased traffic of the Intercolonial Railway at that point. If there is any further information I can possibly give I shall be glad to furnish it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understood the plan submitted was in answer to demands made before recess. I fully understood we were to obtain some information, and if we did not get the figures asked for, we might get a draft of the present accommodations and station yard. When this draft was brought up I looked upon it as an answer to demands made. Two years ago the Railway Committee decided to compel promoters of railway Bills necessary in the Railway Committee it was still more necessary in this House when we are asked to deal with such important matters. We should receive from the Minister of Railways a carefully prepared map showing the property the Government desire to purchase, also the yard accommodation and other evidence showing the necessity for the addition. The Minister has, however, shown nothing; we have not even a plan of Halifax harbour or the present railway accommodation.

Mr. FRASER. Has any arrangement been made with the city of Halifax regarding their proportion of the expense?

Mr. BOWELL. Negotiations have been going on continually during the past year.

Mr. FRASER. Every one understands that this is simply a vote, and no intention exists to carry out the work, and therefore the plan submitted is equal to the investment that is going to be made. The work was promised, and the promise must be continued. Anyone knowing Halifax well understands that there are a number of people who desire this work. There are a few interested in the land that is wanted and they keep up the agitation. I do not say the Minister understands, but those who press the revote perfectly understand, that there is no intention of going on with the work. It was never seriously thought of, but is kept dang-ling before the people. I can, therefore, well understand how the department did not incur any expense in preparing elaborate plans. The department understands very well that it is useless to expend money in getting up plans when there is no intention of going on with the work. There is no need for the vote, as no definite arrangements have been made with the city of Halifax as to i's contribution. The business course to adopt is to make the arrangement with the city of Halifax and then ask Parliament to pass a vote. Halifax is ready to take $400,000 from the Dominion, just as it took $400,000 out of the Province of Nova Scotia some years ago. Suppose $150,000 is voted, we can well understand how anxious the people of Halifax would be to get part of it in order to start the work; but we should first have information as to what the city is ready to do, and whether the Dominion Government can hold the city by such contract and compel the people to pay their share. While the country would be benefited, of course Halifax is most largely interested, but everyone knows that the proposed block would furnish more land than the trade of Halifax would need for the next 500 years. Half a million dollars would not begin to buy the land, and the land is largely covered with buildings. Then, if you cover the property with railway buildings an expenditure of millions would be needed. This is a vote that is not required. It is really a visionary scheme, and a scheme that will never be carried out. I have no doubt that additional accommodation is required, but before voting this money the business-like way would be that Parliament should have some welldefined plan before it, and that the price should be agreed upon.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think there will be any objection to the Committee voting the amount in the humorous sense suggested by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). I fancy that the Minister of Railways would be to submit a map of the projected line, with stop- I fancy that the Minister of Railways would be ping points and general information. If such was equally glad to get it, no matter with what light heart the Committee should vote the amount. facts of this case are known to the people of Halifax, and I have no doubt are well known to my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) as well. The railway terminus in the city of Halifax at one time was at Richmond, which was from two to three miles from the post office, but subsequently, in the year 1873 or thereabouts, perhaps in 1875, the passenger station was extended to North Street, which is at least a mile and a half from the old Richmond terminus. The object of the Government--in fact the object of both sides of the House, because the Government of that day in making the extension to North Street were carrying out the policy which had been pretty well settled upon by their predecessors—the object was to furnish better accommodation to the city, and more business-like accommodation for the railway itself by approaching nearer to the town. The passenger station then was located at North Street, and a small freight accommodation was found room for on the same premises. For years past the necessity of better accommodation for freight has been imperative, and has been notorious in the city of Halifax, and the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, as well as the other railways, are demanding it. We have been, for the last two or three years, making shifts from place to place with the greatest difficulty, and the merchants of the city have been complaining bitterly of the want of accommodation. The other railways, also, have been complaining of the want of such accommodation as would enable them to bring the freight to the city. The House has already twice voted this appropriation in recognition of the demand for greater accommodation there; but the reason, as I understand it, why the expenditure has not been entered upon has been the difference of opinion which has existed in the city itself between the city authorities on the one side and the Board of Trade on the other. The Board of Trade, representing a large number of merchants, insist that the better plan for furnishing this accommodation would be to extend the railway down the wharves, at least as far as the ord-nance property. My own impression, from the information I have had, and from the reports made on behalf of the city and others, is, that that scheme would perhaps not furnish the accommodation which is required, but would demand an indefinite sum of money for the expropriation of this valuable wharf property. The city, on the other hand, has strongly pressed the view that the increased accommodation ought be afforded by taking in the two blocks which lie directly in front of the North Street station. The City Council of Halifax, as well as the Railway Department, has, to a great extent, adopted that view. My hon, friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) states that this property is absurdly out of comparison with the quantity of land needed, but it really contains but seven and a-half acres. covered with buildings, but the buildings are generally old and dilapidated, and of not much value. The assessed value is, I believe, something over $400,000. One reason why the city desires to co-operate in this matter is, that the railway is approached from the city by a street which is less than the usual width, and far less than the width necessary for the convenience of travel. The city desires to widen that street, and a strip of land necessary for that would be taken out of the seven and a-half acres which I have referred to; and on this property would be laid the tracks and freight sidings, if the scheme is carried out. hon, friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is mistaken in supposing that no negotiations have been going on. The delay has occurred in consequence of the difference of opinion which has existed, and the reluctance, both of the Department of Railways and of the City Council, to force their view in that matter, as against the view expressed by the Board of Trade. Twelve months ago, when the late Minister of Railways visited the city of Halifax, my colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and myself, were with him, when he attended at the city hall and had an interview with a deputation representing the City Council. That was by no means the first communication we had on that subject, but it was the first opportunity for a personal interview, and they expressed very strongly their desire that an agreement should be come to at once and this important matter settled in the interest of the city, as well as in the interest of the railway. My hon. friend says that the first step ought to be to enter into an agreement with the city authorities for some definite sum before that vote is passed by this Parliament. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that that cannot be done. If this vote, after being carried for two years, is struck out of the Estimates, the Minister of Railways is not in a position to go to the city authorities and say that he has the permission of Parliament to make any agreement for the acquisition of a single foot of land. other hand, this vote will enable him to enter into an agreement with the city for the making of this improvement, and the sum of money which is asked now to be voted, although not sufficient to accomplish the purpose, would be as much as would be required to be expended before the next sitting of Parliament.

Mr. FORBES. As a Nova Scotian, I can testify that the railway accommodation at Halifax is much less than is required. At present, the accommodation, both for passengers and freight, more especially the latter, is very much less than the demands of the traffic require. I do not know how it is, however, that the Government should call upon Parliament to vote this large sum of money, in face of the protest of the Halifax Board of Trade. There are two representative bodies in Halifax, one the City Council and the other the Board of Trade. These bodies are directly antagonistic on the question of the best means of improving the railway terminus, so as to afford facilities for passengers and freight. They have had numerous consultations and conferences together, and the matter has been thoroughly discussed between them, and in the month of May last, at a meeting of the Board of Trade, the matter was reported from a subcommittee, and a memorandum of that report was prepared to be sent to the members in this House from the city of Halifax. I see the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) present, and he probably will corroborate me in this. I would like to put the opinion of that committee before the House. Here is an account of the meeting of the Board of Trade on 8th July:

"The first business was the reading of the following, which was addressed to Messrs. Kenny and Stairs, the members for the county at Ottawa:—

members for the county at Ottawa:—

"At a meeting of the Board of Trade in May last a memorandum was submitted from the City Council re railway extension to Cornwallis Street. In order to reach some definite proposal, which might be mutually concurred in by the City Council and Board of Trade, a committee of six members of the Board of Trade were appointed to confer with a like committee of the City Council; such conference resulted in the recommendation that a right of way, according to the Government plans, be granted the Dominion Government by the city for the sum of $350,000. Such recommendation was concurred in by the Board of Trade, not because the extension to Cornwallis Street was Trade, not because the extension to Cornwallis Street was considered equal in advantages to the wharf extension, but in order, if possible, to obtain some settlement of that much vexed question, railway extension, and as it was said, to be a preliminary step to the water front extension from Cunard's wharf. At a subsequent meeting of the City Council the recommendation of the united committee was rejected and a resolution passed requiring the Dominion Government to pay $400,000 for a right of way to Cornwallis Street. This action of the council was not concurred in by the Board of Trade, and a committee, viz., Michael Dwyer, G. J. Tropp and J. A. Chipman, were appointed by the Board of Trade to see what could be done with the wharf extension, believing that a right of way might be secured for a much less sum than $400,000."

Now, here is a committee of the City Council putting the approximate value of that property on Cornwallis Street at $400,000. Now, the Board of Trade, who are anxious to bring the extension down to the head of the wharves, and who argue that it would afford better accommodation, represent by far the greater proportion of the commercial element of the city, and I think their views should be well considered before the Government pledge themselves to the expenditure of money to buy property on Cornwallis Street. The report goes on:—

"To the board the committee named in the above addressed the following:

"The first thing which the committee did was to obtain a copy of the total assessment of all property on the east side of Water Street, lying between Deep Water and the ordnance, a memorandum of which is herewith annexed, showing a total valuation of $474,300. Out of this valuation is seems apparent to the committee that right of way showing a total valuation of $474.300. Out of this valuation it seems apparent to the committee that right of way should be secured for a very moderate sum, as there are but few obstacles along the surveyed line, the chief obstructions being a few wooden sheds and portions of some half a dozen wooden warehouses. A difficulty seems to arise on entering Roche's from the Dominion wharf, as the former wharf is some eight feet lower than Water Street or the Dominion wharf. In an interview recently held with Mr. Chandler, C.E., who made the surveys and original plans, it seems, in his opinion, Roche's wharf could be greatly improved by raising it some 3\[\frac{1}{2}\] feet higher; then by cutting down the approach from the Dominion wharf some 3\[\frac{1}{2}\] feet the seeming difficulty of entering to Roche's would be overcome. After going over the route with one of your committee Mr. Chandler suggested, as an alternative scheme, that the track might be run along Water Street on the west side of the elevator and approach the water front in an angular line starting to the south of water front in an angular line starting to the south of Roche's property.

And this is the idea to which I want to draw the attention of this Committee. There seems to be a scheme devised for the purpose of meeting the views of both commercial elements of the city of Halifax, that is, to bring the line at an angle from the present depot down to Water Street, and then along Water Street.

"It has been said that when negotiations were pending to have been said that when negotiations were pending some time since for this railway extension, that through the influence of Sir Charles Tupper negotiations could have been entered into with the Imperial authorities for securing one or other of the properties known as the ordnance and Queen's wharf. Under these circumstances, it has occurred to the committee, who are authorized by the Board of Trade to secure negotiations, that you should ask the Dominion Government to appoint appraisers to assess as soon as possible the value of the damages or benefits to as soon as possible, the value of the damages or benefits to the respective property and wharf owners along the line, and upon such assessment being made, to take evidence and hear arguments before the Court of Appeal of those who decline the appraisement. If the damages adjudged by the court were found greater than in the opinion of the Government they could afford to pay—in other words, should the owners and proprietors be enabled to show serious damages, then the Government could abandon the project if the expenditure was found unwarrantable. The committee are of the opinion that the extension along the water front by acquiring the ordnance as a depot, would be accomplished for an infinitely less sum than would be required to complete the Cornwallis Street extension, and when completed, would combine many advantages over the other scheme."

Now, there is a unanimous report of the committee of the Board of Trade. It is specific, and in plain language it asks this Committee of the House of Commons to defer assenting to the purchase of Cornwallis Street, and making it the depot for the railway extension. The committee go on to say:

"We may state, for the information of the Government, that the property owners included in this route, amounting in assessed value to about $196,000, intimated their willingness to contribute a free right of way, and your committee hope these gentlemen may confirm this in event of the extension being carried into effect. The Board of Trade, in discussing this matter, were struck with the fact that the Government, might take the entire water from that the Government might take the entire water front, that is, all the property on the east side of Water Street, including all warehouses and wharves from Deep Water to the ordnance, at its assessed value, which would cost little more than the right of way to Cornwallis Street, a phase of the subject seemingly hitnerto overlooked."

Now, there are two schemes, by the respective representative bodies of the city of Halifax, put before the Government. One undoubtedly shows, according to the assessed value of that part of Halifax, which nobody will deny is put as high as possible, that the property proposed is worth $474,000, and the other valuation put upon it is $400,000. The committee of the Board of Trade say that $196,000, or in round numbers $200,000, of that $474,000 will be granted by the property-owners giving free right of way if the railway is brought there. That means a cost of not quite $300,000 if the line is taken down to the heads of the wharves. The committee of the Board of the Trade are not pledged to any particular scheme at all. All they want is some measure of railway extension which will satisfy the growing demands of the commerce of Halifax. That commerce is growing fast every year, and they must have railway extension, and the duty of Parliament is to get it in the cheapest and most advantageous way possible. The committee of the Board of Trade suggest that the line should be carried at an angle from the present junction down to Water Street, and then along Water Street to the heads of the wharves.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, gentleman's plan seems to depend on the possibility of getting the Queen's wharf property.

Mr. FORBES. It does not depend entirely on The Board of Trade suggested that the Queen's wharf and the ordnance properties, both of which belong to the Imperial Government, might be an obstacle, but they suggested that they might be obtained as other property is obtained.

Mr. TUPPER. I would like to tell the hon. gentleman that some months ago the Marine Department proposed to the Imperial Government the acquisition by that department of the Queen's wharf, and the reply was that under no circumstances would the Imperial Government part with that property, so that it would seem to finally Street on the west side of the elevator and approach the water front in an angular line.

Mr. BOWELL. Will it have to pass through the ordnance land?

Mr. FORBES. No: the ordnance lands and the Imperial property are out of the question.

Mr. TUPPER. How will it pass?

Mr. FORBES. It will pass on the west side of the elevator through the city proper. That is done in New York and Boston to-day, and in Portland.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. $2,000,000 would not pay the right of way.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. Minister must surely know that the street will still be used for further purposes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The track could not be laid upon it without an Act of the Local Legislature; compensation would have to be given the proprietors for the injury done to their property, and in addition to that, you have two miles of Water Street property covered with wharves which you would have to buy.

Mr. FORBES. You have not to buy the wharf property at all if you go down Water Street. The proposition is to go directly down the street, and there is no insurmountable obstacle.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If you have the money.

Mr. FORBES. There is another feature I would press on the attention of the Government, and that is that they should defer further action until they have considered the three schemes proposed. Board of Trade, the most representative body in Halifax, have asked the Government to defer this expenditure, not that they consider it insufficient or too much, but because the lands required would not suit the wants of the trade. The extension near the water front is what the merchants require. The item passed, I admit, in the last Parliament, but this Parliament is not responsible for that, and many of the members of the old Parliament have not been returned. This Parliament is alone responsible for this appropriation. All I ask the Government to do is to defer, if they cannot adopt the suggestion of the Board of Trade, proceedings for the present, and have an enquiry made before the proper court into the valuation of the property to be taken, and the Government will then know what it will cost to get the property, and if it turns out to be impossible to get the property along Water Street, let them consider the feasibility of the scheme of going at an angle from the present depot down through Water Street.

As the city of Halifax is very Mr. STAIRS. much interested in this item, it is but right that I should say something about it. The importance of the question cannot be overestimated. It is but a question of a year or two when additional station accommodation will have to be found in Halifax. That was admitted by the late Mr. Pope, Minister of Railways, when the amount we are now considering was put on the Estimates originally; but though it was admitted then, it has not been decided as far as I am aware, what is the best way in which One thing is to provide that accommodation. quite certain, and I want that to be thoroughly apprehended by the Committee, that, as far as my standpoint. Mr. Forbes.

colleague and myself are concerned, though we are anxious that the requisite accommodation should be provided, we do not want any money to be spent at Halifax, unless spent to the best advantage, in the interests both of the city and the Railway Department. I do not wish to cast any reflection on anyone who has had charge of railway expenditure in Halifax in the past, but a good many mistakes have been made in that city. Some of the station accommodation proved, in the course cf a few years, to be wholly inadequate to the requirements of the trade. There is no doubt that some money has to be spent in Halifax, and it is admitted it must be in a little while, and I believe a plan should be so chosen that will be sufficient for the needs of the trade for many years, so that the Government may not have to come back to Parliament in a few years and ask a further sum for railway accommo-I regret I was not in the House when the dation. item was first discussed. Had I known it was to come up, I would have been glad to be in my seat, and I regret that I did not hear those hon, gentlemen who spoke on the other side, but I rather gather from the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice that he has fully replied to the arguments put forth by these hon, gentlemen. There is one point we cannot settle here to-night and I might remind the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) of this fact. It is impossible for us to go into details and say what particular scheme, of the different ones suggested, should be adopted by the department. It is sufficient for us to know that something must be done. The department, in conjunction with the City Council and the Board of Trade of Halifax, I have no doubt, will, in the course of time, find out what should be done, and I am not going to pronounce any opinion whatever upon the merits of the various rival schemes suggested. I only want it to be understood that we must find out what is the best to be done before any move is made in the matter at all. I am glad to say that the trade of Halifax has increased in the last few years, and it is on account of this increase our station accommodation is altogether inadequate for the needs of the city; but I point out one feature in connection with what was said by the hon, member for Queen's that, in considering the question of railway extension, we must take into consider-ation the needs of the city as regards the handling of the freight of the city. It will not be sufficient to provide access to the centre of the city along the streets for freight to be distributed in carloads, but you must have the ordinary station accommodation by which freight will be received and distributed in small quantities. The item now before the Committee, should, I think, be allowed to pass; and, judging from what has been said by the Minister of Justice, it may not be sufficient to carry on the extension required, but, as he also explained, if a further vote is needed it can be obtained before the expenditure is required to be made. What I impress on the Minister of Railways is that he should take steps to settle this point as soon as possible in conjunction with the City Council and Board of Trade and representatives of Halifax, coupled with the very best advice he can get from his engineers as to what is the right thing to do from a railway He should make up his mind as quickly as possible and then take the necessary steps to carry out this work.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman has addressed to this House a speech in which he intimates that he has not yet made up his mind as to which of the rival routes is to be selected. The hon, gentleman represents the city of Halifax. His mind at present is too fair to lose its balance and decide in favour of which road the merit lies. seems to me that, until he has made up his mind, and until the Government have made up their minds, it would be premature for the House to vote any appropriation for this purpose, because it may be a long time before the hon. gentleman will be able to decide which of these rival pieces of property should be preferred. The city of Halifax is a place of great expectations. I believe a few years ago that city expected to become the emporium for the shipment of all the grain raised in British North America and in the Western States. At that time they required a great deal more accommodation than they do now. They began to erect elevators on the strength of this hopeful outlook. They erected one as a sort of promise of what was to come. That elevator was constructed just before an election, and I do not know whether any grain has been stored in it or not. I have been informed that there was one carload stored in it since it was erected. The people of Halifax were assured that their city was to be the sea terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and in fact of the whole Canadian railway system, and that it would be rather a good thing if the Americans were to adopt the policy of non-intercourse and shut the Canadian railways out from any intercourse with the United States, and that the worse they endeavoured to do to us in that particular, the better it would be for us, and especially for the cities of St. John and Halifax. It seems to me that we ought to have a little further indication that what has been already voted was applied to useful purposes before we are asked to make any further expenditure on schemes which one hon, gentleman says are not likely to be realized. I have no doubt that the acting Minister of Railways will feel that he is discharging his duty to the people of Nova Scotia if he obtains this appropriation. He is like the man who led the horse to water and could not make him drink in the rainstorm. The hon, gentleman takes the appropriation, and then it is not his fault if nothing is done. My hon, friend to the left says nothing is required to be done. The Minister of Railways has shown that that is a mistake. He has left the impression on my mind, and particularly the hon-member for Halifax has left the impression on my mind, that Halifax is not ready to do anything in The hon, gentleman is the organ of that city, and he says that there are two pieces of property upon which railway buildings might be placed, but it is impossible for him to say which is the best. He is in the clouds mentally, and that being so, I think this appropriation should remain in the clouds until he is ready to come down.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think those who have to pay for this large expenditure should have something to say about it. Knowing nothing whatever about the rival sites, and knowing nothing about the city of Halifax, I would ask the acting Minister place their required accommodation on either of these places which have been referred to. the trade of Halifax is not the principal element to be considered in this matter. I understand that the great bulk of the freight for which this increased accommodation is necessary is not freight in which the city of Halifax is interested, that is to say, that it is not for the trade of the city itself, but that it is freight passing through from the east to the west, and, therefore, it is a matter of great importance to the producers of this country, to the exporters and importers, to obtain this accommodation, but that is a matter entirely distinct from the interests of the city of Halifax. If the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway were dealing with this question, they would regard the interests of the city of Halifax as being of very minor importance, and, if they could find a proper site elsewhere, they would not attend to any representations of the Board of Trade or the City Council of Halifax. I ask the Minister whether he is bound to bow to the decision of the city of Halilax as expressed either by the Board of Trade or by the City Council in regard to the selection of the site. If there is an alternative, I think it should be made use of without reference to the people of Halifax unless they are prepared, as they ought to be, to assist the Government in obtaining this trade. If the people of Halifax are desirous to have this trade concentrated in their city, they should be prepared to give some assistance to the Government, instead of trying, as I think they are doing, to make a good thing out of the Government by the sale of this property. I ask the Minister of Railways, therefore, before he makes any deal of this kind, whether there is not a site independent of these rival interests which will enable him to obtain a proper location for the trade which we are all interested in seeing developed. I think this is the course which should be pursued and which any other railway company would pursue, and I think it is only just to the tax-payers of the Dominion that the hon, gentleman should ignore all, these local interests. takes that stand, and lets the people of Halifax understand that he is doing so, I believe he will find them more reasonable to deal with. I am as anxious as anyone in Halifax can be that that city should be made the great eastern port of this Do-This country has already made great minion. sacrifices and great expenditures in order to make that our eastern port, and, if possible, the port for the trade of the Western States, and for my part I am prepared to make further sacrifices to the same end, so that it is from no jealousy or desire to see the port of Halifax belittled in any way that I make these remarks; but I consider that we are bound to see that the interests of the producers of Canada are considered more than any local interests.

Mr. BOWELL. The Government is in no way pledged to either the one scheme or the other. requirements of that terminus of the road render it absolutely necessary that further accommodation should be given not so much for the through trade as for the local trade which is increasing to a great extent. The past difficulties in the acquiring of property have arisen from differences of opinion between certain parties in Halifax and from the fact of Railways whether the Government are bound to that the Government has refused to accede to the demand of either the City Council or the Board of Trade. If the hon, gentleman has been in Halifax and knows where the terminus is, and if he knows that Halifax lies on the side of a hill and that the only possible place for a terminus is down at the water's edge, he would see the impossibility of obtaining it elsewhere, unless we were to go out of the city further to the north. I only repeat that the Government is in no way pledged, neither have they made up their minds as to any particular course they will take. That would depend altogether upon the terms which could be made with the parties in Halifax, and n no agreement can be come to with the City Council on behalf of the city, then the Government would have to assume the responsibility of expropriating such land as is absolutely required for the purposes of the railway. That explanation, I hope, will satisfy and ease the mind of the hon. member for Queen's, who is very anxious that the Government should not put itself in a position to be compelled to follow the course suggested by either of those corporate bodies. They are as free to-day as they have ever been, in reference to what may be done in the future. That would depend altogether upon circumstances, and if they cannot make arrangements with the city, they will have to take the course which is taken by every private corporation, and expropriate the lands required for their use, independently of the wishes of the people of Halifax. The hon, gentleman has suggested various routes. If you touch the ordnance land, the Imperial Government seem to have as high an opinion of the value of land as the people of Halifax have; they refuse to allow it even to pass through the ordnance land without going to the Queen's wharf, and demand some $400,000 to allow us even to pass through the ordnance land, a sum which I do not think this Parliament is prepared to vote for that pur-The rough draft that I have before me shows the land that is suggested by the engineer as best in the interest of the railway and of the traffic. If that could be acquired at anything like a reasonable cost, the Government' would enter into an arrangement to purchase it; if not, they will have to pursue some other course.

Mr. FORBES. Do I understand you to say that the Government is not committed to this particular route?

Mr. BOWELL. They are not committed to anything.

Mr. FORBES. I understood you to say that the representative bodies in Halifax are not committed.

Mr. BOWELL. No; I said the Government is not committed to take any route, or to purchase a foot of land anywhere. They are at liberty to take just such a course in the future as they think best in the interest of the country.

Mr. TUPPER. I was present at the interview referred to by the Minister of Justice, between the city authorities and the late Minister of Railways, and it seems to me that he put the subject to them very clearly, so that there can be no misunderstanding about it. He told them that the necessities of the road were such that certain lands would have to be acquired for giving terminal facilities far from its being a local trade, it was local in this respect only, that it was composed chiefly of grain and flour. Now, the merchants there suffer tremendous inconvenience, because the moment a shipment arrives they are compelled to do what merchants are not compelled to do on any private railway system, take delivery of that car immediately, or else the car is moved away and they must follow the car up the track, or wait de-livery and pay demurrage. The freight accumulates there to such an extent that, as he explained it to them, the Railway Department will have to obtain extra accommodation. Two propositions were put forward and they have been explained to-night. Both of them involve more money than the Railway Department would have to expend if it consulted merely its own immediate interests. instance, it would take less land than is involved in either scheme, and, therefore, would require less public money. The proposition, as put by the late Minister of Railways, was this: He had the estimate, he had the plan, and he had the amount, therefore, of what the department would probably have to expend irrespective of the City Council or the wharf owners, who were then interested in the other view now represented in the Board of Trade. But he put it to them that the Railway Department would be willing to contribute its quota to the scheme most acceptable to the locality, but not one dollar more. They were both pressing on the Railway Department to assume the whole burden. The answer was that there was no necessity on the part of the railway of expending a dollar more than was absolutely required. More than that would be for local interests in the strongest sense of the word. Now, if these parties do not come to an agreement, the Railway Department is left free to make such an arrangement as is absolutely necessary in the interest of the traffic of the road. With reference to the allusion of the hon, member for Bothwell, concerning a grain elevator and the general election, I may say that it is not a public work done in the interest of any particular party. There was a great agitation in the city, and members of both parties took part in that agitation. claimed they had great confidence in the possibility of a grain trade for shipment and export being obtained at that port. The meeting at which these gentlemen attended and made their public demand upon the Government, was a meeting in which prominent Liberals took a very prominent part. Dwyer, particularly, was loud in his denunciation of the want of action of the Government in not providing sufficient freight facilities at a port such as Halifax, such as are offered at American ports by private railways, and the claim was, as the hon. member for Queen's recollects well, that it was due to the city and due to the road to equip the road with proper terminal facilities such as any great railway system like the Intercolonial Railway ought to have on the sea board.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Whether they were used or not.

Mr. TUPPER. These gentlemen believed and they argued that it only required an appropriation and the construction of a grain elevator for the immediate fulfilment of their hopes. I recollect perfectly well that the best business minds in that city at that time, no matter what has happened at Halifax sufficient to accommodate the trade. So subsequently, were of the opinion that an enormous. amount of grain would come down to shipment at the port of Halifax.

Mr. STAIRS. I think the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) misunderstood what I said, as did also the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). I endeavoured to state the facts of the case as clearly as I could. I want the Committee to understand that, as representing Halifax, as the hon. member for Bothwell says I did, and as I admit I do, I do not come here to press upon Parliament the expenditure of any money except that which is in the interest of the railway itself. I think I cannot state anything more fair than that. In reply to the member for Muskoka, I repeat what I said to the acting Minister of Railways, that the additional states of the st tional accommodation that it is proposed to provide at Halifax, is for local traffic. By local traffic I mean the freight which goes out of the city and comes into the city for the supply of the citizens, not that which is brought into the city and shipped away by vessels, and has no connection whatever with the accommodation that is provided for steamers bringing freight going to the western portions of the Dominion. I, therefore, think that the argument of the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) was altogether a mistaken one.

Mr. O'BRIEN. In that case you do not surely propose that half a million dollars should be spent out of the public funds to provide for the local trade of Halifax.

Mr. STAIRS. When the Government of Canada own and operate a railway we expect they will proceed as a private company would proceed, such as the Grand Trunk or Canadian Pacific Railway, and I am sure that is what is expected by the people of Halifax. A private corporation has to find its station accommodation in any city which it enters. The different proposals discussed will result in this, and I think it is what the citizens want, that so soon as the railway department has thoroughly satisfied itself as to what is the right thing to do in the interests of the railway as regards providing additional internal accommodation, the work will be carried out. That is what I wish the Minister would do as quickly as possible. Why I mentioned the opinions of different bodies, such as the City Council and the Board of Trade, was simply as affording one means by which the Department of Railways could satisfy itself as to what was in its own interests and what would be the best way of providing terminal facilities, but I do not consider, by any means, that the Government is bound in any way by those opinions.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What does the hon, gentleman think a private corporation would do in a case of this sort, when its expenditure exceeded its income by $750,000 a year?

Mr. STAIRS. I think that would depend a good deal on the class and the amount of business being done in the city. A company might be forced into a capital expenditure to provide sufficient accommodation, even if its business showed quite a serious loss in running expenses. It might not be able to help itself.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think a good deal as does the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), that we should criticize closely the proposed vote for expenditure in Halifax, especially as the item is only the beginning of a work which will amount to half a colonial but by steamer from Boston, which is a million dollars. Judging from the estimates submitted in times past it would be safe to say that if we enter on the expenditure it will amount to a million and a-quarter or a million and a-half instead of half a million. We should be very careful in entering upon it. I do not think the expenditure is required, for the terminal facilities of the Intercolonial Railway in Halifax are as good as those of any private corporation I know of. I guarantee that the terminal facilities of the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway in Toronto are no better than those of the Intercolonial Railway in Halifax.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, oh.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have had a great deal to do with the Intercolonial, and we have sent a great deal of freight to Halifax, and I know what the terminal facilities are. They are, I repeat, very good. There is a branch line running round to Dartmouth, so that the people there receive freights without a dollar being paid for switching. A carload of flour is delivered at Dartmouth at the same price as at Halifax. That extension has cost much money to this country, and in regard to general facilities in Halifax proper they are certainly very good. The Minister of Marine said that a merchant receiving a car-load of flour would be obliged to remove it at once. Is that not the case with any railway? The car must be unloaded within 48 hours, if not $2 a day for demurrage is charged.

Mr. TUPPER. They cannot get 48 hours under the present system.

Mr. TUPPER. I am speaking from representations made by the merchants of Halifax,

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am speaking from my personal knowledge, from communications and from my personal experience in Halifax. railway will give 48 hours to unload a car. When a car comes to Halifax the same rule applies as in any other part of the Dominion. The receiver must unload the car within 48 hours and provide storage. In Halifax, the railway having a large freight house, it is the custom to unload flour there, and it can remain there for a certain time by paying small sums as storage. This is a considerable advantage. In Toronto a man receiving a car-load of flour finds there is no accommodation at the railway and that he must provide his own accommodation elsewhere. The accommodation at Halifax is certainly very good, and all that should be expected for the Dominion to provide. I do not blame the member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs), who naturally wants this money expended. He is anxiously looking after the good of his constituents, and it would be very nice to have a million expended in erecting large warehouses there. But the people of the country will have something to say in regard to this unnecessary and unwise expenditure, and we should pause before we enter on it: The estimates also contain an item of $78,000 for increased accommodation in St. John. We have sent a good deal of flour there, but have had no complaints in regard to the accommodation. It is no wonder merchants desire to have longer time in which to unload cars if increased accommodation can be obtained at Dominion expense, but it is wrong to provide it at the Dominion expense. Both in Halifax and St. John large quantities of goods do not come by the Intervery convenient mode of shipping freight to those points. It is unloaded on the docks and every receiver provides his own storage. We should hesitate before entering on this large expenditure, which is not at all required at the present time.

I believe, notwithstanding what Mr. FLINT. my hon. friend has said, if it were clearly shown to this Committee that increased accommodation for handling the freight coming to Halifax by the Intercolonial were required, this Committee on both sides would receive that information with a great deal of generous consideration, and this House would be disposed to assist in every reasonable way to carry out the requirements that were shown to be necessary. I am of the opinion that increased freight accommodation is required in Halifax, but to what extent I am not prepared to say. know that in a few years the trade of the Intercolonial Railway has developed very considerably. There has been great improvement in the traffic on the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, and within a few weeks the line between Halifax and Yarmouth has been completed, which goes into Halifax, and this, taken in connection with the completion of the Short Line and other facts which are probably quite familiar to all members of the House, makes it quite apparent that there must be considerably increased trade and increase in the quantity of goods coming into the city of Halifax to be handled by the railway company, and by the consignees of these goods. Consequently, I think, care has not been taken by the Minister in charge of the department at present, to show to what extent there has been an increase in the railway traffic, requiring this new and extensive accommodation. I think that several questions asked by my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) were quite pertinent to this question; but I presume it would require notice to be given to the department to produce these figures before the House. The department has not as fully informed the Committee as might be expected as to their ideas in making this initial expenditure of $150,000. We find from the discussion which has taken place, and from the interesting remarks which have fallen from my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Stairs) and my friend from Queen's (Mr. Forbes), that the whole situation is involved in obscurity, that the merchants of Halifax are apparently hopelessly divided as to which will be the best plan for improving this accommodation, and that the department has no scheme in view. Even admitting the necessity for increased accommodation in the city of Halifax, and I believe the time is coming when it must have increased accommodation, yet the lack of information on the subject placed before the House, renders this criticism legitimate. It has been an unfortunate fact in the history of this country, that whatever merits our friends on the other side of the House may have, yet in the matter of what I may call financial perspective, they have always manifested themselves to be very much behind-Scarcely any of their estimates for public works have been borne out by the ultimate facts, and, consequently, they have taught the House to be very suspicious when appropriations are asked for these works. I think from my knowledge of the locality, that the amount tentatively suggested by the acting Minister of Railways, is far less than must be required to carry out the plan which is proposed. Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. BOWELL. What amount does the hon. gentleman refer to?

The hon. Minister suggested that Mr. FLINT. he thought that the expropriation of the land described by him would cost about $450,000. That, I think, is far below the mark. However, I would be perfectly willing to hold my personal opinion in abeyance, if definite statements were placed before the Committee, showing the size of these lots, the character of the buildings on these lots, and their estimated value based on the assessment by the city of Halifax. This is a very extensive lot of land and it is covered, I understand, with brick buildings, and wooden buildings, and in some cases, stone buildings. It is situated in the heart of the city and I think the estimate for this expropriation is below the mark. There is another fact which should be taken into consideration in connection with this matter. I think that we should have an estimate by competent engineers, as to the amount that would be required to grade this seven and a-half acres and to render it fit for laying the necessary tracks on it. We have no information as to the character of the warehouses, and the freight sheds, and all the various buildings which we require for this terminus. think that, considering the history of my friends opposite in connection with public works, and from my personal knowledge of this locality, that a million dollars would be much nearer the mark for the carrying out of this scheme, than the modest sum of $600,000 suggested by the Minister. believe that additional accommodation is required in the city of Halifax, and I am quite prepared to vote a reasonable sum for that purpose; but I believe that the Government are not treating the House fairly in not laying before it more details as to how they intend to expend this money. Government admit that they have no accurate information to place before the House to enable us to form some reasonable conclusion as to what this work will cost. I trust that the House will not commit itself to the expenditure of so large a sum of money, even to the city of Halifax, without getting more information.

Mr. TUPPER. What, in your opinion, would be a reasonable sum?

Mr. FLINT. I do not know what a reasonable sum would be; but I believe that if the House commits itself to this scheme proposed by the acting Minister of Railways, it will involve the expenditure of nearly a million dollars, and I believe that the House should not consent to that without receiving more definite information. I can see no very great difficulty in delay in this case. It may be, that if the Government and the city of Halifax come to some conclusion, the Government would require some small amount of money at its disposal to close the bargain, but as the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) has said, there is not the slightest possibility of one cent of this money being expended within the next twelve months. Whenever a definite scheme of anything like a reasonable character is proposed to furnish additional accommodation to the city of Halifax, I believe it will receive generous consideration from the members on this side of the House as well as from the other side.

Mr. MULOCK. I think everyone in this House will sympathize with the remarks of the last speaker when he stated that when a definite, business-like proposal is made, it would receive the most favourable consideration from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. When I consider the form in which this proposition was submitted to the Committee, I am compelled to come to the conclusion that the Government is not in earnest in presenting it. First of all, the acting Minister of Railways gave some slight verbal explanations, apologizing for his inability to go into the matter more fully, on the ground that he has been but a short time in the department. Later on, however, seeing that it was only right that the Committee should have information, he had a small pencil sketch prepared, which he submitted as representing the scheme in question. If I am right, his sketch was wrong, because it is quite clear now that it did not indicate the location of the proposed site. was the object in presenting that sketch to the Committee? It showed the lots proposed to be bought; it set forth two blocks of land, and but for the subsequent discussion I, for one, would have been under the impression that had we voted this money it would have been for the acquisition of the two blocks shown in that sketch. It might have been from inadvertence that that sketch was presented; but it is well that the discussion has taken place, because it is quite clear now that everything is at large, that there is no definite proposition and no definite consensus of opinion between the Government and the people of Halifax, or between different sections of the people themselves. In fact, there is no unity between those who are advancing the scheme. If they desired to defeat it, they could hardly present to a deliberative body a better plan. The Minister of Justice, while advocating it by his words, condemned it by his argument. He said it was a matter in respect of which there was to be co-operation on the part of the people of Halifax. What co-operation? What did he mean by that? He meant, if he meant anything, that there was to be substantial co-operation-that if there was to be expenditure by the people of Canada there was also to be some substantial consideration conceded by the city of Halifax. Therefore, the Minister of Justice argued that it would not be right for us to go into the scheme proposed, except on joint terms with the people of Halifax. Having in that way condemned the scheme in advance, by showing that there was no such co-operation, he dropped the case, and left it for the junior member for Halifax; and how did he present it? He told us, in answer to the hon. member for Muskoka-and I interpret prior remarks in the light of his subsethe scheme was statement — that local one, that it was to meet local needs. In saying that, he cut away a good deal of the argument in favour of the scheme, because his colleague, the hon. member for Muskoka, took strong exception to so large an expenditure merely to serve a local want. Therefore, in admitting the serve a local want. weakness of the scheme, he as much as asked the Committee to disapprove of it. Further, he said that it was necessary to go very slowly and very carefully, that there had been serious mistakes made in Halifax before in connection with such enterprises, that there was also a difference of opinion down there, and he had not the slightest idea in his own mind which was the better scheme; Parliament in this crude manner a scheme of the so that, he left it in as unsettled a condition as it could possibly be placed in. I suppose a brief speech had to be made by him, in recognition of ante-election speeches, and to that extent he may think he has discharged his duty to the good people of Halifax. But, substantially, he has given this scheme a very serious blow by his argument. Then, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, bringing his local knowledge to bear on the subject, stated that while some expenditure on the part of the Government might be justifiable, yet there ought to be a very considerable expenditure on the part of the people of Halifax if this large scheme were to go through. So that all these hon, gentlemen have as much as possible discredited the scheme by saying that it is crude, that it is wholly unsettled, that there ought to be joint action by other persons not represented here, that there are various propositions the merits of which are not agreed upon, and that it would be premature for Parliament now to make the grant. That is about the case which has been made by these alleged advocates of this move-Now, Sir, I join with all the members of this House who may agree with me in my desire that we should build up a port such as Halifax, even if in doing so we are benefiting the people of that locality, because, while it may benefit the neighbourhood it will serve a great purpose. cannot ignore the fact that Halifax is our winter port, begging the pardon, of course, of the hon. members for St. John, and not discrediting the port they represent; but I think I have even their concurrence in saying that Halifax is the great hope of Canada, so far as a winter port is concerned.

Mr. HAZEN. No.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, subject to the claims of St. John, which may have its turn too. At all events, we are going to have a maritime port, and we are going to develop the trans-Atlantic traffic when we get an active Government in office that will be able to promote a fast line of steamships. Of course, the present Administration having forgotten that scheme, there is not the same need for an Atlantic port as there will be when we have an active and business-like Administration. I am in favour of developing the important port of Halifax, and it is important that in the public interest a proper, business-like scheme should be laid before Parliament. This is but an initial investment, which must be followed up by a very considerable expenditure, amounting, some gentlemen say, to a million. I do not know how much, but the Minister of Justice admitted that the actual purchase of the land would cost over $400,000, at which sum or more the property was assessed. It is quite clear that we shall not be able to acquire that property and improve it to any appreciable extent except at a cost in the vicinity of the sum named by the last speaker. Therefore, could there be presented to the Committee a more unbusinesslike proposition than that which we are now considering? We are asked to authorize the Government to enter upon a transaction which is vague and indefinite, the ultimate cost of which is not known, but to which Parliament would be committed by making the original purchase. I, therefore, feel that the hon. gentlemen have been unjust and unfair to the interests which they profess a desire to promote, in presenting to importance of that under consideration. We have every reason, I think, to criticize, not in a spirit of obstruction, but in a spirit of carefulness and caution, all propositions involving such large expenditures. Why, Sir, every public work that has been undertaken under the authority of Parliament for years past has exhibited the same features and has disappointed the country. We know that the expenditure has, I may say, invariably exceeded by large figures the original estimates. Representations of a flattering character are made at the initial stage, and perhaps accepted with a good deal of confidence by the House, but the end is disappointment, owing to a lax administration or a careless regard for the people's money. And I trust that we are inaugurating a new regime, and whilst not prejudging an enterprise of importance in a narrow spirit, yet we should act in a prudent, careful way, whereby we shall know well in advance before we take the leap what is to be the cost; and at this stage is the time for us to have this information. We are now some little distance from prorogation, and I think it would be well for the Administration to take a few days to consider this scheme and present it to us in a more businesslike way, and one which would entitle it to the best consideration of the Committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice the hon. Minister intends asking a grant of $80,000 for terminal accommodation at St. John. With regard to the Halifax terminus, I wish to know whether it is his intention to extend the other termini of the Intercolonial Railway. We have St. Andrews, St. John, Moneton and North Sydney. Is it the intention of the Government to make Halifax the principal terminus of the line? Are we going to have the five termini, or concentrate the whole in one?

Mr. BOWELL. I never knew before that St. Andrews was on the Intercolonial Railway. However, the longer we live the more we learn. Halifax is the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway proper. Cape Breton is another road altogether. Of course, under the Act passed this session all these branches are made portions of the Intercolonial Railway, and the only answer I can give, is, that the Government will do what they think is necessary to procure increased accommodation at all points along the road, as the traffic may demand it. An item has been put in for St. John and one for Moncton, and also one for New Glasgow, and when we come to these I will give the reasons why the appropriations are asked, but they do not in any way affect the item before the Committee. This is simply to place a sum of money at the disposal of the Government, as has been done in the past, to be used as soon as an arrangement can be made which will justify the Government in acquiring more land and in the construction of freight sheds. With regard to the objections urged by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), he is just as much interested in the accommodation at Halifax in order to supply the wants of the roads to which he has referred, and which now make connection with his own city, as the people of Halifax are. He says it is going to cost a great deal of money; and he complained repeatedly, during his short speech, that sufficient information had not been given. I gave him all the information I could, and Mr. Mulock.

I told him what I thought the cost would be if the demands of the city of Halifax were acceded I also told him that the Government were not committed to their demand or to any particular scheme, but this increased accommodation was absolutely required for the increased traffic, and it was necessary to have a certain sum of money placed at the disposal of the department in order to secure that accommodation if possible. I also informed the Committee what the estimate was for laying the tracks and what the cost of the erection of the buildings would be, which would be about $175,000. Now Ido not know what the Committee or the gentlemen who have spoken require beyond that, unless they want the plans laid upon the Table and detailed estimates of the work, which I would not have the slightest objection to laying before the Committee, if they were in such a state as to enable me to do so. I can assure the Committee it is not the intention of the Government to spend more than is absolutely necessary. I must, however, dissent entirely from the theory laid down, that local traffic is not a traffic that should be cultivated. Nor is it any reason why accommodation should not be procured to assist in the storing of goods brought to the termini of any road because it happened to be local. We all know that on the Intercolonial Railway, taking from St. John to Moncton, and from Moneton to Halifax, and on the Windsor Branch, all these roads being more of a local character than the whole through line, are the most profitable, and if the local traffic pays best it should have the same accommodation as if it were the through traffic. When we apply the word "local" to railway traffic, that does not mean providing ordinary local accommodation for the city of Halifax, but accommodation for that trade which is rapidly growing in the Maritime Provinces, to such an extent, that I hope the day is not far distant when the road will not show a deficit every year or any year.

Mr. McMULLEN. I put my question, because I heard Sir Charles Tupper, when Minister of Railways, speak in the highest terms of these four different points, and I was not quite certain whether the accommodation at each was equal or not. I did not know whether it was the intention to make equal accommodation for the whole or finally decide to make Halifax the principal point.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. Minister of Railways account for the great increase of the deficit in the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, gentleman was not here last night. We said something about the deficit then.

Mr. MULOCK. But we did not get an explanation of the deficit.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understood from the Minister of Customs that the object of this increased accommodation was to build freight houses and warehouses.

Mr. BOWELL. That is a portion of the expenditure, as I have already stated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Would you propose to allow receivers of flour, pork or corn to store their goods in these warehouses free?

speech, that sufficient information had not been given. I gave him all the information I could, and quite as much as ever has been given in the past. So goods brought there either from the ships or as local freight. The wavehouse accommodation at Halifax is not sufficient for the purposes of the road.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The custom on every railway that I know of is that where there are broken carloads of freight they are unloaded in the company's warehouse, and must be removed within a certain time or storage will be charged. full carloads come in there is no provision made for unloading in the company's warehouses, but the receivers must unload within 48 hours. know that is the case in Halifax, but there the receivers have a further privilege; of unloading in the company's warehouse, and they can allow their goods to remain there for one or two months by paying storage. I think the Government should make receivers of flour and other cargoes provide their own storehouses, and many people in Halifax have storehouses, and would be willing to store goods for other persons, and then I believe the Government would find they have sufficient accommodation without going into this additional expenditure.

Mr. MULOCK. I hope the Minister will answer the question I put to him a little while ago.

Mr. BOWELL. I have answered this question The misfortune is, members of the four times. House are not in their seats when the discussion takes place. They drop in at various periods, and we have to go over the same thing several times. The deficit on the Intercolonial Railway to which the hon, gentleman alluded arises from many causes. No doubt one cause was the construction of the Short Line, which diverted a large portion of the trade from the Intercolonial Railway. How long that is going to continue I am not prepared to say. Further, after the opening of that Short Line it was necessary, in order properly to compete with it, to put on fast trains which did not then exist, and they cost a great deal of money. There has also been a large amount of money expended in some years more than in others in keeping the track clear on the northern section. I am informed that it requires a large number of men to be constantly employed in keeping the snow off, besides the use of the snow plough. From the little enquiry I have made in reference to that, I should judge that the expenditure on that part of the road costs 50 or 100, or even 200 per cent. in some years, more than the expenditure for similar purposes on any other road in the Dominion. We can understand that in a severe winter a large amount of money must be expended to keep the road open. There are various other reasons which have led to the deficit on that road.

Mr. MULOCK. These are possible reasons. What I asked was, what was the cause of the increase in the cost for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1890?

Mr. BOWELL. The first reason I gave was that a great deal of it was due to the opening of the Short Line, which had diverted a large portion of the trade. That is a positive reason and not simply a possible one, because we know by sad experience that it has had that result.

Mr. MULOCK. That road was opened some years ago.

Mr. TUPPER. It was opened during that fiscal year in June, 1889.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why is that?

Mr. BOWELL. That is necessitated by the opening of the Cape Breton Railway. Another district has been created, and new district officers have to be appointed, and also additional sidings and baggage accommodation for the opening of these two sections for traffic. The offices and station buildings will cost about $8,000, the baggage room and shed $600, removing freight house, $1,400, and an additional siding $1,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does this cover the whole expenditure?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that this is all that is required. No portion of this has been expended yet.

Mr. FRASER. Is the building to be erected on the site of the present building?

Mr. BOWELL. Not quite. It will be erected a little east of it.

Mr. FRASER. Is it to be an enlargement of the present building or a new building?

Mr. BOWELL. It is a new building. It will be a two-storey building.

Mr. FRASER. Of what material?

Mr. BOWELL. Brick.

Mr. FRASER. Will the baggage-room be in the same position?

Mr. BOWELL. It will be a little west of the station.

Mr. FRASER. The freight building in New Glasgow is about the poorest building to be found in any town in Nova Scotia, or anywhere else. I am bound to say that this expenditure is all right, and I do not say so because I live there myself. The wretched building now in use was erected when the road was open only as far as New Glasgow. At that time, perhaps, it suited the conditions of the place.

Mr. BOWELL. Do you think $8,000 will be sufficient?

Mr. FRASER. I have no doubt the Government have informed themselves before to-day.

Increased accommodation at Moneton...$7,650

Mr. BOWELL. I have called the attention of the chief engineer to this heading of increased accommodation. It is the form of heading that has been used from the beginning in preparing estimates. The vote is for the purpose of supplying more machinery for the Moncton workshops, and for a new shop that has just been erected.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many new cars have been put on last year? The principle laid down with regard to rolling stock has been, that when a car was used up and another was substituted it was charged to working expenses. I presume the item we are now voting is to be charged to capital account.

Mr. BOWELL. The same principle prevails now as formerly. When cars are broken or used up, and others are substituted, the latter are charged to working expenses; but if any additional new cars are purchased they are charged to capital account. This item is for the purpose of supplying what is termed the Westinghouse air-brake to the freight cars on the road. There are 136 freight cars which, at $65 each air-brake, make a total of about $10,000. It is also to purchase an apparatus for heating the passenger cars by steam direct from the engine; also for the purpose of fitting up locomotives.

Mr. McMULLEN. This item should have been entered for the improvement of rolling stock.

Mr. BOWELL. These expenditures are necessary for the safety of life, and also for economy in utilizing steam from the engine, instead of using coal for heating.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can understand that it is necessary that these improvements should be made. I do not know what the system is upon the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, whether they usually place to capital account charges of this kind. My own opinion is that they should be charged to working expenses. However, as the system has been introduced of charging such items to capital account, I presume it is not necessary now to discuss the wisdom of that system. Can the hon, gentleman tell me how many new freight cars were put on the road this year in place of old cars?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that the Grand Trunk use the Westinghouse air-brake on their passenger cars, but they have not yet applied it to the freight cars. The Intercolonial Railway has taken a step in advance of the Grand Trunk Railway, and we are going to place that air-brake upon our freight cars for the greater safety of the brakesmen. As to the number of additional new cars and the number of new cars substituted for old ones, the hon. gentleman will find the information on page 17 of the report of 1889.

Mr. MULOCK. What change in the books takes place when there is destruction of rolling stock? Is there any writing off of capital for destruction or loss of rolling stock?

Mr. BOWELL. I understand the question to be, how do you treat cars that have been destroyed, and when others are purchased or built? It is charged to revenue.

Mr. MULOCK. Do you keep up the insurance? Is the Government its own insurer?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, rolling stock, after it is once charged to capital, is always maintained in a state of efficiency.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the principle.

Mr. MULOCK. It is lived up to substantially, I presume.

Mr. BOWELL. With increased traffic you must increase the rolling stock and keep up a sufficient number of cars. If destroyed, they must be replaced.

Extension on front of City of St. John.. $15,300

Mr. BOWELL. This is simply to carry the line to the wharf, the city having furnished the right of way, and holding the Government harmless from any damage which may arise, or any suit instituted by anyone affected along the line. I believe a special Act was passed in the New Brunswick Legislature giving them power to do it.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BOWELL. This is $4,000 balance due to Mr. Snowball, in settlement under a contract, and $2,000 to cover a land claim. Mr. Snowball is also claiming $70,000 for extras, which claim is not recognized.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the state of the claim?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is a suit under a petition of right.

St. Charles Branch $45,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is this another instalment of the interminable claims for damages presented to the House every year?

Mr. BOWELL. It is the result of a judgment of the Exchequer Court, with $5,000 for local expenses.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Ever since I have been in this Parliament we have been voting sums for the St. Charles Branch. Can the Minister give any assurance that we have nearly reached the end of the claims?

Mr. BOWELL. I am afraid not. I am told about $60,000 is still in litigation or amounts are claimed to that extent. Whether that amount will end it or not I cannot say.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What is the total amount paid for damages in connection with this branch? It may serve as a pointer to new members when they are asked to vote moneys to new railways.

Mr. BOWELL. The expenditure under this heading was, up to February, 1891: for lands and damages, $863,905; for works, buildings, &c., $822,828, being a total of $1,686,743. To this must be added $45,000 which the Government now ask, and there are other claims of about $60,000, or altogether $110,000 additional.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What estimate was made by the department when the money was asked? I think it was $200,000.

Mr. BOWELL. My recollection is that it was $350,000. When the amount paid is considered it is really appalling. The lands were expropriated, and the arbitrators placed values on the lands. The parties appealed, and the courts gave these large sums. Nearly every claim has been paid only after we have been obliged to pay it by decision of court.

Mr. BOWELL. Although I am not a practical railway man, I was satisfied, when I visited St. John, that the accommodation was altogether too small. A high fence running close to the station on the Harris property suggested that the adjoining property should be acquired for railway purposes. Whether it could not be obtained at the time I am not prepared to say. An arrangement was made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government to use the same stations and freight sheds, and this necessitates the acquisition of more land.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

Mr. BOWELL. I understand it pays a certain proportion for the use of the freight sheds and for terminal purposes in connection with the road.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What does this land, which is about to be taken, consist of?

Mr. BOWELL. I understand it is a strip lying alongside the station.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood it was part of the Harris car works.

Mr. BOWELL. It would be included in their

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How is it proposed to utilize this new land? I understand that some property was taken there some time ago which has not been utilized yet.

Mr. BOWELL. They propose to utilize it by laying down new tracks, sidings, and so on. engineer tells me that they could not use the additional land to which the hon. gentleman referred, simply because it was too small for the

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Could the hon. gentleman state the size of the land that they took some time ago?

Mr. BOWELL. About 100 by 60 feet.

Mr. McLEOD. I may say that this additional accommodation at St. John has been very much needed for some years, and it has become still more necessary since the opening of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the traffic which it brought to the The railway has not at all sufficient accommodation for track room to hold their cars there. The Harris property has provided tracks of its own, and these tracks are nearly always filled with the Intercolonial Railway cars, because they have no room on their own line. In addition to that, some of the cars are at Fairville, outside of St. John, and a great deal of difficulty is experienced in having sufficient cars at the city, so that we have been continually suffering for the want of car room. This is a matter which has been urged upon the Government by the citizens of St. John and the people interested in it for some years. I remember speaking to Mr. Pope, the late Minister of Railways, some four years ago, and urging him, at the request of the citizens, to secure this additional car room, as the freight there was continually increasing. will not be necessary for the present to build any additional freight sheds, but it will be necessary to lay such additional tracks as are necessary to provide accommodation for the cars. It has always been a matter of surprise to the citizens, when they were taking the land for the new station in the first instance, they did not take this land also. A good many hon, gentlemen who have been at the station might have noticed that all the car room they have is between the station and the city, and as the street runs by the station that accommodation is very limited. I am interested myself in a property close by the railway, on which we have provided a track of our own, down to the wharf, and that track is nearly always filled with cars of the Intercolonial Railway, because they The have not room enough on their own lands. people there connected with the handling of freight are continually complaining of the want of this accommodation, and I am glad to see that the Government has at last placed in the Estimates an Mr. Pottinger endorses that: "I endorse the ap-amount to secure it. I am sure that after the discussion we had last night about the unfortunate deficit on the Intercolonial Railway, it must be pleasant for the members of the House to know that the traffic on the Intercolonial Railway is increasing, and that the traffic between Halifax and St. John has increased very materially. I think the hon, gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) referred to Halifax as being the winter port, but we believe, and we have no doubt whatever, that St. John will be at least one of the winter ports as well as Halifax. The Canadian Pacific Railway has increased our business, and is increasing the traffic of our port, and I am sure that if hon. gentlemen were acquainted with the locality they would see at once the necessity for the additional accommodation.

Mr. SKINNER. In answer to the question of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) as to why the property acquired by the railway some years ago cannot be used without taking this additional property, I may say that the property mentioned is 60 by 100 feet, and that the 60 feet is fronting on the street and the 100 feet runs parallel with the railway land. You will easily see that you could not build on a sharp curve like that, and the property which it is now proposed to take, along with the present property, will enable the Government to afford accommodation which is badly required for the use of the railway.

Mr. McLEOD. I should have said that between the Harris property and the street, the Government, a few years ago, took a property 25 by 50 feet, or something like that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And has been vacant ever since.

Mr. McLEOD. It has been vacant because it could not be utilized without the property which it is now proposed to take. It was necessary to obtain that property, and we then supposed that they intended also to obtain the Harris property. But when this is obtained, it makes all the property useful and all can be utilized.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, I am not going to pit my opinion in any way against that of the hon. gentlemen who represent the city. I take it that they are more qualified to express an opinion than At the same time, I think it right to state to the Government that I was in St. John a short time ago, when my attention was called by some of the citizens to this property, and there was a general feeling expressed by those present that it was not at all required, but that it might be turned into a sort of a job. I asked the hon. gentleman some time ago for these papers, and the reason I asked for them was that I was anxious to know whether or not the chief engineer of railways had committed himself to a statement that this property was necessary in the public interest, and I find that he had not. I find, in the papers brought down, a statement from the station master at St. John to the effect that "increased accommodation is required," that "we particularly need more sidings at the western end of the yard," and "please have this matter looked into as soon as possible." He says: "I beg to call your attention to the urgent need of more siding accommodation at this station." This is what Mr. Robertson said last April, about a month after the election. Now, plication of Mr. Wallace for increased accommodation at St. John." Very well, that is sufficient for the Government to go on, if they choose; but what I want to point out to them is this, that there is no report showing the necessity of any such purchase as they contemplate making from the Harris estate. I want to know from the Govmaking from ernment to-night whether there has been any private agreement as to the price to be paid for this land?

Mr. BOWELL. No; so I am informed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then I would like to know how the value of that will be settled?

Mr. BOWELL. The proposition is that if an equitable arrangement cannot be come to with the parties the price will have to be decided by arbitration.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I believe these car shops are not working now?

Mr. McLEOD.

Mr. HAZEN. It is evident to my mind that the hon, gentleman, when in St. John, had not a clear distinction between the Harris property, now proposed to be purchased, and the property obtained by the Government a year or two ago from Mr. E. Ř. Moore.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was not that some kind of a factory, too?

Mr. HAZEN. It was used some years ago as a nail factory. That fronted on Main Street and adjoined the station. It must have been the intention of the department, when taking that property, also to take the Harris property, because one without the other is absolutely useless for railway purposes. In order to make either valuable, the Government require to have both. Now, this accommodation is an absolute necessity. Anyone who knows anything about the business of St. John knows that the yard room at the station at present is not at all adequate to the requirements of the city. This is the universal opinion of the business men of the city.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why?

Mr. HAZEN. For the simple reason that there is not yard room for the cars. Those acquainted with the city know that the railway approaches it through a natural valley. After it crosses under the bridge at Garden Street you see the tracks spreading out on the left hand side, like a fan, as you look towards the station, while on the right hand side they do not spread out, because the Government do not own land there. The consequence is that there is not room for the cars there, and they have frequently to be placed up the track-I do not think I exaggerate any when I say a distance of several miles. The Harris property lies on the right hand side of the track of the Canadian Pacific Railway. This firm are car-builders, and have tracks of their own which they carry into their factory and use for the purpose of running the cars they manufacture out upon the lines of the Intercolonial and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then there is the track called the "Long Wharf track," in which my hon. friend is interested, and which they have constantly covered with their cars also; and everyone who knows the city knows that it is an absolute necessity that there should be more room and more | years past, it has been known they could not Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

accommodation at the city of St. John for its business interests; and my only wonder is that the Government have not, previous to this time, made application to Parliament for a sum to enable them to provide that increased accommodation. That is practically the way the matter stands.

Mr. BOWELL. I think I said a little while ago, that the value of the property would be ascertained by arbitration. I meant to say by expropriation.

Mr. McMULLEN. With regard to this needed accommodation for cars, I fancy from what the hon, gentleman has just said that it is required particularly for empty cars to stand there until they are required again. That appears to be the necessity.

Mr. HAZEN. Not altogether. That is a portion of the necessity.

Taking that as the neces-Mr. McMULLEN. sity, let us see what the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways do. Do they buy land in the heart of the city, where it is expensive? The Grand Trunk, for instance, has sidings for unused cars at the Scarboro' Heights, three or four miles out from the city of Toronto, and the Canadian Pacific has similar accommodation at West Toronto Junction, where land can be got cheap; and if the accommodation at St. John is wanted, as my hon. friend says, for empty cars to stand upon until they are brought into use again, it is folly, and worse than folly, to buy expensive property right alongside of the station for that purpose. Why not buy property outside of the city, where it is cheap and let the cars stand there until they are wanted again, when they can be brought into the city? That is the course all prudent railway companies adopt.

Mr. BOWELL. How long is it since the Grand Trunk purchased the property at Scarboro' Heights? Only a few years ago.

Mr. McMULLEN. About twenty years ago.

Mr. INGRAM. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. I beg the hon, gentleman's pardon. I would ask him how long ago the Nipissing Railway was built?

Mr. INGRAM. A few years ago the Grand Trunk needed the yard at York, and the cars are stored there now. That has only been the case for a few years.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are talking about the Scarboro' property, which the company owned when the Nipissing Railway was completed, and they own it still. If it was for station, or storage, or elevator accommodation, I could easily see that that would be required at the terminus or within convenient distance; but when you merely want siding accommodation for empty cars, it is worse than folly to buy expensive property.

Mr. SKINNER. This increased accommodation is not required for empty cars alone, but for cars laden as well as empty cars, in order that the traffic may be handled. In addition to what the Intercolonial Railway requires, the Canadian Pacific Railway also send their traffic into the same station yard, under the agreement they have with the Intercolonial Railway; and, therefore, for several accommodate the traffic in the way it should be handled. The hon, gentleman is therefore mistaken when he thinks the increased accommodation is simply for placing empty cars upon it. It is intended for freight cars, laden as well as empty, and the general business there. The valley is very narrow from which the Intercolonial Railway comes into the city, and it might very well have been that the increased accommodation was required years ago; but it is a matter of public notoriety that for years past it was considered that the Intercolonial Railway authorities required this increased accommodation, and the pressure for it has existed for several years past. Only now, after five or six years' attention has been given the subject and requisitions made by the merchants and traders in the city for it, have the railway authorities at last acknowledged the urgent necessity of meeting this want. It is not a new idea, but an outgrowth of the increased business brought to that locality by the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. It must be borne in mind that years ago all the import trade of St. John came into the harbour, but since the completion of the Intercolonial Railway and the road from St. John to the United States a very large amount that used to come through the harbour comes through the railroads, and the demand for increased accommodation has been felt from year to year, until now it has become absolutely necessary for the handling of the traffic that this increased accommodation should be had.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I just wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to this fact, that on the 1st July last I moved in this House for all correspondence, letters, applications and reports, relating to the proposed increased accommodation for the Intercolonial Railway at St. John, and not a letter, telegram, or application from any business or other man in St. John did I find, asking for that accommodation as all. Now, if there is this extraordinary demand, it is curious that the department are not in possession of a single application on the subject. The only thing I could find was an application, dated one month after the election, from the station master at St. John endorsed by Mr. Pottinger, asking for increased accommodation. Other gentlemen may give what value they like to his endorsation; but I do not attach much value to it. I would be better satisfied if the chief superintendent, who has examined the station since the Canadian Pacific Railway have been running their cars into it, had made a report to his principal, stating he believed this expenditure of $80,000 was necessary; but there is no application from any resident from the city of St. John or anybody interested in the railway nor any report from the chief engineer. I acknowledge, of course, the explanations given by the gentlemen representing that city, who are in a position to know what its requirements are, but would like to have from officials who are responsible for their report some statement showing that increased accommodation is required before being called on to vote such a large amount of money. We know very well what the amount of money. We know very well what the result will be. Valuable property will be taken in the city by expropriation, for which we will have to pay enormous sums; and the fact that we are asked to vote $80,000 is to the best evidence that Robertson was a strong supporter of ours. There that the Government themselves expect to be bled is no doubt of that, and there is no doubt that Mr.

pretty freely. If this expenditure were necessary, I would be the last one to vote against it, but we ought to have some ground for this demand, we ought to have some evidence that the necessity is recognized by the gentleman who should be re-We ought to have a report from the sponsible. chief engineer. He will be held responsible, and I do not know why he has not made himself responsible by reporting on the subject. If this thing had been the subject of a great deal of correspondence, and if the people interested have been pressing this matter on the Government, how is it the chief engineer has not made any report? I expect the whole money will be used up in the purchase of a vacant lot because it forms part of the old Harris property. The hon, gentleman who last spoke said I must have been misled. No; I was not. My informants pointed out the old nail factory, taken some years ago by the railway, and which has never been used since-

Mr. McLEOD. It was taken and paid for last

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)—and it has not been used since. I was pointed out this property, and the only thing my informants were not quite sure of was whether it belonged to the Harris property or to Mr. Thomas Robertson, and the impression in their minds was that the purchase money would go to Mr. Robertson.

Mr. McLEOD. No: Mr. Robertson is a son-in-law of Mr. Harris, and Mr. Harris owns the property.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; and a very prominent supporter of my hon. friend.

Mr. McLEOD. He is not any better than Mr. Harris, probably not quite so good.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will acknowledge that everybody interested in this land is a strong supporter of my hon. friend.

Mr. McLEOD. I doubt that; I think some of them are against me.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think Mr. Harris is a strong supporter, and also Mr. Robertson.

Mr. McLEOD. He is; but there are a good many who are not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If I am not mistaken, he was a very active and prominent supporter of the hon, gentlemen at the last election; and a curious coincidence is that, although there was an absence of demand on the part of anybody for this increased accommodation, the station-master made his application a month after the election.

Mr. McLEOD. If my hon, friend knew the circumstances of the case as well as I do his opinion would be entirely different. If the same circumstances existed in his own constituency I believe the hon. gentleman, though he is opposed to the Government, would be here as strongly advocating those claims as he now appears to oppose these. Without intending to be offensive, I may say that I believe he is taking this course because he does not understand the circumstances of the case and what we require, because I feel sure that if he did he would not offer the opposition he does to this vote. He said that Mr.

Harris has been for years and years a supporter of the present party.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has he bled freely?

Mr. McLEOD. I do not know that he has. must say, though this is my first session in this Parliament, that I do not think such an insinuation is fair, and that I very much regret, when questions of public importance come up, that gentlemen on the opposite side should throw across the floor the insinuation that these measures are being advocated, not on public grounds, but for partizan purposes. I think we ought to be able to deal with public questions which affect not only localities but the whole country, by laying aside party feelings, and that we should discuss these questions on public grounds. We have plenty of time and plenty of opportunity to deal with political questions; but apart from that, let us deal fairly with these matters, which are of common interest to us all, no matter on which side of the House we may sit. As to this question, I do not think the hon, gentleman will venture to assert that this property was bought from Mr. Robertson simply because he was a Conservative. I can assure him that it is not so. The property belonged to the Harris estate, and Mr. Robertson is the husband of one of the heirs of that estate; but I know that some of the sons-inlaw are opposed to the present Government. hon, gentleman said there is no correspondence in regard to this. For that I cannot answer; but I know that the citizens of St. John have demanded this, and that some years ago, when there was no election pending, and I came up here on business, I was asked by several citizens of St. John, and by members of the Board of Trade, to have an interview with the Minister of Railways, and impress upon him the necessity of acquiring this property. I stayed here a day or two longer than was necessary for that purpose, and the Minister of Railways told me that we had enough accommodation already. I said: No: we are to have the Canadian Pacific Railway in St. John, and then we will require increased accommodation, and we do not want, after the business has come there, to have to turn round and look for accommodation. I urged that strongly upon him, but he said: We will wait until the Canadian Pacific Railway gets there, and we had to wait. The business did increase; and it became practically an absolute necessity to get additional accommodation in some way, and that is why we have pressed upon the Government the desirability of taking in this property. This is not, as the hon. gentleman supposes, a question which originated within this year, but it is one we had been seeking and desiring to obtain for two or three years, and I am sure that whoever gave the information to the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) could not have shown him the property we are seeking to obtain. I know that, if the hon. gentleman went to the station and walked up to the mountain line, and looked at the place there which they have for cars and other rolling stock, he would himself see the necessity of this proposition. He refers to Mr. Wallace, the district superintendent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The station-master at St. John made his report to Mr. Wallace.

Mr. McLEOD. I think if the hon. gentleman examines this matter he will see the necessity for this vote.

Mr. McLeod.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would remind the hon. gentleman of one or two matters. He has administered a very mild lecture to the Opposition in reference to the criticisms which we passed upon the Government expenditure, and that will do very well for what he says is his first session in Parliament; but after a time I think he will see the necessity for these votes being criticized, and even severely criticized. Has he not heard to-night that it was estimated that the St. Charles Railway would cost $200,000, and has already cost $150,000? Has he not learned that the Short Line Railway from Oxford to New Glasgow, which, according to the statement of the then Minister of Railways, was to shorten the distance by forty miles, turns out, after an expenditure of a million and a-half, to have shortened it by only seven miles. He must see that it is the duty of the Opposition to closely examine and criticize public expenditures; and when I see that a demand is made from the city of St. John for increased accommodation, without any representation to that effect by the Board of Trade or by any citizen, I think it gives rise to fair and reasonable comment. If a live and active body such as the Board of Trade of St. John is—and we know that the merchants and the city of St. John are not sleepy—if they do not ask for Government aid, I say that, in the absence of all these parties and in the absence of any report from the chief engineer, I was not only justified in calling attention to this singular vote, but I would be recreant in my duty if I did not call attention to it. The hon, gentleman may be satisfied that this money will be properly expended, but I assure him that I will be very careful to see what report the chief engineer will make next year as to the use of the money included in this vote.

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly any hon, gentleman has a right to take part in the discussion, and to condemn any vote which is brought forward. If the hon, gentleman thinks he is right in condemning this expenditure, surely my hon, friend from St. John (Mr. McLeod), who represents that constituency, has an equal right to defend that expenditure, though he is told by the hon, gentleman that he is a young member.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not at all. I was only replying to the lecture he gave me.

Mr. BOWELL. I am surprised at my hon. friend sitting there and laughing, because I understood that laughing was considered by him to be insulting. He considered it an insult to him the other day because I smiled.

Mr. INGRAM. I think there is a point that has been entirely overlooked. I find that the station agent complains that he has not sufficient yard The custom on railways generally is that where the station agent finds that he has not sufficient accommodation, he calls the attention of his superior officers to the fact, and they take steps to obtain it if found necessary. In this case I find that the Intercolonial Railway have not sufficient ground of their own for yard room, and they are asking the Government to purchase The climate an additional amount of land. in that section of the country is very severe in the winter time, and there is a great deal of snow, and they have to store away on this long track a number of loaded and empty cars. hon, gentleman must see that such a state of affairs as this requires a great deal of switching to be done. There is nothing unreasonable in asking for additional yard room. The railways have it in the city of Toronto and in the city of London. In Toronto, the Canadian Pacific Railway have their yard room at Toronto Junction, because the road continues from Toronto Junction eastward; and so with the Grand Trunk Railway; they had not sufficient yard room in the city and they had to enlarge it from the Junction at little York.

Mr. HAZEN. The reports of the station agent at St. John, and of the district superintendent, Mr. Wallace, have been referred to. I have read both reports. Mr. Robertson gives statistics showing the increase in the traffic for the last two years, and the consequent need of additional yard room. Mr. Wallace, addressing Mr. Pottinger, declares that the railway is cramped for the want of additional siding and unloading room. It seems to me these two letters, sent from the station-master and from the district superintendent, both gentlemen being familiar with the facts, should satisfy every hon. member that it is necessary to have that increased accommodation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I agree that increased accommodation may be necessary. If it were for freight sheds or for a station house, I would assent that the proposed purchase might be necessary. But when it is only wanted for siding accommodation, it is quite clear that you can secure that at, perhaps, one-tenth of the price that you are going to pay for this piece of property, and by using the accommodation you now have, you would have ample room to store away empty cars and to load and unload cars. Of course, the hon, gentleman thinks it would be very convenient to have accommodation for loading and unloading cars in the centre of the city. In the city of Toronto, on the main line, the Grand Trunk Railway has only three or four sidings altogether, until they get to their freight sheds where there is an enormous amount of freight, while their accommodation for empty cars is away out at Scarboro' Heights. In this case you could buy property outside the city admirably suited for railway accommodation, for one-tenth the money you are going to pay for property in the centre of the city, when you only want it for siding purposes. Would the hon. gentleman state what is the arrangement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway with regard to the mutual use of this proposed purchase?

Mr. BOWELL. I have already told the Committee that the arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway was that they pay a certain proportion of the wages of the men, and a certain amount for shunting, and for the wear and tear. They pay their proportion according to the work that is done by them, as compared with the Intercolonial Railway. I have not here the figures showing what that proportion will be; but I will try and lay the papers on the Table.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the engineer say this land is worth the money you propose to pay for it?

Mr. BOWELL. No sum has yet been arrived at as the value of the land. I may say frankly that a sum has been mentioned which the Government would never think of paying unless compelled to do so by a court of law. We all know that when a Government railway or any public corporation require land, the owners put a much larger price upon it than they expect to get, or than they would sell to any other person. It is the same with this land.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the engineer recommend the purchase of this particular piece of land for which money is being voted?

Mr. BOWELL. All he says is that further accommodation is required. That is the only land that can be purchased, and consequently if he recommends anything, it involves the purchase of that land.

Mr. MULOCK. Does he assent to that state ment?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, he assents to that statement, or I would not have made it. He says more, that if the Canadian Pacific Railway were not there, we would not require it.

Mr. MULOCK. I hope the Exchequer Court will see that the award is no more than it should be.

An hon. MEMBER. Tell that to the Exchequer Court judge.

Mr. MULOCK. I would not hesitate to tell that to the judge of the Exchequer Court. There is very serious ground for questioning the findings of that court in regard to values of land. Enormous verdicts are rendered by the Exchequer Court for lands expropriated by the Dominion. There is no use mincing matters. The judge of the Exchequer Court, if he is not experienced or had dealings in land, may be very easily mislead by testimony as to values. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in my part of the country with the awards of the Exchequer Court with regard to the expropriations of land. This applies to the present incumbent of the Exchequer Court, and to him I refer.

Sufferance warehouse at Halifax $2,700

Mr. BOWELL. This is for the construction of a Customs building on the wharf for the accommodation of goods coming by steamer.

Mr. HAZEN. Before we leave the subject of the Intercolonial Railway, I desire to say a few words in regard to affairs in the railway station at St. John. What I desire to say I and my colleague already have brought under the attention of the present Minister of Railways, but as he is only the acting, and not the permanent Minister, he declined to take any responsibility in the matter. I trust whoever occupies the position of Minister of Railways will look carefully into the salaries prevailing on the Intercolonial Railway and the wages paid to employés in the city of St. John, for there is no fair basis at the present time. In the station of St. John the amount paid a porter for doing his work is $1.20 per day. In my opinion, considering the nature of the work and the high rents and taxes, and the high incidental expenses in a large city, the wages paid are not sufficient to allow those people to live in the state in which they ought to be able to live. In addition, the people employed as porters at the station receive wages of $1.20 per day, and these men, who are intelligent men, are sometimes placed in positions where they do checkers' work, and yet year in and year out they are allowed to go on receiving porters' wages while the proper pay for a The men are not promoted to checkers' pay, but continue to do this higher work for the same pay they received when they did more humble work, as porters or labourers about the building. There are men in the machine shop working side by side who have been there an equal length of time and who are employed on the same class of work, who, nevertheless, receive different wages. These are matters I feel it my duty to bring forcibly to the attention of Parliament, and I trust they will receive careful attention and careful consideration from whoever may be called on to fill the position of Minister of Railways permanently. There are, moreover, a large number of grievances existing among officials employed in and about the station. I give one example, and there are many such examples. man who sells tickets on the Intercolonial Railway handled last year for the Canadian Pacific Railway and Intercolonial Railway $169,000 in cash. that service he received $60 per month. He was receiving, however, $60 per month before the Canadian Pacific Railway came into the station, and that road added very much indeed to the work he had to perform. He is employed from early in the morning till late at night and on Sunday evening when the Canadian Pacific Railway train goes out. Yet the Canadian Pacific paid the Intercolonial Railway authorities $28 a month for the service of a ticket agent, and so that man who was handling the large amount of money I have mentioned costs the Dominion Government only $32 a month. There is another case of the same kind, that of the man who handles the freight. His work has been increased very much since the Canadian Pacific Railway came into the station. The Dominion Government receive a sum from the Canadian Pacific Railway towards the payment of his services, and yet he obtains no portion of the I think these are all matters which should be carefully investigated and considered, and justice should be done to persons employed on the road by whoever becomes permanent Minister of There are a number of other matters Railways. respecting which there are grievances, not fancied but real grievances; but at this late hour I will not refer to them. I trust these matters will meet with the consideration they deserve at the hands of the Government and department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman has brought up the question of the pay of the employés on the Government road, and has spoken especially with respect to employes on the St. John branch of the road. I have no knowledge of the facts, and I express no opinion on them. matter has been called to the attention of the Committee, I again bring to the notice of the department the fact that a very unjust discrimination was made years ago between the pay given to employés on the Prince Edward Island road and to employés on the Intercolonial Railway. was no justification for the discrimination made. The man in Charlottetown who was paid $1 a day was paid at Moneton $1.25 or $1.35. cannot be defended on any grounds. It was once attempted by a Minister of Railways, and his effort was looked upon as an insult by everyone in the Island, for his defence was that potatoes were cheap on the Island. The cost of living is as great in Charlottetown and Moneton as in St. John.

labour under the disadvantage that they have not the chances of promotion which are open to employés on the Intercolonial Railway. The Intercolonial is a very large institution, and if a man is sober, attentive to his duties and prompt in their execution, he has a very fair chance of being promoted to a higher grade from time to time. But the Island road is a very small one and the Government do not promote men from that road to the Intercolonial Railway. The men there, with a smaller chance of promotion than possibly on any other railway in the Dominion of Canada, are paid a lower wage for doing the same work, than men similarly employed on the Intercolonial Railway. That thing cannot be defended, and I bring it to the attention of the Government as a gross injustice which should be removed. It is a small matter, perhaps, and it would not amount to many thousands of dollars all told. I do not speak of the higher order of officers, I am speaking of the lower grade of officers on the road; the conductors—and there is no more efficient body of men in the Government employ than the conductors on the Prince Edward Island Railway-the baggage-masters, the carpenters and the workmen in the shops. These men are paid lower wages for doing the same work than are paid to the same class of men on the Intercolonial Railway, and it is galling and annoying in the extreme to a respectable artizan or mechanic, engaged at work in Charlottetown, to find that he is paid by the same Government a lesser sum than the mechanic doing the same work right across the Straits. It cannot be defended; it never has been defended in this House and I will never cease raising my voice against it until it is remedied. If the hon, gentleman for St. John (Mr. Hazen) had not brought the matter up I would have probably waited until the new Minister of Railways is appointed, and I would have hoped to make some impression on him, because the injustice of the thing is so apparent that I do not think any just man could resist my appeal. When I brought this matter up before the answer was given me: You would not expect that the superintendent or other officers of the Prince Edward Island road, would be paid the same salary as the superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway. Certainly I would not, because they have not the same responsibilities nor the same work to perform; but I speak of the labourers, and the skilled artizans, and the conductors, and the baggage-men, and others, who discharge the same duties and work the same hours as the same class of men on the Intercolonial Railway and both being Government roads, I say it is an unjust discrimination which has been maintained for years back, and I hope that, at an early date, this injustice will be rectified.

Mr. McLEOD. At this late hour, I will not take up any time discussing the question, save to say that I agree in what my colleague (Mr. Hazen) has I think that there said in regard to this matter. should be a fair rate of wages for these men, and that a man should be paid for the work he does. If a man is doing checkers' work he should get checkers pay. There is the difficulty that when a man is employed as porter, and put on to checker work, he is held responsible for any loss that would occur, and you can well understand The employes of the Island road, moreover, that if a man getting $30 a month has $2 or $3 Mr. HAZEN. deducted out of his month's wages, it is a considerable thing to him. I trust that whoever is to be permanent head of the Railway Department, he will see that the wages are put on a proper basis, and that a man should be paid for the work he does. If a man is doing porters' work let him get porters' pay, and if he is doing checkers' work let him get checkers' pay. There are various other officers on the road, and I am sure if I brought their case before the House, hon, gentlemen would see that they are entitled to better pay for the work they are doing than they are getting now.

Mr. SKINNER. I support the observations of my hon, colleagues in reference to the pay of the men at St. John, on the Intercolonial Railway, with all the strength I can bring to bear upon it. But there is another matter to which I wish to draw the attention of the acting Minister of Railways, and it is a matter that should be remedied at once. For years and years the men employed on the Intercolonial Railway at St. John were allowed a few days holidays during each summer.

Mr. MULOCK. During election time?

Mr. SKINNER. It had nothing to do with elections at all. Elections generally take place in winter with us, and therefore the election has nothing to do with the holidays. The holidays have been taken away from the men, and they have to toil on very small salaries year in and year out, and cannot get a few days' holidays, unless, out of the small pittance which they get, they can employ substitutes to perform the labours in which they are engaged.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, gentleman has not his eye on the Public Accounts Committee now.

Mr. SKINNER. If I have not got the Public Accounts Committee in my eye, I have the interest and welfare of these men in my eye, and that is of more importance to these men, I think. For years the holidays for the men used to be arranged in such a way that only one or two would be off at a time, and then the others by extra work would double up, and so the work was carried on whatever without any loss to the public All that the men ask now is, that from the beginning of the season to the end of it, by gradual steps each should be allowed to have his holidays, and the duties would be performed by the others doing extra work with-out any extra pay. If this were allowed, the public service would be well attended to, the men would be treated with ordinary humanity, they would have the holidays which they are entitled to and which I hope that the Department of Railways will see that they get.

Mr. MULOCK. It is to be regretted that these four speeches were not delivered last night before the Minister of Justice delivered his speech in regard to the proposition of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). Had they preceded that discussion the Minister might have seen the propriety of placing this road in commission.

Mr. HAZEN. The small increase of salaries which we ask for these employés, would be but a drop in the bucket, a small item in the expense of the road, and it would be doing an act of justice to these men.

Mr. BOWELL. This vote, I am informed, will complete the work. It is a revote, having lapsed on account of the lateness of the session.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways as to the freight rates that will be charged over this extension of the road. Is it proposed to make the rate on flour to Antigonish the same as to other points on the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. BOWELL. The complaint which the hon, gentleman formerly made, if I recollect right, was that there were different rates of freights on the different sections of the Intercolonial Railway. The New Glasgow, and Cape Breton, and all the lines are now treated as one road, so that if the hon, gentleman desires to forward his goods from Chatham to Cape Breton, he can do so at one through rate, just the same as if he were sending them to St. John or Moneton or Halifax.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The same rate will apply? Mr. BOWELL. Yes, at the same rates.

Mr. FRASER. This expenditure will be for a boat, I suppose?

Mr. BOWELL. It is for the purpose of transshipping freight cars from Mulgrave on one side of the Strait of Canso to Point Tupper on the Cape Breton side. A propeller and two large barges are proposed to be provided, the barges being towed across by the steamer, when the ice will not prevent this being done. Then the ferry steamers will take the passengers from the passenger train across from one side to the other. If a train ferry had been established for these, when the ice packed so that it could not cross, there would be no means of taking the passengers over. It was, therefore, thought better to adopt this plan. The train ferry would have cost about $400,000, and the present system if carried out on the first expenditure, will cost about $100,000; the steamer $75,000, the two barges $10,000, and the cradles and approaches $15,000.

Mr. FRASER. Is it not proposed to convey the passenger train across?

Mr. BOWELL. Not the passenger trains, but the freight cars. The passengers will be transshipped by the steamer.

Mr. FRASER. It will make quite a difference to the passengers crossing if the barges have freight cars aboard.

Mr. BOWELL. The engineer tells me that the proposition is that as soon as the train arrives the passengers will be taken on the steamer and carried over at once without having to wait till the freight cars are taken.

Removal of Summerside Station...... $4,500

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) How are you going to remove this station?

Mr. BOWELL. It is dangerously located, it being impossible to approach it without crossing several tracks. It is alleged that a number of very narrow escapes from loss of life have occurred, and it is to avoid these that authority is asked to purchase a piece of land alongside of the main street on which to place the station, and that the building be shifted to the new site, and set on a stone foundation, so that the passengers can go direct from the street into the building.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I fully concur in the necessity of this removal, and in the dangerous character of the approach to this station, and my only wonder has been that some serious accident has not taken place. I suppose the station will be put on the north side?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes: on the north side.

CARLETON BRANCH RAILROAD.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 158) to authorize the sale of the Carleton, City of St. John, Branch Railway.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that will about pay 10 per cent. on the outlay we are about to make in the city of St. John for increased accommodation?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very likely you are correct.

PICTOU HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 150) to amend the Acts respecting the Harbour of Pictou, N.S.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. TUPPER. Clause No. 3 of this Bill stood over, as I desired to re-cast that clause in reference to expropriations. The object of the Bill is to enable the harbour commissioners of Pictou to borrow money for the purpose of improving the harbour; and the expropriation clause in the original Bill was apparently drafted by the commissioners from I propose to substitute the followlocal statutes. ing clause :-

Mr. Bowell.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, upon the application of the said commissioners, and with the approval of the Governor in Council, may, for the purpose of enabling them to obtain such lands as in their judgment are necessary for the purposes of the corporation, take such lands under the provisions of 'The Expropriation Act,' and in such case all the provisions of the said Act shall apply:

The lands so taken may be conveyed by the Crown to the said corporation upon repayment of all damages, charges and expenses incurred by the Crown in respect

The Minister shall not take any such proceedings under this Act until the said corporation has made deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of an amount sufficient, in the judgment of the Minister, to satisfy all claims against the Crown by reason of any proposed expropriation.

The usual clause in all these Acts relating to harbour commissioners makes applicable the statute regarding the expropriation under the Railway Act, but it is considered that this is a more convenient way of proceeding directly in the name of the Crown, upon the Crown obtaining the necessary indemnity. That is the only change from the ordinary clauses in these Bills.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask the Minister whether the latter portion of that clause will meet his view:

"The Minister shall not take any such proceedings under the Act until the said corporation has made deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of an amount sufficient, in the judgment of the Minister, to satisfy all claims against the Crown by reason of any proposed expropriation."

Supposing that the award for the land expropriated exceeds the amount that the Minister has contemplated. What provision is there for paying the extra sum?

Mr. TUPPER. If the judgment of the Minister had been erroneous; the title would be in the Crown, and the conveyance would not be made by the Crown to the commissioners until they supplemented that amount. In such a case the object would not be obtained until the commissioners pay this The conveyance does not take place, and the Crown would be left with the property. upon the amount being ascertained, the estimate under the Order in Council being fixed, the Crown would proceed, and vest the title in the Crown and pay the money. If the money was short of the necessary amount, the harbour commission would not be entitled to obtain the title until they made up the deficiency.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But that is the very point which I think the Bill is a little weak. There in which I think the Bill is a little weak. can be no possible objection to this Bill except that it offers the mere possibility of the general public incurring liability. We do not want that, the hon. gentleman does not want that, and our joint object is to make such provision as will ensure that while the harbor commission's object shall be carried out without any undue friction, at the same time the public shall not be mulcted in the payment of Now, I think it highly undesirable that any lands which these harbour commissioners may desire for the improvement of the harbour should be vested in the Crown at all, unless proper steps are taken to ensure that they shall repay the money; and I was going to suggest to the hon, gentleman whether it would not be well to insert a clause providing that if the amount deposited with the Minister is below that subsequently awarded, no further proceedings in the expropriation shall take place until the difference is deposited by the harbour commission.

Mr. TUPPER. That is really the first proceeding taken. The commissioners fyle a plan showing the property and tendering the amount. there is a bare possibility of what the hon, gentleman apprehends, that friction will occur and that the Crown will be left in possession of a piece of property, it is most improbable to happen. The larger portion of the property which the commission would require for the construction of a wharf, is already vested in the Crown, so that the expropriation would practically apply only to the shore; and it is difficult to conceive a case where the estimate of the amount required to be deposited would fall short. The risk to the Crown is so slight that, considering that the object in view is the public improvement, and that nothing can be done without the approval of the Governor in Council, I think it might be as well to adopt the course provided for by the Bill. Otherwise, it would be necessary to revert to those cumbersome proceedings which other commissions are forced to adopt, where the commissioners themselves are the moving party. It is a quicker and less cumbersome system in which the Crown directly proceeds.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I admit that the change facilitates the proceedings, and I do not object to it in that respect at all, nor do I wish to be captious; but the hon, gentleman knows that since our experience with the Quebec harbour commission, we are not anxious to make provisions with respect to these commissions so loose that the public interest may be damaged. But I want to point out to him what probably will take place. The Minister, when he fixes the possible sum to be paid for the value of the lands about to be expropriated, will be almost sure to err on the low side, because the commissioners will say: You must not assess these lands at a large sum, for the expropriation authorities will not go below that sum, but rather above it. So that when the Minister fixes a sum, it will be a controlling guide to the authorities when they come to assess the value of the property. I think there might be a simple provision put in to provide that the tolls should go to the Government until the expropriation is completed.

Mr. TUPPER. We would have the property. Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But it would be of no earthly use.

Mr. TUPPER. If the commission decides to get a property, and the Governor in Council decides that it is necessary for the shipping interest, I do not think there is much danger that any extra amount necessary would not be at once paid by the commission.

Bill reported.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. TUPPER moved concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 85) further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act. He said: We had overlooked in the amendment made in 1889, chapter 23, 52 Victoria, and accidentally repealed it. This applies to cases like the steamship Halifax, which had an English register, and was sailing between Halifax and Boston carrying passengers. It was discovered that we had no power some things which it does not contain. However, to cause an inspection to be made, without this amendment.

Amendment concurred in.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 117) further to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Sections four and five were allowed to stand, and I move now that they Motion agreed to, Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

GRANTS OF LAND TO THE MILITIA.

Bill (No. 159) to make further provisions respecting grants of land to members of the Militia force on active service in the North-West, was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT AMEND-MENT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 126) to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. This Bill, as far as it goes, is a good Bill, and will meet certain desires of the people of the North-West Territories, but at the same time it leaves a good deal undone that many of us we go into Committee I intend to move the addition of a clause to the following effect:

Section 7 of the amending Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

The persons qualified to vote at an election for the Legislative Assembly shall be the male British subjects by birth or naturalization (other than unenfranchised Indians and members of the North-West Mounted Police) who have full attained the age of 21 years, and so on.

It will be very important to have that clause inserted, which will prevent the members of the North-West Mounted Police voting for candidates for the Assembly. Take the constituency of North Regina, and at the last voting, Jelly had 227 votes and Brown had 135 votes, and there were 80 police votes polled for Jelly, so that Jelly won the election by a very small majority of the civil vote. If Brown had had a few more votes, the police vote would have decided the election, and I think that is very undesirable and creates a great deal of ill-feeling that the constituency should be watered by a vote that is not permanent, because the members of the force are moved from one place to another, have no special interest in the place, and have no reason for devoting their attention to the matters which might affect legislation in that Assembly. I need hardly say that I do not approve of that standpoint in politics which looks to the United States as having everything superior to ourselves, as if we had not as great natural advantages as they have, and as if we could not hope to build up as great a nation as they have built up; but at the same time there is no reason why we should not learn something from what has been done in the United States, and I should have been glad if this Bill had contained this Bill goes a great deal further in the direction of giving the Territorial Assembly the mastery of North-West affairs than any previous Bill. For instance, under this Bill the Assembly will have power to deal with its own elections, and there is a clause that gives the Assembly the power of deciding other important matters. I consider that the principle we should go upon is to give that Assembly, as far as we can, the power of dealing with all things which the British North America Act places within provincial control, always excepting the power of borrowing money which the people do not desire. I think that a great deal more might with propriety and with great advantage to the North-West be placed in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor and the Assembly. For instance, I have been pressing on the attention of the Government and of the Hon. Mr. Carling the propriety of placing funds at the disposal of the North-West Government to enable them to deal with immigration. There is no reason why a sum should not be given to the North-West Assembly to enable them to supplement the action of the Dominion Government in bringing immigrants into the North-West. Dominion Government very properly takes control of the immigration for the whole of this country, but in addition to that the different provinces put forth exertions of their own. British Columbia can put forth exertions of its own, so can Manitoba, so can Ontario, and so can all the provinces, because they get a lump sum paid to them by the Dominion which is based on certain calculations. we may have the census returns in our hands before we get through with this Bill, and I believe that, if you take the population of the North-West Territories and the fact that we have no public debt whatever, and take all the circumstances into account, you will find that we are entitled to a far larger sum than we receive at present from the Dominion treasury. Therefore, there is nothing unreasonable in asking that a sum shall be placed at our disposal to enable us to put forth our energies. for the encouragement of immigration. A few days ago, I was speaking with a gentleman who had been up in the territories looking at the development of the country in the interests of his friends in the old world. He said he was told in Winnipeg, that the country near Regina was barren. Now, no matter whether you go to Alberta or to Assiniboia or the Saskatchewan, you will find the country is rich in farming lands, and Mr. Duncan McIntyre and Mr. Angus, who have visited the delta of the Nile, found the same character of deposit in the Regina basin as they found there. Yet this gentleman was told that there was nothing but barrenness around Regina. We, therefore, ask that there should be at the disposal of the Assembly power of action and amounts to enable them to have immigration agents, some from the Saskatchewan, some from Assiniboia and some from Alberta, so that they may go either to Dakota, or to England, Ireland or Scotland, or to Germany or Scandinavia, and to supplement the work of the general Dominion agents in pointing out the advantages of the different North-West Territories. Now, I will call the attention of the House to what is done, and has been done in the states, when making territories. When Minnesota was organized into a territory on 3rd March, 1849, it had a population, according to the census of 1850, of only 6,077, con-Mr. DAVIN.

sisting in the main of French Métis in the employment of the American Fur Company. When Dakota Territory was organized, which took place on 2nd March, 1861, the population amounted to 4,837. Montana, which was lifted to the position of a territory on 26th May, 1864, had only a population of 20,595 in 1870. Wyoming, which was organized on 25th July, 1868, had only a population of 9,000 odd in 1870. Now, if you look at the progress they have made you will find it set forth by the following figures:—

Montana		132,139
Wyoming	20,789	60,705
Minnesota	780,773	1.301.826
North Dakota		182,719
South Dakota		328,808

We know now, as a fact, that the attractions of the North-West of Canada are greater than the attractions of those places. If you take the North-West of Canada you will find that, compared with any of those territories, some of which have since become states, in farming land, in forest, in mines, in rivers, our North-West, in most all those points, are richer than the states I have mentioned. Now, I will call the attention of the Government to what has been done for a territory in the United States. It is given a governor, judges and executive officers appointed, and salaries paid by the Federal Government at Washington—that we do; a legislature chosen by the people—that we do; federal appropriations for legislative expenses for a session of 60 days, public buildings, and military and territorial roads—that we practically do; lands for schools and universities, one-eighteenth of the area of the territory—we have lands for schools, but no land has been set apart as yet for a university. Last year I was a member of a body that met together, persons who were supposed to have some fitness for speaking on educational subjects, and we passed a resolution which I think was sent to the Minister of the Interior; we passed a number of resolutions which, I fancy, the secretary of the school board, Mr. James Brown, sent to the Government, in favour of having land at once set apart for a university in the territories. I will say that that cannot too soon be done. Now, that is what we do not do, and I say it is a thing that should be done. The United States make land grants to the territory for 1,800 miles of railway, to be organized and controlled by the Legislature. And what is the advantage of that? At the present moment, in the State of Minnesota, at 3 per cent, on the gross earnings, those railways, organized by means of such help as that, now return an income of $600,000 per annum to the treasury of the state.

Mr. TISDALE. Do I understand the hon, gentleman to say that in the organization of a territory they specially set apart lands, of which the Assembly of the territory have control, for railway purposes?

Mr. DAVIN. I do.

Mr. TISDALE. In what territory have they given it? If it is so, I am informed otherwise. I merely want the hon. gentleman to name the territory.

Mr. DAVIN. I will name the territory—Minnesota.

Mr. TISDALE. When it was a territory?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. And in the others, Wyoming and Montana?

Mr. DAVIN. When Minnesota was a territory it got 1,800 miles of railway, and after it had been a State for some time it got a large amount of its swamp lands.

Mr. TISDALE. Was not that part of the Northern Pacific, a transcontinental railway? I understood that the only roads built through Minnesota while it was a territory were a part of the United States system of railways.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon, friend says he understands that; but all I can tell him is that his understanding is not as sound on that matter as it usually is on other subjects, because he will find, if he looks into the history of Minnesota, which he will find in the Library—

Mr. TISDALE. What was the railway that received this aid?

Mr. DAVIN. I state, with the responsibility that belongs to my position here, that that was done, and that they are taking $600,000 a year at this moment, at 3 per cent., from the railways they themselves subsidized. Then there was a representation by delegates in Congress that bettered When we got representation we also got a that. vote. Now, there were subsequent grants, as I have said, to Minnesota that put it in possession of a third of the lands of the State. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that as we are giving the North-West a new start it would be well for the Government to consider whether they should not treat the territories of the North-West just as you treat a young man when you are setting him up in the world, giving him something on which to trade for himself. At present, what we do is to vote certain sums for specific purposes, and we may get, I assume, the power to deal with this; but what we should do is to give them some capital on which they can go on for themselves; we should give them some of the lands in the Territories that they may deal with themselves, and give them a subsidy to be expended on immigration, and on other purposes that may strike them as necessary for the country, give them a sum in addition to what you now give I do not want to give up voting specific votes, but to give them a sum in addition to that which will enable them, to use a colloquial expression, to go on their own hook in some matters, which will call forth the enterprise of their statesmanship. I think if these suggestions are adopted it will be found that immigration will increase, the population will go ahead at a greater ratio than it has in the past, and the territories will be more prosperous. may say that the Bill is one that I think will satisfy the people of the North-West, qualified by the criticisms I have made.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This Bill which proposes to confer upon the North-West Territories very important rights and very extensive powers, leaves untouched one subject which is, perhaps, if not of the greatest importance, of very great importance, especially in view of what we may hope to see realized, a great extension of population, of wealth, of industry and of enterprise, in those territories—that subject is the subject of education. Now, I find that the 9th clause of the Act which is now being amended, is not referred to at all in this amending Act. By that clause it is enacted that:

"The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall pass all ordinary ordinances in respect to education, but it shall therein always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and, also, that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof."

Judging from the wording of the Act and from there being no reference to this clause one might reasonably assume that it was intended that the power of dealing with the subject should be left in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I understand, however, that it is contended that by the interpretation clause this power, herein apparently given only to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, is also vested in the Assembly, to which new and extensive powers are given. I think, even if that is the case, it would have been better if the Act had been so worded that there should be no doubt as to that point, but that when we are giving this body the power to deal with property and civil rights and a variety of other subjects referred to in the Act, this subject of education, if it were to be dealt with by it, should be specially mentioned. However, that is not the subject to which I wish to direct the attention of the House. This clause which I have read establishes in the North-West Territories, whether the people desire to have it or not, the system of separate schools. The question that I wish to bring before the House to-day is, whether this legislation we are about to pass, territories practically provincial giving these powers, should contain an enactment, which, whether the people like it or not, will compel them to establish separate schools. I use the word "compel" advisedly, because, although the term is permissive, yet we know perfectly well from experience in other provinces that although the word "may" is used it is virtually as imperative as if the word "shall" was used, and therefore I am justified in saying that the intention of the clause is that there shall be in these Territories separate schools, and there is no option given to this, I will not say newly constituted body, but this body to which these extensive powers are given, to say whether they will or will not have them. sequence of this restriction of the legislative power of this Assembly we shall have again within a very few years the same controversy and agitation which have recently occurred in Manitoba, and we shall have in the North-West Territories, if I am not much mistaken in the temper of the people living there, and who may be living there within a few years, a determined effort made to get rid of this restriction and to assert the right to say whether or not they will have separate schools; and they may go perhaps further than the people of Manitoba have gone, and although in the present case there will not be the doubt as to their power, as in the case in Manitoba, yet certainly we shall have the attempt made to assert a right to which, under all the circumstances, they are entitled, namely, that they shall, at all events, have power to say whether or not separate schools may be established. I do separate schools are advisable, whether our experiences in the various provinces, especially in Ontario, where in regard to this matter we have had the largest experience, and where it has been productive of the most important results, would lead us to decide the question as to whether it was advisable or not that separate schools should exist in any of the provinces of the Dominion. We know very well what the result has been. We know very well that in several provinces an agitation in opposition to these schools has taken place and has generally been successful. know perfectly well that if Ontario had the power to-day to say whether separate schools should be abolished or not there would be a very strong expression on the part of the majority that separate schools should be abolished. I do not speak of the subject as having myself any dislike to religious On the contrary, as far as my personal feelings and convictions are concerned, I would very much prefer a system of education which would be essentially a religious system. Unfortunately, under the existing circumstances of the country, no province has been able to devise a plan by which such system could be established; and we find the only result of the adoption of that principle is, that one particular denomination has established schools, by means of which it has sought in various ways to extend its influence politically or otherwise, and has never been content to stand in the position in which it was placed by the British North America Act, but in the various provinces it has extended its power until in Ontario there is a very general determination, which to some extent has been carried out, that that body shall be compelled to revert to the position in which it is placed in the British North America Act. shall simply content myself on the present occasion with contending that as regards this question of restriction imposed by section 9 of the present Act it should be removed, and the Assembly should be given power and control over education, and no restriction should be imposed by this legislation as to whether separate schools shall be established in the North-West Territories or not. I do not propose to enter into the question as to whether it is advisable to have a separate school system, but I confine myself to the contention that this Assembly should have power to deal with the question. go further, and say that as this Act makes no special reference to education, and as before very long there will be another opportunity of dealing with this question, and taking up the whole subject of education, which is virtually not taken up by this Act, and as no particular harm can result from postponing the question for a short time, I will not at the present time go further than to say that I trust the Government will take the subject into its serious consideration, and will decide, in view of all the circumstances of the case, considering the views of all the provinces, considering what the future of the country is likely to be, before next session whether or not in conferring these great powers, which they have conferred on this Assembly by this Bill, they will not go further, and give them perfect and absolute control over education. It may be said there are no petitions from the North-West Territories asking for this. I think we have had some evidence that there is a strong feeling on the subject, but even were there not one member from the North-West this question, and that at a time which shall be Mr. O'BRIEN.

to rise in this House and endorse the view for which I am contending, it must be remembered that we are not legislating for the comparatively small handful of people in the North-West Territories, but we are legislating for the large number we hope to see there within a very few years, and I think we may fairly assume that the Bill giving these sive powers is intended, although there is no limit stated as to the period of its duration, to remain in force for a very considerable period of time. With the powers that are given to the North-West Territories under this Act there will be no reason for giving more extensive powers or for creating separate provinces for, very probably, a good many years to come. And, Sir, what will be the position of those who may then be prepared to contend, as I contend now, that this subject should be dealt with by the Provincial Assembly? Sir, we shall have the cry that has been raised so often in reference to this question, as well as to kindred questions in the Dominion of Canada; we shall have the cry that those who were in favour of separate schools have had them established by law, that they have been existing for so many years, that a vested right has been created in them, and that this right ought not to be set aside. difficulty placed upon those who feel as I do on this question will be very greatly increased if we allow this period of time to elapse without removing the restriction imposed by the 9th section of the Act to which I refer. I say that for this reason this restriction ought to be removed before this system becomes finally established in the North-West Territories I think the proposition is a reasonable one; I think it is a proposition which the Government ought to accede to, and it is a proposition which I hope they will accede to. I hope that now when they are establishing this principle, giving these extensive powers to this Assembly, they will give them the power of saying whether or not there shall be separate schools in the territories, if they are to have the subject of education in their hands at I repeat again that this is a reasonable proposition; it is a proposition which the Government ought to accede to, and it is a proposition which I hope they will accede to. However, under existing circumstances, I do not wish at this period of the session to raise a debate which probably would create a good deal of angry feeling, and which undoubtedly would produce a discussion which, considering the many pressing matters now before the House, and in the present condition of the Administration, it is desirable to avoid if possible. I venture to say, in speaking on this subject, that I am giving expression, not only to my own opinion, but to the opinion of many other members of this House who hold the same opinion as I do in regard to this matter. Under these circumstances, I do not propose, while the present Act is under consideration, to offer an amendment myself to the Act as it now stands; but I tell the Government—and I say it with all seriousness and all determination—that unless they either deal with the subject now, which is the proper time to deal with it, when they have the Act before them, or unless they will, during the recess, consider the question, and before the next session bring forward an amendment to the Act in the direction I think it should be amended, then I can tell them that they have not heard the last of more convenient for raising this discussion it will be raised in this House, and they will be compelled to meet it, and to let the country understand distinctly whether or not they are prepared to remove this restriction. I think, Sir, there is nothing else I need say on this question now. I think I am making a reasonable request; I am making a request which I am very certain will be supported by a majority-I will not say only of those whom I represent—but a great majority of those who are represented in this House—at any rate, by the members from the Province of Ontario. I think that a similar expression of opinion would be given also by the electors in many other portions of the Dominion. The subject, of course, is one that is comparatively new, for all our dealings with the North-West Territories have been so far tentative, and experimental rather than absolute. We are now, however, going a step fur-We are now giving to this Assembly powers which it has not hitherto possessed; and there is one thing which may be taken for granted, that with the acquisition of the new powers given under this Act the people of these territories will enquire why they should be restricted in this great and important particular. It is because I think such is the case, and because I do not wish on a future occasion, when this subject comes again before the House for further legislation, that those who think as I do on this system of education should be met with the objection that so many years ago this system was established by law and that, therefore, a vested right is created which the Legislature should not now interfere with. Why, Sir, it would be almost fair to argue that this would come within the provisions of the British North America Act. If not in reality it would by analogy, because the British North America Act secured to the provinces which came into Confederation whatever rights were enjoyed by the supporters of separate schools at the time of Confederation, and if we create new provinces out of these territories it may fairly be argued that the analogy of the British North America Act will apply, and that in creating new provinces and bringing them into Confederation there will be something like the same rights guaranteed to the supporters of separate schools which were guaranteed to the provinces having separate schools before coming in under the British North America Act. Sir, under all these circumstances, I think I am taking a reasonable course in calling the attention of the Government to this matter, and in telling them that unless they are prepared either to remove this restriction now when the Bill is before the House, or unless before next session they will make up their minds to remove it, the subject will again be brought up, and brought up with perhaps not, as I may say, the studied moderation with which I have brought it forward on this occasion. I can tell the Government that the whole subject of separate schools will come up, and possibly a demand will be made in this House and supported by public opinion in this country which will go a great deal further than the moderate proposal I now submit. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to offer any opposition to the second reading of the Bill. I am not going, as I said, to bring forward myself a resolution on this subject when the Bill is in Committee; but I hope question I boldly replied that I would pursue such the Government will take the course I suggested, a course as would be favourable to maintaining the and if they do not take it, then they must be preseparate schools and respecting the religious pared at the next favourable opportunity, having had full time to consider this question, to state whether or not they will meet the proposal, which I think is a moderate and reasonable one.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Mr. Speaker, as one of the representatives of the territories I may say that I believe the people of the North-West Territories will be willing to accept this as a temporary measure. It can be nothing else than a temporary measure, because it is the hope, not only of the people of the territories, but I believe of the people of all Canada, that the condition of that country may alter and improve so materially that by the end of the next three years another form of legislature will have to be granted, or perhaps some legislative divisions will have to be made in the Territories. Just now Parliament has been devoting its attention to the question of immigration, and should the measures taken by the Dominion Government prove of use, and should a large number of immigrants come into the country, it is considered by the people living there that the population will have increased to such an extent that it may be advisable to divide the territories, and to perhaps carve out one or two provinces. I think, as the territories exist just now, it would be a mistake to alter the conditions affecting the schools. I, for one, am pledged to the maintenance of separate schools at present, and when my hon. friend the member for Muskoke (Mr. O'Brien) warns the Government that if they do not next year bring in a Bill to place the question of schools, and the prohibition of separate schools, if necessary, in the hands of the Legislative Assembly, I may warn him that as one of the representatives of the territories I am pledged during this Parliament to oppose such a measure. I believe that the people of the North-West are very liberal in their opinions. The Protestants who live there have their own schools, and they do not in the least object to the Roman Catholics educating their children in the manner in which their conscience dictates. I believe at the same time that there is a very strong hope amongst the people of the North-West Territories that the children of Canada may know that there can be nothing very detrimental to religion in learning reading, and writing, and arithmetic, and other teachings such as that, in the common schools of the country. But they recognize that, as long as there is a strong prejudice on the part of a large section of the people throughout the country, arising simply from a good motive, it must be respected. During the last session of Parliament, when my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) introduced in this House a measure affecting the schools of the North-West, he stated that the different representatives of the territories did not represent the feeling of the people there. Well, Sir, we have had a general election since then. In my district there is not only a large number of Roman Catholics, but also a large number of North of Ireland Orangemen; there are Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and adherents of almost every denomination; and at every single meeting I attended, whether in a Roman Catholic settlement or an Orange one, when I was asked to state what course I would pursue in regard to this school opinions of the different sections of the people. There is really no hardship at all to the Protestants of the North-West in the separate schools as they are at present constitued, because the present Act, which I presume will be continued after this Bill passes, provides that Protestants shall be taxed for the maintenance of Protestant schools, and that Roman Catholics shall be taxed for the maintenance of Roman Catholic schools. No Protestantis taxed for the maintenance of Roman Catholic schools unless he chooses, and at the same time no Roman Catholic is taxed for the maintenance of Protestant schools unless he chooses to be taxed in that way. I do not think there is any great danger from a system of that kind; and if the hon. gentlemen who espouse so warmly the interests of the North-West would turn their attention to the material welfare of that country they will find that the people of the territories are able to take care of their own spiritual interests. Now, the hon, gentleman, in referring to this question, says he is not sure whether the British North America Act controls the question of schools in the North-West Territories or not. I can hardly believe that it does, for there is a provision at present on the Statute-book providing for the maintenance of separate schools in the territories. It, therefore, appears to be plain that this House regulates these matters; and I would warn the hon, gentleman, before he brings a measure before this House for the purpose of abolishing separate schools in the territories, to consider the constitution of this House. The hon. gentleman says I have misunderstood him—that he did not intend to abolish separate schools, but merely wished to give the people the right to say whether they would have separate schools or not. I may say that I am opposed to that while the constitution of the territories exists in its present form. When those territories are divided into provinces, then they may be given control of their schools; but while they continue to be territories it is better to leave the school question as it is. When they are divided into provinces there will be a sufficient population of the different denominations to guarantee that no one denomination shall be treated unfairly. But I believe, further, that when that happens the provinces must be given control of their own lands, and be given proper subsidies to ensure the efficient government of those provinces. I know that the hon, member for Bothwell will immediately say: Here are those North-West political highwaymen after our pockets again. But, Sir, it would be useless to establish Provincial Governments in the North-West anless we gave them the means of carrying out their purposes. I consider that the time is not ripe for establishing Provincial Governments in the North-West until you give them good and solid means to enable them to redeem their responsibilities. At the same time, I believe that this House has shown its responsibility in regard to that country. It has chartered railways throughout the North-West in every direction. This is practically the Provincial Government of the North-West as well as the Dominion Government; and when we who represent the North-West appeal to the Government, and the Government appeal to this House for subsidies to assist our railways, I think hon. gentlemen forget that whereas they who belong to the older provinces have power to obtain assistance from the Provincial Governments, we in the North-West Territories have no such power: and, therefore, if we were to ask the Government, and the Government were to ask this House to grant double subsidies to railways in the North-West Territories, they would act on a sound basis; because they would grant one-half in their capacity as the Provincial Government and the other half in their capacity as the Federal Government. Now, Sir, there was one other question referred to by my hon, friend from West Assiniboia; that is the question of immigration. I do not think I need say very much on this question to impress upon this House still more strongly than it has hitherto been done that the question of immigration is one of the most material questions in the North-West. The hon, member for Assiniboia suggested that a sum of money should be provided by this Act to be given to the Government of the North-West to be expended on immigration. I think myself that that would be a very wise thing indeed, and I hope that when the Supplementary Estimates come down we shall find a sum in them for that object. But there is one defect in this Act which I hope will be remedied. The population of the North-West has increased very much since the last North-West Act was passed, and the electoral districts for the last Provincial Legislature were drawn out. Now, by this Bill you are cutting off the three legal experts of the Council, and I would ask the Minister not to increase the number of the Assembly, but to provide for three new elected representatives to take the place of those three legal experts, one of those representatives to come from the district of Saskatchewan, and the other two I think my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Davis) is fairly entitled to claim, according to the population of his district. If this is done it will give the greatest satisfaction to the people of the North-West. I think the Bill will then be satisfactory to them as a temporary measure, because it can only be a temporary measure, if the North-West continues to grow as we hope it will.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not intend to find fault with the Bill; but I would ask the Minister if sub-section (f) of sub-section 2 of section 6 gives power to the Assembly to establish the ballot in local elections?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Sub-section (f) gives power to the Legislative Assembly to give the ballot. That is the intention.

