689. Steel rails weighing not less than forty-five pounds per lineal yard for use in railway tracks, but this item shall not extend to rails for use in the tracks of railways used or intended for private purposes only, nor shall it extend to rails which are not used or intended to be used in connection with the business of common carrying of either goods or passengers, nor shall this item extend to rails for use in the tracks of street railways or tramways.
690. Steel for saws and straw cutters, cut to shape, but not further manufactured.
691. Steel valued at two and one-half cents per pound and upwards, for use in the manufacture of skates.
692. Steel of No. 12 gauge and thinner, but not thinner than No. 30 gauge when imported by manufacturers of buckle clasps and ice-creepers, to be used in the manufacture of such articles only in their own factories.
693. Stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of books, and bases and matrices and copper shells for the same, whether composed wholly or in part of metal or celluloid.
694. Sugar, n.e.s., not above number sixteen Dutch Standard in colour, sugar drainings, or pumpings drained in transit, melado or concentrated melado, tank bottoms, and sugar concrete.
695. Sulphate of iron (copperas); and sulphate of copper (blue vitriol).
696. Sulphur and brimstone, crude, or in roll or flour.
697. Tagging metal, plain, japanned or coated, in coils, not over one and a half inches in width, when imported by manufacturers of shoe and corset laces for use in their factories.
698. Tails, undressed.
699. Tartar emetic and gray tartar; cream of tartar in crystals and argal or argols.
700. Tea and green coffee imported direct from the country of growth and production.
- This item shall include tea and coffee purchased in bond in any country where tea and coffee are subject to customs duty, provided there be satisfactory proof that the tea or coffee so purchased in bond is such as might be entered for home consumption in the country where the same is purchased.
701. Teasels.
702. Tin crystals, tin strip waste, and tin, in blocks, pigs, bars and sheets and tin plates, tin foil and tea lead.
703. Tobacco, unmanufactured, for excise purposes, under conditions of "The Act respecting the Inland Revenue."
704. Treenails.
705. Trees, n.e.s.
706. Turpentine, raw or crude.
707. Turtles.
708. Ultramarine blue, dry or in pulp.
709. Vaccine and ivory vaccine points.
710. Varnish, black and bright for ships' use.
711. Verdigris, or sub-acetate of copper, dry.
712. Whalebone, unmanufactured.
713. Whiting or whitening, gilder's whiting and Paris white.
714. Wire rigging for ships and vessels.
715. Wire, crucible cast steel.
716. Wire of iron or steel, No. 13 and 14 gauge, flattened and corrugated, used in connection with the machine known as the wire grip machine for the manufacture of boots, shoes and leather belting, when imported by manufacturers of such articles to be used for these purposes only in their own factories.

717. Wool and the hair of the camel, alpaca, goat and of other like animals, not further prepared than washed, n.e.s. ; and noils, being the short wool which falls from the combs in worsted factories.
718. Mohair yarns.
719. Wool or worsted yarns, when genapped, dyed or finished, and imported by manufacturers of braids, cords, tassels and fringes to be used in the manufacture of such articles only in their own factories.

Wood.

720. Logs and round unmanufactured timber, not specially enumerated or provided for in this Act.
721. Firewood, handle bolts, heading bolts, stave bolts and shingle bolts, hop poles, fence posts, railroad ties, ship timber and ship planking, not specially provided for in this Act.
722. Timber, hewn or sawed, and timber used for spars and in building wharfs.
723. Timber, squared or sided
724. Creosoted lumber.
725. Sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, undressed or dressed on one side only.
726. Pine clapboards.
727. Spruce clapboards.
728. Hubs for wheels, posts, last blocks, wagon blocks, oar blocks, gun blocks, heading, and all like blocks or sticks, rough hewn or sawed only.
729. Laths.
730. Pickets and palings.
731. Shingles.
732. Staves of wood of all kinds, wood unmanufactured.

Provided that if any country shall impose a duty upon the articles in this section enumerated, or any of them, when imported into such country from Canada, it shall be lawful for the Governor General in Council, from time to time, by Proclamation published in the "Canada Gazette," to declare that the following Export Duties, or any of them, shall be chargeable upon logs exported into such country from Canada.

Viz :

733. Pine, Douglas Fir, Spruce, Fir Balsam, Cedar, Elm and Hemlock logs, not exceeding three dollars per thousand feet, board measure.

In case of the Export of any of the above-enumerated logs in shorter lengths than nine feet, then a rate per cord may be levied in the same way, not greater than equivalent to the above enumerated rate per thousand feet, board measure.

And Export duty shall be chargeable accordingly, after the publication of such Proclamation.

Provided that the Governor General in Council may by Proclamation published in like manner, from time to time, remove and reimpose such Export Duty.

734. Bamboos, unmanufactured, and bamboo reeds, not further manufactured than cut into suitable lengths for walking sticks or canes, or for sticks for umbrellas, parasols or sunshades.

735. Cane and rattans, not manufactured.
736. Corkwood, or cork bark, unmanufactured.
737. Lumber and timber planks and boards of amaranth, cocoboral, boxwood, cherry, chestnut, walnut, gumwood, mahogany, pitch pine, rosewood, sandal-wood, sycamore, Spanish cedar, oak, hickory, white-wood, African teak, black heart ebony, lignum vitæ, red cedar, redwood, satin-wood and white ash, when not otherwise manufactured than rough sawn or split or creosoted, vulcanized or treated by any other preserving process ; the wood of the persimmon and dogwood trees, hickory billets, and hickory lumber sawn to shape for spokes of wheels, but not further manufactured : hickory spokes rough turned, not tenoned, mitred, throated, faced sized, cut to length, round tenoned or polished.
738. Yellow metal, in bolts, bars and for sheathing.
739. Zinc, in blocks, pigs and sheets, and zinc seamless drawn tubing.
740. Zinc, chloride, and sulphate of.
741. Brass cups, being rough blanks, for the manufacture of paper shells or cartridges, when imported by manufacturers of brass and paper shells and cartridges for use in their own factories.
742. Brass, iron or steel rolled, round wire rods under three-eighths of an inch in diameter, and rolled copper rods one inch or under in diameter, when imported by wire manufacturers for use in making wire in their own factories.
743. Calcareous tufa.
744. Crucible sheet steel, eleven to sixteen gauge, 2½ to 18 inches wide when imported by manufacturers of mower and reaper knives, for the manufacture of such knives, in their own factories.
745. Copper rollers, for use in calico printing, when imported by calico printers for use in their factories in the printing of calicoes and for no other purpose (such rollers not being manufactured in Canada).
746. Elastic rubber thread,
747. Felloes of hickory wood, rough sawn to shape only, or rough sawn and bent to shape, not planed, smoothed or otherwise manufactured.
748. Fish skins and fish offal.
749. Gum Chicle or Sappato Gum in a crude state.
750. Hatters' bands (not cords), bindings, tips and sides, hat sweats and linings both tips and sides, when imported by hat and cap manufacturers only, for use in their factories for the manufacture of hats and caps.
751. Hemp paper, made on four cylinder machines and calendered to between .006 and .008 inch thickness for the manufacture of shot shells, primers for the manufacture of shot shells and cartridges ; and felt board sized and hydraulic pressed and covered with paper or uncovered for the manufacture of gun wads when such articles are imported by the manufacturers of shot shells, cartridges and gun wads, to be used for these purposes only in their own factories, until such times as the said articles are manufactured in Canada: Provided always that the said articles when imported, shall be entered only at such port or ports as may be named by the Controller of Customs, and at no other place; samples of such articles to be furnished to the Collector of said port or ports by the Customs Department for the guidance of the officer when accepting free entries of such materials.

752. Molasses, second process, or molasses derived from the manufacture of "molassesugar," testing by polariscope less than 35 degrees when imported by manufacturers of blacking, for use in their own factories in the manufacture of blacking, conditional that the importers shall, in addition to making oath at the time of entry that such molasses is imported for such use and will not be used for any other purpose, cause such molasses to be at once mixed in a proper tank made for the purpose with at least one-fifth of the quantity thereof of cod, or other oil, whereby such molasses may be rendered unfit for any other use, such mixing to be done in the presence of a Customs officer at the expense of the importer and under such further regulations as may from time to time be considered necessary in the interest and protection of the revenue, and that until such mixing is done and duly certified on the face of the entry thereof by such Customs officer the entry shall be held to be incomplete and the molasses subject to the usual rate of duty as when imported for any other purpose.
753. Horse hair, not further manufactured than simply cleaned and dipped or dyed, imported for use in the manufacture of horse hair cloths.
754. Lastings, mohair cloth, or other manufactures of cloth, when imported by manufacturers of buttons for use in their own factories, and woven or made in patterns of such size, shape or form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for covering buttons exclusively—these conditions to be ascertained by special examination by the proper officer or Customs, and so certified on the face of each entry.
755. Oleo-stearine and degreas, when imported by manufacturers of leather, for use in the manufacture of leather in their factories.
756. Platinum and black oxide of copper, for use in the manufacture of chlorate.
757. Potash, chlorate of, not further prepared than ground, and free from admixture with any other substance.
758. Rolled iron tubes not welded, under 1½ inch in diameter, iron, 9 and 10 gauge, not over 1½ inch wide, iron tubing, lacquered or brass covered, not over 1½ inch diameter, all of which are to be cut to lengths for the manufacture of bedsteads, and to be used for no other purpose; when imported for the manufacturers of iron bedsteads to be used for these purposes only in their own factories, until such time as any of the said articles are manufactured in Canada.
759. Sawdust of the following woods: amaranth, cocoboral, boxwood, cherry, chestnut, walnut, gunwood, mahogany, pitch pine, rosewood, sandal-wood, sycamore, Spanish cedar, oak, hickory, whitewood, African teak, black heart ebony, lignum vitæ, red cedar, redwood, satin-wood, white ash, persimmon and dog wood.
- Mr. FOSTER.

760. Square reeds and raw-hide centres, textile leather or rubber heads, thumbs and tips, and steel, iron or nickel caps for whip ends, when imported by whip manufacturers, for use in the manufacture of whips in their own factories.
761. Steel for the manufacture of hammers, augers and auger bits, when imported by the manufacturers of such articles, for use in their own factories only.
762. Steel of numbers 24 and 17 gauge, in sheets 63 inches long and from 18 inches to 32 inches wide for the manufacture of tubular bow sockets, when imported by the manufacturers of such articles, for use in their own factories only.
763. Steel strip and flat steel wire, when imported into Canada by manufacturers of buckthorns, plain strip or other fencing, and safety barb wire fencing, for use in their own factories in the manufacture thereof.
764. Steel wire, Bessemer soft-drawn spring, of numbers 10, 12 and 13 gauge respectively, and homo steel spring wire, of numbers 11 and 12 gauge respectively, when imported by manufacturers of wire mattresses, to be used in their own factories in the manufacture of such articles.
765. Typewriters, tablets with movable fixtures, and musical instruments, when imported by and for the use of schools for the blind, and being and remaining the sole property of the governing bodies of said schools and not of private individuals, the above particulars to be verified by special affidavit on each entry when presented.
766. Yarn spun from the hair of the alpaca or angora goat, when imported by manufacturers of braids for use exclusively in their factories in the manufacture of such braids only, under such regulations as may be adopted by the Controller of Customs.

Provided that with respect to goods imported for manufacturing purposes that are admissible under this Act for any specific purposes, at a lower rate of duty than would otherwise be chargeable, or exempt from duty, the importer claiming such exemption from duty, or proportionate exemption from duty, shall make and subscribe to the following affidavit or affirmation before the Collector of Customs at the Port of Entry:—

I, (1) the undersigned, importer of the (2) mentioned in this entry, do solemnly (3) that such (4) are imported by me for the manufacture of (5) in my own factory, situated at (6) and that no portion of the same will be used for any other purpose or disposed of until so manufactured.

(1) Name of importer.

(2) Name of the goods or articles

(3) Swear or affirm.

- (4) Name of the goods or articles.
 (5) Name of the goods to be manufactured.
 (6) Name of the place, county and province.

SCHEDULE "C."

767. Books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind of a treasonable or seditious, or of an immoral or indecent character.
 768. Reprints of Canadian copyright works, and reprints of British copyright works which have been also copyrighted in Canada.
 769. Coin, base or counterfeit.
 770. Oleomargarine, butterine or other similar substitute for butter.
 771. Goods manufactured or produced, wholly or in part by prison labour, or which have been made within or in connection with any prison, jail or penitentiary.

4. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal so much of the Inland Revenue Act and amending Acts as determines the Excise duties to be levied upon Malt and Vinegar, and to provide that on and after the 28th March the Excise duties thereon shall be as follows ;—

1. Malt, one and one-half cents per pound.
2. Vinegar, eight cents per proof gallon.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of resolutions.

13. Opium (crude), $1 per net pound.

Mr. FOSTER. The House will remember that the intention was to admit free of duty the outer ball or covering, and the committee thought, at the time of the passing of this item, that this reading would do that. But I see by the package clause that where there is a specific duty on an article, the covering of it is dutiable at 20 per cent. Therefore, I wish to move that this item be amended by striking out the word "net," and by adding at the end of the item the words: "the outer ball or covering to be free from duty." Otherwise the intention of the committee will be frustrated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not wish to raise any unnecessary objection; but I think we shall have to go into committee to do that.

Mr. FOSTER. If it had not been the decision of the committee, we might; but this is only carrying out the intention of the committee.

Mr. LAURIER. My impression is that you cannot make the alteration here.

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot raise the duty; but this is a reduction. We could strike the clause out altogether, if we liked.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend is right: we could strike out the clause; but if you wish to amend a resolution, as I understand, you must move that the resolution be referred back to the committee to be amended. You cannot amend it without doing so.

Mr. SPEAKER. The practice is thus laid down in Bourinot:

But it must be remembered that it is always regular to propose an amendment on the report from the committee either for the repeal or reduction of proposed duties, even when those duties are actually below what they had been previously. Neither is it necessary to go back into committee to strike off certain articles from the free list, provided the duty is left as payable under the existing law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose this is substantially a reduction of duty.

Item, as amended, concurred in.

23. Lard, lard compound and similar substances, cottolene and animal stearine of all kinds, n.e.s., 2 cents per pound.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any other stearine except animal?

Mr. FOSTER. There is vegetable stearine used in soap-making. That will come in at 20 per cent, as it always has, unenumerated.

Item concurred in.

43. Rye flour, 50 cents per barrel.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there an extra duty on the barrel? Apparently there will be, as you have seen fit to add the words, in the case of apples, "including duty on barrels."

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, there will be a duty at 20 per cent. It is a specific duty and comes in under the package clause at 20 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Ought not the same principle be applied as in apples?

Mr. FOSTER. The idea was to charge no higher duty on apples than 40 cents per barrel.

Item concurred in.

46. Barley, 15 cents per bushel.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this article of barley, which is a matter of considerable importance to us, I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that under the present revision of the tariff in the United States, an ad valorem duty is proposed which is likely to be considerably less than 15 cents per bushel. If that be the case, it would be more politic for us, I think, to conform to the ad valorem duty rather than leave it as specific duty which, under certain contingencies, might lead to the raising of the duty on our barley going into the United States. The hon. gentleman knows that we buy mighty little barley and sell a great deal, so it is distinctly to the interests of our farmers that no opportunity should be given to the American barley growers to pretend that a heavier rate of duty is imposed by us than is imposed by the United States. Or the hon. gentleman might make a smaller specific duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Barley was made by the Finance Committee 30 per cent. That would be about the equivalent of this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; in a good many cases it would be less. They manage to get it in under a lower grade. There is a risk, you see. It is in our interest to give no reason for raising the duty on barley.

Mr. FOSTER. At a market price of 50 cents per bushel, this rate of duty would be exactly the same as theirs. But the trouble of this is we have no knowledge whatever of what their act will be. We have just as good a right to take it for granted that it will be 30 cents per bushel, as it came from the House of Representatives. The duty according to the Bill as it came from the House was 30 cents per bushel of 48 pounds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that must be an error. for I am sure it did not leave the House Committee at 30 cents per bushel.

Mr. CHARLTON. The House Committee put it at 25 cents per bushel, and it was altered to 30 cents in the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER. I see now. There are three different tariffs here combined in one. The barley duty now under the McKinley Bill is 30 cents per bushel. As it came from the House, it was 25 per cent, and the Senate Committee changed it to 30 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a matter that would very likely get into conference, and, if you keep the duty at 15 cents per bushel specific, it will considerably assist those parties who wish to have a higher duty imposed by the United States. We have next to nothing to lose in the matter, because we are certainly not going to buy barley from the United States. Better make it 10 cents per bushel.

Mr. FOSTER. No; but I would have no objection to making it 30 per cent, the same as in the American tariff as at present revised. I move that that change be made.

Item, as amended, concurred in.

47. Indian corn, 7½ cents per bushel.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a provision in connection with this that I think the Minister should seriously consider. He allows a rebate of 90 per cent of the duty on Indian corn brought in and ground for human food. I think that when corn is brought in and used for animal food and proper certificates are furnished to show that it was imported to be used for the purpose of feeding stock for export, there should be a rebate of the same proportion as when it is brought in to be ground for human food. The hon. Minister will recollect that we had a very extended debate in this House upon the question of corn being brought into the Maritime Provinces and ground professedly for human food, while, from the enormous quantity brought in, the Minister himself must agree it cannot all be used for human food, and that a large proportion is probably used for feeding stock. In order to encourage the export of stock from this country, which has become a most important thing with the farmers of Ontario, I think this rebate should be allowed on corn used for feeding such stock. I quite agree that when it is imported to come into direct competition with wheat or anything else we have, the Minister might fairly claim that it should pay a tax, but when it comes in for the purpose of feeding stock for export, and we are doing quite an export trade notwithstanding the drawbacks stock is subjected to, the Minister should give the farmers the advantage of the rebate just the same as is given to the people of the Maritime Provinces.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think we can do that here.

Item concurred in.

65. Tomatoes, fresh, 20 cents per bushel and 10 per cent ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman compute that to be ad valorem?

Mr. FOSTER. When the tomatoes are low in the market, the ad valorem equivalent, of course, will be high, but they will not be imported at all at such a season. But when they are imported as a delicacy or luxury, the ad valorem equivalent of duty will be comparatively small.

Item concurred in.

Animals, and agricultural and animal products.

Mr. CARGILL. Before leaving this class, I would like to inquire of the Finance Minister if, in case the American Government should admit eggs from Canada at a lower rate of duty than 5 cents per dozen, say, 1, 2 or 3 cents per dozen, is it the intention of the Government to admit eggs at the same rate?

Mr. FOSTER. That item of eggs belongs to this schedule, but it has not been reached, having been passed at another stage. If the Speaker will allow me, though, I will answer the hon. gentleman. The intention of the Government, as to the extent it would go, has been shown, of course, by the item as passed:

Eggs, 5 cents a dozen; to be free when and so long as eggs exported from Canada are allowed free entry into the United States.

Of course, if the Government were to make eggs free provided the United States made them free, that carries with it reciprocity. If they made them less, and if we were in session at the time, we should be very glad to make them at the same rate; and when we come to that item, it may be well to provide for that absolutely.

125. Glacial acetic acid or acetic acid exceeding the strength of proof, when imported by druggists and other than dyers, calico printers, or manufacturers of vinegar or acetates or colours, to be used in their own factories for purposes of manufacture other than as heretofore excepted from this provision, a specific duty equal to 15 cents per imperial gallon of the strength of proof and 1 cent additional per gallon for each degree of strength in excess of the strength of proof.

Mr. LAURIER. As no doubt the Finance Minister is aware, the duty on acetic acid is almost 200 per cent. It is a mixed duty, ad valorem and specific. A letter has been placed in my hands by a firm in Montreal, Marrotte, Leblanc & Company, in which they state: There is but one manufactory of acetic acid in the Dominion, and we are called upon to pay $8 duty on a four-gallon jar, which costs $4.50 in Germany, or nearly 200 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will see there are three items with respect to acetic acid. The first takes in vinegar. The duty on vinegar is 15 cents per gallon. Then there is a duty placed on the acid in proportion as the strength increases, and when it comes to a very high strength, like glacial acetic acid, the duty is high. It was put high purposely, in order to prevent, as far as possible, the use of glacial acid in the manufacture of vinegar. Vinegar is made from it. This manufacture is prohibited in some countries, and we do all we possibly can to discourage the manufacture of vinegar from acetic acid. When 15 cents per gallon duty is paid, it must also be remembered that acetic acid when imported for all manufacturing purposes is at a low rate of duty on the whole. The duty is very high undoubtedly on glacial acetic acid, but it is used almost entirely either by manufacturers or by druggists in their work, and for them the duty in the one case has been made very much lower than before, and in the other case it is not higher.

Mr. LAURIER. Two hundred per cent seems very high.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it is that rate.

Mr. LAURIER. This firm says so.

Mr. FOSTER. They must have obtained a quantity at a great bargain.

Item concurred in.

130. All medicinal, chemical and pharmaceutical preparations, when compounded of more than one substance, including patent and proprietary preparations, tinctures, pills, powders, troches, lozenges, syrups, cordials, bitters, anodynes, tonics, plasters, liniments, salves, ointments, pastes, drops, waters, essences and oils, not otherwise provided for; all liquids, 50 per cent ad valorem; and all others, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Provided that this item shall not be held to include drugs and preparations recognized by the British and the United States Pharmacopœia as officinal.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to add after the word "pharmacopœia" the words "and the French Codex."

Mr. BORDEN. It has been pointed out with reference to this class, that constantly there are new remedies being discovered which are used in the practice of medicine, and which still are not included in the pharmacopœias. The pharmacopœias are revised, in the United States at any rate, only once in ten years, and, therefore, many remedies cannot possibly be included among the regular drugs for several years, and in the meantime they come in at a greatly increased rate of taxation. It was suggested that some amendment might be made which would include these remedies.

Mr. FOSTER. We have found a great deal of difficulty in arranging this up to the present time, and I think we would find it a good deal more difficult if we commenced to deal with something which did not exist.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be impossible to provide for things that did not exist and cannot be named or designated in any way.

Mr. BORDEN. At this very moment there are remedies which are being used by the profession and which are not in the pharmacopœias.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The only excuse for your tax is that the less of these patent medicines a man takes the better for him.

Item concurred in.

170. Plate glass, not coloured, in panes of over 12 and not over 30 square feet each, 6 cents per square foot; and when bevelled, 2 cents per square foot additional.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why is the rather heavy duty of 2 cents per square foot imposed on account of bevelling?

Mr. FOSTER. That has been the law since 1887, I think. It is not a high rate. I remember at that time we went into it very carefully.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is an addition of one-third to the duty. What is the special reason for it?

Mr. FOSTER. This glass is all bevelled here, except the German plate, of course.

Item concurred in.

263. Shovels and spades, shovel and spade blanks, and iron or steel cut to shape for same, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to draw the attention of the Finance Minister to a promise he made me when we were on this item, that he would furnish, for the information of the committee, the quantity of those things manufactured in Canada. At the time he said that he did not have it, but that he would procure it and furnish the quantity to the committee. I would like to know now if he can give us those figures.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the figures by me. I will make another note of it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Of course, we are quite willing to give him every reasonable opportunity to get possession of the information, but really I think that when a promise of that kind is made, we have a right to expect that it will be adhered to.

Item concurred in.

272. Mowing machines, self-binding harvesters, harvesters without binders, binding attachments, reapers, sulky and walking ploughs, harrows, cultivators, seed drills and horse rakes, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I would like once more to call the attention of the Government to the sweeping reduction with regard to agricultural implements. I have a letter here from a firm of agricultural implement makers, John H. Grout & Co., of Grimsby, in which they say :

I have good reason, as a manufacturer, to complain of the proposed duty on agricultural implements, that is, the change from 35 per cent to 20 per cent without any change being made in raw material. This virtually means doing away with any protection whatever, calculating on the difference of cost of our raw material, also the change being made when we had on hand all the stock on which the highest duty had been paid for the season's business.

Now, notwithstanding the outcry that has been made against the tax on agricultural implements, and notwithstanding the indiscreet statements that some agricultural implement makers have made, or are said to have made, I say this reduction is altogether too sweeping, and will do more or less damage to a large and growing industry, an industry that ought to be native to this country, and ought to be encouraged rather than injured. I submit that, on the whole, the proposed reduction is altogether too sweeping, and I think it is not yet too late for the Government to give that better consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. With regard to this matter, the Government has fixed the value of binders, when imported into this country, at $100, upon which they charge a duty of $20. Notwithstanding the fact that a man may buy a McCormick binder in Chicago for less than $70, when it gets to the boundary, the value is fixed at $100, and he has got to pay a duty of $20 upon a $100 binder. Now, the question with regard to the duty paid by the manufacturers of this country on the iron that is used in the binders, was clearly argued out in this House at the time the item was first under consideration, when the Controller of Customs showed that they did not pay quite $5 altogether of duty upon the iron that is in the binder. Well, everything included, $5 will cover the entire sum. The Controller shakes his head; I do not know what that means, but I take it to indicate that he challenges the statement I make. But I think if he goes over the items he will find I am right. It leaves the manufacturers of this country a clear protection of $15 on a binder, or within a few cents of it.

Mr. WALLACE. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, I would like to show that they do not pay more than $6 on the iron that is in the binder, and that leaves $14. Now, the Massey-Harris Company manufactured, last year, 40,000 binders, and I believe they sold every one. At $14 apiece, that makes $560,000 that they have left for the sale of implements of that kind. Now, I think that should be a satisfactory margin to the implement manufacturers, and I think the farmers of this country are loaded down enough without asking them to consent to an increase. But the point I want to draw my hon. friend's attention to, is this: Every item that enters into the construction of a binder can be procured in Canada as cheaply as it can on the other side, counting the duty off. Is not wood as cheap? Is not labour as cheap? Is not the material that enters into it as cheap? Then, I ask on what grounds do the manufacturers of these binders say they cannot compete? We know that in this country house rents are cheap, living is cheap, and the ordinary articles that enter into every-day use of families are cheap. On all those points, they can afford to compete. I say that the ordinary articles of living are as cheap as they are in the United States at the present moment. Now, in the face of all these facts, I cannot see how these manufacturers can ask for an increased duty on binders.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope the Finance Minister will not listen to the appeal of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean). I agree with my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that the manufacturers of implements are well enough protected with 20 per cent. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Wellington has not been converted by some of his leaders into sympathizing too strongly with the manufacturers. I think that 20 per cent is ample protection for those gentlemen.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is a little astray in his statement of facts, because he states that we levy a duty on a valuation of $100 for a McCormick reaper, while they can be bought in Chicago for $70. Now, the statements of the McCormicks' themselves, which I hold, is that they are selling them for $100.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is for local consumption. You understand that all right. That is not for export.

Mr. WALLACE. The statement of the McCormicks themselves, given to me, is that the price—

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes; we understand all you are going to say before you say it.

Mr. WALLACE. There are a lot of things you do not know, however. The price is levied on that $100 in accordance with the Act of Parliament, which says that the price for duty shall be the price in the open market of the country from which the article is exported, and the price in the open market in Chicago for the McCormick binder, in quantities of fifty, and under, is $100. That is their own statement, and we verified it by actual investigation ourselves, and found it to be correct. And, therefore, in accordance with the law the duty was paid on a valuation of $100. Further, the hon. gentleman made the statement that duties were paid on all articles entering into the construction of binders. I stated that if the duties were paid on all those articles the amount was $6.60.

Mr. McMULLEN. The manufacturers did not pay duties on materials manufactured in the country as the First Minister says.

Mr. WALLACE. I take the position that if the articles entering into the construction of the binders were not made in the country, but had to be imported, the duties paid on them would be between $6 and $7. When they were made here and sold at a cheaper rate than the imported article with the duty added, as we know is the case in many instances, the duty is not paid by the manufacturer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Controller of Customs must be mistaken in his calculation, when the duty on raw material entering into an agricultural implement is estimated by him at not more than $6 or $7. I suppose the Government have had statements furnished them by the different agricultural implement manufacturers throughout the country. I understand the Government have obtained particulars with respect to those implements. But the hon. gentleman must have received representations in a contrary sense, and I do not think the Controller is in a position to dispute the statements submitted to him.

Mr. WALLACE. I had a statement from Noxon Brothers, in Oxford County, in regard to the quality of materials they used for the purpose of manufacturing binders.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like very much if the hon. gentleman would read one of the statements submitted to him by these manufacturers, as it would be of interest to the House, instead of the hon. gentleman giving a statement which I cannot accept as correct, from my knowledge of the business. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) stated the case very properly. While not personally acquainted with that manufacturing firm, I know of it. The firm is complaining, not so much on account of the high duty, but on account of other imposts placed on the business. There is one point which the hon. Controller of Customs has overlooked, and that is that the great bulk of the expensive machinery they use has to be imported from the other side, and the duty is very high. The proper policy to adopt is to endeavour so that they will not be compelled to reduce the wages of their workmen in the factory in order to pay high duties on machinery required to be imported for manufacturing purposes. That represents a great burden on the manufacturers, and they have represented to the Controller of Customs and to the Government that they will be perfectly satisfied with the present duty or a lower duty if relief can be obtained on the material and the manufacturing machinery they use. I am sure the hon. Controller will not deny that that is the proposition which the manufacturers have made. I have not seen the statement put in by Noxon Brothers, but I know something in regard to the representations made by other manufacturers, and the Controller will not attempt to deny that the proposition is one that was at least suggested or made when the reduction was proposed by manufacturers generally. No doubt the manufacturers were represented here as a class, and no doubt their representatives submitted statements to the hon. gentleman. Those engaged in other industries using machinery which has to be purchased on the other side of the line are in a similar position; this is the case in regard to considerable quantities of iron and steel goods that have to be purchased in other countries. I cannot understand on what principle or theory the Government insists on trying to injure those industries, especially the manufacturers of agricultural implements, because the Controller must know that this business is not in as good a position as it was some years ago, that the different firms are not prospering as they prospered under a low duty and a free market, and that they are handicapped, and if they succeeded it was by reducing the wages of the workmen in their factories. The firm to which the hon. member for East York referred are strong supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, but they deal with these questions as business men, and in my opinion those representing business interests should receive more attention and their representations should possess more weight with the Controller of Customs and the Government in dealing with trade matters than has been the case hitherto.

Mr. WALLACE. I congratulate the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) on gaining another adherent in the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland).

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I desire to read another letter, and if I am permitted to do so I will not trouble the committee on the next clause.

Mr. SPEAKER. We must adhere to the rules.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The statement made by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), that these industries were not as prosperous as they were some years before the high duties were imposed, is to a certain extent true as regards the smaller industries in the country. It was contended when this policy was introduced that home competition would be very keen, and hon. gentlemen know that in this, at least certainly, that promise has been kept as well in regard to the article of agricultural implements as in anything else; and it is a fact to deplore, and yet a fact we appreciate, that the smaller industries throughout the country have to a certain extent been driven to the wall by the large industries, but with this happy result that the price has been so materially reduced under the high tariff by the keen competition that the smaller establishments can no longer compete with the large establishments in supplying goods at cheap rates because of the larger quantities these institutions make. That undoubtedly is the reason why the smaller establishments have become less prosperous than formerly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I entirely disagree with the remarks made by the hon. gentleman. As a matter of personal explanation, I may say that the Controller of Customs when he intimated and insinuated that I was advocating an increase of duty, was entirely inaccurate, for I plainly stated that I was not in favour of it, but opposed to it. It was a decrease of duty that I was advocating, and in the interest of the manufacturer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No member on this side of the House has advocated an increase to the extent of one cent, and I do not think any member on this side will do so. What we say, and I have repeated it many times, is this: that every principle of reason and justice requires that the manufacturer of agricultural implements should get his raw material free, as the vast bulk of other manufacturers are permitted to get in their raw material free.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How about the canned vegetable companies? I think the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) asked for increased duties.

Mr. CHARLTON. That subject is not before the committee at present.

Item concurred in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

273. Portable machines, portable steam engines, threshers and separators, horse-powers, portable saw mills and planing mills, and parts thereof in any stage of manufacture, thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). In connection with this item I take the opportunity of reading a letter which is applicable to it, and it answers the objection raised by one of the previous speakers. That hon. gentleman said that all the materials were the same in this country as in the United States. The letter which I have received reads as follows:—

Malleable iron, 1c. per pound more in Canada than in the States.

Pig iron, 65 per cent more in Toronto than it costs the American maker.

Iron pipe costs us, within thirty days, 70 per cent more in Toronto than it costs the American maker.

Bar iron and steel, 50 to 70 per cent more.

When these items are considered upon the gross purchases necessary to make the finished product, and then add coal, coke, machine and fuel oil, files, emery stones, grindstones and everything else that must be purchased in order to make the finished material; and also count out the waste goods, and waste in the various kinds of material, is from 15 to 60 per cent between the kinds of raw material necessary, and the net weight of material that goes into a machine.

I am disheartened and feel that the interests of Ontario have been sacrificed for those of some other provinces. I also feel that the special industry with which I am connected has been singled out and made the scapegoat of a popular but false cry. Unless the Government makes some provision in the free list for the importation of materials for agricultural implements at a reduced rate, then our home trade will certainly be shared by American manufacturers. I am convinced that if things remain as now, the largest industry in Ontario, both for home and export trade, will be affected most adversely.

Now, as National Policy men we do not want to see that brought about.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Controller of Customs challenged the statement I made here to-night, and in order to show that he was wrong and that I was right, I beg to read his own remarks from 'Hansard,' which were as follows:—

Mr. WALLACE. If they could not buy it cheaper here they would import it; the fact that they buy it here is sufficient proof that they get it cheaper. But suppose there were in this country no manufactures of pig iron or bar iron, or steel, and that the manufacturers of agricultural implements had to import all their raw material, what would be the result? The duty on 600 pounds of pig iron, at \$4 per ton, is \$1.20: the duty on 300 pounds of steel, at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound, is \$1.50; the duty on 300 pounds of wrought iron at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound, is \$1.50, making a total on those articles of \$4.20. Say there were other items to be imported, and upon which they would have to pay duty—for instance, canvas, which, however, is made in this country—and counting the duty upon coal and other articles used in the manufacture, but which do not appear in the composition of the article itself—take all these duties and you cannot make up a total of more than about \$6.

Now, when I made the statement the hon. gentleman shook his head and challenged it.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, when you said $4 or $5.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. the Controller of Customs is in the habit of getting up and challenging the statements of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and it takes considerable trouble to keep him in line. He is in the habit of doing this thing, and I have had to correct him several times. It is to be hoped that he will not repeat that any more in this House. He shook his head when I said it was $4.50, and he shook his head when I said it was $5, and he shook his head again when I quoted his own figures and said it could not be more than $6. It is to be hoped that in future the hon. the Controller will have some respect for the position he occupies, and not risk his reputation by making statements he cannot verify.

Mr. WALLACE. I am afraid I will have to shake my head when the hon. gentleman gets off the track. The very extract which he has read shows that he was wrong. When he quoted me as saying $4 I think I had the right to shake my head, and in that mild way to set him right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) must not be too severe on the Controller of Customs, because unless the accounts that reach us are very far astray, even the Minister of Justice has some trouble in keeping the Controller of Customs in line.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Oh, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even to the extent of revising his addresses on some occasions.

Mr. TAYLOR. The articles now under consideration, as well as the items preceding it, if I understand the Wilson Bill, are placed on the free list. But at the end of the Wilson Bill there is a clause which, in my opinion, will bar any implement named in their Bill out of their country, because it provides that if the United States manufacturer has his implement registered or has a trade mark, no implement made in a foreign country can be imported. Therefore the fact that they are putting the agricultural implements they have named in the Bill on the free list, does not affect the manufacturers of that class of implements in the United States, because every one of them is protected by a trade mark. I think that the Government should consider that question and put a clause in the Canadian tariff Bill before it is through, similar to the clause in the Wilson Bill, to the effect that where a Canadian manufacturer has a trade mark or an article patented, the tariff will apply to similar articles coming in from a foreign country. My own opinion is that we should put our agricultural implements on the free list, provided we have free sale in the United States, but if not, that our tariff should remain as it is. I think it would be well that our Government should consider that clause in the Wilson Bill, because although nominally they put implements on the free list, yet I believe that under that proviso there is not an implement manufacturer in Canada who can sell in the United States, owing to the fact that they have their trade marks registered, so that it will exclude our goods. In reference to the statement made by my hon. friend from South Oxford: that the manufacturers are not as prosperous now as they were some years ago, I can tell him that there is good reason for that. Some years ago I was agent for the Massey Manufacturing Company, when they were located at Bowmanville (just before they removed to Toronto), and I used to sell a binder to the farmers for $275, that bore no comparison in value or in style or in finish, or that would give as good satisfaction as the binder a farmer can now buy for $100. The farmer is getting an implement for $200 to-day superior to what he paid $275 for at that time. I suppose the manufacturer may be worse off to-day, because he does not make the profit at the end of the year that he did then.

Mr. McMULLEN. The farmers were getting $1.25 a bushel for their wheat then, and they are getting 65 cents now.

Mr. COCHRANE. A bushel of wheat has greater purchasing value now that it was then.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the fact at all events, with regard to the implements, and the wheat has nothing to do with it.

Item concurred in.

366. All sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard in colour, and all refined sugars and molasses, n. o. p., of whatever kind, grades or standards, $\frac{1}{16}$ c. per pound.

Mr. CHARLTON. The protection afforded to Canadian refiners by this section is almost exactly five times as great as the United States Congress has seen fit to give the sugar refiners in the United States. Their duty on sugar is 40 per cent and an additional one-eighth cent per pound on refined sugar. This duty is sixty-four-one hundredths cent per pound. I protest, now, as before, against this duty, on behalf of the consumers as being larger than necessary for the refiners and simply arranged to enable the refiners to put in their pockets very large sums besides the necessary protection required to control the market. I think if this was thirty-one hundredths of a cent instead of sixty-four one hundredths it would give ample protection.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will find that the American refiners gets more than one-eighths of a cent. The sugar tariff of the United States is the most complex one I have ever seen. I have gone through the discussion in Congress and even there they cannot make out what it amounts to.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is very plain that the duty given to the American refiner is one-eighth cent per pound.

Item concurred in.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READINGS.

Mr. CHARLTON.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

421. Two ply and three ply ingrained carpet of which the warp is composed wholly of cotton or other material and wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca goat or other like animal, 3 cents per square yard and 25 cents ad valorem.

Mr. CHARLTON. What will be the extreme rate of duty on the lower grades reduced to ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. On a 50 cent carpet the duty will be about 30 per cent. Below 50, it will be a little more, and above 50, it will be less.

Mr. CHARLTON. This whole system of combining specific and ad valorem duties is a vicious one resorted to in order to conceal the amount taken from the tax-payer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we knew all that before the hon. gentleman told us. The question was what was the value of the lowest grade which was affected by this particular item. I am inclined to think, though it is certainly very inferior carpet, that some grades of these carpets can be obtained at from 20 to 25 cents per yard.

Mr. WALLACE. Not so low as that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Wholesale?

Mr. WALLACE. The American carpet manufacturer's price in the United States is not as low as that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the lowest?

Mr. FOSTER. Thirty cents is about the lowest. The duty on that class would be 35 per cent.

Item concurred in.

434. Anti-septic surgical dressing, such as absorbent cotton, cotton-wool, lint, lambs' wool, tow, jute, gauzes and oakum prepared for use as surgical dressings, plain or medicated, twenty per cent ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask, as a matter of curiosity, do you put this duty on for revenue purposes or for the protection of home manufactures?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, for revenue purposes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What revenue do we get out of this importation?

Mr. FOSTER. That we could not tell, because these articles run into the unenumerated list.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose it is no use to remark that these are very barbarous taxes.

Item concurred in.

453. Salmon and all other fish prepared or preserved, including oysters, not specially enumerated or provided for in this Act, twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do these several items, particularly as regards oysters, compare with the propositions in the United States tariff?

Mr. FOSTER. Anchovies and sardines are arranged in boxes, varying in size, and they have various duties, being, however, higher than ours. Pickled fish, in barrels and half-barrels, is placed at $\frac{1}{2}$ cent per pound; fish, dried and smoked, $\frac{3}{4}$ cent per pound; herrings, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a cent per pound. Taking them all round, their duties are a little higher than ours.

Item concurred in.

473. Travellers' baggage, free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the Controller of Customs to the fact that a good deal of annoyance has been caused to people coming to Canada by the very stringent construction that has been placed by some of the Customs officers on this matter of travellers' baggage. For instance, a case was brought to my notice a little while ago in which the department refused to a traveller who had introduced a violincello into the country, and were about to take possession of it for a few weeks. Whether they dreaded the effect of the performance on the nerves of the citizens or not, I do not know; but it did appear to me that it was stretching the regulations of the Customs rather severely to forbid a man who was passing through the country to have an article of this kind in his baggage. The case occurred in Hamilton. I believe quite a considerable duty was attempted to be exacted or demanded from the party for being in possession of an instrument of music.

Mr. WALLACE. Our regulations are most liberal for travellers, and we have made arrangements with the railway companies that are very satisfactory, and cause very little friction. In the case the hon. gentleman alludes to, I believe the article was permitted to go free of duty, although the Collector retained it for reasons that appeared sufficient to him.

Mr. CHARLTON. In justice to the hon. gentleman, I must say that, as I cross the line very frequently, and see something of the manners of our officers and of the American officers, I find our own officers, in courtesy, compare very favourably with those of the American side. I hope the hon. gentleman will take pains to see that that good reputation which they bear will be maintained.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not quite certain whether sometimes the officers of the customs-house are not a little more polite to members of Parliament than they are to other individuals.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have noticed their courteous treatment to other people, too.

Item concurred in.

481. Admiralty Charts, free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there are other charts used by seamen, which I presume do not come under the head of admiralty charts. For instance, a chart showing the direction of the prevailing wind. I would suggest that those should also be free of duty.

Mr. FOSTER. I think they all come in free under this head.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you quite sure, because my hon. friend (Mr. Langelier), who also comes from a shipping port, thinks they are not.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite certain about it.

Item concurred in.

570. Fire brick, not to include stove linings for manufacturing purpose, free.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand from the Controller that these fire bricks, not imported for manufacturing purposes, are dutiable at 20 per cent, but I do not find that specifically mentioned. Does it appear anywhere in the tariff?

Mr. WALLACE. These articles would come in either in the unenumerated class or as "other brick," both of which classes are dutiable at 20 per cent. So whichever ruling is given, these goods come in at 20 per cent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose that the Controller stating that will be the warrant for the different officers to admit these goods at that rate?

Mr. WALLACE. If it is necessary we will send instructions to the officers to that effect.

Item concurred in.

604. Iron, steel or brass manufactures, which at the time of their importation are of a class or kind not manufactured in Canada, when imported for use in the construction or equipment of ships or vessels, free.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would ask if the Minister has considered the application to make rolled iron or steel angles free for the use of windmill manufactures.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see how it can be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would like the Minister to give us some little satisfaction. If they are to be manufactured in Canada, the object of the Minister, I presume, is to encourage the industry here.

Mr. WALLACE. They get a very large protection.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Minister was correct in that statement, I might agree with him. When I point out to him that the duty on the raw material, on the steel angles and strips that they have to buy, is higher than the protection given on the manufactured articles, I do not see how he can say that.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a small proportion of the value of the completed article.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Minister must be mistaken; I know as a fact, that he is. When the object is to encourage manufactures in this country, I think it is quite natural to give some consideration to a trade of this character. It is increasing, and should have some consideration. They are anxious to compete with the American manufacturers, and those of other countries; I understand that they are doing that now, to some extent, and are anxious to extend their operations, especially in South America. I do not see why the hon. Minister does not grant their request. There is no great amount of revenue affected by it.

Mr. WALLACE. On all those articles you speak of, when imported, they would get a refund of 90 per cent of the duty, if the completed articles are exported to other countries.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is some satisfaction, but I see by the correspondence that it is not all they want. It would be some satisfaction to them to have a rebate of 90 per cent on the exported article.

Mr. WALLACE. If they are not made in this country, they would be entitled, on making application, to a refund of 90 per cent of the duty that has been paid.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My statement is based not only on information furnished by the hon. gentleman himself, but from personal inquiry of the manager of the manufactory in Nova Scotia, the only one in the country that produces that kind of material, only they do not make it of that particular size, and the manager told me they did not expect to for some time to come.

Mr. FOSTER. They would get a rebate then, certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, that is some satisfaction. However, I wished to know what the decision was.

Item concurred in.

689. Steel rails, weighing not less than forty-five pounds per lineal yard, for use in railway tracks, but this item shall not extend to rails for use in the tracks of railways used or intended for private purposes only, nor shall it extend to rails which are not used or intended to be used in connection with the business of common carrying of either goods or passengers, nor shall this item extend to rails for use in the tracks of street railways or tramways.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I would like to ask the Minister of Finance or the Controller of Customs, when we may expect a decision in regard to rails used on street railways. The question is now before the court, and if the decision of the court should be that these rails are rails for railroads, then will there be any alteration in the present regulation? I might say that I was interviewed yesterday by representatives of the Scarborough Street Railway Company—they claim to be a railroad company—and they are desirous of having returned to them the duty they paid on rails. If the decision should be that street railroads come under the definition of railroads, would this clause have to be altered?

Mr. WALLACE. This clause is altered. It is not the same as before.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). You do not allow rails for street railways to be free?

Mr. WALLACE. No.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). If the courts should decide that they should be free, what will the result be?

Mr. WALLACE. They might probably be included in this.

Item concurred in.

700. Tea and green coffee imported direct from the country of growth and production.

This item shall include tea and coffee purchased in bond in any country where tea and coffee are subject to customs duty, provided there be satisfactory proof that the tea or coffee so purchased in bond is such as might be entered for home consumption in the country where the same is purchased.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before this paragraph is passed, I should like to call the attention of the Minister to the discussion which took place on this item before, when he said that he thought that it would be necessary for tea and coffee imported from the country in which it was grown to come on a through bill of lading. I then pointed out to him the difficulties with regard to that. I do not see any difficulty myself in carrying out the spirit of the resolution without having a through bill of lading. I pointed out at the time, that a merchant in Canada might buy tea or coffee in the country of growth, but he might be unable to have it sent to Montreal or Toronto or to any Canadian port on a through bill of lading. I suppose that the department will arrange that, where it is satisfactorily shown that the importation was direct from the country of growth.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the principle that would rule.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. Minister will see that this is very important. In many cases the shipments are sent on what are called tramp vessels, and they have no arrangements to give a through bill of lading and would not do so, although it might be a direct importation. I can see that it would be quite easy that regulations could be made so that the importers in Canada would not suffer while the spirit of this resolution might still be carried out. Has the Controller of Customs considered this matter?

Mr. WALLACE. We intend to make regulations that will cover these points. I think we can provide for a case like that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt it can be done.

Item: concurred in.

716. Wire of iron or steel, No. 13 and 14 gauge, flattened and corrugated, used in connection with the machine known as the wire grip machine for the manufacture of boots, shoes and leather belting, when imported by manufacturers of such articles, to be used for these purposes only in their own factories, free.

Mr. LANGELEIER. I would call the attention of the hon. Finance Minister to a telegram which I received some time ago from a large manufacturer of boots and shoes, suggesting that this item should be amended by adding after the words, "wire grip machine," the words, "the Champion machine." It appears that the grip machine mentioned here, and also I suppose in the other tariff, is scarcely any more in use, having been almost wholly replaced in large factories which have the latest machinery, by what is called the Champion machine; so that the exemption of duty under this item would be of no use unless it applied to wire used in the Champion machine. That machine uses the same wire that is mentioned here, and it is quite possible that if the matter were brought to the notice of the Controller of Customs, there would be no trouble in getting wire for that machine admitted free; but in many places the collectors of customs might apply the law strictly and refuse to grant the exemption of duty.

Mr. FOSTER. That was already discussed here, and I made a note of it.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the words "chloride and sulphate of" be struck out and the word "salts" inserted instead thereof.

Item, as amended, concurred in.

Eggs, 5 cents per dozen; to be free when so long as eggs exported from Canada are allowed free entry into the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to add to that, to carry out the suggestion which was made this afternoon, and which seems to be of some importance:

Provided that if the United States imposed a less duty than 5 cents per dozen, an equivalent duty thereto shall be collected on eggs imported into Canada.

Item, as amended, concurred in.

Resolutions read the second time, amended, and concurred in, as follows:—

Resolution 1. Paragraph 1 to 13 inclusive, being read the second time, were severally agreed to. Paragraph 14 being read the second time; the consideration thereof was postponed.

Resolutions 2 and 3 being read the second time, were agreed to.

SCHEDULE "A."

Paragraphs 1 to 12 inclusive, being read the second time, were severally agreed to.

Paragraph 13 being read the second time, was amended by striking out the word "net" and adding after the word "pound" the words "the outward ball or covering to be free of duty," and agreed to as amended.

Paragraphs 14 to 45 inclusive, being read the second time, were severally agreed to.

Paragraph 46 being read the second time, was amended by inserting "thirty per cent" instead of "fifteen cents per bushel", and agreed to as amended.

Paragraphs 47 to 129 inclusive, being read the second time, were severally agreed to.

Paragraph 130 being read the second time, was amended by adding after "Pharmacopœia" the words "and the French Codex," and agreed to as amended.

Paragraph 740 being read the second time, was amended by striking out "chloride and sulphate of" and inserting "salts of,"

Paragraphs 741 to 766 inclusive, being read the second time, were severally agreed to.

SCHEDULE "C."

Paragraphs 767 to 771 inclusive, being read the second time, were severally agreed to.

Resolution 4 being read the second time :

Paragraph 1 was agreed to.

Paragraph 2 was amended by striking out "eight" and inserting "six" and agreed to as amended.

The postponed paragraphs were then considered as follows :

Paragraph 14 of Resolution 1 was amended by inserting after the word "sale" in the nineteenth line "and which are not the usual and ordinary outside packages in which such goods as they contain are packed for exportation," and agreed to as amended.

Paragraph 220 was amended by striking out the words "not thinner" and inserting instead the word "thicker" and striking out the word "sixteen" and inserting "seventeen" and agreed to as amended.

Paragraph 222 was amended by inserting after "sheets" the words "iron or steel" and after "strips" strike out "or" and insert "n.e.s., and," and agreed to as amended.

Resolutions adopted in Committee on Ways and Means, 1st June, were reported, and read the first time, as follows:—

1. Resolved, That the following proviso be added to the 3rd Resolution of the duties of Customs, as agreed to in Committee of Ways and Means on Tuesday, the 29th ultimo:—

Provided, That the case of goods which are imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption, and on which duty is paid, on or after the said 27th day of March, in accordance with the rate of duty set forth as payable on date of entry on such goods in Schedule A to these Resolutions, or in any subsequent resolution, the duty so paid shall not be affected, nor shall the person paying it be entitled to any further refund or be liable to any further payment of duty, by reason of such rate of duty being altered during the present Session by any resolution subsequent to that in accordance with which such duty is paid.

2. Resolved, That the following items be added to Schedule A of the duties of Customs, as agreed to in Committee of Ways and Means on Tuesday, the 29th ultimo:—

1. Builders' hardware, cabinet-makers', undertakers', upholsterers', harness-makers' and saddlers' hardware, including curry combs and curry cards, carriage hardware, locks, butts and hinges, n.e.s., saws of all kinds, and table cutlery, not elsewhere specified, thirty-two and a half per cent ad valorem.
2. Coal, bituminous, sixty cents per ton of 2,000 pounds.
3. Coal dust, n.e.s., twenty per cent ad valorem.
4. Eggs, five cents per dozen; to be free when and so long as eggs exported from Canada are allowed free entry into the United States.
5. Galvanized iron wire, numbers six, nine, twelve and fourteen gauge, when imported by makers of wire fencing, for use in their factories only, twenty per cent ad valorem.
6. Iron or steel hoops, bands and strips, eight inches and less in width, number eighteen gauge and thicker, ten dollars per ton.
7. Rice when imported by makers of rice starch for use in their factories, three-fourths of one cent per pound.

Resolution 1 being read the second time was agreed to.

Resolution 2 being read the second time:

Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, were severally agreed to.

Paragraph 4 was amended by adding the following proviso at the end thereof: "Provided that if the United States impose a less duty than five cents per dozen, an equivalent duty thereto shall be collected on eggs imported into Canada," and agreed to as amended.

Paragraphs 5 and 6 were agreed to.

Paragraph 7 was amended by inserting after "factories" the words "making starch," and agreed to as amended.

CUSTOMS ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER introduced Bill (No. 135) to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting duties of Customs and Excise.

Bill read the first time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 11th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 136) for the relief of Orlando George Richmond Johnson.—(Mr. Metcalfe.)

WORKMEN ON CANALS.

Mr. BERGIN moved for leave to introduce a Bill to further amend the Act respecting the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid this motion is contrary to the rules of Parliament, unless there is some very good reason for it.

Mr. BERGIN. It is near the close of the session, and the Bill is for the relief of lockmasters and other labourers employed on the canals. During last year some of these men were obliged to work from 18 hours to 20 hours to the very serious injury of their health, and some of them have been absolutely crippled and ruined for life. That kind of work is beyond what a man is capable of doing in the hot weather.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the Bill?

Mr. BERGIN. When there is very great pressure upon the labourers on the canal, this Bill is to enable the Government by Order in Council to regulate the hours, so that during this part of the season they shall not work more than 12 hours a day.

Mr. SPEAKER. In my opinion, this Bill cannot be introduced now. Rule 31 says:

Two days' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a Bill, resolution or address for the appointment of a committee, etc.

Unless this rule is rescinded in regard to this particular Bill, it cannot be introduced.

Mr. BERGIN. I suppose you will consent to allow this to be taken as notice, and I can introduce the Bill the day after to-morrow.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 137) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.

Mr. LAURIER. What is this Bill ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This Bill introduces nothing novel, but it has been found in going over several Acts that the law is perhaps defective under which some of the present dues are collected. The dues have been always collected, but in the event of the law not being found to go so far as the present practice goes in levying these dues for the inspection of the boilers and machinery of steamers, it has been deemed advisable to introduce a Bill and to move notice of the resolution as if it were a new tax. It is not a new tax, and it is not one that has been objected to by the steamship owners.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FRANCHISE AMENDMENT ACT.

Mr. LAURIER. Before we pass to the Orders of the Day, I would ask the right hon. the Premier to give us some indication as to the probability of when he will introduce the Bill with regard to the franchise.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I hope to have it ready to introduce it on Thursday.

IMPORTATION OF TEA.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, or the Controller of Customs, whether instructions have been forwarded to the different collectors of customs throughout the Dominion, advising them of the passage of the tariff resolution permitting tea imported direct from London to be admitted free? In Charlottetown a large quantity, I am informed, is there awaiting entry and cannot be obtained by the merchants without paying 10 per cent duty, and the collector of customs informs them that he has received no instructions from the department in reference to that point. It is causing a good deal of inconvenience, and the newspapers are commenting on it. I would like to ask if instructions have been sent, or if not, that they will be immediately wired?

Mr. FOSTER. I think they have been sent, but I will send over to the department and inquire.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is stated that on Friday evening last they had not been received.

REPORT.

Report of Unclaimed Balances in Chartered Banks for five years and upwards prior to 31st December, 1893.—(Mr. Foster.)

Mr. BERGIN.

MR. TURCOTTE, M.P.

On the Order,

J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, the witnesses named in the report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted to this House on the 7th day of June, instant, to attend at the Bar of this House, at the hour of 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Sarjeant-at-Arms: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to state that the witnesses named, J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, are not in attendance at the Bar.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that in obedience to the Order of the House of Thursday last, the 7th instant, the Clerk forwarded a telegram to J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, informing them of the Order of the House requiring them to attend at the Bar of the House on Monday, the 11th instant, at three o'clock p.m., and that the telegraph company had duly informed him of the personal delivery of the messages to the parties in question. The Clerk also forwarded copies in duplicate to the sheriff of the city of Quebec for service on J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, and this morning received from that officer certified copies of the service of the order having been duly made.

Mr. LAURIER. Does the right hon. gentleman propose to take any steps upon this?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will, if the gentleman who has been moving in the matter so far is not prepared to do so, which I presumed he would be ready to do. I do not see him in his place.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) is not in his seat to-day.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved :

That the witnesses in question, not having attended at the Bar of the House, in accordance with the Order of the House of the 7th day of June instant, Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant for their arrest in order that they may be brought to the Bar of the House at the earliest possible moment.

Motion agreed to.

MANITOBA AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 108) respecting the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Taylor.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MARTIN. I presume that this Bill has not been amended with regard to the point I took on its second reading. I do not object at all to the extension of time for the completion of the railway. It is not reasonable to expect, in the present depression, that the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company should be bound to complete their work within the time they are now bound. What I do object to is this, that the Bill gives them an absolute extension for the long period of ten years. What I would suggest as being reasonable under the circumstances is to give them in the meantime the extension, providing that they need not build the twenty miles each year if the Governor in Council see fit during any year to let them off. But it would appear to me that there is no real necessity for practically providing that the railway is not to be completed for the long period of ten years, and I cannot see myself what advantage it is to the company that they should have so long a period. As long as their franchises are not to be forfeited in case they do not build the twenty miles this year, for instance, or the next year, it seems to me that is all they can possibly need. It looks rather like an intimation to the settlers along the line of railway that the land grant which has been appropriated for building the line from the end of the present railway to Prince Albert is to be tied up for the period of ten years, and that no other company is to have an opportunity of building on the strength of that land grant, if this company sees fit not to go on. I would suggest that that portion of the Bill be left out, and the company be simply dealt with leniently for the time being. For instance, supposing, as we all hope, that times get better shortly, and that there is a very strong necessity that the railway should be completed within two years or three years to Prince Albert; this company will be in a position to set the country and Parliament at defiance in the matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman will see that there is an obligation imposed on the company by the Bill to build twenty miles a year.

Mr. MARTIN. They can be excused from that by the Governor in Council.

Mr. BOYD. I wish to move the following amendment:—

That the rents and revenues of the company, present or future, or both, shall be subject in the first instance to the payment of the working of the company's railway and branches.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That amendment cannot be moved without notice being given.

Mr. BOYD. I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. TISDALE. We have taken a good deal of trouble with this Bill, and that company is one of the few companies in the North-west, which has invested a large amount of money in the country. It is well operated, economically administered, and is now in the hands of the court, and a receiver appointed for the purpose of operating the road and distributing anything that is left among the bondholders. The object of extending the time in this manner was not to prevent the building of the road, but to expedite it. Surely it is much better to give the company a chance to operate the road than to run the risk of destroying the enterprise altogether. That is what influenced the committee in passing this clause. It is in the interest of the country that the time should be extended, because if that company, which has sunk a very large amount of money and is now getting no return beyond the operating expenses—and it is almost a question whether those are earned—cannot go on and build twenty miles a year, it is not likely any other company will do so. I think the hon. member should have brought up his resolution in the committee and had it discussed there, when we would have been able, possibly, to satisfy both parties. I am quite sure that neither hon. gentlemen has the desire to imperil the construction of the road, but I put it as a business proposition—I know little of the road except in a general way—whether any other company is likely to be formed when the present company have put several million dollars in the work. When the road got in trouble, and a railway expert from Ontario was sent up, Mr. Wragge of the Grand Trunk Railway, who made a long report to the bondholders as to the best scheme of reorganizing the road, it was actually closed down, and had ceased operations.

Mr. MARTIN. No.

Mr. TISDALE. The newspapers said so, and at all events it was in great danger of being shut up. The bondholders then met. The contention arose as to whether they should be allowed to operate the road or a receiver appointed. A receiver was appointed by the court, so as to make sure of the operation of the road. If the law in the Territories is not different, and I am not aware how it can be, from the general law of the Dominion, what the hon. gentleman emphasizes as a first charge, the operating expenses, must be the first charge, and his amendment might interfere with what the courts have ordered. We do not want to interfere with the local rights of the parties as administered by the receiver. I am speaking on general principles that should govern legislation in these matters. If the amendment is pressed, the Bill ought to be sent back to the committee, and some cause shown there for it. The directors of the company have gone away: none of these objections were raised while they were here, and I know nothing of the reasons that influenced my hon. friend in moving this amendment.

Mr. BOYD. I may say that the road is in difficulty, and it is merely to protect the employees. If the statutes cover it, so far as its general notice is concerned, the only doubt will be about the branches, and I want to make sure of that. I will let the matter pass, and bring it up on the third reading.

Mr. MARTIN. I have not heard any explanation from the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) as to the reason the ten year proviso is in. I have no objection to giving this railway company extension of time. I am in great sympathy with it. I think it is a very deserving corporation, which has fought a hard fight against great difficulties, and done very well indeed. The road is run very satisfactorily. But what I object to is this: that unnecessarily for their purposes, there is a proviso that the road need not be completed to Prince Albert for ten years. The hon. gentleman is perhaps mistaken as to the likelihood of another company building this line. There is a company called the Great North-west Central, of which this Parliament has heard a great deal, which has fifty miles built from Brandon running in the same general direction as this company, and there has always been more or less contention between these two companies as to the territory west of Manitoba. If times should improve, and there should be an intention to complete this railway, I do not see any reason, from a public standpoint, why the Manitoba and North-western Railway should be able to say to the Great North-west Central: we propose to hold this land grant in this territory through which your line must go, for ten years, without building the road. I have not heard anything in what the hon. gentleman said to warrant our putting in that extension of ten years. If it were left to the Governor General in Council to compel them to build the twenty miles per year or let them off building that number of miles in any particular year or years, then they are protected, and the Dominion, on behalf of the settlers, have the right to give that territory to another company, if at any time they may think the Manitoba and North-western Company is not prosecuting the work as it should. Why should we give away our control, and what advantage is it to the company? All the company care for is to hold its franchise in the meantime, and not lose it through being unable to build the twenty miles. It is all very well to say we will release you from that condition for this particular year, and perhaps next year or the following year; but why should we give up our control for ten years? Why say that for ten years to come no railway shall have a land grant necessary to complete a line between Yorkton and Prince Albert? The Great North-west Central Company's charter runs right up through the country, and is intended to go to the same point. It is not likely, within comparatively a short period of the future, that two railways will be built from the province of Manitoba to the Prince Albert district. Only one will be built—either the

Mr. Boyd.

Manitoba and North-western or the Great North-west Central. But no argument has been offered here, and I have heard no argument suggested anywhere, why this Parliament should give up its control for the long period of ten years and practically give the Manitoba and North-western Railway a monopoly for that term, enabling it to exclude any other company that may wish to build the line. The Governor in Council can compel them to build twenty miles a year. The distance from Yorkton to Prince Albert is two hundred miles, so this would give the company ten years to complete the road, even if the whole number of miles which they may be compelled to build may be exacted. What I ask is that the question be left in such a position that if times be better and there are other people ready to build in that country, we may have the power to compel the company to build the road, or, if they refuse to do that, to have Parliament left in such a position that we may take away the land grant so that it may be given to another company that shows itself willing and able to build the line.

Mr. TISDALE. As I understood the matter in committee, there was a good reason for the course proposed in the Bill, which, perhaps, the hon. gentleman did not catch. It is to enable the company to finance for the balance of the road, for they are financing largely in the old country and they wanted all these powers so as to insure confidence on the part of the capitalists who are asked to put money in it. If the promoters can see their way to building a hundred miles in one year, they may do it, if the prospects of traffic are such as to warrant them in going on, and yet they want to be assured that their scheme would not be interfered with if they build to a less extent. I am sure the hon. gentleman knows as well as any person how hard it is to get capital to go into railways in a new country like that. I have watched the progress of this road, and I have always felt sympathy with it. They have already built and now have in operation a portion of the road—

Mr. MARTIN. Two hundred and forty miles.

Mr. TISDALE. I believe they have done all that was in their power and that they have secured a large investment in the road, and I believe that the Bill on the lines here proposed will secure the construction of the road quicker than any other possible scheme. The remarks of the hon. gentleman show that, if this is such a desirable country to go into, another company has a charter to go in and take possession. So, if it is such a desirable country for early construction, nothing need stand in the way of railway development. If the company building want to get the land grant away from this concern, they can only do it by showing cause why they should get it and asking for it. The hon. gentleman must not forget that this matter is under the control of Parliament in any case, except for one year. If the Government do not properly enforce this clause, it is within the power of Parliament next session, or at any subsequent session to take it out of the hands of the Government, which, no doubt, will be done, if good reason is shown for it. The great advantage I see in this proposal is that it will enable the company to solve the financial problem, so that those who are asked to take hold of the scheme or to put more money in it to take care of what they have already invested may feel sure that they cannot be obliged to go on building at a faster rate than reasonable. The fact that the company has struggled so long as it has done so much is creditable to it. If there is reasonable prospects of a return, their own desire to make the most possible out of their road, is a guarantee that they will take advantage of their opportunities. So, while construction may not go on so rapidly as some may desire, still they will build as rapidly as development is necessary. I can see no danger whatever, and that was the view of the majority of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN. All that the Government can compel them to build is twenty miles per year, and at this rate, it will take ten years to build the road to Prince Albert.

Mr. TISDALE. But twenty miles a year is a good deal of road to build in an undeveloped district. The fact that the company went so far as they did shows their good faith, and the fact that they got into trouble is an indication of the difficulties that are in their way, so I think that, under the circumstances, the House ought to grant them this opportunity of showing whether they can accomplish the building of the road in this way.

Mr. DALY. There does not seem to be anything new about the provisions contained in this Bill. The Manitoba and North-western Railway Company's Act, chapter 52, 56 Vic., subsection 3 of section 9, declares :

The company shall construct and complete to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, not less than twenty miles of railway on or before the 31st of December in each calendar year after the year eighteen hundred and ninety-three, otherwise their powers under this section shall cease as regards so much of the said lines of railway as is not completed by the said date in each calendar year.

I think the mileage completed is about two hundred and fifty miles in round numbers, and about two hundred miles more is necessary to complete the road. Even in accordance with the terms of the Act of last session, this would take ten years. As to the land grant, it does not follow in any way that the grant shall continue to this line of railway if they fail to carry out the requirements of the Act. The land grant may lapse at any moment—the Governor in Council keep that in their own hand entirely.

Mr. McCARTHY. What are the terms of the land grant, may I ask? That appears to me to be a matter of importance. It does not follow that because the charter is extended, the land grant is to be given if the road is built in accordance with the terms of the charter.

Mr. DALY. I cannot state from memory exactly the terms of the land grant. But it is the usual grant of 6,400 acres per mile for the mileage built, and it is provided that the railway shall be completed within a certain number of years.

Mr. MARTIN. The land grant is located, as I understand it.

Mr. DALY. It is simply scheduled; that is all. That does not mean that they have earned it or that they can get it, or that it is put beyond the control of the Governor in Council or may not be disposed of at any time.

Mr. MARTIN. The objection that I have is to the difference between this Act and the Act of last session. I do not object to the clause in the Bill of last session. I do not want to force them to build with unreasonable rapidity. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) says that the object of this Bill is to enable the company to finance the road, but that if it is found to be unsatisfactory we can change it. I do not see how they can do that. If we make a proposition here that they are to have ten years to build the line and capitalists take hold of it and there is a reorganization of the company on the basis of the legislative concession we are making, we could not take that away from them. It becomes practically a parliamentary contract just as incapable of being changed, once it is concluded, as the contract between this Parliament and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. So, we must remember that if we pass that clause this session and it is acted upon, we have no more control over it. I doubt if there is a suggestion of any further building. I may say, as a matter of fact, there is a conflict between the bondholders on one side and the shareholders and judgment creditors on the other. There have been propositions and schemes for reorganization, but there is no definite scheme, and I fancy it would not be possible for them to show to this House that there is really anything definite for which this concession is a necessity. Therefore, it seems to me that this is practically giving away our powers and rights in the matter and entirely neglecting and forgetting the necessities of the settlers that are already there. It is a mistake to suppose that this is an unsettled territory. The district between Yorkton and Prince Albert is to a certain extent settled. It is true, they have another outlet by the Regina and Long Lake Railway, but the distance between Yorkton and Prince Albert—a large portion of it—while not settled thickly, has a considerable settlement; and I know it will be one of the most disappointing things if this House can possibly say to those settlers, many of whom have been there for eight and ten years, that an Act of Parliament has been passed providing that the Manitoba and North-western Railway need not build their line to Prince Albert for ten years to come, and that in the meantime practically this would become the only road going into that territory. It seems to me, therefore, very important indeed in the interests of the country up there that that ten-year proviso should be eliminated. I have heard nothing whatever to show that it is necessary in the interests of the company that that ten-year proviso should be changed.

Mr. DALY. If the hon. gentleman will read subsection 3 he will see that it will be 1903 under the provision made last session.

Mr. MARTIN. I know that.

Mr. DALY. This only fixes ten years from now.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the provision?

Mr. DALY. That the company shall construct and complete to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, not less than twenty miles of railway a year, from the 21st day of December each calendar year after the year 1893.

Mr. MULOCK. You have repealed that.

Mr. DALY. We have repealed that, and asked that the rest of this section shall be ten years from the passing of this Act.

Mr. MULOCK. Under the proposed Bill the Governor in Council can prescribe not more than twenty miles. It might be twenty feet. "Not exceeding twenty miles a year"; it is entirely repealing that clause. Now, Mr. Chairman, just read that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is just as the hon. gentleman has said, namely:

The work on the extensions authorized by this section shall be completed within ten years from the passing of this Act, and the company shall complete during the year 1896, and also during each calendar year thereafter, such a portion of its railway not exceeding twenty miles as is from time to time prescribed by the Governor in Council, otherwise the company's powers under this section shall cease as regards so much of the said extensions as then remains uncompleted.

Mr. MULOCK. So it practically repeals the clause in the Act read by the Minister of the Interior which required the company imperatively to build at least twenty miles a year. Under the amendment proposed the company is not bound to build any more than the Government requires. The Government is not pledged to require, and they cannot require any more than twenty miles to be built. I think it is a very vicious system indeed that the Governor in Council shall have power to legislate with regard to these Acts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me the difficulty is this: We have a road running from Regina to Prince Albert. It is constructed and in operation. Then you have a projected railway between this road and the one that is in operation, and you have 240 odd miles of a road, 440 odd extending from the Portage to the Prince Albert settlement. Thus you have three important railways of considerable length all terminating in a very small town when they are completed to that point. I apprehend that the difficulty with any company that requires money to carry on this railway company is the crossing that is prevented, a condition of things that must exist when roads are completed, if that completion takes place at an early period. You have 240 miles of completed railway, and in the case of this road running up to Yorkton there is a very considerable extent of territory, of no great distance from a railway, that is still unoccupied. As my hon. friend from Winnipeg says, there is a large extent of territory that will require a large population to give anything like a paying traffic to the three roads that are projected to the same terminal point. It does seem to me that you might embarrass seriously any railway by a proviso that it shall compulsorily undertake to construct a certain number of miles of road each year, and the propriety of that construction may depend entirely upon the progress of the settlement. Yet while you would not want to tie the hands of Parliament, as my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) points out, and put it out of the House to press for the construction of the railway to its objective point with the progress of settlement, and render such a work necessary to any considerable number of people, it does seem to me that the clause as it now stands in the Bill before the House would have the effect of putting the control for a period of ten years beyond this House, and I do not think that would be a desirable thing to do. At the same time we have got to keep in view the fact that we have already given three charters to three railway companies to proceed to the same point. If they were completed I dare say this road, being the most direct and the shortest route eastward, would be the road that would suffer least by the completion, but I fancy that it would not be in the public interest to compel these parties to construct the road at any particular time to Prince Albert regardless of the progress of the settlement of that section of the country.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is well we should understand that when Parliament grants an extension of time, it is certainly not within the power of Parliament to afterwards interfere. I was astonished to hear the hon.

member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), chairman of the Railway Committee, maintain that this question would still remain under the control of Parliament. If Parliament grants a charter to a railway company, and the time for building the road is afterwards extended, it is certainly not within its power to take away that charter or limit control or affect any of the rights or franchises so granted. I understand the necessity of this legislation is owing to the difficulties in which this company finds itself placed, and by the proposed amendment it is suggested that nothing should be done, either this year or next year. It would be much more satisfactory if we altered section 3 so as to state that it shall not be necessary to construct twenty miles this year or next year, but that in all other respects the obligation shall stand. Then we would have an opportunity by and by, if we found that settlement was not sufficient to warrant the construction of the road, to still further extend the time, and we would be keeping the control of the matter in our own hands. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill might well accept the amendment in that sense.

Mr. HAGGART. The object of the Bill is evidently two-fold. The company want to be relieved of building the section of twenty miles this year and next year; and at the same time, they bind themselves to complete the line within one year of the time originally specified.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that unless the Order in Council obliged them to build a certain distance of road, they need not do so?

Mr. HAGGART. The company will be obliged to build the whole length of road within the number of years specified.

Mr. McMULLEN. It must be remembered that the company is now in financial difficulties. If that is the condition of the company, it is wrong for us to extend the time, although this might have been done if the company were in good financial standing. I think, under the circumstances, the time allowed should be reduced to five years instead of ten years.

Mr. HAGGART. As the promoter of the Bill is absent, and as the suggestion of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) may be satisfactory, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Committee rose and reported progress.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 114) to incorporate The Colonial Mutual Life Association.—(Mr. McKay.)

EMPLOYMENT OF J. C. MOORE.

Mr. DEVLIN asked, Is J. C. Moore in the employ of the Government or of any department? If so, how long has he been employed? When was he first appointed, and in what department was he placed? What, if any, are the duties performed by J. C. Moore? What is the amount of salary paid to him, and how much, in all, has he drawn from the Government since the date of his first appointment?

Mr. DALY. Mr. J. C. Moore is not now in the employ of the Government, nor of any department. He was employed in the Department of the Interior from October 19th, 1893, to March 20th, 1894, as a clerk in the Patent Branch. He has received $77.50, being one month's pay from October 19th, 1893, to November 18th, 1893, inclusive, and he will receive $305, being his salary at the rate of $2.50 a day from November, 1893, to March 20th, 1894, inclusive, when the amount is voted by Parliament.

EMPLOYMENT OF F. D. BARWICK.

Mr. CASEY asked, Is Mr. F. D. Barwick now in the employ of the Government as post office inspector of Toronto district? If not, was he dismissed, and for what cause? Is he employed by the Government in any other capacity? Have his accounts been examined? If so, does the examination show that he is indebted to the Government? If so, to what amount? Does the Government hold any security for Mr. Barwick in the form of bonds, guarantee, or otherwise? If bonds, who are the bondsmen? If guarantee, what is the name of the company? If other security, of what nature? In either case, what is the amount of the security? Have any proceedings been taken to recover any sums Barwick may owe the Government? If so, what, and with what result?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. F. D. Barwick is not in the employ of the Government as post office inspector of the Toronto district. He was dismissed for general neglect of his duties, and for detention of certain sums of money which came into his possession in his official capacity. These sums have since been made good by him. He is not employed by the Government in any other capacity. His accounts have been examined. The examination does not show that he is indebted to the Government. The Government does not hold any security for Mr. Barwick. No proceedings have been taken to recover any sums due by Mr. Barwick to the Government, as no sums are due. The sums detained by him were not public revenue, and were made good on demand.

PAYMENTS TO THE HULL 'DESPATCH.'

Mr. DEVLIN asked, How much was paid by the Government to the 'Despatch' newspaper of Hull during the last year, as well as during the two preceding years? What was the work done by the 'Despatch'? To whom was the money paid?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The amount paid in 1892 appears at page A—xx of the Auditor General's Report, and the other payments are shown on page 53 (Roman numerals) of the Auditor General's Report, 1893.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the First Minister please answer the third question, to whom was the money paid?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will allow that part of the question to stand, as I did not observe it.

TERMINUS FOR THE FAST ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. GILLIES asked, In their negotiations with Mr. Huddart and others, touching any possible port in Canada to be selected as a terminus for the fast Atlantic service, were the Government influenced by the fact that a special committee of the House of Commons, in the session of 1874, appointed for the purpose of "inquiring into the best and most direct route for the conveyance of passengers and mails between the Dominion of Canada and Europe, and of finding on the shores of the Dominion a harbour accessible both in winter and summer to be the terminus of such shortest route," reported to the House of Commons that the harbour of Louisbourg, Cape Breton, was always accessible, commodious and safe, and nearer Europe by several hours than any other port in Canada?

Mr. FOSTER. The terminus for the fast Atlantic service has not yet been definitely chosen. The Government, however, were not forgetful of the fact that a special committee of the House of Commons in the session of 1874, appointed for the purpose of "inquiring into the best and most direct route for the conveyance of passengers and mails between the Dominion of Canada and Europe, and finding on the shores of the Dominion, a harbour accessible both in winter and summer to be the terminus of such shortest route," reported to the House of Commons that the harbour of Louisbourg, Cape Breton, was always accessible, commodious and safe, and nearer Europe by several hours than any other port in Canada.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You have not answered: Has it influenced you? You simply said you did not forget it. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) will press for that answer.

Mr. FOSTER. When we do not forget it, of course we are influenced by it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It does not follow at all.

MATANE LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. LANGELIER asked, To whom was the maintenance of the lighthouse at Matane.

Mr. DEVLIN.

in the province of Quebec, intrusted in 1879?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Octave Desjardins.

QUEBEC WEST ELECTION.

Mr. LANGELIER asked, Whether it is a fact that the Prime Minister or any one of his colleagues has stated that they would see that Quebec had a line of fast steamers if a friend of the Government were elected in Quebec West?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have not, nor have any of my colleagues stated that a line of fast steamers will be secured for Quebec if a friend of the Government were elected in Quebec West. We intend to do our best to secure a fast line with Quebec as the point of departure.

TIMBER ON POINT PELEE.

Mr. ALLAN asked, Has the Government sold or given leave to cut any timber on Point Pelee, Ont., during the last two years? If so, to whom? Was it sold for a lump sum or at a price per thousand B.M., or by the piece, or otherwise? What quantity was sold? Was the sale private or by public auction or by public tender?

Mr. DALY. To the first question the answer is, Yes. To the second question the answer is, Mr. Everett Wigle. To the third question, the answer is, For a lump sum of $400. To the fourth question, the answer is, All the cedars of the dimensions of 5 inches in diameter and upwards, growing outside the limit of the squatters' holdings. The sale was private.

EX-FISHERY OVERSEER FOR ESSEX DISTRICT.

Mr. ALLAN asked, Has the Government taken any steps against Willian Prosser, late overseer of fisheries, Essex district, for the recovery of moneys unduly collected by him and unaccounted for, as recommended in a report of a committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, April 9, 1892? If so, what were the steps, and how much, if any, has been recovered?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before answering the question, I would like to state that there was no Order in Council dated April 9th, 1893, but there was an Order in Council dated 9th April, 1892, passed, under which the services of Mr. Prosser were dispensed with. The Government took no action against ex-Fishery Overseer Prosser for the recovery of moneys; the fees for the licenses issued by Mr. Prosser having been reported as duly accounted for.

IRREGULARITIES AT CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

Mr. BRODEUR moved for :

Select committee of this House to inquire into the irregularities which occurred at the examinations for the Civil Service in November, 1893, and which are mentioned in the report of the examiners laid before this House, and into all the facts and circumstances which preceded, accompanied and followed the said irregularities : with power to the said committee to send for persons, papers and records, and to administer the oath to witnesses examined by them.

He said : I think, Mr. Speaker, that in moving such a resolution, it is my duty to give the reasons why I would ask the appointment of a select committee of this House for this purpose. I do not wish to find fault with the principle of holding examinations for entrance into the civil service. On the contrary, I am of the opinion that in the interest of the civil service and in order to promote its effectiveness and efficiency, that examinations should be held. But we must see that such shall be carried on in a proper manner, and that if frauds in these examinations are discovered they should be punished as severely as possible. I regret to say that so far some frauds which have been mentioned in the report of the Board of Civil Service Examiners have not been inquired into by the Government, and have not been punished. I find the following, dated February 15th, 1894, in the report of the Board of Civil Service Examiners :—

The board regret that being under the necessity of stating that a disposition on the part of some candidates to use improper means of insuring success at the examinations was again markedly exhibited, at that of last November. At two places, attempts at personation were discovered and frustrated, but in another case the fraud was accomplished—though afterwards detected and in some measure punished. The matter, however, is not fully disposed of, but it is in the hands of the Department of Justice for further action, it is now evident that in order to check the evil, the penalties provided by the Civil Service Act should be inflicted.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that that report refers to what occurred in Montreal in November last, and I may state here in this House, that there is a current rumour, not only in Montreal, but in the province of Quebec at large, that during the examination of November last : at least fifty per cent of the candidates were personated. Out of 100 candidates who presented themselves to be examined, nearly fifty of these, it is said, were personated. But that is not all, unhappily. Not only were nearly 50 per cent of the candidates personated, but we see, also, and I may state the matter from my seat, that at these same examinations of November last, the sub-examiners or the scrutineers who were charged to watch over the examinations, and to check over the candidates, contributed themselves to that itself. That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that the persons appointed by the Government to deal with these examinations, to watch over these examinations, themselves received bribes, and were paid by the candidates personated, in order that the fraud should not be detected and should not be known. You see, Sir, that two serious charges are now brought before this House. One, that there has been personation during those last examinations in Montreal ; and the other, that those cases of personation were made with the connivance and collusion of the persons appointed by the Government to conduct the examinations. I do not find fault with the Board of Civil Service Examiners. No member of the board was present at these examinations. I understand that the board is composed of three persons, namely, Mr. Thorburn, Mr. DeCelles, and Mr. LeSueur. No one of these gentlemen were at the examinations in Montreal, but I understand that the Government had some of their friends appointed to survey the examination and to watch over the candidates. I am not pretty sure, but I think Mr. Benoit, the chairman of the Conservative Association of Montreal was one of the scrutineers. If Mr. Benoit was not there, I am sure that Mr. Beaulieu and Mr. Desilets, two students of Montreal, were there as scrutineers, and the personaters were almost all students in the same university as those young men. There is no doubt that the personation was made by the knowledge and collusion of the scrutineers and the sub-examiners. Therefore, I think it becomes the duty of the House to investigate whether we should not find some way of preventing the occurrence of similar frauds in the future. I think it is the duty of the House to investigate whether we should not change the law in order that the examiners, or one member of the board at all events, should not be present to watch over the examiners. We want a system which will work effectively ; and, so far as I see, the system we have at present is working so badly that the examinations are only a farce. I do not mean to say that the Government are responsible for the frauds that occurred in Montreal in November last ; but I think we must charge the Government with being greatly guilty in not bringing before the courts persons who have been guilty of those frauds, or have received benefits from them. I had the honour on the 23rd of April last of bringing before this House for the first time the question of these examinations, and I then asked the Government this question :

1. Whether the Government are aware that at the examinations for the civil service at Montreal, in November last, certain candidates were personated ?
2. Is it true that the Government have prosecuted those who personated, without prosecuting at the same time those who were personated ?
3. Is the Government aware that, at the said examinations, one Bourassa was personated? 4. Is it true that the said Bourassa has not been prosecuted for that offence, and that he is, in fact, now in the employment of the Government? Do the Government intend to prosecute Bourassa, and if not, why not?

Mr. COSTIGAN. C. O. Wilson, student, who impersonated Bourassa, a porter in the Montreal post office, and his brother, B. Wilson, who personated Rondeau, a letter carrier in the same office, have been prosecuted and sentenced to a fine of $50 or two months' imprisonment. Bourassa, being an employee of the Post Office Department, that department has been notified of his offence. Bourassa's certificate has been cancelled as appears in the last 'Canada Gazette.' It is the intention to proceed against all parties against whom sufficient evidence appears available to justify prosecution.

That was the answer given by the Government to my question on the 23rd of April last. This man Bourassa, who was personated, should have been prosecuted; but instead of that, we are now at the 11th of June, and I do not know that any action has been taken against him. We find also that the certificate of Bourassa was cancelled. It is remarkable that the Government, in their answer to my question, did not state whether Bourassa was still in the employment of the Government or not. They said that his certificate was cancelled. That gentleman, I understand, was in the employ of the Government as packer in the Montreal post office for one year, and I suppose it was because he wanted some promotion that he tried to pass the examination; but, as he was entirely ignorant—I do not suppose he knows how to read or write—he went and saw Mr. Wilson, and asked him to personate him at the examinations. Wilson passed the examination, and the certificate was issued—the certificate which has been cancelled, and to which allusion was made in the answer of the Government. But Bourassa was until 23rd of April still in the employ of the Government, though the Government knew for many months that he had been guilty of fraud in having been personated, and he is still in the employ of the Government unless he has been dismissed since I gave notice of this motion last week. This man Bourassa seems to have been unduly protected by the Government, and if the Government are desirous of preventing such frauds as those that occurred in the month of November last, they should prosecute the men who derive benefit from those frauds. They should not at all events keep in their employ men who have rendered themselves guilty of an indictable offence. We have seen that two personators have been prosecuted; but the persons who were personated have not been prosecuted. We have also seen that the men who were most guilty, the scrutineers, who were paid for their services, who received moneys from the persons who were personated, were not brought before the police magistrate to be indicted. Well, Sir, on the 30th of April last my hon. friend from North Brant put the following question to the Government:—

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked, What are the names of the candidates who went up for examination at the recent civil service examinations at Montreal, who have been disqualified for irregularities; giving the nature of irregularity in each case? What are the names of the scrutineers at said examinations, and is the Government aware that the scrutineers accepted bribes for overlooking irregularities?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. Edwin A. Morse, G. U. Rondeau, J. A. Forbes, Alphonse Bourassa, Rudolph T. Germain. The offence proved against each of these men is that of being impersonated by persons whom they employed for the purpose. 2. J. A. Desilets and Joseph A. Beaulieu. Desilets acknowledged that he received money from Rondeau to keep silence. Beaulieu did not appear when called upon for evidence.

This man Desilets was one of the men appointed by the Government, as scrutineers, to watch over the examinations, and here is the declaration made by the Government on the 30th of April last that Desilets received bribes, while in the employ of the Government, to make a false report; and so far no action has been taken by the Government against him. I think it is the duty of the House to inquire into all these facts—to ascertain who are responsible for such frauds, and the manner of preventing similar frauds in the future. It is very much to be regretted that no action has been taken by the Government to punish these guilty parties. The law, however, is very clear on the point. The law provides that not only the personators should be punished, but also the persons who have been personated. Here is article 457 of the criminal code in regard to the matter:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable on indictment or summary conviction to one year's imprisonment or to a fine of $100 who falsely, with intent to gain some advantage for himself or some other person, personates a candidate at any competitive or qualifying examination held under the authority of any law or statute or in connection with any university or college, or who procures himself or any other person to be personated at any such examination, or who knowingly avails himself of the results of such personation.

So we see that the law is very clear. The personator must be punished, the person who has been personated must be punished, and the person who, by collusion or otherwise, procures personation must be punished. The law says that the person who procures himself or any other person to be personated must be indicted. Well, in this case we have that man Bourassa getting somebody else to personate him. That fact was to the knowledge of the Government since February last, and so far no action has been taken against him, and he is still in the employ of the Government; or if he has been dismissed, it is only since last week. We have also the fact that the persons charged by the Government to watch over the examinations, the scrutineers, were paid by the guilty parties to connive at the frauds. I want to know why no action was taken. I wish to know why criminal action was taken only against the two Wilsons. Is it because the two Wilsons are Liberals and that Bourassa is a man who was appointed by the Minister of Public Works? Is it because Desilets is the son of the judge in Three Rivers? Is it because Beaulieu is the nephew of the Minister of Public Works, in the Provincial Cabinet? I do not know for what reason those persons have not been prosecuted; but, at all events, although the Government were informed that nearly fifty persons were personated during those examinations, they prosecuted only two, and these two were Liberals. They left untouched men like Desilets and Beaulieu, because, probably, they are under the protection of some eminent Conservative. It seems that if the Wilsons were prosecuted, it is because they were without protection, and that because Bourassa was not prosecuted because he was a friend of the Minister of Public Works. It has been proven to the Government that Bourassa induced Wilson to personate him, because he (Bourassa) was in great intimacy with the Minister of Public Works. In fact, Bourassa went one day to Wilson's office and asked him to personate him during the examinations which were to be held during the month of November then next, and he said to Wilson: "You need not be afraid. I am a friend of the Minister of Public Works, and if anything goes wrong, I will see that you are protected." More than that, that man Bourassa showed to Wilson a letter advising Bourassa to get himself personated, in order that he might be promoted in the civil service, and Bourassa said that that letter was signed by the Minister of Public Works himself.

Mr. OUMET. Surely the hon. gentleman does not insinuate that I ever, either verbally or in writing, counselled Bourassa or anybody else to get personated. There is a limit to insinuations, and when they come to that point they ought to be stopped. Surely it is against the rules, that not only dishonesty, but fraud should be insinuated, and not only insinuated, but directly levelled against me. I declare that I had nothing to do with that matter, and that I am not open to any charge of that kind. If the hon. gentleman has letters or evidence to that effect he must file them before making such insinuations. That I told Bourassa that he had to undergo his examination, may be all right; but that I told him he must be personated, is not true.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not quite understand the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) to assert that the Minister of Public Works, or any member of the Government, had caused these gentlemen to be personated.

Mr. BRODEUR. I said only this, that the man Bourassa went to see Wilson and showed him a letter purporting to be written and signed by the Minister of Public Works. I did not say that the Minister wrote such a foolish letter, but I say that this man Bourassa induced Wilson to personate him by telling Wilson: You need not fear; here is a letter of the Minister of Public Works, in which he tells me to get personated. I say that this man Bourassa resorted to this rascality to induce Wilson to personate him. I do not say that the Minister of Public Works wrote such a foolish letter or that he would have induced Bourassa to get some one to personate him, but I say that Bourassa—and that that has been to the knowledge of the Government for several months—took such means to induce Wilson to personate him; and in spite of that, although the Government know that this man Bourassa resorted, not only to personation, but to forgery—because he showed a letter of the Minister of Public Works and the Minister denies having written such a letter—the Government have done nothing. It was the duty of the Government to prefer an indictment against that man, not only for personation but for forgery. Government should have seen that action was taken—not only against the two Liberals, but also against the Conservatives, like Bourassa, Desilets and Beaulieu. I wish to know why we cannot have the information which we have several times asked from the Government. On the 23rd May last, the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) asked:

I heard it was stated in the House that at the last examinations at Montreal some of the scrutineers had accepted bribes from some of the parties being examined. I would like to know if that is so, and who they were.

To this Sir John Thompson replied: "I do not think that was stated." Well, Sir, it was stated on the 30th April last in the House by a member of the Government, that the scrutineers had accepted bribes. Moreover, the hon. Secretary of State said on the 23rd of May:

During the examinations at Montreal proceedings were taken against the persons charged with personating, and fines were imposed upon them by the authorities, except, I think, in two cases, in which the parties had left the country.

But I do not see that actions were taken against all the parties. I state here that fifty persons were personated during these last examinations. That makes at least one hundred guilty persons, because personators and those personated are equally guilty. And yet we see that only two were prosecuted. These men have not left the country; they are still living in Montreal, and consequently they can be prosecuted. But nothing of the kind has been done. Yet, on the 23rd of May, the Government declared that action had been taken in all cases except two cases, in which the parties had left the country. We see that on this point the Government has made many contradictions, and we see that the law has been carried out in a very unsatisfactory way. Consequently, I think it is the duty of this House to investigate the question in order to see whether we should continue such a system or whether we should make some changes in the law in order to prevent such wrong-doing in the future. That is the reason why I move the motion which I have just placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker, in order that the House may inquire into the irregularities and find a mode by which these irregularities may be prevented in the future.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has explained to the House what has already taken place with regard to this subject. The discussion which took place on May 23rd was the fullest one, and the hon. member has hardly referred to it; but I presume that, as the discussion is so recent, it is pretty well within the recollection of the House. As the hon. member's observations would indicate, I was at that time under the impression, not having myself read the report of the civil service examiners, that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) was mistaken in supposing that the sub-examiners were implicated in these irregularities. But it appears that they were. My colleague, the Secretary of State, will be able to tell the House how far the estimate of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) as to the number of irregularities committed are accurate. These irregularities, of course, I do not intend to deny, nor do I intend to extenuate them in any way. Personally, I regret very much the lapse of time that has occurred in carrying on the prosecutions. For these delays, various reasons are given which I forbear to mention now. But I can state to the House that instructions have been given to our agents to prosecute in every case where we have evidence to support the charge, including those of the two sub-examiners whose names have been mentioned. I will ask the House, under the circumstances, not to appoint the committee which the hon. member asks for. Indeed, I would ask the hon. member himself not to press for the appointment of the committee under the circumstances, because the investigation which would take place before the committee of this House will be detrimental to the prosecution going on. In fact, the prosecution will stop entirely if the House should undertake to investigate the matter by committee. The practice in all such cases is for the House not to charge itself with the examination by a committee until the Government have ceased all action upon the subject, and the House is satisfied that the Government does not propose any further steps. In an investigation that requires either scrutiny in a department, or inquiry in the courts, the House, I think, will not undertake to interfere, and to take the matter out of the hands of the Government by the appointment of the committee. I am not in a position now, for various reasons, to state why the delays have occurred, but I am aware that good reasons do exist in the cases which have come under my notice. If I should give the reasons, I should state a good deal which it is important should not be stated until the investigations take place before the court. Under these circumstances, I will ask the House not to decide in favour of the appointment of the committee asked for by the hon. member for Rouville.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the House must agree that my hon. friend from Rouville has put his case in a very clear and temperate manner, and in view of the facts which he has stated, I think the House will regret the announcement which has just been made by the Prime Minister that the intention of the House is not to grant this committee of inquiry. I think my right hon. friend the Prime Minister has not properly apprehended the object of this inquiry now sought for. He has referred only to the cases which have prevented prosecutions taking place. That is only part of the inquiry proposed by the hon. member for Rouville. The hon. gentleman proposes to investigate the whole system under which these examinations are carried out. It seems to me that there is a good deal to say in favour of that proposition. If you read the report of the examiners itself, you find there reasons why Parliament should investigate the subject, not necessarily with a view to finding fault with any officer or with the Government, but simply to find out whether the examinations are properly carried on, whether the system is sufficient, and whether there is room for improvement. Now, let me read to the House the report made by the civil service examiners with regard to the subject in hand:

The board regret being under the necessity of stating that the disposition on the part of some of the candidates to use improper means of insuring success at the examinations was again markedly exhibited at that of last November. At two places attempts at personation were discovered and frustrated, but in another case the fraud was accomplished—though afterwards detected, and in some measure punished. The matter is not, however, fully disposed of, but is in the hands of the Department of Justice for further action. It is now evident that in order to check the evil the penalties provided by the Civil Service Act should be inflicted.

I leave it to the judgment of the House, and to every member of the House, to say whether this report is not quite sufficient, in that it does not give the details which the House would like to have in order to enable members properly to comprehend the subject. I do not want to blame the examiners. But, in view of the present position of affairs, it seems to me the House has good reason to look into the matters to see if there is not reason for the examiners to change their mode, and to suggest what method should be adopted. I do not want to charge the Government with any improper conduct in this matter. But there is one thing which is apparent, and to which I would call the attention of the right hon. leader of the House, and gentlemen on the other side, and that is that a good deal of party spirit has been introduced in these examinations. Now, Sir, the charge made by my hon. friend is one of which everybody is aware, and which is strongly supported by the character of the scrutineers appointed. It must be evident to all parties that these scrutineers were not appointed by the examiners at all, or, if they were appointed by the examiners they were appointed under political pressure. Mr. Benoit is known to be chief of all the political organizations in the city of Montreal. Now, is it possible that Mr. Benoit would have been selected if there had not been pressure behind the examiners? What were the qualifications behind Mr. Benoit for such an office? I feel that such an appointment must have been under political pressure. The same I would say of the other two examiners. Mr. Beausoleil and Mr. Desilets. They are two law students. I understand, in Laval University. I say that these two law students were not the proper persons to be examiners under such circumstances. These facts alone they are not able to dispute. There is cause sufficient why the House should inquire into the system, because it has been admitted for some time that the system is inefficient. The right hon. gentleman has surrounded the whole question with mystery, which he does not choose to tell or to disclose before the House, but he said there were reasons why it was preferable so much light should not be thrown upon the subject at this moment. I cannot see that. There is something there the force of which we cannot see, but it seems to me, at all events, it is something extraordinary that three classes of offenders have been proved to be guilty in this matter: First of all, the scrutineer, the personator and the personated. It seems to me, of all parties who were found liable for the offence were the personators. Who were they? Two young men named Wilson, two law students, well qualified, intelligent young men, who thought they would turn out not an honest, but a dishonest penny. They were to receive certain sums for appearing before the examiners. I think they were paid $20. They were the least of all the guilty parties who were personated. Mr. Beaulieu is not prosecuted; Mr. Rondeau is not prosecuted, nor is Mr. Desilets prosecuted, and still less Bourassa, the chief culprit, who could not pass his examination, but hired some one to pass his examination. Nay, more, it is on evidence that the certificate which he obtained on that occasion under false pretenses has been cancelled. It is a fact that while at the same time the certificate was cancelled, while he was admitted to be the man who had been found guilty of a grave offence against the statute, that man has been kept in the Post Office Department, and, unless he has been recently dismissed within the last week—he is there within the Post Office Department. At all events he was there until last week, although I have seen a statement that he had been dismissed, but his certificate was cancelled three or four months ago, while the man whom he hired to personate him was convicted at least six months ago and the man who hired him has not been brought to justice. Is it possible, under the circumstances, to accept the explanation given by the Prime Minister that it is better not to discuss the matter, but leave it to the Department of Justice? The reason ought to be given to satisfy the House that justice has been done and to show why Bourassa has not been prosecuted, while the man who has been paid for personating him has been prosecuted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Wilson was prosecuted in April.

Mr. LAURIER. It was before April. I don't know the time and place. I know that Wilson was arrested and brought to justice in February last. I don't know when the trial took place, but I know that the man was dismissed in February, and under all the circumstances there is ample justification why the motion should go before the House and be carried into effect.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has referred to two of the Post Office employees, and has criticised, as he very properly has done, the manner in which they got through their examination. I think that the important point to be considered is whether these men, after the way in which they deserved it, had been dismissed or not. The fact of the dismissal not having taken place just at the particular moment that the hon. gentleman thinks that it should have taken place is not, to my mind, an important point in the discussion of this matter. Regarding the case of Bourassa, as I understand it—I know nothing at all about Bourassa personally. He was recommended in the ordinary way when he was appointed, I suppose—I might say he was appointed as a temporary clerk, and it became necessary for him, before he could get a permanent appointment, to submit to the civil service examination. The fact of his having been personated by Wilson is exactly as the hon. gentleman has related it. Wilson was, I understand, prosecuted in the month of April. Bourassa has been dismissed. There was some delay from the fact that the Treasury Board could not meet during the session just as often as it might meet in ordinary times, but the fact of his dismissal, as the hon. gentleman has stated, is the best evidence. He has been dismissed. I can say that information is absolutely correct. Rondeau was dismissed immediately after the prosecution of Wilson. I am speaking from memory about Rondeau in reference to the particular day he was dismissed, but it was very shortly afterwards. Now, I see nothing in what has been stated as to the fact of Mr. Benoit being the gentleman in charge of these examinations. I think his reputation stands very high. He is a friend of the Government certainly, and the fact of his being a friend of the Government does not prevent him from being looked upon in Montreal as a gentleman deserving of all the confidence that he is entitled to and which he receives from those who know him. As to the case of Bourassa, I think, as the Prime Minister stated, that he is to be prosecuted, and I fully agree with what he said, that just on the eve of his prosecution being brought before the courts it would be very injudicious to have a committee of investigation upon the facts which have been brought before the notice of the House this afternoon. As to investigating the system, any other time will be just as opportune as the present moment to see whether the system of the civil service examinations is a good system, and if it is a good system, whether it is properly carried out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The explanation given by the Postmaster General as to Mr. Bourassa is very pitiable. The idea that the department should have in its service an official who has been shown not only guilty of dereliction of duty, but of crime, and that the House should be told that the question of his suspension or dismissal from office should depend on the meeting of the Treasury Board, is absurd.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. He has been dismissed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This is childish. Does not the hon. gentleman know that when evidence was brought to the attention of the Government that certain officials had been guilty of misdemeanour in regard to a celebrated bridge in Montreal, and that when this knowledge was brought to the head of the department he did not wait for a meeting of the Treasury Board to suspend them, but they were suspended at once. We have had the papers before the Public Accounts Committee, and it appears that the head of the department on that occasion at once acted on his authority and suspended the incriminated officers. If Mr. Bourassa was guilty of the offence of inducing another person to personate him, and that person was punished, it is reprehensible that Mr. Bourassa should not have been immediately dismissed as well. I cannot relieve myself of the belief that there was some very strong influence sheltering the man from condign punishment, which had been awarded to other parties equally guilty with himself. Certainly any doubts that I might have entertained in regard to this matter have been dissipated by the statement made by the Postmaster General, which was a foolish explanation; I do not say it offensively. The explanation of the hon. gentleman has not been in any sense satisfactory. Why was not this person suspended? Surely it was not necessary to have a meeting of the Treasury Board to do that. It is generally admitted that the offences committed were of the most reprehensible character, and if they were not suppressed and the parties punished the proceedings under the civil service examiners would be worse than a farce. I think it is highly undesirable that the House should refuse to appoint a committee to inquire into the whole subject, and for my own part, speaking with reserve and subject to such explanations as may be offered on their behalf, I cannot absolve the civil service examiners from being open to reproach for very gross neglect of duty in regard to this matter. These gentlemen knew not only that there had been personation, but that the very men appointed to conduct the examinations had been guilty of taking bribes to conceal the fact, and they concealed the fact from the Government and also from this House that their own appointees had accepted bribes to conceal the truth in this matter. The scrutineers are as guilty as the men who personated, or the persons who purchased the personators. It appears to have been a mass of corruption all round, and the persons appointed by the civil service examiners appear to have been as guilty as the others, and I cannot imagine that justification can be given on behalf of the civil service examiners who withheld a report on those facts. It appears to me they are shielding or attempting to conceal facts within their knowledge which should have been reported to the Government, and also to the House. There may be some explanation to be offered on their behalf, and, if such proves to be the case, I shall be only too happy to accept it; but when gentlemen occupying the high position held by Dr. Thorburn, Mr. DeCelles, and Mr. LeSueur withhold facts connected with such proceedings there is a necessity for the whole of the facts being investigated by an independent parliamentary committee. I submit that the committee could conduct its investigation without trenching in any way on the duties of those conducting prosecutions, or without prejudicing in any way the success of those prosecutions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This subject has occupied a considerable portion of the time of the House, and has been thoroughly discussed. Information was asked by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur), and further information was asked on the same subject by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville). I think hon. members will admit that the answers given to those inquiries were very frank, and were as full as could be given. The mover of the resolution to-day has given as a reason why the House should adopt it, that a full and thorough inquiry should be made on the subject of civil service examinations. The hon. gentleman does not charge the Government with any wrong-doing in connection with the examinations, although it is only fair to say that he has complained in regard to delay in the prosecutions. Thus the object of the inquiry would be to investigate into the working of the Civil Service Act, so far as those examinations are concerned. It would be well for the House to consider whether, in view of the repeated assurances that everything is being done that the mover of the resolution could do to instigate legal proceedings in the cases referred to, and not only in respect to Liberals, but quite irrespective of party principles or of individuals interested, any proceedings of this House should be undertaken. What is the cause of the complaint? That personation has taken place in Montreal. The hon. gentleman might have gone further, and said that complaint had been made that irregularities had taken place at Ottawa, and also at St. John, N. B. That is true. In three or perhaps four cases irregularities have cropped into those examinations. Let hon. members consider whether the system should be assailed or condemned on that account alone. These examinations have been going on for a number of years under the Civil Service Act, in fact, from 1882, and therefore for a period of twelve years, two examinations being held every year in different parts of the country, besides at least one promotion examination. Those examinations under the Act, I repeat, have taken place in six or eight places in the Dominion within a period of twelve years, and at least one promotion examination has been held every year in different parts of the Dominion, and the only complaints that have arisen have been two in Montreal, one in Ottawa and one in St. John. The men conducting the examinations were respectable and responsible men, and they were the first to bring under the notice of the Government, which was the proper authority, the fact that they had reason to believe that improper proceedings had taken place in connection with those examinations, and they suggested that some remedy should be applied.

Mr. LAURIER. They suggested scrutineers.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No. They suggested that proceedings should be taken against any person who has violated the law in respect to those examinations. I, as the head of the department, agreed at once, and the commissioners were authorized to make their report and institute proceedings. That has been done. The hon. gentleman had complained that it was only done in one or two instances in which the parties happened to be Liberals. I do not know whether they were Liberals or Conservatives; I care not what their politics were. That is still the decision of the Government, and the policy which is being carried out.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are no prosecutions going on now.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes. I am not, however, the prosecuting attorney who is conducting the cases, and in fact I have nothing to do with them. The Department of Justice has agents in every city. They have their agents in Montreal, and instructions will, I suppose, go to the gentlemen in Montreal to carry the prosecutions on there, the same as they would go to Toronto to carry on prosecutions there. Everything is being done that can be done to investigate this, and to punish every man guilty of these irregularities, because I believe that the Government feels that the system is not worth the paper it is written on, if the public cannot have confidence in the result of these examinations. There is no doubt about that. I will say one word more. If the hon. the mover of this resolution will do me a favour to call at my office, I will show him the whole file in reference to this matter. I will show him the report of the Board of Civil Service Examiners to me. I will show him the reference to the Department of Justice. I will show him the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice; I will show him that the whole proceedings have been carried on with a view to prosecuting the guilty party.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Have the Civil Service Commissioners made an additional report besides the one that is printed and in our hands?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No. My first answer was: that prosecutions were authorized in all cases where it was thought evidence could be had to maintain a prosecution. The board is meeting in Montreal to get further information in regard to every case of which they have not yet full information. In three or four of the cases referred to by the hon. gentleman, the men have left the country and there is no use taking proceedings against them. If they come back perhaps we could get them.

Mr. BRODEUR. Bourassa is in the country.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Bourassa, I presume, will be proceeded against. Irrespective of the prosecutions, entirely, what I had to do in my department was to see that the certificate of any guilty person was cancelled. That was done immediately in regard to the case of every officer who was proved to have been personated in this examination.

Mr. BRODEUR. How is it that Wilson has been prosecuted for having personated Bourassa and that Bourassa has not been prosecuted, and at the same time he has been kept in the employ of the Government?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think myself that is a very reasonable question to ask. I cannot see why a prosecution should not be taken against Bourassa as well as the others. We decided that prosecutions should be taken in all cases. I might have been influenced by the consideration that it might be considered sufficient punishment when a man was dismissed from the service. I admit now that prosecution should go on against him as well as the man who personated him, and I think that the House may rest satisfied that in no case will these parties escape from any penalty that the law imposes. Where proceedings can be taken they will be taken, and are going on.

Mr. OUIPET. After it has been declared that all the prosecutions are going on, and that it is better to allow these prosecutions to take the regular course, I think the House ought to be satisfied that the Government are doing their duty. There is another thing that I hope the House is satisfied of, and that is: that it is quite obvious to every gentleman who has listened to this discussion, that perhaps unwittingly and undesignedly the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) is guilty of what I would think is an injustice to a man, whom I had every reason to believe was an honest man, and a man unable to perpetrate any fraud against the law. I refer to Bourassa. I do not want to excuse myself for having recommended that man for the position of porter which he has occupied for several years, and in which I may say he has given full satisfaction. I may add that Mr. Bourassa is nothing to me. He is not in my county.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes; he came from your county.

Mr. OUIPET. I do not even know that he is a Conservative, nor do I know that he has a vote. All I know is that when I was first elected for this House, twenty years ago, his father was a resident in my county, and his house was the rendezvous for all the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Bourassa's father was one of the 327 who voted against me in that election. It is true that against these 327 opponents, I had 864 who voted for me, and I suppose I had no reason to feel a grudge against any one who voted against me. It did not do me any harm anyway. When I knew Mr. Bourassa, he was a young man with a large family, willing to work and provide bread for his wife and children and I gave him a recommendation. I was not a Minister at the time. I gave him a recommendation, believing, as I believe yet, that he was an honest straightforward man, willing to work for his family, and that he deserved, what we Conservatives give sometimes too lavishly to people who do not belong to our party, or what we give without inquiring whether they do belong to our party or not. These are the facts, Mr. Speaker. Now, I say that this young man has received an injustice at the hands of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur). Every one who has heard and will read the remarks of the hon. gentleman will think that when such remarks fall from the lips of a representative of the people against one of his own countrymen, that there must be really some very great crime committed. If this man, Bourassa, has to go before a jury; perhaps among these jurymen there will be one or two or three Liberals who will have read the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brodeur) and who will be convinced in advance that this man is a scoundrel of the first water, who must be punished at all hazards. This is an injustice that we do too many times in this House by trying people in advance, while they are about to undergo a trial outside of this House before the regular tribunals of the land. This is an injustice that we permit in this House too often, and it is a proceeding that perhaps carries with it some very grave consequences for which hon. gentlemen opposite have sometimes reason themselves to be sorry for. The hon. gentleman himself, has admitted that I had no interest in the matter, and I certainly would not be foolish enough to write such a letter as the one that he says has been alleged to have been shown to this young man Wilson. I may say, however, that I do not know these young men, and that I heard to-day for the first time that they were Liberals. If proceedings have been taken against them it is certainly not because they were Liberals, for I am not aware that any member of the Government knew that they belonged to the party of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. Now, with reference to Mr. Benoit, superintendent of the examinations, I may say that Mr. Benoit is one of the most honourable citizens of Montreal, and that he enjoys the highest reputation. He is a man of independent means, and is highly educated. The citizens of Montreal will read in to-morrow morning's papers for the first time, that Mr. Benoit can be open to such a charge as the one levelled at him by hon. gentlemen opposite. Because he has acted many times as president of the Conservative Association of Montreal, is that to be held a disqualification, or a cause for suspecting a man of being dishonest and dishonourable.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. OUIPET. I know that the hon. gentleman is of my own opinion, and I know that I would fall in his estimation if I were to use that language towards one of his countrymen, or towards one of the principal supporters of his party without having any evidence put before this House to warrant my charges. Mr. Speaker, never has one word been said by any one against Mr. Benoit, or against his qualifications, or charging him with not having done his duty; and I am sorry to hear such an accusation made for the first time without a tittle of evidence. But nobody will be surprised at that. Those whose convictions cannot be conquered, and whose public importance cannot be affected, hon. gentlemen opposite have tried to bulldoze by accusations of that kind, in order to drive gentlemen of the character of Mr. Benoit out of politics entirely. The struggles of politics are already every day made more unpleasant to everybody outside of active politics; and this is a part of the politics carried on every day by hon. gentlemen on the other side when they cannot otherwise influence the people to cast their ballots in their favour.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. "Le Moniteur de Lévis" talks like that.

Mr. BELLEY. "La Sentinelle."

Mr. MULLOCK. Mr. Speaker, the country will hear with great surprise that the hon. Minister of Public Works, I suppose in the name of his Government, has protested against the unearthing of wrong-doing. The hon. gentleman began by denouncing the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur), because he had suggested a wrong against a fellow-countryman. Why, Sir, in Canada a wrong is a wrong, no matter who permits it, and I am amazed that the hon. gentleman should say that there is to be one law for one class and another for another. The hon. gentleman, growing bolder as he stood on his feet, at last declared that the House was doing an injustice to this young man with a large family—how young was he to have a large family? This young man with a large family was to be seriously injured because somebody in this House suggested that after six months it was time for a candidate for the penitentiary to be brought to justice. I would like to know what the hon. gentleman's idea of justice is? I would like to know what is the use of anybody on this side of the House suggesting that any one should be brought to the Bar of justice? It is not very long ago that the Government took the keys of the jail and let out two prisoners. What is the use of our putting in jail people who commit crime? I can well understand the morality of the hon. gentleman when he says that to-morrow it will go to the press of the country that somebody has suggested that forgery and personation and fraud are high crimes. What are they if they are not high crimes? The Minister of Public Works says that the floor of Parliament has been made use of too often in order to bring wrong-doers to justice. Ordinarily, Sir, the courts of justice, in some countries at least, do their work, and it is not necessary for the great high court of Parliament to intervene to set the wheels of justice in motion; but unfortunately, it has been the duty of the people's representatives here on more than one occasion to set the law in motion; and this, Sir, is a most proper occasion for doing so. No defence has yet been offered why a man charged with a crime last year, and said to be guilty, has been retained in the public service; and the Minister of Public Works is horrified that there should be a discussion here against such a person because he happens to be his countryman. If I were one of his countrymen—and I claim to be a brother—and the hon. gentleman sought to cast a cloak around my doings because of my nationality, I would say he had committed an insult upon the whole people of whom he is one; and I am satisfied that his countrymen will not thank him for asking that nationality be accepted as a defence for wrong-doing, or as a reason for having no investigation to get at the truth.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has just sat down if he applies the same reasoning to the use of false moustaches by certain personaters in Toronto?

Mr. MULLOCK. I say there should be one law in Canada for all classes. I do not care what party they belong to. The hon. gentleman would be greatly improved in appearance if he had a large moustache.

Motion negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman for Cardwell has not voted.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I was paired with the hon. member for North Brant, or I would have voted against the motion.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.

Mr. CHARLTON moved third reading of Bill (No. 2) to secure the better observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday.

Mr. TAYLOR moved the following amendment:—

That the Bill be not now read the third time but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend same, so as to provide that religious publications and Sunday school newspapers may be distributed on the Sabbath day.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not consider that the amendment is necessary. The language of the Bill provides against the sale and circulation of newspapers on the Lord's Day, and I do not think any fair construction of the Bill could make it apply to the distribution of religious literature in churches or Sunday schools. I would deprecate the acceptance of the resolution, because it might imperil the passage of the Bill. If I deemed it at all essential to the operation of the Bill, if I deemed there was any danger, under the provisions of the Bill, that religious literature would not be distributed on the Lord's Day in churches and schools, of course I would accept the amendment, but I do not think it lies open to that objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. As I understood it, the Bill makes it a penal offence to distribute newspapers of any kind on the Sabbath day. Therefore, I think we should go into committee and amend the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. These are not newspapers which are distributed in the churches and Sunday schools.

Mr. TAYLOR. A few years ago I was up in the northern part of the country attending a meeting on the Sabbath day, and the missionary there brought an armful of papers,

Mr. MULOCK.

Methodistical publications, the recognized newspaper of the Methodist Church, and distributed them. We have in all our Sunday schools Sunday newspapers, which are brought by the teachers or students and distributed. They are newspapers—not magazines or periodicals. If this Bill passes, any clergyman distributing these papers is liable to be punished for an indictable offence.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the words "circulate on and distribution" be struck out of the first clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. I beg to move in amendment that the word "secular" be inserted before the word "newspaper," so that the clause shall then read: "whoever shall on the Lord's Day engage in the sale, distribution or circulation of any secular newspapers."

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). What do you mean by "secular?"

Mr. CHARLTON. Not religious. The object of my hon. friend in making the motion is to cover the objection he raises that the Bill will interfere with the circulation of Sunday literature in Sunday schools. If the word "secular" is inserted it will do away with all the objection my hon. friend raises, and will not interfere in the slightest degree with the circulation upon the Sabbath of religious literature, Sunday school papers, lesson sheets and religious periodicals.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That would go beyond what you intend. Better add the words "circulation in Sunday schools and churches," otherwise, parties may engage in the circulation of so-called religious papers on the streets.

Mr. MARA. I would ask the hon. member who has charge of the Bill to allow the amendment to pass as it stands. It will then, if I understand aright, allow newspapers in British Columbia to be published on the Lord's Day, but not to be sold on that day, and that will meet the objection I have to the Bill. We do not object to the prohibition of selling these papers, but, as the regular daily newspapers are published on Sunday instead of Monday, we would like it to be clear that papers may be published on Sunday in the ordinary way, but not sold.

Mr. CHARLTON. The object is to prevent the publication, sale and circulation of Sunday newspapers. I do not think it is more desirable to have the Sunday newspaper published in British Columbia than elsewhere. The House has accepted the principle. As promoter of the Bill, I do not wish it to interfere with the circulation of religious periodicals and religious reading matter in the Sabbath schools and churches which it is just as proper to circulate as it is proper to circulate the books of the Sunday school library. The object is to prevent the publication of the ordinary Sunday newspaper of the character and type of those we find published in the United States, of the character and type which would be followed in this country if Sunday newspapers were published here. I am willing to insert the word "secular," which will meet the case, and will do away with the danger of interfering with the circulation of these religious papers.

Mr. LANGELIER. We have no Sunday schools in the Catholic churches in Quebec, but there is a great deal of literature circulated in the churches that would be prohibited by the Bill in its present shape. It must not be thought that we are all from Ontario; there are some of us from Quebec, where there are no Sunday schools in the Roman Catholic churches.

Mr. CURRAN. There is Catechism.

Mr. LANGELIER. That is not what you call Sunday school.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is only fair to give a word of caution to the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill. I think a great deal of difficulty will result from loose expressions like "secular." When you make an offence and use a term so untechnical as that, you will find great difficulty in proving what was the nature of the paper concerning whose circulation the charge is made. I think that if the object is to be accomplished of excepting these publications it will be necessary to pass the prohibition as it is, and add a proviso that nothing herein contained shall prevent the distribution on Sunday of religious publications in churches or Sunday schools.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is perfectly satisfactory, and, if it is the sense of the House, I will move that addition to the section.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I happen to know that the point raised by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) is rather an important one from a British Columbia standpoint. I think that the effect of the Bill so far as the province of British Columbia is concerned, will be the very opposite of what the hon. gentleman intends. His desire is to stop Sunday labour, as I understand, as well as to stop the publication of Sunday newspapers. In British Columbia, as I understand it, the morning papers are not published on Monday, the object being to give the workmen engaged upon those papers a clear day on the Sunday. But there is a newspaper published and distributed on Sunday morning bearing the date of Sunday, which is practically all printed on Saturday night. Now, the effect of the Bill preventing the distribution of that paper on Sunday will be to encourage the publication on Monday, and thus to compel the men who are engaged in printing that paper to work on Sunday, which they do not do at the present time.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) will consent to withdraw the amendment he has offered, I will ask leave to do the same with my amendment, and move the amendment suggested by the hon. leader of the House, as follows:—

But nothing in this section shall prevent the gratuitous distribution of religious publications in churches, Sunday schools or religious meetings.

Mr. LANGELIER. I rise to a point of Order. This cannot be taken into consideration in committee. The House has gone into committee only on that amendment, and we cannot take any other amendment into consideration.

Mr. TAYLOR. My motion, when the Speaker was in the Chair, was that the House go into Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend in such a way as to make provision for that suggestion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We are not bound to adopt the exact words, if we take the same principle.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. LANGELIER. The amendment of the hon. member for North Norfolk would not allow the distribution of those religious papers. The amendment says: "At religious meetings or in churches." These publications are never distributed in the church, but in the sacristy. They are not distributed at religious meetings.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The church includes the sacristy.

Mr. LANGELIER. No court in the province of Quebec would say that the church is the sacristy.

Amendment (Mr. Charlton) agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. When shall the Bill be read the third time?

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the House will grant the third reading of the Bill to-night. We might not have another day upon which to take it up. This Bill has received ample discussion, and the House is thoroughly conversant with the principles of the Bill, and with the character of the amendments made to-night. It is unnecessary to defer the consideration of the Bill for another day, and I ask that the third reading be taken now.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand there are other amendments to be proposed, and I suggest that we should at least dispose of them to-night.

Mr. MARA. I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to limit section 1 to the sale of any newspaper or journal on the Lord's Day. When the hon. member for North Norfolk introduced his Bill, he laid great stress on the demoralizing effect upon the community of the publication and distribution of papers on the Lord's Day. Now, I have here two papers that are published in British Columbia on Sunday, the 'Daily Colonist,' published in Victoria, and the 'News Advertiser,' published in Vancouver. I may state that they are the leading papers in British Columbia, and they are published in the two principal towns of the province. I would call the attention of the hon. member to those papers, and I can state that they are as enterprising as any papers published in Canada. They are as free from objectionable matter as any papers published in the city of Toronto, or in the city of Ottawa. They occupy, I might say, the same position in those cities that the 'Globe' and the 'Mail' occupy in Toronto, which are published on Saturday, largely for Sunday reading. These papers have not had the effect which the hon. member for North Norfolk states that the publication of papers on Sunday would have. In British Columbia we have a law-abiding and a God-fearing community, a people that observe the Sabbath and attend churches as regularly as they do in Montreal, Ottawa, or Toronto.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). Do they pay?

Mr. MARA. I take it for granted that they do pay, and that the people support them, because they are leading papers in the province of British Columbia. The position they take is that by publishing on Sunday instead of Monday, they have the Sabbath as a day of rest. Every man connected with the papers, from the printer's devil to the editor, has a day of rest on Sunday that he would not have if the paper was published on Monday; and why should this House dictate to these people, and say by law that they must work on Sunday instead of working on Saturday? Now, the position I took the other day in this matter was that it was an infringement of provincial rights, and a few moments ago—

Mr. SPEAKER. Perhaps the hon. member will pardon me if I interrupt him for a moment. I have been looking into this matter, and my opinion from the outset was that the question was as to when the House would order the third reading of the Bill. With regard to the third readings of Bills, I find the following laid down in the books:

When the Order of the Day for the third reading has been read, it is competent to move that it be discharged and the bill withdrawn, or that it be re-committed. Formerly it was not unusual, when the motion for the third reading had been agreed to, to add clauses, or make other amendments; but of late years the House has followed the modern practice of the English Commons, which is stated in a standing order. No amendments, not being merely verbal, shall be made to any Bill on third reading. Whenever it is proposed to make important amendments, it is usual to move to discharge the order for the third reading, and to go back into committee for the purpose.

The House has not yet decided, as I understand, that the third reading is to take place now. I think it would be well for the House first to decide whether the third reading should take place now or upon a future day. If the House decides that the third reading shall take place now, then the motion of the hon. member will be in order, but I think it is not in order until the House decides whether the third reading is to take place now or upon a future date.

Mr. MARA. I understood the First Minister had asked that the Bill be now read a third time, that the House had acceded, and that you had put the motion. Otherwise I would not have moved the amendment I read.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understood the House was willing to take the third reading now.

Mr. MULOCK. Rule 47 says:

The amendment made in committee shall be reported by the Chairman to the House, who shall receive the same forthwith. After the report, the Bill shall be open to debate and amendment before it is made an order for the third reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Bill be read the third time?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the House says "yes," when the Bill will be read the third time, when will the amendment of the hon. member for Yale come in? Amendments have been made in committee, put to the House, and the House had agreed to them. We are in the same position as when we began, that is to say, on the third reading of the Bill. Then the hon. gentleman comes in with his motion, and if that is carried, we go back into committee again. If that is carried in committee and reported to the House, we begin again until the amendments are all through.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman does not quite understand the point at issue. The order is, first, whether this Bill shall go at once on the Orders for third reading, and the question is whether the Bill shall be read the third time. The question for the House to consider is whether the Bill shall be placed as a motion for third reading immediately. Hon. members in favour of the third reading of the Bill now will say "aye."

Hon. MEMBERS. Aye, aye.

Mr. SPEAKER. The ayes have it. The Order is now for the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MARA. I now move the amendment, which I have already read. I was about to state that I took the position when this Bill was before the committee on a former occasion, that it was an infringement of provincial rights. I desire to call the attention of the House to the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell when the Bill was before the House three sessions ago. That hon. gentleman said :

Whether a man shall work in a shop, mill, newspaper office or grocery on Sunday, or not is a matter for the local legislature to decide. They derive their power from the people just as we do, the law of the constitution says that civil rights are under the control of that legislature.

Again, the hon. gentleman said :

So far as our power to legislate criminally is concerned they are exactly alike, but in regard to matters of police which are under local control, I think that there can be no doubt that the particular subject of my hon. friend's Bill belongs clearly to the local legislatures and not to this House. We have a right to close the canals, to regulate traffic on the inter-provincial railways, to close the post offices, to close the departments under the control of this Government on Sunday and to give the government employees a day of rest ; but having done that, I think we have done all we have the power to do constitutionally, and if we go further, I think we are going beyond our powers.

These are the views which were expressed by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) when a similar Bill was before the House in 1891, and I ask hon. gentlemen opposite who are trying to force this Bill against the large majority of the people of British Columbia to consider the position taken by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) before hon. members allow this Bill to be read the third time.

Mr. CHARLTON. The principle embodied in the Bill has been fully discussed by the House. The principle of the Bill has been accepted by the Committee of the Whole : that principle is that the publication of the Sunday newspaper shall not be permitted. The character of the influence exercised by it has been very fully discussed. There may be Sunday newspapers in British Columbia which are of a very innocuous and harmless sort, but in that respect it does not differ from the progenitors of the race in the United States. The first Sunday newspapers there were quite harmless and contained a good deal of religious homily, but they speedily became what they are to-day, and it is to guard against that great evil, as it exists at the present moment in the United States, that the Bill has been framed and accepted by the House. So I do not feel disposed to accede to the request made by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara). As regards the question of provincial rights, that also has been discussed. The Canadian House of Commons has power to make anything a criminal act ; it has complete jurisdiction in that matter, and that ground has all been traversed in the discussions which have already taken place. It has been shown that the Dominion Parliament controls the mails, the transmission of literature, the importation of literature, and it holds the full control in all these respects, and as the House has already expressed its determination to prohibit the publication of the Sunday newspaper, it is useless to reopen the question and refer the Bill back to committee, and, therefore, I decline to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara).

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has entirely missed the point urged in connection with the amendment of the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara). The action of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)—and I do not desire to destroy this Bill or to prevent its passage by the House—has explained to the House that the object of the Bill was to preserve the sanctity of the Sabbath. It has, however, been pointed out that the effect of this Bill will be to compel the printers in British Columbia to work on the Sabbath, instead of working on Saturday, to get up the paper distributed on Sunday, which is the ordinary paper, as I personally know, published in that province. I think the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), when he criticised the amendment, missed the point entirely.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say, in reply to the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), and the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara), that there is no force whatever in the position they have taken on that point, and I will explain the reason. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) has stated that the paper is prepared on Saturday night and is distributed on Sunday. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) does not intend by any means to prevent the distribution of the paper on Sunday.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is just what the amendment is asking us not to do.

Mr. McMULLEN. Not at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman does not understand the question.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the people of British Columbia hold their paper and do not distribute until Monday morning, there is no violation of the law.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to set him right. He is 24 hours behind the time. This paper is now printed on Saturday night and distributed on Sunday morning, which distribution is specifically forbidden by the Bill of the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

Mr. McMULLEN. I say distribute the paper on Monday morning. I have caught the hon. gentleman and he does not like it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You do not understand it at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. The paper is printed on Saturday night, and contains all the news up to Saturday night, and can be distributed on Monday.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). They are not all dead in British Columbia on Sunday.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haslam), on behalf of the printers of British Columbia, argues that they should not be forced to labour on the Lord's Day, and he says that if the Bill is passed in the direction moved by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) they will have to go to work on the Sabbath evening to prepare the paper for Monday morning. If they print their paper on Saturday night they will get all the news. They will get no despatches on the Lord's Day of very great importance, and they can distribute the Saturday night's paper on Monday morning. If that is done you can comply with the law and no injustice will be perpetrated.

Mr. HASLAM. I would ask the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) if that is not trying to beat the devil a little around the bush? The present Bill appears to be doing that all the way through. Here under this provision, the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) legalizes the printing and the doing of the work of a newspaper on Sunday, but he says it is extremely wrong and illegal to distribute a paper on Sunday that is printed on Saturday night. That is a very curious provision to say the least of it. Under the present system I know that the printers of British Columbia enjoy three times more of the Sabbath than do the printers of Ontario, and I know that there is not a paper offered for sale in the province of British Columbia on Sunday. The only distribution that takes place in that province on Sunday is to subscribers in the immediate vicinity of the printing office, and under this Bill that small moiety of work on Sunday is going to be made illegal. I cannot tell what is the object of this Bill, but the result of it will be, that the morning newspaper printers throughout the whole province of British Columbia, who do not now work on Sunday will be compelled to work on Sunday. They will be compelled to work from 12 to 16 hours on Sunday under the provisions of this Bill, whereas under the present system in that province there are only two or three newsboys working an hour and a half on the Sabbath day. If there was any good sound object in view I would be the first to vote for the Bill, but it certainly seems ridiculous. It makes it illegal for three or four newsboys to work an hour and a half on Sunday while it makes it perfectly legal for a whole newspaper staff to work half the Sabbath day.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. CURRAN. I think the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) ought to be satisfied with the great step in advance he has made when he convinced this House that there should be no sale of a Sunday newspaper. The effect of the Bill as it stands now would be to revolutionize the publication of newspapers in the province of British Columbia, without at all advancing the interests that the hon. gentleman has at heart. The position taken by the gentlemen from British Columbia, has a very great deal of force in it despite the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen). In the province of British Columbia there is an established rule by which the printing is done on Saturday night and the paper distributed to its subscribers on Sunday. There will be nothing gained in the direction of sanctifying the Sabbath, it appears to me, by forcing the people of that province to change their system, and to printing it on Sunday evening. The British Columbia papers have none of the objectionable characteristics of the American Sunday morning papers which are aimed at by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). They are ordinary papers published from day to day, six days in the week, the same as our Montreal 'Gazette' or Toronto 'Globe,' and they contain no objectionable matter. They are printed on Saturday night, with the very commendable object of not necessitating the compositors to work on Sunday evening, and they are distributed to their subscribers on Sunday morning. There is less work done on Sunday by those engaged in getting out the newspapers in British Columbia than there is under the system which prevails in the other provinces. The effect of the hon. gentleman's Bill will be to force the people of that province to change the system which has existed for years and years with the consent of the whole people of the province, and the result will be: not to lend any more sanctity to the Lord's Day, but to increase the work done upon the Lord's Day. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) after many years has at last succeeded in convincing the majority of this House, that there shall be no sale of the Sunday newspaper on Sunday, and I think he should rest content with that. He does not wish to prevent the circulation of reading matter which is in no sense demoralizing, and these British Columbia papers, possibly include a good deal of sound, wholesome Sunday reading. The hon. gentleman wishes to strike at what he describes as the objectionable Sunday paper, and he will have the whole House with him if he remains satisfied with that.

Mr. LANGELIER. The discussion which is going on to-night shows that this Bill is a matter which should be left to the Provincial Parliaments to deal with. Here we find the Protestant province of British Columbia as much opposed to this Bill as is the Catholic province of Quebec, and for a similar reason. It appears that in British Columbia the whole work of the papers is done on Saturday evening, and the mere distribution takes place on Sunday. The intention of the Bill seems to be to force all the people of this Dominion to observe Sunday as it is observed in Ontario. It appears that in Ontario no harm is seen in the fact that the Monday papers are entirely printed on the Sunday evening. To my mind, if there is anything objectionable, it would be that part of the publication of a paper, because it entails a great deal of work upon the men employed on the paper. My hon. friend from Wellington says that they will not be compelled to work on Sunday if they do not publish a paper on Monday. If the people want to have papers six days in the week, they will have to do as they do in Ontario, that is, have a paper printed on Sunday evening. If the observance of Sunday is to be so strict as is proposed by this Bill, nothing at all should be done on Sunday. If anything is to be prevented, I would prefer preventing what is done in Ontario to what is done in British Columbia. Even in the minds of the strictest observers of Sunday. I think there is no great harm in simply distributing on Sunday a paper which has been paid for in advance, and which has been printed on a week-day, whereas the mover of the Bill does not see any harm in doing the whole work of the paper on Sunday, or the Lord's Day, as he calls it. Why does he not see any harm? Because that is the practice in Ontario. Everything done in Ontario he finds to be good, while what is done in other provinces he does not find to his taste, and he wants to prevent. The members from British Columbia might just as well insist on passing a law to prevent the printing of papers in Ontario on Sunday, which is permitted by this Bill. All this shows that this Bill deals with a matter that should be dealt with by the local legislatures, and not by this Parliament.

Mr. MCKAY. I beg to call attention to the fact that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is in the House and has not voted.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) has not voted.

Mr. SCRIVER. I am paired with the hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Burnham).

Amendment agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MARA moved :

That the words "distribution or circulation" be struck out of the first section.

He said: To strengthen the position I am now taking I would like to call attention to the remarks of the hon. member for North Norfolk when the Bill was in committee before. He stated :

The intention of the section is to deal solely with the question of the sale of Sunday newspapers.

That was the intention when the hon. member introduced the Bill, and that is what I would like to see the section limited to now.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to call attention to another defect in this Bill. The hon. member for North Norfolk is aware that there is brought into Canada from the United States a class of papers of the very worst possible kind, containing a kind of reading that is not fit to be taken into any home. These papers are published in different United States cities, and are dated on Sunday, but printed a day or two beforehand, and are sold in our Canadian towns and villages on Saturday night for Sunday reading. A clause should be introduced at a later stage declaring it to be illegal to sell in Canada any paper the day of publication of which is given as the Lord's Day.

Mr. MULOCK. What about the "Sunday World"?

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose I should be obliged to accept the action of the House in desiring to go into committee on the amendment offered by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) as indicative of what the action of the Committee of the Whole will be on the matter; and, of course, I must reluctantly bow assent to the decision expressed by the House.

Mr. MARA. I think my amendment will cover the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague).

Mr. MONTAGUE. No, it does not.

Amendment agreed to, and Bill reported.

Mr. CHARLTON moved that the Bill be now read the third time.

Mr. BENNETT. I beg to move in amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to add to section 4, the following subsection:—

The owner of any tug leaving port on Sunday, for the purpose of towing or otherwise, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour and liable to the payment of not less than $100.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I am afraid I cannot support the amendment of my hon. friend. I do not happen to own any tugs, but I have often had occasion to watch tugs running out of the harbour of Toronto to relieve vessels in stress of weather, and I think it is very important that they should be permitted to do so. I should be willing to support the amendment provided it does not apply to cases where vessels are in stress of weather.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does not prevent the tugs, but only the owners leaving port on Sunday.

Mr. BENNETT. While it is quite true that there might be cases of the nature mentioned by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth), and while I do not object to an amendment to cover such cases, my object is to prevent abuses such as happen along the shores of Georgian Bay, where tugs are accustomed to make up rafts and tow them out on Sundays, and the men employed all week have also to work on Sundays, for the benefit of the tug owners. I have in my mind a case where a tug deliberately left the raft, which was in a place of safety, and in order to save time and put a few dollars in the pockets of its owner, came into the port of Midland on

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Sunday in order to drum up a lot of men to coal the vessel. It is wrong. Such a desecration of the Sabbath cannot be defended, and if this amendment be adopted, we will be following the line of advice of a very distinguished gentleman, who preached yesterday in one of our churches in this city, who said:

He noticed with sorrow the fact that many labour organizations influenced by the deal were trying to take from some men their right to this necessary rest. He would much rather see these labourers on the lookout that no single individual should be deprived of his rights on this question.

I am thoroughly in accord with that sentiment, and trust that this clause I propose will be adopted, subject to any amendment which the hon. member for East Toronto may suggest to meet the cases of vessels in distress.

Mr. SCRIVER. I suppose it would not be in order for me to question the sincerity of the hon. gentleman who has submitted this amendment; but, bearing in mind some utterances of his in the past, I do not think it will be unfair to conclude that, after all, what he intends is a sneer at the supposed want of principle on the part of the hon. gentleman who has brought this measure before the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no. Order.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would ask the hon. gentleman who has just read the extract from the newspaper, giving the utterances of a certain gentleman, whether he would subscribe to those utterances?

Mr. BENNETT. That is the reason I moved the amendment.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is, perhaps, very easy on certain occasions in this House to raise a laugh at the expense of some member, but I doubt whether, after all, any member of this House who attempts in this indirect way, to assail the reputation of an hon. gentleman, adds to the dignity of the House or his own reputation as a member.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT. Surely the hon. gentleman will allow me to make an explanation? Surely the hon. gentleman will not arrogate to himself and those with him on that side all the morality—

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman has already spoken. The hon. gentleman cannot make a second speech. He may make a personal explanation.

Mr. BENNETT. It is simply a personal explanation, and I say it without reserve, that it was to the disgust of our townspeople that a large tug came in there—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BENNETT. In personal explanation, I have only this to say to the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), that he has no right to impugn my motives.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is that a personal explanation?

Mr. BENNETT. I am sincerely honest in the desire that there should be an end put to the abuse my amendment is aimed at.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to say that I cannot vote for the amendment. The object of the hon. gentleman, as he says, is to prevent tugs going out on Sunday for any purpose whatsoever. The phraseology of the amendment may be open to the exception taken by some hon. gentlemen, but it is quite evident that the object is to punish the owner who allows his tug to go out for any purpose whatsoever. But people in the Maritime Provinces know well that, in many instances, it is necessary a tug should go to the assistance of a vessel in distress, and it would be absurd to prevent her doing so on a Sunday. The Sunday observance law will not be broken by tugs. They only leave port on Sundays in cases of necessity, and this suggested amendment is obviously unjust.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the amendment is put to the House, I may be allowed to say a few words. I beg the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to have no doubts as to whether I believe in his sincerity or not. I believe he is very sincere in the object which he has in view, and the malignity with which he has pursued me is an evidence of his sincerity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of prohibiting Sunday work for tugs. I am quite willing, so far as I am concerned, to accept the hon. gentleman's motion, absurd as it is. Of course, vessels under certain circumstances, must work on Sunday. If a vessel is on the high seas, it would be absurd to expect her to heave to and lie over for twenty-four hours. There are certain circumstances, best known to navigators, that would prevent the observance of Sunday on all occasions in navigation. I have no objection, so far as my own interests are concerned, to make it an indictable offence for a tug to leave port on Sunday. So far as the insinuations of the hon. gentleman are concerned, I may say that, while I am the nominal owner of a tug, I have never had the management or control of a tug. I presume that the tug he refers to as coaling in harbour on Sunday was one nominally owned by me, and chartered by a company and engaged in towing timber. Over that boat I had no control last summer.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not say last summer.

Mr. CHARLTON. It makes no difference, the same has been true every season. The insinuations made with regard to myself are totally unwarranted, and I am confident the hon. gentleman is well aware that I have had no control of the tug. If the amendment of the hon. gentleman is, in the opinion of the House, a desirable one, I shall raise no objection to it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I would like to move an amendment to the amendment, and would ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken on the subject, and therefore cannot move an amendment.

Mr. HAZEN. I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I may say that I am entirely opposed to the amendment for the same reason as that given by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). If the amendment were passed in the form in which it is at present, the result would not be beneficial to the shipping interest, and not only that, but a great many cases of hardship and disaster might result through tugs not being allowed to put out and tow a vessel into port on Sunday under any circumstances. I hope the amendment will not be accepted by the House.

Mr. MARTIN. The amendment is absurd, because it undertakes to fasten a criminal charge upon a man simply because he is the owner of the tug which leaves port on Sunday.

Mr. BENNETT. They follow his instructions.

Mr. MARTIN. Not necessarily. Supposing a captain undertakes to go out of port on Sunday, and the owner is not there and has nothing to do with it. According to this proposed amendment, the owner is to be held guilty of a crime for the action of his subordinate, who may have acted directly contrary to his instructions. It seems to me it would be absurd to adopt such an amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR moved :

That the amendment be amended by adding to it the following words: Except in the case of a tug leaving a port for the purpose of towing a vessel or vessels into harbour.

Mr. FORBES. I desire to enter my protest against either the amendment or the amendment to the amendment being adopted. They are both childish, and show that the movers have no knowledge of the business to which they relate. They are both most indefinite. There is no law defining a tug. In many of the Maritime ports the ferry boat is used for the purpose of tugging vessels or rafts. Why should you discriminate between a ferry boat, when carrying passengers, and a ferry tugging a vessel or raft? Moreover, very often a ferry boat or tug is chartered to a third party, and the owner is not in control. This amendment will do violence to the general principle of charters, and is a direct blow at the shipping industry, the tug industry, the ferry industry and all the industries of the shipping ports where small steamers are used. In the province of Nova Scotia we have a moral respect for the Lord's Day, and need no statute law to compel its observance.

Mr. HASLAM. Before this amendment is put I would like to say a few words. I think both the amendment and the amendment to the amendment would be entirely out of place. There are a great many circumstances under which it is absolutely necessary for a tug to put out on Sundays. For instance, in bays or straits, where there is comparatively little sea room, it would work great injury carrying out such a measure as this. In such cases they usually have a lighthouse outside the bay or strait, and the telegraph station sends in word to the tugs and the tugs come out and take the vessels in. If either the amendment or the amendment to the amendment is passed it will work great hardship and injury to the shipping trade all over the Dominion of Canada. The House ought to be very careful before passing such an amendment.

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Taylor) negatived.

Amendment (Mr. Bennett) negatived.

Mr. LANGELIER moved :

That the Order for the third reading of the Bill be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to a committee of the whole House with instructions to amend it by adding the following thereto: The present act shall not apply to the province of Quebec.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. LANGELIER. I beg to move :

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read this day six months.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MACDONALD (Algoma). I move :

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend section 3, by striking out the words "or directs empty cars to be removed from station to station within the territory of Canada."

Mr. CHARLTON. I beg to remind the House that section 3 is not under consideration. The only sections of the Bill passed by the House are sections 1 and 2; the others are dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER. Section 3 has been struck out altogether; and of course this amendment will not be in order.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORBES.

BALLOT IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

The Order being read for the House in Committee on Bill (No. 7) to extend the ballot to the North-west Territories.

Mr. MARTIN. As this matter has been dealt with by the Bill of the hon. Minister of the Interior, I would ask that the order be discharged and the Bill be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 4), to make further provisions as to the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—(Mr. Coatsworth.)

On section 4,

Mr. McMILLAN. This section requires consideration before it is adopted. It is likely to cause trouble if any individual shall have the right on the highway to interfere with any one driving an animal, without just cause, and in my opinion the person should only have the power to lodge an information and should not have power to interfere between the driver and the animal. Under the last section, power is given magistrates to issue an order to destroy any animal. I have myself been present on an occasion when a horse ran away and broke both its hind legs. The horse was then standing in the snow with its shattered bones. This occurred in the night; there was not a magistrate within six miles. Was the animal to be permitted to suffer until a magistrate could be communicated with and order its destruction? I acted as magistrate myself, and destroyed the animal. In my opinion an order from a single magistrate should be sufficient authority to destroy any animal, and I also hold that no person should be allowed to interfere between an individual and his own animal, further than lodging information with a view to subsequent punishment.

Mr. TISDALE. Considerable discussion occurred on this section in 1892, when the criminal code was changed, and it was not then considered necessary to give these extreme powers to individuals. To certain sections of the Bill I do not object in certain respects, but it is a dangerous rule of legislation to adopt when it is proposed to authorize any one to interfere, without the authority of any police officer or complaint whatever, with another person whose judgment may be equally correct in regard to the question to the animal or animals. Who is to decide these questions? One man may think the action cruel while another may think the opposite. Section 4 provides :

Any person may expostulate or interfere to prevent the perpetration or continuation of any act or acts of cruelty done in his presence to any animal, and any person who interferes with or obstructs or resists any person so engaged shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour, or to both.

Is not that a clause very liable to provoke a breach of the peace? It means nothing more or less than that one man shall arrogate to himself the right to be judge over another man as to whether the act done is a cruel one or not. In 1890 Parliament passed the criminal code, which had been carefully considered. I submit to the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill that he would secure a better chance of passing the important provisions if he were to drop the present clause, and also the succeeding one. I do not agree with the idea that even a justice of the peace should have power to order that an animal should be killed unless better evidence was produced than has been evolved here. I strongly object to this principle being introduced into our legislation, that any person on the street may interfere with any individual in such a way that he can drag him before a magistrate without the interference of a police officer, simply by stating that he is cruel. That embodies a very important principle, in this way, that men are apt to be considered cruel who have spent a lifetime in learning to understand animals, in learning to know how to master them, just the same as men and women learn to instruct their children. This is a high point of culture and education. I have protested before, and I protest now, and I will protest until the end of this debate, that the people who wish this legislation are not so well informed as those who have spent their time in rearing, training, using, selling, and caring for animals. I resent this attempted legislation, particularly on behalf of the farmers, and those who have dealt in, trained, bred and bought animals. No case has been made out, no additional evidence has been brought forward, since 1888, 1889, 1890 and 1892, when the criminal code after long discussion and the hearing of evidence before both houses, was adopted, and it was not found necessary to insert these two clauses. I cannot urge too strongly, and I cannot appeal too strongly to hon. gentlemen who care for animals, and who raise animals, against legislation in this direction. I cannot accept the proposed legislation which has not been adopted by any Legislature of any province of the Dominion, or by any colonial Legislature, namely: that one man should be able to go out on the street and without making any complaint, without submitting any evidence, without the assistance of a police officer, should be able to decide as to whether cruelty has been practiced or not. The least that could be done would be to take the offending party before a peace officer, and if the party were adjudged guilty of cruelty, he should be punished. But it is derogatory to the people that such an extreme law as is proposed is necessary, and that without more evidence than has been submitted, especially since the consolidation of the criminal law has taken place, such legislation should be put into effect, for there is no evidence whatever that the people of this country are so cruel on the streets that they should be liable to the interference of bystanders, without offenders being taken before a magistrate, and at all events it should be provided that in every case the alleged offender should be taken before the courts in order to ascertain whether he had or had not been guilty of cruelty. I am not speaking so much individually, as I am in the belief that the Canadian people are, as a general rule, kind to their animals, and that they know how to use and treat them well, and do so. Is this House going to endorse the principle that our people are so cruel to animals that we need to restrain them by such unusual and unprecedented legislation as this. If I have a horse, or a dog, or an animal of mine that I understand how to treat, and a man puts his hand violently on me on the street, and says: you are cruel, would I not resent it? I would consider it an insult, and the man that does not resent an insult is not a man in the true sense. With the knowledge that I have of the people of this country, and with the experience that I have of judging and seeing the people who deal with and handle animals, I say that there is no evidence of any abuse which will justify us in passing such extreme legislation as this.

Mr. FLINT. I think that the promoter of this Bill would do well either to remodel this clause or to drop it for the present. I have had considerable experience in connection with these societies and I know the difficulties in the way of carrying out a clause of this kind. As I understand the law there is nothing to prevent a person from expostulating with another whom he thinks may be cruel to animals.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman is mistaken so far as this province is concerned at least.

Mr. FLINT. I have never known it questioned that moderate and reasonable expostulation is permissible where a person thinks cruelty is being practiced. If the person expostulated with assaults the other, that, of course, is punishable at the present time. It would be well to provide, that the person who interferes should be a recognized peace officer or official of some kind. In the province of Nova Scotia, the duty is thrown upon certain persons to see that the law in regard to the prevention of cruelty to animals is carried out. It is a very good provision, and amongst other officials, sheriffs, constables, and police officers generally are specially authorized by the Nova Scotia law to see that the Act for the prevention of cruelty is enforced. To allow any person to interfere is, I think, going further than would be good, because my own personal experience is that a large number of very tender hearted and sympathetic people have not always wisdom with regard to matters of that kind. It requires experience of the world, it requires judgment as to the case of cruelty, and it requires judgment of the men whom you are dealing with. Some people could expostulate and could almost even interfere in a way which would prevent a breach of the peace, but other persons could not do so and ought not be trusted under a clause like this to do it, because worse evils might arise than those we are trying to prevent. I, therefore, think that in that particular the hon. gentleman would do well to recast this clause or to carefully reconsider it. In regard to clause 4, I am very much of the opinion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale), that it is asking a little too much that there should be a warrant from two justices of the peace. That also would place persons in a very unpleasant predicament, and perhaps create the very cruelty that we are trying to avoid. I do not think that even such a cumbersome procedure as making a complaint before two justices of the peace should be necessary when a case is clearly made out, such as cruelty to an animal with a broken limb, for instance. I am not prepared to state just what procedure would be necessary, but I think that those interested should take the risk of doing their duty without requiring such an elaborate procedure to protect them. The measure, I think, would be just as well carried out without the adoption of this clause. The ordinary operation of the law and the good sense which is characteristic of most of the communities of this country, will, I think, operate very satisfactorily in carrying out the law without the addition of this clause as at present framed.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I do not think that either of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken have yet quite met the case. The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) who was not present the other evening did not hear the statement that was made in reference to one of many cases on which this subsection was based. The most recent case is the one which occurred in the city of Ottawa not very long ago, where a gentleman interfering with an act of cruelty—and I believe the act was conceded to be an act of gross cruelty to a horse—expostulated with the person in charge of the horse. He was assaulted, and he brought his assailant up in the police court, and the police magistrate held that the assault was justifiable as there was no authority for interfering with the treatment of the animal. We have many cases of that kind in the city of Toronto and in other places where an effort is being made to prevent cruelty to animals, and as the object of this is to prevent cruelty to animals, I think my hon. friends are a little inconsistent in the way they look at the two sections.

Mr. FLINT

For instance, in regard to this subsection they say that the formality required in interfering with a person using his animal cruelly are too few, while the formalities required in order to enter on a person's premises and take the life of an animal, they say, are too great. I think my hon. friends are certainly inconsistent on both these points. For instance, any person who takes it upon himself to interfere with another in his use of an animal, takes upon himself the onus of proving that an act of cruelty punishable under this Act has been committed. That is a great responsibility for any person to take upon himself, and unless he takes the responsibility of proving that the man has brought himself within the scope of this Act, and is liable to be punished, then there is no doubt he would be punishable for his interference with the person, and would have no right to interfere with him. There is that protection afforded by the responsibility which the person takes who attempts to interfere with an act of cruelty; and, certainly, as the object of the Bill is to prevent cruelty, I think that hon. members who desire to attain that end ought to allow the subsection to pass. In other words, what is said is this: that an act of cruelty—for instance, driving a horse whose shoulders are so chafed that he is in great pain and suffering—ought to continue for a day or two until the case can be brought before a magistrate and disposed of. We have in Toronto an officer whose duty it is to enforce the provisions of this Act, and I presume there is a similar officer in this city; but they have not the right to interfere and prevent acts of that kind; they are bound to let them go on until they can bring the case before a magistrate. Therefore, where an officer of this kind or any person is prepared to assume the responsibility of saying that the provisions of this Act have been violated, and going into court to prove it, I think the time has come when such a person should be entitled to interfere to prevent gross cruelties. The cases referred to by my hon. friend, such as the overwhipping of a horse that is baulky, are not the cases aimed at by this Act. The cases aimed at are cases where horses are overloaded, or where they are driven when their backs are so chafed that it is a most inhuman thing to continue driving them. With regard to subsection 4, some hon. gentlemen think that it should provide for interference on complaint before one justice of the peace, and others think that there ought to be no such interference. I wish to say that this and all the other subsections have had their origin in practical cases which have come before the magistrates in one place or another. I do not think it would be wise to limit the provision, and say that one justice of the peace should give judgment in a case of this kind, because there are two very important things that the section provides for. In the first place, it provides that the magistrate may give an order to a police constable to enter upon the premises of another person ; and, in the second place, it gives him the right to order the killing of the animal of another. These are very important powers, which I do not think ought to be given without due consideration. We ought to be very careful not to lodge too much jurisdiction in one individual ; and I think it is only right that those who own the animals should have the advantage of the decision of two justices of the peace. Therefore, I think the subsection should be left as it is. In regard to the necessity of the subsection, it has been found in cases that have occurred under the Act that no police constable now has any right to enter upon the premises of another person for the purpose of destroying an animal. The gist of the section is not really the destruction of the animal but the entering upon the premises of another person for the purpose of destroying it. As I understand, the law now is that a police constable may upon the order of a magistrate destroy an animal. I may be mistaken about that ; but several cases have been brought under my notice by officers under the law of animals having been turned out into fields and left in a sick and dying condition week after week and month after month ; and no power is vested in any magistrate to order an officer to enter upon the premises and destroy them. The object of this provision is : where an animal is in the fields and in such a condition that it ought to be shot, to authorize a police magistrate or any two justices of the peace to make an order giving authority to a police constable to enter upon the premises for the purpose of destroying the animal.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the speech made by the hon. gentleman, and the Bill, show how very improper it was to embrace clauses such as those which he proposes to amend in the criminal law of this country. The whole subject is a matter of police, and is adequately provided for by the police laws of the various provinces, and ought never to have been dealt with as a subject of crime by this Parliament. Just look at what the hon. gentleman is now engaged in. The criminal law is for the protection of life and property—not against the owner of the property, but against violence done by other parties. There is no one who has a greater interest in the protection of property than the proprietor ; but the hon. gentleman assumes that the proprietor is a destructive or cruel man, who is going to do serious injury to his own property, and needs the oversight of his neighbour to prevent him doing so. The hon. gentleman says that it is right and proper that a man should have authority to interfere with another with regard to the treatment to which he subjects the animal which he owns or which may be in his possession. If a man sees another acting harshly or cruelly to an animal, there is nothing in the world to prevent him expressing his opinion of it ; there is nothing in the world to prevent him remonstrating with the man ; that is the right of everybody. The man may tell him to mind his business ; but if he thinks the man is acting cruelly and harshly, he may go before a magistrate and lay a complaint. But the hon. gentleman proposes that he should have the right to take the law into his own hands ; and if the proprietor offers the least resistance, he will be subject to being seriously punished as a criminal offender, because he prefers his own judgment to the judgment of the person interfering with him. The hon. gentleman says he would not care to give authority for interfering in the case of a man who treats some what roughly a horse that is baulky. How is the hon. gentleman going to distinguish between a horse that is baulky and one that is overloaded, or one that is tired out ? Is he going to classify the cases where interference may take place ? A man may become very warm in trying to get his team on : they will not go on ; it is not because they are overloaded, but it is, perhaps, because they have been badly broken by some other person before they have come into the hands of the present proprietor, and the driver becomes excited and angry and threshes them somewhat severely. There is nothing to prevent a stranger passing by remonstrating, but why give him power personally to interfere and take control of the team, and subject the owner to very serious punishment as a criminal offender if he resents such interference ? If there is wrong done, if the tender heart of the passer by is touched, he can go before a magistrate and lay a complaint and have the man fined. It seems to me that it was most unwise to introduce those ordinary police regulations, that are amply sufficient, as police regulations, into the criminal code of this country, and the hon. gentleman now proposes to go on and tinker and amend that criminal code, and has given us a number of instances when it is right or proper for two magistrates to interfere. The hon. gentleman says that a sick horse may be turned out into a field and the owner may be neglecting it, and he wants the authority of two magistrates to destroy it. He goes up, sees the horse there, finds it in rather poor condition, with the crows sitting on the trees waiting for the funeral, and the hon. gentleman says it is a case of very great cruelty, and he gets the authority of two magistrates to shoot his neighbour's horse. Well, the horse may have been turned out because the owner did not want to shoot it. The owner may have thought that the horse might recover. He may have had the horse for a number of years, and not be willing to kill or allow any one else to kill it, and is willing to bear the expense of the horse's continued existence, on account of past services.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is not the case aimed at.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is the case the hon. gentleman's Bill will reach. It gives the power to every business man, who cannot take care of his own property, to interfere with his neighbour's property. That is what the hon. gentleman proposes to do. We should legislate so that people will mind their own business and let other people alone. That is what the hon. gentleman does not propose to do. He might get the support of some goody-goody society for legislation of this sort, but he will find that every owner of property who takes care of his property, will not thank him for it. The time of this House could be very much better employed than in discussing legislation of this sort. This is not the kind of thing we are sent here to legislate upon. There is a constant disposition to encroach upon and usurp functions that are assigned, under our constitution, to our local legislatures. If the hon. gentleman wanted to deal with this subject, he ought not to come here at all; but having come here, if he does anything at all in the matter, he should devote his attention to repealing the clause and permit the local legislatures to take charge of this business, as they had charge of it before, and then let us devote our attention to something more useful.

Mr. McMILLAN. After an experience of fifty years in Canada, and having had stock on my own farm, I can say that I have never yet known of an animal being turned into a field in the condition the hon. gentleman describes. I have known of them turned out on the public highway, but not into any one's field. There is not a farmer in the district where I live who would be guilty of the conduct of turning an animal into a field in that condition. The farmers of Ontario understand that it is through the law of kindness they can best succeed with their animals, and I have seldom seen a farmer commit an act of wanton cruelty upon any animal in his own place. I am convinced that legislation such as this could be made a cause of continual trouble. If I am badly using my horse, and some one comes and remonstrates with me, and I do not stop, is that person going to take possession of my animal? How is he going to do that? These two clauses are not required at all. Our gentlemen farmers and stock owners take good care of their stock, and I have not, in my fifty years' experience, seen an animal abandoned on the field, and have very seldom seen them turned out on the highway, except where an accident may have happened.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I hope I did not give the impression that I meant that farmers did such things. I had no idea of the kind. I have had no case brought to my notice of a farmer committing such cruelty, and I quite agree that farmers do not commit acts of that kind. As the sense of the committee is against the clause, I have personally no object in pressing it, and I think it would be better to drop the clause.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would it not be better to drop the whole Bill?

Mr. TISDALE. I move, in amendment, to add the following clause:—

This Act shall not apply to the keeping or using of any bird—the shooting of which, except by this Act, is not prohibited—for the purpose of being shot at, or the shooting of or shooting at any such bird, on the wing, when or after rising from a trap, as a bona fide test of skill in marksmanship, nor to any person who is present as a party, umpire or judge at any such shooting, or keeps or rents or permits the use of any yard, field or premises for the purpose of such shooting.

And the following subsection:—

Whoever, in keeping, using, or shooting at any bird, under the provisions of the last preceding subsection, causes or inflicts or permits to be caused or inflicted to or upon such bird any cruelty, pain or suffering, other than is the direct result of the shooting during such test of skill in marksmanship, and the killing of any maimed or wounded bird, immediately after the shooting thereof, or fails to kill any bird that has been maimed or wounded during such test of skill in marksmanship forthwith, after the same has been so maimed or wounded, shall be liable on summary conviction, to a penalty of one hundred dollars.

For all time, according to the annals of Great Britain and her colonies and of the United States, this sort of sport has been considered manly. And not only that, but, in my opinion, it is strictly in accord with the proper education of youth. And I protest against any action of this House or of the committee of this House which will put it upon record that such sport as this is cruel. Nobody who has seen the different means used in killing birds otherwise than by shooting them, can deny that death by shooting is as merciful, as sudden and involves as little cruelty as any other. I look upon it as a reflection upon our ancestors, upon as good men, as kind men, as fair men as there are in any country, to pass such a Bill as this. Three years ago this question was discussed and decided. The views of the gentlemen who favour this class of legislation were heard as well as the views of those who opposed it, and after a long discussion, after the fullest evidence from all parties being heard, it was the opinion of this House that such legislation should be rejected. The hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill had no such clause as this in the Bill. If I remember right he was in favour of this form of legislation when the Bill was before the House on a former occasion. But I hold that he is quite consistent in introducing this Bill in the form he did, and I consider it almost unfair to the sportsmen of the country to bring forward this amendment suddenly. The hon. gentleman who now represents the same society that the former

hon. member for Hamilton did, brought his Bill in without any provision against trap shooting. I am obliged to him for doing so, and the sportsmen of Canada are the same. I speak on their behalf, but I do not represent them as I did when this measure came before us three years ago, and when I had the petitions of 15,000 of them asking me to protest against the measure proposed, and against which my amendment is aimed. I have not engaged in such sport as has been referred to; I have never had the time to practice shooting birds out of a trap, but in my old age I love the sports of the field as well as I did in my boyhood. And I say that a boy who is trained to wander through the forest and over fields and marshes as a true sportsman, has a chance for better morals in life than if he is brought up to prefer the luxuries and chance the dangerous vices of the city. I have taken the strongest and dearest responsibilities for my opinion, for I have brought up my sons in the same path. I do not get so much time to fish or shoot as I did, but I repudiate the idea that the men who engage in such sports must be classed as cruel. Also, in making this motion, I am following the course of the great Imperial House, that greater House to which we look so largely for an example. As I have said before, I am glad to say again, both great parties in this country—and they are both great parties—look with pride and pleasure to the Parliament of Great Britain for an example. There the same question was brought up, and while the House of Commons approved the measure, the House of Lords rejected it. And what did they do? They did the logical thing by passing a Bill providing for severe punishment of any one who inflicts unnecessary suffering upon birds when shooting or using them as a test of skill. I am glad to say that we went a step further in standing by the true principle of legislation. We declared in effect: we will not allow to be classed as cruel that which is not cruel. It was alleged untruly and unfairly that cruelties were perpetrated upon the birds by our sportsmen; that their eyes were put out, and that they were subjected to other mutilation. I have now to move an amendment to restore, or rather to add to this Bill the clause—no, I will say restore it, because the hon. member who has charge of it was willing to pass the Bill in this shape—to restore to the Bill a clause declaring that it shall not apply to the class of shooting to which my amendment refers. But, to prevent misunderstanding as to the position of sportsmen of this country, the true sportsmen, I wish to add the clause of the English law. The House of Lords passed this law and the House of Commons accepted it. I am willing you should make the penalty for cruelty $500, but I think $100 is better, because it is more apt to cause a sufficient penalty to be imposed. I might give Parliament evidence in favour of this amendment, evidence brought before the House when the Bill was up before. But I am not prepared to present that evidence now. From that time to this, this House has heard nothing more of the matter. The people of this country, the members of this House, the members of the Provincial Legislature, because of the record then made and the evidence then produced, have been silent with regard to this question. The best proof of the reasonableness of the proposition is that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill—and I give him credit for it—was ready, after seeing what could be brought forward in support of the contention, to accept this principle as a part of this Bill. I will read one of the petitions presented to this House when the Bill was formerly before us. I do not wish to voice the protest of people who cannot fairly speak for themselves. This petition was a sensible, modest, true and straightforward presentation of the case, and it spoke the sentiments of about 15,000 members of the shooting clubs of this country. This is a protest not only against this class of legislation, but against what seemed even worse to these people, the insinuation that the men who had been trained in the field sports of the old time, when men were strong, but yet had not the advantage of education and refinement such as we possess, were cruel. And I say it will be a bad day for Canada and for England when these sports are disregarded—these sports that have produced the men who have filled England's navy with sailors and her armies with soldiers that have made her unconquerable. These are the sports in which youth should be educated—far better in their results than the refinements or the vices of the cities. Send a young man out into the field or abroad in the forests or on the mountains there to meet the birds or beasts in their own home, to study their habits, get acquainted with their ways, and while giving them a fair show, by superior skill to vanquish them. That is the true training to give youth in order to make men of them, fit for these halls, and fit for the battles on the ocean and in the fields, that have given such renown to Great Britain. Shut off this class of teaching, and you weaken their soldiery instincts. Some gentlemen may think I am enthusiastic, but that is the way I was bred, and that is one of the things I believe in. It is what I teach my boys—who are no better than other boys—but when they have grown up into men I think probably they will follow the ways of their fathers and of their forefathers. I protest therefore against this class of legislation, and I will read one of those petitions, presented when this question was before the House on the former occasion to which I referred, to give you an idea of the reasons that prevailed when this House declined to pass such legislation:

To the Honourable the Senate and House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, in Parliament assembled :

The petition of the undersigned, residents of the Dominion, humbly shows :

That your petitioners are informed that certain persons are seeking to obtain amendments to the law for prevention of cruelty to animals for the purpose of preventing the shooting of certain birds.

Your petitioners assert that such persons are acting upon a mere sentiment, and without a knowledge of the subject ;

That gun clubs and sportsmen take pains to avoid the practice of any cruelty in regard to birds used in trap shooting and that with modern close-shooting guns birds are usually killed instantaneously, but if wounded are retrieved and killed with the least delay possible ;

That if pigeons are not so used they will rapidly increase and cause great loss and injury to farmers and annoyance to townspeople ; and that sparrows have already become such an injury and nuisance that farmers, gardeners and people of all classes are anxious for their extermination ;

That the use of the birds mentioned for trap-shooting affords the only efficient and comparative humane means of checking their increase ;

That to stop such shooting would be a great and unwarrantable interference with the business of those engaged in the gun trade and manufacturers and dealers in shooting materials.

Your petitioners therefore pray that no legislation may be passed to interfere with or prevent shooting birds from traps.

Here is a letter that was sent criticising the Toronto Humane Society, which gives very strong reasons :

The Toronto Humane Society are trying, among other things, to stop shooting sparrows. Practical men—farmers, gardeners and others—are seeking means to getting rid of them, finding them to be a destructive pest. In my opinion, gun clubs and shooters are doing good work in the interests of the country by making use of sparrows, by supplying one means of thinning out birds that are rapidly becoming an intolerable nuisance. It is reasonable to suppose that if the Toronto Humane Society existed in New South Wales and New Zealand they would oppose the destruction of rabbits, although the Governments there offer £35,000 to any one who will invent an effective means of exterminating them.

In regard to pigeon-shooting there has been in your columns a very sensible letter from Mr. T. C. Paterson. I would like to add on this subject that the sale of pigeons for trap-shooting affords a considerable amount of money to a great many people, which could not be obtained in any other way. It would not pay to keep pigeons for all they are worth as poultry. Then, as pigeons increase rapidly and are largely free commoners, taking possession of barns, lofts, church spires and such places, and feeding in the grain fields whenever they can, they would in a few years, if not kept down by trap-shooting, become a very serious annoyance both in town and country.

I hope the well-meant but ill-advised aims of the Toronto society will meet with the fate they deserve. If the society would confine itself to legitimate objects they would have enough to do, and a far larger share of public support.

Now, the latter part of that is not applicable to the Toronto Society at the present time, because they abandoned the idea on the showing that was made in this House, and I think it was creditable to them. I wish to say, in conclusion, lest my remarks might lead one to suppose that I am aiming at that society, that such is not my intention. I wish to place on record here my belief that the Humane Society in Toronto, and similar societies in other cities, both in Canada and the United States, have done a great deal of good so long as they kept within their legitimate objects, but when they go beyond I think they do mischief instead of good. But in this particular case, the sportsmen had no idea that they were going to be attacked. However, the society are satisfied, and I think that the evidence was such that they could not help but be satisfied, and I say it is creditable to them in every sense. That being so, I submit that it is entirely uncalled for, and not at all in the interest of the public, that this legislation should be passed, and I submit, therefore, with great confidence that the committee will adopt the amendment I have proposed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. From the way the hon. gentleman has spoken, I think the debate is likely to be protracted, and from our past experience of debates on this question, I think it is too late to deal with it to-night. I move, therefore, that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MULOCK. The hour is early yet, and I wish to express the hope that the Minister has no intention of taking the whole time left to private members until, at all events, the Bill I have so often mentioned is disposed of. I do not want to oppose the motion to adjourn, if the understanding arrived at some time ago is still good.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was no understanding arrived at, but I am quite sure the hon. member will have an opportunity of moving his Bill yet. It is true, the hour is not late, but if this debate had gone on, I am sure it would have lasted for three hours.

Mr. MULOCK. I am surprised to hear the right hon. gentleman remark that there was no understanding arrived at. I think the 'Hansard' will show that there is.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will stand by whatever is in the 'Hansard.'

Mr. MULLOCK. I say that eleven o'clock is early to adjourn on a private member's day, especially when the Government have taken all the days of the week, and all Monday except the evening.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the First Minister state what is the business which will be taken up to-morrow.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Supply.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) will move an amendment respecting the Tay Canal.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 12th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

TONNAGE DUES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to-morrow, to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that a rate or duty fixed by the Governor in Council, and not exceeding ten cents for every ton gross tonnage, shall be paid by the owner or master of every steamboat in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS, &c.

Mr. PERRY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Railways when I may expect a return to an Order made by the House about a month ago for certain papers in connection with the Prince Edward Island Railway. This is the third time I have asked for it, and it is almost like begging. If the Minister does not intend to give up these papers, I would like to know it; if he intends to give them up, I would like to know why he does not bring them down.

Mr. HAGGART. I gave instructions to have prepared as soon as possible the return the hon. gentleman asks for, and I think it is perhaps in the Department of the Secretary of State now, ready to be brought down to the House. It will not be more than a day or two till it will be brought down.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to draw the attention of the House to a matter which I think deserves its consideration. The House will notice that the First Minister has to-day laid on the Table of the House the report of the Minister of Agriculture. Here we are three months from the beginning of the session and within eighteen days of the close of the year ending the 30th of June, 1894, and this report of the most important department of the Dominion is only now laid on the Table. Now, Sir, we had this very experience last year—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order, if he does not intend to conclude by making a motion. On former occasions I have pointed out the inconvenience of entering into discussions upon the calling of the Orders of the Day. The hon. gentleman cannot make a speech.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish simply to draw the attention of the House to the delay, and I wish to emphasize that by referring to the case of the previous year. I earnestly hope that this experience will not be repeated.

Mr. FORBES. I would like to ask when I may expect the return to an Order of the House granted on the 25th of April last, seven weeks ago, with regard to the industrial establishments in the counties of Queen's, Shelburne and Lunenburg. I wrote to the Finance Minister on the subject on the 15th of May, and I interviewed him personally on the 29th of May, and at his request I interviewed the Dominion statistician, Mr. George Johnson, on the 30th of May, and I have not yet received any reply, nor has any return been brought down. Can the Minister tell me when the return will be brought down?

Mr. FOSTER. The return has not been prepared. I was under the impression that it had been when I sent the hon. gentleman the information. That appears to have been incorrect. Some other return was meant, not this one. The vote has run out and there is no money with which to pay clerks to prepare this return. We are waiting for a supplementary vote of the House.

SUPPLY—THE TAY CANAL.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I propose to place a motion in your hands and ask the sense of the House upon the question, which I shall briefly discuss. The subject I refer to is the celebrated Tay Canal—a public work of considerable cost and of not very considerable public utility. I find, in looking up the record, that the first grant was made in the year 1882, on application to the House by Sir Charles Tupper, and that the estimated cost of the canal, as then given by him, was $132,660, exclusive of certain land damages, which, it was apprehended, might have to be paid in consequence of the flooding of land. In 1883, a second grant was applied for by Sir Charles Tupper, of $75,000, and it was then said by that hon. gentleman that the lowest tender received for the construction of the canal was $186,000, but that certain changes had been made which, it was estimated, would cost $55,556, and that the revised estimate of the cost, owing to these proposed changes, was $240,000. I find, in the debate upon that occasion, that my hon. friend, the present Minister of Railways justified the expenditure. At page 1072 of 'Hansard,' he is reported as having made the following justification for the proposed expenditure :

There is the traffic of the town of Perth and smelting works will be erected there, which require this canal.

I am not aware whether these smelting works have been erected yet or not. He continued :

In the back section of the country, as we all know, there are the largest deposits of iron ore in Canada, as well as of phosphates of lime. It will also enable freights to be cheapened in the bringing in of coal for the purpose of smelting iron and for other works intended in that section.

It seems that these anticipations of my hon. friend have not been realized, and the smelting works, and the export of iron and the imports of coal for the purpose of smelting, and the trade in phosphate of lime, has failed to materialize. In 1884, Sir Charles Tupper asked Parliament for a third grant, amounting to $100,000. And in 1887 he asked for $55,000 more. He then said that the expenditure had been $256,360, and that the $55,000 asked for would complete the work, including the basin at Perth. The statement made by the hon. gentleman will be found in the 'Hansard' of that year, volume 2nd, page 838. In 1888, Sir Charles Tupper asked for $78,000 more, although the previous grant of $55,000 was to complete the work, basins and all. This was required for the purpose of paying off the balances due contractors, the work being finished, and the total cost, he said, would be $358,364. In 1889, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) asked for $25,000 more, and he would not promise that this sum would be sufficient to complete the canal. The total cost, he said, would be $364,951. And in 1890, the hon. gentleman asked for $11,000 more to settle with the contractors and finish the work. This, you will observe, was the fourth final call, the fourth occasion on which a last call was made for the purpose of completing the celebrated Tay Canal. In 1890, a further vote of $20,000 was asked for, a portion of which it was said to have been a revote. On August 3rd, 1891, the Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, then Minister of Militia, stated, in reply to a question, that the total cost of the canal was $440,613.21. In 1891, a further vote for the Tay Canal of $30,000, was placed in the Estimates, making a fifth call upon the treasury, despite the frequent promise that the last call had been made. It was then stated that the work was in progress from Perth basin to Haggart's mill, and that a new iron swing bridge would be constructed, the estimated cost of extension and bridge being $18,466. This estimate was about as reliable as any of those made hitherto, for I find that when the extension was completed, the cost was computed as follows :—

Paid contractor, as per Auditor
General's Report.....	$31,507 55
Expenses of land inspection, engineer, &c.....	4,905 10
	$36,412 65

Or just about double the estimate for the extension. The Minister of Railways, in 1891, assumed the responsibility for the expenditure on this canal. He said, on the 12th August, 1891 :

As this is a matter which particularly interests me, and which I was the means of inducing the Government to enter into the expenditure for in 1883, perhaps it is necessary that I should make some explanation in regard to it.

I presume the necessity was apparent to some other members besides the Minister of Railways. So he assumes full responsibility, and he is not the man to shirk responsibility. In the same speech, he claimed that the canal had been of great utility to the town of Perth and the country surrounding it. He claimed that 20,000 tons of freight—his language is a little involved; I do not know whether we are to understand him as saying that the 20,000 tons of freight were sent by the canal—but he claimed that, in consequence of the construction of the canal the cost of freight had been reduced to the extent of $1.50 per ton, and the advantage to the town of Perth, in consequence of this reduction, caused by the canal, was over $30,000. At the same time the hon. gentleman was making this statement, or a few days before, replies to questions had been given to the House, which informed the House of the total amount of tonnage upon this canal up to the 30th June of that year, and the amount of revenue. And I think that a very considerable discrepancy will be found to exist between the statement of the hon. gentleman and the return brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. Where does the hon. gentleman find that I said there were 20,000 tons of freight on the canal?

Mr. CHARLTON. I said it was rather involved and difficult to understand whether the hon. gentleman claimed it was carried upon the canal at a less cost, or carried elsewhere at less cost in consequence of the canal having been built.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is leading the House to believe that there is a discrepancy between my statement and the amount of tonnage returns.

Mr. CHARLTON. I believe there is, and will explain why. The hon. gentleman said upon that occasion:

These gentlemen say that there is no benefit derived by the town of Perth from this canal. The fact is that the benefit derived by the town of Perth in regard to the importation and exportation of goods amounts to over $30,000 a year. The freight exported and imported has been 400 tons a week, or 24,000 tons a year, since the construction of that canal.

