House of Commons Debates

FOURTH SESSION—SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 28th May, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

THÉOTIME BLANCHARD, Esquire, member for the Electoral District of Gloucester, N.B., introduced by Sir John Thompson and Hon. Mr. Costigan.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 77) to incorporate the Dominion Gas and Electric Company.—(Mr. Boyd.)

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 66) to empower the Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Company to issue debentures, and for other purposes.—(Mr. Lowell.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 109) for the relief of Joshua Nicholas Filman.—(Mr. McKay.)

Bill (No. 114) to incorporate the Colonial Mutual Life Association.—(Mr. McKay.)

GOVERNMENT COAL AT SOREL.

Mr. BRUNEAU asked, Who is authorized, under the Department of Public Works, at Sorel, to lend or sell coal belonging to the Government? Have the Government been informed, and if so, in what manner, that coal has been so lent or sold to a merchant of Sorel? Has the coal been paid for or returned? What is the quantity so lent or sold?

Mr. HAGGART. In the absence of the Minister of Public Works, I have to say that no coal has ever been loaned or sold to coal merchants at Sorel by any officer in charge there or any other person.

FISHERY OVERSEER FOR VERCHERES.

Mr. BRUNEAU asked, Whether a petition, signed by many inhabitants of the parish of Contrecoeur, was not forwarded to the Government recommending the appointment of Mr. Cléophas Giguère, of the said parish, as fishery overseer for the county of Verchères? If so, when was the said petition transmitted to the Government? Who has been appointed to fill that position? What is the date of the appointment? Does the person so appointed reside within the limits of the territory placed under his supervision?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A petition purporting to be signed by residents of Contrecoeur, recommending the appointment of Mr. Cléophas Giguère as fishery overseer for the county of Verchères, was received at the Department of Marine and Fisheries on the 3rd December, 1892. Mr. Gédéon Magnan was appointed to fill the position on the 16th of February, 1893. He resides within the limits of his division. I may add that a second petition urging the appointment of Mr. Giguère was transmitted on the 2nd March, 1893.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT LOUISBURG.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (for Mr. Forbes) asked. Is the Government aware that P. O'Toole, the collector of customs at Louisburg, N.S., is conducting a general store and supply business at that place and transacts the duties of collector in the same store where he has but one office? Does the Government propose that this state of affairs shall continue?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government is not aware the the sub-collector of customs at Louisburg is conducting a general store and supply business, or as to the situation of his office. The question is one that cannot be answered until information is obtained as to the alleged business of the sub-collector. Inquiry is being made through the inspector of customs with a view to ascertaining the facts.

FINANCES OF KINGSTON PENITENTIARY.

Mr. MULOCK asked, Has the warden of the Kingston Penitentiary recently paid over to the Government any moneys in respect of any shortage on his part? If so, how much? When, and on what account?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The question is founded on a mistake. Mr. Speaker. There is no shortage in the accounts of the warden; there has not been any that I have ever been aware of.

Mr. MULOCK. The return of the gate money received, which was laid on the Table does not show that the money was paid to the Government at the different dates. It shows several thousands of dollars of gate-money collected by the warden, but it does not show that this was paid over in the order of its receipt.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no shortage in the gate-money, so far as the warden is concerned. The practice has been, and the rule of the department has been, that the money should be deposited in the bank, not to the order of the Receiver General, but to the credit of a special fund. But under a recent arrangement it is deposited to the credit, not of the warden alone, but of the warden and the accountant.

Mr. MULOCK. The return shows that the money was deposited to the warden's own credit.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was the rule until a few months ago.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the return ought to be corrected to show when the money was paid over.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

R

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The money is not paid over at all, but is kept there and used for a specific purpose. The only change made is that a second officer is included with the warden, and the money deposited to the credit of both. The account has always been checked and has always been found correct.

HER MAJESTY'S SOVEREIGNTY OVER HUDSON'S BAY.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence since 1867, between the Government of Canada and the Imperial Government in reference to Her Majesty's exclusive sovereignty over Hudson's Bay.

He said: This, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of very considerable importance. The Government, of course, know right well that Hudson's Bay has always been claimed by Great Britain as part of the sovereignty of the Crown ever since the discovery of that bay. It was a matter of dispute for some time, during a former century, between Great Britain and France as to whom this bay, of right, belonged; but that question was settled in favour of the British contention by the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, and since then I believe, it has been recognized as between Great Britain and France and acquiesced generally by Christendom that this is a portion of the British possessions in North America. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that lately American vessels have been going in there, engaged in whale, porpoise, and other fishing operations, and I do not understand that any steps have been taken by the Government to assert the jurisdiction of Canada over these waters. Now, the whole coast of Hudson's Bay lies within British territory. The bay is a land-locked bay, only connected with the high seas by the narrow passage of water called the Hudson's Straits. But, Sir, if the ships of foreign countries are allowed to go into these waters without question, and without taking out any license, to engage in fishing operations there, it might very well be, at no distant day, according to the rules of acquiescence, that the parties whose ships so engaged might claim to go there, as a matter of right, regarding these waters as part of the high seas. I think it is important to know how far there has been any departure from the long and continuous contention that these are British waters. Under the modern doctrine there has been a disposition to limit the rights of states to waters within their own territory and upon their own coasts, and it is important to know whether any correspondence has taken place between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United Kingdom with reference to our sovereignty over these waters as part of the territory of Canada. I am not going to detain the House with any statement of the elementary principles of international law applicable to the case. These are generally well known. What it is important to know is what steps the Government have taken to assert their authority and to prevent any rights or pretensions of rights being acquired by any other people or community on the ground of acquiescence and because of our indifference with regard to these matters. There is no difference in point of law, between the rule of acquiescence as applicable between private individuals and between states. It is therefore of consequence that we should not, by our indifference, permit any loss to be sustained by the Canadian people, and for this reason I move for this correspondence. I assume that the Government have not been indifferent to the rights of the people of Canada; I assume that the Government have not, by negligence, or by sleeping upon their rights, permitted rights of other parties to spring up. It is true that it may involve some expense to this country to exercise proper police supervision over the waters of Hudson's Bay. It seems to me, however, that on account of the narrowness of the straits which connect this bay with the Atlantic, that right should be very easily exercised, and at no great expense to the country. But whether that expense be more or less, I think it is important that it should be incurred for the purpose of maintaining our rights; and I am sure that the House and the public would not be indifferent to the maintenance of the sovereignty of Canada over these waters. I am told that they are valuable at the present time, that the whale fisheries and porpoise fisheries are both extensive, and that the hair seal fisheries in the vicinity are also extensive, and have of late years greatly increased. This being so, and it being probable that at no distant date the bay will be connected with the settled portions of Canada by railway communication, it is highly important that our exclusive jurisdiction over those waters should not be lost, and for these reasons I move the motion now in your hands.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The importance of this question is fully recognized by the Government. The hon. gentleman has referred to the fisheries of the Hudson's Bay and the Canadian interests in those waters, and it is perhaps only right that I should say in advance of the return being brought down, that the question has received due attention, and its importance is fully recognized. The hon. gentleman has referred to the invasion of our territorial rights by the fishing and hunting that are carried on in Canadian waters in Hudson's Bay by foreign fishing vessels. I may say that from time to time rumours of that character have reached me. The remoteness of the region, however, has made it extremely difficult to ascertain with any degree of accuracy the correctness of these rumours. Some steps have been taken, through the agency of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, to publish notices that the laws of Canada apply in those waters; but it is only fair to say that since we are not as yet familiar with either the time that those vessels are likely to arrive or the portions of the bay where they may be found at any time, these notices have been to a great extent formal. Nevertheless, so far as the records of my department show, there has been no inaction in that connection that would in the slightest degree prejudice the rights of Canada over this region. On one or two occasions we have, through the agency of the Hudson's Bay Company and through the Indian Department, endeavoured to obtain full information in regard to the illicit trading which is said to have been carried on by small foreign vessels going there possibly to hunt, or engage in the whale or porpoise fishery, but the result of those efforts so far has not been such as to give us much definite information. Even the Hudson's Bay Company officials themselves, though they believe and assert that a good deal of smuggling is carried on in violation of our revenue laws, have not been able, up to date, to furnish such information as would enable us to take definite action. However, the whole subject and the important interests that are there involved, have been under consideration for some time with the object of ascertaining what definite course should now be taken in regard to the various propositions for protecting such rights as we think should be conserved, for instance, the very question of jurisdiction to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and propositions relating to the establishment of a revenue ship for the purpose of maintaining those rights. There would be ample opportunity to assert exclusive sovereignty over those waters because of the narrow approaches to the great waters of the bay. Most of the channels are under six miles in width, and all, I think, are outside the main entrance of the Hudson's Bay itself. So that when it becomes necessary actively to assert such rights as we possess, there would be, as the hon. gentleman says, no great difficulty; and I am inclined to agree with him in the view that no great expense would be entailed. The papers, so far as they relate to the various departments, will, no doubt, be soon collected and brought down, in answer to the hon. gentleman's motion.

Motion agreed to.

THE FUR SEAL.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) moved :

That it is highly desirable that steps should be taken by the Canadian Government to introduce the fur seal into Hudson's Bay and other waters upon the eastern coast of Canada.

He said: I think whoever has looked into the question will have seen that there is practically no great difference between the habits of the various species of seal. They are all animals that resort to pretty high latitudes, and species of the common seal are found in the waters of Hudson's Bay and on the Atlantic coast, and the habits and means of subsistence of the common seal and the fur-bearing seal are much the same. It seems to me it would be an experiment well worth trying to see how far these animals may be propagated in Hudson's Bay and in the waters of the Atlantic coast. I am of the opinion that if proper care were taken for their protection, it would be found that they could subsist as well off the Atlantic coast as in the Pacific Ocean. There is no great difference in the climate between the Pribyloff Islands and the climates on the eastern coast of Newfoundland or Sable Island, or for that matter of Labrador or Hudson's Bay. It seems the extent of sea area over which these animals wander depends largely upon the migratory habits of the fish upon which they subsist, and the same food may be found on the Atlantic coast that is required for the subsistence of the seals of the South Seas or the Northern Pacific. This being so, I think it is highly desirable that the experiment should be made by the Government of propagating the fur-bearing seal in the waters mentioned in the resolution. I need not further occupy the attention of the House with discussing the subject. It appears to me to be a matter of interest in which is very obvious, and the cost of the experiment would not be very great.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I take it for granted that the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution does not propose to do more than elicit an expression of opinion in an informal way of the hon. members of this House, and does not propose to ask that the resolution be pressed to a vote, which would involve either its adoption or final rejection. At all events, I may be permitted to say that I do not think the time has come when it would be advisable even to make the attempt to which the hon. gentleman refers. Independently altogether of the expense that might be involved, I should like to point out that there are very great difficulties in the way. The greatest difficulty is this: notwithstanding the investigation that the Russian Government has been conducting for a century into the interesting question of the habits of the fur seal, notwithstanding the enormous expense that the United States Government in recent years has incurred in studying the habits of that animal, and notwithstanding the very thorough examination, for the time the examination occupied, that the British Commissioners made into the habits of the fur seal, the most important facts connected with the habits of that animal are in bitter controversy to-day. The Russian authorities differ among themselves, the Russian and the United States authorities conflict—I refer to the scientific men in both countries—and the British Commissioners were at issue, and are at issue, with those eminent authorities in relation to the chief points connected with that extraordinary animal, the fur seal of the Pacific Ocean. In the second place, there is no analogy between the hair seal of the Atlantic or the hair seal of the Pacific, because that animal is found in the waters of both, and the fur seal. The habits of those animals are as widely distinguished as possible. The fur seal is known to frequent only a few particular spots as habitats, and to come back with unerring regularity to those places, or points near to them, and always resort to the land, or nearly always resort to the land, for purposes of procreation, whereas the hair seal is known to reproduce its species at sea, and on our side of the continent is found on the ice and not on the land. The size of the animals is altogether different, one running only a few pounds comparatively, and the fur seal running up to 700 or even 1,000 pounds in weight. I will not weary the House by going over the enormous differences that exist between those two species of animals, separate and entirely distinct as they are, not only as regards habits and form, but particularly as regards value. Then, again, the question of climate or temperature to which the hon. gentleman has referred cannot help us much, because with an enormous area of water and the mainland on the Pacific Ocean and on the Asiatic coast, at or near the Commander Islands, and the surrounding territory in the sea of Othosk, notwithstanding a similar climate prevailing so far as we now know, we look in vain all over that great area for a sign of the fur seal outside of a few spots. For 100 years, so far as the Pacific is concerned, the fur seal has been found in certain particular spots. It is true that cases have been found in which animals seen on one of the Pribyloff's, say at St. George, have been found the next year on St. Paul; but it was found impossible for the British case to establish, what was supposed to be the case at one time, that those animals were found indiscriminately in the various rookeries at great distances apart, like the Commander and Pribyloff Islands and vice versa. There is another very serious question to be considered before we should proceed to anything like a decision on this question, a decision in which the fishermen of the Atlantic coast are very directly interested, and that is this: nature has placed these extraordinary animals, the fur seals, in the southern and northern Pacific waters, and nature has also placed an enormous quantity of fish in these waters, so far as information now goes, far in excess of the fisheries of the Atlantic coast, and it is calculated that each fur seal consumes tons upon tons of fish every season. I would not like to be the Minister who would take the responsibility of introducing a new enemy to the valuable fish that we now have on the Atlantic coast, and the success of such a scheme as this would amount to that. Supposing the experiment were successful and we established seal rookeries in the Hudson's Bay, the inroads upon the fisheries that we are now doing all in our power to protect would be far greater than any they have had hitherto to resist, and the so-called balance of nature would be, if I might suggest it, very seriously interfered with. The House will remember that in the discussion which took place before the tribunal at Paris, it was significant that the great men of science of the world knew nothing whatever upon the subject of seal life. Many of them gave their opinions generally in favour of United States contentions on these points, but they practically had to admit their ignorance on the subject, and indeed that want of knowledge was to a very large extent shown by the statements they made. Then, again, before encountering all these difficulties, the expense of the experiment would be far greater than I think the hon. gentleman has considered. There would not only be the sea journey for these animals with which to experiment, but there would have to be transport both by land and by sea, and there would be the selection of the breeding places without the slightest reason to suppose that after you had put these animals in the water they would return. In the case of the known habits of the seal, they return to their rookeries, and to their rookeries, only for the purpose of reproduction and they are found nowhere else near them although the conditions of the surroundings are exactly similar to the places which they have chosen for their land home. If we put a limited number of these seals into the Hudson's Bay, we have not the slightest reason for supposing they would ever see them again there. Their course would be uncertain and their return to any particular spot most unlikely, because if there is anything peculiar in connection with the islands which they now frequent, there is the instinct in the seals, from long habit, to return to particular places. We know that the seals on the Pacific coast take a course as far south as California and then come back; but no one can say that the conditions on that annual migration on the Atlantic side would be the same as regards either temperature or water currents, which are supposed to affect them materially, or the question of the abundance of the food supply. I think I would be safe in saying that there can be no comparison between the food supply for seals in the waters of the Atlantic and the waters of the Pacific. While the seals of the Pribyloff herd, so-called, are found year after year in the Pribyloff Islands, nevertheless the fact that they are sometimes found on one island and sometimes on another, is a serious obstacle to any confidence in the success of the proposition before the House, because the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will see: that with such a range of islands, and such a range of shore, and such an unknown region for their roaming, it would be very difficult to discover their whereabouts on their return. In my humble judgment the expense of even watching the movements of these particular animals would be enormous, and therefore, while the subject is one of very great interest, it would require a very great deal of time and money to deal with it thoroughly. I am at the outset compelled to confess to the hon. gentleman that from my examination into the habits of these animals, it is too soon, even to begin with the experiment which he has suggested. There are other subjects, coming under my department, on which we have gathered far more definite information over a long series of years, and in which our citizens are greatly interested. Take, for instance, the question of transporting lobsters from the Atlantic to the Pacific and introducing them into these waters. That is a very much simpler problem to attack, and yet in connection with that we have been watching in Canada the very costly experiments which have been made in the United States, and which up to the present time have been a complete failure. They have gone to a great deal of expense with these experiments and yet they have found it impossible to show any practical result or success in that direction. I could mention many other subjects that are under the consideration of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and if we were prepared to take them up and supply the necessary funds, I could exhaust all the available money very speedily in a direction in which our fishermen and our people are much more immediately and vitally concerned. I hope that after a general expression of opinion by hon. gentlemen touching the resolution, that the House will consent that this debate should be adjourned. I shall, therefore, Mr. Speaker, move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). With regard to the statement of the hon. gentleman that we have not sufficient information as to the nature and habits of the fur seal to enable us to undertake this experiment, I would say that that observation of his, is much like the advice the old lady gave to her children: that they should not go into the water until they had learned to swim. In my opinion, the only way of ascertaining how far the experiment can be made successfully, is by actual trial of the experiment. Now, the hon. gentleman has referred to the ordinary seal, the hair seal, and these fur-bearing seals of the northern Pacific. These are part of a very large family. The spotted seal on the coast of Greenland is quite as large as the largest fur-bearing seal on the Pacific coast, and the leopard seal is a very large seal, acquiring often, a weight of several hundred pounds. The statements by Mr. Wood, I think, is that the large spotted seal on the coast of Greenland often acquires a weight of nearly a thousand pounds. Now, so far as the size is concerned, I do not think it at all affects the question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I referred to the size in connection with the capacity of the seals for consuming fish.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I fancy that the ordinary hair seal is quite as destructive as the other seals.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is certainly misinformed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not find any different opinion expressed in that respect. The seal, when it catches a fish, I believe, only devours a very small portion of it, and passes on to others. The fur seal, whether large or small, is equally destructive of the fish upon which it subsists. I do not suppose that if you were to introduce the fur seal on the Atlantic coast, there would be any appreciable diminution of the quantity of fish caught in the Atlantic. Then, with regard to the fur seal of the Pacific coast, the Pribyloff and the Commander Islands are not the only places in which this animal is found; fur seals are also found about the Falkland Islands. I have not suggested that those on the Pacific coast should be introduced, because that is a matter for consideration. It seems to me that the seals from the very high latitudes in the south might be better adapted to our Atlantic waters than the seals taken from the Pacific coast.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman was referring to the temperature of the Hudson's Bay and the Pribyloff Islands being the same, and for that reason, I supposed he addressed himself to the northern seals.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not exclusively. Then, with regard to the area of water over which these seals wander. Now, the statement with regard to the seals of the Falkland Islands is that they go but a very short distance from the shore, and it is supposed that the explanation for doing so is that the fish upon which they subsist do not migrate very far from the coast of the Falkland Islands. Then, again, with regard to the seals further south, of South Georgia, and in the neighbourhood of the Antarctic Continent, I believe that those seals breed upon the ice just as they do off the coast of Greenland, and off the coast of Labrador; so that the fur seal—and when I say fur seal I mean the whole family—do not, in this particular, differ from the hair seal of Baffin's Bay and of the Labrador coast. They seem to prefer high latitudes, a very cold climate, and will live upon the ice as a place of resort quite as well as upon land. Now, I do not think the experiment would at all be as costly as the hon. Minister of

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Marine and Fisheries suggests. I have, however, done what I think was my duty in bringing the subject under the attention of the House, and I think that the experiment might be made without any very serious cost to the public treasury. The hon. Minister thinks these animals, upon being brought from the south Atlantic coast, might not return to the land from the place where they were first deposited. I do not know about that matter. I think that the reasoning in reference to the habits of these animals would lead to a different conclusion from that which the Minister suggests; but, of course, nothing can be known definitely, until the experiment is actually made. Whether they would return to precisely the same place or to the neighbourhood of that place, would largely depend, I think, upon the habits of the fish upon which they subsist. These fur-bearing seals in the northern Pacific, I believe, largely subsist upon salmon; the hair-bearing seals of the Atlantic subsist upon the cod. Their habits are such that they occasionally cause great inconvenience to fishermen, and sometimes rob their nets of the fish that are caught in them. I am speaking now of the hair seals, and the fur seals could not be a greater enemy than the one that already exists, and unless they were to appreciably diminish the catch, there would be an advantage in their introduction. I do not think the hon. gentleman would suggest that their destructive powers are likely to be so great that they would seriously interfere with the protection of our fisheries. If that were so, if that was the conclusion at which the hon. gentleman arrived from his reading and investigation of the subject, when it was practically before him, then it seems to me that he ought to have taken a different position from the one he did take in discussing this question with our neighbours, because that would be a reason for the extermination of the fur-bearing seals altogether, instead of undertaking to extend special protection for their preservation. Now, the arbitration, which we must assume acted fairly upon the evidence which was before them, did not come to that conclusion; they did not come to the conclusion that the fur-bearing seals in the northern Pacific waters were a nuisance that ought to be abated.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will allow me to correct him, because he is falling into an error in his argument now. The arbitrators had no jurisdiction to do anything else than to consider how best to preserve the hair seals. The treaty provided in express terms that that was the point upon which they were to base their regulations; therefore, it was entirely out of order for them to propose that they should be exterminated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that he has only moved his difficulty one stage further back.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was not trying to remove my difficulty, I was trying to give the hon. gentleman information.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He has only removed the difficulty in which he is placed one step further back, for the hon. gentleman had before him a question that should be referred to the arbitration.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will understand that the British Government, and not the Canadian Government, made the treaty, and drew the terms of the reference.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think we all understand that the British Government sought to give effect to the views of the Canadian Government in the matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was not the statement, and is not correct.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman would lead the House to suppose that in this matter of the Behring Sea, the Government of Canada were unwilling parties to the arbitration.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe that if the Canadian Government had been in a position to draw that treaty, that treaty would not have been drawn as it was. It was a treaty made of necessity by Great Britain.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The contention of the hon. gentleman is that the British Government blundered, and that by their blunder the Canadian Government suffered loss, that an animal that is a nuisance in the northern Pacific waters has been enjoying care and protection instead of being exterminated, and that the treaty and the regulations by which that special care and attention have been extended to the fur seals in the northern Pacific waters, is an arrangement to which the Canadian Government were unwilling parties. Well, Sir, I have read with a good deal of care and with a good deal of interest the discussion on that subject; I have read with a great deal of interest the legal and historical information collected with regard to that subject. I think that it indicated a good deal of industry and judgment in the collection of the evidence and in the arrangement of the material, but I do not find that the Canadian Government contended that these animals were a nuisance and that there ought to have been no care for their protection.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me, because he is entering upon a branch of the matter to which he certainly did not refer in his remarks on his motion, and to which I therefore did not pay any attention? The hon. gentleman must not distort my argument. I did not argue that the fur seal was a nuisance in Pacific waters. I said that there, under the laws of nature, there was an extraordinary abundance of fish, and that for a great number of years the fish and the seals had existed there together and increased. But I said there was great doubt, and perhaps more than doubt, that if you introduced into the Atlantic waters, which are not supplied, in my opinion, with such an amount of fish, such a predaceous animal as the fur seal, the condition of things there being entirely different, you might bring about the extinction of a most valuable fishery, and the fur seal might in those waters become a nuisance, and I said that would be a policy I would not take the responsibility of adopting. I did not argue that the fur seals, under present conditions, were a nuisance in the Pacific waters.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not saying that the hon. gentleman did argue that the fur seal was a nuisance. But he stated, in speaking of the habits of the seal, that they were destructive, and that those predaceous habits made it an animal, the preservation of which was scarcely consistent with the due protection of the fisheries. The hon. gentleman will remember, in the discussion upon the fur-bearing seals of the Pacific Ocean before the arbitrators, that the possibility of their extinction was pressed very strongly by the American representatives upon the Board. The hon. gentleman will himself admit that there would be no great difficulty in exterminating the whole fur-bearing seals of the Pacific. If to-morrow there was a possibility of the fur-bearing seal, in consequence of its destructive habits, exterminating or seriously injuring the fisheries upon the Pacific coast, there would be no difficulty within five years, with the consent of the American Government, in completely exterminating them. Their numbers are very greatly diminished already. And what I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman is this: that if there was a prospect of the fur seal seriously injuring any of our fisheries in the Atlantic, there would be no difficulty in getting rid of them, looking at what was said before the Board of Arbitrators, and what the hon. gentleman and his friends, with all their industry and care, were unable successfully to combat.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman aware that some countries are trying to exterminate and slaughter the seal, and have not succeeded, by giving bounty for every seal taken? Norway is doing that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They were very numerous on the coast of Scotland at one time, and they are not to-day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Norway is trying to exterminate them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Norway has very numerous islands on its coasts which are not always accessible, owing to the tides and the nature of the coast, and so there may be physical difficulties in the way there which do not exist anywhere else. It is certainly not in consequence of the great abundance of seal on the coast of Norway.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How does the hon. gentleman know that?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Because I find from writers in natural history the statement that they are not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The recent legislation in Norway is surely on account of the abundance and destructiveness of the seals. They are paying money for their extinction in order to assist their fisheries, and they are not doing this because the seal are not abundant.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that public money has been offered for the extinction of wolves in this country, not because they are very numerous, but because of their bad habits. The hon. gentleman will see, from the statement I have made, that if there is any danger to be apprehended, that danger is one which could be easily surmounted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. After we had spent money in introducing the enemy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has agreed to spend a great deal of money for the purpose of its preservation. He is a party to regulations which have made a preserve of a band of over 60 miles in width all around those islands, so that at all seasons in the year the life of the animals should be protected, and which, over an immense area of the Pacific Ocean, forbids the killing of a seal with the gun or the hunting of it in a particular way for a large portion of the year. The hon. gentleman will have a great deal of difficulty in reconciling what he did at Paris with the contention he has put forward to-day.

Mr. STAIRS. I have not had time to study up the question, I am sorry to say, and therefore do not profess to be able to reply to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), but there are one or two considerations which have come to my mind while listening to this discussion. As regards the position of seal life in the Pacific Ocean, the hon. member for Bothwell forgets the balance which always exists in nature. I think that it is a mistake to assume that the extermination of the fur seal in the Pacific Ocean would be desirable. To my mind, it would be as great a mistake to exterminate the fur seal in the Pacific Ocean as it might be to introduce that seal into Hudson's Bay. The fur seal and the fish have existed in the Pacific Ocean for any number of years, and the numbers of both had not decreased. As has been pointed out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the quantity of fish in the Pacific Ocean is enormous, and has kept so in spite of the destructive efforts of the seal. Therefore I think we may naturally assume that there has been in nature in the Pacific Ocean a productiveness on the part of the fish which counterbalances the destructive efforts of the seal. If the seals in the Pacific were exterminated, some injurious effects of which we have no conception now, might ensue, and which naturalists have not perceived, so that it would be a mistake to exterminate them. I think, therefore, that the hon. member for Bothwell, in his reference to the old saying about the woman telling her son not to go into the water until he learned how to swim, overlooked the fact that the boy, in learning how to swim, was doing a very desirable thing. But it may be possible that in the introduction of the fur seal into Hudson's Bay an undesirable thing would be done, therefore his reference does not apply. Now, if the effort to introduce the fur seal into the Hudson's Bay were successful, I believe it might, as pointed out by the hon. Minister, have a very injurious effect upon the fish-life of the Atlantic coast. There is on the Atlantic coast, as there has been on the Pacific coast, a certain balance of the destructive elements on one side and the productive elements on the other, which maintains the proper supply of fish in the sea. But I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman that if he were successful in introducing the fur seal into Hudson's Bay, that balance would be destroyed; and for this reason the House ought to hesitate to approve of the proposition made by the hon. gentleman. I may refer to well known cases showing the harmful effects of the introduction of animals into countries in which they are not indigenous. The hon. gentleman will remember the experience of Australia. The Australian colonies would to-day, no doubt, give untold millions if they could destroy the rabbits in those colonies. They are already paying large sums for the destruction of these animals, but without much success, and it seems as though they never could exterminate the rabbits which have now become such a pest. Then there is the case of the mongoose in Jamaica. This animal was introduced into Jamaica some years ago. I have forgotten exactly for what purpose, but no doubt the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will remember.

Mr. MULOCK. To destroy the rats.

Mr. STAIRS. I have heard from friends who have lately been in Jamaica that the mongoose has become itself a great pest.

Mr. MULOCK. And the rats changed their habits and took to the trees.

Mr. STAIRS. The mongoose, I believe, has begun to prey upon something which the people do not want to exterminate. I am reminded by my hon. friend beside me of the case of the English sparrow in America.

I do not know that the English sparrow has done a very great deal of harm, but I imagine he has not done very much good. These examples should warn us that the introduction of any animal or fish into any waters in which it is not indigenous, ought not to be hastily attempted. I think the House ought not to commit itself to the proposition of the hon. gentleman, and that the suggestion of the hon. Minister should be accepted.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SCHOOL AWARDS—CHICAGO FAIR.

Mr. LACHAPELLE (Translation) moved for :

Copy of the detailed report showing the prizes awarded by the judges or jury at the Chicago Columbian Exposition for the work of pupils of primary and special schools of every kind and degree, and also to pupils of secondary educational institutions of each of the provinces of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I may say in support of this motion that it is, I think, in the interest of the hon. members of this House, as well as in the interest of all earnest men in this country, that they should do all in their power to do away with a prejudice which seems deep-rooted among the people with respect to the education given in the various provinces, but especially in the province of Quebec. They are under the impression that the education given in the province of Quebec is inferior to that given in the other provinces; such an impression is, to my mind, erroneous. The education in that province is mostly given by the Brothers of the Christian Schools, whose worth is unquestionable. The society of the Brothers of the Christian Schools was founded, a little more than a century ago, by Jean Baptiste de la Salle. The teaching method of primary education introduced by de la Salle has always been held equal, if not superior, to the other systems of primary instruction. It was, however, opposed on several occasions, and the teaching Brothers, after some vicissitudes as to their treatment in some countries, were finally favourably received by them. Thus, to quote but a single instance, the Brothers of the Christian Schools, driven from France during the reign of terror, were recalled a few years later. I hold the primary instruction given in their schools to be, to say the least, equal to any other. In support of that contention, I may say that in 1885, at the great Educational Exhibition held in London, the schools of the Brothers carried a first prize in the general competition. In 1876, at the Philadelphia World's Fair, the same institution again carried a first prize. I may add that I have reason to believe that at the great Chicago Fair, held last year, the Brothers of the Christian Schools carried the greatest number of prizes in the great educational competition held there. In the face of such facts, which appear to me to be indisputable, I wonder how it is that they should persevere in the belief that the schools of the province of Quebec, where that method of instruction prevails, should be considered as inferior to those of the other provinces. I am dealing with that question without any animosity or partiality; but I think it is in the interest, I will even say I think it is the duty of all of us, to cause this prejudice to disappear, as it keeps fanaticism alive and is injurious to the whole community. I see no reason why such an error or such a prejudice should be extant, unless it be that it is allowed to be stated again and again without being opposed. I now assert again that such a deplorable prejudice exists, and in support of my statement, will quote from a correspondence published in the Toronto 'Globe' under date 28th September, 1893, under the head :

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

SIR RICHARD WEBSTER ON THE ONTARIO EDUCATIONAL EXHIBIT.

Sir Richard Webster, chairman of the Royal British Commission to the World's Columbian Exposition, has been thoroughly exploring during the past week. The distinguished British statesman having completed the rounds of the exhibit courts of the different provinces of the Dominion, was asked what he thought of their display. Sir Richard unhesitatingly declared that he was astonished both as to the magnitude and perfection of most of the exhibits, but said what struck him most forcibly was the Ontario Educational Exhibit in the gallery of the liberal arts building. Further, he expressed the opinion that it was one of the most beautiful and instructive of the whole exhibition. He thought Ontario the only exhibit that at all approached his ideal of what an educational exhibit should be, for he considered it the most perfect in arrangement and explanatory in a simple and satisfactory way of the finest practical system of public education from the Kindergarten to the University that the world affords to-day.

Well, there is the testimony of a most distinguished man. That correspondence, about the same time, finds its way to the 'Mail' and many other papers in the Dominion. It states most positively that the primary educational system of Ontario must be considered as superior, since it is the opinion of a most distinguished attorney from England. I may be allowed to ask on what that hon. gentleman relied to make such a gratuitous statement? Did he take a true practical point of view to form a rational opinion as to the facts? If I am not mistaken, the prizes had then been apportioned, or, at all events, the number of awards decided on. It is plain the distinguished man I have just quoted did not rely on that to make the statement I have just read to the House. He therefore gave his opinion very thoughtlessly, he spoke merely from a slight consideration of the question.

It is not from such a point of view that one can earnestly pronounce on such a question, as just shown by me. No doubt the educational exhibit of the province of Ontario was apparently superior to that of the province of Quebec. But we know that the amount put at the disposal of the exhibitors of the province of Quebec did not exceed some few hundred dollars. Now, that amount was vastly inferior to what it should, and would, have been had the provincial resources allowed of it. The smallness of the amount available to the exhibitors of that province had this result: that, among other things, the space allotted to the exhibitors of the province of Quebec was very limited. On the other hand, it must be remembered that an appropriation of $10,000 had been voted by the province of Ontario in order to give its educational exhibit the full importance it deserved. As a result, the space allotted to that province on the exhibition grounds was also proportionally much larger than the one allotted to the exhibitors of the province of Quebec. I have reason to believe, Mr. Speaker, that the distinguished man whose opinion I have quoted did not take that point of view to appreciate such an important competition as the educational competition which took place between the various provinces of the Dominion at the Chicago World's Fair. There is also another way of ascertaining the respective worth of such a competition, and it is by going into details in order to ascertain the nature of the works of the exhibitors and their degree of perfection. From this point of view, Mr. Speaker, I may say that the works of the exhibitors, I mean the pupils of the province of Quebec, were much larger, both in quantity and quality, than the works exhibited by the pupils of most of the other provinces, without excepting the province of Ontario, itself. I may also say that those works were considered as more practical and likely to convey a better idea of the education, of the instruction given in the province of Quebec. I may say, moreover, that the exhibitors of that province carried a much greater number of prizes than the exhibitors of the other provinces. If I am well informed, the awards granted to the educational exhibit of the province of Quebec were more numerous than those given to the other exhibits of the same kind. I have been ever waiting, Mr. Speaker, for the bringing down of the papers relating to this question, but as it seems likely that the Government will not hand them over to the House unless being asked for them, I thought it was in the public interest to take measures so that these facts should be made known to the public. On what can I rely to make the statement that the educational exhibit of the province of Quebec was equal, if not superior, to the educational exhibits of the other provinces of the Dominion, on what can I rely, beyond the facts I have just communicated to the House, to assert that the educational exhibit of the province of Quebec must be considered as having been equal, to say the least, to those of the other provinces? I will give you some facts which will show that I am right in making such a statement. We have the opinions of many professional men, of scholars who took a very particular interest in that section of the Chicago World's Fair. Allow me to quote, in support of my contention, the statements in that respect of some of these gentlemen. Mr. Laurier, one of the representatives of the Department of Public Instruction in France, wrote, among other things, the following:—

Your books are the only ones, I think, headed by informations, showing, in a full, definite and clear way, the school, the class, the number of pupils, their age, &c.

I also observe with much pleasure that the daily exercises of your pupils, at every degree, are characterized by an earnestness which is seldom to be found at the Fair, and that they are carefully and methodically corrected.

Your methods are so much like our own that I thought for a moment I was in France. Perhaps were I not mistaken in believing that there are in Canada, besides the hands which skillfully traced the French characters, hearts which beat for that France which your fathers loved so much and which, I feel sure, your little Canadians still love.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the opinion of a man enjoying a universal repute in point of education. Here is a testimony stating clearly and definitely the kind and value of the works exhibited by the pupils of the province of Quebec at Chicago. I notice the report made, under date 29th August, 1893, by the correspondent of the St. John (N.B.) 'Daily Sun,' who says:

As I promised last week, I will now give you some particulars of the Liberal Arts Gallery, Canadian exhibit.

The province of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and the North-west Territories are represented in those exhibits. British Columbia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island have no exhibit in this section. Quebec, Canada's oldest province, makes an exhibit of her educational system which, judging by the quality and quantity, will help to dispel many erroneous ideas and fallacies as to her civilization.

I may be allowed to quote the opinion expressed by one of our colleagues, a member of this House, I refer to the hon. member for Gaspé:

One educational exhibit, he says, is especially practical, the most practical of all those I have seen here, and they are very many. You can see in it the work of the pupils day after day, the tasks as bonded over to the teachers, with the corrections made by the latter, the teaching methods, the classical books in use, the writing-books, &c.

You can follow the pupil from the time of his entering the institution to the time when he goes out of it, after completing his commercial, academic or classical studies.

I am proud to say it, the Canadian educational exhibit is one of the best, if not the best there is in the Liberal Arts Gallery. The verdict of the judges, which will now be known soon, will say whether I am mistaken.

So the hon. member for Gaspé highly expressed his admiration for that exhibit and prophesied that the educational exhibits of the province of Quebec would bear away the palm in that educational competition. I might also quote the opinion of a prominent professor of the St. Louis University, in the United States. So there is the acknowledged fact, Mr. Speaker, that the province of Quebec in that educational competition at the Chicago Fair carried a sufficient number of awards, of medals, of prizes, to warrant my saying in this House that there is no reason nor motive for keeping up such a prejudice by trying to have it believed that the educational system of the province of Quebec is not calculated to improve noble minds, and that there are in that province no schools that are inferior to those of the other provinces. That sentiment, or rather that prejudice is calculated to keep up an uneasiness very easily understood, and I think it the duty of every good citizen to oppose that prejudice, in order that by minimizing it, we might thereby minimize the fanaticism which it naturally promotes, fanaticism likely to injure every one. I might add that a teacher's position in the province of Quebec is far from being advantageous. By referring to the report of the Minister of Education for Ontario, we find that the average salary of teachers, for the year 1892, was $421. In 1887, it was $425, and in 1892, $415. While the average salary of teachers in the province of Quebec is under $200. This material difference in the salaries of teachers in the two provinces would be such as to justify the alleged inferiority of the teachers of the province of Quebec; but the facts I have just mentioned rather show the contrary, and they therefore evidence the worth and superiority of the primary instruction in the province of Quebec. It is also easy to ascertain that the number of teachers in the province of Quebec, considering her total population, is larger than in the province of Ontario. Well, to suggest that the primary instructions are neglected in the province of Quebec, is, in my opinion, to make a gratuitous and erroneous statement. I will conclude here my observations on this question. I only wish to be well understood; what I wish to say is that such a prejudice as exists in some provinces against our educational system is very obnoxious, and calculated to have it believed that our schools are inferior to those of the other provinces. That prejudice has led some people to oppose our educational system, and I cannot believe for a moment that, had they felt satisfied that our schools are, to say the least equal, if not superior to those of the other provinces, they would have held such a course as they have followed till now.

Mr. LANGELIER. I am not au fait with the facts presented by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Lachapelle), but I think we have another complaint to make about the Chicago Exposition. I think the services of all in connection with that exposition should have been fully recognized. We had two commissioners representing us at that exhibition, one is a member of this House, and the other a member of another House. It seems that the commissioners of other colonies, those of Australia, and I do not know but that the same is also true of one commissioner from South Africa, have been knighted. I think it is a gross injustice not to have knighted our commissioners also, especially when knighthood seems to have been rather cheap. But our commissioners have been completely ignored. It was the only way to recognize the great services it was intended they should render this country, though according to what the hon. member for Hochelaga says, they do not seem to have succeeded. But I think it is a piece of great ingratitude on the part of the Government not to see that our commissioners were knighted as those of other colonies were.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We shall discuss that question more fully when we come to the hon. gentleman's motion dealing with it. In the meantime I have to thank the hon. member for Hochelaga for his observations on the subject, and to assure him that in the estimation of those who were made acquainted with the subject the position of his province in relation to its educational exhibit is a very illustrious one, and, therefore, we will be glad to have the return brought down.

Motion agreed to.

SOULANGES CANAL.

Mr. CHOQUETTE (for Mr. Tarte) moved for :

Copies of all the reports of the engineers recommending that certain changes be made in the original contract, both in the materials and the nature of the works entering into the construction of the locks and other masonry on sections 1 and 2 of the Soulanges Canal, giving the reasons why such changes should be made and the names of the engineers who recommended such changes. 2. Copies of all the correspondence exchanged between the engineers, the Department of Railways and Canals, the contractor and other persons in connection with those changes, and copies of all Orders in Council in relation thereto.

Mr. HAGGART. There are no changes, or any reports of engineers recommending changes that I have ever heard of.

Motion agreed to.

WAGES ON PUBLIC WORKS UNDER CONTRACT.

Mr. TAYLOR (for Mr. Coatsworth) moved :

That it is expedient to insert in every contract for any public work made and entered into hereafter, a clause requiring the contractor to pay the workmen engaged upon such work a rate of wages at least equal to the current rate of wages paid in the locality where such work is being done, at and during the time such contract is being carried on.

He said : I would like to add this addition to the motion :

Unless the Minister with whose department the contract has been made shall for special reason relieve the contractor from the observance of this clause.

Mr. Coatsworth wrote to ask me, if those motions came up before 6 o'clock, to move it with this amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. I desire to point out to the House, that, as this is a motion that is likely to elicit discussion or to be opposed, of course it cannot be moved by any other than the hon. gentleman in whose name it stands.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It had better be dropped for the present.

Motion dropped.

TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) moved for :

Copy of the evidence taken by Mr. Payne as secretary to one or more of the Ministers acting as a Tariff Commission.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I hope the hon. member will not ask the House to adopt a motion ordering a Minister's private secretary to send in a copy of his evidence, or a Minister to produce a copy of any document taken by his private secretary which is not for public use. There are two or three objections to the motion which I will state, and I hope the hon. gentleman will then see the propriety of withdrawing it. The first is that Mr. Payne took no evidence.

Mr. LAURIER. That reason may dispense with all the others.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. But there are still stronger reasons. The second is that there was no Tariff Commission; the third is that the notes taken by Mr. Payne for the information of the Minister, have been stolen; they are not accessible even to the Minister himself.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When I used the words, "Tariff Commission," I think I used a phrase that was used by the Ministers themselves, if I remember rightly by the Minister of Finance. Perhaps it was a clerical error.

Mr. HAGGART.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was borrowed from this resolution.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, it was not borrowed from the resolution, because it preceded the resolution, and, being prior in point of time, it could not be a consequence of that resolution. Now, the Ministers told us that they proposed making an inquiry, they purposed taking evidence, and after the inquiry was made and the evidence was collected, they purposed submitting to the House the result of those inquiries. After submitting to the House the result of those inquiries early in the session, they have seen proper since, for some reason or other—in consequence of new light, it may be, that hon. gentlemen have had—to depart very widely from what was proposed as a consequence of those inquiries; and so the House have had, up to this time, no opportunity of judging, either as to the propriety of the conclusions at which the Ministers first arrived, or at the propriety of the important modifications which have since taken place; and the right hon. First Minister will see that my motion was, under these circumstances, a very proper one. The right hon. gentleman says that there was no commission. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to stand on words and phrases; there was an inquiry, and so I am quite ready, if the Minister will consent, to alter the motion in that particular. The right hon. gentleman, however, has made a further statement, and that is that the information so collected is no longer in possession of any Minister of the Crown, that some ardent friend of the Administration has got possession of it, and has forgotten to return it again. Well, under these circumstances, of course, I could not think of pressing my motion. I do not look for impossibilities from the Government; I made what I think was a reasonable request, that the House were entitled to have the information that was collected in order to enable it to arrive at a conclusion, which might not, perhaps, be the same conclusion at which the Government have arrived, or if they did come to that conclusion, they might not be disposed to follow the Government in the very wide departure that has since taken place. However, after the Minister's declaration, and the assignment of his reasons for thinking that my motion ought not to pass, I have no disposition to press it further. The three reasons assigned by the hon. gentleman remind me very much of an ancient specimen of pleading, where the article was never in the possession of the party, where it was returned, and where it was damaged when it was received, and whole when it was returned. I sympathize with the Government in the misfortunes that have overtaken them.

Motion withdrawn.

DISTILLED AND FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Mr. FLINT moved for :

1. A statement showing the quantities of distilled and fermented liquors, under the different names as given in the Trade Returns, imported into and taken for consumption in Canada, from 1883 to 1893, both years included, computed in imperial gallons; the value of the same, and the duty paid thereon.

2. The quantity of distilled and fermented liquors, under the different names given in the Inland Revenue Returns, manufactured in Canada and taken for consumption therein; the value of the same, and the duty paid thereon for the same years.

3. The amount of materials used in brewing and distilling alcoholic liquors in the several provinces of Canada during the same years.

He said: This is a motion couched in exactly the same language as one which previously passed the House, and which brought the statistics asked for up to 1883. That return has been published. It is a very valuable return, and I desire that a return of a similar nature, bringing those statements from 1883 to 1893 may be furnished for the information of the House.

Motion agreed to.

BRIBERY AND DISFRANCHISEMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 6) to disfranchise voters who have taken bribes.—(Mr. Weldon.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 14,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is not sufficient, because under our system a real estate proprietor can vote in different places, and if you disfranchise a party in one constituency there should be some public record to that effect, so that he could not go and vote in another constituency, otherwise the clause would be wholly ineffective with regard to that large class who vote in different constituencies.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The promoter of the Bill is not here, but I presume there will be a clause added later on to provide for publication.

On section 15,

Mr. FRASER. I think that this clause should not be adopted. They have affirmed in England recently by one of the largest majorities ever given in the British House of Commons, that a matter such as this, being in the public interest, the public should pay for it. If our elections are to be purified here, they ought to be purified at the public expense. This Bill is, I believe, a good Bill in some respects, and this clause should be so amended that the public should pay the expenses of purifying constituencies.

It is unfair that twenty-five electors who honestly believe that wrong has been committed, should be bound to pay $500 to do that which is no more in their interest than in the interest of any other elector in the county. I think it is time we should apply the British principle here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would again ask the Minister of Justice whether he does not think that we ought to return to the provision of a previous Act which was repealed some time ago; that is: that instead of this petition being presented to the judge it should be presented to Parliament, and then the expense would be charged against the public treasury, and not against the private individuals who petition. There ought to be no charge against these petitioners unless it could be shown that their petition was perverse, and that it was done rather with the intention to worry persons than to secure purity in elections. It does seem to me that undertaking to treat a great public duty as a mere private enterprise is not in the public interest, and not the way to make the law efficient. If we are to have efficient legislation, then the prosecution should be on the public behalf, and at the public expense. It is quasi criminal in its character, and as such ought to be conducted as are other proceedings in which the public are specially interested.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would not take that view of it, nor will I be able to agree with the contention of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) that this should be done at the public expense. There are methods by which investigations shall be made at the expense of the public, and we might consider the propriety of improving them; but this is a public inquiry, made at the expense of twenty-five individuals who make a general charge of corruption against the county. I would not think it suitable in this Bill, that the twenty-five persons who make the petition should be able to put their hands on the public chest and make it a means of carrying out any investigation promoted by them. If they make such a general charge it is only fair in the public interest that they should pay part of the expense. The question will arise as to whether the sum mentioned here is sufficient, and I happen to know that the intention of the mover of the Bill was, when the Bill was in committee last, to draft another clause under which the petitioners should be required under the order of the judge from time to time as the investigation proceeds, to put up further amounts which he might order if he sees fit. In the meantime I think it would be well to pass this clause.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If this petition were presented to the Speaker of the House, and the prosecution took place at the instance of the House as was the provision of the former statute, the investigation would be at the public expense and these parties would be simply petitioners.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It may be that the promoter of the Bill should be here to explain his views fully on that subject, and, therefore, I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

RAILWAY ACT—SHELTER FOR MOTOR-MEN.

Mr. MULOCK moved second reading of Bill (No. 14) to amend the Railway Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to enable the Governor in Council to require electric railways to supply shelter for the motormen. Those who happen to be familiar with the plan adopted in Ottawa know well that there is no practical difficulty in providing shelter for the men engaged in operating electric railway cars, but in some parts of Canada no such provision whatever is made, so that the motormen are exposed to the inclemency of the weather, which causes them considerable suffering and must interfere with their efficiency. Under the Railway Act, all railways crossing certain lines of railway are works for the general advantage of Canada, and under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. That that law applies to electric railways is beyond all question. The section of the Railway Act containing this provision, says that all railways which cross or intersect certain Dominion railways shall be deemed works for the general advantage of Canada, and that electric railways crossing Dominion lines are subject to our legislation is made clear by an Act passed only a year ago. The House will remember that the Niagara Railway and railway extension from Lake Erie along the Niagara River crosses certain Dominion lines, and for that reason came under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. For certain reasons, Parliament saw fit to exempt that line from the general provisions of the law, and passed an Act declaring that, notwithstanding it crossed one of the Dominion railways, it should remain under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature. That being the case, it is clear the House construed the Railway Act itself as applicable to electric as well as other railways. I am of opinion that a great many electric lines in Canada are under our jurisdiction, and of course this Bill will only apply to them. There are many ways in which you could amend the law. The first question would be: is it in the interests of humanity that a regulation such as I propose should be enacted? It is only necessary to see the operation of the open cars, in other cities than Ottawa, during the winter season, to be satisfied that shelter is necessary, as a matter of humanity, so that I do not think I need discuss that point. I find, under the general Railway Act, considerable powers given the Governor General in Council, and it seemed to me in harmony with that policy to vest this power in that body as well. I have therefore simply provided that the Governor General in Council may require electric railway companies to provide proper shelter for their motormen.

Mr. HAGGART. There can be no great objection to the Bill, as no doubt a great many electric railways are under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. In Ottawa and some cities there is ample protection for the motormen, but in others there is not, and it is in the interests not only of the motormen and the railways themselves, but also of the general public, that proper protection should be afforded, because anything which tends to enervate or weaken the men adds to the danger run by the public. I have no objection to the introduction of the Bill, and will order that inquiries be made to see what regulations can be devised.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of all correspondence between D. J. Hughes, Esq., County Judge of Elgin, Ont., and the officials of the Government Printing Office, in regard to the printing of the last revised voters' list for Elgin.—(Mr. Casey.)

List of all articles, with the value of each and the total value of all, imported from the United States during the last fiscal year for the use of the Government in the public service.—(Mr. Landarkin.)

Copies of all reports from Messrs. Charles Taché & Son, on surveys and soundings made during the past five years, in the County of Rimouski.—(Mr. Tarte.)

Return of the names of the official assignees who, acting under the Insolvent Act of 1875 and its amendments, have obtained legal discharges from all the insolvent estates placed in their hands during the period they held such office.—(Mr. Fauvel.)

Copies of all contracts for the construction of the steamers "Curlew," "Constance," "Petrel," and also a statement of all moneys paid for extras thereon or for the full completion and equipment of such steamers, together with all vouchers for such expenditure; and also of all contracts made since then for any repairs or alterations to any of such steamers, and of all moneys paid for such repairs or alterations whether by contract or otherwise, together with the vouchers for all such expenditures. Also a general statement of the nature and character of the changes or alterations made in such steamboats or their machinery since they were taken over by the department, with the cost in the case of each steamer.—(Mr. Davies, P.E.I.)

Return showing a description of each of the industries established in the county of Guysboro' as reported in the census of 1891, showing the names of the several manufacturers engaged in the said industries respectively, also showing the number of employees in each of said industries.—(Mr. Fraser.)

Correspondence in relation to tenders, and of all tenders received by the Government since 1st January, 1890, relating to the purchase of timber limits on Indian Reserves.—(Mr. Devlin.)

Statement showing the number of breweries, distilleries and maltsters' establishments in Canada in the year 1891; the amount of capital invested therein; the value of the output; the amount of wages paid; number of employees, and the revenue derived therefrom.—(Mr. Flint.)

Copies of all letters, documents, orders and correspondence relating to improvements of Spanish River, District of Algoma; also, instructions to engineers in regard to the survey of said river and the reports of the engineer.—(Mr. Devlin.)

Return giving the names of the Junior Judges in the province of Ontario and dates when appointed, the name and population of the county to which appointed, also the salary and allowance of each of such Judges.—(Mr. Lister.)

Return showing the date on which the steamer "Stanley" commenced running between Charlottetown, P.E.I., and Pictou, N.S.; the date said steamer commenced running between Georgetown, P.E.I., and Pictou; how many trips were made; the date of each trip; how many mail bags were carried each trip; the date at which said steamer stopped carrying mails; the number of passengers and the amount of freight carried to and from Prince Edward Island; the amount of expenses and revenue for the winter 1893-94, in connection with said service.—(Mr. Perry.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 5.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 29th May, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 128) to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said: The object of the Bill is to shorten the time in certain constituencies between nomination day and polling day.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INTEREST ON JUDGMENTS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 129) to amend the Act respecting interest. He said: The provisions of the statutes relating to interest on judgments in British Columbia have been repealed. Confusion has arisen in consequence, and some doubts exist as to whether judgments may be made to bear interest in the province of British Columbia, especially as respects County Court judgments. The object of this Bill is to remove that defect by providing that such judgments shall, in future, bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the Bill provide that these judgments shall bear interest irrespective of whether the original debt was an interest-bearing debt or not?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will see that that is a very serious inroad upon the general principle which applies, I think, in all the other provinces.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. So far as I know, in the other provinces, these debts bear interest irrespective of the original contract.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the First Minister would allow me to say a word in reference to the Dominion Elections Act amendment, I would like to ask him if he intends to introduce an amendment so as to make the declaration take place at an earlier date than under the present Act? I think it would be very desirable if the hon. Minister would introduce such an amendment, because the difficulties and the dangers hitherto have arisen in the period between election and declaration. I think it would be well if the First Minister would so amend the law as to have the declaration made as speedily as it is now made in the local elections in the different provinces.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That subject is not touched in the Bill, and my attention has not been called to it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think if the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order, order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I know it is informal, Mr. Speaker, but I am in the habit of getting out of order sometimes. I may say, however, that when the Speaker so rules, I am generally right.

FRANCHISE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not want to press the hon. gentleman, but I notice that he has not introduced to-day the Bill, which stands in his name, to amend the Franchise Act. The hon. gentleman is aware that the revision of the lists is to begin now in a few days.

I suppose he will agree with me that it is important that the nature of the Bill should be known, in order to guide the revising officers in their work.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I hope to make a statement about it to-morrow, and to be able to communicate with the revising officers immediately.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. PERRY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals when the House may expect the return to an Order of the House, moved for by myself on the 14th inst., with reference to the removal of the flag station on the Prince Edward Island Railway from Mill River to Howlan Road. This may not be of much consequence to the hon. Minister himself, but it is of very great consequence to me and to my constituents, who are sorely affected by the change. There is no use in bringing these papers down at the eleventh hour. They were moved for a fortnight ago. All that is asked for is a copy of the petition with the names. I want to find out who the parties are who asked for this change.

Mr. HAGGART. I think I informed the hon. gentleman that the station was moved at the request of the Rev. Mr. Burke, and because of the petition signed by those in the neighbourhood. I think these were the only parties who requested that the change should be made.

Mr. PERRY. I moved for all the papers in connection with the subject. In the first place, I asked at whose recommendation, and the answer was at the recommendation of the Rev. Mr. Burke. I want now to get those papers, and the House has ordered those papers. I made a motion and spoke, and the Minister never thought proper to answer my remarks. He never can hear complaints made by that priest.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to call the attention of the Finance Minister to a misconception of some sort which occurred in the Public Accounts Committee. On the last occasion when that committee met, it was arranged between a number of gentlemen who had business with it, and the acting chairman, the hon. member for Toronto East (Mr. Coatsworth), that it would meet this morning at half-past ten o'clock. At half-past ten a number of gentlemen were in attendance. I believe with witnesses, and they discovered that the committee had met at ten o'clock, contrary to the understanding made with the acting chairman, and had adjourned, either for want of a quorum or for want of business. Now, there can be no doubt whatever that that arrangement was made—my hon. friend beside me was not present on that occasion and I suppose was not cognizant of the arrangement—but I think, in all conscience, that as the error has clearly not been on the part of the gentlemen who had their witnesses in hand, the committee ought to meet either to-morrow or Thursday, whichever will be most convenient to the Government, as well as on Friday. Two days in the week are little enough.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt the difficulty all arose because neither my hon. friend nor myself happened to be there; if we had been there no doubt we would have had it arranged all right. However, as a misunderstanding did take place in one way or another, probably we can arrange to have two meetings held this week. If Thursday is free, we can meet on Thursday. But I have no doubt the chairman will take that in hand.

Mr. BAKER. The notices were sent out for ten o'clock this morning, of course owing to some misunderstanding. The committee met, but the parties were not in attendance, and as there was a meeting of the Committee on Privileges and Elections at 10:15, the committee adjourned to meet at the call of the chairman. I have since been in communication with the hon. gentlemen who had business before the committee, and if it meets with the approval of both sides of the House, I propose to call a meeting on Thursday, so that we may have meetings both on Thursday and Friday, and a full week's work will be put in.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Although no blame can be attached to the chairman of the committee, still the fact that the committee adjourned at its previous meeting to half-past ten, was perfectly well understood, and was so announced by the acting chairman at the time. I myself was in attendance this morning at a few minutes after ten, because I received a notice last night saying ten o'clock, and I saw that it was called for ten instead of half-past, and I thought at any rate I would be present, and was in the hall at the time when the committee very suddenly adjourned at four or five minutes past ten. It was clearly understood by everybody that the committee was to meet at half-past ten, and as these witnesses have travelled from Montreal to be present here, there is some expense and a great deal of inconvenience arising out of the misunderstanding. But myself and a number of other gentlemen who were interested in the inquiries before this committee, were all in attendance, and I went into the committee room and at twenty minutes before the hour when it was arranged that the committee should meet, and found it already adjourned.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I wish to say a word to clear the clerk of the committee of any blame, as I was acting chairman. The previous meeting was called for ten o'clock, and was held at ten o'clock, and when an adjournment took place there was some little discussion as to the time when the committee would meet again. The clerk recorded that it was to meet at ten o'clock, and I have no doubt that was so stated, but apparently after the clerk had left his chair, and without his hearing it, an arrangement was made, as the hon. gentleman says, that the committee should meet at half-past ten. But apparently that decision was never communicated to the clerk, and he sent out notices for ten o'clock. There is no doubt the notices that came to us yesterday for the meeting this morning were for the meeting at ten o'clock, so I would not like it to be thought that the clerk was to blame.

Mr. SPROULE. We met at ten o'clock and remained there until twelve minutes past ten, and as there was no person to go on with the business, we adjourned.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee on Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose each member has in his possession a corrected copy, or a revised copy of the tariff—at least, they should have; and we will take that up and make the emendations that are necessary. They will be largely verbal. I may say that the Dominion Board of Appraisers have been sitting here for a number of days, and I gave them the tariff to look into, and they have given me their suggestions as regards the wording, and the like of that. A number of their suggestions I am going to ask the committee to adopt as we pass through.

Mr. MULOCK. Are there any clerical errors among these?

Mr. FOSTER. There may be.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Can the Minister tell us how many changes have been made in the tariff since the Budget was delivered, how many changes there have been from specific to ad valorem duties, and how many back again from ad valorem to specific? It would be very interesting if we could find that out.

Mr. FOSTER. I should be very sorry just now to curtail my hon. friend's imagination to so great an extent as to give him all the changes. After we are through with the tariff, it will be easy for him to count them up. I desire to add to the reciprocal proviso these words: "If the above products are imported from a country that imposes no duty on the like product or products."

Mr. MULOCK. Does the Minister understand that the proviso is to be construed in this way: that if the country from which any of the articles mentioned agrees to admit the articles free, thereupon it becomes free in this country?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. So a foreign country has practically the power to declare what our tariff shall be, and the United States, for example, will be able by making an article free to bring this proviso into effect. In other words, it is to be brought into effect by the action of a foreign country.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as that particular article is concerned, we frame our tariff on certain conditions, which may be availed of by foreign countries.

Mr. MULOCK. We impose a duty on a certain article by this tariff, but at the same time declare that if a foreign country, say the United States, shall place the article on the free list, that at once places it on the free list in this country, and this is done by the action of a foreign country.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. It is a good deal like handing over the framing of our tariff to a foreign country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It appears by this clause that our tariff is to be framed at Washington.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we are framing it here.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This state of things was very much regretted some time ago, and very much alarm was shown that our tariff might be framed at Washington. Now, by the terms of this clause it appears that the Government at Washington will make the tariff for this very loyal Government.

Item agreed to.

Marble in slabs or blocks, sawn on more than two sides, 20 per cent.

Mr. McMULLEN. The duty on marble in the rough is reduced to 10 per cent, while the duty on the manufactured article is kept at 30 per cent, so that the manufacturers of marble monuments have a clear 20 per cent protection.

Mr. FOSTER. The whole of it is labour.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a reason. These are largely required for funeral purposes, and it is well that even in the next world there should be some reminiscences of the tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. And considering that according to the view of the Liberal party they are every day getting poorer, we ought to give them their headstones at 5 per cent less.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It may come handy for some of you after a while.

Item agreed to.

Slates, slate mantels, and other manufactures of slate, n.e.s., school or writing slates, and roofing slates, 30 per cent ad valorem, providing the duty on roofing slate shall not exceed 75 cents per square for black or blue, or 90 cents per square for coloured slates.

Mr. FOSTER. I am here putting into one item the two bearing 30 per cent, leaving slate pencils at 25 per cent.

Mr. MULOCK. The duty, as mentioned in your Budget speech, was 20 per cent, and now you are making it 30 per cent. Why this increase?

Mr. FOSTER. Twenty per cent was too low. That was explained when we went back to 30 per cent, with the unanimous consent of the committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was no consent on this side of the House to any increase of duty.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We had better make it English. The hon. gentleman has in the tariff the statement that black and blue slates are not to exceed 75 cents a square, and coloured slates not to exceed 90 cents a square. Black and blue slates are coloured. You had better make it slates of other colours.

Mr. GIBSON. According to the sliding scale, when coloured slates are worth $6 a square, the duty will be 15 per cent, and when worth $9 a square, it will only be 10 per cent. It will be pretty hard to tell what the duty on slates will be. It is not to exceed 90 cents a square, but it may be 15 per cent or 30 per cent, according to the value.

Mr. FOSTER. You could only collect one or the other when the two are equal.

Mr. GIBSON. There are no coloured slate quarries in this country, and why impose a sliding duty? There should be a fixed duty per square, because no man can tender with any degree of intelligence upon a coloured roof, if the duty is to be altered to suit the price per square.

Mr. FOSTER. He will never make a tender until he knows what he can buy his slate for.

Mr. GIBSON. How can he tell? Supposing I tender on coloured slate to-day, and it is $9 a square, you can only charge me 10 per cent. Perhaps a month from now, the work is not far advanced, and somebody else has the same kind of buildings to put up, and the price of slate is down to $4.50, and he has to pay 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. A contractor has always to look out for the rise and fall in price, and there is no more difficulty in this than in any other matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will slates with the frames on come in at 30 per cent, the same as without frames?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; writing or school slates.

Mr. MULOCK. Where are slates from which slate pencils and school slates are produced, found? Is that quality of slate now being developed in Canada?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; school slates are being made down in Quebec, in Richmond.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that the only place in Canada where slates for that purpose is quarried?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure.

Mr. MULOCK. Then we are taxing every parent 30 per cent ad valorem for the benefit of the slate quarry in the county of Richmond. I see that we imported, last year, 485,000 squares of slate. I was going to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether it would be possible, in preparing the Trade and Navigation Returns, to subdivide the subjects better, so that we could understand the different kinds of goods. For example, under the subject of "slate," we have one group called "school and writing slates, porcelain, &c." It seems to me that these ought to be subdivided, and slate porcelain ought not to be included with school slates. Now, I ask the Minister in all fairness, whether he thinks it reasonable to impose a duty of 30 per cent on school slates just for the enrichment of the owners of one slate quarry in the Dominion? I presume the question is not yet out of committee, and that it is quite in order to discuss it, and if a mistake has been made, to correct it. For my part, I think this duty very unreasonable. The people in the country find themselves taxed a good deal for the education of their children; and the Minister, who at one time took an interest in education, is proposing, practically, to impose a fine upon education. It may be true that 30 per cent upon one slate does not amount to much in the eyes of the hon. Minister, but the extra cost upon this necessary implement in education and upon others altogether amount to a considerable tax upon parents. We ought to encourage education by making it as cheap as possible.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). It is too cheap now.

Mr. GIBSON. Now that the hon. gentleman has his own education he thinks that the cost of education should be increased.

Mr. MULOCK. I will allow the hon. gentleman to elaborate his views whenever he pleases. I do not think he would dare to commit himself to any such idea. We are speaking of a tax imposed upon a necessary of the most rudimentary education.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman might have a stronger position if he was correct in his figures; but the duty is not 30 per cent but 25 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Emery wheels, 25 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to add some words so as to make it read :

Emery wheels and manufactures of emery, 25 per cent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is not in this list at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know whether it is expected that the copies of the amended tariff which were supposed to be printed and furnished the members of this House are to be furnished? It is most unfair and discourteous to members of this House to ask them to consider items of this kind without having these copies before them. We have but one single copy on this side of the House, and I think it is a gross insult—nothing short of it—to ask the committee of this House to consider serious changes in the tariff without giving members the opportunity of seeing what is proposed to be done. I protest against such treatment. The Minister goes up and down the record, taking an item here and an item there asking us to agree to changes, while we have not anything to guide us in discussing any question however important.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman ought not to get into an excited state over this item above all others. I quite acknowledge that it would be much better if the revised copies were here. But, through some error, they are not here. However, we expect them every moment. But even if the revised copies were here, I would still have to ask the hon. gentleman to exercise his memory and his patience in reference to any changes that are made. The words added to this item are simply for amplification and explanation, and not to change the duty. Even if the hon. gentleman had the revised copy before him, he would still have to depend upon the chairman's reading of the item for the additional words. It is not absolutely necessary to add "manufactures of emery" to this clause, because such goods would be held to be under that clause by the similitude clause of the Customs Act. But it is better, in order to avoid different ruling in different ports that the item should be amplified, and that is why the words are added.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister, when he asked the House to go into committee, said that copies of the amended tariff would be placed in the hands of hon. members in a few minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. That was what I expected.

Mr. McMULLEN. And here we have passed about a dozen items without having these copies before us. He would give us to understand that no alterations have been made. He must admit that the duty on marble has been reduced one-half—from 20 per cent to 10 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. No; before we went into committee the duty was 10 per cent, and that is exactly what it is now.

Mr. McMULLEN. If I have made a mistake it is because we have so many printed alterations not now authentic. Here is a copy in which the duty on marble is given at 20 per cent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. My copy says the same.

Mr. McMULLEN. But it appears that it was afterwards reduced to 10 per cent, for it is so stated in the corrected copy just this moment placed in my hands. But how are members to be guided in coming to a just decision on these matters if they have not the means of understanding the changes that are made?

Mr. FOSTER. I should have expected that a prudent, business-like, painstaking man, like my hon. friend, would have had his copy of the tariff resolutions before him, and, as they were amended, would have marked changes in each item. That is the way we do on this side of the House. But if the hon. member dispenses with business methods, he must not get into a pet and blame others.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not agree with my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) about printing this tariff. We have had it printed three times already.

An hon. MEMBER. Four times.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Four times is it? Well, it may be more for all I know. But I know we can scarcely get two copies alike. I object to my hon. friend urging the Minister to print any more, because the outlay is going to be so enormous that we can scarcely afford it. I would suggest to the Minister that he should call in all the old copies, the five or six changes that have been made; and as there may be five or six more, not to print it until we know what we ought to print.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before this item is adopted, the hon. gentleman ought to state what the effect of the change will be.

Mr. FOSTER. It will have no effect on the revenue, as in any case, even without the addition of these words, manufactures of emery would be dutiable at this rate under the ruling of the department. Such things as hones and the like of that, made out of emery, would come under it. It is not a very large item, but the appraisers thought it better that it should be named, in order that at every port they might have a guide without inquiring at Ottawa.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who are the appraisers?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know their names.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many have you?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know ; there are enough.

Item agreed to.

Upper leather, including dongola, cordovan, kid, lamb, sheep and calf.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to add to that "kangaroo, alligator and chamois skins."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that to promote Australian trade ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes ; otherwise these marsupial coverings would be 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Iron in pigs, iron kentledge and scrap iron, ferro-silicon and spiegeleisen, $4 per ton ; ferro-manganese, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. I want ferro-silicon and spiegeleisen to go in with ferro-manganese at 5 per cent. That reduces the duty on these two.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These are special names. What do they mean ?

Mr. FOSTER. They are a species of iron or iron ore, which are used in the process of the manufacture of steel and of some kinds of iron. They are not produced in this country. They act rather as elements with the others in producing steel and iron.

Mr. MULOCK. Who has the classifying of the articles as set forth in the Trade and Navigation Returns ?

Mr. FOSTER. They are classified under instructions from the central office, classified in the office, in fact ; but the headings, as I understand it, are also made at different ports, and divided off by instruction, so as to make it easy to collect them here.

Mr. MULOCK. Would it not be possible to have further subdivisions in the Trade and Navigations Returns ?

Mr. FOSTER. It would ; but it would make it very intricate to take every item. They are extending it from year to year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the present value of these two compounds that you propose to reduce to the 5 per cent list ?

Mr. FOSTER. They run about $40 to $50 a ton.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I remember aright, that is beyond the price of the best charcoal iron.

Mr. FOSTER. Ferro-manganese runs up to $50 and $60 a ton.

Item agreed to.

Universal milled or rolled edge steel plate, not exceeding 30 inches wide, and plates or sheets of steel over 30 inches wide, and one-quarter of an inch and over in thickness, 12½ per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. Instead of the words "not exceeding," put "less than." And in the next line drop out the word "over," and say "30 inches wide and over."

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What becomes of those that are 30 inches now ?

Mr. FOSTER. By these changes we make the two exactly coterminous.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to change the wording of the item respecting shoe tacks to the following : shoe tacks, ½ ounce to 4 ounces to the 1,000, 1 cent per 1,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Where are these tacks made ?

Mr. FOSTER. They are manufactured in different places in Hamilton, Montreal, St. John, N.B., so that the industry is quite widely distributed.

Mr. MULOCK. This change permits the entry of tacks of different weights, from ½ an ounce to 4 ounces per 1,000. Is the tax upon the weight or the number ? In my opinion, the Finance Minister is leaving open the door to fraud.

Mr. FOSTER. I am making the item clear.

Mr. MULOCK. Although in one case the tacks may be eight times as heavy as in another, the same duty is imposed. In my opinion, this is a very extraordinary system of taxation.

Mr. GIBSON. The duty is in reality $640 a ton on ½ ounce tacks, while on the 4 ounce tacks the duty is equivalent to $80 a ton. Not bad protection at all for the Hamilton Rolling Mills. I think that the Minister of Finance is altogether wrong when he says that the matter is infinitesimal. It is when you count it by the tacks, but it is not when you count it on a duty of $640 a ton on iron.

Mr. FOSTER. It takes quite a time to get a ton of iron into a ton of tacks. The average value of the imports last year was 5¾ cents a pound.

Item agreed to.

Wrought iron or steel nuts and washers, iron or steel rivets, bolts with or without threads, nut and bolt and hinge blanks, less than ¾ of an inch in diameter, 1 cent per pound and 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. TAYLOR. I may say that under the old tariff there was the same classification of these articles, and nuts and bolts less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter had a duty of 1½ cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem, while the other larger articles had a duty of 1 cent a pound and 25 per cent ad valorem. Now, you reduce the smaller bolt from the 1½ cents per pound and 30 per cent, to 1 cent a pound and 25 per cent ad valorem, while the larger bolts you only reduce from 1 cent a pound and 25 per cent ad valorem to 1 cent a pound and 20 per cent. That is not a sufficient protection for the smaller bolts, and, compared with the larger goods, it is very unfair. We have at Gananoque an industry carried on by Mr. Gillies, employing from 70 to 100 men, making these bolts. There are opposition concerns at Hamilton, Toronto, and Montreal. Now, while the 1 cent per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem may be ample protection on the larger iron bolts or the strap and T hinges, 1 cent per pound and 25 per cent ad valorem is not a protection at all on the small bolt. I have here a sample of the smaller-sized bolt, and there are 50 of them to the pound. The waste on the nut and thread on the small bolt is such that if the item is allowed to pass as it is now, we will have none of them made in this country. One hundred of these bolts which are now made in Canada are sold for 29½ cents, and it costs 28½ cents to produce them. So that there is but 1 cent per hundred profit on them, as Mr. Gillies assures me—and I have the figures here—and even under the old tariff of 1½ cents per pound and 30 per cent, there was quite a number of them imported. If this reduction is now made, it simply means wiping out of this industry in Canada, and I hope that the Minister will reconsider this item, and change it into 1½ cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem, which will even then be a reduction on the old tariff. I think it was the intention to have it printed that way, as I understood, but I see it is left remain at 1 cent per pound and 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is there not the same waste no matter where these bolts are made?

Mr. TAYLOR. No doubt there is, but in Canada each of our concerns are manufacturing a full line, whereas, in the United States, and other places, they manufacture nothing but one size, and so they can produce them with much less labour than we can, because they are not put to the expense of changing the dies. At the same time, we have to pay ½ cent per pound duty on the raw material.

Mr. MULOCK. But it is produced in this country.

Mr. GIBSON. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) pretend to say that one manufacturer in the United States makes nothing but that sized bolt?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know; they run into lines more than we do in this country.

Mr. GIBSON. They make all sizes, though.

Mr. TAYLOR. That may be, but I know that to-day, owing to the depressed state of the market of the United States, they are willing to sell them at any price to get money. I think that the manufacturers of this country who employ a large number of men, should receive ample protection, not only on this line of goods, but on every other line, so as to enable them to employ our people at home. I do hope that the Minister will consider this industry, as it is a large one. The consumer has nothing to complain of when he can buy one hundred bolts like this, made in the country, for 29½ cents.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman's statement is that if the Minister puts down the tariff he will get some revenue from the importation of these bolts, while if he puts up the tariff, as the hon. member wants him to do, he will get no revenue at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. If he puts it down he will get revenue, because the bolts will be made abroad.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is now getting his raw material cheap from which these bolts are made, because we are paying a bonus of $4 a ton upon it. Is not that more than equivalent to the half cent a pound taken off?

Mr. TAYLOR. I want this industry treated fairly. Seventy-five per cent of the output of bolts in the country consists of small bolts under three-eighths of an inch diameter.

Mr. MULOCK. What did the duty under the old tariff amount to ad valorem?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know. For the larger bolt industry I think 1 cent a pound and 25 per cent ample protection, but it is not enough to protect the smaller bolt industry.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the hon. gentleman going to allow for the reduction in his raw material under the new policy? The Minister has explained that the new tariff is going to give him cheaper iron. Will that make up for the reduced protection on the bolts?

Mr. TAYLOR. The smaller bolts suffer more than the larger. The bolts above three-eighths of an inch in diameter, which had 1 cent a pound and 25 per cent, have now 1 cent a pound and 20 per cent, while the bolts under that size, which had 1½ cents a pound and 30 per cent, now have 1 cent and 25 per cent; so that the smaller bolt is less able to bear the reduction than the larger.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman will explain what labour is expended in making a ton of these bolts, he might throw some light on the subject. This 1 cent a pound must certainly amount to more than the whole amount of wages paid, and yet the hon. gentleman would lead the committee to suppose that the protection is not enough to enable the manufacturers to pay the wages out of the public treasury, or out of the pockets of the consumers, which is the same thing.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can only give the cost paid by Mr. Gillies, of Gananoque, for making 100 bolts three-sixteenths of an inch diameter by $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch long. The labour costs 21 cents, and the material $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents, making a total of $28\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and the wholesale price is $29\frac{1}{2}$ cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the weight of the bolts?

Mr. TAYLOR. These bolts are 100 to the pound.

Mr. GIBSON. The hon. gentleman is asking for a protection to the extent of $36.70 a ton, while he is now receiving, according to his own showing, $31.80 a ton, which I think is not a bad protection at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. And he pays nothing on his raw material.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like very much to go as far as I could to meet the views of the hon. gentleman who has spoken with respect to this item. There was some regard had to the difference in the sizes of the bolts, and the protection on the smaller size is larger than that on the other. There have been, of course, reductions in the raw material, and if the hon. gentleman will make the calculation of the cost of his raw material, the value of the output, and the ad valorem duty on that, he will see that after all he has a pretty large protection—one which, I think, is as much as could reasonably be given to the industry. We all see that difficulties are now felt owing to the present abnormal state of the trade. Markets are congested on the other side, people there want money, and under these circumstances they are apt to sell at prices down to cost, and sometimes below cost, and we in Canada have at this moment to compete with that abnormal state of things. But it is not to be supposed that that will last, and I feel pretty certain that when things are again in their normal condition the protection given here will keep this industry in this country. I hope it will. If I thought it would not I would be inclined to give a little more, but it seems to me that this is a pretty stiff protection.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. Minister of Finance has made an extraordinary statement. He says that markets are congested and prices abnormally low, and that is the reason why the taxes should be high here.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say any such thing. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, and does not wish to misrepresent me, I will say what I did say. I said that owing to trade in the United States being in an abnormal state, the markets were congested and people had to realize, so that there was a disposition to sell at cost, or below cost, and our industries had at this time to compete with that state of things, and I hoped that when the markets would resume their normal condition this would be found a reasonable protection.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When prices went up. He said personally he would like to give the hon. gentleman more protection if prices remained as they are. What is the object? Why, to make the consumers of this country pay a little more. They have the misfortune sometimes of buying articles, the hon. gentleman thinks, for less than they are worth. Well, that might ruin the man who undertakes to sell to them from abroad, but I do not understand, if a man pays 50 cents for one dollar's worth, how that does him any harm. The hon. gentleman has led the House to suppose that if he had his way—and he will, if things remain as they are—he would give these parties a little more protection, or otherwise the people of this country may be ruined with cheap goods.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I wish to say a word upon this question, because it affects, not only the industry to which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has referred, but some other industries in the country as well. I do not agree with the Minister of Finance that we ought not to be protected against an abnormal market. I think, on the contrary, if there is protection needed, it is to protect our manufacturers against bankrupt markets. Suppose you would have bankrupt markets for two or three years in the United States, and no protection, what would be the consequence? Our manufacturers would have to shut down, and our workingmen would not be able to earn enough to pay for the necessities of life. Give our workingmen something to do and something to earn, so as to pay for the necessities of life, and then they will buy. But if they have no money, they cannot buy. I believe that after our manufacturers have had a protective system which has enabled them to commence operations and to prosper to a certain extent, that protective system should not be discontinued so soon—in some cases, a few years after the industries have been created. I think that the manufacturers have some rights in this country. The farmers have certainly a great deal of right, and their protection has not been reduced by the present tariff, but continued and even extended. But by what right manufacturing industries are to be destroyed, I do not know. It is all very well for speakers opposite to say that it is not in the policy of foreign manufacturers to kill competing industries in this country. I have here a little book which has been issued by the 'Press,' a leading newspaper of New York. Under the head of "Method of crushing rivals," the method is thus described:

The manner in which English capital is used to maintain her manufacturing supremacy is well understood abroad. In any quarter of the globe where a competition shows itself as likely to interfere with her monopoly, immediately the capital of her manufacturers is massed in that particular quarter, and goods are exported in large quantities and sold at such prices that outside competition is effectually counted out. English manufacturers have been known to export goods to a distant market and sell them under cost for years, with the view of getting the market into their own hands.

Take away the protection which our industries enjoy, and our markets will be slaughtered; in two or three years our industries will be killed, and then prices will be raised and the consumers of Canada will be, as they were from 1875 to 1878, entirely at the mercy of the American and English and foreign manufacturers. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to laugh, but they ought to have learned by their experience. They ought to have learned by the election of 1878. In 1874 I ran for the second time for a seat in this Parliament, and I declared myself, in my address to the electors, as a protectionist, at a time when the party to which I belonged had not yet declared in favour of protection. The hon. Mr. Laurier, the leader of the Opposition to-day, was then in favour of protection. The hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) was also in favour of protection. So was the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Préfontaine), and Mr. Devlin, and Mr. Jétté, who formed the so-called National party on the principles of protection, and the hon. Mr. Joly. But Mr. Mackenzie was not in its favour, and therefore these protectionists became free traders. I have remained ever since a protectionist, and when, in 1878 I saw protection introduced, not only to foster, but to create national industries, I was certainly in favour of it. To-day, we have a very serious difficulty to meet with—the difficulty of re-adjusting the tariff. In 1879, the tariff was a relief to everybody. All the existing industries—and there were very few—were then closed up. Even the sugar industry was closed up. The tariff we brought forward in 1879 was a relief to every one. There is no necessity to disturb it to-day; and if you touch one corner of that tariff which has been in existence for years, you disturb a great many interests. The hon. Minister of Finance ought, therefore, to be very careful not to disturb the very industries he and his predecessors have created. Destroy those industries, and what will be the consequence? In consequence of the bankrupt markets of the United States, and the eagerness of the Americans to sell at any price, even below cost, there will be no chance to compete against these prices here, and in three or four years we will find ourselves at the mercy of the American manufacturers. Hon. gentlemen opposite should have learned by the experience of 1878 and 1882 and 1887 and 1891. They should know that the people are in favour of protection. Take the farmers in my county, whom I see every week. They are in favour of protection for the produce of the farm, but, at the same time, they would be very sorry indeed to see any of our manufactures destroyed, because they know that these furnish them with a market for their products. I hope the Minister of Finance will consider seriously before he decides to close up any manufacturing establishments in this country.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). This is an industry which was called into existence by a National Policy Government. We are now revising the tariff, in the light of the National Policy, and if it is shown, as the manufacturers of these bolts are prepared to show, that the proposed change will damage their business and cause them to close up, it is our duty as a National Policy party and Government to give them sufficient protection—to give them the protection they had under the former tariff. I would ask the hon. Minister to hold this over until the manufacturers can make their representations known to him.

Mr. McKAY. I would also ask the hon. Minister to let this item stand over, and see if he cannot restore the protection which these manufacturers enjoyed before. I am in a position to say, from the knowledge I have acquired, that the protection they have hitherto had was not more than they actually needed. It was higher than at present, but still not high enough to keep American goods out of the market. I do not agree in the opinion that the people of this country should take advantage of the abnormal state of the market on the other side. That is the time our workingmen should be protected. I hope the hon. gentleman does not want to see our workingmen driven out of this country and placed in the position in which the American workingmen of the United States are at present. We should keep them employed and give them sufficient protection to insure their being kept employed. Two of the hon. gentlemen who preceded me in the representation of the city of Hamilton were elected in 1874 as protectionists, on their appeal to the city as protectionists. They came to Ottawa as ardent protectionists to represent that city; but when they found that Mr. Mackenzie and his party were not in favour of protection, they abandoned their principles. Consequently, in 1878, the country, and the city of Hamilton in particular, had become reduced to such a condition that the people saw the necessity for a protectionist Government, and drove those representatives out, and elected protectionists in their place. I think the National Policy should be maintained, and trust the Finance Minister will take heed of the representations made to him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is a very interesting discussion which the hon. gentleman and his friends are carrying on. We have been here two and one-half months and the hon. gentleman has not progressed sufficiently to satisfy those on the other side.

They ask him to allow the tariff to stand for further consideration, believing that the hon. Minister may receive so much light that he will be enabled to allow the tariff to remain as it was before. Well, Sir, when the Minister proposed the changes in the tariff, these hon. gentlemen approved those changes. They sought to assure the House, and they sought to assure the country through the press, that these changes were very considerable, almost revolutionary, and they seemed surprised to find the Minister going so far in the direction of tariff reform. Now the hon. gentlemen say they do not want any tariff reform. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) says the tariff was better as it was before—

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a sentiment which the hon. gentleman sanctions. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. McKay) has given expression to the same view. That hon. gentleman asks us if we want the labouring men of Canada thrown out of employment as they are thrown out of employment in the United States. Why, Sir, bad as our tariff is, the tariff of the United States is far worse. That tariff which was to have made a very paradise of that country, the hon. gentleman now admits has produced—at all events it has not prevented—such a state of things that the majority of those engaged in industrial pursuits are at this hour out of employment. Does the hon. gentleman think that that system is going to produce any better effects in this country? What is there in the position of Canada that is to make the condition of the industrial labourer here any better than that of the industrial labourer of the United States? There is nothing whatever, Sir. But this is perfectly clear—that if the people of Canada want to retain the industrial classes in this country they must give them cheaper means of subsistence and better opportunities in the race of life. That the Minister of Finance was half disposed to give them. He took a few steps in that direction in proposing his new tariff, but he has been resiling from that position ever since and recalling everything he has ever done to relieve the masses of the people from taxation.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh! how exaggerated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says this is exaggerated. Why, Sir, I was shown on Saturday a bill of woollen goods the tax on which under the old tariff would have been 25 per cent, while under this tariff it is 42½ per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Produce the goods.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Woollen shawls are goods of the class I have mentioned. And I think, before this discussion is over I will be able to convince the hon. gentleman that he has increased the taxation on a great number of articles beyond what it was under the old tariff. Of course those gentlemen who think that this country exists for the benefit of men who choose to invest their capital in speculative enterprises will approve of this. But the vast majority of the people of this country who have an idea that the masses have some rights that ought to be respected will come to a very different conclusion.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat makes the statement that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House cheered the Finance Minister when he made his Budget speech and brought down his tariff. We did so, and we will do so again. We cheered because of the fact that he made the statement that in the revision of the tariff the Government would not wipe out any industry in Canada that could be maintained by a reasonable duty. And if, by the changes made, an industry was to be seriously affected, it was no doubt his intention, after the tariff was laid on the Table, to have such points thoroughly investigated.

Mr. MULOCK. You did not think he was sincere.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, we did; and we think he is sincere to-day. I do not think it is the intention of the Finance Minister or the Government, or of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, to cause any Canadian industry to suffer by the changes in the tariff. Such a thing would be contrary to the policy of the Government and to the policy of gentlemen on this side of the House supporting that Government. Now, I just make this statement: The gentleman in whose interest I am speaking is not a political supporter of mine, but he has some $70,000 invested in a manufacturing industry in my town. He writes me to the following effect:—

Unless the duty is increased on the smaller size of bolts, there is nothing left for us to do but to quit making them, as we are now selling at a loss.

Now, I am confident the National Policy has brought about competition in this country in these articles. When it came into effect you could not buy one hundred bolts of this size made in Great Britain and the United States for 29½ cents. You can to-day buy them at that figure in half a dozen places. bolts made in Canada, the production of which employed Canadian labour. I consider the statement of the Finance Minister that if by this tariff we were going to wipe out a Canadian industry he would call a halt, is one which applies here. I think it must be plain to anybody on looking at the tariff that if 1½ cents and 30 per cent on the small size and 1 cent and 25 per cent on the larger was right before, then 1 cent and 20 per cent on the larger size and 1 cent and 25 per cent on the smaller size is not a due maintenance of the proportion of duty. I am satisfied if the hon. Minister gives this matter his attention—because it is a serious matter, as this is an industry employing many men—he will alter the proportion so as to make it 1½ cents and 25 per cent and 1 cent and 20 per cent on the larger, which would be making a corresponding rate of duty. I have already referred to strap and T hinges, and these other heavy goods. They are made in many places in Canada and sold at much lower prices than before, owing to home competition and the employment of Canadian labour. The protection is sufficient. The manufacturer at Gananoque, of whom I speak, as I have already said, is not a political supporter or friend of mine, but this is a Canadian industry, and when such an industry is in question, I do not care whether it is in my own town or any other, I do not care whether the proprietor be Conservative or Reformer, so long as it is employing Canadian labour and supplying Canadian goods to the Canadian people at as cheap or cheaper rates than we could import them, I stand up for protection of that industry.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not know whether it is safe for me to occupy the time of the committee for a moment in telling a story. I know it is a risky thing to do, but I am so strongly impressed with the direct applicability of this story to the present attitude of the hon. gentlemen on the other side that I am going to risk my reputation as a member of the House by trying to relate it. I only heard it the other day, and it is pertinent to this item. I heard the other day that a party of young men went out on a hunting expedition, and undertook to do their own cooking by turns. The one who was chosen first to do the cooking undertook it on the condition that the first man who grumbled at the food would be obliged afterwards to do the cooking himself. Well, Sir, it is wonderful how they enjoyed the food for a long time. At last, the cook determined to be relieved from his position, and he filled up a baking of bread full of salt. It was placed upon the table, and one of the party began to eat it, and was almost choked. "Oh, thunder, that salt!" he said, "I am choking, but I like it, I like it, I like it." Although these items choke hon. gentlemen opposite, although half a dozen of them have just been bitterly protesting against the items, still they will swallow them at the request of the Finance Minister. After this tariff Bill is passed, even if the hon. gentleman leaves it in this way, they will go before the people and say: We like it, we like it, we like it; it is perfect.

Mr. FRASER. I really think the Finance Minister should let this item stand. There are important questions for consideration. The hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) advises him to consult with the manufacturers. It would be exceedingly interesting to continue a discussion upon this question, only I am afraid that there would be a good deal of bolting on the other side. But really nothing shows the character of the whole tariff more than this discussion. Here are several hon. gentlemen who have some interest or other to conserve, getting up and disapproving of this item. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) distinctly tells us that he wants this duty changed in the interest of the man who is opposed to him. I suppose he wants to make a protectionist of him.

Mr. IVES. Is that the motive that actuated hon. gentlemen opposite when they were asking for more protection for agricultural implements?

Mr. FRASER. No. We said it was unfair that one article should be taxed 200 per cent and another article only taxed 20 per cent. But the hon. gentleman from Leeds can see that in helping this unfortunate opponent of his he is at the same time helping all his own friends, because if he can plead to have the duty fixed in favour of an opponent, he can plead with twice as much eloquence to have it fixed to help his own friends. That is the character of the whole business. Whenever hon. gentlemen opposite can forward their own interests by pleading in behalf of an opponent, they will stand up and do so, but there is no question whether the matter is in the interest of the whole community. The only thought is about a particular town, or a particular constituency, as if this great country was run by parish politics of that kind, and you were going to make it great and wealthy by simply protecting some particular interest in some particular town. That is the whole policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. At the same time, lest there should be any trouble among the Finance Minister's friends, I do not wish that he would let this item stand. It would show us two things. In the first place, it would show us how far these hon. gentlemen, if they did not get what they wanted, would still feel inclined to follow the Finance Minister, and in the second place, it would show us whether the men who are coming here to show him that he is wrong—although he has taken over a year to consider this question of bolts, nuts and screws—whether they are able to bring sufficient influence to bear upon him to cause him to change his mind in the direction desired by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. McMULLEN. I hardly think the Finance Minister can stand the appeal of the chief whip of his party on behalf of this man who makes bolts. We know that some time ago when the Finance Minister was considering the question of protection on democrat wagons, which he had reduced to 25 per cent, at the mandate of the whip, he increased it to 35 per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was a clerical error.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, I think the Finance Minister had better, in response to the appeal of the whip, pronounce this a clerical error also. Now, the hon. gentleman intimates that the manufacturer of these bolts is a Grit. I wonder if the manufacturer of democrat wagons is a Tory. If he is, then a clerical error was brought into play to help a Tory, but a clerical error will not do duty in order to help a Grit.

Mr. SPROULE. The mistake the hon. gentleman makes is in supposing that this is all done with a selfish motive, for the purpose either of converting a man to Conservative principles, as they seem to think, or to strengthen themselves in the coming election. Hon. gentlemen would have done well to make an inquiry themselves into this case before coming to any conclusion. I think there is honesty in human nature yet. Here is a man engaged in a business that furnishes employment to a number of girls and boys who are earning their daily bread by these means, and from a close calculation made by the men engaged in this business they come to the conclusion that in the event of the protection being insufficient on the articles they manufacture, they will be obliged to stop work and to throw all these hands out of employment. This question, therefore, becomes a very serious matter to all those who are earning their bread and butter by this work. I was in that shop myself, and that man laid before me a calculation which I believe was correct. I have reason to believe that he is an honest and honourable man, notwithstanding that he is a Reformer, and that he is a truthful man. He said to me: I am to-day obliged, if I continue this business, to put in another machine that will cost me $500, but I will not do it until I know what the condition of the market will be; until this tariff question is settled. It is a great question with me whether I will be able in future to continue this business on account of the reduction in the protection, and if I find I am losing money, of course I must close up. Now, if he does close it up the result will be that he will throw numbers of these young people out of employment. There are little girls handling these bolts, and it requires just the same labour to handle a bolt that weighs one-fiftieth of an ounce as it does to handle one that weighs an ounce, and when it takes four of them to weigh an ounce there is four times the amount of labour required. Therefore, I think in all justice there ought to be a larger protection. I do not say that the protection is too small, but if it is only sufficient on the large bolt it is certainly not sufficient on the smaller one, because in handling the smaller bolts there is much more labour, and they have to be much more attentive to their duty, and finer machinery is required for their manufacture. If it is a fact, as I believe it is, that in the event of this duty being put so low that this factory will have to stop work, it becomes a very serious question for large numbers of people who earn their bread and butter in the business.

Item agreed to.

Knife blades, or knife blanks, in the rough, unhandled, for use by electro-platers, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. Strike out the word "unhandled."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is your object in striking out the word "unhandled"?

Mr. FOSTER. The articles come in not with handles on them, but there are blades with irons which are to make the basis of the handles. In some of the ports they are considered to be handled, but really they are in the rough.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to draw attention to the item of surgical instruments, on which a duty is proposed to be imposed of 15 per cent ad valorem. On all possible grounds, surgical instruments should be admitted perfectly free. The hon. Finance Minister knows it is of very great importance to the medical profession, and also to those who have occasion to call in the services of surgeons, that surgical instruments should be of the best possible quality, and it seems to me if there is any article which should be placed on the free list it is that of surgical instruments required to be used for the relief of persons suffering either from complicated diseases or from severe accident. Wholly and entirely apart from the question of protection or from policy, we should not place any duty on such articles.

Mr. FOSTER. I recognize that there is something in what the hon. gentleman has said, and that we should proceed in the direction of making the duty as low as possible. But these are not surgical appliances, but the tools of professional men, and these professional men have no more right to get in their tools duty free than have labouring men or artisans. They are professional men, well educated, who have their profession, and who obtain good pay for the practice of their profession, and when the Government admit surgical instruments at a low rate of duty they are doing all that is necessary. Surgical instruments were formerly 20 per cent, and we have made them 15 per cent, and I cannot agree to the plea that they should be made free. Why should we charge 20 per cent or 30 per cent on the tools of an artisan and allow a professional man who may charge $50 or $100 or even $500 in the case of the hon. gentleman for taking off a leg, to obtain his instruments duty free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it became necessary that I should have my leg taken off, I should desire it to be done with as well-tempered an instrument as could be obtained. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that this appeal, based on the idea of placing surgical instruments on a par with mattocks, axes and similar tools, constitutes a very obvious fallacy. It is in the interest of the patient that the surgeon should employ the very best surgical instrument he could obtain, and it is known that there are members of the medical profession, especially those in the country districts, who are not very well paid, who, in fact, are very poorly paid indeed, and it is of very considerable importance to them that they should obtain instruments of this kind in the cheapest possible market and of the best possible character. The hon. gentleman may not be aware that first-class surgical instruments are very expensive, and if 15 per cent or 20 per cent is added, there is danger of some practitioners employing inferior instruments with very disastrous results.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of Finance would not like to have his leg amputated with a buck-saw.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the Finance Minister had to submit to even a minor surgical operation with some of the instruments which country practitioners are obliged to use because they are not able to buy instruments of better quality, he would be quite willing to have surgical instruments admitted free.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to add to the item stamped tinware, japanned ware and galvanized iron ware, the words, "including signs made from those materials."

Mr. MULOCK. What are the classes of goods supposed to be included under those terms?

Mr. FOSTER. All japanned ware. It is for the sake of making the item more plain to the customs officers that I propose the addition.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the Minister is making a very serious mistake, for he is creating a doubt as to the true mode of construing the clause. It is unwise in a clause like this containing generic terms to introduce a specific definition of particular items. By adding this specific definition you are limiting the general scope of the words, and you are opening the door to a doubtful construction of these general words. I am satisfied that no lawyer has recommended the introduction of these words there. If the officers make a mistake they can be instructed as to their duty by the head of the department. That is the proper way to keep them right, and not to put into an Act of Parliament words that ought not to be in it.

Mr. FOSTER. What we have to aim at is the practical application of these items and to make them as nearly as possible a guide not only to the appraiser who understands exactly what they are, but to every person who has to enter goods in the customs-house. It is all very well to say that you can find out an error and send instructions from headquarters, but what we want to do is to have it so that the whole trade of the country from one end to the other shall get the same kind of goods in at exactly the same duties. It is for that purpose we introduced these words.

Item agreed to.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again in Committee on Ways and Means.

Molasses, testing by polariscope 40 degrees or over, 1½ cents per gallon.

Mr. FOSTER. I omit the words "and not over 60 degrees." Probably very little would test over 60 degrees, but it might do so and yet not be higher than No. 16 Dutch standard of sugar, which would come in free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know how high it could test, but suppose it tested up to 80 degrees on the gallon.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not go above from 56 to 59. Very seldom it would go above 60. It would have to go considerably above 60 to be equal to sugar 16 Dutch standard.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why tax this so very much higher than syrups and molasses of all kinds, n.o.p.?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not tax them so high.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You tax the one five-tenths of a cent per pound, about ten pounds in a gallon.

Mr. FOSTER. Fourteen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is 7 cents per gallon, and here you are taxing molasses which tests 60 degrees, 1½ cents per gallon, which is just about one-fifth.

Mr. FOSTER. This is being taxed much less.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why?

Mr. FOSTER. This is real molasses as nearly as we can get it, which we propose to let come in at a lesser rate of taxation. When it gets below 35, it becomes really unfit for consumption, and this five-tenths of a cent practically prohibits it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You have quite another taxation for this when it comes less than 35 degrees.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; much higher.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not clearly see why one class should be taxed 7 cents, and the other 1½ cents.

Mr. FOSTER. When molasses gets below 40 degrees, it is not very good stuff. Below 35, it is positively vile.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That refers to your item B, but I am referring to the item which comes here, "after all sugars above No. 16."

Mr. FOSTER. That would make the taxation upon syrup considerably higher than on molasses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any sufficient reason for such an enormous difference?

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this class of syrup manufactured in this country?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason of the enormous difference?

Mr. FOSTER. Because of the difficulties that occurred in St. John and Halifax, owing to syrups coming in which were really doctored, mixed up in New York, and which, according to the contention of the Halifax and St. John Boards of Trade, possessed very little sugar qualities at all. They are made largely of glucose, and it is impossible, on looking at them, to say they are not good molasses. We are all interested in keeping that kind out, and the high duty tends to keeping them out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would apply to your inferior molasses, but would hardly apply, in the same way, to the syrups of high grade.

Mr. FOSTER. A medium grade, from 26 to 40 cents.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is clearly on that medium grade, which enters the largest into consumption, that the heaviest duty is put, and it is upon the higher grade, used only by people who can afford to pay a higher price for their syrups, that the lower duty is put.

Mr. FOSTER. An ad valorem duty on doctored syrups would be of very little use. It would allow all that class I have spoken of to come in practically unhindered.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You are establishing three distinct taxes. On the 40 to 60 degrees, you charge 1½ cents per gallon. On those which come below 35 degrees, you have a tax which may amount to 5, 6, 7, or 8 cents per gallon. And then you have a third tax on syrups and molasses of all kinds, n.e.s., the product of the sugar cane, beet root, and all imitations thereof, a duty equal to 7 cents per gallon. I was not present when these matters were discussed, and I do not think they were discussed at any great length, judging from the report in 'Hansard'; and there does not appear to have been any very clear explanation given of the reason. I do not suppose that syrups and molasses of all kinds are a deleterious article.

Mr. FOSTER. Really the lightest taxation is placed upon molasses 40 and over, which is the best article. Then when it gets below 40, and as it goes down to 35, the tax increases, and the article becomes one of less utility.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So far I follow the argument, though not quite clear as to its soundness.

Mr. FOSTER. Then when you get below 35, what you call a high tax, five-tenths of a cent per pound about bars that cheap stuff out. It also has the effect of keeping out doctored and made-up syrups and the like, and is a protection to the refiners in the production of syrups in our country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There I suspect the real reason of the change comes in. It is a protection for the refiner, and it is not for the benefit of the consumer in any degree that the tax of 7 cents per gallon on syrups and molasses of all kinds, n.e.s., is put on. If you carry these two items A and B, syrups and molasses ought to be struck out.

Mr. FOSTER. Where would syrups come then?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This rate should be modified so as to include syrups if you like.

Mr. FOSTER. What would you do with what went below 35?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You propose to tax that 1 cent per gallon for each degree, or fraction of a degree less.

Mr. FOSTER. That is between 40 and 35.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You can easily extend that. I must say I do not like having these three distinct classes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot understand the justice of charging a duty of 7 cents a gallon on the class of syrup which enters most largely into general consumption, and then, when you come to the class used by those who can better afford to pay for a higher grade of syrup—golden syrups—you admit them at a cent and a half. The duty on molasses is equal to 7 cents per gallon, while on these syrups it is 1½ cents. I cannot understand on what principle the hon. gentleman asks the committee to agree to such a low duty upon the higher grades that are used only by the well-to-do, and such a high duty when you come down to the class most largely used in the country. Mr. Chairman, to use a common phrase, there must be a nigger in the fence somewhere. There must be some parties whose interest is to be protected or such an arrangement would not be proposed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the difference between syrups and molasses according to the customs definition?

Mr. FOSTER. Molasses is defined as nearly as it can be defined. It is produced in the process of making cane sugar from the juice of the cane. Syrup is more of a by-product of sugar refining.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must say that these definitions are elastic in the highest degree. Wholly apart from the benevolent motive of protecting the community from an indifferent article it does appear to me one of the queerest regulations I have ever read, that you can import molasses which, tested by polariscope, shows 60 degrees—that is to say, contains something like two-thirds of its weight in sugar—at a duty of 1½ cents per gallon; but if you import molasses at 30 degrees—

Mr. FOSTER. No; that is not molasses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, syrup, if you like the word better—

Mr. FOSTER. “Stuff” would be a better word.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If you import this inferior quality containing only one-third of its weight of sugar, the charge, as nearly as I can make out, is 11½ cents per gallon. Molasses that tests 35 degrees is dutiable at about 6½ cents per gallon. That is to say, the less valuable the article the higher the duty.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be a good thing if we could keep it out of the country, and this will have a tendency to do it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Had you not better at once and for all just legislate that nobody in Canada is to consume any syrups or molasses which are not manufactured in some refinery satisfactory to the Government. That would simplify the position, and we should understand where we are.

Mr. FOSTER. We have always been governed by the principle—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By the principle of looking after the sugar refiners—I know; both the hon. gentleman and his predecessors have done that.

Mr. FOSTER. The people who know what good molasses is, such as the people who live in the Maritime Provinces, all think it would be better to keep this inferior stuff out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend here (Mr. Davies) is from the Maritime Provinces—

Mr. FOSTER. He will subscribe to that doctrine.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I warrant he does not subscribe to the idea of paying 11½ cents per gallon. I cannot understand on what principle these duties are arranged, unless you are prepared to prohibit them as injurious to health.

Mr. FOSTER. Molasses below 35 degrees is about that.

Item agreed to.

Window shades 35 per cent ad valorem, but not less than 5 cents per square yard.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to make it read “Window shade rollers,” and drop out the rest.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you mean by a window shade roller?

Mr. FOSTER. It is the roller on which the shade is mounted, composed of wood, the spring and the brass fittings.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does it include the curtain?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the cost of the ordinary window shade per square yard?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose they run from 75 cents each up.

Mr. GIBSON. 20 cents a running foot. There are 3 square yards in an ordinary window shade.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like if the hon. gentleman could give me the figures.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not got them with me now. I had them here when we discussed the item in committee.

Mr. MULOCK. I am told this 5 cents a square yard is a very excessive rate on some classes of window shades.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to add to the item of window shades these words: “or mounted on rollers.”

Mr. GIBSON. How does the hon. gentleman propose to apply the tax of 5 cents per square yard to rollers?

Mr. FOSTER. I leave that to the Customs officers to do.

Item agreed to.

Antiseptic surgical dressings, such as absorbent cotton, cotton wool, lint, lambs wool, tow, jute, gauzes, and oakum prepared for use as surgical dressing, plain or medicated, 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a new item. At the present time these are generally placed in the unenumerated list.

Mr. MULOCK. On what principle are you taxing these articles?

Mr. FOSTER. On the principle that we want some revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this tax is for revenue purposes, let us understand how much the Finance Minister expects to obtain from it.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell, because these articles have been unenumerated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It strikes me that this is the meanest possible way in which to raise the revenue.

Mr. MULOCK. What about surgical appliances, trusses and artificial limbs?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are taxed 35 per cent ad valorem. Artificial limbs of very excellent quality are now manufactured in the United States. If an unfortunate individual should import an artificial limb, what duty would he have to pay on it? I am aware that it is a heavy tax, but I should like to know exactly how much.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think artificial limbs form a separate item. I do not know exactly how the Customs have ruled on those articles, so as to be able to state off hand.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman's aide-de-camp is absent, or at least one of them. Where is he? We should have him here. He is paid to give us information on matters connected with the Customs, and the Minister of Finance is evidently not au fait in his absence.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is often absent, and he is paid for attending. He takes his $1,000 like a man every year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I certainly do, but I am not expressly paid to give information about the Customs, and the Controller of Customs is, and he should be here on these occasions. He has no business to be absent when the tariff is being put through, because it is as much his duty as it is the duty of the Minister of Finance to be here to give information to the committee, and there are several matters on which questions have been put to-night on which the Minister of Finance was not quite au fait, and, to do justice to the Controller of Customs, he had accumulated some information, be it correct or incorrect, on some of these matters. I do not know but that perhaps he is organizing another expedition to Ulster. If that be the case, it may be that he and some other members of the Government have been deputed to look after volunteers who may be called on to assist their friends in Ireland. We should know where the Controller has gone.

Mr. FOSTER. The Controller will return by and by.

Mr. LANDERKIN. As the Controller of Customs is not here, perhaps we could call on the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. FOSTER. That would have to come in under the unenumerated.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This proposed tax on bandages and similar articles is most objectionable, and should be struck off. Revenue should not be derived in that way. Unfortunately this tax will bear very heavily on the sick poor, and it should be wiped out of the tariff.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before leaving the point in regard to the absence of the Controller of Customs, I certainly think the Finance Minister was not warranted in answering the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) by stating that he took his $1,000 like a little man.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say "like a little man," I said "like a man."

Mr. McMULLEN. If the Minister of Finance will look over the record he will find the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) does not take his indemnity when he is not here, but the Controller of Customs takes his money whether he is here or not. The Controller of Customs is the hired servant of this country, and he should be in his place when the House is in session. He is paid $6,000 a year, which is a very high salary for a man of the ability he is possessed of, and he should be here to render what services he can to the service of his country. The Controller is hired and paid by the country to perform a certain duty, and he should be here to perform that duty unless he has had the written permission of the First Minister. If that is the case we ought to know it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think a case has been made out that should be referred to the Solicitor General.

Item agreed to.

Cloths, not rubber or made water proof, whether of wool, cotton, union, silk, or rami, 60 inches or over in width and weighing not more than 7 ounces to the square yard when imported exclusively for the manufacture of mackintosh clothing, under regulations to be adopted by the Governor in Council, 12½ per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the tax on the finished article?

Mr. FOSTER. Twenty-seven and a half per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the loss of revenue that will accrue from this?

Mr. FOSTER. That would be according to the amount consumed in the business. It is not large at present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman should have made some estimate of that, because, as I understand, this proposition is not going to be of the slightest benefit to the consumer. It is merely going to be a benefit to one or two manufacturers and may involve a considerable loss of revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a benefit to the consumer too, because we reduce the duty upon the rubber goods and upon the mackintosh clothing. In the latter case it was considerably over 35 per cent, and in the other case considerably over 30 per cent, and it is now 27½ per cent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Where is this manufactured ?

Mr. FOSTER. In Montreal and Toronto.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman say why that lower duty is only for the benefit of the manufacturer of rubber goods ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not for the benefit of him alone. It is for the benefit of the consumer as well, because his goods are made cheaper.

Mr. MULOCK. The first person who imports is the manufacturer of rubber goods. He may ultimately sell to the consumer; but he alone can take advantage of this clause, and I want to know why ?

Mr. FOSTER. Because he wants the material for the purpose of his manufacture.

Mr. MULOCK. Why limit it to him ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not limited to him. It is open to any one who chooses to make the goods.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the duty on raw material before ?

Mr. FOSTER. It would be 25 per cent for uncoloured, 30 per cent for coloured. It is now reduced to 12½ per cent.

Mr. MULOCK. That is a compensation to the manufacturer of rubber goods for the reduction of his duty ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. The manufacture of rubber goods in Canada has made wonderful progress in the last five or six years. The larger proportion of what may be called common rubber goods are now made in the Dominion, and the quality is constantly improving. The manufacture of the finer grades of light rubber goods, such as mackintoshes, which are made of either two light pieces of cloth with rubber filling between, or else simply of rubbered cloth, has been started, and has met with some success, and bids fair to become an established industry in the country; but when we reduce the duty on the manufactured article, we gave the manufacturer so small a margin that it was impossible for him to go on. These goods that we are allowing to come in at 12½ per cent are not made in this country, and so the duty does not interfere with any manufacturing industry in the country.

Mr. MULOCK. Why do you not encourage them by giving them a high duty ?

Mr. FOSTER. They will come up to that by and by.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As the infant grows he will want more pap.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, an increase of food is the rule.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And as it contributes more, it will get more in proportion to its contributions.

Mr. McMULLEN. What prevents the manufacturer from bringing this material in for other purposes ?

Mr. FOSTER. Regulations will be framed by the Governor in Council to prevent any being imported surreptitiously to be used for purposes not contemplated. That can be easily arranged.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can understand that it can be arranged, but if a man who uses it for manufacturing waterproofs, chose to import it at 12½ per cent and sell it for other purposes, while others had to pay a higher duty, he might make a good thing out of it.

Mr. FOSTER. The strictest regulations will be made to prevent that.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose all these Orders in Council will be of a general character, and not made for particular persons ?

Mr. FOSTER. They will be for manufacturers of rubber goods as a class.

Item agreed to.

Bullion, gold and silver, in bars, blocks or lingots, and bullion fringe, free.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What particular reason is there for admitting bullion fringe free ? That is an article that might very properly pay duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Just at present I cannot give the reason, except that it is in the old tariff.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You had better strike it out. It is simply an article of luxury, and, without good reason to the contrary, should contribute most assuredly, as well as surgical dressing, for example.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall take a note of the objection.

Coffee, green, except as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike that out, because it has been dealt with already.

Mr. MULOCK. I have received a communication from a dealer in tea, calling attention to a regulation of the department requiring importers to produce certificates from the customs authorities in England. Those certificates cost five shillings apiece to the importer, and this gentleman says it is likely to be a very serious tax, because they do not import in very large quantities at a time. Is it necessary there should be a certificate ?

Mr. FOSTER. There must be some satisfactory proof of the fulfilment of the conditions mentioned in the item dealing with this matter, in order that the importer may get the benefit of the clause.

Mr. MULOCK. That tax will apply to the coffee as well as to the tea. A certificate will be required from the country from which it was imported at first, and it cannot be said that green coffee comes in free when there is a five-shilling tax.

Item agreed to.

Copper, old and scrap, and copper in pigs, bars, rods, and bolts, in lengths not less than six feet, lingots, sheets, plates and sheathing, not planished or coated.

Mr. GIBSON. Will this apply to the scrap?

Mr. FOSTER. No, to the bars, rods and bolts.

Mr. STAIRS. I would like to point out that that word should be "sheathing," not "sheatings." While I am on my feet, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he has put in an item relating to yellow metal as given in item 858 of the old tariff. I have looked in the amended tariff and I cannot find this item. Yellow metal is used for sheathing for ships and boats.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; yellow metal is in the amended tariff.

Item agreed to.

Cyanide of potassium and nitrate of silver, free.

Mr. FOSTER. Leave out "nitrate of silver."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you going to tax it?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; it has always been dutiable at 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Degras.

Mr. FOSTER. Drop out this item; it is covered by another item later.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is degras?

Mr. FOSTER. It is used by tanners, a sort of French grease.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is made from wool washings.

Domestic fowls, pure bred, for the improvement of stock, and pheasants and quails, free.

Mr. FOSTER. After "stock" insert "homing or messenger pigeons."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this for the encouragement of war?

Mr. FOSTER. A very peaceful sort of war. There are a number of gentlemen in the country who are interesting themselves in homing pigeons.

Item agreed to.

Fire bricks, not to include stove linings, free.

Mr. FOSTER. Add to that item the words, "for manufacturing purposes."

Mr. STAIRS. Would the hon. Minister allow that to stand and not introduce these words? They tend to confusion. Duty will be collected on small lots of fire-brick for general purposes, whereas the great mass of these imports will come in free.

Mr. FOSTER. Fire brick are manufactured in this country.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where?

Mr. FOSTER. In British Columbia and in Hamilton.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) For what manufacturing purpose is fire brick admitted?

Mr. FOSTER. For building retorts, furnaces and so on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is not a manufacturing purpose; that is erecting a building.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that would be a manufacturing purpose.

Item agreed to.

Communion plate, when imported by and for the use of churches, free.

Mr. FOSTER. Strike out the words "by and."

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is this clear now? Is it so clear that there will be no further difficulties in regard to this item by the Department of Customs? I think it is very important we should make this very clear.

Hoofs, horn strips and horn tips, free.

Mr. FOSTER. Add "in the rough, not polished or otherwise manufactured."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does the hon. gentleman allow ice to be admitted free? That competes with the native manufacture.

Mr. FOSTER. It must have been overlooked.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I see gannister is admitted free, why is that?

Mr. FOSTER. So that it shall not pay duty.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is gannister used for?

Mr. FOSTER. It is used for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What is gannister, anyway?

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish me to be too minute about these matters.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It seems to me that gannister ought to be dutiable.

Mr. FOSTER. I think not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman state his reasons for putting it on the free list?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not produced in this country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much was imported last year?

Mr. FOSTER. We do not get these figures in the Trade and Navigation Returns.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It came in of its own accord.

Item agreed to.

Cane, rattans and reeds, not manufactured, free.