Mr. Larivière. I was rather astonished at the remarks that fell from the lips of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) on this particular occasion. We have heard a good deal before on this question of education as well as that of the dual language, and in most of these instances the objections came from representatives of the Province of Ontario, who, being unable to impose their own ideas in their own province, are trying to impose those very ideas outside of the Province of Ontario itself. The question of education is one of those which have been well guarded in the constitution; and I may say that, upon reading the British North America Act one cannot fail to notice that the spirit, as well as the letter of the constitution, is in favour of separate schools. Clause 93 is as follows:—

"First, nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law in the province at the Union: Second, all the powers, privileges and duties at the Union by law conferred and imposed in Upper Canada on the separate schools and school trustees of the Queen's Roman Catholic subjects shall be and the same are hereby extended to the dissentient schools of the Queen's Protestant and Roman Catholic subjects of Quebec: Third, where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the Union or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education."

Therefore, when a system of separate schools existed prior to the Union, or was thereafter established, it was provided that that system could not subsequently be altered; and I say that, this being the case, the spirit of our constitution is in favour of the system of separate schools. In the case of the North-West Territories, before we enacted legislation to govern those territories there were schools in existence, and those were separate schools; and when this Parliament, in giving a constitution to those territories, enacted that the schools to be thereafter established would be separate schools, we have only continued the system that was already in existence, and a system already under the protection of the constitution. The British North America Act provided that what existed in the provinces that were then united should be extended also to the provinces afterwards taken into the Union and to-day form part of Confederation, and that provision applies also to the territories we have acquired since. Therefore, I may say, that in leaving what is well alone the Government is only carrying out the spirit of the constitution, as I have already explained. With regard to the feeling of the people in the Territories, I may say that the feeling out there is just as has been represented by the worthy representative of Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall). Last year a large number of petitions were addressed to this Parliament asking that the same system which was in existence should be maintained, and protesting against any change such as was then contemplated by some hon, members of this House. This year, I may say, I have a certain number of similar petitions in my desk, which I did not deem advisable to present to this House, because I did not think that this question would be brought up for our consideration. I am glad, however, that the hon, member for Muskoka has only put in his remarks as a protest, and does not intend to raise otherwise this question during the present session. and I hope we will never hear any more of those very nasty questions, and that of education, which should not have been raised on this occasion.

Mr. McNEILL. I desire just to say a few words with reference to this matter. I would not have said anything at all had it not been for the remarks which have fallen from my hon, friend opposite; but I think it is well that I should at once remove what seems to be a complete misapprehension from the mind of my hon, friend. He says that some persons in Ontario, unable to carry their own views as to education into effect there, desire to impose those views upon people in other portions of this Dominion. Now, that is an entire misconception of what has fallen from the hon, member for Muskoka. Nothing more entirely opposed to the remarks which I, at least, had the pleasure of hearing from him, could well be imagined than that What my hon, friend said was thisif I could state the exact logical opposite of what has been cited by the hon, gentleman oppositenot that he desires to impose the wishes of people outside the North-West Territories upon the people of the North-West Territories in reference to this matter, but that, on the contrary, he desires to take care that the wishes of no one outside the North-West Territories shall be imposed upon the people there with reference to this matter. He wishes to have safeguards taken lest at some time the wishes of other people should be imposed upon He wishes to take care now that we do not do something which will prevent the people of the North-West having the power to carry out their own views in reference to this matter; and surely it is scarcely fair to my hon, friend to represent that he has any desire to force the wishes of other people on the people of the North West Territories. When my hon, friend understands what the hon, member for Muskoka really means I hope he will have the kindness to get up in his place and withdraw the observations he has made, which, I am sure, were not meant in unkindness, but which really were not doing justice at all to what has fallen from my hon, friend. For my part, I should like to see the people of Canada, if it were possible, I should like personally educated in one school. to see the young people brought up in the closest possible friendship with one another. I think that would be for the benefit of the people of Canada, but I quite recognize the fact that other people differ from me in that respect. I quite recognize the fact that they may be right and that I may be wrong, and all my hon, friend says and all I say in regard to this is that we should take care that those in Canada who think as we think in regard to this matter should have the opportunity of carrying out their wishes, and that those who think differently should have the opportunity of carrying out their wishes. We simply hope that we shall not now do anything which will prevent the people of the North-West Territories in the future from dealing with this matter in any manner they please. If they wish separate schools, let them have them; and if they do not wish separate schools, do not force them upon them. That is all my hon, friend says, and if that is not a fair and reasonable proposition I do not see where a fair and reasonable proposition can be found.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. When I made my remarks I had in my mind the last fight that took place in Ontario, and from what I read in the newspapers and the speeches that took place I formed the opinion on which I made my remarks. As to leaving this to the Local Legislature, the experience we have had in Manitoba is so sad that we cannot agree to leave our interests to a set of demagogues, who try to impose their own views on other people, without any regard to the interests or the welfare of the minority.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon, gentleman will not make a speech, as he has already spoken. He will have an opportunity to speak in Committee.

ews upon people in other portions of this on. Now, that is an entire misconception has fallen from the hon, member for Mus-Nothing more entirely opposed to the fore, but I do not think the occasion should pass without my stating my views in regard to this matter. I humbly submit that this is a very important question, that it has a great deal to do with some rights which we should not infringe upon, that it touches the constitution itself, and the consent of the parties to that constitution. the question came up to incorporate Manitoba and North-West in the Dominion some great troubles arose. Troops were sent there, and then, on the invitation of the Ottawa Government, delegates were sent here. The Government of England took great care that the incorporation of that province in the Dominion would not be effected without the consent of the parties interested. The delegates came to Ottawa with a Bill of Rights. I hope that the hon, gentlemen who place themselves under the flag of equal rights will not desire to see any rights infringed, and they will see that the North-West would not have joined the Dominion if the claim made by the North-West generally, and not only by Manitoba, had not been accepted. Those delegates who were specially appointed, in conformity with the invitation of the Government of this country, came to Ottawa and presented their Bill of Rights. The seventh clause of that Bill of Rights

"That the separate schools be preserved and the money for those schools be divided between the different religious denominations and their respective populations, accord-ing to the system followed in the Province of Quebec."

Section 16 says:

"That the French and English languages be common in the Legislature and in the courts, and that all the public documents as well as the Acts of the Legislature be published in both languages."

And in a report elaborately prepared by His Grace Mgr. Taché, dated the 27th December, all the facts that occurred then are related, and it says at page 7:

"The question of separate schools as asked for in Article 7 of said Bill of Rights was taken under consideration. The delegates were assured that not only would they have the benefit of the clauses of the British North America Act, but that they might assure their people that in the Red River district the separate schools were guaranteed to them, and the usage of the French language as an official language was also granted as it had been asked in Article 16 of said Bill of Rights. Moreover, it was promised that we would receive what was asked in Articles 17 and 18."

I did not mention that Article 18 states that a judge of the Supreme Court will speak both French and English. The bishop goes on to say that these claims were all granted as a matter of course. If the granting of the same was not in terms identical with the demand which was made, at all events it was substantially granted in order to satisfy the interests of the different parties. That was one of the bases of the convention, and the Dominion of Canada has been allowed by England to acquire those territories on the special condition that the French language and the separate schools should be maintained. That is a contract. It is the basis of a constitution, and if we begin now to change that constitution we may shake the tree of Confederation in such a way that perhaps it may not live long; we may prevent it from having large branches which would shelter a large, a healthy and a happy population. The hon, gentlemen who look for equal rights must not at the same time try to take away from others the rights which are guaranteed by charters. I may be told that this is Mr. AMYOZ.

not a British charter. That is true. As far as Manitoba is concerned, the charter is British. far as the North-West is concerned, it is a Dominion charter; but it results from the stipulations which were made when Manitoba was allowed to join the Confederation, that the same basis would be adopted by the Dominion for the North-West Territories, and we cannot now take away the rights and privileges which were granted to the minority in any of those two provinces without abusing our powers and without acting unfairly and unjustly towards those minorities. If there was something against the common good when a man worships his God according to the Catholic religion, if there was something against the public good when a man speaks French, then I would say: all right, you act for the common good; but where is the man of common sense who will say in this House of Parliament of Canada that it is wrong to worship God according to the Catholic religion? Where is the man who will say it is wrong to speak French? Do we not in our language teach our children to respect the property of their neighbour? Do we not teach them to be loyal to the Queen? Do we not teach our children all those rules of morals necessary for the welfare and safety of a people? If, then, in the Catholic religion, and in the French language, there is nothing against public good, you must respect the conditions concerning them, which were established when those parts of the Dominion joined the Confederation of Canada. I maintain that in our Confederation, under our system of Government, we must follow the constitution as it has been agreed upon; and if we go astray from it we lay down principles and make precedents which will bring us into a state of division and trouble, and which might demolish the whole work of Confederation. Those who look for unity instead of union do not understand the system under which There is a great and essential distinction we live. to be drawn between the two things. The essence of a Government by a King or an Emperor, as in The essence of England or France, is unity? a Confederation is not unity, it is union, and there is a wide distinction to be made between the two. On this point, I will quote from a high authority, "Lectures introductory to the study of the Law of the Constitution," by Dicey. I draw to this work the attention of the hon. member for Muskoka, whom I know to be animated with honest and honourable motives, who is sincere in his convictions, who acts in what he believes to be the real interests of thecountry. I ask him to lock at that authority and to follow my quotation, and to learn how to respect the sentiments of those who have not the honour of speaking his language or of professing his religion. We respect his rights; we want equal rights for all-equal rights for the Protestant and for the Catholic religion, for the English and for the French language. Those rights cannot be in-fringed upon without troubling the harmony and the welfare of our commonwealth. On page 129 of his work Dicey says:

imagination of politicians, but it can never be transformed into facts.

At page 130 he says:

"The sentiment, therefore, which creates a federal state is the prevalence, throughout the citizens of more or less allied countries, of two feelings which are, to a certain extent, inconsistent—the desire for national of the house of the countries of the count determination to maintain the independence of each man's separate state."

At page 132 he says:

"From the notion that national unity can be reconciled with state independence by a division of powers under a common constitution, between the nation on the one hand common constitution, between the nation on the one mand and the individual states on the other, flow the three lead-ing characteristics of federalism—the supremacy of the constitution—the distribution among bodies, with limited and co-ordinate authority, of the different powers of gov-ernment—the authority of the courts to act as interpret-ers of the constitution."

Now, Mr. Speaker, under our system we have that constitution which must be our sole guide; we must not depart from it in any way. A part of that constitution has been granted by the Queen, and the other part has been granted by this Parliament, in virtue of the powers given to us by the Queen. constitution as it stands is the consequence of the act and the direct will of the people at large. It follows that that constitution must be stronger than the courts, stronger than Parliament, stronger than any power in this world. We have consented to enter into Confederation under certain stipulations, and they must remain our rule. Of course, some human power will have to interpret some acts of the Legislatures to find out whether they are conformable to the constitution, but the constitution itself must always remain as our guiding star. What does the hon, gentleman, with a good motive, doubtless, ask us to do? He asks us to change that constitution. I say that he cannot receive the consent of those who look seriously to the future of this country. The generous spirit of all the parts of the constitution, either Imperial or Federal, is that the two languages shall remain in the right of the different populations, of the different people composing the federation; sethat separate schools shall remain condly, Separate schools are allowed under law to remain separate in the Province of Quebec, and if any member of this House, or any one out of the House came into the Province of Quebec and asked us to do away with separate schools, to keep only the schools of the majority, you would find the whole Catholic population of the Province of Quebec rising as one man and saying, No. The Protestants are entitled to their Protestant schools; they entered Confederation with that stipulation, and they will keep them. I was happy when I saw in the neighbouring province, the great and prosperous Province of Ontario-when I saw there a Prime Minister, to whatever party he may belong, rising up from his seat and, in the name of a great party, saying: "I will defend the separate schools because they are established by the constitution, and I must observe the constitution." I deprecate the Acts of Martin of Manitoba, to whatever party he may belong, when he got a law passed to change the constitution, which he had not the right to do, concerning the separate schools and the French language in that province. I will not for my part consent to be a party to any law entrenching upon vested rights. The people professing the Catholic religion in the North-West are in a minority to-day; who can tell us that in 100 years, or 200 years, they this Parliament not to infringe on vested rights and will not be the majority? Then if the majority becomes Catholic, and if that majority is asked to establish separate schools and to do away with the Protestant schools, following the rules of the Catholic Church, the majority, then being Catholic, will say, "No; vested rights must remain vested rights, and nobody must infringe upon them.' That is, Mr. Speaker, the general understanding, and we must not infringe upon it; that is my way of looking at the constitution of the country, it must be our guide and our only guide. only way of forming a grand people in union under the British flag, of making everybody happy, feeling that his rights are respected, that the future of his children is assured, and that his religion, as well as his language, are not exposed to be taken away from future generations for whom he is responsible. Now, the same authority which I quoted a moment ago, gives general rules as to that constitution. He says, page 144:

"Under the federal system it is otherwise. The legal supremacy of the constitution is essential to the existence of the state."

The words are clear. He speaks thus of the United

"The glory of the founders of the United States is to have advised or adopted arrangements under which the constitution became in reality as well as name the supreme law of the land. This end they attained by adherence to a very obvious principle and by the invention of appropriate machinery for carrying this principle into effect. The principle is clearly expressed in the constitution of the United States. 'The constitution,' runs article 6, 'and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws in any state to the contrary notwithstanding.'"

The same authority, speaking of our British North America Act of 1867, page 153, says:

"Throughout the Dominion, therefore, the constitution is in the strictest sense the immutable law of the land. Under this law, again, you have, as you would expect, the distribution of powers among bodies of co-ordinate

Where is the consent, I will not say of the majority, but of the minority of the North-West, who joined the Dominion under a special compact, to do away with separate schools or abolish the French language in any part of the public or official proceedings either of courts or of Parliaments. If you do any man in the North-West the injustice of taking away from him vested rights in that re spect, if you do him the injustice of not allowing him to speak in Parliament or read the Acts of Parliament, or the decisions of the court in his own language, you do not act with justice but with tyranny; you use force towards the minority in order to take away the rights belonging to them, and which the majority had given to that minority. You trespass on private rights, you deprive a body of people of their vested rights without their consent, and I do not believe it will be noble, fair and even excusable on the part of this enlightened Parliament to do any such action, when we boast of the great education and the great liberty which every one enjoys under the British flag. In the name of the constitution, in the name of vested rights, in the name of equal rights, because equal rights do not consist in taking away rights from others, in the name of the future of this country, of the peace, narmony and welfare of every part of this Dominion, I implore to maintain for the North-West, as for any other part of the Dominion, all rights granted to the people by the constitution, which has received the sanction of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon, member for Bellechase (Mr. Amyot) seems to confuse a portion of the constitution with the constitution itself. That portion of the British North America Act referred to provided for a condition of things that was in existence in two provinces of the Dominion when Confederation was accomplished, and that is the reason those rights were given to those provinces by that Act. Among the exclusive rights given to a province, as stated in clause 93 of the British North America

"In and for each province the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions."

These provisions were made to apply to a condition of things prevailing only in two provinces of the Dominion when Confederation was about to take place. The hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) forgets that there are some provinces that have not the right to separate schools to-day, but which came in under the constitution, the same as the North-West Territories or Manitoba did; and it must be remembered that these provisions were applicable to a condition of things that existed in Ontario and Quebec alone, and they were framed to meet that condition, and not to apply to other provinces or territories that might come in hereafter. The member for Bellechasse says we have a right to maintain that provision. I believe we have the right to do so. We went into Confederation on the understanding that the British North America Act should be our future constitution, and there is no violation, when we are giving a constitution to the North-West Territories, in granting the new province the right contemplated to be given to all provinces, to deal exclusively with the subject of education. In New Brunswick the people have that right, in Nova Scotia they have it, but in Ontario and Quebec they have not that right, because separate schools were established anterior to Confederation, and they must be retained in accordance with the constitution. The hon, member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) says those provisions have the sanction of law to-day in the North-West. The hon, gentleman refers to a section in the old Act. I should like toask, When was that passed? It was not passed at the time we acquired the North-West Territories, but was inserted in a provisional Act in order to give quasi-legislative power to the Lieutenant Governor in the North-West. If there is any force in the arguments of the hon, members for Bellechasse and Provencher, they must show that by law or usage the educational system of the country, anterior to the time we acquired Manitoba and the North-West, separate schools existed, and, if such were established, there might be some force in the contention that the people had the right to retain the power they enjoyed and exercised. But I do not understand that the clause of the Act that the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) read is part and parcel of the constitution, but simply a clause of the North-West The hon, member for Provencher Territories Act. (Mr. LaRivière) said that the people of Ontario should not force their opinion into legislation for Мг. Амуот.

adopting that course himself, because he does not belong to the North-West Territories, but to the Province of Manitoba. But it is not a matter of jurisdiction limited to members from those Territories, when we are framing a constitution for that western country, but the right to take part belongs to every member of this Parliament. We are making that constitution, and it ought to be in harmony with the provision of the British North America Act, if I rightly interpret it, which is that every province that enters into this Union shall have certain exclusive rights as laid down in the British North America Act, and one of these rights is, that in and for each province the Legislature may make laws in relation to education. It goes on and says "subject to the following provisions:" but, as I before stated, the provisions were only made to provide for a condition of things that existed in two provinces, not all the provinces, and therefore we may fairly leave that part out of consideration. I must confess that I agree very largely with the sentiments expressed by the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). If it is possible for us in giving a constitution to the Territories to give it such exclusive rights that they may deal with education, as every other province in the Dominion has the right to deal with education, then I think it is fair and just that we should do so. Nor do I think we should be hampered in the discharge of our duty, notwithstanding the clause of the British North America Act which has been already cited, and a clause which was made long after we bought the North-West Territories.

Mr. LARIVIERE. I would ask my hon, friend to look at sub-section 3 of section 93. My hon, friend has only read up to sub-section 2, but he will find that sub-section 3 applies to the province where a system "will be thereafter established."

Mr. SPROULE. Sub-section 3 reads :

"Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the Union or is thereafter established by the Legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education."

This provides for where the legislation has provided for separate schools, or where separate schools existed when the province was brought into Confederation. I do not understand there was any law to provide for separate schools in the North-West Territories when they came into Confederation, and therefore I say that this cannot fairly apply.

Mr. LARIVIERE. My hon, friend knows that the British North America Act applies to all the

Mr. SPROULE. It certainly does, but I say that the sub-section which the hon. gentleman has asked me to read:

"Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the Union-" I claim it did not exist there by law at the Union.

Mr. LARIVIERE. It says "or thereafter shall be established."

Mr. SPROULE. This is an Act that was passed long after the Union, and it did not exist by law at the time of the Union, and therefore I say that it cannot be fairly applied to this particular case. In view of the trouble we have seen in the Province the North-West Territories. He forgets that he is of Manitoba lately in regard to this question, and in view of the troubles that have taken place in at that time, Assiniboia to eleven, and Sasother provinces, I think we should be very careful in dealing with this subject here. If there is any one principle more than another by which we should be governed it is that principle that we have acknowledged, the principle which we have in every province in the Union, save and except the provisions that were made for conditions that existed by law anterior to the Union. I say it is right to give to the provinces the power to deal exclusively with education, as was contemplated by the British North America Act, if I correctly interpretit. I do not know whether at the time that this Act was written this provision for educational powers was overlooked, or that it was intended to allow the law to remain, but I think it would be better to give a free constitution to the territories, as they are about to organize a Legislative Assembly, and to give them the same rights and powers that are exercised in every other province of the Union to-day.

Mr. AMYOT. Without the right of changing anything as to education and language. We have been kept as a protection here.

Mr. SPROULE. I have not spoken about language at all. I have spoken with regard to the subject of education, and according to my interpretation of the British North America Act it allows every province to have exclusive right over

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, before this Bill receives its second reading I wish to say a very few words upon it. I am satisfied that this Bill meets with general approbation in the North-West Territories, and I shall raise no discussion with regard to the stand that my hon, friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) takes in reference to it; but I will say this: That this question of education is one on which there is very little said in the North-West Territories, and had it been included in this Bill I, for one, would have stood up for separ-You may say that ever since the ate schools. North-West has been the North-West, and in fact when it was originally settled, the first schools that were established there were Catholic schools, and I cannot myself see why we should take any rights away from these people which they had. I believe in fair-play the world over. Even if the Roman Catholics are now in a minority, there is no reason why the majority should dictate to them, and say: You shall not have what was granted to you when you first came into Confederation, as we might say. There will be time enough when we are divided into provinces, which will be, I hope, at no distant date, to discuss this question. Then, if we are to have a new constitution it will be good and seasonable time to discuss this question, but at the present time I say: Let it alone. Now, with regard to the provisions of section 2 of the Bill now before the House. That section provides that there shall betwenty-two members in the Legislative Assembly, but when the Bill comes up in the Committee I shall move that the number be increased to twentyfive members. We have had taken from us three of the legal experts, two of whom came from the district of Alberta, and I shall give my reasons for saying that we should have two additional members in that district. When in 1888 the proportion of the members was granted it was taken from the number of names that were on the voters' lists at katchewan to five. As we cannot yet get the proper estimate by the last census, it is only fair that we should take the same proportion now as was taken three years ago-that is, by the number of names on the voters' list. the division was fair, then it is fair now. I find that in Alberta there were 6,492 on the voters' list, and that divided by six would give 1,082 voters which each member in the district of Alberta represented. In Assiniboia, east and west, there were 7,255 names, which, for eleven members, would give each a representation of 659 voters, as against 1,082 for Alberta. Now, I am only asking for two members, which will leave me still to the good, with each member representing 816 voters in Alberta as against 659 in Assiniboia. I think I have a just claim in asking for these two additional members, and if there were a redistribution according to the number of names on the voters' list at the present time I think Alberta would be entitled to four members instead of two. I may say that I have heard no complaints from any portion of Alberta with regard to the clauses of this Bill. They have not even found fault with the representation, as they thought I would look after that myself. I have my schedule drawn out in reference to the representation, and I will produce it before the Committee when it comes to the question of redistribution, provided we are allowed the two extra members. I do not propose to detain the House any longer at this stage, but when the Bill comes up in committee I shall have something to say upon it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just one remark in reference to this question. I regret that the hon, gentleman should have debated at such length, and with, as I thought, unnecessary warmth, the subject of the introduction into the North-West of any provision with respect to education. My hon, friend to my left spoke about this subject as if an attempt were being made to interfere directly or indirectly with the rights which are secured by compact to the Province of Quebec, the Province of Ontario and the Province of Manitoba. I do not understand that any intimation was given in that direction, and if it was, it certainly should not, so far as I understand the question, have any sympathy or support from me. I think those rights are sufficiently guaranteed by the British North America Act, and I have not heard that any agitation exists in any of those provinces for the purpose of having any of those rights interfered with. I would not have said a word on this Bill except for the remarks made by these hon. gentlemen; and I desire that it should not be understood on this occasion that Parliament is bound by the silence of one or all of its members from expressing its views when those territories are erected into provinces. My opinion is now, and has been for years, that when that time comes you cannot withhold from the provinces so erected the right to determine for themselves question of education in one way or the other. I would be the last to favour this Parliament imposing upon the people there other. any system of education, either free or separate. I only claim that when a Bill is introduced to erect those territories into provinces that Bill should Alberta was entitled to six members contain a provision enabling the people of the different provinces so created to decide what system of education they shall have. I do not discuss that question now. I only express this view, lest I might be supposed by my silence to give assent to some extreme doctrines which hon, gentlemen have propounded. In view of the remarks which have been made, I thought it necessary to disclaim that, in assenting to the passage of this Bill, I bound myself for all time on this question of education. I do not. Although we are giving powers almost equal to those conferred upon Local Legislatures, we are not erecting the territories into separate provinces. When that is done, I suppose it will be done by the Queen in Council under the 146th section of the British North America Act, and I simply claim the right when that time comes to determine for myself. In accordance with the view I have always held and hold now, I have no hesitation in expressing, respectfully, that the people of those new provinces should have the right to determine what system of education they shall have.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the question of the representation of the minority in the Legislature of the North-West Territories was brought up last session of the last Parliament, by the reading of a letter from Mgr. Grondin, Bishop of St. Albert, in which is to be found the following passage :-

"Although in the minority, we might be able, nevertheless, to send two representatives in the House, but they have succeeded in making this a thing impossible for us. I again charge the Dominion Government, who in marking out the electoral districts have divided up the two French centres in such a manner that it is impossible for us to secure representation."

During the debate on the Bill introduced by the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to abolish the French language in the North-West Territories, the question was again brought up by thehon, memberfor Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), in a dialogae which took place between him and the bon. Minister of Justice, when the latter introduced his famous amendment. This dialogue is to be found in the last year's debates of the House, column I will now read it:

"Mr. MACDOWALL. The hon, the Minister of Justice said, before he moved his amendment, that the whole North-West should have fair representation in the Legislative Assembly before that question was dealt with by that Assembly. I should like to ask him, does the Government contemplate a re-distribution of seats in the North-West Assembly? because otherwise the population of the North-West will not have the fair representation they are entitled to.

"Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is a matter which will have to be dealt with by Parliament, as the subject-matter of this resolution will be, should it be adopted. The Government will consider that subject before bringing down a

Bill

"Mr. MACDOWALL. I understand that there will be a re-distribution of seats for the North-West Territories, and the French population will be given a representation before this question has to be dealt with. "Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gentleman will understand that if it is shown to the Government that there is not a fair representation in the present system of distribution this Parliament will beyond doubt remedy the evil."

I wish to know, Mr. Speaker, whether the Government has studied the question, and whether it is ready to say whether the French population of the North-West is to be represented in the Legislature, for it has been shown that there exists a just grievance, and the Government has promised to remedy this grievance when it should be shown. In section Mr. Davies (P.E.I.).

to a schedule containing a description of the electoral districts, according to which the elections shall be made. However, the Bill contains no new schedule, and before it be read for a second time I wish to know if the Government is ready to fulfil the promise which it made, of giving the French population of the North-West a representation proportionate to its importance?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I should have been better pleased myself if the measure we have before us had made some provision for the creation of an executive responsible to the Local Legislature, and controlling the expenditure of moneys placed at the disposal of the Legislature of those territories. I notice in the Estimates which we have before us certain sums of money voted by this House for certain specific purposes; and I think, when the territories have grown in population to such an extent as to justify them in having a representative Assembly to legislate for them, that we ought to hand over a reasonable sum of money, such as we are voting herefor specific purposes, to the control of that Assembly, and allow it to determine how and for what purpose that money shall be applied. When we undertake to confer representative institions on the people of the territories we are assuming that they are in a condition to exercise the functions of self-government; and one of the earliest functions of self-government would be to apply the revenues placed at their disposal to those purposes which they think most necessary for the welfare of the territories. That, I think, is a matter of very considerable importance. I do not overlook the fact that the population of this vast area is not a homogeneous population, in the sense of being united together and capable of understanding each other's wants, in the same way that a population in a well-settled province could. It is highly probable that it may be found, in the interest of good government in those territories, that at no distant day they should be divided, and that it will be found that they will be capable of carrying on the local legislation in a way more satisfactory to themselves if they had separate districts, each of which is separately represented, than by undertaking to embrace nearly one million square miles within the area of one Local Government, and bringing together representatives of distant settlements, who cannot understand each other's wants and can know little or nothing about each other's circumstances. That fact alone will make any Assembly which may be called together there different from what a representative Assembly would be in a well-settled province. I observe, too, that by section 3 you give to the Lieutenant Governor the powers and prerogatives that belong to the Crown; you give him the power of dissolu-I think that is very questionable. You say that the Legislature, when elected, shall be elected for three years, unless sooner dissolved by the Lieutenant Governor; but why should the Lieutenant Governor have the power of dissolution, when you have not given him any responsible advisers? The advisers he may have are not responsible to the It does seem to majority of the Legislature. me that the evils which might arise this power being held by an irresponsible officer are far greater than those which would spring this grievance when it should be shown. In section from the continuance of the Assembly for the 2 of the Bill now before us the Government refers whole period of its election. The Assembly exists, under this section, for a period of three years, unless sooner dissolved. Why should it be sooner dissolved? Why should it not continue, as a county council does, until the period for which it is elected expires? Why give an officer appointed by the Ministers here the power of dissolution? His Excellency the Governor General exercises that power, but he does so upon the advice of Ministers who are responsible to Parliament for the advice they give. But out there you have no Ministers, you have no advisers who are responsible to the Local Legislature and can be dismissed from their positions by the action of the Local Legislature for having given bad advice in this matter. I think that is a power which ought never to be vested in an officer appointed by the Federal Ministers, or His Excellency upon the advice of the Federal Ministers, unless surrounded by men responsible to the Local Legislature for the advice they give. I especially invite the attention of hon, gentlemen to this section of the Bill, and when we go into committee I think we should amend this, and unless the Government are be exercised, under the direction of this executive, prepared to say that the time has come when by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West the Lieutenant Government of the territories shall be surrounded by men responsible to the Local Legislature for the advice they give, and that the moneys given by this House shall be handed over as a subsidy to that Legislature to distribute as they may see proper, under the constitutional provisions which pertain wherever parliamentary government exists, we ought not to take this step, because it is one which ought necessarily to be accompanied by the others I have mentioned.

Motion agreed, and House resolved itself into Committee.

On section 3,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There can be no 3 doubt that the time has not come when the territories, as a whole, should be given the position and powers of a province; and, in all probability, this Parliament will entertain the view that those powers are not to be conferred upon the territories, as a whole, at any time, but that provincial powers should be withheld until the time comes for subdividing the territories. In the meantime, the provision is that the Legislature shall hold office for three years. Under the present system there was no power of dissolving the Assembly before the expiration of that period. The circumstances under which a dissolution of an assembly of that character, not possessing full constitutional powers and not guided by an executive, should take place, would be very rare indeed; but the power of dissolution, I think, ought to be given. It is proposed that that power should be vested in the Lieutenant Governor of the territories. Hon. gentlemen opposite are of opinion that that will make him a despot, who has power at any moment, at his will and pleasure, to dissolve the Assembly. I have only to say that, according to my humble opinion, if the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories should be a person of that disposition, who would dissolve the Assembly of his own motion, he ought to be dissolved himself as Lieutenant Governor before the election of a new govern the territories under instructions given that, in the course of a year or two, by a large him by the Governor in Council or the Secretary of State for Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is the old irresponsible Colonial Office system.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. While the powers of the North-West Territories and the functions of their Government are limited, this Government is the executive for the North-West Terri-There must be an executive somewhere. We do not propose that there shall be an executive in the North-West Territories itself, and we have never yet conferred executive powers on any body there, although we have had an advisory council possessing a shadow of executive authority there. Nevertheless, even when the advisory council had its functions the Government of Canada was the executive for the North-West Territories in the sense that the Provincial Government of the North-West Territories is, to all intents and purposes, the Government of Canada. it is that executive powers of that kind should Territories. Is there no responsibility in this connection? If this Parliament is the Parliament which passes the laws for the North-West Territories, except in so far as we have delegated powers to pass ordinances on certain subjects, this is the Parliament that ought to control executive matters in the North-West Territories, and, therefore, the executive ought to remain the Dominion Government. I said a few moments ago, and I think everybody will agree with me, that it would very rarely occur that a power of this kind would have to be exercised. Nevertheless, anyone who has listened to or has read the debates which have occurred in reference to North-West matters during the last year or two can realize that an occasion might arise when the dissolution of the Assembly would be very convenient in the interests of the administration of the affairs of the territories. One of the subjects which might be referred to, as suggested by the debates which took place last year, might be the occurrence of the question as to conferring upon the North-West Assembly powers larger than they have hitherto possessed as to dealing with the liquor question. Last session this House would have been probably willing to agree that the power should be conferred on the North-West Assembly, but we were practically unanimous in the view that it should not be so conferred until the new Assembly should have been elected under a different system; and so, instead of being able to confer these powers at once, we were obliged to say that, although the interest of the North-West Territories might, in our estimation, induce us to confer such powers at once, such a proposition could not take effect until the expiration of the term of the present Assembly. It would have been more convenient for us to pass an enactment to come into force at once, and to leave the new members to exercise such enlarged powers as this Parliament could confer. This House will be continually hampered in dealing with the North-West Assembly and changing the limits of the districts, and matters of that kind, under the present system, because everything will practically have to be deferred until Assembly, because the law provides that he shall the expiration of the period of three years. Suppose increase of population, a considerable portion of distinct settlements, still there ought to be a corresthe territories should be unrepresented in the Assembly, it would be practically beyond our powers to change the representation. Of course, this is not likely to occur, but I think the power of dissolution should be vested somewhere. It cannot be vested in the Assembly itself, and I think it should be vested in the officer who exercises executive powers under the direction of the Government here.

MARKET MATERIAL FOR AN ARTHUR A SECURITION OF THE SECURITIES OF THE SECURITION OF THE SECURITIES OF THE SECURITION OF THE SECURITIES OF THE SECURITION OF TH

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not disputing the proposition that the power of dissolution ought to be vested somewhere, but I am simply pointing out that the mischiefs which might arise from the House sitting out its full period would be less likely to be serious than those which might arise from vesting this power in an irresponsible officer. It is true that the Lieutenant Governor is responsible to the Government here for his exercise of these powers, but that is simply in the same way as the Colonial Office, which was responsible to the Imperial Parliament, exercised large powers over this country in the past. For instance, Sir Francis Bond Headlwas responsible to the Colonial Office, and the Colonial Minister was responsible to the Imperial Parliament, but that did not prevent serious abuses, which led to an insurrection in what is now Ontario and Quebec. I think we might start with this proposition, that although it is not desirable, perhaps, to confer upon the inhabitants of the territories the same wide measure of authority that is conferred upon the Local Legislatures in the provinces, yet, as far as you do confer power upon them, that power ought to be exercised in connection with a responsible executive. You have got rid of the appointed members of the Local Legislature. You have an Assembly of persons representative of the people. Why should not the limited authority you entrust to that Assembly, and the executive authority in connection with it, be exercised upon the advice of men responsible to the Assembly for the advice which they give? Why, for instance, should we vote a considerable sum of money here, stating remotely the purposes to which it is to be applied, and not allow that money to be under the control of the Local Legislature of that territory and to be distributed upon the advice of the men who enjoy the confidence of that Legislature? I understand that some difficulties arose two or three years ago between the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly in regard to pecuniary appropriations. You expect that a portion of that territory may be organized into a province at no very distant day. It will then have full provincial You will then have to determine, as in the rights. case of Manitoba, with what amount of debt it may enter the Confederation and what you may charge against it. You may charge your public works, as you did against the older provinces, charge the expenditure on public works which took place before Confederation, and you admit that they are entitled to a certain subsidy for their Local Government. How are you going to carry this out? Are you going to make up a bill against the new province by putting in the amounts of which you control the expenditure, and which you will not allow the Legislature of the territory to control? It seems to me that, while we should be careful, where people are not in that state of what I might call organic cohesion which exists in the older provinces, where they consist of a number of separate and But the hon, gentleman can readily see that the Sir John Thompson.

ponding executive power to that which exists in the older provinces, and that power should be exercised under the control of the Legislative Assembly. At present we make no provision for that. We give them powers of legislation, which are of no great value as long as we withhold from them the power of control over their expenditure, which is made for the purpose for which they are allowed to legislate, and in this case I say we place them in a position of helplessness. We limit their authority in a way that we should not and which will cause dissatisfaction.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I do not think this will injure the North-West, because the power will be exercised in Ottawa, and I think the territories are safe, at all events, for three years to come. Had the Lieutenant Governor exercised the power of dissolving the Assembly within the last three years I think that would have ended the difficulty, because the difficulty arose from the existence of the Advisory Board, and if the Advisory Board had been able to advise His Honour to dissolve the House I believe they would have had a majority, and the whole difficulty would have been got over. gard to creating an Executive Council, that is practically granting Provincial Government to the North-West.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. MACDOWALL. It is one of the large steps towards granting executive government. The executive would have the power of direct taxation, the power to raise a revenue and some means of paying themselves. The sentiment of the people of the North-West is against anything approaching responsible government at present.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) One remark with respect to the quotation the Minister of Justice made from the Act, and which seemed to the hon, member for Saskatchewan to answer the argument. The second sub-section of section 4 says:

"The Lieutenant Governor shall administer the Government under instructions from time to time given him by the Governor in Council, or by the Secretary of State of Canada."

So far so good; there is no doubt about that. But as a general rule, and in cases which are not explicitly or expressly defined, where the powers are not expressly marked out by the statute, he is to be controlled by the instructions he gets from Ottawa. But that clause does not refer to powers which are expressly conferred by statute upon the Lieutenant Governor himself, powers which we are conferring here, stating expressly that the Lieutenant Governor should have power to dissolve the Assembly and cause a new one to be chosen. Now, then, the explicit and express powers are not controlled in any sense by the general declaration in the statute, that, speaking generally, he is governed under instructions from Ottawa. The larger power does not minimize, or control, or negative, or override the specific power which we are giving here.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I beg to differ from my hon. friend. I think the very power which is vested in him is, by express terms in this statute, subject to the control of the Government here, and that the Government here is responsible for what he does in so far as he acts under our instructions.

the kind conferred by this Bill will be to give to the Governor instructions as to how he shall exereise powers of that character. Now, with regard to the observations of the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), indicating that this is virtually establishing, in regard to the territories, a parental control, such as the Colonial Office exercises, that is undoubtedly true; that is the system under which the territories have been governed ever since we acquired them, and it is the system which must prevail in every country which has not entire responsible government. It is the system which prevails now in every Crown colony, and the only alternative which my hon, friend can suggest is to have a small executive there with limited power, as he has mentioned. Now, I beg to assure him that this subject has received the greatest consideration and the most careful thought that can be given it, and the experience of the past, as well as careful reflection on the subject from every point of view, has led us to the opinion that it is unwise to confer upon the executive there executive powers and responsibili-If you do that you have, in the first place, a divided executive responsibity; you have an executive responsibility here and you have an executive responsibility there. You have a divided authority likewise, which is an evil of itself; but, above all, the effect of that is to create in the mind of the Territorial Government the impression that while the principle is conceded to them of responsible government they do not enjoy a full measure of liberty.

Mr. AMYOT. With the right of appeal here.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; and people entrusted in that way with partial powers, if the doctrine of self-government is established and the principle recognized, will never submit to be controlled by an appeal from their executive in executive matters; and the effect of it would be simply that you would create an impression that they were not put in the same position as the provinces were, and that only the shadow of authority had been given them. It is better, I think, to retain all the executive powers in one body, and I believe the people of the territories will be better satisfied themselves, and there will be less agitation in the territories if the people are told in a straightforward way at the outset: The time has not come when you can have responsible government; for the present, the greater powers of legislation must remain in the Parliament of Canada, the executive powers must remain in the executive of Canada, and when the time comes to give you provincial powers you shall have them in toto, and you shall stand on the same footing as any other province.

Committee rose: and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill No. 126 to amend the Acts respecting the North-West Territories.

first step to take as regards statutory powers of will be appointed. The absence of such a provision is, in my opinion, a very serious defect in the

> Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are no officers in these small districts.

> Mr. MACDOWALL. It is better to allow some latitude, and to leave the matter in the Lieutenant Governor's hands.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a subject on which the Legislature should have power to legislate. If there is any doubt, we should not tie their hands, so that they cannot make provision legislatively for returning officers. I think the words "unless otherwise provided by the Legislative Assembly of the territories "should be added.

> Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection to add these words, and I will consider the clause carefully.

On section 13,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In that section, is it the intention of the Minister to give power to determine the succession of property and to determine the mode of registration?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is all subject, as you will see by the main section, to any Act of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the Minister is there any difficulty in sub-section 4 about bonds issued by a municipality. Then irrigation companies are excepted, and I think it would be an advantage that they should not be excepted. It may be said that irrigation companies would have to do with the public domain, which is controlled by the Dominion Parliament; but I should think that the territories might have power, subject to certain conditions, to organize irrigation companies.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The incorporation of telephone companies in towns is far less important than some of the other powers we give.

Mr. DAVIN. This sub-section will prevent us giving a charter to a little street railway. I would suggest that the Government would permit the municipalities to have a charter from the Local Government for a short railway.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there any reason why the Government should not give them power, as the provinces have, to incorporate any railway company ?

Mr. MACDOWALL. I think there is good reason, because this House has assumed the incorporation of railway companies in the North-West Territories. Railways in the North-West cannot be built without financial assistance, and this Parliament should have power to charter them until the North-West is able to give the necessary assistance.

Mr. MULOCK. The granting of a charter is one thing and the granting of aid to build railways is another. I should think that the people in the immediate locality would be the best authorities to pronounce in favour of a railway, and the corporation afterwards could appeal for aid to whatever source it liked. I am surprised that a member from the territories should desire to prevent the Legislature incorporating a company. It is a great deal more Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There does not appear expensive for men to come to Ottawa to obtain to be any provision by which the returning officers a charter than it would be if they could obtain it within the limits of their own territory. I can see power; they need not exercise it if they do not like. If I represented a constituency in the territories I would be in favour of having such power given to the territories, trusting to the wisdom of the people that it would be exercised for the public

Mr. MACDOWALL. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman. In the first place, it is not very much cheaper to get incorporation in the North-West Assembly than it is here. They can get a private Bill passed through here just about as cheaply as they could in the Assembly. One object I have in view in saying that this House should keep the power of incorporating these railways is that I think it would teach this Parliament what its responsibilities and duties are to the North-West. incorporation of railway companies is one of the most important things connected with these territories, and I think that when a Bill connected with the incorporation of railway companies passes through this House hon, gentlemen will perhaps appreciate their responsibilities to the territories more than at present.

Mr. TISDALE. There is another objection to this. If this power is given to them they would have to pass a General Railway Act, which would involve very heavy machinery, until they are incorporated into provinces, and we would have another set of railway Acts to come in contact with the Railway Act of the Dominion. I think that until the territories become provinces they should not have this power.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that the power to incorporate Railway Acts in that territory, as long as it remains an undivided territory, would be far more extensive than the power to incorporate a railway in the provinces. You do not know what extent of territory you will assign to a province in that country yet. Suppose you were to make a province of the Saskatchewan district at this moment, the majority of the people living in that district could incorporate a railway extending all the way to the North Saskatchewan, at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. A railway of immense extent could be incorporated in a territory although the vast majority of the inhabitants may reside in a very limited district. I do not think, however, that would apply to tramways, which are in their nature local, and extend to a very short distance; nor do I think it would apply to telephone companies in towns. I do not see why, if you confer any municipal institutions upon them, you should not confer the power to incorporate a telephone You have given them powers implying a much larger degree of responsibility, and it seems to me that powers relating to tramway and telephone companies might safely be entrusted to the Legislature of the territories.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I agree with the hon. member, and there is no objection to striking out the words "tramways and telephones." But I think it advisable that we should keep in our own hands the control of the water powers. That is a very important matter, and I believe that companies will be formed for the development of the water powers there. But until provinces are established in the territories I think we should keep the control of the water powers in our own hands.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. WATSON. I think the arguments used by no possible harm in the territories having that my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) should have some weight, especially with members from the North-West. I was a little surprised to hear the hon, member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) express the opinion that we should curtail the powers of the North-West Council. That body represents the people of the territories, and I think they should have all the powers of a Local Legislature, which they ask for. We can easily understand that a North-West company might wish to organize for the purpose of building a tramway or short railway-

> Mr. MACDOWALL. Tramways are included

> Mr. WATSON,—for the purpose of opening up a coal mine, for instance, or a steamship company for the purpose of owning a steamship. Under this Bill that Legislature will not be able to exercise such powers. What harm could arise from the representatives of the North-West having power to grant the privilege of constructing a railway? I do not agree with the hon, member for Saskatchewan that it is necessary to subsidize every railway in that country. I think men might have sufficient interest there, they might acquire sufficiently large tracts of land or coal-fields, as to justify them in building a railway without coming here for a subsidy; and I would prefer seeing the hon. member for Saskatchewan, with his knowledge of the North-West, showing a disposition not to be tied to the apron strings of the Dominion for somany long years, but rather to have the people of the North-West depend on their own resources, and do their own business in their own way. The provinces have power to grant railway charters, though that power was interfered with for some time, we know with what result. I do not see why the North-West Assembly should not have the same power, and I am rather surprised at an hon, gentleman coming from the North-West wishing that it should not be granted.

> Mr. MACDOWALL. I think I can remove some of the surprise of the hon, member. He represents the small Province of Manitoba, and, when I say the small province, I speak comparatively. The North-West Territories are immense, and, compared with them, the Province of Manitoba is of small area though thickly populated; and it has a much larger revenue, because the total revenue of the North-West Territories, from all territorial sources, does not exceed about $20,000. Therefore, it would be premature to grant the North-West Assembly those extensive powers. It is in the interest of the people of the North-West that we should make the hon. members of this House understand that they are the Provincial Government of the North-West Territories, that upon their shoulders rests the responsibility of aiding the construction of railways in those territories, that they must redeem the responsibilities of the Provincial Government, as well as the Dominion Government, so long as they continue to possess those powers.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that we ought to make provision for the constitution of the Legislative Assembly, for conferring upon it power over its own existence, power to provide for the division of the country into electoral districts, for the qualifications of members and for the qualification of electors.

On section 10,

Mr. DAVIN. I would urge upon the Government that they should consider sub-section 2. The next is a very useful sub-section, and will meet a difficulty which occurred in Calgary, but this subsection will work in this way: The Legislative Assembly is to have power to determine by an ordinance where a deputy sheriff may be appointed, and then it is provided that each sheriff "shall appoint a deputy or deputies at such places within the district" as are determined by the Legislative Assembly. I think the sheriff in Regina has jurisdiction as far as Moose Jaw in the west, and as far as Fort Qu'Appelle and Qu'Appelle Station in the east. Mr. Davidson represents Fort Qu'Appelle, Mr. Sutherland will no doubt again represent Qu'Appelle Station, and Moose Jaw will be represented by another member. Each of these places will urge the Assembly to pass an ordinance compelling the sheriff to appoint a deputy, so that you will have three deputies. Speaking subject to correction, I believe that all over the Dominion the sheriff is only obliged to have one deputy, but here you put this burden on the sheriff at Regina, who is not paid within one-tenth as much as most of the sheriffs throughout This will reduce his income, and the Dominion. the Minister of the Interior, who knows the North-West well, knows what the scanty income of the It will reduce the income of sheriff amounts to. the sheriffs to such a small sum that you cannot get a respectable man to take the office. Let me point out, further, that you are making a provision here for the deputy sheriff giving bonds. The sheriff has given bonds; he is to be responsible for himself, and he is also to be responsible for the deputy sheriff.

Mr. SPROULE. So he is in Ontario.

Mr. DAVIN. Ontario is a very much richer province, and he is only to appoint one deputy. Here he may have to appoint three.

Mr. SPROULE. The deputy gets constables often to do his work.

I dare say he does, but so Mr. DAVIN. does the sheriff get constables in the North-West to help him. But I want to point out that you will reduce the income of a sheriff to about $500 a year, and you will not get a respectable man to take it. Now, if there were four or five centres represented by a member in the Assembly you would have each one of them clamouring to have a deputy appointed. We know the state of things in the territories very well, and we know that if you lay before the members of the Assembly any means of increasing their patronage they will try to do it.

Mr. GILLIES. Would not deputy sheriffs be required?

Mr. DAVIN. Let me give an illustration: He will go to Fort Qu'Appelle, he will go down to Qu'Appelle Station, or to Moose Jaw, but at the same time without being compelled to do it. has a deputy in Moose Jaw, he has a deputy at Fort Qu'Appelle, and at Qu'Appelle Station, and he can take a gentleman engaged in one kind of business or another, pay him a small commission, and | we are going out of our way to allow the Legisla-you make it compulsory to appoint a deputy, then you place somebody in a position to exact a much larger remuneration from him. I never heard that there was any inconvenience; I doubt very much if either of my hon. friends from Alberta (Mr. Davis) or Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) has heard any complaints as to the way the work of the sheriffs has been done in their district. never heard any complaint, and it seems to me to be almost wanton to try to remedy a grievance in regard to which there has been no complaint. I think the difficulty arose in regard to the sheriff in Calgary, who insisted, himself, in going long distances. I think there was some difficulty of that sort, and it was in order to meet that difficulty that this clause has been introduced. I think, myself, that you might devise a sub-section that would prevent any grievance occurring.

Mr. MULOCK How are you going to get along with the incapacity of a sheriff?

Mr. DAVIN. There is a sub-section dealing with that afterwards, in case of a vacancy arising by reason of the sheriff's incapacity or otherwise.

Mr. MULOCK. It says his deputy may perform his duties until his successor is appointed. I am supposing that there is no deputy.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have had a communication from the sheriff in my district since this Bill was printed, and he did not appear to object to the power of appointing deputies, but he did ask that the deputy should be compelled to give security. There is no particular object in that which I can I suppose the sheriff could take security from his deputy when he appointed him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Because he is respon-

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is absolutely neces-

Mr. FLINT. I think there is a great deal of weight in what the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) says. I think that it is almost too hard upon sheriffs to compel them to appoint deputies. I also observe here that the Legislative Assembly is given power to prescribe the duties of the deputies. I should think it would be better that each sheriff should appoint a deputy, leaving it to be inferred that the powers of the deputy are the usual powers of a deputy under the common law, or under any law of this Parliament. But here we give a legislative body power to confer powers upon deputies, which may possibly differ from the powers of the sheriffs them-selves. There is no definition in this Act of the powers of the sheriffs and clerks, and I think the man is ready to act for him. But the minute tive Assembly to define the powers of deputies and clerks. I think myself that the sheriffs are probably the most poorly paid officials, as a rule, in the country, and legislation tending to diminish their revenues ought to be very carefully considered. If the Legislature provides that the sheriffs or clerks may appoint deputies it would be ample to protect them and also to protect the public.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand the Minister of the Interior to state that there are some very large districts over which the sheriff's duties extend, and it was found to be some inconvenience to go to the sheriff whenever it was necessary that that official should be seen, or should be called upon to discharge certain duties, and it is proposed to divide his district into sub-districts, requiring him to appoint deputies in certain portions of the district over which he is sheriff. If that is so, and if it is a choice between requiring the deputy to act and the appointment of a new sheriff, then it might not be possible to leave it as a matter of option with the sheriff to appoint a deputy or not. It might be necessary in the public interest that a deputy sheriff should be named. In this subsection, if it is allowed to stand, I do not think these words are necessary:

"That such powers as are from time to time determined by an ordinance of the Legislative Assembly."

Of course, there are no ordinances any longer. When the Assembly becomes a representative body its Acts are not ordinances, but Acts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are all called ordinances still.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is simply because, as the Minister will remember, there were certain nominated members sitting in the Assembly. The distinction is perfectly clear in law between an ordinance and an Act.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no doubt that that would be a more suitable expression. For three years past there has been no Council, but an Assembly. We have not changed the original Act, which provides that they should be called ordinances

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We should do it now. Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. Let me take a general view of the situation as regards sheriffs and clerks. Dealing first with the remarks of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), I may say that the sheriffs are a little better off in the territories than in some parts of the Dominion, for in the territories, in addition to the fees, which are very liberal, they each receive a salary of $500 a year. During a visit I paid to the North-West I had the same experience as was encountered by every Minister, namely, that at nearly every settlement I heard complaints of delay, of expense and inconvenience in litigation arising from the absence of deputy sheriffs and deputy clerks. They all said: "We want a sheriff; we want a clerk." I explained that the policy was to have a sheriff for each district; but I saw no reason why a deputy sheriff should not be appointed at each place. The North-West Assembly has to enact the sheriffs' fees and to pass an Act regulating the number of deputy sheriffs and deputy clerks, and to provide a scale of remuneration for the officers, and the whole thing is subject to our review. If the Legislative tories. Mr. FLINT.

Assembly should insist on too many deputies and provide too low a scale of fees, the ordinance must be amended or disallowed. But the difficulty presented by the people is a very serious one. Take the district of Alberta, for instance. The sheriff lives in Calgary. If a person in Edmonton desires to have a writ issued he must send the writ down to Calgary to be issued. It is delivered to the sheriff at Calgary, the sheriff sends some one up to Edmonton, and he is paid travelling allowances for the whole distance. When the time comes for judgment he cannot get judgment at Edmonton, but he has to send to Calgary. He must get his execution, and the officer must then travel to Edmonton again. There is no reason why there should not be a deputy at Edmonton capable of serving a writ the moment it is issued, or of issuing execution on the judgment. But to make it effective, there must be a deputy clerk who can issue a writ. When that is done the creditor at Edmonton having a debtor alongside him does not need to go to Calgary, but he can go to the clerk next door and have the writ issued, and can go to the deputy sheriff near by, and he can serve the writ on the debtor immediately. The whole proceeding could be accomplished in a few moments and at very little expense. There would be no cost to the sheriff, but the Local Assembly should provide the way the deputy sheriff should be compensated for the service rendered in serving. When the time came for the creditor in Edmonton to get judgment against a debtor in Edmonton, instead of going to Calgary he goes to the deputy clerk and has execution issued. The execution is en-forced by the deputy sheriff. But in order to carry out that system we must give the Local Assembly power not only to say what they shall be paid, but to prescribe their duties, and unless this is done the deputy clerk would have no power to issue a writ unless he received instructions from the clerk, and the deputy sheriff would have no power unless he received instructions from the sheriff. But we enable the Legislative Assembly to introduce a system which is similar to that prevailing in the provinces.

On section 10,

Mr. FLINT. A sheriff or clerk may have several deputies, and the provision does not say which one shall perform his duties in case of death.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object is to keep alive all their powers in their respective districts. On section 80,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These provisions of the North-West Territories Act were inserted at a time when the powers of the North-West Legislature were very much more limited than they are at present. When we propose to confer upon them the power for the administration of justice in the North-West Territories, as an incident of that power would be the power to establish gaols and lock-ups, and so on; and yet we retain here all the power of providing places of confinment, the same as if the original condition of things was to continue. It seems to me that these provisions of section 80 ought to be considered, and that our legislation should be of a temporary character, and should provide for being superseded by the legislative functions of the Government of the territories.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see that by section 13, sub-section 3, we give the Assembly power to maintain and manage prisons. By this section we simply take concurrent power with them, in view of the fact that they have not the means at their disposal of keeping up the prisons necessary. Besides, the question of expense, the duty devolves upon us for providing for long term prisoners. This sec-tion simply enables us to exercise concurrent powers in keeping up goals and establishing as penitentiaries any building that may be available for that purpose. We have one at Prince Albert and another at Regina, and under powers like these, we will make them both penitentiaries and we take power here to arrange as to the way prisoners should be kept.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister will see that he is taking power here to provide places where prisoners may be detained for trial. That is an ordinary gaol and not a penitentiary. It seems to me that this legislation should be temporary, and that we ought to indicate that our powers are temporary.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We must have power at present, because we must provide the accommo-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Or give them the money to do it, which would seem to me to be the better

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We keep up the police prisons at present and we do all that kind of work. I fancy that for a good many years to come these are the powers under which the prisoners will be taken care of, and not the powers that we give to the Assembly. The whole Act is temporary of course, in view of the fact that ultimately the districts will be formed in provinces.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the Minister knows how much more easy it is to assume expenses of this sort than it is to shift the burden on some one else at a future period; and if we are going to shift the burden, it ought to be clearly indicated. think it would be a more prudent course in the end to furnish the North-West Assembly with the means of establishing gaols and lock-ups where the population is very sparse than it would be to undertake to provide them ourselves.

Mr. FLINT. I see that a change has been made in the wording of clause 80. It formerly said that the Governor in Council "may cause to be erected" these buildings, and this clause simply says that he may direct that any building or buildings shall be a gaol or lock-up.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Instead of erecting a building for the purpose, we may want to use one already erected. But the mere power to erect buildings there is practically useless, because we shall have to come to Parliament for the necessary funds.

On section 17,

Mr. DAVIN. I do not see very well what advantage there is in making this change. It seems to me that it will play entirely into the hands of the North-West Mounted Police. Suppose an informer goes to a policeman, and then the policeman goes and lays the information; the policeman after all it was the informer who brought the guilty act to justice.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The matter has been brought to our notice by one of the judges in the North-West, who represents that there is great difficulty sometimes in ascertaining who the person is who is entitled to the moiety of the penalty. The informer, using the term in its ordinary sense, may be one person or several who give the information on which the proceedings are taken; and as there is often strife as to who should have the moiety, we think it better to say that the person who lays the information shall be entitled to it.

On section 18,

Mr. FLINT. Suppose the person has no money to pay the fine, should there not be some power of imprisonment?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is provided for in the Summary Convictions Act, and the procedure follows that. The change made is simply this: In one of the districts a permit to A.B. to have five gallons of liquor enables C.D. to have it in his custody. If C.D. be a saloon keeper, as he often is, he may have a permit for every letter of the alphabet, and still no permit of his own; and this is to oblige the person who has the liquor to show a permit to himself. It is to make the law as to permits more stringent.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). I would like to explain a case which I have seen happen with my own eyes. Suppose a man has a bottle of brandy, and another man who sees it informs upon him, he will be fined this $200 or go to prison. I think the clause is extreme.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I suppose it is; that is the case with every law. It is easy for any person who is willing to do so, to fabricate evidence or commit perjury. But with regard to all these laws for the punishment of statutory offences, we have to make the possession of the forbidden article primû facie evidence of the guilt of the party. I do not see any other way of doing it.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). The way I see of doing it is to do away with the obnoxious law.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course the Assembly will have power now to deal with that matter; but it seems pretty hard that a hotel-keeper is liable to be punished if the liquor is found upon the person of a guest. The hotel-keeper might be punished and not the man.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The man is on the premises, and the liquor is on the man.

Mr. DAVIN. The man might have liquor in his room, and it would be on the premises of the hotelkeeper

On section 20,

Mr. AMYOT. When I had the honour of addressing a few words to the House on this subject, I quoted some of the clauses of the bill of rights submitted to the Government of the Dominion, concerning the rights and privileges of the minority. I omitted, however, to quote section 10, which says that the transfer by the Hudson's Bay Company to the Government of this country would not pre-judice, in any way, the rights of the people of the North-West. If I understood the hon, member for will get half the fine and not the informer, although | East Grey (Mr. Sproule) rightly, he said that it would not be contrary to the constitution to deprive to-day the French population, the minority in the North-West, of the right to speak French, because the statute incorporating that country to the Dominion is a federal statute.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me, because I never said anything about the French language.

Mr. AMYOT. Then I did not hear sufficiently from my seat what the hon, gentleman said. I am going to draw the attention of the House to a most important question. I humbly submit that we have no right whatever, under the present circumstances, to pass this clause. I admit that the Government, in respecting the rights of the minority as to education, have made a step in the right direction, and I fully endorse their action in that respect. admit also that to preserve the right of the minority to the use of the French language before the courts, is another good feature of the Bill; but they are giving power to a local council to regulate, by ordinance or otherwise, what language they will be pleased to use in their proceedings and the reports of their proceedings. That amounts to saying that this Parliament de facto abolishes the French language, as far as that goes, for, as we well know, the majority there will, on the very first day, declare that the expense and trouble of having their proceedings recorded in both languages will be too great and the French language will be abolished. Moreover, we are admitting a principle I cannot endorse, and which I am sure a great proportion of the people of this Dominion will not support. That is the principle that, at any moment, we may grant to the majority of a province the right to take away the liberties, the franchise and the privileges of the minorities, with regard to education or religion, which amounts to the same thing, and to language. I am opposed to that principle. hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) said he was in favour of provincial autonomy, and wanted to leave to the provinces full control in these matters. I am also an autonomist, but will not go so far as that. I hold that when interests are common, when it is a material question, when the question is one which relates to commerce or civil property, in which the interests of all are homogeneous, every Parliament should have full power, within its jurisdiction, to deal with such questions. no authority should be given to Local Parliaments to decide upon questions of education and language, where the interests are not common, where they are often hostile, and in which it is only by the spirit of Christian philosophy and forbearance these hostile interests of religion and language can exist peacefully together. If you touch those questions, by giving the right to a majority to take away the rights of a minority, you are carrying the principle You are not only giving the of autonomy too far. power of preservation to the local authorities but you are giving them a power of destruction. are giving them power to destroy vested rights, and acting in direct opposition to our constitution, not only to the law of this Parliament but to the law as formulated by the English Parliament. I have already expressed the sentiment, and I am not ashamed to repeat it, and in doing so I speak the sentiment of a great many, that I am first of all Catholic, that I am, in the second place, an English subject speaking French, and that it is only in | inserted in the Bill and supported by the Govern-Mr. AMYOT.

the third place that I am a politician. the interests of my religion are concerned, they take precedence over all other interests. The question of language occupies the second place, and it is only in the third place that I am a politician; and all the interests possible of party will never make me change one of my convictions with regard to the religion or the language of my forefathers. It is all very well to say that a motto of a party is such and such. My motto is, first, that the vested rights of religion and language shall be respected, and to no party in the world shall I submit my convictions in that respect. My religion teaches me to respect the rights and privileges of others, and I will do so; but in return I ask that the privileges, the vested rights, so far as we are concerned, shall be also everywhere respected. In the preamble of the British North America Act, I find these words:

"And whereas it is expedient that provision be made for the eventual admission into the Union of other parts of British North America."

Now, if we refer to clause 146, we find it is there provided that the future admission of provinces must be subject to the provisions of this Act. That is very explicit. It makes the British North America Act apply to the other parts of the Dominion. when admitted as provinces. Now, what do we find? I beg to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to the Statutes of Canada of 1872, in which he will find a copy of the Address of both the Senate and the House of Commons, praying Her Majesty the Queen to issue the proclamation necessary to bring these territories into the Union. We are to-day responsible for what was agreed to by the House of Commons and Senate then, and Parliament then said:

"We most humbly beg to express to Your Majesty that we are willing to assume the duties and obligations of government and legislation as regards these territories; that in the event of Her Majesty's Government agreeing to transfer to Canada jurisdiction and control over the said regions, the Government and Parliament of Canada will be ready to provide that the local rights of any corporation, company or included—"

-"shall be respected."

Do we respect those rights? I say we do not, when we give to the majority the power of taking them away in certain respects, and if we admit the principle once, we commit a wrong that will open the door for future abuses and expose this country to tremendous dangers. If we do that, we will change the spirit of the constitution, the entente formelle, the express agreement, the formal will of the people, and legislate against the interests there We will then see every year claims, protected. either through excessive zeal or other causes, to destroy, one by one, all the guarantees which have been given to us. For my part, I will not propose an amendment. If one is proposed I will vote for it; but I desire to register my protest, and to say that from my point of view we should in no way extend the principle of autonomy so as to give to the majorities the power to take away from the minorities privileges which they enjoy, where their interests are not common but are hostile. ever, I have done my duty, and I will take no further responsibility in the matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The clause as it is ment is not based on any ground of autonomy in regard to the territories. On the contrary, as to the territorial Government, as it is estab-lished either by the original Act or by this Bill, the whole system is temporary, and the provisions of the law now being enacted are temporary. Parliament will have complete control over the whole subject when it lays down the constitution which may be given to any provinces which may be created in the North-West. In the meantime we are simply adopting the terms of the resolution on this subject passed last session, and the language which then received the approval of the House. In fact, this section carefully preserves the language of the resolution of last session, and after the most careful consideration it was then adopted with a degree of unanimity which was very satisfactory in view of the feelings which were likely to be evoked in dealing with a subject of this kind. In addition to the provision that the status quo shall be maintained for the present, there is the provision that, after the next Assembly is elected, the Assembly shall be allowed to regulate its own proceedings as to the language to be used in the Assembly itself, as to the language in which the proceedings shall be recorded and as to the language in which those proceedings shall be circulated. The hon. those proceedings shall be circulated. The hon. gentleman will see that, while it is only a reasonable concession, it is also an inevitable legislative body will concession, because any inevitably regulate the mode in which business shall be conducted, and, if even there were no obligations resting upon any Legislative Assembly to listen to the views of a gentleman who desired to express himself in any other than the English language, I am sure that in this country and in almost any civilized country, the views he desired to so express would be heard with due re-I cited to the House last session, when this matter was under discussion, instances which had occurred to my own knowledge in provinces where there had been no idea of preserving the French tongue by law and yet where that language was heard with as much respect and attention as the English tongue when any gentleman chose to use it. It is also to be observed that we still have a parental hand over the territorial Government and Assembly, and that it is in our power, if at any time the Legislature should not think fit to print the Acts in the French or German or any language required to give complete publicity amongst the settlers in the North-West, to see that that provision is made in the most ample manner.

Mr. AMYOT. I am very much pleased with these remarks of the Minister. I am pleased with his statement that there will be a guarantee in the future, when we want to use the ideas of the framers of the present Bill, and I am not so prejudiced as not to recognize the peculiar circumstances which surrounded the discussion of the Bill of the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) last session. It is not necessary for me to say now. all that I think in regard to this matter, and I am glad to find that this Parliament remains as a safeguard for the rights of the minority. I think we sanctioned a false position last year, and I protested by my vote then, and I now protest by my words against the same error. In Manitoba, in spite of the constitutional principle, the statutes are no more printed in French, though a large man, I think, is performing a somersault too. He number of the population are French. were the majority a few years ago, but they are not so any longer. Is it not the right of those people who contribute their share to the public purse to have the laws of the land published in their own language? I am sure that no court of justice which has any self-respect will declare that this law is not ultra vires according to the laws of this country and according to the laws of England. In the meantime, however, its provisions are carried out. Considering actual circumstances, the declaration of the Minister of Justice is a great satisfaction to me, though I have lodged my protest against the present measure.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is a matter of great satisfaction that this clause has been brought forward. I regret that the Government has not seen its way clear to have also provided that the proceedings before the courts should have been dealt with in the same way as the proceedings in the Legislative Assembly, and that full power in that matter should be given to the North-West Council as it is to the Local Legislatures. We have a much larger French population in Ontario than there will likely be in the North-West Territories for many years to come, and I believe we have found no difficulty or no serious inconvenience from the fact that we have only one official language in the courts in that province. In fact, every man, whether French, English or German—because we have a very large German population in this province also—has experienced no practical difficulty in regard to this matter in the Province of Ontario, and I apprehend there will be no serious difficulty whatever in the North-West. But this matter is one that the provinces have a right to decide for them selves, and the Government is wisely conferring the power upon the North-West Assembly after the next election to exercise that power so far as the proceedings of the Assembly are concerned. Another question which comes up in the same connection and which has been referred to this afternoon is the question of having separate schools, if it is the wish of the people in the locality. is a question, as the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) said in his speech, which is a very large and important one, and I think cannot be fully and freely dealt with at the close of a session such as this. I am gratified by the statement of the Minister of Justice which if I understood it was that Parliament shall have complete and untrammelled power in the future to confer upon those territories the provincial rights which the other provinces possess, to legislate on all those questions, not only as regards language but as regards schools and all other subjects over which Local Legislatures have complete control. I am a little surprised at the action of the hon. member for Bellechase (Mr. Amyot), whom I have heard in this House on so many occasions, asserting the inalienable right of the provinces to legislate in their own interests without being trammelled in any way by the Dominion Parliament, and now taking a complete somersault, and advocating that the provinces should not be given those rights, but that they should be retained by the Dominion Parliament.

The hon. gentle-MILLS. (Bothwell).

forgets that he has just now made a tumble. define the word in the sense in which you use it, it | would be really necessary to make the law conform to the present state of things, which it does not by the use of that word.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will give attention to that before we go into Committee again.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before the Committee rises I would call attention to section 95 in section 18 of the Bill, and to the words "in whose possession or on whose premises any intoxicating liquor or intoxicant of any kind is." The Minister will see that that is not a prima facie presumption of guilt, it is a conclusive presumption, it is one that cannot be explained away by shifting the burden of proof from the party who will be inculpated. He has no permission to show that the liquor did not belong to him, or that it was brought on his premises by some other person. In the criminal law you have a provision that the party in whose permises counterfeit dies are found, is held presumptively guilty, but he is not conclusively guilty. may prove that the dies were brought there by some other person. It seems to me those words would make the guilt conclusive, and the party would not be at liberty to show that the liquor was not his and that it was not brought here by him.

Mr. AMYOT. About the somersault, we may as well settle that question at once, seeing that we are not very much in a hurry. I am surprised that a love for the autonomy of the provinces has arisen so suddenly in the breast of the hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace). He did not seem to understand that question until he had an opportunity to attack the Catholic religion and the French language in the North-West. Then, suddenly he becomes an autonomist; and he understands the full obligation of this Parliament to grant all possible powers to the Local Legislatures. Before that he did not understand it at all. Heretofore he wanted this Parliament to retain every power, and he 'desired that the Local Legislatures should have as little power as possible. he wanted to give equal rights to the Catholics by taking away from them their right to separate schools, and when he wanted to give equal rights to the French people by taking away from them their right to speak French, then he began to understand provincial autonomy. When he perceived that in this Parliament he would have to face one-third of the members of the House, he would have to face the possibility of a division within each party, and that he might endanger his own party, then he found the splendid plan of the autonomy of the provinces, and he said: Let us give to a majority in the North-West, favourable to the sentiments of my heart, a power that we cannot exercise at Ottawa; let us delegate to them such powers that they may be able to do to the Catholics and to the Frenchmen in the North-West that which we are not able to do at Ottawa. If ever there was a somersault performed, the hon, gentleman has performed it very skilfully and very elegantly. I will tell the hon, gentleman Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

We believe that Confederation consists of diverse Chairman, I will ask the Minister of Justice again to give his attention to the use of this word "ordinance." The expression is used all through the Bill, "ordinance" instead of "law," and "ordinance" instead of "law," and "ordinance" instead "enacted." Of course unless you constitution, and within those rights each Legislature must be entirely free and all-powerful within the limits of its jurisdiction. That is the autonomy of the provinces under Confederation. One of the principles of Confederation was that the basis of union would not be infringed upon. What was the spirit of the Act at the opening of the conference? It was that the religion and the language of every subject should be respected. Would the hon. gentleman seriously tell us that if, in the beginning, we had been told that under Confederation some means could be devised and attempted to take away from us the right to speak French or to worship God in the way our conscience dictated-does he suppose that we would ever have consented to join the union? He knows better than that. It is only by hidden ways, by devices which are not avowed, that he tries to reach his object. I am sure that with his good heart, if he perceived that he was doing a real injustice, he would step backwards. sure he will not try to use his influence to take away from a fellow-subject the right to act, or to speak, or to pray as he pleases, and as the sentiment of his heart may inspire him. What would he say if we, in the Province of Quebec, endeavoured to take away from the minority any right that they enjoy as to language or religion? I may tell him that, whether we would be wrong or right, we shall not do it, because we are just. We have learned in our language the laws of nations and the laws of forbearance; and we have learned in our religion the laws of personal property, and that material property is nothing compared to spiritual property. If he loves Confederation, if he loves the British flag, if he desires to form a grand nation on this continent, let him learn to exercise forbearance. Let him tend to the union of the hearts, let him give to everyone the privileges he cherishes, let him grant liberty to every one, and he will see that party differences will be no cause of harm, and that whatever may be the party to which we belong we will be all Canadians, loving each other and fighting in common for the welfare of the whole people.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon, gentleman would practise a little more of the virtues he preaches he would be a little more consistent in his character. There was no proposition made by me that any rights and privileges should be taken from any person. On the contrary, I proposed a recommendation that the people should be given more power to control their own local affairs in accordance with the system prevailing in other provinces, and that a portion of the rights and liberties given to Quebec and other provinces of the Dominion should be given to the people of the North-West Territories. That is a reasonable proposition, and it is one the people will demand and obtain. Although the country is not ready for a complete system of selfgovernment, and the population is not sufficiently numerous to have all the machinery of the Local Government as in other provinces, yet by this Bill the people of the territories will gradually get their rights, and the measure will have to be exwhat we understand by the word "autonomy." I tended still further to give them the right of control over their local matters, the proceedings of their courts, and of their Legislature, and the conduct of their schools. That is all I advocated. If that is an example of want of liberality, of want of Christian spirit and of proper consideration for the feelings of others, I must plead guilty.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I am perfectly ready to agree to the proposition made by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). If Parliament will give to the North-West Territories the same laws as they have imposed on Quebec, we shall be satisfied. The hon, member must know that not only the Imperial Statute has not given to the Province of Quebec the right to prevent part of the population from speaking English, but it has gone further, and created a province within a province by enacting that the limits of 15 counties, in which at that time the majority of the people were Englishspeaking, could not be changed without the consent of the majority of their representatives. Even in the case that the whole of the other 50 members of the Legislative Assembly should consider the change necessary, such a change could not take place without the consent of the majority of those 15 members. Far different is the position in the North-West. Not only is there no French province within the province, but to this day we have been unable to obtain a pledge that any representation would be given to the French element in the Such is the difference at present territories. between the Province of Quebec and the North-West Territories, so far as language is concerned. So far as religious schools are concerned, is the hon. gentleman prepared to give to the territories the same rights and liberties we enjoy in the Province of Quebec? Then give us at once the widest law for separate schools that exists in the Dominion, for such is the school law of the Province of Quebec. The Dominion Parliament has no power to legislate on the question as to the language in which the laws shall be published, or the debates of Parliament conducted both in the Parliament of the Province of Quebec and in the The Imperial Parliament Dominion of Canada. has put these two questions outside of the limit of provincial legislation, and laid down these two principles, which are at the basis of the constitution: the equality of Roman Catholics and Protestants, so far as schools are concerned, and the equality of the French and English-speaking populations, so far as the official languages are concerned. These two fundamental principles we desire to maintain. We want it formally recognized all over the Dominion that those rights now existing, both by usage and by law, shall be preserved, and therefore we protest against the granting to the Legislative Assembly of the territories of the right to abolish the French language, which is established by the constitution, and which cannot be taken away without violating the constitution and destroying the harmony, good-will and happiness of the population of this country.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not desire to move the clause to which I spoke on the second reading, but I ask the Government to kindly consider it. The section I intended to move was as follows:—

The persons qualified to vote at the election for the Legislative Assembly, shall be male British subjects by birth or naturalization (other than unenfranchised Indians, and members of the North-West Mounted Police), who have attained the full age of twenty-one years, who have resided in the North-West Territories for at least twelve months, and in the electoral district for at least three months, respectively, preceding the time of voting. The object of inserting such a clause was to prevent members of the North-West Mounted Police voting for any candidate for the Local Assembly, and I would impress on the Government the reasonableness of this suggestion. Remember, it is a quasi-military body—that the members are shifted from one place to another. These are not the only considerations; they will vote for a candidate for an Assembly which has no power whatever to make laws affecting them. They are outside of its jurisdiction, and yet they can come in and water, so to speak, the stock of the civil vote. At the election in North Regina there were 360 votes given, and of these 80 were police votes, and all were thrown for one candidate, not a single policeman voting for the candidate who was beaten there.

Mr. WALLACE (York). Is the vote by ballot? Mr. DAVIN. No, it is an open vote; but by and-bye it will be vote by ballot. The Assembly will have power to deal with that matter, but not as regards the next election. I do not press my clause, but I ask the Government, as I understand the Bill will remain in Committee, to consider the suggestion and decide whether this clause is necessary or not.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I am sorry to differ from the hon, member for Assiniboia. We all know the members of the North-West Mounted Police are the sons of either Ontario or Quebec farmers who go out there, probably, in the first place, to perfect themselves in military organization and in the next place, to become settlers in that district. If at legislative elections in Ontario farmers' sons have the right to vote, I think the Parliament of this Dominion should grant the North-West Mounted Police the same right; and indeed, I think it would be unfair to take away from them the right to vote they enjoyed in Manitoba, Quebec or Ontario. With all due respect to the member for Assiniboia, I am obliged to differ with him in this respect.

My hon, friend will see that I am Mr. DAVIN. not very particular in pressing the matter. I do not think the members of the police care one pin about having the vote, and so far as I know it is of no advantage to them whatever. If it were any advantage to them I certainly should not wish to take it away. The reason I wish to take it away in regard to Dominion elections is, that it is of no advantage there at all, and they wish to be deprived of it. When they are farmers' sons in Ontario, as farmers' sons the Legislature of Ontario can pass Acts that will affect them; but as members of the Mounted Police, how can this Assembly pass any Act that will affect them? However, as the question is not to be pressed tonight, I will not speak further on the matter.

Mr. TROW. I think the hon member for Algoma (Mr. Macdonell) can speak feelingly in that respect, because I am aware that a very large proportion of those who voted for him were navvies, and have no permanent place of residence, and were from all parts of the Dominion, and many from the United States. I think he, certainly, above all other men, should advocate that.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I say right here to the whip for the Grit party on the other side of the House that he is entirely mistaken in what he says. The electors who voted for me were electors who were on the Dominion voters' lists; they were British subjects; they were twenty-one years of age, and they were entitled to vote.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Louder.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). You need not say "louder," because you can hear me well enough. I defy any man in this House or any man in this country to say that anyone voted for me in the district of Algoma who was not entitled to vote. But, under your one-sided Ontario Election Act, one-half of these individuals were not entitled to vote, whereas under the Dominion Franchise Act any man who is a British subject, twenty-one years of age, in receipt of an income of $150° a year in our district—it is $300 every place else—was entitled to vote. The hon, gentleman says they were navvies; a navvy, as I understand it, and I have some experience in that way, is a man who delves for a He is a man who delves with the shovel, and puts it into a wheelbarrow, and wheels it off to a dump on a railway. That constitutes a navvy, and there was not a navvy in the whole district of Algonia during last election, because there were no railways building there. The men who voted for me were railway men, fishermen, farmers, lumbermen and miners. I tell the hon, the chief whip (Mr. Trow), on the other side of the House, that he is mistaken when he makes the statement that he did just now.

Mr. TROW. The lists were made out years before—

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would point out that this Bill does not apply to Algoma.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment that is proposed by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) will be considered between now and when the Committee meets again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

ADJOURNMENT—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWIGHT. Before that motion is carried, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two with respect to an incident in the debate yesterday. The House will remember that an offer was made to me across the floor, by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, that I should appoint a couple of persons, if I liked, to investigate the names of the persons who had subscribed to a testimonial to him. I desire to say, explicitly, that I made no reference to the Minister of Inland Revenue, or to the testimonial presented to him, because I did not regard the testimonial presented to him as coming substantially within the lines of my resolution. It may have been-I was not aware of it until he mentioned it himself there were a small percentage of those who subscribed to his testimonial who would have been embraced in the resolution that I moved: but I do not think myself that his was a case similar to the others, nor do I believe that he was influenced to the detriment of the ceived. Therefore, I did not then deem it necessary, nor do I think it necessary now, in any shape, for the clearing of the hon. gentleman's character from imputations—which I beg to say I did not at all level at him—that any investigation should be made. It was very right and proper of him to offer it; but I, for my part, did not intend at all to include him within the scope of my remarks.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I think after the statement made by the hon, gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) it is proper that I should express my gratification that he has made this statement. Not only do I consider it satisfactory to myself and my friends, but I think it is one of those incidents that every man in this Parliament must feel pleased at the occurrence of. think it is a pleasant thing that the hon, gentleman, occupying the position that he does on the other side of the House, and during a session of Parliament of considerable excitement and acrimony, should have the fairness to make the statement freeing me from any charges of having been improperly influenced on account of such testimonial. thank him for the very candid expression he has given, clearing me from any imputations which might be made.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. TAYLOR moved:

That the additional evidence reported this day by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts in re Langevin Block, be added to that submitted to the House with the Thirteenth Report of the said Committee, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Seventeenth Report of the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SOMERVILLE moved:

That all accounts for goods furnished to the Public Works Department by H. Bourcier or Bourcier & Co., Ottawa, and cheques for the payment of the same during the years ending 30th June, 1884, 1885 and 1886, be referred to the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not the regular way in which we have been proceeding, The way in which we have proceeded so far in the case of any papers which have not been before the House, is to pass a resolution in the Committee itself, embodying a request to the House that they be referred to the Committee. I think the same course ought to be pursued in this case.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. One reason why I make the motion in this way is, that early in the session I moved a similar motion, and no objection was taken to it; and another reason is, that the session is coming to an end, and I want to expedite matters so as to get at these accounts.

that he was influenced to the detriment of the Mr. FOSTER. It is very true that a motion service by the subscriptions that he might have resimilar to this went through without our under-a report of the Committee can be got at the next

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I object altogether to that statement. A notice may be required, but any member of the House has a right to move to refer any matter to the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. And any member has a right to object.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, object here.

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Committee is subordinate to the House, and yet the hon. gentleman lays down a rule that a request must be submitted by the Committee to this House.

at all. I said that was the practice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I submit that is not the practice, and it ought not to be the practice. I am not a member of that Committee; but it is appointed as a convenience for the discharge of duties that belong to the House as a whole, and any memher of this House who is not a member of that Committee, if he desires to have any matter referred to the Committee, has a right to ask the House to The Committee have no right to intervene. All the references made to the Committee are references made by this House on its constitution. do not appoint a Committee giving it nothing to do, and then ask it to advise the House what business shall be brought before it; and as you do not do that with reference to the accounts of the year, neither do you do that with reference to the accounts of the previous years. It is the right of any member of this House to bring before the House and move its reference to the Committee, any matter not before the Committee: and it is the business of the House, in the discharge of its duties, and in the exercise of its judgment, to say whether it is a proper subject for the Committee to investigate or next meeting, of which I have no doubt, then by That is not for the Committee to decide.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. Minister of Finance has not said it is not competent for the House to make any reference to the Committee which it pleases, but that it is not usual to refer to it accounts of eight years ago which are not in the possession of this House at all. What he says is, that before the House passes that resolution, the Committee should be consulted in regard to it, and I think that is a very salutary practice with reference to papers which are not before this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Objection having been taken, I shall, of course, have to rule that this motion is not in order, notice not having been given of it.

Mr. LAURIER. Before you make that ruling, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. Minister of Finance that this is a practice which might perhaps be characterized as sharp practice at this stage of the session.

Mr. FOSTER. No sharp practice about it.

I say, at this stage of the Mr. LAURIER. session. The hon, gentleman ought to be anxious to facilitate business.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. LAURIER. This is not facilitating business at all. The practice we have followed has been to assume that a report was made by the Committee and France? 2. When was such treaty made, and standing it. There will really be no delay, because on Public Accounts suggesting the production of certain papers, and to have a motion made for their production, waiving the votice. The Committee is not sitting to-day, and my hon friend is anxious to bring something before the Committee; and at this stage of the session, when Parliament has been sitting nearly four months, if we are to proceed and to have prorogation within a reasonable time, it seems to me that every one should be anxious to facilitate business. I do not see that there is any more reason for the hon, gentleman to take the point of order at this stage than there would be if the matter had been already before the Committee. I do not think the hon, gentleman is doing what he might to facilitate business.

Mr. BOWELL. If we are to adhere to the Mr. FOSTER. I do not lay down such a rule Rules of the House, notice should be given for the production of these papers, and after they have been produced and laid on the Table, it will be within the province of any member to move their reference to the Committee. These papers have never been asked for, and if there is any sharp practice at all, it is on the part of the hon. gentleman making the motion. We ought to have a little regard to the Rules of the House, so that no one will be taken by surprise. When hon, gentlemen opposite sat on this side of the House, I never could get a paper unless I moved for it in the House after giving a regular notice; and then when it was laid on the Table, I moved its reference. This motion can only be adopted by our setting aside the Rules and practices of the House.

> Mr. LAURIER. The Rules are made for the public convenience, and they are not to be followed so rigidly that we cannot waive them at times in order to facilitate the public business

> Mr. FOSTER. What I suggest will not keep the hon, gentleman back one hour. Our investigations in the Committee are such as to forestall that motion, and if the Committee passes it at its following the usual practice the hon, gentleman will have his papers in time for the subsequent meetings of the Committee.

> Mr. SOMERVILLE. I moved a similar motion to this before, and no objection was taken, and that is why I move it.

> Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The motion was objected to and stood over by way of notice.

> Mr. SPEAKER. The motion itself is defective, because the hon, gentleman asked that a certain account be referred to the Committee of Public Accounts, and that account is not in possession of the House.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is similar to the motion. I made before, and which went through all right. Motion withdrawn.

Bill (No. 162) to correct a clerical error in the Act 53 Victoria, chapter $1.—(Sir John Thompson.)

COMMERCIAL TREATY BETWEEN ENG-LAND AND FRANCE.

Mr. DEVLIN (for Mr. RIDER) asked, 1. Is there a commercial treaty in force between England how long will it remain in force 3. Are butter, cheese and other farm produce, in virtue of this treaty, admitted into France at lower rate of duties than similar articles coming from countries with which France has no such treaty? 4. Are butter, cheese, pork and lard, when imported direct from Canada, admitted into France at the same rate of duty as similar articles of English production?

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask that this question stand.

Mr. LAURIER. This question has been asked to stand at the request of the Government already five or six times. There ought to be no delay in answering, if the Government are willing to give the information.

Mr. FOSTER. When the question was asked, the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), speaking across the floor, said he doubted whether I would have that information at all. I thought, however, I could get the most of it, but found upon enquiry it was impossible to give full information. I stated that to the House and that I had written to the High Commissioner for full information, which I would place before the House as soon as I received it. That is the only reason why the answer has stood. I have a partial answer here, if I can find it; but I still think it would be well to wait a week or so until I can get full information.

Mr. LAURIER. If you can get it in a week that will be all right.

CONTRACTOR OF CHATHAM POST OFFICE.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked, 1. What is the name and address of the contractor who built the Chatham Post Office? 2. What was the amount of the original contract? 3. What amount was paid for extras upon said building? 4. What was the total cost of the building? 5. How many tendered for the work, and was the lowest tender accepted; if not, why not? 6. From whom was the land purchased upon which the building is erected? 7. What was the price paid for said land?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. John E. Askwith, New Edinburgh, Ontario, is the contractor. $27,640 is the amount of the original contract. Extras paid on contract $1,294.55; stone sidewalk, drain, Post Office and Customs fittings $7,653.75. Total extras. $8,948.30. Total cost, $36,588.30. Four tenders were received. Tenders were received from James H. Oldershaw & Otis B. Hulin, $38,700; John E. Askwith, $27,640; Thomas Sutherland, $37,750; G. & Robert Crain, $21,989; an Order in Council states that, owing to an evident mistake in the tender of Messrs. Crain, they asked to be allowed to withdraw their tender, the withdrawal of their tender was granted and Mr. Askwith accepted. The land was purchased from A. Northwood, $8,000; and James Ronald, $2,500. The total cost of land, $10,500.

WILLIAM BATTELL.

Mr. CAMPBELL (for Mr. Hargraft) asked, 1. When was William Battell appointed clerk of works in respect of the Cobourg Post Office and Custom-house building, and what were his duties? 2. How long did he hold such office? 3. Is he still in such office? 4. What was his salary? How much has been paid him as such salary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. William Battell was appointed 24th September, 1888, and was put in charge of the work on 1st January, 1889. His duties were to be on the work daily during work hours and to see that they were carried out strictly in accordance with plans and specifications, to measure the works and materials so far as to form basis for progress estimates, and to report any matter which might arise in connection with the works during progress. He held office from 1st January, 1889, to 31st March, 1891. He is not still in office. His salary was $75 a month. He was paid at that rate from 1st January, 1889, to 31st March, 1891, $2,025.

DREDGE ST. LAWRENCE-RESTIGOUCHE RIVER:

Mr. BROWN (Chateauguay) (for Mr. Motsselv) asked, I. What work in dredging did the dredge St. Lawrence do in 1887 and 1889 in Restigouche River? 2. How long was she thus employed? 3. At whose request was the dredging made at Dalhousie, for the purpose of making a winter harbour for the SS. Admiral? 4. What was the cost of dredging in the said River Restigouche?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No work was done in In 1888 and 1889, at the request of Messrs. Moffat and Riopel, M.P's., the St. Laurence was brought to the Restigouche and employed in dredg-ing on the traverse between Dalhousie and Campbellville, and whilst there did some dredging between the wharves at Dalhousie at the request of the captain and purser of the steamship Admiral. This latter dredging was done to enable a steamer to winter insafety, and thus accommodate the traffic been repaired by the Dominion Government during later in the autumn and earlier in the spring than could otherwise have been done. The dredge was employed altogether six months during the two years. Cost of dredging at Traverse, $9,008.64; at Dalhousie, $6,543.08.

TAY CANAL.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, 1. Were tenders called for, for the construction of the Tay Canal from the Rideau Canal to the basin in the town of Perth? If so, was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer? 2. What was the amount of the lowest tender? 3. Who was the lowest tenderer?

Mr. BOWELL. Tenders were called for the construction of the Tay Canal from the Rideau Mr. BOWELL. Canal to the east side of Craig Street, in the town of Perth, and the contract was awarded to the lower tender on the recommendation of the late Mr. Page, then Chief Engineer of Canals. The amount of the lowest tender was $186,444. A. F. Manning, and A. P. Macdonald were the lowest tenderers. Tenders were called for the extension of the Tay Canal from the east side of Craig Street to the south side of Peter Street, in the town of Perth. Chief Engineer of Canals, the late Mr. Page (May, 1888) did not recommend that the work be given to the lowest tenderer. The amount of the lowest tender was $44,207.50. Kavanagh, Macdonald & Kavanagh were the lowest tenderers. The contract was given to Messrs. Davis & Sons, by Order in Council 29th May, 1888, at the amount of their tender as extended, $44,457.

MONTREAL CUSTOMS-HOUSE—IRREGU-LARITIES.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Is there an investigation being held, or has such been held recently, in connection with the Montreal Customs house officers? If so, for what reason was it considered necessary to hold such an investigation? Have any irregularities been detected or suspected, of what nature and to what extent? Does the Minister of Customs intend to lay on the Table of the House a report of the investigation before the session closes? If not, why not?

Mr. BOWELL. All the officers are inspected by the inspectors annually or oftener when required. In the present cases, I admit it is necessary to have a special investigation, with a view to better economy in working the office. Two irregularities have been discovered. In one case the officer was behind in the funds. The deficiency has been fully paid, and the officer was dismissed. In the other case, one of the officers from the warehouse was discovered to be behind a small amount. I am not able at present to tell the House how much. He is dead and the deficiency was discovered after he died. Whether I will be prepared to lay the report before the House, which is an unusual thing to do in matters of this kind unless moved for, I am unable to say at present. It depends altogether on the length of the session.

MONTREAL P. O.—LETTER COLLECTING CONTRACT.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (for Mr. McMullen) asked, ing to the sum of $4, when they had not per-Who has the contract for gathering the letters from formed the said journey? 5. What has been the the several boxes in Montreal city? 2. For what cost of the maps, plans and other requisites applied length of time was the contract let? 3. When does it expire? 4. Was the present contractor the lowest tenderer? 5. If not, how did it come that he got the contract? 6. Did a previous contractor give up his contract? If so, why were tenders not asked for the work before letting to the present contractor? 7. The names and amount of each tender, the last time tenders were asked for?

Mr. HAGGAR?. In reply to these questions, I may say: 1. Mr. P. Kennedy. 2. For four years. 3. On the 31st of August instant. 4. No, as tenders were not invited prior to the making of the present contract. 5. The contract preceding the present one was renewed in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 2, section 61 of the Post Office Act. 6. Yes, a previous contractor did give up his contract. Tenders were asked before the contract fell into the hands of the present contractor. 7. The last time tenders invited for this service was in July, 1883, and the following tenders were received at that time :- J. Kennedy, $3,200; P. Martin, $3,285; P. Cosgrove, $3,300; J. Belanger, $3,400; J. MacAlpine, $3,470; J. Heart, $3,483; Patrick Kennedy, $3,600; J. Quin, $3,650; G. Bowie, $3,775. Regarding the awarding of the contract to Mr. P. Kennedy, whose tender stands 8th on the list, it is to be observed that, up to the time when these tenders were called for, the manner in which this service was carried on was the subject of much complaint, and it was recognized that the unsatisfactory character of the service was due to the insufficiency of the amounts for which this service had until that time been undertaken. In order to put the service, if possible, on a satisfactory footing, it was determined to have a special enquiry made as to the competency of each of the tenderers, beginning with the lowest, before the contract was let. The official instructed with this duty reported that though several of those whose tenders were lower on the list than Mr. Kennedy's were responsible men, who would be likely to give every care to the carrying out of the service, still in view of the special nature of the service, and the variety of requirements involved, Mr. Kennedy was the first on the list whom he could recommend. The recommendation made on that occasion has been amply borne out by the manner in which the service has been performed by Mr. Kennedy. It is for the reasons mentioned that Mr. Kennedy's contract has been renewed from time to time as the date of expiration approached.

QUEBEC POSTAL DIVISION.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. LANGELIER) asked, 1. Are the Government aware that Mr. Laberge, assistant postmaster of Quebec, is still practising as a notary?

2. That the said Mr. Laberge is secretary treasurer of St. Roch-Nord?

3. That Mr. F. E. Blondeau, chief railway mail clerk, is acting as Mayor of the Municipal Council of St. Roch-Nord aforesaid?

4. That Mr. Bolduc, Inspector of the Postal Division of Quebec, allowed to certain railway mail clerks, for going to Levis or South Quebec, to label the pigeon-holes, on postal cars, in payment therefor, one night, that is to say, the mileage from 8 o'clock p.m. to 8 o'clock a.m., at one cent per mile, amounting to the sum of $4, when they had not performed the said journey?

5. What has been the cost of the maps, plans and other requisites applied for at the Post Office Department, by Inspector LABOURERS ON THE ALBERTA RAILWAY. Bolduc, in order to carry out the views of Mr. Blondeau in respect of his new system of examination for mail clerks?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to these questions, I have to say: 1. The Government is not aware of the fact, and has reason to believe that the fact is not as alleged. 2. The Government is not aware of the fact, and has reason to believe that the fact is not as alleged. 3. This is understood to be the case, but his hours of official duty are in no way interfered with. 4. The Post Office Inspector states that this was not done. 5. The cost is estimated as not exceeding $200.

POSTMASTER AT SUMMERSIDE.

Mr. PERRY asked, When was Mr. Harry Green, late postmaster at Summerside, P.E.I., dismissed? Why was he dismissed? Who is now postmaster at Summerside? When was the new appointment made, and when did it take effect? What is the salary of the present postmaster? What was the salary of the late postmaster? How many assistants and clerks are now in the office? How many assistants and clerks had the late postmaster? What salaries are the present assistant and clerks getting? What salaries were the assistants and clerks getting under Mr. Green? Is the present postmaster now a civil servant? If so, when did this take place? Is Mr. Green to get a retiring allowance? Did Richard Hunt apply for the office. If so, when? What other applications (if any) where made besides Mr. Hunt's ?

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon, gentleman, I may say that: 1. The departmental order for the removal of Mr. Green is dated 5th August, 1891. 2 Mr. Green was dismissed on account of culpable neglect of duty in connection with the mislaying and detention in his office of a letter posted by Mr. F. H. Arnaud, at Charlottetown, on the 26th of February, 1891, addressed to "Merchants Bank of Halifax, Summerside," his general management of the post office being also very unsatisfactory. 3. The person who has been nominated for the postmastership is Mr. Richard Hunt. 4. The nomination was made on the 5th August, 1891. 5. The transfer of the post office to the charge of Mr. Hunt has not yet been reported. 6. The salary at present attached to the Summerside office is $1,100 a year, with an indemnity of of Pert $80 for forward duty. This is the salary which bridge. the late postmaster had, and which the incoming postmaster will have until the next revision of salaries takes place, when it may be either maintained, increased or diminished, according to the figures before the department. 7. The department is not aware how many assistants are now in the office. The postmaster appoints and pays his own assistants. 8. The late postmaster employed one assistant only, his son Fred. Green. 9. The department has no knowledge as to the salaries allowed or to be allowed to the assistants in the office. 10. The present postmaster is not a civil servant within the meaning of the Civil Service Act, or the Superannuation Act. 11. This did not take place. Green does not receive, and cannot receive, a retiring allowance. 13. Mr. Richard Hunt did not apply for the office. 14. The only application made for the office was from Mr. Fred. Green.

Mr. RINFRET.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron), asked, I. Has the Government paid the labourers on the Alberta Railway Company, the balance due them for work done on the said railway in pursuance of the terms of a mortgage on said railway property, made by the company to the Government in 1886? 2. If so, how much, to whom and when paid? If not, why not?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government, in pursuance of the terms of a mortgage on the said property, paid the president of the Alberta Railway Company the sum of $4,836 on account of the amount due the labourers.

EXTENSION OF THE TAY CANAL.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, I. How many tenders were received by the Government for the construction of the extension of the Tay Canal from the Basin to Haggart's mill, Perth? 2. Who were such tenderers? 3. What was the amount of each tender by quantities? 4. What was the amount of each tender when the quantities were worked out? 5. Did deposit receipts marked "Good" accompany each tender? If so, what was the amount of each cheque? If not, whose tender was not so accompanied by such cheque? 6. Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer? If not, why not? 7. Were any of such cheques forfeited? If so, whose, and why? 8. Do the costs of construction of the new iron swing-bridge to replace the iron bridge form part of the $18,466, the costs of such extension? If not, how much will such new bridge cost?

Mr. BOWELL. 1. Four. 2 and 4. Alian & Fleming, $16,267; J. O'Tool, $18,466; Smith, Wurtele & Co., $19,888; John Nichelson, $23,454. 3. Tenders did not specify quantities. 5. Each of the tenders was accompanied by a cheque for $250 and were certified by the bank on which drawn. 6. The lowest tenderer wrote on the 5th January, 1891, that they had made an error in their figures in earthwork, and asked permission to withdraw, and permission was given by Order in Council dated 16th January, 189!. 7. None of the cheques were forfeited. 8. The cost of the new iron swingbridge does not form part of the $18,466. The cost of the new iron swing-bridge is $3,987. The town of Perth has paid $4,000 towards the cost of the WHARF AT EDGETT'S LANDING, N.B.

Mr. BORDEN (for Mr. King) asked, Whether the ballast wharf at Edgett's Landing, Albert County, N.E., has been let by contract? If so, who was the contractor, and what was the price agreed on? Is the work now being carried on by the contractor or otherwise? If otherwise, who has been named to superintend the work and what rate of wages is paid him? Has there been more than one person employed as superintendent, timekeeper, or in any other capacity than labourer? If so, who is he and what wages does he receive? When is it expected. the work will be completed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On the 15th January, 1889, a contract was entered into with Mesars. Wallace & Derry for the construction of a ballast wherf at Edgett's Landing, for the sum of $4,386, the inspector of works being J. W. Steeves at $2.50 per day. The appointment was made on the 25th September, 1889. An Order in Council was passed cancelling Wallace & Derry's contract. The reason of the failure of Mr. Wallace to carry on his contract was ill-health. The work was continued by day's labour under charge of W. H. Cross, as foreman of work, who was paid at the rate of $3 per day. No timekeeper or other superintendent were employed. Carpenters and labourers were engaged as required; expenters' wages being $1.75 per day, labourers, $1.25. It is expected that the work will be completed before next winter.

THE OLD WALLS OF QUEBEC.

Mr. AMYOT asked, Whether the Government of Canada has received a petition from the corporation of the city of Quebec, or from the citizens of Quebec, asking that a passage be made through the old walls of Quebec, in order to permit of the prolongation of McMahon Street as far as Richelieu Street? Has the Government any intention of granting the necessary authority for carrying this out, and when! Does the Government consider the old walls of the present fortifications of the city of Quebec! (exclusive of the Citadel) as necessary or even useful for the defence of the city, or does it consider them as relies of the past?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON: The petition referred to above was fyled in the Department of Militia on the 10th March, 1883. Mr. AMYOT asked, 1. How many students, graduated from the Military College at Kingston, are now employed as civil or military engineers in Canada? 2. What are the names of those who are thus employed? 3. Is it the intention of the Government to keep up the Military College at Kingston, at its present cost to the country?

It is the intention of the Government to keep up the Royal Military College, and an estimate is now before Parliament for that purpose.

P. E. I.—OYSTER BEDS.

Mr. PERRY (for Mr. Davies, P.E.I.) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to lease all or any of the oyster beds of Prince Edward Island to private parties or companies? If so, what beds is it proposed to lease, and to whom, and for what rent or on what terms?

Mr. TUPPER. Numerous applications from Prince Edward Island for licenses or leases, under section 21, sub-section 4 of the Fisheries Act, are now under consideration. None have yet been granted. It is not proposed to lease beds now based by the public, but rather those exhausted from over fishing in the past.

P. E. I.—FISHERY WARDENS.

Mr. PERRY (for Mr. Davies, P. E. I.) asked. Have all or any of the fishery wardens in Prince Edward Island been relieved of their offices? If any have been so relieved, what are their names and what salaries did they draw respectively, and what means are being adopted for the protection of the fishing rivers of which the discharged wardens were the supposed guardians?