What did the hon. gentleman mean? Did he mean to mislead the House? Did he intend to convey the impression that the 24,000 tons were conveyed by the canal, and if not, what influence had the canal upon the cost of the transportation of the freight? If the hon. gentleman did not intend to convey the impression that the language here does convey he should have been more explicit. Here is a list showing the traffic of the canal for the period from October 1, 1890, to June 30, 1891:

Steamer 'John Haggart,' 59 tons, 24 trips; steamer 'John Haggart' (rebuilt), 117 tons, 21 trips; steamer 'Harry Bate,' 144 tons, 12 trips; steamer 'Geraldine' and skiff, 15 tons, 7 trips; steamer 'Firefly,' 8 tons, 4 trips; steamer 'Ranger,' 8 tons, 4 trips; scow (no name), 30 tons, 2 trips; skiff (no name), 1 ton, 1 trip.

Now, that is a record of the business done on the Tay Canal from the 1st of October, 1890, to the 30th of June, 1891. The total tonnage, as shown by multiplying the tonnage of each vessel by the number of trips made by each vessel, is 5,831 tons. And the hon. gentleman claims in his speech that the result of the building of the Tay Canal was to reduce the cost for 24,000 tons by the sum of $1.50 per ton. Was it carried on the canal at reduced rates or did the competition of the canal oblige the railways to reduce the rates of freight? If the money expended on the canal was intended for the purpose of controlling freight, it was wholly unnecessary. The hon. gentleman had an easier and a simpler remedy at hand, a remedy which could have been applied without the construction of the Tay Canal, which during this period of time, according to the hon. gentleman, saved the town of Perth $30,000 a year, while it earned for the Government $58,311. His remedy will be found in the Railway Act of 1888. He himself is a member of the Privy Council of this country, and here were the provisions of the Act which would have enabled the Government to control unreasonable freight charges by railway and render it unnecessary to expend half a million dollars in the completion of the Tay Canal:

SEC. 237.—No tolls shall be levied or taken until the by-law fixing such tolls has been approved of by the Governor in Council, nor until after two weekly publications in the 'Canada Gazette' of such by-law and of the Order in Council approving thereof; nor shall any company levy or collect any money for services as a common carrier except subject to the provisions of this Act.

And section 228 provides:

Every by-law fixing and regulating tolls shall be subject to revision by the Governor in Council, from time to time, after approval thereof; and after an Order in Council altering the tolls fixed and regulated by any by-law, has been twice published in the 'Canada Gazette,' the tolls mentioned in such Order in Council shall be substituted for those mentioned in the by-law, so long as the Order in Council remains unrevoked.

Thus we see that the Government could easily have prevented the charging of exorbitant freight rates upon the railways passing through the town of Perth or any other railway in Canada, and I repeat it was not necessary to spend this large sum of money to dig a ditch six miles long. Now, Sir, it is absurd to suppose, even upon the contention the hon. gentleman may raise in regard to this matter, that the Tay Canal had any material influence in regulating railway rates from the town of Perth in either direction. This canal connects with the Rideau Canal, which is 5 feet or 5½ feet deep, and the canal is navigated by one skiff, one scow, two yachts and two tugs. The connection is either with Kingston in one direction or Ottawa in the other. Transshipment becomes necessary at either point. In one direction the canal leads away from the markets of the east, and it is not a direct route in any event, and could not compete with the railway companies. So far as regulating railway rates is concerned, the Tay Canal is powerless to produce any result.

As to what is called the Haggart extension, which was built at a cost of \$36,412, what, I should like to ask, was that made for? Was it made to be navigated by boats? I am told that the only boat that has navigated it since it was completed is Hon. Peter Maclaren's yacht, which has made two trips. Well, it is a valuable franchise for Mr. Maclaren, to be able to take two trips in his yacht at a cost to this country of \$36,412. I am told that before this extension was built there was $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 feet of water at the foot of the mill of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and that the back water came up to the wheels of the mill. I am told that since the extension was built there is no back water. I am told that the hon. gentleman had an 8 foot head of water, and he has a head of $10\frac{1}{2}$ feet now, in consequence of this extension. It may be that he has realized no special advantage from this, but if so it is only because he has not made the necessary changes in his mill. If he will lower his mill wheels $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet, he will get the advantage of the additional head of water in the form of power for his mills. I am told that advantage has been taken of this additional head of water, that a power house has been built to supply electric light to the town of Perth and that but for this extension the power could not have been furnished to the power house. The hon. gentleman's property is said to extend below the mill and along the bank of the canal 600 feet. That property, which was formerly low and swampy, is now filled up level with the street. If this extension has been made for the purpose of benefiting Mr. Maclaren, the return has been very inadequate, because his yacht has been up this extension only twice. If anything whatever has resulted, so far as I can learn, it is the incidental benefit that has accrued to the hon. gentleman in consequence of giving him two and a half feet of water more at his mill, in consequence of taking away the back water and in consequence of filling up the property below the mill along the canal. If that was the object—I do not say it was, I do not suppose it was—but if that is the only benefit from the expenditure of this thirty-six thousand dollars odd, it can hardly be said that the money has been judiciously expended. Now, a question was put by my hon. friend to my right (Sir Richard Cartwright) on the 20th of March of this year, from the answer to which it appeared that up to 1st of January last the total cost of construction of the canal was \$476,128.73. The cost of maintenance for the year 1893 was \$2,486. The total receipts from tolls for the year from the 1st of January, 1893, to the 1st of January, 1894, were \$135.76. Now, Sir, the interest on the investment at 4 per cent was \$19,045.14. Add to this the cost of maintenance, \$2,486, and you have a total of \$21,521.14, against receipts of \$135.76. This makes the cost of maintenance and interest on investment 158 times greater—not 158 per cent greater, but 158 times greater—than the receipts. Is not that a magnificent piece of financiering? Is not that a magnificent investment—an outlay, the interest upon which, with the cost of maintenance, is \$21,531.14, to secure a revenue of \$135.76? The cost of the canal is \$476,128.73; and the cost of maintenance, \$2,481, capitalized at 4 per cent, amounts to \$62,150, so that the cost of the canal, with the capitalized cost of maintenance, amounts to \$538,278.73; and \$135.76 represents a return of interest of $2\frac{34}{100}$ th cents on every \$100, not \$6 or 6 per cent, not \$4 or 4 per cent, but $2\frac{34}{100}$ th cents, or, in other words, less than $\frac{1}{40}$ th of 1 per cent. The celebrated Tay Canal yields to the Government of the Dominion, on its original cost and on the capitalized cost of its maintenance, the magnificent return of $\frac{1}{40}$ th of 1 per cent, or $2\frac{34}{100}$ th cents on every \$100 of investment. Now, great credit is due to the hon. member who is now Minister of Railways and Canals, for it is creditable to him that he has taken upon himself the responsibility, for this thing, as he did in 1891; and I think that he is entitled to all the credit that can be derived from this investment made on the Tay Canal. Another reason assigned by the hon. member nearly as good as any other, was stated by him in the course of his speech:

Mr. CHARLTON.

Afterwards, when money was being distributed through the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and other place, for public works of public utility, I thought that one of the oldest counties in Canada had a claim to some assistance, a county which had contributed as much to the public revenue as any other part of the Dominion, and had never received any return.

So, while the money was being distributed, while millions were being scattered about, the hon. member for South Lanark thought that his riding ought to come in for a share of the spoil, and he secured the expenditure of a round half million dollars in a work that is practically useless, that makes practically no return, and has only served the purpose of expending a few million dollars among his constituents, and lowering the water at Haggart's mill two and a half feet. So far as I can see, these are the principal advantages derived from this work. Now, Mr. Speaker, this Tay Canal is a specimen of the lavish expenditure and the reckless waste of money that has brought the Dominion of Canada financially where it is to-day. We have squandered money, this being a specimen, millions and millions of money, for no practical purpose, and with no adequate results, and the monument is a monstrous debt, a debt of 240 million dollars, with fixed interest charges amounting to nearly 10 million dollars a year, with an enormous cost of management of unproductive works such as the Tay Canal and other canals of a similar character, with the utmost difficulty staring us in the face, of being able to make any material reduction in the public burdens resting upon this country. This is a very serious question, and if no substantial relief can be secured for the people at the present moment, if my hon. friend is unable to reduce his tariff, after all the flourish of trumpets that was made, to any more than the paltry extent to which he has reduced it, and if, in face of the little reduction he has made, he expects to meet a deficit, I say this unsatisfactory condition of public affairs is due very largely to the reckless, lavish and foolish expenditure of money which has been made in so many instances, with one of which I have been dealing with to-day. I, therefore, move that all the words after "That," in the original motion, be struck out, and that the following be substituted in the place thereof:—

The first vote of $50,000 for the construction of the Tay Canal was secured from Parliament in the Session of 1882, upon representation made by Sir Charles Tupper that the work would cost $132,660 exclusive of certain land damages.

That in the Session of 1883, Sir Charles Tupper asked Parliament for a further vote of $75,000 for the Tay Canal, and stated that the lowest tender received for its construction was $186,000, but that certain changes had been made, estimated to cost $55,556, and that the revised estimate of its cost was $240,000.

That in the Session of 1888, Sir Charles Tupper asked Parliament for $78,000 with which to pay off the balance due to contractors on the Tay Canal, the work having been finished, and that he then stated that the total cost of the work would be $358,364.

That the cost of the Tay Canal up to January 1st, 1894, was $476,128.73, or three and a half times greater than the estimated cost in 1882, and lacking but $3,871.27 of being double the revised estimate of cost made in 1883.

That the cost of maintenance of the Tay Canal for the year ending January 1st, 1894, was $2,486.

That the total receipts from tolls for the year ending January 1st, 1894, were $135.76.

That the interest upon the cost of the Tay Canal at the rate of four per cent per annum amounted for the year 1893 to $19,045.14; which together with $2,486 the cost of maintenance for the same year makes the sum of $21,531.14.

That to meet this charge of \$21,531.14 upon the revenues of Canada for interest upon investment and cost of maintenance for the year 1893, the Tay Canal yielded for the same year a revenue of \$135.76; the charge for interest upon investment and for maintenance being 158 times greater than the returns; and the interest yielded upon the cost of the canal, and the cost of maintenance capitalized at four per cent being $2\frac{1}{4}\%$ cents per \$100.00, or less than one-fortieth of one per cent.

That the amount of business transacted upon the Tay Canal is of insignificant proportions when contrasted with the cost and capacity of the work and that the benefits conferred upon the general public by its construction are comparatively trivial and unimportant.

That this House expresses regret that so large a sum as $476,128.73 was expended in a way that no consideration of sound public policy could justify, leaving the country to suffer, not only the loss of annual interest upon the investment; but a considerable annual charge in addition if the nearly useless creation of expenditure is maintained. And that this House is of the opinion that the magnitude of the public debt of Canada is due in no inconsiderable degree to that wasteful and unwarrantable class of expenditures of which the Tay Canal is a type.

Mr. HAGGART. The motion of the hon. gentleman shows clearly to what desperate straits the Opposition, especially the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), are driven to find material for complaint against the present Government. They are obliged to resurrect old material which we thought had been buried in political graveyards a number of years ago, and the hon. gentleman is forced to introduce almost identically the same motion as was introduced by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) in 1891, in order to make a little cheap political capital. At that time I replied fully to the observations made by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), and I may be obliged now to trouble the House by repeating a portion of my speech and some of the arguments which I adduced then in favour of, and in defence of the celebrated, as the hon. gentleman calls it, Tay Canal. The first time that this canal came before the House was in 1882. There was a vote taken for it at that time. In 1883 an item of $75,000 appeared in the Estimates for the purpose of helping forward its construction. There was not a single objection made by any hon. member of the House to the commencement of the scheme or to the expenditure of a sum of money for the purpose of constructing that canal. The only remarks made, and I refer hon. gentlemen to 'Hansard,' were made by the leader of the Opposition of that day, Mr. Blake, who asked if the work was under contract, and what was the extent of the traffic, occupying altogether four lines of 'Hansard.' In 1883 the question came before the House, and I made the statement from which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has quoted, and whose remarks in that connection I will answer after I have gone through the history of the work. In 1884 an item of $100,000 was placed in the Estimates. All the leaders of the Opposition were in the House at the time, and yet there was not a question asked or a comment made on the vote. In 1886 it came up again, there being a vote asked of $100,000 towards its construction. The discussion occupied about three lines of 'Hansard.' There was not one word of opposition to the scheme itself, Sir Richard Cartwright simply asking what the work would cost. In 1887, $55,000 was asked, and a question was put by Sir Richard Cartwright to this effect: How long the canal had been under construction; how much it had cost, and how much it was likely to cost? In 1888 there was an item of $78,000 in the Estimates under this head. The only members taking part in the discussion were Messrs. Jones, of Halifax, Casey, of Elgin, and Sir Richard Cartwright as to the total cost, the names of the contractors, and whether the work had been let by public tender, the whole discussion occupying only ten lines. There was no fault found with the undertaking, and not the slightest objection was made to the expenditure. In 1889 an item of $25,000 appeared in the Estimates. The only question asked in reference to it was by Sir Richard Cartwright, who wanted to know what the total expenditure would be. In 1890 there was an item of $11,000 in the Estimates, and the only observation in regard to it was by Sir Richard Cartwright, who said that it was a useful work, because it drained the county of Perth, and he asked what the annual receipts were. These remarks occupied ten lines. In 1890 there was an item of $20,000 in the Estimates. Sir Richard Cartwright again asked whether that vote would complete the cost of draining the county or not, the remarks occupying five lines of 'Hansard.' These were the only observations made in a series of consecutive years as to the expenditure on the Tay Canal. If it were such an objectionable work, if the amounts expended year by year were in excess of the statements made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, who had charge of the work, why did not hon. gentlemen object at that time? Most of that time I was not Minister of Railways and Canals, but a private member, supporting the Conservative Government. From the bottom of my heart I believed that the Tay Canal would be a work of utility, and be for the benefit of the riding I represent. It was petitioned for by the inhabitants of the county, and I venture to say there is not a single person in the south riding of Lanark but approves of the expenditure, and is grateful for the country for carrying out the work. So strongly interested were the people of the county in the building of the work, that private individuals put their hands in their pockets at first to build the canal, not to such a depth as has since been carried out, but so as to secure a channel three feet deep from the Rideau Canal to Perth. It was an object which the people of the county had always had in view—the extension of that important work, the Rideau Canal, to the town of Perth. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has stated that it is no benefit to Perth or the surrounding country. I stated in my speech in 1891 the reason why I considered it was to the benefit of Perth. I did not state that 30,000 tons of freight were conveyed on the canal, because such a statement could easily have been contradicted by the canals returns submitted during the next six months or year. The words I used were:

The fact is that the benefit derived by the town of Perth in regard to the importation and exportation of goods amounts to over $30,000 a year. The freight exported and imported has been 400 tons of wheat, or 24,000 tons a year since the construction of the canal.

I went on arguing that on account of the construction of the canal, it has so controlled the charges on goods coming to and from the town of Perth and the neighbourhood, that it was a benefit of $30,000 annually. I had the facts very accurately gone into and calculations made at the time by merchants who were in the habit of importing and sending out goods, and they declared to me that they believed that the benefit to the town of Perth alone from the construction of that canal, was equal to at least $30,000 a year. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has entered into an intricate calculation to show how much per cent of 1 per cent the canal has paid to the inhabitants of this country since its construction. Could not he have drawn a comparison between the Perth Canal and the St. Francis Canal, which the friends of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) constructed? Could he not have drawn a parallel between it and every public work constructed from one end of the country to the other? Could not he compare it with every wharf constructed in the Maritime Provinces, or with any canal constructed through the hon. gentleman's own county in western Ontario? The comparison would tell just as much in favour of the Tay Canal as in favour of any of the rest of these public works. The action of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is not for the purpose of drawing attention to the amount of the receipts on the Tay Canal, or for the purpose of finding fault with the expenditure upon that particular work. The efforts of hon. gentlemen opposite are directed to trying to injure me in the country and in my constituency. Before I entered the Ministry I was doing my duty as the representative of the south riding of Lanark, and I never made a statement in favour of getting a grant for that canal the truth of which I did not thoroughly believe in. I believed then, and I believe now, that the construction of that canal has been of immense benefit to the district I represent, financially and otherwise, and that consequently it has been a benefit to all Canada. I believed that the people of that district, and especially of the riding I represent, were as much entitled to a share of public expenditure as were the people of any portion of the Dominion. This is the only expenditure for public works that was ever made in the south riding of Lanark. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has quoted my remarks made in 1890 in a derogatory manner here to-day. I stated in 1890 that the county was an old county: that it had been in existence since 1812, that it had contributed taxes for the building of public works in every part of the Dominion, and especially in western Ontario. All that is very true. At that particular time the revenue of this country was buoyant, there were large surpluses in the treasury, and

I conceived that it was the duty of the representative of that county to secure that, a public work not only of local but of Dominion importance, should receive fair consideration from the Government. These are the facts in reference to the Tay Canal. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) says: that Haggart's extension up to the mills was for the purpose of increasing the water power at these mills. There is no truth whatever in that assertion. The height of the water level or water fall has not been increased one inch by the construction of the canal. If the hon. gentleman wished to know the facts about this matter he could have gone to the Rideau Canal Office and he would there find levels, measurements and plans which would show him the height of water before the canal was completed, and after it was completed. Before he makes attacks of this kind, and before he attributes motives for the construction of a public work, the hon. gentleman should see that he stands on good ground. He should be more careful in making such statements, but the hon. gentleman before this has not been careful in his statements, and he has committed faults before in that respect, and gone a good way in verifying them on oath when they were found afterwards to be untrue. He could very easily have ascertained the facts about this matter and assured himself whether his statements were correct or not. As to this being done at my request, he will find if he looks at the documents in reference to it, that it was on the petition of the inhabitants of the town of Perth that the extension was made. He will find also that the people themselves contributed a large sum towards that extension, and that it was on the advice of the engineer superintending the canal, and on a statement of his reasons why it was necessary that the extension was undertaken. Perhaps this is the last we shall hear in this House of this celebrated work. It has again been brought forward for the purpose of doing service at the next election, and for the purpose of perhaps influencing a vote or two in the contest which hon. gentlemen opposite expect in a short time. But if hon. gentlemen opposite have not better material for a campaign than resurrecting from old graveyards issues that have been passed upon half a dozen or a dozen years ago, they will long remain in the position they occupy at present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, although we have seen a good many cases of profligate expenditures of public moneys, I doubt whether for a very long time the House has been called upon to pass on a more scandalous waste of the resources of the public than the particular case to which my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) has now directed your attention. Apparently, according to the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Railways—and a very convenient doctrine it is—if the Ministers of the Crown, with a great majority at their back, make a series of statements which turn out to be utterly and entirely incorrect, if they allege to us, that particular works are likely to be productive of good; and if under these circumstances—not having any power to control them—we allow themselves and their majority to put through these votes in opposition to our general protest; then, Sir, not the Ministers of the Crown who are responsible to the people of this country and who draw considerable salaries for the purpose of investigating and examining into the propriety of these particular works; not these persons, but the members of the Opposition (according to the hon. gentleman) who have no power whatever to control or prevent these men from carrying out their intentions; are the parties who are to be held responsible because they contented themselves with general protests against the extravagance of the Government. Sir, it is enough to state that position, to convince every man of intelligence or sense in this House how desperate must be the situation of the Minister of Railways and Canals if that is the best defence which he can produce to the indictment of my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton). Now, Sir, I say that with respect to this expenditure there was absolutely no excuse whatever. The condition of the canal of which this is a branch, and with which this communicates, had been well known for many years, and I have been informed that it was at one time in contemplation by the Government that preceded the present Government, whether they would not absolutely shut up the Rideau Canal on the ground of the enormous cost to the public of keeping it up. At this present moment what is the condition of the Rideau Canal? The condition of the Rideau Canal is this, that it yielded an annual revenue last year all told of $5,491, exclusive of hydraulic rents, and entailed a total expenditure of $57,640. And with that example before their eyes, with the knowledge that by the progress of events in this country, by the construction of a very complete railway system, the former utility of the Rideau Canal, the main canal of this system, had been almost completely destroyed, we have these hon. gentlemen, at the instigation of the member for the county, embarking in an expenditure which has ultimately amounted, as my hon. friend has truly stated, to very nearly half a million dollars. Now, I intend to imitate my hon. friend and the hon. gentleman in one respect: I do not want to enlarge too much on this matter, because it is my opinion that the bare recital of the facts—if we can only succeed in bringing them before a sufficient number of the electors—is in itself the very best condemnation that can be imagined, of the intolerable extravagance which actuated the hon. member for South Lanark in demanding and the Government of the day in acceding to the expenditure on this work. Sir, a few weeks ago I myself put the question the hon. gentleman has referred to, and what were the facts as shown to the House? A capital expenditure of very nearly half a million dollars, an annual charge for maintenance at the moment—because it is likely to be supplemented by numerous bills for repairs—of over $2,400, and actual receipts to the extent of $135.60; being, as my hon. friend well and truly said, a cost for each dollar we receive of about $150 a year. Sir, these hon. gentlemen have reversed the doctrine of the husbandman: good husbandmen sow their seed and sometimes reap a hundredfold; these gentlemen plant their dollars by the hundredfold, and they receive one. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has one argument—one argument only—and a very curious argument it is when you come to analyse it. The hon. gentleman does not dare to pretend that there is any traffic either to Perth or from Perth worth the mention on this particular canal. No thanks to him for making that admission at this time of day, because the facts are in his own department, the facts are under our hand, and cannot possibly be disputed. But he tells us that the town of Perth has a trade of 400 tons per week going and coming, and that this canal saves $1.50 per ton, equal to $30,000 a year. Now, Sir, these 400 tons per week are, I presume, for the year's work, and one of the very curious functions of the Tay Canal is that it saves $1.50 per ton, winter or summer, frozen or open. Then, Sir, there is another curious matter. I am not quite as well acquainted with the good town of Perth as the hon. gentleman; but my recollection is—and he can correct me if I am wrong—that it is only about 100 or 110 miles in a due line from Montreal. Now, this 20,000 tons of freight, or the major part of it, I suppose, in the nature of the case, consists of heavy goods as to which we might properly say that their natural point of destination would be tidewater at Montreal; at any rate, that is the point they could most reasonably reach by the Tay and Rideau Canals. Now, a saving of $1.50 per ton on freight carried 110 miles by railway to Montreal, would, if I am not mistaken, fully and completely dump all the produce at Montreal free of cost, and leave a good deal to spare. Of course, the hon. gentleman is an expert; but I think 1½ cents per ton per mile, even on the Canadian Pacific Railway, would be a pretty good rate for heavy freight—and it is only that class of freight that would be carried on the Tay Canal; but, according to the hon. gentleman, it is as cheap to send these goods—which must go either through Ottawa or through Kingston, probably through Kingston, and the same applies pretty much to Ottawa—around three sides of a square rather than by the short cut to Montreal. I do not know on what authority the hon. gentleman has made that statement; but I do not think there is a business man in Canada, looking at the situation of the canal and the situation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and looking at the rates

usually levied on this kind of freight—I do not think there is a business man outside of the town of Perth or outside of South Lanark, who could be found to believe that a saving of 1½ cents per ton per mile could be effected on that 20,000 tons of freight winter and summer. Sir, the hon. gentleman has been good enough—and perhaps it is as well that we should understand where we are—to give us the real reason. The real reason, Sir, was that it was necessary to strengthen the member for that county. The real reason was that the people of the county of Lanark—not perhaps unnaturally, seeing that they were being taxed enormously for expenditures of very little value to them in other parts of the Dominion—clamoured for a share of the pap; and the hon. gentleman, being even then a tolerably influential man, being to a certain extent a kicker, a man whom it was desirable to propitiate—being a man who knew too much, as some of his colleagues subsequently discovered—had sufficient influence with the Government to compel them, for his benefit and for the benefit of his county—which was to that extent for his benefit, to expend half a million dollars to make everything solid in South Lanark, and to gerrymander it, if I am not mistaken, to boot. And, Sir, he did not hurry the work. The hon. gentleman is an old parliamentary hand—he understands these things. He took care apparently to see that this thing should do duty in three elections. The first vote was got a little before 1882, and it was very useful then, though the gerrymander was more useful. The next vote, or the next two votes, came in good time for 1887; and the hon. gentleman was not forgetful even of 1890. Now, being a Minister of the Crown, I do not suppose he requires so much of these little fixings as he did before; but he has undoubtedly erected a fine monument to himself. But, with the exception of the mode in which he and his colleagues manipulated a more notorious work, that is, the Trent Canal, I am not sure that any grants, administered to make things satisfactory in one particular county, have been more effective than the hon. gentleman's vote for the Tay Canal. Now, I venture to say that when the people of Canada come to understand that we have spent half a million dollars of capital, and are subject to an annual charge for maintenance of $2,400, and an annual charge for interest of $21,500, for which we receive a revenue of $135.76 a year, I think that, however the good people of South Lanark may exult in their member, a good many other not equally favoured constituencies—perhaps in the Maritime Provinces more particularly, where works for the improvement of harbours and so forth are really necessary to the life, as well as property of the people—will come to think that the hon. gentleman, in his private capacity at any rate, was a rather expensive luxury. The truth is that this is a worse job even than the Curran bridge, on which a commission recently reported to this honourable House. On that we have lost over $200,000; but at least we have got a work of some utility in exchange, whereas, here we have spent half a million dollars, and the result is worse than worthless, because it entails a permanent and considerable charge on the people without any return. Now this is, to a considerable extent, as my hon. friend truly said, a typical illustration of the way in which our debt has been run up, and of the extremely small benefit that has accrued to the people. You have in this one instance nearly every item which goes to make a mischievous job. You have, first, a most glaring miscalculation. Instead of telling us, as was the duty of the department, that this would probably cost half a million dollars, we were told that $132,000, and some small claim for land damages, would see us through. I will pass over the suspicion which most undoubtedly does attach, in every case, to extensions such as those that are known as the Haggart extension, or whatever it is called. It is unfortunate, whether or no any particular benefit results to the hon. gentleman's mill, that a very considerable sum of public money should be spent for a purpose which appears, at any rate, to benefit his individual property. We have lately a very large outlay indeed, because I am not one of those who regard half a million dollars quite as lightly as the hon. gentleman and his friends seem to do. I am inclined to think that a great many good things could be done in this Dominion for that sum. There are a great many valuable harbours and other public works, real boons to the people, which could have been obtained by the expenditure of this amount judiciously and properly, and I may say in conclusion that, so far as I can see, the hon. gentleman, first and last, has wholly failed to bring forward a single sound argument to justify the expenditure of this money or the construction of this work, other than the one I have given, that it was for the purpose of making him safe, for a very considerable period of time, in the county he represents.

Mr. SPROULE. The reasons the Minister of Railways and Canals has given do not, in the estimation of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, justify the expenditure of such a large amount, and he comes to the conclusion that it was a great mistake. If so, it is to be regretted that all political parties in this country seem to be liable to fall into similar error. If it was a mistake, as it may be—and I am not prepared to admit that it was—it is not the first that has been made by a political party in Canada in the construction of canals. I have in my hand, the memorandum of a very important canal that was started in the district of Thunder Bay, where the celebrated Port Francis locks were built, and I understand that the estimate of the cost of that public work was very much below what it would likely have cost had it ever been finished. It was commenced in 1875 for the purpose of carrying out the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway by uniting Port Francis River, Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods. It was begun by the hon. gentleman and his friends, without even a survey of the work having been made, without asking authority of the House to let this work by contract, and without letting the work by contract. It was given to the political friends of gentlemen opposite, who were to go on and build this important work by day labour, and after considerable expenditure the work had to be stopped. The cost was estimated at $250,000. In 1875, when Mr. Mackenzie determined to take the Canadian Pacific Railway by the northern route, he abandoned this work, and telegraphed to the contractor to stop proceedings. At this time $73,940 had been spent, and spent to no purpose. In 1876 the Public Works Department instructed Mr. Sutherland, who was then in charge, to resume the work, and an additional $176,000 was afterwards spent on it. The work was stopped again, and since that nothing has been done, and at present I understand it is filled up with sawdust and other debris. Up to that time we had expended on the work $250,000, and it is standing there to-day as one of the monuments of the incapacity of hon. gentlemen opposite. That political parties are likely to make mistakes, no better evidence can exist than this work, which I am sure the hon. gentleman will not attempt to defend. And if this Tay Canal be a mistake, as is claimed—which I do not believe—surely it is no greater than the one made by hon. gentlemen opposite when in power.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say a few words in reply to the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. He has discussed the expenditure of money on canals in the western section of this province. In that case the Government did not come down from year to year, and keep on asking additional votes and sink the money in a public work which is perfectly useless.

Mr. SPROULE. The difference is that they spent it without a vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman has not followed the example of the Minister of Railways. The Minister of Railways urged upon the Government that because his constituency was an old one, and had contributed considerably in the way of taxes to the general fund, it was entitled to an expenditure, and that a certain amount of money should be expended there. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has not taken the cue, because he has had no expenditure of public money in his constituency, although he has been in this House just about as long as the Minister of Railways. The Minister of Railways, in reading over the remarks on this Tay Canal, quoted the remark of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), but did not quote what followed. I will quote the passage in full :

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT said: This, I understand, is a really useful work which drains the county of Perth.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD. It drains the public treasury pretty well.

The hon. gentleman did not give us that remark of Sir John Macdonald. Unquestionably the county of Lanark has reaped the advantage. And I suppose the canal has now subsided into a muddy ditch. There has been many a muddy transaction with which the Minister of Railways has been connected as well as the Tay Canal matter. We have had many dark transactions in all parts of this Dominion—railways that, in many cases, are not giving any return, so far as the country is concerned. We know well that in the case of the Oxford and New Glasgow road, which passes through the counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou, these counties were represented by Cabinet Ministers at the time, who unquestionably took the same course as the hon. Minister of Railways. I suppose they concluded that their counties were entitled to some consideration too. Sir Charles Tupper represented Cumberland, Mr. McLelan represented the county of Colchester, and the hon. Minister of Marine (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) represents Pictou. They constructed a double line of the Intercolonial Railway, branching off at Oxford and running to New Glasgow, and spent $1,800,000 on the construction of that road.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask you whether the hon. gentleman is obliged to confine himself to the question under discussion or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. In discussing an amendment to a motion for Committee of Supply, the latitude allowed is very wide. Hon. gentlemen may discuss almost anything they please.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is only about two thousand miles away from the subject now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is by way of illustration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was trying to draw the attention of the House to works of a similar character as the Tay Canal on which the money of this Dominion had been absolutely squandered. Such works are scattered all over the Dominion. As I am reminded by one of my hon. friends, the Chignecto Marine Railway is one of them.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman state how much of the public money was wasted on the Chignecto Railway?

Mr. McMULLEN. The public credit is pledged for the construction, and we shall see the public treasury drawn on for a number of years in order to pay for a foolish and insane undertaking that not a single seaman in Canada has the slightest confidence in.

Mr. FOSTER. The Dominion Government is not pledged to a cent.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have a great many such works as I have described that have been constructed at the expense of the Dominion, and this Tay Canal is one of them. For years, the efforts of hon. gentlemen have been directed, each one, to secure something for his own constituency. It does not appear to matter very much whether the work is needed or not, so long as the money is spent. It may be a canal or railway, or, if nothing else can be thought of, a post office will do. We hope that the end of this kind of thing has been reached, but, in order to draw the public attention to this extravagance and to keep the people informed of what is going on, it is the duty of the Opposition to criticise these expenditures closely. The Minister of Railways has drawn the attention of the Opposition to the fact that very little criticism took place on this expenditure when it was first proposed to the House. He took the opportunity in the Public Accounts Committee this year to say that in the Hard Pan cases very little criticism had been engaged in, and very few questions had been asked when the work was undertaken. It is to be hoped that under these rebukes which the hon. gentleman has administered to the Opposition, they will endeavour to perform their duties by thoroughly and minutely criticising every expenditure proposed by the Government. We of the Opposition have a duty to perform, and perhaps we have been lax in the performance of that duty. But hon. gentlemen have thrown out their challenge. They have thrown the responsibility upon us for these extravagances because we have not thoroughly criticised these expenditures. Hereafter we shall endeavour to discharge our duties. We want the Government to understand that when they bring down items of expenditure and ask quietly that they be allowed to pass, we are bound to see the top and bottom of every item before the House decides, and I hope this rebuke which the hon. gentleman has given the Opposition will be sufficient, and that hereafter they will so discharge their duty as to make such rebuke impossible.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Charlton :

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) has not voted.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Barnard).

Amendment negatived, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, allow me a moment to give an explanation which I promised to the committee. First, with regard to an item in Senate contingencies. Two sums were paid, $100 each for expenses of managing the restaurant in the Senate. It appears that in the session of 1892, $100 was placed at the disposal of the committee appointed to assist the Speaker in the management of the restaurant, to pay for necessary assistance and supervision. This is shown by the second report of the Contingencies Committee, dated 9th July, 1892. In the session of 1893, $100 was voted by the Senate for the same purpose—second report of the Contingent Committee, dated 22nd of March, 1893. These amounts were both paid under the vote for 1892-93, in consequence of the session of 1892 extending beyond the 30th of June. Nothing has been paid for the service for the year 1893-94. It seems that the amount is generally paid for the services of some person appointed to supervise and take care of the table furniture of the restaurant. I promised, also, to give the evidence and judgment in the case of Gibson vs. the Queen. I have not obtained the evidence—that is the shorthand writer's transcript of the evidence—because I learned that the cost would be $60 or $70. But the judge has been good enough to send me a copy of the notes he took in the trial, and as these notes were pretty full, I presume they will suffice.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose the hon. gentleman will lay the papers on the Table?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. I find that we were mistaken in discussing the amount of the judgment. The amount awarded for the expropriation was $19,068, with interest at 6 per cent from the 21st January, 1888. An observation is made by the judge in sending me his notes and evidence which I think I might properly read, although it was not actually intended for the committee. The judge says :

I also add a word or two on the evidence to show the view I took of it. In doing this, I must disclaim any intention to do more than to put you in possession, without delay, of the information asked for in the House. Although the amount of money involved is considerable, the issue was a simple one—the value, in 1888, per square foot of the 9,534 feet of land at Lévis taken from the suppliant.

The opinion, evidenced for the suppliant, put the value per square foot at from $3 to $3.50. Such evidence is, of course, always to be taken with the reserve that it probably represents the views of those of the suppliant's friends and neighbours who place the highest value on the land taken, though in this case, as you will see, there were some support for their views in actual transactions that had taken place. The opinion, evidence of witnesses called for the Crown, placed the value of the lands in question at $1 to $1.25 per square foot. They were cross-examined, to show that they had been called in all or most of the cases the Crown has had at Lévis, and that they were paid some $10 per day for their services as valuers and witnesses. That circumstance has, by one or more judges before whom some of these cases have come, been adversely commented upon ; but I only mention it to add what I have said more than once from the Bench, that it is not in my view a circumstance which, of itself, should detract from the weight of their evidence. The question always is, it seems to me, has the Government selected as valuers men who are competent, fair and impartial, and is the compensation paid to them not more than what is reasonable? We all know that with a view to discredit a witness, he is sometimes asked if he has come to court without being subpoenaed, and paid his witness fees. And if valuers should give their services gratuitously, they would be open to the same reflection, whatever it amounts to. But actual transactions, where we have proof of them, are, it always seems to me, a better ground in these cases than opinion evidence.

Within a year or so of the expropriation of the lands in question, Paradis, Gibson's brother-in-law, bought them at public auction for $1 per square foot. While he held them he had a business offer of $2 per square foot for about two-thirds of the lot, which offer he refused, as he did not wish to sell part only. Then he sold to Gibson at $1.50 per square foot because he was in need of money. The relationship of the parties at once suggested the question as to whether or not the sale was an actual one made in good faith. It was proved that it was. Gibson bought on speculation and paid cash. Then there was the evidence of the purchases made by Hamel of adjoining lands. Hamel bought for the Crown, but his agency was not at that time disclosed. He may have paid too much in some instances. I cannot say as to that. But whether he did or not, the purchases constitute actual transactions, the force of which must be felt in every case until, in the course of time, there are other transactions to show what men will give and take for lands near the station at Lévis. Making allowance for buildings, Hamel paid from $2 to $4 per foot for adjoining land. In one case, for part of a street, $1.25 was paid, but that affords no test, for probably the street could have been taken from the corporation without compensation. The rule is that it is the value to the owner that is to be found, and generally speaking, a piece of a street has no commercial value to the city or town that owns it.

You will see that the actual transactions, in a general way, and especially the Hamel transactions, supported the claimant's evidence rather than that given for the Crown. There is nothing in the case to suggest, and I know of nothing outside of the case to suggest that the $2 per foot that was allowed for the lands taken (the balance was interest to which the claimant was entitled) represented anything but a rather close market value for the lands in the year 1888.

These concluding observations, I think, are very important :

The case is strongly in contrast with earlier cases, in two particulars. First, the lands were in the centre of the business part of the town, and not beach lots, or shore front, or lands covered by the water of the harbour. Secondly, the lands were not taken as part of the original expropriation, but in 1888, after additional value had been given thereto by the erection of the station and other buildings, of which additional value the owner was entitled to the benefit.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. What is the Christian name of that Mr. Hamel ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Was the interest 6 per cent to the date of the judgment?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. The law about expropriations is that 6 per cent is allowed from the time the property is actually taken until judgment, and 4 per cent after judgment. Interest was allowed 6 per cent from 1888.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I think in the Sançon case, interest was given at 6 per cent until 1889, and after that, 4 per cent. We protested against it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think the Sançon case went to court ; it was settled out of court.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. No, judgment was given.

Archives $6,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The House will be glad to know how that money is to be expended, what archives are being copied ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a part of the general system of archive work which has been going on for a number of years. The vote, as my hon. friend will see, is the same as last year, and this work of collecting archives and statistics has been going on since 1872, in pursuance of the policy of getting copies of documents of historical interest from archives in England and in France which had not been, up to the time of their being copied, available on this continent. The papers contain copies of a great many collections, especially the Bouquet collection, comprising thirty volumes of manuscript, embracing the years 1757 to 1765 inclusive; the Haldimand collection, comprising 132 volumes, and containing the documentary history of the years 1758 to 1787 inclusive. The office has also in process of being completed, 364 volumes from the state papers of the Colonial Record Office in London, containing correspondence between the English authorities and the Governors and other official personages in Canada from 1760 to 1831. Important documentary evidence is also being collected relating to military operations during the occupation of Canada by the English troops from 1760 to 1767. Important French correspondence relating to the early history of Canada is now being copied in Paris. In England, Mr. Brymner has made the collections, and in France the selections have been made by Mr. Marmette, assistant archivist.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How many volumes yearly are being collected? We are voting a certain sum of money, and I suppose very little is spent on research, but most of the expenditure is for actual copying.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole of the expenditure is for copying. I suppose a part of this expenditure will be for Mr. Brymner.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the number of manuscript volumes that are being added yearly to the collection?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the information here as to the number of volumes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Because we would be able in that way to see just about what progress we are making.

Mr. FOSTER. I will get that information.

Mr. CASEY. Has a report this year been made yet?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Patent Record..... $9,250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why should an increased amount of $1,250 be required? I have been under the impression that a sum that was sufficient in 1893 would be sufficient in 1894-95.

Mr. FOSTER. This sum is entirely a printing bill, and the increase of $1,250 over the vote for the previous year is on account of the number of patents issued during the year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the actual expenditure for 1893?

Mr. FOSTER. The average during last year was $770 per month, so that the last vote was not quite sufficient.

Collection and compilation of Criminal Statistics..... $1,800

Mr. FOSTER. This is the usual vote, and the amount is paid according to law to those who collect and return the statistics.

Printing Year-book and Statistical Report $3,200

Mr. McMULLEN. What progress has been made with the 'Year-book,' and when will it be distributed?

Mr. FOSTER. The 'Year-book' is not issued quite as quickly as some of the other books, for it is in part a compilation of the information gleaned from the departmental reports. It is generally published in July.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister will remember that the 'Year-book' was subjected to considerable criticism last year from this side of the House, owing to comments indulged in by the statistician in the preparation and compilation of the volume. I think that as a result of the criticism indulged in last year all comments of a party character should be avoided in this year's volume. Unquestionably the volume last year pointed very strongly in the direction of showing the benefits of protection, and efforts were made to explain away many of the drawbacks and losses to which the country had been subjected owing to the National Policy. I should like to know whether similar comments are to be continued, or whether the criticism evoked last year will be the means of terminating any attempt in the future to indulge in similar criticisms.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that after all the comments made in so large a book stood the test of criticism very well. I do not consider there is anything from a party point of view thrust into the book. There may be some criticisms on one or two points, but the book is devoted principally to statistics. What the book will contain I do not know, not having seen an advance copy, if an advance copy can be seen. I am sure the object is not to make it a partisan book, but a statement of facts, a book which is a statistical record, including, of course, comments by the statistician on the statistics.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is precisely what is objected to. It is that comments are made by the statistician, who is in the public employ, on recorded facts, and these comments have very little value, as they are prepared to meet the views of the higher officers of the Government, on whom the statistician depends. It was pointed out last year that there was steadily before the eye of the statistician a desire to stand well with the powers that be. There can be no one thing which more thoroughly discredits any statistical work than the introduction of such comments as those to which the hon. gentleman has referred, they having very evidently a party bias. I observe as a reward apparently for what he did then, a considerably larger vote is to be given; $2,000 was sufficient last year, $3,200 is asked this year.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not a reward to the statistician. To the hon. member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who is thoroughly familiar with statistics, comments are not necessary, but to a majority of people they are necessary as assisting them in understanding statistics, which is more easily done by grouping cognate facts, making comparisons and the like. It would be a very dry book indeed if it consisted simply of rows of figures.

Mr. LAURIER. Statistics are meant to be dry.

Mr. FOSTER. It is always an effort of genius to make them luminous and interesting, and that is what Mr. Johnson is attempting to do. Last year the vote was not quite sufficient for the purpose of printing the edition of 2,900, 400 being in French.

Mr. PERRY. Some of the figures contained in the 'Year-book' are no more to be depended on than are the census returns of 1891. The Government must be hard pressed when they seek to appropriate money to publish statistics in the 'Year-book' which have simply the effect of misleading the people. It is a wrong and an outrage to impose such an outlay on the people, and the people will resent it. The 'Year-book' issued last year preached protection. A large number of copies were issued, and I was indignant when I saw the book. Do hon. gentlemen suppose I could put it in the hands of my electors? No, certainly not. It was an instrument to cut my own throat, and I would like to see the throats of the Government cut first. The Government have no right to propose the payment of money for such a purpose, because such a book is misleading to the country, and the figures it contains cannot be depended on, if we may judge from the census. The census returns show 173 boot and shoe factories in Prince Edward Island, where we have scarcely more than one. How, then, can we depend on the 'Year-book' as a correct public record; and yet we are asked to vote $1,300 additional as compared with last year. Who are going to get the money? No doubt pets of the Government are going to be employed; I am sure that no poor Liberal will get any share of it; and, therefore, I cannot give my vote for such an appropriation.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I do not wish to oppose this vote, but I desire to direct the attention of hon. members to some facts of a like nature to those stated by the hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Perry). Last year I was sufficiently curious to endeavour to ascertain how many manufactories we had in the province of Quebec, and also in the section from which I come. I inquired how many there were in my own village of Arthabaskaville, and I was very much surprised to find that there were forty-two in that village, with a population of a little over 1,000. I next ascertained the number of hands employed in those forty-two manufactories, and I found the total number was ninety. Going into details of that, I find that there are five boot and shoe manufactories in the village of Arthabaskaville, and there are actually five hands employed in these five manufactories. Now that appears to me as something rather amusing. I find also that we have eleven industries of dress-making, and the number of hands employed in these industries is only twenty-one. Very curious also is the fact that there is one Mrs. Marie Terroux, who is fortunate enough to be at the head of two industries, a knitting establishment and a dressmaking establishment. She is so entered in the census and she has two hands for two industries; presumably her left hand and her right. She is the only person employed in these two industries, and yet they are entered as two separate industries in the village of Arthabaskaville. There is a brick manufactory in that village, which I happen to know something about. It is stated in the census that this industry employed eight hands. That is the case during one year in a period of fifteen years. The brick-yard employs eight hands about every fifteen or twenty years, but yet it is entered in the census as being a permanent industry engaging that many. I think that this mode of making up the census is really a shame. It is not only useless, but is misleading and deceiving the public, and in my opinion no public money should be voted for such a procedure. I will not trouble the House with giving further details of this, but it is the same thing with other industries, said to exist in Arthabaskaville. With regard to other villages in the county, the same misleading statistics are given. In the village of Warwick, in the county of Arthabaska, the number of manufactories set down in the census is twenty-six, and the number of hands employed sixty-nine, the whole population of the village being 850. It is very satisfactory to know that there are a good many industries in the county of Arthabaska, but when we come to analyse the truth of the statement it is very disappointing. For instance, we are said to have six bakeries in the village, and in these six bakeries there are five men employed. In the town of Victoriaville there are forty-nine industries, employing 175 hands, the whole population being 1,300. The industry which employs most is a saw-mill which during a certain season employs sixty. The result of the census shows that there is not one single new industry in the county and that there has been no progress of any kind whatever. The hands employed are the ordinary mechanics that are to be found in any village. It is worse than wasting money to spend it for such statistics as these, because it is only deceiving the people. It makes one inclined to think that instructions were given to the enumerators to make out the returns in this way for the purpose of getting up an argument in favour of protection and the results of the National Policy. But really when we come to probe to the bottom of these figures, we find that they are all rubbish.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. In regard to my own county, the very same thing happened in the census returns as has been stated by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lavergne). The scrutineer there is a notary, and a very intelligent man, and he told me that the officer in charge of the census in that district instructed the enumerators to put in the census as many factories as they could find, and in order to make a good show for the province of Quebec, to include as a factory, every blacksmith, shoemaker, and any other artisan. This gentleman, although a political opponent of mine, is a fair-minded man to me. I took the census and I asked him: How can you put down that there are thirty-eight factories in the town of Montmagny when you know it is not true? He said he was quite astonished himself, but that Dr. Fortin, who was superintendent of the census, called the enumerators together in the court-house and gave them special instructions to enter as a factory, a blacksmith, a shoemaker, or any other artisan. More than that. In the parish of St. Paul, the Tory leader told the people at the church door, not to be afraid to give every detail asked by the officers of the Government and to enter upon these reports everything possible to show that the country was prosperous, because it would be beneficial to the Tory party and to the Government. The Tory leader stated that at the church door on Sunday and he was one of the men charged with taking the census in that parish. I do not say that the Government informed their officers to do that, but I do say it shows how the census was taken. As my hon. friend from Arthabaska (Mr. Lavergne) says: it is unfair, and misleading to the country at large.

Mr. BORDEN. One is at a loss to understand what motive the gentleman who has been at the head of collecting these statistics had in inducing those under him to make these extraordinary returns; because I cannot imagine that such returns would have been made unless they had been prompted from the gentleman who is in charge of this branch of the public service. They are so absurd as to betray their absurdity on the face of them and consequently to result in the very opposite to what the gentleman must have had in view.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me interrupt the hon. gentleman for a moment. We are not on the census vote at all. All this discussion refers to the statistics, and not one of them refers to the statistics placed in the Year-book.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I may correct the hon. Minister, he will find that the last Year-book that was published very fully refers to the census, and he will find claims made that the National Policy had been largely instrumental in increasing the number of manufactories, and I have very little doubt that this will continue to be repeated. I have equally little doubt that in the next Year-book which is to be published, we will not find that the statistician will call attention to the facts which were mentioned this afternoon, and which ought to be done if he is desirous of giving an honest impression as to the facts.

Mr. BORDEN. The line I was taking when I was interrupted was precisely in the direction of that which has been taken by my hon. friends (Mr. Lavergne and Mr. Choquette) with reference to the number of alleged manufacturing establishments in different parts of this Dominion as set down in the last census, and as found also in the Year-book published by the statistician, for which this vote is to be taken. In the town of Kentville, according to the census, the increase in the number of manufacturing establishments between the years 1881 and 1891 was seventy-two. I was interested in following this matter up in order to find how much money was invested in these different industries, to discover how many people were employed in these manufactories, how much wages was paid, the cost of material, and the value of factory products in each individual case, and I have prepared in detail the results of this. I find that the increase in the number of establishments between the years 1881 and 1891, is seventy-two, as I have said, but I find that the increase in the capital invested was $5,054 for these whole seventy-two establishments, or for each new establishment an average of $70.20. I find that the number of hands employed in 1881, was 116, and in 1891, 240; and that the total increase for these seventy-two establishments was 124 hands, or that for each new establishment 1.72 new hands were employed. I find that the wages paid in 1881, was $36,918, and in 1891, $66,226, or an increase of $29,308 for the whole seventy-two establishments. For each new establishment, $407, and for each employee, on an average, $236.62 per year. I find that the cost of material in 1881 was $37,830, and in 1891, $45,126, an increase of $7,296 for the whole of these seventy-two establishments, or for each new establishment, $101.

Mr. FOSTER. The raw material is probably a great deal cheaper now.

Mr. BORDEN. The value of the products in 1881 was $84,000, and in 1891, $171,250, an increase of $87,160, or for each new establishment, $1,210.55. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me to be only necessary to read over these figures to find an answer to the pretense that seventy-two new manufacturing establishments have been created in the town of Kentville between the years 1881 and 1891. The fact is, there has not been one single new manufacturing establishment started in that town during these ten years. In 1881 there were probably not more than three there—a sawmill, an iron foundry, and a small factory, which manufactured doors and sashes. That was the whole extent of the manufacturing establishments in that town, and yet we are solemnly told that there have been seventy-two new industrial establishments started in the town of Kentville in those ten years. While on this subject, I think I may be permitted to carry the matter a little further, in order to show that not only the statistics given in reference to manufacturing establishments are absolutely unworthy of respect, but that the census enumeration itself is not entitled to the respect to which we had supposed it was entitled. Assuming the enumeration to be absolutely correct, we have the unpleasant fact confronting us that the population of this country has scarcely grown any within the last ten years; that so far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, their population has not increased at all; that in the provinces of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick it has remained stationary; that in the province of Nova Scotia it has only increased 10,000; and that in several of the counties of that province there has been an actual decline of population, which was the case in the county of King's, which I represent. According to the census returns, the population of that county was 1,000 less in 1891 than in 1881. Now, it happened that a gentleman in my county had some doubts whether the figures returned by the census as the population of that county in 1891 were correct. He was satisfied that gross misstatements had been made in certain sections of the county, and he took the trouble to investigate the matter by going around and calling upon a number of families and ascertaining who had been enumerated, and whether the persons returned as being then residents of those localities were really so, or had emigrated. Now, I have here the result, or a portion of the result, of that gentleman's investigations. I have a list of some fifty names, as to which I was asked to ascertain whether they were on the list returned by the enumerators for King's County or not. About a year and a half ago I saw the census commissioner here with reference to those names, and asked to be allowed to see the lists. He said he could not show me the list unless I took an oath that I would not divulge anything I there saw. I said that would not meet my purpose. He said: "If you will give me a list of the names, I will ascertain whether they are on the list or not." I gave him the list of names which I have here, and in reply I received from him a letter, dated 8th June, 1892, to this effect:

Mr. BORDEN.

We find all the names you gave me excepting Henry A. Palmer in Medford, and Mrs. Peter Weaver, Blomidon. There are lots of Weavers, but not 'Peter.' She may be down under her own christian name.

GEORGE JOHNSON.

So that out of the fifty names or thereabouts which I submitted, it turned out, according to the evidence of the commissioner himself, that forty-eight were on the list. Now, I will submit a statement, showing where these people are who were returned by the census enumerators in 1891 as residents of King's County at that time. I have here a number of affidavits, which the gentleman to whom I have already referred, Mr. Samuel G. Kerr, obtained with reference to these names. I shall not now trouble the House by reading them, but I think the question is of sufficient importance to justify me in devoting at least a few moments to its discussion, because if the same kind of thing has been carried on generally throughout the Dominion the census returns are utterly worthless. I do not say that it has been confined to the last census. It may have been carried on under former censuses, and if so it is absolutely necessary that the Government and the country should understand it, and that measures should be taken before another census is taken to prevent any such fraudulent returns being made in the future. In the first place, I find a family of six people of the name of Morris, returned as residents of the Dominion of Canada, in the county of King's, who have been absent in the United States, one for six years, another for nine years, another for two years, another for four years, another for four years, and another for two years. The next is a family of five, who have been absent respectively one and a half years, seventeen years, seven years, nine years, and five years—absolutely residing in the United States, and never coming home except for a short visit of one or two weeks in a year, and some not coming back for years. The next is a family of six, living in the United States. One absent ten years, married and settled in Washburne, Maine. Another absent ten years, married and settled in Lubeck. Another absent four years, married and settled in Boston, Massachusetts. Another absent three years, married, living in Acton, Massachusetts. Another absent seven years, married, settled in Ashmount, Massachusetts. Another absent four years, married and settled in Brockton, Massachusetts; of these, four are women, and two men. The next is a family of four, of which the first is a woman, absent twenty-two years, resident of the United States. The next, absent seventeen years, a resident of the United States. The next, absent eleven years residing in the United States, and the last, seven years, and resident in the United States. The next is a family of five. The first one, absent twelve years,

And the names of all these seven children, according to the letter of the census commissioner, were included in the last census of the county of King's.

I beg to state that the enumerator after taking the census of myself and widowed sister, inquired the age of my eldest daughter. I asked him why he wished to know of her, as she had been absent in Stoneham, Mass., for years, the residence of herself and family. He had no right to take her in his census. He informed me that it made no difference about residence; he wished her age, and I gave it to him. He then asked the age of my second daughter. I furnished him it, but continued to protest that he had no right to use her name in his census papers, as she was married to a Mr. Henderson, in Carleton County, N.B.; had been absent seven years. He next inquired the ages of my two sons. I stated they had been absent six years; their uncle in Fredericton, N.B., had taken them to care for, they were then attending the St. Martin's Academy: but he insisted on their ages, even to the fourth and last child, and continued to write during the entire time of the taking place of the dialogue given above. Under the circumstances I protested against giving the ages of each of my four children, as I know not one would ever return to live in this place; and told him so, and I considered the whole thing wrong. When it was concluded that I had to furnish all the children's ages, I furnished him a book in which the family record was kept, out of which he read the last part of my family's ages.

I, Margaret Randolph, do solemnly declare that the foregoing state is correct in all particulars, and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously knowing the same to be true, and by virtue of the "Act respecting extra-judicial oaths."

E. M. BECKWITH, J.P.

The names of the persons also, according to the letter I have read from the census commissioner, were included in the list of names enumerated in King's County, N.S.

I hereby certify that my children whose names I give in this document left their native province at the time hereafter mentioned in this paper, and have since permanently resided in the United States of America. The names of my absent children are:

Elizabeth, 36 years of age, absent 14 years, married, resides Hyde Park, Mass.; Wesley, 33 years of age, absent 10 years, resides Boston, Mass.; Gideon, 30 years of age, absent 4 years, resides Montana; Noble, 26 years of age, absent 8 years, resides Boston, Mass.; Agnes, 22 years of age, absent 4 years, resides Hyde Park.

And perhaps not one of them will ever return to reside in the Dominion of Canada.

And I do solemnly declare that the foregoing statement is true and correct in every particular, and I make this solemn declaration knowing the same to be true, and by virtue of an "Act respecting extra-judicial oaths."

Mrs. THOMAS McBRIDE.

Signed and sworn to before me this twenty-second day of June, A.D. 1892, at Canning, N.S.

D. M. DICKIE, J.P.

I hereby certify that my children whose names are given in this document left their native province at the time hereafter mentioned in this paper, and have since permanently resided in the United States of America. The names of my absent children are: William, 35 years of age, absent 1½ years, Boston, Mass.; James, 33 years of age, absent 17 years, Boston, Mass.; John, 29 years of age, absent 7 years, Boston, Mass.; Patrick, 27 years of age, absent 9 years, Hyde Park; Bessie, 25 years of age, absent 5 years, Hyde Park; Richard, 18 years of age, absent 2 months, Hyde Park.

As far as I know not one of those mentioned above ever expects to return to live in the Dominion of Canada.

And I do solemnly declare that the foregoing statement is true and correct in all particulars, and I make this solemn declaration knowing the same to be true, and by virtue of an "Act respecting extra-judicial oaths."

JOHN AHERN.

D. M. DICKIE, J.P.

I hereby certify that my children whose names I give in this document left their native province at the time hereafter mentioned, and have since permanently resided in the United States.

The names of my absent children are: Stanley, thirty years of age, absent in the United States six years; Theresa, twenty-eight years of age, absent in the United States nine years; Harriet, twenty-five years of age, absent in the United States two years; John, twenty-three years of age, absent in the United States four years; Emily, twenty years of age, absent in the United States four years; Arthur, eighteen years of age, absent in the United States two years.

And as far as I know, not one of those mentioned above ever expect to return to live in the Dominion of Canada.

And I do solemnly declare that the foregoing statement is true and correct in every particular, and I make this solemn declaration knowing the same to be true, and by virtue of an "Act respecting extra-judicial oaths."

Declared to before me this twenty-third day of June, 1892, at Canning, county of King's, and province of Nova Scotia.

D. M. DICKIE, J.P.

I, Abigail M. Eaton, wife of Abraham Eaton, of Medford, King's County, Nova Scotia, here assert that my daughters Naomi, now thirty-six years of age, left this province twenty-two years ago, married; Malinda C., thirty years of age, left this province seventeen years ago, married; son, Clark H. I., twenty-five years of age, left this province eleven years ago, married; Phedora M., twenty years of age, left this province seven years ago, single. The four children mentioned above, three of whom have been married for years, all reside in the State of Massachusetts, and there is not the least likelihood of them ever returning to this province again to live. My two married daughters have American citizens for husbands, and my son Clark has taken out American naturalization papers.

I solemnly declare that the above statement is correct in all particulars, and make this solemn declaration conscientiously knowing the same to be true, and by virtue of the "Act respecting extra judicial oaths."

Declared before me this twenty-first day of March, in the year of our Lord 1892.

MRS. ABIGAIL EATON.

Medford, King's County, N. S.

I, John Strong, here assert that my son, John Everett, thirty-two years old, left here six years ago last January, has continuously since that time resided in the United States, has never returned even on a visit, married and has a family in California; my next son absent, Renel Williams, thirty years of age, settled in Pomona, California, absent seven years; Sadie, absent, living in Cambridgeport, Mass., six years married.

I do solemnly declare that the above, statement is correct in all particulars, and make this solemn declaration conscientiously knowing the same to be true, and by virtue of the "Act respecting extra-judicial oaths."

JOHN B. STRONG.

Declared before me this twenty-second day of March, 1892.

E. M. BECKWITH, J.P.

Medford, King's County, N.S.

At the time of the Dominion census enumeration in the spring of 1891, Mr. J. Levis Cox, the enumerator of a portion of Ward One, Cornwallis, called at my house and I gave him the ages of my children. I cannot say whether or not he placed the names of my absentee children on his census paper. But he inquired in detail of each, knowing them to be absent for years.

My absent children's names are: Cloda Matilda, absent 10 years, married, resides at Washburne, Me.; Amanda Sophia, absent 10 years, married, resides at Lubec, Me.; Gould Exmouth, absent 4 years, resides at Boston, Mass.; Owen Lee, absent 3 years, married, resides at Acton, Mass.; Eva Dorene, absent seven years, married, resides at Ashmont, Mass.; Addie Levenia, absent 4 years, resides at Brocton, Mass.

My three youngest children were then at home, (and although one of them since has left for a permanent residence in the United States) had all three a right to be taken in the census.

I, Robert Newcombe, of Delhaven, King's County, Nova Scotia, do solemnly declare that the above statement is correct in all particulars, and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously knowing the same to be true, and by virtue of the "Act respecting extra judicial oaths."

ROBERT NEWCOMBE,

Declared before me this fourth day of May, 1892, at Canning, King's County, N.S.

E. M. BECKWITH, J.P.

Those are affidavits referring to the cases of which I have had the assurance that the names are on the list, and the committee will understand what sort of an enumeration has been made in one portion at least of this Dominion. In this connection it might be instructive to look at the statements made by the census commissioner in Bulletin No. 14, at page 6, in which he says:

First, these returns of the census were taken by the enumerators from the families visited, and it was made by means of a money payment for each name recorded, a matter of dollars and cents to the enumerator to procure the fullest returns possible.

I think, Sir, in that boast of the census commissioner, we have possibly an explanation in part, at least, of this extraordinary enumeration of the people of this country. There was a direct inducement by the system under which the census was taken, to any man who was not strictly honest, to swell the number of names. A man went into a family, we will say, of eight persons, six of whom he knew perfectly well, he could not help knowing, were in the United States; but it was a question of dollars and cents, as the census commissioner says, and so the enumerator, by taking down these extra six names, added ten or sixteen cents, whatever the amount was, per name to the amount of money which he would get for his work in taking the census. I think this point is worthy the consideration of this House and this Government. Now, Sir, I have gone through the list of names which I have proved were improperly included in the census returns for the district of King's County. I may just point out, however, before passing from this branch of the subject, that I find from a careful analysis that in a distance of one mile, out of a total number returned of 157, 25 per cent were absent in the United States and had settled there, and there was not the slightest chance or possibility of their ever returning to this country. If I had been able to get the further returns which I asked for, and have not yet received, I believe they would show that a much larger number than 25 per cent were improperly returned as residents in that section of the country. Now, I come to the next branch of my subject, and that is a consideration of a number of names, some 150, about which I asked information in the same way from the census commissioner as I did with reference to these. I submitted to him last session a further list of 150 names, and I received no response whatever to my inquiry, not even an acknowledgement of the receipt of my letter. This year, after my return to the present session, I called his attention to the fact in this language:

To GEORGE JOHNSON, Esq.,

Statistician, Department of Agriculture.

DEAR SIR,—Last session I had the honour to submit to you a list of names concerning which I desired to know if they were included in the last census enumeration in King's County, Nova Scotia, as I have submitted a similar list the year before, and received the information, had also had an assurance from you in conversation, that my request would be granted. I am surprised at not having received up to this moment the slightest acknowledgment of my second application. I will be glad to know why.

To that letter I received an official answer in these terms :

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you that by request received from you by the statistician of this department on the 16th inst., for certain information from the census, to obtain this information it will be necessary for you to move for a return of the same to be made to Parliament.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

H. B. SMALL,

Secretary Department of Agriculture.

After receiving that, I took steps to move for a return of those names, and I hope that motion may be reached before the end of the session. Now, I have here a list which contains the names of 150 more people, supported by affidavits of the same kind as those I have read ; but I do not propose to read those affidavits, because I do not know positively that those names were included. One of them, however, I will read. This is the affidavit of Sarah Ann Sanford :

This is to certify that my son, Eber A. Sanford, left this province 12 years ago ; has never been in his native province since. He has owned and worked a farm in southern Dakota for years, and never proposes or even intimates that he can return even on a visit. At the time of taking the Dominion census last spring he was in Montana on business. He is 27 years of age.

My younger son, Freeman B. Sanford, had been absent at the time of census taking three years, yet Mr. I. Lewis Cox, the census enumerator, took down his name, and I gave his age at 20 years. At this time he resided with Charles Borden, carriage builder, at Wolfville, N.S., and the Wolfville enumerator took down his name and age at Wolfville census, the young man giving his age at 21 years, being a discrepancy of one year from that given by me.

I, Sarah A. Sanford, wife of John W. Sanford, of Woodside, King's County, N.S., do solemnly declare that the above statement is correct in all particulars, and I make this solemn declaration that the above statement is correct in all particulars conscientiously knowing the same to be true and by virtue of the Act respecting extra-judicial oaths.

SARAH ANN SANFORD.

This affidavit is made in due form, from which it appeared that this same enumerator, in this particular case at least, included the name of a person who had been absent from his district three years, and we have further proof that that same person was included in the census twice in the same county. Now, when I asked for the information with reference to this second list, the question occurred to me : why did not Mr. Johnson—who, although he refused to allow me to see the book, was perfectly ready to tell me whether such and such names were on the list—why did he decline to give me precisely the same information with reference to a further list ? Well, his explanation to me was this : that my hon. friend from Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), had made a statement here last session reflecting upon him, and had quoted me as authority ; that my hon. friend had stated that he had endeavoured to get information with reference to the enumerators in the city of Charlottetown, and had utterly failed. So when he happened to meet me, and was discussing the question with me, I said : " I have got more information upon those lines." But as soon as the department discovered that all the names which I had given them, and which they had found included in the census, were improperly there, he refused to give me any further information. That was the statement of which Mr. Johnson complained. I have no recollection of making exactly that statement ; but if I did make that statement, it is borne out by what has happened since, because so soon as Mr. Johnson discovered that those names that he told me were on the list were improperly there, he refused to tell me whether a further list supplied to him was included in the census or not. So that really the fact is, that while I do not recollect him having declined for that reason to give me the names last year, as a matter of fact he has declined to give me them this year, and what was the reason ? What is the fair inference ? The inference to be drawn is this : that those 150 further names I supplied are on that list. Must it not be supposed that Mr. Johnson had curiosity enough to take those names and compare them with his book, and see whether they were on the list or not : and having found them on the list, he is determined to give me the trouble to come to Parliament and ask that the list be laid formally on the Table of the House ? It is fair to infer that not only those fifty names were improperly on the list, for they included people who had lived five and ten years in the United States, but also the 150 further names, which I could read, but with which I will not trouble the House, and in support of which I have affidavits similar to those already read, showing they are improperly in the census returns of this country, if there at all. One is inclined to ask why these census returns are not open to the light of day, at all events what possible objection can there be that the lists of those names contained in the enumeration should be open to members of Parliament to criticise in order to see whether the census was properly taken. Every hon. member is interested in knowing whether or not the statistics for which we are paying out of the public chest are correct and reliable, and there is no one so well fitted and competent to ascertain that fact and make that criticism as are members of this House. And yet we are denied access to those books, and we are told, forsooth, that we must come to the House and move for a list to be submitted before we can get the information we want. What possible injury could be done? Why should not the lists be published to the world? If the names are correct, the publication of the lists could do no harm. If the names are not on the lists that should be there, we should know the fact, and if there are names on the lists which should not be there, we should also know it. I am informed that in many parts of the Dominion, as well as in the province of Nova Scotia, there is a very strong feeling that the census is grossly inaccurate, that it has been greatly exaggerated and padded. I have received a letter from the eastern part of the province of Nova Scotia, from the county which the First Minister himself represents, a letter from a very prominent man in the county, in which the following language is used: "Even according to the present enumeration over 12 per cent of the population is lost in the last decade, though desperate attempts were made to make this county show up well. A man told me yesterday that he had burnt a kiln of lime on his farm, and he was put down as a manufacturer; and people were enumerated in the census who have been five years in the United States. It appears, however, that no one can get a look at this census. One of the enumerators told me that in any case of doubt the census was to have the benefit. For instance, I said: You see there are 25 empty houses at Tracadie; will you include them in the return?" "Why certainly," said he."

Mr. BORDEN.

Mr. CAMERON. Name.

Mr. BORDEN. I shall be very happy to give the name privately to the hon. gentleman, and I shall be very happy to give the name to the First Minister; but I do not think I have any right to give the name publicly on the floor of the House, because I have not obtained the sanction of the gentleman to do so.

Mr. CAMERON. It should be done.

Mr. BORDEN. I will give you the name privately. I will say this further respecting this letter, that it was written to me without any intimation from me to refer to the subject. I had written to the gentleman on an entirely different subject, and in the course of his reply he made this statement to which I have referred. I think that a case has been made out against the reliability of the statistical returns, for which this country is paying large sums of money annually. It was perfectly proper that, under the head of statistics, printing the Year-book and the Statistical Record of Canada, this discussion should have been brought up. If the census itself, from which this gentleman makes up his Year-book and statistics is proved to be utterly and absolutely unreliable, at all events so far as certain sections of the country are concerned, what would be the use or value of the statistics which we are paying this gentleman to prepare? Many hon. members have moved for returns respecting industrial establishments. They want to know where those industrial establishments exist. An hon. gentleman living in a small country village where there were perhaps two or three establishments, was startled to find that there were fifty or a hundred, and he moved for a return regarding them with a view to discover what they were. That is all very well, but it does not seem to be necessary to take such action. These statements carry their own contradiction on their face. In the case of the village which I mentioned this afternoon, Kentville, there was an increase in the number of industrial establishments of 72, and yet the capital invested in all those industries was $5,000! It is a 'reductio ad absurdum,' and there is no need to move for returns to show the utter worthlessness of the census. I submit that I have established a good case with respect to the worthlessness of the enumeration that took place. If such is the practice with respect to this particular constituency, and it is not particularly in the district within which I live, but in other districts, and I can show that at least in one-third of the county of King's similar gross inaccuracies exist, we must come to the conclusion that similar inaccuracies prevail throughout the country from one end of it to the other. It is in the interest of this Government, and it is in the interest of the taking of the census in the future that these matters should be ventilated, and that these frauds, if they be frauds, should be exposed so that they may not be repeated.

Mr. CAMERON. I did not catch the exact figures which Mr. Johnson admitted were not given. How many names did he give who were absent although enumerated?

Mr. BORDEN. I gave about fifty that I had proof of.

Mr. CAMERON. You had proof of fifty who were absent?

Mr. BORDEN. Yes, in one small district of the county.

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, and there are 150 about which you have not yet any assurance that they were enumerated?

Mr. BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know whether my hon. friend is positive that persons of similar names might not have been in King's County at the time the enumeration was taken?

Mr. BORDEN. Perfectly positive.

Mr. CAMERON. Well, that might be true, but the learned gentleman who had written him from Antigonish might have made a very much stronger case. I think I myself could make a stronger case apparently, but I doubt very much that the statement would be any more accurate than the statement made by my hon. friend. In eastern Nova Scotia especially—I do not know how it is in King's—we have a very large number of persons of exactly the same name. You take Donald McDonald, and you can get a thousand of them in eastern Nova Scotia, and you can take Donald McDonald, Donald's son, and you can get five hundred of them. You can get of Alexander McDonald a thousand, and if you take Alexander McDonald, Alexander's son, you can, perhaps, get five hundred of them, taking residents for twenty-five years who lived there and left the country, inclusive. I would like to know how my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) could positively say that those who were absent were enumerated, and that those who were at home were those who were not enumerated at all. It is a very difficult thing for the statistician to say, and I can assure my hon. friend that it is a great deal more difficult for him to say it. The hon. gentleman read an affidavit from Sarah somebody, and she solemnly swore that the name of her own dear son was taken down in the district in which she lived, and she swore equally as positively that the name of that dear son was given in another district—only that he was a year younger there than he was where she lived herself. That is the kind of evidence that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has been giving to the House by the yard. I would not give a straw for the whole of it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You do not require it.

Mr. CAMERON. No doubt, but you require it, and such evidence as that is just what takes with my hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin), but he would not state facts when he gets them. I observe also that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has affidavits in his possession proving that some residents of King's County left twenty-five years ago and are now American citizens, but notwithstanding all that they are enumerated in the census of King's County. Well, those people left long ago, and their leaving cannot be attributed to the National Policy, because there was no National Policy then. He says that some have left at a later date, he believed, but to my mind it is very doubtful whether they have ever left at all. If we have no better evidence than that given by Sarah somebody, it is evident that a great many had not left. It may be news to my hon. friend that many years ago—just as long ago as he has referred to—a great many people left Canada for the United States, and they are continuing to go. It is also important to know that there is a decrease in the percentage leaving lately, as compared with the numbers who left the country in previous periods. That is an important fact.

Mr. CAMERON.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You do not want any evidence of that.

Mr. CAMERON. It is not necessary to get such evidence as would satisfy my hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin), but still we can get facts that will satisfy public opinion. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Landerkin) would rather mislead public opinion, but I would much prefer that the people would get the facts. In 1850, there were 147,000 British North American province people who were born in the British North American provinces resident in the United States. In 1860 there were 240,000, in 1870 there were 493,000, in 1880 there were 717,000, and in 1890, 980,000. Now, we find that the percentage in the decade between 1870 and 1880 was 50 per cent, and that was reduced in the decade between 1880 and 1890 to 37½ per cent. These are incontrovertible facts. These are facts based upon the census of the United States, and there is no hon. gentleman opposite who would for a moment doubt the census taken in the United States, although they invariably doubt the census taken in Canada. The increase of the exodus from Canada during the period of the Reciprocity Treaty was not less than 200 per cent, as compared with the decade previous to that treaty, and the exodus has been decreasing ever since the abrogation of that treaty. But in no decade, according to the American census, was the decrease of the percentage of the Canadians resident in the United States so reduced as during the last decade. These are facts from the American census, and surely my hon. friends opposite will rely on them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have you any affidavits?

Mr. CAMERON. If they were all affidavits like that of Sarah somebody, I would not take a bushel of them for one fact. There is not much reliance in such an affidavit as that, where the woman swore that to her own personal knowledge, she was aware that her son was taken in the census in one district and then in another. Such evidence as that might satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite, but I am sure that it will not satisfy any intelligent schoolboy of twelve years of age in any part of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FLINT. The statements made by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) are such as ought, at any rate, to startle the people of this country who are looking to the census as a real representation of the growth and development of the country during the last ten years. The discussions in the House since the census has been laid on the Table, and the various bulletins that have been issued from the Department of Agriculture have been such as to prove conclusively that for all practical purposes the statistics are absolutely worthless; and they are worthless not only on account of the gross partisanship of the men who were employed to take the census, but on account of the false system upon which the taking of the census was based. The very fact that in over two hundred constituencies in the province every man concerned in the taking of the census, from the highest down to the lowest, was a strong and violent partisan of the party in power, and had a personal and party interest in making the returns excessive in every particular, would in the first place throw a grave suspicion upon the accuracy of the statements therein contained. There is no doubt that many of these gentlemen were thoroughly honest persons; but where the whole policy of the ruling party of the day was bound up in making a good showing from the census returns, and where each of the enumerators was to be paid by results, the temptation to overdo the thing on the lines which have been proven by the hon. member for King's, was almost irresistible. I thought my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron) had a great deal of difficulty in grappling with the argument of the hon. member for King's. To me that argument seemed, as regards the particular space which he covered to be absolutely conclusive, not merely as to the incompetence of the enumerator, but as to the grave abuse of the trust reposed in him by those who appointed him to that position; and if there were many among the larger number of enumerators throughout the various provinces who were actuated by the feelings, or, to use a milder term, the error of judgment which actuated that enumerator, the discrepancies throughout the whole Dominion must have been very large. Let us see the difficulties which the hon. gentleman had to encounter, and whether he has not made out, as regards that particular case, a complete refutation of the correctness of the enumeration. I agree with him, and I think every hon. member of this House will agree with him, that it is utterly absurd to place such difficulties in the way of the verification of the census returns as are placed in the way either by the law or by the interpretation of the law as given out by the Department of Agriculture. It is easily supposable that it would not be fair or proper that the capital employed by certain manufacturing industries should be revealed to the general public, or that private and personal details in regard to profits and so on, should be given out to the public. These matters are the private property of the individuals who give the information, and we all agree that they should be preserved sacred and inviolate from scrutiny, except in a case of great public emergency. But in regard to the other details of the census, such as the ages and circumstances of the persons enumerated, I can see no reason for secrecy whatever. It appears to me that they should be open and above board, in order that the various statistics gathered by the enumerators should be verified. Now, let us see the position. The position is this, that no matter how erroneous the statements in regard to the population of the country may be, there is no power short of a repeal of the law as interpreted by the Government that can give these facts to the public. It was only by the most careful and to a certain extent, artful management of the hon. member for King's that he secured the small modicum of evidence which he has given to this House. Through the courtesy of the statistician he ascertained that of a list of names which he handed in, all or nearly all, were contained in the census returns. He goes to the neighbourhood and obtains affidavits of credible persons, persons whose characters are above reproach, that the statements given in those census returns are incorrect, and that in a small section forty-eight or fifty of the persons enumerated have been domiciled in the United States, some fourteen, some ten, some eight, and others four or five years; thus showing, as regards that small strip of territory, that the return is erroneous to a very great degree. Perhaps it might be assuming too much to say that the same percentage might apply throughout the whole Dominion, because it is not to be conceived that every enumerator was actuated by the false notion of the law which actuated the enumerator. But this I will say, that I am perfectly aware that complaints are almost universal that the census returns in regard to the particulars of population have been in most places grossly exaggerated. One instance I will give showing the honesty of an enumerator, because it is pleasant to be able to indicate that here and there there are enumerators who are candid and honest. Previous to the enumeration being taken I heard one enumerator, who was a strong Conservative, among a group of others in my county, speaking very strongly as to the growth and development of a certain section. He was prepared almost to bet that the growth and population in that section was very large. Some doubted it, but the discussion passed over. When the enumeration was published, I had the curiosity to look up the section which the enumerator referred to, and I found his opinion to be entirely astray; showing that, although he was a strong partisan of the Government, and although he believed that there had been a great increase in that section, yet he honestly and fairly performed his duty in making his returns. But from the general circumstances of the case, it is not likely that the same thing would generally apply. Now, I think that the census should be taken by enumerators not chosen on a partisan basis, but chosen entirely without reference to party bias. The very fact that all or nearly all of these enumerators were strong and violent partisans certainly backs up the proof which has been given to us to-night by the hon. member for King's that the census in these particulars is grossly inaccurate, and is for many reasons of comparison almost completely worthless. But it is when we come to the returns regarding manufactures that the discrepancies in the census are most observable. I will take the case of the town of Yarmouth, the capital town of the county which I have the honour to represent. Although it is very pleasing and gratifying to the residents of that community to have the flattering notices of them which were given in the census bulletins, yet it would be only just and fair to say that they are ridiculously inaccurate, that they do not represent the case at all; although the fault of making these statements does not lie with the statistician, but with the enumerators in the county. Now, let us see what is said about Yarmouth in bulletin No. 12. It says:

Some great changes are to be noted. New Westminster on the Pacific coast and Yarmouth on the Atlantic slope of the Dominion are examples. In the first named, population went ahead at a rate of speed far outstripping manufactures. In the last named, manufactures left population out of sight.

Later on, it is said:

Yarmouth, N.S., has made remarkable progress, having been in 1881 one of the smallest per head in manufacturing, and in 1891 having reached the figure of $206 per head, the population having in the same time increased 75 per cent.

Now, in the discussion last year, I accounted for the error, and it can be accounted for without attributing any improper motives. It arose partly from the utterly inadequate manner in which the previous census was taken, and partly from the blunders which characterized the taking of the census of 1891. Between the utterly inadequate census of 1881, and the exaggerated census of 1891, the community I have the honour to live in is presented to the world as an instance of most remarkable progress in the Dominion, when the fact is, although we have made reasonable progress, the census gives an entirely false impression. This is where those who are desirous of investigating the character of the progress and development of the country and of seeing where mistakes have been made or good accomplished, would be misled. Yarmouth is represented as having had phenomenal growth in manufactures, and this is done by entering in the record every blacksmith's and every shoemaker's shop, and every seamstress's sewing room as a manufactory, thereby swelling up the grand total to a very high figure. Whereas, the truth is that there has been no increase in the number of manufacturing establishments at all. There was not, in 1891, one manufacturing establishment in the town of Yarmouth—I mean a manufacturing establishment in the ordinary sense of the term, and not in the technical sense of the enumerators—more than in 1881, but the number has been swelled in the way I have mentioned, and we are held up to the world as a remarkable illustration of the benefits of the National Policy. I was amused at the attempts of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) to minimize the effect of the statement of my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Borden), that the people are enumerated in the census as residents of that county, who had been twenty-five years in the United States. My hon. friend's answer to that was: If you admit that they have been in the United States twenty-five years, then they were not driven there by the National Policy. This is a sample of the logic by which the irrefutable argument of my hon. friend from King's is met by hon. gentlemen opposite. In future attempts to take the census, new rules will have to be adopted by the Government. Unfortunately, we are in the position that no matter how erroneous, no matter how exaggerated, may be the statements given by the enumerators, there is no way in which their accuracy can be verified, and those who suspect their inaccuracy, are groping in the dark, and have any amount of difficulty in establishing the correctness of their suspicions. No doubt, a considerable number of the statistics are absolutely correct, but it is very unfortunate that, owing to the suspicions justly thrown upon the record as a whole, we cannot rely upon the returns absolutely in making deductions as to the growth and progress of the country. Another point I would submit is the desirability of omitting the casual remarks and the side observations of the statistician in the Year-book. No doubt that gentleman has a great deal of experience, but the statistics of the country are sufficient to occupy his time, and he would do better to confine himself to furnishing the returns and not mind making observations or deductions. In the Statistical Abstract of the United States, a book of great value, there are no such observations at all. The compiler contents himself with giving the statistics under their various heads, and does not attempt to account for discrepancies, or apparent discrepancies, or to give reasons for an increase in one particular and a decrease in another direction. Take our yearly book, and you find that wherever the figures seem to point in a direction opposed to the contentions of hon. gentlemen opposite, our statistician busies himself devising reasons for this discrepancy, and these reasons almost invariably coincide with the line of argument with which we are favoured from time to time by hon. gentlemen supporting the Government policy. On the whole, it would be better to allow the student to make his own deductions, and not have these statistics interpreted in a manner strongly tinged with political bias. It is unfortunate that wherever we turn with regard to the statistics of Canada, the ruling party desires to indicate that every growth and phase of development is attributable, more or less, to the policy of the Government. That is always open to argument. There is a growth and development going on in various directions, which is entirely independent of statute or Government policy, and to ascertain the causes of which requires a great deal of careful thought and discrimination. I think the students of this literature should be left to form their own conclusions from the figures set before them without having their minds biased either way by an officer of the Government. On the whole I am not disposed to condemn the book, because the idea of giving, under the various heads, the general statistics relating to the country and to place them from year to year in the hands of all who desire to make use of them for any purpose whatever is a good one, and the book is a useful publication. But there will be a great improvement if these attempts at accounting in various ways that are open to argument for the changes in these figures are abandoned altogether, and the American system adopted of giving a mere statistical statement and allowing each reader to form his own conclusion as to such changes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like the Government to give instructions to permit members of the House to inspect the various rolls of names. I can see no possible reason either as a matter of policy or on any other ground why the rolls of names of persons alleged to be residents in Canada should not be open to every member in the House, more especially those with regard to each member's own constituency. Therefore, after what has been stated by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Borden), it is utterly impossible for us to avoid the conclusion that, either from deliberate design or from the most unfortunate misconception of his duty on the part of the enumerator, very gross frauds have been committed as regards the particular constituency mentioned. I do not pretend to say that these frauds extend in equal degree over the whole Dominion. I should be very sorry to think that any such thing is possible. But, most unquestionably, an overwhelming case has been made out for at least allowing every member of Parliament to inspect the rolls of names, and I hope the Government will not hesitate to state now, after the declarations made in this House, that they will give instructions that every hon. member who chooses may inspect the rolls. I should like to be assured either by the Minister in charge of this matter or by the leader of the Government that this will be done.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What has been stated by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) undoubtedly calls for searching inquiry. But I would rather not give an answer to the question of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to-night, because I have given the subject no consideration, and would require time to ascertain what the law on the question is. But I will consider the matter and will give him an answer.

Mr. FORBES. In connection with the remark just made by the right hon. Premier, I may be justified in mentioning a few points which will perhaps assist him in the investigation which he thinks it advisable now to call for. It has long been recognized as a fact in the country that the census returns of population and the industrial statistics were, to say the least, questionable. We have had to-night undoubted proof of the unreliable character of the returns of population. The incorrectness of the industrial returns is also firmly established. Hon. gentlemen will remember that the census returns of population for the province of New Brunswick showed an increase of only 35 in ten years. I find that in four towns in that province there has been an increase of 716 industrial establishments, which, considering the small increase of population, is evidently very incorrect. These figures call for explanation at least. Coming to the province of Nova Scotia, I find that in 14 towns the industrial figures of which I examined, there is a total increase of 1,071 manufacturing establishments, and an increase in the number of hands employed of 6,687, as compared with the figures for 1881. The total increase in population is 9,500 in round numbers in the whole province. That would leave about 2,800 of an increase for all the towns other than those in the list I refer to, and the rural districts. Thus, two-thirds of the increase in population is in these manufacturing centres, if I may use the term. And yet in bulletin No. 18, Mr. Johnson states that the average increase of population has been equal all over the rural and urban districts. These figures alone are sufficient to show the utter unreliability of the statistics as given. In the same connection, I find that the returns for Liverpool, the chief shire town of Queen's County, show an increase of 17 manufacturing establishments over the preceding decade. Even a person who has visited that town in this period, and still more, one who has lived there, must know that such a return has no foundation, except in the imagination of the enumerator. I wish the trade policy of Canada would permit it to be brought about. If this does not account for it, then the statistics must have been deliberately altered, either in the department of the chief statistician or in the Department of Agriculture. Yet the Government says they cannot find money enough to prepare a list of these manufactories to enable the people to find them. There was one remark made by my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), and only one, with which I could not agree, and that was to the effect that the fault does not lie with the chief statistician. I believe that it does. I have been informed by one of the employees of the department, that when the sheets have been returned to the care and custody of the chief statistician, Mr. George Johnson, he has gone into one of the departments where the details of the various sheets are summarized as returned by the enumerators, for bulletin No. 12, which is the industrial bulletin, and which bulletin sheets contain six columns, and that these sheets have there made on them pencilled alterations in their columns side by side with the details and totals made in ink by the enumerators. The increases made by these pencilled figures over those in ink, which were supposed to show the true totals of the columns, were 25, 20, 15, and 35 per cent respectively over the returns of the enumerators. Mr. Johnson, I am informed, or some one on his behalf, instructed each of these clerks, whose names I have here in writing handed me by one of the said clerks, that the sheets handed in by the enumerators with reference to manufactures should be changed in a similar manner to the sheets he had handed to these seven clerks. And I am told that these seven clerks, under the instructions of the chief statistician, or of an officer of his department, deliberately altered these sheets so that the bulletins in our hands to-day contain the total of these increases made upon these sheets by the clerks of the Statistical Department, and that if the original sheets are compared with the published bulletins, the totals of the five several columns as pencilled upon these sheets will be found not to correspond with the figures returned by the enumerators in the several provinces of this Dominion. I desire the Government to inquire into this matter. I have here the names of the clerks to whom I have referred: Major, Ryan, Hawking, Payne, Warden, Cameron, Allen and Maynard. These are the clerks engaged upon these sheets particularly and generally in the work of the Statistical Department, as I am informed. Those are the persons engaged upon that work in the statistical department, and if I am wrongly informed as to the manipulations of these sheets by these clerks, I would be glad to make the correction. But as I am at present informed, I believe that the alterations were so made by one or more of those clerks at the suggestion and at the request of the chief, or one of his chief officers. If such is the case, the utter unreliability of the statistics as they refer to industries and manufacturing establishments, will be evident to all, just as the figures which have been reported in the same returns have been proved to be absolutely false by the evidence furnished by the hon. member for King's. I make this statement, and I ask the Government to look into it carefully. I call upon those who have charge of that department to make the most thorough investigation into the matter, because I have been lately informed that one of the clerks in the Department of the Minister of Railways has sent out a circular to several Conservative friends in the province of Ontario and elsewhere, stating that great stress will be laid, during the approaching campaign, upon the statistics furnished by the enumerators and upon the census bulletins furnished by the Department of Agriculture; and that if a greater number of those bulletins are wanted for the use of the Conservative party during the campaign, they will be furnished upon application to the Department of Agriculture. I am told that that circular is sent out by the Secretary of the Minister of Railways. Before any demands are made upon the department for a further distribution of those bulletins, it might be advisable for the Government, and for the public who are asking for them and who may learn of the discussion taking place in the House to-day, to substantiate the truth of the statistics contained in these bulletins before they are allowed to be used upon the hustings of this Dominion; and it may be advisable for the credit of the Government and for the credit of Canada that these bulletins, if they are falsely made up, should be withdrawn, in order that they may no longer be used to the discredit of Canada. The vote is now for the Statistical Year-book for the approaching year, and if it is to be worth the money, I would suggest that its publication should be delayed until the correctness of the figures which will be put into it, are verified. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) that the Year-book should contain nothing but the statistics of the bulletins which are brought down, and let the public draw their own deductions from the figures. We do not want to pay for coloured deductions made by any officers of the Government, or any other person on behalf of the Government. It is no use for a man to get up and quote statistics from a Government Blue-book unless he knows that they are accurate. Figures, as we have heard over and over again, won't lie, but we know that several deductions drawn from the same figures totally differing, have been drawn from the same sets of figures. If the Government officials will be more correct and more fair in the deductions which they draw from the figures furnished by the enumerators of the Government, there may not be so much cause for complaint; but when we see these statements, these little embellishments of returns, coloured on behalf of the Conservative party, naturally we feel annoyed; and we protest against officers of the Government in the several departments so making use of the information which they have in advance of the rest of the country and of this House, and putting forward a construction which it will not at all bear when you come to analyze the figures. If the Government will look into the suggestions made by several hon. members this evening, I think they will decide that this vote had better lie over.

Mr. McMULLEN. I really think it is discourteous to the hon. gentlemen of the House who have addressed the committee, that the Government should attempt no reply to the very serious charges made from this side of the House. Certainly the committee are entitled to a reply from the Government in regard to the inaccuracies that have been pointed out with regard to these census returns. Now, with regard to the statistical record, the vote for which is under discussion, I think the Government should pay heed to the statement of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), showing that the American statistical record is a mere compilation of figures, without any deductions or comments whatever. If we are to have a statistical record of any use, we had better start it on a proper basis, and cease publishing comments and arguments in order to bolster up a position that may be taken by the Government of the day. What we want are clear, well-defined and thoroughly reliable statistics as to our trade, every year, and upon those figures let the occupants of the Treasury benches stand or fall in so far as they are responsible for their trade policy.

Cornwall Canal..... $450,000

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that he promised a report with regard to Sheik's Island on the Cornwall Canal, and the last time we had a discussion on that question, on the 31st May last, he stated that the report had been on the Table for two or three weeks. The hon. gentleman knows now that he was in error; the report has been brought down since. But I call attention to the fact that it is altogether insufficient, there is nothing in it but a report of Mr. Schrieber, the Chief Engineer, simply stating that the Minister having decided to change the contract, or something of that kind, he has since sanctioned everything that has been done. It was stated by the Minister himself some time ago that two contracts had been given on section 45, and they were cancelled in order to substitute another plan, that is to say, the plan of building a dam at Sheik's Island. But nothing at all is brought down in this report to show what caused him to make so important changes, and I submit that it is impossible to discuss the item of the Cornwall Canal until that report has been completed.

Mr. HAGGART. I brought down all the report there is in the department, except the report of the engineer in charge of the works, Mr. Rubidge. The other evidence which I relied upon are the reports of Mr. Shanley and others, which I mentioned during the debate.

Mr. LAURIER. We have not that.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought all the papers were brought down except the report of Mr. Rubidge. The rest are printed in the Blue-books. I will place Mr. Rubidge's report on the Table now.

St. Lawrence River and Canals. $30,000

Mr. HAGGART. This sum is required for surveys. There is a suit in the Exchequer Court by Gilbert & Company for $130,000, and when the judgment of the court is given the amount will be provided for. It is proposed to spend the amount asked on surveys of river reaches for the ensuing year, with a view to ascertain the cost of improving some of those reaches and to enable a judgment to be formed as to whether some of those reaches could be improved rather than enlarge some parts of the canals.

Welland Canal..... $10,000 do land damages,
Grand River.. $3,700

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that both of these are revotes. Why was not the money expended?

Mr. HAGGART. The first amount is for the construction of a mitre sill wall to gates on the canal. On the Welland Canal the upper and lower gates are the same height, and this sum of $10,000 is for work at No. 7 lock. In constructing that lock a mistake was made from wrong calculations being obtained, which gave one foot less depth than was expected, and this amount is for the purpose of remedying that defect. With respect to the amount of $3,700 land damages at Grand River: the level of the Grand River was raised, causing damage to property, for which the Government is held responsible.

Murray Canal..... $15,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For what work is this money required?

Mr. HAGGART. For the equipment of the canal, which is a new work. It is to provide seven houses for the canal officers, costing $7,700; collector's office, $3,800; range lights, $2,000, and a beacon, $1,500.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the entire cost of this work up to the present time?

Mr. HAGGART. The expenditure up to 30th June, 1892, was $1,216,631. In 1892-93 the expenditure was $30,838; from 30th June, 1893, to 1st March, 1894, the expenditure was nil. The total expenditure was $1,247,470.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe in the Auditor General's Report, C-97, a long list of items of work performed on the canal, and I notice an item for clearing and grubbing, 119 acres, at the rate of $50 per acre. These prices seem to be high. Are they contract prices?

Mr. HAGGART. They are the old contract prices. These amounts were paid a couple of years ago. This is the final estimate, giving the total quantities and items.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do lake steamers use the canal on their regular route now ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know whether they use it regularly or not, but on going down they very often use it, because I very frequently have applications to allow the steamers to go through on Sunday.

Trent Canal $73,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It will be in order for the hon. Minister to give to the committee a statement of the intentions of the Government with respect to the Trent Canal. Some of us had the pleasure of witnessing a very extensive deputation interviewing the hon. gentleman, and to judge from the enthusiastic manner in which his remarks were received it appeared that a satisfactory understanding had been arrived at. I should like to know what the Government intend to do, because the revote of $73,000 is scarcely, I should think, an adequate response for the encouragement that appeared to be held out to those gentlemen by the Minister, not to say by them to the Minister.

Mr. HAGGART. $73,000 is a revote from last year, none of the money having been expended. If the hon. gentleman will wait until the Supplementary Estimates for 1894 are submitted, I will promise him a full statement in regard to what the policy of the Government is with respect to the Trent Canal. I am obtaining estimates of the work intended to be done, and I am having prepared a statement respecting the construction of a couple of locks at present needed between Balsam Lake and Simcoe Lake. There will be an item in the Estimates for the next year, in which the hon. gentleman will recognize the intentions of the Government in regard to the Trent Canal, and I will give a full explanation at that time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Has the Government obtained estimates of the probable cost of the work ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, of the entire cost of the work. I have had approximate estimates prepared of the reduced cost on account of changes recommended by the commission. I have estimates of the locks intended to be built, the two locks between Balsam Lake and Simcoe Lake, and the probable expenditure required next year to complete the stretch of navigation between Peterborough and Lakefield. These are the two objective points which it is the intention of the Government to reach and complete, to enable the maximum of navigation to be secured on the canal by finishing those two particular works. The construction will require eight or nine locks between Peterborough and Lakefield, and a like number between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of what depth ?

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. Five feet on the mitre sill. The length of the locks will be 130 odd feet, and the breadth 33 feet. The locks recommended by the commission are 10 feet narrower, namely, 23 feet. The Government has considered whether it was advisable to adopt that portion of the commissioners' report or not. Locks of the size recommended by the commission would cost in the neighbourhood, taking into consideration the ground as well, of $17,000 to $23,000. Locks of the size the Government have been in the habit of building, and which the department recommends, would cost $27,000.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I shall be glad when the Government bring down their Supplementary Estimates, for I think the House will support the Government in doing something to secure a return for the money already expended on the Trent Canal. Whether the work should ever have been undertaken or not, and whether the promises made should ever have been made is one question. Whether the Government ought to complete the work so far to make what work has been done available to some portion of the country is another question. I think that the House perhaps would be justified in supporting the completion of the work to Lake Simcoe, which would open up very large tracts of inland navigation, and would be of great service, inasmuch as it would relieve the local traffic from the very great imposition of rates now imposed upon it by the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway. We have two great railway corporations upon which the whole transport business of that country now depends and there is absolutely no competition. The rates on the two roads are the same, and the local rates are excessively high. If the completion of this work to Lake Simcoe can be done for anything like a reasonable sum, a great benefit would be conferred on the people of a very large district. Of course I am speaking now of the local traffic, and whether this House should undertake a work which could be available only for local traffic, it is now, I think, too late to consider. We have spent a great deal of money there which so far is productive of almost no result. The completion of the intervening portions of the work would bring about good results, and if for a reasonable expenditure the completion of these links can be accomplished then from a local point of view we would derive a very great advantage. I must admit that after the exhibition we had to-day of the dealing of the Government with the Tay Canal—for which I of course am bound to admit my responsibility as a member of the House, and I do not attempt to evade it—one must be exceedingly cautious how he binds himself to accept Government estimates, approximate or otherwise. Viewing the question as one of a practical nature, and assuming that the Government will bring down to us estimates that can be relied upon, and assuming that the cost is not extravagant, then

I think the proposition which will come before this House (as I understand from the Minister that the work shall be carried on so as to complete it to a point at which it will be of some service to the country through which it passes) is a proposition that I think this House ought to favourably consider.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the Auditor General's Report that Charles Wynne took an action for damages at Jones's Point and got $3,800. What were the particulars of that?

Mr. HAGGART. I am sorry that I cannot give the information just now. The money was paid last year and neither the deputy nor I remember it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman guarantee that my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) will not be held responsible hereafter for allowing this item to pass?

Mr. HAGGART. The amount has been paid and the event is past.

Mr. McMULLEN. My object is to try and secure a very rigid inspection of all accounts of this kind that may be presented hereafter. I notice that the man who brought the action was awarded $3,800, and that the law costs amounted to $1,934.

Mr. HAGGART. I remember that case now. We contended that we had no right to pay and an action was taken in the Exchequer Court and this amount awarded. As to the law costs, my department is not at all responsible. The Minister of Justice is responsible that the costs were right.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Which you think were very high?

Mr. HAGGART. We always think we are mulcted in damages which we ought not to pay, and that the costs are exceedingly high in most of those cases.

Mr. DEVLIN. I think this would be a good opportunity to repeat a question which I have already put in the House. It is with regard to the lock at Little Rapids on the Le Lièvre River. I do not see that there is any expenditure in connection with that lock in any part of the Estimates or in the Auditor General's Report. I have had an answer that claims have been received with respect to this.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison). I am afraid you are out of order.

Mr. HAGGART. I will answer the question if it refers to a canal.

Mr. DEVLIN. There may be no other opportunity of reaching the question. I have been answered that claims were received by the Government in respect to damages done the dam along the River Le Lièvre.

When I put the question the Government answered: that such claims had been received and were receiving the consideration of the Government. I would like to know if any decision has been arrived at in regard to these claims.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember at present of any such claim. The course that we always pursue is this: We get a report of the engineer in charge of the works as to whether there has been any damage or not. We instruct the engineer to find out by levels whether the water has been backed up on any particular property. If he reports against it we refuse to pay it, and if he thinks there is any damage done, we send the Dominion arbitrator to value it. If the claimants refuse to accept the valuation of the Dominion arbitrator, we give them liberty to go to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not think the Minister understood me exactly. I said I had already received an answer in the early part of the session from the Government to the effect that a report had been made to the Government, and that the Government were considering that report, and consequently considering the claims that had been received by the Government, and I would like to know now if any decision has been arrived at.

Mr. HAGGART. Are you sure you had that answer from the Department of Railways and Canals?

Mr. DEVLIN. No.

Mr. HAGGART. When I come to think of it; that work was done under the Public Works Department and we had nothing to do with it.

Mr. DEVLIN. That is perfectly true, but I do not see any other item in the Estimates under which I could have asked for this information. There is nothing in the Estimates in connection with this work, and being a lock, I thought the information would perhaps be in this department.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no information in my department, as the work was not constructed by my department, and we had no control over the expenditure.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal..... $200,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason that the hon. gentleman has a revote for $600,000 put down, and he only asks for $200,000? Is the expenditure going to be $400,000 less than his estimate?

Mr. HAGGART. This is merely a revote. It is expected that the canal will be in condition to pass through in July next. The lock masonry is completed, the power-house is well advanced, the culverts are nearly finished, the cutting of rock and earth is nearly completed. The estimated cost of construction to afford, at the lake entrance, twenty feet of navigation, was $4,000,000. The expenditure on construction up to the 30th June, 1893, was $1,475,344, and from the 30th June down to the 1st March, 1894, $864,902, making a total of $2,340,246. The building of lock, &c., is under contract to Messrs. Hugh Ryan & Co. No contracts have yet been awarded for deepening from sixteen to twenty feet of navigation, the cost of which is estimated at the upper entrance at $276,000, and at the lower entrance at $192,000, a total of $468,000. The revote of $600,000 is a typographical error. It should be $200,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost likely to be ?

Mr. HAGGART. The total amount expended to the 1st March, 1894, was $2,340,246. It will take $1,260,000 to finish the work, from which is to be deducted $468,000 for deepening above and below. That would leave nearly $700,000 due to the contractors about the 1st of August.

Mr. McMULLEN. What staff of officials have you up there in charge of this work—how many engineers ?

Mr. HAGGART. There are a resident engineer, two assistant engineers, two or three rodmen, one inspector of masonry, one of ironwork, and two of woodwork.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice an item of sixteen mooring posts at $15 each. That appears to me to be a very high price for mooring posts. Are they of iron or wood ?

Mr. HAGGART. They are oak, turned and finished.

Lachine Canal..... $115,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is that for ?

Mr. HAGGART. To build the Lachine sewer, $5,500 ; to deepen the canal from lock 2 to St. Gabriel basin, to 22 feet, $60,000 ; to pay for land damages for new lock at the Lachine entrance, $50,000. Rather than build on the site of the old lock, it is thought better to make a new entrance as per plan, and to use the old channel for dock purposes, and it is proposed to appropriate a piece of land to get over the canal dock which is being built by the harbour commissioners into the canal basin. This will enable sea-going vessels to go up and utilize the Wellington basin. To deepen that lock so as to have twenty feet of navigation on the mitre sills will require twenty-two feet in the canal.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that there are two or three brick sewers. Are they underground sewers ?

Mr. HAGGART. There is a brick sewer from the town of Lachine, and by an agreement with the town of Lachine, there has been an expenditure going on for two or three years along the bank of the canal to carry the sinkage or leakage from the canal along this drain to that little river St. Pierre, which goes under the Lachine Canal and empties into the St. Lawrence.

Mr. HAGGART.

Lake St. Louis Channel.....$125,000

Mr. HAGGART. This is proposed to give a channel 300 feet wide, and 16 feet deep from Lake St. Louis. This is for dredging rock and earth. The line has been projected, and the channel thoroughly surveyed and sounded. It is estimated that the quantity of material to be dredged, and the cost of doing the same, are as follows :—

Solid rock, 89,200 cubic yards,
at $6.....	$535,200
Earth, hard pan, 129,100 cubic yards,
at $2.50.....	322,750

Total.....$857,950

The expenditure up to June, 1893, was $33,968. That is the total expenditure up to 1st March, 1894. This is part of the original plan of deepening the St. Lawrence and tributaries or lakes to the depth required for navigation.

Lachine Canal—reconstruction of workshops, sheds and warehouses, Montreal.....$10,900

Mr. HAGGART. It is proposed to reorganize the store-keeping, and establish a distribution store in Montreal for the Ottawa Lachine, Beauharnois, Chambly, and St. Ours canals ; also, to have general workshops for these canals at Montreal, more especially for the work to be done during the summer. The buildings in use at Montreal are rotten and dilapidated, and in a tumble-down condition, having fully served their day. Then there is the enlarging of the electric light station at Montreal. Looking over the canal, I found six or seven different places where material was deposited and no check or looking after the material.

Welland Canal—overhauling superstructure piers at Dalhousie, &c.....$15,000

Mr. HAGGART. The structure of these piers is in a very decayed condition and is being renewed with concrete, a little being done every year ; $15,000 are required to proceed with this work now in progress. A stretch will be done in each year until the whole is renewed. In addition to the sum now asked, the cost is estimated at $48,000.

Welland Canal—to clean and deepen back ditch on south side of feeder.....$3,000

Mr. HAGGART. The object is to prevent the flooding of adjacent lands, by giving a free fall to the water.

St. Ann's Lock—to repair south channel piers $2,500

Mr. HAGGART. This pier is built of wood, and is decaying, and requires renewal before any serious damage is done, and for this purpose, $2,500 is asked. Repairs will be required next year to other parts of the pier.

Carillon and Grenville Canal.....$3,500

Mr. DEVLIN. Is it true that the Government are the possessors of a residence at the entrance of this canal, which they bought from the engineers?

Mr. HAGGART. My deputy is of the opinion that there was one bought some years ago from Mr. Parent.

Mr. DEVLIN. Is it now in the possession of the Government?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DEVLIN. What price was paid for that residence, and what rental is derived from it?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot give that, but will have it on concurrence.

Mr. DEVLIN. Better let the item stand.

Mr. HAGGART. That matter does not belong to this year or next year, and has no reference to this item.

Mr. DEVLIN. There is an opinion that the Government paid a pretty fair price for the residence, and are now renting it for the sum of a dollar per year.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not aware of it. It did not occur during my regime.

Mr. DEVLIN. However, the hon. gentleman will not deny that the rental received by the Government does not exceed one dollar?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know whether it is one dollar or a hundred or a thousand dollars. I never heard of it before.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman cannot tell me, either, how much was paid for it.

Mr. HAGGART. No; this is the first time I heard of the residence. It must have been bought before my time, and the price must appear in the Auditor General's Report at the time. I promise that when the item comes up on concurrence, I will have the fullest information.

Mr. DEVLIN. Of course, I am quite satisfied with the explanation of the hon. gentleman, but I would simply point out that if it is the intention of the Government to remain in possession of this residence, which they bought, as I understand, at a pretty handsome price, from a gentleman employed by the Government, and which they are now renting at a very low price, they should call for tenders.

Beauharnois Canal—to build steel bridge above lock 14, Valleyfield. $4,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.M.I.) The hon. gentleman is building a canal on the other side, as I understand. Does he intend to keep them both going?

Mr. HAGGART. The Soulanges Canal is only commenced. It is designed to take the place of the Beauharnois Canal in order to give the depth required by navigation. It is not expected to be finished for a number of years, and the Beauharnois Canal is to be used in the meantime.

St. Peter's Canal—towards reconstructing west wall..... $ 600
To repair mitre sills, gates, lower end lock..... 32,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a good deal of money. What is it required for?

Mr. HAGGART. The west wall has been partially rebuilt; there is still a portion to be rebuilt, and for this the $600 is asked. The other item of expenditure is made necessary by the fact that an examination by a diver has revealed the fact that the seaworm, the teredo, has so eaten away the woodwork that a thorough overhauling is necessary. The dam has to be built and the lock pumped out. It is for this work that the sum is asked.

Culbute Canal—towards settlement of claims and removing obstructions.....$5,000

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the nature of these claims?

Mr. HAGGART. There are a great many claims on the Culbute Canal. They are for damage to land, bridges and highways, alleged to have been caused by the construction of the canal work. As the canal is not used, it is proposed to cut away the dams and other obstructions, and for that purpose this sum is required.

Mr. DEVLIN. The claims are of very long standing.

Mr. HAGGART. A great number of them.

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the nature of the obstruction?

Mr. HAGGART. The dam. We are going to cut it away.

Mr. DEVLIN. There is a bridge across the canal. I would like to ask if that is in charge of the Government?

Mr. HAGGART. I am informed that there is a bridge, but I do not know whether it is kept by the Government or not.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to know the facts in this matter. I have seen the bridge, and I believe it to be the property of the Dominion Government, and I know it is in a very precarious and dangerous condition.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a bridge somewhere near there, but it has nothing to do with my department. I believe it was built by contributions from the Dominion Government, the Quebec Government and the Ontario Government. But they have not arrived at a decision yet who are to repair it. I believe it is under the Public Works Department.

Mr. DEVLIN. What steps have been taken to adjust the claims mentioned in this item ?

Mr. HAGGART. The valuator of the Government has been sent out there and has valued all the property. Some of the properties that he valued I considered were not damaged by reason of the dam, and I ordered a re-survey to see whether the water backed up by the dam would overflow these properties. I expect to have a survey soon and be able to ascertain the damages.

Mr. DEVLIN. Who is the valuator ?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Wood, I think.

Mr. DEVLIN. Can the hon. gentleman give me any idea of the amount of the claims ?

Mr. HAGGART. They are a little over $4,000.

Mr. DEVLIN. The Minister states that the valuator is Mr. Wood. Is that Mr. A. F. Wood ?

Mr. HAGGART. The gentleman is a member of the Local Legislature, a representative of one of the Hastings.

Mr. DEVLIN. What is his salary ?

Mr. HAGGART. He is paid $10 a day and expenses when employed by the Government.

Collection of Revenues—Canals —repairs and working expenses $523,650

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the Minister say what reduction has been made in repairs and wages for the last year ?

Mr. HAGGART. We will take up first the Lachine Canal, $56,547. There is the paymaster's salary, formerly paid out of other appropriations; that necessitates an increase of $1,400 in the estimate; travelling expenses, $600; stationery, $550; lighting, $6; postage, $30; clearing office, formerly charged to other appropriations, $120. These are all increases. Then there is a decrease in travelling expenses, $50; a decrease in sundries, $50; draughtsman, formerly charged to other appropriations, and now charged to the canal staff, $900. Two constables for the bridge, $560, is an increase. Then there is a decrease of contingencies—superintendent's travelling expenses, $100; an increase in maintenance and repair of electric lamps, $200, and sundries, superintendent's office, $69. The total decreases are $469. There is an increase of $3,197, which is principally caused by charging to the canal itself sums which were formerly charged to appropriations on the canal.

Mr. DEVLIN.

ent's travelling expenses, $100; an increase in maintenance and repair of electric lamps, $200, and sundries, superintendent's office, $69. The total decreases are $469. There is an increase of $3,197, which is principally caused by charging to the canal itself sums which were formerly charged to appropriations on the canal.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the railways are doing so large an amount of the carrying trade of the country, I think we should try and bring the expenditures connected with canals as much within the limit as possible. The canals surely cannot be doing as much work as they used to do.

Mr. HAGGART. I am trying to make a marked decrease in the expenditure on the canal staff from one end of the country to the other.

Salaries and contingencies, Canal offices; additional pay to persons permanently employed "in the public service," and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for or in connection with passing vessels through the canals of the Government of Canada from midnight on Saturdays to midnight on Sundays, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary. $58,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Does this apply to the permanent staff ?

Mr. HAGGART. This is the permanent staff. This item has been voted year after year. We pay them extra time for passing vessels through on Sunday.

Mr. McMULLEN. In looking over the amount of shipping done through the Welland Canal, I notice that some 90 per cent of it is done by Americans; we do very little of it ourselves. It is rather hard that we have got to spend such an enormous amount of money to keep up this canal when nearly all the advantages go to a neighbouring country. I suppose under our arrangements with them, we are forced to do it; if so, we should cut down the expenses as much as possible.

Mr. LOWELL. I would be glad if the hon. Minister would bring down the correspondence that has taken place with a man named Stanley, at Port Colborne, in regard to certain charges made two or three years ago about Mr. Samuel Cook. It was certain that he had received money from the Government that he was not justly entitled to. I am told he has made a clean breast of it to the Government, and I would like to know something about it. The charge was that he had been paid certain moneys by the Government for services that were supposed to be rendered by him, but were not.

Mr. HAGGART. I remember the circumstances. I had several letters from Mr. Stanley on the subject, and ordered an investigation to be made by the chief engineer of the Welland Canal. There is a written report upon the subject, which I shall be glad to bring down to the hon. gentleman. If I remember rightly, it relieves Mr. Cook from any serious charge of peculation, or anything of that kind. I will bring it down before the Supplementary Estimates are taken up. There were two or three letters from Mr. Stanley on the subject, and I went to the trouble of referring the matter to the Minister of Justice, who sent up detectives for the purpose of seeing whether the charges made by Mr. Stanley were correct. We went to a good deal of trouble and expense on account of the information Mr. Stanley gave us, and it resulted in finding out that his charges were not substantiated.

Mr. LOWELL. The fact still remains that this gentleman received moneys, which he did not account for. I have in my possession a copy of cheque for $70 that was paid to Mr. Sherwood, who was sent up by your department, I understand, to investigate this matter. The cheque was refunded. Not only that, but the gentleman under whom this man was working had a still larger amount, which he did not return to the Government; he was not quite so conscience stricken as the other man who returned his money to the Government.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to get any information the hon. gentleman has on the subject. I will see that this man is punished if he has done anything of the kind.

Mr. DEVLIN. I think the Minister said a few minutes ago that it was the intention of the Government to abandon the Culbute Canal?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DEVLIN. I find it is specified below this item that it is the intention of the Government to vote again this year $1,400 in connection with the canal, as follows: $900 for the staff, and $500 for repairs.

Mr. HAGGART. Only one man is employed on the whole canal. When the dam is removed, the man will be discharged.

Mr. DEVLIN. Then there is only one man employed, and he receives $900 a year. What are his duties?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman can ascertain exactly from the Auditor General's Report. The amount might not have been expended on the staff. The deputy of the department says that in his opinion the man only receives $33 per month.

Mr. DEVLIN. Then why does the hon. gentleman ask for this sum.

Mr. HAGGART. I often ask for more than is expended.

Mr. DEVLIN. But the year before you expended $900.

Mr. HAGGART. It seems there are two parties employed: A. McDonald, lockmaster, $365; Terence Smith, bridge-keeper, $365. Then there was a boat for the lockmaster and certain repairs made.

Mr. DEVLIN. So this staff is composed of two men?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; there is a bridge-tender and a lockmaster.

Mr. DEVLIN. Then it is the intention of the Government to keep up the staff?

Mr. HAGGART. The intention of the Government is when the dam is removed to remove the lockmaster who is at present attending to the locks. The bridge-tender I suppose will be required there.

Mr. DEVLIN. The Government does not profess to have any authority over the bridge. The hon. gentleman has told me that already.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know there is a bridge on the canal. The bridge to which I thought the hon. gentleman was referring was one that was in dispute some time ago as to the party by whom the expenditure should be made. I remember the circumstances that a certain moiety was voted by the Dominion Government, a certain sum by the Ontario Government, and another sum by the Quebec Government.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman says he does not know there is a bridge there; yet he asks the committee to vote the salary of a bridge-keeper. What is the use of voting the salary of a bridge-keeper if there is no certainty about a bridge being there?

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman will pay more attention to my remarks he will grasp the information I furnish. I did not say I did not know whether the bridge was there or not. The only bridge I know of is the one I have described, and I suppose that the person paid for attending to the bridge is the individual who has charge of this particular bridge. I never, however, was in the neighbourhood. I only remember of a request being made for an amount for the purpose of keeping the bridge in repair. The hon. gentleman, who is well acquainted with the country, could perhaps inform me whether there is one bridge or there are two bridges there?

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not suppose there are two bridges there. I know this money is being voted for no purpose at all—there are no vessels passing through the lock. The hon. gentleman is taking the money of the country to pay a gentleman who sits there and does nothing. The hon. Minister has stated that it was the intention of the Government to abandon the canal altogether. Yet the hon. gentleman asks this committee to vote $1,400. We are actually asked to vote $500 for a purpose of which the committee knows nothing, and $900 for a staff that is not required. I protest against the expenditure and against employing people who do nothing. I have a perfect right to enter my protest against this expenditure. In my opinion the money is squandered.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the Government abandon this canal let the Government also abandon the Tay Canal, which is on a par with it.

Mr. DEVLIN. When does the hon. gentleman expect to dispense with the services of Archibald McDonell, lockmaster?

Mr. HAGGART. I have already told the hon. gentleman that if the dam is abandoned we will discharge the lockmaster and it is the intention of the Government to abandon it.

Mr. HAGGART. It is the intention of the Government to do away with the dam.

Mr. DEVLIN. When does the Government propose doing away with the dam?

Mr. HAGGART. This summer some time; the particular date I do not know.

Post Office—Mail Service.... $2,125,000

Mr. McMULLEN. There is an increase here of over $78,000 for the mail service, and we should have some explanation of it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This difference is due to the necessity of providing for the change in the system of paying the Grand Trunk Railway Company for mail service. The change took place on the 1st of January, 1892, and the additional amount required was estimated for last year, but the estimate of last year was not adopted. Last year the amount paid to the Grand Trunk Railway Company was $379,075.40.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see by the Auditor General's Report that there is an amount of $5,174 for advertising. What is that advertising for?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The advertising is for the accommodation of the public in most of the large centres, and it is becoming more expensive every year. It is for the purpose of indicating to the public the different trains and the different means of transferring the mails. I think that most hon. gentlemen in the House will admit that it is very important that that expenditure should be incurred in the public interest.

Mr. McMULLEN. It cost $100 for advertising in Montreal, and $275 for advertising in Quebec. Montreal being a very much larger city I cannot understand why there should be that difference.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot from memory tell the hon. gentleman why the difference does exist, but there must be a reason. It may be that the advertisements in Montreal is distributed over several papers, and perhaps only one paper in Quebec.

Mr. DEVLIN. It must be in more papers in Quebec, because it cost $275 there, and only $100 in Montreal.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot exactly give the reason to the hon. gentleman, but I am perfectly certain that the reason is perfectly good when I am able to give it.

Mr. DEVLIN. You will find in the Auditor General's Report that it cost $275 in Quebec and only $100 in Montreal.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Montreal cannot much complain of that. That must be exactly as I have told the hon. gentleman. There may be one paper in Montreal, and there may be two or three in Quebec.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Which papers are they in in Quebec?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The best papers.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Then I suppose 'L'Electeur' must be one of them?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; I would hardly select that paper as being a very good one.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. If you say the advertisement is put in the best papers, then it must be put in 'L'Electeur.'

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It may be according to the hon. gentleman's views, but not mine.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Seriously, had you the advertisement in 'L'Electeur'?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, I had not.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. If this advertisement is for the benefit of the public, then I think it should be in the best papers irrespective of party, and we should not be obliged to subscribe to a particular paper in order to see it. Both parties should have an opportunity of reading it in the newspaper of their choice. To which paper in Quebec was this sum of $275 paid?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The information, of course, hardly comes under this item, and if I had the information for every paper over the Dominion it would cover a very large list of newspapers. But I can tell the hon. gentleman that the advertisements of the post office do not appear in 'L'Electeur.'

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Why not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Simply because, though the hon. gentleman may consider it a paper that should receive the advertisement, I, as head of the department, did not consider it necessary that the advertisement should appear in 'L'Electeur.'

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I do not think that is a good reason. The hon. Minister says that this money is spent for the good of the public. If so, I do not see how the public can profit, if the advertisement is put only in the Quebec 'Chronicle,' which is an English paper. It is a good paper, more or less, and I do not object to the advertisement appearing in it; but I think it is not fair that it should not also appear in 'L'Electeur,' which is the only Liberal paper in Quebec. I think it should be published in 'L'Electeur,' not as a Liberal paper, but in the interest of the public, because if these advertisements are for the public, I have a right to be able to read them in the paper of my choice, and not be obliged to go to the Quebec 'Chronicle' to see them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman reads the 'Chronicle.'

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I would like to see it in 'Le Sentinelle,' also.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. And the 'Courrier du Canada.'

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the practice in regard to these advertisements? Are they only to be put in Conservative papers?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The advertisements are to be given to papers of large circulation in the different centres—papers like the Quebec 'Chronicle,' which has just been mentioned, which is a commercial paper with a large circulation.

Mr. TARTE. A very small circulation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is no rule laid down with regard to the selection of any of the papers, but if the hon. gentleman consults the list he will find that the papers selected are papers having a large circulation in the different centres.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And which always support the Government.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They sometimes do.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I do not suppose the Minister is serious in mentioning the 'Chronicle' as having a large circulation. What is the circulation of the 'Chronicle'?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not tell the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman is a newspaper man himself, and must know that better than I.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. The hon. gentleman must not say that he gives the advertisements to papers of large circulation, because 'L'Electeur' has three or four times the circulation of the 'Chronicle' in Quebec. That is not a good reason either.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General how it comes that, since the object of this vote is to provide the public with a knowledge of the hours of the departure and arrival of the mails, there are only three points in the whole province of Quebec which are considered worthy of receiving this information.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Four—Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers and Hull.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman will find that there are more than four points. There are several in Ontario.

Mr. DEVLIN. I am speaking of the province of Quebec. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General if under this heading the amount required to pay the Gatineau Valley Railway for the mail service performed by it is included.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, all the mail service is included under this vote.

Mr. DEVLIN. I see that the hon. gentleman has also under this heading items providing for advertisements in newspapers calling for mail contracts. I would like to ask him if it is the custom of the department to call for tenders for the carrying of the mails.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Certainly it is.

Mr. DEVLIN. Not invariably.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No. Under the law we call for tenders for carrying the mails, and some are extended without calling again for tenders. But invariably the contract is given after tenders have been called for by advertisement.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. Postmaster General, I am sure, would very much oblige this side of the House if he could give this information: Is the department, by law, obliged to call for tenders for carrying the mails?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, under the statute the department is required to call for tenders when the contract exceeds $200.

Mr. DEVLIN. How comes it that the Postmaster General, replying to a question I put some time ago, in regard to mail service to Lascelles, stated that the Government did not call for tenders, but that the gentleman holding the contract, one Mr. Joynt, was paid, I think, $365 a year for carrying the mail, and simply held the contract at the pleasure of the Government?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Because it was a contract that had been extended, as I have just explained. For the first contract tenders were asked, and as I understand, the Lascelles contract was an extended one.

Mr. DEVLIN. For a number of years?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not tell the hon. gentleman now. How could the hon. gentleman expect me from memory to tell how many years when there are hundreds of contracts all over Canada?

Mr. DEVLIN. Might I ask whether it is the intention that this contract shall be continued for a very long time?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The contract is going on, and when the time comes to renew the contract, it will be time enough for the hon. gentleman to question me, and if I still keep the position I now have, I shall answer him.

Mr. DEVLIN. I put this question in the interest of that portion of my constituency. I have gone to the department and asked that that portion should be treated fairly in this matter. The Postmaster General tells me when the contract expires will be time enough to look into the matter, but when will that time expire? Last year and the year before I inquired about this matter, and I have since applied to the department, and the answer is always the same. The whole fact is this, that the Government gives this gentleman, a favourite of the department, $365 for performing a service which, I am satisfied, would be done for much less, if tenders were invited. And the present service is not giving satisfaction to the people. It is not for my own pleasure that I am calling attention to this matter, and I should like to know what prospect there is of this contract not being renewed again and justice being done.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have told the hon. gentleman that the contract is going on, and that when the times comes to reconsider it, will be the proper time for the department to declare its policy. The Postmaster General was in his right in continuing that contract. I defy the hon. gentleman to show anything in the statutes—and the Post Office Department is more controlled by statutory law than any other—which prevents the Postmaster General from extending a contract.

Mr. DEVLIN. I am not questioning the statute at all. The hon. gentleman said himself that when a contract exceeds $200, it is usual to call for tenders. Tenders no doubt were invited for a certain number of years, but when those years expired new tenders were not called.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They need not be called.

Mr. DEVLIN. And perhaps will not be called again.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know that.

Mr. DEVLIN. I can vouch for it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman knows it, he need not question me.

Mr. DEVLIN.

Mr. DEVLIN. I have a perfect right to ask the question.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Certainly.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman does not own the Post Office Department, though by his conversation to-night he would seem to indicate that he is the sole proprietor and master. I am simply asking for a little justice and nothing more. These people pay taxes, and more probably than the Postmaster General, and the justice they ask has been denied them year after year. I had the promise from the hon. gentleman himself last session that he would look into the matter, and he never has.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have certainly.

Mr. DEVLIN. What has been the result of the hon. gentleman's investigation?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The result is what I have explained. The hon. gentleman is now complaining of that result.

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the result?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was unfortunately not meeting the views of my hon. friend.

Mr. DEVLIN. The result was nothing. The investigation was on par with many other investigations in the hon. gentleman's department.

Mr. BORDEN. I would ask the Minister if I understood him correctly, when he said that all contracts over $200 might be renewed without calling for tenders.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. I had a different opinion. I understood that the department had power to renew all contracts under $200 without calling for tenders, but not over $200. Then there is absolutely no limit as to the amount of a contract which may be renewed without offering it again to public tender?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that the statute law?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. I understood the Minister to say that it was the custom of the department to offer in the first instance all new contracts, for new services, to public tender.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. I know of a case in point in which there was a very decided violation of that custom in my constituency. A year ago a new service was established along a line of railway, some fourteen or fifteen miles in length, involving half a dozen new mail routes to and from various stations.

Not one of those mail services was offered to public tender. Not only that, but a gentleman, a politician in my own county, actually went about the county and farmed out these mail contracts to his political friends. That is a fact for which I can vouch. I called the attention of the Minister to it, and I urged that he should offer the services to public tender, and I do not know why he has not done so. I refer to the Cornwallis Valley Railway. To do that was a great stretch of his prerogative; and when the matter was brought to his attention, he should at once have annulled those contracts and offered the service to public tender.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand the Postmaster General to say that the law authorizes him to renew contracts over $200 without calling for tenders?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes; when it is a renewal of the contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like the hon. gentleman to read the clause of the statute, because that certainly does not correspond with my recollection. I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman was bound to call for tenders, although I think there is some provision in the law which enables him, on taking certain formalities, to decline accepting the lowest tender. I do not think, however, that the law contemplated we should dispense with tenders. The clause in the revised statutes is as follows:—

The Postmaster General, before entering into any contract for carrying the mail involving an annual cost of more than two hundred dollars shall give at least six weeks previous notice by advertisement in such newspaper or newspapers as he selects in each case and by public notice put up in the principal post offices concerned in such contract, that such contract is intended to be made and of the day on which tenders for the same will be by him received.

Then it goes on to provide:

The contract in all cases in which there is more than one tender shall be awarded to the lowest tenderer who offers sufficient security for the faithful performance of the contract, unless the Postmaster General is satisfied that it is for the interests of the public not to accept the lowest tender. Where he does not give the contract to the lowest tenderer, he shall report his reasons therefor to the Governor General for the information of Parliament.

Now, if that be still the law, as I suppose it is, the hon. gentleman is bound in all cases to advertise for tenders for contracts involving over $200, although he is not bound in all cases to accept the lowest tender, but where, on his responsibility, he declines to accept the lowest tender, then he must report his reasons to the Governor General for the information of Parliament, and they ought to be communicated to Parliament wherever such a departure from the established rule as the refusal to accept the lowest tender takes place. That is the law as I understand it, and it differs materially from the construction the hon. gentleman was just giving it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have introduced no change in the practice of the department over which I preside. It has been the invariable practice when hon. gentlemen were in power, and since, to advertise for tenders when a contract was first entered into; but there may be a renewal of a contract without new tenders being called for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should say that was very dubious law.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not going to discuss the question beyond stating to the hon. gentleman that the practice of the department has not varied. When the hon. gentleman rose to put this question, I was about to answer the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) who complains of contracts having been entered into to which he called the attention of the department. If the contracts have not been entered into previously, the only reason possible why tenders were not called for must have been that they were under $200. There could not be any other reason, because the rule is invariable. The officials who submit all these contracts to the Postmaster General are naturally perfectly au fait with the regulations, and when they submit these contracts for his approbation and signature, the conditions have been complied with.

Mr. McMULLEN. I called the hon. gentleman's attention to the renewal of the contract of Patrick Kennedy, of Montreal, for carrying letters from boxes in the city to the post office. The hon. gentleman replied that it had been renewed without tender. This contract involved an amount of some $4,800.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That was a renewal of a contract. When this contract was first made, tenders were called for.

Mr. McMULLEN. It was not advertised when the renewal took place?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; that is the subject matter of the whole discussion. The contract with Mr. Kennedy has not been renewed since I became Postmaster General. But this case merely goes to prove the correctness of my statement that the practice of the department has been, not to advertise when contracts are to be renewed. That has been the practice under all who have been head of the department.

Mr. BRODEUR. I see in the Auditor General's Report an item of $500 paid to J. M. McDougall for legal services. What was that paid for?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would not be absolutely certain, but I think it was for taking the case against Paquin who had been assistant postmaster at Hull, and who was prosecuted for irregularities—in fact, prosecuted for felony, if my recollection is correct.

Mr. BRODEUR. I understand that that case came before the court of Queen's Bench at Aylmer. Why was not the case put under the supervision of the regular Crown prosecutor? I understand that in the province of Quebec—and it is the same in all the other provinces—there is in each district a Crown prosecutor for conducting such cases. I do not see the necessity for the Government having special counsel in this case, which was one of the regular cases coming before the court.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think that where it is possible the Government invariably ask the Crown prosecutor to look after such cases. But I think the hon. gentleman will admit that they never look after the preliminary examination which takes place in a criminal prosecution, and there must be some counsel appointed by the Government to look after the interests of the department in these proceedings. I have no doubt that this charge represents the fees required to be paid the counsel for looking after this investigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. Do I understand that Mr. McDougall represented the Government at the preliminary examination, or that he represented the Government during the trial.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman seems to take a great deal of interest in this item. No doubt he has followed up the different cases. I believe that Paquin had three trials.

Mr. BRODEUR. But he had only one preliminary examination.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am talking of the three trials which took place. I am speaking merely from memory, but I think Mr. McDougall represented the Government in every one of those trials, besides representing the Government in a military investigation.

Mr. BRODEUR. Will the hon. gentleman give us the exact amount which has been paid, and for what cause?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Certainly. I will give the hon. gentleman all the details.

Mr. MARTIN. On this item I would like to say a word or two in regard to the management of post offices in the province of Manitoba. I understand that it is the practice of the Post Office Department to let mail contracts for a period of four years; and I would inform the department that that is a very bad practice in a new country like Manitoba and the North-west Territories. For instance, in Manitoba, within the last few years we have had the curious spectacle of new railways being built and the stations on those railways being entirely without mail communication for years after the railway had begun running. Take, for instance, the Northern Pacific railway, which built over 300 miles in that province, and it was three or four years before towns growing up along that railway had mail communication oftener than once or twice a week. They got their mails by stage lines, from the old Canadian Pacific railway, and the people were practically out of the world. It had a most discouraging effect upon the progress of the country. For instance, a town like Wawanessa, a lively little town, was opened up, and merchants went in there and endeavoured to do a business, and they had practically to give the express company all their mail matter, and pay 25 cents a letter postage instead of three cents. I suppose that, to a certain extent, the department was bound by prior contracts extending over the period during which these new railways were opened up, and I would suggest that in a new country where railways are being built, there should be a proviso in every contract, allowing the department to cancel, in case a new railway was opened up. But even this excuse cannot always be urged by the Government. The Northern Pacific built a railway from Winnipeg to Portage la Prairie on the south side of the Assiniboine. There is a town on that railway called Oakville, a small place that did not exist before the railway was built, so that there could not have been any previous contract. Unless arrangements have been made within a month or two, that town is still practically without mail communication. The mail comes from Poplar Point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, which runs from Winnipeg to Portage la Prairie on the north side of the Assiniboine, and the Northern Pacific runs on the south side of the Assiniboine, Poplar Point, is about eighteen miles from Oakville. The Assiniboine river runs between the two points, and is a very difficult river to cross during six weeks or two months in the year. For three or four weeks in the spring, and three or four weeks in the fall, the ferry is practically unworkable. In the spring, the river is liable to floods, and the result is that during those portions of the year the people have to wait weeks for their mail. Here is a spectacle of a town situated on a railway where trains are passing every day, and getting their mail only once a week. There is no possible excuse in this case from a prior contract, because this town was brought into existence entirely by the railway. When the post office was established, if the department made a contract at that time to have the mail delivered from Poplar Point, it was very imprudent on their part. These people have been very much put out about it;

Mr. BRODEUR.

they are in a new country, and the Government are supposed to help on the development of a new country; but they permit arrangements by which the people get their mail only once a week, although a passenger train passes twice a day, once in each direction. It seems to me that a little more forethought should be exercised. I do not know whether there has been any favouritism to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in opposition to the Northern Pacific. At any rate, the Northern Pacific came in there and built 300 miles of railway, and opened up a lot of new towns, and these towns were practically without mail communication for years and years after the building of the railway. This branch line between Winnipeg and Portage la Prairie has been in operation about five years, and during the whole of the time there has been at least one passenger train a day, and unless it has been done within a short time, the Government have made no arrangements for carrying the mail by the railway. It seems to me this is one of the ways in which hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of endeavouring to help the country along, have done all they could to retard the country, and disgust the settlers who have gone in there.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This is the first time I have heard any hon. gentleman in the House or in the press accuse the Canadian Government of not giving the best post office accommodations to the people of Canada that is given in any country in the world. I say that the accommodation which is furnished, for the amount of money, which is provided, gives to the people of this country better mail facilities than you can find in the United States, per head of population. We have the most perfect system, and one that helps the country to a greater extent than any other mail system in the world. When the hon. gentleman states from his place that the Government have adopted this means to retard the settlement of that country, he is repeating exactly the same cry which is invariably used by hon. gentlemen on his side of the House to decry the country and to prevent people from going in there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hon. gentlemen may sneer at what I am saying, but just such charges brought by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House have contributed more than the failing of the Post Office Department to give postal accommodation, to prevent people from settling in this country. How can we expect people to come here when they hear of Canadians standing up and running down the country continually?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I say so, and I mean every word I am saying. It is an admitted fact that the mail service in this country, according to population, is superior to the mail service of any other country in the world, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to deny what I am stating now. But the hon. gentleman believes it to be his duty because he sits on the left of the Speaker, to level a charge against the Government that will not injure the Government so much as it will injure the country. People will hesitate coming to this country when they hear that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) says that on account of deficiencies in the mail service, it is impossible for people to settle in that portion of Canada.

Mr. MARTIN. I think the attempt of the Postmaster General to answer me falls very short of meeting a plain charge. I make the specific charge that the hon. gentleman's department allowed the settlers in a considerable number of new towns in Manitoba, to be without post office communications for four years after a railway had been built through those towns. In answer to that, the hon. gentleman says that Canada has the best mail service in the world. I defy the hon. gentleman to point to a civilized country that can show a case similar to that I have mentioned. I undertake to say that the people of the United States would not stand for a moment the fact of a railway opening up a new country, and yet having the mail delivered by means of the old stage route, thereby giving the people instead of a daily mail, to which they were entitled, from the fact that trains were passing their doors every day, a mail once a week. The hon. gentleman says it is unpatriotic for me to come here and expose the maladministration of this department. The hon. gentleman wishes it to be understood that he can manage the Post Office Department, and each of the other Ministers can manage his department, no matter how gross the abuses may be and how unbusiness-like may be their methods. I admit that in a sense it is disloyal and unpatriotic from the hon. gentleman's standpoint to expose here such maladministration. It is thought by him better to make the people from whom we expect to obtain immigrants believe the departments of the Government here were administrated honestly and in a business-like way, and hide from them the fact that such gross abuses as those to which I have referred exist in the North-west. That has been the policy pursued to a certain extent. Hon. gentlemen from the North-west coming here and supporting the Government have pursued that policy. They have said that no matter how bad things may be, and to what extent the Government may misgovern the country, the best thing to be done is to delude the public, and at all events to get people into the country. But the difficulty is that when the people go there, they find these matters out, and instead of any permanent good resulting to the country this system of keeping everything quiet, and of loyally following the lead of hon. gentlemen opposite in all their misdeeds and misgovernment, has not proved permanently beneficial to the country. I do not propose to be influenced for a moment by the suggestion of the hon. Minister. If I find that the Government are not properly administering the affairs of the country, and especially the province of Manitoba, I propose at all times to rise in my place and tell the people of this country, and of other countries, so far as the record may reach them, the true state of affairs. The hon. Minister will find that his answer will not be accepted by the people of Manitoba, and it is not accepted by me, as one of their representatives. The question before the House and the country is whether my charge is a true one or not. The hon. Minister in his answer admits it is true. The hon. Minister admits that the department has perpetrated this great wrong on that portion of the country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not admit anything.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman said it was unpatriotic on my part to call attention to such a gross abuse.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I never said so.

Mr. MARTIN. I understood the hon. gentleman to say so. What wrong act did I do? If my statement was untrue, then there might have been something in the hon. gentleman's contention. If I maligned the country, then the hon. gentleman has a suitable answer to make. But the hon. gentleman knows that my statement is the exact truth.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the hon. Minister say that Oakville is not in the position in which I stated it to be a short time ago, in which it was when I left, and I do not believe there has been any improvement, and that this place gets a mail only once a week, although passenger trains pass it every day? It was ridiculous the way the mail was carried under the Government system. It was taken, I believe from Gretna by stage, across the country to West Lynn. In many instances, particularly at Oakville, the people only get their mail once a week, and during the winter, when the rivers are impassable, the mail reaches them only once in two or three weeks. The hon. Minister says I must not refer to these matters, but all these mistakes and acts of misgovernment on the part of the Government must be kept secret, and that I have not the right to bring them before this committee and mention them. That is the argument adduced. The hon. gentleman is not singular in his suggestion. That has been the policy laid down by hon. Ministers and members supporting them.

Mr. MARTIN.

They have said: It is true the Government have mismanaged the country; that the policy of the Government in many directions is antagonistic to the best interests of Canada; but that it is not good policy to say so, and that it is desirable to keep these matters quiet and delude the settlers. They say: Let us tell them all kinds of lies about the country, in regard to the way it is administered, as regards the railway communication and mail accommodation, and the policy of the Government, and let us at all events get the people into the country. The trouble is, as was stated by the Minister of the Interior the other day, that we must depend largely on the representations and influence of the settlers who have come into the country, we must depend on their experience and recommendations as regards the settlement of the country. The experience of the settlers has not been that the Government have managed matters in their interests. As I said the other day, the Government have managed the land regulations as little as possible in the interests of the country. I do not say that this mail matter is one of the greatest importance, or that the management of the Post Office Department of itself would be sufficient to keep settlers out of the country; but it tends in the same direction. The hon. Minister will not find a parallel in any other country where a new railway was built and new towns established and a stage route was still retained, in consequence of which merchants have been obliged to use express companies to send their letters, and have been compelled to pay 25 cents per letter, instead of 3 cents, the postage rate. I say that this action on the part of the department has added to the discontent, and that the depressing influence of the action of the Government in other respects in that country has prevented settlement. I repudiate entirely the suggestion of the hon. Minister that it is unpatriotic to bring a matter of this kind up in the House. If the Government is wrong, what is best to do? Is it best to say that the wrong does not exist, and to shut the light out from it, or is it best to come before the nation's representatives and to ask to have the evil remedied at the earliest possible moment? If we bring it to light, and make it right, then there will be no more trouble about it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has the Postmaster General taken any grant to provide for letter carriers in the city of Brantford this year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have taken no grant for that purpose this year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is not that an omission on the part of the Minister? Does he not think that it is now time that the service should be extended to that important city? Has the Minister considered it at all?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, it has been considered. This year from the changes that have taken place in our tariff, we have reduced the responsibilities of the people to a very great extent, and it is necessary for every department to cut down expenditure as far as possible. I admit the great importance of the town that the hon. gentleman has spoken of, and hope at a later date that it may be possible for us to have letter carriers in Brantford.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Next year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would not like to make any promise.

Mr. FORBES. The Postmaster General has boasted a great deal about his postal service being equal to any in the world. Let me ask him if he has made any provision in this estimate for the carrying of the mails at Port L'Herbert, on the eastern side of Sable river, in the county of Queen's, N.S.? I brought this matter to the notice of the hon. gentleman, and I got the usual courteous reply, but that was the end of it. Will he now promise to extend the mail service in accordance with the requisition of my letter so that these 15 or 16 families may be accommodated? He cannot have his service the best in the world if he does not do that. These people belong to the best class of citizens in the country, the fishermen of the Dominion of Canada, and they have no postal service at all. Once in seven or ten days, they have got to cross the river in a boat of their own, and walk several miles to get the mail, and if the Government would provide that the mail should only go a few miles further they could get it much more conveniently, especially in the winter time. I hope the Minister will take into consideration the details I have laid before him in writing, and find his way clear to extend the mail service along that route.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. When the hon. gentleman referred the matter to the department, I had it placed in the hands of the inspector, and until I receive a report from him, I cannot give the hon. gentleman an answer.

Mr. FORBES. That is a most indefinite answer, because the inspector had the matter before him many months ago. He will not even acknowledge the letters that were sent to him by the people of that district and by myself. I do not want to charge him with discourtesy, but I do charge him with negligence. I am glad to hear that the matter has got a step further than a year ago, and is now before the department. If the hon. Minister would place it in the hands of some other person than the present inspector of Nova Scotia there might be some hope of having it looked into shortly. I know the inspector of Nova Scotia and the Postmaster General is quite safe in leaving it in his hands, if he does not intend to carry out the service the people want.

Mr. BRODEUR. Has there been a chief post office inspector yet appointed for the city of Montreal?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. BRODEUR. Is the office going to be abolished?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, I do not expect it will be abolished.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. King has left that position for six or seven months, and I would like to know from the Government if they intend to put somebody else in his place? Montreal is the most important division in the country, and there should, I think, be an inspector there. We have there, for example, some very bad assistant inspectors, and I refer especially to Mr. Gervais. For my part I would have no confidence in such a man as Mr. Gervais. I believe that he is a man in whom we cannot have any confidence. It has been proven before the courts that this man Gervais has made a false report to the Government, and it has been proved also that he does not care about making investigations so long as his political tendencies dictate that he should not. It is the duty of the Government to appoint some responsible head for that department in order that there shall be more justice done in it than there has been for some months past.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if any steps have been taken to improve the mail service between Montreal and Buckingham? The hon. gentleman will remember that there was considerable discussion in the House last session with regard to this matter, and not only that, but that he was approached by deputation from the county of Ottawa asking for this improved mail service. He will also remember that at this special time he made some improvement in the mail service between Montreal and St. Scholastique. The demand for that improvement was made, I believe, by the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Girouard), and about the same time I approached the Minister and his answer was: That the Government had not had sufficient time to consider the matter, but that they would immediately consider it. It is a considerable time since that answer was given. I now ask the Minister if anything has been done to improve the mail service between Montreal and Buckingham?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I hear no complaints about the mail service between Montreal and Buckingham, and as far as the department knows, not only are there no complaints, but the mail service between these two localities is quite equal to anything we have in any other locality. I do not see what improvement we can make on that line between Montreal and Buckingham.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman will remember that a deputation composed of representative men of the county went in a body and laid the whole case before him, and he promised to take it into very serious consideration.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did.

Mr. DEVLIN. Well, has any decision been arrived at?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have told the hon. gentleman that the service is just as perfect as it can be made.

Mr. DEVLIN. I must take the hon. gentleman's answer as conclusive that St. Scholastique, because it happens to be in a county represented by a supporter of the Government, is to have a better service than Buckingham, although the revenue at the former place is very small, and the revenue at the latter place very large. To come to another question, may I ask the hon. Postmaster General if he has lately received any petitions from the Patrons of Industry of Lascelles and Rupert asking for better mail service for that section, and if any reply to those petitions has been given holding out any hope?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As to the conclusion which the hon. gentleman has arrived at, of course I am not responsible for it. The hon. gentleman stated that he had a perfect right to conclude from my statement that St. Scholastique had been treated differently from Buckingham. By what process the hon. gentleman has arrived at that conclusion is of course his affair, and not mine. As to the question of applications being made by the gentlemen to whom he has referred, I am not aware that any application has been made. If any has been made, it has been very recently, and I can say that no answer has been given promising that new accommodation.

Mr. DEVLIN. Very well. I might ask the hon. Minister of Justice if he was the recipient of a petition from the Patrons of Industry of Lascelles on the subject of improved mail service?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not remember.

Mr. DEVLIN. I was under the impression that both the Postmaster General and the Minister of Justice had been presented with these petitions. This is a long-standing grievance, and I think the Patrons of Industry sent a petition to the Minister of Justice asking him to intercede with the Post Office Department to have it considered. The Postmaster General, in speaking of this very excellent service, said that the only object he had in view was to promote the public convenience. A few days ago a question was put in this House, I think by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) in regard to changes that had recently been made at a point in the county of Pontiac called Vinton, and the answer of the hon. Postmaster General was that the change had been made in order to meet public convenience. The facts of this case, as I understand them, are as follows:—Vinton is a village situated seven miles from Coulonge and four miles from Campbell's Bay—lying between these two places. There is a post office at Coulonge and a post office at Campbell's Bay, and there was a post office at Vinton for many years, perhaps twenty years. The duties of this post office were discharged by a gentleman of the name of Gilchrist. He had occupied that post for a great many years, during which not a single charge was made against him. Recently, almost without notice, and under circumstances of a very trying nature, Mr. Gilchrist was notified by the department that his services would be no longer required, and the post office was closed. Mr. Gilchrist, having occupied the post office so long, could not very well undertake new duties; he was a cripple, having lost one arm many years ago, but he was able to attend remarkably well to the duties of postmaster at Vinton. It is said, but with what truth I do not know, that the friends of Mr. Gilchrist were not entirely in harmony with the political creed professed by the hon. Postmaster General. More than that, there was a building not far distant which belonged to a very prominent friend of the party in power, and which was about to become vacant. The result was that this man who had served the department so long and so faithfully, against whom no charge had ever been made, who was crippled, was discharged in order that the office and the position and its emoluments should be transferred to the building of that political favourite of the Government. The hon. gentleman, when questioned in the House in regard to this some time ago, replied that it was for public convenience. Let us examine and see. Vinton, as I said, is situated seven miles from Coulonge. Between Vinton and Coulonge the people were naturally served by the post offices of Vinton and Coulonge. Now, the hon. gentleman removes the office a little more than half a mile nearer to Campbell's Bay, bringing it only three and half miles from Campbell's Bay and making it seven and a half miles from Coulonge. If I criticise the action of the department, it is not with the intention of decrying my country. I simply criticise it because I think it is deserving of criticism. I would not object to the change if it had been in the interest of public convenience, but it is not. The fact is, the change was made to suit the convenience of a political favourite, and I put the case before the Postmaster General simply to show that after all his department is not administered solely for the convenience of the public.

Mr. CASEY. It is rather too bad to ask us to discuss all the details connected with the public service in one lump item like this. There should have been a separate item for each province and each service, so that we could conduct, in some systematic manner, the consideration of the different questions that have to be brought up. I have some information to ask of the hon. gentleman in continuation of the question I put to him some time ago as regards the St. Thomas Post Office. I asked whether the Postmaster received any allowance besides his salary, and whether the office was managed as a city post office. I was told that the salary was $2,000, and that there was no allowance. I was told that the assistant postmaster was paid $1,020, and the rest of the salaries were given in a lump sum. Has the Minister got the details of those other salaries? I understand from other sources that the allowances are very considerably below what you would expect, some as low as $18 a month. The assistant postmaster (Mr. Boughner) managed the office during several months, and should have been promoted. All the salary he has is $1,020, an amount which is given to employees of the inside branch of the service here, who are discharging comparatively unimportant functions. I wish to make this criticism in a friendly way. I have always maintained that promotion should be the rule in the civil service, and should be the reward of long service and proved efficiency. This young gentleman, the assistant postmaster, discharged the duties of postmaster efficiently for a considerable period between the death of the former postmaster and the appointment of the present one, and he had the best claim to the promotion. Instead of promoting the assistant postmaster, Mr. William Ingram, brother of the sitting member, was promoted from a position he held in the Customs at $1,400, to that of a postmaster at a salary of $2,000. Mr. Ingram had never rendered any particular service to the country before he got his first appointment, or even to the party until the last election. Mr. William Ingram took charge of the preparation of the voters' list at that election, and no doubt rendered very valuable services to his party in seeing that the lists made it much easier for his brother to be elected, and in reward for those services he was given the position of collector of customs at $1,400 per year. Then the postmastership became vacant. It is alleged that the member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) wanted the position of postmaster for himself, but a strong petition was forwarded by Conservatives urging that this should not be done, because it would not do to open the constituency, and besides it would be giving too much to Mr. Ingram's family. As to whether such application was put in, the Postmaster General, no doubt, will know. At all events the constituency was not opened, and the brother of the sitting member got the appointment. It is becoming too common that members of this House should have their relations appointed to office. A case was brought to the attention of the House the other day in which the son of the hon. member for East Northumberland was appointed to a post office. Now, I want to know if that petition I spoke of was sent in from St. Thomas, and also if there has been a petition asking to have St. Thomas made a city office, and what the intentions of the Government are in that respect, and, lastly, on what basis are the salaries of the assistant postmaster and the other officials in that office settled—are they fixed by the postmaster or by the department here?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I wish to say just one word in reference to the Vinton Postmaster. The hon. gentleman made an unjust charge in reference to the change which was made in that post office. I told the hon. gentleman exactly what took place. I stated that Vinton post office was not considered to be in a convenient place. The inspector was sent down there, and it was decided that the post office was not in a convenient place. His report came in. That report is accessible to any hon. gentleman who wishes to look at it. It was decided that the post office had to be changed, and it was changed, and placed in a locality which was more convenient for the public. That is why I stated that it was for the convenience of the public that the change took place. The hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) inquires after the changes that have taken place in the St. Thomas post office. The hon. gentleman knows well, as do the rest of us, that there was a rumour that Mr. Ingram, brother of the present postmaster, wished to be appointed postmaster. These rumours must be taken with all due consideration, but not with too much consideration. The result, as a matter of fact, was the appointment of the brother of the sitting member for East Elgin. The hon. gentleman has asked me as to letters and petitions sent in. I would not be positive upon that point. I did not know that the hon. gentleman desired to get the information, otherwise I should have had it ready for him. I am always anxious to give any information respecting my department that I can consistently with my duty. I would not be sure that any formal petition came in, but I know that letters were written, some recommending one man and some recommending another. However, the result has been as I have stated. From a departmental standpoint, I can say that Mr. Ingram gives perfect satisfaction. The work of the department is carried on just as efficiently as we could desire. When the hon. gentleman questioned me before on this subject I stated that the postmaster's salary was $2,000 per annum, in addition to which he was allowed $1,020 for the assistant postmaster. I fully agree with what the hon. gentleman said about the assistant postmaster. He is a very efficient officer. There is no complaint against him, and, further, there is no reason why there should be.

Mr. CASEY. He acted as postmaster.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Just as happens in cases all over the Dominion. When the postmaster dies or is removed, the duties of the office are very often carried on by the assistant until a new postmaster is appointed. The hon. gentleman knows well that not only under the present Government but under the former Government appointments have been made to these positions on the recommendation of friends of the Government. Now, when these recommendations lead to the appointment of a man who is perfectly qualified, I think there cannot be any objection to selection by that method. The hon. gentleman asked me if the postmaster received any commission or allowance. I stated that he received no other commission or allowance above his salary, except the amount mentioned for the assistant postmaster.

Mr. CASEY. How about the payment of the salaries of the other employees? You said something about that, I believe.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; that is my answer, as given in the 'Hansard.'

Mr. CASEY. Can the hon. gentleman tell me about the other assistants, how they are paid?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not a city post office, so the postmaster would be called upon to pay for assistance, except the salary of the assistant postmaster.

Mr. CASEY. For instance, rent of boxes—does that go to the postmaster or to the department?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It goes to the postmaster. Out of that he is supposed to pay his assistants other than the assistant postmaster.

Mr. CASEY. Then I understand that Mr. Ingram gets a salary of $2,000, and an allowance of $1,020, and that the revenue of the boxes goes to the postmaster, and he pays his other assistants out of that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. How does this compare with the system adopted in other places of equal size—Stratford, for example?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The system is exactly the same as in other places.

Mr. CASEY. I do not expect the Minister to have, without notice, all the items that are asked for. I am asking for information simply so far as he can remember. The

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Minister describes the policy which has been heretofore adopted in Canada, of making these appointments purely political.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not say that.

Mr. CASEY. But appointments are made on the advice and recommendations of the member for the county, so that these appointments are political patronage. I do not say that has not been the rule under both Governments, but what I say is that it is not the best method. The principle of promotion is a sound principle, and I believe that in this case it would have given more satisfaction had the assistant postmaster been promoted to the position of postmaster. But, even if these appointments are to be made a matter of political patronage, I believe I am expressing the opinions of most of the people in St. Thomas when I say that a more satisfactory appointment might have been made. There are many others, whom it would be invidious to name personally, who had much greater claims on the party than the gentleman who has got the appointment. But that is a matter, of course, for the Government to settle with them.

Mr. PERRY. I want to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the very inconvenient way in which the mails in summer are carried to the western portion of Prince Edward Island, west of Summerside, where there is a population of over 30,000 people. Would you believe, Mr. Chairman, that it takes four days for a letter to go from Shediac about 40 miles from Prince Edward Island, to the west end of the Island, and get an answer back again? It is the same train and same conveyance that carries the mail from here, and why not have our mails carried from Summerside directly west the moment they are landed and sorted in Summerside? Of course, Charlottetown is much better off, and I presume Georgetown is much better off also. They have special trains to carry the mail from Charlottetown, and the mail is assorted there, but the west end of the Island is left unprovided for. The mails remain in Summerside all night, and the next day they are carried to Tignish; the train only remains 35 minutes in Tignish, so that it is impossible for men doing business in Tignish to open their letters and write answers to send to Shediac, or St. John, or anywhere else across the Straits on the same day. Take St. John, N.B., for instance, with which place a great many of our people do business. It will take four days for a letter written in St. John to come to Tignish, or Port Hill, or Elmsdale, or anywhere west of Summerside. Now, is that fair? Could not the Government, with the assistance of the Postmaster General, take this matter into consideration? We knew the great importance of mail accommodation to people doing business. I dare say this is a new thing. I dare say the Postmaster General has not considered this matter. I know it is difficult for the Government to consider everything. Perhaps the case has never been put before them; but I am happy to have an opportunity now to put this case before them, and I hope to have redress, if not now, at least by and by, after the session has closed. I hope the Postmaster General will see that the west end of Prince Edward Island is provided with proper mail accommodation. The fact of the matter is that I have heard people up west say that they were going to get up a special mail carrier with horse and wagon to take the mail from Summerside west on the arrival of the boat. The boat gets into Summerside about five o'clock, and there might be an arrangement made that the boat should get into Summerside with the mail about two o'clock, the mail leaving Summerside for Tignish so much earlier, and leaving Tignish a little earlier in the day to come back to Summerside in order to connect with the boat next morning. If that was carried out, the people would have no reason to grumble, but under present circumstances we have serious reason to complain. It is not a complaint of to-day, or of yesterday, it is a complaint of some years' standing, and I hope that the Government will take up the matter and give it their serious and favourable consideration at once.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This subject has been already brought under my notice by hon. gentlemen representing the Island; and I can tell the hon. gentleman that the inspector will be instructed to get all the information necessary so that the department can take up the matter and deal with it at the earliest possible moment.

Committee rose, and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1 o'clock a.m. (Wednesday.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 13th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RELIEF OF ORLANDO G. JOHNSON.

Mr. METCALFE moved:

That Bill (No. 136) for the relief of Orlando G. Johnson be placed upon the Order paper for second reading on Thursday, 14th of June instant.

Motion agreed to.

MR. TURCOTTE, M.P.

The Serjeant-at-Arms. Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to report that J. B. Provost and

O. E. Larose, the witnesses named in the Orders of the Day of the 11th instant are now in my custody.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved:

That J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose be now brought to the Bar.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved:

That the entries in the Journals of the House of Thursday last, the 7th June instant, and of Monday last, the 11th June instant, with respect to J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, be now read at the Table.

The entries having been read,

(Extract from Journals of 7th June instant.)

Mr. DICKEY, from the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, presented the second report of the said Committee, which is as follows:—

The Committee have the honour to report that in pursuance of the reference made to them by the House on the 17th May last, in the matter of A. J. Turcotte, member for the electoral district of Montmorency, they deemed it necessary to summon amongst other witnesses one J. B. Provost, grocer, and one O. E. Larose, grocer, both of the city of Quebec; that on the 29th of May last the said J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose were summoned by telegram in the usual manner to appear on the 31st May, and though the Committee have proof that the said Provost and Larose personally received the said summons they both made default.

On the 31st May in pursuance of a resolution of the Committee the Clerk sent the sheriff of Quebec summonses in writing to the said Provost and Larose to appear before the Committee on the 7th June, with instructions to serve the same personally upon the said Provost and Larose. In pursuance with these instructions to the sheriff, as appears by the bailiff's return forwarded to the Clerk of the Committee, the said Provost and Larose were, on the second day of June last personally served with the said summons, but have again this day made default. As the Committee are of the opinion that the evidence to be given by the said Provost and Larose is material and necessary to the proper discharge of the duties laid upon the Committee, they beg to report the failure of the said Provost and Larose to obey the order of the Committee and request the action of the House thereon.

Mr. EDGAR moved, that J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, the witnesses named in the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted to this House this day, be ordered to attend at the Bar of this House on Monday, the eleventh day of June, 1894, at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon; which was agreed to.

The Order of the Day being read for the attendance at the Bar of the House of Jean Baptiste Provost and Omer Edouard Larose;

The Serjeant-at-Arms reported that they were not in attendance.

Mr. SPEAKER then informed the House, that in obedience to the order of the House of Thursday last, the 7th instant, the clerk forwarded telegrams to J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose informing them of the order requiring them to attend at the Bar of the House on Monday, the eleventh instant, at three o'clock p.m., and that the telegraph company had duly informed him of the personal delivery of the messages to the parties in question.

The Clerk also forwarded copies in duplicate of the Order of the House, to the sheriff of the city of Quebec, for service on the said J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, and he received from that officer certified copies of the service of the Order on the said persons.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved, That the witnesses in question not having attended at the Bar of the House, in accordance with the order of the House of the 7th day of June instant, Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant for their arrest in order that they may be brought to the Bar of the House at the earliest possible moment; which was agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that Mr. J. B. Provost be asked the following question:—

Have you any explanation to offer of your disobedience to the summons of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of this House requiring your attendance before the committee, and of the Order of the House requiring your attendance at the Bar of the House?

Motion agreed to, and Mr. Speaker put the question.

Mr. J. B. Provost replied:

(Translation.)

May it please this Honourable House:

The reasons which have prevented me, until this day, from complying with the wish of the Committee on Privileges and Elections are the following:

1st. The sister of my partner, Mr. Larose, had been dangerously ill for several days, and he was compelled to be with her day and night. Her illness was of so serious a character that she died on the night of the 11th to the 12th instant. During the absence of Mr. Larose it was absolutely necessary that I should stay at my establishment, and attend to my business, having no one but young clerks in my store.

2nd. Another reason which prevented me from coming here to give my evidence was the repugnance I felt to coming here to testify in a matter in which my relative and former partner was implicated. From what I saw in the newspapers and from what was said in Quebec, I was under the impression that the proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections would not be followed up, and that, therefore, my evidence would not be necessary.

I declare that I respect the authority of the House, and I regret having rendered it necessary for the House to act with severity towards me.

I am here at the disposal of the House and ready to give my evidence on any day and at any hour the House may appoint.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the following question be put to Mr. J. B. Provost:—

Are you prepared to undertake to the House that you will, if relieved from custody, attend and testify before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections at the first meeting of the committee, and at each meeting thereafter, until relieved from further attendance?
Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Motion agreed to, and Mr. Speaker put the question.

Mr. J. B. Provost. Yes, Sir.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that Mr. O. E. Larose be asked the following question:—

Have you any explanation to offer of your disobedience to the summons of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of this House, requiring your attendance before the committee, and of the order of the House requiring your attendance at the Bar of the House?

Motion agreed to, and Mr. Speaker put the question.

Mr. O. E. Larose replied:

(Translation.)

May it please this Honourable House:

If I have not heretofore complied with the desire of the House, and if I have disobeyed its orders, it was for reasons of which the House will not, I feel convinced, fail to appreciate the value.

For several days, one of my sisters, who died at Quebec during the night of the 11th to the 12th instant, was dangerously ill. I had to remain at her bedside, in attendance upon her, day and night, and during that time my partner, Mr. J. B. Provost, was alone at our store attending to our business.

Another consideration which prevented me from coming here to give my evidence before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was the repugnance I felt in giving evidence in a matter which concerned Mr. Arthur Turcotte, my former employer, with whom I have always been on excellent terms.

I am here at the disposal of the House, and prepared to testify before the Committee on any day or at any hour appointed by the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that Mr. O. E. Larose be asked the following question:—

Are you prepared to undertake to the House that you will, if relieved from custody, attend and testify before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections at the first meeting of the committee, and at each meeting thereafter, until relieved from further attendance?

Mr. O. E. Larose. Yes, Sir; I am ready.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Under these circumstances, I move that these two gentlemen be discharged from the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS OF 1837-38.

Mr. McLENNAN asked: 1. Whether the Government is aware that any answer has been returned, and if so, of what nature, to the memorial presented to the late Governor General of Canada, Earl Derby, on July 7th, 1892, by a committee of members of the House of Commons appointed for that purpose, in which it was submitted that the services of the Canadian volunteers of 1837-38 were rendered in the cause of the British Empire in response to the call of Imperial officers and that some recognition is due to the loyalty and services of the brave men who so nobly responded to the call of duty in upholding and preserving peace and order in our country and in repelling foreign invaders therefrom, to which services we owe to-day a continuance of our nationality as citizens of the British Empire of which we are all so justly proud; and expressing the hope that through His Excellency's good offices Her Majesty would be pleased to bestow a medal on each of the surviving volunteers who was engaged on military duty in defence of Her Majesty's territory in Upper and Lower Canada in 1837-38. 2. What decision, if any, has the Government arrived at with respect to the petition signed by seventy members of the House of Commons, and presented to it in July, 1892, praying that justice be done to the claims of the surviving veterans, who in 1837-38 volunteered for military service and by force of arms defended from invasion and internal disorder Her Majesty's possessions in Upper and Lower Canada, and urging that the Government should grant some substantial recognition in lands or money to each of the surviving volunteers who was then engaged in military duty in defence of Her Majesty's territory? 3. Is it the intention of the Government to give effect to the promises contained in the proclamation dated the 18th or 19th December, 1837, issued by Sir Francis Bond Head, the then Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada, calling out the militia to quell the insurrection and repel invasion from the United States, in which proclamation Sir Francis Bond Head in his official capacity promised to those who would enlist, £2 per month during their period of service, together with 100 to 200 acres of land; as set forth in the petitions presented to His Excellency the Governor General in Council by the surviving veterans of 1837-38? 4. Is the Government aware that compensation to the extent of $4,000 was granted by the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario during the session of 1873 to the family of the late Colonel Baldwin, who was instrumental in raising a corps for the defence of this country in 1837, and also that compensation was granted by the said Legislative Assembly of Ontario during the session of 1874 to one John Montgomery, a notorious rebel who took an active part in furthering the rebellion of 1837-38? If so, has any demand or request been preferred by the Government of the province of Ontario to this Government to recoup that province the amounts of said grants of compensation, or either of such grants, and if such demand or request has been preferred by the Government of the province of Ontario, what steps have been taken by the Government of Canada in reference thereto?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Mr. Speaker, a memorial signed by Robert Allan and others was communicated in a letter dated 3rd September, 1892, from Messrs. H. Corby, M.P., and W. B. Northrup, M.P., to His Excellency the Governor General, which was laid before the Governor-in-Council, and upon a report signed by the then Minister of Militia and Defence, the Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, it was stated that this matter had been before the Council upon several previous occasions, and that it had been decided some years previously that the question was a matter which affected the old provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. After that decision, the then Minister of Militia and Defence was unable to make any further recommendation to the Council. The second question has already been answered. It is not the intention of the Government to give effect to alleged promises made by Sir Francis Bond Head. There is no record that those promises were ever made; if made, they should be carried out by the Government of the province of Ontario, which province was responsible for any promises that may have been made by the then Government of Upper Canada. Sir Francis Bond Head's narrative covers the whole period of those troubles, and is very abundant in its details. It contains no allusion whatever to any promises made by him, or by any other persons in authority on his behalf. He speaks of the volunteers as having put themselves at the disposal of the Government upon their own impulsion with "a noble zeal" and perfect devotion to the Crown, and not as being incited by any promises whatever. As regards the governmental action, the records of the Legislature of Ontario show that the sum of $4,000 was voted to the family of the late Col. Baldwin to compensate them for expenses incurred by that officer in the discharge of his military duties during the troubles of 1837-38. There was further the sum of $3,000 paid to the family of one John Montgomery, for loss and damage sustained at that time, also authorized by the Government of the province of Ontario. No demand has at any time been made by the Government of the province of Ontario upon the Dominion Government to be recouped for those expenditures on behalf of Col. Baldwin or John Montgomery, and this is taken as an additional ground for maintaining that the Ontario Government is the proper source to look to for recompense to any of the volunteers from that province who served during that period. The Government disclaims any responsibility in the matter, and while they appreciate the noble services of the old veterans, and regret that it is not within their power to ask this Parliament to appropriate any sum in recognition of their very great services to the Crown, still they trust that the veterans will avail themselves of the opportunity afforded and the precedents which have been established to apply to the Ontario Government to be recognized by them, as they should be recognized.

ROBBERIES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Is the Government informed: 1. That considerable robberies have been committed for some years, and especially within the last few days, in the sheds and cars of the Intercolonial Railway at Rivière du Loup? 2. Have measures been taken to discover the guilty parties? 3. If so, what measures, and what arrests have been made? 4. If supposed guilty parties have been arrested, who are they, and how have they been dealt with? 5. Has information been given by any one or more of the old employees of the Intercolonial at Rivière du Loup? 6. Has the Government already paid any claims, arising from the said robberies, which caused losses to the merchants of Rivière du Loup or elsewhere; if so, to what amount; are any claims now pending before the Government in reference to this matter?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The Government have been informed that considerable robberies have been committed for some years, and especially of late on the line of the Intercolonial Railway. Measures have been taken to discover the guilty parties. Officers have been appointed to investigate, and upon information obtained, ex-porter G. Dufour, of Rivière du Loup, Léon Dubé, son-in-law of Dufour, and ex-machinist at the same station, were arrested, and large quantities of the stolen goods were found in their possession. They were to be tried on the 11th inst. The officers employed especially to investigate are the persons who made the discovery on which action was taken. Yes. The Government have paid since March last claims amounting to $252.70 for goods supposed to have been stolen at Rivière du Loup, and claims for $123 for goods supposed to have been stolen are under investigation.

BORINGS ACROSS THE STRAITS OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Have borings across the Straits of Northumberland between Cape Traverse, Prince Edward Island, and Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, been commenced for this season? If so, who has the contract? Are all the borings contracted for, and for what sum?

Mr. FOSTER. The contractors, I understand, were to commence the borings yesterday, the 12th inst. McRea & Co., of Ottawa, are the contractors, and all the borings are contracted for. The contract price is $6,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will half of them be done before the elections?

Mr. FOSTER. I hope so.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron).

ATLANTIC TERMINUS OF THE FAST ATLANTIC STEAMSHIPS.

Mr. CAMERON asked, 1. What, if any, representations have been made to the Government in favour of Terminal City, Strait of Canso, province of Nova Scotia, as the Atlantic terminus of the fast Atlantic steamship service? 2. By whom were such representations made? 3. What special inducements were offered with a view of having that port adopted? 4. Has the Government determined where the terminus of the line shall be? If not, when will this question be decided? 5. Will there be an opportunity given persons interested in that port, for negotiations with the Government and steamship company, before the question is finally decided?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Representations have been made to the Government in favour of Terminal City, Strait of Canso, province of Nova Scotia, as the Atlantic terminus of the fast Atlantic steamship service. Those representations were made by petitions presented by Mr. J. G. Forbes. The special inducements offered with a view to having that port adopted were its proximity to Europe, and the facilities it afforded for harbour purposes, and for steamship communication as well. The Government have not determined where the terminus shall be, because that question has to be very largely determined by the company that shall undertake the service. There is always an opportunity to persons interested in any port, when negotiations are open with a steamship company, to press the claims of the port before the question is finally settled.

THE BOARD OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. L'ANGELIER asked, Has the Board of Customs, constituted by subsection 2 of section 4 of the Customs Act, held any meeting previous to the 21st of May, 1894, and has it as such given any decisions on questions or difficulties referred to it by the parties concerned? If so, in what instances?

Mr. FOSTER. To the first question, the answer is, yes; to the second, yes; to the third, there are so many that it would be impossible to enumerate them.

JOHN G. GRANT.

Mr. O'BRIEN (for Mr. McCarthy) asked, 1. Has the landing-walter at Barrie, Mr. John G. Grant, been dismissed? 2. If so, when? 3. Has any person been appointed to fill the vacancy? If so, is it the intention to appoint any person to the position, and what is the cause of the delay in making the appointment?

Mr. FOSTER. John G. Grant, the late sub-collector of Customs at Barrie, has been dismissed. His dismissal dates from the date of his suspension, namely, 1st December, 1893; the Order in Council is dated 12th March, 1894. Since the date of the suspension of the sub-collector the position has been temporarily filled. The officer who at present fills the position of sub-collector is R. H. P. Brown, by temporary appointment.

THE CENSUS RETURNS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may remind the Minister of Justice that he promised to give an answer in reply to a question I put to him on the subject of the census papers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. I spoke to the Minister of Agriculture on the subject, and he is having prepared for me a memorandum with respect to the cases mentioned by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Borden) yesterday. So soon as I receive that memorandum I propose to read it to the House. I shall probably receive it to-morrow or the day after.

SUPPLY—EXPORT DUTY ON LOGS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to ask the First Minister a question relative to a matter which is not by any means new to this House, as regards certain phases of it; although the new phase that may be presented to-day is, I think, a new one and one to be deeply and sincerely regretted. The question of the imposition, by the Canadian Government, of an export duty on logs with a view of preventing their shipment from this country to the United States, and with a view to cause their manufacture in this country, has been very fully and very completely discussed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House. In that connection the Government, I regret to say, have not seen fit to accede to the wishes of hon. gentlemen who together with myself have asked that such export duty be placed upon logs. In arriving at that decision, I assume and I believe that they have been prompted to do so by reason of representations, statements and facts that have been from time to time placed before the House, more particularly by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). On these representations, I regret to say the Government have not interfered, and if to-day I can convince the Premier and his colleagues that those statements are not in the main correct, and if on the evidence of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) himself I can contradict and refute those statements; then I would ask the interference of the Government in the line we have suggested. Now, Sir, the United States Government recently and before the changes were made in their tariff that have been made, caused to be sent throughout the country inquiries as to the proposed changes in the tariff. I hold in my hand a number of inquiries and replies in this respect which have been printed by the United States Government. Among other persons who, in the exercise of the privilege that was afforded them, and in their desire, no doubt, to furnish such information, was the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and he presented to the United States Government a memorial, which reads as follows:—

I wish to make a brief communication with reference to the provisions in the Wilson Bill regarding Canadian log export duties. A large trade in the supply of American saw-mills from the Canadian forests now exists. The saw-mills of eastern Michigan, at Saginaw, Bay City, Tawas, Alpena, &c., are largely dependent upon the Canadian forests north of Georgian Bay for their log supply. Canadian logs are also furnished to mills in northern Ohio and western New York. This trade last year amounted, in round numbers, to $5,000,000. The Canadian Government has shown hostility to the exportation of logs, and an export duty was first imposed in 1866, and was continued until 1890, when, under the statutory offer of the McKinley Bill, which provided that countries not imposing an export duty should receive admission for their lumber into the American market at a lower rate than countries imposing such duty, the export duties were rescinded by the Canadian Government. The Mills Bill contained a provision as follows: "Provided, that if any export duty is laid upon the above mentioned articles, or either of them, by any country whence imported, all said articles imported from said country, shall be subject to duty as now provided by law."

The McKinley Bill also contained, as above mentioned, a similar proviso under the operation of which the removal of the export duty by the Canadian Government was secured. The Wilson Bill is supposed to follow in the same line, but the proviso contained in that Bill will not reach the purposes intended, but if the interpretation of your memorialist is correct, will result in the imposition of American duties upon the article only that Canadian export duties are imposed upon, thereby supplementing the Canadian export duty, and furthering the purpose of the Canadian Government.

It is respectfully submitted that this proviso should read as follows: Provided, that if any export duty be laid by any foreign country upon any of the articles mentioned in paragraphs 672 to 683, inclusive, then all said articles imported from said country shall be subjected to the duties existing prior to the passage of this Act.

Should this proviso be inserted, it will inevitably prevent the imposition of an export duty by the Canadian Government. It is that provision which the entire lumber trade in Michigan, Ohio and New York, dependent more or less upon Canadian supply for logs, is anxious to be inserted in the Bill.

Mr. Charlton accompanied his petition by a memorandum relative to lumber and Canadian importations, in which he stated that the public domain (including timber) is the property of the provinces in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. Licenses for cutting timber in Ontario and in most of the other provinces are sold at auction by the respective Provincial Governments to the highest bidder, subject to the conditions of the payment of Crown duties upon timber cut, which in Ontario is $1 per 1,000 on all licenses granted prior to 1893, and $3 per annum ground rent per square mile; and in Quebec, $1.25 per 1,000 Crown dues and $3 per square mile annual ground rent.

It is claimed by license holders, said Mr. Charlton, "that the rate of Crown dues and ground rent are a condition of sale and can not be advanced. This view of the case was practically admitted by the Government of Ontario last year, when at a timber sale held in Toronto the Crown dues upon the territory then brought into market was fixed at $1.25 per 1,000 and all territory previously brought into market was left undisturbed.

The imposition of export duties on lumber is a prerogative of the Dominion Government. Such duties were first imposed in 1866 upon logs and shingle bolts, and were continued, with variations as to amount, until 1890, when, under the statutory offer of the McKinley Bill, providing for the reduction of the pine duty to $1, in the case of any country not imposing export duties, the Canadian Government abolished the duty.

The reimposition of the duty by the Canadian Government can only be prevented by a similar clause in the future; putting back at the old duty all articles in the wood schedule, if export duty is imposed upon any of them.

The saw-mills of the Saginaw Valley, and other points in eastern Michigan, are now almost entirely dependent upon the forests of Canada for a supply of logs. The importation of logs from Canada for Michigan, Ohio and western New York mills was not less than $5,000,000 in 1893, and the reimposition of the Canadian export duty would be most disastrous to this extensive American interest."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for North Norfolk, as was his right and as was his privilege, not only as a member of this House expressing his own opinion, but interested as he was interested, demanded in this House that no export duty should be levied, for fear that there should be retaliation by the Government of the United States by a return to the increased duty on lumber shipped from this country to the United States. That point has been urged strongly and upon more than one occasion by that hon. gentleman, and as a result the Government have, I believe, refrained up to the present from placing that duty upon lumber. In support of that statement and in support of his contention, the hon. gentleman has argued that the people of the United States are in no manner dependent upon the people of Canada for their supply of white pine lumber, and as reported in 'Hansard,' the hon. gentleman made this statement:

Therefore, it is apparent the American market is a necessity for us, and that necessity is growing greater. It is asserted they must have our lumber, and impose what restrictions we may, that they will come over for our lumber. This is a mistake.