Mr. FOSTER. Drop out the words "and reeds." Reeds are manufactured from the cane. They bear a duty of 17½ per cent.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The cane is split.

Mr. FOSTER. But this is cane not manufactured.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What becomes of the reeds?

Mr. FOSTER. They are manufactured, and come in under the dutiable list at 17½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Wrought iron or steel pipe fittings and chilled iron or steel rolls, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the previous duty?

Mr. FOSTER. It was 35 per cent. It was not provided for in the proposition already submitted, and unless specified as 35 per cent it would come under the 27½ per cent list.

Item agreed to.

Switches, frogs, crossings and intersections for railways, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. These are placed at the same duties as are levied on steel rails.

Item agreed to.

Yarns, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the alpaca goat, or other like animal, costing 20 cents per pound and under, 5 cents per pound and 20 per cent ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the minimum value of these yarns?

Mr. FOSTER. They run down to 12 or 13 cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So the duty will be equivalent to 60 per cent?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; the tax is high on the lowest grade. I suppose the yarn coming in is worth about half that which is paid for wool from which a fair yarn could be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the object of levying such an outrageous tax as 60 per cent?

Mr. FOSTER. The object is to keep the mills which are spinning these yarns at work. They are used almost wholly for the manufacture of carpets. The duty on these yarns previously was 10 cents per pound and 20 per cent; we now place them at 5 cents per pound and 20 per cent. The duty affects only carpets manufactured, and they have a protection afforded them.

Item agreed to.

Mosaic flooring of any material, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the purpose of levying this duty?

Mr. FOSTER. Finished marble is 30 per cent, and this mosaic flooring may be of marble or some other material used for the floors of hallways.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It may also be of wood.

Mr. FOSTER. Under the old tariff we had an item providing that hemp and flax twine when used for boat and ship sails should be taxed 5 per cent ad valorem. There is only a small importation, so small that we thought the item might be dropped. But it appears that this article is imported both on the Atlantic and Pacific coast, and is used for making sails, and it is therefore proposed to restore the item at the old rate. I move that the committee rise and report certain resolutions as adopted, and ask to sit again.

Mr. MULOCK. Before you leave the Chair, Sir, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is willing to reconsider the duty on rice. I hardly can think the Minister fully understands the nature of the tax he is imposing upon this article of consumption. It amounts to almost 100 per cent, and it makes it a very expensive commodity to the great numbers who use it. I do not think that he can justify that enormous tax.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the House had a pretty full discussion on the question of rice. So far as I am concerned, the matter might be taken as settled.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the Minister would like to hear the view of it which is taken in the press. As it might influence his opinion, I will read the following letter from the Montreal 'Star' of Saturday last:—

To the Editor of the Star:

SIR,—On March 28th last, the Finance Minister announced that the duty on cleaned rice would be reduced from 1½c. per pound to 1c., and that the duty on unhulled rice would be ½c. per pound. Presuming that Mr. Foster intended to stand by this duty on rice, we ordered several thousand bags of cleaned rice from Europe, and the first importation of 1,500 bags has now arrived.

It appears, however, on April 21, three weeks after the tariff had been brought down, Mr. Foster decided to go back to the old duty, and he then announced the duty would be 1½ cents on cleaned, and 3-10ths of a cent per pound on uncleaned, and we now have to pay 1½ cent per pound on rice bought at the time Mr. Foster stated that the duty would be 1 cent per pound.

The following figures will give your readers an idea of the amount of protection enjoyed by the two rice mills in the Dominion of Canada, namely :
Invoice cost of 1,500 bags imported rice—

360,452 lbs.—costing 1½c. per lb.....	$3,856 34
Duty at Montreal, 1½c. per lb... ..	$5,505 65
Duty on the bags at 20 per cent.	60 00
Freight to Montreal	544 62
Marine insurance, etc., 2 per cent.....	117 14
	11,084 75

This makes the cost of rice a fraction over 3c. per pound laid down in Montreal and gives the rice mills a protection of 80 per cent on first cost, and nearly 100 per cent if the freight and other charges are added to the duty.

According to the Blue-book Canada imported last year of

Cleaned rice, 3,543,568 lbs., duty 1½c. per pound.....	$44,295 00
Uncleaned rice, 24,318,460 lbs., duty 17½ p.c. ad valorem	53,604 00

It will be noticed that the duty collected on three and a half million pounds of cleaned rice was nearly equal to that collected on twenty-four million pounds of uncleaned, and that the Rice Milling Company, who employ from 50 to 75 men (some people assert that they do not employ more than 20 hands), enjoy a protection of 1c. per pound, or equal to $243,184 per annum. This is a nice little sum to make every year and they could well afford to spend some of it in lobbying at Ottawa in order to convince Mr. Foster that his Reform tariff of the 28th March, so far as the rice duty was concerned, was a very great clerical error.

When the rice mill found we were offering a better rice at 3½c. than what they were selling at the same price, they decided to squelch us and reduced their price to 3c. This ½c. per pound will reduce their profits this year by $60,000, but they have a margin of $180,000 left.

No one pretends that we can grow rice in this country, and the present duty is simply downright robbery ; the Government gets scarcely any revenue from what is milled here and the consumer is obliged to buy the lowest grade produced in order that the rice mill may make a fortune every year.

JOHN PINDER & CO.

MONTREAL, 14th May, 1894.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the statements in that letter are correct, a very strong case is made out, indeed, for the revision of the proposed tax upon rice. I cannot add anything to what is said in this letter. It means that rice, a necessary of life, an article not grown in Canada, which costs, in the finished state, in England, something like $1.58 per hundred pounds, has a duty imposed upon it here for the benefit of the manufacturer amounting to nearly $1.25 per hundred pounds. That is a direct tax upon the rice-consuming public of Canada, and it is clear that rice is used in large quantities here, as we imported 24,000,000 pounds last year. Under the circumstances, it seems to me that this high tax upon it is indefensible.

Mr. MULOCK.

Motion agreed to ; and committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Travelling expenses of judges in the North-west Territories... .. $3,000

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a reduction of $1,000. I presume that is owing to the improved facilities of getting from place to place now, as compared with former years ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Circuit allowances, British Columbia.. $7,000

Mr. MULOCK. Is the scale of allowances the same in British Columbia as in the other provinces ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes ; Of course, the difference is made up in consequence of the expense of travel. The judges in British Columbia have to adopt very expensive means of conveyance sometimes.

Mr. MULOCK. I am speaking more particularly of the allowance of which the judges do not make a return.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is a per diem allowance in British Columbia.

Mr. MULOCK. You have not the same system there as in Ontario, of allowing a judge $100 for expenses ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No ; nor in Quebec.

Mr. MULOCK. Has there been any comparison made of these two systems ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. The system of per diem allowance is a more just and equable one. In the case of a brief term of a court, the circuit allowance of $100 leaves a considerable emolument for the judge, while the per diem allowance would, perhaps, be given for only three days—the day going, a day coming, and a day for the sitting of the court. It is a much more fair and reasonable system ; but we have been unable to reduce the $100 allowance where it is made, on account of the scanty allowance the judge receives.

Mr. MULOCK. There is a way of remedying that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It seems not.

To pay two official arbitrators.... $2,000

Mr. FLINT. What are the duties of these official arbitrators ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The two arbitrators who now hold office are what is left of the official board of arbitrators, to whom claims used to be referred against the Crown. The survivors of this board were appointed official referees of the Exchequer Court, which makes reference to them, from time to time, for the purpose of taking evidence as to quantities and values in relation to claims before that court. Their services are likewise used by the various departments in order to obtain reports upon claims.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Did they do any work last year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; a good deal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is there any means of ascertaining what they did? We do not see their reports, or any evidence of their labours. Does the hon. gentleman know?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not remember any reference from the Exchequer Court to them, and cannot say how far their services were used by any department. It is very common in the Lower Provinces for the Railway Department, in connection with claims, in respect of which values have to be ascertained, to send Mr. Compton to report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not remember last year of their going to the Maritime Provinces. Will the Minister of Railways say whether he made any references to them or not?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Compton lives at Halifax.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand from the Minister of Railways that he made no reference.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not sure about any reference.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Are you bound to pay them?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As members of the Board, they had a permanent position, and instead of paying them a superannuation allowance, as we did in the case of one or two who were very advanced in years, we thought it more economical to make use of their services. Mr. Cowan was superannuated and Mr. Simard. The two others were continued in office for the reason I have given.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are any of the present men eligible for superannuation?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, Mr. Compton would certainly be, because he is nearly 70 years of age, although very capable as regards intelligence.

Mr. McMULLEN. If there is really nothing for them to do, and it appears they have done nothing in the past, it is a great pity that they should go on drawing $2,000 a year. The best evidence that they are not required is that they have done no work.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The First Minister must be something in error about Mr. Cowan. I think he is still living.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Those who are superannuated draw their allowance and do nothing, and those who are continued in the office draw their pay and do nothing. They ought to be transferred to the Solicitor General's office, where they would not be overworked.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They do work, and are available now.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that the Minister of Justice is not able to say whether these men did anything in the past year or not, and that the Minister of Railways says they did nothing for his department.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not sure about that. I think one of them did some valuation at Halifax of some property expropriated. I do not know whether it was Mr. Compton or not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It would not be left for one man to value property expropriated.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He makes a valuation of the property preparatory to a tender being made.

Mr. MULOCK. Has he power to swear witnesses and sit as a court?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He swears witnesses and hears evidence.

Mr. MULOCK. Have these gentlemen been long in this position?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Over 20 years.

Mr. MULOCK. Appointed at this salary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. How long is it since they have done anything? I cannot see the object of retaining men in the service long after there is no necessity for them. There must be some implied understanding that the office must cease with the necessity for it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We could not dispense with the services of these gentlemen without pensioning them, and their pension would amount to three-fourths of their salary. We generally do get a good deal of service out of them in the way of references.

Mr. McMULLEN. Would it not be better to put them in the Senate?

Supreme Court of Canada—three messengers $1,500

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there a necessity for three messengers in the Supreme Court?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are six judges holding offices there, and the department of the registrar is a regular department. Three messengers are fully employed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It seems to me there used to be only one messenger there. I do not say that I think three messengers are too many. But I think there used to be only one, Mr. Curran.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He was the only one seen, perhaps. He ranks as the crier of the court. But the other two were in attendance.

Contingencies and disbursements,
Judge's travelling expenses; also salaries of officers (sheriff, registrar as editor and publisher of reports, usher, etc.), and $300 for books for Judges..... $3,500

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is there any statement published showing the returns from the sales of reports? I looked very carefully, but I could not find any. It seems to me, from the number of members of the profession who take these reports, that these returns should be pretty large.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think these figures must appear in the Auditor's Report. The receipts are large. The sales depend a good deal upon subscription, and there is a considerable sale also through Carswell & Co. In the province of Ontario the Law Society subscribed for, I think, several hundred copies—at any rate a very large number—and they get them at a reduced rate and distribute them amongst the members of the profession in return for their annual subscriptions.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Law Society, then, obtains these reports at a reduced figure?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. All dealers get them at a reduced figure, and the Law Society get them at still lower rates on account of the large quantity they take.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the same open to the law societies of the Maritime Provinces?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They do not subscribe. Individual members take these reports.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am personally aware of that fact.

Mr. DALY. In the Auditor General's Report, at page 212, the hon. gentleman will find the statement of receipts:

Stationers at 20 per cent discount—Carswell & Co., 989 vols., 30 parts.....	$ 2,211 60
Less accounted for 1893-94.....	1,126 31
	$1,085 29

Mr. McMULLEN.

Then follows a number of details of sales amounting to $1,794.34.

Mr. LISTER. I think that in the province of Ontario the way of distributing these reports is this—every lawyer has to pay a certain annual fee, $17 or $19, to the law society, and for this he gets all the provincial reports and also the Supreme Court reports.

Printing, binding and distributing the Supreme Court reports..... $2,750

Mr. FORBES. Where are these distributed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are for sale. A certain proportion are distributed. A certain number of these reports are bound, so that those desiring to get them in that form can get them. Generally speaking, they are issued in parts. For the regular subscribers the reports are issued in parts, but anybody who is desirous of buying bound copies can get them.

Mr. FORBES. Then there is a credit against this expenditure?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is a stock on hand worth, I should say, over $10,000.

Mr. FORBES. But there is also an annual receipt?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where is the printing and binding done?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The printing is done in the Bureau and the binding by the contractor.

For the purchase of law books and works of reference for the Supreme Court Library..... $4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This may or may not be required, but I notice that the hon. gentleman is asking for $1,500 more than last year. We have been paying hitherto $2,500 for this purpose. It appears to me that that ought to have supplied that library tolerably well with the law books required.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that for printing and distributing the reports we pay $2,750, and that our receipts were $1,000 less, or $1,750. I should think, from the prices charged for these reports, that this service should be nearly self-sustaining. That it is not would seem to me to indicate that there is something wrong. I have forgotten exactly the figure members of the profession have to pay for those reports.

Mr. FORBES. Five dollars for the bound copy and four dollars for the unbound.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) One would think that that would pay the cost.

Mr. MULOCK. I imagine there would be a good many free copies.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the first place, we give a copy free to each of the judges of the Superior Courts throughout the Dominion. Then every law society gets one for its library and other copies go to the legislative and other important libraries. Besides, there is a surplus carried in stock. There is a large stock of the old reports, not so many of the earlier numbers, as they have been called for from time to time, but there is a very valuable stock on hand, much more than enough to repay the balance of expenditure over receipts from year to year. It is true we are asking for $1,500 more. We have a very fine library there, but incomplete in many lines, especially as regards United States' reports. The desire of those connected with the court is that we should give a vote of $5,000 to bring up the arrears of the American reports alone this year, but $1,500 is all we venture to ask for. The Supreme Court Library, of course, inasmuch as it is a resort for barristers from all the provinces of Canada, ought to be a first rate library. It is very far from being so, good as it is, and it will take a grant of $30,000 or $40,000 to make it anything like as good as the best state libraries in the United States. As it is now, it ranks less than a third among the libraries of Canada. The library at Osgoode Hall is far better; even the library of the New York Life Association, in the city of Montreal, is better equipped.

Mr. LISTER. The Library of Osgoode Hall is one of the best on the continent, if not the best.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where are those books supposed to be got ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. From large dealers in the United States who make a point of keeping considerable stocks.

The Exchequer Court of Canada—
Third class clerk $950

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is there no statutory increase in this case ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the reason for that is that he was appointed at a higher salary than ordinary.

Mr. FORBES. Can the hon. member tell us who the clerk is ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Macdonald, I think.

Contingencies—Judges and Registrar's travelling expenses, salary of Sheriffs, printing, stationery, &c., and $50 for Judge's books $40,000

Mr. McMULLEN. By what rule are the travelling expenses of the judge of the Exchequer Court regulated ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. By statute and Order in Council, an allowance of $5 a day is made to him for living expenses and his actual moving expenses.

To pay increase of salary to Mr. L. A. Audette, from 1st July, 1894, to 30th June, 1895 $175

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is simply to put him on a footing of a chief clerk until he gets to the maximum, by what would have been statutory increases. He was appointed at a salary of $2,000, and by statutory increases he might go up to $2,800. We undertook, as regards one official, to put him on the same footing as a chief clerk, and give him a statutory increase from year to year, for that was the position of the Registrar of the Supreme Court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does he occupy the same position as the Registrar ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; but not at the same salary, he has not got up to that yet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You divide into three votes, I see. One is a thousand dollars.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. His salary is $2,000. It is a statutory salary.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then you give him $475 besides.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We give him $300 as editor of the reports, and that is the sum which the Registrar of the Supreme Court gets for editing the Supreme Court reports.

Salary of Registrar in Admiralty,
Quebec $666 66
Salary of Marshal in Admiralty,
Quebec 333 34

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I never understood why that was voted. It never could be explained or defended.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no excuse for it except custom.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, it is a very bad custom. It has been going on year after year, and is utterly unjustifiable.

Mr. FORBES. We have to pay it under the British North America Act.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Before Confederation the salaries were thus established, a special salary for the judge, a salary for the registrar, and a salary for the marshal; whereas in the other provinces, where they do quite as much work, they depend upon fees. But when officials are appointed at those salaries, it is difficult to change them.

Mr. LANGELIER. It is only temporary, because the law has been altered. But the present incumbents, who were appointed before the law was altered, were to receive the same salaries as they had before, and when they die or go into some other position, the salary will be abolished. That court is a part of the Superior Court of the province, that is to say, a judge of the province of Quebec, will, after the present incumbent leaves the office, discharge the duty of a judge of the Vice-Admiralty.

Mr. FORBES. Will the Minister tell me why the Registrar of the Admiralty Court in Nova Scotia is not on the same footing?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. These salaries were fixed before Confederation, a special salary for the judge of $2,000, and a salary for the registrar and the marshal. While the incumbents remain, as the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) has explained, these salaries cannot be interfered with. But the law provides that they shall sink to the condition of other salaries when vacancies occur.

To provide accommodation when necessary for the Exchequer Court in Admiralty..... $300

Mr. MULOCK. Does that court ever sit?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Oh, yes. The Exchequer Judge is the Judge in Admiralty, and it sometimes happens that he has to hold court in other places than Ottawa, and this is to provide accommodation for him in case he should need it. We paid nothing last year.

Dominion Police..... $22,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How many of those are now employed, and what is their pay?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I laid on the Table at the beginning of the session a return which showed the number and pay. I think the number is thirty-five altogether.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are they principally employed in Ottawa?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; we do not pay any police outside. These officers are employed in connection with the public buildings and grounds and services of a similar class.

St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. $98,875 86

Mr. MULOCK. I observe in the press that a day or two ago an incident occurred in connection with this penitentiary. The warden having taken a convict out of bounds, to make use of his services on board of a pleasure yacht, the prisoner at the termination of the pleasure trip attempted to drown the engineer. Is it customary for wardens—I believe this convict had several months to serve—to take prisoners out of the confines of the penitentiary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is when they are prisoners of good character, who have but little more time to serve.

Mr. McMULLEN. In looking over the items of expenditure by the inspector in connection with this penitentiary, I observe in the Auditor General's Report that he has charged twenty days' cab hire at Ottawa, $10, and cab hire to church at Montreal, $1. The Auditor General has drawn attention to these items and has pointed out that they should not be charged. It seems singular that an officer having such long experience should attempt to make such charges.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sorry to say that Mr. Moylan is a victim of very severe rheumatism, and it is absolutely necessary that he should have a conveyance to and from his house. I do not know how this matter was disposed of in the department, as I was away at the time.

Mr. McMULLEN. The entire amount spent on this penitentiary last year, I observe, was $87,940. What is the number of inmates and what was the per capita cost last year as compared with the previous year? In view of the low price of meat and other food products there should be a decrease in the expense.

Mr. MULOCK. According to the report of the Minister of Justice the average number of inmates in Manitoba Penitentiary in 1893 was 72, who were maintained at a cost of $48,000, or nearly $700 each. At St. Vincent de Paul the total number of inmates was 374, who were maintained at a cost of $98,000, or about $300 each, or less than half.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will remember that there are two or three circumstances connected with these expenditures, namely, that the sum includes all the officers' salaries, maintenance of prisoners and improvements made in the penitentiary during the year. For example, at St. Vincent de Paul we have made considerable improvements in furnishing machinery and heating apparatus, and $15,000 was spent for working expenses.

Mr. MULOCK. It is so much the worse for Manitoba Penitentiary.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am showing that the sum per capita is not to be judged by the total cost of the penitentiary, but the per capita cost in the penitentiary will always be greater the smaller the number of convicts, other things being equal. In Manitoba we had last year 71 prisoners, the normal number being about 80, whereas at St. Vincent de Paul the number is about 300. That disparity in number makes a very great difference in cost, for you can maintain double the number of prisoners without materially increasing the cost per capita.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the total which was obtained from the labour of the prisoners in St. Vincent de Paul?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The sum received from St. Vincent de Paul is very slight, because the prisoners have been engaged in the work of construction, building a boundary wall, and so on. It is credited last year in the Auditor General's Report with $1,168.16. That would include everything except small balances unpaid at the end of the year.

Dorchester Penitentiary.....	$46,537 00
Manitoba Penitentiary.....	48,957 65

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has not explained, to my satisfaction, the extraordinary cost per capita of maintaining the convicts in the Manitoba penitentiary. Some years ago that matter was discussed, and I think satisfactory proof given of the gross extravagance in that penitentiary; so much so that an investigation was made by the Minister of Justice which I had hoped would have resulted in marked economy being shown in the expenditure for the future. In Dorchester penitentiary, where the daily average is 175 prisoners, the per capita is $254, and in Manitoba penitentiary, where the daily average is 73, the per capita cost is $620. It may be fairly urged that a small number of convicts may be allowed a larger per capita expenditure, inasmuch as it would cost more per capita to maintain an establishment of 73 prisoners than it would to maintain one of 175. But that cannot account even approximately for the enormous discrepancy between the per capita cost in the Manitoba penitentiary and the other penitentiaries. The rations in Dorchester cost $33 per head, and in Manitoba, $87.56. There seems to be no just reason for any such extraordinary expenditure as that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will find, if he pursues the parallel and applies the expenditure of former years to the expenditure of the Manitoba penitentiary to-day, there has been a very marked improvement. At the time of which he speaks of the expenditure had been very large, and the attention of the House was called to it. The warden was eventually relieved from duty, and an acting warden was sent from the department here, in order that he might be under the close supervision of the department, and knowing the grievances which we felt in regard to the management, that he should put things on a basis that would be something like a standard for the future. He certainly succeeded very well in that, and the hon. gentleman will find that the expenditure has been satisfactorily reduced from what it was three or four years ago. As regards the cost of the Manitoba prison, irrespective of the difficulty as regards the number of prisoners, the hon. gentleman must make allowance for the fact that we pay very much more for our supplies in Manitoba. I may mention one circumstance alone, the heating of Dorchester will cost $2,280, and the heating of Manitoba penitentiary cost $5,127, which is more than double.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is one of the items which I should imagine would require explanation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Coal, of course, is very high in Manitoba, and in Dorchester penitentiary, nearly all the heating is done from the wood which we gather on the place. This will come to an end soon, and we must take a larger allowance for heating at Dorchester. All the other supplies are much more costly at Manitoba.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would put it to the hon. gentleman that when we maintain a penitentiary, the cost of which for heating is $91.79 per head, it, on the face of it, shows something wrong. It cannot be that by any prudence or economy the expense of heating a building to keep 73 convicts should amount to over $91 per head. In Dorchester, it only amounted to $7 per head. The figures given for the heating of Manitoba penitentiary in the report of the Department of Justice is $7.251. It would seem that this expenditure at least demands looking into.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, we all admit that in Manitoba a somewhat larger amount would be required for heating, but certainly not as much as my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) points out. Apart from that one item of fuel, it is quite clear that the rations in Manitoba cost a great deal more than the rations in Dorchester. I do not understand why at present in Winnipeg the cost of rationing a convict should exceed the cost at Dorchester. Flour certainly is as cheap in Winnipeg as in Dorchester; meat is as cheap; there is no reason why sugar or similar articles should cost more. Moreover, there are only twenty-eight officers at Manitoba, against thirty-eight at Dorchester, one-third more. The cost of maintaining seventy-five convicts at Winnipeg is estimated at $2,000 more than the cost of maintaining 175 at Dorchester.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. To some extent the increased expense for provisions in Manitoba is accounted for by the fact that in consequence of the great distance of the prison from any town or village or market, all the officers are allowed to get provisions out of the store for which they are charged at the contract price, and repay the prison at the end of each month. So that we take an estimate for the supplies needed for both prisoners and officers, and there stands to the credit of the penitentiary on this account $959.45.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is quite evident the leak lies there. The cash expense for 1892-93 was $6,296; the cost per capita was $87.56. My hon. friend has explained why it is impossible there can be so very much difference in the cost of procuring food in Manitoba above the cost in Dorchester. We find that in Dorchester for 175 convicts, or 100 more than in the Manitoba penitentiary, the total cost for rations was $5,684, or an average per capita of $33.70. Assuming that reasonable economy is practiced in the Dorchester penitentiary; there cannot be anything else. and reckless extravagance in the Manitoba penitentiary; there cannot be anything else. The warden himself reports that when he took charge of that penitentiary he found very little discipline among either the officers or the convicts, and when one sees the totality of the expenditure one is not surprised that he should report in these terms. I think that penitentiary calls for a pretty severe examination at the hands of the inspector, and the hon. gentleman's duty demands that the inspector shall do something more than go through a perfunctory examination in the face of facts like these.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are exceptional circumstances in the case of the Manitoba penitentiary. I am perfectly satisfied that there is now no want of discipline, nor any extravagance there. The penitentiary at Dorchester is admirably managed; and it has many circumstances in its favour, in addition to the great vigilance and activity of its warden. But Manitoba has vastly improved in its management and economy, and is in a very satisfactory condition. I will not undertake to say that there may not be improvements or economies introduced there, and I will give careful attention to the question of fuel supply, so as to be able to account for last year's expenditure in that regard. Take the working expenses of the two penitentiaries by comparison:

	Dorchester.	Manitoba.
Heating.....	$2,280	$5,127
Lighting.....	450	739
Maintenance of buildings.....	1,500	3,165
Maintenance of machinery.....	500	1,247
Armory.....	50	178
Kitchen.....	200	539

And so on. We have been getting gradually on a better footing in Manitoba, but a good deal of equipment has been required. The want of discipline and harmony among the officers was a remnant of the old disease that existed there in consequence of the want of management in previous years. But I am satisfied that under the present warden there can be no want of discipline that he would not promptly report to the department and promptly correct.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The warden, Col. Irvine, evidently is a man who is not afraid to speak his mind. I have quoted the paragraph in which he speaks of the disgraceful want of discipline among either the officers or the convicts, and I presume that a man who is bold and manly enough to call attention to that will see that the remedy is applied. I do not want to make any reflection upon so efficient an inspector as

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. Moylan, but I fail to see why the condition of this penitentiary should have passed his inspection year after year. It may be that he can give an explanation of it; but I want further to call attention to the report of the warden. He says:

When I arrived I found the prison buildings in a very dirty and dilapidated condition, and on examining the quarters I found them still worse. It was evident that no cleaning and repairing had been done to them for at least two or three years. A thorough cleaning and overhauling had to be gone into.

Now, it does seem to me that in a public building on which we had been lavishing public expenditure with an unsparing hand for many years, and which we were under the impression had regularly been visited by the proper officer, whose duty it was to report to the Government and this House, we had certainly a right to conclude no such condition of affairs could possibly exist under his inspection as Col. Irvine reports he found when he took charge of the prison. I do not mean to charge that Mr. Moylan performs his duties otherwise than satisfactorily; I make no charge; but these facts would seem to imply that his inspection was a mere perfunctory inspection, and not a thorough one. But unless he has drawn these facts to the attention of the department—and I take it that he could not have done so, or the matter would have been remedied—their existence implies a want of proper inspection on his part.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I must say for Mr. Moylan that I do not think he was required to visit the prison for two years before the appointment of Mr. Irvine. The prison was under the charge of the acting warden, who found the state of discipline worse even than Mr. Irvine reports it to have been; but being there temporarily, and not having complete powers of appointment and dismissal of officials, he was not in a position to make a reorganization of the staff. He has made a statement to me, in explanation of the strictures in the report of Colonel Irvine with regard to the cleanliness of the penitentiary, and he represents that in that respect the complaints are very much exaggerated and could only apply to certain quarters. We must do the justice to say that during the time of Mr. Foster's incumbency, not only was his authority necessarily somewhat limited by the fact of his being a temporary officer, but he was sent there with very special instructions as regards expenditure, putting the accounts on a better footing, and everything of that kind, and certainly he performed very satisfactorily a very onerous task.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman say that the Inspector of Penitentiaries was not able to visit this penitentiary for a couple of years?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He did not visit it during the incumbency of Mr. Foster.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does not the hon. gentleman think it was very unfortunate that we should have an inspector who would not inspect these penitentiaries the furthest away from the Capital, and therefore, the most in need of inspection? It may not be as necessary to inspect the Kingston penitentiary, because that is visited so frequently by magistrates and others that the public are likely to have some knowledge of any insubordination or insecurity, which they would not have in the case of a distant penitentiary like the Manitoba one.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is annually inspected, except during an occasion of that kind. Mr. Foster was one of the principal officers sent out by my department, and during his incumbency it was thought better to allow him a free hand, so that when we made the selection of a permanent warden we should have some standard of comparison to go by as regards expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this Manitoba penitentiary, the attention of the Minister of Justice was called to it, as the House will very well remember, some four or five years ago. The reports of want of discipline and extravagant expenditure had reached us, and it certainly was not for want of bringing the matter to the special attention of the Minister of Justice that these irregularities, indicated in the report of his department, were allowed to grow to the magnitude they seem to have attained. The hon. gentleman must recollect that year after year the condition of that penitentiary and the extravagance and want of efficiency in its management were brought very strongly under his personal notice. Under those circumstances, a more vigilant inspection ought to have been had. It is quite clear, unless Lieutenant-Colonel Irvine is entirely in fault, that things were entirely neglected in that penitentiary for a period of three or four years at least. The Minister of Justice now tells us that the condition of things, under his officer, Mr. Foster, was an immense improvement on what had prevailed before. If that be so, what must the condition have been at the time we were endeavouring to call the special attention of the Minister to the subject.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. These are very 'ad captandum' statements, which sound very well, but will not bear examination. The complaint to which my attention was called were always with regard to expenditure, and expenditure only, under the management of Colonel Bedson. The whole attention of that officer, regardless of every other interest, was in the direction of perfect cleanliness and discipline. Every officer and prisoner in the establishment was as completely under the control of his word and eye as a company of soldiers, but the expenditure was, I was bound to admit, very extravagant indeed. And after two or three attempts to curtail it and get some satisfactory explanation, he was relieved of the management; and since the time the acting warden took charge, the complaint has been completely removed as regards extravagant expenditure—completely removed. As regards cleanliness, I cannot say how many pounds of soap ought to have been expended more than were expended. I know nothing further of the matter than the statement of Colonel Irvine, and on the other hand, I know from Mr. Foster that that statement is grossly exaggerated. As regards the want of discipline, it amounts to this: When the head, to whom they were accustomed to render most implicit obedience, was removed, the staff broke up into factions and did not respect each other's authority, or the authority of the acting warden. There was but one cure for that, and that was, as soon as possible, to appoint a permanent head, who would act regularly on the statutory powers he possesses of employing guards and dismissing them, and re-establish complete subordination. That could not be done, under the administration of the acting warden, simply for the reason that everything could not be done at once. It was impossible to set the prison accounts right, to establish and enforce regulations for the curtailment of the expenditure, and at the same time exercise special supervision over officers who had been accustomed to a very different master, and, no doubt, were looking forward to the termination of his rule as a thing to be speedily expected, and many of them possibly aspiring to promotion. The first thing was to get matters on a satisfactory basis as regards expenditure, and then to get a warden who would enforce discipline, and Colonel Irvine has proved himself very competent and fairly economical.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I regret personally that the hon. gentleman should so completely adopt the view that extravagance has been completely eliminated from the Manitoba penitentiary. I cannot concur in that view. The hon. gentleman says he declines to go into the question of the cost of soap. Nobody did that here, and I do not think the hon. gentleman has any right to complain of the criticisms which have been passed upon this expenditure. On its very face, the expenditure indicates extravagance. We have been told, year after year, that the cost of living in British Columbia exceeds that in any other part of the Dominion, and it might be said that it is hardly fair to draw a comparison between the cost of the penitentiary in Manitoba and the cost of that in Dorchester or Kingston. But compare the cost with that of the penitentiary in British Columbia, where everything is said to be so high, I find that the per capita cost in the Manitoba penitentiary is $120 beyond the per capita cost in British Columbia.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does not that indicate extravagance?

Mr. MARA. Nearly all in fuel.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will find that out of an expenditure of $46,011, only $7,000 is for fuel. The hon. gentleman must not run away with that idea. The cost is not in fuel alone. I respectfully submit that the expenditure we are now criticising is one which calls for criticism from gentlemen on both sides of the House. It cannot be in the interest of any party or any person that extravagance should prevail in any of these penitentiaries; but it must be that extravagance will prevail unless there is criticism of the items and a close inspection of these penitentiaries. In British Columbia the expenditure was $502 per capita, and the number of convicts 84. In Manitoba the per capita was $620, and the number of convicts 73.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no comparison at all in the wants of the two places.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But the number of convicts is nearly the same in both cases. I am not going over the items again; we have gone over them already. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the inspector has visited either of these penitentiaries during the past year, or even two years. I would gather from the terms of his report that he has not. He seems to judge from the reports and correspondence of the wardens, and from that concludes that certain things had better be done. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the inspector has made personal inspection, and, if not, to ask him if he does not think there should be a personal inspection at least twice a year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There should be a personal inspection every year. I have already explained as regards the inspection of the Manitoba penitentiary. As regards the British Columbia penitentiary, the report laid on the Table shows that there were considerable complaints of various kinds there, including a good many complaints with regards to the management of the accounts and irregularities in the accounts, although they were not, perhaps, very serious in extent. Certainly there was a very great want of discipline there. I sent the accountant to make an examination of the books and accounts, and, while he was engaged in that work, I directed him to make an inquiry in regard to the other complaints that had been made. Some of the complaints and accusations made related to the inspector himself, and it was thought better, under these circumstances, that the inspector should not go for the purpose of making these investigations in which he himself was directly concerned. Upon the report of the accountant a commission has been issued to examine thoroughly into the affairs of the institution. The commissioner is Judge Drake.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to call attention to the per capita cost for rations in

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

British Columbia, $43 as against $87 in Manitoba.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman, in making his comparison, should have gone a little further. At page 110 of the report of the Department of Justice he will see the per capita cost for British Columbia to be $492.29. The net per capita cost per diem is $1.35. If he will turn to the report for Manitoba he will see that the per capita cost is $422.80, or nearly $70 less than in the British Columbia penitentiary, while the per capita cost per diem is $1.15½, or nearly 20 cents in favour of the Manitoba penitentiary. While I am on my feet, in justice to Colonel Irvine and the administration of the Manitoba penitentiary under him, I might call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that Colonel Irvine was not appointed until the 1st November, 1892, and that his report is dated the 31st August, 1893, so that he had not been in charge of the penitentiary a year when his report was made. And, on turning to the report of the inspector, I find that that officer said:

The administration of this penitentiary was temporarily entrusted to the Accountant of Penitentiaries some time previous to the death of the former warden, Mr. S. L. Bedson. It continued in his hands for about twenty months, until the present warden, Colonel A. G. Irvine, took charge, on the 1st November, 1892.

Judging from the reports and correspondence of the new warden, and the practical, well considered and business-like way in which he presents matters for the consideration of the department, there is reason to conclude that he has gone far in affecting the reform of improvements, so much needed, and that his future administration will be a success.

Going back to the question of the per capita cost—the hon. gentleman called the attention of the committee to the per capita cost for heating. I cannot understand how any one can find out how much it costs to heat a convict.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You can find out the average by dividing the total cost by the number of convicts.

Mr. DALY. But it would cost as much to heat that building, whether there were 150 convicts or whether there were 71. There is nothing in that to form a basis of comparison between Dorchester penitentiary and Manitoba penitentiary. As the right hon. Premier has said, the difference in the cost of fuel is very great as between Manitoba and New Brunswick.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Take British Columbia.

Mr. DALY. Or British Columbia. Fuel is much cheaper in British Columbia than in Manitoba. I am quite confident that in a year from now, under the administration of Colonel Irvine the hon. gentleman will find a considerable decrease per capita as compared with what it has been. The Minister has referred to the fact that for twenty months the penitentiary was under the control of the accountant, so that discipline was not what it should be. Colonel Bedson was acknowledged to be one of the best disciplinarians in any penitentiary in Canada, so that if Colonel Irvine found a want of discipline when he assumed control, it was occasioned, as the hon. gentleman has said, by the jealousies that existed amongst the subordinate officers under the administration of the accountant, he not being vested with the authority of the regular warden. It was not possible, therefore, for the accountant to show as good discipline as that which existed under Colonel Bedson, or as will be carried out, I am sure, under Colonel Irvine.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, ever since I became a member of this House time has been taken up every year in the effort to find out why the enormous expense existed in Manitoba penitentiary as compared with others. The Minister of the Interior may try to lead us to hope that better things may be looked for in the future. The remarks of the inspector show that there has been extravagance in the past, and that the present incumbent in the wardenship is expected to make changes in the direction desired. Take, for instance, the question of rations. I am sure the Minister of Justice or the Minister of the Interior will not pretend that the ordinary items that compose the every day rations of the convict should be dearer at Manitoba penitentiary than at Dorchester. Take, for instance, flour; that certainly should be cheaper in Manitoba, for wheat is cheaper there than at Dorchester. Beef, also, should be cheaper. Potatoes and all kinds of vegetables should be equally cheap. Altogether rations should be cheaper in the Manitoba penitentiary than in the Dorchester penitentiary; but we find that in Manitoba the rations cost $87.56 a head, while in Dorchester the cost is $33.37, or less than half. When we look over the other penitentiaries we find the same thing. Now, there is no reasoning that can be presented to this committee sufficient to convince us that it is necessary that a man in a penitentiary in Manitoba should cost two and a half times as much for rations as a man in a penitentiary in any other province of this Dominion. These things show that looseness has existed in the past, it exists now, and we are afraid it will continue, notwithstanding the criticisms that have been made in the House, session after session. Now, I think that the inspector should be called upon to give a clear and distinct reason for these high prices with regard to fuel, light and rations, because nothing has ever been submitted to a committee of this House since I have sat in Parliament that would justify the gross extravagance that exists in connection with the management of this Manitoba penitentiary. Although we have tried to press upon the Minister of Justice the necessity of cutting down into the iniquity that exists, it appears we have not succeeded in inducing him to act with vigour. I have no doubt the Minister of Justice is very anxious to conduct the penitentiaries economically, but I believe he will have to probe more determinedly than he has yet done, before he gets to the bottom of the iniquity.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Minister of the Interior called attention to a paragraph in the inspector's report, which I had very carefully read before, in which the inspector of penitentiaries draws a certain conclusion from reading the reports and correspondence of the new warden. Well, I am inclined to agree with the conclusion the inspector drew from reading those reports and that correspondence, but the members of the House are just as capable of drawing that conclusion as he is. I am complaining that his conclusion is drawn, not from actual inspection of the buildings, and the convicts, but from reading the report of the warden, and I say that is not the kind of a report which this House or the country expects to have from an inspector of penitentiaries. That is the point I was trying to make. If there exists any reason at all why the inspector should not personally make an inspection—and I venture with some degree of modesty to differ from the First Minister on that point—not once a year, but twice a year, I would be glad to hear it; but, in the absence of any reason, I think I am in the judgment of this committee when I state that it is right and proper that we should have a report from the inspector of what he saw when he made a personal inspection, and not a report in which he draws such and such a conclusion from the report of the warden. We can draw those conclusions as well as he does. I was careful to say that so far as I could judge from reading the report of Colonel Irvine—and I judge him to be a plucky man, a bold man, having the courage and manliness to state what he found when he went there—the discipline entirely gone, both among the officials and the convicts, and the buildings were in a dilapidated condition. But I can draw my conclusions from that as well as the inspector of penitentiaries can, and the criticism that is being made is that we have not a report from the inspector as to what he found when he made an inspection; in other words, that he made no inspection at all. Now, the hon. gentleman states that the per capita cost of the Manitoba penitentiary has been reduced from $620 to $422. Well, that is true, but the per capita cost of the inmates is exactly as I put it. Now, the hon. gentleman will see, on the page that he quotes from, that this $620 is the per capita cost of the inmates of the institution; but the institution received $10,000 from the Department of the Interior on account of the insane, and that was what reduced it down. That did not reduce the per capita cost of the inmates, which is exactly what I put it; but if you credit the penitentiary with the $10,000 received from the Department of the Interior, then it will show, of course, a proportionate reduction in the per capita cost of the convicts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; the amount received from the Department of the Interior does not go to the convicts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will see, on page 28, of his own report that the total cost of the Manitoba penitentiary is given at $46,000, and that shows a per capita tax, as given by his own report, of $620. But they credit it with the $10,098 received from the Department of the Interior on account of insane patients, thus reducing down the per capita cost of the convicts by so much. That is the way he gets a reduction. But what I want to point out is that the per capita cost of maintaining, the inmates in the building is so much. That does not at all touch the points to which we called the hon. gentleman's attention; and speaking only for myself, I must say that if it is my good fortune, or bad fortune, to be here next year when the accounts come in again, I shall deem it my duty to examine closely into them, and to see whether the inspector has made a special report, not only upon the building, not only upon the discipline, but, as it is his duty to do, upon the expenditure in each of these branches. Where that expenditure is doubled and trebled, let us have a report from him explaining, if he can, and giving reasons, why these expenditures are so high; and, in the absence of such a report, I think the country will come to the conclusion that there is extravagance in the penitentiary.

Mr. DALY. I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to page 107, where there is a detailed report by the accountant of the expenditure of the Manitoba penitentiary. He will see that the total expenditure was $46,011.85, and he will find this entry:

ESS—Amount refunded by the Department of Interior for maintenance, &c., of lunatics, the N.W.T.....	$10,098 04	$46,011 85
Refund from sundry sales, supplies to officers.....	3,370 86
Cash revenue.....	959 49
Balance of stock on hand	718 98
Total expenditure	30,864 48

That total of $30,864 leaves the net cost per convict per diem of $1.15½, which is less than in British Columbia.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If you credit the $10,000 from the Department of the Interior on account of the insane patients, then you would reduce down the per capita cost below that of British Columbia.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. DALY. You have got to do it, because, in the total of $46,000, the food of the convicts is included.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are the lunatics included in the Manitoba penitentiary?

Mr. DALY. They are gone now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, in this $48,957.65, you are not asking anything for lunatics.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is to be the cost of some 70 convicts in the Manitoba penitentiary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; it includes the building, the heating, and the salaries of all the officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But it includes the cost of maintaining, just as the same items do in Dorchester and in Kingston, and St. Vincent de Paul. But the fact remains that we are asked to pay $48,957.65 for the Manitoba penitentiary in 1894-95 for a matter of some 70 convicts, more or less, that are expected to be maintained there. If the hon. gentleman will divide $48,957 by 70, he will see that the per capita cost of keeping the convicts was nearly $700 a year, while for British Columbia, where I understand the average number of convicts is 84, he asks $52,000, or a trifle less than the sum required per head for Manitoba. But the main fact has not been touched, and that is, the extraordinary difference in the cost of rationing the convicts in Manitoba as against the cost of rationing them in British Columbia, not to speak of Dorchester or St. Vincent de Paul. We can all understand that a little more expense may be required for fuel, but we cannot understand, and no explanation has been offered by the Minister of Justice or the Minister of the Interior, for the extra cost of rationing convicts in Manitoba as compared with other provinces. I do not understand why it should cost more to maintain convicts, apart from the cost of fuel, in the Manitoba penitentiary than in British Columbia. There is certainly in the main articles of food no material difference. It is quite true that Stony Mountain is 8 or 10 miles from Winnipeg.

Mr. DALY. Sixteen miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At all events a railway runs close to it, and almost touches it, and the cost of carrying provisions from Winnipeg to Stony Mountain cannot exceed 5 per cent.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The Minister of Justice has stated that the cost of fuel required for the Manitoba penitentiary is very great. But it must be remembered that the penitentiary is situated in a wooded district, and wood could be obtained for Stony Mountain at $2.50 per cord, four foot wood, and very fair quality. Vegetables used are grown by the convicts themselves, for there is a garden of 50 or 60 acres, in which the convicts work. The penitentiary is also situated near a good quarry, so that the convicts can do a large portion of any building operations required. As regards general food supplies, they are as cheap there as in any place in Manitoba, and living to-day in Manitoba is about as cheap as in any portion of the Dominion, with trifling exceptions, such as the cost of fuel.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When did you make your visit ?

Mr. MCGREGOR. I was there last week. I lived in Manitoba a considerable time, and I have often been at the penitentiary, and I know the cost of living in that section. During each parliamentary session the Government have promised the Opposition that the expenditure in the Manitoba penitentiary would be investigated and the amount reduced. It is true that with only seventy-one prisoners you cannot reduce the expenditure to the same extent as if you were dealing with a very large penitentiary ; but, nevertheless, it must be admitted that the expenditure for that penitentiary has been very large. To-day you can buy butter, eggs and potatoes and other food products at the penitentiary as cheaply as in any portion of Manitoba, because the surrounding district is one of the very best farming sections in the province. Stony Mountain is undoubtedly situated in a first-class farming district.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have had some little experience, too, in Manitoba, although not the experience of the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the committee, and I will have nothing more to do with the wood there in future. We tried it during the period when the hon. member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was presenting to me day after day the fact that the cost per capita was not $500, $600, or $700, but over $1,000 annually. We came to the conclusion that buying wood there is the very worst way of throwing away money, although it was a very speedy way. As regards the prices of the various articles we have them here. The maintenance of the prisoners, the rationing of the prisoners is not excessive—I make no promise in regard to reduction under that head in the future. Hon. gentlemen are comparing the expenditure with the amounts contained in the Auditor General's Report for the past year, when the maintenance of lunatics was included, and that made some difference, and complicated the accounts. I am asking for the maintenance of the convicts in Dorchester, a larger number it is true, $10,758, and I am only asking for the maintenance of prisoners in the Manitoba penitentiary, $8,717 ; I cannot feed them on less, and I will not pretend to do so. But to pretend to make comparisons with an establishment in one province and another establishment in another province by adding together all the salaries, the expenses connected with the building, and the cost of heating the institution is simply a way of getting at a wrong and false conception of the cost of the establishment. Let me say that nearly everything depends on the nature of the building with which we have to deal. Dorchester penitentiary is a compact building, and is easily heated, and no comparison can be made between the expense involved there and the cost of heating the penitentiary in Manitoba. One reason why we only required $1,200 for heating a whole penitentiary, is that we had a supply of wood on the premises, and it is not fair to compare that with the estimate of $5,000 for heating Manitoba penitentiary. Besides, there is the expenditure connected with the buildings themselves. Three thousand dollars are asked for repairs on buildings in Manitoba, and no such repairs are required in Dorchester. Besides, a larger staff of officers is required at Stony Mountain, because there is no boundary wall or fence there, and the prisoners are not kept in the penitentiary all the time, and have to be worked outside under a staff of officers much larger than would be necessary if there was a boundary wall as at Dorchester and Kingston. We do not do any quarrying to any extent, although we are beginning now to a very limited extent to try to erect a boundary wall. All these circumstances have to be taken into consideration, and unless a comparison is made item by item it is utterly fallacious to compare two establishments, to say nothing of the fact that, if the prison population of the Manitoba penitentiary was doubled in numbers, I could support it with nearly the same staff and nearly the same outlay for buildings. Of course when we come to compare a small prison penitentiary population with a large one the cost is very much to the disadvantage of the smaller institution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister is in error in imagining that any comparison was made drawn from the Auditor General's Report. The comparison made was between the cost of the different penitentiaries, and the different items of that cost as presented in the report of the Minister of Justice himself.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not complain of the accuracy of the quotations, or to reference to the Auditor General's Report, but my reference was to the fact that hon. members were referring to years when the accounts were on a different footing.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was not even referring to the hon. gentleman's report when I spoke, but I spoke of the actual expense in past years, and of the scale of the expenditure as tested by the accounts presented by the hon. gentleman over his own signature. The hon. gentleman cannot, therefore, complain, because according to the report of the Minister of Justice, I find an extraordinary difference in the expenditure for rations between Manitoba and Dorchester.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman must include the lunatics.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I refer to the per capita charge.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What do you make the per capita charge to be?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I will read from the hon. gentleman's report at page 88: "Rations, $6,296.68, add stock in hand, $276: gross expenditure, 1892-93, $6,573. Net expenditure, $6,392, cost per capita, $87.56½." These are the figures, and I assume they are correct. What I say is: that assuming the correctness of the Minister of Justice's report, and admitting the facts which my hon. friend (Mr. Gibson) has stated, there is but one conclusion, and that is that there is gross extravagance in the department somewhere. The House has a right to have a report presented to it by the independent gentleman, the Inspector of Penitentiaries, who is paid for doing it. He has not visited the institution, and consequently there is no report as to the result of his inspection. That is what we complain of. There is no use talking of leaving the management of an institution of that kind to a local officer, and paying a man to inspect who does not do so. If there is any reason why he does not inspect the prison, let us have that reason.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. At page 88, where the statement per capita of the cost of convicts for year ending 30th of June, 1893, is given with regard to Manitoba penitentiary, the net cost per capita per annum is $422.80. That includes maintenance of buildings, salaries and everything else. That is $70 less than in British Columbia. The net cost per capita per diem, is $1.15 in Manitoba, while in British Columbia it is $1.35, so that these amazing contrasts given by the hon. gentleman do not appear from any figures in the book.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does maintenance include fuel?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It includes food solely?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, and clothing for the convicts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much for food, and how much for clothing for the Manitoba penitentiary for the coming year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The food amounts to $4,881.50 for Manitoba, and the other articles bring the total up to $9,467 for last year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. McMULLEN. In order to show that we are justified in making the charge that there is extravagance connected with the Manitoba penitentiary, I would point out that for stationery and printing at Dorchester, it cost 83 cents per head; in Manitoba it cost $6.49 per head, and in British Columbia, $2.26. No person could possibly fancy that it should cost in Manitoba three times as much for stationery and printing as it cost in British Columbia, and eight times as much per head as it costs in the Dorchester penitentiary.

Mr. STAIRS. I would like to get at the bottom of this comparison which has been made by hon. gentlemen on the other side between the per capita charge in Manitoba penitentiary and the per capita charge in British Columbia penitentiary. I understood the hon. member (Mr. Davies) to say that the per capita charge in Manitoba penitentiary was $620.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I gave the per capita cost and deducted the $10,000 paid on account of the insane, which reduced it down to $4.22.

Mr. STAIRS. He does not claim, after he makes that reduction, that the per capita charge in Manitoba penitentiary was higher than in British Columbia.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It has been stated over and over again, and it appears on the face of it, that it is less.

Mr. DALY. You did not start out with that idea.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Stairs) will look at the sum required for the next year he will find that it is $49,000 in Manitoba for 70 prisoners, as against $52,000 in British Columbia for 84 prisoners.

Mr. STAIRS. I rather think that even that does not help the hon. gentlemen out of the fix they have got themselves in when they claim that the per capita charge in Manitoba was highest. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) wants to make out his own case as best he can, but if I understand it, the Estimates are made up last year and this year on the same system, and there must be a similar amount to cover the maintenance of the insane.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They are not included at all; the hon. gentleman has not been following the matter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman had listened he would have heard the Minister of Interior explain that the insane are no longer in the Manitoba penitentiary.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And that appears on the face of the report. The hon. gentleman seems to misapprehend the whole situation. He seems to think that we are quoting figures from the Auditor General's Report or the Public Accounts. We are doing nothing of the kind. We are quoting comparisons made in the Minister's own report. This is no party matter, as the hon. gentleman seems to think. We are talking of the management of the public institution, and we say that the comparisons made by the officials themselves are such as to call for investigation and criticism, not from the Opposition side of the House alone, but from all sides. The comparisons we made at first were made with Dorchester, St. Vincent de Paul, Kingston, and other penitentiaries. Then it was suggested that Manitoba was a more expensive place to live in than these, and that some allowance must be made on that account. Then we compared it with British Columbia, and after it is credited with $10,000 for the keep of the insane, it appears that Manitoba costs less than British Columbia. That does not answer anything. The cost of $60 per head for rations requires explanation; every member of the committee knows that it requires explanation; but up to this moment we have not got the explanation. We followed that up with this criticism, that it appears that the Inspector of Penitentiaries has not visited this penitentiary at all. We have no report from him. The hon. gentleman may choose, because he sits on the Government side of the House, to say that everything is right, and that he does not care whether the expenditures have increased or not; but I think that in his mature judgment he will not find that this is his desire or the desire of the country at large. I think it ought to be the desire of every member of this committee to see that no extravagance exists in any of these penitentiaries, and if there is any that the inspector should find it out, and let him understand that if he does not, this committee will criticise his conduct.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No one objects to the strictest and closest criticism; but it is a little singular to find, after the criticism of past years, and after the expenditure has been reduced 33 per cent, that the criticism is wilder and more extravagant than ever: and when we compare Manitoba penitentiary with the only other penitentiary with which it should be compared, we find that the cost of maintenance there is less than at British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is not asking for less.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I beg to remind the hon. Minister of Justice that he is wrong in intimating that the cost per capita has been reduced. If he turns to his report he will find that the cost has increased in the past year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not speaking of the past year at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And the cost in the past year was an increase upon the cost of the year before that. The hon. gentleman's demands may be perfectly right, but he has not yet deigned to give any answer to the statements made as to the want of inspection on the part of the officer from whom we have a right to expect a full and thorough report on this matter. I must say I am dissatisfied on that ground. I did expect that the hon. gentleman would have given us reasons why such an inspection was not made, or would have stated that he would see that it should be made this year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the inspector had been at the penitentiary all the year he would not have made any inspection of the accounts. That is the duty of the acting warden. The inspector would have been able to go into the matter of discipline or management; but the question of accounts was not under his ordinary charge, but under the charge of the accountant; and under the circumstances, I thought it was not necessary to send him to Stony Mountain, the accountant being there. But of course every year he is expected to visit each of these prisons, and the nearer ones even more often.

British Columbia Penitentiary.....	$52,368 35

Mr. McMULLEN. There is an increase here of $3,000.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the heating we asked for an increase last year of $1,850; this year there is an increase of $725. For maintenance of the building we are compelled to ask for $1,142.20. The lower part of the building is in a bad condition, the floors being rotten and requiring to be entirely replaced. There is a slight increase in the kitchen appliances. The total increase under the head of working expenses is $1,903.45. The other increases are in the cost of provisions, $1,400, and for discharge allowances and gratuities, clothing, bedding, and so forth, $1,500. Part of the increase in maintenance in British Columbia and Kingston includes an allowance for the dinner of the guards and keepers. Under the old system they had to disperse to their homes for the mid-day meal, and the prisoners had to be locked up. We find it better to allow the officers a mess-room and to provide them with their dinner. For the prison chaplain at British Columbia the allowance is $1,433.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the Protestant chaplain at Manitoba reside in the penitentiary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He does.

Committee rose, and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 30th May, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 130) to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

WARDEN OF THE KINGSTON PENITENTIARY.

Mr. MULOCK asked, Has the Warden of the Kingston Penitentiary recently paid over to the Government any moneys? If so, how much? When, on what account?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes. I may say by way of explanation, first, that it is customary at all the prisons for the officials to be allowed to purchase articles, and to pay monthly or at stated intervals, subject to the approval of the department. Dr. Lavell has paid since the month of August last about $100 in the purchase of supplies which he obtained from the prison, in small amounts, principally for work done at the prison, and things of that kind. In addition to that, he has paid $474.66 on account of former purchases, the greater part of which had been allowed to stand, in consequence of an application by him to the department to be allowed fuel in consideration of the expense of the house and appurtenances which he has to keep up. The decision of the department being against his application, he has paid the amount standing against him.

THE DOMINION FRANCHISE.

Mr. LAURIER. I notice with some regret that the hon. gentleman has not yet introduced his proposed measure with regard to the franchise. Can he give us some hope that we may have it to-morrow, as this is a matter in which we are greatly interested just now?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the House will indulge me, in consideration of the importance of the question, I will state briefly what the features of the Bill are. I shall have to ask the forbearance of the House as to the introduction of the Bill, because its details will be somewhat complicated, but it may be of some public service that I should state to-day what the principles of the Bill will be, in order that they may be understood by the House and by the public, and in order that the information may be given to the revising officers in advance of the introduction of the Bill. We propose important changes in the Franchise Act, and without making a speech upon them, or giving reasons, I would briefly state that we propose to adopt as the basis of the franchise the franchises of the various provinces of Canada. We intend to propose, however, that the disqualifications which have been enacted by provincial legislatures shall not apply to persons who would otherwise be entitled to the franchise. We propose further that the electoral lists shall be prepared and revised from year to year by the Dominion revising officers as at the present time. We propose to deal with the subject of multiplex voting in a reasonable way, as we think, not adopting the principle that each man shall have but one vote, but adopting the principle that something more than the mere temporary qualification which the voter may possess at the time he went on the various lists, shall be possessed; that is to say, a property owner having a property qualification in more than one riding shall have a vote in more than one riding, and so if a person has a qualification in more than one riding he shall have a vote in more than one riding, &c. These are the principles of the measure, but inasmuch as it will be necessary to work them out by a careful comparison with the provincial enactments, I propose to take a little further time in the preparation of the Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him if he proposes any departure in the existing law as to the time when the lists are to come into operation? Under the existing law the lists are not to come into force until the 1st of January. May I ask whether he deals with that feature?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We propose to make the time somewhat later in beginning the revision, and the lists will come into force as speedily as we can expect them to be prepared.

Mr. LAURIER. May we expect the production of the measure within three or four days, or within a week?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I hope to have it ready within a week.

BRIBERY AND DISFRANCHISEMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 6) to disfranchise voters who have taken bribes.—(Mr. Weldon.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 16,

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I think the deposit should be increased. The fact is, I understood there was an argument under which that deposit was to be increased from five hundred to one thousand dollars. I move that the words "one thousand dollars" be substituted for the words "five hundred dollars."

Mr. WELDON. I hope the committee will not accept the amendment. It was suggested two weeks ago when the Bill was before the committee that it might work injustice in this way, that one political party might take hold of the power under this Act and raise $500 and attack their opponents, taking good care that they did not touch any friends of their own party, and in the prosecution of this course they might exhaust the $500. It has been suggested that it would be fair to insert a sub-clause providing that if at this stage any other parties were interested in the further prosecution of the inquiry, and were convinced that this limited deposit would not secure the further investigation they desired and needed, they should have the right to put up a further sum of money in order to ensure the prolongation of the inquiry. That request seems to be perfectly fair and reasonable, and I, as a member of the committee, would be willing to accede to it. It has been pointed out in the House, and it has been very frequently referred to by newspapers criticising this Bill, that the weak point of the proposed measure is that in its operation it would be found most difficult to find counties in which people would be willing to put up so much money with a certainty that it would be expended. If at the outset we increase the sum from $500 or $1,000 it will be difficult to find sufficient public spirit animating people of different constituencies to put up so large a sum, and therefore I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his amendment, and if pressed, that the committee will not accept it in its present shape.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) I feel bound, Mr. Chairman, to insist and leave my amendment before the Chair. The first reason I have to do this is in connection with the expenses which such an inquiry will necessarily involve. The travelling expenses and the allowance to be paid the judge must be considered. But there is not only the judge, there are also the officers of the court, the clerk, the stenographers and the other costs inherent to such an inquiry. These expenses will amount to a large sum and indeed the trial stage of the proceedings will hardly be over when the deposit of $500 will be exhausted. The fact is the court will hardly have been sitting two or three days when there will not be left a single dollar of this deposit; it will be exhausted by the payment of the costs I have already referred to. I will not dwell any further on this point, as I had occasion to refer to it on previous sittings. I now suppose that ten voters were indicted before the court, or incriminated in the course of the inquiry; I suppose that a 'commencement de preuve' was made against them; but all of a sudden, for want of money, the court discontinues its proceedings, how will the voters so accused or incriminated prove their innocence, for it might very well happen that they should not be at all guilty? The court adjourning sine die on account of the deposit being exhausted, on account of there being no more money to pay the expenses, those citizens will lie under the charge of having sold their votes in not having any chance to prove the contrary. The Bill further states that if the judge should think he has before him a sufficient evidence that the accused parties took bribes, he will have to give them notice to appear before him and prove their innocence. But how will they prove it if the court suspended its proceedings for want of money? If the inquiry should be discontinued for want of funds, these citizens will have to lie under almost a dishonouring charge. That is not fair. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, if there should be no money, how could the court summon witnesses, since such witnesses could not be compelled to appear unless being handed over a sufficient sum to cover their travelling expenses? If it is really intended to pass a law having for its object to prevent bribery, we must give to those who will have to carry it out the means required for that purpose. If, on the contrary, that last is to remain a dead letter, we had better, I think, not pass it, for there are already too many such laws in our statutes. Let it be stated at once, and we will lose no more time in a useless discussion. I will make no further observations with respect to my amendment, for I had already several opportunities to express my views on that point. I leave my amendment before the committee; they may do what they like with it, but I insist on having a decision.

Mr. MULOCK. While some difference of opinion may prevail as to the merits of the amendment, I think in view of what has already occurred, it would be wise on the part of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that he should accept the amendment. I sympathize with his Bill in some respects, and I should not like to see it jeopardized by the hon. member being too strongly wedded to every particular detail.

Mr. WELDON. I am not disposed to be too obstinate. I leave this question to the judgment of the committee.

Amendment agreed to: Yeas, 75; nays, 20.

On section 17,

Mr. JEANNOTTE. I desire to inquire whether Parliament itself will be the authority to disfranchise electors who have received bribes, or whether the Secretary of State will be such authority? It is declared by this Bill that the Secretary of State shall be the only party to declare such voters disqualified.

Mr. WELDON. This clause is simply to secure publicity.

On section 19,

Mr. JEANNOTTE. Before this clause is passed I have an amendment which I am sure will meet with the unanimous approval of the House. I am not very well acquainted with the procedure in the courts of the provinces other than Quebec, but from the information I have gathered, I have put my amendment in such a way as to meet with the requirements of the courts in the other provinces. My object is to allow the disfranchised voter to have an appeal, and I want that appeal to be as cheap as possible. I therefore move that section 19 be struck out and replaced by the following :—

The party disfranchised may appeal to the Court of Review of the province of Quebec, to the Divisional Court of the province of Ontario, to the Court of Appeal in the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, to the Supreme Court in the Maritime Provinces, within 30 days after the publication in the "Canada Official Gazette," by a simple inscription and for the smallest deposit required in such courts. Such court shall summarily and in last resort decide upon the merits of such appeal. Such cases shall have precedence in said court.

A voter might be disqualified who is innocent, and it would be unjust to deprive him of an opportunity to have the judgment rendered against him reversed. If he is willing to spend a small amount of money to inscribe his case in review for the purpose of having his civil rights restored to him, I do not see why he should be deprived of that right. In Quebec the Court of Review sits every month, and those cases would have precedence. I think that amendment ought to be carried. In support of this I may say, that in Montreal up to 1890, there was no appeal from the decision of commissioners who valued expropriated property on certain streets, and the parties in many cases had reason to complain of the awards made them. A proprietor on St. James Street, for instance, was awarded $2 per foot for his land when its assessed value was $5 or $10 a foot, but yet he had no appeal then. In 1890 the corporation saw that injustice was being done and they applied to the Legislature of Quebec to allow appeals in these cases. Since then the decision of the commissioners has in many cases been reversed. This amendment is copied almost word for word from the law passed by the Quebec Legislature allowing appeal in those cases. There might be cases where a citizen would be deprived of his franchise, and it would be unjust that he should have no redress.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) I support the first part of the amendment, moved by the hon. member for L'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte), but I think we have no power to legislate on the second part of it, that in which it is stated that such cases shall have precedence on the other cases before the court. That would have the effect of changing the code of procedure; now, all that relates to the procedure before the courts is beyond the jurisdiction of this Parliament. As for the principle contained in the amendment, I am in favour of it, and I think it would be quite unfair not to give the disfranchised citizens the right to appeal.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the proposal of the hon. gentleman is a reasonable one, that it is perfectly proper to have an appeal, and that great injustice might in some cases be done where an appeal was denied; and, as a friend of the Bill, I hope the promoter will accept the amendment.

Mr. FRASER. I think the wording of the amendment will need to be changed, as there is no Supreme Court in the Maritime Provinces.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was suggesting that it should read: "in the other provinces."

Mr. WELDON. There is no objection to the spirit of the hon. member's amendment; I am perfectly willing to accept it. As has just been said, there are no Maritime Provinces known to the law, and the provinces would have to be particularly enumerated. But I suggest to the committee that under the power we have given in earlier sections of the Bill to the courts of the provinces to make rules, it may safely be left to those courts to make rules to regulate these appeals; and if the hon. member will abandon the latter part of his motion and put in its place some such words as these: "that the appeal shall be made under rules pursuant to section 7 of this Act," I think it will be more workable.

Mr. AMYOT. We must look to the general state of the Bill also. Clause 13 says that the judge shall make a report; it does not say when; but he will write the report, I suppose, and send it to the Secretary of State. When will the appeal be made? There is no harmony there; there is something lacking. I am afraid that the Bill, when we pass it, will have to be carefully examined by the venerable body that sits near us, and that it will be found to be not very practicable. The hon. mover might think over that. He says he has no objection to the appeal, but he wants the judge who tries the case, not the Court of Appeal, to report directly to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State then publishes the report in the Official Gazette and sends a copy to the revising officer, and then there is an appeal. It seems to me to be rather late to have an appeal then.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member surely does not mean to say that the legal ability in this Chamber is not equal to the task of making provision for that—that we are entirely helpless and must let the Bill as it is go to the other Chamber to be revised. Undoubtedly, if the committee accepts the substance of the hon. member's amendment providing for an appeal, some other slight changes must be made; but that is no reason for throwing up the whole thing as unworkable. The Bill was drafted on the theory that there was to be no appeal. Now there is to be an appeal, and the hon. member for Bellechasse is quite right in saying that the judge's report must be delayed, where there is an appeal, at any rate.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not ask that the Bill should be thrown out. The hon. mover knows that I am in sympathy with its objects; but I want it to be workable and to do no injustice to individuals. I would suggest that the appeal should be to the ordinary courts of appeal in criminal matters. That would be much more practicable. In the province of Quebec the appeal court in criminal matters is composed of five judges, and as the liberty of the subject is concerned here, I do not think it would be right to allow the appeal to be limited to the Court of Review, which is composed of but three judges.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Does the Court of Appeal in Quebec require the appeal books to be printed? That is required in Ontario, and it would entail very great expense.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not think it is required in criminal matters either in Quebec or Ontario.

Mr. MASSON. So far as Ontario is concerned the court is not properly named in the amendment. We have no court of the name of the Divisional Court in the province of Ontario. We have the Supreme Court of Judicature, which is divided into the Court of Appeal and the High Court. The High Court again has three divisions—the Queen's Bench, the Chancery and the Common Pleas.

Mr. FORBES. If the mover of the Bill is willing to consent that an appeal shall be granted from the trial judge, I think this section should stand. It is very imperfectly drawn, and it will not suit us in the province of Nova Scotia or in any of the Maritime Provinces. And we have already a protest from those who know about the matter of appeals in the province of Ontario, so that I fancy the section would have to be re-drafted, and I would suggest that the promoter of the Bill let the section stand.

Mr. WELDON. The select committee were of opinion that an appeal would not be necessary. For my part, I have no feeling in the matter, and if it be thought that the parties complained against should have an appeal, I have no objection to giving it. But to make the appeal work smoothly, a trifling change would be required in section 13, which can be done on the third reading. The amendment of the hon. gentleman will be found unworkable. He says that the appeal should date thirty days from the publication in the 'Canada Gazette.' The publication of what?

Mr. JEANNOTTE. I understand that the judge will make a report and the Secretary of State, under section 13, will publish it in the 'Canada Gazette,' and that it is only on a copy thereof being furnished to the revising officer of the electoral district, that the names will be struck off the list.

Mr. DICKEY. It seems to me a very unfortunate period to take to date an appeal from the publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' because then the damage is all done, and the voter is published to the world as a defaulter. If an appeal be given, it should be given immediately on the judgment of the court. I would suggest, as an amendment to the amendment, that:

From any finding or decision of a court or judge disfranchising any voter, such voter shall have the right to appeal:

(a.) In the province of Quebec, to the Court of Review;

(b.) In the province of Ontario, to one of the divisions of the High Court of Justice;

(c.) In the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Manitoba and the North-west Territories, to the Supreme Court.

Such appeals shall have precedence over other business on the dockets of the court.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. That does not meet my view. The judge does not give any decision, but simply makes an inquiry and reports. He sends his report to the Secretary of State, and there is no disqualification until the Secretary of State publishes the notice in the 'Canada Official Gazette.' There is, therefore, no decision by the judge to appeal from, and there is no disqualification until the publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' and the names are not struck off the lists by the revising officer until he is forwarded a copy of the 'Gazette.'

Mr. DICKEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I see that there is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says. But I do not exactly agree with him as to the position of the court. I think that every man who is summoned there is a suitor before that court. He will be heard, the evidence against him will be heard, and the judge has got to make a finding.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. No.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman. However, that is a matter of detail. This question of appeal is something introduced now for the first time, and we must go back and revise section 13. There is no doubt about that, but I ask the hon. gentleman himself if it is not very much better to make a man appeal from the finding of the judge rather than make him appeal from something in the 'Gazette'?

Mr. JEANNOTTE. I would advise the hon. gentleman to change that part which says that the appeal shall be made according to section 7, for the judge who hears the appeal will not be the same judge as the judge who hears the enquête. They have their rules, and you cannot change those rules, for they are under the authority of the provinces, and the Federal power has nothing to do with the rules of any civil court in any province. I think you had better leave that to the court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think that if we determine to adopt the principle suggested by the hon. gentleman from L'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte) and allow an appeal to those parties who are disqualified, we cannot carry either the amendment suggested by that hon. gentleman, or the one suggested by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) unless we go back and amend the previous sections of the Bill. There is no doubt a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says, that there is no finding of the judge below, and so there is nothing to appeal from. It is provided that the judge shall report to the Secretary of State, but no time for sending in that report is mentioned. If we are to allow an appeal before the judge reports, you will have to amend the 13th section, for the form of the appeal will depend upon the nature of that amendment. As the section stands, you cannot frame an intelligent amendment at all. The proposal to allow an appeal seems to meet with general concurrence. I would suggest to the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that, if he finds it necessary to go back to the previous part of the Bill and amend it, this should be done now, and then let the new section, providing for an appeal, come in.

Mr. WELDON. If the committee will agree, I think we could pass this section. The amendment of my hon. friend from Cumberland seems to me more likely to work smoothly than the amendment of my hon. friend from L'Assomption. If the committee would agree to carry this and the next two sections, in a very few minutes we could come back and make the other section suit the case of an appeal. I think there would be no difficulty in that.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman suspend the reading of the Bill until eight o'clock, by which time he can have the necessary amendments prepared.

Mr. WELDON. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think my hon. friend from Albert will see that the amendment will require a little consideration. As it reads now, it would be absolutely unworkable. You speak of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, and the

Mr. DICKEY.

North-west Territories as though there was a Supreme Court for those provinces. The clause would need to be amended so as to provide for the appeal to the Supreme Court in each province. That is a matter of phraseology. But I think the hon. gentleman will see that there are other matters to be provided for; for instance, the time within which the appeal must be taken. It should be a very limited time, say within five or six days. Then the nature and method of the appeal must be provided for. This should be by giving notice.

Mr. DICKEY. That would be a matter of the rules of court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is very unsatisfactory to leave these matters to the judges. If we are to have an appeal, the method should be simple, say by giving notice within a certain time. The decision of the judge in appeal should be on the evidence taken in the lower court. There is nothing in the amendment to provide that the judge shall report the evidence with his finding. I think the suggestion of my hon. friend from L'Assomption is a very good one—that the hon. gentleman should take an hour to look over this question of appeal, and draft the necessary amendments. As it is now, you are putting the committee into a very awkward situation by asking them to vote. Merely to insert this clause would make the Bill ridiculous, unless section 13 is previously amended. An appeal would be totally unworkable in the present condition of the Bill. The Bill ought first to be put into a condition that an appeal can be framed from some finding which the judge is bound to deliver.

Mr. WELDON. I do not at all agree with the hon. gentleman's suggestion that we work out here an elaborate procedure for each province. I think the proposal submitted by the hon. member for Cumberland is much more workable, namely: to leave this point of the working out of the procedure to the courts of the different provinces. We cannot do it as well here as they can, even if we had all the rest of the session. I differ from the hon. member strongly in that regard. We know very well that clause 13 wants an amendment, and I think in two minutes I can suggest two or three words that the hon. member himself will admit will cure the whole difficulty. All we want is that there shall be some finding to appeal from: then we want furthermore to say that in the case of those voters who have made an appeal, their names shall not be reported on until the appeal is disposed of. It seems to me that only a very slight change needs to be made.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Supposing an inquiry is being held, and 50 or 60 men are being tried. The judge receives evidence, he himself may not make up his mind, and after the men have gone to their homes, judgment is given. You must provide some machinery by which there can be a summary appeal without much expense. If you are going to have bonds given, and a lot of elaborate factums prepared and cases printed, and all that kind of thing sent up to the court of appeal, you will probably prevent a man appealing at all. But if you decide not to make the judgment of the judge in the first instance conclusive, and give the party who is found to be guilty of wrong-doing, a right to appeal to a higher court, I think it ought to be a very simple appeal; then the judge should be bound, on notice of appeal being given, to remit the evidence on which he bases his judgment to the court of appeal, and let that be the whole case, without bonds or anything else.

Mr. MASSON. The objection that there is nothing to appeal from is certainly very forcible, because there is no notice to the party. He is allowed to go home, the judge reserves his judgment, and the document is filed, not in his own district, but here in the city of Ottawa with the Secretary of State. He has no means of knowing what that is until long afterwards, until he sees it in the 'Gazette,' and as he may not be accustomed to read the 'Gazette,' he may never hear of it until he comes to vote at some other time. I think a good way of providing against that defect would be to say that the report should be filed in some local place, in some of the offices of the court in the district where he is tried. In any case where a judge reserves judgment, there must be some way of communicating that judgment to the party interested.

An hon. MEMBER. A copy of it should be served upon him.

Mr. MASSON. That would be one way in which notice could be given, perhaps an expensive way.

Mr. AMYOT. Let a day be fixed for the judgment.

Mr. MASSON. When he reserves his judgment he should be compelled to name a day when the matter would be resumed and judgment given. I agree with the proposal that this clause should be carefully reframed, and if the promoter of the Bill is not prepared with such a clause now, it is, perhaps, only fair to say that it is his own fault, because he knew from the time this was before the special committee that at this stage a motion would be made to amend the Bill by striking out the clause as he has framed it, and providing for an appeal. He should, therefore, have been prepared with an amendment necessary to meet that.

Mr. WELDON. I had the support of the reports of two committees, one last year, both of which had reported against an appeal, with the intention of securing brevity and cheapness.

Mr. AMYOT. Not this year's committee.

Mr. WELDON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Although the hon. member was a member of the select committee, we had not the pleasure of his assistance.

Mr. AMYOT. I was away and could not attend the committee.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member did not regret half as much as we did that we had not his assistance in revising the Bill. We were very sorry that the hon. member for Bellechasse was not there to help us. But the judgment of both select committees was against an appeal. We thought the thing would work more simply, that there would be less expense. However, I share the feeling that it is hardship to say to any man that his rights in this matter shall be determined by the first inquiry. But if this amendment of the hon. member for Cumberland is allowed to pass, I think in ten minutes we can correct section 13. I cordially agree with what my hon. friend says as to what needs to be done, and I think we can do it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I for one yielded to the seemingly expressed wish of the committee that the Bill should be altered by giving an appeal, on the assumption that some very simple form of appeal would be agreed to. But if we are going to have an elaborate appeal, accompanied by a large amount of expense, I think you are taking the wrong course altogether. I suggest that the hon. gentleman draft a clause making a summary appeal without expense at all. But you must first determine that there shall be a finding, and that finding shall be so public that the parties who are being punished shall know of it—how, at present, I do not quite see—and that after this knowledge is brought fairly to them, they may have a reasonable time within which to express their desire to appeal.

Mr. MASSON. The hon. member should also define a mode for a summary appeal. In the Controverted Elections Act of Ontario it is provided that any party to an election petition who is dissatisfied with the decision and desires to appeal, may do so within eight days, by depositing his notice of appeal and $100 with the registrar of the court. That is a summary way and a cheap way.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is pretty expensive, I think.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. The appeal in this case costs only $20, and $3 for the inscription. That is very cheap and very easy for a poor man. Anyhow, as it is evident that the committee wants an appeal to exist, I think the hon. promoter of this Bill ought to take one or two hours and draft an amendment to that effect.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me that, considering the fact that this Bill has already consumed three days, it is only reasonable that the promoter of the Bill should allow it to stand until he can put the matter in proper shape. A little reflection will enable him to do that much better than in the confusion of debate. It is evident that the House is favourable to this Bill, or at least desires a measure that will serve the purpose it is intended to serve. For that reason, I strongly advise the hon. member to take the time that is necessary to put these sections into a proper shape, after consultation with his friends, and when he is ready with it, the House can resume its consideration.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. And by that way we will get into the Sunday Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say that my Bill stood first upon the Order paper, and we are now in the very last stage of the session, and I have not been able to go on with it. As that has been alluded to, I may say that I think the proposal I make is one calculated to further the purposes of the hon. member, and at the same time it has the incidental advantage of giving another member a chance to reach measures he is interested in.

Mr. WELDON. I have no desire to stand between the committee and the hon. member's Bill, but, I think, after we have done so much, that I have a right to ask the committee to carry it to a conclusion. I am satisfied that in ten minutes, unless there is some new point raised, we can amend it so as to make it acceptable to every member of the House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think we should have the question forced upon us, when we are agreed that the clause will be futile unless amended. I appeal to the Minister of Justice whether it is right to pass such a clause when we all agree that it is absolute nonsense in the present state of the Bill.

Mr. WELDON. We did the same in regard to one of the sections previously.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is very common to pass a clause with the understanding that we will make the other clauses harmonize, and that is what the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) asks to be done.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. I desire that the wording of the amendment be changed so as to include the Court of Review as well as the Court of Appeal for the province of Quebec.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It strikes me with respect to election cases that we prescribe by the general terms of the Act the form of trial and require the tribunal to make rules of procedure. And so in regard to questions of bankruptcy, we have rules under the Dominion statute.

Mr. MULOCK. That part of the amendment that sets forth that these appeals in election cases shall have precedence should be omitted. The question of procedure should be left to the court, and I doubt if this House has any jurisdiction in this matter.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Moreover, it may not be wise, and on that ground it would be better to drop that part of the amendment.

Mr. DICKEY. I have no objection.

Mr. WELDON. I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock).

Mr. AMYOT. I suggested that we should make the appeal to a tribunal of criminal jurisdiction, and then we would have jurisdiction in the matter. But we have proceeded to give an appeal to civil tribunals, and thus we have no jurisdiction in the matter of procedure. This is not a special tribunal, for we go before the ordinary Courts of Appeal in every province. There is no use in endeavouring to exceed our authority. By section 91 of the Confederation Act, subsection 27, we have jurisdiction over the Criminal Law, including procedure in criminal matters. Exclusive power is given to Provincial Legislatures by section 92, subsection 14, as regards the administration of justice, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts. In this instance we use the ordinary courts and give them power to apply our laws, but the procedure before them belongs to the ordinary courts of civil jurisdiction. If we undertake to create a special tribunal having Federal jurisdiction, well and good, and we will then have the right to decide what procedure shall be adopted. When we pass a law here in regard to promissory notes, we know that the subject is within our jurisdiction; but we have no authority to instruct the court as to the manner in which it shall proceed. All matters of procedure in civil courts, and this appeal is to a civil court, are within the jurisdiction of the province, and if we pass a law going beyond that, the Act is ultra vires. We have to follow the procedure of the provinces in cases of civil jurisdiction, and the provinces are absolute in their authority in that regard. The provinces appoint their own officers, make their own rules of practice, appoint their own Queen's counsel, and the Queen's counsel so appointed are as much Queen's counsel in the local courts as are Queen's counsel appointed by the Federal Parliament, and Queen's counsel in courts of Federal jurisdiction.

Mr. DICKEY. I do not think there can be any doubt that we have the right to prescribe some parts of the procedure, and I do not see why we should not regulate the question of appeal. I think that this is a case where we should assume that we have jurisdiction. Having made the offence we should give the man a right to appeal.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. I must still insist that in the province of Quebec the person disfranchised shall have the right to appeal to the Court of Review. The expense is too great for him to go to the Court of Appeal, because he would have to make a very heavy deposit.

Mr. AMYOT. If the judgment of the court declares that there was no corruption, there is no appeal. If the court declares that there was corruption there is an appeal by the person who is declared to have been corrupt. That person may go either to the Court of Review or to the Court of Appeal; he can select his tribunal. If he makes his deposit of $20 and goes to the Court of Review, then if he succeeds there will be an end to it, but if he loses there, he will have selected his own tribunal and he will not have much to complain about. If he wants to go direct to the Court of Appeal he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. How does the amendment to the amendment read now?

The CHAIRMAN. It reads as follows:—

That all the words after "That" be struck out, and the following be substituted: "From any finding or decision of the court or judge disfranchising any voter, such voter shall within 30 days of such finding or decision have the right to appeal (a) in the province of Quebec, to the ordinary Courts of Review or Appeal; (b) in the province of Ontario, to one of the divisions of the High Court of Justice; (c) and in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and British Columbia and the North-west Territories, to the court en banc in each of the said provinces and Territories respectively; and in Manitoba, to the Court of Queen's Bench. Such appeals to be carried on under provisions of the rules of court made pursuant to section 7 of this Act."

Mr. JEANNOTTE. That is satisfactory.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 20,

Mr. WELDON. With the consent of the committee, I shall ask leave to go back to section 13 and to amend that in conformity with what seems to be the sense of the committee. I move that the following be inserted as the first clause of section 13:—

The judge shall file with the clerk of the court a list of the voters whom he finds to have taken bribes, with the post office address of each, and the clerk shall within three days thereafter, mail a written notice registered to each of said voters that his name appears on the said list, and the filing of such lists shall be the finding of the judge.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. I would like to know at what time the 30 days begin—whether at the time of the publication in the official 'Gazette' or at the time the notice is sent by mail.

Mr. DICKEY. From the filing of the paper with the clerk.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. Then the elector will have 27 days. I think the best thing to do is to leave the Bill as it is, because I am sure that with this amendment there is not a man in the Dominion who can understand it.

Mr. MASSON. If I understand my hon. friend aright, he proposes that this amendment shall precede the section as printed. The section then will provide that the judge shall file, then that the judge shall report, and then that this report shall be sent to the Secretary of State. Now, I think that the publicity given to the judge's finding should be by declaration in open court. If he gives his judgment off-hand, at the close of the court, after hearing the evidence, the parties or their representatives are there to hear it. If he does not do that, I think he should give it in open court at some adjourned sitting of that court. In that way direct notice will be given. This mailing of notices is very well for stockholders in a company; but in the case of poor, illiterate men, scattered through the back part of a riding, a notice mailed to them within three days after the judgment is filed may lie in the post office the whole thirty days before they receive it. I think the amendment proposed by the promoter of the Bill does not meet the requirements of the case.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. The views of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken accord very much with my own. I think that this section 13 might be remodeled in this line. The judge is to report the names of all persons who he finds have taken bribes. I think it would be much better to commence the section by providing that the finding of the judge in respect to any voter shall be stated in open court at the close of the evidence or at such future time and place as he may appoint for the purpose. Then I would change the wording of the balance of the section, and provide that the judge shall not decide that any voter has taken a bribe until he is satisfied that such voter is served with a notice of the charge against him. After that I should put in a subsection making the thirty days within which the voter has a right to appeal commence with the day on which the judge has given his decision or finding. Having done that, I should provide that the judge's report, together with the evidence, should be filed with the clerk. I should not require the clerk then to give the voter any notice, because there has been an absolute decision in open court, and that should be filed with the clerk. I should follow that up by providing that if at the end of thirty days no appeal is made, or if appeals are made in respect of some of the voters, then those names not appealed and who have been found guilty of taking bribes could be reported to the Secretary of State, and after all the appeals were heard, the names of those as to whom the judge's decision was confirmed by the court of appeal, should be also reported to the Secretary of State. If those suggestions were carefully gathered together and placed together in lieu of subsection 13, it would meet the views of the committee much better than to have the judge, as is suggested by the present resolution, simply give his judgment whenever he pleases, leave it with the clerk, and let the clerk send it off by registered letter. Every person tried for receiving a bribe is sure to be present when the evidence is through or is sure to be represented in some way or other, and the judge should there and then decide or fix a day for his decision. Then allow thirty days, or any other period which may be thought more convenient, from the giving of the judgment, to appeal.

Mr. WELDON. The suggestion that there should be a judgment in open court can be embodied in the 2nd subsection, but surely the first meets the wishes of the committee, namely, that every one tried should receive notice. He has been in court, he has been on trial, he gets a written notice by registered letter, and has three or four weeks within which to take his appeal. If, in addition, a second guarantee is wanted, I have no objection that the judgment should also be given in open court.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. The first part of section 13, as in the original Bill, with but a few words added, would meet with my views. I would strike out the first line of section 13, down to the word "bribes" in the second line, and add the following:—The finding or decision shall be made by the judge in respect of any voter in open court, at the close of the evidence or at such future time and place as he may fix for that purpose. Then read the section as printed, commencing with the word "but": But he shall not decide that any voter has taken a bribe, &c.

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. gentleman will incorporate the suggestion that I made in reply to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), namely, to take care, in the case of appeal, that the appellant shall not be reported on, I have no objection to the amendment. The hon. gentleman is providing for a judgment in open court and accomplishes what I was striving to accomplish. With the consent of the committee, therefore, I will withdraw my amendment and support that of my hon. friend.

Amendment (Mr. Weldon) withdrawn.

Mr. MONCRIEFF moved in amendment:

That the first two lines of section 13 be struck out and the following substituted: The finding or decision shall be made by the judge in respect of any voter in open court at the close of the evidence, or at such future time and place as he may then fix for that purpose. But he shall not decide that any, etc.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. The amendment cannot stand because this is not a court, it is an enquête. I do not desire to discuss the matter further, but I think paragraph 2 and some others must be amended. In that case, of course, we should be making a new Bill. I have no objection to the Bill passing because it has been so amended that it will have no effect at all.

Amendment (Mr. Moncrieff) agreed to.

Mr. WELDON. Clause 2 must be amended by introducing these words at the beginning:—

The judge shall report the names of all voters and such report shall be laid before the Secretary of State.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That will not do; you will be reporting men who may have their decision reversed on appeal. I think the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) said he had an amendment making provision for this.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. In my hurry I could only prepare the first subsection. But I indicated what the other amendments should be. I intended to provide for the filing of this report or judgment, but that would not be reported to the Secretary of State until all appeals were decided.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the report is not sent in until the time of appeal is up, the names of those who do not appeal should be sent in. But it will not do to put in the 'Gazette' the name of a man who has appealed and in whose case the decision may be reversed.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I think you are perfectly right. No report should be sent to the Secretary of State until the time for appeal has gone by. But if some of the people disfranchised do not appeal, their names might be reported. If the decision is in favour of the applicant, that would end the matter, but if it is against him, a subsequent report could be made.

Mr. DICKEY. I think the amendment now before the committee should read something like this:—"The judge shall, within ten or twenty days after the determination of the appeal," and so on. Then I would propose to add that such report shall not include the name of any voter who has duly appealed from the finding against him. Then there should be another subsection, that after the final disposition of the appeal from any electoral district, the clerk of the Court of Appeal shall report to the Secretary of State the name of any voter who, on the decision of such appeal, shall be held to have taken a bribe.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already an amendment before it.

Mr. DICKEY. Yes; I offer these suggestions.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that one amendment would cover the whole by providing that the names should not be reported until the proceedings are closed and all appeals, if any, are finally disposed of.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there might be fifty men found guilty and only one appeal. There would be no reason for holding back the whole fifty names while the appeal of one is being decided.

Mr. WELDON. If the suggestion which is made by the hon. member for Cumberland is adopted, I think the objection would be met. I move that the section shall be amended by inserting the following :—

The judge shall, within ten days after the time within which an appeal need may be taken under this Act, report the names of all voters whom he finds to have taken bribes, and such report shall be made——and so on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You should say: "report the names of all voters who have taken bribes and who have not appealed."

Mr. WELDON. I agree to that.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. If this appeal is taken against the decision of the judge, would it not be better that the appeal should come back from the appellant judge to the judge of the first instance? I think if the hon. member for Cumberland will adopt that suggestion, it would be more in the line followed by all the courts.

Mr. DICKEY. I move that section 13 be amended by adding as subsection 4 :

After the final disposition of any appeal, the clerk of the Court of Appeal shall forthwith report to the Secretary of State the name of every voter who, under the decision upon the said appeal, shall be held to have taken the bribe, and on such report, the like proceedings shall be had as are required by this Act in the case of the report of the judge.

Mr. WELDON. I propose that the following clause 21 be added to the Bill :—

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, where in any electoral district an election petition has been filed under the Act for the trial of controverted elections, no petition shall be filed under this Act until such election petition has been abandoned or disposed of.

Mr. AMYOT. If there is a controverted election, the present law will not apply, because over six months will be occupied in disposing of the election petition.

Mr. MASSON. The petition under this Act might be filed before the election petition, and in that event this amendment would not apply.

Mr. DICKEY. The petition under this Act cannot be filed until the time for filing a petition under the Controverted Elections Act has passed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is perfectly clear that the objection taken by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) is correct. This Act cannot come into operation in any election district where an election petition has been filed. You must initiate proceedings under this Act within sixty days. An election petition must be initiated within thirty days. It is impossible to dispose of an election petition within thirty days, and, therefore, whenever an election petition has been filed it operates as a barrier against proceedings under this Act. It is obvious that there are only thirty days in which to act, and the proceedings under an election petition must be disposed of before proceedings are initiated under this Act.

Mr. WELDON. This Bill is not to operate when an election petition is running, but after an election petition has been disposed of.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is very grave objection to leaving open a county to the troubles connected with an inquiry running probably two years after the election occurred. If that is the effect of the clause I decidedly object to it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) to say that there should not be two proceedings going on simultaneously, but that if an election petition has been filed a petition cannot be filed under this Act.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) I understand now, if there should be a petition for the voiding of the election, then a petition for an inquiry could be filed under this Act before the election petition has been disposed of.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. (Translation.) That is to say, the provisions of the Bill will not be available before the election petition has been disposed of, either by a judgment or by the waiving of the petition.

Mr. BERGIN. (Translation.) I think, Mr. Chairman, you should read the amendment in French.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. (Translation.) That is what I did.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) I like to get as many explanations as possible, Mr. Chairman, for I want to know what I am going to vote upon. I suppose that, at the next election, the Liberal candidate should be returned in the county of L'Assomption—that will not happen—but I suppose he should be returned. Should his opponents, dissatisfied with the result of the election, file a petition for an inquiry under this Bill, what will happen if there is already a protest filed against the election of the returned candidate?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) The petition will then stand.

Mr. AMYOT. If I understand properly, under the clause as proposed, if a party has practised corruption very largely it will suffice for that party to contest the election, and then it will be impossible to get the enquête provided for by this Bill. This clause virtually takes away the effect of the whole Bill. A party may practise corruption on a large scale, and if he contests the election even of a friend, then that will be a bar to any petition for this general inquiry.

Mr. WELDON. I will ask leave to add another subsection and to state affirmatively: that notwithstanding anything in this Act, in a county where an election petition has been filed under the Controverted Elections Act, and where such petition has been disposed of or abandoned, then a petition can be filed under this Act. If the section is not clear, then we will make it clear. I move the following sub-clause:—

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, a petition under this Act may be filed within thirty days after the disposition or abandonment of such election petition.

Mr. AMYOT. That simply means that if the contestation of an election takes five years, then there will be thirty days after that to get this inquiry.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) pointed out a few minutes ago that if the preceding clause is not clear, then this whole Act would be made largely nugatory by the filing of the election petition. I want to make perfectly clear by this clause, what I thought was perfectly clear before, and that is: that the power to petition under this Act shall be given to the people of a county, even though two years have expired. I want that the persons in a county who believe there has been corruption shall have their right under this Act.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) What is the time allowed?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Five years.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) All right, I acquiesce.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am in favour of everything reasonable and fair, and am willing to run the gauntlet for a number of months; but when it is proposed to file a new petition and to put a man on the rack for an offence alleged to have been committed years previously, I think the subject requires consideration. I think the hon. mover of the Bill was unwise in acceding to the amendment to the second clause; but he now wants to go a great deal further than the House agreed to go in the first instance. The House agreed to go this far and no further: that if within sixty days after an election, corrupt practices were alleged to have extensively prevailed, a petition might be filed, but now the hon. gentleman wants that limitation swept away so that at the end of two years a man may still be attacked. That may be all right, but it is a very serious departure from the line laid down in connection with these matters hitherto. In the case of an election petition, you say there must be a reasonable limit within which the petition must be filed. Everybody has agreed to that. Now, if my hon. friend's amendment is carried, it will be possible at the end of two or three years, if the trial of the election petition lasts that long, to file a new petition under this Act. I submit to the committee that that is an unfair thing, and may work very great injustice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman's amendment goes that far, I think it is all wrong; but as I understood the proposition, it was that where a petition was filed within sixty days, as required by the Act, the proceedings under that must be suspended until the election petition is disposed of—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But that no greater latitude for filing a petition should be given under such circumstances than if there were no election petition. The only thing that ought to be provided for—and I understood that the promoter was providing for it—is that the proceedings under this Bill should be suspended during the proceedings under an election petition. If that idea is not clearly expressed, I think it ought to be. But I do not think that any greater latitude should be given for proceedings in cases where an election petition is filed than where none is filed.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues took an active part in the discussion of this question, and it was largely on their suggestion that the second part of this amendment clause was drafted. I drafted it some weeks ago, and I suggested to the committee that it would be more convenient to propose it as a substantive clause at the end of the Bill. In doing this, I am certainly conforming to the wishes of the hon. leader of the Opposition, who took an active part in the discussion. We altered the time so as to keep clear of election petitions. If we had started with the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell, which is different from that of the hon. leader of the Opposition, it would serve my purpose. If, in any county, there are men sufficiently anxious to try to clean the Augean stable, as to put up the money necessary to make the attempt, why should they not be allowed to do so? It is not proposed to attack the seat of a member by this measure; the greatest pains have been taken to guard against that. We offer this as a tentative measure, an educative measure, if you will, and in order to give people in any county, whether one month or sixteen months after an election, where they are delayed by proceedings under an election petition, a chance to strike off the lists the names of men who are not fit to vote.

Mr. TISDALE. If the amendment is such as the hon. member for Queen's explains it to be, it certainly ought not to pass.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not understand that the promoter challenges my construction of the amendment.

Mr. WELDON. No.

Mr. TISDALE. If the idea of the amendment is that after an election petition has been filed, and while it is before the courts—it generally takes two years to get through with one—an inquiry may be instituted into an election fight which has passed and gone for two years, and when all feeling connected with it has passed away, that is a later period than is even allowed under the general law for proceedings in penal cases. Surely the hon. member does not propose to add to a Bill, so complicated as this, a proposition of that sort.

Mr. DICKEY. There is nothing very extraordinary about this provision. What the hon. member for Bothwell says is exactly what is intended. The hon. member for Queen's talks about a petition being filed under this Act two years after an election. That is the case with an election petition to-day. You can file an election petition two years after the election is over, under special circumstances, where you discover an act of corruption. It might be two years, or it might be three years. But that is an exceptional case, and it is an exceptional case that is proposed to be provided for here. The promoter of this Bill says that a petition under this Act must be filed within a specified time. Some members of this House think, and think very fairly, that it might be used for fishing purposes. In order to meet that objection, the promoter says: Suspend your proceedings until the election petition is disposed of, and then go on. There is nothing in that inconsistent with the proceedings under an election petition, and nothing unfair to anybody that I can see; and for my part, I shall vote for the amendment as proposed, to meet the special case.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I think there ought to be some defined limit within which the extraordinary process permitted by this Bill ought to come to an end. As mentioned by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey), it is perfectly true that a petition to set aside an election may take place two or three or four years after the election, as in the case where there have been corrupt practices charged directly against the candidate, and it seems to me that this wholesale attack upon the voters' list should be limited in such a way that it could not come up two or three or four years after the election is over. It seems almost too absurd to think that, if a candidate was personally guilty of some corrupt act whereby his election might be voided, that four years after he had taken his seat should be the starting point at which the thirty days limit should commence, under which the application in the Bill we are discussing may be filed.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 119) for the relief of William Samuel Piper.—(Mr. Northrup.)

BRIBERY AND DISFRANCHISEMENT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 6) to disfranchise voters who have taken bribes.—(Mr. Weldon.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MONCRIEFF. In reference to the clause that was last submitted for the approval of the committee, the import of which, if I recollect rightly, was that, if there happened to be a controverted election petition filed within the thirty days, then the time for filing the petition under this Bill should be extended until thirty days after the complete determination of the trial under the Controverted Elections Act. Now, I fully concur in the principle of that clause in this respect: that I do not think the two should be tried concurrently, nor that the one should be used for the assistance of the other. I believe that would be improper, but it strikes me very forcibly, and I must protest against this amendment for this reason, that our experience of these election trials is that they are very often protracted, and last from six months to two years. They pass from one court to another, and can never be said to be finally determined until the court of last resort has pronounced its decision. Is it to be said that in this matter, where witnesses are to be charged with receiving bribes, they are to be suspended, so to speak, from trial and investigation during all that period? In looking over the criminal laws, I find that there are limitations to the bringing of actions for offences of a very serious character, a few months only being allowed for laying the information against the accused. The reason for that is self-evident. Section 841 of the Criminal Code provides that in every case punishable by summary conviction, and that class embraces an innumerable number of crimes, six months is the limit in which information can be laid, unless another period is fixed by a special Act. The object of that is that a speedy trial shall be had, that witnesses should be brought before the court before they have left the country or have died if you like, and that inducements for perjury should be lessened, and that the person charged with an offence shall have an opportunity of meeting the charge against him. That stands to reason. But in the amendment now suggested, all that is going to be swept away. And some voter charged with having received 25 cents or some other nominal consideration for his vote sufficient to constitute a matter of bribery—what position is he in? He may not be tried, may not have the particulars of his offence disclosed to him for two or three years after the time when he is said to have been guilty of being bribed. Now, that seems to me altogether too much. This point surely could not have been thought of by the promoter of the Bill, he could not have seen what the effect of such a provision would be. Certainly, for myself, I protest against any clause that would allow a man accused of an offence to be kept without a trial for two or three years. The Bill does not even give him the opportunity of knowing what he is to be charged with. If that were done he could save up, as it were, the evidence for his own defence. But he is to be taken by surprise and told that at an election two or three years before, he received a sum of money or some other consideration for his vote, and called upon to stand his trial. I do not believe the committee would sanction such a clause. If another plan were adopted—I cannot say I would approve of it—that when the original petition was filed, the particulars were to be filed along with the petition, so that the man would know the offence on which he was to be charged, it would overcome in part the difficulty. But I do not think even that would be proper. When a man is, as it were, posted as a criminal, formally accused of being guilty of bribery, he cannot have his trial disposed of too quickly. To give the bill of particulars, and keep the accusation against a man's name, would be even more monstrous. Having once disclosed his name and charged him with an offence, to keep that name before the public and prevent a trial until after a petition under the Controverted Elections Act had been disposed of is against all sound principle. So I do not think that due consideration could have been given to this section. There seems to be too much anxiety on the part of the hon. member for Albert, for whom I have the highest respect, to get the Bill through in some shape or other. My hon. friend seems to be perfectly satisfied to grasp at any amendment that will bring him towards the last section of the Bill. I think that the Bill even in the clauses already passed would stand another revision by the committee. Perhaps I am myself to blame for that. It is a case of hurried legislation. It is provided in one case that the judge shall give his decision at the close of the evidence. That might lead to the giving of the decision as soon as the witnesses have been heard, cutting off the opportunity for counsel to argue the case. In another Act I find that the decision of the judge is to be given at the close of the trial, not at the close of the evidence. I cannot but think that my hon. friend accepts these amendments without due consideration. But we are now discussing the question of keeping a man dangling before the public under accusation, perhaps for years, and I most certainly enter my protest against any such provision.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff), when he addressed the House two weeks ago, spoke with more candour than many of those who have thrown their full strength and weight in opposition to the Bill. He frankly stated that he was opposed to the Bill, upright and downright; opposed to the principle and opposed to the clauses by which it was proposed to carry that principle into effect. I do not thank the hon. gentleman for the patronage he has been good enough to bestow on me with. The hon. gentleman is wrong in supposing that little care was devoted to the preparation of the Bill. It was prepared by the help of a most skilled draftsman in my own province, a gentleman who has had a large experience in the trial of election disputes. I was glad to avail myself of that hon. gentleman's skill two years ago when I was trying to give shape to this idea with a view to asking an expression of the opinion of the House with regard to it. Twelve months ago I had the assistance of a special committee of this House, composed of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and—I cannot remember all the gentlemen who were on that committee, and will probably omit some—the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. McLeod), the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey), and others. This year again I had the assistance of, I think, all but one of these gentlemen whom I have named, and of some other hon. members of this House. It was my misfortune, as I have previously said, that my hon. friend from Bellechasse did not meet with us. I am sorry that I did not get the assistance of my hon. friend from Lambton. His eminent professional abilities had not escaped my eye. I would have been glad had he also been added to that committee, but his absence deprived us of the assistance of that distinguished barrister and very distinguished member of this House in perfecting the Bill. But it cannot be said that the Bill was hastily drawn, or that a fair amount of toil has not been given by the barristers of this House to perfecting the Bill. I am very unwilling indeed to have the Bill carried through in any emasculated form. The hon. gentleman has misconceived me; he does not know me. I am not so eager to win the kudos of carrying a Bill through Parliament that I am willing to have it carried through with its brains knocked out. And if the only chance for this Bill is to have it tried in counties where no petition is filed, and where, in all likelihood, there has been little or no corruption, then I say the Bill is dead before it is fairly born. Therefore, if this amendment in substance is made, if the principle is not embodied in the Bill, that we shall have the right to make the Bill operative in counties where election petitions have been filed, I shall ask that the Bill do not become law, and shall then exercise my own judgment as to proposing it again at some other time. But I wish to assure my hon. friend from Lambton that I have not been so eager as he thinks to grasp at any half considered suggestions. He makes but a poor acknowledgment of my courtesy to him in accepting suggestions which were no better than those made by myself, but which seemed to me to be workable. I refer to the amendment of section 13, which was suggested by the hon. gentleman. I need not have accepted his amendment—no better and no worse than my own—if I had thought that the best acknowledgment he could make is to taunt me with a desire to get the Bill through, even in an emasculated form. I have no such desire, and I say now that I shall not ask the Bill to be carried to a third reading, if the Bill be, in my judgment, destroyed or deprived of any essential portion. Further, I desire to say that I have the great advantage of knowing from the hon. gentleman's own statement that he would like to see the Bill destroyed, and I think he has made a very skilful and ingenious speech to induce the House, even at this stage, to destroy the Bill.

Mr. AMYOT. This must not be brought down to a personal matter. Nobody impugns the motives of the hon. member. We are all ready to admit his earnestness in desiring to bring about purity in elections. But the question is: is it fair to leave any citizen under a vague accusation, the particulars of which he does not know for two, or three, or, it may be, five years, without a trial? Is it fair to leave such a sword hanging over his head for so long a time? We ask that some limit of time be set for the operation of his Bill. But here he says the suit will be taken at any time after another suit which may last a number of years. So a man who has committed no offence, is liable to be accused five years hence of a thing which he knows nothing about, and witnesses, false witnesses, perhaps, may testify against him, or witnesses who have forgotten the real facts may come and swear against him, for diverse reasons; and he is exposed to that danger all the time. Now, these amendments render that possible, and we ask the promoter of the Bill if it is fair to make such provisions. We are in favour of the Bill, but a Bill framed in such a way that it will be worthy of this House, not a Bill which will render us subject to an inquisition which may take place five or ten years hence. If the hon. gentleman wants to choke his child at once, he is not showing the disposition of a good father. If his child has some imperfections, let him try and cure them. He must see himself that his amendment is not correct. If he withdraws it, there will remain the possibility of an inquiry when no election contestation will be going on, and it may prove to be of some use. I hope, therefore, he will either withdraw his amendment or change it.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I think the hon. member for Albert misunderstood what I said. Certainly I did not intend to express my thoughts in any such way as he has interpreted my language. I fully concede that the hon. gentleman is perfectly in earnest in pushing his Bill, and I never meant for one moment to imply the contrary. I never meant to say that he would consent to accept an emasculated form of the Bill, with its brains all knocked out, rather than have no Bill at all. What I intended to say was that the suggestions and amendments that are made to the Bill in committee, are necessarily hurried, without sufficient careful consideration, and that some sections require, in fact, complete revision. Under these circumstances, it is possible to construct a Bill full of imperfections. I want the hon. gentleman distinctly to understand that I do not for one moment impugn his earnestness in this matter, nor do I suppose that he wants a Bill that would not be effective when it was passed.

Mr. TISDALE. I think myself that the hon. gentleman might gather from the length of the debate, and the tenor of the debate, that the sense of the House is against his Bill.

Mr. WELDON. Not at all, far from it.

Mr. TISDALE. I was going to say that I think the hon. gentleman might gather, from the length of time the Bill has been discussed, that there is a feeling against it, and were it not for the earnestness of the hon. gentleman, and the high esteem in which he is held—I am saying this sincerely—the Bill would have been voted down before this time. The fact that this Bill has been discussed in committee three or four times, and has not got through the committee stage yet, and that it was largely challenged on the second reading, certainly shows, to my mind, that the feeling of the House is opposed to it. I have expressed no opinion so far upon the Bill, except this afternoon upon one clause which the hon. gentleman proposed. I am of the opinion that the principle of the Bill has been sufficiently discussed for this session, at least, and the hon. gentleman might consider the propriety of withdrawing it. If he does not see fit to do that, I think some motion had better be made to settle the fate of the Bill, because we have discussed it so long that it is standing in the way of other matters. The Bill at present is not at all the Bill that was introduced by the hon. gentleman. I do not agree with the suggestion that he was willing or anxious that changes should be made. I believe he is very sincere, and were it not for that sincerity, and the high regard the members have for him, it would have been terminated ere this. I believe it would be a relief to many members of the House if the hon. member would withdraw it this session; and then, after further study and consideration, he might bring it up again the next session. He has made more progress with it this session than he did last. If he does not consent to withdraw it, I think we should, in some manner, terminate the discussion upon it, and go on with some other business.

Mr. FLINT. I think the hon. member who promoted this Bill ought to carry it through the last stage, if possible. I think the discussion we have had has been very valuable, because it has directed the attention of the members of this House, as well as the public, to the great difficulty of the question with which he has attempted to grapple. If this Bill should fail, through the difficulty of arranging the details, to become law this session, I believe the attention that has been directed towards this question will result, in a very short time, in some measure dealing with it being adopted. We can all see the difficulties that are to be overcome in grappling with a subject of such magnitude as that to which the hon. gentleman has directed his attention. I presume there are a large number of hon. members who, like myself, have supported this Bill through all its stages by simply voting in order to keep it going, without making any remarks upon it, because the time has been largely taken up by those who have opposed the principle of the measure, or some of the details. Now, we have nearly reached the conclusion of the details of the measure. The clause which is now under consideration is one of the closing passages in connection with the Bill, and if it can be satisfactorily adjusted, then the Bill will probably reach a third reading and be reprinted, and then be discussed over again by such hon. members as desire to do so, having the full scope as well as the details of the measure before them. Now, what is the point to which attention is directed just now? The opposition to the amendment comes from hon. members who really raised the question which induced him to make this amendment. It was stated, although I have not been able to see the force of the argument, that it would be improper, unfair, against public policy, and injurious to individuals to have this inquisition proceeding at the same time with the pendency of a trial on an election petition. I must say that I do not see the force of that argument. I can easily conceive that both proceedings may go on at the same time with the greatest propriety. They are not dealing with the same question, although, in some particulars, they may be dealing with the same people. It is possible that an amendment to the Controverted Elections Act might be introduced, empowering judges to certify what electors have been bribed, and to hand them over, under some form of procedure yet to be devised, to the revising officer, and have their names stricken off the list. That may be a very good amendment to make to the Elections Act. But, in my opinion, there is nothing inconsistent with the proceedings under this proposed measure going on pari passu with the proceedings in a controverted election. But as the general sense of the committee seems to be against that view, we may assume that proposition would not now be accepted. Now, what is the objection raised here? It is that during the pendency of the trial of an election petition, certain voters who are accused of bribery and who are to be tried under the provisions of this Act for bribery with a view to having their names struck off from the roll, would be placed in some very embarrassing, or very painful, or very disadvantageous position for a certain length of time. I do not see the force of that argument. A statute of limitations extending to two years for what is now considered a crime is certainly not very extreme. If the evidence is clear that bribery on an extensive scale was conducted two years ago, that evidence will be preserved by those interested in carrying out the provisions of the Act, and the individuals charged will have the same opportunity for defence at the proper time as they would have had earlier. Hon. members are raising an imaginary obstacle; they are looking with undue leniency on the class whom we are trying to punish or are trying to warn. There can be no doubt that bribery has been a source of great evil to this country almost ever since the beginning of our free institutions. There can be no doubt also that owing to legislation and improvement in the public mind there is a decreasing liability to bribery as compared with a quarter of a century or longer ago, and as the hon. promoter of the Bill has claimed for his measure largely an educational value we should do everything to perfect its details in order to place it on the Statute-book. Many of the amendments moved and accepted have not been wise. They have made the measure too heavy, but with all those faults the friends of the measure are disposed to accept it, and those friendly to the views of the promoter should accept the last amendment proposed. The danger of injuring any individual is infinitely less than the danger to the public from the continuance of the system of bribery which is aimed at by this measure. During the whole of this discussion there have been many philosophical inquiries as to where the responsibility for extensive bribery or bribery at all exists: who is to blame, and who should bear the punishment? Some hon. members are disposed to accuse the rich candidate or his wealthy friends; others are disposed to accuse the needy person who is bribed. I think the personal experience of hon. gentlemen and of those who have been accustomed to take part in election contests will be to distribute this blame somewhat impartially between the two. In many instances where the candidate is known to be wealthy or his friends disposed to contribute large sums for his election, the spirit of cupidity is at once aroused among a certain portion of the electors, and once aroused it injuriously affects the whole election. But where, on the other hand, the candidate and his friends are known not to possess wealth, and are not disposed to expend money, and where the campaign is one largely of a party and an intellectual character, those looking for bribes accept the inevitable, and do not look for them. I have known elections in my own province where bribery has been unknown in a constituency, where it was previously known to have prevailed extensively. The reason was that the candidate and his friends were not able to bribe, and did not desire to expend money for that purpose, and accordingly the spirit of bribery disappeared. But within a year or two candidates were contesting the constituency who were known to be possessed of means, and then the spirit of greed was aroused and bribery of a very improper character was known to have been carried on. So we will distribute the blame equally between the wealthy and the needy, and let us as far as possible accept the views of the promoter of the Bill, and see what will come of it. I believe the educational value of the Bill will be very great, and further, that the educational value of the discussions in this House on the subject will be very great as directing attention not only to the difficulties surrounding the question, but to the difficulties connected with legislating in an efficient manner to grapple with those evils.

Mr. CURRAN. The main argument used against the last amendment is that it keeps the door open to a petition being filed probably two, three, four and even five years after the offences complained of have been committed. A great deal may be said, and has been said with considerable force, against keeping matters of this kind pending for so long a time in view of our statutory enactments fixing the period in which charges are to be brought or abandoned. I do not think that where an election petition has been filed, and where one year or two years have been occupied in arriving at a final decision on its merits, there is likely in any constituency in Canada to be a petition filed under this Act. I think all the interest will have died out, and the people will not be inclined, after the expiration of two years, to revive any charges of so ancient a date. However, it is as well to provide against a state of affairs that may take place, and against which the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) has so forcibly spoken. I therefore propose the following as a sub-amendment:—

Provided always that an election petition shall have been finally disposed of within one year of the filing of the petition therein.

If the election petition is not disposed of within a year, then this Act will not come into force in any constituency where such election petition has been filed.

Mr. McMULLEN. In my humble opinion, I consider that the proposition submitted by the Solicitor General is a sheer farce. Any man who knew that bribery and corruption existed to a considerable extent in the riding he represented would induce some person to file an election petition and keep it on file for a year, and it would not be proceeded with except under his instructions and direction, and at the end of the year the filing of an investigating petition of the character proposed by this Bill would be impossible. The time would have elapsed. If the Solicitor General is not prepared to give the promoter of the Bill any more assistance than is contained in the amendment he has proposed, which amounts to no assistance whatever, we must conclude that he is against the Bill.

Mr. AMYOT. If I remember correctly, the election law provides that when a party does not proceed with the petition some other person may be substituted.

Mr. McMULLEN. Every one who has been subject to an election petition is aware that there is a delay of about six months before any proceedings are taken. After that time the petitioner and the member petitioned against, if they are friendly, can very easily extend the proceedings six months longer, and shut out any action that was possible under the hon. gentleman's measure.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, the first time I happened to discuss the Bill, it was thought I only intended to prevent its passing. I am happy to find the discussion has shown that the stand I then took was perfectly right. This Bill is a very important piece of legislation, and it must be carefully drawn up, as it tends to interfere with individual liberty. If I speak again, they will say it is a license. Well, the discussion which took place since this Bill was introduced, especially the one we have had to-day, proves one thing: and that is that a law having for its object to repress an evil must be earnestly considered and carefully drawn up. If, in order to do away with an evil which is alleged to exist, we make a law which is a greater source of injustices than the evil itself, in my opinion, we should not pass such a law. We have an evidence of that now before us. If this Bill was reprinted with all the amendments made thereto and brought again before the House, I think its own promoter would be the first to ask that it be withdrawn. I am not opposed to the principle of the Bill; I am against bribery, and any measure which might be brought before this House having for its object to efficiently prevent bribery would receive on my part as earnest a support as the objections I made to this Bill, although some papers, English papers in particular, were repeating that I only made such objections in order to prevent the Bill being passed. I will add nothing to these remarks, Mr. Chairman, because I think I am perfectly vindicated, by the general tenor of the discussion of this Bill, to-day, from the animadversions of the English press with respect to the course I followed in the discussion of this Bill.