Mr. TUPPER. The services of the fishery wardens in the various counties of Prince Edward Island were dispensed with and special guardians will be employed from time to time, when required, in accordance with the terms of an Order in Council of 15th November, 1890, as is done in other fishery districts in Canada.

. POSTMASTER AT LYSTER.

Mr. RINFRET asked, Did the postmaster of Lyster resign his position, or was he dismissed therefrom? If he was dismissed, what were the are now employed as civil or military engineers in reasons? Why does the department no longer perBaptiste Houle?

Mr. HAGGART. The postmaster of Lyster, M. C. King, resigned the postmastership on the 21st June, 1891. The arrangement under which correspondence intended for the post was left at the house of Mr. J. B. Houle, Lyster, was not authorized by this department, but seems to have been made by the postmaster of Lyster, with a view to meeting the convenience of the public at that end of the village, the postmaster's own office being located at the other end. Then the Lyster office was removed to a point near the church, and in the centre of the village, all necessity for continuing the arrangement in question is believed to have

MIMINIGASH BREAKWATER, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is the work on the Miminigash breakwater, Prince Edward Island, going on? Has the contractor given up the contract? If so, when, and has the Department of Public Works advertised for new tenders? Has any work been done to said breakwater since the 1st April last? If so, what is the nature of the work and to what amount? Have the department a report from the resident engineer on said work, since 1st April last? If not, why not?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The work is not going No contract was entered into, because Mr. Alex. Macdonald, whose tender was the lowest, refused to sign the contract. New tenders have not been called for, as the season is not a proper one for procuring timber. No work has been done since 12th April last, and no report has been furnished, because there is nothing on which to report.

CHAMBLY CANAL

Mr. BROWN (Chateauguay) (for Mr. Moner) asked. Whether the Government gave out any contract for furnishing, breaking and spreading the stone placed in the bed of the Chambly Canal since 1887? To whom did the Government award such contract or contracts? Was the work done by the original contractors, or by sub-contractors? How many toise of stone were to have been placed, and how many were placed in the said canal, under What amount of such contract or contracts? money has been paid by the Government for the said work?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government have not given any contract for furnishing, breaking, and spreading stone in the bed of the Chambly Canal since 1887, nor has any stone been placed in the bed lowed? of the canal.

CUSTOMS SEIZURES.

Mr. TRUAX asked, Is the following item in the Auditor General's Report, page A-43, for the year 1888, correct? "McNamara, M., Customs, subcollector, Walkerton, share of Customs seizures, $236.44." If correct, what service did Mr. Mc-Namara render for it?

The amount referred to is cor Mr. BOWELL. rect and was paid him as his share, under Customs Mr. RINFRET.

Isaac Burpee, then Minister of Customs, viz., seizure No. 420,223, amount of penalty, $1,043,75; amount awarded to him, $231.94. P. E. 1,691, penalty, $9 -amount awarded to him $4.50; making the total of $236.44 as shown in the Auditor General's Report.

COMMISSIONS-MILITARY COLLEGE.

Mr. DAVIN asked, Whether, when vacancies occur in the permanent corps, they are offered to graduates of Kingston Military College. If not, why not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Some commissions are given to gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military College and others to members of the present militia force. The department has considered that the force should be represented on the permanent corps for past valuable services.

NOVA SCOTIA CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked, Did the Government grant a subsidy to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company? If so, what was the total amount of such subsidy? What payments have been made on account thereof? What was the date of each payment and the amount of such payment? Has the whole subsidy been paid?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government did grant a subsidy to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company by 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, a sum not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding on the whole, $108,800. By 51 Victoria, chapter 4, a sum not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding on the whole $147,200 were granted; or a total of $256,000. Payments have been made to the amount The date and amount of each payof $222,400. ment was as follows, viz.: 31st July, 1889, $14,000; 19th September, 1889, $44,300; 2nd November, 1889, $42,000: 18th December, 1889, $30,910: 18th January, 1890, $27,580; 24th August, 1890, $10,-300; 7th August, 1891, $3,300. To the fifth question I reply, no. The length of the road is 731 miles, which at $3,200 amounts to $235,200; amount paid, 222,400; unearned, $12,800.

OWEN SOUND HARBOUR.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked, What changes were made in the specifications for the contract for the Owen Sound harbour improvements after it had been let to the present contractors, Porter, Reid & Carman, and what difference in the cost was al-

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No changes have been made.

KINGSTON GRAVING DOCK.

Mr. AMYOT. Before the Orders of the Day are called I beg to call the attention of the Government to the fact that the final estimate or at least the last progressive estimate in the matter of the Kingston graving dock has not yet been brought down. I went to the department this morning and asked the officer present if he would send the Act and regulations, of penalties imposed in redocuments over to the Minister who is acting for seizures, in which he was interested, as one of the late Minister of Public Works, so that we might have it in time for the discussion. down all the original documents, but we have not of oats. the final estimates of that work, although it is about being completed. If the final estimate is not brought down we should have at least the progress; estimates, because that will be absolutely necessary. Neither have we the quantities upon which the! extra work to the entrance, amounting to $34,000 or thereabouts, have been expended, and we shall want that too. If we had these documents we would have the record complete as it has been promised to this House. I hope that the Government, as now the House has ordered, will be produced immediately.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will send at once to the proper officer and ask him about the papers, THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 158) to authorize the sale of the Carleton, City of St. John, Branch Railway. - (Mr. Foster.) Bill (No. 150) to amend the Acts respecting the Harbour of Pictou, N.S.-(Mr. Tupper.)

BOUNTY ON BEET-ROOT SUGAR.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution providing for the payment of a bounty on beet-root sugar.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Chairman, I think it would be well if we had some vindication of a resolution of this sort before it was submitted to the Committee. The hon, gentleman, when he gave notice of a resolution proposing to pay a bounty for an agricultural production, ought to have given the House some information upon the subject, to show why this particular branch of industry should be gone into; in what particulars he expected the agricultural population would gain by it, and if it were a profitable product to introduce into this country why it was necessary to make it an exception to ordinary agricultural products and to impose burdens upon other industrial occupations in the country in order that it might be sustained. I may say for myself that I am opposed to the granting of any such bounties, but I am not more opposed to it with regard to an agricultural product, than I am with regard to products of any other kind. It is impossible that you can take moneys out of the public treasury and hand them over to any person for the purpose of producing any particular article, without, to the same extent, taxing the industrial pursuits of the population. If you give a bounty for the production of beets, you are imposing a tax upon the production of wheat, of turnips, of cattle, of wool, of mutton, and of every other agricultural product in the country, and I know no reason why the one should be discouraged by taxation and the other encouraged by the offer of bounties. That is precisely what the hon, gentleman proposes. Now, if agriculture which, in order to be profitable, must the production of beets for the purpose of being be accompanied by the conversion into distilled manufactured into sugar is a profitable branch of spirits of a large portion of the product that cannot agriculture, there is no more propriety in giving be converted into sugar. For this where are you

The ex-1 the producer of beets a bounty, than there is in Minister of Public Works had promised to bring giving it to the producers of cabbage, of barley, or They all stand exactly upon the same footing: there is no difference between them, and the hon, gentleman, by imposing this duty, puts impediments in the way of removing burdens of another character. I hold that our right of taxation is a right conferred upon us for the purpose of raising funds for the ordinary expenses of the Government, and that every attempt to go beyond that and to interfere with the industrial freedom of the population, is an utter abuse of the authority of the Government as it is an abuse of the authority of constituted, will see that these documents, which this Parliament. If the production of beets is more profitable than the production of barley, or of oats, or the raising of cattle or horses, then agriculturists will turn their attention in that direction. They do not require a special bounty to enable them to do so; they do not require special interference of the Government to enable them to accomplish that object. The Government here have the right to raise taxes to pay the salaries of the public officers who are necessary to carry on the public business. have the right to raise taxes to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, but this is not an ordinary expense or function of the Government. The care of the agricultural population, of property and civil rights, are not placed under our protection or under our authority. We grossly abuse the authority of the Government when we impose Customs taxes to encourage people to engage in unprofitable manufactures. We have misdirected an immense amount of capital in this country: we have misdirected capital in the manufacture of cotton, until if all the cotton mills were run to-day they would produce twice the amount of cotton for which we could find a market in the country. That is one of the effects you produced. Then, also, you have combines for the purpose of keeping up the prices and for closing certain establishments, and dividing the profit of those who labour with those who do nothing. share alike, and that is done in order to counteract the effect of the mischievous policy that has been indulged in by this Government during the past thirteen years. Now you propose to extend that system; you propose to reach a certain class of the agricultural population. Certain persons have a craze for the production of the augur beet in this country, assuming that it is going to be a profitable branch of agriculture, and if it is, farmers will turn their attention in that direction. If you can show them that the production of an article is especially profitable they will engage in the production of that article. But you have to do a number of other things in connection with the manufacture of beet-root sugar. On the continent of Europe a portion of the refuse beets is used for the feeding of stock, but another and a large portion is used for the purpose of distillation, being converted into methylated spirits—a policy which you have agreed by a resolution of this House to appoint a commission to put an end to if possible; and you propose to introduce a branch of agriculture into this country by granting special favours to it that are conferred upon no other branch of agriculture—a branch of going to obtain a market? You propose to promote temperance and prohibition; you propose to discourage the consumption of distilled spirits; and still you propose to encourage the population to engage in a kind of agriculture which is necessarily associated with it, and which must be associated with it, if it is to be made at all profitable. Sir, I speak for myself: I say I am opposed to this principle of granting bounties. I am anxious that every class of our population should engage in whatever they can make profitable, and that they should engage in that without taxing any other portion of the community to maintain them-that they should engage in it without the special encouragement or discouragement of the Government. Let the Parliament of this country keep its hands off the industrial oc-cupations of the people, and let every man assume the responsibility of engaging in that business which he himself believes to be most beneficial to his own interests, whether it be stock-raising, or the production of grain, or fruit or beet-roots, or anything else he chooses; let him be free to engage in it upon his own responsibility. I am opposed to the imposition of a tax of one dollar for any other purpose than the purpose of revenue. We have introduced another system. encouraged people to engage in profitless enterprises; we have stimulated the misdirection of capital; but let us cease. Let us put an end to that policy; let us travel that road no further. do not say that we ought to wipe out instantly all the incidental protection which has been given to certain enterprises which have already been established; but I say that the sooner it can be withdrawn, with a due regard to these interests, the better it will be for all classes of our people. You have not diversified industry to the extent of a single new occupation by what you have done; people have followed in the same grooves that they were in before; but you have taken from certain industries of the country millions of dollars and turned them in other directions in which no market can be found, and the result is that you have a fitful pursuit of those industries; you have thousands of people left at times without employment and sustained at the expense of the rest of the population; you have industries called into existence to a large extent that would have otherwise existed to a very small extent, and you have denuded the rural districts of their population, to remove them into towns where they are less profitably employed, either for themselves or the country at large. You diminish enormously the value of real estate by the policy which you have pursued, and if you continue that policy you will bring still greater calamities upon the people.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not going to follow my hon. friend in his rather wide range upon this simple and single resolution. The hon, gentleman has taken an opportunity of again declaring his undying opposition to everything protective, and announced his resolution—in which I suppose he has fortified his party—of destroying as soon as possible every vestige of duty which is at all protective in this country, and bringing himself and the country down to a simple tariff for revenue purposes. Well, if the hon, gentleman wishes to accentuate that position again, and make his declaration of faith here for the hundreth time, I am not going to quarrel Mr. Mills (Bothwell).

with him. The quarrel will be between the people and my hon. friend, and not between my hon. friend and myself. He has also taken occasion to deprecate the introduction of a system of bounty for this particular industry. Now, I am going to confine myself entirely to this particular resolution, and to saying simply and frankly what has induced the Government to extend this resolution in the way It is to be borne in mind, in the first place, that the resolution as I introduced it at first, made provision for the payment of a bounty for sugar produced from the beet for one year only, to an amount exactly equivalent to the protection it would have had if the duty on raw sugar brought into this country had not been removed. It will be within the memory of the House that at that time I stated that neither myself nor the Government bound ourselves to the bounty system for the encouragement of the cultivation of the beet-root in this country. Since that time, however, a good many views have been brought to the attention of the Government, and have been urged with more or less force; and it is in consequence of those views, largely from the Province of Quebec, but from sections of Ontario as well, that the Government has been induced to enlarge the resolution to the extent of one year, so that a bounty, exactly equivalent to the protection that would have been had if the duty on raw sugars had been maintained, shall be given to sugars produced from the beet for two years instead of one. The reasons which have led the Government to this action are these: For ten or twelve years in the Province of Quebec experiments have been made, not only in the cultivation of the beet, but as well in the production of sugar from the beet. It is claimed that, as in the case of all new industries—and more so for certain reasons in this than in most other industries—these different experiments have not been attended with success; nor have they, at least up to within a short time ago, been conducted upon a sufficiently satisfactory footing to be relied upon as a test. We simply recommended enough at the time I introduced my resolution to keep from loss to the extent of the bounty, on the operations which had been undertaken on the faith of the tariff law as it stood for the present year. It has been represented, however, that the fact that we only extended it for a single year, actually prevented the possibility of the farmers receiving a due equivalent for this year, because they say that, unless there is a hope held out to them, for a succeeding year's planting they would not take sufficient interest in cultivating beets for this year; and that, consequently, those who were working the factory or factories would not be in so good a position, to prove their capabilities, and would have been, probably, under the necessity of giving up the whole venture for this present It has also been represented that it is possible to make the cultivation of the beet, and the producton of sugar from it, successful in this country; that under a new method and under different management they have brought the experiment where they believe they can prove it to have a successful outcome, and that, if the opportunity is afforded in this and a succeeding year, that at least can be proved, under what they say to be a good and fair condition for the test. It is asserted and I believe bec, having just as strong a proportion of sac-charine, and being just as good a beet as can be raised in any one of the states of the United States, with possibly the exception of California, and to raise a beet of a quality, both in strength and other ingredients, equal to what is raised in Europe, where the beet-root industry is carried on to a very large extent. If by the operations of this year and next it can be satisfactorily proved that the beet-root sugar can be economically made from the beet of this country, that information ought to be had, and Parliament should have a chance of digesting that before pronouncing ultimately and irrevocably upon the system of bounty for beet-root sugar; and it is with this purpose in view that conditions should be kept as favourable as they assert they are at present in the work and operations of the factories at work in the Province of Quebec, by assuring to the farmer the fact that he will have another year's crop and that the seed can be distributed, as it has to be, early in the fall of this year, in order that he should have planting and work next year. It is with the view of preserving these conditions and to have a successful experiment, as conducted upon these two conditions, represented to Parliament, so that it can be seized of the facts, experimentally in this country as well as experimentally and theoretically in the other countries of the world. We propose in the meantime, in view of the strong representations that have been made, to have a thorough enquiry into the cultivation of the beet and the prospects for its economical culture, and the making of beet-root sugar from it in this country, and to have this investigation conducted by Professor Saunders, of the Experimental Farm, a thoroughly competent man, and to have the result of his researches put before Parliament at its next session, so that Parliament, next session, may be seized of all the facts in the case, not only in other countries, but in Canada, and then make up its mind as to what it will do. In the meantime, we propose to continue this system for two years in order to keep the industry in practical operation as it is to-day, and also give a chance of proving, if possible, that we can economically manufacture the sugar from the beet as raised in the Province of Quebec.

An hon. MEMBER. How long have they been making sugar from beets in Canada?

Mr. FOSTER. Experiments have been carried on more or less fitfully, probably, ten or twelve years in the Province of Quebec, so far as I am informed.

Mr. MULOCK. If I understood the hon. Minister of Finance rightly, representations had been made in Ontario especially in favour of this legislation. Would the hon. Minister state from whom those representations came?

Mr. FOSTER. I have most of the correspondence, I think, in my office. The hon, gentleman is probably aware that the Guelph experimental farm has been conducting experiments for a couple of years in beet culture, has been disseminating seed and collecting samples and analyzing them, and has issued a pamphlet embodying the results, which results are very satisfactory, so far as the quality of the beet and the percentage of saccharine matter obtained are concerned. He is also, no doubt, aware, that a company has been pardon. I made no such statement.

formed with a large capital for the purpose of starting factories and carrying on the beet-root sugar industry in Ontario. It is in connection with this that the correspondence has taken place from the Province of Ontario.

Mr. MULOCK. Then we are to understand that the Ontario representations came from the proposed company?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I should be glad if an industry such as this could acquire a good foothold in Canada, but having myself enquired into the experiments made, I came to the conclusion that whilst in Europe, where the beet is cultivated largely by means of child labour and cheap labour, it might be possible to produce the beet-root economically, I doubt if in Canada it can be so produced. I think the manufactory in question, to which the hon. Minister of Finance alluded, published a statement to the farming community, and in that statement asserted that the farmers need not expect a higher price than $5 a ton for the beet, and described the kind of beet that alone was suitable. If that statement was correct, it appears to me you are endeavouring to divert the labour of the farmer into an unprofitable channel. The experiment may have that result. Certainly there is no money in the ordinary farmer raising beets, such as are required for the manufacturing of sugar at $5 a ton. The beet in question is a small plant, not attaining greater weight than from one to two pounds, and I am told that it cannot be grown at that price. The experiments in the Province of Quebec have proved, financially, disastrous to all concerned. The company in question, which is now transferring its operations to Ontario failed in the Province of Quebec, or rather the predecessor of the present company, whose plant I believe the present company has acquired. That company had its headquarters in the County of Berthier, and it is the one I referred to which published the pamphlet.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am not surprised at the remarks of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills); he belongs to that class of political economists who say: "Perish the country rather than a principle." The principle must remain. It is well known that school of political economy is fast disappearing even in England, and I am sorry to say that the depression which is prevailing in the manufacturing districts of England will be a very important ingredient in causing that school to disappear more quickly than it would by ordinary process. I know that my hon, friend is logical. It is a good thing to be logical sometimes, but it is a great fault to be too logical. It is said of our French theorists that they are too logical, and that if they would follow the example of their brothers on the other side of the Channel, and adopt their constitution, which is not always logical but very practical, they would fare better. I think this question is one which must be taken only with a practical view. The hon member who has just spoken said that his experience in this country has proved that the beet which should be cultivated for the manufacture of sugar cannot be cultivated with

Mr. MULOCK. I beg the hon. gentleman's

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon, friend said that if the beet was to be sold at $5 a ton, that would not pay the farmer. I may tell my hon. friend that it would be only necessary to sell it at $4.50 per ton to make it a first-class agricultural pursuit.

Mr. DEVLIN. It was the Minister of Finance who said that, during his mission to the West Indies.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am speaking to my hon. friend who preceded me. The Government of Quebec, who are political friends of our hon. friends on the other side, have, as I think very wisely, given a bonus of 50 cents a ton to the farmers for the encouragement of the growth of beet for the production of beet-root sugar. With that bonus, and the price of $4.50 per ton, I am in a position to assert, and the facts are there to show, that it would be one of the best paying articles to be cultivated in this country.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is not the hon. gentleman informed that at West Farnham $4.50 a ton was paid to the farmers for one or two years, and that they gave up the cultivation of the beet in disgust, and said it would not pay at all?

I am not at all informed of Mr. CHAPLEAU. that, and I find that the manager of the Farnham manufactory says he is informed that farmers who would cultivate the beet and get $4.50 per ton would find it very profitable, and that he is sure to get all the beet he requires.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the yield per acre?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I cannot say exactly, but I think it is between 12 and 15 tons per acre. question has been raised, can this beet be cultivated profitably and in such a way as to give profitable results in our country? My hon, friend says that it may be cultivated in Europe, where the work of children and women can be utilized. I do not see why it cannot be done here. I know the price in our country is a little higher than the price of that kind of labour can be secured for in Europe, but the experiment has been tried and promises to be a success. My hon, friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) said that the experiment has been left by the farmers of Quebec in disgust and that they are trying a new field of operation in Ontario. My hon. friend only states half the facts. The beet sugar manufactory of Berthier has not succeeded, probably more because of mismanagement than of any difficulty in the way of the cultivation of the beet, though I admit the difficulty is great and that the farmer most be taught the cultivation of that article. But, though the Berthier beet-root sugar manufactory has not been successful, hopes of success are still entertained, and I am in a position to state that the reverse is true in regard to the Missisquoi (Farnham) beet-root sugar manufactory, and I have letters on that subject from those who have been advancing money on it; these are men, who understand what they are doing, capitalists of Europe already engaged in that industry, who say that it is in a fair way to success. The difficulties attending the cultivation were great. Those who were attending to the industry at Farnham knew that, and though last year there was a deficit in the financial operations of the season, still they are satisfied that, speaking of the point of view of the industrial possibility of the enterprise it was a success. who have not tried it, but it is asked by those who. Mr. CHAPLEAU.

Why should not we have the same advantage in this respect as other countries have had? Where is the man who is acquainted with political economy and who has any acquaintance with the "Wealth of Nations" who would not say that France has succeeded in this matter mainly because of her giving this protection, which began during the first empire? Forty millions of francs were first given as a bonus for the first four manufactories of beet-root sugar in France. gave an immense impetus to the manufacture in France, and to day the revenue derived from that industry is one of the largest sources of revenue which the Government of France possesses. Who will say that Germany has not accomplished a great feat, after twelve or fifteen years of experimental sacrifice, in creating the beet-root sugar manufacture? Who will say that Russia has not succeeded in also increasing a great deal the wealth and the agricultural industry of its population by the encouragement of the beet-root cultivation and the creation of the beet-root manufacture? But my hon. friends opposite, who are clamouring that we should imitate our neighbours to the south and should do what the Americans are doing, who contend that they are a wise people in political economy and that we understand nothing about it if we do not go after American rules, should be asked what have our American cousins done in reference to beetroot sugar? They have done exactly the same thing which is proposed here with reference to the encouragement of the cultivation of beet-root and of the manufacture of beet-root sugar and of the manufacture of sugar generally. While last year they adopted a tariff which those hon. gentlemen opposite said we were forced to imitate, when they abolished the duty on raw sugar they gave a bounty of about 2 cents a pound on beet-root sugar manufactured in the United States. As my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has said, this Government does not wish to go further, at all events for the present, than to give a two years' bounty in favour of that new industry. The member for Bothwell asks why, if we give a bounty on beet-root sugar, we should not give a bounty upon barley, or upon cabbage, or upon wheat, or any grain or vegetable? I say we do protect them, because we impose duties on those articles when they come from a foreign country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you do not give them bounties.

CHAPLEAU—but do not admit free of duty the products of similar articles. If the farmers of this country seriously engage in the production of beet-root, and thereby ameliorate their condition, who will say this is not a wise thing for the Government to do? My hon. friends opposite, who were always the high-speaking and loud apostles of the agriculturists, should not deny that this is one measure which is asked for by the agriculturists of this country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend from Bothwell says "no."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is asked by the manufacturers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It may not be asked by those have tried it. The experiment which has been tried in the Province of Quebec is not discouraging—far from it. In France the difficulties in that industry lasted more than 20 years; in Germany they lasted more than 12 years; in Russia they lasted 10 years. But after the results were obtained they were found to be beneficial to the country. Minister of Finance has stated that the Government did not at first want to do more than to give encouragement during one year, but we have extended the time to two years, because the operations of those engaged in that industry require at least two years protection, and we are giving it. If the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) should make a motion to blame the Government for this policy I think he would see the ranks of his followers somewhat thinned off. When he spoke I was sorry not to see the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) in his seat to answer his arguments, because the hon, member for Berthier has studied this question and knows something about it. We went into this matter as an experiment, and I would like very well to see that culture prove a success, as it can be proved to be a success, and very useful to the agricultural class of this country. Then, even if the Governclass of this country. ment were obliged to make the sacrifice in favour of that industry, I would carry protection that

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he can reconcile all that he has just said with the statement alleged to have been made by the Minister of Finance to the planters in the West Indies, that the cultivation of the beetroot never had been made a success in Canada.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The Minister of Finance said there had been an experiment, that experiment had been a hard one, and, so far, it has not been very successful. Out of three manufactories established in the Province of Quebec, I know of one that, so far, has shown progress in that direction. The manufactory at Coaticook has failed; the manufactory at Berthier has failed, but more from mismanagement than from causes inherent in the culture. The manufactory at Farnham is now in a fair way of success, and if the farmers continue to encourage it, as it is now being encouraged, I think it will prove a success and be followed elsewhere.

Mr. DEVLIN. That does not answer the whole question. The Minister of Finance said positively, if I am not mistaken, that it "never"—that was the word used—never could be a success.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon, gentleman wants to know he had better ask the Finance Minister.

Mr. McNEILL. I understood the Minister of Finance to say a few minutes ago that he had obtained some information recently on this subject of which he was not in possession some time ago. Probably the information that he has recently obtained has enabled him to arrive at a more accurate conclusion than he had arrived at before. I hold in my hand the report of the experimental farm for 1890, and I find that according to Professor Saunders the yield of beet-roots has varied from 15 tons 400 pounds, to 35 tons 950 pounds per acre. I think if our farmers could raise the sugar beet to the extent of 35 tons per acre, and get $4.50 or $5 for it, it would be a very profitable crop for them.

Every one who knows anything about farming knows that there is probably nothing which a farmer, who has not tried it before, is more likely to fail in, than an attempt to raise roots. Roots are a crop which, until recent years, have been very little cultivated in Canada; it is only within the last 10 or 15 years that they have been cultivated to any considerable extent. Every one who has had any practical experience in farming knows that the farmer has to learn how to grow roots before he can grow them successfully. The cultivation of roots is something very different from the cultivation of wheat or pease, or any crop of that kind that the farmers are in the habit of growing when they first break up their land. I believe when they first clear up land, and when the land is broken for the first time, roots are very often grown broadcast upon it. But that, of course, is not at all the system of cultivation that has to be adopted later on. It is no argument whatever against the cultivation of the sugar beet in Canada to say that farmers have failed in growing it; some farmers will fail in growing a certain crop, and other farmers will succeed. The question is, not whether farmers have failed, but whether their experiments have proved that it can or cannot be grown with success, and we understand now that farmers have proved that it can be grown with success. By this report I have in my hand it is proved that the climate and soil of Canada are so well suited for the growth of the sugar beet that some varieties can actually be grown to the extent of over 35 tons per acre. Now, I do think, under these circumstances, that it would be a most unfortunate thing if we took the advice of hon. gentlemen opposite, who, I am sorry to say, are too apt to take a gloomy view of our industries in Canada, and to say that it is of no use to undertake this industry or that industry, because we cannot succeed. I say it would be a most unfortunate thing if we took the views of those hon. gentlemen in reference to this matter. We have the experience of country after country on the continent of Europe who have tried this industry and have found it to be a success, who have grown sugar beets profitably. Not only can we, in all probability, introduce a new industry into this country by giving it a little assistance, but we will be improving the character of our farming. Nothing would more elevate agriculture in this country than the teaching of our farmers the value of root crops. We will not only be able to establish a new manufacturing industry, but we will be benefiting the farmer by inducing him to go in for that kind of agriculture which is, in all probability, the one to which he most requires to have his attention directed. As for the remarks of the hon member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I am sorry to find that facts, no matter how powerful they may be, no matter how apparent they may be, no matter how striking they may be, do not seem to produce any effect upon my hon, friend's mind. I have found that frequently to be the case with regard to my hon. friend. In respect to the question of free trade, he used to have one little colony to which he always pointed as an example where the free trade idea was fully carried out, and that was New South Wales. What has he got to say now about New South Wales? That colony has found out the fallacy been informed, is fast following suit. I do not think the people of this country will follow my hon, friend's advice and go in for the old wornout, decrepit theory of free trade.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would like to ask the hon, member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) if those figures he gave respecting the production of beet roots referred to the ordinary feeding beets.

Mr. McNEILL. They are figures of the sugar beet, varying from 13 tons 400 pounds to 35 tons 950 pounds per acre. Of course, these are grown on the experimental farm, and my hon, friend knows that we could not expect to get the same results from the same breadth of fields throughout the country generally. But strike an average between the lowest figure and the highest figure, and you will see what an enormously valuable crop this would be, and how very profitable it is likely to be to the farmers.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The production on the experimental farm is no criterion for the country to go on. It is well known that that farm has all the resources of the country and the public purse at its back; so we can form no judgment of the production there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It cost 10 cents each to raise them there.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There is another fact that the hon, gentleman overlooks. It is found that in the production of beets for sugar-making a certain size is necessary, each beet being from one to two pounds in weight. Any over that are deficient in saccharine matter. So the quantity is limited to a certain weight, and that is not a great one per acre. If I understood the Secretary of State correctly, he said there was evidence that satisfied him that the industry is a success in this country. Am I right or wrong

Mr. CHAPLEAU. You are right.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am very glad I am correct. The Minister of Finance said the experiment has been going on for ten years, and the Secretary of State says it is a success. In the name of common sence, why rob the other farmers of the country to bonus beet-root growers? That is the question this House has to consider, because every dollar given to those growers is taken out of the pockets of farmers conducting other branches of industry. Why should one industry, which has been established long enough to ascertain whether it is a success or not, and which we are told is a success, be bonussed? We are told that the object is only to bonus it for one or two years, and that it is not intended to be permanent. We all know in regard to these protected industries how the thing works. We are asked to bonus them for a year or two, after which they will be able to stand alone. Is there any man in this House who knows a bonussed industry that has been able to stand alone? No one can name such industry. The Secretary of State prefaced his remarks by referring to what be termed the worn-out policy in Britain, and he accused the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) of belonging to the old effete school of political economy that is rapidly losing its prestige, and in fact is going to the wall. Well, if it is, we have had no evidence of it yet. Will the hon, gentleman tell us any free trade country that has ever abantry was not so prosperous as it should be, and it doned it. The hon gentleman has pointed to some was simply due to the lack of a higher tariff on iron.

Mr. McNeill.

little depression in Britain as evidence that they have been mistaken in regard to free trade. There is some depression in the export trade of Great Britain during the present year. fluctuations will occur in every country, either protective or free trade, and you have to make calculations for them. But, do you suppose for a moment that Britain is going back on her old free trade policy and about to adopt protection? There is not one man here who will ever see the day when Britain will go back on free trade. Why should she do so? She tried protection long enough, she carried protection to the most extreme length to which it could be carried; and where did it bring her? It brought her people to starvation, her manufactures to ruin, her shipping was swept from the seas, it kept her down as one of the poor nations of the world. After less than half a century of free trade, what do we find as a result of that policy? She has control of the markets of the world, of the carrying trade of the world, of the shipping trade of the world, and, more than all, she holds the purse of the world. Why, every nation that wants to borrow goes there for the money. That is what free trade has done for England, and anyone who would rise in his place in this year of grace 1891 and tell the intelligent members of this House that Great Britain is going to abandon this policy must take the members for a set of fools.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. She will do it, though.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Not in your day or in

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They all do it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has Britain done it? In France, Germany, and wherever the beet-root sugar has been tried, the industry has had to be bonussed, because it cannot compete with cane sugar and other sugar products. In Britain when the question came up for consideration some poor shaky souls, who are always timid about the results of free trade, were afraid they were going to be ruined by the production of bonussed beet-root sugar on the continent, and its admission free into Britain. The British Government laughed at them. And what is the result to-day? The British refiners turn their industry into other channels, and the British Government refused to impose any tariff on beetroot sugar, but the people of Britain by their free trade policy got the benefit of that industry. In other words, the people of other continental nations are taxed to give the people of Britain cheap sugar; the people of Great Britain get the benefit of it, whereas British refiners turn their industry into other channels. So far as regards the beet-root sugar in this country, I join the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in protesting against robbing one class of farmers to bonus another class, because the whole system of protection is to take from one industry and give to another. We have had enough of it, and its results have been found to be disastrous. Those members who had the honour to sit here in 1887 will remember with what a flourish of trumpets the present High Commissioner, who was then Minister of Finance, brought down his scheme for bonusing the production of pig iron. He pointed out that this country was not so prosperous as it should be, and it

He said what the country wanted was a scientific tariff on iron and he increased the tariff enormously; and we are paying a bonus on the production of pig iron just as it is now proposed to bonus the production for beet-root sugar. The High Commissioner drew a glowing picture of the great results that were to be achieved as soon as this system was put into operation, as soon as we had a scientific tariff on iron, and he declared that the instant we paid this bonus blast furnaces would flourish and be established at Kingston and other places. These statements will be found in the hon. gentleman's Budget speech of 1887, and the members were fools enough to believe him. What is the result? The result is, that we have increased the tax on every man who uses a single pound of iron. The result is, so far as manufactories are concerned, that we have increased the price of the raw material, for there is not a single manufacture carried on in the country into which iron does not enter to a great extent as a raw material. We have made it impossible for our manufacturers to compete in the markets of the world, because when you raise the price of the manufactured products you cut off the manufacturers from competing with less highly-taxed nations in the markets of the world. So we have injured our manufacturers, and we have been injuring producers all over the country in order to stimulate the production of iron in this country. He predicted that within three years, if my memory serves me rightly, there would be twenty thousand additional people engaged in this work, and that those connected with them would amount to 100,000 people, to be added to the population of the What has been the sole and total result of that? Why, Sir, in 1888, the very next year, the product was 21,799 tons of pig iron in all Canada. Not one of these blast furnaces which he had predicted had been opened, and not a single pound of pig iron had been produced as a result of this policy. Three years after the imposition of bounties and high tariff in order to stimulate the production of pig iron, would you believe that the quantity had fallen off by 27 tons in a year? That is the result as far as iron is concerned; and you will find that this will be the result in every line in which we adopt this system. It is wrong in principle, and it is found hurtful and disastrous in practice. There is only one correct way, and that is to do the thing honestly, and not to rob one man for the benefit of another. We should give all our people a fair chance in this country of ours, and let them produce the articles that are indigenous to the We do not want any industry in this country which has to be bolstered up by robbing the other people of the country in order to sustain

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the hon. Secretary of State pointing us to the example of France and Germany and Russia.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. And to the United States.

Mr. GILLMOR. He asks us: Who will say that they have not succeeded? Who will say that Great Britain is not the queen of nations? Who will say that Great Britain is not ahead of any other nation on the earth? Will the hon. gentleman and the Government of this colony say so, and will they not say also that her free trade principles have produced that greatness? The arguments of Canada. The reason the farmers of Canada submitted to protection is because they did not my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) cannot be met, and the arguments urged by hon, gentlemen opposite are fallacious. Why should any farmer, producing what he chooses, be taxed to aid some other farmer who wants to grow beets to make sugar. My hon, friend the Secretary of State says: The Government ought to give this encouragement to the beet industry. The Government, for sooth! What have they to do with it, except the power by a majority to take from one man and give to another? They do not give anything out of their own income to help the agricultural classes. They do not give anything out of their salaries for this purpose, but they put a law upon the Statute-book that taxes one class of farmers for the benefit of another, and to enable them to carry on an industry which they have been trying to make a success of for twelve years and which has proven a failure. Now, with regard to these farming operations. My hon, friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) talks about the farmers as if they were infants in the business, and as if they had to be taught to grow beets and everything The farmers of Canada have been farming for one hundred years, but how long is it since the Secretary of State and the Minister of Finance have become protectionists? How long is it since the gentlemen now occupying the Treasury benches became protectionists?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Since 1867 for me.

Mr. GILLMOR. Then, why did you not discover protection long before that? You lead the Government in Quebec for some years before that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Not before 1867.

Mr. GILLMOR. Well, you were in politics; you were enlightened at that time; I think, perhaps, you knew pretty nearly as much as you do now, and yet you never discovered protection until the exigencies arose. Now, you come here and you talk about Great Britain going back to protection. What reason have you for saying that?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Because they say so.

Mr. GILLMOR. Who says so?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The English people.

Mr. GILLMOR. What English people?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Their papers say so.

Mr. GILLMOR. Neither political party in England say so; no leading man of position intimates that England will ever go back to the degradation which protection produced in that country; and it was not an intelligent and honest conviction that adopted protection in Canada. It was an effort to hold the majority in Parliament that made you protectionists, and now you want to bolster up the system by bounties, and you try to tell the farmers what they should produce. The hon, member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) and the Secretary of State said that the farmers were to be taught by the experimental farms, but I can tell these hon, gentlemen that if they want to find intelligence in agriculture they have to go to three-fourths of the people of Canada to find it. If they want to find intelligence in matters of trade or science, or anything else, they will find it upon the farms, and it is not in the professions, or in this Parliament, that they will find the intelligence unite amongst themselves, and because they had not I have faith in the great heart and mind, dustry to produce beets in this country, by bounties, and by protection, I am opposed to it. This idea which has been announced from the other side i of the House, that we are going to do everything in ; this country, and live within ourselves, is the most miserable and retrograde idea that we can possibly There are no independent nations in the world any more than there are independent men. Show me a man that is not dependent on somebody from the cradle to the grave, or show me an independent nation on the face of the earth. We are all dependent, one upon the other, and the idea of Canada undertaking to produce what all the climates of the world have to send us is simply absurd. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have spoken here about England going back to protection. Why, Sir, I would as soon expect to see England going back to African slavery or going back to the dark ages when there was no liberty of thought or no personal freedom, as to see her going back to protection. England leads the van of the nations of the world because of her free trade principles, and there never was a greater stride made than when she cast off the tattered garments of protection which had brought her well nigh to ruin, and under which her spindles were idle; and thousands and tens of thousands of her ships lay with their sails flapping to the mast. There is not the slightest prospect of England, the greatest nation on the earth under free trade, going back to protection. There are, of course, always a few dissatisfied persons, but their influence is very small and their talk does not count for much. What has protection done for Canada that you should be so proud of it? You touch it very gingerly lately. It has been a failure in Canada, has the National Policy; there is no mistake about it. Where is the prosperity that has grown out of protection? Is it in the manufacturing industries? Where is it? Point to it? Point to the advantages that have come to Canada as a whole from this system? It is a vicious system; it is a system productive of all sorts of political immorality, vice and degradation. It is this system which produces the political evils, immoralities and vices which we see everywhere in this country. These things grow out of that selfish principle which takes from one man and gives to another by law. This principle of protection is contrary to the spirit and genius of free institutions. These protective laws which you have on the Statute book to-day will look as ridiculous and absurd fifty years hence as the Blue Laws of Connecticut look to day to those who read them. Look at them! I have a volume in my desk describing them. A man was not allowed to kiss his wife on Sunday; he was not allowed to eat meats or fruits on Sunday; he was not allowed to do this thing and that thing. It does not follow that because a law is on the Statute-book it is In my opinion, the whole of these protective laws are wrong, and it only wants a little more honesty and enlightenment on Mr. GILLMOR.

the ear of the Government. If the Minister of Finance in the honesty and intelligence of Canada. I am had suggested that by this change in the tariff we a Canadian; I have lived a pretty long life in were going to do an injustice to this industry I; Canada; I have never been six months out of the would have said nothing about it: but, if it is country, and I love my native land; but I do not understood that we are going to work up an in-love the system of protection, with all its train of evils and immoralities. The evidence of the folly and wrong of the system is that as soon as you put it on the Statute-book you have to appoint on the same day an army of officials to watch and guard the very laws which the majority ask to be enacted. Nobody wants a protective tariff for himself; everybody wants it for everybody else. Everybody wants to buy where he can buy the cheapest and sell where he can sell the dearest. Everybody wants free trade for himself. So that when you pass these laws and put them on the Statute-book, that does not make them right. There are plenty of laws on the Statute-book which ought not to be there; there are too many laws there taxing one class of industries for the sake of another class. A tariff on trade at all is wrong. Freedom of trade is the cause of England's prosperity. England was bound and shackled under the worst system of protection that the world ever saw; and under that system she lost the United States, the finest country, take it all in all, that God ever made. England undertook to cripple and injure her colonies while under that system, and she lost them in consequence. I hope the time is not far distant when nations will feel a brotherly interest in each other, because we are all dependent on each other. We talk about independence. What would become of your cotton industries if they could not get the raw cotton from the United States? What would become of your other industries if they could not get raw material from other countries? Learn to do what you can do best, and do that; and with a feeling of the universal brotherhood of mankind, buy those things from other nations which they can produce best. I am astonished that Englishmen should harbour this narrow, pent-up feeling with regard to other nations; I am speaking of your treaty with the United States. It is a great nation; there is no doubt about it. We have been in the race of nationality as long as they, and where are we now? One state has more people and more money than the whole of Canada put together. Let us get rid of this narrow feeling. If I were Prime Minister—of course, I never shall be-I would not go to the United States twice to make a treaty with them. I might go once, because I think it better for nations to throw down these walls of separation, and trade freely; it is better for all. I would throw down the wall on this side of the line, and then Canada would range ahead, as the mother country ranged ahead after she got rid of her tariff walls. Do that, and people will come here and develop your resources, which are to-day lying comparatively undeveloped. No protected country has ever developed its resources by protection. If the United States has devoloped its resources it is because it has forty-four nations lying side by side, with an international trade so enormous that you cannot compute it. That country has been able, with all the advantages which God has given her, to fight against protection without being ruined. the part of the people of Canada to sweep But you will never see Great Britain go back to all these absurd laws from our Statute-book. protection. The subject before us to-day is a matter of very small importance; but how can you justify it morally, to make one man, who is struggling to get a living by a certain kind of farming, take part of his product and give it to another who is trying to make a living by another system? When men can make money by growing beets, let them do it; when they can make money by engaging in the manufacture of sugar from beets, let them do it; and when they cannot, let them try something else. The Canadian people know that protection has not helped them up to this time. It may do so in the future, but I do not believe it ever can or ever will.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) complains that I am very conservative, that I entertain now on the subject of trade exactly the same views that I held when I first came into Parliament. Well, Sir, that is because I believe the views I entertained when I came into Parliament were correct. I entertain now exactly the same views with regard to the various propositions in geometry that I did when I came into Parliament, and it is because they are capable of absolute demonstration. I think the propositions with regard to free trade are equally capable of demonstration. But the hon, gentleman forgets that he has made no progress; that he entertains exactly the same views that he did when he first came into Parliament; that he stands now, as he stood then, on the ground of extreme protection. The hon, gentleman has represented to us the immense quantity of beets which may be grown to the acre—thirty-five tons to the acre, he says. Does the hon, gentleman know that if we can grow thirty-five tons to the acre it will require less than 35.(NM) acres to grow the beets necessary to produce all the sugar that is consumed in this country, and that 3,500 hands employed in the culture of those beets would produce all the beets from which 200,000,000 lbs. of sugar may be made? Now, the hon, gentleman has undertaken to show how very productive a beet crop may be. He has also shown how very small a fraction of the population of this country can be so employed. But, Sir, to take a more rational statement, taking the average of the continent of Europe, which, I think, is about ten tons to the acre, so that 100,000 acres would grow all the beets and that 10,000 persons would produce, all the beets necessary for the production of 200,000,000 lbs. of sugar, and so the hon, gentleman will see that, even according to his own view, this would not very largely stimulate the agricultural industry of the country. In fact, it is but a very small fraction, and, even if prosperous, would produce scarcely a perceptible result in the actual condition of the agricultural population. But the Secretary of State has told us that the free trade school is an effete school of political economists. He says that the English statesmen and economists are all wrong; that they have not properly studied this question; that the views they entertain are fallacious, and that the probability is that the night in which they have lived so many years will soon disappear and light will dawn upon them. In fact, he promised us that the public men of England will, in a few years, again become protectionists. When the hon. gentleman talked about the effete school of political economists he forgets that that school is the one to which he belongs. Protectionism is not a thing of fact is, we have all got to learn, and we established to-day. It did not originate with the hon, gentleman and his colleagues on the Treasury benches. It is much older than they. It existed in what is called the mercantile system for centuries in Europe, and led to nearly all the wars that took place from the mediaval period down to the middle of this century. It was not until free trade was well established in England that she herself was secured from almost continuous warfare. But there is one feature with which the hon, gentleman has not dealt, and that is what the manufacturing bodies on the continent of Europe call the economy of waste. What are you to do with the refuse? On the continent of Europe a large quantity that cannot be converted into sugar is used for feeding stock, but a still larger quantity is converted into alcohol. We have the testimony of distinguished alienists on the continent of Europe that, since the introduction of alcohol manufactured from rootsfrom the potato and sugar beet-there has been an enormous increase of insanity in all those countries. Not long since a celebrated paper was prepared by the president of one of the asylums in the city of Rome, and he showed that the increase in insanity there was largely due to the abandoning of the use of wine for the use of spirits which had been produced from the beet-root and the potato. In fact, the quantity of methylated spirits in the alcohol produced from the root is very great and most deleterious, and is in a larger degree the cause of insanity in those who use it than almost all other causes put together. So that, when the hon. Minister of Finance proposes specially to grant a bounty for the production of beetroot he is also proposing to encourage in this country the production of alcohol from the refuse, and to what will lead, in a large degree, to insanity among the population. The hon, gentleman is not legislating in the direction public interest requires. The hon, gentleman went to the West Indies, and as the hon. member for Ottawa County (Mr. Devlin) pointed out, he told the people there that the production of beet sugar could never be made a success in this country. Does he hold to that opinionstill? Or has new light dawned upon him since he has been to the West Indies. If he is of that opinion still, why does he propose to waste public funds and misdirect public energies by encouraging the production of sugar beet? If he does not believe in it, why should he do this? If he does, why does he not frankly tell us what it is that has given him new light and has led him to change the views he expressed on his West India mission?

Mr. McNEILL. In reply to the hon, member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), I wish to say a few words. My hon, friend seems to think that it is a great insult to the farmers of Canada to say that they require to learn something. That is rather a remarkable statement, coming from a gentleman of my hon. friend's breadth and liberality of views. I had always fancied that we all had something to learn, and I should have thought my hon. friend would be the last man to say that he had not something to learn as well as others.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I made no complaint on that score.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not referring to my hon. friend, but to the hon. member for Charlotte. The our farmers a great deal they have yet to learn: and I am glad to know they appreciate what we have done. They appreciate the fact that that farm has been established for the purpose of instructing them in matters concerning which they have more to learn. I find, from this book which I hold in my hand, that we, who have been discussing this matter here, have a great deal to learn I heard the hon, member for Middlesex (Mr. Armstrong), I think, say that the sugar beet must not exceed two pounds in weight, but I find here from analyses by the analyst of the experimental farm that one beet root, given at no less a weight than six pounds three and a-half ounces, compares very favourably, in the percentage of sugar juice, with beets which are quoted as of not more than one pound. I find also that one of the very largest in yield was a beet of three pounds eleven ounces, so that I do not think really, when one ventures to make the remark that a certain description of article is better for the farmer to produce than another, and that it would be well that his attention should be directed to that article, one can be considered as having said anything very insulting to his intelligence. I think his intelligence is greater than my hon, friend supposes it is, when he thinks the farmer will be insulted by anvthing of the kind. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has dealt with the subject. I did not quite catch what fell from him; but this I will say. that my hon, friend is apparently persistently blind-judging by what I did catch of his observations—to the fact to which I referred, namely, that all the civilized countries of the world pursue the policy of protection to-day, with the exception of England.

appears of reference among the latter of the second of the

Mr. MULOCK. A pretty good exception.

Mr. McNEILL. I am coming to that in a moment, and my hon. friend need not interrupt. seldom trouble the House, and on the last occasion when I did trouble it with a few observations he interpolated a number of remarks in the same way. I have said that all the civilized nations of the world. except England, follow the policy of protection. My hon, friend used to quote the colony of New South Wales as an exception, but that colony has adopted protection, so that he can no longer fall back upon it. That, however, makes no difference to him, and any man who cannot see that there is an enormous reaction against the policy of free trade which has for years past been pursued in England, any man who fails to see that there is such reaction in England, is blind to the signs of the times and unable to see the facts. If any hon. gentleman will take up any newspaper of weight in England he must from time to time see the evidence of that on its pages, whether in letters published in its columns or leading articles. He ought to know that many papers of light and leading in England are now advocating a complete change in the fiscal policy of England.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Which are they?

Mr. McNEILL. Many of them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Name them.

Mr. McNEILL. I have here a paper which is published for the express purpose of advocating that view. Does not the hon, gentleman recognize the our experimental farms for the purpose of teaching pose as a proof of the reaction which has taken place in England?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. McNEILL. Does the hon, gentleman say that it would have been possible a few years ago for such papers to be published in England? Does he not know that the fact of a paper of that kind surviving for several years, as it has, is an evidence of reaction in England on that subject? I have a copy of this paper in my hand.

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the paper?

Mr. McNEILL. It is a paper called Fair Trade. Here is an organ which is published for the express purpose of advocating that policy which the hon. gentleman says does not exist in England at all.

Mr. DEVLIN. What are the others?

Mr. McNEILL. There is the leading paper in the North of Ireland, the Belfast Newsletter, which distinetly advocates a reversal of the existing trade policy of England, and there are many others. You will find that the London Times, of which I suppose my hon, friend has heard, only a few weeks ago said it might be possible, that it would be wise, to raise a moderate fence around the empire of preferential duties against the rest of the world.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh, no.

Mr. McNEILL. I am glad that impresses the mind of my hon, friend at last. He sees that has some effect, and, if he will look over the London Times of January or December last he will find that in the columns of that paper.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have taken the London Times for 20 years and have never found it.

Mr. McNEILL. That has evidently produced some effect upon the mind of the hon. gentleman, because he finds it necessary to contradict it. Anyone who knows the effect of this upon the public mind in England, anyone who knows that that journal stands above any paper in England in public estimation, anyone who can see what the gravity of the situation may be to induce the people of Printing House Square to publish such a statement as that, must know what a tremendous reaction has arisen in England against this policy of so-called free trade.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If there is a tremendous reaction against free trade in England it would be shown when elections take place. Can the hon, gentleman point to any elections which have taken place in England within the last three years where the candidate has been returned on this policy?

Mr. McNEILL. I say there has been evidence given in the elections, and it is proved by the fact that 100 members of the House of Commons are now advocating a policy of imperial reciprocity.

Mr. BOWELL. Sheffield.

Mr. McNEILL. We had the representative of Sheffield here the other day, and he was elected clearly upon that question. I need not give the facts, because they are so well known. We can facts, because they are so well known. have theory as far as we like, but when we have facts the theory does not seem to apply. make one more remark. When we are told by my fact that a paper is published for that special pur- hon. friend that we must not tax other farmers for Mr. McNeill.

the benefit of those who grow sugar beets, I say that I am not aware of any particular farmer who has a monopoly of growing sugar beets. Does my hon, friend go so far as to say that any farmer should have a monopoly in this respect? As far as I am aware, anyone who chooses can grow sugar beets. That is one of the shallowest arguments I Everyone can grow beet-root who ever heard. pleases, and when my hon friend talks about the number of acres to be used for this purpose one would imagine that farmers would place the whole of their acres under sugar beets. have their crops in rotation, and it will be only a portion of their land on which they will cultivate sugar beets, and that will be a benefit to the whole of the farmers of the country. There may be some who will not have that article under cultivation, but I venture to say that the number will be comparatively small. I see in this book that it is reported that almost every kind of soil is fitted to raising sugar beets--clay, clay loam, sandy soil and other soils, and I do not see why any suggestion of a monopoly should be made. The difficulty is only the creation of the hon, gentleman's own brain, as the German student was said to have declared that he could evolve the idea of a camel out of his wiser consciousness.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman refers to a shallow argument as having been addressed to the House. If I were as frank as the hon, gentleman says he is, I might be just as uncomplimentary as he is. He says that every farmer can grow the sugar beet. Suppose he does, that would amount to less than 500 acres in each county. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that a beet-root sugar establishment would be erected in each county for the manufacture of the beets grown on 500 acres, and that it would be profitable for the farmers to travel over these miles of territory in order to bring their beets to the factory? Surely the hon, gentleman cannot mean that, or he cannot have studied the question. The hon. gentleman says that I am not easily convinced; but I think that observation is rather applicable to him He still holds to the idea that the people of the United Kingdom are in a ferment on account of what he calls fair trade. He refers to the London Times. I have read the London Times for 20 years, and I find no such doctrine incul-cated there. I would ask the hon gentleman if such a doctrine is inculcated in the News, in the Telegraph, in the Standard, in the London Spectator, in the Newcastle Times, in the Liverpool Post, in the Manchester Guardian, in the Manchester Times, in any of the great papers which circulate amongst the people of England, and which reflect and form at the same time the opinion of the people. He produces a little paper which has perhaps a larger circulation among a small clique in this country than it has in the United Kingdom, and he says that this is a proof that the people of England are in favour of fair trade, which may very likely, according to him, be adopted. He may be satisfied with that kind of argument, but the people of this country will not be satisfied with it. He refers to what is done on the continent of Europe. In some of the European countries, where the land is divided up into very small holdings and the people are obliged to engage in a certain kind of agriculture, because am very much surprised at my hon. friend, if he they cannot enter into the different kinds of agriculture in which the people of England engage, this may be possible; but the hon, gentleman will find that in England, where the agriculturist is free to engage in whatever description of cultivation he finds most profitable, the thing is very different. The hon, gentleman appeals from a free country, from a country with representative institutions and with a population who have been taught to rely on themselves, to a population under a parental government, an arbitrary and an absolute government. That is the notion which the hon. gentleman has in reference to the institutions of the mother country and that is the confidence which he exhibits in the capacity of the people of the United Kingdom. Now, I tell him that I have a higher opinion of British statesmen, a higher opinion of the capacity of Englishmen, than the hon, gentleman exhibits, and the reason is, that I find so few Englishmen entertaining the views which the hon. gentleman has enunciated. If a large number of them were to adopt the views of the hon, gentleman my confidence in their ability and in their capacity would be, perhaps, less than it is. Sir, I tell him that the greatest people to-day, the people who have accomplished most and have shown by their action that they are capable of accomplishing most, are Englishmen; but it is because they entertain views on the subject of trade, and commerce, and agriculture the very reverse of those which the hon. gentleman has enunciated in this House. The hon. gentleman is an Englishman born out of due time, exhibiting sentiments which prevailed five hundred years ago, and not those of to-day. We sometimes find men born in England who are not Englishmen, and the hon. gentleman is a person of that type.

Mr. McNEILL. I am glad, at all events, to find that my hon. friend, in the remarks he has just made, has entirely confirmed the statement I made in reference to him a short time ago. He has gone a step further than he did before, and he has told us now that not only is he not to be convinced by the fact that all the other nations of Europe are adopting policies of protection, but he tells us that if a number of English statesmen were to come round in favour of protection he would not change his views, but he would only hold a lower opinion of their intelligence. The hon. gentleman reminds one of the old story of the juryman who said that henever met eleven men so obstinate in his life as the eleven men who had been sitting on the jury with him, and who would not agree with him, and my hon. friend's argument amounts to that. Now, he tells us that because a certain limited area of land would be sufficient to supply the amount of sugar that we probably would require in Canada, therefore we That is ought not to go into this industry at all. precisely the kind of argument that was adduced in France, in Germany, and elsewhere on the continent of Europe, when this industry was introduced; but that argument was found to be fallacious, because it was found that not only was the growing of sugar beets advantageous for their own market, but the manufacturers could sell their surplus elsewhere. The hon. gentleman, in point of fact, is just where he was when he rose a few minutes ago-with this exception, that he states that although he has read the Times carefully he has not seen this most uotable article in it.

has read the Times carefully and has not observed one of the most remarkable articles published in that paper for the last 20 years. It is an article that has attracted the attention of the leading papers of this country, and of many of the leading papers in the mother country; yet my hon, friend tells us that although he has been a careful reader of the Times for 20 years he has never seen a word or an article to that effect. I am not surprised that my hon, friend should be just as benighted now as he was 13 years ago, when the National Policy was introduced.

Mr. DEVLIN. I think it would be well if we were to get some information upon the question; which I brought to the attention of the Committee a; few moments ago. Perhaps there was never a more discouraging remark addressed to those engaged in this industry in Canada than the words which were reported to have been addressed by the Indies, when he affirmed that the culture of the sugar beet could never be made a success in Canada. No doubt, when he made that statement, he had good and sound information. But to-day he says it can be made a success. The Minister of Finance, in this matter, I think, has taken a position contradictory to that which he formerly held, and it might be well for him to put himself straight.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend has made two assertions that he will have to verify. One is that I stated in the House that the culture of beet-roots can be made a success.

Mr. DEVLIN. I beg your pardon. I said that you stated—at least, it was reported that you stated—to the planters of the West Indies, when you were in that country, that the cultivation of the sugar beet could never be made a success in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I did not touch that part of my hon, friend's statement. I was saying that he had made two statements that he would have to verify before he calls upon me to contradict either of them. He stated a few moments ago that I had declared in this House that the sugar beet business in this country could be made a success. I was not so dogmatic as to make an assertion of that Then he asserted that I had stated in the kind. West Indies that the cultivation of the sugar beet never could be made a success in Canada. My hon, friend will have to get better information than that before he asks me to say what I stated in the West Indies.

Mr. DEVLIN. I shall have to accept the hon. gentleman's explanation as meaning that he did not state, when he was in the West Indies, to the planters there, that the cultivation of this root could never be made a success in Canada.

ORDNANCE LANDS-QUEBEC SKATING CLUB.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 160) to authorize the conveyance to the Quebec Skating Club of certain ordnance lands in the city of Quebec.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps the hongentleman will explain the object of the transfer and the compensation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Quebec Skating Minister of Finance to the planters of the West Club had their building in close proximity to the fortification walls. It was found that, for the security of the walls, the building should be removed. In addition to that, the building was in a most inconvenient position as regards the new legislative buildings. An arrangement was come to with the Provincial and Federal Governments and the Quebec Skating Club by which the building should be removed from its former site, that site not to be built upon, and the club should have a free site of ordnance lands. The Provincial Government contribute to the cost of the building. The assent of the Imperial authorities was obtained for the use of ordnance lands for that purpose.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

WINNIPEG AND HUDSON'S BAY RAILWAY.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 119) respecting a certain agreement therein mentioned with the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway Company. He said: The nature of the amendment is to stipulate that the route for this railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in The resolution for granting aid to the Hudson's Bay Railway Company for the line to the Saskatchewan was unlike the resolutions for like subsidies which were approved by the House on former occasions. On two former occasions there was aid given, one subsidy being to the Regina and Long Lake Company and another to the Calgary and Edmonton Company, both being on like terms. The difference between those resolutions and this resolution is, that those resolutions were preceded by an Order in Council fixing the terms under which the aid should be given, and, when we came to Parliament with the resolutions, we had entered into an agreement, subject to the approval of Parliament, expressing all the terms on which the grant was to be given. The principal features of grant was to be given. those agreements—I am now referring to the aid given to the Regina and Long Lake and to the Calgary and Edmonton railways—were that the roads should carry the mails, messengers, officers and supplies of the Government, and that the earnings of the companies by carrying the mails on such lines should go to the credit of the company respect to the Weighers of Grain.—(Sir John as against the subsidy payments, and the balance of the subsidy be secured on a portion of their lands. When the resolution inaid of the Hudson's Bay Railway Company was brought down, as I have said, no such agreement was entered into. The Government had not bound itself, and, therefore, the terms were not as explicit and definite. At the same time, it was the intention, as has been explained to the House, that if Parliament should approve of the measure an agreement of like character would be entered into with regard to this company, and one of the terms which I had omitted to mention before, and which, it almost goes without saying, would be inserted in an agreement of that kind, is, that the route shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The Senate has thought proper to add that as an amendment to the Bill, and as far as the Government is concerned there can be no objection to adopt the clause, because it was one of the stipulations of the agreement, as actually drawn up.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It gives the Government certain control, but it does not give Parliament any control over it whatever.

Amendments concurred in.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS—TRANSFER OF CERTAIN PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 111) authorizing the transfer of certain public property to the Provincial Governments. I want to call the attention of the House to this Bill this evening and carry it to its second reading, if it should please the House to adopt it; but I do not propose to night to ask the House to complete the passage of the Bill. I explained to the House the object of this measure when I introduced it last session. The ownership of the foreshores of Canada is in a state of uncertainty. decision arrived at several years ago with regard to the foreshores, and underlying soil of public harbours, declares that that property is vested in the Dominion of Canada. Outside of the limits of public harbours we have no authoritative decision as to where the right of property lies, and that remark applies to the sea coasts of Canada as well as to the lake shores of the country. I need hardly explain to the House, I suppose, that even a decision declaring the ownership of the soil under the public harbours, and the fore-shores of the public harbours, to be in the Dominion of Canada, by no means is a definitive decision as regards the boundaries of our property, supposing the right of ownership to end there; because it would be most difficult to ascertain what the actual geographical limits of our public harbours are. That is not only true of the sea coast, but it is more so of the lake shores, where more indefinite indentations are oftentimes called harbours, as, for instance, Toronto harbour, and other harbours like it. Now, we have very important interests involved in this domain -very important, I mean, as regards the people of the country—unimportant, as regards the proceeds of its administration. It becomes very important for the people of this country to know in what Government the right of property exists. Persons desiring to acquire portions of the fore-shore for the purpose of improvements and facilities for navigation, such as wharves, stores, waremaking applications for permission to make these that property, so far as it is vested in us, subject improvements. I would remind the House, at the outset, that the passing of a title to property of this description by deed, or license, or lease, to individuals, does not by any means convey to them the right to erect structures upon the foreshore or upon the bottom of the river or harbour. The validity of any erection of that kind depends upon it being convenient or otherwise as regards the public use for navigation. If a structure, even though made upon the soil of a harbour or river granted to an individual impedes navigation, or interferes even with individual convenience, it is a nuisance, and may be abated, and we have statutory powers to provide for the approval of the Government being given to structures of that character, so as to remove the question of the legality of the erection. But apart from that question, which is amply provided for by the legislation that we have on the subject, the question of ownership becomes most important to those who apply for grants for licenses and leases from time to time. A person who applies for permission to erect a wharf, or a warehouse, or to make an esplanade, or any convenience of that kind, knows that he has to acquire a legal title before he can erect the structure or make the improvement, even though that structure or improvement may be of great public importance If he should get his title from the wrong Government the result. of course, is just as disastrous as if one purchases and endeavours to improve any other piece of property to which he is unable to acquire a title. Down to the decision in Holman is. Green, by which the soil of public harbours and the foreshores of public harbours were declared to be vested in the Dominion of Canada, this kind of property was administered by the Provincial Gov-Leases, patents and licenses were ernments. issued, and the right of the Provincial Government was not very strongly contested. When the decision in Holman cs. Green was arrived at, and it was publicly understood that that kind of property was actually vested, by the British North America Act, in the Dominion of Canada, the Government was applied to in numerous instances to make grants and licenses for the purpose of erecting these structures, and the question has become a very serious one, and is considerably involved, as to the mode of administering this kind of property. Dominion of Canada has not the staff of officers or the organization all over the country which would enable them to administer that property effectively and watchfully. The Provincial Governments have their surveyors in every place: they have their registry offices, where all grants, patents and leases are recorded, and in every province—but I speak especially for the provinces with which I am more particularly acquainted-just as much care is exercised with regard to that portion of the public domain as with regard to the Crown Lands of the provinces; and the question presents itself very forcibly whether it were not better that it should be administered in connection with the public lands of the province than administered by the Dominion Government. Now, the scheme upon which this Bill proceeds is that certain concessions shall be made by the Provincial Governments with regard to this kind of property, and that on our side we houses, and other structures, are continually shall hand over to the Provincial Governments all to the conditions set forth in this Bill. Opportunities have been given to confer with some of the gentlemen administering the affairs of the provinces with a view to ascertaining the suitability of these conditions, and some little changes were made from the Bill of last year in order to make the measure effective to secure the rights which we have, and effective also as likely to be acceptable to the Provincial Governments. I will invite the attention of the House to the conditions which are embodied in the Bill. I will preface the remarks I have to make on them by the observation, by way of reminder to the House, that we do not propose to surrender any legislative authority or control whatever. It is simply a question whether time to come. The next portion of the transfer it is best to have this kind of property administerd [by the Provincial Governments, and whether we shall consent to its transfer to the Provincial Governments on terms which we think will protect the public interests of Canada. These conditions may require amendment when they receive the attention of the members of this House who have given thought to the subject; and my object in moving the Bill to a second reading to-night, without being disposed to go beyond that stage, is to call the attention of the House to this subject, and to receive such suggestions as may enable us to make the best Bill we can on the subject. The plan, then, is this: The Governor in Council shall be authorized to transfer in whole or in part the foreshore and bed of every or any stream, river, lake, harbour, bay, open sea, or other territorial waters of Canada, in any of the provinces, to the Provincial Governments, to be dealt with as provincial public lands within the province; and the second section of the Bill provides that every such transfer shall be subject to the limitations contained in the schedule to this Act, as well as to any others that are expressed in such transfer. So that we take power to add to the conditions that are here expressed. But I shall have to move one or two amendments to guard in a more specific way particular rights which might possibly be affected by the transfer, and which are not particularly enumerated in the conditions here set forth, such as rights which have been acquired by the consent of the Dominion Government before the passage of this Bill, and rights which may accrue under agreements which have been made from time to time with the Dominion Government. Subject to those, the conditions which we propose in this Act are that certain lands shall not be considered as being included in any such property so transferred, and the reservation which we propose to the transfer is:

"Any portion of the foreshore or bed of Canadian waters in front of and adjoining any lands held by Her Majesty in the right of Canada, including therein, but not to limit the generality of the expression 'Lands held by Her Majesty in the right of Canada,' Indian ordinance or other Dominion lands: it being understood that where Dominion lands front on a river the lands covered with water in front thereof, excepted from transfer to the province, shall, in the same width as on the bank, extend to water in front thereof, excepted from transfer to the province, shall, in the same width as on the bank, extend to mid-channel, and that where Dominion lands front on a harbour, sea, lake or other navigable water the lands excepted as aforesaid shall, in the same width as on the shore, extend indefinitely seaward, or, where there is opposite there Canadian territory, one half the distance across."

So that we do not propose to give up the foreshore in front of any real estate now owned by the Dominion of Canada, whether ordnance lands or public lands of any other description; and one of in the case of Holman vs. Green, to which the hon,

Sir John Thompson.

the advantages of this Bill will be that, by removing all doubts on the subject by consenting to this transfer to the provincial authorities for the purpose of administration, we are likely to obtain the assent of the Provincial Governments to the conditions set forth, so that there will be on our side the quieting of the title by transferring the property to those who have the best machinery for administering it satisfactorily, and on their side the acceptance of the conditions under which the trans-We think that will have the effect of fer is made. removing doubts which are disquieting with regard to that kind of property, and the removal of doubts will have the effect of avoiding litigation for all is:

"So much of the foreshore or bed of any Canadian navigable water as has at the time of the passing of this Act erected or constructed thereon, or in connection therewith, any 'public work' within the meaning of 'The Expropriation Act."

Within the meaning of the Expropriation Act a public work includes wharves, bridges, piers, booms, and everything of that description ordinarily built in waters of that kind. The second condition is:

"The Government of Canada may at all times, without compensation to the Government of the province, take possession of, erect, construct and maintain any 'public work' within the meaning of 'The Expropriation Act,' upon any lands transferred under the provisions of the foregoing Act, so long as the lands required are vested in the Crown."

So that, although the province obtains the foreshore we can resume possession of it for the purpose of any public work we are carrying on. condition is:

"The Provincial Government shall not, except with the consent of the Governor General in Council, grant or the consent of the Governor General in Conneil, grant or otherwise dispose of, to any person or company, any land transferred as aforesaid and covered by Canadian navigable waters which lies within two hundred feet of the outer limits or boundaries of any 'public work in existence at the time of the passing of this Act,' within the meaning of 'The Expropriation Act,' provided that the lands upon which such public work has been erected now front upon or is in whole or part bounded by or forms part of lands covered by navigable water."

So that, if a public wharf has been erected on the foreshore at the time of the passage of this Act, the Provincial Government shall be restrained from giving any grant of any foreshore around it to the extent defined here. The next condition is:

"All patents, leases or other disposition of the foreshore or bed of Canadian waters, as well as all contracts in respect thereof, made by the Government of Canada prior to any transfer under the foregoing Act, in respect to lands other than those referred to in clause one, shall be, so far as the Provincial Government has power so to do, ratified and confirmed." and confirmed.

And then, finally, there is the provision to protect our legislative rights:

"The transfer by the foregoing Act authorized shall not be construed to give to a Provincial Government, or to persons claiming under it, any rights in respect to navigation or to the sea coast and inland fisheries, the rights of all parties in respect to navigation and shipping, and in respect to the fisheries, remaining unaffected thereby."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, the subject-matter legislated upon by the Bill now before the House is a very important one, and I am glad the hon, gentleman does not intend to carry the Bill through all its stages to-night. The Bill deals not only with the foreshores in public harbours, but with the foreshores of the different provinces on the sea coast. Until the decision which was given

Minister refers, there was a general consensus of whether, in the other case, they may not be opinion on the part of the members of the bar in found to be onerous and prejudicial to the the several provinces that the shores in the harbours local interest. Of course, if we start with the belonged to the Provincial Governments. But that proposition that I lay down, that the rights in impression was overthrown by the decision in these foreshores belong to the Local Governments, Holman rs. Green, and although that decision has there can be no necessity for the Bill at all. It is not been generally accepted, I think, as good law, still it is the law of the highest court in this country; and the hon, gentleman, of course, is not; only justified in acting upon the fact of its being: law and legislating accordingly, but would not be justified in ignoring the decision of the Superior Court. Therefore, so far as any legislation is concerned necessary for determining, once and for all, in what Government the foreshore in the harbours is vested, that legislation would have my concurrence and support, and I should like to see all doubts on that subject set at rest. Those who come from the Maritime Provinces know what very valuable properties these are which heretofore have been disposed of by Provincial Governments under the assumption that they had a perfect right to do so, but which, after the decision of Holman es. Green, were held to be vested in the Dominion Government; and I think any legislation setting at rest all doubts on the subject and vesting these territorial rights in the Provincial Governments would be acceptable to open, with respect to the other to resnores outside the House and the public generally. Nor do I of harbours, until, at least, judicial decision has been but think the conditions the hon, gentleman has attached to the Bill, in so far as they relate to these grants of foreshores of harbours, could be considered other than prudent, with some possibly trifling exceptions. The general conditions, I think, are fair and reasonable. It is but just that Government right. all rights in connection with navigation and fisheries should remain untouched by any transfer. It does not matter whether these foreshores are vested in the Dominion Government or the Proyincial Governments, the paramount rights of navigation and shipping must, in any case, be thoroughly protected. The hon, gentleman has sought to do that by one of his conditions, and I do not think any fault can be found in that respect. Nor do I hold, so far as the foreshores of the harbours are concerned, that there could be any reasonable fault found with any of the conditions attached to the transfer which he takes power to make; but with regard to the other territorial rights on which this Bill seeks! to give the Government power to make convey-ance, I would respectfully suggest whether we are not apt to get into some difficulty, whether it would not be prudent, after all is said and done, to leave the question of conveying from this Dominion Government to the Provincial Governments any supposed rights that may be possessed until do not know upon what theory or principle that there has been a judicial decision on the subject, if judicial decision is required. I speak with some diffidence, my own opinion in the other case, the harbour question, having been altogether wrong. My own opinion has always been that these territorial rights were vested in the several provinces. The hon, gentleman takes power to transfer the soil in the foreshore of the seacoast, all of which was supposed to be vested in the Provincial Governments, but which assumes the title is now in the Government of Canada, to the Local Government; but the transfer is accompanied by the same conditions as are attached to the transfer of the only because the hon, gentleman sees doubts on the matter that he takes this power? But I cannot remember any doubt being raised in court or any case in which such doubts were raised. If they were, that might justify legislation on the subject. If there are no doubts, I would respectfully press on the hon, gentleman whether it is desirable to legislate on the subject at all—whether it would not be better to confine legislation simply to taking power to convey the foreshores in public harbours, which, under the judgment in Green es. Holman, are said to be vested in the Dominion Government. As the hon, gentleman is not going into committee on the Bill to-night I will not argue the question any further than making that suggestion to him, whether it would not be well to limit the scope of the Bill to the foreshores of the public harbours, which have been decided in Holman cs. Green to be vested in the Dominion. rightly or wrongly, and leave the other question given in the same sense as in Holman es. Green. But I cannot for the life of me see how it can be successfully contended that the foreshores outside of the public harbours of the respective provinces are vested in any other than the Queen in her Provincial

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is the almost universally received opinion that, before the decision in Holman cs. Green, the property of the harbours was vested in the provinces. The decision in that case declares that that property is vested in the Crown, as represented by the Dominion. That may well be contended for, on the assumption that the British North America Act conveyed all the public harbours of Canada to the Dominion; and by that conveyance, as harbours are one of the classes of property mentioned in the schedule of the Act that is expressly vested in the Dominion, under that schedule, by the provisions of the Act, property in the harbours of Canada became the property of the Confederation or was vested in the Crown in connection with the Dominion of Canada. But I do not see, as the hon, member for Queen's says, how that could apply to the foreshores generally. The limit of property no doubt extends a marine league, or for the distance of a cannon shot from the shore, and I portion of Canadian territory that lies beneath the water, and which cannot be vested in the Dominion under the schedule, could, in consequence of anything contained in this decision, be held to be Dominion property; because, if the whole or a portion of the territory that lies under the water along the shore was vested in the Dominion there was no necessity to declare that a harbour should be Dominion property; but by the express declaration of the British North America Act, that the property in the public harbours should be the property of the Dominion, it seems to me to imply that every other portion of the territory of Canada harbour property. In the one case those con-ditions are reasonable and proper. I doubt of which it forms a part. It would be more satisfactory if a case could be agreed upon between the Dominion and some one or more of the provinces, for the purpose of having this matter judicially determined, rather than undertake to legislate on the subject. It would be more satisfactory, and if it were found that the foreshores do not belong to the provinces, then this legislation would be necessary.

SHIPPING OF LIVE STOCK.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 154) respecting the shipping of live stock. He said: The carriage of live stock in vessels from America to Europe has elicited the attention of the Imperial Government and Parliament, and very severe restrictions have been proposed in the Imperial Parliament, not only for the security of the property conveyed in these ships, but also for the security of the human lives which are at stake; and an endeavour has been made on the part of the Government of Canada to make such regulations for the carriage of live stock as will provide for the prevention of disease, overcrowding and cruelty during the passage, and will, at the same time, meet fully the objections which are entertained to the mode of carrying such stock which exists now in the United States and some of the southern countries of America. A doubt has arisen as to the extent of our powers under the present statute. It has been contended that some of the regulations which are necessary, and which in fact have been adopted in the past, have been ultra vires as regards our authority under the Act, inasmuch as the Act only expressly authorizes us to make regulations to prevent the spread of disease among cattle. measure will go further, and will enable us to make rules and regulations for the security and safety of live stock on such ships, and those regulations will have the force of law. This Act, also enables us to appoint inspectors and allow money to be paid to them:

"Out of the fees collected under the provisions of this Act: and any fees collected by an inspector in excess of the amount of the remuneration so determined shall be paid over by him to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, to form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. At any port for which no inspector has been appointed under this Act the port warden duly appointed by the Governor in Council shall be ex officio the inspector. At any port at which there is no port warden so appointed and for which no inspector has been appointed under the provisions of this Act, the chief officer of Customs at such port shall be ex officio the inspector."

We then provide for an annual statement of fees to be collected, and the fee is to be such as the Governor in Council may establish, and no officer of Customs shall grant a clearance until such fee has been paid. The inspector is to issue a certificate, and any violation of the Act is to be a misdemeanour, with this restriction, that no prosecution shall be instituted except with the consent of the Minister. There are provisions as to the completion of the cargo at another port so as to enable the vessel to take in her cargo at one or more points, and that, in that case, another inspection is to take place at the second port. There is a penalty for over-loading of $1,000, and the ship is made liable therefor, and may be seized and detained at any port in Canada until such penalty is paid.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMILLAN. In regard to shipping cattle, there is something this Bill ought to mention. believe cattle have suffered more on account of what I am going to mention than from any other cause. At the port of Montreal there is no proper yard to take cattle before putting them on ship board. They are taken on to the wharf and have to be confined there by their keepers. My experience is that the cattle receive greater injury before going on board ship after leaving the stock-yards, than during the whole subsequent passage. receive more abuse and hard treatment before they are taken on the ship than afterwards. Ithink something ought to be done with respect to that. If the cattle trade is going to increase in the future, as it has done in the past, there should certainly be proper provision for yarding the cattle close by where the vessels lie. At present there is no regulation of any description on this point. The cattle are taken there and confined a few hours on the wharf, until the owners are notified to put them on Another fault I have found is in respect to the troughs used on board the ship. suffer a great deal from want of water while on the vessel. I have found, as a rule, that the hands put the water into troughs made out of rough boards roughly nailed together, and in a great many instances they hold the water only a few minutes. I hold that the Government ought to see that the troughs are made water-tight, so that when the water is put into them they will hold it until the animals have had time to drink it before it is wasted. As a rule, the troughs are made of rough boards and the water runs right If it is a middling fair trough, the cattle get a fair share of water, but if not, they suffer a good deal from thirst while on the voyage. I expected, when the Bill was brought down, that something of that kind would be mentioned in it. I have had some conversation with Dr. McEachren, of Montreal, to whom I mentioned this subject, and he said it was one of the great evils that ought to be attended to, as well as the others I have mentioned. Another point requiring attention is the water tanks used on board the ship for the purpose of holding fresh water for the cattle. experience is that when the box containing fresh water has been emptied and the cattle are put on condensed water they suffer severely, if you give them anything like at all the amount of water they require. I hold that every vessel ought to be compelled to carry a certain quantity of water for every animal that is shipped. If such a provision is not put into the Bill, certainly that point ought not to be overlooked in the regulations. I would like to know how many inspectors are engaged in looking after these vessels. I know there is one at the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and there is another at the Grand Trunk Railway. I think there ought to be an inspector at every vessel to see the cattle shipped on board, as well as an inspector at a railway station where the cattle are taken off. other thing is with respect to the situation of the cattle on board. Sometimes they are put up on one end of the vessel and their feed is kept on the other end. That is a great inconvenience for the shipper. I think it would be well if some regulation was made to provide against this trouble also. inspector ought to be there to see that the feed is put at the same end of the vessel where the cattle are kept. In all these respects the shippers have found considerable inconvenience—that is to say, the want of a proper place to confine the cattle before they are shipped, the lack of proper watertight troughs for the cattle to drink out of, and the lack of a tank sufficiently large to hold what fresh water the cattle require on board. the Americans in providing an efficient inspector; they have made an appropriation of $850,000 for the enforcement of a rigid inspection, although the fee we propose to charge under this Bill is not large, and I understand that we have power to increase the amount up to 5 or 10 cents per head for inspection, as it is enforced in Montreal and other ports, will

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The subjects to which the hon. gentleman has called our attention ought to receive every consideration in the regulations which are made under this Act. As he mentioned the various points I looked at the Bill, and I think the provisions are sufficient to enable us to make regulations such as he thinks should be made. Under the 3rd section we may make any rules and regulations for the health, security and safe carriage of the live stock, and under section 7 it is the duty of the inspector to see that the arrangements for carrying such live stock are approved of by him. I think, certainly, that the questions of tanks and troughs for the supply of water, and the arrangements of the food, are matters which ought to be very carefully provided for by the regulations and attended to by the inspectors, and the inspectors should be required to see that the regulations are complied with regarding these points. As regards the yarding of cattle in Montreal, and their being cared for at that port, I am afraid it is a matter over which we cannot have very effectual control. We have only power under the provisions of the present Act to make regulations in regard to their health and with regard to their safe carriage: and all other regulations should be provided for either by the municipality or the Provincial Government. I can only tell the hon, gentleman that, with regard to a trade of such immense importance, no effort will be spared on our part to call the attention of the proper authorities to any regulations which ought to be made by them with regard to the safety and the comfort of cattle that go on ship board.

On section 9,

Mr. McMILLAN. The inspector ought to see that the cattle are properly stalled on board. At the present time the regulations require that each animal shall have 2 feet 8 inches space, but I find they are not getting that, on account of there being no inspector present when they are being put on board. A case of this kind came under my son's attention. and it took two or three hours before the cattle were all arranged and tied. There are only two inspectors, I understand, and they are engaged in the One requires to be present when the cattle are put on board, which is the time when their duties can be properly attended to. If they are neglected, then the matter becomes exceedingly These regulations, if fixed by Order troublesome. in Council and thoroughly enforced, would, I believe, confer a great benefit on the cattlemen. Although the cattlemen have very large interests in this business, yet the farmers and those who breed cattle suffer in the end if neglect occurs, and, if great losses occur to dealers, they will, on returning another year to make purchases, offer reduced prices to the farmers, and it is in their interests I speak.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I fail to understand would consult with the shippers. I am satisfied why our Government cannot be as liberal as are they would send a deputation here, and, in conthey have made an appropriation of $850,000 for the enforcement of a rigid inspection, although the fee we propose to charge under this Bill is not large, and I understand that we have power to increase the amount up to 5 or 10 cents per head for inspection fees. I suppose the veterinary inspection, as it is enforced in Montreal and other ports, will still be continued. This is a special inspection for which provision is now being made, namely, the inspection, of the steamship, and the providing of regulations in regard to the loading of cattle and the feeding of cattle on ship-board. That is one of the most necessary inspections of the whole series. The veterinary inspection is merely a formal inspection as our Canadian cattle are free from disease. It is true that occasionally the inspector detects an animal with a lump on its jaw, and an animal with a cancerous jaw is not allowed to be put on board; but the animals do not require a very close inspection in that particular. The inspection really asked for in this Bill is an inspection by a competent person, who will know when cattle have sufficient space, who will understand where they should go, whether there are proper arrangements for their feeding, and whether there is sufficient tank space to carry the water, so that the animals will get cold water, instead of hot water, as heretofore. We have had great trouble on vessels where they have condensed the water. It has also occurred that the water running into the drinking troughs has leaked out before the animals could drink it. If they are not tight, and the water is put in warm, it will leak out before it is cool enough for the animal to drink, and thus cattle sometimes do not receive sufficient water during the voyage. The Government regulations should endeavour to provide that an ample supply of fresh water is provided for cattle on shipboard. The Beaver Line steamers carry a sufficient quantity of fresh water, which is worth much more than condensed water, and they make the trip in 10 days. I willingly pay 10 shillings per head more to that line on account of the fresh water, and I consider it money well invested. As regards space, 2 feet 6 inches is now suggested, and five stockers are now allowed in place of four fat cattle. I contend, however, that the space should be one uniform space, say 2 feet 8 inches between and on decks, and if so, there might be five stockers in the place of four fat cattle averaging 1,000 lbs., and they would fill the space of four fat cattle. In regard to stockers, they will not be so considered if they weigh over 1,100 lbs. I should prefer a different classification. The maximum weight should be 1,100 lbs., and a lot should not average over 1,000 lbs. each, and they should come within the regulations which the cattlemen required and which was laid down at the investigation which was recently held, and printed in blue-book form. The inspection does not intend to interfere with the veterinary inspection which is made. inspector will look after the loading of the cattle. One inspector will not be sufficient for the work, because I have seen in Montreal 2,000 or 3,000 cattle loaded on the same day when several steamers are leaving port. It is impossible for one man to do the work and do it satisfactorily. It would be well if the Government, after this Bill has passed, would consult with the shippers. I am satisfied sultation with the Government, would devise the best means possible of making the trade a paying investment, and when it is a paying investment it proves remunerative to the farmers who raise the When a speculator makes money the farmers derive the benefit, as he pays them increased prices when he goes through the country again to purchase cattle.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed. Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 9.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 18th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock. PRAYERS.

DEPUTY SERJEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that the Serjeant-at-Arms has appointed, with my approval, Lieut. Col. Alfred Hamlyn Todd his deputy for the remainder of the session.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No 165) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said: The first clause of this Bill has reference to the school lands. It will be recollected that some few years ago, in some sections of the country, we agreed to give alternate townships of land to railway companies in lieu of alternate sections. This is to permit school lands being selected in other portions of the district of equal value to those taken by the railway companies, in order that the lands given to railway companies may be as nearly as possible in one block. Another clause deals with cancelled pre-emptions. The conditions in the old Act required the building of a habitable house and an actual residence therein, but the word "cultivation" was left out, no doubt inadvertently. This is to provide cultivation as well, which is, as is well known, one of the principal provisions with regard to the occupation of homestead lands. I propose, in section 3, to do away with the three months' Heretofore, the residence formerly necessary. settler was obliged to occupy the homestead with his family six months of each year, and to build a habitable house in the last year and occupy it three months, and that immediately after this occupation he should apply for his patent. In many cases parties have carried out the provisions, but have left their lands, and have not applied for their patent next prior to the three months' residence, and the Dominion Lands Commissioner held that the three months occupation had to be gone over again. He is supported in that view by the Department of Justice, and this is to correct that inconvenience, for I consider it nothing more. The next clause deals with the five years provision, which compels, amongst other things, the breaking up of five acres Mr. FEATHERSTON.

three subsequent years. This is to allow the patent to be issued, provided the occupation has been made in three successive years, even if the five or ten acres are not broken. I also propose, and it will be for the House to consider whether the proposition is advisable or not, to do away, after the 1st of January, 1892, with the two-mile radius clause and also to the five years clause. I have always contended that the simpler our land laws are the better, and would do away with a great number of grievances and delays. The obligation to occupy 160 acres for three years, for a period of six months in each year of personal occupation, is a simple, liberal law, and if we can confine ourselves to that we will have very little trouble in working out the land laws in the North-West. By clause 8 I propose that the patent shall be applied for within a period of five years from the date of the homestead entry. There are several other clauses in connection with the lien clauses of the Dominion Lands Act, one of which is to enable the settler who has taken in advance some small amount of $200 or $300 on his homestead to increase the amount to a maximum of In cases where a loan has been made for an amount to a settler on his first settlement, it has been held that no further sum can be advanced. This is to allow a further advance up to the maximum allowed by the Act. Clause 12 also has reference to these clauses; and we will allow some other items to be charged in the account of the settler, such as those for passage and medical attendance. Clause 13 repeals the granting of subsidies in lands to certain railway companies where they affect the clauses of this Act.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not rise to discuss the provisions of this Bill on its first reading, but I desire to suggest to the Minister that between this and the second reading of the Bill he should consider some further changes. As he is dealing with the two-mile radius, he might probably provide, and I know it can be done by Order in Council, that those persons who can now use the two-mile radius might be allowed to do that in the case of cancelled lands. At present, there is an Order in Council preventing that from being done, and as some steps have been taken in regard to liberalizing the provisions in regard to cancelled lands, I think the Minister might go still further, and allow persons who take advantage of the two-mile radius to do so, whether they want to settle on cancelled lands or not. For instance, we have north of Regina at present an Ontario farmer, a man named Miller, and his two sons. They would like to use for the benefit of the two sons the two-miles radius provision, but they cannot do so, because the lands are cancelled; whereas any Englishman, Irishman or Scotchman could come in there and use that provision. I think this suggestion will commend itself to the Minister, and I hope the hon. gentleman will do something to get rid of the grievance that these persons conceive themselves to have. Then there is the question of the 80-acre homestead and the 80-acre pre-emption. An arrangement was made a few years ago that these people might keep their homestead of 80 acres and might get a 160 acre pre-emption, or they might make the homestead 160 acres and take 80 acres the first year, ten acres the second year, and an for a pre-emption. I think that hardly solves the occupation of six months each year during the difficulty, because there is often no opportunity of taking a pre-emption near the homestead, and in many cases it is of very little advantage if the only possible pre-emption is at a distance from the homestead. I think, as the 80-acre rule has been violated, the Government might allow those who entered originally for an 80 acre homestead and an 80-acre pre-emption to get both for a homestead. When the question was before the House recently-and I do not desire to refer to a previous debate, further than to quote the dictum of the Minister of Justice, with which I agree entirely, he said:

"This Government is the executive of the North-West. There must be an executive somewhere. We do not propose that there shall be an executive Government in the North-West itself, and we have never yet conferred an executive power on any body in that territory."

I agree with that statement, and I think it is a wholesome thing under the present condition of affairs; but that being so, I would fain impress upon the Government the necessity of providing for all those things which an executive there would provide for, and one of those things is that to which I have already called the attention of the Government—that is, to do full justice to the immigration needs of the North-West Territories. enough that the Minister here should have his attention directed to that, because no one here can properly deal with the local needs of the North-West; and I may say that Sir John Macdonald told us that he intended a couple of years ago, in fact when he gave us the advisory board he told us that he intended to place a considerable sum-not a very large sum, but a considerable sum-in the contingencies for this matter, which might give scope for the energy and statesmanship of the North-West Territories in dealing with the question of immigration. ('onnected more nearly, however, with this Bill, would be a question which has been discussed in the North-West Territories, and that is giving lands for a university. It may be said that it is premature to give lands now for a university. may be said that by-and-bye we shall have to divide up the Territories into districts or into provinces, and that it will not be convenient to make this grant now, because each of those provinces may require land for a university of its own. But if we gave lands now to endow a university in a central part of the North-West which might be for the whole of the Territories, we should, perhaps, escape from the evil which attends university life and university energy in all the provinces, where we know that it is the curse of our higher education that you have universities competing for students and not students competing for universi-The consequence is, that the curriculum is lower and that men are actually passing in the honours grade who could not possibly, in a university where the curriculum is higher and the examination stiffer, pass for an ordinary degree. I am simply echoing the words of one of the most distinguished professors of the University of Toronto. I think the Government might consider whether they will not set aside lands now for the university of the future, and choose a site which might be central, no matter how the Territories may be divided up, so that we might hope to escape from the depressing influence, from the standpoint of higher education, of having a number of competing universities. We know what the result is in Ontario ter from him, stating that there were four augers, and in other provinces. I may say in passing—and these were in the hands of the Assembly.

and I think I may be permitted to say it, though it has not a strict bearing on the Bill, but it has on this North-West question, and I want to stop short here of the Minister of the Interior, and allow my remarks to go to the Minister of Finance-I hope the Minister of Finance will consider the petition which has been sent to him on the subject of the grant for our schools. That petition, sent from Moose Jaw and other places, stated the case very strongly against lowering the grant for schools. The other evening, when we were altering a clause in the North-West Territories Act, the question whether we should have the power to deal with irrigation was discussed, and it was decided that a local House should not have that power; and I am not surprised at that decision, because we own none of the public domain. The public domain is entirely under the control of this Government, and therefore I point out to the Government here that the statement of the Minister of Justice being irrefragable, that this Government is the real Government of the North-West Territories, and no power being given to the North-West Council to deal with the question of irrigation, and very properly not, then the responsibility in dealing with any lands in which the water question is concerned rests with this Government rather than with the Territories, and the duty of dealing with that question of irrigation rests with this Government and not with the Government of the North-West Territories. A petition was sent to the Minister of the Interior some time ago from Moose An address was sent to myself from Moose Jaw, pointing out that in some of the finest portions of the North-West Territories, in some of the best portions of the Moose Jaw district, the problem of water supply had not been solved; and what they wanted- and it is not an unreasonable request—is that the Government should take the responsibility of finding out the depth at which water can be had, and if the Government will take that responsibility, and find out the depth at which water can be had, they, themselves, will bear the expense of forming companies to dig wells for the benefit of the settlers. I say that when it is found in a country that presents every possible feature of attraction that water cannot be got, then the Government are responsible for showing these settlers at what depth water can be had. Of course, if water can be had at 60, or 80, or 100, or 120 feet, farmers can do that themselves, but where it is a question of going still deeper, their funds give out, and they cannot do it. Now, what they want the Government to do is to ascertain by tests the distance at which water can be found, and they themselves will afterwards work out the matter, so far as it relates to any given section or quarter section. In fact, it would pay the Government well to sink a well at the point where any four sections meet. They would then have 16 quarter sections, the furthest one of them within three-fourths of a mile or so distant, and on the nearest one the well would be almost at the door of the settler. Suppose that the cost of sinking such an artesian well amounted to $1,000; divide that by 16, and you have the amount of lien that the Government would have on each farm, and it is an amount that the farmers would be glad to pay. Now, when I wrote to the Minister of the Interior on the subject of well-digging I got a let-

But I need not say that four augers are not enough since he made the promise. Can he give us any to deal with this water question in the North-West Territories; it is an agrarian question, and I would, therefore, urge on the Minister to look into this matter. It would be more appropriate when we are in Committee to discuss this question in detail, as bearing on the suggestion that something should be | last returns, I suppose we shall have to wait too. done in the way of well-digging. Therefore, I shall not dwell upon that now. But I have made these requests to the Government, and some of them would involve an expenditure. I may say that nobody can take our population into account, and take into consideration the basis on which the subsidy is given to each province, without seeing that we are entitled to something additional. We have no debt, and if we make a calculation on the basis on which Manitoba came in you will find that we are entitled: to something near $400,000, and if that is so, then there will be a large margin still to our credit, after every provision has been made for digging wells. I hope a large sum will be put in the Estimates which will enable the North-West to deal with all | men were dismissed. If the Minister has any more these subjects themselves, and that the advantages at Saskatchewan, Alberta and Assiniboia may be pressed on the attention of the immigrating public.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In reference to the remarks made at the commencement of the hon, gentleman's speech regarding cancelled lands and giving an opportunity to parties to take up cancelled lands within a two-mile radius, and also with reference to the 80-acre homesteads, I think both subjects might be dealt with without any further legislation. I think that, with regard to the 80acre homesteads, a memoranda is now before Council, and it has been engaging my serious consideration during the greater part of the session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CENSUS RETURNS.

Mr. CASEY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the hon. Postmaster General, who is in charge of the census, whether he has any prospect now of bringing down the figures that were spoken of a few days ago any sooner than he expected? If I recollect aright he said at the time there were only one or two returns to be got in, and then the information in the hands of the department would be complete, and that he would put on an increased clerical staff and prepare the figures for the House. It is now nearly two weeks since we spoke about it.

Mr. HAGGART. I think I told the hon, gentleman that there were two or three returns that were not yet in, but that we could make an estimate of what the probable population of those places would be, and I could have an approximate return of the population within two or three days. But I understood it was the feeling of the House that it would, perhaps, be improper to make a return until I could give the exact figures to the House, and on that ground I did not make any return.

Mr. CASEY: The hon. gentleman said he would put on an extra clerical force. The hon, gentlem in at first expected that the returns would be ready, at all events, three weeks from that time, even without the extra help, and it is now two weeks if it is printed. Mr. DAVIN.

estimate to-day when he expects to have them down? I did not understand that it was the feeling of the House-unanimous, at all events-that we should wait until everything is finished; but, of course, as he says he is going to wait until he gets the very

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon, gentleman wants an incomplete return I suppose I can get it ready for him in a couple of days.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister knows very well that I did ask for that return, and I still want it.

P. E. I. RAILWAY—DISMISSALS.

Mr. PERRY. I wish to call the attention of the acting Minister of Railways to the fact that the return ordered by the House concerning the dismissal of two officers of the Prince Edward Island Railway has been brought down, but it is not complete. There are no reasons given why those information to give, I want it.

Mr. BOWELL. I gave the hon, gentleman all the information I had. I asked for the correspondence and it was handed to me. These men were informed that their services were no longer required, and they had to go.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The incompleteness of the return consists in the fact that there is no letter, or telegram, or report, apparently, made to the chief engineer on which he bases the dismissal. Now, it is inconceivable that an order should go from Ottawa dismissing employés of the Prince Edward Island Railway from office without some representation having been made to the authorities, and the report, as brought down, does not contain a scrap of information that any report has ever been made, or letter, or telegram, or notice of any kind have been sent to the chief engineer on which he bases that peremptory dismissal. The matter is apparently a small one, but it possesses immense interest in the locality, because the people are anxious to know why these two gentlemen, who possess estimable characters and are known to be excellent workmen, were summarily dismissed. If the hon, member states that the chief superintendent did it of his own mere motion, without communicating with the acting Minister, the matter must rest there; but the reason on its face is very imperfect. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will explain the matter.

Mr. BOWELL. I will make enquiries and see what is in it.

THE LANGEVIN BLOCK.

Mr. MULOCK. I rise to enquire from the Secretary of State the cause of the delay in the distribution of the evidence in the matter of the Langevin Block?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have not the matter in charge. I think the evidence has been printed. My department has charge of the distribution of documents outside of the session, not during the session.

At the suggestion of the Min-Mr. MULOCK. ister of Finance, I applied to the clerk of the Com-I understand the evidence is not printed, mittee. up to this moment—at all events, it is not available

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think it is printed.

Mr. MULOCK. It is no use if it is printed, if we have not got it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is none of my concern. It is the concern of the officers of the Committee and those who have charge of the distribution of parliamentary documents during the session, and I repeat it has nothing to do with my department.

THE MEMBER FOR QUEBEC WEST.

On the Order,

That Thomas McGreevy, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Quebec West, the witness named in the Report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted to this House on the 12th day of August instant, do attend in his place in this House, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon, member for Quebec West in his place?

No answer being made—

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed by the Clerk that a copy of the Order of the House of Thursday last, duly signed by himself, was forwarded by post on Friday last to Hon. Thomas McGreevy at Quebec, when it was learned that he was not at Ottawa, and a telegram communicating the Order was at the same time sent him at Quebec. The manager of the North-Western Telegraph Company at Quebec has informed the Clerk that the telegram was duly delivered to Hon. Thomas McGreevy on Friday last at 2.45 p.m., in the office of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Bowell:

That the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, member for the Electoral District of Quebec West, not having attended this day in his place in this House, pursuant to the Order of the House of the 13th day of August instant, be taken into the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms attending this House; and that Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant accordingly: ingly.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means, on the following Resolutions:

1. Resolved. That it is expedient to amend Bill (No. 155) intituled: "An Act to amend the Acts respecting the Duties of Customs," by striking out sub-sections 7 and 8 of section 1, and substituting the following in lieu thereof: 7. Ale, beer and porter, when imported in casks or otherwise than in bottles, sixteen cents per gallon.

8. Ale, beer and porter, when imported in bottles (six quart or twelve pint bottles to be held to contain one gallon), twenty-four cents per gallon.

lon), twenty-four cents per gallon.

2. Resolved. That it is expedient to amend Bill (No. 116) intituled: "An Act further to amend 'The Inland Revenue Act." by striking out in the 41st line of sub-section 177, section 12, the word "eight" and substituting therefor the word "ten."

3. Resolved, That the foregoing duties of Customs and Excise shall have effect from and after the 18th day of August, 1891.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the Minister of Finance please explain any changes he proposes to make?

Mr. FOSTER. I will state briefly what is proposed to be done. There are changes proposed by these resolutions in the items of beer, ale and por-made from other than malt, that is, from sugar, rice or corn. The object of these resolutions is to make the duty on the imported article and also the Excise duty on beer which is made from sugar higher than it had been placed by the preceding resolutions. In Canada, so far, beer has been almost exclusively made from malt, and the Excise duty has been higher upon beer which was made from sugar, rice and corn, that is, other than malt, the object being patent to the Committee. Now that the malt duties have been raised 100 per cent., and the amount to be levied two cents instead of one, it became necessary to raise correspondingly, in fact it has been raised a little more than correspondingly, the amount of Excise duty to be levied upon beer which should be made from sugar, corn or rice, the object being to prevent the manufacture of that kind of beer on equal conditions with malt, so as to prevent the manufacture of beer of poorer quality, and also to preserve, as I have said, the manufacture of beer from malt.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When did the hon. gentleman say it was of good quality?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman must not interrupt me when I am making an explanation. It has, therefore, been thought proper to raise the Excise tax on beer made from sugar from 4 cents, which it was before, to 10 cents; and that having been resolved upon, it became necessary to place a corresponding duty upon the imported article so as to make it equal, and therefore 6 cents has been added to imported ale, beer and porter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In place of what?

Mr. FOSTER. We had proposed an increase of 3 cents, and we now propose an increase of 6 cents. The way the matter will affect the percentage of duty is this: I find the English imports of ale, beer and porter, at the rate we propose, that is those imported in bottles, will range cent. on an average. For the imports from the United States, which is beer of a cheaper quality, the duty will range about 40 per cent. on an average of the whole imports, and the average upon both American and British imports will be 33 per cent. As to the ale, beer and porter which is imported in casks, the percentage will be somewhat higher; that upon the British imports will be 40 per cent., and that upon the United States imports will be about 60 per cent. The House must recollect that we have doubled the malt duty, and by that means have caused a very large accretion to the revenue from that industry, and it is only fair that an equivalent protection, and in fact a large protection, in the way of an import duty, should be placed upon the imported article. Judges of this article tell meand I must appeal in this case to my friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to know whether I am right in this conclusion or not—that most excellent beer is made at our Canadian breweries; that it is made from malt, and that it is pure. I have no doubt they can supply the whole demand.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You will have to ask your colleague about that.

Mr. FOSTER. The fact that we increase the Excise duty upon all ale and beer that is made from other than malt will agree with the strongly exter imported, and also in the Excise duty on beer | pressed conviction of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) yesterday, when he deprecated the that in England the materials of which beer may

Mr. CASEY: There are one or two points in this that, perhaps, have escaped the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance. When he doubled the duty upon malt, he certainly did something to discourage the use of mait as a material for making ale and beer, and to that extent he diminished the market afforded to the Canadian farmer for his barley. fact our farmers have been struck doubly of late, both by the United States legislation and by our By the McKinley Bill our market for barley in the States has been cut off, and by the increased duty on malt the consumption of barley for the purpose of making ale and beer is further diminished. Now, looking at this from the hon, gentleman's point of view in his former capacity as an advocate of temperance, that might be a good thing if it led to a diminution in the production of ale and beer: but it appears that the diminished use of barley malt for that purpose is not going to lead to a reduction in the amount of beer produced. It seems that the Government allows now the production of ale and beer from sugar, corn and rice, and while they have restricted the farmers market by increased taxes upon malt, they are now permitting brewers to use the other materials that are available for the production of a sort of bogus beer. The product of the farmer has been struck in two directions and the product of the brewer has not been struck The brewer whose malt is made dearer is to be allowed to use something else, and he certainly will use these other materials in spite of the increased Excise duty, if they are much cheaper than the malt, and we shall still have an equal quantity of beer produced from inferior materials; we shall decrease the quantity of beer produced from barley, which, as the hon. Minister can learn from his own colleagues, is the best beer. He has a colleague in the Government who is much better qualified to instruct him in the quality of beer than the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills.) The hon. Minister of Agriculture, who, perhaps, should be more properly Minister of Excise, can give him full information on that point, and may have some special interest in this question of the privilege which is given to brewers to make bogus beer out of these articles which the hon. Minister has named: He says that the increased Excise duty they have put upon this bogus beer renders it necessary still further to increase the duty on imported ale and beer; that is to say, having allowed the use of these bogus materials instead of genuine malt and hops, they have so arranged the tariff as to protect the home manufacture of the bogus beer. I think it is rather a strange proposition, coming especially from a gentleman of the hon. Minister's well-known principles, that we should relax the Excise laws so as to permit the use of inferior materials, and should then protect the inferior beer made from these inferior materials by a 60 per cent. duty. I do not think that such a change in the law can be considered as favourable to anybody, except to the brewer who is allowed to make cheap beer and is protected against foreign competition in doing so. Neither can it be regarded as being favourable to the cause of temperance. The hon. Minister of Finance, if he is not aware himself, Mr. FOSTER.

We propose to discourage that, linguidients than malt and hops are allowed to be used the percentage allowed is restricted. I do not know what change has been made hitherto in the proposed regulations in this respect, but I should judge that from what the Minister says and from the change he has made in the tariff, it is now allowed, and there is no restriction in force against the use of corn, rice, and sugar in making beer. I protest against this in the name of the farmer whose market for barley is thus injured, and on behalf of those in the country who may be, as the Minister of Finance thinks, foolish enough to use beer, and who will by this means be exposed to the risk of drinking a very inferior article. I would ask the Minister whether any means are to be adopted to distinguish beer made from corn, rice and sugar. from ale and beer made from barley, when it was put on the market? Is it to be marked in any way, or is it to be sold in competition with the genuine article?

Mr. FOSTER. I can scarcely understand what my hon, friend from Elgin (Mr. Casey) is driving at. He seems to accuse us of acting so as to encourage the making of inferior beer from sugar, whereas no change whatever is made in that direction under the present resolutions. I think my hon, friend is mistaken. They could make such beer if they pleased before these resolutions were introduced, but if they made beer out of sugar, they had to pay 4 cents Excise duty per gallon, as against 3 cents Excise duty per gallon on the beer made from malt. That was the corrective. Instead of acting in the direction of making it easier to make beer from sugar, as my hon, friend incorrectly thinks, this resolution is going in exactly the opposite direction. Now they may make beer from sugar, but if they do, they must pay 10 cents per gallon Excise duty, as against 6 cents per gallon Excise duty upon beer made from malt. The extra duty was put on the beer made from other than malt, in order, in the first place, that the best kind of beer might be made in the country; and in the second place, so far as that is an encouragement to the farmer in the growth of barley, that this encouragement in that respect should not be taken away, but should be increased. The privilege has always existed for them to make beer from sugar, or corn, or rice.

Mr. CASEY. Without restriction?

Mr. FOSTER. Without restriction.

Mr. CASEY. I was not aware that the use of these articles for making beer was unrestrictedly allowed before.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been entirely unrestricted, but the Excise duty has operated with such force that up to this time I doubt, from the reports of the officers, if any beer has been made from sugar or from anything else than malt.

Mr. CASEY. I thought that here, as in England, there were Excise regulations stating what articles might be used along with malt for making beer. But on the other hand, I cannot agree with the hon. Minister that this increased Excise duty is a further restriction on the use of those materials, because while he puts on an increased Excise duty, he puts on at the same time a proportional import may find out by enquiry amongst his colleagues, | duty, and the manufacturer has a much higher protection against foreign competition than he had before.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister has stated what specific duty he proposes. Can he state what the Excise duty on malt would amount to as an ad valorem tax on the article produced

Mr. FOSTER. The Excise duty upon malt is now 2 cents per pound. It will depend on the amount of malt that is necessary to produce a gallon of beer. Less than 3 pounds is the average in the country; but suppose you take 3 pounds, the duty would amount to 6 cents on the gallon.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What value would the gallon be? I want to get the Excise on an ad ratorem basis, so as to see what the amount of pro-

Mr. FOSTER. There is a difference of opinion as to what it costs to make a gallon of beer. If our beer were as strong as the English beer, probably more malt would be taken to make it, so that the Excise duty would be much more in comparison.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course, the protection which the home brewer will have will be the difference between the Excise duty and the import duty. What difference exists between the two?

Mr. FOSTER. The measure of protection would be about 6 cents a gallon, if you calculate about 3 pounds of malt to the gallon. The difference between the Excise duty and the import duty on the same quality of beer, would be in bottles 18 cents and in casks 10 cents.

Mr. ('ASEY. Well, I am sure that in the case of much of the beer imported this amounts to 100 per cent. protection. American lager beer is produced very cheaply, and this amounts to an enormously high duty ad ralorem. Of course, as the Minister cannot tell us the cost of a gallon of beer, we are left somewhat in the dark.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably about 20 cents a gallon.