And in support of that statement the hon. member instanced the fact, that the port of Oswego, which is a great distributing point for lumber in the United States, had formerly imported from Canada 60,000,000 feet of lumber, and that by reason of the competition of southern pine, that quantity has been reduced to 20,000,000 feet. Now, in the face of that statement, I am free to admit that the Government were perhaps prudent in refusing to impose that export duty upon logs, but I appeal to the House to ask, which statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is to be or is not to be considered true. Is his statement that the people of the United States do not want our lumber true, or is the statement made in this memorial to the United States true: that the people of the United States were dependent almost entirely upon the lumber of Canada? Because if they were dependent upon the logs of Canada, it must of necessity follow that the product of the logs was what they really wanted. Now, the hon. gentleman saw what the position of the Wilson Bill was, as he states in his memorial, and it was this, that if the Government of Canada imposed a duty on saw-logs, the result would inevitably be that there would be a duty imposed upon our white pine going into the United States. He saw that if that were all that were done, it probably would pass; and so, in his desperation, he appeals to the American Government—to do what? Not to encourage freer trade relations between the two countries; not to take off spruce lumber the duty of $2 a thousand that existed; but to have duties placed against all the articles that were enumerated from clauses 1872 to 1883, when it was proposed under the Wilson Bill to admit all these articles free of duty. What was the result? The result was that those interested in the shipment of spruce to the United States were roused up to action, when the hon. gentleman succeeded in inducing the Government of the United States to threaten to impose a duty of $2 a thousand upon spruce timber, instead of admitting it free. Now, Sir, the remarks I have made here to-day are not made, as the hon. gentleman will doubtless allege, in a spiteful or vindictive spirit. I say that the day has come when the Government should take the hon. gentleman at his word, in this matter, and accept the truth of his statement that the people of the United States must have our lumber; and if the Government are going to regard what the hon. gentleman has said, it must of necessity follow that an export duty will be levied, and that at once. Now, what is the hon. gentleman's position? He stands to-day in this House as a representative of a Canadian constituency. He has, time and again, asserted in this House that his interests are Canadian, that his aims have always been loyal and patriotic. Time and again hon. gentlemen have heard him assert that on his Washington pilgrimages he has ever endeavoured to do—what? Not to stir up a feeling of hostility on the part of the United States Government against us, but to pave the way for friendly trade relations between these two countries; and yet, in the overtures he was making by this memorial, he was asking that the spruce lumber of this country should have levied against it a duty of $2 a thousand, and that all the articles enumerated in the schedule should be retained, subject to duty. The hon. gentleman for once was not shrewd. The hon. gentleman is particularly unfortunate. It happens that everything he writes falls into the hands of those who he should wish should not see them. Had the hon. gentleman been as shrewd as most of those who contributed, he would have made the request many of them did, that their names should be suppressed. Perhaps it was the overweening vanity of the hon. gentleman to see his name in print that induced him to ask that the memorial should be published in extenso. I have nothing to say against the hon. gentleman, personally, but I have everything to say against him as a representative of a Canadian constituency sitting in this Parliament for his action in this regard. I say it is a startling disgrace that any of our public men should besmirch the reputation of their country; and to-day the duty devolves upon the leader of the Opposition either to disavow the hon. gentleman or back up the sentiments he has expressed in this memorial. I know it will be an easy task for the hon. leader of the Opposition to taboo the hon. member for North Norfolk, because he, upon his part, certainly owes no kindness, no good-will, to that hon. gentleman. Why, the hon. member for North Norfolk went so far as to stab the hon. leader of the Opposition in one of those most unfortunate letters of his which have fallen into the hands of his opponents. Why, Sir, when the hon. leader of the Opposition was standing before the public, and before his party friends in his endeavour to give strength and reputation to his party, and when the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), who, I will be bound to say, stands higher in the estimation of hon. gentlemen opposite than does the hon. member for North Norfolk—when those hon. gentlemen were doing all in their power to advance the party interests, what was the hon. member for North Norfolk, Judas Iscariot-like, writing about them? This is his letter:

With a French Catholic leader and under the manipulation of such unscrupulous machine politicians as J. D. Edgar et al, I have not the utmost confidence in the immediate future of the Reform party. Excuse my delay in writing you. I have been away from home, and very busy most of the time.

Very truly yours,
JOHN CHARLTON.

Now, Sir, is it not a surprising thing to see a Canadian parliamentarian making approaches to an unfriendly country—because the United States have shown themselves unfriendly in many trade matters—endeavouring to induce the Government of that country to do this country all the harm they possibly can? The hon. gentleman is a reader of American history. I believe, Sir, he admires American great men; and I can only tell him this, that among all the great men of American history, there is only one character that will compare with him, and that is Benedict Arnold. Sir, the hon. gentleman has proved himself false to his leader, false to his party, and false to the country; and I am bound to say that with the record which he has behind him to-day he dare not face his riding. Now, Sir, I say again—and I appeal to the Government—that the time has not yet gone past for taking action in the matter of this export duty. I have shown to-day, conclusively and fully, by the hon. member for North Norfolk, that the time has arrived when the American people must have our lumber; and that being the crucial point in the matter, the time for the Government to interfere is the present. I do not mind what the hon. gentleman may say in regard to myself, as to my being spiteful and vindictive in this matter. Sir, I do not arrogate to myself the right of bringing up this matter in the House to-day, because, had I not done so, I cannot help feeling that, by reason of the respect in which the hon. members of this House hold themselves as Canadians and as representatives of the people in a Canadian Parliament, this matter would have been brought before the House to-day by some hon. member; and if any punishment can be imposed upon the hon. gentleman, it should be imposed. I am pleased to believe that the hon. member for North Norfolk does not voice the sentiments of the great Reform party, and I shall be pleased to-day to see the hon. leader of the Opposition rise in his place and say that he repudiates fully, and in every detail, the doctrines stated in this memorial by that hon. member.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I owe the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) thanks for having brought to the attention of the House the article which appeared in the 'Empire' of yesterday, and which he has read, and I shall take the liberty this afternoon, in reply to the hon. gentleman, of reviewing briefly this whole question pertaining to the export duty, as it will be necessary to do, in order to place myself fairly and properly before the House and before the country. The statement made by the hon. gentleman that export duties were first imposed by the Canadian Government in 1866 is correct. From 1866 to 1890 they continued in force, and the condition of the trade in logs was briefly this. We were exporting to the United States a paltry amount of round timber from Lake Erie, and during the most of that time our export never exceeded 30,000,000 feet a year. It was a class of timber not carried across the lakes for the purpose of being converted into lumber, but of being converted into special building bridge, and other timbers wanted at the points where it was sawn in Buffalo and along the Erie Canal, and while this insignificant trade was aimed at the export duty, we were, during all that time, importing from the United States, down the St. John River, annually, four or five times as much timber as our total export to the United States. This timber afforded employment to Canadian labour from the time it was taken from the stump in the woods and driven down the river until sawn in the mills at St. John. The whole business was done by Canadian labour. Canadian labour took out the timber, brought it down the river, and converted it into lumber in the mills, and for every dollar we lost in labour by timber being exported to the United States, we received ten dollars in return for labour in this branch of the business on the St. John, without reference to any other business whatever. In the business of exporting logs, the Americans merely had the advantage of the saw-mill work. But in the St. John business, the Canadian labourer had the advantage of all the work on the logs, from the time they were taken off the stump until converted into lumber. In my riding, where most of the export business was carried on, during this period, the operation of the export duty worked with particular hardship on the settler. The export duty on logs, shingles, bolts, stove bolts and pail wood was particularly felt by the poor settlers of that country, who had bought land that had been lumbered over, and who could make shingle bolts or pail wood from the refuse. This they were prevented doing, with any great profit, by the operation of the export duty. The export duty was very oppressive and injurious to the interests of the country, where it applied in any way to the business of the country at all. I repeat that we were importing from the United States vastly more timber during all that period than we exported to the United States, and the balance of trade never turned in favour of the United States in this respect until two years ago, so that there was no reason whatever for the existence or continuance of the export duty. The American Government became aware of this condition of things, though not as soon as they might have done. They did not become aware of it until shortly before the introduction of the Mills Bill; and naturally the fact that the Canadian Government imposed an export duty, and the fact that the United States constitution prohibited their imposing an export duty of any kind, so that they were unable to retaliate in kind—the existence of this condition of things naturally led the Americans to provide some means of checking this movement and retaliating for what was actually an unjust imposition, considering the condition of the trade. The Mills Bill provided that lumber should be placed on the free list, but it made the provision in that connection that no country should take advantage of the reduction which imposed an export duty on logs. That Bill failed to carry; and when the McKinley Bill was brought down from the Committee on Ways and Means, after long discussion in that committee, it provided that there should be conditions imposed with regard to the importation of lumber from countries imposing an export duty that were unfavourable to such countries. I am sorry that the time for raising this question is very inopportune, but I am not responsible for that. It is inopportune in consequence of the progress of matters in the Senate and of the fact that the Wilson Bill has not yet become law. I visited Washington at the time the McKinley Bill was under consideration. I made an arrangement with the lumber king of Wisconsin, Philetus Sawyer, a member of the United States Senate, and the member of the Senate who had charge of the lumber affairs in that House; and by that arrangement it was provided that the Canadian Government would be invited to declare that if the United States Government reduced, under the McKinley Bill, the duty upon lumber to $1 per thousand feet, the Canadian Government would remove the export duty. I came to Ottawa, and you, yourself, Mr. Speaker, and I had an interview with Sir John Macdonald, and we impressed upon Sir John Macdonald the fact that the lumber trade of Canada was interested in getting this great concession, and that the export duty, under the condition of things, was a duty it was hardly fair for us to maintain, as in no case was the export of logs from Canada greater than the imports. And Sir John Macdonald authorized you, Sir, to put a notice on the Notice paper asking the Government whether, in the event of the United States Government reducing the duty upon lumber, the Canadian Government would remove the export duty. That question was put upon the Notice paper. It was asked in your absence, Mr. Speaker, by the hon. member for Pontiac, and the reply was that the Government of Canada would remove the export duty in the event of the American Government reducing the duty upon lumber to $1. Now, I am perfectly free to admit that I was in Washington and had something to do with this arrangement, and that if it was a good arrangement I deserve some credit, and if bad, I deserve condemnation. The arrangement was duly carried out, although the American Government, through the influence exerted by the Senators from Maine, was guilty of bad faith in the matter, and did not reduce the duty upon spruce as they should have, but only upon sawn pine, while the Bill obliged Canada to abandon the duty upon pine and spruce logs in order to take advantage of the concession at all. But it was thought proper by Sir John Macdonald—and, I think, wisely so—to accept the offer in that shape, and the pine lumber of this country received the advantage of the reduction of duties from $2 to $1 per thousand feet. That is the history of the McKinley arrangement, and that arrangement is still in force. Lumber still goes to the United States subject to the duty of $1 per thousand on the condition that this country shall not impose an export duty on logs. If we should impose an export duty, the American duty on lumber will go up to $2 a thousand feet under the provision of the present law.

The Wilson Bill has been under consideration some time. That Bill proposed to carry out the promises of the Democratic party by giving the United States free lumber, free sugar, free coal, and free iron ore. But by combinations in the United States Senate, where a narrow majority exists, free sugar, coal and iron ore have been lost. Free iron ore was lost through the influence of one solitary senator—Senator Brice of Ohio, the only Democratic representative of the Senate in that state. Ohio was interested in the conversion of ore into pig iron, and Ohio's capitalists were interested in iron mines in the Michigan iron district, and Senator Brice was opposed to the admission of iron ore free, which caused the loss of that provision, and the opposition of the Louisiana Democratic senators caused the loss of the provision with regard to free sugar. Now, the position with regard to lumber was this: If the lumber interest of the state of Michigan, which is the most wealthy and most powerful lumber interest in the United States, could be arrayed in favour of free lumber, we were likely to get it; but if the lumber interest of Michigan was to be arrayed against free lumber, we were almost certain to lose it, just as we lost free iron through the opposition of one Democratic senator from Ohio. The question was, how was the lumber interest of Michigan to be induced to favour the concession of free lumber in the Wilson Bill. They had demanded this export duty provision in the Mills Bill: they had been favourable to the similar provision in the McKinley Bill. But it is certain that if the arrangement demanded with regard to export duty on logs going into the United States were not carried out the Michigan lumber interest would have been thrown against free lumber and free lumber would have been lost. Now, Sir, the arrangement has been made in such a way that the Michigan lumber interest has been arrayed in favour of free lumber, and the influence of that interest has been secured through the provision in the Wilson Bill that any country imposing an export duty upon logs should lose the benefits offered on every article in the wood schedule.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). How many of the two senators from Michigan are Democrats?

Mr. CHARLTON. Neither of them. But, Sir, the Michigan lumber interest could have influenced Senator Brice; it could have influenced other senators from the lumber states of the south. I say, and I understand what I am talking about—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, I understand what I am talking about. I say that the Michigan influence was the key to the situation, and if the Michigan lumber interest threw its influence against free lumber, free lumber could not be carried. The Michigan influence was secured in favour of free lumber through the provision in the Wilson Bill regarding the export duty that if any country imposed an export duty upon any article in the wood schedule, a retaliatory import duty should be imposed upon all the articles in the schedule coming from that country. This was, in point of fact, a trade in which we gave free logs; and we got, what? We got free logs, the same as we gave, free round unmanufactured timber, free firewood, free handle bolts, heading bolts, stave bolts and shingle bolts, hop poles, fence posts, railroad ties, ship timber and ship planking, hewn and sawed timber used for spars and in building wharfs, timber, squared or sided, sawed boards, planks, deals and other timber, pine clap-boards, spruce clap-boards, hubs for wheels, posts, last-blocks, wagon blocks, oar blocks, gun blocks, heading and all like blocks, laths, pickets or palings, staves of all kinds, and wood unmanufactured, which included pulp wood. We got all this and in addition, free, planed lumber. All this we got for a provision which gave the Americans free logs of which to-day we receive almost as many from them as they do from us.

Mr. McALISTER. I would ask the hon. gentleman to what port or place logs are imported from the United States?

Mr. CHARLTON. They are sent down the St. John River from the state of Maine, and sawed on the Canadian side. Also on the Rainy River American logs are sawed in Canadian mills.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman will allow me to ask a question—surely he does not regard that as an importation?

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly.

Mr. HAZEN. These logs are not imported for use in Canada. They are cut on the head waters of the St. John River, sawed and the lumber sent back. The lumber is not used in Canada, and cannot be fairly regarded as a Canadian importation.

Mr. CHARLTON. But if the hon. gentleman will allow me to enlighten his apparent want of knowledge with regard to a matter in his own province, I can tell him that the timber cut on the upper waters of the St. John River in the State of Maine is cut mainly by Canadian labour. The supplies and material used are mainly Canadian. The logs are rafted down the St. John River by Canadian raftsmen. They are sawed in St. John mills by Canadian labour, and, though the mills may be nominally the property of Americans, they are, in the majority of cases, really Canadian property. There are other points about this business, I might inform the hon. gentleman, that the importation and sawing of American logs confers an advantage upon New Brunswick, which perhaps the trade would not care to have made public, which make this trade on the St. John River of twice as much benefit to Canada, thousand feet for thousand feet, as the free importation of Canadian logs is of advantage to the United States. Canadian logs sent to Michigan mills are taken out by Canadian labour, and the logs cut in Maine to be sawed on the St. John River are also taken out by Canadian labour.

Mr. HAZEN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me a moment more. The hon. gentleman was making a statement from which it would appear to this House that timber cut in Maine was brought into Canada for consumption in Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am talking about the advantages flowing from the employment of labour and capital. The argument of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), and other hon. gentlemen who advocate an export duty on logs is that this export of logs is a loss to Canada, through loss of employment of labour in sawing all these logs into lumber, and they urge that these logs be kept in Canada in order that the work may be done by Canadian mills. Now, if the hon. gentleman will allow me to proceed—the position of the matter is this: Here is an offer, if the Wilson Bill passes, an offer that puts all these articles I have enumerated on the free list in exchange for free logs. Now the question is, is the Government prepared to accept that offer? Is it an offer the Government will entertain with favour? If it is not a good offer, if the Government will not entertain it, if any man who has been instrumental in obtaining this offer has been false to his country, let the Government say they will not entertain the offer and let them put an export duty on logs to-morrow. The Government have refrained from this action, as the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) admits, because they hope that this Bill will pass, and because if this Bill does pass with this provision with regard to an export duty, the Government will gladly avail themselves of the offer it makes, because it will be in the highest degree advantageous to us. A few days ago one of the subordinate heads of departments in this Government put into force the suspended regulation about imposing a duty upon booms—round, unmanufactured logs—and boom-chains. A deputation at once started for Washington from

Mr. CHARLTON.

Michigan, which deputation included two ex-members of Congress, an ex-Governor of the state, and other influential men. But the leader of the Government had wisdom enough, and sense enough, to set aside the order of his subordinate. Why did he do that? Because, Sir, it was clear that this action of the Controller of Customs might prejudice the chances of this country of obtaining the Wilson Bill, and free lumber, and all these things that were to be had in exchange for free logs. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the offer contained in the Wilson Bill will be gladly accepted by the Government of Canada, I want to know what is the sense of abusing any man who has been instrumental in obtaining that offer, whether his influence in the matter has been much or little, whether he has been instrumental in a greater or lesser degree. If he has been instrumental in any degree at all in procuring this offer, an offer which the Government regard as of advantage to Canada, then for an hon. member in the House to rise and attack that man for his share in any such negotiation is illogical and inadvisable.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHARLTON. Oh, yes, of course. You know so much about saw-logs.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The statement has been made that the hon. gentleman advised the American Government that their proposition was not sufficiently retaliatory as against this country, and suggested a means by which it could be made more so. Is that the case?

Mr. CHARLTON. I say freely, though it is impolitic for me to draw these matters into discussion, that I used all the influence I possessed to get the Michigan men to consent to free lumber and to throw their influence in favour of it. I went just that far and no further, and whatever influence I may have exerted, the result is shown in the Wilson Bill as it at present stands.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Will the hon. gentleman answer me?

Mr. CHARLTON. I have answered the hon. gentleman. So much for the question as to whether this provision of the Wilson Bill is a satisfactory one to Canada. If it is satisfactory to Canada, why blame any one who has been instrumental in obtaining it? I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when the commissioners of this Dominion Government went to Washington, they did not accomplish as much in the interest of this country as has been accomplished by private and informal negotiations in connection with this free lumber schedule; and I tell you if that Wilson Bill passes, in so far as it deals with the question of lumber, it will confer a very great boon upon Canada. Now, the hon. member for South Simcoe reads a statement, and he has affirmed that I claimed that this trade amounts to five million dollars a year. Well, the claim is a preposterous one, whether I have made it or not. A claim of five million dollars would be based, probably, upon an estimate of 500,000,000 feet of logs for export, and the returns show that the export was less than one-half that amount. The article the hon. gentleman has read from the 'Empire,' with the exception of the statement about the amount of exports, contains no statement that I do not indorse. The statements contained in that article are true. As to the authorship of that article, we know this is election time, an election is in progress in Ontario, and it is a good time to beat the drum, to howl about loyalty and to appeal to passion and prejudice. The hon. gentleman asserts that I am the author of the memorial to Secretary Carlisle, and the author of the memorandum. Well, Sir, stating as I do that there is nothing in it that I object to except the statement of the amount of exports, all I have to say about that matter is that it is for the hon. gentleman to prove that I am the author; and I do not propose to be called into court with regard to that matter. I have made in this connection a statement that defines my position. I am in favour of the provisions of the Wilson Bill about lumber, the export duty proviso clause and all, because that was necessary to get the concession. I have done what I could in favour of that Bill, I am ready to do more if my services would be of advantage, and could secure the benefits of that Bill to this country. I consider that the Bill, if passed, will be a great boon to this country, and if it can be shown that I have in any way been instrumental in obtaining that Bill and these concessions, I will be proud of that record. With this statement of the case, I take my seat.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). We have had another exhibition here to-day of that unpatriotic and un-Canadian policy which has been pursued by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I have been reading this letter that he has written, and he says we have brought it up in election time. The fact is that this letter came out the other day in the Detroit 'Free Press' and was specially addressed to the lumbermen of Michigan, that they might see what a friend they had in the Hon. John Charlton, as they call him, who is a member of the Canadian Parliament. I have also been looking up a speech that the hon. gentleman made here a year ago, in regard to the various missions on which he had gone to the United States. In that speech he took great care to tell the members of this House what his record was as a citizen of this country. He says:

It is asserted that I am a Yankee. Well, Sir, if I happen to have been born in the United States, and if there is anything criminal about that, I do not know that I had very much to do with the circumstances. I think my personal responsibility with reference to that matter is small indeed. It is true, I was born in the United States. My parentage is Scotch-English. The name of my family is an old Northumberland name, whose records go back for many centuries. I have very much pride in the history of that family; I have pride in my origin. I have lived in Canada since my boyhood. I have spent forty-four years in this Dominion; but in the estimation of my Tory friends opposite that hardly seems a sufficient length of time to have naturalized me. Sir, I repudiate the charge that the fact that I am an American by birth prevents me from being a loyal and true British subject. I am, in fact, a British subject by birth, a British subject under the law of the realm, a law which provides that every person born of British parents, born in a foreign country, not, at the time of his birth, at war with England, is by birth a British subject; and I have a right to all the privileges of a natural-born British subject to as full an extent as any other British subject.

Now, I say the hon. gentleman, in writing this letter, has un-Briticized himself, if I may say so, and that he has taken a most unpatriotic stand. He then goes on to say:

I have never in any way used my influence by word or act, to do anything that was not, in my opinion, conducive to the best interests of Canada.

The facts are, that we were likely to get all the advantages of the Wilson Bill, we were getting them, and all the Americans had said was this: If you put an export duty on saw-logs, then we will put a tax on your white pine lumber. But he says: Oh, that won't do, there is not enough retaliation in that, go on and give it to them right up to the hilt, and include in the list, spruce, railway ties, hop poles, telegraph poles, hardwood and white pine. In that same speech he told us what he had done further in Washington:

I thought that would be a good time to come down to a point which I conceive to be of great importance, and so I urged on almost every member I met—certainly on every member when I obtained an opportunity to do so—the impropriety of attempting to force Canada into annexation by adopting a policy of restriction.

Here we have the hon. gentleman suggesting and advising them to adopt the utmost policy of restriction in keeping out Canadian products. Further, he goes on to say:

I urged generous treatment on the part of the strong towards the weak.

In this letter he sent to Washington, is there a suggestion of generous treatment towards the weak? It is a man in our own House and in our own country, and who claims to be a Canadian, who suggests the most vindictive attitude towards this country, urging them over there not to treat us generously, but to treat us vindictively. Then he goes on and says:

I urged favourable consideration of a fair proposal for reciprocity. I deprecated unfriendly legislation.

I charge the hon. gentleman here with not living up to those words, and with suggesting the most unfriendly legislation :

I argued especially, and with all the force I could command, that they should not think of adopting a retaliatory policy for the special purpose of playing into the hands of the annexation party.

Towards the close of his speech he says :

I do not want to leave behind me the name of traitor or the name of one guilty of chicanery or fraud.

What has he done here ? What record will he leave behind himself now ? What will be the record handed down to Canadians in regard to the hon. member for North Norfolk ? It will be, as I said before, that he deliberately used his influence, that he wrote letters, that on every occasion he has endeavoured to excite the American public, to excite the American press, he has gone on missions to Washington, and he has written letters to influence the public and the politicians there to do the most unfriendly acts to this country, and to injure our trade by putting retaliatory legislation on their statute-books. In closing he says :

I have not been governed in my course here by any desire to do anything that would not meet with the approval of my own conscience and with the approbation of my disinterested fellow-countrymen. Canada, Sir, is my home : it has been my home for forty-four years ; it commands my services, and I will do anything that lies within my power to promote the interest and welfare of this land which has been mine since boyhood.

All through his speech we find statements like these ; but no matter what his statements have been on the floor of this House, no matter what his statements have been in political speeches in this country, there is the great unpatriotic fact that he suggested the sword in far enough for the Canadians, but that they should put it right up to the hilt, and prohibit not only our sawn lumber, but everything else in the way of manufactured lumber, and thereby make it harder for us to enter their markets. In regard to the power possessed by provinces to deal with this question, I stated in this House the other day that I thought the Legislature of Ontario had it in its power to prevent the exportation of logs. I still maintain that position, and when there is a change of Government in Toronto, and I hope that will soon take place, I trust there will be such legislation enacted as will prevent the exportation of our Ontario logs to the saw-mills of the United States. A strange coincidence has occurred, and I do not know whether there is any connection between the two facts or not, but three days after the statement was made by me in this House, that a Canadian province might pass such legislation, a notice was placed on the Senate paper at Washington by Senator McMillan, of Michigan, that if any province dared to interfere to prevent the exportation of logs, the same redress would be open. I should like to ask the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) whether he had anything to do with suggesting that clause to the senator for Michigan.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will answer the hon. gentleman if he will give me time to do so. I had nothing to do with that suggestion, but I did write to Senator McMillan, of Michigan, that the proposition was a very absurd one, and one that could never be carried out, as it would simply provide that there should be no further increase in the value of pine in Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Just as I suspected. And I would add, if the proposition is so absurd, it is strange that this senator should have incorporated it in the resolution. I think the proposition is not absurd, but, on the contrary, that it is good law, and that the province of Ontario can impose such timber dues as they please, and can thus prevent the exportation of Canadian logs. I hope that will be one of the beneficial results following the provincial election on the 26th of this month, and that afterwards we will have a Government in Toronto determined to prevent the exportation of Canadian logs, and to secure that their cutting shall take place in Canadian mills, giving work to our Canadian people.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I venture to submit to the House that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has missed the point of the accusation brought against him in the explanation he made this afternoon. The hon. gentleman stated in the course of his speech that whatever influence he had exercised upon the legislation of the American Congress, the result had been shown in the Wilson Bill, as it now stands.

Mr. CHARLTON. I made no such statement.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Did not the hon. gentleman claim credit for the present lumber clause in the Wilson Bill before the American Senate ? If not, then my hearing must greatly have deceived me, and I took down the hon. gentleman's words at the time. That is the shame of his whole proceedings in connection with this matter. Let us look at the course of legislation in the United States for one moment. We begin with the Mills Bill, that piece of abortive legislation attempted by the Democratic party eight or ten years ago. That Bill contained a provision in regard to lumber and manufactures thereof as follows :—

Provided, that if any export duty is laid upon the above mentioned articles, or either of them, by any country whence imported, all said articles imported from said country shall be subject to duty, as now provided by law.

The legislation of the Democratic party was upon those lines. They proposed to place on the free list a large number of articles manufactured from lumber; but they said, in order to guard against the imposition of an export duty on logs by the Canadian Government, that if an export duty is imposed by any country, not on all, but on any of the articles mentioned, the then prevailing rate of duty under the then existing tariff shall apply to all manufactures of wood imported into the United States, thus making an effectual barrier against the imposition of an export duty on logs by any foreign country. Then we come to the next legislation, and which had practical effect, namely, the McKinley Bill; and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in this memorial to which reference has been made, says on the subject:

The McKinley Bill also contained, as above mentioned, a similar proviso, under the operation of which the removal of the export duty, by the Canadian Government, was secured.

Then we come to the last measure, that now before the United States Senate, the Wilson Bill, and the hon. gentleman says in his memorial to the American Government:

The Wilson Bill is supposed to follow in the same line, but the proviso, as contained in that Bill, will not reach the purpose intended, but, if the interpretation of the memorialist is correct, will result in the imposition of American duties upon the articles only that Canadian export duties are imposed upon.

So that the position was this: Under the proposed American legislation—and I have the tariff here as reported to the Senate from the Finance Committee, and as it was reported from the House to the Finance Committee of the Senate—it was intended that all articles from items 672 to 683, inclusive, of the tariff, should be placed upon the free list, namely, (the list is somewhat long, but it is all the more worth while reading)—Firewood, handle bolts, heading bolts, stave bolts, and shingle bolts, hop poles, fence posts, railroad ties, ship timber, and ship planking, not specially provided for in this Act; timber, hewn and sawed, and timber used for spars and in building walls; timber squared or sided; sawed boards, plank deals, and other lumber; pine clap-boards, spruce clap-boards, hubs for wheels, posts, last blocks, wagon blocks, car blocks, bun blocks, heading, and all like blocks or stick, rough hewn or sawed only; laths, pickets and palings, shingles, staves of wood of all kinds, wood manufactured." Under the provisions of the Wilson Bill, as reported from the Senate, every one of those articles was placed upon the free list. And there was this proviso:

Provided, that any of the articles mentioned in paragraphs 672 to 683, inclusive, when imported from any country which lays an export duty on the same or any of them, shall be subject to the duties existing prior to the passage of this Act.

There was this flaw in the American tariff which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) discovered. Under the Wilson Bill, the result of the deliberation of the Democratic party in the House of Representatives, and which, it was to be presumed, the Democratic party intended to pass, it was designed to place all the articles I have enumerated on the free list and make this one exception, that if Canada imposed an export duty on any one of those articles, then that article should become subject to the present duty under the McKinley Bill. The flaw which the hon. member for North Norfolk discovered, and which he hastened to point out to the Finance Committee of the Senate, was this:

"Provided, that if any export duty is laid by any foreign country upon any of the articles mentioned in paragraphs 672 to 683, inclusive, then all said articles imported from said country shall be subjected to the duties existing prior to the passage of this Act."

The hon. gentleman saw that if the legislation was carried out as laid down by the Democratic party in Congress, Canada would be free to impose an export duty on logs, and at the same time obtain free admission to the United States for a large number of forest products, and so he pointed out to the Democratic party that unless they amended their legislation in the direction suggested by him they would lose their power of coercing Canada, and no longer would the Michigan lumbermen be able to get in their logs free from Canada, and at the same time enjoy the monopoly of the American home market. What was the result of the hon. gentleman's action? It is not a matter of speculation, for the consequences of it are seen in its fruits. It was this: that the Finance Committee, after having received this memorial, amended the Wilson Bill, so that the proviso now reads as follows:—

Provided, that all of the articles mentioned in paragraphs 672 to 683 inclusive, when imported from any country which lays an export duty on any of them, shall be subjected to the duties existing prior to the passage of this Act.

If this proposal becomes law, and Canada imposes an export duty on saw-logs, the consequence will have followed from the suggestion of the hon. member for North Norfolk being acted upon by the Democratic majority of the Finance Committee of the Senate, that every one of the articles which were placed on the free list of the United States tariff will become subject to the duties prevailing under the McKinley tariff. That is the gravamen of the charge against the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and I submit that in his answer this afternoon he has utterly failed to meet it, and that he has dealt with issues which are not germane or pertinent to the accusation: the very grave accusation, as it seems to me, which has been made against him to-day.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not intend to have continued the discussion as the members who have spoken on the subject have explained their views in a way that I would not be sufficiently conversant with the business to do. But one observation was made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in the course of his remarks which I must qualify. That was his statement in relation to action taken as to boom sticks, during the present season. The hon. member gave us to understand that a duty had been imposed by the Controller of Customs upon American boom sticks being used for the towing of logs from Canada into the United States, and that I interfered, and rescinded the order of the Controller. I wish to state what the facts are with regard to that. During last season inquiries were made by the collectors of customs, at the ports where these boom sticks were reported, as to whether they were dutiable or not, and decision upon the question was deferred until this season with the understanding, as I am informed, that during the present season the proprietors who used these boom sticks then being imported from the United States, would provide themselves with Canadian boom sticks. The matter was therefore left in abeyance, and during the present season the boom sticks were towed from the United States into Canada as before, and the question again was raised by the collectors of customs along the route. It was made a matter of consultation between the Controller of Customs and myself. It was made afterwards the subject of remonstrance from persons connected with the lumber interests of Canada, and who were under the impression that a false view might be taken by those in the United States who were concerned in the tariff revision going on there, of the action of the collectors of customs if they taxed the boom sticks. The Controller of Customs has made no order in regard to the matter, so far as I am aware, and I agreed with him in thinking that for the present, at least, it was well to leave that question in abeyance. I am not entitled to the credit of having reversed the Controller's action—if credit would follow such—nor is the Controller of Customs open to censure for having imposed any duty which it was not wise, under these circumstances to have imposed.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, might I be allowed a personal explanation? I did not intend to be understood in a sense at all different from the statement made by the First Minister. What I intended to state was: That the Government deemed it advisable to postpone the enforcement of this order until we saw the fate of the Wilson Bill.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) who introduced this motion was very emphatic in asking me what was my opinion upon the subject, and from the way in which he asked it I thought he took some peculiar pleasure in thinking that it would be very difficult for me to pronounce upon it. Well, Sir, I may say to the hon. gentleman that it has not been the custom between the two parties in this House to bring up questions without notice. Yesterday we had arranged that we should take up to-day—and I gave due notice of it—the question of the excessive expenditure connected with the superannuation fund. At three o'clock this afternoon the Minister of Finance came over to this side of the House and told us that he was not ready for the question as he had some figures to prepare, and he asked that it should be deferred until to-morrow. According, of course, to the courtesy extended from one side of the House to the other there could be no objection whatever to that. I informed the hon. Finance Minister that such being the case, my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Allan) would bring up the question connected with the fisheries on the St. Clair River. No notice was given me that the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) was to bring up any other question, and I cannot imagine that the hon. gentleman brought up the question without notifying his leaders of his intention. If such be the case, I have to complain of a breach of faith not only with regard to the courtesy of the House, but with regard to the administration of the business of the House, which I have a right to resent and which I do resent. Now, Sir, with regard to the question which has been put to me by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). Evidently he gloated over the position in which he thought I was placed, for not only did he ask me my opinion as to the subject immediately in hand, but he chose to recall certain expressions which have fallen, it appears, from my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) as to the fate of the Liberal party being led by a Frenchman. All I have to say to the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is, that life is too short for me to take notice of such questions at all. I deal generously with friends and foes and certainly I never resented the opinion of my friend when he expressed some apprehension as to the future of the Liberal party having to be led by a French-Canadian. Nor do I see that his apprehensions were altogether unfounded since it has been my fortune and my lot to read over and over again in the Conservative press of the province of Ontario, the leader of the Liberal party referred to as the "French Mr. Laurier." The apprehension of my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) was not at all without some foundation, and perhaps if he thought that the future of the Liberal party was to be injured by the fact that it was led by one who did not belong to the race of the majority and if he expressed that opinion; the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) is altogether astray if he thinks it in me to quarrel with anybody as to that. With regard to the question immediately before the House. I do not understand what are the methods of the Conservative party—the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government may answer for that—but I have to say to the member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) this: that the Liberal party is not an inquisitive party; it is not an inquisition after the model of that of Spain. I do not question the private opinion of any member, nor do I question or revise his actions either. Every member is answerable to the country and to the party for the opinion of the party; but, Sir, I certainly would not go into the private life of any member to reproach him with his opinion. My hon. friend here (Mr. Charlton) is answerable for himself and can defend himself, and he has given his explanation to the House, and as far as I understood his explanation, it was this: that anything which he had done, whether it was ill-advised or well-advised, was simply with the object—which I am sure must be shared by hon. gentlemen on the other side—that we should have reciprocity of trade in the great staple of lumber. With regard to that I have simply to say: that upon this occasion and upon all occasions, the Liberal party as it was before and as it is now, are not in favour of reciprocity of tariffs, but in favour of reciprocity of trade.

FISHERY REGULATIONS ON LAKE ERIE.

Mr. ALLAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the grievance of our fishermen on the great lakes, particularly in the western part of Lake Erie and in the Essex fishery districts. This matter was brought up a short time ago by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) who, with other gentlemen, attacked the policy of the Government relating to our lake fisheries, and although this matter is one of very great importance, no explanation has so far been offered regarding that policy. Petitions largely signed by fishermen and the inhabitants in the fishery districts have been presented to this House. They were also signed by township and county councils remonstrating against the rules and regulations of the department, and praying for their repeal. They complained of the curtailment of the quantity of gill-nets, the reduction of the number of pound-nets, the refusals to license our fishermen, the weekly close season, which extends from six o'clock on Saturday night until seven o'clock on Monday morning, and also, that if while fishing for a particular kind of fish, prohibited fish or fish out of season, are caught, they are liable to have their nets seized and burned. They also complain of an unreasonable close season, and state that they are harassed and hampered by unjust fishing laws, under which it is impossible for them to carry on their fishing industry properly. While these regulations might meet with approval as regards a large body of water like Lake Superior, although even there they are complained of, yet in reference to the Essex district of Lake Erie they are out of place. Now, I cannot show the House the great importance of these fisheries better than by reading an extract from the census bulletin of the United States, of March, 1892:

The fisheries of the great lakes are the most extensive lake fisheries in the world. Their great economic importance to the states adjacent to the lakes and as a source of national wealth can be readily understood and appreciated by referring to the accompanying tabular statements, in which are shown the large number of persons engaged, the great amount of capital invested, and the enormous quantity and value of the products taken.

There has sprung up an extensive branch of trade entirely dependent on the fisheries, and yet sufficiently distinct to constitute a well-defined occupation. This is the business of buying, freezing, smoking, and otherwise curing and preparing fish and fishery products. For this purpose swiftly moving steamers and expensive storehouses and refrigerators are required, the former to collect the fish and the latter to retain them.

Nor does the importance of the fisheries stop with the mere capture and handling of the fish. Other industries of great extent are more or less related to or entirely dependent on the prosecution and perpetuation of these fisheries, among which may be mentioned salt mining, ice harvesting, barrel and box making, boat and vessel building, net and twine manufacture, &c.

There should also be borne in mind the large and rapidly increasing population which is dependent on the successful operation of the fisheries for a no inconspicuous part of its food supply, the vast area of country over which the products are distributed, and the great amount of railroad and steamboat traffic that is occasioned by this distribution.

Mention should here be made of the wonderful productiveness of the waters of the great lakes so far as the yield of fish is concerned. A careful estimate, based on the known production in 1880, 1885 and 1889, shows that in the decade terminating with the census of 1890 over 1,000,000,000 pounds of food-fish were taken, which yielded the fishermen over $25,000,000.

Now, I say that while the rules and regulations complained of may do very well for Lake Superior, where the fisheries are remote from the American shores, yet, in the Essex and Lambton district, for a distance of 120 miles along the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers, Lake St. Clair and part of Lake Erie, the shore line of Canada approaches so close to that of the United States that the waters separating the two countries are practically the same, and this valuable industry, in regard to which I have given figures from the American census, so far as Lake Erie is concerned, is practically controlled on both sides of the lake by the Americans. While our fishermen are hampered by unjust laws, and while they are compelled to pay license fees and are subjected to close seasons, immediately opposite they can see their American neighbours carrying on a very large and profitable business. In order to break the force of this contention, I notice that the report of the Deputy Minister of Fisheries contains this statement :

In the annual report of this department for the year 1891, comparative tables were published showing the variations in the yield and value of the fisheries on both sides of the great lakes. This was done for the purpose of establishing whether the contentions of certain Canadian fishermen that there was an enormous difference in favour of the United States, were founded on facts or not. These tables comprised the years 1880 and 1885. A recent census bulletin, published by the United States Department of the Interior, affords an opportunity of extending these tables by comparing the returns for the years 1885 and 1889, and drawing the conclusions therefrom.

Now, in this statement, a statement for ten years, the total value of the fish is made to be about the same in both Canada and the United States, while the difference in the quantities is as three to one. I have added up the totals of the fish caught in the year 1889, and I will read the figures to the House to show the very great advantage which the American fishermen enjoy over our people :

COMPARATIVE TABLE showing totals of yield of fish on both sides—Canada and the United States—of the great lakes for the year 1889—Lakes Superior, Huron, St. Clair, Erie and Ontario, including the Georgian Bay and River St. Clair to the mouth of the Detroit River.

Here we have a statement made for the purpose of meeting the contention that in the matter of our fisheries the Americans are getting the advantage, and yet, to make this showing, 90,000,000 pounds of fish caught on the American side are put down as equal in value to only about 30,000,000 pounds caught in Canada, and that, too, when nearly all our fish are sent to the American market, and particularly when, so far as Lake Erie is concerned, with a few exceptions, our fishermen are compelled to accept what price may be dictated by two or three fish firms, which control the fishing trade of Lake Erie. I would like the hon. Minister to give some explanation why in a blue-book, published for the information of the people, a statement of that kind is made. For the purpose of making a favourable comparison as to the value caught on both sides of the lake, the hon. Minister values 29,000,000 pounds of Canadian fish as being worth as much as 91,000,000 pounds caught on the other side of the lake, although our fish is sent to their markets. But the Americans caught in the great lakes in 1889, including Lake Michigan, which is just as fair to include as the Georgian Bay and the North Channel, north of the Manitoulin, which are inland waters, 117,008,568 pounds of fish, of which 15,326,488 pounds were whitefish, which at 8 cents per pound, amounts to $1,221,119 ; 11,201,631 salmon-trout, at 10 cents per pound, $1,120,163. Thus, at the prices quoted by the Minister of Marine, the American catch exceeded in value the total catch of whitefish and trout alone in Canada of all kinds of fish. That shows the very great advantage which the Americans are getting over us every year with regard to the lakes. The difference that I am complaining about occurs principally, and the great complaint is principally, with regard to Lake Erie. The shore lines of the two countries for a long distance are very close together. For 100 miles the fishermen on our side can actually see the American fishermen carrying on their operations, and if any one will examine the maps he will find that more than half of the American pound-nets are set nearly opposite the county of Essex. There are over 1,800 pound-nets, and more than one-half of them are set opposite Essex, and on a fair estimate of the value of the fish, taking the estimate put upon Canadian fish by the hon. Minister, the American people, immediately opposite the county of Essex, catch not less than $1,000,000 every year, while our catch in our county last year only amounted in value to $99,000. It is this great evil that our people are complaining of. It is not a party question, the people are practically unanimous, and if the Minister can show that it is for the good of this country that our fish should be preserved for the people, they are willing to acquiesce, but they want better reasons than are put forward, either in the blue-book or by Mr. Wilriot, who addressed a public audience in Essex on this subject. It is a great outrage that our fishermen should be practically idle, while they can see the American fishermen, on the opposite side, carrying on a very large and profitable trade. And that has been going on for years. I have an extract from an American paper, which I will read, to show that the Americans are still catching large quantities of fish, while our fishermen are idle :

For the past two weeks our fishermen have been having a most phenomenal catch of the finest lake fish, which completely refutes the assertions of the fish commissioners and others that fish are becoming scarce and their breeding grounds depleted. The catch is so large that the fish freezers and handlers have more than they can care for, and lake trout, dressed, are selling for 3½ cents per pound, and the best "hard" fish at $2 per 100. A veteran fisherman informs us that the run is the largest in ten years and unusually fine in size and quality, and includes nearly all the varieties. The marshes and small streams are also teeming with game fish and anglers are enjoying very fine sport. Carp are multiplying rapidly and fishermen say that in a year or two more they will be caught by the wagon load. They are found in the deep waters of the lake, and in the marshes and shallow waters along the shores they can be seen at almost any time. They grow to great size, although a 21-pounder is the largest caught this season.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What fish is referred to as increasing besides the carp?

Mr. ALLAN. There are large quantities of trout caught. Now, I will read a comparative statement of the great lakes, but the great loss is in reference to Lake Erie. That is where we are suffering greatly, as compared with the Americans, who seem to be reaping almost entirely the advantage of the policy of the Marine Department. This is a statement for the year 1885 of the fish caught on both sides of Lake Erie. Canada whitefish, 186,080 pounds, at 8 cents per pound, which is the value put by the hon. Minister in his estimate—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. With reference to the extract just read, do I understand the hon. gentleman to argue that the fish in Canadian waters, in the districts to which he has special reference, are increasing?

Mr. ALLAN. I cannot say as to that, but the fact remains that every year the catch of fish is increasing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The extract seemed to imply that on the United States side the fish were increasing. That is not the opinion of the department. Does the hon. gentleman maintain that the fisheries in Lake Erie are on the increase on the Canadian side? Are the fisheries in good condition or bad condition?

Mr. ALLAN. I think that on the Canadian side, from the small quantity of fish caught in Lake Erie, the fishing business is certainly not in a very satisfactory condition. On the American side, the only answer I can give is that although every year we hear about the depletion of the lake, yet every year the difference increases in favour of the Americans.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to understand the hon. gentleman's position, because that may shorten the discussion. I approach the question from the standpoint that the herring and whitefish and staple fish in Lake Erie are all on the decline, on the United States side and on the Canadian side. I want to know what the opinion of the hon. gentleman is on that question.

Mr. ALLAN. I can only say that all I can give is the figures before us. I do not know whether the fish are on the increase or on the decrease. That is impossible for me to tell, but I say that every year the catch on the American side is increasing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not the question I put, but if the hon. gentleman does not wish to answer, it is all right.

Mr. ALLAN. I am not prepared to say, but judging from that standpoint it is increasing. The following is a statement of catch in both sides of Lake Erie:—

COMPARATIVE TABLE showing the Yield and Value of Fish caught on both sides of Lake Erie, 1885.

	1885.		Value per Pound.	Total Value.

Though the Minister stated that the value of American fish is less than ours, we find that the total catch on their side had a value of six times as great as that on the Canadian side. And every year the output on the American side is increasing. That is the only answer that it is possible for me to give to the Minister. I have no data to show whether the lakes are being depleted or not. The Americans contend, and this article that I have read declares, that there is no truth in the statement that depletion of their fisheries is taking place. I have here a table, showing the total value of fish caught by Canadians in Lake Erie :

1889	487,607
1892	407,906
1893	339,019

This shows a decrease from 1889 to 1893 of $148,585. The following figures show the catch of whitefish in Lake Erie by Canadians for the several years given :

	Lbs.
1888	389,836
1889	306,213
1892	311,915
1893	256,240

Showing a decrease in this catch of 133,596 pounds from 1888 to 1893. The total value of the catch of the Lake Erie division was $339,019, a decrease, as compared with 1892, of $68,887. In the county of Essex, which is opposite that portion of the United States where fishing is most extensively carried on, the catch of fish has fallen off, as shown by the following table :—

1889	$239,000
1893	95,596

In the Detroit River, the decrease in the catch is enormous. On our side, in the Essex fishery district, we have about sixty pound-nets ; on the American side there are almost a thousand pound-nets. In the county of Essex, according to the statement submitted last year, the catch is only of the value of $99,000, and any fair estimate of the quantities caught on the other side, opposite the county of Essex, must put the figure at over a million dollars. If the hon. Minister could assure our people that in some way they would be benefited by the policy he is pursuing, if they could be assured that he is preserving the fish for the Canadian people, and that it will be to the advantage of this country to continue their policy so far as Lake Erie is concerned, I am sure they would acquiesce. But the fishermen fully believe that, as regards the western part of Lake Erie. The result of this policy is that the American people are reaping almost the entire benefit of the trade, while our men are idle. And, Mr. Speaker, that is not the only grievance of our fishermen.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the hon. gentleman passes to another branch of his subject, would he favour me with some information upon a point to which he has referred two or three times. The hon. gentleman states that a large number of our men are idle in consequence of the action of the department. Is he able to give the names of any of those who were accustomed to fish in past seasons, and are idle this season ?

Mr. ALLAN. Why, the hon. gentleman himself has refused licenses to fishermen on Lake St. Clair.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But has the hon. gentleman the names ?

Mr. ALLAN. I have not the names, but if he has not given licenses the men must be idle.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I deny that they are idle, and I shall show why they are not.

Mr. ALLAN. Then you must have changed your policy very suddenly. A short time ago the fishermen of Lake St. Clair were not to be allowed to fish. I presented a petition from the fishermen of Pelee Island upon the subject of the reduction made in the number of pound-nets. The fact that there are only sixty pound-nets along our shore shows that our men must be idle. On the other side they have over nine hundred pound-nets, in fact, the whole coast is lined with them, as many as thirty-three nets being in a string, while, on our side, the hon. Minister will not allow more than one net in a place, except in certain cases. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, if there has not been some change, the fishing industry on our side is practically a monopoly. Our fisheries, as regards Lake Erie, from Buffalo to the Detroit River are practically under the control of American fishing firms. Our fishermen are largely in the hands of these firms. There is the Buffalo Fishing Company, Mr. Tribble, of Buffalo, and Post & Co., of Sandusky. These firms control the fisheries on our side, to a great extent.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In what way ?

Mr. ALLAN. I will show the hon. gentleman before I get through that our fishermen are really, to a very great extent, in the hands of these American firms, and we expect that there will be sufficient statesmanship in the hon. gentleman to rescue our fisheries from their present condition, and to secure to the Canadian people their rights in this matter. Not only are the Americans catching most of the fish in Lake Erie, but on our own side they control the fisheries. I have in my hands a return brought down to the House, from which I will read extracts that will establish the statements I have made, and which the hon. Minister will be bound to accept. This is the report from the overseer of fisheries, Mr. Kerr, of 10th December, 1891 :

The principal part of my duty is to ascertain how many nets were really fished during the month of October and the first half of November. This I had some difficulty in establishing, as it was rather late when I was ordered to the ground, and on my arrival there I found that owing to the continued stormy weather most of the twine had been raised and stored away, except the pound-nets fishing on the east side of Rondeau, which is a most sheltered spot. However, as the stakes remained I was enabled to form a pretty correct idea how matters really stood, and with various information received on the spot, I think I shall be able to give you a pretty accurate list of the actual fishermen. I shall also try and show up the tricks of Jas. Post & Co., of Sandusky, and the manner in which the above-named firm is assisted by negligent fishery overseers.

The firm of Post & Co. has a large interest in the nets of this district, and as a consequence, a strong grip and control over the fishermen who make all sorts of efforts and resort to all kinds of dodges to fish as many nets as they can.

1. At Dealtown, Isidore Laroche fishes six nets. Claims to be the only actual fisherman and sole owner. The licenses for these nets are issued in the name of R. J. Lipscombe, insurance agent, T. S. Arnold, auctioneer, and David Woods. This last name presumed to be fictitious. None of the above are bona fide fishermen, and I dare say, never saw the nets. Mr. Laroche says he has been fishing for four years in this locality.

2. John Burton has license for three pounds; was informed he had stakes for eight, but found only six. When asked for explanations he said he kept moving his twine from one set to another, as became necessary according to the run of fish, but that may be true, or it may not. Anyhow, it is a dangerous practice which should not be allowed under any consideration.

3. Moody & Coulson fished three nets. Have license for two. The third net is in Mr. McLean's name, who sold out three years ago to one Lamarche, who in turn sold out to them. They claim to have applied to the overseer to have that net in their own name, but it was not done. This seems fair enough.

4. At Point Pelee there appears to be a good deal of confusion with regard to the bona fide fishermen.

Charles Fisher, an American from Sandusky, fishes three nets licensed in the name of John Mooney, Eth. Mooney, and William Haskins. None of these men fished for years as far as I could ascertain.

5. Geo. Johnson who fishes three nets, has a license for two. The other is in David Johnson's name. The latter is presumed to be a fictitious person.

6. F. Gardner fishes two nets in a string and another in Ezekiah Bickford's name, who has been dead ten years.

6. Adam Oper fishes seven nets; three in his own name, and two in John Loop's and one in Jas. Loop's name. Oper has a license for two nets, and the Loops for three. Excess in the case: two nets. Was unable to ascertain who were the licensees for the remainder.

So I could go on, and show the bogus character of nearly three-fourths, certainly one-half of the licenses, in the county of Essex, which are controlled, or were controlled, at least, by this firm I speak of. I hope that the same state of affairs does not continue, although I am afraid that, to a certain extent, it does, and that our fishermen are practically in the hands of Post & Co.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be candid enough to say that the officer in whose district those irregularities occurred, was dismissed from the service.

Mr. ALLAN. I will say that before I get through. Another officer who was very much under the same influence, and the same control, was reinstated.

I experienced a great many difficulties in fathoming the above irregularities; ascertaining names and finding out particulars. All sorts of obstacles were thrown in my way; specially from such of the fishermen as were under Post & Co.'s control. This made it sometimes utterly impossible for me to get accurate or even reliable information in a great many cases, and I must come, therefore, to the conclusion that either Post & Co. own and control the whole fishery from Rondeau, westward, or else that overseers McMichael—

There is another officer, I believe, who has not been dismissed. I believe he is still an officer of this Government.

—and Prosser are in their favour, doing their bidding in every respect, instead of taking the interests of the department, whose paid servants they are.

I will now read from Overseer Kerr's report, dated Hamilton, February 4, 1892:

SIR,—In answer to your request that I should report on the explanations offered by overseers Prosser and McMichael on the charges made against them, I therefore beg to state as follows:—

1. Mr. Wesley Coulson distinctly informed me that he bought his fishery in Essex from one Lamars, who in turn had purchased it from one McLean. When Coulson made application for a license, he wished Overseer Prosser to have it issued in his own name, which Prosser promised to do. This promise, it appears, he neglected to fulfil. Mr. Coulson claims he had a transfer of these fishery privileges. If such be the case, then Prosser had no excuse for issuing the license in the applicant's name instead of recommending the license in McLean's name, who had sold out two years before.

2. Charles Fisher claims he is a British subject. I only reported what I heard, and I believed it to be true at the time Fisher is fishing for Post & Co. Notwithstanding Overseer Prosser's statement that he pulled out the stakes driven in excess of his license, I distinctly understood that these stakes were still there at the close of the fishing season. I may have been misinformed and regret I was unable to get there owing to a heavy snow storm which prevailed at the time.

3. I was creditably informed that Frank Gardner himself fished a pound-net in H. Bickford or Mooney's name. It was either one or the other. However, it was reported to me that these men had been dead for years.

4. In Adam Oper's case I consider that Mr. Prosser's explanations make things look much worse. According to his version, Oper must have fished eleven nets while I only heard of seven. Most of the men he mentioned in regard to this charge never fished. One in particular never fished a net in his life, viz., Jas. Robson. The truth in regard to this matter is that the nets in question belong to Post & Co., and things have got into such a muddle through Mr. Prosser's anxiety to please Post & Co. that I do not believe that he himself understands how things really stand, as regards names, &c., &c. I therefore consider his answer most unsatisfactory. I can only remark Jos. Post could, if he wished, tell more about the ownership of nets than Mr. Prosser can or will, and I cannot understand how Mr. Prosser could conscientiously recommend the issue of licenses in such a manner if there was not a trick to procure more nets for Post & Co.

General Remarks.—In conclusion, I can only say that Mr. Prosser's division is in a very confused and demoralized state, and should be remedied as soon as possible. This state of affairs has been caused by the overseer himself, in his anxiety to please and to favour Jos. Post & Co., and as things now stand he has got so much in the power of the Yankee firms, his usefulness as a fishery officer is gone. You can readily perceive by the recent reports that he and Post have formed a sort of a combination and endeavour to shut out as many as possible of those men who choose to sell their fish elsewhere. We will take the cases of Wm. Black, David Wilkinson and Bates Bros. : Mr. Post went as far as to threaten these men, telling Bates that for the sum of $500 or $600 he would deprive him of his fishing rights. This was done because Bates refused to sell him any more fish. I also found many fishermen afraid to give me the necessary information that I was seeking, on account of threats, &c., made by Prosser and Post of taking away their license, &c.

One old gentleman remarked, after I had taken his sworn statement, that if Prosser knew it he would settle his license for this year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we will come to a report of the Privy Council, by which the services of this Mr. Prosser are dispensed with. I want to say in passing that this state of things has been going on for years in that district, and is so reported in some of the letters of the fishery overseer. It is certainly a singular state of things that the fishermen in Prosser's & McMichael's district have for so long a time been at the mercy of these American firms, and that such looseness in regard to the issuing of permits, &c., has been permitted to continue for so many years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You do not mean to say that it is continued until this day ?

Mr. ALLAN. What I say is that reports come from the county that Mr. Post is, to a great extent, in possession, and I believe it will take some time to unloose his grasp.

Mr. ALLAN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Have you ever had, or are you now in possession of, the slightest evidence upon which that can be established ?

Mr. ALLAN. I have recently received a letter showing the favourable spots that are being reserved for Mr. Post and his men—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to be favoured with it.

Mr. ALLAN—in the district of Essex, where our fishermen have been refused licenses.

CERTIFIED COPY of a report of a committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, on the 9th April, 1892.

On a report dated 2nd April, 1892, from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, stating, with reference to further inquiries which he caused to be made during the month of November last, relative to alleged violations of the fishery laws, and other irregularities said to prevail amongst pound-net fishermen on Lake Erie, from Port Burwell to Colchester, that the facts brought to his knowledge in this connection are such as to justify him in recommending the dismissal of the fishery officer implicated in such irregularities.

The Minister, after having fully considered all the facts related in the very full report made by Fishery Overseer Frederick Kerr, of Hamilton, who conducted this investigation, a synopsis of which is attached herewith, has no hesitation in saying that Overseer William Prosser has been guilty of gross neglect of duty and of grave irregularities in permitting certain persons to fish in the name of others, for the benefit of American firms, and that the above-named officer also appears to have been in the habit of issuing licenses in the names of parties who have been dead for several years, and that he, moreover, allowed fishing during the close season, and was also in the habit of granting 'permits' to fish pound-nets during the fall, without authority from the Fisheries Department, and without accounting for the fees collected thereon ; the immediate effect of such conduct on the part of a sworn officer being to completely demoralize the fisheries service on this part of the coast of Lake Erie, and to place these valuable Canadian fishing grounds in the hands of American firms.

The Minister, in view of the above fact, recommends that the services of Overseer William Prosser be dispensed with, and that such further steps be taken against him for the recovery of moneys unduly collected by him, and unaccounted for, as the circumstances of the case may seem to demand.

In regard to moneys not accounted for by Mr. Prosser, I put a question on the Notice paper, asking if the Minister had taken any steps for the recovery of the moneys which Mr. Prosser was said to be short. I received the following answer, which I do not think covers the ground :—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before answering the question, I should like to state that there is no Order in Council on the subject dated April 9th, 1893 ; there is an Order in Council dated April 9th, 1892, under which the services of Mr.

Prosser were dispensed with. The Government took no action for the recovery of moneys, the fees for licenses issued by Mr. Prosser having been reported duly accounted for.

My question did not refer to licenses. Mr. Prosser has been in the habit of issuing permits, particularly to American firms, and it has been established on oath that moneys were paid to Mr. Prosser. My question was whether these moneys had been accounted for, and whether the Government, as hinted in this report, had taken any action to collect them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Perhaps I would meet the hon. member's convenience by giving at this point a full explanation. There is no desire to give a partial answer to the hon. gentleman's inquiry. In the ordinary course the papers went from my department to the Department of Justice, and proceedings were ordered, as the answer given the other day intimated, and it was found that the license fees were duly accounted for. But we are in possession of no evidence, as the hon. gentleman will see from Overseer Kerr's report, nor are any papers in our possession to prove the general charge of money being paid to Mr. Prosser for which no account was rendered. All the money which we could trace, or which we had evidence to charge against him was accounted for. In regard to the other accusations, we could make no headway against him without possessing evidence of names, amounts and dates.

Mr. ALLAN. Certain receipts were given.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On examination it was found that they were not sufficient on which to base an accusation.

Mr. ALLAN. I will read what the fishery inspector says in regard to this matter :

I need not dwell on this point. As already remarked in my previous reports, the department's books will be the strongest affidavits. If Mr. Prosser paid the money collected for the extra nets used by Mr. Black ($50) for the years 1886 and 1887, for which Black holds receipts, and for the years 1888 and 1889, which Black swears he paid ($50 for each year) ; Philip Deslauriers, $50 for the year 1889 ; Peter Gardner, $50 for the year 1888, and Frank Gardner for the year 1888, these moneys will surely be entered.

I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that there are several names and that during a number of years moneys were collected, as has been proved under oath and by receipts, and witnesses can be produced to-day to show that the moneys in question were paid. Under the report of the Privy Council instructions were given to take action to have the moneys collected. I continue :

But, as I understand it, they are not, and Mr. Prosser has nothing to show that the money was ever paid ; while a number of the fishermen hold receipts from Mr. Prosser. Mr. Prosser swears in his affidavit that this money was paid over to the department—then why does not he produce the acknowledgment generally received from department, which, according to the rule is invariably given for such things. I apprehend that if Messrs. Wigle and Prosser press this matter too far, and have an open investigation, it will be worse for Prosser in the end, as these witnesses are ready to come forward and give evidence as they gave before.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose the hon. gentleman really misunderstands the point, or he would not continue to dwell on this portion of the documents. The portion of the report to which the hon. gentleman now refers was that upon which proceedings were threatened, or were about to be taken, but the amount of this account was sent in. It was in regard to the general charge in support of which there was no satisfactory proof, that we were unable to proceed. In all the cases where there was anything definite or in which receipts had been given the amounts have been accounted for—not before the minute of Council was passed, but afterwards, and before proceedings were instituted.

Mr. ALLAN. That really does not cover the ground.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, it does.

Mr. ALLAN. During a number of years Mr. Prosser issued receipts, and I could read further from the evidence where the inspector shows that this practice has been carried on, and there is no telling how many permits have been issued.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You cannot hang a charge on that.

Mr. ALLAN. Certain steps should be taken to have such a matter investigated.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many steps ?

Mr. ALLAN. A large number. I will continue to read from the affidavit from which I have already quoted, because it will prove very interesting reading for the people of Essex County.

4th. That not a single license was granted in the name of a dead man, except in the case of Hezekiah Bickford, and John Deslauriers, grandson to the old man H. Bickford. Deslauriers requested him to send for the license as usual, in Bickford's name, which has never made any difference to any person.

This assertion is denied by John E. Deslauriers, who distinctly swears that he asked Mr. Prosser to change the name. Prosser declined, claiming that it would not make any difference. See John Deslaurier's evidence. He is ready at any time to swear the same thing again.

Mr. Prosser must not forget that many licenses were issued to men who were not fishermen, and to others who never fished at all, as well as to men who were not in the country, viz. : Harry Livingstone, Wallace Scratch, John Loop, sen., William Haskins, James Robson and others. The department is already aware, from my various reports, as well as by the evidence produced, that this was done simply for the purpose of procuring more nets for Post & Co. Mr. Prosser was perfectly cognizant of the position of these men at the time he forwarded the applications. I therefore cannot possibly see how he can clear himself of this accusation. These men are prepared to come forward at any time face to face with Mr. Prosser, and conscientiously give their evidence without fear or favour.

5th. That he always did his duty conscientiously ; that he believes there has been and still is a systematic course of blackmailing against him, simply because he has done his duty, and would not allow certain persons to fish contrary to his instructions.

I do not agree with Mr. Prosser's statement regarding blackmailing, etc., etc. I am very sorry to add that I found Mr. Prosser a very deceitful man, and that his word is not to be depended upon. I must also mention that when I first met him he proved so affable and agreeable, that when I began this investigation I was strongly impressed with the idea that the charges would prove unfounded. But the irregularities were so glaring that there was no difficulty in getting at the bottom of the complaints, with the results already made known.

There is no blackmailing nor any hard feeling against him, nor any attempt to take advantage of him by the fishermen that I am aware of. True, there may be some animosity between him and Black, but Black told me he was quite satisfied with Prosser as an officer if he would only give him the same privileges as the rest of the fishermen, which was all he asked for. And all that Black stated in regard to the charges turned out to be correct.

I must say on behalf of the fishermen of this district that in all my travels I never came across a more respectable, decent, sober, and industrious lot of fellows. They are, I believe, above such a stigma as blackmailers, as Mr. Prosser designates them. All they asked was fair-play and justice from the local fishery officer, and no partiality to any one. My reports and the evidence produced showed that that has not been carried out by Mr. Prosser. Who then can blame these fishermen if they are dissatisfied at the manner in which he has been discharging his duties.

I have shown, Mr. Speaker, that the existing state of things in regard to our fisheries, proves the statement I have made : that not only are the Americans catching four-fifths of the fish on Lake Erie, but that even the small quantity caught in Canada, is so manipulated by the American firms that Canadian fishermen are deriving really very little advantage from it. In the Essex district, the fishery business has been largely controlled by Post & Co., and below that district there is the Longue Point Company, a rich and powerful corporation, composed mostly of Americans, some of whom, I am informed, are millionaires many times over. These people can get a very large number of nets and are carrying on extensive fishing on some system by which they allow the fishermen a sort of share. Below the Point, the fishing is controlled to a very great extent—with here and there an exception—by the fish firms of Buffalo, Treble & Co., and the Buffalo Fish Company. It is, in my opinion, a deplorable condition of affairs that while in one year the American people catch fish valued for $2,000,000 and in another year they catch fish valued for $3,000,000, that the catch by our Canadian fishermen amounts to only $300,000 or $400,000, and most of that does not benefit our fishermen to any very great extent. It is stated in this report that the Longue Point Company carry on their fishing by a system of shares. The fishermen are probably poorly paid, while, if any one would take the trouble to look at the census returns in connection with the fisheries of the United States, they will find that a large and profitable business is being carried on, and that the men engaged in the industry in the United States are making money. The document I have before me establishes that, but I will not weary the House by reading it. In Canada there are just a few fish firms, and these are mostly composed of Americans. The Longue Point Company is a wealthy sporting company, who should not be in the fishing business, and I think that it is unfortunate that our poor fishermen should be deprived of a double header, or a second pound-net when these fish firms in some way or other—by intrigue and influence—obtain almost every privilege they require. Of course the Minister has relieved himself to a great extent by the dismissal of Prosser. He could not do otherwise than to remove from the service of the department a man who had been guilty of the acts proven against this fishery overseer. I understand, however, that McMichael is still the fishery overseer at Blenheim. I have not heard of his dismissal. This is a very large industry and a very profitable industry, and the Canadian people should have the benefit of it. It is believed that the result of the policy adopted by the Minister has been to throw that important trade almost entirely into the hands of Americans, and so our Canadian people complain of that policy. The theory of the fishermen is that Mr. Wilmot, who is engaged with the hatcheries and believes in the artificial propagation of fish, is anxious to curtail fishing in order to show that there is some result from his methods. The fishermen assert that it cannot be shown that out of the millions of fish fry deposited, there is one single fish that has come to maturity. This statement may be somewhat exaggerated, but the fishermen assert that the policy of propagating fish artificially is a failure. Whether the statement is well founded or not I am not prepared to say, but it is the belief of the people engaged in this industry that Mr. Wilmot is trying to make out a good case for his hatcheries by curtailing the catch of fish, and they are also of opinion that his advice to the Minister in this direction is responsible for the policy of restriction on the Canadian side of the line which has been pursued by that hon. gentleman. Let me ask: When are we going to be benefited by this policy? It has been in operation for twenty years, and every year we have been told that some reciprocal arrangement will be made with the Americans which will put the fishermen of both countries on an equal footing. The policy of the Minister is no doubt backed up by a few people in Detroit, but the best proof that the Americans do not believe in that policy is that the State Legislature of Michigan adjourned for two years without taking any action whatever upon the recommendation of the fishery commissioners of Detroit. Our Canadian fishermen have been restricted for years in their fishing operations, while all the time the Americans continue to catch fish to the value of two or three millions of dollars a year; and, as I said before, Canadians are only permitted to catch $300,000 or $400,000 worth. This is an injustice to our Canadian fishermen, and it is time that the Department of Marine and Fisheries should put an end to it, and adopt another policy.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

Bill (No. 138) to incorporate the Montreal, Ottawa, and Huron Canal Company.—(Mr. Macdonell, Algoma.)

SUPPLY—LAKE ERIE FISHERY REGULATIONS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I greatly regret, owing to the importance of the subject, and notwithstanding the time at which it has been brought to the attention of the House, that it will be necessary for me to ask the indulgence of the House for some time while I refer to the points that have been raised by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Allen), and particularly to the question upon which he only briefly touched. I know that it is contrary to the rules of the House, and very properly so, to impute motives to hon. gentlemen who ask the attention of this body to any public question; but I was considerably surprised, knowing, as I have reason to know, the very great importance of the preservation of the fisheries of the great lakes of this country, to observe this afternoon the extravagant language which that hon. gentleman indulged in, accompanied as it was by the most superficial statements that could possibly be made on such a question. Time and again I heard the hon. gentleman, when speaking of the policy that I am carrying out, refer to it as, "a policy of oppression and tyranny"; he spoke of "great outrages"; he stated that our Canadian fishermen on those lakes were practically idle to-day; and declared that there was no explanation or defence in reply to an attack of great moment which apparently had already been made this session, and which the hon. gentleman deemed it necessary on his part to follow up with his fusillade of this afternoon. These were extraordinary expressions, Mr. Speaker, and expressions which, if they had really a true support, would have excited a great deal more attention than the hon. gentleman was able to command on either side of the House, which would have attracted a great deal of attention this evening, and would have demanded the most serious consideration that we could give to them. But, instead of the hon. gentleman supporting those statements by arguments or by an exhaustive review of what the policy of the department really was, I discovered a little later on in his remarks that his real object was to attack, not a policy, but a man; not to criticise a Minister of the department, or the Government of the day, but to attack, in what I consider a most unfair manner, a Mr. Prosser, who apparently lives in the district from which the hon. member for South Essex comes; and although I have no knowledge of Mr. Prosser, apart from the fact that he was once an officer of my department and was dismissed, and that some years ago, yet, from what the hon. gentleman said, I have no doubt whatever that he is, whether rightly or wrongly, a strong man in that district, and a man who is politically opposed to the hon. gentleman. I can conceive of no other reason why the hon. gentleman should have spent the greater part of his time in driving home and repeating again and again the charges against this man, which were investigated as far back as 1891, and which brought about his ultimate dismissal. What does the hon. gentleman want to do with Mr. Prosser? Why does he drag him up before this House in this year of Our Lord 1894, and insist at a rather late period of the session on pounding him in the fashion he did? The hon. gentleman was so anxious to belabour this poor man, that notwithstanding that I endeavoured time and again in the course of his remarks, and for the purpose of economizing the time of the House, to tell the hon. gentleman that all these serious facts had been inquired into, and that all we could do under the laws of this country had been done—that all the laws justified was the removal of the man from office—that this question of not accounting for money had also been thoroughly sifted, and that on reference to the law officers of the Crown in Canada, it was found that further than we had gone we could not go against Mr. Prosser; yet, the hon. gentleman spent a great deal of his time in reading from a return facts which related only to the year 1891. Well, Sir, with a mild protest against that method of dealing with a man outside of this House—a man who has already been punished, and punished most severely, for any negligence in office, in reference either to his conduct as a fishery overseer or in regard to accounting—I shall at once pass on to the question which the hon. gentleman only lightly touched, and which I recognize as a very important question—a question that was brought to the attention of the House on more than one occasion, and this year by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor). The hon. member for South Essex said to-day that that exposure of the policy of the Department of Marine and Fisheries had not been answered—that there had been no explanation or defence offered in reference to what he was pleased to call a criticism or an attack. Well, Mr. Speaker, that hon. gentleman has shown that he has given very little attention either to the subject-matter of his complaint or to the proceedings of this House. The hon. member for North Essex some weeks ago moved, and very properly moved, for all the papers connected with the subject, and on that motion he did enlarge on the question of policy and on the subject to which those papers related. It was my intention at the time, though I do not know that it was necessary according to the rules of the House, or the spirit of our procedure, to have spoken to the motion: but for reasons which it is not necessary to go into, when the debate closed at six o'clock on that day, the motion was carried to another place, on the Order paper. When it was again reached I did not happen to be in the House, and no remarks being made, the motion was carried as a matter of course, and the papers were brought down. But that there has been any disposition on my part either to shirk my duty in tendering explanations to this House on matters of policy connected with my department, or any desire to burk the fullest and freest discussion, I utterly deny. The question is one of public notoriety. Although the hon. gentleman did not advert to them, the reasons for the policy of the department, whether that policy be right or wrong, are pretty familiar to the people along Lake Erie, and the waters to which special reference was made, Lake St. Clair and the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers. Not only have explanations been given in the Blue-book, but answers to all inquiries, whether from fishermen, fish dealers or members of Parliament, have been given. I have stated openly what I believe to be my duty in administering the regulations touching this and the Fisheries Act. I have sought consultations with hon. gentlemen who did not agree with me politically. I have met in friendly council the hon. members for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), and Kent (Mr. Campbell), and other hon. gentlemen, and explained to them, in the presence of the officers, upon whom I must of necessity, in a great measure, lean, the reasons for the policy in force. It is no narrow principle upon which I stand. The hon. gentleman discussed the matter in a loose and extravagant manner. He mixed up other questions with it, but to put the real grievance in the strongest possible shape from his standpoint, we must confine ourselves to the narrow waters that separate the United States from Canada. It was unnecessary to travel into the great waters of Lake Erie for this purpose, and I submit it is all the more to his advantage to confine the discussion to the narrow waters of the St. Clair and Detroit Rivers, and Lake St. Clair if you like. The most that can be said about our policy is this: that it may be all very well for the Canadian Government to administer severely and rigidly regulations that are right in theory and sound in principle, in these great inland seas where we have complete control, but that it is wrong to enforce those laws on narrow sheets of water, separating us from other countries, because the effect of that—and this I take it is the hon. gentleman's best argument—would be to give to our neighbours advantages we deny to our own people, and because in so doing we would accomplish no good purpose, but entail upon a large number of our own citizens loss and suffering, in the absurd attempt to preserve the fisheries in that way. I think that any person who has followed the discussion of the question will agree that this is the most serious aspect of the case which has been put. But the hon. gentleman was not content with that feature of the case. He quarrelled with nearly everything in connection with the administration of the fisheries. He took various positions. He went on to show for a long time, if figures can show anything, by an elaborate criticism of the statistics in our Fishery Reports of various years, that this idea that there was any danger to the fisheries in the great lakes was entirely a superstition or a fallacy indulged in by the department, and not based on experience. He showed that enormous wealth was drawn by the United States fishermen, on the United States side of these waters, because they were not trammelled by restrictions of any kinds, and that on our side the result had been a diminished catch and great suffering. Challenged on that point, however, as he was by myself, he did not give a straightforward or definite answer. The question I put is one that meets us at the very outset, and that question is: what is the present condition of the particular fishery we are discussing? Whether the regulations or the action of the department be wise or unwise, the first question, in considering that matter must be: the present condition of the fisheries. Is that condition such as to cause alarm? Or, after the extraordinary inroads have been made that have been made upon the fisheries, is there no sign of diminution in the quantity or the size of the fish caught? I asked the hon. gentleman what his position was on that point, and I am in the judgment of the House when I say that he did not give a straightforward answer, although he was citing evidence to show that the fishery commissioners, who were speaking of the depletion of the fisheries on the United States side, were wrong in their contention. He quoted a newspaper, published in Munro City, which said that there had been an extraordinary catch of fish in the very waters said to be depleted, and the hon. gentleman went on to argue that that catch and the present condition of the fishery showed how absurd these fishery commissioners were when they came to the conclusion that there was reason for alarm.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). His statement was that there was an increase in the quantity caught each year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but any one familiar with fishery statistics or conditions in this country, knows that you can form no opinion as to the condition of a fishery by merely examining the figures published respecting the catches of each season, because there are many circumstances that must be considered in that connection. How much fishing gear was used? What was the number of fishermen employed? What amount of netting was used? What kind of engines were used? And after all is said and done, what was the condition of the fish actually caught? That is a great and crucial test in every inquiry, whether in this or foreign countries—and there are many countries spending enormous sums every year in ascertaining these various points—and it will be found that the great test is not the actual catch, not the money turned over—because very often you will find enormous fish harvests in the years preceding an absolute famine—but what was the average size of the fish caught? Did they show by their small size—as a rule their length—that the fish were running out? That is a great test of the diminution of a fishery. That is the great test of a diminished fishery, so that this argument, in which I am sure the hon. gentleman has no faith himself, is not an argument worthy the attention of this House. There is no man from the Lake Erie district in this House to-day who can rise in his place and say that he really believes that the Lake Erie fisheries are in as good condition as they were, or that they have withstood successfully the extraordinary onslaught made from year to year by the fishermen on either side of the lake. It is notorious, on the contrary, Mr. Speaker, it is within the knowledge of every fisherman and every man who has looked into the subject for a moment that a complete change in that fishery has already taken place. What was the staple fishery of Lake Erie only a few years ago? It was the whitefish fishery. It was the whitefish that was turned over in the American market, it was the whitefish that brought gold to the fishermen on both sides of the lake. That is a superior fish and a fish of great value. But there is no whitefish fishery on Lake Erie to-day; the staple fishery of that lake at the present moment is the herring fishery. The herring is an inferior fish, and one that cannot be compared for a moment with the whitefish. It is simply because of the extraordinary demand that I have referred to and the efforts of the fishermen in the keen competition that has prevailed that have beaten down regulation after regulation. And in spite of everything they have at last reached a stage when the only fish that can be caught in sufficient quantities to keep up the expense of fishing apparatus and fishing arrangements, run the fishing tugs and so on, are the inferior fish. What is the condition of the lake fishery? It is such as to have caused alarm to every body of commissioners that have inquired into the subject. There have been conventions on both sides of the lake. Our American neighbours, both official and unofficial, have met to deplore the rapid depletion of this great fishery and the decadence of this great industry. They have met both on their own side of the line and on this side to take counsel with their Canadian neighbours, having in view the great, and to some extent the common interest. It is a notorious and it is an exceedingly sad fact that that is the condition of the Lake Erie fishery to-day. But there is more than this, Mr. Speaker, and it is to this point that I call the particular attention, and upon this I ask for the support of the House. The policy that, in spite of many difficulties, difficulties that it would be impossible for me to exaggerate, I have endeavoured to uphold, is that of insisting on a rigid observance of the regulations—which I believe to be necessary regulations—found in the Canadian Orders in Council governing Canadian waters of that lake and region. While there has been a diminution in the fishery, while the fish have fallen off on our side, we have not yet reached anything like the condition of our neighbours. Ruin all round meets them and stares them in the face. I have the official evidence that their capital is moving west, that six or seven hundred thousand dollars in cold cash had been lost in the fishery up to the last season, and that those remaining in the business were endeavouring to save themselves from absolute ruin by moving on to Lake Superior, and, even further west, to the Lake of the Woods, moving westward as so many of our own fishermen have had to do. I wish, however, at the outset, and before I give to the House some of the reasons for holding the strong opinion I do of the necessity of rigidly enforcing the present regulations, to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the difficulties which meet a man in my position. The position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a particularly difficult one in relation to this question. I have been surrounded by a body of very capable advisers. I have access to the reports covering a long period of years by officers who have served not only under me, but under previous Ministers, including those of the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite. I find on the one hand from these men one unbroken piece of testimony as to what is happening and as to the way in which worse results than have already attended the prosecution of this fishery may be averted. But, on the other hand, go to the fishermen and you find, as when you consult the fishermen in any part of the world, that there is a complete difference of opinion among them. That is the common experience—for proof we have only to search the records of the English Parliament, where they have had commissions by the thousand to inquire into this question. Every member from a fishing district knows that what I say is correct, that you will find as many opinions as you call witnesses, if you ask the fishermen to come forward and give evidence as to either the conditions of the fisheries or the regulations that ought to be put in force. There never has been unanimity among them, and consequently the department cannot look to them for advice as to any certain line of conduct. We are bound to consult them, we are bound on our responsibility to treat them fairly and to discuss with them—as every Government and every head of this department has done—their statements and their reasons, but, as I say, in the end, the Minister must take the responsibility of deciding. But what happens in this House? Hon. gentlemen rise to address you, Mr. Speaker, on the condition of the fisheries and the policy of the Fisheries Department, and I defy you, Mr. Speaker, or any of your predecessors to find a trace of consistency in the views of the hon. gentlemen who may inadvertently from time to time upon these questions. Upon the very question now raised I could knock the heads together of the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Allan), the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) and the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) and show that they contradict each other completely. And it is significant that when an hon. member rises to speak on this question, you will find him in favour of pound-net fishing or gill-net fishing or seine-net fishing, according to what the great fishery of his district happens to be, and each will ascribe all the ruin of the fisheries to the engine used by the fishermen who do not happen to be in his own particular constituency. I do not mean to say that these hon. gentlemen seek to mislead the House. What I do claim is that, situated as they are they have only the benefit of the experience of the people in their own district and they discuss the question simply from their standpoint. I can show during this discussion contradictory views not only by these members as compared by each other, but by one member, comparing his statements in one part of his speech with those in another. It is true of the member for Lambton and the members for Essex, and I shall refer to a few of their utterances to show that they have not adhered to one principle or sustained line in discussing this question. That is my review of the position of these hon. gentlemen as they enter upon the discussion of this admittedly important question. What have I at my back? I have the opinion of Mr. Wilmot only. Mr. Wilmot is referred to, because for some reason or other, it is supposed that, as he was introducer of fish culture in Canada, he would upon this question give a biased opinion, and that these would simply subserve this great and primary interest that he is supposed to have in view. That, however, is not so. For Mr. Wilmot's opinion I have great respect indeed. He has had an extraordinary experience upon this subject, of great value, and it has proved of great value, in my opinion, to the country. He has given a lifetime to the investigation of this question, and his opinions have always been important. But I find that all men who are supposed to know something of the question, and for that knowledge are paid by this country, agree as to what should be done in dealing with this question. I find that during the administration of the Reform Government, the Commissioner of Fisheries, Mr. Witcher, held very strongly the opinions that my officers hold now, and did all he could to bring them into force and have them moulded into regulations. I find Dr. Wakeham holding the same view, a man whose knowledge of our fisheries is hardly excelled by that of any other man, a man who has served with great credit on the commission that has been issued, in which the United States have appointed a very able man, Mr. Rathburn, one of the fishery staff at Washington, serving with him in the investigation of the various fishery questions in the waters contiguous to this country, and to the United States; also Professor Prince, a gentleman of scientific training, who, although he has only been in our service a little over a year, has already created a most favourable opinion among those who have met him, a man who is not only an educated man in every sense, but who has had a special scientific and practical training in the subject of fisheries, a man who has served on fishery commissions in England, both under Liberal and Conservative Administrations. I find all these gentlemen holding one opinion, and supporting that opinion by arguments that I have not heard answered in this House, and I do not believe can be answered. I have undertaken to stand by those opinions, and for that reason, some hon. gentlemen, perhaps, may think it a political move. Certainly I do not ascribe that motive to all hon. gentlemen who may differ with me, but we know that some hon. gentlemen think it a good political move to stir up among the fishermen a prejudice against the department and against the Government, and turn it to good political account. The temptation is very great. These fishermen whom we restrict, whose actions we limit, with whose operations we interfere, are a large and influential body of men. They are sensitive every time we move against them, and justly so, for to some extent we make it all the more difficult for them to get a living for the time being. But the advantage of all the fishery regulations is that, while they may for the time interfere with a man's operations, while the fishermen may not like them, in the long run the fishermen are better off, and certainly the regulations are better for the country at large, for they tend to preserve for a longer time than would otherwise be possible, a great and valuable industry that might be destroyed but for these regulations. Now, hon. gentlemen need not contradict me when I say there is a grand opportunity for the political demagogue to enter on the scene when these regulations are being enforced. I know both from friends and opponents how unpopular those regulations are, and I know only too well how difficult it is for any Minister, or for any Government, rigidly to adhere to a system that means the enforcement of those regulations. For instance, every time you punish a man you excite an enormous amount of sympathy in the district for that man. They think that the power of the Government has been hardly exercised upon one who, perhaps, is the least able to bear it. Violations of these regulations are sometimes severely punished, and this is a time, as I say, for the political demagogue, the man who has only a smattering knowledge of these questions, who uses what he calls horse sense, and refuses to look into any of the authorities on the subject, to come to the front and rally at his back the discontented fishermen, and ask for a snap verdict against the action of the department that dares to act in the alleged tyrannical fashion. But sometimes, Mr. Speaker, it suits hon. gentlemen to take another turn. For instance, it suited the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), when once dealing with this subject, to upbraid the department for not being severe enough. Now, strange as it may appear, this is the condition: that if there is a strong feeling that there has been neglect on the part of the department, and if a fishery has reached that stage when, after allowing the regulations to be suspended, ruin is apparent, then is the time for the demagogue to rise and indict the Government for having been recreant to their duty, for having been negligent in not enforcing the law, and so on. The hon. member for West Lambton spoke some time ago upon the cruelty and the oppression of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in enforcing the regulations in this cruel way, confiscating nets, burning boats, and doing all these terrible things. I ask the House to follow the argument of the hon. member on that occasion—he spoke in 1891—in order to appreciate the statement that I make to-night regarding the difficulties that any one has to face who for a moment deals with the administration of these regulations. He was advocating a strict and rigid enforcement of the laws in 1891. He was not pleading, as he did since 1891, for the poor fishermen who depended on this fishing for their livelihood. This is what he said:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

I for one hope that the effect of that legislation—That legislation which would allow the fishery officer a moiety of the penalty to be imposed.

—will be an incentive to these officials to act, and will induce them to be more vigilant, and to enforce as far as possible the fishery laws of the Dominion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They speak of pound-nets.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Again, later on he says:

The law is disregarded and every day in the year it is broken, and the result is lost to that section of the community.

Again, speaking of Lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron and Superior and Georgian Bay, he says:

In those great inland waters are to be found whitefish, trout, pickerel and herring, all having great commercial value, and it is but proper and right that every step that can possibly be taken, everything that can be done for the protection of that great national wealth should be done by the Government and by this House.

Coming down to specific complaints he said:

The fishermen complain of fishing with gill-nets and pound-nets in the district, and particularly with gill-nets, and that if the system is continued, it will inevitably lead to the complete and absolute destruction of the fisheries of the country, and it is with this view I have brought the subject up.

Later on, the same speaker said:

It is contended by those engaged in the industry that the pound-nets and gill-nets give the fish no chance to escape. They take in all kinds of fish, they are kept going day and night and the effect of the system has been almost to destroy the seine fishing in Lake Huron and in the other lakes to which I have referred.

Here I would explain, in order to show the difficulties connected with my position, that the hon. gentleman insists that seine fishing should be allowed. He is an advocate of seine fishing, of that mode of fishing condemned far above and beyond all other fishing engines in the lakes as injurious and destructive, not by politicians, men who get their views from the various districts and from interested parties, but by experts, men of experience and training who are to be found in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and not only in my time but previously, many of their records extending as far back as 1867, when the department was organized, since which time the department has continued the terrific struggle, first, to have the necessary regulations adopted, and the second, to have those regulations enforced. This hon. gentleman is in favour of seine fishing. But he forgets the poor people interested in pound-net fishing, and gill-net fishing, when he uses the argument of poverty, and although in comparing the number of people interested it is a comparison of thousands to hundreds, the hon. gentleman was willing to throw away the argument he now uses and advocate the interests of the fishery itself, and the interests of the men engaged in it subsequently. He had no qualms of conscience in regard to whom he might strike when he advocated the abolition of pound and gill-net fishing. I take the hon. gentleman's argument, not from any desire to quarrel with him, or to say that he was animated by anything but the best of faith, but his remarks show the enormous difficulties to be overcome in dealing with hon. members who fly at conclusions so suddenly, and who, as occasion serves sometimes, use arguments that are contradictory. Later on the hon. gentleman endorsed the idea held by the department, that our fisheries were in no great danger. In 1891 the hon. gentleman said :

It has been noticed that for five or six years, probably six or seven years our pound-nets increased in number, but the catch of the seine fishermen has been reduced from year to year, until it is safe to say that within the last two or three years the catch of those fishermen has been comparatively very little.

The last statement I believe to be correct, and it is of great importance in the consideration of this question, because hon. members have been led to believe that a splendid business has been struck down, that the men who used the seines made a living out of their use. Most of the evidence I have under my hand, some of which I will place in the possession of the House, corroborates the statement of the hon. member for West Lambton in 1891, that the fishermen have made very little money from seine fishing during the last few years. In the speech to which I have been referring, statements are given from credible people, one from a seine fisherman living in the county of Huron.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

His statement is that the seine fishing has been ruined, and he adds that the pound-nets have ruined the seine fishing. The hon. gentleman read the letter, and continued :

The letter I have just read is only one of a large number I have received from different sections, where seine fishermen are complaining that the effect of pound and gill-nets is to destroy the fishing grounds along the shores of the great lakes.

Later, in 1891, this is what the hon. gentleman demanded :

What the fishermen say is that gill-nets should be abolished entirely, while the question of pound-net fishing should be thoroughly investigated and reported on.

Later on he said :

We ask that the number of pound-net licenses should be greatly reduced, that pound-net licenses for Lake St. Clair should be abolished, and the mesh made larger.

Again he said :

We ask that violations of the law in regard to the size of the net and in regard to fishing during the close season should be punished by cancellation of licenses and destruction of the fishing plant, and that Canadians only should have licenses provided they own the necessary appliances.

Why should the hon. gentleman this session upbraid the department because in all these matters we have followed the general principle, the primary principle on which he founded that speech, though we did not adopt his views in toto. We undertook to meet the hon. gentleman, and that is why I refer to him, for we adopted those views, not because they were his views, but because they were the views of the department, and we had to ignore the various individual interests of the fisheries in general, and the fishermen would have to take the risk and adapt themselves to measures for carrying on the business such as the business could stand. Any other principle, while popular at the time, ends only in trouble and dissatisfaction, and is entirely inconsistent with any well-organized attempt for either the adoption or enforcement of fishery regulations. We adopted practically the hon. gentleman's view of ignoring individual interests, and we found that much of what the hon. gentleman said as to pound and gill-net fishing is true, that stationary fishing is not half so dangerous in those waters as is seine fishing, which is movable fishing, which causes destruction to fish that have never matured and never had the opportunity of reproducing their species, that the destroyed fish were never even taken into the seine, but that the seine, handled as it is, over a very large tract of water comparatively shallow, takes within its reach and bounds the smaller fish which have escaped the large fish and have sought those grounds as specially theirs, and in such large numbers are they destroyed by the manipulation of the seine fishermen that within a short time, although the hon.

gentleman has told us about the migratory nature of the fish of the great lakes, the seining grounds have been reduced to utter and absolute ruin. Let me illustrate that one point, and it is significant. I hold in my hand a plan, showing the narrow and lower part of Lake Huron, the St. Clair River, and Lake St. Clair. Point Edward, at the mouth of the St. Clair River, was, some years ago, one of the most valuable and famous seining grounds in Canada. By putting up that ground at auction, the department was able to obtain no less than $1,000 a year rental from these poor fishermen whose case has been submitted to the House by hon. gentlemen on various occasions. The successful tenderer obtained that fishing ground for $1,000 rental, while the ordinary license fee is about $50. The gentleman who has that fishery claimed a reduction of the reduced rent of last year, because of the utter failure of that fishery. Famous as the fishery was, and turning over thousands and thousands of dollars in the season's work, the most satisfactory evidence on oath has been produced that the fishery is an utter and absolute failure and that it has been fished out. One portion of that fishery is the width of the narrowest portion of St. Clair River, the point at which hon. gentlemen have told the House that they have seen the foreign fishermen working on their side of the line. Hon. gentlemen have also told the House that these fish keep to no particular runs or grounds, but that they go back and forth. I have strong evidence here on many points. I have evidence as to the destructive character of the seine as a fishing engine, as to the fact that the fish are local and not migratory, and that you can utterly extinguish a fishery by simply continuing to fish it with a dangerous engine such as the seine. In a statement laid by the licensee before the department recently, this was what was said:

Mr. Steele had paid a considerable sum for Miss Slocum's interest and the right to fish at Point Edward, and I had spent nearly the whole of my life in the fishery, and I had so invested there, that we could not afford to let the fisheries upon which I had spent hundreds and hundreds of dollars fall into other hands. So we took a license at the rental of $500 a year. The rent up to that had been $300. Until three years ago, the property was fairly good but for the past three years we have merely paid expenses, and last year we did not pay expenses.

Messrs. Steele and Hitchcock, were the lessees of the fishery, and on that point this is the sworn evidence of one of these gentlemen:

Q. Do you hold an important fishery at the mouth of the river?—A. It is not very important now, although I have paid for it $500 a year for about five years. Five years ago, it was a fair business. Then we had no reason to grumble, but it is not profitable now, and we are not making a cent. It has been falling off for the last three or four years. The bottom of the fishery has fallen out, and while it was worth $500 a year, five or six or seven years ago, it is not worth that now.

Hon. gentlemen will see the importance of that statement. This man, not having any scientific knowledge and not having any particular information on this subject beyond his own natural experience in fishing a place, which is, as I say, on one side of a very narrow sheet of water, shows what the seine has done, and he shows from the experience of a long series of years how local these fish are in their habits. There is abundance of scientific evidence to corroborate all that. But, Mr. Speaker, I deem it important to call your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from North Essex (Mr. McGregor) who has given attention to this matter, argued at one time that Canadians should be allowed to fish under the same regulations as the Americans do, and he quoted with approval from the petition of the Essex County Council, the words, "The license system and close season should be abolished." I understand that the American system as advocated by the hon. gentleman refers to a free fishery, and the County Council of Essex evidently had that idea of it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) however, did not finish that argument without showing how little importance he gave to the various statements he had brought before the House. I complain that in connection with the attacks made upon the administration of the fisheries in that locality, that, after denouncing all close seasons, and all regulations, the hon. gentleman himself proceeded to advocate a close time, which he fixed at from November 25th to April 15th. I want to know, Sir, whether the department is to be taken by the throat and denounced as tyrannical, and held up as an oppressor of the fisherman, when they, with the full knowledge of the facts, and after inquiry selected a close season as they deemed best in the interests of the fisheries. The hon. gentleman leading the attack gave as his idea of a close season from November 25th to April 15th. What means did he show this House that he had for forming the conclusion that he should cut off that particular portion of the year in the interests of the fishermen, and for the advantage of the fisheries. I would like to mention to the House that on the 25th of November the whitefish have just spawned, and that on April 15th the pickerel begin to spawn, and I take it that the hon. gentleman, if he knew anything of the subject, was familiar with these facts. Surely his advice on this subject cannot be considered of great importance if he proposes to allow fishing up to the time that the spawning is ended in the case of one fish, and to allow fishing again when spawning is about to begin in the other case. Then again, the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) told us that the member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) did not voice entirely the wishes of the fishermen of Ontario, and yet it is the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) and the member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) and the member for South Essex (Mr. Allan) who lead this attack upon the administration of the department in regard to the fishery regulations. I have shown that one of the hon. gentlemen contradicts himself, that all three contradict each other, and that the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) warns me and warns the House, that we are to take what the member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) said with a grain of salt. With the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) it is clearly a question of degree. He is against the pound-net as a most destructive engine, and he admits—and it is an important admission—that in hauling in these nets much of the fry or spawn may be destroyed. That is the hon. gentleman's admission, and it is in accordance with the scientific opinion that the handling and the frequent hauling over the fishing grounds of these nets is destructive to spawn, and will, in the end, be ruinous to any fishery where it is practised. In answer to the statement which the hon. gentleman makes that we have caused an enormous amount of suffering and ruin and loss of employment, I am sure it struck the House to-day, when I asked the hon. gentleman, who comes from that district, whether he could give me the names of those who are in this unfortunate and pitiable condition, that he did not and was not able to comply with my request. Now, my officers inform me that applications from the men who held these same licenses have been received and granted largely for pound-nets, that they have turned into the fishing which has been for the time being sanctioned, and that they have not gone to the wall or been ruined by being prevented from following what I have shown in one case to be a profitless business. It is necessary just here that I should caution those hon. gentlemen who care to look into this subject and who care to follow me in the consideration of it, that, while the hon. member for South Essex did not tell us very definitely to-day what his real complaint was, the department has not stopped all fishing. Bear that in mind. The hon. gentleman talked to-day as if we had come down with a heavy hand and said: There shall be no fishing in these Canadian waters, but you shall sit by and see your American neighbours fishing in the waters opposite to you. That is not the case. What has caused the hon. gentleman to bring up the question before the House in this marked way has been the discountenancing of a destructive and ruinous fishing engine, and the stopping at once and sharply of the use of a net that was shown to have already had its deadly effect upon this important interest in the province of Ontario. That was the real reason; and, in order to put the matter in its strongest light, as I have said, the hon. gentleman dwelt upon a comparatively small strip of water, where very few men have ever been engaged in the fishing business. The amount is a mere bagatelle. That is their strong point, and they bring that up as an evidence of the hardship of the case. I meet them by saying that although the subject came up earlier in the session and we are now in June, yet I have to learn the name of one solitary individual who has been ruined or injured by the enforcement of a necessary and wholesome regulation. Now, hon. gentlemen talk about the absurdity of our supposing that these fish are non-migratory, and that in these narrow waters they are not constantly skipping across from one side to the other; and they say that when we prohibit fishermen from taking them on our side, the chances are ten to one that they are being taken on the other side. I would ask the hon. gentleman how he will explain this to me, that while the United States are spending millions to our thousands in fish culture, yet it was my experience to find a request from the hatchery at Detroit, on the United States side, of that narrow sheet of water, for permission to come into the Canadian waters, in sight of the so-called United States fishermen, to obtain the necessary quota of eggs for their hatchery, stating that they could not obtain them on the United States side? The reason is clear, and it is consistent with all the reports that I have been able to find—that our side of Lake Erie and our side of that river are peculiar, just as every man in the Lower Provinces understands that the tracks of the salmon up the coasts into the estuaries and up the rivers to the spawning beds are peculiar. As every man, woman, and child in a salmon fishing district know, just as they know the best fishing stands, there is a point where it is possible to intercept those fish in their regular path year after year to their spawning beds. They do not go to the right or to the left, or skip about with the breezes, as the hon. gentleman from the lakes have told this House in all seriousness, on the strength of items extracted from newspapers, and written perhaps in a joke. Men who have followed these fisheries will tell them that these fish keep a regular track right along one season with another. And so it is on the lakes. I know myself, with the little experience I have had since 1888, that certain fishing stations are eagerly looked after from one year to another. The fishermen know just where to go for a particular class of fish. Our reports are full of instances of this kind. There is a great deal more room in the Atlantic for the cod to frisk about and to change its habitant than there is for the fish in the lakes; and yet every hon. gentleman knows that so enormous has been the destruction of the cod, and so extraordinary has been the number of men engaged in taking that fish, that at last the different cod banks show signs of exhaustion, and some famous banks off the coast of Newfoundland are utterly exhausted. The mackerel of course is not a local fish in the same sense; but there are fish in the ocean that are local; and it makes the case fifty times stronger to find in the land-locked seas of the upper provinces, what history shows, that the fish there are far more local in their habits than down on the seacoast; and all this talk about the fishery statistics of United States ports on Lake Erie is nothing but talk, because I have given evidence to show that fisheries in Lake Erie, where people have been allowed to fish ad libitum, unrestricted by Government interference, are already a thing of the past; and when the hon. gentleman reads these statistics, I will tell him how they are made, and I will give him good authority. These statistics are made up of Canadian fish. These fisheries have assumed enormous importance since the passage of the McKinley Bill, and with what result? The hon. gentleman has told us in part. He has told us that our fisheries are largely in the hands of the United States fish-dealers in Buffalo and elsewhere, owing largely to circumstances over which we had practically no control. The McKinley Bill made it worth while to encourage fraud of the worst and vilest kind in connection with this industry, and already a system has been introduced along our inland waters which has worked to the detriment of our statistics, so to speak, and to the detriment probably of many important interests along the great lakes. That system was this, that every man who could swear that he caught in a net owned by a United States fisherman could enter those fish as United States fish in a United States port. And consequently Canadian fish by the ton went in all last summer particularly, and the season before, into United States ports as United States fish. But will the hon. gentleman, coming from that district, seriously tell this House or his own constituents that the condition of the United States side of Lake Erie is as happy and bright as he pretends? When I remind him of this fact, that although the Yankee fisherman is not trammelled by regulations, pays no fees, observes no close season, if the hon. gentleman's information be correct, we seized last season no less than two large fishing tugs which were desperate enough to cross great distances—one as much as thirty miles—into Canadian waters in order to catch our fish? What stronger evidence can he require that their fisheries are on the decline and in an alarming condition, when their fishermen will run away from that happy fishing ground into all the risk that attaches to fishing in foreign waters? I am surprised that these gentlemen, coming from a district that is far more familiar to them than to me, should not deal with the question on broader and fairer grounds. I take no extreme ground, I arrogate to myself no pretense that I must be right, but I have simply given the House the information and the records on which I am acting. I have told them, and repeat now, that pound-net fishing and gill-net fishing have caused great loss and trouble, and threaten worse consequences to the people on those lakes. What I wish to see is such an opinion in this House and on those lakes, before it is too late, that we shall be able to curb, with the support of both sides of the House that feeling which is growing more intense every year, just in proportion as the United States fisheries fall off, to rush in, catch all the fish possible in the season, turn them over into hard cash, and let the devil take the hindmost. It would be an easy thing to bow to the temporary feeling of the people there, let them have their own sweet will, and wreck this splendid industry which may be made a permanent one. But I think myself it is better to ride out the storm and breast this prejudice, and for that reason I have ventured to deal in this way with some of the points before the House. Take the way, again in which the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Allan) approached this question. He cited Mr. Keyes, from the International Commission which sat in Detroit in 1892, to prove that November fish was alone valuable in this district, and he said that is the fish that we stop. Well, we have shown that November is a breeding season, and for that reason we have stopped the fishing in that month, as we do everywhere where there are regulations. Either regulations must be effective or wipe them out altogether, and they amount to very little if they do not protect the breeding season. But take this authority which the hon. gentleman quotes. On page 30 of the very report from which the hon. gentleman cited, we find that this very authority, which the hon. gentleman paraded before the House as a member attending the conference of international fishery commissioners held at Detroit—this Mr. Keyes said that whitefish—which was the subject of consideration and to which the hon. gentleman referred—do not frequent Canadian waters. I think that opinion is sufficient to dispose of that authority, and it is the only authority which the hon. gentleman gave. There are a great many men in this country, the United States and Europe, who have dealt with the question of the movement of the fish which the hon. gentleman discussed, but the hon. gentleman gave practically Mr. Keyes' evidence only, and I have shown what kind of an expert Mr. Keyes was, who did not know that there were whitefish in Canada. At another point in the hon. gentleman's presentment of the so-called grievance, I am embarrassed by finding that the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), and the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Allan), attribute the decline of our lake fisheries to the restrictions of licenses and close seasons and the increase of the river traffic. Those, of course, are mere opinions, which will go for what they are worth, but they are contradicted by the arguments of these gentlemen themselves, and by the experience of Europe. How can the increase of river traffic have done much to disturb these fisheries if they are in such a sound and healthy condition that the restrictions we are imposing are denounced as unnecessary and unreasonable. I would ask also, if the river traffic disturbs the fish, how is it that on the river Tay, on which is situated large manufacturing cities, such as Dundee and Perth, one of the most valuable salmon fisheries in the world is to be found at present? With the vast shipping on that stream, you have a vast fishery; and this idea of the shipping disturbing the fisheries is an idea monopolized by the three hon. gentlemen to whom I have referred. It is news to all others, in the salt waters, at any rate, who are accustomed both to ships and to fish. But the hon. member for North Essex introduced a political aspect into the question. He wanted to know what Essex had done, as if some sudden blow were aimed at Essex, and both North and South Essex happened to be represented by hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side. If it is any pleasure to those hon. gentlemen, I will tell them that gentlemen who agree politically with me, friends of mine in both those constituencies, used stronger arguments on the merits, put before me every fact that possibly could be urged against the policy I did adopt, and adopted reluctantly, and put before me the political difficulties as well—that intense dissatisfaction would be created, that it would be considered we had no care for the fishermen's interests—and I argued with these gentlemen and put as strongly as I could the reason which led me to adopt the present policy. There should be no politics in the matter. I was not the first to take up this question. It is one, to use the graphic language of the hon. member for North Essex, that used to cause him to implore my predecessor, who was a member of the Reform Administration, to come to his rescue and suspend these obnoxious regulations, because he was getting his jacket warmed by the district. He represented that riding then from 1874 to 1878. These fishermen's interests were being "interfered with" by the Fisheries Department in the same way as now, and he never opened his lips either in going into Supply or in a motion for papers or in any other way. But he sent official letters, that are on record, in which he begged and implored Sir Albert Smith, then Minister of Marine, to suspend these fisheries regulations or not enforce them very rigidly, because he was "getting his jacket warmed" by the people of that district. And while that Minister did yield to some extent only to his prayers, I have not done the same. He has discussed the question with me in a different manner and on different grounds, but I am prepared to meet him. But I would like to say that this is not a political question, or one the responsibility for which can be hung upon our political pegs. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite has been, or was originally, in conformity with that I am now endeavouring to uphold. I find that before Confederation, for instance, an Order in Council was passed, dated 9th August, 1866, which prohibited nets, except under license, along the shores of the Detroit River and River St. Clair. There was an entire ignoring of the main principle, for which hon. gentlemen opposite have contended—that in narrow waters these regulations should not be enforced. But again, I find that the hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that the enforcement of these regulations is of late growth, for a petition is on file in the records of this Parliament, showing that the Act was enforced in 1871, and that requests were made of Parliament in the direction the hon. gentleman now refers to. The subject became a live one in 1876, and a circular was written upon the authority of the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, combating entirely the view hon. gentlemen are now supporting. This circular was issued under the authority of the Minister, was signed by the Commissioner of Fisheries, who referred to the subject of close seasons for spring-breeding fishes in Lake Erie and Detroit River. The commissioner used the following language, and I would ask the attention of hon. members who are following this subject at all, because this is an important point. And I hope that the discussion of the question will be altogether free from political bias, because I would desire that the question should be considered—I think I can fairly claim that—on its merits:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The operations of these necessary regulations appears to some—and usually to those persons who are at least impatient, if not altogether opposed to any restriction whatever, on their fishing pursuit—to be comparatively injurious to Canadian fishermen, in consequence to their proximity to the United States fishermen, who are said to fish unrestrictedly in the same geographical district. Whenever, therefore, the close seasons adopted, or methods of fishing prescribed, are found to curtail somewhat the operations of Canadian fishermen engaged in these border waters, the cry is raised that we are protecting fish for the benefit of United States citizens: that we not only deprive British subjects of catching the fish in Canadian waters when the market is most profitable, but thereby abandon such market to the exclusive profit of our foreign neighbours. It must be admitted that all this seems at first sight to be very plausible and there is no doubt it is well calculated to attract public notice and enlist local sympathies. But it is not, in a considerable degree at least, fallacious? Every unbiased and observing person, who devotes any attention to this trouble at all knows that the spring and summer fishing of our great inland lakes are attracted inshore and towards the islands in shoals by the two great leading instincts of want of food and reproduction.

The quantity of food and the facilities for propagation are quite as attractive generally on the Canadian as they are on the United States side of the lakes and rivers. Indeed it is pretty well known that, with the sole exception of the shoals around those groups of islands which are situated on either side of the boundary line, the best feeding and breeding places are on the northern shores and in the waters of Canada.

Little later on in the circular, Mr. Whitcher proceeds :

The idea that, in such extensive bodies of water as the great lakes, the local range of various kinds of non-migratory fishes extends across an imaginary water boundary, is not at all a practical one. It has been very industriously cultivated in support of claims made by fishing communities to be exempted from the economical restrictions; but it is so obviously an excuse that the parties using it have always confined themselves to mere assertions.

So, Mr. Speaker, the matter was deemed sufficiently important to be made the subject of a printed departmental circular in 1876. Before I go on, I would like to point out that it is not only the men in that locality who are interested in the policy I am advocating and defending. All the fishermen of these great lakes are interested, for there is none who can dispute that these narrow waters, these shoals and islands, are the great breeding grounds of the fishes of the greater waters. But to show further that there should be no political question in this, I find that in the time of Mr. Mackenzie, the Government did not hesitate to deal with subjects of this kind in a drastic manner, and very properly so. The Government prohibited, for instance, the use of seines in all Canada for the catching of smelts, by Order in Council, of 26th July, 1877. There is not an argument that has been used in this debate, notwithstanding the question of the contiguity of a foreign country, that cannot be met in a fair way by a comparison of the principles involved in this smelt question. The Government prohibited very properly the use of seines for the catching of smelts in that year, and there was no outcry that this was cruel and tyrannical towards the fishermen. Coming nearer to the waters of the Detroit River and River St. Clair, let me call attention to the fact that the same Government, by Order in Council, of March, 1878, prohibited setting nets or seines of any kind whatever in Niagara River, from the Falls to old Fort Erie. Every point that can be made by the hon. gentleman, every statement that he has made in support of his attack upon the action of the department in his particular district, can be met by the particular Order in Council to which I have referred. This is a frequent order passed under the provisions of the Fisheries Act, without any public outcry, where the object is for the general good, though in each case an individual's liberty is restrained of limited. For instance, there is a total prohibition in Little Lake, off Mitchell's Bay, that I believe is in Lake St. Clair; on March 13, 1879, there was total prohibition of fishing, not merely the restricting of unsuitable fishing engines, in that lake. As I have said, I have with me Mr. Wilmot; I have with me Mr. Whitcher, who had long experience in the department; I have Dr. Wakeham, whose standing no one can dispute, and I have Professor Prince, who gives the result of his examination. Those gentlemen, of course, are all with the exception of Mr. Whitcher, now connected with my department. But let me call into this discussion another man, having no relation with the Dominion Government, a man of undoubted scientific standing, who has given his opinion and advice to the local Government of Ontario, that is, Professor Ramsey Wright, I think, of Toronto University, a man whose standing on this subject is well known to all who are doing scientific work in that part of the country. He has acted in connection with the Ontario Commission, and written a paper in which he refers to the destructiveness of this sort of fishing engine known as the seine. But in order to establish my point, I ask the House to bear with me while I call attention to a document that is very much sought after, but after it is laid upon the Table of the House, I notice it receives very scant attention and very few perusals, and that is the Fisheries Report. I would like to call attention to page 76, in Roman numerals, where one of the commissioners on this international commission, serving with Mr. Rathburn, of Washington, testifies to the decrease of the fisheries in those waters to which I refer :

All evidence points to the facts that in Lake Ontario and Erie as well as in the Detroit River and Lake St. Clair, the fisheries have decreased.

On page 77 again I would call attention to a statement made as long ago as 1872 :

In 1872 the departmental report called attention to the rapid diminution of marketable fisheries in those waters which border on the United States and Canada, particularly between Lakes Erie and Huron.

The history of the whitefish, to which I called attention, bears out the importance of that statement. Now, I would trouble the House with some further and important evidence supporting the argument I have endeavoured to present. This report contains evidence on the question of the non-marketable nature of the fish, and I think it is an authority that some hon. gentlemen require to consider. On page 70 of the Fisheries Report, it is stated :

During the course of the investigation into the fisheries adjoining the international waters by Mr. Rathburn, of the United States Fishery Commission, and Dr. Wakeham, the fishery commissioner appointed by Her Majesty's Government, it is ascertained that the fish which visit our side to spawn do not all move to the United States waters, but are local in their habits rather than migratory.

Again, on page 75, in a very interesting article on the whitefish close season on the Detroit River, by Professor Prince, he states the facts which he observed on personal examination, going down to the localities in question :

The Canadian side is and always has been the chief resort for the whitefish.

Agreeing with Mr. Whitcher for the reasons given in his circular.

The great fish markets of Detroit and elsewhere look to the Canadian side for their main supplies of whitefish which breed, and are hatched, and are reared in our waters.

That result is confirmed by Mr. Whitcher, the officer in charge of the Wisconsin hatchery, who implored us to send eggs, as they were not able to get them on their own side of the river, for this fishery. Again Professor Prince says :

In these waters, as in other waters, it is certainly not the case that the schools of breeding fish deviate from their usual course and cross from side to side, so that fish caught by American fishermen during our close season would be caught by Canadians were they permitted to fish at that time.

Another reason why our side of the river differs from the other side, he states :

Not only has our side been the chief resort for the spawns, but the pollutions of Detroit city and numerous factories on the American side, as well as sewage and other deleterious matters, have tended to drive the whitefish to the purer water on the Canadian side, and thus increase the schools of spawners in our own waters.

Then again :

The numberless nets, traps, and pounds set in American waters and extending far from shore, intercept the migrating fish, break up the spawning schools, and drive them to our side. Our close season affords them freedom from these disturbances, and encourages them to come to our side.

On page 77, Commander Wakeham, who has gone into this subject with great care, says :

Whitefish and trout do not remain long on the spawning grounds, they come in slowly, but directly they have spawned, they return to deeper water. It is not the case that what are called Canadian fish are taken to any great extent in United States waters, a few may straggle from the schools, but the great mass of the fish that spawn in our waters never get within reach of seines or pounds fished on the other side.

I need not trouble the House much on that point. I regret I have to do so at this length, but the subject is a very important one, and I wish to let the House know the reasons upon which I base my conclusion. At this point let us take a view of the conditions of the waters on the United States side. I find some testimony on this point in the joint documents containing the seventh report of the Fishery Commission of the state of Michigan. The question is as to whether we are to be allowed to engage at all times and without restriction, in the business of fishing. Now, let us see the condition of the waters on the other side, as a result of a system such as the hon. gentleman seemed to advocate. On page 13 of the document to which I refer, it is stated :

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

From Port Arthur to St. Clair River little is now done ; the fishing has been destroyed.

And again :

Fishing in St. Clair River is practically a thing of the past. A few seines are in use there, but the catch is light. The whitefish has entirely disappeared.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, this is testimony as to the condition of the fishery with free fishing. This is the fishery to which our fish with every puff of wind go, for it is alleged that the fish go indiscriminately from one side to the other. But we know that we get the eggs on our side of the river for our hatcheries. The Americans want the breeding fishing from our waters because there are no fishing on their own side at that point. But here is the official evidence that the whitefish have disappeared from the United States side of the St. Clair River. This was in 1886. I can give the House the request of the American Commissioners to secure breeding fish from Canadian waters, because they could not get them on their own side. The report adds :

In the St. Clair River the law prohibiting the use of nets has been violated.

I have accepted the hon. gentleman's statement on which part of his argument was constructed, that the Americans had no effective laws on the subject. There is no law, because there is no power of force sufficient to carry out a law and deal with local prejudices. Again this report says :

Very few fishing grounds are operated in Detroit River. The number is insignificant in comparison with past years.

This is further testimony as to the result and effect of unrestricted fishing.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You will not allow them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am referring to the United States side of the river and to the testimony of the United States people. I am destroying the main foundation of the hon. gentleman's grievance, and that is that our people on the Canadian side watch with envy their American neighbours taking the fish they are prevented from taking, and I am telling him that when the Americans want whitefish to breed from on their own side they have to come and seek fish on our side. I am showing by the official's report the ruined condition of the whitefish fishing in the waters on the United States side, and yet the fact that seines are used on that side makes our people envious. I refer again to the report for the Americans cast envious eyes on us, and the commissioners refer at pages 15 and 24 to the improved condition of the Canadian grounds. Could a better argument be presented than that in vindication of our policy? On the one side, no restriction; on the other side, restriction much complained of. On the one side the testimony shows that the absence of restriction has led to the ruin of the fisheries, and on the other side that where there is restriction the result has been such as to redound to the credit of that system. I give those facts to the hon. gentleman for his consideration. The hon. gentleman has referred to newspapers. Let me quote from the Winnipeg 'Evening Free Press,' in which a common truth is stated. I quote as follows:

The scarcity of fish in Lake Erie and the somewhat inferior variety is causing something of an exodus of dealers from Lake Erie. The Sandusky Fish Company, which consists of all the firms in Sandusky and vicinity, has decided to remove its entire business to the Lake of the Woods, on the boundary between the United States and Manitoba. Nine car-loads of nets, a tug, etc., were shipped to Duluth en route to the point stated. The Company expects to catch sufficient to meet the demands of trade, and when the rigorous northern winter sets in will go back to Lake Erie and go to work. It is stated that numerous companies along the north coast of Lake Erie will soon follow. Lake Erie supplies nearly all the northern United States with fresh water fish, but excessive netting for several years has almost ruined the business.

The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) knows that is true; he knows the financial difficulties experienced by those deep fishing operators who fish without law or license in the United States waters, and in the end have ruined the fishing, and the necessity which has led them to move out and explore other waters. I could give the House further testimony, if such were needed, as to the comparative condition of these fisheries. I hold in my hand an interesting document, it is the latest I could obtain, and was published in 1893, it being the report for 1892 of the Fish Commissioners of the state of Michigan, and it deals with those waters which I have been considering. I ask the House to observe what the commissioners say, and from those statements to judge whether we are proceeding on correct lines. It is not a new thing for fish commissioners in the United States to battle year after year for the protection of the fisheries. The State Legislatures have had many Bills, and useful Bills presented to them for their adoption, but politics of the smallest and meanest character have controlled many a State Legislature, and it is notorious, as these official documents show, that because the fishermen of the locality do not wish to be interfered with, members of the Legislature have not the courage to meet that prejudice and fight it, and consequently either no law is passed or a totally ineffective law is adopted. These commissioners, who are very eminent men, report first on the necessity of regulation, as shown by their experience. Then they refer to a fact well known to those interested in the subject, but as others are not, perhaps, acquainted with it, it is important that I should read the following remarks:—

The appliances for catching these fish have been so improved and the fishermen are so eager to take and sell all that comes to their nets that but few of the fry planted are allowed to reach anything like maturity.

They state, what is self-evident, that while millions of fish may be produced by artificial hatching they cannot be preserved, except by efficient regulation and protection. Coming down to speak of the Detroit River at page 17, the Commissioners say:

The ova of the whitefish for the Detroit station have been taken principally from the fisheries on the American side of the Detroit River. For the last two years we have handled all the fish taken on this side of the river, and in order to obtain what we required have been obliged to look after the fisheries pretty sharp at times. We have finally arranged to control all these fisheries ourselves, and the past season have hired the fishermen out and out and managed the fishing, directly owning and selling the fish caught.

That is to say that the fishing is controlled, not by independent citizens of the United States who are held up as to the citizens of Canada as holding an enviable position, but the fishermen are in the employ of the Michigan hatching establishment which controls those fisheries itself. The Commissioners go on to say:

No herring of any consequence have been taken on the river for the past three years which seems very remarkable considering the large quantities that have formerly been caught here even at a quite recent date.

The first whitefish eggs were taken in the season of 1890, on November 6th.

I would like to know if hon. gentlemen will say "hear, hear" to that? Part of their argument was that our season was all wrong, but here we have the American experience agreeing with ours on this water as to when these eggs are taken, and I fancy that is about the time that there should be a close season.

The first whitefish eggs were taken in the season of 1890, on November 6th, and were taken on that day on every fishery in the river, and the last eggs were taken on December 11th.

This shows the period over which the spawning continues. Again:

About 15 years ago, whitefish along this shore from Michigan City to St. Jo were abundant.

We used to take them in seines by the wagon load during May and June when running in large shoals in shallow water which is a peculiar habit of the whitefish. Pound-nets, seines, and gill-nets were used here at one time. Gradually and surely the whitefish began to fall off until three years ago, when I sold out all my fishing outfit.

That is the result of free fishing which the hon. gentleman envies. There was nothing to prevent this man fishing, but the want of fish, and when the fish were gone, he sold his outfit.

Sagutuk, which lies at the mouth of Kalamazoo river, was at one time a fishing station, is now of very little importance. Whitefish and sturgeon were the principal varieties. Now all that are left of the fish kind are perch, and they are very plentiful in and about the mouth of the river.

That place was fished out, too, as many a good fishing locality has been exhausted before. I do not think it is necessary to dwell very fully on the question of the condition of fish in the spawning season. That is foreign to the subject immediately under review, and it is rather academical. I take it that the general opinion is that fish at that period are not as valuable an article of diet as in other seasons. I know, of course, that the spawn of certain fish is very valuable, but the fish itself at that time does not bring its best price, and certain kinds of fish are not considered wholesome diet then. If time permitted, which it does not, I could also give valuable information in connection with the inquiry made by the Commissioners, Messrs. Wilmot and Harris, as to the effect of seines in the Detroit River. I wish to say that this theory of the movement of fish as controlled by the wind is a subject that would be exceedingly interesting to discuss. I have looked into that question very carefully, and while I have abundant authority to upset such an idea, I shall reserve it until some authority, other than the mere opinion of gentlemen who have no particular experience with the fisheries, is advanced on the other side of the argument. Let me deal for a few moments with the insinuation which was made respecting the qualification of Professor Prince to deal with these subjects. My own opinion is that Canada is very lucky in obtaining the services of a man of his training. The facts connected with his appointment are these: I found that there had always been but one opinion in the department, and that was, that while we had a great many industrious men, and men of good ability, who had a great deal of experience in connection with fish life, that they had no scientific knowledge as such. Mr. Wilmot and Mr. Whitcher picked up their knowledge from experience, and they had a great deal of experience, but it was believed that it would be of great importance to a country such as Canada if we could back up that experience by an officer having such training as to give him a standing with men like the late

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Spencer Baird, and other able men attached to permanent fishery boards, in America and in Europe. In the different States of the United States, and in every great and small European country, such men were in the employment of those interested in the fisheries. Here was Canada, with a famous fishery, realizing $19,000,000 hard cash every year, with fisheries of great variety and vast extent, famous all over the world, and yet we had not a single man of any scientific standing or training to advise the Government or the people upon this subject. Therefore, having obtained the authority of the Government, I caused inquiries to be made in England as to what suitable man would be willing to come here. I did not, however, take that step until I endeavoured to find a suitable man in our own country. If we had had any man who had given himself to a course of study and scholastic training in this matter, such as Prof. Ramsay Wright, of the Toronto University, it would have been far preferable to have had him to assist the Government as adviser. There was only one man of this class who was brought to my notice after careful inquiry, and that was Prof. Ganong, who, I think, comes from New Brunswick, or, at all events, from one of the lower provinces. That gentleman has won distinction in Harvard University, holds a chair there, and has followed, with great interest, the many phases of the fisheries of Canada, but it was impossible to induce him to give up the position he is now holding. The applications in England were from splendid men, and the great difficulty was in making a selection. They were men who held very important positions, with emoluments attached larger than we could offer, and it seemed almost hopeless, to expect a high-class man for the very moderate salary we felt justified in offering. I was surprised and gratified to find able men from the different fishery commission boards in England, Ireland and Scotland, who were willing to serve the Canadian Government. Their papers, their standing in the profession, and everything was unquestionable, and what turned the scale in favour of Prof. Prince, who was a man of splendid standing in England was his youth. He was the youngest of those who applied, and I thought that that fact, together with his high standing, meant a great deal for Canada. I am not exaggerating when I say that whether hon. gentlemen be on the other side of the House or on this, with whom Professor Prince has come in contact, or whether they were prominent fishermen, there has been but one opinion with reference to the qualifications of Professor Prince for the position, and his sound knowledge of all matters connected with the fisheries. The member for Lambton did not say anything in the slightest degree offensive concerning Professor Prince. But he attempted to minimize the force of his opinion by saying: what did he know about the Detroit River? and so on. Well, as a matter of fact, he had been there and had investigated this subject very thoroughly, and had made a microscopic examination of the young fish that were admittedly destroyed by the seines—fish which were at one time supposed to be minnows of no commercial importance, but which he found beyond doubt to be the young of the white fish and the herring. Now, I would like to say that Prof. Prince is a fishery expert of large experience. He has been chosen for appointment by both political parties in England; he has served under both Liberal and Conservative Governments, and served with satisfaction. The present Lord Tweedmouth, when Mr. Marjoribanks, selected him for important work on the Scottish Fishery Bait and Shell Fish Commission of 1889. Mr. Balfour, the Conservative leader in the House of Commons, arranged an extensive survey of Irish fisheries in 1892, and Prof. Prince was appointed as the fishery expert on that survey. The Scottish Fishery Board gave him most important work, perhaps as important as was ever undertaken by that splendid board, namely, to begin extensive fishery researches regarding the breeding and life history of salmon and sea fishes. These occupied five or six years, and the results formed the most thorough and extensive publication on food fishes published in any country. Then, the United States Science Fund, called the Elizabeth Thompson Research Fund, gave the only grant ever given for aiding fishery investigations, to Prof. Prince for original researches on fishes. He has lived for many years on the sea coast of Scotland, and has had perhaps as large an experience in reference to its very important and varied fisheries as any living man in the United Kingdom. He has spent months on the rivers and lakes of Scotland, and has studied specially the salmon and other fisheries there. I think it would be difficult to find, even among perhaps abler men, a man of anything like his standing, who has obtained in the same length of time—for he is not an old man, he is what you call a young man—such valuable and widespread experience. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have endeavoured to go—hurriedly, it is true—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, no.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman says "No, no." He has been reading far more interesting literature. I know. However, I have gone hurriedly over the subject, because it would take hours and days to discuss fully and satisfactorily the numberless and interesting questions that spring up at all points out of a discussion like this. I have been dealing with one line that struck me as the most important, and yet I may have utterly failed to deal with the problems that have been worrying the hon. gentleman who brought this question before the House—that is my embarrassment. But as I saw that hon. gentlemen were not very anxious to get into Committee of Supply—they always have a motion of some kind ready for the attention of the House—and as, in my humble judgment, there is no subject of greater importance to Canada than the question of the fisheries and the best method of protecting them, I have ventured to put as much as I could in a limited space of the information on which I have been acting in connection with the enforcement of the regulation now complained of, which is the chief subject of complaint that I have heard, that is, the prohibition of seine fishing in these waters.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker, I am not going to trouble the House for anything like the length of time that has been occupied by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and my only excuse for occupying the attention of the House at all on this subject is that there are in my constituency a considerable number of fishermen who are interested in this question, and in the policy which the Government have seen proper to adopt. There is one thing, Mr. Speaker, which must have attracted the attention of the House. The hon. gentleman says that the Opposition have not been anxious to get into committee. Why, Sir, the Opposition, at the request of the hon. Minister of Finance, abandoned on the present occasion, a proposition which they consider of very great importance, in order to give him an opportunity of at once going into committee; but, Sir, no sooner was that done than, it would seem with the sanction of the Minister, an hon. gentleman got up to make a violent attack upon an hon. member on this side of the House, and several hon. gentlemen spoke in succession, until a great portion of the time previous to Six o'clock had been taken up. Then, Sir, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has himself occupied two hours and twenty minutes in addressing the House in reply to the short speech made by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Allan) immediately preceding Six o'clock. So it is pretty clear that for some reason or other the hon. gentlemen who occupy the Treasury Benches are in no great hurry to get on with the public business. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has made a series of statements with regard to the views entertained by the officers of his department, and he has given high certificates of character to many of those gentlemen upon whose opinions in this matter he relies. I am not going to say upon what those opinions rest. The hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches must, of course, in a large degree rely upon the officers of their respective departments; but it is nothing new to say that gentlemen occupying the positions of the officers to whom the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has referred, readily adopt hypotheses to account for many of the facts with which they have to deal, and in proportion as it is difficult to verify these hypotheses, they exhibit re-lucance in abandoning them. The hon. Minister has read a circular from a former officer of the department, the Commissioner of Fisheries, to show that the opinions entertained in 1876 were precisely those entertained to-day. That of itself is an evidence that when once a theory is adopted in the department the officers of the department are very reluctant to abandon it. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has spoken of the destruction of the fisheries by the use of the seine. I do not say that no fish are destroyed in that way; but I do say—and I rely upon the opinion of men who are daily engaged for a considerable portion of the year in fishing, and whose opinion I think is more valuable than of that of any scientific expert who rests his opinion rather upon his theory rather than upon observation—that the views expressed by the Minister are very greatly exaggerated, indeed—that there is no such injury done in that way as the hon. gentleman supposes. Now, the fishermen say—men of large experience and excellent common sense—that fish may be driven from their breeding grounds precisely as you may drive away birds from the rookeries they occasionally occupy. The hon. gentleman said, with regard to the fisheries at the northern extremity of the river St. Clair, which were once very productive, that they are productive no longer, because they have been exhausted. That is not the view of the fishermen. They say: you have disturbed the fish when they have returned there during the spawning season, and they have sought other grounds, so that you will be obliged to look elsewhere for the fish which formerly occupied those particular grounds. So that when the hon. gentleman speaks about certain fishing grounds being exhausted, I think that he is using an expression that is misleading. I have read his report this year very carefully, and seen nothing there to convince me that those gentlemen who made the report have done anything more than ascertain that the fish which were numerous in certain localities at one time are not numerous there any longer—not because they are exterminated, but because they seek other haunts where they are less liable to be disturbed. I remember very well, some years ago, it was said that the mackerel fisheries on the coast of Prince Edward Island and the eastern coast of the Maritime Provinces had been destroyed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You are now dealing with an admittedly migratory fish.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not believe there is any fish that is not. Fish, precisely as birds, do return to the same spawning or breeding ground at the proper season, but out of that season they wander all over.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman say that the mackerel returns to its particular spawning ground?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say that, in my opinion, just as birds which occupy, in the order of creation, a position very closely analogous to that of the reptiles immediately below them, will return to the same nests, perhaps, for a score of years in succession, and just as the same birds which you find in your garden will be afterwards on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico—so fish, when the spawning season is over, go everywhere. The hon. gentleman says that the fisheries in the United States are being exhausted, and he has also said that the whitefish on Lake Erie in Canada are being exhausted. Why, what has exhausted the whitefish on the Canadian side? Is it because large numbers have been caught? I know myself the locality for fifty years, I can remember it very well, and I say there have been no great fishing operations carried on on the north shore of Lake Erie, and there has been nothing to exhaust those fisheries. If there is an indication of diminution, it is because the fish have been caught, not on the Canadian, but on the American side of the lake. If he shows that there is a diminution in numbers, I say it can be established beyond controversy that the catch on the Canadian side for half a century has not approached within a tith of the natural increase that we should look for, if the fish confined themselves to that side.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the statement I made, the hon. gentleman will find that there is no dispute on the part of any one on Lake Erie of the fact that the whitefish has diminished.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not disputing the fact that they have diminished, but I say if that be so, it is because the fish were caught on the American and not on the Canadian side, for I can prove that there have been no fishing operations on the north side of Lake Erie which could have appreciably diminished the quantity. There can be no comparison in the catch on the Canadian side with that on the American side, and yet the hon. gentleman admits there is a diminution on the Canadian side. How is that diminution caused? It can only be accounted for in one way, and that completely refutes the hypothesis put forward by the officers of the department, that these fish are confined to the Canadian waters, and are not found on the American side. I say that in the breeding season they are confined to our waters. I believe that in the spawning season the fish go back to precisely the same ground; but when that season is over, when the eggs are deposited, the fish then wander all over the waters of the lake. The fact that that is the more accurate view is proved by the statement of the hon. gentleman that there is a diminution in the whitefish, on the Canadian as well as on the American side. Our fishermen do not object to restrictions, because the fish of certain varieties are not fewer in number than formerly, but what they say, is this, that there is a common fishing ground between Canada and the United States, and that so long as one of the parties in possession is permitted to go there and catch the fish, we should enjoy a like freedom. If you want to make regulations, come to an understanding with your neighbours, agree upon common restrictions, and then apply them as you think they ought to be applied, and we are ready to obey them. We are ready to submit to the hardships and the inconvenience, but we see before our eyes every day men in the United States, within a few yards from us, free to engage in catching fish, while we are excluded from those waters, and excluded on grounds that will not bear serious examination. Why, if there was the same opportunity for making an examination into the habits of the fish that there is into the creatures found upon the land, I do not believe that the hon. gentleman's theory—the theory laid down by the experts in his department—would bear three minutes examination. It would be wholly exploded. But there is a greater difficulty in learning the habits of fish than the habits of animals on land, and so an hypothesis which is extremely convenient, which gives little trouble, and is not easy to contradict, serves the purpose of fixing the policy of the department for a long series of years. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman is not honestly and earnestly engaged in administering the laws relating to the fisheries. I am not saying that he is not putting forward efforts earnestly and honestly to preserve the fisheries; but I say that, in my opinion, he cannot succeed until he can get the authorities in the United States, along the borders of our common waters, to agree upon regulations to be applied by both parties alike, and to control those who reside on the American side as well as those who reside on the Canadian side.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We have been trying to do that since 1874.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the hon. gentleman, in my opinion, will not succeed in preserving the fisheries until he succeeds in doing that. And if they are to be destroyed, I am not disposed to put impediments in the way of our own people; I would not seek to prolong the existence of these fisheries for a few years merely in the interests of those who will not consent to be governed by any rules or regulations. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman should remember that these fishermen are in a very different position from the fishermen upon the sea coast. You do not demand a license of those men upon the sea coast; you do not charge them a large sum for the privilege of fishing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. For some fishing we do—salmon, mackerel and all fishing requiring the using of traps.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then you give these men on the inland waters no bounty. They are simply worried by the officers of the department. We do not agree with them in their views and the regulations enforced are in his opinion unnecessary and cannot be made effective unless those on the other side can be got to join in the undertaking. Now, the hon. gentleman has said that the fisheries were being exhausted, and not by the fish being driven away but by the actual destruction of the fish. I think he is mistaken, and I think so especially for this reason: I myself have observed for a series of years together the operations of those engaged in fishing on the shore of Lake Erie. At certain seasons when the fish return to their spawning grounds, certain varieties could not be found, but when a new fishing ground was prepared five miles away, the same varieties which were absent, as supposed, because of the reduction of their numbers have been caught in immense numbers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was not that considered extraordinary?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is not; it happens every year. I believe that where the whitefish have been exhausted if there is a new fishery opened five miles away they are very likely to be caught in great abundance. I speak from what has come under my own observation. These fish seem to be governed by the same kind of instinct observed in migratory birds. They will return from season to season to the same point if they are not disturbed, but if you disturb them in their customary haunts they will soon be found absent, not because they have been exterminated but because they have abandoned the locality.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What about the salmon? They are disturbed on their way to their breeding grounds every year. Do you think they can be turned away?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, I do not say they can be turned away. I am speaking of the case of the fish to which the hon. gentleman has referred, speaking from what has come under my own observation and giving a hypothesis which seems to me to fit in better with all the facts than the one the hon. gentleman mentioned and which he gets from his officer. So, apart altogether from the question of the waters being common to two countries, he will find his regulations are more stringent in regard to seine fishing than they ought to be for the protection of fish, so far as they can be protected while our American neighbours refuse to do anything.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Experimental Farm, maintenance. $75,000

Mr. McMILLAN. Last year when we voted the items for the Experimental Farm we found that there was a very large expenditure indeed, but we had not the report of the farm before us. Now, we have the report of the farm. I have gone pretty carefully over the report, and I must say that it is not such a report as should be sent out by an experimental farm that has been in existence so long as this has been. The real benefit of these experimental farms is in showing to the farmers what can be done in raising good crops so as to produce the largest quantity of grain or hay or other food for animals upon given a quantity of land. So far as the experimenting with grain is concerned there is not the least doubt they seem to have experimented to a considerable extent with that. But they have not given the first principle of experimental work. They did not give us the number of acres. I understand that they have a farm marked out and have an exact chart of it. Why do not they give us the number of acres under the different crops? Without this we cannot judge of the success of the experiments that have been made. They give two instances of the amount of grain raised in field crops per acre, and I hold that is a better guide for the farmer of what is being done experimentally, than are the small experimental plots, because those small plots are generally pretty well manured. We find this year, if the report is correct, an expenditure of $1,840 for manures and fertilizers, a very large sum of money indeed for that purpose. I must say that this is not an example for a farmer to follow on an ordinary farm. A farmer has got to produce manure from his own farm to retain its fertility. I say that the expenditure of such a large sum of money on the experimental farm is not wise; and we may well ask the question whether all the other experimental stations are pursuing a similar course and purchasing large quantities of manure. I notice that the experimental farm at Guelph has only spent $180 during the year for manure and fertilizers, although that farm has somewhat over five hundred and seventy acres, whereas the Central Experimental Farm has only four hundred and sixty-six acres; so that it cannot be on account of the size of the farm that they require to spend so large an amount of money in the purchase of manure. Now, when a farmer gets hold of the report of an experimental farm, what is the first thing that he examines into? He takes that report and says to himself, How much stock do they keep on this farm? What is the kind of stock? Is it thoroughbred stock or is it common stock? Is it kept for dairy purposes, or is it kept for experimental purposes? I hold that one of the most important things that report should contain is to show the number of horses that are kept and their value; the number of animals that are kept, and their value; the number of animals that are bought, and what is paid for each; the number of animals sold, and what price has been realized. Then, it should tell us how many animals have been fed in pursuing experiments in feeding, the quantity of the different kinds of food that is given to each animal, the weight of the animal when it came in and so forth. In one of two instances they do give us the weight of the animal, but they do not tell us what was realized for the animal when he was sold. Now, that is not the proper way of reporting the experiments of well conducted experimental farms. The farm at Guelph is conducted in a different manner. Their report gives us the number of horses and their value; the number of animals of all the different breeds, and their value; the number of animals sold and the prices realized for each; the number of hogs sold and the prices realized. Upon the farm at Guelph all the animals sold for experimental purposes are sold by public sale. But upon our farm here at Ottawa, I see no account whatever of any revenue derived from the sale of animals. I wonder what the farmers of Ontario will think when a report like this is laid before them, containing no information whatever about the number of animals that are kept, the number that are purchased, the different breeds of the animals or anything of that sort. It contains no statement whatever by which the farmers can obtain useful information. One of the first things an experimental station should do is to show to the farmers how many animals they can keep upon a given quantity of land. It is true that they did commence an experiment to show how many animals could be kept upon forty acres of land, and they told us they were going to keep forty head of cattle on forty acres of land. Allow me to give the conductors of that farm a little advice for the future when they go into experiments of that kind, not to tell us the full particulars of these experiments until the experiment is well advanced. The time has gone past now to rely upon theory. I was content for some time to see them carry on those experimental farms theoretically, and to tell us what was being done in other countries on similar farms; but that time has passed for the Dominion of Canada. The time has come when they should tell us every thing they have done during the last year. In the report of the Guelph farm there is a statement of every field, the number of acres in each field, and the kind of crop raised upon it. That will give us some knowledge of what is being done there. The report of the Guelph farm states the number of animals of all the different breeds, and the value of these animals; it also states the value of all the implements, giving a regular inventory of everything in connection with the farm. This is what the best farmers in the country do for themselves, and why should it not be done in our experimental stations?

Mr. McMILLAN.

Let us state one of the reasons why I think, perhaps, this is not done. In the Dominion of Canada we have a lawyer as Minister of Agriculture, and in looking over the report how can he tell, unless he has been a farmer also, whether that report contains the kinds of information that the farmers of the country desire to get? Now, on the experimental farm at Guelph they have had for a long time a farmer as Minister of Agriculture. Let me say that the Hon. John Dryden is a credit not only to Ontario, but to the Dominion of Canada. When he was at the Chicago exhibition and a dispute arose with respect to the quality of a certain pen of sheep, he was chosen as umpire, and took off his coat and went into the pen and gave his judgment clearly and decisively, pointing out the best animals, and his judgment was accepted by the people of the United States and Canada as being correct. I think the fact that our Minister of Agriculture is a lawyer, is one of the reasons why this report is not what it ought to be. In the next place, they have as manager of the farm at Guelph, a gentleman who is a practical farmer, who competed for the best kept model farm in the province of Ontario. I may mention that Mr. Rennie, the manager of the farm at Guelph, came very near getting the gold medal for the best kept farm, and the reason he failed was that the judges believed that he had some other way of making money than from the farm alone, and that a considerable amount of money made from other sources, must have been spent upon that farm in view of the improved condition over what it was a few years ago; whereas the man who got the gold medal had made all his money upon the farm, so that all his improvements were made from the profits of the farm itself. Now, I do not want to say anything against the present conductor of this experimental farm at Ottawa. When Professor Saunders took hold of this farm he was doubtless one of the best men they could obtain as a conductor of all the farms, but he has a number of men under him for whose education we have been paying sweetly, they have been learning since they went on. I do not know who conducts experiments here unless it is Professor Saunders himself; on that point we get no statement. But when we come to the Guelph farm we find a Mr. Zauvits, who is a trained experimentalist, and who has been in charge of the department for a number of years. It is a department by itself, and he has been thoroughly successful in conducting it. Let me state that I have not been able to find how many experimental plots are on the farm and the quantity of land that is under experiment. When I take the report of the Guelph Farm, I ascertain that there were 1,600 experimental plots last year. The report of the Ottawa Farm, giving a statement of the labour spent upon the farm, does not give a statement of the amount of labour for experiments. I find the Auditor General's Report presents a very different statement from that contained in the report of the Experimental Farm itself. In the latter report a proper financial statement is not given, so as to show what the farm costs to the country. According to the Auditor General's Report it cost last year over $40,000, but according to the farm report it was only some $20,000. The Farm Report does not give any of the salaries. The Auditor General's Report, however, gives the salaries. The Farm Report should show every department by itself. That system is followed in the Auditor General's Report, which shows the experimental plots, the amount of labour expended on each, and the value of that labour. We require those facts to be contained in the Farm Report. Last year I found fault with the large sum of money expended on the farms at Ottawa, over $7,000, besides the wages of teamsters and others. I find this year that $10,007 have been spent, but I cannot tell in what departments that amount has been expended. I have gone over the Auditor General's Report, and I find the amount entered under the general head of labour. Taking the number of days and the amount of money, it appears that $10,007 has been expended for labourers alone: for teamsters, $2,147; for cattlemen, $1,581; for garden, &c., $1,866; for picking grain, $190. If the farmers are to be benefited by the reports of the farm, the work done and expenditure made on the Experimental Farm and on the ordinary farm, should be given separately, and at the same time the amount of labour on each of these set out. There are no less than twenty-five men employed the year round on this farm, exclusive of cattlemen and teamsters; of teamsters there are five, and of cattlemen three, all of these men being employed on a farm of 460 acres. I have no fault to find with the number of cattlemen. No doubt on an ordinary farm two men could do the work now performed by three, but undoubtedly visitors take up some of the time of the cattlemen in showing animals. No doubt the same occurs with respect to the experiments in the field, for in the absence of Professor Saunders I notice a certain amount of time is occupied by the men working there in showing round visitors. The expenditure, however, is altogether out of proportion to the benefits we are receiving from the farm. At the Guelph farm $14,887 were spent for labourers, teamsters and cattlemen, on lawn, on garden and on picking grain (I leave the dairy out of the question). That is a larger farm than the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, and experiments are conducted on a larger scale. There are 1,600 small plots, containing 50 acres of land, and over 1,000 varieties of grain and roots were on hand at the time the report was prepared. What is the reason that we cannot obtain a statement of all the facts and figures connected with the Ottawa farm as is submitted for the Guelph farm? In the Farm Report at Ottawa even the number of animals is not given. As a farmer, I desire to know all these facts. I refer to the Guelph report every year, and I compare the figures and ascertain whether the stock is increasing or diminishing in value. I can also ascertain whether a falling off has resulted from sales or from a reduction in the value of the animals. There is no such information contained in the report submitted here. At Guelph they are very particular with respect to the feeding of steers and hogs, upon which experiments are being made, and they appear to be equally particular at Ottawa. But the value of the animals when purchased should be stated. The day has passed when all the animals to be experimented on for feeding should not be purchased in the country. Of course, it may be necessary to purchase a few yet, in order to prove whether it is better to raise animals and feed them on the farm, or go outside and buy stockers. I desire all these facts to be embodied in the report. I state positively that we do not obtain such a report as the operations at the farm here require. We have been told that not sufficient money is voted to the farm here, but there is over $6,000 more expended annually for labour upon this farm of 460 acres than is expended on the Guelph farm, with 530 acres. In the Guelph farm report I find something which I fail to discover in any other report of a similar farm, and it is this: that although the Guelph farm expends a considerable sum less than our farm at Ottawa, and every department is kept separate, and the revenue and expenditure shown on each, there is a statement of unexpended balances for the farm proper and for the experimental part of the farm. I would not have occupied the attention of the committee so long if the report presented had given a full detailed statement, such as should be presented. I hold that the money spent on the Experimental Farm is altogether in excess of the results obtained. It is true that when farmers visit it, they find it is a well-kept and well-cultivated farm—I went out the other day, and everything is in good order. Why should it not be so? Twenty-five men are kept on the farm the whole year, besides six teamsters and three cattlemen. Yet we have no statement submitted as to the work on which the men are employed. The statements are all given in the lump, and if the farm is properly conducted the labour used on the farm proper, on the experimental portion, on the lawn and garden and on the forestry part would be separated; but if the report has been prepared for the purpose of keeping the farmers in the dark with respect to the manner in which the farm is conducted, and as to how the expenditure is distributed, it could not be got up in a better manner. In conducting an experimental farm everything should be carried out according to certain principles. What will farmers think when they see $20,000 expended, and not one cent of revenue shown between the covers of the report? Every report should give every expenditure and receipts in detail. With respect to the stock, they say that they have been unfortunate during the last year on account of a certain disease that has kept them from giving a thorough statement of the stock upon this farm. On the Guelph farm the same disease was amongst the stock, and there was just as heavy a loss as has been entailed on the stock here, but nevertheless, in the report of the Ontario farm we have a thorough statement of everything in connection with it. In any statement sent out by an experimental farm, what we want is to get an account of the failures they make as well as the successes they achieve, because the farmers of the country are just as much benefited by a report of the mistakes so that they can avoid them, as by an account of the successes so that they may try to imitate them. Therefore, we should have a full statement in the report of all the experiments, whether they be successful or not. There are some very valuable experiments which have been made on the farm here in respect to the different varieties of grain, and these have been to some extent beneficial. The principal experiments that we can be benefited by all over the country, are experiments in hybridizing grain and experiments with regard to suitable varieties. On an experimental station like this the grain that may succeed the best here, may not succeed best in the western part of Ontario, or in the eastern part of the province of Quebec, so that after all it is really only an example for the farmers who live close by. I intend to state my opinion of everything I have seen in going over that farm. I believe that there is, for instance, too much experimenting with the different varieties of raspberries, and I have felt for a number of years that that has been the case. What they need to do, is not to experiment with all these varieties, but to take a sufficient number in order to tell what variety is the best. They do not want to raise berries to sell them on the market in competition with the market gardeners here, and all the experimenting necessary in this direction could be done with a much smaller area of land. An experimental farm which is to be beneficial to the country at large must be conducted on different principles from this farm at Ottawa. This report should give a full statement with regard to every animal, the estimated value of that animal, and a statement of the price of every animal that is sold, and every animal that is bought. I can hardly go through this report without mixing up the dairy along with the farm, for the simple reason that the accounts of the two branches are mixed up, although there is a special vote for dairying. I cannot tell anything as to the number of cows kept at the experimental farm at Ottawa.

I can tell nothing of the quantity of milk they give, of the quality of milk, or of the quantity of butter or cheese that has been made from the milk of these animals. But when I look at the report of the Guelph Agricultural College I can tell that they have sixteen cows there. I can tell the weight of each animal, I can tell how long it is since the animal dropped its young, and I can tell how many days that animal gave milk during the season. I can tell what the percentage of butterfat is, and the quantity of butter realized from every animal. I can tell that one animal gave milk for 165 days, and another for 163 days, and that the butter at 22 cents a pound, would realize $52 per head. That is the information which the farmers of this country should get from this experimental farm here. One of the greatest benefits of experimental stations to the farmers, is that they should know the value of the food consumed by each animal and the amount of produce given by that animal in return. A great deal of calumny has been tried to be heaped on the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Ontario in respect to his action with regard to the disease that was amongst the cattle at Guelph. I can state positively in this House, that just as soon as tuberculosis was found amongst the stock, and it was discovered by the officials of that farm, every effort was made to prevent the disease getting amongst the stock. There is an advisory board in connection with the Guelph Farm, and the committee of that board was called together at once to consult as to the best means that could be adopted, and the very best means that could be adopted were adopted. A great deal has been said about one or two calves that were put into a sale, but the man who made the charge forgot that it was just upon the eve of that sale that the experiments with the Koch's lymph commenced to be used, and that they had not had an opportunity of using it. Now, with regard to the disease at the experimental farm here, I can state that the first time that the disease was discovered on that farm was when Mr. Beith, Mr. Davidson and myself visited the farm, and we found there a short-horn animal far gone with the disease, and we came to the conclusion that it was tuberculosis. I told them then that if that animal was not put out of existence, I would call for a committee of inquiry. That is the result of not having competent men to manage the stock. I have nothing to say against the young men employed in that department of the Experimental Farm, for I believe that the stock is properly and well cared for as far as they are concerned, but you want one individual with years of experience to look after cattle. All the book-learning and all the reading in the world will never make a man a thoroughly practical agriculturist. I state here again that this farm is not conducted in the interests of the public in the manner it should be. They ought to give us in this report a full statement of the value of the animal, and of the milk and butter produced from it. We have nothing in this report giving details of this kind now. It is to show the value of the different breeds of animals, and to show what can be done with animals under the most favourable circumstances that these experimental farms are maintained at such expense to the country; but in the case of the experimental farm at Ottawa, we have none of this information. Now, with regard to the manure put on that farm. I speak under correction, but in my opinion since that farm was established there has been between $6,000 and $7,000 spent for manure to put on the land. Such a proceeding as that is of no value whatever to the farmers of this country who have to keep up the fertility of the soil through the instrumentality of the produce raised on their own farms. If they can keep 25 head of cattle on forty acres of land—and I hold if they do that they are doing pretty well here considering the quality of the land—they could keep a very large number upon the balance of the farm. It is no interest whatever to the farmers of this country to know that so much was raised on a certain quantity of land, unless they know what it cost acre for acre to keep up the fertility of the soil. I have calculated that there are thirty-five men engaged on that farm during the year, and such a large number of hands ought certainly keep it in first-class condition. I hope there will be no offence taken at my remarks. I am making them in the interests of the country, believing as I stated before, that Professor Saunders is, perhaps, one of the best men that could be appointed as conductor of all the farms of the country; but he is trying to cover too much ground. This report also says that he has charge of the crops and roots. He should not have charge of those, because if they have not got a farm foreman that is capable of taking charge of these things off his hands it is high time they should get one, and allow Professor Saunders to attend to the conducting of the general business of the farm. Now, Sir, I find that we have not had a dairy report for two years; the reports of the two years are combined in one. We have not a single statement showing what has been realized from a cow or any other animal on the farm. I say again that if Professor Robertson attends to the dairying, he has sufficient to do without having also the agricultural department of the farm; and the sooner the Minister of Agriculture and Professor Saunders understand that each branch of the farm should have an independent head, one who is thoroughly posted, the better it will be for the farm. If that farm is to be of benefit to the country, we must have an agriculturist there, who is capable of purchasing stock on his own judgment, as is done by the agriculturist of the Ontario farm; and if he is not capable of doing that, he is not capable of filling that important position. In the matter of expense there is a considerable difference between the two farms. One reason why the report of the farm does not give as full a statement as the Auditor General's report, is that a good many of the salaries are not stated in it. Those salaries should all be given, and if a portion of them are chargeable to other stations, they should be debited to them proportionally. It is said to be impossible to keep an exact record of the stock, because the stock is taken from this farm and spread over the other farms at intervals. A proper system of book-keeping would credit the animals to one farm and debit them to another, so that we would know what each farm is doing. This is something I want to impress strongly upon both the Minister of Agriculture and Professor Saunders. One reason why the Guelph farm has been so successful for some time is that thoroughly practical men who have learned their business are in charge of it—not men who went there and had to learn their business at the public expense. There was a time perhaps when there were men there who learned their business at the public expense, and who did not give satisfaction; but they had to give way for better men and men of larger experience. The agricultural interest is one of such importance that we cannot afford to have such large sums of money spent and to receive such little information in return. It is true, we get information with respect to the crops and the result of the different varieties of seed; but we do not get all the information that we should get. We have a statement of 130 varieties of oats which have been experimented upon at Guelph—a crop which to-day pays the farmer better than any other serial crop in Ontario. Then, we want to see the quantity of grain that can be raised on each acre of every field. It is no guide to the ordinary farmers what quantity of any grain can be raised when large sums are spent every year in manure. There might be some excuse for that in a part of the farm which had run down; but they should have taken a part of the farm and shown what they could do in restoring that part to fertility by means of what they raise on it—by green manuring, and returning everything to it that could be returned. These are the directions in which that farm could be made beneficial to the farmers of the country, and if these lines are not followed, it is not going to be as beneficial as the large expenditures upon it would warrant us in expecting. Now, I am a little astonished to find that in the Auditor General's Report there is only $71 put down for dairying, whereas in the farm report there is $728 charged to the dairy department. I think the Auditor General's Report and the financial statement in the farm report should coincide. When any farmer who chances to have the Auditor General's Report put into his hands, looks at the expenditure of the farm and sees that it shows an expenditure of $40,500, while the farm report shows an expenditure of only $20,798, he must believe that the Auditor General's Report is correct, because its accounts are verified. Then, what confidence can he have in the other statements contained in the farm report, when he finds the result of all its operations to be so misleading? I find also the statement that live stock cost $299, but we are told nothing about what it is for; that is the whole statement regarding the purchase of live stock. But there is not a cent of revenue mentioned in this report as received on account of the farm. I hold that we should have a statement of every animal sold, every animal that is deceased, and every animal that dies from disease or accident. Animals will become diseased and die, and accidents will happen, but we want to know how far these things can be averted on such a farm as this. We want to know, when certain diseases come, what means can be adopted to cure the animals. We want to know what is being done on every part of the farm. Here is a gentleman named Rossignol, with a salary of $130 for two months. What was he employed at?

Mr. FOSTER. That was for travelling expenses incurred by this gentleman travelling west and hybridizing grain.

Mr. McMILLAN. I find an item, McLaughlin & Moore, expenses attending test of a carload of wheat and sale of flour. Where was that done?

Mr. FOSTER. It was a carload of wheat taken from the west to Toronto, and is for expenses attendant upon the testing of it, supervising the work, grinding and distributing samples, etc., $125.76.

Mr. McMILLAN. Had these gentlemen to come from the North-west to Toronto to get their wheat tested?

Mr. FOSTER. The grain came from Prince Albert.

Mr. McMILLAN. Were the millers in Toronto not capable of testing this quantity of wheat? I should think they would be the most capable, and certainly would not have required so large an expense. In the laboratory, I find chemicals and materials, $206.34. Where are those bought?

Mr. FOSTER. On the Continent.

Mr. McMILLAN. Express and freight charges, $1,068, what is this for?

Mr. FOSTER. That includes the freight paid on all supplies sent out to all farms.

Mr. McMILLAN. Coming to the poultry department, I find the large amount of 30,000 pounds bran used. Can the hon. gentleman explain that?

Mr. FOSTER. In justice to the poultry department, I am told that the poultry only consumed only about 600 pounds.

Mr. McMILLAN. How comes it to be entered against them ?

Mr. FOSTER. It appears that way in the Auditor General's Report, but that is not the fault of the farm. They would be very voracious fowls to devour that much. The balance went into the cattle.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then it appears the supplies are not bought by each department for itself ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Auditor General has a fashion of lumping things and he did it in this case.

Mr. McMILLAN. I see that we have not less than 505 rose bushes. Was this amount necessary ? If distributed, the amount against each farm should be put down.

Mr. FOSTER. They were distributed to each farm.

Mr. McMILLAN. Each farm should have a separate account.

Mr. FOSTER. Each farm has. The rose bushes were bought by the director and paid for here. They were distributed to the different farms, and as each director got his supply, that was charged against him. The director informs me a large number of other shrubs is included in those rose bushes.

Mr. McMILLAN. Fruit trees, 5,119. I hope these are distributed to the various farms, but it seems a larger number than required. In the North-west, we can only experiment with the hardiest sorts, brought from the north of Europe. Where are those trees bought ?

Mr. FOSTER. From nurserymen in Canada, the United States, England and France. They were experimented with upon the three farms.

Mr. McMILLAN. Each farm should be debited with the number sent.

Mr. FOSTER. That is exactly what was done. The Auditor General is not keeping the accounts for the different branches, but takes the full amount spent on fruit trees as one item. My hon. friend would make the Auditor General's Report so large that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) ahead of him would not be able to turn over the pages.

Mr. McMILLAN. No doubt there is a difficulty in keeping the accounts where there are so many. But it is only a matter of detail to keep strict account of all these items.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all strictly kept.

Mr. McMILLAN. If they are strictly kept, they are not reported in the same form. Here we have an item of berry bushes, 967 dozen. Were these all for the farm here or were they bought and then distributed ? Where were they purchased ?

Mr. FOSTER. Both in Canada and the United States. They were bought by the Central Farm, and many of them distributed to the other farms. These include raspberry bushes and other small fruits.

Mr. McMILLAN. This would give about 125 dozen berry bushes for every farm. It seems to me that it is not necessary to get such large quantities. They ought to have been experimenting all these years so that now it should only be necessary to deal with a few varieties and those that have proved most successful on the farm. We find here a charge for 1,088 loads of manure. Was this purchased in Ottawa ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes ; the manure was purchased in Ottawa, except the artificial fertilizers.

Mr. McMILLAN. Artificial fertilizers form a separate item. What price was paid for the manure ?

Mr. FOSTER. Forty and forty-five cents per large load.

Mr. McMILLAN. Can you tell me how much has been spent on the experimental farm for manure up to the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. An average of about $1,500 each year.

Mr. McMILLAN. We can all farm well if we buy as much manure as we please, outside of what is produced on the farm. The farm should be so manured as to produce the manure that is required. No farmer, unless he lives near a place like Ottawa, can afford to sell every thing off his farm and buy manure. On the experimental farm, the manure is not properly cared for. It is left in a large yard. It is now recognized that every farm should have a place to keep manure and make it. The best farmers are now keeping manure under cover. I see an item here for a double-barrelled gun and cartridges. I do not know what this can be for. As a rule, farmers are not sportsmen.

Mr. FOSTER. That was to deal death to crows and the winged depredators on the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN. There was a certain quantity of hay bought. How many horses were kept on the farm during the year ?

Mr. FOSTER. Fourteen.

Mr. McMILLAN. As a rule, during the summer, how many teams are working on the farm ?

Mr. FOSTER. Five teams.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many are employed in the experimental department.

Mr. FOSTER. At times all are employed in the experimental department.

Mr. McMILLAN. I see that the quantity of hay bought is 20 8-10ths tons. How many head of cattle were kept on the farm last year?

Mr. FOSTER. About seventy head altogether.

Mr. McMILLAN. Well, if forty acres will keep twenty-five animals, that would leave between two and three hundred acres under crop and keep the other thirty-five cattle.

Mr. FOSTER. The amount of hay bought was very small.

Mr. McMILLAN. A farm such as this should be able to produce enough hay for its own use. I have 450 acres, and I keep 150 cattle. I do not buy a single article and I sell from 40 to 50 tons of hay. One of the most important experiments that can be made now in the interest of the farmers is to learn the number of animals that can be kept on a small quantity of land. Another very important point is the effect of life in the stable upon cattle. To ascertain the facts, a certain number of cattle should be kept in a stable and soiled, and a certain number put on pasture in the summer, and by observing the results he could learn whether it was possible to keep cattle healthy by keeping them in the stable, except for very short intervals. I have noticed that animals are not as healthy as they have been in days gone by in the province of Ontario. One reason for that, in my opinion, is the number of animals kept in the house. This is an experiment that should be taken up by the experimental farm. A certain number of young animals should be put on pasture during the summer, and an equal number kept in the barn, to show us how much cheaper animals can be kept in the barn, and whether they are as healthy and as hardy when they come to maturity. How many acres were under grain last year, besides the experimental plots?

Mr. FOSTER. The report gives the number of acres in each field at about 175 or 180 acres.

Mr. McMILLAN. The report should give the exact number. If this farm is conducted on scientific principles, the books should be kept in such a manner that when a question like that is asked, it should be answered at once.

Mr. FOSTER. I answered it.

Mr. McMILLAN. But he did not answer it correctly. He said so much within five or ten acres. How many acres of hay were cut upon the farm?

Mr. FOSTER. Thirty-five.

Mr. McMILLAN. With thirty-five acres of hay cut, they should not have had to purchase any hay. What is the quantity of hay cut per acre?

Mr. McMILLAN.

Mr. FOSTER. An average of two tons per acre.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many acres were in ensilage last year?

Mr. FOSTER. Twenty-nine acres exactly.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many tons were taken off the twenty-nine acres?

Mr. FOSTER. Forty-five tons.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many cows were kept on the farm? Because the next vote will be the dairy vote, and we cannot separate the one from the other. Let me say here that the one report should contain both the farm and the dairy. The dairy report this year, although it is for two years, contains a large number of speeches delivered over the country. There was a time that it might be necessary to do that, but that time has past. These feeding experiments with animals should also be included in the dairy reports. I pointed that out last year in the Agricultural Committee, and it was decided in that committee that the two reports should be combined in one, because the farm and the dairy are so closely connected that it is impossible to make separate reports. The cows are kept upon the farm, and we do not want reported now all the speeches that are given over the country, but we want an exact report of the experiments made upon the farms, so that the people may get some benefit from it. I find there was a horse hired for five months, what was that for?

Mr. FOSTER. It was hired for a few months when it was needed, to prevent the permanent investment of capital in a horse.

Mr. McMILLAN. I cannot see that a farm of 450 acres should require more than six horses. Then, here is an item of $411 for blacksmithing and horse-shoeing. Is it possible that on a farm of 450 acres the blacksmithing and horse-shoeing cost that sum of money?

Mr. FOSTER. That includes repairs to the tools, vehicles, implements and the like of that, used upon the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is just twice as much as a farm of that size should require in a year, and I speak from an experience of fifty years in running a large farm. Is there any regular arrangement made for the farm blacksmithing, or is it all done by one man?

Mr. FOSTER. It is done by several blacksmiths in the village.

Mr. McMILLAN. Now, we find $299 for stock, and we find that $250 was paid for a short horned bull. Who was he bought from?

Mr. FOSTER. He was bought from the Bow Park Farm. He proved to be a bad stock, and they had to kill him.

Mr. McMILLAN. What was the other $49 for ?

Mr. FOSTER. Pigs.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the reason we do not get a statement of all the pigs bought and all the pigs sold ? When so large a number of pigs are raised at this farm they should be sold by public auction. There is a great temptation to give benefits to favourites in sales that may be made, and they should be made in such a manner that no individual should have any advantage over another. If the animal is sold to a farmer at a distance, the Experimental Farm should pay the freight, so that those who come from a distance to purchase may purchase upon the same terms as those who live close by. What is this item of $43.25 to John Hutton, for livery hire ?

Mr. FOSTER. That was incurred by the Minister in taking visitors from foreign parts over the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN. Here is an item for saddlery and stable utensils. What saddlery was bought ?

Mr. FOSTER. The common supplies of harness and the like of that, halters and belly-bands.

Mr. McMILLAN. I find at the end of the report a statement of contingencies, including $7.17 for sidewalks. It is not satisfactory for a farmer to know that about $380 have been sunk in contingencies. What are these contingencies ?

Mr. FOSTER. The items were sent to the Auditor General, who inserted them in a lump sum, and gave the explanation in a line or two.

Mr. McMILLAN. The explanation should be contained in the farm report, because, for every one who sees the Auditor General's Report, five hundred will see the farm report. The fullest statement should be contained in that report, so that the farmers can understand thoroughly what has been produced on the farm, and what has been purchased. What revenue is derived from the farm, and why is no revenue stated in the farm report ?

Mr. FOSTER. The revenue appears in the Auditor General's Report, page F 196, and there the sales made at all the farms are set out, amounting, in the gross, to $5,546.66. This statement might have been put into the experimental farm report, and will be done after this time.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many cows were there on the farm during the year ?

Mr. FOSTER. About thirty-two milch cows.

Mr. McMILLAN. I observe $300 for milk, and $400 for butter appear in the Auditor General's report. If the cows had been properly handled they should have given a revenue each of $50. Sixteen cows at Guelph farm produced an average of $52 worth of butter, and some of them were in milk a short time. This is a very small revenue derived from the Ottawa farm. Particulars should be given as to the cost of raising cows from the time they were dropped, the value of the feed and return derived, quantity of milk given by each animal, number of animals, different breeds, and quantity and value of butter, milk and cheese produced.

Mr. FOSTER. A number of the cows were under suspicion, and did not give milk. That accounts for the comparatively small quantity.

Mr. McMILLAN. Were they isolated at the time ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes ; they were included in this report.

Mr. GRIEVE. I observe that 236 bushels of oats were purchased. Were they purchased for feeding purposes or for seed.

Mr. FOSTER. They were purchased for feed. The best oats on the farm were distributed for seed, and these were bought for feeding purposes.

Mr. GRIEVE. I notice that $118 were paid for these oats, or 50 cents per bushel. Oats were not sold at that price during last season, 30 cents to 35 cents being paid throughout the western part of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. Oats were high at that time.

Mr. McMULLEN. Really a better explanation should be offered, as oats did not sell at that price. Oats did not realize in the Toronto market over 35½ cents.

Mr. ROBILLARD. I bought oats here at 45 cents. I purchased them from the McKay estate.

Mr. GRIEVE. I sold a carload of oats just before last harvest for 31 cents, and delivered them on board the cars. I cannot understand how the farm paid 50 cents. From whom were they bought ?

Mr. FOSTER. They were bought from dealers here, quotations having been first obtained. They were purchased over a year ago.

Mr. GRIEVE. I observe that 165 bushels of peas were bought for the farm. Were they for feeding or seeding purposes ?

Mr. FOSTER. They were bought for distribution as seed, they were choice varieties of peas and beans.

Mr. GRIEVE. Where were they bought ?

Mr. FOSTER. At Port Hope and Toronto.

Mr. GRIEVE. They were bought at a price of $1 per bushel. Peas never reached that figure during the last five years. They have been sold at from 50 to 55 and 60 cents per bushel for the best varieties.

Mr. FOSTER. This price includes freight charges to Ottawa.

Mr. GRIEVE. I observe an item of 50 pounds of cord. Was it binding twine?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GRIEVE. It was paid for at the rate of 12 cents per pound. Binding twine sold last year at 8½ and 9 cents, and the very best at 9½ cents per pound. The twine that was manufactured by the Farmers' Binder Twine Company of Brantford was retailed to the farmers and the express paid to their stations at 9½ cents per pound. The price charged for the twine made by the Central Prison at Toronto was 8½ to 9½ cents per pound.

Mr. FOSTER. Those prices in the Auditor General's Report refer to twine purchased for the crop of 1892..

Mr. GRIEVE. If that is the case I can understand it. I see they purchased two ploughs for this farm at $31. I draw the attention of the committee to this, and more especially the attention of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who made a statement in the House not very long ago with reference to the retail price of implements in Canada and the United States, and if I understood his statement correctly, he said that the retail price for the best ploughs was $13 each.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not say the best kind. I said the Frost & Wood pattern.

Mr. GRIEVE. I think it would be wise in future for the department to employ the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to purchase some of the supplies necessary for the farm if he can get things so cheaply.

Mr. FOSTER. Those were bought in 1892.

Mr. GRIEVE. I am not aware that there has been any advance for the last two years in the prices of that kind of agricultural machinery. I know as a matter of fact that the prices are the same.

Mr. SCRIVER. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister who represents the Minister of Agriculture here, to a matter in connection with the experimental farm. One of the railway companies running into Ottawa has inaugurated a very commendable practice of bringing excursions of farmers to visit the Experimental Farm, and several such excursions have taken place already, one being from the part of the country where I live. A couple of days ago I had occasion to go out to the farm with some of my people and I was present while they were there. I may say that the gentlemen in charge of the farm were exceedingly courteous and attentive and gave the people who took part in these excursions some very valuable information and advice. But there was one feature in connection with that—not through any fault of those in charge of the farm—which was not quite satisfactory. The railway company not only gave the excursionists transportation of an excellent kind, but they provided them with a lunch at the farm, which was a very wise thing to do, as it was a great saving of time for the excursionists. Owing to the want of accommodation in the shape of a suitable room, furnished with tables in which to eat the lunch, the matter was not quite satisfactory. My suggestion is that the Government should authorize the manager of the farm to have a suitable building erected which could be utilized for the purpose I speak of. It need not be an expensive building. It would only need to be used in the summer time, and of course there would be no necessity for constructing it with reference to heating. I cannot do better than to read for the information of the hon. Minister and those of his colleagues who are here, a communication which I received yesterday from the official of the railway company who has had charge of the excursions so far.

In thinking over the matter of refreshments supplied at the Experimental Farm by the caterer engaged by the Company, it occurred to me that it might be worthy of consideration on the part of the Government that it would be advisable to fit up a suitable dining-room with all necessary furnishings, for entertaining large parties of farmers who are beginning to recognize the importance of the work being carried on at this institution, and who are coming here annually in increased numbers. At the season of the year when farmers can get away it is not always convenient for them to be from home over night, and to come to the farm from any distance and return the same day. No time should be lost in foraging for provisions; hence the necessity for providing refreshments on the premises.

I thought it well to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister and his colleagues, and I trust that something will be done in the direction I have indicated.

Mr. ROWAND. I would like to call the attention of the committee to one item that has been discussed to-night. This experimental farm is in the eighth year of its existence, and we have been spending a very large amount of money on it every year. We keep up a staff of professors who go around the country and tell of their experiments to the farmers, and instruct the farmers on what they ought to do. If there is one point which these professors ought to be able to tell the farmers more than another, it is to show them how they can make their farms self-sustaining, and to pay the expenses of working, and make a profit on their work. That is the great object which should be kept in view with regard to these experimental farms. I understand that we have been paying $1,500 a year for manure for this farm. We have been keeping seventy head of stock of one kind or another there, and a very large amount of manure must have been produced outside of what was purchased. Indeed they have consumed all that has been produced on the farm and a good deal more. What our instructors in farming tell us is: that we ought to be able to keep up the fertility of our farm with what we produce upon it. This experimental farm has been running for eight years, and they are not able to do that yet. Manure costs 45 cents a large wagon load, and in my experience of farming we calculate that it requires twenty loads of good manure to the acre. At that rate the purchase of manure for the experimental farm would cover one hundred and sixty-five acres every year, and I presume that the manure produced on the farm would cover another one hundred acres a year. Now, as I understand it, they have not over half that quantity under cultivation on the experimental farm. If we are going to make this farm an example for the farmers of the country to follow, we shall have to adopt some other system. It is not possible for any farmer to spend that amount of money every year in purchasing manure. What we want is to have the farmer so instructed, that he can produce on his farm enough to support him and his labourers, and at the same time to return the produce to the farm in the shape of manure. If nothing better can be done on the Experimental Farm at Ottawa than has been done in the last eight years, with an expenditure of $1,500 per annum for manure, we had better abandon it. It is not an experimental farm; it is not a farm that can be taken as a guide by any farmer who wants to make a living on his farm. I just rose to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that we are keeping up a useless institution, so far as the farmers of the country are concerned, whatever use it may be for experimenting. I have nothing to say against experimenting in different kinds of grain and fruits; but fifty acres would have done for that as well as 500. If we had a fifty-acre plot with two or three men employed on it, they would accomplish all the work now being done in the way of experimenting, and at a good deal less cost.

Mr. SEMPLE. I notice in the report of the Minister of Agriculture that at the Columbian Exhibition the total awards were 2,721, of which agriculture received 1,016 and live stock 1,175, leaving only 530 awards for all other articles exhibited. This shows at a glance the importance of agriculture. Now, the Government cannot say that factious opposition has been offered to the operations of this farm. I visited it at its commencement, when the land was in poor condition, the soil being what I would call a hungry soil, which it was hard to get into a state to yield good crops. We see that $75,000 is asked for the maintenance of the farms and $25,000 for dairy purposes. $100,000 in all, and the only revenue received during the year has been $5,546. I think there should be a better showing than that at this time, after the number of years that the farm has been operated. I believe the country thinks, and will continue to think more and more, that the Minister of Agriculture should be a practical farmer. When we consider that in one province, the province from which I come, the valuation of farms and stock is about $970,000,000, I think the importance of having a practical farmer as the Minister of Agriculture must be acknowledged, and I should be very sorry to think that among the Liberal-Conservatives, from Essex to the North Pole, there could not be found some one able to fulfil that condition. I know that the hon. Finance Minister is able to grapple with almost any question and is an excellent debater; but I believe he feels that he is in a difficult position to-night. He has to depend on the information he receives, as he is without the practical knowledge necessary for the position, as I think he will acknowledge himself. He can only say, I know so-and-so, because so-and-so told me. Now, I consider that we should have a practical man who will give an undivided attention to the department, and who will not be placed in the Senate either. I think he should be called upon like other Ministers of the Crown to face his constituents every four or five years, and be questioned by the electors and give an account of his stewardship. It is unfair to those who are elected to have a man occupying a prominent position who does not need to go through that trying ordeal. I notice that the Minister of Agriculture and another Minister went to the North-west to instruct the settlers in farming. I read the report of their speeches, which showed that they had been well loaded up. They advised mixed farming, which is good advice anywhere. I think the Minister of Finance has enough to do in the important department he occupies without having the work of the Minister of Agriculture saddled upon him. We remember that the hon. member for London (Sir John Carling) when he occupied that position, was prepared to answer questions in the House, because he knew considerable about farming, having mixed among farmers for many years. By and by the Government thought proper to place him in the Senate, and then information was given to us in the same way as to-night, through a medium. Then, when the hon. member for London was again returned, the Government took his office from him and gave it to a lawyer, who may understand law, and may read Blackstone and other writers, but who knows practically nothing about agriculture. Many young men who have been brought up on the farm go into the city, and become doctors and lawyers, and compete with the best material there ; but the able and capable farmers are not all absorbed in other vocations, and there is an opportunity for a man of experience and of good executive ability, with a knowledge of politics ; and no other man will make an efficient Minister of Agriculture than a thoroughly practical farmer who has been in the business for years, and who has profited by that best of teachers, experience. There is an item under the heading of poultry, which is something like the fifteen tons of bran. There is 123 bags of grinding charged at 8 cents per bag ; but the cost of the grain is not given. I would like a little explanation of that.

Mr. FOSTER. That was grinding feed for cost of the maintenance of the Central Farm since its commencement ?

Mr. SEMPLE. Mistakes sometimes occur, and that is a fair explanation. In visiting the farm, I thought there was too much experimenting with different kinds of grasses. When it is seen that any grasses are of no particular use to any part of the country, I think they should be dispensed with. The last day I was at the Experimental Farm I noticed common clover and timothy and some others did very well, but others were of very little use. I think that time should not be lost in experimenting with useless varieties any longer. I would like also to see a better stock of cattle kept at the farm, because people, when they come from a distance, expect to see the very best to be obtained in the country, and we know that there is no lack of money. No doubt a great deal of good has been done by experimenting with different kinds of grain, but there is plenty of room for improvement in many directions. For instance, I noticed that the drills where the carrots are planted were not as straight as an expert would be expected to make them.

Mr. GRIEVE. What has been the total cost of the maintenance of the Central Farm since its commencement ?

Mr. FOSTER. The statement was made last year and will be found in 'Hansard.' I have not the statement this year.

Mr. GRIEVE. I find an item here for corn, 225 bushels and 23 pounds, $286.05, or about $1.27 a bushel. What was this corn for ? It appears to be an extraordinary price to have to pay for seed corn.

Mr. FOSTER. This was a number of varieties for distribution. Some was purchased in Dakota, and other varieties were brought long distances. They aimed at getting the very best varieties.