Mr. DICKEY. It seems to me that the motion of the Solicitor General is a fair compromise between the opposing views on different sides of the House. As a supporter of the Bill I would be prepared to accept the Solicitor General's amendment.

Mr. AMYOT. I suppose it is understood that the Bill will be printed before it comes to the House.

Bill reported.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Mr. CHARLTON moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 2) to secure the better observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday.

Mr. AMYOT. Mr. Speaker, before the House adopts this motion I want to offer a few remarks upon this Bill itself. I find in the 'Hansard,' the reasons given by the hon. the mover of the Bill for its introduction, and he uses these words:

I propose to present this Bill as a civil measure, as a measure designed to secure for the people of this country their civil rights and their religious rights as well under the law.

These words were not spoken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) without reflection. The hon. mover of the Bill went on to say:

The aim of the Bill is not to prescribe religious observances. It will not interfere with the belief or the religious observances of the Mahomedan, or the Jew, the Pagan or the Infidel. It will prescribe for no man what his religious belief, or religious conduct, or religious observances shall be. It is designed to secure to all men certain civil rights. It is designed to secure to the labourer the right of rest on the seventh day of the week. It is designed to secure to the Christian labourer the enjoyment of Christian observances and ordinances on the seventh day of the week, and unfortunately in many cases, unless the law steps in and protects him in that right, it is impossible for him to exercise it.

So the hon. promoter of the Bill (Mr. Charlton) says that the object of this measure, and he has said it repeatedly, is for the protection of our civil rights. It is the second year, if I mistake not, that he brings this Bill before the House. He has had ample time to think over it, and he is still of opinion that this Bill is intended to protect our civil rights. Well, Mr. Speaker, if such be the case, the first objection to it is: that this Parliament has not been created for the protection of civil rights. The British North America Act, clause 92, subsection 13, says:

Property and civil rights in the provinces (will be the exclusive right of the Provincial Legislature).

The hon. gentleman must see at once from this clause the great objection there is in this Bill. Under Confederation we have accepted a partnership. We have left to the provinces certain powers, and we have given to the partnership at Ottawa certain other powers, but each Legislature is supreme within its domain. The Legislatures of the provinces have to deal with civil rights, and they are doing so daily, and they have passed statutes for the very object which this Bill has in view. Why should we infringe upon the rights of the Legislatures? I often hear both sides of this hon. House speak of the autonomy of the provinces. Each political party wants to be looked upon as the guardian of the autonomy of the provinces. Well, the autonomy of the provinces is provided for by the British North America Act, and the British North America Act gives jurisdiction over civil rights to the provinces. There must be some good reason given why we should infringe upon the rights of the Legislatures in this matter. Subsection 8 of the British North America Act, dealing with municipal institutions in the provinces, says:

In each province the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the class of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say, (8) municipal institutions, (13) property and civil rights in the province.

The keeping of Sunday, by refraining from doing something, falls within the domain of municipal control. It is a municipal matter, and moreover it is a civil right, to do or not to do something not essentially bad in itself, such as working on Sunday. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) himself admits that this is a civil matter, and he has said so repeatedly. Then why should this Parliament pass a law on that point? Will the hon. gentleman say that the Legislature of Ontario has not sufficient intelligence and respect for God to pass laws so that the law of God will be observed in regard to the Sundays? Will he say that the Legislature of Ontario is unfit to pass laws to protect the citizens in accordance with the laws of God? Will he undertake to say that? Will he undertake to say that this Parliament only understands the laws of God? If not, why does he want to take away from Ontario, that great province to which he belongs, which is ruled by a party to which he belongs, where there are men as patriotic, as intelligent, and as experienced as the leader of that party in that province, the Hon. Mr. Mowat, the right to protect society? Will he say that these men are not able to protect society? Why does he pay them the very poor compliment of saying that we must come to the Dominion to force Ontario to have some respect and regard for the laws of God? That is a most extraordinary position he wants us to take. For my part, I do not know Ontario very well, but I know my own province, and I tell him that in my province, Protestants as well as Catholics all have respect and regard for the laws of God, and do not come to this Parliament to ask for protection against the Local Parliament. I presume that in Ontario the same must be the case; and the sooner the hon. gentleman abandons the habit of looking to this Parliament for the protection of society against the indifference of the Local Parliaments, the better it will be for the reputation of the section of the country which he represents. The hon. gentleman has admitted himself that this is a law for the protection of civil rights, and we cannot have a better admission that we have no jurisdiction whatever in the matter. He will tell me, we will make a criminal affair of it. Well, of course, we have the right to make criminal anything we choose. We may say: If you do not take your breakfast at seven o'clock in the morning you will be guilty of an indictable offence. Shall we do it? We may say: You shall not open your shops on Mondays, Tuesdays, or Wednesdays before eight o'clock in the morning, and if you do you will be guilty of an indictable offence. When we come to the criminal aspect of the matter, it comes within our jurisdiction; but when we were intrusted with the enactment of criminal laws, we were presumed to be intelligent people who would only treat as criminal, those matters which are criminal, per se, or quasi criminal. But the hon. gentleman himself did not take that position. He wants this matter treated as civil law, and by that very fact he removes it from our jurisdiction. Further on, the hon. gentleman says:

The state should protect the rights of conscience.

This is a very important principle. I want to know where the hon. gentleman wants to apply it. It is a very true principle applied generally, and I wish it were printed in the hon. gentleman's heart as well as in the hearts of all the people of the Dominion—the state should protect the rights of conscience. The rights of whose conscience?

Let us speak of the minority in the North-west. Is it the rights of their conscience that he wants to protect? There are those in the North-west who have consciences. If it is the duty of the state to protect the rights of conscience, what does the hon. gentleman propose to do to protect their rights of conscience? He knows to what I allude. If it is our general duty to protect the rights of conscience in matters of Sunday, it is our duty to protect the rights of conscience in matters of every day of the week. For every day of the year the rights of conscience of the minority are violated in Manitoba, it is the hon. gentleman's duty to come to the rescue. Surely a gentleman who has such noble aims will not forget the consciences of the thousands and thousands who are there. He only finds it the duty of the state to interfere when it pleases—I will not say his own caprice, but his own conscience, and only on matters of Sunday; and even in matters of Sunday it is not complete, because when some railways come from the States his conscience is no more affected; when ships ply between the States and Canada, they may journey on Sundays, and his conscience is not affected; if perishable goods are on a train, his conscience is not affected; if live stock are on a train, his conscience is not affected. The hon. gentleman has divers methods of weighing matters of conscience, and with him, matters of conscience are limited to only part of the day—not as it was in the ancient law, from the middle of one day to the middle of the next, but only from certain hours on Sunday. But we will come to that later on. The duty of the state is to protect the rights of conscience; I admit it. But the provinces are the state as well as the Dominion. So far as civil rights are concerned, matters of conscience are left to the protection of the provinces, not the Dominion. I admit, Mr. Speaker, in a general way, the principle that we should protect the rights of conscience within the limits of our jurisdiction. But we are not alone in this Dominion. There are not only Protestants and Catholics in this country; there are some other subjects of Her Majesty; the hon. gentleman knows it. There are some Jews. In England, in France, in Germany, in all the civilized nations of the world, they are a respected set of individuals. They have consciences, too; and though not believing in their faith, I am not ashamed to show their way of thinking. They rely upon the Bible, and upon the Old Testament, and what do they find there? They find the words of God himself. The hon. mover of the Bill himself believes that what I will read there is the word of God. Take Genesis—some hon. gentlemen laugh, but perhaps it will do them good to hear again what they learned by heart when young. Take paragraph two, which reads:

And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made.

There, it is the seventh day which God made holy, and then, if you look to Exodus, paragraph twenty—I am told that in English we should say verses—verse 20, subsection 8. I may be more correct, perhaps, in saying chapter 20 and verses 8, 9, 10 and 11:

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.

The Jews took those texts among others—there are hundreds of them—and say that the law that God gave to his creatures is to keep holy the seventh day. And they ask by what authority we change the law of God and celebrate the eighth day instead of the seventh. This is a very important point, and I am sure that the hon. mover of the Bill (Mr. Charlton) is ready to give his authority. Now, there is another sect or religion which says: We do not rely upon the Old Testament, but upon the New Testament, and according to the New Testament it is ordered that we should go on celebrating the seventh day and not the eighth day. These people rely upon the New Testament, and have even suffered death to prove their belief. I hold in my hand a book entitled "The Faiths of the People," by Molloy, and I will draw the attention of the hon. gentlemen to page 209 at the end of the chapter. He will see there the reasons these people give for going on celebrating the seventh day. I shall not trespass upon the time of the House by giving quotations, but I ask the hon. gentleman to show us one word in the New Testament where the Son of God took it upon himself to change the day ordered by His Father to be kept holy. The Seventh Day Baptists or Adventists, who celebrate the seventh day, say to the mover of this Bill: To whom do you submit when you keep holy the eighth day? And they accuse him of submitting to the Catholic Church. They say to him: In celebrating the eighth day of the week, you admit the authority of the Catholic Church and its right to impose discipline. They admit that the Catholic Church has received from God the power to dictate to the people its law as to the doctrine to be followed. That is the charge which the Seventh Day Adventists make against the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman knows, and he will find it in his own authorities, that Sunday is of Apostolic tradition. In the first centuries, as shown in the book I have here, in many parts of Christendom, sabbath was celebrated, but the Catholic Church changed the day, pretending that it had the right so to change it, pretending that it was established by the Son of God and intrusted with all powers. And it is in virtue of that belief that the church changed the day, and that is why the Seventh Day Adventists say to the hon. mover of the Bill: You believe, like us, in the New Testament, why do you give up your belief in the sabbath celebration? Why do you submit to the Romish Church? Why do you admit the traditions of the Apostles? If you admit one, you admit them all. You admit the absolution given by the priest, you admit the sacraments of that church. But they say: We believe in the Word of God the Father in the Old Testament, and in the Word of God the Son in the New Testament, and we stand by that, and will not submit to the dictation of any other church, which is only assuming powers it has not received. As for us Catholics, Mr. Speaker, we shall celebrate our Sundays as we please, provided we do not interfere with your civil rights, and if we do, go to the provinces and you will receive protection. When we joined Confederation, we joined it as a commercial partnership, and not as a salvation army. We do not believe in this Parliament turning itself into a salvation army, and with drums and fifes trying to force us into Heaven. The hon. mover of this Bill says he wishes to protect the rights of conscience. Is he doing that when he wants to impose upon the Jews the obligation of keeping the eighth day instead of the seventh? Does he protect the rights of conscience when he seeks to impose upon the Jews to keep the first day of the week instead of the seventh? Does he protect the rights of conscience when he wants to compel the Seventh Day Adventists to celebrate the first day of the creation instead of the seventh? Does he protect the rights of conscience when he seeks to compel a great number of his fellow-citizens to disobey the Word of God and to obey the words of a church of which they do not approve? The hon. gentleman must remember that in proposing his Bill he acts not only contrary to the constitution which I read a moment ago, but also contrary to the general understanding which prevails in this country and which was summed up in a proclamation by Her Majesty the Queen in 1858, which is as follows:—

Firmly relying ourselves on the truth of Christianity, and acknowledging with gratitude the solace of religion, we disclaim alike the right and the desire to impose our convictions on any of our subjects. We declare it to be our Royal will and pleasure that none be in anywise favoured, none molested or disquieted by reason of their religious faith or observance, but that all shall alike enjoy the equal and impartial protection of the law ; and we do strictly charge and enjoin all those who may be in authority under us that they abstain from all interference with the religious belief or worship of any of our subjects, on pain of our highest displeasure.

These are the words not only of the Queen, but of the Parliament of Great Britain. This is the rule which should be recognized in this country. We should not interfere with the religious belief of our neighbours. Everybody should enjoy complete liberty, provided that liberty does not interfere with the liberty and civil rights of others. But the hon. gentleman wants to force those who are not of the same belief with himself to observe as the sabbath some other day than that which they believe to be the sabbath, and even to force those who, like himself, desire to observe Sunday, to observe it in the way he believes in and not in the way they believe in themselves. That is not protection of civil rights ; it is interference with civil rights. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up too much of the time of this House, but I have given briefly the reasons why I oppose this Bill : First, because the Bill is unconstitutional ; second, because it is useless if it were unconstitutional, because the provinces take charge of these matters ; and, third, because the Bill is an undue interference with the belief of others.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. LANGELIER. I cannot think that this clause was intended to be seriously pressed. It would send to jail the children engaged in selling newspapers, who have no other means of livelihood, and who, in many cases have others dependent upon them. I do not suppose the mover of the Bill contemplated anything of that kind.

Mr. BECHARD. I think that that portion of the section which refers to the distribution and circulation of newspapers on Sunday, making those who engage in it guilty of an indictable offence, is very objectionable. I do not know how it is in the province of Ontario, but in the province of Quebec, in the rural districts, where there are only small villages, it is the practice of the farmers, who generally take but one weekly paper, which generally comes to the post office on Saturday evening to get these papers on Sunday after divine service. They take the opportunity while they are in the village and near the post office to go there and receive their newspapers and their letters, in order that they may read them in the afternoon. That is not considered there a violation of the observance of the Lord's Day, and if this clause was adopted it would subject the whole population there to great inconvenience. The most part of these people do not live near the post office, but a mile or two, or even three miles away ; and it would be very inconvenient for them to interrupt the day's work to drive in to the village merely to call at their post office for their paper. For these reasons I object to this clause. So far as the printing of newspapers on Sunday is concerned, I have no objection that that should be prevented.

Mr. CHARLTON. The object of this clause is to deal with a great evil, such as has arisen in the United States, the publication and circulation of Sunday newspapers which are printed on Sunday, circulated on Sunday and sold on Sunday. I can understand the force of the objection raised by my hon. friend with regard to the withdrawal of letters and newspapers from the post office. The design of the section is not to prevent that.

Mr. BECHARD. Then I wish you would amend it.

Mr. CHARLTON. In the United States, about fifteen years ago, the publication of a Sunday newspaper was commenced. The first Sunday newspaper was published in Philadelphia. The evil has grown very rapidly, and to-day seven hundred daily newspapers are published on Sunday in the United States, and these newspapers are furnishing to the people a class of reading matter which is highly objectionable, made up of gossip, scandal, stories—often of a very objectionable character—all promoting crime, dissoluteness and immorality, and dragging down the religious and moral life of the community. The circulation of these newspapers is depriving the public of all taste for religious reading or for solid reading of any kind. The Sunday newspaper begets a trifling, superficial character in the population, and the Sunday newspaper is a fruitful source of crime, irreligion and godlessness in that country. And the character and operation of the Sunday newspaper and the results produced by it are clearly discernible and well recognized by all observers of society there. The Sunday newspaper is the greatest curse in that country. It is dragging that country down in the scale of morality and in the scale of all that is desirable in the character of a nation more rapidly than any other influence. Now, I am thoroughly convinced that if we strangle this monster at its birth, we will confer upon Canada an untold blessing. If we do not do this, in my opinion this country will follow the example of the United States, and in a few years we will have a great number of Sunday newspapers published, with the same results as relates to the morals of this country, and as relates to its well-being.

Mr. AMYOT. Which paper is that ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Any newspaper that is a violation of God's command stands as an enemy of everything that is religious.

Mr. AMYOT. Are they worse on Sunday than on other days? Are they only bad on Sundays?

Mr. CHARLTON. Labour may be justifiable on a week day, and bad on a Sunday. An act that is justifiable on a week day may not be permitted on the seventh day, it may be quite inconsistent with the commands of God; and this great American anti-christ, the Sunday newspaper, is in the highest degree detrimental to the best interests of a nation, although the same paper may be very properly published on the other six days of the week. But I do not propose that this clause should prohibit a man who goes to church on Sunday, from going to the post office, providing it is opened, and taking out his newspaper. That is not at all the object of the Bill, but the object is to prevent the printing, the publication, and the sale, the hawking around the streets of cities and towns of a Sunday newspaper, and it is for that purpose the section was drawn.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) The hon. promoter of this Bill (Mr. Charlton) has given the reasons why the committee should pass it. He contends that should we pass it, it would have the effect of stopping the reading of bad books; then he adds that if we should prohibit the printing of such bad books, one would reach a second result: that of preventing the reading of the same. These are the only two reasons alleged by him to induce us to pass the first section of this Bill. Should such reasons be worth nothing, as I hope I can show, it will follow, of course, that the section itself is not worth more than the reasons given. The first reason set forth by him is that this Bill will result in preventing the printing of bad literature. I suppose he means by that, immoral literature. Will it prevent people from printing the same on Saturdays? And if there is any printed, will it prevent people from reading it on Sundays? If there is any printed, who will prevent the buying of it on Saturdays or other week days, so as to read it on Sundays? It seems to me these few words show the weakness of this first reason, and that the promoter of the Bill cannot, by means of this legislation, reach the end he has in view. In the second place, the hon. gentleman contends that if we should prevent bad literature from being printed and sold on Sundays, we would compel people to read good books and thereby prevent any wrongdoing. This is a still greater mistake, I think. If there is nothing to keep the people at home—and I see nothing in the Bill that provides for that—they will go elsewhere and they will do what is wrong without you being able to reach them through your law. Not only will they do that which is wrong, but they will cause some scandal, which is doubly wrong. If the whole Bill is worth that much, I have no hesitation in saying that it will never reach the object for which it was introduced. The hon. gentleman is anxious to secure a better sanctification of Sunday, that is the object of his Bill. The great evil he wishes to oppose is the unobservance of the Lord's Day. It will be readily seen, by the explanations he has just given, that he will never reach that end we are forced to, the undoubtable, certain, positive conclusion that the Bill can have no practical result. The only effect of the forbidding of any printing on Sundays will be to induce people to work on Saturdays and other week days, to bring out the bad literature and sell it as quick as possible before reaching Sunday. As people have hardly time on Saturdays to make a choice, they will buy whatever is offered to them without looking closely into it, without selecting, and on Sunday, they will spend their day reading that bad literature. I think, therefore, the hon. gentleman will not succeed by means of this Bill in securing the sanctification of the Lord's Day.

Mr. MULOCK. I move to insert in the second line, after the word "printing" the word "or," and strike out the words "or delivery." Also to strike out in the tenth line the words "distribution or circulation." It would then read as follows:—

Whosoever shall on the Lord's Day, either as proprietor, publisher or manager, engage in the printing or publication of a newspaper, journal or periodical, and whosoever shall on the Lord's Day engage in the sale of any newspaper, journal or periodical, shall be deemed guilty of an indictable offence.

Limiting it entirely to the matter of printing and selling.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the wording of this clause will make it an indictable offence for a printer to engage on Sunday evening in the typesetting necessary for the publication of the journal on Monday morning.

Mr. CHARLTON. He is not engaged in printing for publication on Sunday morning.

Mr. AMYOT. I may inform the hon. gentleman that in Quebec we have a very respectable Protestant paper, the proprietors of which begin their work upon it at nine o'clock on Sunday evening, and no one ever found any fault with it. Now, the hon. gentleman says that bad and immoral literature is sometimes circulated on Sunday. Well, immoral literature is as bad on Mondays and Tuesdays as it is on Sunday, so that his reason has no force. Let him prohibit immoral literature every day in the year, if he has power to do so. But after we have fulfilled our religious obligation according to our conscience, he should not prevent us from printing papers for publication the next day. Now, when we go to a city we buy papers in that city on Sunday morning, and we see no harm in it; and all our country people who go to church on Sunday, get their mail on Sunday, and no one has ever seen any harm in it. If the hon. gentleman has such a delicate conscience that he cannot do that, let him abstain from doing it, but let him not try to prevent others from doing it. If his conscience is so delicate that he is not able to live with those who live an ordinary life, let him retire to some monastery and there he will suffer no scandal. I am sorry to have to say that his proposition is nothing but bigotry, he wants to impose his own very narrow views upon others. He knows that his Bill is not approved by this House, is not approved by this country. Then why does he persist in coming here and trying to stir up the passions, the fanaticism and the bigotry of some of the electors, and embarrass his colleagues, as he does every year? I think he should not do it, he is not sent here for that purpose. I tell him that he will not be approved, at all events, in our province, where we respect the liberty of all. He will not find in our province many sensible men to agree with him that we should be prevented from going to the post office to get our papers and letters on Sunday, that we should be prevented from buying the Montreal 'Star,' or the Montreal 'Herald,' or the Montreal 'Gazette' on a Sunday morning in Quebec, or that we should be prevented from buying even good papers on Sundays wherever we may be able to procure them. He has his own way of serving his God. We respect him, we do not want to deprive him of his liberty. Let him do the same with us.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to point out to my hon. friend who has charge of this Bill, that this clause does not go far enough. The clause as it reads declares that anybody who shall on the Lord's Day, either as proprietor, publisher or manager, engage in the printing, publication, or delivery of a newspaper, shall be guilty of an indictable offence; and then, whoever shall on the Lord's Day engage in the sale, distribution, or circulation of any newspaper, journal or periodical, shall be guilty. Now, suppose a man were to come down from Toronto on Sunday evening bearing with him a paper that had been published there, we will say, and were to hand it to a friend here in Ottawa; he would circulate the paper, and would be guilty of an indictable offence. So I hardly think that goes far enough. I think the hon. gentleman should say that anybody that reads the paper on the Lord's Day is guilty of an indictable offence.

Mr. LANGELIER. That proposition would have some sense.

Mr. DAVIN. I say that is the logical way to act, because when we are legislating in this manner and spirit, we should not merely punish people for holding out a temptation to others, but we should try, if possible, to keep the community as righteous as it is within the power of legislation to effect.

Therefore, I hope my hon. friend who has charge of his Bill will act on my suggestion, and will improve it by making the latter part of it read as follows:—"The person who distributes or circulates any newspaper, journal or periodical, or shall read a newspaper on the Lord's Day, shall be deemed guilty of an indictable offence."

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman has attempted to be very funny respecting this Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope the hon. member will not impute improper motives to me.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I beg pardon. If the hon. gentleman was not trying to be funny, everybody thought he was, and I believe he had some thought of it himself. I have heard the hon. gentleman argue on this Bill before, and his argument was just as illogical before as it has been to-night. The last time I remember he spoke on the Bill the ground he took was this: that it could not possibly be wrong to do on Sunday what it was right to do on Saturday, and it would be very improper for us to say that it is right to do certain things up to twelve o'clock on Saturday night, and yet be wrong to do them on Sunday. That is on a par with the proposition which the hon. gentleman has made just now. I should like to call attention to this fact, as I took occasion to do in answering his arguments before, that it is wrong and unlawful in this province for a man to sell liquor at five minutes past seven on Saturday evening, whereas at five minutes to seven it is perfectly right and lawful to do so. If we were to follow out his proposition to its logical conclusion we would not only in the case of liquor punish the man who sold liquor after seven o'clock on Saturday, but punish any man who drank liquor after seven o'clock. I think the hon. gentleman knew he was making a very ridiculous proposition and trying to bring the Bill into ridicule, instead of treating it with respect.

Mr. DAVIN. Not at all.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I go as far as any one in my desire to avoid trenching on the religious views and liberties of anybody in this country. So far as that is concerned it may well be argued that on religious ground we are entitled to defend the Bill of the hon. promoter. At the same time there is another ground on which it may be supported, and it is a ground which cannot be overlooked by this House, and that is the effect on the working classes of the introduction of Sunday labour on newspapers, or in any other direction. It has been proved by long experience, not only in this Dominion, but in every other country, that one of the most demoralizing things is that men shall be compelled to work seven days in the week. It is one of the laws provided by nature that a man in order to work properly must rest at least one day in seven. What would be the effect of the general introduction of Sunday labour? It would mean this: that men in order to keep their positions must work on Sunday. Unfortunately there are works of necessity that must be done at the present time, and consequently many men are engaged in Sunday labour who would very much prefer to be at home with their families. I have met while in the United States practical illustrations of this, and of the difficulties which stood in the way of workingmen. Men were notified to work on Sunday, and if they did not attend they lost their situations. I do not think we should do anything to place our workingmen in such a position, but we should place them in a position where they are entitled to a day of rest, and that day of rest on the same day as other men, as far as it is possible to do so. So on this ground, if not on the religious ground the Bill should pass. I believe myself, with the promoter of this Bill, that on the ground of sanctity of religion, and of the day itself, we should endeavour, as far as possible, to prevent any one engaging in labour; but even putting it on the lower ground, and that is the ground of practical utility, we should, as far as possible, prevent any work being done on Sunday so that our workingmen may have a day of rest. A suggestion was made by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) that I do not think can be overlooked, and it is that the publication of the Monday newspaper begins about nine o'clock on Sunday evening, and if we are not satisfied that the Bill is so framed as to permit of the men going to work—for I presume it is a work of necessity in view of the commercial and general interests of the country—we should amend the Bill in accordance with that suggestion. I trust no more ridicule will be thrown on the Bill, but that it will be treated in a fair and impartial spirit, and if I have misinterpreted the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) I sincerely beg his pardon, for I would not endeavour to do so.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not intend to occupy the time of the committee at any length in regard to this measure, but I shall now, with the permission of the committee, devote a few minutes to the serious discussion of this question. The hon. member who has just taken his seat thinks it very illogical that one should approve of closing public houses at a certain time on Saturday, and yet disapprove of legislation such as this under consideration. The hon. member made some reference to my logic. May I point out to him that there is no analogy whatever between the sale of intoxicants and the sale of newspapers. The sale of intoxicants is connected in every mind, and properly so, with disturbance, with rowdyism, with the expenditure of the wages of the artisan. No such ideas are connected with the publication or sale of newspapers. But I understood from the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, and from the hon. member who has charge of this Bill, that they regard it not merely from the hygienic point of view, which is a very wholesome one, of a law to secure a seventh day for rest, but also from the most sacred standpoint of religion, and I have time and again heard emphatically and ably stated the views of the advocates of the sabbath and Lord's Day observance from the standpoint of religion. Let me say to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) that there is no language within my control that would express my view of such opinions as have fallen from him in the course of his speech. He has told the committee that we should regard this day from the religious standpoint, that the twenty-four hours should be observed with Mosaic exactness; yet he told the committee that in consideration of the commercial interests involved and at stake we are to invade the sacredness of the day and flout the will of Heaven from eight to twelve on the sabbath evening. If the religious education of my hon. friend is such that he can take that precise view of the strictness of sabbath observance, all I can say is that he might go back to Sunday school once more, and I would wish him a more instructive sabbath school teacher than he seems to have had. I know no kind of movement in Parliament so calculated to strike at all the advantages we have at the present time in a seventh day of rest as such legislation as this brought forward by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Chariton). Sir, I will tell you why. It will not bear the artillery of logic; it will not stand discussion; because here is the instructed advocate of it, here is a Daniel come to judgment from East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth); here is an hon. and learned gentleman—not only technically learned, but literally so—and when he comes to support the Bill he tell us in tones that would have done justice to any pulpit: 'Oh, the seventh day is sacred: I should like to support the Bill from that point of view, but gentlemen, for God's sake don't carry it out to its full extent, because commerce might be seriously interfered with if printers were not allowed to work from eight o'clock to twelve o'clock on Sunday evening.' If a Bill of this kind is to be discussed in that fashion, what is to be the end of the seventh day of rest as we have it now? Are we to have such a Sunday as we at present have in Canada, a Sunday in which I rejoice, a Sunday in which there is no such traffic as disfigures cities in the United States and cities on the continent of Europe; or are we to have the United States and continental sabbath? I have travelled in the United States and I have travelled in Europe, and I appreciate the civilization of continental Europe, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that no words of mine could express the appreciation I have for the English way and the Canadian way of spending the seventh day; and, Sir, the English and Canadian way of spending the Sabbath is the common-sense way. We do not set that Sunday apart to be observed with a decent abstinence from work and from indulgence in pleasures, for the purpose of keeping the Jewish sabbath. We look upon it in the common-sense way. We say that it is fruitful of good results, and as long as a spirit like that obtains in Canada, so long shall Sunday be maintained in its present way. But the moment you come to bring in Draconian legislation like this, in the end of the nineteenth century, and with the light not merely of our civilization, but I say also with the absolute light of the gospel itself on the subject, the moment you try to bring in this Draconian legislation you will wake up the public mind to discuss this question, and instead of the Judaic and illogical proposition of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) being adopted by the people, they will come to see that there is no foundation in logic or fact for the passage of such legislation. Instead of the pendulum swinging to the puritanical length my hon. friends would like, the pendulum will swing still further in the opposite direction and we shall have the continental sabbath and the American sabbath in Canada. Instead of the newspapers being kept as they are in the background on Sunday (although still occasionally read), they will be sold openly. I have seen the most religious men of all churches reading newspapers on Sunday. I have seen religious men, men whom I highly esteem, some of them pillars of the church, buy newspapers in the Russell House on Sunday. I have seen in Regina very religious men take their newspapers out of the post office; just as religious as any men listening to me now—I am not sure that would be saying much for them—I have seen them reading their newspapers. I may tell you, because I have no objection to take you into my confidence. I once or twice read a newspaper myself on Sunday. But we have no Sunday newspapers in Canada as they have them in New York. We have no Sunday traffic as they have in New York, and I am glad of that. I say that if you are to keep the Sunday as we have it now, it is by adhering to the spirit of the day and time that we will be enabled to have it; and not by trying to force us back to the Puritan Sabbath and to the Puritan idea of the observance of that Sabbath. But that is a day on which thou shalt do no manner of work: that thou and thy manservant and thy maidservant, and thine ox and thine ass shall have rest. There is some consistency in that. But what you want to say in this Bill is, not that thou shalt not bring in thine ox or thine ass to the labour field; but that at eight o'clock on every Sunday evening you shall bring in your printers to work, as the Hon. George Brown used to. He was a good Presbyterian like my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) who has charge of the Bill, and as I am myself, by the way.

He was a really good Presbyterian. He was a thoroughly religious man like my hon. friend (Mr. Coatsworth), and very logical. What used he to do? He used to bring in his printers on the Sunday evening, but he would have a paper on the windows so that people going to church should not observe the men at work. He did not want to shock their religious nerves, but still he wanted to get the 'Globe' out on Monday morning, and of course great commercial interests might be injured if the 'Globe' did not come out, and especially the commercial interests of the right-hand pocket of the Hon. George Brown. Sir, in the name of everything that is logical and in the name of everything that is sacred, are we to be told that it is the will of Heaven that we should observe this as a Judaic Sabbath, with the strictness of Moses intended, but that nevertheless, for the sake of paltry commercial interests, we are to invade this Sabbath at eight o'clock on Sunday evening by, not bringing in your ox and your ass, but by bringing in to work at the printing case, men and women with immortal souls, in order to set up a paper so that no commercial interests may suffer.

Mr. MASSON. I think that after the admission of the mover of this Bill, that the printing of papers on Sunday night is necessary and should not be affected, the first part of the clause under consideration should be struck out. I believe that the object the seconder of the Bill (Mr. Coatsworth) has in view, and the object which I suppose the mover of the Bill has in view, might be met by preventing the sale of the paper on Sunday. I think that is all they are really aiming at, because the hon. gentleman from East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) certainly does not want to prevent the printing of the paper on Sunday. He is quite willing that the printer should come at eight o'clock on Sunday night and do the printing and, therefore, it would be logical that he should consent to the striking out of the first part of this section. But, Sir, that was not the principal object to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. In reading this section of the Bill in connection with the Ontario Act respecting the same subject, it is quite clear that this Bill, although purporting to deal with criminal law, is really an attempt to supplement the Ontario Act, and to extend the Act over the rest of the Dominion. The first section of the Ontario Act says. The first section of the Ontario Act covers a very wide field:

It is not lawful for any merchant, tradesman, artificer, mechanic, workman, labourer or other person whatsoever, on the Lord's Day, to sell or publicly show forth, or expose, or offer for sale, or to purchase, any goods, chattels, or other personal property, or any real estate whatsoever, or to do or exercise any worldly labour, business or work of his ordinary calling.

Now, in addition to these broad words, the promoter of this Bill wants us to say emphatically that no person shall sell, distribute or circulate any newspaper, and that any person doing so will be guilty, not of an offence under the Provincial Act, but of an indictable offence. Now, if it is necessary to make the sale of newspapers an indictable offence, where is the logic in the promoter of this Bill when he fails to make the sale of other goods and chattels an indictable offence? If it is necessary for him to make the opening of canals or of the doing of the other works mentioned in the Bill indictable offences, why does he omit to provide that the holding of political meetings shall be an indictable offence? That is made unlawful under the Ontario Act: why does he not make it an indictable offence under this Act? The Ontario Act forbids games and amusements why does he not make games and amusements indictable offences? The Ontario Act forbids hunting, shooting and fishing; why does he not make these indictable offences? The Ontario Act prohibits excursions by steamboat or by railway; the hon. gentleman should deal with these also. Why does he single out such things as the selling of newspapers and railway traffic, and fail to deal with the others? If the sanctity of the Lord's Day is what he wishes to protect, why does he allow amusements, such as shooting, hunting, bathing and Sunday excursions, as well as the selling of goods and chattels and real estate, all to go unpunished as indictable offences? I think the Bill should either embrace these or it should leave out the selling of newspapers. It is surely no greater sin to sell a newspaper on Sunday than to sell dry goods, groceries or hardware. The Ontario Act forbids engaging in all business or labour in the ordinary calling. I question even if the Ontario Act does not cover the very ground the hon. gentleman does in his Bill; I question if it does not forbid the selling of newspapers, which would be the ordinary calling of those engaged in that business. So far as the printing of a newspaper is concerned, I think we may take it as admitted by the promoter that he does not wish to interfere with that. That being the case, if the committee is of opinion that the first clause should pass, I think the first part should be struck out, namely, these words:

Whosoever shall on the Lord's Day, either as proprietor, publisher or manager, engage in the printing, publication or delivery of a newspaper, journal or periodical.

The latter part, referring to those engaged in the sale, distribution or circulation of the newspaper, would meet the case. That would prevent the newspaper being placed in the hands of readers on the Lord's Day. If that is all the hon. gentleman is aiming at, what is the necessity of providing that in certain hours it would be lawful, while in other hours it would be unlawful?

Mr. MASSON.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down does not seem to realize the object of the hon. member for North Norfolk in bringing forward this Bill. It is for the purpose of reaching an evil which now exists to a very great and injurious degree in the United States, and which may be imported and get a foothold in this country; that is, the publication and sale of newspapers on Sunday. My hon. friend, in his opening address, dwelt very fully with that feature of the Bill. The hon. gentleman will admit, I think, that the Ontario statute does not apply to that particular offence, and my hon. friend has prepared his Bill to cover it. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I heard him say that he was a good Presbyterian. Well, I must say, from the opinions he has expressed in the House, it is no compliment to Presbyterianism for him to say that he is a Presbyterian. With regard to his remark about the Hon. George Brown, I am exceedingly sorry that the hon. gentleman felt it his duty to disturb the remains of a man who was recognized by all parties in this country as a great leader and a conscientious, honourable man, by reflecting upon his character in saying that he pasted papers upon his window on Sunday evenings so that his labourers might not be seen at work. I do not think the hon. gentleman was justified in making that statement. I think, out of respect to the memory of that great statesman, a man who was recognized as such both by Conservatives and Reformers, the hon. gentleman ought to withdraw that slur upon him. We all know that newspaper publishers say that they cannot get a paper out on Monday unless they are permitted to do some preliminary work on the evening of the Lord's Day. My hon. friend in his Bill simply provides for the suppression of a paper issued and sold on the Lord's Day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, the printing, publication or delivery of a paper on the Lord's Day. Does any person mean to say that the preliminary work which is done on the evening of the Lord's Day is printing?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not; it is work preliminary to printing. That is not what my hon. friend aims at by any means. He wants to reach the publication and the sale of the Sunday newspaper, not the preliminary portion of the work. That may be looked upon as a desecration of the Lord's Day, but my hon. friend's Bill does not deal with that. It deals with a great common evil, which has got a footing on the other side of the line, and has become in that country a national curse.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not mean to cast any slur upon the Hon. George Brown. It can be no slur to speak the truth. The hon. gentleman does not mean to assert that I did not speak the truth?

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not know what you spoke.

Mr. DAVIN. The politeness of the hon. gentleman is on a par with his piety. The demeanour of the hon. gentleman is as straight and as spotless as his sanctity, and his sanctity and his Presbyterianism amount simply to this, that he wants to keep the outside of the platter clean. That is the sort of thing, that is the kind of argument that I impugn, and that I illustrated by referring to the Hon. George Brown's conduct, illustrating, in my opinion, the attitude that we see assumed, not merely by Presbyterians, but by religious men of other professions. And I say it is a scandal to Christianity and a slur upon religion, because in utter defiance of the denunciations of the founder of Christianity, their desire is to keep the outside of the platter clean. They are like the Scotch Presbyterian girl, who, when her admirer arrived, said to him: Dinna ye ken it is the Sawbath, mon? And he had to beat a retreat. The hon. gentleman said, or seemed to indicate, that I wished to pay a compliment to Presbyterianism by saying that I was a Presbyterian myself. No, Mr. Speaker, I did not. I know what great things Presbyterianism did for Scotland. I know the great achievements of its master minds—such men as Knox, who scorned hypocrisy, who had more of Christianity in his heart than he had even on his tongue. I know all that. I wished to pay a compliment to myself, and when I said that I was a Presbyterian, all I meant was that in my own town I attend the Presbyterian Church—that I like its simple and severe service, that I admire its doctrines, especially as I see them in the light of the broadening influence of modern synodical discussion. But I may say this, that when I said I was a good Presbyterian, I never intended a compliment to Presbyterianism or otherwise, but to indicate that there was nothing in common between Presbyterianism properly understood, and my Presbyterianism, and that snuffing kind of Presbyterianism of which the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is an embodiment and exponent.

Mr. MASSON. I would like to say one word in reply. The hon. gentleman says that the object of the promoter of this Bill is to meet a matter that the Ontario Act does not meet, in reference to the sale of newspapers on the Sabbath. Now, my answer, and the logical answer, to that is, that if it is in the power and jurisdiction of the provincial Government to pass such a section as the one I read a few minutes ago, forbidding all manner of mechanics and workmen and labourers from pursuing their ordinary calling on that day, it is within their jurisdiction to extend that provision to the sale of newspapers. Let the people of Ontario go to the Ontario Government and get the Act extended so that it will apply to this matter. But do not come here and make a crime of the simple act of selling newspapers, while leaving untouched the selling of real estate or goods and chattels on the Sabbath. Surely it is improper to make the sale of newspapers or periodicals a crime, while other chattels may be sold without the act of selling them coming under our criminal law. The hon. gentleman does not aim at preventing the preliminary work of getting a newspaper ready for an early hour on Monday morning. The articles have to be prepared and the type has to be set before Monday morning, and that work is universally done on Sunday night. The hon. gentleman, however, judging from his remarks, does not wish to prevent that. The preliminary work may be done, the composing may be done, the manual labour of setting type must be done, but when it comes to the machine work of printing, that shall not be done. Is there any logical distinction between the two? If it is wrong to put the paper through the printing press, it is wrong to do the type-setting and the writing. Where are you going to draw the line? I say draw the line where it meets the public, and I am with you. Prevent the sale and I am with you. I am even willing to go further than this Act, and to make each one of those things that are declared in the Ontario Act unlawful, a crime, if necessary, in order to bring them within this jurisdiction. But let it be in matters that affect the public, matters that touch the public, so that it is not only the persons engaged in the work, but the public whose devotions are interfered with. The Ontario Act is confined to such things as come in touch with the public. The carrying on of ordinary business, the opening of stores, the holding of political meetings, excursions—all these things which come in contact with the public, are prohibited by the Ontario Act. Let the hon. gentleman so amend his Bill that it will affect only that which comes directly in contact with the public. I would suggest striking out the first two lines and to "periodical," in the third line, and making the section read as follows:—

Whoever shall on the Lord's Day engage in the sale, distribution and circulation of newspapers, journals and periodicals and so on.

Mr. COATSWORTH. As I understand the argument of my hon. friend, it is this, that if you cannot, in an Act of Parliament, cover all the evils that may possibly exist, you should not pass the Act at all. I submit that the proper course for us to pursue is that if the evils that are being met by the Bill are such as we ought to legislate against, it is no argument to the contrary to say that because there are other evils of a somewhat similar character which are not included, we will not pass the Bill. I do not think that my hon. friend's argument is at all a logical one. I would like to say a few words in reference to the rather sarcastic remarks of my Presbyterian friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). He was pleased to be very witty at my expense. Of course, I do not pretend to the bright flashing wit of the men who come from his country, but at the same time, I think his argument was deficient in logic, and for this reason: It is well known to all of us that the Scriptures themselves recognize the duty of performing what are known as works of necessity and mercy on the sabbath day. I suppose my hon. friend might pick up an argument with me as to what a work of necessity or mercy is. In my opinion, anything that is essential to the welfare of the people, whether of a commercial nature, or otherwise, may be regarded as a work of necessity.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then that is the end of the whole question.

Mr. DAVIN. Have you Scripture warranty for that?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Yes, we have.

Mr. DAVIN. Where is it?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I am afraid my hon. friend has not read the Scriptures or he would know that there is warranty there for the performance of works of necessity.

Mr. DAVIN. Do not be too sure that I could not pass an examination in them better than you could.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I recommend my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) to hand over to his neighbour (Mr. Davin) that Book, and if the hon. gentleman will read it carefully he will see that there is Scripture warranty for the performance of works of necessity and mercy upon Sunday. If my hon. friend is not able to find exactly where it is, I will remind him of the case spoken of by our Saviour when he asks, if a man's ox or ass have fallen into a pit, shall he not take it out on the sabbath day? My hon. friend from Assiniboia laughs. I suppose he will try to build up an argument upon the fact that this does not refer directly to the printing of a newspaper. But the principle laid down is that if there is a work of necessity to be done on the Sabbath day; but we ought to avoid works that are not works of necessity. I think we may take even broader ground than my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has taken. When the printers engage in work for Monday's newspaper from nine or ten o'clock in the evening of Sunday, even though this may be a part of the operation of printing a newspaper, yet, taking into consideration the condition of affairs in which we live, it is a work of necessity and essential to our existence as a business people.

Mr. McMULLEN. I just want to say a word or two on the point that has been touched upon by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth), and mentioned also by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson). I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Toronto when he says that simply because the Bill does not reach every case that may be found that is no reason why it should not be passed. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in this Bill is aiming at one thing—the Sunday newspaper. When you take the objection that others are engaged in the preparatory work of the paper to be issued on Monday, that is another and a wholly different question. My hon. friend from Grey says the promoter of this Bill should go to the Local Legislature with it. But if the hon. gentleman had read the rest of the Bill, he would see that subsequent clauses cover offences that cannot be reached by the Local Legislature. For instance, he proposes to reach the violation of the Lord's Day by railways, which undoubtedly are under the control of this Parliament. He proposes also to meet the violation of the law by the operating of canals, which is unquestionably a matter under Federal control. Now, with regard to my hon. friend's reference to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), and speaking of Scripture authority for performing works of charity and mercy on the Lord's Day, it seems to me that the hon. member for Assiniboia has fallen into the pit, though I do not say he belongs to either of the classes mentioned in the quotation given by the hon. member for Toronto. After what the hon. gentleman says about Presbyterianism, I have still to express my regret that he claims to belong to that denomination. The hon. gentleman says that he is a regular attendant when he is at home. I am sorry that he does not keep up his attendance while he is here. It may be, however, that he is among his constituents when he is at home he has a political object to serve in attending which does not move him while he is here.

Mr. AMYOT. It is as well to understand each other and to state facts as they are. It is well known that in our country all the morning papers begin work for Monday's paper on Sunday evening. I do not blame them for that. The typographers begin their rest on Saturday evening. They follow the old rule, which some still favour, of beginning their day of rest with the evening, and they resume their work on Sunday night. Their religious convictions allow them to do it, and I do not see the harm in doing it. I have here a statement showing that in Montreal the 'Gazette,' the 'Herald,' and 'La Minerve'; in Quebec, the 'Chronicle'—and when there was a Catholic French paper, the same was true of it; in Toronto, the 'Globe,' the 'Empire,' the 'Mail,' and the 'World'; and in Ottawa, the 'Citizen,' begin the work for Monday's paper on Sunday. They all do it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. AMYOT. I hope this committee will not give a false interpretation to my words. And if the newspapers do this, those who receive their papers on Monday share the responsibility. Now, why would it be more allowable for the typographer to work from seven o'clock till twelve on Sunday than for a man or boy to sell a paper on Sunday morning. If the paper is immoral, it is an offence against the laws of the country, whether it is issued on Sunday or any other day. But if it is a good newspaper, and if the workingman has only Sunday afternoon to read that paper, why should they deprive him of the opportunity? Would it be better for the workingman to buy a novel during the week and read it on Sunday afternoon? If the paper contains the speeches of the hon. mover of this Bill, and if a man reads it on Sunday afternoon, he gets a spiritual lecture, sure. If he reads a paper stating the fact that in the United States immorality is so spread that the sabbath is not observed and the literature is corrupt, and that it is with this country that we are urged to negotiate free trade, undoubtedly the effect of the Canadian people reading that on Sunday will be that of a spiritual lecture and a very useful one. Now, by what right does the hon. gentleman seek to deprive the people of our province of having their newspapers on Sunday? The hon. gentleman has not answered that. If, when we went into Confederation, we had been told that we were joining the Salvation Army, and would have to change our mode of keeping Sunday, we would not have given our consent. We went into a commercial partnership, leaving religion alone. On what ground does the hon. gentleman, because he thinks it is improper to buy a newspaper on Sunday, seek to compel us to believe the same? Is that tolerance? We have always received our papers on Sunday, and we wish to continue doing so, and the hon. gentleman has no jurisdiction to deprive us of that right. Is it for the sake of religion? I say that he is not my priest or my missionary; he has no jurisdiction in religious matters. I know, perhaps, as much as he does of religious matters; I have read the Bible, perhaps, as much as he has done, and I have studied those questions as much as himself. But at all events, if I have not, others in my province have studied those questions, and I prefer to follow them rather than the hon. gentleman. I say that he has no jurisdiction, and not much knowledge in religious matters. He speaks of the matter of health. Well, he is not a good doctor in that respect, either. The workingman who begins his rest on Saturday night and rests till Sunday night, rests one day in the week, and his health is all right. The hon. gentleman wants to prevent him from working on Sunday night. Will he give that man the necessary food for his family the rest of the week? Will he make good the loss that he will incur? Every one has his seventh day for rest according to circumstances. If you leave aside the religious question, there remains the question of health, and on that point the hon. gentleman is also astray. The hon. gentleman speaks of Sunday newspapers. Does he not know as a matter of fact that those papers are not printed on Sunday, but they are printed on Fridays and Saturdays? I defy him to mention a single paper on this continent that is printed on Sunday to be sold on Sunday as a Sunday paper. Now, the hon. gentleman begins by saying that we have the law of God, and he seems ready to accept the theory that men have power to change or limit the laws of God. The law of God, according to him, begins Sunday morning after 12 o'clock on Saturday night, and lasts till Sunday evening at 12 o'clock; but he thinks he has power to change that and to make it begin at 7 o'clock on Sunday evening, so that people may have the pleasure of reading his speeches on Monday morning. I say he has no such power. If he believes that God has commanded us to keep Sunday without working, he should respect the whole of Sunday; but there again his doctrine is false, and his argument also. He takes good care of the pressmen on Sunday, but what about the compositors who begin work at 7 or 8 o'clock? Are they not entitled to protection? Is it only to the rich man, to the editor, that he extends his protection? Does he think that the compositors are not worthy of his protection? That is the way he treats the poor workingman. Then he will go on to the stump and say: I took the sacred cause of religion in hand, and I prevented work on Sunday, although there may be standing next to him a poor compositor who was forced to work on Sunday night in order that the people might be able to read his speeches on Monday morning. I shall not agree to any amendment to that clause. I see no harm in reading good papers on Sunday, and I think we have no power to deprive the inhabitants of the province of their liberty in that regard.

Mr. MARA. Morning newspapers have been published in British Columbia on Sunday for the last thirty years. Papers are only published six days in the week, but in order that the editors, reporters, compositors and others may enjoy the Sabbath day as a day of rest, the paper is published on Sunday morning instead of Monday. It is claimed by them, and they surely ought to know best, that the work of a Sunday paper is done on Saturday, and the work of a Monday paper is done on Sunday; therefore, they claim that by publishing on a Sunday, the Sabbath day is a day of rest, whilst if they had to publish on Monday, they would be compelled to work the greater part of Sunday. Now, the papers that are published in British Columbia are as pure and as clean as the papers published in Ontario. There is nothing immoral or objectionable in the Sunday paper, published in either Victoria or Vancouver, and why should this House dictate to the majority of the residents of Victoria and Vancouver and say that they shall not have the opportunity of reading a Sunday paper? That a large majority of the people are in favour of Sunday papers, is evident from the fact that the leading papers are published on Sunday. The people know very well that they have the law in their own hands. We have in our provincial Statute-book the most stringent Sabbath observance laws, and if the people wished the publication of Sunday papers stopped they have the power in their own hands, and they would certainly use it. I maintain that this clause is an interference with provincial rights; it is an interference with the rights of the people of British Columbia, and on that ground, if on no other, I shall oppose it.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question of the amount of labour involved in the publication of a Sunday newspaper, the question of the labour involved in the work of composition, in the press work, in the editorial work, in the news editor's work, is a question of very small moment in connection with this matter. It is not claimed that the abuses arising from the circulation of Sunday newspapers are confined to the labour performed in the office in producing them. That is not the trouble. It may be true, as my hon. friend from British Columbia says, that Sunday newspapers are published there because their publication involves a smaller amount of labour than it would if they were published on Monday. But the difficulty with regard to the Sunday newspaper is the influence that it has upon society, the deleterious and disastrous influence that is exerted upon society by the circulation, by their reading, and by the sale of that newspaper on the Lord's Day, whether it is published on the Lord's Day morning or upon the evening previous. It is well known that when the first American Sunday newspapers were published, they were, as my hon. friend says the British Columbia papers are, clean and reputable papers. They had a little religious homily in them, but that small modicum of respectability was soon dropped, and the papers gradually deteriorated, they became more and more consonant with the infringement of the divine law that was involved in their publication and circulation upon the Lord's Day. The evil complained of in the United States, the evil that we want to avoid by this Bill, is not the little amount of labour that is involved in setting the type or in the press work, but it is the influence that that paper exerts when it is spread broadcast over the country, when it is sent by special train, when it is sent by special steamboat, when it is sent by pony expresses and fast coaches, when it is hawked up and down the streets by thousands of newsboys, and when the sanctity of the sabbath is destroyed by this great engine or irreligion, an engine of irreligion that is condemned in the United States by almost every prelate and minister of that country, Catholic or Protestant, an engine of irreligion that was most unsparingly denounced by Cardinal Gibbons, by Archbishop Ireland, by nearly all the Catholic magnates of the United States. Now, Sir, the Bill proposes to deal with the question of Sunday newspapers. It does not propose to say what labour upon a Monday morning paper is right or wrong, that does not come within the province of this Bill. I might say that the Sunday labour involved upon a Monday morning paper was wrong, but the Bill does not propose to make any provision in regard to that at all. The object of this first clause is purely and simply and solely to deal with the evil that it is claimed attends the publication, the circulation and the reading of the Sunday newspaper, which secularizes the day, which banishes religious reading, which the religious community in the United States and in all places where Sunday newspapers are published, feel to be, and know to be, a very great evil, an evil so great that it is sapping the foundations of religious morality in that country. It is not true, as the hon. gentleman behind me claims, that we have no jurisdiction in this matter, that the position taken with respect to the publication of Sunday newspapers is a proof of intolerance. It has been found in many countries in Europe that the Sunday newspaper is an evil. The publication of the Sunday newspaper is prohibited in Holland. An attempt has been made to prohibit it in Austria and Hungary. It is prohibited in Switzerland. A Sunday newspaper is not published in Great Britain. A New York publisher lost a large sum of money in ascertaining English opinion on that subject.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. Do you contend that the publication of a public newspaper is forbidden in England?

Mr. CHARLTON. I say that a Sunday newspaper is not published in England, and the state of public sentiment renders it unnecessary to place on the Statute-book an Act such as is now proposed. Whether the law is to that effect or not, it is a fact that Sunday newspapers are not published there.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. There was a Sunday newspaper published by Mr. Gordon Bennet, of the New York 'Herald' in London, and after losing $400,000 or $500,000 he suspended its publication. The fact that in various continental countries this evil has been dealt with, and it is proposed to deal with it still further, the fact that it is a mighty evil, is a justification for this House of Commons to take jurisdiction in the matter and to enact that the Sunday newspaper shall not be published, the all-sufficient reason being that the public interests of Canada require such an enactment to be passed. This measure is not intended to infringe on the liberties of the citizens, to inflict injury on the country, but the intention is to take a definite step to prevent the introduction of an evil here that every well-thinking man will deplore if it is ever introduced. We can deal with this evil by a preventive measure much better than by a measure calculated to remove the evil after its introduction is secured in this country. I am very happy to see evidence to the effect that the weight of opinion in the House is in favour of dealing with the question of the sale of Sunday newspapers. That is what we want to get at. I do not claim that section is faultless; it may be open to objections on the ground that it is ambiguous. The intention of the section is to deal solely with the question of the sale of the Sunday newspapers. Whatever time the type may be set, whatever time may be occupied in running the paper through the press, are matters that are immaterial, but the object is to put an end to the distribution, circulation and sale of the Sunday newspaper. In the opinion of all men conversant with the subject it is an element dangerous to society and something producing most disastrous results.

Mr. AMYOT. What is meant by a Sunday newspaper?

Mr. CHARLTON. In the common acceptance of the term it is a newspaper printed for the purpose of being circulated and sold on that day.

Mr. AMYOT. The Montreal 'Star' reaches Quebec on Sunday morning, and is sold by boys on the streets. Would this Bill affect the sale of the 'Star'?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, it would. We might have altered the section by using the word "and" instead of "or," and then it would refer to all the stages of the publication of the Sunday newspaper, and could not be held to refer to anything else. Or, we might insert the words "whoever shall on the Lord's Day engage in the distribution or sale for gain or reward," which would obviate the difficulty connected with the distribution of religious papers, or sabbath school papers, or the taking of newspapers from the post office by people who call there. Or the proposition made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Masson) would serve the purpose, though not so effectively.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The suggestion of the hon. member for North Norfolk would not do, because under the section suggested a man would have to print, publish and deliver, and all he would have to do would be to employ another man to deliver and he would be free.

Mr. CHARLTON. I state the object of the section, and I shall be prepared to accept the best language possible from whatever quarter it may come. It has been claimed that the legislation proposed is an infringement on civil rights, and the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Masson), although I do not think he would insist on the position he took, stated that if we dealt with this question we should deal with all other questions dealt with by the Ontario law, that we should either embrace all infractions of the divine law or leave them all alone. The object of this Bill is to deal with cases beyond the jurisdiction of the provincial Governments. The Bill when first drafted covered almost all the ground of the Ontario law. It was referred to a special committee, and after consideration all those sections pertaining to provincial jurisdiction were eliminated, and the Bill was framed to take cognizance of those offences that were not under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. MASSON. Have not the provinces jurisdiction over the sale of Sunday newspapers?

Mr. CHARLTON. I will come to that point in a moment. The provinces could not have jurisdiction in regard to the closing of canals. They could hardly legislate with respect to railway traffic, because railways are declared to be works for Dominion purposes, and under supervision and jurisdiction of the Dominion. It was also held that excursions by railway and steamboat came under the purview of the Dominion Parliament. With respect to the Sunday newspapers, the question was not so clear, and there was ground for the assertion that it came under the jurisdiction of the provincial authority. But it was evident that the publication of Sunday newspapers was a matter of national importance, that it was a matter affecting the whole country, that it was a matter the bearing of which on public morals and public welfare was so great and intimate that the Dominion Government might properly assume jurisdiction with respect to it; and when we take into consideration the fact that the transmission of all literature through the mails is under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Government, also the importation of literature, the prohibition of the importation of obscene literature, and the question of copyright, it became apparent that this broad question was one that might properly be dealt with by the Dominion, and more properly so than by the Dominion Government. Hon. members have referred to the Criminal Code. It contains a class of offences against public order, internal and external. Under that general division we could properly deal with the question in this House. It is a question that pertains to internal and external order. The Criminal Code takes cognizance of offences against religion, against morals and against public convenience. It prohibits the obstruction of a clergyman in the performance of his duties. I should like to know if it is not against public convenience that newsboys should cry newspapers on Sunday?

Mr. MASSON. Cannot that be stopped by the Ontario Act?

Mr. CHARLTON. It might be. But under our criminal code those acts might be dealt with, and although they may be dealt with by the Ontario Legislature we have a right to deal with offences against religion, public order, public morals and public convenience, and the Sunday newspapers is an offence against religion, morals and public convenience, and against the welfare of the country. It controls the transmission of all printed matter through the mails. It controls the copyright question, and it may properly control all matters which tend towards the welfare of the people. So it may properly control the publication of a Sunday paper. I repeat that I do not propose in this Bill and I do not desire in this Bill to interfere with newspaper office labour, that may be necessary upon papers published on any other day than the Lord's Day. I only propose in this Bill to interfere with the sale and the circulation of the Sunday newspaper, believing it to be a great evil and an evil that we should limit unless we are blind to our interests. We have the example of the United States and we know that the influence of the Sunday newspaper there has been most pernicious. We do not want to copy that American example, but we want to profit by their misfortune in this respect, and to avoid the very thing that all well-meaning men in that country lament and deplore. I submit this proposition either as it stands, or with such mitigation as the committee may deem proper, for the purpose of procuring the prohibition and circulation and sale of newspapers on the Lord's Day. I speak only of Sunday editions.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. Your intention would be to cover the precise acts that the hon. member for British Columbia (Mr. Mara) refers to.

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. And it would also affect the custom which has for years prevailed in Quebec?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I presume that so far as Ontario is concerned the provincial Act now in force covers all that the hon. gentleman desires?

Mr. CHARLTON. No.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. The Ontario Act provides that no person shall sell goods on the Lord's Day, and I presume that would prohibit the selling of newspapers. That Act also says that no person shall do any work of his ordinary calling on that day, so that to distribute newspapers would be an offence also under the Ontario statutes. Of course if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) is hitting at all the other provinces as well as the province of Ontario, then his Bill I presume is in the line that he desires.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, Mr. Chairman. The provision I deem to be a highly important one. The provision needs to be uniform throughout the Dominion, if the good results that may be naturally expected from it are to be secured. It cannot be partially applied, and if the statements that I make are true, if the influence of the Sunday newspaper is as lamentable as it is said to be, then we can deal with no question of greater importance than the one under consideration.

Mr. MASSON. In order to make the Act accord with what I believe to be the intention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) I move:

That all the words preceding the word "whosoever" in the third line be struck out, and also that the words "journal" and "periodical" in the fifth line be struck out.

Mr. FRASER. My only difficulty in the matter is: Whether we have a right to pass this legislation. I have no question at all of the propriety of stopping the sale of newspapers on the Lord's Day. My difficulty is: Is this Parliament within its province in doing that? Even if we were, I think it is hardly fair that this should be an indictable offence. While I am satisfied that the Sabbath day cannot be observed too strictly, still I think that we cannot gain that end by making this an indictable offence. I believe, however, that if the Bill is to pass, the sale of "periodicals" and "journals" should be prohibited as well as that of newspapers.

Mr. CURRAN. There are Sunday periodicals distributed in Sunday schools and Catechism classes, amongst the scholars, which would be prohibited under the section as it stands now.

Mr. FRASER. This clause only refers to the printing.

Mr. CURRAN. The printing has been struck out of the clause altogether.

Mr. FRASER. Certainly this clause would not apply to that kind of literature you refer to.

Mr. CURRAN. It certainly would if it is left as it is now.

Mr. FRASER. There may be religious periodicals, and they ought to be exempted. But there are journals and periodicals which are not distributed to Sunday schools, and which are much more harmful than the ordinary newspapers. I think the distinction ought to be drawn. Sunday school papers should be excepted, but my chief objection is to the penalty being too severe.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. If the section should meet with the approval of the committee, the language, "shall be guilty of an indictable offence," is very objectionable. I think it should read: "shall be guilty of an offence under this Act."

Mr. MASSON. My hon. friend is hardly right in saying that the words "indictable offence" should not apply. I agree with him that it is a little hard to make this one case an indictable offence unless the cases mentioned in the Ontario Act are included. But assuming that the committee is in favour of meeting the views of the promoter of the Bill in regard to the suppression of Sunday newspapers, I am willing that the publication of them should be made an indictable offence. If we read this Act and the Criminal Code together, section 5 only provides for summary convictions, so that the indictable offence is left to be treated according to the Criminal Code, by which it is subject to seven years' imprisonment.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. LANGELIER. In the province of Quebec a society called the Society for the Propagation of the Faith issues a regular periodical every Sunday, and if this Bill passes, that will be an offence punishable by imprisonment for seven years.

Mr. CHARLTON. By the amendment that is struck out.

Mr. LANGELIER. By this Bill it is desired to compel all the people in this country to observe Sunday as Presbyterians do. Let Presbyterians observe Sunday as they choose; but do not compel us in the province of Quebec to observe it in the same way. We have in Quebec certain holidays which are just as sacred to Catholics as Sunday; yet we do not wish to compel Protestants to observe those days as the Catholics do. We think everybody should be free to observe Sunday as he chooses, provided he does not interfere with his neighbours. But this Bill would have the effect of compelling all people in this Dominion to observe Sunday as the people of Ontario think proper to observe it. Let the province of Quebec be exempted from the provisions of the Bill, and I do not care a pin whether it applies to the other provinces or not. But if it is made to apply to the province of Quebec, I will oppose every clause of the Bill. I regard it as an act of tyranny. It is enough to compel us to observe Sunday as it is observed in Ottawa. Most of the members who vote for this Bill run away from Ottawa every Sunday so as to avoid being compelled to observe it as it is observed here. Let each province be left free to regulate this matter for itself. A few moments ago an hon. member from British Columbia said that the Bill would interfere with the custom of that province as to publishing newspapers on Sunday. This shows the wisdom of our constitution, which leaves such matters to the local legislatures. Nobody disputes the fact that the local legislatures could deal with all the matters dealt within this Bill. I understand from the remarks made by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Masson) that the Legislature of Ontario has passed a Bill more far-reaching than this. We do not complain of that. We are willing that the people of Ontario should be free to observe Sunday as they choose; let us in the province of Quebec be equally free to observe Sunday as we choose. We do not interfere with others, and we do not want any interference from others. The hon. mover of this Bill has spoken of what is going on in Europe. This Bill is intended to take us back to the state of things which existed in England fifty years ago, but which has entirely passed away. I spent Sunday in London in 1863, and I thought I would die from loneliness, having just come from Paris, the difference was so immense. I could not get a cab nor an omnibus. Four years ago I was in London again, and the change was so great that I thought I was in Paris. Cabs and omnibuses and dozens of railway trains were running. Is London more corrupt in consequence than it was in 1863? At every street corner in 1863 I saw drunken men. Four years ago I did not see one drunken man in the streets of London, and I saw hundreds of people going in railway trains to Brighton and other places outside of the city. They were all quiet, respectable people, not one of them giving trouble to anybody. I do not care if it is intended to have Sunday observed in Ontario or in the other provinces as this Bill provides, but in Quebec we do not want to be compelled to observe Sunday in that way. We have our own way of observing Sunday in Quebec; we think it is the best, and I will oppose every clause of this Bill if it is to apply to Quebec.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to say that I am very glad to take whatever I can get, provided I get substantially what is asked for, and I have much pleasure in saying that I will accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Grey. I have been waiting for some time to state to the House that that amendment would meet my views. I do not wish the House to suppose that this Bill proposes to restrict any man in his religious rights, or as to the way in which he spends the Sabbath. My hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Langelier) is not required by this Bill to do one thing or the other. So far as the Bill is concerned, he can go fishing or hunting or to mass, or do what he has a mind to. It simply proposes to provide certain public securities against certain offences against public morals, but it says very little about the individual. I wish to contrast the opinion of my hon. friend with that of a very high dignitary of the Catholic Church, Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore.

Mr. AMYOT. There is a motion before the Chair for the committee to rise and report progress, and the hon. gentleman is out of order in discussing the merits of his Bill on that motion.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison.) I think the hon. gentleman is in order.

Mr. CHARLTON. I merely wish to contrast the opinion of the hon. gentleman with that of Cardinal Gibbons.

Mr. LANGELIER. We do not want a church authority.

Mr. CHARLTON. You do not recognize him. I do, as a very great and good man. Cardinal Gibbons says :

A close observer cannot fail to note the dangerous inroads that have been made on the Lord's Day in our country within the last quarter of a century. If those encroachments are not checked in time the day may come when the religious quiet now happily reigning in our well-ordered cities, will be changed into noise and turbulence ; when the sound of the church bell will be drowned by the echo of the hammer and the dray ; when the Bible and the prayer book will be supplanted by the newspaper and the magazine ; when the votaries of the theatre and the drinking saloons will outnumber worshippers, and salutary thoughts of God, of eternity, and of the soul will be checked by the cares of business and by the pleasure and dissipation of the world.

This proposal is directly in the line of the recommendations of Cardinal Gibbons and Archbishop Ireland made at that Sunday rest conference. They are directly in the line with the recommendations of religious men in the United States, and these recommendations are no infringement on public liberty, but merely a safeguard for the public good. I support the amendment of the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Masson) as substantially covering the ground I intended to cover by this Bill.

Mr. LANGELIER. The hon. gentleman has not quoted anything against what I have stated. I am entirely in accord with Cardinal Gibbons and the other authorities. Every one is in favour of a proper observance of the Sunday, but the hon. gentleman will never find one word of Cardinal Gibbons recommending that such literature as the 'Annals of the Propagation of the Faith,' which has been distributed for the last fifty years, should be stopped by this Bill. The hon. gentleman would never attempt to pass such a measure in the Quebec Legislature. Why, then, should he attempt to pass it here ? Is it because we are in the minority ? If he were in the Quebec Legislature, he would never attempt to pass it, but in this House, he thinks he can force us to observe the Sunday in the manner he deems proper. We insist on our right to observe the Sunday in the manner we deem suitable and proper. We do not want to see in this country a state of things as existed at the time of the Spanish Inquisition, when people were compelled to go to mass or condemned to jail. We think our way of observing the Sunday is the best ; the hon. gentleman thinks his is the best. Let him keep to his way, we do not object, but we do not want to be forced to do anything which is contrary to our views. We have been living longer in this country than the hon. gentleman and his ancestors, and our ways are just as good as his.

Mr. SCRIVER. I think the hon. gentleman displays unnecessary heat in the discussion of this question. There is no clause in the Bill which should provoke his anger to such an extent. He talks of an attempt to restrict the liberties of the Catholics in the province of Quebec, but is it not a fact that there is practically no circulation or sale now of Sunday newspapers in that province, and no occasion for legislation of this kind in that province ? The good morals of the inhabitants there do not call for it, and I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is not his belief that the hierarchy and the priesthood of his own province would be opposed to the state of things which exists in the United States with regard to this very question. If he had travelled in the United States as much as I have and spent as many Sundays as I have there, he would recognize the terrible evils that have grown up and exist there, owing to the circulation of this kind of literature. The aim of my hon. friend's legislation is to prevent the importation into this country of the terrible evils which exist there. It is not to restrict the liberties of the Catholics of the province of Quebec. There is no such contention. It is a tribute to the good morals of the people of that province that this literature does not prevail there.

Mr. LANGELIER. I have read a good deal of what is going on in the United States, and from what I have read it is not the circulation or the distribution of Sunday newspapers that is doing the harm, but the circulation of dime novels. It is not the Sunday newspapers which circulate that kind of literature, and that kind of literature is circulated just as much on week days as on Sundays. But why speak of what is going on in the United States ? Is there anything of that kind going on here ? Are the morals of our population being corrupted by the circulation of Sunday literature ? The hon. gentleman cannot cite one instance. Then why bring up here what is going on in the United States ? We are not legislating for the United States. If there are abuses there, let them be stopped there. But there is nothing to complain of here. I do not see why we should legislate because of something that is going on in the United States.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is wise to legislate in the way of prevention as well as cure.

Mr. SPROULE. The amendment offered by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Masson), and also the original Bill, if passed as now worded, would go further than aimed at by the introducer of the Bill. His object is to prevent the distribution or sale of newspapers, because it is immoral, but his Bill would also prevent the distribution of religious newspapers. The sale of the 'War Cry' by the Salvation Army would be stopped.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is not a newspaper.

Mr. SPROULE. It contains a great many advertisements and items of news and religious items, and must be considered a newspaper.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). It gives all the news of the army in all parts of the Dominion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think we should endeavour to take the decision of the committee on the amendment. There are about a hundred members who have to attend committees to-morrow, and it is getting late.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) have leave to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. MACLEAN (York.) Mr. Chairman. I press my motion that the committee rise and port progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Amendment negatived : nays, 45 ; yeas, 56.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that we should have some better explanation of this first clause from the promoter of the Bill before we proceed to vote upon it. I think that if it is passed it will be nothing more than theoretical legislation, for the clause, it seems to me, is entirely impracticable, or, at any rate, it is very unreasonable. I am surprised at the promoter of the Bill having worded the clause as he has done, considering the practice in his own church. If what we have been doing in the Presbyterian Church is wrong, it is time we should know it. If we pass this clause, then certainly what has been taking place in the Presbyterian Church for years past is wrong, and many of us, instead of occupying a position in this House should be in the provincial penitentiary. I think I would myself come within that category. It has been my habit, on the first Sunday of every month to distribute a periodical, but if this clause should become law, I would be liable to be sent to the penitentiary. In the Presbyterian Church, we have what is known as the Presbyterian Record.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is not a newspaper.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is a periodical.

Mr. CHARLTON. But the word periodical is struck out.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am speaking of the clause as moved by the hon. gentleman ; I do not know that the amendment will be carried.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have accepted the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. But even if it is accepted, I think we should look at the absurdity of the proposition that has been made. This Bill has been paraded year after year, and is called a Bill for the better observance of the Lord's Day, whereas, on the face of it, it actually proposes to legalize Sunday labour by a clause which we have yet to reach, and which I do not think this House should endorse or will endorse. As I said before, there is, in connection with my own church, a periodical known as the Presbyterian Record. It is bought in large quantities by nearly every congregation throughout the country, and distributed on the first sabbath of each month to the members of the congregation. We never thought we were doing wrong, but if this clause should pass, as proposed, the person engaged in distributing that periodical would be guilty of an indictable offence. The same is true of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church. They have what they call their leaflet, and it is a common practice to distribute it among the members of that society on the first Sunday of the month. The Women's Foreign Mission Society of the Presbyterian Church is doing a great work, and the hon. gentleman knows it ; yet he would consign to the provincial penitentiary every lady who engages in the distribution of that leaflet on the Sabbath day. It seems to me that there is a great deal of absurdity in bringing up year after year legislation of this kind. Throughout the country, people are led to believe that the hon. member is doing a good work, and I think it is our duty to point out the absurdity of the legislation he proposes. I am heartily in sympathy with the object of the Bill, or any other Bill that will lead to the better observance of the Lord's Day, but I do not want to see, year after year, absurd, impracticable propositions of this kind brought up and paraded as if they were for the good of the community.

Mr. CHARLTON. Under the amendment which I have accepted, the clause does not include periodicals, and all these publications that the hon. gentleman has mentioned are periodicals. This is confined to newspapers.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). It seems to me that this clause is altogether unnecessary. We have a law in the province of Ontario that meets the case. I may say that I myself was brought up in the Police Court, under that Ontario law and fined for publishing a Sunday newspaper. I published it under these circumstances. During the North-west rebellion, an important engagement occurred on Saturday, and the news reached Toronto too late for publication in any Saturday newspaper. We published a sheet giving that news, and for doing so we were brought up in the Police Court and fined. That law is still in existence in Ontario; it meets the case; so why pass this unnecessary Dominion law? I agree with the hon. gentleman who spoke recently from the opposite side of the House who said that the provinces could look after themselves in these matters. We hear a tirade here from the advocate of this Bill against Sunday newspapers. But these gentlemen are in this position: If the Sunday newspaper is bad, then every newspaper published during the week is bad, because the Sunday newspapers are no different from the others. If people read the Sunday and week-day newspapers, I should like to know from the hon. gentleman who proposes this Bill how he draws the distinction. The same is true of the Sunday car. We are told, particularly in Toronto, that there is something inherently bad in the Sunday car, and that it leads people to drink, and to the commission of all the crimes in the calendar. I deny that the Sunday car has any more harm in it than the week-day car. On the same grounds, I deny that the Sunday newspaper is any more immoral or tends any more to demoralize the people than the week-day newspaper. The hon. gentleman must first make that clear before he asks the House and the people to change the law from what it is now. This is only an attempt to make the people moral by legislation, a thing which cannot be accomplished, and there is a good deal of humbug and a good deal of hypocrisy in proposing it.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall this amendment be adopted?

Mr. HASLAM. Read the section as it would then stand.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It would read like this: "Whoever shall on the Lord's Day engage in the sale, distribution or circulation of any newspaper, shall be deemed to be guilty of an indictable offence."

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to have the section define what is a newspaper and what is a periodical. The 'War Cry' is distributed at the meetings of the Salvation Army on the sabbath day. My contention is that that is a newspaper, and I think the committee will do well to consider this matter before they vote on either the amendment or the main motion. While we may be in favour of the Bill and having it put through, I think the committee would act wisely to adopt the suggestion made a few moments ago; and in order to test the feeling of the committee, I will again move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The committee will first have to vote on the amendment.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) Would you kindly read the amendment in French? I am not deep enough with the English language to apprehend its full meaning at a mere reading of it, and before voting. I want to know on what I am called upon to pronounce.

Amendment agreed to: Yeas, 55; nays, 31.

Mr. BECHARD. I move that the following be added to this section:—

But nothing in this section shall affect the distribution of newspapers or letters on the said Lord's day by any postmaster in the ordinary way.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman's object will be better met by putting in the section as it is, the words "for gain or reward."

Mr. BECHARD. I think this is already provided for by the clause in the Bill. My amendment provides only that nothing in the Bill shall prevent the distribution by postmasters of letters or newspapers in the ordinary way by the postmaster.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) The hon. member forgot something in his amendment. He should have included the newspapers and other printed papers distributed by religious societies.

Mr. SPROULE. As the statement which I made a short time ago is contradicted, that the 'War Cry' would not be considered a newspaper, I hold a copy of that paper in my hand, and it contains advertisements of the sale of wood, the sale of dress goods, and the sale of a great many things, the ordinary newspaper advertisements you find in any newspaper in the country. That is not left out because, as long as you say a newspaper, the 'War Cry' is a newspaper, and therefore you would make it an indictable offence to sell or to distribute it on Sundays.

Mr. CHARLTON. The fact that a magazine contains advertisements of dress goods, &c., does not make it a newspaper. The 'War Cry' is a religious journal. It is not a newspaper. The object of this clause is to prohibit the circulation of the ordinary Sunday newspapers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The reason I proposed to my hon. friend from Iberville (Mr. Béchard) to substitute the words I suggested, is that without that proviso, if I received a paper through the post office, and after reading it, handed it to a friend. I would be guilty of distributing it and be guilty of an offence; whereas, if the section was amended in the direction I suggest, that whoever shall on the Lord's Day engage in the sale, distribution or circulation for gain or reward of any newspaper, then it would be confined to those who sell, and would not include the man who hands a newspaper to a friend.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It does not seem to me that the words are at all necessary, because a postmaster is obliged to distribute the mail in pursuance of a public duty. I do not think the Act would bear the construction feared, much less would it be necessary to say anything about letters. I think it would be better if the hon. gentleman did not press the amendment. If we come down to the question of gain or reward, we shall have a system like that by which, in the city of Toronto, omnibuses are run in defiance of the Sunday law; nobody is obliged to pay, but nobody gets a second ride if he does not pay. Papers will be distributed to subscribers, and they may pay or not as they please, but the business will go on just the same. It is difficult to prove gain or reward. I believe the passengers who ride in Sunday omnibuses in Toronto, pay for the food of the horses, and do not pay the proprietor any reward.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The object the hon. gentleman had in view was to stop the sale of newspapers, not their distribution by one friend to another. I do not think there could be any difficulty by inserting the words "distributing them for gain or reward." If a man gives a newspaper to a friend you would not want to make that a penal offence.

Mr. AMYOT. I propose as a sub-amendment that the following words be added, "elsewhere than in the province of Quebec."

Mr. BECHARD. That amendment is for the purpose of preserving to the people in the rural districts of Quebec, their habit of receiving newspapers and letters from the post office on Sunday after divine service. I have already stated that if they were prevented by this Bill from obtaining their weekly paper, which is the only one generally taken by people in the country districts, they would be subjected to great inconveniences, as they would be compelled to drive two or three miles to the post office on some other day, thereby losing considerable time, which they would prefer to employ in other directions. This amendment is intended to retain to the country postmasters the privilege of distributing letters and newspapers on Sunday, according to the practice in the province of Quebec.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the amendment of the hon. gentleman is unnecessary, for I cannot suppose that the section, if passed, would interfere with the duties of a postmaster in handing out letters or other mail matter to persons calling at the post office. If the office was open legally so that the people could receive their mail matter.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Is the hon. member (Mr. Charlton) in favour of having the post office in Toronto open on Sunday?

Mr. CHARLTON. No.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Why should that post office not be open on Sunday if the hon. gentleman is prepared to give a similar privilege to the province of Quebec? Will the hon. gentleman support a motion, if I introduce one, to open the Toronto post office on Sunday?

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly not.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Yet you are giving this privilege to the province of Quebec, and guaranteeing it by legislation.

Mr. SCRIVER. I rise to a question of order, and submit that the amendment proposed by the hon. member from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) is not an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is right in his contention, and that the amendment of the hon. member for Bellechasse must form a separate clause.

Mr. AMYOT. I accept the suggestion of the Deputy Speaker and will move it as a separate clause.

Mr. HASLAM. If this clause is passed, it will compel nearly every printer in British Columbia to work on Sunday. They now close their work at seven o'clock on Sunday morning, but if this clause is adopted they will be compelled to work all Sunday afternoon. I do not think it is right to compel a man to work on Sunday when he is anxious to avoid doing so.

Amendment (Mr. Béchard) agreed to.

Mr. SCRIVER. To obviate the objection raised by the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Masson) with regard to the circulating of religious newspapers, I move that the word "secular" be inserted before the word "newspapers."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment is not in order, because we cannot go back on those portions of the sections that have been carried.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) I ask that an exception be made in favour of the circulating, on Sunday, of the "Annales de la Bonne Sainte-Anne," of the "Annales de la Propagation de la Foi," and of the "Annales de la Sainte-Enfance"; and further, that it may be lawful to make the usual notification at church doors in connection with sales of benevolent goods.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I desire to move that the words "indictable offence" be struck out, and there be substituted the words "be guilty of an offence against this Act."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can move to add some words to the section, but he cannot change the words already agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. CHARLTON. This cannot be done, as a motion is under consideration. I am very desirous to get through with at least this one clause.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A motion that the committee rise is always in order.

Motion (Mr. Taylor) agreed to: Yeas, 59; nays, 40.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Probably some portion of the day with Ways and Means, but principally Supply.

Mr. LAURIER. I might say that my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) intends to move in the Ellis matter.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 31st May, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPATRIATION OF CANADIANS.

Mr. GIROUARD (Two Mountains) asked, 1. Did the Government send agents to the United States, during the year 1893, to promote the repatriation of Canadians? 2. Who are the said agents? 3. What localities did they visit, and how many lectures did they deliver? 4. Towards what part of Canada did the agents direct the parties repatriated? 5. What is the number of Canadians repatriated in 1893?

Mr. DALY. Yes. (Repatriation of French Canadians.) 2. J. P. O. Allaire and C. Geo. Caron. 3. Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire. We have no definite information as to the number of lectures delivered. 4. Manitoba, principally. 5. 238. Total of homestead entries made by returned Canadians (783 souls), of all nationalities. These entries were made in Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia. The proportion of French-Canadians brought back through the efforts of Messrs. Allaire and Caron, was about 50 heads of families. Most of these went to Manitoba. The balance of the 238 heads of families were brought in by the general staff of agents at work in the United States.

POSTMASTER AT GEORGETOWN.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Has the postmaster at Georgetown been dismissed? If so, when and why? Who has been appointed to the office? What is the salary of the postmaster at the said office?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This office was declared vacant in January last, owing to the fact that the postmaster, who was suffering from mental trouble, had not been able to give it his personal attention for a considerable time. Mr. Herbert B. Henderson has been appointed to the postmastership. Salary, $800 per annum, together with $108 for forward duty and $120 for rent.

THE EXPERIMENTAL FARM.

Mr. CHOQUETTE (for Mr. Delisle) asked, Whether Eugène Pelletier, formerly of St. Roch des Aulnets, is employed at the Experimental Farm. If so, how long has he been so employed, by whom was he recommended, and what is his occupation and his salary?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Eugène Pelletier is employed at the Experimental Farm. He has been employed there since May, 1893. He was appointed by the Minister of Agriculture. His occupation is French correspondent; his salary is $600 per annum.

SHOE FACTORIES IN P. E. ISLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Has the Government ascertained how many boot and shoe factories are in each of the three counties in Prince Edward Island? The name of the village or township in which each factory is located? The amount of capital invested in each factory? The number of hands employed in each factory? The amount of wages paid yearly by each factory? The output by each factory per year?

Mr. FOSTER. The information requested with respect to the shoe industry in the villages and townships in Prince Edward Island cannot be furnished without a new and special re-compilation. But I submit the following as respects the three counties for 1891 and 1881:—

Census of 1891.

COUNTY COURT JUDGES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to-morrow, to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the salaries of the Judges of the County Courts of Cariboo, New Westminster, Yale, Nanaimo and Kootenay, in the province of British Columbia, shall be $2,400 each per annum.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved:

That Government Orders have precedence on Wednesdays after "Questions to be put by Members," for the remainder of the session, and that the Order for Wednesdays, under Rule 19, be for the remainder of the session the Order for Mondays after half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose we are approaching that stage of the session when it is reasonable for the Government to ask for Wednesday. I think, however, we might reasonably ask the leader of the Government to give us one more Wednesday before seeking to have this rule adopted. I find there are twenty-six public Bills on the Order paper, and many of these are measures that the promoters desire to proceed with. It is true that this Order paper was gone through on Monday, but it was an entirely unexpected circumstance. The notices of motion were numerous, and I do not suppose that any member of the House anticipated that a public order would be reached upon that day. Many of the members were in the position I myself was in. The adjournment was from Wednesday until Monday, and in my case it was impossible to reach Ottawa on Monday by leaving home on Monday morning. In order to be present it would have been necessary for me to have left home on Saturday, and as others were similarly situated, no fault can attach to those members who were absent for their holidays and who were unable to be present on Monday. Owing to the number of Bills on the Order paper and the important character of some of them, I trust that the leader of the Government will be kind enough to waive this motion, as far as it deals with next Wednesday, and then, I suppose, nobody would object to his taking the following Wednesdays.

Mr. MULOCK. Speak for yourself.

Mr. CHARLTON. I speak for myself in that respect, of course.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think I must ask that the resolution shall be voted as it is. The House makes apparently better progress on Monday, and in all probability the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of proceeding with his measure before half-past seven on Monday, as there are only nine notices of motion on the paper now.

Mr. CHARLTON. Others may come in the meantime.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not very likely, as notice must be given either to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to call the attention of the Government to Bill No. 17 on the Order paper. The First Minister will remember that that Bill was once called, but at his request, owing to the fact that the Finance Minister was not present and wished to have something to say on the matter, I allowed the Bill to stand. Under the circumstances, I trust that the First Minister will give me an opportunity of inviting discussion on the provisions of that Bill. The hon. gentleman is quite aware that the question of superannuation in Canada has engaged considerable public attention. It is a system that, in my humble belief, does not meet with the general approval of the people of this country, and the measure which I have on the paper is for the purpose of altering it in the direction of eventually wiping it out altogether. At the request of the First Minister I allowed this measure to stand, so that I trust the Government will give me an opportunity of bringing it up again.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not able to agree with the motion of the First Minister that he shall deprive members of the privilege of proceeding with their business on Wednesdays. I do not think it can be fairly charged against the members that they have been in default in taking advantage of the day which the rules of the House places at their disposal. Considering that at the very commencement of the session, the Government took Wednesdays from private members for quite a while, it seems to me that they are at least lacking in courtesy in seeking to further invade the rights of members. It must be manifest, Mr. Speaker, to any one who has watched the proceedings of this House within the last few weeks that an undue interest has been attached to certain motions on the Order paper, and I have been forced to draw but one inference, and I do draw that inference, namely: that there has been a manifest lingering over certain Bills on the Order paper so as to prevent the House reaching the discussion of other matters. I do not believe that the time of the House was seriously engaged in considering these motions for the purpose of arriving at the wisest conclusion in regard to them. I may be in error, but that is the conclusion forced on my mind, and upon the minds of a great many members of this House, and of a great many people outside of this House. If the Government persists in passing this motion to-day, they will simply give colour to that view and adopt it as their own. Just before the holiday, the Government moved to take the last Wednesday from private members, and what occurred then? To show the hollowness of that motion, to show that it was not merely for the advancement of public business, when Wednesday was taken everyone had a right to assume that that day would be fully occupied with Government business, but the House adjourned at 6 o'clock after only about two hours' discussion. That was not, I think, a fair procedure, and it was simply depriving members of the opportunity of proceeding with their measures to accomplish nothing so far as the advancement of public business is concerned. It might as well be determined now whether private members are to have any privileges at all in regard to pressing on their own legislation. I myself have some Bills standing in my name on the paper, which I think are deserving of the attention of the House, and which have received the attention of the public. If the Government prevents these measures being reached this session, I think that the country will to some extent resent that action. I understand, so far as my Bill in respect to cattle freights is concerned, that the Government are going to arrange a day for that. That was my understanding; of the remarks that fell from the First Minister when he took Wednesday of last week from us. I then said, and I say it again, that there are other measures that I wish brought to the attention of the House, and on which I desire to have the opinion of Parliament. One is, in reference to the expenses connected with the maintenance of our institution here: Government House and the Governor General's Office. The country has been put to an enormous expenditure in connection with that institution, and there has been, I think, undue extravagance connected with the maintenance of it since confederation. I believe that public opinion in the country is anxious that Parliament should discuss that matter. Another Bill which I think deserves the attention of the House is the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons, and which has reference to the present system that to a very considerable extent prevails, of railway companies granting passes to members of both Houses of Parliament. I submit that the dignity of this House demands the consideration of that measure. There are many other matters on the paper demanding attention, but those two I feel to some extent responsible for, and I am anxious to have them considered. So that I think this motion is premature and not in the public interest, and I think the First Minister will be consulting the public interest if he does not press it. When may I expect an opportunity of taking the sense of the House upon my Bill respecting ocean freight rates on cattle? That, at all events, ought to be provided for before any order of the House is made upon this motion.

Mr. SPROULE. If the postponing of this motion for one day would afford an opportunity for considering the Bills on the paper, I think a good many would support its postponement; but it would not enable the House to dispose of more than one or two Bills, at any rate. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has spoken of the importance of his measure regarding ocean freight rates on cattle. I am credibly informed that the necessity of that Bill at the present time has been largely removed. From information I received last night from Montreal, I am led to believe that the combination which has heretofore existed amongst the owners of vessels has been broken this spring, and that at the present time the rates from Montreal are lower than the rates from United States ports. No doubt that may be partially due to the ventilation of the question in this House, and to the intimations which have been given that in the event of the evil continuing it might be found necessary for this House to institute legislation dealing with it; but under the circumstances I think the necessity of that Bill at the present time is amply disposed of. However, I rise more particularly to speak of two Bills which I have on the paper myself, and both of which I regard as important; and other members are in about the same position. If we saw any reasonable hope of getting these Bills passed during the present session, no doubt we would be disposed to hold out for the Government giving us another day; but from the desire which has been expressed on both sides of the House to facilitate the efforts of the Government to shorten the session, we are willing that the Government should take another of the days given to private members. All these Bills are in the same category, and I believe no serious injury will accrue to the country from allowing them to stand over for another session.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sorry to hear the statement made that the impression exists that time has been wasted in the consideration of the two first Bills of Public Bills and Orders, for the purpose of preventing other orders being reached. We all have our own opinion as to whether the discussion was unduly prolonged or not; but I am satisfied, for my part, that there has been no wilful waste of time in the consideration of these Bills in order to postpone the consideration of any others; and certainly the statement that the action of the Government in proposing to take Wednesday gives colour to that impression, is an insinuation which, so far as the Government is concerned, is utterly unjustifiable. We have no intention to avoid the consideration of any order on the paper, and the hon. gentleman will find that the very orders among Public Bills and Orders, which he surmises there has been a desire to avoid, will be reached this session, and will be discussed unless the gentlemen who have charge of them fail to carry them to a discussion. Let me call his attention to the present state of the list. The first order is the Bill to disfranchise voters who have taken bribes. That Bill, I think, is practically finished; at any rate, a very few minutes more consideration, I should hope, would dispose of it. The second is the Bill in relation to the observance of Sunday; and that was so fully discussed last night that I should suppose very few minutes more would dispose of it. Two or three votes were taken on the first section of the Bill, and if I am right in my surmise that the following sections will not be pressed, we may say that practically that measure is finished so far as the committee stage is concerned. The third Bill, to extend the ballot to the North-west Territories, is not, I presume, to be discussed, because the subject has been disposed of. The next is not to be discussed either, or rather will come up on a Government Bill. The next, as to the Electoral Franchise Act, and the next, as regards an amendment to the Criminal Code, will come up when the Government Bills on those subjects are under consideration. So that the Bill of the hon. gentleman is practically the first of those remaining under consideration; and, under the circumstances, having yielded once to the strong remonstrance made in favour of having the Bill considered this session, I would not be disposed to take Wednesday if doing so would put it out of consideration; but it will be practically the first on the list for Monday evening, and the Bill will, therefore, be sure to come up for consideration. The same may be said of some that follow. The Bill respecting the salary of the Governor General I do not understand the hon. gentleman represents to be an urgent measure, because it is only to take effect four years hence, and, no doubt, before that time there will be an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has not given any answer to the question of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) with regard to the Bill respecting superannuation. I think the hon. member is entitled to an answer, because the Prime Minister will remember that one day at his suggestion my hon. friend did not proceed with the Bill when he had power to proceed. Under the circumstances, I think provision should be made to have that Bill discussed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was going to say, although I do not wish to suggest any policy for the hon. gentleman, that as the measure is for the abolition of the superannuation system, it seems to me that subject could be very well discussed apart from public Bills and orders, as there are many other opportunities which the hon. member may take advantage of for that purpose. But we should see what progress we make on Mondays before asking for any special concession for that Bill.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to emphasize what the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has said with reference to his Bill. If the Government can do anything to relieve the shippers of cattle in this matter, I think they should promptly let them know; or if it is impossible for the Government to do anything in the matter, they should let them know that, because there is a great deal of uneasiness in the public mind on the subject, and the people have the idea that the Government are slow in taking action with regard to it. I would like to induce the Government to let the people understand that they are alive to the importance of this question, and I hope they will lose no time in letting the people know whether it is possible for them to do anything or not; because the cattle shipping trade is suffering great loss and inconvenience, mainly on account of the high rates charged on ocean vessels. Therefore, I hope that the Government will take steps at once to show the people that all the power and influence of the Government is being used to give them relief.

Mr. SPROULE. The rates were lowered a week ago and the new rates published.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) and the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) have so frequently brought up this question of cattle transportation as a serious one and one involving so much to the shippers of cattle, that I wish again to point out that there is not that condition of alarm or uneasiness among the men for whom these hon. gentlemen seem to speak, as they suppose. The very constant reference to the subject, without giving any particulars, warrant me in taking up a few moments to place the House in possession of valuable information which has reached me, and which, I hope, will dispel all fears similar to those expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I told the House before, that early in the season, before the shipping season opened, these shippers of cattle met the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and myself, and we had a friendly consultation with reference to the whole subject, and that the shippers promised to furnish me with certain important and definite information. That information never having reached me, I concluded—and I thought it a reasonable assumption—that circumstances had so changed as to make it unnecessary for these gentlemen to follow up the subject. I communicated then with the inspectors who are supervising the shipments of cattle at Montreal, and asked them to let me know the present condition of affairs. You will remember, Sir, that the complaint made was chiefly this, that whereas the shipment of Canadian cattle was practically confined to one or two ports—chiefly one port—in Canada, the shippers were unable to take advantage of the foreign ports of Boston and New York, etc., and were at the mercy of the ship-owners, who made the best use of their position in their own interest. In reply, I received this communication from the inspectors at Montreal, dated 30th May, 1894 :

We made inquiry from various parties here, and wired a party at Boston with whom we correspond and know is reliable, and wired you as follows: Current cattle rates from Montreal to Glasgow, thirty to thirty-five shillings, Liverpool and London, forty shillings, none taken ahead. Boston, New York and Baltimore, current rates forty-seven and six to fifty-five shillings, and all taken.

The hon. gentleman will see, therefore, that the condition of things must have materially altered from what it was represented at the beginning of the season, and that my assumption was founded on fact. But Messrs. H. & A. Allan wrote also to the inspectors, in answer to their inquiry, and for the purpose of being forwarded to me :

The Allan line are running steamers fortnightly from Boston and Philadelphia to Glasgow, and weekly from New York to Glasgow. From Montreal they are running weekly steamers to Glasgow. At the present time the cattle rates from New York and Boston is 45s. per head, and from Philadelphia 42s. 6d., exclusive of insurance. The Montreal rate to Glasgow is 30s., also exclusive of insurance, and we understand that very much lower rates have been taken by other steamers from this port.

From New York, Boston and Philadelphia the steamers are carrying from 400 to 550 head of cattle, whereas from Montreal the vessels are only receiving main deck loads, which would mean from 200 to 270 animals.

As far as Liverpool and London are concerned, we are in a position to state that extensive contracts have been made from New York as high as 50s.; whereas the best rate which has been made to either London or Liverpool from Montreal for some time past is 40s. Both these latter rates are also exclusive of insurance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The information which we give you, you can rely upon as being trustworthy, as our agents in New York keep us thoroughly posted from day to day as to cattle contracts, and the figures named in this letter cannot be disputed, as we have received them from time to time from our New York house.

Mr. MULOCK. With regard to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Marine, I do not wish to discuss the matter now, and in fact have no right to do so. But I do not wish his observations to be accepted by the House as conclusive that no legislation is required. When the opportunity arrives for my presenting the Bill, I may be able to deal with the statements he has made and the whole question, and show that the matter has not been finally disposed of even because of temporary relief. With regard to the main motion, I think we are here to discharge the business of the House and not to adjourn for the convenience of members.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the almost universal practice is, when the Government take four days of the week, to state what public business they intend to submit during the remainder of the session. The First Minister has stated what business he proposes bringing forward, so far as certain matters are concerned, but whether there is any further business that the Government contemplate, and which has not been mentioned to the House, the Prime Minister has not stated. I think it would be important that the right hon. gentleman should tell us whether he proposes going on with the Insolvency Act, and whether the Government really contemplate a reconsideration of the subject of the distribution of the seats in any of the provinces this session?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We shall have some Supplementary Estimates, for example, which I did not think of the other day.

Mr. LAURIER. We knew that very well.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I thought, perhaps, it was forgotten. We will ask the attention of the House to the Insolvency Act, if there is reasonable time, this session. I think the matter has been so thoroughly investigated in the Senate that by the time the Bill comes to this House, a good deal of the discussion will have been avoided, as far as our deliberations are concerned, and it may be the House will have time to pass it. We are in the hands of the House on that subject, and also as regards the Company Act, which I regard as a very important Act, and which will be introduced in a few days, perhaps in the Senate also, in order that it may make progress there while we are engaged in Supply. I cannot answer, at the moment, as to what shall be done regarding railway subsidies and the Redistribution Bill. As I said before, hon. gentlemen are anxious to deal with the latter subject, and consider it, if we have time. I allude to hon. gentlemen opposite in particular, who are eager and zealous about it. With the exception of those, I do not know of any measure that may be introduced, unless some measure of minor importance.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). With regard to the subject of the redistribution of seats, the hon. gentleman has not said anything.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have said that both sides are very anxious about it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I only rise for the purpose of asking the First Minister whether I can have the same assurance with reference to the Bill that stands in my name, that it may be considered as a Government measure, dealing with the North-west. The Minister of the Interior has given notice of the introduction of a Bill to amend the Act respecting the North-west Territories, and possibly in that Bill the amendments that I propose may be dealt with. I may be saved the trouble, possibly, of going on with it, but if not, it would be convenient in that case, as in the other to which reference was made, that I should know whether an opportunity will be given me to go on with the Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot give any assurance about it, and I am inclined to think the Bill will be again reached, for the third time, on a Monday. The hon. gentleman has the remedy in his own hands, as regards appending it to our Bill, as an amendment, or otherwise.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has the policy of the Government been amended with reference to the veto? I see that the Controller of Customs, in delivering a speech up west, says that the Government have abandoned the veto.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry that I must express my great regret that we cannot have more definite information as to the intentions of the Government. In matters of this kind, we expect the Government to give us information of their intentions. as, I am sorry to say, the Government has not, so far, done. The hon. gentleman says they cannot give us any indication of what is really the intention of the Government with regard to a very important subject—the redistribution of seats in Quebec. I have my own doubts whether it is possible, under the constitution, to bring up that subject again. I will not press that, but the hon. gentleman will understand that it will be preferable, if we are to have prorogation within any reasonable time, we should understand at once what the intentions of the Government are in this matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will give an answer very soon, but I cannot do so at this moment.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You have not given me an answer yet.

FAST ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into committee to-morrow, to consider the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company, for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, making connection with a French port, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherwise as the Governor in Council seems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year.

Mr. MULOCK. Before that motion is carried, I would remind the First Minister and the Minister of Finance that an order of the House was granted on the 7th of May for the production of certain papers in connection with negotiations for the fast line, and it seems to me that these papers are necessary for the proper consideration of this resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have them here.

Mr. MULOCK. Am I to understand they will be here to-morrow before the motion is discussed?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; before the motion is discussed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These papers ought to be in our hands a reasonable time before the hon. gentleman proceeds with his motion.

Mr. FOSTER. I will try to get them down to-morrow, and, if I am not successful in getting them here before the discussion commences, we can put the discussion off until Tuesday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There may be a good deal in them that we shall require to be advised about.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—IMPRISONMENT OF MR. ELLIS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before that motion is put, I desire to say that my hon. friend and leader gave notice last night that it was my intention to bring to the notice of the House the imprisonment of Mr. Ellis for contempt of court, to invite the House to discuss the whole question, and to submit a resolution on the subject. I merely desire to say that the Premier intimated a wish on his part to look into the papers before the discussion came up, and asked me not to bring the discussion on to-day, otherwise I should have done so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Two very important committees, each having a large number of members, met this morning, and I thought it would be inconvenient for hon. members to be ready for the discussion, and therefore asked the hon. gentleman to be good enough to defer his motion.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MANITOBA.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put there is a matter of very considerable importance to the province of Manitoba which I wish to bring before this House. In answer to a question addressed to the Government the other day, I was informed that the patents for the land grant for the University of Manitoba were not issued, on account of a dispute in connection with the same. Now, it seems to me important that the House and the country should understand the position of matters in connection with this land grant. There is no dispute with regard to the matter so far as the University of Manitoba is concerned. The university authorities are now, and for a number of years have been, demanding very strongly from the Dominion Government the transfer of the land grant to which the university is entitled. The Government of the province of Manitoba have also repeatedly demanded from the Dominion Government that this land grant should be transferred to the university. In 1885 a settlement was made between the province of Manitoba and the Dominion of Canada with respect to a great many matters then in dispute. One of the clauses of that settlement was a provision by which the Government of the Dominion of Canada were to transfer to the University of Manitoba 150,000 acres of land for the purpose of establishing a fund to carry on the work of that institution. I shall read the clause which was then passed, and which is now found in the Revised Statutes, chap. 47, section 5:

An allotment of land not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres of fair average quality shall be selected by the Dominion Government and granted as an endowment to the University of Manitoba for its maintenance as a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education, and to be held for that purpose on some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Dominion Government.

As I have stated, that arrangement was made in 1885, and the statute, I believe, was passed in 1886—it is 49 Vic., chap. 50, section 2. In pursuance of an arrangement made by correspondence with the Department of the Interior, the University of Manitoba, by means of money placed at its disposal by the Government of Manitoba, have, at very considerable expense, selected a considerable portion of land out of which they are willing to receive this 150,000 acres. On the 2nd of September, 1886, at a meeting of the University Council, the question of the assignment of the land granted by the Government to the university was taken up, and the name of Mr. J. A. M. Aikins was added to the committee appointed at a previous meeting to deal with the question, Dr. King being appointed convener of the committee in the absence of the Chancellor. On the 14th January, 1887, a meeting of the university council was called to receive and adopt the report of the special committee appointed to procure an assignment to the university of the land granted by the Federal Government. On behalf of the said committee Mr. J. A. M. Aikins presented their report, which was received on motion of Mr. Aikins, seconded by Judge Dubuc. The said report was as follows:—

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Your committee appointed to look after an assignment of the lands to be granted under chapter 50, 48 and 49 Victoria, beg to report as follows:—

As to the basis or scheme referred to in said statute, your committee recommend the following:

The House will remember from my reading of the clause that it was provided in the statute that a basis was to be suggested by the university and agreed to by the Dominion Government. The report which I have just referred to gives that basis. It is rather long, and, as it is not particularly material to the matter before me, I shall not read it. That basis, however, was set forth in seven paragraphs. A special committee was appointed to reconsider the report of the special committee on the Dominion grant to the university, and reported some amendments to that basis. I may say that nothing particular turns on this upon that matter. I merely refer to it because it was provided for by the statute. The Dominion Government, as I understand, have assented to that basis adopted by the university council. Then at a subsequent meeting of the council the following documents were laid on the Table:—

OTTAWA, 14th October, 1889.

DEAR SIR,—I am directed by the Minister of the Interior to send you the inclosed copy of a letter from His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface to the Minister of Justice with reference to the grant of land to the University of Manitoba under 48 and 49 Victoria, chapter 50, for the information of the governing body of the university, and for any comments thereon which they may wish to offer.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

JOHN R. HALL,

Acting Deputy Minister of Interior.

F. C. WADE, Esq.,

Sec. Land Committee,

University of Manitoba.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that all the difficulty in dealing with this matter arises from the letter of His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, which I shall now read; in which he sets up a claim that this land grant should not be handed over to the university except under certain restrictions. The copy of the letter inclosed is as follows:—

ST. BONIFACE, August, 1889.

DEAR SIR,—As president of St. Boniface College, and as one of the representatives of the said college in the council of the University of Manitoba, I beg to submit to you a few considerations in regard to the grant of Dominion lands made to the University, under 48-49 Vic., chap 50, sec. 2 of the Statutes of the Dominion.

A brief sketch of the history of the university, of its foundation and working, may assist in explaining the true position our college is placed in, and in better showing my views on the question at issue.

The university was created by an Act of the Provincial Legislature passed in 1877, and incorporated in the Consolidated Statutes of Manitoba, chap. 63. Section 28 of the Act declares that the incorporated colleges in connection with the university shall be the College of St. Boniface, the St. John's College, and the Manitoba College, and the other incorporated colleges which may, from time to time, be affiliated by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

The St. Boniface College is a Roman Catholic institution, the St. John's College connected with the Church of England, and the Manitoba College with the Presbyterian Church.

The above three colleges were in 1877, and remained the only ones, connected with the University until 1886, when the Medical College was affiliated, and last year (1888), the Wesley College was also affiliated.

In the preamble of the Act establishing the university, it is stated that the university is to be established on the model of the University of London. This was inserted advisedly, as it was then intended and clearly understood that the university was to be an examining body and not a teaching body. Section 11 of the said Act enacts that there shall be no professorship or teachership at present in the university. The words "at present" in the section may seem to indicate an intention to make the university, in the course of time, a teaching body. A few observations may be made in regard to these two words.

The Bill creating the university, as framed by the Hon. Mr. Royal, then Attorney General of the province, and as discussed and adopted at meetings of the representatives of the three colleges, intended at the time to be connected with the university, and as presented to the House, had not in it these two words. The Hon. Mr. Royal, who had charge of the Bill, who put it through the House, and supervised it in Committee of the Whole, never saw those words nor heard them mentioned. When the Statute-book appeared, we were greatly surprised to see the said words in it. They must have been added in Committee of the Whole without the knowledge of the promoter of the Bill. But the Bill had become law. I may add, however, that these words were never found in the French copy of the Statutes.

I enter into these details to show you that we were never consenting parties to have these words in the Act. It was well known at the time that we, the representatives of St. Boniface College, and of the Catholic portion of the university in the organization, could not have joined the other colleges in a teaching university.

The following sentence in the endowment clause 48-49 Vic., chap 50, sec. 2: "As an endowment to the University of Manitoba for its maintenance as a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education," might perhaps at first sight, be interpreted to apply to a teaching university, but I do not think such was the meaning of the programme or curriculum prepared by the council, for the yearly examination on the various subjects necessitates on the part of the affiliated colleges, which, in fact, have so far constituted the university, the obligation of giving the training required by the university, and, in this, the university may be considered as giving proper training in the higher branches of education, within the provisions of the Act.

During the last three or four years the question of making the university a teaching body by founding chairs in connection therewith, has been submitted and urged in the university council by some representatives of the other colleges. We made known to them our insuperable objection to such proposed scheme, as it was impossible for us to send the pupils of our college to be taught by professors over whose teaching we had no control. They understood our reasons; the discussion was conducted in good spirit on both sides, without any harsh words being uttered. They regretted the difficulty of the situation as to St. Boniface College, but they repeatedly said that it was for them a very important question; that the change would have to come and that sooner or later, the Legislature would have to be applied for to legislate on the matter.

Now, we really anticipate that the scheme may be forced on us before very long, when we might be compelled to modify, or perhaps sever, our connection with the university. We have no idea what form the modification may take or on what terms and conditions the severance may be effected. Whether we shall be permitted to remain in some shape or other as an independent and separate branch of the university in regard to the teaching of our pupils, or otherwise, we cannot foresee. At all events, I think that, as the oldest college in the country, as one of the colleges which took a very active part in the organization, in framing, as they now exist, its statutes, ordinances, regulations and curriculum, and as being still what may be called a component part of the university, it is not unreasonable to expect, in the event of the modification of the university from its original plan, that we the St. Boniface College, representing all the Catholic population of the country in the matter of superior education, should not be forced into an undesirable position in the university without some means being devised to protect its rights and its just and reasonable claims. I do not wish to ask for any special privilege or favour for the St. Boniface College. But what I desire and what I would suggest is that, in the patent granting to the university the lands allowed by the statute, some clause or words may be inserted affording a protection to any particular college connected with the university and constituting a part thereof, whose rights and position may be affected or interfered with in the event of the said university altering its constitution or modifying its original plan.

The protection asked to-day by the St. Boniface College will be for the benefit of any of colleges finding themselves in parallel circumstances.

In a few months or a few years, some one of the other colleges may have interests conflicting with the majority and claim the benefit of the same protecting clause. This would also add as a warning to the university as a body, that the rights and just claims of any of its constituent parts should not be infringed upon, and it would tend to promote and preserve between the different denominational colleges, the harmony and good relations which have so far been prevailing.

Pardon me, dear Sir, for trespassing so much upon your valuable time. The important issue at stake must be my justification. I have reason to hope that your honourable colleagues in the Government, when you will place the matter before them, will see the force and urgency of my request, and that the protection asked for will be secured without difficulty.

I have the honour to be, dear sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) + ALEXANDER,
Archbishop of St. Boniface.

That letter was addressed to the Hon. Sir John Thompson, K.C.M.G., M.J., Ottawa. That was one of the documents that was laid upon the Table at this meeting of the university council to which I refer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When was that meeting held?

Mr. MARTIN. I will give you the date of the meeting later. Here is another letter submitted to the council:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OTTAWA, 30th July, 1889.

SIR,—I am directed to transmit herewith a copy of a draft form of patent which has been furnished by the law officers of the Crown as the form to be used in granting to the Manitoba University the lands which have been allotted to them, and to request you to submit it for the approval of the authorities of the university, and to return it to this department, under cover of a letter containing any suggestions or observations which they may wish to make in regard to it.

I am, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.)
For the Assistant Secretary.

F. C. WADE, Esq.,
Secretary Land Committee,
University of Manitoba,
Winnipeg.

The copy of the patent inclosed was as follows:—

CANADA: VICTORIA, &c.

To all to whom these presents shall come,
Greeting:

Whereas, in and by chapter 47 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, entitled "An Act respecting the province of Manitoba," it is, amongst other things, in effect enacted that an allotment of land, not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres of fair average quality, shall be selected by the Dominion Government and granted as an endowment to the University of Manitoba (a body corporate and politic), under the provisions of the Consolidated Statutes of Manitoba (chapter 63), for its maintenance as a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education, and to be held in trust for that purpose on some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Dominion Government.

And whereas the lands hereinafter mentioned and described, the same being Dominion lands within the meaning of the Dominion Lands Act, have been selected by the Government of our Dominion of Canada to be granted to the said "The University of Manitoba" (hereinafter sometimes called the said university) in pursuance of the Act above mentioned, and whereas the said university has framed a basis or scheme under which it is proposed that the said lands shall be held by the said university upon certain trusts which are hereinafter embodied and set forth.

And whereas the said basis or scheme has been duly approved by our Governor General in Council who has authorized the issue of letters patent granting the said lands to the said university upon and subject to the trusts and conditions hereinafter expressed and contained.

Now know ye, that we do by these presents grant, convey and assure unto the said University of Manitoba, their successors and assigns:

To have and to hold all said lands unto the said "The University of Manitoba," their successors and assigns forever, for the purpose hereinafter mentioned, and upon and subject to the trusts and conditions hereinafter expressed and contained, saving, etc.

Provided always that the said lands are to be held by the said university, their successors and assigns, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned and upon and subject to the following trusts and purposes, that is to say:—

1st. That the said university, their successors or assigns, may at any time and in such manner and on such terms as they may deem proper, sell and dispose of or lease the said lands or any portion thereof and receive the proceeds or income resulting therefrom.

2nd. That the said university, their successors or assigns, may apply such portion of the said proceeds and income, as may be considered proper, to pay the expenses of the care and management of the said lands and of the moneys arising therefrom; to purchase a suitable site or suitable sites for and to build thereon university buildings and to furnish such buildings and to invest such portion of the said proceeds as may not be immediately required for any of the said objects in such securities and on such terms as the said university, their successors or assigns, may deem proper and safe for the purpose of deriving an income therefrom, and may apply the income arising from the leasing of the said lands and from such investments or any portion thereof, to any of the purposes aforesaid or to any purpose contemplated or provided for by the Act of incorporation of the said university, and may also from time to time with the express sanction and approval of our Governor in Council, but not otherwise, apply any part of such income to any other purpose connected with the work of the university or the objects for which it was created.

Provided always that if at any time hereafter the said university shall be dissolved or shall cease to exercise its functions as a university, or if at any time hereafter the said university shall cease to be constituted as provided by its present Act of incorporation, chapter sixty-three of the Consolidated Statutes of Manitoba, then and in such case any and all of the said lands which may remain unsold shall revert to and become revested in us and our successors as of our and their former estate therein, and all funds in the hands of the said university, the successors and assigns, the proceeds of which in any way result from the sale, lease or other disposal of the said lands shall be immediately paid over to us, our successors and assigns.

Provided further, and it is hereby made an express condition of this grant that at all times hereafter the said university, their successors and assigns shall keep or cause to be kept such separate and distinct account of the proceeds and income resulting from the sale, lease or other disposal of, and of all moneys in any way derived from or arising out of the said lands, as shall clearly and readily disclose the amount and nature thereof, as well as all dealings therewith, and also the above books, vouchers and papers containing or in any relating to such account shall at all times be open to the inspection of any person or persons appointed by our Governor in Council to inspect the same.

[Great Seal.]

The following papers were also laid upon the table at said meeting :—

5. I, Charles Aldborough Sadlier, Clerk of the Legislative Assembly and Custodian of the Statutes of the province of Manitoba, hereby certify :

That on the first day of February, A.D. 1877, the Hon. Mr. Royal introduced into the Legislative Assembly a Bill to establish a provincial university, the preamble of such Bill and section five thereof reading as follows :—

“Whereas it is desirable to establish one university for the whole of Manitoba (on the model of the University of London), for the purpose of raising the standard of higher education in the province, and of enabling all denominations and classes to obtain academical degrees ; therefore,

“Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Manitoba, enacts as follows :

“V. There shall be no professorship or other teachership in the university ; but its functions shall be limited to the examining of candidates for degrees in the several faculties, or for certificates of honour in different branches of knowledge, and to granting of such degrees and certificates after examination in the manner hereinafter mentioned.”

That the said preamble and section 5 were amended in Committee of Whole (Mr. Brown being chairman of such committee) on the 16th day of February of the same year as follows : By striking out in the second and third lines of the said preamble the words “on the model of the University of London.” By changing the number of said section 5 to “10,” and by inserting in the first line thereof after the word “teachership” the words “at present.”

That the Bill was read a third time and passed as so amended, on the 20th day of February, A.D. 1877.

That the original engrossed copy of the said Bill assented to by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor is, as to such preamble and section, in the following words :—

“Whereas it is desirable to establish one university for the whole of Manitoba, for the purpose of raising the standard of higher education in the province and enabling all denominations and classes to obtain academical degrees ; therefore,

“Her Majesty, by and with the advice of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Manitoba, enacts as follows :

“X. There shall be no professorship or other teachership at present in the university ; but its functions shall be limited to the examining of candidates for degrees in the several faculties, or for certificates of honour in different branches of knowledge, and to granting of such degrees and certificates after examination in the manner hereinafter mentioned.”