Mr. CASEY. It would not be fair to take the cost of the beer entered at the frontier by which to measure the protection. The measure of protection is the cost to the brewer. If his beer costs him 15 cents a gallon or less to make it, he has about 100 per cent. protection. That is the effect of the tariff now proposed, and it is certainly a much greater encouragement than most other manufacturers get. But returning to the question of the materials of which beer should be made, I think it would have been the duty of the Minister, under these circumstances, considering the injury already done to the barley crop by the McKinley Bill, to take away from the brewers entirely this liberty, which he says they have always enjoyed, of using other substances than malt for the manufacture of beer, or at all events to limit the use of those substances to a very small percentage. If he really wants to improve the barley market in Canada, without injury to the cause of public morality, and without increasing the amount of beer consumed in the country, he can do it by providing that malt must be used altogether, or so much malt and only a certain percentage of anything else along with malt, in the manufacture of beer. In that way he to encourage that. Well, I think you are giving pretty ample protection, indeed. In the case of the duty on lager beer—I speak, of course, under can improve the barley market without doing any injury to temperance principles.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon, friend is concerned as to the quality of his beer, we have been very careful in that respect. A man has two sources of material open to him in the manufacture of beer. If he makes it out of malt, he pays about 6 cents Excise duty; but if he chooses to make it out of other articles than malt, he will have to pay 10 cents per gallon. Consequently, the inducement, which has been very strong in the past, seems to be far stronger now, to make beer entirely from malt, and to eschew the use of such things as corn and rice; and that is in the interest of the barley grower.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think the inducement is stronger to make the beer out of malt, because the protection is maintained at the same point as before, if it is not higher. But the point I was urging was that the Minister should restrain the use of other materials, and to that extent give protection to our home-grown barley, which will be the means of helping the Canadian farmer.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to enquire of the Minister of Finance if a rebate is granted upon malt when exported, and to what extent?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure about the article of malt; but the question is not a practical question, because there is none exported. I know that a relate is not now allowed upon the product of corn made by the distillers and exported.

Mr. McMULLEN. My question was whether a rebate is allowed to malt producers on the malt exported, and what is the rebate?

Mr. FOSTER. I have told the hon, gentleman that I was not sure as to whether there was or not. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue says he thinks the law allows it but that there is no export duty, so that it is not a practical question.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It might become so. It is very often convenient, and might become convenient in the case of our brewers just now, to turn a great deal of their barley into malt; and it is quite possible it may become, whether it is or not so now, a question of some considerable moment. Unless I am greatly misinformed, barley can be preserved very much better in the shape of malt than in any other way. It is dangerous to keep barley for a long time, but when malted it can be preserved for a long time. The question my hon, friend (Mr. McMullen) has raised is worthy of consideration. I do not recollect sufficiently, speaking off-hand, to say what the provisions of the Excise are in this respect, but I should think that, within proper restrictions, barley ought to be allowed to be converted into malt, under conditions to prevent frauds on the revenue, and exported

Mr. FOSTER. I will look into that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand the other question my hon. friend has raised, it is desirable for the Finance Minister to encourage the manufacture of good wholesome beer.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, if we must have it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You intend

 $126\frac{1}{3}$

beer, which requires but a very moderate quantity of malt, the cost of production in a large manufactory will be found very small, and that the duty which the hon, gentleman proposes to inflict, and which, I think, is as high as 24 cents per dozen in bottles

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—will be found to give vastly greater protection than he expects. He estimates that at an average of sixty. I should fancy it would run very much more, perhaps double that. However, I make that observation off-hand and without the data I should like to have. seems an exorbitant protection, even for so desirable an object as the encouragement of the wholesale manufacture of native beer, and ought to be carefully considered.

Mr. FOSTER. I took my figures from the Trade and Navigation Returns, and, according to the valuation given there, the percentages are as I stated. I may state now to the hon, member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen), that malt may be exported in bond without the payment of any Excise duty; that is, the duty is taken off on the malt being exported. I admit to my hon, friend that this is a desirable protection.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very.

Mr. FOSTER. I am impelled to it now more than formerly by the strong representations of the hon, member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) who argues that, if we are to have beer drunk here, we ought to have it, as far as possible, made from our malt, and thus stimulate the production of barley by our farmers. I am open to his arguments in that respect, and consequently think that the effect of the duty is a strong ground for its maintenance.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister does not for a moment wish to pretend that, under the protection he is giving to the native brewer of lager, he is giving protection to the farmer. He allows the native brewer to use corn, glucose, molasses, rice, almost anything else he chooses instead of malt. The only protection to the farmer would be to compel the brewer to use malt and hops instead of these other articles. If he wants to have a native beer made from good materials, let him provide that only malt shall be used in its manu-Then we will undoubtedly increase the market for Canadian barley. But after putting on increased Excise all round, he allows, over and above that, a protection to the brewer of nearly 100 per cent. on his production. That does not at all benefit the farmer. This is a Bill to enable the brewer to charge increased prices for his beer, and the effect is seen in the fact that brewers all round are charging increased prices. The brewer is are charging increased prices. The brewer is making very large increased profits out of the change of the law and the farmer is making none. The increased protection is out of proportion to the increase in Excise, as there is more percentage of difference between the Excise and the Customs duty than there was before. It certainly appears as if the brewing element in the Cabinet had got the start of the temperance element and even the agricultural element.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister should adopt the suggestion of an eminent Sir Richard Cartwright.

correction—I rather fancy that in the case of lager by providing that every quart bottle shall hold a quart.

> Mr. CASEY. Will not the Minister adopt my suggestion by introducing an additional resolution providing that only those materials may be used?

> Mr. FOSTER. I have gone a long way to meet the arguments of my hon. friend, and they have essentially helped me in my contest with the hon, member for South Oxford. I will take his suggestion into serious consideration.

> Mr. CASEY. As the hon, gentleman has gone a long way to help the brewers, I want him to go a little way to help the farmers.

SUPPLY-U. S. TREATY WITH CUBA.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BORDEN. Before you leave the Chair, I desire to make an enquiry of the Government, of which I had given notice to the Minister of Finance, relating to the recent trade arrangements which have been concluded between the United States and Spain. The enquiry of which I gave notice to the hon. Minister is as follows:-

Whether, in view of the convention of 1886 existing between Great Britain and Spain, the products of Canada will be admitted to Cuba and Porto Rico at the rate of duties provided by the recent commercial arrangements between the United States and Spain for Cuba and Porto

My reason for making this enquiry is that many persons who are largely engaged in the export trade of the Maritime Provinces to Cuba and Porto Rico are in doubt whether the recent arrangement between the United States and Spain has any reference to articles exported from Canada to Cuba and Porto Rico. The fact of this uncertainty existing is having a very bad effect on the trade between this country and Cuba, especially in the articles of lumber, fish and potatoes, and I think it is of the utmost consequence that the Government should state, if they are in a position to do so, at once, whether or not in their opinion the most-favoured-nation clause of the Treaty of 1886 between Great Britain and Spain will apply to this treaty, and whether the products of Canada exported to Cuba will be treated there as favourably as the products of the United States under the arrangement to which I have referred. think it is proper that this information should be asked from the Government. Certainly the Government had ample time to inform themselves in regard to it, and it is impossible for the people to have informed themselves from any other source. It is well known that this commercial arrangement which has been concluded between the United States and Spain has been under consideration since January last. The first correspondence on the subject was a letter addressed by Mr. Blaine Irish statesman and look to the consumer's interests | to the Spanish Minister in January last. It is well known that the treaty was concluded so long ago as June, and that it was proclaimed on the 1st of this present month, so that the Government have had ample opportunity to become informed of the facts in reference to which I enquire. The importance of this trade need hardly be referred to. Minister of Finance and every hon, gentleman from the Maritime Provinces is as well aware of it or better than I am. Since I gave my notice to the Minister, however, I observe that the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax have passed certain resolutions on this matter, and as they are short, and contain the whole question in a nutshell, I will read them to the House:

"Whereas a treaty has just made between the United States and Spain whereby fish, potatoes, lumber and other natural products of the United States are to be admitted free into the Islands of Cuba and Porto Rico. said treaty to come into effect the first day of September poyt; and said treaty to come into effect the first day of September next; and

"Whereas a treaty now exists between Spain and Great Britain, expiring July 1st of next year, containing a favoured nation clause, which gives the right for all products of a similar nature to be admitted free from Great Britain and her colonies; and

"Whereas our export of fish to the Spanish West Indies amounts to about 250,000 quintals per annum, besides pickled fish; and

"Whereas the Island of Cuba has of late become our principal market for potatoes which is an article of export of great value to the farmers of this province; and

"Whereas the latest advices from Havana indicate that the Government of the Island of Cuba put a construction on the treaty with Great Britain which prohibits the import of said articles from Canada on the same terms as from the United States under the treaty just concluded; as from the United States under the treaty just concluded;

therefore be it

"Resolved, that the Board of Trade, representing the various interests of the province, do most earnestly invite the immediate attention of the Dominion Government to this important matter, praying they will make prompt representations to the Imperial Government and invite their good offices in placing our trade with these Islands on a satisfactory basis whereby our products may be admitted on as favourable terms as similar products from admitted on as favourable terms as similar products from the United States.

I desire to call the attention of the Government especially to these words:

"The latest advices from Havana indicate that the Government of the Island of Cuba put a construction on the treaty with Great Britain which prohibits the import of said articles from Canada on the same terms as from the United States under the treaty just concluded."

If that is the general belief in commercial circles, as I understand it is, the hon. gentleman and the House will see that trade for the present season will be absolutely paralyzed. I am speaking specially of the trade in potatoes, because I represent a constituency from which last year we exported to Cuba from 50,000 to 100,000 barrels, and those gentlemen who are engaged in that trade will not undertake to carry it on unless they have some assurance that the provisions of the new treaty will apply to Canada as well as to the United States. I observe, in reading the papers in connection with the discussion which led up to the recent treaty between the United States and Spain, that language like this occurs. In a communication from the Minister for Spain to Mr. Blaine, he says that the Spanish Government:

"Has decided to respond, as promptly and as fully as its national interests and international engagements permit, to the legislation of the Congress of the United States, as set forth in the note of January 3 above mentioned."

And again the following language is used. refers to "the desire of both Governments that said arrangement should have a definitive character international engagements." I think it is clear that the Minister representing the Spanish Government had a very strong notion that the Government of Spain was under certain treaty obligations. than that, I observe that this treaty is divided into There is a temporary arrangement two parts. which takes force from the 1st September next and continues till July, 1892, which is the date when the convention now existing between Great Britain and Spain comes to a termination. So I think it is fair to infer from these papers that under the Spanish treaty with Great Britain and other countries, they shall be entitled to the benefit of the favoured-nation clause until the treaty expires in July of next year. I will turn now to the treaty itself, dated the 26th April, 1886, between the Governments of Great Britain and Spain, respecting the commercial relations of the two countries. article I, I find this:

"The Government of Her Majesty the Queen Regent of Spain will grant to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to Her Britannic Majesty's Colonies and foreign possessions, most favoured nation treatment in all that concerns commerce, navigation and consular rights and privileges in Spain, and in the Spanish Colonies and foreign possessions, co-extensive in amount of benefit with that accorded to France and Germany under the treaties of the 6th February, 1882, and the 12th July, 1883."

So here the treaties between Spain and France and Germany, respectively, are referred to, and are made a part of the convention of 1886 between Great Britain and Spain. Now, turning to the treaty between Spain and France, article 14 reads as follows :-

"Each of the two high contracting parties engages to accord to the other, immediately and without compensation, every favour and all privileges or reductions in the import and export tariff of duties upon articles, whether mentioned or not in the present treaty, which either has granted or may hereafter grant to a third power."

Again, in the treaty between Spain and Germany, in article 9, we read:

"Each of the two high contracting parties binds itself to grant to the other, in the import or export of goods, whether specified or not in the present treaty, immediately and unconditionally, every favour, privilege, or reduction in import or export duties which one of them has ex-tended or shall hereafter extend to a third power."

Now, it would seem to me, though not a lawyer, nor a very extensive student of constitutional law, very clear that so far as our trade with Cuba and Porto Rico is concerned, until the expiration of this treaty now existing between Great Britain and Spain, we are entitled to the same favours which are being extended until July of next year by Spain to the Government of the United States. I understand it is claimed by the United States that in a case where special concessions are made by two powers in matters of trade and reciprocity, the most-favoured-nation clause does not apply. Well, in answer to that it may be said that in so far as the concessions which are being made by the United States to Spain are concerned, they are not special concessions. This trade arrangement with Spain is being made under the McKinley Tariff Bill, and under that tariff the concessions with respect to the duties on sugar and molasses are made to the world, at any rate at the present moment they exist as towards the whole world. Now, the particular enquiry which I desire to make I have already presented, and I again emphasize the fact that it is more important with respect to the temfrom the time when Spain shall be free from her porary arrangement which has been made. Of course, anything that may arise after the expiration of the treaty is quite beyond our present enquiry, and we need not be particularly anxious about it at this moment, because there is ample time to make arrangements for the future. I have no doubt, however, that the Government are pressing upon the British Government the importance of extending the Convention of 1886 beyond 1892. In addition to the information I have asked for, I would like to ask the Minister whether Spain has given notice to Great Britain of her intention to terminate the treaty of 1886. I understand by the wording of the treaty that one year's notice must be given. I would also suggest that if there be any correspondence with reference to this matter which can be laid upon the Table of the House, the Government would do well to let us have it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FOSTER. The question which my hon. friend from King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden) has brought before the House, is one of very considerable importance, especially to the Province of Nova Scotia and the Maritime Provinces generally. Since the announcement of the conclusion of the arrangement made by the United States with Spain, and its publication in the press, a great many representations have been directed to the Government in respect to this matter, from individual persons concerned in the trade with the Spanish Antilles, and from boards of trade, notably from the Halifax Board of Trade, a memorial from which my hon, friend has read. I may say, also, that individual members in the House have pressed the matter upon the attention of the Government, and none more strongly than my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs). My hon, friend has so thoroughly laid the chief points in the matter before the House that it is not necessary for me to recapitulate. In fact, if he had simply asked me the question, in order to make my answer intelligent to the House, I should first have read the very sections of the different treaties which the hon, gentleman himself saved me the trouble of reading. In brief, then, to reply to his question, I may say that the convention of 1886 between Great Britain and Spain, in which the Government of Canada took very special interest, through Sir Charles Tupper, the High Commissioner, thoroughly safeguarded the interests of Canada and secured for her, amongst the other possessions of Great Britain, the most-favoured-nation treatment in the Spanish Antilles. That convention lasts, as my hon, friend said, till 1892. I believe notice has been given of its termination at that time and one would termination at that time, and one would be led to suppose that from the wording of the arrangement itself. If, then, that convention of 1886 procured for Canada, as one of the British colonial possessions, the most-favourednation treatment during its continuance, I cannot do otherwise than hold that up to the 1st of July, 1892, products similar in kind to those mentioned in the schedules in the Spanish American arrangement, take their place in the markets of the Spanish West India Islands on an equal footing with like products from the United States of American That is made still stronger by the fact mentioned by my hon. friend, that there are two parts in this arrangement, and that the definitive treaty is expressly stated not to come into force until the international obligations, evidently referring to the | relation to the treaty with Denmark and the treaty Mr. Borden.

convention with Great Britain and the treaties with Germany and France, —until those obligations leave Spain free to carry out, to a larger extent, the arrangements with the United States. to the contention of the United States that my hon, friend has mentioned, namely, that in so much as this is a treaty of reciprocity where something is given for something, and that, therefore, the most-favoured-nation clause would not prevent an arrangement between Spain and the United States, certainly that contention falls to the ground entirely until the 1st of January, 1892, because up to that time Spain is given nothing of advantage in the markets of the United States which is not given to the whole world. The matter was taken up at the earliest possible moment by the Government and is being pressed at home. Of course, what is needed is the authoritative statement of the Spanish Government itself. That is what we are trying, through the British Government, to get, and we do not believe that Spain will do otherwise than carry out her international obligations. The trend of these is very fully pointed out by my hon, friend, and appears in the treaties the sections of which he read to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a very important question of international law with which the hon, gentleman in his capacity of Minister of Finance can hardly be supposed to be acquainted with, but which, probably, the Minister of Justice may have had occasion to consider, that is, the question whether, when two nations enter into a treaty of the nature of a reciprocity treaty such as he has alluded to, that is held to exempt them from the most-favoured-nation clause. Now, I speak with great diffidence, and I speak under correction, but it does occur to my mind that on the occasion of the formation of the German Zollverein a number of years ago, that question did come up, and speaking from memory, and under correction, I rather think that view was held. But I should like, as this is a matter of interest to all of us, and as it may have a very important bearing on future negotiations, to have the views of the Minister of Justice and of any hon, members of the House who have specially looked into the question of constitutional law. The Minister of Justice and the House generally will see that very important issues may come to depend on whether that contention can be maintained or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. At the time of the last conference on trade relations with the United States, I mean the conference which took place in the winter of 1887 and 1888, the subject was a very practical one, because there were treaties containing the most-favoured-nation clause which might interfere with our negotiations, and we took some pains to ascertain what the view of Her Majesty's Government then was as to that doctrine, and we understood it to be, without any doubt, that the provisions of a reciprocity treaty would not call in the operation of the most favoured nation clause in those outstanding treaties. I think that that view was very much strengthened by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the very question which has just been raised. On 1st October, 1886, the Supreme Court of the United States, through Mr. Justice Field, rendered a decision, as to a question which had been raised in with the Hawaiian Islands. The judgment is a long one, but I will refer as briefly as I can to the points set forth. The mode in which the question arose was this: As most members of the House are aware, a treaty, without any enactment, forms part of the law of the United States. A merchant doing business in New York in 1882 made importations of sugars and molasses, the produce and manufacture of the Island of St. Croix, which is part of the dominions of the King of Denmark. The goods were regularly entered in the Customs; and it was claimed that those goods should have come in free of duty in consequence of the fact that the treaty with Denmark contained the most-favoured-nation clause, and that subsequently was made the treaty with the King of the Hawaiian Islands to admit all those article free of duty from all those Islands. The decision is summarized as follows:

The treaty with the Hawaiian Islands makes no pro-Ine treaty with the Hawatian Islands makes no pro-vision for the imposition of any duties on goods, the pro-duce or manufacture of that country, imported into the United States. It stipulates for the exemption from duty of certain goods thus imported, in consideration of and as an equivalent for certain reciprocal concessions on the part of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States. There is in such exemption no violation of the stipulations in the treaty with Denmark, and if the exemption is deemed a 'particular favour' in respect of commerce and navia 'particular favour' in respect of commerce and navigation, within the first article of that treaty, it can only be claimed by Denmark upon like compensation to the United States. It does not appear that Denmark has ever United States. It does not appear that Denmark has ever United States. It does not appear that Denmark has ever objected to the imposition of duty upon goods from her Dominions imported into the United States, because of the exemption from duty of similar goods imported from the Hawaiian Islands, such exemption being in consideration of reciprocal concessions which she has never proposed to make. Our conclusion is, that the treaty with Denmark does not bind the United States to extend to that country, without compensation, privileges which they have conceded to the Hawaiian Islands in exchange for valuable concessions. On the contrary, the treaty provides that like compensation shall be given for such special favours. When such compensation is made, it will be time to consider whether sugar from her dominions will be time to consider whether sugar from her dominions shall be admitted free from duty."

Of course it may be that something may turn on the particular language of the treaties themselves, and I do not mean to put this decision forward as conclusive evidence as to the view of the United States on the broad question; but I think the intimation we have had from Her Majesty's Government in the past and this decision are all that can be had on the subject, unless there is some correspondence between Her Majesty's Government and other powers which we have not obtained.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, as I understand the hon. gentleman, following him as closely as I could, the authority he quoted is tolerably distinct that where a reciprocity treaty is concluded the most-favoured-nation clause does not take effect?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is the effect of it.

Mr. STAIRS. I should like to say a few words on this subject, on account of its great importance in regard to the trade interests of the Maritime Provinces, more especially those of Nova Scotia. The subject has been well brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden), though some time ago I took up the question, upon representations made to me from Nova Scotia, and I brought it to the notice of the Government. The reason why our people are so very much affected by the action of this treaty between Spain and the United States, as regards our trade between Cuba and Porto Rico, is that a considerable proportion of our exports are sent to those two Islands. Both of the fact which you already know, that a treaty has been made articles in which they are most especially interested have been referred to by the hon, member for King's, and they consist of potatoes and fish. think, from what I have heard of the hon. gentleman's own county, the operation of the treaty, if it should not include the exports from Nova Scotia, will be to seriously hamper the exports from that county to Cuba. The Havana market during the last few years has been a very important market for the export of potatoes from Nova Scotia, and it will be very much to be regretted if the effect of this treaty is to shut out those potatoes from that port. As to the constitutional question, I will not enter into it, but as a layman, I may say that any one reading the treaties, as read by the hon, member for King's (Mr. Borden), would naturally come to the conclusion at which he has arrived, that at least up to July, 1892, Canada is entitled to all the benefits in the Cuban markets to which the United States are entitled. But it seems to me there is another very important question that has to be considered, and it is this: What is going to occur after July, 1892? In pressing on the attention of the Government the importance of the whole question, I want to bring two points clearly before them: First, they must seek as quickly as possible a decision on the question as to the position of our exports up to July, 1892; and, second, they must ascertain what is to be done after that date. It is not for me to dictate, and possibly not even to suggest, to members of the Government how these decisions are to be obtained. I simply ask them to give this important subject their serious consideration, with a view to ascertain if Canada cannot open negotiations, through the Imperial Government, with Spain, with a view to obtaining all the privileges for Canada in Cuba and Porto Rico that will be enjoyed by the people of the United States after July, 1892.

Mr. FRASER. As indicating the feeling prevailing both in Cuba and in Nova Scotia, I desire to read extracts from two letters I have received. One is from a merchant in Havana and the other is from a merchant in Nova Scotia. Following what the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) has said, I declare this question to be one of paramount importance to Nova Scotia. The treaty between the United States and Cuba, if carried into effect, and without any steps being taken on our part with the mother country to arrange with Cuba, will be simply ruinous to many people in Nova A merchant in Havana writing, says:

"The principal topic of conversation on Change this week has been the reciprocal treaty between Spain and the United States which is to take effect provisionally on September 1st next; and definitely on July 1st, 1892. By the provisions of this treaty American dry fish and potatoes will enter free of duty; this, we are sorry to say, will result in serious prejudice to the provincial products, and we sincerely hope that our friends in Nova Scotia can bring sufficient force to bear upon the home Government that a commercial arrangement, may be made which will that a commercial arrangement may be made which will put the products of Nova Scotia on an equally favourable footing.

That, from a merchant in Cuba, indicates what the effects of this treaty will be upon the products of Nova Scotia in that country. Now, a large merchant in Nova Scotia writes what the effect will be in Nova Scotia so far as the fishermen are concerned, and so far as our exports to Cuba are concerned:

"We wish more especially to call your attention to the"

between the United States and Spain which will soon take effect, and will operate against our fish from the provinces, and will drive our fishermen to the United States to fish and obtain prices free of duty. Spanish duty in Cuba is about $1 per quintal."

The first letter indicates what the effect is going to be on our products when sent to Cuba, and the second letter shows, that unless we have this reciprocal trade, what is going to be the effect on the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces. Following up the remarks made by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs) and others, I sincerely trust that the Government will impress upon the home Government the absolute importance of this matter, so far as the Province of Nova Scotia is concerned, where so great a portion of our trade is to the West India Islands. I can appreciate the difficulty of our having such arrangements made as will enable our people to send their products to these Islands: and further, the difficulty of dealing with Cuba in respect to a treaty there, as we would under general circumstances, in this country or in Great Britain, give effect to that treaty. I am sure that if the Dominion Government urge upon the English Government the absolute necessity of this matter, they can bring such pressure to bear upon the Spanish Government as will enable us to have this treaty. I need scarcely say, that the worst any man in Canada who is opposed to the McKinley tariff can say about its effects upon the farmers of Ontario, is not worse than the effects of this treaty upon the people of Nova Scotia, so far as their trade with the West Indies is concerned.

Mr. McNEILL. I could not very well catch what fell from my hon, friend the Minister of Justice in the seat I occupied when he was speaking; but I want to understand whether I had correctly gathered from his remarks, that in his opinion Canada would be enabled to enter into preferential arrangements with the mother country, notwithstanding the existence of treaties having the favoured-nation clause.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I endeavoured to avoid giving my own opinion about the matter, because it is a subject of great difficulty and would require a good deal of consideration, and a subject upon which we have very little light. All I gave to the House was the statement that we had an opinion from the Imperial Government two years ago-not an official opinion, but an intimationthat the view held by Her Majesty's Government was, that the provisions of a reciprocity treaty would not necessarily invoke the operation of the most-favoured-nation clause in other treaties; and that such, certainly, would be the view of the United States, because a decision to that effect appears to have been given by their Supreme Court. Of course, I want also to guard myself by the observation that a good deal might depend upon the particular language of particular treaties. as one can judge about what has been held on the general principle, that seems to be the view of the mother country and of the United States.

Mr. LAURIER. I would say to my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), that before Great Britain is ready to enter into preferential arrangements with us, the present treaties will have time to expire.

Mr. McNEILL. I hope the wish is not father of the thought, with my hon. friend.

Mr. FRASER.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have certainly no objection to entering into a treaty that will improve our position, but the hon. gentleman knows, so far as Great Britain is concerned, that there is no impediment to the export of our products to that country now, by way of taxation; so that we are not likely to suffer on account of any action of Great Britain. I think the doctrine is pretty well settled by the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, which the hon. the Minister of Justice has read, and I believe, as a rule, that it has been recognized in nearly every country in Christendom: That, unless there is something very special in the provisions of a treaty, a reciprocity treaty stipulating for certain special advantages on account of certain concessions made, does not come within the purview of the favoured-nation clause of any treaty. This subject was very fully discussed at various times in the Congress of the United States and also when the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 was in The opinion was sometimes expressed operation. there, that the Executive of the United States, having made treaties with other countries in which a special favoured-nation clause was contained, had violated the provisions of these treaties by entering into a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and that if the various nations with which the United States had entered into treaties containing that favoured-nation clause insisted upon it, they could claim to be put upon the same terms as Canada was placed in by the Reciprocity Treaty of I think, however, the current opinion amongst the legal men who sat in Congress at that time, was altogether against that view. Certainly, men like Cushing, and Quincy Adams, and Reverdy Johnson, and others who occupied very eminent position as jurists in the United States, held, that the favoured-nation clause did not apply in the case where special arrangements were made by treaty, unless that clause were drawn in such a way as to make it perfectly clear that it was the intention to meet an exceptional case of that sort. I think the same rule has been recognized by the Foreign Office in England, though not uniformly, certainly not in the case of Japan, though I have not looked into the subject for some years.

ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY BELT-SETTLERS' GRIEVANCES.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty to bring to the attention of the House, the grievances of certain settlers in British Columbia, who, in my judgment, and, I believe, in the judgment of the House also, have a very serious ground of complaint against the administration of the Department of the Interior. It is a well-settled rule of common law that all grants of land coming from the Crown, always convey to the grantee, not only the right of surface, but also the right to all the minerals whether on the surface or under Yet, in certain sections of British the surface. Columbia, in the section which has been reserved as part of the subsidy to the railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo, in the districts of Cranberry, Cedar, Wellington, Nanoose and Nanaimo, the grants were made by the Crown not only under the authority of common law, but under the statute law of the land as well; because they are not grants by prerogative of the Crown, but grants made under the law, and they do not convey to the settler the absolute freehold, but are limited to the surface, and reserve to the Crown the rights to the minerals. Letters patent have been placed in my hands issued in 1886 to James Paterson, one of those settlers, in which it is stated that the conveyance is made to James Paterson of the freehold, but with this reservation:

"Saving and reserving nevertheless, unto us and our successors and assigns, all coal, coal oil, ores, mines and minerals whatsoever in, on or under the said lands."

Mr. DEWDNEY. What date did he enter?

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that he entered several years before the Act of 1884, to which I shall allude; my impression is that he entered long before 1887. This settler, along with all others situated as he is, complains that in making this reservation the Government of Canada acted in violation of vested rights. The history of the case is briefly this: These lands I understand have been open to settlement for twenty years and They were surveyed, if I am correctly informed, some time between 1860 and 1870, and they have been open to settlement ever since. Now, the people who settled on these lands, settled on the well-known conditions of common law and statute law, which existed in British Columbia as well as in all the other provinces, and they believed that by fulfilling the conditions imposed upon them by the statutes, as to settlement, and as to certain payments, they would obtain the right in the soil—the right of ownership with all that ownership implies, that is to say, not only the right of the surface, but the right to the minerals also, with the exception of the precious metals, gold and silver, which are always reserved to the In 1884 the Government of the Province of British Columbia entered into an arrangement with the Government of Canada with a view of obtaining help from the Government of Canada towards the construction of a railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo, by which the Government of British Columbia transferred to the Government of Canada a block of land on condition of Canada undertaking to pay a subsidy of $750,000 and also the land itself, to any company that would undertake the construction of a railway. This block of land is thus described in the Act:

"Bounded on the south by a straight line drawn from the head of Saanich Inlet to Muir Creek on the Straits of Fuea: on the west, by a straight line drawn from Muir Creek aforesaid to Crown Mountain; on the north, by a line drawn from Crown Mountain to Seymour Narrows; and on the east by the coast lines of Vancouver Island to the point of commencement; and including all coal, coal oil, ores, stones, clay, marble, slate, mines, minerals, and substances whatsoover thereupon, therein and thereunder."

To this were made the following reservations and exceptions:—

"There is excepted out of the tract of land-granted by the preceding section, all that portion thereof lying to the northward of a line running east and west halfway between the mouth of the Courtenay River (Comox District) and Seymour Narrows."

That is to say, out of the block so given to Canada a certain portion lying north of a certain point is reserved to the Government of British Columbia. Then, there is this further clause:

"Provided always, that the Government of Canada shall be entitled out of such excepted tract to lands equal in extent to those alienated up to the date of this Act by Crown grant, pre-emption, or otherwise within the limits of the grant mentioned in section 3 of this Act.

"The grant mentioned in section 3 of this Act shall not include any lands now held under Crown grant, lease, agreement for sale, or other alienation by the Crown, nor shall it include Indian reserves or settlements, nor naval or military reserves."

So that here it is plainly stated that in the portion which was reserved to the Government of British Columbia, the Government of Canada should be compensated for any land which should be found to have been alienated by grants from the Crown in the different ways here mentioned. The words are as broad as they can be. Now, there cannot be, in my estimation, any doubt that under a statute opening lands for settlement—

Mr. DEWDNEY. Is that 1883?

Mr. LAURIER. That is 1884. The moment a settler goes on his land, makes his entry, or squats with the intention of becoming a settler within the meaning of the Act, he becomes the owner from the moment of his entry, not from the time the letters patent are granted to him. The letters patent are only an evidence of his right; but his right does not originate with the letters patent: his right to the soil commences and takes effect from the moment he commences to operate and conform to the provisions of the Act. If this construction of the Act is right, all the lands which at that time under that Act were alienated by the Crown, that is to say, had been pre-empted or settled upon within the meaning and intention of the Act, were withheld from Canada, did not belong to Canada, but belonged to the settler. Now, the question might arise whether the letters patent, when they were issued, should have been issued by the Government of British Columbia or by the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada has assumed that the right or the duty of issuing the patents belonged to the Government of Canada, and so it has commenced to issue these patents. I should say, however, that the lands which have been granted to Canada have been also granted by Canada to the company which has undertaken and fulfilled, I believe, the construction of a railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo. what the settlers now complain of, is that those patents which are given to them reserve to the Crown the coal and other minerals. This is a very important matter to them, because, as I understand. valuable deposits of coal have been found upon those lands, and therefore it becomes all the more important to them that the faith of the Crown, if it was pledged to them at the time of settlement, should be kept. Now, the question which I submit is this. My contention, or at all events, the contention of those people, is that when they settled upon those lands, they were not encumbered by any restrictions, and they settled with the conviction that by conforming to the law of the statutes, they would become owners and proprietors, not only of the surface, but of all the minerals found' beneath the surface, with the exception of gold and silver, but including coal. Coal has been found upon those lands, but it is reserved from them and held by the Crown. What is the reason? As far as I can see, the reason is that in the Act which was passed by the Parliament of Canada in the session of 1884, after the Act of British Columbia to which I have alluded had come into effect, the following sections are to be found. Sub-section ! of section 7 says:

"The lands to be so conveyed shall, except as to coal and other minerals, and also except as to timber lands as hereinafter mentioned, be open for four years from the nineteenth day of December, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, to actual settlers for agricultural purposes."

Then sub-section 2 says:

"Every bond fide squatter who has continuously occupied and improved any of the lands within the tract of land to be acquired by the company from the Dominion Government for a period of one year prior to the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, shall be entitled to a grant of the freehold of the surface rights of the said squatted land, to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres, at the rate of one dollar per acre."

Now, I presume it is upon these two clauses that the Government acted when they refused to make the grant of the minerals as well as the surface when issuing the patent. But it seems to me that this hard construction, if it be taken, should be strictly maintained within the terms of the statute. It might apply, perhaps, to those settlers whose possession of the land did not extend to a date prior to the 1st of January, 1883, but cannot be held to apply to all those settlers who had settled upon the land before that time. In the case to which I referred, the case of James Paterson, I am just informed by a note received from himself that he settled upon his tract of land upon the 29th of January, 1878, and therefore would not come within the two clauses, sub-section one and sub-section two of section seven, but would be entitled to his patent without any abridgement whatever. Moreover, whatever may be the construction put upon these two clauses, section five seems to defeat them in so far as they may interfere with the rights of citi-Sub-section five reads as follows:

"The existing rights, if any, of any persons or corpora-tions in any of the lands so to be acquired by a company shall not be affected by this Act."

The language is just as broad and clear as it can be, so that if we are to take these words, emphatic as they are, it is clear that the settlers who had settled upon their lands previous to the date mentioned in the statute, could not be prejudiced, as regards any of the rights they were entitled to, when the Act was passed, and which rights they had reason to expect would not be interfered with. It may very well be conceived that since valuable deposits of coal were found in that region, these settlers, who were thereafter to be deprived of what they had reason to believe would be a source of wealth to them, made serious complaints to the They sent petition after petition, as Government. I am given to understand, and I am informed also that about 1884 or 1885, they sent a petition direct to Lord Lansdowne, then Governor General, and he referred them to the Department of the Interior, from which they never received any satisfaction. However, some time in 1886 or 1887, the impression got abroad through the district that an Order in Council had been passed empowering a commission to go to British Columbia and enquire into their rights. In 1890, I brought this question to the attention of the Minister of the Interior. I made the following motion :-

"1. Copies of all petitions addressed His Excellency the Governor General by settlers in the Districts of Cranberry, Cedar, Wellington, Nanoose and Nanaimo, B.C., asking the privilege of obtaining the lands on which they had squatted on the Island Railway Reserve on ordinary terms allowed to settlers, viz., that their grant should include surface and minerals.

Mr. LAURIER.

"2. For copies of all Orders in Council passed to authorize a commission to enquire into the claims of said settlers."

I was then told by the hon. Minister of the Interior that no such order had ever been passed nor had any such petition been received. I expressed at that time my astonishment at the statement, and he promised to look further into the matter. He did so, and a few days afterwards told me there had been a petition sent in 1882 or 1884 on the matter, and that petition had been brought to the House The motion which I have read was made in 1886. on the 29th of January, and the question came up again on the 6th of February, upon a question made by the hon, member for Vancouver (Mr. Gordon), who enquired from the Government:

"Whether it is the intention of the Government to cause an investigation to be made into the alleged grievances of certain squatters on the railway lands on Vancouver Island, who claim that they have been denied the rights guaranteed them under sub-section two of section seven of the Act passed by the Parliament of Canada intituled: An Act respecting the Vancouver Island Railway, &c."

To this question the hon. Minister of the Interior made the following reply :-

"In the transfer to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company the rights of the squatters under the Act 47 Vic., cap. 6. have been reserved and protected, and their remedy (if any) seems to be against the company. An officer of the Department of the Interior will, however, be sent at an early day, to investigate the alleged grievances, with a view of ascertaining the rights of the squatters under the said Act and the patent of the company.

Now, nothing could be more binding than the engagement the hon, gentleman then gave to the House, upon a direct enquiry by the hon, member for Vancouver, whose constituents these settlers In my judgment, these settlers are entitled to the minerals, yet it may be said that the question is not free from doubt, and certainly the promise then made by the hon. Minister was one which commended itself to the judgment of the House. This promise was indicated to the settlers, who expected its fulfilment. At the opening of the session I moved for the report of the officer who, I had reason to suppose, had gone to British Columbia and investigated those claims; but the hon, gentleman told me that no such investigation had taken place, that he had looked into the matter, and for reasons to which ${f I}$ shall presently allude he did not think fit and proper to investigate the claims and redeem the promise he had made to the House. Now, what were the reasons then given by the hon. gentleman? He stated that he had gone himself to British Columbia, and that he had ascertained that the question to which his attention had been called and which he had promised to investigate, was then before the courts. I asked him if he alluded to the case of Hogan, and he said he did. I suggested that I thought that he was under a misapprehension, as I had reason to believe that the case of Hogan did not at all involve the question as to whom belonged the minerals—as to whether they belong to the company or the Government of Canada or the settlers, but that it was altogether a dispute between settler and settler, and that, if such were the case, the hon, gentleman had acted certainly upon a very strange misconception of the facts--a misconception of fact which could not excuse him for not having redeemed the promise he made the settlers. The hon, gentleman then answered:

"All I can say is that I acted in accordance with my judgment at the time, and I thought I was acting in the interests of the settlers when I refused to make an investigation which might prejudice their case before the courts.

Since then I have got the case of Hogan to which the hon, gentleman alluded, and I find that if the hon, gentleman acted upon the best of his judgment I do not believe he did himself justice, for he gave the question no serious consideration at all. I cannot see that he gave it even superficial attention, for if he had at all looked into that case, he would have found that there is in it no question of the right to the minerals. On the contrary, it is simply this: Hogan sued the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company to compel them to give him a deed of sale for a certain plot of land, and specially stated that the only rights he claimed were the rights of surface and that he did not at all ask for the minerals. The company answers him that he is not entitled to the plot of land; the ground of its contention is that he settled upon land which has never been opened to settlement, that he settled upon a town plot-and not upon land set apart for agricultural purposes; and now, in order to show how completely the question of coal and minerals is excluded from the consideration of the matter, I will read from the declaration of Hogan himself:

will read from the declaration of Hogan himself:

"On the 10th December, 1887, the plaintiff by a notice in writing of that date signed by him and addressed to, and on the 15th December, 1887, duly, served on the defendants, notified the defendants of all the facts and premises in the preceding paragraphs 11, 12 and 13 mentioned and applied for the said parcel of land in said paragraphs 12 and 13 mentioned, and asked to be allowed to acquire the same from the defendants, and the plaintiff, in and by said notice, also notified the defendants, as was the fact, that he was ready and willing, and he hereby offered to pay the defendants the sum of $160 for the said parcel of land, and applied to be received and recognized by the defendants as the purchaser of said parcel of land and as the person entitled to grant thereof under the said enactments and provisions, saving, excepting and reserving to the defendants all coal and other minerals in or under the said parcel of land."

And in his conclusion, he asks this:

"That it may be declared that the plaintiff is entitled to acquire and purchase from the defendants the said parcel or tract of land at the price or sum of $160, excepting and reserving thereout and in respect thereof all coal and other minerals."

o in this case the minerals are especially excluded. Hogan himself declares that he has no intention of acquiring the minerals; and under such circumstances how was it possible for the hon, gentleman to prevent the investigation from going on, because he said this question of the minerals was in court? The hon, gentleman has not given even the slightest and the most superficial attention to the matter. That is clear, because, if he had, he would have convinced himself that the case of Hogan had no reference at all to the cases of the other settlers as to whom the question whether the minerals belonged to the Crown, the company or the settlers was involved. Under such circumstances, I submit that the hon. gentleman is absolutely without any excuse. There is no reason why these men were delayed as to the investigation of their rights by the step which the Government took. When they applied to the Government, they were told that their claims would be investigated. This was probably on the suggestion of some of the supporters of the Government in this House. Then the promise goes out among their friends in the country, 1875, a reservation was made of that railway belt and they expect, but the expectation is not fulfilled. by the Government of British Columbia for the

If anything should be considered sacred, I think it should be the word of the Crown pledged to the people; but the hon. gentleman, acting here as a Minister of the Crown and as Minister of the Interior, and having to deal with important interests connected with these people, after having made a solemn promise to them, refuses to carry out that promise on grounds which did not exist. I say it was beyond the duty of the hon, gentleman to refuse to carry out the pledges he had made not only to these settlers but to the Parliament of Canada as well. I think everyone will agree with me that, if we hope to have this country settled, every settler upon our lands, either from abroad or from within the country, must know that his rights will be protected and that everything which has been promised to him shall be faithfully and rigidly carried out. Some few weeks ago only, the hon, member for Assiniboia brought to the attention of the House the case of certain settlers in British Columbia and the North-West who had settled on their homesteads on the assumption that they had the right which existed by statute at that time to obtain a second homestead. The law has been subsequently repealed, but the sense of the House was overwhelming that faith ought to be kept with those settlers, and that, since they were entitled to a second homestead and pre-emption when they settled on the land in the North-West, the word of the Crown should be kept with them, and that they should be given a second homestead. I ask for the same privileges for these settlers; I ask that every right they have had, that all they expected would accrue to them, when they settled on those lands, shall be religiously observed with them, and that the faith of the Crown which was promised to investigate their grievances shall be religiously kept, and I say that the conduct of the hon. gentleman and his department, after having made the promises which were made and not fulfilled, is without any excuse whatever. Therefore, I move that all the words after "That" be struck out, and the following substituted:-

The letters patent issued under the authority of the Department of the Interior to settlers on lands forming part of the railway reserves in the districts of Cranberry, Cedar, Wellington, Nanoose, Nanaimo, British Columbia, convey to said settlers the right of surface only, all minerals including coal and coal oil being reserved to the Crown

Crown.
2. That some of the said settlers have often represented

2. That some of the said settlers have often represented to the Government by petitions and otherwise that such exclusion of minerals from their letters patent, was contrary to law and to their vested rights.

3. That last year, the Minister of the Interior, on the floor of Parliament, promised that an officer of his department would, at an early day, proceed to British Columbia to investigate the claims of the said settlers.

4. That the Minister of the Interior, without any cause whatever, has failed to have the said investigation made and has thus committed a breach of faith with Parliament and a gross injustice to the settlers.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I must take this opportunity of congratulating the hon, the leader of the Opposition on his having at last taken some little interest in British Columbia. I hope this will be the precursor of many actions that he will take in that direction, and that we will see more attention in future given by the leaders of the Opposition to The hon. that country than we have in the past. gentleman has commenced by giving the history of the railway belt in British Columbia known as the Esquimalt and Nanaimo railway belt. As early as 1875, a reservation was made of that railway belt purpose of securing, as they thought they had a right to do, the construction of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. They made this reservation in order that there might be no excuse on the part of the Government of the Dominion, on their application being made to construct that piece of railway. However, the Government of Sir John Macdonald, as well as the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, refused to make that piece of road a part of the main line; but, from 1875, the whole of that tract of land now known as the Nanaimo and Esquimalt railway belt, was exempt from settlement, purchase and pre-emption, and it was not until 1883 that an arrangement was made by which this land was reserved especially for the construction of the piece of road from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, and in 1884 the legislation took place by British Columbia and in this House confirming the arrangement, and an Act was passed with several conditions attached to One condition was that any parties who had settled on the reservation prior to the 1st of January, 1883, would be entitled to the surface rights of 160 acres, at $1 an acre. It was also agreed that any parties would be entitled to settle on the land four years subsequently to the 19th of December, 1883, and would be allowed to obtain their land, 160 acres, at $1. Now, there was no difficulty with regard to these two classes of settlers, they were allowed to settle under certain conditions, among which was one that the right of way should be reserved for the railway, the coal and other minerals described in the Act were to be reserved from the patent, and any timber required for railway purposes were also to be reserved. Now, with regard to these settlers, there can be no difficulty in my mind, nor with regard to some others who have settled there previous to 1883; and Mr. Paterson appears to be one of those who settled in 1878, according to the information of the hon. member. He settled on land at the time when we had no interest whatever in it, and I should presume is entitled to his patent under the conditions under which the Local Government gave their patents in those days. They varied at different periods, and whether they carried minerals or not, I am not prepared to say; or whether they took it up at a time when 5 cents a ton was demanded on all coal mines that were worked, I am not sure. But if this gentleman has received his patent for lands he took up in 1878, and he has a grievance, the grievance is not against the Dominion Government, but it is against the Local Government, and if he wants a remedy he must go there for it, it is no use for him to come here. And there may be others in the same position. Now, it was not until the hon. gentleman made his motion here to day that I gathered from him what were the grievances from which these settlers suffered. appears now that they complained that they do not get the minerals in their patents. He did not say that when he asked last year for information in regard to it.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, I did.

Mr. DEWDNEY. He never said that was a special grievance.

Mr. LAURIER. The very terms of the motion which I made included minerals.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Then I had forgotten it. cluded that the claims were not of such a character However, I do not see what right any of those as would justify us in making the expenditure in-Mr. DEWDNEY.

settlers have on the land subsequent to 1882, or, at any rate, from 1875 up to 1882. They are squatters, and have no rights whatever, and I do not see that they are entitled to the minerals at all. I hold in my hand the patent which was issued by the Dominion Government at a time when we handled the property. On the completion of the railway we were compelled by the Act to hand the land over to the railway company, and we subsequently did so. Now, the patent we issued in accordance with the Act is to this effect:

Now, that was the understanding upon which the land was transferred by the Dominion to the rail-When the land was transferred to way company. them we were compelled to give them a title similar to that, and I have a copy in my hand of the title which has since been given by the railway company, and it corresponds exactly with the title given by the Dominion Government when they handled that property. Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot for the life of me, see where any hardship has been done to any settlers. They went on that land with their eyes open, they knew very well what the conditions were, and if any of them had rights prior to any negotiations with regard to this property, of course, they are entitled to their patent, and to all the conditions mentioned in the patents given by the Local Government, and if they have not got their patent, it is their own fault, for they are perfectly able to get it if they wish. It is a question of law, it is a question for the courts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you assumed to issue the patent.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Only a few names were given to us by the Provincial Government, and it is only to those that we issued patents. Now, with reference to the personal attack that has been made on me in reference to the enquiry that was made last year. As I told the hon. gentleman early in the session, I stated that I had made the promise to the House that an investigation would be made, and that after the House adjourned I submitted the matter to my colleagues and stated how I proposed to make the investigation, which was through my deputy, who had already departed and got as far as Winnipeg, and I proposed to associate with him Mr. Aikman, who had been our land commissioner up to a very late date, but who had left us and joined an old firm with whom he had previously been a partner. Mr. Aikman knew the whole of the transactions with regard to our lands in British Columbia, and I thought he would be available. Upon communication with him I found that his charges were rather exorbitant, and after submitting them to my colleagues, we con-cluded that the claims were not of such a character volved, and that as I was going to British Columbia, I would make the enquiries myself. I then telegraphed to Mr. Burgess not to proceed, and I went there myself, and, as I said before, I found these two or three cases in litigation in regard to the squatters on that belt. It happens that Mr. Hogan was not claiming the minerals, and the hon. gentleman says that is the only excuse I have for not enquiring into the matter. But Mr. Hogan did not care about the minerals, because he had jumped a town property which was far more valuable to him than a coal property. However, at that time, I was not aware that the grievance was that the claimants were clamouring for their minerals. If I had understood the hon. gentleman to make that statement, I would certainly have told him then, as I tell him now, that he had no grievance in that respect what-If I had understood that this was the claim, I would have told him frankly that it was not a matter for investigation, because the patent would not give them the minerals on the railway reservation. British Columbia is not the only country where its minerals are reserved. We are reserving them in the North-West Territories. Why should a holder of land in the railway reservation of Vancouver Island be entitled to the minerals any more than a settler in any other part of the country? In Ontario the minerals in the Crown lands are reserved. No very great hardship has, therefore, been suffered, nor do I think that the motion should be adopted.

After Recess.

Mr. MULOCK. The amendment placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker, proposes to censure the Minister of the Interior for not having carried out the promises he made on the floor of the House in February, 1890, for an investigation into the claims of certain settlers in British Columbia. The Minister has urged to-day, and on former occasions, several reasons why he has not taken the course he promised, and which at the time, by virtue of his promise, he thought he should have taken. order properly to understand these various defences of the Minister it may be instructive to briefly consider the history of the case. I understand the leading facts to be as follows:—From 1870 onwards, for a period of some eight years, various settlers took possession of and pre-empted lands in the railway belt in the Island of Vancouver. Subject to whatever rights those settlers had acquired, they were not trespassers—and I presume the bulk of them were legally in possession—but whatever may be the merits of that question, subject to whatever rights they possessed, a transfer of the lands in the railway belt was in due course made to the Dominion. Some of those settlers obtained patents and some, perhaps, did not obtain patents; however that may be, the legislation on the question, the forum for the settlement of this question was transferred to the Dominion. The settlers began as early as 1880 to make application to the Dominion Government for an investigation of their claims. We find their applications for investigation taking various forms. We remember a visit made to British Columbia by a distinguished Governor General of Canada, and it is said, and occasion of a subsequent visit, those settlers approached the Governor General, as it was their right, and they orally made known to him some of the grievances arising out of this conflict. On his return to Ottawa, it is reasonable to assume that His Excellency communicated the tenor of those grievances to his constitutional advisers. Subsequently, and perhaps concurrently with those visits, various communications in different forms passed from the settlers to the Government here. Petitions and correspondence were transmitted from time to time, the last of them having ceased to come about 1887. Those various communications were interrupted for a time by reason, no doubt, of the disturbances of the North-West, when that country was in a chronic state of rebellion from unredressed grievances, and ultimately broke out into open rebellion. thought, no doubt, they would wait and see the effect of the applications made by their fellow-citizens in the North-West. However that may be, their applications were, until within a year from now or thereabouts, pigeon-holed and stowed away in the secret archives and places of record in No, not entirely so. The late Hon. Ottawa. Thomas White, Minister of the Interior. I understand, undertook to look into these claims, and on one of his visits to British Columbia he gave audience to some of the settlers. He came back. and probably but for his untimely death he would have investigated these questions, and we would not to-night have been discussing them. The consideration of the claims of the settlers was interrupted by the untimely death of Mr. White, and in due time the office and the responsibilities of the office devolved upon the present incumbent. It was unreasonable to hold him responsible for not having attended to these claims at an early date, because, coming new to the office, it was only fair to allow him a reasonable time to familiarize himself with unfinished business. But there is one date when we can fairly claim his responsibility began, and that date is at all events not later than January, 1890. In that month the present leader of the Opposition called the attention of the Minister pointedly to the grievances in question, and moved a motion on 29th January asking for the papers in connection with the appropriation for the various applications of the settlers. That motion made by the leader of the Opposition was accompanied by explanatory remarks making it quite clear that an investigation was desired, and a few days afterwards, the hon gentleman who specially represents the settlers in question called the attention of the Minister to the matter by a question, and in reply to that question, the Minister of the Interior on the 6th day of February, 1890, promised the House that he would at an early day investigate these claims. His words on that occasion as given on page 274 of the Hansard of 1890 were as follows :-

"An officer of the Department of the Interior willhowever, be sent, at an early day, to investigate the alleged grievances, with a view to ascertaining the rights of the squatters under the said Act and the patent of the company."

cation to the Dominion Government for an investigation of their claims. We find their applications for investigation taking various forms. We remember a visit made to British Columbia by a distinguished Governor General of Canada, and it is said, and not controverted, that on that occasion and on the gation now, and not for an actual adjudication. They are asking first of all that the Dominion of Canada should investigate their claims, and here we have a solemn pledge given to Parliament in the name of the Crown, that these claims would be investigated. It is now the 18th August, 1891, and these claims not having been investigated, Parliament has a duty to perform in asking the Administration why that pledge has not been kept. The Minister of the Interior assigns various reasons to-day for not having investigated these claims, and he certainly must have felt his defence very desperate when he advanced the reasons he did, to an assembly such as this, for the nonaction that he has been guilty of. In February, 1890, he stated, as recorded in Hansard, that the claims of the settlers were not against Canada at all, but against the railway company; and he used these words:

"In the transfer to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, the rights of the squatters under the Act 47 Vic., cap. 6, have been reserved and protected, and their remedy (if any) seems to be against the company."

In 1890, when he had been a year and a-half in office, the Minister of the Interior told us that the claims of these persons, if any, were against the railway company: but what have we heard him tell us to-day? He told us that there was no use in their coming to the Parliament of Canada or to the Department of the Interior for redress, because their claims, if any, were against the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Excuse me, I did not say anything of the kind. I said it was dependent on the class of squatters; some might have their claims against the Local Government, and others might come probably against the Dominion or against the company.

Mr. MULOCK. He turns some of them away with a deaf ear to British Columbia, and others of a certain class, he says may come here to establish their claims. If some of these settlers have no right to come to the Dominion, what did he mean by making the promise that he would investigate? Again, Sir, the Minister of the Interior told us today that this was a question of law, that he had made a great discovery of late, and that it was idle to go to British Columbia to investigate these claims, because they were questions of law, and, therefore, I suppose should be investigated in a legal tribunal. If that is the case why did the Minister send Mr. Burgess, one of his officers, a short time ago with instructions to investigate. The Minister himself undertook the task, but he subsequently changed his plans when on his way to where these settlers were. He has made this discovery to-day in order to get out of the difficulty-I will not say thatbut it perhaps occurred to him as a bond fide defence, and it shows what an immature defence he has in regard to the case in point. Again, he told us to-day that when on his way to British Columbia when he intended to investigate these claims, he suddenly changed his plans because he had heard that a test case was in litigation, and, therefore, it would be advisable to postpone action on his part until the litigation in question determined the right of the party, and in reply to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, he stated that he referred to the Hogan case. The Hogan case, the settlers and being under litigation he proposes to do nothing until the determination of this case. Had the Minister taken the trouble to send down to the Supreme Court, within a hundred yards of where we are sitting, to get the record of the case, instead of accepting some hearsay statement that there was such a suit pending, he would have seen plainly set down there the reasons why this case has nothing to do with the question in issue. At page 6 of the case, which I hold in my hand, there is one excellent reason given, and on another page there is another excellent reason to show that the case in question is in no way applicable to the issues raised by the squatters.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That book was not printed in 1890.

Mr. MULOCK. But it was published when the hon, gentleman, on the 18th June, 1891, made the statement to the House. The writ was issued on the 21st March, 1888, and it was a pending suit when he went to British Columbia. Instead of taking some hearsay statement about such a case, when he was right at the court in British Columbia where the writ was issued, and where the pleadings were, why did he not ask to see the case and to see how it applied? He could have gone to the court in British Columbia, if he was delicate about going to the Supreme Court here, and he could have found out all about this case. have found out that it had nothing whatever to do with this question under discussion, for the Hogan case expressly declares that it did not bring into litigation mineral rights at all. Paragraph 14 of the plaintiff's claim states that this litigation "has regard to the land, saving, excepting and reserving to the defendants "—that is the company—"the coal and other minerals in or under the said land and the right to cut timber," on. The plaintiff's case, on the very face of it, expressly declares that it is not of that class of cases which is in question here, namely, that of the boud fide settler seeking possession of agricultural lands; and, moreover, I understand that this case had to do with another class of property not at all like the property of the settlers, namely, town plots that were not liable to settlement. For two excellent reasons, therefore, the case in question was in no way applicable. The great defence which the Minister reserved for the last, was, that he did not know what the settlers wanted, that he could not make out from the communications to the department what their grievances were. He now says that he did not know what their grievances were, and yet, eighteen months ago he made a solemn promise to Parliament to investigate them.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I did not say that.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood the hon gentleman to say that he could not make out exactly what was wanted.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I said I could not make out from the leader of the Opposition what the grievances were.

would be advisable to postpone action on his part until the litigation in question determined the right of the party, and in reply to my hon friend the leader of the Opposition, he stated that he referred to the Hogan case. The Hogan case, the Minister says, is a test case applicable to the Mullock.

Mr. Mullock. The hon gentleman does not know yet what the grievances are after 15 years of correspondence coming to the department, and of complaints to officer after officer; and he turns a deaf ear to these people and says to them: Go anywhere but to me; go to the railway company; go Mr. Mullock.

to the courts; go to British Columbia, but do not trouble me. That is the defence of the Minister of the Interior. Under the circumstances I would be inclined, perhaps, to bear with him a little; but when we consider the experience of this country within the last few years, when we consider that rightly or wrongly the recent troubles in the North-West were largely attributed to the present Minister of the Interior; -I do not say they were due to him, but I say that inasmuch as public opinion has more generally attributed them to him than to anyone else, a responsibility rested upon him to be on the alert to prevent similar troubles anywhere else. He knew well how people would be provoked, and what dangers would be incurred by neglect of duty on his part; and yet with full knowledge of the grievances, after having made a pledge to these people on the floor of Parliament, and after eighteen months of negligence and dilatoriness, he comes down here and says to them: I have decided to turn you away from the doors of Parliament, and have nothing to do with you; you may have grievances, but I decline to investigate them: you may seek for redress if you like, but you will not get it at my hands. If the hon, gentleman could have said that with any propriety at all, it would have been at the time the applications were first brought to his notice in 1890, when he was asked what he was going to do. But he had no right to make a promise on behalf of the Crown to these people, and fail to keep that promise. Every possible excuse that can be advanced to day for not making this investigation existed in February, 1890; and if it is a good defence to-day to say that reasons exist for not investigating, the same reasons existed then, and the promise should never have been given. Therefore, apart altogether from the dilatoriness, from the absolute non-performance of duty, I feel that perhaps a more serious offence exists to-day in the failure of the Minister to uphold the honour of the Crown. For these reasons I think Parliament will not be doing its duty unless it accepts the amendment of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have very great faith in the generosity of the hon. leader of the Opposition, and I am sure that he has been led to give this case his support and the support of his party from the goodness of his heart, and not from the facts of the case itself or its merits. hon, gentleman's sense of justice in any degree equals his generosity, I am sure that when he comes to understand this case as it actually is, he will withdraw his motion or vote against it. the hon, gentleman has challenged a vote of this House; and I presume he does not mean and does not expect a party vote, because it is not a party question. It is a question, it is true, of the administration of the public domain; but it is a question relating to the rights of persons claiming to be settlers in a distant portion of this country; and I presume that it would be his wish that the House in pronouncing judgment on the treatment of the rights of those persons, should be guided by treatment something more than mere party spirit. Let me call the attention of the House to what the facts are in this case; because I could not imagine a member of this House presenting for the vote of the House a weaker case. I could not imagine the lands, three years afterwards; and the leader of Government possessing a stronger case than it the Opposition uses, in relation to him, the language does on this occasion; and if we have not a case on the merits, we do not claim any member's vote in this House to-night. Now, Sir, it is alleged that a class of persons who settle on a certain tract of land comprising several townships in British Columbia between Nanaimo and Victoria are entitled to the sympathy of this House, and are entitled to the judgment of this House against the Minister of the Interior. They are represented in this city by a person whose name was mentioned by the hon, leader of the Oppositiona Mr. Paterson-whose case was put forward to the House to-night as a sample case, and one which we might fairly treat as a sample case; because, so far as I know, it does not present any of the extreme features which are alleged in regard to some of these cases, which are, perhaps, a little weaker or a little stronger than that of Mr. Paterson. But what is the contention of the hon. leader of the Opposition as regards Mr. Paterson and all persons of that class? It is that this person went upon these lands in British Columbia as a settler; and I will take his case, not because I lay any particular stress on its strength or weakness, but assuming, as the hon. gentleman himself did, that the features of that case fairly represent the others. Now, in 1878, this man went upon these lands, and from that fact the hon. leader of the Opposition says all his rights spring. Now, let us remember that British Columbia had a clearly-defined Crown lands policy as all the other provinces had. The Acts relating to the settlement of public lands in British Columbia at that time, and for many years before, provided that when a person entered upon the public lands for the purpose of settlement, he had to perform, as our settlers have, certain duties running over a space of two years; and at the end of the two years he would, under ordinary circumstances, be entitled to a patent for his land. But the first weak spot in his case—and it is so weak a spot that it is absolutely fatal to the case presented to the House this afternoon—is that neither Mr. Paterson nor any other of these persons went on the public lands of British Columbia, which were open for settlement at all, but they went on lands which three years before, by a solemn Act of the Provincial Legislature, had been reserved from settlement; and no matter how long they had stayed there, they were trespassers and squatters and entitled to no grace under any circumstances whatever except for the Dominion Act of 1884. solemn judgment of one of the judges of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, afterwards affirmed by the full bench, designates what they were. were not settlers upon public lands, but they were persons who were:

"Endeavouring to acquire the lands of the Crown with-out its assent, and even in direct opposition to the desire of the Crown to retain particular parcels of land for public

In the year 1875, be it remembered, the British Columbia Government, being desirous of aiding and securing the construction of a line of railway between Nanaimo and Victoria, set apart this railway belt, twenty miles in width, and declared that it should not be open for settlement, although all the other public lands of the province were. And in spite of and in violation of that Act of 1875, and in defiance of the law, this man went on these that we have violated the vested right which he acquired in 1878, that he settled under the impression that he was to get the minerals as well as the surface rights, although the law of his province said he should get neither, and that we have violated justice in his case. Now, there is the first point, that by the law of his province he was a trespasser and not a homesteader, that he was not entitled to the minerals, not entitled to the surface rights, and that he required no right to a foot of the land, under any circumstances, before the statute of this Parliament was passed in 1884, to which I will call attention in a few moments. The second point is this: This man and the class of persons he represents have got patents for their lands from the Dominion Government, but the hon. leader of the Opposition claims that they are deeply wronged, because they have not received patents of the minerals—because their patents give them the right to the lands but reserve the minerals. That of itself would be no very great wrong, no very great injury in the hon. gentleman's own province, where, if I am not much mistaken, the settler on public lands receives a patent for his land after he has paid cash for it and done his homestead duties, every inch of mineral rights, including the coals which are under the soil, being reserved. In my own province the law is the same; in the North-West Territories it is the same; and all over British Columbia grants have been given from time to time to homesteaders and to purchasers of public lands, reserving the minerals, although in some cases and at times statutes have been enforced giving rights to the minerals, including the coal. So that the second point is that, by the law of his own province, he had nothing to complain of, even if he had been a settler and a homesteader, as to these coal lands being reserved. That state of things continued down to the year All that time the law of the Province of British Columbia, which the hon. the leader of the Opposition supposes gave Paterson a vested right to minerals as well as to surface land, stared him in the face, declaring he should get neither, declaring that he was a trespasser and a squatter there. But in 1884, what was known as the Settlement Act was passed, by which British Columbia, on the one side, and the Dominion of Canada, on the other, made a bargain with regard to the construction of this very railway. The purpose for which the land had been set apart in 1875 was about to be accomplished by the Dominion Government at The Dominion Government were to undertake to secure by a company the construction of that line of railway, and in order to enable it to deso that belt of land was to be put in their possession for the purpose of being transferred to a company. Down to that moment, as I have said, this man had no rights on the land and could get none, nor had this Government anything to do with the land. But by the Settlement Act of 1884, it was recognized that when this land was, at last, to be applied for the purpose for which it had been nearly ten years set aside, there should be some recognition as to the position of the people who were located upon it. was to be done with that land? It was, by the terms of that Act of 1884, transferred to the Government of Canada. For what purpose? For three distinct purposes. In the first place, all excepting the lands, which I will mention in a moment, were to be transferred to the company | Not referring to the squatters, because, by the law Sir John Thompson.

which should build the road, and as soon as it should build the road; and the company in relation to that whole belt were to have every ounce of minerals, including not only the coals, which have been reserved here, but the minerals, and clays, and metals of every kind. This grant was to be made of the whole belt of country so soon as a company should build this railway, but the company were to take it subject to these provisions in favour of the settlers, which were the very first provisions that recognized any rights in settlers at all. Now, it is from the Act of 1884, and from no other Act whatever, that they can derive any right or any title or expect any considera-tion or any patent? Here is the third section of the Act:

"The Governor in Council may grant to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company mentioned in the said agreement and incorporated by the Act of the Legislature of British Columbia a grant of money and all that tract of land, including the coal, coal oil, ores, stones, clay, marbles, slate, mines, minerals, and substances whatsoever."

And yet we are to be censured to-night because we have not given to Paterson that which the Statute of Canada said, in 1884, should go to the Esqui-malt and Nanaimo Railway Company. Now, then, I have said that there were two classes of provisions in favour of the persons who were on the soil then. The laws of their own province had given them no rights whatever, but there was here a provision in favour of two classes. There were those persons like Paterson who had squatted upon the land, in the attempt, as the Supreme Court said, to wrest public lands from the Crown which had been solemnly dedicated to other purposes; and these were to receive—what? Why, the grant to the railway company was to be made of these lands, subject to this condition that:

"Every bona fide squatter who has continuously occupied and improved any of the lands within the tract of land to be acquired by the company from the Dominion Government, for a period of one year, prior to the 1st of January, 1883, should be entitled to a grant of the freehold of the surface rights of the said squatted land to the extent of 160 acres at the rate of one dollar per acre."

Now, there is the first provision in favour of those persons, who, in 1884, were squatted on the land. If they had been in possession for a year prior to the 1st of January, 1883, they were to receive a grant of the surface land, and a grant of the surface land has been issued to them; and the leader of the Opposition has read that Act to the House this afternoon, and asks that the Government should be censured because, in addition to the surface land, we did not give this man likewise, and take from the company, the minerals which, under the third section of the same Act, the company, and the company alone, were entitled to:

"The company shall, at all times, sell coals gotten from the lands that may be acquired by them from the Domi-nion Government to any Canadian railway having the terminus of its railway on the seaboard of British Columbia, &c. All lands acquired by the said company from the Dominion Government under this Act, containing belts of timber fit for milling purposes, shall be sold at a price hereafter to be fixed by the Dominion Government or by the said company."

And the leader of the Opposition lays stress on this sub-section:

"The existing rights, if any, of any person or corporation in any of the lands so to be acquired by the company, shall not be affected by this Act."

of British Columbia, they have no rights; but that clause was inserted because, out of that reserved belt, certain township sites had been sold and purchasers had acquired rights under the British Columbia Government which needed to be preserved. So much for that. These were precisely the rights which, as a squatter, Paterson and all the persons of that class were entitled to, and these were precisely the rights we conveyed to We had no power to convey anything more, because the statute took everything else and gave it to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company. But let me ask, if this man had had rights, as the leader of the Opposition supposed were reserved to him under that sub-section in reference to existing rights, how was it that, when the Public Lands Act of British Columbia entitled a homesteader to his patent within two years' time, he had not got his patent in 1880, two years after he went on the lands, but that four years afterwards, when this Act was passed, he had to get his patent from us under the provisions of that very section which says he was to get only the surface lands? I ask how, if he was entitled to anything more, either as a settler in British Columbia, or under the Act which we passed, he accepted that patent from us and took his lands with the reservation of the coal, and that he now puts his complaint into the hands of the leader of the Opposition and says he must get something more? There is another point which the hon, the leader of the Opposition entirely lost sight of. This man has not only got what he was entitled to under the Act, but it is absolutely out of the power of the Minister of the Interior or the Dominion Government at this moment, and it was last year when the investigation was promised to be held, to give him anything further. What he wants further is a grant of the minerals, and, as I have shown to the House, the minerals have been absolutely transferred to the company by that Act and by an Order in Council which was passed under it in the year 1887. Now, then, what are his rights? Supposing he were a settler on public lands instead of a person, in the language of the court which I will quote again, who was a trespasser trying to deprive the Government of public lands which had been set apart for a specific purpose, what redress has he? If he has any rights, as the leader of the Opposition supposes, arising from his settlement in the year 1878, he has his full claim against the British Columbia Government in relation to the minerals. have done nothing whatever to divest him of those rights. If, on the other hand, he claims that, under any interpretation whatever of the Settlement Act of 1884 we have been too strict with him, that he was entitled to anything more, that he had any rights against us that were reserved by the sub-section I have just read, that under any pretext, no matter how ingenious, he could be entitled to these minerals, he has a right of action either against this Government or against the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company which has acquired the right and title to these lands, or the Provincial Government, and yet he has not up to this moment endeavoured to assert his rights in the courts. He has simply alleged, in a petition addressed to the Minister of the Interior, that he ought to get the coal lands in that belt on the ground that the settlers on other public lands in British Columbia got the coal with their surface lands, forgetting that he settled on a tract of land so far-my memory is not exact on the subjectwhich was not only not open to settlement but where the surface rights as well as the coal were reserved and in regard to which it was a pure matter of grace that he was to receive any patent even of the surface rights. So that every right he has is preserved intact, and he has full redress in the courts of the country against the British Columbia Government, against this Government or against the company, and we submit ourselves, as they submit themselves, to the judgment of any court to which he may choose to appeal. I have said, however, that there were two classes of settlers who were considered as a matter of grace in the passage of the Settlement Act of 1884. I have mentioned the squatters as one set, but it illustrates my argument about their having no right to settle on these lands when I mention that, for the first time since 1875, three years before this man went into possession, the Settlement Act of 1884 threw open these lands for settlement, and for four years during which the railway was supposed to be in course of construction, settlers were allowed to go on these lands and pre-empt them. But even in relation to those settlers, of whom this man is not one, because his rights date back before the Settlement Act of 1884, and when he was a trespasser, mark the provisions which guarded the pre-emp-All the minerals are reserved in favour of the company, even in regard to those bond fide settlers who came in under the provisions of the Act of 1884, who were to pay their money and perform their settlement duties and who were in every respect superior to the squatters who attempted to wrest these lands from the parties to whom they were destined by the Government. The provision in regard to them is that the lands to be so conveyed should, except again as to coal and other minerals and also except as to timber lands, "be open for four years from the 19th December, 1883, to actual settlers for agricultural purposes at the rate of $1 an acre to the extent of 160 acres to each such actual settler, and in any such grant the right to cut timber for railway purposes and rights of way for the railway and stations and workshops shall be reserved, and until the railway from Esquimalt and Nanaimo shall have been completed, the Government of British Columbia shall be the agent of the Government of Canada for administering for the purposes of settlement the lands in this sub-section men-So there were just two classes of persons whose rights-I shall not speak of them as rights, but whose position there, notwithstanding that it had no sanction of law, was guarded. The squatter, who had gone in when the lands were not open to settlement, was to receive the surface rights which Paterson has got. The agricultural settler, who went in during the four years the railway was under construction and who had to pay for his land, was to get the surface rights, but it was provided in regard to that, which was the most favoured class, that the company was to be entitled to the minerals. Now, we come to this point, which is the only point, after all, upon which the leader of the Opposition could have felt any confidence in addressing the House, that is that last session, when this matter was urged upon the House the Minister of the Interior promised that before another session he should investigate the claims of those settlers, and perhaps he went as to promise that they should be investigated upon the spot. What took place in the meantime? The Minister of the Interior went to the place and he found that a lawsuit was before the courts, involving, to some extent, the very rights which he had gone there to investigate. Now, with what great confidence the House was assured this afternoon that that lawsuit had nothing whatever to do with it; with what confidence the House was told a quarter of an hour ago by the hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock) that if the Minister of the Interior had only opened the printed case, he would have seen that it had nothing to do with it; but those who will take the trouble to read the case will find that the suit involved the questions arising in regard to the very class of cases which the Minister of the Interior is to be censured for not having investigated. This lawsuit had nothing to do with it? Let me tell the House that the lawsuit was carried on by three of these settlers, and that these settlers were three of the petitioners in the Department of the Interior who had pressed their claims for improvements, or for patents, on the Minister of the Interior, and that to-day, on the fyles of the Department of the Interior, appears the opinion of the Department of Justice upon those very claims of three of the settlers, and the decision of the Minister of the Interior upon that opinion, the opinion being given in the line which was taken by the judgment of the Supreme Court of British Columbia subsequently. That case is now before the Supreme Court of Canada on appeal. It is true it has gone off on other grounds; it is true the Supreme Court of British Columbia has decided that these persons claimed some of the town sites in the railway belt, which, under the circumstances, even under the Act of 1884, says the Supreme Court, were not open to pre-emption; and it is equally true that in the suit the plaintiffs did not claim the minerals, but claimed the surface rights. But what was the claim in relation to the surface rights? Why, it was this: That the Dominion Government had no right to make this transfer to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company at all; and if that contention had been established, the claims which were made in relation to this property would be still for us to administer. If they had succeeded in that contention, the transfer of all the minerals to the company would have been invalid and inoperative, and the leader of the Opposition would have been right in attempting to hold the Minister of the Interior responsible for not giving the minerals to the party who might be entitled to them, although he would still hold that the company was entitled to them. Again, it was contended that the right of pre-emption of a settler in relation to any lands upon that railway belt, was not affected and not limited by the Settlement Act of 1884, and that the settler there had all the rights of a settler on public lands in British Columbia; and if that contention had been sustained in Hogan's case, although it would only have resulted in the obtaining of a surface right by Hogan, it would have resulted, by all logical consequence, in a patent for the minerals on the same principle. Therefore, while it is true that that case did not raise a claim to the minerals, and was Sir John Thompson.

court disposed of on other grounds much more easily than if they had come to that-the claim covered the particular ground which is available for the settlers to take, and the claimants are three of the claimants in the department whose cases the Minister has promised to investigate, and the House is asked to censure the Minister because when he went there last year, finding these cases before the court, three of the cases which he had promised to investigate, he did not set up a rival tribunal, and sit in solemn judgment on the decision of the Supreme Court. There is only one chance to develop a weaker feature than those I have mentioned in the case of the leader of the Opposition, and that is that the Minister of the Interior is to be censured to-night for not having granted the coal in the areas attempted to be pre-empted by these men, when that coal, as well as all the other lands in the belt, passed out of the hands of the Dominion Government, every vestige of it, every foot of land, every pound of minerals, gravel and clay, even, twelve months before the Minister of the Interior took office. Now, just two points more in the observations which have been made against as. One is that we have, as the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) interjected, undertaken to issue patents for these lands, and we are, therefore, responsible for the way in which the patents were issued. Now, let us see how that came about. I have told the House that under the Settlement Act of 1884, for the first time these lands were thrown open for public settlement, they were to be open for four years, and the persons who during that four years complied with the provisions of the Act, were entitled to receive patents from the Dominion Government. Those persons received their patents. When the railway was completed and before the lapse of the four years, namely, in 1887, a transfer of all the rights was made to the Nanaimo and Esquimalt Railway Company, and all power on our part to give redress, to give them anything more than they had got by their patents, passed out of our hands; as I have stated, they passed out of our hands more than a year before the Minister of the Interior took office. Now, there is one other point which has been, and will be, pressed upon us, and it is this: Why did the Minister of the Interior promise to investigate? Now, before I come to answer that question, I agree that there is no use in our investigating at all, and we cannot renew our promise to investigate, because, as I have said, the property and the rights have completely passed out of our hands. If these people are entitled to minerals, we cannot grant them, because we have granted them to others, who, the Statute said, were entitled to them. If they were not entitled to receive them, notwithstanding our reading of the Act—and our reading has not been challenged from 1887, when we made this transfer, down to 1891—either these settlers can get their patents from the company to whom the transfer has been improperly made, or they can get their damages from the Provincial Government, or they can get damages against the Crown in right of the Dominion of Canada, by proceedings in the Exchequer Court. But to give them the minerals is a thing we cannot possible do. Now, when this matter came before the House last session, I, for my part, did not understand that the complaint that decided upon the question now before was to be presented to the House was that we did House—a claim being set up which the not include coal lands in the patents, because I do not suppose they would make that complaint in the very teeth of the Act which stated that the coal lands should be kept out of the patents; but I understood that the grievance of these settlers was that the transfer having been made to the railway company, the persons who had come to settle during the four years of railway construction. not having received, all of them, their patents from the Dominion Government before the transfer was made, because their rights had not been completed, their patents had not been given, and that a number of them had received deeds from the Nanaimo and Esquimalt Railway Company, covering the areas to which they were entitled, in which certain reservations are made which those persons considered severe. We had not then received a copy of the conveyance which had been made by the company, and I understood the intention of the Minister of the Interior to be to go there to examine the deeds which those persons had received, to see whether they were more onerous than the terms of the Act contemplated. We have since received a copy of those deeds, and we find that just in the language of the Act they reserve the minerals, and they reserve also the right of the company to go upon the land to take the minerals, which right is involved in the reservation of the minerals, and the right to use the lands for the necessary purpose of searching for and taking away minerals, with the stipulation, however, that the owners shall be compensated for any damage done to the property by the exercise of the rights so reserved. Having that information in our possession now, I am not able to form the opinion that those persons are aggrieved, even those who had received deeds from the company; but if they have been they have their redress, and it is a redress which the Government of Canada would probably aid them in securing against the company, because the company are not entitled to insert in their deeds any more onerous conditions than are specified in that Act. It was entirely in relation to the supposed exaction of further conditions by the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company that enquiry was promised by the Minister of the Interior, but when the complaint was developed in the House this afternoon, it was apparent that the grievances were not on that score, but the grievance put forward was that we did not convey to Mr. Paterson and his associates things which the law did not give us to convey to them, but to transfer to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Company. Therefore, we distinctly rest our case as against the attack made on the Government on the fact that these were not public lands open for settlement until the Settlement Act of 1884; that they had been reserved for other specific purposes three years before Mr. Paterson went on them; that even according to the laws of British Columbia the Government of the province might with perfect propriety have reserved the minerals from the grant; that his rights began under the Settlement Act of 1884, which declared he was entitled to surface rights only; that he got those surface rights and nothing less; that we have conveyed away, in accordance with the terms of the Act, the coal and other minerals, and it is impossible to give them now; that as regards the promise of the Minister to hold an investigation, that promise was made in relation to other particulars and other complaints, and even if acquire the right of an agriculturist to land that he had made a most laborious investigation into was set apart as a town site. The statement of the the particular complaint alleged this afternoon, it is utterly impossible as a matter of law to have given any redress, because the redress which they claim was not only one to which they were not entitled, but one which it was out of the power of the Government to give, those lands and those minerals being no longer in the posession of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of Justice has said this is not a party question, that it is a question of personal rights, and it should be determined by the facts of the case. The hon, gentleman also informed his supporters that unless they entirely agreed with his views as regards the merits of the case, he did not ask their support. I am quite ready to accept the challenge which the hon, gentleman has thrown out, and to say that if there is not a case clear and cogent against the course which the hon, gentleman has pursued, then we do not ask this House to support the amendment now before it. It is important to consider the history of this case, and the law as applicable to it, in order that the House may thoroughly understanditsmerits, for I assume that no hon, gentleman either on that side of the House or on this is disposed to do to settlers who go into a province any wrong or any injustice, and it is infinitely better if the Minister has made a mistake that censure should fall on the Minister rather than that a settler who had laboured many years on the land with the faith of the Crown pledged to him that he would become, on certain conditions, owner of the property, should be deprived of rights which he supposed by that promise were secured to him. Before I proceed to read the law in British Columbia on the subject to which the Minister of Justice has with so much confidence, but in my opinion without any justification for that confidence, appealed, I wish to call attention to the case to which the hon, gentleman refers, and which he says was on all fours with this one, and to the extract from the opinion which he read from the judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, which if he had read a little further would have made it perfectly clear that the learned judge did not support the proposition which he was enunciating and which he quoted it to uphold. Let me read an extract from the pleadings in the case. One of the propositions is this:

"The lands mentioned in paragraph 13 of the plaintiff's statement of claims include several lots sold and conveyed to various purchasers by the Crown, long prior to the passage of the Settlement Act aforesaid."

The point there was this: Whether the party who had settled on those lands should take up a lot that lay within a town site and had a right to it as though it was ordinary agricultural land. That was the issue, and the only issue submitted to the court by this case. Another extract which I will read is a very brief one. It is as follows :-

"The main contention on behalf of the plaintiff"-This is part of the judgment—

—" was that the town site recited, either had no existence or was improperly stated in the Order in Council establishing it."

This shows that there the issue was not whether a settler could acquire rights under the land laws of British Columbia to property by settlement within this particular district, but it was whether he could brief extract, was this:

"The plaintiff has never been a settler on land for agricultural purposes within the meaning of the law, but has been a trespasser off and on for about eight years past on

So hon, gentlemen will see that the case is as foreign to the issue presented in the case of Mr. Paterson and others who are similarly situated as any case can well be. The question at issue was, whether, under the laws of British Columbia per mitting the pre-emption of land for agricultural purposes, Mr. Hogan was enabled to go on the land which came within the town site referred to. Let me call the attention of the House to the provision of the Act of 1875, the Act of British Columbia, which the Minister of Justice alleged put it out of the power of Mr. Paterson and others, three years later, to settle within this railway belt. I will undertake to show in the most clear manner that the laws of British Columbia did give the parties the right to take up, to pre-empt lands, and acquire the right to purchase at $1 per acre within this settlement belt, and when the British Columbia Government conveyed to the Government of Canada that district for railway purposes, it expressly reserved the rights of those who had settled on the land within that particular district, and it gave the Government of Canada the right to acquire land elsewhere in place of the land so settled on. What are the provisions of the law of British Columbia in 1875? Let me read section 60 which refers to the railway reservation. It reads as fol-

"The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall at any time by notice signed by the chief commissioner of lands and works and published in the British Columbia Gazette reserve any lands not lawfully held by record, pre-emption, purchase, lease or Crown grants for the purpose of conveying the same to the Dominion Government in trust for the use and benefit of the Indians or for railway purposes mentioned in article 2 of the terms of union or for such other purposes as may be deemed advisable."

What did it do? Did it withdraw this land in British Columbia from actual settlement? but it reserved to the British Columbia Government the right by Order in Council on the part of the Lieutenant Governor, published in the British Columbia Gazette, to set apart lands for the purposes mentioned. Had those lands been so set apart under that Act at the time the settlement took place? Not at all. There is not a scintilla of evidence before this House for. the purpose of showing that those lands had been so set apart or reserved. On the contrary, the the British Columbia Government permitted those persons to go upon those lands, and the commissioner entered their names as persons who had preempted those lands, and had acquired the right of settlement under the law of British Columbia. What does that law say?

Mr. HAGGART. That is prior to the date of the passing of the Act; not afterwards.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am reading here the Act of 1875 which the Minister of Justice said made it impossible that those parties could acquire rights of settlement within the railway belt.

Mr. MARA. I would like to put the hon. gentleman right. The Government of which he was a member in the first place asked the reservation of those lands, and in the second place asked for the Mr. Marks (Rothwell)

"Provided always that the Government of Canada shall be entitled out of such excepted tract to lands equal in extent to those alienated up to the date of this Act by Crown grant, pre-emption, or otherwise, within the limits of the grant mentioned in section 3 of this Act." Mr. MARA. I would like to put the hon. gentle-

> Mr. MARA. The reservation was made and was not taken off.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman can make his speech when I have done. If the hon. gentleman chooses to take sides against the settlers of British Columbia he is welcome to do so.

> Mr. MARA. I thought the hon, gentleman would not like to make a statement that was incorrect, and I wanted to set him right, but he does not wish me to do so.

> Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, member cannot interrupt the speaker.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not propose to be interrupted by the hon. gentleman. Now, section 26 of the Act reads as follows:-

> "Any person desiring to pre-empt land as aforesaid shall apply in writing to the commissioner for leave to pre-empt such land, which application shall be in duplicate, and in such application he shall apply for the land as surveyed according to the rules from time to time to be made in that behalf, by the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works."

Now, we say that Mr. Paterson did that, and we say that 200 other parties did that in the districts referred to, and we say that it was open to the Minister of the Interior to appoint a commissioner for the purpose of enquiring into these facts, and to ascertain whether the facts are not as we represent them. I have something more to call the attention of the hon, gentleman to with regard to this, as he does not seem to be aware of the legislation that has taken place in his own province. I refer to the Act of 1884. Under that statute it is provided that certain districts shall be set apart for railway purposes by section 3 of the Act, which reads as follows :-

"There is hereby granted to the Dominion Government, There is hereby granted to the Dominion Government, for the purpose of constructing, and to aid in the construction of a railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo, and in trust to be expropriated as they may deem advisable (but save as is hereinafter excepted) all that piece or parcel of land situate in Vancouver Island, described as follows:—Bounded on the south by a straight line drawn from the head of Saanich Inlet to Muir Creek on the Straits of Fuca; on the west by a straight line drawn from Muir Creek aforesaid to Crown Mountains; on the north, by a straight line drawn from Crown Mountains to north, by a straight line drawn from Crown Mountains; on the Seymour Narrows; and on the east by the coast line of Vancouver Island to the point of commencement; and including all coal, coal oil, ores, stones, clay, marble, slate, micas, minerals and substances whatsoever theremon, therein and thereunder." upon, therein and thereunder.'

Then, under section 4, there is the following provision :-

But that is not all. Section 5 provides as follows:-

Now, Sir, these lands lie within the limit, and court; but for the purpose of perpetuating the if there were lands upon which any settler had acquired the right of pre-emption to these lands, it was open to the Government of Canada to seek an equal area of land elsewhere. If the facts are as we state them the Government of Canada had no interest in these lands, the Government of Canada had no right to them; they were lands that were pre-empted, and so did not pass to Canada, and it was the business of the Government of Canada to ascertain what was the area of these lands, and to claim from the British Columbia Government an area of other lands equal to these in extent. It was their business to appoint a commission or an agent to enquire into all these facts, to ascertain what was the extent of the territory that could not pass to them under the provisions of this law; and then it was their business to leave these parties to be dealt with by the Government of British Columbia, receiving the patents from the Government of British Columbia, in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1875, which Act gave them the right to the minerals as well as to the surface. There can be no doubt whatever with regard to that But if the Government of Canada choose to regard these lands that are pre-empted as part of their grant, they must give them in accordance with the conditions of the pre-emption. What has the Government of Canada done in undertaking to deal with these lands in this way? Why, they have put it out of their own power to claim from British Columbia lands of equal area in which the minerals are found, and so they have undertaken by an illegal act, an unjust act, an act of violence, to take from these persons, rights which were secured to them under the Act of 1875, and reaffirmed to them by the Act which I have just read. There can be no doubt whatever with regard to those rights. How was the Minister of the Interior to ascertain the area or extent of lands within the area marked that did not pass to the Government of Canada? He had to look and see what lands were actually granted; he had to look and see the extent of the lands embraced within the area that was absolutely excepted without reference to settlement at all: and then he had to look to the extent of lands that were pre-empted under the law of British Columbia, and for which patents had not It was necessary to ascertain these yet issued. facts in order that he might know what area of lands he might claim elsewhere outside of this belt, in compensation for the lands which could not pass to him, in consequence of the lien that was upon them. Now, Sir, the provision is perfectly clear. Here are 200 families settled before the Act of 1884. They settled under the provisions of this Act of 1875, and they were authorized so to settle. It is not a fact that these lands were set apart for railway purposes, and that settlers were excluded from 1875 upwards. I say that they were not so excluded; I say they were entitled to settle, I say that the provisions made for entering their names in the various land offices of British Columbia were acted upon, and Mr. Paterson's name and other names were entered upon these books in 1878, six years before the Government of Canada acquired a title to any of these lands in that district; and therefore these parties had prior blunders of a Minister, or excusing the indifference or carelessness of a Minister, is this House going to send 200 settlers in British Columbia, who have had to struggle to improve their lands, and to make for themselves a livelihood, first to the courts of British Columbia and then to the Supreme Court of Canada, for the purpose of vindicating those rights, which it is the business of this House to see are vindicated here against the misconduct of any Min-ister, whether that misconduct arises from the undue influence of a railway corporation or whether it arises from the indifference of a Minister to the discharge of the duties of his office? Sir, it is perfeetly clear that when the hon. Minister promised my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition that he would enquire into this matter, he felt then that it was his duty to appoint a commission or an agent to investigate the facts, and to redress the wrongs of which these people complained. The hon. Minister of Justice says that this man accepted a surface patent. Why, the Government forced a surface patent upon him. He protested against it; he has petitioned against it; he has addressed the House against it; and we are speaking here on his behalf as a protest against the issue of a patent for a less amount of property than he was entitled to under the terms and conditions under which he settled. I say it is not a fact that he had not a right to go upon those lands. I say that his right to go upon them was recognized by the laws of British Columbia; and his right to acquire a patent is a right under the common law, which gives him a right to all minerals except the pre-cious metals. That is the extent of his right, and he ought not to be content with anything less; he would not have the spirit of a British freeman if he were disposed to accept anything less. Now, Sir, it is clear that Mr. Paterson and the other settlers are entitled to the minerals, and this House ought not to take sides with a great railway corporation against them which through its influence has induced the Administration not only to part with what belonged to the Government, but with what belonged to the actual settlers who had gone upon those lands. I would like to know how it was possible for the hon. Minister of the Interior to discharge his duties otherwise than by an enquiry into the facts. How washe to know whether the provisions of that Act were observed unless he knew what settlers were there previous to 1884? The confirmation took place in 1884, and all the persons who had settled there prior to that time were entitled to patents from the Crown in the ordinary way; and in my opinion, whatever it may be worth, those parties were entitled to their patents, not from the Government here, but from the Government of British Columbia; for when a party had acquired a right, the intention of that Statute was to give the Government of Canada compensation by allowing them to obtainlands elsewhere, because it says:

"The grant mentioned in section 3 of this Act shall not include any land now held under Crown grant, lease, agreement for sale, or other alienation by the Crown." And so on; and the object was perfectly clear in proposing to give the Government of Canada mineral lands elsewhere, to treat those lands as lands that had not passed and were not intended to pass rights. There is no doubt, in my opinion, that to the Government of Canada for this railway reserthey have rights which may be enforced in a vation; so that hon, gentlemen will see, by an examination of these sections, that but a portion of the land within the limitary lines laid down in the statute, passed to the Government of Canada, that a certain district did not pass, that lands that had already been granted were not intended to pass, and that all lands settled upon prior to this agreement were lands not intended to pass but were lands pre-empted, with which the Government of Canada ought not to have undertaken to deal; and I say again, it was impossible that the Minister of the Interior could know what lands had passed to the Government of Canada without an examination by a commissioner or otherwise to ascertain the facts, and to see that no attempt was made to give to the railway corporations lands to which other parties had acquired the right. Now, the hon, gentleman undertook to make the provisions of this law retrospective. He reads the Act of 1884 as if it not only conveyed to the Government of Canada the lands of British Columbia which the Government of British Columbia were then free to convey, but that it was retrospective in its character and put an end to the rights of all parties who had not already acquired a conveyance or a patent from the Crown. Now, I do not admit that. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Paterson and those associated with him were claiming the minerals because other parties elsewhere had got minerals. No, Mr. Speaker, the claim is not put forward on any such ground. The claim is put forward on this ground, that it was their right. They went upon those lands under the law of British Columbia, as it was made in 1875. They went there with the assurance that they would receive a patent in the ordinary form. There were no minerals reserved when the settlements upon those lands were made. There was a provision for the publication of a proclamation in the Gazette should any lands be reserved; but that provision was not operative until the proclamation appeared, and no such proclamation was issued until the arrangement was made between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia on the subject. The hon, gentleman says that those lands were first opened to settlement in 1884. I say that is not the case. That is a question of fact, which, if there was any doubt upon it, ought to have been investigated; but I find that the Government of British Columbia opened books and permitted entries, and parties who settled in this district did make entries, and the lands were recognized as open to settlement in the way described in section 26 of that Act, which was not put an end to under section 60. say, then, that every one of these two hundred settlers who went into that country, some of whom have been there for twenty years, went there under the law as it then stood, which gave them the assurance that upon the performance of certain conditions, such as continued residence on the property for a certain period and the payment of one dollar an acre, they would acquire a title to the property-not simply a title to the surface, but a title to the lands, embracing all the minerals contained in those lands other than the precious So that it is perfectly clear that the case referred to by the hon. Minister of Justice has no bearing upon this case. The case quoted by the hon. Minister of Justice was a case in which the only question at issue was whether the lands were Mr. Mills (Bothwell).

open to settlement as agricultural lands, or whether they were a portion of a town site. Now, let me call the attention of the House to this fact, that that question would have been of no importance whatever if the agricultural lands had not been open for settlement. If Mr. Hogan had succeeded in showing that those lands were outside of the town site, they might then have been in the position of these lands.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The pretension of Hogan and all that class of people was based on the Act of 1884.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That does not make the slightest difference, because the point is not that Mr. Hogan was there prior to 1884. If this had not been a town site then the question would not have been a question of any consequence, as it is set out in the pleading. But it is because those parties had rights, it is because these lands were open for settlement on certain conditions—

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Hogan states the contrary.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell),—it is because that is the case that the Government of Canada, when they found that the minerals in these lands were conveyed, should either have issued a patent for the minerals to all those settlers, or have refused to touch these lands, and have asked that the complement of lands represented by them should be taken elsewhere. That they have not done, and I say that the action of the Government in undertaking to deal with these lands in this way, without any investigation into the rights of those parties and without looking at the law, as it stood, under which these rights were acquired, is open to censure, and the resolution of my honfriend should be supported.

Mr. MARA. When I interrupted the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I thought he would rather be corrected than mislead the House; but when he taunted the British Columbia members with not knowing the legislation of their own province, and continued his misstatement, I can come to no other conclusion than that he wished to deliberately mislead the House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman is out of order. He says my hon, friend wished to mislead the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid my hon, friend must withdraw the expression that the hon, gentleman deliberately intended to mislead the House.

Mr. MARA. Then I will withdraw the expression that he deliberately intended to mislead the House, but I will say that when he was corrected and the opportunity afforded him of placing himself right he deliberately refused to do so, and repeated the statement which, at the time, I informed him was not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you do not know. Mr. MARA. I think I will prove to the hon. gentleman in a few moments, if he is a fair-minded man, that he is wrong. I was surprised this afternoon when the hon. leader of the Opposition presented his case to the House, but I felt that he had been misinformed, that a wrong brief had been placed in his hands; but certainly the hon, member for Bothwell can plead no such excuse. In 1873, Mr.

Marcus Smith, who was then engineer in charge of the Canadian Pacific Railway, declared Esquimalt the terminus of that railway. At the same time the Government of which Mr. Mackenzie was leader asked that a reserve of twenty miles in width should be placed upon the projected line of railway between Seymour Narrows and Esquimalt. That was done. Shortly after that the Mackenzie Government asked for a conveyance, which was refused. I will now read a memo, of the Executive Council of British Columbia, showing that they fully understood at that time that a complete reserve was placed upon the land between Esquimalt and Seymour Narrows. In a memo, dated 18th September, 1883, the hon. Commissioner of Lands and Works reported:

"On a memorandum dated 18th September, 1873, from the Honourable Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works reporting that the Order in Council of the 30th June, 1873, reserving Crown lands of the east coast of Vancouver Island is seriously retarding the settlement of that portion as and is seriously retarding the settlement of that portion of the province and recommending that in view of the fact that the despatch from His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor to the Secretary of State transmitting the minute of this Executive Council, dated 25th July, 1873, upon the subject of this reservation has not as yet been replied to and as the matter requires immediate settle-ment, that the Dominion Government be respectfully urged to at once define by survey the land they propose claim-ing on the east coast of Vancouver Island, and that they appoint also a competent person in the province to dispose of said lands on such terms as will admit of settlement of said lands on such terms as will admit of settlement and the Honourable Amor DeCosmos as special delegate about to proceed to Ottawa, be authorized to confer with the Dominion Government upon the subject.

"W. J. ARMSTRONG.
"Clerk Executive Council." (Certified)

That was the position in 1873. I will now show to the House, and particularly to the hon, member for Bothwell, the position of affairs in 1880. that year the Hon. Mr. Walker, Premier of the province, was sent to Ottawa with respect to the railway, dock and other matters. In his report to the Province of British Columbia, made on his return, he said as follows:-

"Figures showing the advantages of the line (if constructed) were produced; much stress was laid on the facts that the surveys had been made, that valuable lands on the Island had, as far back as 1875, been ceded by Statute to the Dominion at its special request and solely for Canadian Pacific Railway purposes; that up to the present moment these lands have been retained and the policy of retaining them in aid of the same railway been reaffirmed by the present Dominion Government. A well-drawn document on the same subject from the Victoria Chamber of Commerce was also referred to, and I can safely state that no favourable circumstance or argument which an intimate knowledge of the case could suggest was omitted on the occasion." was omitted on the occasion.

Now, I have given you the views of the Provincial Government in 1873 and in 1880, and by these two documents you will see that the Provincial Government religiously kept that land intact and at the request of the Dominion Government. The Provincial Government had then and some time previously been fighting the Dominion Government on account of its non-fulfilment of its railway promises, and they were particularly careful that by no act of theirs should the agreement be violated or the Dominion Government given any grounds to charge them with a breach of contract. Therefore, from 1873, when, as the Premier of the province said, a tract of land was ceded to the Government, up to 1880, not a single settler could record his claim upon those lands. How, then, can the hon, member for Bothwell say that the land was open to settlement, and that all a settler had to downs to record under the Land Act of 1875, secure minerals, as he would be if he were an ordinary pre-empter under the Act of 1875? The next point I will discuss is what is called the Settlement Act The hon. Minister of Justice quoted altogether from Dominion Statutes and Dominion Orders in Council. I will now quote from British Columbia Statutes and Orders in Council to show that the utmost harmony existed between the two Governments, that the same ideas dictated both Bills, so that there was no conflict. Clause 23 of the Settlement Act of 1884 states:

"The company shall be governed by sub-section f of the hereinbefore cited agreement, and each bond ride settler who has continually occupied and improved any settler who has continually occupied and improved any lands within the tract of land to be acquired by the company from the Dominion Government, for a period of one year prior to the 1st of January, 1883, shall be entitled to a grant of the freehold of the surface rights over said squatted land to the extent of 160 acres to each squatter at the rate of $1 an acre."

So that the British Columbia Government distinctly shows that these men were not in a position to record, either by pre-emption or purchase, but that they were simply squatters, and I may say further, that I was a member of the Local Legislature from the time of the first reserve placed upon the land until the Act of 1884 was passed; and, in this Bill, squatters' claims and rights received every consideration, this clause having been purposely framed to protect them, so that any man who had been a bond nde squatter on the land for one year prior to that date could get, not the coal, but the surface rights only, upon the payment of $1 an acre. Now, after the very able defence of the Minister of Justice, it would certainly be out of place for me to attempt to argue this point any further. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I will not say intentionally misled the House-but he certainly has not paid that attention to the Statutes and to the Orders in Council which would enable him to speak authoritatively on this subject. There is one point that I do not wish to have misunderstood; that is in regard to the pre-emptions as provided for in the Lands Act of 1875. would look into the Statutes and Orders in Council he would find that there were three or four reserves made, that the line was changed several times. First, there was a reserve on the Fraser River route, afterwards on the Bute Inlet route; but, when the Land Act of 1875 was framed it was intended that the Provincial Government should make good to the Dominion Government all lands within the 20-mile belt that had been alienated prior to the first reserve that was placed upon the land, and, if the hon, gentleman had looked into the question closely and had wished to deal fairly with the House, he would have explained that point to the House.

I shall not detain the House Mr. GORDON. very long after the very able manner in which this question has been dealt with. However, I cannot forbear making some allusions to the changes which have occurred in their love for the poor settlers of hon, gentlemen opposite within the very short period of my political life. On the 28th March, 1884, the late member for New Westminster (Mr. Homer) moved the six months hoist to what is commonly known as the Settlement Bill, and on that occasion I urged a division of the House against the Government. In that Bill were comprised all the iniquities of which his title, and be entitled to the coal and other these people complain. It was pointed out to hon, gentlemen on both sides of the House, particularly by my hon. friend from New Westminster, who was a man of very large experience, and, aiding him in my humble way to the best of my ability, I pointed out to hon. gentlemen who are now so sympathetic with the poor settlers in the Vancouver district, that there were 126 squatters on that belt at that time who had been unable to get their pre-emption records. I wish to call the attention of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to that fact. He assumes that everyone who had settled on that belt from 1873 up to 1884, by virtue of their squatting upon the land, were permitted to record their names and secure their pre-emption records. That is not the fact. was not a settler who had squatted upon the land reserved by the Local Government from the Seymour Narrows to Esquimalt who was allowed to enter his name or obtain his pre-emption record. Perhaps the Minister of Justice was a little harsh on some of the settlers when he assumed that they went in there with a view of taking the land away from the Crown.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Did I understand the hon, gentleman to say that the Local Government of British Columbia exercised the power given them by the Act of 1875 and reserved this land specially by proclamation?

Mr. GORDON. In 1873 the Government of Sir John Macdonald made application to the Local Government to declare a reservation for the Canadian Pacific Railway from Seymour Narrows to That reservation was proclaimed by the Provincial Government and that remained until 1883. In the first instance, it reserved a twenty-mile belt following the sinuosities of the coast of Vancouver Island on the east coast from Esquimalt to Seymour Narrows. In 1883 that reservation was changed and the boundaries were rearranged, but were re-reserved in the same proclamation. The land was never open for five minutes from 1873 down to the period at which it was opened by the Act of 1884. During all that period there was not a solitary squatter who was able to go to one of our land commissioners and secure his pre-emption record or even the entry of The commissioners would take the slip of paper upon which his application was written and put it on fyle, so that, when the lands were dealt with according to the laws of the province for the time being, it was supposed that he would get the first opportunity of purchasing that land. At the time the Settlement Act was being passed, I felt assured that a great many of these settlers would feel it a hardship in this way-and it is this point to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice—that instead of going on this land with a view of grabbing it away from the Crown, they were induced by local representatives to go there with the assurance that they had better settle there than go into Washington Territory, that they had better take their chances, and when the land came into the market they would have the first opportunity of purchasing the land upon which they might settle. In this way many of them were led to believe that they would obtain the mineral rights as well as the surface rights, and many were thus induced to settle on lands that otherwise would have been left unsettled, but that was not through any action of the Government. So strongly | of the Opposition with regard to those lands that were Mr. Gordon.

did I feel that these people had been harshly dealt with that I appealed to both sides of this House, not only in the interest of the settlers, but on the ground of the immense magnitude of the interests which were being given away to a company composed mostly of foreigners, who would thus become possessed of lands and minerals of such great value. Hon, gentlemen opposite were not quite so sympathetic then as they are now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We were not quite so numerous, but we were quite as sympathetic.

Mr. GORDON. There were some of those gentlemen who voted against the Government on that occasion, and I have a list of them here. Amongst those who voted with Mr. Homer and myself and others on this side against the Government were Mr. Allison, who is present here again, Mr. Charlton, Mr. Fairbank, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Forbes, Mr. Gillmor, Mr. Irvine, Mr. Jackson, Mr. King, Mr. Kirk, Mr. Landerkin, Mr. Lister, Mr. McCraney, Mr. McMullen, Mr. Somerville (Brant), Mr. Springer, Mr. Wheeler, and Mr. Mc-Isaac. Those gentlemen voted with us, but the leaders of that party including the present leader of the Opposition voted the other way.

Mr. LAURIER. I voted with the Government and I voted wrong.

Mr. GORDON. Also including the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the then leader of the Opposition, Mr. Blake, who voted to give away the rights of these people, and that also included the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), Mr. Mills (Bothwell), Mr. Mulock, Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Paterson (Brant), Mr. Trow, Mr. Watson, Mr. Cameron (Huron), Mr. Armstrong, and some twenty others. They were all at that time willing to sacrifice the people who had settled on that land and to give all the coal away which people who were acquainted with its value prized so highly. Now, this sudden sympathy can have only one object in view, and I am in very grave doubt as to whether the settlers on those lands can see anything in this resolution that will give them anything to hope for.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville.) Or to vote for.

Mr. GORDON. If the leader of the Opposition had brought in a Bill to expropriate these minerals from the railway company with a view of handing them over to the settlers, he would have had my support.

Mr. LAURIER. That is a good hint.

Mr. GORDON. I promised him that last session. But he, as a legal gentleman of high standing, would rather take the political position and bring in a resolution with a hope of getting my support because my people may feel that he is in sympathy with them. However, I do not feel inclined to accept his warm embrace. If I could see the whole Opposition regret the step they took on the 28th of March, and take some measures to remedy the whole defect, then I could join with him heartily, and I believe every gentleman on this side of the House would join with him in redeeming Canada from one of the greatest monopolies that has ever cursed the country. I cannot forbear from referring to some remarks of the leader alienated. He certainly wished to convey to the facts we can come to a conclusion. I understand House that the lands that were given north of the line drawn east and west, half way between Courtney River and Seymour Narrows, were in lieu of those squatted lands, which is not the case: they were in lieu of lands alienated by pre-emption and recorded prior to 1873. They were granted in 1887, I think, to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, and perhaps included a little more than the alienated lands. But if the hon, gentleman wishes to attack the grants to the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, I think there is every opportunity to do so, because every one of its provisions and conditions are based upon the conditions of the Settlement Act, which provides that "nevertheless," "nevertheless," and "nevertheless," through all the conditions of the Act, if I have read it right. If the hon, gentleman wishes to attack that grant, not only with a view to remedy any of the evils that the settlers may have felt, but also to remove from that part of the Dominion of Canada a huge monopoly that was never contemplated by those who voted to implement that bargain, I certainly will assist all I can. In the present instance I can only disagree with the tenor of his resolution, because it affords no remedy to the settlers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not understand the facts to be as they are represented by some of the hon, gentlemen opposite. The hon, gentleman from Vancouver (Mr. Gordon), who has just resumed his seat, has expressed, what we should all be surprised if he did not feel, a warm sympathy for the squatters or settlers on those lands about whom we are talking to-night. The hon, gentleman represents those people in this House, and it is therefore to be expected that they would, to some extent, have his sympathy. If I understand him aright, he is in full sympathy with the object my hon. friend seeks to attain, only he does not think the hon. gentleman has taken the right way to do it. Therefore, there is no need of argument to convince him that we are right in the position we take in this House; he is satisfied that we are right now.

Mr. GORDON. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; the only exception he takes is about the mode of procedure we have adopted to gain that right; it is not to the right itself. If you bring in a Bill, he says, to obtain for the people what they are seeking, you will have my support. I can tell him that if he supports my hon. friend in his motion before the House he will attain what he is seeking, and his friends will attain what they desire, and the right of the settler will be ultimately secured to him beyond any per-That will be the political and legal adventure. result of this vote, because it will be an expression of opinion on the part of the House that the rights of these gentlemen must be secured to them, and it will then become the duty of the Government to take proper, legal and constitutional means of carrying it into effect.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is what we are doing.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is assuming just that which is in dispute. The Postmaster General laughs very heartily, it seems to me he does not understand the points we have been discussing for the last two hours. Now, let us see what the facts are. There can be no dispute, I take it, about the law, and if we can agree upon the way, to reserve those lands from pre-emption.

that in 1875 an Act was passed by the British Columbia Government giving certain rights of pre-emption to those who chose to exercise them. In that law it is provided, in the 60th section:

"The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall, at any time, by notice, signed by the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, and published in the British Columbia Gazette, reserve any lands not lawfully held by record, pre-emption, purchase, lease or Crown grant, for the purpose of conveying the same to the Dominion Government."