Mr. GRIEVE. Sixty to 90 cents ought to be the highest price.

Mr. McMILLAN. I find that in salaries at the farms, including Professor Robertson's, there was $20,370 paid out. Now, the Guelph

Mr. SEMPLE.

Farm costs in salaries $20,010, or $300 less, and at the Guelph Farm there is a large staff for the purpose of giving instruction to 180 regular students. There were over 260 students at the college last year. They have to keep a matron, a doctor, and a number of officials, which are not kept at the Experimental Farm, and yet the salaries at Guelph Farm are $360 less. Compare the expenses of the whole farm and college at Guelph and the expenses at this farm :

Labourers on the farm at Ottawa	$10,007
Three teamsters.....	2,147
Cattle men.....	1,581
Gardeners.....	826
Picking corn.....	190
Paid for teams.....	136
	$14,887

So that $14,887 is paid for labour apart from salaries. I find, according to the accounts of the Guelph Farm that the amount paid for labour was $2,927 ; in the experimental department, $3,155 ; in the nursery and lawn and garden, $1,866, or a total of $7,948, as against $14,751 at Ottawa, or $6,937 more at the Ottawa Experimental Farm than at the farm at Guelph, notwithstanding the fact that the latter has 100 more acres than this. The total cost of the college at Guelph is $22,000, of the farm proper, $10,081 ; experiments, $5,610 ; nursery, forest and gardens, $4,239 ; mechanical department, $1,373, or a total of $43,610. Then there is a revenue derived from that farm of $7,709, leaving the total new cost of the Guelph College and Experimental Farm, $35,832. In this institution at Ottawa we find an expenditure of $40,517, with a revenue of $3,199, leaving a net expenditure of $37,318. And if we count Professor Robertson's salary—as he is Professor of dairying—as I have counted Professor Dean's salary, the professor of dairying at the Guelph Institution, the difference between the cost of the Guelph College and Experimental Farm and that of the Experimental Farm at Ottawa is $4,891 more at Ottawa than at Guelph. It will be a matter for the farmers of this country to consider whether it is wise to spend such a large amount in order to carry on this Experimental Farm, a farm which gives out such a report as that we have criticised to-night.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Do not the students do a considerable share of the work at Guelph ?

Mr. McMILLAN. They do a large portion of the labour, and I thank the hon. gentleman for reminding me of that. The students do the labour, but they must be paid for it, and it is the most costly labour upon the farm. There is more trouble about that than anything else in connection with the farm—they cannot get the same value from students' labour that they do from hired labour. I have a few other comparisons to make. Professor Saunders gets $4,000 ; Professor Robertson is engaged at $5,000, making a total for the salaries of these two gentlemen of $9,000. When we look at the Guelph institution we find that Mr. Mills, whose duties are as arduous as those of any officer in connection with this institution, gets $2,000; Mr. Rennie, the farm superintendent, gets $1,200; Professor Panton, entomologist, $1,800; Mr. Shuttleworth, the chemist, $1,400; Professor Dean, $1,400; Mr. Zavitz, the experimentalist, $1,300. So that these six gentlemen together get only $100 more than the two officers here. And let me say that Professor Mills has to be a teacher as well as to oversee the work of the Experimental Farm, and must also do a great deal of work in laying out the results of the delegations sent out to the farmers' institute throughout the province. Let me say that I believe the salaries here at Ottawa are a little exorbitant, while they have only living salaries at Guelph. Though Professor Robertson is a good man, and a thorough expert in the dairy department, I think his salary is rather exorbitant—I am not going to think one thing and say another.

Mr. FOSTER. Does Professor Mills of the Ontario Agricultural College get simply $2,000?

Mr. McMILLAN. He gets $2,000 and a free house.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think he has his board.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you sure that is all?

Mr. McMILLAN. So far as I know.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman ought to be certain before he makes such distinct statements by way of comparison of the two institutions. If he did not know he should have known that Mr. Mills gets $2,000, he gets his house, he gets the keep of his family, and his servants are paid by the Government, and he considers his billet there is worth $4,500 to him.

Mr. CASEY. Let me ask the hon. gentleman what Professor Saunders gets.

Mr. FOSTER. He gets $4,000 and house room.

Mr. CASEY. Not fuel or heating or light?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. McMILLAN. It seems to me a most extraordinary statement that the privileges Mr. Mills has beyond his salary are worth $2,500 a year. There is only one servant.

Mr. FOSTER. How many of a family has he?

Mr. McMILLAN. Five or six.

Mr. FOSTER. It costs something to keep five or six of a family.

Mr. CASEY. I am sorry the hon. Minister persists in his resolution to go on with this discussion at this time of the morning. It is now one o'clock. He gives as an excuse for it that the day was taken up with something else, and that no item has been passed. He has to thank one of his colleagues, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for a great deal of the waste of time. Then if the hon. gentleman wanted to get an item through, he should have taken a smaller item, and one that would not be likely to arouse so much discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. We will give the hon. gentleman any information he can require, if only he will be reasonable.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman refuses the proposition to take a smaller item. This is no way to treat a subject of this kind. The hon. gentleman knows that neither he nor I, nor Professor Saunders, who has to coach him, can discuss this matter properly at this time of the day, for it is now one o'clock a.m. But this is a specimen of the manner in which the affairs, particularly affecting the farmers of this country, are treated by this Government. They look upon farmer's interests as matters of very small importance. The farmers will probably remember this as one instance. I do not pretend to be able to do justice to the subject under all these circumstances, but I feel it my duty not to let this pass without some discussion, in addition to what has taken place, even although the discussion is cut short by the Minister's tactics. In the first place, I object to the whole system of experimental farms as now managed. They are certainly costly, in view of the results. Some of them are so situated that the results are not of much use to the provinces in which they are situated.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Which ones are of no use?

Mr. CASEY. In other cases—

Mr. MONTAGUE. Which ones are of no use?

Mr. CASEY. Will you please keep order, Mr. Chairman? In other cases, as in the North-west, where the climate is moderately uniform, they have been duplicated, I think, unnecessarily.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman said some of them were of no use.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. gentleman will keep his seat, he will have a better time of it generally. The farm at Ottawa is situated in such a climate and located upon such a soil, that the results obtained there are practically valueless for almost any other part of Ontario. There is no climate like Ottawa, even within fifty miles of it, in the settled parts of Ontario, at all events, and no results of value can be obtained here except in regard to grains and fruits, which will bear the severest climate to be found anywhere in Ontario. Then with regard to the nature of the soil, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Huron, and as I know of my own knowledge long before the farm was established, a great part of that soil is of such a nature that I can quite believe it requires the amount of manure that has been bought for it, to bring it into a condition resembling that of an ordinary farm. With all the manure that has been put upon it—and I have watched that farm during the only opportunities we have had of watching it in crop time—I must say that I have seen no crop growing on that part of the farm which lies nearest the city—though I cannot say the same, not having had the same opportunities of observation, of the other low-lying parts of the farm—but on this high sandy part of it which I have seen, no crops grow which any farmer who works for a living, could afford to have on his place. I said some of the farms were unnecessarily duplicated; I refer to those in the North-west where the climate is much more similar, along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, than it is between Ottawa and other parts of Ontario. The management of this great system of farms was put into the hands of a gentleman who, previous to that time had a great reputation as a horticulturist and entomologist, but who had not, I believe, had any experience in farming on a large scale. He has had to learn the considerable amount which he now undoubtedly knows about farming, at the public expense on a salary of $4,000 a year, with expenses paid when he travels. The result has been that he has been led by theorists into experiments which have not been of much advantage to the country, and which have even led farmers into ventures which have not been to their benefit. I may refer in passing to the boom that was raised and attempted to be kept up, in the cultivation of two-rowed barley. I think every practical farmer knows that the two-rowed barley boom was a dead loss to the farmers who were induced to embark in it. A great deal of time and money, and ability were spent in trying to make that a success, when considerations of climate and so on might, I think, have warned the experimenter from going into it. But the attention of the committee has been called by the hon. member for Huron to the fact that we have not a practical farmer at the head of the department. That it is possible to have a practical farmer who has also the necessary qualifications for a Minister, has been shown abundantly in the province of Ontario. I need not go into that any further, but I will add that there are plenty of supporters of this Government who are practical farmers on a large scale, and who are also thoroughly well qualified to be Ministers at the head of a department, and it would undoubtedly have been a much more practical and common sense thing to choose one of these for the position, than

to take a lawyer from the province of Quebec, who is not required or supposed to know much about farming, and who sits in the House where the farmer's interests are not represented, and where he cannot be called to account and made to explain things as he would if he sat in this House. If we had had a Minister of Agriculture sitting here, and he a practical farmer, we should not have had the kind of debate which has gone on to-night, with constant demands for information which have to be supplied at second hand, and then with an evidently poor comprehension of the effect of the question asked and of the answer given. Now, Sir, let us see what the total cost of all these farms, and the revenue proceeding from them, have been. My hon. friend from Huron appears not to have noticed the accounts of the revenue, but it is worth while to mention them. They are small, but they are still revenue—a simple statement in the Auditor General's Report shows that all the farms cost $72,259.91, while the revenue was $5,546.66, leaving the net cost for the experimental farms at $66,713.25. It has cost just that amount to conduct a series of experiments such as we see carried on at the farm here, and such as are carried on a smaller scale and with inferior appliances, at the other farms in the Territories and in British Columbia. It must be left to the common sense of the people as well as the members of the House, to decide whether we have had $66,700 worth of experimenting out of all this. It is quite impossible to argue the point here, because you can give no figures, and as to the actual value of the experiments, the people must judge for themselves whether they are worth that much money to the farmers. Now, in ascertaining whether this farm at Ottawa, for example, is economically and successfully managed, we must compare it, to some extent, with that at Guelph, which is the nearest institution of a similar character. As the work here is all of an experimental character, while the work at Guelph includes practical farm work, experimental work and teaching, it is a little difficult to institute an exact comparison between the two institutions. But while I find that the net cost of running the Experimental Farm at Ottawa is $37,369, the net cost at Guelph for the same kind of work was very much less. I am not able to make a comparison with the figures at Guelph, except for the season before the last, as I have not been able to obtain the documents for the past session; but in the last bound volume I have containing the report of the Guelph Farm, I find that the cost of farm maintenance, including everything except $2,000 or so for permanent improvements, which should not be counted as part of the cost of maintenance, which was $17,435, while the revenue derived was $10,163. So the net cost of the farm at Guelph only amounted to $7,272. That was for regular farm work. The farm experiments at

Guelph cost $5,586, but that includes horses and stock $281, furniture $362, implements $246, and other items, of which the value was not exhausted during the year, and should not be estimated to the full extent as cost of maintenance. There was an experimental dairy at Guelph which cost $10,772: but it included $1,366 for imported cattle, cows and pigs, and also furniture, which should not have been counted at full cost. However, I have to count these items as they stand for the present, as I have no means of deciding how much of the amount should be counted. That item of $10,772 also includes a travelling dairy, costing $6,301, which again should not be calculated in the cost of the farm, because the travelling dairy was not an experimental one, but was a means of instructing farmers in dairying in different portions of the province. The cost of experimental dairying at Guelph should not be placed at more than $4,171, even including the items for stock, &c., to which I have referred. Then there must be deducted the dairy revenue of about $1,100, say $1,000, which would bring the total cost of experimental work at Guelph under $9,000, while the cost of experimental work at Ottawa was $37,367, or a difference in favour of Guelph as against Ottawa of about $28,367. There is other work besides experimental work carried on at Guelph, and I will take the total cost of Guelph College, with farm, college and experimental farm work, and compare it with the cost of the Ottawa farm. The whole net cost of Guelph farm, college and experimental work was $59,261, of Ottawa farm $37,637, or a difference of $21,894. What did that difference represent? At Guelph there is instruction given to a large number of young farmers. The hon. member for Huron has stated the number of students at 180 according to the latest report, but I have had to take the report of a year ago when the number was 159. At the present time there is also a summer school held for the benefit of school teachers. Those 159 students were maintained during the year, were boarded and given a thoroughly good agricultural education, both in theory and practice, at a cost of $137.50 each. In other words, these young men were boarded and educated at $107 each, less than the maintenance of the convicts per head in the Kingston Penitentiary. That certainly is something to say for the economical management of the Guelph College, not only as compared with the experimental farm here, but compared with other institutions where people are boarded and trained for less creditable reasons. There is one item with which I cannot make a comparison: $3,747 is charged for fuel at Guelph College, while I can find no charge for fuel in the Auditor General's Report for the Ottawa farm. Possibly it appears under the head of Public Works, but it should be charged against the farm. I had intended to have gone into the question of salaries and wages paid at Ottawa and Guelph, but the member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) entered into them very fully. I may mention one or two special cases, where the expenditure in particular departments is very absurdly in contrast with the results. For instance, Mr. Craig, the horticulturist, received a salary of $1,400, and expenses to the amount of $171, while the total returns that I find from garden products of all sorts, is $317, or $1,253 less than the salary and expenses of the man at the head of the department alone, besides the cost of labour and manure and seeds, and other expenses. The results in the poultry department and others are equally laughable in the way of returns. It may be urged that experimental proceedings of this sort are not intended to give a profit, and are simply for information; but I do not see how the information desired can be obtained, unless it can be shown that the different things can be raised at a profit, and that is not shown here, where there is such an absurd discrepancy as I have alluded to. I might as well give the figures for the other farms:

Expenses of Agassiz Farm.....	$ 8,604 44
Receipts.....	450 00
Expenses for Nappan Farm.....	5,205 29
Receipts.....	353 00
Expenses for Brandon Farm.....	9,260 00
Receipts	851 00
Expenses for Indian Head Farm.	8,672 00
Receipts.....	740 00

It is worth noticing how the items of the Ottawa Experimental Farm compare with the items at the Guelph Farm. In Guelph we find that the year before last they sold $3,635 worth of cattle, and at the Ottawa farm they sold $1,110 worth. Of pigs and pork they sold at the Guelph farm, $767 worth, and at the Ottawa farm, $446 worth. Of lambs they sold at the Guelph farm, $4,960 worth, and at the Ottawa farm, none. Of wheat they sold at the Guelph farm, $196 worth, and of grain of all kinds the Ottawa farm sold $66 worth. I notice that at the Ottawa Experimental Farm they both sold and bought hay, which is a queer operation in one year, from a farmer's standpoint. The maintenance of all the stock at the Guelph farms, which brought such large returns amounting to $9,092, cost for the year, $4,556. The Guelph farm has at all events shown farmers how to raise stock at a profit. I must confess that the principal lessons to be learned at the Experimental Farm here are as to what the farmers should avoid doing. I think that the practical farmer will learn more what to avoid than what to do by the experiments of this farm, except probably in regard to the dairying business. I believe that sound methods are followed in the dairy department, and that it is well conducted, but as to anything new having been found out, either in dairying or any other department, I have not yet seen any documents to inform us of it. However, in cattle feeding something new has been discovered apparently, and we have been shown how to obtain a pretty large crop of pneumonia on scientific principles. I do not think the farmers are, however, anxious to learn that lesson. I am quite aware that I have not done full justice to this subject, but I have attempted to do my best to call the attention of the public to the wasteful cost at which fancy experiments are being carried on throughout the Dominion at these farms. I have drawn attention to the fact that no tangible results are obtained, to the fact that this institution is not managed with any tincture of that economy or that sound common sense which are shown in the management of the sister institution at Guelph. The public only require to have their attention called to the subject to see that a great leak is going on here, and then they will take note of what is said in this debate, and draw their own conclusions. I may say that to my mind the experiments carried on at Guelph have been quite as useful and almost as extensive as those carried on at the Central Experimental Farm here, at much greater expense, besides being conducted on a soil and in a climate where their results are of general application.

Mr. GRIEVE. How many cattle and horses are kept on the farm at Nappan ?

Mr. FOSTER. Six horses and twenty-seven head of cattle.

Mr. GRIEVE. How many on the farm at Brandon ?

Mr. FOSTER. Eight horses and thirty head of cattle.

Mr. GRIEVE. How many on the farm at Agassiz ?

Mr. FOSTER. Six horses and twelve head of cattle.

Mr. GRIEVE. Was that the number prior to the getting out of this report ?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the figures, but they were probably about the same.

Mr. GRIEVE. I notice that during the year there was purchased sixty-eight tons of hay, valued at $804. There must be something wrong here, because it would be an impossibility for twenty head of horses and cattle to consume sixty-eight tons of hay in one season. I am satisfied that there is not a farmer in this House who will disagree with me as to that. This requires some explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. A certain amount of that was carried over to the next year. The land was not fitted for the raising of hay.

Mr. GRIEVE. It is surely a peculiar way of doing business for a farm to purchase hay and keep it over from one year to the next.

Mr. FOSTER. Recollect that the farm is in an out-of-the-way district, and it happened that this year they had an opportunity of buying a certain lot of hay, more than was needed for one year, and the remainder was kept over for the succeeding year.

Mr. GRIEVE. I know it is an out-of-the-way district, but I supposed that on that farm a certain amount of hay would be grown; and certainly there should not be anything like sixty tons of hay consumed by fifteen to eighteen head of cattle and four or five horses. That amount of hay should be sufficient for three years instead of one. It appears to me that there is something wrong about this.

To enable Dairy Commissioner

by advances for making cheese and butter within the provinces $36,000

Mr. McMILLAN. I think that before this item is adopted there should be some explanation of it. Though it may have been necessary at first, when the experimental stations were commenced, that they should pay the farmer a certain amount for the cream they furnished at the factories, until they could put the goods on the market, I think the time has gone by when that should be done. I do not believe in spoon-feeding the farmers any more than any other class. If they are going to establish a certain number of creameries in the North-west, it may be necessary to have a little money to put them on an equal footing with those in the other provinces; but I think it is wrong to take a sum of money to pay to the farmers before the goods can be put on the market. I see that Professor Robertson stated lately that it was the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to erect creameries in the North-west. I think it is Mr. Van Horne makes the statement: "We will undertake to erect two or three creameries for experimental purposes if certain arrangements are carried through." I think this House is entitled to know what arrangements are to be carried through before the Canadian Pacific Railway will go on and build their creameries.

Mr. FOSTER. This vote of $36,000 is for new experimental stations, not for carrying on the old ones. It is to be used mostly in the Island of Prince Edward and in the outlying districts of the North-west Territories. This is simply an advance and not an expenditure of money, and it will be in the hands of the Receiver General before the 1st of July. It is simply to facilitate these operations so far as new stations are concerned. The Canadian Pacific Railway, in their proposition, simply lend a helping hand to farmers who will combine for carrying on stations, and it will go to the extent of providing buildings if the farmers will take advantage of their proposition, and the Government are doing just what it would do if the farmers put up the buildings themselves.

The details will be found in the report laid before Parliament at page 160 and in the Auditor General's Report, B-35. By the 30th June every cent will be repaid, and the amount repaid now is about $33,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. How many new stations are to be established in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. FOSTER. Six new stations, and there are seventeen there already.

Haras National Co., use of six stallions $6,000

Mr. McMILLAN. Is this the last year of that vote?

Mr. FOSTER. It has one year more to run.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

DEBATES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved:

That the second report of the Select Standing Committee of the Debates of the House be adopted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the report is in favour of another officer being employed on the staff. I think it is only with reluctance that the House will accede to that. But the chairman of the committee informs me that a special necessity exists, at this time on account of the illness of one of the regular staff, and that the intention of the committee is that the officer to be employed shall be engaged only temporarily. Under such circumstances I think I would be disposed not to urge the objection I would otherwise feel bound to take. I therefore assume that the employment will be certainly not longer than the remainder of the present session.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I may say that the report is in the sense indicated by the Prime Minister. It simply asks that temporary assistance may be employed when deemed necessary until the end of the present session.

Mr. LAURIER. What are the facts that render the employment of a new officer necessary? Have any additional duties been thrust upon the members of the staff?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The additional assistance is required in the translation of the 'Hansard' from English into French. The French translation is now about 1,000 pages behind the English version, and a good many complaints have been made because the work is not up. The session, as hon. members will admit, has been a very industrious one—

Mr. LAURIER. No.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell)—the House having sat every night almost without exception until a late hour. However, since this report was agreed to by the committee, the information has been given by the committee from the chief of the translating staff that one of the translators has been stricken down with paralysis, and will be unable to perform his duties for several weeks to come. So that whatever necessity previously existed for additional assistance has been increased by this fact.

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not press any objections to the report of the committee, but I wish to take this opportunity of calling the attention of the House to the backward state of the translation of the 'Hansard' from English into French. If there is no alternative to the present system, we might as well drop the translation altogether. When it takes five or six weeks for debates to be translated, the French version of the 'Hansard' becomes useless—it is only so much waste paper. No member would dare to send to his electors the report of a debate five or six weeks old. This has been a subject of complaint for a long time. I think that the staff of translators is quite sufficient, in number at least, if not in efficiency. The translation should be so carried on that the French copy of the debates shall not be more than from five to ten days behind the English. But it is a matter of public notoriety, at least ever since I have been in this House, that the French translation at this stage of the session has never been less than four or five weeks behind the English report. What is the cause of this? It was stated to the committee in my hearing that two of these translators do not live in Ottawa at all, and they do their work only when they have nothing else to do. They seem to believe that the $1,000 paid to them nominally for the translation of the debates is a kind of pension which has been granted to them by their political friends to pay for their political services. Some of the translators are employed on newspapers in Montreal and elsewhere, and I am told that some of them are quite incompetent and should never have been appointed; that they do not know French or English either; all they know is political intriguing, through which they have succeeded in getting on the 'Hansard' staff. If this is to go on it will come to this: that appointments on the 'Hansard' staff will be a piece of political patronage. I do not object to friends of hon. gentlemen opposite being appointed, but let those who are appointed be efficient. There are plenty, even among Conservatives, who would make good translators, but they do not take the trouble to intrigue. They are plain, hardworking men; they do not come here seeking for this work, and other people who know better how to manage get the places. These people come here and succeed in getting on the 'Hansard' staff, but do nothing whatever to earn their money. One of the translators, I understand, has been living in Montreal and another in Hull all session. They are engaged in other work, and only when they have nothing else to do will they undertake the translation of debates. The translators ought to be obliged to stay here and do their work.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, for several years past, the French-speaking members have had cause to complain of the translation of the Debates. Ever since I have had a seat in this House, I have heard complaints made, at every session of Parliament, concerning the backward state of the translation. The remarks I offer to-day are prompted by no spirit of hostility; but, so far as I can judge, all the trouble on that head arises either from the fact that the officers on the translating staff are not industrious enough, or else that they are not numerous enough to catch up with their work. I would invite the attention of the French-speaking members to the state of both editions of the Hansard; by referring to the English revised editions of the Debates, they will satisfy themselves that it reaches as high a figure as 3776 columns, the last report having been issued on the 6th of June, while the French edition only shows up to date 2272 columns, being 1500 columns behind the English edition, the last report of the French edition having been issued on the 9th of May last. Under the circumstances, I feel warranted in stating that the French-speaking members have just ground of complaint; so much the more so as, owing to the delay complained of, the translation of debates becomes practically useless. It is no use to them either for reference during the debates of the House, or for sending out to their constituencies for the information of their electors, because other questions, in the interval, come up for discussion, which divert public attention into other channels. I, therefore, felt justified, on the above grounds, in bringing up the question before the Debates Committee, at its last sitting, and the English-speaking members, with characteristic fair play, admitted that our complaints were well-founded. After consulting with the chief of the translating staff, it was agreed to by the committee, that on account of the illness of one of the translators, another officer should be engaged temporarily; and further, the conclusion was reached of doing away with an abuse which had crept in, namely, the absence from Ottawa of two officers of the regular staff. It was, therefore, agreed to by the Committee that these two translators shall reside at Ottawa, failing which they would be liable to be dismissed and replaced by others who shall reside here. The motion which is now before the House, as also the agreement reached empowering the committee to compel the attendance of the absent translators under pain of dismissal, will result, I trust, in ensuring a proper translation, within reasonable delay, of the Debates of the House.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, a vacancy has been caused in the Committee on Public Accounts by the death of Mr. Hearn. I beg to move the appointment of the Solicitor General to fill the vacancy.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT.

Inland Revenue, Part II, Adulteration of Food, for the year ended 30th June, 1893. —(Mr. Wood, Brockville.)

THE ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 143) respecting the electoral franchise. He said: After what I said the other day in indicating the outlines of the Bill, it will not be necessary, I am sure, to express myself at great length this afternoon in order to give the House to understand what the contents of the Bill are. In order, however, to give a brief sketch of them previous to the second reading, I would mention again what I indicated a few days ago, that the principal features of the Bill are these: first of all, in relation to the revision of the present year, we bring into force for the purposes of the revision, the Redistribution Act of 1892; it will follow therefrom that the revision of the present year will be made on the lines of the constituencies as re-arranged in 1892, notwithstanding that the Redistribution Act is not to come into force for electoral purposes until a dissolution of this Parliament. At the same time it is our constitutional duty to see that the constituencies are always in such a position that, in case of an appeal, the electors will be ready with the lists revised and the constituencies so arranged that the general elections may take place. While it is not only possible, but very probable, that the revision of this year will be followed by a revision next year prior to any dissolution, still, acting upon the principle which I have mentioned, we are bound to keep in view the fact that whenever a dissolution shall take place the constituencies will be in a position to have a vote taken according to the distribution which will then be in force. However, we propose to provide for the case of by-elections taking place in the meantime, by taking care that the polling divisions will be made in such a manner that they will not run from one constituency, as it exists at present, into any new constituency that will exist under the Redistribution Act of 1892; and, therefore, if a by-election should take place prior to dissolution, the list of electors for the constituency in which the election occurs, can be made from the sheets of electors for the polling divisions which are comprised in the constituency as it now stands. Therefore, the two principles can be kept in view in the one revision, the principle of having the polling district so arranged that the list of electors for the electoral district as it now stands, can be formed at any moment out of the revised lists, likewise the principle that the electoral lists for the constituency according to the Redistribution Act, may be accessible at any moment that an opportunity may arise. The change is also proposed in this Bill which I indicated a few days ago, that the questions upon which so much difference has arisen in the past as to the basis of the franchise, shall be adjusted by adopting the franchises of the several provinces. While I admit that this is a new departure, I deny what has been so widely asserted that it is in any important or practical degree a surrender of any principle that we have contended for in times past. The number of differences which exist between the provincial franchises and the Dominion franchise as established by our own Act, are so few as not to be worth the contest and the expense which are involved in keeping them up, and the adoption of a general system which will apply both to the Local and Dominion Legislatures, has recommendations as regards simplicity and facilities for economy, which cannot exist under a dual system such as we have been keeping up for the past few years. It is obviously one of the most desirable features in connection with any system of franchise, and to my mind an essential feature, that the system to be adopted will be such that it can be put into operation every year. While under the system which we now propose considerable difficulty and labour may arise, fully as much perhaps as would arise in a revision under the law as it now stands—while I admit, I say, that considerable difficulties will arise in making the new list, the first list, I do claim for the principles of this Bill and for its detail, that they will introduce into the electoral system a degree of simplicity which will make the working of that system very easy in future revisions; so that I think there can be no doubt that the revision can be expected to take place every year. But I claim, with regard to those difficulties that they would exist in any case in a revision at the present time, seeing that the list which is to be now revised is some three or four years old, and in respect of which the changes, especially in urban constituencies, are very great indeed in consequence of the lapse of time. For these reasons I think the Bill will commend itself to the House, and that when once we have succeeded in forming a list under the present system, we shall find this annual revision comparatively easy, and I am sure, economical as compared with the present system. We uphold the feature, which I regard as the principal feature of the Franchise Act of 1885, and that is that the revision shall take place by officers under the control of this Parliament and of the Federal Government. The great principle which underlay the Franchise Act of 1885 was the control by this Parliament over matters connected with the franchise. It was contended that control should exist in two branches; in the first place, as regards the laying down of the franchise itself, and, in the second place, as regards the administration of the law by which the franchise was carried out. We have arrived, after the experience of eight or nine years, at the conclusion which I have stated, that it is not worth the effort to keep up the divergences that exist between the two sets of franchises, the franchise as we have it now, and the franchise as it exists in the various provinces; but we adhere to the second branch of the principle of control, namely, that this House and the electors who return members to this House ought not to be under the control as regards the exercise of their franchise of the officers of any other Government or Legislature whatever in the country. And therefore we intend to ask the House to adhere to that principle of Federal control over the Federal franchise. With these remarks, I ask the first reading of the Bill.

Mr. LAURIER. We of the Opposition do not at all find fault with the Bill so far as it goes. The only fault I would find with it—and I will criticise the Bill at a subsequent stage—is that it does not go far enough. However, the Government, I will not say have surrendered, because the word is objectionable to the hon. gentleman, and I desire to hold out the olive branch and not to harrow his feelings by using that expression, but I congratulate him on the fact that he has a good deal diverged from the principles maintained in the past by himself and his party. In the first place, it is with great satisfaction we learn that at last the Government have come to this conclusion, that there should be at all times such a state of things in the country that if an election takes place, whether partial or general, it will be held under such conditions that the vote of the electorate will be recorded, such an electoral vote as exists at the time. The hon. gentleman is aware that this principle has not been maintained in the past, and that in the last general election in 1891 that principle was not maintained and the general election took place, not on the electoral vote as it existed, but upon lists almost three years old. The plan of the right hon. gentleman, which he has not fully enunciated to the House, but which he says hon. members will find when they examine it to be very simple, if it should prove to be a simple one when it came to be carried out, would be very satisfactory indeed to all parties, not only to members of this House, but to candidates and to the people at large. With respect to the franchise itself, the right hon. gentleman has said that he has surrendered nothing. I will not quarrel with that statement. We contended in 1855, and have contended ever since, that the true basis and the only basis of obtaining the suffrages of the people in every province was by the provincial franchise: we have always maintained that the proper authority to determine the franchise in any province was the local authority and not the Federal authority. This principle is conceded at last, and so far the Bill is very satisfactory. We have no reason to complain in that respect; on the contrary, I rejoice and offer my congratulations to the right hon. gentleman, although I do it with some degree of modesty because they may not be very well received as they may be taken to imply some surrender on the part of the hon. gentleman and his party. But there is a feature of the Bill in regard to which I cannot congratulate the hon. gentleman, and upon which he has made no surrender whatever. The hon. gentleman does not surrender but maintains what is perhaps the most evil feature of the Act to-day, namely, the revision of the list by a revising officer. If we adopt the provincial franchise, I cannot conceive of any good reason that can be advanced as to why this feature should be retained when we accept the provincial list. In Ontario and Quebec those lists are prepared, it is true, under provincial laws, but not under the control of the Provincial Legislatures, because the lists are prepared by municipal officers, that is to say they are prepared by the people themselves through the municipal councils, this being a feature in the province of Quebec, and also, I believe, in Ontario and in Nova Scotia. It is true that in Ontario a new departure has been adopted tentatively with respect to the system of registration carried out in large cities, and I understand from the press that that system is working admirably. This would prove a most convenient reform if it were adopted. The hon. gentleman has told the House that when the details of the Bill are ascertained, the preparation of the lists will be very much simplified. I am sorry to say that I do not think this will be found to be the case: I believe, on the contrary, that so long as the lists prepared are revised by the revising officer all the expenses imposed on members of Parliament and candidates and on the people at large in respect to having the lists revised will be found to be the same as at the present time. The only change will be in the work of the revising officer. Instead of taking the franchise we had adopted by this Parliament, the officers will proceed on the provincial franchise in each province; and as regards the working of the lists the only difference will be that the revising officer will have to follow the provincial lists, and therefore the expense which every hon. member knows is a most serious one will not be obviated as by the Bill introduced by the right hon. gentleman. However, I will not discuss the point further at the present time. The hon. gentleman has kept silent on that point, he has not told the House what are the new provisions in the Bill which are to make the provisions of the lists more simple, and to that point I will make reference on a future occasion. It has taken six or seven years to change the right hon. gentleman's mind—not to call it to surrender—on the question of the adoption of the provincial lists, and I hope during the time between the first and second readings of the Bill the hon. gentleman may change his mind also as regards the revising officers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). On looking over the right hon. gentleman's Bill there are some features referred to which have not been dealt with in the hon. gentleman's speech. The hon. gentleman has said that the work of revision after the first year will be very much more simple than on the first occasion. I am unable to see how that will be the case, nor why it should be necessary. If the right hon. gentleman adopts the provincial qualification where there is a voters' list, assuming the hon. gentleman deems it expedient to retain the Dominion revising officers, why should not the provincial list be taken just as it is revised and made the basis of the Dominion list? Even though you have a Dominion official it does not seem necessary that the revising officer should prepare the list. There is a provincial list already prepared under municipal supervision by men on the ground. That is the case in Ontario and in the province of Quebec, and I understand it is the same in some of the other provinces. This would save very much trouble and great expense if the provincial lists were taken and were simply supplemented by such further additions as the revising officer found it necessary to put on the list. In Ontario at least the lists are revised by the municipal authority. There he can appeal to the county judge, who practically discharges the duties of revising officer. If the hon. gentleman names the county judge or other party as revising officer, I do not see why it is necessary that there should devolve on him the duty of preparing the list. There is a list already prepared. The hon. gentleman may by his Bill intend to accept the list so prepared as the basis for the work which the revising officer is to do, but I do not see that in the Bill and I did not hear it stated in the observations made by the right hon. gentleman that this system had been adopted. It seems to me that this would save an enormous amount of trouble and a very considerable amount of expense, and in fact the expense could be very much further reduced if, where there is a provincial list prepared under a provincial law, such list were taken, and if it were found necessary to strike off names, to print a supplementary list with the names struck off and whatever names the revising officer saw proper to add. The expense would be reduced to a minimum and the trouble to parties who take sufficient interest in the matter to look after the revision of the list, would be enormously reduced if that principle were adopted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may explain, in answer to what the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has suggested, that there is a provision in the Bill that the local lists are to form part of the material from which the Dominion reviser will make out his list, and when I referred to the difficulties connected with the formation of the list for the present year, I referred to the difficulties which are incidental to the making of a list after such long delay has taken place in the revision, and to the fact, that considering the new basis the present will be the construction of the first list; and in constructing that first list, the reviser has of course to avail himself as far as he can of the local lists. He has to avail himself likewise of the latest assessment roll for the purpose of correcting that local list in so far as it can be corrected. But this will be found to be the case at the outset. It will be found that in several provinces the revisions of local lists have been very carelessly made, and made by officers with nothing like the sense of responsibility and the painstaking which established revising officers have. I apprehend, however, that in succeeding years the simplification which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) pointed to as likely to follow from the adoption of the local lists, will follow as a matter of course from the fact that we shall have established a Dominion list to start with, and that all that will be required in order to correct that will be to take the applications to put on and off in accordance with the usual practice. I cannot acquiesce in the principle that we should start with the idea that the revising officer should take the local lists and simply add to them persons who can show reasons why they failed to apply in the first instance to be put on the local lists. We must not recognize the local lists as in any way conclusive as regards our franchise. We must leave it perfectly open to the revising officer to receive applications from every person who is entitled to vote, even though he failed to seek his right as regards the local lists in the first instance. We have nothing to do with the local lists in that respect. We simply take them as a matter of guidance, as we would the assessment roll. But if any man comes forward and says: I am not on the local list, but I am entitled to be put upon it, we ought to include him, though he did not get his name inserted in the local list, and even though he failed to be included, or failed otherwise to make his application to be put on the local list. Hereafter when the list is once formed, we shall have the advantage of the lists to start from, that is to say, very recent lists. We shall have the advantage of the more recent local revision, and to my mind these two circumstances together will make the construction of the list from year to year very rapid and very simple, and if I am correct in this assumption we shall succeed in lessening the expense very much indeed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). One of the greatest sources of expense at the present time is to correct the existing lists. If you take the local lists you have new lists every year. Far greater expense is incurred in getting rid of tenants whose time has expired than perhaps from any other cause, and the hon. gentleman, by what he has just suggested, proposes to perpetuate one of the greatest objections that exist to the present system.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask a question of the hon. gentleman with respect to the districts the boundaries of which have been altered or subdivided. If I understood his explanation correctly with regard to these districts there will be necessarily two lists made. One with reference to the contingency of an election before the dissolution of Parliament, and one providing new lists for the subdivided districts. For instance, my own county at present is represented by two members. That county has been subdivided. I understand from the hon. gentleman's explanation that there will be a list prepared in the case of an election happening before dissolution takes place, in respect to the whole county. Then there will be a second list for each of the subdivisions to take effect after dissolution. Am I correct in that?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Only partly so. There will be but one list made, and that will be for the new constituencies. But it is provided that if there shall be a vacancy in an electoral district, for instance that which the hon. gentleman represents, the lists for the by-election will be made out of the lists for these polling subdivisions which form part of the constituency as it now stands.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. LAURIER. I would take occasion to recall to the hon. gentleman a question which I have already put to him once or twice. The hon. gentleman in his remarks has referred to the Redistribution Act of 1892, but he said nothing of a possible contingent Redistribution Bill of which we have heard a good deal for the last few weeks. Without wishing to enter into secrets with which I have nothing to do, I understand that there was a gathering of gentlemen yesterday in No. 16, and perhaps now the Prime Minister may be in a position to give us some information with regard to this matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am afraid that on that subject the hon. gentleman will not be able to congratulate me either, because I know that he was exceedingly dissatisfied with the redistribution of 1892, and it follows from that that he would like exceedingly to have a redistribution this year. Notwithstanding my disposition to meet his wishes on all occasions, and even to make new departures occasionally in order to meet him half-way, I am afraid I shall have to tell him that this matter will have to be postponed until next session.

Mr. LAURIER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that his announcement will not break my heart.

THE HULL 'DESPATCH.'

Mr. DEVLIN asked, How much was paid by the Government to the 'Despatch' newspaper of Hull during the last year, as well as during the two preceding years? What was the work done by the 'Despatch'? To whom was the money paid?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The answer I have from the department is this: Cheques for subscriptions are indorsed by W. J. Cuzner, proprietor, and the payments for printing and advertising were most probably made in the same manner, but the vouchers are all at the Public Accounts Committee.

U. S. ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. LOWELL asked, Whether the Government has entered into any negotiations with or made representations to the American authorities with regard to the application by them to Canadian workmen of the "Alien Labour Law"?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

GARBAGE IN THE NIAGARA RIVER.

Mr. LOWELL asked, 1. Whether the Government is aware that large quantities of garbage and refuse are dumped into the Niagara River from the city of Buffalo and other places on the American side of the river? 2. Whether the Government has ever made any representations to the American authorities with regard to the same? If not, whether they intend to do so?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have not been made aware of such a fact.

COMMEMORATION OF LUNDY'S LANE.

Mr. LOWELL asked, Have any steps been taken by the Government, as promised by

Mr. LAURIER.

Sir A. P. Caron, when Minister of Militia, to perpetuate the memory of the men who lost their lives in the battle of Lundy's Lane?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Plans and estimates have been prepared for a suitable monument, and it is the intention of the Government to carry out any promises made with regard to the commemoration of Lundy's Lane.

QUEBEC OBSERVATORY.

Mr. GUAY (for Mr. Choquette) asked, 1. Whether the Government have appointed a successor to the late Mr. W. A. Ashe, at the Quebec Observatory? If so, who is the titular of the position; by whom was he recommended; what certificates and evidences of competency did he produce in order to secure his appointment? 2. Who were the other candidates for the position, and did they produce testimonials of competency? 3. Was Mr. Chs. Carpmiel, head of the Meteorological Office at Toronto, authorized by the Government to require certificates and proof of service on the part of applicants for the Quebec Observatory? What report did he make to the Government? 4. Did the Government select the candidate furnishing the best certificates and testimonials as to competency, and affording the best guarantee as regards science? 5. What work has been done at the Quebec Observatory from the date of the appointment of the late Mr. W. A. Ashe up to this date? What are the duties of the present holder of the position? 6. What has been the cost to the Government of the installation of the Quebec Observatory,—instruments, buildings, &c., and of the equatorial constructed by Alvan Clarke? 7. Are the Government aware that the equatorial at the Quebec Observatory is in ruins; that the pieces of clock-work have been taken away or lost; that the objective is now worthless from having been exposed to wind, snow and dust for years? 8. Is it true that the person in charge of the Quebec Observatory is incapable of using and regulating the meridian glass for the time service, and that that work is done by Mr. D. C. Morency, engineer, a former associate of the late Mr. Ashe? 9. Are the Government aware that the time service does not give satisfaction; that there have been errors of 30 and 40 seconds and up to two minutes? Have there not been complaints from the Marine Department at Quebec in the matter? 10. Is it the intention of the Government to raise the Quebec Observatory from its position of inferiority, and to secure the performance of the work done therein in a manner suited to the progress of science and public instruction in this country?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Government appointed a successor to Mr. W. A. Ashe at the Quebec Observatory. They appointed Mr. Arthur Smith, who had been acting observer at that observatory since 1890. He was recommended by the director of the Meteorological service, Prof. Carpmael, and also by the inspector of the service for the province of Quebec. Those were the certificates and evidences of competency which were accepted by the department. The other candidates for the position were Prof. Roy, of Lévis College; Mr. McCallum, of Quebec; Mr. Proctor, of Quebec; Mr. Evans, of Quebec; Mr. O'Donnell, of Quebec, and Mr. Wurtele, of Kingston. They produced testimonials of competency. Mr. Carpmael, the head of the Meteorological service, was authorized by the Government to inquire into the competency of these various applicants, and he made a report, which I am not able to read to the House in answer to the question, but it will be brought down upon a motion, if made. The Government did select the candidate furnishing satisfactory certificates and testimonials, upon the reports to which I have referred. The duties of the present holder of the position consist of meteorological and astronomical observations. Touching the sixth paragraph of this question, I shall have to ask the hon. gentleman to make a motion for the information asked for, as the answer would involve a research, and cannot be given satisfactorily across the floor of the House. The Government are not aware that the equatorial at the Quebec Observatory is in ruins, or that the pieces of clockwork have been taken away or lost, or that the objective is now worthless from having been exposed to wind, snow and dust for years. Neither am I aware that the person in charge of the observatory is incapable of using and regulating the meridian glass, or that that work is done by Mr. D. C. Morency, engineer, a former associate of the late Mr. Ashe. The ninth question refers to the time service. There is an inquiry going on respecting a complaint that has been made, but I am not in a position yet to give a definite answer to that question, or to say to what extent the time service is not satisfactory. From a preliminary report, I believe it has been satisfactory. There have not been complaints from the Marine Department respecting the matter, but there have been complaints from one of the candidates, Prof. Roy, whose application for that position was not entertained. Those complaints are being inquired into, and I have not received the final report respecting them. The tenth question I cannot answer, as it is based upon hypotheses which I do not admit.

MANITOBA AND NORTH-WEST SCHOOLS.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked, 1. Is it the intention of the Government to cause the petition of the Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of Canada in relation to the Manitoba and North-west schools, presented in this House by the Prime Minister on the 5th day of May, last, to be printed and distributed to the members of this House? 2. Is it the intention of the Government to grant the conclusions of the said petition at an early date? 3. Will action be taken by the Government in relation thereto before the end of the present session of Parliament?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The petition will be treated in the ordinary course, and I presume that the question of its printing will be in the hands of the Printing Committee, and, if not, in the hands of any member of the House who may desire that it should be printed for the information of the members of the House in advance of the ordinary sessional papers. It is the intention of the Government to communicate with the Provincial Governments on the subject of the petition, and to ask the consideration of the petition by the Provincial Governments before undertaking action with regard to it.

PERMANENT MILITIA CORPS.

Mr. CASEY asked, 1. Does the Government intend concentrating two or more units of the permanent militia corps at Lévis, or elsewhere, in the province of Quebec, during the year 1894? If so, what is the object? 2. Has there been any correspondence between the Major-General commanding the militia, or the Militia Department, and any militia officers, in regard to the formation of a cavalry association? If so, what is the object of the association, and what is the result of the correspondence? Will the Government produce it? Has the General Officer commanding approved of the formation of such association? 3. Has there been an association or club formed, composed of officers of the permanent corps? If so, what are the objects of the association or club? Has it the approval of the General Officer commanding? 4. In sanctioning the device "V. R. I." being given to the permanent militia corps, does the Government follow the practice in regard to other colonial forces outside of India? What is the special significance in Canada of the allusion to the Queen as Empress of India? Is there any correspondence with the War or Colonial Office with regard to it? 5. Is there any correspondence between the War Office, or Colonial Office, and the Commandant of the Royal Military College of Canada, or the Militia Department, in reference to the Imperial Government granting commissions in the Army Service corps to graduates of the Military College? 6. Is it the intention of the Militia Department to issue a militia list corrected to 1st January, 1894? If so, when, and what has been the cause of the delay? 7. What is the reason for the delay in presenting the House with the yearly "Establishment List of Militia Corps, for 1894-95," as provided for by Militia General Orders? Will the Establishment List be presented before the considering of the Militia Estimates ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). In answer to my hon. and gallant friend, I would say that the question of concentrating two or more units of the permanent militia corps at Lévis during 1894 is under consideration. Should it be decided to accede to the desire for such a corps, the object will be the development of a system whereby a larger number of non-commissioned officers and men of the active militia may be put through a course of instruction, qualifying themselves for commissions. 2. There has been correspondence between the department and some cavalry officers with regard to a cavalry association, and the correspondence is at the disposition of my hon. friend. The intention to form the association has been for the present abandoned. The object, I suppose, was to promote efficiency of the cavalry in Canada. The general officer approves of the association within certain lines and within his control. 3. A club of officers of the permanent force has been formed. The object is to promote the spirit of comradeship of present and past officers, and to develop interest in professional subjects by the publication, quarterly, of a small magazine devoted to such matters. Such a club and publication exist in most British regiments. It has been approved. 4. I would read the general order dated 11th August, 1893: "On the occasion of Her Majesty's birthday, the Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her approval of the regiments now composing the permanent militia of Canada, to be henceforth designated as follows:—Royal Canadian Dragoons, Canadian Artillery, Royal Regiment of Canadian Infantry. Her Majesty has been further graciously pleased to authorize the above named Royal regiments to wear on their accoutrements the Imperial cipher V.R.I., surmounted by the Imperial Crown." The significance in Canada of the allusion to Her Majesty as Empress of India, is that Her Majesty's full title is Queen and Empress of India. There has been correspondence on the subject. 5. Application was made to the Imperial authorities inquiring whether any appointments to the Army Service corps would be available for cadets graduated at Kingston, and the last letter received informed the department that it was not anticipated that any appointments to that corps would be made during that period other than those of officers holding commissions in the Royal forces. It is the intention of the department to issue a correct militia list with the least possible delay. The deaths of two clerks in the Militia Department charged with the preparation of the militia list has seriously interfered with its preparation. A revised list is in my hands, and when approved by Council will be submitted to the House. The changes are light and of a character that will commend them to my hon. and gallant friend, and

Mr. CASEY.

I am confident they will raise no objection on his part to the passing of the Estimates.

MONTREAL COLLECTORSHIP OF CUSTOMS.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to call the attention of the Government to a question which I am sure hon. gentlemen, especially those from the city of Montreal, will consider of much importance. I refer to the position now vacant of the Collectorship of Customs of the port of Montreal. It will be remembered that—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is transgressing the rules of order. He may inquire why the collectorship has not been filled, but he cannot make a speech.

Mr. DEVLIN. Perhaps the Government could answer the question why the position has not been filled.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The position has not been filled—

Mr. LANGELIER. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) might perhaps answer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Would the hon. gentleman prefer that he should? The position has not been filled because there is no immediate necessity.

RETURNS.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would call attention to the fact that one of the papers mentioned here is not down: "the Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration a despatch, hereto attached, dated 1st March, 1894." It is not attached.

Mr. DALY. I shall attend to the matter.

Mr. LAURIER. The report of Mr. Rubidge with regard to Sheik's Island has not been brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought it was laid on the Table when the Estimates were brought down. I shall look into the matter.

Mr. LAURIER. I would also call the hon. gentleman's attention to this other fact. He said that, in deciding on the changes made in those contracts, he relied upon the opinions of different engineers, and amongst others that of Mr. Shanly. He said that Mr. Shanly's report had been brought down in a blue-book. I understood the hon. gentleman to mean the blue-book brought down in 1890, in answer to the motion of the hon. member for Cornwall, but the report is not in that book.

Mr. HAGGART. I answered that I was not aware it was not brought down, and I asked my deputy, who said that all these reports were published. After the statement of the hon. gentleman, I will see that it is brought down before the estimate is got through.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the right hon. the Minister of Justice prepared to give an answer in the matter of the census returns?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. To-morrow.

SUPPLY--MONTREAL CUSTOMS COLLECTORSHIP.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DEVLIN. Of course I do not wish to take up much time in connection with the question I asked a moment ago. The right hon. the First Minister replied that there was no immediate necessity to fill this position, but it will be remembered that the position is now vacant for two years, the last occupant being the late M. P. Ryan, of Montreal—a gentleman who filled the position with marked ability, credit to himself, and satisfaction to the entire commercial community. At that time, it was said that the position would shortly be filled, but from time to time the appointment has been delayed. I am sorry the Controller of Customs is not in his seat. I have been waiting several days before bringing this matter up, in order that he might be here, but I understand that duties of importance require his presence elsewhere, and that just now he is actively engaged denouncing in pretty strong terms His Grace the Archbishop of Kingston and other gentlemen. There are also, I understand, other reasons why this position is not filled. It is said that there exist in the Government certain divisions in regard to the person who would most suitably fill the office. It is said that our Irish Catholic representatives in the Government are anxious, in view of the fact that the late occupant belonged to their nationality and faith, that his successor should also be an Irish Catholic, whereas, the French-Canadian champions in the Government, who number three, it is said, want one belonging to that nationality appointed. But if we are to believe the newspapers—I do not mean the Liberal press, but the Conservative press of the province of Quebec—there is some disunion even among the French-Canadian Ministers, and on this subject they are hopelessly divided at the present moment. Again, Sir, we know—and it is no secret—that, in connection with this position, the name of the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) has frequently been mentioned. But it is claimed that there are two reasons why he has not received the appointment: first, the dread of opening the constituency of Cardwell, and second, the opposition of the French-Canadian members of the Government to his appointment. I do not know exactly how much truth there may be in these statements, but perhaps it is but fair that light should be thrown upon the subject, and that some substantial reason should be given why a position of such importance, whose duties require a man of integrity and capacity, should be left vacant so long. But the hon. Prime Minister has just said there is no immediate necessity for filling the position. Perhaps he will tell us that there is no necessity for filling it at all. If the position can conveniently and with satisfaction to the public remain unfilled for two years, it follows that it can remain unfilled altogether. I do not know what the reason for keeping the place vacant may be, but I am simply pointing out some of the causes that may exist. For my own part, pleased as I should be that the successor of the late occupant of the office should be an Irish Catholic—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DEVLIN—yet I would be sorry, indeed, if that was his only claim to the position. I hold that nationality should not be a stepping-stone to any position in the service of this country, but that such position should be given to a man because, as I said a moment ago, he has integrity and capacity to fit him for the discharge of its duties. That is my belief. Yet, because, just now, voicing a feeling in my own heart, I declared that it would give me pleasure if one of my co-religionists and countrymen should be appointed to this office—appointed not because he belonged to my nationality or faith, but because he had the qualifications necessary—hon. gentlemen jeer. That is sufficient to show what their own feelings are; it shows that they are determined that a certain gentleman who has a seat in this House shall be appointed to this position. I can say, Sir, that if that hon. gentleman has the experience and the capacity to fill the position, if he is the best suited for the place, I would be the last to offer a protest. I would be the last to place an obstacle in his way, I would be the first to congratulate him on taking that position. But what I want particularly to point out is this—here is one of the most important positions in the gift of the Government in the province of Québec, which has been left vacant for two years. And why? Because of the divisions existing in the ranks of gentlemen opposite, because of the fear of opening a constituency and the dread of the verdict that might be rendered by the people there.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is true, as the hon. gentleman has stated, that there are several persons whose names have been mentioned who could fill the office quite suitably. Although the time during which this vacancy has remained has not been so great as the hon. gentleman supposes, inasmuch as Mr. Ryan died less than seventeen months ago—yet we, after some consideration further, will probably fill the office by making a selection from among those whose qualifications so eminently fit them for the position. I am sorry that something over twelve months has been allowed to lapse in filling this office, inasmuch as it seems to have occasioned some inconvenience in the county of Ottawa that the post of Montreal should be without a permanent collector. But the hon. gentleman has given me some reasons for further delay. He has indicated that there are divisions in the Cabinet on this question, and that there are fears about opening a constituency and that terrible antagonisms have arisen between the races on this question. With this information—and I must say that these are new facts—I shall certainly take time to inquire further into the case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Government, we have been assured, are a most economical Government, and as it is tolerably clear that the Administration can get on without paying $4,000 a year to a collector at Montreal, now is a grand opportunity for the hon. gentleman to save a couple of thousand—

Mr. LAURIER. Four thousand.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, or the whole four thousand. It is quite clear that this office cannot be of paramount importance to the interests of the great commercial city of Montreal, or we should have heard a great deal more about it, especially as Montreal is very nearly represented in the Cabinet.

Mr. LAURIER. Montreal does not receive very much consideration just now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; but the time is coming when Montreal will receive consideration. But I rise in the interests of economy. The hon. gentleman tells us that there is no urgent necessity for having this place filled, and I think the logical sequitur of that is that the office may be left vacant, and $4,000 a year saved. If the hon. gentleman would do that, I think, he would receive, if not the warm commendations of the people of Montreal, at any rate the approval that he is so anxious to get from all fair-minded men, as showing that he is actuated by a desire to avoid needless expenditure.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Probably gentlemen opposite would like the Government to adopt the same plan as the Ontario Government adopts in such cases. They reserve appointments for two years or more, and then appoint two officials instead of one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are capable of that, no doubt.

Mr. COATSWORTH. They really are capable of it, no doubt. They divided the office of registrar in Toronto and appointed two registrars; they divided the office of sheriff, and appointed two sheriffs; they divided the office of county crown attorney and appointed two of those officers, whereas in each case one officer could have done the work at a saving to the province of an immense sum of money.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am a little surprised at the remarks of my hon. friend. What he says shows that the city of Toronto must be growing to require such additional service. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring before this House a question to which on previous occasions I have drawn its attention, that is the question of the system of superannuations now existing in this Dominion. On previous occasions I have pointed out the vicious features of that system as administered for the last twenty-two years; and I have shown clearly that the manner in which it has been administered has not been in the interest of the country; that the provisions of the statute have been virtually openly violated; that the whole system has been administered for party ends and purposes, and at an enormous annual cost to the people of this country. Last year I presented a statement which showed the number that had been superannuated each year from the inception of the Act down to the last year. I also pointed out a great many names of individuals that had been placed upon the superannuation list, and had been drawing enormous sums, whilst they had virtually paid little or nothing into the fund out of which those who are superannuated would draw their annual allowance. I consider it my duty to keep this question before the House and before the country, with the view of urging it home forcibly and pointedly upon this House and upon the consideration of the Government, until the system is obliterated from the statutes of this country, and until our civil servants are made to understand that they will have to provide for themselves the same as other officials throughout the Dominion. Now, I am not going to make an extended speech upon this question. I am going to present facts and figures, and I shall then leave the members of this House as well as the people of this Dominion to draw their conclusions from those facts and figures, and with regard to which I invite the attention of every Minister as to their correctness, and leave them to judge whether the Act is properly, prudently and economically administered. The Act was introduced in 1871 under the Administration of Sir John A. Macdonald, when Sir Francis Hincks was Minister of Finance. That Act, on its inception, provided for a very respectable reduction being made from the salaries of civil servants in order to produce the sum necessary to meet the demands of those who would afterwards be superannuated. For three years there was deducted from the salaries of civil servants 2½ per cent for all those who received a salary of $600 and less; and 4 per cent for all those who drew salaries of over $600. For the first three years of the system the balance was on the right side of the ledger; but at the end of that period. Sir Leonard Tilley, for reasons best known to himself, for reasons best known to the Government of which he was a prominent member, struck off 50 per cent from the deductions that were made from the salaries of civil servants, reducing the amount very materially. From that day down to the present, the balance has been transferred to the wrong side of the ledger, and an increasing amount has been paid out from year to year, until last year over $200,000 of the people's money were paid to members of the civil service who have been superannuated, more than they had paid into the fund. Now, I will read the amounts for each year :

Year.	Receipts.	Expen'ture.
1871	$49,470 50	$ 12,880 49
1872	53,213 80	38,842 81
1873	54,757 30	53,026 12
1874	34,620 18	64,442 84
1875	36,678 71	71,371 85
1876	38,476 00	101,627 16
1877	40,890 26	104,826 99
1878	41,856 62	106,588 91
1879	41,959 20	113,531 63
1880	43,531 80	116,391 75
1881	44,995 80	147,362 10
1882	46,426 39	160,319 95
1883	46,372 03	186,236 67
1884	51,882 21	192,692 70
1885	52,701 33	203,636 21
1886	57,075 43	200,655 25
1887	62,600 96	202,285 85
1888	62,945 72	212,743 72
1889	63,031 46	218,933 65
1890	61,513 05	241,764 66
1891	62,824 60	241,110 49
1892	63,862 79	253,679 88
1893	64,433 27	263,710 15

Now, in the twenty-two years, the entire receipts were $1,175,119.41, and the expenditure was $3,508,661.83, leaving a balance over receipts of $2,333,542.42 that has been paid out under the head of superannuations, or $106,070.11 of an annual loss under the operations of the Act. Now, Sir, the next question to which I shall direct attention is that of salaries paid to the inside and outside service. The number of servants in the inside service is 865; in the outside service, 3,543; in all, 4,408, as by a return recently laid on the Table of the House. That includes all who contributed to the superannuation fund. The wages paid are $3,587,639.36. The average salary of all those in the civil service, inside and outside service, who contribute to the superannuation fund, is $813.89. The gross salary of the inside service at Ottawa is $1,025,242, or an average of $1,185.68, or nearly $100 per month. In the outside service, which consists of 3,543 officers, the salaries paid amount to $2,564,397, or an average salary of $723.79. The total number on the superannuation list on 30th June, 1893, was 551. Of those superannuated, 173 were under the age of 60; there were 73 under the age of 50. There are on the list 30 under 50 years, 55 under 55 years, and 96 under 60; or in all, 45 per cent of the present superannuated officers are under the age provided by the statute. The statute provides that the superannuated officer shall be 60 years of age, unless on account of illness he is compelled to apply for superannuation, and then he is eligible for superannuation, but there is that number I have mentioned under that age. The Government superannuated last year in the face of the enormous drain on the resources of the Dominion caused by the operation of this Act, and in face of the feeling regarding it, 51 officers more, at an annual cost of $28,353. These men will continue to draw that sum as long as they live, and it will add to the amount we paid last year, so that very nearly $300,000 will have to be paid out under the Superannuation Act if a considerable number of those on the list do not drop off before that period. There have been some notable cases of superannuation, and I ask hon. members to permit me to refer to some of them. There is the notable one of Mr. Vankoughnet, who was superannuated at the age of 57. His salary was $3,200 annually; the allowance given him under the superannuation system is $2,112, and Mr. Hayter Reed, who was Indian Commissioner in the North-west, has been installed in the position at a salary of $3,200. I am aware that the Minister of the Interior endeavoured to show that money was saved to this Dominion by the changes he had made with respect to those two officers, but I defy any Minister or any hon. member to prove that by the superannuation of officers money can be saved under the system of superannuation, unless on the principle that when a man obtains employment in this Dominion as a civil servant, the Dominion is bound to provide for him during the balance of his life. That is the only principle on which it can be claimed that a civil servant is entitled to superannuation. I contend that within the four corners of the Act you cannot find any provision from which you can extract such meaning as that a man once in the service of the country as a civil servant can claim to be provided for during the balance of his life. There is another feature to which I wish to draw attention, and that is with respect to the average salary paid to the officers. Hon. members cannot mention any other class as well paid as are civil servants; there is no other class which receives as large an average salary, taking both the inside and outside service. School teachers, who are highly educated, certainly do not receive an average salary of $800 or $830, ministers do not get an average salary of that amount, or bank clerks, wholesale clerks or retail clerks. There is not a class in the Dominion to-day which per capita is as well paid and has as short hours and as easy work as the civil service of Canada. I ask hon. members on what principle can any man undertake to justify a system that is calling on the people of the country out of their means to contribute to a fund to provide a living for men who have been amply paid for their services during the time they have been employed in the Dominion, and have received an ample sum to meet their necessities after retirement from the public service. Of course the superannuation system is an old one in England. I admit that, and it was no doubt transplanted here as a system that has been in force in England for a long time. But hon. members will find that the superannuation system of England does more than sustain itself. It has not been made a drain on the people's resources, the civil service contributes most satisfactorily to keep the balance on the right side. Had the system here been so conducted as to deduct from the salaries of the civil service a sufficient amount to meet the demands on the funds, no one would have found fault; if they liberally contribute to the payment of the superannuation fund there is nothing further to be said; but when the country is called on to contribute such enormous sums as it has been during recent years, it is time in the interests of the tax-payers that we should really consider the whole system and decide that it should be wiped off the Statute-book of the Dominion as a measure that the country cannot afford to support or continue. I desire to point out to the House the objectionable features of the system. I contend it has been grossly abused by the hon. gentlemen opposite. They have taken advantage of the clause of the Act which provides that no man shall be superannuated under sixty years of age except for sickness or similar cause. No doubt the Government are troubled with a number of needy followers, as are probably all Governments, and the Government are desirous of finding those men resting places, and in order to meet their urgent demands a number of men thoroughly capable of performing their duties have been superannuated in order to create vacancies that might be filled by needy heelers of hon. gentlemen during the last fifteen years. Take the case of Mr. Lamothe, postmaster at Montreal. He had served seventeen years. He had received a salary of $4,000 annually for seventeen years, which represented the respectable sum of $68,000, and after seventeen years the Government added eight years to his time of service. That was done to enable Mr. Lamothe to draw an increased amount of superannuation allowance. If he had only drawn for seventeen years it would have been only seventeen-fiftieths of his salary, or $1,360, whereas he received twenty-five-fiftieths by having eight years added to his salary. They gave him $2,000 a year for a retiring allowance. Mr. Dansereau, who was a very intimate and bosom friend, and I dare say politically an advantageous one of hon. gentlemen opposite (particularly of Mr. Chapleau, the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec), got the office of postmaster in Montreal, and he is drawing $4,000 a year. Mr. Lamothe is drawing $2,000, and the result is that $6,000 is being paid there in place of $4,000. Then, Sir, let us take the case of Mr. Robert Wallace, formerly a postmaster of Victoria, B. C. We have it on authority that cannot be denied that Mr. Wallace strenuously resisted being superannuated, but the place was wanted for Mr. Shakespeare, who was once a member of this House—and I am casting no slur on Mr. Shakespeare, for he was a very respectable member of the House, and we all liked him when he was here. However, he wanted the place, and in order to find him one Mr. Wallace, who served fifteen years, was superannuated, and eight years added to his service. Mr. Wallace was retired at a pension of $1,050 a year, and Mr. Shakespeare appointed at a salary of $2,000. But it appears that Mr. Wallace was not satisfied with his pension, and every year since we have an item of $240 in the Estimates for that gentleman in order to stop his mouth, I presume, and to entirely console him for the loss of his job. This gentleman is, I understand, living in England, drawing the money of the Dominion, and spending it outside of the country, and there are about twenty of the superannuated officers who are doing the same thing. We have also the case of Charles Thibeault, who was appointed in 1880 to a position in which he had to do nothing, namely, secretary of the Board of Dominion Arbitrators. He held that position for nine years, at $2,000 a year, drawing $18,000 for his nine years, and then he was superannuated at the age of 49, getting nineteen-fiftieths of his salary, or $759.96 a year. He appears to have been a bosom friend of some member of Parliament, or of some Minister, for he exercised a powerful influence, and that influence secured for him the addition of ten years to his time of service. I have not been able to trace Mr. Thibeault's history, but I have not the slightest doubt that if we knew what he is doing now, we would find him discharging duties of very considerable importance to hon. gentlemen opposite as an act of gratitude and thankfulness for the favours bestowed on him, and which he is reaping year after year. There were eighty-seven persons placed on the superannuation list by hon. gentlemen opposite, during the last twelve years, who are drawing over $1,000 a year. Out of the 551 on the superannuation list on the 30th of June, 1893, hon. gentlemen opposite have superannuated 430 since the year 1882, and from the year 1879, up to the present time, hon. gentlemen opposite have superannuated 483, which leaves only 68 who have been superannuated by all other Governments, so that this Government is virtually responsible for the entire list as it now exists, save and except sixty-eight names. For the year ending 31st of December, 1893, they have added to that list fifty-one names, and during the year they gave a gratuity of $750 to one man who was retired, and $100 to another. The average amount drawn by each one on the superannuation list at the present moment is $478.60. Now, Sir, I have presented this statement with the view of bringing this whole system prominently before the House and before the country. I charge here that the system has been grossly abused, and that hon. gentlemen opposite have from year to year superannuated men who resisted superannuation. In order to make room for those who are pressing their services upon the Government, they force these men, by means best known to themselves, to apply for superannuation, and today these men are walking about the streets of the Dominion, drawing allowances, when they should be discharging their duties to the country. I contend that the labouring classes in this country, the poor mechanic, who has got to work hard to earn a living for himself and his family, the labouring men and the farmers of this Dominion, who are struggling hard with the difficulties that are now staring them in the face, should not be called upon by the Government, through taxes on every article of clothing that they wear, every article of food they consume, and every implement they use on their farms, to contribute a percentage to keep a horde of 551 men idle, and drawing $270,000 a year from the public treasury. It is a gross fraud and gross injustice to the tax-payers of this country, to ask them to consent to the perpetuation of this system, and I am quite sure that the people have so woken up to the pernicious character of this system that they will insist upon having the law wiped from the Statute-book. I have no desire to make a party issue of this question at all. I do not deny that during the Mackenzie Government names were placed on the superannuation list, but I say that no matter what Government has assisted in perpetuating this principle of superannuation that the system is wrong, and that the country should be relieved from the burdens imposed upon it by the manner in which this Superannuation Act has been administered for the last twenty-three years. I feel satisfied that the people of this country will demand that this Act be wiped out, and that the civil servants shall be left to provide for themselves. I wish, Sir, to place in your hands the following resolution:—

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved:

That during the last fiscal year the amount collected by the Government from members of the civil service under the Superannuation Act was $64,433.17, whereas the amount paid by the Government to members of the civil service superan-nated under the said Act was $263,710.15: that the enormous discrepancy between the revenue collected and the expenditure incurred under the said Act attests that the same has been administered by the Government in a loose, extravagant and unjustifiable manner, and in the opinion of this House the system of superannuations, as now established and administered ought to be abolished.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, the subject which the hon. gentleman has just brought before the House is one of very considerable moment—of such moment that I think it ought not to be dealt with by a motion of this kind. The superannuation system is one to which this House has been committed for a great number of years. It is a system under which it may be said that great vested rights have been established, and it ought not to be dealt with, and cannot be dealt with, in the manner now proposed. I have for one come to the conclusion, having watched the subject during the period that I have been in Parliament, that this system is open to so many defects and is liable to so many abuses, that, while on the one hand it may be said to be very advantageous to the public service, on the other hand the defects in it almost counterbalance those disadvantages; and, speaking on behalf of the civil servants themselves, I think, from inquiries which I have made, that I am justified in saying that they on the whole would just as soon that it were abolished, and that they should be allowed to make their own terms with the various companies and institutions, by which at a lower rate they could obtain advantages which on the whole would be greater than those they now receive. When a man who has been in the service for a great many years happens to die, his family loses all he has paid into the superannuation fund during the period that he has contributed; and if a man should leave the service at any time before his superannuation is due, he also is liable to lose all he has paid. With the many opportunities now open to civil servants in the way of insurance, paid either at death or by endowment after a period of years, they can absolutely secure themselves against any loss such as they are liable to under the present superannuation system. Of course, those few who attain the requisite age, or who, to serve some public or political interest, are superannuated, derive great advantage from the present system; but, taking the whole body of the civil service, from the period they enter until they leave, either by death, by superannuation or by choosing some other mode of life, I think they would prefer to be allowed to spend the money they now pay to the Government in making their own arrangements to provide either for their old age or for their families after their death. But this is not a matter that we can deal with off-hand by a motion of this kind; and while I am prepared on the proper occasion, when the subject can be thoroughly discussed, to support a properly considered measure for either doing away with or amending this superannuation system, I certainly will not commit what seems to me to be the absurdity of voting for a motion which does not deal in a proper manner with the question. I think the system of bringing in motions of this kind is one that should not be countenanced, and, while agreeing with the intention of the hon. gentleman, I certainly cannot vote for a motion brought forward in this way.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. Speaker, in seconding the motion of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I desire to refer to the favour which it has received, as regards its principle, from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, but who objects to it mainly as a matter of procedure. I think that on a resolution of this kind the principle of system attacked could be very well discussed; and the claim that the Act has been administered in an improper manner by the Administration seems to me to be a sufficient plea on which to base a resolution in amendment to going into Committee of Supply. That the Act has been administered in a loose and improper manner has been demonstrated both in Parliament and in the press for a great many years. Almost every year we have had discussed in this House or in the press, the cases of individuals who have been superannuated against their will and under circumstances, which to say the least, were a straining of the law. No one proposes to disturb any vested rights which may have been established by the contract entered into between the present members of the civil service and the Government of the country. I hope the time is long distant when any member of this House will support any proposition affecting the vested rights or interests of any civil servant or any other person in this Dominion. Those who favour the abolition of the present system of superannuation propose to leave entirely undisturbed those in the civil service who desire to continue under the provisions of the Act; but under any reasonable legislation that may be introduced here, it will be open to them voluntarily to surrender their rights under that Act, and to accept some compensation, thus relieving themselves from its encumbrances as well as its advantages. Not long since, in a discussion of the subject it was claimed by the First Minister that in reality the Act was a measure of economy. Certainly we would have considerable curiosity to see how that could be made out, in the face of the calculations presented to the House by the hon. member for North Wellington, not only this session, but last session. He has shown, and the public accounts show, that since the institution of this superannuation system, the receipts from the civil servants have been $1,175,119; and had those receipts, with a reasonable amount of compound interest, been returned to them, equitably and fairly, no one could possibly object to such an administration of an Act providing for the old age or the ill-health of the public servants. When we find that in addition to that sum the Government has supplied to these individuals from the ordinary sources of revenue, the additional sum of $2,333,542, it becomes a serious question for every taxpayer to consider as to whether that money is reasonably or otherwise expended. It becomes his duty to inquire into the economic or moral effect of an expenditure of this large sum of money, either with regard to the better administration of the Government service or the effect upon the political morals of the members of the Administration or the members of the civil service. Last year the total sum of superannuation allowances paid was $263,710, and the receipts, through the deductions made from the salaries of civil servants, amounted to $64,433.37. But in addition to these sums paid under the Civil Service Superannuation Act, we must remember that Parliament provides annually for a considerably large payment in the way of pensions to judges and other pensioners on the public purse. In every instance, except in the case of the judges, these pensions are for special services rendered to the commonwealth, and we all recognize the propriety of rewarding eminent public servants, or of compensating those who have suffered on behalf of the public, by some special consideration. The question as to the pensions of the judges may be open to discussion upon other grounds. The high position they occupy, the dignity with which they ought to be surrounded during their term of office, would render it extremely inconvenient and improper that, through failing in worldly circumstances, they should afterwards be subjected to the indignity of extreme poverty. As a protection to public dignity and honour—to men occupying so exalted a position—the question of pensions to judges would perhaps not come under the invidious remarks which may be made with regard to pensions to ordinary civil servants. We have in the Dominion over five hundred superannuated civil servants. If they were drawing from the state an equitable sum divided upon equitable terms, perhaps so much objection could not be raised; but as has been pointed out by the hon. gentleman who preceded me, these sums are divided up without regard to any law and on the most inequitable principle possible. Take a civil servant who has worked faithfully for ten or fifteen years and who, for some trifling offence, is suspended or dismissed—and we must take into consideration in discussing this question not merely the letter of the law, but human nature and the circumstances of our political life; and it is useless for any hon. gentleman to deny that those circumstances form a powerful lever in the prosperity or otherwise of civil servants. A civil servant who is known to be hostile to the party in power lives under apprehensions which are not felt by his fellow-officials who are known as strong supporters of the policy of the Administration; and, as has been practically admitted, an offence which would not call for censure or dismissal, in the case of the one, would cause, if made in the case of the other, instant dismissal. Let us look at the penalty which the latter is made to suffer by the administration of this law, an administration which can be scarcely called into question owing to the difficulty of procuring evidence. An offence is committed, which, in the case of an indulgent administrator, would be passed over with a slight censure; but if the offender is marked out for vengeance, or his place is wanted for some hungry supporter of the Administration, that light offence is punished by dismissal. Not only is the dismissal from present employment the penalty for an offence, which, if committed by another, would not be considered of consequence, but the offender loses all that has been deducted from his salary, during his long service, for the superannuation fund. Take another case, that of a public servant who has served faithfully and well, but whose place is required. The law contemplates, in the opinion of any person who reads it in the spirit in which it was intended, that all civil servants should be undisturbed, and should have the feeling that they would be undisturbed, so long as they were able to fulfil their duties. The spirit of the Act, I contend, was to enable the Government, when a civil servant reaches the age of sixty years and shows signs of breaking up or inability to perform the duties of his office, to superannuate him at his own request or at the option of the Government. But to meet cases where the age of sixty had not been attained, but where ill-health had evidently prevented the individual from fulfilling faithfully and well the duties of his office, the Government are allowed a certain latitude, and this is just the portion of the law which has been administered by the Government contrary to its spirit. We have a case before the House at present, in addition to those alluded to by the hon. member for North Victoria. We have the case of one of the most eminent officers of the Crown in the Dominion, in which case the correspondence has been laid before the House, and we find that this gentleman, who was distinguished for his ability, the late Assistant Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, was superannuated against his wish, upon grounds against which he protested. The Government was deprived of his valuable services, while he was still able to render them, and another officer appointed to fill his place at the same salary, and he was superannuated on a salary of over $2,000 per year. This shows the manner in which the spirit of the law is evaded, although the letter is kept. I will read the correspondence with regard to this dismissal, as a sample of a large quantity of the correspondence, which, if produced before this House, would show a very similar state of affairs existing with regard to other officers whose places are required for some reason or other. The late Deputy Superintendent General was discharging the duties of his office last summer, when he received the following letter from the Government, through the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, who happens to be the Minister of the Interior:—

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR,
OTTAWA, 28th June, 1893.

DEAR MR. VANKOUGHNET,—In watching closely the affairs of the Indian Department and the management of its branches for some time past, I have come to the conclusion that some radical changes are needed, and I have contemplated making such changes as will reduce the staff and consequently the expenses. Now, while thinking these matters over, I cannot help stating that I have for some time also noticed that your health is failing and that you have no longer the vigour of intellect which has characterized you in the past. I may say that hitherto, when the question of your superannuation was mooted, I took care to speak of you as you deserved, in as fair and friendly a light as I could, for that you have been a most zealous, faithful officer no one who knows you well can deny; but I am now forced to the conclusion I have come to after a very calm and full review of the whole circumstances as regards the Indian Department.

Your long services entitle you to full superannuation, and I know Council will willingly grant the same. In making this intimation, I desire to say that our relationship has been most cordial, and I reciprocate your kind offices to me since my occupancy of the position of Superintendent General. I really think that what I now write you is in your own interest, and that, especially from a health point of view your retirement from office will be beneficial to you. I must say that my convictions are firm in this matter, and not arrived at without mature consideration. In stating, therefore, in this friendly and private way that I am prepared to accept your request for superannuation, I am quite sure you will not disturb our cordial relations by refusing to act in accordance with my wishes—a course which would really be of no benefit to you. I also desire to say that I would like you to take the necessary steps in the matter with as little delay as possible, and whatever memoranda to Council are necessary I would be glad if you would have prepared at once. Again assuring you that this letter is not dictated with any hostile feeling or unfriendliness, and trusting that you will regard my request in a right spirit,

Believe me,

Dear Mr. Vankoughnet,

Yours faithfully,

T. MAYNE DALY.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if ever there was a piece of impudent bulldozing of a public official who is guaranteed by the laws of this country and by the spirit of our institutions to remain undisturbed in his office until some legal difficulty arises because of which he can be properly dismissed, or until he himself voluntarily applies for superannuation, it is to be found manifested in this document. Every line of it reads threateningly, and, when I read to you the reply of the gentleman whose office was wanted, you will see how he repudiates in the strongest terms the imputation of failure of intellectual powers contained in this letter. This letter shows that the civil servants are completely under the control of the members of the Government in these matters, that they do not, in fact, hold their office during good behaviour, but that they may at any time be disposed of, and the people of the country suffer through their being disposed of in this way whenever their offices are wanted. This letter bears upon the face of it the declaration of the fact that the place was wanted and that the reasons given here were not the real reasons which actuated the Government in this matter. I have looked carefully over the report of the Department of Indian Affairs, which I see was closed about the middle of January of this year, and neither in that report nor in what I have heard of the proceedings of this House is there any intimation of any extensive changes in that department necessitating the removal of this superintendent. However, perhaps, when the estimates for this department come up, we can ascertain to what extent the department has been reorganized that this change was made necessary. Mr. Vankoughnet replied to this letter as follows:—

OTTAWA, June 29th, 1893.

DEAR SIR,—Yours of the 28th inst. received and contents fully considered. In reply, I would state as respects any measures which you may consider it advisable, in the interests of economy, to adopt in the future management of this department, I shall be happy to assist you. With regard to your statement that for some time you have noticed that my health was failing, and that I had no longer the vigour of intellect which characterized me in the past, I have to say that I never was in better health than I am now, and have been for the past nine months—since, in fact, I returned to duty last autumn after an absence of sick leave, the same having been only the second of such absences during the long term of thirty years service. The vigour of my intellect is amply proven by the immense volume of work that receives attention at my hands daily, as well as by the numerous reports on important matters made to you by me, also by the many reports made by me for your signature, addressed to His Excellency in Council. Moreover, the general management of the department, both in the outside and inside service of it, of which I challenge fair criticism, shows that a vigorous intellect must be the possession of the one who is the presiding genius over it. As far as age is concerned, I am only in my fifty-sixth year, being therefore four years short of the age for superannuation. And as for service I have had but thirty-two years and four months, being two years and eight months less than the term required by the Act to admit of superannuation. I could not, therefore, truthfully apply on the grounds of impaired physical or intellectual condition, age, or length of service, for superannuation

Mr. FLINT.

—even were I otherwise disposed to make such application. I must, therefore, respectfully decline to comply with your request. I reserve for myself the liberty of making such use of this correspondence as circumstances may seem to me to justify.

Yours sincerely,

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy Supt. General of Indian Affairs.

Hon. T. MAYNE DALY,
Supt. General of Indian Affairs.

Now, what was the reply of the Minister to this repudiation of his demand? Here is an officer who has given thirty-two years' service to the country, an officer recognized throughout the length and breadth of the country as primus inter pares of those engaged in the public service, and in the full vigour of health and strength. Did the Minister reply that, notwithstanding this protest, he was certain the officer's health had broken down or his intellectual powers had become impaired? Did he reply that his services to the country were not well performed; that he had violated any of the rules of the department; that he had committed any errors or mistakes; that he had acted improperly in political matters or become a violent partisan of those opposed to the Government? Did he give any good grounds for thus unceremoniously dismissing this capable official? The Minister's reply was an Order in Council upon a memorandum of the Minister, which memorandum I will read and which, it will be seen, drops entirely out of consideration the reason which the Minister laid before this gentleman to induce him to apply for superannuation:

The undersigned has the honour to state, for the information of Your Excellency in Council, that Mr. Lawrence Vankoughnet, Deputy of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, was appointed to the public service of Canada on the 13th of February, 1861, as a clerk in the Indian Branch of the Department of State for Canada; that he became Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs on the death of Mr. Spragge in July, 1874, and was appointed Deputy Minister when the Department of Indian Affairs was separated from the Department of Interior in July, 1880. He has been in the public service for 32 years, and it has become necessary in view of impending changes in the department over which he presides, and in the interests of public economy and efficiency, that he should now be retired.

Not on account of ill-health or impaired mental powers.

The undersigned has therefore the honour to recommend that three years may be added to Mr. Vankoughnet's present term of service, and that he may be superannuated under the provisions of the 11th section of the Superannuation Act.

(Signed) T. MAYNE DALY,
Supt. Gen. of Indian Affairs.

To the Honourable
The Governor General in Council.

The 11th section provides :

If any person to whom this Act applies is removed from office in consequence of the abolition of his office for the purpose of improving the organization of the department to which he belongs, or is removed or retired from office to promote efficiency or economy in the Civil Service, the Governor in Council may grant him such gratuity of superannuation allowance as will fairly compensate him for his loss of office, not exceeding such as he would have been entitled to if he had retired in consequence of permanent infirmity of body or mind, after adding ten years to his actual term of service.

The phrase "to promote the economy and efficiency of the public service" is such an extremely broad one that it would cover almost any possible idea the Minister might have ; it is so broad as to amount to scarcely anything as an excuse. The real reason for this action is not to be sought for in the terms of the Order in Council or in the terms of this correspondence. The real reason must be sought for—as must be apparent from this correspondence—entirely outside. What those reasons are I do not know ; I do not care to inquire ; I have no reason to inquire, because I produce this correspondence, not for the purpose of bringing this particular matter before the House for investigation, but with a view to throwing a flood of light, as I think this does, upon the manner in which the Civil Service Act has been administered by this Government. If this is done in the case of a person of the eminence of Mr. Vankoughnet, much more will they find inferior officers in the public service ready to waive their inclinations, if their places are wanted for others. The correspondence in the report of the Minister of Agriculture shows that Mr. Vankoughnet is superannuated with an allowance of $2,112. The spirit of the Act is that if a person has attained the age of sixty years, or is in ill-health, he may apply for superannuation ; or if the Government are of the opinion that in consequence of incapacity to perform the duties of the office, it is in the interest of the public service that he should be retired, they have power to do so. Now, the large number of civil servants who have been superannuated against their wish, in the full enjoyment of health and vigour, and under the age of sixty years, is another prima facie proof of the loose manner in which the Act has been administered. I have not time nor could I, even had I the material at hand, to go back to 1871 and cover all the time up to the present ; but I find from 1881 to 1891 these facts in regard to the number who have been retired :

Year.	Retired.	Payments per annum.
1881.....	79	$27,207
1882.....	74	34,392
1883.....	64	29,224
1884.....	53	22,000
1885.....	49	18,360
1886.....	38	16,081

Year.	Retired.	Payments per annum.
1887.....	62	28,748
1888.....	65	27,750
1889.....	81	32,989
1890.....	37	15,486
1891.....	65	38,099
1893.....	67	32,689

Of the 551 now living, 173, or about one-third, were retired under the age of sixty, either on their own application, or through force put upon them by the Administration ; and one-eighth were retired under the age of fifty. The argument from the inequitable division of this fund is so apparent that it scarcely needs to be enlarged upon. In all matters pertaining to the payment and the distribution of money for the public or any other service, equitable considerations ought to weigh very heavily ; but we find that owing to the fact that some live longer than others, owing to the fact that some retire comparatively early in life, and others after they attain a greater age, we find that payments for superannuation are very unequal. I take a few samples from the list so carefully prepared by the hon. member for North Wellington last session, to show the great discrepancies between the amounts which these people have paid by way of deductions from their salaries, and the large amounts they have received during their lifetime when they were doing nothing for the service of the country. I know nothing of the gentlemen who are mentioned here, and I do not desire that my remarks should be at all construed as invidious to them personally ; but as regards the official aspect of the case, certainly the Government of the country, or the Treasury of the country, has been treated invidiously. I will read a few cases :

Now, while I make no attack upon these gentlemen for the position which they occupy, I do say that it is extremely inequitable that they should be treated in this manner, when we know that in the case of many gentlemen who have served the Government during the same period and who have died, their families receive no benefit whatever from the sums which they have paid into the superannuation fund. In this particular the present arrangement of the superannuation allowance does seem to me to work great hardship to the families of those who died one or two years after leaving the Government service, or who died in the Government service. With the exception of the gratuity which is generally given to the families of those who die under these circumstances, their families receive nothing, and consequently sums aggregating a very large amount have been paid into the superannuation fund by civil servants, which do not go to their families, but help to swell the amount out of which large sums are paid to the survivors. It is a sort of bogus system of insurance, operating inequitably in every direction. The evils which might arise from the lack of any superannuation fund, or of any pension fund, have been greatly exaggerated by those who support the present system. Of all the Governments in the Dominion, the Dominion Government is the only one which treats its civil servants in this way. The Local Governments have civil servants of great ability, and their service is as well performed as is any service in the Dominion Government. Many of them occupy positions of equal dignity to that of any civil servant of the general Government; and yet in no one of the provinces would any Prime Minister or any Government attempt to establish a superannuation allowance for its civil servants. Throughout all the provinces of the Dominion, every servant of the Provincial Government recognizes the fact that is recognized by every other wage-earner or salary-earner in the country, that out of his annual income he must put aside in some way, either in a savings bank or in an insurance fund, money to provide for his old age, or to provide for his family in case of his death.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Can the hon. gentleman know that the amount earned by the sheriff of Toronto, is over $7,000 yearly?

Mr. FLINT. I am aware of it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Can the hon. gentleman name any civil servant who receives such an amount of salary?

Mr. FLINT. That is not apropos to the present question, for the sheriff of Toronto has not the advantage of a superannuation fund.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The provincial officers get it in salary.

Mr. FLINT. He must provide for his family and his future maintenance.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Does the hon. gentleman want to start the Ontario fight? If so, we will drop the present question, and go at it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. We are ready.

Mr. FLINT.

Mr. FLINT. The servants of the Local Government have no superannuation fund to draw on, nor is any fund of that character proposed. In the cities and municipalities of the Dominion there are officials of the highest talent and intelligence, and possessing the greatest possible degree of efficiency, but they have no superannuation fund. It can hardly be said that this fund has arisen from the necessity of providing for civil servants in their old age on retirement from office. It was an unfortunate step taken in the history of the Dominion when the Civil Service Superannuation Act was placed on the Statute-book. As the Act exists, certain vested interests have grown up, and no one will seek to disturb those interests. We say, however, that in the future let us come down to plain common-sense business principles; let us say to every civil servant that the Dominion will provide him with a good salary, will guarantee that he shall not be dismissed at the whim of his superior, but that so long as he discharges efficiently his duties, whether he is fifty or sixty years of age or more, he shall remain undisturbed, but that every civil servant must take advantage of the resources of civilization and provide for himself and his family out of his savings and by insurance, and in various other ways, and the Government shall not charge itself with his maintenance out of a general fund. Under the present system prizes are undoubtedly drawn by some civil servants who live to old age and receive large sums as superannuation allowances, while in the case of men who die shortly after they are superannuated, their families are unprovided for, and the sum contributed by the husband is entirely swept away. The Finance Minister has stated that this is an economical system, and prevents men who are incapable of remaining in the service, and thus the country has the advantage of more efficient service rendered by new appointees. The hon. gentleman seems to fear that if the superannuation scheme were abolished the public departments would suffer from civil servants who are broken down in health being retained merely for the sake of enabling them to support themselves and their families and thus the Government departments would be overloaded with supernumerary and useless officers. Although there may be a shade of truth in this argument, yet when we understand the actual facts of the case it will be obvious that these results do not occur in municipalities, cities, or under the Provincial Governments. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) showed that men who are efficient and in good health, and are anxious to serve the country, are superannuated for reasons which cannot be given in public, and that others are called on to fill their places, and thus the Government pay for the services of an officer and also the superannuation of a former officer. The abolition of the Superannuation Act would tend to bring about a more healthy administration of public affairs; it would remove from the civil service the apprehension and fear among civil servants that they are constantly liable to be removed; it would tend to remove inequalities of payment for services, and it would tend to increase public morality in the administration of those offices. It is unfortunate that any public officer should be deprived of his office for any reason other than that of inefficiency, and by the adoption of this Act and by its peculiar administration there has been introduced into the public service the opportunity of exercising political influence, which is very undesirable. This undoubtedly is an outrageous system. I do not believe until these discussions occurred in the House, one man out of 500 in Canada knew that the Government was paying out of the general fund into the superannuation fund. Until a few years ago I was under the impression that the money deducted from the civil servants was in some way compounded, and they were simply receiving back in another shape the money they themselves had contributed, and which the Government took the liberty of withholding until they retired from the service. If the amount added was small, there would not be so much to complain of, but when we find that during the period of twenty years the excess has been over $2,000,000, and that the proportion in which it has been distributed has been unfair and unequal, that those who have died have lost large sums, which by right and in equity belonged to their families, I do not think it is fair for the Government any longer to make contributions to the superannuation fund compulsory. If any civil servant is convinced that he can administer his own funds satisfactorily he should have the option of retiring from the superannuation scheme and of drawing out the money he has paid in, together with interest at the regular rate, and of adopting methods to promote his own financial interest in some other way. This would tend to increase circumspection on the part of civil servants, and to place them on the same footing as salaried officers elsewhere. The tendency of the present system is to produce an official class, a tendency which in this new country we do not want to encourage. In the mother country they are accustomed to various grades and classes, which would not be tolerated here, and the fact that an enormous number of citizens are partners with the Government in this superannuation scheme, and are looking to the Government for their future living after they have retired from the public service, is not pleasant either to themselves or the Government generally. Let us abandon the superannuation system as rapidly as possible. Let us place civil servants on their own foundation. The sums invested in the fund would be very much better invested in various associations, such as life insurance companies. For every dollar paid to a reliable endowment or insurance association, they will receive the fullest amount possible under the probabilities of life as calculated by the most competent actuaries. Under the present system, if an official is forced out of the service of the country that a friend of the Administration may succeed to the position, or if he be punished by dismissal for some fancied offence, then we find that he loses all the money that he paid into the fund, in the one case, or in the other case, he draws public money for many years, money to which he is not entitled, and which he has never earned. I approach the subject from an entirely non-political point of view. Expect as regards the administration of this fund, which is a political subject—because the Government become open to attack wherever they have abused the powers given them by the law—there can be no political question involved in this. Before this system is fastened irrevocably on the country, I think the time has come to call a halt, and if the gentlemen who occupy Government offices are not sufficiently paid—and some of them, I know, are not sufficiently paid—then let us increase their salaries. Let us apply this $2,333,000, or the sum which, in the future would represent that, to the advantage of these officials in an honourable manner, while they are in office. It is one of the faults of our civil service system that we find some men receiving very large incomes who are performing a very small amount of work, who have, in fact, a soft thing in official life, while others are labouring in season and out of season in the service of the country, and who have far more responsibility resting upon them, are very inadequately paid. I have in my mind one or two classes of public servants who are doing most valuable work for the people of this country at a salary of from $800 to $1,000 per annum, and who are performing services which would be remunerated in some other department at the rate of $2,000 or $3,000 a year. I think the time has come when there must be a complete revision of the whole salary system of this Government. It is monstrous to think that some 200 or 300 men are receiving from the Government salaries averaging from $2,500 to $3,500 per annum, and who are doing less work than many hundreds of equally gifted and much more industrious public servants who receive, perhaps, $800 or $1,000 a year. I would suggest that those officials who are really doing the work of the public service should be given a substantial living and a guarantee that so long as they perform the duties of their office they will not be disturbed. Diminish the salaries of those officers who have very little to do, and increase the salaries of the more hardworked and more efficient public servants. In this way, you will contribute much more to the efficiency of the public service, to the morale of the public servants, and to the morality of men in public life than you will by leaving the Superannuation Act on the Statute-book, which places it in the power of the administrators to force men out of office who are thoroughly competent to perform their duties, and to promote political friends to positions in the service. In no other department of our public or private life do we find such a system in existence, and that is a strong argument in favour of doing away with it in the Federal service. If the system were thought necessary to the dignity or the welfare of the public service, we would find a demand for it in almost every other sphere of life. We would find it imitated in our municipal and local governments, but no public man would venture for one instant to propose such a system in other spheres of life as we have now in our civil service. Last session the Minister of Finance proposed some modifications of the Superannuation Act. It was passed through this House after a long argument, and after a lengthened declaration by the Finance Minister as to the advantages which he deemed might be derived from its adoption; but I believe that no one has taken advantage of it, and that the civil servants do not wish to have themselves bound down by any new legislation of the kind. Give the public servants salaries proportionate to the work they are called upon to do, proportionate to the responsibilities of their office, and leave it to themselves to do the same as other citizens do, to economize in the best manner possible, to put by their savings for themselves and their families, and not bring the Government any longer into partnership with them as a specially favoured official class in the community.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the motion which has been placed in your hands by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) reads as follows:—

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved:

That during the last fiscal year the amount collected by the Government from members of the civil service under the Superannuation Act was $64,433.17, whereas the amount paid by the Government to members of the civil service superannuated under the said Act was $263,710.15; that the enormous discrepancy between the revenue collected and the expenditure incurred under the said Act attests that the same has been administered by the Government in a loose, extravagant and unjustifiable manner, and in the opinion of this House the system of superannuations as now established and administered ought to be abolished.

You will see, Sir, that this motion in the first place recites certain facts; then it makes certain assertions; and, thirdly, it calls upon the House and the Government for certain redress. Now, if these facts and assertions can be established, I do not see how any member of this House can refuse to vote for the abolition of this system. As for the statement that the expenditure under this Act during the past year has been $263,710, while the receipts have been only $64,433, there can be no doubt; the public accounts show it beyond question. There is no disputing the fact that under this Act, as it has been carried on during the past year, the people of this country have paid in round numbers $200,000 more to the civil servants who have been superannuated than they have received. The public accounts further show that since the time this Act has been in force we have paid out for superannuations more than we have received, $2,333,000. Now, the recital of these facts in itself is sufficient to startle the House and the country, because nobody anticipated, when this Act was put upon the Statute-book, that such results would follow; and we may imagine what is going to be the end of it. We find that during the first three years that this Act was in force the receipts equalled the disbursements; but as the years have gone by, the disbursements have largely increased, while the receipts have not increased in the same proportion; so that, as matters stand to-day, we are actually losing over $200,000 a year. Now, what will be the result, if this is allowed to go on? We find that during the last year there has been an increase in the expenditure under this Act of over $28,000. There are on the civil service list to-day, a very large number of persons, somewhere up in the thousands, who are eligible for superannuation; and if we allow this matter to go on as it has been going on for the last ten or fifteen years, the inevitable result will be that within a few years the loss under the Act will increase to $300,000 or $400,000 a year. Therefore, I think the bare recital of these facts is sufficient to call the attention of the House and the country to the necessity of seeking some remedy for this state of things. Then, if we go on and examine the second part of this resolution, which declares that the administration of this Act has been loose, extravagant and unjustifiable, what proof have we of that assertion? Why, we have only to look at the public accounts to find that they prove conclusively to every person of an unbiassed mind that this assertion is true. When this Act was first placed on the Statute-book, it was never intended that men in the prime and vigour of life should be placed on the superannuation list. It was only intended that men who had long and faithfully performed the duties of their office, who had grown old in the public service, should in their old age have some allowance to retire upon. But we find in the working of the Act that this intention has not been realized. We find that men have been superannuated in the prime of life, in their best days, not for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the service, not on account of any inability or inherent weakness on their part to perform the duties of their office; but simply and solely for the purpose of providing soft places for some needy supporters of the Government. Why, Sir, you cannot look over the list of those who have been superannuated without coming to that conclusion. Let me read a short list of superannuations to show how this Act has been administered. We find that Mr. George Taylor, general freight agent of the Intercolonial Railway, with a salary of $2,400, was superannuated at the age of 60 years, and now draws, and will continue to draw for the rest of his natural life, no less than $1,200 a year of the money of the people of this Dominion. We find that Mr. Trudeau, Deputy Minister of Public Works, with a salary of $6,000 a year, was superannuated at the age of 66 years, and draws $3,756 every year from the people of this country.

Mr. CURRAN. He is dead.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then that is saved; but he drew that for a number of years; it does not alter my argument at all. Then, Mr. H. A. Whitney, mechanical superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway, with a salary of $3,200 a year, was superannuated at the age of only 58 years, and he drew every year $1,280. Mr. A. S. Busby, passenger agent of the Intercolonial Railway, with a salary of $2,400, was superannuated at the age of 54 years, and draws $1,008 every year. Mr. John Tilton, Deputy Minister of Fisheries, with a salary of $3,200 a year, was superannuated at the age of 55 years, and draws $1,536 a year. Mr. Thomas Ross, accountant of contingencies, with a salary of $2,600 a year, was superannuated at the age of 66 years, and draws $1,820 a year out of the people of this country. Mr. Joseph Lesslie, postmaster of the city of Toronto, with a salary of $3,500 a year, was superannuated at the age of 65 years, in the prime of life—an active, stirring, enterprising man—a man who for many long years was able to perform the duties of that office—was superannuated against his wishes and without consultation, and he draws, and will continue to draw every year for the rest of his natural life, $2,450 from the people of this country. Mr. James Johnson, Commissioner of Customs, with a salary of $4,000 per year, was superannuated at the age of 76 years, and draws $2,800 a year from the people of this country. Then another case, with which I am perfectly familiar, is that of Mr. J. G. Pennefather, collector of customs in the town of Chatham, a man who was only 67 years of age when he was superannuated, who had been performing the duties of that office for many years, who was in the prime of life and the best of health, and able still to perform the duties of that position. Yet on the 1st of April, 1892, he was notified that he had been superannuated. He was not consulted, there was no reason given, but another needy supporter of the Government wanted the position, and he was superannuated, and draws $850 a year of the people's money. So I might go on with many other instances to show that men have been superannuated without reason, in the prime of life, and other men appointed to those positions at the same salary. In this way, this enormous charge is heaped up on the people. Look through the list, and what do we find?

Is there any doubt about the manner in which this Act had been administered? Can there be any doubt, when you find men at the ages of 31, 42, 45, 50 and 47—men in the prime of life—superannuated and drawing large amounts from the people and other men performing the duties those superannuated were well able to discharge, that the administration of this Act has been loose in the extreme, extravagant and unjustifiable. The enormous charges entailed upon the people prove conclusively that my statement is correct. If this be the case, is there any reason why we should not provide some redress? The motion now in your hands, Mr. Speaker, does not propose that the civil servants now superannuated should be cut off their allowance. That would be very unfair. But it is proposed that some remedy should be applied. We can stop the evil now better than later on. Every year the evil is growing worse. Last year there were fifty-five persons superannuated, and $28,000 additional charge imposed upon the people; and in all probability there will be $30,000 more next year, and $40,000 the year following. Where is it going to end? Are you going to let the burden become so heavy that the people cannot bear it, before you apply your remedy? Why not apply the remedy now and stop the evil before it goes further? The motion before you, Sir, is that the Act, as now administered, should be abolished. I am heartily in favour of the motion. I believe the time has come when we should lighten the burdens of the people as much as we can. At a time like this, when the cry has gone forth from every municipality and city that expenses should be cut down, are you going to sit idle and not take any step to crush out this evil which is growing to such an enormous extent? I am surprised the Government has not proposed some remedy by which this evil could be minimized or abolished. I have had a seat in this House eight or nine years, and do not remember a session in which this matter has not been brought forward, or in which the Opposition have not pressed it upon the attention of the Government. But the Government seem blind to the state of affairs, they have not moved one hand or finger to stop the evil, and I think my hon. friend for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) deserves the thanks, not only of this House, but of the whole country, for bringing up this matter. I was somewhat amused at the position taken by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). He admits that this matter is becoming a great evil, but refuses to vote for the abolition because it has been proposed in the way it has. I wonder how the hon. gentleman would like to have it introduced in the House. The Government seems blind and impotent. They do not take one step to redress or remove the evil that is fastening itself upon the people, and therefore it is all the more to the credit of the hon. member for North Wellington that he has brought this matter forward, that he has pointed out the enormous evil which is increasing under this Act, and has called upon the House for redress. I think it is the bounden duty of this House to pass the motion now in your hands, Sir, and leave to the Government of the House to suggest some remedy. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) interrupted the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), when my hon. friend from Yarmouth was referring to a most flagrant case. Take the case of Mr. Lesslie, ex-postmaster of the city of Toronto, who had been superannuated against his will in order to make place for Mr. Patterson, a Tory heeler, and late editor of the 'Mail' for the great services he had rendered during the campaign of 1878. When my hon. friend pointed out that Mr. Vankoughnet was superannuated, at a salary of $2,112 per year, the hon. member for East Toronto asked if he was not aware that the sheriff of Toronto was in receipt of a salary of $7,000 a year. But let me call the attention of the hon. member to this fact, that if the position were divided among two or three sheriffs, that would not lighten the burden of the people.

Mr. COATSWORTH. We want two or three sheriffs made into one.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The sheriff is paid by fees, and it is a positive fact that not 4 per cent of the people of Ontario pay a dollar towards the salary of the sheriffs and registrars.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You may say "Oh," but it is a fact, and I defy you to contradict it. The salaries of the sheriffs and registrars in Ontario are paid by fees, and it would not make any difference if there were half a dozen sheriffs, the people would not pay any more. The hon. gentleman is very sensitive, but he had not a word to say against the sheriff of Toronto as long as a good old Tory had the place, but when Mr. Mowat was appointed he began to find fault. I am glad to say, however, to the credit of Mr. Meredith and all the Conservatives of the Lower House that every one urged that appointment upon the Government of Ontario. There was not a single man in the Legislature of Ontario that did not urge Sir Oliver Mowat to make this appointment, and it was only at the earnest solicitation and request of the whole party that he appointed him. And, Sir, it is to the credit of Mr. Meredith and his friends in the Legislature that they took the position they did. They recognized the services of that grand old man, who has done more for the province of Ontario than any man in Canada to-day. Where would the province of Ontario have been to-day had it not been for the grand old man, Sir Oliver Mowat? Sir, he has had to fight the enemies of Ontario, not only in the House, but out of the House. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) was loud in his denunciations of the course pursued by Sir Oliver Mowat. But it was only by persistent fighting in the courts, from tribunal to tribunal until the Privy Council itself was reached, that Sir Oliver Mowat secured for Ontario 97,000 square miles of territory, which the Conservatives would have taken from our province. And, not only that, but after the courts had decided that the jurisdiction over this territory lay with Ontario, Sir John A. Macdonald, with the approval of every Conservative in the province, declared that not a single pound of ore, not a single stick of timber in that territory should ever be owned by our province.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I am attempting to show the inconsistency of the hon. member for East Toronto. He would strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. He denounces the action by which the sheriff of Toronto gets $7,000 a year, but he has not a solitary word to say against Mr. D. O'Connor getting $20,000 a year.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am referring to the argument of the hon. gentleman, and I seek to show his inconsistency. Mr. O'Connor does not get superannuation, I think, and I am showing that though Mr. O'Connor receives nothing from the superannuation fund, he got $20,000 last year from the Dominion Government, and yet the hon. member for East Toronto does not say a word about it. Nor does he say a word against Mr. Choate receiving $25,000.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order, order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your decision.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me it is quite pertinent to discuss these matters, in answer to the speech of the hon. member for East Toronto. In going into Supply, we are allowed wide latitude of debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. member for East Toronto is very ready to interject remarks, especially when he thinks he can make a point in his own favour. I remember the hon. gentleman speaking here very loudly for prohibition, and then voting against it. It was a moment of weakness. I dare say. He is subject to those moments of weakness. He had them this afternoon, when he interrupted my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). But, Sir, the importance of this question, involving such large sums of money, and involving also the wise and just administration of the civil service of this country, can hardly be exaggerated. The present administration of this system adds enormously to the burdens of the people, and the evils now existing call loudly for redress at the hands of this Government and this Parliament. And I believe that, if the Government do not take steps to abolish this iniquity and reduce the expenses of Government, and thus lighten the burdens of the people, the people themselves, when they have an opportunity, will condemn this Government, and place in power those who will lighten the burdens of the people. I have great pleasure in supporting the motion now in your hands.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the House, but I want to say one or two things about this motion. I complain that so important a motion is brought forward in this manner. If my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) meant business, if he meant to do anything in the way of economy, would he bring this motion forward in such a form that every Conservative in the House must vote on it as a want of confidence motion? I denounce this motion as a piece of buncombe, and the action of the hon. member for Wellington as the action of a political mountebank. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me point out—

Mr. LAURIER. Order, order.

Mr. DAVIN. That is not out of order. Let me point out—

Mr. LAURIER. I call the hon. gentleman to order. Surely he is not allowed to use such expressions.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What did he say?

Mr. LAURIER. He called the hon. member a political mountebank.

Mr. DAVIN. If I am unparliamentary, I will withdraw, but I did not say the hon. gentleman was a political mountebank. What I said was that his action was the action of a political mountebank, and I submit that there is a perfect distinction between the two. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. LAURIER. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman had better withdraw the words.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the words. I will say this: that my hon. friend from Wellington is not a political mountebank—and I hope the House and the country will agree with me. Now, Sir, the hon. member for Wellington has a Bill on the paper providing, actually, for the continuation of the superannuation system, the funds being taken from the civil servants as they are taken now, and handed back to them when they leave the service. And yet he brings forward a motion asking for the abolition of the whole system, a system which he seeks to continue by means of a Bill on the paper. I do not know whether the language I used before was parliamentary or not, but I wish I could invent some language that would be parliamentary and would fittingly characterize conduct of that kind. I am with the hon. member for Wellington or with any other hon. gentleman in this House in favour of any reasonable course in the direction of economy. At this time, I think we ought to do all in our power to lower the expenses in every direction we can consistently with the best interests of the public service. If the hon. member had put a motion of this kind on the paper, and brought it forward as an ordinary motion, we might have considered it, and who knows but we might have voted with him? But instead of that he comes forward with a motion that is intended to sound in the ears of the people like a motion for economy, but he puts it in such a form that it is really a want of confidence motion, and unless we are to place the administration in the hands of such as the hon. member for Wellington et hoc, we have to vote against this motion in order to keep the control of affairs in the hands of the present Government. There is no step, in my opinion, that can be taken at present in the direction of economy, that we should not be ready to take. I am in favour of cutting down the expenses in all directions in the management of our inside and outside civil service, and I will go to any length with any man on either side of the House in limiting the expenses of carrying on the affairs of this country. I am sorry, however, that my hon. friend for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who poses here, forsooth, as a reformer and an economizer, has put a motion on the paper for no other purpose than to delay us at this late period of the session, flaunting before the eyes of certain portions of the people a bogus resolution. Is that unparliamentary?

Mr. LAURIER. I think it is.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, if the hon. gentleman thinks so, I will withdraw it. But anyway, Mr. Speaker, there is no word, bogus or otherwise, that I think will translate in a manner sufficiently strong what will be the sentiment of the country in regard to bogus resolutions of hypocritical reformers such as the hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is not my intention to delay the House more than a few minutes. I am not going to make any observations in reply to the hon. member who has just addressed the House. There are certain facts stated in that resolution which, in my opinion, are not likely to be controverted. The one is that the contributions to the superannuation fund by the parties interested, amount to something over $60,000 a year, and that the charges upon the fund amount to somewhat over $260,000 a year. It is well known to every hon. gentleman in the House that when the superannuation system was introduced in this country, the House was assured that the deductions made from the salaries of those on whose behalf this fund was established, would be adequate to meet the charges that were required for retiring parties whom it was necessary to retire from the public service. Now, Sir, there is nothing in the resolution which declares that no provision for the superannuation of parties is necessary; it does not say that some other alternative scheme may not be submitted to Parliament. On the contrary, my hon. friend who has introduced this resolution and who has submitted it to the consideration of the House, has also proposed to Parliament a Bill making provision for those in the public service, which Bill is, in my opinion, and in the opinion of many hon. gentlemen in this House—I may say, I believe, in the opinion of all the hon. gentlemen who belong to the Opposition—a preferable mode of providing for parties whom it is necessary to retire from the civil service, to the one which is now in operation; and it would charge upon those who are specially benefited, the burdens that would be necessary to maintain some public provision for those engaged in or retired from the public service. But, Sir, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing this measure at this late period of the session. We shall to-morrow enter upon the fourth month of this session, and hon. gentlemen know how very little has been submitted to our consideration, that in fact the whole session has been taken up with the consideration of the tariff measure, which withdrew taxes imposed upon the people of the country, and reimposed those taxes again. Now, I am certain that no hon. gentleman can say that failure to progress with the work of the session, has been due to anything that has transpired on this side of the House; and under other circumstances I would not trespass upon the indulgence of the House upon this occasion. But I wish to call the attention of the House to a party who has been retired under the provisions of that statute which my hon. friend has attacked by his resolution; I invite the attention of the House for a few minutes to the superannuation of the recent Deputy Superintendent of Indian Affairs, Mr. Vankoughnet. I moved some time ago for a return, and that return has been brought down, and has been read, I believe, by my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) this afternoon. Now, if the correspondence submitted to the House and read by my hon. friend, was a complete statement of the case of Mr. Vankoughnet, I would not trouble the House with any observations on the present occasion; but it is because it is not a complete return of the correspondence that took place between Mr. Vankoughnet and the Government, that I invite the attention of the House to the subject. Mr. Vankoughnet complained to the predecessor of the present Minister of the Interior, after he had had a serious attack of the grip, that his health was somewhat impaired, that he was troubled with dizziness, and by momentary unconsciousness, or semi-unconsciousness, which alarmed him. He consulted two eminent physicians of this city, Sir James Grant and Dr. Church, who advised him that complete rest for some little time was necessary for his restoration to health. They informed him, after careful examination, that he was not suffering from any organic disease, but that he was overtaxed by work and severe mental labour, and that absolute rest for some little time was necessary for his restoration to health. These facts were stated to Mr. Vankoughnet's superior, the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and according to the correspondence placed in my hands, Mr. Vankoughnet asked the Superintendent General for leave of absence for a period of four months. It seems to me that that was not an unreasonable request on his part, because, although he had been in the public service for upwards of thirty years, during those whole thirty years he had obtained leave of absence on only one occasion, and I believe at that time I was myself Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. I may say that Mr. Vankoughnet went for, I think, a period of three or four weeks down to the Maritime Provinces, and although he went upon leave of absence, he discharged important duties connected with the department; he made inquiries into various Indian reservations that had been held under the Governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, ascertained their extent and so on, reported that to the department, and brought them for the first time after the union under departmental control. Now, after Mr. Vankoughnet applied for leave of absence, he did not receive any answer from the Government or from his chief, as to what action the Government had taken with regard to the matter. And so after again speaking to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs on the subject, he received a written statement from Mr. Dewdney as to the actual circumstances. Mr. Dewdney said :

There is, I find, some hitch in your application for leave of absence. It was taken up by the Treasury Board and held over, and on inquiry from members of the board, I was told that it was thought from the state of your health, you should send in your application for superannuation. I thought I would let you know where the delay was.

Yours sincerely,
E. DEWDNEY.

From that statement it is pretty clear, although it is not expressed in so many words, that the Treasury Board was not likely to come to such a conclusion respecting a public officer who had been for a long series of years faithfully engaged in discharging public duties, a request based on ill-health, and unquestionably a well-founded request, unless the Superintendent General himself had been rather disposed to concur in the view expressed by the Treasury Board; yet it is not stated in this communication that any such desire existed on the part of Mr. Dewdney for the superannuation of Mr. Vankoughnet. To that note Mr. Vankoughnet made the following reply:—

June 8th, 1892.

DEAR MR. DEWDNEY,—Thanks for your note of this date informing me that the members of the Treasury Board had told you, on your making inquiry of them, relative to my application for leave of absence, that it was thought that from the state of my health I should send in my application for superannuation. In reply I beg to state that I shall certainly not apply for superannuation, as my medical adviser is of opinion that I only require change of air and rest for a few months and I then shall be restored to health.

My age is only fifty-three years and eight months, being three years and four months short of the age at which I would be eligible for superannuation.

I have retained a copy of this letter.

I remain, dear Mr. Dewdney,

Yours sincerely,
L. VANKOUGHNET.

So it will be seen that at that time Mr. Vankoughnet had no desire to be superannuated, and from the advice given to him by his physician it was, so far as his health was concerned, wholly unnecessary, and that all that was required was rest in order to restore him to his ordinary good health. Subsequently it seems that Mr. Vankoughnet in discussing the question with Mr. Dewdney was advised by Mr. Dewdney to take his leave of absence, to go to Europe as he had been advised to do, and that he would again submit the matter to the Government and obtain for him the leave of absence which he had requested, and which Mr. Dewdney professed himself to favour. Mr. Vankoughnet had gone to England, and had been away, I think, something short of two months, he received from the Government, or at least from his chief, a telegram as follows: "Two months leave of absence from 7th June," the period at which leave granted was expiring, and just as Mr. Vankoughnet was leaving England for the continent this telegram was placed in his hands. It had been sent to the care of Sir Charles Tupper at London, and was forwarded by him to Mr. Vankoughnet. Mr. Vankoughnet telegraphed back to Dr. Church to Ottawa, stating that he was slowly improving, that he had had several relapses, that the Government had granted the two months instead of four months, and he asked Dr. Church to see Mr. Dewdney, his chief, with respect to the matter. From Switzerland that telegram was sent on 3rd August. On 20th August, Mr. Vankoughnet wrote Mr. Dewdney the following letter:—

August 20th, 1892.

DEAR MR. DEWDNEY,—Your cable message informing me that two months leave from 7th June was granted me was forwarded from the office of the High Commissioner to the "Hotel Grand," London, where I had been staying, and from there to me. I cabled Dr. Church on the 3rd inst., as he is the medical examiner of the Civil Service, and had likewise attended me when I had a severe illness after two attacks of the grip, of which I have now is also the result, that although slowly improving I have had several relapses; and to see you with a view of having the original leave applied for granted.

Doctors Church and Grant recommended mountain air and a sea voyage. The latter I had in crossing the Atlantic. It was too cold this season in the Highlands of Scotland to go there, I therefore came on to Switzerland under medical advice. I am thankful to say I am improved and am improving in health and expect to return quite restored and able to resume my duties.

I do not see why there should have been, or should be any hesitation in granting me the four months leave after my length of service (thirty-one years), more especially when over one year's leave was granted to Mr. O'Reilly, Indian Reserve Commissioner for British Columbia, whose term of service was comparatively short; and Dr. Power, late Indian Superintendent for British Columbia, was also granted a lengthy leave.

Yours sincerely,
L. VANKOUGHNET.

Mr. O'Reilly had not been in the public service three years at the time that long leave of absence was granted. Yet here was a public servant against whom no charge had been made of dereliction of duty, who after thirty-one years of service had been advised to leave Ottawa by his chief because leave asked for would be granted, and after he was on the other side of the Atlantic he was informed that his leave of absence was within four days of its expiration. Hon. gentlemen will thus see how Mr. Vankoughnet was dealt with; I am not now speaking of the present Minister of the Interior, but of his predecessor. I need not refer to the medical opinion obtained in Mr. Vankoughnet's case. Dr. Taylor, of London, and others who concurred with them stated that Mr. Vankoughnet was not afflicted with any organic disease unfitting him for the public service, but that he was suffering from severe mental exhaustion due to being overtaxed in the discharge of his duties and that a little longer rest would completely restore him to health. There was opinions expressed also by Sir James Grant and Dr. Church—I will not trouble the House by quoting all these opinions—who concurred in the opinion expressed by Dr. Taylor as to Mr. Vankoughnet's ailment and they all go to show that Mr. Vankoughnet was not suffering from any mental decay and that he was not any less qualified for the discharge of his duties apart from over-exhaustion than what he had been at any previous period of his life. On 22nd October, 1892, there was submitted the following report:—

The Treasury Board has under consideration a memorandum from the Honourable the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs recommending that Mr. L. Vankoughnet, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, be, on the ground of ill-health, granted a further leave of absence for a period of ten months, dating from the 7th August, 1892.

The Treasury Board regret that they are unable to submit the memorandum for favourable consideration of Council.

Although Mr. O'Reilly after three years service was given twelve months leave of absence, Mr. Vankoughnet after thirty-one years of service was only given two months leave of absence; and although his physicians reported that his health was improving and that it would be assured with a little further rest (not to the extent of ten months, but to any period whatever) that was refused him altogether.

Mr. MARA. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has stated twice that Mr. O'Reilly was only in the service three years. I think the hon. gentleman is in error. Mr. O'Reilly was in the Dominion service since Confederation, and in the provincial service before that some ten or fifteen years; about thirty-five years altogether.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not know how long he may have served the Local Government. Mr. O'Reilly may have been a police magistrate in the district, but he was not given leave of absence as such. Mr. O'Reilly comparatively had no duties to discharge, until after 1879 when he was appointed for the first time as a member of the staff connected with the Indian Department, and I am perfectly well aware of what I am speaking when I say so. He was appointed by Sir John Macdonald, after Sir John Macdonald became Premier in 1879.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. MARA. Yes; but will the hon. gentleman allow me for one moment. When British Columbia entered Confederation, Mr. O'Reilly occupied the position of stipendiary magistrate, and he was then appointed county court judge and acted as such until these judges were abolished. He was then in receipt of a pension of two-thirds of the amount of his salary, but upon receiving an office under the Indian Department his pension of course ceased. He was in receipt of, I think, nearly $2,000 under his pension, and he only received a thousand a year additional when he entered the service of the Indian Department.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not discussing the question as to what duties, other than as an officer of the Indian Department, he had. I know that as an officer of the British Columbia Government after British Columbia came into Confederation, his duties were next to nothing. We had that question discussed and it was universally admitted, not only by the representatives of British Columbia, but by the Ministers of the Crown at the time, that he was pensioned under an arrangement made with the British Columbia Government at the time British Columbia entered the union. Subsequent to that he was appointed an officer in the Indian Department. His appointment was as distinct from any office that he held before as if it were given to any other party, and I am calling attention to the fact that he received that long leave of absence shortly after he entered upon the duties of that office in which his duties were not at all onerous; while a faithful servant of a public department after thirty-one years service was denied anything like a similar concession. Now, Mr. Speaker, next follows, on the 28th June, 1893, the letter which my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) has read, but which I will read to the House again, as a necessary part of this transaction. This is the letter by the present Minister of the Interior to Mr. Vankoughnet. The hon. Minister says:

After watching closely the affairs of the Indian Department and the management of its branches for some time past, I have come to the conclusion that some radical changes are needed, and I have contemplated making such changes as will reduce the staff and consequently the expense.

Now, Mr. Speaker, nobody would complain of the Minister undertaking to accomplish that end. The question is as to the means by which that end was to be accomplished, and whether it is better to dismiss an old officer, upright in the discharge of his duties, against whom no charge of misconduct at all events had ever been made; or whether there could have been better dispensed with the service of officers who have been appointed to offices the propriety of whose existence in the first place may have been questionable, and the continuation of which was admittedly unnecessary. The Minister continues:

Now, in thinking these matters over, I cannot help stating that I have also for some time noticed that your health is failing, and that you have no longer the vigour of intellect which has characterized you in the past.

According to this statement of the Minister of the Interior, Mr. Vankoughnet had been once possessed of a vigorous intellect, but that vigorous intellect was no longer his.

Mr. DALY. Exactly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, Sir, the physicians were of a different opinion.

Mr. DALY. They were in the office with him every day and knew all about him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And the Minister further writes :

I may say that hitherto when the question of superannuation was mooted, I took care to speak of you as you deserved.

To whom did he speak ? I suppose to the hon gentleman's colleagues at the Treasury Board who refused the leave of absence.

I may say that hitherto, when the question of your superannuation was mooted, I took care to speak of you as you deserved, in as fair and as friendly a light as I could, for that you have been a most zealous and faithful official no one who knows you well can deny. But I am now forced to the conclusion I have come to, after a very calm and full review of the whole circumstances as regards the Indian Department. Your long services entitle you to full superannuation.

Well, Mr. Vankoughnet did not get full superannuation. Why he did not the hon. Minister will be able to explain, but as I understand it he did not get it because he did not acquiesce in this proposition :

Your long services entitle you to full superannuation, and I know Council will willingly grant the same.

I suppose the hon. gentleman knew it because it had been discussed. It had doubtless been said that if Mr. Vankoughnet would retire, the number of years necessary to give him full superannuation would be added to the time of his service.

In making this intimation, I desire to say that our relationship has been most cordial, and I reciprocate your kind offices to me since my occupancy of the position of Superintendent General. I really think that what I now write is in your own interests, and that especially from a health point of view, your retirement from office will be beneficial to you. I must say that my convictions are firm in the matter, and that arrived at without mature consideration. In stating therefore in this friendly and private way that I am prepared to accept your request for superannuation, I am quite sure you will not disturb our cordial relations by refusing to act in accordance with my wishes,—a course which would really be of no benefit to you.

And it is shown by the fact that full superannuation was not accorded.

I also desire to say that I would like you to take the necessary steps in the matter with as little delay as possible, and whatever memoranda to Council are necessary I would be glad if you would have prepared at once. Again assuring you that this letter is not dictated by any hostile feeling or unfriendliness, and trusting you will regard my request in a right spirit.

I do not remember, Sir, ever having read a letter by a superior which was of a more threatening character than the letter I have just read. From beginning to end the hon. gentleman says in effect : Now, Mr. Vankoughnet, take care ; don't you offend me ; you know I am your friend just now, and don't you delay in this matter ; hurry up and tender your resignation at once ; a few years will be added to your time ; I know my colleagues will make no objection, and if you have any regard for your own interest, comply with my wishes ; I have been your friend as much as Codlin ; but if you expect to keep me your friend, just do as I request you. Mr. Vankoughnet was not disposed to be bullied in that way, and to this threatening letter on the part of the Minister he writes the following letter, dated the 29th of June, the next day :—

DEAR SIR,—Yours of the 23th inst., received and contents fully considered.

In reply, I would say that as respects any measures which you may consider it advisable, in the interests of economy, to adopt, in the future management of this department, I shall be happy to assist you.

With regard to your statement that, for some time you have noticed that my health was failing, and that I had no longer the vigour of intellect which characterized me in the past, I have to state that I was never in the enjoyment of better health than I am now, and have been for the last nine months—since, in fact, I returned to my duties last autumn, after absence on sick leave ; the latter having been only the second of such absences during the long term of thirty years' service.

The vigour of my intellect is amply proven by the immense volume of work which receives attention at my hands daily, as well as by the numerous reports on important matters made to you, also by the reports made by me for your signature to His Excellency the Governor General in Council ; moreover the general management of the department both in the outside and inside service of it, of which I challenge fair criticism, shows that a vigorous intellect must be the possession of the one who is the presiding genius over it.

I am only in my fifty-sixth year as far as age is concerned, being four years short of the age for superannuation.

And as for service, I have had but thirty-two years and four months, being two years and eight months less than the term required by the Superannuation Act.

I could not, therefore, truthfully apply on the grounds of impaired physical or intellectual condition, age, or length of service for superannuation, even if I were otherwise disposed to make such application.

I must, therefore, respectfully decline to comply with your request to do so.

I reserve to myself the liberty of making such use of this correspondence as circumstances may seem to me to justify.

Now, Sir, when that letter was written, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, I think, was acting Premier. Sir John Thompson was absent in Europe, and the subject seems to have remained in abeyance until the First Minister's return. On September 30th, 1893, the present Minister of the Interior wrote to Mr. Vankoughnet the following letter:—

DEAR SIR,—I have to inform you that to-day Council adopted the report of the Treasury Board, passed at its last sitting, and by which report I find you have been superannuated. By the same report and minute of Council, Mr. Hayter Reed, Indian Commissioner, has been appointed as your successor.

As I leave for Montreal early Monday A.M., I thought it only right you should get the information first through me.

I presume the duties of your office ceased to-day.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) T. MAYNE DALY.

On the receipt of that letter, Mr. Vankoughnet, it seems, addressed to the hon. Minister of the Interior this communication, dated October 2nd, 1893:

I received this morning your note of the 30th ult., informing me that an Order in Council had on that day been passed superannuating me, and appointing Mr. Hayter Reed in my place, and that you presumed the duties of my office ceased on the day you wrote. I have to state that after the receipt of your note I ceased to occupy my position as Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

The Order in Council, signed by the Clerk of the Privy Council, it is not necessary that I should read. But I have brought to the attention of the House the various steps that were taken before the present hon. Minister of the Interior accepted office, with the view of removing Mr. Vankoughnet, and no doubt making those changes which the hon. Minister now occupying that position subsequently carried into effect. But, Sir, I call the attention of the House to this fact, that a public officer of good standing, who long occupied the position of Deputy Minister, and who for a long series of years was connected with the Indian service—one who from his position, apart from any abilities which he may have possessed, and from his long experience, must have been in the nature of things better qualified to undertake the ordinary duties of the office than any newer incumbent could possibly be—was forced to retire. Now, Sir, the ground given for the removal of Mr. Vankoughnet was impaired health. Mr. Vankoughnet denies that his health was impaired. He maintains that after his return to office he was as well qualified to discharge his duties as he was before; that he was never better qualified to discharge his duties than he was at the time he received the notice that he had been superannuated; and that so far was he from being in arrears with any work in the department that there was absolutely nothing that had been brought under his attention that had not been dealt with and disposed of before that notice was received. And so the changes which the hon. gentleman has made, which are being excused on the ground of economy, have all been changes growing out of necessary appointments in that department. I am not saying that these unnecessary appointments were made by the hon. gentleman himself; but I say that they exist. I take the case of the retirement of Mr. Sinclair: I understand that he readily acquiesced in his superannuation, but he did not ask for it.

Mr. DALY. He did.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Perhaps he was asked in the same way as Mr. Vankoughnet; perhaps there was an intimation made to him.

Mr. DALY. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has appointed nobody in Mr. Sinclair's place except Mr. Scott.

Mr. DALY. By promotion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But Mr. Scott was taken into the department before. Has Mr. Scott had any one appointed to succeed him? The hon. gentleman could have had no necessity for Mr. Scott until the retirement of Mr. Sinclair, and when Mr. Sinclair was retired, of course there was a place existing for Mr. Scott. But if Mr. Scott had not been pressed into the public service before, in all probability Mr. Sinclair would not have been on the retired list to-day. I think that the facts connected with this case, which I have mentioned—and I might have said much more with regard to it, but I do not wish to trespass upon the time of the House—go to show that the Superannuation Act has become, as it is now carried out, an excrescence in our system of Government, and a nuisance that must be abated, because every day persons are driven out of the departments and put upon the pension list, when, if they are not worthy to remain in the public service, they should have been retired in some other way.

Mr. DALY. In reply to the hon. gentleman who apparently holds a retainer for Mr. Vankoughnet, and has been loaded up by that gentleman from his side of the question, I will not take up the time of the House at any great length in replying to some of the statements made by the hon. gentleman. In the first place, as to the question of superannuation, it is in the recollection of hon. gentlemen who were here a year ago, that the Minister of Finance made a very exhaustive speech then, and showed to the House and the country what had been done by the several Governments which had been in office since Confederation. And in that speech my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, proved conclusively that hon. gentlemen opposite did not practice what they preached. It is one thing to be economical when out of office, to pretend to do all sorts of things when out of office, but when these hon. gentlemen get into office, they take an entirely different course. I will commence at where the hon. gentleman left off—the superannuation of Mr. Sinclair. The hon. gentleman says—with what knowledge I cannot understand—that Mr. Sinclair did not apply for superannuation. I reply that Mr. Sinclair did apply for superannuation. His superannuation was entirely brought about at his own request; and the reason he gave was that he could no longer remain in the department under Mr. Vankoughnet, on account of the irascible temper of that gentleman and the way he treated all his subordinates. In fact, I am informed, they led a dog's life. As to Mr. Vankoughnet's health, the hon. gentleman read my letter, which is couched in as friendly terms as possible under the circumstances, and he quoted Mr. Vankoughnet's reply, to the effect that his health was as good as ever it was. The hon. gentleman also quoted the doctors' report, to show that Mr. Vankoughnet's health was as good as ever. Possibly Mr. Vankoughnet might have been able to eat three square meals a day, and his health was apparently good; but his health, so far as his temper was concerned was very much impaired indeed. And in addition, I am prepared to show, what I have stated in my letter, that Mr. Vankoughnet's intellect was not as bright as it was. More than that, I could establish if necessary, to the satisfaction of this House, that, apart from the question of economy, it was in the interest of the public service that Mr. Vankoughnet should be removed. And there has been no removal of any public official, in my knowledge, that has given such universal satisfaction to the members of the House and the people who had to do business with the department. I will clinch the matter by saying that if I had known as much of the administration of Mr. Vankoughnet as I have learned since he was superannuated, I would have recommended his dismissal, and he would have been dismissed instead of being superannuated. Mr. Vankoughnet is not satisfied with being treated as a gentleman, and getting his superannuation, but he comes here and loads up the hon. gentleman for Bothwell with his grievances. All I can say is that it might have been well for Mr. Vankoughnet to leave the matter as it was. The reason given in the Order in Council for his superannuation was that it was required on the ground of efficiency and economy. I have shown by the figures I gave, which it is not necessary to repeat, that we have effected a large economy by superannuation.

Mr. McMULLEN. You cannot prove it.

Mr. DALY. When we effect an economy, we are berated for doing so. There is no means of satisfying hon. gentlemen opposite, but I say that we have effected an economy amounting in round numbers to $12,445.

Mr. McMULLEN. I say you have not.

Mr. DALY. You do not know anything about it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman exhibits the same ignorance in this as he does in every matter he discusses in this House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You have inherited Mr. Vankoughnet's temper, I fear.

Mr. DALY. I have effected that economy; and in addition the department is now conducted in a way indeed that reflects credit, not only on the gentleman who occupies Mr. Vankoughnet's position, but also on the officers under him. No doubt this question will be gone into again when we come to the Estimates, and it is unnecessary to enlarge further except to say that Mr. Vankoughnet's superannuation was not brought about for the purpose of placing Mr. Reed where he is, but simply because Mr. Vankoughnet was not conducting the affairs of the department in the way they should have been. And as I have said before, if I had known as much as I have learned since, by investigation, of the manner in which Mr. Vankoughnet had conducted his department, instead of recommending his superannuation I would have recommended his dismissal.

An hon. MEMBER. Why?

Mr. DALY. Before I sit down—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is not going to make that statement and leave it there?

Mr. DALY. I am, and I am going to leave it there. If Mr. Vankoughnet, through his counsel, wants to find out the reason, I will give it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is hardly fair to accuse the hon. member for Bothwell of being the counsel for Mr. Vankoughnet.

Mr. DALY. I apologize for the expression—

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member has no right to use language which implies that the hon. member for Bothwell is in any sense an advocate or counsel for Mr. Vankoughnet.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has apologized.

Mr. DALY. I was going on to say that I had forgotten one fact. According to the letters read by the hon. gentleman from myself to Mr. Vankoughnet and his reply, that correspondence took place in June. The superannuation took place in October, if I remember aright, and the reason as mentioned by the hon. gentleman was the correct one, that the then acting Premier did not feel like acting in the matter until the Premier returned. Just as soon as the Premier returned, the matter was taken up by the Treasury Board and Mr. Vankoughnet was superannuated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am extremely sorry to hear the language used by the Minister of the Interior with respect to Mr. Vankoughnet. It is a most grave thing, particularly after an officer has left the service, for the Minister in charge of his department—and a Minister of no very long standing—to state of an officer, who, we believe, had discharged his duties faithfully and well, who for the matter of that, the Minister himself admits had discharged his duties faithfully and well for nearly a quarter of a century, that he is now of the opinion that he would have dismissed Mr. Vankoughnet with ignominy from the service, if he had known as much about that gentleman as he does now.

Mr. DALY. Not about the gentleman, but about his mode of conducting affairs. I have nothing to say personally about Mr. Vankoughnet at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman intended to say nothing personally against Mr. Vankoughnet, he has taken a very unhappy mode indeed to convey his intention to the House. It is the duty of the hon. gentleman—having made such a statement publicly against a man who is not in this House, who had been held, so far as we have heretofore heard, a very faithful servant—to state explicitly on what grounds he made that very extraordinary statement, in order that the party accused may have, as is his right, an opportunity when his former chief makes such a charge against him, of giving such answer in his own defence as he sees fit. And I trust, in the interest of the public service, and in the interests of the Minister himself, that he will not be so far false to the duties of his office as to rise in his place and make a charge without at the same time giving, in reasonable detail, his reasons for making it.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. Minister wishes to make any statement—

Mr. DALY. No; I do not.

Mr. CASEY. I understand the hon. Minister to say that he does not intend to make any further reference to the matter. Then I think the Minister will find himself in a very unfortunate position before all those who value straightforward and fair treatment of a prominent and long-trying public official. When the hon. Minister makes such a statement as he has made and says he will leave it there without further consideration, he is taking advantage of his position as a member of this House, to shelter himself from the consequence of a statement which is libellous if not warranted by the facts. He made a statement likely to damage the character of Mr. Vankoughnet as much as it is in his power to damage it by any statement. And he makes that statement knowing that the privileges of this House protect him from any proceedings on the part of Mr. Vankoughnet, and yet he refuses to make any explanation that would justify that angry remark of his. Now, Sir, his whole speech can hardly be said to have been characterized by the good temper and spirit of fair play with which a matter of this kind, affecting a leading public official, should have been discussed. He begins by insulting the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) by saying that that hon. gentleman held a brief for Mr. Vankoughnet and had been coached by Mr. Vankoughnet for his speech.

Mr. DALY. I stated what I knew to be true.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister says that he stated what he knew to be true.

Mr. DALY. I might say in explanation that I saw Mr. Vankoughnet talking with the hon. member for Bothwell for some considerable time in the library. I think that is fairly good evidence of the truth of the statement I made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think that is any evidence that I was either Mr. Vankoughnet's counsel or his advocate. I have certain public duties to discharge. In order to assist me in discharging them I moved for a return, which return was ordered by this House. The hon. gentleman brought down a return, but it contains only part of what was ordered. Many of the documents in this case that ought to have been brought down were not in the return. The hon. gentleman disobeyed the order of the House.

Mr. DALY. I think I have the right to explain. I did not disobey the order of the House. I brought down all the papers that related to Mr. Vankoughnet's superannuation. The papers from which the hon. gentleman has read I never heard of before. They have been given him by Mr. Vankoughnet.

Mr. CASEY. It appears that there was an Order in Council among these papers which the hon. Minister says he never heard of before. That is a very peculiar state of things.

Mr. DALY. That order was passed long before I took office.

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps the hon. Minister is not familiar with all the letters he himself has written on the subject, and, therefore, may not have seen some of these papers which were brought down and which any one would imagine he must have known all about. At all events, my hon. friend from Bothwell, in his criticism here to-night, made use, for the material parts of his speech, only of documents brought down by the order of this House and independent of any coaching he could have received from anybody. The attempt to discredit the motives of my hon. friend from Bothwell for the reason that he had been seen in consultation with Mr. Vankoughnet is simply part and parcel of the misguided course, to call it by no harder term, the hon. Minister has pursued. This case, Sir, even if the answer to the attack in regard to it had been conducted in the proper spirit and with the ordinary decency of debate, would have remained an epitome of the very worst evils connected with the superannuation system. It is proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that a man in good health and of good intellect was removed arbitrarily from his office to make room for a favourite of the new Minister of the Interior, a gentleman whose experience will not compare for one moment with that of the man whom he replaced and who is open to criticism in other respects, or was open to criticism a few years ago, in connection with some matters discussed after the late rebellion in the North-west. But as these matters would compel allusions to a form of clothing more appropriate to cold weather than this, I will not make the House uncomfortable by dealing with that any further. At all events, the new broom in the person of the Minister of the Interior made a clean sweep of the most experienced official he had in his department in order to take a new and inferior man in his place. The hon. Minister says that he has shown or intends to show that there was an economy of $12,000 to the country through this superannuation. If he can show that from the public figures, he will show himself a real conjuror with figures. He has not shown it yet; we shall see what transmutation of figures he can compass in the future. But, apart from the unfortunate tone the hon. Minister has managed to import into the debate, we should discuss the question of superannuation coolly and calmly, and I shall try to do so, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's attempt to give the debate a different tone. I do not intend to go into the question fully, because sufficient has been said, I think, by those who preceded me to show that the system of superannuation as it now exists ought to be abolished, as called for by the terms of the motion. While I agree with my hon. friend from Wellington in saying that the present system should be abolished, I do not mean to say that any gentleman in the service should be deprived of any rights he may have acquired under the Superannuation Act. I am satisfied that my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) does not mean any such thing, as he has given proof of his good faith in that respect by introducing a Bill for the treatment of civil servants in case the system should be abolished. I will read a clause or two. After providing that the Superannuation Act shall not apply except as hereinafter provided, the Bill proceeds to enact:

Any person now in the permanent Civil Service of Canada and having contributed to the superannuation fund shall be entitled to elect whether he shall retain his right to superannuation under the provision.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot discuss any item on the Order paper that is not before the House.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit that I am merely adducing this as proof of my argument on the question before the House. However, I am aware—from what source is immaterial—of the views of the hon. member for Wellington on this subject. Those views are that members of the civil service who have contributed to the fund should be allowed to choose, within twelve months, whether they will accept the provisions of a different system or retain the privileges they already have. His opinion is that it would be better for the country and the service generally if, instead of the present superannuation system, the representatives of any public servant, at his death, or himself, on superannuation, should be paid the amount of the deductions made from his salary, with interest at 5 per cent, and that for the future the deductions should be made as at present from the salaries of all new nominees, and should be retained and repaid at superannuation with interest at 5 per cent, instead of the present provision made in that regard. I do not intend to discuss, in detail, whether those views are altogether the best; but I do agree with the hon. member in saying that the present system, as administered, is not wise or economical. It is not good for the public servant, it is not good for the public treasury. Let us consider, for example, the condition of a gentleman placed as Mr. Vankoughnet was placed, on the approach of the age when he might be superannuated without cause, who is at the same time subject to arbitrary superannuation without cause, and in defiance of the law, at the caprice of the Minister. The state of mind of such a public servant, feeling that the least passing attack of illness, the least fit of ill-temper, as alleged in the present case, or the least obstruction to his ordinary activity as a public servant, might subject him to an immediate and arbitrary superannuation, and subject his family to the loss of income on which they depend—his state of mind under those circumstances could be nothing but mental torture, and must often lead to the development of serious illness, and incapacity from a slight attack. Now, that alone, it seems to me, is a reason why superannuation should not be left in this position of uncertainty and dread, dependent upon the caprice of the head of the department. That dependence is hurtful to the discharge of public duty. The man who feels his dependence strongly, who has given numerous hostages to fortune in the shape of a considerable family depending upon him, may, if he be not a very strong, independent man, become the mere tool and slave of the head of his department, contrary to the public interest. On the other hand, the pretense that any economy can be produced for the benefit of the public treasury by a system of superannuation, is shown to be absurd by the figures already given from official sources during this debate. These facts appear to have impressed themselves upon the minds of the Government a year ago, when they introduced as a partial substitute for the present system, an Act to provide for Government insurance of civil servants. That Act provides that the Minister of the department may enter into a contract of insurance with any public servant, of course on the usual conditions as to health, &c., and that a table of rates should be compiled by Her Majesty's Institute of Actuaries in Great Britain. Now, it was especially with regard to this Act that I intended to speak. I wanted to ask the Minister of Finance, who probably has this in charge, what progress has been made in putting this Act into force. I see the Act provides that the superintendent of insurance should report each year to the Minister how many such contracts had been made, and all particulars in regard thereto. I want to ask, in the first place, whether the necessary tables and other arrangements preliminary to entering into the insurance business, have been compiled; whether the regulations governing the insurance of civil servants have been authorized, and to what extent the Act has been taken advantage of. As the law provides that this report of the superintendent should be made within three months after the 1st of July, it is probable that not a great many contracts had been entered into before that time, if any; but it is very likely the Minister, having had notice of this motion coming up, would have applied to the superintendent for information up to date, although his annual report would not contain much information on the subject. I have no doubt that, in view of the discussion, he has provided himself with something to that effect. Then, Sir, with regard to this system of Government insurance, there may be room for discussion as to whether it is wise for a Government to enter into competition with other insurance companies in this business, or whether they should, instead of insuring public employees themselves, demand that their employees should take out a policy in the regular insurance companies, and deduct the fees for such policy from the salary of the employees in question. But the Government have chosen to offer themselves a cheap form of insurance to their employees, and I do not question that that is perfectly regular and proper. I do think, however, that the contract, instead of being permissive, as it is under the Act, should be made compulsory in the case of all nominees henceforth to the public service, and that it should take the place entirely, of the present arrangements for superannuation in the case of all entering the service since the date of that insurance Act. Besides securing to civil servants in this way provision for old age or against sickness, this process would ensure, to the benefit of the public, the general good health and soundness of constitution of those who enter the service. That is a point on which, I think, we cannot be too particular. We do not want to be loaded up with numberless invalids in the civil service, as used to be the case in the old country, and has, perhaps, at some periods, been the case here and elsewhere. We ought to select young men for our public service, who will, in all probability, live out a long and useful life in the service. In this way, the requirement of entering into a contract of insurance, and the consequent medical examination and certificate, would be a great protection to the public as well as an advantage to the civil servants themselves. I would, however, suggest that the range for policies for contracts framed by the Act, is rather small. The minimum is $1,000, and the maximum $2,000. If the calculations on which the tables are based are correct, the maximum might be put as high as the civil servant's resources would allow him to make it, without any risk of loss to the treasury. Again, there is no provision in the Act as to what will happen in case the assured leaves the service for any reason other than that of misconduct. I am at this moment considering this Act as a substitute for superannuation. The general answer made to all proposals to abolish superannuation is: if you do that, there is no provision for the civil servant in his old age. The hon. Finance Minister has himself provided a substitute, and I am inquiring as to its working. I do not think these contracts in regard to insurance should terminate on the civil servant leaving the service. Something also might be carried out in the nature of endowment, the amount to be paid at a certain date or at death. I am particularly anxious to know what has been done in regard to this matter, as it may prove a solution to the whole question, and I intimated to the Minister in the course of the afternoon that I intended to ask him on these points. I do not know whether he is able to give the information or not, but I shall be glad to obtain all the information available.

Mr. SCRIVER. Before this question is disposed of, I ask permission to say a few words. I was a member of this House when the law providing for this fund was introduced; I may say I took some brief part in the discussion which preceded its enactment, and I remember very well some arguments that were used in support and in defence of the measure at that time. I remember one thing said was : that the fund would not be a source of expense to the country, that the contributions under it to be exacted from civil servants would provide for the charges upon it in behalf of those civil servants. Well, how lamentably, after a period of twenty years or more, the predictions made with respect to the law in that respect have failed to be realized has appeared in the statements which have been made to-day. Instead of the contributions meeting the charges, those contributions are now only $60,000, while the charges are $250,000, and from what has taken place during the last few years we have every reason to suppose that this deficiency will become more and more exaggerated as time progresses. In that respect I think the law is very faulty. But I thought then, I think now, that the law is exceedingly faulty in another respect. I felt then, as did many other members of the House, that we should go further in this legislation than we did, that instead of merely providing for the civil servants themselves, we should do something for their families. I remember with what eloquence, I may say pathos, this view of the question was urged by Hon. Mr. Joly, with an eloquence and force peculiarly his own. He argued at every stage of the measure in favour of such a provision as this being made, and I think it was a mistake that it was not made. I remember the main defence for making the law what it was made, that it was not intended as a fund for the benefit of families of civil servants, but was intended for the civil servants themselves. I remember hearing the late Sir John Macdonald repeat that statement more than once, not only when the Bill was introduced and became law, but at subsequent periods when it came under discussion in the House. The opinion I entertained then has been strengthened by some incidents in my experience as a member of this House and as a representative of a constituency in this Parliament which have taken place since then. I have known of some instances of great hardship, some instances that have appealed to my own sympathies, and no doubt to the sympathies of my fellow-members in the history of civil servants, who have died prematurely and died without making provision for their families, instances that have come within my observation. I have known families that have lived years in comparative comfort left by the death of the head of the family without any resources. I know it is quite common to sneer at civil servants; I will not say sneer, but to say, as I have heard many say, that those men should make provision for their families, that they are generally in the receipt of comfortable salaries, and if gifted with that prevision and caution they should be gifted with, they would make provision for their families, apart altogether from any consideration with respect to the fund which provided for themselves individually. But I have seen in my experience here enough of the peculiar influences that surround civil servants from their earliest years until their latest ones to make great allowances. I need not detain the House by going into any particulars with respect to this matter. There is no member of the House, who has been a member, as I have been, for a quarter of a century, but who must have had his attention called to those peculiar features in the life of civil servants which lead us to feel a good deal of sympathy with them, and to be disposed to make a good deal of allowance for their failure to lay up provision for the future of their families. I would repeat that I still feel, as I felt when this measure first became law, that a mistake was made in not extending it further than it was extended. Before I take my seat I desire to say a few words with respect to another feature of this discussion, the superannuation of Mr. Vankoughnet. I was sorry to hear the Minister of the Interior indulge in the tone he used with respect to that gentleman. I have the fortune, good or ill, to represent a constituency in which there is a tribe of Indians. Well, on the whole it is perhaps a piece of good fortune to have Indians in the constituency which a member represents, for while it entails a good deal of trouble on him it gives him an opportunity to do good, and there is something after all interesting in representing a body of people whose history goes back so far, and who are descendants of the earliest settlers and dwellers in this broad land of ours. At all events, that has been my feeling, and while this position that I speak of has entailed a good deal of trouble upon me, I have always felt pleasure in discharging duties arising from those appeals from my dusky constituents to myself from time to time, and I have had pleasure in discharging those duties. This is merely preliminary to saying that this fact has entailed on me the necessity of conferring very frequently with Mr. Vankoughnet, and even up to the period of but a short time previous to the date when his superannuation took place, I found that gentleman with an intellect just as clear and bright as it was when more than a quarter of a century ago, I first became acquainted with him. It was surprising to me to hear from the hon. Minister of the Interior that Mr. Vankoughnet was so irascible that it was even the feeling of the members of this House that he deserved the treatment he has received. Well, I can speak for one member of this House, and I can positively and unhesitatingly say that in all the intercourse I had with that gentleman, I never saw from him one manifestation of impatience or bad temper. Now, if I were permitted to draw a contrast between what I have seen of the hon. Minister himself and what I have seen of Mr. Vankoughnet, I would have to say that Mr. Vankoughnet was an infinitely more amiable man than the hon. Minister who presides over that department. I have found Mr. Vankoughnet always able to attend promptly and intelligently to the business which it was my duty to bring before him, and more than that, I found him always manifesting a sincere interest in the welfare of these poor men whose affairs I had to bring to his attention. I cannot, therefore, allow the remarks of the Minister of the Interior to pass without recording my protest against them. So far as I can understand the case—and I think I have made myself pretty familiar with it—I believe that Mr. Vankoughnet was treated in a very harsh manner; let the responsibility rest where it may, and, of course, it rests with the Government. I am surprised that men whom I believe to have hearts in their bosoms, and to have some sympathy and some regard for the welfare of an old servant, should have dealt with Mr. Vankoughnet in the comparatively hasty and harsh manner in which he has been dealt with.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, after the lengthy and, in some respects, interesting discussion that we have had, mostly from members on the other side of the House, it would scarcely be fair to let the subject drop without a remark or two from myself. I do not propose to make an exhaustive speech upon this question. I would like, however, just to notice this: that last year the question was brought up by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) and he dealt with it on the very same lines as he has dealt with it this year, giving the statistics up to that year, and to-day he has simply advanced them one year further. I took the trouble, when introducing the new Superannuation and Insurance Bill to make a statement with reference to superannuation in general, and that is to be found on the pages of 'Hansard' last year. If any member of this House has the curiosity to pursue the subject further, he will see there a brief but, I think, very fair statement of the whole case of superannuation from 1870 up. I draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to that fact, and I do not propose to travel over the same ground. Now, with reference to superannuation in general and as to how far it should go, there may be differences of opinion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scriver) mentioned one phase which draws a great deal of sympathy; it is as to making some provision by which the families of civil servants shall have the wherewithal to help themselves when the head of the family, who has been a civil servant and had paid into the superannuation fund, dies. My hon. friend knows that this subject was discussed in 1870, and the House at that time was of opinion that no provision could be made in that way. The House has not altered its opinion in that regard since. If it be a burden to have a superannuation such as we have, to insure a man who has given his services to the country something during the period of debility or when he is laid aside by old age from active service—if that has been found burdensome, the House would immediately find it to be infinitely more burdensome if it were proposed to graft upon that a system by which the families of deceased civil servants could be taken care of as well. If we were to do that by endowment it would take a great deal of money, and if we were to do that by a charge upon the civil servant it would be a very heavy charge on him, if he would make anything like an adequate provision for his family. Therefore, that would but increase the difficulty. That was the difficulty that presented itself in 1870, and Parliament came to the conclusion that it would take up one branch of the question, and one only. The hon. gentleman who last spoke says that the predictions which were indulged in that the system of superannuation as at that time passed into law, would not prove self-sustaining, have been proven by the course of events. He is right and he is wrong in that. I believe that if the abatement had been kept at 4 per cent for salaries over $600, as was fixed by that law, then, under the management of the law as it has been carried out, I believe it would have been found to be self-sustaining. But the whole difficulty arose when Parliament, in a fit of good humour and extra sympathy, two or three years after that, came to the conclusion that it would not burden the civil servants so much but that it would burden the country more, and reduced the abatement fully one-half in the case of salaries over $600, and nearly one-half in the case of salaries under that. Parliament did that with its eyes open, and from that time up to this there has been no movement in this House of Commons that I know of from present memory, to have that inadequacy of abatement remedied, until last year the Government introduced a measure which would have operation from the time of its being passed, and which would provide against the inadequacy of the abatement from that period for all new civil servants. I just wish to draw the attention of the House to that. It was this fact, and another fact which I ought to add, which created the difficulty. The system of superannuation established in 1870 had initial difficulties to contend with, which no system of superannuation introduced freshly under different circumstances would have to contend with. The system commenced in the year 1870. The civil servants who had been brought up from the old provinces were old servants, and in 1870, when the system was put upon the country, all the old servants who had been in the employ of the Provincial Governments were loaded upon this superannuation list. They were men who had spent many years in the service, men who paid nothing, or almost nothing, into the fund, but yet they became participants in all the benefits arising from it, and consequently you had man after man and score after score of persons superannuated—and rightly so, by reason of age or infirmity, but superannuated, and drawing all the benefits of superannuation, when they had contributed hardly anything to the fund. Many of them drew on it for years and years, when they had contributed, perhaps, only $50 or $60 or $100 or $200. That loaded the superannuation fund down heavily at the beginning and made it impossible for any fair comparison to be made, and made it much more impossible when the abatement which was considered necessary by the Government when it introduced the measure, was reduced shortly afterwards by one-half. A great deal has been said as to the intentions—I am just taking up the points piece-meal as they come—of the mover of this motion before the House. The House can vote only on the motion. My hon. friend (Mr. Casey), who is not in his seat, who comes in and makes his speech and goes out, has stated certain things from interior information which he has, as to what is stirring in the breast of the hon. gentleman who moved the motion. There may be a great many things stirring in his breast, a great many things running through his mind, but the House only knows his proposal which we have to vote upon, and that is to abolish the whole superannuation system. Mind you, it came to be noted on this side of the House, as well as on the other side, that this system was burdensome; the Government looked into the matter a year or two ago, and decided that this burden must be removed as far as possible, and from the time the Act then passed went into force to the present, and for future years, persons entering the service have a superannuation system to take advantage of, which will not become burdensome to the country. The system is so arranged that it will not be burdensome to the country beyond the simple 2 per cent of interest between 4 per cent and the 6 per cent which is allowed on the amounts that are paid in. That is the sole contribution which the country makes to the new superannuation system. It is not overloaded at the commencement as the old one was. That slight aid and the abatement are sufficient to carry it through. And there is another good point in it which was wanting in the old system. Whereas in the old system, under both Governments, men for various reasons, were appointed at an age which was not on the sunny side of twenty or thirty, but far up in the forties and fifties and sixties, and were still able to take the benefits of superannuation; under the new system, any person appointed over the age of forty-five does not become a participant in the superannuation system with the idea of overloading it by drawing benefits from it after only a short term of service. So that the hon. gentleman's motion would not only deprive of those benefits the civil servants who have entered the service of this country under the pledge which Parliament has given them by establishing that system, who have made provision for their old age by paying their superannuation abatements every year, and have been rearing their families and modelling their lives upon the faith of that pledge of Parliament—it not only proposes to abolish that—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not so understand the motion.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the motion; the whole system is to be abolished. He proposes also to abolish the new system, which was introduced two years ago. And I suppose he would also abolish the system of cheap insurance which the Government has provided, by which civil servants at the cheapest possible rate can insure themselves against old age, and make provision for their families in the event of their death. The whole thing is to be abolished. But the hon. gentleman who spoke a few moments ago said that in the innermost recesses of the hon. gentleman's mind there is being evolved a system by which he is going to mitigate that. We know nothing of that, and if we did, we do not know that the House would adopt it. The cart is certainly being put before the horse in the proposal before us, which is to abolish the whole superannuation system entirely. Now, hon. gentlemen have tried to make a great point out of this: the superannuation system, bad as it has been, has been made infinitely worse, because it has been badly managed by the Tory Government and the Liberal-Conservative party. Now, I do not suppose there is much to be gained by the tu quoque argument; but it is refreshing once in a while to call attention to certain facts, and I will just state broadly what may be gleaned from those facts: that if there ever was a period when the Superannuation Act was abused—and the moving monuments of that abuse are to be found in this country to-day—it was during the five years while gentlemen opposite were in power. Let me just give you one point as to that—one out of many, because I do not wish to take up the time of the House. We have heard that one great abuse of the Act by this Government was to add to the time of people who were superannuated. It is strange the inconsistencies of the arguments on the other side. The whole talk of this afternoon and the first part of this evening was that we were adding time; but when the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) got on the Vankoughnet matter, his chief grievance was that Mr. Vankoughnet was allowed to go out without having had the whole of his time, and that he had not a larger amount to draw from the superannuation fund, and thus add to the burdens of the country. Let us look at the time added under the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite, from 1874 to 1878. In 1874 sixty-two years were added; in 1875 forty-eight years were added ; in 1876, forty-six years were added ; in 1877, the necessities were growing strong, and eighty-one years were added ; in 1878 all had been pretty nearly exhausted, and there were but thirty years added. If you take all the years together, you will find that there was an average in each of the five years of fifty-three years of added time given to persons retired from the service. Now, take the last five years under the Liberal-Conservative Government, and what do you find ? In 1889, thirty-nine years were added ; in 1890, five years ; in 1891, twenty-four years ; in 1892, twenty-four years, and in 1893, eight years: an average of twenty years added in each year, against an average of fifty-three years by the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What was the average time of the parties' service in each of those periods ?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see what that has to do with it. I am giving the average time added. I have not the information the hon. gentleman asks for, but if it were got it would be no more favourable to him than the comparison I have just made. The hon. gentleman who moved this motion last year gave a list of fifty-eight persons who were superannuated and were drawing large superannuation allowances, and whose heads were still above ground—who were walking about as a standing rebuke to this superannuation system, and the manner in which it was being carried out by the Conservative Government, and yet of those fifty-eight persons it is surprising that nearly one-half were superannuated in the very short term that hon. gentlemen opposite held power between 1874 and 1878. The number of persons who are drawing superannuations to-day is said to be about 550, and there is this point also to the credit of the Government: that of those 550 about 150 belong to the classes of people who have since been struck off the list of those eligible for superannuation, such as light-keepers, lock-tenders, and so forth. That also tended to overload the system, and has been cleared off. Now, I do not want to take up the time of the House by pursuing this subject further. There is not much to be gained by trying to put all the blame on one party, and that the party in power. You can take the superannuation system all the way through, and you will find that political necessities have driven hon. gentlemen opposite—and I think very willingly too—while in power to an extent which they have not driven even the Liberal-Conservative Government, which is alleged to be more amenable to them. The evidence of that fact stands out in the records, and very oddly enough in the very record which the hon. gentleman himself adduced wherewith to damn the superannuation system entirely. Now, it has been said that this expense is growing and will continue to grow. The converse is true. I think it has passed its period of growth. It has reached its culmination, and from this time forward I believe that the tendency of the superannuation system, on the present line, will be to diminish the disparity between receipts and expenditure, because of these things I have stated. Those who were loaded upon the system in its early stages—many of them now men of very advanced age—drawing large superannuation allowances, will fall out in the course of nature. In the case of the younger ones coming in, their period of contribution is larger, and under the system now in vogue, the burden will not be so great so far as they are concerned, upon the country. The House, I am sure, whatever they may think as to the extravagance of a system of superannuation at all, would not be unjust enough to attempt to abolish a system which has been in vogue for twenty-five years, and upon which the whole civil service of the country has grown up, and the defects of which have been entirely taken away, so far as the new additions to the civil service are concerned, by the Act which was passed a year ago.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Whatever doubt may have existed in the mind of any hon. gentleman as to the evils which underlie the present system of superannuation, must have been entirely removed by the speech of the hon. gentleman himself. He has not attempted to defend that system, either as originally framed or as carried out by his own Government. The utmost extent of his argument was that the manner in which it was used by the Liberal Government was as bad, if not worse, than the manner in which it has been used by this Government. But the system itself he did not attempt to defend. He told the House that when it was introduced there was a provision in the Act that sufficient should be charged to make the system self-supporting, but that afterwards Parliament—and one would gather from his statement that Parliament did this of its own motion and not at the instance of the Government—undertook to reduce the percentage which was to be paid by the service, and consequently the system has been non-paying for years. The hon. gentleman might as well have stated the facts. He might as well have said that the Conservative Government in 1870 came down and recommended Parliament to reduce the percentage paid by the civil servants and introduced a Bill with that object. And the superannuation system was thus reduced to the non-paying basis of to-day, with receipts $63,000 and payments $263,000. The hon. gentleman cannot escape from the position we take of condemning the system, by saying that Parliament did this so many years ago. Parliament did what the Government of the day asked them to do, and Parliament was misled and acted under misconception. We are not to determine to-day what were the motives which induced Parliament to do this many years ago. The hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) has described them very clearly. We know that the Parliament of the day was misled, and adopted a system which the hon. gentleman himself has not the heart to defend, which he knows to be indefensible. Now, he turns around and says: Although the system is indefensible, I will endeavour to show that it was as much abused by the Liberals as by this Government. What are the facts? If the hon. gentleman turns to the accounts, he will find that the receipts during the four or five years the Mackenzie Government were in power averaged about $40,000 a year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A little better.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A little better, as my hon. friend says. And the payments were under $100,000 a year. Whereas, under the hon. gentleman's management, the receipts amount to some $62,000 and the payments to $260,000.

Mr. FOSTER. You unloaded your men on to us.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is because the hon. gentleman has mismanaged the Act so that there is a deficit of $200,000 a year, that my hon. friend introduced his resolution asking Parliament to condemn the system. I do not think the Finance Minister was right in asking his followers to vote against this resolution, because he did so on a ground not tenable. He tried to make them believe that this resolution involved an attack on certain vested rights. It makes no such attack. No such attack is contained in the resolution itself, and every speech in its support explicitly disavows any such intention. What is condemned is the system and the manner in which the present Government carried it out, and there is not a word to lead anybody to suppose that the vested rights we all desire to respect would be taken away or interfered with.

Mr. McNEILL. Read the words of the resolution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It has been read several times in the House, and I will be very glad to send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. McNEILL. Let my hon. friend read the resolution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will be very happy to do so, but it has been read two or three times already; and if my hon. friend wants to study it, he can do that better by reading the resolution himself. If I read it to him, I might be accused of laying some undue emphasis on some words.

Mr. McNEILL. We could not accuse you of that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And the hon. gentleman can more readily digest the resolution and understand it better by perusing it himself. I merely rose to point out that the Finance Minister attempted to mislead the House in stating that we were aiming at any vested rights which any civil servant possesses under the Act. Even if the hon. gentleman could show that an Act, bad in itself, had been mismanaged by both Governments, that is no answer to a resolution asking us to repeal it. The country is sick and tired of this tu quoque argument—this argument that if we are bad, you were no better. Where there is a clear and distinct blot found in our statutes, a blot which the Finance Minister himself admits cannot be defended, Parliament should rise to the occasion and record its condemnation of the system.

House divided on amendment of Mr. McMullen:

Quarantine—Salaries and contingencies of organized districts.. $40,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this amount to be paid wholly in salaries, or are there special items in it? There ought to be, and I think there used to be fuller details given in these items. This fashion of lumping these items together is objectionable.

Mr. FOSTER. These details will be given in explanation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They used to be given in the Estimates themselves, which was considerably more convenient. We can understand the explanation a good deal better when we have the memorandum as well, and I would recommend the hon. gentleman, in preparing other estimates, to return to the old practice, and give details.

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the organized quarantine districts at Grosse Isle, Halifax, St. John, British Columbia, and so on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state what sums are going to these several districts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. FOSTER. Halifax quarantine, $6,400; St. John quarantine, $2,500; Pictou, $800; Port Hawkesbury, $300; Chatham, $800; Charlottetown, $1,000; Sydney, $3,204; Victoria, B.C., $8,575; Grosse Isle, $28,337; general expenses, $14,461.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That makes more than $40,500.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the expenditure last year on these several quarantine stations, and the proportion in which the proposed vote will be expended for the coming year will be the same.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is as well that we should have some detailed explanation as to what was done with the money voted last year. We ought to be told how far the requisitions made by the superintendent and medical officers who brought the matter under the attention of the Government and the country have been complied with. In fact, we would like to know what position the quarantine at Grosse Isle is now in. We escaped last year, but the people would like to know how far, in the case of an outbreak of cholera or other epidemic, the establishment at Grosse Isle is fitted to cope with the danger.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that Grosse Isle is one of the most perfect sanitary stations in the world. The requisitions of Dr. Montizambert and the recommendations of the medical men have been carried out to the satisfaction of these gentlemen. All the newest and best appliances have been placed there. The quarantine has been inspected by American health officers, and has been pronounced perfect in every way, and I have no doubt that it deserves that opinion. There is at Grosse Isle a disinfecting apparatus and building. The building is 70 by 40 feet, containing three disinfecting chambers, eight feet six inches by eight feet six inches by twenty-four feet, vacuum pump tank for bichloride of mercury and twelve needle shower baths. However, I suppose it is not necessary to read all these details.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What we want is a reasonably full statement of what has been done.

Mr. FOSTER. There are complete arrangements for supplying water, potable, and for lavatory purposes. There is a detention building for first-class passengers which was erected in 1893 and which is fitted with all appliances for fairly comfortable keeping of first-class passengers when they are detained, for the length of time which is the average required of such passengers. The length of the building is 142 feet, with a verandah along the entire front of the ground floor. The building is fitted up with all the necessary appliances for keeping the people as when on board ship. There is an intermediate passenger detention house, and a medical assistant's residence, commenced in 1892. An artesian well was sunk to the depth of 1,450 feet, but the results were not satisfactory. There are two steam pumps in the shelter building, and two thirty-thousand gallon tanks, with mains to the several buildings. There is a distilling and heating apparatus with tanks for distilled water. New wells have been sunk and water found. The steamer 'Challenger' does the steamship work. The di-oxide blast is now on the steamer 'Druid,' which has been fitted up for the service. Then, as an almost necessary part of the Grosse Isle equipment, there is at the Louise embankment, at Quebec, a disinfecting apparatus of a similar character and size to that at Grosse Isle. It is placed in the shed built for emigrants, a very commodious building. It is used to disinfect the luggage of immigrants from infected countries. Also, on the other side of the river at Lévis there is a similar apparatus for the benefit of the Grand Trunk Railway system. I think this summary gives a very fair general idea of the Grosse Isle station.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it be deemed necessary to retain the passengers of any of these ocean vessels, how many people can be accommodated at Grosse Isle?

Mr. FOSTER. The first-class passenger detention building has a length of 142 feet. That gives some idea of its size. The accommodation for passengers is ample for the average traffic. Of course, it would be impossible to erect a building which would be sufficient for the passengers when there is a rush of vessels, should it happen at any time, but if it should take place, it will be in the summer season, when the present accommodation can be supplemented with tents.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that among the quarantine items, Dr. Montizambert gets $3,000; Dr. F. W. Church, assisted for eight months, and received $1,277.42, license allowance, $230; hotel allowance and sundries, $33.50. Then I see that Dr. E. Playter gets a salary of $300 for two months.

Mr. FOSTER. That was simply temporary.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then Dr. J. B. Coté gets $365 for two months and thirteen days. Why is he paid more than any of the others?

Mr. FOSTER. Dr. Coté is now an assistant to Dr. Montizambert, and he gets $150 a month. The extra $65 is for the thirteen days over two months.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are those doctors hired by the chief superintendent during the months that he chooses to hire them, and when they attend, is he supposed to give them a certificate that they have been in attendance during that time?

Mr. FOSTER. They are employed by the department the same as any other officer. They are there all the time of the season of navigation. They are not kept cooped up all winter.

Public Health in other unorganized districts $10,000

Mr. FLINT. I understood the Minister to say that the assistant surgeon's dwelling at Grosse Isle was completed. What was the cost of it?

Mr. FOSTER. Four thousand dollars was the cost of the medical assistant's residence.

Cattle Quarantine $22,000

Mr. McMULLEN. We want some explanation with regard to the cattle quarantine stations between Canada and the United States, and what regulations are in force on the boundary for the prevention of the importation of disease.

Mr. FOSTER. The regulations are exactly the same as they were last year. The vote for cattle quarantine is expended at what you may call the fixed stations, namely: Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Lévis, Montreal, Sarnia, Emerson, McLeod, and Victoria, B.C.

Mr. CASEY. Are cattle only allowed to be imported through those stations?

Mr. FOSTER. Only at those stations. There are two stations in southern Manitoba, a station at McLeod, and some stations on the frontier, and from there through to the Mountains. There is one station on the frontier in the Kootenay district.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is Dr. McEachran still in the employ of the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, he is superintendent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call the attention of the Minister to a matter which has some bearing on the present unfortunate position of our cattle in England. I have noticed—and I am bound to say that it is just one of those things which will tend to prejudice our position in England, and, therefore, to injure our chances of getting the quarantine removed—I have noticed in the discussions which took place in the English Parliament and elsewhere on that subject, that a good deal was made of the fact that our chief superintendent of cattle quarantine, Dr. McEachran, was himself a ranch proprietor and largely interested in cattle speculations. Now, if that is the case, I am bound to say that I think the Government have committed a grave error in allowing an officer who is largely responsible for the maintenance of the cattle quarantine to be carrying on another business in which his interest might conflict with his duty as cattle inspector. It is just one of those things which puts a formidable weapon into the hands of those persons in England who desire particularly to prohibit the entrance of our live cattle. A great deal, perhaps more than the thing deserves, has been made of it, and the thing in itself is objectionable. My impression is that if this gentleman is to remain in the Government service, he should do nothing else. It is not at all desirable that the person placed in that position should be allowed to carry on a mercantile business which may put his interests in direct opposition to his duties.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has raised a question which is perfectly legitimate, and there may be very good grounds for the opinion he has expressed. I do not think, however, that the fact of Dr. McEachran being engaged in the ranching business has had much influence on that question in England. Dr. McEachran is a well-known authority, I think he is probably the most skilled man we have on that question. He is interested, or has been interested, in a ranch in the North-west. I do not think, however, that that fact would take much from his value as an authority on this matter, because if he had any selfish interest at all, his interest would be rather in having the schedule retained than having it removed, because he deals with cattle which are fit for the market, and not in stockers. There is, however, a good deal to be said in favour of having an inspector who is simply an inspector and has no selfish interests either way with respect to the cattle. Prof. McEachran has up to this time I think been rather loath to dispose of his interest there, which I believe is a valuable one, but I know the Minister is in communication with him, and I am told he is now disposing of his interest in that ranch. The Minister has the matter in hand, and so far as I am concerned, and so far as the Government is concerned, they would much prefer to have a man who has no other interest than that of being their inspector, so that no cavil could be raised as to his being an interested person in giving judgment one way or another.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman perhaps does not see the point made in England. The point was this: The English Government were relying on the opinion expressed by experts on this side, and notably by Prof. McEachran, that our cattle were free from disease. He himself being a cattle breeder and being largely concerned in our cattle had a direct and personal interest of the very strongest kind in maintaining that our cattle were free from disease. The hon. gentleman must surely see that point, and that was the fact that was brought out in the English House of Commons and elsewhere as detracting from the weight which would otherwise be attached to the certificates given by the professor that our cattle were not diseased. The hon. gentleman will see that it was a very important point, and one likely to have very great weight with the English authorities, and the fact that Prof. McEachran is personally and particularly interested in declaring our herds free from disease detracts from the value of his testimony in the minds of the English authorities. That is quite clear. The hon. gentleman appeared to suppose that I was concerned with the professor's anxiety to keep the American cattle out.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I appreciate entirely the point.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman must see that the value of the professor's evidence as an expert may be made to depend entirely, in the minds of the English authorities, on the view that he is an independent officer and has no interest in stating anything except exact facts. I have no prejudice whatever against the professor, and except on general principles I would not have brought the matter up, but every one knows that very great exertions are being made by interested parties in England to prevent the English Government accepting the statements made by our people, and they have pointed out very strongly the position that the professor occupies as being one entirely discrediting his testimony.

Mr. McNEILL. I entirely agree with the remarks which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has made on this subject so far as regards the advisability of having the chief Government authority entirely disassociated from any connection with the cattle trade. But it is only right I think to say, that so far as this particular allegation is concerned, that, rightly or wrongly, Prof. McEachran has been of the opinion that the removal of the embargo so far from being an advantage to his cattle business, would have been a great disadvantage. That is the statement he has made. Whether he is right in making that statement is a matter of doubt I think, but at all events that is his view. His opinion is that the embargo has been an advantage to his ranch, and therefore any evidence he has given so far from its being discredited from the fact of his being connected with the cattle trade, should really, under the peculiar circumstances, have more value. I quite admit, it can scarcely be gainsaid, that in the minds of the English people it will be to some extent discredited by the fact of his being connected with the cattle trade at all. Still he says the removal of the embargo, so far from being an advantage, would be a disadvantage to the business in which he is concerned. It is only fair to Prof. McEachran that that should be stated, and made in England, that it should be distinctly stated that that is the professor's view. It is only fair, I think, to the case we have. While referring to that matter, there is another subject to which I should like to call the attention of the Government, and it is one that I do not think has been sufficiently brought out, and it is this: that the report of Prof. Brown, the authority on whom the Imperial Government have chiefly depended, so far from being a proof that infectious pleuro-pneumonia existed in Canada, is a report that proves exactly the opposite, because Professor Brown states that the condition of the lungs of the animals which were supposed to be affected with pleuro pneumonia is clearly different from the condition of lungs affected with infectious pleuro pneumonia such as he knows in England. And that is not all; but he goes on to endeavour to establish this proposition, that the— he uses the definite article—North American infectious pleuro pneumonia is of the kind exemplified in this particular case which he has been examining and investigating. This animal shows in its lungs a certain condition, one colour. The infectious pleuro pneumonia shows dark blotches and other differences. The professor admits that our animals have not these dark blotches and not those other peculiar conditions which distinguish infectious pleuro pneumonia in England, and also Europe; but he goes on to say that this is the pleuro pneumonia of North America. Now, that is absolutely inaccurate. The infectious pleuro pneumonia of North America shows precisely the same characteristics as infectious pleuro pneumonia on the other side of the Atlantic shows, and therefore this report prepared by Prof. Brown is definite and absolute proof that the witness on whom the Imperial Government has chiefly relied admits that our cattle are not infected with the only infectious pleuro pneumonia disease. I think that is a point which should be distinctly brought to the notice of the Imperial authorities, and I do not see it has been brought particularly to their attention so far.

Mr. McMULLEN. The statement which the hon. gentleman has made is somewhat important. He has said that Prof. McEachran has stated that the embargo placed on Canadian cattle entering the English market is virtually advantageous to the ranch of which he is chief manager. It is unfortunate that we should have a chief veterinary whose interests in the company of which he is manager come directly in conflict with the interests of this Dominion, particularly the older provinces. It is generally understood throughout the other provinces that it would be decidedly advantageous to have the embargo removed. The hon. gentleman states that Prof. McEachran has expressed the opinion that so far as regards the interests of the company of which he is chief manager it would be advantageous to have the embargo maintained. We should not have our chief veterinary placed in that position.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not desire to be understood as saying that we should have a veterinary who is connected with the cattle trade.

Mr. McMULLEN. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that that is not desirable. It is very unfortunate that the inspector of our cattle occupies that unfortunate position.

We know perfectly well that the animal that was supposed to be infected with pleuro pneumonia was shipped on the steamer 'Winnipeg,' and was taken from Pilot Mound, Manitoba. We know that on the strength of the investigation held in regard to the disease from which the animal was supposed to be suffering, our cattle were scheduled in England. That has been a very unfortunate arrangement, and it is to be regretted that our Government, instead of dilly-dallying with the whole business, did not make a greater effort to prevent us from being in the position we are now in with regard to our cattle in the English market. Every man of experience who ships cattle from the province of Ontario or Quebec will unhesitatingly say that the scheduling of our cattle is a decided loss. We know that since it has been imposed the people of the older provinces have had to take a less price for their cattle, and there is not a farmer in the country who feeds stock who is not looking forward with anxiety to its removal. I would like to see our Government take such steps as would secure that confidence on the part of the English veterinarians and the Board of Agriculture, which would secure in time—and it has taken a very long time now—the removal of that embargo. This cattle trade is a very important one for the country. It should not be hampered; it should be facilitated in every way; but my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) has been unsuccessfully endeavouring for several weeks to impress upon the House the necessity for passing his Bill with regard to the shipment of cattle, which we believe to be a means to facilitate that trade. In the case of the animal that is supposed to have been diseased in England, a sample of its lungs was sent to this country. The sample was about an ounce and a half weight, and it was so carelessly put in the bottle that when it got to Canada the spirit in which it was to be preserved had completely evaporated, and this insignificant portion of the lung was so decomposed that it was unfit for any careful investigation as to whether disease existed or not. With Sir Charles Tupper in England, with all his large staff, and with his professed earnestness in attending to that particular business, it is exceedingly regrettable to think that our cattle are allowed into the English market only on the same conditions as the cattle of the United States, where disease is known to exist very extensively. I believe that we should have a veterinarian in the Dominion completely separated from any outside interest which would in the slightest degree interfere with the English Board of Agriculture accepting his testimony as thoroughly reliable. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has stated that the English Board of Agriculture were suspicious, and that the fact that Dr. McEachran was interested in a North-west ranch neutralized the weight of his opinion as to our cattle being free from disease. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. McNeill) admits that the existence of that embargo on our cattle is an advantage to the ranche of which Dr. McEachran is chief manager.