That the same is, as set forth in the authorized English printed edition of the statutes of that year, as follows :—

“Whereas it is desirable to establish one university for the whole of Manitoba (on the model of the University of London), for the purpose of raising the standard of higher education in the province, and of enabling all denominations and classes to obtain academical degrees ; therefore,

“Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Manitoba, enacts as follows :—

There shall be no professorship or other teachership at present in the university, but its functions shall be limited to the examining of candidates for degrees in the several faculties or for certificates of honour in different branches of knowledge, and to granting of such degrees and certificates after examination in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Manitoba at Winnipeg, this twenty-fifth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, and in the fifty-third year of Her Majesty's reign.

[L.S.] (Sgd.) C. A. SADLIER,

Clerk of the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba.

I, John Edward Lethbridge, of the city of Winnipeg, in the county of Selkirk, business manager of the Manitoba ‘Free Press,’ do solemnly declare :

1. That I have carefully examined the files of the ‘Manitoba Free Press,’ weekly edition, of date the seventeenth day of February, 1877.

2. That under the report of legislative proceedings of Friday, February 9th, in said issue I find the following :—

“Hon. Mr. Royal, in moving the second reading of a Bill entitled ‘An Act to establish a Provincial University,’ said that there has been, and still is, a great difference of opinion respecting the institution of a university in this province, and this difference existed chiefly amongst the leading members of the several institutions of the province. The Government have been urged during the past two years to submit a measure for the institution of a university ; and have consented, and in doing so have endeavoured, as far as possible, to meet the views of the different parties seeking its establishment. The Government think the Bill premature, but have been so repeatedly urged that they have brought it down. The Bill only provides for a university to grant degrees and for graduating purposes, but will not be a teaching institution. The Bill provides that hereafter chairs may be attached and endowed, and become a teaching institution as well. The council would consist of six representatives from each affiliated college, one from each section of the Board of Public Instruction, and also, a representation would be granted to the graduates of other universities resident in the province. The Bill does not come into force immediately, but will be given effect by proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. There had been considerable difficulty about the theological faculty, and it had been decided that each college be permitted to have its own faculty of Theology and graduate its own students, who would be recognized by the university. It was his intention to put off the third reading of the Bill until same day next week, in order to permit certain parties who were seeking incorporation for the purpose of affiliation with the proposed university, to become so."

The report then continues: "The Bill was then carried and the Bill read a second time."

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act respecting extra-judicial oaths.

(Sgd.) JNO. E. LETHBRIDGE.

Declared before me at the city of Winnipeg, in the county of Selkirk, this 22nd day of October, 1889.

(Sgd.) F. C. WADE,
A Commissioner in B. M., &c., &c.

On motion of F. C. Wade, seconded by W. R. Mulock, the report is received and taken into consideration.

Mr. Wade then moved, seconded by W. R. Mulock, that:

Whereas the preamble to the Bill to incorporate and establish the University of Manitoba when introduced to the Legislative Assembly of the province of Manitoba, contained the statement that the said university was to be established on the model of the University of London;

Whereas the words "at present" were not in paragraph five of the said Bill as so introduced;

Whereas the said Bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House and while before the said committee, the said Bill was amended by striking out of the preamble the words "on the model of the University of London," and by changing clause 5 in the original Bill to clause 10, and by inserting in the said clause after the word "teachership" the words "at present";

Whereas the Hon. Mr. Royal is reported to have stated when moving the second reading of the said Bill, that the Bill provided that thereafter chairs might be attached and endowed and the university might become a teaching body as well as a university for granting degrees and graduating purposes;

Whereas the said Bill as so amended as aforesaid was passed by the said legislature and was in its said amended form assented to by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor;

Whereas His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface has written under date of August, 1889, the letter to the Minister of Justice, which has been now read and in such he points out that "in the preamble of the Act establishing the university it is stated that the university is to be established on the model of the University of London, and that this was inserted advisedly, as it was then intended and clearly understood that the university was to be an examining body and not a teaching body," and in which letter he also further points out that the Hon. Mr. Royal, who had charge of the Bill, who put it through the House and supervised it in Committee of the Whole, never saw the words "at present" (also referred to) nor heard them mentioned;

Whereas His Grace in the said letter further states "that I do not wish to ask for any special privilege or favour for St. Boniface College, but what I desire and what I would suggest is that in the patent granting to the university, the lands allowed by the statute, some clause or word may be inserted affording a protection to any particular college connected with the university and constituting a part thereof, whose rights and position may be affected or interfered with in the event of the said university altering its constitution or modifying its original plan";

Whereas the Hon. the Minister of the Interior has sent to this council a copy of the said letter of His Grace, and has asked them for any comments thereon, which they may wish to offer;

Whereas the draft patent for the said lands, submitted for the approval of the said council by the Hon. the Minister of the Interior, contains a clause to the following effect, that "if at any time hereafter the said university shall cease to be constituted, as provided by its present Act of incorporation, chapter 63 of the Consolidated Statutes of Manitoba."

Now it is resolved that this council, having compared the statements of the Archbishop of St. Boniface, relating to the original constitution of the Act establishing and incorporating the University of the province of Manitoba with the certificate of the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly and custodian of the Statutes of the province of Manitoba and the speech of the Hon. Mr. Royal, cannot but come to the conclusion that the Act of the Legislature, incorporating the University of Manitoba, contemplated the establishment of chairs and professorships in said university in the course of time, and did not provide that it should be founded on the model of the University of London, and that this fact appears to have been known to the Hon. Joseph Royal, and was mentioned by him on the floor of the Legislature of this province at the time.

Rev. Dr. Bryce then moved, seconded by Mr. Brophy, as an amendment:

"That the Chancellor name a committee to consider the matter, with instructions to report on Thursday, the 5th December next, at the general meeting of the council."

The amendment, having been put, was lost.

The main motion was then put, and carried on the following division:—

YEAS:

Rev. Prof. Hart, Mr. Goggin, Mr. Mulock, Mr. Wade, Archd. Fortin, Rev. Dr. Sparling, Prof. Kenrick, Hon. Chief Justice Taylor, Dr. Gray, Dr. Corbett, Rev. Mr. Baird, Prof. Laird, Mr. Pitblado, Dr. Jones, Mr. Aikins, Rev. Canon O'Meara, Rev. Dr. Bryce.—17.

NAYS:

The Vice-Chancellor, Hon. Mr. Prendergast, Rev. Mr. Cherrier, Rev. Father Lory, Rev. Mr. Cloutier, Mr. Brophy, and T. A. Bernier.—7.

The Vice-Chancellor then submitted the following report :

The committee on the patent of the university lands beg to report :

That at a meeting thereof they passed the following resolution on a division :

That the committee do not approve of the patent from the Crown as at present submitted, and that the committee do wait upon the Minister of the Interior with reference to the said patent and request the same to issue free from conditions.

That thereafter the committee, with the members of your committee who dissented from the said resolution, waited upon the Hon. the Minister of the Interior, when he was in this city, and after a conference he expressed his desire that he be written to upon the subject of the university.

And that since then nothing further has been done.

All of which is submitted.

(Sgd.) J. DUBUC,
Chairman.

The report was then received and adopted on motion of Mr. Mulock, seconded by Canon O'Meara.

Mr. Mulock then moved, seconded by Mr. Wade :

That this council do submit that the letters patent from the Crown for the lands granted by the Dominion Government should be issued without any restrictive conditions.

This motion having been put, it was carried on the following division :—

YEAS :

The Chancellor, Rev. Prof. Hart, Mr. Goggin, Canon Coombs, Mr. Mulock, Mr. Wade, Canon Matheson, Archd. Fortin, Rev. S. Sparling, Prof. Kenrick, Rev. Dr. King, Rev. A. B. Baird, Hon. Chief Justice Taylor, Dr. Gray, Prof. Laird, Mr. Pitblado, Dr. Jones, Canon O'Meara, Rev. Dr. Bryce, Dean Grisdale.—20.

NAYS :

The Vice-Chancellor, Rev. Father Lory, Rev. Mr. Chevrier, Rev. Mr. Clouthier, Hon. Mr. Prendergast, Mr. Brophy, T. A. Bernier.—7.

It was then moved by Mr. Goggin, seconded by Rev. Prof. Hart, and carried :

That copies of the resolution moved by Mr. Wade, and also the resolution moved by Mr. Mulock at to-day's meeting, be transmitted to the Hon. the Minister of the Interior.

It was then moved by Mr. Mulock, seconded by Mr. Wade and carried :

That, whereas it has been represented that the grant of the endowment of 150,000 acres of land to the University of Manitoba was a part of what is commonly known as the "Better Terms Act of 1885," as a result of which the Government of this province would be interested in the same :

Therefore it is resolved that the registrar of the university do transmit to the Hon. the Attorney General of this province, copies of the report of the land committee made to this council this day with the documents attached, together with copies of the resolutions of Mr. Wade and Mr. Mulock passed this day.

At a subsequent meeting the following letters were read :—

ST. BONIFACE, Dec. 27, 1889.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON, Minister of Justice.

HON. SIR,—Very likely you have received a copy of the resolutions passed by the majority of the council of the University of Manitoba with the object of making it a teaching body ; also the objections taken to my letter addressed to you August last.

Likely you have also received affidavits purporting to refute any assertions with regard to the original intent, at the time, of the founders of the university.

To this I reply that I emphatically maintain that the position I took at the outset is exactly the one I mentioned in my letter to you. I myself suggested that the words "on the model of the University of London" be inserted in the preamble, and the Act would contain the clause: "There shall be no professorship or teachership in the university."

I never knew that the words "at present" had been inserted within just now cited clause ; but after it was too late to remedy the assertion.

I would never have consented that the College of St. Boniface should join and become an integral part of a university in which teaching would be imparted without any control which could protect the students of our college on their religious belief.

As far as I am concerned, and in the face of the resolution adopted by the majority of the council, (when sickness prevented me from being present), I declare that I have nothing to retract from what I have written to you.

His Lordship, the Bishop of Rupert's Land objects to the sentence of my letter which says : "The Bill was discussed and adopted at the meetings of the representatives of the three colleges."

Naturally His Lordship knows better than I, what was done at St. John's College, and I respectfully accept his version. The opinion I expressed with regard to this was the result of several conversations I had in 1876 and 1877 with His Honour the then Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, Hon. Mr. Morris. It was he who urged upon me the advisability of joining with the two other colleges, to secure a university in Manitoba, giving me to understand that the said two colleges had meetings of their own on the subject. I, at first, declined the proposition, my insurmountable objection being in regard to teaching. His Honour insisted, then I told him that I was exceedingly anxious to go as far as possible to meet the views and desires of the other colleges, that having no experience myself in university matters (there being no university in my native land when I left for missions), I would consult and study the whole subject.

I went to Quebec, in 1876, with no other object than to confer with other Bishops and see what I could do to harmonize my great desire of removing any obstacles to the university with the sacred obligations of my position as spiritual guide of my people.

In Quebec I saw a calendar of the University of London ; I studied the principal features of the institution and satisfied myself that I could allow the College of St. Boniface to join the desired University of Manitoba, provided that the teaching of our students would remain entirely under our control. I returned to Manitoba, informed His Honour of my willingness, insisting that the functions of the university would be limited to the examining of candidates for degrees and the granting of such degrees. The University of Manitoba was created. The new institution received congratulations from many distinguished personages; it was considered a marvel of liberality and goodwill on the part of all those who had contributed to its establishment. Our dear young university has already done a great deal of good and has been a source of enjoyment to its members. I have no doubt but it would have continued being so, if the principle of the constitution had been preserved. Unfortunately the equilibrium is disturbed; the classical affiliated colleges have lost the security of their autonomy; in the near future their own teaching may be disregarded. The council of the university itself has prepared the loss of its own control; political influences are getting hold of the result of our work and sacrifices for the twelve last years. Nobody knows what can be expected within the twelve next months or after.

In the "whereas" of the resolutions, great strength is attached to certain affidavits with regard to the action of Mr. Royal. Surely, the statements of the hon. gentleman himself, concerning his own action on the matter, has more authority than the statement of others who know less than he does. Therefore I draw your particular attention to the letter Mr. Royal wrote to me on the 30th November last, of which I annex a copy marked (A).

The letter speaks for itself and fully corroborates my statement.

You may observe in the report of the meeting of the council of the university of the 23rd November that a motion of Rev. Dr. Bryce to appoint a committee was defeated. That motion would have permitted the committee to ascertain what Mr. Royal would say of the affidavit alluded to in the resolutions, and myself could have explained more fully our position. Consequently the council with the help of new information, might have arrived at a different conclusion. Unfortunately it was otherwise decided and the Catholic being in the minority in the council could do nothing but to register their votes against the measure.

It is painful to observe that the liberality of the Canadian Government in the granting of lands is causing unpleasantness among the members of our university.

With profound respect,

I remain,

Your obedient servant,

† ALEXANDER,

Archbishop of St. Boniface, O.M.I.

At a meeting of the University Council, held on July 31st, 1891 :

After considerable discussion it was moved by Dr. Duval, and seconded by Mr. J. H. Ashdown :

"That this council reaffirm the resolution of November 22nd, 1889, viz. : That this council do submit that the letters patent from the Crown for the lands granted by the Dominion Government should be issued without any restrictive conditions," and request the authorities to grant our prayer, and that the acting Registrar request the Chancellor to forward this resolution to the Minister of the Interior.

It was moved in amendment by Mr. Prendergast, seconded by Mr. Brophy, that this meeting do now rise.

MR. MARTIN.

This amendment having been put, it was lost. The original motion being then put, it was carried.

That is the present position of this matter. What is contended by the Government of Manitoba and by the university is this : This is not a grant of lands made by the Dominion Government to the University of Manitoba, but the lands go to the university as a part of a settlement made between the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba. In 1885, and prior thereto, there was a great deal of feeling and a great deal of agitation in the province of Manitoba as to the position of that province in Confederation. It was claimed that we should have our lands. Various other claims were made. It was claimed that we were placed in an unfair position in comparison with other provinces, in regard to our financial arrangements. The result of that agitation and discussion was that time and time again members of the executive of Manitoba came to Ottawa and discussed these questions with the Dominion Government. At last, in this statute 48 and 49 Victoria, chap. 50, a settlement was arrived at. A statute was passed by this Parliament, and a similar statute by the Legislature of Manitoba, providing that instead of the lands of the province being handed over to us, $100,000 per annum should be given to us as an additional money grant, in lieu of our lands being given to us; and 150,000 acres of land were to be transferred to the University of Manitoba. Therefore, the question is one entirely between the Government of Manitoba and the Dominion Government. Of course, as the University of Manitoba is to be the recipient of this land grant, and as it is very much in need of funds, the university authorities have been active parties in attempting to obtain from the Dominion a transfer of this grant. The Archbishop of St. Boniface seems to think that the land grant is made, not to the university, but to the colleges which compose the university. He claims that there is a likelihood of a change being made in the constitution of the university, and he contends that if that change is made, any lands remaining should revert to the Dominion Government, and any moneys received from the sale of those lands should be paid over by the University of Manitoba to the Dominion Government; and I understand, although it does not appear clearly from this correspondence which I have read to the House, that it is contended by His Grace that then that land grant and those moneys should be divided among the College of St. Boniface, St. John's College and Knox College, the three original constituents of the university. Now, the Dominion Government have undertaken to adopt the suggestions of the Archbishop, and they have proposed to issue patents for the land grant, with conditions in the patents, carrying out the Archbishop's proposition. The University of Manitoba refuses to receive the land grant on those conditions, and the Government of Manitoba refuses to allow the university land grant to be handed over in that way. It is not for the Dominion Government to interfere in any way, shape or manner with the action of the Provincial Legislature on this subject. In the settlement that was made in 1885 it was not at all intended to hand over to the Dominion Government the jurisdiction which of right the Provincial Legislature would have over the university created by itself. I do not think that for the purpose I have now in hand, it is very material to consider whether the Archbishop's understanding of what occurred, and his version of it given in these letters is the correct one, or whether the university council's understanding of what occurred is correct. That is a matter that will be proper to be argued before the Legislature itself when it comes to consider the question of altering the constitution of the university. If there was any agreement or understanding between the College of St. Boniface and the other colleges, when the university was established in 1877, it is no doubt the duty of the Legislature of Manitoba to pay respect to that agreement; but the place to urge that agreement and the place to enforce it is in that Legislature. The people of Manitoba will not allow the Dominion Government—and I fancy that if the Dominion Government understood the circumstances they would not undertake—to assume any jurisdiction in settling a question of this kind. It is surely a matter of provincial control. But in a sense the Dominion Government have not only undertaken to interfere in the question, but they have undertaken to decide it in favour of the contentions of His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface. The land in question has been selected at an expense of some thousands of dollars. The agents of the University of Manitoba have selected the 150,000 acres of land which has been pointed out to them by the Department of the Interior as being available for this purpose, and nearly five years ago the university authorities came to the Government of Canada, and said: We want our lands; we desire you to transfer to us the lands to which we are entitled under this statute. The Dominion Government have refused to transfer those lands. They have in the first place inserted in the form of patent conditions which were suggested by His Grace the Archbishop according to his understanding of the arrangement made at the time the university was brought into existence. In doing that, they have, I say, undertaken to interfere in a matter over which they have no control, with which they have nothing whatever to do. They have undertaken to decide the question in favour of one of the parties to the dispute. I have not read here to-day the letters that have been written from time to time by the Government of Manitoba to the Dominion Government; but they were to this effect. They have repeatedly asserted the claim of the province that these lands should be handed over to the province at once, and without any restriction whatever. In the face of all these facts, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly) said to me the other day that the patent for these lands was not issued because there was a dispute in connection with the matter. Under these circumstances, I thought it right, in the interests of the province, to bring before this House a real statement of the facts in the matter. And you will see, Sir, that there is no dispute whatever, unless this Government undertake to say that they have the right to interfere in matters connected with that university. Of course, it might be possible that, if the Government of Canada, of its own free will, were making a present to the University of Manitoba and intended that present to apply to that university as it existed at the time the offer was made—there might be some contention that the Government here would have the right to inquire into objections urged by one of the constituent members of that university. But, as I have endeavoured to point out, that is not at all the fact in this matter. The grant of 150,000 acres of land is not a gratuity from the Dominion to the University of Manitoba. It is part and parcel of a solemn settlement embodied in two statutes—a statute of the Dominion and a statute of Manitoba—a settlement of long-standing disputes between the Dominion and the province of Manitoba. This, I say, is one of the clauses in that settlement, and is something which the province of Manitoba has a right to insist upon, and does insist upon. Therefore, I claim that the Government of Canada by refusing to issue a patent for these lands, until these disputes between the different colleges are settled, are taking a course which is not justified under the circumstances. The plain duty of the Government is to carry out the provisions of the statute. Let me again read the statute in question, and that, I submit, is all that the Government of Canada have anything whatever to do with, remembering the circumstances under which the statute was passed, remembering that it is not an ordinary statute passed by this Parliament, but a statute passed in pursuance of a solemn agreement. I claim that the Government of Canada would have as much right to break one of the clauses of the Canadian Pacific Railway charters as to break one of the clauses of this agreement. In both cases, it is a mere statute of this Parliament, which Parliament no doubt can repeal, as it can any of its statutes. Parliament could no doubt quite constitutionally repeal any or all of the provisions of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. There is nothing to prevent such repeal, except that it would be against the honour and dignity of Canada. For the same reason, this being a statute passed in pursuance of a solemn bargain entered into with one of the provinces of the Dominion, it is as much against the honour and dignity of Canada to refuse to obey its provisions as to refuse to obey the provisions of the contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Let me read again the clause of the statute, which is very brief :

An allotment of land, not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres of fair average quality, shall be selected by the Dominion Government and granted as an endowment to the University of Manitoba for its maintenance as a university, capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education, and to be held in trust for that purpose on some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Dominion Government.

That shows on the face of it, that the university was intended to give training. But that is not the question for this House to consider. It is not for us to discuss whether this university should be a mere examining or a teaching body. That is a question entirely for the Legislature of Manitoba to deal with. What the statute provides is that there shall be a trust, on some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by this Government. It has been framed by the university and approved by the Dominion Government, and I would like to know, on behalf of Manitoba and the University of Manitoba, why the Dominion Government have for five long years refused and neglected to issue the patents for these lands, and why they to-day refuse and neglect to issue those patents ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. member might well ask why we have refused to issue the patents for these lands, seeing that we have never done so. And I think that the hon. gentleman, considering that the university whose cause he has espoused, has waited for upwards of four years apparently, without a line of communication on the subject, need not have been in such great haste this afternoon in bringing the matter before the House that he could not even give the ordinary notice that he intended bringing it up on the motion to go into Supply. As far as I am concerned, I have seen nothing of the correspondence for four years and upwards, and as far as the Minister of the Interior is concerned, he has never heard of the subject, so that the intense anxiety exhibited on this subject seems to be confined to the hon. member for Winnipeg himself. I submit to him, as well as to members throughout the House, that courtesy to the House, if not to the Government, required that he should at least have mentioned the subject before bringing it to the notice of the House on going into Committee of Supply, seeing that we have not had the subject brought to our attention for so long a time that we are not in a position to tell the House this afternoon what has transpired with regard to it in recent years at all. But the documents the hon. gentleman read refreshed my memory to a certain extent, though under the circumstances, of course, I speak from memory alone. The various denominations having colleges in the province of Manitoba, happily, it was thought, after grave deliberation, agreed upon a scheme for forming a university. The liberality of sentiment prevailing was such that these colleges, although mostly, if not altogether denominational, were able to agree upon terms of union. They were to be affiliated—this was the representation made, at any rate, on behalf of one of the colleges—in a university planned on the scheme of the London University, and, as a matter of course, it was to be an examining and not a teaching university. One thing is perfectly clear, that a union could not have been formed—and an affiliation of these colleges could not have been formed—if any system of teaching was to be established there. But they agreed to sink all differences in that way, and the Dominion Government agreed to recommend, and Parliament finally passed, an Act—in view of the harmony which had brought these bodies together—granting 150,000 acres of land as an endowment to the college. I deny that the Provincial Government has anything to do with the subject under discussion now. We have to deal with the university itself—with the corporation claiming the lands for itself ; and so far as I am aware, or so far as my memory serves me, the province of Manitoba has yet to put the first line on paper with regard to the subject. I take it for granted that, when the hon. gentleman undertook to speak for his province, if his province had any correspondence or communication on the subject, he would have read it this afternoon. The House will observe that the lands were to be selected by the Dominion Government, and were to be granted “as an endowment to the University of Manitoba for its maintenance as a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education, and to be held for that purpose on some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Dominion Government.” The hon. gentleman has assured us that the basis has been adopted by the university. So far as I am aware it has never been approved by the Dominion Government. If the hon. gentleman has among the documents a copy of any document expressing the Dominion Government's approval of the scheme on which these lands were to be held or administered, I think he ought to produce it.

Mr. MARTIN. I did.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman says he did. I did not hear it, certainly. I did not hear any Order in Council or any communication from a Minister on that subject.

Mr. LAUREIR. That is the complaint—there has been no Order in Council.

Mr. MARTIN. Of course, the papers were long and the hon. gentleman might easily get confused. The reason why I said that the Dominion Government had approved this basis is that the Department of the Interior sent to the university a form of patent in which it was recited that the basis had been adopted by the university and agreed to by the Dominion Government. So I took it for granted that that approval had been given.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If that is all I was right in stating that no scheme in regard to administration of these lands had ever been confirmed by the approval of the Dominion Government. Whether we were to blame for that or not is another matter.

Mr. LISTER. The draft patent shows that the approval had been given.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The draft patent is not a patent executed, and the recital of such approval instead of being a decision is simply a proposal to the board of the university asking them if they are willing to accept a patent which would embody these conditions, and, if they had accepted the conditions, of course it would be proper to engross the patent with that recital in it, namely, that the scheme had been approved by the Dominion Government, and the patent would have been executed accordingly. To say that we presented a draft proposing certain conditions, which conditions, if adopted, should form a scheme and be approved by the Dominion Government, is quite a different thing from asserting that the scheme or basis on which these lands were to be held in trust had been approved by the Dominion Government. Now, when the statute of the province regulating the university came to be passed the representative of one of the bodies interested discovered that, instead of being such a university as had been deliberately agreed upon by the managers of the college, it was one that could not be agreed to, namely, there was to be a teaching body and not a body only for the administration of the education of the colleges affiliated with it. Under these circumstances a remonstrance came from His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface. What was done? The hon. gentleman says we thereupon refused to convey these lands, and thereby violated the good faith to be observed by the agreement. We did not do so. What we did was to transmit to the governing body of the university the remonstrance of His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface and a draft of patent embodying his views. And I admit that the conditions of the patent would meet his views, and with that purpose in view we made this offer to fill up the patent to the university on these terms. It was simply a draft. There was no decision on the subject, and it was sent with His Grace the Archbishop's remonstrance with a view to seeing what the authorities of the university had to say with regard to his remonstrance and to the conditions inserted in the patent. The meeting to consider that was not held till 22nd November, 1889, although, as the hon. gentleman says, the Act with regard to that subject was passed in 1885.

Mr. MARTIN. In 1886.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was assented to on the 20th of July, 1885. I do not think there was any very great urgency down to that moment, and, so far as I know, I have not yet seen, officially or otherwise, the resolutions which were adopted by the governing board of the university. The hon. Minister of the Interior informs me that they have not been brought to his notice down to the present time. It was a case, as the Minister of the Interior stated the other day, in which the action of the Government in making a grant had been stayed in consequence of a grave dispute arising touching the organization of the university, it being alleged that the scheme on which the various colleges had agreed to affiliate had been completely departed from, and a university of a different character formed, and that words had been adopted in the English version of a statute which were not in the French version and which materially modified the intention of the Legislature in that regard. From that time it has remained without action on our part, simply because there was no further request on the part of the university and because there was reason to hope and expect that by renewal of mutual consideration the whole subject could be disposed of through the prevalence of harmony between the bodies concerned—the affiliated colleges. Whether that has been successful or not I am not at this moment aware.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, it is manifest in this discussion that we are in the presence of another example of that procrastination which is so prevalent in some branches of the Government, and which has been so detrimental to the best interests of this country. The question now before the House came before the Government for solution at least five years ago. Having undertaken to settle it at that time the Government found certain difficulties between interested parties in the board of the University of Manitoba, and, instead of taking a course one way or the other, they pigeon-holed the papers, and these have been lying under the accumulating dust for five years. The facts, as I understand them, are very simple. The University of Manitoba was organized in 1877. At that time, or at some other time, the University of Manitoba became entitled to a grant of 150,000 acres of land from this Government. Application was made for that grant as far back as 1889. But at that time His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface urged upon the Government certain objections. So far as I understand, he did not object to the issue of the patents if they were issued upon certain conditions which he urged upon the Government. Thereupon, very properly his objections were referred to the council of the university, and a correspondence took place which elicited the fact that between the Archbishop of St. Boniface and some other members of the university there was a difference of opinion. One thing is clear to me, and that is that when the Bill to create this university was proposed in the Legislature of Manitoba it was the intention of the promoter of the Bill that the university should be an examining body and not a teaching body. Another thing is equally clear and manifest, and that is that when the Bill became law this feature of the Bill had not been maintained, for, under the Bill as passed, it was provided that the university was not to be an examining body, but a teaching body. How that occurred is not very clear. Mr. Royal, who was at that time Attorney General, and who was in charge of the Bill, said that the change was probably made in committee; at all events, it was made without his knowledge or consent. I am not now going into that matter, but I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to this fact. When this difficulty occurred between the Archbishop of St. Boniface and the council of the university, and when it was referred to him, it was his business, it was his duty, and it was the duty of the Government, to come to some decision upon the question. The University of Manitoba is entitled to these lands, as to that there can be no doubt; and when they press upon the Government to issue the patents, they are within their rights. Now, I am not prepared at this moment to say that the patents should be issued without any condition at all, as is claimed by the university, nor am I prepared to say whether they should be issued only upon the condition made by the Archbishop of St. Boniface. That is a question as to which I could not at this moment offer any opinion at all; but at all events, I say that it is the duty of the Government to come to some decision. Why, Sir, for five years, have this Government delayed action, because the hon. gentleman admits that for five years neither himself nor the Minister of the Interior have given any attention to this matter. It was a gross dereliction of duty on their part to allow five years to pass without coming to any decision. I am not prepared, for my part, to agree with everything that has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg. For instance, if I understood him aright, he said that the Government had decided in favour of the Archbishop's contention. I do not think there was anything of the kind. It seems to me that the Government did at first intend to decide in favour of the pretension of the Archbishop, because the draft of the patent sent out to the council of the university contained a disposition which was evidently meant to meet the views entertained by the Archbishop; but they do not seem to have carried out their intention, and from that moment did nothing. Without deciding either in favour of one party or the other, the Government allowed the matter to rest for five long years. Now, it is not extraordinary that my hon. friend should come to this House and should take this opportunity of speaking in favour of the University of Manitoba, and ask for a decision in the matter. I say again that it is the bounden duty of the Government to give a decision; they must issue these letters patent, either with the condition claimed by the University of Manitoba, or with the condition claimed by the Archbishop of St. Boniface. But now the hon. gentleman says that because there is a contention between the two parties, they must wait for a decision until they have effected a reconciliation between them. I think that where the University of Manitoba and the Archbishop of St. Boniface disagree upon a question of fact, for it is a mere question of fact—it is hardly probable that they can become reconciled; but, at all events, whether they become reconciled or not, it is the duty of the Government to come to some decision on this matter, and not let it sleep for ever because the parties do not agree. Why, Sir, can you imagine a more lame excuse than the one given by the Government for delaying action upon this matter? Because the two parties cannot agree upon one thing, the Government are to let this important question remain pending for ever, or until they come to some agreement. What is the business and the duty of the Government? It is to administer the laws of the country. Here is a law upon the Statute-book compelling them to do a certain thing, and until they do that certain thing they are deserving the censure of this House.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot speak a second time.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot do that, either.

Mr. MARTIN. I will get an opportunity later.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not object to the hon. gentleman's speaking again. I do not suppose he will speak at any great length. I may say before he begins that since I spoke, my colleague has obtained a file of the papers, and I see that the scheme for the administration of the land was approved at the time the draft patent was transmitted, in 1891.

Mr. MARTIN. I am satisfied that must be so; at any rate, the university have always taken that view, and if it had not been so, I fancy the Government would be open to censure for allowing the question to stand so long without settling it. In 1889, the university made a draft, and on the 14th of January sent it to the Government for the consideration of the Government, and on the 30th July, 1889, they received from the Department of the Interior a letter offering a form of patent in which it was stated that the basis laid down by the university had been adopted by Order in Council; and I would be very much surprised indeed if the hon. the First Minister had not found out, as he has found out, that the Order in Council was duly passed, approving of the basis laid down by the University of Manitoba. The statute provides that the basis on which the lands were to be held is to be adopted by the university, and approved by the Dominion Government. That basis was adopted in 1889, and was approved by the Dominion Government in 1889, and the form of the patent was sent by the Government to the university authorities on the 30th July, 1889, reciting those facts; so that the university, from that time forward, have considered that matter a dead issue, and the only thing that has delayed the issue of the patent, is this new point raised by His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface. Now, Mr. Speaker, the First Minister found fault with me for bringing this subject before the House without proper notice. I would like, under the circumstances, to say why I brought it before the House in this way. I had given notice of a motion for all papers in connection with this matter. That notice has been on the paper for a week or two, the Government have had full opportunity of reading it, and if they were not acquainted with the facts in connection with it, they would naturally look them up. Not only had I that motion on the paper, but I asked the Minister of the Interior a question over a week ago, before vacation, I think, and he stated in answer that the reason why the patent had not been issued was that there was a dispute in the matter. Under these circumstances, the Government knew that I was going to bring this matter up. The fact that last Monday the Government went through the Order paper, disposing of all these notices, amongst which was this particular matter, in a very peremptory manner, when many members of the House could not conveniently be here, does not place the Government in a position to complain of a lack of courtesy on the part of any member if he takes this opportunity, the only one left him, to bring the matter before the House. I may say that since I have been here I have not experienced an excess of courtesy from the members of the Government, particularly in connection with the tariff. I have had occasion, in connection with the tariff, to bring several matters of a purely non-partisan character before the consideration of the Minister of Finance, and I must say that I have received the gruffest answers from that hon. gentleman. In fact, on one occasion, when I brought a matter before him for consideration, he commenced in a low tone of voice to give forth something which was apparently intended for a witticism, because it was laughed at by those near him, but which I could not even hear. Those are the kind of answers I have got from the Government, and yet the hon. leader of the House complains that I am not treating them with sufficient courtesy. If I have not done so, it is perhaps because I have not felt that they have shown any particular courtesy towards myself. But I think, under the circumstances, I have done all I could be expected to do; I have given them every reasonable notice that this question was to be brought to their attention. The First Minister insinuates, in fact plainly states, that the University of Manitoba do not care anything about this matter, and that I have brought it up presumably for political effect, on my own motion. I can say that that is an entirely gratuitous assertion on the part of the Minister. I have here copies of the documents which were sent to me by the University of Manitoba for the very purpose of bringing this matter to the consideration of this House. It seems a very strange inference for the First Minister to draw, that although in a solemn way in 1889 the university sent to him or to his Government, or to the then Government, a statement in which they said that they refused emphatically to accept the condition proposed to be placed on the patents, he had heard nothing of it. Then the university took up the investigation in a solemn way in 1891, on 31st July. After considerable discussion it was moved by Rev. Mr. Duval, who is an eminent Presbyterian clergyman in our city, seconded by Mr. Ashdown, one of our leading merchants, in the terms I have already read. An amendment was submitted, which was lost. In pursuance of that resolution the Chancellor forwarded to the Government a copy of that particular resolution. Then the hon. gentleman said he never heard of any claim being made by the province of Manitoba in connection with this matter, and he added that if I had any letters in connection with it, no doubt I would have had them here and have read them. There is no doubt whatever that the province of Manitoba has in the most emphatic and formal manner addressed the Government in writing, if I mistake not has addressed the hon. gentleman himself, and have demanded a fulfilment of the contract contained in the statutes to which I have referred. The hon. gentleman will find not one but several letters.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No such letter was sent to me.

Mr. MARTIN. I am not positive about that, but it was sent to the Government, and was sent probably to the Minister of the Interior. The resolution passed on 22nd November, 1889, in which the university refused to accept the conditions, was at once communicated to the Local Government of Manitoba by the university authorities. I was then a member of the Local Government, and I was the particular Minister whose department had to deal with the matter, and I myself wrote, at the instance of the Government of Manitoba, a very strong letter to the Government of Canada backing up the contention of the university, and demanding as a right the immediate issue of this patent without any conditions whatever. So the hon. Minister is mistaken all round in his facts. He has proved himself to be so as regards his assertions, but all the statements which I have made the hon. gentleman will find to be correct on making inquiry in the proper department. The hon. gentleman thinks that we have been slow in this matter, because from 20th July, 1885, nothing was done until 22nd November, 1889. There was some delay undoubtedly, but it arose from the impossibility of getting the Department of the Interior to act. Why should the hon. gentleman talk about delay arising in connection with this matter? In my experience, both as a private member and as a member of the Government, weeks and months elapsed before we were able to obtain an answer to an ordinary letter sent to the Department of the Interior. So soon as the University of Manitoba became entitled to these lands, the authorities immediately set to work to have them selected. They sent communication after communication to the Department of the Interior. They caught the Minister as he passed to and fro, and they interviewed him. They came to the Local Government and obtained a grant of $4,000 for the purpose of paying the cost of inspection, and it took them with all their zeal, having to work with an institution like the Department of the Interior, which moves so slowly, until 1889 to make a selection of their land. The selection having been made, they expected to have the land granted by patent. But no less than four years and a half have elapsed since the contention was put forward by His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface to which reference has been made, and we are still without the patent, and the Minister of Justice says he has done nothing because he has heard nothing of it. He mentions that we have been so very quiet. What does the hon. gentleman expect us to do? Does he expect the council of the university to be again called together and another resolution passed setting forth that the university still adheres to the ground it took on a previous occasion? It is his duty, and the duty of the Government, as has been pointed out by the leader of the Opposition, to do something, and to deal with this matter, and the hon. gentleman may think I am simply bringing this question forward for some purpose of my own, but I can tell him that the council of the Manitoba University includes the leading people of the province, and that they are at my back, and fairly so. The contention we make is a fair one, that the Government are bound to issue these patents. At all events, as the leader of the Opposition has said, they are bound to come to some decision. Let us know their decision. It is very strange that they should attempt to get out of the difficulty by casting blame on the university authorities, and saying that the whole matter has been delayed. Again, it is said that there has been delay of four years, and now the matter is brought before this House without notice. The hon. gentleman, however, has now all the facts before him, he can refresh his memory on the subject, he can look up the letters of the Local Government; and I hope all these matters will be brought before his mind, and that he will arrive at a conclusion in the premises, and announce his intention, either of standing by the position of His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, and refusing to issue the patents except on the terms suggested, or of handing over the lands free of conditions, as the department should have done long ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Justice in the course of his remarks in reply to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, laid down a principle which was certainly not very generally attended to by his own friends on former occasions. As a matter of courtesy when a motion is to be made on going into Committee of Supply, notice thereof is given to the Government. That I think is a reasonable proposition, but I may remind the hon. gentleman, and remind some of the older members of the House that in the case of the Administration of which I had the honour to be a member some years ago, that formality was not by any manner of means regularly attended to. I may also remind the hon. gentleman that it is the unquestionable right of every member of the House, on the motion to go into Committee of Supply, to state any complaint or grievance he may have to ventilate; nor can a Minister in the slightest degree reflect on any member of the House, on either side of it, who chooses to avail himself of the opportunity which our forms give us for thus ventilating complaints and grievances. As to the particular question in hand, it appears to me that my hon. friend is perfectly right in saying that the Government ought to have made up its mind and given an answer, yea or nay, to this question. If it is the desire of an hon. member to make a statement, and follow it up with a motion and a vote, there is a good deal to be said in favour of giving notice, and I am disposed as a matter of parliamentary etiquette and courtesy to adhere to that rule, but as regards such a question as the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) has brought up, there is no procedure and no rule. It has been held, and I hope it will always be held, to be within the province of a member who has a grievance of any kind to state it to the House before it proceeds to vote supplies to the Government, nor do I think objection can well be taken to such a proceeding.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not contend that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) had not the right to bring up the subject as he has done, or that he was out of order in doing so. What I pointed out was, that as a matter of courtesy to the House when he undertook to bring forward a grievance in respect of which nothing had passed during three or four years, he should have at least mentioned it the night before, in order, not that we should evade the attack or answer it, because that is not a matter of any consequence, but that we might be able to give information to the House on the whole subject. If it is not a matter of courtesy, and if the rule is not to be observed as a matter of courtesy, let it be so. If this is to be a departure from the rule which the leader of the hon. member from South Oxford, with his usual courtesy, has observed ever since I came into this House; let us understand it. And if the excuse on this occasion is, that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) did not get along well with the hon. Minister of Finance in discussing the tariff, or if it is to be a matter of retaliation on us for something that took place sixteen years ago, when the country had their experience of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), then the country and the House will be able to understand it.

Sir RICHARD CARTHRIGHT. I trust, Mr. Speaker, I may be permitted to say a word, as the right hon. the First Minister has spoken twice. The hon. gentleman has misstated my point altogether. I admit that as a matter of courtesy, when you are going to make a motion on going into Supply, notice should be given. But I flatly deny that on such matters as my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) has brought up, it is either the custom or at all necessary to give notice. My hon. friend (Mr. Martin) has merely stated a grievance without following it up by a motion, and there is no reason at all why notice of that should be given. It may not be possible to give notice in a great many cases, and it is simply a question for the hon. gentleman who has the grievance whether he does give notice or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If he does not want the information, then, of course, he need not give notice.

Mr. MARTIN. I had that motion on the paper for a couple of weeks.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That has nothing to do with the present question.

Mr. DALY. If any person has a grievance in this matter it is myself. As Minister of the Interior, under whose department this matter comes, it would seem to me that if the university authorities of Manitoba are so anxious to have this matter brought to a conclusion, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) would lead us to understand, it is a singular thing that although I have occupied the position of Minister of the Interior for nearly eighteen months, I have never had a communication from the authorities of the University of Manitoba or from any person on their behalf in reference to this matter. In addition to that, during my incumbency of this office, I have been in Winnipeg on three special occasions and neither the university authorities nor any person on their behalf, has approached me with reference to this matter. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) intended to have brought up this matter to-day he should have given notice of it in order that I might have the papers with me so as to show what position the matter occupies so far as the records of the department go. In contradistinction to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has said with reference to this being urgent, I find, that instead of its being pressed upon the department, that the last communication that was had from the university authorities or any person on their behalf on this subject, is a letter from His Lordship the Bishop of Rupert's Land, dated November, 1891. From that day to this, no communication has been had between the university authorities or any person on their behalf, and the Department of the Interior in reference to the issue of patents for these lands. Nearly three years have elapsed since they communicated with the department at all. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has said, that he had a notice on the Order paper, and he complained of the Government rushing the paper through. The Order paper was in the hands of the House, and by the agreement that was made between the leader of the House and the leader of the Opposition, all notices were dropped unless by the consent of the House they were allowed to stand.

Mr. LAURIER. There was no arrangement between us. They would drop under the rule of the House.

Mr. DALY. Well, it is the rule of the House that they should drop when those in charge of them were not present. No distinction was made between any hon. gentlemen in this House with regard to dropping the motions, and if the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) had been attending to his duties he would have had an opportunity of discussing this question.

Mr. MARTIN. The notices were not all dropped.

Mr. DALY. They were all dropped but one. The hon. gentleman states that the Government of Manitoba are interested in this matter. I take issue with him on the grounds stated by the Minister of Justice, and I think the clear reading of section 2 of chapter 50, 48-49 Victoria. "Act for the final settlement of claims made by the province of Manitoba on the Dominion," will establish to the mind of any person reading it, that the Government of Manitoba are not to be considered in this matter in any way at all. It states there, that the 150,000 acres of land of fair average quality was to be selected by the Dominion Government and granted as endowment to the University of Manitoba for its maintenance as a university, and that it was to be held in trust for that purpose. It was not to be held by the Manitoba Government, but by the university authorities in trust, and not by the university authorities until the patents had issued, and it clearly seems to me that the patents would be issued by the Dominion Government to the university upon the trust mentioned in this section of the Act. But it appears that away back in the year 1890, when the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) was the Attorney General for Manitoba, he directed, not two or three communications, or not half a dozen communications, as he would give the House to understand, but he addressed one communication to the Department of the Interior upon that matter. That communication was dated the 2nd of January, 1890, and it contained a protest on behalf of the Government of Manitoba against the restrictions in the patents of these lands. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has complained of the dilatoriness of the Department of the Interior, and he said that it took weeks and even months to get an acknowledgment of that letter.

Mr. MARTIN. I did not say that.

Mr. DALY. I beg your pardon, you said that it took weeks and months to get even a reply.

Mr. MARTIN. For some letters, but not for that one.

Mr. DALY. Well, the only letter that the hon. gentleman ever directed to the Department of the Interior in this matter is dated the 2nd of January, 1890, and was acknowledged by the department on the 10th of January, 1890, which was not a very great delay, seeing that it took three or four days for that letter to reach Ottawa from Winnipeg.

Mr. LAURIER. What was the answer?

Mr. DALY. The answer was simply an acknowledgment of the letter. What else could the hon. gentleman expect?

Mr. LAURIER. That is not a reply.

Mr. DALY. That is a reply. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) started out with the idea that the acknowledgments were even delayed. I take it, so far as the Government of Manitoba are concerned, that they are not interested in this matter, good, bad nor indifferent. It is a matter entirely between the Dominion Government and the University of Manitoba. What I stated to the hon. gentleman the other day, was perfectly correct: the reason the patents were not issued was on account of there being a dispute. Surely the hon. gentleman has testified to the fact of there being a dispute, by the record he has read here this afternoon. So far as the Department of the Interior is concerned, I assert that it is not blameable in this matter, any more than are the university authorities. If it is so urgent, if it is a matter that the university authorities are desirous of having cleared up, it is an extraordinary thing to me that no advances have been made to me as Minister, and that they have sent no communication to the department since I have been at its head. The matter never came to my notice as Minister of the Interior until the hon. gentleman's motion was placed on the paper, and I was prepared when his motion came up to discuss it. Now that it has been brought to my attention, I will see that it is dealt with by the Government in a manner that will be, no doubt, satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) has made a statement to-day in regard to this question that I do not think should be allowed to go without comment. He has stated broadly that it takes a long time to get a letter in reply to yours from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. MARTIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says "hear, hear," but let me point out to the House that if there is any truth in that statement it is easy enough to establish it, because all he had to do was to give an instance where letters were written and where no response came. That statement is of such a nature that it ought to be substantiated in that way or not be made at all, because how could a Minister of the Interior go before the public and answer a broad assertion of that kind? You ask the Minister to prove a negative. In order to disprove that statement the Minister would have to go over the whole correspondence of the Department of the Interior to show by the process of exhaustion that no particular letter had remained unanswered. The hon. member (Mr. Martin), I believe, used to instruct children in other times, and he, therefore, may be assumed to have that pedagogic smattering of education which belongs to his vocation. The hon. gentleman ought to know that no man, no Ministry, and no department, should be asked to prove a negative. Now, Sir, I am speaking for the department generally, not for any given Minister; but I must say, so far as my experience goes—and it extends not merely over seven years, but over some ten or twelve years, and is fortified by the experience of three or four western members of Parliament with whom I have conferred—that I have never found that department remiss in acknowledging letters, or in dealing with any questions that happened to be brought before it. Of course, I cannot go over the whole line of affairs which the Department of the Interior has to deal with; I cannot do what Aristotle says is impossible, namely, prove a negative; all I can say is that along that portion of the line which is covered by my experience, the statement of the hon. member is absolutely without foundation.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman is in a very different position from me; he is a humble follower of those gentlemen, while I am not.

Mr. DAVIN. I am very glad to know that I am not only a follower, but a humble follower.

Mr. MARTIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I am speaking of now, not of a couple of years ago.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman's interruption will not divert me from the argument I am making. I am dealing with a matter of fact. I say, whether I am now a humbler follower than I used to be, or whether I am the same as I always was, that neither now nor at any other time—and I think I echo the views of the hon. member for Eastern Assinibola, and I know I am expressing the opinion of his predecessor—in our dealings with the Department of the Interior, have seen the least foundation for the charge which has been made. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that this matter deserves to be regarded with a seriousness very far from the levity which my hon. friend would fain introduce into it. It is not merely a charge against the present Minister of the Interior, but it is a charge against his predecessors; it is a charge against the Deputy Minister, against the chief clerk, against the whole body of officers in that department; and it is a very grave charge. If there were any truth in the statement that questions and letters addressed to that department were treated with contumely and not replied to, it would be a very grave matter. Now, in dealing with this charge, I can only deal with probabilities. Here is a matter of the gravest possible importance to the province of Manitoba—the giving of 150,000 acres of land to endow a university. What is the hon. gentleman's suggestion?—because he does not give the charges. He is a lawyer, I believe, as well as an ex-professor. What would he say if a lawyer opposed to him were to go into court and make a vague charge against his client? Would not the first thing he would do be to insist that particulars should be given? Instead of giving particulars, the hon. gentleman comes here to-day and makes this general charge. Now, I want to point out the utter improbability of its being true; because I can only deal with probabilities. Here is one of the gravest charges that could be made against the Department of the Interior—not that any person wrote to the Department, and his letter was treated with contempt, but, as I understand, that the Government of Manitoba, or somebody connected with the Government of Manitoba, or some persons connected with the university—I heard the name of Mr. Ashdown mentioned—or some trustees of the university wrote to the department, and the communication was treated with contempt. Now, Sir, if a humble follower of the Government, as the hon. gentleman supposes me to be, has always been replied to, how much more would be those great and important personages?—a great statesman like the late leader of the hon. gentleman, Mr. Greenway, or the hon. gentleman himself, who, I believe, from the way he has described himself, would be the person to write? How much more likely would the hon. gentleman be to get a response from the present Minister of the Interior, or from any of his predecessors than a humble follower of the Government like myself? But I do not want to go on into the question. What I want to deal with is the utter impropriety of making a general charge without giving instances. That is wasting the time of this House, because there is no subject for us to discuss; you cannot possibly deal with it. It is like making a general charge against a man's character or against an institution. Where are you to join issue? There is no spot pointed to. The hon. gentleman has had experience in the Manitoba Legislature, as well as some experience here, and I do hope that as he becomes an older member of this House he will not again be guilty of such a grave indiscretion as to make a general charge without bringing forward a tittle of proof, and for which I do not believe a tittle of proof is to be had.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat in a discussion as to the propriety or impropriety of a charge, which he calls a general and sweeping charge, which he says was made against the Department of the Interior. That is altogether aside from the main question which the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) brought to the attention of the House, and which is undoubtedly a very important and grave question, fully worthy of our consideration. Now, Sir, I have only gathered the substance of what has taken place from the statement made by the hon. member for Winnipeg: but the conclusion that it left on my mind was very different from what it seems to have left on the mind of the hon. leader of the Opposition. It appears to me that the Government have decided this question, and the delay and difficulty has arisen because the University of Manitoba declines to take a patent in the only way in which this Government is willing to give a patent.

Mr. MARTIN. That is it exactly.

Mr. McCARTHY. And, therefore, the issue is with the province and the university demanding a patent in unfettered terms; and I think it is perfectly plain that the province and the university are entitled to have a patent in those terms, while this Government has arrogated to itself the right of saying: We will only grant you that patent fettered by terms and conditions, and if you do not choose to take it in that way you will not get it. Now, the hon. member states, and states properly, that this is the result of a solemn treaty made between the province of Manitoba and the Dominion Government. It is stated so on the face of the Act of Parliament:

The grants of land and payments authorized by the foregoing sections shall be made on the condition that they be accepted by the province (such an acceptance being testified by an Act of the Legislature of Manitoba) as a full settlement of all claims made by the said province for the reimbursement of costs incurred in the government of the disputed territory, or the reference of the boundary question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and all other questions and claims discussed between the Dominion and the Provincial Government, up to the tenth day of January, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five.

So here we have an agreement made which is equivalent to a treaty, and much higher therefore than the reference which the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) gave—a contract between the Government and a corporation, even if that corporation be the Canadian Pacific Railway. Here is a treaty between the two Governments for the settlement of disputes between them, and amongst other things this Government agreed to give 150,000 acres of land, which they were to select, as an endowment to the Manitoba University. That agreement was made in 1885, the selection was made within a reasonable time afterwards, and we find in 1889, the selection of land having been made, that the university demanded a patent. What happened then? His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface protested against the grant being made to the university, and after his protest was discussed by the council of the university, that council decided against the contention of His Grace. But His Grace then appealed to a quarter where apparently his influence has more weight than it has in the council of which he is a member, and the communication of His Grace was very properly forwarded by the authorities here to the university, in order that they might consider the whole question. They considered the whole matter, apparently in the presence of His Grace, and declined to accept either his contentions or conclusions. That decision was indicated to this Government, and the patent demanded. But this Government appear to have decided in favour of His Grace the Archbishop, and say the patent will only be granted, fettered by trusts and conditions on which the province and University of Manitoba decline to accept it. Now, on reading the section which has been read partly here, to my mind it is clear that there is no right on the part of this Government to interpose and decide this question adversely to the views of the province of Manitoba and the university. Both the province and the university agree. It might be a very difficult question if the province, which is a party to this bargain, and the university were at variance, but they are in perfect accord. They both insist that the patent shall go to the university unfettered by any conditions. Let us see now what right the authorities here have to burden the grant with any terms. The clause reads:

An allotment of land, not exceeding 150,000 acres of fair average quality, shall be selected by the Dominion Government and granted as an endowment to the University of Manitoba for its maintenance as a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education.

The university is to be not merely an examining body, but a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education, so that we may take for granted that there was then an Act of the Provincial Parliament defining the powers of the university, that the powers of the university had been settled prior to this arrangement, and it was with the university, as thus constituted, that the parties were dealing in 1885. On the very face of the Dominion Act, it appears that the grant of land is to be given, not to a mere examining body like the London University, but a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education. What has the Dominion Government to say as to the trust? The manner of the trust is the only thing which the Dominion Government are to approve:

To be held in trust for that purpose, on some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Dominion Government.

The university has framed the scheme, which the Government have approved, and that is all the Government have to consider. But they have insisted and are insisting on attaching to the grant certain conditions upon which the province decline to take it, and the university does not want it. Therefore, the importance of the question brought to our attention by the hon. member for Winnipeg cannot be overstated.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate..... $61,688

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not wish unnecessarily to detain the committee in the discussion of the items connected with the Senate; but without drawing the committee's attention to a great many items, that might well and properly become the subject of criticism, I wish to offer a few general remarks. I do think that some system of controlling in some way the extravagance that unquestionably must exist in connection with contingencies in the Senate and the distribution of all kinds of material, should be devised whereby a stop would be put to some of the extravagance. Any one who will go over the list of the Senate contingencies, and note the enormous quantity of different kinds of stuff purchased must come to the conclusion that there is a leak somewhere. I am not saying that the extravagance is confined to the Senate. I frankly admit there is a great deal connected with the House of Commons, but at the moment we are dealing with the Senate. Any one turning up the Auditor General's Report, and reading over the purchases of all kinds of stuff, that must be quite unnecessary, must conclude that there is a very great leak which should be stopped. I do not know when this thing commenced. It began before it was my privilege to have a seat in this House, and it has been going on ever since. I find that this year there is a proposed increase of $200 in this very item. Now, we all know very well that hon. gentlemen opposite have been professing for the last two months to reduce taxation, although they started at the bottom of the hill and gradually got back to the top where we were before, and to be consistent with their professions, they should see the absolute necessity of cutting down our annual expenditure. And, if we are to do that, I believe we should begin with the expenditures that are directly under our control in connection both with the Senate and House of Commons. I should like to know why an increase of $200 is asked for instead of a reduction being proposed. I do not think there has been a year since I came here when increases were not proposed in the Senate and House of Commons expenditure. When are we going to reach the limit and begin to curtail expenses? If the Minister is present who is supposed to have supervision over these matters, I would like to know why an increase of $200 is asked for this year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman will look at page 30 of the Estimates he will see that there are four statutory increases. This would account for $200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the Senate accounts there are some items that might very well be explained by the member of the Government who takes these matters in hand. I notice, for instance:

Restaurant committee, allowances for chairman for expenses, two at $100 each, $200.

If these chairmen are senators, it appears to me scarcely consistent with the dignity of that body to make a special charge as chairmen of a restaurant committee. The hon. gentleman will do well to remember that the Auditor General's Report is scrutinized more closely outside than it is here, and there are a variety of items like this appearing in the Senate details which seem to me to require explanation. We do not want to criticise their expenditure too minutely, but such items as this—though there may be an explanation of them—appear on the face of things, rather odd, to say the least of it. Such an item as that I have given does not appear in our accounts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think these are payments to senators.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should hope not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is said to be for expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; it says for "expenses," but an allowance of $100 for each of two chairmen has a suspicious sound about it. It is an item which should be explained, for anybody looking at this would be disposed to believe that the Senate had charged a sum of $200 for two chairmen for looking after a matter which they are abundantly able, I am bound to say, to attend to without special allowance.

Mr. SPEAKER. In the Senate the expenses are controlled by a committee called the Contingent Committee. Though I am not personally acquainted with the facts, I apprehend that this item must be for expenditure in connection with the Senate restaurant, and not a salary for the chairmen.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should be sorry to think that the item, which, as it stands, is likely to leave that impression, was correctly stated. I hope it is for some contingent expenses, and not a payment made to these gentlemen. There are a number of other items, which I shall not criticise now, but which might be open to some consideration. But with regard to the one I have named, I would recommend some member of the Government, who is in closer touch with the Senate than we are, to get the information.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will ascertain what the item means.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad the hon. gentleman will do so, because if the Senate are paying their chairmen a special allowance I suspect we shall hear more of the matter.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not wish to cast any discourteous reflection upon the Senate. But if, as Mr. Speaker says, their expenditures are conducted under the direction of a Contingent Committee, then, in my humble opinion, any person looking over the items of expenditure in the Senate must come to the conclusion that the committee is a very extravagant one. I have had the privilege of going through the Senate and viewing their accommodations, and I cannot understand, for instance, how $500 worth of carpet can be used there in a year. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 95 he will see items amounting to nearly $500 for carpets for the Senate. We find supplies of this kind bought, and never can find where they are put, or why they are wanted. If all the goods purchased for the use of the Senate for the last twelve years could be brought together, I venture to say that the Chamber, with all the additional accommodation, would not hold the stuff. Where do these things go to? It seems to me this requires some explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course I do not know personally about these things, except through my experience with the House of Commons. I think, if the hon. gentleman examined the details of the House of Commons expenditure, he will find an explanation of similar expenditures elsewhere. These carpets cannot last for ever. They are used not only for covering the floor of the Chamber, but also the lobbies, and, I have no doubt, in the committee rooms. I am quite satisfied that the Contingent Committee of the Senate would not agree to any expenditure that they did not think was absolutely necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Looking at the account of the Senate salaries, there are some items that strike one curiously enough. Without raising the question as to whether they require so large a staff as they have, I would call attention to the item of salary for a special bank messenger. I am not aware that we have any messenger as a special bank messenger. Prima facie one would suppose there was no necessity for a messenger to go between the Senate and the various banks.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is probably a mere designation given to this messenger. We have a messenger who, in former years, was employed in going to and from the bank with the assistant accountant. That member of the staff is still retained, and his services are used for various purposes in connection with the House. Though he is nominally the bank messenger, his services are used for other purposes in connection with the House. A considerable portion of his uties are devoted to work in the Accountant's office, but not the whole of them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to know why it is necessary to have a second assistant clerk in the Senate? We have only a clerk and an assistant clerk in the House of Commons. Why do the Senate need a second assistant clerk?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I can only explain that that has been the staff of the Senate all along, until a vacancy occurred, and the vacancy has not been filled for more than a year. I do not know whether it is the intention of the Senate to fill it; I am informed they will not fill it unless some greater necessity appears than exists at present.

Mr. LANDERKIN. But the estimate is asked for.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, in case it should be necessary, as it was supposed to be in former times. It was always voted, but I understand the Contingent Committee of the Senate are disposed not to recommend an appointment to the vacancy.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to get a little idea as to how these salaries are graded. Are they according to position, or according to the work that is done by the officer? I notice that the salaries in the Senate are the same as the salaries here. I presume the duties are not nearly so onerous or so great as they are here; still, they have not only the same officers at the same salary, but they have an additional officer more than we have in this House. I think there should be some grade upon which those salaries are arranged and upon which those officers are appointed, because I cannot conceive that the Clerk of the Senate has nearly as extensive duties nor as much labour to perform as the Clerk of the House of Commons; still he has an assistant, and an estimate is made for a second assistant. I think there ought to be an understanding about this.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Well, the salaries are arranged by the Contingent Committee for the approval of the Senate, and the Contingent Committee, I understand, recommend the salaries according to the rank of the officer and the duties devolving upon him. I do not think it has been the practice of this House to interfere in any way with the discretion of the Senate, within reasonable grounds, as to what appropriations should be made for the staff. I am sure the Senate would raise no objection at all to this House having a second clerk. I think it is hardly wise to criticise too closely the action of the Senate in this regard at the very time they are cutting down their staff, and cutting down their salaries from what they have been ever since Confederation.

Mr. McMULLEN. There are a few items in the Auditor General's Report to which I want to draw attention. I do not think that we should let these items pass without drawing attention to the extravagances that are apparent. I see they have bought a liquor set at a cost of $15—I suppose for the Speaker of the Senate. Now, in face of the pronounced temperance sentiment of the people of Ontario, it is a singular thing that we are called upon to pay for articles of this kind. I see they bought 84 pencils at a cost of $112.42, and 4,284 pen holders at a cost of $130, for 76 senators, although, I believe there are eight vacancies. They bought 881 boxes of pens, costing $273.36; 144 pocket knives costing $205.81; 85 purses, costing $196.50; 84 folding scissors, for $81.75; and 96 cases, $110.96. A stationery clerk, 12 months, gets $200. Then we find 83 writing desks at a cost of $424.14. Now, I must say that if the Senate want to get into worse odour with the people of the country than they are at the present time—and it is hardly possible for them to be in worse odour than they are—they cannot better secure the thorough disgust of the people of Canada than by piling up items of this kind. As my hon. friend in front of me says, the Auditor General's Report is to be found in every newspaper office and every mechanics' institute throughout the Dominion, where they are kept for the purpose of enabling the youth of our country and those who take an interest in the public expenditure, to examine into these items. It appears to me that 881 boxes of pens for 76 Senators, with 8 vacancies, and 144 pen knives—

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. These things are not divided among the Senators.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not much wonder that the hon. gentleman is besieged on the right hand and on the left for appointments to the Senate. It must be a perfect little paradise for a man to get into when he has got all the picking that is to be got there. It is no wonder that the members around him are buttonholing him all the time for a seat in the Senate.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I see where the hon. gentleman's ambition lies now.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt the First Minister would prefer that I were there rather than here.

Salaries, House of Commons. $71,612 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are increases.

Mr. SPEAKER. In this item of salaries there are fifteen statutory increases of $50 each, two of $75, and one of $100, making in all $1,000. The estimate for one clerk in the post office has been struck off, which balances the statutory increases, leaving the vote for salaries exactly the same as it was last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are forty-three put down here in the memorandum before me, as against forty-five.

Mr. SPEAKER. That must be a mistake in the addition, because I see in running over the items there appears to be only one decrease. In running over the items in the detail you will find a decrease in the miscellaneous branch. There are six third class clerks provided for, instead of seven as last year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many law clerks are there?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is only one law clerk, Mr. McCord, at a salary of $3,200, I think.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are there not more than one?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, there never was but one law clerk since I have been in Parliament.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Neither an assistant?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, there is a provision for an assistant law clerk at $1,800.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Has that office never been filled?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, it was filled recently by the probationary appointment of Mr. Mignault.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When did it become vacant?

Mr. SPEAKER. It became vacant before I became Speaker.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was there no assistant law clerk vacancy?

Mr. SPEAKER. No; there was no person having the grade of assistant law clerk until February last.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What position did Mr. Wicksteed occupy?

Mr. SPEAKER. He was a second-class clerk in the Law and Translation Department, at a salary of $1,400.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Where is he now?

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot tell you. He is not in the service of the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was he dismissed?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why?

Mr. SPEAKER. Because he had grossly violated, in my opinion, the discipline that ought to prevail amongst officers of the House by publishing in the newspapers a letter attacking not only the officers and the Internal Economy of the House, but members of the House themselves.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The latter part is very bad.

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like to know what is the salary of Mr. E. P. Hartney?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is $1,800 as a first class clerk, with an addition of $200 as examiner of private Bills.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that last year he was given extra pay to the amount of $200.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Here is an officer receiving $2,000 salary, and yet he is given $200 more. What is the reason?

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. gentleman and other members of the House will remember that there was a difficulty in the Accountant's office a year ago last November. I did not desire to call in any person from the outside to examine the accounts, preferring to take one of our own officers and pay him for the work of examining the accounts and determining the actual amount of the deficit that was alleged to exist. Mr. Hartney, from his long connection with the service and from the fact of his having been in the office a good deal with his father while he was Accountant, was, in my judgment, peculiarly fitted for the work of examining the accounts. I asked him to undertake the work, and he did it, and did it very efficiently, and he did it at the sacrifice of a great deal of time and labour to himself, and I thought it was only just that I should allow him $200 for the service; and when I point out to the committee the amount of salaries saved during the time Mr. Hartney discharged the work not only of investigating the accounts, but of attending to the work of the Accountant's office, was considerably in excess of the amount paid Mr. Hartney, I think it will be admitted that the service was well worth the extra money he received for performing it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in connection with the Speaker's Department last year an expenditure of $2,047.50. I do not say that the articles bought were unnecessary, but a similar expenditure occurs every year. I observe one item for a sideboard purchased at a cost of $114 and many other articles. I have noticed every year that a similar outlay has occurred, and we do not seem to know what becomes of the articles that are yearly purchased, when one Speaker leaves the apartments and another comes into possession. I am not insinuating that the Speaker is responsible for any wrongdoing. I dare say these matters are under the officers of the House, but it appears to me there should be some way of keeping a record of the articles purchased.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not wish to shirk any responsibility that properly devolves on me and place it on the officers of the House. The sideboard referred to was bought under my instructions. The sideboard that was in the dining-room up to this last year was one that had been in use, I was told, for twenty-five years or more. A sideboard was necessary for the restaurant, and I thought it would be economical on my part to allot the old sideboard to the restaurant and buy a new one for the Speaker's apartment.

Expenses of Committees and Extra Clerks $13,600

Mr. McMULLEN. How many sessional clerks are employed this year?

Mr. SPEAKER. Twenty-six sessional clerks and four permanent sessional clerks, thirty altogether.

Dept. of Sergt. at Arms. $34,182 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is an increase of $450. Why is it required?

Mr. SPEAKER. This item covers all the disbursements and services in connection with the Department of the Sergeant-at-Arms. The estimate this year is $34,182, as against $33,732.50 last year, being an increase of $450. That is accounted for in this way: Up to the present time we have been employing in the Reading Room a messenger, to whom we paid during the session the pay of a sessional messenger, $2.50 per day, and during the recess $1.50 per day. I came to the conclusion that it would be more economical to employ a messenger permanently, and the Board of Internal Economy having agreed with me on that point, I asked for a vote of $500 for a permanent messenger. Then one of the night watchmen died during last session, as will be remembered, and I appointed another man in his place at a salary of $50 less than he was receiving. So the increase of $500 and the decrease of $50 make a total increase of $450 in this branch of the service.

Revision of Voters' Lists. $200,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. I should like to ask the First Minister how much he expects to save out of this sum asked by the amendment he proposes in the Franchise Act?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I must be allowed to state it with some reservation, because it was very difficult—until the scheme is fully prepared and adopted by the House—to tell; but I should estimate a saving this year of something like $25,000, and that in future the saving will be considerably more, perhaps double that sum.

Mr. LAURIER. Could not the whole sum be saved? I understood yesterday from the statement made by the right hon. gentleman that he had adopted the provincial franchises. If that be so, he has practically adopted the provincial lists, and the services of the revising officers under those circumstances would be reduced to almost nothing. If he has adopted the provincial lists, they are already prepared and no revision will be necessary; and if the right hon. gentleman would go a step further he might easily find his way to saving the whole of this sum in question.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As I said before, we will see how matters progress. When I say $25,000, I take into consideration the cost of printing, the preparation of the preliminary lists, and considerable services in the way of preparing the lists and so forth. We do not propose at all to abolish all revision. The extent to which the revising officer's duty will be saved will be a matter for experience, and we shall not know for at least a year where we can put the pruning knife as regards reduction of expenses other than in the cost of printing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand, the revising officers begin their duties to-morrow.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, they will be asked not to incur any expense until Parliament has an opportunity of settling the policy of the Franchise Act.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think it would be a good idea when you are going to adopt the provincial franchise to let this item drop. In these hard times it is the duty of the Government as well as of members to prune out everything that is not necessary. You can take the local lists, and if there are any names on those lists that you do not wish to have on you can make it a statutory affair. The times are very hard; wheat is very low; the National Policy is not getting in its work just now; everything is reduced, and it would be well to save the people $200,000 this year. After the revision of the tariff the Government ought to be able to stand that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is a little too revolutionary for me. I am going to a considerable distance in the line of reduction, in the scheme that was suggested to the House yesterday, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin) proposes to abolish lists and everything else, and presently, I suppose, he will abolish elections too, so that we can make ourselves permanent.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to call the First Minister's attention to the fact that when he was in Toronto he promised to lop off the mouldering branches. This is one of them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; they are all gone.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They have grown again. They were lopped off, but regrafted, and are growing a vigorous growth. With respect to the voters' lists the hon. gentleman made a statement the other day no doubt intended to reach the various officers: that they were to accept the provincial lists as a basis.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not the provincial lists, but the provincial franchise.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. That is the same thing.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It might amount to nearly the same thing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not precisely. That is what I want to understand. Does not the hon. gentleman propose that the provincial lists should be taken in the same fashion as the assessment lists were taken?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The revising officer is to take everything into consideration that will give him information as to the persons who are entitled to the franchise. He will, of course, be aided by the provincial lists and assessment rolls, and every material of that kind. It is impossible for us to take the provincial lists as they now stand. Of course, we must add the persons who have been disqualified on account of being connected with the public service, or the militia and so on. The revising officers will probably have their work diminished a great deal by the provincial lists being on the same basis of franchise as our list will be, but that is a matter that we must see as we progress. I have no doubt that a very great deal of labour and a very great deal of expense will be saved to the revising officers and to the parties who are connected with the revision on both sides of politics.

Mr. DENISON. As I understand the new law in Ontario there will be no provincial lists except before a general election. When there is a general election, then they will prepare lists for it, so that there will be three off-years when there will be no provincial lists, and, of course, then it would be necessary to have revising officers do the work as heretofore.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt but that the hon. gentleman is quite correct about that. I am glad that the First Minister has intimated his intention of taking the local lists as far as possible, because I think it is a step in the right direction. I understand that at the last revision the revising officers were instructed to make the preliminary lists from the provincial lists, and the view of the First Minister appears to be now that it is intended to use the provincial lists to a greater extent than before.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course, they will be much more used.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am glad of that, because unquestionably it costs a great deal of trouble to the municipalities to perfect these lists for municipal purposes, and from the fact that the Reeves and councillors of the different municipalities are in a better position to judge as to whether men should be placed on the voters' list than any revising barrister, consequently the provincial lists are to that extent better than our lists. The municipal officers put on the men that are entitled to vote, and I think they do that largely without regard to their own political views.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. I make this statement conscientiously, because in my riding there are townships where the councils are altogether Conservatives, and I give them credit for endeavouring to do what is right. It is the same with regard to councils where they are all Liberals. I trust that that is the experience of hon. gentlemen opposite. That is the reason why I am glad the Government have seen their way clear to use the local voters' lists as largely as possible in the revision now coming on.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I trust that the Government will move very cautiously in regard to accepting the provincial voters' lists until we have a change of Government in Ontario next month, and then, perhaps, we shall be able to get a proper voters' list. We have had a very peculiar experience in Ontario with regard to the voters' lists within the last three months. The Government had provided that the lists were to be made up largely by the assessment commissioners in the cities, and the persons representing both parties went to considerable expense in the city of Toronto in preparing the voters' lists, and the lists were complete at the beginning of the session. The session was held, and the Registration Bill was passed, and it is alleged, and I think I am fair in making the statement, that in consequence of the Conservatives having largely exceeded the Reformers in the number of votes they got on the list in Toronto and St. Thomas, the Government provided that the Act should apply to these two cities this year and not to any other constituencies for some years to come. That we consider is most unfair and unjust to us in Toronto, because it puts us to the expense of revising the lists over again which were only very recently completed. The Ontario Government had no right whatever to discriminate against the cities of Toronto and St. Thomas because the Conservatives got the advantage. I trust that this Government will be careful about entrusting their voters' lists in any sense in the hands of the Provincial Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who are the revisers appointed by the Government in Toronto?

Mr. COATSWORTH. The reviser was the assessment commissioner, a Reformer.

Mr. CASEY. In answer to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth), I have a few words to say. He has made special reference to the cases of Toronto and St. Thomas under the Registration Act of the Ontario House. He says the Act was made to apply to those two cities because the Conservatives in them had got the advantage in framing the last list. I will leave it to him to speak for Toronto.

Mr. McMULLEN.

If the Conservatives got the advantage there in framing the list—

Mr. COATSWORTH. They always do.

Mr. CASEY. They are apparently experts in the art of getting the advantage in framing voters' lists. As to St. Thomas, the facts were these. There is a semi-annual assessment in that city, and it was well understood that the election was more likely to be held on the list based on the September, or second assessment than the list based on the spring assessment. The Conservatives in the city, however, took the precaution to attend to the revision of the spring list. They got all the names they were entitled to on that list. I do not know whether they got more than they were entitled to or not, because it appears that on our side very little attention was paid to that list, their expectation being that the second assessment would be used. After the second assessment was taken, a new list was issued, and the revision of it was set about in the ordinary way. Very troublesome delay occurred in the revision of that list. The list was not issued in its rough form from the hands of the city clerk until much later than the usual time. I believe that arose from the illness of that gentleman. But when it was issued, the printing was given to the office of the Conservative organ in the city of St. Thomas, the 'Times,' and the delay in that office has not been explained, and perhaps cannot be explained, unless it is understood that it was intentional, and for the purpose of detaining the list until it could not be used in the approaching election. The Reformers in the city succeeded at last in getting that list printed, but so late that I believe the revision is not finished yet, so far as the first and second parts are concerned. The part of the old list referring to manhood suffrage voters would be, of course, quite out of date if now used; and I suppose it was due to the accidental and unintentional delays that took place in the printing of the list that St. Thomas was given a chance to have a new list brought down to date, by registration of those entitled to manhood suffrage. I hope the hon. gentleman will be satisfied with the Toronto list. I fancy that when the lists are revised in both cases, both parties will be satisfied with them. Both parties have it in their own hands to secure full representation upon them by the exercise of ordinary care; neither has any advantage over the other, or any reason to complain of the introduction of this system, unless the old lists were outrageously unfair to one party, and unduly favourable to the other, which, I believe, was the case in both of those constituencies. The parties who will now become entitled to the suffrage, and who would otherwise have lost it, will be well satisfied in both cases.

Mr. DENISON. Whatever may have been the case in St. Thomas, in Toronto the lists were made up fairly, because the Conservative party made an extra effort, knowing that the election would come this year, and endeavoured to get every Conservative vote on the list, which, I believe they did, while the Reformers, whether they knew any better or not, were slack, and did not make much effort to get their men on. But no sooner was the list about completed than we heard rumours of another revision, and now we are in the throes of arranging another list, although we only completed the previous one a month or two ago. This is a great annoyance and trouble and bother to everybody connected with the preparation of the list, as well as an unnecessary expense imposed on the people; and, although I have no doubt that in the incoming lists the Conservatives will make as good an effort as before to see that none of their friends are left off, still it was unfair and entirely unnecessary.

Mr. INGRAM. As one representing St. Thomas, I wish to state that the hon. member for West Elgin is not quite correct in his statement with reference to the voters' lists of that city. The voters' lists of St. Thomas were revised last fall. The friends of hon. gentlemen opposite had prepared a number of appeals; but, unfortunately, for them they could not get any person to sign those appeals to place them in the hands of the city clerk, and for that reason they were not sent in. There was an assessment made last fall, and the Conservatives wished as much as the Reformers. I am sure, that that assessment should be the one on which the voting in the coming provincial election would be had; but unfortunately our city clerk has very poor health, and a large amount of work to do, and for that reason he could not place the list in the hands of the printer in time. Therefore, it was not completed as soon as expected, and it was thought it would not be completed in time for the election. But Sir Oliver Mowat passed this Registration Act, making it apply to St. Thomas and Toronto. He says to St. Thomas: You can revise part one, but you cannot revise part three. There are two county judges in the county of Elgin, by sitting on the revision of this list, one taking part one and the other part three, they might have completed it in time for the election, but that would not suit the friends of hon. gentleman opposite. They knew if that were done, the Conservatives would have an advantage, and sooner than allow them that advantage, Sir Oliver Mowat made the Registration Act apply to St. Thomas, thus heaping more costs on the municipality, and by that means endeavouring to defeat the Conservative party in the West Riding of Elgin. It is well known that in St. Thomas the young men are largely Conservative.

Mr. Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has made one or two strange statements. In the first place, he says the voters' lists were revised last year. A voters' list was certainly revised last fall, a list based on the assessments of last spring, a year ago. But the list based on last September list was only in course of a revision a day or two ago, when I was in St. Thomas. It was in regard to the second revision that the delay occurred, and the failure to get in the appeals with regard to the voters' lists of last year, for whatever reason, has nothing to do with the question at all. The question was that, partly in consequence of that failure to get in the appeals of the Liberal party, and partly on account of the age of the list, the list, which is at present the only revised list for St. Thomas, does not represent the actual status of the electorate in that city. Now, the hon. gentleman from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) says that the judges could have revised all parts of the list as well as the parts that they are now revising. I do not doubt they could, if they had had unlimited time, but I doubt very much if they could be with the elections coming on so soon. But why the hon. gentleman should say that the Conservatives of St. Thomas will lose by the registration of voters instead of the revision of the list, I cannot imagine. He says it is because the young manhood franchise voters of that city are largely Conservatives. That may be true or it may not. They certainly were at one time, to a large extent, supporters of the hon. gentleman when he ran for the Local House. They may or may not be in the same mood, but whether they are still Conservatives or not, surely the opportunity of getting them registered is as good as it is for those who intend to vote for the Reform party. As to who is going to revise, I see it is stated that the same county judge, who has to revise the list in any case, has been appointed chairman of the Board of Registrars.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is really very fortunate that the Government have abandoned what the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) used to consider the bulwark of our liberty--the veto power--because if this provincial Act is wrong, the Government might veto it. But I see from a speech delivered by one of the Ministers a little while ago, that that power has been abolished by the Government. And as to the Act which the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) speaks about, he knows quite well that this registration of the lists prepared by the Local Government was intended to prevent the extensive personation that prevailed in Toronto in the election concerning the Toronto street railway.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. LANDERKIN. My hon. friend seems to have a great deal of sympathy with that system, and I am astonished he should oppose a system under which residential men with suffrages can come up and register.

He ought to admire the liberality of the Ontario Government, which is so considerate of those away from home, that they can now come in and register.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call the hon. gentleman to order. Has this discussion about Toronto City anything to do with the subject before us?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not see why I should be called to order when the other gentlemen were not. The subject is cognate to the question of the revision of our Dominion lists, and I only rose, in the first instance, to ask the First Minister to let this drop and allow the revision to be made by the people themselves. That would not entail any cost, and owing to the times being hard, the First Minister would do well, in the present stress, to save this $200,000 at least.

Mr. DEVLIN. Will the redistribution of seats as passed two years ago be taken into consideration in the preparation of the lists?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; in the Bill I propose to introduce, the Redistribution Act will be brought into force for the revision, so that the revision to take place will be a revision of the new constituencies to be established under the Redistribution Act of 1892, and a provision will be made by which, if a vacancy should occur before the coming into force of that Act, the lists shall be framed from the polling districts which constitute the present electoral division. If, for example, the hon. gentleman should vacate his seat for any reason, the list for the bye-elections will include the lists for the two new electoral districts, under the Redistribution Act of 1892.

Salaries of officers of the Library ..$17,162.50

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to draw the Government's attention to a question that has been frequently discussed in this House. We have a double-headed set of librarians—two men occupying precisely the same position. One is called the Parliamentary librarian, and I do not know what we call the other. They draw $3,200 each, and I cannot see any necessity for two librarians at such an expense to the country. I think we could well dispense with one of these men, and I would like to know if it is the intention of the Government to continue this system. I remember that when the appointment was made, there was a long discussion, but it was forced upon the House by the late Sir John Macdonald, in the interest, I presume, of a friend who wanted a resting place. He is there still. I am not finding fault with the gentleman, who, I dare say, is very efficient, but the country can well do with one librarian.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The policy on that subject is contained in the statute passed by this Parliament, and the vote is merely taken in pursuance of the statute. It is not proposed to change the system.

Mr. LANDERKIN.

Library of American History $1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is that particular item being disposed of?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is disposed of under the supervision of the librarian.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not objecting to the appropriation, for there is a great deal to be said in favour of having a complete library of American history. But what I want to know is what is being done with the money.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am unable to answer. The selection of these works is left to the librarian.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not observe that any special report on that subject was presented, though I dare say such a report was laid on the Table. Perhaps some of our friends on the Library Committee can give us some information on this subject.

Mr. SCRIVER. As the hon. gentleman says, there is no special mention in the report of the librarians as to the progress made in this particular branch of the library work, but I remember hearing the librarians saying that some valuable works on Canadian and American history had been obtained last year. I think the aim of the librarians is to procure rare works such as are not easily obtained and such as will be of inestimable value to the library. My own belief is, from the few opportunities I have had of judging, that the work of the librarians in this respect has been very judiciously done.

Printing, printing paper and binding.$100,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like to know whether, under the present system of printing and binding, the general cost to the country is increased as compared to what it was when the work was done under contract?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think it is very largely decreased, as appears in the report on the subject.

Mr. McMULLEN. Would the hon. gentleman state in what particular way the decrease was effected?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only answer I can give the hon. gentleman is that the printing costs less money. A comparison is made taking several years, showing the cost of the work done for each department under contract, the figures also being given for the cost under the present system. Though the work is largely increased, we find that it is done at lower rates than when the printing was done under contract. That is the statement made in the report which the hon. gentleman can see.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the number of hands employed in the Bureau greater or smaller than the number employed last year ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suppose the number is about the same. There is no increase at any rate. There is a permanent staff in the Bureau, the cost of which the hon. gentleman will see set forth under the head of Civil Government. The number of printers depends upon the quantity of work from time to time. They are employed not permanently, but by the day or night, but when the work is reduced, a number are let go, and when the work comes in again more men are taken on. The staff was increased by about ten for the sessional work, and no more additions will be made to the number until it becomes necessary to take up the work, whatever it may be, in connection with the revision of the lists.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the rate of wages per week for type-setters just now ? I believe that some time ago an increase was made.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The wages are, for day work $12 per week ; for night work, $15 per week. That is an increase of about $1.50 per week as compared with last year. The total cost additional for the session will be about $900.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the reason for the increase ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The reason is that the representation made by the printers being duly considered, it was found that they had made out a good case. We laid down the principle that these men should not expect higher pay than the same class of men were receiving in similar positions in the best offices in the leading cities, like Toronto and Montreal. I held to that rule very strongly. When this matter was brought before my personal attention and before the Government, the printers were able to show that while we were holding them to the rates of pay given in these other offices we were requiring of them longer hours of work, and, therefore, were not giving them an equivalent for their services.

Pensions, Miss Harriet Fraser $250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was this pension granted for ; I have forgotten ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that this item and the next, Mr. Roderick Fraser, $150, was in connection with the discovery of the Fraser River. These are the surviving relatives of the discoverer, residing in Glengarry—aged persons.

To meet probable amount required for veterans of the war of 1812. $180

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many of these remain

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot say the number, very few.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What allowance is now paid to these survivors ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Thirtly dollars apiece.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We might have made it a trifle more.

Pensions payable to militia men on account of rebellion 1885. $23,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that our total expenditure for the North-west Rebellion pensions was only $20,382 last year. Presumably $23,000 are rather more than is required. Are there any applications under consideration ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are none at present. But occasionally there is an application based on the ground of the remuneration not being adequate, such, for instance, as the injury having turned out to be more serious than was first apprehended. Of course, these are investigated by medical boards according to regulations on the subject. Applications are not numerous, but one or two come in in the course of a year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should imagine from the number that one or two would die in the course of a year.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are still keeping a surgeon employed with this North-west rebellion ? I see that last year we paid him $1,550 for his services. Have these services ended now ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin). You will find the item on page E 167, where I see that $1,550.42 were paid him last year for services as surgeon-general.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was a vote of the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is ended now ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Pensions payable to Mounted Police, Prince Albert volunteers and police scouts, on account of rebellion of 1885. $3,367 78

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is that given in detail ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. On page D 226, compensation of the North-west Mounted Police.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There I observe that the amount paid is vastly less than is asked for, apparently. All that is paid is put down as $1,500.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is $500 less than last year. There are a good many claims under consideration. Bodies of scouts, for instance, and volunteers, are continually claiming, as individual members, to come under the provisions of the Act who had, in former times, by strict ruling, been excluded from the Act. In a number of these cases there was an investigation a few years ago, and a number of additions to the list. But the claims under consideration during the last year have not been favourably entertained, so far as I remember.

Railways and Canals—Canadian Pacific Railway—To pay for work done under award..... $90,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought that all we required to pay under the award had been closed some time ago. How does this vote come to be asked for?

Mr. HAGGART. The amount of the award was $579,255, and the amount earned and certified as paid for, was $449,065.04; the balance of work to be done, $130,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Work to be done whereabouts?

Mr. HAGGART. Over in the mountains. It is the award of the arbitrators.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But I thought all the work had been valued and estimated by them.

Mr. HAGGART. No; the amount required to be done, as I said, was $579,255. That leaves $130,000. There are $90,000 of work to be completed this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then there remains a still further sum?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; there will be $40,000 besides to be voted next year. That will cover the whole of the award.

Mr. LAURIER. Has this award ever been placed on the Table of the House?

Mr. HAGGART. I will inquire and find out. This vote has been taken for two or three years.

Mr. LAURIER. But the award was not given for two or three years.

Mr. HAGGART. It was given in 1891.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What were the costs in the case?

Mr. HAGGART. They were pretty large, and appeared in the Estimates of 1892.

Intercolonial Railway..... $312,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to unnecessarily delay the passage of this item, but I may remark that the arrangement made between myself and the Finance Minister was that we should go through these items in rotation, and consequently we are not quite prepared to go on with railways to-night. The hon. gentleman may, perhaps, do this: he can give us some general information as to his policy, and let one of the items stand, so that if any further investigation is necessary we may proceed with it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. HAGGART. Very well.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe an item of $53,000, Intercolonial Railway, increased accommodation at Halifax. Does the Minister expect to complete the work with this vote, and that will be the total cost of the increased accommodation?

Mr. HAGGART. The total amount required is $200,000. The estimate of the cost is as follows: land damages and other expenses, $170,000; estimated cost of brick freight shed, $15,000; 2,500 feet of track, with switches complete, $2,200; earth filling, $4,000; office, $800; macadamizing, $500; other works, $5,500; total, $200,000. The expenditure up to 31st January, 1894, was: legal expenses, $28; engineers, $1,080; valuation, $124; paid for property, $56,324. The total expenditure for increased accommodation at Halifax, from the commencement in 1872 up to 31st January, 1894, was $1,457,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have both the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railway running arrangements over the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. There are traffic arrangements with both companies, but the Canadian Pacific Railway alone have a right to run trains under the agreement.

Mr. FORBES. Has the Grand Trunk Railway any running arrangement into Moncton?

Mr. HAGGART. No; only freight arrangement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway in regard to eastbound freight?

Mr. HAGGART. The Grand Trunk Railway has the right to send freight to any point, and a mileage allowance is given to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What percentage does the Intercolonial Railway receive, say on shipments from Toronto?

Mr. HAGGART. The distance on the Grand Trunk Railway from Toronto to Point Lévis stands in proportion to the distance from Point Lévis to Halifax.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do we understand that it is an absolutely pro rata arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I understand.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. It is a very elaborate arrangement, and a copy of the document was laid on the Table a couple of years ago. The company have a right to run trains and give us an allowance for running over the road, and when they use our trains they give us a mileage allowance. The Canadian Pacific Railway runs from St. John to Halifax.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have been told that on a car of flour passing over 500 miles of the Grand Trunk Railway and 500 miles of the Intercolonial Railway, the Intercolonial Railway received a smaller percentage.

Mr. HAGGART. If the Grand Trunk Railway makes an arrangement to carry freight 500 miles over its own road and 500 miles over the Intercolonial Railway, the amount received is divided equally.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I always understood that the Intercolonial Railway did not receive its full proportion, but only 37 per cent. I am glad to know that the arrangement is now a better one. As regards increased accommodation at Halifax, I understand the line to Dartmouth has been completed, and that the money now being voted is to extend the road further into the city, to the wharf.

Increased accommodation at Halifax..... $53,000

Mr. FORBES. Is it expected that this amount will complete the work?

Mr. HAGGART. $200,000 will complete the work.

Mr. FORBES. Does the hon. gentleman propose to proceed with the work and push it to completion this year? There has not been a rail laid as yet, and little progress has been made apparently.

Mr. HAGGART. The principle expenditure has been on purchasing of property. We intend to push forward the work to completion.

Mr. FORBES. Can you give us the names of the parties expropriated?

Mr. HAGGART. I shall give the hon. gentleman all the details at a later period. I have not them with me now. You will find a good many of them in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. FORBES. I want them in a concise form.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that no further expenditure is contemplated for this?

Mr. HAGGART. No; that is the estimate of my department, that the total expenditure will be $200,000. That covers the shed, the track, the earth filling, the office, the macadamizing, contingencies, $5,500, and the cost of land damages and legal and other expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And no further extension is contemplated?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Rolling stock..... $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that this is charged to capital account. What rolling stock was put on the Intercolonial Railway last year and charged to working expenses?

Mr. HAGGART. Except where there is a special vote for capital account, the whole of the rolling stock is charged to working expenses. This $10,000 is merely a revote for the purpose of applying the Westinghouse brake to freight cars.

Mr. McMULLEN. Sir Charles Tupper said some years ago that in his management of the Intercolonial Railway they put on each year, a sufficient quantity of rolling stock and charged it to working expenses to make up for anything that was worn out during the year. Is that the principle on which the hon. gentleman is operating the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. HAGGART. That is the principle. The rolling stock is now in a better state of efficiency than ever it was before and the road itself is in a better state of repair, and that is all charged to working expenses, unless there is a special vote asked for capital expenditure. There are over 600 cars to which the Westinghouse brake is at present applied, on which there has been an expenditure of $65,000, and this vote is for the purpose of gradually furnishing the whole of the freight cars with that brake.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have you adopted any patent for the sleeping cars on the Intercolonial Railway during the past year?

Mr. HAGGART. None, except the patent that was applied to one of the cars for the purpose of ventilating it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Whose patent was that?

Mr. HAGGART. Some gentleman in Toronto or Lindsay, I forget his name. It was approved by the mechanical engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, and put in one car for trial, and I am glad to say that it is a perfect success.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I hope the Minister will have it put in all the cars, because we who have to sleep in the cars very often feel the need of ventilation.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the intention to put this ventilator in the rest of the sleeping cars?

Mr. HAGGART. There has been no decision arrived at on the subject.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much did it cost to put the ventilator in that one car?

Mr. HAGGART. Between $200 and $300, I think.

Mr. McMULLEN. And the hon. gentleman does not know who controls the patent or who superintended the putting up of it?

Mr. HAGGART. It was recommended to me, and I adopted it on the recommendation of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes). I suppose that is what the hon. gentleman wants to know.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are the Pullman cars owned and run by ourselves?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes; we get them built by contract in all cases.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are the new freight cars for the Intercolonial Railway being built under contract?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, some are being built at Amherst, some at Deseronto, and some at Cobourg. They were all advertised in accordance with the plans and specifications and the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer. The three lowest were pretty near the same, and they agreed to build them at the price of the lowest, and they were divided amongst them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Most of the railways are now building large cars of 50,000 pounds and in some cases, 60,000 pounds, and I think it would be wise to have the new cars for the Intercolonial built of large capacity, so that they could carry a larger quantity of freight. The 30,000-pound cars are now out of date. I notice that the new cars being built are all 40,000 pounds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know how the receipts on the Intercolonial for the four or five months of the year now current have turned out.

Mr. HAGGART. Of course, not yet having returns for May and June, for them, I could only give an approximate estimate; but the probabilities are that at the beginning of the financial year the receipts and expenditures of the Intercolonial railway will balance.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is another matter which I suppose I might allude to at this time, that is, the freights on the Intercolonial railway. At present, nearly all the flour sent from Ontario to Prince Edward Island first goes to Boston, and is then carried across in steamers to Prince Edward Island. I think that is a mistake. By lowering the rate a little to Point Duchesne or Pictou, the Intercolonial would carry nearly all the flour intended for points in Prince Edward Island, instead of its being sent via Boston. There is one line that runs from Boston every week, and its steamers are always loaded down with Canadian flour that ought to go over our own railway. The rate over the Intercolonial to Pictou from Toronto is 45 cents a barrel, while the rate, via Moncton to St. John, for Bay of Fundy points is 35 cents a barrel. If this rate were adopted for Point Duchesne or Pictou, all the flour for Prince Edward Island now going via Boston would go over the Intercolonial Railway, and largely increase its receipts. The same is the case with regard to flour sent to Cape Breton; a large part of it goes via Boston, but ought to go over the Intercolonial. This is a matter to which I think the Minister of Railways should give his attention.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman suggest a plan by which the manager of the Intercolonial could remedy it? He must be aware that the Grand Trunk railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway have the right in western Ontario to fix their own rates to any of these points, and they could not be controlled by the Intercolonial railway. We only receive mileage rate from them for the freight we carry.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Intercolonial is a very important factor in the matter. The Grand Trunk Railway will ship a barrel of flour going via Moncton to St. John for Bay of Fundy points at 35 cents a barrel. I do not think they would make any objection to shipping it to Point Duchesne or Pictou at the same rate, because they would not be carrying it any further.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not see how it could be arranged.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The distances being the same, what is the difficulty?

Mr. HAGGART. The Grand Trunk Railway have a fixed rate to Point Duchesne, and they only allow us a mileage rate for what we carry on the Intercolonial. It is true, there is an arrangement between the Intercolonial and the Grand Trunk Railway by which we carry freight to St. John as cheaply as the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Prima facie, it would seem as if my hon. friend was right, and that on representations being made to the company, equal rates might be got for these points.

Mr. HAGGART. They refuse positively to do it, and insist on the right of making the rates.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They never made that arrangement for Bay of Fundy points until this year. The rate to St. John was always the same as to Halifax until this year. I think the arrangement could be made.

Mr. HAGGART. They will not do it; we have tried them.

Intercolonial Railway—Original construction $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is that for?

Mr. HAGGART. This is for still unsettled claims in connection with the construction of the Intercolonial railway. This is for the claim of a man named Weir.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the nature of his claim?

Mr. HAGGART. Paid Weir's old claim for land at Windsor Junction, $1,400.

Mr. LAURIER. Has the claim been paid?

Mr. HAGGART. It seems so.

Mr. LAURIER. What was the authority?

Mr. HAGGART. That is the extraordinary part of it. It was paid for by the Nova Scotia Government in 1856.

Mr. LAURIER. Really, the more we have the explanation, the less we understand it. Here is a claim paid by the Nova Scotia Government in 1856, what is the reason it is refunded now, after thirty years?

Mr. HAGGART. We took over the Windsor Railway from the Nova Scotia Government in 1866. The land was expropriated by the Nova Scotia Government from a man named Weir, and now forms part of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FORBES. Perhaps I can help the Minister out of his difficulty by explaining that I was the solicitor who started the action for Mr. Weir. He had a claim for land belonging to him at Windsor Junction. The claim was outstanding since 1856. By the local Act of 1856, the Nova Scotia Railway expropriated certain lands, and, in 1866, when the Intercolonial Railway was built, it was part of the terms that the Dominion Government should take over the railway built by the Nova Scotia Government. This was an outstanding claim against that railway, and it became a claim against the Dominion Government. From that day to this both parties have fought it out. Part of the time Weir has been in possession of the lands and mortgaged them, and then the Government took possession and drove off the tenants. This went on from year to year until I brought the matter to a head by filing a petition in the Exchequer Court. The Government pleaded the statute of limitations, but as the claim was a just one, they agreed to pay Weir $1,400. The claim was for $7,000 or $8,000, but, as the Government would plead the statute of limitations, Mr. Weir had to accept $1,400.

St. Charles Branch. $17,000

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Is it the intention of the Government to increase the accommodation at Point Levis in order to meet the wants of the cattle dealers? When they have cattle at Levis, they have to put them in the public road or on a piece of land belonging to a man named Brochu, and have to pay 2 cents a head for putting them there, while waiting for the boat, although the cattle may only have to remain there an hour.

Mr. HAGGART. I have had no recommendations from any of the officers of the Intercolonial Railway for increased accommodation in the direction the hon. gentleman points out. It is the first time the subject has been brought to my attention. If it requires any increased expropriation of land in Point Lévis or anywhere along that branch, I would be very careful about recommending to Parliament any sum for that purpose.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am surprised to hear that no complaint reached the hon. Minister, because I complained very often, and went to the spot with Mr. Schreiber myself and Mr. Macdonald, the superintendent. Mr. Macdonald told me he had written to Ottawa to call the attention of the Minister to it.

Mr. HAGGART. Well, I never heard of it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman give a statement of what the St. Charles branch has cost up to date and what claims are now outstanding, because I have never seen a plummet yet that reached within a mile of the bottom.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is pretty nearly correct in his observations. The amount expended on the St. Charles branch is $1,723,000. The amount required to build the road was only $822,000, and the amount required for land, damages and expenses was over $900,000. There are at present unsettled claims to the amount of $37,000. That is why I answered the hon. gentleman that it was very dangerous to ask an expropriation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the length of the branch?

Mr. HAGGART. Fourteen miles.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That would be $1,722,000 paid already.

Mr. HAGGART. $1,723,137., without outstanding claims, for one of which there is a judgment to the amount of $26,287. Taking that judgment and the other claims unsettled, the whole outstanding claims amount to $37,719.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What was the estimate made by the Minister of Railways when he proposed to build that branch?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was $136,000 a mile, and here is an expenditure of $1,760,000.

Mr. LAURIER. In whose favour was the judgment rendered?

Mr. HAGGART. A man named Gibson. I do not know his first name.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that for land damages?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes—on several claims.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Minister say, or has he already given the items which he expects will completely close out the cost of this whole line?

Mr. HAGGART. I will give the items so far as we know them—the total amount of each claim:

Louis Grevier.....	$1,300
Marcel Bourget.....	500
Heirs of James Lewis..	372
The Corporation of Bienville	260
George T. Davey	1,800
Mrs. H. Bourget.....	1,200
Heirs of D. D. Young..	2,999
— Gibson (judgment given for).....	$26,287.56

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was that judgment rendered by the Exchequer Court?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Why does the hon. gentleman ask for an appropriation of $17,000 when he has already a claim of over $26,000 to pay? What is the appropriation for, if not to pay these damages?

Mr. HAGGART. We do not intend to pay them if it can be avoided—we dispute every item. There is a balance from last year.

Mr. LAURIER. The whole of this is a re-vote?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. What is it to be applied to—the payment of damages?

Mr. HAGGART. The payment of land damages alone.

Mr. LANGELIER. What is the nature of the claim of George Taylor Davey? He has already been paid a very large amount by the Government for land damages in connection with the construction of the St. Charles branch. Why is this made a distinct claim, instead of being lumped with the others? He has already been paid, I believe, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $30,000. I know that his claim was for $150,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The officers of the department do not know why this is made a separate claim. I am not asking this vote with the object of paying these claims. I simply state what the claims are. We contest every one of them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Can the hon. gentleman tell for what quantity of land Mr. Gibson was allowed $26,000? Can he tell us who conducted the suits?

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice, on behalf of the department.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Belleau, Stafford & Darveau.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not going to say anything about the judgment. But I want to know what the Government did in the case. Did they allow it to go by default?

Mr. McMULLEN

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not at all.

Mr. HAGGART. The quantity of land taken was 9,000 superficial feet.

Mr. LAURIER. That is a very dear price—almost $3 per foot.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the land used for? Is it only track allowance?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it is near the station grounds, but I am not sure.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot state at the moment who our counsel were. Our firm of agents were interested by relationship, or in some way in one of the claims and preferred not to take the case, and our defence was put in the hands of other counsel, whose name I cannot at the moment remember. Judgment was delivered after a contest and trial, the judges stating their reasons and the basis of calculation of value, the basis being the value at which property alongside had been sold in recent years.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The judge would have but a simple duty to discharge. He would be obliged to give his verdict upon the evidence before him. If there was evidence on one side and nothing on the other, he would be obliged to give a verdict if it amounted to $200,000. I would like to know who the counsel were and what evidence was given—whether any evidence was given on the part of the Government?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sure that evidence was given, because I know the nature of it. It is very difficult to get evidence to diminish the value of land, as it is the interest of everybody in the neighbourhood to make the land appear as valuable as possible. But we gave evidence of sales in the locality.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I should have imagined that if it was necessary to give evidence of sales elsewhere than in the locality that would have been done. In such a case the judge should not be left without some support, as he is bound to give his verdict upon the evidence before him.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The judge was by no means left without support. The claim was fully double this amount.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears that the construction of this road has cost an enormous amount of money. I well remember when Sir Charles Tupper introduced the Bill for the building of this short branch. As the leader of the Opposition has stated, Sir Charles estimated some small sum—two or three hundred thousand dollars—as the outside cost of this branch. Now it appears that it will cost over $2,000,000 before it is completed or about $142,000 a mile. I think we should change the name of this road and call it Sir Charles Branch. It is evidently an expensive ornament to this country, just as Sir Charles is himself. I do not know but it would have paid the Government better to have tunnelled a road through from Point Lévis for this fifteen miles. It seems to me that that would have been cheaper than to buy the right of way and construct the road. I do not know that there is any portion of any road in this Dominion that has cost so large a sum as this has cost. Even now the Minister does not seem to know where the cost is to end; we have one application for land damages after another. I cannot understand how the construction of this branch has been so miserably mismanaged. It has been a botch from the beginning. The idea of paying $142,000 a mile for a road the original estimate for which was about $15,000 a mile.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think the explanation is at all satisfactory with respect to the payment of this enormous amount of damages. The hon. gentleman says that the ordinary counsel retained by the Government being interested, were unable to conduct this suit, and they appointed some other counsel. I think the committee ought to know who the other counsel are, and I think it is also desirable to know the character of the evidence that was offered on behalf of the Government. Now, we hear that about three times as much was paid to this gentleman as he paid for the land himself. I do not know anything about that, but at any rate it would be satisfactory to know that if we have to pay $26,000 for 9,000 superficial feet of land a reasonable and proper defence and evidence were offered to the judge when he was estimating the damages. Everybody will understand how absolutely helpless a judge is when he is called upon to estimate damage for the expropriation of a piece of land. The interested party calls Smith, Brown, Jones and Robinson, who, as the Minister says, are all interested in getting a very high price. They give their evidence from an interested standpoint, and, of course, if the counsel representing the Government slights the case, the judge has no option, he is bound by the evidence, and although he may think it outrageous, he cannot do anything but give his verdict according to the evidence. I think we have a right to know what steps were taken by the counsel representing the Government to put the claims of the people properly before the judge in that instance. This thing has arisen to the dignity of a scandal, nothing more or less. That a Minister of the Crown could come here and induce Parliament some years ago to enter upon a project of this kind, stating that it would cost $130,000 to $150,000, and we stand here voting the fag end of $1,800,000, is something that is not creditable to the Government, and requires from Parliament the most close and searching investigation. I submit to the Minister of Justice that in a matter of this kind where we are paying what, on the face of it, appears to be an outrageously large sum of money by way of compensation for a piece of land, the committee should be assured that every precaution was taken to safeguard the interests of the public, and that the judge had placed before him fit and proper evidence, and that the case was put into the hands of proper counsel. I do not know who the gentleman was myself, but there are men who are very fit for a county court, but are not fit to manage a matter involving $40,000 or $50,000. I think the committee and the public have a right to expect that the Government would employ counsel whose capacity fits them properly to safeguard and defend the public interest in matters of such large amount.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will bring down anything the hon. gentleman asks for. I cannot name the counsel who was employed, but he will find that it was one of the first counsel of the bar in Quebec—the Deputy Minister of Railways thinks it was the Attorney General of the province. I am not sure of that, and do not want to say so. But we had first-class counsel. But the hon. gentleman must not suppose that the case was handed over by our agents there in consequence of their not being able to conduct it. When they informed us that they were not able to attend to it, we instructed counsel from here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The First Minister knows that a counsel is absolutely helpless unless he is properly instructed by a solicitor, and has proper evidence submitted to him. The question is: Had he a proper brief and proper evidence placed before him to submit to the court?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He had a proper brief; I cannot answer for the evidence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like very much to know. I think the committee will require to know before they are through what evidence was submitted on behalf of the Government to the judge of the Exchequer Court. I will ask the hon. gentleman if, before these estimates for the railway are finally through, he will bring down a statement showing what witnesses were examined on behalf of the Government, and let us see their evidence, and see whether the case was conducted in the public interest, as I think we have a right to expect it would be.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That will be done?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. McCARTHY. The reasons for the judgment would probably be sufficient for that purpose. At all events, they would aid very much in ascertaining what was before the judge. In all probability he criticised the evidence and summarized it, and gave reasons for coming to the conclusion. I would like to know where the land was?

Mr. HAGGART. It was part of the water front, the part that was used for the branch railway.

Mr. LAUBIER. I understand it is the land where the station stands.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Knowing where the land is, it seems to me an outrageous price—about $3 a foot.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. $2.30. $2,000 were for interest.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The judge's judgment would not be evidence at all.

Mr. HAGGART. All I can say is that the officers in my department thought that $26,000 was a great deal too much. Their estimate was $9,000, and they decided to go to the court with it, and they furnished every bit of evidence they could possibly find as to the value of the property.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But I want the hon. gentleman to tell me what evidence was furnished.

Mr. HAGGART. We will furnish you the evidence.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand there has been more than one trial in this case. I think there was a trial, and the case was dismissed, then a second trial took place. I would like to know whether the same witnesses were heard the last time that were heard on the first occasion?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was no second trial. There was an attempt made to settle it, and failed.

Mr. LAURIER. It has been in court for ten years, I understand.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think so long as that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand from the hon. gentleman we will have a full statement, the whole record.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will give any information you desire, that can be got.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like a statement of the evidence that was given on behalf of the Government before the court, together with the judge's judgment, and the name of the counsel who conducted the case for the Government. The hon. gentleman will see how much more necessary that is now than it appeared to be at first sight. The hon. Minister himself says that his department thought the judgment was three times more than they considered fair, and that being so, it is very important to know whether the case was properly presented to the judge.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot get the record; I can get an abstract or a copy of the judge's reasons. It may take some days to get a full copy of the record.

Mr. FORBES. Can the Minister tell us whether that amount of damages is paid upon the demand of the parties holding the land? How was that settled, and that amount paid out? In the city of Halifax $50,000 would represent many thousand feet of land. Will the Minister tell us whether there were any others interested for damages to that land?

Mr. HAGGART. The total amount of their claim was $37,719, and there was a judgment for $26,218, leaving a balance of claims unsettled of over $11,000. Every one of them was contested.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman say whether this claim that has been settled for $26,000, remained in possession of the man who originally had the claim, or has it been transferred, or was it bought up by this firm of lawyers?

Mr. HAGGART. This individual, knowing the Government would be likely to want the property in a short time, purchased the property for either $10,000 or $11,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. So that a firm of lawyers, acting for the country, went and bought the property?

Mr. HAGGART. No; it was bought by some person who got information that it would be wanted for the railway. We thought the price paid for it was a reasonable one, and refused to give any more, but the Exchequer Court granted an additional sum.

Mr. McMULLEN. There has, no doubt, been looseness in connection with the expenditure on a work that has cost ten times more than was estimated. It has been a veritable sink hole, and we have not yet got to the bottom of it. When the item comes up for further discussion, I hope the information will show that proper care has been exercised by the Government in protecting the public interests.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. Minister has not yet answered the question I put. He asks for an appropriation of $17,000. I understand there is a judgment of the Exchequer Court against the department for $26,000. How does the Minister intend to apply that sum which he asks to be voted?

Mr. HAGGART. I believe an amount was voted last year in the Supplementary Estimates on this account, and that sum, with this amount, will enable the department to pay the judgment.

Mr. LAURIER. Has the amount of Mr. Gibson's judgment been paid. I see a statement in 'Le Quotidien,' of 29th, to the effect that $19,000 has been paid. This is what I find: Settlement of Claim—It is known that Mr. Gibson, of Lévis, has obtained a judgment for about $30,000 against the Federal Government for lands in this city. Mr. Panet Angers has received a cheque from the Federal Government for $19,000 in settlement of the claim. The Federal Government will wait until the Local Government has given a discharge to the corporation of Lévis to make a final settlement of those claims.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know what the Finance Department has paid. We had only $17,000 appropriation with which to pay such claims, and I do not think the Auditor General would allow the department to draw a cheque for $19,000.

Mr. LAURIER. You did not pay it?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The judgment could have been paid without coming to the railway department for the amount of it. There is a statutory provision whereby, whenever a judgment is recognized it can be paid out of unappropriated funds; but we prefer to come to Parliament and place a vote in the Estimates so that the matter may be explained.

Mr. LAURIER. So there is no Minister on the Treasury benches who is in a position to say at the moment that it has not been paid?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It has not been paid.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No cheque for $19,000 on account has been issued?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There has not.

Indiantown Branch..... $3,000

Mr. McMULLEN. For what purpose is a further sum required for Indian Town Branch?

Mr. HAGGART. To settle land claims, and an account sent to the department by Senator Snowball. He has prepared a very heavy claim which is being resisted, as not being based on a good foundation, but it is being further looked into by Mr. Archibald, chief engineer of the Intercolonial railway, and the engineer who is referred to in the contract whose settlement is to be final.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the entire cost of the branch?

Mr. HAGGART. $195,700

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the length of it.

Mr. HAGGART. Fourteen miles.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is a mere snowball when compared with the other.

Extension North Sydney Branch to deep water $20,000

Mr. HAGGART. This is merely a revote to carry out the arrangement with the town of Sydney. When they carry out their arrangement with us we intend to build a branch to the sea from the present station.

Mr. McMULLEN. What about the property that was purchased for this purpose?

Mr. HAGGART. The Government has the property. The town of Sydney prefers another line for reaching the sea, and when they recoup us for the land already purchased by the Government, and provide the land for the proposed plan which they seem to favour, we will build the terminus to the sea.

Branch from Bedford to Dartmouth $198,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this?

Mr. HAGGART. The bridge from Halifax to Dartmouth was swept away by a storm, and instead of rebuilding the bridge which for the second time was carried away, the people of Dartmouth preferred a direct line of communication with the Intercolonial Railway. The estimate to renew the bridge as it was before, was $33,000, and to put in a masonry and steel bridge it would cost $235,000, and, inasmuch as the people of Dartmouth and Halifax appear to prefer the branch via Bedford than via the Narrows, and as the scheme is cheaper, the Government thought it best to construct a branch railway which would be seven or eight miles long.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) By whom is this estimate made?

Mr. HAGGART. By the engineers of the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does that include everything?

Mr. HAGGART. It includes everything as I understand; expropriation, cost of work, and everything.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the hon. gentleman got any details because it strikes me as being marvellously below what I understood from some other people it would cost.

Mr. HAGGART. I have not got the details, but I thoroughly looked into it with the chief engineer of the department, and this is the full estimate for the building of the branch.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will it cover land damages too?

Mr. HAGGART. It covers everything.

Mr. FORBES. Does the hon. gentleman intend to rebuild the bridge?

Mr. HAGGART. No?

Mr. FORBES. Does he intend to remove it, because it is an obstruction to navigation?

Mr. HAGGART. It is partly removed now and we intend to remove part of it and use it somewhere else.

Mr. FORBES. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows that the last time, the bridge did not go down in the storm at all. It was a calm and still night when the bridge disappeared.

Mr. McMULLEN. I really think it is about time that we should quit building branches to the Intercolonial Railway. The people of this country have $53,000,000 invested in the Intercolonial Railway, upon which they are paying $2,000,000 a year interest, and they do not get a brass farthing by way of return. The hon. Minister has not come within a considerable sum of making Government roads pay operating expenses, and I really think that we should quit sinking money in railways that are bringing nothing in return to the people of this country.

Mr. FORBES. Will the distance from the junction on the main line from Bedford to Dartmouth be less than the distance from the same junction into the depot at Halifax ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, about a mile or two, I believe.

Mr. FORBES. It is expected that the heavy freight will go to Dartmouth.

Mr. HAGGART. All that is intended to go to Dartmouth will go to Dartmouth.

Mr. FORBES. I am afraid Halifax freight will go there too ?

Mr. HAGGART. If any one chooses to send freight to Halifax via Dartmouth we will carry it that way.

To authorize payment of costs of litigation in connection with construction of railways and canals..... $6,000

Mr. LAURIER. What is the explanation of this item ?

Mr. HAGGART. After the works of construction on the different railways and canals are completed, various litigations ensue ; and as no sum has been appropriated for that purpose, we ask for this sum. We hope that none of it will be expended.

Mr. LAURIER. I am afraid, judging by the past, that it will not go far.

Soulanges Canal..... $750,000

Mr. HAGGART. The construction of the locks and the prism of the canal is under contract, and it is estimated that this sum will be expended during the year 1894-95.

Mr. LAURIER. How much will be required to complete the work ?

Mr. HAGGART. Up to the present there has been expended $685,285, and the estimated cost of the canal is $1,750,000. There will be fourteen feet of water on the mitre sills, and the size of the locks is 280 feet by 46 feet.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to adopt concrete for the backing on the face of the walls ?

Mr. FORBES.

Mr. HAGGART. No. It was under the consideration of the department whether or not it would be advisable to adopt concrete entirely for the locks. We are making an experiment on the Soulanges Canal by using concrete for the bottom of one of the locks ; the facing of the lock is to be of cut stone. The experience on the other side of the adoption of concrete and stone together has not been satisfactory ; there is apt to be a dividing line. You must either adopt concrete entirely or stone entirely. Although not an engineer, my opinion would be in favour of concrete for locks. The engineers in the department, however, have been in favour of cut stone.

Mr. GIBSON. Where a contract was let on the supposition that concrete was to be used entirely, what arrangement will be made in the event of the contractor being obliged to change and use stone for backing instead of concrete ?

Mr. HAGGART. There is to be no change in the decision of the department at the time of the letting of the contract. There has been no change in the specifications in any instance, in any of the contracts on the Soulanges Canal.

Mr. GIBSON. Is it not a fact that some of the contracts were awarded on the distinct understanding that concrete was to be used, and at lower figures than were named by others who had tendered on the basis of using stone for backing.

Mr. HAGGART. No. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. There has been no change in any contract since it has been awarded.

Mr. GIBSON. Will there be any ?

Mr. HAGGART. Nor will there be, so far as I know at present.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has not one of the contractors abandoned his contract ?

Mr. HAGGART. One gentleman who has five or six sections asked to be relieved of the building of No. 12. That is Mr. Goodwin. The Government have taken no action on that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is conducting it at present ?

Mr. HAGGART. At present Mr. Goodwin is the contractor. The Government has agreed to transfer one of the contracts from Mr. Goodwin to Mr. O'Leary, who was foreman with Mr. Goodwin, and he is going on with the work.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is Mr. Goodwin still responsible for the work ?

Mr. HAGGART. No. Mr. O'Leary has made the deposit in cash that Mr. Goodwin did for carrying out the contract.