Now, I asked the hon, gentleman a question upon the crucial point in dispute. I asked him whether he was able to inform the House that the Lieutenant Governor in Council had reserved those lands by a notice under that regulation.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman did not answer me that they had, but he answered me that two years before the Act passed at all a proclamation had been issued by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Why, the hon. gentleman surely must know that a proclamation issued two years previously can have no effect to repeal or abrogate a statute passed in 1875. The rights which these people claim are guaranteed to them by statute passed in 1875, and no proclamation issued, and no private agreement come to between the Government of British Columbia and the company, could have any effect in abrogating or derogating from that statutory enactment of 1875. If the hon, gentleman can show me that previously to the parties, whose rights are in question here, having pre-empted the lands they seek to hold, a notice was issued by the Lieutenant Governor under that section, then he will go very far to maintain the argument he has addressed to the But if he cannot show me that such a notice has been issued under that section it is no use for him to quote a proclamation issued by the Lieutenant Governor of the province one, two or three years previously, because they have no legal weight.

GORDON. The Provincial Government Mr. notified every land commissioner within that reservation. Notwithstanding that Act, he knew the records were to be issued.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman may be right in that; I am not going to contradict him.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The reservation was made under that Act too.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A private notice given by the Governor of British Columbia would have no effect upon the rights which a settler acquires under the pre-emption clauses of this Act. fact is, that under that law, sections 26 and 27, certain properties may be pre-empted by individuals. The facts are, as I understand them, that these individuals have exercised those rights and preempted them.

Mr. MARA. No. Will the hon. gentleman refer to chapter 13, page 63.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The sections to which I am referring are sections 26 and 27, which give applicants the right top re-empt, and section 60, which enables the Lieutenant Governor, in a particular Mr. MARA. I do not think the hon, gentleman understood me. If he will refer to chapter 13 he will find it is an Act to authorize the grant of certain lands to the Government of Canada for railway purposes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman is at liberty to read any section that is pertinent to the argument.

Mr. MARA. This statute conveys to the Dominion Government the lands which the hon, gentleman is now seeking to lead the House to believe are open to pre-emption. The Act states:

"Whereas it is expedient to provide for the grant of public lands to the Dominion Government required for a railway between the town of Nanaimo and Esquimalt harbour—"

And it proceeds:

"From and after the passing of this Act there shall be and there is hereby granted to the Dominion Government for the purpose of constructing and to aid in the const truction of a railway between the town of Nanaimo and Esquimalt harbour in trust to be appropriated in such manner as the Dominion Government may deem advisable a similar extent of public lands along the line of railway before mentioned (not to exceed 20 miles on- each side of said line) as may be appropriated for the same purpose by the Dominion from the public lands of the North-West Territory and the Province of Manitoba, as provided in the Order in Council section II, admitting the Province of British Columbia into Confederation; such grant should be subject otherwise to all the conditions contained in the said second section of terms of union."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon, gentleman state to this House that this Act is acted upon by both Governments, and the matter was completed under it?

Mr. MARA. I have read extracts that it was.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman read extracts from some proclamation in 1873.

Mr. MARA. I read extracts from an address by the Premier of the province to the Local Legislature of 1880, stating that the compact was made in 1885 and had remained intact.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon, gentleman would answer my question categorically, and if his answer in the affirmative was correct, it would go far to clear the argument from a good deal of misunderstanding. But I will show that the hon. gentleman is wrong. He has stated that the negotiations between the Dominion Government and the Government of British Columbia, which that Act was to enable the British Columbia Government to carry out, were not completed; and in 1884, if he will turn to the British Columbia statutes, he will find in the Act 47 Vic., chap. 14, provision is made for granting those very lands from the British Columbia Government to the Dominion Government. If those lands had been conveyed, as he asks the House to believe they were by the Act of 1875, the legislation in 1884 would have been a perfect farce and there would have been no occasion for it. I call attention to section 3 of the Act of 1884. It provides for the granting of lands to the Dominion Government to aid in the construction of a railway between Esquimalt and Nanaimo. It subsequently gives a description of the land, and contains this provision:

"Provided always that the Government of Canada shall be entitled, out of such excepted tracts, to lands equal in extent to those alienated up to the date of this Act by Crown grants, pre-emption or otherwise, within the limits of the grants mentioned in section 3 of this Act."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. MARA. You said you wanted me to reply categorically.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to show the hon. gentleman that it is not possible that the Act of 1875 could have been operative to convey title to the property, because the Act of 1884 conveyed the same property, subject to certain provisions. What are those provisions? One is that the Government of Canada shall be entitled to occupy those lands and grant portions of them as pre-emptions. British Columbia had allowed certain lands to be pre-empted.

Mr. GORDON. No. That is the point of the mistake.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is a matter of construction.

Mr. MARA. It is a matter of fact.

Mr. GORDON. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will allow me a few words. That one point in regard to pre-emption is the whole cause of the mistake made by hon, gentlemen opposite in this discussion. From 1873 to the opening of the lands by the Act of 1884 no record was issued. The Act transferring that land to the Government of Canada in 1875 occurred in this way: The Dominion Government of that day introduced a Bill in Parliament to authorize the construction of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. That Bill was defeated in the Senate. Then followed a long correspondence and negotiations between the Local Government and the Imperial Government, through Lord Carnaryon, and that Act remained as it was pending those negotiations. The sum of $750,000 was offered by the Government of that day because they had failed to keep faith with the province; they offered it through the member for West Ontario, when he visited British Columbia. British Columbia rejected that proposition, and that Act of 1875 remained on the Statute-book. Those lands were all reserved; not a record was issued. records to which the hon, gentleman has referred are those records which were issued in 1872-73 up to the date of the proclamation. But no records had been issued for eleven years, and they were then issued in conformity with the law at the time the records were made; but, I repeat, that not a single record was granted in the railway belt from 1873 to 1884.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman has made a very lengthy attempt to explain the painful position which he occupies here. It is this: that he is engaged in bolstering up an attempt on the part of the Government to deprive some of his constituents of their legal rights. The hon. gentleman, and I say it with proper respect, has evaded the point in the argument, which is con-clusively against him, and he has attempted to assume in his argument that section 60 operated in itself as a reservation of the lands. Section 60 does not reserve a foot of land. It merely confers a power on the Lieutenant Governor to exempt certain lands, when he has published a proclamation in the manner prescribed by the section. There is no evidence before the House, it has not been established by any hon, member who has spoken against the amendment, that any proclamation under section 60 has yet been issued. So that, what do we find? If I am right in that, and I do not think a lawyer in the House would challenge the correctness of that interpretation, we find the hon. gentleman here construing a statute, two sections of which give the persons desiring to pre-empt lands the right to do so, and one section of which gives the Lieutenant Governor power to reserve the lands; and we find before us as evidence the statement of my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Laurier)! that this person named Paterson did make the necessary entry to pre-empt his lands.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But I say, yes. I say we have the evidence from the lips of the leader of the Opposition, and the hon. gentlemen opposite are not in a position to contradict that.

Mr. GORDON. I am in a position to say that it is not a fact. I am in a position to say that the records were received in 1884. The certificate of purchase and the certificates of record were sent together to the department.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Paterson told me again at six o'elock to-day that he made his entry on the 29th January, 1878.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We have that statement made here, and the House is bound to come to a conclusion on this important matter upon the facts as they appear to the House, and upon the law as it stands here. No amount of twisting on the part of the hon, gentlemen opposite and no amount of reference to statutes which never were in operation or in force will avail them in this I was about to show, before I was controversy. interrupted, that by the Act of 1884 these lands were granted to the Dominion Government with that proviso, and the proviso gives to the Government of Canada the power to accept other lands in lieu of those which have been alienated by preemption. If this land, therefore, was alienated by preemption, the duty of the Government of Canada, as has been so well pointed out by the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), was to have sent an agent there to have ascertained what lands were alienated by any of the means prescribed in that provision, by pre-emption or otherwise, and to have accepted other lands in lieu of them. The Government failed in their duty when they did not ascertain They took a grant of all these lands and they have given a patent to this gentleman, but they have given a patent exempting from it the right to the minerals. I want to ask hon, gentlemen opposite how that can be justified on the statement of facts and law as we have it here; how can they refuse to give that man a patent conveying to him all the rights which he would be entitled to, as one possessing a pre-empted right under the before the Supreme Court? The case made out by 26th and 27th sections of the Act. I say no valid hon, gentlemen opposite seems to be an absurd one, argument can be adduced, unless you show that the There is no argufacts stated here are wrong. ment can be advanced here to take away from these men the legal rights which they acquired; after they made their entry and pre-empted these lands they possessed the right which follows, to get a patent conveying the lands themselves and the minerals. Not only that, but hon, gentlemen will see that their arguments, and their references to proclamations in 1873, and to negotiations which were uncompleted and were never carried out, ought to have no more effect upon these acts, and upon the legal and equitable aspect of the case, than a passing breeze of wind. What have negotiations which never were carried out between do this, even long after the lands had passed out of the two Governments, and proclamations of the Lieutenant Governor got to do with the legality of the rights of parties under the Act? It is only a lumbering of the case to bring these things in. You have got to look at the statute of 1875, the succeeding statute of 1884, and the one prominent fact that the man made his pre-emption entry; and looking at these two statutes, coupled with the fact that the pre-emption was made, there can be no legal doubt of this man's legal right, and that the Government are in fault in refusing to recognize that right to-day.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to say just a few words in reply to the statements made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). He claims that these gentlemen made an entry under the Act of 1875, and that under the Act of 1875 they were entitled to all the rights of pre-emption which were provided for by that Act. He claims under the clause of that Act, which said that certain rights should be set aside by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province, that unless that proclamation took effect the Act would have no force. We find that subsequently, by the Act quoted by the hon. gentleman here, they have passed an Act of Parliament transferring these lands which the hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills) says ought to be transferred by an Order in Council, or set aside by an Order in Council. But, further than that, we have the judgment of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, which says that these lands were set aside and reserved. The statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) never struck those parties who have been prosecuting claims before the courts in British Columbia. The law as laid down by the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has never struck any lawyer in British Columbia; for, in making the factum of their case to be submitted to the courts in British Columbia and to the Supreme Court they said that the law is the very opposite of what the hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills) states. I shall just read from the factum of the case of Hogan vs. the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, a short paragraph, in which the plaintiff states:

"It would appear from the passing of the Act of 1875 down to the passing of the Settlement Act in December, 1883, a large tract of country was withdrawn from settlement, purchase or pre-emption, during that period, and remained a wilderness."

If the law was as stated by the hon, gentleman (Mr. Mills), how is it that it never occurred to the plaintiff's attorney in the case, when he was urging his claim before the courts in British Columbia or before the Supreme Court? The case made out by even taking the facts as stated by the hon, gentlemen Suppose that person was entitled themselves. under his pre-emption to the coal and minerals, and to everything which a deed in fee-simple would give him, what power had the Minister of the Interior to give any such deed as that? The land was conveyed to the Dominion Government in trust. They were only acting as trustees, and one of the conditions of that trust was that in conveying the land to any squatter or settler there should be exempted the coal, the minerals, the gravel, and everything else. The amendment of the hon, gentleman (Mr. Laurier) declares that it was the duty of the Minister of the Interior, and the duty of the Government, to the hands of the Government, and passed into the hands of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. Suppose we were in possession of these lands, as we were in 1884, and suppose we had all the rights and privileges which the conveyance of British Columbia gave us under that Act: what power had we then under that Act to make the conveyance which the leader of the Opposition proposes, and which the hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies), a distinguished lawyer, and which the hon. gentleman over there who poses as such, state that we have the power to do? No such power was ever vested in the Dominion of Canada, and the Minister of the Interior had not the power. The member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says: Oh, but it was the duty of the Government, before taking the conveyance, before the statute was passed, before entering into our duties as trustees, to send our commissioners and to enquire into what rights every squatter had in that section of the country, and upon what terms he had entered on the lands, and to see that the conditions were fulfilled in every particular. We had no business to do anything of the kind at the time. The hon. member (Mr. Mills) was a supporter of the Bill as introduced into the House in 1884. He did not make it a condition, before the passage of the Bill or before voting for it, that a commission should be employed to go up there and enquire whether the squatters came into possession of the lands under certain regulations or rules of the Provincial Government. No; he was perfectly content with the provisions that the Bill made with regard to the squatters, and with what the British Columbia Government gave to us as trustees to convey to the Nanaimo and Esquimalt Railway. We were simply acting as trustees. We had not even the full powers of trustees; and if the hon, gentleman will read the Act he will find what our powers in the matter were; and he will find that the Minister of the Interior, before he could even issue a patent for any of the lands, had to issue it at the direction of his attorney, the Government of British Colum-I have been in this House many and many a year, but I never before heard of a great party of this country moving a motion of want of confidence in the Government for carrying out to the full extent the provisions of a statute which a majority of the hon, gentlemen themselves voted for. They must be hard up for material against the Government when they have to make such propositions as this without the foundation of a case. The hon. member for Queen's accused me of being out of the House for a couple of hours and not understanding the question. What an exhibition he made of himself, in getting up and trying to explain his leader out of a very difficult position. He could not explain him; there is no explanation possible; and the result is a vote of want of confidence because my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior made a promise to go to British Columbia after the session and enquire into the complaints. My hon. friend has stated that he faithfully kept his promise. He first of all sent his deputy out, and he explained whom he was going to associate with him; and when he was part of the way out he telegraphed that he would go out there himself and make the enquiries; and he proceeded over to Esquimalt. There was another statement made by the hon. gentleman here as to the fault found with the Cleveland, hon. Minister of the Interior in regard to the non-Coatsworth, issue of those patents. The statement was never made in this House that those people only got their patents for agricultural lands, and that certain reservations of minerals were made. I was in the House and I listened to him, and I thought they had just claims to some agricultural lands; they had performed the duties of settlement, and they were withheld from them for some reason or other. But, when we enquired into the matter we found the contrary. Fault is found with my hon. friend that he did not set up a court of enquiry to investigate these matters. When the cases were before the courts for judgment he was to hold another court and find whether the particulars being adduced before that court were correct or not. My hon, friend fulfilled in every particular the obligation he made to this House; and I have never heard a more unfounded and more useless proposition than the hon, leader of the Opposition has made in this House this evening, in moving a motion of want of confidence in the Government for something which he alleges they did not do, but which the facts of the case show they did do.

Intercolonial Railway, including the Eastern Extension and Cape Breton Railways..... .. $3,700,000

This deficit was fully dis-Mr. BOWELL. cussed when the Supplementary Estimates for 1890-91 were before the House. The amount asked for the current year is the same as was spent in the management last year, and there is no reason to believe that the income of the road will be any larger. The other night I gave as full explanations as are at my disposal. The deficit arises from various causes :- loss of traffic, greater expense in working and deprivation by the Short Line of a large amount of income.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the exact income for the year which expired on the 30th of June last past and the exact expenditure?

Mr. BOWELL. Earnings for 1890-91, $2,977, 395.38; working expenses, $3,662,341.94. Deficit

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think I recollect the circumstance under which that occurred, and I think also in that was included about $200,000 which had been distributed over three years for the change from iron to steel rails, so that this year's deficit is considerably the largest we have ever had, and it does not include very heavy improvements chargeable to capital.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, gentleman is correct, as far as I am informed. That was the year when the road was steel-railed instead of iron.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. the expenditure on capital account last year?

Mr. BOWELL. I will make a note of it and get the information.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon, gentleman intimated that he would be in a position to state the arrangement made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway at St. John before this passed.

Mr. BOWELL. The following is the agree-

" \ TICLES OF AGREEMENT made this in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty.

"Between Her Majesty Queen Victoria, represented herein by the Honourable the Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, hereinafter called the Minister, of the first part, and the New Brunswick Railway Company, hereinafter called the company, of the second part:

"Whereas the company has applied for permission to have its freight business done on the premises of the Intercolonial Railway at St. John station, by the officials of the Intercolonial Railway, and whereas the Minister is willing to grant such permission upon certain terms and conditions herein contained:

"Now, therefore, this agreement witnesseth that the said Minister hereby agrees that the company shall have its freight business done in and about the station and premises of the Intercolonial Railway at St. John, including the waybilling of freight, the whole to be done by the employes of the Intercolonial Railway and under the charge and supervision of the officials of the Intercolonial Railway, these rights being, however, subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter contained.

"And the said company hereby agrees and assents to the foregoing, and accepts the terms and conditions following, and in consideration of the permission granted hereby binds itself and successors to do and perform all acts, matters and things on the part of the said company to be done and performed in accordance with this agreement and with the said terms and conditions, which are to be done and performed in accordance with this agree-ment and with the said terms and conditions, which are as follows, that is to say:—

It is understood and agreed that the permission and privilege herein granted to the company are intended only for the business of the company and shall not include or be used by the company to cover the business of any other railway or railway company, nor shall the company transfer its provision or privileges, or any portion of them, to any other railway company or to any person or them, to any other railway company or to any person or persons whomsoever.

"3. Whenever the words 'St. John 'or 'St. John station' occurs in this agreement, they should be understood to mean the Intercolonial Railway Station now established at St. John and the freight buildings, yards and tracks from Wall street to Mill street, as they now exist.

"4. It is understood and agreed that the permission and privileges granted apply only to St. John station as it now exists.

395.38; working expenses, $3,662,341.94. Deficit for the year ending 30th June, 1891, $684,946.56.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the present deficit on the Intercolonial Railway, wholly apart from the sum charged to capital account, is close on to $700,000. That is a very serious state of affairs, and the largest deficit we have ever had to face.

Mr. BOWELL. The largest deficit was in 1878-79, and that was when there was only 714 miles in operation. The deficit then was $716,083.53.

"7. Her Majesty shall not be liable for any loss or damage to any freight received for or from the company. arising from any cause whatsoever, and it any such claim is, after due enquiry, established against Her Majesty and paid, the company shall, within ten days after receiving notice of the amount so paid, repay the same to Her Majesty.

"8. The Minister shall furnish standing room for freight at cars on the siding at St. John, also storage for freight at this place, to the extent to which he can do so without prejudice to the operations of the Intercolonial Railway.

"9. The company shall pay the following rates and charges for the use of the station at St. John and for the services of the employés of the Intercolonial Railway, allowange for deterioration, were and tear of tracks sidings lowance for deterioration, wear and tear of tracks, sidings and yard from Wall street to Mill street station house, offices, freight sheds, also of furniture and fittings and freight trucks per month, S. . Cost of shunting and wages of shunters and switchmen in proportion to the number of cars and engines arriving and departing by each road. Carting of freight, actual cost; fuel, oil, wicks, lamp chimneys, and other small stores for use of station and yard, one-half. All stationery, forms and tickets required for the company's business to be supplied by the company. by the company:

"11. The company agrees to give the necessary facilities, including access to books and papers, to the auditor of the Intercolonial Railway, to enable him to ascertain and verify the charges under this agreement.

"12. The company agrees that in case it should make default in carrying out any of the terms and conditions of this agreement, either wholly or in part, this agreement shall forthwith be and become entirely null and void; this termination shall not relieve the company from the payment of any sum or sums of money then due to the the payment of any sum or sums of money then due to the Intercolonial Railway, and the company shall be liable for the same, and for any loss or damage caused to Her

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Railways was asked to lay on the Table information in reference to rates and other matters on the Intercolonial I sent him a note in which I mentioned, Railway. amongst other things, information as to rates, as to freight carried below cost, free passes, &c.

Mr. BOWELL. I have here a full statement of all the tariffs, and, as the hon, gentleman has plenty of time, he might study them for himself.

Mr. MULOCK. One would not be able to decide what has been carried below cost from that statement. That, I presume, can only be furnished by the Railway Department itself.

Mr. BOWELL. As I understand, the only articles which may be considered to be carried at or below cost are coal and grain. It depends altogether on the proportion of the expenditure according to the period of the year at which the freight is carried. In the summer or autumn, when no difficulties present themselves, coal can be carried at what might be considered a fair rate. Only this afternoon a railway manager told me that the rate would pay expenses, and probably a little more; but if coal were carried on the Intercolonial Railway at a period when two engines are required to draw it and a snow Mr. Bowell.

the cost. The policy has been to develop that particular trade to as great an extent as possible, in order to encourage those industries, and in the hope that the return freight would more than compensate for any small loss that might accrue in carrying coal to market.

Mr. MULOCK. I understood that a part of the deficit had occurred from the fact that coal was carried below cost.

Mr. BOWELL. I think that was the statement made by myself. I made enquiry into the rates on other roads, and I have been led to the conclusion I have given; although in the past it is believed that part of the deficit has arisen from the carrying of coal in the way I have mentioned, unless you allow for return freights, though I have no satisfactory information to establish that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did I not understand that the rate charged was $\frac{a}{10}$ of a cent per ton per mile?

Mr. BOWELL.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That must be below cost if you estimate anything for wear and tear of the rolling stock and those other expenses which are usually computed by railway companies. That is only a little above half a farthing per ton per mile, and I have always understood from railway managers that it was impossible to carry coal or any other freight at such a rate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The report of the Railway Department and the report of the Chief Superintendent last year explicitly stated that the deficit was to be attributed to that fact. That is the official statement, and I have never heard that seriously questioned, although it was attempted to be argued that there were incidental advantages and indirect benefits which the country derived from carrying the coal at a loss. The fact that this was one of the chief causes of the deficit was, however, never disputed. This year we have the striking fact before us that the loss on the Intercolonial Railway will amount to about $700,000, and it therefore behoves us to look into the matter and see if any leak can be stopped. In the report for 1889-90 I find it stated that the deficit for that year amounted to $553,392. When we analyze that, it is stated that, although there was an appreciable increase of $44,566 in the freight traffic, there was a decrease of $12,376 in the passenger traffic, which is said by Mr. Pottinger to be attributable to the number of through passengers who take the Short Line road through St. John instead of through Lévis and Quebec, as heretofore; but, as a matter of fact, I find that the earnings for the year were $32,716 larger than those in the previous year, so the question arises, what caused the deficit? The deficit will be found in the addition to the working expenses, and I think the House is entitled to some explanation on that point. The working expenses were increased during last year by no less than $327,544. That is a most serious state of affairs, and I think requires clear and extended explanations before this item is passed. I find by the Public Accounts of 1889-90 that the working expenses amounted to $3,481,472, as compared with those for the previous year of $3,153,928, being an increase for the year of $327,544. The Committee would naturally expect plough to precede it, it would probably be under some detailed explanation of how that came about, of how it is that the expenses were so much larger last year than they were the year before. regard to the balance of the deficit, it is contended, I know not with what truth, I am not in a position to know, that a large part of the loss connected with the Intercolonial Railway occurs in the stores account kept at Moneton. It is charged, and alleged, and believed, that two prices are paid for articles required for the Intercolonial Railway. do not want to make a statement stronger than that which I am making, but it has been charged for years, and it is so charged in the public press, that an investigation into that stores account, if it were properly conducted, would reveal a state of facts of a not very palatable kind. We find that the stores which are alleged to have been on hand at the end of the year, including fuel, amounted to $339,882: iron and steel rails and fastenings, $275,049; old materials for sale, $92,110, or a total of $707,042. That may be correct. is the statement which Mr. Pottinger furnishes to the department here, but whether it be correct or not will not be ascertained until a thorough investigation is made; and I submit to the Government that, in view of the fact that it has been persistently charged by the public press and by leading and responsible public men in the Maritime Provinces that there are tremendous leaks in that branch of the department at Moncton, it is eminently desirable that at an early day a thorough investigation should take place—first, to ascertain whether the stores alleged to be on hand are really and actually there; and, secondly, to ascertain whether it is true, as is charged, that two prices, or very much larger prices than should be paid, are being paid for many of the staple articles required in that stores department. It is, of course, out of the question that an outsider could know the facts in such a way as to be able to make a charge on his responsibility from his place in the House. I can only repeat what I have read, what I hear, and I hear it from men in Moneton, who make no secret of charging it publicly, and I mention it here in order that the Government may, if they deem fit, make this investigation at an early date. well known that some years ago, in the matter of oil purchased for that road, it was charged, and proved, that excessive prices were paid, prices beyond anything that ought to have been paid, for the oil used on that road—that some men made a fortune out of it; it was charged that there was on oil ring, a political ring; that the moneys were appropriated for political purposes, and that enormous profits on the oil, amounting to thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, were made by an oil ring in St. John, and the profits were applied for political purposes. I do not know whether it was so; I heard it stated, and I heard the names given, and I heard the prices quoted, on a public platform, by one of the leading citizens of New Brunswick, not long ago. He stated the prices that were being paid; he stated the names of the parties who had the contract. He is a gentleman in whose statements, I think, my hon. friends opposite are disposed, at times, to place a great deal of faith. In view of these facts, in view of the deficit which happened last year, and which we have to face, it appears, in an increased form this year, I think it will be the duty of the Government to make this investigation.

Mr. FRASER. Might I ask the acting Minister of Railways whether the expenditure on capital account for the year ending the 30th of June, 1891, was larger than for the year 1890?

Mr. BOWELL. The manager says he will give me that statement to-morrow; he cannot answer definitely, but he thinks it is a little larger. In reference to the observations made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), it is the old story about deficits, and leaks, and bad oil, and large prices, that I have heard here for the last five or six How far it is correct, I am neither going to affirm nor deny. This much I do say, however, that in the contracts which have been entered into for the oil required on the road since I have been in charge of the department, they have been given to the lowest tenderers, and the quality of oil selected was that which was reported by those who ought to know as being the best for the uses for which it is required. The hon, gentleman has not made direct charges against the management at Moncton, nor has he charged any clerk or officer whose duty it has been to take stock with having deliberately made a false return, but the hon. gentlemen has made his charges inferentially. I can say that if, in taking stock, the facts are as have been indicated by the hon, gentleman, then the returns must have been false, and the officer who made it ought to be severely punished, if such be proved: and I should deem it my duty, if I remained in charge of the department, to make a thorough and full investigation into that charge which has been indirectly made. I understand the hon, gentlemen only repeats what he has seen in the newspapers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And heard from leading citizens.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not disposed to give much weight to statements made on the stump, or at public meetings, when opposition politicians are discussing the management of a Government road. Perhaps we are all prone to draw little too long a bow upon questions of this kind; but leaks there may be. know that during the very short time I have been at the head of the department I have deemed it my duty, even on the railways in Prince Edward Island, to take measures compelling those who have granted passes contrary to the distinct and positive order of the manager from headquarters to pay the passes themselves. I think that is the most effective way to put a stop to an abuse which I believe has existed in the past to a much greater extent than should have been allowed, in the interest of the road. I have given positive instructions to the manager to charge the amount of the pass to the party who had issued it, and he was compelled to pay for it. There may be many other leaks to stop which will require full investigation. I can promise the hon. gentleman, on the part of the Government that in view of the large deficits in the past, and in the prospective deficit for next year, a rigid and thorough investigation will be made, with a view to stop all possible leaks. The hon, gentleman referred to the great expenditure last year over that of the year previous, and he pointed out, as a strong point, that although the earnings as published in the blue-book were larger than they were the year before, yet the deficit was much larger than it had been before. Now, I am informed that it was necessary, in order to keep pace with the times and requirements of traffic, to place an extra special train upon the route to make connection with the Short Line from St. John to Halifax. That alone has necessitated an expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway of not Then, in order to comless than $190,000. pete with the Short Line faster trains had to be placed upon the Intercolonial Railway proper, that is, from St. John or from Moncton It is scarcely necessary for me to Quebec. to inform the House, or anyone who has given this matter the slightest study, that the faster the train the more expensive it is, the greater the wear and tear of the rolling stock. I am not in a position to give the amount of that expenditure, nor am I in a position to say whether an accurate statement of additional expenditure could be given. Those, I think, are the reasons which have led to the large expenditure and to the falling off to a certain extent of the traffic which would naturally arise from competition between the two roads. I repeat that the suggestion thrown out by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is one that not only should receive attention, but should be put in force during the coming year, so as to see if it is not possible to reduce expenditure.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand the hon, gentleman to say that there was an extra express put on the Intercolonial in consequence of the opening of the Short Line?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; to connect with the Short Line at St. John, N.B., which involved an additional expenditure of $190,000 per annum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Without any return?

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where does the express run?

Mr. BOWELL. Between Halifax and St. John.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not express any disapproval of the means taken to make the Intercolonial road an effective rival to the Short Line, and as to the management and the present running of the road from Rivière du Loup to Moncton I have no criticism to pass. I am of the opinion that the road is doing fairly well, that the management is fairly good and the passengers are fairly accommodated.

Mr. FRASER. I am bound to say that the Quebec express was not a success. I think during only three days last winter that express was one time at Truro. At least, that is what I am informed by railway men. What is the average price paid for coal by the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. BOWELL. The average price is about $2.20 per ton. A contract was entered into a few days ago at $2.20 for most of the coal, and some was a little less.

Mr. KING. Is it a fact that we have a night and day train between St. John and Halifax?

Mr. BOWELL. The manager tells me there is an extra train both ways between Halifax and St. John.

Mr. KING. Is there a night train, a day train and a train connected with the express?

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What price is being paid for the coal oil consumed on the road, and with whom is the contract let? I understand some pains were taken with respect to coal oil?

Mr. BOWELL. I said that the lowest tender was accepted, and that the usual mode was adopted of advertising for tenders.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who supplies it now, and at what price?

Mr. BOWELL. The manager says there is a good deal of pains taken, particularly as regards the quality of the oil. All oil, before being accepted, is sent to Montreal for analysis. As to quality, L have not the tenders now; but if the hon. gentleman would like them before the item is finally passed I will see they are brought down, when he will learn exactly to whom the tenders were awarded and the prices paid and the quality of the oil. There has been a good deal of pressure brought to bear to compel the acting Minister to take a course he did not think it was in the interests of the road he should take in regard to this very question of oil. Having a distinct recollection of the numerous debates and complaints made of this question I was determined not to take any oil, except that which was reported by the analyst to be the best and the cheapest.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What quantity of coal was conveyed last year from Springhill collieries?

Mr. BOWELL. I can give the hon, gentleman quantities transported over the Intercolonial from four points.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know the general quantity, but what proportion is carried from Springhill?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that nearly the whole of the coal coming over the Intercolonial is from the Springhill mines. The manager thinks there is not 5,000 tons from any other colliery. The total amount carried in 1890 was 145,800 tons; 1889, 126,316 tons; 1888, 184,662 tons; 1887, 198,643.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is carried from Springhill until it reaches the Grand Trunk—how many miles?

Mr. DICKEY. 557 miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the Min. ister statements of all coal carried from all points?

Mr. BOWELL. No; but I can get it for the hon, gentleman.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask the Minister what is the general rule of the department in connection with printing, and the more extensive lines of advertising. Are they subject to tender and contract, or are they given out at the discretion of the manager or Minister?

Mr. BOWELL. The printing of forms, and other printing required for the road, is given out at prices that are arranged, I am informed by the Queen's Printer. I do not know that there is any particular rule in reference to advertising.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is chiefly in Moncton. The Moncton Times is kept up by it.

Mr. FLINT. I can understand that the advertising would be a difficult thing to give out by tender.

Mr. BOWELL. When an advertisement of a time-table is given to any newspaper, it is given to it at a price arranged or indicated by the department, so that if it is a weekly paper, not on the line of the road, it does not get as much as a city paper.

Do I understand the Minister to say that the prices as charged by the Halifax papers, are fixed by the department?

Mr. BOWELL. That is what I am informed.

Mr. FRASER. Then I would like to know how is it that the department has made the prices about twice what they used to be?

Mr. BOWELL. That I cannot tell. If the hon. gentleman gives the journal to which he refers, having a little knowledge of printing, I might be able to give him an answer. We know that the space in one paper is sometimes worth five times as much as a similar space in another.

Mr. FRASER. I will give the hon, gentleman the two journals which I refer to, and I do not think there is much difference between them. speak of the Halifax Herald and the Halifax Chronicle, and I make the statement that the price is nearly twice as much at present for the advertisements in the Chronicle as it was during the former Government. I am glad the prices are made by the department, because that exonerates the paper from charging so much.

Mr. CURRAN. I understand that the oil contracts entered into this year will be brought down, but at the same time on account of the feeling that exists in regard to these supplies among the trade -and there is a good deal of feeling-I would like to know if it would be possible to bring down a comparative statement as to the qualities of the I believe that each tenderer was obliged to send in a specimen of the particular brand which he intended supplying, and that all these different samples were tested by the analyst at McGill College. Am I to understand that not only the contracts entered into will be brought down, but that there will be also a comparative statement as to the quality of the samples?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; there is no objection to bring it all down. I think the suggestion made by the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) is a good one, as it will enable the Committee the better to judge of the manner in which the contracts have been awarded. I will bring down all the information that we have, and a full report as to the test of the different oils which were submitted to the analyst of McGill College.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister says that a contract has been entered into recently with regard Does he consider the price at which he has contracted, namely, $2.20 per ton, a low price for coal? Is that lower than we have been getting it for in the past?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not able to answer the question personally as to what I might consider a fair price, but it is the same price as was paid for the same qualities of coal last year, and I believe that is a little lower than the ordinary market price, because the tenders are given for quantities ranging from 25,000 to 100,000 tons to each of these collieries. The last contract that was made was for $2.20 per ton. The manager tells me, where it is supplied to the road from a colliery very close by.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice by the Auditor General's Report that we paid $1.90 per ton during the year 1889, and $2.10 per ton was the largest figure which we paid for coal. The Black Diamond Coal Company of Westville supplied 15,413 tons at $1.90 per ton.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman, I believe, is correct in his reference to the Black Diamond; but I am informed it would not be in the interest of the country if we took much of that coal. It is of an inferior quality to the other coal of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that you also got coal at $2.10 per ton. What quality was it?

Mr. BOWELL. The manager tells me that the year previous some of the coal was furnished by tender at $2.10 and $2.15 per ton, and the coal from the Black Diamond mine was $1.75, being of an inferior quality and, from what I can learn, dear at that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Intercolonial Coal Company supplied 19,000 tons at $2.15 per ton.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. these were the charges at the mouth of the pit practically?

Mr. BOWELL. That is what we paid delivered at the junction of the road; that is, between the mine and where it was delivered on the track.

Mr. McMULLEN. How does the hon. gentleman explain the difference in the price between this year and last year? Is the price of coal going Mr. BOWELL. The only way I can explain it is that the coal companies combined; you may say it is a combination if you like, and I think it I noticed in looking over the tenders when submitted to me by the manager, that nearly all the coal companies tendered alike, or with a very, very slight difference, and those were selected which would be delivered at the nearest point where they were required, consistent with the quality of the coal.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then I certainly think, in the interest of the people of this country, who are losing about $700,000 a year on the operation of a railway that is largely operated in the interest of the coal companies, it is high time that the Minister raised the freight charges on coal. He carries it at three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. I think it would be prudent to raise it to four-tenths of a

Mr. FLINT. I was speaking on the subject of printing. It appears that the rates are fixed by the department. Whether they are reasonable or not, not being a practical printer, I do not know; but it seems to me that payments to the Moncton Times, the Halifax Herald, the Yarmouth Times and the St. John Sun, amounting to about $40,000 a year for printing, practically without competition, might afford an opportunity for a very considerable saving. It seems to be a huge sum for the printing of these forms, and it seems to me that a saving of many thousands of dollars might be effected by having the work done by contract in the different printing offices of the country. The Moncton Times draws over $10,000 per annum; the Halifax Herald however, that one of the tenders was for $1.75, draws about an equal amount; the Yarmouch

Times, which is at quite a distance from the Intercolonial Railway, though no doubt capable of doing good work, but not better than other printing offices in the same vicinity, gets about $4,500; and the St. John Sun gets about $13,000. I think there is ground here for grave suspicion of political partizanship and favouritism in the management of the railway. Serious complaints have been made in Parliament from time to time with regard to the payments for advertising in the various journals of the country, and there is a widespread belief that the opinions of these journals are to a great degree biassed by the fact that they receive large sums for advertising from the Government of the Dominion; but very few people are aware that these four or five Conservative journals, in addition to the large sums they receive for advertising, are paid for printing receipts, vouchers, tickets and things of this kind, sums amounting to $40,000 odd per annum. As a matter of public policy, I think it is not wise that public opinion should be biassed by these means; but also on the ground of the strictest economy on the Intercolonial Railway, every work of this kind should be given out by tender and

Mr. FRASER. Might I ask, as the advertising rates are prepared by the department, what is the rule followed and who prepares them? Is it after consultation with various printers?

I fancy not. Mr. BOWELL. The rule, so far as I can understand it, is—and I may as well be frank with the Committee, I have not looked into this question minutely, not having had time to look into the details of the department—that they just say to a paper in which they desire to advertise: If you like to advertise this for twelve months, subject to the changes to be made in the time-table, we will pay you so much. I am not going to quarrel with the hon, member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint); but affirm that this habit of attacking the newspapers, and saying that their opinions are moulded by any little favours which they may get from the Government, is unworthy of anyone who has any knowledge of a party newspaper. Does anybody suppose for a moment that if there were a change of Government, and the patronage now given to the Halifax Herald were given to the Halifax Chronicle, that that would change its political opinions or bias it to support the party that succeeded to power? I have a sufficiently good opinion of those connected with the press to believe their expressed opinions to be their honest convictions as to what they think is right in the policy they pursue; and I believe they would pursue the same course if they received $1,000 a year as they are pursuing to-day; and I believe that if they did not get ten cents, they would support the Government with the same vigour that they would if they received Whether this patronage should be given $10,000. to all the newspapers that support the Government or whether it should be distributed among those that do not support the Government is a matter of opinion; but we all know that hon. gentlemen opposite, when on this side of the House, did not pursue this policy. As long as this work is required, and as long as it can be done as cheaply by friends as by foes, I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman, if he were on this side of the House, would be one of the first to pursue that | carrying its own coal? Mr. FLINT.

policy. In reference to the amount paid, I can assure the hon, gentleman that there is no more printing done than is absolutely required to carry on the affairs of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is more money paid.

Mr. BOWELL. No, there is not. The prices I understand have been arranged by those who were supposed to be capable of judging what was a fairly remunerative price to be paid for that kind of work. I admit that advertising, if sent broadcast over the country, might be abused; but I will venture the statement that there is not a railway on the continent of America which pays less, according to its mileage, for the printing of forms and advertising than does the Intercolonial Railway. If you look at the Canadian Pacific Railway you will find that they have a whole staff devoted exclusively to this special work. The head of the staff is paid a very large sum, and he has a very large number of clerks under him. If we desire to make any road popular and known, there is no better plan than by judicious expenditure in advertising.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then you should advertise in all the papers.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objection to do that.

Mr. DICKEY. I should like to say a word with regard to this rate of three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile on coal. I do not think it is quite realized always that a particular class of freight should not be made to defray the whole expenditure of running a road. There is a large proportion, about one-third of the expenses of the road, which is permanent and not increased by carrying an additional amount of freight. So that what should be charged against classes of freight like this would only be about two-thirds the expenditure. I do not believe the public generally knows how cheaply freight is carried on this continent, but fortunately we have available the reports of the Inter-State Commerce Commission of the United States, which deal thoroughly with the whole railway traffic of the United States, giving the cost of carriage upon every road there; and the average cost of carrying on all the roads in the United States of every class of freight is only six-tenths of a cent per ton per mile, and deducting one-third, that makes the actual cost of carriage four tenths of a cent. It must be remembered that freight such as coal is the very cheapest class, as cheap as grain or any other very cheap freight. It is entered No. 10 on the classification of Canadian railways, and, therefore, the cost will be much less than the average freight. Take some American roads with a mileage like the Intercolonial Railway; take, for instance, the Pennsylvania system, which is reputed to be the best managed in the States, and runs the fastest trains, and gives the best service, the cost of every class of freight on that road is only four-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. That includes very much more expensive freight than coal, and that is a total cost, including the general expenses of freight; and if that is reduced by taking off one-third for the fixed expenses of the road, it is brought considerably below three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile on this coal traffic.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is not that company carrying its own coal?

Mr. DICKEY. I am not prepared to say whether it carries its own coal, but even if it did the coal it carries would be a very small proportion of the freight of the road which this gives, and would not at all affect the percentage, so small would be the amount of coal. On the Philadelphia and Reading division of the Pennsylvania railroad the whole of the freight only costs three-and-ahalf-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. On the Chicago and Grand Trunk, which is a very parallel case, under the management of the Grand Trunk Railway, it only costs four-tenths of a cent per ton per mile to carry their freight, including every class of freight; and if you take a low class of freight like this it would make, of course, a very great difference in the comparison. Take the particular classes of freight. Grain is a similar class What are the grain rates in the United States? Grain has been carried from Chicago to New York by their road for the last five years at two-and-a-half-tenths of a cent per ton per mile, and grain needs to be carried in covered cars, and requires better classes of rolling stock and is more expensive to handle than coal. During the present summer the rate on grain from Chicago to New York is two-tenths of a cent per ton per mile, or 33 per cent. less than the rate under consideration. Of course, this is a rate adopted by all the lines that run from New York to Chicago, and, I presume, is a paying rate, probably not a directly paying rate, but a rate that pays in some way indirectly. The Canadian Pacific Railway carries flour from St. Paul, Minnesota, to Boston, for thirty-eight hundredths of a cent per ton per mile, and I believe, though I am speaking without actual knowledge, that in the passage of that freight from St. Paul to Boston it passes over roads on which the Canadian Pacific Railway have to pay mileage on their cars, and if that is the case it brings that down as low as the actual rate on the Intercolonial Railway, but it is 1,561 miles, instead of 557 miles that the coal is carried. From St. Paul to Boston the rate is thirty-eight hundredths of a cent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the rate for barley?

Mr. DICKEY. Thirty cents per hundred. That is a new rate, dating from the middle of July. Coming to the particular article of coal, you will find that the rates are all very low everywhere. In the United States it is difficult to get information about coal, because in many cases the mines are owned by the railway companies, and it is a mere question of book-keeping whether they charge the cost of carrying the coal to the railway or mine account. Therefore it is difficult to be assured you are getting the expenses of railway transport; but it is fair to say that in making up the accounts it is not at all likely they would put it below the cost. They would try and get a fair average between the mine and the railway. From Buffalo to Chicago the rate on coal is $1.50, and that distance is 539 miles. That is less than three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. Another fair estimate is this: The Grand Trunk Railway gets its coal from the Intercolonial Railway at Chaudière Junction, and carries it to Montreal, and the Grand Trunk Railway operating department has an account with its fuel department, and it charges the fuel department with the expenses of conveying that coal. It is fair to assume that the traffic department will charge the moved, fuel department with the actual cost of carrying the coal. As a matter of fact, they charge less than three-tenths of a cert per ton per mile. This very coal comes by the Intercolonial Railway to the Chaudière, where it is taken in charge, and is hauled at less than three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the Grand Trunk charge for coal not for their own use?

Mr. DICKEY. Nearly half a cent per ton.

Mr. BOWELL. Five-tenths of a cent.

Mr. DICKEY. That, of course, is for a short haul; and there are other considerations which enter into that matter. The Grand Trunk charge their fuel department one-fourth of a cent per ton per mile, but they have to pay car mileage of three-fourths of a cent per car, which, on a 20-ton car, brings the rate up to nearly three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. The Canadian Pacific Railway carries this coal from Springhill to Montreal at a cheaper rate than the Intercolonial Railway does.

Mr. MULOCK. Then our loss cannot arise from the coal traffic?

Mr. DICKEY. The Canadian Pacific Railway carries for the same price as the Intercolonial Railway and Grand Tunk do from the Springhill Mines to Montreal. The Intercolonial Railway makes the Canadian Pacific Railway pay from Springhill to St. John a local rate, and therefore the rate on the line between St. John and Montreal is so much less. The cost per ton from Springhill to Montreal is $2.49. Of course, I am not speaking from personal knowledge, but after very careful enquiry. Out of that amount the Canadian Pacific Railway have to pay $1.12 to the Intercolonial Railway from Springhill to St. John; therefore, they only get $1.37 from St. John to Montreal, or only twenty-eight hundredths of a cent for themselves, and that is less than three-tenths of a cent.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that a paying rate?

Mr. DICKEY. I do not say it is a paying rate. It may be a competitive rate, but it is so. Another argument is this: The Inter-State Commerce Commission fixes the rates of certain classes of freight, and in Iowa they have fixed the rate on slack coal, which is the very cheapest class of coal, at $1.34 for 400 miles. It will be seen that the Intercolonial Railway rate would be $1.20, so that the difference is only 14 cents, and that is a rate which all roads are obliged to adopt, and of course is a paying rate. The coal rates on the Intercolonial Railway must be considered as a whole. If the through: le is dealt with the local rates must be dealt with. think the Minister will admit that the local rates on coal in Nova Scotia are abnormally high, that they are far in excess of what should be paid on a business basis. The people living in my own town pay 70 cents a ton freight on coal from the Springhill mines, a distance of between 17 and 19 miles. That is only an instance of the abnormally high local rates on coal on the Intercolonial Railway, and to a certain extent the local consumers are made to make up something upon any possible deficiency in the cheap rate given on the long haul. One element in favour of this coal business is that it is a steady, regular, reliable business. There is a certain amount of coal always ready to be reno loss is created by plant and lying idle or by any uncertainty in regard to the gentlemen really defend, is that by these expendibusiness. It is that kind of busines which a railway tures we are assisting in maintaining the Governdesires and will make concessions to develop, ment. Now, this is not a satisfactory state of I think the proportion of coal carried from Springhill to Quebec, as compared with the total amount of coal moved by the road, is about 1 to 5, and the other five tons are carried at a very paying rate, though the one ton may be carried at cost. hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) asked me how I accounted for this deficit if there was no loss on the coal. I am not prepared to say that this coal rate is a paying rate, taking the total charges of the Intercolonial Railway as they are. I should say it is not; but I think a careful reading of the reports of the officers will show internal evidence of other facts which are quite as open to blame for this deficit as the coal traffic. In the last year, for instance, we have nearly $200,000 accounted for by the opening of the Short Line, and there are other items in addition to that. member interested to some extent in this coal traffic, I must protest against putting on its shoulders the whole or any considerable portion of the loss caused by the running of the road. I believe the causes of the loss on the Intercolonial Railway are not so easily traceable as that you can put your finger on one class of traffic and say the loss is all caused by that. I believe the causes lie deeper than that, and require a good deal of enquiry to get at them and apportion the responsibility as it should be.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to revert again to the observations made by the acting Minister of Railways with reference to the cost of His attention was called to the fact that four papers received $37,500. Now, I think that a fair test of the management of the road in this particular would be to compare it with similar expenditure by, say, the Grand Trunk Railway I think the Minister should have submitted to the Committee a statement showing what the expenses of the Grand Trunk Railway Company are, or any other railway company that has a large mileage in Canada, for printing, in the same way that the Intercolonial Railway has incurred an expenditure for this purpose. Here are $10,000 paid to the Halifax Herald, $10,000 to the Moncton Times, $4,500 to a paper in Yarmouth, and $13,000 to the St. John Sun. Now, since the Government have established a Printing Bureau here I know no reason why that work should not be done at the Bureau. If the Government are to have a printing establishment, and then give out the printing to be done by newspapers all over the country at enormous prices, the printing establishment is useless, it is a censure upon the institution which they themselves have called into existence. But surely there must be a great deal of printing done that is not of this character. The hon. gentleman pronounced a eulogy on the wisdom of advertising in newspapers. I do not think it is necessary that the Intercolonial Railway should do any more in that respect than the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway. I do not find the Grand Trunk Railway Company paying enormous sums for the publication of time-tables in newspapers. I think in most cases these time-tables are published by the newspapers gratuitously for the information of their sub-Mr. DICKEY.

things. It seems to me there is great room for reform in this particular, and it would be very well for the Government to investigate this matter and to ascertain what is the expenditure for printing made by the ordinary railway companies of the country. This road should be run, not as a political institution, but it should be run on business principles, and certainly it is not run on business principles when these enormous prices are being paid for the maintenance of newspapers rather than for purposes of the railway, and, therefore, in the interest of the public. I think we require much more information on this subject than we possess; and in submitting these estimates to Parliament, especially when you are submitting estimates for a railway in the management of which there is a deficit of three-quarters of a million dollars a year, we ought to possess all the information we can get on the subject, in order that a reform may be had. Certainly, a reform is greatly needed, and we are not likely to get it by discussing these estimates at one o'clock in the morning, with the amount of information we possess.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see on page C-311 of the Auditor General's Report, "D. Pottinger, Manager, Halifax Club dues, $30; Rideau Club dues, $25." I would like to know how it is that we have to pay these club bills for men in charge of this railway.

Mr. BOWELL. I made enquiry into the facts when it was brought up in the Public Accounts Committee by the member for South Oxford, and I find it to be the practice on other roads. I find that the Grand Trunk Railway Company pays the club fees of its manager and assistant manager; the Canadian Pacific Railway does the same, except in the towns where they live. It is done on the principle, I presume, that the managers of railways, when they visit distant places, have to visit the clubs, and it is looked upon as part of their expenditure. As to the propriety of continuing a charge of that kind, I am not prepared to give an opinion just now. My own views are probably in accord with those of the hon, gentleman who called the attention of the Committee to it—that is, that the travelling expenses of officials should be paid by the railway companies, the same as other expenses. But as that has been the established practice in Canada and the United States, it has been adopted for some time on the Intercolonial Railway, and it will be a question as to whether it should be continued.

Mr. McMULLEN. When we remember that in the earnings of the Grand Trunk they save about $1,200 a year per mile, after paying all their running expenses, and the Canadian Pacific Railway are saving even more than that, and when we consider that we are losing $557 per mile per year in operating the Intercolonial Railway, I think it is necessary that we should strike out items of this kind and have them cut off, until, at least, the road is paying running expenses. I do not think we should try to be as extravagant as the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, with regard to the coal question, which my hon. scribers. But what we object to, and what the hon. friend referred to a few minutes ago; he must know, if he is well posted with regard to the coal question in the United States, that the Pennsylvania Railway, which is one of the principal railways of that country operating in coal, is one of the largest stockholders in a coal combination that has been formed in the United States. It is well known that they control about 200,000 acres of coal fields in the United States, out of a gross amount of, perhaps, 400,000 acres. Now, in order to keep up the price of coal at the pit, the Pennsylvania Railway carries coal at virtually less than cost, because that is a matter of little importance to it, but it is of vital importance that the price should be kept up at the pit, because other companies have got to carry it at the same price in order to get a traffic. The result is, that they carry coal at less than cost, but they make up for it by the increased price at which they sell coal at the pit. My hon, friend should know that is the reason why coal is moved so cheaply on that particular line.

Mr. McGREGOR. The Baltimore and Ohio Railway, which runs through a portion of the State of Ohio, charges half a cent per mile for outsiders. They have a very large coal territory of their own, and they carry their own coal a little cheaper. Speaking about the rates from the great west to the great east, we find that the rate is somewhat lower going east; but we must remember that these cars are loaded going west again, whereas in carrying coal from the Maritime Provinces to Quebec the cars are only used for that purpose, or very largely used for that purpose, so that it becomes pretty costly when you have a double haul for the cars that are going back empty, because they are not so well fitted for carrying merchandise after being loaded with coal. So far as I know, half a cent is a very low rate for coal on any of the ordinary roads.

Mr. TUPPER. I understand there is no question but that the rate is a low one. I have spoken to railway men on the subject, and their view of the question is this: What can the coal be hauled for? What rate can it afford to pay? If the road can get half a cent per ton that should be charged; if the road can get more than that rate it should be charged. The point is, as to what rate would stop Then the question arises: Is it in the the traffic. interests of the road that the traffic should cease: that the coal should not come up to Quebec by the Intercolonial? That question, of course, concerns the people of Quebec. It also concerns the interests of the road itself. it pay the road to abandon the business, not merely as regards carrying the coal, but the other business that flows from it, and thus decrease the output of a large colliery like Springhill? I am told by railway men that if they had a large colliery along their line they would strain every nerve to carry the coal at the lowest possible rate, and secure, not only the business, but the indirect advantages which arise from the prosperous condition of a large coal This is a subject well worthy of consideration, not only as regards what the road gains or loses, but whether a higher rate would stop the traffic, and whether it would prove advantageous to the road to cease handling the business.

Mr. McGREGOR. You can pay more for a gold dollar that it is worth. It might be better to rate should be fixed for the carrying of coal on the doless business on the Intercolonial Railway than railways of the North-West. I have asked in this to carry coal at a loss. The acting Minister has said that "the combine" had increased the prices Quebec. If the "combines" were properly taken in hand they could not do it.

Mr. KING. We have it on the authority of the chief engineer that coal carried at three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile is carried at a loss. The hon. member for Cumberland has told us that the rate is $1.12 per ton from Springhill to St. John. I understood the lowestrate to St. John was $1.50, a distance of 160 miles. I fail to understand why the rate should be one cent per mile to St. John and three-tenths of a cent to Quebec. There is an item in the Auditor General's Report to which I wish to call attention. It is an item of 16,400 feet of pine plank, at $60 per thousand. I do not think there is any pine plank of that value manufactured in the city of St. John, and that a fair price is $40 per thousand. At another page of the Auditor General's Report there is an item of 600 gates, at $2.45 each, amounting to $1,478. I do not think that is an excessive price to be paid for the description of railway gate required: but the plans and specifications which were supplied gave no one a chance to tender at a fair paying price. I know a person who noticed the advertisement, and asked to be shown the plans and specifications. The lumber called for in the specification was to be of first quality clear pine, free In fact, it was to be of that class for of knots. which 6 cents per superficial foot was charged. Taking the quantity at 40 feet, the cost for lumber alone for each gate would be $2.40. The price paid for each gate was $2.45. The difficulty was that the specifications were not properly made out, or the gates could have been furnished at a lower rate, because there was no necessity for using first quality of clear pine when the gates are, no doubt, made of merchantable pine lumber worth, at the outside, $12 per thousand. No doubt, if the gates were examined to-day, it would be found that they were of good merchantable pine lumber, and nothing more is required.

Mr. MQNTAGUE. Are not all Government specifications drawn in the same way?

Mr. KING. If they are, it is time they were changed.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not able to give the information asked by the hon. gentleman, either as to the gates or the lumber. The pine plank is charged 6 cents per foot. May it not have occurred that plank was required for some specific purpose? If it were the ordinary inch plank, I think the hon. gentleman's criticism would be quite correct; but it is possible that it might be of a special quality, and of that thickness I referred to, and the charges may be for surface, in which case it certainly would not be too high.

Mr. KING. I think I am perfectly safe in saying the hon, gentleman's explanation does not apply, because five-sixths of all the lumber manufactured in New Brunswick is composed of deals, and I never heard of an invoice for lumber being made out in any other way than by the superficial foot, board measure.

Mr. WATSON. I hope the Minister of Marine will make use of the same arguments he has made here to-night, when I ask again that a maximum House that a maximum rate should be fixed at two and a-half cents per ton per mile in the North-West, and the Government have refused to accede to that, which is comparatively a very high rate. I would like to ask the Minister what is the distance between the Springhill Coal Mines and the Londonderry Iron Works, and at what rate per ton per mile is the coal carried between the Springhill Mines and the Londonderry Iron Works, and the rate per ton per mile at which iron is carried over the Intercolonial Railway from the Londonderry Mines to Quebec?

Mr. BOWELL. The distance is about 40 miles, and the manager, although not sure, thinks that the rate for coal is about 25 cents per ton.

Mr. WATSON. What is the rate per ton per mile for iron over the Intercolonial Railway from the Londonderry Iron Works to Quebec?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that, as far as recollection will serve, it is a half a cent per ton per mile.

Mr. WATSON. Is that supposed to be a paying rate? Does the Minister think that any loss is caused by carrying iron at a half cent rate?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that this rate will pay expenses, and leave a small profit. I suppose that during the winter when they had a great deal of trouble on the road there would be a loss.

Mr. WATSON. This is a question that the House should carefully consider as to whether it is desirable that these infant industries, which we try to encourage at a vast annual expense to the country, is the best system for the country to adopt. We are told that the Londonderry Iron Works would close up if it were not for those low rates on iron, and that the Springhill Mines would close but for the low rates on coal. We are also giving a bounty for the encouragement of the iron industry in Nova Scotia, and taking it all through, it appears to me to be an expensive luxury. are simply killing off any revenue we might derive by importing iron and coal, and we are encouraging these industries at a heavy annual loss to the whole country. I do hope that the House will consider this matter in future. They should also consider that while we carry the iron at this low rate of half a cent per ton per mile, and while we carry coal on the Intercolonial Railway at three-tenths of a cent per mile, we allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to charge a cent and a half per ton per mile for carrying coal from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, a distance of over 400 miles, and where the freight of the coal is actually more from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, than the actual cost of Pennsylvania coal laid down in Port Arthur. While the Government is operating railways in the east in the interest of manufacturers, or consumers as it may be, at a heavy loss to the country they should at least see that in the west we should have at least fair rates on our coal. These rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway in the west are exorbitant as compared with the rates on the Intercolonial Railway and they are exorbitant because that railway corporation has a monopoly. The hon, member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway were carrying flour from Minneapolis to Boston for thirty cents per hundred, and if he looks at the rates he will find that the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific | colonial Railway is to the Dominion of Canada, and Mr. WATSON.

Railway from Winnipeg to Boston, are much greater than from Minneapolis to Boston, because the Canadian Pacific Railway have a monopoly in the Canadian North-West. Because Minneapolis is the competing point, the rates are much lower than from Winnipeg to Boston, although the distance is about the same. When these freight When these freight rates come up for discussion, it will be interesting to have a comparison made in order to show how the people of the North-West suffer from monoply.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would ask the Minister what is the rate on flour per ton per mile, as com pared with the rate on coal?

The rate is three-and-a-half Mr. BOWELL. tenths of a cent on flour, and three-tenths of a cent on coal, so that it is one-half-tenth of a cent dearer on flour than on coal.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that the recent cut on the rate on flour to St. John does not apply to Halifax. Is that correct? The rates were always the same before.

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that the Canadian Pacific Railway has made a cut of forty cents to St. John for flour, and the Intercolonial Railway has made no change in its rate. Whether they will do so or not, is a question for consideration.

Mr. KENNY. It has come out in evidence then, that we, as the owners of the Intercolonial Railway, are carrying flour at the same rate at which we are carrying coal, and I find no fault with that.

An hon. MEMBER. The rate on flour is onehalf-tenth of a cent higher than on coal.

Mr. KENNY. The difference is hardly appreciable. My hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell) has just called the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that within the last few days the Canadian Pacific Railway has lowered its rate on flour. The Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and all the flour trade in the west initiated with these companies, had an understanding that flour would be carried to the largest competitive points in the Maritime Provinces—I mean the city of St. John and the city of Halifax—at the same rate. Now, it seemscommon rumour has it, at all events-that the Canadian Pacific Railway has departed from that plan, and is carrying flour to St. John lower than to Halifax and less than three and a half-tenths of a cent per ton per mile; so that Canadian flour is being carried by these Canadian roads at as low a rate as coal. For my part, I do not find fault with this low rate on flour. When we refer to the low rates on coal from Springhill and on iron from Londonderry, we must remember that we are the owners of this Intercolonial Railway, that we have to sustain and keep it in working order, and that if to-morrow we could by means of the Intercolonial Railway help in the development of a colliery that would put out every year 1,000,000 tone of coal, remembering that every person who came to that colliery or left it, and all the people employed in it, must be transported over that railway, the indirect advantages we should derive from that colliery would warrant us in carrying the raw product at a very low rate. Reference has frequently been made to the great tax that this Interwe would all desire to see less difference between expenditure and income; but we must remeniber that the loss is not due entirely to the low rate at which coal has been carried, because to-night we have the information that we are actually carrying flour at the same rate. travelling over the Intercolonial Railway lately, I was informed that during the last four years we have spent for steel rails something like $900,000, which has been charged to income, and which would amount to something like $200,000 a year. I would like to ask the acting Minister of Railways if that is correct?

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman's statement The road within the last two is quite correct. years has been almost wholly re-railed with steel rails, weighing 67 lbs. instead of 56 lbs., so that trains may run more rapidly and safely over the This has all been charged to income. road.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With reference to the rate on flour, I am quite satisfied that the rate received by the Intercolonial is just as much per mile as that received by the Grand Trunk or the Canadian Pacific, and I believe that the rate charged by the Canadian Pacific on flour is a paying rate—or at least a rate on which there is no loss. Then, as to the coal rate, the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) stated that only one ton out of five was carried to Quebec. I suppose there is a little loss on that; but the local rates, which he admitted were very high, would make up any loss on the through rates. So that I am forced to this conclusion: That the loss on the Intercolonial Railway is not due to the rates at which it carries coal and flour, and that we must look for the cause of the loss in some other direction. Now, from my knowledge of the Intercolonial Railway—and I have had considerable to do with it-I do not believe there is a better paying road in this Dominion than that portion of the Intercolonial Railway running from St. John to Halifax. There is a very large traffic over it, and why the Intercolonial Railway should not pay its running expenses by three-quarters of a million dollars a year, without taking interest into account, is to me unaccountable. I believe, as the hon. member for Queen's has suggested, that it is the bounden duty of the Government to issue a Royal Commission to make a thorough investiga-tion into the cause of this great loss. The acting Minister has stated that owing to the Short Line they had to put on a new express train, which cost the country $200,000 a year. Now, is there any necessity for that extra train? Why could they not arrange the other trains to start a little sooner? By some rearrangement of the time-table, they could have accomplished that service without this enormous expense. If we can judge by the state of affairs in the other departments of the Government, there is a great deal of looseness in connection with this department, and I think a Royal Commission or a committee to investigate this matter would show that there are leaks in every direction, and that we are paying two or three prices for everything purchased for the Intercolonial Railway, and for a great deal that we do not buy at all. The payment of $60 a thousand for lumber in the city of St. John, and insisting on first-class lumber for gates, and then allowing inferior lumber to be used, is an instance. If any $10,000, but that was not to be compared to the man conducted his private business in this way he would be in the poor-house in six months.

Mr. BOWELL. It is a pity we could not discuss this question without trying to make capital out of it. The hon, gentleman's statement with regard to the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific is not The rate on the Intercolonial Railway is 35 cents, on the Grand Trunk 38 cents, and on the Canadian Pacific 40 cents per hundred, and that is quite enough to make the difference. I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for having repeated the statement made by the hon, member for Queen's, because it is always well to hear a good thing.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With regard to the rate of three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile, it is not a competitive rate; it was fixed before we had the competition of the Canadian Pacific Railway at all, and it was acknowledged to be a non-paying rate.

Mr. KENNY. We had water competition.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There was no water competition, which necessitated lowering the rate to that point. The hon, gentleman knows that when it was lowered, the next year the chief engineer reported that a large portion of the loss must be attributable to that non-paying price. Now, it is alleged by railway men that half a cent per ton is a paying price. The difference, therefore, is about two-tenths of a cent per ton, which, on the quantity carried, would give a loss of about $200,000 a year on coal alone. But that is not the whole loss. I called attention the other night to the fact that when the Government commenced this system of carrying coal at a non-paying price, they went to work and built coal cars at an enormous cost, which they charged to capital account, and those coal cars carry the coal up and come back empty. There is no ground for a contrast with the American roads, because these roads have return freights, whereas we have not in a great many cases, and we must add to the loss the original cost of the cars, which is charged to capital account.

Mr. FRASER. I must join with the hon. member for Cumberland in saying that the rates for short distances are very large. Any Nova Scotian will admit that the rate for carrying coal from the mines at Pictou to Halifax is large. The New Glasgow Steel and Iron Company, when about to build their furnace, went to the Intercolonial Railway to find out their best terms for carrying the coal short distances, not exceeding five miles; and they changed the location of their works and placed them about two miles beyond Stellarton, because the short rates would make a difference of between $8,000 and $9,000 a year.

Mr. TUPPER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that is the reason?

Mr. FRASER. That is not the only reason, but largely is the reason. They might not have been able to get as good a site where they were, but they were willing to pay $10,000 for a site they were asked $20,000 for.

Mr. TUPPER. Exactly; they would not give $20,000.

Mr. FRASER. They had the power by their Act to appropriate the land and could have taken it, and it could only have been a difference of difference in the rates alone, which was $8,000 to $9,000 a year. I do not believe the Intercolonial Railway is losing on account of the coal, and I. think it will be found, if an investigation were made, that this deficit is not due, nor is any part of it due, to the carriage of coal even to Quebec. believe that this reason is simply put forward to cover up other reasons, whatever they may be. never saw the reason so strongly in favour of the proposition of the hon, member for Albert to hand this road over to a commission as I do to-night. It must not be forgotten, with regard to the statement that the Canadian Pacific Railway is carrying freight as a competitor, that this Government have made it a competitor. In the matter of advertising, the hon. Minister informs me that the rate is made by the department. I will give an example of that rate. In the morning and evening edition of one paper, a short advertisement is published of the Intercolonial Railway winter arrangements, an advertisement of five inches in length, and that costs at the rate of $1,008 a year.

Mr. BOWELL. Is the hon, gentleman quoting from the accounts or from statements made by another newspaper?

Mr. FRASER. I am quoting from the rates paid as shown in the Auditor General's Report, page C-297. The Halifax Morning Herald is paid for advertising the time tables ten months at $48, or $480, and the Halifax Evening Mail, ten months at $36, or $360, making $1,008 for advertising that time-table for a year, or at the rate of $200 an inch. I do not blame the papers because they do not make the rate, but take what is given them. I would call attention to another advertisement, that of the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, a business advertisement, which is five times the length of the other—and that is charged at the rate of $100 a year. The other smaller advertisement costs nearly eight times as much. That is one little item which will give us an inkling of how this deficit is swelled up. I am very glad that the newspapers are not responsible for this charge, but I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to it and perhaps he will revise the rate. I know I can trust him to see there will never be such a tax again. If the rates for printing are made out by judicious men at the head of the department in the same proportion, we can have an idea of what we are paying for advertisements alone. I care not what paper the hon. Minister may patronize, but if it gets rates like that without competition, the paper will be more inclined to give an enthusiastic support to the Government than it otherwise would. That is only human. I have given one instance, and if I had time and patience to go through the whole Auditor General's accounts, I no doubt would find that there are other matters besides coal to which the Intercolonial Railway owes its deficits.

Mr. WATSON. The Minister of Customs made a statement as to the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway, Grand Trunk Railway and Intercolonial Railway. Will he state for what discances these rates are charged?

Mr. BOWELL. I stated that it was in proportion to the mileage on the different roads.

Mr. WATSON. The hauls over the Intercolonial Railway are much longer than those over the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. Fraser.

Mr. BARRON. I spoke the other day to the Minister of Railways of the difficulty a clergyman travelling over the Intercolonial Railway had in obtaining a rebate on his ticket, but the answer which was given by the Minister was, perhaps, satisfactory. Since that the minister in question has sent me the ticket he got, and on the back it is stated that the railway company will not be responsible for loss of life or loss of baggage, and so forth. I think that is a very unusual restriction; and I understand it is not made on other railways on which clergymen are granted reduced rates. I think, if this distinction exists, it should be abolished.

Mr. FOSTER. It is so on all special tickets.

Mr. BARRON. I have a right to stand here and put a question to the Minister of Railways, and I object to the Finance Minister jeering at me when I am doing my duty. I shall do what I think is right, and I object to be jeered at by the Finance Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. I was only giving you a little information.

Mr. BARRON. I am not speaking to the Finance Minister. I am speaking to the acting Minister of Railways. The gentleman to whom I refer is a very prominent Presbyterian clergyman, and no doubt will be glad to know that the Finance Minister is trying to burke the enquiry which I was making of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. BOWELL. All clergymen are treated alike, whether they be Presbyterians or Episcopalians or anything else. The question whether railways should take the precaution of telling persons who avail themselves of cheaper rates that they will not be responsible for the loss of their lives, or for any damage, is a question of policy. If, however, those persons desire to pay for an insurance of the kind, all they have to do is to pay full rates.

Mr. BARRON. Hon. gentlemen opposite treat this in a jocular way, as if it were a matter of no importance. The Minister does not appreciate my point. The complaint made is that on other roads these restrictions do not govern.

Mr. BOWELL. On some roads they give no reduction at all. The Grand Trunk formerly gave clergymen free tickets, but they dropped it. Whether they give reduced rates now or not, I do not know: but I am told they do not. It is a question for a person to avail himself of the reduced rate. No one is treating this question jocularly. It is a purely business transaction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the document the Minister laid on the Table contain the arrangement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway showing the amount paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway on the road between St. John and Halifax?

Mr. BOWELL. No; that document has reference to the expenditure at the St. John station.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon, gentleman bring down information as to the rates paid between St. John and Halifax?

Mr. BOWELL. Do you want the agreement or only the rates?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Only the rates.

Mr. BOWELL. I will get the rates and bring them down.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When the Minister stated that he was charging officials on the Prince Edward Island road who granted passes wrongly did I understand that this principle was to be applied on the Intercolonial Railway also?

Mr. BOWELL. I did not state any principle, but I said that what I had done was to see that any manager or official who gave passes without authority should pay for them, and I intend to carry that out. If any official on any Government road gives passes without authority, or gives slips of paper, as I understand has been done, they will have to pay or they will be dismissed. I think the road ought to be conducted in that respect on business principles, and the officials should carry out the instructions they receive, and, if they do not, they should be made to suffer the consequences. Only to-day I told a high official from the lower provinces that, if he did not carry out the instructions he received from the manager, he would have to take the consequences and go.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. BOWELL moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.35 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 19th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUEBEC WEST-VACANCY.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that a vacancy has occurred in the representation of the electoral district of Quebec West in consequence of the resignation of the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, and that, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 13, section 5, sub-section 2, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, I have issued my Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new Writ of election for the said electoral district.

Mr. LAURIER. I cannot say for a certainty, but I understand that there is a protest entered against the election of that hon, member.

Mr. AMYOT. Yes, there is.

Mr. LAURIER. Under such circumstances, I venture to doubt if a Warrant for a new election should have been issued. I think this may require discussion at a later day.

Mr. AMYOT. I know personally that there is a protest, as I am one of the attorneys who signed the Writ.

Mr. SPEAKER. As to the statement of the hon, member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), I have only to say that I know nothing whatever respecting the protest referred to, and it seems to me, from my reading of the law; that, even if I had a knowledge of that fact, I would still be obliged to issue my Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The clause of the statute under which I have acted is as follows:—

"Any member of the House of Commons who wishes to resign his seat may do so by giving, in his place in the House, notice of his intention to resign, in which case, and immediately after such notice has been entered by the Clerk on the Journals of the House, the Speaker shall forthwith address his Warrant under his hand and seal to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a Writ for the election of a new member in the place of the member resigning; or

"(2.) Such member may address and cause to be delivered to the Speaker a declaration of his intention to resign his

"(2.) Such member may address and cause to be delivered to the Speaker a declaration of his intention to resign his seat made in writing under his hand and seal before two witnesses, which declaration may be so made and delivered either during a session of Parliament or in the interval between two sessions, and the Speaker shall, upon receiving such declaration, forthwith address his Warrant under his hand and seal to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a Writ for the election of a new member in the place of the member so resigning, and a Writ shall issue accordingly."

The resignation of Mr. McGreevy was in the form referred to in sub-section 2 of this section 5. It was placed in my hands yesterday afternoon, and, in accordance with my reading of the law, I considered it my duty forthwith to issue my Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. AMYOT. The resignation of a member must be valid itself first. We must take the law as a whole. If a member is not allowed to resign while his election is under protest, his resignation is not a proper resignation. I think it is worth while to enquire seriously into this matter. Action might be deferred until to-morrow in order to allow the Minister of Justice to look into it himself.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no necessity to defer any action about it. If the matter were of pressing importance, it would be well to have the precedents looked into, but the view taken by Mr. Speaker appears to be that, the resignation being placed in his hands, it is his imperative duty to issue his Warrant. It does not follow that an election will immediately take place, or that the statute will be infringed which says a member shall not offer his resignation while his election is contested or during the period within which it may be contested. On the contrary, after the Speaker has issued his Warrant, as I presume he has done, the next step is to issue the Writ, and at that stage the information may be used as to the existence of a protest against the election of the member.

Mr. LAURIER. The House has not yet been informed that you, Mr. Speaker, have issued your Warrant for a Writ for an election in the City of Kingston.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may point out to the hon. member that the position in which I am placed in regard to a vacancy caused by the death of a member is entirely different from that in regard to the resignation of a member, and it may be as well for me to draw the attention of the House to that question. The section reads:

"If any vacancy happens in the House of Commons by the death of any member or by his accepting any office, the Speaker, on being informed of such vacancy by any member of the House in his place, or by notice in writing under the hands and seals of any two members of the House, shall forthwith address his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a new Writ for the election of a member to fill the vacancy, and a new Writ shall issue accordingly."

ing the protest referred to, and it seems to me, Under that statute, I think my attention must be from my reading of the law; that, even if I had a drawn to the fact that a vacancy has occurred either by the death of a member or by his acceptance of office before I can issue my Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. LAURIER. Of course this is a matter of opinion, but I would have supposed that, having had placed in your hands a motion providing for the funeral of Sir John Macdonald, that would have been sufficient notice of his death.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The question raised as to the issue of a warrant in this case is a very im-

Mr. OUIMET. I rise to a question of order. What is the question before the House? Is it the issue of the writ for Kingston, or the issue of the writ for Quebec West? There is no motion before the Chair.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There may be a question of privilege.

Mr. OUIMET. A question of privilege must always be followed by a motion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I shall follow my observations by a motion and put myself in order in that respect. I say that, when contested elections were tried by a Committee of the House, the Speaker had official cognizance that the election was contested. But there is another matter of which the House has official cognizance. There were certain charges made against Mr. McGreevy, affecting his character as a member of this House, charges made by a member of this House, and referred to a Committee for the purpose of reporting to this House upon What the character of that report may be, I cannot say; but there is no doubt that the whole House has cognizance that such a charge is pending. If that charge is established, it may be that Mr. McGreevy will be expelled from this House in consequence of the report of the Committee. Now, it does seem to me that this attempt to anticipate the report of the Committee, is a matter for very serious consideration. Supposing Mr. McGreevy had been charged with some very serious crime which would render him unfit to sit in this House, and that the charge had been referred to a committee, and that the committee had not reported—can the member come before the House and anticipate the decision and report of the committee, by tendering his resignation and ceasing to be a member of the House! That is the question that is involved in this resignation of the member for Quebec West, and I think it is a matter of such serious moment that the House ought to have an opportunity of considering it. It may be that the Crown may refuse to issue the Writ; but I do not understand that to be the duty of the Crown. seems to me that in the issue of the Writs the function of the Crown is purely ministerial; it must act as a matter of course, it has no discretion in the matter. An attempt to exercise that discretion would be an abuse of the trust, and if there is to be discretion exercised at all, it ought to be exercised by this House. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It cannot be doubted that the question is one of very considerable importance in view of the instructions given to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. But I submit that it requires no action, as I stated before, at the present time, principally for this reason, that Mr. Speaker.

House and its power over the person who stands charged before the House, and who is on trial before one of its Committees, the practice which the House should follow in that case, I submit, would be to instruct the Committee on Privileges and Elections to examine the precedents and report to the House the course that ought to be followed. But it happens in this particular case that that is the very Committee charged with the investigation and whose duty it will be to present a report on these very charges. Therefore the Committee is seized of that as well as of the other matter, and must inevitably, in making its report, deal with the question of precedents.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the warrant is issued, I understand.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Committee will be in a position in a few days to decide whether the resignation is effectual.

Mr. LAURIER. But in the meantime the Warrant has been issued.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Writ has not yet been issued.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The misfortune in this case, I respectfully submit, consists in what may hereafter turn out to have been, perhaps, a hasty action on your part, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt the law is as read by you, and is to be found in the Acts respecting the House of Commons, and that law reads that any member may resign his seat in the several ways you have mentioned, and upon your being notified, you are forthwith to issue your Warrant. But the 5th section to which you have called the attention of the House, is followed by another section which I respectfully submit, must be read in conjunction with the one you have read. The 5th section says a member may resign his seat; the 7th section says no member shall tender his resignation in case his election is lawfully contested. So that whether you have been notified or not, does not matter; if it is a fact that Mr. McGreevy's seat is lawfully contested at this moment he cannot tender his resignation to this House. The tender of resignation is void, the Warrant which issues is void, and the Writ which issues upon that Warrant will be equally void. I think it is a matter of regret that that hasty action was taken. I do not think, perhaps, the Speaker is entirely to blanie, but, as a matter of fact, we are informed by an hon. gentleman, from his place in this House, that the facts recited in section 7, which, if they exist, prevent a member from tendering his resignation, do exist in this case. If that is so, then Mr. McGreevy could not tender his resignation, and you could not issue your warrant. I think myself that it is unfortunate that the warrant is issued, and that steps should be taken at a very early date, perhaps by the Committee to whom the alleged misconduct of this gentleman has been referred, to ascertain whether these facts do exist, so that your Warrant might be recalled, if necessary, at the earliest moment.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It seems to me some action should be taken now with regard to this matter, because the Journals of the House will have entered upon them the fact that you have announced the resignation of the member for Quebec West, and that you have issued your Warrant; whereas, if it be a question affecting the privileges of the if the reading of the law by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is correct—and I agree with him—section 7, which states that no member shall tender his resignation while a protest is pending, covers the preceding section, and the resignation, therefore, is null and void; and no matter whether you have been informed of it or not, or have any knowledge of it, you have issued the warrant in ignorance of the fact, if such is the fact; and if it is the fact, it is clear that the resignation is null and void. Now, if it is necessary or desirable that some enquiry should be made into this question, I think it should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to determine what is the true reading of the law, and I think in the meantime the announcement you have made to the House should be in some way withdrawn and not entered upon the Journals, because it would be awkward to come back in a few days with a report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections and to have all these proceedings you have announced to us, erased from the Minutes. seems to me clear at present that the resignation is null and void.

Mr. AMYOT. I understand there is no fault attributed to you, Mr. Speaker, but the member for Quebec West has abused your good faith and has added another offence to the others that he has already committed.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

PRIVILEGE—THE MEMBER FOR EAST NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to say to this House, that I have been credibly informed abelieve, a member of the present Parliament has been guilty of trafficking in the patronage of the county he represents; that he has been guilty of disposing of Government offices for a consideration. Personally I know nothing of the matter. I only desire to say, that I have been credibly informed and believe, that the facts on which the charges are based can be established before this House or a committee of it. In order that there may be no doubt as to the facts on which the charges are responsed to the said doubt as to the facts on which the charges are sized to pay $200 and give said life lease for said appointment. 4. I will read a statement of the charges, and I will place it on the Table of the House. It is as follows:-

That in the year A.D. 1888, there was a vacancy in the position of Government lighthouse-keeper in the Government lighthouse at Presqu'Isle Point, County of Northumberland

4. That in the year 1888 it was corruptly agreed to by and between the said Edward Cochrane and Hedley H. Simpson, that if the said Hedley H. Simpson would make and deliver to one James Stanley two promissory notes for $100 each, endorsed by some responsible person, he the said Edward Cochrane would procure the appointment of the said Hedley H. Simpson to the said office of lighthouse-keeper for the Government lighthouse on Presqu'Isle Point.

Simpson, in pursuance of said corrupt bargain, did make the said two promissory notes for $100 each—procured their endorsement by a responsible party—handed them to the said James Stanley, who received the same and placed them in a bank for the use of the said Edward Cochrane personally or for political purposes.

He did, when the said James Stanley proposed to the said Arundel R. Simpson, with the knowledge and consent of the said Edward Cochrane, that if he, the said Arundel R. Simpson, would pay $150 and give to his father, the said Obadiah Simpson, the life lease of his farm (as compensation for his not being appointed such bridge-keeper)—he had been promised and had not received the said office, he, the said Arundel R. Simpson, would be appointed such bridge-keeper.

Simpson on the and an interview with the said Edward Cochrane on the same subject, when the said Edward Cochrane said to him that they could not take the $150 for said office; that Stanley should not have made that offer, that other arrangements had been made with one Wesley Goodrich who agreed to pay $200 and give said life lease for said appointment.

into other corrupt contracts with other person or persons in the years 1888, 1889 and 1890, that if such person or persons would pay a certain sum or sums of money, such persons would pay a certain sum or sums of money, such person or persons would receive from the Government the position of keeper or keepers or attendants of other bridges on said canal, and that in pursuance of such corrupt bargain and bargains such payments were made and such appointments were received.

2. That said Edward Cochrane, during the periods aforesaid, made such corrupt offers to other persons, which offers were not finally carried out.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to say anything more on the subject. I do not propose to follow up the statement I have made with any motion to this House. I am not the guardian of the honour of Parliament; that responsibility rests upon the shoulders of gentlemen upon the Treasury benches, and I shall leave the matter in the hands of hon. gentlemen, at all events for the present.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The charges which the hon, gentleman has just read by way of a matter of privilege, require more attention than they can possibly receive from merely listening to the reading across the House; more especially as when the hon, gentleman commenced to read them, it was impossible for some of us to hear distinctly the first part of the paper which the hon, gentleman had before him. Under these circumstances, I beg to say that I think the better course would be that the hon, gentleman should table that paper to-day, and the attention of the House will be called to the subject to-morrow. I presume that by that time the hon. member charged will have an opportunity of seeing the charges and be prepared to make a statement in reply.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I said I would table the papers.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to draw to the attention of the House, that this statement cannot be entered upon the Journals of the House, unless some motion is made in that regard.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Before the honmember makes a motion, perhaps he would allow me to suggest that the other course would be the There is no necessity for its being in better one. the Journals to-day, and the hon. gentleman can make his motion to-morrow, and this can go by way of notice.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I will lay the statement on the Table.

DISMISSAL OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. PERRY. Before the House goes into Supply, I wish to draw the attention of the acting Minister of Railways to the fact that the return to an Order of the House respecting the dismissal of two employés of the Prince Edward Island Railway, is incomplete. All we have is a letter of the superintendent in chief to the superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway, ordering him to dismiss these men promptly. I want to know from him when we will get the information as to why these men were dismissed. I want to know from him from whom Schreiber got these orders. If this information is not forthcoming, then I can only come to the conclusion that these men were dismissed for no reasons at all, only for being suspected of having voted for Liberal candidates. favour. Mr. Cameron (Huron).

Mr. BOWELL. I made enquiry yesterday from the general manager of the road why these men were dismissed, and whether he had any further correspondence than that which was already laid before the House. He told me that the orders were received from the late Minister of Railways to dismiss these men promptly, and that is all he had on record.

Mr. PERRY. I want to know the reason why they were dismissed.

Mr. BOWELL. It is very difficult for the manager or myself to give him that information. Mr. Schreiber said that was the only order he received, and he carried it out.

QUEBEC WEST-VACANCY.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, with respect to the announcement which you made at an earlier stage of this sitting, that you have received a communication from the member for Quebec West, notifying you that he had tendered his resignation as a member of this House, and that you had issued your Warrant for a new election, some doubts appear to exist as to what the practice is or ought to be; and as the matter is a very important one, I beg to suggest the desirability of referring to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the finding of the fact whether or not at the time he tendered his resignation his seat was being legally contested. That fact ought to be found in any event; and whatever course the House may take afterwards upon that finding, is a matter for the consideration of the House. But the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), having stated from his place in the House that the seat is contested, I take it that this House should feel itself compelled at once to take action in the matter. I would, therefore, move the following resolution:-

That, whereas Mr. Speaker did this day inform the House that he had received from the Honourable Thomas McGreevy, the member for Quebec West, a tender of his resignation as a member of this House, and that on the receipt of such resignation he, Mr. Speaker, had issued his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a Writ for the election of a new member in the place of the said Honourable Thomas McGreevy: and whereas, upon such information being given to the House, the hon, member for Bellechasse did from his place in the House state that the election of the said Honourable Thomas McGreevy is now being lawfully contested, this House doth empower and direct the Committee on Privileges and Elections to enquire and report to this House whether the election of the said Honourable Thomas McGreevy was being lawfully contested at the time he tendered to Mr. Speaker his resignation as aforesaid, and if such fact is found in the affirmative, whether the Warrant of Mr. Speaker should have issued for the issue of a new Writ, and what practice should be adopted with reference to similar resignations tendered to Mr. Speaker in the future by members of this House.

SUPPLY—PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. Prior rose.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Victoria has the floor.

Mr. PRIOR. If the hon, member for South Oxford is going to make a motion, I will resign in his

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am about to make a motion; I am much obliged to my hon. friend. Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to vote the further supply of money for the Crown, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter of some considerable importance with respect to the safeguards which the practice of this House has provided for the purpose of seeing that the money placed in the hands of the Ministers of the Crown is judiciously and honestly expended. House knows, the main precautions which up to this date, and from the period of Confederation, or nearly from the period of Confederation, have been taken by the House for the purpose to which I have referred, are mainly these two. First of all, we have created a special officer. Act of Auditor General, who is placed by Parliament in a position closely analogous to that of the judges of the various courts, to whom we are in the habit of looking for detailed information as to the expenditure of public funds, and also to see that the requisite formalities and vouchers which ought to surround such expenditure have been attended to and complied with. The other measure of precaution which the House has seen fit to take ever since Confederation has consisted in this, that we have appointed an important Committee of this House, containing at present rather more than one-fourth of all the members having seats in this chamber, for the purpose of examining the accounts of the past year, and such items of other years as the House may see fit to refer to the Committee. That Committee, as everybody knows, is a very important Committee. It is usually granted by the House the power to examine witnesses upon oath, and to take down full reports of all their statements. Now, Sir, what I desire at present is to obtain from the House some definition or declaration of the extent of the powers and duties which that Committee possesses. It is not my intention, Sir, to occupy any great portion of the time of the House, but rather to confine myself to stating briefly what I understand, for my part, after a considerable experience in the ways and working of that Committee, to be its functions and its duties, and also to state briefly the reasons why I think that understanding should prevail. House after consideration can then decide whether the motion which I propose to submit, clearly defines the functions of the Committee. Now, Sir, according to my understanding of the case, in the first place, the Committee of Public Accounts is strictly and in terms a Committee of investigation -an inquisitorial committee, if you so choose to call it. That Committee is bound from the nature of the case to ascertain whether the various sums of public money which this House places at the disposal of the Government of the day are properly and honestly expended. Sir, as a corollary and sequence to that, it is, in my judgment, no barrier or answer to any proceedings taken in that Committee to say that the facts which may be brought out on examination in reference to any particular item so referred to a Committee, touch or do not touch the conduct of any Minister of the Crown or any member of the House. In point of fact, according to my understanding of the duties of the Committee, it is their special duty, as everybody knows it is the general duty of this House, to investigate the conduct of Ministers of the Crown and imittee at all. Therefore, for the purpose of removto see in particular how public moneys are expended. | ing all doubts on the subject, and of having a

But it is by delegation of the House, in a special sense, the duty of the members of the Public Accounts Committee to see that the public money is properly and honestly expended; and if, in the course of that investigation, questions should arise touching the conduct of any Minister of the Crown, so far from that being a barrier to investigation, it appears to me that it is rather a special reason why that Committee should proceed with the investigation and make it, if possible, more thorough and searching. I do not at all desire to contend that the Committee of Public Accounts is bound to sit in judgment on the conduct of members or on That is not the contenthe conduct of Ministers. What I do assert is that they are bound to find the facts, without fear or favour, and without reference to the circumstances, whether they may or may not in any way affect a Minister of the Crown or anybody else. Having found those facts, be they good or bad, it is their duty, in my opinion, to report them to this House, who, having those facts before them, may then take such action as to the House seems proper. Now, should that position be disputed or the contrary contention be maintained, it appears to methat the utility of the Public Accounts Committee, or of any committee of that kind, would be most seriously affected, if not altogether destroyed. I desire to call the special attention of the House to this fact. Every single item of the Public Accounts contained in the Auditor General's Report is referred every session to this Committee, and every single item therein is expended on the responsibility of some member of the Government and Minister of the Crown. The fact that. any irregularity may be discovered with respect to those items, of necessity, reflects more or less, even if it be but in a somewhat slight degree, on the capacity or honesty of some Ministers of the Crown. It is utterly impossible that we should investigate all these matters, and discover the errors in them, without in some degree more or less reflecting on the head of the department under whose sanction these payments were made. It appears to me it is scarcely possible that any enquiry could be pushed to its legitimate end if the contrary contention to that which I lay down be maintained. Now, Sir, I do not want to detain the House; I rather want to make this plain statement, and to obtain the opinion of both sides as to whether or not this is the true theory of the Public Accounts Committee. It appears to me that this has become, in a special sense, the correct interpretation of the duties and powers of that Committee, since, upon the same principle, we have given the powers to the Auditor General to which I have referred, who has taken off the shoulders of the Committee the care of examining into the minute details. of those comparatively formal enquiries, which, in other days, used to occupy a considerable portion of the time of the Committee on Public Accounts. I think that abundant proof has been given in the course of the last few months, if not of the last few years, that the only way is that which I have pointed out, and that it is only by recognizing the plain and clear fact, as it appears to me, that this House is a committee of investigation, whose bounden duty it is to see that the public moneys are honestly and judiciously expended, that we can justify the existence of this Public Accounts Comshort, explicit declaration of this House on the member of the House.
matter, I move that:

It is the undoubted right of the Committee on Public Accounts to investigate all circumstances connected with the payment of any of the several sums of public moneys referred to that Committee, and that in the course of such investigation no evidence should be refused on the ground that it may disclose improper conduct or relations on the part of a Minister of the Crown or of any other party in connection with such payment.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. With great submission to the riper experience of some members of this House, who have sat in it longer than I have, I venture to deprecate, as a general principle, the moving of resolutions, on going into Supply, which touch in any way the procedure and practice of the House, or any of the privileges or scope of enquiry and powers of its committees. These matters, touching as they do the procedure of the House, affected as it is by the precedence in other Parliaments, require consideration which can hardly be given to motions on going into Supply, because a motion on going into Supply is moved without notice, whereas anything touching the powers of a committee of the House or its procedure ought to be very carefully considered, after ample notice given to all the members of the House, not merely as between the two parties in the House, but to every member. Again, motions on going into Supply generally partake of a political character, into which considerations of party enter, whereas I am confident that any matter which touches the rules or the procedure of the House, or lays down a principle that may be useful in conducting our business, either here or in the committees, can be given proper deliberation on both sides and disposed of, without the slightest regard to party considerations whatever. Fortunately, the resolution of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is not open to the objection that we require notice of it, because it affirms a principle which I cannot suppose it would be possible for any member of this House to deny. Now, the principle which the hon, member lays down can be best illustrated—and I beg to assure him that, in speaking thus upon it, I am advocating its passage, lest a doubt may have arisen in his mind as to the propriety of the course he asks the House to affirm—by the practice adopted by the House generally in regard to the Public Accounts Committee. It is that, when the report of the Auditor General is laid on the Table of the House, it is referred to that Committee for the purposes of investigation. Undoubtedly, in regard to that reference or in regard to any other reference that may be made to it, that Committee is a committee of investigation. From time to time, as occasion may require, or as circumstances may be shown to the House, other items, even though they refer to past expenditure, to years that have passed away, may be referred to the Committee for the same purpose. No one can deny, and certainly on this side of the House we do not pretend to deny this afternoon, that, in the investigation of any reference made to the Committee by this House, it is entirely proper for the Committee to hear evidence which may be adduced, no matter what consequences may ensue to any member of this House. It matters not, therefore, in the least whether the Committee finds that an item in the account which is before it for investigation affects the credit and honour of a Minister or of a private Sir Richard Cartwright.

The one claim I should make, if it were necessary to do so-but it is not necessary, because there is nothing to the contrary in this resolution-would be that it shall be the duty of the Committee carefully to see that the proceedings before them is not searching for evidence, fishing for evidence, a proceeding for the purpose of affecting the honour and credit of any member of the House or a member of the Government, but that the evidence shall be pertinent and relevant to something which the Committee has been instructed by the House to investi-Further, I say the moment the Committee-I speak of the present Committee, and I will refer to future Committees in the same way as long as I have a right to say anything on the subject in this House--the moment the Committee is satisfied that evidence is adduced which is relevant to any enquiry which this House has asked Committee to undertake, that enquiry the should be continued, no matter how fatal it may be to any member of this House. The one safeguard which, I say, it is unnecessary to insist on, should be contained in this resolution, because it contains nothing to the contrary, is that the Committee shall not be made use of by outsiders for the purpose of attacking the honour and credit of members of this House. If it were necessary, I might go further and say that we do not desire to adopt any technical rule or any rule as to relevancy even to protect the honour of any member on this side of the House or any member of the Government. On the contrary, all that we shall ask, whenever the occasion may arise, is not to be protected by any rule of relevancy, but that the charge shall be made relevant by being made on the floor of the House and referred to that Committee or to some other committee for investigation. We ask that such a charge shall proceed, but that it shall proceed regularly, and then let the Committee on Public Accounts or any other committee receive everything in the way of evidence that is regular and pertinent and proper to any enquiry the House has ordered it to make, regardless altogether of what the consequences may be.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks, not perhaps of great national importance, but of great importance to the constituency I represent. object I have in view is to try and show this House, and more especially the members of the Government, the necessity that exists for dealing more fairly and liberally with the city of Victoria, of which I have the honour to be one of the representatives. If the House will bear with me for a little time, I will endeavour to show the reasons which oblige me to say that the dissatisfaction which exists among my constituents is well founded. I have here some figures which will show more forcibly than anything I can say what the facts are, and though they may be dry, as figures generally are, I hope that the hon, gentlemen who have the welfare of the Dominion, and therefore the welfare of British Columbia at heart, will take some interest in them. I will speak more particularly of Victoria, that being the constituency I represent, but I hope also to be able to show that British Columbia as a whole deserves the attention of the Government, and has claims which they should not overlook, as I fear they have done, to a certain extent, heretofore. I am glad to say that, notwithstanding the utterances made by the members of the Opposition, assertions that our farmers have their farms mortgaged to the very last penny they can get on them, that our mechanics are ground down by heavy taxation, that now there is a deadly pall overhanging the country north of the 49th parallel, a pall which is likely to descend upon us at any moment and engulf us in ruin and destruction,-notwithstanding these which I believe are not borne out by facts or figures, I am glad to be able to tell the House that British Columbia as a whole and Victoria in particular are flourishing exceedingly. Owing to the progressive and far-sighted policy inaugurated and pursued by the present Government, we in British Columbia are now joined to our eastern provinces by the bands of the Canadian Pacific With the advent of that road to our Railway. coast, an era of prosperity commenced in British Columbia which I am not afraid to prophesy will not only continue but will increase by leaps and bounds so long as the Government gives our industries in that new province the protection it has given to those in the older provinces of this Dom-I have here some figures that I think will prove to this House that we are to a great extent progressing. I find that the exports from British Columbia of lumber in 1886 amounted to the sum of $194,448. In the year ending June, 1890, they had risen to $325,881. Now, that was for export alone, but there is a tremendously large trade already developed and increasing, I am happy to say, with the eastern provinces of this Dominion. We are now shipping lumber as far east as New Brunswick. We are shipping large quantities of our timber to Cobourg, where Mr. Crossen uses it for making railway cars. I am also able to say that Mr. Van Horne, the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is using British Columbia timber in the new house he is erecting in Montreal, which I think is a great compliment to the province from which I come. I find, also, that the exports of fish in 1886 amounted to in this House to show meany other city in Canada

$643,052; and for the year ending 30th June, 1890, they have risen to the sum of $2,374,717. I find that our whole exports of coal in 1886 amounted to $973,195, and they have risen in 1890 to $2,375,770. Sir, if the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has done me the honour to listen to these figures, I feel sure he must admit that there is still a little to hope for from at least one of the shreds and patches of this Dominion. Sir, let me give the House a few figures to show the commercial importance of the city of Victoria as a port and as a distributing point. I find that the duty collected in the Victoria Custom-house for the year ending June, 1891, amounted to $928,678.94; the duties collected from Customs in the whole of British Columbia, amounted to $1,357,305.65; so we see that the goods that passed through the hands of the Victoria merchants paid over 70 per cent. of the amount of Customs levied in that province by my hon, friend the Minister of Customs. Besides this, the Minister of Inland Revenue collected a sum of $149,712 in British Columbia during that period. Under the Chinese Act $107,000 were collected; so we find that the total revenue collected in British Columbia, a province with only a small population, was $1,614,017. I find the exports for the year ending June 30, 1890, from the city of Victoria, amounted to $3,143,289; while the imports for home consumption during the same period, amounted to $3,215,559. The exports for the whole of British Columbia during the same period were $5,763,467; and the imports for home consumption for the whole of British Columbia, were $4,387,486. Thus we see that Victoria had the honour of doing 54 per cent, of the export trade, and 75 per cent, of the import trade. Now, as the total exports of British Columbia in the year 1886 were $2,953,616, and the total exports for the year ending 30th June, 1890, were $5,763,467, we find that our exports from the Province of British Columbia in four years have risen 95 per cent. Sir, I find the total tonnage entering the port of Victoria for the year ending June, 1890, of sea-going vessels, was 662,217 tons, and of coasting vessels, 627,504 tons, making a total of 1,289,721 tons. So I think I have proved that Victoria has a right to claim to be a port of importance in the Dominion. Now, Sir, I am glad to say that all this business did not pass through the hands of the people of Victoria and of British Columbia without leaving some profits. I find that on 30th June, 1890, there were deposited in the Government savings banks of Victoria, $1,155,158, thus showing the healthy financial condition of the class of people who usually put their savings into these savings I am perfectly aware that that sum is not as large as it was a year or so ago, but that is not on account of trade having fallen off, or on account of hard times in the province, but it is due chiefly to the action taken by the Minister of Finance in lowering the rate of interest from 4 to 3 per cent. I find that in the chartered banks on that date, there was deposited by the people, outside of the Government deposits, the sum of $2,788,-I find that the post office revenue of Victoria has risen from $23,756 in 1887, to $36,543 in the year ending 30th June, 1891. I may state, also, that the assessed value of the city is over $25,-000,000, and this year there will be some $1,500,000 worth of new buildings erected in that city. Now, I think I can challenge any hon. gentleman or in the United States with the same population as Victoria, that presents a more flourishing condition, or that is on a more prosperous and a more financially sound basis, than the city I have the honour to represent. I believe the census will show that the farming lands of British Columbia are being rapidly taken up, and I am informed on very good authority that next year enough grain will be grown in that province, not only to supply the demand for home consumption, but there will be a little left for export. One of our most important industries, the sealing industry, has, I am sorry to say, this year had a very grave set-back, owing to the arrangements that have been made between the Imperial Government and the United States Government closing Behring Sea. That is an industry in which there is some $425,000 of capital invested in schooners and outfits, and 1,082 men are employed. Nearly all these vessels sail from the port of Victoria. The closing of that sea has been a great loss to the city and to the province in general, because the sealing industry was stopped so soon, but even before it was stopped, seals had been caught worth, in the aggregate, over $400,000. is very easy to see what a large sum of money would have been brought into the province if the people had been allowed to pursue their occupation during the sealing session. Whilst on this subject I would like to be allowed to say to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the sealers of British Columbia are sincerely grateful to him for the ability and the zeal he has shown in working up their case and presenting it before the Imperial Government; and whatever may be the opinion of sealers in regard to the outcome of the negotiations between the Imperial Government and the United States Government—and I am bound to say that the majority of them believe that the old country has been overreached by the United States Government, especially in regard to sending up the commission at so late a period-whatever, I say, may be their opinion in regard to that arrangement, they have perfect confidence in the ability of the hon. Minister of Fisheries, and also in the Government, to state their case properly before the Imperial Government. Now, Sir, I gather from certain sources, such as my own personal observation, from newspaper reports, and from the blue-books, that there are several towns in this Dominion that are not contributing anything like the amount of revenue that the city of Victoria is contributing to the Dominion, that have had large sums of money expended upon their Custom-houses and post offices, while Victoria, not withstanding the persistent representations of her members in this House, has been obliged to do with old buildings that are entirely inadequate for the purpose for which they were intended. Owing to the largely increased business in late years, our Custom house and our post office are both too small for the purposes for which they ought to Lam sorry to say that I am told that the be used. post office itself is not at all healthy. Now, this was all very well years ago, but another set of circumstances now exist. I would like the Government to explain to me why, instead of patching up the present buildings as they promised to do, by little additions, they cannot give us buildings such as they put up in other towns, that would be a credit, not only to the city in which they are erected, but to the Dominion? I find that in the city of St.

or about the same as Victoria, a Custom-house has been built there costing $330,000, and a post office costing $174,000. I find in Hamilton, with a revenue of $826,000, or less than that of Victoria, they have a post office costing $348,000. In London, furnishing a revenue of $555,000, or about half that of Victoria, they have a Custom-house costing $120,000. In Winnipeg, with a revenue of $638,000, or about two-thirds that of Victoria, they have a post office costing $207,000; while Victoria, which pays over $1,000,000 per annum, has to put up with a Custom-house that cost at the utmost $39,000 and a post office which cost $42,000. I want it to be distinctly understood that I do not blame the Government one single moment for erecting those buildings to which I have referred, because I believe that every one was needed and every cent spent on them was money well invested, and I wish the representatives of those cities to know that I have no word to say against them for obtaining those buildings. Neither would I grumble if I thought our buildings were suitable and in a proper state for the work that is to be But I do not think so, nor do my done in them. constituents. I repeat the demand that my constituents be treated as fairly and liberally as those of any city of the Dominion. While I am speaking to-day I wish to say a word or two in regard to something that occurred in one of the committees of investigation.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PRIOR. It is in regard to a letter written by a well-known contractor, in which he states—and he had been in Esquimalt only a week—that the people of British Columbia were an indolent people. I wish most emphatically to deny that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What were the words he used?

Mr. PRIOR. I, perhaps, have not so good a memory as the hon. member for Queen's, but I shall be very glad to hear them again, because I am satisfied I can refute them. Hon, gentlemen need not go further, in order to see what sort of people the British Columbians are, than to look at the older members who represent them here. Take, for instance, the member for Vancouver (Mr. Gordon), who left eastern Canada when quite a young man and underwent the perils and hardships of a pioneer's life in the early days of California and British Columbia, and who now in his later years is enjoying comparative ease, is respected by all, and has been elected to the highest political position which his fellow-citizens can give. Take the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara), who left eastern Canada when quite young, and travelled across the plains and Rocky Mountains before anyone thought of the "iron horse" in those regions. his energy and determination we are indebted for the opening up of some of the most magnificent water stretches in British Columbia, where some fine steamers ply, and by his integrity, enterprise and energy, he has made for himself a name to be envied, and has been returned as the representative of his district both in the Local Legislature and in this House continuously since the Union. Take my hon. colleague, the senior member for Victoria. He left Brockville in the early days and went to make his home in British Columbia. Many and many a John, N.B., which returns a revenue of $938,000, day has he packed his blanket over the rough trails in British Columbia, which the Minister of the Interior knows so well, but he had the stout heart and backbone of a Canadian, and after close attention to business for many years during which he amassed a fortune, he has now the esteem and respect of every man, woman and child who knows him in British Columbia. Such are the people of British Columbia, who are called indolent. There are hundreds and hundreds of them who have done the same, and who by their energy and perseverance have become well off. I would be wanting in the very essentials of manhood if I allowed this opportunity to pass without standing up in defence of the brave and hardy pioneers of our province. Sir, we have enterprising and energetic men who will send the province ahead, if only they are fairly treated by the Government. One gentleman, Mr. R. P. Rithet, has expended $150,000 in erecting wharves at Victoria, so that sea-going vessels might ride there in safety, including the China and Japan steamers belonging to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I ask the Government to place a proper amount in the Supplementary Estimates to assist in dredging opposite this wharf, so that there may be no further excuse for the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers not calling at the capital of the province. I may mention that we have been witnesses to a most curious phenomenon at Victoria It seems that so soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers came near the wharves, the ground rose and the waters immediately became shallow, but so soon as any other steamers of the same draught arrived they came alongside the wharves. For some time the Bataria was run by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and there never was sufficient water to allow her to come to the wharves, and in fact she could not call at Victoria. So soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company obtained their own steamers and the Bataria ran as an opposition line, she came in with 3,000 tons on board and there was no trouble at all. I knew the Canadian Pacific Railway could do nearly everything they liked on land; I thought their power stopped at high-water mark, but it apparently does not. members from British Columbia did not occupy any of the time of the House during the Budget debate, as they did not believe they could add anything to the eloquent speeches made by some of the ablest men of the House, and I, therefore, hope hon, members will pardon me for addressing Let me enthem during these few moments. treat the Government to treat British Columbia with no niggardly hand at the present time. It is a province possessed of boundless and varied resources, resources so great that members from the province are almost afraid to tell the truth for fear of being looked upon as grossly exaggerating the Let the Government grant railway subsidies where they are really needed, let them erect public buildings where needed, let them spend money on public works where they are needed, let them protect our manufacturers, farmers and artizans, and within the next few years we will see British Columbia such a hive of industry and populated by such a happy, prosperous and contented people as have not their equal on the continent. It is not only unfair to British Columbia that the Government, after granting large sums to the old provinces, should not grant the necessary sums for a new province like it is; but, in my humble judgment, I consider it a most unwise and short- personally, and on behalf of the Government, I am sighted policy. It is a penny-wise-and-pound-foolish policy. Let the Government spend the pennies now in opening up our resources, and in a few years I warrant them the pounds will return to their coffers, filling them to repletion.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I should like to say a few words in answer to the very interesting and able address of the hon, member for Victoria (Mr. Being an old British Columbian, I sympathize entirely with the remarks which he has made to the House. As is well known, I lived in that country for over twenty years, and since I left it I have kept in touch with the province. may say that the few dollars I have made in my life, now extending over fifty or sixty years, and been able to put aside, were made in British Columbia some twenty years ago. It has been reported that I am a wealthy man, that I am rolling in wealth made in every part of the country in which I ever lived; but the only money I ever made in my life and put aside for investment, was made in British Columbia twenty years ago, and my money to-day is invested in that province. I believe that to-day, for any young man or any man possessing energy and ability, there is no place on the globe like British Columbia. I have travelled over that country more than any white man in it; I know it from the south to the north, from the east to the west. I have seen that country from one end to the other, and I wish hon. members could have seen it as I have seen it. The hon, gentleman who has spoken with regard to British Columbia has confined his remarks principally to that portion of it which lies in the south-western part of the province, where the popula-tion is thickly settled, and where settlement is going I have seen it for hundreds of miles north of that, and there is just as good a country there as there is in the south, and to day there is not an immigrant going in there, there will not be an immigrant until the country is opened up, and the only way it can be opened up will be by public works. I agree with the hon, gentleman that I think this House and the Government ought to assist in every possible way to open up that grand country. With regard to the special portion of his speech in reference to the expenditure on public works in British Columbia, to which the hon. gentleman wished to draw the attention of the Government, I, for one, felt very much as that hon. gentleman felt, and as British Columbia members have felt, that they have not received as liberal treatment as I think the commercial showing of the hon. member to-day proves they are entitled to. However, it is only within the last twoor three years since the railway has crossed the continent, and time passes quickly, that population has rapidly gone into that country, and that public notice was directed especially to that part of the Dominion. Population is increasing, and as population increases so will the representation of the Province of British Columbia in this House increase. I am in hopes that after the census returns are in, that British Columbia may be entitled to a larger voice on the floor of this House, and it is then, as we all know, that we are able to get what we think we are entitled to. I am in hopes that the day is not far distant when British Columbia will have a larger voice in this House. On behalf of myself quite sure that they realize the situation, and speaking without authority, I do believe that the Government are coming to the conclusion that British Columbia should be treated more liberally with regard to this public expenditure. I will not say anything further just at present, and I would not have spoken on the matter, were it not that I felt from my heart that the words expressed by the hon, member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) were the true voice of British Columbia.