Mr. McNEILL. No, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. You said it was no loss to the ranch at all, and that confirms the view of the English Board of Agriculture. I do not challenge the standing of Dr. McEachran. He is a man of good ability, extended experience and high character I believe, but the veterinary surgeon of the Dominion should be absolutely and entirely disassociated from any connection which would in the slightest degree jeopardise in England the value of the opinion he expresses with regard to the freedom of this country from cattle disease. It is late in the day to make this move now, but I think it should be done at once.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) has misunderstood what I said, or else I have misunderstood what he said. I think that every one who knows Dr. McEachran will admit that he is an honest and honourable and straightforward man, and I know that many hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will corroborate that statement, and accept Dr. McEachran's opinion in good faith. What I stated was: that Dr. McEachran believed that the removal of the embargo instead of being an advantage to the ranch would be a disadvantage. If it was a disadvantage to him, then his evidence that the embargo should be removed, evidence contrary to his own interests, should have all the greater weight with the authorities in the mother country. I know very well that my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) is of opinion that Mr. McEachran is incorrect with regard to his opinions as to the position of his ranch in that respect; but at all events, that has been Mr. McEachran's view, and therefore we cannot suppose that he was in any way influenced in favour of his ranch in the report which he made. On the contrary, he was making a report which, in his opinion, was the very opposite of the report which he would make if he were trying to benefit his own ranch. From that point of view, therefore, his evidence ought to be all the more valuable. I agree that it would be much better that this officer of the Government should be disassociated from the cattle trade altogether, but I cannot admit that the embargo on our cattle has anything in the world to do with Mr. McEachran's position. It was only the other day that any question was raised as to that. We know perfectly well that for a long time past this matter has been agitated in England, and it is only, comparatively speaking, within the last few hours that the question has been raised in the English House of Commons as to Mr.

Mr. McMULLEN.

McEachran's connection with a ranch in the North-west.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Although the question has only been recently raised in the English House of Commons, I am afraid that the fact was perfectly well known before to Mr. Gardner, the President of the Board of Agriculture.

Mr. McNEILL. We have no evidence of that whatever, and I think it must be only supposition on the part of my hon. friend.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, it is not.

Mr. McNEILL. We never heard anything of it before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will explain to the hon. gentleman. It is quite true that the question has only recently been raised in a public fashion with respect to Dr. McEachran, but there is no doubt that disparaging opinions as to our Canadian experts have been entertained for a very long time.

Mr. McNEILL. Disparaging opinions might have been expressed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And that was one of the reasons.

Mr. McNEILL. That is one view of the matter, but a very different view of the matter is the one which is presented to the Imperial House of Commons with regard to Mr. McEachran being connected with the ranch. If that had been known in England before, we would have had it ringing through the press there. Those men who have been fighting (on the ground of protection) in England, the admission of Canadian cattle, would have brought the matter up; and protection is the sole ground of opposition in England to the admission of our cattle. It is because the people of England are going back to the policy of protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friends may laugh.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quite aware that English cattle dealers would be ready to do it.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend may laugh at my statement, but those who know the facts, know that it is a political question in England, and the whole difficulty we have to contend with is because it is a political question. The whole difficulty we have to contend with is due to the fact that it is a political question, and that both parties in England are bidding for the farmer's vote. That is simply the whole explanation of the difficulty. It is simply because each party desires to hold out the boon of protection to the English farmer that we have any difficulty to-day in this matter, and when the hon. member for North Wellington endeavours to fasten on the Government some responsibility for the trouble in England, I must say I think it is unfair. He says that with greater care they might have avoided the sending of this animal across the Atlantic. Now, I venture to ask the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who I see is about to address the committee, whether he thinks that any amount of care could have prevented the development of such a complaint as the one we have to deal with now. If we can accept the statement of the experts, it is a disease which arises in transitu, by reason of exposure during the voyage. It was quite impossible for any expert to tell that the animal would be affected by that disease, and it was quite impossible with any amount of care to prevent such an animal being landed in England. If the disease was infectious pleuro-pneumonia, the case my hon. friend has made out might to a large extent be well founded; but as this was not a case of infectious pleuro-pneumonia at all, but simply the effect of cold taken in transitu, the case my hon. friend has made against the Government is not well founded. I venture to say that every expert in Canada will be prepared to state that no amount of inspection and no amount of care could prevent the landing on the other side from time to time of animals affected as this animal was.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would just say that Dr. McEachran was before the Committee of Agriculture to-day. There was a report published in Great Britain on this subject, of which I have a copy; and if you want to see whether any blame should be attached to the Government or not, you have to consider what was the first idea that struck the people of Great Britain. It was this, that the cattle were continually going into the North-west from the United States, upon inspection only, and not upon quarantine. I think it is in the memory of every hon. gentleman in this room that I myself put a question to the Government, asking if it was true that settlers' cattle were allowed to go into the North-west on inspection, and not on quarantine; and the hon. Finance Minister replied that quarantine regulations were in force. That was on Monday; and when the hon. leader of the Opposition asked him how long those regulations had been in force, he said they had only been in force since the previous Saturday. So the idea that prevailed in Great Britain was that cattle were being allowed to come into Canada from the United States, where pleuro-pneumonia was known to exist. Now, with respect to Dr. McEachran's statement that he was benefited by the embargo being kept up, I cannot agree with him, for the simple reason that if he is benefited by such a state of things, every man who ships cattle from Canada is benefited in the same degree; because he stated that lean stockers from the North-west could not be taken to the English market and sold there in competition with others. We all believe that shippers of cattle were injured by the embargo, and Dr. McEachran was injured to the same extent. The only plea he could offer was that his cattle were from North-west ranches and could not be taken to the interior after being landed. That was not the case. Cattle brought from the North-west and put on ship-board and fed there and taken across, could be put on the cars and taken into the interior, as well as our common cattle from Ontario. So that that plea will not hold good, with any one who knows the condition of the cattle trade. Dr. McEachran, in respect to his interest in the ranch he represented, was injured to the same extent that others were who shipped fat cattle to the old country. About Dr. McEachran, I will say that I have known him intimately since 1884; I believe him to be an honest and honourable gentleman, and I believe that everything he has done, he has done in the true interest of Canada. But, at the same time, the impression in regard to our cattle has gone abroad in Great Britain, and my hon. friend is not correct in saying that it has not gone abroad. If it had not, why was the Governor General telegraphed to, to send back a report whether Dr. McEachran was connected with the Waldron ranch or not? He sent back a telegram stating that he was connected with it, but what his relation to it was he could not tell. There is not the least doubt that this had an influence in the old country. I believe the time has arrived when it is the duty of the Government to maintain the most stringent regulations between Canada and the United States, not with reference to pleuro-pneumonia alone, but also with reference to tuberculosis. This disease already exists to a certain extent in this country; and we have been told that it exists to such an extent in the old country that it is almost impossible to stamp it out of the flocks and herds there. I believe the time has arrived when it is the duty of the Government to adopt more stringent measures to stamp out that disease, and the sooner it is done the better it will be for this country. I believe the time is even approaching when a great many of the herds of Great Britain will have to be destroyed in consequence of the prevalence of tuberculosis as well as pleuro-pneumonia; and if measures are taken to stamp out that disease in Canada, and we can get a clean bill of health, then I think not only will our cattle trade stand a good chance of being renewed, but our animals will be in demand to renew the flocks and herds of Great Britain. I believe the Agriculture Committee is going to deal with the matter and make a report upon it, and I hope the Government will take measures in the line I have suggested. If they do, I have only to say that their medical adviser in the matter, whoever he may be, should have no connection, directly or indirectly, with the cattle trade of Canada.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman and I differ very little in our views with regard to this matter, but when he was making this statement with regard to Dr. McEachran's ranche, I thought it was only right to call his attention to one fact which he was overlooking, namely: that Dr. McEachran stated that his ranche was not exporting cattle to the old country. My hon. friend stated that Dr. McEachran was just as much interested as any one else exporting cattle to the mother country. Dr. McEachran told us, however, that his ranche was raising cattle for sale in Canada and not for export, and he said that since the year 1882-83, when the ranche was established, they have only exported 1,300 cattle, whereas the average export per year was over 1,600 or 1,700. I thought my hon. friend would only wish, in justice to Dr. McEachran—who, I think, is a political friend of his—and of whose character he has spoken so strongly to-night, to have that fact stated, and let it go, at all events, for what it is worth.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did His Excellency get the telegram?

Mr. McNEILL. I was just about to refer to that. My hon. friend said that I was entirely wrong when I said the impression had not gone abroad that Dr. McEachran was connected with this ranche. I did not make any such statement, and when my hon. friend takes upon himself to quote what I said, I hope he will do justice, in the same way as I would like to see him do justice to Dr. McEachran, to so humble an individual as myself. I did not make any such statement. What I said was that the impression had gone abroad only very lately; and the discussion between my hon. friend for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and myself was as to whether there had been lately an impression abroad, or whether that impression had existed for a considerable time. The telegram from the Governor General had reference to the impression which had lately gone abroad, and to which attention had been called in the House of Commons.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words on this subject because it is one of very great importance. The objection raised to Dr. McEachran on account of his connection with the Waldron ranche could very easily be got over. It engaged the attention of the Agricultural Committee last year, and was talked over with Dr. McEachran the year before. He said that the salary he got for this work from the Government was not sufficient, and he was obliged to engage in other lines, but that if he were permanently employed and put at the head of a health branch, under the Agricultural Department, he would close up his connection with the ranche at any time. No doubt he would have done so last year had he received sufficient compensation for his labour and employment the year around. The importance of the cattle industry in Canada is very great at present and is increasing every year. It is a known fact that a certain disease exists among our animals—tuberculosis, which is found occasionally amongst herds, and no effort has been made to stamp it out. We have a Contagious Diseases Act in our statutes, which only requires to be acted on by the Governor in Council, but there appears to be no one to carry it out. I think it unfortunate that it should remain in that condition. It is unfortunate that we have not some person at the head of a branch of that kind, to devote his whole attention to it and employ others under him, and by giving them a little instruction he could make them comparatively experts, so that they would be available in different sections, wherever needed, on short notice. A disease broke out in my section of country last year. It was reported to the inspector at Montreal, who reported to the department, and the department reported to Dr. Smith at Toronto. Dr. Smith answered that he had heard something about it previous to getting the letter, and did not think it was of very great importance, but that after he got through the examination of his school he would go and attend to it. I do not think there should be that delay. The people were losing their cattle by what was afterwards demonstrated to be a disease due to feeding a class of provender containing ergot rye. It was rather gangrenous ergotism, through feeding these cattle too long on that kind of food. But the indifference displayed was very annoying to the people. The veterinary surgeon in the vicinity did not seem to know what was the matter, and yet the cattle were sick, some farmers having four or five heads sick, and others more. After several letters passed, and after correspondence in the papers, Dr. Smith, I think, sent Dr. Cowan to examine and report. But the report was about a month or a month and a half after the first letter was sent. That delay was entirely too long and might have been avoided if we had had a person like Dr. McEachran at the head of the health branch. There is nothing more urgently required than to set aside an amount of money for the purpose of paying those parties whose animals have to be slaughtered when found to be affected. Take the disease of tuberculosis. Every medical man and veterinary surgeon knows that the meat of an animal affected by tuberculosis is not entirely healthy. It has been demonstrated beyond doubt that the milk from such cows is unhealthy, and yet it is being fed to children and adults all over the country. It is to be wondered at that greater efforts are not put forth to stamp out a disease which could be easily stamped out by the expenditure of a very moderate sum. Dr. McEachran says that less than half a million dollars would stamp it out in Canada. That would be a very small sum to use for such a purpose. The Government should appoint Dr. McEachran as permanent officer and pay him sufficient compensation the year around. I understand that he is likely to sever his connection with the ranche, so that whatever objections there might be on that score at present, they are not likely to exist in the future; but if not employed permanently, he may drift off to another line where he can make more money, and the services of one of the best men in the country will not then be available. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) complained of the laxity of the quarantine regulations in the North-west Territories. He tried to show that, somehow or other, the embargo on cattle to-day was due to that laxity, and he gave as an evidence a fact that one of the supposed diseased animals had been traced back to Pilot Mound. He must have forgotten that, although there was one traced back to that point, there was one traced back to the locality of Kingston and one to Port Perry. And these were thought to be as important cases and as affording strong evidence of the existence of disease among our cattle, according to the veterinary surgeon in the old country, as the one from Pilot Mound. So, if the disease was found in cattle from here, it could not be due to failure to enforce the quarantine regulations in the North-west, because these cattle from the North-west were not brought and kept here, but were sent through to be disposed of in the British market. There was another consideration that should not be lost sight of, and that is that when the Board of Agriculture said that the quarantine regulations were not enforced with sufficient stringency, we established a quarantine to the satisfaction of the Board of Agriculture, and although it is a year since that time, I understand there has been no complaint in the way it has been carried out ever since. So that whatever objections might have been raised before that time, those objections could not be urged since. I understand that the regulations are as strictly enforced as in bringing cattle across the lines to any other part of Canada. It seems to me that the whole contention of the people of England is not tenable. It cannot be tenable if pathological examination demonstrates anything. There is a diversity of opinion among the veterinary experts as to the disease that was discovered in our cattle. Some of the ablest veterinary surgeons say it is only common pleuro pneumonia. That disease may be set up through exposure of the cattle on board ship, or it may be set up even by bringing an animal from a warm stable into the cold, producing inflammation of the lungs and of the pleura. There is a great difference between this disease and contagious pleuro pneumonia. The best veterinary surgeons outside of those employed by the Board of Agriculture, I believe, say that these are merely sporadic cases, and that the diagnostic symptoms characteristic of contagious pleuro-pneumonia were absent in these cases. Those experts who made an examination on this side report the same thing. That was the report of Dr. McEachran, and also of Dr. Adami, of McGill College. It does seem to me that there is some ulterior object held in view by the Board of Agriculture there, and that their aim is to keep that embargo on, and, for this purpose, they are endeavouring to fortify their position with every argument they can possibly advance. There is no doubt that it is very difficult to satisfy people who will not be satisfied. Every contention that they have set up has been demonstrated to be unsound, but as soon as one is disproved, they set up some other. The last difficulty is shown in the inquiry whether Mr. McEachran is connected with the Waldron ranch. And his connection with it, no doubt, would be urged as a reason why his judgment must be biased. But every one who knows Mr. McEachran knows that such considerations would not affect his judgment: that he was endeavouring to bring out the facts for the information of the people of England. Another reason why I think they are determined to keep on this embargo, is that when the offer was made to them to send out their own veterinary surgeons, that we would associate experts with them and pay all expenses, leaving them to examine the cattle in any way they pleased in any part of the country, and satisfy themselves whether this disease existed in the country, they refused to accept. If they were really anxious to get the information, why should they refuse? Even if they were not satisfied with our experts, surely they should have been willing to trust their own. Another reason is: that while they were slaughtering our cattle, we asked to have our veterinary experts look after the interests of Canada in these cases, and that was denied on the ground that if it was acceded to us every other country would want the same privilege. But, even if they did, was there anything wrong about it? Would not their action show a disposition to give us the height of fair play? Taking everything into consideration, I believe they are not disposed to raise the embargo, and that they will find some excuse for keeping it on, no matter what we may do.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am surprised to hear an hon. gentleman, who proclaims himself to be so loyal as does the hon. gentleman, charging the people of England with a determination to maintain this embargo on Canadian cattle, even though there is no reason for it. I am not going to follow the hon. gentleman in the speech he has made. He travelled from John O'Groats to Land's End, and I do not care to follow him so far. But I wish to reply to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). That hon. gentleman stated that I had made a charge against Sir Charles Tupper by declaring that proper care had not been taken to see that the animals that went to England on the steamer 'City of Winnipeg' were properly inspected, and that no careful effort had been made to prevent the scheduling of our cattle. I am not going to ask the hon. gentleman to take my words, but I will quote from the report of Dr. McEachran :

In my letter to the Deputy Minister, of 1st November, I asked him to cable Mr. Colmer, secretary to the High Commissioner, to "have several pounds of the suspected lung properly put up, and sent to us for examination by Prof. Adami and myself." Instead of this being done, bottle I contained a portion of lung, 4 inches long, 1 inch wide, less than $\frac{1}{2}$ inch thick, weighing $1\frac{1}{2}$ ounce: the cork of which was tightened by paper, was not sealed, fitted loosely, and as a consequence, the spirit had leaked out or evaporated. Fortunately, however, the morsel was in a sufficient state of preservation to answer the purpose of examination both necroscopic and microscopic, as far as such a specimen could be used for the purpose.

Now, I do not say whether Sir Charles Tupper is responsible for his chief secretary, Mr. Coleman, or not. But I say that this report proves distinctly that gross carelessness characterized what was done in connection with this whole business. Sir Charles Tupper is there for the purpose of attending to this business. The Deputy Minister telegraphed to him for several pounds of the suspected lung, properly put up, and they received an ounce and three-quarters in a bottle so carelessly corked that all the spirit had leaked out or evaporated, and the specimen was in such a condition that no proper examination could be made. Is that evidence of care on the part of Sir Charles Tupper and his staff? I do not think it is. Are we not justified in finding fault with the manner in which they treated this whole business? The whole affair has been mismanaged. Sir Charles Tupper neglected his duty in connection with that thing, and his officers neglected their duty, and the result is that the embargo is on our cattle to-day. We see in the report that when Dr. McEachran asked for some two or three pounds of the lungs to be properly put up and sent out here for investigation, he gets an ounce and three-quarters put into a bottle and fastens the cork with a bit of paper, and when the bottle gets here the spirits are all gone. Now, are we not justified in saying that he has neglected his duty. We are paying a High Commissioner in England to attend to the affairs of the people of this country, and particularly to the cattle trade, and we have to-day the fact that our cattle are scheduled in England in consequence of the neglect of the High Commissioner. Now, the hon. member for North Bruce said I was not justified in saying that there had been any neglect. I contend I was perfectly justified in saying it, and I have proved my contention. I am exceedingly sorry that neglect has characterized the efforts of those people who were supposed to represent us there, with the result that our cattle are scheduled in England to-day, and the poor farmers of this country have got to suffer from the carelessness of those men.

Mr. SPROULE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is more anxious to make capital against Sir Charles Tupper than to get correct data about the nature of the disease. The very opinion he has given strengthens the suspicion that existed in my mind with regard to the lack of desire of the English people to do justice to us; because, when we made a request to have a veterinary expert of our own there in order to guard against carelessness, they refused that request. Sir Charles Tupper could not be held responsible for that refusal. I think the information that the hon. gentleman has given confirms the idea that we have not been dealt with as fairly as we ought to have been, because when they were going on slaughtering at different places, they did not allow us the privilege of having a veterinary surgeon present to look after our interests.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I think the Minister of Agriculture is not treating us fairly. This matter has been discussed for some days before the Agricultural Committee, and his highness, the Minister of Agriculture, cannot spare time to give even five minutes to the committee. Now, this question is being argued in this House, and he is not here, or near here. That is not fair. He could assist us to clear up these things. There is another trouble. While I think a great deal of Mr. McEachran, and think he is just the man for the place, I think the Government should at once increase his pay to such an amount that he could quit the Waldron ranche at once. If there are any difficulties between us and the old country owing to his connection with that business, surely we should have them removed. Our people are suffering and the Government should move at once. When Dr. McEachran says that it makes no difference to the people of this country whether the embargo is on or off, he surely does not understand the question. If cattle are high in the old country, their value is increased in the Dominion of Canada, and his cattle are increased in value as well. If there is an embargo on our cattle in England, of course the price of our cattle is affected correspondingly.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. He sells to the Indians.

Mr. MCGREGOR. There are a great number of people selling to the Indians who cannot sell to the old country. I say to the Government that they should make some arrangement so that the Minister of Agriculture should have a seat in this House. That is not a position for a lawyer. They should pick out the Minister of Agriculture from amongst their best material on that side of the House. There are hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who understand the agricultural interests of this country, and who could take that position with honour to themselves and honour to the country; and I would advise the Government to make a change.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If that subject has been sufficiently discussed, I want to refer to another matter. It has to do with the quarantining of swine that were sent to the Chicago Exhibition. When returning from there they were quarantined at Point Edward, or at Sarnia, and hog cholera developed among them, and several died. I want to ascertain just what position the Government take with reference to compensation to the parties who suffered loss thereby. I find in the report of the Minister of Agriculture, that Mr. Westell, the officer in charge, under date 31st October, 1893, says:

SIR,—I beg to submit my annual report of cattle and swine received into the Ontario Cattle Quarantine for the year ending 31st October, 1893.

I may state that there has been a slight decrease in the number of cattle imported, and also that they were of an inferior class in comparison to those of former years.

The import of swine was fair, and many of them were of excellent quality and breeding.

In addition to cattle and swine imported for breeding purposes, we have now in quarantine the Canadian cattle and swine which were returned from the World's Columbian Exposition.

The cattle are in excellent health and condition, but I regret very much to state that in fifteen days after the swine were received into quarantine we had a serious outbreak of hog cholera. However, up to the time of writing, we have only lost ten animals diseased, the balance of the herd remaining healthy as yet, and owing to the prompt isolation of those discovered and also those that were exposed, together with a free use of disinfectants, fumigation, &c., the disease has made no further advance, and I am strongly of the opinion that we will not have much more trouble, although this disease is of an insidious nature and demands the most careful attention for some considerable time.

I may state that there is but little doubt that those pigs came in contact with the disease germ when being shipped from Chicago, as they were driven over a platform subsequent to a herd of American swine which was believed to be affected with cholera—of the presence of which I am satisfied that the owners of the Canadian swine had no conception of at the time.

Mr. Westell gives a table of the Canadian swine returned from the Columbian Exhibition, from which it appears that thirty-eight belong to Mr. Joseph Featherston, Springfield, Ont., twenty-four to Mr. J. E. Brethour, of Burford, Ont.; two to John Bell, of Amber, Ont.; and three to James Calvert, of Thedford. It is with the case of Mr. Brethour that I am more particularly concerned. The report I read is dated at Sarnia on 31st October, and he speaks up to that date only; but I have a copy of some correspondence that passed with the department, and which shows that the disease was not confined to the animals mentioned there. Mr. Westell, the appraiser, gives a list of swine that were slaughtered, together with the age and appraised value of each animal. I see here that some seven hogs belonging to Mr. Brethour were there, three of which were slaughtered and four of which died. I understand that the department have not seen their way clear to compensate him, as I think they are in duty bound to do. There may be a little difficulty. I am not sure that there is any difficulty in making compensation for those that were slaughtered; but the contention is that the animals being in charge of the Government, Mr. Brethour having sent those valuable animals to Chicago at the request of the Government, and they having brought honour to Canada—I may say, notably, this gentleman's herd, and I believe Mr. Featherston's also—when they are brought back and quarantined by the Government, and are under the control of the Government, disease breaks out and the loss is incurred. Probably if the hogs had been slaughtered more promptly, or some more of them had been slaughtered, the others might not have died. At all events, it was when they were in charge of the Government and had been sent there at the request of the Government this loss occurred, for which a claim for compensation is made, and even if power under the Contagious Disease Act might technically not permit payment for those animals which died, not having been slaughtered, the case stands in an exceptional position, and they, having been sent there at the request of the Government, the Government being anxious that Canada should take as high a position as possible. This loss having been sustained while the hogs were in the Government charge, it is a case that might be dealt with even if there might be some technical difficulties in dealing with it under the Contagious Act. I can hardly expect that the Minister of Finance who is carrying through the Estimates of the Minister of Agriculture, is conversant with the case, but I should like to obtain some expression of opinion from him, and ascertain what view the Government take of the question. I think it is a matter of considerable importance, and I trust the Government will endeavour, under the circumstances, to do what they can in regard to it, and that they will not find themselves wholly trammelled by small technicalities, this being a case involving not the usual circumstances, but exceptional circumstances under which the animals were being returned to this country.

Mr. INGRAM. I am very glad the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Paterson) has brought this question before the House. Hon. members have heard much fault found with the present Minister of Agriculture because he is a lawyer, and is said not to understand agriculture. If any credit can be given in regard to this matter which has been brought before the committee, it must be given to the Minister of Agriculture, who happens to be a lawyer. I understand that when stock sent from Canada to the Chicago fair were being returned to this country, the Minister of Agriculture was requested by Mr. Dryden, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, to modify the quarantine regulations. The Dominion Minister refused to modify them. What was the result? Several hogs died of hog cholera. Had Mr. Dryden's advice been carried out, very serious losses would undoubtedly have occurred to the people of the Dominion. I understand that Mr. Dryden wished to bring them in without quarantining them, but, owing to the course taken by Mr. Angers, the loss of hogs was reduced very greatly indeed. However, with respect to the position of the claim made, I do not think that the damages could be claimed from the Dominion Government, alone, but that the Ontario Government, should be called upon to pay some of the claim: at all events, if the claims are to be paid, they should be paid jointly.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. The Canadian exhibitors of hogs did not want to bring them back in less time than that provided, which was twenty-one days. The original regulation was ninety days. This was considered by many breeders and by Mr. Dryden, too long a period, because our cattle were in a very healthy condition, and it was on that account that application was made that the regulation should be relaxed. With respect to the hogs, Mr. Brethour, myself, and others, did not want to take the risk of bringing them in within twenty-one days, because we knew that if they had contracted disease it might not appear until fifteen or sixteen days. Hog cholera broke out. I was there, and I had a couple of hogs die, and some of Mr. Brethour's hogs were very sick. The veterinary inspector wanted to slaughter them, but this was prevented by the Deputy Minister, who said the hogs were too valuable to be slaughtered, and we would have to take the risk of endeavouring to keep them alive and see if they could not be cured. We isolated a great many of the healthy animals, and spent much time with them, and we doctored them and prevented the disease from spreading very far. For those that died, the Government are just as responsible as if they had been slaughtered. By not slaughtering them, a large sum of money was saved to the Government.

Mr. SPROULE. As the Animals Contagious Act provides that animals affected with contagious diseases must be slaughtered, as those animals might have been slaughtered according to the provisions of the Order in Council, and as a veterinary inspector recognized that disease was present, I think the animals should be paid for. Another reason is that the stock here ought not to bear that expense, but it should be borne by the Government, as would have been done under the Order in Council if such instructions were given by the veterinary inspector.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) has asked me a question with respect to hogs. I know nothing in regard to the matter. I think it has been entirely departmental, and all I can do is to inquire and ascertain what will be the decision of the department and the Government in the matter. I think it is desirable that the committee should rise, as this subject seems to be interminable. This week we have been for two days trying to get through six items in the Estimates, and we have sat here until 2.30 and 12.30, and after this perhaps we had better come to the conclusion to adjourn early and sit through the summer. I do not want to abridge any right of discussion, but we have not made any progress with the estimates during the last two days. My understanding was that when certain technical information had been given we would make some progress. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I trust the hon. gentleman does not apply his remarks to me.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. More time has been occupied by hon. gentlemen opposite than by hon. members on this side.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I had hoped that I might perhaps obtain a more clear expression of opinion in regard to this matter. I judge, however, that the Minister is not in the position to make a further announcement, but I thought the subject would be of interest to the committee, because the case is different to one of ordinary importation of stock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I just take the liberty of remarking to the Minister of Finance that so far as yesterday's proceedings were concerned, the delay of public business was due wholly and entirely to gentlemen on his side of the House and to nothing else. As regards what has passed to-night, I do not think he has much right to complain. I do not want to pretend that hon. gentlemen on the other side have not the right to interfere in discussions, but I do say this: that as a rule the Estimates would be better got through if gentlemen on that side of the House—it is their own choice of course to do so—would allow their Ministers who are especially charged with these matters to conduct the discussions.

Mr. FOSTER. I think gentlemen on this side of the House have some right to discuss these questions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not pretend to deny that, but I do pretend to say that in the matter of promoting public business, it is usually more convenient for the Ministers themselves to reply to the questions asked, and not for the more irresponsible members of the party to do so.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I just wish to state to the House, that the inspector made a valuation of these animals and the valuation placed on some of mine was not half what I would take for them. All that we are allowed for those killed is two-thirds of that amount, and for those that die we are not to be allowed anything. I want the Government to consider that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to mention a circumstance which occurred, I think two years ago. A certain number of hogs were diseased in the county of Kent and the Ontario Government inspectors came on the ground first and ordered them to be killed. Later on the Dominion inspector came and ordered a number more to be killed. The Dominion Government were willing to pay their proportion of the cost of those that their inspector had ordered to be slaughtered, but they refused to pay for what the Local Government had ordered to be slaughtered. The matter came before Sir John Carling, then Minister of Agriculture, and after considering it thoroughly he reported in favour of paying for all the hogs that were slaughtered, whether by order of the Dominion or Ontario Governments.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 15th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) moved that the second report of the joint committee of both Houses on the Library of Parliament, be concurred in.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That report refers to a very interesting historical event, and to the services of gentlemen who have taken great pains to commemorate it, namely, the fact that the first steam vessel to cross the Atlantic Ocean was a Canadian built ship. I hope the House will indulge me for a moment while I bring to their attention of the services of a gentleman in connection with that subject, that have not been specially referred to in the report. In July, 1893, the Nova Scotia Historical Society, at a special meeting held at Halifax, adopted the following resolutions:—

Resolved, that this society respectfully second the recommendation of the Canadian Institute that the Government of Canada should adopt some means of commemorating the fact that the first vessel propelled by steam through the entire voyage across the Atlantic, was the 'Royal William' built at Quebec, and owned in Canada, and which made the pioneer voyage from Pictou to London in 1833.

And further resolved, that this society suggests the expediency of having the evidence proving the pioneer ocean steamship to have been a Canadian vessel, properly collated and published in pamphlet form under the auspices of the Government.

And further resolved, that the members of Parliament and senators from Halifax and Pictou be requested to present these recommendations to the Dominion authorities.

Subsequent to that, the subject having been referred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, it was my good fortune to receive an offer of gratuitous services in this connection from Captain F. C. Wurtele, honorary librarian of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, and I wish to state to the House the great care and thoroughness with which that gentleman undertook this very interesting review, in which he prepared and collated all the facts and circumstances connected with the building of that ship in Quebec, and her outfit and departure from the port of Pictou, which is situated in the county I have the honour to represent, and her voyage across the Atlantic Ocean. That paper of Captain Wurtele's was considered by the Governor in Council, and on the 28th February last, the following minute was adopted:—

On a memorandum, dated 20th February, 1894, from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, submitting herewith a pamphlet prepared by Capt. F. C. Wurtele, honorary librarian of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, free of charge, in which evidence is collected establishing the fact that the 'Royal William' was the first vessel propelled by steam to cross the Atlantic, and recommending that the same be referred to the Secretary of State for publication, or for such other action as may be by him deemed advisable.

The Minister also recommends that he be authorized to convey to Capt. Wurtele the thanks of the Government of Canada for his services in this matter. The committee submit the same for Your Excellency's approval.

I simply wish to add that the Secretary of State has been good enough to see that this interesting document shall not remain among the records of the Department of Marine, or become musty through being simply filed away there, but has taken steps to have it printed and put within reach of all who care either to commemorate this interesting event or to study the naval history of the country.

Motion agreed to, and Report concurred in.

Bill (No. 142) to amend the Act respecting the incorporation of Boards of Trade.—(Sir John Thompson.)

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. PERRY. I desire to inquire from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when the order respecting trips made by the steamer 'Stanley' will be brought down?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No time has been lost in overtaking the returns asked for by my department, but the demand has been very heavy. Some of the returns are exceedingly voluminous. I have brought down quite a number already, and there are some in course of progress. That long return is in course of preparation. The return for which the hon. gentleman has now asked is, however, not a very lengthy one, and I hope to be able to give him a definite answer soon.

Mr. PERRY. I desire also to call the attention of the Department of Railways and Canals to a return which was promised a few days ago, and which was ordered by the House in the early part of the session. That return has not yet been brought down.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to two returns moved for in the early part of the session, one relating to repairs made to steamers, and the other respecting ss. 'Petrel.'

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The first is a very long return, which is almost completed. The other is also a lengthy return. They are, however, both under way; the first one is nearly ready, and the second one is in course of preparation, but it was only moved for two weeks ago.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I really think the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry) is hardly being treated fairly in regard to the return he seeks to obtain from the Department of Railways and Canals. It is a short return, and was ordered early in the session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Minister of Railways and Canals is not here, but I will see that he is informed of the matter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. A return ordered of the amount of goods imported from the United States by the Government last year for the service of the Government has not yet been brought down. It cannot be a very long return, because the Government are too loyal to import from the United States when they can get goods from the mother country. I hope there will be no delay in bringing it down. The Controller is not here, but probably the Ministers will be able to find him.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I thought it was a return the hon. gentleman wanted.

An hon. MEMBER. It is the return of the Controller.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He will be back pretty soon.

SUPPLY—SALE OF THOUSAND ISLANDS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before you, Mr. Speaker, leave the Chair, there is a matter which requires rather prompt action on the part of the House, and to which I desire to call the attention of the Government. The papers connected with it, or most of them, have reached me only this morning, but the matter is one which will not require a very lengthy discussion on my part, and I have no doubt the Government will see the reasonableness of the proposition I intend to make. It has reference to a matter which was before the House on one or two occasions last year. I noticed in the 'Citizen' a few days ago the following advertisement, respecting the sale of a portion of the Thousand Islands:—

SALE OF PORTION OF THOUSAND ISLANDS IN THE RIVER ST. LAWRENCE.

The Department of Indian Affairs offer for sale the Islands opposite the townships of Leeds, Lansdowne, Escott and Yonge, in the River St. Lawrence.

Terms: Cash, or one-quarter cash and the balance in three equal annual instalments with interest at 6 per cent; not more than two islands to be sold to one purchaser. Although applications will be received no sales will be made before 2nd July, 1894.

Information as to the Islands can be obtained from, and applications to purchase made to,

Mr. JOHN ORMISTON,
Gananoque, Ont.;

Mr. JOSEPH COOK,
Rockport, Ont.;

and the undersigned,

HAYTER REED,
Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, June, 1894.

Now, Sir, in connection with this, I may mention to the House that last year it was proposed to sell those islands, though I think not exactly the same way; and that on the knowledge of the Government's intention being given to the public, the press and a number of influential individuals on both sides of politics remonstrated so strongly against this proposed disposition that the Government for the time being suspended the operation of their order. Since that a good deal of correspondence has passed between the Ontario Government and the Dominion Government on this subject, and I find from a return brought down and laid on the Table of the House, moved for by my hon. friend beside me, that certain propositions were made by the Ontario Government—I am furnished with a copy of them, I may say, by the Ontario authorities—and the return contains a report of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on 21st May, 1894, communicated in reply to a letter received from the Provincial Government under date 26th April, 1894. In this communication, which was made on 26th April last, the Ontario Government submitted three propositions for the consideration of the Dominion Government: first, they proposed that the Dominion Government should retain those islands as a public park; second, they proposed if that was not acceptable to the Dominion Government, that to save expense to the Dominion the province should pay one-half and the Dominion pay one-half, the islands to be reserved as a public park; third, that if the Government did not see their way to accept either of those propositions, they should name a price and allow the Ontario Government the option of purchasing this whole property for the purpose of reserving it for the benefit of the whole people of Canada. There is a considerable portion of this letter taken up with complaints that, owing to some misunderstanding, the Dominion Government did not give the Ontario Government such information as they required with respect to the price that would be accepted for all those islands in sufficient time to enable the Provincial Government to submit a proposition looking to the purchase of the whole for the purpose of a public park to the Legislature recently dissolved. In reply to that communication, the Dominion Government on 21st May passed the following Order in Council:—

The Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration a despatch dated 26th April, 1894, from the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario on the subject of the sale of islands in Thousand Island group in River St. Lawrence.

The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, to whom the matter was referred, states:—

“First: That as to the suggestion that the Dominion Government might appropriate to the benefit of the Indian owners of the islands the value or assessed value thereof, and maintain them as a national park, instead of disposing of them to private purchasers, he cannot recommend that Parliament be asked to vote the money necessary for the purchase, as he does not consider that the reserving of the islands as a public park would be in the general public interest, nor can he, for the same reason, recommend that Parliament be asked to appropriate money for the payment of part of the value of the islands, the Government of Ontario to pay the remainder, with a view of their being held jointly, with the Dominion and Ontario Governments, as a public park, as suggested in His Honour's despatch. The Department of Indian Affairs has already reserved and limited the islands for sale.

Secondly: That the information asked for by the Ontario Government as to the lowest price which would be accepted for the islands has been already given in the Order in Council of the 31st of March last, a copy of which is being transmitted to the Lieutenant-Governor of the province. The Minister cannot see his way to recommend that a price less than the value placed on the islands and set forth in the above mentioned Order in Council should be accepted for them, as the Government of Canada is bound as trustee to the Indian owners to secure for them the full value of the islands, regardless of what the desire of other classes of the community may be with respect to the reserving of the islands as a public park.

Third: The Minister further states that as to the concluding part of the despatch, it was thought that the information transmitted to the Ontario Government respecting the islands was what was asked for in the despatches from that Government, and was such as to convey the views of the Dominion Government as to the disposal of the islands. He regrets that it should have been found unsatisfactory, but he cannot on that ground recommend that the islands be withdrawn from sale until there is an opportunity for negotiation and a subsequent reference to the Legislature, as the Indians are anxious to have the islands sold, and their interest demands that there should be no delay in realizing upon them. The Committee on the recommendation of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, advise that a certified copy of this minute, if approved, be forwarded to the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario in reply to his despatch of the 26th April, 1894.

(Sgd.) JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk, Privy Council.

Well, Sir, this which is dated on the 21st of May, could not have reached, of course, the Government of Ontario until some days thereafter, and I think after the period that the Ontario Legislature was prorogued, although I am not quite sure on that point. It must have been after it was prorogued or in the very last days of the session. I am bound to say that I think on the whole that it is probable that the Government have acted, looking at the date of these despatches, without due consideration inasmuch as probably at the time that these Orders in Council were penned their attention was likely to have been very much occupied with other matters. But I desire to point out to them: that the proposed action is inexpedient to be taken at this present moment on every conceivable ground. I am not at all disposed to quarrel with the admirable doctrine laid down by the present Superintendent General of Indian Affairs: that the Government of Canada is bound as trustee for the Indian owners to secure the full value of the islands and all other such property as well. I have pointed out time and again on the floor of this House that Government—not only with respect to these islands, but with respect to all the property of the Indians—is acting as a trustee, and is bound to do its best for its wards. I am not going to quarrel, therefore, with the Government for the declaration of their intention for the future to secure the best value for the Indians for all their property. I only wish that predecessors of the hon. gentleman had been as zealous as he appears to be to secure full value for the Indians with respect to all their property. But, Sir, I want to submit to the Government, that in the interests of the Indians themselves, the Government cannot take a worse course to secure a full value for these properties than to attempt to dispose of these islands at this date, and in the way they propose to do. I am very well acquainted with these islands, which lie almost at my own door, and I know perfectly well that not for many years has there been so extremely unfavourable a time as at this present moment to sell the islands, whether by public auction or by private tender. It is to my knowledge that the Government a few years ago, and I fancy also in a very few years after this present date, would be able to secure ten purchasers or ten tenderers for the one that they can secure today. Every one who knows anything of the position of affairs generally in Canada, and in that part particularly, knows that now is an extremely unfavourable time to bring any real estate of any kind to sale, and more especially in the case of property which is likely to be acquired for purposes of recreation and pleasure. If, therefore, the object which is inducing the Government to carry on this sale is the interests of the Indians, I protest on their behalf in the strongest possible manner against selling this property now, on account of the extremely unfavourable condition of the real estate market, especially in that locality. But, Sir, wholly apart from that I submit that this is an extremely bad way to attempt to sell. What the Government are proposing to do is not to put these islands up to public competition where every man knows what his neighbour is bidding, and can outbid him if he pleases; but they propose to accept private tenders. It was by mere accident that this advertisement came under my notice, although I am naturally considerably interested in the disposal of these islands, and I am aware that very few persons knew of what the Government were proposing to do. More than that, there is no chance of getting the legitimate value of these islands if the sale is to be done by a series of letters addressed to the department where no man will know what price has been offered by another for the property in question. There is another very grave objection and it is this: You cannot take a step more likely to put these islands—which ought to be regarded, I think, as a national park—you cannot take a step more likely to put the most valuable and most select and very choicest of these islands into the hands of a few greedy speculators, than to dispose of them as they are now being disposed of. If this process is had recourse to for the sale of the islands, a very few persons who know the localities will be able to secure at almost nominal sums, or at sums probably very considerably below their value, the choicest of these islands, which they will in all human probability, proceed to retail within a very few weeks or months to wealthy American citizens who may choose to purchase them. The result will, therefore, be that the Indians will lose a large amount of the money that might otherwise have gone to the credit of their fund—if it be the object of the Government to protect them—and a certain very limited number of persons having special local knowledge will have an opportunity, at the cost of the Indians, of making a very respectable profit. I, therefore, object in the strongest possible manner to the proposition that these islands should be sold in this way by private tender, and not with an upset price by public competition as they should be. Then, Sir, in the last place, I protest strongly against the proposition to sell the remainder of these islands now in our hands, amounting to between 700 and 800 islands, when there is a fair opportunity of disposing of them en bloc to the Legislature of the province of Ontario to be held for a public park. Sir, I say that every one who knows these islands well is aware that it is perhaps an extremely desirable thing that the present nominal ownership of the Indians should be brought to an end in some way or other, and for this reason: the islands are not, I admit, at this present moment at all properly looked after or properly protected. Year by year—in fact, I might say almost month by month or week by week—very beautiful islands are being devastated by vandals from the main shore for the sake of obtaining a few cords of wood; and, not content with that, after destroying the timber, they are in the habit of setting fire to the islands, and reducing what were exceedingly picturesque objects to heaps of blackened rocks on which for years to come no living object will be seen. I have seen that time and again; and I would be disposed to assist the Government in any reasonable steps they might take to put an end to that state of things, and to retain these beautiful properties as an ornament to the country and the St. Lawrence. But I think there is every possible ground for considering, and considering favourably, the application made by the Ontario Government to keep these islands for the general benefit of the population of Canada. The St. Lawrence is one of the most magnificent waterways in the world; and I must say—although I have not been very greatly in the habit of indulging in high-flown doctrines as to the exclusion of American citizens from competition in all reasonable ways—that I would for my part dislike very much to see, what will be the inevitable result if this project is carried out, the six or seven hundred islands, or the best part of them, placed at the disposal of worthy citizens of Boston, New York, and other American cities, and not to be able to travel down the St. Lawrence for forty miles without being regaled with the sight of the American flag flying on both sides of the river. At this moment, although the owners have displayed great taste in laying out their grounds, the islands on the American side have been converted, from being the people's playground, into the private property of wealthy Americans; and the same result is going to follow on our side if we carry out the project proposed. By the return in my hand I see that propositions are made by a number of American gentlemen to purchase these properties, and they will most assuredly become the possessors of a great number of those islands; and the people who have been in the habit of using them to a very great extent as a summer playground, will be absolutely debarred from all such use of them for the future. Now, for the sake of the paltry $3,000 or $4,000 a year, which is all that is involved in this matter—inasmuch as I see that the Government valuation of the islands does not exceed $80,000 all told—I do not think it is worth our while to allow 700 of these islands, which are now the property of the public, to be converted to the uses which I have described, or even to become the property of some of our own wealthier citizens. In this country, during the summer, the water is the natural resource for amusement and recreation of a very large number of our people; and I think it would be a very great mistake indeed to allow the people, from Montreal to Kingston, and much farther up, to be deprived of all access to these islands, as they must necessarily be, if they go absolutely into private hands. Now, Sir, we on this side of the House did not object to the appropriation, although it was a very considerable one, which was made for the national park at Banff. I forget at this moment what the cost of that park was; but I think I am not far wrong in saying that $200,000 or $300,000 has been sunk from first to last upon it. At any rate, a considerable sum has been spent, and a considerable annual charge incurred. I think that money was not ill spent, although I remember at the time that it was spent without the formality of consulting Parliament, and I objected to that. But of our present population not one in a hundred will have the opportunity of participating in the benefit of the Banff Park, whereas, from the situation of the Thousand Islands, if they are made into a national park, a very large percentage of our population will have an opportunity of deriving some benefit from the reservation. Moreover, Sir, the Government will note that there can be no possible injury done to the Indians by delaying action in this matter. On the contrary, they will benefit to the extent of many thousands of dollars by this sale being put off to an appropriate time; and, after the Ontario Government have explained as they have done at length why, not being able to obtain the information they desired, they were not able to submit to the Legislature a proposition for the purchase of this property, in case the Government refused their other offers. I think it is only reasonable and fair, as a matter of common courtesy between the two Governments, as a matter in which a very large number of the people of Ontario are personally interested—because there is an immense number of them who are in the habit of making a holiday among the Thousand Islands—I think it is asking a little thing to ask that the action of the Government should be suspended until such time as the Government of Ontario may have an opportunity of making up their minds on the matter, and submitting a proposition to the Local Legislature. Now, I am not going to move this motion as a motion of want of confidence, but for the purpose of putting my own views in good time on record; and I may say that, if the Government after considering the matter choose to give a reasonable time for the Government of Ontario to take action, then I would have no objection to take their word, and withdraw the motion. But if, unhappily, the Government should take another view, then I shall be compelled to move:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"this House has learnt with surprise that it is the intention of the Government to dispose forthwith of the remainder of the Thousand Islands by private tender."

That in the opinion of this House the present is not an opportune time for disposing of the said Islands, and further, that in view of the proposition submitted by the Government of the province of Ontario to purchase the same for the purpose of converting them into a public park for the benefit of the people of Canada, it is expedient that no further action be taken.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. gentleman had not seen the advertisements that have appeared in the different newspapers, in his own town of Kingston as well as in other places, in reference to the proposed sale of the Thousand Islands, which would have informed him, as well as other people who read the newspapers, that it is the intention of the Government to carry out the provisions of the Order in Council to which the hon. gentleman has referred. Now, I understand that the hon. gentleman's chief objection to the sale of these islands at the present time is that owing to the depression in real estate—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not my chief objection; one of the chief.

Mr. DALY. One of the hon. gentleman's chief objections was that owing to the depression in the value of real estate in the province of Ontario the return for these islands would not be as great as would otherwise be the case. The hon. gentleman has evidently overlooked the memorandum of Council to which he referred, dated the 31st March, 1894, conveying the information asked for by the Ontario Government, that the islands were valued at $73,230, and that the islands were not to be disposed of at auction, but that by the Order in Council of the 18th of November, 1893, authority was given for the disposal of the same by private sale, without any condition as to settlement or improvements, at upset prices, to be fixed in accordance with the valuation made by the Department of Indian Affairs, not more than two islands to be sold to any one purchaser, and so on. The hon. gentleman will see by the return that these islands were all valued a year ago last January, that they were well and carefully valued, and that the prices set opposite them are said, by parties, not only who are in the neighbourhood and conversant with the values of the islands, but others who are in the habit of visiting those islands, to be really beyond their value. The position of the Government is simply this, as stated in that memorandum. We are trustees for the Indians; they have repeatedly expressed the desire to the department to sell the islands, they want the benefit of the money to be realized by the sale. What the Government propose to do, in order to carry out the desire of the Indians, is to sell the islands, not at a sacrifice, as the hon. gentleman says, but at the upset prices placed in the return sent down, and at a valuation that will give a return to the Indians equal, in every instance, to the value of the islands. It may seem strange, and has not possibly occurred to the hon. gentleman, that the Government of which he was a member disposed of a number of the islands at a far less valuation than that placed on them by Mr. Beatty last year. At that time, neither the hon. gentleman nor his party had the same desire to preserve those islands for a public park as at present, and it may be interesting to know that in a valuation made by Mr. Unwin for the Mackenzie Government in 1874, he valued these same islands, which are now valued at $73,000, at $10,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That gentleman knew very little of what he was doing.

Mr. DALY. That may be, but he was an officer of the hon. gentleman's Government at the time. But it may be that the difference is due to the fact that Mr. Unwin omitted to value 130 of the islands, which have since been discovered by Mr. Beatty to have been overlooked by him. These islands have been valued at $73,000, an increase of $62,500 over the valuation made by Mr. Unwin. I will give some valuations which will show some of the discrepancies. Mr. Unwin valued Hog Island at $80, and Mr. Beatty valued it at $120. Wood Island, Mr. Unwin valued at $100, and Mr. Beatty at $500. Pine or Dashwood Island, Mr. Unwin valued at $25, and Mr. Beatty at $325. Island No. 88, Mr. Unwin valued at $20, and Mr. Beatty at $300. Fowler Island, Mr. Unwin valued at $150, and Mr. Beatty at $303. There are a number of other instances I might give, where the valuation made by Mr. Unwin was 50 per cent less than that placed on the islands by Mr. Beatty, and there is no reason given by the hon. gentleman, or by the newspapers which opposed the sale of the islands last year, why the Government, as trustees for the Indians should not proceed to sell these islands at the prices fixed. The whole desire of the Government is to get what money there is in the islands for the Indians. We have had a careful valuation made, and none of the islands will be sold at a dollar less than the valuation placed upon them, and in many instances we will get a larger sum. As to the correspondence had with the Ontario Government, it appears that some time elapsed between the despatch by the Ontario Government and the Governor General's memorandum in reply. There was no intentional delay on the part of this Government, but, owing to other press of business, these memoranda were not dealt with by Council probably as quickly as they should have been. But I contend that all the information required by the Local Government was given in the Order in Council of the 31st March, which reads as follows:—

Mr. DALY

The Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration the despatch hereto attached, dated 1st of March, 1894, from the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, respecting the sale of islands in the Thousand Island group in the St. Lawrence, and in which it is stated that the minute of Council of the 8th of February, 1894, does not contain the information asked for, namely:—

1. The lowest aggregate price for all the unsold islands; and
2. The price of those of them which were to be sold at the auction, and the aggregate acreage or estimated acreage.

The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, to whom the matter was referred, states that there are 764 unincumbered islands in the River St. Lawrence, between Kingston and Brockville, under the control of the Department of Indian Affairs, containing an area approximately of 560 acres, valued at $79,914; that by the Order in Council of the 15th of June, 1893, authority was given for the sale by auction of 686 islands situated opposite the townships of Leeds, Escott, Lansdowne and Yonge, estimated to contain 515 acres, valued at $73,230; that the said islands were not disposed of at auction, but that by the Order in Council of the 18th of November, 1893, authority was given for the disposal of the same by private sale, without any condition as to settlement or improvements, at upset prices to be fixed in accordance with the valuation made by the Department of Indian Affairs, not more than two islands to be sold to any one purchaser; and by Order in Council of the 8th of February, 1894, it was directed that in the event of the Government of Ontario desiring to purchase more than two of the aforesaid islands, the condition in the Order in Council of the 18th of November, 1893, restricting the purchaser to two islands should be relaxed.

The committee, on the recommendation of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, advise that a certified copy of this minute, if approved, be forwarded to the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario in reply to his despatch of the 1st of March instant.

The Ontario Government got all the information required, not only in this memorandum of the 31st March, but by Order in Council of the 8th February. They were advised that in the event of their desiring to purchase more than two of the aforesaid islands, the condition of the Order in Council, which had been transmitted to them, would be relaxed, showing to the Ontario Government that if they were desirous of carrying out their intention, this Government were prepared to deal with them. The mere fact of our going to sell these islands, according to the advertisement read by the hon. gentleman, does not preclude the Ontario Government coming forward and purchasing them. But neither they, nor any one else can get them a dollar less than they are valued at, and they will have an opportunity between now and then of stating whether or not they are desirous of carrying out the proposition made by them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Between now and the 2nd of July?

Mr. DALY. It does not say in the advertisement, nor is it the intention, that on the 2nd of July, if the Ontario Government still desires to purchase those islands, that the offers will be accepted. In fact, the whole delay in the advertisement appearing was occasioned by the desire on the part of this Government to wait the action of the Ontario Government. The islands would have been advertised months ago were it not for that fact. Now, whether they be sold by auction or not, so long as there is an upset price, it makes no difference—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, yes.

Mr. DALY—I do not see why the hon. gentleman shakes his head at me. We have had an upset valuation fixed by competent men, which is larger than that of the hon. gentleman's officer, and, as far as the Indians are concerned, they will get every dollar of value in the islands. It makes no difference—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It makes an enormous difference. A number of men may combine.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman overlooks the fact that we had auction sales in 1891, and put the Indians to the expense of advertising the auction sales, and in all some fifty islands were put up, and only some eight or ten purchased. All the expenses of advertising, &c., were charged against the Indian fund, and all the sales we could make were of eight or ten islands.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The conditions were very different.

Mr. DALY. Only as to settlement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Aye, very different conditions.

Mr. DALY. That was not the objection raised by the purchasers, but an attempt to sell them by auction which failed. At that time, when there was a proposed sale and that sale was advertised, why did not the hon. gentleman take the course he does now; why did not the Ontario Government take the course it does now? It seems to me that this whole agitation has arisen from a misunderstanding of the manner in which these islands are held by the Government. From letters and editorials that appeared in certain newspapers last summer—which I had no opportunity of reading at that time, but which I read afterwards—the people would be led to understand that the Government were the owners of these islands and could dispose of them as they saw fit, while the fact is that the islands are owned by the Indians and the Government are only trustees. The Government are doing their best, as trustees, to get full value for these islands. I am quite prepared, if the hon. gentleman or anybody else will go to the islands and make a valuation and will establish before any fair tribunal that they have placed a fair value upon them, I will undertake to show that we have never been ready to sell them under these figures, but that our policy has always been one that would yield to the Indians every dollar that there was in the property. It is a matter of sentiment whether there shall be a park there or not. If there is to be a park, it is not for this Government to establish it, but rather for the Ontario Government. I do not think that the representatives in this House of other parts of Canada desire that the money of this Government should be spent in providing a park for the province of Ontario. The hon. gentleman has referred to the National Park. But that is a different case altogether. The land there was the property of the Dominion of Canada, while this is not, the Dominion only holding it in trust for the Indians.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is there any real difference between acquiring land for a park and spending a large sum of money for park purposes on property which is already in the Government's possession?

Mr. DALY. There certainly is.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am unable to see it.

Mr. DALY. The Banff Park is almost self-sustaining at this time, as can be shown by the figures, and any expenditure made upon that park is being recouped by fees and other receipts in connection with the park itself. The Government could not acquire the title to these islands until they pay the $73,000, and on those terms it can be acquired by the Ontario Government or anybody else. I regret, so far as I am personally concerned, that there has been any delay in reference to the correspondence of this Government with the Government of Ontario. It was not intentional, but we withheld the advertising of these lands to suit the action of the Ontario Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Until the most inconvenient time for the Ontario Government.

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. member for South Oxford had not moved his motion as an amendment on going into Supply, and if to support his motion would not take the colour of voting a want of confidence in the Government, I should be glad to vote for it. For my part—and I take the responsibility of speaking for a constituency twelve hundred miles away from these islands—I would support the hon. member's request, and I rise to speak in favour of it, though I may have to vote the other way. I may say that I am heartily in favour of the position he took that the Dominion of Canada should recognize the fact, the simple geographical fact, that this river is the national river of Canada, and one of the great rivers of the world—indeed many of us who have seen other great rivers believe that this is the finest river on the earth. If the question were only one of four or five thousand dollars a year, I take the responsibility of saying that, though representing a county so far away, I should have pleasure in supporting the hon. member's policy, and to say also that I should feel considerable regret if the opposite policy were pursued. I see no difficulty in the way of extinguishing the Indians' title and establishing a national park on these islands. I may say that I have never heard our people complain of the appropriation for the Banff National Park. I have heard the matter discussed, but I have not heard the policy of the Government in that case objected to. Where one from our provinces can go to Banff, a hundred will find their way to the St. Lawrence, and I very much wish that my remonstrance could have some weight with the Minister. I very much wish that even at this late stage, he would reconsider the question and not be too much impressed with the hostility he believes he would find in the votes and feelings of gentlemen from distant provinces. I have heard more than one member of the House from the Maritime Provinces speak on this subject, and I know that they feel as I do. At this busy hour, did I not feel warmly interested in preserving our control over these islands, I would not have spoken.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the proposition submitted by the Local Government to the Department of Indian Affairs was entitled to more consideration than the hon. Minister has been disposed to give to it. Whether this property should be acquired from the Indians at the expense of the Dominion of Canada or at the expense of the province of Ontario is an arguable question, but it seems to me that the proposition that a portion of the expense might fairly be charged to the province of Ontario, because the property is situated within that province, and a portion charged to the Dominion as also having an interest, because it represents all the provinces, is one that might be fairly accepted. The hon. gentleman says that these islands have been valued much more highly recently than they were some twenty years ago—it was in 1874. I think, that the valuation to which he has referred was made. I dare say that the valuation then and the valuation made more recently represented fairly the value of the islands at these respective times. A large number of the islands in the vicinity of the American side of the river have been disposed of since the first valuation and cottages have been erected upon them. So that the islands which remain on the Canadian side have become more valuable than they were a few years ago. There is another reason for an increase in value—the people are taking a greater interest in the establishment of parks and summer resorts now than they did ten years ago. Why, Sir, within the last three years two large parks have been established in the province of Ontario, one in Rondeau in the southwest portion of the province, and the other in the Muskoka region. It was natural, I think, that the people residing in the eastern part of the province should seek to have a park established where the population from the surrounding district—that portion of the province lying east of Kingston—might have a proper summer resort. Now, I think the reason why the Local Government of the province of Ontario did not apply sooner for the purchase of these islands is perfectly obvious. It is that no steps were being taken in any portion of the province five years ago for the purpose of establishing such parks. But when land to the extent of four thousand acres was set apart at Rondeau Bay for the purpose of a park, it was quite natural that the representatives of the province of Ontario in eastern sections should look about them to see whether a suitable location for a summer resort could not be found, and it was equally natural that the Thousand Islands should be the place fixed upon for such a purpose. The hon. gentleman has said, that, as trustee, he is anxious to obtain a fair price for these islands on behalf of the Indians. That is right and proper, and no one will at all complain because of the hon. gentleman's desire in that respect. But it does seem to me that if the hon. gentleman should consider an immediate sale necessary, it would be quite proper to extinguish the Indian title and regard these lands as lands still vested in the Crown, subject to the price required for the extinguishment of that title, and then hand them over to the Local Government upon the payment of the necessary sum or that portion that would be a fair contribution on the part of the province of Ontario, if it was thought the province of Ontario should also defray a portion of the expense. It seems to me that it is not unreasonable to say that a portion of this charge should be borne by the Dominion. These islands are nearer Montreal than any other great city; they are as likely to become a summer resort for the population of that city as for any portion of the province of Ontario; and being outside the province, it would not be unreasonable to say that a portion of the expense necessary for the extinguishment of the Indian title or claim for these islands, should be borne by the Dominion Government as representing a population interested in establishing there a national park for a population lying beyond the limits of the province. Then we have this consideration: if these islands pass into the hands of private parties, they will in most cases pass into the hands of the most wealthy portion of the population who have little difficulty in acquiring for themselves pleasant summer resorts anywhere they may be disposed to go. But with regard to the great mass of the population of Canada who may desire to spend a few days away from home, unless such places of resort are provided at the public expense, none are likely to be available to them. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. Minister the propriety of acquiescing in the proposition of the Local Government, and securing those islands as a Dominion acquisition on behalf of the whole population of Canada, as a summer resort. It may be that very many people in distant portions may not be able to avail themselves of this resort, but in so extensive a country as this, that is true of any resort that you may establish in any portion of the Dominion. That is true of Banff, it is ten times as true of Banff as it is of the Thousand Islands; and therefore I suggest to the hon. Minister and to his colleagues the propriety of retaining these islands by entering into negotiations with the Local Government as to the terms on which they are to be held and the portion of the burden that each has to bear; or if the hon. gentleman thinks that all should be borne by the Local Government, I am not making any serious objection to that, although I think the other proposition would be the more equitable one. But I would be very sorry indeed to see these islands pass into private hands, and that a very important place of recreation should be taken away from a large class of the population who would otherwise have no such place available.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are several interests to be considered in relation to this matter. One of them is the question whether the Dominion of Canada is to undertake for the first time—I say for the first time, notwithstanding the allusion to Banff—to establish a system of national parks throughout the country. Now, we had a tract of land in Banff situated entirely within our own territory, a tract of land possessing peculiar natural characteristics to so great an extent that it was impossible to deal with that tract of land in the manner that was applicable to the rest of the territory. It was unsuited for settlement, and if we parted with any of the tract in which the celebrated sulphur springs or other characteristics of that kind, exist, we should be putting into private hands that which eventually was likely to be of great general benefit. We, therefore, reserved a large tract of land around these peculiar natural characteristics, and we called it a national park, and spent a sum of money to put it in order. There were not many objections to that; I think there were practically no objections to it in this House. Some comments were passed on the expense which was likely to be incurred, but there were no practical objections. There would have been an intense objection if it had been supposed that an argument would be drawn from that for the establishment of a national park in every part of Canada; and how we can establish a national park in the province of Ontario and not establish a national park in other provinces where the scenery is quite as beautiful, and access to it for the inhabitants of the particular province, would be much more easy than it would be at the Thousand Islands, I fail to see. I think if we establish this as a national park, we ought certainly to establish a national park in every part of Canada. There is another consideration involved, and that is the interests of the Indians, who have been pressing to have the islands sold for some time. The islands were advertised last summer, and there was a great clamour, and a great many people thought that was the very worst time at which the islands could be brought to sale. In consequence of the want of time and opportunity to consider the great objections raised, the matter was allowed to stand over until this year, and an advertisement is issued once more. There is likewise the interest of the inhabitants of the vicinity to be considered. The inhabitants of the vicinity are inclined to think that it was a very satisfactory circumstance that the Indians desired these islands to be brought to sale, because it was far more beneficial to their interests that these islands should go into private hands, and be improved, beautified and occupied than to be left to the depredations which the hon. member for South Oxford has described, and under which they are apt to become eyesores instead of spots of beauty. When we look at the other side of the St. Lawrence, we see all these islands beautified, we see them adorned, we find residences on them occupied by a wealthy people, people of leisure, who have the means to improve them in that way; and the inhabitants of the surrounding district find advantage from the improvement which has taken place, added to the great attractions of those islands. But on our own side everything is bare and unoccupied, because these are Indian lands, and because hitherto we have not been willing to part with them except on such conditions of settlement as were very burdensome, at any rate, to the people on our own side of the line, for the means of people who are willing to buy them are more limited; and the inhabitants of the vicinity have joined their request to that of the Indians that we should open these to settlement, improvement and population. I was not at all aware that there would be such extreme objection to the Stars and Stripes being seen on any of these islands on a summer day; least of all did I suppose such an objection would come from the quarter from which it has come. But if that is very objectionable, let us put in a condition that the Stars and Stripes shall not be allowed to fly. But is it carrying that feature of loyalty, so lately cropping up, to an extreme to say that we should rather have these islands remain in a savage condition, and liable to be not only plundered but reduced to an unsightly condition, lest perchance somebody should exhibit a foreign flag upon them? I think that is taking and urging upon this House rather an extreme view. Now, the other circumstances that ought to be taken into consideration, I submit, are these: The Ontario Government is disposed, it would seem, from the negotiations that have taken place, to adopt a very reasonable view of the situation. They are not so unreasonable as to expect that we should jump at their offer of reserving these islands at the cost of the people of Canada, and develop them into a public park for the benefit of the people of the vicinity; but they have proposed as an alternative to that, an alternative which we are prepared to carry out if they are prepared to go on with it, that they shall occupy those islands as a public park themselves; and why we should, under these circumstances, stop now and insist that other people shall pay for it when the province of Ontario is the province interested, and has abundance of means to improve the park and make it such as the people of Ontario would desire to make it—why we should stop now and insist on bearing the expense ourselves, with the disadvantages I have pointed out regarding the result of the adoption of the policy of establishing public parks for Canada, I cannot understand. Now, what is proposed with regard to this is that in the month of July tenders shall be received with regard to these islands, but not all of them. The islands that are reserved for the action of

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Parliament, if Parliament should be pleased to adopt the idea of public parks in Canada, comprise seventy-six large islands of this group.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the acreage?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know the acreage.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can tell the hon. gentleman that what is proposed to be sold contains nineteen-twentieths of the area of the islands.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That may be, and a very large area it is. Still there would remain 76 large islands, which would constitute a public park of large dimensions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The whole area is not 600 acres.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That would be sufficient to satisfy the eye of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) for landscape beauty, which is an important consideration. Let the Ontario Government make their proposal. When tenders are received this Government is by no means obliged to accept them, and if it be found at that stage that the Ontario Government is disposed to go on with its proposal for making those islands a public park, the tenders of other purchasers will not be accepted, that is to say, if the Ontario Government give what is established to be a reasonable price for those islands; because it is the principle which has been acted on by this Government, and insisted on by the other side of the House, that we are bound to get a reasonable and fair price, indeed the best price we can, for the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Timber limits always excepted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Timber limits and everything excepted when the criticism comes from the hon. member from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); but what his criticism is worth, considering the disposition in which he proceeds to discuss all public questions before the House, I need not detain the House by describing, because it is too well known. I would support myself the policy of dealing in the most liberal way with the Ontario Government, if they propose to go on with their project of a public park, and if their tender shows they are disposed to take those islands, all of them, or many of them, or few of them, or just as many as they please, providing they arrange with us to give us a price the acceptance of which we can justify when we come to settle with the Indians. The Ontario Government, I presume, will purchase them only for park purposes, and we will only be justified in dealing with them on a large scale on that principle. It has been suggested that we are taking the Ontario Government at a disadvantage, because the Ontario Legislature has been dissolved. That is not the case at all. We do not desire to make any hard terms with the Ontario Government; we do not exact any payment from them; if their offers are such as we can accept as the basis for the purchase of a public park, that offer will be treated as the conclusion of the sale, and ample opportunity will be given the Ontario Government to deal with the Ontario Legislature, and obtain its ratification of the bargain.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the House generally will be disposed to regret the temper in which this question has been approached by the Minister of the Interior and the Prime Minister. Everybody must agree that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has presented this case in a very moderate way indeed, not with any view of making political capital out of it at all.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Oh, no.

Mr. LAURIER. I repeat it; and the right hon. gentleman has no reason to insinuate that there was a word or a sentiment in anything said by my hon. friend to indicate that he desired to make any political capital out of it. If the hon. gentleman wants proof of this, let him have it from the benches on his own side of the House, for he will find it in the language of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon). That hon. gentleman only re-echoed what is the well-known public sentiment of the country, that these islands should be turned into a public park, whether a national park for Canada or a park for Ontario matters little, but that they should be purchased for the people of the country, and certainly the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) simply re-echoed what is the universal opinion of the people. The hon. Minister of the Interior stated he was not in the province while there was an outburst in different parts of the country respecting the question, shortly after a portion of the Thousand Islands had been advertised for sale. If the hon. gentleman had been here at that time he would have observed the indignation that prevailed, when a strong appeal and remonstrance to the Government was made that the islands should not be sold but converted into a public park. If the hon. gentleman had been here at the time he would have known that the appeal came not from the ranks of any political party, but from people holding different political opinions. I should have preferred that the Government, instead of approaching this subject in the temper manifested by hon. gentlemen opposite, had listened to the remonstrances of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), who approached the question from a broad national point of view. It is undoubtedly the sentiment in the country, at all events it is that which prevails in certain sections of Quebec and Ontario, and I am glad to say the feeling extends also to the Maritime Provinces, that these islands, which are exceptional in themselves, and which have not their counterpart probably in the world, should be allowed to remain in their natural state, not even being adorned by the hand of civilization, but kept as nature made them. That is the view which prevails and the sentiment which obtains everywhere. The Prime Minister says that Canada will not enter into that business. Very well, I will not enter into dispute as to that matter. But if the Government of Canada are not disposed to retain these islands for the purposes of a park, the Government of Ontario asks to enter into negotiations with the Dominion Government for the purpose of acquiring them for park purposes, for that is public opinion throughout the country. I call the attention of the First Minister to the fact that negotiations between the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario in this matter have not progressed speedily, that there has been negligence. The Minister of the Interior has stated that this delay has not been intentional. I am willing to accept the explanation, but there has undoubtedly been negligence, and the consequence is that the Government of Ontario are not in a position to make any offer, because they have not an appropriation at their disposal. The Prime Minister has evidently overlooked that fact; but this fact should not be overlooked, that the Government have not an appropriation and that that is the reason why they are not prepared to make an offer. What is the effect of their last communication? It is not that the islands should be set aside forever, but simply that the sale should be postponed in order that the Ontario Government may be able to consult the Provincial Legislature with respect to making an offer subsequently. I call the attention of the House to the concluding portion of the memorial of the Government of Ontario respecting this matter:

My Government hopes that by mentioning these valuations, and saying nothing as to the lowest aggregate price, it was not intended to intimate that no less would be accepted from the province for all the islands than the aggregate amount which your Government is endeavouring to obtain for them by retailing them to the purchasers of one or two islands each, or in other words, to between 343 and 764 purchasers in a period of years. My Government regrets that so much delay has occurred in giving the information, as, though it should now be received, it may be impossible at this late period of the Legislative Session here to have the matter considered by the Assembly. Hence my suggestion that in the public interest the islands be withdrawn from sale until there is an opportunity for negotiation and subsequent reference to the Legislature, otherwise the most desirable of the islands may not only pass away from the public forever, but may pass to purchasers who are not British subjects or Canadian citizens.

I ask hon. members of this House in all fairness, whether this is not a reasonable proposal—that the islands proposed to be sold shall be withdrawn from sale until the Ontario Government have had an opportunity of consulting the Legislature with respect to purchasing those islands and converting them into a park, as seems to be the general desire? The proposition seems to be a perfectly reasonable one, and I cannot see what reason can be advanced why the proposition should not be accepted at the present time. The hon. Minister of the Interior has declared that the interests of the Indians must be consulted, but the hon. gentleman has not taken into consideration the necessity of bringing that part of the correspondence before the House. Yet the hon. gentleman has been asked to lay on the Table of the House all the information on the subject. The hon. gentleman bases his argument on the interests of the Indians, but he does not bring down the correspondence in that connection.

Mr. DALY. It was not required by the Order of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. That is playing with the dignity of the House.

Mr. DALY. I rise for the purpose of making an explanation. I was asked to furnish to the House the following information:

Copies of all reports to the Department of the Interior or the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, as to the value of the Thousand Islands, and any offer received for the purchase of the same.

I obeyed the Order of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. The interests of the Indians was the foundation on which the hon. gentleman based his argument in support of the steps he had taken. Will the hon. gentleman pretend that he discharged his duty to the House when he did not give every reason to the House in the papers produced which induced him to take that action?

Mr. DALY. Certainly I do.

Mr. LAURIER. I say that the hon. gentleman, when information is asked from him on such an occasion as this, is bound to give the House all the information in his possession. The Government is nothing but a committee of this House. They are responsible to this House, and how can we exercise our supervision over the Government unless we are put in possession of every information that is given them.

Mr. DALY. Why did you not ask for the correspondence with the Indians?

Mr. LAURIER. I am not in the secrets of the Government. If I had known that there was a demand from the Indians, and that this was supposed to be the basis of the action of the Government, I would have asked for those papers. We asked the Government to give us all the information which led them to take such a course in this matter, and the Government should have given us all the information. The Government has not given us that information and I maintain, and I am in the judgment of the House when I say: that the Minister in this matter has not discharged the duty that he owes to this House. The Prime Minister says more: that the inhabitants of the locality have also been asking for the sale of these islands; but I fail to find a word in the correspondence brought down to the House as to the desire of the people of the locality in that respect. Sir, I would be sorry to place this question upon any political ground at all. I would rather that upon this occasion we should disregard all political considerations, and I simply have to re-echo the concluding portion of the remarks of my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright): that if the Government would only consent to delay the sale until the Legislature of Ontario have had an opportunity to pass an appropriation in respect of this matter, my hon. friend would be only too glad to withdraw this motion.

House divided on amendment of Sir Richard Cartwright:

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When I voted I did not notice that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was not in his seat. I desire to have my name struck off, because I would not have voted had I known that the hon. gentleman was not in the House.

House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

River St. Lawrence Ship Channel... $90,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do with this ?

Mr. OUMET. This amount is required to pay working expenses, including repairs on the dredging plant at the disposal of the department for the improvement and completion of the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec during the present year. The work that is now prosecuted by the department is to provide for a safe and easy ship channel between Montreal and Quebec, at a uniform depth at all times of tide of 27½ feet. The work completed last summer was the dredging of the bar at Cap à la Roche, and a channel 8 feet deep and 300 feet wide was made in the shale rock. Now boats can go up and down that place at any time of the tide without delay. We have also taken out a shoal at Grondines. Some other shoals have to be taken out below that point. There is some other work to be done in order to render the channel safer and easier, and more especially to widen the channel at sharp curves, where at the present time steamers cannot pass except at great risk. This work is undertaken to render the channels between Montreal and Quebec as safe as possible. It is expected that when the work is completed steamers will be able to pass between Montreal and Quebec during the night time.

Mr. FORBES. What is the uniform depth now ?

Mr. OUMET. We have 27½ feet now, except below Cap à la Roche, where the steamers have to wait for the tide, and where in some places there is only 20 or 22 feet. But when these improvements are completed, there will be a uniform depth of 27½ feet at low tide.

Mr. CASEY. I notice that last year, in connection with this channel, nearly $17,000 was expended on the workshops at Sorel. What are these workshops for ?

Mr. OUMET. As I have said, this sum of $90,000 includes the working of the plant and also the repairs. We have our navy yard at Sorel, and four dredges, five tugs, three stone lifters, and fifteen scows, which compose the fleet now employed on that work. These articles are sent there in the fall to be repaired, and the work is done by our own men, who are employed on the works during the summer, under the supervision of our superintendent.

Mr. CASEY. What is the cost of this work—dredging.

Mr. OUMET. It goes all the way from 10 cents to 57 cents per cubic yard, according to the nature of the material dredged, from sand to rock; 57 cents was the cost of our dredging in the rock last year. It was an exceptionally favourable season, which probably accounts for the low figure at which the work was done.

Halifax Drill Hall, including purchase of site..... $65,000

Mr. FLINT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works why no work has been done on this drill hall, although the appropriation was made last year. A fire destroyed the old place over two years ago, and I would like to ask what preparations and plans have been made for the construction of the work.

Mr. OUMET. The only expenditure made on this account was $2.88. The Department of Militia is now acquiring the land by private purchase and by expropriation. The old drill hall was burned down some three or four years ago, I think, and the military authorities have asked for another site, which, in their estimation, will be more suitable, and the building will be commenced at an early date.

Mr. FLINT. Will the hon. Minister inform the committee where the new site is, what its cost is, and what he expects to obtain for the site of the old drill hall? I have never heard any objection to the old site.

Mr. OUIMET. I could not exactly state in what part of the city the site is. The only information I have is the names of the people from whom the land is to be purchased.

Mr. FORBES. Who are they?

Mr. OUIMET. Mrs. James Smith, James Thompson, John Meninger, the Diocesan Church Synod, the Healy estate, and Joseph Crewe. The whole amount of the purchase is put down at $15,478.80.

Mr. FORBES. Is that an estimate, or the amount paid for the land?

Mr. OUIMET. I have already said that only $2.88 has been paid up to date.

Mr. CASEY. What is the amount of land?

Mr. OUIMET. It is bounded on the north by Cunard Street, on the east by Main Avenue, on the south by John Street Lane, and on the west by Park Street.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. gentleman will know that that is two or three miles from the old site.

Mr. OUIMET. I do not know. But what I know is that all the military authorities agree that this is the best site.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are two reasons for choosing that site: one is that it is in that part of the city where the great body of the militia live; and the second is that it is convenient to the exercising grounds.

Mr. FLINT. From my knowledge of the locality, I think it is probably a better site for the drill hall than the old one, which was near the market-place, and did not give an opportunity for out-door evolutions such as the new site probably will. What do the Government expect to obtain for the site of the former drill hall, or what do they propose to do with it?

Mr. OUIMET. I really could not say. If the land is not required for public purposes, of which there is no probability now, it will be sold by auction. I understand that it is very valuable property, being in the very heart of the commercial part of the city.

Mr. CASEY. It is strange that the hon. gentleman could not tell what he would get for the old site before he decided to purchase the new one.

Mr. OUIMET. I suppose the best site obtainable for the purposes of a drill hall must be had. As to the disposition of the old site, the hon. gentleman knows that when it is put up at auction in the most favourable time, we shall get the best price possible.

Mr. OUIMET.

Mr. CASEY. That does not always follow. But I should have thought that before changing the site, the hon. Minister would have formed some estimate of what he would get for the old property. At all events, he ought to have had some ideas on these points before he agreed to the change. It does not at all follow that the best site must be bought for a drill hall, unless the country can get it without undue expense.

Mr. OUIMET. The old site must be very poor if it will not realize what the new site will cost.

Mr. FORBES. Have the expropriation proceedings been concluded?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Mr. FORBES. Is it supposed that the old site will pay for the new land?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Very nearly.

Mr. FLINT. Is it estimated that the building can be constructed according to the plans within the amount of the appropriation asked for?

Mr. OUIMET. The plans have not been prepared. Of course we have to depend a great deal on the site for the plan of the building.

Mr. FLINT. I cannot help expressing my opinion that there has been unnecessary delay in this matter. The time appears to have been taken up in memorials and negotiations, and it is unfortunate that a decision could not have been more quickly arrived at. I hope the Government are not going to drag the matter two or three years longer until the eve of an election, when possibly their proceedings might be open to suspicion on the part of those who do not know the purity of their motives. There is a great deal of military spirit in the old capital of Nova Scotia, and this delay is felt to be very discouraging and annoying, and I would press on the Government the urgency of proceeding at once.

Mr. KENNY. It is certainly a fact that the inevitable delay in this matter is regrettable. I may say, in explanation, that it is within my knowledge that after the Halifax drill shed was destroyed by fire, the general commanding the Canadian militia and General Sir John Ross, commanding the Imperial troops at Halifax, represented in conversation with me, and no doubt represented also to the militia authorities, that it was in the interests of the militia that the site of the new drill hall should be selected as near the military exercising grounds as possible. I, as a representative of the constituency, applied to Sir John Ross to ascertain if a site could not be obtained on the Common, which is Imperial property. He communicated with the Horse Guards, and, I understood, the authorities in London decided that they could not give up any portion of the Common for building purposes. Although this delay has been great, it is better to have waited and finally secured a site which will in every way be far more advantageous than the one formerly occupied. I believe that it is the intention of the Militia Department to concentrate all their offices in the new building. At present the Militia Department is paying rent for a building for the use of their ordnance stores, and it is their intention that the new building shall be sufficiently large to include the ordnance stores, the militia headquarters, and the drill shed. The choice of this site was urged by General Herbert and General Sir John Ross.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister said he expected the cost of the site was about $15,000. It would appear then that an arbitration has been held in connection with the expropriation of land.

Mr. OUIMET. This is the amount that the Militia Department have requested from us. They made the expropriation and asked us for that amount to pay for the property.

Mr. CASEY. Will the $65,000 cover the building?

Mr. OUIMET. It will not. The cost will be about $150,000. The drill shed at Toronto cost $250,000 without the ground.

Mr. CASEY. It is strange that we should be asked for this amount without a plan or estimate of the final cost.

Mr. OUIMET. It will only cost a reasonable sum.

Mr. CASEY. That is not our experience. Our experience has been that, as in the case of the Toronto drill shed, the cost will run up to a tremendous figure. We should not be asked to vote sums, year after year, towards the construction of works as to the final cost of which we have no estimate. I think the department should not ask the House to vote such a sum as this for the construction of any such work as a drill shed until they have plans for the building and some reasonable estimate of the cost.

Mr. OUIMET. I have explained that the plans could not be prepared until the site was known. But as soon as the purchase is completed the plans will be prepared and then the information can be given to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASEY. How long is it since the site was chosen?

Mr. OUIMET. It was only within the last month, I suppose. I judge from the fact that the Department of Militia notified us that the site had been secured, and that they would soon require the money.

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) can tell us, as the Minister of Militia is absent. I am only asking for part of the information which the Minister should have. He is excusing the absence of plans—

Mr. OUIMET. I am not excusing anything.

Mr. CASEY. I admit he is not excusing it, but he is attempting to excuse the absence of plans by saying that the plans could not be made until the site was chosen. I want to know when the site was chosen, so that we may be able to judge what opportunity they have had to prepare these plans.

Mr. FORBES. Perhaps the hon. Minister will allow me to say that the question of the action of the Government authorities, and it was known in militia circles that it was intended to build a drill shed there. But there has been great backwardness in the action of the Government authorities, and the members of the militia of all grades, even up to the colonels, have expressed their disgust at the delay, but whether the Militia Department or the Public Works Department was to blame, of course they could not tell. I fear the members for Halifax (Mr. Kenny and Mr. Stairs) have been nursing this matter for some time, probably for some political purpose or as part of some game. The reason given for delay, so far as I can gather from the Minister and the senior member for Halifax, is simply a long conversation with Sir John Ross, the general in command of the Regular Forces in Halifax, which, according to the hon. member's statement, has lasted for over two years. We have had considerable local discussion in the papers on this matter. There was a divided opinion among the militia as to whether the old site should be chosen for the new building, or whether a new site should be bought. I understand that a decision has been reached to buy the site at the north end. It may be a good locality for the reasons given by the Premier, the facilities it affords for manoeuvres and the fact that most of the volunteers live in the north end of the city. The old militia ground offers ample room for manoeuvres, unless the militia wanted to disport themselves in public, in which case they might take the Common for it, which Commons they could reach by a half-mile march. If the drill shed is built in the north end, it will be decidedly inconvenient for those members of the militia living in the south end. I do not see that the arguments are sufficient for making the change. Another thing they have a right to complain of—and which I do complain of, as a member of this House—is the great indefiniteness of this item. We have neither plans nor specifications, we have no definite information as to the site of the land to be expropriated; but simply the names of a number of citizens of Halifax who are owners of the land which it is said will be expropriated. We are asked to vote $65,000 to build a drill hall, including the purchase of a site, which will not half pay the total cost. I think it shows neglect on the part of the Militia Department or the Department of Public Works that in two years this information could not be prepared and the work furitia at Halifax will be only too proud to have a building erected for the purpose it is intended. But I do not think that the amount is going to put up a suitable building, particularly after the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax that it was going to include ordnance department, store rooms and all the necessary concomitants of the militia organization in Halifax. I think we should have the information as to what is to be done and not have another exhibition of such expenditure as we have had in some of the public works in Canada. Can the Minister tell when he proposes to begin the work, and whether it will be prosecuted to its immediate completion?

Mr. KENNY. I am sorry to trouble the House a second time in this matter, but the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has referred to me in my capacity as representative of Halifax, and used the epithet "nursing" in connection with this matter. He went further, and said that the site had been decided on four years ago. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman was joking or whether he was serious when he made that statement—

Mr. FORBES. It was discussed.

Mr. KENNY. I can only give it a most emphatic denial.

Mr. FORBES. I have discussed it myself with the military men and officers of the Militia Department.

Mr. KENNY. But have you discussed with them the question whether I have been nursing this matter for four years?

Mr. FORBES. Yes, I have.

Mr. KENNY. I say that is decidedly false.

Mr. FORBES. I rise to an explanation, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the statement I made just now that I have talked with the citizens of Halifax about the hon. member for Halifax nursing his project is false?

Mr. KENNY. No; but you attempted to convey the impression to the committee that I was instrumental in keeping this matter open for four years for political purposes.

Mr. FORBES. I say it has been charged by citizens of Halifax that the hon. member and his colleague are nursing this matter.

Mr. KENNY. When and where?

Mr. FORBES. In a number of cases. I state it publicly that it looks very much as if that was what the hon. gentleman was doing, and I say I have heard the same stated before now.

Mr. KENNY. Before this item is passed I desire to make my position clear before the House. The hon. member has stated that the senior member for Halifax had recommended this site some years ago.

Mr. FORBES. Pardon me, I did not.

Mr. FORBES.

Mr. KENNY. He decidedly stated that for the last four years I had been instrumental in keeping this question open.

Mr. FORBES. I never said he recommended that site.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman went on further to state that I had been in correspondence with Sir John Ross. I candidly admit that. I was anxious that the most economical site should be chosen for a drill shed, and it occurred to me that without any serious detriment to any portion of the Imperial property, the drill shed might have been so erected. But the Imperial authorities thought differently, and one of the delays in this matter was largely due to the fact that the department could not get an earlier answer from the Imperial authorities. The hon. gentleman stated that at the old site there was ample ground for the militia of Halifax to drill. I am not going to apply to him the character of language which he has thought fit to apply to me; but I will say that if anybody outside this House had so spoken, I should have said that he knew very little about what he was talking. The fact is that the plan which was prepared for the erection of a drill shed on the old site, actually covered nearly the whole ground, but then the artillery brigade of Halifax thought that even in this large drill shed they would not have sufficient space for big gun drill. As to whatever knowledge the hon. gentleman may possess about it, and as to the statements which have been made to him, and which he has thought fit to repeat here regarding my connection with this matter, I am perfectly satisfied to leave the matter in the hands of the militia and of my fellow-citizens of Halifax.

Mr. FORBES. I am sorry if I have offended the hon. gentleman in any remarks I made. I did not want to reflect upon him in any degree whatever. Politically, I was charging the hon. gentleman with the condition in which the drill shed affair at Halifax stands to-day. I think I have a right to do that. If he thinks the word "nursing" is offensive, I cannot help it. It is his fault, not mine. The care of all the public property connected with the city and county of Halifax must be, to a great extent, under the control of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, and surely I have a right to comment upon their management.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is one feature of this vote that I think is objectionable. We have been in the habit in the past of voting sums for the purpose of starting the construction of public buildings without first getting a carefully prepared estimate of what the entire building is likely to cost. Last night the Minister of Finance was complaining that we were making no progress in the Estimates. I ask how that is to be expected when Parliament is asked ther advanced. The members of the milblindly to go on and make votes of this kind? Not a single plan, not an estimate, not a single idea of the outside cost of this building, is before this committee, and yet we are asked to vote a lump sum of $65,000 to start with, and after the building is commenced, possibly another vote will come up another year, and before it is completed we may have to pay $250,000. If the Government were merely asking a vote to buy a site, nobody would object, for the building is wanted, and then they could come down, after getting a plan prepared, showing how much the building was going to cost, and ask us to vote the necessary sum. We have had precisely the same policy in connection with every post office constructed in this country for the last four or five years. The Napanee post office was in the same category. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I know better. A committee of this House was asked to consent to vote a small sum to buy a site. The statement was made that the whole thing would cost $28,000, and eventually it cost $54,000. This committee should have from the Public Works Department an authentic statement made by their engineer of what this drill shed is going to cost, before we consent to vote for the construction. We ought to have that in every case. I have no desire to detain the committee, but I contend that hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for the time that is spent in these discussions when they ask us quietly to consent to votes of this kind, in regard to which they are not prepared to give the necessary information.

Mr. OUMET. I am disposed to admit that the rule laid down by the hon. gentleman is correct, and since I have been Minister of Public Works I have never asked a vote for a public work without giving a plan and an estimate of the cost, when it was possible to do so. But in this instance I have explained that it was impossible for the department to prepare any plans. The old drill shed having been burned down, it became necessary to build a new one. No one will deny the necessity of a drill shed for the volunteers in the city of Halifax. That being granted, the drill shed must be built. But next we have the fact that in the estimation of the military authorities the old site was unsuitable, therefore it became necessary to purchase another site. Well, the other site has not been chosen yet.

Mr. CASEY. Yes.

Mr. OUMET. No. We only received this detailed information a few days ago. When these estimates were prepared the intention was to purchase that site, but the Department of Militia have not yet given us any idea of what the drill shed shall contain. It may contain only a drill hall, or it may contain store houses, or it may contain a hall for artillery and cavalry drill. We have none of these details yet from the Militia Department. The hon. member for Queen's, N.S., complains of the delay. What would he have said if I had come down here and only asked for the money necessary to buy the site? He would have censured the department even more than he has done today. We have done all that could be done. The first vote was asked and obtained in 1892-93, and this is the third time this item is voted. It was asked for as soon as the old drill hall was burned.

Mr. CASEY. And you have not purchased any ground yet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will see that the position taken by the hon. member for Halifax sums up to some extent the situation. In diplomatic language, the delay is regrettable. The delay is very regrettable, both in the interest of the service in Halifax and in the interest of the public at large, because we are driven here, owing to this regrettable delay, to take a course which the Minister himself admits is without defence.

Mr. OUMET. I have explained it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman knows that is inexplicable, that after three or four years the Departments of Militia and Public Works should be coming before this House for money without having made up their minds where that drill shed was to be placed, and what kind of a drill shed was to be built. Every one acknowledges that in a large city like Halifax a drill shed should be built commensurate with the importance of the place and the number of the militia, and what the member for Queen's, N.S. (Mr. Forbes), is insisting upon is that the Government are censurable for delay in not having pushed this matter to the front long ago, and made up their minds both as to the site the drill shed should occupy, and as to the character of the building itself. Now, the Government come down here in June, 1894, to tell us: We have not yet determined where to put the drill shed; we have not yet determined what kind of a building to construct. Yet they ask the House to vote blindly a sum of $60,000 without the House being asked to pass any opinion whatever upon the character of the building, or the extent to which the credit of this country may be pledged. The Minister of Public Works well knows that the principle is one that is indefensible, and which, if carried out with respect to other public works, would tie the hands of Parliament altogether. This House is a committee to revise the expenditure of the Government, and pass on the item submitted, and if we are to vote blindly $60,000 or $70,000 for a department, when the Minister cannot tell the committee what kind of work is to be done, and how the money voted is to be expended, the whole matter is left to the Government to decide it, irrespective of members of this House. The expenditure may be limited to $70,000, or we may have the House committed to an expenditure of $100,000 or $150,000. The truth is, we simply do not know what expenditure may be incurred. The hon. Minister has stated that he does not know the quantity of land required, and that the plans have not yet been prepared; so the hon. gentleman, as representing the Government, cannot give the committee any light. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) is willing to allow delay in the completion of the building at Halifax. The hon. gentleman is too old a parliamentary hand to allow $200,000 or $300,000 to be spent in the interval between two elections, and, as the hon. gentleman may object to the word nursing, I will say that I have not seen him exhibit that degree of zeal and earnestness in pushing this matter during the last session or two that I have observed him display in regard to other subjects. The hon. gentleman has maintained a singular and discreet silence and has nursed this little work until now, when he brings it up and asks for an expenditure of $60,000, when the probability is, to use the word of the Prime Minister, there may be an election during the present year, and the Government may, at a subsequent date ask for the balance of an expenditure of $200,000 or $300,000. The hon. gentleman is to be commended for his political far-sightedness, although, to some extent, he may even have surrendered the interests of the volunteers at Halifax. Hon. gentlemen who know the hon. member's political astuteness, are not surprised at the astuteness he has displayed, but they are more concerned in the action of the Minister of Public Works in asking $60,000 for a building, when the site has not been purchased, the cost of which has not been estimated, and about which he knows nothing. This is a precedent fraught with danger, and the House will only grant such demands after grave consideration, and when an emergency exists. The fact is, that no pressure had been exerted in this House by the members for Halifax to secure the construction of the proposed building, even during the last three or four years, and this shows that there is no possible emergency just now calling for a vote of a large sum of money, which may reach an indefinite amount before the site is purchased or the plans agreed. I suggest to the hon. member that inasmuch as the expenditure will be made in due and proper time, no doubt, it would be well to take a sufficient vote in the Main Estimates to purchase the land, and perhaps before the hon. gentleman submits the Supplementary Estimates he will be able to obtain plans and estimates upon which he will be able to ask Parliament to vote intelligently the sum required for the construction of the building.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman has been pleased to refer to my political sagacity. If I had only as much political imagination as is possessed by the hon. gentleman, I would consider myself almost qualified for a front seat on the Opposition benches. The hon. gentleman, since I came to Parliament, has been noted for indulging in the wildest flights of fancy, but I think this was never more conspicuous than in the present instance. It has transpired since the discussion arose that this item appeared two years ago in the Estimates. The old building was, I think, burnt down in 1892, and the hon. gentleman is blaming the department and myself for the delay which has occurred, and he has attributed motives to me, which, I presume, must actuate hon. gentlemen opposite on certain occasions. As a matter of fact, plans were immediately prepared to re-erect the drill shed on the old site. They were prepared by the Militia Department, and, if my memory serves me, it was stated in the House that the building was to be erected there, and that the outlay would probably reach a certain sum. In the meanwhile, many members of the militia force represented to the Militia Department, and also to the members who had the honour to represent that important constituency in this Assembly, that the old site was not a good one, and they stated that a large number of members of the force desired the building to be re-erected nearer the drill ground. That recommendation was pressed by General Herbert and by General Sir John Ross. If any delay has arisen in this matter, it was due to the fact that in the interests of the militia force it was thought desirable to secure a site immediately adjoining the drill grounds. As regards the desirability of that particular site, there is no hon. gentleman who knows the locality who can possibly object to it. I repeat that it was worth while waiting, even if the members for Halifax have lost some political support by the delay, even if, as was insinuated by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) they had incurred the displeasure of some of their fellow-citizens who are in the militia force, rather than public money should be spent in a locality where a building erected there would not have served the militia interests as well as if erected on the proposed site. It is hardly worth while blaming the present Minister of Public Works for any delay. That hon. gentleman is certainly not to blame, and, as far as my memory goes, it was only very recently known that the site has been acquired.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was the old building not burned before the last elections?

Mr. KENNY. I cannot speak positively, but I believe the first vote was asked in 1892. The drill shed was destroyed in the winter, and I think Parliament met in February, 1892. My recollection is that the drill shed was burned in January, 1892, or later.

Mr. FORBES. It was burned in January, 1890 or 1891.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I spoke there a few weeks before the election of 1891.

Mr. KENNY. Yes, and we had a very good meeting.

Mr. FLINT. I recollect very well that the drill shed was burnt during the parliamentary session, and the information came here during the sitting of Parliament in 1892. It was during that session that the first vote was asked. The delay may have been avoidable or unavoidable, according to the circumstances of the case. It is easy to be seen, that the present situation affords very little encouragement to the militia of Halifax, so far as regards obtaining a drill shed at an early date. The expropriation of the land, the exchange of titles and other matters can scarcely be concluded before the beginning of the autumn, and this necessarily precludes the work of construction before this winter. The plans cannot be prepared, the site acquired, and the building commenced within reasonable prospects of finishing them this winter. I am afraid it will be the beginning of next summer before building operations are commenced, so that the drill shed will not be completed for our militiamen until probably the winter following. Any impartial mind must think that the period of time that has elapsed since the destruction of the old drill shed, until, according to present probabilities the Halifax militia are safely housed in new quarters, is rather longer than it ought to be, even making every possible allowance for the delay. The Government cannot blame those who under the circumstances look upon it, that the idea of the Government is, to have these contracts given out and money spent about the time of an election. I think that this House is not disposed to be niggardly in a matter of an appropriation for a drill shed in the city of Halifax. If the land costs $15,000 to $17,000, it would appear to me that the remainder of this vote is scarcely sufficient to erect such a building as ought to be erected in a military city like Halifax, where we have Imperial forces as well as our own militia force, and where military preparation ought to be on as large a scale as in any military centre of the whole Dominion. I think that the remaining $35,000 or $40,000 of this vote is not enough to construct a suitable building.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Surely my hon. friend is not under the belief that they are going to stop at $40,000.

Mr. FLINT. That makes the argument all the stronger that the plans and specifications should be before the House before an appropriation is asked for. I do not see how the Government can erect a drill shed at all suitable to the importance of the city, on any such sum as they now ask for, and by and by probably the Opposition will be blamed for not having insisted on fuller details before appropriating the money. I am prepared to vote for a much larger sum for a drill shed for the city of Halifax than is contained in the Estimates, and I trust that if possible after the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, the Minister may have concluded his purchase of the land and have some idea of the size and style of the building, so that we can ask for the full amount. This would be much better than leaving the matter open to complaint in the future, that extras have been allowed or that political favouritism has been brought into the matter, thus causing a sort of political scandal to arise. I believe that the merits of the case are such as to call for a larger appropriation, but I think that the plans and specifications should be before us in order that we may see at once what the building will cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As hon. gentlemen opposite have been frequently, of late, reproaching the Opposition for allowing items to pass, we would like to know whether it is the intention to construct this drill shed by day's labour, in view of the great success attending similar experiments in other parts of the Dominion? Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) would give his views on that question.

Mr. KENNY. I have not been consulted on that point.

Mr. CASEY. We have been about an hour attempting to get some information about this drill shed, which is rather a militia matter than one pertaining to the Public Works Department. I noticed that the Minister of Militia has been in and out of the House two or three times during this discussion, and it seems to me it might have occurred to the Minister of Public Works or to some other colleague to pull him by the sleeve and ask him for a little information on that point.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That would be a little too much to ask.

Mr. CASEY. As my hon. friend suggests, that would be too much to ask from any Minister. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) need not be afraid that the vote is going to be limited to $65,000. He did not hear the Minister telling us that it would probably cost $150,000 at least, and he allowed us to infer from the cost of the Toronto drill shed that it might amount to $250,000. We have been glad to get an admission from the Minister that there should be plans and specifications brought down before the vote was asked. He says that this is a special case, but he has adduced nothing to show that it is a special case. It is over two years ago since the old drill shed was burned, and the member for Halifax—the Minister from Halifax, I might almost call him—says, for the Minister of Public Works, that plans were made for a drill shed on the old site, but that the building, if erected according to these plans, would cover the whole of the ground. I always understood that the object of a drill shed was to cover the ground and to give the men a sheltered place to drill in. But they were not satisfied with that in Halifax, and they wanted a piece of ground that you could not cover with a building, or, in other words, the estimate was not large enough, and they had not enough ground to spend the money on. Sir John Ross' name was brought into the question. What has Sir John Ross got to do with a drill shed for the militia. He has no more to do with it than the Sultan of Turkey or the Shah of Persia. It is for the volunteers, pure and simple, and the regulars have nothing to do with it.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 139) to incorporate the Pontiac and Ottawa Railway Company.—(Mr. Bryson.)

Bill (No. 141) respecting the Canada Southern Railway—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Montague.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Pictou Post Office, to complete. $19,500

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the entire cost of this post office?

Mr. OUMET. The amount of the contract for the building is $16,000. The fittings, furniture, &c., are estimated to cost $3,000, and the heating arrangements $1,500. The total cost will be about $24,000.

Tracadie Lazaretto. $26,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. What number of patients are in this institution?

Mr. OUMET. There are now twenty-two—eleven males and eleven females.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is the number increasing?

Mr. OUMET. No; it has not been increasing for many years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What number of people have you on the staff?

Mr. OUMET. We have nothing to do with the staff; that is provided for by a special vote under the heading of quarantine. I think it is $4,600.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am very glad to see that ample provision is being made for these unfortunate people, and I think the House should readily agree to any reasonable appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. OUMET. There is very good work done also in supervising all the cases that may arise outside. As soon as a case is discovered, the patient is brought to the Lazaretto. In this building everything has been provided for the comfort, not only of the patient, but also of the poor people who have to attend them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to impress upon the Government the necessity of seeing that everything is done that can possibly be done, not only for the patients, but for those who have devoted their lives to taking charge of them.

Dominion Public Buildings, Maritime Provinces generally. $10,000

Mr. BOWERS. What is the cost of the St. John customs-house up to the present date, and has all the money been granted?

Mr. OUMET. The cost of the St. John building, when completed, will be $188,000.

Mr. BOWERS. That is about $88,000 more, I think, than the hon. gentleman estimated last year.

Mr. OUMET. No; it is $38,000 more than was at first estimated. That sum of $38,000 will be provided for in the Supplementary Estimates, and I hope I shall be able to give explanations that will satisfy the House that it was no fault of the department that that amount had to be expended above the first estimate.

Mr. BOWERS. Were all the contracts for timber and lumber given out by tender, or were these materials contracted for with private firms?

Mr. OUMET. All the materials of any importance were bought by tender.

Mr. BOWERS. The reason I ask is because, according to some items I find in the Auditor General's Report, there seem to have been excessive sums paid for common spruce lumber. For instance, I find such items as these: 15,284 feet of timber at $17.50; 1,251 feet at $17; 3,184 feet deals at $14.50; 5,682 feet at $18; 6,482 feet at $17.50; 11,186 feet of plank at $15; 22,201 feet at $15; 320 feet at $14; 15,471 feet of boards at $13; 6,950 feet at $16; 11,710 feet of ledger spruce boards at $15, besides 35,167 feet of hemlock boards at $11. There seems to be an excessive charge in these prices for spruce deals and hemlock lumber. I see that the Government paid $1.20 per load for sand besides paying for the team and the men's labour. These excessive charges may account for the $38,000 extra required.

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary $30,000

Mr. OUMET. This is to pay for the stone and other materials for the boundary wall, which work has been going on for a couple of years, and there is an amount of $14,441 required for that. There is also materials required for the corner tower, also repairs to tramway, repair to building generally, supplies for maintenance of machinery, carpenters' tools, blacksmiths' renewals, one locomotive boiler for heating purposes, the salary of the clerk of the works and the keeper of the works.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the salary of the clerk of the works?

Mr. OUIMET. One thousand dollars. The work goes on under his superintendence and he is paid out of the vote. The wall is built by convict labour; it extends over seven or eight acres, is twenty-seven feet high above the level of the ground and four to five feet at the foundation, and is about three feet thick.

Richmond Post Office, Customs and Inland Revenue offices... $15,000

Mr. McMULLEN. There is no such office as the Richmond post office in the list.

Mr. OUIMET. There is one village of Richmond at the station, and a few acres away there is Richmond town, and this post office will serve both. The site is sixty-six feet on Main street by 120 feet on Peel street, and has been purchased from P. E. Blais and Frank Smith at a cost of $13,100. It is in the centre of the business portion of the town.

Mr. LAURIER. There is about three-quarters of a mile distance between the two places. I am sure the Postmaster General has no intention of suppressing the post office at Richmond station, and there will be two post offices as heretofore. If the town has a post office built by the Government, Richmond station will want one too, and there is just as much reason to give to one as to the other.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does the hon. gentleman know whether this is at the station at the town?

Mr. OUIMET. It is between the two villages. We have been asked to build a post office there to serve both villages and also accommodate the Customs office and the Inland Revenue.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It may be possible that at the station there may be a post office of some kind.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not the intention to deprive the station of its post office, but it will remain as it is now. From the fact that it becomes necessary to have a building to include other branches of the service besides the post office in Richmond town proper, it does not follow that we will have to build a post office at the station. The postal service is properly carried on at the station now and our object is to promote the efficiency of the several branches of the public service, and for that purpose it has been found necessary to erect a building in the town of Richmond.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what are the reasons for that?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I told the hon. gentleman he must not be too critical. I told him that it was found necessary for the efficiency of the public service to have a building which would accommodate the different branches.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what is the revenue at Richmond?

Mr. OUIMET. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is only the post office revenue. Can he give us also the customs and inland revenue receipts?

Mr. OUIMET. I have not the information at hand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Surely the hon. Minister ought to have this information when he asks the House to vote this money. The hon. Minister will admit that it is hardly satisfactory for us who are asked to vote on these questions not to have any means of forming a judgment upon them. There should be some principle ruling the expenditure of public buildings. But, leaving that aside, we are entitled to the ordinary information to enable us to vote intelligently on these questions.

Mr. OUIMET. I thought we had settled that in the long sitting we had from three o'clock one afternoon to half-past eleven the next forenoon, when the Laprairie post office business was before the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Many excellent resolutions were expressed at that time that have not been kept.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not saying whether it is settled or not. I know that the hon. Minister and members on that side voted that public money should be expended upon these buildings on some principle based upon the revenue at the points where these buildings are being constructed and the population to be served. That was decided by the votes of members of the House and I think it is a good principle to maintain.

Mr. OUIMET. I am happy to say that I never voted for that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You were not present.

Mr. OUIMET. I was present, but I was not a voting party in favour of that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the hon. gentleman repudiates the principle that was promulgated by his late leader, Sir John A. Macdonald, and approved by the votes of members of this House with the Speaker in the Chair. I think it would be more satisfactory and more businesslike for the hon. Minister to stand up to declare that he did not approve of the principle of public money being expended upon merely political consideration. The hon. Minister knows well that people of the section of the country I represent have shown the Minister and the Government the necessity in the public interest for the construction of a public building, and they have shown that they were entitled to it upon every principle upon which it is supposed that public money is granted. I did not intend to trouble the Minister with a long debate, but I think that when a vote of this kind is asked members are entitled to ordinary information as to the revenue at the place where the building is being constructed and the population to be served.

Mr. OUIMET. The population is 2,066.

Mr. CHARLTON. Of Richmond East?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the population of the joint towns.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see the postal revenue at Richmond is $1,948.42.

Mr. OUIMET. I said $2,000—I did not want to load the heads of hon. gentlemen opposite with too many figures.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose the Inland revenue and the Customs revenues would be a moderate sum. We had $4,000 last year. There is this vote of $15,000—will there be any further demand?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes; about $5,500.

Mr. CHARLTON. That will be a total of about $24,500. The interest of that at 4 per cent would be almost $1,000 a year. And this for a service represented by a revenue of perhaps $3,500. This is a very wasteful system the Government is pursuing. The hon. Minister says this question was pretty fully discussed on the question of the Laprairie post office some years ago. There would be no reason for reopening this discussion now if the Government altered the course it was pursuing. In a little place like Richmond, with a moderate revenue, it strikes me the economical plan would be to rent quarters. And the accommodation might be had at a cost of $200 a year. We in Canada have not a superabundance of revenue and resources that we can afford to spend money injudiciously, and this is certainly an injudicious expenditure of money. We have a heavy debt and heavy fixed charges and the Government, even, as I suppose, with a sincere desire to lower the tariff burdens of the people, was unable to do so because the necessities of the country are so great. And yet we are pursuing a policy that will make it impossible to reduce expenses in the future.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend did not hear the Minister say that there were grave reasons for the construction of this building.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to know what they are.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman wants to know the customs revenue. It is $6,745.22,

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

according to the last issue of the Trade and Navigation Returns.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are the internal revenues?

Mr. OUIMET. I have not that information at hand.

Mr. LAURIER. All the business of the customs is transacted in the Grand Trunk building.

Mr. CASEY. I am not going to criticise this item, of which I have no knowledge. But I thought we had drilled successive Ministers of Public Works into understanding that they were expected to be ready with this kind of information.

Mr. OUIMET. What kind of information does the hon. gentleman want that I have not given, except the amount of receipts from inland revenue?

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. Minister will give me an opportunity, I will tell him. In the first place he could not say whether the building was in Richmond, or at the station or half-way between the two. At length he informed us that it was in Richmond town. In the second place he could not tell us what was the postal revenue until he looked it up specially. Next, he could not tell us the revenue from customs until he hunted that up. When the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) was Minister of Public Works all this information was prepared beforehand and had not to be hunted up on the spur of the moment. The hon. Minister will find that it would save a great deal of time to have this information prepared in the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Question.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is doing his best to delay the proceedings of the committee by calling "question." If the Minister of Public Works would prepare himself to answer questions that would naturally be asked, he would save time, and would save himself from making a display of ignorance that he should be ashamed of.

Dominion Public Buildings, renewals, improvements, repairs, &c.....$12,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Where are these renewals and repairs to be made?

Mr. OUIMET. There is a long list of buildings to which various repairs are requisite—Aylmer, Dundee, Hull, Joliette, Lachine, Montreal post office, Montreal customs-house, Quebec emigrant building, Quebec customs-house, Quebec examining warehouse, Quebec Observatory, St. John, St. Jerome, Shefford, Sorel, Three Rivers—total, $13,494.33. But my officers think they will be able to do with $12,000.

Ontario Drill Hall (the city of Toronto having provided a plot of land as agreed upon)—to complete drill hall..... $15,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the value of the plot of ground provided by Toronto?

Mr. OUIMET. My officers say that, in their opinion, the ground given by the city of Toronto is worth $100,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. Where is it situated, and what is the size?

Mr. OUIMET. The plot is 270 x 497 ft.; bounded on the north by Armoury street, on the south by Osgoode street, on the east by Chesnut street, and on the west by University street. The drill hall is about 280 x 125 feet, and 36 feet high from the floor to the spring of the roof. The basement under the hall is 125 x 140 feet. On either side of the hall are armouries extending the full length of the building, and 22 feet 6 inches wide, forming a lean-to on each side of the building, that on the north side one story high, and that on the south side two stories high with basement. Then there are the towers, &c.

Smith's Falls Post Office, Customs house..... $16,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Here is another of these public buildings in a small inland town. About what is the revenue from post office, customs and inland revenue office at Smith's Falls?

Mr. OUIMET. The postal revenue is $6,843.29. The population in 1891 was 3,864. The revenue from customs since this town was made into a port, is about $6,000.

Mr. CASEY. What is the object of this building?

Mr. OUIMET. To provide necessary accommodation for post office, custom-house and inland revenue office. Smith's Falls is becoming a very important railway and manufacturing centre, and is increasing every day. It is supposed to be one of the principal towns in eastern Ontario. When the vote was first given, in 1891, I suppose this was taken into consideration by the House.

Mr. CASEY. Are all the contracts let, and if so, what will be the total cost of the building?

Mr. OUIMET. All the contracts are let. The building itself will cost $13,664. Furniture and fittings, fencing and other items will bring the total cost up to $25,000.

Mr. CASEY. I did not ask, with regard to the Toronto drill hall, the final cost of that.

Mr. OUIMET. The total cost of the drill shed in Toronto will be $290,000, apart from the value of the land. The people of Toronto have asked us to provide a riding hall. If that were done, the additional cost would be $40,000.

Mr. CASEY. What was the estimated cost?

Mr. OUIMET. That was the original estimate.

Picton Post Office, Customs-house, &c. $10,000

Mr. CHARLTON. What will be the total cost of this building?

Mr. OUIMET. The estimated cost is $26,252.

Dominion Public Buildings, renewals, improvements, repairs, &c. $25,000

Mr. CASEY. It was adopted by the House unanimously some time ago that public buildings should be constructed according to the necessities of the district without regard to its political complexion.

Mr. OUIMET. I think the hon. gentleman is going outside of the vote, which is for repairs to buildings already completed.

Mr. CASEY. The precedent was established of having public buildings in places quite small, such as Richmond, with a population of 3,000. During several years I have urged the claims of Ridgetown for a similar building to that erected at Richmond, the population being larger, the postal revenue about the same and the customs revenue very considerable.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the hon. gentleman state the names of the counties where the buildings are situated and the names of the members representing them.

Mr. OUIMET. I think that would revive sad recollections?

Mr. CASEY. I observe that the amount asked for public buildings in Ontario is $66,000, while $84,000 is asked for Nova Scotia, $33,000 for New Brunswick and nothing for Prince Edward Island. Providence seems to be good to those who vote correctly.

Public Buildings, North-west Territories..... $66,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much is to be expended at Regina?

Mr. OUIMET. The total cost of the building when completed will be $57,500.

Mr. CASEY. Is it under contract?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I thought there would be a very large sum, because I observed the fidelity of the member has improved since last session.

Public Building, Lethbridge $15,600

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain this item.

Mr. OUIMET. The total cost of the building will be $22,723. The contract was given to Wm. Oliver, for $15,600, and the balance is required for furnishing the building.

Public Building, Calgary..... $12,600

Mr. OUIMET. The total cost of this building will be $49,132.

Mr. CASEY. What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. OUIMET. A contract for $29,785 was given to William Oliver.

Public Buildings, Ottawa. $110,000

Mr. CASEY. Will the hon. Minister give some particulars?

Mr. OUIMET. This amount is required for repairs, &c., at the different departmental buildings.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a matter that might be of some convenience to us all here, more especially as the temperature is likely rather to increase than to diminish, from certain symptoms. Cannot the Minister contrive to ventilate this cockpit a little better than at present? I think it is within the resources of science to introduce a few electric fans, which would give us a current of air. One of the worst features of this present chamber is, as everybody knows, that it has no direct access to the open air, and while that cannot be remedied without a good deal of expenditure and perhaps constructing another chamber, I do think that the introduction of a few electric fans would improve the ventilation.

Mr. OUIMET. It has been my good fortune, during the last eight or ten years, as Speaker and as Minister of Public Works, to pay attention to the comfort of the members. We have had every kind of experiment made in this chamber. The floor and walls are a net work of pipes for ventilation purposes, and the great difficulty is to find the secret of providing enough ventilation and not too much. The whole heat comes to this cockpit, as the hon. gentleman calls it, so that when we are comfortable here gentlemen on the back benches are complaining of the cold. It is the opinion of every expert who has looked into the matter that nothing more can be done than at present, and that the only remedy is to open the windows and corridors when the House is not sitting; but there is considerable difficulty in getting that done always. Unless we build another chamber, the opinion is that it cannot be better ventilated than it is to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The working of these electric fans could be arranged by merely pressing a button, so that the ventilation could be regulated in that way.

Mr. CASEY.

Two or three days within the last week I have noticed on coming from the open air in here that the atmosphere was of a character which made it perilous to health to remain here for a moderate number of hours, and that it might even imperil the health of our Speaker if he is compelled to remain in his Chair during many of these evening sessions. With all due respect to the staff of the Public Works Department, I think if they would condescend to try the suggestion of erecting a few electric fans in the Chamber it would be a vast improvement during the hot weather.

Mr. OUIMET. We will try the experiment the hon. member (Sir Richard Cartwright) has suggested.

Mr. CHARLTON. During the winter months, is the fresh air still brought to this Chamber by subterranean ducts?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have often protested against that mode of supplying this Chamber with fresh air. Year after year for the last fifteen years when this question was up, a number of us have always contended that this mode of supplying air was a faulty one, because these ducts, which are equivalent to sewers, must necessarily be damp and mouldy, even if kept in the best possible order. The air must be vitiated if obtained by this means. My opinion is that we should erect a chimney in the court and bring in the fresh air of heaven, rather than have it introduced through those subterranean channels. Otherwise I think the ventilation is as good as can be made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has always objected to this mode of bringing the air into the Chamber, but I have never been able to agree with him. This matter has been discussed a great many times, and it is a very curious thing to find how hard it is to move an official in regard to it. From 1882 to 1887, the atmosphere of the Chamber was absolutely terrible. At that time, after a great deal of difficulty, we induced the architect to open the windows at the back of this Chamber, and that was of the greatest benefit in the world. I believe that if the windows on the three sides of the Chamber were so constructed that they would open, the ventilation of the Chamber would be vastly improved in hot weather.

Mr. CASEY. This is the 22nd or 23rd session I have sat in this House, and the air has never really been good in this Chamber. I do not agree with my hon. friend from North Norfolk that bringing the air through ducts hurts it at all, because those ducts are gone through every day and kept clean. But what I have thought to be the chief trouble is that everything foul that gets into circulation in the corridors is sucked into this chamber through the various doors by the very efforts taken to ventilate the chamber. I know that there is a connection between the opening in the roof and the suction fan in the basement, creating a current towards the ceiling. When that current is affected, I have seen all these doors blowing inwards with the currents of air coming from the corridors. No one who circulates in the corridors needs to be told what various infelicitous mixtures there are in the air of those corridors, coming from the kitchen and elsewhere. I do not think any plan has been devised yet for keeping up a circulation of air in the Chamber that does not suck in the vitiated air from the corridors; but I do not think that all the ventilating apparatus is at present in exercise. For instance, at present there is no current of air coming in from under the seats, although there is a fan for driving it in. At this time, I do not think it would be too cold for anyone's feet; nor would it be too cold in the winter, either if the air were properly warmed. The late lamented Mr. Arnoldi did try a vast number of experiments with the ventilation, and honeycombed the walls in all directions with contradictory appliances; so that it is quite uncertain whether the cold fresh air comes down the main shaft of the chimney, or the vitiated hot air goes up. Since his lamented reign, I do not know that anybody who has a right to be called an expert has looked into the question. I am not an expert myself; I cannot advise the Minister where to find experts; but I think that in some of the large cities in the States, where they have large public buildings to ventilate, somebody could be got at a moderate expense to come here and give a general idea what should be done, and then the details could be worked out by the departmental staff. This is a matter that affects the lives and health of the members, and I do not think the country would object to a considerable expenditure in getting at the best plan for ventilating this building.

Mr. CHARLTON. I believe that the assembly hall in the legislative buildings at Toronto is admirably ventilated. The system there contains all the modern improvements, and if the hon. Minister of Public Works had the proper officer sent up there to make an examination, perhaps some light could be obtained for the ventilation of our chamber here.

Mr. CASEY. Is anything going to be done shortly to make the geological museum fire-proof?

Mr. OUMET. It is under consideration.

Mr. CASEY. Has the Minister taken any steps to find out what it will probably cost to carry out that improvement?

Mr. OUMET. No plans or estimates have been prepared as yet. When I get them I will give them to the hon. gentleman.

Rideau Hall, including grounds
—renewals, improvements, repairs, furniture and maintenance..... $15,000

Mr. FLINT. I think an item of this kind requires some explanation. Rideau Hall, we all know, is an eyesore to the people of this Dominion. It has been a huge blunder from the beginning, and will continue to be a blunder as long as it lasts; and when we are asked to spend $15,000 more on improvements and repairs, which can only be of a temporary character, I think the Minister should give us a statement of what it is proposed to do with the money. There is no subject on which Parliament is more irritable than the expenditure of money on Rideau Hall. It has a magnificent situation; but a mistake was made in purchasing an old residence of an antique style, and afterwards patching it up from time to time at great expense; and we have really nothing worthy of the country to show for it all. People coming to Ottawa are delighted with the public buildings here, but are disappointed with Rideau Hall. I think the policy of spending money on Rideau Hall should be stopped, and that we should look for some plan for getting rid of it, and, when the finances of the country will admit, housing the Governor General in a style more suitable to the country and the dignity of the office.

Mr. OUMET. This item is made up as follows:—Gardner's contract, $3,000; filling ice house, $70; repairs and staff, $6,500, that is, the permanent staff which is employed for repairs; lumber, $600; hardware, $350; glass, putty, &c., $100; blacksmith, $60; firebrick, cement and fireclay, $125; furniture, upholstery, and carpets, $1,000; linen, $800; china, crockery, and glassware, $1,000; repairs to stoves, tinware, and utensils, $950; shingling roof of ball-room and curling rink, $500; papering, painting, &c., $600. These amount to $18,000; but we will try to do with $15,000. It has been stated in the public press that the Government had built that chapel for His Excellency the Governor General. It is only fair for me to say that His Excellency refused to allow the Government to pay for it, and paid for it himself.

Mr. McMULLEN. Good boy.

Grounds, Public Buildings, Ottawa..... $6,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. The walk leading from the House to Wellington Street deserves attention. In dry weather it is a bad walk, and in wet weather also. There should be some different kind of pavement or something done so that the people could walk on it with comfort. It is not a good walk by any means.

Heating Public Buildings, Ottawa, including salaries of engineers, firemen, elevator attendants and caretakers.... $71,500

Mr. OUMET. The increase comes from the fact that the Department of the Secretary of State, which had under its supervision the heating of the Printing Bureau, has transferred that work to us, and also for the sake of bookkeeping, the Auditor General has asked us to bring under this vote all the salaries of the caretakers. &c.

Mr. McMULLEN. What does the man get for watering around the buildings?

Mr. OUMET. The contract for keeping the grounds here has been given to Mr. Robertson for $5,600. Everything is included.

Mr. McMULLEN. I hope the Minister of Public Works will see that in this hot weather the avenues up to the House should be well watered. Very often is it quite unpleasant to have the dust flying in all directions; and when the contractor is well paid for doing the work, you should see that it is well done.

Mr. CHARLTON. How much wood is used in the heating of this building, and would not a change to coal be an economy?

Mr. OUMET. The amount of wood used is 5,500 cords. Three of the wood-burning furnaces have been replaced by coal burners, and four more will be replaced by three coal burners. These will heat all the building with coal. When the furnaces in the other buildings are also replaced by coal-burners, we expect to make an economy of $6,000 per year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What was the use of having that quantity of wood piled in the yard behind here? It is anything but pleasant to the eye, and it looks dangerous in case of fire.

Mr. OUMET. There is something in the hon. gentleman's complaint, and I do not see why the contractor should use that as a wood yard. He says he has not enough room in his own yard on the canal. The suggestion will be kept in mind.

Mr. FORBES. Do you use soft coal or hard coal?

Mr. OUMET. Hard coal. Soft coal is used for the grates.

Mr. FLINT. Would it not be well to ask the opinion of an architect as to the propriety of planting trees, wherever possible, across the square in front of the building. It is a great architectural defect, this enormous square with nothing green except the grass, and a few handsome trees would add very much to the beauty of the square.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FLINT. That is my opinion, and I have no doubt it can be sustained on very logical grounds. Take a look at these buildings from any point, and a great portion of the beauty is due to the foliage at the back, and this enormous green, barren square must be an eyesore to any one with architectural taste. A good many of my hon. friends may not have architectural taste and are not competent to judge.

Mr. OUMET.

Gas and Electric Lights, Public Buildings, Ottawa, including roads and bridges $25,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be a great improvement to dispense with gas altogether and have electric light, which is vastly more wholesome. When we have our own power, we ought to supply electric light to every portion of this building, if not to the departments generally.

Mr. OUMET. It is the intention to ask for a special vote to supply the whole building with electric light.

Telephone Service, Public Buildings, Ottawa $3,800

Mr. CHARLTON. What is paid for the use of these telephones?

Mr. OUMET. Thirty-five dollars a year.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I would like to ask the Minister whether he intends to give us a telephone in the upper wing of this end of the building, up stairs, for the convenience of members. His attention has already been called to it, and it would be a great convenience to the Printing Committee and others. In the corresponding wing of the Senate they have one very finely fitted up, and they had no trouble in getting it.

Mr. OUMET. My attention has been drawn to it, and I will see that it is done.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister says that $35 apiece is paid for telephones here. That is an excessive price. They do not pay anything like that price in the west. What company is it?

Mr. OUMET. There is only one company, the Bell Telephone Company. The prices vary in every city. In Montreal we pay as much as $60, and I think private residences pay $50.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). We pay $50 in Toronto for business, and $30 for private telephones.

Mr. OUMET. We may have to run our own telephones. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the company are not going to reduce their price in the interest of the Government. Instead of charging less, they are likely to charge us more than other people.

Major's Hill Park, Ottawa $4,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that kept up by contract?

Mr. OUMET. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is very well done, and there is no prettier spot I know of anywhere. But I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the lower end of the park, about the pond, has been somewhat neglected. There is a large space which is not kept clean, a portion of it ought to be filled up, and as compared with the other portions of the park, it is an eyesore. I think the rest of it being so beautifully kept, that also should be improved and kept in order

Mr. OUIMET. I am glad the hon. gentleman called attention to that. Of late years so much opposition has been raised against the appropriation for that park, that some portions of it have not been attended to, perhaps, as they should be, and that part of the park the hon. gentleman refers to has not been levelled. The fence ought to be completed also, and I think we ought to get more money to put that park into proper shape. After the speech of the hon. gentleman, I am sure my colleagues will be kind enough to let me have the necessary money.

Mr. CHARLTON. I want to add my word to what has been said by the hon. gentleman. I think Parliament will cheerfully give the little additional sum of money requisite to make that spot as beautiful as it is capable of being made. We certainly have a most magnificent site for these buildings, with lovely grounds, in which we should take pride, and not be niggardly about a small sum of money necessary to put them into proper shape. The whole surroundings are regal in their beauty, and let us have Major's Hill Park put in proper shape.

Salaries of engineers, firemen, caretakers, etc., of Dominion public buildings..... $68,500

Mr. CHARLTON. There is a little increase here; what is the cause of it?

Mr. OUIMET. That is owing to the increase in the number of public buildings throughout the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does that explanation also apply to the furniture vote in which there is an increase?

Mr. OUIMET. No; that vote is for the furniture of Dominion buildings outside of Ottawa.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) whether this vote is to pay the salaries of caretakers for public buildings?

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) What salaries do you refer to?

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) This appropriation, I understand, is to pay the salaries of caretakers for public buildings in general. At St. Hyacinthe, where the Federal Government own a very important public building, the caretaker is not paid as high a salary as other caretakers. There are, throughout the various provinces of the Dominion, some sixty or eighty caretakers; and in many localities of less importance and of smaller size than the city of St. Hyacinthe, the caretakers are paid a higher salary than the one at St. Hyacinthe, the latter being paid only $300 per annum. In other localities, salaries range from four hundred to eight hundred dollars per annum. I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) to the matter, hoping that he will see that this employee be paid a sufficient salary to enable him to support his family.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) When I took charge of the Department of Public Works, and especially during the first year of my administration, when I had the Estimates connected with my department voted by the House, so many difficulties had been raised with respect to public buildings that I made up my mind to inaugurate a policy of retrenchment with respect to that item of expenditure. I tried to bring down the salary of caretakers for public buildings to an average ratio of two hundred and fifty dollars to three hundred dollars a year. It should be borne in mind that these employees, in addition to their salary, are given free lodgings, light and fuel. They have no municipal or other taxes to pay. Taking into consideration these several advantages, I believe that the services of well qualified caretakers for our public buildings could be easily secured. Any ordinary workingman would, I think, be glad to draw a monthly salary of thirty or forty dollars, in addition to free lodging, fuel and light. In a certain number of localities where the salary is much higher, the difference is accounted for by the fact that the caretaker has got no lodgings in the public building he is taking care of. At all events, should the hon. member call at my office, we will talk the matter over. The ground the hon. gentleman seems to take, to press this increase of salary is, I think, the fact that other employees of the same class are paid higher salaries than in this instance.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) A salary of four hundred dollars a year is only reasonable, I think, especially in the case of a man who is obliged to live in town. Caretakers, for the most part, have their lodgings in the building they are taking care of; the very nature of their functions involving such a privilege. The Minister of Public Works says he is bent upon effecting savings and inaugurating an era of economy. This is a move in the right direction. Still, I think I would have no trouble in pointing out to him many items of expenditure in his department to which he could apply the pruning knife. I am of opinion that it is wrong in principle to make savings at the expense of poor caretakers who draw a meagre enough salary already. Should the Government adopt a policy of retrenchment, I am quite ready to indorse it, but let them begin by cutting down the larger salaries, and we know there is plenty of room for retrenchment in that direction. It would be a bad policy to curtail the salaries of poor people who only manage, by dint of severe economy, to get a bare living. The Minister of Public Works is no doubt aware of the fact that there are plenty of workingmen who earn a yearly salary of four hundred dollars. A workingman who gives up his trade to accept a Government situation is sanguine in his expectation of getting a good salary, and he thinks himself wronged and unfairly treated when he is paid a smaller salary than other employees occupying a similar position.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) If, to a salary of four hundred dollars you add such valuable perquisites as free lodging, fuel and light, it would hardly be fair to say that caretakers are being denied a reasonable remuneration. I know of many first-class workingmen who do not earn that much. Many workingmen would only be too happy if they could draw a regular monthly salary, coupled with the advantages mentioned. We are apt sometimes to think that small savings on these salaries are immaterial. There are in the whole Dominion of Canada about two hundred and fifty public buildings, and should the department succeed in cutting down salaries to an average extent of two hundred dollars a year, a saving of fifty thousand dollars would thereby be effected.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) is no doubt aware of the fact that caretakers for public buildings in cities of less importance than St. Hyacinthe are paid a higher salary and receive better treatment at the hands of the Government than the caretaker in question. It is, in fact, a matter of public notoriety that caretakers for public buildings of less importance than that at St. Hyacinthe are much better paid. It should be borne in mind that at St. Hyacinthe they have the post office, custom-house and inland revenue office in the same public building. This gives us an insight into its importance. I understand that in Ontario, caretakers for public buildings are paid from four to six hundred dollars a year, with apparently less work to do than the caretaker at St. Hyacinthe. In the province of Quebec, some caretakers receive a higher salary than the one in question. At Sherbrooke, for instance, the caretaker is better paid. The same remark applies to the caretaker at Sorel, while another individual is paid four hundred dollars a year for taking care of the public buildings at St. Jerome. I fail to see why the caretaker at St. Hyacinthe should be made an exception to the rule. I therefore beg of the hon. Minister of Public Works that the employee in question be placed on a footing of equality, so far as salary is concerned, with caretakers for public buildings of less importance.

Quarantine Buildings, repairs and maintenance..... $10,000

Mr. CHARLTON. Where are these repairs to be made on quarantine buildings?

Mr. OUIMET. This vote is for the general maintenance and repairs of all the quarantine buildings in the Dominion. It is not for erecting new buildings.

Mr. DUPONT.

Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia, repairs of L'Ardoise breakwater. $4,300

Mr. FORBES. Is this going to complete that work?

Mr. OUIMET. This is to repair the damages done to that breakwater by the severe storm of August, 1893. It completes the work.

Digby Pier..... $8,000

Mr. BOWERS. Will this $8,000 finish the breakwater at Digby? Will it repair the damage that has been done to the breakwater by the storm of a few weeks ago?

Mr. OUIMET. That damage has already been repaired.

Mr. BOWERS. What is this $8,000 for?

Mr. OUIMET. It is to complete the improvements that have been made to the wharf so as to make it fully adequate to accommodate the steamship traffic at that port.

Mr. BOWERS. Is the same person in charge of the wharf now who was there formerly?

Mr. OUIMET. No; the wharfinger is in charge.

Mr. BOWERS. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on having made the change. I called his attention several times to the fact that the man who was in charge before was getting $2 or $2.50 a day, for one half or two-thirds of the year, in watching timber that was never used, timber that was owned by somebody in Ottawa. The timber was carried down there, but was never used in the wharf. It was simply a waste of public money. Now that we are on this item of harbours and rivers for Nova Scotia, I will ask the Minister if he intends placing in the Supplementary Estimates a sufficient sum to increase the length of the pier at Church Point so as to prevent the gravel from washing around the end of the pier?

Mr. OUIMET. The answer the hon. gentleman would like to have the majority of my colleagues will have to give, and the Supplementary Estimates will show what it is.

Mr. BOWERS. I received a letter from the hon. gentleman saying he would lay the matter before Council, and as I see two members of the Cabinet present, I hope they will give it their serious attention. Petitions and letters have come in year after year about that breakwater, asking that it be put in such a shape that it can be utilized.

Yarmouth Harbour, dredging,
etc..... $10,000

Mr. FLINT. I would ask the Minister how much money has been spent on dredging, and if any of this money has been spent for any other purpose in Yarmouth?

Mr. OUMET. I find in my book that before the year 1892, the sum of $44,448.10 had been spent on that harbour by the Government, and since we have commenced that dredging, we have paid, up to the 30th December last, $11,820.16. This appropriation is to continue the dredging.

Mr. FLINT. I would like to say that the work is a good work, it is an improvement of great importance to the harbour. But I understood that part of this appropriation was intended for repairs to the breakwater near Fish Point, which is a very important and valuable work. A year or two ago my attention was called to it, and I think I communicated to the department the fact that some part of that work was settling, and it was very desirable that a report should be made upon it and some of this money appropriated for that purpose, should be expended upon it. I would ask the Minister if any money has been expended on that breakwater, or if he has any reports as to the condition or necessities of that work. If it should be undermined or destroyed, or broken away, a large amount of this money already expended on the harbour would be rendered comparatively useless.

Mr. OUMET. I am informed that no money has been spent for some time on that breakwater. We have a report stating that it was not in very good order, I must admit, but it is thought that it will do without repairs for a year or two. At all events, the department will take care that this work is maintained, because it is of some importance to the harbour of Yarmouth. The constituents of the hon. gentleman will be glad to know that the Government are taking such good care of their harbour, irrespective of the political colour of the hon. gentleman who represents the constituency.

Mr. FLINT. I may say that we look upon it as the duty of the Government to do this, without regard to political considerations, but solely in consequence of the importance of the harbour. I am afraid that if the Government delays spending a little money on the breakwater, the delay will involve an increased expenditure in a year or two. I have in my hands correspondence and reports with regard to another breakwater in the county, which shows clearly the dangers and difficulties which this sort of delay leads to. It will be remembered by the Minister that as long ago as 1890, the attention of the Government was called by my predecessor to a breakwater about seven or eight miles from that, called the Sandford breakwater, a work upon which the report shows that $4,000 or $5,000 have been expended, partly by the people in the neighbourhood, I think some by the Local Government, and a considerable sum by the Dominion Government, from time to time. In 1890 the sea had begun to make some inroad on one corner of this breakwater, and the people made a sort of artificial harbour, which was of great value to the community, who are devoted almost entirely to fishing. It is a very prosperous community, owing largely to the fact of this harbour being made by the breakwater. I will read the correspondence that took place with the Government which is not in my opinion quite as complimentary to the activity, energy and desire of the Government to keep up public works as might be said in regard to the harbour of Yarmouth. On August 26th, 1890, the following communication was sent to the department by Mr. Lovitt :—

Pardon me for calling for your notice the Sandford Breakwater which requires a small sum, say $40 to $50 to build a bulkhead to prevent the sea from washing the beach over the road thereby stopping the passage or road that enables the public to get on the wharf or breakwater.

The following communication was sent on 6th September by Mr. Crosby :—

YARMOUTH, N.S., Sept. 6th, 1894.

DEAR SIR,—I deem it my duty to inform you that the late gale or high wind and sea has injured the breakwater at Sandford in the county of Yarmouth, some of the covering on the outside has been worn through and washed away by the action of the sea and stones. I am told by the late commissioner that if a small sum, about $300, could be appropriated and repairs made at an early date, such repairs will likely hinder a whole block from being washed to pieces this autumn.

I hope you will instruct the proper officer to view and report on this at an early day.

I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,
THOMAS B. CROSBY.

HON. C. H. TUPPER, Minister Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Mr. Crosby was the late candidate in the Government interest of that county, and no doubt he was in communication with the people of Sandford, and he appears to have entertained the same idea as Mr. Lovitt as to the necessity of the breakwater. This letter was acknowledged in due course. In December, 1890, a lengthy report on the subject of the breakwater was handed in, signed by the Chief Engineer of Public Works as the result of this pressure brought to bear upon the Government by Mr. Crosby and Mr. Lovitt. The report said :

The pier or breakwater at Cranberry Head, now Sandford, in the county of Yarmouth, N.S., is an old structure and liable to damage during storms, which during the year now drawing to a close have left their mark, not only on the pier, but on the beach to the westward. A late examination shows that a change in the movement of the gravel composing the beach has taken place, and instead of following its usual course of making against the pier, it has been washed away, and to such an extent that if steps are not taken to prevent and stop the erosion which is going on, the chances are that the sea will break into the outlet of the pond, to be followed by the destruction of the harbour.

The estimate was $2,600. The letter of Mr.

Crosby and the communication of Mr. Lovitt, both of whom looked at the breakwater, and gathered information from those interested in it, showed that those gentlemen had much more modest ideas, and estimated the cost at from $100 to $300. The engineer who went there viewed the work from an engineer's standpoint and provided almost for its reconstruction, and accordingly submitted a very large estimate which the people in the neighbourhood did not expect the Government to accede to. The estimate was so large that the Government gave up all idea of carrying out the work. Here a great mistake was committed. The people of the locality, without reference to politics, desired the expenditure of a small sum, which would have saved the breakwater from destruction. A mistake was made by the department in not acting on the request of Mr. Crosby and Mr. Lovitt, that the department should expend $400 or $500 in works necessary to save the breakwater from destruction, any larger expenditure being deferred to a later date. When I was elected, one of the first matters placed before my attention by the gentlemen interested was in regard to the necessity of work on this breakwater. The letter I addressed to the Minister of Public Works on July 15th was as follows:—

OTTAWA, 15th July, 1891.

The Honourable Minister of Public Works, Department of Public Works,
Ottawa.

DEAR SIR,—I am in receipt of information to the effect that the "Cranberry Head" (Yarmouth County, N.S.) breakwater is in a very bad condition, needing immediate repairs, if it is to be saved from wreck and destruction this winter.

My informant says: "The logs on the seaward side are worn out and the ballast coming out, it also wants general repairs all over it."

Would you kindly at the earliest moment practicable cause a survey to be made with a view to having an appropriation made at this session to save the work from destruction.

I have the honour to be,

Honourable and dear sir,

Yours very truly,

T. B. FLINT.

This was acknowledged in due course, and the statement was made that a report would be asked for. Nothing having been done, on 28th August I again called the attention of the Public Works to the subject in the following communication:—

Ottawa, 28th Aug., 1891.

The Hon. Minister Public Works, Department Public Works,
Ottawa.

HON. AND DEAR SIR,—I desire to call the attention of your department to the bad condition of the Sandford Beach, near the breakwater at Sandford, in the county of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.

Mr. FLINT.

I am informed that representations have been made to the Government by my predecessor (Mr. Lovitt) and by others as to the state of the beach, and I regret to say that the deterioration of the beach continues.

It appears to be the opinion of the people in the vicinity that had timely work been done last autumn, much of the evil which has since occurred would have been avoided.

Last winter the tide washed the beach all over the road and covered the bridge, causing considerable expense to the municipal authorities. Another seasons storms, if nothing is done, will probably destroy the beach and the road, and have a most disastrous effect upon the breakwater.

I would therefore urge that your department would at the earliest possible moment cause inquiry to be made as to these representations and to undertake to remedy the grievances complained of in the interests of the public.

I am, sir, yours very truly,

THOS. B. FLINT.

On 20th October, 1891, I addressed the department as follows:—

YARMOUTH, N.S., 20th October, 1891.

The Hon. Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

DEAR SIR,—I again desire to call your attention to the bad condition of the Sandford breakwater in this (Yarmouth) County.

Since I wrote you last, during the session, the storms have further injured the work.

Would you instruct some competent person at once to report fully on its condition, and, if practicable, take some steps this fall to have some repairs made. A moderate outlay now might save money by and by.

The matter is really urgent. The preservation, in good order, of this breakwater is, as you may suppose, very important to the people of this locality.

I am, dear sir, yours very truly,

THOS. B. FLINT.

I do not find in the return here a copy of the reply sent to me at that time by the acting Minister of Public Works, but it stated that owing to the great pressure of business in the department the matter had been temporarily overlooked, and would be attended to as soon as possible. On 16th March, 1892, nothing being done, I addressed the department as follows:—

OTTAWA, March 16th, 1892.

The Hon. Minister of Public Works.

DEAR SIR,—During last session on several occasions I brought to the attention of your predecessors in the Department of Works, the case of the Sandford breakwater.

Last summer it was in a bad condition requiring some attention and repairs, which had they been promptly given would have been of great value.

The head of the department kindly intimated that it would be looked into.

I desired the Government to send competent persons to report with the certain expectation that a moderate sum would suffice to save a valuable public property of great utility to the people of the vicinity.

I regret to say that later advices from there furnish the information that the gales of the late autumn and winter have still further damaged this work and unless some repairs are made at the earliest possible opportunity the practical destruction of a most important public work is imminent.

Would you kindly order an immediate report from some competent judge, and if my information is borne out by his returns, place an amount in the estimates for the purpose of saving the property from destruction.

You will readily understand that once a serious breakdown occurs in an exposed breakwater like this the expense of repair and replacement are made greater by each gale which blows upon this exposed part of the coast.

I am sir, yours very truly,

THOS. B. FLINT.

On 20th October, 1892, I addressed a long letter as follows:—

YARMOUTH, N.S., Oct. 20th, 1892.

The Hon. Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa.

DEAR SIR,—I have again the honour to call your attention to the very bad condition of the "Sandford" Breakwater in this county.

Several times I have addressed complaint to the Department on this subject of this important public work, and have received assurances that at a very early date investigations would be made and reports called for.

Had the desired repairs been undertaken soon after the session of 1891; a great deal of the subsequent loss would have been avoided. Even had work been done this summer much damage might have been obviated.

I am informed by those who are deeply concerned that the storms of the ensuing winter will in all probability finish the demolition and ruin of this breakwater. This will be a positive calamity to those industrious and energetic and most deserving people to whose vessels the breakwater has hitherto been a protection.

I do not know what more to say by way of urging the administration to do something to save this work from destruction.

I would most earnestly press upon the Minister to make this a matter of special instruction, and if possible to take from the appropriation for general purposes enough to save this work, and to ask an appropriation at the ensuing session for its repair.

I am convinced that by next summer there will be nothing left worth expending money on, and the loss and damage to the neighbourhood will be impossible to estimate.

I have the honour to remain,

Your obedient servant,

THOS. B. FLINT.

Either because I happened to be in opposition to the Government, or because the Government did not deem this work to be of the same value as the people of the vicinity, and as I myself deemed it, nothing has been done. I am now informed that the breakwater is practically a ruin. The harbour is gone, and the facilities the people enjoyed since 1876, if not from an earlier date, have disappeared, so that a work upon which $4,000 or $5,000 has been expended is a complete ruin. I do not know what defence the Minister of Public Works will make for this neglect. The county of Yarmouth pays a large sum into the revenue, and the people have a right to expect that public works should be kept in a proper state of efficiency. From my point of view the Government is extremely censurable for allowing that harbour to be destroyed, and thus depriving the people of their means of living. This does not square entirely with the self congratulation of the Minister in regard to what he proposes to attempt in the harbour of Yarmouth. I do earnestly press upon the Government the desirability in the interests of fair play, and in the interests of good Government generally, that they should take this matter into their consideration, and appropriate a sufficient sum of money to put that public work in an efficient condition. Whereas, at one time $500, or $1,000 at the outside, would have been adequate to have kept the work in a fair condition, for ten or fifteen years, it is now a complete ruin, and will probably require an expenditure of $3,000 or $4,000. This neglect of the Government has not endeared the institutions of the country to the people in that vicinity. They are a hard-working and industrious people, supporting our institutions, paying a fair share of the taxes, divided in their political allegiance as intelligent men in the country are, but they like the Government of the county to administer the public funds fairly and impartially, and they do not understand why they should be treated in this manner. This matter has been so frequently pressed on the attention of the department that the Minister must have some policy in regard to it, and I would like to know what that policy is. It would relieve our minds of considerable anxiety to get some assurance that this session the Government would put a sufficient sum in the Estimates to reconstruct this work, and to again place these people in the position to enjoy the facilities which for twenty years previously they have enjoyed. The electoral district I have the honour to represent has not called very heavily upon the Government for expenditure on public works, with the exception of ordinary expenditure in the way of maintenance and repairs. We believe, however, that this claim is so fair and reasonable that the Government cannot longer delay taking action in this matter without doing serious injustice to themselves as administrators of the public funds.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am pleased to hear the hon. gentleman express himself so favourably of the Government for the patronage showered upon the county of Yarmouth, and for the expenditure it has made in the dredging of Yarmouth harbour. I admire the hon. gentleman's modesty in not showering too heavy a burst of eulogy upon the Government, but still it is in the right direction, and it is to be hoped we may expect better things from him in the future. Nevertheless, he has a peculiar way of showing his appreciation of the Government's patronage in that direction by his past acts. I would say that whilst the Government were giving patronage to Yarmouth, Lunenburg's request for harbour dredging was overlooked, notwithstanding the representatives having made repeated requests. The predecessor of the present Minister of Public Works, before going out of office, gave me a promise that Lunenburg should have the services of a dredge. That a dredge is needed there goes without question. The large amount of shipping that frequents that port from day to day is such as would warrant the expenditure. Besides, that town is the terminus of the Nova Scotia Central Railway, and one of no mean importance in every way, as will be shown by the shipping list, and all I would ask of the Minister of Public Works is that he may not delay any longer than is reasonable, and grant my request, so frequently made, and that at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FLINT. I was sorry the hon. gentleman spoke until we had heard from the Minister some reply to the observations which I made on the subject of the Sandford breakwater. I would like to hear the Minister's views on that matter.

Mr. OUIMET. The state of the breakwater at Sandford is known to the department, and if we have not attended to it, it has been because we have not had the necessary money. When the hon. gentleman talks of the Supplementary Estimates I may tell him that the various works noted down for the Supplementary Estimates, which would be useful, amount to-day to over $2,500,000; so that the hon. gentleman will see that it is quite impossible for the Government to attend to every one of them, at least in the same year. They must wait to be attended to in turn.

Mr. FLINT. But this work is a little different from a new work; it is an old work, which has proved itself to be of great utility, and I would like to know if the Minister can give us any assurance that, as soon as the finances will admit, he will take it into his consideration.

Mr. OUIMET. That assurance I will give the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FLINT. I want to make a remark or two in regard to the observations made by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach). Although they were made in a jocular manner, yet they open up a broad question—a question that is treated more seriously, by many people than it should be; that is, the relation of political parties to the Government in regard to the appropriations. Now, I do not admit for one instant that any person in pressing upon the attention of the Government the necessity for public works in the interest of the country, is asking for favours, or in any proper sense of the word patronage, or that it would be at all proper to treat these expenditures as having any relation whatever to the political complexion of the constituency in which they are made. That view has been repudiated time and again in Parliament, and I know it would be the destruction of any public man who should for one instant, in a formal way, venture to take such a stand. Of course, we know that in times of election people do profess to believe that a Government would be actuated by considerations of that kind; but I have always taken the pains to point out to those who have made such an assertion, that although they may be friends of the Government, they are really saying the most cruel and unkind thing that could be said of an Administration—that they would seriously use the moneys placed in their hands as a trust fund, taken from the taxation of the country, to expend unfairly in communities because they supported them, or would refuse needed expenditures in constituencies opposed to them. I may say, as the representative of the county of Yarmouth, that we ask no favours of the Government—that I am not here to ask favours of the Government. Nor ought any representative here make his political allegiance depend on the amount of public money that is expended in his constituency. I believe that no possible amount of money expended by the Government would change the political complexion of the community which I have the honour to represent, because their political opinions are based on considerations entirely beyond and outside of the expenditure of public money. Their interests are too large and their wealth too great, for them to be influenced for one instant by any appropriations of this kind, and I do not think any member of the Government or any responsible official dreams for one moment that the constituency of Yarmouth could be influenced either for or against the Government by more or less money being given. They would no doubt oppose a Government if they saw that it neglected its duties—if they saw that while they paid their fair proportion of taxation, their public works were neglected and allowed to go down, and their opportunities for profitable livelihood were lessened in consequence. But they would not be actuated by motives of gratitude, because the emotion of gratitude cannot and ought not to be felt in regard to the administration of the public funds, and I am proud to say that in my own community suggestions of this kind are received by gentlemen of both political parties with the utmost contempt, and no public man would venture in any public meeting in the county of Yarmouth to throw out a hint of that kind. All we ask the Government is right, and justice, and fair play, and we will divide on political lines entirely regardless of the amount of money expended among us. We view public questions on too high a plane to be influenced in that way, and I think it will be a fortunate day for this Dominion when the Government and their supporters, and some members of the Opposition, get rid of this notion, this immoral notion, that has done more to degrade public life in this Dominion than any other, that the expenditure of public money is conditioned on the political complexion of a community. It should be conditioned solely upon the public necessity and the financial ability of the Government to meet that necessity. I believe there is a better spirit in this country than there was ten years ago in this regard; I believe that our people are being educated to a higher plane in this regard, and that intimation of public expenditure in times of election are not as effective to-day as they were a few years ago, and I hope that the time is near at hand when any suggestion of this kind will be received everywhere as an insult to the public spirit of the community. I for one do not propose to be actuated by any such suggestion. I base the claims I make solely on their justice and right.

Mr. KAULBACH. It is all very well for our hon. friend from Yarmouth to moralize in the way he has done, and to deliver a sort of missionary lecture on the remarks I have made. I meet them in the spirit in which he has made them, and I quite appreciate the spirit with which he has referred to the motives which have actuated the Government heretofore. But I do not know any Government that has not acknowledged in some way that in showering benefits they consider think the remarks made by the hon. member. That is a record we cannot deny, for it is public, and this practice will continue from this time to the millennium. Therefore, I think the remarks made by the hon. member for Yarmouth might have been spared. At the same time, I appreciate the hon. gentleman's expression, for I consider that they are words of sterling worth.

Mr. FORBES. While I regret that the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) should regulate his subserviency to the Government by the amount of patronage at his disposal, I do not think that the electors of his county will be flattered by the reference he has made to them, nor by the views he holds as their representative on such matters. I rise to refer to the condition of the breakwater at Port Joli. It was built by the Government and is in a serious state of decay. I wrote the Minister of Public Works on the 21st April, asking him to have it surveyed by one of his engineers. I wrote my letter the day after I received a letter from a most intelligent and respectable citizen of that district, as follows:—

PORT JOLI, 9th March, 1894.

DEAR SIR,—I suppose you are aware that there is a wharf in this place belonging to the Dominion Government, which is in a very bad state of repair.

I would be very much pleased if you would present the facts to the Government, especially as the steamer 'St. Michael' will make her weekly trips, commencing this summer, and requires a place to land her freight. The top of the wharf is totally rotting away. A few hundred dollars to repair and straighten the pier would make a substantial wharf. This wharf belongs to the Dominion Government, and the Local Government will not interfere.

Yours respectfully,

ARCHIE L. ROBERTSON.

I wrote to the hon. Minister and got an answer, saying that if it only cost $250 he would direct one of his engineers to make an inspection. I should like to know whether he has done so. I wish also to call the hon. gentleman's attention to another pier at Port Mouton. That pier was built previous to Confederation, and taken over by the Dominion Government, which has spent money in repairing it. It has been severely injured by several gales, one particularly during last winter, which caused the top to be shifted about ten feet and become loosened, so that it is likely to fall to pieces. This pier is generally used by the fishermen for protection to their boats and also as a public wharf, and a very small expenditure would prevent it becoming a total loss. I telegraphed, when I got the first intimation of the destruction, to the hon. Minister, but got no answer. Then I wrote a letter, and got a reply from the Deputy Minister, stating that the expenditure of public funds at the disposal of the department, was, to a great extent, regulated by the vote made by Parliament each year, and that while he had the right to expend money voted by Parliament, he could not take money from any fund for the purpose requested. I therefore deem it my duty to ask the Government whether they have made a proper inquiry and survey, and whether they intend to comply with the request of the citizens, should the complaint made by the citizens be warranted by the investigation of the Government engineer. I understand that it is the policy of the Government to take a number of public wharfs and breakwaters under their sole control and keep them in repair and to let others go into decay. I regret if such is the case, because it may entail absolute loss in those fishing districts, where the piers are not taken over, and where the people have been accustomed to make use of these piers for the purposes of protection, and curing and drying fish, and landing freight and passengers. I would like to know whether the two wharfs I have spoken of are included in the list of public wharfs and breakwaters to be taken under the care of the Government. Without repeating the remarks of my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) in nearly all of which I heartily agree, I only ask that the Government be very cautious before throwing overboard any wharfs or piers built for the use of the fishermen. They may be very small in size, but are of great importance to the people of the district where they are, and surely the revenues of the country will permit the Government to keep the piers that are built in perfect order. The two I specially refer to are at ports Joli and Mouton. There is another one at Liverpool, on the eastern side of the harbour, which has cost over $80,000, and is being allowed to go into decay. As regards that breakwater, the Government can take whatever course they choose, because some of the citizens do not want it continued, but want it removed and another one built on the western side. In 1879, at the request of Sir Charles Tupper, who had publicly promised in Liverpool during the election campaign of 1878, to build the breakwater, Parliament voted $5,000 to build a breakwater on the western side of the harbour of Liverpool. After a thousand dollars or more were spent in a way no one could tell, the work dropped, despite the promise made by Sir Charles Tupper just previous to the general elections. It is for the hon. Minister to say whether the policy laid down by Sir Charles Tupper will be carried out.

Mr. OUIMET. Port Joli and Port Mouton have been examined by our engineer and it will be a question as to whether the department will have the necessary money to do the work. As to the port of Liverpool what is required there is dredging.

Mr. FORBES. That is another matter which I will bring up later on.

Mr. OUIMET. I am advised by the department that the breakwater is of no use, and that it would be of no interest to the people of Liverpool to spend any money on it. The chief engineer has placed before me estimates of works that would be useful, amounting to $2,500,000, and of course we have to make a selection amongst these. We are always accused of favouring our friends, but the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) had to admit that we considered, in the first place, the importance of the harbour and the public interests to be served. It cannot be expected by the Maritime Provinces that all these wharfs and breakwaters, transferred some years ago by the Local to the Federal Government, would be kept in repair. A classification should be made. I had that work commenced by the late Mr. Allison, but unfortunately, in the burning of the customs-house at St. John, where he had his office, all his papers were lost, and as he died shortly afterwards all that work was lost to the department. I have assigned that same work to a gentleman who is fully acquainted with all the different harbours and wharfs in the Maritime Provinces. When the work is completed, I think I shall be able to lay before the House the policy of the department on the subject.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who is the gentleman?

Mr. FORBES.

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Perley, the late chief engineer of the department. I may say that he was the best qualified man to do that kind of work.

Mr. FORBES. Am I to understand that these two breakwaters at Port Joli and Port Mouton will or will not receive the hon. Minister's consideration?

Mr. OUIMET. They will receive my consideration.

Mr. FORBES. Will there be any vote in the Supplementary Estimates for the repair of them?

Mr. OUIMET. That will be seen when the Supplementary Estimates come before the House.

Grand Etang..... $23,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman say how far the contractor has proceeded with this work, and how much money has been paid him?

Mr. OUIMET. No money has been paid yet. The work is proceeding.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I moved for the papers relating to this work and they were brought down. I would like to know what progress has been made?

Mr. OUIMET. The contractor is just commencing his work.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Some money was paid him before the local election, I think.

Mr. OUIMET. I am not aware of that. The contract has just been entered into and the contractor has got to work.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The contract was entered into in December.

Mr. OUIMET. The work has just begun. The contractor is Mr. Toms. I am not aware whether he did any work before the elections or not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I can assure the hon. gentleman from information I have now before me, that Mr. Toms came upon the scene just before the elections with authority from a very high official, and in company with a Conservative local candidate—

Mr. OUIMET. Who is the very high official?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He is very closely associated with the hon. gentleman. Mr. Toms proceeded to give out a number of sub-contracts. As that took place in the first week in March, I was in hopes that some progress would have been made. But since the provincial elections the work seems to have stopped.

Mr. CAMERON. No, no.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am bound to take the statement of the Minister of Public Works. He says that work has just been commenced.

Mr. OUIMET. I am told by my chief engineer that the contractor has brought his material upon the ground and is commencing work.

Prince Edward Island—General repairs to Breakwaters $6,000

Mr. PERRY. I would like to know from the Minister if he expects to repair all the piers and breakwaters in Prince Edward Island for which no special vote is asked for the sum of $6,000? This seems to me like an old song, this vote of $6,000 year after year. I am not going to make allusion to the public works of King's or Queen's County. Those counties are represented by gentlemen who are quite able to voice the needs and wishes of their constituents. I speak for Prince County. There are thirty public works in the shape of piers and breakwaters on the Island. Has the Minister got an estimate from the resident engineer of the amount required to repair each breakwater? I do not think he has, because no engineer would make such a small estimate for the public works of Prince Edward Island. I would like an answer from the hon. Minister, and after I get it I have another statement to make.

Mr. OUIMET. I must say that $6,000 is not enough to repair these different works that want repairs in Prince Edward Island. An appropriation of $120,000 would be required for that. But besides this amount we are spending a large amount of money in Prince Edward Island, especially at Souris and Wood Islands.

Mr. PERRY. In the county of Prince there are about a dozen piers and breakwaters. At the Brae breakwater an extension was promised last year. A hundred dollars might do that. There is a wharf at West Point which I am sure the hon. Minister of Public Works must know something about. That wharf was built by the Local Government at a cost of $7,000. It was taken over by the Dominion Government, which has since neglected the work, so that it has gone to pieces. I see nothing in the Estimates to rescue that wharf. Will the Minister tell me that they are never going to build it? I find a special estimate of $500 for Miminogash breakwater. They have material there to be used which is not used, and it will require $500 to pay the labourers for the labour necessary to use this material so as to secure the work already built. Mr. McCarthy, who is in charge, was notified by the Government to stop working, that there was no further money to be expended. This $500 will not pay for the lumber, stones and iron left there to secure the work already done. I presume that Mr. McCarthy is still in charge. The late superintendent, Mr. Blanchard, was dismissed very abruptly, I believe. I dare say he deserved it, he was the nominee and choice of one of the greatest men we have in Prince Edward Island, the present Governor, who boasted that he had appointed Mr. Blanchard because he was a French Acadian. I understand that Mr. Blanchard squandered a large percentage of the money. They say that Mr. McCarthy is a good, efficient man. Though he is a Conservative, I am glad to say that he is the right man in the right place. I would not complain so much if they were prepared to finish the work in order to protect what has already been done. There is also Tignish breakwater. No provision is made for that. Not a cent has been spent upon that work for the last three or four years, and the whole work is in danger of being broken up by the storms in the fall or by the ice in the spring. The harbour of Tignish is a very important one; it is the only harbour of refuge between Cascumpec and the North Cape. The harbour is of more benefit to the people of Caraquette, Shippegan and Pokemouche, in the Bay of Chaleurs, in the fishing season, than it is to the people of Tignish. But the trouble is that these boats from the Bay of Chaleur, when they come to fish there, are large boats, not less than 30 feet long, and in stormy weather they block the harbour and close it up entirely, so much so that the smaller boats cannot move and are not able to get out in the morning. You can understand that this mackerel fishing is done in the morning and evening, the boats have to go out by the break of day in the morning, or a little before, and the fishing has to be done by ten o'clock, because mackerel is a fish that cannot be kept long before it is cured. When they wish to go out in the morning they find the harbour closed up by these large boats. Two years ago I was in correspondence with the then sitting member for Gloucester, who is now a member of the Senate, and he promised that he would assist me in inducing the Government to expend a certain sum of money there in improving the harbour. The trouble is just at the end of the breakwater. The bed of the river is divided, a portion of the water running north and the main body running south-west, and just there is a sand bank, and boats drawing four or five feet of water are not able to cross. They have to remain below that, and when there are ninety or one hundred of these large boats the whole harbour is closed up, and our fishing boats, whose owners are so deeply interested in fishing, are not able to get out and do their morning's fishing. I would recommend that a breastwork be built from the mainland down to the western end of the breakwater, in order to keep the water from running to the north. The water that runs to the north runs over sand flats, and I want all the water to be made to run south-west, where the main channel is. That can be done at little expense, because there is no ice to break it up, as the ice melts inside and does not run out. When this sand bank is dredged, these large boats could go up as far as the bridge, where there is ten or twelve feet of water inside the bar, and then the fishing boats could get out in the morning to do their morning's fishing. Of course, there is a harbour master there, but that harbour master has no power to send these boats away. The harbour is for the benefit of everybody that can get in. It is a harbour of refuge, and is open to all. Now, sometimes you can almost drive a horse and wagon across the harbour over the decks of these boats, they are so thick. And still they must use that harbour when a storm comes on, because there is no other place where they can go unless they run to Cascumpec. Now, these Carquette boats do their fishing at night, they never think of going out of the harbour till three or four o'clock in the evening, and there is no way of driving them out until they are ready to go. But I want the Government to do this dredging I speak of so that they can move up towards the big bridge, where there is plenty of water. I do not expect the Minister to put a sum in the estimates just now, but I do ask that during recess he should send one of his engineers, the resident engineer may be competent to do that, to go and examine the place and report upon it; and if the work is practicable, if the estimated cost is within a reasonable sum, so that the Minister can see his way clear to adopt my suggestion, I would expect that by next session he will be prepared to put a sum in the estimates to carry out this work. The harbour is not what it ought to be. It does not give the people interested in it, the satisfaction that they are entitled to. An engineer should be sent there during recess to examine into the condition of the work, especially outside the Tignish breakwater. This breakwater is exposed, it is built on the gulf shore, and the storms in the fall are very heavy. I think a few dollars spent in time might save a structure that has cost already about $18,000, from being carried away. Now, there is a wharf at Kier's shore to be improved, and the Malpecque breakwater needs to be extended. A petition was sent here a month or two ago from the inhabitants of Gordon Point, near Cape Traverse, asking for a breakwater. I see nothing in the estimates with regard to this matter. I am not aware that the Government have caused a survey of the proposed work to be made. Of course, I do not expect the Government to place a sum in the estimates until such a survey and estimate have been made of the probable cost. A while ago, in the case of the post office at Richmond, we saw what a great mistake the Ministers make sometimes by asking the House to vote money without having first ascertained the probable cost of these public works. I think I can catch the Minister's ear, perhaps not as well as a Conservative, but being a countryman of his, I can speak French to him if I cannot catch his ear in English.

Mr. PERRY.

I would ask that during the recess he should get his resident engineer to make surveys of those places for which he has no provision made in the estimates. I would suggest that he include also the wharf at West Point. Cascumpec harbour is also a harbour of refuge, the only harbour between Tignish and Malpecque. The Government have already spent about $18,000 there on a wild-cat scheme, which, I may say, was advocated by, and carried out under, the direction of George W. Howlan, who is now Lieutenant-Governor of the island. He got a lot of rocks blasted where there was nine feet of water before the rocks were blasted, and when allowed to drop down, there was only about seven and a half feet; because you will understand that a solid rock will not level so high as it will after it is broken up and dropped down. A dredge was sent there a year or two ago and worked, I think, three days, and during those three days did a great deal of work. Wherever she worked she made a depth of about ten and a half feet of water. But the broken rocks have remained there ever since, to the great loss and detriment of the shipping of the port. I am told that we will not need this harbour in future years, that the tunnel is going to be built. Well, I understand that the Senator from Prince Edward Island, I mean Mr. Ferguson, has made a great display of eloquence in behalf of the tunnel; but he is mistaken if he thinks he is going to get it. When I asked if the dredge had left Murray River, I was told that the dredge was still there. I understand it is going to dredge Murray harbour in King's County, because the Government have the support of that county, but the people of Prince County will ask a long time before they secure its services. A year or two ago I promised the Minister of Public Works that if he gave a reasonable share of patronage to Prince County I would give him a fair support, but this has not been done. If $6,000 were expended in Prince County it would not be sufficient to meet the required expenditure, and, of course, Queen's and King's require large sums. I observe there is a provision for North Rustico harbour in Queen's County, and also for Souris breakwater. These are important works, and no doubt the Minister has satisfied himself that the amount in the Estimates is sufficient for repairs, and I do not begrudge the people the benefit of that expenditure. Admitting that the expenditure in King's County is correct, it is obvious that a similar expenditure should be made in Prince County. Although I had a very handsome majority last election, about one-half the people are Conservatives, and if injustice is done to the county, the Conservatives suffer as well as the Liberals. I have laid before the Minister and this committee the wants of my county. I hope the Minister, at all events, will throw no cold water on a drowned rat, that he will not say he will do nothing for Perry, of Prince, because he is a Grit, but that he will give me a fair show, and I will make a fair fight, and win if I can.

Mr. OUIMET. As to Miminegash, I am sure that $500 will complete the work undertaken. As to Tignish, engineers will be sent there during the summer. As to the Point referred, I cannot extend very much hope for work being carried on there this year. As to the rest, I hope the department will do justice to the electors of Prince, as they do to the electors of all other counties.

Wood Islands—Breakwaters.... $14,200

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) As I have on many occasions expressed my strongest disapproval in regard to the manner in which money was thrown away on works of this harbour, it is but fair that I should express my satisfaction with the manner in which the department has grappled with the work of late, and that the contract has been let in a way which, I think, will ensure to the people there a commodious and free harbour. At all events, it is giving it a fair trial, and that is all I ever asked, and it is being carried on in the only way it could be carried out. I congratulate the Minister on having seen his way to give this measure of justice to those people, a measure of justice they have been asking for so long. With respect to North Rustico, I should like to ask how the $3,000 is to be expended—whether it is going to be for extending the work?

Mr. OUIMET. It is proposed to construct seventy feet of work which had been destroyed by storm, and also to make a heading, thirty feet by sixty.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How is the end to be secured? Last year I brought to the attention of the House the defect in the original construction. I hope the engineers will see that the end of the breakwater is thoroughly protected. If it is built as previously it will be carried away in the same manner.

Mr. OUIMET. The work will be cribwork, and will be secured to the rock, if we can reach it. If we cannot reach the rock, then the whole work will have to be bolted together with iron bars. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the department will do its utmost to make the work secure.

Negro Point—Breakwater..... $25,000

Mr. BOWERS. I desire to ask for what purpose the money will be expended this year. Rocks are piled up at the entrance to St. John harbour, they having been washed down by the sand. In a few years, the whole western channel will be filled up by rocks, which have been washed down. The public money is simply being wasted at the present time on work connected with the breakwater. Some means should be adopted whereby the work would be made permanent. The whole work at the present time is in a state of utter dilapidation.

Mr. OUIMET. The importance of the breakwater to the harbour of St. John is, I suppose, not underestimated by the hon. gentleman. It is a necessity for the protection of the port. No doubt the seas there are so strong and heavy that large boulders are carried away by the enormous waves. This money will be spent to prevent that recurrence. The plan is to cement together the whole structure, and make it as if it were one block. This is an experiment to be made, and I am advised by my engineer that it is practiced in France and elsewhere, and he expects it will be a success. It will then be a permanent work, and will not require an annual expenditure.

River St. John, including Tributaries. $10,000

Mr. COLTER. I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works how this money is to be expended?

Mr. OUIMET. In trying to procure a channel of eleven feet between St. John and Fredericton; and between Fredericton and Woodstock, the improvements consist in procuring three feet navigation, and above that various improvements are to be made.

Mr. COLTER. In 1892, the Minister in replying to a similar question of mine said: that the appropriation would be spent in improving the navigable channel of the river between Fredericton and Woodstock, removing obstructions in the channel above the latter place, and repairing the tow-path. He said that it was proposed to expend $1,500 in purchasing two scows and to provide a scraper for the use of the St. John River between Fredericton and Woodstock so as to take off the snags. By the Auditor General's Report, I see that part of this money was spent in other ways. Some $500 was spent in building piers in Sunbury; $250 in King's; $500 in Queen's; and $500 in King's, N.B. I do not know what authority the Minister had, after his explanation to me, for spending part of this money on such works as that.

Mr. OUIMET. The building of these piers was considered as part of the proposed improvement. I might not have mentioned it when I gave the explanation in 1892, but the department considered that instead of building piers ourselves it was far better to assist in building these piers which will never be a charge to the department. The expenditure was fully warranted not only in being made in the interest of the improvements that were going on, but also fully warranted as being within the vote granted by Parliament. An examination has been made lately which has put the department in the possession of more practical and more exact information as to the various improvements that this river requires. Mr. Shewan has made a very interesting report, on the whole river, which I will send to the hon. gentleman, and the money that is now voted will be used in carrying out the improvements mentioned in that report.

Mr. COLTER. I am very glad to hear that the Minister has a report, because last year the Minister told me that Mr. Allison had made a report there, and in reply to a further question of mine as to the feasibility of so improving the navigation between Fredericton and Woodstock, the hon. gentleman informed me that it appeared from the Allison reports that a channel might be kept up five feet deep for the greater part of the year except at the lower water, when a channel of three feet deep would be available. The Minister probably made a mistake and was referring to another part of the River St. John, for since coming here, I have received a letter from the Minister in which he acknowledges that Mr. Allison's report referred to some other part of the river, and that another gentleman was making a survey at that time. That was on the 5th of April. I do not see how the engineer could make a very satisfactory report on the 5th of April when there were two feet of ice on the River St. John. If he has not made a survey since that time I am afraid his report will not be worth a great deal. Last year I called the Minister's attention to the importance of improving the channel between Woodstock and Fredericton, and I wish to call his attention to it again. Here we have a district some sixty-five miles in length, along the valley of the River St. John, and the only public conveyance for the people is an old-fashioned stage coach, except for about one month in the spring of the year, when they have a boat. A boat was built on purpose for that route, but this year she has only been able to make eleven trips, and that was on account of two small sand bars in the river, on which, if a few dollars were properly expended, the boat could run almost all summer. Why, Sir, twenty years ago boats used to run about all summer on that river. Of late years, quite a sufficient sum of money has been voted year after year to keep navigation open on the river, if the money was properly expended; but I am sorry to say from the best information I have received that the money has not been at all judiciously expended. I will not say anything further as the Minister has, this year, a better idea of the importance of the work than he had last session. In courtesy to the Board of Trade of the town of Woodstock, I wish to read this letter, a copy of which has also been sent to the Minister, I believe:

To the Honourable
The Minister of Public Works.

At a meeting of the Board of trade of the town of Woodstock, N.B., held on the twenty-fifth day of April last, it was unanimously resolved,—“That this Board respectfully call the attention of the Honourable the Minister of Public Works to the fact that steamers plying between Woodstock and Fredericton, on the river St. John, are now able to run during a portion of the season only, and to the importance of improving the navigation of the river St. John between Woodstock and Fredericton, in order to enable steamers to run, if possible, the entire season between these points.

The Board would call your attention to the fact that very large quantities of products of this section of the country would find a readier and more profitable market if easier access were had to the markets and cheaper rates of transportation to St. John, than are now afforded by a single line of railway, the rates on which from Woodstock to St. John are excessive, as compared with their rates from points in Ontario and Quebec to St. John.

This Board respectfully submits that a liberal expenditure of money on the river between Woodstock and Fredericton would be of incalculable benefit not only to this particular section but to the whole country along the river, between these points, where no other means of transportation exist.

H. PICTON BAIRD, Pres't.

T. C. L. KETCHUM, Sec'y.

People on the upper part of the river St. John are at the mercy of a single line of railway; and, from the best information I can get—and I have made considerable inquiries—I find that the rates of that railway are excessive. If a few thousand dollars were spent in improving the channel between Fredericton and Woodstock, so that boats could run during the entire season, Woodstock would be made a competing centre and the people would get better rates to that place. I am quite sure, from information that I have been able to gather on the subject, that if the money voted in the last three or four years by this Parliament had been properly expended, nothing further would be needed; and I would suggest to the hon. Minister that instead of giving a few hundred dollars to this one, and a few hundred dollars to that one, the whole sum should be placed in the hands of one man, so that it could be properly spent. I am sorry to say I believe that most of the money that has been given in this way has been wasted. I would also suggest that the Government should appoint some one man to expend this money who is directly interested; and the man I would suggest is the captain of the boat. He is not a political friend of mine, but I think he would be the very best man who could be appointed. I hope the Minister will give his very best attention to this matter, and that in another season the boats will be able to make better progress.

Shediac Harbour—New Breakwater for protection of Intercolonial Railway Wharf at Pointe du Chêne... $25,000

Mr. CASEY. What is it expected to cost to complete this work?

Mr. OUIMET. This amount completes the work. Its total cost is $40,000.

Mr. CASEY. How much of the work has been carried away?

Mr. OUIMET. That breakwater is a protection to the Intercolonial Railway wharf, and its construction was a necessity, otherwise the railway wharf would have been carried away by the sea.

Mr. CASEY. I am not objecting to the construction of the wharf, as the hon. Minister seems to imagine. I am asking for information. It would appear that the construction heretofore was defective, because the work was washed away.

Mr. OUIMET. That was caused by the worms.

Mr. CASEY. Then this breakwater was built of wood?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Wood is a strange material to build a breakwater of.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CASEY. Breakwaters are supposed to be built of something more lasting than wood.

Mr. OUIMET. It is cribwork, built of wood and filled with stone. The hon. gentleman would pile up another public debt equal to the one that exists now if he were to undertake to make all these breakwaters of solid masonry, as in other countries.

Mr. CASEY. It seems to me that we are piling up the debt quite as fast by building them of wood, and having to rebuild them from time to time.

Mr. OUIMET. We are endeavouring to protect the wood by having it creosoted.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). The wharf at Shediac has been there for a great many years. The breakwater is a little beyond the wharf, and protects it. It might have been weakened somewhat by worms, but I do not think its destruction so much to the worms as to a very severe storm that carried it away.

Mr. CASEY. It is in very severe storms that we want a breakwater to stand. If it is not built to stand a very severe storm. I do not see the use of it.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). It would stand an ordinary storm, but this was a very exceptional one, which would have carried away the breakwater if it had been new.

General repairs and improvements to the harbour and river works, Maritime Provinces, generally... $10,000

Mr. FORBES. I presume this is for general expenses?

Mr. OUIMET. It is for general expenditures on all the wharfs not sufficiently provided for, and also to pay the travelling expenses of the staff and the surveys that have been made.

Quebec—Grand Rivière—To complete harbour of refuge by extending the wharf..... $14,000

Mr. OUIMET. The work is now under contract. This is to build an extension to the pier in order to have a safe harbour of refuge for vessels fishing on the coast of Gaspé. It is the only harbour of refuge there besides Gaspé. Total cost, $28,861.

General repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works, Quebec..... $10,000

Mr. LAURIER. I had occasion to call the attention of the hon. gentleman some time ago to the condition of the dam on Yamaska River. The hon. gentleman said that the dam was in a good state of repair, and I am glad that the chief engineer is here to enlighten him on that subject. The dam has burst, and should either be removed or repaired. It is impossible to say that it is in a good state of repair.

Mr. OUIMET. I said that it was in a good condition to meet the requirements of navigation, and to serve all purposes. I am sorry to say that the expectations formed at the time it was built have not been realized, but it is in as good condition as required to meet the calls upon it.

Mr. LAURIER. I cannot understand how a public work, built by the Government, two years after its completion bursts, can be said to be in good condition.

Mr. OUIMET. The only damage was the top of the dam carried away, but it is not necessary to keep the water as high as at first contemplated. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman insisting on the Government spending more money there.

Mr. LAURIER. I was over that river last year, and the pilot and captain of the steamer told me that the dam was a nuisance in its present condition, and had to be improved or removed. After the work was constructed, a portion of the dam was washed away.

Mr. OUIMET. It is amply sufficient for the kind of boats that navigate that river.

Kingston Harbour..... $6,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman's engineers would do better to make an end of this. Every year, for many years, we are asked to vote money for the purpose of removing the stones in the harbour at Kingston, and the work seems to have no end. To put a larger force on and complete the work in a shorter number of years would be better economy.

Mr. OUIMET. The shoal which has been taken off obstructs to a certain extent the entrance to the harbour at Kingston. True, if we had put in the Estimates a larger amount at once the work would have been completed sooner.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And cheaper, I am inclined to think.

Mr. OUIMET. I am told it would have been expensive, because it would have required an extensive plant, but probably the plant could have been used elsewhere later on.

River Ottawa—Improvement of steamboat channel through narrows at Petawawa, above Pembroke $4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will that complete these works?

Mr. OUIMET. No; it will take $8,000 altogether. We had $1,000 last year, but it was not enough to commence, and we allowed it to lapse.