Mr. GIBSON. Has not the Government let to Davis & Sons a contract for about $300,000 worth of rough stone for some of the work on the Soulanges Canal?

Mr. HAGGART. No, I do not think Mr. Davis has any contract on the Soulanges Canal at all.

Cornwall Canal. $450,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What condition is this work in, and how long does the Minister expect it will take to complete it?

Mr. HAGGART. I expect that all the contracts on the Cornwall Canal will be completed in two seasons.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the anticipated entire cost of this canal?

Mr. HAGGART. The total cost of the enlargement is $4,000,000, of which $2,922,192.96 has been expended.

Mr. McMULLEN. From the reports which the hon. Minister has received from his engineers, does he expect that this canal will be completed within the original estimate?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. There has been no change in the contractors on this canal?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there was no contract given to Davis & Sons for the construction of any work in connection with the Cornwall Canal?

Mr. HAGGART. There was an extension of the contract. I brought down the papers giving full information on the subject. For the reason assigned in those papers and on the recommendation of the resident engineer and the chief engineer, their contract was extended on account of the facilities they enjoyed for doing the work. They were the only parties who could complete it within the time, as the material to be used had to be taken from their former contract, and the price was not in excess of that in any of the contracts let on the Cornwall Canal. The work consisted of building a dam at the head of Sheik's Island and at the foot.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Sheik's Island dam. I understand, they have a contract for building?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the amount?

Mr. HAGGART. $384,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that the construction of that dam was given to them without any tender?

Mr. HAGGART. They made an offer to the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Without tenders being called for?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So that they got the contract, without calling for tenders. Had there been any contract given out before that for the construction of this?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Were there not some sections under contract which had to be abandoned in consequence of the new dam?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What sections were they?

Mr. HAGGART. Five and six.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who had the contract for 5 and 6?

Mr. HAGGART. Gilbert Bros.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What became of their contract?

Mr. HAGGART. It was a saving to abandon it. There was no necessity for doing the work. There was a recommendation to Council—I do not know whether it ever passed or not—but there was a recommendation from my department anyway, and an offer made to Gilbert Bros. in lieu of the profits which would likely accrue to them on this contract. They were to be allowed 15 per cent of the actual estimated cost of construction. A part of the work was constructed and built, and that offer was to cover the remainder to be done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Gilbert & Sons had a contract for building sections 5 and 6, and had done certain work on that contract. The department then let a contract to Davis & Sons, without calling for tenders, for the construction of the Sheik's Island dam at $384,000. This did away with the necessity of completing Gilbert Bros.' contract, and consequently they are making a claim upon the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HAGGART. I think they are settled with.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What did it cost to give this contract without tendering to Davis & Sons?

Mr. HAGGART. The amount recommended to be paid Gilbert Bros. was $31,000, which they agreed to accept.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then, in order that Davis & Sons might get, without tendering, a contract for $384,000, we paid another firm $31,000 to get out. That is the English of it. Can the hon. gentleman explain how it is that he was induced to depart from what we have always considered to be almost a necessity in the letting of public works, namely: the calling for tenders, and giving out, without tenders, a work of this kind, amounting to $384,000 to those gentlemen who had been accused, of course, very falsely, of being very great favourites of the hon. gentleman's department. I refer to Messrs. Davis & Sons.

Mr. HAGGART. The Order in Council and the memo. of the department set forth fully the reasons. It was impossible to do the work without the consent of Davis & Sons, who had the contract for building the adjoining sections, and the work could not be done by others anything like the price at which Davis & Sons could do it. We asked them if they would do it at the figures they got for their original contract, and I got a report from the officers of my department. I wanted to know whether they were fair prices or in excess of the prices given to any of the contractors in that particular work. The report of the department is to the effect that they were not. The officer in charge of the work recommended that it be given to Davis, as he was the only person whose work adjoined this particular section, and who could do it in the time required by the department, that his prices were reasonable, that they were less than the amount estimated by the department as required to do the work, and were not larger than any other contractor was getting on the Cornwall Canal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Those statements can be offered in excuse for letting every contract without tender. Whether the contract was let at the lowest prices that could be obtained, if put up to public competition, is a matter we cannot tell. I want the hon. gentleman to explain why it was necessary to give this firm of contractors this large work without tender—why it could not be put up to public tender?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not the papers here. If the hon. gentleman will look at the papers brought down, he will see that the reasons are fully set forth in the memo. and the Order in Council, and they are comprehended in the remarks I made a short while ago. Davis had the adjoining work, it was impossible, in the time required by the department, to have that particular work completed without his consent or by some one who had his consent, as the material to be used in the construction of the dam and the works had to be taken from the contract he was executing—from the excavation and dredging—and I required further that Davis should do the work within the prices recommended to me by the engineers, and within the prices that any other tenderer received for like work or any work of a similar character on the Cornwall Canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is difficult to follow those reasons, I admit. But, surely, when the engineers made their original reports on which these various works were based—unless this was entirely an after-thought—there should have been no difficulty in so arranging matters that all would be tendered for.

Mr. HAGGART. It was entirely an after-thought. The plan which was adopted of building the Cornwall canal from the head of Sheik's Island to the bottom of it is a plan adopted since I became the head of the department, contrary, as I stated before, to the advice given by Mr. Page. I was so impressed with the plan, and so was every engineer who ever crossed the work, that the wonder was that it had not been originally adopted. We saved $200,000 by the abandonment of the contract, and the extra cost would be about $180,000—say $200,000. And we have a canal which can be traversed in one third time of the present canal, besides avoiding the danger of the banks breaking away. I never could understand why the plan of building dams at the head and foot of Sheik's Island was not adopted at first.

Mr. LAURIER. So that Mr. Page was altogether wrong?

Mr. HAGGART. He was altogether wrong. As I said in my statement to the House, the plan adopted for building the Cornwall canal was one recommended by Mr. Page. But I gave the authority of the different engineers who recommended the other plan—Mr. Shanly, Mr. Keefer, my present deputy, and others. Moreover, I have no hesitation in saying that any one who ever went over the work, whether an engineer or not, will regard this plan as the best. We all remember the speeches of my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) in which he recommended the course which has been adopted.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Page was considered a pretty good engineer in his day. Unfortunately he is not here to defend his own plan. The hon. gentleman is aware that it has been a most lamentable experience of the department of which he is the head that, as soon as a plan is completed and the contract entered into, some flaw is discovered, making changes necessary. It may be that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been saved to the country by his plan, but if so, it is the first instance of such a result. The usual result of the discovery of these flaws has been to double the cost of the work carried on. So the hon. gentleman will not take it as offensive if I say that for my part I have great doubts as to the character given to the plan of Mr. Page. Mr. Page was accounted to be one of the best engineers the country ever had—I have nothing to say against any other. But, until we have had more explanation, I think the items should not be pressed, but we should have the opportunity of examining the papers which were laid on the Table, and to which the hon. gentleman referred a moment ago in the explanation he gave.

Mr. HAGGART. The papers have been on the Table a number of weeks.

Mr. LAURIER. But the hon. gentleman referred to the papers and said that if he had them he could give further explanations.

Mr. HAGGART. I can give any explanation necessary. What does the hon. gentleman want?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman says that the reasons are referred to in the report to Council.

Mr. HAGGART. These reports and the Orders in Council, the reports of engineers and other papers have been on the Table for a fortnight.

Mr. LAURIER. But the hon. gentleman said he could not give the reasons, as he had not the papers. If those papers are on the Table we would like to have an opportunity to look at them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will see that the same remarks I made with regard to railways apply to this also. It is not possible for us to be prepared for the discussion of these items unless we go through in due rotation. We have not objected to the hon. gentleman passing over a number of items which we had expected to take up to-night. When a point like this arises it is better that the item should stand over, so that we may look over the papers in the case.

Mr. LAURIER. We can reserve one item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Better reserve this one, I should say, as this appears to be the one concerning which doubt exists, and in which there has evidently been a departure from the usual course.

Mr. McCARTHY. There has not only been a departure from the usual course, but apparently a departure from the law. As I understand it, no contract is to be given without tenders being called for. This is provided for in the Public Works Act:

The minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all the works, except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers in the service of the department.

Now, I suppose the Order in Council referred to purports to give the reasons for this departure from the express directions of the statute.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Canals are not covered by the Public Works Act; they are under the Railway Department.

Mr. McCARTHY. But the Public Works Act is surely applicable.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; it is not.

Mr. LAURIER. That Act was passed before the department was divided into the two present Departments of Public Works and Railways and Canals.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not at all; it was passed in 1886.

Mr. LAURIER. It was consolidated in 1886. The contention that this Act does not apply to the Department of Railways and Canals leaves us in this position: that if the Minister of Public Works desires to carry on a public work he must call for tenders, while the Minister of Railways and Canals can dispense with calling for tenders.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. All I say is that it does not apply to the canals. It was passed in 31 Victoria, but it has since been altered.

Mr. LAURIER. In what respect, and when?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When the Department of Railways and Canals was made a separate department.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it the contention of the hon. gentleman that when the department was divided this Act ceased to apply?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. LAURIER. I certainly cannot see that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think you will find it plainly stated in the Act.

Mr. LAURIER. But if the hon. gentleman's contention is right, the Minister of Public Works when he has a contract for dredging or building a dam to give, is bound to ask for tenders, while the Minister of Railways and Canals, when he has to spend $4,000,000 upon the canal need not call for tenders.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not dealing with what one Minister or another department can do; I am simply saying that this does not apply to the canals. That is my recollection, and I think the Act so declares.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But if the hon. gentleman's contention is correct, the result follows which the hon. leader of the Opposition states; that is the contention.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not making any contention of that kind.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But you make a statement of the law, and the hon. leader of the Opposition shows what the result is.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. But the hon. gentleman must not ascribe to me what I have not stated.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say the hon. gentleman has made a statement that this Act does not apply to canal work. My hon. friend shows that the result is that millions may be spent without calling for tenders.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That may be.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But we want to know the effect of what the hon. gentleman says. I understand the hon. gentleman to make the statement positively, and I suppose he must have looked at the law pretty closely.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. HAGGART. I may say to the hon. gentleman that they acted upon that meaning of the law when they were in power. I can give an instance and a place where they gave a contract of $500,000 or $600,000 to Mr. Goodwin on the Grenville Canal, without tenders, and he was not a contractor anywhere near the works.

Mr. LAURIER. Could you prove that?

Mr. HAGGART. I am only giving an instance of what has been done.

Mr. GIBSON. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways the reason why the work had to be given to Davis & Sons, and why he thinks they had a right to get the contract. I would like to know what shape the work was in. Was it properly expropriated by the Government and paid for by the Government, and how did it require the consent of Davis & Sons to proceed with the work, and in consequence of their objection the Government were obliged to give it to them?

Mr. HAGGART. On another item I will bring down the whole information. The property was not expropriated when it was let to Mr. Davis. He was asked if he would do the particular work for the contract prices or the schedule prices that he had under his contract. I told the Chief Engineer of my department to be certain that in any contracts he let in that section of the country, to be sure that prices were not larger than theirs. I also required him to ascertain whether it was possible for any other person to enter into the contract without the appliances, and without getting access to Mr. Davis's work for the purpose of obtaining material to do the work. On the recommendation of the engineer of the works, and on the recommendation of the Chief Engineer, under those sections, I recommended to the Council the extension of Mr. Davis's contract.

Mr. GIBSON. Could not that contract have been let and the contractor been allowed to make an arrangement with Mr. Davis for the purchase of as much of the stone as might come out of his contract? He was paid for excavating, blasting and rock cutting in this section. He was at liberty to do with that stone as he saw fit. It was quite within the power of the contractor who might be awarded this contract, without the intervention of the Government, to make an arrangement with Mr.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Davis for the purchase of this stone. Any contractor, it seems to me, when the work was abandoned, could have easily got hundreds of men to do the work in the same time, because they would have had the same appliance that Mr. Davis had. Mr. Davis had appliance enough for his own section, no doubt, but if the work was extended to him he required to get additional plant, and other contractors could have done the same thing. There is no reason why a contractor whose work adjoins another section, must of necessity be the only contractor in the country fit to undertake the work of that adjoining section. On the Welland Canal and on other canals, one section after another is let to different contractors, and there never seems to be any difficulty at all where the contracts join. If one contractor is fortunate in having material that he can dispose of, so much the better for him and so much the better for the man who has to buy. If he has to bring his stone a long distance, it will cost him a greater sum of money, but if he can buy the stone from an adjoining contract, he can save that hauling. I have had considerable experience in building canals, and I do not think any contractor would object to another man coming upon his section and carting away his stone if he was getting well paid for it. I cannot see at present, before the papers are brought down, any necessity for giving out that work without asking for tenders. If Mr. Davis had tendered at a reasonable price compared with the other contractors, there may have been some good excuse for the Government awarding that contract to him. But under the circumstances, I do not see that the Government was justified in awarding the work without inviting tenders.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. One word about the Public Works Act including both classes of work. At the time it was originally passed, the Railways and Canals were set over to a different department. The same clause is put into both Acts. The Public Works Act does not apply to this canal at all. The same provision is in the Railways and Canals Act, section 11, and these are the exceptions:

The minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement, for the execution of all work, except in cases of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which, from the nature of the work, it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would not apply to the case of Mr. Davis, who was not an officer in the service.

Mr. LAURIER. The rule is the same in all works. I thought that was the contention of the hon. member for Simcoe.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, the hon. member for Simcoe read the section from the Public Works Act, and I said the Public Works Act would not apply.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am unable to understand the reasoning of the Minister of Justice. The Public Works Act says the Minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works, &c., as the First Minister has just read it. The hon. gentleman said that section did not apply.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I beg your pardon. I said you read it from the Public Works Act. I did not say the section did not apply.

Mr. McCARTHY. You turn over and you get exactly the same words.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sure the hon. member understands me perfectly. When I asked him what he was reading from, he said the Public Works Act, and I said that did not apply, and I sent for the books to see whether we had the same clause in the Railways and Canals Act. In the meantime the hon. gentlemen seek to hoist upon me a contention which was theirs alone. The natural result of that would be that the Minister of Public Works would call for tenders and the Minister of Railways would not. It took me about ten minutes to convince the hon. gentleman of that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has succeeded in convincing himself now that he was wrong, at any rate, and that the Act controlling the Canal Department has a clause in it prohibiting the Minister from letting these contracts except by tender.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is what I contended all along.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But the hon. gentleman has a most ingenious way of hiding his contentions at times, covering them up in extraordinary language. Whether the contract entered into with Davis & Sons is legal or not, I cannot say, not having the Act before me.

Mr. HAGGART. It is a regular contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Did they give any security?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, they had to make the usual cash deposit of 5 per cent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that deposit of 5 per cent still remaining?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has no change been made?

Mr. HAGGART. No change.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No change of any kind made in their cash deposit?

Mr. HAGGART. Not that I am aware of, notwithstanding the 'Free Press.'

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see it stated in the press that such is the fact.

Mr. HAGGART. There has been no change in that contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It may be in some other contract under the Public Works Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So far as it is possible to ascertain what the real facts are, there does not appear to have been any physical obstacle to other contractors carrying on the work. It might have cost a little more, or it might not. It is a point on which we remain in uncertainty, because no tender ever was asked for. But there does not appear, so far as I can judge, even from the Minister's explanations, to have been any physical difficulty in the way of the construction of this dam.

Mr. HAGGART. There was no physical difficulty. The material might have been taken from a hundred miles distant. The real reason was that the principal material used in the construction of the dam—this is an earth dam—was material that was excavated for the bridges and the deepening of the Cornwall Canal, and was taken from the contract of Davis & Sons. He thought probably it would be far more economical and more in the interest of the Government, that the material should be used in the construction of this dam.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was the hon. Minister advised by the Department of Justice to let the contract without tender?

Mr. HAGGART. I made the recommendation to Council, and on the action of the Council the contract was let. The Minister of Justice may have concurred in it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps as a member of the Cabinet, and yet not as Minister of Justice. There is considerable difference between consent being given by a brother Councillor, and consent being given, based on the construction of the statutes, by the First Minister in his capacity as Attorney General of this Dominion.

Item allowed to stand.

Rapide Plat..... $100,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much is required to complete this work?

Mr. HAGGART. The estimated cost is $1,600,000, and the total expenditure has been $893,458.

Galops Canal..... $150,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand you are constructing a new channel at this point?

Mr. HAGGART. It was constructed two years ago, and supposed to be finished, but there is an action pending in regard to it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who were the contractors ?

Mr. HAGGART. Gilbert & Son.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What was the cost ?

Mr. HAGGART. There has been an expenditure of $446,500. The contractors have a suit against the Government for $130,000. The department contends that the contractors have not performed their work, and refuses to pay them anything.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) For what reason ?

Mr. HAGGART. Because the channel was not taken out to the depth or breadth contracted for.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it used for navigation ?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Who were the resident engineers superintending its construction ?

Mr. HAGGART. It was under the general direction of Mr. Rubidge. The engineers in charge of the work were Mr. Haycock and others.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I believe the contractors contend that the local engineers had certified to the work at the close of its construction. Are the local engineers still in the employ of the Government ?

Mr. HAGGART. I discharged the man in charge of the canal, after a re-examination of the work by Mr. Kennedy, of Montreal, who went over it, and reported that the prisms were not taken out according to the contract, although the work had been certified to by the local engineer. On the report of Mr. Kennedy I refused to make any payments, and, in fact, have not paid anything on the contract since I became Minister, and I removed the engineer in charge of the work, because I thought his certificates were not such as should have been given.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was he suspended ?

Mr. HAGGART. He was dismissed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What amount has been expended by the Minister in ascertaining that the certificate was wrong ?

Mr. HAGGART. A very large sum, about $18,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand seventeen feet was to be the depth of the channel ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. Minister explain how it was possible to expend $18,000 in making the investigation ?

Mr. HAGGART. It was a very expensive work to carry out accurately. There is a very rapid current at that particular place.

Mr. HAGGART.

A steamboat had to be employed during the whole time when the examination was being made, and particular instruments were required for testing the bottom. Moreover, a sounding apparatus had to be erected for ascertaining exactly the depth of the prisms.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the work utilized in any way ?

Mr. HAGGART. The boats at present in use do not require 14-foot navigation, and there is sufficient depth without going over to that channel. It is, therefore, not required until a 14-foot navigation is secured throughout the St. Lawrence Canals.

Mr. GIBSON. I suppose the Minister obtained estimates from the engineer, who made a thorough survey, as to the cost of finishing the work.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. What was the estimate ?

Mr. HAGGART. One of the estimates was that it would not cost much more than the survey has cost, for there are only 2,300 yards of work.

Mr. GIBSON. What was the allowance per yard ?

Mr. HAGGART. Nine dollars.

Mr. GIBSON. From the remarks of the Minister it appears that the survey had cost about the same amount as was required to complete the work ; but if properly done, the surveying would cost as much because there is a rapid current at that place, and to make a thorough examination of the work, as no doubt Mr. Kennedy would do, and make careful soundings and measurements and prepare plans, the cost would not be much less than that required for taking out 2,000 yards.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the engineer Mr. Rubidge who gave the certificate that it had been completed according to contract, been dismissed ?

Mr. HAGGART. No ; Mr. Rubidge was not the engineer in charge of the work. He had to depend entirely upon the engineer who was immediately superintending the work. The contention of Mr. Haycock the resident engineer, to do him justice, is this : He says that with all the appliances that it was possible for him to have for the purpose of finding out whether the prism was actually taken out or not—and he was most correct about it—he says that the prism was taken out. The contractors, Messrs. Gilbert & Sons, say that the prism was taken out too, but that on account of the current, large quantities of the rock which had been excavated were drifted in again. I gave explicit instructions to Mr. Kennedy to find out whether it was loose rock or rock in situ. Mr. Kennedy or his engineers, who actually sounded it, are of opinion that the rock never was removed, that it was rock that could not have been removed by Mr. Gilbert, and that he ought to do it again. Mr. Gilbert, in taking out the rock, in some places has gone three or four feet, and in some five or six feet below the depth which was required of him for the purpose of making the excavation, and he has really taken out a large quantity of rock in excess of the original estimate. When I became head of the department I found that the contract had not been literally followed, and I refused to pay him. Mr. Kennedy, who made the examination of the work, says that in order to make the excavation according to the estimate required by the engineers, it would require a further expenditure of $20,000 or $30,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was informed that Mr. Rubidge had given a certificate that the work had been completed according to contract.

Mr. HAGGART. Very likely he did. He very likely certified to the report of the engineer on that particular portion of the work.

Mr. GIBSON. There is no doubt from the explanation given that too large a quantity was taken out in one place, and not enough in another.

Mr. HAGGART. There was a large increase of the quantity taken out. So much so that Mr. Page, the engineer in charge of the work, made him allowance of half a foot beyond the actual estimate and paid him for it. His contention was that it was impossible for him to take it down to the actual estimate without a larger extension of half a foot, and he claims for the larger quantity taken out. The question is now before the Exchequer Court. The contention of the Government is that he should have taken down to the actual prism, because if any one point is higher than the depth required for navigation it limits the navigation to that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Rubidge is not held by you responsible for that certificate?

Mr. HAGGART. No; I held the officer responsible who was particularly in charge of that part of the work, and whom Mr. Rubidge depended entirely upon for his certificate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Rubidge was not the local engineer?

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no.

Mr. REID. I would like to say about this matter that when I first brought it before the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals he at once promised to do all that he could to set the matter right, and from the time I first mentioned it to him until the present moment he has done everything in his power to get at the bottom of this whole affair. No member of any Government could have done more than he has done to set it right. I agree with the Minister that Mr. Haycock and the other engineers who were in charge of that work are responsible, but I think that Mr. Rubidge is also responsible for this investigation. He held an investigation at first before Mr. Kennedy, and I believe that he is responsible for not finding out the trouble in the first place, and for the cost of the second investigation. However, the Minister got Mr. Kennedy to go ahead with the examination, and Mr. Kennedy has found out the difficulty in the channel, and there is no doubt that it is a good thing it has been found out, because some vessels might have been wrecked, and probably lives lost.

Mr. GIBSON. I know neither of the engineers, but I hardly think it is fair that the whole blame should be cast on Mr. Rubidge or Mr. Haycock. As I understand the explanation given by the Minister of Railways and Canals these officers had not at their service the same apparatus for making the soundings that Mr. Kennedy had. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) knows quite well, if the Government did not provide vessels and suitable apparatus to make the soundings, it was impossible for them to arrive at a correct idea.

Mr. REID. I think Mr. Rubidge had all the necessary apparatus that was required.

Mr. GIBSON. Perhaps so.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12 o'clock, midnight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 1st June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SHEIK'S ISLAND DAM.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways to a matter that transpired yesterday. The hon. gentleman told the House two or three times in succession that he had already laid on the Table the papers moved for in the early part of the session with regard to the Sheik's Island dam. The hon. gentleman is in error, as the papers have not been brought down.

Mr. HAGGART. I thought they were. I know they were sent to the department, and I will have them all brought down to-day.

INSPECTION OF SHIPS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 113) to amend the Inspection of Ships Act. He said: This Bill repeals the whole of section 8 of the Act of 1891 and re-enacts the language of that section with the addition of about two lines. When the Act of 1891 was introduced there was no reference to this subject in the original Bill, and it was in committee that clause "a" was added in reference to the inspection of loading tackle. That was a subject that had been pressed to the front, notably by the labour interests and the representatives of those who are connected with loading ships, at the port of Montreal particularly. Clause "a" was introduced to give the inspectors under the Act power to inspect loading tackle and machinery for loading or unloading ships, but there seems to be some difficulty in working it out. For instance, clause 3 made the Act not applicable to vessels classed in Lloyd's Register of British and foreign shipping, or to ships classed in any other corporation or association for the survey and registry of ships. That was perfectly proper as the Bill originally stood, but it defeats the object of clause "a," and this Bill is intended to remedy that.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The object of this provision is to limit clause 3 to ships belonging to Her Majesty?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not a personal recollection of the facts; but the committee will see that the provisions of the Bill are very arbitrary, and the mode of procedure very summary. Whether or not it applies to ships duly registered and inspected in Lloyd's, the Bill leaves the decision to the absolute discretion of the inspector; there is no standard laid down to which he must conform.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He can do nothing himself except report.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But there is no standard to guide a ship-owner, and up to which the tackle, machinery and apparatus must come. That is left absolutely to the inspector, and who is the inspector? If he considers that the tackle, machinery or apparatus used for loading or unloading is defective so as to be dangerous to life, he is to report to the Minister, and the Minister may order such tackle, machinery and apparatus not to be used, and if it is used after that, it is liable to be seized and sold.

Mr. HAGGART.

The inspector is to be the absolute arbiter and judge; if he determines against the tackle and apparatus, it is liable for the penalty; there is no trial. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to this because it may be open to very grave misuse, unless the inspector is a very first-class man; from vindictive or other motives he might put a ship-owner to every imaginable trouble. The Minister is not in a position to revise the report of the inspector, he only receives it; there is no way provided by which he can judge whether the inspector has been properly advised or not. On the report of the inspector, the apparatus and tackle is condemned and sold. The hon. Minister may be able to give the committee sufficient evidence why such extraordinary powers should be vested in one man; but I submit that before the Bill is passed some evidence should be given that cases have occurred in which ship-owners have sent their vessels to sea with apparatus and machinery so defective as to endanger life and property. We all know that ship-owners are subjected to a great deal of trouble already by the various inspections permitted and required by our statutes. They are complaining of that all the time, and we do not wonder at it; they would like to be free from all inspection. At the same time, while I never oppose any Bill providing for a proper inspection of ships or tackle or apparatus when circumstances show that that is necessary, I do not feel like voting even for the re-enactment of this clause unless the hon. gentleman is able to state that he has evidence in his possession that heretofore ships have been sent out with such defective apparatus and tackle as to endanger life and property and to make this provision necessary. I would also like him to give the House an assurance that the men in whom this power is to be vested can safely be intrusted with it, and that it is not likely to be exercised vindictively or improperly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman has not carefully examined the clause. If he remembers the discussion which we had in committee on the old Bill, he will know that much that he has said applies to the main provisions of the Act as it now stands. I agree with him, and the House took the view, that without the most careful investigation being made, there should be no such interference with these ships; and for the purpose of confining the operation of the Act to cases of necessity only, the provision of section 3 was put in. There was no immediate necessity for bothering with vessels that had a class, and, therefore, they were excluded. The provision under consideration concerns not the machinery of the ship, but only the machinery used on the wharf, or, if on the ship, only for the purpose of loading or unloading. Distressing accidents have occurred. Rotten ropes have been used, and the hoisting gear would descend suddenly and break a man's leg or arm, and I believe in some cases fatal accidents have occurred at the port of Montreal, from which the complaint came. There was no difference of opinion, I think, at the time the subject was fully discussed and considered here, as to the advisability of our legislating to prevent as far as we could these distressing accidents. As to the officers who will have charge of the inspection, they can do nothing but report. They do not interfere with the vessel; they do not exercise any dangerous discretion or powers; they simply report the fact that rotten gear or unsafe tackle is being used. Then, of course, if the department is able to discharge its important functions, and it has proper officers at the port, no measures will be taken except such as are necessary. The proper officers are provided for by section 4 of the Act, which says:

The Governor in Council may from time to time appoint any port warden, harbour master, inspector of hulls and equipment of steamboats or officer of the Marine Department, to inspect the hulls and equipment of ships.

And as a matter of fact, the men appointed are port wardens, harbour masters and inspectors of hulls, and no other officers. We may take it for granted that they would be capable of reporting that rotten gear was being used, and then the order would go from the department to prevent it being used.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

PRESERVATION OF GAME IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. DALY moved second reading of Bill (No. 115) for the preservation of game in the unorganized portions of the North-west Territories of Canada.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FLINT. I would like to call the attention of the committee to some observations made on this Bill by a gentleman very well qualified to speak on the matter, and very much interested in it. He makes this note: "The musk ox robes are of the very best on September 1st, and the close season should not go beyond that date." There was a remark made, when this Bill was passing the Senate, that perhaps these dates could have been fixed better if experts, hunters and persons well acquainted with the habits of fur-bearing animals, had been called in to give advice. The date should be changed to the 1st day of September, or much earlier than the middle of October.

Mr. DALY. The dates have been fixed in accordance with the information given to the department by Mr. Ogilvie, Mr. Dawson, Mr. Chipman, Commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company, and other people conversant with the habits of the animals in that country. There was considerable discussion in the Senate, and that body were of opinion that the dates were in accord with what was supposed to be right by those most conversant with the matter in that country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is a pity that we should leave the orthography of "Keewatin" as it is. The word is pronounced with a long "a" and ought to be spelt "Keewaytin." I would move that the orthography be made right.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 8,

Mr. FLINT. I think clause "a" of this section is too wide. It seems to me that even Indians and inhabitants of the country should not be allowed to destroy these animals during the close season, except for food. This clause will practically almost annul the general provisions of the Bill, it is so broad. A party of Indians with one trapper or hunter might, during the close season, destroy many of these animals for pleasure or for commercial purposes. I think it would be wise to amend that so as to allow Indians or inhabitants of the country to shoot these animals during the close season for food purposes only.

Mr. DALY. But unfortunately, the inhabitants of the country are dependent upon the game for their food. The only thing we can do is to prevent these animals being shot for pleasure by others than the inhabitants. The inhabitants are mainly half-breeds, and it is impossible to make the Bill more stringent unless we are prepared to feed these people. So far as the fur-bearing animals are concerned, it is against these people's own interest to destroy them during the close season, for the Hudson's Bay Company will not buy the skins of animals shot during that season. So far as other animals and birds are concerned, these people must have food, and it seems to me this is as far as we can go in providing against the destruction of these animals.

On section 14,

Mr. LAURIER. What is the reason that there is a departure in this case from the rule generally adopted that half the fine shall go to the party who informs?

Mr. DALY. The reason is that in that far-off country, the game guardians might be over-zealous in the enforcement of the law if such an inducement were held out to them.

Mr. LAURIER. But if no incentive is given to anybody for prosecuting, is it not possible, and even likely, that no prosecution will take place, even in case of offences which ought to be prosecuted?

Mr. DALY. Further on, the hon. gentleman will find that provision is made for the payment of game guardians.

On section 17,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Would this Bill prevent persons obtaining the eggs or obtaining the young of these animals with a view to taming them or forming a menagerie? They ought to be at liberty to do that.

Mr. DALY. They can apply for a permit under the provisions of the Act, if they want to do that.

On section 18,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think it is necessary to the preservation of these animals or birds to prevent them being taken alive or their eggs being taken. Suppose a person wishes to form a herd of buffalo, what objection would there be to his catching some of these wood buffalo for that purpose? I think that is a wholly different thing from the destruction of these animals, and might very well be allowed. If the hon. Minister thinks it necessary to have such a restriction, he ought to make some provision that, by application, license might be given for taking these animals alive.

Mr. DALY. I think the clause giving permits will cover that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is such a clause?

Mr. DALY. Yes; you will see it later on.

On section 20,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that is too restrictive.

Mr. DALY. We have got to be particular in outlining exactly what we require, owing to the condition of the country in which the Act is to be enforced. It is following the customary clauses in Bills of this kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No one is likely to take these eggs for mercantile purposes. If they are taken for the purpose of reproducing the animal, or to try experiments, I do not think that ought to be objected to; and the same with regard to taking animals alive. I know cases have occurred under the Ontario law where parties have taken red deer in Muskoka, and brought them home with a view to putting them in a park and preserving them, and these parties were seized and put to great hardship. Where parties wish to form a park of these animals I think they ought to be at liberty to do so.

Mr. DALY. The next clause covers that.

On section 21,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the hon. gentleman will see that it is not quite broad enough to give one power to do legally what he suggests. That will merely authorize him to grant a permit when animals are required for scientific purposes only. Suppose they were wanted to try an experiment in domestication.

Mr. LAURIER.

Mr. DALY. I suppose the only animal they would want to domesticate would be the ox and the bison. But I have no objection to add "or domestic purposes."

Mr. FLINT. I think if the object of the Bill is to preserve these animals, the Minister of the Interior ought to take power to require that outsiders coming into that country for the purpose of hunting shall take out a license and be under certain restrictions. We all know, from information, that in some portions of that country there are enormous herds of deer, which are very tempting to the hunter, and without some careful restriction on the methods of hunting, and on the persons who may go there to slaughter these animals—I am speaking of a time outside the close season altogether—there would be great danger of their being decimated. I think that any person going into that country from the outside for the purpose of hunting, should apply to the proper authorities for a license, and should be under restrictions as to the number he might kill, and so on, these to be settled by the Government. Unless some restrictions of this kind is adopted we shall be opening the door to practices by which that animal may be almost rendered extinct. Hunting grounds in other portions of the world are getting scarcer, and this is almost virgin soil to the hunter, and the present would be a good time for the Government to place restrictions upon outsiders going into that country for the purpose of hunting. I think in other provinces that has been done. In Nova Scotia any persons coming from outside the province to hunt must secure a license under certain restrictions before they can engage in that pastime. I think the Minister of the Interior might amend this clause by providing that any person residing outside that territory shall secure a license under regulations to be approved of by the Governor in Council.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would suggest that in the third line the hon. gentleman insert the words "or to take with a view to domestication."

Mr. DALY. They might take them with a view to domestication and use them for food. However, I have no objection to the amendment. I may say in answer to the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), that this Bill is introduced for the very purpose of overcoming the difficulty he has pointed out. We think that having in the first place provided against the shooting of bison or buffalo for five years, and having restricted the shooting of other animals within the close season, we have gone as far, under the circumstances, as it is necessary to go, and that we will afford all the protection that is required in order to preserve those animals and allow them to increase.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville) moved second reading of Bill (No. 125) to amend the General Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. LAURIER. What are the proposed changes?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The only amendment is the addition of hay to the list of articles subject to inspection. This was suggested by the Montreal Board of Trade, and largely on account of the increased exportation of that article. In fact so necessary was it that hay for exportation should be inspected to meet the demands of foreign trade that the Montreal Board of Trade adopted the rules of inspection incorporated in this Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By what mode does the hon. gentleman propose to inspect the hay? I suppose the amendment refers particularly to pressed hay, in which form almost all the hay we export is sent from the country.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I presume so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does the hon. gentleman propose to inspect it, and what will be the cost? In this case details form the very essence of the measure. I have no objection to reasonable precautions being taken for the purpose of ensuring that fraud is not committed in the packing of hay, but at the same time if there is likelihood of any considerable exportation continuing, which is perhaps a doubtful matter, care should be taken that the inspection was not made expensive. Our people obtain a sufficiently small price for their hay at the present time. I should like to know in what way the inspection is carried out in Montreal or elsewhere, as there appear to be some practical difficulties in the way.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have never heard any fault found, either with the fees or with the mode of inspection. This legislation is fully as much in the interest of the vendor as of the purchaser. No fault has been found during the past season with the system which is now being incorporated in a Bill, either on behalf of the exporter or the foreign purchaser. The department has been informed by the Board of Trade at Montreal that a prejudice existed in the old country against hay sent over without being inspected, that in case of dispute arising with respect to a cargo arriving, say at Liverpool, there was no standard by which the article could be judged, and this provision appears to be really necessary in the interests of the trade and of all parties engaged in it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt that the measure is well intended, and no doubt inspection is very much in the interest of articles sent abroad. But the hon. gentleman must be aware that there is considerable difficulty in properly inspecting pressed hay.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). They do not seem to have discovered it as yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do they manage? Do they take out a sample of the hay, as they take out a sample from a tub of butter?

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill is of great importance at the present time, owing to our increased trade in the exportation of hay during the last few years. In my section of country those engaged in the trade have suffered considerably by parties exporting hay that was not fit to be placed on the English market, and they strongly advised that there should be an inspector appointed to examine the hay, especially at Montreal, when shipped, and thus guard against hay being shipped that was not suitable for the English market and thus injuriously affect the trade. This is a measure that will meet with general approbation; it is one needed, and I am glad that it has been introduced.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I may add that the inspection fee does not exceed 20 cents per ton.

Mr. McMILLAN. What means are to be adopted to classify the hay? I observe the Bill provides that first-class timothy shall not have more than one-eighth of clover. How is the Minister going to ascertain the quantity of clover in a certain quantity of hay shipped from Montreal? During last year I crossed the ocean in a vessel which had on board hay that had been inspected in Montreal, and I can assure the House that it was not such hay as should have been passed by the inspector. If hay is properly packed it is impossible to tell its quality throughout, for if it is packed in damp weather it will be all right outside but rotten within. That has been my own experience. Inspection does not properly gauge the quality of the hay.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I must express surprise that the hon. gentleman should have taken a single instance, and on that condemned the whole system of inspection. No doubt cargoes have reached Liverpool, and fault has been found with the inspection. After all it is only a man's practical judgment that will enable him to judge with some degree of accuracy the quality of the sample as compared with what we call the standard. If last season the hon. gentleman happened to see a cargo of hay that was said to have been inspected, but was not in proper condition, he is giving the strongest possible argument in favour of this Bill, because the system of inspection was not then legalized, and so necessary was it in Montreal that they had to adopt a system in the interests of this growing trade.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the hon. Controller misunderstood the hon. member. The hon. gentleman intended to call the attention of the Controller to the fact that notwithstanding that this hay was inspected it was not up to the standard it was marked. I believe that the inspection of hay is highly desirable, if by it you can secure a good standard for your hay in the foreign market, but people must be able to rely upon the quality that it is branded. The difficulty is in inspecting a bale of pressed hay. It appears to me that it is very hard to tell whether in the centre of that hay there is not more clover than from outside appearance you would expect there was, and so, if the centre were examined the hay might be found to be No. 3, when it was branded as No. 2. When hay is tied up with wires it is nearly as solid as a log and it will be difficult to know what its contents are.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). There has been no trouble so far in satisfying both the purchaser and the vendor of this article. I have no doubt at all but that some means will be found, by those who are expert in the business, of making the proper inspection. It is just the same thing with a person who is not something of an expert in the business, attempting to say from a sample of grain whether it is No. 1 or No. 2. In all these cases the utmost you can do is to approximate to something near what a sample is, by taking a standard.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is very necessary to have this inspection, I believe, but I cannot see that any person by merely looking at a bundle of pressed hay and judging from outside appearances can tell what percentage of clover is in it or what quality it should be marked. I think some means might be adopted by which the bundle could be cut in two when it would be easy judging the quality. A few bundles could be taken out of a hundred bundles sent for inspection and they could be cut in this way.

Mr. COCHRANE. There would be no necessity for that, because it would be impossible to put a forkful of clover hay in the centre of a bale of hay when pressed with the machine. You cannot put one kind of hay in the inside and another kind on the outside. The outside of the bale of hay must represent the quality of hay that is all through it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I agree with my hon. friend that in the pressing machine you cannot put good hay on the outside and bad hay in the centre. The great difficulty will be with hay that is not packed in proper condition or that is not dry enough when pressed. If that should be the case the outside would appear all right but the inside would be useless. I have had some experience of this, crossing the ocean two or three times, even with hay that had been inspected. I believe that there should be an inspection, but I think it would be impossible to properly inspect it unless the bundle is loosened.

Mr. SPROULE. I have several times seen them use a steel rod with spurs on it shaped something like a fish-hook, it brings some of the hay with it, from which it can be seen whether it is improperly cured, or whether it has become discoloured in the centre of the bundle. This, I think, is a very good device and it would obviate the necessity of opening the bundle.

Mr. McMULLEN. From what I know of baled hay, I do not think the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) has muscle enough to run a steel rod of that kind through a bundle of hay.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no difficulty about it, I have seen it done many times, and it does not require a man of even the muscle of the member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do you mean steam-pressed?

Mr. SPROULE. Pressed by the ordinary machines in the country, run by horsepower.

Mr. COCHRANE. It does not make any difference in that respect whether it is steam-pressed or not.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). There is no object whatever on the part of the officers other than to inspect the hay in some proper way, and if this is not the proper way we can remedy it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is nothing compulsory about this Bill, it is voluntary.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It is entirely voluntary.

On section 2,

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to draw the Controller's attention to the fact that I think the Bill ought only to apply to hay for export, that is pressed hay. I do not think you should compel people to have hay inspected which is simply brought into market and sold by the load.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The Bill is not compulsory at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think it should apply only to pressed hay, anyway.

Mr. McMILLAN. I believe there is a system by which it is thoroughly inspected. The hay is tied with four or six strands of wire to each bundle, and by that means the bundle can be divided. It can be thoroughly inspected in that way, and I think it is the only way in which it can be inspected.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That can be easily provided for.

Mr. CASEY. In this measure there is a great deal of vagueness. It is impossible for any inspector to tell whether the amount of clover in No. 1 is one-eighth or less than one-eighth. He will have, in all cases, to guess the proportion of clover in the timothy and the proportion of other grasses in the clover; and I think it is scarcely wise to give the inspector the right to classify bales of hay as being prime timothy, No. 1 timothy, and so on, merely on the basis of his necessarily imperfect estimate of the proportions of the different grasses they contain. I do not see any propriety in making more than perhaps three classes of timothy—one of pure timothy with no visible mixture, which is a kind of hay you scarcely ever find; another of hay containing more than one-half timothy, and another containing half, or less, timothy. I think it would be possible to arrive at a fair guess whether half was timothy or not; but then it is impossible for any man to decide. In fact, I doubt whether the prime timothy grade should exist at all. That is a grade scarcely ever found. Nearly everything would have to be graded No. 1, No. 2, or No. 3, and it is not fair to the seller to mark his hay with a grade number which puts it below another sample of hay, merely on the inspector's estimate of the quantity of timothy in it. As to the clover, the distinction between the two classes appears on the Minister's explanation to turn merely upon the difference between good colour and fair colour. There, again, I think there is an element of still greater vagueness. It is possible to distinguish timothy from clover, though the proportions may not be easily ascertained; but to decide what is a good colour and what is a fair colour of clover, is a very hard thing for an expert to do, and it is a point in regard to which it would be almost impossible to establish standards. Every inspector would have his own idea of what was a good colour and what was a fair colour. He could not well keep standards on hand, as you can in the case of grain, because the standards would change in colour from the mere fact of being kept; and the grading would be affected thereby. I submit that the Minister should find some other distinction between the grades of clover than that of colour. I admit that the colour test is prima facie evidence with regard to clover hay, because if it has been subject to bleaching by rain after being cut, the colour would certainly be changed. But a great deal of the clover that is marketed has been in part affected by rain or heavy dew, and in part not. There is very good clover the colour of which has been injured by heavy dews or light showers which is as nutritious as any not affected in colour at all. So that, although colour is a prima facie test of the quality of the hay, it is not a sufficient or conclusive test. The best test at all for clover, to my mind—and I have had a little hayseed in my hair myself, and can speak with regard to it—is the degree of brittleness in the staple.

Mr. COCHRANE. Not at all.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman who objects to that idea is not very well versed in farming.

Mr. COCHRANE. That would not give any idea of the nutriment of the hay, because it is all owing to the heat and sunshine. The same hay that is brittle in the middle of the day might be quite tough in the evening.

Mr. CASEY. I said that the brittleness is a test, and if the hon. gentleman knows anything of farming, he knows that the brittleness of the leaf shows whether the hay has been dried by continuous sunshine or whether it has been dried and wet and dried over again. However, the colour test if retained at all, I think should be amended in some way. I think it is worth while to consider such a question as this even at some length, because this hay trade may assume considerable proportions; and if we are passing an Act on the subject at all, it is well to consider it thoroughly. I would ask the hon. Controller what experts he consulted in fixing these standards for the grading of hay?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I may say that the very utmost pains were taken to obtain all the necessary and proper information—

Mr. CASEY. From what class of people?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). If you will just have patience for a moment, I will answer you. A year ago this spring, the matter was first brought to the attention of the department by the Montreal Board of Trade, owing to the necessities of the case. Large shipments of hay were being sent abroad, and the fact that there was no such inspection rendered it necessary that they should act promptly; and the Board of Trade, with the Commissioner of Inland Revenue, and a number of those engaged in selling hay, as well as practical farmers, were consulted, and it was upon the very standard fixed in this Bill that the trade of last year proceeded, and I venture to say proceeded satisfactorily, because I have heard no complaints other than that made by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) this afternoon. Doubtless some of the cargoes may have been imperfectly inspected, but the same has taken place in the case of wheat and barley and oats, and almost every article subject to inspection. As I said before, the utmost the inspector can do is to give an approximate idea as to how near the sample taken from the cargoes compares with the standard set up. Whether this is a proper standard or not, is open, of course, to discussion, and is being discussed. I should be glad indeed if the hon. gentleman would venture any suggestion as to any change he thinks necessary.

Mr. CASEY. I did make one suggestion, which, perhaps, the hon. gentleman did not hear. It was that the brittleness, the breaking of the leaf in handling and so on, should be taken into account as well as the colour, in establishing the condition of the clover hay.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Farmers differ on that point.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know that they do.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville.) The hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) says that is not a test.

Mr. CASEY. No; the hon. member for Northumberland had got the idea that I meant to assume that the more brittle hay was the worst. I only said it was a test of its condition, and not that brittle hay was worse than the other, necessarily, in every case.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). What is to prevent the inspector taking into consideration anything you have mentioned as an objection?

Mr. CASEY. According to the classification here, he has only to consider the colour.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). You are speaking now only of clover.

Mr. CASEY. Yes. In all these remarks about brittleness and so on, I am speaking entirely of clover, and the only standard laid down here is one of colour. That is all the inspector can consider.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville.) The word "sound," I think, would cover the very objection you raise as to the brittle character.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is well cured it will not be brittle.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood) will find that the descriptions of Nos. 1 and 2 differ only, as he explained himself a few minutes ago, in this respect: that one is to be a good colour and the other a fair colour. The descriptions in other respects are exactly the same. "Fair colour," I suppose, means less than good, but yet fit for use. Colour is not a test of the quality of the hay, and if it were, it is here left to the judgment of each individual inspector to say what he considers good colour and what is not good but fair. It is leaving too much to the caprice of the individual inspector, and I have pointed out that it is impossible to fix a standard to judge colour by, because standards change in colour by keeping. I asked the hon. Minister what parties he consulted in framing these standards, and he said the Commissioner of Inland Revenue, who, I suppose, is not assumed to be an expert on hay, the Board of Trade of Montreal, and some hay dealers. Well, the Board of Trade and the hay dealers, of course, handle a good deal of hay, but I think those who produce the hay should also be consulted in the matter of framing the standard. There is any number of bodies representing the farmers—provincial agricultural associations, and so on—who might with advantage have been consulted before framing this. There are many individual farmers, well known to the Minister, both in and out of the House, who might have been consulted, and something more definite than this might have been arrived at. I take it for granted that the Minister wishes to make as fair a standard as possible for the inspection of hay. I am only finding fault with what I consider the imperfect manner of framing these standards.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. What market is the hon. gentleman having this hay inspected for?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Principally for export to the English market.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. What we call first-class hay in Canada is first-class timothy pure, but in England they prefer it mixed with clover. In Toronto we want pure timothy.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Look at the Bill and you will find that No. 1 timothy provides that there shall be a little clover with it, and prime timothy is pure.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I think it would be better to establish a standard for pure timothy alone, and then a standard for timothy mixed with clover. We ought to know what would be considered first quality timothy, and what would be considered first quality timothy and clover mixed, or timothy and other grasses mixed. The quality of the hay is governed greatly by the way it is cut and saved. No matter what kind of grass if cut and saved properly, it will make good food for either horse or cattle. It would be better if we had a standard for timothy alone and for clover alone, and then a standard for timothy and clover mixed.

Mr. CASEY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to be in favour of having one grade for pure timothy and another for pure clover, and a third grade for timothy and clover mixed?

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I suggested that we should have a grade for pure timothy, and a grade for pure clover, and another grade for timothy and clover mixed or other grasses. That would be a proper way to arrive at a conclusion. Pure timothy is what is considered in Toronto first-class. With reference to clover it should be pure clover, and other hays, such as clover and trefoil and other grasses, which make very good hay for cattle, would come under the head of mixed hay.

Mr. McMILLAN. As far as timothy is concerned, the different stages at which the grass is cut has a great deal to do with first or second-class timothy. If you allow timothy to stand until the seed is formed you will not get first-class grass. You may cut from the same field in its early stages, when the blossoms form, and if well cured, you will get first-class hay. If allowed to stand until the seed forms you will not get first-class hay, cure it as you will.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Featherston) has made a first-class suggestion. To call all timothy prime timothy, and the others Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and so on, would convey the idea that they are very much inferior to the grade called prime. My hon. friend suggests a grade for all timothy, another grade for all clover, and a grade for timothy and other grasses, called mixed hay, graded according to the quality as hay, and not strictly according to the proportion of the different grasses in them. That would be a much more satisfactory definition.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the intention to appoint a person to discharge this particular duty, as a Government officer?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). No; the idea is to utilize the services of the grain inspectors. That was adopted last session at Montreal. While on my feet I may say that this standard was adopted largely in view of the requirements of the English trade. I am quite sure that having passed the ordeal of one season successfully—

Mr. EDWARDS. Not successfully.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Yes, successfully—it may fairly be allowed to continue for another season. In any case this is purely voluntary—a man need not submit his cargo to inspection unless he wishes to.

Mr. McMILLAN. The present inspectors of cattle, I believe, would be the best inspectors of hay you could get. They are gentlemen who have been largely engaged in feeding and shipping cattle, and thus are well qualified to judge of the quality of hay.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am glad to hear that suggestion from the hon. gentleman, and I will bear it in mind. At any rate, we do not propose to make any charge upon the revenue for salary.

Mr. McNEILL. I desire to call the hon. Controller's attention to the remarks of the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). I think there can be no doubt at all, Mr. Chairman, that the quality of timothy, perhaps more than that of any other kind of hay, depends upon the season at which the grass is cut. If the timothy is left standing long enough for the seed to form, it matters not how well the hay is cured, it matters not how well it is handled, it will be hard and reedy, and will not be so good a hay by any means as if the grass had been cut before the seed had formed. I entirely agree with what my hon. friend from South Huron has said about that, and I would suggest to my hon. friend the Controller to consider if it would not be well to introduce words covering that idea—for instance, "shall be pure timothy," then add "cut in due season"—"perfect in colour," &c.

Mr. EDWARDS. I think it highly desirable that an inspector of hay should be appointed. It is only a few days since I saw a letter in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce complaining that hay had been shipped to England not inspected, and of inferior quality, the consequence being an injury to the trade of exporting hay from Canada generally. I said at the time to the hon. Minister that I thought it was highly desirable that an inspector should be appointed, because, from my own knowledge, a great deal of hay has been purchased and exported to Great Britain which is of inferior quality, and which must be injurious to Canadian trade. I am a very large user of hay, and I think this Bill, in a general way, is framed about as well as it could be framed. So far as the question of timothy hay is concerned, while I agree that, for some purposes, timothy hay is the best, at the same time, a small proportion of clover is not at all detrimental. In my opinion, it would be a very injurious thing if any measure was adopted which would cause the farmers of Canada to sow timothy hay exclusively. The growing of timothy is very exhausting to the soil, while the growing of clover is beneficial to the soil. There are a great many gentlemen who do not know the value of the clover as a fodder for horses and cattle. In my experience I have found it to be valuable for horses to have a small portion of clover mixed with the timothy. For cattle a larger proportion of clover may be used, and for sheep it is better to have all clover with no timothy at all. I agree with what the hon. member for South Huron, and the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) have said with regard to the making of hay. About the only change I would like to see made in this Bill is that suggested by the hon. member for North Bruce. As the hon. member says, the quality of timothy hay depends very largely upon the season of cutting, and in Canada a great loss is sustained by the farmers through cutting their hay too late. There is, perhaps, nothing so important in the production of hay as cutting at the proper season. Farmers err oftener in cutting too late than in cutting too early. I know something of the quality of hay that is required for the different animals we feed in this country, and for one, I certainly would not favour legislation that would have a tendency to cause the farmers to sow more timothy than they do. It would be a great deal better if they sowed more clover than they do now.

Mr. COCHRANE. I agree with what has been said about the season for cutting timothy, but you cannot get a lecture on the quality of hay into a Bill providing for the inspection of that article. You must leave the working out of the details to an inspector, who is supposed to be a man of common sense. We know that if the seeds of timothy ripen the quality of the hay as fodder is destroyed, but I cannot see how you can put that into a Bill such as this. I agree also with what the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) says with regard to the sowing of timothy hay and clover. But you can leave the farmers to use their common sense as to whether it is best in their particular district to raise timothy or clover. A farmer is not fool enough to exhaust his land for the little more he will get for timothy hay than for clover. We should leave matters of that kind for the farmers to decide. I do not want to deliver a lecture on agriculture, but my opinion is that it would be very foolish of the farmers to raise timothy hay and send it out of the country. It would be better to raise clover, and produce cheese and beef and send these out of the country.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I wish to be guided by the practical advice given me in putting this Bill through the committee, and I have no objection to inserting the words: "cut in due season," after the word "timothy." But I would ask if it is the intention of those who favour the insertion of these words that they should be made to apply to all grades?

Mr. CASEY. That would be to make them all of one grade?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It does appear to me—with all deference to the judgment of the experienced farmers who have given their opinions in perfect good faith—that it might be made part of the duty of the inspector to consider whether the hay was cut in due season, and he could tell by the appearance of the hay whether it had been so cut or not. I would prefer that the committee should pass the Bill in its present form, for I can assure the committee that it was prepared with the utmost care and mainly, as I said before, with a view to suiting the English market. If it does not work well this season, at least it cannot do much harm. If it errs at all, it errs in aiming at too high a standard. Surely in the interest of our trade in this important article, which is growing rapidly we can afford to test this system for another year upon the lines upon which we proceeded last year.

Mr. McNEILL. What I wish to say is that if we are to leave to the judgment of the inspector the question of whether it has been cut in due season, we must in the same way leave to him the question whether it has been well cured.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). We cannot put in everything.

Mr. McNEILL. But we can very easily put in that which is one of the most fundamental principles in hay-making, that it should be cut in due season, and the same person should judge as to whether it is perfect in colour.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not know that I precisely understand the contention of the Minister. But it seems to me that in the Bill, classification and grades are confounded, and the Minister ought to distinguish between them. Now, what is called here No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 timothy are three classes, they are not grades properly so called, because any of these may be first-class, that is, the timothy and the clover which they contain may have been cut in proper season, and if they have been cut in proper season and properly cured then they would be first-class of their particular grades. Now, let me take, for instance, the first-class. "No. 1 timothy shall be timothy with not more than one-eighth of clover." Now, you may have timothy with one-eighth clover which may have been cut in proper season, and it may be a very good article, but there must be a first grade of that class, there may be a second grade, and there may be very inferior grades, and I think that the Minister ought to distinguish the grades of the different classes. While this classification may seem very well, there certainly are different grades in each of these classes. Of course, with us in western Ontario, and I suppose it is the same here, timothy matures very much later than the red clover, and where the timothy is only sufficiently ripe, clover may be over-ripe; and whoever suggested these clauses, may have had that idea in view. But certainly it seems to me that the arrangement here, while sufficient for the classes, does not serve the purpose of grading at all. It indicates the quantities of each in the particular class, but it does not indicate the character of the hay which may be found in that class. You may have what you call first-class of a very inferior grade, much below what it is found in the second class, and unless you distinguish between the class and the grade, I do not think you will find that the Bill will work out satisfactorily. Before the Minister takes the Bill out of committee, I would ask him to consider that matter—and I am speaking after some practical knowledge of the subject. He will see that in any one of these three classes which he mentions, he may have a very superior or a very inferior grade, and it is the character of the grade as well as the character of the class that he wishes to distinguish in order that the market may not be injured.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would impress upon the Controller of Inland Revenue that when hay is inspected, the word "Canadian" should be put upon each label. In a letter that appears in the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, it appears that people in the old country find it a great saving to them to feed their animals with Canadian hay, and there is danger that they may buy something else when they wish to buy Canadian hay. I think the word "Canadian" should be put upon every bundle of hay exported to the old country.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not see any objection to that, which can be done. But as to the remarks of the hon. member for Bothwell, that is the first time I ever heard a suggestion of that kind made from any source with regard to the curing of hay, that we should have a grade as well as the classification. Would it not complicate matters a good deal?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that his present arrangement is no indication of grade at all, because you may have a very inferior article of the first grade.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I do not think it would suit the English market at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman does not want to send an inferior article to the English market. Now, suppose a man brings into the market for inspection hay that contains seven-eighths of timothy, but it is over-ripe, the seed has matured, it may in part have fallen off, the stocks have become woody, and it has very little nutriment in it. The hay would go in that grade because it contains those proportions, although it is scarcely fit for feeding. Now, what the hon. gentleman wants is a superior article, and the superiority of that article is not indicated by the proportion of timothy or clover, but it is indicated by the maturity of the hay at the time it was cut, and the care with which it has been cured.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). And in every other way, so far as its quality goes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But these things are the matters which govern the quality in each of these classes. Supposing you have hay of the third class, it may be of the very first quality in this respect, that both species of hay that are included in it, are properly matured and have been well cured; but another case he may have in which it has been injured in the curing. The hon. gentleman will see that the character of the hay does not depend on those qualities at all for the market, but it depends on the manner in which it was cured.

Mr. COCHRANE. I read in this clause, "pure timothy shall be timothy perfect in colour, sound and well cured." Now, does the hon. member for Bothwell think he can have timothy hay with these conditions, when the seed has dropped off?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is speaking of hay of the first class. But supposing an article of a different kind, which has the same proportions, is put in the market, would it go into the second class under that Bill?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, you have got to put it in the second class if it is not well cured.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that the second class does not depend upon the manner in which the hay is cured, it depends upon the proportions of timothy and clover.

Mr. COCHRANE. You could not have it sound and well cured if the timothy had lost its seed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is only timothy of the first grade.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, that is the second. You had better read the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is the second as to proportions, but not as to quality.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) is mistaken, not only as to the classification, but as to his duty. He seems to think it his duty to defend the exact wording of this Bill, while the Controller, on the other hand, is open to receive suggestions for the improvement of the Bill. Now, the hon. member for Bothwell has pointed out correctly that it is the condition of the hay that should indicate the grade and not the proportions of the different grasses that are in it. The proportions of the different grasses should indicate the classification, while the condition of the hay should indicate the grade, as Nos. 1, 2 or 3. The Controller fears that it will produce too much complication. Possibly it would, if you retained so many classes. But my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Featherston) has pointed out the remedy for this; he has shown that there is no need for forming so many classifications, but that a class for pure timothy, a class for pure clover, and a class for mixed grasses composed of part timothy and part clover, would be sufficient, and that each of these should be graded according to their different qualities. That would be an exceedingly practical proposal, and would assist in getting rid of the ambiguous wording of the clause. As the hon. member (Mr. Mills) has pointed out, a specimen of pure timothy, not of sufficiently good colour to come under the heading of prime timothy, has no class provided for it. The same is true in regard to Nos. 1, 2 and 3 timothy. The difference between these qualities provided in the Bill is simply as regards the proportion of the different grasses, and does not indicate any essential difference in the condition of the hay itself. No. 3 timothy may be as good hay as No. 1 timothy, No. 3 simply meaning that it is composed of timothy with a larger proportion of clover in it. The hon. Controller was mistaken in supposing that we object to the classification because it is too strict. We object to it because it is too indefinite, and is not likely to maintain the standard of Canadian hay in the English market. There would be several grades of hay on the English market all branded pure timothy, and this Bill would tend to bring about a feeling of distrust with respect to the grading of hay by Canadian inspectors. The point as to the grading of qualities as opposed to the mere classification of grasses, and also as to the indefiniteness of the standards, should engage the Minister's attention carefully before he takes the Bill from committee. I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman wishes the measure to be a satisfactory one, and I cannot avoid urging that experience of this year will probably decide the fate of Canadian hay in the English market. It has been shown conclusively that the inspection did not work well last year, and that hay was sent to England which was not satisfactory. We should amend the classification, for we may rest assured that if during two consecutive years Canadian hay of uncertain quality is sent to the old country, there will be no use trying to continue the export trade.

Mr. COCHRANE. I desire to draw attention to this fact, that the third quality of timothy is a hay of fair quality, and that No. 1 is perfect in colour; so there is that distinction drawn, and I may add there is also the term "good in colour." We all know a good many facts that cannot be embodied in a Bill. For example, we know that you cannot have timothy and clover both perfect in colour. If you cut timothy so as to obtain perfect colour you will not get your clover of perfect colour, and vice versa; but, of course, you cannot put that information into a Bill; you must leave the inspection to a man of common sense who knows the quality of hay, and who will be prepared to put his opinion on the bale of hay after inspection.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is provided that No. 1 timothy shall not have more than one-eighth of clover. Supposing that it contains more than one-eighth of clover and is of fair colour, where would it be classed?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think the hon. gentleman loses sight of the fact that a margin must be left to the inspector's judgment, and quite a margin too.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Supposing it was pure timothy, it would come under the first class, if of good colour; but if it were pure timothy of fair colour, where would it come in?

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). You could safely put it in the second rank.

Mr. COCHRANE. If it were left to me to inspect, and it were not perfect in colour, I would class it as second quality, if it contained a fair percentage of clover.

Mr. CASEY. As regards timothy, that might be good enough in itself, there is no provision for grading it outside of No. 1. It has been urged by hon. gentlemen opposite that we cannot give satisfactory directions to an inspector, and that his individual judgment can be trusted. That is true to some extent, but we are giving directions, and at the same time we leave the inspector to classify hay according to quality.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears to me from the discussion that it would be better perhaps if the committee were to rise, and allow these gentlemen who are discussing the question to read up more thoroughly first and second timothy. In the clause where the hon. gentleman describes prime timothy I would suggest to have it read this way: "Prime timothy shall be pure timothy, perfect in colour, sound and cured in proper season." The inspector will know better whether it is cured in proper season than whether it is cut in proper season.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. I would suggest that you would make just three classes of hay, and then a great deal of the difficulty would be got over. Say timothy, clover and the other class of mixed hay. Then the inspector could use his judgment to what class the hay inspected belongs. As it is now, the inspector has got to be guided by this Bill altogether, as you define the classes, and he has no discretion left him whatever. It is my opinion that the inspectors should have this discretion. You have two gentlemen inspecting hay for the use of cattle going across the Atlantic, in Montreal, and I know them to be thoroughly competent men in that business. There are no two men in Montreal that I know of more qualified for the office than these gentlemen are. I have seen them inspect hay for cattle going on board ship, and I know that they are well up in their business, and have good experience. If you just define the three classes of hay, then when you have inspectors so competent as these men are they will assign the hay to whatever class it belongs.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Are you having in view the interests of the producers of hay or the condition of the English market? I shall say now for the last time that this Bill has been framed with a view to suit the requirements of the English market, and so far as I can learn it is designed to meet that end.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. We send hay to France and Germany as well as to England.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have no doubt that what suits the English market suits the others.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. You do not know that, and neither do I. In England they like hay with a little clover. They do not like our red clover, because it is too hard; but they like timothy with alsike-clover in it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that there might be a fine grade and a second grade for each of these classes, for instance hay may be of very good quality, but not suitable for a certain class, and then it might be made of a fine grade in the next lowest class.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think as the Bill is framed it enables the inspector to exercise a proper judgment under any one of these classes for the purposes of the foreign market. I think the same discretion should be left to the inspectors of hay that is left to the inspectors of grain.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

COUNTY COURT JUDGES, B. C.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into committee on the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the salaries of the Judges of the County Courts of Cariboo, New Westminster, Yale, Nanaimo and Kootenay, in the province of British Columbia, shall be $2,400 each per annum.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. What is the increase?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object of this resolution is to provide for another county judge for British Columbia, in the Kootenay District. That district was created a county court district by the Provincial Legislature several years ago. It has not been thought necessary to make the appointment, but it is deemed expedient to take the power now, owing to the increased population of the district, and the population going there is of a class that requires the attendance of a court of justice.

Mr. LAURIER. Is this salary on a par with the salaries of similar officers in the province?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The same salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why does the Minister of Justice consider it necessary to place the salary for a county court judge in British Columbia at $2,400, when only $2,000 or $2,200 is paid in Ontario?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is the law now in British Columbia. In Ontario the judges are appointed at $2,000, but after three years' service they are paid $2,400.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there an additional allowance for travelling in British Columbia?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. In Ontario I think the allowance is $200. What is it in British Columbia?

Mr. MARA. It is according to the distance travelled. I may state that an additional judge is required in British Columbia owing to the recent mining developments in the Kootenay Lake country, and the growth of a number of small towns within the last few years. Hitherto the work has been done by the county court judge of Yale District, but it is impossible for him to travel over the whole district and do the work properly. The district contains about 30,000,000 acres, and as the population is about 15,000, and is scattered over that immense area, you can understand that the little commercial centres are very far apart. The distance the judge has now to travel is something like a thousand miles, that is, if he visits every town in which a court should be held. The Canadian Pacific Railway runs through Yale and Kootenay about 500 miles. He has also to travel from Revelstoke to Kaslo, 220 miles, from Sicamous to Osoyoos, 170 miles, and from Kamloops to Granite Creek, 75 miles. The two latter roads have to be travelled part of the distance by wagons, so that the judge cannot travel very fast. Here are some of the places where county courts ought to be held: Kamloops, Revelstoke, Donald, Golden, Fort Steele, Vernon, Penticton, Kelowna, Nicola, Quelchena, Granite Creek, Osoyoos, Nelson, Kaslo, Three Forks, New Denver and Nakusp. When you consider the number of places I have mentioned and the great distances that have to be travelled, you can easily perceive that one judge cannot do the whole work, and do justice to the several towns.

Mr. LAURIER. How many of these are mining stations?

Mr. MARA. Seven are mining stations. It is proposed that the new judge shall be located in South Kootenay on Kootenay Lake, and the places he would have to visit would be Nelson, Kaslo, Three Forks, New Denver and Nakusp. Nelson is the place where I have no doubt he would reside.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When the question of the salaries of county court judges was up before, the hon. Minister of Justice had brought to his notice, and received it with some favour, the question of increasing the salaries of the judges of the metropolitan counties of the different provinces. I think the salary of the county judge of St. John was increased to $3,000, and it was urged upon the hon. Minister of Justice that it would be fair that some allowance should also be made to the county judges in Halifax and Charlottetown, in view of the very much larger quantity of business transacted by them than is transacted by the county judges of the outlying counties. I cannot speak from personal knowledge of the amount of business transacted by the county court judge of Halifax, though I presume it is heavy and more onerous than the business in other counties of Nova Scotia. But I know that the county court judge of Queen's has more work to do than the other two judges in Prince Edward Island together, arising from the fact that Charlottetown, the chief city on the Island, is situated in that county. I can vouch for that from personal knowledge. I would again call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the discussion which took place a few years ago on this subject, and urge the justice of making some reasonable allowance to these two judges. The ground for doing so would not necessitate any increase in the salaries of the other judges at all. I understand that the broad question of increasing the salaries of the judges all around was considered, and that it is shelved for the present at least, whatever may be done hereafter. But in the meantime I think these two exceptional cases might very well receive favourable consideration at the hon. gentleman's hands.

Mr. CORBOULD. At present the district of New Westminster has but one county court judge and one Supreme Court judge, although there are four Supreme Court judges and one county court judge on Vancouver Island. The Provincial Government have recognized the fact that the work in Westminster district is now as great as in Victoria, and have divided Westminster district into two judicial county court districts, called Westminster Judicial District and Vancouver Judicial District. I would like to ask the Government if it is their intention to give this new district another county court judge, because the one there now is often left to do the whole of the work, both county court and Supreme Court, in consequence of the Supreme Court judge having to attend the full court at Victoria.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have not been satisfied that there is a sufficient cause for the appointment of another judge for the district of New Westminster, as it has now a county court judge and a Supreme Court judge resident in the district. It seems to me that in one district, one county judge or Supreme Court judge ought to be ample for the work. At any rate, I have not been satisfied that there is a case on which I could apply for an increase. With regard to the metropolitan county judges, I have forgotten the circumstances of the discussion which the hon. gentleman mentions, but I will look it up and refer to it. I suppose he does not expect anything to be done this session?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would be very glad if something could be done.

Mr. FRASER. I called attention to this matter either last year or the year before. It is a very great hardship, so far as the county court judge in the city of Halifax is concerned. It will be remembered that not only is the salary paid to the county court judge in the city of St. John greater, but he is revising barrister as well, which brings his salary up to something like $4,000. In 1891-92, Judge Johnson, county court judge of Halifax, tried sixty criminal cases, as compared with thirteen by the whole Supreme Court of the city of Halifax. It will be remembered that since the Speedy Trials Act went into operation, there has been a great deal of work thrown on the county court judges. Judge Johnson tried 134 civil cases against 108 by all the judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is hardly a fair test.

Mr. FRASER. It is this much of a test, to show that it is unfair that a judge who has so much work to do should be paid no more than a county court judge living in the country, who does not try one-half of the cases. A man who does so much work ought to be paid commensurately. I have not come before Judge Johnson very often, but I know that he tries many cases, and that his judgments are generally sustained. Two of the county court judges spoke to me during recess of Judge Johnson's case, and while they did not ask for any advance of salary, so far as they themselves were concerned, they said that, from their knowledge of the amount of work Judge Johnson had to do, he certainly ought to get better pay. All he gets is $2,400. Fancy a judge having to try all these cases, and to live in Halifax, not having as much salary as many gentlemen in the civil service at Ottawa are getting. He has to keep up with the times, to buy the latest books, and holding his court in the city of Halifax, he must, of necessity, be better read and pay more attention to cases than country judges, and I can say this, without, in any way, disparaging the other county court judges. I would urge very strongly on the Minister of Justice this case. Judge Johnson ought to be put in as good a position as the county court judge at St. John. Halifax has a population larger than St. John, and he should be put in the same position as the county court judge of St. John. Since the passage of the Speedy Trials Act, a good deal of extra expense has been put on the judges. They have to proceed to the place which the criminal selects as his place of trial. I think some compensation should be given to cover that extra expense. I understand that the amount given to them is a lump sum. That lump sum may cover some cases, but not all, and it will be much better if the judges were asked to make a return of all the items of travelling expenses from the place where they live to the place of trial, or that they should receive so much per mile for travelling expenses. I would press strongly upon the Government the case of Judge Johnson, of Halifax. A man of his knowledge and ability, getting only $2,400 per year, has no means of putting by anything if he wishes to keep himself abreast of the times, and maintain, with any degree of propriety, his position in Halifax.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I desire to add my voice in connection with the case of Judge Johnson, of Halifax. It is a matter which has been called to my attention quite frequently, and I think it is deserving the consideration of the Government. A statement of the cases tried in the city of Halifax has been handed me, to which is appended the name of Mr. Holmes, the prothonotary and clerk of the county court. The cases tried during the year 1891 in the Supreme Court were forty, and during the year 1892 there were fifty-nine. The criminal cases tried in 1891 by the Supreme Court amounted to four, and in 1892 they numbered nine. In the county court, over which Judge Johnson presides, the chamber entries during the year 1891 amounted to 110, and during the year 1892, to 196. The cases tried in 1891 numbered fifty-eight, and in 1892, eighty-six. The criminals tried in 1891 were twenty-seven, and in 1892, thirty-eight. This shows that a great deal more business is done in the county court of Halifax than in the Supreme Court. And I think it would be proper for the Government to take this matter into consideration. I have also something to say regarding what has been referred to concerning county court judges trying criminals. Take the case of Judge Savary, in district No. 3, of Nova Scotia. He lives in Annapolis, and has frequently to go to Yarmouth and Digby. Whenever a criminal matter is brought to his attention, he has to go first in order to allow the criminal to select whether he will be tried under the Speedy Trials Act or by jury, and then he has to make another trip to try the case, and his pay in this regard is very small compared with the work done. I would press upon the Government the necessity of doing something, so that these men should be placed in a better position, financially, and thus be enabled to sustain properly the dignity of their office.

Mr. McMULLEN. Whenever the question of judges' salaries comes up in this House, every man who is accustomed to hold briefs and appear before these judges demands for them increased salaries. The demand for increase of pay to these judges is confined to the lawyers. Whenever any item comes up which will enable them to advocate an increase to the judges of any particular section, they are on the alert to do it. Yet if any one of these judges happens to vacate his position, we can find a dozen ready to take his place at the salary. I believe in paying our judges decently, and I think they are decently and fairly paid, and the best evidence of that is that there are any number of lawyers glad to take their places at the salary. I asked a question of the First Minister a moment ago whether the judges in British Columbia were paid mileage in addition to their salary. He stated that they were. I notice that in the accounts of travelling expenses in the Auditor General's Report nothing appears for travelling expenses for judges in British Columbia. I would like to know why that is.

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) Since we are, Mr. Chairman, discussing the question of the salaries of judges, and especially of those among them who administer justice in the country districts, I will seize this opportunity to make one or two observations on this question. I beg to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice (Sir John Thompson) to an existing anomaly in the province of Quebec. I quite understand that the salaries of judges living in cities and towns should be larger than those of judges living in the country. But there are two judicial districts in the province of Quebec where the judges are not sufficiently paid, and where they have not even the salary paid to the judges of the other rural districts. Thus, I think the presiding judge in the district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, and the presiding judge in the district of Gaspé, ought to receive the same salary as the judges of the other rural districts. When, in 1854, the judicial organization was settled, the salary of those judges was fixed as it now is. Thus, the presiding judge in Chicoutimi and Saguenay receives $500 less than the judges of the other districts. The salary fixed in 1854 might have been large enough, considering the work and responsibility which then devolved on the incumbent. But now there is a large increase in population, and, of course, the value and volume of business have increased proportionately. I have no hesitation in saying that the population in Chicoutimi and Saguenay is now as large as in most of the judicial districts of the province of Quebec, where judges receive a larger salary than the judge of Chicoutimi and Saguenay. I think this latter gentleman ought to receive at least an equal pay to that of those judges. I have just stated that there has been, since 1854, a large increase in the population of the judicial district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay; the fact is, this population is now nearly 70,000 souls. I think that in many rural districts, the population does not reach that figure. When, in 1854, the present salary was fixed, the population was much less than now, and, therefore, the work the judge had to do was much less. Therefore, the Government would merely do an act of justice were they giving to the judges of the districts of Chicoutimi and Saguenay and Gaspé the salary allowed to the judges of the other rural districts.

Mr. FRASER. I want to add a word to what my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., has said, and to correct the hon. member who spoke just previous to the last speaker. Judge Johnson does not live where I live, and I do not practice before him, nor does my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills). It will relieve the hon. gentleman's mind to know that I am not speaking for my own judge. Judge Johnson gets $2,400 a year, and I am pressing for an increase in his salary on the ground that he does more work than a Supreme Court judge, and he should be fairly paid. Judge Peters, in St. John, receives $3,000, and was appointed revising officer, thus giving him a considerable increase in his income. Not that I would say that Judge Peters gets too much. I venture to say that there is no lawyer in the city of Halifax of equal ability to Judge Johnson whose practice is not worth more to him than $2,400 a year. No doubt there are a number of parties seeking such an appointment, but you would not find men of equal ability to Judge Johnson ready to accept such a position at such a salary.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before the resolution is reported, I wish to say for the information of the hon. Minister of Justice, with respect to the claims of Judge Alley, the judge of the county court of Queen's, whose case I brought up before dinner, that the reasons I press for an increase of his salary are similar to those which prompted the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) to press so strongly for an increase to the salary of the county court judge of the metropolitan county of Nova Scotia. There seemed to be a good reason to the hon. Minister for an increase to the salary of the county court judge of St. John, N. B. I do not challenge the justice of that increase; but it does seem reasonable, from what I know of Judge Johnson's position, and the duties he discharges in Halifax, that a similar acknowledgment should be made to him, and on behalf of Judge Alley, I claim that he should receive the same acknowledgment. I wish to say, in furtherance of the remarks I made before dinner, that during the twenty years that Judge Alley has sat as county court judge of Queen's County, the business of the court has very largely increased. The facility with which cases can be brought and concluded in that court, and the lowness of the court costs, have induced a very large number of litigants to resort there. The hon. gentleman seems to think that I am in the habit of practising before Judge Alley, and that that is one reason why I press his claim. I may say that I do not practise in the county court; I have not been before Judge Alley more than once, if at all, in fifteen years, my time being otherwise occupied. A very large number of cases, such as were formerly tried in the Supreme Court, are now brought before him, owing to the fact that the costs in his court are only one-half or one-third of what they are in the Supreme Court, and his judgments have been so satisfactory that out of the thousands that have been given by him in the last ten years I do not think ten have been appealed. I think the hon. Minister of Justice could fairly rank his claim as equal to that of the county court judge of Halifax, and that of the county court judge of St. John, and I hope he will give such consideration to it as will induce him at an early day to make a small increase to his salary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not wish to interfere in matters which, perhaps, belong more peculiarly to the legal members of the House; but it does seem to me that an allowance of ten judges—five for the county court and five for the Superior Court—for a province with the population of British Columbia, is an extremely liberal provision for the administration of justice there, even after taking into account the largeness of the district. I understand that the population is not generally diffused over the province, but is chiefly found in certain districts or along the course of certain rivers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The number of judges would be quite out of reason if it were not for the fact that the population of the province is very much scattered, and the means of communication very difficult; and the attendance of the judges at very distant places is absolutely necessary if we are to keep up civilization and the organization of the courts of justice in the country at all. These increases in the number of the judges in the province have been made very gradually. About ten years ago one or two additional judges were appointed for the Supreme Court, and about that time provision was made by the Provincial Legislature for six or seven county judges. Four of these, those of Cariboo, New Westminster, Yale, and Nanaimo, were appointed four or five years ago. Only after the lapse of four or five years have we decided to add one to the list, and that, as the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) stated, is really in consequence of an increase of the mining population in the Kootenay district. He detailed the number of settlements that the county court judge would require to visit, and showed the impossibility of the county judge of Yale visiting all these widely scattered places. It is true the population in these outlying districts is not at all great; but the administration of justice in them has to be provided for. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) asked a question regarding the travelling allowances of these judges. They are allowed their actual moving expenses and the usual per diem allowance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I said, I speak with all due diffidence on a legal subject; but would it not have been in the public interest and for general convenience to have had three Superior Court judges for a province of that size, and if need be, seven or eight county court judges? That would have given an equal number, and certainly have saved the public exchequer. I do not want to grudge the due administration of justice to our brethren in British Columbia, I assure them; but judging from our experience in other provinces, I should have thought three Superior Court judges ought to be sufficient for British Columbia, the number required being made up by the appointment of stipendiary magistrates or county court judges, as might appear advisable to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The five Superior Court judges were appointed when the population was expected to be large.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, and at a time when they were required to live in the district for which they were appointed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no doubt that the criticism of my hon. friend from South Oxford is perfectly well founded, that five judges for the Supreme Court for such a small population is simply ridiculous. Three judges would form just as strong a court of appeal.

Mr. MARA. The hon. gentleman would be right if the Superior Court judges had not to travel such great distances. From Victoria to Cariboo the distance is about 600 miles. One-half of that distance has to be travelled, not by railway or steamer, but by wagon. Two assize courts are held every year at Cariboo, and courts have to be held at different places on the route between Victoria and Cariboo. Then again courts are held in the lake country twice a year, so that the judges have to travel to Cariboo in the extreme north and Kootenay in the extreme south. This travelling not only takes up time, but entails great expense.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No doubt what the hon. gentleman says is quite right, but everybody conversant with the duties of judges knows very well that, with the population of 100,000 people in British Columbia, it is absurd to suppose that five judges of the Supreme Court are necessary, when you have besides a large number of county court judges. At the times the judgeships were established, the judges were expected to perform the duties of county court judges and to reside in the various districts. They were district judges and appointed for that purpose, but they declined to act upon the law and chose to reside in the capital of the province. I have no hesitation in saying that three judges would be quite sufficient to sit as a court of appeal and discharge the duties these judges have to do on circuit, even if they have to travel twice a year these distances. I imagine the justification for their appointment lies in the statement of the Minister that they were appointed with the idea of being district justices, residing a long way from one another, and discharging all the duties now performed by the county court judges subsequently appointed. They go twice a year to Cariboo and places on the road, and from the general knowledge I possess, I venture to say that some about six weeks to two months in the year is all that they require to work.

Mr. MARA. The hon. gentleman is altogether wrong.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I take the reports of British Columbia.

Mr. MARA. Then the hon. gentleman must admit that some of the Supreme Court judges are hard worked. How could the hon. gentleman say that three would form a strong court of appeal when one of the three would be sitting on appeal in a case he had already tried?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The old Exchequer Court of England was composed of three for many years.

Mr. MARA. But one of the three would be trying the case twice.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think one of the appeal courts of the High Court of Justice in Ontario is composed of three judges.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have only ten Superior Court judges in the province of Ontario with two million of population, and five appears rather a luxury in a province with 100,000 inhabitants.

Mr. FORBES. The object of this resolution is to increase the number of judges. In connection with that, I would like to submit to the Minister of Justice the propriety of increasing the salary of one or two, at any rate, of the metropolitan county court judges of the Maritime Provinces. It seems that there are five Supreme Court judges now in British Columbia for about one hundred thousand population. In Nova Scotia, we have seven for a population of 450,000. These judges are progressive men, anxious to meet the wishes of the barrister society of the province, and the demands of the public as far as they can, and they do all the work assigned to them. I cannot say that the judges of the Supreme Court are in any way overworked. Some of them are not even hard worked. Most of them are zealous, honest and able judges. However, I will not be invidious by particularizing any, as they are undoubtedly well known to the practising bar. As regards the county court judges of the province, they are also an easily-worked bench of judges, with one exception. In the county of Halifax, the county court judge is overworked. He is as capable in every respect as any one of the Supreme Court judges. He has hardly his equal in the Dominion as regards legal ability, and has had thrust upon him, by virtue of the changes in the Judicature Act and several Acts passed in this House, a large amount of work which he formerly had not to do. The judges of the Supreme Court have been relieved of a great deal of their work, and it has been thrust upon him. Their salaries have not been decreased, and I am glad to say at present have not been increased. But as regards the metropolitan judge of the county of Halifax, since the establishment of the county courts, he has had thrust upon him all appeals from the Magistrate's Court, of which the Supreme Court judges have been relieved. He has also the exclusive trial of all cases involving sums under $80, of the trial of which the Supreme Court judges have been relieved. They have also been practically relieved of all cases involving an amount at issue up to $400. It is quite true that the jurisdictions of the county court and of the Supreme Court are concurrent from $80 up to $400, but as a matter of fact nearly all suits involving amounts up to $400, are brought in the county court and only come before the Supreme Court by way of appeal. Again, under the Speedy Trials Act, nearly seventy-five per cent of the criminal trials devolve upon this county court judge, being brought before the county court of the metropolitan county of Halifax. From 1889 to 1892, the county court judge at Halifax tried and finally disposed of fifty criminal cases out of seventy, leaving twenty only to be tried by the Supreme Court judges. I have not the figures for subsequent years. These changes in the procedure and in the jurisdiction of the several courts have thrown upon the metropolitan county court judge at Halifax a vast increase of business for which he has no adequate increase of salary. At the time he was appointed to that office, I believe his salary was adequate to the work done, but the business has since so largely increased, and the court has become so popular—judgments being speedily delivered, suitors being well satisfied with the judgments rendered, and counsel knowing well that in all their arguments they are listened to by a judge capable of understanding the principles of law discussed before him—that this judge is no doubt one of the hardest worked judges in the Dominion. Undoubtedly he is the hardest worked judge in Nova Scotia. He has, under a provincial statute passed last year, become a metropolitan county court judge. By chapter 24 of the Act of 1893, it is enacted as follows:—"The judge of the county court, district No. 1, county of Halifax, shall be designated 'judge of the metropolitan county of Halifax.'" This was introduced by a member of the Law Society, and was passed, and it is a recommendation, not only by the House of Assembly, but by others for an increase of salary. The desirability of increasing the salary has been recognized by this Parliament, because, as far back as 1873, it is laid down as a reason for the readjustment of the salaries of judges, in the preamble of the Act 36 Victoria, chapter 51, that there should be a reorganization of the salaries of judges, and that these increases should take place "owing to the increased cost of living, the decreased value of money, and other causes." The same argument would apply to-day with still greater effect in urging the judicial branch of the Dominion Government to increase the salary of the metropolitan county court judges. Take the salaries of judges in the provinces of Nova Scotia, and those of like judges in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and we find that the judges of Nova Scotia are paid altogether out of proportion with those of other provinces.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Too high, do you mean?

Mr. FORBES. Too low. The amount paid in Nova Scotia is $45,000, including a chief justice and six other judges of the superior courts, and seven county court judges. On the basis of population, compared with the amount paid to Quebec, which receives $193,500, Nova Scotia should receive $58,464 for the judges, including the county court judges. Compared with Ontario, with a population of 2,000,000, and its grant, annually, of $231,000, Nova Scotia is entitled to $49,500 as her share of the payment of the salaries of judges. Thus there is a margin of $4,000 yet to be paid out in order to bring the amount received by Nova Scotia up to the proportion to which she is entitled. It is but fair and right that one judge, at all events—I am not speaking of other county judges of the province—for I have already said that the other judges are probably fairly well paid for the amount of work they do—yet the metropolitan county court judge of Nova Scotia should receive an increase of salary. Judge Watters receives but $3,000 as salary.

Mr. FOSTER. Judge Watters is in Heaven.

Mr. FORBES. I refer to his successor. Judge Peters, I believe, receives about $3,000 salary, and, in addition, he is revising barrister for the city of St. John, which gives him an additional amount. If a precedent is wanted for increasing the salary of one county court judge, and not increasing the salaries of others, we have it in the case of the county judge in the city and county of St. John. I want to take exception to the remarks made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). The hon. member found fault with the increase of the salaries of judges of the Maritime Provinces, and he urged as an argument that such increase was only advocated by barristers in this House who happened to practise before those judges. I am bound to say that the remarks of the hon. gentleman were very ill-timed, and were misplaced. As barristers, we are obliged to appear before any and every court of the province within which we practise, and it is no reason, therefore, to urge that the salaries of judges should not be advocated by barristers practising before such judges, and no body of men are more capable of knowing the qualities of these judges than the barristers practising before them. Barristers, as a rule, are members of the Barristers' Society of the respective provinces to which they belong, and they know the merits of the judges before whom they practise, and they are certainly more capable than laymen to speak of the merits of the respective judges, and to ask that justice be done them. A layman like the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has probably little to do with lawyers, and has very little opportunity of knowing their qualities. They are like the pendulum of a clock—they regulate differences between man and man. The hon. member for North Wellington is unfortunate in this respect, that he has not yet been able to gauge the respective merits of judges before whom barristers appear, unless, unfortunately, he has been engaged in an election trial. I submit, on behalf of the metropolitan county court judge that before this resolution be passed, the Minister of Justice should decide to add to his resolution a clause setting forth that the metropolitan judges of the county courts in the Maritime Provinces should have their salaries adjusted, and, under that declaration, the judges who deserve increases of salary by reason of increased business being pressed upon them by the various enactments of the Dominion Parliament would undoubtedly receive an increase in salary. At the present moment, I know of only two judges to whom my argument would apply, Judge Johnson, the metropolitan judge of Halifax, and Judge Alley, of Charlottetown, P.E.I. I know of no other judges of equal claims on the judicial department of the Dominion Government, and if the Minister of Justice will take into consideration the arguments I have adduced to-night, every one of which is based on facts, he will be convinced that justice should be done, at all events, to one or two of the metropolitan maritime county court judges.

Mr. McMULLEN. The question of the increase of judges' salaries was not before the committee this afternoon, but I took the opportunity of drawing the attention of the House to the fact that when questions respecting the judges or connected with the courts come up, the lawyers take the opportunity of advocating increases of salaries to the judges in their particular districts. I am quite willing that the judges should be fully paid for their services. I believe they are so paid, but whenever a vacancy occurs, I notice that any number of men are prepared to accept, and are only too anxious to receive the appointment. From my own experience, and I have frequently been before the courts, I must admit that I have been treated well by the judges. I think they proved themselves to be most intelligent men, and I benefited by their intelligence, and consequently I have never been unseated.

Mr. FORBES. The result of the election trials is due more to good luck than to good management on my friend's part.

Resolution reported.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Ways and Means.

Coal, bituminous, 60 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any change in this?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Why does not the Finance Minister put this at the same rate as the Americans are charging on Nova Scotia coal?

Mr. FOSTER. That would be 75 cents per ton.

Mr. CHARLTON. Just at this moment, but when the Wilson Bill goes through it will be 50 cents.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody knows how the Wilson Bill will go through.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We know no more how the Wilson tariff will go through than we do how this tariff will go through.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt that the Finance Minister has had a great deal of trouble in reaching a decision upon this very important point, and I dare say that those interested in manufacturing institutions, as well as the railway companies, have pressed strongly upon him the justice of taking off this unfair duty. In the interests of the railway companies, I certainly think that some reduction should have been made. They are struggling now with the restricted conditions of traffic and everything else, and I think it would be well, both in their interests, as well as in the interest of the manufacturers of this country, that a considerable reduction should be made on the coal duty, if it be not admitted free. It does appear to me that it is a piece of gross injustice to keep a duty of 60 cents per ton on coal. I cannot tell why that duty is retained, unless it is by the influence of the Nova Scotia miners who keep the Minister of Finance in line, and make him fleece those who are users of this coal. I have no doubt that railroad companies have remonstrated very strongly in this matter, and demanded a reduction in this duty. We are glad to see the miners of Nova Scotia having a portion of this trade, but it is too bad that the entire trade of the country must be hampered in order to benefit them.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is to be regretted that the Minister of Finance has not seen fit to mitigate this burden upon the industries of the country. It bears heavily on the railway interests which are now struggling along, and it also bears heavily on all the manufacturing industries of the country. Beyond all question the Wilson Bill will reduce the duty on coal to 50 cents per ton, if not lower. I think that the profession made by the Finance Minister that the tariff concessions would be of a generous character should cause him to give some relief to those who are interested in cheaper coal. I ask him, before this Bill takes its final stage, that he will consider the propriety and justice of reducing this duty on coal by at least 20 cents per ton.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was in hopes that the Government would have done away with this coal duty altogether, but as they have not done so, they should at least have reduced it considerable, because it is a very onerous tax on the railway companies and on the manufacturing industries of Ontario. I see by the returns that we imported 2,000,000 tons from the United States, which is principally used by the railways, and as has been well said, the railways now need all the assistance we can give them. The Government should consider this, and put the duty down to 40 cents per ton.

Item agreed to.

Iron or steel hoops, bands and strips, eight inches and less in width, number 18 gauge and thicker, $10 per ton.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason for this, and what is the effect of it as compared with the duty before?

Mr. FOSTER. The duty formerly was $13 per ton, and it is now made $10 per ton in accordance with the reduction in other iron items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These, I suppose, are for special use in certain lines of manufacture.

Mr. FOSTER. The principal item is the hoop-iron, which is used by the cooperage interest and involves also the brewers, the distillers and the petroleum oil men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What item did it come under in the tariff that was reported to the House? I see that No. 222 might include it.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; No. 222.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well now, I see that No. 222 is put down at 5 per cent ad valorem. That is a much smaller duty than $10 per ton, I take it.

Mr. FOSTER. I was speaking about a decrease from the old duty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; but if the hon. gentleman is correct in saying that it came under No. 222, instead of decreasing the duty he is now proposing to increase it enormously. Five per cent ad valorem is a very moderate rate of duty, by comparison at any rate.

Mr. FOSTER. Most of these goods would come in under No. 220 at $10 per ton—being up to No. 16 gauge, No. 222 takes in hoop-iron of 17 gauge and thinner, so that this practically takes in two numbers from 222—Nos. 17 and 18.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And raises them from 5 per cent to $10 per ton. Why?

Mr. FOSTER. Because they are being rolled here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is to say, the hon. gentleman is prepared, for the sake of some particular industry, to inflict an injury upon the class, the very numerous class, he has mentioned. The hon. gentleman said he was making a reduction. It appears that he is making an enormous increase, raising the duty from 5 per cent ad valorem to $10 per ton. This is at the expense of the brewers. But he has been kind to the brewers under other items of the tariff and perhaps he thinks it right to take something out of them here. But there are others who are not engaged in the brewing interest, which has become so dear in the hon. gentleman's heart of late, who are to be compelled to pay about ten times as much as they would have paid had this been allowed to come in under item 222 of the tariff as reported.

Mr. FOSTER. Not more than twice as much.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what quantity is likely to be imported under this item?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it will not be imported; it will be made here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much does the hon. gentleman suppose will be consumed in this shape?

Mr. FOSTER. Probably a thousand or two thousand tons.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think there would be a good deal more than that consumed for the purpose I speak of.

Mr. FOSTER. No, they use this up to 21 or 22.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In any case the hon. gentleman has not reduced, but very largely increased the duty he originally brought down.

Item agreed to.

Eggs 5 cents per doz.; to be free only and so long as eggs exported from Canada are allowed free entry into the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. The Canadian hen was very dear to hon. gentlemen a year or two ago, and she is none the less dear to us now.

Mr. CASEY. This duty on eggs is an instance of what can be done by a member who earnestly works for his constituents, without regard to his party connections. The hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. McDonald) put his foot down the other night firmly on eggs, and he has made an omelette thereby of the ministerial policy. He put his foot down and said 5 cents a dozen on eggs it will be, or something will burst, and he has got his 5 cents. I hope the other members supporting the Government will see that they can do their duty to their constituents in this way as well as the hon. gentleman.

Item agreed to.

Rice when imported by makers of rice starch for use in their factories only, $\frac{3}{4}$ ct. per lb.

Mr. REID. Before we adopt that item, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the remarks that were made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) on April 20th. The hon. gentleman then submitted some statements to this House, which had been prepared, I may say, by some discharged employees—by men who prepared them maliciously for the purpose of doing injury to the works situated in my constituency. At the time I was taken by surprise, and did not reply, but I wish now to have those statements corrected, as they have gone abroad, and unless contradicted will probably be believed. At the same time, these statements not only did that concern an injury, but they have injured the other starch manufacturing establishments throughout the Dominion. In the first place, the hon. gentleman asked that the rate of duty be reduced, for the simple reason that in the Wilson Bill the rate was 1 cent a pound. I find, on looking that up, that the rate is 2 cents a pound, and in that Bill the Americans have no duty to pay on the raw material or anything used in the manufacture of starch. The hon. gentleman said that the consumption of starch in Canada was 5,000,000 pounds, or thereabouts, and that the production was confined to three factories in this Dominion. I may say that there are only three factories manufacturing corn starch, but there are some seven or eight potato starch factories in Prince Edward Island, which supply a very large portion of the starch used in this Dominion. The potato starch factories supply nearly all the starch used in the cotton mills and paper mills, which is a large percentage of the starch used in the Dominion. The hon. gentleman also shows that the duty on five million pounds would amount to some hundred thousand dollars, from which he deducted some fifteen thousand dollars of duty collected on the starch imported, leaving some eighty-five thousand dollars to be divided among the three corn starch factories. Well, the hon. gentleman should have deducted the duty upon all the raw material—upon the corn, the coal, the chemicals, and every article used in the manufacture of starch, on which there is a heavy specific duty. At the same time he should have taken into his account the seven or eight factories situated in Prince Edward Island, when dividing the profits. He also stated that there was only $170,000 of capital in the concern at Cardinal. Well, that was the original capital when the work started, but the works have been enlarged, and when those parties who were discharged took charge of the works some seven years ago, they were handed over an establishment with $280,000 of a capital, and it required all that money to run that concern. It would be simply impossible to run the works at Cardinal on a capital of $170,000. It is true that dividends have only been paid on $170,000, but that is for the simple reason that was the original capital, which has never been increased except through the earnings and profits in years gone by. The hon. gentleman endeavoured to show that these profits were made from the corn starch, but that statement was unfair, for the simple reason that this concern at Cardinal has other manufacturing establishments connected with it, outside of the manufacture of corn starch altogether, and the profits from all other sources are all put together and shown as the total profits during the year, and when any dividend is declared, it is declared on the original capital of $170,000. The hon. gentleman also said that there are only some eighty men employed in the manufacture of starch in Canada. In the works at Cardinal alone there are in the neighbourhood of one hundred men employed, and I am sure that in the other two establishments at Port Credit and Brantford, there is also a large number of men employed. The factories in Prince Edward Island also give employment to a considerable number of men. I may say that when the duty was changed we had no protection whatever. I think it is only fair either that the duty on rice should be reduced, or that the duty on starch should be restored, so as to give us a fair field for the manufacture of rice starch in this country. When the hon. Finance Minister reduced the duty on starch, I think he should have given the starch manufacturing establishments an equivalent reduction in the duty on their raw material. It is hardly fair to cut both ways. He has not seen fit thus far to make any change, but I hope he will take the matter into his consideration. The factories at Port Credit and Brantford have been seriously injured by the condition of the tariff. The hon. member stated that the price of starch in Edwardsburg was 5 cents per pound, while similar starch could be bought in the United States for 2¼ cents per pound. That is hardly a fair comparison. The starch that is sold here for 5 cents per pound is the best that is made, and it cannot be made or sold for much less than that. The same kind of starch that is sold for 2¼ cents per pound in the United States is manufactured and sold in Canada to the cotton mills for $2.80 per 100 pounds, and has been for years. I do not say that the hon. gentleman has given this statement in a malicious way, but at the same time he has taken the statement made by these men who were discharged as true, and I think it is unfair to let it go to the country that these statements are true when, as a matter of fact, they were first made with malicious intent.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not wish for a moment to try to cripple any industry in this country; my only object is to secure for the people the products of the different industries at about their intrinsic value without compelling the people to pay enhanced prices as compared with what they would pay if they were allowed to import the goods. My answer to the statement of the hon. gentleman is that the statement with regard to the profits made which I have already placed on 'Hansard' is substantially correct. I stated that the profits of the industry of which the hon. gentleman is the manager amounted in five years to $163,895.92 on an invested capital of $170,000. I think that is a very clear indication—

Mr. REID. But, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me a word. That is a very fair indication that this particular institution has been given too much protection, and my object is to secure for the people of this country what they require to use at the lowest possible price. I admit that a revenue is necessary. But we find that we get very little revenue from starch. Last year we received only $14,900 on starch, although we know that the consumption of starch in this country is very considerable. We know also that if the people were allowed to bring starch in from the United States it could be placed in the hands of consumers at from 75 to 80 per cent less than the prices that are now charged. We do know also, and the hon. gentleman will hardly deny it, that there is a combine in Canada among the manufacturers of starch. If the hon. gentleman denies it, I think I could prove it to the satisfaction of any judge or jury, even if I could not to the satisfaction of this House, if the opportunity were afforded me. When there is a combination to increase the price of a staple article like this, the Finance Minister should turn his guns directly upon it. He has not done so, and I am sorry for it, because the people have a right to protection against such combines. I think that a complete answer to what the hon. gentleman has said is to be found in this statement of profits made by this institution within five years.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Mr. Chairman, being the representative of the county in which the Port Credit starch industry is carried on, I may say a few words. From conversation with the gentlemen interested in that business, I learned that they were satisfied with the arrangements made until the duty on glucose was lowered. They wish to compete with the Americans in the production of this article, but in order to do so on a fair basis they desire to have free corn. If the Government could see their way to give us free corn, it would be a benefit not only to the farmer, but also to the manufacturer of glucose. If this cannot be done, they would like very well to have an increase in the duty on glucose. But they would rather have the reduction in the duty on corn, of which reduction the farmers as well as they would get the benefit. A glucose manufactory on this side is under considerable disadvantage in competing with the Americans. The Americans have their corn free and their acids free. Our manufacturers have to pay 7½ cents per bushel duty on their corn, as well as 7½ cents freight, making a total of 15 cents per bushel against them in the price of the corn. Moreover, the Americans can ship their products from Chicago to London, Ontario, for 17½ cents per 100 pounds, whereas the factory in my riding has to pay 20 cents per 100 pounds. I think, therefore, the competition is unfair. If a protective policy is to be adopted there should be, as nearly as possible, a fair protection all round. What I would propose is the placing of corn on the free list. If this cannot be done we must be satisfied with an increase in the duty on glucose, if we can get it. If this is not given these people will have to give up this branch of the business altogether.

Mr. REID. The hon. gentleman says the capital invested in the Edwardsburg starch works is \$170,000. I just wish to say that I had Messrs. Riddell & Common, who were reported to me as being the best accountants in Montreal, to examine into this affair. I never saw either of these gentlemen before, but referred the matter to them, because I was told they were the most competent men. I asked them the question what was the amount of capital actually remaining in the business and the property of the shareholders on the 1st January, 1887, the day on which control of the company's affairs was assumed by the directors, who have recently retired. The answer they gave me; an answer to which they have certified, is that the capital remaining in the business on 1st January, 1887, is shown by the books to have been \$282,012.59. Now, that was the amount invested in the business and the working capital at that time. So that when the hon. gentleman stated that the capital was \$170,000 that was not true. The hon. gentleman has stated that there is a combine. Now, Sir, that Edwardsburg concern has been in existence for over thirty years. That establishment has been in existence thirty or thirty-five years, and never in the history of that company was any arrangement made until last March, when the same men entered into an arrangement that they would not cut prices; but at the very first meeting of the shareholders after they had made that arrangement, every one of those individuals was forced out of the company and the arrangement was broken up, and now the company is running on its own merits. For that reason they have deemed it necessary to prepare the statement as explicitly as possible for the purpose of ruining that concern. When the hon. gentleman made his statement that night it had the effect of influencing the Finance Minister and at the same time injuring that concern, but the hon. gentleman also injured all the farmers in Prince Edward Island, who are now supplying 30 or 40 per cent of the starch grain of Canada. Those men require protection in order to sell their starch, the price of which at the present time is $2\frac{1}{4}$ cents per pound, and surely any hon. gentleman coming from an Ontario agricultural constituency should be quite willing to protect his brother farmer down in Prince Edward Island. In my opinion the Finance Minister should do something towards reducing the duty on the raw material. The starch factories are entitled to their raw material free if the Finance Minister is going to continue the duty on starch as proposed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Featherston), who urged that corn should be placed on the free list. By the tariff submitted there is a duty placed on corn of $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents per bushel.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If we commence a discussion on corn there will be no end to it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am going to talk on starch. There is a provision in the tariff by which corn is admitted free for human food. As a portion of the corn is admitted into this country for human food free, and as the starch factories make it for two purposes, for laundrying and for manufacturing a portion for food purposes and for glucose, which enters into articles of food, such as candy, it would be wise to divide the duty and allow corn whenever imported for the purpose of making corn starch or glucose to be admitted at the reduced rate of 5 cents per bushel. That would be placing it on a footing equal to corn imported direct for human food, because a portion of the products of the corn starch and glucose factories goes into articles for food purposes, while two-thirds of it is used for laundry purposes. It would be a fair compromise between the starch men and the glucose manufacturers if we allowed a portion of the raw material to be admitted at 5 cents in place of $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents, while, at the same time, I am not in favour of admitting corn free for all purposes unless the Americans admit our barley free, in which event we will give free corn.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman who represents the starch industry is another instance of what can be done by judicious firmness on the part of supporters of the Government in obtaining re-amendments to the amended tariff. It has been well understood that the hon. gentleman has been keeping to his tent for some time, and that there has been some uncertainty as to whether he was going to resign his seat unless certain changes, these changes now under consideration, were made in the tariff respecting starch. His backbone appears to have been starched up by the scheme proposed, and he is now quite hearty in supporting the Government. Other hon. gentlemen who have factories of various kinds in their counties may not have known how much could be accomplished by judicious sulking, or we might not have got through with this tariff for another month or two yet. But coming to the item itself, it seems to me rather outrageous that an article should be imported for use in manufacturing at a lower rate than is charged where it is used for food. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has referred to the free importation of corn for human food. There is another illustration in the case of rice. If you lower the duty on rice imported for factory purposes, and I do not say it is wrong, as I am generally in favour of reducing the duty, it is a little too much to ask that manufacturers should obtain raw material fit for food at a cheaper rate than those who import that article for food purposes. The hon. gentleman also mentioned that the factory has been in existence thirty years or more. It appears to have been fairly prosperous during most of that time, but during half of that period it prospered under a rate of taxation not called protective. The industry having stood for thirty years, during fifteen or twenty years of which it was under a tariff that was not protective, surely it could get along without special protection now.

Mr. McMULLEN. So far as regards the question of combination, I observe the hon. gentleman denied that a combination existed. All I have to say in reply is, that within twenty-four hours before I made my statement a wholesale merchant here informed me, and I have received similar information from Toronto and Montreal, that starch manufactured in Canada is placed in the hands of wholesale merchants at a fixed price and they receive a discount from that price, but they are not permitted to place it in the hands of retailers except at a certain fixed price. If a combination does not exist to-day, the change must have taken place within a very recent date. Now, with regard to the starch factory at Prince Edward Island, I did not refer at all in my speech to anything but starch made out of corn; the starch they make in Prince Edward Island is made out of potatoes.

Mr. REID. I wish to say with regard to this combine, as the hon. gentleman calls it, that those gentlemen who were put off the board had control of this factory until away on into January, but just as soon as the new board got control of it they ran it as they had run it for a great many years. Now, with reference to prices, the hon. gentleman must bear in mind that there are two prices, for this reason. There are prices given to the wholesale men, and retail men can buy at a discount of 4 per cent, if they take 50 boxes, and 10 per cent if they take 100 boxes, and they can get similar prices to the wholesale men. I think this House will agree that the wholesale men should have a 10 per cent profit, and it will hardly be expected that a man sending for five or ten boxes of starch would be able to get it for the same prices as a wholesale man who would buy 500 boxes. The hon. gentleman quoted United States prices. He must also bear in mind that he quoted prices in Chicago, or prices where the starch was sold, whereas this concern in which I am interested sell it to the wholesale men, and the retailers get the benefit of it, delivered freight prepaid, on shipments as low as ten boxes. So you will see the wholesale men have a right to protection by getting the starch 10 per cent less than the retail men. I admit the old board had an arrangement for prices such as the hon. gentleman states, but the old board were put off as quickly as possible, and the shareholders did not wish to have any such rates. It is not their policy, and I do not think they should be blamed for it now.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Some of the farmers opposite seem to be opposed to admitting corn free.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. We are on rice.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. We want corn free for the purposes of starch. At the same time they ignore the fact that there is a great deal of corn admitted free already, but the farmers do not get the benefit of it. The milling companies of Montreal get the benefit of it, and it comes into competition with grains that should be ground and used to feed cattle crossing the ocean. They get their corn in bond, grind it, and ship it in bond, but at the same time it is sold in the port of Montreal. Every week there are 200 tons of meal going out in bond to offset the amount of grain that comes in in bond. Therefore they do not know anything about it, and that is the reason why they are not finding fault.

Item agreed to.

Galvanized iron wire, No. 12 gauge, when imported by makers of barbed wire for use in their factories, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to galvanized wire, there has been a good deal of difficulty, and I have a resolution which I wish to submit to the committee. The committee is aware of the discussion we had two or three days ago on that item. It is a difficult matter to adjust from the fact that whilst we have a wire drawing establishment with a large amount of plant costing some \$90,000 or \$100,000, which draws rods into wire, we have other establishments in the country which simply makes the barbed wire from the galvanized wire, but have not wire-drawing machinery or establishments for themselves. So that in adjusting the tariff there is a difficulty in giving both of these a fair opportunity in their business. The solution which we adopted when we were in committee before upon this item was to take No. 12 galvanized wire used for barbed wire fencing and make that 15 per cent. But that had scarcely been done before it became apparent that there were other makers of wire fences besides the makers of barbed wire, and other numbers were used. The hon. gentleman sitting opposite to me read a letter, and afterwards sent it to me, from a company which used No. 6 and No. 9 chiefly in making fence. So after thinking the whole matter over there does not seem to be any better solution, although it probably will not give unalloyed satisfaction to either party, but it seems the most reasonable thing to do in view of the double industry as a whole, and that is to take these galvanized iron wires of the numbers which are used chiefly in making fences and put them on at 20 per cent, and leave all other wires at 25 per cent. That gives the man who draws wire 25 per cent protection, which I think is sufficient on all wires except these numbers, and with 20 per cent protection and free rods it gives an opportunity for those who are making wire out of these numbers, and who have not wire-drawing plant themselves, to have a choice between getting them at the wire-drawing establishment here, or importing them and getting them at a less duty, that is, at 20 per cent. The barbed wire itself has a protection of $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cent per pound, and at present rates 20 per cent upon the raw material with a protection of $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cent per pound upon barbed wire, will give them an opportunity, I think, of carrying on their business. It is the only solution which appears feasible, and I submit it to the House:

Galvanized iron wire, Nos. 6, 9, 12 and 14 gauge when imported for makers of wire fences for use in their factories.

Mr. CASEY. Do the words "makers of wire fences" include those who put up woven fences, leaving the fence as it is put up?

Mr. FOSTER. Just as the item is termed "wire fencing."

Mr. CASEY. But what does "makers of wire fencing" mean? Does it mean merely the factories where they use this wire for making fencing? There is a firm in St. Thomas who import wire and have machinery for weaving it on posts as it is put up, forming a woven fabric on the spot.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, that will be their factory.

Mr. CASEY. Does this apply only to galvanized wire? Would the Minister include wire not galvanized when used for the same purpose?

Mr. FOSTER. No, I cannot do that.

Mr. CASEY. Because the firm I refer to do not use galvanized wire, but use these sizes he mentions. Is there some special reason for including these that does not apply to the galvanized wire?

Mr. FOSTER. That seems, as far as I can go, in justice to a large establishment which has made itself able to make these.

Mr. MARTIN. I would draw the attention of the Finance Minister to the fact that all galvanized barb-wire makers do not use 12 or 14 gauge, but 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ and 13. There are several factories in the city of Winnipeg, and I am informed by one of the manufacturers that he uses 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ and 13, and no 12 gauge. I would draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the fact that if any one in the barbed wire business is entitled to consideration at the hands of the Government, it is this particular factory, and one other in the city of Winnipeg, because they were started, not for the purpose of making money, but for the purpose of fighting the combine. They are run by hardware merchants in the city of Winnipeg who rebelled at the tremendous price that the eastern factories insisted upon putting upon barbed wire. They reduced the price last year from 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 cents a pound and still made money. From the necessities of the trade in Manitoba or for some other reason they find it is better to use 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ gauge for the straight wire, and 13 for the wire that makes the barbs. I suppose that the matter has not been brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance before, but it does not seem to me that these gentlemen are in a position to ask from the Government the same, if not better treatment, than the other manufacturers, because they are really carrying on their operations, in the interest of the trade in Manitoba and the advantage of their operations goes to the farmer. There is no question at all but that the price of barbed wire in Manitoba and the Territories was very considerably reduced by the enterprising efforts of these two hardware merchants. They are Miller, Morse & Co. and J. H. Ash-down. The Minister of Finance could still keep the condition that the wire must be used for the purpose of making barbed wire, but what reason can there be for saying that it must be 12 gauge instead of 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ or 13 gauge, which these manufacturers I refer to, use.

Mr. FOSTER. It is impossible to go so far as to cover every special case. My hon. friend talks about 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ gauge. The barbed wire makers use 12 and 13 gauge and they would be glad to have both 12 and 13 gauge come under this clause, but they use of 13 gauge about one-fifth, and of 12 gauge four-fifths, so that the item upon which they pay the 5 per cent extra would be comparatively small. There are others who are making fence wire and who use 13 gauge, but the difference between it and 12 gauge is not very great and if it is to their advantage to use 12 gauge they can use it with about the same efficacy. Under all considerations, I think we have made a fair compromise—and it is a compromise—and I do not think we can go further without injuring very materially a large industry which started on the faith of the not very large protection we gave.

Mr. MARTIN. I accept what the hon. Minister says about 13 gauge and I do not ask that the Winnipeg people should be treated any differently from the eastern people.

Mr. FOSTER. There is really no 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ gauge known to our law.

Mr. MARTIN. I have here two invoices for 80,000 pounds of galvanized steel wire, 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ gauge.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be 12 light and 12 heavy.

Mr. MARTIN. All that I ask is that the Minister of Finance should put these factories in the same position as the others.

Mr. FOSTER. If it uses 12 gauge it is in the same position.

Mr. MARTIN. But they use 12½ gauge.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is no such thing.

Mr. MARTIN. Would the Finance Minister put it 12 light or 12 heavy?

Mr. FOSTER. It is there as No. 12.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the hon. gentleman say that 12½ gauge will be accepted for duty at 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. If this passes, the customs-house officers will be bound by the law.

Mr. MARTIN. The Finance Minister says there is no 12½ gauge, but surely the best proof that there is, is a copy of the invoice which I hold in my hand, made by manufacturers in the United States, who sell it as 12½ gauge. The fact that the Finance Minister says that there is no 12½ gauge would be no guide for the customs-house officer at Winnipeg, who would be bound by the words of the statute which says No. 12 gauge. I do not ask that 13 gauge should be included, but when this particular establishment in Winnipeg uses 12½ gauge, and the eastern establishments use 12 gauge, it does seem to me that they should all be put on the same basis. Remember what I said about the very courageous and unselfish attempt of these gentlemen in Winnipeg to break up a combination with which I am sure the Finance Minister is not in sympathy. On account of the efforts of these gentlemen the price of wire in the west has been reduced to 4 cents a pound. The effect of the present proposition of the Finance Minister will be to prevent these men from carrying on their business, and the combination will be allowed to come in again. If the farmers of the North-west have to pay 2 cents or 2½ cents per pound more for their wire, surely the hon. gentleman will not be able to escape the responsibility for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Unless this combination rules in the United States and Canada as well, it would be impossible to pay 2 or 2½ cents more for it, because the protection on it is only ¾ of a cent per pound. I know very well the firm in Winnipeg to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has referred, and I agree with everything he said as to their pluck in entering into this work. They did good work, they are doing good work now, and I do not think they will find any difficulty at all with the 12 gauge.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) As the Minister of Finance admits the great force of the point made by my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) that these firms are engaged in the creditable work of fighting the combines.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say they were fighting the combines now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman said that they did good work and that they are doing good work now. They deserve approval at his hands, and so far as his voice goes they receive his approval. It strikes me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has made a fair request to the Finance Minister. He says that they use 12½ gauge and the Minister of Finance says there is no such gauge. The hon. gentleman asks him: Will you put a departmental construction upon this resolution which will enable that class of wire to come in at 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not here to put a customs construction upon it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) You are here to do so, and now is the time that you should say so, and that statement would be more or less binding upon the Customs Department. The hon. member (Mr. Martin) has made a fair and reasonable demand and the grounds upon which he urges it are irresistible. The hon. Finance Minister himself accepts that ground as deserving of very great weight, and he says that as there is no wire known as No. 12½ gauge, the wire in question shall be considered as No. 12 gauge, large size, and come in under the resolution. I do think, considering the strong point the hon. member has made, and the acceptance of it by the Finance Minister, that he should give the assurance the hon. member asks for.