IMPORTATION OF MINING MACHINERY.

Mr. MULOCK. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call to the attention of the Minister of Customs, a matter affecting his department. I have had placed in my hands a statement by a gentleman named Ed. V. Wright, of the city of Ottawa, and in this statement he declares, that in the year 1887 he imported from the United States into Canada, a certain quantity of mining machinery of a kind which he says was not manufactured in Canada, and upon which he says he paid to the treasury $1,600 duty. He further states that he has learned that other mining machinery was imported into Canada duty free, prior to his importation and at a time when the same law was in force as was in force when duty was collected upon his importation. In this statement that he has placed in my hands, he alleges that certain American citizens and companies on several occasions have had remissions of the duties on mining machinery imported by them, and all prior to the Act of last session which enabled the Government, in some circumstances, to remit such duties, as, for example, where the machinery was of a character not manufactured in Canada. The statement that he has placed in my hands, if correct, shows that he has not been treated as others have: and I would ask the Minister of Customs, that he would at an early date, lay upon the Table of the House particulars in regard to such matters. I will give the hon. Minister the statement which I have in my hand, for his guidance, as it gives the particulars with great minuteness. I am at a loss to understand how this gentleman could be taxed and others exempt from taxation, and under these circumstances, without further comment at the present moment, I would ask the Minister if he would lay on the Table of the House at an early date a statement showing the amount of mining machinery that has been imported into Canada duty free, since 1880, or upon which there had been any remission or refund of duty, and showing the dates of these importations and the names of the persons who so imported the machinery. Does the hon. Minister want the statement?

Mr. BOWELL. No. This is not a new matter to the department. It is one that has been before it ever since, or for a few months after, the importation of the machinery to which the hon. gentleman alludes, and the statements made therein are not, and cannot, be verified or substantiated by the facts. The machinery imported by Mr. Wright was imported before the concession was made in the law permitting the importation of such mining machinery as was not manufactured in Canada, free of duty under certain restrictions. Mr. Wright, it is true, applied for the remission of the duty upon the machinery which he had imported, and I informed him that, as head of the department, I bring them down, but I must decline to pro-had no power or authority under the law to make such remission to him or to any other person; that such remission could only be made by a change in the tariff, as it now stood upon the Statute-book I told him that the department was administrative in its character, and not law-making, but that the Treasury Board had full power and authority under the Audit Act to make a remission of duties under certain circumstances, and that his case should be laid before the Treasury Board for its consideration. In accordance with that promise, I took his statement, which, I presume, is somewhat of the same character as the one to which my hon, friend has referred, to the Treasury Board, and the Treasury Board refused to recognize a principle which asks for a remission of duties upon a request of that kind upon the ground that it was not manufactured in Canada, because it would be establishing a pre-cedent to which there would be no end. There is scarcely a week, or certainly not a month passes in the year, that similar demands are not made for all kinds of machinery. Mr. Wright has not been treated differently from any other importer. There have been cases in which matters have been taken to the Treasury Board for its consideration, and they have acted upon them, but I have no recollection at the present moment of any remission of duties upon mining machinery that has been imported under similar circumstances to those under which the machinery of Mr. Wright was imported into the country. There is a case lately in which a remission of duty was made upon mining machinery that was imported, upon affidavits having been made and fyled that it could not be manufactured in Canada, but that machinery was imported into Canada and paid duty on the exaction of the collector at the port at which it was entered, after the passage of the law which now stands upon the Statute-book admitting such machinery free. House can readily understand, if an error has been made in the collecting of duty upon an article which is made free by law, the propriety of it being refunded to the parties who made the importation; but it is another principle to adopt that because the law has been changed to-day, admitting a particular article free into the country, therefore, all articles of a similar character which were admitted into the country prior to the passage of such a law, should have the duty refunded. That is the position in which Mr. Wright's case stands. I do not hesitate to say that, personally, I sympathize with him and all others who have entered into mining operations in the same manner that he has. This matter has been before the House two or three times. The late member for Ottawa County called my attention to it privately and also across the floor of the House once or twice, and I ex-plained to him fully that there was no power in the Customs Department or in its head to remit duties of any kind; and, under the circumstances, he was satisfied that the department had done all it could to meet the views of Mr. Wright, not only in its administrative capacity, but carried his petition to the only power which, under the law, could remit such duties, the Treasury Board; but that board, for the reasons which I have stated, declined to accede to the prayer of that petition. If the hon, gentleman will move for any Orders in Council or other papers affecting this particular question, I shall, of course, have no objection to mise here to do that which I fear could not very well be done, because I would have to examine all the documents and all the correspondence in reference to the admission of machinery for years past, which includes volumes; for, as I have already informed the House, almost every week, certainly two or three times in a month, applications are made to the department to do just that which the gentleman who gave that paper to the hon, member for North York is asking us to do, and that which I am sure the hon, gentleman on a moment's reflection would not expect. Let him put the matter in such a shape that we can know exactly what is wanted, and I will endeavour to have the information brought down at the earliest possible moment; but I can assure him that the statements he has made, which have been published in the press as a grave charge against the department, have no foundation in fact. Mr. Wright was treated just as other persons in similar circumstances have been treated, and I could not, as head of the department, do otherwise than I did, having no power to refund duties to anyone.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon. Minister would produce copies of the Orders in Council under which remissions of duties on mining machinery have been made, that might satisfy Mr. Wright. He is under the impression at the present moment that he has been treated in one way, and others in another; and as the hon. Minister says that no such remission could take place except under the provisions of the Audit Act, it must have been by virtue of an Order in Council, and it could not be much trouble to look up the Orders in Council bearing on the case and lay them on the Table.

Mr. BOWELL. The only objection I have to that is to set a precedent for any member to rise and demand that certain returns shall be laid before him. The only proper course is for him to make a motion for the return, and have it ordered in the regular way.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to say to the Committee before we go on with these items-and I would like the attention of my hon. friend from South Oxford that the different departments of the Government find themselves in difficulty at the present time owing to the total, or almost total lack of supplies. The small amount that was taken three or four weeks ago has been expended, and some very important branches of the service are now really without any funds at all. There seems to be only two ways of getting this difficulty made right. One is to ask the House again to vote without discussion a proportionate amount of what remains. The other is to see whether we cannot, within a reasonable time, say within six, seven or eight days, pass the bulk of these main Estimates, and so get the supply in the regular way. I should be very averse, if it can be avoided, to taking up a day of the time of the Committee, in adopting the course we adopted before, and then having to go over each item, and spend as much time upon it as if this had not been done. So I invite the hon, gentleman opposite, and his colleagues, not to forego reasonable discussion, but to confine the discussion as far as possible within reasonable limits, so that we come so enormous that something has to be done may soon have the necessary supplies. If that cannot be done, I shall have to ask the House to vote a proportionate sum, or there will be very great detriment to the public service.

Commission with the commission of the commission

Sault Stc. Marie Canal $935,000

Mr. MULOCK. Would the hon, gentleman have any objection to allow this item to stand? I moved some time ago, in the Public Accounts Committee, for the production of certain papers in regard to the contract of Allan & Fleming, and unless they have come down to-day or yesterday, they have not come down at all.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objection that it should stand, but I am not aware of what return the hon. gentleman has asked for. I have no recollection of the question being brought under my notice. If it had been, I should have endeavoured to have it laid on the Table before this. If there is any information which I can possibly give the hon. gentleman, I would be very glad to give it. Unless he wants some very important information, which I have not got, I think we had better go on with the item.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not able to answer the hon, gentleman, for reasons which he can well understand. I wish to investigate the payments to Allan & Fleming, and certain matters in connection with their contract. I have just sent to the clerk of the Committee to ascertain if the papers have been brought down.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no objection to letting the item stand, but I really do not see how that can affect the item, which it is necessary to pass now in order to proceed with the construction of the canal. Supposing that the worst suspicions of the hon, gentleman be verified, that will not affect this case in the least.

Mr. MULOCK. Still I should like to ask some questions.

Lachine Canal..... $350,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That seems rather a large sum. It is very much larger than has ever been demanded for a good while for this canal. I was under the impression that the works there were all pretty well completed, but this appears to indicate a very considerable further expenditure from time to time, much larger than I like to see.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman's statement is quite correct so far as the large expenditure is concerned, but he will bear in mind that the enlargement of the Lachine Canal has scarcely yet been begun and it will require a much larger amount than this before it is completed. The purposes for which this amount is required are the construction of a drain 6,600 feet along in rear of the town of Lachine, deepening the River St. Pierre near the Grand Trunk crossing, culverts, water pipes, &c., and the purchase of land. $50,000 are required for the purchase of ground on which to place the material to be excavated from the bottom of the canal, and $136,000 are required for deepening and bridging. It has become absolutely necessary to give greater accommodation in crossing the canal in Montreal where it passes near Point St. Charles, either by the construction of two bridges or the enlarging of the present one. The traffic has beSir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When that is done, what will be the depth of water and the size of the locks? My recollection is that the whole canal had been deepened to 14 feet or upwards, and that a part had been deepened to the extent of 16 feet.

Mr. BOWELL. No; the canal was deepened under the administration of Mr. Mackenzie to 12 feet, and it has become absolutely necessary, if all the other canals are to have a depth of 14 feet, that the Lachine Canal should have the same depth. The masonry is sunk to a depth of 14 feet, so that only dredging is required.

Mr. CURRAN. I am glad to notice that in this large amount is included the amount voted last year and the year before for a new Lachine canal bridge. The late chief engineer of Canals, Mr. Page, was for a number of years averse to building bridge. another bridge. After representations had been made to the Government four or five years in succession, Mr. Page at length consented to a bridge being constructed, the cost of which was estimated at $25,000. The year before last that item was put in the Estimates. It was later found that that sum would not be sufficient, and last year the sum of $45,000 was voted for that purpose. In the meantime Mr. Page died, and his successor seems to have a very strong aversion to carrying out this idea of building an extra bridge, and thinks it would be better that we should have one bridge of double the capacity, so that there would be only one obstruction to navigation instead of two. All the parties interested, the Grand Trunk Railway and all these enormous foundries, and factories, and mills situated at Point St. Charles, are perfectly willing that either one plan or the other should be adopted, but for years back we have been exposed to accidents to life and limb at every hour of the day, owing to the utter absence of sufficient means of crossing the canal to and fro, and there is only one small sidewalk for foot passengers which has been annexed to the Wellington bridge; so that the people are obliged to rush across amidst a train of coal carts and all kinds of vehicles. There are tens of thousands of people and thousands of vehicles crossing there every day, and, unless this improvement is carried out, I shall not be surprised at any time to hear that a very serious accident has occurred at the Wellington bridge. Now, I urge upon the Minister that during the forthcoming winter means be taken to have a bridge constructed. We have had the sum voted twice in the Estimates, but on both occasions the matter has been deferred. It is of the greatest importance, and I am glad that the Minister for the time being has consented that constables shall be placed at either end of Wellington bridge and Black's bridge. At least, the Deputy Minister informed me to-day that he felt that was necessary and that the traffic must be regulated in some way. I received a letter from Mr. Wainwright yesterday, which I placed in the hands of the Minister, urging in the strongest manner that this matter should be regulated, and that constables should be placed to keep back the coal carters and those who are driving heavy St. Mr. BOWELL.

vans and prevent them from rushing forward, crushing the lighter vehicles and exposing people to danger at all times of the day. The traffic at that point has increased to such an extent that no one who does not visit it from time to time can imagine what it is. I urge upon the Minister to have a new bridge constructed during the coming winter, or to have the present bridge enlarged to such an extent as to suffice for the travel and traffic, and so that proper accommodation may be given to foot passengers in order that they may not be left, as they have been, exposed to the loss of their lives. I hope this matter will be pushed forward with all energy and despatch. I make this appeal to the Minister in the strongest possible terms, and I sincerely hope that next spring will see the people of that section of the city provided with what is an absolute necessity to them, and that no interference will be allowed with the progress of the work, which, if it be delayed for another year, will be, I fear, a grave dereliction of duty on the part of the Department of Railways and Canals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the Minister to say that this expenditure of $350,000, which is practically to entail an expenditure of $1,000,000, has regard to the deepening of the canal to a depth of 14 feet? He does not propose, as I understand, to enlarge the locks.

Mr. BOWELL. The Deputy Minister informs me that is not necessary, as the locks are sufficiently large now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think none of us would be disposed to begrudge any reasonable expenditure which would be necessary to give a 14 feet navigation through the St. Lawrence; but, though it is not perhaps within the power of the acting Minister to speak with much practical knowledge on the subject, I would ask whether the department are prepared to guarantee that we can get a 14 feet navigation at low water from Kingston downwards without an enormous expen-The hon, gentleman knows that the water diture. levels of Lake Ontario and of portions, and I think almost all, of the St. Lawrence waterway, vary very considerably. I have heard it stated that the variation was as high as 3½ feet to 4 feet, though I suppose that is the extreme limit, but I know from personal observation that it does vary 3 feet. I know the question has been raised by eminent engineers who have been in this House, whether this 14 feet navigation of the St. Lawrence could be obtained without an enormously heavy expenditure; and I should like again to know from the Minister in charge if the department have absolute data sufficient to assure them that 14 feet navigation can be obtained except by the expenditure of an enormous sum, a sum far in excess of anything we have contemplated yet or have put down in these Estimates.

Mr. BOWELL. I have the full statement in my hands, commencing with the Lachine Canal and extending to the Welland Canal. As to the Welland Canal, I may mention that the enlargement is complete, at a cost, in round numbers, of $16,100,000. The Sault Canal will cost at least $2,500,000 to complete. Grouping these canals, the cost of their completion will be as follows:—St. Lawrence Canals, 14 feet depth, which I understand from the engineer can be obtained, $12,150,402.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the Minister pardon me for interrupting him for a moment. He says the cost of deepening the St. Lawrence Canals to 14 feet will amount to about $12,000,000. I suppose that includes the $2,000,000 he is now asking for?

Mr. BOWELL. If the Committee will bear with me for a moment, I will give this statement. cost of the finished canal and river navigation rid the St. Lawrence, from Lake Superior to Montreal, will be, in round numbers, 41 millions (exclusive of about 15 millions spent before the enlargement was begun); of this about 264 millions have been spent and 14½ millions are required to com-The highest canal of the series is at Sault Ste. Marie, where there is to be a short canal and a single lock of large dimensions, designed to permit of vessels drawing 19 feet passing at low water. When I reach that item I shall explain why the changes have been made to increase the capacity of that canal. All the other canals between Lake Erie and Montreal are arranged for a navigable depth of 14 feet. Those portions of the river and smaller lakes which require to be improved so as to secure a 14 feet depth throughout are included in the above sum of 14½ millions. It will be recollected that up to 1876 the intention was to carry out the views of the Royal Commission of 1870, and to make the Welland and the St. Lawrence Canals of a navigable depth of only 12 feet. so many representations were made in favour of an increase to 14 feet that the Government, in 1876, decided to adopt this as the navigable depth. In the meantime the Welland Canal had been completed to the 12-foot gauge, and had to be sub-sequently deepened 2 feet. None of the other canals between the Welland and Lachine were, however, begun before the greater depth was adopted. On the Lachine, the foundations of the permanent structure were put down to the full depth for vessels drawing 14 feet—but about 6½ miles of the canal itself has yet to be lowered two feet to obtain this depth. The bottom is chiefly rock. The cost of completing this canal is estimated at $1,250,000. For about four miles above the head of the Lachine Canal, Lake St. Louis is obstructed by numerous shoals consisting principally of hard material, the removal of which is necessary to form a channel suitable to the enlarged 14 feet navigation. This, together with some minor improvements, including provision for lights, &c., will probably require an expenditure of $1,250,000. Between Lake St. Louis and Lake St. Francis, there is a rise of about 83 feet in the river, which is at present surmounted by the Beauharnois Canal on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. After careful surveys and examinations extending over some years, the conclusion has been arrived at to build the enlarged scale canal on the north shore. This canal is estimated to cost about $4,750,000. In Lake St. Francis the obstructions to a 14 feet navigation are but slight and are found near its upper or western end. Their removal is estimated to cost about $90,000. The works of the Cornwall Canal are all under contract. The two lower locks, &c., were completed in 1882. The four other locks, weirs, &c., are now nearly finished. A considerable length of the largement of the Lachine Canal except at a period canal, however, remains yet to be enlarged. banks also require to be strengthened, &c. complete this canal will cost about $2,120,400. will, however, inform the Committee that the deputy, with the assistance of Mr. Shanly, is now considering the propriety of making some change in the contract which has been entered into for the enlargement of a portion of this canal, whereby that portion of the river lying between the head and the foot of Sheiks' Island can be utilized by the construction of two large dams which would cost Without going into particulars, about $350,000. the change which it is proposed to make, if it should be so recommended by the engineer, will save about $100,000, notwithstanding the fact that of the sum which has already been expended, and which it might be necessary to pay to the contractors who are now performing the work, the calculation is, roughly speaking, to make a saving of about $100,000, with much better navigation. However, this change is now under consideration, and no decision has yet been arrived at. Between the head of the Cornwall Canal and Prescott the main obstruction to the navigation of the river by vessels of 14 feet draught, namely, at the Galops Rapids, has been removed. A considerable amount of work is yet to be done to complete the channel throughout. Nothing has been done towards the enlargement of the canal at Farran's Point so far. At the Rapide Plat, the works remaining to be done to complete the enlargement have been recently placed under contract. The works on the Galops Canal are now well advanced. As before stated, the improvement of the river outside this canal has been completed, so as to give a 14 feet channel at low water of the river. This, I am inchannel at low water of the river. formed, has been considered to be the lowest portion of the St. Lawrence. To complete the Williamsburg Canal, namely, the Farran's Point, Rapide Plat and the Galops Canals, together with the necessary river works between the Cornwall Canal and Prescott, the estimated cost is $2,771,400. The cost of the improvements between Montreal and Prescott is set down as $22,220,000, of which amount $10,069,598 has been spent, leaving, as I estimated a moment ago, $12,150,402 for completion. The Welland Canal enlargement is completed, costing, in round numbers, $16,100,000. The work which has been commenced on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal will be of much larger dimensions than any of the others. It will require $2,393,500 to complete this canal. Grouping these canals, the cost of their completion will be as follows:—St. Lawrence, 14 feet, $12,150,402; Welland Canal, 14 feet, $91,000: Sault Ste. Marie, 19 feet, $2,393,500, making a total of $14,634,902, or as previously stated, about $14,500,000. The total amount expended on the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals prior to the commencement of any works of enlargement, either for the present 14 feet scheme, or for the 12 feet scheme, which it has replaced, is $15,146,854. This, I think, will be valuable information, and will enable the House to understand the exact position, financially and otherwise, of these works.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About how long will it take to complete those works?

Mr. BOWELL. It will take some years, from the fact that nothing can be done towards the en-when it will not interfere with navigation. I suppose that doing the work by piecemeal—the contractors understand that better than I do-costs more than it would if you were to put on a full force the whole length of the canal. I may say to the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), that the reason why means for the protection which he has claimed for people crossing the canal, have not been adopted before, is set forth in a letter which has been received from the superintending engineer, Mr. Parent. He said that he had not reported because he was consulting with the authorities in Montreal with regard to some legal points that might arise. It was subsequently thought better that the Government, having caused the obstruction, should assume the responsibility by putting policemen there in order to protect the people from accident and loss of life.

Rapide Plat..... $400,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a new canal?

Mr. BOWELL. This is in connection with the new canal and the enlargement. Sections 1, 2 and 3, comprising about three miles of enlarged canal, and the construction of a new lift lock, were recently placed under contract, and the work has been commenced. On section No. 1, the contractors are Mesrs. Poupore, Fraser & O'Brien; on section No. 2, the Weddell Dredging Company; section No. 3, Poupore, Fraser & O'Brien; section No. 4, upper entrance, William Broder.

Mr. MULOCK. Were these works let to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. BOWELL. The deputy informs me the lowest tenders were accepted after public advertisement.

Galops..... $280,000

Mr. MULOCK. Is this work now under contract?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Who are the contractors?

Mr. BOWELL. W. A. Allan.

Mr. MULOCK. When was the contract let?

Mr. BOWELL. I find I was in error. work to which I was referring was completed in 1888, W. A. Allan being the contractor. present works are new upper entrance, guard lock, and weir. The contractors are Murray Cleveland; the work was commenced in 1889, and $280,000 are required for the work during the year 1891-92.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the total amount of this contract?

Mr. BOWELL. I will obtain the information in a short time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to know what is the nature of the work for the last two or three items. Is it dredging chiefly?

Mr. BOWELL. Chiefly dredging.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount paid for dredging?

Mr. BOWELL. About 30 cents.

St. Lawrence River and Canals.....$300,000

Mr. BERGERON. The Committee will allow item. In 1879 I made a request to the House has been so reported to the Government. Now, as Mr. Bowell.

for all papers relating to the construction of the Beauharnois Canal. If I remember correctly, I said something about reports of the engineers, and I was informed by the Government of that time that there was no intention then of enlarging and deepening the present canal or building a new canal. Since then nearly every session, knowing that some surveys were being made north of the St. Law-rence and also around the Beauharnois Canal, I have asked the Government whether it was their intention to either deepen or enlarge the present canal or build a new canal on the north side of the river. The answer I always received was that the subject was under the consideration of the Govern-During the last election we heard that the canal to connect Lake St. Francis and Lake St. Louis was to be built on the north shore; but I did not credit the report, thinking it might be merely an election dodge, an occurrence that very seldon happens. But it appeared to me that the Government should not decide upon the construction of a work of such importance purely and simply upon the report of one engineer, who may be a very good engineer and against whom I have nothing to say; but, surely, the Government should take advantage of the many able men at their disposal before arriving at a decision and inviting the country to make an expenditure of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. I saw the other day by a report brought down to the House, that the Government had three plans before them; one was to build a new canal on the south shore, using only a part of the Beauharnois Canal; the second was to deepen the present canal, and the third was to build a new canal on the north shore. The Government, it appears, have decided to build a new canal on the north shore. This decision was arrived at on the report of Mr. Monro, one of the engineers of the Department of Railways and What I wish to say is simply this: I do Canals. not look upon this as a political question, for in my opinion it is too important and too serious a matter to strike the attention of this or any Government upon the political aspect only of it. I look upon it as a great national and commercial question, and a question of high engineering skill, more than of anything else. The electors whom I represent in this Parliament, and from whom I have heard lately are very much interested in this matter, and they agree with me in the belief that this decision was somewhat suddenly arrived at by the Government, and that it was come to without that amount of consultation and study of the subject by their engineers, which should have taken place. I have only lately commenced to think myself that this matter might be serious. It seems to me that it is in the interest of the Government themselves, that they should be most anxious to have clearest and the most convincing reports of engineers on this undertaking before they commit the country to a large expenditure of this sort. It is very well known, not only to an engineer, but any sensible man can see for himself, that at the foot of the Beauharnois Canal, the ice moves away in the spring, on the south shore or Beauharnois side, about a fortnight before it leaves the north or Cedar side of the river. That is well known by every farmer, and by every man, woman and child me, I hope, to make a few remarks upon this in the neighbourhood that this is the case, and it

I am informed, the Beauharnois Canal is built in solid land. It has been told me by engineers, and especially by one gentleman in whom the Government has a great deal of confidence, since I understand he is consulting engineer of the department, I refer to Mr. Walter Shanly; and he has stated to me that the Beauharnois Canal, of all the canals belonging to the Dominion of Canada, is the best built and the most solidly constructed, We know that the same occurrences which happen almost yearly in the Cornwall Canal cannot happen in the Beauharnois Canal. Evey one knows the amount of money that has to be expended in repairing the Cornwall Canal, and I am credibly informed by those who ought to know, that unless the Cornwall Canal is constructed with stone walls it will be a source of damage and delay to navigation every year. The proposed Soulanges Canal will have to cross two rivers coming from the north and flowing into the River St. Lawrence, and I believe that the difficult task will have to be undertaken of diverting or changing the course of these rivers, that it may not injure the canal which it is now proposed to build. I believe further that the Soulanges Canal, if it is built, will have to be built in the very same form and shape as the Cornwall Canal, and the very same difficulties will be experienced with it. One report on the Beauharnois Canal says that at the head of the canal there is some rock, and another report says that it is quick sand, so that the two reports differ. I was pretty much of an eye-witness to the soundings which have been made there, and I say here in the House of Commons, that the Government cannot rely upon the reports which they have received in this connection. The work has not been done by engineers, the engineers themselves were not there, but they hired men who were not engineers and sent them in skiffs to make the soundings. These men so sent, I know well, have not even the first knowledge of They worked there for about a fortnavigation. night or three weeks, going around from one place to another, and the farmers themselves were perfectly astonished to see these people pic-nicking, as they called it, and sending in a report upon which it seems the Government has made up their minds to involve the country in such a large expenditure. I am not an engineer myself, and the people who are complaining of this are not engineers, but I may say that the people of my county, and the people of the whole Dominion, are deeply interested in this work, and the Government before they finally commit themselves to this new scheme should have the results of the deliberations and experience of competent engineers. The Government have now very good engineers: I have a good deal of confidence myself in the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals who is a man of great experience, but he could not make a personal examination of that district himself, and he could not of course find time to have seen the place with his own eyes in order to make a report upon it. I might go further than that, and in order to show with what little precaution the Government has committed themselves to such a scheme, I may say that the engineer of the Beauharnois Canal, Mr. Parent, whom I see present to-day, has not even been consulted about it. He is a gentleman who knows more about this canal than any other engineer, because he has been in charge for eight or ten knows the nature of the land in that region, and although he knows more about it than any other engineer yet he never has been consulted.

Mr. TARTE. How is it?

Mr. BERGERON. I am just asking how it is; I am asking it in the name of the people whom I represent, and in my own name as a representative in the Parliament of Canada. If I am well informed, Mr. Shanly is the consulting engineer of the Government in the Department of Railways and Canals; he is the engineer who has supervised the construction of the Beauharnois Canal; he is the gentleman who has declared to the Government that the construction of the Beauharnois Canal on the south shore of the St. Lawrence was better than on the north shore-because at that time even there was a question of building the canal on the north shore—and it was under Mr. Shanly's advice as an engineer that the Beauharnois Canal was built in its present location. Now, if Mr. Shanley is the consulting engineer of the Government, why did not the Government, before committing the country to such an expenditure, before deciding upon the construction of that canal on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, have the opinion of their own engineers, of which Mr. Shanly is one. I would remind the House that in this matter I am not speaking for my own county only; I am not speaking for one county or two counties, but I am speaking in the interest of the whole country, and I say that there should be very convincing evidence before this work is undertaken as to whether it would be better to build a canal on the north or on the south shore. If Mr. Shanly is consulted, and if he reports in favour of the north shore, then I feel satisfied that everyone will come to the conclusion that it is the best site, and the most advantageous in the interests of the surrounding country, and in the interests of the whole Dominion. Until such report is made by a thoroughly competent engineer, the Government should hesitate before going on with this work.

Committee rose; and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Chairman, when the Committee rose at six o'clock, I had very nearly finished the few remarks I had to make. I had been trying to impress upon the Government the importance of putting before a board of engineers the reports of the different engineers who have been making surveys on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, and upon the Beauharnois Canal. I think it is most important not only to this side of the House, but to everybody here, that every precaution should be taken before we conclude to incur an expenditure of about $5,000,000, so as to make perfectly sure that we are acting in the best interests of the country. Now, I was glad to hear this afternoon from the acting Minister of Railways and Canalsand I know that when he said so he meant it—that the Government had come to the conclusion to build that canal on the north shore after having made careful surveys and examinations for years. years. He knows the course of the water, he this is just where I join issue with the Government,

I am under the very strong impression—and I say it as a friend of the Government—that careful surveys and examinations have not been made, as they have been reported to have been The engineer in charge of that work may have been a very good engineer; but, I believe there are more brains in three or four heads than in one; and when the Government are in a position to obtain the advice of the very best engineers, they should consult them before deciding upon a work of such a large dimensions. I see by the report of which I spoke this afternoon, that the Beauharnois Canal has cost $1,673,000. If the proposed canal is built on the north shore, taking for granted that the cost will be as much on one side as on the other, and that both will be equally good for purposes of navigation, the Government will be abandoning nearly $2,000,000 that have been spent in building the Beauharnois Canal and in keeping it in repair and inall the expenses connected with it.

Mr. MULOCK. What do you mean by abandoning?

Mr. BERGERON. Because, when the other canal is completed, the Beauharnois Canal will be perfectly useless for purposes of navigation; it will be abandoned by vessels, when the other is deepened to 14 feet, because the vessels will go by the canal on the north side. Now, the Minister said, this afternoon, that the Deputy Minister has said that they want to save money. That is quite natural; but I repeat what I said this afternoon, that, if they want to save money, my impression, and the impression of everybody who has been there and has no interest in the matter except the public interest, is that, by abandoning the south shore and going to the north shore, they will be involving the country in an expenditure of which they cannot see the end. They say it will cost $4,700,000. It is admitted that the Beauharnois Canal has cost $1,673,000. Now, the engineers do not know what this work will cost. There is only one who is at all in a position to know, and the others are speaking after him. Mr. Parent, the engineer of the St. Lawrence Canals, between Montreal and Valleyfield—the Lachine Canal and the Beauharnois Canal-has never mentioned anything about this matter to me: has never come to me and said that he would like to be consulted; but in a businesslike way I asked Mr. Parent one day—I may say it was after the elections: "Have you ever been consulted as to the line of the canal, as to putting it on the north shore?" Mr. Parent answering me, and he could not do otherwise, said: "No; I have never been consulted." Mr. Parent is the resident engineer who goes over the place every week, and who knows more about that river than any engineer in Ottawa. Now, the Government are undertaking an immense contract there, and incurring a great expenditure of money of which they do not see the end, upon the report of one engineer, who may know as much as he likes of engineering, but who does not know more than two or three engineers together; and the Government should not undertake that work before it is reported upon by a board of engineers. I ask this as a member of Parliament and as a citizen, because it is an immense amount of money that is going to be expended. They should also have the advice of their own consulting engineer, the old canal, it was a failure as a public work, and Mr. Shanly, in whom I have confidence, and in was put there for political purposes; and it has Mr. Bergeron.

whom the country has confidence. If this is done, whatever the choice may be, the people will see that every precaution has been taken. I hope the Government will take this matter into their serious consideration. It will be perfectly useless for me to ask anything more. I am speaking very earnestly and sincerely on the matter. I am not speak. ing for my constituents merely, but as a public man in the public interest, because this is an engineering question, and I hope that what I have said will be taken in good part.

Mr. GIBSON. When a great work of this kind is being undertaken, political discussion should be laid aside, and some attention should be given to the opinions of the gentlemen who have made examinations and surveys as to the merits and the demerits of the work. I might say that, as far back as 1887, in conversation with Mr. Page, then chief engineer of canals, he told me that, in his opinion, the north shore would be the most favourable and the most economical site on which to build this canal, and I am sure that the Government, in making the appointment of Mr. Munro for this purpose, selected him solely for his practical knowledge and the experience he has had in enlarging the old and new Welland Canals. As a practical man, I know well the difficulties to be encountered in operating the canal and at the same time enlarging it. When the hon member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) recommends that the canal be made on the south shore, he can hardly understand the difficulties that have to be encountered, because it was quite another matter to increase the depth of the new Welland Canal from 12 to 14 feet to increasing the depth of water in this canal, which is only 9 feet. The work would, therefore, be almost insurmountable, because to do that would close up navigation. There is another reason why the canal should be built on the north shore. It has got the depth of water required, and it is in the natural position because the deep water in the channel of Lake S. Francis is on the north shore, while to get into the Beauharnois Canal the river has to be crossed just above the rapids, which would be a constant source of danger to navigation, especially in the case of larger vessels. In addition to that the new canal will be built for $500,000 less on the new location; and even if the old canal were done away with, it could be used for manufacturing purposes, so that the country would be better supplied with two canals at $500,000 less money and have the old canal for manufacturing purposes. It is for Parliament to consider whether $500,000 is not worth saving, and at the same time not prevent the navigation of the St. Lawrence Canal system. Knowing Mr. Munro, as I do. for a number of years past, it is hardly fair for the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) to say that he has not given this matter careful consideration. That hon, gentleman seems to lay great stress upon the advice and opinion of Mr. Shanly. I think if he will apply to Mr. Shanly, he will find that he also advocates the north shore, and not only he, but also the Deputy Minister, Mr. Trudeau. Any practical man who knows anything about building canals could hardly do anything else. The hon. member for Beauharnois spoke with great respect of the old canal. If I understand anything about been a constant source of trouble by flooding that flat country, the Government having been compelled to pay damages caused by these floods to the extent of $4,000 to $5,000 in that vicinity. I am sure that if the County of Beauharnois extended to the north shore, we would never have heard anything about the improper location of the new canal.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. When I asked for the report of those engineers who surveyed the canal in Coteau Landing, in the County of Soulanges, I gave a description of all the disadvantages which were attributable to the deepening of the Beauharnois Canal at the time, and I advocated the advantages of the proposed north shore canal. Well, I see that amongst the objections made by the hon, member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) are the following: He says, first, that there are three rivers to be crossed by the new projected canal in Soulanges County. That is true, but he did not speak of the topography or the dimensions of those rivers. The first is a small river, what we call Rivière à la Graisse, a small rivulet, not wider than ten feet. The second one is La Rivière Rouge, about 40 feet wide; and the last one is Rivière de Lisle, about 60 feet wide. These are all the rivers to be crossed by the proposed canal, and they are no objection at all, as they will not augment the difficulties in building the canal, because only culverts will be If the hon, member for Beauharnois had studied a little the report of Mr. Monro, the civil engineer now surveying that proposed canal, he would have seen that in the County of Beauharnois there are three great difficulties, because there are three railroads there to be crossed by that canal, and we know the accidents to which navigation is exposed on this score while deepening a canal. Mr. Monro lays great stress upon these difficulties, which, he says, will augment the cost of enlarging the canal at Beauharnois, and he says the difficulties are very great, and such as will not be experienced on the north shore.

Mr. SCRIVER. Would not the north shore canal cross a railway?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. No; because the Grand Trunk Railway is just about half a mile from the banks of the River St. Lawrence. There is no railway at all to be crossed by the new canal.

Mr. SCRIVER. What about the Canada Atlantic Railway?

Mr. MOUSSEAU. Yes, that is the only one, near Coteau Landing. The hon. member for Beauharnois spoke about the civil engineers, and asked the Government to wait before voting this amount of $270,000. I do not see why they should wait. the question has been ventilated in every respect since twenty years. In 1872, 1873, and 1874 civil engineers were sent by the then Government, and all their reports were favourable to the County of Soulanges, north shore side. He spoke of the civil engineer, Mr. Parent. I must confess frankly that I do not know Mr. Parent, except by reputation, but I presume the science of Mr. Monro is equal to his, and that the Government has employed him because he is a good engineer. Mr. Monro, in his report, which is contained in the report of the chief engineer, and which was laid before the House on Wednesday last, did not rely solely on his own science and observations, but also upon the studies and observations of the civil engineers who surveyed that canal in 1872, 1873 and 1874. The report states: is what the Government engineer says:

"During the past two years there has been obtained by means of careful examination, detailed surveys and estimates of cost, conducted and furnished by Mr. Thomas Monro, an engineer of this department, a large amount of information in supplement to the data gathered on the subject in 1872-73 and 74, under the direction of Mr. John Page, chief engineer and Mr. G. F. Baillairgé, assistant chief engineer." chief engineer.

And it adds:

"These examinations have dealt with both the north and south shores of the St. Lawrence, covering all the practi-cal routes on either side. The earlier examinations were made with a view to a 12 feet navigation. Those of Mr. Monro apply to the enlarged scale of 14 feet."

We have not only this report given by the present Administration, but also the result of the investigation, not only of one or two, but judging from the length of time, of three or four engineers at least, and all speak of the difficulties to be found in enlarging the Beauharnois Canal. This is what it says again in reference to that canal:

"To enlarge a canal and at the same time to keep it open to navigation during the summer months is attended with great difficulties. The building of structures in the winter season should be avoided if possible. It would be preferable and less costly in most cases to build an entirely and separate work." tirely and separate work.

Then see what the report says as to the soil, compared between the north shore and the south shore:

"Referring to the borings made in the line of the channel at the Valleyfield entrance and also a line surveyed to Knight's Point, to the westward of the present entrance, as well as in the Beauharnois Canal itself, as far as St. Timothy, Mr. Monro says:—'The general character of the excavation may be described as consisting of layers of boulder stones and clay, overlying what appears to be a mixture of quicksand and clay, in varying proportions. In many cases the drill, after penetrating with difficulty the crust of boulders, stones, &c., went down freely to a depth of about 25 feet below low water mark, showing a soft and unreliable bottom. Experiments made with this material proved that it does not stand at any slope, howsoft and unreliable bottom. Experiments made with this material proved that it does not stand at any slope, however flat, under water. To attempt its removal to the depth required to obtain a channel suitable for a 14 foot navigation, in such a position, would be a formidable if not impracticable undertaking. The amount which would certainly slide in from the sides could not be even conjecturally estimated, whilst it might prove impossible to maintain the required depth at any cost. To keep vessels off the contiguous shoals in heavy weather, it would be advisable to protect the channel with piles or crib work, backed up by the excavation from the cut, but the cost of such a plan could not be approximately estimated."

So the hon, member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) sees that the report of the engineer is clear. He says it is almost impossible to deepen the Beauharnois Canal because of the nature of the soil, and, as I told the House, it is almost all stone in Beauharnois, whereas in Soulanges it is different. The whole of the soil in Soulanges is nothing but good You cannot find any stone or any boulders and it would cost very little if we compare the new work with the whole of the work on the Beauhar-The hon, member for Beauharnois spoke of his own canal as a thing that would be useless if it were left there, and you were erecting another on the north shore. The Beauharnois Canal would be very useful still, because the navigation is augmenting every year, and all the vessels of small tonnage could pass through that canal while all the large vessels could pass by the north shore canal. Besides that, I am sure the Government would derive good revenues from the present canal, because there are numerous and very important water powers there. I will read a part of the report affecting the advantages to be found if the Government completes the canal on the north shore. This

"Turning, then, to the alternative of a canal on the north shore, such undoubted advantages are presented that decision is inevitably led in this direction.

"These advantages may be summarized as follows:—

"The direct continuance on the north shore of the St. Lawrence Canal system and of the deep water channel of Lake St. Francis carries with it the avoidance of the double crossing of the River St. Lawrence above and below the three rapids named.

"The westerly crossing at the head of the rapid is one of danger, the risk being enhanced in the presence of a westerly wind sweeping down the lake.

"The western entrance to the proposed north side canal would be in a convenient, safe and easily approached bay—Macdonald's Bay.

"At this western entrance very little ice forms.

"The control to remine the proposed of the canal would be in a convenient, safe and easily approached bay—Macdonald's Bay.

"At this western entrance very little ice forms.
"The eastern terminus would also be favourably situated. The material to be excavated is mainly clay, and the engineering difficulties to be met with are few and of no serious character. The experience of several years has shown that the formation of ice is certainly no greater a barrier to navigation at this eastern entrance (the Cascades) than it is on the opposite south shore at the entrance of the present Beauharnois Canal.

As for the cost, there is a difference of about $1,000,000. That is to be considered by the Administration, because the saving of $1,000,000 is something, as we all know. I will read the conclusion of the engineer. The report further

"For the reasons above given, I cannot recommend that the new canal be constructed on the south shore, and I advise in general terms, after full consideration of the whole matter, that approval be given to the scheme for its construction on the north shore, by the route as shown on the plan proposed by Mr. Monro, between Macdonald Point, near Coteau Landing, and Cascades Point; subject to such modifications in detail as more preparable in the such modifications in detail as more preparable in the such modifications in detail as more preparable in the such modifications in detail as more preparable in the such modifications in detail as more preparable in the such modifications in detail as more preparable in the such modifications in detail as more preparable in the such modifications in the such modifications in the such modifications in the such models. to such modifications in detail as may appear desirable; the locks to be of the dimensions adopted for the enlarged canals of the Dominion, namely, 270 feet long and 45 feet wide, with a depth of water sufficient to pass vessels drawing fourteen teet. The width of the canal at the bottom would be 100 feet."

After having spoken of the disadvantages of the Beauharnois Canal, this is the conclusion to which Mr. Monro arrives :

Mr. Monro arrives:

"It will be observed, on reference to the general map, that the approach to the western entrance at Valleyfield from Lake St. Francis is embarrassed by shoal water outside not described, but which would probably add somewhat to the cost of constructing the channel there. There is also the additional objection of having to cross the strong current of the river at the head of the Coteau rapids in order to make the entrance of the Beaubarnois Canal from the north or deep water channel of Lake St. Francis with vessels drawing 14 feet, as in case of their becoming unmanageable in such position, serious results would probably ensue. But it is believed that a sufficient number of facts have been already cited to warrant the conclusion that it is clearly advisable under all the circumstances to construct a canal to join Lake St. Louis and Lake St. Francis on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence rather than to attempt the reconstruction of the present Beauharnois Canal."

Well, this honourable House ought to understand

Well, this honourable House ought to understand that the conclusion is very clear. The project has been studied under every aspect, and I think after what the engineer says about there being a difference of $1,000,000 between the two schemes, this House will be ready to vote $270,000 to begin the work as soon as possible, because it is in the interest of the country first, and that will be in the interest of the county I represent. Another question to be considered is the question of strategy. All our canals are built on the north side of the St. Lawrence, this is the only one built on the south shore. I am sure this House will have no objection to voting $270,000 to this canal.

Mr. BERGERON. I will say a word or two in answer to the hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken on this subject. I can understand that this question touches deeply my hon. friend to me to enquire about the Beauharnois Canal. Of Mr. Mousseau.

from Soulanges (Mr. Mousseau). It is his pet scheme, although he did not talk like that during the last election, because he was elected on the ground, as he said, that the Government would not build it there, and he assured the electors that the Government were humbugging them. I am glad to see that my hon. friend has more confidence in the Government now. He has read some reports of the engineers, and that is not surprising. I am not discussing the report of the engineer, because I am not an engineer myself, any more than my hon. friend, the doctor, is an engineer. But I have no doubt the Government have come to this conclusion upon the report of an engineer. The only thing I complain of is that they should accept the report of one engineer instead of laying it before a board of two three other engineers in order to have them supplement the first report. I do not think the Government would lose anything by doing so. The hon, member for Soulanges will not lose any, thing if the report of Mr. Monro is correct, and other engineers will say so. If the report of Mr. Monro was not correct, why, then, the country would save the money which it is now proposed to expend there. The member for Soulanges has repeated the same old story that I have heard for the last 15 years in the Counties of Beauharnois and Soulanges—although I do not wish to speak of this question from a local point of view. The hon. gentleman speaks about strategy. Well, he is supporting a party that wants to go hand in hand with the United States, that wants to have unrestricted reciprocity with them, and in that case I do not suppose it would make any difference on which side the canal was built; the American soldiers would not come into this country if that policy prevailed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to see that I have the approval of the hon, member for South Oxford, at any rate. My remarks seem to strike home. Now, the hon member for Soulanges has a very nice way of settling that engineering matter. He says we want two canals, a large canal for large vessels passing by my place, and a small canal for small vessels passing through your place. Now, I do not want to regard this question from any such point of view, I do not treat it from a political point of view. I carried my county by over 300 majority in spite of the Government saying they would build the canal on the north shore, and my friend Mr. Bain was beaten. These facts show that the location of the canal did not affect the political results. I am speaking about the canal purely from a business point of view. My hon, friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) has also taken a hand in this debate, although he comes from a district so far away; he takes a hand in it, not for the sake of Soulanges against Beauharnois, but because he looks upon it as a great public work. On some points, however, I differ from him. He says that in 1887 Mr. Page said that the canal should be built on the north shore, that that was the most natural place in which to build it. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have spoken to Mr. Page very often upon this question. Every hon, gentleman here may believe me when I say that I do not suppose a single week has passed since I have been in Parliament without some of my electors writing course, I cannot make every one of them understand it in the sense that I understand it, namely, as a work of great public utility for a large section of this country; naturally, some of them look upon it, like the hon, member for Soulanges, from a local point of view. I have frequently spoken about it to Mr. Page, and Mr. Page never said to me that it should be built on the north shore. I do not mean to say that he was bound to tell me what he thought about it. He never told me that it would be cheaper and better to build it on the north shore. Every time I have spoken to him about he answered me: "My dear sir, I do not know yet where we shall build it. We are merely taking measures and soundings, we are examining the engineering features of the undertaking to find out whether it would be better to build it on the north shore or the south shore." I put it to the good sense of the House—could Mr. Page, the chief engineer, say, in 1887, four years ago, that it would be better to build it on the north shore, when it was only last fall that the engineers decided to build it on the north shore? That would be equivalent to deciding the matter before studying it. That is what I am complaining of. I say it has been decided without examining it thoroughly; I say that the Government are going to spend, I fear, a million dollars before they find out that they are spending money uselessly. The hon, member for Lincoln said that if the Government deepened the Beauharnois Canal during the season of navigation it would greatly impede navigation. Well, we have the example of the Lachine Canal, which was deepened and enlarged in its old bed without impeding navigation very much, and that canal is one of the best constructed canals in Canada. The hon, member for Lincoln said something about rapids at the entrance to the The hon, gentleman is mistaken. I know the place very well, I have been there very often, and there are no rapids at the entrance of the Beauharnois Canal. There were rapids when the canal was first built and, as has been stated by some one, the engineers had to make a dam between Grand Isle and the mainland. But that work has been done, and it remains there to-day, and is not going to be taken away. I can appeal to my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) who knows the place well, and I am sure he can testify that there is no rapid at all at the entrance of the Beauharnois Canal, whereas, in order to enter the Soulanges Canal you have to take it a great deal higher than Coteau Landing, or else you will go straight into the rapids at the opening. The thing is perfectly clear to any one who is acquainted with the facts. I believe the hon. member for Lincoln knows little or nothing about it, he lives far away, and may never have passed there in his life, but I can assure him that there is no rapid at all at the head of the Beauharnois Canal. There might be some quicksand, however; on that point I am not so sure. There are engineers who say there is no quicksand, and others who hold a contrary view. There is just a little doubt, and I think the Government should see their way clear before going to this expenditure. the hon. member for Lincoln, in a patronising way, and supposing we look upon it from a local point of view, says that the people of Beauharnois need not complain, because, if the Government abandons that canal, we will have valuable wafer powers. I refrom a local point of view. Let me tell the hon, gentleman that so far as water powers are concerned we have water powers of great value in Valleyfield to-day, enough to run fifty factories if capitalists could be found willing to invest their money in constructing them. He says the Government will save half a million. He does not know anything about it. He speaks by the report of the engineer; but he does not know it of himself.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. More than that amount.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt the hon, gentleman is in favour of the Government saving money. I repeat the hon, gentleman speaks from the report of the engineer. It is that report I speak against; and I say it should be substantiated by other reports before we are bound to accept it. say so frankly, and I believe it, and I do not care who the engineer may be. The hon, gentleman says that Mr. Shanly has given a report in favour of it. The last time I spoke to Mr. Shanley he told me it was absurd to try to build a canal on the north shore. He was then a member of Parliament, and I do not know whether he has changed his mind or not, but I do not think he will deny he made the statement to me. So far as Mr. Trudeau is concerned, he takes the report of Mr. Monro. He may have confidence in Mr. Monro, and it is his right. But has Mr. Trudeau gone there and sounded the bottom of the river and examined whether it is rock and quicksand, or taken any measures to make a report? No. Mr. Trudean has not time to do it; and if he has made a report it is one based on the report of his engineer. It has been said the Beauharnois Canal was built for political reasons. That must have been a long time before I was born, and I will not discuss it. The canal is there; it is a good, sound, solid canal, as any engineer will say; and, as it is built there. I do not think its location should be changed except for very good and substantial reasons, reasons of economy, and reasons higher than the one brought forward to change the line of the canal. The hon, member for Soulanges (Mr. Mousseau) has said he is in favour of the report of Mr. Monro-I have not seen it—and he says that on the south shore the canal would have to cross three railways. If all Mr. Monro's report is like that part, it is not very accurate. There is only one railway crossing the canal, and it is the Canada Atlantic. The Grand Trunk comes on the other side of the canal. The Canadian Pacific Railway will pass ten or fifteen acres from the canal on the other side, and the new road that is being built will arrive by the line of the Canada Atlantic; and so there is only one railway crossing the canal. It is stated that this question has been ventilated for many years. I know that in the County of Soulanges-and I compliment the hon. gentleman on the fact—it has been discussed for years. He knows that, when he was a very good, solid Conservative, like I am now-doubt, and I think the Government should see their way clear before going to this expenditure. Now, the hon, member for Lincoln, in a patronising way, and supposing we look upon it from a local point of view, says that the people of Beauharnois need not complain, because, if the Government abandons that canal, we will have valuable wafer powers. I repeat again that we are not regarding this question way.

During the last election, when the Government came and said they would build a canal on the north shore, I did not believe it. The hon. member for Soulanges ran his election on the fact that it would not be built there. The hon, gentleman now says that is the best place, that it could not be built anywhere else and that it should be built there. I have spoken sincerely on this matter, and I hope the Government will look into it before pledging themselves to carry out the proposed south shore or the north shore does not affect me personally or my county. To be candid, I may say that if there were no canal in my county I would be the happiest of men. But the Government before spending four or five million are bound as trustees for the people to see that the best line is chosen, that no report of an engineer should lead them to build the canal unless they are perfectly satisfied, after every possible means of information have been exhausted, they are doing the best thing for the best interests of the country.

Mr. MULOCK. I should think that the member for Beauharnois would rather sympathize with the proposition for a canal on the north shore, for 'nothing would represent his political actions more than two canals, one on each side of the river. I remember very well the time when the hon, member thought he was a very bad Conservative. happen to have a book here dated 1891 which, speaking of his political record, describes him as an independent Conservative. He has budded out into a full-blooded Liberal-Conservative, and he will no doubt remain that so long as there is a majority on that side of the House. However, I did not rise to discuss the hon, gentleman's politics. He has properly said that we should discuss this question apart from politics, on the merits of the question. We agree that the trade of the country demands the completion of the canal system at the earliest possible date. We desire to have the canal of the capacity of the Welland Canal, and we could not proceed more safely than to place this question in the hands of an engineer who has done so much for the Welland Canal. I am sure the hon, member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) did not intend to reflect on the engineering skill of Mr. Monro.

Mr. BERGERON. I have said so.

Mr. MULOCK. Although the hon, gentleman said so, yet the tenor of his argument was against the report. So while in one sense he did not desire to reflect on the skill of the engineer, at the same time the whole burden of his song was that it was not a reliable report. In that case it should not be allowed for a moment to be a matter of doubt as to whether the engineer in question is or is not competent. He has been in the public service many years. His monuments are to be found along the whole of the canal system. A year or two ago a foreign nation sent its delegates to Canada to examine into our canal system, attracted by the reputation which so deservedly belongs to those great works and to the authors of them-I refer to the engineers who came here from Russia a year or two ago. Having returned, they made most flattering references to the high skill manifested in the building of the canal. In that case it is only fair that we should not by any possible omission in the course of this discussion detract from the merits of the contractors. We are | picious circumstance, in view of the fact that year Mr. Bergeron.

reminded by the hon, member for Soulanges (Mr. Mousseau) that this is not a new question, that an agitation has been going on for many years, that engineer after engineer has spoken in favour of the north shore, including Mr. Page, Mr. Baillairgé, and others; and when we have the only remaining point in the question, the engineering difficulties, decided for us, I fail to see what will be gained by further delay. If we are to have the canal, let us have it at the right place, and I believe we can Whether they build the canal on the have no better authority than one of the engineers who has taken charge successfully of our canal system for many years. If it could be shown that that engineer in his report has made any great mistake, or that his ideas would not be safe to follow, then I would agree with my hon. friend that it would be only prudent to delay; but, with such a record as there is, I fail to see that anything else would be accomplished except delay, and if a delay in the construction of the canal resulted in the loss of a constituency of the Government on the north side, further delay might result in the loss to the Government of a constituency on the south side. My hon, friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has no personal or political aim in view.

> Mr. BERGERON. None at all. The hon, gentleman cannot say as much himself.

> Mr. MULOCK. I have no interest except the public interest in the matter, and I surely can have no local interest. I must say that I was greatly impressed by the arguments that fell from the hon. gentleman who so well represents the constituency of Soulanges (Mr. Mousseau), and his analysis of the merits of the route reported on by the engineer, is certainly a very strong presentation of the case in favour of the adoption of that report.

> Mr. SCRIVER. I shall not detain the House with any very lengthened remarks, but I would like to be permitted to say that the south shore canal was adopted many years ago--quite within my recollection however-and after a very careful survey was made of both shores; a very careful survey extending over several years. Some hon, gentle-man has said to-night that it was adopted as the result of some political advantage, but I have no such recollection. On the contrary, I have a distinct recollection that it was adopted solely on engineering grounds. I have been for a good many years a member of this House, and scarcely a year has passed without this question having been agitated. was more agitated a few years ago when the late Mr. Lanthier, who was an enthusiast in regard to this question, one session after another, got up in this House and advocated the construction of the canal on the north shore. It is quite within my recollection that that gentleman, a man of great talent, a man who had made the question a subject of careful study, was the only one on the floor of this House who advocated earnestly and strongly the adoption of the north shore route. I think I am not mistaken in saying that Mr. Walter Shanly, who was for many years a member of this House, and who was perhaps better qualified than any other member of it to speak understandingly on this subject, never advocated the change from the south shore to the north shore. I cannot speak, of course, from an engineering point of view, and I have not examined the report of the engineer on this question, but it does seem to me rather a sus-after year for many years past the Conservative Administration in this House never listened to the representations of the gentleman who formerly represented Soulanges; that at this particular junction of affairs, when Beauharnois County seems to have been quite secured to the Conservative party, and when, as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has said, it returned him at the last election by a triumphant majority, while at the same election the Conservative Administration lost the Counties of Vaudreuil and Soulanges on the north shore—it does seem to me as though there might be some political question involved in the proposal to now construct the canal on the north There may be some hope on the part of the Administration of the day that by proceeding with the construction of this canal, they may restore to their ranks the lost Counties of Soulanges and Vaudreuil. At all events such a suspicion seems quite natural under the circumstances. But, to a man taking a common sense view of the matter, the fact that there is now available to the trade of this country, -a canal itistruedrawing only nine feet of water—a canal, as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has said, which is substantially and well constructed, and which is doing the trade of the country satisfactorily; would seem to indicate that it is an uncalled for expenditure to construct a canal on the north shore. The objections mentioned by my friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), that there is some difficulty experienced by vessels entering the canal are not real, as my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) stated. There is no difficulty at all for the entering the canal at its western opening. The question of the damages to land west of the opening of that canal caused by the erection of the dam, is one of no importance, because these damages were settled long ago. As to the question of what my friend from Soulanges called "strategy," the proximity of the canal to the American border is certainly not a question worth considering in this day of railways. I have said that the canal in existence now is quite sufficient for the trade of the country. I may say, that ever since the completion of the Canada Atlantic Railway, I have been in the habit of crossing the canal on that railway twice a week, and often four times a week, and the train by which I was travelling has never within my recollection been more than three of four times detained, waiting for a vessel to pass. That fact would seem to evidence that there is no great pressure of traffic on that canal. I agree with my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), that the Government should not proceed to take the important step of commencing this work, without further engineering advice than is before it now.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but I think I am in duty bound to give to the Committee the reasons why the Government have adopted this course, and the reasons why the north shore has been selected as the proper place in which to construct the enlarged canal. There would be much force in the arguments of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), so eloquently and forcibly urged as they were, if only one engineer had inspected, or given an opinion upon the question; but when it is remembered the last twenty years, every session in this House, | the fact that the electors, many of them, for the both from an engineering and commercial standpoint, it can scarcely be considered that it is a new project. The engineers who have given an opinion as to the propriety of the construction of the enlarged canal on the north shore are, first: Mr. Page, who had a strong opinion on this question; Deputy Minister Baillairgé is also in its favour. Trudeau, the present deputy head of the department and the chief engineer of canals, has also expressed a decided and strong opinion in favour of the project. It has been stated that Mr. Monro is the only engineer who has investigated this question and made a report upon it. It must be remembered that Mr. Monro is an engineer of some eminence in this country, that he has been employed on the most difficult and important works that have been constructed by the Government of Canada, that he is mainly responsible for the location and construction of the enlarged Welland Canal. So important did the department consider his services, and so eminently qualified did they regard him for the work in which he had been engaged, that they selected him from the whole staff of engineers who are now or have been in the employment of the Government, to send him to England to investigate and report upon the construction of that important canal which is now being built from Liverpool to Manchester. Anyone who has taken the trouble to look at that report will, I think, come to the conclusion that he is a gentleman whose opinion should at least be respected on a question of this kind. Now, I am a little surprised at the statements made in reference to the opinions held by Mr. Shanly. I need not say to this House or to Canada that if there is one engineer or one public man in Canada in whose opinion there is more confidence placed than in another's by all classes of the community, no matter what their political opinions may be, it is Mr. Shanly. Before coming to the House yesterday, I had the pleasure of a long conversation with Mr. Shanly on this subject, and one of the first expressions he gave utterance to was that the Beauharnois Canal should be on the north shore. I asked him then his opinion upon the propriety of constructing the enlarged canal upon the north shore in preference to enlarging the one on the south shore, familiarly known as the Beauharnois Canal. He gave a number of reasons why he was in favour of the north shore, and among them was this important one: He said it would be one of a continuous line of canals all the way down the river, that it was more easy of access, and what is of no little importance, and what was pointed out also by the hon, member for Lincoln, that it would cost less and be a much better canal than the Beauharnois Canal, if enlarged. Now, I do not know that it is necessary for me to refer to the remarks made by my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) as to the reasons that might possibly have induced the Government to take the course they have. He charitably intimates that as the constituencies of the north shore were lost to the Government at the last election, the Government have adopted this policy in order to, I suppose—to use the familiar expression which is bandled about so freely now—to bribe the electors in those counties. hon. gentleman might give us this credit at least, that, having come to the conclusion to construct a that this is a question that has been discussed for new canal on the north shore, notwithstanding reason indicated by the hon, member for Beauharnois, thought proper to express want of confidence in the Government, the Government intend faithfully to carry out the project upon which they had decided before the electors in any of those constituencies had given expression to their opinion. It is too much the habit, in discussing important questions of this kind, to attribute political and unworthy motives to the Government. was rather pleased with the remark made by my hon, friend from Lincoln, because, though a strong party man, he expressed the opinion freely that in discussing a question of so much importance to this country, we should rise, at least for the moment, above the paltry tactics to which too many men are apt to resort. One of the last men in the House from whom I would expect these tactics is my hon. friend from Huntingdon, with whom I ment could not by any possibility, having in view have had the pleasure of associating in this House for the last twenty years; and let me hope that as he grows older he will display more charity and less party feeling in discussing a matter of this kind. Now, I do not intend to detain the Committee at any length. After having given the opinions of the most eminent engineers in Canada, in favour of the course adopted by the Government, I propose to give a few more reasons, and then leave the House to decide whether the course pursued by the Government is the correct one or not. I do not blame my hon, friend from Beauharnois for the course he is pursuing. On the contrary, I believe it is the duty of every member to give utterance to his conscientious opinion as to the best course to be pursued in the interest of the country. I would not like to accuse my hon. friend from Huntingdon of taking the course he does because he lives on the south shore, and because the Beauharnois Canal is nearer to his constituents than the one on the north side of the St. Lawrence would be. That would be uncharitable, and I would not think of doing it. I take for granted that his motives are as pure in expressing the opinions he has, as if he had spoken on the other side. Now, according to the reports and the conclusions arrived at by those whose opinions we must adopt on this question, I find that this canal is located on the north shore of the St. Lawrence between Coteau Landing and Cascade Point, and that it is to give 14 feet of navigation on the north shore for over $500,000 less than it would cost to enlarge, or rather, reconstruct the Beauharnois Canal. Of course, my hon. friend from Beauharnois says that is only conjectural-that the expense may be much greater. I am not prepared to say that it may not; but I am taking the calculations that have been made by the engineers after they have carefully studied the question of the relative cost on the two sides of the river.

Mr. MOUSSEAU. It will be less than that

I am quoting the figures Mr. BOWELL. which have been given by the engineers. afterwards give the figures to show that the opinion expressed by the hon, gentleman is correct if the engineers' estimates are carried out. In the second place, it will be a much more natural line, because it is the continuation inland of the deep water channel of Lake St. Francis, which is on the north side. The report says:

"The ground on the north shore is so favourable for an inland line that there is, to all intents and purposes, practice without hearing a little squeak the hon. gentleman with reference to himself.

tically a straight line through and therefore it can be passed through by large vessels at the maximum speed possible in a canal. The harbours at both ends, which is an important point, are both good and that at the west end is remarkably good."

I find the calculations made as to the con-struction of this canal on the south shore is $5,700,000 as the cost of one of the routes. On the north shore, the cost is estimated at $4.750,000, showing an actual saving, if the calculations be correct, of $950,000. But if the other plan which has been suggested on the south shore be taken, that would reduce the expenditure by $250,000, leaving a difference between the two propositions of $700,000. These are the reasons which have been presented to the Government by the engineer whose special duty it was to make these investigations and locate the canal, and with these facts before them the Governthe general interests of the country and the economical construction of these works, take any other course.

Mr. BARRON. Has anything more to be done on the south side to make the canal navigable?

Mr. BOWELL. It is already navigable.

Mr. BARRON. Is there any canal at present on the north shere?

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know if the Deputy Minister can advise us whether we may expect the same enormous disproportion between the estimated and actual cost of new canals, as we have found, to our sorrow, has existed in connection with other public works, even erected within a stone's throw of this build-Can the deputy tell us whether he expects he can keep within the estimate?

Mr. BOWELL. Those who have the honour and pleasure of knowing the Deputy Minister know that as a rule he is non-committal, and his answer is that he hopes not. The hon, gentleman will admit that the estimates with regard to the canal on the south shore are just as apt to be below the mark as those which apply to the north shore.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I admit that. Is it much shorter on the north shore?

Mr. BOWELL. It is about the same length.

Mr. BARRON. In view of the promises made by the other side with regard to the Trent Canal, it would be much better to spend this money in building that canal rather than in providing a canal on the north shore of the river when there is one already on the south side, and a part of the Trent Canal would run through the hon, gentleman's constituency.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, gentleman is more accurate with respect to figures, I hope, than he is with regard to the geography of the country. Trent canal does not run through one foot of my constituency.

Mr. BARRON. You are interested in it.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not half the personal interest the hon gentleman has, but it would be strange if we could get through a discussion on any canal subject without hearing a little squeak from Murray Canal...... $50,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has been the total cost so far?

Mr. BOWELL. Up to the 31st of December, 1890, it cost $1,418,193.84.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is it estimated to cost, when completed?

Mr. BOWELL. $50,000 are required to settle with the contractors and to complete and fully equip the canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was some apprehension, at one time, that some portion of the canal would pass through quicksands or that the banks were in danger of caving in.

Mr. BOWELL. They have been found not to exist. There is no quicksand, nor have the banks caved in, but there was an additional expenditure which was not anticipated, in consequence of one portion of the canal having struck the rock before reaching the bottom.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the difference between the estimate and the actual cost?

Mr. BOWELL. The original estimate was about $850,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the actual cost has been $1,600,000.

Mr. BOWELL. The estimate was for a less depth, and it was afterwards decided to deepen, in order to enable vessels navigating the lake to pass down the Bay of Quinté.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What depth is it now?

Mr. BOWELL. It is 12½ feet at the lowest water.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have the engineers secured an equal depth in the Bay of Quinté all through? Is the Bay of Quinté channel deepened to 12½ feet, or is that left over?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that the channel is 12 feet at the lowest point. As the hon, gentleman knows, at Telegraph Islands west of Deseronto is one of the shallowest parts of the bay, and it is also shallow up near Niggar Island. I was informed by the captain of a vessel from Dalhousie the other day that he found plenty of water in the bay, more than 12 feet, and quite sufficient for vessels navigating the lake.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know the river steamers use it. What receipts, if any, are obtained? I suppose some tolls are charged?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is opened, is it not?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; over 1,000 vessels passed through last year, and I believe they are more numerous this year. I had a statement of receipts and expenditures, and I think I read it the other day. Last year 1,008 vessels passed through.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What would the tolls be, roughly estimated?

Mr. BOWELL. The tolls are regularly collected upon the canal, and the only vessels that pass through free are in pursuance of the system of allowing steamers to pass free when they go on excursions for church purposes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And I suppose also for societies of a kind that may be described as educating the people in the way they should go in the direction of brotherly love?

Mr. BOWELL. On the 12th July, you mean? Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; does that apply?

Mr. BOWELL. The permission does not apply to that or to the Odd-Fellows or the Free-Masons.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not suspect the hon, gentleman of making any exception. He speaks of 1,000 vessels. That may mean little or much. The vessels of the Richelieu and Ontario Company pass that way going up to Toronto, but I do not think they do going down. Still they pass a great many times in the course of the season, and a very pretty sight it is, as the hon, gentleman knows, but I suppose a great many of the 1,000 would consist of passenger craft passing backwards and forwards a great many times.

Mr. BOWELL. It would have been more correct had I said that vessels had passed through 1,000 times. I did not mean 1,000 vessels.

Trent Canal—Construction of lock and improvement of navigation between Lakefield and Balsam Lake.. $74,000

I do not intend this evening to take up the time of the House by discussing this at great length, but on a future occasion, I hope this session, we may devote three or four hours at least to discussing the merits and demerits of this I see the hon, member for West Petercanal. borough (Mr. Stevenson) and the hon, member for East Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) in their seats, and I would ask them to note the fact and tell their constituents when they go back, that it has been announced to-night by the acting Minister of Rail ways and Canals that the Government intend, at a cost of four or five millions, to build a canal on the north side of the St. Lawrence River when there is one on the south side which is still apparently available, and yet they will not put a dollar in the Estimates for the construction of the Trent Valley Canal. I particularly call the attention of the hon, members for East and West Peterborough and of the hon, member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) and of the hon, member for South Victoria (Mr. Fairbairn) to the fact that the Government are entering upon the work on the St. Lawrence to which I have referred, and will not vote a solitary cent for the Trent Valley Canal, that work which has been time and time again promised-it is true just before a general election-to the people in the Midland district of the Province of Ontario. But I do not propose to-night to discuss this matter at any I want to draw the attention of the Govlength. ernment to the fact that for five successive sessions I have pointed out that at Fenelon Falls, north of the lock, the bridge remains as it always has done. I ask the Minister now what is going to be done about it? There is a lock at Fenelon Falls which has cost between $250,000 and $300,000. It is a very excellent lock, it is true. Good work was done there. A lockmaster has been employed year after year at Fenelon Falls, and the receipts last year were just $35.60, and the reason for that has been that for all these years since that lock was built, a bridge has been left across the river at one end of the lock, absolutely preventing any navigation whatsoever through that lock. The Government cannot plead ignorance of the matter. They cannot even say they have not received information from other quarters than their own engineers, because time and time again has their attention been brought to the fact that that bridge remains there and renders the lock impassable for craft of any kind except row boats. Their own engineer, in his last report, says, speaking of Fenelon Falls:

"This part of the route cannot be used until the swing is placed in the railway bridge at the upper entrance of the lock."

Are you, I ask again for the hundredth time, going to leave the bridge there as it always has been, or are you going to have something done to benefit the people by making use of the lock and the canal which you have built there at the enormous expenditure of between $250,000 or $300,000? Now, I understand that the Government are anxious to do something to make that water navigable, to make the lock beneficial to the people so as to enable them to go up and down from one lake to another. But they are cheeseparing about this business; they are willing to give something to the Grand Trunk Railway, and let the Grand Trunk put in a swing bridge. I tell the Government there is no use talking about a swing bridge. A swing bridge there would not be safe, it would be impossible by reason of cur-But they must make some arrangement with the Grand Trunk by which that bridge is removed entirely and the railway is put south of the lock where the banks on either side of the river are high enough to enable vesse - v o go underneath a railway bridge there constructed. Now, there may be a question of law involved in this matter, and I wish the Minister of Justice were here to dis-But it seems to me that where there is a non-navigable river made navigable by the Government, the Government then might require, by law, that any obstruction should be removed; but that the Government be at the expense of removing the obstruction, which in the case under discussion might be an expense of $50,000 or $60,000. I understand this proposition to be perfectly sound and good law, and I say that the Government to-day cannot escape liability for the removal of this obstruction. But to go and say they will give the Grand Trunk some $10,000 or $15,000 to put in a swing bridge, will not answer the purpose, because a swing bridge will be unavailable, and besides, will be always dangerous, and I understand the Grand Trunk for these reasons contend they very properly refuse to put in a swing bridge. Now, I want to draw the attention of the Minister again to the fact that they have been paying a lockmaster several years a salary of $250 or $300, and the receipts last year were only $35.60. The fact of allowing these receipts to be so small, is militating against the reputation of the route, because people do not understand that the reason why the receipts are so small is that the route is made impassable by reason of this bridge. I would, therefore, like the Minister to say what is the intention of the Govern: ment in regard to that bridge. I would like him to say if it is the intention of the Government to make any arrangement with the Grand Trunk at once, because he will remember that every session this matter has been brought to his hon gentleman prepared to go to his constituents, attention, and the same time-worn promise has or is he prepared to go into East and West Peter-Mr. BARRON.

been made that they would see about it. But that has been going on for five years now, and we are just where we began. Surely the Minister must see how unwise and vicious the Government's policy is—to go to the enormous expense of putting a lock there, having the entire system of navigation on a long line of internal waters interfered with and absolutely destroyed by reason of this bridge. Now, their own report year after year has told them that there are many vessels in the upper waters wanting to come down into the lower waters, and are prevented from coming down by reason of this obstruction. Contracts have been entered into by different people, which they have been unable to fulfil by reason of this obstruction, they expecting that the Government would do its duty in the premises, but I am sorry to say they have been depending upon a broken reed-depending, at all events, upon promises which have always been broken. No wonder the people feel indignant at the Government for the course they have pursued. After the Minister has thought fit to answer these remarks, I shall ask him some more questions with regard to this route.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, gentleman prefaced his remarks by stating three or four times that he intended to take some future opportunity to devote two or three hours to this question. He has now discussed it with general condemnation, as he is wont to do every time that he addresses the House upon this subject. If it were not uncharitable, I would say that the hon. gentleman is more interested in the political effect which he thinks he can accomplish by the course he is pursuing, than he is desirous for the construction of the canal. That may be uncharitable, still, if it were not unparliamentary, I should be inclined to say so; but as it is unparliamentary for me to make such an insinuation, I refrain from doing it. Still, his language and his reasoning are such as would naturally lead anyone to that inference. The question of the navigation of the Trent Canal has been before the country for a great many years, and I hope the hon, gentleman will live long enough, as I hope myself to live long enough, to see it constructed. I remember very well in my boyhood reading of the Murray Canal project. At that time there was scarcely an election, nor has there since been an election, in which that was not a plank in the platform of the person who sought the suffrages of the people on the Bay of Quinte and in the County of Northumberland. I have the pleasure of knowing that the work has been completed, and it requires very little more to make it produce the good results that we anticipate from it. But the hon. gentleman will excuse me if I tell him that the statement he makes in reference to the project of building the Beauharnois Canal, is entirely unfair-I was going to use a stronger expression; but it appears to me the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) has forgotten, or intentionally omits to state, the fact that there is one grand project of increasing the canal accommodation from Lake Superior in the west down to the sea board, and that the $5,000,000 to which he has specially called the attention of the members for Peterborough East (Mr. Burnham) and West (Mr. Stevenson) is part of the expenditure on that great scheme. Is the borough and tell the electors-because they are reasonablemen, they are men of commonsense—that we should spend no less a sum than $16,000,000 in the enlargement of the Welland Canal, when we are about to expend some $3,000,000 on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, and that to render them available for the purposes for which that expenditure has been made, we must increase the depth of water in all the canals until we reach the sea board? Yet we have an hon, gentleman calling the attention of the representatives of the people, and more particularly of the representatives from the constituencies more immediately interested, to the fact that we are spending $5,000,000 upon the enlargement of the Beauharnois Canal on the south, or $4,600,000 in the construction of a new canal on the north shore, when we refuse a dollar to the enterprise in which he is interested. I do not know whether the hon, gentleman thinks this House is so stupid as not to understand the absurdity of the proposition that he has laid before it. The hon. gentleman says that this canal to which he has referred, and in which he is so deeply interested, will cost four or five million dollars, or a sum equal to that we are expending on the enlargement of the Beauharnois Canal, or the construction of a new canal on the north shore. The proposition now before the country in regard to the completion of the Trent Valley Canal is to obtain a depth of water from Georgian Bay to Bay of Quinté of 5½ feet. What are the facts in connection with the estimates, apart altogether from the merits of the scheme? The hon, gentleman says it is going to cost only four or five millions. I have before me Mr. Page's estimates for works not yet commenced, and it is $9,984,000 for a five feet and a-half canal on the route to which I have referred. Mr. Rubidge esigmates it at $8,864,500. I could give, if it were deeined advisable, the estimated cost of the different sections with which the hon. gentleman is perhaps as well acquainted as I am; but if we are to adopt the theory mentioned by the hon, member for Oxford, these estimates may prove a long way below the actual cost. However, I do not intend to enter into a full discussion of the question to-night, and I would not have said so much had the hon. gentleman attempted to make political capital out of it, rather than argue the merits of the work itself. The only practical point to which he called attention was that of a lock and that of the bridge. I admit frankly that there has been a great deal of delay, and I may say unnecessary delay, in accomplishing the object which he and those interested have in view, and that is in having a bridge, whether a swing bridge or not, or the Grand Trunk should change its line and cross the river at another point to be determined hereafter. But I can assure the hon, gentleman during the short time I have been in charge of the department I have taken active measures in connection with this bridge to insist on the Grand Trunk Railway doing that which we believe the law compels them to do, and which they deny their liability to do. That which they deny their liability to do. That work will be completed at as early a day as possible. If there is anything necessary to make the locks available for the purpose for which they were constructed, this item in the estimates will be quite sufficient to accomplish the object we have in view. Of course, I defer to the superior He knows further that the Grand Trunk Company knowledge and engineering skill of the hon. mem- have strongly insisted that they would not allow a ber for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) who shakes his head. If he would confine himself to shaking that intellectual head and not using his tongue, the House would be convinced of the very great wisdom it contains. But the engineer whose duty it is to inform Ministers on this question, tells me, and no one knows better than the engineer who is on my left, that this sum is ample to accomplish what the hon, gentleman has in view, that the bridge, if we are obliged to construct it, will be made available and some of the boulders and obstructions which now exist in those portions of the river and lake at present navigable, removed. We will be quite prepared to have a tilt with the hon, gentleman if he desires it on some future occasion, but let us discuss this question on its merits apart from political advantages to be derived from

Mr. BARRON. The Minister undertakes to give me a lecture-

Mr. BOWELL. Why not, you gave me one.

Mr. BARRON,—because I found fault. Yet he admits there has been a great deal of delay and of unnecessary delay.

Mr. BOWELL. I said unnecessary delay. I did not repeat it.

Mr. BARRON. He wonders that I rose after five years, asking that the people's rights be recognized, and showed a little warmth at the delay which he himself admits should not have taken place, and which he characterized as unnecessary delay.

That is in regard to the Mr. BOWELL. bridge.

Mr. BARRON. As regards the rest of the route, he says there has been a great deal of delay.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say so.

The hon. gentleman referred to Mr. BARRON. my intellectual appearance. Perhaps I am not very intellectual in appearance, but at all events I am quite willing to allow my appearance in regard to intellectuality, to stand side by side with that of the acting Minister of Railways. As regards this particular work, the acting Minister of Railways knows so little about it that he says $74,000 in the Estimates will be quite sufficient to do all we ask to be done, to secure free navigation from Balsam Lake down.

Mr. BOWELL. I said nothing of the kind. I referred to the bridge and the lock.

Mr. BARRON. The hon, gentleman knows so little about the matter that he is not aware that the only obstruction from Balsam Lake down is the bridge. Moreover, he should have stated what the law is in connection with it. The liability is upon the Government here to do the work necessary to make the river navigable and remove the bridge. If he knew anything about his duties as acting Minister, he would be aware that when a higher power makes a river navigable, which in its natural state is non-navigable, that Government has to bear all the expense in making navigable that which was non-navigable. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the Government dare not put up a swing bridge because it would be exceedingly dangerous.

swing bridge there. Yet the hon, gentleman was not sufficiently candid to tell the House that the Grand Trunk Company had refused to allow a swing bridge there, and that the only way to get over the difficulty was to have the railway cross the river below the locks. Yet the hon, gentleman undertook to lecture me, because, in my zeal to see the canal built, I waxed a little warm in the interests of my constituents. The hon, gentleman claimed that I showed no knowledge of the subject. Much respect as I have for the hon, gentleman, I know much more about the work than does the acting Minister. He has told the House that the cost of the Trent Valley Canal is to be $10,000,000, according to Mr. Rubidge. But he was not candid enough to state that a large portion has already been spent. I venture to say that the hon, gentleman does not know how much has been spent.

Mr. BOWELL. I stated it was for works not already commenced.

Mr. BARRON. The estimate of Mr. Rubidge was $8,685,000, of which there have been expended $1,600,000, leaving a balance of $7,585,000, instead of $8,685,000, which the acting Minister would lead the House to believe was the estimate of the cost of work to be done. Now, Sir, we know, too, that these locks have been very expensively built. Year after year the Government have been promising that this Trent Valley Canal should be built, and quite lately they shielded themselves behind a commission; they wanted to have delay take place, in order that they might excuse themselves to the people to whom they were making promises that this canal should be built, and so they had a commission appointed to investigate the matter. That commission reported in reference to the locks as follows :-

"The attention of the commissioners has been called to the width of the locks at present completed. There are twelve of these, 134 feet long by 33 wide. For modern locks this width is very great in proportion to the length. They are of the same size as those on the Rideau Canal. The latter, however, were built to accommodate sidewheel vessels, which at this day is not necessary to use. The commissioners suggest that a width of 23 feet would be sufficient."

I would ask the attention of the Minister to this particular fact, that the commissioners reported that the width of the locks already constructed is too wide, and that the locks themselves are too expensively built, and we find that by adopting the suggestion of the commissioners, there would be a saving of $20,000 on each of the 71 locks still to be built, or a saving of $1,420,000. Then regarding the class of work which the commissioners suggest should not be so good as it has been, there would be a saving of $2,000,000. We find, therefore, that according to the commissioners, appointed by the Government to investigate this Trent Valley Canal project, there would be a saving in all of $3,420,000, thus reducing Mr. Rubidge's figures to $4,125,000, instead of the $8,000,000 odd dollars which the Minister would like this House to believe would be the cost of the works already to be constructed. a very curious coincident, and I would ask the House to notice it, that the reduction of Mr. Rubidge's figures by reason of carrying out the proposition made by the commissioners, would make the ultimate cost of the canal $4,125,000, and I would ask the Minister to note the fact that these figures almost correspond with the estimate of Mr. Starke, another Government engineer. When the Mr. BARRON.

Minister told us that this canal was going to cost $8,000,000 odd on Mr. Rubidge's estimate why did he not tell us that Mr. Starke, another engineertheir own engineer-had estimated that the cost would be $$3,\bar{2}00,000$ to complete the canal. I would ask the Minister to note that if the changes suggested by the commissioners in their report were adopted Mr. Starke's figures would almost correspond with the reduced figures of Mr. Rubidge, if the suggestions made by the commissioners were carried out. The Minister undertakes to lecture me for showing some anger, as I think he called it, in regard to this matter, and he attributes to me that I cannot discuss any question of this kind, without showing political motives. I think the Minister has already been told to-night that there are others in this House who can show political motives. The hon, member who sits beside me. (Mr. Scriver) told the Minister himself a few moments ago, that possibly the Government might be desirous of building the Beauharnois Canai on the north side of the River St. Lawrence, for political I do not say that is so; but, in the meanwhile, the hon. Minister ought to be careful in charging me with political motives. If political motives have been shown by anybody in this House, I think I may say they have been shown by the gentlemen occupying the Treasury benches, because the very moment that I became member for North Victoria, the work on the Trent Valley Canal ceased all through my riding, and from that time to the present not a dollar has been spent towards the great end in view, because the people of North Victoria—if I am to attribute political motives -returned an opponent of the Government. though all the facts show that political motives have been characteristic of hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House, yet because, anxious as I amfor the construction of the canal, I show some warmth at the unnecessary delay which the Minister himself admits has taken place, he rises in his seat and accuses me of political motives. I say that the fact that work has ceased in my riding since I was elected, tends to show political motives on the other side of the I am zealous in the interest of my con-House. stituents as I always shall be, and I hope I am zealous also in the national interest, but I am bound to point out that if political motives are to be attributed, that they may with more reason and justice be attributed to the members of the Government who have stopped work on the Trent Valley Canal in my county since my constituents returned an opponent of the Government. I have a right also to find fault with this Government for not keeping faith with the people interested in the Trent Valley Canal. Let me read to this House a telegram which was sent by the late leader of the Government just prior to the last election. Mr. Murphy, of Trenton, was very anxious, in the interest of the Government opposite, that the constituencies should return supporters of the Government, and he telegraphed to the late Premier about the Trent Valley Canal, and what was the reply which he received? I will read it to the House, ipsissima verba. The telegram says:

"Kingston, 3rd March, 1891.

"To D. R. MURPHY, Trenton.

"The Trent Valley Canal Commission having reported favourably on the completion of the scheme, Parliament will be asked in the Estimates next session for a grant for the purpose.

(Signed) "JNO. A. MACDONALD."

That telegram was sent on the 3rd March and the elections took place on the 5th March. challenge hon, gentlemen opposite to deny that that telegram was sent, and if they do deny it, I ask the hon, member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) and the hon, member for East Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) to get up in their seats and state, if a telegram of which I have read a copy, was not read at a public meeting in the town of Peterborough, at which they were both present. I have read a copy of that telegram; the original was read at a public meeting in the town of Peterborough; and what does it say? That the Trent Valley Canal Commission have reported favourably on the scheme, and that Parliament will be asked next session to vote a grant for the purpose—that is, this session. And yet the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals gets up and lectures me for showing some Here is a pledge made by the late Premier that Parliament would be asked for a grant for the building of this canal, and we find that not one dollar for it is in the Estimates. I complain, not that their promises made year after year have been broken, but that the promise made two or three days before the elections has been broken and disregarded. Do they not know that they carried constituency after constituency by these promises? Does not the hon, member for East Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) know that men asked him about the prospects of the construction of the Trent Valley Canal, and that he told them on the faith of that promise: "Yes, the canal is going to be built." And yet, when I tell the Government that their promises are broken, that the people have been deceived right and left, the acting Minister gets up and lectures me for showing some little warmth, because he is my senior in age. I say I am justified in showing some warmth on this occasion, because the whole history of the Government has been one of deception, of broken promises, of broken faith with the people-promising year after year before the elections that the canal would be built, but forgetting their promises as soon as the elections are over. Yet they propose to expend about the same amount of money that would build the Trent. Valley Canal, in order to construct a canal on the north side of the St. Lawrence, when they have one already on the south side of the river. Therefore I have a right to show some warmth, and any hon. gentleman would do the same thing if he found that his people had been deceived and the public money wasted; and I hurl back the insinuation made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that I have shown undue warmth and zeal, or that I have been actuated by improper motives in this

Mr. BOWELL. After that magnificent speech, would the hon, gentleman say whether I correctly understood him to say that some $4,000,000, had been spent, and that the original estimate of Mr. Rubidge was $8,685,000?

Mr. BARRON. I said that it was $8,685,000, and that there had been expended already, $1,100,000, leaving $7,585,000 of Mr. Rubidge's esti nate.

Mr. BOWELL. Will the hon. gentleman kindly say where he got these estimates?

Mr. BARRON. They were furnished by an engineer, James N. Irvine, who takes them from

Mr. BOWELL. I may tell the hon. gentleman that those figures, like his speech, are incorrect. The expenditure up to December, 1890, was $750,467.98.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am glad that the hon. member for North Victoria has taken this particular project under his wing, and is giving it his assistance. I am not certain, from the tenor of his remarks, whether he is taking this interest in the subject, on account of political advantage that may accrue to him and his party, or on other grounds. At all events this particular work is one of considerable interest to the constituency which I represent, and to which the hon, member for North Victoria has referred on several occasions. The hon. gentleman has referred to the attitude of myself, and the hon, member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) in this matter. Now, I do not propose to find any fault with the Government because they propose to expend between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000, for a canal on the north side of the St. Lawrence river, because I consider that that work is necessary if we are going to have the Trent Valley The commerce that would come down the Canal. Trent Valley Canal must necessarily use the St. Lawrence canals; and if the whole system is to be carried out, we who are interested in the Trent Valley Canal are perfectly satisfied with that ex-I understood the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) that he would bring this matter up on some other occasion, and it appears that now he has had all the discussion he proposes to have on the question. Speaking of the cost of the canal, he refers to Mr. Rubidge's estimate of about $8,000,000, and I think the hon. gentleman is right in saying that the work can be constructed for a very much less sum, because the works now constructed are stated by the commissioners in their reports to be unnecessarily expen-There could probably be saved $2,000,000. That, I understand, is what the hon, member for North Victoria refers to when he speaks of the saving that could be effected on the estimate made by the engineer. Now, I do not propose to go into a discussion of the merits of this canal. I understand that we shall have an opportunity on a future occasion to discuss the question in this House; but I must say that we feel that the Government have pledged themselves to the construction of this work. Its merits may not be generally known to the members of this House, and I hope we shall have an opportunity again to bring the subject more fully before the House. At all events, the telegram that was read by the hon. member for Victoria, I think, stated the position in which the Government stands with regard The Government appointed a comto this work. mission to examine into the question, and the hon. member for North Victoria says they shielded themselves behind the commission. Now that is not a correct statement of the facts, because what the Government did was this: There were some doubts as to whether there was sufficient water supply to carry on this work, and the Government referred that matter, as well as all other matters in regard to the canal, to three gentlemen, two of whom, at all events, they considered altogether These were Mr. Kennedy, the disinterested. harbour engineer of Montreal, and Mr. Turner, Mr. Rubidge's report dated November 15th, 1887. the engineer of Toronto. Mr. Kennedy, so far as I know, went there rather prejudiced against the work, having known nothing about it beforehand; but after he had gone over the route and inspected the whole matter, he came to the conclusion that it was a work deserving consideration, not only as a local but as a national work. He considered that it was beneficial, not only to the locality, but to the Dominion as well, and his report is on these lines. He recognized the necessity of constructing the work as a national work. think that if the work can be constructed for even the amount of money estimated, $8,000,000, it will not be asking too much that the Dominion should undertake that enterprise, especially when we consider that half a million people are along the route of that canal and that some of the best lands in the country are situated in that section, and that the natural waterway requires only 50 miles of canal, to make it a complete navigable waterway through the centre of Ontario. If the work can be done at that cost, the Government will be remiss in their duty if they do not undertake it, and the report of the commission certainly would justify them in carrying it out. With regard to the bridge at Fenelon Falls, which the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) has complained of, the Government have built two expensive locks immediately below this obstruction; and I do think the Government should take steps to remove that obstruction and enable the people to get the benefit of the works which have been constructed there. As the hon. member for North Victoria is going to bring the matter up again, we will have an opportunity of discussing it more fully then.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not wish at this hour to say anything that may prolong the debate, but as the hon member for East Peterborough has spoken on the matter, and I think, fairly and justly, I may be permitted to give my opinion. I am very much disappointed in not seeing a large sum in the Estimates, in view of the telegram we received from the First Minister that there would be a sum placed in the Estimates this year in accordance with the report of the commission appointed by the Government. The excuse for years back has been simply that as soon as the commission reported, if that report was favourable, a grant would be made. We did not expect the canal to be built at once, as it will take years to build it, but we did expect that a sum would be placed in the Estimates which would satisfy the people to some extent that the Government meant to go on with it. I know that, in consequence of the decrease in the sugar duties and other things, the Government are averse to incurring expenditure; but, surely they might guarantee that next year they will place sums in the Estimates for this work. No matter what Government is in power, that section of the country will force them to do this work eventually. The people there are determined to have it; and if they do not get it, the Government may expect a solid opposition from Trent Valley. No matter what Government may be in power, there is no doubt that sooner or later they will be forced to construct that canal. It may be well to say that it is not necessary and that we are expending a vast amount of money in the St. Lawrence; but there is a country growing up behind us that a few years ago was not in existence. That country porting what I said. I was very glad to hear the Mr. BURNHAM.

is represented by sixteen or eighteen members and will soon be represented by more than twenty members, who will probably have something to say in the matter. The people are determined they shall not be kept in the background for ever, and shall have facilities for transportation. Large manufactories are building along the route of that According to the report of the commission, the canal can be built much cheaper than the engineers reported. The locks can be built much cheaper, and need not cost anything like what has been mentioned by the engineers. The gentlemen who composed that commission took a great deal of pains, went over every part of the proposed route, and made a very fair report, and a unanimous report; and I think their report should not be overlooked, especially as the Government have at different times distinctly told us that as soon as their report was in, if it was favourable, they would certainly push on the construction of that canal. With regard to the bridge at Fencion Falls, we know that no vessel can go up there in consequence of it, and the Grand Trunk Railway refuse to build a bridge with a swing in it. I went with the engineer, Mr. Page, several times to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and they proposed to deflect their line below the locks, if the Government would contribute a liberal share towards the expense. The Government agreed to contribute $12,000, but the company would not take less than $25,000 or $30,000, and nothing came of it. I did trust the Government would see the necessity of doing something, for I am sure something must be done if they wish to retain the confidence of that section of the country.

Mr. SPOHN. I am glad to see the hon. member for West Peterborough and others so outspoken with reference to this matter. They really seem to mean business, and if they would act up to what they say, they would soon have the canal. I ask the Minister of Railways and Canals, have the Government any intention of making any survey of the western portion of the canal? aware a sort of survey was made some years ago, but it was generally considered that the estimate was greatly exaggerated. I understand that the route of the western section as well as that of the eastern has not been fully surveyed, and that the route that is most feasible has not been settled on as laid down on the map.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware that any further survey is required except it be to locate the canal in case of the whole work being put under contract for construction.

Mr. SPOHN. I understood there was no regular survey of the western portion, because it was not known where the canal would terminate. If a survey were made you could make some estimate of the cost.

Mr. BARRON. I am sure the Minister of Railways will be inclined to offer me some sort of an apology after hearing what the member for East Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) said just now, because whatever might be said in regard to my political motives could not be said in regard to either of the two hon. members for the County of Peterborough, who could have no such motives against the Government and especially against the Minister of Railways. I thank these hon. gentlemen for sup-hon, member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) speak as he did. I know the exceedingly enviable reputation he bears in Peterborough for everything just and upright, but last session I found that two or three times he wore a different face towards the Government from that which he wore to his constituents at home, so I was agreeably surprised to-night to hear him take the Government to task for their unnecessary delays in this way. I hope the hon, member will be just as active in the future in regard to this canal as he apparently has promised to be to-night. I did notice that the member for West Peterborough showed a great amount of knowledge in regard to this canal. I think that, judging from the comparative knowledge on this subject of the hon, member for West Peterborough and that of the Minister of Railways in regard to this work, they should substitute places.

Mr. WALLACE. Explain that, please, "substitute places.

Mr. BARRON. I do not know where the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) was educated, but if he will send for the dictionary he will find the word "substitute" and the word "places" and he can find that out for himself. I am glad that the hon, members for East and West Peterborough have assisted me in regard to the bridge, and in all earnestness I say to the Minister, who thought I was in error in stating that $4,000 was not sufficient, that it is not sufficient for that purpose, and I say further that, when he put that amount in the Estimates, I am sure he had no idea of applying it for the removal of the obstruction caused by that bridge. If this discussion is going to finish, I would ask the Minister if he will be kind enough te tell me what is the salary of the lockmasters at Fenelon Falls, Bobcaygeon and Buckhorn?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot speak positively. am informed that it is about $200 or $250 per annum: but that can be easily obtained by looking at the Auditor General's Report. I desire to say to the hon, member for East Simcoe (Mr. Spohn) that the surveys he refers to have been made by the engineer, and the figures I have given have been based upon the route which has been selected. the hon, gentleman would like to know what they are, I have no objection to give the calculations. I suppose he would call the western section the portion from Lake Simcoe to Georgian Bay, or from Lake Couchiching to Matchedash Bay. From Lake Couchiching to Matchedash Bay, a distance of 13.21 miles, the estimate is $1,882,400. From Lake Simcoe to Couchiching is navigable. the eastern section below that will be from Balsam Bay to Lake Simcoe, 17.74 miles, which will cost $2,067.134. The works are completed from Peterborough to Balsam Lake, and that with the distance to Matchedash Bay will make a total to the Georgian Bay of 58 67 miles.

Mr. BARRON. I am advised that some of these lockmasters do not exactly attend to their. duties but engage in other business, leaving their duties as lockmasters to be performed by any person else whom they may employ. I would like to know if that practice is allowed by the depart-

Mr. BOWELL. The department is not aware hon, member for South Victoria (Mr. Barron). The practice is not allowed by the department, and if it exists, the lockmasters do this contrary to their instruction.

Mr. BARRON. I did not mean to say that the Minister or the department knew of it, but I am very glad to ascertain that it is not allowed by the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. This discussion has been conducted for almost the whole evening between the acting Minister of Canals and my hon, friend from North Victoria (Mr. Barron). I had an opportunity of visiting Fenelon Falls some time ago in the course of a business tour, and I went over the bridge to which reference has been made. saw the lock, and it appeared to me a piece of folly on the part of the Government to have entered upon the construction of a lock there without first finding out at what cost the bridge could be removed after the lock was built. It appeared to me there was a reason for the Government harrying up that work. I understand that, when that lock was undertaken, the constituency was represented by a gentleman of a different political complexion to my hon, friend, and it was thought necessary, in order to secure the constituency for that hon, gentleman, that the expenditure should be proceeded with immediately. I say it is folly for the Government to have proceeded with the expenditure of $250,000, on which they are now paying 4 per cent. interest, or $10,000 a year, to erect a lock at a place where there is a bridge 4 feet above the water, which you cannot get through comfortably even with a row boat, and that has remained in that condition for some time. I do not know whether the acting Minister of Railways has seen it, but I think if he had he would have come to the conclusion that it is one of the greatest exhibitions of political folly to be found in this Dominion. There is a lock that cost $250,000, constructed for a political purpose, and there it stands as a monument of folly and nonsense in face of a bridge not 300 yards away, and within 4 feet of the water, and the people of this country are paying 4 per cent. on the money that has been invested in it. I do If not know what the probabilities are with regard to the ultimate success of this proposed line of canals and locks. All I have to say is, that if the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson), who expressed himself plainly to-night with regard to this undertaking, intends to press it upon the Government with that evident determination that characterized his utterances, he had better hurry up and get them to carry out their promises, because if he does not do that, the probability is that the whole enterprise will soon come to a sudden collapse, and he may be deprived for the balance of his life of an opportunity of pressing upon the present Government the duty of completing this undertaking. My hon, friend should not permit the Supplementary Estimates to pass this House unless an item of this kind is put into them. I know the influence my hon. friend exercises; he generally gets credit for exercising a good deal of influence, and I think he is worthy of it, because he is a very devoted and unswerving supporter of this Government, one who is always in his place to vote, and is always willing to swallow any proposition of the Government; of the correctness of the statement made by the unlike the hon, member for Beauhari ois (Mr. Bergeron) he never kicks over the traces. However, I hope the hon, gentleman will not succeed in getting the Government to spend any more money on this canal, because I do not think it is in the interest of the country. I do not think the time has arrived when it is necessary that we should construct such a piece of folly as that undertaking would be. It was commenced for a political purpose; it has been kept on foot for a political purpose, and every now and then, when political exigencies arise, a lock is completed—not because there is any immediate hope of using it, but because it is considered necessary, from a political standpoint, that something should be done. Now, last year, when the late First Minister sent a telegram that has been read by my hon. friend, he was moving in a political direction. It was sent just before the general election, on the 3rd of March, and on the 5th of March the people were to vote, and he was anxious the electors of that section should know that the engineers had reported in favour of the scheme, and so far as he was concerned he promised that a sum should be placed in the Estimates to carry out their recommendation. Now, with all the expressed affection and admiration of hon. gentlemen opposite for the ability, and for the statesmanship, and for the gallantry of that hon. gentleman who, we regret, is no longer here, I think those who were associated with him at that time, have shown very little respect indeed for his memory in that they did not implement that telegram by putting a sum in the Estimates to carry out his pledge. They have not shown that respect that my hon, friend the acting Minister of Railways would lead the public to suppose that he and his friends entertain towards the memory of the late Now, I do say that I have travelled Premier. through this Dominion from one end of it to the other, and I have never witnessed such a sickening and miserable exhibition of political folly in my life as the construction of that lock at Fenelon Falls, standing there and viewed by the people of this Dominion as representing an expenditure that is virtually wasted. It is lying there unused, unless a row boat might go through, but you can send nothing else through it; there is not even room above it for an ordinary barge or steamer to turn round in and go back again.

Mr. STEVENSON. I suppose I am to understand from the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that if I want this undertaking completed, I must lose no time in pressing it upon the Government, because if he and his friends come into power, they would be sure to upset the whole thing. I presume he wants us to understand that he speaks as a probable Minister of Agriculture, and represents the opinion of his party on this question. How does the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) like that? And how how do other hen, gentlemen opposite, who stand in the same position that I do, like that announcement from such a high authority as the hon. member for North Wellington? If he has expressed the opinion of his party on the subject, it is well for us to know their exact position on this matter. We know very well that when they were in power before, they did nothing towards it; they threw the whole thing into the hands of the Ontario Government, and the Ontario Government gave a charter to a company who built this very bridge When a small item appears in the Estimates Mr. McMullen.

which prevented navigation at this place. a point that should not be forgotten; they have no right to throw stones at us. We are acting in the best interest of that section of the country, and no body should blame us for trying to get that canal We have received very little consideration from the hands of any Government in that section of the country, although we pay heavy taxes, our imports are very large, and we pay a very large amount to support the Government, and I see no reason why we should get such a knock-down as the member for North Wellington has given us tonight. If that is his opinion with regard to this scheme, it is well that our people should know it, and that we should know where the Opposition

Mr. McMULLEN. From the standpoint of my hon, friend I do not think it matters very much which party may be in power, if they are going to take as much time to complete this route as they have taken already in doing what has been done. If I am rightly informed, it cook the Government four years to complete this lock. Now, I understand there are 71 locks yet to complete, and if it takes four years to complete each lock, it will be 284 years before they are all finished, and I am afraid that neither my hon, friend nor myself will live to see that work completed.

Mr. MULOCK. This is an ever annual recurring subject of discussion in this House, having received a considerable stimulus in 1884, when a large deputation of distinguished men from the territory in question-and I dare say the hon. member from Peterborough, who has just spoken (Mr. Stevenson), was one of the deputation, or if not, he feels he ought to have been-at all events, such deputation came down here to interview the then Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper) and other members of the Government. I remember hearing them declare that no Government could be allowed to stand, no Government could have the confidence of that part of the country, unless they at once, if not sooner, completed this great canal. On that occasion Sir Charles Tupper declared that there were no engineering or financial difficulties in the way, and he pledged himself and pledged the Administration to the immediate completion of that The Minister of Customs smiles; I have no doubt that his recollection will corroborate me in this statement.

Mr. BOWELL. It does, with the exception of the word "immediate."

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know what particular time was mentioned, but I believe it was intimated that it would happen before another election, which must have been within five years. At all events, on that occasion the deputation, composed of persons very like my hon. friend-who is blowing, I suppose, hot and cold on this question—declared that no Government could have the support of that part of the country unless they actively proceeded with the construction of this work. Now, there has been a great deal of hedging for three or four years on this subject. I do not find any member from that section of the country, with the exception of the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), who seems to be earnest in pushing this measure through. They seem to be only too glad and a discussion arises, hon. gentlemen opposite pose before the public as being still actively concerned in the development of this great work. Where do they stand to-day in regard to it? What has become of the great public opinion that existed in the Trent Valley in 1883-84? What has become of the commissioner's report? The commission took two or three years in which to prepare a report. Now that the Government have the report of the commission declaring the work a feasible one, what is the policy of the Administration on the work as a whole? Does the Administration propose to abandon the work as a through line and simply use it for local purposes, or does it propose to carry out the work as originally contemplated as a through route by which the wealth of the North-West would come down and find an outlet in Lake Ontario? That was the scheme to which the Government pledged itself, the one for which the people of that section of the country declared themselves, and the scheme which secured many a seat in that section for the Government. If the contract is not to be carried out, the people should know it, in order that the people may be able to express themselves at the polls. At present it is right that the Government should announce to the public what their policy is in regard to the general scheme. I ask the acting Minister of Railways to announce the policy of the Government as to this scheme.

Mr. BOWELL. All they ask, at present, is the money for these works of absolute necessity in connection with the scheme. When the Supplementary Estimates come down, we will be in a position to announce exactly what the policy is for the future.

Mr. BARRON. Then, when the Supplementary Estimates come down the Government will announce their policy?

Mr. BOWELL. I said we should be in a position to do so.

Mr. BARRON. And you will do so?

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say so.

Grenville Canal......$7,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has the department any report and estimate as to the cost of the proposed Ottawa Canal?

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the Minister will explain what this item is.

Mr. BOWELL. It is for matters in connection with the final settlement of the contract in connection with the construction of the canal.

Mr. MULOCK. I hardly think this is that full information which the Committee should receive. We should have a statement as to what the amount is for, if it is done by contract, and if this is part of the contract work. If the amount is over and above the contract we should be informed that it is for extras.

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed by the deputy that it is to make a final settlement with the contractor for works which have been completed and are to be completed, and whatever incidentals may arise in connection therewith. If the hon, gentleman wants the items, I shall be very glad to have them prepared and placed on the Table. It will be somewhat difficult to say the exact amount to be paid on each particular item under a contract that has been in existence for some time and is about completed.

Mr. MULOCK. In regard to public works, if they are performed under contract and we are asked to vote money, we should know whether it is to discharge liabilities under contract or other-We should know the work for which we are paying. The hon, gentleman does not know whether it is for repairs, construction, or completion. We should know if there was a contract, if it was public tender, the amount and other The time has arrived when this House let by details. should, on every occasion, before voting public money, have the fullest information. It should know what the contract was, the liability incurred, whether the amounts have been charged at contract prices and whether claims are made for This session I have looked into many matters connected with public works, and I regret to say that in most cases there are great additions to the contract prices, showing either laxity in drawing the original specifications or changes in plans after the work was entered upon. Neither is desirable in the public interest, and therefore all these matters involving the payments of public contracts should be explained in the way I have mentioned. If the Minister cannot give us the information, the vote should stand over.

Mr. BOWELL. I have informed the hon. gentleman that this is to make a settlement of the contract in regard to the enlargement of the canal. It is impossible to give the information asked until a final estimate is made. I am informed there is some dispute with the contractor, he having been offered, so long ago as when Mr. Page was in charge, a certain sum in settlement which he refused, and this sum it is hoped will cover the amounts which the department think is due to the contractor when a settlement can be finally arrived at. I do not know that I can possibly give more information until a settlement is made. Then, it would be possible for the department to lay upon the Table the exact measurement why a certain sum was given, and how many feet or how many cubic yards it covered in the excavation. I hope my hon. friend will be satisfied with the explanation.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not wish to be unreasonable, but I only repeat that the hon. gentleman has admitted in so many words that he knows nothing about it. He says this sum of money is to be paid to the contractor in settlement of some claims, and I assume that because it is in the Estimates. Can he tell us whether it is in payment of a certain sum of money for a contract which was the result of a public tender?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. This work was done after the contract was awarded to the contractor as the lowest tenderer, and this is complete. The name of the contractor is Mr. Goodwin, of Ottawa.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this money on account of the original contract price, or is it because of extras?

arise in connection therewith. If the hon, gentleman wants the items, I shall be very glad to have them prepared and placed on the Table. It will be was refused by Mr. Page, and hence a final settlement has not been arrived at. The work was done, as I have informed the hon, gentleman, under contract, and as he knows himself they usually put in a large claim for extras, whether they get them or not.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this for something over and above the original contract price?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot give that information.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, you should.

Mr. BOWELL. I dare say I should, but I question very much whether information of this kind, which the hon, gentleman has pressed for with such persistency, has ever been asked. Where a final settlement has to be effected, the usual course is to put in such an estimate as the department thinks is necessary to cover all the legitimate claims against it, but I scarcely think my friend is reasonable in asking this information.

Mr. MULOCK. You are very persuasive, and it is such an improvement on general methods, that I will not press the question further for the present. I think we should be informed whether this money is in discharge of the contract price, or whether it is for extras; but it is quite clear we cannot get that information.

Tay Canal--Completion of $30,000

Mr. MULOCK. Better let that item stand.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon, gentleman wishes the item to stand there is no desire to press it, but you have had an elaborate discussion on this question, and this sum is necessary for the completion of the work which has already been commenced.

Mr. MULOCK. I made a motion in the Public Accounts Committee on the 31st July for the papers connected with the letting of this contract; but these papers have not been brought down yet, and I think we ought to have them before us before the item is considered in Committee. It is quite impossible to intelligently discuss the question without having these papers.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron.) I trust the Minister will not press this item to-night, because it is important before we can understand it thoroughly and discuss it intelligently, that we should have all the papers. It is true that we had a lengthened discussion the other night on the subject of the Tay Canal, but that discussion will in no way affect the discussion on this particular item. Before I ask the hon, gentleman to let the item stand, I would remind him that he stated on the first of this month that the cost so far was $440,000. Was this item of $30,000 in addition to that $440,000?

Mr. BOWELL. The present appropriation consists of a revote of $14,950 and a new vote for the balance of the $30,000. The amount is required to complete the Tay Canal and give increased wharf accommodation in the town of Perth, the work being now in progress; and also to pay the contractor who formed the basin and wharves south of Gore Street. The amount of the final estimate which is not yet completed, and the work in progress consists in widening and deepening some 1,200 feet of the river which forms a part of the canal. I explained very fully before why the contract was awarded to the present contractor whose tender, was, if I recollect aright, about $200 more than the lowest. This was done on the recommendation of the deputy head, and all the reasons for it I gave interest.

to the House in an answer two or three days ago, and in doing so I exceeded the information sought for.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That did not answer my question. What I wanted to know was whether this sum asked to be voted is in addition to the $140,000 which the hon, gentleman stated had already been expended?