Mr. CASEY. What has become of the very expensive canals this side of Pembroke? Are they in use?

Mr. OUIMET. I am not in charge of the canals.

Hamilton Harbour—Dredging... $6,000

Mr. CASEY. What amount is to be expended in Hamilton?

Mr. OUIMET. The amount required to complete the work is $12,321. It will then have cost $23,000.

Port Albert—Extension of piers and dredging... $10,000

Mr. CASEY. What about this?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is a re-vote.

Mr. CASEY. Whether it is a re-vote or not, I want to know what the work is going to cost.

Mr. OUIMET. The estimated total cost is $18,000.

Goderich harbour—Extension of piers and repairs..... $33,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the nature of this work?

Mr. OUIMET. The extension of both the north and south piers, which are being built with a view to enabling vessels to enter the harbour with greater facility during stormy weather, and to prevent the formation of a bar at the mouth of the river. There is some dredging besides.

Mr. CASEY. Under contract?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes—the amount is $38,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When was the contract let?

Mr. OUIMET. Last year.

Port Rowan—Wharf under contract... $5,300

Mr. OUIMET. This is a work the total cost of which will be $13,300.

Mr. OUIMET.

Mr. CASEY. How long has it been going on?

Mr. OUIMET. About a year. It will be completed this year.

Mr. CASEY. What depth of water do you get there?

Mr. OUIMET. About ten feet at the entrance.

Owen Sound Harbour—Dredging, &c..... $5,000

Mr. OUIMET. This is to continue dredging the entrance of the harbour, to give a channel 500 feet wide and 20 feet deep.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When was it begun?

Mr. OUIMET. Last year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have been informed that the work is useless. They tell me that the dredged material is carried out only to a short distance and that the channel soon fills up to the obstruction of navigation. I am not speaking from my own knowledge.

Mr. OUIMET. That is one reason why we have been changing that channel. We have deflected it in a westerly direction in order to prevent the refilling which took place before.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would not that be the very way to cause the channel to fill up more readily. The storms mainly come from the west.

Mr. OUIMET. I am advised by the engineers that this is the best thing that could be done. Owen Sound is about the most important harbour in that region for the traffic to Port Arthur, Fort William and Georgian Bay ports, and, therefore, we have to undertake that work.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is certainly desirable that the work should be done, and well done.

Belleville Harbour..... $3,000

Mr. OUIMET. That is dredging.

Mr. CASEY. How about the trouble with ice in the spring? Is anything being done to remedy that trouble?

Mr. OUIMET. This dredging is at the mouth of the river. It will have the effect of easing the ice toward the lake.

Dyer's Bay—Extension to Wharf. $3,500

Mr. OUIMET. Strike out "extension to." I am assured that it will be better to build a small wharf some distance from there—that this will serve the people better. The department will determine what is best to do in the matter.

General repairs and improvements to harbour, river and bridge works, Ontario..... $5,000

Mr. CASEY. I would like to ask the Minister the cost and result of the operations last summer at Port Stanley?

Mr. OUIMET. There was only dredging made this year. The money voted last year was asked for with a view to making greater improvements at that place. It was expected that certain arrangements would be made between the railway companies which would have made Port Stanley a very important harbour of communication between this side and Cleveland. This not having been realized, the money has not been spent.

Mr. CASEY. That is one reason why I ask the question. I believe that project is taking shape again. There is a line of steamers from Cleveland plying regularly now. I would like to know how far the improvement went last year—what depth of water was secured?

Mr. OUIMET. Fourteen feet, and $1,000 was spent. The appropriation will have to be re-voted in the expectation that that improvement mentioned by the hon. gentleman may take place.

Mr. CASEY. Then something will be done for Port Stanley harbour out of this general vote?

Mr. OUIMET. Nothing but dredging. The wharfs are in first rate order.

Mr. CASEY. The outer ends of the wharfs are in good order, but the inner portion is very old and rotten, and even dangerous to walk on. I have known cases of people nearly being drowned by falling through the crumbling timber. Moreover, the old basin where vessels used to come in and turn around is silted up, and vessels coming in now must back out in order to get away.

Fraser River, improvement of channel..... $30,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under existing circumstances, is that likely to be capable of being expended as designed? I should fancy the channel there has undergone considerable modifications within the last few weeks.

Mr. OUIMET. All these improvements are made with a view of securing a good channel for navigation, also for preventing the encroachment of the river.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We all understand that the recent floods in British Columbia have wrought an extraordinary change all along the course of the Fraser River, and it seems to me likely that the improvements contemplated may be entirely impossible to have any effect under the existing state of things. Has the hon. gentleman any report from his engineers on that subject?

Mr. OUIMET. We have no report as yet, and the water is not low enough to allow an examination to be made.

Mr. CORBOULD. The floods will not at all affect the work that has been done on the Fraser River. They are at the mouth of the river channel.

Mr. OUIMET. I understand that the waters have cut a new channel through the delta.

Mr. CORBOULD. I do not think it will affect the channel at all.

Mr. CASEY. What does the Minister estimate these channel improvements will cost?

Mr. OUIMET. In order to make the Fraser River navigable, and to secure all the shores from encroachment by the river, I think a sum of nearly $500,000 will be required.

Mr. CORBOULD. Is it the intention of the Minister to continue the survey of the Fraser River? Last year there was a small appropriation, which was not sufficient. I do not see anything this year yet.

Mr. OUIMET. It is in contemplation to continue the survey.

National Art Gallery $5,000

Mr. OUIMET. This vote has been taken in compliance with the wishes expressed last year by hon. members on both sides of the House, that this vote should be large enough to buy good pictures and improve the national art gallery.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am glad the hon. gentleman is moving in that direction. I would like to ask him whether any of the paintings exhibited at the exhibition this winter, were purchased for the use of the gallery.

Mr. OUIMET. I could not say, but I will give the hon. gentleman the information to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In what manner would these paintings be secured, under whose guidance does the hon. gentleman act?

Mr. OUIMET. Mr. Watts, of the department, an architect and a painter, and a member of the Royal Academy, and who, I think, is competent. He is the curator of the gallery, and as a rule, acts as adviser in the purchase of the pictures, although they are submitted to the Council. I do not know that the Council may be considered as first-class experts, but the pictures are submitted to the Council to confirm the judgment that has already been passed upon them by the curator.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I should imagine it would have been a good plan to select a committee of three of the Royal Academicians to make the choice. I thought that at the time of the exhibition, when the pictures were here in the gallery, would have been a good time to make a choice from among Canadian pictures, although, of course, we do not imagine they are to be solely Canadian pictures. But I should think that instead of trusting to the judgment of one man, although he is a member of the academy, it would be better to have a committee of three academicians.

Mr. OUIMET. That is another question to decide, as to whether we should make that national gallery a school gallery, that is, whether it would be better to buy specimens of the different schools of painting for the advantage of young people who want to study them, or whether it is only to be used as a gallery for Canadian products exclusively.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a little difficult matter for us to decide, but I am inclined to think, looking at the enormous prices which would have to be paid for any pictures of first-class merit by masters of known and high character in England, not to speak of any of the old masters—I am inclined to think we might just as well use this small sum of $5,000 for the encouragement of Canadian art only. I think in that case it would not do to leave the choice to a gentleman of the department, however well qualified he may be. I don't object to the vote, but I would certainly recommend that certain of the best known of our artists in our country should be formed into a committee and allowed to try their hands for a year or two at the purchase of the best products of Canadian art that we can find. The hon. gentleman knows well that while we may establish a school of art, it is quite out of our power, without a very much larger expenditure than is contemplated, to obtain any works of art that will compare in the slightest degree with the collections that may be seen in the adjacent republic, or even in the houses of the wealthy citizens of this country. I dare say the hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald Smith) at the present moment allows artists to inspect his collection of paintings, which is of very great value, and which it will be entirely out of our power to accumulate here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not wish to throw out any intimation that we should go beyond Canadian artists in our efforts to establish an academy. It is, however, of very great importance that we should have a nucleus. As to purchasing works of art from foreign artists, that is out of the question. I had an opportunity last year of going through the art galleries in Central Park, New York, where there are paintings valued at from $10,000 up to $60,000 each. There is an incident in connection with that art gallery which is gratifying to the American people in the extreme, and is a very laudable one, and that is the number of presentation pictures given by loyal Americans to their art gallery. I indulge the hope that if we start a good art gallery here, our patriotic citizens will, from time to time, bequeath to the gallery works of art. Such has been the experience in other places, and it may prove to be the same here. Whether that should prove to be the case or not, the movement is one that should be inaugurated, and I hope the pictures will be selected in such a way as to assure the public that works of merit will be secured. We are not going to get a great deal for $5,000, but we may obtain some meritorious works.

Mr. FLINT. I suggest that the Minister should have some scheme prepared in regard to this matter. Perhaps he might hand it over for consideration to the Royal Society, and receive suggestions from the members as to the best means to be adopted to start an academy, so that in course of time, probably in twenty-five years, we may have accumulated some works of value to the country.

Collection of Revenues—Public Works $178,750

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much shall we get back of this expenditure of $178,000?

Mr. OUIMET. All the slides, except those on the Trent, are self-supporting.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 18th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 136) for the relief of Orlando G. R. Johnson, on a division.—(Mr. Metcalfe.)

PROPOSED INFANTRY SCHOOL IN MONTREAL.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked, 1. Is it the intention of the Government to put in the Estimates this year, a sufficient amount for the establishment of an infantry school in Montreal; and for what amount? 2. Is it the intention of the Government to remove from St. Johns, P.Q., to Montreal the military school established at the former place in 1883?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The first part of the question I cannot answer until the Supplementary Estimates come down, probably in the course of next week. The second part of the question is a matter under the consideration of the Government.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—SALES OF SCRAP IRON.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (for Mr. Borden) asked, What quantity of scrap iron has been sold by the Intercolonial Railway to the Truro Foundry and Machine Company during the years 1890, 1891, 1892 and 1893, and what was the price per ton?

Mr. HAGGART. The quantity of scrap iron sold by the Intercolonial Railway to the Truro Foundry and Machine Company during the years 1890-91-92-93 was: 1890, 116,140 pounds at $10 per ton, and 68,100 pounds at $15 per ton; 1891, 136,400 pounds at $15 per ton; 1892, 209,915 pounds at $15 per ton; 1893, 241,352 pounds at $15 per ton.

FORM OF BALLOT PAPER.

Mr. RIDER asked, Is the form of ballot paper designated as "Form J" (and set forth in section 5 of the Bill now before this House, entitled "An Act further to amend the Dominion Elections Act") the property of the Government? If so, how? And if by purchase, what are the conditions?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The form of ballot paper, to which the hon. gentleman refers, is not the property of the Government.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT GASPE.

Mr. FAUVEL asked, 1. Has the collector of customs at Gaspé, Mr. J. J. Kavanagh, been superannuated, or has he applied for his superannuation? 2. If so, when? 3. Has any person been appointed to fill the vacancy? If not, is it the intention of the Government to promote the landing-waiter at the said port, Mr. Peter E. LeGros, to the position, and what is the cause of the delay in making the appointment?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He has not been superannuated, but has made application therefor, under date of 20th March, 1894. The collector being ill, his position is temporarily filled by Mr. Peter E. LeGros. The question of appointing a collector is receiving the consideration of the Treasury Board.

ST. THOMAS POST OFFICE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (for Mr. Casey) asked, What is the amount of box rents which the hon. Postmaster General stated are received by the postmaster of St. Thomas, Ont.? Is it usual that the postmaster should receive such rents in cases when the post office is kept in a Government building? On what basis are the salaries of the assistant postmaster and other employees in the St. Thomas post office fixed, and by whom? Are they appointed by the Government or by the postmaster? What are the individual salaries of such employees other than the assistant postmaster?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The postmaster of St. Thomas does not now receive any of the box-rents of his office; the whole amount is paid over to the Post Office Department. Postmasters do usually receive box-rents in cases where the post office is kept in a Government building. But in cases where the emoluments are large, I propose, as vacancies occur, to revise the salaries and place all the larger offices on the same footing as St. Thomas has now been placed, that is to say, to give the postmaster a regular salary and to make him an allowance for the salaries of his clerks and contingent expenses of his office. The salaries of the assistant postmaster and other employees are the same as were paid by the late postmaster. The assistant postmaster and clerks in the St. Thomas post office are appointed by the postmaster. The salaries paid are to the assistant postmaster, $85 a month; P. E. Windop, $42 a month; E. Galbraith, $20; A. Davey, $18; J. Horton, $18; W. G. Marten, $12; J. Russel, $5, in all $200 a month.

OTTAWA EXPERIMENTAL FARM.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL asked, How many persons are employed in the management of the Experimental Farm at Ottawa; and how many of the said persons speak and write the French language? Is it the intention of the Government to establish a proper service for French correspondence at the Ottawa Experimental Farm?

Mr. DALY. In addition to the five chief officers at the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, there are seven who act as assistants in connection with office and technical work. Five of these speak and write French, and three are specially employed in attending to French correspondence. All French letters are promptly attended to, and the assistance available for French correspondence is much more efficient than that provided for English correspondence. In addition to the five French-speaking officers named, four of the remaining officers have sufficient knowledge of the French language to enable them to give information in French.

POSTMASTER AT GEORGETOWN.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Was any charge made against the late postmaster at Georgetown? If so, when, and by whom? What was the nature of the complaint? Was it investigated, and when? Was the postmaster exonerated?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There was no complaint made against the postmaster at Georgetown. It simply came to the knowledge of the department that the postmaster was mentally incapable of performing his duties.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Statement showing in detail all sums of money paid to Mr. Narcisse Rosa, of Quebec, ship-builder, during the years from 1865 to 1869, inclusively; the date and amount of each payment; the names of the vessels for which each payment was made; the reason for each payment so made, showing whether the payment was made according to the tonnage of each vessel, and what tonnage, or whether it was made on the basis of articles used in the building of the vessel and what articles, and stating such articles and the duties so paid and remitted in detail, with the dates of reimbursements for each vessel; such statement to show moreover which of such payments were made to the said Narcisse Rosa in person, and in the case of payments made to persons other than himself, but for him, the names of such third parties; also copies of receipts for each sum of money given by the said Narcisse Rosa or by others in his behalf; also copies of all powers of attorney under which such third parties received any such money for the said Narcisse Rosa.—(Mr. Amyot.)

Return of all charges, complaints, letters, telegrams, correspondence, reports or orders relative to the dismissal or removal of John McLeod as inspector of the repairs of the Broad Cove Marsh pier, Cape Breton.—(Mr. Davies, P.E.I.)

UNITED STATES LIVE STOCK TRANSIT IN CANADA.

Mr. SPROULE moved for:

Return of all correspondence, reports, instructions or other communications between the Government and the railway companies, and between the Government and their inspectors, regarding the regulations for carriage of live stock over said railways, from any point in the United States through Canada, to any other point in the United States.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my object in making this motion is to furnish information, which, I think, will be valuable to some newspapers in the country which have been dealing with this question. As you will notice, Sir, the motion was put on the Order Paper a long time ago, but it has been reached only to-day for the first time. It was on account of an article which I saw in the 'Canada Farmer's Sun,' a paper representing the Patrons of Industry, I understand, which induced me to move for this correspondence, as I believe that the correspondence, when laid before the House, will be found not to sustain the allegations that were made in that paper. The article I refer to is in reference to the importation of cattle diseases through carriage on the railways of the country of cattle, and it reads as follows:—

And still, there is danger ahead. This time the danger is at Ottawa. A cloud has been hanging over our people for years, and the eyes of our legislators have been blinded in the darkness that has prevailed. It has been represented that the cattle embargo in England was occasioned by the introduction, years ago, of a few Minnesota and Dakota cattle into our North-west Territories, and the people have believed what has been said to them by a dishonest Government whose members have known all along that the statements were false. The cattle industry that had been developed to so great an extent in Canada had been blighted by the action of the Government, which has truckled to the railway combines whose hand is on their throat. A more damnable chapter of infamy has never been recorded in the history of Canadian government. Here is the story of our Government's abasement.

For a few years prior to 1880 American cattle were not allowed to be carried across Canada because the droppings from the cars, &c., were believed to contain the germs of fever. Canadian cattle then had a free market in England, while American had not. In 1880 the railways influenced John A. Macdonald's Government to permit the carrying of cattle again through Canada. This was granted under certain regulations which the Imperial Government prepared. One regulation was that all cattle should be unloaded and inspected on the American side by a competent veterinary surgeon before passing into Canada. All inspection was to be made in the daytime. Since about 1884 no cattle have been taken from the cars. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Lowe) said he would "wink" at such violation of the regulations. This was a concession to the roads. Then, the roads complained that they could not time their cattle trains so as to reach the frontier in the daytime, and night inspection (in the cars) was permitted, which was a roaring farce. Dr. Wright, who is a veterinary surgeon as well as a practicing physician and a life-long Tory, was the inspector at Detroit. He made up his mind that as the inspection he was permitted to make was a farce, he might as well make none at all, and he did not. Ostensibly because he would not move to Windsor the Government dismissed him a few years ago, and he at once forwarded the facts to the Imperial Government. In six weeks the Canadian cattle were embargoed. Thus the interests of the railroads were regarded as paramount by the Government to the interests of the farmers. Rather than enforce the regulations of the Imperial Government which would have been a serious blow, of course, at the transit rates of the railways, the Government winked at their violation, and in fact ordered their violation, with the result that while the railways have profited by the American cattle trade the Canadian farmers have lost their only market for cattle.

This paper again says:

The properly qualified inspectors required by the Imperial authorities have sometimes had no qualifications whatsoever. On one occasion a butcher being authorized to perform the duties of an inspector.

Now, as this paper is circulated very extensively amongst the farmers of the country one can readily understand the feeling that might be created by such an announcement. This paper was published on the 1st May, and about the middle of that month my attention was called to it by some person sending me a marked copy. I had reason to believe then that the allegations set forth in the article were incorrect, and I took the trouble to look over the correspondence which the Deputy Minister was kind enough, by instructions from the Minister, to allow me to see; and, instead of the correspondence bearing out the charges contained in the paper, the very reverse was the case. To my mind, it was one of the plainest and worst possible cases of blackmail—the conduct of Dr. Wright in connection with this affair—that I ever saw. For the purpose of answering these charges, I had reference to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, who sent me notes regarding them. The first question relates to the transit of United States cattle through Canada from the west to the east—from one United States port to another. That is conducted by regulations under an agreement with the veterinary department of the Imperial Privy Council to which reference is made in this paper. There are two things to be noted in the article: 1st. That the inspection was to be made after the cattle were unloaded; and, 2nd. that it was to be made in the day time. Now, as I have a copy of the regulations, it is easy to ascertain how far that is correct or otherwise. As I have said, these regulations were in accord with an agreement between the Imperial Privy Council and the Canadian Government, and were made to provide for an inspection of cattle coming into the country. The restrictions under which the transit was to take place are defined in Order in Council of 22nd April, 1880, which forms part of chapter 7 of the Consolidated Orders of Council of Canada, and is as follows:

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

PART III.

Transit of Animals in Bond.

14. American cattle and swine, the importation and introduction of which are prohibited as ordered by Part I, paragraph 3, may nevertheless be permitted to enter into Canada in bond, at the ports of Sarnia, Windsor and Amherstburg, to be conveyed, under surveillance and strict rules of isolation through Canada and territory to the American frontier at Rouse's Point, St. Armand Station, Island Pond, the Suspension Bridge (Niagara) and the International Bridge (Fort Erie); but no such transit shall be allowed, unless an agreement between the Minister of Agriculture and the railway company interested in and conducting such transit has been communicated to the collector of customs at each of the said ports or stations.

15. The transit of cattle and swine between the points mentioned in the next preceding paragraph shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Minister of Agriculture shall prescribe and in accordance with the arrangements which may be made between the said Minister, and the Grand Trunk, the Great Western and the Canada Southern Railway Companies, for the proper carrying out of the present order, and the necessary measures to save the live stock of Canada from the dangers of contagion and infection.

16. Amongst other things, these arrangements of the Minister of Agriculture shall provide:

(a) That an inspection of the said cattle and swine shall be made before they are admitted to transit, permission for which transit shall only be given on a certificate or clean bill of health from the inspector, he being a veterinary surgeon appointed by the said Minister:

This says that an inspection shall be made, but it does not say whether it shall be made in daylight or at night, and it says nothing about the regulations as to unloading—

(b) That each train carrying American cattle or swine or both, from frontier to frontier in bond, shall be accompanied by one of the staff of guardians, also to be appointed by the said Minister;

(c) That the cars and trucks employed for such traffic be specially and exclusively devoted to such purpose;

(d) That no Canadian animals shall be carried at any time in the same train in company with, nor in close proximity to, American cattle or swine, and that no car or truck employed in the American cattle and swine transport shall be used to carry, at any time, Canadian animals;

(e) That no unnecessary delay occur with any train engaged in the said transit passing through Canadian territory;

(f) That due precautions be taken to retain in the cars or trucks and disinfect, if need be, the droppings of cattle and swine thus carried in transit;

(g) That no such cattle or swine, nor their carcases in case of death occurring (unless immediately buried under directions of the proper guardian), nor parts thereof, nor articles having been employed about them, be permitted to remain in Canada nor to come in contact with any person or persons, other than those engaged on the train or thing whilst thus undergoing the said transit:

17. Inasmuch as it is of absolute necessity, owing to the length of the trip, on the Grand Trunk Railway, to provide for a place where American cattle and swine can be fed, watered and rested, it is ordered that the said resting place shall be established at the station of Lyn, in the province of Ontario, where a double, isolated enclosure shall be provided by the railway company, selected, established and fitted to the satisfaction of the Minister of Agriculture, before the said company is permitted to transport American cattle or swine over their line. The said enclosure, besides other requisites, shall be provided with a high board fence and a vacant space around the said board fence, the said outside spaces to be also fenced, in order to prevent any approach to the inner enclosure; the said inner enclosure shall be provided with a special siding, with two locked doors, for the admission and isolation, under key, of the cars or trucks carrying American cattle or swine in transit.

18. The two fenced enclosures mentioned in the next foregoing section, situated at the Grand Trunk Railway station at Lyn, in the province of Ontario, with all appurtenances therein, or things belonging thereto, is hereby declared to be an infected place, in the meaning and for all purposes of the "Act to provide against infections or contagious diseases affecting animals."

19. The enclosures through which American cattle and swine enter Canada, in transit at Sarnia, on the Grand Trunk line, must be arranged, fitted and isolated in like manner, to the satisfaction of the Minister of Agriculture, and the said enclosures situated on the Grand Trunk Railway grounds on the frontier, with everything thereto appertaining, are also declared hereby to be an infected place.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have read the whole of the regulations, because they contain every restriction and every regulation which was made in conformity with the express desire of the Imperial veterinary authorities, and which, if properly carried out, were likely to prevent any danger of the importation of disease owing to cattle from the United States passing through Canada. Now, Dr. Wright was first dissatisfied with the salary he got for doing his work, and applied to the railway company for an increase of salary, which they refused to give. It happened at first that the transportation was carried on properly during the day time; but when the cattle reached the frontier at night, especially in the winter time, and it was dangerous to them, and very injurious to the trade, to detain them through all the hours of the night, application was made to the Minister of Agriculture to allow them to go through at night without detention. As there was nothing in the regulations which prohibited it, and there was not any likelihood of any danger ensuing, the desired permission was given. Then Dr. Wright requested that greater facilities should be given for the inspection of the cattle; and asked that electric light be established; and he proposed that these increased facilities should be coupled with the condition that the railway company give him an additional salary. It seems, however, that the railway company refused to comply with the request. It happened, when cattle were coming on lines a little distance from each other at Windsor, it was inconvenient to detain the cattle at one point while cattle were being inspected at the other; and the railway company proposed to put telephonic communication between the two points for the greater convenience of the inspectors. But Dr. Wright, who seemed to consider this golden opportunity for making a little money, refused to allow the companies to put up a telephone in his office unless they would give him $500 for the privilege. This the companies refused to pay, and then Dr. Wright began writing a series of letters for the purpose of compelling the company or the Government to give him a higher salary. He threatened that if his request were not granted, he would publish certain information in his possession which would be likely to result in the scheduling of Canadian cattle, of putting an embargo on them. The restrictions under which this transit was carried on I have already read. This order has since been continued in force, and it provides for the isolation of American cattle passing in transit through Canada, and for preventing their possible contact with Canadian cattle. It does not, the Deputy Minister says, provide for the unloading of cattle. In the regulations I have read, you will notice there is no provision for the unloading of cattle whatever before inspection, and is entirely silent as respects the hour at which the inspection shall take place. I intend to read Dr. Wright's letter in which he refers to this matter and the allegation made that the inspection was not to be made at night, but must be made in the day time. Night inspection is not provided in the regulations I have read to the House. When the regulations referred to were made fourteen years ago, the information as to how the disease of pleuro-pneumonia was conveyed was very much more vague than at present. The regulations, therefore, provide protection against undefined fears, because then it was not definitely known whether pleuro-pneumonia might not be conveyed by one animal to another, either through the droppings of the animal or other causes while being transported across the country. It happened also in 1886, that in consequence of these undefined fears, when pleuro-pneumonia was actually found to have been imported from Scotland into the Lévis quarantine, the cattle of the farmers in the neighbourhood, which had not an opportunity to come in contact with the fences of the quarantine, were slaughtered. This act was altogether more than was necessary, and was by the present light in the matter altogether quixotic. The latest authentic definition of the way in which pleuro-pneumonia is spread is contained in an official communication of the Board of Agriculture to the Colonial Office, under date April 16th last. This was evidently intended for the information of Lord Ripon, and to be conveyed to the Canadian Government:

Mr. SPROULE

The disease (pleuro-pneumonia) spreads but very slowly, especially in open and sparsely populated country as distinguished from urban localities; the susceptibility of animals to infection is nothing like so great as in many other diseases of a contagious character; it exists in a latent form for a lengthened period; it cannot easily be detected or distinguished in the living animal from other forms of lung disorder—

That requires to be particularly noticed, because it has a bearing on the inspection of these cattle which was ordered:

and it is communicable only by contact between living animals and through the medium of the respiratory organs alone.

Now, if it is communicable only in this way, there could be no great danger of the American cattle infecting the Canadian cattle so long as the former were kept inside the cars. It follows from this that the precautions taken under the regulations were in excess of the actual requirements, which were simply that there should be isolation of the animals passing through Canada and the prevention of contact with any Canadian animals. It was, however, known at the time the regulations were made, that pleuro-pneumonia could not be detected even by the closest inspection of the living animal, in its incipient stages, much less by the inspection of animals in herds passing through the country, either by day or by night. The inspection, however, has since been kept up as being useful, and necessary to see to the isolation, and also to the fact that none of the grosser forms of the disease are permitted to enter Canada. Any grossly sick or dying animal would be detected by the inspection which has been made. A provision of the regulations was that the Minister of Agriculture should prescribe the necessary measures for carrying them out. The regulations do not, as Dr. Wright alleges, prohibit night inspection. The clause (a) of the regulations, I have already read, but shall repeat it :

That an inspection of the said cattle and swine shall be made before they are admitted in transit, permission for which transit shall only be given on a certificate or clean bill of health from the inspector, he being a veterinary surgeon appointed by the said Minister.

It does not say either day or night, or whether loaded or unloaded. This was not thought of when the regulations were made, but it was found that the trains arrived at irregular times, sometimes in the night, and it was therefore much pressed by the railway companies. The Minister, in consequence took the opinions of his veterinary advisers, Professor McEachran, of Montreal, and Professor Andrew Smith, of Toronto, both of whom, in the circumstances, expressed opinions favourable to allowing night inspection, on the grounds, first, of preventing cruelty and injury to animals in circumstances where there was no means of unloading them for rest, water and feeding, and because it was not seen there were any reasons why there could be any danger from allowing them to pass for a few hours through the country in closed cars under the restrictions defined. Still, in the face of the then undefined fears as to how pleuro-pneumonia was spread the consent of the Minister was given with some reluctance. These fears, however, were not only exaggerated, but unfounded when tested by the present lights, as contained in the definition above cited from the Board of Agriculture to Lord Ripon. The whole of the regulations as they have been carried out are actually in excess of the requirements. All cattle trains are inspected at Sarnia and Windsor by three veterinary officers before they are allowed to pass through, and a veterinary officer is appointed to visit cars en route in order to see that the railway companies live up to the requirements of the regulations. Dr. Wright, in a communication to some of the newspapers, has stated that Mr. Lowe, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, had informed one of the railway companies that he would "wink" at night inspections, although they were prohibited by the regulations. Both statements are false. It appears by the letters of Dr. Wright himself, which are in the department, that he received his instructions to pass cattle trains during the night from Professor Andrew Smith, who was in charge of the inspections. On March 20th, 1882, an Order in Council was passed on a report of Mr. Pope to appoint Professor Andrew Smith veterinary inspector for the province of Ontario, to superintend the inspection of live stock entering that province from the United States. On 13th April, 1882, Dr. Wright was notified by an official letter that he was to take all his orders in respect of these inspections from Professor Andrew Smith. And on 10th May, 1882, Professor Andrew Smith was told officially that all the inspectors had been placed under his direction and were to take their orders from him. The Minister of Agriculture at that time, instead of giving details of orders through the department direct, considered it more prudent that all professional directions should be given through the chief professional adviser in Ontario, namely: Professor Andrew Smith. On these facts the Deputy Minister says in the notes referred to: "I, therefore, had no responsibility whatever with respect to giving the order for the night inspection. It was the Act of the Minister on the professional advice of Professor Andrew Smith, also concurred in, as I have stated by Professor McEachran. I do not desire however, to escape from any responsibility with respect to this order; and I, therefore, state here that I entirely concurred in it, and do so still." It followed from these proceedings that threats began to be muttered by Dr. Wright that unless his pay was increased he would make certain exposure. They are those which are published in the newspaper referred to, which I have read in the 'Canada Farmer's Sun.' He made these threats to the railways and they reached the Minister through the medium of both the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway Companies' managing offices. The answer directed by the Minister was that these threats must be withdrawn or Dr. Wright must be dismissed. They were unconditionally withdrawn in a letter of Dr. Wright and Professor Andrew Smith, and Professor Smith wrote to the Minister that he desired, if possible, to save Dr. Wright, who had been one of his pupils, and who, although he was rash, was still a man whom he desired in the circumstances to serve. Professor Smith subsequently recommended his removal, and Dr. Wright ceased to be an officer of the department in August, 1891. And immediately afterwards, I suppose, he made these communications to the paper, and the 'Canada Farmer's Sun' says, the embargo was put on our cattle,

But the discrepancy must be apparent to every one when they remember that this communication was in 1891, and it was the fall of 1892 before the embargo was put on, and then it was for the specific reason alleged, namely: that two head of cattle were found supposed to be affected by pleuropneumonia, one taken over by the 'Huronian,' and the other by the 'Monkseaton.' Some of the circumstances attending Dr. Wright's blackmailing are the most open and the most flagrant it was ever my lot to have any knowledge of. Some points of these are stated in the notes and papers furnished me by the Deputy Minister marked "B." Some further facts are contained in the paper marked "C." The information in both these papers is covered by the return which was ordered on motion of Mr. Mulock, and Mr. Mulock. I was informed by the Deputy Minister, with the consent of the Minister, visited the department and read over all these papers. If I am not mistaken, the return was not copied, but permission was given to Mr. Mulock to visit the department and go over the correspondence and satisfy himself. The Minister gave me a similar permission, and I have here some notes marked "B" relating to Dr. Wright's demands. On 27th September, 1883, Mr. G. W. Reynolds, of the Great Western Division of the Grand Trunk Railway, wrote to Mr. Stiff that he (Dr. Wright) would make exposures unless certain payments were made to him, and asking that electric lights be put in at the D. G. H. & M. R. and Wabash yards. On 5th November, 1883, Dr. Wright wrote to Mr. Reynolds to say that he would not allow the telephone to be put in his place for a facility unless the railway gave him $500. He complained that the cattle were passing at two points, one Windsor and the other Sarnia, and it was inconvenient for him to keep up direct communication with the two without interfering with the traffic and causing detentions at one point while he was attending to business at the other point. And, so that as great facilities as possible might be allowed to him to do the business with despatch, the railway company offered to put in a telephone at either end so that communication could be had direct with him in a few minutes. This offer he refused to allow unless the railway company would give him $500 for permission to put telephones in his office. On 6th November, 1883, Mr. Reynolds wrote to Mr. Stiff that Dr. Wright had shown him a long letter which he intended to publish unless his demands were complied with, it being plainly stated that the publication of such a letter would stop the transit traffic altogether. Further, that Dr. Wright had increased his demands for electric lights, from three to $500. Mr. Reynolds said that Dr. Wright showed him several typewritten copies of his threatened letter, and further, that he had shown it to a leading member of the Opposition in Canada, who had promised to take up the case in the House for him. On 8th November, 1883, Mr. Reynolds wrote to Mr. Stiff in the following terms:—

Mr. SPROULE.

Dr. Wright is now with me and makes a proposition, which, if accepted by you, will end the hard feelings between him and the company and enable us to do stock business without further trouble. He says that if you will give him $300 more per annum ($1,500 in all) and an annual pass over the lines of the Grand Trunk Railway, he will allow the telephone to be put in and withdraw his demand for the electric lights.

In another letter of the same date, Mr. Reynolds writes:

Please notice that Dr. Wright has endorsed the attached, by writing his name and "correct" on the bottom left-hand corner.

On the 12th November, 1883, Mr. Stiff writes to Mr. Hickson a narrative of the facts, adding:

I presume, if he carries out his threat to publish his views on the transportation of stock through Canada, he would do some injury, and that the touchiness which the English people have about this cattle disease, it might lead to the shipments being again stopped, but, in my opinion, it is a question whether we should submit to what must be considered as blackmail, or whether the Government will not be prepared to risk his threats and put some other man in his place. I should think that he had, by signing Mr. Reynolds' letter, dated 8th November, committed himself to such an extent that the Government would have no hesitation in dispensing with his services.

On 16th November, 1883, Mr. Wainwright submits the facts to the department in a letter to the secretary, saying he cannot think it is the wish of the department "that we should be subjected to such outrageous demands." On 23rd November, 1883, Mr. Wainwright telegraphs to Mr. Lowe:

Another message from Windsor stating that if a settlement is not made by Friday on the basis of the claim he (Dr. Wright) has made the documents he has prepared will be published.

On 23rd November, 1883, Mr. Lowe telegraphed in substance that correspondence with Wright must be through the department. On 23rd November, 1883, Mr. Wainwright wrote to Mr. Lowe:

I have already told you that whatever the department considers this company should pay for Dr. Wright's services we shall not demur to, but threats of this kind should not be tolerated and I send this to you privately that you may deal with the matter as you deem best and tell me what position you think this company should take.

On 24th November, 1883, Mr. W. K. Muir, of Detroit, wrote a letter to Mr. Hickson saying he had in his possession Dr. Wright's threatened letter, the publication of which he thought might do mischief, and recommending that some arrangement be made with him. On 27th November, 1883, Mr. Wainwright sent to Mr. Lowe Mr. Muir's letter in a confidential memo. and asked whether this man (Wright) was to run the Government and the railways? He added that the railway was not disposed to be blackmailed and thought it better that Dr. Wright and his question should be settled at once. On 26th November, 1883, Dr. Wright telegraphed to Mr. Hickson:

Your letter received this morning. Original manuscript of article referred to handed to Mr. Spicer here yesterday and written statement of terms on which I will settle, which if not accepted and the money paid by Friday, I will mail it for publication.

On 27th November, 1883, Mr. Wainwright, in a letter to Mr. Lowe sends a copy of Dr. Wright's message (26th November) to Mr. Hickson, in which he stated:

These messages and these letters from this man, to my mind, are the greatest piece of blackmail I have ever been subjected to, and I have told him distinctly that we only propose to deal with him through the Government. I cannot believe that the Minister, whatever the results are, will tolerate such action on the part of anybody as the messages and letters received from this gentleman, and I leave it to you to say what you expect this company to do. We shall act upon it upon hearing from you in reply to this letter.

On Nov. 28, 1883, Mr. Lowe telegraphed to Mr. Wainwright:

We have sent for Professor Smith and informed him he must notify Wright either to withdraw correspondence and apologize or leave the service. Please say nothing more to Wright except tell him he will receive answer through Smith. Will write.

Next in order in the correspondence is the following letter of Dr. Wright to Mr. Hickson:—

WINDSOR, Nov. , 1883.

JOSEPH HICKSON, Esq.,
General Manager G.T.R., Montreal.

SIR,—Now that I am assured that Mr. Ledyard, President of the Michigan Central Railway has read the article referred to in my despatch to you on Thursday last, 22nd inst., I now write you to say that I will not want any later than Thursday next the 29th inst., for the settlement of the question in dispute by the payment in cash of my demands for past services, and a satisfactory agreement for the future, when, if it is not settled, I will mail the article referred to the English and Canadian papers, and send it in pamphlet form to the presidents of the County Agriculture Societies in the province of Ontario, the effect of it will be (at least I think so) to compel the Canadian Government to pass an order to prohibit the transit of United States cattle through Canada, or the English Government will be disposed to schedule Canadian cattle. From the first I acted honestly with the Government by refusing to accept the same money which I now demand when offered me by Mr. Stiff, to pass the stock at night before I had permission for the Government to do so, and I have done everything in my power to facilitate your business in respect to the transit of United States cattle. I have been treated in the most outrageous manner both by the Government and Grand Trunk authorities, and now I am determined either to have what I demand, or I will make an attempt to have the transit of United States cattle prohibited. I will settle with you on fair square business basis, and will make no unreasonable demands, all things being taken into consideration.

Yours truly,

J. B. WRIGHT.

On a corner of the letter, Dr. Wright wrote the following note:—

I demand in settlement $2,500 for past services, and $200 per month for the future, also an annual pass over all lines of the Grand Trunk interests, and on these conditions will agree not to publish article referred to in this letter which sets forth the danger to Canadian cattle by United States cattle being allowed to pass through Canada.

J. B. WRIGHT.

Now, I give these letters from Dr. Wright because they show the venality of the man, and the disposition which he displayed to blackmail both the Government and the company, and to force them into giving him the money which he was not entitled to. Then I have his affidavit in which he goes over the regulations again specifically, and sets forth that the inspection is only to be made after the cattle were taken from the trains. I have set that allegation at rest by reading the subsection of the regulations which provides for it. Then his other allegation, first, that the inspection was to be made after the cattle were landed, and second, that the inspection was to be made in the day time. I have shown are both untrue. Now, the instructions which he got from Dr. Andrew Smith are set forth very fully and very plainly. First, in the letter of the department to Dr. Smith, telling him to attend to this matter, and send an inspector there to examine the cattle. The instructions that were given by Professor Andrew Smith to Dr. Wright, are in the following terms:—

DEAR SIR,—I enclose letter received from Dr. Wright in explanation of his signing blank certificates. I beg to state that any instructions he ever received from me was to carefully, thoroughly and honestly discharge the duties of his position.

A copy of these regulations under which he was to discharge them was sent to him. So it will be seen by this that the allegations set forth by Dr. Wright are entirely incorrect. Here is the apology that he makes when he thought that, by making it he would get the additional amount of money which he asked:

TORONTO, 31st December, 1891.

SIR,—I beg to apologize for what I have said and written in respect to inspection of stock at Windsor and Detroit, and the course I have taken in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and I hereby withdraw unconditionally anything I may have said or written on the subject, and faithfully promise if retained in my position as veterinary inspector, to endeavour to the utmost of my ability to efficiently discharge the duties pertaining thereto.

J. B. WRIGHT.

To Dr. SMITH, Toronto, Ont.

That is to say, that after instructions were sent by the department that he should either withdraw, unconditionally, the allegations he had made, and apologize for them, or else be dismissed, for fear of being dismissed, he withdrew them. But the department, on further experience of Dr. Wright, declined to continue his services, and the necessary steps to that end were taken. It will be seen then by these letters I have read that almost every allegation set forth in this paper is incorrect. In the first place, it is not true, as stated here, that the cattle were to be unloaded to be inspected; in the next place, it is not true that the cattle were to be inspected only in the day time; and, in the third place, it is not true that the Deputy Minister winked at the violation of the regulations, or that he gave any instructions which could reasonably be construed as winking at such a violation. Then he says it was because he would not move to Windsor that the Government dismissed him. The Government dismissed him because no Government, with self-respect and in the interest of the trade could submit to such blackmailing. Notwithstanding the fact that Dr. Smith was very anxious to deal leniently with him, he being one of his pupils, and a fairly good man, it was impossible afterwards to maintain him in that position, and because he was dismissed he endeavoured to make out a case that would, in his opinion, not only do injury to the Grand Trunk Railway, and their trade in carrying American cattle through Canada, but would also do serious injury to the agriculturists of the country by causing Canadian cattle to be scheduled in England. I am informed that the threats he made have since been carried out, that is, not only did he publish the statement for the specific purpose of injuring the trade, but he also sent it, as I am told, to the agricultural societies throughout the country. Now, then, the strictures that are passed upon the Government by the 'Canadian Farmer,' which is mailed to almost every Patron of Industry in Canada, were entirely unfair in the light of the information I have given. Then he says that properly qualified inspectors have not been employed. Now, only three inspectors of stock, namely, Messrs. Westell, Mathews and Wright were, during the period in question, employed by the Government. The department have only employed properly qualified officers. There are four or five of them to-day doing that duty. It is not believed, as Dr. Wright alleges, that duty has been done by a butcher, or a party not properly qualified; and certainly only the three officers named, all of whom were qualified veterinarians, were employed by the department during the period in question. Therefore, so far as the department is concerned, there is not one iota of truth in that contention. Now, from all these facts, it will be seen how unreasonable was the attack made by the 'Canadian Farmer' upon the Government regarding those regulations, but the Patrons can hardly be blamed if they believed the erroneous letters that were published by Dr. Wright. They were misinformed in believing that these statements were correct, and this article was written on the same lines as were laid down; but when the letters are now given to the public, I hope the editor of that paper will be generous enough to apologize for giving to the country such unfair and untruthful statements of the case in connection with this very important industry. There is another point which should not be lost sight of: It was believed at the time the regulations were made that Canadian cattle coming in contiguity with American cattle being carried through the country might be affected by pleuro-pneumonia without coming into actual contact, and so this regulation was made not only to have the cattle confined in the cars, with the exception that at one station, where they were to be quarantined, they might be unloaded in order to be fed, because the distance was too long in the cars from Sarnia to Rouse's Point without food or water. So, in order to ensure perfect safety, it was arranged that at the enclosure there should be a space between the outside and the inner board fence, so that there might be no possibility of Canadian cattle within the inside fence coming in contact in any way with even the breath of other cattle at large, and that it might not be possible that Canadian cattle could possibly reach American cattle. Again, it was provided that cars, carrying cattle should, after use, be disinfected and cleaned. Under no circumstances were those cars allowed to be used for the transportation of Canadian cattle without being removed from the transit service, and it was, in the first instance, believed by the British Board of Agriculture this precaution would be sufficient to prevent any danger. In the light of recent information, says Mr. Lowe, so far as regards the nature of pleuro-pneumonia as an infectious or contagious disease, it is quite clear that it is utterly impossible to infect animals in those parts of Canada through which the railway companies' trains pass, so long as the regulations were fairly carried out, and as they are carried out to-day. It was held that no inspection of cattle could determine whether an animal might be afflicted with the incipient stage of pleuro-pneumonia, or not, and until, in fact, it had reached the advanced stages, when characteristic symptoms appeared. Therefore it will be seen that there was no necessity for unloading the cattle for the purposes of inspection, but in order to prevent danger in carrying such cattle through the country this inspection was faithfully carried out. One could easily understand how easily an inspection could be made when the cars were open at the side, and it was possible for the inspectors to see whether the animals were ailing or not. If such was the case, the inspector was compelled to take out the animals, and if it was found to be infected with contagious disease, it must be destroyed. Of course, animals might suffer from other diseases, for example, swine might be suffering from hog cholera, and, according to the regulations, such diseased animals must be taken out and destroyed; and, for the reasons I have intimated, the inspection is maintained. If there was any anxiety as regards examination and inspection, Dr. Wright was alone to blame, because his instructions were specific and as strong as were required, and there was no necessity for relaxing them. But we are told that the regulations were maintained as strictly as they are to-day, and they are maintained as strictly to-day as they were some time previously, because it is desirable to prevent even the possibility of importing disease from the American side among our Canadian cattle, and we think the regulations are maintained in such a way as to prevent any danger whatever. I believe so long as these regulations are carried out as they are at the present time, the British Board of Agriculture must concede that there is not any danger of disease through these channels. Taking all these matters into consideration, the only surprise is that our Government should have tolerated the abuse and blackmail of this man so long, and I can only understand it from a letter from Dr. Smith, asking the Government to retain this man, who was a student of his own, and a fairly good man, and mentioning that he was entitled to make an ample apology which, indeed, he did make, but the Government found it necessary subsequently to dismiss him. Evidence has come to light to show conclusively that the examination made was not only a careful one, but a good one, and sufficient to prevent the importation of pleuropneumonia into the country, and, at the same time, it is apparent that this officer made demands for the purpose of getting money out of the Government, and also out of the railway companies. That officer is certainly censurable by the public, and should be censured by the press as well, and, in my opinion, the Government should go further and punish him severely for what he has done to destroy the cattle trade of Canada and injure the traffic of the railway companies.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is unquestionably a very important matter which the hon. gentleman has brought up, and I am glad it has come before the House, because great misunderstanding undoubtedly prevails throughout the country in regard to the manner in which American cattle are allowed to be carried through this country. I have often heard those in sympathy with the views of the Patrons of Industry, charge the Dominion Government with the responsibility of bringing about the scheduling of our cattle in England by permitting cattle to come into this country from the United States, and pass through it to eastern points for shipment, without rigid inspection and full compliance with quarantine laws. I hope the evidence submitted will, to some extent, clear up any misunderstanding which may have existed. It was very unfortunate that a man of the character of Dr. Wright should have been permitted so long to remain in his position that he was enabled to endanger a very important and growing industry to the farmers of this country, by blackmailing or attempting to blackmail the railway companies to secure money for his own personal advantage, by threatening to expose certain looseness that existed in regard to the manner in which cattle were admitted at different ports and allowed to pass through Canada. I am glad that the Government have taken the course of dismissing him. It is a great misfortune that his dismissal did not take place at a considerably earlier date, because, unquestionably, from the moment he wrote the letter with respect to the looseness with which this particular duty was performed by veterinaries at any particular section, such information had considerable weight, and, no doubt, it had weight with the British Board of Agriculture in not only imposing the scheduling arrangement but in providing the conditions which now exist with respect to the landing of cattle in England. The Government should have been more fully posted with respect to the course to be adopted in regard to cattle passing through this country, and it should have been more particular in seeing that the regulations for quarantine, as originally enacted, were thoroughly and efficiently carried out. I have heard that the British Board of Agriculture has received information with respect to the looseness which existed as to the quarantine regulations between Canada, and the United States. I am informed that, with a view of ascertaining whether or not certain representations made to them were correct, they sent a person over to Canada quietly and secretly to inspect the whole operations of our quarantine regulations with the United States. I do not know how true this is, but I have heard it stated, and if they did so, and found that we were loosely permitting cattle to pass through our country from the infected districts of the United States, they were unquestionably justified in their own interest in placing an embargo against us. We all know that pleuropneumonia and foot-and-mouth disease have caused terrible loss to the English farmers, and any steps taken by the English Government to protect their herds from these diseases are of course quite proper on their part. We, however, claim that our cattle are free from disease, and we consider that it is unfair and unjust that, owing to looseness or supposed looseness on the part of either the Government of the veterinary surgeon discharging important duties under the Government, we should be put to all this loss and trouble. Possibly the Government is doing all it can to show the British Government that the allegations in reference to our cattle and to looseness of inspection are false, and I hope that they will not relax their efforts in this direction. It is to be hoped that our Government will use every means to secure for the farmers and exporters of cattle the privileges which they formerly enjoyed in the English market. If in the past the quarantine officials under the direction of the Government have neglected their duty in not making a rigid and careful inspection of stock passing through Canada from the United States, it is to be hoped that they will make their officers more careful in the future. I do not think that the allegation is correct that the Government winked at this looseness—I hope that they did not—and from the letters read to the House by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) it has appeared, that although the action of the Government was somewhat tardy they eventually did dismiss the man who was found trying to blackmail the companies and to secure advantage for himself. It appears to me, however, that the Government should have known of the conduct of that man a long time before, and that they should have dismissed him in the first instance. Some time ago, I read the article which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) quoted in the 'Farmer's Sun,' and I was greatly astonished that the references made by this paper to this unfortunate condition of things did not meet with a prompt and distinct denial from the Government, if untrue, so as to unprejudice the public mind with regard to the charge of laxity, and indifference, and carelessness on their part. I hope that the papers now read to the House will clear up this matter thoroughly, and that we will get to the bottom of the whole difficulty, which unfortunately has resulted in the scheduling of our cattle.

Motion agreed to.

WINTER SERVICE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND THE MAINLAND.

Mr. PERRY moved for:

Return showing the date that the ice-boats commenced carrying the mails between Cape Tormentine, N.B., and Cape Traverse, P.E.I.: how many trips made with mails; the number of mail bags carried to and from Prince Edward Island: the date of each trip: the number of passengers to and from Prince Edward Island: the cost for said service for the winter, 1894; the date at which this service ceased.

He said: In making this motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words with reference to the mail service between Prince

Mr. McMULLEN.

R

Edward Island and the mainland by both the steamboat and the ice-boats. I expected that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would have returned to the House certain documents which I asked for a good while ago, in order to enable me to discuss the matter more intelligently, so that the House might understand the grievances and the difficulties under which the people of Prince Edward Island labour. But the hon. Minister has not thought proper to bring down these papers. He follows the example of the Minister of Railways; it is hard to catch him too, so that I do not know whether we may expect these papers during the present session or not. The ice-boat service is not a new thing between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. It has been carried on for more than half a century, and I may say that the system has been very little improved during all that time. The boats may be a little more adapted to the service than they were fifty years ago, but they are open boats, and the distance between the island and the mainland is not any shorter, as the mainland has not moved from where it was fifty years ago, nor has the island moved either. The Government are slow in trying to move it, and I am doubtful whether they will succeed. The only way they can move it is to give us a continuous communication in winter as well as summer. Nothing has been done by the Government for many years, and we have still to fall back on the ice-boats when there is no steamer. Until we have a tunnel or some other way of crossing continuously, the ice-boats cannot be dispensed with. If the papers to which I have referred had been brought down by the Minister, I intended to show what little service the steamer had done, and to what extent the ice-boats had to be availed of when the steamer could not cross. We find that steam communication was inaugurated, by the Mackenzie Administration in 1875, when the 'Northern Light' was built for the purpose of maintaining winter communication between the island and the mainland. The steamer 'Northern Light' did a good deal of good work; she almost did wonders at one time; she crossed, perhaps, more continuously than the 'Stanley' did last winter. Now, I am not here to say a word against the 'Stanley.' I think the Government deserve credit for having had her built; she is an improvement on the 'Northern Light,' which was a new experiment. But, Sir, we are in an age of progress; everything seems to be progressing except the Government. The Government does not make any progress in the direction of keeping up winter communication between the island and the mainland; in that respect they seem to be stationary. We know that the steamer 'Stanley' made very poor progress last winter. We know that at one time we were here for ten days without receiving a mail—not only once, but three or four times. We know that passengers on board the 'Stanley' had to be left on board seven or eight days, and at last had to be landed in her boats at Malignant Cove, somewhere east of Pictou. We also find that late in the spring, when the Government machinery for carrying the mails could not cross, a gentleman's private tug had to be used for carrying the mails across from the island to the mainland. In fact, our mails and passengers came to be almost at the mercy of private individuals. A gentleman named Alexander Strang, who lives at Cape Traverse, had to be got to carry the mails and passengers across in a little tug boat. What was the reason the ice-boats could not cross? It was because the straits were full of lolly—I mean broken ice. When the ice-boats get into that, they cannot get along. I suppose I have crossed the straits myself a dozen times, and I can speak with knowledge of this. When the boats get into this lolly, I have seen the crews spreading their oars, and putting spare bits of boards across them, and then one man takes a rope in his hands and hops along on the temporary bridge thus formed, until he reaches the solid ice; and he then helps to pull the boat along. The crossing of the straits is not so difficult or so tedious when the ice is solid, or when there is clear water. Of course, the boat will sail in clear water, while on the solid ice, although it is rather laborious, it can be hauled by the men, who strap themselves together as you would strap horses together, until they reach open water again, when they can use their oars. But when these boats encounter lolly or chopped ice, it is quite impossible for them to get through. As I said before, the steamer is not able to keep continuous winter communication from the island to the mainland; and when it is prevented from crossing by getting caught in the ice between Pictou and Georgetown, the Government have to fall back on the ice-boats. I believe, myself, that the route from Georgetown to Pictou is the very worst route; I believe the ice becomes worse on that route than it does between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine. I believe that if the steamer service were used between the capes in conjunction with the ice-boats, there would not be a day when it would not be possible to make the crossing. Now, I have studied this question a little myself; but there are men who have studied it, perhaps, more deeply. I find that Mr. Strang published a letter, which has been copied into the 'Examiner,' of Charlottetown, a name which I am sure every member of the Government knows very well, because they subsidize that paper pretty heavily; and it has also been reproduced in the Summerside 'Journal,' another Conservative paper. I am not passing any reflection upon these papers, but I merely want to show that these ideas are not factious, or got up by Liberals to embarrass the Government, but are supported by papers supporting the Government. Mr. Strang says:

Our Government at Ottawa will surely see soon that this is the place for winter communication.

Since the 1st of March, there has not been ice enough in the straits here to stop any steamer. For all we had such a severe winter the steamer 'Stanley' would have made regular crossings except on stormy days. Since the 22nd of March the strait has been as clear as in summer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What date are you referring to?

Mr. PERRY. This was written on the 25th of April; that is all I know. If I had the return I asked for, I could tell when the 'Stanley' stopped crossing; but I have not got that information. The Government stopped the boat about the date of this letter. Mr. Strang goes on:

There was only lolly that it was almost impossible for the ice-boats to get through—no heavy ice to enable the men to get out and lift their boats along. Consequently, the ice-boats could not make regular crossing and the mails were ordered away from here, and how have we got our mails since? Everybody knows, if it were not for the board ice here, I could have run my tug every fine day since the 1st of March, and since the mails were removed from here the board ice on the New Brunswick side has all floated away, and a sail-boat could cross.

Now, this man, who lives at Cape Traverse, who, no doubt, speaks from knowledge and experience, says that all this time a common ail-boat could have crossed, while the steamer 'Stanley,' that beautiful steamer, which cost so much money—I think the first cost was $250,000—was not able to cross, but was held fast in the ice. That goes to show that the Georgetown-Pictou route is the worst of any. Mr. Strang proceeds:

The dock there is all clear. The board ice here never leaves until it melts away. If the 'Stanley' had come up here when she was in Charlottetown and run into the board ice, so that it would have gone out, the mails could have been carried with a sail-boat. That, Mr. Editor, will show the public where the 'Stanley' should be. Here she could make hourly trips, instead of being drifting about in the heavy ice, in danger of being smashed to pieces, which she would have been long ago if it were not for her able and experienced captain.

That is the opinion of Mr. Strang, published in the 'Examiner.' The Summerside 'Journal' says:

The fact of the matter is that the Government keep the 'Stanley' at the wrong end of the island, and the experience of each successive year emphasizes that fact. Year after year, despite the easterly and north-easterly winds which almost invariably prevail during the spring, the department persist in keeping the 'Stanley' on the Pictou route, and the consequence is repeated and vexatious delays in passenger, mail and freight traffic, for the above winds fill the "bight" with heavy gulf ice, through which it is impossible for any boat that ever was constructed to make her way. This has been the experience, not of one year alone, but of every year, and it has been pointed out to the Government, time and again, year after year, that a change of route would secure more satisfactory results, yet the department has made no effort whatever to take advantage of the more favourable routes that have been brought to their notice.

This is the view of a Government supporter:

Take the capes route, for instance, as suggested by Mr Strang. There is not a day in the winter that the 'Stanley' could not at some time or other make the trip between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse. Better still, as we have argued for some time past, she should be placed on the Cape Tormentine and Summerside route, which we contend is the winter route for the 'Stanley' or a similar boat. In fact any route west is practicable. Between the capes, between Summerside and Cape Traverse, Cape Bauld or Point du Chêne, or between West Cape and Richibucto—any one of these is practicable. As any one can see for himself by taking a good map and studying the position of the island, the winter winds, no matter from what direction they blow, do not—in fact cannot—fill the western part of the straits with gulf ice, and the only ice met with in this part of the straits is what may be called local ice, that is, the light drifting pans of straits ice, and board ice. To make her way through this would be mere child's play for the 'Stanley,' compared with the immensely heavy work she has to undergo in battling with the vast quantities of heavy gulf ice which is solidly packed into the "bight" by every breeze that blows from the east or north or intervening points.

The observations made for several years past under the direction of Dr. de Bertram, and those of the old settlers along both the New Brunswick and island shores of the western part of the straits, together with the long and practical experience of the ice-boat men, prove conclusively that the western portion of the straits is comparatively free of ice, while the eastern "bight" is, during a considerable part of the winter, so densely packed with heavy ice that it is impossible to maintain anything like regular winter communication on the Pictou route. These facts, and the annually repeated history of long and vexatious delays, should convince the Government that the 'Stanley' is certainly kept at the wrong end of the island, and that the time has come to give some other route a trial, and to ascertain if these delays in passenger and mail traffic cannot be avoided, and if something practical cannot be done to give the island unbroken steam communication with the mainland, winter as well as summer.

That is the opinion of that editor, and, so far as it goes, I have no reason to doubt it. No doubt he has studied the question, and has ascertained that the 'Stanley' can cross much better anywhere up west than down east. He also advocates, in another article, published on the 24th of January, a crossing from Summerside. He says that there is not a day but the steamer could cross from Summerside to Cape Tormentine, provided the Government would build piers. This is no new thing. The people of Summerside, through their very influential friend, Mr. Hunt, have applied to the Government for a grant to build these piers; and I am satisfied that if they were built, by concentrating the water of the river into a narrow channel, you would create such an increase of current that the ice would not remain in any length of time, and, being loosened, the steamer would have no trouble in getting in or out of Summerside and crossing to Cape Tormentine. At Cape Tormentine there is very good communication. The Government have spent over a quarter of a million dollars building a wharf, which, so far, is used for railway communication. I do not know whether the Government own the railway or whether it is private property, but, at all events, it is of no service to winter communication, and will not be until the steamer is brought up there from Cape Traverse and Summerside. We have another route advocated, the West Point route. Dr. de Bertram and his company have obtained a charter to undertake that project. Dr. de Bertram says that if the Government will give him $75,000 a year for twenty-five years he is prepared to build two steamers, costing $250,000 each, and an extension of the railway from Cape Richibucto to the present terminus of the Buctouche and Kent railway, and he will also build the piers required at each side. These two branches of railway and the two piers are estimated by his engineers to cost $1,000,000, which, with the $500,000 for the two boats, would amount to $1,500,000; and he will give the Government all the guarantee they can require that he will carry out a constant steam communication between these two points. I am not prepared to say that the Cape Traverse route is the best route, or the route from Summerside to Cape Tormentine, or between Cape Wolfe and Cape Richibucto. But I contend that the Government should spend a couple of thousand dollars next winter in sending a couple of competent disinterested engineers to examine and report as to the possibility of carrying out a scheme more satisfactory than the present one. I am sure the Government must see the necessity of trying the experiment, and if they find, by proper inquiries, that a feasible and practical plan, why not adopt it? I may be told: Why not have a little patience? We are going to give you a tunnel, we are still boring; we are going to spend $6,000 in boring across the Straits of Northumberland; and if we find it is possible to build a tunnel within a reasonable sum, we may build it. But, how long will that take? Where will the present generation be when that tunnel is completed? I say, dum vivimus, vivamus. While we live, let us live. Let us not take promises for excuse, but insist on having a proper way of crossing. The Government cannot shirk the responsibility they assumed in 1873, when they coaxed us into Confederation. They said to us: Dear friends, come along with us, and we will make you a rich people. We will give you daily steam communication summer and winter. Don't you see what trouble you have crossing in these miserable little ice-boats? Come along with us, and we will give you all the accommodation you require. These words "continuous steam communication winter and summer" are embodied in the resolutions between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Have these promises been carried out? They have not. I deny that our system of crossing is one bit better than it was forty or fifty years ago, with the exception of a few trips the steamer 'Stanley,' and before her the 'Northern Light,' made from the island to the mainland. We must still have recourse to the ice-boat. The people of the island had good reason to think they would have better means of communication, for it was promised years ago. It was promised even before 1891, but in 1891 it came very prominently before the public. Our opponents endeavoured to make use of the agitation in favour of the tunnel for political purposes at that time. I suppose it had some influence in their favour. That may be the reason why the two gentlemen were elected, who are here to represent King's County. In Prince County it did not have the same effect. I was a supporter of the tunnel. That may be the reason I was elected. But, previous to 1891, we know the agitation for improved means of communication inaugurated by Mr. Howlan was for a subway. What he meant by that I heard him explain. The subway was to be a metallic tube laid at the bottom of the straits, through which cars were to run. But, the plan being submitted to eminent engineers, it was proven to be a wild scheme, that it would be of no service, and that the lives of those going through it would be in danger. That scheme was thrown aside, and then the idea of a tunnel was got up. The question was brought up by the late Premier, Sir John Macdonald, in a letter which was published to the world. In that letter he made a promise. An estimate of the cost of the tunnel was made by Sir Douglas Fox, and I often wonder how the Government were enabled at that time to get an estimate. I know that Sir Douglas Fox is a very eminent engineer, and his reputation is worth a great deal to him, and I know he would not like to have his opinion misrepresented. He stated in the letter that for $6,000,000 a tunnel could be built. He declared that the scheme was a feasible one. He spoke of the eminent men to whom the question had been submitted: Mr. Pearson, Mr. Palmer and others, and said that from their report he believed the scheme to be a feasible one, and that the cost of construction would be not more than $6,000,000. I suppose the Government employed Sir Douglas Fox. I know that he received £250 sterling. I am sure that Sir Douglas Fox would not have made such a report unless he was authorized and recognized by the Government that paid him. The report of Sir Douglas Fox shows that he thought $6,000,000 would cover the construction of the tunnel. I see the Premier laughing. I suppose, to use a legal phrase, this obligation can be evaded. But poor, innocent people like myself think all these things are honest, and would not attempt to break through them. I find here another statement of Sir Douglas Fox. This is addressed to Senator Howlan:

MY DEAR SIR,—I have now received through the Provincial Secretary the sum of £56 ls. 6d. for Mr. Palmer. I have been going carefully into the whole matter with him, and have formed a very favourable opinion as to practicability of the proposed tunnel and will send you a preliminary report in a few days.

I do not know whether the Government ever got that report. The papers relating to this subject of steam communication with Prince Edward Island have been asked for every session since 1890, and even before, and I do not remember to have seen among the papers brought down, Sir Douglas Fox's report. If the Government ever got that report, they have it in a basket or a pigeon-hole somewhere. It never came down to the House in my knowledge. Now, Sir John Macdonald at that time took a very deep interest in the tunnel. He wrote Mr. Howlan a letter, which was published. I am not going to weary the House by reading the whole of that letter:

I fully appreciate the nature and the extent of the obligation incurred by the Dominion to maintain continuous communication between the island and the mainland.

I would like to ask the Premier if he appreciates the responsibility of his Government in this matter? Is he actuated by the same feelings that actuated Sir John Macdonald, or is he going to carry out the ideas that Sir John expressed?

We have tried to carry this out by the 'Stanley' but of course she cannot fight against the elements.

We know that. Experience proves that she has not been able to fight against the elements.

So if the cost comes within a reasonable amount, such as Parliament feels itself justified in incurring, I shall be prepared to submit the question for their favourable consideration.

Now, this was written three or four weeks before Sir Douglas Fox's estimate was received. Well, Sir, we have another gentleman who figures in this business. It was coming on near the date of election. On Saturday, the 28th of February, 1891—the elections were to be on the Thursday following, the 5th of March—the High Commissioner appeared upon the scene somehow. He happened to be at that time at Amherst. He pretended that he had the notion of crossing to Prince Edward Island, but it is my opinion that he had no such intention. At any rate he telegraphed the following:—

I regret deeply that it impossible for me to go to the island, as the 'Stanley' cannot cross and I dare not attempt the cape. I have satisfied myself that the tunnel can be made for $6,000,000 and you may rely on all the aid I can give you to that important and necessary work.

I would like to ask the Government if they received any suggestions from Sir Charles Tupper?

Mr. EDGAR. What date is that?

Mr. PERRY. It was 28th February, 1891. Has Sir Charles Tupper urged on the Government the necessity of carrying out this gigantic work, or was it merely a scheme, a bait to catch the people of Prince Edward Island? He said he dare not try to cross on one of those boats. Well, I have seen gentlemen cross between the capes in those little boats, who thought just as highly of their lives as Sir Charles Tupper does of his. I don't blame him for not crossing to the island. He sent this telegram to Mr. Ferguson, who has lately been pitchforked into the Senate; but at that time he was a beggar, he was begging votes to be sent to this Parliament. That telegram was sent to him and he published it, and he hired a special car on Saturday evening to distribute this telegram in every public place on Sunday, even in places of worship. This telegram was read to induce the people to vote for him, but it had not the desired effect, and I doubt very much if it would have had the desired effect if Sir Charles Tupper had come there himself. Now, I say that our people, looking at all these facts have a right to expect that a decent and substantial effort will be made by the Government to carry out the terms of Confederation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. We find that in 1885 the Government of that day, led by Mr. Sullivan, the present Chief Justice of the island—I happened to have a seat in the Local Parliament at that time—induced both branches of the Legislature to pass a unanimous resolution asking the Government of Canada to pay to the people of Prince Edward Island the sum of $5,000,000, or interest thereon, as indemnity for the non-fulfilment of the terms of union. Well, Sir, Mr. Ferguson himself was one of the men who went to England to present this memorial to Her Majesty. We got an answer, and I must say that the Government of Canada got a rap over the knuckles for their stubbornness, for their deafness, in not listening to the petitions of the people of the island who asked them to make a decent effort to carry out the terms of Confederation. Lord Granville wrote a despatch to this Government. After examining the whole matter he took the side of the people of the island, and held the view that the Dominion Government had not carried out their promises, or rather their solemn compact entered into with the people of the island to induce them to come into Confederation. Well, Sir, the Government do not blush to try and break through that solemn compact. What is the reason? Is it because we are only 109,000 people? Is it because we are the smallest province in the Dominion of Canada that our rights must be trampled upon in this way? Is it because Prince Edward Island only returns two Conservative members here to support the Government? Let me tell this House and the Government that the people of Prince Edward Island pay their taxes. We have a national debt at present of over $250,000,000, which represents something like $50 per head of the population. If the people of Prince Edward Island are one-fortieth of the entire population, they are responsible for one-fortieth of the public debt of Canada. And what have we got in return? Where are the public works that this Government have built for the people of that island? The Island Railway has been built by the people of Prince Edward Island, and paid for by them to the last cent. I am sure there is not a Cabinet Minister who will contradict that statement. The three million and a half of money which the Prince Edward Island Railway cost was paid for entirely by the people of that island. And what else have we got? Why, I may be told that we get $500 for the Miminegash breakwater; I may be told there is a little Government work in the Cascumpec harbour, and a few others. I have figured it up, and I find that we get from the Dominion of Canada yearly $300,000 less than we are paying in taxes into the Federal Government. Why, how can this Government rest easy in face of the debt staring them in the face. There is a grand precept that all debts must be paid, and if one of these gentlemen were to go off suddenly leaving this debt unpaid, what answer will he be able to make when he arrives on the other side? Now, I want to read you an extract from what Lord Granville said:

Mr. PERRY.

As I stated in the earlier part of this despatch, although Her Majesty's Government is unable to take the question out of the hands of the Dominion Government, and although I have not seen more than a prima facie opinion as to the feasibility at a moderate cost of the proposal for its solution, I hope that it will be found to admit of a satisfactory settlement. On the one hand the expectations of the province in regard to the establishment of a constant and efficient communication with the mainland have not been fulfilled.

Now, could there be a higher authority than Lord Granville? He says that these conditions had not been fulfilled. He knew what the terms were. His Government had been a party to the signing of these terms, and he knew what the Government of Canada had done, and had failed to do. The case was advocated by the present Senator Ferguson, and Mr. Sullivan, the Minister of Justice at that time for the island, and Lord Granville came to the conclusion that the terms had not been fulfilled. Have they been fulfilled since? Let the Prime Minister stand up and tell me if they have been fulfilled? The whole country knows that the terms have not been fulfilled, and that no attempt even has been made to fulfil them. All this talk and agitation about the tunnel is a farce and a snare, it has become a by-word even among our young people. Lord Granville goes on to say :

But on the other hand, the Dominion Government has shown that it has made considerable efforts to improve communication in the face of serious physical difficulties during the winter season. There seems to be reason for doubting whether any really satisfactory communication by steamship can be regularly maintained all the year round, which makes it all the more important that the proposed tunnel should receive a full, and, if feasible, favourable consideration on the part of the Government of the Dominion.

There is another advice from this gentleman. Do you mean to tell me they won't take the advice of the Colonial Secretary? Is he not to be heard, or is it only a farce to submit petitions to him? The Government, I dare say, sometimes think to themselves: Well, it is time to try and do something for Prince Edward Island. If the terms of Confederation cannot be kept better than they have been in the past, let them adopt the scheme of Dr. de Bertram. I have no right to doubt the honesty of this House who have given him a charter, who have given him two extensions of it. But why wait all this time? If the Government are satisfied that the scheme is feasible, and Dr. de Bertram can give the security required, and I am pretty sure he can, that the terms of Confederation between the island and Canada can thus be carried out, and that this is the only way it can be carried out, why should not the Government go to work and adopt the scheme at once and sign the agreement, or at once openly declare that they will throw off the scheme and do nothing. The adoption of the present course is simply humbugging the people. Of course I know that the West Point route is in my county, and it may be supposed that I would select it. But I favour action by the Government in the direction of spending $1,000 or $2,000 on surveys, so as to secure the best crossing, and if there is a better one than the present one used, then it should be selected and a steamer placed upon it. The writer winds up as follows :

It will reflect great credit on the Government if, after connecting British Columbia with the eastern provinces by the Canadian Pacific Railway, it will now be able to complete a steam railway communication by an extension to the island.

There could be nothing more reasonable than that—in fact, it is quite a reasonable proposition. We in Prince Edward Island are not in Confederation to-day, we are excluded from it. I live on the island, and I should be in a position to leave home to come to Ottawa and be able to fix the exact date on which I would arrive here. If I had been on the steamer that was in the ice ten days and which was obliged to land her passengers and mails on the ice at Nova Scotia, how could I have arrived here at any appointed day? If my property and reputation were dependent on my personal appearance in court here, how could I be certain that I could be present? The Government, however, does not take these matters into consideration. I heard the Minister of Marine and the Postmaster General state that they had given additional powers to the chief marine officer and to the post office inspector at the island to exercise certain discretion. That order is quite proper, and I must give those Ministers credit for having taken a step in the right direction, and I suppose they will continue it. When steamers fail to cross from Georgetown to Pictou, the mails must come to Cape Traverse, and those to Pictou must come to Cape Tormentine. The officials may telegraph that such a course is necessary, but the Minister may not be in Ottawa at the time, and if an election is pending he may be electioneering; and in this way no official may be authorized to send an order. I contend there is too much red tape in the department. The officers on the island should have certain discretionary powers, because when the steamer is caught in the ice and the wind is north, or north-east by north, old residents can tell how long she is likely to remain in the ice before a change takes place. In such an event the mail should be carried by ice-boats, and unless there is an extraordinary storm this service can be regularly carried on. But we on the island want something more than ice-boats. We are living in an age of progress and we want better communication. If the hon. Speaker of this House desires to visit Ottawa during the recess he can board a train at Pembroke and come down here very comfortably. If I want to come here during the parliamentary session I am liable to be placed on an ice-boat the same as a carcass. No wonder Sir Charles Tupper did not like the communication, and as I have crossed a dozen times I know something about it. I repeat that the people of Prince Edward Island are not in Confederation, that it is impossible for us to attend to our duties in different parts of the Dominion during the winter for lack of proper communication with the mainland. I trust the Government has decided to do something definite with regard to this matter, that they will awaken some morning before the elections and adopt some proper steps, because there is no doubt from the information already obtained that there are preferable routes to the route already followed, and having satisfied themselves that those routes are preferable they should adopt one of them. It is very well to proceed with the tunnel scheme. I am not going to express an opinion as to whether I believe in the tunnel or not—I may do it privately—but I do not know what is going to take place before next election. It happens, however, that the tunnel is outside of my riding. But whether the Government go into the tunnel scheme or not, they know perfectly well that it will take ten or fifteen years to carry it out. Are we going to suffer all that time for want of accommodation? When a tug boat under the command of Captain Strang was necessary to be called into requisition for the Government use, why should not that boat be added to the other vessels for the purpose of carrying on, without interruption, service during the winter? I believe Summerside would be a very good place from which to cross, if the Government had built the piers asked for from time to time. It is quite reasonable, moreover, that those piers should be built. I saw an estimate here for $72,000 for their construction, but I have an estimate from a very competent engineer for $50,000 or less. That cannot be contended to be an excessive expenditure for improving Summerside harbour. It must be remembered that this is not going to bring water to my mill-dam; I have no mill-dam there, nor has anybody else. It is merely going to give the public the accommodation they require for shipping their produce. The quantity of produce shipped from the island this spring is surprising, including oats, potatoes, barley, horses, pigs, sheep, mackerel, wool, &c. All this is heavy freight, and large steamers are required to carry the surplus products, and the improved accommodation is required in order to enable steamers to get to the wharfs. Why, Sir, we are not able to get a dredge to dredge a sand-bar that ought to be dredged long ago. I hope and trust that as the Government expect at the next general election—which may be very soon, from the rumours we hear in the air—to run a candidate in East Prince, they will do something in this matter. The Liberals are going to run a candidate there too, and he will be a strong man, and if they want to get their candidate popular, let them get an estimate—a survey is no use, because they made a survey before—and if the estimate does not exceed $50,000, then let them go on with the work, and I can assure them they will get a good many votes. I want no public money spent in my county for my election, because there is no way in which you can spend money unless you can do something at Tignish breakwater and Cascumpeque harbour. The Minister of Public Works spoke very favourably the other night, and he said he would send an engineer to Tignish, but I do not know that that will do any good, unless I can get the assistance of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Blanchard), whose constituents come there in great numbers to fish, and use that harbour as well as other people do. I am sincere when I say that the terms of Confederation have not been carried out with Prince Edward Island. I do not, of course, expect impossibilities, but I expect that they should take some action, and not remain stationary. These papers which I have read to the House have got the best information that can be had on the subject. They are Conservative papers, but from my own knowledge I know what they state is correct, and they should be listened to by the Government. Let the Government send down an engineer and a tug boat in one or two places this winter, and let them see what can be done to relieve the people of the island province from the hardships they are labouring under.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). Mr. Speaker, we have all listened with a great deal of pleasure to the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House, although many of his remarks were certainly not very closely connected with the resolution on the Order paper. I do not intend to follow him in all the matters which he has brought to our notice, but I would like, for a few moments, to call the attention of the House to one or two points which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perry) has raised. In closing his speech, he complained that the terms under which Prince Edward Island was admitted into Confederation have not been carried out, and yet, though I listened to the hon. gentleman through all the length of his speech, I did not discover any one point in which he charged the Government with not at least having made an honest attempt to do everything in their power to carry out these terms, and to give the people of Prince Edward Island the very best possible communication with the mainland. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Perry) spoke of the steamer 'Stanley' as a costly steamer, and one well fitted for the purposes for which she is intended. It is true, as the hon. gentleman said, that during the last winter she was not able to maintain her trips regularly. The hon. gentleman complained that the return which he asked for had not been given to the House. I have no official return of the trips which the 'Stanley' made last winter, but a friend of mine, who kept some memoranda, informs me that there were forty-eight days during the winter when the steamer was not able to make regular crossings; that eighteen of these days she was detained in port, and that for twenty-eight days she was out of port, fast in the ice. As every person knows, the condition of things in the Straits of Northumberland during the winter are exceptional, and the efforts which have been made to solve this important question of the best means of maintaining regular communication with Prince Edward Island have been to a large degree experimental. The first attempt was made by the Government of Hon. A. Mackenzie, and the 'Northern Light' was built expressly for this purpose. That steamer for some years did good service, and the present Government, no doubt as a result of the experiment made with the 'Northern Light,' felt justified in building the steamer 'Stanley,' which is a much more costly steamer, and much better fitted to perform the service. Therefore, in so far as anything has been suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perry), or by any other hon. gentleman who has brought this matter before the House, everything that was possible to be done in this direction has been done by the present Government. The fact, however remains that even with the steamer 'Stanley,' it is impossible to maintain constant communication during the winter. However, the result of our five years' experience with the 'Stanley' has established some important facts. The most important is this one: that the conditions which prevent the 'Stanley' running are those large solid ice-fields which form, extending for miles in every direction, and so thickly packed that it is impossible for any steamer to force her way through them. The hon. gentleman brought up one point in this connection which, to my mind, is worthy of consideration, that is: whether any other points of communication between the island and the mainland could be selected where this state of things should not so frequently occur. The hon. gentleman referred to the communication via the capes, and he read from a newspaper a letter written by Mr. Strang, of Cape Traverse, who maintained that between the capes, during last winter, a steamer like the 'Stanley' could have maintained regular communication. He also quoted from a Summerside paper the statement: that it would have been possible last winter to maintain regular communication between Cape Tormentine and Summerside. I desire to say in corroboration of the views expressed by Mr. Strang: that it is the universal opinion of persons residing in that locality on the New Brunswick side, that a steamer of the 'Stanley's' power could maintain almost unbroken communication between these points during the winter season. The reasons are these: the straits at that point are very narrow, being only eight miles wide. There is always a current running, so that solid ice packs very seldom form, and if they do form, they do not remain longer than one or two days at the most. There is another reason why the ice does not lodge at this particular point: it is the point where, as the people of the locality express it, the tides meet. The tidal wave that comes into the Gulf of St. Lawrence divides, and enters the Straits of Northumberland at both the east and the west end of Prince Edward Island; and the two tides thus formed meet twice every twenty-four hours between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine. It is a fact that no one disputes that twice in every twenty-four hours in ordinary weather the ice is broken up, and you can see streaks of clear water extending almost all the way across the straits between these two points. Now, if I am correctly informed, the steamer 'Stanley' is a boat of such power that where ice is in motion, or where there is any clear water, she can always force her way through and make the passage. The only things that obstructs her course are the solid ice packs extending for many miles, through which it is impossible for any steamer to force its way; and I think that the suggestion which the hon. gentleman made on this point is worthy of the very serious consideration of the Government. Of course, it would be to some extent an experiment to place a steamer there and to try what she could do, but I believe, from the evidence which we have regarding the condition of things at that point, that the Government would be justified in making this experiment. I should say that in addition to the evidence of people living at these points, there is other evidence pointing in the same direction. I have met with several persons—persons of experience, who have had opportunities for observation, and whose judgment on such subjects is, in my opinion, worthy of a great deal of consideration—who have expressed very positively the opinion that a proper steamer would maintain regular communication between these points; and I might add that one of the engineers of the Public Works Department, who during two or three winters resided at Cape Tormentine while in charge of the construction of the wharf there, and who had an opportunity of making close observations of the straits at that point, has repeatedly expressed his strong conviction to me of the possibility of the 'Stanley' maintaining regular communication there during the entire winter season. With these facts before us, with this knowledge of what the 'Stanley' can do—knowledge which has been acquired only within the last few years, and facts which are undisputed as regards the condition of the ice at those points—I think the Government would be justified in making the experiment either with the 'Stanley' or with some other steamer of equal power, to ascertain whether better communication could not be maintained than we have at present. I wish to refer only to one other point, which, although not properly embraced in the resolution, I shall probably be excused for referring to, because I have at all events the example of the hon. gentleman who spoke before me to justify me in doing so. I wish to say one word with regard to the summer service. The hon. gentleman has referred to the proposed tunnel, and I was glad to hear that he supported the Government in what they were doing in regard to this important public work. He intimated, I think, that the Government were not to be commended for taking any action with regard to this work before an election; and I felt inclined to infer from the manner in which he expressed himself on this point that he desired that any further work connected with the tunnel should be deferred until after the next general election. I am sorry if that is the hon. gentleman's opinion, because I would like to see the attempts which the Government are making to ascertain the feasibility and practicability of this scheme pushed forward as rapidly as possible; and I would regret if they yielded to the hon. gentleman's intimation and deferred any further action until after another election. However, whatever may be the result of the tests which are now being made to ascertain the feasibility of this work, it is no doubt true that many years must elapse before this work can be completed and open for traffic. It will require the present season at all events to complete the borings now being carried on. It will then require some time to prepare plans and to consult engineers; because in such an important work, no doubt a great deal of care must be taken in preparing the plans and letting the contracts. Then, according to the report of Sir Douglas Fox, which the hon. gentleman referred to, some six years will be required after the plant is on the ground and the work is commenced, before it can be completed. We may reasonably infer, therefore, that at least ten years must elapse before this tunnel could be completed and ready for traffic; and, from my experience with such works, unforeseen difficulties are apt to arise, and we are more liable to underestimate the time really required than to allow too much time. Now, the Government have for some years past been making expenditures with a view to establishing a summer ferry at these points, and in that way giving the people of Prince Edward Island a mail twice daily instead of once, as is the case at the present time, and also enabling passengers to make connection with the trains on the Intercolonial Railway without being obliged to remain over at Painsec Junction or St. John or Moncton or any other point for a number of hours. A wharf on the Cape Tormentine side has been constructed, having been finished last year. A wharf has also been built at Cape Traverse; but, unfortunately, this wharf is useless at the present time, for the reason that sand has been deposited around it so that it is not accessible even for a steamer of light draught. If this condition of things had not existed, a steamer would have been plying there this season. I know that a company came to Ottawa early in the session purposely to make an offer to the Government to put a steamer on that route and to run her twice daily in summer, giving a mail service twice each day instead of once as at present, and they are willing to undertake that for a comparatively small subsidy. However, when they came here they learned that there was some difficulty with regard to the wharf at Cape Traverse, and they stipulated in their offer that the Government should guarantee sufficient water for the steamer at that wharf. This, of course, the Government could not do, and so the representative of the company was obliged to return without making any contract. The point to which I wish to draw the attention of the House is this, that in view of the fact that some ten or fifteen years may lapse before this tunnel is completed and open for traffic, they should take steps in the meantime to give the people of Prince Edward Island communication by summer ferry at these points. Ten or twelve years is a considerable length of time to wait, but it appears to me that by improving the wharf, which the Government have already built or by building a wharf at some other point, they might in the meantime give the island, so far as mails and passengers are concerned, a very much improved service from what they have at present. I trust that the Government will give their attention to these two points, and I hope that in these matters I will receive the support of hon. gentlemen opposite who represent Prince Edward Island.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has expressed his very strong belief in the feasibility of a tunnel between the island and the mainland, and he only postpones its accomplishment for some ten or twelve years. I shall not enter into any discussion of that subject with the hon. gentleman. I think that two or three things are pretty well established. One is that a tunnel, to be of any service at all to the people, must be of a size that would require the expenditure of $15,000,000 or $20,000,000, at least. I do not think that any practical sensible men, outside of a few who seem to be tunnel mad, are prepared to advise the Government to go into the construction of the small toy tunnel, which several gentlemen contend could be successfully constructed at a cost of one-half the sum I have mentioned, but which, when constructed, would be of very little service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are you opposed to the tunnel scheme?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not, I have not expressed any opinion. My views, which I expressed at some length some years ago, are on record; and if the hon. gentleman is in favour of the tunnel scheme, I should imagine, inasmuch as it was promised to the people before the last election, in very emphatic language, by the then High Commissioner (Sir Charles Tupper) and the then Premier (Sir John Macdonald), immediate steps would have been taken to facilitate the construction of the work before now.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman omitted to name the name of one promissor.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not aware that I have.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The leader of the Opposition sent the strongest telegram.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think so. He sent a very reasonable telegram.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Very satisfactory too.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) His telegram stated that if this was a feasible work to do—we could not form any opinion at the time—he, for one, would be prepared to give it every consideration. I am pretty well acquainted with the promises made, and I do not think there were any restrictions in that made by the hon. gentleman's father in the telegram he sent. It was made unreservedly and without conditions.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's recollection is very poor.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He expressed himself as satisfied the thing was feasible. That part of the question was settled for him, and he called upon the people to send him supporters in order to carry it out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman himself, if I understand him, says it is feasible.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not say it is.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And yet you are in favour of the tunnel.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not a scientist; I do not know whether it is feasible or not. The hon. gentleman is making certain tests to enable him to form an opinion. Does he desire me to form an opinion for him before these tests are completed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to know your position, and it is difficult to find it out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My position is this, that the Government are playing with and have been playing with this question for years, and are seeking to make political capital out of it by spending a few thousand dollars a year. The Government have no intention of constructing the tunnel, as they have shown by their acts. They sent a gentleman home a few years ago to confer with Sir James Douglas Fox, and got part of a report from him. They then entered into a contract with a young civil engineer, Mr. Parmer, but the present Lieutenant-Governor of the island, occupying a position then with regard to the work which no one could satisfactorily define, controlled the actions of Mr. C. Parmer, and the result was a fiasco. The money for the work had to go through the hands of this political agent, and the whole thing became a screaming farce. Now the Government are going on with the work which Mr. Parmer undertook to do, and which he was prevented from doing, as he alleged, by the conduct of those who pretended to act on behalf of the Government. And I suppose, as the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) says the people of the island—if everything is favourable, if the borings turn out to be successful, if no obstructions are found in the way, and the work gone into—may hope, some ten or twelve years hence, to have a tunnel there. I have never held out unreasonable hopes to the people, and will not express an opinion until the hon. gentleman brings down the results of the borings and a plan approved by his engineers. The hon. gentleman for Westmoreland calls upon the Government to construct a harbour on the Prince Edward Island side, in order that there may be better means of communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland in summer. The hon. gentleman knows well that we have already constructed a harbour in his district, known as the Cape Traverse wharf, and that it has not been a success. On the contrary, I think I am correct in saying that although a great deal of money was spent, the work has been found to be undermined largely by the worm, and a large sum will have to be spent to rebuild it in the near future. But the hon. gentleman talks to the House as if there were a harbour easy of construction on the island side. He talks about a wharf which was built there some years ago. But there is no water at the end of that wharf, to speak of. No boat could float there. It will take, in the opinion of those who know best, $100,000 or more to construct anything like a harbour on the island side, which would enable a steamer to make permanent crossings there.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE GRAND JURY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 24) to reduce from twelve to seven the number of grand jurors necessary to find a true bill in the province of Ontario.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest an amendment to this clause. The effect of this amendment will be to make the Act apply not only to the province of Ontario, but to any province where the panel of grand jurors shall be not more than thirteen. By fixing the number of grand jurors necessary to find a true bill at seven, you still require a majority of grand jurors if the panel is not more than thirteen. The law as it stands now, of course, provides that not less than twelve grand jurors shall be necessary to find a true bill, and the panel is twenty-four. By this amendment we give an opportunity to the province, if they so desire, by reducing the panel of grand jurors from twenty-four to thirteen, to bring this Act into force in the province. In those provinces in which the panel is not reduced, the Act will not apply. There has been a very strong and widespread feeling in favour of abolishing grand juries altogether. An inquiry was set on foot by the present First Minister in 1890, and the replies to his circular show that in the province of Ontario twenty-five judges were in favour of abolishing grand juries, eighteen were against it, and six were doubtful. This Bill, of course, does not propose at all to abolish the grand jury system. The expense for a panel of twenty-four jurors is, of course, about double what the expense of a panel of thirteen would be, and there is a much stronger feeling, I believe, in favour of making that reduction than there is in favour of abolishing the grand jury altogether. The cost of the grand jury to the country, so far as I can gather, is from $1,000 to $1,500 a year for each county, according to the size of the county. That is quite a serious item, and, if, without injury to the administration of justice, it can be reduced by about half, I think it ought to be done. I move that the said Bill be amended so that the first clause may read :

Notwithstanding any law, usage or custom to the contrary, seven grand jurors instead of twelve as heretofore, may find a true bill in any province where the panel of grand jurors shall be not more than thirteen.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that is preferable to the clause as originally drafted, for two reasons. In the first place, it provides that the seven necessary to find a true bill shall be a majority of the panel, and, in the second place, it tends to uniformity by enabling any province that so desires to adopt the system. For my own part I am in favour of abolishing the grand jury system, but thought the way was not quite clear to introduce so radical a change at present. I am disposed to favour the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. EDGAR. I might mention that the province of Ontario a few years ago passed an Act providing for the reduction of the panel of grand jurors to thirteen, but this is not to be brought into force except by a proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor. The province is waiting to see what ground will be taken by the Dominion House.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would like to get the view of the Minister of Justice as to the constitutionality of this Bill, and as to where the line of demarkation is between the power of Provincial Legislatures and the power of this Parliament with reference to the grand jury. For my own part, I am one of those who believe in the grand jury system. I think that no man ought to be put on trial simply because a Crown officer thinks there is a prima facie case against him. There are abuses under that system as there may be under any system, but it is exceedingly important that a man should not be placed on trial as a criminal unless a certain number of his peers—the number having always hitherto been fixed at twelve—say that there is a case made out on behalf of the Crown or the prosecution which, at all events, makes it probable that he is guilty. It seems to me rather academic legislation to pass a law which may or may not become operative.

Mr. EDGAR.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It would be rather difficult to draw the line of jurisdiction. The question as to what is part of the constitution of the tribunal and what belongs to the procedure of the court would be difficult to state off-hand. But I think our procedure on the subject of indictment makes it clear as to the number of grand jurors who must agree, in order to find a true bill. I understand from the mover of the Bill that the intention in providing that the Bill shall only come into force in any province where the panel shall be reduced to thirteen, and moreover that it shall not come into force until a day named by the Government by proclamation, is to secure the united action of both the Federal and Provincial authorities in order to remove any doubt.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 2.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like to get the ideas of the leader of the House and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) as to whether it will be necessary to move the second clause or not. The second clause provides that this Act shall not come into force until a day named by the Governor in his proclamation. That was necessary in the Bill as originally presented to the House, because it positively fixed the number of grand jurors for the province of Ontario at seven. But now, as it has been amended by the committee, the Bill will come into force only in those provinces where the panel of grand jurors has been reduced to thirteen.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think it is better to have the clause in the Bill. Otherwise the two Acts, the Provincial Act and this, would come into force by proclamation of the provincial authority respecting the provincial Act. I think it better to have it determined by the Federal authority when the Federal Bill shall come into force.

On the preamble,

Mr. McCARTHY. Will you change the heading ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Better change that on the third reading.

Mr. EDGAR. I think it would be sufficient if the heading read "An Act to reduce from twelve to seven the number of jurors necessary to find a true Bill."

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) points out that it would be best to make that change on the third reading.

Mr. EDGAR. Yes, I will move it on the third reading.

Bill reported.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 4) to make further provision as to the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—(Mr. Coatsworth.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When the Bill was last before the committee we were on the amendment of the hon. member for South Norfolk. (See page 4096.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This Bill, or one like it, has been before the House for several sessions, and a case was always made out that it was desirable to put down shooting at pigeons rising from traps. The merits of that case have been so fully discussed that I am very sure the members of the House who were here during the last Parliament, must be fully conversant with them. But I want to ask the attention of the committee to the proposal which is made by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). He proposes to take away from the Bill its entire 'raison d'être,' and if it had not been for that feature of the Bill it never would have been read a second time. The case which was made out for the Bill was that the practice of shooting pigeons rising from traps was cruel and unsportsmanlike, and the clause of the Bill which referred to pigeon shooting carefully prohibited that, as amended in the Committee of the Whole, and the hon. member for North Norfolk proposes to put back that very feature of trap shooting which was attacked at every stage of the discussion on the Bill in former years. I sincerely hope that the sense of the committee to-night is in favour of restricting that practice, otherwise I should hope that the House will not sully its dignity by passing the Bill through any other stages, because there would not exist the slightest pretext for it. I think that nothing could be more indicative of the weakness of the case of the hon. member for Norfolk than his excellent speech on another subject when he moved his amendment. The speech referred to the dignity, and the splendid training, and the vigour which are given to youths by indulging in the sports of the forest, the mountain and the swamp; he described how much better training it was for the youth to indulge in field sports of that kind than to indulge in more moody recreations which might give rise to baser habits. In describing the hardy amusement of pursuing animals of the forest, the field and the mountain side, he described the treasure of strength, vigour, activity, and enterprise which enabled the British people to sustain their conflicts on land and sea. That was very poetic, and the only objection I had to it was that while enjoying the rhetoric of the hon. gentleman, we were led entirely from the subject of the Bill, which proposes to legalize, according to the amendment of the hon. member for Norfolk, not the hardy sports of the mountain side and of the field, in which the young men of the country indulge, but the low pot-house trap shooting.

Therefore, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's rhetoric, remembering that his amendment has in view the legalizing of a miserable pastime which is very much in contrast with the sports which he eulogized, I hope the committee will come to the conclusion not to pass his amendment, but to keep the Bill as it is.

Mr. McCARTHY. I had not the advantage of listening to the speech of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) to which the right hon. gentleman has just referred. It is quite evident that it was a strong appeal, although the right hon. gentleman thinks it was misdirected. But in the absence of that hon. gentleman, I think it would be better that the committee should rise and report progress. There are important measures behind this one which we could discuss with a great deal more satisfaction, and in the absence of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) it would be well that the committee should rise, and I therefore move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman is endeavouring to shoot me out of a trap.

Motion (Mr. McCarthy) negatived: Ayes, 21; nays, 31.

Mr. McNEILL. I was rather surprised by the statement made by the leader of the Government, when he told the committee that pigeon shooting alone is practically the subject aimed at in this Bill. Why, we have thirteen or fourteen clauses and subsections of the Bill, and we have been discussing these clauses from hour to hour after the pigeon shooting clause has been disposed of. I had no idea we were talking about something so very unprofitable as would appear. But I must say that I cannot at all accept the statement which the leader of the Government has made, that when the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) was discussing the broad question of field sports he was discussing something that was foreign to this Bill. An hon. gentleman says he was not very far afield. I think he was not very far afield, he was travelling very closely on the lines of this Bill, because if there be one thing certain more than another with respect to it, it is this: that the principle laid down here, and the only principle by which hon. members can support the clause of the Bill which would prevent the shooting of pigeons flying from traps, is a principle which would extend to all field sports. That may be perhaps on the face of it a strong statement for me to make, but I come here fortified by some authorities in support of it. I ventured to make such a statement when a similar Bill was before the House some years ago. I said the question which lay at the root of the matter and with which we were face to face was the morality of field sports. It is impossible to condemn a man on the ground of cruelty for shooting a pigeon flying out of a trap, and say that the same man is not guilty of cruelty who shoots a pigeon flying from a tree. Let us assume that the distinction attempted to be drawn between a domestic pigeon and a wild pigeon is well founded, and let us deal with the question of the tame pigeon first. Surely no one will maintain that a man who owns a number of pigeons greater than he requires and desires to use those pigeons as barn-yard fowls are used, and chooses to shoot one pigeon or half a dozen pigeons as the most convenient way of getting rid of them, is guilty of greater cruelty than another man who hands over a similar number of pigeons to have their necks twisted. There is no medical man who will say that the suffering endured by the pigeon shot is greater or as great as the suffering endured by the pigeon which has its neck twisted. Where is the logic, or justice, or fair-play of the argument that a man who shoots one of those pigeons sitting on the roof of his own barn has to go scot free, while another man who shoots a pigeon flying from a trap is to be prosecuted, fined or imprisoned. I do not think the proposition is arguable. It is quite true, no doubt, that most hon. members present would find very little sport in shooting pigeons flying out of traps. That is another question; as to whether a man should find sport in that or not, is not the question before this committee. The question before the committee is, whether it is fair, right, and just to punish a man, to impose such penalties as are in this Bill provided, on a man who chooses to kill a pigeon flying from a trap, and at the same time declare that another man who chooses to shoot a pigeon sitting on a barn is perfectly at liberty to do so. If any one will show me any just ground for declaring that one is a cruel act for which the offender should be punished, and that the other is an act perfectly proper and moral withal, I shall be very glad to hear the argument, for I have never heard any such argument hitherto, and I do not think it is possible to adduce such an argument. So much with regard to tame pigeons and domestic animals, so far as this Bill is concerned. Further than that, more especially with regard to this particular class of creature, the pigeon, it is altogether an artificial barrier to put up that regarding one animal as being a domestic one and the other a wild one. Every one knows that pigeons are very little more domesticated than are house sparrows. You find the house sparrows about the house, building in the eaves, and not any more afraid of you than are pigeons when kept in large numbers, and in fact the pigeon is generally the wilder bird of the two. Where is the reason for saying that a man should be punished who shoots one of those pigeons out of a trap, a pigeon that is almost a wild bird, and that another man should not be punished who shoots a so-called wild pigeon on a tree. Why is the cruelty greater in one case than in the other? If you are not to be allowed to shoot a wild pigeon, then it would follow that you are not to be allowed to shoot a partridge, and if you are not allowed to shoot a partridge, how are you to be allowed to shoot a deer or any wild creature? These field sports which are allowed and recognized are exactly on a level with general shooting, whether it be a question of shooting a pigeon on the top of a barn or shooting a pigeon flying out of a trap, or out of a tree. Some of these sports which are to be allowed, so far as the suffering and pain entailed on the animal is concerned, are vastly and almost indescribably more cruel than the shooting of a pigeon is. You take the case of any creature that is hunted to death. Take the case of the fox, take the case of the hare, take the case of the deer, take the case of any animal that is hunted to death; and would any man with a candid mind consider for a moment that the suffering entailed on that animal is not far greater than the suffering entailed on the pigeon which is shot down dead as it flies out of the trap? I contend that the shooting of a pigeon which flies out of a trap is not so cruel as the shooting of a wild pigeon, because in the case of trap shooting wounded birds are always secured and put out of pain, whereas in wild pigeon shooting, a very considerable proportion of the birds escape badly wounded, and they pine and die a miserable death of suffering. This feature is almost altogether eliminated in the case of shooting pigeons which fly out of a trap. I do ask the committee to pause and consider what they are doing. It is quite true as the right hon. Premier has said: that this is a matter which has been before the House for a long time, and it is also perfectly true that a very great deal of sympathy existed in the minds—and I have no doubt does exist—of many of the members of this committee in reference to the pigeon. My hon. friend (Mr. Adam Brown), who used to be a member of this House, and whose kindness of heart induced him to take so warm an interest in this question, and who was so deservedly popular with us all that his very desire to have this measure carried induced a great many of us to support him in reference to it,—he caused a very great amount of sympathy in the minds of many hon. members by dwelling upon this aspect of the question. He used to contend in these discussions: that pigeon shooting was connected with atrocious acts of barbarity and cruelty, he spoke of pigeons being mutilated, of their eyes being put out, of their feathers being plucked from their breast, and of most atrocious cruelties being practiced upon them; and he said that this was a necessary part of pigeon shooting out of traps. I said at the time, and other members said also: that we would entirely approve of a clause which would make criminal such abominable and loathsome practices as these. If a clause of that kind were in-sorted in the Bill, which really took away from pigeon shooting all that is cruel about it as distinguished from other sports, we promised that we would willingly support him. Now, the Bill that we have before us has such a clause as that. The amendment proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) deals with this particular aspect of the question and makes it penal for any person to be guilty of any such atrocity as that. Therefore, when my right hon. friend speaks of the sympathy that we all felt for the views of Mr. Adam Brown, I fear that he loses sight of the fact that this particular element in trap shooting which brought sympathy for Mr. Brown's views—irrespective of his own great personal popularity—is now eliminated from the case altogether, and that we are face to face with the bare and bald proposition: whether supposing there be no other cruelty whatever inflicted but the mere shooting of the pigeon as it flies out of the trap; we will say: that we shall punish a man by fine and imprisonment who ventures to shoot a pigeon out of a trap, while a man who shoots a similar bird sitting on his barn roof, should go scathless. We are face to face with even a larger question than that. We are face to face with the broad question of field sports, and if we decide that it is cruel for a man to shoot a pigeon flying out of a trap, we cannot consistently stop short there. I have here an article on the morality of field sports, by an authority who is frequently quoted in this House, though not often quoted in connection with a question of this kind. I refer to Professor Freeman, the historian. Professor Freeman goes at length into the whole question from an historical point of view, and he holds, in the strongest way, that the cruelty of the fox hunt, and the cruelty of the deer hunt, and the cruelty of field sports generally, is nothing more nor less than the same cruelty that we had in the old days in the arena and in the bull ring, and the bear garden, during the most barbarous ages of the world. I recollect very well that my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)—who will, I suppose, take part in this debate—made a most eloquent speech when this question was before the House on a former occasion, and that hon. gentleman dwelt with an eloquence and a pathos which he so well knows how to employ here or any where else, upon the cruelty of pigeon shooting, from his point of view. But he said he thought that the hunting of the fox was a noble pursuit. I am afraid my friend would differ very much from Professor Freeman, who entirely agrees with him as to the cruelty of pigeon shooting, but who thinks that the hunting of the fox and the hare is a horrible business. Professor Freeman says:

It is as we have seen a legal crime to worry a cat. To worry a hare is a gallant diversion. And men who share Windham's tastes, without Windham's consistency, men who would lift up their hands in horror at the wanton torture of a bull or a bear, deem no praises too high for the heroic sport which consists in the wanton torture of the fox.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the hon. gentleman citing that approvingly?

Mr. McNEILL. I am citing it simply to show that if we are consistent we ought to put an end to all field sports, or endeavour to do so by our legislation here. I say we have just as much right to prevent a man from shooting the partridge as to prevent the other man from shooting the pigeon, and I say we have a far greater right to prevent a man coursing a hare than to prevent a man shooting his pigeon.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is it not cruel to keep a member from his motion?

Mr. McNEILL. I agree with that, and so deeply did I feel the truth of it, that a few moments ago I voted that this committee rise. Prof. Freeman says:

It is held as a point of morality that the life of a fox is sacred except when his death is accompanied with the prescribed amount of wanton fright and suffering. * * * Instead of this, the animal is sought out, sometimes he is brought on purpose to the spot, in order that he may give "sport" by his prolonged sufferings. He is pursued till he is worn out with weariness, and then he is put to death by brutalities equal to anything done in the bear-garden or the amphitheatre. Now if this is anything but wanton and deliberate cruelty, I do not know the meaning of the words. The essence of the "sport" is the needless fright, weariness and suffering of a living creature, a creature which we have doubtless a right to destroy, but not a right to torment. Strip fox-hunting of its disguises, and its principle is, as Windham allowed, exactly the same as the principle of bull-baiting. To be sure the bull is tied to a stake, while the fox is allowed to run for his life and has a chance to escape. This, no doubt, makes the cruelty somewhat less revolting, but it does not make it cease to be cruelty. The spectators at a bull-bait simply sit or stand and look on, while the fox-hunter is an actor, he follows his victim on horseback, and enjoys healthful air and exercise in so doing. This is one of the disguises with which the cruelty is masked, a disguise which, no doubt, leads many to join in a fox-hunt who would not join in a bull-bait, but which is simply a disguise, and which leaves the essential cruelty exactly where it was. A bull-bait can be condemned only on the ground that our amusements ought not to take the forms of inflicting wanton suffering on any creature. And on that principle a fox-hunt must be condemned also. * *

But it is plain that every fox-hunter must for the time stifle the divine virtues of mercy and pity; he must for the time cast aside that grace of 'miserecordia,' that 'ayenbite' of 'inwyt,' which the Roman people itself once felt in the case of Pompeius' elephants. Even if he does not actually take pleasure at the infliction of suffering, he knows that suffering is being inflicted for no object except his amusement, and he does not shrink from the amusement in which such suffering is an element.

That the cruelty is an essential element in the sport, that the presence of a suffering victim is needful for its full enjoyment, is not to be denied. Those who tell us that they hunt for the sake of a healthy exercise could get that healthy exercise just as well by hunting a red herring or by taking a gallop wherever a gallop may be had, without hunting anything at all. But I believe that hunting a red herring is looked upon with contempt by the 'true sportsman.' That is to say the true sportsman is not a true sportsman, he has not the full satisfaction of his sport, unless that he is assured that his pleasure involves the suffering and slaughter of some living being. * * * I say, then, without hesitation that fox-hunting, which ages back may have been a praiseworthy means of ridding the country of a noxious animal, has, in its modern shape, degenerated into a sport of wanton and deliberate cruelty. Strip it of its disguises, and it is that and nothing else. * * *

My objection to shooting, looked at merely in itself, comes pretty much to the objection of Cicero. It has always been a puzzle to me how a refined or educated man can find pleasure in taking on himself the functions of the butcher. Death may in many cases be lawfully inflicted on both man and beast, but should death in either case be made a matter of sport? * * * But what is the sportsman in many forms of 'sport,' but an amateur butcher, a butcher who takes up the trade out of sheer love of slaughter? One can hardly fancy any man going out by preference to kill his own sheep or his own poultry; what conceivable difference does it make if the animals slaughtered be deer or pheasants?

And so on. That is an article which was written by Prof. Freeman in 1869. I need not read you further extracts from it, because of the other cruelty which it has been suggested I might be guilty of. This was followed by another article written in 1870, in which Prof. Freeman says, just as I venture to say, and as I said when this matter was before the House on a former occasion:

My argument was an argument from consistency. It was simply this: Certain amusements are forbidden by law and custom on the ground of their being cases of cruelty to animals. On the same principal certain other amusements should in consistency be forbidden, as being also cases of cruelty to animals.

That is the position taken by Prof. Freeman, and therefore when I make the assertion that this is not a narrow question, but that it is a very broad question, I am supported by some considerable authority. Now, I venture to say that if we take the ground that field sports are immoral, we must go even further than that. We must then consider, and carefully consider the question, from a moral point of view, whether it is lawful to eat animal food at all. It is very questionable whether or not we cannot exist in quite as healthy a condition without eating animal food, and if we are not prepared to accept the proposition of the vegetarians, that a vegetable diet is the most healthful and the best for human beings, we must then go at least this length: we must come to a decision as to exactly what amount of animal food it is right for us to eat—what amount of animal food we can eat without infringing on the laws of morality. Because if we say that we have not a right to shoot an animal for pleasure, we certainly have not a right to eat it for pleasure. Whatever impropriety there may be in shooting the animal, there is a great deal more impropriety of battenning upon the corpse of the animal. It is a very much lower kind of pleasure, a very much more degrading kind of pleasure, than the hunting and pursuing of the animal in field sports can be. I do not intend to unduly take up the time of this committee. I have merely sought to put this point shortly before it. I simply want to ask the members of this committee if they can consistently and honestly say that the man who shoots a pigeon flying out of a trap ought to be treated as an inhuman monster, fit only for fine and imprisonment, while another man is to be considered as perfectly humane and not at all blameworthy who shoots one of his own pigeons that he himself has perhaps been feeding, from the roof of his barn. I will leave the question to the committee. If the committee decide that we are to inflict punishment upon the man who shoots a pigeon flying out of a trap, and not upon the man who shoots a pigeon sitting on top of his own barn, and trustfully looking down at him—if the committee decide that the one is a crime and the other is not, all I can say is that I do not think they will arrive at a very consistent conclusion.

Mr. FRASER. I did not mean to take part in this debate, but cannot refrain from noticing the elaborate argument of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. To answer him at length would require more time than this House would be willing to give me, as I would have to enter largely into the discussion of the Mosaic dispensation, including meat offerings, sacrifice and burnt offerings, which I do not think come under this Bill, but there is one thing which I think the hon. gentleman has compounded. I think it is agreed that birds and animals of all kinds were put under the power of man for two purposes: First, for food; and secondly, to be destroyed if they interfere with his comfort or in any way make it less easy for him to live. Shooting a pigeon on a barn does not seem to me to be different from shooting it anywhere else, if it is shot for the purpose of being got rid of. If the pigeon is a nuisance, we have a right to shoot it on a barn or on a tree or in a box. What I understand this Bill to be aimed against is putting a pigeon in a box and keeping it there to be shot at, because the parties who put it in the box are not good enough marksmen to shoot it on a barn or on a tree. He is a miserable character who cannot shoot a pigeon on a barn or a tree, and should have no sympathy from this Parliament at all.

In that view, I will support the Bill. As to the moral question, which seems to affect the hon. gentleman somewhat, I will not discuss that. There are those who think that pigeons, as well as other animals, have immortal souls, and we might be entering on dangerous grounds. I consider pigeons as birds to be shot at like any others, either for food or because they interfere with man's comfort, and I have never seen anything like what is aimed at in this Bill. I have seen, on one occasion, when I was a boy, some boys cruelly taking birds and tying a string round their legs and then letting them off in order that they might be shot in this same way. But that was only done once. There was no necessity for a law to stop it, as the better sense of the community was sufficient. I understand that it is in Ontario where the practice of shooting from a trap prevails. It does not with us, but all manner of evil exists in that province. They do not understand noble sport as we do. We go to the forests to indulge in sport. Let us eliminate the lengthy argument of the hon. gentleman, either on moral or religious grounds, for I do not think it was called for. When a pigeon is shot, after having been kept for the purpose of being shot at, in order that the shooter might have a better chance to kill, I am in favour of that sort of thing being stopped.

Mr. HASLAM. I understand that those particularly interested in the passage of this Bill are a large and influential body of good-hearted ladies. That their object is very laudable I have not the slightest doubt, but I think there are other ways in which they might equally well display their good nature, and in which probably they could strike a blow just as effectively a little nearer home. There are very few ladies—perhaps not one of those who have had a hand in promoting this Bill—who would scruple to wear one or more birds of some description by way of ornament in their hats or on some portion of their dress. I would like to know whether they have ever thought of the torture to which these birds were subjected in order that they might thus serve as ornaments. Consistency is a jewel. I question very much whether there is more pain inflicted on birds shot at out of a trap than when shot in any other way. In fact, I do not know of any more expeditious way of putting an end to their existence, unless, perhaps, you first catch them and put their head under an axe. And in that case there is the mental terror they must experience, because it cannot be denied that all animals are subject to mental terror. These pigeons are let loose out of a trap and then shot, and if wounded they are picked up and put out of pain immediately. Whereas, take the ordinary sport; supposing a bird is shot at on a tree and is only wounded, if the sportsman can reach it and it is worth his while, he will do so; but he will not go out of his way to hunt for it, if there is better sport near by, and the wretched creature is allowed to drag out a miserable existence in its wounded condition. We might also enlarge on the cruelty of trapping fur-bearing animals, although there is this to be said in that connection, that their skins are not used merely for ornament, but likewise for warmth. But if ladies can calmly survey the mortal remains of a poor little bird on a bonnet or hat, and survey it pleasantly by the hour before a mirror, they should not object very much to allowing the male creature the little sport attending the shooting of birds out of a trap. Now, it has been said that it is no harm to shoot birds for food or to shoot them to get rid of them if they become too numerous. I do not suppose there is any gentleman simple enough to think that birds that are shot out of a trap are thrown away as useless. I have a very strong idea that they are used, and used for food, and if birds become too numerous in any district, the catching of them to be used for these tests of marksmanship is a very good way to get rid of them. So the shooting of them from traps meets the two points of providing food and reducing an undesirable number of birds. The Bill might seem more consistent if there were greater consistency on the part of those who promote it. But the ladies who are the strongest advocates of this Bill, are those for whose pleasure of adornment so many beautiful birds are slaughtered. And the more beautiful the plumage of the bird the more eagerly is it sought for.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). And trapped.

Mr. HASLAM. Yes, the birds also are trapped. I must say that I do not favour the Bill at all.

Mr. AMYOT. I did not catch exactly the idea of the mover of the amendment.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The idea is that trap shooting shall be allowed, but that no cruelty such as has been complained of shall be practiced at the shooting.

Mr. AMYOT. What cruelty?

Mr. COATSWORTH. The cruelties that have been complained of are the exciting of the birds by causing them pain before they are set free from the trap by pulling out feathers and so on, and allowing the birds to escape after they are wounded, to die a lingering death.

Mr. AMYOT. Is that more cruel than the killing of any other animal? If the hon. mover has any authority to prove that the soul of these pigeons is larger than the soul of other animals, or that they should be more highly privileged—

Mr. COATSWORTH. There is nothing in the Ontario reports on that point.

Mr. AMYOT. It seems to me that all the animals are alike in this respect. I do not know what privilege these pigeons should have.

Mr. DAVIN. Privilege of clergy.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman is taking the clergy for animals. I do not know what clergy he has been living with. I am afraid we are going into metaphysical questions when we attempt to judge as between the sufferings of different animals. I have read in larger books than that the hon. gentleman has quoted that animals have no souls at all. I do not say that proof of this theory is conclusive, but at least no animal ever came to tell us the contrary. If we say that it is cruel to make the pigeon suffer, why not say the same about fish? You take a salmon that has been nobly resisting your efforts, and that it has taken you two hours to pull out of the water. You leave him wounded and bleeding on the rocks to die. If you punish the pigeon shooter for cruelty, why not punish the fisherman? An eel after it is caught will suffer from twenty to twenty-four hours before it dies. Why not include these also under the protection of the Bill?

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman might move an amendment to that effect.

Mr. AMYOT. It seems to me all the other animals will grow jealous at the tenderness you have shown for the pigeons.

Mr. LAURIER. They have no souls.

Mr. AMYOT. Some pretend that animals have souls, some that they have not. Who here has authority to settle that question? Take even the microbes, millions of which we are told might find a place on the point of a needle. If these have souls—

Mr. FERGUSON. They must be Grits.

Mr. AMYOT. The extent of their bodies does not necessarily limit the size of their souls. The hon. mover of the Bill (Mr. Coatsworth) is not half the size of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). Are we to say that his soul is not half so big as that of the hon. member for Guysborough? Will it be pretended that when we give him a blow he suffers less than the member for Guysborough? Will it be pretended that if you cut off the arm of the hon. member for Toronto, he would suffer less than the hon. member for Guysborough would suffer if his arm were cut off? Therefore, we cannot judge of the amount of suffering from the size of the body. Then you afford protection to pigeons, but you desert all the rest of the animal creation. Why? There must be some reason. Is it because the hon. gentleman himself is not a sharpshooter, and that he does not like to see other parties enjoy sharpshooting in order to prepare themselves for the possible emergency of shooting men in defence of their country? God has given us the whole animal creation for our use. We should never exercise unnecessary cruelty towards them. When the mother is educating her young child, and he lifts up a cat by the tail from the floor, she rebukes him, and tells him that he must not make that poor little creature suffer. But will you pass a law to prevent a child from pinching a cat, or lifting it up by the tail? There is no reason for giving an undue preference to pigeons. Now, you propose to prevent us from killing rabbits. When the hon. gentleman wants to eat a meal of rabbits, does he inquire whether they were killed at the first blow, or whether they were left on the snow while the hunter went in pursuit of other rabbits? I never supposed that in coming to Ottawa we would be asked to take charge of matters of this kind. When a man has a bad heart, he will be cruel, not only to animals, but to his wife and children. He will take his wife for an animal, then. But we cannot correct human hearts by legislation. At all events, I say that if we admit the principle that we must protect living animals, there must be no undue preference. We must pass a general law that will prohibit all cruelty to living animals, whatever animal it may be, be it a flea, be it any of those animals which I will not name, be it a microbe, be it a spider, be it even lobsters, which I am told are boiled alive. That is another extraordinary cruelty. We must protect them all. I thought I saw the hon. gentleman eating a lobster the other day, but his tender heart was not moved by the idea that that poor animal—which perhaps has a soul also—had been boiled alive. Did he think that perhaps that animal was first put into cold water, and that the water was heated gradually to a boiling point so as to prolong the suffering? I said at the start that we were not quite sure that animals had a soul, but if they have a soul, we cannot measure the extent of their soul by the size of their bodies, and if they have a soul we cannot measure the extent of their suffering by the constitution of their soul. I think we are getting into regions quite unknown, not clearly defined as yet, unless this enlightened century should furnish us the means of exploring their body by electricity in order that we may get a glimpse of their soul. For the present, I say that animals are given to man for his use. We may prohibit cruelty to any living animal, but there must be no undue privileges for pigeons, they must stand on the same footing as the other creatures of God. If you legislate to prevent cruelty to animals, you must make no undue distinction, because the wild beast might take revenge on you when they meet you for not including them in your protective laws.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it must be evident to the committee that there is no necessity for this legislation. The Prime Minister has stated that this Bill has been brought up from time to time during the past few years, but we find that the more it is discussed the more its ridiculousness appears, and even the promoters of such legislation are disposed to modify their demands. It is difficult to understand the Bill as it stands now, with the amendments that have been made to it, and others that are proposed to be made. Some clauses of the Bill are so thoroughly ridiculous, and against right and justice, that the committee, I think, can hardly support them. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is in the right direction, and if it is added to the Bill, the legislation may not be so very improper. Doubtless we are all agreed that the parties who are advocating this legislation are honest and sincere in their desire to prevent cruelty to animals; but I think we must agree with the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) when he says that it is quite sufficient for practical purposes to pass a general Bill punishing people for cruelty to animals. But when you come to distinguish between animals, and between certain acts, as some clauses of this Bill do distinguish, it is evident that the people who are promoting this legislation do not understand what the effect of it will be. Nor can I agree with the leader of the House that shooting pigeons from traps is a miserable pastime. Surely the hon. gentleman has not had any experience in this and other field sports, or he would not have given expression to the views he did to-night. I am satisfied that there is no necessity for this legislation. It appears to me that many people who are desirous of preventing cruelty to birds and animals of all sorts, and who are asking for legislation of this kind, do not understand the subject they propose to deal with. In many instances I think they are moved by a false sentimentality. Their motives are proper enough, but they lack experience. This Bill has provisions in it that no hon. gentleman who knows anything at all of the treatment of animals, and of what the alleged cruelty consists of, would think of supporting. I am satisfied that sportsmen, and men who themselves own horses and cattle, are the very last to treat their animals with wanton cruelty; on the contrary, I believe they are the very people who would do everything they could to prevent cruelty to animals. Now, in this Bill you are interfering with the shipping of cattle, but who is to be the judge of whether an act is cruel or not? In killing animals and birds for the market, I suppose it is necessary to exercise some cruelty in the different ways that butchers follow in killing animals. It may appear to some people that certain acts are cruel in regard to treatment of horses or other animals. But these people want to put themselves up as judges of every person who may be handling or dealing in cattle or horses or any other kind of animal. I am satisfied that this legislation should be left to the Provincial Legislatures and municipal authorities. I am satisfied that every hon. member is aware that at the present time, especially in Ontario, and during the discussions before this committee, we have had similar statements as regards the other provinces than even the present provincial laws and municipal regulations are quite sufficient to prevent any cruelty that can be prevented by the law or by the officers of the law. It is very unfortunate that this House should be troubled from year to year by such petty and unnecessary legislation as that now proposed. I am satisfied that it is against common sense, that it is not for the good of the community, and that it is legislation simply proposed by a few people who may be perfectly honest and sincere in their convictions, but at the same time such legislation is not in the general interests of the community, and it is very undesirable that such legislation should be attempted to be passed through this House. There is no necessity for it, and I am satisfied that it could not be enforced. I trust the members of the committee will look into the Bill, as I am satisfied many hon. members have not read its provisions, and that the Bill will be thrown out, and if they are not disposed to do that, at all events they will support the amendments that have been moved. The large number of people interested in sports, while there may be, as has been pointed out, odd cases of cruelty or abuse, which cannot be prevented in any event by the officers of the law, are not cruel, and the legislation proposed will in every way prove a hardship, and sportsmen who even indulge in trap shooting which, in my mind, is quite an innocent and manly sport, have never been guilty, except in exceptional cases of inhuman brutes being mixed up with those following that sport, of gross cruelty so as to lead this committee to support the proposed legislation. Moreover, the legislation proposed would not affect such people, and in effect it would prove perfectly inapplicable. It is to be hoped the committee will not pass any such legislation as it is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I do not like to allow the remarks made by the hon. gentleman to pass without being answered, because the hon. gentleman entirely misapprehends the position in which legislation stands at the present time. It may be perhaps in the hon. gentleman's opinion a childish act to frame legislation of this kind, but it has not been thought childish for Great Britain to legislate in the same direction. The same legislation as prevails in Great Britain is now before the committee, and not only does such a law prevail in Great Britain but also in nearly all the states of the adjacent Union. I have before me the law of the State of New York, which is part of the penal code, and the provisions are almost similar to those in the present Bill. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) has said it is inconceivable that any person should be guilty of cruelty to animals and that it should not be necessary to pass legislation in order to prevent cruelty. I suppose the hon. gentleman was not present the other night when I read some cases of cruelty in regard to the shipments of animals. I may say to the hon. gentleman and another hon. gentleman who has addressed the committee that the Bill is not framed from a sectional standpoint. We have societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals existing in every part of the Dominion, and these amendments to the present law are asked because the law as it exists at present is not found entirely sufficient to meet the cases which arise. We have legislated on this subject already. Hon. gentlemen opposite did not take exception to the clauses of the criminal code dealing with somewhat similar cases, and the only difficulty arising at present is that the existing law does not go far enough to reach the cases which continually arise. I will mention one or two cases which happened in Toronto and the neighbourhood. A shipper sent down sixty sheep and forty hogs to Western Cattle Market, Toronto; twenty-three of the lambs and two of the hogs were found trampled to death. In a shipment of cattle to the same cattle market, two cattle were found with their legs broken. On January 25th, 1893, nineteen cattle, twelve hogs, and nine lambs were shipped in a Grand Trunk Railway car. Two of the lambs were trampled to death by the breaking down of the partition. It was held that no person was responsible for this cruelty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Surely the hon. gentleman does not wish the committee to believe that any man dealing in cattle or sheep would wilfully be guilty of cruelty to them, so as to allow half of them to be injured. If a man has paid hard cash for cattle or sheep he is not going to allow them to break their legs during transit. If he can avoid it. The very proposition submitted by the hon. gentleman shows that there is no necessity for such legislation as he proposes. I am satisfied that shippers will take special care to send forward their cattle in good condition in order that they may obtain the largest possible price, and further, every shipper will endeavour to give his cattle the best treatment in order that they may reach the market in the best possible condition and realize the highest price.

Mr. IVES. I think our several local Legislatures and the House of Commons are making too many laws. We are interfering unduly with the liberties of the people, by creating new offences, and by creating novel and unnecessary restrictions. On looking over this Bill, I conceive that if we are to adopt it as it is printed, we will furnish a ground for persecution and for annoyance to any man by his neighbour.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is struck out.

Mr. COATSWORTH.

Mr. IVES. If you want to remove the objections, you will have to strike out several of the clauses. Take the first section, which says that a man shall not wantonly, cruelly, or unnecessarily beat his animals. I should like to know who is the best judge. A farmer may be driving a yoke of oxen, and if the animals misbehave and are only imperfectly broken, every man who is acquainted with such animals is aware that he must treat them kindly, but at the same time firmly, the owner may beat them to some extent. Yet a magistrate under a prosecution in connection with the Bill might hold that the animals had been beaten unnecessarily. No man, as the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) has said, who has invested $100 or $150 in a yoke of oxen, unless he is an ill-tempered man, will unduly beat or maltreat his oxen. But if he does do it, we have already a general law on the subject of cruelty to animals, which provides means to punish him if he so far loses his temper as to become a greater brute than the brute he beats. We will suppose, this law has passed and that in a quiet neighbourhood where there has been no trouble for some years an officer of some humane society plants himself. He likes the office; it is natural for people to like having official positions, and this official commences to carry out his duties and to follow the instructions that he gets from the parent society. Then the result is a dozen prosecutions, the whole neighbourhood by the ears, litigation, loss of money through costs, and the general break-up of the peace and quiet of the neighbourhood. The next clause reads:

While driving any cattle or other animal is, by negligence or illusage in the driving thereof, the means whereby any mischief, damage or injury is done by any such cattle or any other animal.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is in the Criminal Code now.

Mr. IVES. I do not care if it is in forty criminal codes. What do you want it in here again for if it is now in the Criminal Code? Is it not vexatious enough and interfering enough already, or do you want to make it more so? Under that provision of the law, if a man were driving his cows into the pasture and one of them jumped over a fence and got impaled, you could prosecute that man because he did not call in his neighbours or procure sufficient help to drive his cattle along the straight road into the lot. You must be reasonable in those things; you must have some practical knowledge before you adopt such legislation, and you must consider what facilities such a law gives to a man's neighbour to prosecute him and to annoy him and to subject him to costs. Take every one of these sections and in nearly all there is some objectionable feature. The provisions that you are making here for the carrying of cattle is perfectly nonsensical. You say that a man cannot carry a small animal, such as a pig or a sheep in the same car as a horse or an ox without a partition being put in the car. Now that is perfectly absurd. A farmer may be sending a mixed carload of his stock from his farm to the Montreal market, and are you going to make him pay the extra rates that would be imposed on him through getting one car for four or five head of cattle, and another car for a few sheep and pigs? Either this Bill if passed must become a dead letter and not be enforced, or the business of the country cannot be carried on as it is now. One or other of these things must happen. You talk about carloads of cattle arriving at Toronto and some of the animals having their legs broken. Well, that happens every day in the year in the Chicago market. Cattle arrive there with broken limbs, and the result is, that instead of being sold at 5 or 6 cents a pound, they are sold for about $5 a head as cripples. No one has any interest in shipping cattle without providing proper care for them, because there is a dead loss to some body in it. No matter what care you take in shipping a carload of cattle there is danger of one or more being hurt from the fact of their crowding each in the car which you cannot help, or because of a sudden shunt of the car against another car in the yard. Now you cannot prevent that unless you send them in Pullman coaches, or provide for each animal a special compartment for itself. If you compel that to be done, you immediately take away the profit which the farmer now makes on the raising of cattle, because the expense will fall upon the farmer in the end. If I were carrying on the business of agriculture in this country, I would not thank the House of Commons of Canada for interfering with these little matters. I know it is natural in these times—when thanks to the prosperity of the country a good many people have not much to do—that some should turn their attention to some kind of business like this. Some advocate the passing of legislation to prevent smoking, some to prevent drinking, and some to prevent the shooting of pigeons. Every body has his fad, and the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) has taken up this fad.

Mr. COATSWORTH. What is yours?

Mr. IVES. If I have any, it is not interfering in these little matters, and passing legislation which will do no good or that cannot be enforced. I do not know if any hon. gentleman will vote against this Bill as a whole, but for my part I will.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not like to allow some of the observations that have fallen from my hon. friend (Mr. Coatsworth) to pass altogether without comment. I wish to say that I believe that those who are opposed to this clause of the Bill which is now before us, are just as much alive to the propriety of protecting the lower animals as they are called—and I am not quite sure they are always correctly so described—from cruelty, as the promoter of this Bill is, or as any of those who are behind the Bill, are. For my part I would resent cruelty, such as has been described by my hon. friend (Mr. Coatsworth), as much as any one would, but I think that this House would be altogether inconsistent if we should say: We shall punish this particular kind of sport and allow other sport quite as cruel, and much more cruel, to go without punishing. My hon. friend (Mr. Coatsworth) has spoken about the legislation in England, and I am quite sure it was unintentional on his part if he conveyed an impression which is incorrect to the mind of any member of this committee. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that legislation in the English House of Commons has not moved in the direction he is moving, so far as this clause is concerned.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I said that. I accept that.

Mr. McNEILL. It is very important that the members of this committee should understand that this particular clause has been fully discussed in the English Parliament, and that the clause which is now proposed by my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is exactly upon the very same lines as the resolution which has been adopted in England. The English Parliament has discussed this matter and has decided exactly what this amendment asks the House to do. It has decided that such cruelty as was referred to by our old friend Mr. Brown should be punished, and that any one guilty of abominable conduct of that kind should be liable, as this clause proposes, to fine and imprisonment. But they refused to say that a man should be punished for shooting a pigeon flying out of a trap, while another should not be punished for shooting a pigeon sitting on a tree or on his barn. I hope this committee will take the same view, and legislate in the same direction as the English Parliament has done.

Mr. FLINT. I think I would be justified here in rising to a point of order, or, at any rate, calling the attention of the committee to a technical difficulty which it seems to me will arise if this section is passed. We have already passed the first page of this Bill down to the end of subsection "G," which clearly makes a criminal offence of pigeon shooting from traps. Having passed that section, we are asked to say in another section that this Act shall not apply to the very offence described in that section. Now, if the committee are in favour of legalizing pigeon shooting from traps, let us say so, and strike out subsection "G" and adopt this one. But if the committee are opposed to that practice, we must throw out the present amendment. I would like to have the opinion of the committee taken upon that point, whether pigeon shooting from traps shall be rendered illegal or not; for, although for years I have been a member of a society of the kind represented here, and have been strongly indoctrinated with the idea of the Bill, my mind is open to argument from those who know whether this species of sport can properly be classed as cruelty. I never attended a pigeon-shooting match, and know nothing of it, so that in that particular I must, of course, be guided by the opinions of hon. gentlemen who tell the committee, with all gravity, that there is nothing cruel about it. At any rate, after the discussion I have heard, I think it would be well to make the provision broad and general, and leave the decision of particular cases to the courts. I think the general opinion of the House and the country supports the laws now on the Statute-book with regard to cruelty to animals; and not from the point of view so frequently urged, that owners of animals will necessarily beat and abuse them. Most of these offences are committed by persons who are not the owners of the animals, but who are hirelings or outsiders. It is in the interests of the owners of animals themselves that a fair and reasonable law against cruelty to animals should be on the Statute-book. It is not the owners of animals we are aiming at, but the persons who wantonly and unnecessarily torture, beat and ill-use. I think the committee, at any rate, ought not to throw out this Bill altogether, but ought to carry it into law as far as we have already passed it. The provision with regard to the treatment of animals on trains is also a matter on which I think the majority of the members of the committee would listen with a great deal of consideration to the gentlemen who represent the trades interested.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That section was passed.

Mr. FLINT. I know it was passed, but we have since had a strong expression of opinion, to which I am inclined to bow, from those who are acquainted with the conditions of those trades, that possibly the committee was unwise. We are making regulations and imposing restrictions in one direction which may possibly be construed in such a way as to do great harm in another direction, and I would suggest that all regulations as to the transportation of animals on trains should be left to the proper department of the Government, I think the Department of Agriculture, and that we should ask that department to inquire into the matter and legislate as to the proper means of transporting the various classes of animals. I do not think that persons who object to cruelty, and whose feelings are strongly exercised in that regard, are as competent to decide how to prevent that cruelty without suggesting greater evils; and, although a supporter of this Bill, my mind has been strongly influenced by the opinions expressed by members interested in the cattle trade. Therefore, I would be inclined to suggest to my hon. friend that he should allow these clauses to stand over for the time, and have a separate Bill dealing with that particular branch of the subject, and let it go to be dealt with by the proper department of the Government; because, we may, with a view of preventing cruelty, place such restrictions on the shipment of cattle as will injure business and trade. My hon. friend will be accomplishing considerable by the amendments he has already carried, and he will not be running the risk of having some very valuable clauses thrown over in consequence of the objections that are raised to other clauses. I rose, however, more particularly to call the attention of the committee to the peculiar position we are in with regard to this clause. If it is accepted—I am not in favour of accepting it—then, we shall have to go back and strike out subsection "G," which has already been passed.

Mr. SEMPLE. It appears to me that if you are making pigeon shooting a crime, the penalty of $100 is out of all proportion to the crime. It is a very hard thing sometimes to decide what are acts of cruelty to animals. For instance, on one of these warm days, a person who lives a few miles from a village may sell a carload of hogs to a buyer, and some of them may die on the road to the village. I have known animals to die when taken in wagons, and sometimes on the cars. These are losses to the owner of the shipment. I think there should be a gradation of the different crimes mentioned in the Bill.

On section 5.

Mr. FORBES. The whole sense of the House seems to be against the principle of the Bill. All the legislatures in the Dominion have legislated on the subject, and in order that no more time of the House may be wasted, I would move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion negatived.

On section 5.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to have a point of order decided. Is it competent for the committee to decide, in the second clause, that it is illegal to shoot pigeons, and then by the fifth clause decide that the second clause shall not apply?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The committee may pass any clause, no matter how absurd.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should think that the committee ought not to stultify itself by first declaring that such an act will be an offence and then pass a clause declaring that it shall not.

Mr. DAVIN. No doubt the hon. member for Simcoe is quite right. The motion before us is a request that we shall stultify ourselves by undoing what we have already done, and I cannot agree with those gentlemen who think there is nothing in what is aimed at by this legislation. The object is to do away with a degrading sport, or what is called a sport. Pressure was brought to bear on my hon. friend, the late member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), as it has been brought to bear on the present father of this Bill, to insert a clause that would do away with certain grievances, but the real object was to do away with a bastard sport. My hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill), to my great surprise, has argued, as though there was some analogy between a man going into a gun club—as I have seen men in London go to the gun club there just as if they had stepped out of a band-box—and having a gun handed to him, putting it to his shoulder, and shooting as the pigeon was let out of the trap, as though there was some analogy between that and fox hunting and hare hunting. My hon. friend has, I doubt not, in other days, crossed country in Ireland after the fox or hare, and he must have known this, that in the earlier stage of the struggle between fox and hounds and huntsman, the huntsman, in Ireland, because the country is very difficult to cross, runs nearly as much risk as the animal he is hunting. Every man takes his life in his hands that crosses country. And what my hon. friend knows, too, is this: that in the earlier part of that contest, the fox enjoys the hunt and the hare enjoys it too, and up to a certain time has the best of it. The deer will go before the deer-hounds, the fox before fox-hounds, and the hare before the hare-hounds, for a certain time, confident of leaving everything behind, and it is not the speed of the hounds that destroys it, but the staying power—the same sort of thing that destroys the Grits in this country, the staying power of the Conservative party.

Mr. FRASER. I never knew they were dogs.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman never realized that he was a hare, but still after metaphysical efforts such as my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has made, this very difficult thing is easily realizable. I say there is no sport in shooting pigeons flying from a trap. I have seen the thing done. Any languid dude, weary from dissipation, can saunter into the gun club or go to Hurlingham and have his gun handed to him, and from long practice bring down his tale of pigeons. Will any one tell me that the word sport, which certainly has noble proportions in the history of the British Empire, can in any way be applied to that? I do not think the question is altogether as to the suffering of the pigeon. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), with that tenderness of heart which we know belongs to him, and also with a metaphysical nicety that transcends anything I ever heard before in a deliberate assembly, described in a subtle and metaphysical manner what might be called pigeon psychology. I do not want to go into the question of how much or how little the pigeon suffers. The point I want to make is that the man who shoots that pigeon coming from the trap where it has been confined for days and has suffered in consequence—

Mr. McNEILL. No, no.

Mr. DAVIN. Is my hon. friend going to argue about the number of hours the pigeon is confined? I must then fall back on the metaphysics of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) and say that a great deal of suffering may be concentrated in a few moments. I am not making a point of the length of time the pigeon is confined. The point I make is that it is not to be tolerated in a civilized country that men, under the name of sport, should engage in pastime that slaughters pigeons while the men run no risk whatever. My hon. friend has gone out shooting and he knows that in so doing he runs some sort of risk and that, at least, the bird has a chance. Flying from a trap the bird has no chance whatever. The moral relation between that bird and the man is that of victim and butcher. But if you are hunting the fox, the fox may escape; if you are hunting the hare, the hare may escape. And, in many cases the man himself runs a risk. The late Marquis of Waterford, one of the boldest riders that ever rode to hounds, a man whom no stone wall or nine-barred gate could terrify, while crossing a small brook at the hunt, fell, broke his collar bone and died. Every season in Ireland we have a man or two who suffers in this way. And the same thing is true in England, though in less degree than in Ireland, because they have an easier country to cross. But no one will tell me that there is an analogy between such sport and shooting pigeons from a trap. Take the case of a sportsman hunting prairie chicken. And, by the way one gentleman spoke of shooting pigeons on a barn. No sportsman would shoot a bird except on the wing. No sportsman would shoot a prairie chicken sitting on a barn or tree.

Mr. METCALFE. That would depend on how hungry he is.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says that would depend on how hungry he was. I am afraid my hon. friend is a better judge of horses or game chickens—

Mr. METCALFE. Give them their right name.

Mr. DAVIN. Game cocks, then—than he is of prairie chicken.

Mr. METCALFE. You could not shoot a pigeon out of a trap.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know about that. If I should stoop to such sport—

Mr. METCALFE. You can't do it standing up.

Mr. DAVIN. I might defeat my hon. friend in a contest of that kind. However, I find it a very difficult thing to get the committee to take a serious view of this question. Yet undeniably it has a serious side. I could not vote for the motion before the committee, for it simply stultifies the Bill. If we pass the Bill we do something to get rid of a degrading practice and one that has nothing of sport in it. Two years ago I occupied the time of the committee to explain fully my objections to this practice, its reflex effect upon the man, its lowering effect upon the moral nature and its effeminacy. Horse racing, hunting, shooting—all these things develop, certainly, staying qualities in the man, but this is a pure effeminacy and nothing can be said for it from the standpoint of sport. I am opposed to the clause as it stands, and opposed to it even as proposed to be amended by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth). The effect of it would be to take the Bill, as we might take a bird and wring its neck off. Better make it a real Bill against pigeon shooting or trap shooting, or else have the committee rise and have no Bill at all.

Mr. McNEILL. I cannot agree with what has fallen from my hon. friend. He speaks of pigeons being confined for days in a trap. Surely my hon. friend stretches it a little there, and if it is necessary to add to the picture of the pigeon suffering in this way in order to make a case, I think the case of my hon. friend is not so strong as he would desire the committee to suppose. In point of fact the pigeons are not kept in the trap for long. Those who are to shoot them wish them to be confined as short a time as possible, so that they may fly strong. Personally, I would not take any pleasure in shooting pigeons flying from traps. But my hon. friend and myself should be careful that we do not condemn the sport of other people simply because it is not such as we care for. Other people do care for shooting pigeons flying from traps, and the point we have to decide is whether there is in that sport anything so cruel that the people who desire to engage in it should be prohibited from doing so or punished by fine and imprisonment if they disobey. I listened very carefully for some argument on the part of my hon. friend in support of that proposition, but what did he say with regard to the question of cruelty? I heard no argument, but I heard my hon. friend speak in glowing terms of hunting. Every one, I think, who does not disapprove very strongly, as Mr. Freeman does, of all field sport, would agree with what he has said with regard to hunting, except that we would not put it so strongly as he did when he sought to make it appear that the man who rides across country is in as much danger as the fox. It is true that there is a certain percentage of injury and accident to the riders, but it is very small. In point of fact, Mr. Chairman, what we have to come back to is the simple question whether we are prepared to say that because we do not ourselves desire to take part in pigeon shooting, therefore we condemn every man who does to fine and imprisonment. I say there has been no cruelty proven to justify any such legislation on the part of this House, and no attempt has been made to show that the cruelty inflicted on the pigeons is anything like so great as the cruelty which my hon. friend approves of inflicting on the fox or the hare. My hon. friend has even been obliged to go so far as to say that the hare for a part of the time enjoys the sport. He says that the hare, the most timid of all God's creatures, the hare that is simply proverbial as a timid creature, enjoys being hunted. That is one of the arguments that are gravely brought up in order to induce this committee to fine people who shoot pigeons. Now, as to the cruelty inflicted upon a hare that is hunted as compared with the cruelty inflicted upon a pigeon that is being shot out of a trap, there is no comparison whatever. My hon. friend says there is no analogy, and there is none. When you consider the suffering of the hare, the suffering from terror, and the suffering from over-exertion, and the fact that she is torn to pieces by the dogs; and when you consider that the pigeon is at least shot dead when it flies out of the trap, I agree that there is no analogy. But my hon. friend says there is no risk connected with pigeon shooting. Well, there are other field sports which he approves of, in connection with which there is no risk whatever. There is no risking whatever in coursing a hare. You stand quietly on the ground and see a hare being coursed; does my hon. friend profess to say that we should pass legislation to do away with coursing. If he is consistent in his argument, he must do so. The coursing of a hare is just as cruel as the hunting of a hare, and ten thousand times more cruel than the shooting of a pigeon. Now, when my hon. friend says the committee will stultify themselves by passing this clause, I ask them to pause and consider whether they will not stultify themselves ten times more by proposing to say that the shooting of a pigeon flying out of a trap is an act of abominable cruelty, and that the coursing of an unfortunate hare by two dogs until she is worn out and then torn to pieces, breathless and almost dead with terror before she is torn to pieces, is an act which is not to be considered cruel at all.

Mr. METCALFE. As my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has called my sporting proclivities into question, I will say a few words on this Bill. I consider it an iniquitous Bill, in many regards. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) seems to be animated with a very hearty desire to put down all sorts of cruelty, and so far as he is concerned, I believe he has taken a very honourable stand, and he should receive the praises of all the anti-cruelty societies throughout the Dominion. I presume that all the little animals, from the eagle that plucks the raven, and the raven that plucks the jay, and the jay to whose voracity the cricket falls a prey, will all unite in loud acclaim in giving him credit for a kind-hearted sympathy with dumb animals. I do not rise to say anything unkind with regard to the Bill, which I believe has been brought before this committee with good intention, and for the purpose of putting down cruelty to animals. But what I might call cruelty to animals, the society which my hon. friend represents, might consider not to be cruelty, and what I might consider not to be cruelty, his society might consider cruelty. I consider that cruelty commences where sport ceases: that is the gauge you have to adopt. Now, if my hon. friend has fun with any animal, cruelty begins just as soon as his sport ceases. The hon. member for Assiniboia says that no animal has any chance in getting away from a trap. That is quite different from throwing an animal from a trap. I have seen pigeons thrown from a trap that it would take a pretty good shot to hit, and the member for Assiniboia and myself would need to go back to our youthful days to hit those pigeons. I have seen pigeons get out of a trap and whiz up when it would take the hon. member in the palmiest days of his youth to hit one of them. The hon. member, in his usual fine oratorical style, made a case against trap-shooting. Now, I am not one to sympathize with trapshooters at all. I would much rather see a man take his gun and go into the field, and give the animal a better chance than it would have in a trap. But there are others who take delight in trap-shooting. The hon. member for Assiniboia and myself have had the good fortune to roam over the prairies and shoot prairie chickens in the air. Now, I have been in very lonely places in the west, although not so far west as the home of my hon. friend; and it was a question with me whether I would shoot them sitting or flying. I made a calculation that I could shoot about eleven out of twelve sitting, and I could shoot about two out of three flying. If the chicken was sitting, and I was hungry at the time, and I got a good chance to shoot, I picked out the best one and shot him sitting. Now, open confession is good for the soul. I am not one of those who boast of their ability to shoot or to hunt, and I am giving you just a statement of what I felt. I never met my hon. friend from Assiniboia with a gun on his shoulder, I always met him with a pen in his hand. The pen is easier to carry than a gun: perhaps it requires more ability to wield the pen than the gun, but at the same time it requires a good deal of strength to carry a gun around all day.

The shot may scatter better in the field than on paper, of course. I have had a little chance to try that on the prairie, and I have always thought that it was right to give the bird a good chance to get away if you are not too hungry, and if you do not want meat on that particular occasion. Now, I have said that what my hon. friend and his friends might consider cruelty, I would not consider cruelty. Some men would consider it cruelty to run a horse four miles, and it is a cruel thing to run a horse one mile or a quarter of a mile, if he is not in condition. All these things have to be considered with proper judgment. It might be cruel to run a horse to-day half a mile, and in two months from to-day you might run that same horse four miles without any cruelty at all, because his lung power or his leg power might be a great deal poorer to-day than it would be two months hence. I have no doubt that my hon. friend who has brought this Bill before the House, believes he is acting in the best way to put down cruelty to animals. But we have already on the Statute-books of this country laws to suppress all these things, and this Bill seems to me to be a work of supererogation on the part of the hon. member for Toronto. The local legislatures have enacted laws sufficient to cover these things which he prohibits by his Bill, and if the hon. gentleman will allow me, I would advise him to come to this conclusion: We have discussed this thing now, and I will go home and tell my lady friends that it is no good, it won't go. Because it is the ladies, Mr. Chairman, that generally press this thing upon members of Parliament. Several of them came to me in my city about it, and said: Won't you help Mr. Coatsworth's Bill? Yes, I said. I will help to put it out, if I can, because I do not believe such legislation is the proper thing for this country. We are all opposed to cruelty to animals. But my proclivities have been generally in the direction of cock-fighting. When I was young, in days gone by, I liked to see two cocks well fed, well matched, and put in a pit together, giving each a fair show for his life. I would give him a better chance than my hon. friend would in his younger days give a fox. Many of these matters are not understood by hon. members who introduce such Bills as the present one, for there are as fine men as are to be found in the country who like both horse racing and cock fighting. I am not here to support cock fighting by any means; the law does not permit it, in fact it is prohibited by the Blake Act or some other Act. If I go to a cock fight I take my chance of being fined, for I am violating the law, and I can be punished without the present Bill being adopted. There is no necessity for this Bill or for any further measure in this direction. It is a work of supererogation to bring this Bill before the House. It has been inroduced by the hon. gentleman from a desire to prevent cruelty to animals, but we have already on the Statute-book sufficient laws to suppress cruelty to animals. To-day if a butcher goes to the country and improperly treats animals and practices cruelty there is a stringent law to punish him. If any one is guilty even of bull-baiting, although I never heard of such a practice being followed in this country, although I cannot say whether or not this is done near the constituency of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth), that is prohibited. Taking the Bill all through, and considering its sections and subsections and amendments, I think it is absolutely unnecessary legislation at the present time. We have at present in this Dominion a good moral law, and there is enough legislation on the subject outside of these proposed provisions to prevent cruelty to animals. Several hon. gentlemen have spoken in regard to fish and animals being cruelly treated. After a fish has been caught with a fly and has been humbugged for an hour, and afterwards taken out of the water and laid on a rock, that is, in my opinion, as much cruelty as has been practised in any of the cases referred to by the mover of this Bill. In regard to pigeon shooting, I quite agree that as soon as possible a bird injured should be despatched. But how are you going to catch the bird? In many cases that is impossible. It would be imagined, to judge from the statements made by the hon. gentlemen, that the pigeon would say: "Please come and kill me." But it does not do that. When you injure a bird or an animal its first object is to get away from you. There is an old story about putting salt on the tail, but it will not work any more in this case than in any other. The present Bill is so mixed that we do not know where we are at the present time. We have heard so many statements made and replied to that the hon. gentleman should now withdraw the Bill, and after a time when he has had more opportunity to consider and forward some special cases of cruelty, it might be brought to the attention of the House, but at the present time the effect will be to enact legislation that is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. COATSWORTH. In order to prevent any misconception, although the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Metcalfe) and others have spoken very wide of the mark, I desire to draw attention to the fact that there are very few new provisions in this Bill. The difficulty which has arisen in connection with punishing cruelty has been simply to fix the liability on some particular person, and what is specially desired to be accomplished by this Bill is to fix the liability for the cruelty. If hon. gentleman would read the Criminal Code they would find that I was not entitled to all the compliments showered on me, nor were the ladies to whom they referred entitled to all the credit they desire to give them, because the proposed law is very nearly the same as the existing law. The main difference is the question of fixing the liability on some certain person. In regard to the shipment of cattle, it has been held that no person is liable, and I have read a case brought before the police magistrate of Toronto where gross cruelty had prevailed.

Mr. AMYOT. Does not the responsibility rest with the one who has committed damage towards the owner of the animal?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I am not prepared to discuss that question any more than to say that the Toronto magistrate, when a person was brought before him, was not able to punish him.

Mr. AMYOT. Change the magistrate.

Mr. COATSWORTH. We propose to enlarge the scope of the law, and to fix the liability on particular persons. The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) did not think any shipper would willingly ship animals in such a way as to be liable to injury. That is the very difficulty met with. It arises in this way: the cattle are not shipped by the owners, but they are put on the cars at the risk of the purchaser. The seller has no further responsibility, and he is not particular as to the way the animals are put on the cars, and consequently they have been put on carelessly.

Mr. IVES. What do you mean by that?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Put on the cars in such a way as to lead to the cruelty to which I have referred.

Mr. IVES. Please be more particular. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the cars are overloaded or underloaded? That there are too many animals or too few?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I do not know that any of the descriptions would cover the point; I do not know that the cars are overloaded. But the chief point is as regards the selection of animals, and that large and small animals are placed in the car together. When large and small animals are shipped together, the small ones are not sufficiently protected by the partitions so as to prevent their injury by large cattle. The hon. gentleman appears to think the Bill goes further than it really does. I thank the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Metcalfe) for his advice, but I think he should first read the provisions of the Bill, and if he does read those provisions he will find that there is no new offence added, but that the object of the Bill is simply to fix on some one the responsibility. As to the section proposed by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) I do not propose to vote one way or the other.

Mr. PRIDHAM. I have been interested in cattle for many years, and I regret to see that this point is in dispute. It is the large, heavy and fat cattle, which have been prepared for exporting, which are injured. In the case of small animals, there is no difficulty, because where they fall down there is always room to allow them to rise. There is no danger at all with regard to the smaller animals. I have shipped a great many thousand head of cattle, and I have only had one beast out of all that number that ever got a broken leg. At all the stations that I ever shipped cattle from, we are not allowed to load sheep and hogs in the same car with larger animals without putting up partitions. A good deal was said in the House the other night about bedding the cars with a certain stated quantity of hay and straw. Hon. gentlemen forget that it is a very dangerous thing to put hay or straw in a cattle car. I have considerable experience in the business of shipping cattle, and I know that the railway companies prohibit us from putting hay or straw in the cars, because, in dry weather, there would be serious danger of a fire, and the probability of great loss occurring to the train. The bedding used is either saw dust or sand, or the trimmings from the flax mills, which makes a very suitable and comfortable bedding for the animals. The station masters at all the stations have strict orders not to allow any cattle cars to leave the stations unless the cattle are properly loaded.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is all this Bill provides for.

Mr. PRIDHAM. Wherever I have done business that law is strictly carried out.

Mr. METCALFE. I may mention to my hon. friend (Mr. Coatsworth) that I have read the Bill several times, and the more I read it, the less I think of its practicability.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MILLER moved that the committee rise.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose.

OCEAN FREIGHT RATES ON CATTLE.

Mr. McMULLEN moved second reading of Bill (No. 8) respecting ocean freight rates on cattle. He said: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that it becomes necessary for me to undertake the arduous duty of moving the second reading of this important Bill. I regret that the author of this Bill (Mr. Mulock) is not able to be present to-night, because I am quite sure that he would have done greater justice to the subject than it is possible for me to do. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) has given a great deal of attention and devoted a great deal of time to this subject, and he would undoubtedly have been able to present to the House an array of facts that would have great influence on the opinions of hon. gentlemen in dealing with this question. When we come to consider the extent of the cattle trade of this country during the last ten or fifteen years, its vital importance to the older province of the Dominion, we must recognize that every facility should be given in order to increase the volume of that trade. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will also see how important it is that we should give every consideration to the proposition now before the House with regard to ocean freight rates for cattle. I hold in my hand a statement of the number of cattle carried from this country by the Allan line, one of the most important of our steamship companies, for the year ending the 31st of December, 1893, and from that statement it appears that they carried 23,180 heads from Canada to England. During the same period, the Allan line carried from the different ports of the United States, with which they trade, 23,884 heads. Hon. gentlemen will see that the number of cattle carried by that important line of steamers from the port of Montreal alone—except 400 head which they shipped at Halifax—is equal to all they carried from the different ports of the United States. The exportation of cattle from the United States, being divided up among many lines and among different ports, obtains competition there that is not realized to the same extent by shippers from Canadian ports. Unfortunately, the fact of the exportation of cattle from Canada being largely confined to one port, and that the port of Montreal, unquestionably brings within the reach of steamship-owners a very favourable and a very tempting opportunity of meeting together and making rates to suit themselves. On this subject there have been representations made to this House. Those who have been largely engaged in the cattle trade, have, in a memorial on the subject of ocean freights on cattle, presented to this House many reasons why they consider that some legislation in the direction proposed in this Bill should be placed upon the Statute-books of this country. That memorial points out in the first place that the exportation of cattle from Canada reached the highest point in the year 1890. Ever since that year the exportation has diminished until in the year 1893, when we exported less than we did in any one year for a great number of years before. In 1890, we exported 104,133 at a total value of $8,114,145; in 1891, we exported 99,967, at a total value of $7,381,284; in 1892, we exported 93,206, at a total value of $6,970,748; and in 1893 we exported 89,572, at a total value of $6,799,638.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What are those statistics taken from?

Mr. McMULLEN. They are taken from information gathered from the steamship owners, and verified by people engaged in the cattle trade, and fully cognizant of the number of cattle exported.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me. There is a discrepancy between those figures and the official figures, and my question was asked really to ascertain whether the hon.

gentleman was speaking from information furnished either by the shipping trade or by the owners of the cattle, or from any recognized authority.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would say, in answer to the hon. Minister of Marine, that the information I am giving to the House was gathered from the steamship owners themselves, and verified by the shippers—because the shipping of cattle has been largely confined within a few hands. Each steamship company issues a statement of the annual shipment of cattle similar to one which I hold in my hand issued by the Allan Line; these, including the estimated shipments made by tramp steamers, and taken all in all, I think the figures will be found to be fairly correct. I have heard statements made before in regard to the discrepancy existing between these figures and the Government returns, and I hope the hon. Minister of Marine will be able to explain it or clear it up.

Mr. HUGHES. Perhaps one is for the calendar year and the other for the fiscal year.

Mr. McMULLEN. Perhaps so. Now, it will be seen by these figures that the number and value of the animals exported have been decreasing from year to year, and that last year's export has been the smallest for these years. The great difficulty appears to be in the power placed in the hands of the steamship owners, if they are disposed to exercise it. Montreal is virtually the corner for the shipment of cattle. All the cattle exported from Canada since the quarantine regulations have been put in force between Canada and the United States, have to go by way of Montreal or by way of Quebec, which is virtually Montreal, because the same lines that run from one port run from the other. So that this trade is, as it were, focused at that particular point, and the steamship owners and the agents of steamships are enabled to extort from cattle dealers, perhaps when the number for shipment is in excess of the usual number, rates which are far in excess of what would be charged if there was an opportunity of securing the competition of other lines. This certainly is not desirable in the interest of this particular trade, which in the older provinces is an exceedingly important trade. It is important from the fact that those provinces cannot now possibly compete with our western provinces in the production of wheat. The province of Ontario, from which I come, is of necessity, driven to adopt the feeding and exportation of cattle, the raising and exportation of cheese, butter and hogs, and similar lines of business, as the only lines in which the farmers of that province can now possibly make any money. Therefore, it becomes very desirable in the interest of the older provinces, Ontario as well as Quebec, that every possible facility that can be afforded for the exportation of cattle, should be granted; and this matter of ocean freights appears to be one of the most important items. Now, as I said before, those who have taken an active part in the exportation of cattle have presented their case very forcibly to this House in a memorial which I fancy has been placed in the hands of every member of this House. In that document they have set forth many grievances. They show that cattle shipped from the United States are placed on the English market on advantageous terms and conditions compared with cattle shipped from Canada; and this explains how it is that the prices of cattle for export are sometimes higher in the Buffalo market than in the Montreal market. I noticed last month that cattle for export were sold in the Buffalo market for from $4.35 to $4.55 per hundred, when the very same grades of cattle were being sold at the port of Montreal at from $4 to $4.25 per hundred. Now, at Buffalo, the distance to the seaboard must be some four or five hundred miles, the cattle have to be carried there in cars, and the railway freight must be paid. While at Montreal the cattle are right at the ocean port, where they can be put on board, and carried straight to Glasgow, Liverpool or London. There must then be some reason why export steers in Buffalo are worth 25 cents to 35 cents more than in the market at Montreal, though both are shipped to the same ports of London, Liverpool and Glasgow. That is evidence that there must be something wrong, as unquestionably there is. Before I sit down I shall give figures taken from reliable sources, to show that during a number of years the sums that have been charged for exporting cattle from Canada are considerably in excess of those charged on cattle exported from the United States. In Montreal each steamship line has its agent. It is very easy for those agents to meet every day or every week and settle what freights to charge on cattle. They get returns every day showing the state of the market in the old country, and when they find the market going up, and there is a probability of a rush of cattle from Canada to meet the increased demand, they raise the freights. It is well known that freights have fluctuated from $7 to $17.50 a head. Now, if it is really worth at one season of a year $7 a head to carry the steer from the Montreal market to Liverpool, it cannot be worth $10 more to carry that steer to the same port in the same season. It is also exceedingly harassing and unfortunate to cattle dealers, when they go out to purchase cattle for export, that they should be totally unable to know what freight they will have to pay. They do not know what they are going to be charged per head for the carriage from Montreal to the other side, and there have been cases where the shippers were forced to put their cattle on board without any rate being fixed, and those cattle have been part of the way across before the steamship owner would make known the freight he intended charging. It is wrong that our cattle dealers should be placed in that position; and one of the clauses of this Bill provides that before the cattle are allowed to leave the wharf, an agreement must be in existence declaring what freight shall be charged, so that the shipper will not be completely in the dark as to what his shipment is going to cost him per head in the way of carriage. The falling off in the cattle shipments is very much to be regretted because the industry was unquestionably a very growing one. This circular that I hold states that the entire sum realized in the last ten or twelve years, from the inception of the cattle export business down to the present is some $75,000,000. I have gone through the figures, and find that the amount will run over $85,000,000, brought back to this country by the export of cattle alone. This clearly shows the necessity of protecting this industry as much as possible. As I have already said, this trade may be paralyzed from the want of action on the part of the Government or of this House; from our failure to release the country, as soon as possible, from the uncertainty existing as to freight rates, which has become a very serious question. It appears to me that the struggle is virtually between the cattle shippers and the steamboat interest. The question is whether we are going to give our attention to the interests of the farming community, which has so much at stake in this great industry, or whether we are going to allow the steamboat owners to exercise the same control and enjoy the same privileges and advantages as they have in the past. I do think that the requirements of the older sections of this Dominion are of paramount importance in dealing with this whole question. We should legislate in the interests of the people and force these steamship owners to submit to rates that are reasonably fair and just. We are giving very large subventions to these steamship companies for the carriage of the mails. It has cost the country an enormous amount of money to build and keep in satisfactory condition our ports, lighthouses and wharfs, and to afford all the necessary facilities to give the ship owners the protection they necessarily require. If Parliament is disposed to deal fairly between those interested in the export of cattle and the steamship owners, it will fairly and justly guard the interests of both. This whole question of rates has been entirely under the control of the ship-owners in the past. And it will be well that by some legislation we should alter that condition of things and place it in such a shape that greater justice will be done those who export cattle. I know that my hon. friend, who introduced the Bill, was very anxious that the Government should adopt the measure and assume the responsibility of putting it in shape, so as to grant the relief desired. I am quite satisfied that his object is not in any way to embarrass the Government. When hon. gentlemen will think of the numbers of petitions that have been presented to this House, strongly urging that some measure of relief should be given, they cannot possibly think it is the desire of any one on this side to hamper or prejudice this House or the people outside. Our great object is to legislate in the interest of the whole people, doing justice to the cattle dealer and the farmer as well as the ship-owner, so that neither the one class nor the other would have any particular advantage. Every effort that could be reasonably expected on the part of those interested in this matter has been put forth. Petitions have been presented from day to day from boards of trade, municipal councils, and other corporate bodies, memorializing this House to take some action. I do not think it would be right that we should treat those memorials with indifference and allow them to lie in our pigeon holes unattended to. It is our duty to try, in some way, to meet the demands of those people who have been petitioning for relief, by a measure which would do no injustice to ship-owners and grant that relief which the farmers and exporters require. I contend that this is not a question that belongs to the farmer merely, but that every man in Canada is interested in it. Any trade that will bring back to the shores of Canada from eight to ten millions of dollars a year—and I am quite sure that amount can be very largely increased—is a matter of vital importance to us as a country. And if we can, by any legislation, encourage it and so increase its volume, we shall be doing great service to every branch of business in this country. I contend that if the farming community of the country are in a prosperous condition, financially, that is an assurance that every other business of the country will prosper. And unless the farmers are prosperous, every other industry will languish. This we know by experience. When we have a poor harvest, when we have limited exports of grain and cattle, when every line of agricultural pursuits is in a distressed state, general trade is paralyzed. If we can, by legislation of this kind, encourage an important industry, such as that of cattle exportation, it is a matter of vital interest to the entire country that the plan for carrying out such an object should be most carefully considered by this House. Now, Sir, I am going to state to the House the quantity of cattle shipped and the charges made upon them for several years past, commencing with the year 1890. In 1890 we exported from Canada, 122,182 cattle. For the carriage of these across the Atlantic, we paid $1,796,196.92. In 1891 we exported 108,947 head of cattle, and paid in steamship freights, $1,597,163.02. In 1892 we exported 98,755 head of cattle, for the ocean carriage of which we paid $1,199,873.25. In 1893 we exported 89,572 head of cattle and paid to the carrying companies, $951,254.64. I would like the Minister to observe these figures, and I challenge any member of this House to successfully controvert the statement I make. The total amount paid for this service is $5,544,487.83. The same number of cattle exported from Boston and Portland would have cost $3,899,161.79. That is to say, in four years the farmers of this country have paid to the steamship companies at Montreal, $1,645,326.64 more than they ought to have paid. In 1891 the excess in cost per head from Montreal over the rate from Boston was 21s. 9½d. In 1892 the excess of price from Montreal as compared with Boston was 11s. 0½d. In 1893 the excess was 7s. 6d.

Mr McMULLEN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the hon. gentleman goes on, I would like to ask him what are the rates for 1894?

Mr. McMULLEN. I have not the rates for 1894.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh, this is 1894.

Mr. McMULLEN. I admit that the rates for this year are less than they were in 1891, 1892, or 1893. But it is a well-known fact that legislation in the direction now proposed has come to the knowledge of the shipping owners, and, fearing that the House might pass a statute which would give them serious trouble, they have come down very considerably in their rates. Another point is this, and it is an important point of my argument: In proportion as the price rises in England the charges of the ship owners for carrying the cattle across increases. We know that in some seasons the rate has varied as much as twenty or thirty shillings per head. They have every day a report of the state of the British market, and they take advantage of the prices there to increase their charge for freight rates.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what is his authority for the figures he has quoted?

Mr. McMULLEN. My authority is official statements given by the steamship owners from Boston and Baltimore and Portland and Montreal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Given to the hon. gentleman?

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes,—privately.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I may tell the hon. gentleman, as I wish to be perfectly frank, that I have under my hand a statement made by the Dominion Live Stock Association which is not in accord with the statement the hon. gentleman has read.

Mr. McMULLEN. The figures I have read have been secured by myself and other members on this side of the House who are trying to learn the facts and get to the bottom of this question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not dispute that. I am only calling attention to the discrepancy.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am satisfied that I can verify the statement with regard to the rates. I have drawn these facts, I may say to the attention of the steamship owners, and they reply by saying that we, by statute, compel them to provide a larger space for each animal than is required in the United States, and the result is that the charges must be proportionately high. I do not know how that may be, but unquestionably the increased rate I have stated is correct. Now, for this number of cattle that were shipped from Canada in 1890-91-92 and 1893, the people paid $5,544,487.83; from Boston it would have cost to ship that number, $3,899,161.79, and from Baltimore, $3,751,769.15. The House will see that the people of this country, even with the limited number that they shipped, have been subjected to rates that have virtually taken out of them, $1,645,000. Now, this is certainly a condition of things that merits the serious consideration of this House, in order that we may by legislation, if possible, secure that relief to the exporters of cattle that such a large and growing trade deserves at our hands. I hold in my hand a Bill that the hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Mulock) has placed before this House. The first clause proposes that the rate shall be fixed by the Governor in Council, and that when once fixed, they shall be published, so that every cattle shipper may know them, that the steamship companies may be fully cognizant of the rates, and that no person may be in doubt. Any person shipping cattle, whether he be a trader or a farmer, can find out by the published rates what the outside cost will be; he may get lesser rates than those, but in any case, in the exportation of his cattle from Montreal, he can not be charged more than those rates. In the second clause, he proposes to consider the different interests.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. member that on the question for the second reading of a Bill, it is out of order to discuss the clauses seriatim.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then I will not discuss the clauses in that way; but I sincerely hope that during the present session we may have an opportunity of going into committee on this Bill, when we may be able to discuss it clause by clause. Now, I made some remarks with regard to the importance of this Bill from a provincial standpoint, and particularly as it affects my own province. The fact is, there is not another province in this Dominion, and I do not believe there is a state on this continent, that is better adapted to the growth and the exportation of cattle, than the province of Ontario. We have a climate that has no superior for that purpose. Any man who has visited the Chicago market, and has seen the general character and breed of their cattle, and has then gone into the stables of the cattle-feeders of Western Ontario, will come to the conclusion that we are in a better position to grow and feed cattle for the English market than they are in the United States. We have the best grass that is grown on the continent, and we have pure spring water, which are two of the necessary essentials for raising and fattening cattle. With these two advantages, we ought to be able to do an enormous trade in raising and exporting cattle. We shall also have to adopt largely the business of dairying, as I said before, and in connection with dairying you have got to adopt a system of raising and exporting cattle. You cannot engage exclusively in dairying, you have got to have cattle for the purpose of producing manure, and for many other purposes the business of fattening cattle and the business of making butter and cheese, must run side by side. The farmer who adopts that system will make a little money, while the farmer who devotes his attention to growing grain to sell in competition with other sections of this continent is sure to lose money. There is another matter. We have lost entirely the business of the exportation of horses. Hon. gentlemen opposite are well aware that we did formerly an extended trade in that line, but it has been completely obliterated. Owing to the practical embargo that has been placed upon our horses going into the United States, our farmers are driven to the necessity of confining their operations to cattle and hogs. Now, we can do a very lucrative business in the exportation of cattle, providing the encouragement is given to that industry which it deserves. We should seek by legislation to secure the very lowest possible rate at which cattle can be carried, so that those who engage in the exportation of cattle may have some certainty as to the rates to be charged, and if we provide these facilities, I believe we will greatly encourage the exportation of cattle from this country. I have myself known a great many shippers who have been driven out of the market. Some have lost fortunes in it. Some men in 1890 were well off, but they lost every dollar they possessed, owing to cattle being scheduled in England, and the uncertainty in regard to rates, as well as the uncertainty in regard to some other items of expenditure which I have not time to mention. Now, I take the figures with regard to the prices of cattle. Any hon. gentleman who will turn up the papers of the 17th of April last, will find that the quoted price in Montreal for the best steers, was 4 cents per pound; and in Buffalo it was $4.35 to $4.60 for the same class of animals. Clearly there must be something wrong when the Americans can get for their animals for export $4.35 to $4.60 in the city of Buffalo—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that this year?

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes; the hon. gentleman will find these quotations are correct, if he will turn up the papers of April 17, 1894. I admit the Americans do a very large export trade to Germany as well as to England, and possibly they may have some advantages that we do not enjoy; but as far as the English market is concerned, the only possible advantage they have over us is the fact that they have lower rates, greater competition, and a greater number of points from which they can export cattle. They get the advantage of the competition that exists between the steamship-owners, and in that way they secure the transportation of their cattle at a considerably less rate than cattle shippers this side of the line. Now, I do not think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be able to challenge my statements. I shall be exceedingly glad to give him any information in my power that will, in any way, help the Government to get at the bottom of this question, preparatory to granting the people the relief they require. I do not desire to charge the Government with laxity. We know there has been an urgent appeal made by the farmers of this country, through different associations and we have now reached the period when we should deal with this question. I hope the House will be able to deal with the Bill which the hon. gentleman has on the Order paper, and I think that by means of it we will be able to grant the relief to this great, and growing, and important trade, of which it stands in need.

Mr. SEMPLE. I wish to say a few words on the general objects of this Bill. It is to be hoped the Government will lend their aid to securing the passage of a Bill that will be so much in the interests of the people of the country. At the present time our export trade in cattle is one of the most important interests in the country. When cattle are fed for export from grain that is raised on the farm, what is taken from the soil goes back again, and the soil is kept in fertility, and there is no loss of fertility as there is in the raising of grain for sale. The shipping freights this season are not very objectionable. It is desirable that there should be a fixed rate, and that is what is wanted, so that when a shipper sends forward a number of cattle at one part of the season he will not be called upon to pay twice as much at another time. This absence of a uniform rate has caused great loss to many buyers. They have purchased cattle expecting the shipping rates would be at a certain figure, but they have found them to be double at some periods, and so instead of obtaining a profit, they have lost in some cases their all. The trade, in fact, has become demoralized, and the report of the Minister of Agriculture shows a steady decline, and I venture to predict that next year's report will show a still worse condition. I know that some farmers sold excellent cattle a year ago for 5½ cents per pound, live weight, and this year they were compelled to sell similar animals for 4 cents per pound, live weight. When we consider the low price in the English market, and even admit that the freights existing are low, it is evident that the cattle trade is very unprofitable to our farmers during the present season. If the Government would establish a fixed rate for cattle shipment, it would be of very great advantage to the agricultural class. There are evidences in many directions that the people of the country are in earnest in this matter. This question came up before the cattle exporters of Toronto, and the present Bill was considered in the right direction,—the unanimous opinion arrived at was that it should be adopted by this House. Every day petitions have been presented asking Parliament to extend to the cattle industry fair treatment. The Government are really the only parties who can deal with the carrying trade. A motion now stands on the Order paper to grant a subsidy of $750,000 a year to a fast steamship line. If that Bill should be adopted and a subsidy granted, the benefit would be derived by the rich men who would be able to go to Europe more rapidly than at the present time, but it would not make any appreciable difference as regards the prosperity of the country as a whole. It would be unfortunate if the export cattle trade should considerably decline. It has been profitable so far, and when it reached high-water mark in 1891, it amounted to $8,744,769 that year. Since that time, however, it has steadily declined, and will continue to decline unless something is done by the Government in regard to freight rates, whereby great benefit might be conferred on the farmers. I hope the Government will give this important question due consideration.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not intend at this late hour to take up any time in discussing this question, but I would urge very strongly on the Government the advisability of dealing with this matter in a very serious way. There is no doubt it is a very large question. It is one that involves the values, as few other trade questions do, of the properties of the people. The amount of capital invested in cattle in Ontario is very great, as every hon. member knows, and it seems very strange that if we can protect the Ontario farmers from the exactions of those who hold the monopoly of the carrying trade by land or sea in the Dominion, no attempt has been made to do so. Just as soon as a buyer goes into the country and purchases a few hundred head of cattle or a thousand head, knowing the state of the market on the other side of the Atlantic and having full particulars in regard to freight rates, I say on these conditions he purchases five hundred or six hundred head of cattle and brings them to the port of shipment, and he finds that the freights have been changed and the whole transaction has been altered in character, and that very possibly he will sustain a loss instead of a gain. What is the result? The result, as a matter of course, is that when he goes out again to buy, he is obliged to deal differently with the farmers and to purchase the cattle at a less cost. Eventually, owing to the uncertainty of the transaction, these men dare not buy cattle. So it is not only an injury to the farming interest, but to the carrying interest as well. I think no more serious question could very well be presented to the House from a trade point of view than this question now under consideration. We know very well, and while it may not be germane to the question at issue, yet, it is in the same line, that our farmers had an opportunity last year of sending hay to the English market at a good profit. Our farmers had a large crop and the prices in England were high. The result, however, was that they did not make a profit, for all the profit went into the pockets of the steamship companies that carried the hay. The farmers of Bruce, and my hon. colleague from that county will substantiate what I say, sold their pressed hay at $5.50 per ton delivered at the railway station, and because the freight rates were raised a large portion of the profits which should have gone into their pockets were transferred into the pockets of the carriers. The result will eventually be, if a remedy is not found, that our English hay trade will be killed out. I hope this subject will be taken up and considered very seriously by the Government. I do not profess to be able to suggest a measure that it is desirable to take or the proper remedy to be applied, but I hope the whole question will be very seriously considered, as this is a very serious grievance so far as the farmers of Ontario are concerned.

Mr. ROWAND. I desire to emphasize the remarks made by the previous speaker with respect to the cattle trade, to the province of Ontario especially. We have gained great experience in breeding and in shipping cattle. If the English market, however, does not improve, we must change our system and go into dairying or some other branch of agriculture because our cattle are not the best dairying breed, for we have raised improved cattle for fattening and shipping purposes. I do not know at the moment what remedies should be applied to the difficult position in which we are now placed. I am not a lawyer, and am not able to decide whether the present Bill is a proper one or not, but at all events the Government should take the matter into their serious consideration and see if some remedy can be applied. Now, we have thought a great deal of the privilege that we have enjoyed in past years with regard to getting our cattle alive into the English markets. I have been watching the workings of the market in the United States and here, and my opinion is that the whole benefit derived from the privilege we enjoyed in placing our live cattle on the English market has gone to the steamship companies and not to the farmers. If you look back over the last five years you will find that the freight rates from Canada have been considerably higher than the freight rates from the United States ports. Last year quite a number of buyers shipped their cattle from Boston until the embargo was put on, and it depended on the rate of freight whether they should send by Boston or Montreal. Now we are entirely shut out from taking advantage of that competition, and we all understand what an easy matter it is for a few steamship companies to combine to put up the rates. Formerly when we were getting 5 or 6 cents a pound live weight for our cattle, perhaps we did not feel it so badly, but now when the prices are cut down and we are only getting 4 cents or 4¼ cents per pound at the most, we realize that it is a very serious matter. It is quite true that the steamship companies from Montreal have lowered their freight rates this season. I believe that they are actually lower than the rates from Boston this year, but my opinion is that the reason they have been lowered is on account of the agitation in Canada against those rates. The steamship companies will not carry freight at rates which will not pay them. They are carrying them at rates that pay them now, and if a little agitation in the country could bring them down to reasonable terms. I think that the Government should take hold of the matter and make them keep their rates at what they are now, and at what evidently pays them.