Mr. FOSTER. I can give no further assurance than to ask that the item pass as it stands, and to say that that will let in No. 12 gauge, which, from what the hon. gentleman says, is what these people are using. As I said before, there is no 12½ gauge. The gauges run up by ones, and if the wire he speaks of is not 11 gauge or 13 gauge, I suppose it must be 12 gauge, and, as I said before, I do not think they will find any difficulty in bringing it in under this item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a matter quite within the competence of the Treasury Board to settle if they choose. I believe that under the Customs Act it is under the control of the Controller of Customs, with the Customs Board to assist him. It is perfectly fair to say—if No. 12½ gauge be, as the hon. Minister supposes, a heavy grade of No. 12—that what is technically called No. 12½ in the United States shall be admitted as No. 12. That would be merely carrying out the hon. gentleman's own implied argument for making this alteration at all, and it does seem to me that there can be no possible ground, on principle or in practice, for refusing to agree to that concession. The hon. gentleman knows quite well that there is probably no one article in this tariff more generally consumed by the farmers in the North-west than this same article of barbed wire, and that anything that tends to diminish the price of it is a very great boon indeed to them. In the greater part of that country there is no wood, so that this article is a prime necessity to them; and surely the hon. gentleman, who made a tour of the Northwest and expressed great sympathy with those people in their difficulties, but whose difficulties, I believe, are not going to be very materially lightened by the changes in this tariff, might make that slight concession.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is scarcely fair in his argument, taken in connection with his general position. I remember, not once, but a dozen times, hearing him scout the proposition that when you made a reduction to the manufacturer in his raw material, therefore you were making any concession to the consumer, because he argued that the consumer would pay just as much, and that whatever advantage was given to the manufacturer he would put it in his own pocket. Now, it suits the hon. gentleman to take the other tack, and, therefore, his argument to-night is lame, if his former position was sound. All his creed on tariff matters is this, that the duty regulates the price, and, therefore, that it does not make a pin's difference to the farmer whether we give the manufacturer a little cheaper or a little dearer material for the article which he makes and which the farmer uses. According to the hon. gentleman's reasoning, the price the manufacturer charges to the farmer is the price at which the article can be bought for abroad plus the duty. The duty is the same in Winnipeg as anywhere else. The duty that makes the relative price in Winnipeg to Messrs. Miller & Morse is the same as that which makes the relative price to the manufacturer here. So the hon. gentleman is not quite right in saying that in doing this or in not doing it, we are discriminating against the farmer or not discriminating against him. Neither will it be found in practice that Messrs. Miller & Morse are being discriminated against.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it will be found in practice; and, besides, these people are not in the ordinary sense of the term manufacturers. They are parties who, having an eye to the benefit of the country, embark their capital, not in a combination with men whom we know have in this, as in many other cases, had control of the particular manufacture they are engaged in. My argument was largely based on the fact, which is perfectly well known to the hon. Finance Minister, although he has taken extremely little pains in this tariff to prevent the mischief arising, that all through this country there is a swarm of combinations composed of men who do not compete in the open market with each other, but who make special bargains and regulate the output, and who have been known time and again to close up factories for the purpose of preventing competition. These men are outside of those ruinous combines with respect to which more particularly I advanced my argument the other night.

Mr. MARTIN. I still fail to appreciate what the hon. Finance Minister says about the gauges. He asserts very positively that there are only No. 11, No. 12 or No. 13—that there is no such gauge as No. 12½ and the hon. gentleman has been in a position to get very accurate information on these points. Possibly that may be the rule among Canadian manufacturers; but there is no question at all that there is a gauge called 12½ made by American manufacturers, and it is American wire that these Winnipeg people import and make their barbed wire from. I have here a copy of an invoice that one of these manufacturers, Mr. Ashdown, received, showing that he imported a large quantity of wire of 12½ gauge.

Mr. FOSTER. After all, the words of the invoice are not the final law. If there is no such thing as 12½ gauge in our gauge measurement, then no matter what an invoice calls it—it may be 12¼ or 12¾ or 12⅝—when it comes to the custom-house, our gauge is used to test it, and it will come in as No. 12 or No. 13.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it is half-way between No. 12 and No. 13, how will the custom-house officer decide?

Mr. FOSTER. If it goes through the gauge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it does not, he will charge the higher duty.

Mr. FOSTER. It is his duty always to charge the higher duty.

Mr. MARTIN. Then this wire will be charged 25 per cent, and, therefore, I say this proposition is unfair to this particular factory.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think so.

Mr. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman ought to know. I asked the hon. Finance Minister whether the customs officer at Winnipeg would charge 20 or 25 per cent, and he gave me the extremely clear and lucid statement that the customs officer would obey the law. We are here to-night, not to discuss what the law is, but to make the law for the guidance of the Department of Trade and Commerce; and if the hon. gentleman is desirous, as he expresses himself to be, to encourage these gentlemen in Winnipeg who are engaged in manufacturing only for the purpose of fighting the combination, and not for the purpose of making any profit for themselves, surely he should go so far as to make some arrangement by which this 12½ gauge wire will come in at the same rate as the wire he says the manufacturers use. The hon. gentleman seems bound not to take that course, because, evidently, from what he says, if it is half way between, the Government would take the benefit of the doubt and charge the higher rate. Of course it won't go into the smaller gauge, it won't go into the 13 gauge, therefore it must be the 12 gauge.

Mr. FOSTER. That argument is a little against you.

Mr. MARTIN. Possibly it is. It is half-way between, and the hon. gentleman says the Government will take the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

Mr. MARTIN. So under these circumstances it will have to pay 25 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend would like very much to have me say what he wishes me to say, but which it is not my duty, or my province to say. The hon. gentleman, above all others, should not press it, and if he were a Minister he would not answer that question in the affirmative. What right have I to say that a piece of wire, which is simply imaginary, that I have not before me, shall go in at a certain rate. The hon. gentleman wishes me to say that wire which he does not say is thirteen, which he does not say is twelve, but is somewhere between the two, will come in under one or the other of those duties. Let him produce the gauge here, and I will tell him whether it will or not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Finance Minister has distinguished between wire that is being used in making fences, and other wires, and he has undertaken to put a lower duty upon that which is employed in making fences than that which is employed for other purposes. My hon. friend informs the Minister that two invoices of 80,000 pounds each of wire No. 12½—

Mr. FOSTER. Which I do not know at all, but yet I am asked to say whether it will come in.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am pointing out that the reason for putting it in is not a question of size but is a question of use. The Finance Minister is proposing an alteration in the tariff and a classification of wires under different duties, and my hon. friend says that the use that is made of this wire, the purpose for which it is imported, is the purpose for which wire is being used of other numbers which the hon. gentleman has put at a lower rate in the tariff. Now, my hon. friend says to the Finance Minister: You have named certain numbers that are to come in at the low duty, and this wire is not of those numbers, it is not of the numbers that you have fixed at the higher duty that you have mentioned; it is an intermediate wire, but it is used and imported exclusively for the purpose for which you have put the duty down on certain wires. Are you willing to treat these importers of this wire precisely the same as you treat the importers of other wires that are being used for like purposes?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; if they import No. 12.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But is there anything sacred in the character of No. 12? Is it because it is No. 12 that the Minister proposes to put it on the list at a lower figure? No; that is not the reason the Minister has assigned; it is because that number is used for a specific purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Thirteen is used for a specific purpose.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has put the one on a different plane from what he has put the other. Now, my hon. friend says that these parties entered into this business for the purpose of affording the farmers of the North-west wire fencing at a moderate figure, and they have imported 160,000 pounds, and he asks the hon. gentleman not to put them in a worse position than others who are importing the wire for fences; and the Minister says: This is half a size smaller, and it has to pay as No. 12, but I will pay no heed to your representation. That is practically the position the hon. gentleman takes. Now, we are not interpreting the law here, we are making the law, and we want to word it in such a way as to give effect to what the hon. gentleman says is his policy. We ask the hon. gentleman not to make a hard and fast line that will defeat that policy, so far as certain parties are concerned, to their detriment, and, perhaps, on the whole, to the detriment of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. Minister of Finance knows well that business men in every town, and business centres of the country are complaining of grievances, owing to the various interpretations put upon the tariff by different Customs officers. I must say that after having seen so much difficulty in the working of the tariff, I regret to observe that the Finance Minister is not willing to try and arrange it in a clear and business-like way, especially when it is pointed out to him in what respect it could be improved. It would be far better and more business-like if the Minister would say to my hon. friend and the parties interested in this business: The article that you refer to will be 25 per cent, and the other will be 20 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know what he refers to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. Minister does not know, he ought to know.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know what size his 12½ is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Minister is simply encouraging the difficulty that exists throughout the country among business men. If he was in business and found that his competitor in one town was getting in goods at 5 per cent less than he was at the port at which he was paying duty, he would begin to realize that it was a serious matter.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no chance for that in this arrangement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is exactly that chance.

Mr. FOSTER. Each customs officer has his gauge, and goes by it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Minister, instead of discussing the various theories of protection and free trade, would try to make his tariff as clear as possible, I am satisfied that he would give much better satisfaction to business men. I acknowledge that some hon. gentlemen opposite are endeavouring to assist the Minister in framing this tariff, to clear away some of the difficulties that before existed, and I know that other business men are satisfied that an effort has been made in that direction. Now, this is not a matter of party politics, it is purely a matter of business; and the Minister is asked to say at what duty this article will be imported, and he says that it will depend on circumstances. We know what that means. In some ports it will be admitted at one rate of duty, and at another rate of duty at another port. I am sorry he does not try to make it more clear so that it shall not be left to the discretion of the appraisers and customs-house officers. Perhaps, on the whole, they try to do their duty according to their judgment and information, but the Minister, with the aid of his Controller, ought to be able to make it clear so that these difficulties will be avoided in the future.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, all this discussion seems to have arisen out of a simple matter, but as well as I can understand it these are the facts: The customs officer at each of these places, including Winnipeg, has a gauge marked 12 and a gauge marked 13.

Mr. FOSTER. He has a gauge with No. 12 and No. 13 on it—all the sizes are marked on the gauge.

Mr. MARTIN. If a certain wire cannot be put into No. 13 in this gauge, then it must be No. 12 or lower than No. 12. If that is correct, then we are all right. That is what I have been trying to find out. I understand that No. 13 is the smaller wire. Now, as to this American gauge, which is unknown to the hon. gentleman and which he says, therefore, is unknown to Canada and unknown to the world—if this gauge of No. 12½ is claimed by the Americans to exist, and if No. 12½ is between No. 12 and No. 13, as one would naturally suppose it to be, and if wire called by them No. 12½ will not go into No. 13 on the gauge used by the customs officers, it must be taxed as No. 12. Of course, if that is the position I am satisfied. If I had been able to get that answer from the hon. gentleman in the first place, there need have been no more talk about it. If this particular size of wire, under the circumstances I have given, is to be taxed at 20 per cent, that is all that Mr. Ashdown requires to know. Evidently the customs officers at Winnipeg have not known of this, otherwise the matter would not have been referred to me to bring before the House. It would appear that they misunderstood their duty and I hope that, under the circumstances, they will be duly instructed how to perform their duty.

Mr. FOSTER. I have one other resolution which I should like to ask the committee to pass. We have had some discussion with reference to payment of duties on articles which have, from time to time, been entered while these resolutions were pending. Representations have been made from both sides of the House, and with a great deal of reason, that if, on a certain day, when a dealer or merchant came to pass his goods at the customs-house there was a resolution—which had the force of law—that he should pay so much duty upon them, and he paid that duty; and if, within a week or two afterwards, there had been a change making the duty higher, then he, having entered his goods at a certain rate of duty, fixed his prices upon the basis of that duty and sold the goods at the prices thus fixed, ought not to be called upon to pay the higher rate of duty. And, vice versa, if he passed them at a certain rate of duty and that rate had afterwards been lowered, we had no right to make him a present of the money by giving him the benefit. My answer to the representations that were made was that it had not been our custom to regard these matters, that the rule was that entries were subject to amendments and that if changes were made and duty raised, importers had to pay the increased duty. But, looking over the whole question, now at the end of the work of the committee on the dutiable list, I find that a great deal of work would be necessary for a very little be made subject to amendment and calculation of extra duty if all of these were to tions of amendments and if re-entries had to be made. Therefore, I am going to ask the committee to pass an addition to the third resolution, which, in brief, is to this effect: That whenever goods were entered on a certain day when a resolution was before the committee fixing the duty at a certain rate and that duty was paid, on one hand, if the duty were raised, there should be no call for extra duties, but, on the other hand, if the duties were made lower, no refunds should be made. I beg, therefore, to present a resolution to that effect.

Mr. FORBES. The hon. Minister will remember when he issued the schedule of the goods, that section referring to lines, seines and twines was supposed to be an exact copy of the same subsection of the old tariff. But it was found afterwards that "nets and seines" were omitted. A fisherman in Cape Island who imported some of these goods writes to me to this effect.

I hope you will fight your opponents to the death politically. On May 2nd I paid $12.82 duties on net twine invoiced in Boston at $33.91, which amounts to about 37 per cent 'ad valorem.' I wrote to the Minister of Customs on the 28th ult., but have not received a reply to date. The following is a copy of the bill:—

95 lbs. twine	$39.90
Less 15 per cent.	5.99

Tarring, baling, salting. . . $33.91

I suppose I was charged duty on $42.75. The twine only costs 22 cents per pound, and 20 cents per pound for making into netting—less 15 per cent. Have I to pay duties on the cost of knitting, tarring, salting, baling and trucking? At above rate the duties on a fish trap or twine for a trap would be about $300, besides $50 fee for license.

Now, I think the hon. Minister will see that the man has been improperly charged a duty upon his goods. The hon. gentleman stated that nets and seines were to be imported free and I fail to understand under what provision of the tariff this customs officer charged the duty. I take it that the hon. Minister will agree with me that the duty should be refunded to him. If he says I am right in that, of course that ends the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. When the tariff was brought down, the question was asked, I think, by the hon. gentleman himself, whether it was intended to charge duty on these nets and seines. That certainly would be a case in which the duty was properly collected by the collector; but certainly a refund would be in order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Did you make that statement when the tariff was first brought down?

Mr. FOSTER. I forget.

Mr. MARTEN. I am glad the Government have brought in this proviso. It will be remembered that some time ago I called attention to the very unfair position the importers were placed in under the rule that had been acted upon previously in these matters, and I was informed by the Controller of Customs that it was out of the question to consider such things, that they would have to take their chances. Now, it appears to me that there are occult influences at work upon this Government which produce effective results, but which are not the result of discussions in this committee. It seems to me that the discussions which take place in this committee have little or no effect upon the Government, because if it is right tonight for the Government to come to this conclusion, it was right for them to pay attention to the point when it was brought up in this House some little time ago. The hon. gentleman's conduct appears to be under the control, not of this House, but of those for whose support and approbation he cares more than for the approbation of this House. So far as the hon. gentleman's supporters are concerned, it makes very little difference what kind of a proposition is made. If the Minister declares his intention of reducing the duty upon rice, we hear loud applause from all quarters of the Chamber occupied by supporters of the Government; and when a few days later the Minister sees new light and puts back the duty upon rice, again we find that his course meets with the unanimous approval of the supporters of the Government. But we find the supporters of the Government outside the House are not so docile. When a proposition is made which does not suit them, they immediately bring an effective influence to bear upon the Government, and very soon there is a notice given and a proposition is made in the line of the interests of those gentlemen.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the committee rise and report the resolutions, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he intends to deal with the matter I brought to his attention the other night?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman only put the papers in my hand this afternoon, and I have not had time to look into them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I protest against that as being hardly a fair statement. I have already brought the matter up in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Quite true, and I asked him to send me the papers, and I only got them two or three hours ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He will see that these papers are copies of letters and statements addressed to the Customs Department two, three, and six months ago. It is not fair to say the matter has not been brought to his attention. Personally, he may not have been made aware of it, but I was surprised when I saw that some of these letters had been addressed to the Controller of Customs many months ago, and that in the interval there were letters asking that he would be kind enough to reply, and they could not even get an acknowledgment of their letters. I may take the opportunity of saying that at the present time we have a gentleman from South America with a view to making a contract, and in addition to what was in the papers, I would point out how difficult it would be for these people to compete with American manufacturers in that market when they have to pay 35 per cent on a great amount of the material they use. As they have pointed out to him in this correspondence, they cannot compete with the Americans and others in the South American market. I think if he will look into the matter a little carefully himself, he will see that something can be done to encourage that manufacture in Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I will look into it.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

SUPPLY—DOMINION LANDS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. I move in amendment that all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof :—

In the opinion of this House the public lands of the Dominion should be sold to actual settlers only, upon reasonable terms of settlement, and in such areas as can be reasonably occupied and cultivated by the settler; that no sales of public lands to speculators or middlemen should be permitted; that liberal provisions should be made for free homestead grants to settlers; and that land grants to Railway Corporations have been made by the Government with reckless lavishness, and to the serious detriment of the public interest.

In support of this motion I beg to urge a few reasons and present a few statements. The hour is late, and I shall be as brief as possible. The policy set forth in this motion is by no means a new one, or a novel one as regards the Liberal party of Canada. The policy with reference to the reservation of public lands for actual settlers, was moved in this House on the 12th April, 1882. It was then formerly adopted as the policy of the Liberal party, and has been adhered to by them from that time down. The Liberal party also, from time to time, has taken exception to the character of the land policy of the Government, and has criticised unfavourably its free homestead grant policy, and has denounced unsparingly the lavish grants made by the Government to railway corporations. We have always held that the public lands of the Dominion were the heritage of the people, that the Government were merely trustees, that their duties were to preserve that heritage inviolate for the people, that in the condition of the Dominion, with its sparse population, with the foundations of its institutions being land, with its future being mapped out by the policy of the Government, great care should be exercised in administering this trust, and that areas of unoccupied land in the North-west and elsewhere should be held until the settler was ready to occupy them, and not be permitted to pass into the hands of speculators and middlemen who would ultimately charge the settler there four or ten times the price they paid to the Government. These protestations and representations have always passed unheeded by the Government. Railway grants have been made, speculators have been permitted to acquire great tracts of land, the homestead policy has not been a satisfactory one for the settler, and the policy of the Government from its inception down to the present moment has been a policy open to and deserving of severe criticism. The speculator, the middleman, in all countries wherever areas of virgin soil are in possession of the Government and open to and offered for settlement is the natural enemy of the settler. He is the enemy of the state because he seeks to acquire land and amass a fortune at the expense of the most deserving class of the population, the pioneer and settler, upon whose efforts the progress of the country must to a very large extent depend, and who is worthy of the highest consideration, and the most careful care of the Government, and should be protected in his interests in all cases where it is possible for the Government to afford such protection. It is a criminal act, it is not only an act of bad policy, but it is a criminal act, to permit the public heritage to pass into the hands of the favourite, the speculator and the middleman, and to disregard the interests of the settler who is in the future to develop the resources of the country, if the country's resources are to be developed at all. The contractor, the speculator, the railway promoter appear in the lobby, and exercise their influence, and a most potent influence it is. They make their demands on the Government and the Government listens to those demands, while those who are really interested, the farmer, the settler, the pioneer, are not there—they are not represented in the lobby, and the Government receive no representations from them. It knows well enough, however, what their interests are, and what its duty is, but they listen to the representations of the speculator, the railway grant promoter and men of that character seeking to acquire the land which will be ultimately developed, and the consequence is in Canada as in other countries that we will awaken some day and find one-half, two-thirds or three-fourths of the public land acquired by these people, a result which could have been prevented by a little forethought on the part of the Government.

Let us review for a few moments the policy of the Government with respect to the public lands of the Dominion. We had in 1882 the introduction of a policy called the Colonization Grant Policy, and in one year the Government had received applications from 251 parties, 24 of whom were members of Parliament, and had granted 2,295 townships of land, or 82,520 square miles of the public lands to companies, to speculators, and on easy terms of payment, and also at one-half the price that the Government charged to actual settlers. That was an outrageous act, that was a policy conceived, not in the interest of the settler, but it was a policy designed to forward the interests of the speculators. The Government at the same time granted millions upon millions of acres of pasture land on leases, at the nominal price of 1 cent per acre, asking for no competition, inviting no men to bid, but granting those leases to their own favourites at this nominal sum, as it granted these applications for colonization grants of townships to a large extent to its own favourites. Then the Government adopted a plan of scattering homestead settlers. In the United States where the authorities realized the importance of securing the settlement of wild lands, the homestead settler was allowed to take a homestead where he found vacant land, and in that way contiguous bodies of settlers were created; but the Government of Canada has pursued a line of policy whereby one homestead settler is placed in one section, and another in another section, with vacant spaces interposing between them, and the scheme was so adroitly contrived as to place the settler in such a position that it was impossible for him to obtain school and church privileges without travelling long distances, and he could not go to the post office, or to the grist mill with convenience, because the settlers were so widely scattered over a township. The policy was one that did not attract settlers, it was one that was not in the interest of settlers, or in the interest of the country, and if the Government had earnestly desired to secure the settlement of the fertile North-west, it would have adopted a liberal homestead policy, and have invited settlers to make homes for themselves in the country on some system which would have secured to them the privileges of schools, churches, grist mills and post office and other facilities which are for the convenience of settlers of a new country.

Then the Government adopted as another part of its policy the system of giving away timber areas, not inviting competition, not putting them up at auction, not seeking to secure for those properties their actual value, but partitioning out among their favourites tracts of not less than thousands of square miles of the most valuable timber land of this Dominion, and in this way no less than 25,000 square miles were granted by the Government to its favourites at a nominal rate of $5 per square mile, as I have said, without competition and without regard to actual value. So this land policy of the Government in all its phases from its very commencement has been a policy that any man conversant with the proper course to be pursued by a Government with respect to wild lands must necessarily condemn, a policy not calculated to promote the interests of the country. We cannot overestimate the importance of securing the settlement of the North-west. The great want of this country is population. It has an enormous extent, it possesses enormous resources of all kinds, its wealth of resources is as great as that of almost any equal area of the earth's surface, and what it wants is labour, population, to develop these resources. The great North-west with its wide expanse of prairie and timber lands, with its rivers and lakes, with its mines and vast and varied resources of various kinds does not constitute a national asset until the labour of man develops these latent resources, and what we wanted in the North-west was not pastoral land leases, coal land leases, grants for timber speculators, grants to railway speculators, not free townships granted to speculators under the colonization plan, but what we required in the North-west was settlers to cultivate the land and develop the resources of the country and add to the prosperity of Canada. That was exactly what this Government has not sought to secure, these are results which the Government have not sought to obtain, or if they have sought to obtain them, they have not endeavoured to secure them in any reasonable or practical manner. The fact that the settlement of this great and fertile country has been so slow is itself a proof that the policy of the Government must have been faulty. We have in that great region to-day less than 400,000 inhabitants after all these years of attempting to people it. Something surely must be wrong. We started out first with a policy asking $5 per acre for lands within a certain distance of the proposed line of railway; $4 an acre for lands in the next belt; $3 per acre for lands in the next belt; $2 per acre for lands in the next; and away off entirely out of the reach of humanity, $1 per acre for the rest. People did not go in, and I repeat what I said before, that the prices were too high; that the homestead policy was an erroneous one, scattering the settlers when they ought to be allowed to concentrate and take the lands wherever they could obtain them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, land grants in a new country are always liable to be lavishly made. The authorities of a new country perhaps can scarcely be expected to realize the future importance of the proper management of this great trust. Nearly all countries that have had great extents of wild land have, at the outset, managed their trust badly, have not realized the value of that trust, have not realized that that land should be carefully husbanded for the occupation of the settler and for the occupation of the settler alone. They have not realized that the Government should act as trustee for the settler, should secure the land and hold the land and pass the land over to him on the easiest possible terms, and should, in every way, make it for the interest of the settlers to flock into the country where these lands were held. I want to refer to-night to a most glaring instance of incapacity and folly on the part of the Canadian Government with reference to the management of its North-west land trust. Since the year 1880 this Government has granted to railway corporations, 44,242,000 acres of land, representing 442,240 farms of 100 acres each, an extent of land representing somewhat more than 70,000 square miles, an extent of land double the area of the cultivated land of this entire Dominion, an extent of land capable of sustaining double the present population of the Dominion. Seventy thousand square miles of the choicest lands of the North-west, I repeat, capable of supporting 10,000,000 inhabitants, were granted by this Government to railway corporations, some of them, possibly, necessary, and many of them unnecessary. Now, I want to compare the results of this land grant system and the magnitude of the grants, with the policy pursued by the United States which, for years, has been admitted in that country to have been a lamentable one. Since 1850, the United States have granted to railways, 58,461,000 acres of land. These land grants commenced forty-three years ago, and our policy in that respect began about thirteen years ago. You will observe that the total amount of land grants in the United States is only 30 per cent greater than our own. Their population is twelve times greater than ours, so that our excess of land grants to railway corporations upon the basis of population, is nine times to one that of the United States; or our excess of land grants over that of the United States upon the basis of population and time over which these land grants extend, represents a disparity of twenty to one. We have given on the basis of extent and time and disparity of population, twenty times as much land to railways as the United States have. These United States land grants promoted the construction of 21,898 miles of railroad. The exact number of our railway miles that our land grants will promote the construction of, I am unable to say, but I do venture to think that the American mileage of railway was at least five times greater than the mileage promoted by our land grants in Canada, and consequently that the American grants have been from four to five times more effective in proportion to the acres granted than our land grants have been. As I said a moment ago, the Americans woke up to the realization of the fact that this whole policy was an erroneous one, and that the country would have been far better off if not one acre of land had ever been granted to a railway, because their grants, in many instances, enriched to an enormous extent, railway corporations at the expense of the people. The Illinois Central railway received a land grant twice enough in value to build the road. The Union Pacific afterwards incorporated with the Southern Pacific, resting upon the basis of its land grant and its money loaned from the Government, realized to the projectors on the original capital of $10,000 or $20,000, a property valued at $270,000,000 above its liabilities. If you trace the whole history of land grants in the United States to these various railroads, you will find a system where corporations like cormorants have grabbed all they could get, had taken vastly more than they needed, and had secured grants from the Government in advance of the time that the roads were needed by the country. When the time came that the roads were needed, it was evident that the roads would have been built without any aid from the Government at all, and that the Government that granted these lands had simply squandered them for the benefit of corporations; capital, as a matter of investment, always standing ready to give to a country railroads when they are needed, without any grants in this way. The policy of the United States which I have referred to has been abandoned for over twenty years, and not a public man in the United States conversant with the question will venture to assert at the present moment that the whole policy was not a gigantic mistake, taking as it did from the settlers of the United States lands that would have been sold to them at $1.25 per acre, or given to them afterwards under the Homestead law, and putting these lands in the hands of railway corporations that sold them to settlers at any price from $4 to $20 an acre. Now, Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that it is time that this country should follow the example of the United States in this respect, and put an end to this policy. We have run the course almost as extensively as they did. We are perhaps not in as good a position at present to realize the evil fruits that will result from it as they were, but we may profit by their example. We may accept the suggestion of all their public men that the policy was a mistake, and we may realize that in giving away 70,000 square miles of land in the North-west, we were taking from the people land that will be needed at some future day. There is another bad feature about our railway land grant. When the American Government made land grants to railways, they laid off a certain belt on each side of the road. They gave to the company such lands in alternate sections as had not been already taken by settlers. They gave them no privilege of rejecting lands not fit for cultivation. They gave them no privilege of going outside that belt to get the lands that ought to have been in that belt if they were not there. The railway company had to take the alternate sections in the belt reserved on each side of the road, whether they were mountain or alkali, plain or swamp, or whatever they might be, and if these alternate sections were found with squatters upon them, or if they had been already sold by the Government, the railway company did not get them. The Canadian Pacific Railway received a land grant in the North-west with the privilege of rejecting lands not fit for settlement; and if it could not find enough in the first belt it had the privilege of going to the second, and if it could not find enough in the second it could go to the third, and it might go to the north pole for that matter until it found good average lands of the quality which the Government granted to it, and to the extent of that grant.

Now, Sir, the Government might answer that the demand made in this resolution for a homestead policy of a liberal character had already been met. They may claim that they have a homestead policy which is all that can reasonably be desired. I repeat what I said, that the homestead policy of the Government is not a proper policy, that by that policy the Government have not realized the object of obtaining settlers for the North-west, that the policy of planting settlers on alternate sections in unoccupied districts is one that cannot materially hasten the settlement of the country. Now, Sir, the interest and welfare of the settlers should be the primary object of the Government. The Government should cease to bestow its kindly care and consideration upon the land speculator, upon the timber speculator, upon the railway corporation, upon the charter broker, and it should realize the importance of bestowing its care upon the settler whose labour is to reclaim that wilderness, if it is ever to be reclaimed, whose labour is to build up an empire in Canada, if we are ever to have an empire in Canada, whose labour is to develop the latent resources of that country if they are ever to be developed. He is the man who should have the Government's fostering care and consideration. The speculator, the charter broker, the timber-limit holder, the pasture land lessee—all these men will take care of themselves, and we have had enough legislation for them. We want now to have a state of things introduced by which the people, the hard-handed sons of toil, the settlers whom we wish to introduce into that country, will be encouraged; and in order that they may do well and develop that country and make Canada a nation, the time has come when we should adopt such a policy as this resolution demands.

Mr. DALY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 4th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FRASER RIVER DISASTER.

Mr. CORBOULD. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the Government to the great disaster that has overtaken the settlers in the valley of the Fraser River, in British Columbia. I am quite sure that it has been with a feeling of sincere sorrow that every hon. member of this House has read the account of the floods that have taken place in that part of the Dominion within the last ten days. That which was one of the most flourishing farming districts in British Columbia, a few days ago in fact the garden of the province, where some two thousand families had their happy homes and everything they possessed in this world, is now one vast sheet of water. Many lives also have been lost—it is impossible yet to tell how many. A large tract of country, some seventy miles long, by an average of twelve in width, has been swept by this flood. The flood has been caused by the unusual quantities of snow which accumulated on the mountains last winter, and the very cold and late spring up to within a few weeks ago, when it suddenly turned to exceptionally warm weather, causing the snow to melt and flood its natural outlet, the Fraser River. In 1882 a similar flood occurred, when much damage was done; but I am quite satisfied, from the reports which we have received so far, that the damage done in 1882 was as nothing in comparison with the damage that has taken place within the last few days. If I mistake not, on the occasion of the great fire that took place in the city of St. John some years ago the Dominion Government granted a considerable sum of money in aid of those who were rendered homeless; and in more recent years, when the town of Cornwall was flooded in consequence of an ice jam, the Government again granted a considerable sum for the relief of the people injured thereby. I hope, therefore, that the Government will now come to the relief of the settlers and farmers of the Fraser River valley, and grant a sufficient sum to provide for their immediate wants, at any rate.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, the regret of which the hon. gentleman speaks is, I am sure, shared by every member of the House. I am sorry that to-day I am not able to give the hon. gentleman a definite answer to his request, for want of information and particulars on the subject of the distress. I presume this will be forthcoming within a few days, and if the members representing the province of British Columbia receive any such, I shall be very glad if they will forward them to the Government, in order that they may be promptly considered.

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should also look into the condition of things at St. Andrew's, county of Portneuf, which has suffered from exactly a similar disaster.

TELEPHONE.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would call the attention of the House to a recommendation of the Printing Committee, which was adopted by this House on the 5th April last, that a telephone be placed near the 'Journals' office in the corridor. Notice was received from the Speaker's secretary, intimating that the recommendation had been forwarded to the Public Works Department, but so far nothing has been done. If the Department of Public Works is going to assume the responsibility of overruling the action of this House, we ought to know it.

Mr. OUMET. That recommendation was never sent to my department, and I do not know that my department could do anything of the kind unless we got the money. It was agreed at the time that the cost should be paid out of the contingencies of the House, and I have no appropriation to meet it. However, now that the hon. gentleman has drawn my attention to the matter, I will see how the desire of the Printing Committee can be met.

MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENTS IN LONDON.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). On the 13th March, last year, I moved for a return showing the number of manufacturing establishments in the city of London, the names of the parties, and other information connected therewith. That address was carried, but the return did not come down last session, and so far it has not appeared.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will make inquiries about it.

RETURNS NOT BROUGHT DOWN.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think it was on the 8th of April that the House made an order for a return showing the number of returns that had been ordered by the House and have not yet been brought down. I hope they are not so numerous that it is impossible to make them up in a couple of months, and I would like to know if the Government intend bringing that return down.

Mr. PERRY. I have the same complaint to make. The other day I asked the Minister of Railways when he would be prepared to bring down certain papers connected with the movement of a flag station, and I should like to have these papers before we prorogue, and as I wish to know how the Minister was actuated in carrying out this scheme.

Mr. HAGGART. They are being prepared as fast as possible, and will be down in a day or two.

SHEIK'S ISLAND DAM.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the papers in connection with the Cornwall Canal. The hon. gentleman stated to me, the other day, across the floor, that they had been laid on the Table and sent up to the Committee of Public Accounts. They are not among the papers before the committee or on the Table.

Mr. HAGGART. I inquired twice about them, and my officer told me he was positive they were in the Public Accounts Committee, and had been there for a fortnight. I will inquire again.

ST. CHARLES BRANCH.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he has borne in mind the conversation we had in Committee of Supply the other day respecting the judgment awarding $26,000 for a claim for damages in connection with the St. Charles branch? He then promised to bring down all the papers before we went into Supply again.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think I will have them ready shortly, but I did not promise to have them before the House before we again went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is what I understood.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think I will have them ready.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 51) to incorporate the Northern Life Assurance Company of Canada.—(Mr. Mulock.)

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Richelleu and Ontario Navigation Company.—(Mr. Girouard, Jacques Cartier.)

Bill (No. 96) to incorporate the General Trust Corporation of Canada.—(Mr. Davies.)

RELIEF OF JOSEPH THOMPSON.

Mr. NORTHRUP moved second reading of Bill (No. 120) for the relief of Joseph Thompson.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before that question is put to the House, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, as I have said on a previous occasion, that I always feel in connection with legislation of this kind, so far as the discharge of my own duty is concerned, that I am called upon to perform an act that does not properly devolve upon me. I believe that in granting a divorce, where the concurrent action of the House of Commons is necessary, that action is almost invariably taken by this House carelessly and without due knowledge of the facts. Now, I suppose that the granting of a divorce is a judicial act, and that it is an act that can only be performed if some legally defined cause exists, and that the ascertaining whether that legally defined cause exists is a judicial investigation. If a judicial investigation is necessary for the purpose of ascertaining whether a legally defined cause exists for the performance of a judicial act, it strikes me—and I present the matter to the Minister of Justice—that this is rather an awkward and unmanageable court for the performance of that duty. If divorce is to be granted, I hold that we should have a properly constituted and organized divorce court, that the law should define clearly, as perhaps it does, what causes render a divorce permissible, and the investigation into the facts should be made by a judge, and made carefully in the form of a judicial investigation, a decision should be given upon the facts and a decree granted upon that decision. If this were the case, it would have several advantages. One advantage would be that the investigation would be more thorough, in all probability, and more reliable; another advantage would be that it would save cost to the applicants; and a third advantage would be that it would save the time of this House; and I rise to protest, as I have done before, against the course that is pursued in this country with regard to the granting of divorces. I would like to have it pointed out to me where this course is pursued in any other country in Christendom? I would like to have it shown to me in what country it requires the action of the Legislature of the country to perform this duty that should be referred to a divorce court? I call the attention of the Minister of Justice to this point. I presume there are many members of the House who feel as I do, perhaps he does himself, that we should have a change in the law with reference to this matter; that we should have a divorce court established, and if divorces are to be granted at all, if any cause is sufficient for granting a divorce, let it be ascertained by judicial investigation before a court whether that cause exists, and let the decree be issued by that court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not want to object to the second reading of the Bill, but I have been watching very closely, and I have not seen this evidence distributed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I sent up to the Distribution Office for a copy, and I was told I could not get one. I do not think it is fair to press this motion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will let it stand.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHINESE AT ESQUIMALT.

Mr. MARA (for Mr. Prior) asked, Has the Government taken any action yet in regard to stopping the employment of Chinese by the Imperial authorities on the fortifications at Esquimalt? If so, what action has been taken, and with what results?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Board of Trade of Victoria transmitted a resolution, through the hands of the senior member for Victoria, on the subject of the employment of Chinese labourers at the fortifications at Esquimalt. Inasmuch as this work was being carried on directly under the British Government, and the Canadian Government has not control over the works or the modes of carrying them on, we felt that nothing more could be done than to transmit the views expressed in the resolution and in the letter of the hon. member for Victoria, to the Home authorities, and the communications were referred to the Minister of Militia and Defence for that purpose.

THE MESSRS. DAVIS'S SECURITY.

Mr. LISTER asked, Have Messrs. M. P. & W. H. Davis been allowed to withdraw any cash deposited by them with the Government as security for the completion of a contract for deepening the Cornwall Canal or any other public work; and to substitute for such cash security real estate or other property? If so, what was the amount of cash so withdrawn, and what is the character of the security substituted therefor? If real estate is now held as security in lieu of cash for the performance of said contract, what is the area and value of such real estate? Where is it situated, and by whom, and at how much was it valued before its acceptance? What is the nature and amount of the security, if any, held by the Government for the completion of the contract for the dams at Sheik's Island?

Mr. HAGGART. On the 5th February, 1890, Messrs. M. P. & W. H. Davis were allowed to withdraw their cash deposit with the Government as security for completion of contracts Nos. 2, 3 and 4, for enlarging the Cornwall Canal, and to substitute real estate. The amount of cash withdrawn was $50,000, the security substituted was real estate. It is situated in the city of Ottawa, and was valued at $92,000 (before its acceptance) by Messrs. J. B. Bowes, architect, and A. B. Macdonald, as follows: Three lots situate No. 12, south side Daly Street, and Nos. 12 and 13, north side Stewart Street. Estimated value of lots and buildings, $41,000. Two lots, Nos. 40 and 41, north side Rideau Street, estimated value of lots and buildings, $18,000. Five lots, Nos. 19 and 20, south side Theodore Street, and 3, 4 and 5, Marlboro' Street. Estimated value of lots and buildings, $33,000. Total, $92,000. The works on sections 2, 3 and 4 being far advanced towards completion, and the contract for section 4 being extended so as to embrace the Sheik's Island dams, the $50,000 mortgage is held to cover it, being more than 5 per cent on the Sheik's Island work, and the work remaining to be done on sections 2, 3 and 4. Works remaining to be done on sections 2, 3 and 4, $530,000; Sheik's Island dam works, $384,000; total, $914,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then the hon. gentleman's memory was entirely at fault the other night.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman's memory was perfectly correct. Since the security was given for the Sheik's Island dam, there has been no change made whatever; and the substitution was made in 1890, long before I became Minister of the department.

DEAF AND DUMB OF THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. MARTIN asked, Do the Government intend arranging for the education of the deaf and dumb of the Territories at the Manitoba Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb?

Mr. DALY. It is the intention of the Government to arrange for the education of a limited number of the deaf and dumb of the Territories at the Manitoba Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb.

REVISING OFFICERS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. MARTIN asked, Have revising officers been appointed for Winnipeg, Selkirk, Lisgar, Macdonald, Brandon and Marquette? If so, what are their names? If not appointed, when will they be?

Mr. COSTIGAN. 1. Judge D. M. Walker is revising officer for Winnipeg and Selkirk; Alexander Haggart, Esq., is revising officer for Lisgar; Judge J. Ryan is revising officer for Marquette. 2. No appointments have been made for Macdonald and for Brandon, as these are two new districts under the Redistribution Act, which is not yet in force.

Mr. MARTIN. Do I understand that these are new appointments or simply old appointments standing over? The constituencies have been changed, the hon. gentleman knows. For instance, Lisgar, in which Mr. Alexander Haggart was revising officer, is changed now and called Selkirk.

Mr. COSTIGAN. New appointments have been made in new districts.

GEORGETOWN POST OFFICE.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Who was in charge of the Georgetown post office last year, during the illness of the postmaster? Were the duties then satisfactorily performed? Were petitions sent in asking for the removal of the postmaster during his illness? If so, were they numerously signed? Has Herbert Henderson been in charge of the office and performed the duties of it ever since his appointment? If not, who was in charge and who did the work?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. Miss Ella Goodenow. 2. Yes. 3. No. 4. No. Ella Goodenow, assistant postmaster.

DR. GAUVREAU—THE STEAMER 'LABRADOR.'

Mr. CARROLL asked, Have the Government been informed that on the last voyage of the steamer 'Labrador,' that vessel was detained at Father Point an hour and a half, waiting for the visit of Dr. Gauvreau? Have complaints been laid against that public official charging him with negligence in the discharge of his duty, more particularly under the circumstances above mentioned? If so, is it the intention of the Government to make inquiry and proceed against that gentleman, should the complaints prove well founded?

Mr. DALY. I may say, the Minister of Agriculture has been informed by the Board of Trade at Montreal of such detention, and inquired of Dr. Gauvreau in the matter, and received from him the following answer:

The "Labrador" was not detained at Father Point. First information regarding steamer when she arrived off Rimouski, after being notified I was on board tender in half an hour.

(Sgd.) Dr. GAUVREAU.

No complaints have been made against that public official charging him with negligence in the discharge of his duty.

WAGES PAID BY GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS.

Mr. COATSWORTH moved:

That it is expedient to insert in every contract for any public work made and entered into hereafter, a clause requiring the contractor to pay the workmen engaged upon such work a rate of wages at least equal to the current rate of wages paid in the locality where such work is being done, at and during the time such contract is being carried on. Unless the Minister with whose department the contract has been made shall for special reason relieve the contractor from the observance of this clause.

He said: I desire to say a few words in order to show the circumstances under which I have been led to submit this motion to the House. A similar resolution was passed in the British House of Commons on February 15th, 1891, and that resolution has been carried into effect in all departments of the Imperial service. The circumstances which induced me to propose this motion in this particular case occurred in connection with certain Government work in the city of Toronto, at a time when the workmen of that city had agreed with all the local contractors, after some considerable trouble, that certain rates of wages should be paid to the workingmen. That rate of wages continued to be paid, and the contractors, on the one hand, and the workingmen on the other, were severally carrying out faithfully their agreement to its fullest extent. But there was a Government work being carried on by a contractor who did not belong to Toronto, and difficulties arose between him and the workingmen in regard to the rate of wages received by those he employed, which resulted in two strikes or more. The result of that was to create more trouble between the workingmen and other contractors, because the latter felt that if the rate of wages was lowered by a contractor coming into the city to do work, they were entitled to the same privilege of reducing the rate of wages paid. It seems fair that in public works the Government should not allow their contractors to present the example of treating workingmen in a way that was considered unfair. We may be sure that when local contractors have agreed to certain rates of wages, those rates will be fair to themselves, and it can do no possible harm to the Government to adopt a resolution of this kind, that their contractors shall pay the current rate of wages wherever Government works are being carried on. As I have already mentioned, there was a resolution, almost similar in its terms, carried in the British House of Commons on February 15th, 1891, and a similar resolution was carried by the London County Council on February 13th, 1892.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman read the resolution? Is the present motion a transcript of that resolution?

Mr. COATSWORTH. No; but the resolutions are similar in their terms. I will read the terms of the resolution adopted by the British House of Commons. They were as follows:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House it is the duty of the Government in all Government contracts to make provision against the evils recently disclosed before the Sweating Committee and embody such conditions as may prevent abuses arising from subletting, and to make every effort to secure the payment of such wages as are generally accepted as current in each trade for competent workmen.

There was a notification sent by the Government to each of the different departments, asking each department to put this clause in force in all contracts entered into by it. I have copies of these communications, which I presume it is not necessary to read, and such communications were sent to the Admiralty, Board of Trade, Customs, Home Office, and other departments of the Imperial service.

Mr. TISDALE. Read one of them.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I will read one sent to the Admiralty. It is as follows:—

ADMIRALTY, WHITEHALL, S.W.,
16th February, 1892.

GENTLEMEN,—I am directed by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to call your attention to the Resolution at foot, passed by the House of Commons on 13th February, 1891, and to state that they expect those who are entrusted with contracts for the Admiralty to adhere to its conditions. My Lords will be compelled to consider the question of removing the names of all who fail to comply with the Resolution from the list of those allowed to undertake work for this department. You are requested to be good enough to acknowledge receipt of this letter.

Mr. COATSWORTH.

I am, &c.,

(Sgd.) EVAN MCGREGOR.

The other communications are similar in their terms. A by-law has been adopted by the city of Toronto, relating to the labouring classes, providing that no labourer employed by a contractor or by the city, on municipal work, shall be paid a lower rate of wages than 15 cents per hour, which is the current rate for labourers. Resolutions more or less in harmony with this principle have been passed by numerous cities, towns and municipalities in England and the United States. There are others to which I might have referred more in detail, but I think those I have mentioned will suffice to show that the principle I am desirous of establishing by this resolution is by no means a new one, and that with the example of the British House of Commons before us, we would not be doing wrong, but only doing what is fair and right to the workingmen, in adopting the resolution I have the honour to submit.

Mr. OUIMET. The proposition submitted to the House by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) appears, at first sight, to be quite reasonable; but when it comes to be carried into practice, it would involve very great difficulties that could not be surmounted. The first difficulty would be to ascertain what is meant by the term, "current rate of wages," and what, in practice would be accepted as such. Who was going to determine the rate of current wages? Would the current rate of wages be determined by the trade unions or other labour associations? Or would the rate be determined by the contractors, or by the ordinary law of supply and demand? The hon. gentleman has stated that in the city of Toronto the labour unions and the contractors had agreed as to what would be the current prices for the different trades carried on in that city during the next twelve months.

Mr. COATSWORTH. For the next three or four years, or five years, I think.

Mr. OUIMET. If that rule in the city of Toronto were extended to all parts of the Dominion I could not see much objection to the present resolution, but the great difficulty is that there is no other place in Canada, that I am aware of, where such an agreement has been entered into between the contractors and the workingmen. So far as my department is concerned therefore, it would be impossible to make it a condition of the contract that the contractors should pay the current prices for labour. With the exception of the difficulty that occurred in the city of Toronto last winter, I am not aware that there has been any complaint which would justify a new departure in this matter. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Coatsworth) entered into a correspondence with my department in reference to these difficulties, and we at once saw that the contractors should do what was right in the matter. I understand that the whole trouble was settled to the full satisfaction of the labour unions at the time.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Not at all.

Mr. OUMET. The only part of the difficulty that could not be settled was in connection with the fact that the contractor had brought into Toronto some labourers and tradesmen who did not belong to the city. How could this Government make it a condition that none but local tradesmen should be employed on public works? That would be a difficulty that we could not get over. As you see, Mr. Speaker, a proviso of this kind would render the conditions of the fulfilment of the contract so uncertain that it would greatly increase the cost of every public work in Canada, or else the Government would have to depart from the policy of giving contracts by public tenders. It would be a very grave matter I should say to change that policy which has been followed for years, and particularly so as a special law has been adopted by this Parliament to enforce the system of giving contracts by public tender. As far as my department is concerned, I do not see, as things are at present, that we could adopt the stringent resolution which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Coatsworth) has proposed, and which he will admit is much more strict than the resolution adopted by the Imperial House of Commons, which reads in this way:

That in the opinion of this House it is the duty of the Government in all Government contracts to make provision against the evils recently disclosed before the Sweating Committee, and to insert such conditions as may prevent the abuses arising from subletting, and to secure the payment of such wages as are generally accepted as current for each trade for competent workmen.

It will be seen that this resolution was passed in England for the special purpose of preventing what is known there as the sweating system, and which I am happy to say has not yet been introduced into Canada. That special condition not existing in this country, even the resolution as passed by the Imperial House of Commons would be unnecessary here. My department is willing to do everything in its power to secure fair-play and justice to the working people in all parts of the Dominion; but the present resolution would be impracticable. There is added to this resolution a provision that the Minister in whose department a contract has been made shall for special reasons relieve the contractor from the observance of this clause. The House will see at once what would be the result of that. At every step in the fulfilment of the contract, there would be difficulties raised either by the contractors or by the workmen themselves, and the Minister in charge of the work would be subjected to all sorts of solicitations on which he would have to decide either in favour of one party or the other, so that he would be placed in a very embarrassing position, and in a position that might be very detrimental to the country. For these various reasons I would ask the hon. gentleman to reconsider his resolution. I hope that we shall never have such a condition of things in Canada as existed in England, and which made it necessary to pass the resolution I have read. I trust that the hon. gentleman will not press his resolution, at least for the present.

Mr. FRASER. I suppose that the hon. member (Mr. Coatsworth) is moving in the interests of the city of Toronto, and if so I can scarcely understand why this resolution is necessary at all. In that city a current rate of wages is fixed, and as I understand there is plenty of work in Toronto for the people, workmen would not be likely to work on Government contracts at less than that current rate of wages. The resolution, therefore, it seems to me is unnecessary. There is, however, another direction, and if the hon. gentleman would move in that direction I would be most happy to support him. I would be in favour of providing that a Government contractor, whether he did the work himself or sublet it, should be held responsible for the wages of the men who perform the labour. I will go for a resolution of that kind. Labour ought to be paid; it ought to be the first charge. I have known cases in which men took a contract and sublet it to others who were worthless, and got the work done, but the men were never paid. The Government paid the contractors, but the men were not paid. When the hon. gentleman moves in that sensible line, I think he will find a number of hon. members on both sides of the House who will go with him. But on the present occasion I see no need for his motion at all, because, there being plenty of work there for the men, there is no fear of this happening. I would suggest to him that, instead of pressing this motion, he should withdraw it and introduce one in the line that I have mentioned, which I would be glad to support.

Mr. EDGAR. One of the chief reasons given by the hon. Minister of Public Works for objecting to the introduction of this provision in public contracts was that there is no sweating system in Canada. If that is the only reason he has, I am afraid he will have to yield to this motion, because I can assure him that there is a sweating system, at least in the city of Toronto, and that it has been practiced there extensively.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. By what firms ?

Mr. EDGAR. By a firm called, I think, Lailey & Co., a large clothing firm, who sublet their work to contractors who imported Polish Jews from the States to do sweat work in that kind of business, and there was a great row about it among the labour people there. That system has been introduced into Canada even under the National Policy—a fact which the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) undertook to dispute, but which, I very much doubt, if he will dispute now. I think he has probably heard from the Trades and Labour people of Toronto, who saw that he had disputed it, as I see by the papers that they were clamouring against him for having done so. I hope that when he replies he will show the hon. Minister of Public Works that there is sweating in this country—under the National Policy, too—even in the city of Toronto; and if that is a sufficient justification for this resolution, which has, undoubtedly, some good points in it, then the Government ought to yield to it.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Speaker, I remember a year or so ago accompanying a deputation to interview the hon. Minister of Public Works to induce him to have something of this kind placed in Government contracts. With respect to the sweating system, I do not think this resolution will cover that at all. The chief sweating done in this country is done by private individuals or private corporations; it is not done on public works, to which this resolution refers. I think a provision of this kind will be beneficial in this way: For instance, a department wishes to have certain public works done in London, Toronto, Quebec, or some city. Persons wishing to tender for these works should first ascertain the current rate of wages paid in the city where the work is to be done, and in tendering should base their figures upon that rate. If that were done, I do not think the workingmen would have anything to complain of. What they complain of now is this: Suppose a public work is to be done, say in the city of Hamilton, the local contractors there, in tendering, figure on the rate of wages paid in Hamilton; but an outside contractor, say from the city of Ottawa, comes here, and, without taking into consideration the rate of wages paid there, tenders according to the rate which he thinks he will be able to employ labourers, say in Ottawa, or Montreal, or Quebec, or wherever he can get them at the cheapest rate. Then, if he gets the tender, he brings them into the city of Hamilton to do the work. This is what they complain of, and for this reason they ask the Government to place in Government contracts some such provision as this resolution asks for, requiring contractors to pay the current rate of wages paid in the locality where the work is done. Now, I do not think there is anything wrong in asking that much. I know cases myself where public works have been tendered for, on which local workingmen were not employed, but Italians and other foreigners were brought in, who worked for a smaller rate of wages than was paid in the locality where the work was done.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that I have been a little surprised that the hon. Minister of Public Works has so strongly opposed my resolution, as I was under the impression that, with the modification or exception at the end of it, he would have supported it. Now, I did not state very fully the facts with regard to the difficulties that have arisen in Toronto. The contractors and workmen, who, from time to time, have had their disputes, as to the rate of wages, had made an agreement, covering four or five years, I am not exactly sure which. A Government contractor, before tendering for the work, sent an advance agent to Toronto to ascertain the rate of wages paid there, and based his estimates upon that rate, and secured the contract. When he came to the city, he did not employ imported labour, as the hon. Minister thought, but employed workingmen belonging to the city of Toronto; and after the work had proceeded to a certain point, he lowered their wages below the current rate which was paid by all other contractors. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to speak about it not being necessary for the men to work for that contractor. They were placed in this position in consequence of an agreement which they have with each other: that the men employed on the work were obliged to strike. The whole amount involved in the strike, which my colleagues and myself succeeded in getting adjusted, did not amount to more than $150; yet it caused confusion and disturbance among all the working people in Toronto. On the next occasion, when the same thing happened, my colleagues and myself again attempted to adjust the difficulty; but we were unable to do so, and I do not know how it was settled—I presume by some amicable arrangement between the men and their employer. There is no doubt about the difficulties having occurred; and, although my hon. friend may think that men are not obliged to work for this or that contractor, I think that would be a very unfair position for us to assume. We would be putting the men in such a position that they could not carry out the engagement they have entered into with each other, and with the other contractors in the city of Toronto, but must abandon that engagement, and allow an outside contractor to come in and break it, even though doing Government work. I think it is very unfair to allow Government contractors to go into any locality and break up an arrangement of that kind, which is the result of a compromise on both sides, which is arrived at for the sake of peace and harmony in the community, and to which all parties are willing to agree. Irrespective of all questions of party, it would be very unfair for the Government to allow their contractors to enter into our cities and towns and municipalities and do a thing of that kind. The hon. Minister of Public Works thinks that the resolution is far more stringent than that passed by the British House of Commons. I do not understand it to be more stringent. In the resolution passed by the British House of Commons it is provided that the current rate of wages must be paid to workmen on Government works. That is all that is provided in this resolution. I wish to read the clause that is put into the contracts in connection with the Imperial service, in order to satisfy the House that what I am asking it to pass, does not go any further than the British Government certainly understand their resolution to go. Under the head of "Building," there is this clause :

The contractors shall employ only competent workmen and shall pay them wages at rates (not being less than the minimum rates mentioned in condition 29) such as are generally accepted as current in each trade for competent workmen.

I do not think anything could be clearer, but in order to make it still more clear, they further provide :

The contractor shall not, without consent of the receiver, pay any workmen employed by him for the purposes of his contract at a lower rate of wages than hereafter provided, that is to say.

Then are given the trades and the current rates of wages paid by each trade.

Mr. MULOCK. The receiver is the Government representative.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I presume he is a Government official. And then this clause follows :—

Should the contractors fail to pay the minimum rate of wages above mentioned, without the consent of the receiver, then the receiver shall be entitled to pay to any workman who has been underpaid such a sum as will bring up his wages to the rate specified and to deduct sums so paid from any amount due or to become due from him to the contractor.

The conditions I have just read are not, in any sense, less stringent than the resolution I have put on the paper. With regard to the objections of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) and his suggestion—for which I am very much obliged to him, although I cannot adopt it—if he would propose a provision that the contractor should be responsible for the wages of the men working for subcontractors, I am quite satisfied to support it. I think it very proper that some such provision should be made, and I think that in Ontario there is some such provision for the payment of the wages to all the workmen who work on a building, but I am not prepared to substitute that resolution for mine. I think we require both principles to be adopted in the case of contracts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before we pass from what the hon. member for Guysboro' said, the hon. gentleman will recollect that he rather insisted that the resolution before the House now was unnecessary, inasmuch as there was plenty of employment in Toronto. I ask the hon. gentleman if that is the case ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Have I not pointed out clearly to the hon. gentleman and the House the necessity for my resolution. I have specified a case in which two strikes occurred, because the Government contractors desired to lower the rate of wages below the current rate. I have informed the House that the local contractors and the workmen had agreed together, after a great deal of trouble and compromise on both sides, that, in order to prevent strikes for four or five years ahead, the rates of wages should be fixed and determined upon. But the Government contractor came into the city, and, by provoking strikes, created a great deal of trouble and confusion among the working people. I do not think that any case could be put more clearly to show the necessity of this resolution. I do not know the necessities of outside cities, but I should be disposed to think that in Montreal there is a similar arrangement between the contractors and the workmen.

Mr. OUIMET. I do not think there is any such arrangement in Montreal.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Then so much the easier is it for the Minister of Public Works to assent to the resolution. I do not think he gave strong reasons why the resolution should be more difficult of being put into operation, in the case where there is no current rate of wage agreed on in a locality. The only question is whether, when the workmen have been enabled to come to an agreement with local contractors, the Government contractors should be permitted to come in and break down that agreement.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the workingmen do not get sufficient wages in one place, they will go to another.

Mr. COATSWORTH. There is nothing in that argument to warrant opposition to my resolution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is there a dearth of employment in Toronto ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. There is.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is there quite a number of workmen out of employment there who cannot get employment ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is entirely outside the question.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to know the facts.

Mr. COATSWORTH. My hon. friend is not candid.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am thus far candid, that it may influence the way many members will vote. If there is a dearth of employment there, and the men cannot get employment, and this will help them to get employment at fair wages, there might be some argument in its favour, but if there is plenty of employment, what necessity is there for the resolution ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The contention of the hon. member for Queen's would be all right if this resolution were simply intended for Toronto ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I think my hon. friend from Queen's wants to make political capital.

Mr. BERGIN. I am afraid that our hon. friends over there are very sorry they cannot make out that there is no employment in Toronto.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I will answer the hon. gentleman to this extent, that we have plenty of workmen in Toronto and have also a fair share of work continually going on : but in a large city like that, there are always plenty of men who are wanting employment, from time to time, as the work they were engaged on is completed, particularly in the building trade. When a large building is completed, the men are necessarily thrown out of employment for a time until they can get employed on some other building ; and as a matter of fact, the particular building to which I refer is just about completed, so that while I have mentioned a particular case, I am not confining myself to that case in order that the remedy may be applied to it specially. I hope that Government works will go on in Toronto in the future to a greater or lesser extent, but we do not want repeated what has already happened. When our workmen and contractors agree together, we do not want Government contractors to come in and break down that arrangement. With regard to what the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) said about sweating the other night, I replied that I did not think it was fair for the hon. gentleman, on the strength of a newspaper report, to allege that sweating did actually exist in Toronto. He ought to satisfy himself by better evidence before making the positive statement. He was not prepared then, and he is not prepared now, to state, from his own personal knowledge, that he is satisfied, by evidence conclusive to his mind, that there is sweating in Toronto.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the hon. gentleman deny that there is sweating in Toronto under the circumstances I have mentioned ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I have not entered into the question at all. The hon. gentleman knows the question that I raised was this, that he had not evidence, such as ought to satisfy any one, especially a lawyer, that the statement he made was correct. I went further, and said on that occasion, as I say now, that if there be such a thing as sweating in Toronto, this is one of the best methods to stop it. And I think, therefore, the hon. gentleman is bound to support my resolution.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not say that I will not.

Mr. COATSWORTH. As regards what my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has said as to the contractors knowing the rates of wages, he will know, as I have told the House, that the contractor, in the case to which I referred, sent his advance agent to ascertain the rates of wages before making his estimate and tendering, so that there was no possibility that he did not know beforehand what rate of wages he expected to pay. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if the Government do not assent to the resolution, I suppose it would not be wise for me to press it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. COATSWORTH. At the same time, I think it is a resolution that ought to be passed, and I sincerely trust the House will give its assent to it.

Mr. MARA. One point has been brought out in this debate to which I would like to call the attention of the Government, in view of the statement made by the First Minister this afternoon on the question of employing Chinese labour on the Esquimalt fortifications. It has been shown by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) that the Imperial Government are instructed by the House of Commons to make every effort to secure the payment to workmen on public works under contract such wages as are generally accepted as current to competent workmen. If an Englishman working under a Government contractor in his own country is entitled to receive the rate of wages paid in his district, why should not Canadians working on the Esquimalt fortifications receive the rate of wages current in the vicinity of Esquimalt ? It is quite true that we cannot dictate to the Lords of the Admiralty, but the Government can very well call their attention to the resolution passed by the Imperial House of Commons, and to the instructions given to the Lords of the Admiralty when contracts are issued by them. I think, and I am sure the House will agree with me, that if in England a man working on a Government contract receives the current rate of wages, it is not right that Canadians working in Esquimalt should be forced into competition with coolie labour.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I should like very much, in case a vote is arrived at on this motion, to have my hon. friends who are supporting it explain to me how persons can be employed extensively on public works in a city like Toronto and not receive the current rate of wages? It may be that we shall have to give a new definition to the word "current." It may turn out that this motion is a sound one. No doubt it is possible to overturn by a wave of the hand, by the action of a wise legislation in this Assembly, all the established principles of commercial and trade transactions. I have not the least doubt of that, and, if it should be so established, then, I think, we ought to have a rider to the motion. We have a Customs Department which admits large quantities of goods from various parts of the world, upon which goods we impose certain duties. If this motion is passed we should add a rider to declare that any wholesale merchant who is allowed to bring in goods, should be compelled to pay his clerks, his book-keepers, and other employees the current rate of wages. And so with other branches of the public service—I confess, I do not see where we are going to stop. I am not wholly averse to paternal legislation. There are cases, in my opinion, in which it is proper for the Government to interfere. But here is a proposition that, in a city like Toronto—or any city, we will not confine it to Toronto—where any large public work is let by contract, the contractor must pay the current rate of wages in the locality. I do not see, for the life of me, how he can get men to work for less than the current rate of wages. If they go to work for him at a given rate, it must surely be the rate regulated by the demand for labour and the supply of labourers. As at present advised, and as I understand this motion, if it goes to a vote I must vote against it. But it may be that there is hidden away in the dark recesses of the motion an abstruse wisdom that is entirely lost on me. There may be hidden away in the arcana of certain hon. gentleman's politico-economical intelligences such wisdom as will yet live to revolutionize mankind. But at present, Mr. Speaker, I certainly can only vote for the motion on principles that will justify me in voting that the Government, and that we the House of Commons, should interfere in matters in which, according to my present opinion, we are not fit to interfere, and in which Parliament is not concerned at all.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that the principle involved in this motion is a very bad one, because it will prevent persons going into the open market and hiring labour for what it is worth. It may be that labour is not the same in Toronto as in, say Owen Sound. A man in Owen Sound may have a contract for a public work in Toronto. If he chooses to bring his labourers with him, as he can often do to his own advantage, and to the advantage of the country—in the reduction of the cost of the public works—he ought to be allowed to do it, without being compelled to pay these labourers the current rate of wages in the locality in which the work is being done. A very fine illustration might be found in the case of work along the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia. I am told that very often they employ Chinese to do the work that would otherwise be done by English-speaking people, and they do it for much less. That being the case, the country gets the benefit in the reduced cost of the work.

Mr. LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman says "Hear, hear," but the same principle obtains all over the world.

Mr. LAURIER. It is quite sound, but it is rather new to hear it on that side of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. It may not be less valuable because it is new. I know cases of contractors who went from our section to the city of Toronto to commence building operations. They were able to make their contracts at lower figures than ordinary contractors living in the city. Why? Because they have had labourers who were with them constantly, and who work at a lower rate of wages than those in the city. And the country gets the benefit of that. Why should they be compelled to pay the same rate of wages as is paid in the locality? I think that this should be left to be regulated in the open market, so that labour might be hired in any portion of the country at rates agreed upon between the parties. So long as the contractors pay the rate of wages that the workmen have agreed to take, we should not interfere with them. We had a case some time ago when workmen in Quebec engaged in loading and unloading vessels wished to get a law passed to compel the payment of a certain rate of wages, while they would not allow outsiders to come in and do the work for less. I do not think that is sound legislation, whether it is recommended by the Knights of Labour or not. I feel free to oppose it, though recommended by the Knights of Labour, as if it were recommended by anybody else. The principle is an obnoxious one and ought not to be endorsed by this House. If we were to apply it to public works it would soon be pressed further, and we should find it applied to private contracts. And, as a result, you would have to pay a great deal more for such works than they would cost if this objectionable principle were not crystallized in our law.

Mr. TISDALE. It seems to me there are two propositions which make this a very difficult resolution to adopt. First of all, there is the uncertainty of it. I can quite understand the hon. gentleman from Toronto thinking that it is a good and proper resolution, and I am not going to say that it may not be for Toronto, for it seems they have a fixed rate of wages there. It is the only place I know of in the Dominion that has a fixed rate of wages. Now, take a public work to be performed in a new district where there are no labourers, and in order to get labourers you may have to pay them, perhaps, 50 per cent more than labourers are getting in the large centres. How would the contractor, how would the Government, in letting contracts, protect themselves? The contractor would not know, he would have no means of knowing, if he was a provident man and a responsible man, on what basis he would be able to make a fair profit; for this resolution, as introduced by the hon. member, is to apply everywhere. The second proposition is this: If this resolution is adopted, and is susceptible of being carried out, it would mean that all the rest of the people of the Dominion are to pay more for the public works that are to be performed, because in a place where the rate is not fixed, these difficulties would arise. We are asked to adopt a far-reaching resolution of very uncertain consequence, and I agree with the Minister of Public Works that we should hesitate until we are shown the necessity for it. Where is the call for it? Where do the grievances exist? The hon. gentleman has mentioned two solitary instances in the city of Toronto in connection with some strikes that occurred there, and that may or may not have been caused by the public works. I submit that the public works there were not the cause, but they were caused by that special arrangement, and the peculiar conditions which exist there. I do not think this is sufficient evidence for it. While I am on my feet I may say that I quite agree with what the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) says, that if this was a resolution to apply to contractors on public works, compelling them to see that the labour they employed was paid for, that would be a different principle altogether. But owing to the far-reaching extent of this resolution, and the effect it would have in increasing to the whole country the cost of our public works, and the uncertainty that would surround the contractor who honestly endeavoured to arrive at an approximate estimate in constructing public works, I think we ought not to adopt this resolution.

Mr. McNEILL. I think this is a very strange proposition. To ask the Government to say that labour upon public works in Toronto is to be confined to the people of Toronto, and that that labour expended upon public works in any other city is to be confined entirely to the people of that city—for that is what the proposition amounts to—seems to me a very extraordinary proposition. If the labouring classes from a rural constituency, the county of

York for example, propose to take a part in those works and offer themselves for hire at a somewhat lower rate of wages than the current rate that has been fixed by the labouring men of Toronto, they are not to be allowed to do so.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is not the meaning of the resolution.

Mr. McNEILL. That is exactly what it amounts to.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a combine.

Mr. McNEILL. That the rate of wages to be paid should be the current rate fixed by the labourers of Toronto, means that the work is to be confined to them. I understand my hon. friend to say that the best way to prevent strikes is to tell these people that they have the work in their own hands, and that no one else can come in to compete with them. Now, there is no better way to cause strikes than to give these people to understand that they hold the control of the rate of wages in their own hands, so that when they choose to strike, those who employ them are powerless to procure any other labour. It seems to me it would be a terrible thing to accept such a proposition as that.

An hon. MEMBER. The British House of Commons have accepted it.

Mr. McNEILL. If the British House of Commons have accepted a somewhat similar proposition, I can only say that I hope sincerely that the people of Canada are not so much at the mercy of trades union organizations as the people of England are.

Mr. McLENNAN. I would simply say that I can hardly understand the object of this motion. I have been connected with workingmen almost all my lifetime, and cannot see how this Parliament can regulate the rate of wages in the way suggested by this motion. In some sections of the country wages are higher than in others. For instance, while men were getting in this section $1 or $1.25 a day, on Lake Superior and in the western part of Ontario contractors have been paying $2 and $2.25. The rate of wages largely depends on the difficulty of getting supplies where the works are going on, and the difficulty of getting men; and the contractors will have to pay the current rate of wages, otherwise they cannot get men to work for them, and these circumstances will regulate what the current wages shall be. I would like to understand from the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion, how this current rate of wages is going to be regulated, who are going to regulate it, and where it is going to be regulated. In my opinion such a thing is impossible, and I do not think it can be worked out successfully. I agree with the remarks of the last speaker, that nothing would tend to create strikes so much as this very motion that is now before the House. I am myself anxious to see the workingmen get every justice, and I agree with the remarks of the hon.

member for Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser), that the men should be protected, and that they should in every case get the wages that they agree to work for. I have taken the trouble to place a Bill before the House, which I hope we will be able to reach, with the object of securing that end, as I think it will be a great benefit to the working classes. If there is any class of men in the country who can ill afford to lose their wages, it is the workingmen, upon whose day's pay their wives and families are depending for a living. I cannot see where this can be regulated. I cannot see who is going to regulate it, and I have no doubt that if this motion were carried, it would be the means of producing strikes throughout the country. The same class of men have to work in different places. Sometimes you have to pay the same men 25 or 50 cents more in one class of work than you have to pay them in work of a different character. Then there are men who are worth more than others. On public works we always pay men according to their value and according to their work; but if this motion were carried, the poorer man would want as much wages as the better man. I see a great many objections to this motion, and I have no doubt that it would tend, as I have already stated, to create strikes and disturbances on public works that have not existed heretofore.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman who has introduced this resolution is evidently following in the direction of Mr. Burns, the labour socialist, who introduced a similar resolution into the House of Commons in England, and which, to the surprise of every one, was carried.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Burns is not a socialist.

Mr. HAGGART. He is the well-known labour leader. After that motion was carried, I recollect that a question was asked in the House of Commons what action the Government had taken upon the matter, and the answer was given, as the hon. gentleman has intimated, that notice had been sent to the Admiralty, the Ordnance Department, and other branches of the service, directing them to inform contractors that a clause of the nature of the resolution which had been carried in the House of Commons, should be embodied in their contracts. Now, we must remember that different circumstances prevail in this country to those that exist in a country like England. In England the wages are fixed, to a certain extent, by local bodies, the same as in Toronto, by arrangement between the contractors and the labourers. There is a feeling in England that a fair day's wages ought to be given for a fair day's work. But the difficulty in this country is that there is no current rate of wages fixed in any place I know of except Toronto.

Mr. INGRAM. I beg to correct the hon. gentleman, as I have heard that statement made several times to-day. In the city of London, in the city of Hamilton, in the city of Montreal, and in fact in all the leading cities, there is a limited rate of wages fixed, and that is understood among the workingmen generally.

Mr. HAGGART. This is the first time I have heard it, and that is one reason why I ask for the adjournment of the debate on this question—for the purpose of ascertaining in what other places besides Toronto the rate of wages has been fixed. Difficulty will arise even in centres where there is a current rate of wages, and even in the event of public works being constructed in London, Toronto, or Montreal. Has not a carpenter or a blacksmith from the adjoining county the right to go there, and be employed perhaps at the current rate of wages in the particular locality at which he formerly resided? Of course, there is an objection that may be taken to that proposition. Labourers in Toronto and other cities propose, of course I cannot state authoritatively the position, but at all events they assert the right that no labourer from an adjoining municipality shall work at a lower rate than is accepted by those living in the city, contributing to the taxes and becoming a ratepayer therein. But is the Dominion Government, which is constructing public works in different parts of the country, to be bound by that doctrine? That is a question which requires considerable consideration. No less than 90 per cent of the work carried out by the Department of Public Works and Railways is built outside of the cities, and where no current rate of wages prevails. The great works on the Welland Canal, Soulages Canal, and also connected with Government railways, would not be affected by the resolution proposed. Again, it would place the Government in the position of arbitrator as between the employee and the employer, which would be a most disagreeable position for a Ministry to occupy. Time should be granted to the Government to consider the position. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) has given the authority of the English Government as having passed a similar resolution. The circumstances here, however, may be shown to be entirely different; at the same time, it may be possible to make a resolution apply to centres where certain rates of wages are paid, and after mature consideration the Government may be induced to accede to a certain portion of the motion. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. LAURIER. New light has dawned on the Government since the Minister of Public Works spoke in this debate. That hon. gentleman pronounced emphatically against the proposition of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth), and now the Minister of Railways wants time to consider it. The new light is in the direction of free trade. Hon. gentlemen opposite feel compelled to recede from their own doctrine. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) is a protectionist all round, and the motion which he has submitted is quite in accordance with the views laid down and supported by hon. gentlemen opposite during the last two months. What have we learned in regard to the future? We have learned that labour has to be protected. We have been told that we should not permit the importation of the pauper labour of Europe into this country, but that we should stop it at the custom-house, in order that the artisans of this country, as we have heard the phrase used from the Treasury benches, should have the benefit of the Canadian market. But the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) has stated that certain classes may be protected, and even should be protected, if contractors for public works import pauper labour. The hon. gentleman has said, and properly said, that according to his doctrine, if it was wrong to bring into this country the products of the pauper labour of Europe it was equally wrong to bring in the pauper labour of Europe itself. Contractors, however, import Chinese and Italian labour, which comes in here and works for half the rate of wages demanded by native labour, but hon. gentlemen opposite have pointed out that if it is wrong to admit foreign pauper labour, it is equally wrong to admit the pauper labour itself, and so far they are consistent with themselves. What have the Government to say to this, according to their own doctrine, because, after all, the only point made in favour of the motion of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) in so far as regards practical results, is that contractors have brought in Italians and Chinese and other foreign labour and inferior labour to compete with the artisans of this country. The need of Canada to-day is population to settle the wild lands of this Dominion. There is no necessity for importing artisans. We have all the artisans we want. After all there is truth in what has been stated by some hon. gentleman, I think, especially by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that trade matters tend to regulate themselves, and that the less we interfere with labour the better it will be for the country at large; and, therefore, the proposition of the hon. Minister of Public Works was the correct one, namely, that this proposition should not be entertained by the Government because it would be an interference with the laws of trade and commerce, and the less those laws are interfered with the better for the community at large.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The difficulty which has prevented the leader of the Opposition from supporting the motion for the adjournment of the debate is intimately associated with the difficulty experienced by many of his friends whenever they discuss any question whatever, no matter how remotely connected with or entirely disassociated from questions of trade and commerce and the question of free trade and protection: they think there is something to illustrate their story and adorn their tale in everything that transpires in this House. There is much indeed in this discussion that has afforded new light to the House, but that light has dawned on hon. gentlemen opposite when they found that the country which has set itself against the world in championing free trade, has adopted this clause which embodies a strictly protective principle.

Mr. LAURIER. It is a surprise to the Government, as expressed by the Minister of Railways.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not at all a matter of surprise to the Government. It is to meet an evil that has grown up in that country from which hon. gentlemen opposite draw their trade views, and which is the immediate product of the free trade principle which free traders in England and elsewhere think should be enforced in various ways except in the one cold and material way of adopting the principle of protection and not relying on its practice alone. The same principle of protection, applied although not adopted, is enforced against the products of foreign countries and to the cattle of this country, and here hon. gentlemen opposite are the same time the most rigid protectionists in the world and the most ardent advocates of free trade. But I think hon. gentlemen opposite are mistaken altogether with respect to the purpose of the resolution and are, therefore, opposed to the motion to adjourn the debate. It is not with a view to protect the artisans of the country against pauper labour that this resolution is proposed, as I understand from the argument of the hon. gentleman who has moved it. On the contrary, what is objected to, and what is challenged by the members of the Government who have spoken with regard to it is this: That it endeavours to apply the protectionist principle, not in its broad sense, to the country as a whole, but to each particular locality in the country. That is precisely the fallacy into which hon. gentlemen opposite are always falling when they discuss the principles of free trade and protection, because they always try to reduce it to an absurdity by saying that if protection is good for Canada, it ought to be good for Toronto and Montreal as against each other. Therefore, instead of this discussion having developed any departure from the principles which are held with regard to trade and commerce, on this side of the House, it has only illustrated the absurdities on which gentlemen opposite have, from day to day, contested these principles. The proposal to adjourn the debate, which I venture to think is a reasonable one, is based, to some extent, on this proposition: There are certain classes of contracts in the mother country to which the resolution is peculiarly applicable; principally contracts in relation to supplies furnished the Imperial Government, and which are not so much in relation to the construction of structures, wharfs, breakwaters, public buildings, &c., which are the principal classes of our public works in Canada. In the old country, an enormous proportion of the contracts which are let by the Government are for the supplies of clothing and saddles, and everything of that description, to the army, to the navy, and to the reserves. In relation to the furnishing of these supplies it had been established, or it was supposed to have been established, that the sweating system applied in the direction of reducing the cost to the contractor, and to check that evil, the resolution was adopted by the Imperial House of Commons. The hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock) told us to-day that the sweating system existed in Canada. If it exists in any considerable proportion, especially if it can be apprehended that that evil exists in the supplying of goods to the Government under contract, this resolution undoubtedly ought to be adopted for the same reason as led to its adoption in the mother country. That statement, however, is seriously challenged, and it has never been established, at any rate. The contention made this afternoon, that a system for establishing a current rate of wages, exists not in one locality merely, but in many localities in this country, deserves the attention of the House and of the Government. For these reasons, and notwithstanding the observations of the hon. the leader of the Opposition, I venture to support the motion for the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The speech of the right hon. gentleman does not at all reconcile the difference between the observations addressed to the House by the Minister of Public Works, and the observations addressed to the House by the Minister of Railways and Canals. The hon. Minister of Public Works pointed out very clearly what his objections were to the resolution, but the Minister of Railways had not sufficient light on the subject, and he wanted further information, and with a view of obtaining that further information, he proposed the adjournment of this discussion. Whether the Government proposes to take any action immediately following the adjournment of this debate or not, we have not been told either by the hon. Minister of Public Works, or by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House. The Prime Minister and the mover of this resolution have both, it seems to me, overlooked some important differences between the condition of the labourer in the United Kingdom and the condition of the labourer in Canada. When you once establish the principle that men are not free to contract, that the one party is absolutely at the mercy of the other, and must accept such terms and conditions as the other may offer, then, I think, it is a recognized rule in political economy that the state may interfere and undertake to fix the rate of wages on certain equitable principles, such principles as are recognized by a court of justice in undertaking to settle disputes between contesting parties. That rule was recognized in undertaking to fix the rents in Ireland. It was upon that ground, wisely or unwisely, as hon. gentlemen may think, that the Parliament of the United Kingdom undertook to deal with the question of rents. They said: That the tenants had no means of subsistence which would enable them to resist any proposition made by the landlords, and so, that Parliament was entitled to intervene and to fix a fair rate for the use of the soil, when the tenants were not themselves in a position which would enable them to contract freely. The resolution proposed in the House of Commons by Mr. Burns, and carried, was not a resolution relating to that kind of contract which has been spoken of by the First Minister, because it applies to the ordinary contract of labour, as well where the labourer was engaged by the state as by another party. But, Sir, that case is a somewhat different case from the one which we have before us here. Now, the right hon. gentleman has addressed to this House earlier in the session, and in former sessions, this argument: That the people of this country were all in a prosperous condition, that the labourer no less than others was in prosperous condition, and that the alterations in the tariff which the First Minister says has been imported into every discussion, was intended specially to protect the labouring classes from the consequences which would result from freer trade. We have pointed out over and over again, that in order to secure the object which the hon. gentlemen have in view, or profess to have in view, it was not only necessary to increase the cost to the consumer of the articles which are imported from abroad, and which are the product of that cheap labour abroad, but it was equally necessary to put restrictions upon the importance of labour in this country, so that, by making labour scarce, the value of labour might be kept at a high figure. The hon. gentlemen, therefore, in logically following out their policy, are forced into a position to keep this country a country with but few inhabitants, to see that the population is sparse, and that those who are without capital and who live by their daily labour shall be few in numbers, so that labour will be in large demand, and, in consequence of that demand, will be enabled to command a high price. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Coatsworth) does not propose to meet that condition of things logically and boldly on the lines which he has adopted with regard to the imposition of high duties. He proposes that so far as labour is devoted to public works and undertakings, so far as the labour employed by public contractors is concerned, that this House shall exercise a surveillance over that labour, and see that the parties shall receive the current rate of wages, whatever that current rate may be. But the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), who has had a large experience in this matter—and whose observations are characterized, it seems to me, by good sense—has pointed out that the rate of wages depends largely on the locality, and that until you have the experience which arises from the actual employment of labour in the locality, you cannot say what the rate of wages ought to be. That being so, it would be quite impossible under any circumstances to enter into any public contract with the Government beforehand for the construction of any public work, except at a very high figure, such as would protect the contractor against the possibility of being bankrupted by the very high rate of wages that might be demanded. Now, it seems to me that the course taken by the Government is not a courageous one, or one in the public interest. To speak of what has come under my own observation, I know that the demand for labour in the rural districts has greatly decreased, and it has decreased largely because the rate of wages is very nearly what it was ten years ago, when the price of every farm product was higher than it is to-day. The result is that the farmer cannot afford to employ labour, and has to devise other means of carrying on his agricultural operations; so that a very large number of persons who were formerly employed as labourers in the rural districts, have been left without employment, and have left the country. I give that as an illustration of what has happened in the rural districts, and I venture to say that if the hon. gentleman were to attempt to carry out this policy, instead of letting the matter regulate itself by the law of supply and demand, he would find that the only effect would be to so hamper all public works that their construction would be secured only at a very high figure, and in many cases would not be undertaken at all—though, if they were carried on upon the same lines as public works have been for some time, this would be an advantage. But the effect, so far as the labouring classes are concerned, would be to leave them without any public employment, and to diminish their numbers in all the large centres of population. Then, the hon. gentleman, if he were to act on the principle of his resolution, would be obliged to go further. I remember reading not long since of an association meeting in the city of Philadelphia, where it was maintained that a man with a weak physical frame, although he could do less, perhaps not more than half as much as another man of a much stronger and more vigorous constitution, was entitled to the same rate of wages, because the insufficiency of his strength and his inability to perform as much labour was not any fault of his own—because he was doing the best he could, and he ought to have the same chance in life as the stronger and more vigorous neighbour.

Mr. INGRAM. What organization was that?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I forget the name of the organization; but the meeting was in Philadelphia, and their proceedings have been published in book-form. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, would insist that he, as a professional man, should have the same compensation that would be given to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), or that the hon. member for North Simcoe ought not to be entitled to more than he himself receives. And so, if you were to carry out that rule with regard to every calling and profession in life, I fancy that all classes would be very much worse off than they are at the present time. Looking at the speech which the hon. gentleman made in this House not very long ago, it seems to me that this is an attempt to correct a mistake which he made on that occasion, and that in addressing the House on this subject he has sought rather to conciliate those whom he offended than to secure the adoption of his resolution by the House. The Government have come to his rescue by declaring that the debate shall be adjourned, and that the House shall express no opinion on the subject. The hon. gentleman is relieved from the embarrassment of his position by what he himself has said and by what the Government propose to do for him, while the Government have not the courage of their convictions with the exception of the hon. Minister of Public Works, who said what he did because he could not very well help himself.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What do you think about it?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have said what I think. I have said that the law of supply and demand, it seems to me, regulates these matters better than they could be regulated here. I apprehend that if the hon. gentleman undertook to regulate the meat market of Ottawa for the next few months, there would be a good many occasions when he would go without his ordinary breakfast steak, or when a large amount of meat would be spoiled in the market. These things, if left alone, regulate themselves, and do so with great accuracy; and so it seems to me it would be in this case. There are no doubt many cases where, as my hon. friend pointed out, an employer of labour undertakes to pay the labourer much less than he is entitled to; but there are cases when the employer of labour is obliged to pay more than he can well afford, and consequently abandons the employment of labour for the time being. Wages will go down in the one case, and will go up in the other. Our position here is altogether different from that of the United Kingdom. Labour here is not reduced to that helpless condition that it is there. The labourer here is free to contract: he can refuse to enter into a contract if he is not adequately remunerated, and if he considers his remuneration insufficient he can abandon any engagement whenever the opportunity arises. So it seems to me there has been no case made out to-day for the interference of the state.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, the proposition of the hon. Minister of Railways practically carries out the request made by the hon. Minister of Public Works, that the resolution should be withdrawn. This is, of course, the last we shall hear of it this session: the motion is made to burk it, and the hon. member for East Toronto clearly understands of course that it is effectually burked for the rest of the session. But a point has been referred to incidentally in the discussion which I conceive to be a matter of far greater importance than the subject of the resolution itself, that is: the question whether labourers on Government contracts should not be protected in the payment of their wages by some clause inserted in the contract.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a Bill before the House in that direction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the Maritime Provinces several years ago very grievous and serious injuries and frauds were practiced on the labouring men and upon those who sold supplies to contractors for the construction of railways in those provinces. It is all very well to say that the labourer ought to know and ought to see that his employer is a solvent man, and that his wages shall be paid. That does very well in theory; but in practice, a contractor for a large Government work advertises for labour, and men flock to the spot from points hundreds of miles distant and are put on the work. They do work which the public receive the advantage of; and, public moneys being used to pay for that work, reasonable means should be taken in drawing the contract to provide that the workmen shall be paid. There is no difficulty in doing that. There is always a large sum of money retained by the Government as security for the performance of the work by the contractor. That sum might be increased, or special provision might be inserted in the contract that if any workman or supplier of small supplies to the contractor or to any sub-contractor, no matter how many hands the money might go through, the Government should deduct it from the deposit, and pay it to the person to whom it was due. It should be a primary principle that the actual labour engaged in the construction of any public work should be paid, and that the payment of his wages should be ensured beyond any reasonable doubt. It is unfair and unjust that a workman, after perhaps leaving his home, as I have known many men to do—I have known men to leave their farms in Prince Edward Island to work on a Government contract, thinking that because it was a public work, the fruits of his labour were secured beyond doubt, should find at the end of six weeks or six months that he had been engaged by a sub-contractor who was bankrupt and from whom he could not get a dollar of his pay. Hon. gentlemen who were in this House at the time will remember that some years ago, so grievous was the condition of things, the Government felt impelled to come to the relief of the labourers. I think it was in the case of what was called the New Glasgow Short Line. The Government felt impelled to come down to this House and ask for a grant of a large sum of public money to enable them to pay the workmen and the suppliers of small supplies along that road. There was an election coming on at the time, and to save themselves, the Government felt compelled by public opinion to take that course. But there is a better mode of meeting the difficulty. The Government should not be compelled to pay twice over, and there ought to be no difficulty whatever in inserting stipulations in every Government contract to ensure to the workmen engaged, payment at all hazards, of their wages. No matter whether the party in default was the principal contractor or the sub-contractor, or a tenth sub-contractor, the Government should retain sufficient money in hand to ensure payment to the workmen of their wages. This is a matter which, I believe, will receive nearly the unanimous approval of members on both sides, and I trust that the hon. gentlemen who are at the head of our great public departments will not lose sight of this in framing their contracts.

Mr. AMYOT. I may inform the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that the principle he advocates, which seems to be embodied in a Bill now before the House, under No. 69, has been already adopted by the province of Quebec. There a law has been passed to secure the payment of workmen. All that the labourer has to do is to file a notice to the proprietor of the work on which he is engaged, and that notice gives him a privilege on the work when constructed, so that the proprietor is obliged to pay his claim, or his property is subjected to a hypothec and privilege for the amount. And that principle, I am sure, will soon be accepted by this Parliament. It is only fair that those which do the work should be paid, and that law to which I have referred does not apply to Government contracts alone, but to all works. But between that and the resolution now submitted, there is a wide difference. This resolution provides that the workmen shall be paid a rate of wages at least equal to the current rate paid in the locality. As has been said already, that does not provide who will decide what the current rate is; and we will probably see that this rate will be decided by outside parties, in all probability by the great unions in the United States, which order strikes right and left over the continent. We will be subjecting this country to the arbitrary dictation of the labour societies in the States. We will be submitting ourselves to the dictation of foreign societies, which have been created for the alleged purpose of giving security to the workingman, but have turned out to be ruinous to him. I will give an example. In the city of Quebec, some years ago, Parliament incorporated the Ship Labourer's Society. This society was established for the protection of the ship labourers, to ensure them against accidents, to enable the members to mutually protect each other. But it had also for object the prevention of the men working at too low a rate of wages. What has been the consequence? The direct consequence has been that, while at the time this society was incorporated the ship labourers of Quebec were numerous and earning good wages, as soon as the Act of incorporation passed, they took the law into their own hands and decided that instead of working for $3 a day, they should be paid $4 a day of 5 hours labour. The result was that the shipping interest, not being able to afford those wages, abandoned the port of Quebec, and to-day, instead of having that prosperous population of ship labourers in our midst, we have only a few, and those are starving through the fact that the shipping business has gone to other cities. If you countenance such organizations, if you put into the hands of some men who live out of the work of others, and who dictate absurd laws in these bodies, you will injure greatly, not only the labouring class, but every place where these societies take root. The principle advocated by the hon. gentleman would be a good one, if he were to say that an arbitration should take place between labour and capital, by which the rights of every one would be protected, and a proper rate of wages agreed upon. If we could organize a tribunal, which would, on a sound basis, decide what wages should be given, that would be all right; but in the shape in which this resolution is proposed, the rates will be decided, not by the labourers interested, but by those vast organizations, which are continually provoking strikes and disorder and riots, and which have the effect of driving away capital and disturbing the whole community. There is in this resolution a principle opposed to the basis and prosperity of society. Let the hon. gentleman find some means of arbitration to decide what should be the current rate, and his resolution will be worthy of support. I would, however, go a step further. I would say that any interference by legislation between capital and labour is very dangerous.

Mr. AMYOT.

We are sure of one thing, that when a man has a good contract, he will have to pay the ordinary rate of wages, for if he does not, he will not get men to work for him. I remember that when the contractors on a contract for Government buildings in Quebec were paying very low rates, a riot occurred. The Government interfered and ordered the contractor to add 20 per cent to the rate of wages. The contractor did so, for a few weeks. But it turned out to be a farce, because outside of these workmen who received 20 per cent addition to their wages, there were thousands only waiting an opportunity to work for less. So the wages on the work soon dropped to the current rate of wages. Therefore, thinking that the principle advocated by the hon. member for Toronto is a wrong one, because he gives to organized force undue power as against thinking capital, I shall vote for the adjournment, feeling confident that when the question comes up again the hon. gentleman will not insist upon his proposal.

Mr. MARTIN. With regard to the suggestions that have been made by several members in connection with this discussion as to a clause in the contract to protect the workingmen, I must say that I am quite surprised to find that it has not been the practice of the Dominion Government to insert such a clause in their contracts. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that there is no necessity for any legislation, or even for a resolution of this House, in order to accomplish that end. It is quite within the competency of the Government, under the present law, to insert a clause in each contract which will give them the power to withhold from the contractors sufficient money to pay for all supplies and all labour in connection with the contract. I may say that it has been the practice of the Government of Manitoba for very many years past to insert such a clause in their contracts, and to carry it out, and in no case are any payments whatever made to the contractors until they satisfy the Government that all persons who have furnished material for the contract, or who have given their labour in connection with the contract, have been duly paid. As has been pointed out, there is no doubt that labourers and small merchants dealing with public contractors are placed at a great disadvantage in this respect. As the work is a Government work, and as the contractors, in many cases, are not known to the local persons who are dealing with them—the labourers and those who supply material—these latter naturally take it for granted that the contractors are worthy of credit, and feel no concern at all as to getting paid. Particularly is a clause of this kind necessary under the practice which prevails with this Government of giving contracts rather to a favoured few, than under public competition, for the result is that in nearly every instance, the Government work is not done by local men, but by men who come in from the outside, and who are unknown to the local persons. A very large amount of money is often lost through the failure of contractors to meet their obligations, and the insertion in contracts of such a clause as has been suggested, does not interfere with the general laws of trade. It is very difficult, indeed, for me, even after the explanations of the hon. the First Minister, to distinguish between the principles which underlie protection proposed by this resolution from those which underlie protection in trade and commerce. It has been very refreshing, indeed, Mr. Speaker, to hear the sound principles enunciated by hon. gentlemen opposite who are so firmly attached to the doctrine of interference with the natural laws of trade in another form of protection. It is difficult to see what difference there is between undertaking, by legislation, to regulate the rate of wages, and undertaking, by legislation, to provide employment. The proposition underlying the National Policy is that the goods consumed in Canada should be manufactured in Canada in order that employment may be given to Canadians. Under this resolution, it is proposed that the work paid for by the Dominion of Canada shall be paid for at a rate fixed by legislation. It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that in both propositions the same principle is involved. A question naturally suggested by this discussion is this: Why is it necessary to propose any such protection as this for the workingmen of Canada? If the claims—I will not say the prophecies, but the claims—made on behalf of the National Policy are correct, and if it is the fact, especially in the city of Toronto, than which no other place in Canada ought to reap greater benefits from the National Policy, that manufactures have been established, if the manufacturers are looking for men, and if the kindred employments which go hand in hand in a prosperous community are prosperous, if building is active and progress is seen on every hand, then, as has been pointed out, surely the employers of labour ought rather to come here and ask for protection of this kind, so as to enable them to secure workmen without paying too much for them on account of the demand for labour exceeding the supply. This resolution is a practical admission on the part of the hon. member for East Toronto that his claims in this House as to the success of the National Policy do not correspond with the facts as shown by the actual state of affairs in the city of Toronto to-day. I remember very well that it was one of the great causes of complaint against the Mackenzie Administration—and if I did not remember it I should be reminded of it day after day by hon. gentlemen in their speeches in this House—that the Government were not able to formulate a policy that would ensure employment for the people. It was charged that there were idle men in the cities from one end of the country to the other. It was charged that, in Ottawa, there were large numbers of idle men, and a very large delegation was promoted by the Conservative party as a campaign dodge, to call upon the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie to demand work. I say that was done, not because the men were specially out of employment, although there is no question that times were dull and that employment was scarce, but it was made a party question, it was a party measure that this large delegation should be sent up to the department in order to demand employment from the Government. Again, in this very city of Ottawa a soup kitchen was established by the Conservative party as a means of advertising the fact to the world that times were hard in Canada, and that the Government were unable to improve them. Now, Sir, I have no hesitation whatever in saying that if the Liberal party to-day were as unpatriotic as the Conservative party of that day, and were desirous of bringing this Government into disrepute at the expense of the country, they could at this very time show as much lack of employment in Canada as existed at that time, and could show quite as much reason to establish soup kitchens. I can say, Mr. Speaker, that the soup kitchens that were in operation in Canada during the past year were not established by the Liberal party as a campaign measure, they were established by charitable people. I can point out a city with which I am very well acquainted, in which a soup kitchen was running all last winter, not merely a soup kitchen, but an institution in which substantial meals were provided for the unemployed, not by the Liberal party, not as a campaign dodge, but as a matter of charity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. MARTIN. If we desired to go into those matters—

An hon. MEMBER. Toronto.

Mr. ROBILLARD. A soup kitchen was running in Ottawa for the last four years, established by a Liberal, and we bought him out.

Mr. MARTIN. When the hon. gentleman says "we bought him out," does he mean the Conservative party?

Mr. ROBILLARD. We bought it out because there was no need of it.

Mr. MARTIN. I can quite understand that the Conservative party should be very jealous of anybody else engaging in this business which they have appropriated to themselves. The city I referred to was Winnipeg. I may say the difficulty, so far as the North-west is concerned, has been that for many years past they have sent a class of representatives here who have considered it their duty to represent things in the Northwest, not as they actually were, but as the Government desired that they should be represented. The people of Winnipeg, for a change, have sent a representative here who undertakes to state matters exactly as they are, without any regard to political effect, or anything of that kind. So I say that when we look back at the agitation with respect to hard times in Canada since 1878, we see with what prodigious effort the Conservative party enlarged and magnified our national ills before that period, in order that they might reap a political advantage therefrom, and as I say, actually starting a soup kitchen in this very city for mere political effect, in order to advertise the fact that there were unemployed men in the city, in order to emphasize the fact that times were hard in Canada; and now we find the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) bringing in this question before the House, and I say his motion involves the statement that there is at the present time a great deal of distress in Canada, especially in cities like Toronto, a distress which the hon. gentleman himself has no hesitation in proclaiming to the country.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Will the hon. gentleman state any case of distress that I have brought before the House?

Mr. MARTIN. His resolution is a wail.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It is distressing to my hon. friend, I suppose.

Mr. MARTIN. Supposing that Toronto were in the midst of great activity, supposing that the National Policy had brought to Toronto all that was promised for Toronto on its behalf—

Mr. COATSWORTH. So it did.

Mr. MARTIN. Then I would imagine that if a city were in the midst of great prosperity, if works of all kinds were going on, if private dwellings were being erected on all sides—

Mr. COATSWORTH. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the population of Toronto has doubled and nearly trebled since the National Policy was inaugurated.

Mr. MARTIN. I know that the population of Toronto has considerably increased, but when we look at the census of Canada we find that the population of the country as a whole has not increased. Then when we come to ask the reason why Toronto has increased, we find the answer in the fact that hundreds of towns and villages that were prosperous in 1878 have actually gone backwards, and the people who formerly lived in those towns and were earning a living under favourable circumstances—

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman says hundreds of towns and villages have gone back. Can he give us a list of them?

Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. MARTIN. I could, if I had time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Give him time.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Can you name any of them?

Mr. MARTIN. All I would have to do would be to get a copy of the census and read it. I could take up considerable time reading from the province of Ontario, and then if I had not completely satisfied the hon. gentleman in reading the list of towns and villages in Ontario that have been depleted of their population, who have gone to increase the people of Toronto, then I could go into the Maritime Provinces and I could keep the hon. gentleman amused for a considerable time showing him how those provinces have been depleted; but unfortunately, instead of their people going into the cities of the Maritime Provinces, they have gone into the States to swell the population of American cities.

RETURN ORDERED.

Copies of all correspondence, petitions and memorials in relation to the reduction or abolition of the duties on Canadian tobacco, or in relation to any possible changes in the Inland Revenue laws in that behalf.—(Mr. Brodeur.)

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

BRIBERY AND DISFRANCHISEMENT.

Mr. WELDON moved third reading of Bill (No. 6) to disfranchise voters who have taken bribes.

Mr. AYMOT. I desire to draw the attention of the mover of the Bill to the schedule appended. It is not complete. Hon. members will recall the fact that the Bill was amended so as to provide that the court shall not hold an inquiry unless it is satisfied that extensive corruption has prevailed. There should be incorporated in the petition some statement of facts as to how the corruption prevailed, whether by the distribution of money, liquor or by intimidation, and particulars in a general way should be furnished; otherwise a judge would never be satisfied.

Mr. WELDON. The question raised by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) was discussed very fully when the Bill was in committee, and it was pointed out by hon. members defending the Bill that it was quite impossible to ask for a full statement of particulars. The whole purport of the Bill is to fish for evidence—it purports to be a measure of discovery.

Mr. AYMOT. I do not propose that we should give the details, but that a general idea as to the nature of the corruption and the place where it is practiced should be given. The petition at present does not suggest that any particulars whatever should be furnished.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 2) to secure the better observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CHARLTON moved that the first section, as amended, be adopted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think the word "letters" should be included in the clause as amended, for the Bill has nothing to do with letters.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The clause as amended can only be changed by adding words to it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the fact that the word "letters" appears will not be permitted to prejudice the chance of the passage of the section. The intention is to prevent the circulation of newspapers.

Section, as amended, agreed to: yeas, 41; nays, 21.

On section 2.

Mr. CHARLTON. I move the adoption of this clause.

Mr. HAGGART. I move that the clause be struck out and substituted by the following:—

No canal belonging to the Government of Canada shall be operated for traffic on Sunday, except from the hour of midnight on Saturday until 6 o'clock in the morning of Sunday, and from and after the hour of 9 o'clock at night on Sunday. In the case of urgent necessity arising from the pressure of business caused by the interruption of traffic, or the approach of the close of navigation, the foregoing provision may from time to time be suspended or varied by Order of the Governor General in Council; but no such Order in Council shall continue in force for a longer period than from four weeks of the making thereof.

Mr. CHARLTON. This amendment, although not one that I would propose or not one that would be fully satisfactory to those in favour of this Bill, is nevertheless one that I feel bound to accept because it is a very material concession on the part of the Government. I shall not offer any objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the case of our canal at the Sault Ste. Marie. Will our canal on the Canadian side be closed for traffic under this clause while on the other side the Americans will have their canal open? Is it customary for the United States authorities to allow traffic on Sunday through the American canal?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes; they go through all the time on the American canal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If that is the case, and if the traffic is going on all the time through the American canal, they will have a very decided advantage over us.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this clause is very objectionable when applied to the canal of which the hon. gentleman has just spoken. It frequently happens, in the long trip between Collingwood and Duluth, or between Port Arthur and Collingwood, or Owen Sound, that boats are obliged to pass through that canal on Sunday; and if this clause passed, they would either be compelled to tie up at the wharf, or they would go through the American canal. They would not stop, because carrying through freight from China or Japan, which has come over the Canadian Pacific Railway, these boats are accustomed to pass through the canal on Sunday as on other days. Then, I understand that the Americans have the use of some of our canals, and it appears to me questionable whether we would have the right to prevent the Americans using them on Sunday as they are entitled to do at present I believe under treaty arrangements. If you prevent boats passing through the canals on Sunday, it seems to me you should go further and tie up every boat or tug plying in every harbour in Georgian Bay or other Canadian waters on Sunday. The promoter of the Bill should stop his own boat from plying on those waters on the same principle on which he would close up the canals.

Mr. HAGGART. I may be mistaken, but I think it is at present the law that no canal boat shall pass through any canal, except under such conditions as are mentioned in the amendment, the Governor in Council having the power to regulate the matter. I think the Act is declaratory, that no traffic shall occur on any of the canals on Sunday.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If this Bill passes, will it not supersede that? Would it not be better to provide in this Act that that traffic will not be interrupted? Of course, I speak for no special interest; I speak only as a Canadian, not wishing the trade of the country to be impeded by this measure. Of course, it is a laudable thing to observe the Lord's Day, but we must not injure the trade of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. It may be that the law at present will close the Canadian canals; but the American canal I refer to has been made use of by Canadian boats for years, and I have no doubt it will continue to be in future. The Canadian Pacific Railway boats come down with both passengers and freight, coming, it may be, from the far west, or only from the prairie province, and I have no doubt that if the Canadian canal is closed to them, they will pass through the American canal so as to reach their destination as soon as possible. They frequently come into Owen Sound on Sunday as on any other day in the week, and immediately on their arrival a train is despatched and the passengers sent on.

Mr. CHARLTON. Neither the promoter nor any friend of this Bill will attempt to deny that the closing of the canals or the prohibiting of any kind of work on Sunday will interfere with the ordinary current of business. The Bill proceeds on the assumption that English law and English usage recognize the Lord's Day—recognize the principle of securing to the subject his right to rest on that day; and recognizing that right, this Bill proposes to give the lock tenders and the other employees on the canals, an undisturbed Sunday, from six o'clock in the morning until nine o'clock in the evening, the Government reserving to itself the power to permit business under special conditions, such as a break or the pressure of work at the close of the season of navigation. I do not think it is any argument against the closing of the canal on the Canadian side that the canal on the American side is open on Sunday. I do not suppose that we are to copy the Americans in the desecration of the Lord's Day, or in anything else. They may copy us if we set them the excellent example of closing our canal on the Lord's Day, while they, for the sake of godless traffic or worldly gain, leave theirs open. With the two canals in juxtaposition, I think the advantage and the gain will be very greatly ours. I certainly would be very proud of my country if I could point out that on the Canadian side the Lord's Day was observed by the decree of the Government, while on the American side the desecration of the Sabbath, and the stream of traffic went on uninterruptedly. I think no possible hardship can be worked if the Government assent to this Bill, which makes no material change in the condition of things now in force.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman seems to lay a great deal of stress on the force of good example. Would it not be as well for him to begin his charity at home by stopping the running of his tugs on the Lord's Day? I do not understand that he has made provision for stopping railway trains carrying through passengers; but he proposes to close a canal between two great lines of railway, carrying through traffic from the west to the east. The boat only takes what the railway had, and you stop the boat while you let the railway train run. If you stop the boat, should you not on the same principle stop the railway train? You let one run because it is carrying through traffic, and you stop the other, though it is carrying the same through traffic.

Mr. TAYLOR. If I understand the amendment, it legalizes work on the Sabbath day up to six o'clock in the morning, and after nine o'clock in the evening, while the Ontario Act prohibits any kind of labour on the Sabbath day. I do not see why this Parliament should pass an Act overriding the legislation of Ontario by legislating labour on the Sabbath day. I think it is better to leave legislation of this kind to each of the provinces, which I presume will follow in the wake of Ontario and make it illegal to do any kind of work on the Sabbath day. This being the view I take of the amendment, I shall certainly vote against it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If that amendment were adopted, you would have to adopt an Order in Council applicable to every canal work, whereas you might want to keep a certain canal closed and open another one, as a matter of necessity. At the same time, you want a larger discretionary power in the exercise of a larger authority by the Governor in Council.

Mr. HAGGART. There are some canals to which the Order in Council need not apply, and they could be named in the Order in Council.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think so, under the section as drawn.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, it says "any canal."

Mr. AMYOT. By this Bill we claim jurisdiction in religious matters. I have objected to that already, but being in the minority, I can do nothing but submit for the moment. In the second place, by this Bill we assert that Sunday is the Lord's Day. I have already given the name of a very respectable religion which holds the contrary view, and I challenge the mover of the Bill to show where in the Bible he finds that Sunday is the Lord's Day. I quoted the Old and New Testament against the hon. gentleman's contention. Will he allow this opportunity of answering the challenge to pass—he who is the champion in this House, the athlete, fighting in favour of a principle? Will it be said all over the Dominion and the world, that a member of the Legislature in this House could not find in the Bible any text to authorize his assertion that Sunday, or the first day of the week, is the day chosen by our Lord for a day of rest. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to remain silent, but he thus gives a victory to his adversaries. The Seventh Day Adventists will cast up at him, wherever he may be, that he was not able to defend himself against one who is not a member of his religion. I have proved by the Old Testament that the Sabbath is on Saturday, and not on the Sunday, that God did not rest before his work was done but after it was done, and I have challenged him to find any passage in the New Testament where the Son of God gave orders to celebrate the first day of the week instead of the one chosen by His Father. I challenge the hon. gentleman in the name of the Seventh Day Adventists and of the Jews, to reply. Is he impotent? It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to laugh, but there is the weak point, and if he is not able to answer it must be said that the champion in this House, advocating the keeping of the Lord's Day, could not furnish any good ground for his advocacy. As I have said, by this Bill we are assuming to have jurisdiction in religious matters. I contend that it is the provinces, and not this Parliament which has such jurisdiction. In the second place, while the hon. gentleman asserts that the work on the Lord's Day is against the law, by this amendment, to which he consents, he says: the law of God is all very well, but we will not follow it whenever we think it is not in our interests to do so. God said: You must observe the whole of Sunday. That is all right, but we will cut the day short, and take from the Sunday the amount of time required for our business, and the Governor in Council will have the power, four weeks in advance, to say that three weeks hence there will be such a press of business that we will have to disobey the law of God and let prevail the law of man. For my part, I am against all this legislation. I believe that it is not our duty here to occupy ourselves with religious legislation. That has been left to each individual. Each individual has the right to worship his God as he thinks proper, provided he does not interfere with the liberty of any one else. Then, as a civil matter, this legislation belongs to the provinces. Our constitution on that point is clear, and I protest against our submitting to the narrow theories and strict tendencies of certain sects in the community. But if, in spite of the constitution, we are going to legislate to prevent work on the Lord's Day, then I say, enforce the celebration of the whole of Sunday and not a part of it.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me there ought to be some provision made for through traffic in this as well as in railways. At the end of the next clause it is provided:

Through passenger trains with their necessary connections shall be permitted on any trunk line in Canada.

This is one of the great through trunk lines of the waterways in this country, carrying passengers and freight, just the same as railways, and if it is wise to allow freight and passengers on through lines to pass over railways on Sunday, it is equally advisable to show a similar privilege to vessels passing through the canals on Sunday, as they do regularly, because they cannot leave either Port Arthur or Owen Sound on a Saturday without the necessity of passing through the Sault on Sunday. And if they cannot pass through the Canadian canal, they will pass through the American canal, because they are not likely to stop their traffic if they can take another route.

Mr. MASSON. Before the amendment is put, I would ask that still further exception be made with regard to the hours. The time in which the amendment would allow vessels to pass through the canal would be of no benefit at all, so far as traffic on Lakes Superior and Huron are concerned. These two lakes, united as they are by the St. Mary River and the Sault Canal, carrying the largest inland marine on the continent—to stop this connecting link between the lakes from the hours of daylight on Sunday morning until dark on Sunday evening, would mean stopping it, as far as commerce is concerned, for the whole twenty-four hours or more. Vessels cannot go up or down that river at night. They have to move up or down in the daytime. Therefore if a vessel does not get there until six o'clock at night, she might as well lie there until daylight the next morning. Therefore the delay of these hours in the daytime will cause a greater delay than is experienced on any other canal in the country. I would, therefore, ask that the hours, so far as that canal is concerned, be reduced, and that vessels should be allowed to go through, say from two to four o'clock or from two to six o'clock, so that those that are to go through may not be delayed.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is one feature of this Bill that, I think, commends it from a seaman's standpoint, and that is that though it has been before the House for two months, though it has been published in the newspapers, though it was up last year, and it was known that it was to come up again, though every sailor and every captain throughout the country has been made aware of its provision, and of the fact that it is before Parliament, not one single petition against the Bill has been received from any representative of the class most directly affected. The Government may have had intimation that there were objectionable features in the Bill from the standpoint of these men, but the House has certainly received none. The St. Mary's Canal is not yet completed, and it will take some time before it is finished. If it is found that the Bill operates very seriously against the general trade it can be amended—however. I must say that I am opposed to opening the canal even though they continue to open the American canal. This Bill is intended for the very purpose of meeting a vicious system that has been adopted on the other side, of publishing Sunday periodicals, and the general disposition shown to disregard and set aside the Day of Rest which is gaining ground there. Now, we want, as a part of Her Majesty's Empire, to show them a good example, right along their own border. The Bill provides, therefore, to shut up our canal on the Lord's Day, even though they may allow boats to pass through theirs. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) objects that because the Americans keep their canals open on the Lord's Day, we ought to keep ours open also. That argument might be presented in support of many other things. Take the case of Windsor. Many roughs go across the river on Sunday to get into the hotels there because the hotels on our side are closed under the law of this province. The hon. gentleman might say that we are losing money, that these people will go and spend good Canadian money on the American side, because our hotels are closed, and our people will lose business to that extent. Would that be an argument for opening our hotels on Sunday? I think not. The Bill is in the right direction, and we ought to give it effect.

Mr. MASSON. I have never argued that because the Americans keep their canal open on Sunday, therefore we should keep ours open. My hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is mistaken if he understood that to be my argument. But, suppose there is some weight in his argument of example, and suppose the Americans close their canal after we close ours. What will be the consequence? Large numbers of vessels will accumulate. Instead of passing through the canal and on to the lake, they will lie there and wait. All the seamen and passengers will be delayed. The example given by the hon. gentleman shows us that they will go to the American side of the river where, at the present time, the saloons are open on the Lord's Day. A number of sailors will be delayed for hours when they might be passing their vessel through. Does the hon. gentleman suppose it would be possible to keep all these men sober on the Lord's Day under these circumstances? Would he not, by keeping the canals closed, and staying traffic, be doing much more harm than would be done if the canal were open for two or three hours in the afternoon to allow boats to get through?

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I think the discussion which has taken place on this Bill is out of order, inasmuch as the Bill itself is unconstitutional. It is evidently contrary to every principle which must guide Parliament in its legislation. I vainly seek in the British North America Act a provision which empowers the Dominion Government of the House of Commons to introduce and pass laws such as the one proposed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). The British North America Act contains twenty-nine subsections in which are defined the legislative powers of the House of Commons, and I cannot find in any of them any authority to take any notice of a Bill such as this. If I look into the chapter of the powers conferred to Local Legislatures, I find several subsections relating to the legislation with which we are now dealing, and, therefore, if we should decide to pass a Bill such as this, we might as well say at once that we can legislate on any matter coming under the control of Local Legislatures, according to the constitution. In the matter more expressly retained under the whole British North America Act, there is no control of the Local Legislatures than the civil rights of the individuals, the rights of the municipalities to control the police in their limits and the right of the province to control local undertakings. Every clause of this Bill is an offence against these prerogatives of the Local Legislature. I am astonished to see that the members of the Government and the leading members opposite—who often set up for champions of provincial rights—do not raise their voice against such an encroachment. For my part, I deem it my duty to protest against any such Bills which are so many steady encroachments upon the powers of the Local Legislatures. The British North America Act provides that the municipal institutions, the civil rights and generally all matters of a merely local or private nature shall come under the control of the provinces. Now, no matter is of a more local kind than the control of railways in the limits of a province. It is so much so that even the properties held by the railway companies under the control of the Dominion Government are, as concerns their management, subject to the rights of the various provinces through which they run. I, therefore, wish, once for all, that the Government and the leading members opposite should decide on this matter. In the provinces, and especially in the province of Quebec—as known by the hon. members who represents this latter province in the Government—this Government are constantly charged by the press and jurists of the highest authority with encroaching upon the powers of Local Legislatures; and they contend that it will not take many years before the action of the Legislatures will come to naught, they contend that it is a want of good faith on the part of the Dominion Government towards the province which allowed themselves to become part of the Dominion. I hope that the learned jurists who are at the head of the Government as well as those who lead the Opposition in this House, will apply themselves, at this very session, to put a stop to such attempts and confine this House within their proper limits by not allowing it to secure all the legislative privileges exclusively reserved to the province by the British North America Act. I recently met learned jurists, distinguished judges of the province of Manitoba, who told me they were astonished to see how the House of Commons, the Government as well as the leading members of the Opposition, were allowing laws to be passed which were an outrage to the constitution and a violation of the privileges reserved to the province. I once more, Mr. Chairman, call the attention of the hon. gentlemen who have the control of this House to the fact that this Bill is quite unconstitutional and out of the jurisdiction of this House. As pointed out by an hon. member a moment ago, every province in the Dominion has laws with respect to Sunday rest. Notwithstanding that, this Parliament interferes and introduces a legislation which is exclusively germane to the civil rights of the citizens of the various provinces. It interferes through new laws which are sometimes inconsistent with those of the various provinces, and which allow works, on Sunday, which are not allowed by the provincial laws. I hope, therefore, that no legislation will be passed here which should be inconsistent with provincial laws with respect to matters exclusively reserved to the provinces by the British North America Act. It is time we should put a stop to such a kind of legislation.