Mr. BOWELL. I think it is an additional sum to meet the expenditures which have been incurred.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Then, this is to complete the extension from the basin up to Haggart's mill?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; and the other improvements which I have read to the Committee.

Mr. CAMERON (Haron). And the swing-bridge?

Mr. BOWELL. No; I think not.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; that is included. I may explain that the contract price of $22,800 included the bridge and the piers, and the contractor has made a deposit of $4,000 to complete the superstructure.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I understand from the Minister that this is intended to cover some other things, including a balance due on the basin. That surely cannot be so, because Parliament was assured in 1888 by Sir Charles Tupper that the sum then asked for would complete the basin, and we were given the same assurance in 1889.

Mr. HAGGART. You must understand that there is $16,000 unexpended of the amount asked for, which it was stated would finish it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That is not the point I make. We were assured in 1888 that the amount then asked for would complete the basin, and the Minister now says that part of this sum is to finish the basin. Every step in this matter shows the necessity of our having the papers before this money is voted, in order that we may judge whether the statement made by the Minister now is in accordance with the statements made in 1888 and 1889.

Mr. BOWELL. We will let the item stand, if the hon, gentleman desires it, and any information that can possibly be given will be brought down at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If you get the papers, that is all I require.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that some person should be prepared to say what public service was rendered by the extension of this canal. I have read the report by Captain Wise, and I am at a loss to understand what public service was rendered, and I think that is a matter that will have to be explained when the matter is discussed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would have been well if this whole matter of the Tay Canal had been referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, and an enquiry had into the merits of the undertaking; because a very large amount of money has been expended, and so far as I can judge from the information given to the House, it was hardly a work called for by the public interest.

Overhauling the superstructure of the pier at Port Dalhousie and removal of shoal, also construction of piers for bridge at Thorold......

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this construction of piers at Thorold for? Is this a new bridge?

Mr. BOWELL. That is necessary through the decay of the timber, and the superstructure requires renewal.

Towards the construction of the culvert at Stromness $7,500

Mr. BOWELL. At this place there is at present a culvert not of sufficient area to discharge the flood and drainage water, and to remedy this the culverts and its approaches were lately cleaned, but this failed to meet the difficulty and a larger culvert is necessary.

Mr. MULOCK. Has it been put under contract? Mr. BOWELL. No; tenders have been called for.

Towards construction of a new swing bridge between Stromness and the Buffalo and Brantford Railway crossing.....

$3,000

Mr. GIBSON. Is it the intention of the Government to advertise these works?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; some have been advertised for already.

Towards the purchase of lease No. 1420 from the St. Catharines Water Power Company......$21,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that mean that we are to pay more than $21,000 and that this is an instalment of the sum total?

Mr. BOWELL. This covers the whole expenditure to buy out the rights of the parties interested.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the rental under the lease?

Mr. BOWELL. My recollection is that it is a small sum

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If to cancel a lease, under which we are receiving only a trifling sum, we are called upon to pay $21,000, a copy of the lease should be laid upon the Table, and we should have a full explanation of the circumstances. This is purchasing our own property, and it appears to me we are setting a rather bad prece-I thought these water leases were all made on terms which enabled the Government to cancel them without the necessity of dipping deeply into the public purse.

Mr. BOWELL. This is one of the old leases that were in existence when the old Welland Canal was taken over by the Government from the Welland Canal Company. A great deal of difficulty has arisen owing to these leases being, it is argued, in perpetuity; and in order to avoid these difficulties in the future it was decided by the late Mr. Pope to purchase and get full control of them. I agree with the hon, gentleman that the most rigid conditions should be placed in all these leases if they are granted at all, but I am somewhat inclined to think that the fewer leases are given by which the water is drained from the canal the better. Order in Council upon which this agreement was entered into has been laid before the House together with this report. The late Minister of and to protect the public roads.

Railways, who recognized the importance of acquiring these leases, recommended this purchase, and the sum of $21,000 was agreed upon.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the proprietor of this property?

Mr. BOWELL. The price agreed upon was arrived at by one of the railway officials and one of the Dominion arbitrators. The company was represented by Mr. Merritt, with whom negotiations were commenced under the authority of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. MULOCK. We ought to have all the I suppose the arbitrators took papers down. evidence under oath, as the law requires?

Mr. BOWELL. All the papers available will be brought down.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Mr. MULOCK. No; this is to stand. It is very inconvenient that these items should be Under one resolution I find no less than grouped. 13 items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Let it stand, on the understanding that the other items pass.

Mr. BOWELL. I agree with the hon. gentleman that these items should not be grouped, but this is the manner in which they have always been prepared, and I fancy that the reason is that the whole amount might be available for the different works in case one was exceeded and the other was not. If this item is allowed to pass and there is anything in the correspondence which will justify opposition to it, when it comes to the final vote the discussion can take place just as well as by allowing it to

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman knows that these matters are not discussed on concurrence. We are not raising this question in a captious way, but the hon. gentleman must see that this is an item which requires the production of the papers and further information. It is a very peculiar item, and bears on the whole question of the leasing for manufacturing purposes of canal water, which is exceedingly dangerous in many With the exceedingly small hydraulic rents that we receive the public get no compensation for the constant bother and annoyance that occur. venture to say that the loss of this $21,000 last year would be equal to all the hydraulic rents we would receive in a year.

Item allowed to stand.

Chambly Canal—Raising banks, lower-ing bottom of canal, rebuilding look walls, dredging, building dry rubble walls, &c $33,150

Mr. MULOCK. Explain this, please?

Mr. BOWELL. This is for dredging in the harbour of St. John, providing meeting places for boats, raising the banks, filling behind the walls at Isle Ste. Therese, including also the purchase of 140 tons of coal, salary, wear and tear, and so on, taking down and rebuilding the east chamber wall of lock No. 4, taking down and rebuilding locks 7 and 8, to complete the dry rubble wall, to protect and widen the canal, and to build a durable dry rubble wall at a point at the foot of the west embankment in the parish of St. Loup and the parish of St. John, to prevent landslides into the canal, Mr. MULOCK. It is rather an olla podrida to put coal and public works in one item.

Mr. BOWELL. This is the total expenditure chargeable to income, therefore includes coal.

Mr. MULOCK. There is too much grouping together of these items. Here you have work and material grouped together. Is the dredging referred to under contract, and what is the price?

Mr. BOWELL. It is not under contract. It may be done probably by the Government dredge. If not, it can be given out by contract at so much per cubic yard.

Mr. MULOCK. None of this has been undertaken yet, then?

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Towards the settlement of Lamoureux Bros.' claim......$1,600

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this claim.

Mr. BOWELL. This is to pay for land taken from the parties for the range lights at the lower entrance of the Chambly Canal, covering also a certain protection wall and beach lot. This property having been occupied by the department for the last 8 years, the present settlement has been arrived at by the Government valuator, who has appraised the land and damages at $1,000, with interest from 1883.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the amount of land that was taken in respect of which this claim for damages arises? Was it an expropriation, or was it damage occasioned by a public work?

Mr. BOWELL. There was about half an acre of land which was situated in the village of Chambly.

Mr. MULOCK. Did the Government expropriate half an acre?

Mr. BOWELL. The land was not expropriated; it was simply taken possession of and the range lights placed upon it. The party who owns it complains that these range lights have interfered with his site for buildings, and it was deemed advisable, in order to put an end to all future trouble, to purchase the land. They had it valued at $1,000 and paid interest on that sum for the time that it has been in the possession of the Government.

Mr. MULOCK. Was it valued by Dominion valuators?

Mr. BOWELL. The superintendent says he does not remember who the valuators were.

Mr. MULOCK. The valuation, I presume, has taken place recently?

Mr. BOWELL. He thinks it is Mr. Simard, who was one of the Dominion arbitrators—he and the two other gentlemen to whom I have referred.

Mr. MULOCK. Have you not Dominion arbitrators for the Province of Quebec?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; Mr. Simard is one.

Mr. MULOCK. Was this arbitration made under the Act? If so, why was it not conducted by the official arbitrators?

Mr. BOWELL. I think I said it was done by the official arbitrator, Mr. Simard.

Mr. Bowell.

Mr. MULOCK. That is only one—there are three.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not necessary, I think, under the Act, that the whole three should sit, or that even two should act. One of them is sufficient to go and appraise and report.

Mr. MULOCK. Then it was the award of one only?

Mr. BOWELL. The superintendent tells me that if his recollection serves him well it was done by Mr. Simard; he is not sure whether Mr. Cowan and the third arbitrator were with him or not.

Mr. MULOCK. Without asking to have the item stand, I think that the same information that was asked for in regard to the previous matter might be supplied to the Committee in this matter. With the understanding that the award and the evidence be laid upon the Table, I will not ask to have the item stand.

Mr. BOWELL. I will see that they are brought down.

Mr. BOWELL. This sum is required to purchase a strip of land required for the by-wash, leading from the Chambly Canal to the River Richelieu. The land is required for the formation of a ditch or by-wash, considered by the superintending engineer in 1887 to be absolutely required for the safety of the works of the canal. The amount was fixed by the Government valuator at $450, and an additional area was required for the erection of an electric light station on the canal. The land is valued at $378. The estate, I may add, has not accepted the settlement we proposed, and it will be necessary to take expropriation proceedings.

St. Ours Lock—Towards overhauling the foundation............. $4,500

Mr. BOWELL. This is required in consequence of a serious leakage of water by which this lock was undermined and threatened with destruction. It became necessary to take steps to have it repaired, and for the prevention of further mischief this sum has been expended to protect the works.

Mr. MULOCK. I see in last year's estimates there was an item of $20,000 for the same work?

Mr. BOWELI. The superintendent says that is quite correct, but they had to secure an additional sum in order to complete it.

Mr. MULOCK. Then it means that the over-hauling of the lock is costing $25,000?

Mr. BOWELL. Between that and the stoppage of the leakage to which I have referred.

Mr. FOSTER. $5,000 is the revote. It is out of the original appropriation.

Mr. MULOCK. Was this done under contract?

Mr. BOWELL. No. It belongs to that class of works that cannot be well done under contract.

Mr. MULOCK. How was it done?

Mr. BOWELL. The engineer says that when a break of that kind occurs it is almost impossible to tell what is necessary to be done. In fact, before you can give out the contract the damage might be ten-fold. This work was done under the superintendence of the engineer then in charge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That appears to be a pretty large expenditure for a pier there. How is it occasioned?

Mr. BOWELL. This is for repairing and rebuilding the piers that were built in 1853, and for the outside facing of the work. It is in such a dilapidated condition that the renewing and strengthening is a matter of necessity. The new structure is crib-work, with a dry basin wall as superstructure. The work is now under contract. The names of the contractors are Bruder & McNaughton.

Mr. MULOCK. When was it put under contract?

Mr. BOWELL. About eight months ago. The work is going on.

Mr. MULOCK. Was the lowest tender accepted?

Mr. BOWLEL. Yes. As a rule, the lowest tender is always taken, and if it is not taken a special order is passed in which the reasons are given.

Mr. MULOCK. I will not assume that the lowest tender is always accepted. I think the officers of the department might look over Hansard when it is printed, and if they have made mistakes they should see that the matter is brought to the notice of the Committee at some future session.

Mr. BOWELL. I trust that from the discussion the officers will learn to furnish all this information in future.

Mr. MULOCK. To refer again to the item. Is it money required to complete the contract, or has it to do with extras or additions?

Mr. BOWELL. To complete the contract, and the superintendent says it is not to cover any extras or additions.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the contract price?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information. I will make a note of his question.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman is taking a vote for a round sum. It never happens that a contract is taken for a round sum, and yet the hon, gentleman says there are no extras or additions.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what I am informed.

Mr. MULOCK. The amount is $39,000. I fancy the officers will find there has been a slight mistake, and there is some provisions here for extras or additions. I have never seen a tender for a round sum.

Mr. BOWELL. That argument would be correct if the work were given out in a lump sum. It is impossible to only approximate the quantities when it is paid by the yard. The contract may be at so much a yard, and the quantity cannot be ascertained until the work is completed, and consequently we must take a round sum.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the details of the contract will be laid before the Committee, showing the rate at which the work was awarded. That information will be furnished?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; I have asked the deputy to bring down the contract.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Minister explain this item—"puddling, $3,600."

Mr. BOWELL. It is to pay for excavation that is being carried on.

Mr. MULOCK. How is it being done?

Mr. BOWELL. By day's work.

Mr. MULOCK. Has this work been performed, or is it under way now?

Mr. BOWELL. It has not yet been commenced.

Carillon and Grenville Canal $30,000

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon, gentleman explain the item for land damages and services of valuators?

Mr. BOWELL. $900 is to pay land damages and services of valuators on Carillon Canal. The deputy says this is an approximate amount required for this purpose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a curious item to appear at this time of day. The land required should have been acquired long ago and all claims settled. How do you come to require new land in that quarter now?

Mr. BOWELL. I quite realize the force of what the hon. gentlemen says, but, strange to say, that in the case of the canals around the St. Lawrence, which are built for half a century, there is scarcely a year that there are not more or less claims for land values. They are always cropping up for some reason or another.

Mr. GIBSON. With regard to the rebuilding of the masonry in the wing walls above the guard lock at Grenville, it seems to me that $14,000 is a large amount of money for that work. That would cover, in my mind, about 1,400 yards of first-class masonry, and it appears strange to me that this amount of money should require to be expended on the wing walls above the guard lock.

Mr. BOWELL. It seems to be necessary in order to protect the falling down of the wall occasioned by the flow of water under this dam. I suppose the intention is to make this a little more permanent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would not apply to the wing walls of the guard lock.

Mr. GIBSON. Perhaps the engineer could give us some idea of the length of the wing walls at the guard lock. It seems to me an extraordinary sum to expend for that purpose.

Mr. BOWELL. They are two or three hundred feet long, and about twelve feet deep.

Mr. GIBSON. What class of masonry is built in the wing walls?

Mr. BOWELL. The engineer says it is rubble wall masonry, built in cement.

Mr. GIBSON. That makes the case much worse than it appeared at first. That second class masonry would cost only about $6 per yard, but suppose there were 2,000 yards of masonry embraced in this contract, at say $7 a yard, that would only amount to $14,000.

Mr. BOWELL. The superintendent tells me that these walls are on an average 5 feet wide.

Mr. GIBSON. What does the engineer calculate as the cost of this class of work?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Parent, the superintendent of the canal, did not make a calculation.

Mr. GIBSON. I think he was the gentleman referred to by the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) as his authority on the Beauharnois Canal, but now it appears he is a superintendent, and not an engineer, and cannot give an estimate. There will be about 2,500 yards of masonry in this work, and I fail to find where it will cost as much as is asked for. Taking the walls at 300 feet long, 12 feet high and 5 feet thick, that, according to my calculation, would amount to 666 cubic yards, and taking both sides of the canal it would give us 1,332 cubic yards. The estimate would give us a cost of more than $10 a yard, whereas I think that 56 a yard would be ample for that kind of work.

Mr. BOWELL. I will ask the deputy about it, and get the information upon which he made his calculation.

Mr. GIBSON. I would also like to get some information about this $15,000 for repairing and strengthening a portion of the Carillon dam.

Mr. BOWELL. I have been confounding these two items of $15,000 and $14,000. This item of $15,000 is the one to which my remarks referred, and not to the other item. That work has not yet commenced.

Mr. GIBSON. I think the engineer is making more than a liberal allowance for this class of work, if it is contemplated that the wing walls will be 300 feet long, 12 feet high and 5 feet thick, because I claim that even if the walls were 1,300 or 1,400 yards long from $6 to $7 a yard would be ample provision.

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed this is an addition for pulling down the old wall and for a large quantity of excavation. By the next time we go into Committee I will endeavour to ascertain whether the engineer has over-estimated.

Mr. GIBSON. Taking down the old work would not add more than $1.50 a yard, because a large proportion of the stone work from the old wing walls would be available for the new work. The Minister may have made a mistake in the length; but if the length is only 300 feet I still maintain that there is double the money provided for this class of work than is absolutely necessary.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 20th August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE MEMBER FOR QUEBEC WEST.

Mr. SPEAKER. In accordance with the Order of Tuesday, the 18th instant, I did issue my warrant to the acting Serjeant-at-Arms to take in custody the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, and I have now a report from the acting Serjeant at Arms in reference to his efforts in that direction:

"House of Commons, "Ottawa, 20th August, 1891.

"SIR,—I have the honour to report that I reached Quebec yesterday at three o'clock p.m., and at once made diligent search for Mr. Thomas McGreevy at his residence, office and other places, but could not find him. Later, I was informed, by what I considered good authority, that he had left Quebec by the Grand Trunk Railway, but I was unable to ascertain his destination. I have no doubt that he left Quebec several hours before I arrived at that city. that city.

"I have the honour to be, Sir.
"Your obedient servant, "HENRY R. SMITH, "Acting Serjeant-at-Arms."

THE MEMBER FOR EAST NORTHUMBER-LAND.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). In reference to the impeachment that I made in the House yesterday against the member for the electoral district of the east riding of Northumberland, I may say to the House that I have abandoned the last charge, and, therefore, there will only be the three charges to investigate. I beg to move:

1. That in the year A.D. 1888 there was a vacancy in the position of Government Lighthouse-keeper in the Government lighthouse on Presqu'Isle Point, County of Northumberland.

2. That one Hedley H. Simpson was an applicant for Northumberland.

2. That one Hedley H. Simpson was an applicant for said office.

3. That Edward Cochrane then was and now is the member for the House of Commons for the electoral district of the east riding of the said County of Northumberland, and a supporter of the Government.

4. That in the year 1888 it was corruptly agreed to by and between the said Edward Cochrane and the said Hedley H. Simpson that if the said Hedley H. Simpson would make and deliver to one James Stapley two promissory notes for $100 each, endorsed by some responsible person, he, the said Edward Cochrane, would procure the appointment of the said Hedley H. Simpson to the said office of Lighthouse-keeper for the Government lighthouse on Presqu'Isle Point.

5. That the said Hedley H. Simpson, in pursuance of said corrupt bargain, did make the said two promissory notes for $100 each—procured their endorsement by a responsible party—handed them to the said James Stanley, who received the same and placed them in a bank for the use of the said Edward Cochrane personally or for political purposes.

6. That the said Hedley H. Simpson, subsequently paid tical purposes.

6. That the said Hedley H. Simpson subsequently paid the said notes.

7. That the said Hedley H. Simpson, in pursuance of said corrupt bargain, received the said appointment.

said corrupt bargain, received the said appointment.

1. That in summer of 1889 Obadiah Simpson was promised by the said Edward Cochrane the Government office of keeper or attendant of one of the swing bridges over the Murray Canal.

2. That in the summer of 1889 the said James Stanley, who is a confidential friend and warm political supporter of the said Edward Cochrane, sent for one Arundel R. Simpson to call and see him. He did, when the said James Stanley proposed to the said Arundel R. Simpson, with the knowledge and consent of the said Edward Cochrane, that if the said Arundel R. Simpson would pay $150 and give to his father, the said Obadiah Simpson, the life lease of his farm (as compensation for his not being appointed such bridge-keeper)—he had been promised and had not received the said office, he, the said Arundel R. Simpson, would be appointed such bridge-keeper.

3. That shortly afterwards the said Arundel R. Simpson had an interview with the said Edward Cochrane on the same subject, when the said Edward Cochrane said to him that they could not take the $150 for said office, that Stanley should not have made that offer, that other arrangements had been made with one Wesley Goodrich, who agreed to pay $200 and give said life lease for said appointment.

who agreed to pay $200 and give said life lease for said appointment.

4. That the said Edward Cochrane then and there corruptly proposed to the said Arundel R. Simpson that if he would pay said Edward Cochrane $200 and give said life lease he would be appointed. This he refused to do.

5. That subsequently it was corruptly agreed to by and between the said Wesley Goodrich and the said Edward Cochrane that if the said Edward Cochrane would procure the appointment of the said Wesley Goodrich to the Government office of keeper of said bridge he, the said Wesley Goodrich, would pay the sum of $200, and execute to the said Obadiah Simpson, father of the said Arundel R. Simpson, a life lease on his farm, with a condition in said lease that if said Wesley Goodrich lost said appointment said lease would be cancelled.

6. That in pursuance of the said corrupt bargain the said Wesley Goodrich paid said money and executed said lease.

6. That in pursuance of the said corrupt bargain the said Wesley Goodrich paid said money and executed said lease, and caused his wife to execute the same, to the said Obadiah Simpson, on part of lot 18, in the 2nd concession of the Township of Cramahe, in the said county, for the rent of one peppercorn a year and on the condition that if the said Goodrich should be released by the Government from attendance on said bridge, said lease would come to an end and be void, but said condition was not to apply in case said Goodrich should be discharged on account of any act of his own.

That the foregoing statement be referred to a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Caron, Dickey. Tisdale, Skinner, Mulock, German and Cameron (Huron), to make full enquiry and report thereon.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the charges made by the hon, member for Huron against me in his place in the House yesterday, I have to say that I am innocent of the charges made against me, and that I never made any corrupt agreements in reference to these matters. the allegations made in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the second branch of the charges, I say, as before, that no such corrupt agreement as is stated in paragraph 5 was made between me and Goodrich, either directly or indirectly. I desire, however, in relation to this portion of the charges, to state that Goodrich paid $200 towards liquidation of a deposit which had been advanced by persons other than myself several years before, on the contestation of a local election in which I was not a candidate, nor interested, except as a member of the party, and none of the said money was received by me for my personal use, nor for my political benefit, other than as above stated. It had been understood that I would recommend for appointment to the bridge an old man named Obadiah Simpson. An arrangement was made between Simpson and Goodrich by which Simpson was to take a life lease of Good-This arrangement was in no way for rich's farm. my benefit, personal or political, and I derived no advantage therefrom.

Mr. DICKEY. I should like to ask the House to relieve me from the duty of serving on that Committee. I have been a member of the Privileges and Elections Committee, which has had very long sittings, and has now before it for review very nearly 1,800 pages of evidence, that have to be read and the arguments of counsel considered; and I do not think it fair to ask any member of that Committee, who proposes to give an intelligent consideration to that mass of testimony, to serve on another Committee that will involve long sittings subject. Therefore, I would ask the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) to substitute the name of some other person for mine. There are numbers of professional men on this side of the House who will take my place. I do not want to shirk any duty, but at the same time I think it only fair that I should be relieved from serving on this Committee.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I may say to the hon, gentleman that the suggestion did not come from me, but from the other side of the House, although I was very much pleased when the hon. gentleman's name was mentioned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would suggest the name of Mr. White, of Shelburne, instead of the name of Mr. Dickey. I must object to the resolution passing in its present form. The hon, gentleman has struck out paragraph No. 2 of the series of charges, which is a kind of sub section of the notice as printed, but I certainly think that the preceding paragraph should be struck out. reads as follows:—

"1. That the said Edward Cochrane, while he was such member of Parliament and had the patronage of the Government in and for said county, corruptly entered into other corrupt contracts with other person or persons in the years 1888, 1889 and 1890, that if such person or persons would pay a certain sum or sums of money such person or persons would receive from the Government the position of keeper or keepers or attendants of other bridges on said canal, and that in pursuance of such corrupt bargain and bargains such payments were made and such appointand bargains such payments were made and such appointments were received."

I think that is altogether too vague and that it should be struck out. If the hon, gentleman afterwards is prepared to make specific charges in regard to that transaction they can be referred to the Special Committee, but until they are so made I think the charges should not be referred by the House. I may say that the course usually insisted upon when charges are preferred against a member of the House has been that they should go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; but I think that it would be well to concur, on this occasion, in a departure from that course, because the Committee on Privileges and Elections is now altogether overcharged with work. They have a reference before them involving the consideration of 1,500 pages of printed evidence, and the House made a reference yesterday on other branches of the same case which will involve an enquiry, another examination of witnesses, and a report to the House. I wish it to be understood that in this reference to this Special Committee it is only in view of the circumstances that we consent to depart from the usual practice on this occasion. I hope that the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) will concur in the suggestion that the charge "paragraph 1" is altogether too vague to be referred.

Mr. LAURIER. I altogether agree with the suggestion made by the Minister of Justice, and I offered the same suggestion myself to the hon. The charge is so very vague in its gentleman. nature that it ought not to be a matter of investigation. I agree with the views of the Minister of Justice in this, and I believe that my hon. friend will not persist in these charges unless they are specified, and unless he is now in a position to specify them more fully than he has done. hon, gentleman is prepared to substantiate the charges so that the member impeached can answer another Committee that will involve long sittings them, they could go to the Committee, but they and close attention, in order to do justice to the should not remain in the form in which they now are. With regard to the statement of the Minister of Justice that we are departing from the usual practice in not referring this to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I would remark to the Minister of Justice that this practice was introduced some years ago against the protests from this side of the House. At all events the event may show which is the best way, whether in having a large committee like this Committee on Privileges and Elections, or a Select Committee to investigate certain charges.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I desire to say that I am quite sensible of the force of the objection raised by the Minister of Justice, but the difficulty can be got over without the necessity of striking out the paragraph. At the first meeting of the Select Committee I shall be prepared to hand to the chairman a specific statement, just as specific as the first and second statements of the charges are. I shall hand him a specific statement of the other charges, with the names of the parties implicated, and that will give the member against whom the charges are preferred all the information that is required, just as effectually and just as fully as if I had then been in a position to make the charges when this statement was drawn up. I repeat that I shall, at the first meeting of the Committee, or perhaps before that, hand in to the hon. member implicated, if he desires, a specific statement of the specific charges, with the names of the parties concerned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I must still press the objection. The hon, gentleman will see that when the House makes a reference this afternoon it makes an instruction to the Committee to report on that charge as it stands there, and if the charge is to be followed in the way he proposes, by a specific complaint, the House has a right to know that before it gives any instruction to the Committee.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I have no objection to that course, if it is understood I have a right to prefer the other charges and refer them to the same Committee.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There can be no doubt about that.

Motion that the name of Mr. White (Shelburne) be substituted for that of Mr. Dickey on the Special Committee, agreed to.

Motion that "paragraph 1" of the third series of charges be struck out, agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) moved that the Select Committee to report on charges against Edward Cochrane, a member of this House, be authorized to employ a shorthand writer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before the motion is put, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he desires the evidence in the Committee to be taken on oath. If so, it must be done by an Order from the House, because Committees have several times refused to take evidence on oath unless the House had given an order to that effect, and the hon. gentleman will find that that course will be pursued by this Committee.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I understand that the law is clear, that any Standing Committee of the House may take evidence on oath. Of course, the Committee would not be compelled to do it, has at present, and letting us have the rest afterwards. Mr. Laurier.

but in a case of this kind I apprehend that there is not a member of the Committee who would object to it. If there is any doubt about it I would move that it be an instruction to the Committee to take the evidence on oath.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the matter is optional with the Committee it ought not to be optional. The House ought to instruct the Committee, and on so serious a charge against a member of the House the evidence ought to be taken on oath. This is the provision of the law on the subject:

"Whenever any witness or witnesses is or are to be examined by any Committee of the Senate or House of Commons, and the Senate or House of Commons shall have resolved that it is desirable that such witness or witnesses shall be examined on oath, such witness or witnesses shall be examined upon oath or affirmation, where affirmation is allowed by law."

I am reading from Mr. Bourinot's book, and I am reading the section of the statute of 1876. It is the House that determines, and even if it were the Committee, it is not a matter that the House should leave to the discretion of the Committee.

Motion, as amended, with the addition of the words, "and that the said Committee be instructed to examine witnesses upon oath," agreed to.

THE CENSUS RETURNS.

Mr. CASEY. I see that the hon. Postmaster General has just come in. He told us the day before yesterday that he could in a couple of days give us a pretty close estimate of the census, and I would like to ask him further in reference to that.

Mr. HAGGART. I told the hon. gentleman that there were several returns not yet in, that we could give such an estimate as we gave before, and that it would be only approximate in some cases and actual in others. But I understood that the feeling of the House was that it would perhaps be better not to bring down a report until we could bring the actual figures, which will be ready shortly.

Mr. CASEY. I understood the hon, gentleman to say that if I asked for such an estimate and were satisfied with it he would bring it down; and I said I did ask for that and was satisfied with it, and I understood that it would be brought down. The House has not expressed any opinion against bringing down this estimate, because the House has not been asked to express an opinion, except the casual expressions of approval and disapproval when the matter was discussed. Whatever may have been said casually in the way of approval and disapproval, I think the House and the country have a right to have had the whole of these figures before now. That not having been provided for, I think we have a right to such information as the hon. Minister already possesses. He admits that it will be a very close estimate, that in fact only a very few unenumerated districts remain to be reported from; and on the whole, he led us to understand that the difference between the approximate report which he could now bring down, and the full report that would come out ultimately, would be so trifling as to have no effect whatever on the deductions that would be drawn from the I must ask him then to carry out the offer figures. he made the other day of bringing down what he

Mr. HAGGART. I will make enquiries this evening, and give the hon. gentleman a definite answer to-morrow. I judged from the remarks of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who I thought voiced the feeling of a good many on that side of the House, that it was better that no returns should be made until all the returns are completed.

DESTRUCTION OF PAPERS.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the Government whether a statement that I have seen is correct, that an Order in Council has been passed authorizing the destruction, in the various departments, of certain files; I do not know whether it has reference to their age or not. I would like to know whether there is such an Order, and to what class of documents it refers.

Mr. FOSTER. There is, I think, an Order in Council which was adopted after a thorough investigation of the English system, and that Order prescribes for the different departments, I think, what papers may be destroyed, and after what time. I will look into the Order.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no destruction of files, but such papers as money orders, cheques, stubs and things of that kind. The only Order is one amending a previous one, and classifying the papers that may be destroyed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be very desirable if those Orders were laid on the Table, both the original one and the amending one, so that we would know exactly what the papers are.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is a matter of two or three years ago. There has been nothing passed since.

OYSTER BEDS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I asked a question the other day with respect to the intention of the Government in regard to leasing all or any of the oyster beds of Prince Edward Island, and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries told me that it was not proposed to lease beds now fished by the public; and he was kind enough to send me a list of the applications for leases and the locations for which licenses are to be granted. One of these applications is for Summerside harbour, another for York River, and another for the sea and all the I want to point out to the hon. gentleman that unless very careful surveys are made respecting the localities he will be very apt, if he grants these applications, not only to give up the newer beds, but the old beds as well. This is a matter which has created a great deal of agitation between those who are seeking for these licenses and a large class of men who make a living by oyster fishing. No doubt the object of these gentlemen is a laud-No doubt, some of them desire to lease able one. oyster beds for the bond fide purpose of cultivating good oysters, and that is an object it would be well for the department to promote; but at the same time public interest requires that these large public beds which are fished by the people at large, should not be sacrificed to any desire on the part of gentlemen to promote what they call oyster

Mr. TUPPER. I agree with what the hon. gentleman has said. The department is proceed-Mr. TUPPER. ing on the principle of not granting licenses in the case of fisheries where the beds are worked by the fishermen as a whole, and that accounts for the great delay with reference to these applications, which are applicable to a very large extent of terri-Care is taken to ascertain exactly the condition of the district and the proposed beds, so that we may avoid taking away from the fishermen their source of livelihood. I may add that our policy with regard to the public fisheries is that in cases where we have practically the unanimous support of the fishermen we take charge of the fishery and re-stock the beds, still keeping them as public fisheries and making regulations afterwards. is only done, however, at the desire of the fishermen of the locality.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURE.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has the return which I moved for three months ago with reference to the expenditure of public money throughout the Dominion since Confederation, under several heads, been prepared? I was assured by the ex-Minister of Public Works, nearly a month ago, that it was in course of preparation and would soon be brought down. I am anxious to see it, with reference to the Estimates now before the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will make enquiry; but unless some work had been done in preparing it before it was moved for, it will not be possible to bring it down this Session.

SUPPLY—THE BANCROFT TENDER.

Mr. AMYOT. I beg to call the attention of the House to a matter of great importance—

Mr. FOSTER. We have received no notice that this motion would be put to-day, and I thought there was an arrangement by which it was understood such notices should be given. To have given a notice would conduce to a proper discussion of the subject, more especially under present circumstances, when the Minister of Public Works is not in his place.

Mr. AMYOT. I was going the other day into the question when I was stopped on account of the Rules of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no rule of the House to prevent your going on.

Mr. AMYOT. Or rather because the printed evidence was not before the House. The evidence has, however, been before the House for some days. Of course, if I am going against any understanding between both sides I will yield at once.

good oysters, and that is an object it would be well for the department to promote; but at the same time public interest requires that these large public beds which are fished by the people at large, should not be sacrificed to any desire on the part of gentlemen to promote what they call oyster culture. Their object, though a good one, must taken by surprise, as the subject of the motion has been before the House for some time.

Mr. AMYOT. There was only one paper which was not before the House the other day when I was stopped from proceeding, and that was the verbal evidence on Bancroft; and I have only two lines of it to quote. The Government themselves knew all the facts long ago. This matter is of great importance, not only because of the amount involved, but also with regard to the method of procedure in a department depending upon this honourable House. It was in 1888 that the Government decided to undertake the construction of a dock at Kingston. The location of the dock was not then decided upon, and it was declared that the marine interests there were not able to provide for the construction of such a work. The probable cost was fixed by the late Minister of Public Works at from $250,000 to $450,000, and $75,000 was then asked from this Parliament. The following year, 1889, it was said that the probable cost would be $350,000, and Parliament was asked to vote the sum of $124,000. The exact measurements of the dock were then given. It was said that the length would be 280 feet, the width at the bottom 70 feet and at the top 72 feet, and the width at the entrance 48 feet; and it was said that it would be sufficient for the largest vessels that ply on the lakes. In the next year, 1890, Parliament was asked to vote $160,000, and it was then declared that the probable cost would be $318,000, and this was to complete the work; but now, in 1891, by the last returns at our disposal, we find that the probable cost reaches the amount of $450,744.62, making a difference between the two last estimates of $142,744.62. In the first place, it does not seem right to me that we should undertake such a large construction without sufficient data, without knowing exactly what it will cost, or, at all events, without having sufficient data to show how far the finances of the country will be engaged in that work. But there was wide suspicion in many places with reference to that contract. The contractors on public works are men well known everywhere. The ordinary tenderers for these large works are well known by all the community who take any share in the building of public works. The name of Bancroft, however, was not known anywhere, and everyone was asking himself, who is that Bancroft? The contract had been going on since the month of March, 1889, or over two years; cheques were constantly signed by Bancroft, the plans were signed by Bancroft, but The matter Bancroft was to be found nowhere. was brought before this House in the form of a notice of motion asking for the papers. The papers asked for came in after a considerable delay, but they were incomplete. What part of the papers came here appeared to be right enough. Bancroft's name and Bancroft's signature were there with his seal, and all the papers were prepared with all the ordinary formalities of law, but we had no idea who was the famous man. We could find no clue whatever to his whereabouts, except that, in his tender, his post office address was given, and it was 524 of the post office at Kingston. Then we enquired who is the proprietor of the Kingston post office box 524, or rather who was the proprietor at the date when the tender was prepared and sent into the department. We could not obtain any answer. The Government was earnestly requested | the ramparts built around Bancroft and around his Mr. LAURIER.

to grant the information. We told the Government: You have any number of officials at Kingston; you receive money there for the post office boxes; you must have a register of those who pay money for those boxes; when your inspector goes there he must have the names submitted to him, or how could be check the exactitude of the accounts if the vouchers were not there, and if, by an extraordinary occurrence, there is no record kept of that, surely amongst the numerous officials of the post office you will find one with a sufficient memory to remember who went daily to the post office for letters and papers addressed to Mr. Bancroft two years ago. But that was of no avail; the contract was going on with Mr. Bancroft, and the cheques were being issued monthly and weekly to pay Mr. Bancroft, and the Parliament of Canada was laughed at. But we were decided not to give up, and we began an enquiry in the Public Accounts Committee. We could not go straight to Mr. Connolly, of whose existence, unfortunately, we were sure. We went round the citadelor round the fortress and we brought in those persons who had had any connection with the signature of the contract. We brought in Mr. Saucier. A gentleman had been introduced to him by Mr. Gobeil, both Mr. Gobeil and Mr. Saucier being employés of the Department of Public Works, as Mr. Bancroft. So he had seen Mr. Bancroft signing the contract and also signing the numerous plans which are now on the Table of the House. We brought Mr. Gobeil. He knew not Mr. Bancroft, but a gentleman of that name had been introduced to him by Mr. Connolly. Then we got in the officer of the Finance Department. He knew nothing about Bancroft, but he had received a cheque signed Bancroft, and then we guessed that the Union Bank of Ottawa must know something about Bancroft, that that bank must have accepted Bancroft's cheque, because that cheque must have been accepted on the 28th March, the very day on which the tenders were filed, and there was no possibility for a cheque accepted in Quebec on that date to reach Ottawa on the same day. We got the manager, Mr. Anderson. He had seen the cheque and had accepted the cheque under the following circumstances: The Quebec Union Bank had placed $20,000 at the disposal of Mr. Nicholas Connolly, to be payable at his order in the Ottawa Mr. Bancroft never filed Union Bank. an appearance there. Mr. Nicholas Connolly went there with cheque signed by Bancroft and that $20,000 should be placed to the credit of Bancroft. He immediately tendered Bancroft's cheque, got it accepted, and that is the cheque which reached the department. Then we had no Bancroft again. We had only the cheque with a We were of opinion that it was a new signature. forgery; it looked very much like it, but we had Then we decided to attack the no evidence of it. citadel itself, and we called in the Messrs. Connolly. Mr. Michael Connolly came in, and, if you refer to the evidence given before the Committee, on page 8, question 142, you will find that Bancroft does not exist; Bancroft has never existed; he is a supposed party; he is a fraud; he is one of the means employed to deceive, not only the Government, but the whole people of the Dominion of We then to-day have the evidence, in spite of the Post Officce Department, in spite of fraud and forgery, we have irresistible evidence and Connolly's tender were both accompanied by a that Bancroft does not exist, and that the Government of Canada are going on with a contract with a fictitious party. All those plans you see there, all the contracts that are here, all the tenders that were sent in bearing the name of Bancroft and all his letters are false documents constituting a forgery and being the means of obtaining money and valuable consideration under false pretexts. You will remark, Mr. Speaker, that, so soon as the attention of the Government was called to that contract, so soon as the Government found out that we were looking into the matter in order to find who that Bancroft was, their inevitable duty was to cancel the contract at once and put a stop immediately to that gross fraud. Unfortunately they did not do so, and to-day it is my duty to call those facts to the attention of this House and to lay down before the country, the facts of the case as I understand them. Now, what are the fact of the case? In 1889 tenders were called for in the public papers, in the usual way, which were to be received by the department on the 28th March, 1889. They were received, 20 in number, sealed in an envelope, on the 28th and opened on the 29th. And by whom were they opened? The usual custom was to have the tenders opened by Mr. Perley, the Chief Engineer, with either Mr. Baillairge or Mr. Gobeil, but this custom was not followed. They were opened by Mr. Baillairgé and Mr. Gobeil, Mr. Perley not being there. I do not quote this circumstance to draw any consequence from it, but I say it was one of the many circumstances that are of a nature to indicate that there was something extraordinary in connection with this contract. The notices for tenders contained the following words:

"Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed form supplied, and accompanied by letters examined the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality, have satisfied themselves as to the nature of the materials to be excavated, and the foundation for the coffer-dam and its probable cost. The tender must be signed with the actual signature of the tenderer."

It was, then, most distinctly stated to all the contractors that they must fyle with their tenders a letter to the effect mentioned in this notice, and they must sign with their own signature, otherwise their tenders would not be considered. In spite of that notice Bancroft's tender was not accompanied by the letter requested. It is not to be found in the records, though all the other tenders except Connolly's and another one, out of the 20, are accompanied with the necessary letter. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, there must be an object in requiring the signature of the actual tenderer, and what is the object? Most decidedly it must be in order that the Government may know exactly with whom they are dealing; they do not want to deal with a man declared by the courts or by Parliament to be unworthy of holding a contract from the public; they do not want to deal with men of tarnished reputation, or with insolvent persons, or with persons who are known in the past to have executed fraudulent contracts. In the present case, after having exacted those conditions from the public at large, when the question comes up of accepting the tender of Bancroft, the Government do away with the condition, and thus do injustice to those who have complied with the condition. This circumstance is very important, and shows that scmething wrong was going on in the department. Bancroft's tender cheque of $20,000, and those two cheques were in the handwriting of the same party. That is another circumstance which should have opened the eyes of the department. Connolly, the writer of the two cheques, was well known, as will be seen in a moment, by the department. Now, there is another circumstance which should have awakened the suspicion of the department. Connolly's tender—and I speak of it because it is now before the House,is written in a disguised handwriting, it is written in a kind of moulded handwriting, but the figures are not; and if you compare the figures in Bancroft's tender and Connolly's tender, you will see that they were written by the same hand. Now, all of these tenderers, with the exception of Bancroft, were perfectly well known to any one who is at all conversant with the construction of large buildings in this country. Bancroft alone was not Should not that fact have opened the known. Should not that fact have opened the eyes of the department and of its head? I am sure that if Connolly had come immediately after Bancroft's tender, we would have seen in that case what we have have seen so frequently elsewhere, that is, the lowest tenderer disappearing and Con-nolly remaining the lowest tenderer. That was evidently the object in putting Brancroft's tender at a low figure. But when the tenders were opened it was found that between Bancroft's and the Connolly's, there were five other tenderers. It was impossible to undertake the task of buying them all off; there were too many interested, there were too many influences supporting the different tend-So Bancroft had to be held to, or the Connollys would have been deprived of the contract for the Kingston Graving Dock. And who were those parties? Bancroft's tender was $260,680. Messrs. Randolph Macdonald & J. A. Aylmer came next at $265,810, a difference of less than $5,000 between the two. Next came Messrs. Henry Macfarlane & O. E. Murphy, for $285,300.75; next came James Richardson, John Gaskin, Thomas Henry, George G. Wilson & James Swift, at $297,955.01; next came George Goodwin, at $301,033.55; next Mr. F. B. McNamee, at $317,967; after that came Nicholas & Michael Connolly for the sum of $322,576. That was ascertained on the 29th of March. From that date to the 4th of April we hear nothing of the tenders; we do not see that the department took any action whatever, everything remained silent in the pigeonholes of the department. Then, two letters reached the department on the 4th of April, and those two letters are well worthy of consideration. Everything in them is remarkable. I will first give communication of those letters to this honourable House. One is dated from the "Russell House." I may say here that I tried to find out from the "Russell House" who Bancroft was, but the man was perfectly unknown there. He had never been there under any circumstances. He had not been there either at the date mentioned or at any other date. That letter reads as follows, and is in the handwriting of Michael Connolly, so well known to the department:

[&]quot;OTTAWA, 4th April, 1889. A. GOBEIL, Esq.,

" I have the honour to be, Your obedient servant, "ANDREW C. BANCROFT."

Next to that is M. K. and N. Connolly's letter. Many letters from them may be found in the department, but this one is on a small sheet of paper, type-written—an unusual way for the Connollys to communicate with the department. Who had told Bancroft and the Connollys that both of them had to write to the Secretary instead of the Minister or the Chief Engineer, I do not know. At all events, the Connollys wrote as follows:-"OTTAWA, 4th April, 1889.

"A. Gobeil,
"Secretary, Department Public Works,
"Ottawa, Ont.

"Dear Sir,—We desire to inform the Department of Public Works that, in the event of Mr. A. C. "Very respectully yours,

" N. K. & M. CONNOLLY."

The officers of the department and the Minister must have asked themselves, how is it that so soon as the tenders were sent in, six days after each of the tenderers had made a deposit of $20,000, they are ready to form a partnership. What are the reasons? Why did they not decide to go into partnership before tendering? What had occurred since, that should induce them to form a partner-Who told them that Bancroft's tender was the lowest? How did they get their informationthrough whom? For they must have known it. Yet nothing has transpired from the department, not one letter had been sent, no communication had been made, at least avowedly, by any one to the tenderers, though they combined together to become partners, without any plausible reason whatever being made or given. That partnership was of itself very suspicious, and should have aroused the suspicions of the department. those two letters being received by the department, what do we find occurring the next day? Mr. Perley wrote to Sir Hector Langevin, Minister of Public Works, in the following terms:

"CHIEF ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
"OTTAWA, 5th August, 1889.

"Sir.—Of the tenders that have been received for the construction of a dry dock at Kingston, Ont., the lowest is submitted by Mr. A. C. Bancroft.

"The amount of Mr. Bancroft's tender is much below an estimate prepared by myself—"

You will remark, Mr. Speaker, and we will have occasion perhaps to notice, that contracts have been refused because tenders were lower than the estimates prepared by the chief of the department. In this instance, and it is a very remarkable one, the chief engineer says: "Bancroft's tender is much below an estimate prepared by myself." What is Mr. AMYOT.

There is an officer to whom we pay $4,000 a year and who receives pourboires besides, and he has to write without rendering an account to anyone, to decide in his office privately what would be the cost of the work, and he is accountable to no one. We are asked to-day to believe his word, without even knowing what was the amount he arrived at, and by how many hundreds and thousands of dollars Bancroft's tender was lower than his estimate we do not know. He goes on to say:

-"and in my opinion would have but little margin for person inexperienced in the construction of a dry dock-

Who told him Bancroft was inexperienced? Who told Mr. Perley that Bancroft had had no experience in building that kind of dock? This is asserted as a matter of fact by him under his oath of office in a communication to the Minister, and by the Minister transmitted with his recommendation to the Executive Council. Under the sanction of his signature it is asserted that Bancroft had had no experience in building docks. Such an act of boldness in the administration of public affairs has not yet been seen in this country, and I hope will not be seen much longer-

The Honourable
"Sir Hector Langevin, K.C.M.G., C.B.,
"Minister of Public Works."

Will you tell me, Mr. Speaker, how it is that with Messrs. Connolly a tender much below the official estimate of the cost may be accepted and a contract executed, and yet with Bancroft alone the same could not be executed? The Government asks for a tender to-day in a part of the country where I have never gone. I have some funds at my disposal at the bank either personally or by the help of friends. I employ an engineer. He takes the plans submitted by the department and makes estimates and gives me the probable cost. When receive the contract I need not go there at all. may have my employés there and the assistance of engineers to do the work, and there are the officers of the department to see that the plans and schedules of the department are properly carried What has the personal experience of the tenout. derer to do with the matter? At all events, we see, under the signature of Mr. Perley, that Bancroft was a person inexperienced and that the Connollys were experienced. The truth is that Bancroft did not exist, and that the Connollys had too much experience for them to be entrusted with any work for this country. This was on the 5th of April. On the 12th of April the Minister reports to the Executive Council, and on the 15th of April the Executive Council approves of Bancroft and the Connollys receiving the contract, and the work went on. They have been going on for many months, and perhaps we would never have known anything about it if this enquiry the amount of that estimate we do not know. had not been opened, because nobody could dream of such audacity and perversity as these men It was not the chief engineer that had made the coming to this country under false names to obtain such contracts. But let us see how the low price? was made up for at which the contract had been much. It had more weight, of course, when they awarded. On the 2nd July, 1890, Mr. Louis Coste for the chief engineer-Mr. Perley is not therehe has reported it is true that Bancroft had no experience, but to report further it requires some

I ask myself, Mr. Speaker, by whom the attention of the department was called to the fact that the entrance of the Kingston Dock was not of sufficient width? That is an important matter for us to con-We should know where that officer, Mr. Coste, has taken his false information, as we shall see in a moment. We should know wherein he has received his information to boldly contradict, in an official report, the affirmation of the hon. Minister of Public Works previously made in this House. By whom was he informed of that? Did any marine interest ask for that widening; did any mariners ask for it; did the press ask for it; did any interest whatever say that the entrance to the dock was too small? No, Sir, they did not; but here we see in a report by Mr. Coste, in the absence, for some cause which we do not know, of Mr. Perley, he writes that the attention of the department has been drawn to the fact that the entrance to the Kingston dock is not of sufficient width. Now, we have the declaration of Sir Hector Langevin on the 22nd March, 1889, that an entrance of 48 feet would be sufficient for the largest vessels that ply on the lakes. This was officially stated on the floor of this House. What ship had been enlarged since that statement was made; has there been any new ship on the lakes, or has the Cibola been swelled since then? At all events after this letter, which was, as I said, written on the 2nd of July, we see that on the 5th of July a report dated on the 2nd of July, is sent to Council, which approves of the same and the report of Mr. Coste is contained in the report of the Executive Council. The report of Council is as follows:

"On a memorandum dated the 2nd July, 1890, from the Minister of Public Works admitting that the plans and specifications prepared for the construction of the Dry Dock. at Kingston, Ont., which is now under contract, provide for an entrance to the dock 48 feet wide. The Minister states that attention having been called to the fact that the entrance to the Kingston dock, as proposed, is not of sufficient width to accommodate all the steamers and propellers plying on Lake Ontario and the River St. Lawrence and which will hereafter use this dock for repairs, some of which have a breadth of beam of nearly 55 feet, such as the Cibola of the Niagara River Line, the chief engineer advises that the width of the entrance be increased from 48 to 60 feet."

The Minister further states that this alteration will experience, but to report further it requires some other engineer. Mr. Louis Coste for the chief engineer, as I have said, writes to the department in the following terms:

"Sir.—The attention of the department having been called to the fact that the entrance to the Kingston Dock."

"The Minister further states that this alteration will not entail the modification of the present contract as far as prices are concerned, the only change being in the mode of construction of the masonry, which will have to be built to suit a caisson 12 icet longer than had been originally intended. (Sgd.) "JOHN J. McGEE,
"Clerk of Privy Council,
"To the Hon. Minister of Public Works."

Now, Mr. Speaker, we must understand the position as it was then. It was authorized on the 5th July, 1890, to enlarge the entrance of the dock from 48 to 60 feet, which, of course, diminished the size of the walls of the entrance by 12 feet. change was authorized on the specific conditions that it would entail no further cost, and that the country would not have to pay one cent for that change. I suppose that up to that point I will be told that there could have been no objection if the work was as good as had been done. But let us see what occurred after that. The same Mr. Coste, still "for the chief engineer." on the 22nd July, 1890, writes again to the department as follows:

"SIR,—On the 5th instant, an Order in Council was passed granting authority to increase the width of the entrance to the graving dock at Kingston from 48 feet to 60 feet, in order to accommodate all steamers and propellers plying on Lake Ontario and the River St. Lawrence, and which will ultimately use this dock for re-

"This Order in Council was passed on the recommendation of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works, after a report made by myself, acting for the chief engineer.

"In this report made after a rapid examination of the plans, I stated that the alteration in the width of the entrance would not entail any modification of the present contract as far as prices were concerned, the only change being in the mode of construction of the masonry which would have to be built to suit a caisson twelve feet longer than originally intended.

"I now have to state that offer a week to the state that offer a week to state that offer a week to state that of the state that of the than originally intended.

"I now beg to state that after a more thorough examination of the locality and plans, and with more information furnished by Mr. W. O. Strong, the engineer in charge at Kingston, I have arrived at the conclusion that it is not necessary to widen the entrance to 60 feet, 55 feet being ample width to permit of all vessels now built or likely to be built on Lake Ontario to enter the dock. The widest Canadian vessel now affoat is the Cibola, of the Niagara River Line, whose beam is 55 feet.

"The detailed examination of the plans shows, however, that this change in width will entail an extra expenditure of about $34,000, made up as follows:"

He gives the details, and then goes on:

"It is obvious, however, that with this comparatively small extra expenditure (the estimated cost of the dock is about $350,000) the Kingston Graving Dock will be greatly improved, inasmuch as it will be available to all Canadian vessels which may have to use it, and I have therefore no beginning to the cost that propriet in the granted to make the hesitation to ask that permission be granted to make the change.

"I am. Sir, "Your obedient servant, (Sgd.) "LOUIS COSTE."
"For Chief Engineer."

This report was approved by Sir Hector Langevin and presented to the Council, who approved of the same on the 7th of August, Now, Mr. Speaker, if we look at the details of this letter, we find that the first report of Mr. Coste was made hastily, without due information, and was erroneous. Really, item, the preceding one, for an allowance of 705 Mr. Speaker, would any man watching over his own cubic yards of concrete extra cement, difference in interests keep in his service one second an employe who would without due care advise him to make a change of 12 feet in the entrance of a dock, costing over $300,000? Well, that man, who wrote on the 2nd July, comes back on the 22nd, twenty days later, and says: My first report was hastily made, and here is another one more carefully made; and the Government accepted that second report ;—a man who in the very same letter says: I act without any reflection; I act as a child; therefore the conclusion should be, do not believe, do not trust me. In the very same letter, however, he advises the Government to incur an expense of $34,000 in round figures, and for what? He had said some days previously that to widen the entrance from 48 feet to 60 feet would cost nothing, not a cent; but on the 22nd of July he says that to enlarge the entrance from 48 feet to 55 feet will cost $34,000. Where is the man who is able to support such a report as that? Where is the man who would give one minute's credit to an engineer, whatever may be his name, or his age, who, over his own signature, advises the Government to accept such data as that? And I am sorry to see that the Minister in charge of the department, whose activity has been so often boasted of, has signed and endorsed that report, and that it has been reported in detail to the Council, and adopted. You will see, Mr. Speaker, that at the date, the 22nd of July, 1890, the total estimated cost of the Kingston graving dock is put at $350,000; but on the 25th February, the hon. Minister of Public Works had said to this House:

"The total estimated cost of the dock, including everything, is $318,000; and this is required to complete the dock."

That is when the amount of $160,000 was asked this Parliament. But on the 19th of March last we find that the $160,000 asked for to complete the works had not been found sufficient, and a special warrant was issued, signed by His Excellency, for $60,000 more. I need not give the details. The usual formalities were fulfilled: the engineer made his request, the officer approved, the Governor in Council ratified, and special warrant was granted. But, Sir, when this special warrant was applied for, some new wants must have been born somewhere; and the chief engineer, over his own signature, gives us a detail of the probable cost of the whole work, which was no longer $318,000, nor $350,000, but $450,744.62. It had increased by over $100,000 above the highest estimate previously given, which was stated by the hon. Minister of Public Works on the floor of this House; and that change in the contract, widening the dock from 48 feet to 55 feet which it was agreed to put at $34,000, was no longer $34,000; it had reached $50,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have not been able to procure yet the last progress estimate. The only one we could get was the one up to the 31st of March last. I see by that last estimate, the last item is this extra work or coffer dam, ordered the 15th of August, 1890, $10,000, and that is due to the widening of the dock. That is one of the consequences of the change made in the contract, not foreseen by Mr. AMYOT.

price per yard $1.40, or $987. I give those details to show that the increase in the cost is due to extra payments unduly made to the contractors. But I have been surprised not to have been able to obtain at the department or at the Committee of Public Accounts, where they were ordered, the last progress estimates of the work. I understand they have been sent to Kingston, and the officers of the department are censurable for having sent such documents without keeping copies for the use of this House, more especially when the House is sitting and when these officers knew this matter was being investigated by one of the Committees of this House. I have received information that the increase in the cost of the widening is due to the fact that the coffer dam has given away twice, causing very large expense. These damages should not be sustained by the country. They should be borne by the contractor, for if he is not able to build a proper coffer dam, he should bear the loss. I believe that, under these circumstances, we have not yet received the necessary papers. We have not the details, we have not the estimated cost, made out by the engineer, of the total work, we have not the probable cost of the extra work, we have not the necessary documents to form a competent opinion, and I draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to this point, that he should at once see that an engineer is appointed to investigate into the whole matter. Let me read to the House words which have been spoken not far from here:

I ask the Government to join with us on this occasion in trying to find out all the facts concerning the alleged rascality I am now discussing. It is their bounden duty to do so. They have gone too far in withholding information which would have enabled us at once to establish the fraud before the They have gone too far in proceeding country. with the execution of a contract with a fictitious individual represented by criminals and rascals. Let me quote again the words spoken by the leader of the Government in the other chamber:

"We ask them to give us the benefit of their experience "We ask them to give us the benefit of their experience in this enquiry, to assist us in ascertaining the facts and placing them before the public, in order that they may be dealt with properly, and if found guilty that summary vengence may be exercised upon those who are found guilty of appropriating public money—stealing—be they high or low. That is the recommendation of the Government and this side of the House."

Well, Sir, I apply these words to our honourable adversaries, and I tell them it is their duty to join hand in hand with us in finding out rascality wherever it exists and punishing the criminals wherever found, whether high or low in the ranks of society. It is the duty of the Government to help us in raising the standard of public morals in this country. The First Minister went on to say:

"I appeal to my hon. friends opposite to assist us in an enquiry of a precisely similar kind to that which is proceeding in another place on a subject which is legitimately before us, and help us to probe that enquiry to the bottom and then join us in punishing the guilty afterwards."—Hon. Mr. Abbott's Speech in Senate.

These words were repeated by the Tory press all over the Dominion. But there must be equal justhe contract, and would seem to me to add to the tice applied to all, and I hope the Government total cost the amount of $34,000. There is another will hear my humble voice, and join us in what we ask them to do. I have shown the facts of the case, as far as I could ascertain them. Whether there is anybody in the concern interested with the Connollys I do not know; there has been no quarrel between the brothers Connolly; their letters and telegrams have not been given to any outsider and we do not know what has occurred. There may be some reply to my charges, but the thing looks very suspicious. I cannot say if any information was given to the department, but I would draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that in the tender of the Connollys, handwriting is discovered which looks very much like the handwriting of some one of the officers of the Department of Public Works, whose handwriting is on some of the papers submitted to this House. Now, how is it that the Government were not informed of these facts before? We have at Kingston a young and, I suppose, worthy officer of the name of Perley junior, the son of the gentleman who, by misfortune, received a testimonial and for whom was intended another testimonial of $2,000, the whereabouts of which we cannot find to-day. That young Mr. Perley cost us in the year 1888-89 the sum of $1,851.71; and how is it that neither father nor son ever informed the Government of what was going on? Can they have been transacting business in the name of the country with a man whose existence was only supposed? If I look to the opinions of the press, I find that over a month ago in a leading paper, it was written:

"The case should be investigated without delay. Sir Hector, Mr. Perley senior and Mr. Perley junior must tell us how they came to let a work of such magnitude to a non-existent person; why they allowed some one else to write his cheques and letters and even to sign the contract for him; why they allowed the work to be carried on for an hour without demanding to see him in the flesh; and why they increased the contract price by 80 per cent, with much else that is painfully obscure. Let the two Perleys accept a friendly hint and make a clean breast of this matter at once. It may prove a more serious business for them than any yet unearthed."

The two Perleys did not take the hint, nor did the Minister of Public Works, nor did the Government, nor did the hon. the Postmaster General, who shielded the guilty parties by not giving us the required information. That act of his made the Government an accessory after the fact to the crime that had been committed. That crime consisted first of forgery. All these signatures of Bancroft on these plans and contracts and letters are forgeries, and when we dare commit forgeries with such a party as the Dominion of Canada, we must feel that we have a strong hold on the party, that we have a strong hold on all the organized power that This audacity indicates reigns and commands. a state of things which is deplorable to the utmost. These signatures, and this tender, and this cheque are not only forgeries, but they are actually obtaining money under false pretences, at the detri-ment and loss of the private individuals concerned whom I named a moment ago. This contract was for a large sum. All the profits that the other tenderers would have made have been taken away from them, have been stolen from them by a forgery, and a That fact alone should be suffirepeated forgery. cient to open the gates of the penitentiary for the guilty parties, and it is not only towards the individuals that there has been criminal action. The country has been induced to give value under false pretenses. Then, it is a forgery, it is the crime of obtaining value under false pretenses, and it is a real crime of robbery against all the tenderers who were lower than the Connollys. The facts I have enunciated imply a gross negligence on the part of the officers of the department to whom this country has given charge of so many millions of dollars and wherein such large sums are spent yearly. will remember that I said in the beginning that no letter accompanied the first tender, in spite of the notice. You have seen the most extraordinary changes made in spite of common sense, in the works. I have shown you that—I will not say fraudulent—but extraordinary payments have been made for coffer-dams without our knowing for what reason, this country would have to pay for the errors in the building or in the works committed by the contractors. Under these circumstances, so as to put a check to the audacity of men like the Connollys and their accomplices, if any there are, I intend to propose a motion to this House. It looks very much as if they had accomplices because, if they were alone, they would not dare to go on with false names. Would any man venture to go to the Government of the United States, or to England, or to France, and sign a tender under a false name and another tender under his own name, and hope to get a contract under the false name of the party whom he fancies or asserts to exist? This indicates a very strange set of things, and it is time that all honest men in this country who do not despair of the future of Canada should join together in this matter; and I beg the Minister of Justice to help us to bring the guilty parties before the courts, where they will meet with the punishment which they deserve. I move that all words after "That" in the original motion be erased, and the following substituted in lieu thereof :-

The documents and papers submitted to Parliament in relation to the Kingston graving dock contract, and the evidence taken before the Committee on Public Accounts and reported to this House, show that gross fraud and forgery were committed in connection with the said contract, and culpable negligence in connection with the letting of said contract, and the changes made in the terms thereof, and the payments made under said changes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, the Minister of Finance called the attention of gentlemen on the other side of the House this afternoon to an arrangement which was made in pursuance of a courtesy which has prevailed in this House for many years, and which, though not of other obligation, has generally been accepted. Under this arrangement it was understood that notice should be given to the Government of any motion to be made on going into Committee of Supply. That custom has been departed from for some totally unexplained reason this afternoon, and a motion has been sprung upon the House involving, apparently, serious considerations, without the customary courtesy having been extended, though last night the customary courtesy was exacted from this side of the House to state what business we proposed to take up this There is only one explanation of this afternoon. course possible, and that is that it is considered desirable that the judgment of this House should be asked on this question without the House being fully informed of all the facts. If hon, gentlemen opposite choose to assume that position, I have no doubt the country as well as the House will understand how much more desirable it is that public questions should be debated on principles of fair-play, after explanation is given which both sides of the House may understand, before the Government in transactions which he says ought House pronounces judgment in regard to any to be stigmatized with the names of forgery and public department. It was probably considered more opportune that, even without the evidence which has been taken upstairs and which was then being printed and distributed, the judgment of the House that afternoon should be asked upon the question; but when the point was raised and it was seen that we were entitled to have the evidence upon which the hon. gentleman was addressing us, he agreed to defer his motion, without any intimation of the day when it was to come on, or of the fact that he intended to move upon the question at all. think every member on this side of the House supposed that his intention in addressing the House the other afternoon was to call attention to the facts of the case merely, or to put some questions to the Government for the information of the House. I shall not pretend to follow him into the details of ; at the time for receiving tenders, down came a the facts arising in this case. Every member of tender in the name of one Bancroft, and it hapthe House who is free from prejudice will understand perfectly, and everybody who takes pains to examine this debate hereafter, will understand, that in relation to a transaction of that kind, not only involving the evidence which was taken before the Public Accounts Committee, and which we have had an opportunity of reading, but involving likewise a discussion as to the papers which have been in the hon, gentleman's possession, and which we have not had access to since, and had no notice that they would be brought before the House this afternoon, it would be folly to attempt to follow the hongentleman or to make an argument upon the details of the case. Now, I may add that yesterday afternoon, in pursuance of the hon, gentleman's request that I should give him further papers upon this subject, I handed to him, immediately on receiving them from the Department of Public Works, twelve documents not one of which I have opened myself or seen, but he has had the privilege of addressing the House upon them this afternoon, whereas if I had chosen to keep them from him, he would have lost part of his case as he would not have had an opportunity of informing himself upon it. I mention that for the purpose of showing the absurdity of any attempt to discuss, with any degree of fairness, a question of this kind, and I think the judgment of the House will be that we ought not to adopt the resolution brought forward under such circumstances, even if the case were as strong as the hon. gentleman has put it to the House. Now, with regard to the observations which the hon, gentleman has made upon this question, I shall have nothing to say as to the terms in which he has stigmatized the conduct of the contractors of whom he has spoken as having committed forgery; but when the hon, gentleman carries his reflections further, as he has done, and stigmatizes persons connected with the Department of Public Works as conniving at this, as being in complicity with it, and when he has even made a statement here it is the fictitious name on which the hon. gentle-rage which was committed by such a resolution being proposed is intensified ten-fold by the disgraceful terms in which it was advocated. was as regard this transaction, and as regards the use of this anonymous name. I repeat that I do not intend to challenge the hon, gentleman's observation that forgery was committed upon the department by the persons who put forward a fictitious name; that may be so, it is probably so; but I shall be able to show the House easily, by a reference to the evidence taken before the Committee of Public Accounts, that that forgery or that pretense was not put forward successfully upon the department through any want of ordinary care and vigilance on the part of the officers of the department. deed, I think that the hon, gentleman has made a case calling upon me to show that the public of this country has not suffered by the circumstance of a fictitious name having been used on that occasion. Now, Sir, what was the transaction in so far as it relates to the use of a fictitious name? It is that when the tenders were called for by the department pened to be the lowest tender by at least $5,000. What was to be done with it? It was regular in every point of form, it was accompanied by a cheque payable to the order of the Minister for the requisite deposit of $20,000. In so far as any official of the Public Works Department was concerned, it was just as genuine as any other tender. Now, here was a tender coming in from a distant city, from a person named Bancroft entirely unknown in the department, but in the regular form and accompanied by a cheque for the money. Now, it is true that in one particular there was an irregularity connected with that tender. The call that was made for tenders required that they should be accompanied by a letter stating that the person signing had visited the locality and made himself familiar with the work to be done. The letter did not accompany this particular tender, that was a technical irregularity. It might have empowered the Minister of Public Works to reject the tender; but he would have been assailed here more strongly than he has been this afternoon for throwing away $5,000 of public money, and not giving the contract to the lowest tenderer, but taking a higher tender merely for a technical irregularity like that. It was an irregularity which the Minister could waive and which, under the circumstances which followed, he was justified in waiving, because, as I shall remind the House when I come to that circumstance in particular, before the contract was signed, persons became associated with Bancroft who were known to the department, known to be familiar with work of that kind, known to have erected the graving dock at Esquimalt, and known to be reliable contractors as far as their ability to execute the work and their means o execute the work were concerned. So that at the outset the tender of Bancroft came before the department in proper order-laying aside the irregularity as to the letter, which does not touch the question of the fictitious name—and that the Postmaster General had implicated the man has built his whole indictment this afternoon.

This tender came before the department in the regular and ordinary way, and was accompanied by a cheque for the money. What was the next step? The next step was to inform this person, Bancroft, that his tender had been accepted, that his tender was the lowest, and that the contract would be awarded to him. Then, even if he were unknown to the department, even if the slightest breath of suspicion attached to his existence, his reality would be put to the test; and remember that in all the investigation which has taken place before the Committee of Public Accounts there is not one word of testimony that any suspicion existed in the minds of a single person connected with the Department of Public Works as to the genuineness of that tender, or as to the existence of Bancroft. The case would have stood against the department in very different terms if anybody had been able to say that the attention of any single official had been called to the fact that it might be possibly a fictitious tender, but it was not. In good faith and in the ordinary course, a letter was sent to Bancroft's address stating that his tender was the lowest and would be accepted. What came in reply? Why, there came in reply a letter which sents himself to signthecontract. What guarantee, would tend not to awaken suspicion as to the existence of Bancroft, but, on the contrary, a letter which would have lulled any suspicion, if any had existed, a letter acknowledging the receipt of the communication, stating that the tender would be accepted and informing the department that he had associated the Connollys with him, who were known to the department, and who had the necessary means, plant and experience to carry on the work. The next step the hon, gentleman complained of was that there was then a report, or a statement of the engineer, saying that Bancroft had had no experience in work like that in Canada; and the hon, gentleman asks, who could tell that he had had no such experience? Well, it was not very difficult to tell, because there had been only three graving docks constructed in Canada, and every one connected with the department knew that Bancroft had had no connection with them in the capacity of contractor or in any capacity known to the officers of the departments. But they knew of the Connollys. They have become famous since, I admit; but the Minister and the officers of the Public Works Department under Mr. Perley, certainly, had no reason to suppose that the Connollys were not competent as contractors, for it is no secret that the work which they have done upon their contracts is above reproach as regards quality of workmanship at least. Therefore, when the letter came from the supposed Bancroft, stating that he had associated the Connollys with him, the officers of the department had at least the assurance that he had men with him possessing abundance of plant and means, and experience, too. Under these circumstances the contract was awarded. The hon, gentleman has addressed the House this afternoon as if it were an extraordinary circumstance that when this tender from Bancroft came in, some one did not at once scent a mystery, and say there was no such man in Why, the Public Works Department was Canada. not the only establishment imposed on in that How did the so-called Bancroft manage to get the cheque and the money to his credit? One of the Connollys went to a bank and drew | Minister signed the contract as any one of us would from his account $20,000 and put it to the credit of the name of Bancroft, and produced a cheque and asked the manager to certify it, and the cheque drawn by Bancroft the manager of the bank certified. Under these circumstances, with the bank certification that $20,000 stood to the credit of Bancroft at the bank, and was available for the Minister of Public Works, it would have been a very shrewd and prophetic vision that would have conceived the idea that no such man as Bancroft existed. There was another step still. If there had been any suspicion that Bancroft was a fictitious name in the minds of the officers of the Public Works Department, the matter surely could have gone on safely until the time came to sign the contract and then Bancroft would have to appear in the flesh. And somebody did realize in the flesh and appear as Bancroft. safeguard would the hon, member for Bellechase (Mr. Amyot) suggest under these circumstances? what safeguard, would the hon, gentleman suggest? He could only suggest one, that the extraordinary precaution should be taken of having the person identified when he came to sign the contract, as if the cheque for $20,000 were not sufficient identification of him. But in this instance he was identified. The Connollys, who were in and out of the department in connection with other public works every day, or one of them, came to Mr. Gobeil, Secretary of the department, and said: "This is Mr. Bancroft, who comes to sign the contract with Mr. Gobeil goes to the office of Mr. Saucier, who had the document prepared, and Mr. Gobeil introduces the supposed Mr. Bancroft and Connolly to Mr. Saucier, and when the document is spread before them he turns to Mr. Bancroft and says, "Bancroft is to be first to sign." A conversation took place and Connolly, addressing the supposed Bancroft says: "Bancroft, you sign first." Alldown to this time the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has been treating Bancroft as a mere fiction, a myth. But when he appeared in the flesh it was difficult for any officer of the Public Works who had never seen the man before to be gifted with such inspired vision as to say: "You are not Bancroft at all." If the hon, gentleman can find in the public departments of Canada or anywhere else in the country any man gifted with powers of that kind, I can assure the hon. gentleman we will avail ourselves of his services and pay him the highest figure this Parliament will vote for a salary; provided, how-ever, we are at liberty to keep a watch on him, for there would be something very uncanny about him. The supposed Bancroft, twice identified—introduced to Gobeil by Connolly, introduced to Mr. Saucier by Mr. Gobeil and Connolly, stepped forward in the flesh and signed the contract in a plain round hand. Then came the time for Connolly to sign. He did so, and the witness took the document to the Minister of Public Works; and the Minister, having been assured that Bancroft had come forward, had signed, and that Con-nolly had signed too, and that Bancroft's money was there and Bancroft was there himself, the [COMMONS] have done under the circumstances. Yet this is stigmatized by this resolution, and by the hon. mover, as a fraud on the department. So it But it is stigmatized by this resolution as a fraud on the department at which the department connived; and so it was not. So the contract went on, and it was worked at from day to day, from month to month and from year to year, and the name of Bancroft appeared regularly and the signature of Bancroft appeared every time money was to be paid, letters were to be written, or anything was to be done. I think the hon, gentleman's statement that there was a false pretense may be true in the popular sense of the term. There was not a false pretense in drawing the money in the legal sense, because it was signed by other men and the money was paid for actual value given to the people of Canada. The result of it, furthermore, is that while we must stigmatize it as a fraud that might lead, under other circumstances, to dangerous results, and that while we should put a stop to it by any possible means, as a matter of fact we have got a work of solidity and stability, which hon, gentlemen have not raised a doubt about in the long debates which have taken place during this session, from the first time the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) began to enquire with a palpable note of interroga-tion all over him: "Where is Bancroft, and who is Bancroft?" The quality of the work has not been impugned. We have got a good work, $5,000 cheaper than if that pretense had not been made to the department, and a higher tender had been accepted. The documents which the hon, gentleman has read prove this, and hon, gentlemen opposite may shout as long as they please, they cannot shout this fact off the record. If this tender had not been accepted a higher tender would have been accepted. The tender, of course, would not have been accepted if the circumstances had been known, or if it had been suspected by the department that there was no such a man as Bancroft; but without that suspicion, and with everything tending to prove the contrary, the tender was properly accepted and the contract entered into. It was not until late in the session that the circumstances was in any way known to the Minister of Public Works or to any of his officers that Baacroft was not a reality but was merely a fictitious name. The hon, gentleman called our attention to the fact that there had been an enlargement of the dock; and so there was. The dock was widened to the extent of 12 feet. The hon, gentleman declared over and over again, not with any intention of misleading the House, because in other parts of his speech he made admissions which refuted the assertion that this enlargement had been made without the representation of any person whomsoever. But the contrary is the fact. Representations were made in writing to the department that a dock 48 feet in width was not sufficiently wide to accommodate steamers and other vessels then on the St. Lawrence and the lakes. was upon that statement that Mr. Coste was asked to make his report, and that he did report to the department.

Mr. AMYOT. That is not in the record.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon, gentleman had given me notice of his motion I would have given him that record.

Sir John Thompson.

Mr. AMYOT. The record was supposed to be complete long ago.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gontleman knew it was not complete, because, when I handed him those papers yesterday afternoon, I informed him of others which I would endeavour to get for him, which I would get for him, and which were on the way. If the hon, gentleman had told me that he wished to make a motion of this kind on Friday or on Monday, I would have telegraphed and made sure that every available paper was placed before him.

Mr. AMYOT. That is about the final estimate and nothing else.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon, gentleman had informed me of any paper which was missing, I would have taken the utmost pains to have had it for him, and if we had heard last night that a motion on this subject would be brought before the House, that of itself would have been notice that would entitle him to expedition as regard any paper that is not brought down. I have not heard from him any complaint whatever, that the papers which have been brought down do not answer the motion which he made for the papers: but the fact is, that representations were made that a 48 feet dock would not be sufficient for steamers that were upon the St. Lawrence and the lakes. I have accepted the hon, gentleman's statement that that does not appear among the papers, as he has made the statement, but I should like him to look again, because, if I am not much mistaken, as I said a few minutes ago, the subsequent portion of his argument indicated that representations were made, for a instance in regard to the steamer Cibola. If he will examine the fyle of the papers in which that representation in regard to the Cibola appears, he will find that representations were made by the steamship company which owns that steamer, that the dock was not wide enough to accommodate steamers then upon the lakes. It was under these circumstances that Mr. Coste's report was asked. Now, the hon, gentleman has made some strictures against Mr. Coste on the ground that at one time Mr. Coste stated that the widening of the dock would not increase the expense, and that he immediately afterwards withdrew that statement, and gave the Minister a statement of the additional expense. I think that this criticism was a little severe, because Mr. Coste, before his department acted upon his report that the expense would not be increased, before that report could have been acted upon, placed before his Minister a report stating just what the additional expense would, in his opinion, be; and, under these circumstances, I do not think that he should be stigmatized as either unworthy or incapable. The department was not misled, the Government was not misled as regards the question of that increased expense, because as I said before, when it was resolved to increase it we had before us Mr. Coste's corrected statement that an additional expense of at least $30,000 would be incurred by the widening, and the information which I have at the present moment is that Mr. Coste's estimate with regard to the additional expense of widening will not be increased, and that the $30,000 which he stated to be the probable additional expense will cover the amount. I shall not follow the hon. gentleman into his observations with regard to Mr. Perley.

The unhappy circumstances which have connected the name of the father with transactions which every person acquainted with his long public service must indeed very greatly deplore, are accompanied at the same time with circumstances which make it almost inhuman to speak with any degree of severity with regard to him, especially the circumstance that his health is such that it is almost impossible to interrogate hin with regard to these matters now. But I am sure that the hon, gentleman was guilty of unconscious injustice and severity when he threw reflections upon the son, a young man who has been but a year in the public service, whose character and career are unstained by a single defect or a single mistake, so far, and who surely is entitled to pursue his career in life without a stigma being thrown upon him with regard to unworthy motives in the discharge of his duties. I have given the hon, gentleman the reply which courtesy required I should give him. I have given him the best information I could under the circumstances which I indicated a few moments ago.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gentleman who said "hear, hear" will understand me, and endeavour not to misinterpret to the House, as I am sure he would not willingly do. I have had to answer the hon, gentleman who made the attack while the papers were in his hands and without notice that it could come. I have given him an explanation, from which I hope the House will gather that, under the circumstance, the language of the resolution is not that which the House should adopt.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I always listen to the Minister of Justice with the greatest possible attention. This afternoon I was more than usually desirous of paying attention to the hon. the Minister of Justice, because I desired to know exactly how he, as a lawyer and an ex-judge, and a Minister of the Crown, proposed to defend to the Parliament of Canada and before the people of this country the conduct assailed by the hon. member for Bellchasse (Mr. Amyot). The Minister of Justice complained that this motion was sprung upon the House, that he had no notice of it, and that he was not in a position, therefore, to offer the best defence that could be offered. Everybody knows that for the last month, at all events, the subject of Bancroft and the Connollys, and the frauds alleged to have been committed in connection with the Kingston graving dock, has been in everybody's mouth. Everybody knows, and nobody better than the Minister of Justice, that for a month or two my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), together with the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Tarte), have been making statements and making enquiries as to a letter box in the post office in Kingston said to be held or leased by a Mr. Bancroft. Everybody in Parliament knew that the subject was a subject of discussionand enquiry before the Public Accounts Everybody, including the Minister Committee. of Justice, must have seen in the public press the extraordinary and startling statements that were elicited on oath before the Public Accounts Committee. Everybody, a week or ten days ago, must have seen that one of the parties implicated in this contract under oath declared that he was guilty of fraud and forgery in obtaining that con-

The hon. Minister of Justice knew, every member of Parliament who attends to his business knew, that a few evenings ago the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) rose in his place in Parliament with a view of discussing this question. The hon, gentleman should have known—and if he did not know nobody in the House was in the same position—that my hon, friend proposed to bring the subject of this fraud and forgery before the Parliament of this country, and follow that up with a resolution condemning the whole transac-I, therefore, say that the hon. Minister of Justice has no reason to complain that this motion has been sprung upon the House without notice. The hon, gentleman complains that this motion was sprung upon the House with a view of catching a snap verdict from the Parliament of Canada. I assure the hon, gentleman that we have no desire to capture a snap verdict. If we cannot get the verdict of the Parliament of Canada, and the verdict of the country, condemning the Administration opposite on the course they pursued, especially with respect to this contract, we do not want a judgment at all. The facts, so far as anybody can understand them, and so far as we know, are now fairly before Parliament. The hon, gentleman tells us that there are some documents not submitted. Why were they not submitted? Those papers have been asked for by the hon, member for Bellechasse. Some of them the hon. Minister of Justice now tells us are in the possession of the Government still. They have no business to be in the possession of the Government. When a member of Parliament, with the sanction of Parliament, asks for the production of papers upon a great public question, it is the bounden duty of the Government to submit those papers to Parliament; and keeping back this paper or that paper, the Government may rest assured, will not prevent hon. gentlemen on this side of the House from enquiring into the conduct of hon, gentlemen opposite. The hon, gentleman admits that fraud and forgery -as rank a fraud and as gross a forgery as ever the hon, gentleman tried when he occupied a seat upon the bench in his native province--was perpetrated upon the people, and perhaps, according to the hon, gentleman's statement, upon the Government of Canada as well. I say, as gross a fraud-I will go further, and say as gross a piece of connivance, if one can understand the evidence, was committed by the Department of Public Works as was ever committed by an official department in this or any other country; and if there was no criminal connivance on the part of the Department it only shows that those in charge of that department are men utterly unfit to be in charge of any public department; it simply shows that they are nothing less than imbeciles. Now, I propose for a moment or two to direct my attention to this great public work of Canada, the Kingston graving dock; and I think that every unprejudiced man in Parliament, if there are any in Parliament—every unprejudiced man in the country, at all events-will come to the conclusion, from the documents submitted to Parliament, that upon those documents it is as clear as anything possibly can be that there has been criminal connivance with the fraud and forgery of the Connollys, or the grossest negligence on the part of those in charge of the Department of Public-

The history of this fraud is an extraordinary one, and it may be divided into two parts. First, there is the history of the tender and the signing of the contract; and then there is the story of the changes made in the contract and of the moneys paid under these changes. The hon. Minister of Justice said that the country had suffered nothing—that the tax-payers had suffered nothing. Is it nothing, in the hon, gentleman's estimation, that a contract should be increased from $260,000, the original figure, or $318,000, as we were assured by the Minister it would be, to $500,000? In this has no substantial wrong been done to the tax-payers? Is that the notion of fair-play and justice to the people of this country which the Minister of Justice has imbibed since he has become a member of the Administration, that $100,000 or $200,000 is a mere bagatelle, to which the people of this country pay no attention? Verily, the hon. gentleman will find a different state of opinion when he next consults the people of this country. I have said that for the purpose of discussion this subject may be divided into two branches—the history of the tender and the contract, and the story of the changes in the contract and the moneys paid The history of the tender and the contract is a history of fraud and forgery; the history of the changes in the contract and the money paid under it indicates that the scheme was carried out in pursuance of departmental connivance at the fraud and forgery. Now, Sir, let us see chronologically how the story pans out. Tenders were called for: tenders were received. The Connollys sent in a genuine tender, prepared by the Connollys and signed by Michael Connolly; they sent with that tender a genuine cheque, signed with the genuine signature of Michael Connolly; they also sent in with that tender a letter such as the call for tenders makes an imperative condition on which the tenders shall be sent in, written by Michael Connolly and signed by Michael Connolly; and all these documents, as I understand the rules of the department, were submitted to the Minister of Public Works. tion to that genuine article, they sent in the forged tender of Andrew C. Bancroft—forged by whom? By Michael Connolly, whose genuine tender with his genuine signature was before the eyes of the Minister of Public Works. They sent also the forged cheque accompanying the forged tender of Andrew C. Bancroft, and that forged cheque was signed by Michael Connolly. The Minister of Public Works, before he was called upon to decide whose tender he should accept, had before him all these documents in the handwriting of Michael Connolly. It was admitted that Michael Connolly was a man well known in the department, a man who had extensive dealings with the department, and his signature was well known in the department; and are we to be told by the hon. Minister of Justice, in justification of his late colleague, that the Minister of Public Works, with all these documents before his eyes, was so blind that he could not distinguish Michael Connolly's signature on one document from Michael Connolly's signature on another document? Are we to be told that he closed his eyes, that he was blind, that he could Sir, upon no other theory can the hon, gentleman convince the people of this country that there was not connivance somewhere. Now, of somebody in the Department of Public Works I propose to prove to this Parliament—and I information must have been received by the Con-Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

assume the full responsibility of it—that there was criminal connivance on the part of the Public Works Department with the granting of this contract to Andrew C. Bancroft, and with this fraud and forgery. Twenty tenders were submitted to the Minister. It is only necessary to consider three of them. The rest are of no consequence. One, and the lowest, was the Connollys, in the name of Bancroft; the second was that of Macdonald & Aylmer; and the third was the genuine tender of the Connollys. The bogus tender of Bancroft was some $5,000 less than the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer, and $61,000 less than the genuine tender of the Connollys. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask you as a sensible man, not a lawyer, with more brains perhaps than a dozen of them-I ask you, Sir, as a sensible juror, sitting there in the jury box, if you would not ask first, why it was the two Connollys forged Bancroft's name to a tender just $5,000 below Macdonald & Aylmer's tender, when they had their own tender in for $60,000 more than the Bancroft tender? What object had they? Why did they not rest upon their own tender? Why should they put in a bogus tender and forge the name of Bancroft to it, unless they knew at the time that the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer was some $55,000 below their own. That is the only theory which can explain their course, for it cannot be argued for a moment before sensible men that these Connollys did not put in that tender in the name of Bancroft, knowing that, according to the order of the tenders in the department, they were $55,000 above Macdonald & Aylmer's. The conduct of the Connollys, the conduct of the mythical Bancroft, and the conduct of the Department of Public Works, can only be explained upon that theory, and that theory alone. And the theory is further established by this fact, that according to the call for tenders they had to be submitted to the Minister of Public Works on the 28th of March. Singularly enough, Mr. Speaker, and I appeal to you again as a juror, the two Connollys were in Ottawa, registered at the Russell House, on the 28th March. Singularly enough, upon that 28th of March Michael Connolly prepared the Bancroft tender in his own handwriting. Singularly enough, Michael Connolly signed that tender in the name of Bancroft; singularly enough, Michael Connolly admits in his own evidence, I believe, that he carried that tender from the Russell House to the Department of Public Works, and left it with the Minister; and still more singularly, all that was done about the last minute of the last hour of the last day of putting in the tender.

After Recess.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). At six o'clock Sir, I was drawing the attention of the House to the conduct of the department, and pointing that the tender of Bancroft was carried over to the Department the last hour of the last day under suspicious circumstances; and this, in connection with the other circumstances to which I drew the attention of this House, was such evidence as could lead but to one conclusion, namely, that by the connivance of somebody in the Department of Public Works nollys of the position of their tender. In other already pointed out that up to that time he had the words, they must have been aware that the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer was below theirs, and that unless a lower tender was put in, in the name of somebody, they would not get the contract. Now, that is not the only circumstance which Parliament ought to consider. I am free to admit that no Minister of the Crown, no member of the House, no private citizen, ought to be convicted or charged upon mere suspicion. There must be something more than that. There must be such facts and circumstances as can lead the mind of any reasonable man but to one con-Now, the circumstances I have just detailed are not the only ones upon which it is fair to ask Parliament and the people to conclude that the tender of Bancroft was put in through the connivance of some one in the department. What are the other circumstances? The usual practice was followed in this case. Tenders were called for, and in the calling for tenders there were two express conditions clearly and distinctly defined. The first of these conditions was that a letter of the tenderer must accompany his tender, and in that letter it must be shown that the tenderer took steps to make himself conversant with the work to be done and with the material necessary to be used That is an or excavated, as the case might be. essential condition of calling for tenders. The second condition was that the letter and the tender must be signed with the genuine signature of the tenderer. The hon. Minister of Justice, in his remarks, declared that these conditions were trifling and unimportant; that the Minister of Public Works, if he insisted upon those conditions being observed, if he refused to give the contract or to receive separate tenders on the ground that no letter accompanied the tender, would be censurable by this Parliament. The hon. Minister treated this as a matter of no consequence or importance. But, Sir, if that condition is a matter of no consequence, if it is one which the Minister of Public Works has the right to ignore of his own sweet will, why was it inserted as a condition at all in the call for tenders? The tender of Bancroft was not accompanied by that letter, it was not signed with a genuine signature, and in that respect the tender of the Connollys in the name of Bancroft ought to have been rejected by the Minister of Public Works, if for no other reason than that alone. The Minister of Public Works knew perfectly well, when he got the Connolly tender in the name of Bancroft, that one of the conditions in his call for tenders had not been complied with. His plain duty then was to reject that tender as not being The Minister of Public Works did not do so. It is another link in the chain of circumstantial evidence which in my judgment is irresistible, bringing the conclusion to my mind, and I think to the mind of any honest man, that there was connivance somewhere. The tender was not accompanied by a letter. The Minister of Justice said panied by a letter. that was unimportant, and the Minister of Public Works was justified in receiving the tender although it was unaccompanied by the letter. Now, let us see, up to that time, what the Minister of Public Works had before him on which he genuine tender of the Connollys, the genuine cheque of the Connollys, the genuine letter that accompanied their tender, signed at all events by Michael Connolly; he had also the forged tender signed by Michael Connolly and the forged cheque signed by Michael Connolly, and with all these means of information before him, according to the statement of the Minister of Justice, he does not appear to have taken the first step towards finding out whether the signature was genuine or not, and why the necessary condition in the call of tenders was not fulfilled, because the letter so called for was not there. Now, this essential condition of the tender not having been complied with, it was the plain duty of the Minister of Public Works to have rejected that tender. He did not reject it. Why did he not reject it? Because, if he had rejected it the Connollys would not have had the contract, and it would have been awarded to Macdonald & Aylmer, and, consequently, the hon. gentleman set aside the most important condition in his call for tenders, a condition which is inserted in every call for tenders issued by the department. The Minister of Justice says it was of no importance, and the Minister of Public Works would not be censurable for accepting the tender without that condition being complied with. Was the Minister of Justice in Parliament a few years ago when the Government of which he is a member set aside a tender upon a ground which was not as forcible as this? Does he not recollect that the Parliament of Canada, through the Minister of Railways and Canals, called for tenders for the construction of a section of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Moody to Emory's Bar? Does he not know that upon that occasion, as on every other occasion when they called for tenders, they insisted upon a certified cheque accompanying the tenders? Does he not know, at all events by reading the parliamentary proceedings, if not otherwise, that of the tenders which were sent in two were of special importance, one being that of Macdonald & Charlebois, which was the lowest by over $259,000, and the other that of Andrew Onderdonk, which was $259,000 above that of Macdonald & Charlebois? Does the hon, gentleman not know that the tender of Macdonald & Charlebois was accompanied by a marked cheque of the Bank of Montreal, which, by an oversight of the clerk, was marked "good for two days only?" Does he know that on the fifth days of the contract of the cherk of the fifth days of the cherk of the that on the fifth day of the month the Minister sent to the Bank of Montreal here to know if the cheque was still valid and the bank here communicated with the bank in Montreal and received the reply that marking the cheque "good for two days only" was a mistake, and the cheque was good until paid? Does he not know that the department and the Government, and every member of the Government, were notified of the fact that the cheque was perfectly good? Does he not know that the Minister, in face of that notification from the Bank of Montreal, reported to his colleagues that because the cheque, by mistake, was marked "good for two days only," that the tender should be passed over and the contract should be given to Andrew Onderdonk, at a might form an honest opinion as to the cost to the tax-payers of the country of $259,000 genuine signature which the call for tenders required should be with every tender sent in? what documents had he before him? I have more than the amount of the other tender? If he is aware of these facts, how can he, as a lawyer and in meting out one kind of justice to one tenderer and another kind of justice to the other? The firm of Macdonald & Charlebois were in bad odour with the Government at that time. They were not Connollys. They were not ready to come down handsomely, and they did not come down handsomely, and so the Minister ignored the notification he received from the Bank of Montreal, and by that the tax-payers of this country lost $259,000. By the little scheme of the Minister of Public Works, or of the Connollys in connivance with the Minister of Public Works or with his department, this present contract has cost the taxpayers $190,000 more than the contract called for, and $125,000 more than the Minister of Public Works assured the House in 1889 the works could be constructed for. I may be mistaken, and hon. gentlemen may think I am prejudiced, but I can assure hon, gentlemen that when I entered upon the investigation of this matter and read the papers I made a covenant with myself that I would deal fairly and justly with the department as well as with the people of this country; but the irresistible conclusion forced upon my mind was, that there was gross connivance, either on the part of the head of the department or the subordinates of the department, with the Connollys, to give the contract to them in the name of Bancroft. Now, that evidence is further confirmed when we look at the dates, and it is important to consider the dates and to take the docu-We have more than I have ments chronologically. spoken of upon which the Minister of Public Works, if his eyes were open, if he had not made up his mind that the Connollys should get the contract, must have a suspicion in regard to these tenders. On the 4th April we have a letter apparently written by Bancroft and signed in the genuine handwriting of Michael Connolly. On the same date we have a letter from the Connollys, stating that they had associated Bancroft with them, and that if he got the contract they would join him. With all this before him, with these cheques before him, with these two or three letters written by the Connollys to the department before him, and with the letters apparently written by Bancroft, but really written by Connolly, before him, it is aking us to believe too much when we are asked to believe either that the Minister of Public Works or the officials of the department were wholly ignorant of the fact that all these documents were not signed by the Connollys, but some by the Connollys and some by this man Bancroft. Up to the 4th April, 1889, about the time the Minister was considering these tenders, he had before him, in order to form a conclusion as to the bond fides of this man Bancroft, not only the absence of the letter accompanying the tender, which was sufficient to arouse the suspicions of any man, but he had before him the whole of the correspondence and the whole of the tenders, including the genuine tenders, the genuine cheque and the genuine letter of Michael and Nicholas Connolly, and the fraudulent cheque and the fraudulent tender of Bancroft in the handwriting of Michael Connolly; and yet we are asked by the Minister of Justice to believe that the Minister of Public Works and the officials of that department acted in perfect innocence when they gave this contract to a man supposed to be named Bancroft. We are ask to believe that. Mr. Speaker, it is a the fertile imagination of anybody to ask them to believe that all that could take place in the department without exciting a particle of suspicion. There are other circumstances that lead one to the irresistible conclusion that the department did know. I have shown you by these letters that they had notice as clear as the noon-day sun. They had before them such letters and such papers as would lead any reasonable and sensible man to the conclusion that there was something wrong with this tender of Bancroft. We are asked by the Minister to believe this state of facts, that the tender was sent in. that the tender was opened, that the contract was prepared and signed, and yet the Minister of Public Works knew nothing about it. If he did not know anything about it, it was his business to know. What was he there for? For what do the people of this country pay him a salary of $7,000 a year? Where were the Perleys, the Gobeils and the other officials of the department? Is it to be supposed that these men are innocent idiots and saw nothing wrong in these facts? Only one conclusion can be drawn: either that they were cognizant of the fraud that was being perpetrated, or else that they willfully closed their eyes to the condition of affairs. Now, Sir, so much for the tenders, and so much for the contract. I say again, that that tender and that contract was based upon fraud and forgery; I say further that the department connived at it. If the department did not connive at it, the department was guilty of culpable negligence and ought to be censured by the Parliament of Canada. Now, there are some extraordinary circumstances in connection with the changes that were made the contract subsequent to the in This man took the tion of the contract. contract for $260,000; the works have now That of cost us nearly $500,000. enough to arouse the suspicion of the department, if the officials were honest men, but it aroused the suspicion of nobody. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, the direct sequence of the frauds and the chronological order of the correspondence can lead to but one conclusion, namely, that all these changes were made in pursuance of the original fraud and forgery with the connivance of the head of the de-partment. The changes cannot be explained upon any other reasonable presumption. Now, the first change that is suggested is suggested by Mr. Louis Coste in a letter to Mr. Gobeil, the Secretary of the Department of Public Works, in July, 1890. Now, what did Mr. Coste say in that letter? He says:

"The mouth of the entrance should be increased from 48 to 60 feet. This alteration will not entail any modification of the present contract so far as prices are concerned." Who suggested that to Mr. Coste? Is Mr. Coste a man in authority in the Public Works Department? Is he the chief engineer? Is he a man whose statement the Minister of Public Works or any other Minister should take? He is nothing He signs himself of the kind. for the chief engineer of the department, and the chief engineer's signature or name does not appear in this connection. Mr. Coste makes that report. Who suggested it? Whose interest is it in? Whose benefit was to be attained? Was it in the interest of the tax-payers of this country? Verily, no, Sir; but it was in the interest of the Connollys, and in their interest alone. Now, observe that on the 2nd July Mr. Coste writes to the stretch of imagination, it is drawing too much on department suggesting the change. Observe the the same day upon which he got Mr. Coste's letter suggesting the widening of the entrance from 48 to 60 feet, he makes his report to the Council. Why should he make that report to the Council so hurriedly if it was in the interest of the tax-payers? He, a man of intelligence, a man of brains, a man who was never known not to have his wits about him all the time—he knew that it was not in the interest of the tax-payers. On the very moment the Minister of Public Works got that letter from Mr. Coste he reports to the Council and makes a recommendation in the following words:-

"That the entrance be increased from 48 to 60 feet, and the Minister further states that the alterations will not entail any further modification of the present contract so far as prices are concerned."

What is the necessity for this extraordinary promptness on the part of the Minister of Public Works? To gratify and to satisfy Connolly, to carry out, so far as he knew how, the scheme which was the result of the original fraud and forgery. Two days afterwards the Council approved of the minute, and so far so good. There is not much to be said about that. If it were to put some money into the pockets of the contractors and take a little out of the pockets of the tax-payers, even then that would not amount to a very great deal, if it had stopped there; so far as I am concerned, I would not have engaged in this discussion and forged another link in the chain that is being tightened Two or three around about the department. weeks afterwards new light dawned upon the mind of Mr. Coste. It does not appear who shed the rays of light over the mind of Mr. Coste. Someone suggests another change in the entrance to the dock, and on the 22nd day of the very same month this same Mr. Coste writes to this same Mr. Gobeil, secretary of the Department of Public Works, and mildly suggests the necessity, in the public interest, of reducing the width of the entrance from 60 to 55 feet, declaring that public purposes would be served by this reduction, and declaring at the same time that the reduction from 60 to 55 feet would cost the tax-payers of this country $34,000. Now, I ask the Minister of Justice to pause right there, and ask himself this question: In whose interest was this last change made? Was it made in the interest of the people of this country? Was it made in the interest of the Government of Canada? Or was it not rather made for the sole benefit of the two Connollys? For who else's benefit should it have been made? There was a reduction from 60 to 55 feet made at a cost to the tax-payers of $34,000. See again the promptness with which the matter was dealt with by the Minister of Public Works. Without a moment's delay the Minister reported to the Executive Council, recommending that this change be made, rescinding the old order authorizing the extension of the wilth of the dock from 48 to 60 feet, to cost nothing, and passing a new Order in Council, authorizing the reduction of the width from 60 to 55 feet, at an additional cost of $34,000. It is a matter of calculalation. If it cost $34,000 to reduce the width from 60 to 55 feet it would cost $68,000 to reduce it another 10 feet, and exactly $74,000 to increase it from 48 to 49 feet. The people have, therefore, reason | Minister of Justice. I am sure the Minister of works sets to work, observe the alacrity with an increase to 49 feet. If they had done so, which he obeys the commands of his master. On the cost to the people of this country would the cost to the people of this country would have been, as I have said, $74,800. We have only to pay $34,000 on that account, but now it is $50,000. We should be thankful for small mercies and grateful that we have escaped so well. Let us see a little further in regard to this matter. Another link in the reasoning that makes the conclusion invincible to every intelligent mind that there was something wrong in the Public Works Department is this. I find that on 16th March Mr. Perley reports to the Minister that a sum of money is required, $22,000 on the contract, $18,000 for caisson and $20,000 for pumping plant. The Minister, and $20,000 for pumping plant. without a moment's delay, reported to the Executive Council and told them the money was required; and he further told them there was no money in the Exchequer and that a Governor General's war-rant was required. Following the events in chro-nological order, hon, members will find that every step taken in connection with the contract, from the hour it first was brought forward to the present time, plainly discloses that it was conceived in sin and carried out in fraud and iniquity. An Order in Council was passed, as asked by the Minister, for $60,000, and the Governor General's warrant was issued for that amount. On the eve of the sitting of Parliament, when these question of misconduct, maladministration, fraud and forgery would receive the sharp criticism of hon, members, the Minister of Public Works asks for a Governor General's warrant for $60,000, and he gets it, and the money is paid. Just after the general election, when money was required to pay old election bills, this Order in Council was passed, and the Governor General's warrant was issued. one knows much better how to do this than does the Minister of Public Works. He was brought up in a good school, he proved an apt pupil and he was a Minister of long experience and pointed There is another circumstance that the way. would lead anyone to the conclusion that something was wrong, not only in connection with the obtaining the Governor General's warrant, but the way the Governor General's warrant was obtained. There was a letter sent by Mr. Perley to the Public Works Department on the 16th March, quite lately, in which he gives all the sums neccessary for the completion of this work. He points out the whole amount needed, and some of these items require the consideration of Parliament. First, there is the contract $260,878; for widening, $50,000; valves, $3,000; caisson, $20,000; hauling gear, $5,000; pumping plant, $25,000; engine house, $15,000; shop tools, $2,500; coal shed, $1,000; storchouse, $2,500; residence for lockmaster, engineer's office, $5,000; sluice and gates, $2,500; bilge blocks, shoes, &c., $2,500; electric plant, $2,500; expenditure to 30th June, 1889, Auditor General's Report for 1889, part D, pages 172-73, $33,763.87; superintendence, $20,000; contract, $260,680.75, exceeds by $190,263.87—$450,944-62. Sir Hector said, 25th February, 1890, the cost would be $318,000, exceeded by $132.944.62. This sum is $190,263 in excess of the contract, and about $125,000 in excess of the sum Sir Hector Langevin assured Parliament would be the cost. The items are curious and important, and they deserve the consideration of Parliament and of the Justice stated the truth when he said he had not examined the papers; but I recommend the Minister, when matters of this kind are talked of in Parliament, that he, as representing the Department of Justice, should make himself conversant with the facts. I am quite sure that if these statements had been submitted to the Minister of Justice he would have been the first man in Parliament to have pronounced them, in the face of the statement made by the Minister of Public Works, to bear unmistakable evidence of fraud. There are curious items, as I have mentioned, and I will refer to two or three of them. First, there is the contract price; the amount then required was $190,262 in affairs. The widening of excess of the contract price. The widening of the entrance increased to $50,000; first, the width was to be 60 feet without costing the people one farthing extra; second, it was reduced from 60 feet to 55 feet, at a cost of $34,000; now we have reached $50,000, according to these estimates. Will the Minister of Justice have the kindness to tell us where the $50,000 has gone? Will the Minister of Justice or any member on the Treasury benches have the kindness to tell us why those contractors obtained $50,000 for reducing the width of the dock, when every one knows it could not have cost them one farthing extra, but have lessened the cost. Will the Minister of Justice tell us what became of the $50,000? Recollect, Mr. Speaker, the tender of Bancroft was about $50,000 less than the tender of the Connollys. This $50,000 nearly makes up the deficiency, and the Connollys have got by this mode of managing the affairs of this country even now the amount of their original tender. The Minister of Public Works declared in his report to Council that the caisson would be $18,000; it is now $20,000. He declared that the pumping plant would be $20,000; it has now reached $25,000. It would be better to settle with the contractors at once, as every month adds to the enormous expense of the work. Then, as to the item for superintendence. Will the Minister who has charge of the department tell us how $20,000 were required for superintendence, &c.? What does the "&c." cover? It covers a multitude of sins and wrong-doings. Why the Government of Canada should pay $20,000 for superintending the construction of this dock in Kingston is what no one knows; no doubt some members of the Administration know, but other members may know nothing about it. I repeat that the whole history of this tender and of this contract is a history of fraud, and the whole history of these changes, made from the hour when the tender was first delivered to the department down to now, discloses to my mind, without any doubt, reckless extravagance, waste, deception, jobbery, fraud and forgery, Sir, the boldness and daring, to use the words applied by the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), with which the frauds were initiated and carried out are simply startling. I believe myself that the case, from the beginning to the end, is unparalleled in the history of this or any other country. Now, Sir, is it not time that these frauds should stop; is it not time that the stealing, and the jobbery, and the peculation, and the fraud that permeates every department of the Civil Service in Ottawa should be put an end to? Why, Sir, notwithstanding what the Minister of Justice said the other night, these disclosures, such as are connected with the Kingston graving dock, his own office, say on this subject. You take the Mr. Cameron (Huron).

have startled right-thinking men in every portion of Canada, irrespective of party politics. startling disclosures, and these frauds, and this peculation, and this stealing, has aroused the pity and the contempt of our neighbours on the other side of the line. These startling disclosures that have been made during the last two or three months, among other things the Kingston graving dock, have aroused the indignation of honest people on the other side of the line, and in the mother country. Canadians cannot afford this, and the honest public opinion and public sentiment of. Canada cannot tolerate such a condition of We cannot afford to palliate these gross irregularities; we cannot afford to toy with fraud, with peculation, with stealing, with connivance or with forgery, in any part of the public service. When a statement was made the other night by a gentleman on this side of the House that the condition of affairs in this Canada of ours was simply startling, and that we had become, by our misconduct, a by-word and a reproach among the nations of the earth, the hon. Minister of Justice took him to task for the statement he had made, and he then made the following declaration:-"Another observation which the hon. Minister made with respect to the motion of the hon. member for South with respect to the motion of the hon, member for South Oxford, to which I must take exception, is his allusion to the present state of public morality in Canada. I understood the hon, gentleman to say that while the fame of Canada had been great for purity in public life, its name had lately become a by-word among the nations. As one member of the House I must protest against that statement. I declare for my part that nothing which has transpired of late in connection with the public service of Canada warrants any such expression here or abroad." Has the hon, gentleman been slumbering for the last six months; is the hon, gentleman a second Rip Van Winkle, whose eyes are opened after 20 years slumbering? Does the hon. gentleman know what is passing in the world around him? Does he know what is passing in the public departments and in the Committees of this House? Does he know what his own newspaper organs-at least, a good many of them-have been saying of the condition of public affairs in this Dominion of ours. If he does not know, then it is time the hon. gentleman's eyes were opened on the subject, and I propose to open them to-night, so far as my humble abilities will permit me. Sir, it is the height of folly, it is like the ostrich hiding her head in the sand and imagining she is hidden from the whole world; it is shutting our eyes and going it blind, to say that there are no frauds disclosed and no misconduct revealed during the last few months. It is inducing his own followers to go it blind, as he did try to force them togo it blind to night. When the hon. Minister of Justice had no argument to answer the motion of myhon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) he excused himself on the ground that he was not familiar with the facts, and had not an opportunity of reading the papers; but he assured Parliament that, all the same, hon. gentlemen behind him, and hon. gentlemen around him, would vote to sustain the Government. I have a better opinion of the hon, gentleman's supporters than the hon, gentleman appears to have himself. I do not believe that they can be driven and lashed into supporting an Administration, when the Administration is clearly wrong. I will show the hon. gentleman what is passing in the world around him, and what his own newspapers, received in his own office, and paid for by Conservative leanings, and it writes as follows:

"If Sir Hector Langevin knew what was going on in the Public Works Department and profited by wrong-doing he is a rogue. If all this crookedness existed and Sir Hector did not know of it, he is a fool. In either case he is unfit to be chief of one of the two great spending departments of our Government."

That paper received some Government patronage last year according to the Auditor General's Report. The Amprior Chronicle, which received Government patronage last year, writes as follows:

"Enough evidence has already been adduced to prove the department rotten at the core, and no sane person would think of defending the actions of McGreevy et al. It is plain that Sir Hector will be swept out of political life, for the Conservative party cannot defend his course. Like Rykert, he must be relegated into the quiet shades of obscurity and serve as a warning to others.

The Ottawa Journal—I do not read it, but I am told it is the evening Conservative organ of the Government at Ottawa; at all events, I find it down in the Auditor General's Report last year for $291.04, and, therefore, I assume it is a Government organ. It says:

"If the Government and the Conservative party are wise, they will stop at no half measures to stem the tide, and we venture to say that it is a half measure that minor officials should be decapitated for illegalities affecting a few dollars in each case, while Cabinet Ministers, against when reviews accurations are under and who are pracewhom serious accusations are made, and who are practically on trial before the people, remain in charge of the departments out of which much of the evidence for or against them must come."