Mr. FORBES. Owing to the lateness of the hour and the importance of this subject, and the fact that the mover of the Bill (Mr. Mulock) is unavoidably absent, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 145) to amend the Fisheries Act. He said : With the exception of one or two other sections to which I will refer, this Bill contains substantially the provisions that were very fully considered in this House about two years ago ; but that Bill did not proceed further than a very long consideration in committee on that occasion, owing to the necessity of my having to leave suddenly to attend to other duties. That Bill dealt with the lobster fisheries. It is not intended in this Bill to bring any of the changes contemplated into force this year ; but it was deemed wise to bring up the sections again to take effect next year. They concern directly the canning and curing and packing of lobsters under a license system. At present that business is carried on without that very necessary and useful means of supervision. I have given a very great deal of attention to this question, and I have also had the benefit of discussing it fully and frankly with the House, and I am more of the opinion than ever, that there is an injustice under the present regulations to the bona fide packers. That is to say : that while the regulations concerning the close season are observed by the bulk of the substantial men in the business, yet the violations of the close season are such, and the illicit canning and curing of lobsters go on to such an extent, that although the officers of my department have been most vigilant and energetic, yet, without some such system as this along our coast, with its numerous indentations and extraordinary facilities for illicit work of this kind ; it would be, in my opinion, impossible to hope to preserve that very valuable industry which concerns the Maritime Provinces so directly. I have kept in this Bill to the lines of those provisions which were under consideration of the House before, with a few changes, and I think improvements, due to the additional information obtained by our officers whom I had convened in Ottawa for the purpose of mutual consultation and discussion. I do not propose in this Bill to deal with some clauses that were in the old measure concerning the close season. I propose to leave the close season for the present as it is, and as it has been for seasons past. But the conference of those fishery officers brought out some very interesting considerations. They have pushed to the front the consideration of such questions as were often mentioned by others who were interested in this matter, to the effect that in considering regulations affecting the size of the lobsters, as to the period when they are at maturity, and as to the season when they are found most largely in spawn ; it is absolutely essential that you should have regard to the temperature of the waters in the different districts, and not rigidly to apply anything approaching a uniform close season. That is a subject of great difficulty, and there was a difference of opinion amongst the officers whose special duty it was to look into this question. This year I have instituted a series of very careful investigations, through the means of some of the fishery vessels, to supplement the opinions based largely on observations and inquiries. At certain seasons of the year, they are able to obtain very interesting information respecting such questions as the temperature of the water, and the condition of the lobster, which information will be noted. Then, when the House is in possession of that exact information—information that has not been obtained either in England or Newfoundland, in which countries these inquiries have been carried on for many years—I think it will be time to deal with these phases of the question, and so I have eliminated them from the present Bill. Another important subject dealt with in the Bill is: in the Fisheries Act there is a prohibition against using drifting nets for salmon, the only exception being in the province of British Columbia, and in the Fraser River it is absolutely necessary to use drift nets for salmon, and they have been used without seriously affecting the permanency of that great fishery. But on the Bay of Fundy there grew up a practice of drifting, and it was carried on in defiance of the law. Some years ago the attention of the department having been called to this practice, prosecutions were instituted; but a question arose as to the rights of the harbour of St. John. As the special charter to the harbour gives the authorities in St. John special privileges, the action of the department was stayed through a mistaken impression that these special privileges extended outside the harbour and affected the waters where the drifting for salmon went on. The subject having been brought before me, and there being no question whatever that the point that had been raised was totally disconnected with the drifting, instructions were given to enforce the law. This year, however, it was very reasonably put to me that no notice having been given of that, and this drifting of salmon having been prosecuted for many years without let or hindrance, so sudden an action would be unfair and not absolutely necessary, owing to the condition of the fishery. I had a very careful investigation made at the instance of one of the representatives of St. John, who took a great deal of interest in the matter; and Prof. Prince went down personally, and went thoroughly into the question. From his report of that examination, it is quite clear that this drifting, if arranged under license as it is in the province of British Columbia, could be carried on there, and in those waters no other fishery could be carried on. So that the case is exactly like that of the Fraser River; and at present I need not point out to those who are familiar with the Fishery Act, that we cannot in the slightest degree regulate this fishery, because it being prohibited, we cannot license it, and the fishermen being without licenses, we have no power to interfere so as to regulate. We have power to stop it, but not to regulate it. So that, I think, with the concurrence of really all concerned, and without any detriment to the fisheries, it is possible to amend the Act so as to enable the department to license and control drift net fishing in these waters of New Brunswick. There are one or two other provisions of the Bill to which I may refer. I shall not refer to all of them, but simply to some of the most important. We have found in the province of Manitoba and in the North-west Territories, where irrigating operations are carried on, that there are practically a great many fish-traps so arranged that the destruction of fish is very great and very serious; and, in view of the complaints of the people in those districts, we have endeavoured to provide for the erection of gratings or fish guards with certain meshes which will not interfere with the very necessary work of irrigation, and will at the same time allow that work to be carried on without doing injury to the important fisheries of that country. I also have a provision in this Bill respecting a practice that prevails in some parts of this country to the detriment of the fisheries, that is, the catching of fish for the purpose of using them as manure. Then, the section which I think was in the old Bill when it was before the House, is again introduced—the section respecting the pollution of rivers. That section is entirely recast and made more workable, but with the same object in view. I have also a provision in reference to which I should like very much to have the opinion of the House, respecting a gradation of penalties for violations of the Fisheries Act. I might state that one of the great difficulties we have to contend against to-day—and in some parts of Canada the case is a very urgent one—is that poaching is being carried on upon the most tremendous scale in some waters in defiance of the law and of the officers; and the seizures I have had to cause to be made recently have been on an enormous scale. But, nevertheless, our great difficulty is this, that a man is encouraged now to break the law. There are in many cases great temptations to violate it. When a man knows that the maximum penalty is $20, he substantially says to himself, "That is a very small fee to pay, and I can pay that and ten times over in many cases if I have the good fortune to elude and escape the fishery officer." Consequently, I have adopted the language of the Fishery Acts in other countries, where the penalties increase with repetitions of the offence, the penalty for the first offence being as now. The other provisions of the Bill I need not dwell upon at the present stage.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The subject-matter of this Bill is one of the very greatest importance, and, inasmuch as the Bill may not be printed for some time yet, I am anxious that I should thoroughly understand its provisions, in so far at any rate as it affects the lobster fisheries. I regret very much that the hon. gentleman had not been able to introduce this Bill at an earlier stage of the session. We are now very near the close, and by the time the Bill is printed it will be impossible to send copies of it to the different lobster packers, and ascertain their views upon it before it passes through the House. I tried to gather from the hon. gentleman's remarks what the provisions are respecting these lobster fisheries; but, unfortunately, owing to interruptions, I was unable to follow him. I did not understand whether the hon. gentleman is introducing into this Bill the same provisions that were contained in a Bill which he introduced before he went to Europe on the Behring Sea business.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Substantially, yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that these regulations do not apply to the present season?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman propose not to establish a fixed close season for any locality?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not by the Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that the hon. gentleman proposes to reserve that for next year?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And to fix it by Order in Council?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is an Order in Council outstanding which has been in force for years, and I endeavoured to explain that I did not propose to interfere with that in view of information now at my command, but that very special and valuable information was being obtained on which it was probable that next year I would ask the opinion of the House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman intended to legislate on that point, it would be essential that the information he was acting upon should be printed and submitted to the members of the House. I understand, then, that the legislation refers more to the size of the trap and license system?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, and practically that is all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My opinion has been expressed time and again—based on opinions I have received from the different lobster packers—that the measure which will result in preserving the lobster better than any other will be the fixing of a close season. For the past fifteen or twenty years we have had a season which is fixed by Order in Council. Pressure of one kind or another is invariably brought upon the department to extend that season. These extensions have done more damage than anything else. I am thoroughly satisfied that if we could have a close season—perhaps not the same for each province—but a close season fixed by statute, which it would not be in the power even of a Cabinet Minister, no matter what pressure might be brought to bear, to alter, that would no doubt go a long way to solve the question. We must see the great importance of the fisheries, when we find in the hon. gentleman's report the information that 88,000,000 were canned during the last season, and over 13,000,000 cans put up. Every bit of legislation which affects this industry will be scanned very critically by all interested, and I therefore hope that the hon. gentleman will have his Bill put in our hands at a very early day in order that we may be able to master its provisions and discuss it intelligently.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite agree that this is a very important subject, and it is entirely too late in the day to bring down any radical proposition concerning it. I have therefore confined the provisions largely to clauses upon which we had reached unanimity, after a very lengthy discussion, two years ago. The question upon which there is room for much discussion, and concerning which we have not obtained all the information required, I have dropped out of the Bill. The particular clauses I intend submitting will affect no one this year, as they come in force in 1895, but of course we must give notice. The season begins the 1st of January.

Mr. FRASER. I regret also that the Bill was not brought down at an earlier date, and I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he should not confine his inquiries for information to the sources he mentioned, his own officials and the packers. I would suggest that he should also get information from the fishermen themselves. While there may be a disposition among the fishermen, in some cases, to have the law framed in their own particular interest, still the general information he will get from both lobster packers and fishers will be found very valuable. I am glad he has referred to the fact that there should be a change in the time, in so far as the provinces are concerned, but I think it will be found that even within the limit of some of the provinces there is a difference. There is a difference between Cape Breton, for example, and the western shore of Nova Scotia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is recognized now by the regulations.

Mr. FRASER. Yes; and even at much shorter distances than Cape Breton and the western part of Nova Scotia. I would impress upon the hon. gentleman that he should get information from every source and not confine himself to his own officials.

While the officials may be good men, they have certain ideas of their own, and he should not pass over the packers and the fishermen.

Mr. GILLIES. I quite agree with the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) that whatever information can be had, should be obtained by the hon. Minister before finally submitting his Bill. Although I fully recognize the fact that very high scientific information can be furnished by the officers of his department, still I am slow to believe that they are in possession of every fact in connection with this industry. I know that there are men in the canning industry in my own county, some of whom rank very high as experts in matters of that kind, from whom it would be wise on the part of the department to obtain every information before coming finally to any conclusion. As to the seasons during which this business is carried on, I am very familiar indeed with the industry as pursued in Cape Breton. While I am just as anxious as the hon. Minister himself to have every precaution taken for the preservation of this important industry, yet—and I may say this desire applies to many of those engaged in the canning business—I submit that the fullest concession should be given to the fishermen to pursue this industry upon the coast of Cape Breton to as late a day in the season as is consistent with its preservation. I know that on the coast of Cape Breton, where storms prevail to a very late day in the season, although the season opens on the 1st of January, yet the fishermen on the southern and western portion of the Cape Breton coast are unable to put out to sea until sometimes in the month of June. Then the season closing on the 15th July limits them really to a period of only six or eight weeks: and if you take out Sundays and holidays and stormy days, when they cannot put out to sea, the House will perceive how limited is the time in which they are able to prosecute that industry. Therefore when you say the season begins in January and ends the 15th July, that really does not apply to the eastern portion of Nova Scotia at all. The season on the Cape Breton coast ought to be extended to the 31st of July owing to operations being delayed in commencing until June, owing to storms. I would therefore ask the hon. Minister to give reasonable means to the people interested in the prosecution of this industry and the preservation of the lobster to be heard fully upon this question, and I would ask him to give them every opportunity to make an ample statement and furnish complete information before finally concluding the measure he intends to submit.

Mr. FLINT. I notice that the hon. Minister refers to licenses, but did not say whether they would apply only to the packers or to the fishermen as well. If applied merely to the packers, I would not have much objection to it, as I suppose it is to prevent the taking of lobsters under size or of female lobsters with spawn. But if licenses are to be applied to fishermen, there will be great objection. The question of the season is one of great importance, and I trust that before the matter comes up for discussion the hon. Minister will take steps to lay before the House the information he may have in his hands, so that we may have the same opportunity of studying the question as the Government officials had.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Bill does not affect the fishermen as to licenses.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine to some complaints that have reached me from some of the inland waters. A number of the fishermen have complained that their seines have been seized and burned. The hon. Minister dropped an observation with regard to the prevalence of poaching and the necessity of adopting severe measures. I do not know whether any necessity of this kind exists. I have a letter from a Mr. Wellington Mattice, who complains that their seines were seized by a fishery officer named David Williams on the north shore of Lake Erie, and that other seizures were made and that a great deal of excitement prevailed among the fishermen of that locality. They seem to think they have been very harshly dealt with. I bring the matter to the attention of the Minister. Perhaps he has some explanation to make?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Under what law were those seizures made?

Mr. CHARLTON. Under the general fisheries law.

Mr. FORBES. In reference to the remarks made by the Minister and by the several members with regard to the lobster fisheries, I take it that they are upon phases of this subject not affected by the Bill. The remarks of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies) are entirely foreign to this Bill. As I understand it, the hon. Minister proposes next year, as it were, to codify these regulations respecting fishing, and especially lobster fishing. I understand that this Bill, in the first place, provides for the licensing of lobster packers and, in the second place, codifies the regulations respecting drifting for salmon. I must object to the first part of the Bill which refers to the licensing of lobster packers. There is no reason why this industry should be taxed any more than any other industry engaged in packing material for human food, and neither of them should be taxed at all. Why tax the lobster packers any more than the packers of fruit or vegetables? The Government does not state its reason, that which would be the only just reason, that this was for revenue only. If the object is to classify the several packers, surely, with the army of officials in the pay of the Government, it is quite possible to find out these packers and watch their operations, and by compelling the lobster packers to take out a license and charging them a fee for the same, you reduce the amount that they will be able to pay for the raw material they use, and thus you reduce the price paid for the lobster to the catcher of the fish. I cannot see any reasonable answer to the objection that has been made before to this action of the hon. Minister. As to the drifting for salmon, it may be right that this regulation should be followed in certain counties. I know nothing about the district in New Brunswick referred to by the hon. Minister more than I have learned from the public press. It is stated that the Minister harshly imposed certain regulations and, later, for certain reasons, withdrew them and allowed the fishermen to go on with their operations. Whether this was done for local purposes, and to improve the standing of himself and others, I do not know. But this I do know, that he has evidently made a mistake in enforcing these regulations, as shown by the facts that he retired from the position he took, and that he now proposes to allow the fishermen by Act of Parliament, to follow the practice they were previously following. As to the introduction of this Bill, at the present time, I quite agree with the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) and the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) in objecting to the lateness of its introduction. We cannot now put ourselves in communication with the packers and those interested in this great industry to ascertain their views. I understand that the matter was under discussion two years ago, but then the policy indicated by the Minister was so indefinite that we were not able to place any definite view before our constituents and the citizens who are interested in this industry. Thus we are, to a great extent, unprepared to discuss this matter with the practical knowledge we should possess before we attempt to discuss it. We must, to a great extent, depend upon the official report and upon the knowledge hon. members of this House may have upon the subject themselves. As the hon. member for Guysboro' said, the official information laid before the House is gathered entirely from one side, from the officers of the department, and those who are in favour of imposing this tax. There are two sides to this, as to every case, and there is no doubt that a large number of citizens will be opposed to the imposition of this tax. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that before the hon. Minister asks the House to go into committee on this Bill he should be prepared with some better statement of the facts than he has thus far presented, so that we may discuss the subject more clearly.

Mr. BOWERS. I notice that the hon. Minister had something in the Bill about pollution of rivers. Will these provisions respecting the pollution of rivers apply to all parts of the Dominion, or only to certain parts?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The provision is general.

Mr. BOWERS. Does it include the Ottawa River?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Ottawa River is exempt by Order in Council.

Mr. BOWERS. I should suppose from the account we had of saw-dust gathering in the Ottawa there must be pollution of that river.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman does not think that the Ottawa River affects any fishery, I suppose. There are not many lobsters there, at any rate.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know whether the fish in the Ottawa River like saw-dust or not. Of course, they may be a peculiar sort of fish, being so near the Parliament House. With regard to lobster fishing, I may say that I have called the attention of the Minister and the House for some years past to this question. I have received a great many letters from my constituents in regard to the size of lobsters. I thought I had a sort of understanding with the Minister that before any legislation was brought in he would call the members from the Maritime Provinces together, talk the question over and get their views. In certain parts of Digby County you can catch lobsters from the 1st January to the close season. In other parts, from Brier Island to Digby, along the Bay of Fundy, you cannot fish before the 1st of May.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that he is now addressing himself to points that are not covered by the provisions of the present Bill. The Bill that has been introduced has nothing to do with the subject of close seasons.

Mr. BOWERS. But I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to what I want introduced in the Bill. I want the size of the lobsters made ten and a half inches and also the close season lengthened to the middle of July. I agree with the hon. gentleman with regard to the licenses, though I do not agree that the licensees should pay a fee. I must say that in the small harbours along the shore to the eastward of Halifax. I have seen men taking lobsters out of season. If a law was enacted compelling the taking out of licenses, no doubt the most of this irregular fishing would be done away with, and that, I think, would be a good thing.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS.

Mr. BERGIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 146) further to amend the Act respecting the Department of Railways and Canals. He said: The object of the Bill is to reduce the hours of labour on the canals, and to provide that they shall not extend beyond 12 hours in any 24 hours. The reason I have introduced the Bill is that during the past season, for 12 or 14 weeks, men were obliged to work from 18 to 20 hours per day. Accidents happened to two or three of them, some of the men were made so seriously ill by the excessive labour that they were for a long time unable to work.

Mr. LAURIER. Is that done by the Government of the country?

Mr. BERGIN. It is done under a system that existed during the time the hon. gentleman's friends were in power.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GRAND JURORS.

Mr. EDGAR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to suggest to the leader of the House whether it would not be well to transfer Bill No. 24, which passed the committee of the House last night, to the Government Orders. I doubt if it will be reached this session unless that is done, and as it passed through committee unanimously, and with the approval of the Government, I would suggest that it be placed on the Government Orders.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will consider the best way to deal with it.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before passing to the Orders of the Day, I desire to call the attention of yourself, Mr. Speaker, and of the House, to the fact that in the Public Accounts Committee, where we have been holding an investigation with respect to the Wellington Street and Grand Trunk bridges in Montreal, for some time past, and where a large quantity of evidence has been already taken, the committee recommended to the House that this evidence should be taken by shorthand reporters and be printed for the information of members attending the committee. Hon. gentlemen will see that it is absolutely essential that this evidence should be in our hands before the investigation closes, as cross-examination is almost impossible where a witness has been examined for three or four days in succession, unless you have in your hand the evidence he has given to look over. Now, it was brought before the attention of the committee this morning that this evidence has been taken by shorthand reporters, has been transcribed by them, and has been sent to the public Printing Bureau, and we have never been able to get a line of the printed evidence yet. I know of no way of achieving that result, except by bringing the matter before the attention of the House, in the hope that the proper officers will see that the orders of the committee and of the House are attended to, and that this evidence is brought before them. As the Secretary of State is not in his seat, I would bring the matter to the attention of the leader of the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will mention it.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 137) further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

DUTY ON STEAMBOAT TONNAGE.

House resolved itself into Committee on the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that a rate or duty fixed by the Governor in Council, and not exceeding ten cents for every ton gross tonnage, shall be paid by the owner or master of every steamboat in Canada.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does that amount to, all told?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The present rate is 8 cents a ton. We have authority by existing legislation to make that tax anything up to 10 cents a ton, which is the maximum. It has been as low as 4. In 1868 it began at 10 cents, and it was reduced on account of the fees showing a surplus over the expenditure. Then when that position was reversed, the tax was again raised from 4, finally it has reached 8 cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the total gross tonnage?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In 1893 it was $25,000. The tonnage would be about 300,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would yield possibly $30,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want the hon. gentleman to explain the necessity for this legislation. I understand there has been no change made. How have the fees been exacted heretofore, and what is the necessity for the Bill?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I explained that to the House, I think, before. We repeal the old section of the Bill, and re-enact it with the following words added, which are the only new words in the Bill: "the yearly rate of inspection fee hereinafter imposed and." In the old Act there was an exception in the inspection of certain smaller craft; those words simply made them subject to the inspection of their boilers and their machinery. It was quite clear they were bound to submit to inspection, but the words not applying to them as they did to the other craft, there was a possibility of this point being raised at any time, although it never has been. Ever since 1867 the tonnage tax has been paid without demur by all vessels that obtained the benefit of inspection and obtained a certificate of inspection. But my officers brought this point to my attention as a departmental question, and I saw there was ground for a nice question to be raised in the courts, that although these smaller craft were bound to submit to inspection, the whole burden of the inspection was borne by the owners of the larger vessels. That was never intended, and it has never been the practice, but they all pay into the fund according to their tonnage. The object of the Bill is to retain that clause, but to legalize what we have done by making it retroactive.

Mr. WELSH. I see that is on the gross tonnage.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Upon the gross tonnage, that is the law at present. We are not altering the law in the slightest particular, but simply removing any grounds for doubt.

Resolution agreed to.

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

Bill (No. 98) further to amend the Revised Statutes, chapter 77, respecting the safety of ships was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is a Bill which covers two or three clauses, but the point of it is very concise. It is long, because we re-enact for the sake of convenience the sections we amend, instead of amending them by a word or two. The main object of the Bill respects the carrying of deck-loads. Doubt has been entertained by the department for some time as to this question, whether the present law is too restrictive. During what are known as the hurricane months, we restrict vessels carrying deck-loads to the West Indies to a height of three and a half feet, while the United States vessels are unrestricted, and carry deck-loads four, five and six feet in height. I caused a very full and complete departmental inquiry to be made into this subject, as it seemed to be carrying the law which obtains between England and Canada, that is, the English statute as regards Canadian ships going to English ports, a little far, and it was declared that in the opinion of the majority of those best able to judge, in the opinion of the advisers of the Marine and Fisheries Department and of the various port wardens, that owing to the particular build of the vessels engaged in the trade there was no necessity to enforce this restrictive measure, but that it would be perfectly safe to allow six feet of deck-load instead of the height allowed by the present law. That is the main change proposed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What was the height before?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Three feet.

Mr. HAZEN. I would like to know whether this Act will apply to vessels going from Canada to the Canary Islands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. HAZEN. What reason is there for vessels in that service not being allowed to carry six feet of deck-load, when vessels are allowed to carry that deck-load down to South America and Rio Janeiro, where the voyage is much more dangerous.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is a question which neither the hon. gentleman nor myself can very satisfactorily thresh out on the present occasion, but I have made very careful inquiry into this matter. If it were not for the opinion of nautical experts that, owing to the particular class of vessels engaged in the trade, the law might safely be changed, I would not submit the proposal. At the same time it is pointed out that vessels engaged in crossing the Atlantic are a different class of vessels entirely, and the best opinions obtainable by the Board of Trade of England are that great danger would be experienced by any of the Atlantic vessels crossing at a certain period of the year, the period mentioned, with a deck-load higher than I have mentioned. I am quite satisfied that if we proceed in this matter contrary to the opinions of our own expert advisers, and also contrary to the opinions of the English Board of Trade, we will find very different treatment shown to our shipping entering English ports. In many of these matters we must of necessity work with the English authorities, and we desire to maintain the best standing possible for our vessels, and to obtain for them the best treatment possible. They do not always get it, because the English authorities are very rigid in regard to carrying out their own ideas. I have a case in mind where our adviser entertained certain opinions in regard to wooden ships, that the English load-line law was inapplicable to our vessels, but their own opinion prevailed. In this case we would have no ground to stand upon, if we opposed English opinion. I suppose hon. gentlemen will say that the proposal now submitted is a dangerous one, and that it would be still more unwise to make such a radical change as to concede to Atlantic vessels the same privilege we are now proposing to allow these vessels, which are specially built for a special voyage, and in regard to which we have a consensus of opinion that no risk or damage will be incurred.

Mr. WELSH. I do not know how the proposed amendment will agree with the present regulations. At present it is provided that there shall be no deck-load higher than three feet, during a certain season.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. From 1st of October to 1st March.

Mr. WELSH. I also understand that vessels loading for England can take a deck-load of only three feet, and that this regulation now applies to vessels going to the West Indies. The amendment is to allow West India vessels to take a six feet deck-load. I do not agree in the statement that the description of vessels is different, as compared with the vessels going to the West Indies and those going to English ports—I do not see any difference. If I was loading a vessel for the English market I would like to be able to carry a deck-load to the height of six feet, just as I would for the West Indies. If I was loading for the West Indies, of course, I would want the six feet deck-load. At all events, I am not going to object to the measure.

Mr. HAZEN. I am very glad the hon. Minister has introduced this Bill, increasing the height of the deck-load by three feet to vessels going to the West Indies. So far as the Bill goes, it is a good one, and is in the right direction, because while at the present time vessels loading for Rio Janeiro are able to go there and to Demerara and other parts of South America carrying six feet deck-load, yet they have only been able to go to the West Indies with three feet deck-loads. This Bill, however, does not go far enough. At the present time when the shipping of the country is in a depressed condition every effort should be made to remove useless restrictions, at all events what I consider are useless restrictions, on vessels engaged in the carrying trade of the country. During the last few years a very considerable trade has been built up, I understand, in carrying lumber in our schooners and coasters from New Brunswick to the Canary Islands. Under this Bill, which is a very great step in the right direction, although it allows deck-loads to the height of six feet to West India ports, and also to Demerara and Rio Janeiro, yet it does not allow more than three feet deck-load to the Canary Islands, and according to shipping men the voyage from St. John to the Canary Islands is not a bit more dangerous, in fact, is not so dangerous, as is the voyage from St. John to Rio Janeiro. In the voyage from St. John to Rio Janeiro you pass not far from the Azores at one point, which is not a very great distance from the Canary Islands, and then you turn south and go down by Brazil and along the coast of South America. I am told that is a more dangerous voyage than the voyage from St. John to the Canary Islands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This Bill is evidence that it is a dangerous voyage.

Mr. HAZEN. It is not evidence that the voyage to the Canary Islands is any more dangerous than the voyage to the West Indies.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the opinion of the Board of Trade and their advisers in England.

Mr. HAZEN. That may be, and I sympathize to this extent with the Minister of Marine: that in legislating on this matter we are hampered by the action of the English Board of Trade and must necessarily be so. I suppose that at present it would be impossible to include the Canary Islands as one of these ports to which vessels from Canada could go with a six-foot deck-load, but I trust that the Minister will endeavour to include that voyage at some early date, if he cannot do so now. If the Canary Islands could be included it would be of great advantage to the Canadian shipping trade and especially to the shipping trade of the province of New Brunswick. I believe that this provision would not be attended with any increased danger. Of course as the Minister said we are restricted in our legislation to some extent by the action of the English Board of Trade, and having in view the manner in which our shipping may be affected by any regulations they pass, it might not be wise to go further than the present Bill goes. I trust the Minister of Marine will have the matter carefully looked into between this and the next session, and if possible, that he have this Bill enlarged so as to include the Canary Islands.

Mr. WELSH. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hazen) that we should extend this Bill so as to include the voyage to the Canary Islands. My own experience of deck-loads is that a small deck-load is much more dangerous than a heavy deck-load, because if you have a three-foot deck-load and your bulwarks are five feet high, the water comes in and stops there and floats half the deck-load away. If your deck-load is level with your rail the water flows off. I believe that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) is right, and that it would be a great advantage to our trade if the Minister could see his way clear to extend this Bill so as to include the Canary Islands.

Mr. CHESLEY. I think I understood the Minister to say that the reason the voyage to the Canary Islands was not included in the Bill was: that a different class of vessels carry cargoes to the Canaries from those which go to the West Indies.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is what my observation was.

Mr. CHESLEY. In answer to the statement just made by the Minister, I may say that the same class of vessels carry lumber to the Canary Islands as carry lumber to the West Indies.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Do the same vessels go across the Atlantic to England?

Mr. CHESLEY. Yes, the same vessels.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman's information is different from mine.

Mr. CHESLEY. I speak from my knowledge of the business. Barquentines and three-masted schooners of three or four hundred tons carry cargoes across the Atlantic and to the West Indies and to South America and to the Canary Islands. It is true that we have large ships carrying lumber to British ports, but that is no evidence that smaller vessels do not carry lumber across the Atlantic. We have quite a large fleet of barquentines and schooners from three to five hundred tons carrying lumber from the port of St. John to the old country. If the class of vessels carrying the cargo is the only objection to including the Canary Islands in this Bill, then I am of the opinion there is no valid objection at all. I quite agree with the hon. member (Mr. Welsh) that a deck-load below the rail of the vessel is more dangerous than a deck-load a little above the rail, because in the former case you cannot secure it and in the latter case you can. If the deck-load is below the rail and the vessel ships water, then the water remains there and floats the deck-load off; whereas if the deck-load is a foot or six inches above the rail it can be fastened securely and the water runs off without doing damage. If the Minister would include the Canary Islands in the Bill I think it would be complete. The lumber carrying trade of the Canary Islands is getting to be of importance to the lumber shippers of the Maritime Provinces, and it is carried on by vessels of from three to five hundred tons, so that it would be very important to us if that voyage were included in the Bill.

Mr. KENNY. Many hon. gentlemen will remember that we had a very interesting discussion on this question a few years ago in which my hon. friend from Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird) took a prominent part, and placed before the House much valuable information respecting the class of vessels which are engaged in this particular trade, and which sail principally from the port of St. John. On that occasion the whole question of deck-loads was fully discussed and those who were conversant with the business came unanimously to the conclusion announced by my hon. and gallant friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Welsh) that a deck-load which was on a level with the rail was the safest deck-load for a ship to carry. Now, this trade with the Canary Islands is a new trade, and a developing trade, and in these days of keen competition all the world over, it is eminently desirable that in any foreign business in which we are engaged, we should be placed on the same footing as our competitors, and our competitors for this business are the Americans who have no restrictions as to deck-loads. As a ship-owner, and without any intimate personal knowledge of the class of vessels which are engaged in that business, but relying upon what was stated in the House by the member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) and on what has been repeated to-day by my hon. friends from St. John (Mr. Hazen and Mr. Chesley), I think that the Minister might safely extend this privilege to the Canary Islands. Looking at it from a nautical standpoint, as to the risk to crew and ship, and cargo, I do not think the risk is any greater in a voyage to the Canaries than it would be to Rio Janeiro or Monte Video. As far as the Atlantic voyage goes, I would very much prefer to go to the Canaries in the month of January than I would make a trans-Atlantic voyage to England. I concur with my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Chesley) in the hope that the Minister of Marine will, to-day, if possible, see his way clear to permit this privilege to be extended to vessels carrying lumber from the Canadian ports to the Canaries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I hope the committee will not think me unreasonable if I decline to accept the suggestion, and I will state briefly why I do decline. In the first place, it must be observed by the House that while many of the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the committee have spoken as representing shipping interests; none of these restrictions which the community in general hold to be necessary for the preservation of life, have ever been very popular in this House, or in any other Parliament, with those who immediately represent the men whose capital is invested in ships. They wish, not unnaturally, to be allowed to manage their property so as to make it pay; and most of them say, and a great many with truth: "We never would wish to cause loss of life or to run undue risks, because it is our property." Yet, experience in England, in Canada, and in every other country, shows that while some are so disposed, many have no great care except to make money; and Parliament, in endeavouring to throw necessary safeguards around human life, is obliged sometimes to impose restrictions upon some who really do not require them. I produce this Bill not as an evolution from my own consideration, for I do not pretend to be half as familiar with the management of ships as some hon. gentlemen about me; there are hon. gentlemen here who can teach me many things on that subject; but I have endeavoured to avail myself of the best authority I could. In the city of St. John I found people interested in the shipping business between New Brunswick and the West Indies year after year urging this to be an unnecessary restriction, and contending that a careful inquiry would show that we could amend the law with safety. The question of the Canary Islands was not brought up. The whole question related to the trade with the West Indies and with South America. What did I do, and what would any gentleman in my position do? I summoned to my aid the best advice I could get—not consulting the ship-owners, who I knew wanted all restrictions swept away; but I consulted men who were acquainted with the shipping trade, but not wholly under my control—such as port warden and harbour masters; and, though they were not all of the same opinion, the preponderance of opinion was in favour of the proposition which I have submitted to the House. I would be delighted to consider the points that have been submitted in this debate. I will, as I am bound to do, give them the same careful scrutiny as I have given to other matters; but as Minister of Marine I will not at any time, at the mere suggestion of those interested in shipping, make radical changes not preceded by careful inquiry, particularly when I know that the British Board of Trade, with their tremendous interests in shipping, with ships going to every quarter of the globe, allow no such privilege to their ships as is proposed here, whether they are iron or steel or composite. We are really going in advance of British legislation. I was sorry to hear one of the hon. members for St. John contradict statements put before me that the vessels going to the West Indies are a different class of vessels from those that cross the Atlantic. That statement was made to me by the owners of vessels; and I took it as well founded.

Mr. HAZEN. I am very glad indeed to have the assurance of the hon. Minister of Marine that this question of deck-loads to the Canary Islands is one that will be carefully considered, with the view of having the present grievance remedied, if it is found to exist. I feel satisfied that it will be found to exist, and that the hon. Minister of Marine, after careful inquiry, will find that there is no danger to the lives of those engaged in the shipping between New Brunswick and the Canary Islands if the deck-load is put on the same basis as the deck-load between Canada and West Indian ports. For years our people have claimed that it was an absurdity to restrict the deck-load to three feet. Year after year it was said that that restriction was imposed to protect the lives of those who manred the ships. But when the matter was looked into, and the opinions of men capable of giving an opinion were obtained, the conclusion was come to that a six-foot deck-load for the West Indies was safer than a three-foot deck-load. That opinion may not have been unanimous; but it must have been the general opinion, or the hon. Minister would not have introduced it into this Bill. I feel satisfied that the hon. Minister will also find that the general opinion of those who have examined the question will be that it will be safer to go to the Canary Islands with a six-foot deck-load than a three-foot deck-load. Apart from that, any man of common sense looking at the map cannot fail to come to the conclusion that the voyage from New Brunswick to the Canary Islands is as safe, if not safer, than the voyage to South America,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

yet we have a six-foot deck-load to South America, while to the Canary Islands we have only a three-foot deck-load. I hope something can be done in this matter before another season, because the trade with the Canary Islands is a growing trade, and an impetus would be given to that trade by allowing a six-foot deck-load.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Are the same class of vessels used for the Canary Islands as for the West-India trade?

Mr. HAZEN. Yes; the same. My hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Putnam), who is a practical man in shipping, tells me that they are the same class of vessels.

Mr. CHESLEY. Everybody who knows anything about shipping must know that there are many ports, especially in Ireland, where large vessels cannot enter; and the smaller vessels are chartered for these ports, because they can enter them. Therefore, the smaller vessels are employed in carrying lumber across the ocean, and they are subject to the same regulations as larger vessels. That has been going on for many years; and these are the same vessels that carry lumber to South America and the West Indies—vessels of from three to six hundred tons. If it is considered no more dangerous to cross the Atlantic with a vessel of that tonnage than to go to South America, then the same regulations as to deck-loads should be made applicable in each case. But apart from that, the British Board of Trade are making regulations year after year, the tendency of which is to surround the wooden tonnage of the Maritime Provinces with restrictions that are fast destroying the value of these vessels. Some members of that Board have an idea that the men who navigate ships and the men who own ships are reckless of human life; and, in order to protect the lives of sailors, these regulations are brought into practice, and their result is simply to throw a large portion of the trade of British vessels into the hands of Norwegians, who are subject to no such restrictions, or into the hands of Americans, who are subject to few or no restrictions. The Legislature of the United States simply says to the owner of a vessel, the owner of a cargo, and the insurance company: Settle this matter among yourselves. If the deck-load is dangerous, the insurance company will not insure it. We are handicapped by these restrictions to a great extent. Our coasting and shipping business generally is injured. I do not say this as against regulations, because I feel there ought to be some guards thrown around human life; but at the same time, when other countries, just as large as we are, manage these things without these objectionable restrictions, I cannot see any reason why they should exist here to the extent they do. I have always been inclined to believe that the matter practically settles itself between the owners of the cargo, the vessel owners and the underwriters.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The argument of the hon. gentleman amounts to this, if it amounts to anything, that all restrictions should be abolished, and that those introduced on the recommendation of the British Board of Trade are useless. No one who has read the discussion in the British House of Commons, when Mr. Plimsoll submitted his Bill, and saw the facts and figures as to the loss of life given by Mr. Plimsoll, could doubt that restrictions are necessary; and experience has since shown that these restrictions have done good. But listening to this debate, I think the balance of the argument is entirely with the hon. members for St. John. The hon. Minister has satisfied himself that it is desirable to alter the regulations prohibiting deck-loads on vessels sailing between Canada and the West Indies, and on these he would allow six-foot deck-loads. Well, precisely the same class of ships go to the Canary Islands as go to the West Indies, and we should extend the same privilege to vessels sailing to the Canary Islands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are the dangers the same?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman can show that there are dangers going to the Canary Islands which do not exist in going to the West Indies, he will be introducing another element; but until that is asserted, the balance of the argument is with the hon. members for St. John.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The arguments for throwing away restrictions come very generally from those who are opposed to all restrictions. We have to consider the source from which the opposition comes and the views which the hon. member for St. John and a great many hold on the matter. If you were to poll all those immediately connected with shipping, no doubt the great majority would be for abolishing all restrictions.

Mr. CHESLEY. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have not sailed ships, but I have read a good deal of testimony, I have a good deal in the department, and I have read a good deal brought out in England, and the history is the same everywhere. It was not the owners of ships who were anxious to throw around the sailors the safeguards given to them to-day. On the contrary, they fought such legislation tooth and nail. Every shipping gazette to-day speaks in the angriest tones of the manner in which the shipping interest is hampered by humanitarians in Parliament who have thrown safeguards—in my opinion most necessary safeguards—around the men employed on the ships and who are making money for the ship-owners. We cannot help recognizing the fact that these criticisms come from a quarter where you do not find any agitation at any time for restrictions of any kind whatever upon the management of ships by the owners themselves. What else do I find? To go to the Canaries you have to cross the Atlantic. You have to go further than in going to England from Canada. It is a longer voyage across the same ocean, and if those hon. gentlemen's arguments carries them any distance, it carries them to the abolition of these restrictions on the voyage to England. They are all of the opinion that the English law is unnecessary and taxes our people unduly. I hear an hon. gentleman say "no, no," but I think I have heard that hon. gentleman in this House pitch in generally to the three-foot deck-load, and I know that the majority of ship-owners in this country want the three-foot deck-load, as to English ports and the Atlantic, abolished. That is not a popular law in this country at all. A large part of the evidence upon which the Bill is based is to the effect that the class of vessels going to the West Indies are peculiarly built, that they do not cross the Atlantic, and that it is only an exception when they do—that they are of very shallow draft, wide in the beam, and built for that trade, and are known as belonging to that trade. That is the information on which I am going. It is pointed out by nautical men that they are not the class of vessels that could safely prosecute a voyage across the Atlantic.

Mr. CHESLEY. I say they do cross.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. These men who advise me are men, most of whom have got out of the control of the owners of ships and are in a position to give impartial information—all navigating men—brought up to study the science of navigation and of great experience. I have said before that there is not a unanimity of opinion among these men. Many ask that we should retain the three-foot deck-load, and some use the argument, now found to be correct, that the moment you go to Parliament to give way on that three-foot, you will bring on all kinds of difficulties, and argument will be made to throw down this necessary and valuable protection elsewhere. It can be only said that a strong case is made for the Canary Islands, if the premises upon which that Bill are based, are shown to be absolutely incorrect. I hope the House will not think, because there has been a large expression of opinion in favour of the change, that I am disrespectful or indifferent to that opinion, and am stubbornly standing by the Bill. On the contrary, although I think their arguments are based on a standpoint we do not admit from the departmental standpoint, and although, as far as I have been able to investigate the subject, I think the restrictions are necessary in the interests of the public at large, I shall go most carefully and critically into this question that has been raised, and be the first to confess that I am wrong in the opinion I have formed. If I feel warranted in making that admission.

But the change is a very small one in words, the Bill is pretty long, and I would like the committee to take this one change and go through with it, leaving the other under consideration.

Mr. GILLMOR. I am a little surprised to hear marine men say that vessels have not been constructed specially for carrying deck-loads.

Mr. CHESLEY. We do not say that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They said that vessels were not constructed specially for the West Indies trade.

Mr. GILLMOR. They astonish me by saying that six-foot deck-loads are not more dangerous than three-foot. I have been across the Atlantic with a deck-load on the ship, and in a storm I was very sorry indeed that there was any deck-load. In fact it is quite impossible that a six-foot deck-load should not be more dangerous than a three-foot. There is no doubt about it at all—the lives of the seamen and all on board are in danger with those heavy deck-loads. As to West India vessels, formerly. I know—as there was a good deal of lumber shipped from where I lived—the vessels were so constructed as to carry a large part of the load on deck. There was then greater danger of a disaster in a storm because of the deck-load. It is well enough in these waters—there is fair weather here. But out in the Atlantic with a storm raging, a man, even if the money to be paid for delivering the cargo were for him, would heartily wish that the deck-load had been left at home. I think that the Minister has gone as far as he could under the circumstances. Of course there is a great deal of pressure in favour of carrying as much as possible, now that shipping is so dull in St. John. Now that every interest is bleeding at every vein, they want to be allowed to take a deck-load in order to try and make the voyage pay. If you will have free trade you need not overload the vessel. However, I think the Minister has gone quite as far as is prudent, and I think his information is, to a large extent, correct. The class of vessels that carry deals and lumber across the Atlantic are not, as a rule, the vessels carrying this class of freight to the West Indies—the Atlantic vessels are usually larger and of a different model and are constructed to carry a smaller deck-load relatively than those going to the West Indies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What does this definition mean?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I propose to put in a subsection (g). We have now all kinds of definitions of the West Indies by the collectors of customs. For the purpose of the Act we take some definition, and, though under it a part of South America is included, we take a definition which has been found convenient by the Lords of the Admiralty in connection with the administration of their ships. The clause (g) which I propose, the hon. gentleman will see, will take in South America, the islands and all the rest of the continent. I propose this subsection:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

(g) The expression "South America" means any part or place on the mainland or islands adjacent between the south-eastern extremity between French Guiana and the Strait of Magellan.

Mr. FLINT. I do not see South America mentioned in clause 7.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This amendment respecting South America was put in in the Senate, and I have adopted it. The hon. gentleman will find it in the Senate Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What does the hon. gentleman mean by this subsection (e), defining "passenger"?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is according to the English statute, and is the same as our definition in the Steamboat Inspection Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do you intend to make "passenger" include any person carried on the vessel and not connected with it, whether he is paying his passage or not?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the law under the other Act, and I think, under like circumstances, should be adopted here.

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is not that a new clause?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is intended in lieu of the fourth section of the Bill, which the hon. gentleman will see relates to gang-boards and lights when passengers are carried. We require vessels carrying passengers to use gang-boards as in the Steamboat Inspection Act, and we do not intend that that should apply to yachts used exclusively for pleasure or without hire.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But the exemptions of the Inspection Act are not the same as they are here. It is not limited to yachts used exclusively for pleasure or for private use. There are other kinds of vessels excluded from the operation of the Inspection Act.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not as to gang-boards. This section is necessary in order to exempt yachts used exclusively for pleasure, or not for hire or remuneration.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not been able to get a copy of the Inspection Act as there was not one in the library for some extraordinary reason, but my recollection of the Act is that it does not apply to small steamboats for fishing purposes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They do not carry passengers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there are small steamboats coming into use more and more every year, used by lobster packers and others to go out and bring the lobsters to the canneries, and for other purposes in connection with fishing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They will not be affected by this Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps I ought to take the hon. gentleman's statement, but my reading of the Bill is not the same as his.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. These vessels do not want to go to the West Indies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand what the hon. gentleman means. But if he makes "passenger" include every person aboard who is not one of the crew, that of itself might, under strict reading, make this Bill applicable to these vessels used for fishing purposes, as they very often carry persons who are not part of the crew.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the vessel carries passengers it should have the necessary appliances for safety.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But these are not passengers in the ordinary sense as being persons who have taken passage or paid for it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But this is the present law. If you go out in one of these tugs, unless you are, according to the definition "other than the master and crew, and the owner, his family and the servants attached to his household," the vessel must have the necessary appliances for safety.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But it is quite common for persons to jump aboard and go out on one of the short trips of such a steamer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There are many things done in the teeth of the law which ought not to be done.

Mr. BOWERS. Under the interpretation of the word "guests," I would ask the Minister whether, if a person had a friend that he wanted to take out, he would come under that interpretation?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is often the case that in committee we discuss a good deal of the law as it has been, instead of the law as it is proposed to be. But I should not like to alter that definition. It is the definition of a passenger in all our statutes; it is taken from the Imperial Act, and has been under consideration several times. I think it would be much better not to extend the definition. We have got to draw the line somewhere. We have got to say what will constitute a passenger ship, because we say that every ship carrying passengers is bound to obtain a certificate, and to have certain appliances for saving life; and we have followed in the line of the Board of Trade in this respect. They say that if a boat carries more than the master, the crew, the owner and his family, and the servants attached to his household, then she comes into the category of a passenger ship.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Would there be any objection to exempting smaller steamers exclusively employed for fishing purposes?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They are exempted now. There is not a clause that will apply to them.

Mr. BOWERS. I went over to the office this morning to get some information that I might answer a letter that I have received. I have a letter from Mr. W. T. Bacon, of Digby, who says:

I own a steam launch 26-foot keel, 7-foot beam, and 33-foot over all. Her cylinder is 5 by 6. It was my intention to run her on Digby Basin as a pleasure boat for summer visitors, parties, &c., but I am told that I must have a certificated engineer to manage her.

Would this gentleman be allowed to carry visitors?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's letter refers to the Steamboat Inspection Act. If he will come over to the department I will give him all the information he requires with regard to the existing law. I suggest that we should now confine our attention to the amendment proposed, and not to the administration of another statute.

Mr. BOWERS. I was going to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that I saw an engineer, or some other officer, in the department this morning, and he told me that man would be allowed to carry on this boat, his wife and family, and his servants, but he would not be allowed to carry any guests.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We cannot change that in this Bill. That is the law now.

Mr. BOWERS. The official thought himself that the law was a little absurd in this respect, and should be amended so as to allow these small boats to carry guests or visitors when no fees were exacted.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to help the hon. gentleman carry through the Bill as quickly as possible. He said there was another section which would operate to exclude small steamers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, I say these steamers are not covered by any section in this Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I point out to the hon. gentleman that this covers all ships except those especially exempted, and the special exemption is yachts used exclusively for pleasure or private use, without hire or remuneration. Therefore, every steamer other than a yacht used exclusively for pleasure or private use, without hire or remuneration, comes within the Act. Now, the hon. gentleman's definition of passenger covers the case referred to by my hon. friend from Digby. Therefore, every small steamer engaged in this lobster fishery, that may have on board any person who is not actually a member of the crew, would be obliged to carry the gang-board provided by the 4th section. If the hon. gentleman does not want to alter the definition of passenger, he might exempt that class of steamers entirely, because it is not necessary they should carry gang-boards.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no necessity for the exemption whatever. The hon. gentleman has failed to catch my explanation. Take a boat that is going out without a passenger certificate, a tug attending a fishing boat. These vessels under the law have no right to carry passengers. The minute they attempt to carry passengers they have got to do as other passenger boats.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is, passengers as we have understood the term heretofore, but you are extending the meaning of the term passengers, and making it include everybody on board ship except the crew.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is covered by the existing law. The Steamboat Inspection Act has this exact clause, defining a passenger as I do in this Bill. That steam tug to which he refers is already covered by these very words in the Steamboat Inspection Act from which this language is taken. The object is to proceed on a uniform line. I am certain I am right, because I have had opportunity to look into that case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not want the hon. gentleman to alter his definition of passenger; he does well to make it uniform with the interpretation in the other statutes; but I submit whether it would not be worthy of consideration that these steamers should be exempt entirely from the operations of this Act the same as yachts.

On section 4,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is the law at the present time. It is part of the Steamboat Inspection Act, and is inserted here for convenience, as parties looking for it would probably refer to this Bill.

Mr. WELSH. If this is the law at the present time, the Government will have to keep a great many more lights than they have now at different parts of Prince Edward Island, because there are no lights on Government wharfs where steamers land, and the Government will therefore be liable for heavy damages if passengers are injured. Too large an expense will be necessary to keep lights burning on every wharf.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Surely the hon. gentleman thinks that the owner of a wharf where steamships or sailing vessels carrying passengers land should take every reasonable precaution as regards providing a gang-board and lights.

Mr. WELSH. I am alluding to the fact that lessees or occupiers of wharfs would have to keep lights burning all night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the law now.

Mr. WELSH. It is not carried out at wharfs under Government control. If the regulation is not carried out at the Government wharfs, there will, no doubt, be trouble.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There has not been any trouble. When we land passengers at the Government wharfs we provide lights.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The point is this, that on every wharf where a vessel may possibly stop, a light must be kept at every angle of it all night, a regulation which would involve enormous expense, for a wharf owner cannot tell when a vessel is going to land at his wharf.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is one of the most reasonable provisions in existence, but I do not care whether it is inserted in this Bill or not. It is the law at the present time, and my only desire for incorporating it in the present Bill is for the sake of convenience. Now, what are the points to which hon. gentlemen opposite object? The hon. gentleman does not object to a gang-board, but I have heard of a ship-owner object to a gang-board and say that an ordinary plank would be sufficient.

Mr. WELSH. That is nonsense.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That objection was made by an hon. member of the House. In the next place, we provide that "The owner or occupier of every wharf or landing place shall also, in the night time, cause to be shown conspicuously on such wharf or landing place, and at every angle or turn thereof, during the whole of the time that any ship is approaching thereto or stopping thereat, a good and sufficient light."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My point is this: I do not object to that regulation applying to wharfs at which passengers are regularly landed. It is a perfectly proper regulation; but the provision as now drawn, compels the occupier of every wharf, whether steamers touch there regularly or not, to keep a light at every angle of the wharf or the party will incur penalties. Such could not be the intention of the framers of the Act.

Mr. HAZEN. It is not that, because the language is: "The owner or occupier of every such wharf or landing place shall also, in the night time cause to be shown conspicuously on such wharf or landing place, and at every angle or turn thereof, during the whole of the time that any ship is approaching thereto, or stopping thereat."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How does the wharf owner know when a vessel is coming ?

Mr. HAZEN. He knows the hours at which the steamer is expected to arrive.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has in view, evidently, the River St. John. It is perfectly right that when passengers are landed at wharfs these precautions should be taken ; but I say the phraseology is so broad and wide that we compel every lessee and occupant of a wharf to keep a light at every angle of the wharf in the event of any vessel landing passengers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If we drop this section from the present Bill, it is still the law.

Mr. BOWERS. We have a steamer plying from Yarmouth to Westport, calling at different points, and at every one of those calling places the owner of the wharf would be compelled to keep a light all night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. BOWERS. When the vessel arrives at the wharf it remains there until next morning, and there is no need of a light on the wharf. The steamer is owned by the parties who own the wharf.

Mr. HAZEN. If this is the law at the present time, it is much more honoured in the breach than in the observance. As regards the gang-plank section, the Minister has said that some member, and he was referring to a gentleman who is not now here—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How does the hon. gentleman know that he is not here, and that he is the same person ?

Mr. HAZEN. Because the hon. gentleman expressed to me a similar view.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has no right to assume that it was a certain member of this House, and that it was the same member as the one to whom he is now referring.

Mr. HAZEN. Then I will assume it was a different hon. member. So far as the gang-plank arrangement is concerned, it has not been in force in New Brunswick for twenty-five years. If this provision is enforced, it will be enforced to the great disadvantage of shipping on the St. John River.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong in saying it is not enforced.

Mr. HAZEN. I am not wrong ; I know as a fact it is not enforced. It is just about as absurd a regulation as that about the metallic life-boat in the old Act, and which had to be taken out. At the terminal points of the line of these steamers, at Fredericton and St. John, they have a gang-plank which complies with the provisions of this Act. These boats in going up the river must touch at perhaps twenty places, and if they follow the provisions of this Act the owners must have a gang-plank at each place and a man employed during the whole of the season to attend to it ; because it is impossible to throw a large, heavy, solid gang-plank like this from the boat. You will have to have it on the wharf, and a man there to assist in placing it on the steamer. That will cost an outlay of thousands of dollars a year to those who own the boats. I have been travelling on the River St. John ever since I was a small boy, and within my recollection an accident has never occurred in connection with the present system of landing passengers. That system is : that the boat gets alongside the wharf and a plank is thrown out, and five planks are placed alongside it, making six planks in all, giving ample opportunity for people to go safely ashore. At some of those places along the river very few people land from the steamer, and they are not in the same position as the terminal points where a great many go ashore, and where you need to have a rail on the gangway. If this law passes it will be a great burden to the people running those boats, and it will not provide any more assurance against loss of life and loss of property. My hon. friend from Sunbury (Mr. Wilmot), who has been living on the St. John River for the last twenty-five or thirty years, will be able to remember if there has been a single accident under the system that now prevails, but in my recollection I cannot recall one. I would ask the Minister if he does not think it wise to strike out the words "so protected at the sides in a suitable manner, as to prevent passengers from falling overboard." This provision has not been observed, and has never been observed since the Act was in force, and there is no necessity for it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken in that. If I accept his suggestion it would not help him in the slightest degree, because every one of the vessels on the St. John River would still have to do, or be supposed to do, what they are obliged to do to-day, and that is : to have suitable gang-boards. I do not agree with the construction the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hazen) put on this clause, and I do not agree with the statement that the law is disobeyed. He has not produced a particle of evidence to show that the law is a dead letter on the St. John River. On the contrary, I believe that the law is obeyed, and the hon. gentleman himself showed in the last part of his speech how it is complied with. He explained the manner in which these little boats run up alongside the landing and put out planks, which are suitable in every respect for the purpose. I say that these vessels could not be prosecuted under this section, which says: "protected at the sides in a suitable manner to prevent passengers falling overboard." These are the words that will assist the hon. gentleman in acquitting a client who is charged with violating this Act. This clause requires nothing more than what is suitable to prevent danger to passengers, and the hon. gentleman has given testimony to show that there is no danger to people passing over these planks. I say that the law is observed in this respect, and that no fancy railing or anything of that kind is required. It is only required in cases where these planks are in a very different position to that described by the hon. gentleman, and where walking along them means risk to the passengers. Without any law of this kind I am quite certain that the owners would put a railing up where they considered it necessary. The clause does not say that these gang-boards are to have any particular provision on their side. I have endeavoured vainly up to this point to show that this is exactly the law as it stands to-day, and whatever we do now in this committee won't affect the law in that particular one particle.

Mr. LAURIER. But if valuable suggestions are made here they ought to be taken into consideration.

Mr. WELSH. I believe that the provision of the law in this Bill is perfectly right, and I hope the Minister will not change it.

Mr. HAZEN. I am very glad indeed that the Minister has given us his opinion as to what this gang-plank is to consist of. I may say without hesitation that if a client of mine consulted me I would give him a different opinion from that expressed by the Minister. I am pleased to find that the opinion of the Minister of Marine differs so very much from my own on the interpretation of this clause, and I presume that his officers acting under him will be bound by the opinion he has given to this committee.

Mr. LAURIER. What will the judges do?

Mr. HAZEN. I am not in the least afraid that the matter will ever come before a judge, if it does not come on the motion of the Minister or his officers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to know from the Minister whether he wants to compel the owners or lessees of any wharf whatever, irrespective of the fact that a steamer is expected to call or not, or whether a steamer calls there once in a summer or not at all; does he require by this law that they shall keep lights on that wharf? If there is no steamer calling at a wharf, the law is absurd on the face of it and cannot be carried out. I would suggest that the words be added, "where any ship carrying passengers is accustomed to stop."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have said over and over again that whether this particular law is right or whether it is wrong, no action of this committee in connection with this Bill can affect it one way or the other, because it will still remain the law whether you strike it out of this Bill or not. The suggestion of the leader of the Opposition is right: that if sound suggestions are offered here the whole law ought to be dealt with on the lines of these suggestions, but we cannot do that in this Bill. This provision is contained in the Steamboat Inspection Act, and we are now dealing with the law respecting the safety of ships. Outside that question altogether, I must say that I believe this is a reasonable law. It has never evoked a single objection from any one, and I never heard anything against it, until the member for St. John told us that the law was not obeyed. However, the statement of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) to-day gives evidence that the law is not disobeyed, and I think the practice obtaining on these boats shows that there are sufficient gang-boards at the side in a suitable manner to prevent passengers falling over.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman seems to take this position: that even if a suggestion to amend the section is a good one, it should not be adopted because the same section is in another statute. But the hon. gentleman intensifies the provision by repeating it over again in this statute, and if he has to amend it later he will be obliged to amend both Acts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think that this is a good law, but I did not want to say that hon. gentlemen were not right.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman says it is a good law, but he has not challenged the construction I put upon it. The fifty or sixty or one hundred wharfs which are in Prince Edward Island where steamers do not go at night will be obliged under that section to keep a light burning at every angle during the night if this law is enforced. Under that section they are obliged to keep a light burning at every angle.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's position is wrong. I have already told him that by the express language of the section the light is only required on the wharf during the time any vessel is approaching thereto or stopping thereat.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Precisely; that is the law. But if the vessel comes to the wharf, and the light is not there, the owner is liable. When a vessel calls at a wharf at stated periods, certainly there should be a light, but when vessels only call at extraordinary times, I think a general clause of this kind is absurd. If by any possibility a steamer should land a passenger at a wharf where there was no light, the owner or lessee would be liable to a heavy penalty. If the hon. gentleman would insert the word "knowingly" before the word "offends," it would meet the case.

Mr. FLINT. I can easily understand the advisability of this provision being inserted for the protection of passengers; but it seems to me that there ought to be some proviso for extraordinary emergencies. I believe it is understood that this Act applies to vessels regularly carrying passengers. When a tug-boat or a steamer carries a passenger for convenience, and not as a matter of business, I think it should not be subject to the penalties of this Act for doing what the Act does not intend to prevent. It would sometimes be a great inconvenience to the captain of a tug or a steamer were he obliged to decline to carry a passenger for fear of coming under the penalties of this Act. I think the Minister should insert a proviso that the Act shall not apply to those occasional circumstances where passengers are carried without pay or remuneration.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In reply to the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), I would say that I do not like the phrase "knowingly offends." I know what the hon. gentleman means—when not knowing of the approach and not having reason to expect the approach of a vessel.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes. For instance, a vessel may come into a port without the owner knowing that it is coming; and in the event of the wharf not being lighted and a passenger falling overboard, he might be liable to damages of $5,000 or $10,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will undertake to think of a suitable phrase before we reach the next stage of the Bill. I have a great objection to the proposition of the hon. member for Yarmouth. It is always difficult to draw the line in legislation of this kind; but it must be drawn somewhere, and in connection with passengers and passenger boats there is a great deal of trouble. The case happens constantly and the minute any local officer is allowed to grant these permits, you might as well repeal the law altogether. It is, in my opinion, a dangerous innovation.

Bill reported.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 130) to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

CERTIFICATES TO MASTERS AND MATES.

House resolved itself into committee on the following resolution:—

That instead of the fees provided by sections six and eight of the Act respecting Certificates to Masters and Mates of Ships, the Governor in Council may establish a scale of fees to be charged for such certificates; and until so established the fees to be charged shall be the following, that is to say:—For a certificate of competency as master, fifteen dollars; for a certificate of competency as mate of a sea-going ship, eight dollars; for a certificate of competency as mate of a ship trading on the inland waters of Canada, or on the minor waters of Canada, or on coasting voyages, six dollars; for a certificate of service as master, eight dollars; for a certificate of service as mate of a sea-going ship, five dollars; and for a certificate of service as mate of a ship trading on the inland waters of Canada, or on the minor waters of Canada, or on coasting voyages, four dollars.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I may say that these certificates are of great value, indeed. They are good wherever a British certificate, issued by the British Board of Trade, is valid. They are not only used in our own country, but those Canadian citizens who have to go abroad have found them of great value. In the United States, on the lakes, they have been of such value that Congress has had to take special steps to interfere, because the men holding them snapped up positions, their qualifications abundantly bearing out these certificates. Last year, the amount received as fees was $2,480, and the expenditure, $4,116, or a deficit of $1,632. Up to 1893, since 1871, the total deficit amounted to $45,000. In 1893, the expenditure was $4,000, and the receipts $2,000. In 1892 the expenditure was $4,000 and the receipts $2,000. In 1891 the expenditure was $4,000 and the receipts $2,000. It was anticipated at the outset that the fees would equal the expenditure, but such has not proved to be the case, and we find it necessary to make some slight increases.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It does not seem unreasonable, since the fund is not self-sustaining, that larger fees should be exacted. But I submit whether it is fair to raise the fee for a certificate of service where no examination is passed. In that case, all you have to do is grant the certificate, and there seems no reason for raising the fee. Of course, if a man wants to undergo an examination, it is proper he should have to pay for it, as in the case of a certificate of competency.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It would not do to make any distinction, and the objection is only sentimental after all, because there are very few certificates of service given.

Resolution agreed to.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION ACT.

Mr. DALY moved second reading of Bill (No. 104) to repeal the Homestead Exemption Act. He said: By the Homestead Exemption Act, passed in 1878, at a time before there was a Legislative Assembly in the North-west Territories, this Legislature provided for the exemption of 160 acres of land from execution. Since the passing of that Act, the Real Property Act has been introduced into the Territories, and the provisions of that Act are inconsistent with those of the Homestead Exemption Act. In 1892 the Legislative Assembly of the North-west Territories passed an Exemption Act providing, amongst other things, for the exemption of personal property from execution, and also for the exemption of real property to the extent of 160 acres. So long as the Homestead Exemption Act remains on the Statute-book this Territorial Act would be ultra vires of their Legislature, and, in order to meet the wishes of the people and place the law, so far as exemptions are concerned, in the position asked for by the Local Legislature, we repeal the Homestead Exemption Act passed by this House, leaving the law as passed by the Assembly of the North-west Territories in force.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. IVES moved second reading of Bill (No. 121) to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the North-west Mounted Police Force.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the tenor of the Bill; will the hon. gentleman please explain?

Mr. IVES. This Bill is more notable for its size as a consolidation than for the importance of its amendments. The changes are neither many nor of very great importance. The first amendment gives a statutory character to the Comptroller. The present Comptroller has held the position since January, 1880, under an Order in Council. This amendment gives statutory recognition to his position, and defines his duties.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the tenor of the Order in Council?

Mr. IVES. It appointed him Comptroller and gave him general management of the North-west Mounted Police Force. There is a slight amendment in the 6th section, exempting the surgeons from the provisions as to age. The original Act does not permit the appointment of an inspector or other officer of an age greater than forty years. It is thought that this should not apply to the medical men and surgeons of the police force. A provision is inserted permitting the commissioner to employ twelve young men or boys as buglers. This will effect a saving in the amount of pay, and will be the means of securing recruits, who will afterwards go into the force and become valuable constables. Authority is taken to pay the veterinary surgeons $1,000 a year. It has been found that it is impossible to retain the services of competent veterinary surgeons for $700 a year, and we have had to appoint them to the office of inspector, the salary of which office is $1,000 a year. But these men did not act as inspectors at all, but as veterinary surgeons. Authority is also taken to pay four staff-sergeants at the principal posts an increase of 50 cents per day each. The maximum salary under the Act is $1.50 per day. We take authority to pay these men an additional 50 cents, or a total of $2 per day. These officers have very responsible and arduous duties to perform, and it has been found difficult to get the right stamp of men at the rate of pay provided by the Act. There are a few other amendments, but the ones I have given are the only ones of any importance.

Mr. MARTIN. Section 90 gives the assistant commissioner the powers of two justices of the peace and the superintendent and such other officers as are selected by the Governor in Council such powers as are wielded by a justice of the peace. It has always appeared to me to be very improper to have persons who are arrested by the Mounted Police in the North-west Territories, tried and convicted by the officers who arrest them. That may have been a proper course at one time, when the country was new, but to-day the people of the North-west are just as law-abiding and as civilized in every respect as the people in any other part of Canada. They are a quiet and orderly community, and there is no justification for anything approaching military law in that portion of the Dominion. Except under circumstances where military law is required, it is certainly a wrong principle to allow the executive officers of the force, who are practically constables, to try persons for offences when they have themselves arrested those persons. I think it would be well to deprive all officers connected with the Mounted Police, of judicial functions. Instead of enacting by statute that these officers should be justices of the peace, ex officio, I think a proper provision would be that no officers of the Mounted Police should be appointed justices of peace. There are plenty justices of the peace now; if not, they can easily be appointed. The country is to-day in a settled condition, and there is no reason in the world why a person arrested by the Mounted Police for violations of the Customs laws, or any other laws, should not be tried in the ordinary way, as is done in the old provinces. I fancy that section 18 is a new section. It provides that every member of the force, other than a commissioned officer, charged with any of the following offences, may be punished:—

- (f) Wearing any party emblem;
- (g) Otherwise manifesting political partisanship.

I would be glad to have that law made applicable, not only to privates in the force, because I think there is no particular charge to be made against them in that respect, but to the whole force. It is true that in times past strong charges have been made on behalf of the Liberals in the Territories, that the police force has been used as a political engine in times of election, against the Liberal party. Whether those charges be true or not, it is most unfortunate that such a feeling should be abroad. It is asserted very strenuously that the police force have been moved into certain sections where they were likely to strengthen the Conservative party, and that that party has been strengthened in those particular districts in that way. I merely mention this to draw the attention of the head of the force to the fact, because it is most undesirable that any feeling of that kind should exist with regard to a force which should be free from any suspicion of that kind.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide, with respect to the North-west Mounted Police Force, that the maximum pay of veterinary surgeons shall be $1,000 instead of $700 per annum, that the maximum pay of four staff-sergeants shall be $2 instead of $1.50 per diem, and that twelve buglers may be appointed at the rate of pay not exceeding 40 cents per diem; and also to provide that all pay due to deserters at the time of their desertion from the force shall form part of the fund applicable to the payment of rewards for good conduct or meritorious services, to the establishment of libraries and recreation rooms, and such other objects, for the benefit of members of the force, as the Minister approves.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How many veterinary surgeons are there

Mr. IVES. The number is limited by the Act to two, of which we have authority to pay $1,000 to one, and the increase simply means $300 additional to one veterinary surgeon. One of the chiefs, so-called, now receives a thousand dollars, and we now propose to pay this second officer the same salary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose these men get allowances as well as pay?

Mr. IVES. They receive the same allowances as the other officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason you cannot continue to get veterinary surgeons at present rates?

Mr. IVES. You cannot get competent veterinary surgeons for $700 and the allowance that they receive. Experience shows that it cannot be done. We can get surgeons for that pay, men who have no special training, and who have not been licensed by a veterinary college to practice as veterinary surgeons; but we cannot get an educated and properly licensed veterinary surgeon for less than $1,000 a year. The committee will remember that a very large amount of money is invested in horses for the police, and the care of those horses is a very important matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, we are not disposed to fight with the hon. gentleman over a matter in which he has consulted his officers, but I am bound to say it means that if these men receive allowances, as I understand they do, I think the sum which has been heretofore paid, ought to obtain very fair veterinary surgeons.

Resolution agreed to.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PUBLIC HOLIDAYS.

Bill (No. 106) to amend the law relating to holidays was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Have any applications been made for this measure by the workmen of the country?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have had hundreds of petitions presented to this House from all quarters.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

New Dredging Plant..... $50,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman explain the purposes for which the new dredging plant will be used, and also where he proposes to use it?

Mr. OUMET. There are two items for new dredging plant, namely, $50,000 and $40,000. The first amount is to complete the construction of a new elevator dredge for the ship channel; and of two tugs, $6,000 and $14,000, making a total of $50,000. In addition to that vote, a further grant of $40,000 is asked for a new dredge for the Maritime Provinces, to replace the dredge, 'Cape Breton,' lost at sea, and also necessary scows, &c.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the new dredge for the Maritime Provinces to be built on the same plan as the old one? I understood that a new style of dredge was contemplated.

Mr. OUIMET. This new dredge for the Maritime Provinces will be ninety feet long, twenty-five feet beam, eight feet depth of hold, and it will have accommodation for officers and crew.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood it was contemplated to build a dredge that would be complete in itself without a steamer, that is to say, a vessel that will be both a dredge and steamer.

Mr. OUIMET. It will not be a self-propeller. The capacity of the new dredge will be about 700 cubic yards a day. It will have a steel hull. The officers of my department have taken the greatest pains to secure the best dredge that could be procured for the special service required on the coast of the Maritime Provinces. It will be built of extra strength, and I think it will do as much work as all the other dredges in the lower provinces, which I think are very poor vessels.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has any special model been followed as regards its construction?

Mr. OUIMET. It is not draughted at all after the model of the vessels now doing service in the Maritime Provinces. It will be made something like the last two powerful dredges built for the Montreal Harbour Commissioners, and will be for deep dredging at 35 feet, so that it will be able to work at any time of the tide and not be obliged to lose half a day on account of high tide, as our dredges do now sometimes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is this new dredge for the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. OUIMET. We will ask for tenders as soon as the appropriation is passed, and I expect it will be ready for work early next spring. It will then be sent immediately to the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where will the dredge be built?

Mr. OUIMET. I do not know exactly. The two firms just now in Canada considered competent for building dredges of this kind are Carriere, Lainé & Co. of Point Lévis, and Beatty & Co. of Welland.

Mr. FRASER. I am very much surprised to hear that announcement from the Minister. The Government have had a steamer completely built in New Glasgow for the Intercolonial Railway. That was a powerful steamer, and I believe it has given satisfaction to the Government. It is somewhat remarkable that the Minister should say that there were only two firms in Canada able to do this work.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. OUIMET. I do not speak of the steel hull. Tenders will be asked for that and the contract given.

Mr. FRASER. It makes no difference what kind of work is required of this kind—it can be done in New Glasgow. New Glasgow is an iron town, and everything can be done there to better advantage, I believe, than elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. OUIMET. I know that New Glasgow is an iron town, and they may build bridges and steamers and all kind of things and yet not be experienced as dredge builders. As I understand it, there is special machinery required for these dredges, and these two firms, Carriere, Lainé & Co. and Beatty & Co. have a kind of specialty in that business.

Mr. FRASER. Have they built all the dredges the Government have purchased?

Mr. OUIMET. Some of them were built thirty years ago, and I cannot say.

Mr. FRASER. The vessel that was built for the Government at New Glasgow was the first ever built in Nova Scotia, and was built by the people of the town; I. Matthewson & Co., and the steel works, and they did everything to the entire satisfaction of the Government.

Mr. OUIMET. What steamer was that?

Mr. FRASER. The steamer 'Mulgrave,' the best steamer that ever was built in Canada of its kind. I am satisfied of that statement, because the work that the steamer has performed is very difficult. The building of a dredge is not very complicated. All that has to be done is to give the plans and the workmen do the rest. I am not so much advocating the claims of New Glasgow, as to correct the Minister when he says that the two firms he mentions are the only ones who can do the work in Canada.

Mr. OUIMET. I say that these two firms are the only two firms in Canada that build dredges.

Mr. FRASER. They may be the only firms that have been asked to build dredges by the Government, but I know that dredges are not so difficult to build as a complete steamer. I can tell the hon. Minister that at the present time, when ships come into Halifax and any part of them is disabled, instead of getting the work done in New York, they now do it in New Glasgow, no matter how difficult the work is. The Minister must not be under the wrong impression that this kind of work can only be done in Quebec or Ontario.

Mr. OUIMET. Will the hon. gentleman give me the name of the firm?

Mr. FRASER. I. Matthewson & Co.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) has called the attention of the Minister to the fact that at New Glasgow a steel steamer has been built. I am not sure that all the plates were rolled there, but at all events the vessel was completed there, and I believe in a satisfactory manner. I should not suppose that the building of a dredge would be much more difficult than the building of a steel steamer, and as this work is to be put up to public tender, I presume that the steel works of New Glasgow will have an opportunity of tendering. It must be gratifying to the members on this side of the House to hear from my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) his testimony as to the effect which the National Policy has had upon the development of the iron industry of this Dominion.

Mr. FRASER. Let me correct the hon. gentleman.

Mr. KENNY. I am supporting the hon. gentleman's argument.

Mr. FRASER. But the hon. gentleman forgets that the steamer was built, not by the steel works, but by Mr. Carmichael, who is the head of the firm of I. Matthewson & Co., and who is the greatest free trader in Canada.

Mr. KENNY. I understood the hon. gentleman to base his claim on the fact that the steamer was built in New Glasgow.

Mr. FRASER. It was built by the enterprise of New Glasgow.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman instanced the fact that if repairs were required for a steel ship coming into the port of Halifax, the repairs could all be supplied by the New Glasgow steel works, and that the same works are quite competent to undertake the construction of a dredge.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. And that such things were never thought of there before the National Policy.

Mr. KENNY. Yes. My hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) is perfectly right; and I hope the day shall come, if this National Policy is adhered to, when we shall be able to build our fast Atlantic steamships in New Glasgow.

Mr. FRASER. I hope so too, but it will be on account of the skill of the people of New Glasgow and not on account of the National Policy. Let me give the hon. gentleman enlightenment. It was not the steel works or any person employed about them that built the steamer, but it was I. Matthewson & Co., of which Mr. Carmichael is the largest partner. They did it on business principles, and they imported large quantities of the material, and of course had to pay a good deal of duty, but notwithstanding all that they were able to do the work.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. They are able to do as much work as the National Policy will permit them to do, but they find, as all men who have to build ships of iron find, that the National Policy is against the building of iron ships in Canada as protection was against that industry in the United States. If there is anything that is going to kill ship-building in Canada the National Policy will do it. So far as the steel works are concerned, they are doing good work. They are doing large forging there now, and the skill of the men engaged in that enterprise can do a hundred times more than the National Policy. But what I rose for principally was to correct the Minister and to inform him that there is no work of this kind that the Government requires that cannot be done there. The Government show their wisdom sometimes against their professions by getting good work done outside the country when they can bring it in here without paying duty. I do not blame them for doing that. It is business, and the Government are wise by times in doing it. But I hope that the fullest opportunity will be given to all citizens of Canada to compete for this work, and I am sure if it is a matter for competition that the people of New Glasgow will be able to compete with the others. I am certain about the quality of work they can do in New Glasgow. I am quite sure that any work done by I. Matthewson & Co., or Graham Fraser, who is at the head of the steel works in New Glasgow, will never be found to be otherwise than well done. They do not claim to do work simply because they are assisted, but they claim to work on its merits and they do it well. The whole incident arose because the Minister said that there were only two places in Canada where these dredges could be built, but I can assure him that New Glasgow can build them, and build them well; and with the experience of the steamer built there before, which has given such satisfaction at Mulgrave, I have no doubt that New Glasgow will not be forgotten. I do not claim that New Glasgow should have any more opportunities than Carrier, Lainé & Co. I want them all to be put on the same basis. But, coming from that town, and knowing that with all our faults we are forging ahead and doing that kind of work, I felt that I could not let this occasion pass without calling the attention of the Minister to the fact, so that if in the future he wants anything done in iron or steel, he will remember that New Glasgow is as well able to do the work as any other place in Canada.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) indulges in the pious hope that the continuation of the National Policy will enable us to build ships in Canada. I have no objection to the hon. gentlemen indulging in them, although not very profitable to those who listen to them. The hon. gentleman has had a large experience, and he knows very well that the National Policy, which exists for the purpose of levying high duties to exclude goods from the outside world in order to protect home manufactures, has been tried elsewhere than in Canada, and, although it has been in force in the neighbouring republic for thirty odd years, it has not resulted in the fruition of the hopes he has expressed. The hon. gentleman knows that since 1861 our neighbours have fostered a National Policy, and many estimable gentlemen there indulged in hopes similar to those which he has expressed to-night. Have they been fulfilled? What do we see in that country day after day? We see that the steamships required by the great steamship companies of the United States are built in the ship-yards of Newcastle and the Clyde, and built with American money. In the very nature of things it must be so. The National Policy has for its object the raising of the prices of the necessaries of life, and the raising of the wages paid to the workmen; consequently, the increased cost to the manufacturer, owing to the increased prices of the necessaries of life and the increased price of labour. How then can he compete with the manufactured goods produced in a free country, where the necessaries of life are cheap, and where labour is paid in proportion? He cannot do it; the hon. gentleman knows he cannot. But these pious hopes may be indulged in for political purposes; I suppose they serve their end. If I am not taking the attention of the committee away from the argument, I would like to ask the hon. Minister what particular object he has in view in having a dredge for the Maritime Provinces capable of dredging to a depth of thirty feet? Are there any harbours where that depth or anything like it is found to be desirable or necessary?

Mr. OUIMET. Halifax, Yarmouth, St. John. You have to provide for the rise of the tide. If you want to dredge to a depth of twenty-five feet, and the tide is six feet, you will have to provide for thirty-one feet if you do not want your dredge to be stuck when the tide is at its highest point.

Mr. FRASER. That is right.

Mr. OUIMET. In some places the tide is more than six feet.

Mr. FORBES. It has a rise of more than six feet in St. John.

Mr. OUIMET. I hope the hon. gentleman is not obliged to get up to tell me that.

Mr. KENNY. It is quite evident that the hon. member for Queen's is not very familiar with the depth of water in the harbours of the Maritime Provinces, or else he would not find fault with the Minister of Public

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Works for providing this dredge. I think the general consensus of opinion among the members on both sides of the House would be that the hon. Minister is right in sending to the Maritime Provinces a vessel which can dredge to a depth of thirty feet. While I am on my feet I would simply say, in reply to the very amiable lecture delivered to me by my hon. friend in reference to the iron industry of the United States, that at all events the policy of the United States in developing the great iron resources of that country has resulted in this: that to-day iron is as cheap in the United States as it is in any other country in the world. The hon. gentleman must be familiar, from reading the newspapers, with the fact that ships for the American navy have been built in the United States which will compare in construction and in equipment and in every respect with the ships of any other nation in the world, and it is the impression in England and on the Clyde amongst the ship-builders themselves, that in the near future the American people will be able to build steel steamships as cheaply as any other country in the world, because they have raw material, the skill and the labour nearly as cheap.

Mr. FRASER. I regret that the hon. gentleman has introduced this question of cheapness and goodness. If the hon. gentleman were as well read in the matter of ship-building in the United States as he is in other subjects, he would not have said what he did. It is most remarkable that when hon. gentlemen want to make a point in favour of the National Policy they always say that the United States make better goods than England, while if we on this side say anything in the United States is good, we are disloyal. The hon. gentleman says that they can build as good ships in the United States as in England.

Mr. KENNY. I did not say that. I said they will compare favourably.

Mr. FRASER. Why, everybody knows what a spectacle we had a year ago: an American ship sinking in the harbour in a little storm, while an English ship went out breasting the waves. That is what protection does for ship-building. Has the hon. gentleman read of the ships built for the navy by that celebrated Pennsylvania man, Kelly? The fact is, they cannot build ships in the United States to compete with the ships of other countries. The trade of the United States is carried in English, Norwegian and other foreign ships. If the hon. gentleman would read some of the speeches on iron delivered in the United States Congress, notably by Mr. Johnson, of Ohio, himself an ironmonger on a large scale, he would find that they do not give the same view of the iron trade of the United States as he does. On the contrary, Mr. Johnson says that if the duty were taken off they could compete with other countries, but that so long as the duty is continued they cannot do so. I think that to build a steamer costing $50,000 or $60,000, the duties on the material alone would be $10,000 or $12,000. In England there would be no such thing. The only margin of profit which people in Canada have in building an iron steamship is just about the difference in price in bringing a ship from England to this country. Although we are able to build ships in New Glasgow, yet we have to go to Glasgow to get them built, because they can be built there cheaper, and that is due to our National Policy.

Mr. KENNY. That is not the only reason.

Mr. FRASER. They build them in Glasgow, Scotland, for fun, I suppose. Why is it they are built there? If the same rates of duty prevailed in this country that prevailed in England, we would be building as many ships here as they are there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FRASER. Yes: the conditions in New Glasgow are better than in any place in Great Britain. We have the iron and the coal and the lime within five miles of each other.

Mr. KENNY. And the ships will follow.

Mr. CAMERON. And they have followed.

Mr. FRASER. As a matter of course, they must follow, that is, when we get the duty off. We have built one certainly, when we only had to come in competition with the people of Canada. But that cannot be called competition, because there were no men outside allowed to compete. The Government wanted to have it built in Canada, and none but Canadians were allowed to tender, and they had this advantage in New Glasgow that the steamer was required for the Strait of Canso in Nova Scotia, and they had not to carry it any distance after it was finished. That was a considerable expense saved. We can never build ships under the National Policy in competition with English builders, any more than the Americans can. Seventy-five per cent of the American goods are carried in English ships. When an American wants to build a ship, he has to bring his money over to England and put it into a British ship, registered at a British port, sailed under a British flag, and in case of war liable to be seized and used by the British Government. And this is due to the American policy of protection.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is just as well to know that the United States are a protectionist country. When our friends opposite wanted us to join our fortunes with that country, they told us that the United States afforded the most magnificent spectacle of a free trade country in the world—forty-three commonwealths trading with each other. The hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) would have done better to have let the case rest where he put it awhile ago. According to his later argument, these vessels cannot be built in any protected country or any country having a national policy.

Mr. FRASER. Not so well.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This will be built in Canada just as well as it can be built in Great Britain, and if my voice can help the hon. gentleman any, it will be built in New Glasgow.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No doubt the dredge will and ought to be built in Canada, but the competition will be confined to Canadians. But the truth of the statement is not affected, that if competition were allowed from the outside, the Government could get the dredge built outside Canada cheaper than in Canada. I do not know what the right hon. First Minister was referring to when he spoke of gentlemen who wished to ally the fortunes of this country to the United States. I was not aware that any one in this country had that desire. My impression was that the vast mass of the people are perfectly contented with their position as a political dependency. I did not know that the feeling of annexation prevailed to such an extent. There is a large class who, though they do not want to unite their fortunes politically with the United States, desire to unite their fortunes commercially, in so far as breaking down the barriers which prevent the one country from dealing with the other. That is the extent they desire to go, and I have never been ashamed to avow my belief that it would improve the future of Canada very much indeed, and facilitate her march onwards, if the barriers were broken down which exist between the two countries; and the sooner you can do that, provided you can do it consistently with your national independence, the better it will be for us commercially and otherwise. There is no necessity to unite ourselves politically because we unite ourselves commercially, and I think the people on both sides are beginning to realize that. If I am not mistaken the First Minister himself was a member of the Government which sent a commission to the United States a year or two ago to see whether they could not negotiate a treaty with that country, although afterwards he wanted to limit the extension of that treaty to natural products. On the same principle, if it be a good thing for the people here to have reciprocity in natural products, it must be a good thing for the people to have reciprocity in other articles. There can be no stopping half-way, but the hon. gentleman came back a disappointed man, as far as outside appearances went at any rate. Now, we are drifting away from the question under discussion. The right hon. gentleman has set us a very bad example by talking about annexation, and I decline to follow him any further. My hon. friend rather intimated that I should know more about the waters of the Maritime Provinces than to ask why a dredge of thirty feet capacity is required. When I heard the Minister of Public Works state that it was for Halifax and St. John, I felt somewhat surprised, for these are two of the finest natural harbours in America.

Mr. OUMET. There is Yarmouth.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is an exceptional instance. I was not aware that you required a dredge of that size, and was only asking for information. It certainly cannot be required for Halifax or St. John.

Mr. OUMET. Yarmouth, Digby, Sydney, Charlottetown—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You do not want a dredge of that capacity so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned.

Mr. OUMET. The capacity of a dredge of thirty feet only provides for a depth at low tide in some places of twenty feet, and in others twenty-five.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman intend to advertise for tenders?

Mr. OUMET. I do not think it would be of any use to advertise for tenders by public advertisement in the newspapers, but all the firms that are supposed to be able to do that kind of work will be invited to tender, and I should say that the firms mentioned by the hon. member for Guysboro' will be invited to tender.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot see that any possible mistake could be made by giving every one who desires to do so, an opportunity to tender.

Mr. OUMET. It is not my intention to advertise for tenders, but I will be guided by the law and what the Council decide. In all these cases we are obliged to advertise in the newspapers unless for special reasons given to Council, the Council authorizes the department to do otherwise. Hon. gentlemen seem to be much better informed on this subject than I am or my engineers. For, although a great many people might build ships, it does not follow that they can build dredges, and if the hon. gentleman has had any experience of the working of a dredge he will know that the machinery, especially in these modern dredges, is so complicated and costs so much to repair when anything goes wrong with it that it is in the interest of the public that the very best firms that have had experience in that special matter, should be given the contract—not with a view to favouring one or the other, but in order to have the best work possible. If, for instance, the hon. gentleman wished to have a carriage built he would not go to a builder of mowers or other instruments of that kind. These are specialties.

Mr. LAURIER. That is what I said a moment ago—"special reasons."

Mr. OUMET. I can assure the House that every firm that is supposed to be competent in this line will be invited to tender. I have no special firm to favour, either in Quebec, Ontario or the Maritime Provinces. It does not matter to me who makes the dredge; but it matters very much to me as Minister of Public Works and to my engineer, who is responsible for the proper building of that dredge, and for its completion within the proper time, that the work should be in competent hands. Last year we built one, and the contract for the hull was given out by public tender. The estimate of the engineer for the hull was $26,000. We advertised in the newspapers, and we found a man here in Ottawa who offered to build it for $21,000, and we gave him the contract. What was the result? There were numberless difficulties with the contractor. We had to employ a man to watch every piece of timber going into that hull. After a time proceedings had to be taken in the court, and we had actually to rescue the work from the sheriff. And even yet the department may be held liable to pay $5,000 more, because the men who supplied the money have had the boat seized. Besides all this, instead of the dredge being ready to go to work in August last, as it should have been, it will only be ready in July this year. It is very important when you come to spend $40,000 or $50,000, that the work should be done by the best men, within the time specified, and with the best material. In giving these contracts I do not intend to be guided by any bias of mind or preconceived ideas, but by the best interests of the department, and the public, and for this reason none but competent firms shall be invited to tender.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. McMULLEN. What the Minister says is all very well. We hope he will carry it out. The reason why we on this side are inclined to ask questions concerning the letting of contracts in such cases is the experience we have had in the past. We had an investigation into the letting of a contract for some dredges some time ago, and we found the contract included a Jolly Joe and a pair of brass dogs. That was the reason we wanted to know if it was the intention of the Minister to give an opportunity to those who are prepared to perform this work properly and in due time. I hope that every man in the Dominion who can give the necessary security and produce the necessary evidence to show that he has the means and the men to carry out the work properly will be given an opportunity to tender.

Mr. OUMET. What is the use of giving security? In the case I speak of we gave the contract for $21,000, when competent firms were asking about $24,000. And we are exposed to the danger of being called upon to pay $5,000 more, and we have lost a year's time. The security, required under the law, as the hon. gentleman well knows is 5 per cent of the total amount of the contract. In my opinion it ought to be more. So far as I am concerned, the hon. gentleman may rest assured that I shall do everything I can to have the work well and promptly done, and I depend upon him to do his best to find out something wrong.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who was the solicitor for the Government in that case ?

Mr. OUMET. O'Connor and Hogg.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Oh, Dan.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. Minister refers to dredges of capacity of about thirty feet for the harbours for St. John, Halifax and Yarmouth. I trust the dredge he proposes to get is not one built only for these large harbours. The harbour of Yarmouth is not so large, but it is very much used, and it will require a dredge of modern capacity for turning and working in the narrow channels. At the same time, I want the hon. Minister to bear in mind that there are other harbours that require attention. Along the south shore there are Liverpool, Lunenburg and Shelburne, Barrington, Lockeport and Coffin's Island. Some of them have not had a dredge for seventeen years, and all of them require attention, so as to preserve their commerce. In 1891 I asked the question across the floor when we were going to have a dredge for the south shore, and the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), then the Minister of Public Works, said that he could not tell when a dredge would be provided. The Maritime Province dredge was lost in 1888. That makes it six years since the dredge was lost. In 1892 the present Minister told me that he proposed to get a dredge as soon as possible, and he put a vote of $40,000 in the Estimates with which he proposed to buy a dredge. He did not buy it at that time, but, subsequently, I believe, he bought one or bargained for one with Connolly Bros., but that dredge was lost in the St. Lawrence River, and since then nothing has been done. Here is a vote of $40,000 to buy a dredge for the Maritime Provinces, which should have been voted and expended for this purpose years ago. When he speaks of a dredge with a capacity of thirty feet, I trust that it will not be of such capacity that it will not work in shallower water. In most of the smaller harbours we do not need thirty feet of water; from eighteen to twenty-two feet would be the average. I trust that soon a dredge will be at work in the harbours of the south shore of Nova Scotia.

Mr. OUMET. We have four other dredges.

Mr. FORBES. Not for that coast.

Mr. OUMET. The new dredge will work at from eight feet to thirty-five feet

Mr. FORBES. I am glad to hear that. It may be, however, that a smaller dredge than one with the capacity of thirty-five feet would work in the smaller harbours more economically. I would like to know what preliminary steps the Minister has taken, and when we may expect the dredge to be ready for action, and where we may expect it to be at work in the present season. I should like also to know whether he intends to build, as I presume he does, or whether he will purchase, and if so, whether he has decided which dredge he will try to secure. I only want to press upon him the absolute necessity for prompt action. We have been waiting six years for this vote to be expended in some shape or other, and either wind or weather has prevailed in preventing the Minister from carrying out his wishes.

Mr. CHESLEY. There is no doubt about the wisdom of the action taken by the Government in having a dredge built capable of dredging thirty feet deep. Any man who knows anything of the rise and fall of tides in the Bay of Fundy, must know that unless a dredge is capable of going to a depth of twenty-seven or thirty feet, she will be unable to do any work except at low water. In order to do the work effectively, and to keep dredging all the time in either high or low water, we want a dredge capable of going thirty feet deep; and at the same time she will be able to do work in shoaler water of six to eight feet. I think the Government are entirely right. In the harbour of St. John there is a rise and fall of the tide of about twenty-eight feet, and this dredge can work at high water, and then, as the tide goes down, she will settle and keep on working just as effectively in low water. In making the harbour improvements in St. John, the Messrs. Connolly had a dredge capable of taking out material to a depth of thirty feet; they could dredge in high water to a depth of thirty feet, and unless they had a dredge of that capacity they could not have done the work at all. I do not think that in this respect the Government have made a mistake in having a dredge of that capacity built. The same dredge can be used in shoaler water as well as in deep water. For use in the Maritime Provinces I think it is absolutely necessary to have her built of that capacity, because she can be used in the shallow water of the harbours around the south shore of Nova Scotia, as well as in deep water harbours like St. John and Halifax, and can be used effectively in high or low water.

Mr. FORBES. I do not want the Minister to think that I complained of his having a dredge capable of dredging thirty or thirty-five feet in the harbour of St. John. I want to know from the Minister if he can give us any idea when the dredge will be able to do the work ?

Mr. OUMET. I have already said that we expect the dredge will begin work early next summer, if we can get a competent contractor to undertake it.

Dredge Vessels, repairs $30,000

Mr. OUMET. This sum is necessary to make the annual repairs to all our dredging fleet. I must admit that the dredging fleet is now antiquated, with the exception of these two new dredges that are not yet ready. The others require repairs, and these have to be done during the winter.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the annual cost of keeping one of these dredges in repair?

Mr. OUMET. The hon. gentleman will find the details for each dredge in the departmental report.

Mr. FRASER. How many dredges are there now in Nova Scotia?

Mr. OUMET. There are five for the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. FRASER. Is this dredging necessary at this season of the year, or is it in preparation for the next season?

Mr. OUMET. This money is to be used from the 1st July next.

Mr. FRASER. I understand, then, that the dredges are now at work, and able to work without any further repairs?

Mr. OUMET. These have been repaired during the winter, out of the appropriations for the current year.

Mr. FRASER. And are now ready to do work in the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. OUMET. Yes.

Dredging, Nova Scotia..... } $40,000
do P.E. Island..... }

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the dredging done last year. I find by his report that the dredge for Prince Edward Island was employed almost entirely in the county of my hon. friend, the member for King's, P.E.I. (Mr. Macdonald). But without complaining too much of that—as it was natural enough that the hon. gentleman should assist the Minister in getting the dredging done in his own section of the province as much as possible—I want to call the Minister's attention to the report of the dredging done at Cape Traverse. This is an important work, inter-provincial in its character; and the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) the other day in the House—if I may be allowed to refer to a previous debate—referred to this work, and expressed himself as in hope that a large amount of public money would be spent in securing a wharf there to enable him to run a ferry across to his railway. I find the report says:

The water at the wharf at Cape Traverse is very shallow, and it is doubtful whether a permanent channel can be kept open without artificial works. To ascertain the amount of silting up, a good channel was made to a depth of 12 feet over a width of 80 feet from the line of 12 feet at low water to the wharf and along the wharf. The quantity of materials removed, clay and sand, being 12,420 cubic yards at a cost of $3,392.13 or 27.3 cents per cubic yard.

I want to ask the hon. gentleman what was the result of the experiment?

Mr. OUMET. That report only goes to the 1st of July, 1893, it does not give any account of the work that has been done there during the summer. In order to fulfil the promises I had made to the House we had to dredge during the summer at Cape Traverse in order to ascertain if a berth could be obtained of a sufficient depth along that wharf for one or two steamships, drawing twelve feet of water. Well, we have dredged to about thirteen feet. We had a survey made and a plan prepared, and the work was done in June. Then a survey was made in December, another in January, and another has been made since. The place is just in the same state that it was before the dredging was done. I have before me a plan showing the result of the whole of the experiment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is just the information I wanted to get. It solves the question that no dock can be built there for a steamer by merely dredging. That was generally believed before the attempt was made, and now that the attempt has been made, we know it to be a fact. Therefore, before a steamer can run across the strait to connect with Cape Tormentine, there must be a wharf built away out beyond the sand sifs, and away out into deep water.

Mr. OUMET. The question may come up again in the Supplementary Estimates, when an item may appear respecting Cape Tormentine or some adjoining point. A good survey has been made at that place as well as at Carleton Point, and a report prepared by one of our most efficient engineers, and I will place it before the House, so that the House may decide whether there shall be a ferry, or whether the whole scheme shall be abandoned.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman state the estimated cost of such work as would be of any use whatever?

Mr. OUMET. The cost of the work proposed by the engineer reaches about half a million dollars. The chief engineer after having studied the whole matter, and made some changes, arrived at the conclusion that perhaps $300,000 would give proper accommodation on this side of the island.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am afraid $300,000 would go a short way. Be that as it may, the wharf built on the Cape Tormentine side will require the outlay of a very large sum to place it in repair. If the hon. gentleman undertakes the work, he will undertake one which will severely strain the resources of Canada. I cannot sympathise to any extent with the desire some people entertain to build an artificial harbour there. We have two or three natural harbours of excellent character existing already. The people are satisfied that steam communication can be carried on to their entire satisfaction between natural harbours which exist, and I do not think anything would justify the expenditure of half a million dollars in trying to create an artificial harbour in the Gulf of St. Lawrence were it not wanted. I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that last year the hon. member for King's (Mr. Macdonald) succeeded in keeping the dredge in his county. She was dredging at Montague and Murray Harbour and other parts of King's County, but of that I make no special complaint. I should like, however, to know where the hon. gentleman expects the dredge to work this summer?

Mr. OUMET. It is pretty hard to commit myself to naming any special place, because circumstances may arise that may alter our plans. On the programme, however, there are Grand River Bar, Souris and Malpeque.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will not the dredge be available for Wood Island Harbour, as the new harbour will be finished at the end of the season?

Mr. OUMET. As soon as the work is finished, some dredging will be required, and if there is time during the summer or fall it will be sent there.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). The dredge is now at Grand River, and I understand it is a question whether she can successfully dredge the bar, which is a sand-bar. It has done good service, but the bar has filled up to some extent. If the dredge were to go over the same ground again in the summer season when the weather was moderate, she would very much improve navigation. She is also required to do some work inside of that bar at Annandale, and at the head of the river, where there is considerable shipping done. I trust the Minister will be able to put the dredge on the bar at an early day in July or August, for the work can only be carried on during the fine weather. The dredge has to be towed and in case of storm has to be taken to a place of safety. If the work on the bar was undertaken during the summer months, it could be very effectively done and prove very beneficial; in fact the inside dredging will not be of much service unless work is carried on at the bar. Some dredging is also required to be done at Cardigan, one of our most important shipping points, where the harbour has filled up a good deal by the wash from the land; and dredging for about a month would enable vessels to beat right up to the place of loading. I also ask the Minister to use the dredge at Murray River, which is increasing its business a good deal and where shipping is steadily increasing. It is the only place in the locality where produce can be shipped and vessels of small draft can go there. I trust when the dredge gets through its work at Grand River, Cardigan and Souris it will be sent to Murray River and do as good work as was done at Murray River South. The work done last year was beneficial, and now there is a steamer plying there regularly. I trust the Minister will not lose sight of these places, and he will remember that for a number of years the dredge was at work in Prince and Queen's counties, and that until the last year or so the county of King's was lost sight of.

Mr. PERRY. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Macdonald) seems to be very selfish, and I almost wonder he did not ask the Minister to build a dredge specially for the benefit of his constituents. The dredge was in his constituency all last summer; she is to be there all this summer, and the question is when she will move out of that county, for the hon. gentleman appears to have the ear of the Minister. I find that she has been already at four places which the hon. gentleman calls harbours, but I find no report of them in the report of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. OUMET. The hon. gentleman should know that harbours are not under the Department of Public Works, except when work has to be carried out there. All information respecting harbours will be found in the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. PERRY. That may be correct, but when works are carried out at harbours a statement should be submitted for the information of members. I fail to find in the report of the Department of Public Works any reference to Tignish breakwater or harbour. In looking over the expenditure for dredging last year, I see $4,110 for expenses in the county of Prince. There was dredging done in King's County, at Sturgeon, at St. Mary's Bay, at Montague, at Murray harbour south, and at different points all in the same county, and nothing is set down in the report as to the amount that the dredging cost in that county. Now I want the Minister to explain that. Did the people down there pay for the dredging, or did the dredge not cost the Government a certain amount as well as it cost at Cape Traverse, where we have the amount of its cost set forth in the report? It is all very well to have the dredge working in King's County nearly all the year, but I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) that there is more produce exported out of Summerside harbour alone in Prince County than there is out of all the harbours in the county of King's. If he does not know that, let him take a trip up to Prince County and he will find it out, or let him take the Conservative papers of Summerside, which give an account of all the potatoes, and pigs and sheep, and oysters which are so delicious to the people of Ottawa, exported from that harbour, and he will find that from the port of Summerside there is more surplus produce exported than from the whole county of King's. The export trade of Summerside is growing, and we want larger steamers to carry away our surplus produce than we have had heretofore, and consequently the harbour should be improved. If the Government expend a few thousand dollars in improving Summerside harbour, it will not be lost the same as it was at Cape Traverse, although I do not blame the Government for having tried the experiment there. I think they were justifiable in that, and that they did well, and especially so, if they are satisfied that it is useless to improve artificially Cape Traverse harbour without expending $500,000. Any money expended in Summerside harbour will bring back a good return to the province as a whole, and as very little has been done for that part of the province of Prince Edward Island for the last twelve or fourteen years, something should be done now. I was very glad to hear the promise of the Minister of Public Works the other day that he would send an engineer to inspect the breakwater at Tignish, and so far so good. Let me tell him some of the things that are badly needed in that part of the province. There is dredging required at Kier's Shoal, Malpeque, where the channel is crooked and the navigation impeded. Dredging should also be done in the harbour at Cascumpec. There is a rock inside of the sand bank there at the mouth of the harbour, a little to the west of the lighthouse. The rock was blasted some years ago, but the loose stones are still at the bottom, and there is no deeper water there now than before, so that the rubbish has to be cleared away. The Government pier at Higgin's shore is useless until dredging is done there. I know very well that the Minister cannot supply all the wants of the island, but he must remember that King's County is not the whole of Prince Edward Island. It is far from having one-third of the population, and it has not one-third of the area.

Mr. EDGAR. Nor intelligence.

Mr. PERRY. I am not sure that we are any more intelligent in Prince County, but I know that they are cuter in King's County, because they can get the Government to do more work for them. If there are two or three harbours in King's County that need dredging let the work be done while the dredge is there, because there is always more or less time lost by the dredge moving from one point to the other. But let not the people of King's County think that they shall have the dredge there the whole year to make artificial harbours for gaspereau and smelt to run in, while the people of Prince County are suffering for the want of harbour accommodation. I hope that the Minister will pay special attention to Summerside harbour, and that we shall have a dredge there this year. If that harbour were dredged it would be one of the best in the Maritime Provinces, with the exception of Halifax and St. John. We are not so fortunate as they are in St. John, where the tide must rise above twenty-eight feet, because I have seen vessels drawing twenty feet, lying on the sand there, and in six hours afterwards, when the tide came in they had plenty of water. I again impress upon the Minister the necessity for letting us have a dredge in Prince County, and I am quite sure, from the benevolent smile on his face, that he will not forget us there. We do not want to rob King's County of their right; but we do not want to see all the work done there. I am sure that my hon. friend the senior member for King's County will not deem that unfair or unreasonable. When they have got some good harbours in King's County, I hope the Minister will send the dredge from Malpeque to Cascumpec, and then to Summerside and Alberton, and that it will remain until the work is done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not want to enter into the relative merits of these different harbours. I have no doubt the Minister will decide them in the privacy of his department when he examines into the different claims. What my hon. friend says is quite correct, that the dredge has been kept in King's County, where I have no doubt it has done good. I have no doubt also that he will get his desire, and that the dredge will go to Summerside and Alberton. But I want to urge the importance of completing this year the harbour and breakwater of Wood Island, for which $6,000 was voted last year and $14,000 is taken this year. That expenditure will be useless unless the mouth of the harbour is dredged, which should be done this summer; and when the whole work is finished, the harbour of Wood Island will be a great credit to the hon. gentleman and of great service to the people in the vicinity. I do not press the claims of other places, though I know many that have good claims, for I cannot ignore the fact that Wood Island has the first claim. I do hope that whatever comes and goes, the hon. gentleman will see his way clear to order the dredge to that harbour, so that when the spring of 1895 opens the people of Wood Island may find a good harbour prepared for them.

Mr. FRASER. I would like to ask in what portions of Nova Scotia it is proposed to expend the $40,000 to be spent in dredging in that province?

Mr. OUMET. The dredge 'St. Lawrence' is now dredging at Yarmouth. The 'Canada' is at Bayfield; the 'George Mackenzie' has worked at Descouse for one week, but I think it is at Salmon River now. The 'New Dominion,' so far as New Brunswick is concerned, will work in the river St. John, and in the river Kennebec.

casis. The 'Canada' will also work in the Miramichi.

Mr. FRASER. I notice that the expenditure for dredging made last year was made in the counties of Pictou, Antigonish and Richmond; and now the work is being done in the counties of Antigonish, Richmond and Halifax.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The hon. Minister has stated that the dredge 'George Mackenzie' was at work for a week at Descouse. That was in connection with the public work erected there, and was part of the contract entered into.

Mr. FRASER. That is all right; I am not objecting to that.

Mr. OUMET. It is the intention to send the dredge to Descouse for one week.

Mr. FRASER. I am only wanting to show that all the work done last year was done in Pictou, Antigonish and Richmond.

Mr. GILLIES. Not last year.

Mr. FRASER. At St. Peter's.

Mr. GILLIES. My hon. friend is again mistaken. There was not a dredge in Richmond last year.

Mr. FRASER. I mean in the last year for which we have a report. The last report of the Minister of Public Works, for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1893, says that the dredge was at work in St. Peter's Canal. The hon. gentleman may have got some information for this year that I have not got; but I take the last report published, which says that the work was done in these three counties. What work has been done since the 30th of June, 1893, I know not; consequently, I am not discussing it. But the hon. Minister now says that work is to be carried on in these other places. Now, I take for granted that the work done in Antigonish and in Pictou was good work; but it will be noticed that although the matter was under consideration, no work has been done in Guysboro' in the last two years. While I am not going to say anything against the necessity of the work done in the East River of Pictou, I say there is more real need for dredging on the south shore. More than that, the people of the county of Pictou were much more able to do the work than the people along the south shore. For example, I asked that a small sum of $1,000 should be expended at Whitehead harbour in order that boats could be taken from that harbour. The fishermen now have sometimes to stay there for two or three days before they can take their boats to the next harbour. The Government at one time built a place through which the boats could be taken, but it has become filled up, and I am informed that about a thousand dollars will do the whole of that work, which will serve about 200 or 300 fishermen. I regret very much that the Government have not seen fit to do this work. Two or three petitions have gone to the hon. Minister, and another petition went to him from Larry's River. The hon. gentleman told me two years ago that this was under consideration. There was also a strong petition sent from New Harbour, and the hon. gentleman sent an engineer there who made a report, and I was told last year that that was under consideration. Now, these long considerations are somewhat wearying on a man. You know, Sir, that hope deferred maketh the heart sick; and I do not think that the hon. Minister is so slow in all his operations as he is in these. He has an acute intellect—an intellect that can see a point very quickly and decide. It took him no time to decide, for example, that a large amount of dredging should be done in Pictou and Antigonish. The consideration was very brief in these cases, and while I am not objecting to these places getting their rights, I would like a little consideration shown to the south shore. My constituents are told that the only way in which they may expect anything is by rejecting me, and I would almost offer myself as a sacrifice to enable these poor men to get something. It is a great shame that something is not done in these places. In Whitehead particularly, something should be done, and I speak of that place more than any other, because I am not speaking there for my friends, and I wish it to be understood that what I am claiming for these people I am not claiming because I want their votes. But as a matter of right, these poor fishermen should have something done for them. I asked some time ago, and obtained the Order of the House for a return showing the amount of money expended in the different counties of Nova Scotia during the last fifteen years, but so far the Government have failed to bring it down. That return would bear out my contention that the localities for which I am speaking have not at all been fairly treated. I would ask the hon. gentleman to take Whitehead particularly into consideration. It is a small matter.

Mr. OUMET. It is not a small matter. The reports that I have estimate at $10,000 the cost of the work. Cribwork must be built so that it shall be preserved. A thousand dollars this year would not do even the digging of the canal which has been filled, and it would fill again at once, and so much money would be lost.

Mr. FRASER. Does the hon. gentleman know what it cost at first?

Mr. OUMET. I cannot exactly say.

Mr. FRASER. Nothing like $5,000, and the hon. gentleman says it is going to cost more to take the sand out than it did to build it.

Mr. OUIMET. I included not only taking out the sand but the rebuilding of the crib-work on both sides.

Mr. FRASER. I was told by the firm that built it that $1,000 to $2,000 would be amply sufficient. The hon. gentleman will see that in Pictou County there was some $7,000 expended in one place. One quarter of that amount would give communication to a very large section in which some two or three hundred families are interested. That would be a real assistance. The duty of the Government is to assist those who need assistance in that way. I am very glad that harbours should be opened and rivers dredged, but the primary object of the Government should be to assist those who need assistance, and if any people do need assistance it is the fishermen around there. This is not a large harbour as in the case of cities, which can be built by the people of the city. In this Parliament we think nothing of giving several hundred thousand dollars, and sometimes a million dollars, to a rich city. But the duty of Parliament is not to assist rich cities but those who really need assistance. Here are those men depending on the sea, staying away from home in their boats for two or three days in a storm, when an expense of $1,000 or $2,000 would give them the accommodation they require. I would appeal to the Government on the ground of humanity, if nothing else, to do this. Here are people away from the large centres who require assistance, and yet the Government will do nothing. It can not be because I am opposed to the Government, for no one can say that I am not a fair opponent, and the Government should not act unfairly to my constituents because I hold certain views. Those who oppose me and profess to speak for the Government, say that the county will get nothing while I am here. I am satisfied these people do not express the views of the Government. Whatever may be the policy of the Government, I do not think it will stoop so low as that. I would like to know why something is not done in Guysborough. Since 1867, I do not think there has been $30,000 expended in that county altogether, although that county is the second largest in area in the province of Nova Scotia. There is another place, Beckerton, with a population of less than 300 people, including thirty or forty ship captains who sail to all parts of the world, and who have to go around ten miles with their ships as they cannot anchor there at night. If it would not entail a moral descent on my part, I would almost do the wrong and support the Government, in order that they may do the right. But I cannot do that, and I must content myself with claiming earnestly on behalf of those people that the Government should consider their case. If only to show their generosity and kindness they should do something for those people, who are stubborn enough to return an opponent to the Government. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he will consider these cases ?

Mr. OUIMET. I have taken a note of what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. FRASER. That is the most distressing thing the hon. gentleman could say.

Mr. OUIMET. The matter has not escaped my attention since I have had reports made as to the amounts required to make the improvements mentioned by the hon. gentleman. But there is always a great obstacle in my way. I said it several times the other night, and I say it again, that if I undertook to do all the works that would be useful in the Maritime Provinces just now in the repairing of wharfs, the building of breakwaters, the improvement of the various harbours, in the way of dredging and otherwise, the sum of $3,000,000 would not be sufficient.

Mr. FRASER. I appreciate what the hon. gentleman says, but my answer is that nothing ever comes to Guysboro'. All the other counties share at some time or other. I have to thank the Minister here for sending an engineer, Mr. Shewan, who gave a very good report on the new harbour matter, but my political opponents would not believe that the Minister had extended even this kindness to us, and they actually declared that I had paid for bringing this engineer down myself. I actually had to get the plan, which the Minister kindly furnished me and show it to them. The work was done in the winter time, at the wrong time, but we were thankful for it any way. But my political opponents could hardly believe that the Government would do anything to assist a county represented by a man opposed to them. That is the ignorant view they have of the hon. Minister.

Mr. GILLIES. They would not believe your own statement.

Mr. FRASER. No ; certainly not : that is the last thing they would believe.

Mr. GILLIES. They know you so well.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman sympathizes with me. His political opponents in his own county, I am sure, do not believe him. I have to thank the Minister for sending Mr. Shewan. I am glad that this discussion will be proof to my opponents that the engineer was actually sent by the Minister. The kindly disposition of the Minister of Public Works had always attracted my attention. He is not one of those bitter men who oppose you from the first. When you first speak to him on a subject of this kind he promises to consider it and you are delighted ; you feel that something will be done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But the result is the same.

Mr. FRASER. The result is worse, because after your hopes have been kept up for six months or a year and nothing is done at last, you feel very sorely disappointed. I appeal to the Minister to do something for this county, which is in such need of these improvements. So great is my interest in these people that, though they vote against me, I shall not ask credit for the work if it is done, but shall give the credit to the Minister. I know of no case in Nova Scotia so deserving of consideration. I find that the member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), after importunity on importunity has succeeded in getting something for his county. I do not wish to move the Minister by importunities as the unjust judge was moved, but I trust my opportunity will have the same effect upon his just mind, that the importunities of the widow had on the unjust mind of the judge and that he will give something for the county I am pleading for.

Mr. KENNY. I am afraid my hon. friend is a little unreasonable. He expects to accomplish in two years what other members of this House have been trying for the past seven years to accomplish. It is seven years since I first entered Parliament, and from that day to the present I have been endeavouring to obtain the services of one of the dredges for a constituency that has been fairly represented during that period, the city and county of Halifax. I have just learned for the first time that at last a dredge has made its appearance in the county of Halifax. I recognize the abilities of my hon. friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser), but he must be generous—

Mr. FRASER. But—if the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt—he should think of what he has received in other respects.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman must be reasonable and fair. He seems to rely not so much upon the justice of his claim as upon the kindly disposition of the Minister. He must have a weak case indeed when he could not place it upon its merits and not make a kindly disposition the basis of this personal appeal to the hon. Minister. I rise to express the hope that now that, after seven years of importunity, the Dominion dredge has at last appeared in Halifax County, the Minister will not listen to the appeal of my hon. friend from Guysboro' until the dredge has finished its work in Halifax County.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's P.E.I.) I rise to say that I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Public Works, if it were possible to send the dredge that worked at Cape Traverse last year it would be the best, in fact the only dredge that could satisfactorily do the work at the place mentioned by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I think the dredge we have, the 'Prince Edward,' will not do effective work there. If it were possible to send the dredge that digs and carries away she could, in a short time, do the required work at Grand River Bar, and on her return she could do the work required at Wood Island. I agree with the hon. member for Queen's, that Wood Island requires dredging, and the work done there just now will be of very little service until the dredging is done. I have almost come to the conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that the reason the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) has not been more successful in getting the expenditure of public money in his county must be the long speeches he makes. I cannot accuse myself of making very long speeches, and the Minister of Public Works has treated me fairly. While I do not get all I ask for—

Mr. FRASER. You always vote for him.

Mr. MACDONALD. Yes; I always vote for him; it seems the hon. member for Guysboro' does not. While I do not get everything I ask for, the hon. Minister is always prepared to help me out, so far as the resources of the country will warrant him. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry) in the course of his remarks rather tried to throw a little ridicule on my county, and instanced the port of Summerside exporting more than the whole of King's County. I dare say the hon. member might very well say that. Summerside is the shipping point for the whole of Prince County, or very near it. It also ships part of the produce of Queen's County, which is sent from the western portion of the county to Summerside by rail. Further than that, the port of Summerside has regular steam communication daily with the mainland, and a certain amount of produce from all parts of the province is shipped from Summerside. While the shipments may appear large, they should not all go to the credit of Prince County. I may say that the places where the dredge has been working in King's County, at Grand River, Murray Harbour, St. Mary's Bay and Montague, are places of growing importance. I will warrant the statement that there is no place in Prince Edward Island, not even Summerside or Charlottetown, that ships so much produce as the port of Montague, considering that no freight is brought to that port, except what is hauled there by the farmers in their carts from the surrounding country. We have no railway communication, and no places to draw from except the surrounding country; yet there are more ships loaded there with farm produce in the course of the season than in any other one port in Prince Edward Island. The port of Grand River where she is now working, is a place of growing importance, and is a port where fishing is carried on very successfully. I trust that the Minister will see his way clear to send the dredge that was at Cape Traverse last year, for a short period to Grand River. She could then successfully work at Wood Island, and he could leave the dredge presently at Grand River to do the work that the department has in contemplation at that point. This would allow the dredge to get earlier at work in Queen's and Prince Counties, where she is required.

Ontario and Quebec—For dredging $40,000

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Before this item is passed, I wish to put to the hon. Minister of Public Works a few questions. I gather from the statement made by the hon. Minister, on Friday last, that the work of dredging was to be prosecuted below Cap à la Roche, as there are a few shoals met with at that point. Which are the shoals which have to be taken out below that point? From the information supplied by the engineers, there seems to be a shoal opposite Portneuf. Does the department contemplate carrying on dredging work at that point?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) It is the intention of the Government to carry on the further deepening of the ship channel between Montreal and Quebec to a depth of 27½ feet at low water. As shoals have been met with at Barre-à-Boulard and Ste. Croix, dredging work will be commenced, and all the shoals will be taken out.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Would the hon. Minister inform me whether the dredging work is to be prosecuted between Deschambeault and Lotbinière?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) We are having surveys made for the whole distance down to Quebec, in order to test the different points of the channel which do not afford a depth of twenty-seven feet and a half at low water.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) When does the hon. Minister expect to get through with those works?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) It will take about three years to accomplish the desired improvements.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) A large amount of dredging will have to be done?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) Dredging work is now being prosecuted at Barre-à-Boulard and at Contrecoeur, mainly at the former point, opposite Lotbinière.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Does not the hon. Minister think that the deepening of the ship channel, between Deschambeault and Lotbinière, will have an effect on the general level of the river?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) This objection was raised at the outset, when the policy of deepening the Lake St. Peter channel was in contemplation, but experience has shown the hollowness of this apprehension. No amount of deepening done at the time had the effect of lowering the level of the river. No permanent lowering of the general level of the river can be produced by the channel absorbing too large a quantity of water, for the obstructions removed from the bottom of the channel are dropped on the sides, resulting only in a displacement of water. It is a matter of experience that the deepening of the channel through the bed of Lake St. Peter had no disturbing influence on the ordinary levels of the St. Lawrence at that point or elsewhere.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) Is it the intention of the Government to publish Mr. Cowie's report on the surveys he has made of the river?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The survey made by that engineer has been handed over to the Montreal Harbour Commissioners for use in the preparation of the chart.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) To complete the chart made last year?

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Does the hon. Minister propose to prosecute further deepening of the Lake St. Peter channel?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) The Lake St. Peter channel is not out of repair at all. As to the character of the works, the department contemplates carrying on, I may say that at certain portions of the channel there are very sharp curves where, at the present time two large vessels can hardly pass, except at great risk. We propose widening the channel, and giving those curves a width of from four hundred and fifty to five hundred feet, so as to render the channel navigation as safe as possible.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where is it intended to expend this $40,000?

Mr. OUMET. The dredge 'Challenge' will work at Midland, Collingwood, Thornbury and Meaford. The dredge 'Ontario' is working at Detroit River now, and will work at Wardsor, Rondeau and Port Stanley. The dredge 'Nipissing' is working now at Hamilton, and when she has finished there, she will go to work in the Burlington channel, also at Port Hope, Brighton and Cobourg. The dredge 'Port Stanley' is now at Goderich, and thence we propose to send her to the river Kaministiquia to dredge a channel 400 feet wide by 20 feet deep. She has been at Goderich nearly the whole of the past summer. The dredge 'Queen' is expected to work at Belleville, Picton and Wolfe Island. The dredge 'St. Louis' will work at river St. Pierre, Chateaugay and river L'Assomption. Dredge 'No. 11' will work at Saguenay and Chicoutimi. 'No. 12' will work at Varennes Curve for about two months and a half, and for the rest of the season will work at Contrecoeur. 'No. 8' will work at Portneuf. The new dredge 'Laval' will work at Lotbinière all summer.

Mr. McMULLEN. A large amount of dredging was done at Owen Sound last year. Is it the intention to continue work there this year?

Mr. OUMET. It is the intention to complete a channel into the harbour 300 feet wide.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.)

Mr. McMULLEN. I asked this question for the reason that there are now completed to that place, two railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway, one on one side of the harbour and the other on the other side. I wished to know what improvement it is intended to make in order to meet the increased demand for wharfage that is likely to grow up.

Mr. OUMET. During the present season we propose to complete the dredging for a channel 200 feet wide and 20 feet deep, which was begun last year, and the dredge is now at work. This dredge is expected to go from there to the river Kaminstiquia. We have taken note of the additional wharfage accommodation for the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see by the report of the Department of Public Works that the department has now under contract the dredging of a new channel in the harbour of Owen Sound, 150 feet wide and about half a mile in length. Is it intended to dredge to a depth of 16 feet? I was anxious to know what portion of that work has been done.

Mr. OUMET. The 16 feet have been obtained at the lowest water, and if we have the means to do it, our intention is to dredge to 20 feet.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the Minister any special report with regard to the washing in of sand from the hillside into the harbour? Have they experienced any difficulty from an accumulation in the harbour that requires continuous dredging?

Mr. OUMET. Yes; some silt has been deposited in the channel by the river, but we expect this will be remedied by deflecting the channel.

Mr. McMULLEN. Now, with regard to Collingwood harbour, there has been considerable difficulty experienced there owing to the North-west winds, I fancy it is, washing in the sand. What is the condition of that harbour now?

Mr. OUMET. At Collingwood there is no washing in of sand, the harbour is entirely free of that inconvenience which makes nearly all the harbours on the lakes expensive to keep up. The difficulty at Collingwood is the hardness of the bottom, which is mostly hard-pan and rock. We had a dredge working there all summer, the 'Challenge,' but she is not good enough to make much progress in that kind of work.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that at Collingwood a new channel has been cut 98 feet wide and 15 feet deep. Two cuts are also made to a depth of 15 feet to a bar. The dredge was afterwards engaged on a hard-pan bar outside the breakwater, making one cut 174 feet long, 28 feet wide and 15 feet deep, and another 400 feet long, 25 feet wide and 15 feet deep. Later the dredge cut through the hard-pan bar outside the breakwater, leaving a channel 14 feet deep and 120 feet wide. The hon. Minister may be aware that the harbour of Collingwood is a very difficult one to enter, the channel being only 25 feet wide. Is it the intention of the Government to widen the channel?

Mr. OUMET. The town of Collingwood has offered to defray 25 per cent of the cost, the amount not exceeding $25,000. The cost estimated by the engineer is $250,000 to complete a good channel. The matter is now under consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has any dredging been done at Parry Sound?

Mr. OUMET. The harbour of Parry Sound is a natural one, offering very great advantages, and no improvement of any kind has so far been required.

Dredging, Manitoba..... $10,000

Mr. MARTIN. We have had a great deal of discussion to-night with respect to the expenditure of public money in the Maritime Provinces, and the impression desired to be conveyed by hon. members has been that Liberal constituencies which were so foolish as to elect a Liberal candidate received no public money.

Mr. OUMET. The Estimates show that that view is not correct. If the hon. gentleman will read the Estimates, he will find that a great many constituencies represented by Liberals have received more than their fair share.

Mr. MARTIN. I was not speaking of facts, but of the impression left on my mind by the discussion this evening. The hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) stated that his constituency had received practically nothing since Confederation, and all that time it has been represented by a Liberal. I rather understood the hon. gentleman opposite to emphasize that statement, and they seemed to take pride in the fact that they had been able to secure for their constituencies such a large share of the public money. This was rather refreshing intelligence to me, because in Manitoba the result has been exactly the opposite. That province has most consistently been supporters of the present Government, and in spite of that fact Manitoba, so far as public works are concerned, has been left practically destitute. I understood from the statement made by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) that counties represented by Ministers of the Crown receive the largest share of appropriation from the Public Works Department, so far, at least, as dredging is concerned. The result in Manitoba has been, as I say, just the opposite. Take this year and last year, and in fact the same statement applies to every year since the present Government have been in power, the amount of money expended in that province by the Department of Public Works as compared with the other provinces is trifling indeed. The amount voted last year for public buildings in Nova Scotia is $85,000; New Brunswick, $33,000; Maritime Provinces generally, $10,000; Quebec, $57,000; Ontario, $63,000; North-west Territories, $66,000; British Columbia, $3,000; Manitoba, $3,000. The votes for harbours and rivers are as follows: Nova Scotia, $67,150; Prince Edward Island, $42,450; New Brunswick, $67,000; general vote for the Maritime Provinces, $10,000; Quebec, $59,100; Ontario, $87,800; British Columbia, $56,500; North-west Territories, $5,000; Manitoba, $3,000. Very little public expenditure is required in Manitoba, but the little that is required has not been done. There are two schemes which that province has always thought should be undertaken by the Dominion. One is the lowering of the water in Lake Manitoba. There are obstructions to the free passage of water from Lake Manitoba into Lake Winnipeg. It is a very serious matter to all the surrounding country, because it involves the question of drainage. When Lake Manitoba rises it is made very difficult to drain the surrounding country on both sides, and in some years when the lake rises considerably a very wide extent of land is flooded and the people are driven back. The other work to which the people of Manitoba consider Dominion money should be devoted is the deepening of St. Andrew's Rapids, on Red River. Since 1878 the province has consistently sent representatives supporting the Government. In spite of that fact, not a single dollar has been spent to improve the outlet from Lake Manitoba into Lake Winnipeg, and not a single dollar has been spent in deepening St. Andrew's Rapids. These rapids are situated in the constituency of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), and while this is a matter of very considerable importance to the constituency, it is also of very great importance to Winnipeg. That city would derive very great advantage, as well as the province generally, if navigation were made navigable between Lake Winnipeg and the city of Winnipeg. The department are spending, every year, a sum of money in dredging the mouth of the Red River at Selkirk. The only additional expenditure necessary in order to give good navigation between that point and the city of Winnipeg, some twenty or thirty miles distant, is for the improvement of the St. Andrew's rapids. I may say that this work has been a matter of public discussion every time there has been an election in Manitoba since the present Government came into power, and the candidates in the Government interest have promised most emphatically that they would obtain the assistance of the Government for this work. Not only that, but every time a Minister of Public Works has come to Manitoba special representations have been made to him with regard to this work and promises have been made, from time to time, that the Government would cause proper estimates to be made of the cost, and give a decided answer as to whether they would or would not proceed with the work. Not later ago than the advent to Manitoba of the tariff commissioners, Messrs. Foster and Angers, they were visited by a very influential deputation of Winnipeg citizens with regard to this matter, and these gentlemen again promised they would give it full consideration. The House understands that it is considered important that this work should be proceeded with for various reasons. We have no coal in that country except the coal deposits at the Souris and the Galt coal which are both bituminous, and through the enterprise of the Manitoba Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Souris coal has been opened up to us. We have had for a considerable time, the Galt coal, but the distance from the mine is far, and the railway rates high, so that the advantage to the community is discounted to a certain extent. Therefore, the question of firewood is a most important one, particularly in view of the great expense of bringing coal from Pennsylvania. The city of Winnipeg has to bring its firewood either from the east over the Canadian Pacific Railway, or from the southern banks of the Assiniboine River in the direction of Portage la Prairie, over the newly constructed Northern Pacific. In either case, the freight rates more than double the cost of wood. Now, if navigation were opened from Winnipeg down the Red River to Lake Winnipeg, firewood could be brought in at fully $2 a cord cheaper than it can be obtained to-day, and this would be an immense boon, especially to the poorer classes of the citizens. Not only that, but Lake Winnipeg has a great many valuable resources. The fisheries are well known, there is a most excellent building stone in the locality, there are very valuable deposits of iron, and all these valuable resources are lying undeveloped because of the impossibility of navigating the Red River and on account of the expense of carrying these articles on the railroad. This has been a matter before the people up there all the time, and probably attempting to learn from the Maritime Provinces and other parts of Canada which seem to have been able to get large sums of public money spent in their electoral districts by sending representatives here to support the Government; Manitoba has done the same thing in the past. I was under the impression myself, and I am still under that impression, that the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) was originally elected as an opponent to the present Government. However, he did not remain so long, because he was here but a very short time before he became a very straight supporter of the Government, and he has continued to be a supporter of theirs ever since. The city of Winnipeg had always returned a supporter of the Government until the last election. The division of Marquette which is more especially interested in this work of draining Lake Manitoba into Lake Winnipeg, during most of the time has been represented by a Liberal, but at the last by-election a Conservative member was elected for that constituency a couple of years ago. But this made no difference. The present member for (Marquette (Mr. Boyd) has been quite as unsuccessful in obtaining any public money for that work as his predecessor, Mr. Watson was. The constituency of Selkirk has been for a considerable time represented by a supporter of the Government. As in Lisgar, in 1882, a Liberal was elected there, but he followed the example of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) and fell into line as a supporter of the Government. While there has been no particular demand for any public money in that constituency, still it would seem, that the province, having so consistently, and almost uniformly sent Conservatives here from all these constituencies, it should have a better showing in the expenditure of public money if the same system which seems to apply—so far as I can judge from the discussion this afternoon—in other portions of Canada, had been applied there. But, Mr. Chairman, it would appear to me that while members from the Maritime Provinces find it necessary in order to secure the continued support of their constituents, to give some account of themselves when they return home, and to show that although they have not had, perhaps, very much to say as to the wants of their constituents in the House, yet they had at least had the ear of the Government, and had been able to induce the Government to put a dredge here, and a harbour there, and a building in another place, and so on, and so on. But the representatives of Manitoba have apparently entirely neglected that portion of their duties. Whatever they may have said to the Government, they certainly have said nothing to the House about these matters. What they may have said privately to the Government we do not know. Charitably we may say that they have endeavoured to induce the Government to undertake these public works. At any rate, even if they have, the Government have had no difficulty at all in saying to them that it was not possible to do it. The Government apparently have been able to give to the Conservative members from Manitoba the same answer which the hon. Minister of Public Works gives to the hon. member for Guysboro', that a note has been taken, and that the matter will be duly considered later on. That has been apparently the answer the hon. member for Lisgar, the hon. Minister of the Interior, before he was a member of the Government, and my predecessor from Winnipeg, have been content to receive from the Government. I am inclined to think that my predecessor thought the position of a representative of Manitoba under these circumstances was not a desirable one, and he took the very honourable course of giving back to the people the trust they had confided in him, finding that he was not able to get for his constituents the same consideration that the Government were prepared to give, and do give, to members supporting the Government from other portions of the Dominion. Under these circumstances I put it to the Government that they should consider the case of Manitoba. The hon. Minister of Public Works repudiates my suggestion. He claims, in regard to the Maritime Provinces, that instead of the Government considering their supporters there, they have given to constituencies represented by Liberals a great deal more than those constituencies were entitled to in a fair division of the public money. If that be the case, if that be the policy of the Government, there is no reason whatever why these public expenditures should be denied to the province of Manitoba. If, on the other hand, it be true, as alleged by hon. members on both sides of this House this evening, as I understood them, that it was necessary that a member should support the Government before he could expect a large expenditure of public money, then for that reason Manitoba, having given a very faithful and consistent support to the present Government for so long, and doing it to-day, is surely entitled to a fair amount of public expenditure in those directions in which it is recognized as right for the Dominion to spend its money. I do not care which way the Government take it. If they say, we propose to expend the public money fairly, giving to each province a fair amount according to the physical condition and the necessities of the province, then I claim that Manitoba has been unjustly treated. If that is the basis, I claim that we have not received in the past, and we ought to receive in the future, aid for these two public works to which reference has been made. On the other hand, if the Government say that a constituency which uniformly sends here an opponent of the Government cannot expect the same kind of favourable consideration at their hands when they are dividing up this public money, then I say on that basis Manitoba is entitled to these expenditures. Either way it is taken, it seems hard and unfair that when we ask for so little, nature having given us a country in which it is not necessary that great expenditures should be made, we should not receive that little. We have extensive bridges to build and expensive roads to construct; but all these things are undertaken by the people themselves, the work being done by direct taxation through the municipalities. We are asking for nothing on those accounts. But there does happen to exist in the province the necessity for public expenditures of the same kinds which we find the Government undertaking in the other provinces, in connection with the two matters to which I have referred—the deepening of the channel between Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg so as to prevent the disastrous rising of the waters in Lake Manitoba in certain seasons and to facilitate the drainage of a lot of flat lands which lie around the borders of Lake Manitoba; and the deepening of the St. Andrew's Rapids on the Red River, a matter of so much importance to the city which I represent.

Mr. OUMET. With regard to the deepening of the St. Andrew's Rapids, I have already stated to this House that that work would cost a million dollars, and I have invited my hon. friend to establish to the satisfaction of the Government and the country that the result to be obtained would warrant the expenditure of so large a sum of money. Now, surely the speech of the hon. gentleman ought not to be taken literally. He ought to know, and if he does not know I will tell him, that the sums mentioned in the main estimates are not the total amount of the expenditure for the year in Manitoba or elsewhere; that in the main estimates are only included those works that have already been begun and are to be continued, and a very few others. Therefore, the calculations which he has given to the House, for the perusal of the electors of Winnipeg, are not exact, and he will have the right to complain only when all the estimates are before the House. The hon. gentleman says that this Government is not fair in the expenditure of public money, although he admits that he does not care very much about that. It seems that his game is very skilful. He says to himself: If we get these expenditures, I shall receive the credit for them, because I will tell my people that I bullied the Government in such a way that they had to give them; and if they do not get them, I will tell my people that it was just because of the unfairness and injustice of the Government. Well, I think the people of Manitoba will not take stock in that speech, for they know that this Government has always been more than generous to the province of Manitoba. I may say this, and every one in the province of Manitoba ought to realize this fact, that if it had depended on the friends of the hon. gentleman I do not think that to-day Manitoba would be a part of Confederation. As regards the Selkirk Rapids, I do not know that the people of Selkirk are greatly interested in their deepening. Selkirk is an important place just now, because it is the head of navigation of the Red River, and I think all the trade that goes down from Lake Winnipeg is fully accommodated there. I do not think it would be reasonable for me to recommend the expenditure of a million dollars on that work.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very much pleased to receive the information from the hon. gentleman that we are to expect considerable in the supplementary estimates for

Mr. MARTIN.

Manitoba. So much as we get we will be very thankful for. I have no doubt that the deepening of St. Andrew's Rapids would not cost more than half a million dollars. What I blame the Government for is that that they have not had a proper investigation made, or we would not have the hon. Minister giving this estimate of a million dollars. The city engineer of Winnipeg, Mr. Ruttan, a very competent engineer, has looked into the matter very carefully, and his estimate is something less than $500,000. The Government had Mr. Gouin to make a very cursory examination of the rapids and some calculations, but what I ask the hon. gentleman to do is to send up an engineer of more experience than Mr. Gouin to make a thorough investigation and estimate, and then let the engineer, or some one else appointed by the Government, make an investigation as to the benefits to be derived. The hon. gentleman suggests that Selkirk would not be agreeable to the river being developed in this way, because that might take away some trade from that city. I do not believe there is any such feeling there. It would be a much larger town if a profitable trade existed between it and Winnipeg, Selkirk being at the head of the navigation of the river and in a position to benefit from any increase in trade. I am satisfied that a petition could be got from that town urging the performance of this work. I know that the rest of the constituency of Lisgar is unanimous in favour of having this work done. Promises have been frequently made on behalf of the Government by their candidates, and also by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) when he visited the country as Minister of Public Works, that proper inquiries would be made and the question considered. This has not been done. Without saying a word against Mr. Gouin, the resident engineer, I take no stock in his report. It is not a proper report. It is not a report made in the way that the Minister of Public Works on several occasions promised the work shall be done. I am aware that the hon. gentleman has not had the matter brought before him in the same way as his predecessor, but if he will come out to the country, he will find that I am simply voicing the feeling of the people there, especially among the supporters of the Government. While they are not prepared to go to the length of blaming the Government for not spending the money, they blame it for not having carried out the promise to give the matter careful consideration.

Mr. ROSS. The town of Selkirk is very much divided on this question. The majority of the people are against the improvement of the St. Andrew's Rapids; and with regard to the rest of the county, some are against and some are for the project. Some are in favour of the improvements and a large number are not. I have run three elections in the county, and the question has never been discussed once on the platform. The improvement of St. Andrew's Rapids was never a question at issue. It never came out at a single meeting. I know there is considerable feeling in Winnipeg, but so far as Lisgar is concerned, there is very little feeling whatever on the subject.

Mounted Police, Pay of Force. $290,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I am glad to notice that the number of the mounted police is decreasing. I would like to know if any additions have been made to the force during the last year, what is the number now on the force, and what are the Minister's prospects as to further reduction of the number?

Mr. IVES. As the time of the men expires, and they are leaving the force, they are not always re-engaged. I cannot say that new men have not been taken on, but the force has been diminished during the current fiscal year, and the number of men now on the force is less than it has been at any time since 1887. The total authorized force is 1,123, and the number as now reduced, including the supernumeraries, the scouts, non-commissioned officers and men to about 900. Since 1887 to the present time, the reduction effected means a saving of very nearly $250,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. About two years ago discussing this question, the hon. gentleman who was then in charge of the mounted police—I do not now recollect who he was—said that it was the intention, as the time of the mounted police expired, not to fill their places. Certainly the time must be drawing near when we may be able to do without this enormous force of mounted police, which cost us last year about $615,000. I admit that possibly the police performed valuable services as preventive officers and in keeping back smugglers along the border between Canada and the United States. But surely, if officers of that kind are required, they should be employed and charged directly in connection with the customs, and not as the mounted police. If we are to have mounted police along the border in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia to act as preventive officers, what can be said against the same in Ontario, and even more necessarily in Quebec, where there is only an imaginary line between us and the United States? The mounted police should not be charged with that duty. If the work has to be done, let it be done as part of the customs service. We have in this force a considerable number of officers, who get from $1,000 to $1,400. I cannot see that it is right that the country should be called upon to pay these officers such very considerable salaries. We board them, we clothe them, we provide them with many things that they require, and then we pay them large salaries in addition. It seems to me that the number of Indians and half-breeds scattered over that country does not call for such a large force to protect the people. The time has passed when the people there were afraid of their lives and when it was necessary the Government should keep the mounted police in order to prevent the Indians from murdering the white people. Even the most nervous have no fear of Indians or half-breeds now. We do not now hear, and for a long time have not heard anything of a disposition on the part of these people to break out. The main duty for the mounted police is to prevent smuggling. But is it necessary to keep such a force in order to prevent smuggling?

Mr. IVES. So far as Manitoba is concerned, the police were withdrawn on the 1st of April of the present year. If the hon. gentleman is under the impression that the only duties of the mounted police consist in preventing smuggling he is very much mistaken. They have not only their well understood duties as mounted police, but the officers perform nearly all the magisterial work of the North-west Territories. They are about the only means of detecting and punishing crime in all that great territory. So they not only do this work for the customs Department—and I may say do it very much cheaper than it could be done in any other way—but they perform all the duties of administering the criminal law. In addition to that they are employed in the work of the Department of the Interior—they escort agents to the remote stations where treaty money is to be paid. They also perform duties for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, acting as fishery overseers and officers all over the North-west Territories. They have been obliged also to take charge of prisoners, in order to avoid the expense of building jails and penitentiaries all over that country. The police guard-rooms are used as places of confinement for prisoners all over the Territories. And in many other ways they are useful in the public service. Above all they have become useful in a new direction. They have been named fire guardians under the North-west Ordinance, and are now charged with the very important duty of making the settlers come out and assist in putting out prairie fires. I believe that more than the whole cost of the North-west mounted police was saved to the settlers of that country last year by the aid rendered by the police in the suppression of prairie fires. New duties are constantly being found for these men. The hon. gentleman thinks the salaries of inspectors and superintendents too high. Considering the responsible duties they perform it seems to me he makes a very great mistake. The salaries which they receive are less than the salaries of the higher grade of clerks in the public buildings in Ottawa. Men who perform magisterial work in that country, who have charge of a larger body of men than many of the battalions in eastern Canada, who are charged with the preservation of order in the whole of that great territory—to say that they are not worthy of pay equivalent to that of a first-class clerk in the public departments at Ottawa, is to my mind perfectly incomprehensible. The force is being decreased as rapidly as the Government think safe. The hon. gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that there are large bodies of Indians still living in tribes and bands in the settled parts of that country, they are mingled with the people, and are in contact with the property of the people, especially with the cattle and the ranches of that country; and to reduce that force to a point where it would not command the respect and fear of these Indian bands, would be false economy indeed. The force is considered by every body in the North-west as an admirable force, admirably commanded and economically managed. In my trip last fall through the North-west, I never heard the slightest complaint from any one, and I never heard the opinion expressed that it was safe materially to decrease the force at the present time. The expenditure, however, is being decreased, thanks to the construction of railways and to the decreased cost of living, the cost of the force is now a quarter of a million dollars less than it was in 1887. I can promise my hon. friend that the Government will reduce the force as fast as it is safe to do so, keeping in view the necessity of maintaining the peace and good government in that country.

Mr. McMULLEN. No doubt the people of the North-west and Manitoba are anxious to continue the police force, because they secure the expenditure among them of between $600,000 and $700,000 a year. Naturally the people of any province that is having that money scattered amongst them will praise the efficiency of the force and desire it to be continued. But we are looking at it from the standpoint of the general expenditure of this Dominion, and we claim with regard to this North-west Mounted Police, that a very decided reduction in the expenditure could be made. My hon. friend says that these men are getting no more than an ordinary clerk in the public departments at Ottawa. I can tell him that forty-two of them are drawing a salary of about a thousand dollars apiece, and at the same time they are fed, they are clothed, and even their medicine is paid for by the Government. Now, the hon. gentleman knows that the average civil servant in Ottawa does not get $1,000 and everything found.

Mr. IVES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. They are not clothed at the expense of the country; on the contrary, their outfits cost them about $400.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the Minister say that the mounted police are not yearly provided with an outfit?

Mr. IVES. Not the officers.

Mr. IVES.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the amount for clothing that a large quantity is made and sent up there.

Mr. IVES. The constables get a certain amount of clothing every year, but not the officers. The ordinary men who are receiving from 50 to 75 cents a day, are clothed by the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend speaks very highly in favour of the force, and I dare say they may be fairly efficient. But I must say that since I have been a member of this House I have received from private sources in the North-west, letters of complaint not at all creditable to members of that force. As a rule they are no doubt a very decent and properly conducted force, but I do not know that they are all so. I hope they are. I should be sorry to receive any complaint against any member of the force. But I do think that in the past a great deal of looseness has characterized the general conduct of some members of the North-west Mounted Police. We know that some of them have been subjected to reprimands, and in some cases, I presume, it has been necessary to make dismissals. I hope the corps in that regard are getting better, because complaints have been made with regard to the conduct of both officers and men. I think there has been a great deal of unnecessary extravagance in connection with the buildings that have been erected. I have seen in Regina and other places, buildings of enormous extent, erected for the purpose of breaking in horses to ride, and erected in such a way that they can have any amount of sport inside those buildings, where a man can mount a horse and ride him loose without any danger of his getting out. I do not know that the hon. Minister is directly responsible for the looseness and extravagance that have characterized the erection of buildings of all kinds for the North-west Mounted Police. I must say that the sooner that force is cut down and the expenditure reduced, the better it will be for the country.

Subsistence..... $75,000

Mr. FLINT. Are these items for subsistence supplied by tender?

Mr. IVES. Almost exclusively. The only items that we do not purchase by contract, are those supplied to posts where we have only one or two men, in that case we board them at so much a month. But the great mass of the subsistence is purchased by tender after public advertisement, more than 95 per cent of the whole amount.

Mr. FLINT. Perhaps the Minister can give us an idea where the most of this material is obtained. Is it obtained by tender in Winnipeg, or Montreal, or Toronto?

Mr. IVES. We advertise all over Canada, and the tenders are received and opened here, and awarded here. The successful tenderers are found in all parts of the Dominion, we make no distinction at all. Of course, the heavy material, such as forage, we now get chiefly in the North-west. Flour, of course, we get there, as it is cheaper than it is east. The boots and shoes are made in Montreal; a good deal of the clothing is made in Ontario, but we get it from all over the Dominion, and in all cases from the lowest tenderer.

Mr. FLINT. In looking over the Auditor General's Report I see that the items are charged to each different division. I would like to ask if the tenders are made for large quantities, and if afterwards the articles are distributed among the divisions and charged in that way. Or does each division have a separate system of tendering for its own supply?

Mr. IVES. It depends upon what the article is. If, for example, we ask for hay, oats, potatoes, flour, and some other things of that kind, to be delivered at Regina, at Fort Macleod, or Calgary, as the case may be, the amounts are divided according to the requirements of the force at the particular post, and we require delivery at that post. In case of heavy supplies we ask for tenders, the goods to be delivered at the posts where they are required and in the quantities required.

Mr. LAURIER. Is not Conrad one of the chief contractors?

Mr. IVES. The only contract he has this year is for the supply of beef at Lethbridge.

Forage $70,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How does it occur that $70,000 is required this year, when $60,000 was required last year?

Mr. IVES. The amount is the same as last year.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why cannot the hon. gentleman reduce the amount to $64,000?

Mr. IVES. We will spend only what is required. Under the present ruling of the Auditor General an overplus on one vote cannot be appropriated to another vote. There might be a scarcity of forage in the North-west, and it might have to be brought from other parts of the country. We cannot estimate exactly the quantity required, nor can we run the chance of estimating on a favourable year such as last year.

Mr. McMULLEN. How did it happen that last year the department paid $13 and $13.50 per ton for hay in the North-west?

Mr. IVES. I think the hon. gentleman refers to Fort McLeod. There is no hay in that district, and it must be brought a considerable distance.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find the price paid at Calgary was $13.50 per ton.

Mr. IVES. The same remark applies, although in a less degree. There are no hay meadows of any importance near Calgary and hay has to be brought a considerable distance. Moreover, Calgary itself is a large consuming point. Hay is as dear there as anywhere else. When I assure the hon. gentleman that hay was obtained by public tender after notice had been given, and that it was purchased at as low a price as that at which any one obtained it, he cannot have any cause for complaint. You cannot get hay at Calgary as cheap as at Prince Albert and Edmonton.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe that forty-seven tons of hay were purchased at Banff from Dr. Brett at $17 per ton.

Mr. DALY. Banff is not within fifty miles of hay meadows.

Mr. McMULLEN. I agree it is not a hay district, but surely the hay can be got in Manitoba.

Mr. DALY. But the freight has to be paid.

Mr. McMULLEN. Surely you could get the hay as cheaply as in Ontario?

Mr. IVES. Tenders were asked for, and hay was bought at the cheapest possible price. The only hay meadow near Banff is in the National Park, and we are not allowed to cut hay there. Besides, it is a very narrow river bottom, and hay is only found at a considerable distance.

Mr. FLINT. I find that 184 pounds of sugar were purchased at 12 cents; 480 pounds at $8\frac{1}{4}$ cents; another quantity at $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents; still another quantity at 15 cents. These prices are very high. There must surely be some exceptional circumstances to explain the prices.

Mr. IVES. There were no exceptional circumstances. The whole transactions were carried out at the same time. The tender is for sugar delivered at different points. Sugar delivered at Fort McLeod costs double the price of sugar at Regina. These matters are simply questions of freight. Tenders are asked for the supply of a certain quantity of sugar at Fort Saskatchewan, Edmonton, Battleford, which requires ninety miles carting by teams after leaving the railway at Saskatoon, and to other points. The price depends on the point at which the goods are delivered. The tenders for the present year have just been assigned. As to sugar, flour, and nearly all articles of that kind, the Hudson's Bay Company sent in the lowest tender, and the contract was given to them, the articles to be delivered at eight different posts. Their tender being the lowest for each place, they were given the contract. In case their tender had been higher for some particular point, the contract would have been given to another party.

Mr. FLINT. I am glad the explanation has been given, as the items would appear odd without it. I can well understand that when a heavy article like sugar is carried to some point a long distance from the railway, a considerable percentage must be added to the cost.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that considerable quantities of oats have been purchased. The Canada Coal and Coke Company sold 718 bushels at 45 cents. This is a high price for last year, the price of oats in either the Toronto or Montreal markets did not reach within 10 cents of that price. I also find in one place, 9,320 bushels of oats were bought at 48 cents per bushel.

Mr. IVES. Those quantities were delivered at different points, although the address may have been Brandon. The tenderer may have lived at Brandon, but he delivered the articles at the different posts and paid the freights. Oats costing 15 cents a bushel in Winnipeg would, I fancy—that is giving a rough estimate—be nearly doubled in price by the time they reached Regina and Fort McLeod.

Mr. RIDER. Are tenders asked for by advertisements in the papers?

Mr. IVES. Yes, in all the principal newspapers in the North-west, irrespective of politics, and all important papers in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. LAURIER. Irrespective of politics also.

Mr. IVES. No, not fully.

Clothing $45,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Who had the contract for that clothing last year?

Mr. IVES. James O'Brien & Co., Montreal, and the Sanford Manufacturing Company for riding breeches, serges and scarlet tunics. The boots were made in Montreal and some smaller goods were obtained from Brockville and from Mr. Garland, Ottawa. They were the lowest tenderers in all cases.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was the contract let to the lowest tenderer in all cases.

Mr. IVES. Yes, in all cases.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was any contract renewed without a tender being asked?

Mr. IVES. No. There have been cases where the supply under the tender was not sufficient, and where a certain number of sizes were ordered additional, but that did not extend into the next year. No contract was renewed without tenders being asked for.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was informed that tenders were extended, but that may possibly have arisen from orders being given where the quantity taken were not sufficient. I am glad to find that all these contracts are let by tender, and that they have not been renewed.

Mr. Ives.

Repairs, renewals, replacement of horses, arms and ammunition $50,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Would the Minister explain that increase of $10,000?

Mr. IVES. We have had very few new revolvers or rifles since the organization of the force, and a large number of them are now unfit for use. Our own armourer has repaired these arms from time to time. We have saved money by having our own armourer to repair these rifles from year to year, but they have got so bad that I do not consider it would be safe to use them longer.

Mr. FLINT. What has been done with the discarded arms that have been replaced?

Mr. IVES. We have discarded none as yet. We have been repairing them and using them all along.

Medicines and hospital expenses.. $3,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the doctor in charge of the Mounted Police?

Mr. IVES. It is not the intention to appoint any chief surgeon in the place of Dr. Jukes. The doctor at each post looks after the men, and Dr. Haultain at headquarters, who with the commissioner or the assistant commissioner examines and audits the accounts, which are forwarded here and subjected to a further audit before being paid.

Scouts, guides, billeting charges,
etc..... $45,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that we are paying 35 cents a gallon for coal oil at Regina. Now, would it not pay the Government to buy coal oil at wholesale prices here and send it up there. I can easily understand why the people of the North-west want to have the mounted police force. If I lived up there and could sell coal oil at 35 cents a gallon if I were in business, and get $12 or $15 a ton for hay, and high prices for oats and everything else, I would no doubt think that the mounted police were a splendid organization, and that they brought peace and prosperity to the country.

Mr. IVES. The coal oil, like anything else of any importance, was bought by tender. That price of course includes freight and delivery at these distant posts. We do not take the risk of evaporation and loss by getting in a year's stock at a time; but we take delivery of it in quantities. It is all obtained by tender, and generally at the lowest price.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is coal bought by tender? I see that we pay $10 a ton for it.

Mr. IVES. Coal is bought by tender. It is anthracite coal.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much coal is required for the mounted police? I see that a very large quantity has been bought.

Mr. IVES. As the hon. gentleman has stated, the buildings are very much spread out on the prairie, and, as they were cheaply built, they are not very warmly or thoroughly built; so that the quantity of coal required to heat them is considerable. We have to furnish the coal necessary to make the men comfortable; but I do not think they burn any more than they need, because they have to do the firing themselves. The coal is bought by tender, and we buy the most economical kind—anthracite coal.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me that they burn enough to warm the whole country.

Mr. BOWERS. There seems to be a tremendous lot of freighting charged here. Is freight paid on the goods which are supplied by contract, for which we pay such enormous prices? A large sum of money is paid in freight.

Mr. IVES. There are certain parts of the country and some posts where we have found it cheaper to hire the freighting. Then, where a new post has been established after the contracts for the year have been let, as they do not cover the freighting to that particular point, we have to have it done by other people. That accounts for the fact that there is a considerable amount of freight every year charged in the accounts.

Mr. FRASER. In this connection I think it might be worthy of the consideration of the Government whether or not they should do something in the direction of opening up the coal oil fields, of which I understand there are good indications in the North-west Territories. If the Government themselves pay 35 cents a gallon for oil, I think they would be justified in incurring a fair outlay in testing whether or not there is oil in that country. That would do two things: it would give cheaper oil to the people, and it would go far to solve the oil question for the country. I would press on the Government that they might spend a reasonable sum to make this valuable test.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman no doubt has reference to the discoveries made in the Athabasca region, and for his information and the information of others who are interested in those coal oil fields, I may say that it is the intention of the Government immediately to test whether or not there is oil in paying quantities in that region. I think this week the expedition goes out, and the arrangements have been made with a gentleman who has had experience in boring for oil in Canada, the United States, Russia and Burmah—a man of large and varied experience, a namesake of my hon. friend.

Mr. FRASER. I am glad to hear that. He is a native of my own county, and I am sure the work will be well done. I am glad to be able to congratulate the Government in doing a judicious act, and one in the interest of Canada—not in giving the contract to the particular gentleman named, but in making this important test. I think it is one of the wisest things the Government could do.

Mr. FLINT. This item is a very large one, and the Minister must not think that we are asking questions for the sake of delay, because to the people of the Maritime Provinces, and probably to a great many of the people of Ontario and Quebec, the expenses in connection with the North-west Mounted Police are a sort of mystery; that force is so distant, and the charges in the aggregate are so large. I would like to ask how it is that with so large a number of officers and men we have to pay so much for special services. For instance, I notice that $600 is paid for a special constable. I take it that this duty should be discharged by the regular officers and men of the mounted police themselves. I see also that there are charged salaries at Ottawa. I would like to have an explanation of these. In fact, I would like to have an explanation of most of the charges referred to in the Auditor General's Report, from page D-173 to page D-178. Perhaps the Minister would explain the system, and that would throw light on the items.

Mr. IVES. By far the largest part of this item is for railway fares in moving the detachments from one part of the country to another, transporting prisoners, and so forth, and we have also to pay freights for moving horses. The scouts are not used to anything like the same extent that they formerly were; but we still have to use them to some extent, especially in the extreme northern part of the country, where new patrols are being extended every year. The item for salaries at Ottawa is to pay at police rates the men who have charge of the stores here in Ottawa, who do the unpacking of the goods as they come in, and the packing of the goods to be transmitted to the different posts in the west. I may say the scouts are not used to anything like the extent they formerly were. They are now used chiefly in dealing with the Indians and as interpreters, and in the new patrols being made in the extreme north.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. The hon. Minister has told us that he has a very experienced engineer in the North-west seeking to discover oil. I would mention that at St. Sulpice, near Montreal, about ten or twelve farmers have made borings 60 feet deep, and have succeeded in supplying their houses with pure gas. The water engine in that locality is also heated with gas. It is a very pure gas, and it is believed that at the bottom good oil would be found. It would be well if an engineer were sent to explore that locality and also to make surveys along the River St. Lawrence.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that we have spent between $25,000 and $30,000 for coal and wood alone. Are those items checked, and who is supposed to see that the proper quality is delivered, as it appears an enormous sum?

Mr. IVES. I am not at all surprised at the amount, nor would the hon. gentleman be, if he visited the west and saw the character of the buildings. A good many of the buildings were constructed when the force went in first and are thin wooden buildings made in Montreal and Ottawa and moved out there—merely a board and a piece of paper. These buildings are not economical; and if the force were to be continued as a permanency, it would be cheaper to build suitable quarters of suitable materials. The men, however, cannot be allowed to freeze to death. They do not burn more fuel than is necessary for their comfort. The officer who has charge of purchasing the fuel is the commissioner, through the officers in charge of the different posts, and all accounts must be sent to Regina. If there is any exception to the charges they are sent back for explanation, and then the accounts have to be passed upon by the controller before a cheque is issued.

Mr. RIDER. I understood the hon. Minister to say that the salaries paid in Ottawa are paid for the packing of goods. Does the Government receive supplies here and pay the freight to the points where used?

Mr. IVES. Boots and shoes and clothing and things of that kind are furnished cheaper by eastern men than we can buy them in the west. These articles are taken delivery of here and kept in stock, to be sent to the different posts from here as required.

Mr. RIDER. Where is delivery taken of sugar and groceries?

Mr. IVES. As a rule the western men are the lowest tenderers of these, and almost invariably the place of delivery is the place where they are used.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see an item of $100 rent for a race track at Gretna. What is the meaning of that?

Mr. IVES. That was the location for the quarantine ground at Gretna. It was the only place we could find with a fence around it in that neighbourhood. The ground was leased and the fence was bought for the purpose of quarantining cattle, as decided upon, a year ago last spring. This is an expense which the Minister of the Interior should have paid us back.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is an awkward way to put it in the record, because any one would come to the conclusion that the Government was providing race tracks for the mounted police. I see an amount of $929.50 for postage at Regina, over $3 a day. That would be over one hundred letters a day.

Mr. IVES. I know that the officers have to report very frequently to the commissioner. The communications are almost daily from all the posts to him, and there are also the bulky returns sent to Ottawa for inspection by the controller.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman explain the item of lamb-skin coats bought from R. J. Devlin?

Mr. IVES. We have to furnish fur coats for the winter use of the men who go on long trips in the winter. We formerly used buffalo hides, but they are not procurable now. We have been experimenting with the different kinds of fur to see which is the most durable and cheapest, and I presume these were samples for the purpose of testing.

Mr. McMULLEN. O'Brien of Montreal furnished 2,599 pairs of pants at $5.56. That appears to be a high price. What were they made of?

Mr. IVES. Of a very thick, substantial strong serge, made double in the seat, double down the legs, and at a price at which I would be glad to have them furnished another year. They gave great satisfaction and were a great deal cheaper than anybody else would make them at.

Mr. McMULLEN. No doubt the hon. Minister is under that impression and possibly he may be right. But he must remember that an ordinary Canadian serge or fulled cloth or a Canadian tweed, even suppose it was double or partly so—supposing it took three yards to make a pair of pants—could be bought for from 60 cents to 65 cents a yard wholesale. I think my hon. friend from North Lanark (Mr. Rosamond) will confirm what I say. That will be less than $2 for the whole stuff.

Mr. IVES. This is not an ordinary fulled cloth or tweed, but is an exceedingly heavy cloth and dyed of a uniform colour. We are as particular about the colour of this cloth as the Militia Department is about the colour of the scarlet tunics. The care necessary in the manufacture of the cloth and in making the breeches is such, that the price, as I say, has not been reached by anybody else.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can samples of these pants be seen in Ottawa?

Mr. IVES. Yes; in the Government Stores.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. Minister say who makes the material in Canada?

Mr. IVES. I could not say; the cloth is furnished by Mr. O'Brien. I will send a pair of the breeches to my hon. friend if he will agree to return them. I'll take his word for it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know what kind of cloth this is, and I think the hon. Minister ought to be able to give us that information.

Mr. IVES. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman exactly what it is. But the cloth and the way in which the breeches are made gives them a quality to outwear three ordinary pairs of tweed breeches, subject to the same treatment. The men are constantly in the saddle.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have a curiosity to know about this, because what is good for the mounted police will be good for other people. Many men engaged in other lines of business would like to get one of these everlasting pairs of breeches. Mr. O'Brien it appears is not now in the trade.

Mr. IVES. Yes ; he is still in Montreal.

Mr. CURRAN. He is still in the police business.

New buildings and general repairs..... $30,000

Mr. McMULLEN. In the face of the fact that it is the intention to reduce the force as rapidly as possible, how does it come that the hon. gentleman wants $30,000 for new buildings and repairs ?

Mr. IVES. This is the first time that the money for the repair of the mounted police buildings has been put in the mounted police estimates. It has always heretofore appeared in the estimates of the Public Works Department. This year the Minister of Public Works has put in no estimate for this amount. This is the sum necessary to keep in habitable condition the barracks, houses, and other buildings and stables—for the stables take up fully half the amount—for the force scattered, as it is, over such an immense territory. The amount is about the usual amount hitherto asked for by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FLINT. Is the expenditure of the money to be under the charge of the Minister in charge of the police or under the charge of the Minister of Public Works ?

Mr. IVES. It is under my control.

Mr. FLINT. I think that is an improvement, for there must be a great deal of delay and circumlocution when the expenditure has to be made by one department for the benefit of another. It should be considered satisfactory that the department responsible for the work and requiring the work should control the expenditure of the money.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not intended to erect new buildings, but only to repair those already in existence ?

Mr. IVES. No new buildings have been decided upon. The amount will probably be required to keep in habitable condition the buildings we already have.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do the mounted police do their own freighting from the station to their own warehouses ? For instance, in Regina when I was there a few years ago, I noticed that this work seemed to be done by others, although the mounted police seemed to have all the facilities for it.

Mr. IVES. The freighting of ordinary goods for the use of the police is done by the police themselves. But heavy freight, like coal, is hauled and delivered under contract. The hon. gentleman must not forget that, though we have men and horses, we have not a great many teams or great facilities for transportation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it would be unreasonable to expect them to do the freighting on heavy articles such as coal, but in other goods, I think the force might act as their own carriers, and thus save the enormous freight charges.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and the House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 20th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1894, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 20th June, 1894.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved :

That the Message of His Excellency the Governor General, with the Estimates accompanying the same, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

THE FRENCH TREATY.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON (for Mr. Foster) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 147) respecting a certain treaty between Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the French Republic.

Mr. LAURIER. Has the hon. gentleman nothing to say on this ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Nothing at present. It contains merely one section, ratifying the treaty.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

OWEN SOUND POSTMASTER.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, When did the office of postmaster at Owen Sound become vacant ? Has a postmaster been appointed ? If so, what is his name, and when was he appointed ? If no appointment has yet been made, why not ?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. A vacancy took place on the 1st of January, 1893. There has been no appointment yet made. The post office is looked after by the deputy of the late postmaster.

THE SAFETY OF SHIPS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved:

That Bill (No. 98) further to amend the Revised Statutes, chap. 77, respecting the safety of ships, be referred back to committee with instructions to amend the same by inserting after the word "place," in the seventh line on the last page, the words "who has reason to expect the arrival of any ship carrying passengers."

He said: I stated yesterday that I would remember a suggestion that had been made to the committee in this direction, and I have discussed it with the hon. gentleman who raised the point.

Motion agreed to, and Bill again considered in committee, amended, and reported.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose the hon. gentleman will introduce a Bill to make the same amendment in the Inspection Act ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think that will be necessary.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 110) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. LAURIER. Are there any changes made by this Bill, or is it a mere consolidation ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is a consolidation with a few improvements. It has been carefully considered in the other House, and I shall call attention to the several changes—which are not radical—as we proceed with the discussion of the Bill in committee.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the Minister in charge of the Bill state generally what amendments are introduced into this consolidation, or whether it is wholly a consolidation. If there are no amendments, it is not worth while occupying time with it. If there are serious amendments, it is better to have them pointed out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the main the Bill is a consolidation, as I have said, but there are one or two amendments. I cannot at the present moment call to mind any radical amendment, but as we go through I will draw the attention of the House to any particular change. Most of the changes are simply in phraseology. There are many Acts to be consolidated, some of them dating since before Confederation, and subsequently amended and re-amended. Certain sections are recast. Where any new powers are taken or any important change made, I will mention it as we proceed.

On section 21,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to put in a clause, which we will call clause 3, instead of the present clause 3 in the section, which will become clause 4. The clause I would like to put in is the following:—

All land not being within the limit of the harbour as defined by this Act, but being within the limits of the harbour as defined by the Acts previous to this Act, shall be deemed to have reverted and to be vested in Her Majesty in right of the Dominion of Canada.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. How would this amendment agree with subsection 2 ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It would follow after subsection 2. I may state to the committee that the section as it came to us simply repeats the existing law with a slight modification in that subsection 2. The words "but not heretofore within the limits of the harbour," were inserted in subsection 2 in consequence of the definition of the harbour boundaries made by section 6. The small portions of the bed of the St. Lawrence formerly vested in Her Majesty, might fall within the limits of the harbour, and it was deemed necessary to vest them in the commissioners so that the latter may maintain all suits and actions in respect thereof. So then, the small portions of land formerly within the limits of the harbour, may after the rectification of the boundaries, fall outside those limits. The section as it is submitted by the commissioners, would be made quite complete by this subsection, which reverts, according to the language, all such lands in Her Majesty, and consequently would cover any point of that kind.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What I meant was this: the limits or the boundaries of the corporation remaining as they were, then this second subsection says: "all the land lying within the limits of the harbour of Montreal as defined by this Act and heretofore vested in Her Majesty in right of the Dominion of Canada, but not heretofore within the limits of the harbour." Well, if it has the same limits as before, you have not then to provide to give the commissioners the property which they had not before.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, and that is exactly why I am putting in that clause. It might have been contained, as the hon. gentleman said, that we are giving them control over property where they had no control before. We now give them specific control over that property, but they have already exercised control over the property of Her Majesty, and they have done it under the legislation referred to in section 3. The only point is that we give this power and control clearly and distinctly, which has always been understood and acted on under general language which gives to the Crown the exercise of that right and authority.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think the language is very happy, for it leaves the meaning very obscure. What is the object of the amendment?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. After making certain statements, the clause provides that these properties are vested in Her Majesty, and it does so by express language; and in order to prevent an argument arising to the effect that all outside of those limits might not be vested in Her Majesty, it was decided to cover that point by inserting this clause.

On section 22,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This clause will give the commissioners power to control traffic on the wharfs.

Mr. LAURIER. It is a very extraordinary clause. It practically gives the Harbour Commissioners power to enter into competition with the railway companies and with tram companies. The motive may be to allow the commissioners only to build tracks for their own use, but under the wording of the clause they can undoubtedly come into competition with railway companies.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Only over this very limited ground. Parliament has allowed the commissioners to build the tracks, and this clause gives them complete control over the property, but no further than within their limits and reserve.

On section 26,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to move an amendment to subsection (r) which has been asked for by the pilots. At present it reads as follows:—

For regulating the procedure of and before the corporation in the exercise of its judicial powers and of its powers as Pilotage Authority for the Pilotage District of Montreal.

That far it is all right; but they ask that the rest of the subsection be struck out, namely:

Such by-laws may extend to any matter of procedure, or otherwise, not provided for by this Act, but for which it is found necessary to provide for the proper exercise of such powers and the better attainment of the objects of this Act.

They object to the language of this, and I think it is a little broad, and I do not think it will injure the proper powers of the commissioners to strike the last lines out.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 121) to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the North-west Mounted Police Force.—(Mr. Ives.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me this practice of giving officers the rank of Deputy Ministers is very decidedly objectionable. I can conceive of no reason in the nature of the case why an officer who has charge of eight or nine hundred men should be made a Deputy Minister. These officers, whatever they may be, are better kept well in hand and under the control of the member of the Council who is specially made responsible for the management and control of the North-west Mounted Police. I think this is the first occasion on which any gentleman occupying the position of Comptroller of the North-west Mounted Police has been rated as a Deputy Minister, and I do not see any occasion for it, but on the contrary, grave objection to it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was just rising to state the same objection that my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has presented to the committee. Unquestionably this cannot be treated as a permanent force. If it were a permanent force there might be some reason for making the chief officer a deputy head. But we are looking forward, and looking forward anxiously, to the time when we shall be able to disband this corps. Assurances have been given to the House in previous years that it was the intention of the Government to cut down the number of police and to reduce the cost of the corps. But here we have a proposal to place a permanent Deputy Minister at the head of this force, a force that in a few years should be removed altogether. There is no reason for making a permanent force in the North-west, unless you have them as preventive officers to guard against smuggling. But if this is to be done the force should be established in connection with the Customs Department, which should have control and direction of the police, and should bear the responsibility of the expense. But to ask the House to agree to make a permanent force and appoint a deputy head as its chief is to ask something that will be exceedingly unpopular. Such a course may find favour in the North-west, but not in other parts of the country. We are spending about $700,000 a year on this force. Moreover, we find an additional item of $10,000 in the Supplementary Estimates. This is going in the other direction from that which was promised two years ago. I shall resist in every shape and form the perpetuation of this force by placing at the head of it a deputy head the same as in the permanent departments of the Civil Service. The man now in charge of the force does not get the salary of a deputy head, but you cannot give him the position of a Deputy Minister without also giving him the salary of that office. It is unreasonable to expect the House to consent peaceably and quietly to proposals of this kind which must have the effect of increasing the cost of this force to the country, instead of decreasing it.

Mr. IVES. The hon. gentleman says that the Comptroller's salary will be increased by this Act, that that officer has not been getting the salary of a deputy head. The hon. gentleman every session since he has been in this House has joined in a vote of $3,200 for the Comptroller of the North-west Mounted Police, and that is the salary of a Deputy Minister. There is to be no increase of salary occasioned by the adoption of this section. Mr. White, the Comptroller, was appointed by Order in Council in almost the words of this Act, with a salary of $3,200 and with the duties and grade of a deputy head. No change is proposed except to put in statutory form what has existed under Order in Council for several years past. The hon. gentleman says we propose to increase the expense of the North-west Mounted Police, because we have brought down an estimate of $10,000 additional in the Supplementary Estimates. I may explain to the hon. gentleman that the estimate we ask for is to cover several short votes and that, on the other hand, there will be unexpended balances of other votes which will very much more than cover this sum. The occasion for this vote is the new rule which the Auditor General has recently established, that he must adhere to the Estimates as printed and laid before Parliament as to the payment of the money proposed by those estimates, and that if one of these votes connected with a certain service proves insufficient, the unused surplus of some other vote in the same connection cannot be used for the purpose of paying accounts in connection with this. For example, we have a shortage in the vote for forage, but we have an excess in the vote for clothing, or in the vote for the pay of the force; but we are not allowed to use the $20,000 or over that we have more than we require to pay our police, in connection with another vote where we have less; and that occasions the necessity of coming down with Supplementary Estimates and asking for a vote to cover a shortage in particular votes where we are short. But I can assure the hon. gentleman that on the whole service the expenditure will fall several thousand dollars under the estimates, even if you add to the original estimates the $10,000 that will be asked for in the Supplementary Estimates. As I said before, the salary is not to be increased, the position of the Comptroller is not to be in any respect altered; and you will notice that there is no department created, as was done in the case of the Queen's Printer, and also in the case of the Geological Survey. Both those officers are declared by statute to be deputy heads, and departments are created, in both cases, by statute. We have here carefully avoided the creation of a department, we have carefully avoided a change of salary, so as not to incur any increased expenditure at all. We have simply given by statute a position to the Comptroller which he has held for several years past. I must ask the committee to consider this matter favourably. I think it is only due to the officer who for many years has managed the North-west Mounted Police Force with great skill and with great economy, and who is well known to every one who has had the pleasure of doing business with him, to be a first-class officer; I think it is due to him that his position should be established by statute, as was done in the case of the heads of the Geological Survey and of the Queen's Printer; but more particularly do I ask this to be done when, as I say, we have not changed his position, we have not increased his salary, and we have not created a department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I hardly think the explanations of the Minister have been quite satisfactory. I submit that we ought to discuss and decide upon this Bill before the House, quite irrespective of the personal considerations which, it is very plain, have, to a large extent, moved him. I have nothing to say, my knowledge is not sufficient to enable me to say whether the gentleman who fills the position has discharged his duties with entire satisfaction; I am quite willing to admit he has, I have heard nothing to the contrary. But that is not the principle involved here. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a very strong desire on the part of the people, and on the part of the representatives of the people, to cut down all unnecessary expenditure in this Dominion of Canada. Now, we have been looking forward to the time in the near future when this expenditure connected with the North-west Mounted Police might be materially reduced. The position which the Comptroller of the North-west Mounted Police occupied, enabled Parliament to have complete control over him. He did not hold any statutory office; he did not hold office by virtue of the guarantee given by a statute. His office was created for a temporary purpose, and was essentially a temporary office; and the vote for his pay came yearly before the House of Commons, who held, in that way, entire control over the subject-matter. Now, the hon. gentleman seeks to make this officer, who was a temporary one, being entirely under the control of the House, a statutory officer, with statutory pay, and not subject to the control of the House. The House of Commons, after the passing of this Bill, would have no control whatever over the salary of the Comptroller of Mounted Police. His salary is fixed here by statute, and the House might be entirely opposed to granting him his yearly salary, but they would be powerless in the matter, just the same as you are powerless in the matter of the salary of a judge, or any other statutory officer. So the hon. gentleman sees that, although he has not, in so many words, created a department, he is practically creating a department, it is just the same thing. A few years ago there was a craze for the creation of departments. We had the Marine and Fisheries divided up, against the strong protests of members on this side of the House, and a department carved out of the Fisheries, with a statutory officer. What has been the result of the experiment? The result of that experiment is that the deputy head of that department has been superannuated, and for his life, at least, removed from the service; the two branches of the departments are amalgamated again, and as long as that gentleman lives he is on the superannuated list, and we pay him his $1,800 or $2,000, whatever it may be, a year, for doing nothing. Now we are repeating the same thing. The Comptroller of the North-west Mounted Police has in the past suffered no inconvenience that I have heard of, by reason of his holding his appointment under Order in Council; and the advantage of it was that it left the matter absolutely under the control of the people's representatives, and they could from time to time express their opinion upon the necessity of maintaining or retaining that office and of increasing or reducing the salary. Therefore, I say that we are surrendering up the control which we hitherto have had, and I do not think it is a wise thing to do. Again, I see that the hon. gentleman is applying the Civil Service Superannuation Act to all these officers.

Mr. IVES. That is nothing new; that is done under the existing statute, and has been done for several years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not know that these officers came under the statute.

Mr. IVES. All the commissioned officers of the force, and have been for years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If that is so, what is the object of the hon. gentleman in enacting it here?

Mr. IVES. This is only a consolidation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Very well, I shall make no reference to that, if the fact is as the hon. gentleman states. I confine my objections to the point I have stated, that he removes from the control of Parliament the pay and the appointment of this officer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that more consideration ought to be given to this matter of appointing an unnecessary deputy head, than the Minister seems disposed to grant. I find by the Estimates that we have already fifteen full-fledged deputy heads and a couple of Commissioners of Inland Revenue and Customs besides, who are practically, I fancy, pretty much in the same position. Now, there is no justification or reason whatever for going on multiplying these Deputy Ministers. The plain truth of the matter is this, that it would be infinitely more in the public interest to reduce, not merely the number of Deputy Ministers, but the Ministers themselves. For a community of less than five millions, we have got about the largest Cabinet I ever heard of, infinitely larger in proportion to our population than the Cabinet of England, infinitely larger in proportion than the Cabinet of the United States; and I have yet to learn that the public administration has been benefited in any material shape thereby. Now, this creation of a Deputy Minister is perfectly uncalled for. The hon. gentleman has not produced a single reason of any kind to justify it. What is this officer? He is the head of a body of some 700 or 800 men, whom we have been told are likely to be reduced as the condition of the country will permit. The proposition is pretty much the same as would be a proposition to make every colonel of a British regiment a Deputy Minister of War. I must say that it appears to me there is no sort of justification for the proposition to give this officer a statutory rank—particularly as it will have the result of swelling the pay, I fancy—when we have been assured that the service over which he is at present is rather likely to be decreased than increased. Nor can I see what there is in the duties pertinent to the mounted police to call for an officer with the rank of a deputy head.