Mr. BERGIN. I do not rise for the purpose of offering any opposition to this Bill, but for the purpose of saying that, while I approve of many of its provisions, there are one or two points on which I differ from the promoter of this measure. The main object of the Bill, as the hon. gentleman has explained it to us, is to prevent the introduction into this country or the publication in this country of Sunday newspapers. I agree with the hon. gentleman quite heartily when he says that there is no more poisonous class of literature placed in the hands of the public than the American Sunday newspapers. They are, in a sense, directories of all the vile haunts in the great cities. They contain also full descriptions of the most disgusting and abominable crimes, and they familiarize the youth of the country, both boys and girls, with that which they ought not to know much of even when they reach maturity. They are incentives to vice, they are provocative of sin and provocative of crime. Therefore, I think that we ought to give that portion of the Bill certainly our most serious consideration and to assist the hon. gentleman in bringing it into force. The second clause of the Bill, that which is now more immediately under consideration, is one which, I think, might well be enforced during a great portion of the day. But, towards the close of the season, it would be very injurious to the best interests of this country and might be the cause of very serious loss to the shipper and to the trade generally if enforced in its present form. It is no light matter to stop vessels passing through the canal on Sundays in the latter part of October or the beginning of November. There certainly would be very large loss in demurrage to the shippers, and there would be very serious danger of vessels being caught in the ice in proceeding down the Gulf to the sea. At this moment, and during the last year, the canal regulations have been found to work very well. Vessels cease to pass through the canal at six o'clock in the morning and they commence again to pass through at nine o'clock in the evening. This is found to be a reasonable and proper rest for the lock labourers, on the Sunday, and I think my hon. friend would do well to fix the hour, as it is now, at nine o'clock.

Mr. CHARLTON. By the amendment before the House it is fixed at nine o'clock.

Mr. BERGIN. I do not think that any one can find fault with the third clause of the Bill—I know it is out of order to discuss clauses not before the committee, but I ask the indulgence of the House in order to say what I have to say while on my feet.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not intend to proceed with the third clause. I shall be abundantly satisfied if I get the second.

Mr. BERGIN. As to the fourth clause—

Mr. CHARLTON. I shall drop that also.

Mr. BERGIN. I am glad of that, for I am not in sympathy with that clause.

Section, as amended, agreed to: yeas, 56; nays, 32.

Mr. CHARLTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel very much gratified with the success the Bill has met with. I feel under great obligations to the First Minister of the Crown, and to many of his colleagues, for the absence of opposition, at all events, to the Bill, and I propose now to rest satisfied with what I have got. I think, perhaps, that it would be bad tactics and bad policy, at this juncture, to attempt to get more; so, with the permission of the committee, I will drop the third and fourth sections of the Bill. I presume we have hardly time to consider those sections fully at this stage of the session, and it might endanger the portions of the Bill that have been secured, to attempt to get more. With your permission, we will pass on to the fifth section of the Bill, which is necessary in connection with the first section, which is passed.

On section 5.

Mr. MASSON. Before that section is carried, I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he only makes a partial provision for a breach of this Act, namely, that on summary conviction, certain things can be done. Now, the party moving against the offence, may not wish summary conviction, it is made an indictable offence, and he may take proceedings by indictment. What, then, will be the punishment? You have an indictable offence without any provision being made for punishment. The rule under the criminal code of 1892 is that the punishment may be seven years, and I do not think the hon. gentleman wishes such a severe penalty as that attached to this Bill. I think we should amend the clause so that in case of conviction on indictment, the punishment would not exceed six months, or a year at the very outside.

Mr. CHARLTON. We provide for one month.

Mr. MASSON. That is for summary conviction, not where you go before the grand jury by indictment, and have the person punished.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this clause is adopted, I would like to understand just what clause one means.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That was passed last week.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know it; but I do not understand it. As printed it says—

Mr. CHARLTON. I object to the hon. gentleman going back.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to understand what we are voting on. We here make it an offence punishable by a fine of $50, if I understand it, for any person to distribute a newspaper on the Lord's Day. Now, we have in connection with the Methodist Church, a newspaper called the 'Christian Guardian.' In many of the rural districts this 'Christian Guardian' is sent in packages to the clergy, and by them distributed on the Sabbath day at their preaching appointments. If this becomes law, each of these ministers, for distributing this newspaper, is liable to a fine of $50—because I do not think there is an hon. gentleman on either side of this House who will say that the 'Christian Guardian' is not a newspaper. It makes no pretension to being a periodical. Now, any person who commits this offence under clause 1, is liable to the penalty provided by clause 5. The same remarks would apply to the 'War Cry' of the Salvation Army, which is a newspaper; and so it is with other churches in the country, whose newspapers are distributed only on the Lord's Day. I am not in favour of passing a clause making it a penal offence for a clergyman or any other person simply to hand over a newspaper to another individual. Clergymen may not do it in the town, but they do it in the rural districts. The people send in their subscriptions to the 'Christian Guardian' through the clergymen, and the papers are sent back to them in bulk, to be distributed. Therefore, I am strongly opposed to making it a crime to distribute this newspaper on the Sabbath day, and punishing the alleged crime by a fine of $50.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that hon. members will see the force of the suggestion I made when we began the consideration of this Bill. I suggested that we should confine it to the distribution of secular newspapers, for these newspapers are supposed to be religious newspapers; they are newspapers in the common acceptation of the term, but contain religious literature. I think it is quite clear that this section, together with section 1, would punish a man for distributing these papers on Sunday.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to a point of order. All these points have been discussed, we have passed over the portions of the Bill the hon. gentleman is discussing.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think that in discussing the fines, hon. gentlemen may refer to clause 1. to which they relate, and that is why I did not stop the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Section 5 agreed to: Yeas, 43, nays, 24.

Section 7,

Mr. MASSON. Surely the promoter will admit that if this Bill is to be worth anything, it must have public sentiment in its favour, and no doubt it has been introduced in deference to public opinion. If the Bill is demanded in the public interest, there is no reason why an informer need be bribed to take action by giving him half the penalty.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is an old adage that whatever is everybody's business is nobody's business, and public opinion will be quickened by the Bill containing this provision to have the law put in force. It was carefully considered by the committee to which the Bill was referred, and under ordinary circumstances it is a good provision.

Bill reported.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Bill (No. 4) to make further provision as to the prevention of cruelty to animals, and to amend the criminal code, 1892. (Mr. Coatsworth) read the second time, and considered in committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. COATSWORTH. The object of the Bill is to enlarge the sphere of the operation of the present law. Paragraph D of the code reads as follows: The expression "cattle" includes any horse, mule, ass, swine, sheep or goat as well as any neat cattle or animal of the bovine species, by whatever technical or familiar name known. The words added by the Bill are as follows: Mare, gelding, bull, ox, cow, heifer, steer, calf, lamb, pig, hog, sow, dog, or cat, and every other domestic animal, fowl or bird, or wild animal. The object is to include a great many cattle and animals of different kinds shipped, and driven, which the criminal code does not at present cover.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The word "animal" must be used in many places in the Act, and I think we will be only getting into confusion by passing the clause as it is. The hon. gentleman evidently means to give a definition of the word "animal" for the purposes of this Act. Therefore, he had better make this separate and say: "for the purpose of this Act the word 'animal' shall have the following meaning."

Mr. COATSWORTH. I will do that. I will add: "For the purposes of this Act the word 'animal' includes," &c.

On section 2,

Mr. FLINT. I would like the mover to explain in a general way what are the nature of the amendments to this section.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The amendments proposed are, first, in subsection (a), which reads as follows in this Bill :—

(a.) Wantonly, cruelly or unnecessarily beats, binds, ill-treats, abuses, overdrives or tortures, or being the owner of or having the charge, custody or control thereof, causes or permits to be wantonly, cruelly or unnecessarily abandoned, bound, illtreated, abused, overdriven or tortured, any cattle, poultry, dog, domestic animal or bird.

The difference between that and the code is : “or being the owner of or having charge, custody or control thereof” are introduced here and are not in the code. Section (b) and subsection (c) are the same as in the code. Subsections (d,) (e,) (f,) (g) and (h) are entirely new. I would like to add in paragraph “a” in the 15th line, after the word “abuses,” the word “overchecks,” and in the 18th line, after the word “any,” the word “animal.”

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would like to know what over-checking is. I do not know that it has been defined. Some society in Ottawa has undertaken to stop the use of the check-rein, but to make that a crime would, I think, be somewhat ridiculous.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I will drop that word.

Mr. FLINT. I think paragraph (b) does not relate to cruelty to animals. It relates to damage to personal property, which is punishable in another way and by another process altogether.

Mr. COATSWORTH. That is part of the code at present.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Paragraph (g) deals with the question of birds which we used to have discussed so frequently in the House, and I would like to know from the hon. member whether his proposal goes the length of the former Bill, which was in charge of Mr. Brown, the member for Hamilton, or whether this is a modification of it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. This Bill does not go so far as the Bill of Mr. Brown. It prevents cruelty being practiced at pigeon-matches, but does not go the length, as the former Bill did, of preventing the use of live pigeons in shooting matches. It is alleged, and I believe with some truth, that some cruelties are practised before the pigeons are shot at in the way of pulling out their feathers to make them fly in a certain way, and also that after the actual shooting the pigeons are allowed to fly about for some time while wounded. The only object aimed at by this Bill is to prevent cruelties of that kind.

Mr. MASSON. Will the hon. gentleman read over the section of the code which he seeks to amend and this section, and say how the interpretation he has put upon it can possibly be borne out. Let him read the two together, and say how under this wording it would be possible to allow live birds to be used at a shooting match.

Mr. COATSWORTH. There is the exception in the last line of paragraph (g)—“except as a bona fide test of skill in marksmanship.”

Mr. MASSON. For what other purpose would a man shoot at a bird ?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I am not raising any question about the shooting of birds. The former Act was to prevent entirely the shooting of birds. This is not intended to do that, and I do not think it does so.

Mr. McCARTHY. It seems to me it does not mean anything.

Mr. BERGIN. Before this goes any further, I would like to ask my hon. friend, the promoter of the Bill, whether he considers the docking of horses cruelty, and if he does, why he does not include it in the Bill? There is no such cruelty to animals practised in this country as the docking and nicking of horses.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It may be, and it is quite possible that subsection (a) would cover the docking of horses.

Mr. MASSON. Before this section is passed, I would like to know what it really does mean. Reading it over, it seems to me very clear that it does not bear out the interpretation put upon it by the hon. gentleman—“Keeps or uses any live animal or bird for the purpose of being used as a target, or to be shot at, for amusement.” Is there any distinction in the hon. gentleman’s mind between a bird being shot at for amusement and a bird being used for a bona fide test of skill. For my part, I fail to see where the distinction can come in, or how any magistrate or jury could draw that distinction. Next we read : “or shoot at such animal or bird.” For what other purpose than as a test of skill or marksmanship would a bird be shot at? If for the purpose of killing a bird for food, and not as a test of skill, then he would make the bona fide shooting of a bird for food an offence, while if it were shot at, simply as a test of skill or marksmanship, to allow it to lie on the ground after being shot, it would not be an offence. Next, we have these words : “or is present as a party, umpire or judge, at any such shooting at any animal or bird.” Now, the test of skill exception cannot be pleaded in favour of a party who is present as party, or umpire, or judge, or keeps or knowingly rents any building, shed, room, field, yard or premises, or knowingly permits the use of any building, shed, room, yard, field or premises for the purposes of shooting at any animal or bird as aforesaid.

What in the world does the hon. gentleman mean by that? Does the exception apply to that? Does it apply to anything else except the keeping or renting of a building for the purpose of testing marksmanship? The hon. gentleman has just said that the real object of such clause is to prevent birds, before they are shot at, being maltreated by the feathers being plucked out of their breast, their eyes being put out, or other means of torture applied. If that is the object of the section, why does he not say so? This section is absolutely silent on that point.

Mr. McCARTHY. The next section says that.

Mr. MASSON. Therefore, I think this subsection (g) should be struck out, and I move to that effect.

Mr. BERGIN. If you strike out that section and include only the following one, you will put an end to all shooting for sporting purposes. You will prevent a man who lives in the woods and wants a little fresh meat, from shooting a deer. A more clumsy, awkward and unintelligible clause I never saw framed.

Mr. FLINT. I think the object of the promoter of the Bill would be carried out by striking out those words "except as a bona fide test of skill or marksmanship." That is, that the committee shall prevent the use of any live animal or bird for the purpose of being used as a target, and punish the person who knowingly rents a building and premises for that purpose. Nothing short of that will satisfy public sentiment. The object is to prevent this business altogether. I cannot enter into the feelings of those who see an amusement or pleasure in it, but of course there are persons who do, I think that public opinion, outside of their own ranks, condemns it. You will look in vain for any defence of that sort of sportsmanship among writers on this subject. Inventions are now in use which give all the opportunities for marksmanship and perhaps better opportunities for skill in marksmanship than are given by live birds, the best sportsmen of the world are using these, both in England and the United States. Do I understand my hon. friend to move an amendment?

Mr. MASSON. I move to strike out the clause entirely.

Mr. FLINT. I move, in amendment, to the amendment, to strike out the words "except as a test of skill or marksmanship."

Mr. McNEILL. That would mean that we are not to be allowed to shoot birds or animals at all. The clause says that any one who "keeps or uses any live animal or bird for the purpose of being used as a target or to be shot at." So that any one who preserves game on his own premises is to be held guilty of cruelty to animals, if he shoots them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the effect of the word "use"?

Mr. McNEILL. It is used so often that it is hard to tell. "Any one who keeps or uses any live animal or bird for the purpose of being used."

Mr. MULOCK. It might apply to shooting at a wild animal.

Mr. McNEILL. Of course it does. If you have a preserve, you render yourself liable to a penalty. The hon. gentleman moves to strike out the last line, but whether it is struck out or left in, you cannot have game for the purpose of shooting.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It does not apply to game.

Mr. McNEILL. It applies to any live animal or bird.

Mr. MASSON. Your interpretation says domesticated or undomesticated.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Tamed or domesticated.

Mr. BERGIN. Subsection (c) says, "fowl or bird, whether of domestic or wild nature."

Mr. COATSWORTH. Subsection (c) does not govern this section. The first clause governs this. It only refers to tame or domesticated animals. Leave out the words "or bird." In answer to the hon. gentleman who desires to amend the section by striking out the words, "except as a bona fide test of skill or marksmanship," I would not be prepared to father an amendment of that kind. I do not think it would meet the approval of the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, it will.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I am not responsible myself for the framing of this section. It was in a Bill discussed by the House before I was here, and it was in deference to the opinion of the committee and a number of members of the House that these words were put in. I took the responsibility of inserting those words to meet a difficulty that was felt when the subject was before the House on a previous occasion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For my part, I doubt if there is any description of cruelty to animals which deserves better to be put down by law than the practice of letting loose a number of tame pigeons to be shot or mutilated, as the case may be, for the purposes of sport. There is nothing of real sportsmanship about it. And while I am not in the slightest degree disposed to interfere with any legitimate exercise of skill in marksmanship at the expense of ordinary wild animals, I must say that the exhibitions of pigeon shooting which I have seen occasionally appear to be about as cruel and inhuman proceedings as could be witnessed, and I for one would be exceedingly glad to see them put down by law.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is moved that the words, "except as a bona fide test of skill or marksmanship" be struck out.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me we might as well have no Bill at all as to have a Bill with these words in. You are simply providing by legislation immunity from punishment to those who are guilty of this cruelty. Parties who wish to try their skill in marksmanship can try it in some other way. Nor will the clause, if these words are struck out, be open to the construction put upon it by the hon. gentleman from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). Parties who are keeping game upon any premises which they possess with a view to killing a certain number for food are perfectly at liberty to do so. They may invite their friends to go with them, and they will not be interfered with so long as that is the principal aim. But the other, it seems to me, is a cruel proceeding, and tends to cultivate brutality in the community which, by idleness and ignorance, may be sufficiently promoted without special recognition of this kind.

Mr. COATSWORTH. When I prepared the Bill a year ago I took the section in the Bill that was formerly before the House, and amended it by adding these words. I have never been at a pigeon match, and I never expect to be; I have no interest in them at all. The only reason why I shall go against the amendment is this: when I prepared my Bill I was approached by several members of the House who had opposed the former Bill, and who asked me what provision was made in this case. I made representations to them, and showed them the Bill as I prepared it. These gentlemen, relying upon me pressing the Bill in the form in which I had amended that clause, have absented themselves, and are not opposing the Bill, as they would have done had the clause not been so amended. I do not think I would be keeping faith with them if I were to support the amendment of the hon. member, though, personally, I am as favourable to it as he is.

Mr. BERGIN. Did the hon. gentleman submit this Bill to any of the law officers of the Crown before bringing it to the House?

Mr. COATSWORTH. No.

Mr. BERGIN. I would suggest that this should be done before the Bill is pressed any further. We ought to have the opinion of some law officer before going further with the Bill. The hon. gentleman might submit it to the Solicitor General to-morrow.

Mr. EDGAR. May I ask the hon. promoter of the Bill a simple question, which, I submit, he should answer—yes or no? Does he favour the shooting of live pigeons out of a trap or not?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Personally, no.

Mr. EDGAR. Then why do you object to this amendment?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I did not say I objected to it; I simply tried to explain my own position. If you wish to amend the Bill you may do so.

Mr. EDGAR. Will you vote for the amendment?

Mr. COATSWORTH. No.

Mr. EDGAR. Why?

Mr. COATSWORTH. For the reason I have explained. I think I made myself clear. These gentlemen, relying on my seeking to put the Bill through in its present form, are absent. Otherwise they would be here opposing the Bill. I am not going to take advantage of their absence.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. gentleman seems to be frankly admitting that for the mere sake of having the kudos of carrying a Bill through he is willing to have one that he does not believe in himself.

Mr. COATSWORTH. You may put that construction upon it. It is a very unfair one.

Mr. EDGAR. Can the clause mean anything at all if these last words are left in it? Will any one admit that he is shooting at a pigeon except as a bona fide test of skill in marksmanship? What else would he shoot for?

Mr. MULOCK. In self defence.

Mr. EDGAR. I have no doubt those who opposed the Bill have been asking my hon. friend what he intended to do. He has been too ingenuous; they have imposed upon him. These gentlemen are perfectly safe in going away so long as the hon. gentleman leaves this clause, for it will make this part of the Bill perfectly useless, and of no practical effect. I suppose that when he introduced the Bill he had some intention of trying to prevent this kind of cruelty to animals, but by this clause he does not prevent it.

Mr. CRAIG. It seems to me that if these words are allowed to remain the usefulness of the section is destroyed. I have had no experience in shooting, but I have heard of a kind of shooting which seems to me very cruel, and which furnishes a case in point. I have heard of men meeting on Christmas day or the day before and tying a turkey to a post and standing some distance away and shooting, the turkey being given to the man who hit it. I do not think we can well conceive of anything more cruel than that, but if these words are left in this section it would not prevent such a practice.

I quite agree with the last speaker that the section would be entirely useless if these words were allowed to remain, because every one who shot at these animals would say that he did so as a test of skill in marksmanship.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill feels himself bound in honour to those who, if present, he fears would oppose the Bill. Therefore he has amended the clause of the old Bill. But he must make some allowance for the feelings of others, of whom I am one, who are seeking to put down these pigeon matches. Having voted repeatedly for the Bill when introduced by the former hon. member for Hamilton, and this being the same, except for this clause about skill in marksmanship, I prefer to vote for the amendment.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We could probably reach a solution of the difficulty if we were to change the name of the promoter and put in as promoter the name of some gentleman who is favourable to the objects which this Bill seeks to attain. It is very difficult to carry through a Bill in which you personally believe, and at the same time carry out the views of those who are opposed to the Bill. We might substitute the name of the Premier as promoter.

Mr. McNEILL. Is the word "bird" struck out?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Yes; it is struck out everywhere.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. But birds are included in the Act under the word "animal."

Mr. McNEILL. Am I to understand that if we have partridge or any other game in a preserve we are not allowed to shoot them for our use? Or if we happen to have some property on which deer are running wild, and we prevent their being hunted and exterminated by outside dogs and outside sportsmen, are we not allowed to shoot these except as a test of skill in marksmanship?

Mr. COATSWORTH. It does not refer to that; it only refers to animals or birds tamed or domesticated.

Mr. McNEILL. But it says "any live animal."

Mr. COATSWORTH. Yes; but those words are governed by the interpretation clause.

Mr. McNEILL. But the words "live animal" must mean something more than "animal." It is not to be supposed that there is any cruelty in shooting at a dead animal.

Mr. COATSWORTH. "Live animal."

Mr. McNEILL. What is the good of putting in "live animal" at all? The clause is a most confusing and confounding combination of terms. I must say that I think the suggestion that has been made by my hon. friend beside me is a good one, and that this Bill should be referred to a committee of lawyers to deal with it before it is brought before this House for final consideration. It is quite impossible for hon. members to vote intelligently upon this unintelligible composition.

Mr. FRASER. I regret that the hon. member who has just taken his seat should make a remark like that, the Bill having been framed by a lawyer.

Mr. McNEILL. I have no desire at all to cast any reflection upon the hon. member who framed the Bill, but I would like to see some further consultation among lawyers on the subject before the Bill is dealt with by the House. It is certainly the most extraordinary Bill that I have ever seen or heard discussed in the House.

Mr. MASSON. There is more force in the objection taken by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) than some members of the committee seem to think. The interpretation clause does not aid us in finding out the interpretation. The interpretation clause says the word "animal" shall include any horse, and so on; it does not say it shall not include a deer, or any wild animal, but it shall include those animals named. It does not go to the extent of saying that the ordinary interpretation of the word "animal" shall not be applied to others. It is for the purpose of removing difficulties and to make it clear that it does include these, and does not say that it does not include anything else. Therefore, there might be great difficulty in construing the clause as it is at present framed. Besides, the hon. gentleman has introduced the Bill with a form of words by which he intends to exempt an ordinary shooting match. I think it would be unfair to press the amendment to-night. It changes the whole nature of the Bill as regards that one particular sport. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to get up and say that these sports are cruel. Wherein does the cruelty consist in shooting a bird on the wing when it rises from a trap, any more than in shooting it in a barnyard, or catching it and wringing its neck? For my part, I do not see any greater cruelty in the one than in the other. The hon. member for Durham (Mr. Craig) has referred to a practice that may be in vogue in his riding, but in the rest of the province of Ontario, which I can speak for pretty well, it is entirely out of date. The old form of putting up a turkey to be shot at is a class of shooting match that, so far as I know, does not to-day exist in any part of Ontario, except the county of Durham. The more modern, more civilized, and more humane method of putting up a target, letting scores be made on that target, and awarding the turkey to the person who makes the best score, is the one now adopted throughout the country. The turkey is then taken home and his head is cut off or his neck wrung, and he generally furnishes a dinner to the winner. As to the mode adopted in killing that turkey, I think it requires something more than the surgical ability of this House to determine which is the least cruel. I think the committee is not prepared to deal with this clause, not with the very important amendment that has been proposed, and I would, therefore, move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. CRAIG. I wish to say, in justice to my riding, that the circumstance I mentioned did not take place there at all, it took place in the city of Toronto.

Mr. McMULLEN. I hardly think it is fair to treat the Bill in this manner. We have time enough yet to dispose of several clauses, clauses which I hope the good sense of this House will sanction. The cruelties practised last year in pigeon matches should be put a stop to, and I fully concur in and admire the views expressed by the First Minister on this point, and earnestly hope the House will sanction them.

Mr. BERGEN. I am just as strongly opposed to any cruel sport as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, and if this clause were confined solely to dealing with that practice, it would have my support. But this clause goes further than that; it will prevent the shooting of game at any time during the season authorized by law. You cannot shoot a deer in season, or partridge, or quail, or snipe, or duck, or any other game animal, these birds being included in the word "animal," as I think they are in the interpretation clause. You cannot under this section of the Act shoot any of this game without being liable to punishment.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I think there is a misapprehension as to the meaning of the interpretation clause. The interpretation clause closes with these words: "and every other domestic animal, fowl or bird, or wild animal, fowl or bird, tamed or domesticated." I do not see how we could more clearly express the intention to include a tamed or domesticated animal or bird. It is not intended to interfere with game at all. If any gentleman can suggest words in the interpretation clause which will more clearly effect the object intended, I am quite willing to assent to it. I do not think it is right to ask the committee to leave this Bill now.

Mr. McNEILL. We must assume that when a new term is introduced there is some reason for introducing it, and we certainly would not have the term "live" introduced here, unless there was some particular reason for it.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Strike out the word "live."

Mr. McNEILL. I think that even would still leave room for doubt. I think it would be better to have the matter considered by a committee and let the Bill be brought before the House in such a shape as that there would not be the same amount of ambiguity and difficulty as at present, and that members should not be called upon to vote upon clauses the exact meaning of which they do not understand.

Mr. FLINT. I think a careful reading of this clause would show that it only applies to animals kept or used for the purpose of being made a target, or to be shot at for amusement; but it does not apply, and cannot be construed to apply, to bona fide hunting. I think every member of this House agrees that hunting is a noble amusement, and I for one would not agree to any clause which would prevent hunting in season. This only applies to killing animals when they are used as a target, and on that ground I think the criticism of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) is not sound. Of course, it is intended mainly to apply to pigeon shooting. I do not think it would apply to the keeping of game preserves. I am not aware of any game preserves in Canada, although there may be some.

Mr. MULOCK. The keeping of birds in a preserve would not be keeping birds to be a target, although they might ultimately be shot in that way. After the principle involved has been disposed of, the clause should be amended in several particulars.

Mr. McNEILL. From what has just now passed it is obvious that my contention is correct, namely, that the Bill is one which we are not in a condition to discuss. The hon. member (Mr. Flint) has told us that this clause simply means the keeping of animals to be used as a target. If the hon. gentleman will consider the clause a little more carefully, he will observe that it means much more than that, for it says, "or to be shot at or for amusement or for any like purpose." The hon. gentleman tells us that hunting is noble sport, and yet hunting would come under the designation of amusement and would be covered by that term. The Bill should be considered more carefully before it is finally disposed of.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No doubt the Bill is unskillfully drawn, and if the committee should rise the hon. mover would have an opportunity of considering its phraseology. In the third clause I find that bull, ox, heifer, steer, and calf are mentioned. If it is necessary to go into such details with respect to one species, why not with regard to another. Then pig, hog and sow are enumerated, but the male animal is not mentioned. So, dog is mentioned only one gender, and of course cat is supposed to include both genders. The hon. gentleman should consider more carefully the kind of animals he intends to have protected in this Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sure the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Coatsworth) will not be discouraged in his good purpose by the light treatment which his Bill is receiving, because when he remembers that we have had practical illustrations given by flying pigeons through this Chamber, he will consider that some progress has been made in the demeanour of the House by the contrast presented. I do not think it is necessary to refer the Bill to a committee in order to remove the ambiguity which the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill) has pointed out. I think if the word "or" is struck out the case will be met.

Mr. McNEILL. What is the meaning "for amusement or like purposes?"

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As a target.

Mr. BERGIN. In regard to section 3, in my opinion if you are shooting at a bird you are baiting a bird.

Mr. McNEILL. I hold that a bird is used as a target if shot at whether it rises from a trap or from the limb of a tree, or if it sits on a tree. If I keep a preserve of partridge to be shot, are not those birds as much to be used as targets as if they were pigeons rising from a trap?

Mr. COATSWORTH. If there is ambiguity, why does not the hon. gentleman suggest an amendment?

Mr. McNEILL. I am not prepared at the moment to suggest different language, and therefore I ask that the Bill be referred to a committee in order that it may be amended.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman kept a preserve of game, and having been out and shot some of them, he was asked whether he had been shooting at a target or not, I do not think he would answer yes.

Mr. McNEILL. If I shot at pigeons whether they flew from a trap or off the limb of a tree, I would not be shooting at a target. But I presume this argument would apply to one case as well as to the other.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The argument would not apply to the present Bill. Shooting at game in a preserve is not in any sense of the term shooting at a target, and could not be made so.

Mr. McNEILL. It is arbitrarily assumed in this Bill that shooting at a bird is shooting at a target. But I never heard, except in this Bill, that shooting at a pigeon was shooting at a target, and if the right hon. gentleman asked if I would reply in regard to shooting partridges kept on a preserve, that it was equivalent to shooting at a target, I would say that I had not been shooting at a target. I could simply reply and say that I did not shoot at a target, but that I had shot at pigeon flying out of a trap. My argument is that the term target applies as much to a partridge as it does to a pigeon.

Motion that the committee rise negatived.

Amendment (Mr. Flint) agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to get some explanation as to what the promoter of the Bill means by the term target?

Mr. MULOCK. In the Bill introduced by Mr. Brown, of Hamilton, there were two principles. One clause of the Bill aimed at the shooting of animals and another clause forbade the shooting of animals. We had hard work to satisfy that hon. gentleman the class of live animals that he thought it was right to shoot was a sick horse, but under this Bill it may not be lawful to do that. Might I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Coatsworth) would it be lawful to make a target of a sick horse under this Bill?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would the promoter of the Bill allow a person to shoot a calf with a cough.

Mr. McNEILL. I think we should have some explanation of the meaning of that word "target."

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think that should be submitted to the Supreme Court.

Mr. BERGIN. The Bill says:

Or keeps, or knowingly rents any building, shed, room, yard, field or premises, or knowingly permits the use of any building, shed, room, yard, field or premises, for the purpose of shooting at any animal or bird.

I would like to know whether the yard, or the shed, or the field, is to be used for the purpose of shooting any animal, that is the grammatical construction of this beautifully framed clause, and I think the promoter of the Bill should tell us what he means. There is nothing in the interpretation to show a field, shed or yard, means a gun or a rifle.

Mr. McNEILL. I ask my hon. friend, the promoter of the Bill, how he explains the term "target?" Surely the committee is not going to pass a clause the meaning of the terms of which we do not understand.

On section 3,

Mr. McMILLAN. I think subsection 7 ought to be amended by making the depth of the bedding for animals shipped in cars two inches. Any person shipping animals a long distance will put in deeper bedding if it is necessary. For animals shipped a short distance there is hardly any necessity for bedding at all. To put bedding in a car to a depth of six inches would require three loads, which is nonsense. Two inches deep would be sufficient.

Mr. MASSON. Subsection 6 will interfere very seriously with settlers moving, say from the province of Ontario to the province of Manitoba. It is very common for a farmer, when moving to place his whole stock in one or two cars, and it would be impossible, except at a very great expense, for him to have partitions between his different animals. He generally arranges, in filling his car, to keep separate the different classes of animals, or to place them in such a way that they will not injure each other. It is his interest to do that; but to make it an absolute law that he must have a partition separating his sheep from his horses, or his cattle from his pigs, would impose a very heavy expense upon a poor man. I do not know that the practice of drovers putting sheep and cattle in close contact in one car is very often resorted to. There may be cases of that kind, where great suffering is occasioned, but I think the clause should be limited in some way, either as to the distance which the animals may be carried or the manner in which they should be kept separate.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Perhaps the committee would like to hear some of the cases that have been met with, in order that they may see the necessity for this section. In reading of these cases, I will, of course, leave out the names and the places. On 3rd October, 1892, so-and-so, from such a place, sent down 60 sheep and 40 hogs in Canadian Pacific Railway Car 60.982 to the Western Cattle Market, Toronto. The Humane Society's officer, P. C. Chapman, found 23 of the lambs and 2 hogs trampled to death. At the same time, he found 2 cattle with legs broken shipped by so-and-so to the Western Cattle Market on Grand Trunk Railway Car 7.403. On 25th January, 1893, P. C. Chapman reports that so-and-so shipped 19 cattle, 12 hogs and 9 lambs in Grand Trunk Railway Car 1,964. Two of the lambs were trampled to death by the breaking down of the deck or partition, and no one can be held responsible. The secretary of the society, in writing to me about this matter, says:

It having been reported to the society that the mangled bodies of the lambs were reported for food, I wrote the mayor, and in reply received from him letters from the city solicitor, the city commissioner, and the city inspector, to the effect that after particular inquiries it was found that the dead bodies had been fed to hogs, and not used for human food.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that the placing of hogs and cattle together in a car is a custom which obtains very largely with drovers. Sometimes, when there are not a sufficient number of cattle to make up a load, they put in a number of hogs, which are not kept separate from the cattle. I noticed, the last time I went up the line, several carloads coming towards Toronto in which the animals were put together in that way. It is a common custom with drovers.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I may say that the cases I have mentioned are of almost daily occurrence during the time cattle are shipped.

Mr. McNEILL. I think this is a very good and necessary clause, but it would be well to consider the suggestion of the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Masson), and make an exception of settlers' effects.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I am willing to except them.

Mr. FRASER. I think men going to the North-west should be guarded by law as well as any others.

Mr. COATSWORTH. As I understand, my hon. friend means that where a settler is moving to the North-west, he takes with him one or two cows, two or three sheep, pigs and so on. There would not be the danger in shipping those together that there is where a car is filled with animals of different sizes and kinds, so that I apprehend what my hon. friend means is that the danger is so slight you should not legislate against it.

Mr. FRASER. The exception would be no good unless it is limited.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It should be limited.

Mr. FRASER. We must draw the line and say how many there would be to make it dangerous. Otherwise the Bill would have no effect at all.

Mr. DALY. The regulations enforced by the railway company prohibit taking more than a certain number, and would meet this case.

Mr. FRASER. Not as to the number of each, but as to the number in a car. We do not provide how many sheep, hogs and cows may go together. It is only the sum total that they should regulate.

Mr. MASSON. Supposing a settler had only two or three sheep and two or three hogs and perhaps a span of horses. This Bill would forbid his putting them in the one car. Though he might have them at separate ends, that would not be sufficient. There must be a partition across the car under the section as it now reads.

Mr. COATSWORTH. You may make a proviso to that effect.

Mr. McMULLEN. The provision with regard to animals going a great distance is more important than in the case of animals going a short distance. I quite agree that there is great cruelty in mixing up a lot of animals in a car. I have noticed that sheep, hogs and cattle are sometimes shipped together, and provision should be made to prevent the cruelty and suffering to which these animals are subjected by being shipped in mixed lots.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Would these words added to the clause overcome the difficulty: "Unless the smaller animals are secured so as not to come in contact with the larger ones."

Mr. COATSWORTH. That would not cover it.

Mr. SPROULE. How would it do in the case of a calf going along with the cow.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman's term smaller animals does not cover calves.

Mr. McNEILL. I would move that the section read in this way: "Except as settlers' effects, no sheep, lamb, &c."

Mr. MASSON. There are other cases, such as taking animals to a fair. In that case the number is few, and they might be shipped in one lot, but under the hon. gentleman's Bill they could not, but each description would have to be separated by a partition. If a farmer is bringing a few animals to a fair for exhibition, he may be relied on seeing that they do not suffer on the way.

Mr. MULOCK moved to add after the word larger in the 26th line, the following: "or unless the smaller animals are secured so as not to come in contact with the larger ones."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object of the section is to prevent the possibility of one animal receiving an injury from another. Unless secured in such a way that they cannot receive injury from each other, the object would be defeated.

Mr. McMILLAN. In the case of a person going to a show and taking animals with their young, for instance, a cow and its calf, under this Bill they would have to be separated.

Mr. McNEILL. Then amend the clause by adding the following words at the beginning: "Except as settlers' effects or animals being conveyed for the purpose of exhibition."

Mr. SPROULE. It would be well to understand what is meant by "settler's effects." It often happens that farmers buy animals, young and old, and tranship them from one part of the country to another to bring them home. These can hardly be considered settlers' effects, for they are not moving them away; they are bringing them home. The animals may be purchased at a sale, and brought home by train. This clause would necessitate the tying up of the young animals away from their parents which, in many instances, it would not be wise to do.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). In case a person was shipping a car load of horses and putting a mare and her foal together he would be fined under this clause. The clause should be framed so as to prevent those who ship large numbers of animals from doing such a thing as loading a lot of large animals in a car and shipping hogs amongst them. If the Bill were made to cover that ground it would be all that would be necessary.

Mr. COATSWORTH.

On subsection 7,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I should like to propose an amendment to that clause. Strike out the first word "other" in the first line and add, after "vehicles," "other than ships." The reason is that there is already in force an Act which applies specially to the shipment of cattle as well as regulations under the Act, and this might interfere with those regulations, which, I suppose the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill does not desire. There are at present very elaborate regulations which have been settled practically by the Canadian and British authorities, and it would be dangerous and perhaps confusing to pass this regulation in addition to the others now in existence.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I move that instead of the words "shall have placed in them bedding to the depth of at least six inches," the words "shall have placed in them bedding to at least the depth of two inches" be substituted.

Mr. MILLER. I move that we strike out that clause altogether. The drovers know better than the lawyers what they want. I do not think they are going to put any hogs or cattle into cars to get them killed before they get them to market. It is money they are after.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I am willing to withdraw my amendment if the clause is dropped altogether. I think the clause is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. SPROULE. It would prevent a farmer sending one or two horses a short distance without having bedding, and bedding is altogether unnecessary when the distance is short.

Mr. BERGIN. I would like to know from the hon. gentleman what effect the Bill is likely to have in the case of a butcher who goes out to buy and gather up a couple of calves and three or four lambs and puts them in a cart to bring them into town. Under this Bill he would be liable to a fine unless he had a partition put up to separate the calves from the lambs.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I am willing to let that subsection go.

On subsection 8,

Mr. COATSWORTH. Change "two last preceding subsections" to "the last preceding subsection."

Mr. MASSON. What is the reason for making the unfortunate consignor liable?

Mr. McCARTHY. You are not going to make the shipper responsible for putting up this petition?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Certainly. The reason for this is that a difficulty has always been found, when parties were brought up in cases of cruelty, in finding anybody who was responsible. The consignee clearly could not be held responsible.

Mr. McCARTHY. The carrier is the man to make responsible.

Mr. COATSWORTH. It is a question whether the shipper should not be responsible for seeing that the cattle are properly shipped.

Mr. MILLER. If the shipper has the misfortune to lose a sheep or a hog in the car, you want him fined because he lost it. I do not think there is much common sense in that.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that the carriers are liable as well.

Mr. SPROULE. If you allow this to remain, you can have actions almost every day in the year against drovers. They generally put twenty or twenty-five head of cattle in a car, or, if the cattle are large, a lesser number; and through crowding and jostling and shaking of the car, some of the weaker ones get down and frequently get killed. Under this section, there is no doubt that the parties shipping them would be liable to the penalties.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is little danger of crowding a large number into a car now, because they are limited according to weight, and, since that is done, no shipper ever crowds a car with animals. When animals are shipped in large numbers, some individual always accompanies them. In my opinion, there is no necessity for this clause. At every railway station where the car stops, the keeper goes and sees to the animals, and does everything he can for them. That has been my experience, and I have gone with a large number of trains all the way from western Ontario to Montreal. On one occasion, when we got to Point St. Charles, one of the animals had its leg broken, and, under this clause, we would be liable to a penalty for that accident.

Mr. SPROULE. I would ask the hon. member for Huron if he has not often seen drovers, when the train stops at a station, go and try to get up the animals that were down. Although you may only put in the number that the railway company prescribes, frequently the animals get down, and sometimes the conductor will not stop long enough at a station to allow the keeper to go and help them up. The result is that they are injured, or killed, and are dead by the time they reach their destination. You can see that at almost every station, when cattle trains are passing, and, in case of an accident of that kind, the consignor would be punishable under this clause.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the train does not stop long enough to allow the cattlemen to get out and look after the animals, and an accident occurred through no fault of their own, they would still be liable to punishment under this clause. I see no necessity for it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. As I understand the clause, it makes no man liable for accidents arising from the ordinary dangers of traffic, but only for general neglect.

On section 4,

Mr. FRASER. I think it is rather a novelty in legislation to put in the word "expostulate."

Mr. EDGAR. It does not require the permission of an Act to do that.

Mr. FRASER. It is the first time I ever saw the word in an Act. "Any person may expostulate or interfere to prevent the perpetration or continuation of any act or acts of cruelty done in his presence to any animal." I suppose that means any acts of cruelty as set out in this Act, or is it universal?

Mr. COATSWORTH. I suggest that we leave out the words "expostulate or" in the second line, and change the word "engaged" to "so interfere."

Mr. MASSON. Is it necessary to have that clause at all?

Mr. COATSWORTH. It is necessary. A case occurred in this city not long ago when a person employed by the humane society interfered to prevent a gross act of cruelty to an animal, and the driver of the animal resisted the interference and assaulted the person in a savage way. He was brought up in the Police Court and the Police Magistrate held that the agent had no right whatever to interfere, even with the committal of the act of cruelty to the animal, therefore, he dismissed the case and would not even fine the man who had committed the assault.

Mr. FLINT. I hope my hon. friend will not take out the word "expostulate."

Mr. COATSWORTH. Does not "interfere" include "expostulate"?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is a very extraordinary clause. What definition would the hon. gentleman give to "interfere"? In what way interfere? Interfere by physical force sufficient to prevent the act being committed?

Mr. SPROULE. If a man was trying to punish a balky horse, some disinterested party might come up and interfere with him, and if the man owning the horse dared to resent the interference, he would make himself liable to the law, and punishable.

Mr. DALY. I suggest that we strike out the first two lines, and the third line down to "animal," and the clause would read, commencing with "and any person who interferes," and so on.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That would refer to the third party, and not to the original offender.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think this clause is necessary. We are already making a change in the law by creating new crimes. Had we not better try the working of the law as now proposed? If you allow one man to interfere with another there might be a struggle and breach of peace. It is rather risky to allow one man to take the law into his own hands, and to be judge, jury and executioner.

Mr. FRASER. If the officer was authorized to lay a complaint the same object would be served. If a citizen saw a man beating a horse and interfered there would be a risk of a breach of the peace. The officer, however, could go before a justice and lay complaint that the man was abusing his horse, and the same result would be obtained.

Mr. MULOCK. I move that the clause be struck out.

Mr. TISDALE. There has been a long discussion on this Bill, and I should like to have an opportunity of considering some of its provisions. The Bill was postponed on one occasion because I was not able to be present, and I find it is now in somewhat different shape from what I thought it to be. As the hour is late, and a great deal of difference of opinion prevails, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The hon. gentleman will understand that I have done the best I could with this Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the amendment is not a wise one, and that we should finish the Bill to-night. There is only one clause remaining, and the Bill might therefore be disposed of at this sitting.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think this is a good subsection. If a horse is cruelly treated any citizen should have a right to interfere to stop it. If a breach of the law were committed as a result, the offender should be fined the extreme penalty. But to say that if a horse is cruelly treated or driven up hill with too heavy a load, and that punishment shall afterwards be meted out in the shape of a fine imposed some weeks afterwards, such a provision will not assist in suppressing cruelty.

Mr. McMILLAN. What would the hon. gentleman do if he was driving a lot of cattle along a road, and one became enraged, and he had to beat the animal severely in order to save himself?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am not saying that some animals should not be beaten. But the question is whether it is not wise to endeavour to prevent cruelty, as well as to punish it.

Mr. EDGAR. If an animal is cruelly treated the law should be drawn as to bring the offender under it and have him punished. At the same time it should not be framed so as to encourage breaches of the law, otherwise, in the first place, there may be cruel treatment of the animal, and afterwards an assault and a counter assault. I am afraid that the clause as drawn would lead to breaches of the peace.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is exactly the point on which the hon. gentleman and myself differ. I think the Bill is not worth passing unless we do our best to prevent cruelty, as well as to punish it. A man with humane instincts would interfere in any event to prevent a horse being cruelly beaten.

Mr. MULOCK. That is assuming that the person in possession of the animal is ill-using it. Some interfering, meddling men might, however, assume that an animal was being cruelly treated when such was not the case.

Amendment that the committee rise and report progress agreed to.

Yeas, 62; nays, 27.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I give the First Minister notice that to-morrow my hon. friend Mr. Davies (P. E. I.) will bring up the Ellis matter.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 5th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 131) to incorporate the Nova Scotia Steel Company.—(Mr. Fraser.)

Bill (No. 132) respecting the Cobourg, Northumberland and Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Sproule.)

THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Mr. DALY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) to amend the North-west Territories Act. He said: One of the principal changes has reference to the appointment by the Lieutenant-Governor of justices of the peace. The Lieutenant-Governor has power to appoint them at present, but those justices of the peace are to give bonds. It also gives power to the Governor General to appoint stipendiary magistrates, and there is a further provision relating to certain clauses of the Act, as it now stands, having reference to the collection of accounts for liquors sold by wholesale merchants. The present law was passed when prohibition was in force in the North-west Territories, and under it such debts cannot be collected. The Act provides that by a proclamation, the Governor in Council may repeal that provision. The next provision is :

To authorize the Legislative Assembly to appoint a committee of four persons from among the elected members thereof to advise the Lieutenant-Governor in relation to the expenditure of territorial funds and of such portions of any moneys appropriated by Parliament for the territories as the Lieutenant-Governor is authorized to expend by and with the advice of the Legislative Assembly or of any committee thereof. The said committee shall be styled the executive committee of the Territories, and the members thereof shall severally hold office until their successors are appointed.

The chief changes there are that we give a name to the executive committee and authorize them to remain in office until their successors are appointed. The reason for this is that after the present Assembly expires in August next, the elections are not likely to take place until November, and in the meantime, without a provision of this kind, there will be no executive council in the Territories. There are other provisions in the Bill of a minor nature relating to a repeal of some of the clauses and substitutions therefor, but I would prefer giving further explanations on the second reading.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is no power of dissolution in the Governor.

Mr. DALY. No ; that remains exactly as it was.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION IRRIGATION ACT.

Mr. DALY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No.134) intituled the Dominion Irrigation Act. He said : This Bill covers thirty-five clauses, and deals with a matter entirely new to the members of the House, and I think it would be better that I should defer my explanations until they have the Bill before them.

Mr. LAURIER. Does it give additional powers to this Government to authorize companies to irrigate ?

Mr. DALY. It does not, but simply provides for the formation of companies for the purpose of irrigation. It deals with riparian rights and other matters pertaining to the subject.

Mr. EDGAR. The committees of the House are being troubled a good deal in the last few years by special Acts for irrigation, with all sorts of different and exceptional powers. If the Government introduces a well-considered Bill, establishing a uniform system, that will be good policy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I hope the hon. gentleman will be prepared to explain what the law is in California with regard to irrigation and the relations between the irrigating companies and the holders or owners of real estate. The subject has been there very fully considered, and as this is an initiatory step here we would do well to understand fully what the law is in that state.

Mr. DALY. I shall give the hon. gentleman and the House all the information in relation to irrigation in California, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming and other states of the Union, and the same for Australia. We have adopted some of the provisions of the Australian measure. The Bill has been well considered, and I think it will meet the approval of the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

WAYS AND MEANS—IMPRISONMENT OF MR. ELLIS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, I desire to take this opportunity of calling the attention of the House to the circumstances under which Mr. John V. Ellis, the proprietor and editor of the St. John 'Globe,' in the city of St. John, in the province of New Brunswick, was imprisoned for alleged contempt of court. Many hon. gentlemen in this House will recollect Mr. Ellis as a representative of the city of St. John, in this House. To those who do not know him otherwise than as an ex-member of the House, I desire to say that he has been for very many years the editor and publisher of one of the leading newspapers of the province of New Brunswick. Last autumn he was sentenced to a term of imprisonment and to a large fine, together with payment of costs of the proceedings of the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick, for his alleged contempt of court. I desire to invite the attention of the House to the facts in connection with that imprisonment, to the alleged contempt for which Mr. Ellis was punished, to the circumstances under which he published the articles complained of, and to the manner in which the court chose to punish him, also to the severity of the punishment which they inflicted upon him. I am in hopes, Mr. Speaker, that, so far as the facts are concerned, there will be no difference of opinion on either side of the House. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that in the year 1887 a general election took place, and there was an election, as of course, in the county of Queen's, N.B. The return given by the returning officer on that occasion was deemed, by gentlemen on this side of the House, at least, to have been a false and fraudulent and illegal return, and motions were made in this House the result of which was that all the papers connected with that election were brought down before the House and are now to be found in the Votes and Proceedings for the year 1887. The case has been a number of times before the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick on different motions, and the facts connected with it have been so well sifted that I think we shall be able, at any rate, to cite them in a manner which will commend universal assent, so far as the truth of the recitation is concerned. Whether we agree or disagree upon the conclusions which ought to be drawn from the facts, it is very desirable that there should be no question at all as to the facts themselves. Shortly, these facts, as I gather them from returns made to this House in 1887, and from the reports of the different cases as given in the Supreme Court report, are these: A writ was issued for the election of a member for Queen's County, N.B., in February, 1887, which writ was addressed to Mr. John R. Dunn, as returning officer for the district. That returning officer appointed the 15th February for the nomination of candidates and the 22nd February for the polling day. Two candidates were nominated, Mr. George G. King and Mr. George F. Baird. Mr. King's nomination was duly signed by the requisite number of electors, was assented to by Mr. King, and was signed by himself and verified by the oath of Mr. Wetmore, who acted for him as attorney and agent and who also paid the returning officer at the time the sum of money required by law as nominating fee. The returning officer received these papers, examined them, saw that they complied with the law and gave Mr. Wetmore, as Mr. King's agent, a certificate to the effect that he had received the nomination fee and the nomination paper and that everything was in form as by law required. Mr. Baird was nominated also, and I have never heard that there were any doubts as to the legality of his nomination either. Both nominations were received by the returning officer in due form, both parties nominated received a certificate from the returning officer that their papers were correct and in due form, and, on a poll being demanded, that poll was granted, the day of polling being fixed for the 22nd February. The election took place in due course, and, on the 5th March—that is on what is called declaration day—the returning officer assembled his court for the purpose defined by the law, that of receiving returns from the various deputy returning officers so as to ascertain which candidate had the majority of the votes. He did receive these returns, no ballot box, I believe, being missing. Everything was in due form of law, and the returning officer proceeded to, and did ascertain the result of the polling. Before the formal declaration of election of either one candidate or the other, Mr. Baird's solicitor and attorney objected that Mr. King had been illegally nominated because the deposit of $200 paid by Mr. Wetmore, acting on Mr. King's behalf, had not been paid by Mr. King's election agent, contending that under the law the nominating fee must be paid by the election agent appointed by the candidate. The returning officer, after hearing the argument, I assume, on behalf of the two candidates, assented to this view of the case; and, although the addition of votes which he had made showed that Mr. King had polled 1,191 votes, while Mr. Baird had only polled 1,130, leaving a majority in favour of Mr. King of 61 votes, the returning officer undertook to reverse the decision he had given before election day when he received and approved of the nomination papers and candidature of Mr. King, and declared that Mr. King had been illegally nominated, and that, therefore, although he had been elected by a handsome majority, he would report the minority candidate, which he then and there proceeded to do. On the 7th of March, that is two days afterwards, Mr. King made application to Judge Steadman, the county court judge of the county, on an affidavit stating substantially the facts I have given, and also stating the belief of the deponent that some of the deputy returning officers had improperly counted the ballots, and that some deputy returning officers had improperly rejected one or more ballots. On this affidavit the county court judge made an order for a recount of the votes, fixing the time and place for holding the recount in the manner prescribed by the statute. Two days afterwards, Mr. Baird's counsel applied to one of the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick for a writ of prohibition to prohibit Judge Steadman, the county court judge, from proceeding with this recount. This was in the form of an order nisi, of course, to show cause why the writ of prohibition should not be issued, but contained a peremptory order staying the county court judge and prohibiting the recount. Now, these are the bald, bare facts, the accuracy of which, I think, will remain unchallenged by anybody. I have endeavoured to state them fairly and frankly, without minimizing or exaggerating them one way or the other. It was when these circumstances became known, that Mr. John V. Ellis published in his newspaper the comments complained of. Hon. gentlemen will understand that under the circumstances which I have described, there was an unwonted and unusual degree of anxiety and excitement prevailing throughout Queen's County. I am correct in saying that that excitement was not confined to the bounds of the county; it pervaded every district in New Brunswick, every district in the Maritime Provinces, and every district throughout the Dominion of Canada. From one end to the other of this Dominion, there ran the thrill of disgust and shame at the facts which had transpired. When people learned that it was possible that a legal election should be held, the candidates nominated, and the turmoil which accompanies election gone through, with the expenditure of time and money, and labour and brain work, which accompany these elections in an intelligent and free constituency—after it had all been gone through and the people had declared their mind by a majority which was beyond doubt, when they found that a returning officer, whose duty seemed to be simply ministerial, to add up the results returned to him by the deputy returning officers and declare them in due form in order that the majority candidate might take his place in the House of Commons—that that officer had not only neglected his duty, but violated his sworn oath of office and disregarding the law, diregarding his oath of office, and disregarding his duty, had returned to Parliament as the elected candidate the man who received a large minority of the votes, I say these facts sent a thrill of horror and disgust throughout the length and breadth of Canada. Hon. gentlemen will acknowledge that there is no wonder at that fact, because if the deputy returning officer Dunn can, with impunity, violate the law and return his nominee, even if he is the minority candidate, as the elected candidate for his county, why, of course, every other returning officer may do the same, and this House, in that case, would not consist of members elected by the choice of the people at a legal election held under our constitution, but would consist of the nominees of the returning officers in the several districts who, in their turn, are nominated by the Government of the day. Hon. gentlemen will see that this act struck a blow at the root of constitutional government as it exists in Canada, and if it was allowed to go unpunished, and if that returning officer was allowed to have his way, there would be no such thing as constitutional government here, as we understand it. There would be no need of going through the turmoil and the expense of an election throughout Canada; it would be far better for the Government to nominate a House from time to time and do away altogether with the farce of an election. Under these circumstances, and in the heat of the excitement which existed throughout the province, the newspaper press, as the exponent of public opinion, necessarily and properly took up the case, and from one end of the province to the other, from one end to the other of the Dominion, articles were published condemning, in the severest terms, which the English language could furnish, the arbitrary, unconstitutional and hateful conduct of this returning officer. Among these articles was one published by Mr. John V. Ellis, and in order that the House may understand exactly the different steps that were taken to punish Mr. Ellis for writing those articles, I think it right, at this opening stage of my remarks, to quote at length the articles that he published on the subject, although in doing so I will be obliged to trespass for a few minutes upon the indulgence of the House. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that I have stated that application was made to Judge Tuck for a writ of prohibition to prohibit the county court judge from proceeding with his recount, and in the St. John 'Globe,' published on the 10th March, 1887, Mr. Ellis published the articles complained of. The articles are reported officially in the case which was heard before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, and I quote from that report. These are the articles for the publication of which Mr. Ellis was punished:

QUEEN'S ELECTION.

People who know something about the course of political events were not surprised when they read in the papers this morning that Mr. Justice Tuck had issued a writ of prohibition to Judge Steadman of the county court, prohibiting him from proceeding to recount the ballots in the Queen's election. Nevertheless, the fact that such a writ has been issued adds fuel to the fire of discontent now burning fiercely over this whole business. A trick by which the voice of the majority in Queen's is silenced, is condemned all over the country in unmistakable terms, as a flagrant outrage upon popular rights and as a grossly immoral transaction. The appeal to Judge Steadman for a judicial reconsideration was made to a man of fair and honest judgment, who, if he had political leanings at all, would have them towards the Conservative party, but whom the people generally would trust to do what was fair. He might, therefore, be safely allowed to examine into the whole matter, and to do justice. But it is not justice that is wanted, and, therefore, Judge Tuck intervenes.

This whole business as it stands before the country to-day is a scandal and an outrage of the most abominable character. It is an outrage upon the electorate and a disgrace to institutions alleged to be free. It is the worse blow public liberty and public morality have yet received, and no effort should be left untried by the friends of free institutions to prevent the foul deed which Baird and his allies are seeking to perpetrate on the country.

That was the total article of that date. On the day following, March 11, the following article appeared:—

GOVERNMENT BY FRAUD.

The attempt to deprive the electors of Queen's of their right to choose their own representative has succeeded for the moment. A returning officer who appears to be restrained by no moral consideration, and who appears to be incapable of judging between right and wrong, has selected Mr. Baird to sit in the House of Commons of Canada, although the majority of the electors rejected Mr. Baird. A judge assumes, if he does not usurp, the power to prevent a full investigation of the matter in time to remedy the evil, and the boast is made that two years must elapse before the man chosen by the majority can take his seat.

Can justice and right and principle be trampled down with impunity? Can the Conservative party stand by and abet the wrongdoer and prevent the triumph of right? We do not believe the great majority of the men in that party would desire to govern the county by force of arms or by force of fraud. In fact, it cannot be done. And every attempt to do it adds only to the discontent and ill-humour and dissatisfaction of the time. There has just been an appeal to the people, out of which the Administration has come weak and panting. Can it regain strength in the country through fraud of returning officers? Can partisan judges give it vitality degrading the ermine in its interest? We have every confidence that free institutions, if left to themselves, will purify themselves, but the assumption of power by officials and the prostitution of judicial authority for the purposes of party, are sufficient to weaken the foundation of the strongest faith in freedom.

On the next day, the 12th March, the 'Globe' contained the following, and this is the last article:—

QUEEN'S COUNTY.

Judge Steadman, in whose jurisdiction as county judge the matter is, proceeded to Georgetown yesterday to hold a court and to inquire into the Queen's County matter. Dunn, the returning officer, declined to produce the ballots. According to the 'Telegraph's' report of the proceeding he had been served with a copy of the order made by Judge Tuck upon Judge Steadman, in which Dunn's name was not mentioned at all, and which really had no relation to Dunn. The report then says:—

"Mr. Dunn then said that when Mr. Currey served him with the paper, he told him that Judge Tuck had said to Currey to say to him, Dunn, that that paper was equal to a command not to produce the statements and ballots, and he therefore declined to produce them."

If this report is correct, either Mr. Currey did not tell the truth, or Judge Tuck, when he issued his order to Judge Steadman, felt that it was not an order to be obeyed, and he sent a private message to Dunn by Currey not to deliver up the ballots. We doubt if Tuck has any power to send such an order as a judge, but he may not have been acting in the capacity of a judge but in some other capacity when he sent it. While Judge Tuck's order to the county judge is disobeyed because, as is generally conceded, Tuck went beyond his powers, the effect of his interference is to delay justice, and to prevent the will of the majority of the people from being carried out.

I have read every word of the three articles written by Mr. Ellis and published in this paper which were complained of as constituting a contempt of court. I must say, considering the outrageous character of the fraud, the infamous character of the fraud of which candidate Baird was guilty, the language used cannot be condemned by anybody. He was guilty of a wicked fraud of the worst kind. It was Mr. Ellis's duty as a newspaper publisher to expose that fraud to the public, so that public opinion, if there is such a thing existing in this Dominion, might be brought to bear on the man to punish him. After reading over these articles a number of times, I fail to see that in them there is one word requiring to be altered or modified in so far as they condemn the conduct of Mr. Baird, or in so far as they condemn the conduct of Mr. Baird's allies or conspirators, and in so far as they condemn the outrageous, villainous conduct of that returning officer. I remember a few months ago that a man went to Winnipeg and violated the election law by personating one or more voters. For committing that fraud against the public that man justly and properly has been sent to the penitentiary for three years. There is no sympathy whatever in this House or in this country on behalf of that personator. He violated the law, committed a shameful fraud, and will spend the next three years in the penitentiary, and justly so. But if three years in the penitentiary is a just punishment given to a man who personates an elector, what punishment should be awarded to a returning officer who, sworn to stand as an independent man between the electors on both sides, sworn to carry out the law fairly, justly and honourably, receives the nomination papers and the fees of both candidates, gives them certificates and acknowledges them as candidates, grants the demand for a poll to be held between them, holds an election in the county, receives the count from his deputy-returning officers, files a statement that one of the candidates has a majority of 61 votes, and because that majority does not suit his political views, turns round and in defiance of the law, justice, fair-play and constitutional liberty and right, declares that the minority candidate had been elected for the district. The wrong committed by that act was the greatest wrong that could be committed against Mr. George G. King, one of the candidates. He also committed the greatest crime against the electors of Queen's County, who for weeks had canvassed the political issues and had polled their votes in favour of the candidate of their choice. He did more. He struck a blow at constitutional liberty, which if left unassailed and unpunished will be copied by other scoundrels like himself who occupy the position of returning officers, and the freedom and liberty of the people, and the freedom and liberty of this House will not only be undermined but destroyed. I therefore say that the article which Mr. Ellis published was published by him prompted by a severe sense of duty and right, and that so far as the comments went upon candidate Baird and returning officer Dunn, and allies and conspirators who were joined together to defeat justice and the law, there is not one word which I should like to see modified or altered. But it was said that in publishing these comments Mr. Ellis had gone beyond proper bounds and had criticized unfairly the conduct of Judge Tuck, who issued the writ of prohibition. We have to look at the facts to determine whether that is so or not. We must recollect that this subject-matter is one particularly within the privileges of the House of Commons, that Dunn was acting there as an officer of the House of Commons, that the preponderance of judicial authority, and until the decision of the New Brunswick court was given the sole decision existing on that point, was to the effect that the judges of the court had no control, either by mandamus or prohibition, to control or direct the action of the officers of the House of Commons in regard to elections. We must recollect that the matter had come up for judicial decision only in one of the Ontario courts, and in the Centre Wellington case, after hearing argument, the judges had solemnly decided that they had no power to issue writs of mandamus, ordering certain things to be done, and had no power to issue writs of prohibition, prohibiting returning officers from doing their duty in that regard; that the officers were officers of the House of Commons, and it had reserved to itself the entire control over election proceedings, except in so far and to the extent to which they had delegated that control to the election judges under the Election Trials Act. Beyond that the judges of the land had no right and power to intervene; and I call the attention of the House to this fact, which in my opinion is very important, that at the time Mr. Ellis published these articles he published them with that knowledge and acted under that honest belief. Whether he was right or wrong, perhaps this House will not undertake to say. It is fair and right that I should say that afterwards the action of Judge Tuck was approved by his colleagues upon the New Brunswick Bench, and they held, after argument had been adduced before them some years subsequently, that Judge Tuck acted within his rights in issuing his order for a writ of prohibition and in staying the proceedings, and prohibiting Judge Steadman going on with the recount. But I want to call the attention of the House to what I conceive to be the crucial point in this matter: Was there a criminal intent on Mr. Ellis's part in publishing that article? Did he publish it bona fide and honestly? What is the fact? Judge Steadman, who is judge of the county court, acted upon the belief that the order made by Judge Tuck was waste paper, and he refused to obey it. He did so because the judicial authority in Ontario had determined, as I have already said, that the judges of the land had no power to control or direct the officers of the election court, except to the extent the power was given them on an election petition; and until this decision was given by the New Brunswick court, there were few, if any lawyers, in the Dominion who believed that any judge had power to interfere in this matter. I do not desire to ask the House to pass an opinion as to whether the court of New Brunswick was right or the court of Ontario was right; I am not going to ask the House to sit in appeal in this matter and decide in one way or another, but I ask the House to consider whether in the publishing of that article Mr. Ellis was animated by an honest, high, constitutional motive, or whether he was animated by malice and hatred against Judge Tuck personally. What were the particular sentences in the article which were held to comprise contempt of court as against Judge Tuck? There were two sentences, and one is in the first article I have read:

But it is not justice that is wanted, and therefore Judge Tuck intervenes.

I venture to say that one would have to put a very strained construction upon that sentence to construe it into malicious contempt. It is open to several constructions. We know that a layman is constantly complaining that justice is not given in the courts so much as strict law, and that very often in the opinion of these men, strict law and justice do not go hand in hand. It is not a contempt of court, I hold, for a man to say: that may be the strict law of the matter but it is not justice, and I submit whether it is so or not, to my mind, at any rate, there was nothing in these words which would warrant a man being punished for contempt of court. The other sentence complained of was:

Can partisan judges give the law vitality by degrading the ermine in its interest?

And it was contended that Mr. Ellis wished to apply that to this particular case, and that the words were an attack upon Judge Tuck. Now, Sir, I have read these articles and I want to point out to the House the particular ground of complaint I have to make. In the resolution which I will have the honour to submit at the close of my remarks, I will ask the House in the first place to condemn the conduct of John R. Dunn in making the false and fraudulent return he did, as being a violation of the letter and the spirit of the law. I will go further and I will ask the House to say that in proceeding summarily to punish John V. Ellis for contempt of court in publishing these articles, the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, formed themselves into a tribunal comprising prosecutor and jury, and judge and sentencers, and that it was a proceeding which under the decisions given by the English courts cannot be justified. I say, Sir, that the law of contempt is one which is necessary to preserve order and power in our courts of justice, and I say so far as the powers of punishing for contempt of court in the face of the court are concerned that I am not one who wishes to minimize or attack or destroy the powers which the judges have. I say, that if a judge representing Her Majesty and sitting in court administering justice and law between parties finds the administration of justice interfered with in open court by his orders being disobeyed, or by witnesses refusing to testify, or by jurors being tampered with, or by conduct in court which prevents a proper and due administration of the law; then I say the judge has and ought to have full and uncontrolled power—except the power which is limited by judicial discretion—to punish that contempt then and there. It is essential to the proper administration of justice that this should exist, and therefore I desire the House to understand that I am not seeking directly or indirectly to make an insidious attack upon that power. I desire to let it remain, and I desire to say: that that power is not involved in this discussion, nor is it involved in the condemnation which I ask the House to pass upon these proceedings. Then, Mr. Speaker, what is the power of punishing for contempt which I challenge? There is a contempt of court which is said to exist, when something is done, not in the face of the court but outside the court, such as the publication in a newspaper which may attack some litigant or judge, or in some way to prevent due administration of justice. That is called a constructive contempt of court, and the proposition to which I desire to invite the attention of the House is this: that there is a proper and effective mode of punishing any such attempt to interfere with the due administration of justice and that that mode has not been resorted to on this occasion. If any man's character is attacked in the newspaper press, be he a member of Parliament or a judge sitting upon the bench, he has the right to bring his action of libel, and the party sued has the right to invite the verdict of a jury as to whether he has been guilty of libel or not. We know very well that many years ago in the history of our country, there was a court known as the Star Chamber. The Star Chamber acted in the exercise of arbitrary and untrammelled power and haled before them everybody who made an attack upon its members or upon the Queen's Government. The accused parties were brought before the Star Chamber and punished with a severity unknown to modern days and without having the safeguard of the intervention of a jury. The criminal intent was determined by the Star Chamber judges themselves, who also acted as prosecutors and inflicted the penalty. I read the other day of one case where a man was brought before the Star Chamber for publishing reflections upon the Lord Chancellor of the day and the sentence passed upon him was: that he was to be perpetually imprisoned and fined a thousand pounds, and to be afterwards pilloried and lose both his ears. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the House, that the power of punishing for contempt of court which is vested in the judges, or which they claim is vested in them, is so untrammelled as to permit them to punish a man by sentencing him to imprisonment for life. There is no limit whatever to the punishment which these judges may inflict if they so choose, whether it be a fine of £100 or of £10,000, or imprisonment for thirty days or for life. I say that this power is dangerous to the constitution, is a power vested in no other body and is a power which may produce the most glaring wrongs. Now, Sir, after the abolition of the Star Chamber, men were brought before the courts and punished for libel very much as they are at the present time. After a time had gone by, judges being only human, drew to themselves more and more power, and they eventually determined that in them lay the right to determine whether an article published constituted a libel or not; the jury being merely to determine whether the article was published. When they determined that the functions of the jury were so practically limited as to be useless, the question of libel or no libel was reserved by the judges to be determined by themselves. There is no student of English history but recollects the noble stand Erskine and his compeers took to destroy that judge-created law; and when Fox brought in his Bill leaving it to the jury to determine on the whole question of libel or no libel, a blow was struck in favour of civil and religious liberty which has been productive of the most glorious results ever since. After that day no one could be punished in a civil action for libel unless a jury of his peers could be found to declare that he was guilty of a libel. A judge may think what he likes, but the question of libel or no libel has been by statute law in England for the last hundred years reserved to the jury and jury alone; and that is one of the greatest safeguards of personal liberty which the subject of the Crown possesses. But, Sir, it is not only there that the remedy lies—and it is to this I desire to call the attention of the House. If Judge Tuck felt that his honour or his dignity or his reputation had been unjustly or unfairly assailed, he had other remedies in his hands besides the civil action of libel. He could have gone to his brother judges and applied for leave to file a criminal information against his assailant, and I assume that the judges would have granted that leave, they having declared the publication to be a contempt of court. That is one of the modes indicated by the law to enable a man, whether a judge or anybody else, to vindicate his character when it has been improperly assailed. That was a pertinent remedy which was open to Judge Tuck, and which, if he had adopted it, would have had this result, that when the criminal information came to be tried, it would be tried, not alone before a or anybody else, to vindicate his character was alleged to have been assailed, but before a judge, assisted by a sworn jury, who would have been called upon to give their verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the criminal intent with which the libel was published. Or, he had his third remedy: he could have preferred an indictment before the grand jury of the county, in the ordinary way in which a criminal is indicted. He had these three remedies, each and all of which were pertinent to the case in hand, by which he could have obtained proper redress for the offence alleged to have been committed, but each and all of which safeguarded the defendant by that great safeguard which we all value so highly, the intervention of a sworn verdict of our peers before we can be convicted. Let me point out that the mode of proceeding which was adopted to punish a man for contempt of court is 'sui generis'—is opposed to the spirit and genius of constitution. Why? Because, in the first place, it takes away from a man that dearly cherished right which our forefathers fought so long to obtain, and which we have retained up to this time—the right to be judged by a jury of our peers. In the second place, it deprives a man of the presumption which in every case is accorded to an accused person, to be held innocent until he is proved guilty. In this Star Chamber proceeding, the defendant had not the benefit of that presumption; but he was put upon his oath to say whether he was guilty or not guilty; the prosecutor was not put to the proof at all. It is an inquisitorial proceeding unknown to the English law, and especially unjust, because it enables the parties attacked to punish on their own mere motion, without the intervention of a jury. I allege and contend, therefore, that when, as in proceedings like these under discussion, the contempt of court is what is called a constructive contempt, a publication in a newspaper reflecting on the conduct or the opinions of the judge, it is unjust, unfair, anti-British and opposed to modern precedents for the judge to take the law into his own hands, to summon the publisher arbitrarily before him, put him upon his oath and demand from him whether he is guilty or not guilty, find him guilty, and then punish him himself. It is vesting in one man the three distinct functions of prosecutor, judge, and jury; it is a thing which in all other cases is unknown to the English law; it has been productive of the greatest evil in times gone by; and it will be productive of untold evils if permitted to gain a hold in this country. I desire the House to follow me in my argument in this respect, that I am not asking them to determine whether Judge Tuck was right in issuing the writ of prohibition or not. That question is not involved necessarily in the propositions I submit for the concurrence of the House. When the judges gave their judgment on the contempt case in the court below, they were very careful to state that it did not matter in the slightest whether Judge Tuck had the right to prohibit or not; the contempt was the same, and they would proceed to punish whether they thought Judge Tuck had the power or not. Chief Justice Allen, in delivering his judgment, anticipated the objection made by

Mr. Ellis's counsel, that inasmuch as Judge Tuck had no right to issue a writ of prohibition the whole matter was 'coram non iudice,' and Mr. Ellis could not be proceeded against for contempt. The chief justice said:

As to the first objection; I think it is not necessary to determine whether a prohibition would lie in this particular case or not. Mr. Justice Tuck may or may not have been right in granting the order; but in my opinion the question whether the publication is a contempt or not does not depend upon the determination of that question.

I am the more anxious to put this case before the House because the propositions I submit are plain and simple propositions based on common sense and justice, and not necessarily involved in abstruse questions of law. I do not ask the House to sit as a court of appeal and to declare that Judge Tuck did wrong in issuing his writ of prohibition. My resolution does not cover that point. The New Brunswick court determined judicially that whether Judge Tuck was within his right or not, the contempt of court was equally proven. We have nothing to do with the legal question whether he had the right to issue the writ of prohibition or not, because, in giving their judgment in the court below, the judges declared distinctly that that was a question that did not enter into their consideration. If that is the case, I would ask this House, and each individual member of the House—if they believe that there were plain and pertinent methods of punishing the wrong, if a wrong was done to Judge Tuck—whether they will endorse the proceedings that were taken, of summarily haling this man before the court and punishing him without the intervention of a jury or the other safeguards which the law throws around an offender? But let us see how these proceedings were taken. Was the dignity of the court felt to have been offended or insulted? Did the court rise up in their majesty and declare that this man should be punished for what they declared to be a contempt? Not at all. The court never imagined they were injured, the court did not think a wrong was done. The court took no steps to punish the man. The court directed no proceedings to be taken to punish him. But the offender—and I say it without wishing to be too personally offensive—one of the conspirators, the man who had done the wrong, the man who had been a party to stealing the seat, the man who had been a party to depriving the electors of Queen's County of their dearly cherished rights, the man who usurped the seat to which Mr. George King had been elected, the man who had committed a crime so rank that no language we can use can condemn it too severely—this man went into court with an affidavit, whining that the dignity of the court had been attacked. Let it be understood that the application in this case was made by Mr. George F. Baird, the man who had profited by the wrong which the returning officer and his fellow-conspirators had done against right and justice. Mr. Baird went into court complaining of what? He complained that he had been prejudiced and wronged. Why had he not the manliness to do what every other man has to do when he finds his character has been attacked? Why did he not bring his case before a jury and let a jury decide whether he had a character which had been assailed improperly or not? No, the hon. gentleman would not resort to the ordinary tribunals and to the ordinary process. He dared not face any jury in that country or any other. I will venture the assertion, in view of the facts which I have recited—the plain, bald facts—that if the defeated candidate, Mr. Baird, who had usurped the place his opponent had won, who had been one of the conspirators, who had succeeded in violating the law and getting himself returned to a seat in this House for which he had never been elected—I venture to assert that if that man had gone before a jury and asked for damages because his conduct had been reflected upon, he would have been hissed out of court. The jury would have given a verdict to the defendant without hearing evidence for the defence at all. The facts of the case, on the plaintiff's own side, would have been quite sufficient for any jury. What did he do? He went into court with his own affidavit, reciting these articles, and claiming to take what? The honour—that is the word, mark you—and the dignity of the Supreme Court under his charge, and asking that court to declare that he should be allowed to take proceedings to punish his opponents for the crime which had been committed by Mr. George King being elected by the majority of the people. A more wilful, flagrant, notorious attempt to pose as an injured innocent, I do not remember in my history. Why, these men ought to be in the criminal box instead of appearing as plaintiffs before the court. If the law had been vindicated as it ought to have been, if punishment meet for the offence had been awarded to those who had sinned, some of these men would have been serving their time in the penitentiary—

Mr. LISTER. They would have got out on the ground of ill-health.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That would have been a subsequent proceeding. But I invite the attention of the House, at this stage of my remarks, to the application which was made to punish this newspaper editor. What was he doing? He was championing the rights of the people, vindicating the liberty of the press, defending the majesty of the law, insisting upon the rights of the electors being recognized by the law. And for doing this, for standing up for the people, for defending the liberty of the press, for vindicating its rights in this matter, Mr. Ellis was brought before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. And brought by whom? By the man who had committed the fraud, who was a party to the wrong-doing, and who should have been punished for his crime. What was the proceeding he took? He got a rule nisi on his own affidavit, setting out that he himself felt very much injured by these articles of Mr. Ellis. Why, what did Mr. Ellis say of him? Mr. Ellis said:

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

This whole business, as it stands before the country to-day, is a scandal and an outrage of a most abominable character.

Is not that true? Apart from party politics, there is not a man in the House who holds any other opinion. I say more than that. A gentleman, who to-day is a Minister of the Crown, stood up in his place in this House, and said the outrage was of so flagrant and foul a character that rather than defend it he would cut off his right hand. This was said by a gentleman whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. Baird) is now following. It was said by one of his leaders—a Minister of the Crown to-day. The language used by Mr. Ellis is no stronger than what was used by that gentleman on the occasion I refer to, when the debate took place in 1887. Mr. Ellis went on to say:

It is an outrage on the electorate and a disgrace to institutions alleged to be free. It is the worst blow public liberty and morality have yet received, and no effort should be left untried by the friends of free institutions to prevent the foul deed which Baird and his allies are seeking to perpetrate on the country.

And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Baird) complained that he was wronged because of this language. I say that Mr. Ellis did not go a jot too far. I say that his language would be justified and approved of by any jury, and I believe in my heart that there is no man more ashamed of the proceedings that took place on that occasion than Mr. Baird himself. I believe this much: If there is any remorse in his heart at all, I believe that gentleman is consumed with remorse for the course he took on that occasion—and if he is not, he ought to be. Now what is the rule the hon. gentleman took out? He applied for a rule of the court, and the court granted a rule, as follows:

It is ordered that John V. Ellis, the editor and principal publisher and proprietor of the St. John 'Globe' newspaper, show cause why an attachment should not be issued against him or why he should not be committed for contempt of this honourable court for writing, printing and publishing in the issue of the St. John 'Globe' newspaper on the 10th of March, an article under the caption of "The Queen's election."

This article I have read, and the rule goes on to allege:

And wherein are comments, reflections and innuendos, and the applicant George F. Baird, on an order of His Honour Mr. Justice Tuck, one of the justices of this honourable court, made on application of George F. Baird for an order nisi for a writ of prohibition to prohibit James Steadman, Esq., the Judge of the Queen's County Court, from further proceeding with or to make a recount or final addition of the votes given for said George F. Baird and one George G. King at the election held on the 22nd day of February last of a member to represent the electoral district of Queen's County, in the province of New Brunswick, in the House of Commons of Canada, and on His Honour Mr. Justice Tuck; and in which said articles the said John V. Ellis has been guilty of a contempt of this honourable court in scandalizing this honourable court, and particularly His Honour Mr. Justice Tuck, one of the justices thereof, in calumniating and vilifying said applicant George F. Baird, and in commenting on the matters of said election, said recount, and said order nisi for a writ of prohibition in a manner calculated to prejudice and that does prejudice the public before the hearing and judicial decision of said matters, and so as is calculated to prevent said applicant George F. Baird from obtaining a fair and impartial disposal of said matters.

Why, one would imagine that we were back in the days of the Star Chamber again. One would imagine that the liberty of the press was only a myth or a thing of the past. Newspaper men must not comment on proceedings of this kind freely, but must, with bated breath, apply to the man who commits a political crime and ask him how far they may go in censuring that crime in the press. When that day comes the liberty of the country will be undermined; and the country at large owes a debt of gratitude to this man who had the pluck, the manliness, the courage, to express in plain Saxon English the truth in connection with that political outrage. The application was made at the instance of Mr. George F. Baird to punish this editor for publishing comments, reflections and innuendos on himself. Again I ask, if Mr. Baird thought he was calumniated, abused, libelled, by what right of process does he stand superior to the rest of the community and become relieved from the necessity of carrying his character into court before a jury, vindicating it before a jury, and trying to punish the offender on the verdict of a jury? He applies to Justice Tuck, or, rather, to the court of which Mr. Justice Tuck is a member, and asks the court to take cognizance of the offence committed against himself; and this rule nisi is afterwards made absolute, and Mr. Ellis is sent to prison for the contempt, and to this day it is hard to tell whether it was for speaking what they considered calumniating words of Mr. George F. Baird, or what they considered calumniating words of Mr. Justice Tuck. Now, Mr. Speaker, I lay down this legal proposition, to which I ask the assent and concurrence of hon. gentlemen in this House: Where a publication such as this is made in a public newspaper commenting upon matters of public importance, the parties who think themselves injured by any part of that publication if there is a pertinent remedy open to them which can satisfy the law and justice, are bound to resort to it and must not resort to this arbitrary process of punishment by contempt of court. And the reason for this, hon. gentlemen will see, is plain. In the one case, if he applies for a criminal information, or if he prefers an indictment or brings a civil action for libel, he has a fair and honest trial; he stands on an equal footing with his opponent. The person accused has a fair and open trial; a sworn jury is called upon to determine between the parties. If the impleaded man is tried and the jury give their verdict, justice is satisfied and nobody has anything more to say. In this case, if the hon. gentleman could have found a jury which would have given a verdict against Mr. Ellis and the court had then punished him, I should have been the last man to rise in Parliament and say a word against the proceeding. I stated before that this proceeding is contrary to the genius and spirit of the British constitution. It is an inquisitorial proceeding; it withdraws from the criminal the safeguards which the law throws around every individual; it does away with the jury, it constitutes the prosecutors the judges who are to deliver sentence. Where is the authority for that proposition of mine? I say we have the highest authority. Some years ago in England applications of this kind were made, and nothing but the good sense and the high judicial character of the English bench prevented these proceedings from degenerating so that Parliament would have had to interfere. In Canada few instances can be found where this arbitrary proceeding has been resorted to. I do not know of one case of late years in the province of Ontario. I do not think that in England such an application would be listened to for a moment, because the rule has been laid down there time and again by judges of the very highest standing and character that such proceedings are never to be resorted to except as a last resort, and where no other remedy is open. In Lord Chief Justice Campbell's "Lives of the Chief Justices," is given the finding in Rex vs. Almon, which appears in Willmot's notes, as to the power of committing for contempt. In commenting upon the case, Lord Chief Justice Campbell says:

That although the power to proceed by attachment in the case of a libel published on the judges is undoubted, yet the preferable course is to proceed by information or indictment so as to avoid placing them in the invidious situation of deciding where they may be supposed to be parties.

In that one sentence he sums up the law as I say it is understood and known and laid down by the highest judicial authorities in England to-day. "The invidious situation," which no judge ought to stand in, "of deciding where they may be supposed to be parties." "No man ought to be judge in his own cause." is a principle underlying British law everywhere, and this proceeding, which comes down to us from the days of the Star Chambers, violates that well-known canon of British law and constitutes the judges parties in their own cause. Sir, a few years ago, in a case decided by one of the most brilliant jurists that ever sat upon a British bench—I refer to the late Sir George Jessel—the judge was called upon to give judgment upon the very point I am discussing, and he sums it up in these words :

It seems to me that the jurisdiction of committing for contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited should be most jealously and carefully watched, and exercised, if I may say so, with the greatest reluctance and the greatest anxiety on the part of the judges to see whether there is no other mode which is not open to the objection of arbitrariness and which can be brought to bear upon the subject. I say that a judge should be most careful to see that the cause cannot be fairly prosecuted to a hearing unless this extreme mode of dealing with persons brought before him in accusations of contempt of court should be adopted. I have myself had many occasions to consider the jurisdiction and I have always thought that necessary though it be, it is necessary only in the sense in which extreme measures are sometimes necessary to preserve men's rights—that is if no other pertinent remedy can be found. Probably that would be discovered after consideration to be true measure of the exercise of the jurisdiction.

Mr. McNEILL. That refers to contempt in open court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, to constructive contempt. The remedy for contempt in open court which my hon. friend refers to must be summary and prompt in its nature. That, of course, does not come in question, nor do these arguments apply to it. I pointed out to the House that there were three easy, plain, practical remedies open alike to Mr. Baird and to Mr. Justice Tuck. One was a civil action for libel, another by preferring an indictment, and the last by applying to the court for a criminal information. They were as speedy—even more speedy—than the course taken by the judges here; they would have been as effective to punish, even more effective; they would have surrounded the defendant with the safeguards which every person accused of crime has when he is called upon to stand his trial for his life or his liberty, and would have satisfied the demand of the law that no man shall be judge in his own cause, that every man shall be presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty, and that no man shall be punished until a jury of his own countrymen find him guilty of the offence with which he is charged. Sir, this statement of law covers the whole ground. The question was afterwards brought before the Court of Queen's Bench in England and discussed before the other judges. Mr. Justice Matthews agreed fully and unreservedly in the statement of Sir George Jessel. Lord Justice Mellish is also a very high authority, who gave his entire concurrence to the statement of the law laid down by Sir George Jessel, which I have just quoted. In the case of Maria Anna Davis, in the Court of Queen's Bench, Mr. Justice Matthews, with a few words preliminary words of his own adopted absolutely the dictum of Sir George Jessel. I say that in this Ellis case these excellent principles were deliberately ignored. No information was filed or applied for; no indictment was preferred; no civil action was brought, but the summary and arbitrary measure of proceeding in the way I have mentioned was adopted. Some years ago this matter was brought up before the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor, Sir Roundell Palmer, who introduced a Bill into the House of Lords for the purpose of limiting and controlling the exercise of this jurisdiction on the part of the judges. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that there is another incident connected with this arbitrary mode of punishment which is unknown to the other methods I have referred to, and that is that this method is not only arbitrary and summary, and without the protective surroundings I have referred to, but it is absolute in the sense that there is no appeal from it. The judges themselves give judgment, and from that judgment there is no appeal; and therefore there is more reason why the course which Sir George Jessel laid down should be adopted. Now, when Sir Roundell Palmer introduced his Bill into the House of Lords upon that occasion, that distinguished Irish law lord, Lord Fitzgerald, made some comments upon this method of procedure. He said :

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

The old cases which punished for speaking disrespectfully of the courts would not now be followed. In modern times this power of commitment has been confined solely to articles in the newspapers which were thought to interfere with the administration of justice.

Mind you, not a matter relating to the dignity and character of the judge, but something which absolutely interfered with the administration of justice.

The doctrine of constructive contempt was one he was not inclined to favour, the judge being at once judge of the law, of the fact, and of the intention of the sentence, and his decision was without any power of review.

That eminent and distinguished lord denounced the present system "as uncertain, undefined, and depending on a capricious discretion," and added: "such a practice as ours of summary punishment for constructive contempt, did not exist in any other country." Now, Sir, I submit I have proved the proposition with which I started out.

The second proposition contained in my resolution to which I ask the House to assent, is that inasmuch as there were pertinent and proper remedies which could have been resorted to, and which Mr. Baird or Mr. Justice Tuck might have invoked on their respective behalfs, they had no right in law or in equity to resort to this arbitrary, capricious and indefensible mode of punishing Mr. Ellis by summary application, to punish him without the intervention of a jury. Now, Mr. Speaker, this case was appealed from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick to the Supreme Court of Canada, on the assumption which was then generally entertained, that in a matter of this kind an appeal would lie. It seemed impossible that two or three judges sitting in a court should be the sole arbiters of a man's liberty, and that from their decision there could be no appeal to any other tribunal, that they could punish a man, and that they in themselves could possess the sole power of limiting the punishment, it might be one year or twenty years, and that there could be no court of appeal to whom the man so punished could appeal. Therefore, proceedings were taken to the Supreme Court of Canada. But it was held that no appeal could lie in proceedings of this kind, and the case was remitted back to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. Well, of course the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada gave no judgment upon the merits of the case, but one of them could not refrain from expressing in the very strongest language his opinion of the conduct of the judges, and he went so far as to say, although the matter was not before him for decision, that under the extraordinary circumstances of the case he could not refrain from saying that the whole proceedings of the judges of the court of New Brunswick were contrary to law and to justice. His language is to be found on page 17 of the Supreme Court Reports of the case. Judge Fournier says :

I am forced to regret to say upon this subject that I consider the opinion of the Hon. Judge Tuck and that of the Court of New Brunswick, as equally erroneous, contrary to law and to the decisions of the highest tribunal.

That, of course, is a mere dictum of that learned judge. On the merits of the case he could not decide, because there was no right of appeal, as he determined himself, but the case was so extraordinary and so indefensible that he could not refrain from expressing an opinion as strong as the one which I have just recited. Well, Sir, when these proceedings were remitted back to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, one would suppose that after so long a time had elapsed, after the judges had had an opportunity to reflect upon their conduct, they would be satisfied with a mere nominal punishment. But I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that although six years had elapsed, although the proceedings about which these articles were written had all ended, although other elections had come and gone and everybody had nearly forgotten all about it, when public opinion and justice would have been satisfied with a nominal punishment, these judges thought it necessary not only to sentence Mr. Ellis to pay a fine of $200 and to pay the costs between attorney and client, but to sentence him to thirty days' imprisonment in the common jail as a common felon. I say it was an indignity which the offence, if offence there was, did not deserve. I say the severity of the punishment cannot be justified. I cannot conceive myself what motives could have prompted the judges to inflict such a harsh, cruel sentence. What justification could be offered by the judges for inflicting such a cruel sentence upon a man for such a a venial offence, if offence there was committed at all. But, Sir, what was he punished for? It seems he was punished for reflecting upon Mr. Baird, because Mr. Ellis was made to pay the costs of Mr. Baird's lawyer, and every dollar that Mr. Baird had paid out of his own pocket as between attorney and client, had to be paid by Mr. Ellis. Mr. Baird was not put forward by the court to vindicate their honour and dignity, he was vindicating in this extreme mode his own character, as he said, against the calumnious attacks made upon it by one of his public opponents, while at the same time voluntarily assuming to take the honour of the court under his wing, and his costs are paid as between attorney and client, and the offender is sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment in the common jail as a common felon. Now, if any hon. gentleman in the House thinks that the language Mr. Ellis used went further than the occasion required, they will admit that the offence was not one to call for punishment such as this. Why, Sir, many a man who commits a course and vulgar crime against the community is very often sentenced to a much less imprisonment than the term which Mr. Ellis was sentenced to suffer. He was a man deservedly enjoying the esteem and respect of his fellow-colonists, and those hon. gentlemen in this House who remember him while he sat here for four years, will remember him as one of the mildest and most estimable men that ever sat in this House of Commons. He may have used strong language in the heat of the moment, but I will challenge contradiction to this fact, that he was the last man that ever sat here likely even to hurt the feelings of anybody, a mild-mannered man, a modest man, a kind man, the last man in the world who would maliciously stab and injure an opponent, a man who, on this occasion, was prompted by a stern sense of duty, and duty alone; and if he did go beyond the verge of that which is strictly permissible, I say justice would have been vindicated by a nominal punishment, and not by a punishment which I cannot characterize as otherwise than vindictive. But, Sir, it may be asked, how was this court composed, how was it possible that those gentlemen could be actuated by vindictive feelings? The court was composed, as appears from the return brought down in answer to a motion I made, of Sir John C. Allen, the present Chief Justice, Hon. Justice Palmer, and Hon. Justice Fraser. So far as Chief Justice Allen is concerned, I suppose there is no man inside of this House or out of it who would say a word against that gentleman, who was a mild-mannered, estimable judge in all the relations of life, and enjoyed the esteem of his fellow-citizens. I have never heard aught against him. His judicial character is one that reflects credit on himself and has cast honour on the Bench; and I speak in these terms more cheerfully because he has unfortunately been stricken down with a disease which I suppose will prevent him ever sitting on the Bench again. There is little doubt, I have no doubt, I am sorry to say, that at the time when that distinguished judge gave judgment he was on the eve of that terrible sickness which shortly afterwards overwhelmed him. His mind did not possess that strength and clearness which in times gone by he had enjoyed; he was subject to a stronger mind on the Bench, and I am going to point out by whom that sentence was given, and why that sentence was given. I am going to ask the attention of the House to this question, whether that judgment sentencing Mr. Ellis to jail for thirty days was given in punishment of an article he had published six years before, or whether it was given from the malice and vindictiveness of one of the judges in punishment of an article—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame.

Mr. WELDON. I rise to a point of order. My point is that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) cannot criticise the acts of one of the judges on the New Brunswick Supreme Bench.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not going to do so. I am not referring to a judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick at all. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to finish my sentence, he will learn to whom I refer. I am referring to a gentleman who left the Supreme Court of New Brunswick and now is a private citizen, who left the Bench because he knew he was going to be impeached in this House for high crimes and misdemeanours. I am going to read to this House an article which J. V. Ellis published three months before he was sentenced by Mr. Justice Palmer, and hon. members can draw their own conclusions after I have read that article. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Weldon) need not rush to the rescue; he may have an opportunity of vindicating the character of this gentleman whom he now patronizes or rises to defend. Sir, on 14th June last, before the sentence was published, and about the time the matter was remitted back to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick by the Supreme Court of Canada, an article was published by Mr. Ellis reflecting on the character of a gentleman who then occupied, but does not now occupy, a seat on that Bench. That article was entitled:

THE EQUITY COURT—GRAVE RUMOURS AFFECTING JUDGE PALMER—WHY IS HIS SON RETAINED IN SO MANY CASES?—COMPLAINTS OF NEPOTISM—MANAGEMENT OF THE PARKS BUSINESS—ALLEGED PAYMENT TO THE JUDGE OF $5,000 FOR SERVICES IN THAT CASE.

There is a great deal of talk in legal and in business circles over rumours and assertions which are current respecting the administration of justice in one of the most important courts in this province. If gentlemen who ought to be well informed, are to be believed, there is a bad condition of things existing; but it is somewhat surprising and very regrettable that those who are most deeply interested have not the courage to bring the matter before the constituted authorities. There is here a barrister's society, and it is, or should be, deeply interested in keeping the fountain of justice pure. Individual members of this society will talk in the boldest manner to any one whom they feel they can trust concerning transactions of the judge in Equity, Mr. Justice Palmer, but when asked why they do not take concerted action so as to bring the facts under the notice of the Minister of Justice, they merely shrug their shoulders intimating that there is too much risk in exciting the hostility of any judge. One lawyer of considerable prominence in the community has been, it is said, heard to declare that to take any steps likely to bring upon him the hostility of the judge would be unfair to his clients, as it would ruin their prospects of success. There may be a certain sympathy with this view, little as it may have to justify it on public or moral grounds; but, if it be a fact, as is currently stated, that when able lawyers who are employed in a case scramble among themselves as to which shall be the first to employ the judge's son—who is also on the roll of barristers—we can see that the legal fraternity are practically committing themselves into a line of conduct that makes them participators in the wrong-doing they deplore.

After commenting upon certain charges of nepotism alleged against Judge Palmer, the article goes on to say:

Gross as this proceeding is, it appears to be exceeded by some of the transactions which have taken place in connection with the management of the Equity Court of the Parks cotton mill. This concern was, it will be remembered, put into the hands of a receiver (Mr. H. H. McLean), at the instance of the Bank of Montreal. While thus in the hands of the receiver, Judge Palmer himself actually undertook the management of the business. One of his first steps was to appoint his nephew, Mr. Philip Palmer, an inspector or overseer of the business, and he was allowed five dollars a day for his work. Heretofore Mr. Palmer's occupation was that of a lawyer. He knew as much about the manufacture of cotton as lawyers generally do of work of that kind. The judge, in his capacity as manager of the mill, for the court composed of himself, went into cotton speculation of various kinds, and, according to the current reports, he lost four thousand dollars, some, if not all of it, "in margins." While some of the papers were industriously employed in lauding Mr. Justice Palmer's skill as a cotton manufacturer, the parties most interested in the concern were getting very sick of his alleged management, and they brought about a movement to oust him. Of course, this had to be done very cautiously. That is, the parties in the case had to do it cautiously; they feared, rightly or wrongly, that the judge enamoured of his own skill as a manager might not want to go suddenly out of the business; he might not want to allow Mr. Philip Palmer to lose his lucrative employment. The whole thing was kept a profound secret, up to within a few hours of the time when all the parties went before the judge and asked him to stop the proceedings in Equity, and to allow the new man to take hold of the mill. The judge did this, but before he finally got out he had extended Mr. Philip Palmer's prerogative, so that he might continue for three months longer to receive wages, although his work had ceased; he managed to get in his own claim for $1,300, to pay over the indebtedness due by him on his speculations. So far as regards the allowance to Mr. Philip Palmer, it seems to have been nothing short of a gross outrage to allow that gentleman anything. Even if he were really employed at any time in any necessary work in connection with the cotton mill, there was no ground whatever for paying him a single dollar over and above the time he was employed; in fact, it seems to have been an injustice to do so. The judge, in making his allowance, appears to have arbitrarily used the power in his hands for the benefit of his relative. So far as paying the "cotton margins," or whatever the $1,300 balance was due for, that may be excused or even justified, though it seems a very doubtful and improper thing for a judge to be carrying on transactions of this kind in his own name. But this is a simple proceeding as compared with something else which happened. It seems that a large sum of money was paid to Mr. Justice Palmer personally for his services in the matter while acting as the judge of the court. The amount stated to have been paid him is five thousand dollars. There are some who assert that just before the final proceedings were taken to have the matter removed from the Equity Court, the judge became aware of the fact that this large sum would become his as soon as the matter was at an end, and it was even delicately, if maliciously, intimated that the proceedings being stayed or stopped by the judge, things would be different, and there would be no money. This probably may be a mere invention; but, however, the thing was hedged, there seems to be no doubt at all that not only was the money tendered Judge Palmer but that he took it. Those who can speak categorically upon the matter can tell how the cheque was drawn, by whom, who carried it about before it was delivered, and how long a time elapsed after the transfer of the property to the new men before the money was paid.

The complaints of nepotism fade into insignificance before this last affair. Stripped of all its ornamentation the fact remains that the Judge in Equity received a sum of money, said to be five thousand dollars on the termination of a suit. What was the money paid for? Why did the judge put himself into the humiliating circumstance of accepting it? Is there any justification for the course taken? The facts are within the reach of men of capacity and influence and honour in this community. Do they intend to permit a thing of this kind to pass without fullest investigation? If so, are they not contributing to the corruption which they deplore?

Sir, that is the article which was published in the month of June, two or three months before Mr. Ellis received his sentence from the man he accused of receiving bribes. This House may well ask: Did Mr. Justice Palmer and his colleagues on the Bench invoke the aid of the power of commitment to punish the man who accused a judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick as being a bribe-taker. If that charge were true, then all confidence in that judge must cease. Heretofore, the streams of justice so far as we knew, ran pure; the fountains of justice were unsullied, as far as our knowledge went. We were proud to know that sitting upon the Bench of our Supreme Courts were men of incorrupt life, at least; judges who would discharge their duties between man and man without a suspicion that justice was bought at their hands. But here was a man charged with receiving bribes who had proclaimed some years before that he was zealous and jealous of the honour and the dignity and the purity of the court; that a mere word reflecting upon the integrity of the judges should be punished, not by the ordinary methods of law, but by resorting to the extreme and summary mode of attachment for contempt. With such a man, of course, hon. members will imagine that the moment a public charge was made in a public newspaper, that he had taken $5,000 as a bribe to corrupt justice, to divert the purity of the streams of justice, that moment the judge would rush into print to deny the charge, and would hale the offender before him to administer condign punishment. But was it so? Was a writ issued for libel so that the man might be tried before a jury and the libel exposed and punished? Was the fact denied? Was the charge that this judge had taken $5,000 to pervert justice ever challenged or denied? Was an attachment moved for, or a criminal information applied for, or an indictment preferred? No. Absolute silence was maintained. No libel suit was brought. No criminal information was preferred. No indictment was instituted. No denial was made from the Bench of the Supreme Court. Silence, absolute silence in the face of that terrible charge—one of the most terrible that ever was preferred against a judge in a British colony. Absolute silence was maintained. But when the poor culprit was brought up for having reflected upon Judge Tuck, some six years previously in declaring that he had intervened because justice was not wanted; then this man who was accused of taking bribes to pervert justice, took his seat upon the Bench, and in the Queen's name administering the majesty of the law declared: John V. Ellis, I send you to prison for thirty days, not for having maligned me, for I won't say a word about your charge against me, but for having, six years previously, reflected upon the character of my colleague. There may be gentlemen in this House who can believe that the motives of Judge Palmer were the highest and most honourable. If so, I leave it to them to vindicate Judge Palmer's conduct. I cannot do it, Sir. I have come to the conclusion, for my part, that motives other than those which should animate judges when they ascend the Bench, to discharge the solemn duty of pronouncing sentence upon a prisoner, must have animated this judge upon that occasion. It is not human nature to suppose that he could be indifferent, in the face of such a charge. He was accused of the highest crime which a judge can commit, the crime of having sold justice. Is it possible that he could be indifferent in sentencing the man who made such a charge? I appeal to the sense of fair-play and justice which must animate the minds of hon. gentlemen on both sides, and I say: It is trifling and paltering with our common sense to state that a court, constituted with that man as one of its members could have done justice to poor Ellis. I ask the opinion of the House upon several points which I have summed up in my resolution. I say that when John Ellis was sent to prison—John Ellis, as pure-minded a man, as noble a man, as honest a man, as fair-minded a man, as there exists in the city of St. John; when he was dragged into a criminal cell and sentenced to thirty days in New Brunswick jail, I say that there rang out from one end of this land to the other a stream of execration and condemnation upon the court that pronounced such a sentence. I say that John Ellis had the sympathy of the highest men of all classes and creeds and politics in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. WELDON. He had not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do you say that he had not?

Mr. WELDON. He had not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say that he had. I say that some of them ostentatiously went out of their way to exhibit that sympathy. I say that the Lieutenant-Governor of the province travelled from St. John to Fredericton and visited the poor fellow in his cell that he might publicly express his sympathy. I say that the Lord Bishop of the diocese visited him with the same object, at the same time, and in the same way. I say that the magistrates and the leading citizens exhibited that sympathy, and I say that outside of a few men whose politics are so biassed that they have no sympathy for any man opposed to them, the whole province went out in sympathy to John V. Ellis. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) can only go so far as to say that Mr. Ellis had not his sympathy, but he will find it hard to prove that Mr. Ellis had not the sympathy of the rest of the community. What do the press say, Sir? I need not quote from the press supposed to be in sympathy with the Liberal party. We know that there was not one paper silent from British Columbia to Cape Breton. The whole newspaper press rang out its denunciation in the strongest and severest terms against this unjust and cruel sentence. But I am proud to say it was not confined to the Liberal press. The Conservative party press rose above party considerations. They understood that something more was involved in this matter than a mere party triumph. They understood that the liberty of the press was at stake—the right of a public man to express his public views on public questions when justice was outraged; and I am proud to say that in numerous instances the press of the country rose to the occasion and expressed their sympathy with Mr. Ellis in the strongest possible terms. The Newcastle 'Advocate' said:

We consider the sentence an excessive one, considering the trouble and expense the accused has been put to in defending his action. The payment of the costs would appear to have been punishment enough for the offence and the Supreme Court Bench of this province would have sustained their dignity by the verdict of guilty of contempt of court without accompanying it with a fine and imprisonment.

The Fredericton 'Gleaner,' a Conservative paper, said the public would not approve of the Supreme Court's action, and demanded the repeal of such powers by the court. It added that Mr. Ellis, whose influence had ever been for good and at the service of his country, was sent to jail without the option of a trial by jury. Proceeding, the 'Gleaner' said:

In the tilt which took place between Judge Palmer and Mr. Weldon, Mr. Ellis's counsel, the judge declared that public opinion until crystallized into law would never influence him in the discharge of his duties. This is very proper ground for Mr. Justice Palmer to take in preparing a judgment. In imposing sentence, however, the case is widely different. That is a matter entirely in the discretion of the judge or court, and in that case the court has a right to consult, or to be influenced by, public opinion.

The Quebec 'Chronicle' said:

It finally reached the full bench of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. The newspaper critic was there, practically at the mercy of gentlemen who were really his accusers, triers and executioners. He goes to prison for his opinions, and though he will suffer personally, for a time, he will have the satisfaction of seeing his name recorded, as the last man in Canada who will be obliged to submit to such incarceration for an offence which is not criminal. The law must be changed. Common sense is against the judge in this case. This is not the first time that independent and thinking men have gone to prison for their opinions. But it should be the last time. Canada is too great a country to endow any man, whether he wears the ermine or not, with despotic powers.

The Montreal 'Star,' an independent Conservative paper, said :

The spectacle of a man, who is generally known to be a plucky and a conscientious journalist, hauled off to prison, in spite of a crown of gray hair, is not likely to put down "contempt of court." * * The dignity of the Bench will not gain by always invoking its full powers of punishment against honest critics.

The Montreal 'Witness,' which is an independent paper, though leaning to the Liberal side, spoke in equally strong terms. The Ottawa 'Journal,' which is an independent Conservative paper, said :

But fearless of criticism of a judge's actions and decisions, and as full of freedom of criticism of a judge personally as of any other public man, are equally necessary to the public welfare, and should be limited by precisely the law which limits them in the case of other public men, namely the law of libel. Apart from the interests of justice, a judge is no better than any other man. Personally, he is no more infallible. His right therefore to a weapon which implies infallibility should be resolutely questioned. The people should make unmistakable their feeling that the law of contempt must only defend, as the Privy Council says, the courses of justice, not the feelings of judges.

The Toronto 'Mail,' also an independent Conservative paper, said :

That a judge should submit to systematic defamation no one will contend; but when his judgment on a political question has been challenged in the press, he need not be in haste to consign his assailants to jail, for the party which approves of his decision will be certain to acquaint the public of its wisdom, thus more fully and more thoroughly vindicating him than any amount of imprisonment can. It is not probable that the New Brunswick judges will be congratulated upon their course with regard to Mr. Ellis. The respect and honour which the courts of the land challenge and receive are based upon the wisdom and impartiality of the Bench, and not upon the the readiness of the judges to open the jail doors to their critics.

The Fredericton 'Farmer,' a Conservative paper, said :

Though contending that the language used in the article was unnecessarily severe takes exception to "the manner and form" of the trial and proceedings, supports the demand for trial by jury in such cases, and not by the "judges of a court against whom the offence is said to have been committed." The time has gone by, or should be gone by at least, when a man may be thrown into prison without a fair and impartial trial by his peers, and without the opportunity to offer evidence in defence or justification of his act. The judges should be, and we trust are, men above suspicion of wrong-doing, and every protection should be thrown around the court, which holds in its hands the safeguard of society, but at the same time the law furnishes ample means for the punishment of judge insultors, in the same manner that other offenders are dealt with, and without recourse to the mode of trial adopted in Mr. Ellis's case. Sometimes it is difficult for newspaper writers to draw the line neatly between legitimate criticism, and unfair comment, even in referring to courts and judges. We have seen allegations against a judge, which, if true, ought to drive him from the Bench, and yet no action was taken to disprove the damaging statements made. Perhaps some judges are more sensitive than others.

I merely quote these few extracts to show that not only was public opinion, so far as it could be gathered, in full sympathy with Mr. Ellis, but the newspaper press, which voiced public opinion, the independent press of the country, were strong in their denunciations of the arbitrary and cruel action of the judge in inflicting this sentence upon him. And now, Sir, I will just ask the attention of the House, in conclusion, to the points which I ask it to admit. The resolution asks the House to condemn the high-handed outrage by which a band of conspirators deprived the electors of Queen's County of their rights, and returned a man to represent them in Parliament who was not elected. That condemnation, I believe, ought to receive the support of every member of this House. Be it remembered that the action of Dunn on that occasion was denounced by every judge on the Bench in giving judgment in the case. Every one of them held that the conduct of the returning officer was wrong, and indefensible; and I have yet to hear a lawyer whose reputation is worth anything stand up in this House or elsewhere, and say that the conduct of that officer was anything else than a wicked and indefensible outrage. I think I am right, therefore, in calling upon the House, as the judges and the legal fraternity have condemned it, to condemn as a violation of justice that action in sending a man here who was not elected and keeping out the man who was elected. I ask the House, secondly, to condemn the action of the judges who in this arbitrary and summary way punished Mr. Ellis for an alleged contempt of court. If he erred by going further than he ought to have gone in a fair and honest criticism, the judge should have resorted to one or other of the methods I have referred to, under which the defendant would have had a fair trial before impartial judges and impartial jurymen and not by men who acted as a combination of prosecutors, judges and jury, in opposition to the principles laid down by Sir George Jessel, Lord Justice Mellish, Mr. Justice Matthew, Lord Fitzgerald, and a host of other English authorities. I ask, lastly, that that sentence should be pronounced excessive and entirely unnecessary. Considering the excitement which existed at the time, considering the political outrage which had been perpetrated, and which Mr. Ellis was condemning, and considering all the circumstances, very great allowance should be made for strong language, and all these circumstances, which in an action for libel before a jury would be pleaded in extenuation and would have their effect, should, in a case like this, be considered by the judges. And without determining any of the legal questions, and I have avoided determining any of the legal questions—the right to issue a writ of prohibition or to proceed to punish by contempt in this particular way—I claim that the severity of the sentence was absolutely unjustified, and I would, therefore, move :

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof :—“in February, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, a writ had issued for the election of a member to represent the electoral district of Queen's County, in the House of Commons of Canada, directed to John R. Dunn as returning officer :

That the fifteenth day of February was the day appointed for the nomination of candidates, and the twenty-second for the polling day :

That Mr. George G. King and Mr. George F. Baird were nominated as candidates on the fifteenth day of February : that Mr. George G. King's nomination was signed by upwards of twenty-five duly qualified electors of the district, and was also assented to and signed by him, and verified by the oath of T. Medley Wetmore, who, also at that time, paid the returning officer the deposit of two hundred dollars required by law, and that he then gave T. Medley Wetmore a certificate stating that he had received from him a nomination paper of Mr. George G. King signed by upwards of twenty-five persons, and signed by Mr. George G. King as consenting thereto, and that he had also received a deposit of two hundred dollars as by law required :

That a poll having been demanded, an election was held on the twenty-second day of February, Mr. George G. King and Mr. George F. Baird being the candidates :

That on the fifth day of March, the day fixed for declaring the result of the polling, the returning officer stated the number of votes given for each candidate at the several polling districts ; but before announcing the result, Mr. George F. Baird's agent objected that Mr. George G. King had not been legally nominated, because the deposit of two hundred dollars was not made by his duly appointed agent ; and that all the votes given for him were therefore null and void, and should be rejected, and that Mr. George F. Baird should be declared duly elected ;

That the returning officer adopted this view and declared Mr. George F. Baird duly elected, though it was admitted Mr. George G. King had the majority of the votes polled ;

That on the seventh day of March, on behalf of Mr. George G. King, an application was made to Judge Steadman on an affidavit substantially stating the above facts and also stating the belief of the deponent that one of the deputy returning officers had improperly counted the ballots, and that another returning officer had improperly rejected one or more ballots in counting them ;

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

That on this affidavit an order was made by Judge Steadman appointing the eleventh day of March, at the court house in Queen's County, as the time and place for holding a recount of the votes ;

That thereupon, on the ninth day of March, Mr. George F. Baird's counsel obtained from Mr. Justice Tuck, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, an order nisi requiring Judge Steadman and Mr. George G. King to show cause at the then next term of the court why a writ of prohibition should not issue to prohibit the said Judge Steadman from proceeding to make a recount of the votes and ordering that, in the meantime, all proceedings relating to the said recount should be stayed.

That in Easter term, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven, of the said Supreme Court of New Brunswick, counsel on behalf of said George F. Baird obtained a rule nisi for an attachment against John V. Ellis, editor and publisher of the St. John "Globe" newspaper, for contempt of the said court for publishing in the issue of the said newspaper of the tenth, eleventh and twelfth days of March, 1887, certain articles under the captions of "The Queen's Election," "Government by Fraud," and Queen's County," wherein it was claimed were comments, reflections and innuendos on the applicant George F. Baird on the said order nisi for a prohibition granted by said Mr. Justice Tuck, and on said Mr. Justice Tuck himself, and in which articles it was claimed that Mr. John V. Ellis had been guilty of contempt of court in scandalizing the court, and particularly Mr. Justice Tuck, in calumniating and villifying the applicant, and in commenting in the matters of said election, said recount and said order nisi for a prohibition in a manner calculated to prejudice the public before the hearing and judicial decision of said matters ;

That subsequently the rule nisi for an attachment for contempt was made absolute by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, against the said John V. Ellis, and he was adjudged guilty of contempt for having published such articles, but sentence deferred to admit of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada ;

That in February, eighteen hundred and ninety-three, the Supreme Court of Canada delivered judgment to the effect that no appeal would lie to it in such cases of alleged contempt, and the proceedings were consequently remitted back to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, which latter court did, on the fourteenth day of October, eighteen hundred and ninety-three, sentence the said John V. Ellis, for his alleged contempt, to pay a fine of two hundred dollars, to be imprisoned in the common jail of the county of York for the space of thirty days and until the fine was paid, and further to pay the costs to be taxed as between party and party ;

That more than six years had elapsed between the publication of the articles containing the alleged contempt and the delivery of said sentence, during which time all the proceedings in the several courts to which the said articles had reference had ended and been finally disposed of ;

That in the opinion of this House, the action of the returning officer Dunn in refusing to return George G. King, who had polled a large majority of the votes at an election duly held and in returning Mr. George F. Baird, the minority candidate, instead, was a gross violation of law and justice, a wicked and indefensible outrage upon the electors of Queen's County, New Brunswick, and a precedent pregnant with such danger to the future political government of Canada as to have demanded and justified on the part of the newspaper press the severest possible condemnation and censure :

That in the further opinion of this House, the jurisdiction claimed by the judges of Superior Courts of Record of punishing by fine and commitment to prison for constructive contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited and exercised by judges, who are at the same time judges of the law, of the fact, of the intention and of the sentence, and whose decisions are given without the aid of a jury and without being subject to review, is opposed to the genius and spirit of constitutional liberty and ought never to be exercised where any other pertinent remedy can be found or recourse had to any other method of obtaining justice :

That the punishment inflicted by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick upon John V. Ellis, in the month of October, eighteen hundred and ninety-three, for an alleged constructive contempt of court contained in articles published by him on the Queen's County election herein referred to, was arbitrary, excessive, inimical to the public interest and deserving of censure, and in so far as it added costs to the fine and imprisonment without precedent.

I may say that the facts which I have recited in this resolution are taken almost verbatim from those recited in the judgment given by Sir John Allen.