The Montreal Star, down for $829 of the Government money, writes very strongly of the condition of affairs, and among other things I venture to quote this one passage:

"If it were right in principle for a Cabinet Minister to pocket a thousand dollars out of a Government contract, pocket a thousand dollars out of a Government contract, how could it be wrong in principle for a poor devil of a second-class clerk to pocket a hundred in the name of his mother-in-law or sister-in-law? Never since the Pacific scandal has the Government at Ottawa appeared in such a bad light. Were a general election held to-morrow the Liberals would sweep the country to the cry of "turn the rascals out."

Not only have the Conservative journals of Canada-some of them, at all events-spoken out freely and boldly and denounced this Administration from the top to the bottom, for their gross dereliction of duty, if not for their criminal connivance with fraud and forgery, but the very smell of the corruption at Ottawa has crossed the broad Atlantic, and we find the English papers discussing the question just now. I quote from an English paper of the 10th August the following:-

"As just exposed, a more sordid spectacle of corruption has never been presented by a free people. Whatever defence individuals and politicians may make in the United States, it it is abundantly clear that the cancer of corruption has eaten deep into Canadian institutions. Political life in the United States is not particularly pure; but we would be exceedingly Surprised if the Canadian record could be beaten."

And yet the hon. Minister of Justice tells us that neither at home nor abroad has the conduct of the Administration or the conduct of the departments from the highest to the lowest made Canada a reproach and a shame among the nations of the earth. The hon, gentleman has evidently been sleeping. I say again, Sir, that you may search the history of this country or the history of any other country in vain for the last 150 years to find a parallel to this unparalleled condition of affairs that

Toronto Telegram, a newspaper with strong tal of the Dominion of Canada. Almost every department is saturated with corruption, until the very air of Ottawa is tainted with its foul odour. Sir, what will be the result of all these frauds now open, now plain, now exposed, in connection with the Kingston graving dock and other public works? Is there an honest man in the Government? Or is the Government like the City of the Plains, without a good man or an honest man in it? I do not believe it. I believe there are two or three fairly honest men in the Government. If there are, let them take warning; let them set their faces steadily in favour of the right and against the wrong; let them expel from the Government every man tainted with this moral leprosy. If not, let them withdraw themselves, with whatever little shreds of character they may have left after their association with men worse than themselves. Sir. the whole thing is rotting, has rotted; the whole thing is crumbling, has crumbled to decay; the whole thing is passing, has almost passed away. The old ship has sunk; the old ship is almost at the bottom; let the honest men in the Government leave it before it becomes a complete wreck; and I know this, Mr. Speaker, that the good and true men of Canada everywhere will earnestly pray that we may have a sharp and speedy deliverance.

AND THE RESERVE AND THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPER

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is but right that I should say something on the present occasion, as the great public work now under discussion has been constructed in the city whence I come, where I was born and brought up, and where I have lived all my life. It is therefore needless for me to say that I take a great interest in Now, very little has been said in this discussion as to the necessity of the Kingston graving dock at all, or as to whether it has been placed in the right position. I do not propose to go into that question, further than to say that when we have spent so many millions of dollars as we have done in utilizing the great waterways with which Providence has endowed our country we should be failing in our duty if we did not make that canal system perfect The strength of a chain is tested in all its parts. by the strength of its weakest link, and so the chain of our waterway system would be defective if one of its links were wanting. At the present day the large and costly vessels engaged in the carrying trade of the inland waters, drawing from 14 to 16 feet of water, and carrying from 70,000 to 75,000 bushels of grain, would not come down to Lake Ontario if no means were afforded on that The owners lake for docking and repairing them. of those large and costly vessels would prefer to take a lesser freight and go to Buffalo, where in case of accident their vessels could be docked, and where their cargoes could be transhipped and sent vid the Erie Canal to New York and thence to Europe; and our great waterways of the St. Lawrence, and our seaports of Montreal and Quebec, would lose the trade which we have been endeavouring to get for them by enlarging and perfecting our canal system. It was a necessity, then, that there should be a graving dock built on Lake Ontario to complete our canal system. The Boards of Trade of Hamilton, Toronto, Kingston and other ports all united in petitioning the Government, and in sending deputations to Ottawa to ask that that great work should be constructed; and they named Kingexists right under the Vice-regal nose in the capi- ston as the place where it should be located, because Kingston is the port where those cargoes are transhipped to be sent to Montreal vid the St. Lawrence, and thence to Europe. For these reasons the Government undertook, and in my opinion wisely undertook, the construction of this great public work; and I may say that no matter in what way we may view the inception of this contract or the circumstances connected with it, let any practical man go and view that work, which is now being finished, and he will say that it is a credit to Canada and the Government, that it is a credit to the contractors and the workingmen who built it, that it is a substantial and solidly built work. It has been practically completed for some weeks, and it only now awaits the putting in of the gates or caisson. So much with regard to the work. Now, Sir, the motion which is placed in your hands asks this House to condemn the Government for their culpable negligence in letting the contract, for the changes made in the terms thereof, and for the moneys paid under such contract. Now, what evidence has been adduced of this culpable negligence? We have the returns which have been brought down and laid on the Table of the House: we have the evidence which has been taken before the Public Accounts Committee; and it is upon that evidence that we are asked to base this resolution condemning the Government for culpable negligence in letting the contract and in making the changes. What is this evidence, Sir? The evidence is that some twenty tenders were put in for this work, among them one by a man named Andrew C. Bancroft, whose tender happened to be the lowest. There is no evidence, there is no insinuation made, that this tender or any other tender was put in after the prescribed time, except one which was mentioned in the evidence of Mr. Gobeil; and that tender was not considered, because it was away up, the highest of the whole lot. All the tenders were put in regularly, and Mr. Gobeil, in his sworn evidence before the Public Accounts Committee, testified that all those tenders were in before the office closed on the 20th of March, that they were in at half-past one o'clock, that they were locked in a safe of which he kept the key, that no one had access to those tenders, and that they were not opened until the next morning, when they were opened in the presence of himself and Mr. Baillairgé, the Deputy Minister of Public There is no evidence that there was any Works. tampering with the tenders at all, and we must therefore accept the evidence given by Mr. Gobeil. The hon, gentlemen opposite had opportunity before the Public Accounts Committee to call every official of the Public Works Department; they had opportunity to call the Minister himself and crossexamine him, just as he has been crossed-examined severely before another Committee of this House; but the only evidence given is that these tenders were put in, and that no one had access to them to see them, or manipulate them, or tamper with them in the slightest degree. Now, I happened at that time to know that there was a tender put in by some gentlemen in Kingston who were desirous of getting the contract. I know that their tender was not the lowest, but they were very anxious to learn why they should not get the contract; and when it came to my knowledge that there were lower tenders, I said to them: You cannot expect to get the contract, because your have made anything out of it. And yet we find tender is not the lowest; whoever is the lowest and puts up the money must get it. The Minister was of the same opinion, and the lowest tenderer, who put up a cheque for $20,000, got the contract. Now, unless it can be shown by evidence, and not by mere insinuations, that the Minister knew this was a mythical person, he would have been guilty, not of culpable negligence, but of malfeasance, if he had dared to give that tender to anyone above that lowest tender. This lowest tenderer got the contract; and although he was a mythical person, although the tender was put in under the name of another, I want to know has the country suffered by it? The hon, member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) said he would consider only three tenders. He would consider only the tender of Bancroft, and then the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer, which was $5,000 higher, and then the Connollys tender. But why does he consider only these three? Does he think that these three were the lowest? No such thing; there were many tenders between the Macdonald tender and the Connollys. The Connollys tendered at $322,000, and there were tenders reaching all the way from $260,000 to that amount. Why, Sir, if Bancroft & Connolly had not got the contract there were half a dozen other tenderers who would have got it. The contract was given to the lowest tenderer. How did the country suffer by that? But, say hon, gentle-How did men opposite, extras were given them. Now, let us see what extras were given. The hon, member for Huron has told us of the great and apparent blunder which was made-not a blunder only, but a crime-because, he says, there was a proposal to widen the entrance of the dock from 48 to 60 feet, by which the cost would not have been increased, as there would have been less masonry to construct, and that would have made the work cheaper to the contractors. And, he says, then it was widened from 48 to 55 feet, and the estimated cost was $34,000. But he has overlooked a very important paper which has been laid upon the Table. He has overlooked the plan, which shows was the entrance that not only widened, but the whole side of the dock was widened, 9 feet at the top and 7 feet at the bottom, causing an excavation the whole length of the dock and increasing the expense all the way through, besides increas-ing the expense with regard to the coffer dam, all of which is set out in the estimate of the engineer; and although the engineer estimated the cost of widening the dock, not of the entrance, at $34,000, all the contractors have been allowed for it is $31,000. Yet we are told that an Order in Council was passed just after the election to give $50,000 for the widening. Will any hon gentleman show that that sum has been paid, or what sum has been paid the contractors at all for that work? I have looked at the figures, and find that the only amount paid the contracters for extras is $31,000 for the widening of the dock, and the total paid them up to date is only $256,000, including all their extras, although their contract price was $260,000. I have been informed by these gentlemen who tendered for the work in Kingston and did not get it, although they offered to do it for $292,000, that they were very glad they did not get it, because they found the cost of the work was going to be greatly exceeded and they would not these favoured contractors took it at $31,000 less, and they are supposed to have made a tremendous

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But they get $190,000 more.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is where hon, gentlemen opposite are mistaken. These contractors did not get that. These increased expenses were not for Connolly Brothers, contractors for the dock, but they were for the pumping material and caisson and the engine house. The evidence of Mr. Michael Connolly, given before the Public Accounts Committee, shows this. He said:

We tendered on the machinery and were not awarded the contract; we tendered on the caisson and were not awara a the contract; we tendered on the engine house and did not get that.

These are the favoured contractors, these are the men who have got the entrée of the Public Works Department and on whose account we are asked to blame that department. We find that they tendered for three separate and important works connected with the Kingston dry dock, and did not obtain any one of them.

Mr. TARTE. When?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It must have been las^t year or sooner. I do not know the dates, but it was when the tenders were advertised for, and they were all advertised for. Although I speak as a citizen of Kingston and know something about the dock, I knew nothing about the Connolly Brothers, contractors, until long after they took the work. I have never been consulted by them with regard to a single item in connection with their work, and I have never written a letter to the department or spoken a single word to anyone connected with ths department about them or their work. I know as little of their transactions as any one in this House, and can act freely and independently with reference to this matter, because I know nothing about their contract and have never been consulted by them about any of the changes or proposed changes. But I read this from the evidence, that they tendered for these separate works and did not get one of them. That does not look as if they were the pampered favourites of the Public Works Department. Here are three important works connected with the dry dock and involving large expenditures. The pumping plant alone cost $24,000, the caisson $17,000, and the engine house another large sum. Yet not one of these contracts did they get. These extras asked for in the estimate of the engineer were to payfor these public works, and I am informed that the total amount paid to Connolly Brothers is only $256,000, although their contract price is $260,000, and although they have widened the dock and have changed the caisson recess from the west to the east. I do not see among the papers any estimate showing what that is to cost, but I have looked at the plans, and I tell the hon. mover of this resolution that he has been under a mistake when he thinks that this sum of $31,000 paid the Connolly Brothers, or $34,000, as estimated by the engineer, was for the cost of widening the entrance. It was the estimated cost of widening the dock. The hon. member for Huron waxed eloquent, and he spoke of the letter of the engineer being dated on a certain day, recommending that change, and of the recommendation to Council having been made the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. But, same day. Well, I tell the hon, gentleman that at that time they were building the dock and had some of the stones laid for building it, according to the original plans, and if there had been any delay the cost would have been so much greater. If it was going to be altered at all it was right, and necessary, and proper that it should be altered at once, and I know that the owners of this steamboat Cibola, and some other steamboats, made complaints that the Government were building this fine and costly dock, which would be a credit to the country and a great public work, and yet that it would not receive some of the steamers plying on Lake Ontario, and they said it ought to be made large enough to take in the largest vessel plying on Lake Ontario. I consider the Government did only their duty in changing the width of the dock and making the alteration promptly. The dock was changed so as to give an additional 9 feet width at the top and 7 feet at the bottom all through.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How came the blunder in the dimensions to be made in the first place?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am not in the secrets of the Government; but I suppose it was originally intended to accommodate the grain vessels coming down the Welland Canal, and the dock was made to accommodate the largest of those vessels. Then the Cibola was brought out in parts from Scotland, was put together at Deseronto, either in the winter when this contract was let or the winter after, and she was too large to go up the Welland Canal, so it was found necessary, if she was to be accommodated, that the dock should be enlarged. They are building larger vessels all the time, and I expect in a few years there will be applications to enlarge this dock even from its present size. The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) talked about fraud, and forgery, and perjury, with that recklessness which is characteristic of him. He spoke with a glibness and profuseness on that subject at which I could not help being astonished. He made these walls ring with his denunciations of those crimes. It brought to my mind some years ago, when frauds were being exposed in this chamber, and that hon, gentleman did not raise his voice in so loud a manner. When frauds were referred to in connection with the Goderich har-bour, when "my friend Moore" made $34,000 out of the people of this country-

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I was not here then. Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Then that is the only excuse he has for having kept silent. That was some excuse for him, but I never heard of him in the country or on the platform denouncing those

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). You should get your facts right. I was not in Parliament then.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; the hon. gentleman was not here because—I will not say why.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Because I sent a good man in my place.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I shall not detain the House much longer. I assert that any hon. member, if he is truly desirous of exposing fraud and putting it down, if he will give us any case of fraud or jobbery, will find no members of the House more eager to expose and discover fraud and put it down than when any member gets up here and declaims about fraud, and forgery, and perjury, and does not found his charges upon some evidence, he cannot expect hon, members to vote for a resolution condemning the Government for culpable negligence when there is not a jot or tittle of evidence to support his statement. I have here the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, and I ask any hon. member to show a line which proves or goes to prove that there was any fraud, or jobbery, or negligence, culpable or not, in letting this contract. The hon, gentleman had every opportunity of calling witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee to substantiate his position. He did not do so, either because he knew he could not prove it, or because he did not wish to do so; but the evidence before us is simply that of Mr. Saucier, Mr. Gobeil, Mr. Montague Anderson and Mr. Michael Connolly, and in all that there is not a word to justify the resolution put in your hands, nor do I find anything to justify it in the papers which have been laid upon the Table. The fact is, that this contract was let to the lowest tenderer, whether a mythical person or not. There was no perjury connected with it. I am not prepared now to say what forgery is, but signing the name of a mythical person is not always forgery. Whatever fraud there was, was not in connection with the Public Works Department, but was committed against the Public Works Department, and surely the hon, gentleman will not ask us to condemn the Public Works Department for a fraud committed against that department. The contract was let to the lowest tenderer. The country has saved by it. The work has been well and properly done, and if hon gentlemen can show that there have been any improper changes they might have something to go upon. The only change they can show is in the widening of the dock, and everyone will admit that that was a proper change. There is no suggestion that it has cost more than it ought to have cost. What, therefore, are we to condemn the Government for? Where is the evidence of culpable negligence in the payment of the moneys for these changes? There is not a shadow of evidence on that. The hon, gentleman has not made his case complete. He has not shown, as he might have done before the Public Accounts Committee, what money has been paid. There is no evidence here of any money having been paid. He simply read the estimates of the engineers, and we do not know that those have been paid. In fact, I am informed that they have not been paid.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What was the Governor General's warrant for?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That does not say the money has been paid. It simply places the amount to the credit of the Public Works Department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then it was issued unconstitutionally and illegally.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Then we may discuss that, but this resolution does not touch that question. Let us judge this resolution by the evidence and see whether it is substantiated or not, and I appeal to hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, to all independent thinking men, to read the evidence, and I think they will come to the conclusion that there is nothing whatever to justify the resolution which has been placed in your hands.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

Mr. GIBSON. This matter of the Kingston Graving Dock has been so thoroughly discussed by my hon, friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) and my hon, friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) that there is very little left for me to say, except that, as a practical contractor, looking over the papers in this case, I have several matters to submit to the House which I think will be evidence to the contrary of what my hon, friend from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has stated, that no additional sums have been unjustly paid by the Government upon the Kingston graving dock. He also says that the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer. I will call the attention of the House for a few moments to a letter which was written in connection with the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer. On page 55 of the returns brought down to the House I find, accompanying the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer, the copy of a letter which reads as follows :-

های در است. در که دسته روزونیشن در دانست در اورشده داشتند بیشتن و در مستخصصت و روزونیست که هم داد. محمد میدادن در است که درمیسته روزونیست در در مستخصصت که میشود از این از در در

"We hereby certify that we have visited the site of the proposed dry dock at Kingston, carefully examined the locality and have satisfied ourselves as to the nature of materials to be removed, the foundation of coffer dams and probable cost as required by advertisement. Besides the sum placed in our tenders for pile and crib work dams (in accordance with plans exhibited) we beg to submit you an offer for construction, maintenance and removal of a puddle clay or earth dam in place of those called for (a section of which we enclose) for the sum of $17,000,"

Now, Sir, as will be seen by this letter, Macdonald & Aylmer offered to construct a dam at a cost of $17,000 in place of a crib dam and pile dam combined, for which they asked the sum of $53,000. Now, to take their dam at $17,000 would reduce their estimate to $36,000. It is only fair to say that in the schedule an error occurs in the extension of 750 cubic yards of masonry at $10, which reads only $750, whereas it should read $7,500, making an addition to their contract of $6,850. you add that to the $229,810, that would make Macdonald & Aylmer's net contract $236,660. Taking that from the Bancroft offer of $260,680.75, we find that the Macdonald & Aylmer tender was $24,020.75 less than the Bancroft & Connolly tender. Now, I submit that if all the care had been exercised that hon, gentlemen opposite claim has been exercised, and had always been exercised, by the Public Works Department, then a gross injustice was done to Macdonald & Aylmer and to the country by the Government not sending for them and examining them as to the proposed dam which they offered to construct, and thus saving $24,020.75 to the treasury of the Dominion. Now, it may be observed that according to the advertisement every contractor was obliged to go to Kings ton and examine the locality for himself, and to state in his tender that he had done so, and that he was in a position to enter into the contract upon the conditions and specifications presented before him. Now, Sir, how does it come about that, in the matter of Bancroft—whether he was a myth or not, he was certainly unknown to the Public Works Department; he was unknown among the contractors and among public men-how did it come about that an unknown man, who had made a tender which ought to have been thrown out and never considered at all, was able to send a letter, on the day following the extension of the contract, stating that he was prepared to enter into the contract, inasmuch as he had secured the Connollys as partners with him, and, on the same day, the Connollys wrote very much to the same effect—that they had entered into partnership with Andrew C. Bancroft and were ered, and in the recommendation made for the prepared to carry out the contract at the prices submitted in the Bancroft tender? Now, I submit, I duction of $1 a yard on the actual number of yards that Bancroft tender was not the lowest tender by excavated in the widening of the dock. I find the $24,000. I am not going to consider the question Government have paid for 2,500 yards of rock exast owho was present at the signing of the concavation, but from the way in which the hon, memtract, or whether anyone was there to represent ber for Frontenac spoke it seemed to be very Bancroft. We may suppose that the contract, after doubtful if the contractors received a dollar. it was signed, was commenced very shortly afterwards, and not until the 2nd of July, 1890, do we mates have been made by the engineers, and I prefind that any alterations were asked for with resume on those estimates those gentlemen received spect to the Kingston graving dock. Now, on the their pay. I find they have been paid for rock 2nd of July, this year, in speaking in Committee about this Kingston graving dock, this House was given to understand that the only alteration made 20 cents, $80; concrete, 246 cubic yards at $6, to that dock was by increasing the width of the entrance from 48 to 55 feet, as already mentioned by at $9.35, $1,636.25.; in walls, 120 cubic yards at some of the speakers, and I mentioned it myself on the floor of the House. Now, the engineer reported that $249.75. on account of the Cibola being of such a breadth of masonry, 109 cubic yards at $8.50, $926.50, beam it was then supposed that an entrance of 48 Concrete, 85 cubic yards at $6.10, $518.60, feet wide would need to be extended to 60 feet, The engineer allowed these gentlemen $10,000 for and the engineer reported that that alteration in additional work in coffer dam. If hon, members the width of the opening would cost the country Accordingly an Order in Council was passed sanctioning the increased width of the entrance. Twenty days afterwards, on the 22nd of July, the engineer discovers that the Cibola was only 53 feet beam and that 55 feet entrance at the opening of the dock would be sufficient for all purposes, the engineer stating then that a 55 feet opening would cost in round numbers $34,000. Now, to my surprise, I not only find that the infrom commencement to completion of work. For a creased entrance had been made to the dock, but small portion of the work they are allowed $1,170. I find by the plans laid upon the Table of the House this afternoon that the dock itself has been widened 7 feet, and there is no Order in Council or no document in the possession of the Government—at least, they have not brought down any to the this kind. I say it was a piece of bad engineering on the part of the chief engineer on a public work of such magnitude, and the Government are responsible for it, in that they did not first acquaint themselves with the requirements of the shipping trade of our lakes, and I venture to say that had this been done in time, not a dollar would have been required for extras. But that was not the mode of procedure adopted with the Connollys and Bancroft. Now, I find that in addition to the dock being widened 7 feet they have changed the caisson chamber from the west side of the dock to the east side, for what reason I know not. I find in a special report laid down here that the different amount for the increased widening of the dock is in a different schedule by itself, and provided for under a separate contract; yet, notwithstanding that, a very large am unt of money, something over $15,000, has been paid as an extra amount for the side wall of the dock. Now, I find in this special report covering the recommendation of the engineer for the change being made, that there are 2,500 cubic yards of rock excavation. While on this subject, I may say that when the engineer submitted this report to the Minister of Public Works and when the Minister submitted it to Council it was discovered that the engineer was quite willing to allow the contractor $2 a cubic yard for this rock excavation instead of $1, as mentioned in the schedule of contract prices. Fortunately, however, for the country, and to down, removed to any part of the works, and set the credit of the Ministers be it said, this was discov-Order in Council, $34,000 was granted, less a rewe have the documents showing that certain estiexcavation, 2,500 cubic yards at contract price $1 per yard, $2,500; extra drains, 400 lineal feet at $8.25, $990: 135 cubic feet of granite at $1.85, Extra length of caisson chamber, will look at the Bancroft-Connolly contract they will find that those worthy gentlemen engaged themselves to provide a dam for the whole of the work for $25,000; yet for this little piece of alteration, because I still have doubts about the dock being enlarged, the engineer has seen fit to allow $10,000 for work in the dam. In Bancroft's tender there was an item of $8,000, and this meant supplying the pumping machinery to keep the site dry from commencement to completion of work. For a The price was arrived at by calculating the extra surface of the water in the dock and the extra time taken to finish the work, during which time the contractors had to keep the whole of the dock free of water. The engineer allowed the contractor House-to warrant this change in a public work of $700 for the use of the derrick. If hon, gentlemen will take the trouble to look up the specifications, as I will do shortly, they will find that in every specification for works of this kind the plant and machinery are included in the price mentioned in the contract. I say here in my place in this House as a contractor, and as one who has probably had as much experience in masonry as any man in my years in the country, that this sum of $750 was an unwarrantable gift made by the chief engineer, or the engineer who recommended it.

> Mr. HAGGART. Their prices were not paid This was an estimate furnunder the contract. ished by the department so as to give the department the value of the work.

> Mr. GIBSON. I will give the hon, gentleman all the information if he will wait a little while. I am not as old a politician as the Postmaster General, and I hope he will not put me off my pins, as they say.

> Mr. LISTER. You know more about masonry. Mr. GIBSON. Perhaps I do. On extra cribbing there was paid 31,148 cubic feet at 10 cents, $3,114; cutting crib, $750. I spoke of $750 being paid the centractors for the delay and the use of their plant. I find in addition these same worthy gentlemen are to be paid $600 for removing their plant. There is not a derrick in Connolly's possession at Kingston dock that cannot be taken up for $60, and those who are not able to do it for that money are not worthy of the name of contractors. It is unfortunate that hon, gentlemen on this side of the House were not provided with a copy of the last estimate of the work done at the Kingston graving dock. It is only fair to say that I was told to-day that the July estimate is at Kingston, and consequently hon, gentlemen on this side of the House cannot be provided with a copy of it. I do not see any reason why a copy should not be made from the same calculation as the original which is now at Kingston, and I claim that if we were in possession of that estimate I would be able to show some facts that would astonish hon. gentlemen opposite. I am free to say that I honestly believe that when the Minister of Justice was speaking this afternoon he was under a delusion and under the effect of mis-statements made to him, because I could show from the estimates made by the engineer when the was commenced and the work on which the tenders were based some of the greatest differences in quantities I ever found in my life. In looking over estimates of engineers, contractors know they are always very liberal in their allowances as to quantities, in order to allow sufficient for the completion of the work. It is a sound principle that when an engineer goes either before a railway company or a Government with a great undertaking of which he has charge he will always make ample provision for every contingency which might arise, and I know all contractors will bear me out in saying that they would be very glad on all occasions to take the estimates of the engineer for the contract price. In the estimated quantity of masonry, which is No. 4 in the schedule, on which the chief engineer based Bancroft's tender, there are 8,250 cubic yards. Instead of that quantity I find that in the estimates for the month ending 31st March the quantity returned is 1,075 cubic yards, or an excess of $15,056.25. There is where some of the extra money is going. As to the iron work, it is so jumbled up in the return that there is no possible way of getting at it without taking the whole quantities. I find that according to the estimated quantities of cast-iron under No. 32 the engineer estimated 92,000 pounds; No. 33, 16,000 pounds; No. 34, 6,700 pounds; No. 35, 25,000 pounds; these four numbers embracing 142,700 pounds of cast-iron. According to this document these worthy gentlemen have been paid for 286,000 pounds of cast iron. In addition to that, in item 36 for the rolled joistsand the weights of them are given in the specifications—I find that there were 6,650 pounds of rolled joists, and they have been paid for 15,234 pounds. Now, Sir, this is not a piece of work which is built in a wall. If it is in the Kingston graving dock every inch of it can be seen, and if the Government is honest in this matter and desirous of ferreting this thing out to the bottom, as they pretend to be, let them send two independent engineers to Kingston, and let them measure every piece of the work that has been done; let them bring back a report to the House and state whether the Kingston graving dock is seven feet wider or not, and whether this cast-iron has been built ornot, and whether this 10,000 yards of masonry has been built or not. If they do this, I think that they will come to the conclusion that whether the Pub-

Works Department, or the Government is to blame or not, it is quite evident to me, as one of the gentlemen who tendered upon that work, that a gross fraud has been committed on the country by connivance of gentlemen in the Public Works Department.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on this subject, and I think that after an examination of the whole matter the House will see how very, very little there is in these charges "of rank fraud accompanied by gross perjury and connived at by the Public Works Department, as some hon, gentlemen on the other side have declared. In the first place, you must take into consideration the whole circumstances in connection with the building of this dock. I intend to go into it specifically and to give it in detail. think it was in the month of February, 1889, that tenders were called for the construction of this dock, and on the 28th of March succeeding the tenders were received. The accusation is made by the member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) that the tender of a man named Bancroft must have been put into the Public Works Department after the other tenders had been received, that a knowledge had been given to the person who made that tender that Mr. Macdonald was the lowest tenderer, and that information had been given of the amount of each tender for the construction of the work. What tittle of evidence has there been adduced this evening in support of this charge, which is one of the gravest charges which have ever been made against a man in any public department, or against any Minister conducting the affairs of this country? There has not been a particle of evidence produced here for the purpose of sustaining that charge. On the contrary, the evidence produced before the Public Accounts Committee is directly opposite, and proves that no such thing could have occurred. The officer who received these tenders stated that the latest tender came in at half-past one or two o'clock in the afternoon, and that after that no tenders were received. He received those tenders, took them to a safe, deposited them in that safe, opened them next day, and the evidence was brought out, in answer to a question asked by the hon member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), that the envelopes bore evidence that there had been no tampering with them, and the officer of the department clearly swore that no person could possibly have had possession of them. They were opened in the presence of Mr. Baillairgé and Mr. Gobeil. So much then for the statement of the hon, gentleman that there was criminal connivance in the Department of Public Works, that it was self-evident that there was criminal connivance, that that tender was handed in for the purpose of being lower than Mr. Macdonald's tender, and for the purpose of giving that work to Mr. Connolly. There were 20 tenders received. As the tenders were made out by a schedule of rates it took some time to schedule them out and to apportion and find out which was the lowest; but as the evidence shows, they were all treated in the same manner. The tender of one Andrew Bancroft was found to be the lowest. Now as to the statement of the hon. gentleman from Huron (Mr. Cameron), that it was the duty of the Government to reject these tenders because they were in similar handwriting, lic Works Department, or the head of the Public let me ask what reason is there that the Government should reject a tender because it was in the same handwriting as another. Suppose that the twenty tenders were in presumably the same hanwriting, was it the duty of the Government to reject them because of this? What did the Minister of Public Works do with the tenders? The sums were totalled out, handed to the Minister of Public Works, and all he knew was the different parties who had tendered and the amounts of their tender, and who was the lowest. How was he to know that Mr. Bancroft was not a person who was entitled to tender, or was capable of performing the work. It is true that in the Department no such a man as Andrew Bancroft was known, or could be known, and if his tender was not accompanied by a letter a few days afterwards, from parties who were competent to do the work, who had been contractors for the Government and had performed their work in a skilful and efficient manner, it would have been the duty of the Minister to find out who Bancroft was, and to see whether he was capable of performing the work or not. But, after he got the assurance of competent parties that the work should be carried out, I say that the duties of the Minister ended there. He had the assurance of parties who were efficient contractors and who were capable of performing the work, that the work would be efficiently performed. The duty of the Minister ended there. It was not his duty to enquire; and I suppose the idea never struck him that there was no such person as Andrew Bancroft. He simply performed his duty to the department and to the country by accepting the lowest tender. He did accept the lowest tender, and he saw that the money was deposited necessary for the fulfilment of that contract, and further than that, he saw that the contract was associated with parties who were capable of performing the work. What fault then is there to be found with the Minister for that? The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) states that on another occasion the Government took a different view of the matter. The hon, gentleman and his friends, when speaking upon the other side of the House took a different view of it also, and they said that although that the tender was an illegal one, although it was accompanied by a cheque that was only good for two days, it was the duty of the Government, as there was a large amount to be saved for the country, to accept that tender. Now, the hon gentleman (Mr. Cameron) takes a different view and a different form of argument, and he says: Oh, the tender was illegal. Mr. Andrew Bancroft was a myth; it was the duty of the Government to discover whether there was such a person or not, and to strike the tender out altogether as illegal. I leave it to the hon. gentlemen opposite, I leave it to any one in the House, if it is a thing that can be charged to the Government of the country or against the Minister of Public Works that there was a fraud committed on the country because the Minister had no means of knowing that there was no Andrew Bancroftis not a tittle of evidence to and there show that he had any means of knowing—and because he accepted the lowest tender, associated as it was with a party who was perfectly capable and competent to do the work. Then there is a charge against the Minister because the engineer-in-chief stated to him that a certain Niagara Steamship Company had informed him that | work :

they had a large steamer on the lake, and that the dock should be built of such a size and capacity as to accommodate that vessel; and the chief engineer reported that the widening of the dock from 48 feet to 60 feet would not entail any additional cost to the country; and because the Ministeracts promptly on that report and communicates it to Council on the same day that the engineer reports that is an evidence of connivance and fraud on the part of the Minister of Public Works. I never before heard of an argument of that kind adduced before any public assembly, or before sensible people. But it must have struck the hon, gentleman that the enlargement of a dock from 48 feet to 60 feet wide must entail an increased cost to the country. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is as competent in these matters as I would be; but it seems to me that it ought to have struck the engineer that that change would increase the cost. It would increase the width of the caisson, and the depth and breadth of the lock; it would have increased the width of the end wall; and I should have thought that the engineer at a glance would have known that the widening of the dock must have entailed an extra cost on the country. However, before any action was taken, the engineer recommended a different system to the Government. He went up and made an examination of the work, and he found that the largest vessel used on Lake Ontario, the Cibola, had a breadth of 55 feet; and so he reported to the head of the department that it was not necessary to increase the width of the dock to 60 feet, but that all that was needed was an enlargement to 55 feet; and he gave a detailed statement of what the total expenditure would be for the purpose of widening that dock, and that detailed statement is the statement which the hon, member for Lincoln spoke of. He puts it down at $34,000, and the Minister recommends to Council that the $34,000 be applied for that purpose; but Council refuses to increase the price of any work which the contractors had agreed to do at a certain price. One of the principal items of the increase was the excavation of the bottom of the dock, for which the contractors asked $2 a yard, and Council refuses to allow them this increase, but decided to confine them to the price at which they had tendered to do the work, namely, $1 a yard. Now, the total extra expenditure for the enlargement of that Kingston dock from 18 to 55 feet was $31,000. I have from 48 to 55 feet was $31,000. heard hon, gentlemen opposite saying: Oh, this graving dock has cost so much over the original contract price of $260,000—that its cost has reached $450,000. Now, the cost of the dock, according to the contract with M. Connolly & Co, or Bancroft & Connolly, was to be $260,000, and the amount of extra expenditure for enlarging it is $31,000; the total amount therefore that those parties would be entitled to is $291,000. Of that amount there has been paid only $256,000; and when hon. gentlemen opposite state that there has been a largely increased expenditure, amounting to $450,000, why do they state it? Is it not for the purpose of misleading this House and the country, and inducing the people of this country to believe that money was improperly paid to M. Connolly & Co? I will tell the hon. gentlemen opposite how the $450,000 is made up, and I will show that the extra expenditure over the payments of $256,000 to M. Connolly & Co. is in no way connected with their part of the

These are the items over the $256,000 which has been paid to M. Connolly & Co., which go to constitute the expenditure up to date on the dock at Kingston.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General whether these are included in the estimate which the Minister brought down of $318,000 as the total cost of the work?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know about that. I think the estimate of the Minister did not include the site. He estimated the total cost at $400,000, if I remember rightly. The $318,000 was for the construction of the dock alone. The total expenditure up to the present time is, I believe, in the neighbourhood of $450,000 or $456,000. But the charge in this resolution has no reference to that, and no reference to the estimate made by the Minister. The charge in the resolution is that by gross negligence on the part of the Public Works Department, by criminal connivance of some one in the department, according to the statement of the hon. member for West Huron, a fraud and a forgery were committed on the country-that this is one of the scandals that makes Canada a by-word among the nations of the world, that this is one of the acts of corruption of which the Government are guilty; and it is just such charges as this which have been hurled from one end of the country to the other, without one scintilla of evidence to show any fraud or wrongdoing on the part of the Government. The contract was fairly and honestly let to the lowest tenderer, who associated himself with contractors who honestly and faithfully performed their work for the Government. And is not that done every day in all public works departments? If a man puts in the lowest tender, but is not known, and is told: We do not know your capacity for performing the work or whether you have the plant necessary, but you may associate yourself with others. They do not say this; but he understands what is meant, They do and if he is associated with some party who had been in the habit of performing the work honestly and faithfully, and at fair prices, the contract is awarded him. Now, hon, gentlemen opposite charge that the Government knew who this party was, that the Postmaster General shielded the Minister of Public Works and obtained information for the purpose of telling who Brancroft Now, I may state to the House, as I stated the first time the hon. member for Bellechase (Mr. Amyot) moved to know who was the possessor of box 254 in the Kingston post office. I had not the slightest idea for what purpose he wished to obtain the information. I gave the motion to my deputy and told him to find out, and the answer he gave me I gave to the House. When I found out for possession of the department. Yet hon, gentlemen Mr. HAGGART.

what object the hon, gentleman wished to obtain the information I ordered the department to use the most strenuous efforts to discover who it was that had the box; and I will read, in defence of myself and the department, the whole correspondence between myself and the officer, in which you will see that neither I nor the department down here is in any way to blame. Here is the answer of the Inspector:

I ordered a letter to be written to the post office inspector in Kingston, and another to be written to the postmaster, and here is the reply:

"My Dear Deputy,—Your letter of 9th June instant repost office box No. 524 to hand. I am afraid I cannot supplement the information already given in my letter and telegram of 8th instant. There is nothing to show that the box was leased prior to 1st April, 1889, or subsequent to June of same year; but it does appear to have been rented at some time, and I can only conclude that it was leased in June quarter, 1889, to a party named Bancroft, from the facts that letters for one of that name were at one time delivered through a lock box, and that Bancroft returned 2 keys when giving up a box, as witness the memo, on envelope enclosed made by Andrew Deacon, who was transferred to the Kingston office in September, who was transferred to the Kingston office in September, 1888. It is to be regretted that this memo. is not dated.

In answer to the enquiry made on going into Committee of Supply, I further promised the hon. gentleman that I would have enquiries made of the letter carriers in Kingston, and would obtain from them all the information I could, so far as their memories served them, which would in any way tend to show who this Bancroft was. The letter The letter carriers gave the information to the inspector that the letters directed to this man in Kingston post office were delivered at the graving dock to Connolly & Co.'s clerk. These are all the facts in opposite, notwithstanding these facts were given to the House, state that the Post Office Department shielded the Public Works Department and helped to prevent the House finding out who this man Bancroft That is on a par with the other accusations. Look at the whole case? Is there a single scintilla of evidence to sustain the charge of fraud against the Government? Did not the Government honestly receive the tenders? Were they not carefully guarded from the moment they came into the Public Works Department? Were they not opened in the presence of the Deputy Minister, Mr. Baillairgé, and the secretary of the department? Was the contract not awarded to the lowest tenderer? There was no evidence to show that the Department of Public Works had any cognizance at all that there was no such man as Andrew Bancroft, and the Minister did his duty faithfully in seeing that the lowest tender was accepted, and in seeing that the party tendering was associated with men who had the means, capital and material for carrying on the work; and in the extension of the dook every precaution was taken. ernment got an estimate from the engineer as to the probable cost of the extension. The estimate produced this evening shows that the probable cost was estimated at $34,000). The Government gave $31,000 to the contractor on his old schedule prices at which he had contracted to do the rest of the work. And on what ground is there a charge of corruption, of fraud, of criminal connivance, and the grossest forgery ever perpetrated in the country? Are there men on the other side of the House who, knowing the facts and circumstances, will this evening vote, on such evidence as has been produced before them, condemnation on my hon, friend who has administered the Public Works Department? Are there men here who will say that he was criminally cognizant that a fraud was being perpetrated, because of his acceptance of the tender and the way in which he managed this affair? If that is so, public opinion in this country, public regard for the reputation of the men who are ruling this country, is sunk to a low ebb, when people sitting in the same chamber, supposed to have the feelings of gentlemen, would vote in support of any such resolution as that now proposed by the hon, member for Huron.

Mr. GERMAN. Without desiring to prolong this discussion to a very great length, I wish to make a few remarks touching the question now before the House. I must say that I am somewhat surprised that the hon. Minister of Justice, at present leading this House, did not adopt in this case the course he has deemed it advisable to adopt in other cases lately, and that is, to accept the suggestion of hon, gentlemen on this side when going into Committee of Supply. I think he had as good reason in this as in the other cases lately to accept our I think that, in the interests of the suggestion. country, it is advisable to accept this principle, and I cannot understand why hon. gentlemen opposite should refuse to support the resolution before the House. That resolution is not, as I understand it, a vote of want of confidence in the Government generally. At least, it would not have such an effect had the Government not made themselves accessories after the fact. Iapprehend that the Government cannot be held at all times responsible for the wrongful acts of a Minister in the depart- and in the letting of the contract. My hon. friend ment when those acts are not known to the Government, but as soon as they become known to the Government I submit that, unless the Government promptly expels the head of that department, in which those wrongful acts have taken place from his position, they make themselves accessories after the fact and are to be held equally responsible with him. This resolution does not, in the main, blame the Government, but it does blame the Public Works Department. It says:

"The documents and papers submitted to Parliament in relation to the Kingston graving dock, and the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee and reported to this House in relation to the said dock, show that gross fraud and forgery were committed in connection with the said contract."

Now, I appeal to hon, gentlemen opposite if that allegation is not correct. I appeal to every gentleman in this House if that allegation is not correct, and I believe that that allegation will be held to be correct by the people of this country. There was a gross fraud and forgery in connection with that contract. The evidence shows it. The facts elicited before the Public Accounts Committee show that there was forgery. The hon, gentleman from Frontenae (Mr. Kirkpatrick) says that he is not sure that there was forgery. I was of the opinion that a gentleman who has been so long in legal practice would have been able to give a definition of forgery off hand. Forgery is the false making of a document with the intent to defraud or deceive. Now, can the hon, gentleman say there was not the intention to defraud or to deceive in the making up of the Brancroft tender, in the signing of the letters signed by the Connollys? It was an absolute and distinct fraud, it was a forgery, for which Michael Connolly should be arrested and put on his It was a fraud against the Department of trial. Public Works and against the Government of this country. And I say-and I believe I will be borne out in that by the sentiment of the people of this country—that it would be wise for the Minister of Justice to institute criminal proceedings against that gentleman for the fraud he perpetrated. If that is a fraud, if that is a forgery, that allegation in this resolution is quite correct. Then, why should it not be accepted? If it is correct, accept it; if it Then the resolution says: is not, reject it.

"And that culpable negligence marked the letting of said contract, and the changes made in the terms thereof, and the moneys paid under such changes.

I submit that is borne out by the evidence. Culpable negligence marked the letting of that contract. The Public Works Department were not seized of all the facts connected with the work which, when completed, would make it of practical use to There was culpable negligence in the country. their not having sufficient data upon which to construct that graving dock, a large public undertaking, necessitating the outlay of a large amount of money. It was necessary that extensive engineering surveys should have been made, that all the information should have been obtained that possibly could be obtained before it was gone on with. That was not done, and the proof is that the work was, according to the Public Works Department, necessarily changed in order to be efficient for the vessels which ply on Lake Ontario. It is very clear, from the nature of the circumstances, that there was negligence in the change that was made the House to say that there was fraud in the letting of the contract, and that there was negligence in the letting of the contract. The Minister of Justice and hon, gentlemen on that side of the House say that the country saved $5,000 by the The hon. contract being let to these parties. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) has shown to the contrary. He has shown that if the tender of Macdonald & Aylmer had been accepted the country would have saved money. He has shown that, in the very matter of the coffer dam, there would have been a saving of $10,000. The tender of Bancroft was only $5,000 lower than that of Macdonald & Aylmer. Now, that $5,000 would have been overcome by the difference in price of the coffer dam being a trifle over $10,000, so that if the scheme proposed by Macdonald & Aylmer had been adopted, if they had been allowed to construct the coffer dam which they suggested, and being from a man so perfectly able to carry out his proposal, this country would have saved $5,000, and their price would have been lower by that amount than the Bancroft tender. But the engineers had decided that a crib coffer dam should be constructed, and no other coffer dam could be constructed according to them. The hon. the Postmaster General in defending this scheme, in endeavouring to defend the Department of Public Works, says: "Why, do we not often find the department suggesting to contractors that they must strengthen themselves financially?" Yes; we have found that course pursued. In fact, we have found quite lately that the Department of Public Works suggested to the tenderers for the Esquimalt graving dock that they must strengthen themselves financially. But we do not find here that the Minister of Public Works suggests to Bancroft that he should strengthen himself financially. We do not find that he says to a man who was never heard of before as a contractor, either in Canada or in the United States, about whom there was nothing known as a contractor, about whom it was not known whether he had sufficient plant or any plant, whether he had sufficient means or any means. that he should strengthen himself financially. And why? The only inference that can fairly be drawn is that the Public Works Department knew that the tender of Bancroft was the tender of the Connollys, and that they did not need to ask any such thing. It is not so much from the evidence adduced as from the unwritten evidence not adduced that shows the crime committed in this matter. is because of all the facts applying to the putting in of the tender, Michael Connolly taking the Bancroft tender to the Public Works Department on the last day, the 28th March, and at the last minute of the day, and putting in a cheque in his own handwriting—a handwriting, that must have been known to the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works had too much to do with the Connollys in the last few years not to know Michael Connolly's handwriting. It must have been known to the Minister of Public Works whose handwrit- (Mr. Amyot) had substantiated the resolution he Mr GERMAN.

from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) argues that the ing that was, and whose tender that was. If work is a good work. No one disputes that. The he did not, Bancroft not being known in this work is a good work. We, on this side of the country at all, he should have made enquiries House, do not deny that the work is a good work, and found out whether Bancroft was capable and no one in the country will attempt to deny of doing the work. He should have found out that; but that is not the gist of the question under whether he had the plant and the means to discussion. We are not saying whether it is a carry out that work; but we find he did nothing good work or a bad work, but we are asking of the kind. But in a few days we do find a letter from Bancroft, written by Michael Connolly, saying: We have agreed to amalgamate; Bancroft will take us in, and we will take Bancroft in, and we will do the work. I say it is time that this system of letting contracts was stopped. There has been too much figuring up and figuring down. Contractors have found a trick of putting in two or three tenders, and I say that the Department of Public Works has been to blame for allowing this thing to go on as long as it has. Some contractors put in two or three different tenders. If there is any person between the lowest tender and the next highest the lowest tender can be dropped for some excuse or other, and they get the work for the next highest. If there is any person between the next highest or the very highest, or if they can buy out somebody that is between them, then they get the work for the highest tender. That was attempted to be done in this case, but there happened to intervene some honest men that could not be bought, and consequently the Connollys had to adopt the Bancroft figures. Then we find that a system of changes has been made, a system which was stated in a Quebec paper not long ago to have been adopted in the Public Works Department for years; this paper says that not a contract has been let for years in which changes have not been made. I say it is time that this House, by resolution, expressed its dissent from that sort of thing. What do we find in the leading journal of hon, gentlemen opposite? We find the Prime Minister saying a few days ago that he is determined to search out corruption to the bottom, and he calls on the Liberal members of Parliament to assist him in doing so. Sir, we are only too glad to assist him, but we find that hon gentlemen opposite are very ready in cutting off the heads of minor individuals, but as soon as the chiefs of corruption are touched then they adopt different tactics; then they say: You must not touch us; you must not touch the heads of the departments; you may slaughter minor officials as much as you like, but the heads of departments must go free, notwithstanding the corruption, notwithstanding the negligence, forgeries and frauds that exist in the departments. I am sure that the people of this country will endorse this resolution, and if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to follow the policy enun ciated by their leader in another House they must accept this resolution. No matter whether corruption is found on this side or on the other side, let it be stamped out; it must be stamped out, and it will be stamped out. We now call on hon. gentlemen opposite to join with us in declaring by this resolution that corruption has run rampant long enough in this country, and we are now determined to stamp it out, by declaring that the contract in regard to this Kingston graving dock was corrupt, and that in connection with it fraud and forgery existed.

Mr. DAVIN. If my hon, friend from Bellechasse has asked this House to endorse I should gladly have voted with him.

Mr. AMYOT. Ha, ha!

Mr. DAVIN. My hon, friend laughs, but that is the truth. There can be no desire on the part of any honest Conservative, or any independent man in this House, to cloak wrong-doings of any kind. When I heard this resolution placed before us I took up the evidence which was taken before the Committee, and that evidence is one of the grounds laid down by my hon, friend from Bellechasse because of which we should vote with him. Sir, is there a single answer in that evidence to substantiate the various propositions implied by this motion? Now, the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. German), I believe, is a lawyer; anyway, he professed to speak of what forgery was. But he did not dare to define what forgery was. Forgery is the making of a false document with intent to defraud. If you make a document that is false without intending to defraud it does not amount to forgery. Take the case of the Connollys personating, or attempting to personate, this fictitious personage Bancroft: unless you show that in some way fraud was committed it would not amount to forgery in the eye of the law, and you could not place them on their trial for it. So the very first thing we are asked to vote for in this resolution is in itself an absurdity. It is not necessary, in my opinion, to go very fully into this question. But I will say that if the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), who spoke so strongly in this debate, and if the hon, member for Bellechasse, who spoke with his usual eloquence in supporting this motion, are desirous of putting down corruption in this country, if they are desirous of promoting purity and good government, they have taken a very wrong course here this evening. Because what will be the effect on the country, if they should have a good case, if they come here as they do this evening and lay a case before the House that will not bear powder and shot? What will be the effect on honest men who have examined this resolution, and have examined the alleged facts that are suggested as supporting it, when they find that there is not a shadow of foundation for the resolution, and that the time of Parliament, at this late hour, is taken up in discussing a resolution which is really, as my hon, friend from Bellechasse knows-and I do not say it discourteously—a buncombe resolution. My hon. friend, the Minister of Customs, says it is worse than that. It is worse than that, because it seeks to lay at the door of a man who has occupied a high position in this country, in whose department irregularities of a grave kind have occurred, and who has ceased to be a Minister of the Crown-

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No.

Mr. DAVIN. He has ceased to be a Minister of the Crown.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. It is seeking to lay a charge at his door that cannot be substantiated. I say that it would be not only ungenerous, but it would be utterly unjust; it would be the last thing that should be done by any man who is jealous for the honour of Parliament, and jealous for pure government, to sit here quietly and allow such a resolution as that to be placed on the Table, and supported by such wild, extravagant and irrelevant arguments as we have heard used here to-night. Take the speech of the hon, member for Huron. very well what that hon, gentleman's methods of rhetoric are: we know very well that he has not obeyed Sidney Smith's injunction to our Yankee friends, to avoid superlatives. If the hon, gentlemen has to denounce a mole hill, it is always a mountain: and if he has to stigmatize a lakelet, it is an ocean; so that the hon, gentleman's vocabulary has to be understood, it has to be studied carefully, before we can weigh the exact meaning that is to be attached to any of his expressions. Why, what was one of the ridiculous arguments the hon, gentleman used here to-night, and it is a sample of the kind of reasoning in which he indulges. He took a list of journals, some of them known not to be Conservative papers, known to be papers hostile to the present Administration, and he read the utterances of those papers, and he said: "Those are utterances of Tory journals." did he prove it? He proved it by saying: "I find among them papers which appear in the Auditor General's Report, one of them for $200." The hon. gentleman, therefore, held they were Tory papers, although it might be absolutely necessary, in order to give full publicity to some notice connected with one of the departments, that $200 or $50 should be expended on advertising in the Telegram of Toronto, or the Star of Montreal. I have read what the Star has said, what the Telegram and other papers have said. There is no utterance which any paper, Tory or Grit, Reform or Conservative, has uttered, condemnatory of corruption in high places, that is just, that is severely just, if I may use the phrase, that I will not endorse, that the Government of Canada will not endorse, and that has not been endorsed by the present leader of the Government in another place. As I have said, there is no party, there could be no party in any country in the world so free as the Conservative party is to con-demn wrong-doing. The fact that there may have been wrong-doing in its own bosom or near its own door, or on the part of its own servants, is no reason for an hon. member declaring that the whole party is corrupt. Still less reason is it for an hon, gentlemen, I refer to the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), rising and in those lugubrious tones he uses and with that kind of mute-like expression he wears, declaring we should all go down in sack-cloth and ashes, that Canada was humbled before the world, and that marks of degradation, and I know not what stain, had been placed on this Dominion. Why, forsooth?

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the hon, member for Bothwell endorse the sentiment of that hon, member? I am glad he does not. But can anything be so absurd as the statement that a whole country is corrupt in the eyes of the world because there has been an avidity on the part of its Government to put down wrong-doing in some of its departments? I say this: In the Committees, whose reports we have been receiving from day to day, the Government have done everything in its power to drag to light wrong-doing in its departments. And there is no reason why they should not do so, and punish it, too. Are we to be told that, because some corrupt act may have been brought to light, all our public men are corrupt? We know very well that one bad shilling does not prove that the whole coinage of the realm is false; that one hypocrite does not prove that all Christians are hypocrites; and the extravagant language that has been used in papers outside Canada and quoted here, what does it prove? The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is a journalist, and I am a journalist. We know very well I am a journalist. We know how these matters are managed. \mathbf{A} gentleman in London receives a telegram clothed in sensational news by the person sending it, and he wants to write a striking leading article. He writes a striking leader, and we are asked to hold that that is an expression of the public opinion of the three kingdoms! I have spoken as to what forgery was. Could there be in this case any intent to defraud? Bancroft turns out to be a fictitious individual. The Connollys per-The Connollys personate him, use his name. Is Bancroft's tender a high tender? Is it to obtain a large amount of public money that Bancroft's name is used? Not at all. Bancroft's tender is the lowest. I find a letter here accompanying a tender. It is signed "Gibson & Fuller," and is addressed to the Minister of Public Works, and is dated Beamsville, 25th March, 1889. It reads:

"SIR,—We have the honour to enclose our accepted cheque for $20,000, payable to your order, with our tender for dry dock at Kingston, Ont. We have also to say that we have examined the locality, lands and specifications, and hold ourselves in readiness to enter into a contract to complete the work, should you award us the same.

"We have the honour to be, &c.. "GIBSON & FULLER."

I turn to the tender, and I find that the tender of Gibson & Fuller was for $369,761.50, while Bancroft's tender was $260,680.75, or a difference of $109,080.75. Yet Bancroft's tender was fraudulent! And it is declared by hon, gentlemen opposite that it was put in with intent to defraud, and that it was a fraudulent act because Bancroft's tender was accepted.

An hon. MEMBER. Who was Gibson?

Mr. DAVIN. I look at the tender, and I find it is put in by a Mr. Gibson of Beamsville. I take up the Parliamentary Companion and I find that Mr. Gibson, member for Lincoln, lives at Beamsville.

An hon. MEMBER. It cannot be the member for Lincoln.

Mr. DAVIN. It seems to have been the member who spoke from the back benches a short time ago, and who so eloquently declared that Bancroft's tender, and the agreement resulting from it, were all that the hon, member from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) declared them to be; and yet that hon, gentleman's own tender was $109,080.75 higher than Bancroft's When this subject was being discussed the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) came in and he said, and he said truly, the man had no existence whatever. But was the fact that the man had no existence whatever fraudulent in itself, unless it was to take, improperly, money out of the public till. But palpably this fictitious Bancroft was, as compared with Messrs. Gibson & Fuller, the means of putting $109,080.75 into the public treasury. Having disposed of the term forgery, it is hardly necessary I should go into "culpable negligence." I see no evidence in any of the speeches delivered here; there is Corbould, Mr. DAVIN.

no evidence in this pamphlet containing the testimony given before the Committee, that there was the slightest neglect on the path of the Public Works Department in this matter. There may have been wrong-doing in other matters connected with that department. We will see as to that by and bye, and many of us have our own opinion in that regard; but in respect to this matter, it is perfectly palpable, in looking over the documents and evidence, that the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has made a great mistake in bringing forward this resolution; and while I, for one, am as ready as anyone to condemn corrupt acts committed by whomsoever, no matter where it may be, I cannot stultify myself, and I hope hon, gentlemen will not stultify themselves, and will not weaken the effect of any efforts they may put forth to put down corruption, by voting without any foundation in evidence or documents, against common sense and against fairness, for a resolution like that under consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon, members for Gaspé (Mr. Joncas) and Haldimand (Mr. Montague) have not voted.

Mr. JONCAS. I did not vote, because I was paired with the member for Ottawa County (Mr. Devlin). If I had voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This afternoon the member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) and myself had some conversation with regard to pairing. I understood it partially one way, and he understood it another; but he left this afternoon, stating to the whip that he was paired with me. Our conversation this afternoon might well have led him to that conclusion, although I did not quite understand it that way myself. If I had voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr.LAURIER. The statement was made during the debate by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that the hon, gentleman who formerly and up to this date was supposed to be the Minister of Public Works has ceased to be a member of the Cabinet. I would like to ask from the leader of the Government here if this statement is correct?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The House was informed some time ago that the hon. Minister of Public Works had offered his resignation. That is sufficient.

Mr. LAURIER. We were not informed that it has been accepted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is not necessary.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We were not informed that it was accepted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does not require it.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Drilling and training the Militia..... $250,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Chairman, with respect to this item, as was intimated on a previous occasion, there has been for a a long time, I think, in the opinion of a considerable number, not merely of the members of the militia force itself, but also in the opinion of the gentlemen who have presided over the department, if they felt at liberty to express their views, a very great deal of doubt as to whether we are using this quarter of a million dollars to any practical good effect, more particularly with respect to the system of camps lasting from eight to ten days. What has been represented on the subject with very great force is this: That the time which is spent in these camps is altogether too short to give any instruction of any real value to the members of the militia force—that, practically, as a matter of fact, when these men are brought together in camp, nearly one-half of the time is occupied in getting them together, and nearly the other half is occupied in getting them away again; and that, to all intents and purposes, a matter of four or five days is the very outside of the instructions that is given to these people. is also stated that very frequently the men who come into camp are absolutely raw recruits, who are changed from year to year, and, as everybody knows, it is utterly out of the question to impart any military training that is of any value to raw recruits in the very short space of time at the disposal of the officers. As I have said, several of the gentlemen who have occupied the position of commanders of the militia of Canada have more or less plainly intimated that opinion on this subject, and I would be glad to hear from the Minister of Militia what is his own opinion - whether he proposes to go in the old rut which we have travelled on so long in this matter, or whether he thinks that the time has come for revising the whole system and for attempting to obtain a longer period of training, for at least a portion of the force. Of course, my remarks apply more particularly to the rural battalions. In the case of the city battalions, I am inclined to think that a good many of the corps—though not through the medium of these camps—have succeeded in drilling themselves to a very respectable point of efficieny, and are likely to do so, camps or no camps. But with respect to the rural battalions, the statements made to me from various parts of the country all tend to show that in many cases these camps are looked upon as very little better than a kind of big military pic-nic, and that very little instruction of any value is given to the men who are brought together at very considerable annual expense to the people of the country.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to say to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that I fully agree with him in one particular, and that is, that the time which is allowed by the Government for the holding of these camps is altogether too short; but a still greater evil is that they are held for the ru- all possible times for their own advantage. So that must be evident to every one that a force which is available at once to enter upon any and every duty called out once every second year must be in a lamentable state of inefficiency, and however desirable it may be that the period of training should be lengthened, it is a great deal more desirable that the training should be annual. I am sure I utter the opinion of every man of the Active Force when I say that the great desideratum, and the best way in which the country can obtain value for the money expended for the militia is, in the first place, to make these trainings annual. That is admitted by every one and does not require argument. would like to correct the hon, gentleman in his impression with regard to the actual value the country receives from the camps, in the way they are now carried out; and I speak from my own experience of the camps I have myself attended. I think the hon, gentleman has been misinformed, in the first place, as to the time that is given during these camps to actual training. One day is spent in going to the camp and another in returning from the camp, which out of the 12 days leaves ten days for actual training. Of course, Sunday is included in that, but on Sunday there are the usual parades and guard mounting, and the duty goes on the same as on other days, the Sunday parade taking the place of the drill. During the other ten days, and I speak specially for the camp held at Niagara under Col. Otter, the routine is as severe and the work is just as arduous as it is possible to get men to undergo, under the circumstances under which they are brought there. The regular duties in camp occupy during the 24 hours a very considerable portion of the force, and the same number of men are required with a regiment of 300 men to carry on the regular work of the camp as if that regiment consisted of 600 or 700, or even 800 men. Of course, that number of men are taken from their regular duties of training; but at the same time they are learning the equally essential duties incident to camp life. The men have to learn to cook their own victuals, draw their rations, mount guard, and attend to all the various duties of active war-Therefore, although not actually on drill, or learning the use of arms, they are learning duties which to a soldier are just as important as the military exercise; and the remainder give as much time to drill as they can fairly be asked to give or as is beneficial to them. Of course, we can all understand that if you overwork men at anything, either mental or physical exercise, you run the risk of rendering them unwilling for their task, and therefore less inclined to learn anything. I think that as much work is got out of the men during those days as it would be possible to get under any Then, as to the results. I admit that our force in many respects is lamentably deficient; but this result has been arrived at—I only speak of the regiments that I know of: We have in this country regiments which, however deficiently trained they may be in many particulars, are yet. so far drilled and trained that you can take any one of them and immediately put them upon active You can put them on a train and take them out; you can march them to the camp ground; they can pitch their tents; they can cook their victuals; and there is a sufficient number of drilled men to mount guard—because there are always a number of men who persist in attending drill at present military schools. Mr. O'BRIEN.

ral battalions in alternate years. Of course, it a sufficient number of drilled men are always required of them, and to discharge those duties until those who have more recently joined the force are competent to take them up. If you have a body of men in this country whom you can assemble almost at the sound of the bugle, and march wherever you like, who are sufficiently accustomed to their arms as to handle them properly, and who are so far trained and drilled that they can perform any duties that they may be called upon to perform, you have attained a very great and satisfactory result. These men are not armed mobs; they have not only a large amount of drill, but a great deal of the spirit of discipline which enables the commanding officer to make good use of them. Now, a great deal was said in 1885 about the celerity with which the city battalions were got ready to enter upon active service. Speaking of the rural battalions, I have not the exact dates; but I know that Colonel Tyrwhitt and I got the order on one day to take out the York and Simcoe County battalions, and I think three days afterwards we had gathered our men together from the rural districts of the counties of York and Simcoe, assembled them at their respective quarters, armed and equipped and ready to go on the train in very nearly as short a time as the battalions called out in Toronto. I say that a force that can do that is a force not to be despised; and although there is necessarily a great waste of money in much of the expenses, owing to the drill being only biennial, yet we do receive from that a very great amount of benefit—benefit which would be more than doubled if the drill were made annual: and what we ask the House to do, and what I think the country would be perfectly willing to do, is to so increase the vote before the House, so as to enable the Minister of Militia to drill the whole force at its present strength every year, instead of every other year, as at present. There are of course a great many things that might be done, and a great many improvements that we should like to have made; but believing as I do that our present system is the most economical and efficient that can be devised in the present circumstances of this country, I would be very sorry to see any radical change made. I have given a great deal of thought to this matter, and I have seen letters in the papers commenting upon the present system and suggesting changes. It is not mere conservatism that influences me in my desire to see the present system continued; I believe it is the most economical system. can see that with a population of something over four millions and an expenditure something over $1,000,000 on our military. schools, and on everything connected with the militia force of Canada, it costs this country about a quarter of a dollar a head of the population. If the drill were made every year instead of every other year it would not make more than perhaps ten cents a head difference in the expenditure, and that is a small portion of the whole. Now, I wish to say something with reference to a statement that was made by the hon. member for West Toronto with regard to the military schools. I think he is wrong in his facts and wrong in his deductions. He advocated doing away with the

Mr. DENISON. No, no; grafting them on the done away with, because they set an example to present system.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Well, he advocated a change in the manner of giving instruction—that is to say, he would allow anyone to attend those schools, under certain restrictions, whether belonging to the force or not, and give them certificates, as was done in the old military training schools which we formerly had in this country. I think myself that a great deal more might be done by the schools which we have than is done. I think, for instance, that in the summer the whole school might be turned into a camp of instruction, and if there are not a sufficient number of instructors in the schools there are plenty in the various regiments who would be glad to assist. After listening to the statement made by the hon, gentleman, that there are a very large number of officers under the present system who are not qualified, I looked over the list, and I find that the proportion of untrained officers is not so great as is supposed. There is a constant stream of young men coming through the schools, and those in the regiments who are not those in the regiments who are qualified are constantly going up to be qualified. In my own regiment, for instance, I think that six officers appeared in the the militia list as unqualified, but of these five have obtained certificates, and there is only one officer of all the 28 in the regiment who is unqualified; and I think the same remark applies to other regiments. I think I am justified in saying that under the old system, when anybody might obtain a certificate of qualification, the force was not any better off for qualified officers than it is to-day. At that time, so far as my recollection goes, there were a greater number of unqualified officers holding provisional appointments in the active force than there are under the present system; and I know that a great many young men took advantage of that system. If they had nothing to do at the time, it was a pleasant way in which to spend the three months necessary to obtain a certificate; but of those who obtain certificates, I venture to say that not 10 per cent. entered the militia afterwards. The active force was not in the efficient condition it is in now; and there was a professional feeling among those young men which made them look down upon the active force, and hesitate to join it. No doubt, some of these young men joined the militia force afterwards, but I do not believe that these schools were as much benefit practically as the system now carried on. So far as my knowledge goes, we certainly have a better class of officers in the active militia force to-day than we have had at any previous time. Anyone who has attended the camps during the last eight or ten years cannot fail to come to the conclusion that great improvement has been made in the quality, equipment and general appearance of the men and in everything that makes up an efficient and valuable force. the Government would only give an additional sum of $150,000 to this service, in order to enable us to have annual drill, the country would have no reason to find any fault, and the present force would become as efficient and as capable as it can be expected to be under present conditions. There is, of course, a large amount expended which does not really benefit the force, because the expenditure on the military schools-although they are manner which involves any interference with itvaluable, and I should be sorry to see them let us suppose the suppression of a company, or a.

the volunteers, and show them what a man ought to look like when under arms, giving the example that was formerly set by the regulars-is a large expenditure in proportion to the benefit derived. And then, of course, there is a heavy expenditure on the military college, which is hardly of any value to the active force in the country, because there is scarcely a man from the college who holds a commission in the militia. One thing which I have pressed on the Minister of Militia on several occasions is this, that every man who obtains a certain standing in the military college, say after the first year-I am not sufficiently conversant with the course in the college to make any exact proposition -should be compelled to attach himself tot he regiment of his own county and go out with it whenever it goes for its annual training. That would be an immense advantage both to the force and to the college, and would bring the college into touch with the force, instead of its being, as at present, an institution outside of and beyond the force.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You could hardly interrupt their attendance at the classes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would sacrifice even that for the ten days' annual training, because this great advantage would be gained, that you would bring the military college, which is supposed to be a benefit to the force, but is really of no benefit to it now, into active sympathy with the force. would make every graduate of the college feel an interest in the militia of the country which he does not now feel, because, as a rule, he does not join a regiment unless it happens to come in his way. Those are the two points I would impress on the hon. Minister; and as an officer of that force, having been in it ever since the Trent affair, having given a great deal of time and money to maintain it, and feeling pride and interest in it, I would earnestly urge upon the House the great necessity, even from an economical point of view, in order that we may get the full benefit to be derived from this $250,000, of increasing that amount by the small sum necessary to drill the whole force every year. This is an expenditure about which there can be no jobbing, because every dollar of it goes straight into the pockets of the men, except, of course, the small amount necessary for provisioning the force during the camps. So far as I know, this is a portion of the expenditure of the country about which there is no jobbing. I think that these contracts for the annual camps, so far, at any rate, as regards the district in which I am concerned, have always been given out with the strictest impartiality, and every effort made, and honestly made, to obtain full value for the expenditure. This extra expenfull value for the expenditure. diture which I urge the Government to make the country would approve. Not one man in a thousand would object to it. It would go directly into the pockets of the men, and would not be an expenditure like many others, which only benefits a few individuals. It will prove the popularity of the force in a way that cannot be contradicted. Take any county that has a regiment of active militia, officered by gentlemen living in that county, and let the hon. Minister of Militia, in the most glaring case requiring interference, attempt to lay his hands on the weak point in that force, in a he will see what a storm he will raise about his ears. He would not only have the member of the county, no matter what party he supported, against him, but the mass of the people. The Minister of that every man connected with the regiment would rise to resent any interference. The force is popular, the country is proud of it, and the country is force effective, as we all wish to see it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am almost in entire accord with the remarks of the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). My experience in many camps has led me to know that the proficiency acquired by the volunteer force is wonderful, considering the few opportunities they have. I agree with the hon, gentlemen in the desirability of having an annual instead of biennial drill. trouble with the system of biennial drill is the difficulty of keeping up an interest in the force, not among the men but among the officers. The only among the men but among the officers. The Minister of Militia must know that if a young man attends the school and takes a position as officer in a battalion, and is then only called out to drill every two years, he cannot feel that interest he should have in the militia force. I can also endorse, from my own experience, what the hon. gentleman has said with regard to the advantages derived from the schools. I would like, however, to see some changes, but I think the force has benefited from these schools. In my district, a great many of the young men who have taken positions as officers of battalions have had the advantage of the school training, and we who have been attending a long time the camps can see the benefit and efficiency acquired through the training these young men have undergone and the knowledge they acquired at those schools. Almost every one who has taken an interest in militia affairs and attended camps will agree in that view. I do hope the volunteer force will receive more consideration from this House. They certainly deserve it, and have every reason to be proud of their record, and if the Government would grant such an amount as would be sufficient for an annual drill they would do an act which would redound greatly to their credit. I do not intend to take up the time of the House by pointing out any change that might be made, because, in all probability, especially at present, no suggestion of mine would be likely to be adopted; but I will confine myself to urging, as the hon, member for Muskoka has done, the desirability of having annual drills.

Mr. TYRWHITT. The chief objection I have to the item under discussion is that it is about half the amount required to drill the entire force annually. We have a general and an extensive staff, and by drilling only half the force every year we lose the amount of good we would otherwise have derived from their services. I must confess that I believe that the schools of the present day are doing as much good as any other system of instruction which has been in vogue during the time I have been connected with the force, some Mr. O'BRIEN.

case might arise which might reasonably involve out by the schools of the present day are as good the doing away with the battalion altogether—and as those who were turned out under former systems. In 1886 I took charge of a regiment which had been disorganized and was almost on the point of being struck from the list of the active force, owing to the fact that it had not been in camp Militia would hardly dare, even if his duty called for six years. Now I have my full complement of upon him to do it, to interfere with a single regi- officers, and I have found on every occasion, when ment in the country, because the force is so popular | I was able to induce my young officers to send in their names, that every opportunity that was given them of attending the schools when vacancies existed was taken advantage of. The school willing and will gladly support this House in giving of instruction in Toronto is so popular among the the small additional sum necessary to make the officers of the country that it is almost impossible sometimes to have an officer admitted there, and in some cases I have been obliged to send officers of my corps to London, where the school has not been so long in existence and there are not so many applicants as there are at the Toronto school. cannot agree with my hon. friend, the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who says that the college at Kingston is doing no good to the country.

> Mr. O'BRIEN. I did not say that, but that it was doing no good to the militia.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I do not agree with him in that either, or in his saying that the young gentlemen who are at the college should go to the camps, because that is about the time for their examination; and besides, the instruction in the college is of a very much higher class than that in the camps, which is of only an A B C character. When this matter was under discussion last year, I think the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said what he repeated this evening, that the camps did no good. I can only say that all the officers connected with our volunteer force who have been connected with regiments of the line are surprised at the progress made by our Canadian recruits in a short time. We have a sprinkling of those who have formerly been soldiers in the Imperial army amongst our volunteers, and it certainly is wonderful to observe the short time it takes our men to get into the routine of camp duty. I can assure that hon, gentleman that the volunteers in camp commence their duties at half past five in the morning, and those duties are continued until ten at night, and I think during that time every available moment is made use of. In fact, I think more work is got out of the volunteer force for the money expended than from any other body in the world. In fact, they are the only class in the Dominion who are expected to work for nothing. During the twelve days they are in camp they receive the munificent sum of fifty cents a day, and every one connected with the force knows that it requires about a week or ten days before camp to brush up, to get the men together, to have the clothing properly fitted, and to have the men in a proper state to meet with other regiments who may be at the camp. Thus, when the volunteer counts his money at the end of the camp he generally finds himself in debt. It appears to me that this is one part of the public service where very great economy is exercised. At the present time, and for many years past, the volunteers have been treated to bread without any butter. We are told that butter is a very awkward thing to issue, and I have no doubt that if the same system of economy con-27 years. I believe the men who are being turned tinues to be practised in regard to the volunteer exist without any bread. I hope the House will large measure due to the present system of schools. deal more liberally with the force in the future than it has in the past. We know that the present officer in command has recommended that the force members of this House sent a petition to the late Premier asking that a larger sum be placed in the estimates for the purpose of drilling them annually. I hope Parliament will recognize its duty so far as to see that the penny-wise-and-pound-foolish policy should not be continued, but that the force should be drilled annually.

Mr. HAZEN. I am glad the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has brought this matter before the House. Anyone who belongs to volunteer battalion knows that practically eight days every two years is not sufficient to secure efficiency in our militia service. I think it is very much to be desired that the length of drill should be extended. Many of those who form the militia battalions are recruits who have never had any experience of camp life, and yet within about eight days, they are expected to go through squad, and had nothing to do; for the sake of passing the drill, and company drill, and battalion drill, and afterwards, where there is more than one battalion, they may have to go through some brigade movements. It is utterly impossible in this short time for any man to attain to any efficiency, but it is very much to the credit of the intelligence of the men who are in the militia force of Canada to find that they acquire so much skill and learning-I will not use the word efficiency—as they do in those eight days, because any one who looks at a battalion of the Canadian militia after eight days' drill as is necessary, and they leave the school with the must agree that they have made a great deal of progress in that time, which must be due to the intelligence of the men comprising the force. I think an amount should be placed in the Estimates sufficient to extend the drill to sixteen or even twenty days, and to allow the drill to take place annually instead of every two years. One result of that would be that greater interest would be taken in the militia, because now, the country battalions being scattered over one or perhaps two counties, cannot be expected to take the same interest that they would if they were brought together more I cannot agree with the hon. member for South Oxford that the military camps are largely military holidays. As has been pointed out by the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) and the hon, member for South Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), the men in camp have no holidays, but the whole of their time is devoted to the business for which they are there. If I remember correctly, though it is some years since I was in camp, they are called out at the hour of five; at six they are out on parade, and are drilled up to seven; they are out again at ten, and are drilled two hours, up to twelve, and then they are drilled again from three to five. Take these three parades every day, with the incidental work which is necessary in carrying on the camp and keeping it clean, keeping the uniforms clean, and every thing of that sort which is necessary, there is scarcely an idle moment given to any military man from sunrise to sunset in any of the camps of this Dominion. Now, something has been said with regard to military schools. I think we diminished. We all know that Canadians are a never had more efficient officers in the different nation of soldiers. From boyhood days the young force the Government will soon expect them to | battalions than we have to-day, and that is in a In every battalion throughout the country you will find a large proportion of officers, and the number is increasing every year, who have qualified themshould be drilled annually. His predecessor selves for the position by taking courses at these recommended the same thing, and I know that 96 different military schools. That is not only true of the officers of the battalion, but it is also true, though perhaps in a less degree, with the noncommissioned officers, and I think the number is increasing every year, who go to these schools and attend regularly, pass the examinations, and obtain certificates from them. In that way I think the efficiency of the force is improving from year to year, and it is better officered to-day than it was in the past, and that condition of things is steadily improving. The old schools that were established in the country before the present system was adopted I do not think met the requirements at all. Anybody could attend them, whether he was engaged in the active militia force or not, and after attending those schools for a short time each man got a certificate. I happen to hold a certificate from one of those old schools myself. I know that during the winter season very often men who were out of employment time and earning a little money, were in the habit of attending those schools, and passing their examinations, without having the slightest idea of connecting themselves permanently with the militia force of the country. The officers who go to the present school are all of them either commissioned officers, or non-commissioned officers. They go there because they take an interest in the militia; they go there to perfect themselves in drill, to become efficient and to acquire such information intention of continuing as permanent members of the volunteer force of the country. In that way I think the present schools are doing a good work in improving the efficiency of the militia force. With regard to the remarks of the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. C'Brien) about the military college, I think they are perfectly correct, and that so far as the active militia of the country is concerned, the Royal Military College at Kingston is of little if any advantage to it. At the same time, I think that the military college at Kingston is a valuable institution to the country. Judging from the men that institution has turned out, and from the position they have taken in the force and in other walks of life, I think it is a credit to the country. It not only fits men for military life afterwards, but it gets them into good habits of discipline, and fits them for almost any profession or business in life. I sincerely trust that the attention of the Minister of Militia having been directed to this matter, he will endeavour next year to increase the appropriation for militia purposes, so that the whole brigade may be drilled, and that the time of drill may be extended beyond the brief space of ten days that we have now.

> Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I think both sides of the House are agreed that the item under discussion is not too large—in fact, it is too small. It is refreshing to see members on both sides agree upon one specific object, and I think they are agreed that the item should rather be increased than diminished. We all know that Canadians are a second nature for him to become a soldier when he has an opportunity. I think in the Dominion of Canada we have the finest material out of which to make soldiers that is to be found anywhere. would like to draw the attention of the Minister and of this House to the fact that in my own district a battalion has been formed for a number of years, and I will venture to say that the material of which that battalion is formed is as fine material as ever shouldered a rifle. They are scattered over a district probably 1,500 miles in extent, and ever since the battalion has been organized they have never been brought together for drill purposes. The officers of that battalion have all gone to military schools, at a great deal of trouble and expense They have not only done that, to themselves. but out of their own pockets they have bought a great deal of the clothing that was necessary for the men that is not furnished by the Militia Department, and they naturally feel, and we all know that if that esprit de corps is to be maintained that is necessary to make good and efficient soldiers, to teach them the art of war, as it were, they should be brought together where they will have an opportunity, at least, of knowing one another. commanding officer of that battalion lives in my own town, and the battalion is scattered throughout the towns in the rest of the district, and I have urged upon the Minister the necessity of taking that battalion into camp. Now, the complaint is that the rural battalions only go into camponce in two years; ours would be perfectly satisfied if they had such an opportunity even as that. There is no doubt that if the time can be extended, if instead of 12 days, 16 days can be devoted to drill -- and although in our district it may cost a little more to move our battalion than it does many other rural battalions, I think it is due to these officers and men who have devoted their time and means to bring the battalion up to the state of efficiency that it has now attained that the country should give them the means of making themselves more perfect. I would like to bring to the notice of the Minister the necessity of taking that battalion into camp, if not this year, at least next. I do not know what the estimate was last year; probably in the item that is before us the Minister has taken to himself sufficient funds to be able to do that another year. But we cannot expect that the officers or men will take that interest in military affairs that we desire they should take, unless the Government of the day give them the opportunity that they are justly entitled to.

And the second s

Mr. TROW. I doubt whether it is necessary to have a military force for our protection of 25,000 or 30,000 men to compete against a force of a million men that could be brought into the field by the United States, the only nation who could possibly ever have any occasion to invade our country. I think our policy should be to court the arts of peace with our neighbours, instead of arraying our soldiers on the frontier as a challenge to our American friends. If it is necessary at all to keep up a force, I think it is necessary at all to keep up a force, I think it is necessary to have them regularly drilled annually. In my own section of the country I know that those who are called out one year are possibly in Dakota, Minnesota or Manitoba before being called out again, and a very large pro-Mr. Macdonell (Algoma).

Canadian is accustomed to handle a gun, and it is portion of them are only called out once in two years. Many of them look upon it as a little picnic more than anything else, to go into the field for eight or ten days. I do not know that it improves their habits very much. I regret that many of our young men learn to smoke and drink in camp life, and I think it would be advisable if the officers were more strict, and showed a good example for the men in camp. I question very much if the officers are not overpaid and the men underpaid. I think that a great reform could be made in that respect. A large proportion of the grant is frittered away on the higher ranks of the officers. So far as our military schools are concerned, I think you will find that a very large number of the men turned out of our military schools, if you trace their career, are to be found in foreign armies, some of them in the United States, some in Egypt, some in Germany and in Austria.

Mr. ALLISON. In my part of the country I have been in the habit of lending horses to young men who go into training, and I do not think I have lent a horse to the same person three times. Those to whom I loaned horses one year would be in the States the following year. I think that more than two-thirds of those who went into training in our part of the country 8 years ago are now either American citizens or living in the United States. So I think the system of military training here is one of turning out men for the benefit of the United States rather than for our own country.

Mr. AMYOT. I will not discuss the question of the value of camps, for we must adhere to the present system, unless we make a radical change. In regard to our military schools, something has been said against the schools, but the hon, gentleman who offered the criticism is rather young. If he were an old man, as I am, he would have remembered the schools were established after Geo. E. Cartier, and were the means of establishing a militia force in Canada. They did very good service, and were the means of forming a great many good officers for our battalions. Nor do I complain against the schools to day, for they turn out very good cadets. But those who desire to join the active militia are obliged to attend these schools; otherwise they cannot receive their certificates. This is wrong. These schools should not be made an obstacle to the well-being of the force, and they become such when it is provided that excellent men cannot obtain certificates unless they attend these schools. Generally, those who are the most active, intelligent and earnest, and who would make the best officers, are engaged in banks or in commercial life, and cannot attend the schools. On the other hand, idle fellows, who are of little use, attend a school for weeks or months. What I complain about is, that these military schools are sometimes operating against the interests of the militia. In my own battalion I have many officers who went through the North-West campaign. They must obtain certificates from the schools or leave the force. They cannot go to the school at St. John's.

Mr. HAZEN. They can take a short course.

Mr. AMYOT. No; they cannot leave town. These men did not join the battalion on paper. When the battalion was wanted at the time of the Fenian Raid, and at the time of the North-West.

troubles it was ready. I will be deprived of 9 officers if the Government do not change the present regulations. I say: Keep your schools; I have sent many non-commissioned officers there and will continue to do so. But why exact attendance at the school? You say this is provided by law. It is a law which the Government could amend. I ask authorization for the examination of our officers who have done active service to pass examinations at Quebec without being compelled to relinquish their situations. It is a question of the efficiency of the force, and I hope the Minister of Militia will see his way to grant that favour. As regards the Military College at King-I am afraid we are paying large sums to maintain an emigration school for our educated nor do I think that is the notion with which they and able young men.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon, gentleman lives in Kingston, I believe, and he is therefore not a good judge.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) lives there, too, and he will tell you the same.

We have the statement of the Mr. AMYOT. Minister of Militia that since the school was established 51 cadets have been employed in this country as civil and military engineers. But how much has the school cost? About $60,000 a year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not $60,000.

Mr. AMYOT. Take it at $50,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not even that,

Mr. AMYOT. We can put the cost at over $18,000 for each cadet employed here. many are employed in England and the United States. I admit the college gives a perfect education. What do the young men do after they leave it? They go elsewhere. We teach them the science and then they leave this country.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Because we do not employ them.

Mr. AMYOT. It would cost us very much less to send them to England to obtain the same education there. I am in favour of every kind of education; but we must be practical men. If we could employ them after we had taught them engineering and military sciences, it would be well: but as we do not appear to be able to do so, we must not only look at the question of reducing the expenses but consider the propriety of putting an end to a system which takes away from this country our best young men.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I, with the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), were members of the Government which established that school. So far as I am personally concerned, I have never seen any reason to abandon the position which I took and the opinions which I entertained at the time the school was established. I think the experience of the United States, during their civil war was that it was very much easier to get a number of men together and train them, than it was to obtain a number of men to officer the men so trained. So the chief difficulty for every country in preparing for emergencies when troops may be required is to get officers who are properly qualified to protect their men and able to discharge those duties that depend at the expense of the mother country. These upon the courage and skill of a military body in case of war. I think it is a misfortune that we should lose a large number of our young men; but I never supposed it was a calamity to a country that those who have received a military education and cannot find employment in it should undertake to find active service in the armies of foreign countries. Indeed, I think that is advantageous. It is a thing that is often done by well-trained scientific men, eminent military engineers who belong to one country, to join the army of another country where they may go into active service, and it is a great advantage to them. I do not think that these men are all finally separated from Canada, go into that foreign service. They go there for the purpose of having an opportunity to distinguish themselves in the career upon which they have entered; ready at all times to return to the country where they were educated and to which they belong, and they do rather credit to us than they do injury by going abroad. There are some things in which we apply the principle of political economy, but there are other things, where reasons of state, different and distinct from reasons of political economy, apply. I do not think that Sandhurst or some other English military school would be just the same advantage to us as the military school in Kingston. Our military school is one of the things that go to make up a nation; it is one of the things that go to create a national feeling and a national spirit, and as I am not an Imperial Federationist, I do not think for that reason that it is desirable that fusion should be made between Canada and the United But, Sir, while I entertain these Kingdom. views with regard to a school for the purpose of giving a scientific military training to men that may become the nucleus of the governing portion of the military body, I do not think that it is necessary that we should incur so large an expense and undertake to keep up so large a force as that which has existed heretofore. My opinion is, that a better understanding and more liberal relations established between this country and the neighbouring republic, will, in a large degree, render provisions of that sort obsolete; and the sooner that this is fully appreciated and the sooner acted upon, the better it will be for the revenues of the country, and I think the better it will be for our people. It is not always the most industrious class who are most anxious to give their time to ordinary volunteer service. In fact, as my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Allison) has said, the migratory population are the population that can find most time for drill and training, and it is not surprising then, that he should never have put the same party on horseback two years in succession.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The question has drifted off a little from the training of the militia to the Military College, but I desire to say a word or two on this matter. It has been stated that we are educating young men in that college to go abroad and to leave our country. That is not the case, in my opinion; because I do not consider that the young men who have left the country to join the Imperial Army are lost to Canada. They are but perfecting and continuing their military education a moment's notice whenever their services are cost of the Military College is under $50,000 a year. required; they have not left us by any means, but the mother country says: You are educating a certain number of young men for military service, you desire them to have practical experience after they have passed four years in your college, and we will take them at our expense and continue their education. That is the position of these young men at the present time.

Mr. AMYOT. What about those who go to the States?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They have gone there because their ability and training are such as to entitle them to the large salaries which they can obtain there; they are gone there because I think our Government should say to these young men who come out of the college: We will give every year four or five or six positions in our Civil Service to young men who graduate from that college, and we will give up the political patronage which we exercise in that respect for some political protégé. I believe that would be a benefit to the service. I believe that the principles which those young men are trained in, Truth, Honour, and Duty, would be good qualities to implant in our Civil Service. I believe that we should give these young men prominent positions and utilize them more than we have done in the past. I believe it would be appreciated throughout the country, if four or five or six good places would be given to these young men as they graduate from the college each year. Now, Sir, I think with these gentlemen who have spoken, that perhaps these young men who are in the college might be made a little more use of in the active militia. I would not do, as my friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) says, make it obligatory upon them to leave their classes in the college and to join a battalion at the time of drill; but, after they graduate, or when they are out during their vacation, I would encourage them to join the various battalions and to do drill. know, as a matter of fact, that very many of these graduates who remain in Canada, join battalions, and there is hardly a camp in this whole country that has not one, or two, or more representatives of the Royal Military College attached to the various bar alions drilling. Their military knowledge and training are much appreciated by the volunteer officers in these camps. I may tell hon. gentlemen, that this college is also of use to the force, inasmuch as that every year there is a class of fifteen or twenty officers of the active militia force who are brought from the different schools to go through a three months' course, and to get the advantages of that college and the attendance on lectures in the classes In that way the Military College there. does a great deal of good to the active militia force. I believe that there is perhaps no sum in the militia estimates that is more wisely expended or does more good to the militia force, as a whole, than this sum of $50,000 a year which is expended on this college.

Mr. CASEY. $83,000 a year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. $48,000 a year.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. When the hon. gentleman says $83,000 a year he must remember that each Mr. Kirkpatrick.

young men are ready to come back to Canada at $25,000 or $30,000 annually paid back, so that the I believe that that sum is well expended. We must remember that a battery of artillery of 110 or 126. men costs $110,000 a year to maintain, while we have here 80 young men, good and efficient soldiers, maintained at a cost to the country of under $50,000. Take it man for man, with our batteries of artillery and our other schools, this force is maintained at less expense and is doing great good to the country. We know, Sir, that the effect of this college has been to raise the name of Canada throughout the world, and we find that the distant colonies of Australia are following our example and are going to establish a similar college there. I believe that the action of the late Government, of which the hon, member for South Oxford and the hon, member for Bothwell were members, in establishing this college, was a good service to the country, and the institution they established is a credit to Canada.

> Mr. CASEY. The hon, gentleman who has just sat down, has naturally spoken in the interest of his native city, and I am willing to admit that he probably speaks his real views in regard to this college. It is very natural that, with the college under his eye all the time, he should take a personal interest in it, and take an optimistic view of the college and its results. But I am bound to agree with those on both sides of the House, who have pointed out that we do not get all the advantages from that institution which we ought to get. The hon. member for Bothwell, thinks that it is as important to have a number of trained officer as to have a supply of men for the ranks. That is true; but we do not secure the supply of trained officers from the college at Kingston. It has been pointed out that large numbers of them go abroad, to the United States and to European countries. It is well enough to say that we can get them back; but how are they to be got back? If they are in the military service of a foreign country, they must have taken the oath of allegiance to that country, and they are not likely to be allowed to return to Canada. Even if they have gone to England, they would not be allowed to return from there. Were any sent back when we had our trouble in the North-West?

> Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, there were a great number employed up there.

M. CASEY. But how many that came back from England or a foreign country? I do not think a single one came back of those who were trained in our college and exported for As my hon, friend from foreign consumption. Frontenac points out, we are simply training young men and giving them an excellent scientific education, with the effect if not the object of enabling them to obtain high salaries in the United States. As there is a very small opening for them in this country, they emigrate to a country where there is enterprise or business enough to afford them suitable employment. So that practically you may take it that the great majority of those educated at the Kingston College seek employment in some country outside of Canada; and whether it be the United States or Great Britain or any other country, when they get there and student pays $400 a year, which amounts to about obtain good situations, they are anchored there for life and are not going to come back here in the case of trouble in the North-West, or in the case of any other trouble whatever. I do not think it is part of our duty to furnish money, especially under the head of Militia and Defence, for the purpose of training young men to go abroad as an advertisement of the Canadian Military College. That is about all the good we get out of it, and I do not think it is worth the money. My hon. friend from Frontenac suggests that we should keep these young men at home by putting them in the Civil Service. Here again we are landed in a difficulty. If these young men are fit for good positions in the Civil Service, and are put there, where are they when they are wanted for service in the field? Can we afford to take away the brightest ornaments of the Civil Service and send them away to be food for powder in the battle-field? I do not think that would be very practicable either. If these young men are to be of any service to us, the only place where they can be put is in some position in connection with the active militia itself. We have not permanent positions in connection with the militia, which are sufficiently well paid to attract them, with the exception of those of brigade major, or deputy adjutant-general, which are very few in number. But if we cannot provide them with some such positions, we are only giving them such a training that they must necessarily leave Canada to make their training useful to them. The result is that we are losing a good many well-educated young men who would be kept at home but for this worse than useless expenditure of public money. Now, I want to say a few words about the item which is really the one under discussion, that in regard to drill pay and instruction. I agree with a great deal that has been said in regard to this. It is the most popular and the most justifiable line of expenditure connected with the Department of Militia. The money goes directly from the trea-sury into the pocket of the volunteer, and from his pocket into that of somebody else during the camp. It is not taken home by the volunteer, but goes at once into circulation and promotes business. constitutes about one-fifth of the expenditure on Militia and Defence, and taken in connection with the $50,000 for ammunition and the grants for the Dominion Rifle Association and the other rifle and artillery associations-

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The item for ammunition was passed about a week ago.

Mr. CASEY. I am not criticizing the item for ammunition at all. I say that these items, taken together, constitute almost the only part of the militia vote for which we get real value. For that reason I am inclined rather to point out how a larger amount might be afforded for drill pay and incidental expenses connected with the annual training than to ask for any reduction of the item. It was with the view of pointing out how that larger amount might be afforded that I referred to the Royal Military College. I am satisfied that if that source of expenditure were entirely cut off, and the money employed in drilling so many more men every year, we would have a larger amount of trained officers and men who would remain in the schools and batteries. It is not in order to go into details at present, but I may take another opportunity of doing so and showing how large economies can be effected with regard to those schools, and the money thereby saved applied to this object. The actual expenditure that goes to the men, apart from the expenditure on training officers, is one-quarter of the whole militia expenditure. I am referring to the drill, ammunition and rifle association grants. The most important part of the annual training is the training in rifle shooting. It is becoming clearer, year by year, that modern battles are fought with the rifle, and that it is those who can shoot best who win. If we needed any illustration of this in modern British history, the wars with the Boers in South Africa would furnish it. These men were absolutely destitute of military training, but they were excellent shots and set to work to stalk and shoot the British soldiers, as if they were so much game, and they succeeded in making game of the British soldiers, to a remarkable extent. The very best regiments of the British army were decimated by these untrained Boers, who knew how to shoot.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Canadian bores are not such good shots.

Mr. CASEY. They sometimes only shoot off their mouth and miss the mark in doing so. I say the Boers on that occasion renewed the lesson taught by the New England settlers to the British troops a hundred years ago, namely, that accurate marksmanship is worth all the drill and discipline in the world. I know perfectly well, from my past experience as a volunteer, that shooting is not effectively taught.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. I am alluding to my personal experience. It is most essential, in connection with this estimate, that attention should be paid to systematic training in the use of the rifle at these camps, because at present the instruction is given very hurriedly. I would remind the hon. Minister of Militia that he has promised from time to time to consider the question of furnishing improved arms to the militia. They cannot be trained in the use of arms unless they have them; and now that the Martini has been discarded in the British army to some extent, and that another weapon has been adopted, which will ultimately supersede it entirely, there is a capital opportunity for us to obtain quantities of Martini rifles for the use of the volunteers. They are not a perfect weapon, but vastly superior to the Snider-Enfield. The question of pay has been referred to. I heartily agree that it is too little. The man to whom fifty cents a day is an object is not fit to make a good volunteer. No doubt the men serve, some through parriotism and others for the fun of the thing, but some indoubtedly come in for the fifty cents, who cannot make it in any other way and we do not want that class. Of course, as long as sufficient numbers of good men can be had at fifty cents, it would be absurd to pay more, but the evidence of all the officers is that there is difficulty in securing sufficient recruits and especially in securing the continuance of the same recruits at this price. If the drill were made annual and country. With the same object in view, I must the pay increased even if a smaller number were enter my protest, in general terms, against the drilled every year, at the end of ten years large amount paid for the different permanent there would be a vastly greater number of drilled men in the country than there is now, and we would secure something like continuity of training. Another point to which I would draw attention is the hardships to which the men are subjected in camp. Men are taken from their ordinary avocations and put under canvas and subjected to a rigorous discipline and hard work, equal to that to which regular soldiers are subjected, and the consequence is that every year there are large crops of illness arising from the annual training, sometimes breaking out during the camp and very often after the camp. If the hon. Minister of Militia himself had to get up at the hours enforced in camp and drill two or three hours before breakfast and several more in the day, he would realize to what a strain he is putting the average volunteer. I know, as a matter of fact, that even the hard working young farmers, who are accustomed to the hard work of a farm, find the camp work exhausting. The hours of drill might be mitigated and an additional day or two given to the camp, and the effect would be to get better work out of the men and teach them their duties better, because the man who is tired out really cannot get the benefit of the instruction given him. But it does seem quite useless to discuss these matters. Year after year the majors-general commanding our forces make certain recommendations which are almost invariably quietly shelved. Year after almost invariably quietly shelved. Year after year the officers of the militia force, supporters of the hon. gentleman, find fault with the management of that department. Year after year the Minister of Militia tilts up his chair and leans the back of his head on the back of the chair, closes his eyes as he is doing now and lets the stream of argument quietly roll on. I am not aware that any argument has drawn from him any expression of opinion of his own except once, when he stated that ammunition which was not good enough for use at the target was quite good enough for use in the field. I think that brilliant discovery is the hon, gentleman's sole original contribution to the discussion of military matters in this House, and until he takes more trouble to find out the opinions of military members of this House on the subject, it is likely to remain his only contribution. Later on it may be necessary to take a general survey of the whole of this subject, because now we are strictly limited to this particular item, and I hope that the Minister will prepare his mind for that occasion and will be more ready to discuss this question then than he is to-night.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think one point has been overlooked. If you are determined to train the militia, it would seem to be a necessity, first, to have a militia, and in order to have a militia they should be entitled to fair treatment. I think they should have a building at headquarters to cover their heads and to keep their arms dry. When a sum is voted for a drill shed for a battalion, the amount should not appear in the Estimates for three successive years without the work being carried out. That is very discouraging, and when, at the end of three years, the Minister of Militia, whose duty it is to look after the militia, proposes to shift that duty off his own shoulders and to ask a municipality to undertake the work which belongs to the department, the people in that municipality scarcely understand it. I ask the Minister now if he has received a communication from the good a battalion as that to which the hon. gentle-Mr. CASEY.

city of Brantford in reply to one sent by the Public Works Department suggesting that the city of Brantford should build a drill shed for the 38th Battalion, and the Government would give this $10,-000 to it. I understand that they have replied that it is not the duty of a municipality to erect a drill shed. I think it is a new thing for the Government to attempt to shirk the responsibility in that way.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend is wandering from the question.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, I am not. would have made my remarks very much more fully on the item under the head Public Works, but I had unfortunately to go away for some days, and the item may have been passed before I get back.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It has been passed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, not the item in Public Works. I think the treatment the 38th Battalion are receiving and have received—and I say it in all good nature; I want to impress it upon the Minister and upon his colleagues-is not in the interest of the militia force, and, if they had not a great deal of patriotism and public spirit, if they had not a desire to maintain their position as a regiment. it would have broken down, and it would seen. Let this last communication addressed to the city authorities will be almost more than you can expect them to stand. If I understand rightly, the municipality have requested the Militia Department to remove the building from the present site which they have leased to the department for a peppercorn a year. If the building is removed, what are you going to do with the regiment? Is the Minister prepared to have that regiment disbanded?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is the position it is in. What is to be done if the drill shed is to be removed and there is not another one in its place? The municipality say it is not their business; and of course it is not, and they cannot be expected to do it. Without trenching on debateable ground, the question is if the regiment is to be maintained as a regiment, and it is a credit to the force, is it on this account to go down? That is the whole question. The member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) said that the fact that the people were in touch with the militia force and felt a pride in them would be evidenced if any Minister attempted to interfere with the force though it might be weak in some parts, but he would find the people with the force. If that is true, as I believe it to be, what is to be said in regard to a regiment which is the pride of the people, every officer and member of which have been sacrificing themselves, for the good of the regiment, after bearing for three years the treatment they have received, I believe it will prove true that, not by the Minister interfering, but by the Minister not interfering and neglecting the battalion, whether by his own fault or not, the people will disapprove of his inaction. I would like to have some statement before I go away as to what course the Minister intends to pursue, as I may be questioned upon it when I reach home.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This item has been so well received that I have only a few words to say in answer to the hon, gentlemen who have spoken. I cannot for one moment believe that as, man (Mr. Paterson) has alluded would disband when the Government, with the liberality which the ion, gentleman is always willing to accord to the present Government, has placed in the Estimates the amount of $10,000 for the purpose of building the drill shed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why do you not do It has been there for three years.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I know the difficulties that have arisen, but the hon, gentleman must agree with me that the Government accorded to Brantford the amount of money which Brantford asked the Government to grant it. Brantford cannot complain, because we carried out what we were asked to do, and in the manner in which we were asked to accord it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It was the officers asked it, not Brantford. Before the Minister leaves that point, will he say what he is going to do about the removal of the shed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Before I come to that point, I wish to answer those i.on. gentlemen who have spoken upon this matter. The hon. member for South Oxford has referred to the few days which are accorded to the militia for training purposes. I believe, from the information which I have received from those whose duty it is to advise me on military matters in my department, that 12 days would be sufficient, considering the amount of money expended to day by Canada; but I believe it is important that the whole militia force should be drilled every year, and I wish to draw the attention of Parliament to that subject. That has been the policy which I have advocated, although I do not complain of what has been done in the past in a country like ours, where we have great public works to develop and it is necessary to be prudent in the expenditure of public funds. But when the day comes that Canada can afford to drill every militiaman once a year instead of every two years, I think the money will be well expended, and the force will receive much greater benefit. Hon. gentlemen acquainted with this subject know that if a man who enlists for a period of three years, enlists immediately after one camp, during that whole period of time he may receive only one drill. Now, I think the money would be properly invested if it was invested in such a way as to give the force 12 days drill every year, and I think that just as soon as we can possibly afford to do so we should drill the whole militia force annually, and the appropriation for that purpose should be increased as soon as we are able to increase it. Every man should be drilled every year as long as he belongs to the force. The hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) stated that it was desirable that the training should be annual. Well, I altogether agree with him, and I think that every man who has taken an interest in the militia force of Canada will agree that an annual drill is almost a necessity if you want to have an efficient force. The hon, member for South Oxford stated that the training accorded to the force only amounted to about five or six days. I think the hon, gentleman has underrated the time given to drill. I admit, as hon, gentlemen know well, that the day of going into camp is lost so far as the drill is concerned; but the exercise of camping is part and parcel of the education of a soldier, it is necessary that he should know how to ment was deluged with telegrams from cadets receiv-camp, and how to strike a camp. Then when he ing large salaries in the United States in various leaves the camp, that is another day lost to drill. Then, as my hon, friends have stated, the Sunday parade is very important, and it is a part of the education of a soldier, so that I think the days taken up in going into and leaving camp are not at all lost, but they are a benefit to the force. Like several hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the subject, I should myself like to have 16 days' drill instead of 12, or even to have 20 days' drill as they have in Switzerland. But I think, according to the advice I have received from every competent military man who has ever come to Canada, and who has had an opportunity of judging our force, with an annual drill of twelve days, Canada could rely upon a force efficient and perfectly trained. I agree with hon gentlemen opposite that the only purpose for which we should keep up this force, is defensive and not offensive; but I think the money that Canada is expending on the force would be more properly expended if, in addition to the present amount of $250,000 for annual drill-

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I call your attention to the fact that there is not a quorum present.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON,—if in addition to the $250,000 which is now accorded by Parliament, an additional amount of $170,000 were granted for the purpose of training the force every year. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) has stated, as well as other hon, gentlemen who have spoken, that the intelligence of Canadians is such that they require less time to become well drilled than do the men in other countries where they are selected from a different class of people. In Canada our militia force is selected among the intelligent sons of farmers, and during the time which they drill they can become more efficient than the men in other countries who are selected from a different class. The military school has been referred to. From the experience I have acquired, and from the information I have acquired from military advisers, I must again express the opinion, which I have expressed on another occasion, that the schools which we have under our present system—not having the advantage of having the Imperial troops with us that we had under the old military schools-still, I think, our present system of schools is producing very good results indeed. The military college has also been referred to. Well, I leave it to those who have seen the great success of our cadets all over the world to decide whether it would be an advantage or a disadvantage to destroy an institution which has not been organized by the party at present in power, but which has produced results that Canada can be proud of. I can only say in addition that, being consulted by a stranger as to the best means of organizing the forces in Australia, Sir Andrew Clark, one of the great military authorities, said: You cannot do better than to copy Canada's example by establishing such a military college as they have in Kingston. I think the men who have been turned out from that institution have proved themselves to be fitted to represent Canada in every portion of the world. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said that we are losing the services of these men. Well, Sir, during the trouble of 1885 in Manitoba and the North-West, as soon as it was known that troops were required, the departoccupations, and some in other countries, tendering their services, ready to give up their position and everything else and to come back home and fight the battles of Canada. I think the experience they are acquiring in the Imperial service and elsewhere is so much additional advantage to the college we The hon. member for Lennox have established. (Mr. Allison) seems to believe that the militia force is composed of men who go away to the States, because those who borrowed horses from him never came back. It may be due to the fact that the horses were not exactly what they expected, and they did not care to try the experiment a second time. In taking up the rolls of the militia force it appears that, although many of the men have removed to different places, they have generally joined some military organization, which permits them to help the country and continue the training they had commenced. So far as my personal views are concerned, I believe there is no money expended by Canada that is more beneficial to the Dominion than is the amount for drilling the militia force, and I hope the day will soon come when we will have an annual drill. I am aware that 96 members of the House signed a petition to the late lamented leader, Sir John A. Macdonald, asking for an annual drill of the militia force, and I hope it will be carried out as soon as possible. In reply to the hon, member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) I may say I did receive the communication to which headverted, and I had to refer it to the Public Works Depart-

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Did it not contain an intimation to the Militia Department to remove the drill shed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What does the hon. gentleman propose to do under those circumstances?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not prepared to say, for I had to refer it to a different department.

Mr. BORDEN. What changes have been made in the permanent staff of district No. 9? I have a copy of the district orders giving a list of the staff officers, who are to go into the camp of instruction on 15th September, and in that list I do not see the names of the deputy adjutant general or the district paymaster. I think, when such important officers are omitted, some explanation is necessary.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Some trouble arose between those officers and the department as to the manner in which they had administered the affairs of the department. They were submitted to an investigation and they are under suspension, and that is the reason why they could not be sent in the former positions they occupied as commanding offi-

Mr. BORDEN. Then I understand the matter has not been finally settled.

Sir Adolphe Caron.

Mr. WATSON. May we expect that the 95th Battalion will go into camp in the near future? It has been in existence six years, and has never been in camp. In regard to the militia expenditures, I believe a great deal of the money used might be judiciously expended in other ways to greater benefit to the country. A portion might advan-here as immigrants, who would fight the battles of the country if need be. A smaller number of militiamen better equipped and better drilled than they are to-day would be of greater service than the larger number now supposed to be under arms who are not well drilled and not sufficiently well equipped. It would be well if the country could devise some means whereby every school teacher would have a military training and give military instruction and drill to the boys at school. This would also be a great benefit to our young men physically. If the force were reduced by one-half physically. and better equipped and drilled, it would be advantageous to the country, because everyone knows that a militiaman is often in camp only once in his life. In some places, great efforts are made to fill up the companies at camp time; but this has very little benefit. No doubt what has been stated by the hon, member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) is correct, and bad habits are formed by boys and young men in camp.

Some hon, MEMBERS. No.

Mr. WATSON. I know some young men have been practically ruined by going to camp. By training the boys at school a similar result would be obtained without their running the danger of acquiring bad habits in camp. These are some of the means whereby part of the money expended on the militia force might be more advantageously used.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this discussion had occurred at a more convenient time, I might have had a good deal to say in regard to the policy of the Government, and some of the observations made. But looking to the fact that it is now half-past one a.m., I am not inclined to enter into a disquisition on military policy or any other policy, except to say this: that the hon. gentleman would have been wise to have accepted my suggestion and to have taken upother items at this hour. Of course this may be taken up on concurrence, if the Minister of Militia will agree to that; and if we shall have some reasonable liberty on concurrence, I shall defer any observations until that time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Royal Military College $77,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For the same reason as I defer observations as to the militia, I am not going to enter into a discussion into the Royal Military College, although there is a good deal to be said about that; but I will just say this to him: That I am afraid that he will find if the matter is looked into—and I make the statement in no party spirit, but I make it with very considerable regret, for it is an institution in which I have always taken a great deal of interest, and which I am inclined to think will not be found to have injured the prospects of Canada up to the present time—I am afraid he will find, that from whatever cause it may be, that institution is not as popular, nor possibly in some respects as well managed at present as it was in years gone by. I am afraid there will be, unless care is taken, a marked decadence in the quality of the officers that are turned out from that institution. I make that statement to the hon. gentleman, and I do not make it unadvisedly. I advise him, if he has, as I tageously be used in inducing young men to come know he has, the interest of that college at heart, to make a careful enquiry into the discipline and status of it.

Mr. WATSON. I would ask the Minister if there is any hope of the 90th Battalion going into camp this year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The companies, of course, drill under the ordinary regulations, but I am afraid it will be impossible to call these companies together for battalion drill this year. The hon, gentleman knows that these companies are at great distances from each other, and that transport runs away with a lot of money. I am afraid that under the limited estimates this year, it will be impossible for me to tell the hon, gentleman that the battalion drill will take place.

Mr. WATSON. They have been now in existtence for six years, and unless they are called together this year or next for battalion drill, I am afraid they will disband.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will try next year. Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House ajourned at 1.30 a.m. (Friday).