Mr. DAVIN. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) who has just taken his seat, or with the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I do not see what reason there is in objecting to give an officer statutory rank corresponding with his actual rank. The Comptroller has had the actual rank for all practical purposes of a Deputy Minister; he has been in the position of Comptroller for many years, and as the Minister says, there cannot be the least doubt that he has discharged his duties with assiduity and with efficiency. Suppose the strength of the police force was reduced to-morrow, or suppose the force was put out of existence altogether, is it to be supposed that an officer who has spent a greater part of his life in the service of the Crown should have his services dispensed with on less generous, or I might say, less equitable terms than they would be dispensed with if he held the position of a Deputy Minister? I do not believe there is at the present moment any prospect, or that we should contemplate any prospect of doing away with the mounted police, or materially reducing their number.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) says "Hear, hear." I speak as much in regard to economy as does the hon. gentleman, and I say the consequence of reducing the mounted police force in the North-west would be to lead to great expense. No one will deny that the present Comptroller has acted as deputy of the department, either under Sir John Macdonald, under Sir John Abbott or under the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives), and if the Comptroller is doing the duty of a deputy head of a department, it seems to me to be ungenerous, and not to have any relation whatever with either theoretical or practical economy, to deny that officer the statutory recognition of the rank which he really holds. In regard to economy, if the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) will, in regard to this or any other matter that many come before us in Committee of the Whole, point out any course that will lead to economy, he will find me with him; but from what I know of the North-west, and of the services discharged by the mounted police, and from what I know of the money they have saved to the Government of Canada, so far as regards our Indians, from what I know of their good services performed as agents practically of the Department of Customs, and also as regards the peace and harmony they have preserved in that country, I say that in our whole administration I do not know anything that relates more truly to real economy than the existence of the North-west Mounted Police. I suppose the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) said "Hear, hear" because he supposed that I, as a representative from the North-west, was concerned in this matter. If complaint were made in regard to the action of the Comptroller from the point of view of the North-west, it would be that he is too economical. I can bear witness to the lynx-eye with which he regards every kind of expenditure connected with the force of which he is the deputy head, and if that force is efficient, it is largely by the aid of the Comptroller, and the actual position of the Comptroller is that of a deputy head, and his salary is that of a deputy head. It seems to me a very small affair indeed to seek to deny him statutory recognition of the rank which he really and practically holds.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I want to enter my protest against the multiplication of deputy heads. I have on a former occasion entered my protest against the increase of the Cabinet. I presume one increase follows the other; one step taken in wrong-doing leads to other steps being taken in the same direction. I entered my protest when the Cabinet was enlarged, and I entered my protest against some of the material with which it was enlarged. I have not changed my mind since then; but I must emphatically object to the increase in the number of permanent deputy heads. It may be quite true, as the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has said, that the mounted police are of use in the North-west. It is, however, not a question of the usefulness of the North-west Mounted Police that we are discussing here, but it is the question as to whether we are going to multiply officers here. I am opposed to the multiplication of officers who are unnecessary, and not in the public interest. If we give effect by law to this increase, where are we going to stop, and when are we going to stop? There will be a deputy head for every force and service we have in this country before long, and it is about time to draw the line in that direction. I believe our North-west people are civilized, and it is not necessary to have a force there. I believe the Indians, if properly treated and given their rights, will be so peaceful that it will not be necessary to have a mounted police force there. I believe it is mismanagement which compels the maintenance of a permanent force of mounted police in the North-west. I have more confidence in the people of the North-west than has the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). I believe they are strong enough to preserve order in the Territories without the mounted police. I think the member for Assiniboia is not doing great credit to the people of the North-west when he says it is necessary to keep this force there in order to preserve law and order. I think we should hear a different statement from the hon. gentleman. A great many of the people settled there have gone from Ontario, and we had not the slightest difficulty in maintaining peace and order, and I think a representative of the people should set such an example that it would not be necessary to have a police force there to keep the peace and protect the rights and liberties of the people. I again protest against this encroachment, this enlargement, and this widening out of Comptroller of the force. I think the time has come in the experience of this country when the conditions do not warrant increased outlay, and when they are not required for the public service. Anything required for the public service I am willing to support, but any proposition to pass votes that are unnecessary I am here to protest against, and I will protest against them, and I do not wish to do so by a silent vote. I hope the hon. Minister will reconsider this matter and he will see his way clear to keep within the present bounds, and not magnify and multiply officers unnecessarily as has been done by this Bill.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to say, in reply to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), that I have noticed ever since I came to this House, and no doubt other members have made similar observations, that when there is an item connected with increased expenditure in the North-west the hon. gentleman is always ready to jump up and advocate it. Any proposal that proposes an expenditure in the North-west causes the hon. gentleman to throw his hat up in favour of it. In this case the hon. gentleman is very willing to advocate the proposition now before the House. He says he is willing to do that on account of the peace and prosperity of the country. Well, we want to see the North-west prosper, but we do not think an enormous force of 800 men is necessary under present conditions to keep the Indians from rebellion. We know that they are all on their reserves and subject to the superintendents and sub-superintendents to whom we pay respectable salaries, and we know that as long as you feed an Indian well he will have no intention of going to war. We vote a large sum here annually to provide well for the Indians, and under these conditions they are willing to remain at peace. No doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) would be scared at an outbreak in the North-west. I can well understand that he belongs to that class of men to whom, in case of an outbreak, one pair of legs would be worth two pair of hands. I have no doubt myself that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), who went up to the North-west at one time, would be a man of the same kind if a similar occasion arose. We can judge from the manner in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) advocates protection for the people who live there that he is a man who could easily get scared, but he should try to banish from his mind the feeling that these poor unfortunate Indians will make war on him or on the people up there. We would all regret if they did so, because we are all quite sure that the North-west would never again send another specimen of humanity like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) to this House. He affords us a very great deal of pleasure by times and keeps us in laughter when the House is disposed to be rather sober. We appreciate the hon. gentleman's presence here for that purpose, but we do not want him to be continually advocating wasteful public expenditure simply because the money is expended in the North-west. Any items of expenditure there receives his entire unqualified approbation, but we are here for the purpose of cutting down the public expenditure that has now grown beyond the capabilities of the people of this Dominion to bear. Our people are struggling and labouring under difficulties which are the outcome of enormous increases of expenditure which this Government has subjected them to year after year. Why, Sir, fifteen years ago we only spent $23,000,000 annually and to-day we are spending $36,000,000 or $37,000,000 a year. This force is but a temporary force, intended to protect new settlers from Indian violence in the past, but there is no danger of violence from the Indians now, and there never would have been danger if hon. gentlemen opposite had discharged their duties to the Indians and half-breeds. They neglected their duty in this respect and their neglect cost the country eight or ten million dollars. The only ground upon which you can advocate a continuance of the mounted police force that it may be utilized as a preventive force against smuggling from the United States into Canada. But, Sir, I hope that the day is not far distant, when sensible men will so reduce the tariff that our people will be able to buy goods at such a low price that it will not be necessary to have a mounted police force to prevent smuggling. The result of our high tariff is: that under the excuse of keeping the Indians and the half-breeds in the North-west from murdering the population there, we are keeping a mounted police force to prevent smuggling, because goods in Canada cost much more than they do on the other side. We might possibly want a few members of the Dominion Police up there, quiet, good men, who would from time to time discharge the duties of peace officers and see that order was maintained; but to keep 800 men riding around from place to place, having an enjoyable time, living like lords, and doing little or nothing except in the way of preventive duty along the frontier at a cost of $700,000 a year; is absurd and unreasonable and I believe will not be longer tolerated by the people. I have in my desk at this moment, letters from residents in the North-west who declare that the number of mounted policemen there is beyond reason and necessity. They point out that a comparatively few competent, judicious, and active men, to keep the peace and look after the general interests of the settlers would be all the force required under present circumstances. I believe that the Minister in charge of this department is making a mistake in taking the course he does now. The increase of the number of Cabinet Ministers was a great mistake, and now the increase of deputy heads of departments is another mistake. It may be true, as the Minister says, that the salary of the officer will not be increased, but this measure will increase his prestige and standing, and place him in a position of power where he will have to have a staff around him. I do not pretend to say that the Comptroller of the North-west Mounted Police has not been an efficient and faithful officer. Nobody finds fault with the manner in which he discharges his duties. I have heard no complaint with regard to him, but the complaint I have to make now is this: that by the appointment of a deputy head under a statutory provision, we are tending to perpetuate that force and to make permanent what was supposed to be only a temporary force. We are practically legislating in opposition to the promise that was made to the House two years ago when the Minister, on being interrogated by members of the Opposition, stated that it was the intention of the Government to reduce the force from year to year and eventually to do away with it altogether. That promise has not been kept, and the House is now asked to violate that promise by establishing a deputy head, and in a certain way perpetuate the existence of a force that is acknowledged by the people of the North-west, and looked upon by the whole Dominion as a mere temporary force, and one that should be reduced as speedily as possible. I contend that there is no justification for asking the House to consent to this Bill.

Mr. DENISON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has made a long speech in favour of retrenchment in the North-west Mounted Police Force, about the same speech as we heard last night on a kindred subject. While he was making this long speech, he in a manner acknowledged that the Government carried out the pledge they made to reduce the force, because he has mentioned more than once to-day, that there are 800 men in it. We all know that the North-west Mounted Police Force for some years numbered over 1,000 men, and if it is reduced now to 800, there is a substantial reduction, and an earnest of the fulfilment of the pledge made by the Government to reduce the force if necessary. But while the Government have made that pledge, it must not be forgotten that as settlement encroaches on the territory now occupied by the police, settlers are also going further and further north into more remote parts of the country, and the same necessity will arise as has arisen in the past. This year it is proposed to spend money in sinking wells in the district where there are supposed to be coal oil deposits. If these should turn out to be valuable, no doubt thousands of people will flock up there to take part in developing them, and that will be a new field for the mounted police. Just one word as to the Deputy Minister. I am sure that every member of this House who knows anything of him will bear me out when I say that there is no more efficient officer in any of the departments than the Comptroller. If he has not the title of a Deputy Minister, he has for a number of years been performing the duties of one, and I believe he has had the pay; and it is only an act of justice to so efficient an officer to place him on the same basis as the other deputy heads.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that the promise made to the House has been kept by the reduction of the force from 1,000 to 800. The hon. gentleman could not have been in the House when that promise was made, or if he was, he did not take a correct note of what was said. Otherwise, he would have known that the statement was that as the time of those in the force expired, it was the intention of the Government to reduce the force in that way by not filling the vacancies. In the place of that, we find that new appointments were made last year. Yet the hon. gentleman gets up and tells the committee that I am virtually misrepresenting the promise that was made. The hon. gentleman does not keep a very close eye on what is done, or he would not jeopardize his limited reputation in the House in that way. The promise made was that as the men's time expired the force would be reduced, and that it was hoped that eventually, before many years, it would be obliterated.

Mr. DENISON. What I understood the Government to promise was that when men resigned they would not fill up their places if it was in the interest of the country to reduce the force in consequence of a smaller force being sufficient. I did not understand that there was any promise on the part of the Government that they would not fill up any vacancies. I think the Government proposed to fill up vacancies as long as they found it necessary to keep a force there and at present strength; but if they had to reduce, they would do so in the manner pointed out by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. and gallant friend in his previous remarks glanced at a point which I did not make, that is, that we are rapidly opening up a new North-west in the western North-west: and, undoubtedly, in doing that, we shall need the services of the mounted police as in the past. Let me say a personal word with regard to my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). He has no confidence in my valour. He forgets that in 1885, although I was busy here, the moment the war broke out, I went to the front and enlisted as a private, and did my best to extinguish the rebellion. I have no doubt, however, that my valour is no match for that of my hon. friend, because I have been with him for many years in this House, and I must say that the slaughtering heroism of the hon. gentleman transcends in one direction anything I have ever shown. He never rises in the House without murdering the Queen's English; he never rises in this House without dealing out wholesale slaughter against Lindley Murray; and I confess that, in his performance of these great feats and these bloody onslaughts upon the literature and language of England, he rises to a pitch of valour and heroic distinction to which I could make no approach whatever; and I do not profess to rival my hon. friend in regard to that kind of courage. But, Sir, whatever he was doing in 1885, I was doing in my duty in defence of my country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may be allowed to make a few remarks in reply to my worthy friend. He has challenged my use of the Queen's English. It possibly may not be the most accurate on all occasions. I do not claim to have had a double-headed college education like my hon. friend. I remember that at one time my father had a calf that sucked two cows, and that only made it the greater calf. A man who is sent to the best of all colleges and shows no more result of it than my hon. friend, only comes out the greater calf, in such a case the college education does not amount to anything. As for my hon. friend going to the North-west, if he took his gun on his shoulder, I have no doubt he kept well in the rear. He has never had a scare yet. I do not suppose he smelt powder; he never went near enough to smell powder. He was, I believe, at one time a war correspondent. I dare say he has seen some fighting at a distance; but I am quite sure he never was in the centre of it. I am ready, whether on Dominion matters or on any others, to cross swords with the hon. gentleman, notwithstanding my inability to express myself in that cultivated language which the hon. gentleman professes to be able to use on all occasions. With regard to my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Denison), if he will turn up the statement made by Sir John Macdonald with regard to this force, he will find that my statement is correct—that Sir John Macdonald informed the House that the Government were looking forward hopefully to the time when the services of this force would not be required in the North-west, and that it was the intention of the Government, as the time of the men expired, not to make new appointments, but to reduce the force from time to time until it was eventually wiped out.

Mr. IVES. I do not think it quite fair to have the remarks of the hon. member for North Wellington go to the country unanswered, because they might create the impression that the force is larger than the force employed by the United States under similar circumstances. Now, the state of Montana is immeasurably smaller in extent than the territory over which our North-west Mounted Police have jurisdiction. There are about the same number of Indians in Montana and Dakota as in the Canadian North-west; and whereas we use a force of about 800 men, who have been successful to a degree in preserving order in that country, the smallest number of troops the United States have found sufficient for a much smaller territory, and with about the same number of Indians, belonging to the same tribes, is some 3,500 to 4,000 men. Any one familiar with the state of things in their territory and ours must admit that our force, though only a small fraction of theirs, has succeeded admirably.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I entirely object to the doctrine that a Deputy Minister is to be created whenever an officer may happen to do his duty, and I therefore move that clause 2 be struck out.

Mr. IVES. This officer has been for ten years a deputy head under Order in Council. He is a member of the civil service, and acquired the rank of chief clerk years ago, long before he was made deputy head by Order in Council, and for the last twenty-five years he has contributed to the superannuation fund. There is no increased cost to the people by the statutory recognition of his position as deputy head, there is no increase in the number of employees or in the salary, and I think that the proposition is reasonable and should be adopted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the Government have any power to create a deputy head by Order in Council. They may assign certain duties to an officer similar to those performed by a deputy head, but have no power to create a deputy head.

Amendment negatived.

On section 5,

Mr. McMULLEN. How many surgeons are there, and who are they?

Mr. IVES. There are five—assistant surgeons Haultain, Fraser, Perry, Ayles and Wilks, and they get $1,400 each and rations and lodging, but not clothing.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are their travelling expenses paid?

Mr. IVES. They do not travel, but are stationed at the different posts.

Mr. McMULLEN. That makes five surgeons for 800 men.

Mr. IVES. We have a surgeon at Regina, another at Macleod, another at Calgary, and one at Maple Creek.

Mr. McMULLEN. Would it not be better to have a tariff of fees and employ the local surgeons, except at these small posts where you cannot get any?

Mr. IVES. We do that at several posts where we can get competent men at less cost. At Lethbridge we employ the resident doctor, also at Prince Albert, and some other places where we can secure good men at stated fees; but in the places I have mentioned, we find it cheaper and more satisfactory to have the work done by men attached to the force, and we have limited the appointments to the exact number required.

Mr. McMULLEN. By this Act they will be made employees under the statute. Do they contribute to the superannuation fund?

Mr. IVES. This clause has been the law ever since the force was established and is not changed.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman is rather hard on the medical profession at Regina, and Calgary, where he said he could not get competent men willing to attend the force at ordinary rates. He is paying these surgeons at the rate of $62 a head for all the members of the force, besides their rations and lodging. Either the police force must be extremely sickly or the profession must be very exorbitant in their charges. It seems to me that the only possible need for a surgeon specially attached to the force would be in small and distant places and not in places like Regina, the capital of the country, or like Calgary. No doubt the policemen there could be attended for at less than $60 a head per year, by the local doctors.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the intention of the hon. Minister to increase the surgeons' salaries by this vote?

Mr. IVES. Not at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman said a moment ago that a salary of a surgeon was $1,000, and by this Act it is intended to make it $1,400.

Mr. IVES. Not at all. We do not propose to change the law as it exists.

Mr. McMULLEN. But the hon. gentleman will see that the Bill says "each surgeon or assistant surgeon, per annum, $1,400."

Mr. IVES. What section is that?

Mr. McMULLEN. Section 14.

Mr. CASEY. It would not be a bad idea if the first reading of such Bills as this took place by the Minister personally before he introduced them to the House.

Mr. IVES. This provision is for the salary not exceeding $1,400.

Mr. McMULLEN. But the Minister said a moment ago that the salary was $1,000.

Mr. IVES.

Mr. IVES. It has always been so, and no change is contemplated.

Mr. McMULLEN. That may be true. I asked what the salary of the surgeon was. He said $1,000. I pointed out to him by the Bill that a salary of $1,400 is provided for.

Mr. IVES. I supposed the hon. gentleman was discussing the question of veterinary surgeon, whose salary is $1,000.

Mr. CASEY. That is a little too rich, because when we were discussing the question of employing local doctors, and not having five doctors for 800 men, the Minister asked if it would do to let a hundred men die at Maple Creek because they had not a surgeon on the spot. The hon. gentleman knows that he was not speaking of veterinary surgeons, or he could not have used that language. He knows perfectly well that the question was not one of having men attended by veterinary surgeons. He knows that he was not aware of what the provisions were regarding the surgeon until my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) called attention to the point. That is why I suggested the propriety of a first reading of the Bill by the Minister himself before he introduced it. I think it would be a better course to admit his ignorance of its provisions at once than to say that he supposed we were discussing veterinary surgeons when his own remarks show he knew we were discussing the question of surgeons for the men.

On section 6,

Mr. McMULLEN. What alterations are there in this?

Mr. IVES. The words, "and twelve boys not less than fourteen years of age, as buglers," are introduced in the clause. That is the only change.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is it considered necessary to engage these?

Mr. IVES. Because we can secure boy buglers at less cost, and they are better buglers than grown constables, and cheaper.

Mr. CASEY. What is the total number of the force now?

Mr. IVES. About 800, officers, non-commissioned officers, and men.

On section 8,

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there any married men on the force?

Mr. IVES. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. What proportion of the men in the force are married?

Mr. IVES. About 8 per cent are married.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are their families in the North-west with them?

Mr. IVES. In some cases they are, in some cases they are not.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not a bar to a man entering the force to be married?

Mr. IVES. We do not engage married men. If they marry after entering the force, it must be with the consent of the commissioner.

Mr. CASEY. Is there any definite proportion of married men allowed, as in the army?

Mr. IVES. No.

Mr. CASEY. It depends on the judgment of the commissioner?

Mr. IVES. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. What provision is made for the constables' wives—what allowance is made for their keep?

Mr. IVES. None.

Mr. CASEY. Do they not draw rations?

Mr. IVES. No.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has been mistaken about so many things, he might be mistaken about this. He was mistaken about the question of the surgeons, and I would like to have him inquire so as to give me an answer that I could depend upon. I have a right to ask for a proper answer. Is any provision made for the wife of a constable?

Mr. IVES. No.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman is quite sure of that? I understand that in the army provisions are made for the wives and families of the men, and I am not sure but that it will be found that the hon. Minister is mistaken in his case, and that the wives of the men in the North-west Mounted Police draw rations. As to this oath, I would like to get information, for, I confess, I am not sure about it.

Mr. IVES. I am surprised.

Mr. CASEY. No doubt the hon. Minister is surprised, but the fact remains. Does this oath bring the constable under full military discipline?

Mr. IVES. I could not tell the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASEY. It is really strange that the hon. Minister conducting the estimates for the mounted police cannot tell the effect of the Bill in these respects. It seems strange to invite the discussion of the details of the Bill if he cannot give this information. I ask if the police are under full military discipline?

Mr. IVES. My impression is that they are not under the Queen's Regulations, and I am surprised that a gentleman of such experience in military matters as the hon. gentleman should ask such a question. I have never been a colonel or an officer of any kind. I have never had a higher place than that of full private in the rear rank, so the hon. gentleman can hardly expect me to answer such a question.

Mr. CASEY. We know that hitherto the police have not been under full military discipline, and as this Act is going to put the thing on a new basis, I am asking whether this is the same oath as was administered before, and whether the discipline is to be the same as before, or whether you make a change.

Mr. IVES. It is the same oath, and the same language. There is no change at all in that particular.

On section 9,

Mr. CASEY. I think, so far as this clause authorizes the constables to act as constables in other provinces than in the North-west Territories, it is undoubtedly an infringement upon the provisions of the British North America Act, giving the sole control of police legislation to the Provincial Legislatures. I do not remember whether this is in the former Act or not; but whether it is or not, I do not think it is within our power to provide that any member of a Dominion force such as this is, especially belonging to the North-west Territories, should act as a constable in any other province of the Dominion; certainly not, at all events, in other than criminal cases. I would like to know, in the first place, whether there is any change in this respect from the old law.

Mr. IVES. No change at all. It is a consolidation.

Mr. CASEY. Although it may be a reprint of the old law, it does not mend the objection that we are encroaching upon provincial rights under the British North America Act, and as we are making a consolidation now, and a revision of the Act, it is time to correct it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is it necessary to say "adjacent to said Territories"?

Mr. IVES. The object of the clause was to provide that a constable should have power to detain, and hold, and conduct prisoners, either from the old provinces to the North-west, in case they were deserters, or from the North-west Territories to the old provinces. There are several cases where prisoners have been brought by the North-west Mounted Police from the North-west Territories to the Kingston penitentiary. This section is a copy of the old law, without the slightest change. Although we do not have to use these powers, these men are made constables so that they may have authority to exercise their duties in the older provinces of Canada.

Mr. CASEY. It is a question whether we can give these men that authority. Supposing a criminal was caught, or attempted to be caught, in one of the provinces by a constable of the North-west Mounted Police, or was attempted to be brought through that province, and supposing the laws of that province did not recognize anybody as a constable within that province except constables appointed under the provincial law, in that case there might be danger of a failure of justice. I want to know if the Minister consulted any authority on the subject? Has this clause been submitted to the Minister of Justice?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman's view about this being out of our jurisdiction. We may use the police force all over Canada. We have authority to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada; I know of no provision which confines the police authority to Provincial Legislatures.

Mr. CASEY. What does that clause mean, then, that brings the matter of police regulation under the control of provincial authorities?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not going to lay down any general rule; but I call attention to the fact that we have, year after year, since Confederation, adopted legislation of the same kind. We have a statute enabling us to appoint police commissioners and constables in any province of Canada, but we have refrained from exercising it. With regard to the Dominion Police, for example, and with regard to commissioners of police, we have statutory power to swear in a commissioner of police anywhere, and that commissioner of police has power to swear in constables. That branch of our jurisdiction has been exercised with regard to the preservation of peace on public works, for example, and with regard to the appointment of the Dominion Police Force here. But we have always refrained from exercising the power of appointing Dominion policemen, or a commissioner of police, in any of the fully organized provinces, lest it might interfere with the provincial jurisdiction, where they have a similar jurisdiction, and lest it might interfere with their own organization. With regard to this police force, it is very desirable that they should be Dominion policemen for all purposes. They are occasionally called into the provinces, and they have been doing service in Manitoba and British Columbia at the instance of the provincial authorities; and if they are to perform services of that kind, it is absolutely necessary that they should have the authority of constables.

Mr. CASEY. I quite agree that it is desirable they should have this power, but I am not at all clear yet that we have power to give them that authority. I would still like the hon. Minister to explain to us how that power comes in as distinct from the exclusive provincial power to look after police regulations.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. CASEY.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 108) respecting the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Ross, Lisgar.)

Bill (No. 72) to consolidate and amend certain Acts relating to the Ottawa and Gatineau Valley Railway Company, and to change the name of the company to the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company.—(Mr. Bryson.)

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 121) to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the North-west Mounted Police Force.

(In the Committee.)

On section 9,

Mr. MARTIN. I have already drawn the attention of the House to the feature of this clause under which police officers are ex-officio justices of the peace. In fact the commissioners and assistant commissioners are each to have the powers of two justices of the peace, and such other officers as the Governor General may approve of are to be ex-officio justices of the peace. This, of course, is not a new provision. As I pointed out before, it has been the practice in the mounted police, but I object very strongly to it, and I contend that the circumstances of the Territories are such at present as not to require any such combined military and judicial powers as these. Powers of that kind, by which officers who are engaged in the pursuit of criminals are to try the criminals, are suited only to a country in such a state of disturbance as to warrant the administration of military law. The North-west Territories are not in that position at all. They are to all intents and purposes, in matters of this kind, in the same state of organization as the province of Manitoba. They have their judicial system as well as the province of Manitoba, the only difference being that there the judiciary, including the judges and the justices of the peace, is more directly under the control of the Dominion Government than that of the province of Manitoba. It is well known that a police officer takes it for granted that every person he is in pursuit of is guilty. Perhaps that is right. That is the principle on which the police officers go. They are charged to detect crime; their suspicions are cast upon a certain person; for their purpose they take for granted that he is guilty; and their nerves are strained to detect the crime and prove him guilty. That is just the opposite of the functions of a judge or a justice of the peace, who under the ordinary criminal law decides whether there is a prima facie case against the prisoner sufficient to justify his being put on trial, or in many cases disposes of the case in a summary way. The judge or justice of the peace, instead of taking it for granted that the prisoner before him is guilty, as the police officer does, takes for granted just the opposite. Under the law he is bound to assume that the man before him charged with crime is innocent, and he is bound to scrutinize all the evidence to see that it proves the prisoner's guilt before he inflicts punishment. I am not making any charge against the police officers; it naturally arises in the pursuit of their calling that they acquire the habit of considering the person they are pursuing to be guilty. Now, in that case you unite the two positions; you make the man who is hunting the prisoner and making the charge against him, who has to see that the evidence against him is made as strong as possible—you make him also the judge who is to decide as against the zeal of the police officer whether there is a case to condemn the prisoner to the penalties or to put him on trial before a higher court. I say these two positions are antagonistic to each other, and there is no reason in the constitution of the North-west Territories at the present day why the law should be administered differently there from what it is in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec or Manitoba. It may be possible that there are some remote sections of the Territories where the police are obliged to administer justice; I am not sure that it is not so; but apart from those isolated districts, which are very few indeed, I contend that, generally speaking, the North-west Territories are just as civilized and just as far from the necessity of the administration of military law as any other part of Canada. That being the case, I would like to hear some reason given for continuing a state of affairs that was necessary when government was first undertaken in that part of Canada. I am satisfied that the people up there feel that they are being treated differently in this respect from other portions of Canada, and unjustly on the general principle that it is not proper or right that a man who pursues a criminal should at the same time decide whether the evidence he himself has collected is sufficient to convict the prisoner. How can any man, no matter how fair-minded or well qualified he may be, apart from his business as a police officer, fairly decide as a justice of the peace against himself? He has collected the evidence; he is offering the case against the man who is charged; and the law puts it in his power to decide as between himself and the prisoner—gives him the most summary powers of fining and imprisoning. Now, it does seem to me that when we have an opportunity of overhauling the laws that were necessary at one time, we should not perpetuate an injustice of that kind. I may say, without saying a word at all against the police, that from the very nature of things the existence of this power has caused a great deal of feeling in the Territories. I contend that wherever there are other persons to act as justices of the peace, as there are all through the Territories—men who are competent and who have been properly appointed—and who can try such cases, they should be laid before them. Instead of a police officer deciding the case he has worked up, it should be handed over to an independent man who knows nothing whatever of the evidence, who has no prejudice one way or the other, but who is actuated, as our judges and justices of the peace are all through Canada, by the British principle that a man is presumed to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The observation I have had during the last nine years or so is that this is the best feature of the police system. The circumstances are not, I think, quite such as they have been represented to the committee. The person who pursues the criminal and gets the evidence is the ordinary constable; the man who sits in judgment is the commissioned officer of police, and he sits in relation to the constable and to the accused just as a police magistrate in the cities and towns in the older parts of Canada. He has no reason to know the case against the prisoner; he has not the slightest reason to have formed a prejudice against the prisoner. But it is a means by which we can have throughout the North-west Territories the system of police magistrates that prevails throughout the organized provinces of Canada; and everybody knows that in connection with the administration of the criminal law, they are a most useful class of officers. If we leave the administration of the criminal law to the ordinary justices of the peace of the Territories, we shall have no trained, organized, or official body of men to administer that law. Whether they shall take a case or decline to take it is a matter purely for themselves. If they take it, they take it voluntarily; but whether they take it or not, there is no system or authority by which there are to be established police magistrates throughout the Territories other than those connected with the mounted police. Of course as the Territories develop into the condition of the older provinces, that is to say, when they create municipalities, it is fully to be expected that they shall have police magistrates of their own; and already we have had an intimation from one of the towns of the Territories that they would like to have conferred upon them the power of appointing the magistrate and paying his salary. According as that degree of public spirit in the Territories, no doubt this power will be conferred upon the municipalities, but in all those parts of the Territories where there is no desire and no preparation to establish police magistrates, by all means the best system we can have for preserving law and order there and administering criminal justice, is to have a body of men like these, doing the work of police magistrates, and whose training enables them to do that work in a professional way. I have failed to hear any complaint—and I should have heard if there had been any complaints—connected with the administration of justice in all these years, except from those who are perfectly conscious that if this jurisdiction were taken out of the hands of the police there would be nobody to administer the criminal law, and who are perfectly aware that the magistrates would simply decline to administer it. We have had, for instance, no attempt on the part of the ordinary magistracy of the country to enforce the prohibitory clauses of the liquor law, when it was in force, or the restrictive clauses of the present system—no attempt whatever. That branch of the law was always unpopular, and no attempt could be expected from those who are ordinary citizens, not paid for the discharge of any of the duties of the magistracy, to take special pains and incur special odium in enforcing the law. Time and time again, in any place where it was enforced, it was enforced solely by the police, through the jurisdiction which this Bill proposes to keep conferred upon the officers of that corps. I agree that when the system of municipal organization extends, as I have no doubt it will, and as we are told it has extended now—although I do not credit that statement—we shall be able to dispense with this special jurisdiction. But if we dispense with it now, there is absolutely nothing to take its place.

Mr. MARTIN. Where is the assistant commissioner stationed?

Mr. IVES. At headquarters, Regina. I have only one word to add to what the First Minister has said. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) gave away the whole case when he admitted that there are certain localities in the North-west where there are no resident magistrates, and where the inhabitants are still dependent on the police officers for the administration of the criminal law. I can assure him that the number of such places is very much more numerous than he thinks. On another point of his speech, I must also correct him. I am quite sure he is wrong when he says that the jurisdiction of the mounted police is unpopular in the North-west. On the contrary, even in the very considerable town of Calgary, it is found impossible to get the local magistrates to do the work—even the municipal work, the contravention of municipal by-laws; and that work is thrown upon the police superintendents and inspectors by the local magistrates, who absolutely refuse to spend the time necessary to do that work. It is so all over the North-west. There is no town that I know of where the magistrates are willing to give the time and the attention and be put to the annoyance, and take the trouble of doing this work, so that a very considerable portion of the time of our police officers is taken up in magisterial duties all over the country. I would ask the hon. gentleman where is the magistrate at Duck Lake, or Batoche, or St. Albert or a score of other places? Even in the town of Edmonton there is no magistrates at all. This provision is not a new one. It has worked well, and I do not think my hon. friend would find it easy to prove that it is complained of. Of course the criminal classes complain of it. They get very certain and very summary justice from the administration of the law by the police force, and no doubt would prefer to see the law not enforced, as it certainly would not be, if it were entrusted to a magistracy composed of busy men—men who devote their time to their own affairs of money-making and are not willing to spend it in disposing of cases, when there is neither honour nor glory nor emolument to be gained. Our experience in the North-west Territories is that the people are very ready to do what they are paid for doing, but will not give their time for nothing.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. MARTIN. The right hon. First Minister has defended this clause entirely on the ground that it is necessary to provide police magistrates for the North-west Territories. I am sure he has not properly considered this matter, or he would not have put the defence on that ground, because there are only two police magistrates provided for by this section, both of whom reside in the town of Regina.

Mr. IVES. What about the superintendents?

Mr. MARTIN. They are ex-officio justices of the peace.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTIN. That gives them no police magistrate power.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does indeed, and nothing else. They are justices of the peace for the purpose of exercising police jurisdiction in the trial of criminal cases.

Mr. MARTIN. Then they have in the Territories a power the justices of the peace have nowhere else.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not say so at all. They are justices of the peace for the purpose of administering police jurisdiction and nothing else. They are not for the purpose of trying civil cases, but they have police jurisdiction, and it is the only police jurisdiction to be found in the Territories.

Mr. MARTIN. What the First Minister stated was that it was necessary to provide police magistrates.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN. Under the statute, there are but two who have this jurisdiction.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not agree with you, that is all.

Mr. MARTIN. It is very plain. It says: the commissioner and assistant commissioner shall respectively have all the powers of two justices of the peace.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, and all the others have the powers of police magistrates.

Mr. MARTIN. It does not say so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does indeed. "The superintendent and such other officers as the Governor in Council approves shall be ex-officio justices of the peace."

Mr. MARTIN. Just the same power as a justice of the peace would have in the province of Manitoba and no more.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN. There is the difference. The police magistrate has a very extensive power; he has the power of two justices of the peace.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In some provinces he has, and in some he has not.

Mr. MARTIN. So far as justices of the peace are concerned, I venture to say that they have in the North-west Territories as many justices of the peace in proportion to population as they have in the province of Manitoba, and the argument of the First Minister that it is necessary to furnish police magistrates for the Territories is not at all applicable, for this Bill furnishes no police magistrates but only justices of the peace, any two of whom have certain powers just as in the other provinces. If there is any statute that gives a justice of the peace in the North-west Territories extended powers I am not aware of it. There may be such an Act, but I do not know of it. The President of the Council says it is impossible to get justices of the peace to do the criminal work in the North-west Territories. I cannot believe that that is possible. It may probably be that most of the criminal work is done by the police officers. I do not wonder at that, because the police officer who has the case against a man is naturally desirous of proving the accused guilty, and he therefore goes to the magistrate who will find him guilty most easily. It is very natural that the police in these cases should go to one of themselves. That is exactly what I am finding fault with. In the districts mentioned by the hon. gentleman. Batoche, St. Albert and Duck Lake, there are resident justices of the peace. I am quite satisfied I have seen in the North-west Territories 'Gazette' the names of gentlemen gazetted as justices of the peace in these places. I have heard nothing from either of the members of the Government who have addressed us upon this subject to show where in there is a difference between the circumstances of the North-west Territories and those of Manitoba. I do know something as to the administration of criminal law in the province of Manitoba, having had it in charge for a number of years. So far as my knowledge goes, in the ordinary settled parts in which the police spend most of their time, the circumstances of the North-west Territories are practically the same as those of Manitoba. And in Manitoba we have had no difficulty in having the criminal law very satisfactorily enforced with the aid of justices of the peace, just as it is in the older provinces. The hon. gentleman says that the justices refuse to act. I must believe, until the contrary is established, that that statement is made without a sufficient basis of fact, for I cannot think that these magistrates appointed from time to time by what may be called the Local Government there, actually refuse to take up criminal cases. I can quite understand that they do not often act in these cases, but I contend that that is not because of their refusal to act, but because the cases are brought by the police before their own officers in order that a conviction may more easily be secured. The hon. President of the Council tells us something which I think we in this House ought to object to very strenuously. He says that the police, not satisfied with being the prosecutors when hunting up the evidence to convict a criminal, undertake to enforce the municipal by-laws of the city of Calgary. It certainly is going a very long distance to say that the Dominion of Canada should enforce the municipal by-laws of a city like Calgary. If they have been in the habit of doing it in the past, I think certainly it would be quite proper for the President of the Council to confine the police to the work of enforcing the criminal law in the future. No doubt if the city of Calgary can get a police magistrate and a police force to administer their by-laws they save the expense of a municipal police force, and, so far as the feature of the case is concerned, I am not prepared to say the people of Calgary would object.

Mr. IVES. In order to save the hon. gentleman's time, I may say that if he will look at subsection 3 of section 13 he will see that we are taking power to rid ourselves of the work he is referring to.

Mr. MARTIN. I should think so surely, but I was proceeding upon what the hon. gentleman himself had stated.

Mr. IVES. I say we have been obliged to—or at least we did, at the request of the Government of the Territories and the city of Calgary—undertake to enforce the municipal by-law or to insist on the enforcement of them, and we have got sick and tired of that, and have therefore put this subsection in the Bill.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very glad of it, and I quite agree as to the utility of the subsection the hon. gentleman has referred to. It would be quite improper for the Dominion to undertake to enforce a municipal by-law of any municipality in the province. But, apart from any selfish reasons, such as the saving of expense, I have no hesitation in saying that the people of the Territories are not satisfied to be treated as though it were necessary that they should be under military law. This complaint is by no means confined to the criminal classes. The people there are just as anxious to see crime punished as those of any other part of Canada, and unless some circumstances can be shown which differentiate the Territories from a new province like Manitoba, it seems to me that we ought to enforce the criminal law there just as we do in older provinces. The hon. gentleman says the system is not unpopular, that the law is administered properly, and all that kind of thing. I say it is not; I say there are very large numbers of police convictions set aside. In fact, in the Territories it has become a by-word that a police conviction will be set aside almost prima facie by the court. The hon. First Minister alluded to the enforcement of the liquor law. I quite agree with him that that law would not have been enforced at all by the people of the Territories, because it never had the support of public opinion there. But I cannot agree with him when he suggests that the law was actually enforced by the police. It never was pretended to be enforced. The police, simply as a matter of form, occasionally took up some unfortunate person and fined him $200 or $300; but, in recent years at any rate, while this prohibitory liquor law was on the Statute-book, there was no difficulty, in any of the towns in the North-west, in getting any amount of liquor. The members of the police force themselves used to walk into drug store or grocery and drink liquor openly.

Mr. IVES. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he was there?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, I was there, and saw that repeatedly with my own eyes. No good lesson can be drawn, so far as this question is concerned, from the prohibitory liquor law, because that law was a farce and never was enforced either by the local authorities or by the police, except in the arbitrary way I have spoken of, of arresting some person occasionally and fining him severely. But the sale went right on, and that is the reason a prohibitory liquor law is not on the Statute-book to-day—public opinion would not stand it any longer; it was impossible for even this expensive police force to enforce it. For that reason the arguments drawn from the lack of enforcement of that law, are not applicable at all. I contend, therefore, that nothing has been put forward, either by the First Minister or the President of the Council, justifying the continuance in the Territories of what is practically military law. I am satisfied the information they have has been drawn from the police force rather than from the people at large; and that if they will take the opinions of the people at large upon the question, they will find that they agree with what I allege. I do not suppose it will be suspected that I desire to get any political advantage from this suggestion. It is not a matter of politics at all, it is a question of what is best for the country. I do not wish to bring any charge against the Government for the position of the law, because it has been there for many years; but what I contend is that the time has come when the Government should put the Territories in this respect precisely in the position of a new province like Manitoba. If in Manitoba these officers are found to administer the criminal laws satisfactorily, then I say there is nothing in the present state of the Territories to make it impossible to enforce the criminal laws there as it is done in Manitoba. I think the First Minister will say, when his attention has been drawn to the subject, that criminal law has always been very satisfactorily enforced in the province of Manitoba, and it has been from the first enforced in the ordinary way as it is in the province of Ontario.

Mr. DALY. I did not intend to make any remarks on this question, but having some knowledge, and probably more knowledge of the way in which these matters are conducted in the North-west Territories, than the hon. gentleman who has just spoken on this subject, I desire in the first place, in justice to those gentlemen who occupy the position of superintendents and inspectors of the mounted police, to resent the statement that hon. gentleman has made that these men, when sitting as justices of the peace, are actuated differently from any other justices of the peace. The hon. gentleman stated that it was easily to be understood that they sought conviction, because they were the men who had arrested the prisoners. Now, the Minister of Justice pointed out that these superintendents and inspectors were not the men who arrest the prisoners; the prisoners are arrested by the constables and tried before the superintendents and inspectors sitting as justices of the peace, the same as if they were brought before police magistrates. I am sure nothing can show more favourably the way in which justice has been administered in that vast territory, and nothing speaks higher for the way in which the police have done their duty, than the freedom from crime which has existed from the time the Territories became a part of this country up to the present day. I say it would have been impossible to preserve order in that country were it not for the way in which justice has been administered by the officers of the mounted police. I have lived in that country for thirteen years, probably longer than the hon. gentleman, and I never heard anything said against the manner in which the police officers administer justice. It may be that there have been complaints, and no doubt there always will be complaints against any magistrate, but I say that in justice to those gentlemen who have in many instances had to put themselves to great inconvenience, to go long distances, in order to hold court, and to hold it in quarters far from suitable for the purpose, they deserve every credit at the hands of the people of Canada, and particularly at the hands of the Government, whose servants they are. Now, the hon. gentleman speaks of the administration of justice in the province of Manitoba. My recollection is that we have three police magistrates in the province of Manitoba, one at Winnipeg, one at Portage la Prairie, and one at Brandon; and I think I am safe in saying that in at least six out of ten of the criminal cases in the western judicial district in which I resided, the arrests were made by the provincial police officer, an officer paid by the Provincial Government, and invariably the cases were tried before the police magistrate at Brandon. The Government of Manitoba contributes to his salary, and we contribute to his salary, because the people of Brandon thought they had no right to pay the full salary of a police magistrate for the reason that the most of his time was taken up in trying cases that arose outside the city limits. From my recollection there are only four municipalities in the whole North-west Territories where our officers try cases—Wolseley, Fort Qu'Appelle—those are the only rural municipalities that I recollect at present—the town of Regina, and the city of Calgary. When I was in Calgary last summer I was told by the superintendent of police that almost every day he was worried by the local justices of the peace to try offences that they properly should have tried. Now, as the First Minister has said, the municipal authorities at Calgary have petitioned the Government to appoint police magistrates, and the Bill I have introduced amending the North-west Territories Act, provides for the appointment of police magistrates in order to overcome the difficulties that exist there. That would be all right enough for Calgary, but what about the outlying districts of the country where there are no police magistrates? I may say it is the experience of every hon. gentleman here, whether from Ontario and Quebec or any of the other provinces, that local justices are very loth to take up criminal matters. In almost every instance, criminals are brought either before police magistrates or the stipendiary magistrates in the various districts; and if Calgary is provided for by the appointment of police magistrates, what becomes of the outlying districts? Would the hon. gentleman strike out this clause entirely and provide that there shall be no justices of the peace except local justices? He says that no argument has been used in favour of the continuance of this law. I failed to hear any argument from the hon. gentleman himself against the continuance of this clause. Let him give some specific statement, some specific reason, why this Bill should be altered by this clause being expunged. I say again, in justice to the officers of the mounted police, that the administration of justice by them has reflected credit upon themselves, credit upon the force and credit upon the Government who appointed them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) seemed to suppose that the argument I advanced in favour of the jurisdiction of these officers, was a mistaken argument, because the Bill would only confer it upon two, and these two living in one place. Now, the hon. gentleman, in arriving at that conclusion, made the mistake of supposing that I was referring to police magistrates as officers having the same specific jurisdiction, which I admit they have in Manitoba, Quebec and Ontario, having the jurisdiction of two justices of the peace. I was not referring to the extent of their jurisdiction, but I was referring to the class of persons who devote themselves, so far as their magisterial duties go, to the trial of these cases. Now, it may be that the jurisdiction would be more useful were it enlarged, and if they were given the powers of two justices of the peace. But all that I meant to say upon the question was that it was useful to have these superintendents of police in the various country districts discharging the duties of magistrates who try police cases. To my mind, it is entirely unimportant that two of them should be charged with that larger jurisdiction in Regina, because places like Regina are places where this jurisdiction is less needed than in rural municipalities. But when we come to rural districts we have them, I repeat, doing the duties of police magistrates, and such jurisdiction as they have, I contend, has been found extremely useful in the Territories.

Mr. MARTIN. Of course, when the First Minister used the words "police magistrate" I naturally thought he meant police magistrate. That is the reason I made the remarks I offered to the committee. I must say, in answer to the Minister of the Interior, that I had no intention whatever to make the slightest attack on the police force, nor did I do so. I did not charge that the police force had not done their duty, even as justices of the peace, so far as they could under the circumstances. What I said was: that it was not natural, and it was not to be expected that an officer who was hunting a criminal would be a proper man to be at the same time the judge. It is quite likely, I have not the slightest reason to suppose otherwise, that the police force have done their duty so far as they could under the circumstances in both respects. I do not believe that any other class of men appointed on the police force would do one whit better. What I say is: that in the nature of things it cannot be expected that a man can act in two capacities, especially when his action in one capacity naturally leads him to suppose that a man is guilty. The police officer is not a good officer if he does not believe the man he is pursuing is guilty, and is prepared in every way to bring forward evidence to show his guilt. On the other hand, a justice of the peace is just the opposite. It is his duty in the nature of things to take it for granted that the man is innocent, and refuse to admit his guilt unless it is clearly proven. That is the charge I make. I do not see the applicability of the remarks of the Minister of the Interior to the condition of affairs in Manitoba as to the appointment of police magistrates.

Mr. DALY. That was your argument.

Mr. MARTIN. No. I think it would be very well that the Territories should have police magistrates, and the Minister of Justice has intimated the Government intend to appoint such at Calgary. I believe a magistrate should not be a police officer—that is what I want, that is my conviction, judging from my experience. When a member of the Manitoba Government I introduced the system under which police magistrates were appointed outside of Winnipeg, including Brandon, and it has proved a very great convenience to have men filling those positions who are specially qualified. It is a mere question of expense. But that does not touch the question under the consideration of the committee. Let us have as many of those police magistrates as possible; if it is desirable to have them appointed at Calgary, Macleod and Prince Albert, let appointments be made. But that has nothing whatever to do with the question as to whether a police officer should endeavour to convict an individual, and afterwards try him for the offence. The question of the existence of municipalities in the Territories has also nothing whatever to do with the question. They do not appoint justices of the peace, but they are appointed by the committee of the Local Legislature.

Mr. DALY. The Lieutenant-Governor appoints them.

Mr. MARTIN. He takes the advice of the committee in that matter.

Mr. DALY. Not at all.

Mr. MARTIN. I am very sure he does.

Mr. DALY. The jurisdiction is in the Governor, but not in the Governor in Council.

Mr. MARTIN. I know that, but at the same time I am satisfied that the appointments are made on the advice of the committee, and if that were not the case, the committee would not remain very long in office.

Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. DALY. They have nothing to do with them.

Mr. MARTIN. I will not discuss that point at any greater length, but I adhere to my statement. The hon. Minister has asked what I would propose in regard to the clause under consideration. I would not propose to strike out the clause, but I would amend the law in the Territories so far as the several districts are concerned, so as to make it precisely the same as in Manitoba. I have already stated that probably in outlying portions of the Territories, when the police have to go practically beyond settlement, as they have to do for a certain time and for certain purposes, it might still be well to retain the power in the hands of superintendents and inspectors to act as justices of the peace. A statement has been made by several of the Ministers that the superintendents and inspectors who act as justices of the peace have nothing whatever to do with arresting and prosecuting prisoners. That is quite incorrect. It is true that an ordinary constable arrests the criminal, but the man on whom the responsibility rests is the inspector or the officer in charge. This officer on whom the responsibility has rested of making the arrest of the criminal is subsequently called upon to decide whether the evidence is sufficient to convict the person, or whether he should be sent to a higher court for trial. That is the principle I am fighting against, and I believe that the officers of the force—I do not know the opinion of the commissioner—but the superintendents and inspectors I am satisfied would agree with me. I believe they should not undertake to do duty in both capacities, because it is quite impossible. Without reflecting in the slightest degree on the police, without charging them with neglect of duty in either capacity, it was only in the nature of things that this law should be passed in the first instance because the country was in a state which required military law. But that need, so far as the old settlements are concerned, has passed away, and there is no reason why the criminal law cannot be administered in the North-west Territories as effectively as in Ontario, Quebec or any other part of the Dominion.

On section 14,

Mr. McMULLEN. How many veterinary surgeons does the hon. gentleman keep in this force?

Mr. IVES. There are only two to take care of 800 horses, and they examine all the new remounts that are purchased.

Mr. AMYOT. While the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is here, I will ask him a few words about what he said this afternoon. I understand that this afternoon he talked about the North-west, and that he made an allusion not very agreeable to me. Let him repeat it while I am here. It would be more brave. I am very often in the House and I do not see why he chose the moment I was away to attack me. If he has any complaint against me I wish he would formulate his accusation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I made no accusation against the hon. gentleman whatever. He has been misinformed.

Mr. AMYOT. I accept that declaration, and I will look in the 'Hansard' to-morrow to see if I was misinformed.

On section 15,

Mr. MARTIN. What does that section mean—is it carried out?

Mr. IVES. That means that the Governor General in Council, previous to the Estimates being submitted to the House, fixes the total amount that may be paid for horses and vehicles, or anything else.

Mr. DALY. Certain regulations are framed and adopted by Council.

Mr. MARTIN. Certain general regulations might be made, but I should think it would be difficult to make arrangements as to the price of horses.

Mr. DALY. It is the manner of purchase, not the price.

Mr. IVES. I have always understood that to mean that the Governor in Council would describe the method of purchase, whether by tender or otherwise. They make general regulations controlling the manner of purchase, but of course it would be impossible to understand it that the Governor in Council would fix the price for each horse.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose a maximum price is fixed?

Mr. IVES. Yes, a maximum price and the number to be purchased.

Mr. MARTIN. I may say with regard to clauses 15 and 16, that I am very much under the impression that possibly the administration of the force has been somewhat hampered by the restrictions and regulations that have been made. Except so far as can be arranged for beforehand, when the supplies should be got by tender, I am of the impression that in the case of a matter like this it would be better to leave it largely to the commissioner, and then to hold him strictly responsible for his judgment in the matter. My impression is that very often the force has been put to very considerably increased expense on account of some cast-iron rules in regard to purchasing supplies at a particular time, when that particular time was the most unsuitable for the purchase of supplies. Apart from the principle of inviting tenders wherever it is possible to do so, to which we do not object, it seems to me, so far as it was necessary to buy supplies without tender, as a business man would buy them for himself, that the commissioner should be given considerable latitude, in order that he may avail himself of the best time to buy them; and then, of course, hold him strictly responsible for his judgment in the matter. If I am not very much mistaken, considerable losses have accrued to the Government in consequence of the commissioner being too much restrained by regulations, which were proper and suitable at the time they were made, but which on account of change of scene and other circumstances, compelled him to buy supplies under conditions disadvantageous to the Government.

On section 18,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is subsection (v) designating "any disorder or neglect to the prejudice of morality," the same as before?

Mr. IVES. The Comptroller tells me that these words were taken from the Irish Constabulary Act. Many of these provisions were taken from that Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What do the words mean?

Mr. DALY. A non-commissioned officer might neglect his duty while seeing immorality going on.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not exactly remember the words of the Act relating to the Irish Constabulary, but I think the meaning was any conduct or neglect that would interfere with the morale or discipline of the force.

Mr. MARTIN. It seems to me that the preceding clauses up to (u) cover almost every possible offence. The power given in clause (v) is a very extreme power to give to an officer. Under that he could send a constable to jail for anything.

Mr. IVES. This is an omnibus clause.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think insubordinate conduct would cover everything.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the illustration the Minister of the Interior gives certainly explains the clause—neglect to prevent something immoral that is going on.

Mr. DALY. Suppose a non-commissioned officer is in charge of a force, and he neglects to the prejudice of morality and the discipline of the force to see that the conduct of the men is what it ought to be. It seems to me that would be covered by the clause.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is all right, but I think the others cover almost every possible case. If the Minister wants it, I do not object. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether it is well to vest power in the commissioner to dispense with the oath? I do not think it is fair; he may fine a man without any evidence under oath at all.

Mr. IVES. As a matter of fact, an oath is always required, except in the case of an offence on view—where the offence is seen by the officer himself. In that case, he does not require any other evidence.

Mr. DALY. It is the same power as is vested in the commandant of a regiment.

Mr. IVES. This is the same clause that we have now. There have been no abuses under it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) All right.

Mr. DAVIN. I think it would be well for the hon. Minister to consider whether he should not alter that line. There are several changes made by this Bill in the right direction and in consequence of the inquiry that took place in the North-west. Certain powers are given to the inspectors which did not previously exist. But we had before that inquiry some cases which showed that abuses had arisen in consequence of the wording of this second subsection. I think it would be well to omit the words "if he thinks fit." Undoubtedly there were some cases that came before the commission which showed that it would have been much better if they had been inquired into under oath. Some of the complaints made were that certain examinations had not taken place under oath; and I know the impression was made upon myself, and upon others better acquainted with the management of this force than I am, that there had been a great deal of harshness in consequence of the wording of this clause. I am glad to say that the greatest possible improvement has taken place in the management of that force. The management of the force has improved, as compared with what it was a few years ago, to such an extent that I should probably be thought to exaggerate if I stated how great it is. But I do not think it is necessary to the efficiency of the force that this power of awarding penalties on an examination conducted without the sanction of an oath should remain in the Act. I know that there was one case—I forget the name of it—where very severe punishment was awarded, although it was proved that there had been no inquiry at all. I do not see how it will militate against the efficiency of the commissioner to omit these words.

Mr. IVES. There is just this objection. For instance, in the case of orderly-room offences, the inspector goes around in the morning and he finds that a man has not complied with the regulations requiring his kit to be made up in a certain way, his saddlery and arms to be clean, or some of his duties to be performed. He can see the offence with his own eyes; and these slight orderly-room offences have to be punished. I think it would be very awkward indeed if the words were stricken out. Under the present regulation, no important penalty is imposed, and no offence of a serious character is investigated except under oath. These instructions have been given by me, and they are rigidly carried out. But, in the ordinary management of the force in barracks, I think it would be a great inconvenience if the officer could not do anything without written depositions and the formality of a trial.

Mr. O'BRIEN. As I understand the Bill, the object is to place the force under very much the same discipline as that of the regular service. Any one who knows anything about the conduct of a regiment, knows that offences against discipline are invariably dealt with by the commanding officer without a trial, and there is no such exception as is here made in the words, "if he thinks fit." It is not found necessary in the service to examine such questions under oath, and I think it may be assumed that it is not necessary in this case, for I think you cannot have a safer guide than the regulations successfully enforced for many years in the regular service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But my hon. and gallant friend, I think, did not catch the meaning of this clause. No suggestion is made that trials for offences against discipline should be under oath. I quite see the force of what he and the President of the Council say on this subject, and that, so far as offences against discipline are concerned, it is desirable and necessary, perhaps, to deal with them without the formality of an investigation under oath. But if the hon. gentleman will look at the section he will see among the offences named some of a very grave character, and calling for very serious punishment—as misapplying money, overholding public money, and so on. The hon. President of the Council suggested that under this section the commanding officer could deal with the culprit on view. I do not think it goes so far as that, because the section refers only to cases in which complaints in writing are laid before the officer. I think it would be well for the hon. President of the Council to have a special section dealing with offences against discipline, and allowing the officer to convict upon view of the offence. But he could not convict on view under this section, as this section applies exclusively to cases where complaints in writing are laid before the officer, and he could not lay complaint before himself.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There should be a classification of crimes. We should not attempt to deal with crimes such as some of those mentioned here, and also with offences against discipline in the same section.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is what I contend.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right. Offences against discipline are properly dealt with by the officer on view, or by the commanding officer without more formal proceedings. But when you come to deal with serious offences, these would, in the regular service, be tried by court-martial, and not by the commanding officer at all. But the hon. President of the Council spoke of offences against discipline, and I confined my previous remarks to those.

Mr. MARTIN. And in court-martial the proceedings must be under oath—there would be no discretion.

Mr. DAVIN. Those who suppose that what is provided here is the same discipline as that enforced in the regular service are quite mistaken. This clause gives powers to the commissioner, and not only to him, but also to the assistant commissioner, and to every commissioned officer in command of any post. I think this change giving power to the commander at a post is a good one, for it is most inconvenient that the man in command at a post should require to be authorized by the commissioner before proceeding to deal with such cases. But the fact that you are, as it were, extending the jurisdiction under the Act is the very reason why you should proceed with all the more caution. At all times, this subsection was to be complained of. In the first subsection we have down to (v) a number of serious crimes. It is provided :

The commissioner, the assistant commissioner, or the superintendent or other officer commanding at any post, or in any district, may, forthwith, on a charge in writing—

Now, mark these words :

—of any one or more of the foregoing offences—

That is if a charge in writing of crime "A," or of crimes "A," "B," "C," and all the rest down to "V" is made against any member of the force other than a commissioned officer, the accused is brought before the officer, who :

—shall, then and there, in a summary way, investigate the charge, and on oath, if he thinks fit.

Mr. IVES. I have no objection, as the committee seems to think that the investigation of these charges should be under oath, to striking out the words "if he sees fit."

Mr. MARTIN. You will need to strike out the word "and" before "on oath."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The words "on oath" should be put in so as to read "if proved to his satisfaction on oath." The other would mean that the officer investigating would need to be sworn himself.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That would leave it optional with him to investigate the charge. If it is not necessary to deal with it seriously the officer would not need to administer an oath.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No ; but he could not impose a penalty except after investigation on oath.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That would make it very satisfactory.

Mr. MARTIN. Ought there not to be some limit in subsection 3 ? Otherwise there may be long delay before a charge is dealt with. No time is mentioned in which an appeal must be brought, or during which the commissioner must act.

Mr. IVES. It is provided that fines and sentences shall be forthwith reported to the commissioner.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The evidence should accompany this report. How is the commissioner to act as a court of appeal unless he has the evidence ?

Mr. IVES. The record is always sent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But it does not provide that the report of fines and imprisonments shall be accompanied with the evidence.

Mr. IVES. But this is called for by the regulations of the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Would it not be well to put it in this Act ?

Mr. IVES. Together with the record of fines and sentences of imprisonment.

Mr. MARTIN. That would imply that the evidence is to be reduced to writing.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Say the record of investigation.

Or section 21,

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think that "may" should be changed to "shall." I do not think you have any right to put an officer under arrest unless you proceed to investigate the charge. Otherwise the commanding officer could put an officer under arrest at any time.

Mr. IVES. Say "shall" instead of "may" after "commissioner."

On section 24,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The first part of that section declares that every person who unlawfully puts on or assumes the habit or description of any member of the force, shall be punished. The intention, I suppose, is to punish the man who does this for the purpose of holding himself out to be a member in the force. The words, as they are there, are broad enough to cover the case of a man who puts it on for a lark or a masquerade.

Mr. IVES. I do not think any difficulty will arise.

On section 26,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Under this section an arbitrary penalty of six months is fixed. The section should read "not exceeding six months."

Mr. IVES. The section provides a minimum of six months for desertion. In the original Act there was a penalty of $5 or $10 imposed, and the result was that many desertions took place, the Government incurred great expense, and in the end a trifling fine was imposed. The intention of the House when the Act was amended was to make the minimum punishment six months imprisonment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A reasonable discretion should be left in the hands of the officers of the Government. It is not only proposed to punish desertion in this manner, but also the offence of being absent without leave. Some discretion should be left in the hands of the officers.

Mr. IVES. We will alter it so as to read "imprisonment for a term not exceeding eight months."

Mr. O'BRIEN. There should be a distinction between the offence of being absent without leave and desertion. The rule in the service is that a man may be absent without leave for a certain number of days or hours without being guilty of desertion. He understands, however, that if he is absent beyond a certain period, he makes himself liable to the crime of desertion.

Bill reported.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Maintenance and repairs of Government Steamers$172,400

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not want to object to the hon. gentleman going on, but shortly after the session opened, I moved for a return with reference to repairs on four steamers, and I have not got it yet.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's recollection is at fault. It was only this month that he moved for that return, and it is very voluminous, and is being prepared.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My recollection of it is that it was many weeks ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh, no; it only reached my department a few days ago. At all events the vessels referred to in the hon. gentleman's motion do not come under this vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What about this new steamer for which $50,000 is asked?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the steamer under construction, and it is expected to cost $85,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the particulars with regard to this steamer; I do not remember the hon. gentleman's explanation? What coast will she be used on?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On the Atlantic coast. The hon. gentleman will find on page 61 of the report of the fishery service, a description of the new vessel. She will serve for the purpose of fishery protection where she is very much needed, but the main object and the original reason for asking Parliament for this vote is this: Parliament will remember that we had a boat called the 'Napoleon,' which was lost some years ago, and we have no boat to take her place, and on the Atlantic coast and in the Bay of Fundy we have a great many automatic buoys that are out all the year round, and if they are not promptly attended they go adrift, and have gone adrift. The current at many points is such that the continual chafing of the moorings causes them to break and become used up. With our present service enormous delay occurs, which is attended with danger to the shipping interest, before we can either recover a buoy or put a new one in its place. The 'Newfield,' which has long been on that service, is borrowed by the Public Works Department every year for cable service, and consequently our service has been very often crippled. The shipping interest have held the department strictly to account often, when the real reason was that we had not sufficient steamers. I may say, and it is well known that in the administration of this branch of the service—looking after these buoys—if any charge can be fairly brought it is that of being too economical. I know of no service in the world, certainly not that of our neighbours, where, with such an extent of coast and such a number of buoys and lights to look after, so few steamers are employed.

Mr. FORBES. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the steamers which are employed exclusively to look after the fisheries?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am referring entirely to this vote, that is, looking after aids to navigation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose my hon. friend had reference to the fact that these steamers are used for protecting the fisheries as well as other purposes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Some of them are so used when we can do it—the 'Stanley' in particular and the 'Lansdowne' very little.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to call attention to two points in this connection, one is that I think the hon. gentleman very injudiciously removed the purchase of the stores for the 'Stanley' from the port where they used to be purchased over to Pictou. I think he will find that they can be purchased much better in Charlottetown, where they used to be purchased, and the people of Prince Edward Island complain of this because the 'Stanley' they consider an island steamer. I think he made a mistake in not continuing the purchase at Charlottetown.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why not Georgetown?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is a very small town.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It has very good provisions.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Charlottetown has some of the largest provision stores in the Maritime Provinces—two of them as large wholesale establishments as you will find anywhere in these provinces, and there is a large number of retail stores besides, so that you can be sure of effective competition and consequently of getting the stores at the lowest possible prices. I do not want to run down Pictou, but at the same time I think the hon. gentleman made a mistake, because very little patronage of any kind goes to Prince Edward Island at all, and as this boat is supposed to belong to the island, I think he might have let that patronage remain there. However, I do not complain of that so much, because I think we can rectify that at a very early day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where will you bring it to.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where it was taken from. I want to call attention to the salary paid to the captain of the 'Stanley.' Captain Finlayson has been in her since she first started on her work. The service is one of the most perilous of those engaged in by any of the steamers employed by this Government. I need not refer to previous winters but only to the past one as evidence of that statement. There are very few men competent to fill Captain Finlayson's place. His experience as a master mariner has been very great; and as commander of the 'Stanley' and the 'Northern Light,' he has been about eighteen years in this service. He is a skilful man, of excellent judgment, and has proved himself capable of meeting every emergency. A successor to him it would indeed be very difficult to find, and yet he is paid a salary much less than the officers of some of the other ships.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What officer is paid more outside of the 'Newfield'?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, take the 'Newfield.'

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The captain of the 'Newfield' is not paid more now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He gets a $1,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Captain Finlayson got last year the magnificent sum of $699.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not right. That is what the Auditor General gives him.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There were some months when you did not pay him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He is paid all the year round, from January to December.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That used not to be.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Last year he was.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is not possible the Auditor General can be wrong.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Auditor General only takes a certain number of months for which he finds vouchers. I increased his salary about two years ago, and he receives about $960 now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is better than what it was. What service is the 'Douglas' engaged in?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. She is lying at the wharf.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The captain is put down at $100 a month.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no captain on her.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is what he did get.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The salaries on the Pacific coast are enormous, simply because we cannot get men on that coast for what we can get them on the Atlantic. The hon. gentleman would have us double the expense.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would be the last man to ask that a dollar should be paid unnecessarily; but knowing the service this man is engaged in and how admirably he discharges his duty, and knowing that he is paid much less than is paid to other captains, I thought it my duty to bring the matter up. I was not aware that the increase the hon. gentleman spoke of was made.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No grievance can be made with reference to the treatment of the captain of the 'Stanley.' I cannot speak too highly of that officer, because he is an officer who has been tried in a very difficult service, and his standing with the department is all that can be desired. I would be the last man to pass over his claims, and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should reflect upon the department, as though this man were not treated well. When I came into the department in 1888, he was not receiving anything like the salary or the treatment he is now getting. I have no complaint directly or indirectly from him, and it is to his credit that he has not asked for an increase in the last year or two. But gentlemen who have crossed with him and have seen the perilous work that he is engaged in, very naturally have had their attention called to his services; and while I would not depreciate his services in the slightest degree, I cannot allow the statement to go that he is engaged in the most perilous work of any officers in our ships. They are a splendid class of men in all our ships. The hon. gentleman knows what peril there is from December to January on the Atlantic coast, knocking about in the worst weather and most fearful storms as many of them have to do. The greater part of the season, Captain Finlayson's work is only child's play. I know the work, and I know all that the officers have said about it. I have sent my officers down to inspect the work, and have surrounded Captain Finlayson with every protection and safety. There is not a whisper of danger made in that connection which is not heeded. On the mere suggestion of possible danger to that ship, I have had inspectors of steamboats hold special surveys, and have sent our own engineering officers down to go over the work; and while I admit that Captain Finlayson does his work well and at times is in peril, fortunately for the service he is constantly engaged in, during a portion, even of the winter work, there is no danger. The danger comes just at odd times, when that vessel is held fast, so to speak, but fortunately those are exceptions to the rule. I do not say that to depreciate his services, because he has filled this responsible position to the satisfaction of the department, but he has had his salary increased largely from what it was when I took charge of the department, and instead of laying him off, as used to be the case, for half a year with nothing to do, I have kept him employed the whole year round, much to his satisfaction. I may say that this subject of further increasing his salary has been brought up several times by parties like the hon. gentleman, who have observed his work, and I have said that I would take a suitable opportunity to look into the matter. Having a considerable number of officers in the service, I try to treat them all on their merits, without regard to personal reasons, considering only their period of service, the position they occupy, and their records. I have asked my officers to make a report showing the lengths of service of the various men employed, in order to see whether any are entitled to further increase, but that report is not yet ready, and I have not been able to attend to that matter during the session. As regards the purchase of stores, the hon. gentleman is hardly fair. Representing, as I do, the county of Pictou, it would not be natural, it would not be human, that I should refuse to listen to the natural appeals from the people of that county, not to ignore them altogether in distributing the patronage of my department. It would be very difficult to any man to resist an appeal of that kind, but the hon. gentleman does not put the case fairly when he says that I removed the purchase of stores from Charlottetown to Pictou. That is not the case. What I did is this, and I did not go so far as some hon. gentlemen would have gone if they were in my place.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The hon. gentleman says he would put it back to Charlottetown, which he represents. I have not done anything of that kind with regard to Pictou. I said that the staple articles required were to be purchased on competition in Prince Edward Island, but that the fresh provisions required at the different ports were to be obtained, as occasion required, at the port at which the steamer touched. For instance, she runs for a while between Charlottetown and Pictou, and then between Georgetown and Pictou, and I have given instructions that the fresh provisions required from time to time, and which are not bought in bulk, should be bought at these ports at the lowest market price, without giving any place the preference. I have not cut out any one port, nor do I intend to do so, and I think that is about as fair a way of treating the various parties concerned as possible.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The fact of the matter is simply this, that the supplies for the steamer are purchased nearly entirely at Pictou.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why does the hon. gentleman say that?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I take the hon. gentleman's own statement. He said that when the vessel goes to Charlottetown, such fresh meats as are required will be purchased there. However, I will not discuss the question as to where he buys his fresh meat further. The supplies for the vessel, as a whole, are purchased at Pictou.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I deny that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know they are. The hon. gentleman himself says that he would be inhuman if he did not listen to the cry from Pictou. The hon. gentleman seemed to indicate that the service Captain Finlayson is engaged in is not perilous at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not say that, and the hon. gentleman should not take those liberties with me.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman will allow me to finish, he indicated that the service Captain Finlayson is engaged in is not as perilous as that in which some of the others are engaged in, on the Atlantic coast. I wish to point out to him that he is in error in that respect. I do not think he has had the advantage of crossing there himself, and cannot from personal observation speak of the perils of this passage. But I will undertake to say that he will find it is the unanimous opinion of those who have made this passage a number of times, that they have never crossed in any steamer anywhere, where the perils appear at any rate to be so great.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. To a land lubber.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I dare say the hon. gentleman will designate me a land lubber, and no doubt I may be to some extent, but I have crossed the Atlantic several times, and have been on steamers in other parts of the world too.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has been wrecked, too, politically, several times.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was not aware of it. The hon. gentleman is inclined to be both irritated and facetious. Perhaps he will allow me to say that nobody who has crossed in that steamer in January, February, March or April, and encountered the storms and dangers which must necessarily be encountered in that passage, will hesitate to admit the great peril of that service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who denies that?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will not let me make a statement at all. I make a statement which he says no one denies, and yet he takes exception to it. I have not had previous conversation with Captain Finlayson about this matter, but I have had with others, who know perhaps more about the value of his services than I do, and they requested me to bring this to the notice of the Minister, but the hon. gentleman is too irritable to listen to me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is all at sea.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If I am at sea, the hon. gentleman must be buried, entirely, because he does not even appear to hear or to listen to what I am saying. I am pointing out that in consideration of the perilous nature of the service and of the fact that this is an excellent man with great experience, he deserves the best consideration at the hands of the Minister; and if he is considering whether he will raise the salaries of any of these men, I think it nothing but fair and just to bring the facts, which are within my own knowledge, and within the knowledge of every other man from Prince Edward Island, to the notice of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman must have got out the wrong side of the bed this morning. Generally speaking he will listen courteously to what one has to say, but to-night he does not seem willing even to listen.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Even at the risk of detaining the committee, I must say the hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I am not casting any doubt upon the excellence of Captain Finlayson's services or upon anything the hon. gentleman has said. I protested against the habit the hon. gentleman has fallen into of picking up the wrong end of a statement and using it to the disadvantage of the person who has spoken. If he has any feeling—the hon. gentleman any feeling for Captain Finlayson he should sympathize with me in my objection that it should be assumed that I minimize the dangers to which he exposes his life. But I claim that there are other men who, from January to December are performing arduous duties, and who, if not actually in the grip of the ice, yet encounter the perils of the deep in a most terrific sea. My heart goes out to every man in the service who is risking his life as these men are. I am not disposed to minimize the services of Captain Finlayson, but I was exhibiting a certain amount of pardonable indignation that the hon. gentleman should attempt to lift away above the others the very good services of the captain, and that he should say I tried to belittle that gentleman. I have the highest opinion of him and I said so. I shall consider his claim, and I do not see what more the hon. gentleman can ask of me.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wanted that the hon. gentleman should know the perils which Captain Finlayson undergoes and the value of the services he renders. He should not compare the case of Captain Finlayson's services with that of one crossing the Atlantic.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was speaking of men down on the coast.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am enough of a sailor to know that those who cross the open sea are not in such peril as Captain Finlayson has to face. This very season he came over with 56 passengers. Three miles off Pictou he was caught in the ice and he drifted from Caraquet down the shore, and up and down for nine days and nine nights. Not only had he his own life in peril, which he must risk, in the nature of things, being engaged in this service, but he had the lives of a large number of passengers. For such a service you require the best men that can be got. If that vessel had touched bottom at any time, she would have gone over and not one of the people aboard could have been saved. And at times there was only four or five feet of water under her keel.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What do you want done?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I mentioned it to the hon. gentleman—who has never crossed himself—to show the perilous nature of that service and the necessity of having a first-class man. And the fact that Captain Finlayson has managed that service for eighteen years, and has done it so well and so successfully, is a strong recommendation for him. I pressed it upon the hon. gentleman, as I shall do again when he is in a better humour.

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to call attention to the supplies bought for the steamer 'Quadra' as given on page C-424 of the Auditor General's Report. I find a charge here for 11 barrels of cement at the rate of $4.50 per barrel. I do not know where these supplies have been obtained, but that seems an enormous price when the best quality of English cement can be got at $2.50 to $2.75 per barrel. There is a charge for nails and spikes at 7½ cents per pound, whereas nails and spikes now average 2 cents, 3 cents to 3½ cents. Another charge is for 300 pounds of oakum at $9.50 a hundred, while the price of oakum is $6.50 to $7.50.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman might go through the whole list and he will find one item that will compare with the prices of these articles in Digby. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), says that if I will travel I will learn something about ice. So I may say to the hon. gentleman from Digby (Mr. Bowers), without offence, that if he will travel he will learn something about British Columbia prices. We had to pay more for both men and supplies than we ordinarily pay. The captain required more, and we could not get good men for less than the wages we paid, the steward claimed more, and so on, even down to the cabin boy. These items have been watched carefully, and I have obtained from the agent of the department a certificate that these articles had been bought at the regular market prices, and we hold him responsible. We have a very reliable agent.

Mr. BOWERS. Let me call attention to some supplies for the steamer 'Stanley.' Here is an item of 100 lbs. white lead at 10 cents, 775 lbs. at 8 cents, and 1,926 lbs. at 7½ cents, while the best white lead can be bought at 6¼ to 6½ cents. Again there is a charge for 336 lbs. of washing soda at 3 cents, and this material can be furnished at at 1¼ cents.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Wholesale or retail?

Mr. BOWERS. Wholesale. This is a charge for an even barrel—336 pounds—and should have been bought wholesale.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That must have been bought in Charlottetown.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am sure it must have been bought in Pictou.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall inquire into these matters. I am afraid these Charlottetown purchases must be stopped.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see that the steamer 'Quadra' was repaired under contract at a cost of $16,000. Will the hon. gentleman state what was the nature of the injury.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The 'Quadra' was sent out on a special service to carry the commissioner (Mr. Macoun) to the Pribyloff Islands in connection with the Behring Sea question. Going through a narrow channel between the Queen Charlotte Islands the vessel struck on a rock not marked on the chart. A very careful investigation was held into the conduct of the captain, and he was completely exonerated. A hole was knocked into her bottom, and she was beached there, and it was a lucky chance that we were able to save her at all. Had there been bad weather she would have been a total wreck. We asked for tenders, and obtained an offer from the Albion iron works at those contract prices, and they repaired her. The vessel was almost full of water when beached.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is a similar contract for repairs to the new 'Newfield,' on the same page.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was also a case of stranding in the Strait of Canso, and Captain Atkins lost his position on account of it. The vessel was in Port Hood, the storm drum was exhibited there, and in his hurry to distribute supplies to the Canso light, instead of remaining in port, he put out on Sunday night, not having the fear of the Sabbath ordinance before his eyes, and stood out to sea. He took up his position near the Canso light, and in the night he did not put the necessary watch on deck, that is, all the certificated officers having retired, and the boatswain was left alone on deck, if my memory serves me right. During the storm, one of the anchors dragged, and before they could get the machinery under way to manage the ship she drifted and grounded. The damage done to her bottom was such that she had to be docked. Tenders were asked for in that case, and if I recollect aright, Mr. Brook, of the graving dock at Halifax, claimed the contract.

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the value of the steamer 'Quadra'?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. About $85,000.

Mr. DEVLIN. Were the $20,000 entirely for the damages done to the bottom of the steamer?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There were docking charges, and they are always very large. I think the docking charges must have been additional.

Mr. BOWERS. What is the reason that Captain Dakin was discharged from the 'Lansdowne'?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. His services were dispensed with after investigation. I have already told the House that there are a large number of automatic buoys off the coast, and we require to use expedition as well as much care in getting these steamers round to their daily posts. The complaint made by the inspector of lights was that Captain Dakin was over-cautious, and was slow; that instead of going as close as a competent commander could go to the lights, he bore his vessel so far away that he spent days, when he should have spent hours in serving the lights with supplies. These charges were brought more than once to my attention. I hesitated to act upon them until after a thorough investigation, which was conducted under Captain Smith, the chairman of the Board of Examiners of Masters and Mates, and I came to the conclusion that he was not as efficient as he ought to be, and with considerable regret I dispensed with his services.

Mr. BOWERS. The reason I asked the hon. gentleman was that I understood he was dismissed because he did not dress quite smart enough.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is absurd. I never heard that statement, nor was any charge of that kind preferred. There was a question about his maintaining discipline; that he was not strict enough with the men, but the main charge was dilatoriness in supplying the light.

Rewards for saving life &c. $8,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That embraces more than rewards for saving life?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It may be more than we shall require, but we cannot tell what we shall require.

Tidal Observations $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know exactly what result we are getting for this expenditure; what kind of record is kept, and how it is made useful and acceptable to navigators?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is a subject of very great importance. I may tell the hon. gentleman that a few years ago we obtained authority from Parliament to do what has been done in India, and in the mother country, and in the United States, that is to obtain a survey of our currents. Some of the accidents that have happened on our coast, and many that have happened on the St. Lawrence, have been due to these unknown currents. A master sometimes cannot get all the lines, and notwithstanding all his observations and reckonings, he is very often in a perilous position on account of these under-currents taking his vessel entirely out of his course, and against them it is almost impossible to calculate to a nicety. The late Commandor Gordon has told me that in a 12-hours steam, in certain parts of the water, he would be as much as sixteen miles out of his course, in reference to which he had taken all the observations and made all the reckonings that the known aids to navigation would give him. In order to survey these currents, we have to make a series of tidal observations at all the great tidal ports and the various points on the coast. For instance, the observations at Halifax were done largely by the 'Admiral.' When these observations are taken they have to be worked up by scientific men in England and tidal constants have been published, the almanac not being a sufficient guide for this purpose, so that the rise and fall of those tides can be calculated to an hour. We have observations being taken likewise in St. John, N.B., at Father Point, in the St. Lawrence, and on Anticosti Island, and at various other points, where skilled men who have charge of this survey are placing these constants. They require a great deal of care. They have to sink deep excavations, even through the rock, in order to get to a certain point where they can adjust the rise and fall of the tide by very delicate instruments, obtained for that purpose and made in England. After they have made these tidal observations, and that takes a year or two, they then begin observations of the currents by posting vessels. For instance, one vessel would have to be placed in the Straits of Belle Isle, and another near St. Paul's Island, between Cape Breton and Newfoundland, after these observations have been taken, and the tidal currents registered by the various tidal gauges erected, they are plotted on a chart, as will be found in the map of the Atlantic coast of the United States, and also on the maps of the British Isles in which not only the directions of currents, are shown but their force, and this information is of great advantage to mariners. When the British Association met in Montreal a few years ago, they took up this question, and pressed it with great force on the attention of this Government, and year after year, representations were made, and, in my time, I was glad to be able to obtain the assent of Parliament to going forward with this work in moderation. A very interesting report has been prepared, which enters fully into this complicated question, by Mr. Dawson, whose services I have obtained. He is a son of the late principal of McGill College, a man of distinction at McGill, and a very eminent and able engineer. He has charge of the work, which was commenced under the direction of Mr. Carpmael, who, I regret to say, is very seriously ill. Mr. Dawson in his report has explained the expenditure, and has given an estimate of the amount required to complete the work.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Can the hon. gentleman state the estimated amount to complete?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think about $60,000 more will be required.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that the results obtained by the expenditure will necessarily be plotted on the charts. The charts used, however, will, I suppose, be the admiralty charts. Is the information furnished to the Admiralty?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Admiralty is co-operating with us. The Admiralty has done almost all the work in Halifax harbour, and we have been glad to have their co-operation. A year ago it was necessary to have new soundings taken, and a new hydrographical chart prepared of Anticosti. The total cost was $26,000, and the British Government paid one half, $13,000. The work done in Georgian Bay is also published on the British Admiralty charts, the Admiralty having satisfied themselves that our officers are competent and that the work can be guaranteed. In this way, a great deal of money is saved to the country, and our charts obtain a very high standing. We do the plotting, and they do the surveying and engineering.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has not the same work been done by the Admiralty Survey, carried on by the 'Gulnare' steamer?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They have confined themselves to plotting the different depths of water, but no one has done any of the work performed at Halifax by the Admiralty service.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. gentleman has told the committee with regard to tidal observations. I presume the results will be placed before Parliament when completed, and will be published in some printed form?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I believe the United States is the only Government in the world that distributes its charts gratis. The British Government does not, neither does the Canadian Government. We have not reached the stage when it is necessary to ask Parliament to distribute this information.

Mr. FORBES. When the observations are completed on the Atlantic coast, does the Minister propose to furnish the information collected?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It will have to be paid for just as charts are, but at such a price as to be within the reach of every mariner. There is, however, no proposition now before the committee to publish the tidal tables, and other information.

Mr. FORBES. How will mariners be able to obtain the information unless it is distributed generally? The information given by the officers should be subsequently issued at as cheap a rate as possible. I also desire to ask the Minister to explain why one captain of the steamer 'Lansdowne' was dismissed for running his vessel too close to shore, and another captain was dismissed for keeping his vessel too far from the rocks?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall be glad to answer the hon. gentleman's questions when I understand them.

Mr. FORBES. My first question is, whether the public, through Parliament, will be put in possession of full information regarding these observations which have been made.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. FORBES. My second question is, how does the Minister account for dismissing two captains of a steamer, one for laying too close to the rocks, and the other for keeping too far away?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has given the reason. One stood too far out, and the other went too near.

Mr. BOWERS. I desire to draw attention to the number of shipping disasters that occur every year in the neighbourhood of Cape Sable. During the last few years several steamers and vessels were lost there on account of currents. That question, it appears to me, should be considered more there than at any other point, for there is no point where vessels get so much astray as in the neighbourhood of Cape Sable.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a very important point. I think there are only two stations on the Canadian side at present, Halifax and St. John; but I will make a note of what the hon. gentleman has stated, and bring it to Mr. Dawson's attention.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has taken two votes for $10,000 each previous to the one before the House, and Mr. Dawson says in his report that only one-fourth of this vote has been expended. What is the use of taking such a large vote if you do not expend it?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I can promise the hon. gentleman that this vote will be expended. We make our plans at the first of the season, and the 1st of July cuts us in two so that we cannot manage to spend the amount in the fiscal year. The tidal gauges have to be made with great care by eminent men in London and there was delay. We were handicapped by Professor Carpmael having to attend to important duties at the Toronto Observatory. It was for that reason that I asked the Government to give me the service of Mr. Dawson, who will give his whole time to that question.

Mr. BOWERS. Was there not some trouble with the one in St. John?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was some trouble, the particulars of which I do not remember, but Mr. Dawson went there and set it right. One of them was destroyed by a storm for instance.

Mr. FLINT. Did I understand the Minister to say that there is no tidal observation station at or near Cape Sable?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think there is yet.

Mr. FLINT. During the last twenty-five years a great many serious losses have occurred in the neighbourhood of Cape Sable owing to changes in the currents, or because the currents are greater there one time than at another. I would press upon the Minister the advisability of putting a station there. I have read discussions upon this subject, which show that a great deal of study could be devoted to that particular place with great advantage to commerce.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will make the hon. gentleman's heart glad by telling him that it is proposed to take Yarmouth as a place for making observations.

Mr. BOWERS. Yarmouth is too far north and it would be much better down near Cape Sable.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am afraid we will both have to bow to the opinion of scientific men on that subject.

Mr. DEVLIN. Would the Minister kindly explain the item at page 428 of the Auditor General's Report, under the heading of Tidal Observations: "advances not accounted for, $695"?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When these vessels went out in Professor Carpmael's time, he drew a certain amount and charged it against this vote, and Captain Douglas, who is employed by him, goes off to Anticosti and has to draw against this vote also, and when that account was made up the vouchers had not been sent in.

Removal of Obstructions, &c. . . . $5,000

Mr. FAUVEL. Is this vote for the removal of wrecks in the bays?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. FAUVEL. There was a vessel wrecked last fall opposite the Bonaventure River. What steps should be taken to impress upon the Minister of Marine the necessity of having that removed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When the attention of the department is called to any obstruction, such as a wreck, in the way of navigation, the statute provides that we call on the owner of the wreck to remove it, if he is to be found; and if within a certain time he takes no steps the department removes the wreck. If we can find the owner we recover the cost of removing it, and of keeping a light on it while it is there to prevent obstructions to navigation. If the case my hon. friend (Mr. Fauvel) refers to is brought to my attention I will see that these steps are taken.

Salaries and allowances of light-house-keepers, &c. $201,600

Mr. FORBES. Who is the present keeper of the Barrington lightship?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Lewis S. Nickerson.

M. FORBES. Why was Mr. Kenney discharged?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Kenney was discharged because he farmed his light out. He was paid $500 a year by the Government, and he paid $150 to have the work done. After investigation it was found that he had done this contrary to rule 80 of the service which has been supplied to him and he was dismissed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the increase of $1,000 in this service for?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that we are building lights every year, and I am glad to be able to claim considerable credit on the part of the officers who, with the greatest difficulty, have to examine the numerous small accounts which aggregate $200,000. The difficulty in keeping these accounts down is extraordinary, but on account of the care and system which the officers have adopted, we are only asking $1,000 increase for a great many new lights.

Mr. BOWERS. I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the light-keeper at Peter's Island, Westport, N.S., gets the magnificent sum of only $300 per year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is very much as a rule down there.

Mr. BOWERS. All the rest of the light-keepers in that vicinity get at least $400 a year, and this gentleman has to attend to a horn of some kind.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What kind of a horn?

Mr. BOWERS. Some kind of a horn placed there by the department, which this gentleman has to blow with a crank. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister to this, that three or four years ago this man had to employ a man or boy and pay him $80 or $90 for the summer, and he has had to employ more or less help since. He has a family, and he has to take his children to the mainland to go to school. His brother kept the light before he did, but he could not stay there; he had to give it up and go to the United States to make a living. Then the light was given to the man who has it now. He does not want to give it up, because he has no other way of making a living; but the pittance he receives is too small for the work he has to do, and I would like the hon. Minister to consider whether he could not increase his salary so as to enable him to employ a boy to blow the horn during the summer months. I think he applied to the department two or three years ago for an increase; but his application has not been attended to. If the hon. Minister will examine into the matter, I think his conscience will lead him to grant this man at least $400 a year, what the other lighthouse keepers get. He is a faithful man and attends to the light well.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall be very glad to look to the case. It has not been brought to my attention, certainly not within a reasonable period. I must say to the hon. gentleman, however, with all frankness, that this is not an extraordinarily low salary on the coast. We can get splendid men there for very small salaries, I fancy some who would have plots of land which they cultivate around the lighthouse. There are men at important stations who receive much lower salaries than that.

Mr. BOWERS. In this case the land is owned by private parties, and the light-keeper has to pay rent. At Boar's Head and at Briar's Island, the lightkeepers get $400, and in both cases the position is fully as easy as the position of this man.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will take some off them and give it to him.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. Minister will pardon me if I refer to the case of Captain Kenney, the late keeper of the Barrington lightship, who was dismissed from that office.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has not the hon. gentleman a notice of motion on the paper in regard to that?

Mr. FORBES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We might spend an afternoon on that notice of motion.

Mr. FORBES. I only want to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister certain matters which he does not know about, or he would not have acted in that case in the way he did. I did put a notice on the paper, and I was in hopes that it would be reached last Monday, but owing to the press of business it was not reached, and I fear it will not be reached this session so that I take advantage of this opportunity. The hon. Minister has told me that he dismissed this man for farming out the light, and that he did so after an investigation had been held. I think the Minister is entirely mistaken as to the result of that investigation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The result is that the man is out.

Mr. FORBES. The actual effect of the investigation was the dismissal of the man: but that should not have been the effect, because the evidence taken did not warrant it. I would like the Minister to lay the report on the Table. It seems that the two commissioners, Messrs. Hutchins and Johnson, went down there and visited Captain Kenney, then in charge of the light-ship, and made two charges or complaints against him. The first was that he had left this ship and gone to Clark's harbour to attend a political meeting, and taken another man there with him. Captain Kenney was asked by the commissioners if that was true.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I appeal to the hon. gentleman not to go through all that case. There is nothing in it except a very simple statement. The man says he was unjustly dismissed, because, while guilty of farming out the light, he had kept a casual eye over it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. Minister is going to prejudice the case again; that is not fair.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am not prejudicing it; but it is now nearly twelve o'clock.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. gentleman will pardon me—I have the floor.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It does not matter to me; I am willing to stay all night.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. Minister tells me that technically the man committed an error, while virtually and morally he did no wrong at all. I was going to say that Captain Kenney, who was a most able and worthy man, who filled that position for over sixteen years, made answer to the charge of the commissioners, that he had attended one political meeting, because he had not heard the public speakers, and that that was the only meeting he had had anything to do with. Mr. Johnson, one of the commissioners, himself, replied that there was no harm in such a proceeding as that, as he would have done the same himself. The next charge made against Captain Kenney was that he had hired his horse or allowed his horse to carry voters to the poll during the election contest. This was denied emphatically.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Mr. FORBES. From a report.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What report?

Mr. FORBES. From the evidence taken at that time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then what does the hon. gentleman move for?

Mr. FORBES. I move for the report. The hon. gentleman drew up his own charges, appointed his own court, made his own rules, and sent his own commissioners down there, and I have no doubt they went down with their judgment in their pocket. What I am asking for is the judgment of this tribunal and of the country. I am stating the evidence to the hon. gentleman now, and I would like to have his judgment as well as the judgment of the country on the facts. The second charge was that Captain Kenney had hired out his team to carry voters to the poll. This is emphatically and specially denied by the lighthouse keeper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was found not guilty on that.

Mr. FORBES. I do not know. I believe that is the real ground of his dismissal, together with the fact that his family took a warm interest in the then pending elections. The commissioners doubted the words of Captain Kenney and applied to Captain A. K. Smith as to whether it was true or not, and Captain Smith verified the answer of the lighthouse keeper, and said the charge was not true. About this time it seems there were three elections held in the county of Shelburne.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison). I am afraid the hon. gentleman is out of order in discussing the elections.

Mr. FORBES. There was a very interesting election contest in the county at that time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like your ruling, Mr. Chairman, on that point. The hon. gentleman is proceeding to discuss the dismissal of an officer, which took place three or four years ago, under an item relating to the salaries and allowances of the present lighthouse-keepers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We are now in Committee of Supply, and discussing a vote of some $201,000 for the salaries of lighthouse-keepers, and my hon. friend is complaining that one of these lighthouse-keepers was improperly dismissed. I say he is directly within his rights.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison). I think the hon. gentleman would be justified in referring to the dismissal, but he is proceeding to discuss some questions previous to that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Not at all.

Mr. FORBES. I was proceeding to say that the hon. gentleman is asking us to vote an increased sum over what would have been necessary, had he retained the former lighthouse-keeper in charge. This lighthouse-keeper was unfairly dismissed. Either the facts were not correctly reported to the Minister or, if correctly reported, he drew an incorrect conclusion. There was an election contest going on, and it was supposed that everybody in the county was enthusing over it and taking part in it, and pressure was brought on the Government to have this man dismissed because his family and friends exercised their rights as citizens. An investigation was held, which resulted in his dismissal. The charge brought against this lighthouse-keeper was investigated by Messrs. Hutchins and Johnson. When they asked him how often he visited his light-ship? he replied whenever necessary, and that he had complete charge. Then Mr. Hutchins or Mr. Johnson, one of the commissioners sent down to investigate, turned round to the window and looked over the bay where the vessel was, and said: I do not see but that you can look after this ship as well sitting on your chair here as on the deck of the vessel. That was the sum total of the investigation made, to which the captain was a party. I do not know what report was made by these commissioners, but I wish the hon. Minister to lay it on the Table. I know that the Minister, through one of his officials, the Deputy Minister of Marine, wrote this letter on the 5th August, 1890, to this lighthouse-keeper:

I am to inform you that by Order in Council of the 30th ultimo, and upon the recommendation of the Minister of Marine, your appointment as keeper of the Barrington lightship has been cancelled, as it appears that for five or six years past, in contravention of rule 80 of rules for the guidance of light-keepers, which states that no light-keeper will be allowed to perform his duties by substitute without the written permission of the department, you have been employing one Richard Fuller as keeper of the lightship at a salary of $150, you yourself receiving $500 and visiting the ship only at intervals. You will retain charge of the vessel until you are relieved by the person sent by the department for that purpose.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HUTCHINS.

It appears that for five or six years it had been the practice of this lighthouse-keeper to employ another man to look after the vessel. I asked the Minister whether he knows of any lightship on the coast of Nova Scotia, or of any other civilized country, the keeper of which has not an assistant. It would be utterly impossible to have a lightship in charge of one man only, without allowing him to employ another man as his substitute or assistant, when he is compelled to be absent. The facts are as follows: The chief officer in charge of the service, Captain Kendrick, specially ordered Captain Kenney to employ a substitute, and not depend on himself alone for the maintenance of the light. Captain Kenney always looked after the ship to the best of his ability; there was never any complaint made; no one charged him with neglecting his duty, during the five or six years he was in the habit of employing an assistant, and the officers of the department themselves, when they went down to investigate, said that he was justified in so doing. Now, the person in command of the vessel, Captain Nicholson, who no doubt is paid by the Government, as I am informed, or employs one at his own expense, as Captain Kenney did. I could well understand the dismissal of Captain Kenney, if his substitute had done his work negligently, but no such charge is made. The sole charge was that he had not asked the permission of the Marine Department to do so. On the 7th August, Mr. Hutchins, after he had taken part in this investigation, wrote this letter:

Your appointment as keeper of the Barrington lightship having been cancelled on the 30th ultimo, the leave of absence granted by my letter of the 4th inst., is consequently of no effect.

On the 4th of August, perhaps months after the investigation was held, the Minister's own inspector gave Captain Kenney leave of absence, and consequently permission to employ a substitute, and now it turns out he was summarily dismissed on the 30th July previous. On the 7th August, Mr. Johnson, the chief agent in Nova Scotia of the Minister, wrote to Captain Kenney, as follows :—

I am informed by letter from the department that your appointment as keeper of Barrington lightship was cancelled by Order in Council of 30th July. You will please hand over to Mr. Richard Fuller, who has been placed in temporary charge, the vessel and all stores, etc., belonging to her which may be in your possession.

That letter refers to Richard Fuller, the man whom Captain Kenney employed to look after the vessel, which shows conclusively that the Government could never have had any fault to find with the way the duty of looking after the vessel was performed, or the Government would not have put the vessel in charge of Mr. Fuller. Again, on the 27th August, at the time the investigation was going on by Messrs. Johnson and Hutchins, it was made evident to Captain Kenney, by these officers, that his services were not wanted, and that the position was required for somebody else. Captain Kenney, being rather an old man, replied to Mr. Johnson to this effect :

I am getting old, and perhaps it would be best for me to resign, if it would serve the Government purpose. I have been here for sixteen years and I would be content with my superannuation allowance.

The agent of the Minister replied that it would be much better for the captain if he would resign at once, and that he would in that case most certainly get his superannuation allowance. The result was that Captain Kenney wrote out his resignation and forwarded it to the Government. To this letter he received no reply, not even the courtesy of a formal acknowledgment. This was some weeks previous to the 30th July. He heard nothing about the matter until he got this curt letter from the Deputy Minister of Marine telling him that he was dismissed. Captain Kenney naturally felt that he had been unfairly dealt with and he asked when his superannuation would be allowed to him, and whether the fact that the Government had summarily dismissed him would affect his superannuation. He received this letter from Mr. H. W. Johnson :

I am in receipt of your letter of 19th inst., and in reply would state, that, so far as I know, there has been no superannuation allowance made in your case.

Now, on the 30th July he received from Mr. Johnson a letter as follows :

I am in receipt of your letter of 26th inst., and would say in reply that I have received no official notification of your having been dismissed from the position of keeper of the Barrington lightship. In my report to the department some time since I stated your request to be superannuated and I will forward a copy of your letter to Ottawa to-day.

On the 26th of August, Mr. Hardie wrote, as Deputy Minister to H. W. Johnson as follows :—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 22nd inst., inclosing copy of a letter received from Mr. J. R. Kenney, late keeper of the Barrington lightship, asking that he be allowed superannuation, and in reply, I have to request you to inform Mr. Kenney that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is unable to recommend his application in view of the unsatisfactory character of his services.

That does not seem to be quite in accord with the statement of the hon. Minister himself. The hon. gentleman states that his sole ground of complaint was that Captain Kenney had farmed out the light, but he refuses him superannuation allowance because of the unsatisfactory character of his services. If his services were so unsatisfactory as to prevent the man being given superannuation allowance, they were sufficient grounds for dismissal. But the hon. gentleman says he did not dismiss him for that. It seems to me that this requires an explanation, as there seems to be a discrepancy between the statement of the Minister and the statements of this official. Now, as regards the rules and regulations which the hon. gentleman says Captain Kenney broke, did the Minister instruct his officials to inquire whether Captain Kenney had had the rules furnished him, or was in fact acquainted with the rules of the department? As a matter of fact, he never had a copy of such rules and never knew of the rule in question, the breach of which is given by the Minister for his dismissal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman surely cannot expect his word to be taken with regard to a matter of which he cannot possibly have personal knowledge.

Mr. FORBES. I think my word ought to be taken just as readily as that of the hon. Minister, who was not present and does not know what took place. There is not a tittle of evidence to show that Captain Kenney was furnished with a copy of the rules or that he knew of their existence. The statements I make to the House are based upon information furnished by those who are familiar with the details of the case, and I am going to ask the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) to bear out what I have said. That I may put it in a stronger way than I would have done had the Minister not met me in the harsh way he has. There is nothing to show that Captain Kenney knew of these rules and it is a fact that Captain Kendrick, the first inspector, told Captain Kenney it would be necessary to employ a substitute. It was known to the officers of the department that he was employing a substitute for several years. For five or six years they allowed this to go on and now the Minister rises in his might—and I do not question his right to exercise the power vested in him—and dismissed this man. But the dismissal under the circumstances was, to say the least of it, not justifiable, especially when it can be shown that an agent of the department asked the man to send in his resignation. The ground given for his dismissal was not sufficient ground for refusing superannuation. I know that this case has aroused a good deal of feeling even in the hon. gentleman's own party in the county of Shelburne. I am not talking from a political point of view, but am asking for fair-play for the officers of our lighthouse service, and especially for this man. It is yet time for the hon. Minister to, in a great degree, right the wrong that has been done. The Government can give this man the superannuation allowance. Whether they refund to him the amount which would be due had the superannuation been granted before is another matter. But the man should be put on the superannuation list with as little delay as possible. The hon. Minister will see that the ground he gives for the dismissal of this man does not correspond with the evidence taken by his own commissioners. If he will lay on the Table the report of those officers I am satisfied that the evidence as laid upon the Table will correspond with what I have said. I ask him to accept the facts and to reconsider his decision.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). As the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes) has called upon me to corroborate what he has stated, I will say a few words on this subject, because if I were to remain silent, my silence might be taken as signifying consent to the charge he has made. I know the lighthouse keeper very well to whom he has referred. He was in charge of this lightship for a considerable length of time. Charges were made against him, first, that he had taken a very active part in one of the elections which had taken place there, not one of my own elections; and also, that he was farming out his lightship contrary to the rules of the department. An investigation was made by Mr. Johnson, of Halifax, and by Mr. Hutchins; and I think it would be impossible to find a kinder-hearted man, a man who would have more sympathy with an official of his department than Mr. Johnson. When Mr. Johnson went there he afforded him every consideration, and patiently listened to everything this man could say in his own defence. He was acquitted of taking a very active part in the election, and I myself wrote a letter to the hon. Minister on that occasion, and told him that, notwithstanding it had been stated that he had taken an active part in the election, I did not believe that was the case. I said what I could for this man, and he was completely acquitted on that charge. But it is a fact that he was farming out the lightship. This lightship lay in the roadstead some distance off, a mile or so from his house, and the lighthouse-keeper very rarely went on board was a fact patent to all the people who went there. This, I believe, is contrary to the rules of the department, and he was dismissed for that cause, and for that cause only. After he was dismissed, I must say that I would have been pleased if this unfortunate man could have received a retiring allowance, inasmuch as he had been there for a considerable time, and professed, at all events, to have violated this rule without being acquainted with it. I made some investigation on that point, and I ascertained that every lighthouse-keeper is furnished with the rules of the department, and there was not any doubt whatever that this man was furnished with them at the outset.

Mr. FORBES. From whom did the hon. gentleman get that information?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). I got it from the officers of the department here, who stated that it was the invariable custom, one that was religiously observed.

Mr. FORBES. Does the hon. gentleman know that Captain Kenney says he never had them?

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne.) Yes, I think I have heard him state that. As I said before, I would have been very glad, indeed, if this man could have received a retiring allowance. But I think if hon. gentlemen will look into the matter, they will find that where a man is dismissed for violating the rules, it is not very easy to give him a retiring allowance.

Mr. FLINT. Is it a fact that the present lighthouse-keeper is allowed a substitute?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, it is not; he would have been dismissed, too, if he had done such a thing. I will be much surprised if this committee, on either side of the Chairman, should sympathize in the slightest degree, with the case the hon. gentleman is attempting to make about this man. We are not dealing with a matter of sympathy. The hon. gentleman has put the case adorned with the gloss and all the misrepresentations that have been poured into his ears in reference to it. This case simply constituted an intolerable scandal, a thing that is not allowed in any department of the Government service that I am aware of, and I hope it never will be allowed. I protest against it as a most vicious principle, and I know of no case since I have been in the Marine Department where it has been tolerated. What does the hon. gentleman say, stripped of all the little statements regarding sympathy, and the man's age, and things of that kind? That for five years, as he practically admits, this man has taken $500 a year in cash from the Marine Department as keeper of a lightship, not an ordinary little two-penny half-penny light on shore in a comparatively unimportant locality, but a light on the most dangerous point on the coast. Now, Mr. Chairman, mark this fact, this man deserts his duties and farms them out to a poor man for $150 a year. That is every dollar in cash that was spent for the maintenance of a light for which we pay $500 a year. I could understand the hon. gentleman if he had attacked me for having permitted such a thing to go on, and I could understand the hon. gentleman deprecating any lax system of inspection that would allow that kind of thing. But to try to make a grievance out of it! He belongs to a party that often boasts of purity, and holds up its hands in horror at extravagance; but in this case, because Mr. Kenney happens to be opposed to the Government in politics, they say it is a great shame that we did not allow this poor man to live on shore and receive $500, while he paid some other starving wretch $150 to take his place and risk his life on the lightship. There was a full investigation, charges were preferred which Mr. Kenney had an opportunity to answer. There was an investigation by an agent of the department, who also took, as I may tell the House, the same sympathetic view as the hon. gentleman, because the man was old. Although it was a case of gross violation of the rules, still, the hon. gentleman thinks that he should be superannuated. Now, I may be wrong in my estimation of what my duties are as a Minister in making representations to the Governor in Council under the Superannuation Act; but there is a statute which says that it is only in case where a man has reached a certain age, and whose conduct has been free from reproach, that he is entitled to superannuation. But here was a gross violation of duty, substantiated after investigation. I have the evidence, and I will read some portions of it to the hon. gentleman. It may teach the hon. member for Queen's not to insist on taking up three-quarters of an hour of the time of the committee over fanciful charges of this kind, when he refused to allow me to make an explanation which would have prevented nearly the whole discussion. The hon. gentleman certainly has not got the evidence. He read from a document I never heard of, a document that never came before me. It was impossible for the hon. gentleman to know what the actual facts were. I will read from the evidence taken by the agent:

Richard Fuller, married, lives at Barrington, no family, employed by Capt. J. A. Kenney to look after lightship "Barrington." Has been in this employ five or six years. Sleeps on board the ship, and manages her generally.

Now, we want a man on the lighthouse at night. That is the time that we want a $500 man, that is what the country is willing to pay a man to live there; but for five or six years this man lived on shore. Now, let us see what the lighthouse-keeper, who draws $500, was doing:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

I do not think my pay is enough. Once in the winter Mr. Kenney stayed with me about one week when the ice was heavy, and when the "Newfield" was here for two or three days, he remained on board with me. I cannot recall any other time when I have not been alone on board at night.

Now, that is the statement upon which I acted. I considered it was a gross scandal. I would like hon. gentlemen to say whether we are to tolerate such a thing, to pay a man a salary and allow him to enjoy himself on land if he can get a poor wretch to take his place and risk his life for a mere nominal sum. Long before this, there had been charges made, that were not followed up, of this light not being properly kept; there were charges before my time that were not acted upon. I have every reason to believe that possibly those charges were correct. We had not the man there we should have had, and the only thing I feel ashamed of, in a departmental sense, is that our own inspection did not bring those facts sooner to light. But when the inspector goes along the coast, if he finds the light all right at the time he is there, and if he finds the man in charge, that everything is going on well, and if there are no complaints, and no charge of negligence, he reports accordingly. With these facts before me, I recommended that the man be dismissed, and he was dismissed. The charge made with regard to interfering with political matters was not substantiated, and it did not in the slightest degree prejudice his case. I make this statement, for I yet have to learn that I have condoned any similar fault on the part of an officer from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I consider it is my duty to see that the officers perform their work.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The charge made was that he farmed out the lights?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. FORBES. He never heard of that charge until after he had been dismissed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I hope the hon. gentleman will see the folly of taking up a statement made by an officer and standing by it. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in bringing up a case and wishing an investigation, but he is in error in manifesting an intense desire to talk about a grievance without being willing that I should rise and give the actual facts on which I acted.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. Minister give the committee the charge, and the persons by whom it was pressed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will bring down the whole papers if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish the original charge.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The charge was preferred by Arthur McGray and others, and it was sent to me by the representative of the county at the time, General Laurie. I have here the letter received :

I do not know what has been your policy in such cases. Our friends feel very bitterly against this man Kenney on account of his active work against us at the last election. I am quite willing to take the responsibility of recommending his dismissal, but I think you will make further inquiries. He does not reside on board his lightship, but pays a man about $150 a year to do so, while he receives $500. I imagine that when he was appointed it was intended he should live on board and look after the light himself.

On that I made an investigation, and I would have dismissed him on either charge being proved, even on the charge that he had made himself obnoxious to candidates representing the Government.

Mr. FORBES. Does the hon. Minister say that the present officer has no substitute ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am not aware of any. If the hon. gentleman will make a charge, I will investigate it. There has been a charge made against the present light-keeper. This is the statement :

In reply to yours of the 11th inst., I would say that at the time in question I was having repairs made in my house. I was only absent for a couple of weeks or so, and in the meantime I visited the light sufficiently often to know that everything was all right. My assistant was a trustworthy and reliable person.

On that letter he was censured and warned. The following letter was sent to him, dated December 18th :—

The department has had under consideration correspondence had with you recently by the Inspector of Lights by which it appears that you have been absenting yourself from your station and only visiting your ship three or four times a week. I have to call your attention to the duties required of you by the rules and regulations in regard to personal attention to your duties as light-keeper, and I have to caution you against any further neglect of such duties, and I have also to inform you that in the event of your absenting yourself again without leave, your conduct will be sufficient for dismissal.

That letter was dated December 18th.

Mr. FORBES. The old keeper did not get any such caution as that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No one can complain of an officer being dismissed when he fails to discharge his duties. The difference between the action taken towards the late appointee and Captain Kenney was this, that Captain Kenney had for years neglected his duties by not personally attending to the lightship. Captain Kenney says, according to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes), that he never received a copy of the rules requiring him to attend personally.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We do not accept that statement, because the officers of the department sent him the rules when he was appointed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is possible they may have been sent to him and that he may have lost or mislaid the rules, but it is evident that he acted contrary to the rules, and no doubt he was censurable. But the difference in the treatment between Captain Kenney and his successor was that while one broke the rules—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. One violated the rule for one week and the other for five years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister was content with censuring the present incumbent, while he did not give Captain Kenney the benefit of a censure, but dismissed him at once.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What would the hon. gentleman have done ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not sure what I would have done. I would, however, have censured him before I dismissed him.

Contingencies, lighthouses, &c. $18,120

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to inquire whether, with respect to J. Gregory, of Quebec, who is an old officer, it is the intention of the Government to superannuate that gentleman ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, he has not applied for it, and he is discharging his duties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Discharging them satisfactorily ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, on the whole.

Maintenance and repairs of lights.....$265,000

Mr. BOWERS. There is a matter I should like to bring to the attention of the committee. It is the establishment of a lightship at Lurcher Shoal, off Yarmouth. This shoal consists of two shoal patches bearing from each other N.E. $\frac{1}{4}$ E. and S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ W. with sixteen or seventeen fathoms of water between them. The one to the south-westward is the larger and shoaler, having only nine feet of water. The two shoals are distant from each other two and a half miles. The smaller shoal to the north-east has five fathoms on it. The south-west shoal bears from the Yarmouth lighthouse north-west by west two-thirds west, fourteen and three-quarter miles. I would call to the attention of the Minister that many petitions and letters have been sent to the department year after year upon this subject. On the 18th February, 1882, a very lengthy letter was sent by D. W. Brown, Superintendent of Lights of Nova Scotia, as regards the dangers in the Bay of Fundy, and especially with reference to the Lurcher Shoal, and he asked that a lightship be placed there. Again, in 1882, there was a petition sent to the Senate from the St. John Board of Trade, the municipality of Yarmouth, the Halifax Chamber of Commerce, the Quebec Board of Trade, and the Montreal Board of Trade, in which they asked that a lightship be placed on the Lurcher Shoal, with a fog-bell attached. They called attention to the great number of wrecks which have taken place in that vicinity, and they also show in their petition that Captain Meade, of the United States steamer 'Vandalia' has urged upon his Government the great necessity of their asking the Government of Canada to effectively mark this isolated and dangerous shoal. The Minister is aware, and this whole House is aware, more especially the members from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, that this is a very dangerous shoal. At the entrance of St. Mary's Bay and the Bay of Fundy, it is almost in the line of shipping coming from the ports of Boston and New York to the port of Yarmouth, to St. Mary's Bay, and to St. John. Hundreds and thousands of vessels pass within a few miles of this shoal every year, and as we all know there is a great deal of foggy weather in the Bay of Fundy, which makes this shoal more specially dangerous. The Lurcher Shoal is marked by a whistling buoy, which went adrift in 1883, again in 1884, again in 1886, twice in 1888, again in 1890 and twice more in 1892. It seems almost impossible to keep a whistling buoy on this dangerous shoal, and for the preservation of life and property I would urge upon the Minister in the supplementary estimates to make provisions for a lightship being placed there. Probably no place in the waters of the Dominion of Canada is a lightship more needed than on the Lurcher Shoal. During these times that the buoy was absent, letters and telegrams from Yarmouth, St. John, Halifax and elsewhere were continually being received by the Government, calling their attention to the great risks to navigation because of the absence of this buoy. In the return I asked for last year, and only received this session, there were over 100 letters calling attention to this dangerous shoal. On the 24th November, 1892, A. F. Clements, of Yarmouth, while in Ottawa, called upon the department and urged the necessity for better protection for navigation on the Lurcher Shoal, and suggested that a light could be easily maintained there. I call the Minister's attention to this matter so that the importance of it may be recognized by the department, and I hope that he may do something for the better preservation of life, which is endangered by this obstacle to navigation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has not stated that many of the complaints in reference to that dangerous locality, and very difficult locality to mark, have subsided for some time. The last automatic buoy we placed there has worked well, and I have most congratulatory letters from those interested in shipping at the port of Yarmouth. The hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) spoke the other night with eulogy upon the manner in which my department was looking after the waters in that locality. The subject of the lightship was very carefully considered by the officers of the department, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bowers) knows enough about navigation to know that it is a serious question as to whether you can keep a lightship on the Lurcher Shoal. I do not think my hon. friend would undertake the duty of remaining on board one. The carrying away of the buoy is a very dangerous thing, because if it is not recovered it is worse than if there was no buoy there at all. My officers came to the conclusion that we should quicken the service of our steamers so as to visit those buoys more frequently, and so protect the chains against the extraordinary currents which cause them to break. The department has given great attention to that subject, and I hope by this change to render the necessary service.

Mr. BOWERS. An automatic buoy is a nice thing in foggy weather, when there is no wind, but, in a gale of wind, with a southerly or south-west breeze, it is impossible to hear a whistling buoy until you pass it, and then you may be too near the ledge to escape its dangers, and loss of life often follows, as well as the destruction of the ship. I do not see any more difficulty in keeping a lightship there than off many of the shoals on the American coast.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman know of any lightship on as difficult ground as the Lurcher Shoal?

Mr. BOWERS. The lightship off the Pollock Reef, as well as those on the Nantucket Shoals, on the southern coast of Massachusetts, must be in fully as bad places as the Lurcher Shoal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. During the late Administration a lightship was placed off Sandborough Point, which is not as bad as the Lurcher Shoal, and the lightship was lost.

Mr. YEO. I would ask the Minister whether he intends placing buoys and range-lights at the entrance to Darnley Basin, Malpeque Harbour? I have endeavoured to point out to the Minister the necessity of placing buoys there. It would not be an expensive matter, and it would be of great convenience to a large number of fishermen who frequent this place.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the wishes of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Yeo) have been substantially met by the department placing buoys there, and that has been done. We have not yet obtained satisfactory information as to the lights, but I imagine that can be done also.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I called the attention of the Minister a couple of years ago to the fact that his officers have put in the harbour of Kingston a couple of triangular shaped buoys moored with chains, which are perfectly invisible at night, and to which there is neither light nor bell attached. Last summer I made some inquiry about the matter, and two or three cases were brought to my knowledge in which small steamers travelling that harbour at night narrowly escaped running into these, which would be a very serious matter, and might be attended with loss of life, because there were picnic parties on board the steamers. As it was, they very narrowly escaped running into them. They are perfectly invisible at night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not know what it is on the lakes, but I know it is an every night experience in the harbours on the Atlantic. The case to which the hon. gentleman refers I sent the chief engineer to look into—not after hearing his complaint, because I was not in the House at the time, but previous to that. Colonel Anderson went to Kingston to arrange these buoys and some adjustment of the lights to the satisfaction of the large shipping interests. I think that hon. members who are familiar with these aids to navigation will agree with me that we could not possibly arrange to have buoys lighted; and to supply them with bells and make them ring would cost a very large sum of money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They would ring when there was the least agitation of the waters.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Of course, bells can be put on; it is simply a question of dollars and cents; and I shall be very happy to look into the case and see if it is one of those that we deal with in that fashion. As a rule, bells are not put in to keep vessels off the buoys, but to let them know where the sides of the channel are.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware that vessels navigating the channel and able to take their bearings from the lights, would not be in much danger. But the harbour is constantly traversed by small steamers carrying picnic parties, and they are out late at night, when it is quite impossible to distinguish these buoys. If a small steamer ran against one of these at night, it would inevitably go down. My own impression is that a bell placed upon it would be a sufficient protection. The agitation of the water would be sufficient to make it ring.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose most of the nights when the small boats are out are calm?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In five out of six nights there would be sufficient agitation of the water to cause the bell to ring. There is not the least doubt that unless some precaution is taken accidents will occur; and having pointed out the danger I have done my duty, and if a dozen lives or so are lost out of Kingston, the responsibility must rest on the head of the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will take every precaution to provide against the loss of his life, which is too valuable to the Conservative party to be lost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What you want to do is to spend $20 or so in putting on bells.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is one case to which I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention. He knows that the harbour of Souris is used very much by American and Nova Scotia fishermen, who run in there for shelter in every eastern gale. Last year one of these vessels, having on board a number of people, ran in on a very stormy night, and, coming around the breakwater, they mistook it, so that the vessel drifted on the shore, and a woman, the captain's wife, and one or two of the crew were drowned. A coroner's inquest was held, at which the captain and one of the crew contended that they could not see the light on the end of the breakwater. Other people looking from the shore, the Rev. Mr. Cameron and the hon. member for King's, who is not here to-night, gave evidence that the light could be seen from the shore.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. gentleman remember the date?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was some time last autumn. The insurance agent, who had an insurance on the vessel, a very experienced nautical man, wrote a letter after the accident occurred, which was published, and he said he would forward it to the department, making a suggestion as to the kind of light that should be placed at the end of the breakwater; and I would ask the hon. Minister to make a note and see if that letter is in the department, and whether the suggestion is worthy of attention or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not recollect that case, and among the applications for lights for Prince Edward Island, that does not seem to be included. I will make inquiry into the matter. One hundred and fifty feet of breakwater was carried away in August, so it may have been all out of repair.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The gentleman who gave evidence at the inquest said they could see the light from the high bank on the shore. The men on board the ship said they could see it from the deck, and both may have been telling the truth.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Very likely there was a temporary arrangement.

Mr. JONCAS. For the last two or three years I have been urging the necessity for a light on Newport Point in the county of Gaspé. Newport is a very important fishing place, about 100 to 120 boats going from there to Miscou banks. Grand River and Pabos are also very important fishing places, from which about 300 to 400 boats go to these banks. The fishermen are obliged to run before the wind in stormy weather and during dark nights; when if there was a light they could go into shelter at Newport, which is rather a dangerous harbour on account of a point of rocks stretching out. I have been urging on the department the necessity of putting a light there almost every year, because we have yearly to deplore loss of life and much loss of property through not having a light in that harbour. I hope the Minister will see his way clear to do this. Not only would it save life and property, but it would save time, because when the fishermen are caught at night by bad weather they have to run before the wind and lose consequently a great deal of time. The erection of a lighthouse there would cost a mere trifle compared to the great benefit it would give, and I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to do something this year for the fishermen in this locality.

Mr. FORBES. With regard to Little Hope Island, the hon. gentleman, a few years ago, on my representing to him the necessity of having a buoy of some kind in the channel between the island and the mainland, referred me to the officer in Halifax and ordered an examination to be made into the subject. I was informed by his own officers that they purposed erecting some sort of a fog-horn. At the time I pointed out that between the inner shoal and the western island and the mainland the passage was very dangerous to vessels going coastwise, west or east, and was given to understand that there would be a buoy of some kind put there. This place is a harbour much used by fishermen, and I should be glad to hear if the hon. gentleman has come to any decision as to where he shall place that buoy. Or he might place an automatic whistle buoy, such as can be heard in foggy weather, and which would serve the whole coast.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have not gone further than the preliminary steps.

Mr. YEO. Is it the intention of the hon. Minister to place an additional buoy at Vagrant Bay, P.E.I.?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is, but I really cannot say how that stands at the moment. I will make a note of it.

Mr. YEO. The contractors for placing these buoys frequently live at long distances from where the buoys are put down; and when these buoys are displaced by stormy weather, considerable delay takes place before these parties can put them right. I would suggest that the department should have these buoys put in position by men living within a reasonable distance who could look after them without delay.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Signal Service..... $6,000

Mr. FAUVEL. I see that at some of these stations the amount paid is $100, at others $45, and others $60. As the service is the same, only hoisting drum during storms, how is it that the pay is so different?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In some places we can get the men cheaper than we can in others.

Repairs and incidental expenses in connection with wharfs..... $5,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is a new vote comparatively. We have not yet devised a very thorough system of expenditure. But the Marine Department have control of the wharfs which the Public Works Department builds. The Public Works Department has hitherto had done the repairs and a wharfinger could not spend even $50 or $100 for small repairs, because the money had to be obtained from two departments. It was suggested that a special vote should be taken for work in the way of repairs, and that the work should be done under the Marine Department.

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to call attention to small repairs required at Centre-ville. About $50 or $100 spent there now is all that would be necessary to keep the wharf in order. It is the only wharf between Westport and Digby, on the Bay of Fundy shore, a distance of forty miles. I called the attention of the Department of Public Works to it. A small expenditure would save a large expenditure in the future.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With reference to the necessary repairs at these wharfs, should applications and reports in future be sent to the Marine Department?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not what I said.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is the result of what the hon. gentleman said.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it. I am asking the hon. gentleman a single question. It seems to me he is very snappish to-night.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I can tell the hon. gentleman I will not stand his impertinence or the impertinence of any other hon. gentleman. I will not submit to be lectured or cross-examined by him. If he wants to hear me speak, let him take his seat.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman is treating me with great discourtesy.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has remarked that before, and he can go on saying it as long as he chooses.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I confess I do not know what I have said to cause the hon. gentleman to talk in this way. I am asking a plain question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman wants an answer, let him take his seat. I will not discuss any subject in that fashion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman may take his own way—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And will.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But I think he will see, on reflection, that he is treating me with great discourtesy. I am asking the hon. gentleman a very easy and simple question. He says that a change has been made with respect to these wharfs, as between his department and the Public Works Department. I wish to know to which department applications for repairs should be sent in future?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Now, if the hon. gentleman will take his seat, I will answer him. Application may be made to either department, and the matter will be attended to by the department to which it belongs. If it is for a work not coming within the department to which the application is sent, the application will be referred to the other department and will be attended to.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 21st June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NICOLET CATHEDRAL.

Mr. LEDUC asked, Whether the Government have received any petition asking for the disallowance of a certain Act passed by the Legislature of Quebec, during its last session, whereby the town and parish municipalities of Nicolet are authorized to vote a grant of $8,000 each, for the purpose of aiding in the building of a cathedral church in the town of Nicolet? If such a petition has been received, has it been considered, and what is the intention of the Government in the matter?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. A petition on that subject was referred to my department yesterday. It has not been considered yet.

INSPECTOR OF CANALS.

Mr. McCARTHY asked, 1. Has an appointment been recently made of an official in connection with the canals, called the "Inspector of Canals"? 2. If so, when was the appointment made? Who was appointed, and at what salary? 3. What are the duties of the newly-appointed inspector of canals? By whom were the duties, up to the time of the appointment of the inspector, performed, and what was the salary of the person performing them? 4. Is such last-mentioned person still in the employment of the Government, and what duties does he now perform? 5. Is the office, to which the recent appointment was made, newly created?

Mr. HAGGART. No appointment has recently been made of an official in connection with the canals called the "Inspector of Canals." On the 11th of November, 1879, Mr. H. B. Witton was appointed by Order in Council "Inspector of Canals," a misnomer, his title should have been "Inspector of Canal Revenue."

EXPERIMENTAL FARM.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL asked, What are the names of the five employees at the Ottawa Experimental Farm who speak the French language? What positions do they hold? When were they appointed? What are their several salaries?

Mr. DALY. The names of the five employees at the Central Experimental Farm who speak the French language are, J. A. Guignard, J. L. A. McMurray, E. Pelletier, P. H. LeRosignol, and C. F. Whitley. J. A. Guignard acts as French correspondent, and also fills the position of assistant to the entomologist and botanist of the experimental farms. He was appointed in April, 1892, and receives a salary of $600 per annum. L. J. A. McMurray acts as assistant French correspondent, and assists in showing visitors over the farm. He was engaged in May, 1890, and receives a salary of $600 per annum. E. Pelletier acts also as assistant French correspondent, and takes charge of the mailing list of the French-speaking people in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, and receives a salary of $600 per annum. P. H. LeRosignol holds the position of assistant chemist. He was engaged in April, 1893, and receives a salary of $700 per annum. C. F. Whitley is engaged in office work and correspondence in connection with the dairy. He was engaged in June, 1891, and receives a salary of $800 per annum.

LOBSTER LICENSES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution :—

Resolved, That a fee of $25 shall be paid for a license to can, preserve or cure lobsters.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that, notwithstanding anything in chapter eight of the Statutes of 1884, intituled : "An Act to authorize certain subsidies and grants for and in respect of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned," the Governor in Council may, at the request of the Government of the province of Quebec, pay to the Treasurer of that province the principal of either or both of the subsidies which by the said Act the Governor in Council was authorized to grant, on the terms therein set forth, to the Government of the said province in consideration of their having constructed the railway from Quebec to Ottawa, that is to say : for the portion between Quebec and Montreal, one hundred and fifty-nine miles, a subsidy not exceeding six thousand dollars per mile, nor exceeding in the whole nine hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars, and for the portion between Montreal and Ottawa, one hundred and twenty miles, a subsidy not exceeding twelve thousand dollars per mile, nor exceeding in the whole one million four hundred and forty thousand dollars.

Motion agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE COMMON SCHOOL FUND.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should have said that the resolution just read and the one I am about to read have received the consent of the Crown. I beg to move that the House resolve itself into committee, to-morrow, to consider the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, so soon as an agreement is reached between the Governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec as to the manner in which the fund hereinafter referred to is to be divided and distributed between the said provinces, or as soon as the manner of the distribution thereof is determined by the arbitrators appointed under the authority of chapter six of the Statutes of 1891, should the question of the distribution thereof be referred to and determined by such arbitrators, pay to and divide between the said provinces, in the proportions agreed upon or determined by the arbitrators, and in full discharge of any further obligation or liability on the part of the Dominion, with respect to the said fund, the principal of a certain fund held by the Dominion in trust for the said provinces and known as "The Common School Fund"; and that such payment shall divest the Dominion of the said trust and of any further liability or obligation in any way connected therewith or relating thereto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DALY.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would like to ask when the return to the Order made on the 21st May will be brought down? I asked about this return on the 7th June, and I was promised that the return should be brought down at once. It is now the 21st June, just a month since the Order was made, and a fortnight since this promise was made me.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What return is that?

Mr. McCARTHY. With reference to the Woodstock matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will ask at once so as to have the return down to-morrow if possible.

SUPPLY—THE POSTMASTER AT GEORGETOWN.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I have a matter which I desire to bring before the House, a matter which I think deserves the attention of the House—I refer to the dismissal of the postmaster at Georgetown, Ont. I may say that on Monday I gave the Postmaster General notice that I would bring this matter forward, for I was anxious that he should have full time to consider the subject and prepare himself to deal with the statements I make. The postmaster at Georgetown, Mr. W. Goodnow, was appointed in 1871 under the Administration of the late Sir John A. Macdonald, the Postmaster General at that time being Hon. Alexander Campbell. I may say that he was assistant in that office three or four years before he was appointed postmaster. He held the position of postmaster continuously until last January, and during all that time he has discharged the duties of the office faithfully and has given them his whole undivided attention. According to the statement made by the present Postmaster General not a single complaint has been made against Mr. Goodnow's management of the office or his course in the discharge of his official duties. But, notwithstanding this record, Mr. Goodnow was dismissed from the office last January. It appears that his constant attention to the office brought on an illness from which he suffered to some extent. During his illness the duties of the office were performed by his daughter, who was assistant postmaster. It was further stated by the Postmaster General that during the time that Mr. Goodnow's daughter was in charge the duties of the office were satisfactorily and efficiently performed. The ground given for Mr. Goodnow's dismissal was that he did not give his personal attention to the office. After he was dismissed another person, Herbert B. Henderson, was appointed. He is, I understand, a young man of about eighteen years of age. He has not given his personal attention to the office or discharged the duties of the office since his appointment, but the duties have been discharged by the daughter of the late postmaster. Herbert B. Henderson is the son of the sitting member for Halton. I am not going to complain of his appointment on that ground. If the son of the sitting member is competent to discharge the duties and will discharge them satisfactorily, I have no complaint to make against him. What I am complaining of is that the postmaster, during an attack of illness, was dismissed in a most cruel and unjustifiable manner. Now, at the time of the dismissal, the people of Georgetown heard with uneasiness and dismay that this faithful servant, who had been for twenty-five years or more in the service of the public, was to be dismissed. They were all satisfied with the way the duties of the office were being performed by Mr. Goodnow's daughter, and they sent in a petition to the Postmaster General and to the member for the riding, Mr. Henderson, asking that this threatened dismissal should not be carried out:

PETITION TO THE POSTMASTER GENERAL OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA, OTTAWA, ONT.

Your petitioners having learned that there is some intention of making a change in the management of the post office in Georgetown, desire to respectfully and urgently request of you that no recommendation for such change be made by you at the present time. Your petitioners have pleasure in stating that Miss Goodnow, who has had charge during her father's sickness, has managed the office to the entire satisfaction of your petitioners and the citizens of Georgetown generally, and we cordially and earnestly request that a new appointment be delayed until it is found that with the present management the office is not being managed to the satisfaction and in the interest of the community. And your petitioners will ever pray. It may be here added that the physicians in attendance hold out strong hopes for Mr. Goodnow's complete and early recovery.

This is signed by 138 residents of Georgetown. I understand that had time been given, 1,500 would have signed the petition just as readily as these 138 signed it. Among those who have signed the petition are the following:—

THOS. RUSTON,	ANDREW MANN,
JNO. McDERMID,	JNO. MCKENZIE,
A. D. THOMPSON,	JNO. HARNER,
JAS. DRUMMOND,	JNO. G. HARLEY,
W. J. ROE, M.D.,	E. GARTLAY,
J. L. BENNETT,	JNO. GANE,
J. E. BELISLE,	THOS. CLARKE,
G. E. MORROW,	SAML. FLEVINS.

These are all the names I shall read to the House, but they are the names of prominent citizens of Georgetown who were opposed to this dismissal. Now, Sir, since the appointment of Herbert B. Henderson was made, the office has still remained in charge of the assistant postmaster. The Postmaster General told me in reply to a question the other day that the duties of the office were being satisfactorily performed, that Herbert B. Henderson did not give his personal attention to the office, although the late postmaster was dismissed because he did not give his duties his personal attention. It is half a year since the new postmaster was appointed, yet he has not given his personal attention to the office at all. Now, Mr. Speaker, it would appear that there is to be one rule for this office and another rule for other offices under the Postmaster General's administration. I cannot understand how this can be necessary in the public interest. I am one of those who believe that the Post Office Department should be managed in the interest of the people of this country. I believe that if there is one department above another that should be beyond political partisan bias, it is the Post Office Department. I believe that that department should be conducted for the people and by the people and quite independent of party bias. I have no objection to the Postmaster General appointing his friends to these offices, but I am far from being in favour of discharging a faithful and efficient public servant. He has spent more than a quarter of a century of his life in the service, during which time he has conscientiously discharged his duty; and during all those years, according to the statement of the Postmaster General, there was no complaint made against the postmaster at Georgetown. I think no higher tribute could be paid to a public servant than was paid by the Postmaster General to this man in that statement. Under these circumstances, as stated by the Postmaster General himself, when this faithful servant falls sick, after he has worn out his life in the service, when no complaint has been made against him, he is dismissed, because, in his illness, he is not able to give his personal attention to the office; and another is appointed to the place and kept in the position, although he does not either give his personal attention to the office. Then this officer has not been superannuated. No allowance has been made to him. He has a large family, and has not been engaged in any other business than that in connection with the Post Office Department. I do not know what provision he has made for his family. He is now about 60 years of age, and when a man has been in the public service as long as he has been, and has received such a character from the head of the department as this postmaster has received, I certainly think he should be entitled to superannuation when he is compelled to leave the office. Now, Sir, we find that this is not the way in which the Post Office Department is administered in other places. We find that in other places the offices remain vacant for years, the deputy performs the duties, and the Postmaster General does not complain, nor does he take immediate action. Why, I will refer the Postmaster General to the case of the Owen Sound post office. The postmaster of Owen Sound died, I think, a year and a half ago, and the deputy discharges the duties of that office yet. And no appointment has been made to that office, no postmaster gives personal attention to it, although that is the ground upon which this Mr. Goodnow has been dismissed from the office at Georgetown. Why is there one law for Owen Sound and another for Georgetown? Why can the post office at Owen Sound remain without a head for a year and a half, but when the head of the post office at Georgetown is incapable by reason of sickness to perform the duties of the office, and they are performed by his daughter, then he must be dismissed and degraded, as far as it is possible for the postal authorities to degrade him. There was a vacancy in the post office in the city of Ottawa. The postmaster died some years ago, and that office was kept vacant for many years. There was no postmaster here to give his personal attention to the office, but the duties were performed by a deputy, and well performed. As the Postmaster General stated, in speaking of the office at Owen Sound, the duties were efficiently performed by the deputy. It is right and proper for the deputy to perform the duties of the office when the postmaster is dead, but as soon as the postmaster falls sick on account of attention to his office, then his head is cut off and he is discharged. Take the case of the Galt post office. The postmaster in Galt, Mr. Cowan, at the last general election, I presume with the consent of the Postmaster General, resigned the office and went out and took part in the election campaign, went from place to place and after the election was over he was reinstated as postmaster of Galt, the deputy having discharged the work during his absence. Now, there is here a partisan display that I do not want to see in the Post Office Department; there is about this something that cannot be justified by the party, by the Government, or by anybody else. That an officer in the postal service who is drawing a large salary, because he chances to be a political partisan, should be allowed to resign in order that he may take part in the election campaign, and allow the post office to go without a head, to be managed by a deputy head, with no postmaster to give personal attention to the office, and a short time after the elections are over he is reinstated in the office—these are things that cannot be defended by hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, Mr. Speaker, in my own riding there are two or three post offices that are not kept by the postmasters at all; they are farmed out, as it were. The postmaster does not reside in the office, does not give his personal attention to the office, and has nothing to do with the office. I understand that one of them farmed out his office to the deputy and got so much a year. Is the postal service of this country to be degraded in this way? Are the post offices of this country to be given to partisans who are permitted to farm them out to others in order that they may derive some income from the office?

Mr. SPROULE. What office does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am referring to some post offices in my own riding.

Mr. SPROULE. To Hanover?

Mr. LANDERKIN. No, not to Hanover.

Mr. SPROULE. Where?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I did not mention any names.

Mr. SPROULE. Be good enough to mention them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. One of them was Holstein; it was without a head for many years. The other is at Neustadt; it has not been kept by the postmaster. No complaints were made; I never made a complaint. I thought that the assistants were just as competent as the postmasters to discharge the duties of the office. I did not like the principle; but still I did not complain, because I had not gone into the thing as carefully as I have since I heard of the Georgetown case. Now, it does seem strange that these things should be permitted in other places, and be forbidden in this one office. Now, take the Montreal custom-house. That is a very important port, and a great deal of business is done at that port. The custom-house officer died some few years ago, and if I mistake not, no officer has been appointed to that port since. The deputy manages the office, and I understand it is managed well. But there is no complaint against this deputy, and the office is not filled. There may be other circumstances in connection with this office that I am not acquainted with, and that prevent its being filled up to this time. I understand there are difficulties in connection with the filling of that office. There are political difficulties; there are differences between some of the friends at Montreal and some of the friends somewhere else. There are other differences there, and that is one of the reasons why the public interest has to stand in abeyance in order that these political differences may be settled and adjusted. Take the case of the Toronto custom-house. The custom-house officer died, and that office was dangled before the public for years. There were great and powerful commercial interests involved, but still that custom-house was left without a head, and was managed by a deputy head for years, and finally the office was given to a former member of this House, Mr. John Small. Now, I might go on multiplying instances where a different rule has been observed by the Post Office Department than was observed here. I have not complained much of the way in which the Post Office Department has been managed under the Postmaster General, in fact, usually it has been fairly well managed, but there is a departure now which I cannot support and sustain, although so long as I was satisfied that the department was being fairly well managed, I offered no opposition. But the time has arrived when I am obliged, in the public interest, and in the interest of humanity, to raise my voice against what I consider to be an improper course for the department to adopt. I do not think there is in the records of the Post Office Department—I do not know that I must blame the Postmaster General, because this action may have been forced upon him by his supporters in the riding—a more cruel and hard case than the present one. If there was a time when the Postmaster General should have been considerate it was when the postmaster at Georgetown became ill. So long as the public interest did not suffer, so long as the duties were faithfully discharged, the Postmaster General should have been sufficiently humane to this faithful public servant to have allowed him to remain in office. This case has a worse appearance when it is remembered that the duties of the office were faithfully discharged by the postmaster's daughter, who was acting postmaster. I appeal to the gallantry of the Postmaster General to do right in this matter yet. I am in a position to tell the hon. gentleman that the postmaster has recovered and is at home; I appeal to the hon. gentleman, the gallant head of the department, to right the wrong done, and in adopting this course he will be supported by the House and by the country. If the hon. gentleman was led unwittingly into this action by those who have the patronage of the riding, he should at once retrace his steps and right the wrong and restore the man who has been faithful and honest in the discharge of his duties, who has performed those duties efficiently for over a quarter of a century, and to use the hon. gentleman's own words, "there was no complaint made against the postmaster at Georgetown;" and a stronger testimonial could not be given to any official of a department. I beg to move in amendment:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"it appears by statements made by the Postmaster General on the floor of this House, that in the month of January last, Lafayette W. Goodnow, while absent through illness, was dismissed from the office of postmaster at Georgetown, Ontario, for the alleged reason that he did not give it his personal attention, while it was admitted by the Postmaster General that there was no complaint made against him, and that the duties of the office were satisfactorily performed by Ella Goodnow, his daughter, the assistant postmaster;

That it also appears by statements made by the Postmaster General in this House that Herbert B. Henderson was appointed to the said office, and it is admitted by the Postmaster General, that the said Herbert B. Henderson has not been in charge of said office since his appointment, and that the duties thereof continued to be discharged by the said Ella Goodnow, assistant postmaster;

That such dismissal was effected in the face of strong remonstrances contained in a petition very largely signed by leading citizens of Georgetown;

That in the opinion of the House this dismissal of the said Lafayette W. Goodnow, under the circumstances, was unjustifiable, harsh and cruel.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. A few nights ago the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, had the courtesy to inform me that, when the House is again moved into Committee of Supply, he would submit a motion in regard to the Georgetown post office. For that courtesy he extended to me, I feel obliged to thank him. However, the field covered by the hon. gentleman's remarks is very much broader than the one which he informed me would be covered by the remarks he intended to make in regard to that post office. I am prepared, however, to answer what has fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman by submitting to the House the facts; and as I understand these facts, the position taken by the department in regard to the case of Mr. Goodnow was a fair position to take. There was no hardship in it, and I consider the department were doing their duty in arriving, very unwillingly, at the conclusion that, from illness, the postmaster at that time was unable to continue to efficiently fill the office of postmaster, and they replaced him by another. The facts are as follows: In the month of February, 1893, the Postmaster General was informed that through illness the postmaster at Georgetown had become incompetent to fulfil the duties of his office. Information, moreover, was conveyed to the department that through a great affliction—and certainly no man felt more sympathy with the postmaster than I did, although I was not acquainted with him, but I was aware that he has been a faithful servant—he was interned in a lunatic asylum, in which he remained up to two or three months ago. What did the department do? The department did not act with any undue haste, and they did not submit at any time to pressure brought to bear on it by those who support the party in the riding; but the department waited over twelve months for the purpose of ascertaining whether the postmaster, Mr. Goodnow, would recover, and after that period had he been in a position to fulfil the duties which he had been forced to abandon, I have no doubt he would have been reinstated. After waiting for the long period of twelve months to see if he would recover from his illness, the department concluded that the likelihood of his recovery was very slim, and not until then was his successor appointed. In fact the department was informed that his recovery was not looked forward to with any hope. I am told that the Post Office Department should be conducted without any political bias, but I see no reason why those who support the Government and the Conservative party should be debarred from receiving employment in that department. When hon. gentlemen opposite happen to be in power, which is not frequent I must admit, they follow the recommendations of their supporters as we do under the party Government which obtains in this country. I can see no hardship in this case. There was no possible haste in the action I took. I was told that the postmaster, Mr. Goodnow, was not expected to recover and after the long delay of twelve months' waiting we decided to appoint his successor. The recommendations came to me in the ordinary course, and I appointed the gentleman who was recommended to me by those who advise me when such vacancies occur. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) thought he had made a strong point in trying to show that there was a difference between the case of the Georgetown post office and the case of the Owen Sound post office. There is no difference between them that I can see. In the case of the Georgetown post office we waited about thirteen months.

Mr. LANDERKIN. And about a year and a half in the other case.

Sir ADOLPHE ACRON. Well, if we were right in waiting thirteen months to see whether the recovery of Mr. Goodnow was possible before appointing his successor, there may be very excellent reasons, following up the same principle, why we should wait some months longer to appoint a successor in the Owen Sound post office.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You waited a year and a half and you knew there could be no recovery.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The similarity between the case of the Owen Sound post office and the Georgetown post office, and which similarity permitted the Postmaster General to act in both cases as he has acted, is, that the office is efficiently attended to in Owen Sound, and it was properly attended to also in Georgetown, and in consequence of the efficiency of the service not being interfered with we were able to delay the appointment of a postmaster for some time. The hon. gentleman has failed to show that there was any harshness on the part of the Post Office Department, either in the case of Georgetown or Owen Sound. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) complains that Mr. Goodnow was discharged, and I have given reasons why he was discharged; but his daughter whom the hon. gentleman has represented as being a very efficient officer—and all the reports that we received in the department tend to show that she is an efficient officer—was maintained in the position she previously occupied. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) wishes to complain of her not being promoted it is quite a different thing, but I take it that his sole reason of attack against the Government is because Mr. Goodnow was replaced by a substitute. The hon. gentleman also referred to the fact that although Mr. Goodnow had been an efficient public servant he had not been superannuated. Well, the hon. gentleman knows that under the law as it exists he could not be superannuated, because he was not a civil servant and had not contributed to the superannuation fund. The hon. gentleman also spoke of the postmaster at Galt having resigned during a campaign. I thought the hon. gentleman would have confined himself to Georgetown, and I am, therefore, not prepared to say under what circumstances the Galt postmaster resigned, but let me ask: How could a Postmaster General refuse to accept the resignation of a postmaster? If he wishes to retire there can be no objection to allowing him to resign. But, says the hon. gentleman, (Mr. Landerkin): he was reinstated after the campaign. Well, if the postmaster at Galt resigned, and if his office had not been filled, there is no reason in the world why he should not have been reinstated if he so desired.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," and I say that in the case of Georgetown: If Mr. Goodnow had not been replaced by a successor, and if Mr. Goodnow had sufficiently recovered to discharge the duties of his office, he would have been reinstated in the same manner as the postmaster at Galt was reinstated, if before a successor was appointed he had expressed that wish. I am not in a position to meet the charges made by the hon. gentleman with regard to his own riding, which I suppose he knows more about than any other member of the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not complain. I was quite as well satisfied with the assistant as I was with the postmaster. I make no complaint at all; only I am stating what was the fact.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was going to say that the fact that the hon. gentleman does not complain indicates that the trouble must be very small indeed.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is the same as the position at Georgetown: the deputy does the work, and I am satisfied.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That may be. The hon. gentleman states that these post offices are farmed out, and he follows that statement by another, that there is no complaint, but that everybody is perfectly happy and satisfied. If that be so, how could I know of the troubles the hon. gentleman complains of? If the people in the locality were satisfied, and if the hon. gentleman sitting on your left, who represents the riding, Mr. Speaker, and who never allows to pass an opportunity of criticising any supposed improper act on the part of the Government, has been sitting in his seat during the three years that I have been Postmaster General without uttering a word of criticism against what has taken place in his constituency, that fact convinces me that the trouble must have been very small indeed. But I am prepared to have this matter looked into. I will state to the hon. gentleman that I am not aware of any post offices being farmed out. If there are any, I am very glad indeed that the hon. gentleman makes the charge, for I shall have it investigated. It is certainly a state of affairs that should not be permitted, and I, for one, will not allow it to continue. The hon. gentleman has also spoken about the Montreal custom-house. But that matter is out of my beat, and I will leave it to the Department of Customs to take it up when it is brought before them. It was mentioned incidentally in this debate; but in regard to the cases which belong to my department, and which have been brought to the notice of the House by the hon. gentleman, I believe that the hon. gentleman has made out no case whatever; and I am quite certain that when the House is called upon to pronounce upon this motion, the conclusion of the House will be that the accusations made by him are baseless and futile.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, it may be quite correct, as the hon. gentleman says, that the custom-house of Montreal is not at present in his beat. I suppose he is waiting to discuss that question when the Controller of Customs returns from the arduous duties in which he is at present engaged, when no doubt the Postmaster General, the Solicitor General, and some other gentlemen connected with the city of Montreal will take sweet counsel together as to the best mode of promoting the Government interest in the matter of patronage. I would like to inquire in regard to two or three questions which the hon. gentleman touched upon. In the first place, what salary is allowed to Miss Goodnow, who, I understand, is at present appointed assistant postmaster or postmistress at Georgetown?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I stated the other day to the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) that the salary of Herbert D. Henderson was $800. I cannot say what the salary of the assistant postmaster is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know the salary of the postmaster. I should like to know, in the second place, whether that appointment comes from the Government, or whether it is entirely optional with the present postmaster to dispense with this lady's services?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes. She is not appointed by the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. She is wholly and entirely at the mercy of the present postmaster. This is a case in which, under certain conditions, I should be loath to criticise too severely the action of the Postmaster General if he had shown that the public service had suffered from the misfortune which had overtaken Mr. Goodnow. If he had stated that the duties of the office in the interim were not properly discharged, I do not know that we would have had more to say. But the Postmaster General, in replying to the inquiries of my hon. friend did not, as I understand, allege that the duties were not discharged. He based his action wholly and entirely on the fact that this unfortunate person's mind had become temporarily deranged. I have been informed, and I think my hon. friend stated, that although it is true that this gentleman was confined for a time in a lunatic asylum, he had since recovered and was at this moment in perfect possession of his faculties. Now, bearing in mind the fact that this office was apparently the sole dependence of this man and his family, that it was an office of some considerable value, aggregating in salary and other allowances about $1,000 a year, certainly $800 or $900, and that there was no provision possible to be made under the Superannuation Act for this man, who has now, I believe, attained an age of upwards of sixty years, I must say that I think it reflects some discredit on the member for the county that in these circumstances he should have used his influence first of all to induce the Postmaster General to dismiss this man—and I do the Postmaster General the justice to say that I believe that but for pressure which was placed upon him by the member for the county he would not have done it; that after having done that he should then have appointed his own son, who, I understand, to be a lad of about eighteen years of age, to this somewhat important office; that this person is not at present, and has not been for a considerable space of time, in attendance in the office at all; and that the person who was formerly discharging the duties of the office as assistant postmaster, Miss Goodnow, is still continuing to discharge them—not, I fear, from any particular forbearing disposition on the part of the new appointee, but simply because there is a very strong and general feeling of indignation in the neighbourhood, shared by members of both political parties, against the somewhat harsh treatment which appears to have been meted out to this public officer. I must say that the hon. gentleman was wise under the circumstances in making no allusion to the circumstances under which Mr. Henderson, junior, was appointed. I am not disposed to cavil at the policy of the hon. gentleman, when a vacancy occurs, in the ordinary course of nature, in giving the appointment to his own friends, or in consulting the representative of the riding to which the appointment belongs; but I do say it is a thing not calculated to increase the respect of the public for their representatives in this House, and not at all calculated to do credit to the public service, that nobody could be found in that riding to fill this somewhat responsible office except a lad of eighteen years of age, a son of the member for the county; and I think the hon. Postmaster General would have better consulted the interests of his party—if that was the object he had—and certainly the interests of the public service, had he forborne to dismiss Mr. Goodnow, and particularly had he forborne to appoint this mere lad, and that a son of the member for the county, to the place of the man who lost it under the circumstances described. As to the other matters to which my hon. friend has alluded, I am not going to enter into them in detail, but will say this, that I hold it a very extraordinary proceeding indeed that the hon. gentleman or his predecessor, whichever is responsible, should be a party to a public official resigning his office for the purpose of taking part in a general election, as was done by Mr. Cowan, and then, on the close of the election, re-appointing him. Of course, we know well that no such resignation would have been put in the hands of the hon. gentleman or his predecessor unless there had been a perfect understanding as to what would happen, once the exigencies of the election were over. But wholly apart from that, I repeat that the appointment of a very young man, considerably under age, the reputed son of a representative of the county, to this office, under all these circumstances, reflects no credit on the Administration, and I am very sorry that the Postmaster General should have been a party to the transaction.

Mr. SCRIVER. This matter seems to me in a nutshell, and after the clear and effective manner in which the various points connected with it have been put by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, very little remains to be said. I would have taken no part in the debate but for the fact that I myself once filled the position of assistant postmaster in the place where I lived, for many years, and had an opportunity of becoming conversant with the course generally pursued by the gentleman filling the position of Postmaster General in the Government of the day; and I must say that that course has been generally one of great consideration and forbearance. This particular course of the dismissal of Mr. Goodnow seems to have been an exception to that generally pursued by the Postmaster General of the Dominion. I have known many instances where the nominal postmaster was unable to perform the duties of the office, but where some of his family under age, was competent to discharge them and did discharge them with the tacit consent of the department. In the present instance, the Postmaster General has admitted that the duties of the office were satisfactorily performed by the incumbent. I may say that I have known instances where the office was practically vacant for some years through the nominal postmaster being unable, owing to disease, physical or mental, to do the work, and yet where the duties were satisfactorily performed by a deputy, generally a member of his own family, and the Postmaster General refrained from taking the course which has been taken in this instance. And I cannot forbear from saying that in this case the action of the Postmaster General in appointing a young man under age to the office, who is not discharging the duties, and who, worse than that, is an intimate relation of a member of this House, is one that should be condemned. I think I may appeal to the sense of propriety of every member of this House in saying that the action of a member of this House—the supposed action, because we may fairly suppose it was taken at his instance—in procuring the dismissal of this sick man and the appointment of his son, a youth under age, is one that none of us can approve of.

Meteorological Service..... $62,900

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman say what has been done in this service, whether any extension had been made in the area, and generally what results have been arrived at for the amount expended.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The service has been gradually extended, but the chief extension perhaps is the connection made a year or two ago with Bermuda. I think Edmonton is the furthest north-western station, north of parallels 50 and 52. There have been no very radical changes since last year, and the vote is the same as last year. From north of 52 down is the area covered. The hon. gentleman will remember that though we have an enormous area to cover, the expenditure on that service in the United States is in the vicinity of half a million dollars, as compared with ours.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you do anything in the region of Labrador?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We have no station in that quarter at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you any in Hudson Bay?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes. York Factory is one.

Mr. EDGAR. In the telegraphic meteorological reports published daily in Toronto, from different parts of Canada, I never see Ottawa.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They do not take in Ottawa City, but there is a report from Ottawa Valley.

Mr. EDGAR. While the statements given in the newspapers show the temperature in Winnipeg, Montreal, Quebec, Toronto and other places, Ottawa is not given. Particularly for some of us who spend a portion of our time here, it is a matter of interest to know what is the temperature. I do not see why the capital should not be included.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. I fancy—though it may be a dangerous thing to say it—that there is some want of enterprise on the part of the newspapers here. I am satisfied that the director will furnish statements to the newspapers including the temperature at Ottawa if they so desire.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose that the hon. gentleman finds it difficult enough with the money at his disposal to secure all the reports he desires. But I fancy that our money would be better spent, as far as possible, in the outlying districts and for this reason: Along the chain of the great lakes, where we have some stations, the American meteorological service is, I believe, tolerably accurate and tolerably complete, and, in the nature of the case, will give us almost all the information we require. Whereas stations in distant parts not now covered—north beyond latitude 52, in Labrador and in the Hudson's Bay basin—would supply us with very valuable data.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman who spoke previously, Mr. Edgar, referred particularly, I believe, to a subject involving no expense—the publications of bulletins in the local press. That matter will have attention. As to the suggestion made by the last speaker, Sir Richard Cartwright, I think there is a good deal in it. But while our new expenditure is largely in the western or new territories, the Canadian lake marine hold very strong opinions—as also do the American's lake marine—as to the respective value of the probabilities issued at Washington and Toronto. It is only fair to our staff to say that with only half the facilities possessed by their neighbours they issue probabilities which are regarded as more to be depended upon than those issued from Washington. For instance, when a lake captain reaches Buffalo he asks for the Canadian probabilities instead of the American, because they have been found, so far as the lakes are concerned, more reliable than those published from Washington.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad to hear that. Of course it is very much to the credit of our service that our reports should be more accurate. But the hon. gentleman will see that, given equally good reports on both sides, the Americans might serve us and we might serve them better by extending our observations northwards.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear. West and north.

Mr. BOWERS. So far as the probabilities for the Maritime Provinces are concerned, we find almost invariably that the American probabilities suit us better than those issued by the Canadian signal service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have not heard that in Nova Scotia.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That may be for the Bay of Fundy.

Mr. EDGAR. I have here a copy of the bulletin issued. I think it is uniform in the various newspapers. The temperature is given as at Calgary, Battleford, Edmonton, Prince Albert, Qu'Appelle, Winnipeg, Port Arthur, Toronto, Kingston, Montreal, Quebec and Halifax—but not Ottawa.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will see about that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see that the director of the meteorological service has suggested in his report to the Minister the desirability of obtaining data with respect to the climatology of the Dominion, and I would like to know whether he has made up his mind to adopt the suggestion, or whether he approves of it?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I take a great deal of interest in that subject. I am very sorry to say the Government has not seen its way to provide the necessary funds. The amount we require is not very large. I think that for $1,500 a year for two or three years, an immense amount of material which we already have in the office at Toronto could be used with great benefit to the country. But with our staff and with our present vote we cannot detach the men to work the material there. The subject is still under consideration, and I am not in a position to undertake the work.

Hydrographic Surveys, including survey Georgian Bay and resurvey Island of Anticosti.. $16,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Strike out "and re-survey Island of Anticosti;"

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

that is a mistake copied from the Estimates of last year.

Mr. EDGAR. The Georgian Bay survey goes on, I suppose?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes; it will be completed this year.

Marine Hospitals in the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia..... $35,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In taking a vote in this fashion I presume the Minister practically takes the distribution of the money into his own hands, seeing that no details are given. He might, if he chose, though of course he would not, spend the whole sum in Quebec or Prince Edward Island.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This vote just enables us and no more to maintain the existing hospitals.

Mr. BOWERS. The hon. Minister has closed the St. John hospital. Does he propose to close any of the others?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Under like circumstances I should be anxious to close the other hospitals. The public hospitals of the cities of St. John, Que., Charlottetown and Halifax are magnificent institutions and have facilities and equipment that we would not be expected to have for the number of men we have in our hospital. By joining our work with theirs they are really able to do better than before, and patients for whom we pay get the benefit. The management of these public hospitals is, of course, a matter of great pride to the citizens of these places, and many people give to their supervision much time and close attention, so as to make sure that they are well managed and carried on with the greatest efficiency. Our experience has been largely in favour of the policy of the department in maintaining hospitals only where we cannot get the benefit of these public hospitals. So that in Montreal, Quebec, St. John, Halifax and Charlottetown we maintain no hospitals, but pay a per diem rate to the public hospital.

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to the case of the gentleman who had charge of the St. John hospital. He is a young man who has grown up from childhood in familiarity in the work of these hospitals, his father having had charge of the hospital in St. John before him. I should suppose the Government would try to find this young man a situation, having discharged him from his office by closing the hospital. As he is a very nice man, with an education suitable for almost any situation, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, if he has any situation vacant of any kind, that he appoint this man to fill it. I would ask the hon. Minister how the revenue compares with the expenditure?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will find a full statement for all the years in the report.

Mr. LAURIER. Could the hon. gentleman tell me if there was a hospital up to a recent date, at Lake St. John? Perhaps it was not under his department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not under the department.

Shipwrecked and distressed seamen..... $3,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In this matter I notice that, as usual, a good deal was expended by the English Board of Trade. Is that done in connection with our commissioner?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No. Ever since 1867, under a statute which was amended this year in order to conform with the practice since 1867, which was regulated by Order in Council, whenever a British consul abroad is satisfied that any Canadian seaman who has been domiciled for twelve months in Canada, is in distress and unable to get away, he is authorized to provide him with the necessary means to get home. For instance, if he cannot get him shipped, or if the seaman is sick and unable to go, the consul looks after him. Vouchers are prepared in due form and sent to the Board of Trade, and we pay the Board of Trade. In that way we have the services of all the British consuls over the world.

Steamboat Inspection..... $26,000

Mr. FLINT. In the returns in the Auditor General's Report which are charged under this item, I see quite a sum for legal expenses. Perhaps the Minister will explain some of the larger items?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Those are prosecutions for penalties for violating the Act. The fees greatly exceed all the expenses.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery officers, &c., Ontario... $22,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to these matters, there is one thing I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister as regards a part of Lake Ontario. We have been plagued for a considerable time there by the appearance of a multitude of dead fish. Whether they are the product of the fish hatcheries, I do not know, but they are credited to them, at any rate. About this time every year a very large number of small dead fish are found floating about all over the lake. I think they call them shad.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They call them Seth Green shad. He was a fish-culturist.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could you have him hanged?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am afraid our jurisdiction does not go through his country. He is dead now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But his soul keeps marching on with the fish.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In hot weather they become a most intolerable nuisance, and I should imagine must be more or less injurious to other fish. I should think any fish that devoured them would be thoroughly unfit for human food. I have seen them myself along the coast in the vicinity of Kingston for a distance of 20 or 30 miles, heaped up in considerable quantities, in some places I should think to a depth of a foot or two. The effluvia from them is something terrible in certain seasons. But if they are hatched on the American side, I suppose the hon. gentleman is powerless to prevent it.

Mr. EDGAR. Do they grow up?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They all die young. My information is that they reach the size of about three or four inches and then die.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps they are salt-water fish.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The mistake was in introducing salt-water fish into water that is not suitable for them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you remonstrated with the American authorities?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They have stopped producing them, but the fish are keeping up a reproduction on their own account.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery overseers, &c., for Nova Scotia $20,000

Mr. FLINT. What is the cause of the decrease in the salaries and disbursements?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We had too much before. We have really a better supervision to-day and a better method of watching the expenditure, than we have had for some years back, and I thought it unnecessary to take more than my officers advised would be necessary, according to the expenditure of the previous year. We want it specially in connection with the guardian system. I have been doing a great deal in getting rid of those officers who held positions for a nominal salary, running from $10 to $20 a year. They never did anything and never pretended to do anything, and it was a farce to keep them. But where we have got rid of them, we have put on guardians during the season the fish are running.

Mr. FLINT. Could the Minister give me a statement of the amount of fines paid to the Government from the services of the fishery overseers in Nova Scotia?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I cannot tell by provinces. We collected about $95,000 last year in fines and license fees over Canada.

Mr. FLINT. I would like the hon. Minister to give me the figures as regards Nova Scotia, if it is not too much trouble.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have not got them under my hand. Of course we have them on record.

Mr. FLINT. I have an impression from what I have heard that it amounted to a considerable amount. In view of the importance and value of the services given by the fishery inspectors—I am only speaking of those I know—increased zeal and faithfulness might be secured if the Minister could see his way to grant them additional compensation. The three officers in Nova Scotia receive $500 a year each, and while it may seem a little out of place for an hon. member on this side of the House, where the expenditures are criticised very closely from time to time, to suggest that increased remuneration might be given, yet we would be doing only justice to these officers who are receiving less than men of similar competency and exercising like responsibility are receiving, and the Government should endeavour, if possible, to pay them in a larger degree the value of the services and the time given by them. Where an officer devotes his whole time to the work, and spends more hours on it than does an ordinary officer in the service of the Government, the compensation should be increased. I happen to know a great deal in regard to the labours of the officials, and I am aware that their labours resulted in developing particularly the lobster fishing during the last year or two, and if anything I could say would lead the Minister to increase the amounts paid to these officers, no doubt the Minister would be supported by the judgment of the House and the country. I trust this matter will be taken into consideration by the Government, and favourably dealt with.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am glad to hear the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) so speak of the officers, who usually have not received much sympathy from the community where they are active, and who, perhaps, have not been treated very liberal by Parliament. Many good officers have been injured by the fact that a large number of men are drones, and do nothing to earn their salaries; but I know a good many efficient officers throughout Canada, and I am only surprised that so many remain in office in view of the small salary paid. The officer in the district with which the hon. gentleman is familiar is a gentleman who sat in this House representing Yarmouth, and he is a very able and intelligent man of affairs, and of over average ability. He has been an active, energetic officer, and yet he receives a small salary. I know a great many officers in the west who are also doing splendid work, and work of great importance at the present time. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman express his opinion that those officers who do good, honest work should be well paid.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am very glad to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), in so far as they apply to officers who endeavour efficiently and properly to discharge their duties. I venture to say, if my words may reach any officer in the whole of the Dominion, that any one who does efficiently discharge his duties will receive consideration from this side of the House, irrespective of any political feelings whatever. But the hon. members are aware that our experience has been that a very large number of so-called fishery officers were satisfied with receiving paltry salaries from $10 to $40, and they proved more of a hindrance to the protection of the fisheries than if they had not been appointed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite agree with you.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The idea appeared to prevail among many of them that the less work they did and the less active they were in enforcing the penalties of the Act, the more popular they would be with the people. It is well that the officers should get rid of that idea. I know that some of the officers of the department are zealous in their attempts to secure convictions for breaking the law. It is well for those officers to understand that the opinion on both sides of the House is strongly in favour of men who will give their moral and other support to officers who enforce the law zealously and impartially, while both sides will frown down any attempt to allow transgressors to go free. Complaints exist—I will not say what ground there is for making them—that fishery officers shut their eyes very closely when they know that men engaged in lobster packing, for example, are breaking the law, and they avoid going to that section; but if they hear that the law is being violated by a man of different political complexion, they watch him. I am glad to hear that the department expects these officers to do their duty irrespective of political or any other consideration, and the officers must understand that the prosecution of offenders of the Fisheries Act is one of the most important matters in the Maritime Provinces, and if they faithfully and efficiently discharge their duties irrespective of consequences they will be backed up by both sides of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am very glad to hear that statement, and I agree with every word of it.

Mr. BOWERS. I can certify to the favourable report made by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) in regard to the fishery officer in his district, Mr. Kinney, who has had charge of the fisheries in Digby County also, but I do not believe that the officer in Halifax County attends strictly to his duty, because I saw lobster traps pulled in many harbours to the eastward of Halifax during the close season last fall, and I was told in several places that they seldom saw the overseer there, and that he did not mind whether they caught lobsters or not. I desire to ask the Minister why he appointed as fishery overseer for Digby a lawyer, worth from $50,000 to $75,000, who, according to the public view, was not suited to the position? He is an able lawyer, and may make a good overseer, but it would be naturally supposed that one more acquainted with the fisheries of the county would have filled the position better. I am glad to know that the Minister has replaced Mr. Collins, who was fishery overseer at West Port, as I can certify to his impartiality and fairness in guarding the fisheries of his district.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have no hesitation in telling the hon. member (Mr. Bowers) that I considered myself as the head of the department, extraordinarily lucky in being able to secure the services of the gentleman to whom he has referred. That gentleman is a 'Queen's Counsel, and is thoroughly independent financially. He takes an intense interest in the subject of the fisheries, and his name was brought to me with the statement that he was ready to take charge of the fisheries at Digby and carry out the work on the principles we have been discussing this afternoon. It is only lately that he went into the service, and I think that we are very lucky in having his services. The hon. gentleman testified not only to his independence, but as to his ability, and of course while he is an officer of the department he has to carry out instructions and enforce the Fisheries Act. I think myself that we can expect better things in that respect from a man, as he says, learned in the law.

Mr. FRASER. While I have not a word to say against that gentleman, yet I am very doubtful that a professional man is the best for a fishery officer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He is a good all round man, I thought.

Mr. FRASER. There are some of them good all round men, but in the carrying out of the law you require firmness, and you require the absence of any inducement to carry out the law in your own interests. Besides that, you must have a man who knows all about fishing. Is the Minister going to repeal the regulations about net raising between nine o'clock in the morning and five o'clock in the afternoon? It was not put into operation the last two terms.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think that regulation will be put into operation.

Mr. FRASER. I am very glad to hear it, because it will be a very sensible move. I told the hon. Minister at the time—not in a threatening way, so far as he was concerned—that really I would not be responsible for the officers if that law were put into operation. A law must be grounded on common sense, and with some regard to the district in which it is in force. There are officers just of the kind mentioned by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), and while I am not going to make any complaint in public, I would be very glad, at the leisure of the Minister, to give him the name of one of his own officers whom I think has more than once connived at the violation of the law, in his own interest.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows if I get evidence of that, the officer will not remain long in the service.

Mr. FRASER. I do not wish to make a matter of this kind a party question, and the gentleman happens to be in my own riding. I thoroughly appreciate what was said that these officers should be well paid. I believe that in order to have a good work done you must give fair pay.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Pay the men who do their duty well.

Mr. FRASER. Yes, if you give them fair pay, you can and should expect good work. But none of those men should be permitted as they have been permitted in Nova Scotia, to walk out of their office to run an election, and then return to their office again. That was done in the case of Yarmouth, and it is a most unseemly proceeding. No officer can do his work as impartially afterwards who runs an election and returns to his office. That is not the way to properly conduct the civil service. The gentleman who opposed me, and I have nothing to say against him, was in the employ of the Government, and after the election he got back to office again. A man cannot discharge his duties so well after such a thing as that, and there is not the same confidence in the officer. It is impossible, for instance, that a fishery overseer who has been a candidate in an election, who has had strong friends to support him, and strong opponents against him, can apply the law as faithfully and impartially as if he had not been in a political contest. Well, as we are admiring each other all round, I may say that while the Minister of Marine and Fisheries errs and errs very often, his errors of judgment are against what he considers not to be right. If while he is Minister of Marine, he will insist that no man who resigns office to run an election shall return to office again, he will introduce a great improvement in the services of the department. I think the Minister has made an improvement in the method of appointing fishery officers, and in the number he has appointed. There was a time when the fishery business in Nova Scotia was a burdensome institution. There were officers every ten or five miles along the river, and the work was not as well done as it is now. I think also there is an improvement in the keeping of the law in Nova Scotia. The Minister will bear me out when I say, that when that law first came into operation it was exceedingly unpopular, and it took the people some time to understand it. The officials that were then appointed were not the best men in the world to make the people both understand and respect the law. I believe now that both the officials and the people understand the law better, and if these conditions are carried out in future as they have been for the last year or two, the law will be better respected. If the law is well executed, I will never say a word against paying the officer as fair a rate for doing his work as his talents would get for him anywhere. I do not believe that the country has any right to expect the services of any man, if he is faithful and non-partisan, at a less rate than his talents and abilities would command in the open markets of the world. Although there is an idea to the contrary, I wish to be put on record as not sharing in it. I think the country should pay a good officer just as well as he would be paid in any other occupation in life.

Mr. KENNY. I have not had the advantage of hearing all the speech of my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) but I did hear that portion of it in which he stated that he was opposed, in the county of Guysboro', by a gentleman who had some association with the public service of Canada. If there is any gentleman in this Dominion who occupied an enviable position at that general election it was my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser), because he had the certainty that if he did not succeed in winning the county of Guysboro' he would have a seat in the Legislative Council of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. FRASER. My history is against it. I resigned from the Legislative Council before, to run for the Local House. I did not go back and would not go back, and the same thing would have happened last time.

Mr. KENNY. I think the hon. gentleman went there twice.

Mr. FRASER. I ran in 1878, and did not go back for six or eight years, until there were two new Governments, in fact. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kenny) is wrong.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) could not get there sooner than the opportunity offered. The same facilities were offered to other hon. gentlemen, who opposed the Conservative interests in the province of Nova Scotia. There was a certainty that if he was defeated there would be a place in the Legislative Council of the province available and open for him. Therefore my hon. friend must be pardoned if he diverges from the particular vote under the consideration of the committee to find fault with the Government, because in the election a gentleman opposed him who at some previous time had some connection with the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FRASER.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I must say that I cannot see the pertinence of the hon. gentleman's remarks at all. The hon. member for Guysboro' submitted to the House that it was not a good thing to have inspectors of fisheries resign their office just before an election, run in a county, and after being defeated resume their office again.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman did not say that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood him to say that the man who ran against him had been an inspector in the province of Nova Scotia.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He had only been in the service casually.

Mr. FRASER. He had been in it for months and years, living in this city.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was not in my department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is quite certain that he was in the service, that he resigned to run against my hon. friend, and that after he ran and was defeated he was reappointed to office. If the House approves of that, well and good; but my hon. friend simply says that an officer cannot under those circumstances enjoy the confidence of the public as he would otherwise. Whatever he did would be attributed to improper motives. I do not think myself that it is desirable to hold out inducements to these gentlemen to become candidates in elections. But what that has to do with my hon. friend being in the Legislative Council, being elected to this House, and then going back to the Legislative Council, I fail to see. He is not a public officer with public duties to discharge like an inspector of fisheries.

Mr. FRASER. I cannot allow the hon. member for Halifax to make a statement about myself personally without replying. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the fact of my being in the Legislative Council would prevent me acting independently, he is very much mistaken. In 1878 I had the honour to be called to the Legislative Council and the Government of Nova Scotia. I resigned and ran for the Local House, and was defeated. I did not go back. Several years after that Mr. Fielding asked me to become a member of his Government, which I did. I resigned and ran for this House. Had I been defeated I would not have gone back to the Legislative Council. So that the remark of the hon. member for Halifax is simply gratuitous, and was no reply to the statement I made. I admit that both members of the Legislative Councils of the provinces and members of the Dominion Senate resign in order to run in elections, and in the event of being defeated go back again.

But is that any reason why the same thing should be done by officials? Certainly not. Even if I had in my pocket a letter offering me a seat in the Legislative Council, would that be an answer to the statement that officials leave their offices and run for Parliament, and when defeated are reappointed again? Most certainly not. The point I wanted to make was that no official in the public service, who is paid by the public and whose duty is to execute the law, is in as good a position to serve the public after having run in an election as he was before; and when the hon. gentleman says I find fault, because I could not go back to the Legislative Council, he is simply making a statement which is gratuitous and which is not true.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery overseers of Prince Edward Island..... $4,900

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In Prince Edward Island the hon. Minister has Mr. Hackett, the inspector, and two overseers, one of whom, Michael McCormick, is alleged to have jurisdiction over the whole Island, and the other over one county.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That occurs in this way. Whenever authority is now given to a fishery officer to act as a magistrate in his district, instead of making the order of a limited character, limiting his duties to the boundaries to which they ordinarily are confined, we find it convenient to give him a wider jurisdiction, because he is often sent beyond the bounds of his ordinary jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose the hon. gentleman knows how that works. I never heard of Mr. McCormick being out of his county, nor even out of his village, which I understand is Souris. I know nothing against these men; but I may state that last August, while I was taking a drive, a friend at whose house I was staying called my attention to the fact that there were two boats hauling up lobsters. I said "That is infamous; why don't you complain?" He said, "I cannot, because my neighbour is more or less interested in the fisheries." I took occasion to let the officials know of the circumstance, and I believe that Capt. Spence ran his boat through them and broke them up. I do not want to complain of the inspector, but he does not go around the coast and look after matters as I think he ought to do.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this to my attention. I will have it thoroughly looked into.

Salaries and disbursements of fishery overseers, &c., British Columbia..... $10,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Are you applying the same rule to British Columbia as you are in the Maritime Provinces—lessening the number?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Building and maintenance of fish-breeding establishments and lobster hatcheries..... $50,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was looking over the report of Mr. Wilmot on this subject, which is very interesting and very important; but I cannot gather from it whether the department has yet reached a thorough conclusion as to the effect of the expenditures which we are making on fish hatcheries. After calling attention to the general progress that has been made, Mr. Wilmot says:

The numerous applications also which have been received from public corporations and individuals for additional hatcheries to be built at various points, all run in the same line as evidences of the popular feeling which exists for increasing the present number of fish-cultural institutions throughout the country.

That is not the point, however. I dare say there may be a certain amount of popular feeling in this locality and that locality to have a fish hatchery built, and public money expended; we find a great deal of public feeling in favour of the outlay of public money; but what we are all seriously interested in is the real scientific question underlying it: does the establishment of these hatcheries really and substantially increase the quantity of fish taken? I know it is a matter on which a conclusion can be reached only by a careful study of all the facts, and I would like to know if the Minister has made that study, and what conclusion he has arrived at.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I take this position as to fish culture. All the leading countries in the world are going in for it more extensively every year; and while we were really the pioneers and are very much interested in the matter, we are falling behind in the amount of work done. Beyond question there is a practical benefit to be got out of this fish hatchery business if properly attended to. I have reason to know that our fish hatcheries have not been sufficiently inspected, the men have not been sufficiently kept up to their work, and a good deal of room for improvement was found last year. There are abundant proofs, however, of the benefit of these hatcheries. Take, for example, the Tobique River, in New Brunswick. The salmon in that river would not take the fly, and the fry of the Restigouche salmon, which rise to the fly, were introduced into it. Since then it has furnished magnificent sport, and the fish caught are the Restigouche salmon. Then we have introduced whitefish into waters where none were found before; and while it is impossible to demonstrate exactly the effect of the introduction of quantities of fry into waters where fish of the same species existed before, still we know that in the waters where none of these fish were, the experiment has proved successful. The increase in this vote is in consequence of the hatchery built at Selkirk, Man.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see any notice of this work in the Auditor General's Report in the usual place.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It must be there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose so, but it is not in the place where it ought to be, that is, between fisheries and fishery protection service.

Mr. FRASER. Can the hon. Minister say what the results of the lobster hatchery has been at Pictou ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A great success in the numbers hatched out, but so far we have not had time to notice the effect on the fishery, because the lobster is put in when very small, and it will be a couple of years before we can tell.

Mr. FRASER. Has this experiment been found successful elsewhere ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Newfoundland has gone into the work very thoroughly, and at Whitehall, Mass., an enormous amount of money has been spent. Those two countries and Canada are the only countries where the experiment has been tried with regard to lobsters. Newfoundland was in the field before us, and Mr. Neilson reports that the results there have exceeded his expectations. But as the experiment was only started a couple of years ago, it will take some years before the experiment can be proved beyond doubt successful.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I may say that in prosecuting cod breeding in Newfoundland, places that were quite depleted years ago have now become full of fish again. Does the Minister contemplate doing anything in the way of a cod hatchery ? That seems to have been quite a success in Newfoundland. So far as the breeding of lobsters is concerned, that has been a success up to this time. Hundreds of millions of young lobsters have been hatched out, quite sufficient to replenish the waters, provided they were not preyed upon by something else. In a year or two Newfoundland ought to be able to demonstrate whether the experiment will ultimately prove a success or not. I am glad that the hon. gentleman has stated that success has attended the hatchery at Pictou. Would he tell us whether he contemplates giving any attention to a hatchery for cod ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am having the most rigid examination made of the operation of each of these hatcheries, and will be able with this vote to extend operations. But before extending the hatchery system, I wish to be in a position to lay before the Government and Parliament a comprehensive scheme based upon an exact and reliable statement as to the net result of all these hatcheries. As regards the question of the hon. gentleman concerning codfish hatcheries, that would involve certain expenditure, not perhaps very large, because many of these buildings might be used—one or two, at any rate, down by the sea—for this purpose. But until I have ascertained the general results, I would not like to say anything.

Mr. SCRIVER. I hope that the study the hon. gentleman promised he is going to make, and which I am very glad he intends making, will extend beyond the mere operations of the hatcheries. I do not think there is any great difficulty in getting any great quantity of fry, but what I would like to have is some evidence that these fry come to something. That is the important question. We have been experimenting a good many years and expending a good deal of money, and I suppose we have a very capable gentleman conducting the supervision of our hatcheries, but what I would like to be satisfied of is that there has been any great success attending the distribution of these fry in the various waters. I have quite frequently conversed with men in the state of New York who have given a good deal of attention to the subject, and have found great differences of opinion among them as to the success or otherwise which has attended the extensive efforts and large expenditure in that state in the matter of fish culture. When that great enthusiast, Mr. Seth Green, was at the head of this branch of industry in the United States, we know that his predictions of success were very wide and enthusiastic; but as to the results, in the lakes bordering on that part of the country where I live, I mean the lakes in the Adirondack mountains which have been replenished time and again from the fish hatcheries in various parts of the state—and in which the conditions are exceedingly favourable—at least there are great differences of opinion among the fishermen themselves. I trust that the Minister will take all pains possible to ascertain what results have followed the placing of fry from these hatcheries in the state of New York.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the county I have the honour to represent we have a lake known as Charleston Lake. At the village of Athens an anglers' association was formed to oversee the lake to a certain extent. There is no netting allowed and has not been for some years. The lake is some eighty or ninety miles in circumference, and deep. Five or six years ago we commenced putting sal-