Mr. HAZEN. In which case ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In one of the two cases.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman, in the preamble of that resolution, has made a statement as to what the affidavit of Mr. King contained, on which Judge Steadman granted the order for a recount. What is his authority for that statement ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Copied almost verbatim from the ex parte Baird report, 29 New Brunswick Reports, page 163. Whatever opinions we might entertain or different conclusions we might form upon the facts, I thought it was absolutely essential to have the facts expressed correctly, and I thought I could best express them by copying them from the statement of facts contained in the official reports, and especially as they are recited by the learned Chief Justice himself. I have not deviated in any respect from the facts as they are judicially recited by the Chief Justice and the reporter in these two cases—27 New Brunswick Reports, page 202 ; 29 New Brunswick Reports, page 162. At the foot of page 163 is the reference the hon. gentleman asked me for. Although there are many other parts of the case on which I would like to have commented at greater length—for instance, I would like to have quoted the decisions given by Chief Justice Allen and Mr. Justice King, upon the regularity of the proceedings, I do not care to take up longer the time of the House, except, if the House will pardon me, just to make that quotation. I want to show that there can be no possible doubt that in the opinion of the judges who heard the case argued, all the proceedings on Mr. King's part were correctly and legally taken, and that Mr. King should have been returned as elected for the county of Queen's. On page 175 of the New Brunswick Reports to which I have referred, Sir John Allen, Chief Justice, is thus reported :

I can see no objection whatever to the nomination paper presented for Mr. King. All the provisions of the statute respecting nomination papers were complied with. It was signed by upwards of twenty-five electors ; it contained the written consent of Mr. King to his nomination : the deposit of $200 was paid to the returning officer at the time ; Mr. Wetmore, who produced the nomination paper to the returning officer, made oath to the facts required to be sworn to by the 21st section ; and the returning officer received the paper and deposit, and gave Mr. Wetmore a certificate to that effect, and granted a poll for taking the votes of the electors for the two candidates. If the nomination was insufficient the returning officer no doubt might have rejected it, but he did not do so. On the contrary, he received it and adjudged it sufficient, and every act which he did at that time showed that he had so decided. I think, even assuming his decision to have been wrong (which, however, I do not) his power of adjudicating upon the sufficiency of the nomination paper was at an end when he accepted it and granted a poll ; and he had no right afterwards at the time for adding up of the votes, to decide that Mr. King's nomination was illegal, and that the votes polled for him were null and void, and therefore that Mr. Baird was the only candidate legally nominated.

On page 178 he goes on to say further :

I will now consider the grounds on which the decision of the returning officer was arrived at in this case. It is admitted that it was because Mr. Wetmore, who presented Mr. King's nomination paper and paid the deposit, had not been appointed Mr. King's agent, and that no written authority so appointing him had been delivered to the returning officer. In my opinion no such authority was necessary to perfect the nomination. * * * In the present case—

He goes on to say on page 180 :

—Mr. King was nominated in every respect in accordance with what the Act required, and the returning officer treated him as a candidate throughout the election. So that there was no justification under these words in section 118 for declaring that he was not a candidate, and that the votes given for him were null and void.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. What was the date of that decision ?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) February 13, 1890. I want to show the House that the proceeding which Mr. Ellis condemned was held by the Chief Justice, who heard the case afterwards, to be without any justification whatever, that Mr. King's nomination paper, and the proceedings on his behalf were entirely regular, that Mr. King was a legal candidate in every respect, and that the objection taken to him was absolutely futile. They might as well have taken any other objection; it would have been equally good for the conspirators in this case.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did you not punish the returning officer for doing an illegal act?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The judge had not the returning officer before him. That is part of the complaint—that the wrong man was punished. The man who committed the act which the judge said was without justification in law or fact goes free—

Mr. SPROULE. But not one of you had the courage to call for his punishment if he did wrong.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am speaking only to the one point. I want to remove doubts that might exist in the minds of hon. gentlemen as to the nature of these proceedings. Mr. Justice King who gives judgment and who agrees that Judge Tuck had the right to issue a writ of prohibition, upon the point of Mr. King's nomination paper being right and the returning officer having acted entirely wrong, is quite clear. He says:

I think that the deposit was well made by the person who produced the nomination paper to the returning officer, and that section 118 is inapplicable. I therefore am of the opinion that the returning officer was wrong in determining that Mr. King was not legally nominated.

Mr. McCARTHY. What judgment is that?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The judgment in ex parte Baird, 1890.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Making the rule absolute for prohibition.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not the case of contempt?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Judgment for contempt is given in Vol. 27; the other is in Vol. 29. I am not going to argue whether Judge Tuck was right in issuing prohibition or not. As the judges said in the courts below, that is entirely beside the question, it had nothing to do with the question of contempt which they had before them. I have endeavoured to show that on the facts of the case Mr. King was entirely right and Mr. Baird and Mr. Dunn were entirely wrong, and that the man who commented, and properly commented, in the severest language upon their conduct was haled before the judges and condemned as a criminal without trial by a jury, subjected to a heavy fine and made pay the costs of one of the culprits. In view of these facts I think I can fairly ask the concurrence of this House in the resolution I proposed, and in the condemnation by that resolution of these parties.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Mr. HAZEN. I regret that I cannot conscientiously congratulate the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) on the speech which he has just delivered to this House. We would naturally have expected a lawyer of his eminence in the province from which he comes, to approach the discussion of this question in a fair and judicial spirit, but he has done so in a most violent, a most unfair and a most partisan spirit. The hon. gentleman commenced his speech by saying he had no disposition to attack what Mr. Justice Tuck had done, no disposition to attack what the Supreme Court of New Brunswick had done; but in the concluding part of his speech, when he departed from the question before the House and indulged in an attack upon a gentleman who is not now a member of that Bench, it must have been perfectly clear to every one within the sound of his voice that the object of his speech was not to attack what Mr. Justice Tuck had done—because I think that from the first to the last everybody must have been satisfied as they listened to that hon. gentleman that he was utterly at a loss for an argument to attack what Mr. Justice Tuck had done—but his whole object in addressing this House was to attach odium, and, if possible, to attach disgrace, to the Bench in the province of New Brunswick, the sister province to the province from which he comes. While I cannot congratulate the hon. gentleman upon the spirit he has displayed in discussing this question to-day, I can congratulate him upon the ingenuity he has shown in attempting to divert the attention of this House and this country from the matter which is under discussion, and which we have been led to expect by the newspapers for several days past, he would bring up for discussion, in order that he might censure the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick for sentencing Mr. Ellis for contempt of court. I say I can congratulate him on his ingenuity in attempting to divert attention from that issue by raking up again the Queen's County election of 1887, and indulging in the most unwarranted abuse of the gentleman who, to-day, by the votes of the people of Queen's, represents that county in the House of Commons, and indulging in the most unwarranted abuse of the gentleman who was returning officer in that election. Mr. Speaker, I say, and I say it advisedly, that the hon. gentleman was utterly without excuse, that he has not one scintilla of justification for his course in this House in speaking of Mr. John R. Dunn as a scoundrel. The hon. gentleman argued that the Supreme Court should not have punished Mr. Ellis, even if he had committed an offence, because that offence was committed some six odd years ago; but the hon. gentleman follows a different rule when he comes to discuss the conduct of Mr. Dunn in a case where, even if he had done wrong, the wrong was committed some six odd years ago. He thinks it is perfectly fair and legitimate to stand up in this House to-day and stigmatize Mr. Dunn as a scoundrel. Sir, over six years ago, Mr. John R. Dunn appeared at the bar of this House and was interrogated concerning his connection with the Queen's County election of 1887, and so fairly and frankly did he answer the questions put to him, so well did he undergo the artillery levelled against him by the hon. gentlemen opposite, that he was allowed to leave the House uncondemned, and hon. gentlemen opposite never had the courage to move a resolution concerning Mr. Dunn for what he did in that election.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I moved a resolution myself.

Mr. HAZEN. I am stating what I believe is a fact, and what hon. gentlemen who were present at that time tell me now is a fact. Now, Sir, in view of the fact that Mr. Dunn was brought to the bar of the House in 1887, when the whole matter was threshed out, and when Mr. Dunn answered satisfactorily all the questions that were put to him, I ask, is it decent to-day for the hon. member for Queen's to get up in this House six years afterwards and call Mr. Dunn a scoundrel, and use language of invective fit only for a fishwife? I feel it my duty to say this, that Mr. John R. Dunn is not now, and never was, a scoundrel, and such language as was used by the hon. gentleman could never be fairly applied to him. I have known Mr. Dunn for many years. I knew him as a young man at the university with me, I have known him working his way through college in order to get an education under circumstances that would have daunted many men of less courage. I have known him since then as teacher in the grammar school in the county of Queen's, N.B., in the town where he is said to have committed this great crime; and I have known him since then as a member of the New Brunswick bar, and as a result of my long acquaintance with him, I say that I do not believe that either now or at any other time could he be fairly stigmatized, either in this House or elsewhere as a scoundrel. What was it Mr. Dunn did? At Gagetown the case was argued before him by counsel, and it was contended that in the election for Queen's Mr. King had not been legally nominated, and Mr. Dunn so decided. I am not saying that Mr. Dunn was right in his decision, far be from me to do so; but I believe that in giving that decision Mr. Dunn was acting only from honest motives, that there is not a tittle of evidence to show that he was influenced by any corrupt or improper motive in giving the judgment he rendered, and if he was wrong he would not be the first man sitting in the capacity of a judge who made a mistake in construing a statute or rule of law. The hon. gentleman proceeded to make a most unwarranted attack on the gentleman who now occupies the position of member for Queen's, N.B. That hon. gentleman is well able to defend himself and needs no defence at my hands. But I think it is proper for me to say, in view of the abuse heaped on him to-day by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), that in the community where he lives and where he carries on an extensive business, in the city of St. John, there is no business man whose word is held in higher regard than the word of George F. Baird.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I made no reference to Mr. Baird's commercial reputation or character, or anything outside of the particular point we have under discussion.

Mr. HAZEN. No. The hon. gentleman knew better than to refer to him in specific language.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would not do it.

Mr. HAZEN. But the hon. gentleman spoke in language so extravagant and abusive that any one listening to the remarks, and not knowing the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird), would come to the conclusion that he was everything else but an honest man. I say the standing of Mr. Baird to-day in the community where he lives and does business, in which he goes in and out earning his daily bread, is as high and as good as is the position of the hon. gentleman who has so viciously and abusively attacked him to-day in the community in which he lives, and in saying that I do not say so with a desire to make an attack on my hon. friend, but I am simply stating the fact that Mr. Baird is a man who is regarded as a good citizen, and the abuse showered on him to-day is utterly unwarranted. Why, the hon. member who has just addressed the House stated that Mr. Baird would not have dared to have gone down to the county of Queen's in 1887, and appeared before a jury of the people knowing the circumstances of this case, and that if he had done so he would have been driven from the county. What do we find to have been the case? That after the session of 1887 Mr. Baird resigned his seat in this House, went down to the county of Queen's, N. B., among the people where my hon. friend says he would have been driven out of the county if he had dared to go into it for election purposes, and the people of Queen's County, knowing all the circumstances and all the facts of the case in which he was the principal party, sent Mr. Baird back to Parliament as their representative by a majority of over 100 votes. How utterly idle it is in view of that fact for the hon. gentleman to declare that Mr. Baird dare not face the people of Queen's. How absurd it is for the hon. gentleman to make such a statement; how idle it is to make such an assertion in view of the fact that Mr. Baird went back for election and was again returned. And not only was Mr. Baird elected in 1888, having voluntarily resigned his seat, after he had been abused from one end of Canada to the other as no other public man had ever been abused before, but he was again returned by the people of Queen's in 1891. However, I felt it desirable to refer to this matter merely in passing, as Mr. Baird requires no defence at my hands. But there is a gentleman who I feel I am warranted in defending from the most wretched aspersion cast on him, and that is the gentleman who now occupies the position of Chief Justice of New Brunswick, Sir John C. Allen. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) commenced by complimenting that learned judge, as he very properly could do, because no more high-minded man ever sat on the Bench in New Brunswick, or on the Bench in any other country. But the hon. member went out of his way to insult that learned judge by stating that his judgment in the case of Baird and Ellis was influenced by a stronger mind, the mind of Mr. Justice Palmer. Did it ever occur to the hon. gentleman that the judgments given in this case were rendered in 1888 and 1889, the first judgment finding Mr. Ellis guilty of contempt, and the second judgment, when the case came back for interrogatories after the Supreme Court refused to hear the appeal the first judgment being given nearly six years ago, at a time when Chief Justice Allen was in the possession of the most splendid health, and when his intellectual and physical vigour were beyond question? And further than that, the reason which the hon. gentleman said led Mr. Justice Palmer to influence the Chief Justice was an attack made on himself by Mr. Ellis; yet that attack was not made on Mr. Justice Palmer for years after those judgments were given in 1888 and in 1889.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I referred to the sentence.

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman says he referred to the sentence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Certainly.

Mr. HAZEN. But the important part of the case is the judgment given by the court. When those judgments were given, and I will read from Chief Justice Allen's judgment before I resume my seat, the Chief Justice was in full intellectual and physical vigour, and in those judgments, finding that Mr. Ellis had been guilty of contempt of court, the Chief Justice and the other judges, Mr. Justice Wetmore, Mr. Justice King, who is now a member of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Palmer and Mr. Justice Fraser, now the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, all agreed, and I make the assertion here, although it may be looked upon as sectional for me to do so, but I do not make it in that view, that I believe at that time there was not on any Bench in any of the provinces, men of greater ability, better lawyers, and more thoroughly qualified to give legal decisions on that or any other point that came before it.

Mr. HAZEN.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. HAZEN. Mr. Speaker, before the House rose at six o'clock, I had pointed out, that although Mr. Dunn, the returning officer for the county of Queen's, N.B., at the general election of 1887, had been called before the Bar of this House and had been interrogated by hon. gentlemen opposite concerning his connection with the Queen's County election in 1887; that yet, hon. gentlemen opposite, after Mr. Dunn had been interrogated, had failed to move any vote of censure upon his conduct in that election. When I made that statement I was interrupted by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies)—who, I regret to say, is not now in his seat—who informed the House that the statement made by me was not correct, as he (Mr. Davies) himself had during the session of 1887 moved a vote of censure upon Mr. Dunn, the returning officer, for his connection with the Queen's County election. Since the House took recess I have looked up the record, and I find from the Journals of the House of Commons, 1887, that the statement which I made was absolutely and in every respect correct, and that the statement made by the hon. member (Mr. Davies), to the effect that he had himself moved a resolution of censure upon Mr. Dunn, was incorrect. Now, in order to show that I made a perfectly correct statement, and that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) was incorrect when he interrupted me, I will read from the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons for the year 1887. I find at page 205 of the Journals, under date 1st of June, an amendment moved by the hon. member (Mr. Davies) touching this matter, and that was the only motion he made in reference to it during that session or at any other session. There was before the House an amendment moved by the present Minister of Justice and seconded by Mr. White, of Cardwell:

That all the words after "That" where it occurs in the first line to the end of the question be left out and the words "The House adopts the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections on the case of the Queen's County, N.B., election" be inserted instead thereof.

I find that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) moved in amendment to this, and that was the only motion which he made in connection with this matter. I quote the following from the Journals, page 205, 1st of June, 1887:—

The House then resumed the consideration of the amendment proposed to be made to the question respecting the Queen's County election.

And the question on the amendment being again proposed ;

Mr. Davis moved in amendment to the said proposed amendment, seconded by Mr. Ellis,

That all the words after "That" in the amendment be left out and the words "at the late election held in the county of Queen's, N. B., for the House of Commons, two candidates, namely, George G. King and George F. Baird, were nominated, a poll demanded and granted and duly held, and on the summing up of the votes polled, the candidate : George G. King, had a majority of 61 votes. That the returning officer nevertheless returned the defeated candidate the said George F. Baird as elected, and that it was his duty instead to have returned the said George G. King, who received the said majority of votes, as the member elected ; and that the said returning officer (by name John R. Dunn) be forthwith summoned to attend at the Bar of this House and amend his returns accordingly," inserted instead thereof.

That is, I suppose, what the hon. member from Queen's (Mr. Davies) says is a vote of censure upon the action of the returning officer. I submit that that is not a vote of censure at all. It is simply a resolution that Mr. Dunn be summoned to the Bar of this House to amend his return. That motion is indeed a curious vote of censure upon the returning officer. I state again that the records of this Parliament bear out conclusively the assertion that I made, and for which I was corrected by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) : that the members of the Opposition of this House, in 1887, after hearing Mr. Dunn before the Bar of this House, and after having the fullest opportunity of interrogating him concerning his action in the Queen's County election ; were so satisfied with what he said that they moved no vote of censure upon his conduct, and Mr. Dunn was allowed to leave this House without any such vote of censure being moved. Now, Mr. Speaker, having by way of introduction to the subject made those remarks which were called from me by the extraordinary statement made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies)—who, instead of devoting his time to a fair discussion of the legal points involved in this matter, has gone out of his way to make a most vile and partisan attack upon Mr. Dunn, and Mr. Baird, and upon Judge Palmer—I shall now, Sir, endeavour to proceed to a fair discussion of the question which has come before this House, the question being : Was the Supreme Court of New Brunswick in the right, and did they act in accordance with law, when they found Mr. John V. Ellis, editor of the St. John 'Globe,' guilty of contempt of court ? I will endeavour to discuss that question without bias and without partisanship. I am well aware that this Parliament is, perhaps, not the best place in the world to discuss a nice legal question or a question involving nice points of law. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I think I will be able to convince you, and to convince the House, that in acting as they did the Supreme Court of New Brunswick acted entirely within the law, acted in a manner that cannot be successfully attacked from a legal standpoint, and further than that, I will prove that they are not open to the aspersions and accusations made against them to the effect that they acted from partisan motives and in a high-handed and arbitrary manner actuated by feelings of revenge. Let me lay before the House the facts of the case from the time of the Queen's County election in 1887 down to the imprisonment of Mr. Ellis. In the year 1887, as every member in this Chamber very well knows, there was an election held in the county of Queen's, N. B., the candidates being Mr. George G. King and Mr. George F. Baird, and at that election Mr. Baird polled 1,130 votes, and Mr. King polled 1,191 votes, Mr. King having a plurality of 61 of the votes cast. That point is not disputed. On nomination day the point was taken before the deputy returning officer, by counsel acting on behalf of Mr. Baird : that Mr. King had not been duly in nomination, that there had been a defect in the proceedings by which he had been nominated, that he had never been in nomination, that, therefore, he had never been a legal candidate, and that being the case, that there was legally only one candidate in the field, that candidate being Mr. Baird, the legality of whose nomination was not attacked, and that Mr. Baird was virtually elected by acclamation. That was the point taken before the returning officer on declaration day in the year 1887. The returning officer, Mr. Dunn, rightly or wrongly—I do not feel called upon to argue that question now—decided that Mr. King had not been legally a candidate, that his deposit had not been legally filed, and so he declared Mr. Baird elected. There was never any dispute as to the number of the votes that were polled at the election. After that judgment was given by the returning officer, counsel acting for Mr. King applied to Judge Steadman, judge of the county court for the district in which is situated the county of Queen's, and obtained from Judge Steadman an order dated the 7th of March, which was served upon Mr. Baird, and which order was for a recount and a final addition of the votes given at the said election. On March 9th, counsel acting for Mr. Baird obtained from Mr. Justice King, judge of the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick, a rule nisi for a writ of prohibition, calling upon Judge Steadman and upon Mr. King to show cause, on the first day of the following term—then not far distant—why a writ of prohibition should not issue to prohibit Judge Steadman from proceeding to make a recount and final addition of the votes, and from certifying the result of such recount to the returning officer, and that in the meantime the proceedings relating to the said recount should be stayed. The matter presents this position at this time: That an application had been made to Judge Steadman on the part of Mr. King for a recount and a summing up of the ballots cast, which order had been granted by Judge Steadman and had been served upon Mr. Baird. Then we have an order nisi—and it is important to bear in mind that this order was a rule nisi, because a different impression prevailed in this country for some time, and prevails to some extent to-day—calling upon Judge Steadman and Mr. Baird to show cause before the Supreme Court in banc the first day of the following term why a writ of prohibition should not be issued to prevent Judge Steadman going on with the recount, in the meantime all proceedings to be stayed. Therefore it was open to Mr. Justice Steadman and his counsel, or to Mr. King and his counsel, on the first day of the following term, to appear before the full bench of the province of New Brunswick and show cause, if there was any cause, why the writ of prohibition should not issue. If they showed that Judge Steadman had a right to issue the order for a recount, the writ of prohibition would be refused. If, on the other hand, it was decided that Judge Steadman had no right to issue the order for a recount the rule would be made absolute for the issue of the writ of prohibition preventing him from doing so. Thus we had a pending legal proceeding, and while it was pending, and while the matter was before the court, with a fair opportunity of being argued without prejudice to anybody, then it was that the St. John 'Globe,' edited by Mr. Ellis, published the articles for which the rule for an attachment for contempt of court was moved against him; and those articles I will submit to any layman as well as to any lawyer in this House, were calculated to prejudice that legal proceeding, and I think every lawyer in this House will agree with me, constituted a very clear contempt of court indeed. It may be said, as it has been said, that it may have been thought by Mr. Ellis that it was not merely a rule nisi which the court had issued, but an absolute writ of prohibition to prevent Judge Steadman going on with the recount. Had that been the case, it would have been easy for Mr. Ellis at a later date to state so and to express regret that he had been led into error; but he did not express any regret. I say that if you search the books and authorities through from end to end, you will be unable to find a clearer case of contempt of court than was furnished by those articles which were written by Mr. Ellis. They accused a judge of the Supreme Court of desiring to prevent justice being done, of intervening for that purpose, of acting from corrupt and partisan motives, of dragging the ermine in the dust, and, impliedly, if not directly, of acting not in the capacity of a judge when he issued that order, but in some other capacity. Now let me again read the first of these articles, though it was read this afternoon by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). On the 10th of March, the day following the issue by Mr. Justice Tuck, of the rule nisi for a writ of prohibition, which had the effect of bringing the whole matter up for fair consideration before the Supreme Court Bench, we find the following articles appearing in the St. John 'Daily Globe':—

THE QUEEN'S ELECTION.

People who know something about the course of political events were not surprised when they read in the papers this morning that Mr. Justice Tuck had issued a writ of prohibition to Judge Steadman of the county court, prohibiting him from proceeding to recount the ballots in the Queen's election. Nevertheless, the fact that such a writ has been issued adds fuel to the fire of discontent now burning fiercely over this whole business. The trick by which the voice of the majority in Queen's is silenced, is condemned all over the country in unmistakable terms, as a flagrant outrage upon popular rights and as a grossly immoral transaction. The appeal to Judge Steadman for a judicial reconsideration was made to a man of fair and honest judgment, who, if he had political leanings at all would have them towards the Conservative party, but who the people generally would trust to do what was fair. He might, therefore, be safely allowed to examine into the whole matter, and to do justice. But it is not justice that is wanted, and, therefore, Judge Tuck intervenes.

A clear attack upon Judge Tuck, implying that he was actuated by improper motives in granting the rule nisi for a writ of prohibition. Then, on the 11th of March, although in the meantime Mr. Ellis had time to find out whether the order was a rule nisi or not, I find, under the heading of "Government by Fraud," the following article:—

The attempt to deprive the electors of Queen's of their right to choose their own representative has succeeded for the moment. A returning officer who appears to be restrained by no moral consideration, and who appears to be incapable of judging between right and wrong, has selected Mr. Baird to sit in the House of Commons of Canada, although the majority of the electors rejected Mr. Baird. A judge assumes, if he does not usurp, the power to prevent a full investigation of the matter in time to remedy the evil, and the boast is made that two years must elapse before the man chosen by the majority can take his seat.

That I say is not the case. There was no power assumed or usurped to prevent the remedying of the evil. Then again, further on, we find:

There has just been an appeal to the people, out of which the administration has come weak and panting. Can it regain strength in the country through the fraud of returning officers? Can partisan judges give it vitality by degrading the ermine in its interest.

Then, on the 12th of March, I find an article in which it is stated :

We doubt if Tuck has any power to send such an order as a judge, but he may not have been acting in the capacity of a judge, but in some other capacity when he sent it. While Judge Tuck's order to the county judge is disobeyed because, as is generally conceded, Tuck went beyond his powers, the effect of his interference is to delay justice, and to prevent the will of the majority of the people from being carried out.

Now, I would submit to every lawyer in this House, as well as to every layman who has looked at the authorities at all, that a clearer case of contempt of court was never made out against any man than was made out against Mr. Ellis by these articles, which imputed most improper and dishonest motives to a judge of the Supreme Court, and which were published during the pendency of these legal proceedings in connection with the Queen's County election; and I submit that the law is that when a contempt of that kind is committed, and the attention of the court is called to it; and when the court, having fairly looked into the matter, and having given the party accused and his counsel every opportunity of presenting his case to the court, comes to the conclusion, as no court could help coming to the conclusion, that this was a clear contempt of court, calculated to prejudice and prejudge the proceedings then before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, then no other course was open to that court than to impose sentence upon the person who committed this contempt, provided he did not purge himself of the contempt in the meantime. From the very outset of these proceedings, had Mr. Ellis—and I believe he could have done it without any humiliation to himself—admitted to the court that he had written these articles, that he had written them under excitement and that he regretted it afterwards, the court would have accepted such an explanation and the matter would have come to an end. As a matter of fact, it is admitted by every one who knows anything about this matter, that at one time it was agreed that if such a statement were made by Mr. Ellis that would be acceptable to the Chief Justice, it would be accepted by everybody. A statement was prepared by Mr. Ellis which was acceptable to the Chief Justice, which it was intended should be read to the Supreme Court, and Mr. Ellis was prevented from presenting it, not by the acts of people who were pursuing him, as we are told, with partisan vindictiveness, but by the action of his own political friends, by the action of the St. John 'Daily Telegraph,' which, when it learned this, came out the next day with an article under flaming headlines, taunting Mr. Ellis with being on his knees to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick and with cowardice. The result was that Mr. Ellis concluded not to read in court the statement he had prepared, and the litigation went on, which it took five years to determine. Had he followed his calmer judgment, and he might well have done so without humiliating himself at all, because I submit the occasion was one on which such a course could have been taken without implying humiliation in any respect, or lowering Mr. Ellis in the slightest degree in the eyes of his fellow citizens, because we all know that men in the heat of political excitement often say things which they regret in their calmer moments—had Mr. Ellis read this statement, the matter would then and there have been settled. But not having done so, it seems to me that he has himself to blame for the long years of litigation and for the result which attended this matter. Now, there is no doubt whatever that, under the law, Mr. Ellis's act, in writing these articles, whether Judge Tuck was right or wrong in granting the rule nisi of prohibition—though for my part I do not see how his right to grant it can be called into question—was a contempt of court. Whether Judge Steadman was right or not in granting, in the first instance, the order for a recount, was a matter to be decided by the courts on the hearing of the rule nisi. And it was the attack Mr. Ellis made upon the judges concerning the proceedings then pending before the courts, which constituted a contempt of court. His attack was clearly a contempt of court, no matter whether the rule for a prohibition was properly granted or not, no matter whether Judge Steadman was right or not, but it may not be out of place to take up the time of this House for a brief space in discussing whether Judge Steadman had the right, under the statute which gave him the power to interfere in matters concerning elections, to order this recount, and whether Judge Tuck would have been justified in refusing the rule nisi when the application was made to him. In the first place, the right of a county judge to interfere in election matters is a right given him by statute. It is not a common law right, it is not an inherent right vested in his court, but a right which he possesses in virtue of the statutory power given him, and in the exercise of which he is strictly limited by statute. Let us see what was the position in which the Queen's County election matter stood. The only cases in which a county court judge has the right to order a recount under the statute, and the language of the statute is quite plain, are these. If there has been an improper summing up of the votes or an improper rejection or acceptance of ballots, then a recount will lie. In this case there was no such contention. The number of votes that had been cast was not in dispute. There was no question as to the improper summing up of votes or improper rejection or acceptance of ballots. But the whole point at issue was whether Mr. King had been legally in nomination, and the returning officer held that he was not. I will read to the House chapter 8, section 64, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, under the heading of "Recount or final additions by judge." which gives the power a county court judge has :

If it is made to appear on the affidavit of any credible witness, to the judge of the county court of any county or union of counties that such witness believes that any deputy returning officer at any election in such electoral district, in counting the votes—(1) has improperly counted; or (2) has improperly rejected any ballot papers of such election;—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. HAZEN. My learned and honourable friend says "hear, hear." but the language of the Act is "deputy returning officer."

—or (3) that any person voted at such election whose name was included on any list of voters used in such election, or whose name was excluded from any such list, and whose right to have his name so included on the said list, or the exclusion of whose name from such list, as the case may be, appeared by such list to be the subject of an appeal pending and undecided under the provisions of "the Electoral Franchise Act," or the Act passed in the session held in the 48th and 49th years of Her Majesty's reign and intituled: "An Act respecting the electoral franchise," and that judgment has been rendered on such appeal deciding that such person is not entitled to have his name so registered upon the said list, or that the name of such person was properly excluded therefrom, as the case may be; or (4) that the returning officer has improperly summed up the votes.

Not one of the cases mentioned in that Act arose in connection with the Queen's County election. It was not the action of the deputy returning officer which was complained of, but the action of the returning officer, John R. Dunn, in declaring that Mr. King was not a candidate. It was not complained that the deputy returning officer had improperly added the votes or improperly rejected or accepted ballots. The whole complaint was that the returning officer, Mr. John R. Dunn, decided that Mr. King was not a candidate at that election. Any man who considers without party bias the section I have read cannot help coming to the conclusion that there was not a case for a recount by a county court judge, that it was not a case where a county court judge was authorized by the statute to order a recount of the votes cast. What was done then? It may be said by hon. gentlemen in this House, not familiar with this question, that it would be a great injustice to Mr. King if he had no remedy and was bound to submit to the illegal act of the returning officer. But Mr. King had a remedy. He had ample remedy. That remedy is clearly given to Mr. King by means of a petition. I will deal with this in a few moments. If hon. gentlemen will look at chapter 9 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, the Controverted Elections Act, they will find that it makes ample provision for remedying the state of affairs complained of. That Act provides for the appointment of judges, who are, in the province of New Brunswick, the judges of the Supreme Court, to try election petitions, and defines their jurisdiction. Section 5 says :

A petition complaining of an undue return, or undue election of a member, or of no return, or of a double return, or of any unlawful act by any candidate not returned, by which he is alleged to have become disqualified to sit in the House of Commons at any election, may be presented to the court by any one or more of the following persons.

Then are given the names of the persons who may present such petitions. It is perfectly plain, therefore, from the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, that there was ample opportunity given to Mr. King, if wrong were done him, to have that wrong redressed. That was the position of affairs, and I contend that when Mr. Baird's counsel went to Mr. Justice Tuck, and pointed out to him these facts, and made the proper affidavits, Judge Tuck was not only justified in granting the rule nisi for a writ of prohibition, but would not have been justified in refusing. Mr. Justice Tuck did not at once grant that rule nisi. Knowing that the matter was one in which there was very considerable interest, knowing that a good deal of feeling had arisen in connection with the election, he took time to deliberate before making up his mind to grant the rule. He did more, he consulted with several of his brother judges, the appointment of one of whom to the Supreme Court of the Dominion a few months ago, was received with the applause and acclaim of almost every newspaper and every public man in the Dominion, irrespective of party politics. Now, the rule nisi was granted, and one would have thought that it would have been the simplest matter in the world to have waited a little while until the court met, and to have gone before the court and argued the matter, and had a judicial decision. But instead of doing that, Mr. Ellis rushed into print and bitterly attacked the judge who had issued the rule against him, accusing him of corrupt and improper motives. In order to show the effect of the expressions of contempt used, let me read a few extracts from the judgment of the court of New Brunswick on that subject. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) left the impression upon members of this House this afternoon, I find, that when that judgment was delivered, it was after an attack had been made in the St. John 'Globe' upon Mr. Justice Palmer. My hon. friend shakes his head, but I say that was the impression left upon many members of the House, for they have told me so since the House took recess. This judgment was delivered in 1888. First of all, I will quote from the judgment of Chief Justice Sir John Allen, a gentleman whose integrity no man has ever disputed and no man ever will. In delivering judgment he says :

There can be no doubt about the general power of this court to grant writs of prohibition to restrain inferior courts from proceeding in matters over which they had no jurisdiction; or, where, having jurisdiction, they are attempting to proceed irregularly or improperly. In hearing the application for a prohibition against the judge of the county court of Queen's County, and in granting the rule nisi calling upon him to show cause why a prohibition should not issue, Mr. Justice Tuck.—

Let me say a word here, because the statement has been made from one end of the country to the other in the newspapers, that Judge Tuck took part in this trial, that he found Mr. Ellis guilty of contempt and sent him to prison. There is no truth in that statement. Mr. Justice Tuck took no part in the proceedings. It is not true that he was prosecutor, judge and jury. He did not sit in the case; he did not listen to a single argument; he did not give judgment in the matter. I have seen it stated within the last week in journals usually well informed that Mr. Justice Tuck himself sent Mr. Ellis to prison because of contempt committed against himself. A statement more grossly inaccurate and untrue was never made, and I am glad to have this opportunity before this country of making this statement; and I trust that the press of this country who have published this statement broadcast will do Mr. Justice Tuck the justice to publish the denial I have now made:

Justice Tuck was acting in his judicial character as a judge of this court; and charges made against him alleging that he was actuated by dishonest and corrupt motives in granting the order which he did, were calculated to interfere with the proper administration of justice, and to bring the proceedings of this court into contempt; and therefore I am of opinion that the first objection in the proceeding in this matter cannot be sustained.

Later on in his judgment, Sir John Allen says this:

I think it cannot well be disputed that Mr. Justice Tuck, in granting the order nisi, was acting in his judicial capacity as a judge of this court. As such judge he had general jurisdiction over the subject of prohibition; and when affidavits were produced before him which satisfied him that the judge of the county court was attempting to exercise a jurisdiction in the matter of the election which he had no right to exercise, that he (Mr. Justice Tuck) acquired jurisdiction over the particular case, and in what he did he was acting for this court judicially and in the administration of justice, and the language which was used respecting him in the matter in some, at least, of the articles published, was a contemptuous interference with the judicial proceedings in which he was acting. I am therefore of opinion that the rule should be made absolute for an attachment.

I also wish to read to this House very briefly from the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice King:

In the case before us, it was not thus far disputed that the writing was contemptuous;

You will notice that it was not disputed by Mr. Ellis's counsel that the publication was contemptuous. This was clearly the case. I will ask the House to listen to me for one moment while I read a brief extract from the argument of Mr. Weldon, who was Mr. Ellis's counsel on that occasion. This is how it is reported:

Mr. Weldon, Q.C., said: I regret very much the tone of this article. Using the hon. justices surname without giving his title is much to be depreciated.

So, Mr. Justice King says, that it was not disputed that the writing was contemptuous. He goes on:

—but it was contended that the judge was acting in his judicial character, because neither the court nor any judge of the court has jurisdiction to issue a prohibition to a judge of the county court assuming to act under the powers given to a county court judge under the Election Act. It is not necessary to express an opinion as to whether the order nisi was invalid or not, and whether in whole or in part, for the court is a court of general jurisdiction, and application upon affidavit having been made to Mr. Justice Tuck, it was his duty to hear and decide upon the application in one way or the other, and in so doing he was acting in his judicial character as a judge of this court, and the correctness or otherwise of the conclusion which he reached does not alter the character of his act in entertaining the application. The writing complained of impugns the bona fide of Judge Tuck throughout the entire proceedings, and imputes to him improper motives in his action in entertaining and in deciding upon the matter. As to the point that the application is improperly made as on the part of Mr. Baird, the affidavit of Mr. Ellis admits the writing complained of, setting it out again, and if anything, making it rather worse, and the matter of the contempt being thus before court, it may be dealt with irrespective of the technical objection referred to.

After these judgments were delivered in the Supreme Court of New Brunswick the rule was not at once made absolute. Time was given to Mr. Ellis to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. Mr. Ellis accordingly made his first appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, but the Supreme Court of Canada held that as the judgment was not a final judgment they had no jurisdiction. It then came back to the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick. The rule was made absolute, interrogatories were propounded to Mr. Ellis according to the procedure of the court, which interrogatories he answered, and the court then found him guilty of contempt. Then they suspended sentence so as to give him an opportunity to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. He again came to the Supreme Court of Canada. When the parties came before that court, the point was raised by counsel acting on behalf of Mr. Baird and against Mr. Ellis that, as the matter was a criminal matter—relying upon the authority in the recent English case of O'Shea and O'Shea—an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada did not lie. This point being raised, the Supreme Court of Canada decided that they had no jurisdiction and the appeal was quashed accordingly. Now at that time there was no argument in the Supreme Court of Canada on the merits of the case at all. My hon. friend reads the judgment of Mr. Justice Fournier, but it was fair that he should state at the same time that it was judgment delivered by one of the judges of the Supreme Court not having the merits of the case placed before him, and not having heard the arguments of counsel upon the case. While I have great respect for the judgment of Mr. Justice Fournier, it must be felt that his judgment given ex parte without argument of counsel can hardly have the same weight as a well-matured judgment of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick after a full argument of the case, after counsel have been heard, and after the case has been discussed from every possible point of view. My hon. friend from Queen's, who moved the resolution, cited the Centre Wellington case, a case decided in the province of Ontario by three of the judges there, which decision was to the effect that no mandamus would lie from the Supreme Court against a judge of the county court in an election matter. That is a judgment of three judges of the province of Ontario. It does not constitute an authority binding upon the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick, or of any other province. And, were I compelled to make a choice, I would, as a lawyer, prefer to accept the law as expounded by five judges of the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick, rather than as expounded by three judges in a court of the province of Ontario. It does not seem to me that I am forced to do that to-day, because I think if you take up the Centre Wellington case and the Baird and Ellis case, you will come to the conclusion that the cases are distinguishable and that the same point is not involved in the two cases. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) shakes his head. I will give my hon. friend my reasons for saying so. In the first place, the application in the Centre Wellington case was an application for a mandamus, and every lawyer knows that a mandamus is a different writ from a writ of prohibition. A writ of mandamus is one that goes to the discretionary power of the court. In the Centre Wellington case there was an application for a mandamus to compel the revising officer to go on with a recount, and it was held that the mandamus would not lie, and one of the reasons given was that it being a writ in the discretionary power of the court, the mandamus would not lie if there was any other adequate remedy. On the other hand, it is true that Chief Justice Haggarty uses the terms

Mr. HAZEN.

“mandamus” and “prohibition” as if they were synonymous; but I think that must be a slip of the learned judge, because the question of prohibition was not before him, and for the reason, as I said before, and every lawyer knows, a writ of mandamus is a very different writ from a writ of prohibition, in that it goes to the discretionary power of the court, while a writ of prohibition is a writ of right, and a judge or a court is bound to grant a writ of prohibition, where it is made clear to that court that an inferior court is acting in excess of jurisdiction, and without any jurisdiction at all. Now, that was exactly the case in the writ of prohibition in the New Brunswick case. Mr. Justice Steadman—I speak of him with all respect as a very worthy man—was assuming a power which he did not, under the statute, possess, and when that fact was made to appear to a judge of our Supreme Court, exercising, as our Supreme Court does, the functions of the Court of Queen's Bench in England—when that fact was made to appear, I say not only was Judge Tuck right in granting that rule nisi, but he could not do anything else, as it was a writ of right, and he would be liable to condemnation if he did not issue it. Now, what is the language of Judge Haggarty in regard to that Centre Wellington case? Certainly that was not a case where there was a defect of jurisdiction. There, there was a judge of the county court who had the right to proceed with the recount, but he did not proceed with it, and they wanted to make him proceed by a mandamus, and the court said: We will not grant the mandamus, it is a discretionary writ, and there is another adequate legal remedy, namely, by petition. That was a very different case from the present one where the judge was acting without authority, and where there was no other adequate legal remedy to prevent him from going on. Now, I will read an extract from the judgment of Judge Haggarty:

It is generally asserted that such a course is not taken, where there is any other adequate remedy?

So I say that the Centre Wellington case is distinguishable from the case we have under discussion, but whether distinguishable or not, the judgment of a court in the province of Ontario is not binding upon a court in the province of New Brunswick. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have made it clear to this House that there was a clear contempt on the part of Mr. Ellis, no matter what authority Mr. Justice Tuck had; that in the second place, there was no authority vested in the judge in the county court to order a recount under circumstances similar to those that prevailed in Queen's; and, in the third place, a writ of prohibition being a writ of right, a writ which our court has the right to exercise, having, as it does, the same functions as the Court of Queen's Bench in England—and it has been decided there that a writ of prohibition will go even to the Privy Council—I think it must be apparent that Mr. Justice Tuck in issuing the rule nisi was not only doing what was not wrong, but he was doing what he should have done, and one of the judges declared in his judgment that he would have done wrong had he not granted the rule nisi. In any case, I think it must be apparent that as it was a legal question involving a great deal of doubt as to the right of Judge Steadman to proceed with the recount, no harm could be done by Judge Tuck issuing this rule nisi and having the matter brought before the Supreme Court, where it could be determined after full argument whether Justice Steadman was right or not, and if he was right then the recount would have proceeded, and under those circumstances there was no justification for any one in condemning Mr. Justice Tuck for acting corruptly or with improper motives. Now, the hon. member for Queen's has moved a resolution touching this matter which I wish to deal with briefly. The hon. gentleman asks this House to resolve three things. First, he asks this House to resolve that :

In the opinion of this House the action of the returning officer Dunn in refusing to return George G. King, who had polled a large majority of the votes in the election duly held and in returning Mr. George F. Baird, the minority candidate, instead, was a gross violation of law and justice, a wicked and indefensible outrage upon the rights of the electors of Queen's County, N.B., and a precedent pregnant with such danger to the future political government of Canada as to have demanded and justified on the part of the newspaper press, the severest possible condemnation and censure.

Now, I ask that hon. gentleman why he did not move that resolution when Mr. Dunn was before the Bar of the House seven years ago? He has waited seven long years, and now he asks this House, in which are many members who were not here at that time, and who did not hear the answers which Mr. Dunn made to the interrogatories put to him—he now asks this House to condemn the action of Mr. Dunn upon that occasion. It occurs to me that no matter how gross may have been the wrong, this House would hesitate in passing a resolution now to condemn a man for something that occurred seven years ago, and especially when all the facts were clearly before this Parliament, which disposed of the case at that time. Then the hon. gentleman goes further, and asks this House to condemn the power possessed by the courts for the summary punishment of constructive contempt. The hon. gentleman has talked a great deal about the Star Chamber. Sir, the hon. gentleman need not go back to the Star Chamber to find cases for punishment for contempt. The right of punishing for contempt is an inherent right which exists in all courts in all English-speaking countries; it is not a right which exists for the personal protection of the court, but it is a right which exists, and properly so, for the protection of litigants in that court. It is a right that exists for the punishment of those who attempt, while a proceeding is pending in court, to interfere with the course of justice by writing articles prejudicing the finding of that court. It is necessary that such a power should exist, for in the absence of that power, when matters are pending in the law courts, it would be possible for persons, in order to accomplish their own ends, so to interfere with the proceedings before the courts by vilifying the parties, by vilifying the juries trying that case and by vilifying witnesses, as to do a great deal of harm to the litigants who were involved in suits before that court. That power is given to the court for that purpose, so that the courts of justice may not be interfered with, and that when matters are pending before the courts, as the Queen's County election case was pending, if the parties choose to adopt a course that would prejudice the tribunal holding the inquiry, witnesses or jurors or any body else, the court should have the right to inflict summary punishment and prevent wrong being done. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) does not propose, after all, when we come to read his resolution, to do away with the rights of the Star Chamber. The hon. gentleman says: Oh, no; I will do away with punishment inflicted on persons for acts done outside the courts, but I will leave the right of dealing out summary punishment to the judges for offences committed inside the courts. So inside the court the judges can follow the course of the Star Chamber, can cut off the ears of people and send them to prison for life; but in regard to acts done outside, the court must not impose any such penalty. What would be the result? The judges could punish a man who, in the presence of the court, impugned the honesty of a judge or interfered with the proper conduct of a suit, or attributed improper motives to the judges; but the same men could go outside and write article after article in the press, denouncing the proceedings of the tribunal, and thereby prejudicially affect the trial of the case, and if the judges were weak they might frighten them into doing something they did not wish to do or might frighten the jurors into doing something that was not right and proper—the parties could do all this outside without receiving summary punishment, but the moment similar acts were done inside the court in the presence of the judges, they could exercise the rights of the Star Chamber, which the hon. gentleman said has been in existence for many years. That is logically and fairly the proposition which the hon. gentleman has submitted to this House. Before I pass on to quote authorities, and I have a number of authorities on this question, allow me to say a word more on the sentence passed on Mr. Ellis. The hon. gentleman asks this House to condemn the sentence. The sentence, of course, is a matter resting within the discretion of the court itself. I would ask hon. members if they think it right to establish a precedent that when any sentence is imposed complaint should be made in Parliament that it was too severe, or was unjust? The sentence, I repeat, is in the discretion of the court or of the judge who hears the case. The opinion of judges differ. It is not unusual in this country, where this discretion is given to the judges, for lesser or greater penalties to be inflicted for a similar offence; but it would be most improper to lay down a precedent that every time a sentence is imposed the party can come here and complain that the court or judge acted with undue severity. That is what this House will be doing if hon. members should adopt the resolution submitted by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I further think that the language used by the hon. member with respect to the punishment inflicted on Mr. Ellis should not have been inserted in this resolution, unless my hon. friend is prepared to follow up his course in moving this resolution by asking the impeachment of the judges who gave the sentence. That is the only logical and proper course to pursue. That being the case, it would be a most unwise course for Parliament to adopt to lay down the precedent that any hon. member could rise and attack a judge for imposing a sentence, and declare that the sentence is too severe, and at the same time ask that the House condemn it. When I pointed to the fact that the judgment of the Chief Justice and the rest of the court was dated many months before Mr. Ellis wrote the article reflecting on Mr. Justice Palmer, the hon. member for Queen's said he referred to the question of sentence, and he declared that the Chief Justice was influenced in giving sentence by the force of Mr. Justice Palmer, who was a stronger man than himself. I think that statement is entirely and absolutely unwarranted. Down to the time he received the stroke of paralysis, from which he is now suffering, some months after sentence was imposed in this case, the Chief Justice was able properly to perform his duties. He is the last man in the world, knowing him as I do, to be influenced in his course in this matter, either by Mr. Justice Palmer or by any other judge. He was not the man to be influenced by anybody, but he would do what he himself thought was right. There was no man on the Bench of New Brunswick having greater regard for the dignity of the Bench than the Chief Justice himself, and he would have been the last man to have allowed it to be said against him that he a few years ago imposed a sentence on a journalist of New Brunswick, then but a short time in the province, and had not surrounded himself with a large number of friends, as Mr. Ellis has naturally done during his long citizenship, and that he had imposed on the other journalist a more severe sentence than he had imposed on a gentleman having the prominence possessed by Mr. Ellis in the community. As a man who wanted to deal out fair play, and even-handed justice to all, he would not have gone down to his grave allowing it to be said of him that because Mr. Ellis was a more prominent man than the other journalist who had been punished in that province, he had received a lighter sentence. The gentleman to whom I referred was sentenced to two months imprisonment and a $200 fine. It is true he was not called upon to pay the costs, but in that proceeding there were scarcely any costs, because the case did not drag over a long period. The sentence in the case of Mr. Ellis was one month in jail and $200 fine, and costs incurred, and nearly all those costs I state here now before this House from commencement to finish, including the cost of appeal at Ottawa, were all incurred, not through the action of those in charge of the prosecution, but through the action of Mr. Ellis's counsel. The hon. member for Queen's asks this House by his resolution to make a statement which we cannot truthfully make. He asks the House to resolve this, that the punishment inflicted by the Supreme Court in New Brunswick was arbitrary and excessive, and inimical to the public interest. Allow me to say that I believe it was with a feeling of very deep regret, not only on the part of the Chief Justice, but on the part of other members of the court, that this penalty was imposed on Mr. Ellis. It must certainly have been most unpleasant to inflict such punishment, in view of the fact that Mr. Ellis had so long been a citizen of the province, and had occupied a prominent position in the community, and up to the very last moment, as appears from the judgment of Mr. Justice King, in volume 28, Supreme Court, New Brunswick reports, the court hoped Mr. Ellis would purge his contempt by making a statement, as he might reasonably have made, that this statement in question was made by the newspaper in the heat of political excitement, and he regretted having made it. Mr. Justice King, in the course of his judgment, said:

I am disappointed that Mr. Ellis has not spoken a word of regret. The case has stood over so long upon his application for time, that the hope was entertained that we might have a frank retraction, such as one might very well make where he uses language under excitement which he knows is taken as imputing improper motives. But as the case stands, I think we must treat the matter of offence as deliberate on his part. * * *

Newspapers have rights and the courts have rights, and, as usually happens in society, everything goes on best when parties pay just regard to the rights of each other. * * *

In this case I am clearly of opinion and find that Mr. Ellis has committed a contempt of the court in the articles referred to by contemptuous references to Mr. Justice Tuck, in his judicial capacity as a member of this court.

Mr. Ellis must have felt himself in his calmer moments that Judge Tuck had done no wrong from the answers he made to the interrogatories. The fifth interrogatory put to Mr. Ellis was this :

Were the expressions in such article referring to Mr. Justice Tuck, "partisan judges" and "prostitution of judicial authority" intended by the writer to refer to Mr. Justice Tuck and the granting of said order nisi for writ of prohibition?

In his first answer Mr. Ellis said he could not answer that question, as it was ambiguous. Counsel then moved that Mr. Ellis be committed for contempt, as he would not answer the interrogatories. The court ruled that he must answer that interrogatory. The interrogatory was again framed, and Mr. Ellis answered it in this way :

That the term "Judge Tuck," referred to Mr. Justice Tuck. The terms "partisan judges," and "prostitution of judicial authority" were general ones, and he believed had no other application where used in the said articles. They were not intended to have any other application than a general one, and were not intended to have any particular application to any particular judge.

The court still held that that was not a direct answer to the interrogatory, and later on in the day the examiner reported on the fifth interrogatory as follows :—

In using the expression "partisan judges" and "prostitution of judicial authority" in the article of March 10th, I did not refer, and did not intend to refer to Mr. Justice Tuck "or to the granting of the order nisi for a writ of prohibition.

It must clearly have appeared to Mr. Ellis from these answers, that he made a mistake in referring to Mr. Justice Tuck in the way he did. Mr. Ellis must clearly have seen that Judge Tuck was not exceeding his duty, but was simply doing his duty, and, therefore, it is that Mr. Justice King expressed his regret that Mr. Ellis had not expressed any regret himself to the court, and that they were bound to find him guilty of contempt. Now, Sir, the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) asks us to bind ourselves to a resolution setting forth as facts, assertions that are not correct. He asks us to resolve :

That the punishment inflicted by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on John V. Ellis in the month of October, 1893, for alleged constructive contempt of court, contained in articles published by him on the Queen's County election hereinafter referred to; was arbitrary, excessive, inimical to the public interest and deserving of censure.

I ask the hon. gentleman's attention to this part of the amendment :

And in so far as it added costs to the fine and imprisonment without precedent.

This House cannot vote for this resolution because that statement is absolutely incorrect. It is not true that the penalty of adding costs to the fine and imprisonment is without precedents, because I will show this House several precedents, both English and American, for a similar course. In the first place I would ask hon. gentlemen to listen to this case. In the case of Oswald, editor of the 'Independent Gazetteer,' the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, imposed on the editor the following sentence :—

That you pay a fine of $50 to the Commonwealth, that you be imprisoned for the space of one month, and afterwards until the fine and costs be paid—Sheriff he is in your custody.

For publishing about a suit that the judge acted under the influence of Dr. Rush, and that in short from the ancient prejudices of all the judges, the defendant did not stand a chance of a fair trial. Chief Justice McKean said in passing sentence :

Assertions and imputation of this kind are certainly calculated to defeat and discredit the administration of justice, Eleazer Oswald, having yesterday considered the charge against you we are unanimously of the opinion that it amounted to a contempt of court. Some doubts were suggested, whether even a contempt of court was punishable by attachment; but not only my brethren and myself, but likewise all the judges of England think that without this power no court could possibly exist; nay that no contempt could indeed be committed against us, we should be so truly contemptible. The law upon the subject is of immemorable antiquity, and there is not any period when it can be said to have ceased or discontinued. On this point we entertain no doubt.

In Passmore's case the same court said to the editor for a similar offence :

You have made no atonement whatever to the person whom you have so deeply injured, and you can only blame yourself for the consequences. The judgment of the court is, that you pay a fine of $50 to the Commonwealth and be imprisoned for thirty days, and afterwards until the fine and costs are paid.

Mr. MARTEN. Would not the hon. gentleman think that that would refer to the cost of the application or costs in connection with sheriff's fees, or something of that kind?

Mr. HAZEN. No; it is an attachment. It is stated so, and I will give other authorities to my hon. friend. In Gaudy's case in Nebraska,—and I do not quote this for the purpose of precedence,—a contempt case, the court said :

As the proceeding was solely to protect justice from obstruction the accused is not entitled to a trial by jury.

In Cartwright's case in Massachusetts, Gray, C.J., said :

The summary power to commit and punish for contempts tending to obstruct or degrade the administration of justice is inherent of courts of Chancery and other Supreme Courts as essential to the execution of their power and to the maintenance of their authority and as a part of the law of the land within the meaning of Magna Charta, and of the twelfth article of our declaration of rights.

In Matthew's case in New Hampshire, McDonald's in Maine and Spalding's in New York, similar decisions and sentences were given and passed. In Edward's case in Florida, the editor got $100 fine and 30 days imprisonment. Storey, the editor of the Chicago 'Times,' got fine and imprisonment for commenting on a suit, and Wilson, editor of the Chicago 'Evening Journal,' was sentenced by the Supreme Court of that state to fine, costs and imprisonment for impugning the motives and integrity of the judge, in conducting the trial of Rafferty, when the case was before the court on writ of error. Chief Justice Lawrence in delivering judgment said :

No candid man can deny that the article in question was well calculated to make upon the public mind the impression that the court in a pending case was influenced by money in its judicial action, and that it could be so influenced in other cases. The article declares that the money raised for Rafferty is operating splendidly, predicts that he will be granted a new trial and avers that the sum of $1,400 is enough now-a-days to enable a man to purchase immunity from the consequence of any crime, and that, the courts are now completely in the control of corrupt and mercenary shysters, the jackals of the legal profession. Such language will bear but one interpretation. Let me say here and so plainly that our position can be misrepresented only by malice or gross stupidity, that we do not deprecate nor should we claim the right to punish any criticism the press may choose to publish upon our decisions, opinions or official conduct in regard to cases that have passed from our jurisdiction so long as our action is correctly stated and our official integrity is not impeached. * * *

The freedom of the press is indispensable to the preservation of the freedom of the people, but certainly neither these respondents nor any intelligent person connected with the press and having a just idea of its responsibilities as well as its powers will claim that it may seek to control the administration of justice or influence the decision of pending cases. A court will of course endeavour to remain wholly uninfluenced by publications like that under consideration, but will the community believe that it is able to do so? Can it be certain in regard to itself? Can men always be sure of their mental poise? A timid man might be influenced to yield while a combative man would be driven in the opposite direction. Whether the actual influence is on one side or the other, so far as it is felt at all, it becomes dangerous to the administration of justice. * * * The papers of Chicago, circulating throughout the State and the North-west, had called attention to the subject. It was made a frequent topic of discussion in the public prints, and when finally this article appeared in a paper of noted sobriety and respectability, containing charges and imputations against this court, which were simply infamous, the majority of the court felt that it was necessary for the good name of the State, within and without its borders and necessary in order to preserve the confidence of the people wholly unshaken in this court, to request the Attorney General to move for a rule against these respondents. The loss of public confidence in our integrity would be a calamity little less than the loss of official integrity itself. The pomp and circumstances which, in England, aid to clothe the courts and the law with dignity and power are not in consonance with the republican form of government. In this country the power of the judiciary rests upon the faith of the people in its integrity and intelligence. Take away this faith and the moral influence of the court is gone, and popular respect for law impaired. When confidence in the courts is gone, respect for the law itself will speedily disappear, and society will become the prey of fraud, violence and crime. We have personally felt great reluctance to take notice of the publication, but our consciousness of the mischief that may be done in embarrassing the administration of justice and impairing the moral authority throughout the State, if this article is to stand as an unpublished precedent has compelled us to issue the rule, and now compels us to order an attachment.

Judge McAllister in a lengthy concurrent judgment observes :

The exercise of the power to punish for such publications is not an abridgement of the freedom of the press. The freedom of the press is fully protected, without licensing libel and ribaldry, and charges of corruption and bribery against courts and their officers.

The respondents got $200 apiece, all the costs of the proceedings to pay, and imprisonment. Similar decisions in every state and country under British laws could be cited. In the case of Banergia against the justice of the High Court of Bengal, the Privy Council decided the courts could punish an editor for contempt for libelling the judge, even after the suit was ended. In England not a year elapses but the courts punish for constructive contempts by long terms of imprisonment. In the very recent divorce case of Captain O'Shea against O'Shea and Parnell. Touby, editor of the 'Freeman,' was fined, ordered to pay costs as between solicitor and client, and be imprisoned till paid, for contempt of court in abusing the plaintiff, though he personally did not write the article. Now, it is quite clear that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) cannot ask us to endorse the statement that in so far as the penalty added costs of the fine, it is without precedent, because I have shown ample precedents to him. As will be seen from the quotations I have given, we do not have to seek in one country or another for examples, that when improper censures have been made on judges during the progress of the trial, and improper motives have been attributed to them; we do not have to seek only in England or Canada to find examples of precedents of that sort. There is one more precedent which I will cite for the benefit of the hon. gentleman, and it was a charge against a judge similar to that preferred by Mr. Ellis against Judge Tuck. In 1884 the Supreme Court of Virginia convicted Frew of contempt of court for publishing in his newspaper the charge that the Court of Appeal was prostituting its high and sacred trust to base political purposes, a charge similar to that preferred by Ellis against Judge Tuck. In that case, Chief Justice Johnson said :

The books do not furnish a clear case of contempt. It is a contempt because it charges three of the judges of this court, acting in their judicial capacity, with an offence, which if true is just ground of impeachment ; with an offence calculated to degrade the court and destroy all confidence of the people therein. * * * * *

The court has the right to punish the offender because the language used is designed and calculated to destroy the confidence of the people in the court and to degrade the court in the opinion of the people and to corrupt the streams of justice. In such case the court would be wanting in respect for the people whose servant it is, if it did not summarily punish the offender. The suggestion of a libel suit—

My hon. friend suggested a libel suit. This is what Chief Justice Johnson, of the Supreme Court of Virginia, says in regard to that :

The suggestion of a libel suit is disgusting to a man of honour. It will be a sorry day when the practice shall obtain among judges of the court of last resort who hold the dearest interests of the people in their hands, when in their judicial capacity they may be grossly libelled, to leave their high positions and go before the jury in a libel suit, be subjected to the coarse criticism of defendants counsel, and if they succeed in their suit, have it cast in their teeth, that they were influenced by sordid motives. Who would have any respect for a judge who would pursue such a course? Would he not under the circumstances deserve the contempt of every good citizen? Besides, what right would he have individually to recover damages, for a wrong committed against him in his individual capacity for an injury done the people in his person? In such case the individual must always be separated from the judge. The court has no right to punish as for contempt one who libels an individual, who happens to be the judge; but it is a contempt of the court, as such, and an insult to the people represented by the court, which alone the court can punish as such. Scarcely less repulsive to all sense of judicial dignity is the suggestion that the judge should play the role of prosecuting witness in the trial of an indictment for libel. If that day shall ever come when such shall be the only protection left to courts of justice against publications affecting their judicial integrity, none but the base and vicious can be expected to occupy judicial position.

In William's case, the High Court of Errors and Appeals of the state of Mississippi, said :

In this country all courts derive their authority from the people and hold it in trust for their security and benefit. In this State all judges are elected by the people and hold their authority in a double sense directly from them, the power they exercise is but the authority of the people themselves, exercised through courts as their agents. It is the authority and law emanating from the people which the judges sit to exercise and enforce. Contempts against these courts in the administration of the laws are insults offered to the authority of the people themselves and not to the humble agents of the law, whom they employ in the conduct of their government. The power to compel the lawless offender against decency and propriety to respect the laws of his country and submit to their authority (a duty to which the good citizen yields hearty obedience without compulsion) must exist or courts and laws operate at last as a restraint upon the upright who need no restraint and a license to the offenders whom they are made to subdue.

I have many other authorities here, but I will not weary the House by citing them at any length. There is one case to which I must refer, that is, the celebrated Castro case, which was decided in England about twenty years ago. That was a case in which four men at a public meeting denounced the judges as corrupt and oppressive. Two of them who apologized were fined £100 each. Two who did not apologize were fined £500 each, and imprisoned for three months. I will also refer to the case of a native of the very province to which the hon. member for Queen's belongs: my recollection is that his name was Macdonald. He went to Massachusetts, got involved in a suit there either as a witness or in some other way, was found guilty of contempt of court, and was condemned by the court to be imprisoned until he apologized for the contempt, and I believe he remained in the jail of that State for fifteen years, until he was relieved by the act, either of the Governor or the Legislature. I do not know, at the present moment which. It was said by my hon. friend who moved this amendment, that there was a great deal of sympathy felt for Mr. Ellis in the province of New Brunswick in the position in which he was placed. I do not hesitate to say that that statement is perfectly correct. There was a great deal of sympathy felt for Mr. Ellis, not only by members of his own political party, but by a large number of Conservatives, who regretted deeply that a gentleman like Mr. Ellis should have placed himself in the position he did, when it would have been so easy for him to have purged himself of the offence without any sacrifice of his honour or his manhood. There was that feeling of regret, there is no doubt about it; and if the editor of a Conservative paper were sent to prison for contempt of court, in the province of New Brunswick, I have no doubt that a great deal of sympathy would be felt for him, not only by Conservatives, but by Liberals who happened to be his fellow-citizens and his personal friends. But the fact that sympathy prevailed for Mr. Ellis does not prove, as my hon. friend attempted to make it prove, that that sympathy meant condemnation of the court, and justification of Mr. Ellis for having written the articles complained of. My hon. friend grew eloquent and poetical and quite emotional when he talked of people having visited Mr. Ellis in his cell. I can assure my hon. friend that the word cell is not fairly applied to the room which Mr. Ellis occupied in York County jail. I venture to say that he occupied as comfortable lodgings there as the hon. member for Queen's or any other member of Parliament occupies in the city of Ottawa; and when the hon. member for Queen's talks about the dark cell in which he was confined, he is drawing largely upon his own imagination, because Mr. Ellis's accommodations and surroundings were of the most comfortable character, and he was denied nothing necessary to make any man comfortable except the right to go forth for thirty days. I do not think my hon. friend's sympathy carried him so far as to bring him across from Prince Edward Island to call upon Mr. Ellis there. While there was a great deal of sympathy expressed for Mr. Ellis in the newspapers, and while a fund was started to raise a splendid testimonial to him, the matter has not been heard of since; I hope it has not died out entirely. Now, Mr. Speaker, I fear I have taken up too much of the time of this House in placing this matter before it. It is not, it seems to me, a case where it is necessary for hon. members to take sides either with the court of New Brunswick or with Mr. Ellis. The question is a legal one, to be discussed, as I have attempted to discuss it, without passion or partisan feelings. I trust that the House will take a fair view of the matter, and will see that in acting as he did, Mr. Justice Tuck was acting as the law compelled him to do, and as he had a perfect right to do. Further, I trust that hon. members will not mix up with this case the old matter of the Queen's County election of seven years ago, which was discussed and decided in this House at that time. I trust that this House will not place itself on record as criticising the punishments which any judge inflicts and which he has a perfect right to inflict. I trust that this House will not place itself on record as saying that in awarding the payment of costs against Mr. Ellis, the court was acting wholly and absolutely without precedent, in view of the precedents I have cited in support of that action. I thank the House for the kind attention it has given to me while I have discussed this subject—a subject which cannot be of great interest, considering the dry character of these legal matters. I certainly hope that the discussion may go on in a fair and judicial spirit, and a right conclusion arrived at, and that this House will not pass the resolution of the hon. member for Queen's, which, to my mind, involves an interference with the rights of the Provincial Legislature. Matters relating to the procedure of the courts of the provinces are matters within the jurisdiction of the provinces themselves. That being the case, I do not think it is fit or proper that this House should pass a resolution declaring that this punishment for contempt was unjustifiable and that the right of the provincial courts to punish for contempt should be taken away.

Mr. HAZEN.

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the House for a short time in respect to the resolution of the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies). Let me say, in opening, that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) might have spared at least half the time he devoted to this question, because all he said was not in controversy. There was no discussion at all as to whether or not the prohibition that issued was right or wrong, although he referred to the judgments as if that question existed. I find, for example, that the Chief Justice, in referring to this matter, said:

As to the first objection, I think is not necessary to determine whether the prohibition would lie in this particular case or not.

Now, there is no need of discussing the question whether the prohibition was right or wrong, or whether Judge Steadman, in issuing his order, was right or wrong. That is not the matter before the House. The whole discussion is on the resolution of the hon. member for Queen's, as to whether, in view of the action of the judges of New Brunswick, the court acted rightly. On page 117, Mr. Justice Wetmore says:

But supposing I am wrong in the views I have expressed and that Judge Tuck had no right to grant the rule nisi, what justification would that error be for the articles published.

So that the court assumed that the question as to the prohibition had nothing at all to do with the matter then before them. Now, the hon. member for St. John asks, why bring up this matter now, after seven years? The answer is apparent. This is the ending of the seven years' contest that would never have arisen were it not for the wrong committed seven years ago. The judgment of the court which sent Mr. Ellis to jail was a judgment upon matters that took place seven years ago, and that is the reason why this resolution is presented here now. If it had been brought up at any time before the final judgment, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) would have been the first to rise and say that, as the matter was still before the courts, we should not discuss it, but should wait until it was finally decided. When the hon. gentleman was deprecating this Parliament having anything to do with a provincial matter, it ought to have struck him that we are dealing with a question respecting the election to a seat in this House. He should remember that Mr. Ellis was committed to jail because he wrote an article about a member who was returned—or rather was not returned—to this Parliament. And, therefore, this Parliament has the right to inquire into that subject now. I have not myself very much to say about Mr. Ellis's confinement in jail. I am not going now to comment on the luxuries surrounding him while in jail—luxuries equal to the best to be found in the best hotel at Ottawa. If the hon. member for St. John thinks that that is a sufficient condonation of the judgment of the court, he is welcome to that contention. But the very fact shows the character of the judgment given. There is, after all, even in New Brunswick, a desire to be well governed and to accede in all respects to the judgments of the courts.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. Hon. gentlemen say, "Hear, hear." Then, I want them to understand that either the men who brought those luxuries to Mr. Ellis were guilty of contempt of court, or Mr. Ellis was not the criminal the judgment of the court declared him to be. Did it not strike the hon. gentleman that everything done to show sympathy to Mr. Ellis was a protest from the best citizens of New Brunswick against the judgment. And while I do not say that the judgment of the people ought to weigh in every case, against that of a court, I will say this, that any court which consults its own dignity will find the people always ready to give it every respect. Why was it that men of all political shades, persons of every class in Fredericton, from the Governor down to the most ordinary citizen, called on Mr. Ellis. Does that mean that Mr. Ellis was so popular that, even as a criminal he commanded the respect even of the Governor who had recently been appointed in New Brunswick. Not at all. The good sense of the community is very often the best judgment that could be given even in a matter before the courts. Was Mr. Ellis a criminal confined for violating the law, so far as the court was concerned? If so, he had a sympathizer in the Governor himself, who, forgetting the dignity of his position, actually went to the cell where a criminal was confined for contempt of court—for it must be held that Mr. Ellis was as great a criminal as if he had violated the law in any other respect. What would be the difference between Mr. Ellis and a man who had committed an assault. Surely it is a greater crime to insult a court than to insult or assault a private individual, and what would be thought of a governor who would go to a cell to show his sympathy for a man who had assaulted another. This outburst of public sympathy shows that the judgment was not a proper one. There is such a thing as a court being too anxious for its own dignity. We have no such trouble in Nova Scotia. I notice that New Brunswick has a good deal of trouble. I notice that the judges have sent editors to jail there more than once.

Mr. WELDON. What about the mayor of Truro?

Mr. FRASER. It was not the court that sent the mayor of Truro to jail, but Parliament.

Mr. WELDON. A Grit Parliament.

Mr. FRASER. That may be, but I am here talking of the court, and the case is not in point. Such a thing was never heard of in Nova Scotia. Why? Because the judges there know how to conduct themselves. We have never had a judge in Nova Scotia against whom an article was written in a single paper, that I know of, or who has sent a man to jail for contempt. I think there was a case I heard about, in which one of the judges of the Supreme Court committed a barrister who had said something he should not before him; but the kindly heart of the judge relented before the sentence was carried into execution, and he remitted the fine, and the barrister did not go to jail. I want to insist on this point, that a court may be, after all, too anxious about its own dignity, but I must say, in all fairness to the court of New Brunswick, that it did not initiate the action. That was done by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird). We must consider together all the acts performed in connection with this matter from the time the prohibition issued, or rather from the time the articles were written, and you cannot judge of this case by deciding, for example, that there was a right to issue the prohibition. The resolution of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is this, that the final judgment, taken in connection with all the others, was one that should not have been pronounced. The hon. gentleman speaks of American cases where costs were granted. He must know that there are not costs in the United States such as we have in this country. There are only the costs of the court in the United States. A man may bring a civil action, and will get no costs except those of the court. There is no such thing known there as taxing a bill of costs against an opponent, as is done in Canada and England. I remember myself, only one case in which costs were given in a criminal case in Nova Scotia, and that was a case which came before the present First Minister in Amherst. He ordered, not only that the culprit should be sent to jail—and I did my best to defend him, although I had not much defence,—but he actually ordered that he should pay the costs of the court. I thought at the time it was a very hard judgment. It was the only case I knew of up to that time in which a criminal was condemned and mulcted in costs as well. In connection with the costs in this case in New Brunswick, I may say we never heard of a case in Nova Scotia where the costs were taxed against the opposing party as costs between attorney and client, and I make the statement that neither in Canada nor elsewhere was there ever a criminal case in which the party against whom judgment was given had to pay costs as between attorney and client. Every lawyer understands the distinction. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) understands the distinction. He knows that in taxing a bill of costs against an opponent he taxes it in an entirely different way from that in which it would be taxed as between attorney and client. As the costs were taxed in this case every consultation with his client would be charged by the solicitor, so that the costs charged against Mr. Ellis would be twice as great as they would have been if taxed the other way. I think that the resolution is quite correct in that respect. The hon. member for St. John said a good deal in reply to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) about both Mr. Dunn and Mr. Baird, the present member for Queen's, N.B. I submit that Mr. Dunn, as he appears in the record, was not all that the hon. member for St. John painted him. Mr. Dunn was a returning officer. He was at the time studying law, or he then expected to study law. He received a deposit and admitted that it is correct. Afterwards, upon the point being raised before him, he at once gave judgment that his former judgment was wrong. In this he gave a judgment that no judge either in the Supreme Court of New Brunswick or any other court, and no lawyer here or elsewhere, says is correct. Does not it strike the hon. member for St. John as a very strange action? He gave the correct judgment when he accepted the deposit; he gave an incorrect judgment afterwards. I submit that that indicates that he was in consultation with some one in the meantime, and after their consultation he reversed his right judgment and gave a judgment which he must have known to be wrong—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He had no right to give judgment at all.

Mr. FRASER. Of course that is quite true. But I am speaking of him now as a judge and an honest man. He must have been an honest man, because he came in contact with the hon. member for St. John. They went to college together. I only wish he had followed in the same virtuous course as the hon. member. Had he consulted with the hon. member he would not have given such a judgment as he did. He first decided that the deposit was sufficient. But of course it was quite easy to give an opposite judgment when a seat was in question. The hon. gentleman also spoke about the honour and integrity of the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird). I have nothing to do with that; I am not going to discuss that here, Mr. Speaker. All I will say is that, as the record is now before us, his action is not the action of a man who always acts right. We all remember the case of a great criminal, the famous Dr. John Dodd, who was going to be executed for having committed forgery. Almost every man who ever knew him came into court and swore he was one of the most honest men that they had ever known. But did the court excuse him for that reason?

Mr. DAVIN. What judge was that?

Mr. FRASER. Not judge at all—Dr. Dodd.

Mr. DAVIN. You said judge,

Mr. FRASER. But who is Mr. Baird seeking to vindicate? If he is seeking to vindicate himself by this proceeding, then the court had no right to decide after hearing Mr. Baird's side only. If he was seeking to vindicate the court, the court should not have proceeded as they did, because they had not heard the other party. Mr. Baird was very adroit, or, rather, the solicitor who prepared the affidavit for him was very adroit. He had two strings to his bow. He would appear in court to vindicate himself, and if that failed, he wanted that the court should be vindicated. So far as the judgment is concerned, it would seem to be rather in favour of the court, that is, the judgment of the court was that the articles complained of were articles that reflected upon the court. I cannot help thinking, so far as Mr. Baird was concerned, he would have stood much better if he had not sought to get the court to vindicate its own honour at his instance. There is such a thing as men feeling in the bitterness of party warfare that they have not been rightly used. But, after the hon. member found that the seat was given to him, I will not say by a trick, but by an act which no man now claims to have been right or lawful, common modesty should have prevented him going into court with such a plea as this. He did not go into court with clean hands. The method he took to vindicate his honour shows that he did not act as he should. I care not a straw, so far as this discussion is concerned, whether the court was right or wrong in the matter of the prohibition. The question is did the Supreme Court of New Brunswick act judiciously and fairly when they gave their last judgment? There are two principles involved here: first, there is the liberty of the press, and, secondly, there is the liberty of the subject. Mr. Ellis conducted a newspaper—and here let me say, Mr. Speaker, that every one of us has come under the lash of the editor. But I must say, in all fairness, that I know of no class of men in Canada to-day who, taking their whole record, show such fair play to their opponents, as the editors. The newspapers of Canada, I think, are in advance of the newspapers to the south of us. I do not think they have reached the high standard that has been reached in England. But with all their faults, the editors do not write for the purpose of maliciously hurting the feelings of any man, much less those of a judge. And the court ought to have recognized that fact. I can very well understand the court feeling that an imputation was made against them affecting their honour. I am sure the court would have consulted its own dignity had they sought every method at their disposal before they committed a man to jail who had published an article in the newspaper during a period of heated discussion upon a question which was exciting a great deal of feeling in the locality. I think the judgment given in the House of Lords in the matter of the judge in Bahama was sound, and the rule there laid down the correct one. A person signing himself "Colonist" had written an article which held the judge up to the greatest possible contempt. He imposed a fine exactly as this court did, and imprisonment as well. Now, what did the court find? They found that inasmuch as the article was not calculated to obstruct or interfere with the courts of justice or with the due administration of the law, he could not do such a thing. Now, what is obstructing or interfering with the courts of justice or the due administration of the law? Was this such a case? Who was the party prejudiced? There was no jury. Was the court itself the party prejudiced? Was the judge the party prejudiced when he read that and gave such a judgment as he ought not to have given? Did it interfere with the courts of justice and the due administration of the law? I do not think the hon. gentleman himself will say that. This article of which I am speaking held the judge up to the greatest possible contempt. He had refused to accept a few watermelons, or something of that kind, and the article was of the most aggravating character, and the Governor himself took the matter in hand, but in a different way from the Governor of New Brunswick. The Governor himself took the matter in hand and discharged the editor. The Governor of New Brunswick took a different course. He sympathized with the prisoner, and brought him oranges, perhaps, and other things, in the luxurious apartments in which he was placed, to solace the weary hours of his confinement. Of course, the Governor of New Brunswick had no right to pardon him. But this is the point, that unless the due administration of justice is interfered with, the court has no right to do that. Now, that is what the Lords held in England; and I maintain that the cases cited by the hon. member for Queen's, the hon. member for St. John adroitly avoided, and never attempted to answer them. What is his whole answer to the dictum of Lord Esher and others? Simply the decision of the court of New Brunswick. That is his whole answer. He does not attempt to say that the English judges have given bad law, but he cites the law of New Brunswick and says that is a complete answer. There is no word about that. Why, so far as that is concerned, the judgments of Lord Esher and others, I think, stand as high as the judgments of the judges of New Brunswick. Now, it must not be forgotten that the hon.

member for St. John—and I cannot blame him for that—spoke about judges before whom he has to appear, whom he meets from time to time in personal relations, and at whose house he visits, men, of course, of high character, but men that he is bound to speak of in a way different from what another man would do who has not such relations with them. Now, if it is a fact that the courts of highest resort in England have laid down the rule that this method is only to be resorted to when every other method has failed, surely the judges there were wrong in doing it. Nor must it be forgotten that after all these years, I think their sober better-sense ought to have prevailed. I noticed that while the hon. gentleman was very bold while he stood up to fight for Mr. Dunn and Mr. Baird, he passed by the equity judge without one word in his favour. He was almost melancholy when he dropped him. He is no longer a judge, and the hon. gentleman will no more appear before him. He holds his brief, but that judge can say nothing to him, and consequently he says nothing in his favour. Now, to my mind it is a matter of great importance that the article about that ex-judge should have been published a month beforehand, and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman perceived that he could not say a word in favour of that judge, and so he passed that matter over. But will it be contended that a man against whom an article like that was written, could give an unbiassed judgment? I ask any hon. member of this House, if a violent article like that, stating practically that the judge had been bribed, was written against him a month before he had to decide in a matter in which the writer was interested, would that judge be wholly unbiassed? It is contrary to human nature to expect it. But I am sure had that ex-judge consulted his own dignity, if he had any, he would have refused to sit upon that case. Why, he was sitting in face of an article that blamed him for taking $5,000 in money, that blamed him for putting his own son in a position where he made money, an article that laid the most frightful charges at his door, yet he calmly walks in and sits on the case. He was not deciding whether there had been contempt, that had been decided already, and I am not discussing now whether that contempt was correct. I am not arguing the question, although it is subject to argument, as to whether the judgments given in New Brunswick were correct or not. But I want to draw particular attention to the fact that these judgments had been given, but the judgment as to the extent of their power had not been given. Now, this judge is sitting there. There were five judges on the Bench in New Brunswick at that time, only three of the judges were present when the judgment was given, and one of them was a judge that had not been on the Bench. As I understand, Judge Fraser had not been on the Bench when the judgment was given; but of course Judge

Fraser would be bound by the judgment of the court as to the contempt. But was it seemly for Judge Palmer to sit and give judgment in a case in which the man who had written this article about him, was interested? I submit that it was not, and I submit further that the fact that he was there proves that that court was not acting, in the latter judgment, in that spirit of fairness that ought to have governed them. I know nothing about the age of Chief Justice Allen, nor do I care, but I am anxious to point out that when Mr. Justice Palmer sat there he violated the decency of the court. How could he give judgment in a matter of right when that paper published in the very province over which he presided as one of the judges, stated that he had actually been receiving bribes? He was to give judgment upon a question where there was a hint that he was partisan, and he gave judgment in that case while he himself, if that statement was true, had actually taken bribes. Fancy a judge sitting on a case in England after the House of Lords had found that he had accepted bribes. Fancy Lord Bacon sitting in a case after the charges were made against him in the House of Lords. From the time the charge was made that great man never entered the court. He sent the very next day his statement to the Lords acknowledging the truth of it. I submit that Mr. Justice Palmer, when he allowed that article to go a whole month, had no more right to sit upon that case to give judgment, than a felon had. Is a judge to act in that way in matters that have arisen out of an election for a member of this House, and is this House to be told that we should say nothing about it? The hon. member says: If you touch this case, you will bring up every case for contempt. Not at all. I admit that in a judgment for contempt as between ordinary citizens, that argument would apply, but when the judgment is one for contempt in a case that has arisen from an election of a member of this House, this House has a right to deal with it. There is not an hon. gentleman in this House who is not interested in this matter as much as is Mr. Ellis himself. It may be our own case to-morrow; it may or it may not be, but of one thing I am sure: that if the court is not told, as I think it should be told, that it has exceeded its duty, it will become even bolder and may do worse acts. Viewing the whole question—both as a question of law and fact—in the light of the authorities and of the facts, I am satisfied that the court acted in an improper manner, and I am also sure that Mr. Baird has not won any laurels. He may be. I doubt not that he is, a most honourable man; but men of the most honourable character will do strange things sometimes. Politics seem to bring out special characteristics, even in good and honest men, characteristics never before dreamed of. This seems to be a case in point. But after a lapse of seven years for that court to send a man of Mr. Ellis's age to jail for thirty days, to the luxuries of a jail, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) said, to surroundings such as are only to be seen in the rooms occupied by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), to deprive Mr. Ellis of his liberty, and I understand that when he asked permission to attend divine service the court was silent and gave no answer, is obviously a display of excessive zeal. When such a man is sent to jail for publishing what was not in effect such as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) set out, which published articles that did not state that the judges were dishonest or anything worse than Mr. Justice Tuck might be a partisan, the act is a scandal to public life in Canada. It is admitted that the court has gone far beyond its jurisdiction. While I admit that the court should possess that right of inflicting imprisonment for contempt, it should only be exercised under proper conditions, and that was not such a case. I contend that the court should have tried the matter as a court would have done in England. If it had done so its members would have gained more credit for themselves, and the court would have stood higher in the estimation of the people of New Brunswick. It is certain that no court ever gained the affectionate and intelligent reverence of the people that was so anxious about its own dignity as to imprison a man for publishing a statement that might be construed to amount to a contempt of court. It is because I think the court has thus acted that I am in favour of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I am in favour of it because I believe it puts the case correctly before this Parliament and future Parliaments, and that while the courts are not bound by any means to follow the lines of a resolution of this Parliament they would not act as the Supreme Court of New Brunswick appears to have acted. I regret that we have to speak of the courts at all. My own feelings would be much better served if we never mentioned a court in Parliament. I have the greatest possible respect for the courts. Practising as I do before the courts I look upon them as the greatest security for the people, but when the court forgets itself and the instruments by which it gives judgment are such as ex-Judge Palmer, who gave this judgment, and who no doubt by his powerful intelligence controlled the judgment of the court, Parliament should interfere, least hereafter we should fall upon similar evil days. I am not afraid that similar cases to the Queen's election case will occur, for I think public opinion has advanced beyond that point; but while I have no fear on that head, I entertain fear that some other case might arise like the case of Mr. Ellis, and that the judges might forget themselves, and entertaining this view I am in favour of the resolution presented by the hon. member for Queen's.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, having been interested in the subject-matter of this discussion I had intended to be silent during the debate; but certain deceptive lines of argument, very much in keeping with the tone of the article which appeared in the 'Globe,' have come forward and forbid that I should remain silent. All along it has been intimated that this so-called attack upon Mr. Ellis was the subject of a conspiracy and combination between myself and the court of New Brunswick, or the members of the Bench and others of the Conservative party, and I wish, as far as I am able, to disabuse the minds of any hon. members who listen to me in that regard on that subject. I will not enter at the present moment upon the facts in relation to the Queen's County election, but I will deal with this matter from the time that the rule nisi for prohibition was issued. After I had been served with an order for a recount I expected to receive it, and I fully understood that such move would be made. Then I directed my attorney to apply to Mr. Justice Tuck for a writ of prohibition, entertaining a firm and honest belief that I was entitled to that writ. I felt under the law, as I then understood it, that the judge of an inferior court had exceeded his authority, and that I had a right to demand from the judge of a Superior Court this rule for prohibition, and I may say that it was without discussing the matter with any one, except my attorney, that this movement was made. As soon as that rule was served upon the parties interested, then the articles which have been complained of appeared in the 'Globe.' Without consulting Mr. Justice Tuck or any person except my attorney, I directed that those proceedings should be taken. It is true, as hon. gentlemen have said, there were other courses of procedure. But if there is blame in regard to the course that was taken the blame should fall upon me, the responsibilities are mine, and I am willing to bear them. I directed that course, and I directed it with the full intention of carrying it to the end, and I may say to the credit of Mr. Justice Tuck or Mr. Justice Palmer, and every other judge of the Supreme Court, that from the moment those proceedings were taken down to the present day, I have never discussed the subject in any way with any member of that Bench. As the case made progress it was widely discussed. Some laughed at it; some condemned it; some urged me to delay it; some urged me to drop it; more urged me to proceed. These did not take that effect upon my mind. I felt that I had a right to deal with it, and I felt that I had a right to deal with it from the standpoint that I had been dealing with it. Strange to say though, in the many phases of public opinion that I found expressed in the province of New Brunswick and in the city of St. John, for every Conservative who urged me to go ahead and carry it to its final end, wherever there was a Conservative spoke to me and urged me in that line, I may add that two Liberals gave the like advice. And further, it is strange to say, that when Mr. Ellis was paying the penalty in the jail at Fredericton, there appeared to be numbers of prominent Liberals in the city of St. John who fairly hugged themselves with delight that this end had been reached. Why it was I will not undertake to say; but I find that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has undertaken to give Mr. Ellis a high certificate of character; a certificate which surpasses anything that I have ever heard said of him before. I must avail myself of the opportunity to take a little hand in this matter. I am sorry that it is forced upon me, but I must quote from some of the Liberal newspapers what has been said of Mr. Ellis in the past and how he stands. I think it is fair that I should lend a hand in assisting the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). He appears to think that his word ought to be good upon any subject, but in the province of New Brunswick, his word is not by any means a legal tender for any fact. I shall bring to his rescue a little donation from some of the Liberal papers. I prefer to take the Liberal ones, because it is not fair that I should do like him and quote from my own party papers. I like to take a Liberal paper because the Liberal editors appear to have a nicer and more easy flow of language when they are dealing with such subjects than the Tory editors have. So for a few moments I will occupy the time of the House in reading for the benefit of the hon. member from Queen's (Mr. Davies) a little certificate of character from New Brunswick, to show how it will correspond with his certificate of Mr. Ellis's character, and when he hands it down to Mr. Ellis perhaps he can reconcile it with his statements. This is from the St. John 'Telegraph,' the standard Liberal newspaper of New Brunswick, a paper that certainly none of the Liberals will refuse to believe in, because it is Mr. C. W. Weldon's newspaper. We will begin with Mr. Ellis's character on December 17th, 1887, from the St. John 'Telegraph':

LET MR. ELLIS RESIGN.

Mr. J. V. Ellis, M.P., in the paper which he controls, the 'Globe,' to wit, has openly declared in favour of, and advised, the political union of Canada with the United States. We submit, that this is a direct breach of faith, with hundreds of his constituents, and that it is a violation of the spirit if not the letter of the oath of allegiance to which he subscribed as a member of the Commons. That oath, as correctly quoted in our morning contemporary of yesterday, is as follows:—"I, John Valentine Ellis, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria." Can a man having so sworn, keep to either the letter or the spirit of his oath and advise five millions of British subjects to abandon their allegiance to Her Majesty's throne and Government? We submit the question to the thousands of loyal men who read the 'Telegraph' and are accustomed to regard an oath as a sacred thing. We subject it to the conscience of Mr. Ellis himself, and ask him how he will answer it to God and to his country. It is very painful to have such a matter to discuss. But if all the ties binding the citizens in loyalty to His Sovereign, and the solemn obligation of an oath superadded, still leave him free to cancel the throwing off of allegiance, then what remains to bind the conscience or the honour of any man? Behind this lies the question of the breach of faith between Mr. Ellis and his constituents. As we have said he could not have been a candidate of the Liberal party, much less could he have been elected in St. Johns, had he before the election made known the disloyalty which was even then in his heart and thought. Behind this still lies the question whether the House of Commons, composed of men sworn to bear faithful and true allegiance to their Sovereign and their country, can suffer to sit in their midst one who openly expresses a desire to substitute the Stars and Stripes for the Union Jack in Canada. These are some of the questions forced to the front by the disloyal utterances of the 'Globe,' for which Mr. J. V. Ellis, the representative of St. John in the Commons is responsible. They are questions of urgency and gravity which must be grappled with. They are questions which transcend mere party issues, and compel the 'Telegraph' to deal with Mr. Ellis precisely as we would deal with a member of the Conservative party found guilty of like faithlessness to his country. We again call upon Mr. Ellis to resign his seat in the Commons. We believe that he has forfeited the right to sit in that Assembly. And apart from that he has made so great a departure from the principles of the party whose standard bearer he was in this city, that he is in duty bound to restore again to their hands the seat which in a mistaken sense of his loyalty and integrity they entrusted to him. Let him resign and submit to the verdict of the people of St. John whether he can remain their representative. The Liberal party, hitherto led by and composed of loyal men cannot afford to bear the odium of an annexationist amongst their representatives. Even Mr. Baird has resigned rather than again face fellow representatives to whom his course had become nauseating. We cannot conceive of Mr. Ellis again taking his seat among the loyal Commons, knowing what must await him there. Let him resign, and at once end the pitiful chapter. By so doing he will relieve his party of a load too great for any party to carry, save the Commons the necessity of applying an extreme penalty, and give St. John the opportunity to elect a representative who will be "faithful and true" to his Sovereign in a sense that Mr. Ellis can never be. Does he await a requisition? If so he can be accommodated.

On the 22nd December the St. John 'Telegraph' says :

Resign, of course not. Any other than an annexationist would do so rather than hold on to office in dishonour, but it cannot be expected of the class we are now dealing with. They may be expected to pocket the last dollar they can obtain of fees and indemnity from the respective offices to which, in the guise of true and fair allegiance they have attained. Cupidity and cowardice are both native to the annexationist's heart. They will take the last dollar they can get from the Canadian people, under their oaths of allegiance, and who will say they do not, even now, receive other moneys from across the border as the price of their perfidy?

Here is some more of it that will be very pleasing and very applicable to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies).

We submit that both treason and perjury lie unconcealed in the advocacy of annexation by a man who has taken the oath of allegiance. We may not know at present what inducement from across the border is the motive power behind this infamous course. What we do know is that if Mr. Ellis's service and devotion to a foreign power is not paid for by that power, it is a remarkable instance of a man engaging voluntarily in a very dirty business without remuneration.

Political Marplot: that is the name they used to apply to me. Let us see how that sounds for Mr. Ellis :

When Commercial Union and Unrestricted Reciprocity were brought before the Canadian people during the past summer and fall, the ministerial press brought forward the charge that the advocates of these proposed measures were more or less tainted with the desire for political union with the United States. The charge was resented by the loyal section of the Liberal press, because it was, as far as they were concerned, untrue, and at the same time damaging. At this juncture, Mr. J. V. Ellis, the elected representative of the Liberals of St. John, proclaimed through his newspaper, for himself, and those for whom he speaks, that what they are after is annexation pure and simple. He need not say that no more deadly blow could be struck by Mr. Ellis and his associates towards killing the reciprocity movement than this. It has had its effect. In Shelburne, where the Liberal standard was carried by one of the most patriotic, intelligent and deserving of the young representatives of the party, defeat followed, and the old Liberal county was lost because of the more than doubtful loyalty of the prominent advocates of reciprocity. We venture to affirm that the annexationist taint has not yet touched Mr. Robertson of Shelburne; but what of his newspaper support? In view of their recent utterances, the 'Halifax Chronicle and Recorder' must be set down as the humble apologists for the open advocacy of annexation, who are only deterred by the fear of consequences from taking a more open and disloyal stand.

These journals are doing their utmost, whether intentionally or not, to rally the loyal sentiment of the country to the support of Sir John Macdonald. That is the first and direct political effect of their public course. With a vast number of people in Canada the country is considered before party. In this case it is so with good reason. Annexation contemplates the destruction of Canadian parties, for if the traitorous crew could have their way both the Liberal and Conservative parties would be swept away to make room for the Democrats and the Republicans. What care these men for party ties or party prospects? Mr. Ellis is very willing to deceive the Liberal electorate with simulated loyalty at election times in order that he might write M.P. after his name, or capture a post office, but he has never been known to resign a public position in which a dollar of Canadian money can be pocketed. His hatred of the flag of the country does not extend to the coin of the realm.

If he remains a recognized member of the Liberal party he will continue to be a political marplot, aiding to defeat its every legitimate project and aim, as he and the annexationist clique are now defeating the party candidates and the prospects of reciprocity. We have brought these matters as forcibly as we could to the notice of the Liberal party in St. John and the province. Mr. Ellis has not apparently the decency to resign. It therefore becomes the duty of the party in its organized capacity to take official notice of his action. We give them fair warning. The party must repudiate Mr. J. V. Ellis or share the responsibility of his course. It is a good time for those representative liberals who are still loyal to the Queen to speak out.

Now, Sir, the 'Telegraph' does not appear to be alone. There appears to be an accumulation of articles written in honour of this gentleman, whom the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., is certifying for :

'DAILY TELEGRAPH.'

Since Mr. Ellis threw off the mask and declared for annexation, he has been called upon to resign his seat in Parliament. We did this on purely public grounds, in the interest, as we understand it, of the city, the province, the Dominion and the Liberal party. We were not alone in the opinion that Mr. Ellis is morally bound to give up his seat. That view is shared, as we believed, by the great majority of the St. John electors. It is shared by a large number of journals which we receive in exchange. We subjoin a few extracts among a large number, taken from journals which have more or less strongly endorsed the 'Telegraph's' demand for Mr. Ellis's resignation :

'COLONIAL STANDARD.'

Mr. Ellis has been told that he does not truly represent the people of St. John in this matter, and he has been asked to submit his conduct to the judgment of the people who elected him last winter. This only honourable course, it is hardly necessary to say, Mr. Ellis declines to take.

'HAMILTON SPECTATOR.'

The 'Telegraph' is right. No man who is a traitor to the country he lives in ought to be permitted to hold office in that country.

'LIVERPOOL TIMES.'

The 'Telegraph' concludes a lengthy article on the question as follows: Let him resign and at once end the pitiful chapter, etc. This is as it should be. The sooner traitors to their Queen and country—like Ellis, of St. John, and Longley, of Nova Scotia—are allowed no foothold in either of Canada's great political parties, the better it will be for all concerned.

'PRESBYTERIAN WITNESS.'

It is unquestionably immoral to take the oath of allegiance and then propose the dismemberment of the empire. There is a right way and a wrong way of inaugurating a revolution. If Mr. Ellis wants a revolution let him get out of Parliament.

'BELLEVILLE INTELLIGENCER.'

The sentiments expressed by the 'Telegraph' do it honour, and its demands that Mr. Ellis should ask the verdict of his constituents upon his traitorous declaration is eminently proper.

'CHIGNECTO POST.'

These annexation views having been announced by Mr. Ellis since his election, a sense of self-respect will lead him to resign. It has long been the practice in England for a member, who, being elected on one set of principles, as reason could change them, to promptly return the trust of the people. It is contrary to the old spirit of our institutions for a representative to hold one set of views and his constituency another.

'CHICAGO CANADIAN-AMERICAN.'

The St. John 'Telegraph,' a Reform organ, challenges Mr. Ellis to resign his seat and test public opinion on the annexation sentiment expressed by him in his paper, the 'Globe.' This is a good suggestion. Mr. Ellis ought to have quite a following in his city. He was elected to Parliament at the last election, defeating a very strong candidate, and he should not to-day be without honour in his own province.

'LONDON CANADIAN GAZETTE.'

It is hardly unnatural, therefore that the St. John 'Telegraph' should call upon him to resign his seat as Liberal member for St. John City, seeing that the views, expressed by him in the 'Globe' regarding annexation to the United States are utterly disavowed by the Liberal leaders and the Liberal party.

'WOODSTOCK PRESS.'

For months he has been indignant that Mr. Baird should sit in Parliament without the expressed wishes of a majority of his constituents, now let us see if he will be as sensitive and honourable as he has been preaching that others should be. With a general public not in sympathy with Mr. Ellis we should hope to see such a consensus of opinion against him in St. John and in his own party that he will adopt the very advice he has been tendering others and resign. This, unless he receives the approval of the Liberal party, will be the only proper course for him to pursue in justice to himself, to the principles that he now professes, the party which elected him, or the government under which he lives. Resign and contest a constituency on the annexation question.

If there are wrongs and grievances in Canada, the Canadian people are themselves solely responsible for their existence. We have no just grievance against Great Britain. She lends us her protection, and does not ask that we shall contribute in any way to her exchequer. Our taxation is wholly for our own purposes and we have full control of our own affairs. Why then should we rebel? The thought is most repugnant to the great majority of our people. The resurrected literature of the 'Globe' affords no pretext for its advocacy of annexation. That advocacy is clearly seditious and disloyal. It is made without pretext of justification. It is made by a man who misrepresents the city of St. John and whose holding a representative position is a libel upon the fair fame of our city. He ought at once to resign, but it seems he has not, in that regard, even so much sense of decency and propriety as Mr. Baird.

We find other articles speaking of him as a perjured traitor, and other articles in the sense that he should resign doubly as strong as any that have called for my resignation. There was a time when I was called upon to resign. It is certain I was not forced to resign, and how different my conduct in that respect must appear to the minds of any one who look fairly upon it, as compared with the conduct of Mr. Ellis or the conduct of any other Liberal who could be named. You cannot mention to me a Liberal in the Federal or any of the Local Parliaments of Canada who, when he once had control of an adversary and once closed the door upon him, failed to hold the clasp and keep his adversary there. I was called upon to resign, and was told that I dare not resign. Yet my seat was as safe as it possibly could be. All possibilities of an election petition being decided against me were past; but the idea was heralded broadcast, and very blatantly by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., that I dare not resign my seat and face my constituency. It was very largely to show that there was no such opinion held of me in the county of Queen's that I went again before the electorate. I dared to go then, I dare to go now, and I will dare to go again. Now, I have listened to the arguments of the hon. gentleman about the great burden that was thrown upon Mr. Ellis in the carrying on of this case, and the number of years it has been carried on, and the way in which it was protracted, and the immense costs heaped upon him. If any hon. gentleman will take the trouble to look fairly into the matter, they will find that every delay was caused by Mr. Ellis and his counsel. He invariably had friends in court, as the old saying runs. There was not a term when my counsel was not on hand to proceed with this cause and carry it to an issue; but as repeatedly as he appeared, that cause was burked and prevented from being tried. We did not complain, we did not wish to complain, but we were determined not to let it drop. Now, time changes all things, and there came a time when they could no longer burk or hinder a fair trial, and at last we got a final judgment and sentence. That judgment carries with it costs. A great cry is made about the immense costs that Mr. Ellis is condemned to pay, the amount is enlarged and magnified away into thousands, and the Liberal hat is passed around all over the Dominion, and the dollars and cents are gathered in until quite a sum is handed over to Mr. Ellis. To use the language of that very truthful member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), he has had to pay heavy costs. Well, Mr. Speaker, he has never paid a dollar of costs. Every cent of that contribution is in Mr. Ellis's pocket to-day. Not a dollar is paid; and if he can avoid paying, he certainly intends to do so. I give him credit if he can, but he will find us after him as long as it is possible to follow him. But these things appear very different in the way they are expressed by the hon. members who are bringing this case forward in order to make a martyr of Mr. Ellis, in order to prepare him for future elections. But, as I have told the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), it will require a stronger certificate of character than he can give him, it will require stronger arguments than he can produce, it will require a better word and promise than he can give in New Brunswick, to make a martyr of Mr. Ellis.

Mr. GILLMOR. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that Mr. Ellis has not paid any costs?

Mr. BAIRD. I do say so.

Mr. GILLMOR. I have been informed that he has paid between $500 and $600 already.

Mr. BAIRD. You may tell your informant that he is mistaken.

Mr. SCRIVER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say a word with reference to the collection made on behalf of Mr. Ellis? He says that Mr. Ellis has it in his pocket. I have the word of the Hon. Mr. Lewin that that money has been deposited in the bank, and that Mr. Ellis has not received one cent of it.

Mr. BAIRD. I do not think that Mr. Lewin's word is any better than mine, or mine any better than his.

Mr. SCRIVER. Any gentleman who knows Mr. Lewin knows that his word is good.

Mr. BAIRD. I know that Mr. Ellis's advocate stated to-day that the costs were paid, and I know that is untrue. That is as far as I can go with it. As I have told you, Sir, it will require better authority than the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., to make up a certificate of character for Mr. Ellis. I am sorry to say that such has been the conduct of Mr. Ellis in the city of St. John, that his very colleagues have been forced to speak of him as they have. His conduct has been harsh instead of high-minded and unoffending, as the learned gentleman from Queen's had the impudence to tell you. He has for a long lifetime enjoyed a seat in the editorial chair, and he has never during that lifetime failed to use the privilege of inflicting torture and misrepresentation upon any he could visit it upon. If he had to deal with a political enemy, it appeared as if it were impossible for him to deal fairly. His pen became a dagger and his ink as mean a poison as ever entered the current of human life. If he dealt with the judiciary, it was to impugn their motives, to question their integrity, to proclaim to the world that they were bartering away their honesty and their honour. It was to teach the public that their judgments were bought and sold and void of all respect. If he were dealing with a fellow-citizen who had been unfortunate, who had fallen into financial disaster or anything of that kind, it appeared to be his delight to jump on him with both feet well down. If he dealt with State or Government, then what do we find? We find that Farrar and Wiman were his patron saints. From the Queen upon her throne, to whom he had sworn allegiance, as stated in his own newspaper, down to the meanest subject administering her laws, he would undermine and overturn all authority. In this way Mr. Ellis has put in his lifetime, instead of being the quiet, innocent, unoffending man that the hon. member for Queen's has pictured him. Therefore, I say we will require something more than that hon. gentleman's word. Mr. Ellis was very shrewd, very sagacious in selecting that hon. gentleman to advocate his cause in Parliament. It was a cause that required a good deal of glossing over, that required a good deal of colouring, that required an advocate who had an utter disregard of facts—

Some hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not accuse the hon. member who has moved this resolution of having a disregard for facts.

Mr. BAIRD. I withdraw the expression, and I am very sorry I have not the privilege of using it. I think I have the right to place these things before the public in their proper light and in a way which no one in the city of St. John or the province of New Brunswick would have the courage to contradict. I bring them up only because I am actually forced to do so. I feel that I have always been dealt with unfairly in relation to the Queen's County election. It is true that great difficulties arose. It is true that at the time I went into Queen's County, matters were so arranged that I had to meet with a loaded voters' list. It is true that the voters' lists were so manipulated that I could not be possibly returned.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. BAIRD. I cheerfully faced the difficulties I had to meet, and then, after the judgment of the returning officer was given, I did not for a moment suppose that I was doing what I was not entitled to do. It was a legal question. I believed it was a question fairly debatable on fair and reasonable grounds; and when I accepted the declaration of that returning officer, I did not believe that I was doing what was wrong in the eyes of the law, or the eye of the public. It would not have been thought anything of on the part of a Liberal to have done the same thing. However, it appeared to have been a mistake on my part, and I believe to-day that I did myself an injustice. I could have taken the outside track and given my opponent the inside track and then have beaten him; but, believing that the shorter course was the correct one, and that it was my right to take the seat and leave him to take the courts, I brought down on myself a tirade of abuse from that day to this. It appears that in my case there is to be no forgiveness for such things as this. It appears that the Liberal party are determined to follow it in a spirit of barbarian ferocity. While I on my part have done what none of them have dared to do—resigned my seat to go back to face the constituency fairly, and in the courts, in the House and everywhere else, I have gone on—it is true persistently, yet I have tried to go on fairly—allowing the courts to give their judgments, allowing the people to give their verdict, and doing what seemed to me my duty. If these hon. gentlemen feel that they are doing right, if they feel that this is the best course for them to pursue, I am prepared to say that they will never compel me to take one backward step. It is unnecessary that I should go into the law of the question. I have heard the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) state the law of the case in a way I could not understand. I have heard his statement fairly answered by the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Hazen). I have listened to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Nova Scotia (Mr. Fraser), and I must say that I could not see any particular point that he made. It is true he dealt with Mr. Justice Palmer from a standpoint of his own, speaking of the impropriety of his sitting as a judge and giving judgment in the way he did. The inference from what the hon. gentleman said would be that Mr. Justice Palmer had given judgment after the articles published in the St. John 'Globe' were before him; while the fact is, if I am correct in my recollection, that judgment had been given long before the article appeared in the newspapers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman allow me a word. There was no reference to the judgment. The statement was that Mr. Justice Palmer gave sentence, or joined in pronouncing sentence, two months after the article published in the St. John 'Globe' accusing him of having accepted a bribe. Whether that is right or wrong, we leave the hon. gentleman to his own conclusions.

Mr. BAIRD. The hon. gentleman is now referring to the sentence. I was speaking of the judgment. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) spoke of the judgment. That is why I raised this objection. Mr. Justice Palmer could have had no motive such as the hon. gentleman speaks of at that time; there was no such article then before him.

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, Mr. Justice Palmer did not give sentence; it was the Supreme Court of New Brunswick that gave sentence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Of which Mr. Justice Palmer was one of the judges—one of the three.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing further I wish to remark on the subject. I leave it now for the further discussion of hon. members who may wish to discuss it.

Mr. WELDON. Having regard to the lateness of the hour and the fulness of the discussion thus far, I shall speak briefly. The hon. member for Queen's, in introducing this motion, took care to say that this House of Commons was not a court of appeal. But he paid scant courtesy to his own statement for the remaining part of his speech proceeded upon the assumption that this High Court of Parliament was a Court of Appeal from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. Over half his time was spent in condemning the rule of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on mixed points of law and fact, arguing against the decision of that court, that the writings of Mr. Ellis were a contempt. He appealed to this tribunal from the court of New Brunswick with the argument that a writ of prohibition from Mr. Justice Tuck of the Supreme Court would not run to the county court, his argument being based upon the decision in the courts of other provinces directly in opposition to that in the court of the province of New Brunswick. I wish, Mr. Speaker, that he had not disregarded his own proposition, for nothing can be truer or more germane to the subject than to say that this House of Commons is not constituted to be, is going very far from its duty when it undertakes to be, a court of appeal. What a preposterous court of appeal it would be. If we are a court of appeal, we members of this House are 215 judges. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), is one of these judges. The hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), is another. I have the honour to be another of the judges. Take notice what shocking language is used by one of these judges to another. One of the judges of this court speaks of a brother judge as a conspirator, says he should be in the penitentiary, says that he stole his seat. These statements are either true or false. If they are true, it is quite clear that a gentleman here ought not to occupy a seat in this High Court of Parliament; if they are not true, the hon. gentleman who makes these statements is a slanderer. But whether true or not, how about the rights of the rest of us who must sit with one or other of these judges? We do ourselves no credit by such language. We all know that we use rather the language of partisans or advocates, that we are not constituted to discharge well the duties of a court of justice. We have not the temper; we are too numerous; we do not patiently hear argument. We apply rather the rules of counsel, and advocate and find it difficult and almost impossible to apply the rule of judges. I wish to give a few reasons why I shall vote against the motion of the hon. member for Queen's. Without referring to the recital of the facts, I come to his motion proper. He asks us to censure the returning officer in intemperate language for something done by that officer in 1888, he asks us to adopt the following:—

That in the opinion of this House the action of the returning officer Dunn, in refusing to return George G. King who had polled a majority of the votes at an election duly held and in returning Geo. F. Baird, the minority candidate, instead was a gross violation of law and justice, a wicked and indefensible outrage upon the electors of Queen's County, N.B., and a precedent pregnant with such danger to the future political government of Canada as to have demanded and justified on the part of the newspaper press the severest possible condemnation and censure.

We have a rule in the English law that no man can be twice put in jeopardy on the same charge. We brought Mr. Dunn seven years ago to this House, and he stood there at the Bar and was tried. The memory of that trial will be fresh in the mind of every member who then sat in this Chamber. All will remember how complete a farce and fiasco it was. The whole trial broke down. He was called upon to answer the questions of hon. gentlemen, and when the questionings were done, honourable gentlemen opposite stared at us and we stared at them, until Mr. Landry, who represented the county of Kent, moved that Mr. Dunn be discharged. My hon. friend from St. John is strictly correct, and the denial of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) is entirely wrong, when the former gentleman said that no attempt was made, when he had brought that accused person to the Bar for trial, to punish him or deal with him in any way. Why then again drag up this charge seven years afterwards and undertake to punish a man we have already tried? Further, the hon. gentleman asks us to say:

That in the further opinion of this House the jurisdiction claimed by the judges of the Superior Courts of Record of punishing by fine and commitment to prison for constructive contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited and exercised by judges, who are at the same time judges of the law, of the fact, of the intention and of the sentence, and whose decisions are given without the aid of a jury and without being subject to the review, is opposed to the genius and spirit of constitutional liberty and ought never to be exercised where any other pertinent remedy can be found or recourse had to any other method of obtaining justice.

If the hon. gentleman were introducing a Bill proposing to abolish this whole doctrine of constructive contempt, I would ask him to carry his doctrine further before agreeing to give him my support. If he is sincere—and I must suppose him to be sincere—in a desire to enlarge the liberties of the Queen's subjects and to curb dangerous powers that may be exercised arbitrarily, let him begin with this Parliament with which he has more to do. We have larger powers than the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. We have dangerous powers, and we have not always shown too great moderation in the exercise of those powers. Liberty of speech is as much in danger from the arbitrary exercise of the power of this House, and much more so than it is from the arbitrary exercise of the power of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. In this very case, seven years ago, to which our memories are brought back by the hon. member's speech, he himself, with his own lips, moved a motion asking this House, which means the Conservative majority of this House, for they controlled the proceedings of this House at that time, to take one member out of his seat and put another in his place. I cite this instance merely to show what large dormant powers, capable of great wrong and great mischief are vested in this House. We have exercised them sparingly, when, as we thought we were protecting the rights of the minority. In that instance I refer to, many thought we had not the power, others thought we had, but we forebore to use it, saying that the aggrieved parties might go back to New Brunswick to their own court, whose doors were still open, and ask for redress there. They were doing a dangerous thing when they asked this Parliament to take control and vote A out of his seat and put B in his place. And so in this particular matter, the power of the Supreme Court of the province to commit for contempt it is argued, is a dangerous one, because they are judges in their own cause, or, to use the words of the hon. member for Queen's, they are prosecutors, judges, and jurors in their own case. Sir, his statement was exactly wrong with respect to the trial in question. The Supreme Court of New Brunswick was not the prosecutor, and if my hon. friend will read the 27th and 28th volumes of the New Brunswick reports, he will find that one of the objections taken to the proceedings was on the ground that the judges themselves were not the prosecutors. He complains again that in this process there is no intervention of a jury. There is practically no need of a jury, there are no complicated facts to be ascertained, there is no body of witnesses to be brought in, there is no question of the credibility of the evidence taken. The man who is charged with contempt can purge himself from contempt by making a distinct oath of denial, and there is really no need for the intervention of a jury in this regard, for the facts in question are so plain and simple. He points out that the power is a large power, that it is capable of abuse. Mr. Speaker, the higher the repositories of power are under our constitution, the greater the danger of abuse, and we must presume, and it is right for any parliamentarian to presume that the higher the authority in the state, the more sparingly and properly will such authority use those great powers. Take the power that the Attorney General has in the way of criminal prosecutions. He has the power to stay any criminal proceeding by entering a 'nolle prosequi.' It is a power capable of abuse, but we trust to the high professional standing of the men, and to the strength of public opinion, to protect the exercise of that power from abuse. But he who attacks this power on the ground that it is capable of great abuse, must support his position by facts, and I submit that in this cause before us the hon. gentleman has not done so. He has read from the St. John 'Globe,' an expression which said that justice was not wanted and therefore Mr. Justice Tuck was called in. What could be more offensive or defamatory to Mr. Justice Tuck? I need not repeat the other expressions that are used. To be sure the expression "partisan judge," and other similar expressions were used by Mr. Ellis as having no reference to Judge Tuck; but I do not think any member of Parliament, sitting in this Chamber, and hearing the extracts which the hon. member for Queen's has read, will agree with him, not one of his own colleagues will agree with him, that those expressions do not apply to a judge of a Supreme Court in respect of his issue of that order nisi, and that they are anything more or less than contempt of court, and the maligning of a judge. Well, then, the court was maligning, the newspaper editor was in contempt, and the court began to deal with him. Six years ran on. I think myself it was easy to explain why Mr. Ellis should, in 1887, looking to the excitement of the month of March in that year, have written, in hot blood. Political passions were roused, undoubtedly, to a white heat in that province, and there is no difficulty in explaining how an impulsive man should have written as he did. But the thing that is hard to explain, and the thing which, more than any other in the whole matter, brings discredit upon Mr. Ellis—against his character I am not able to utter one word, nor do I desire to say one word—but the one incident in this whole transaction from 1887 to this hour that does discredit to Mr. Ellis, is that when the days of hot blood had gone by, when passions had abated, he refused to acknowledge his error.

After six years, he knew that Judge Tuck, who had been attacked so unjustly, whether he had properly or improperly construed the statute, had performed a judicial act that had to be performed on an ex parte hearing. Many think to this hour he was quite wrong, others think differently; but whichever way that question was decided, whether a judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick had or had not power to issue an order prohibiting a judge of an inferior court from going on to exercise his power of re-count, whichever way that power was exercised, it was a judicial power exercised by a judge, and on the face of it there is no evidence of bad faith. Now, long afterwards, when Mr. Ellis knew that he had been wrong, as every man in New Brunswick knows now that he was wrong, that there was no excuse and no justification for writing what he did; then, what does the man of honour do? What does a true gentleman do? Mr. Ellis is not the first man who has made a mistake, he is not the first impulsive man who has said that which he thought was justifiable at the time, but in cooler moments he found was unjustifiable. I say a man who has a jealous regard for his own honour, when he finds that he was wrong, will say that he was wrong. It hurts no one to say so; and if Mr. Ellis had said that he was wrong, Chief Justice Allen and his colleagues would have dropped the matter, and there would have been no fine and no imprisonment. My hon. friend from St. John read the first paragraph in the judgment of Mr. Justice King, now in the Supreme Court of Canada, to show that the judges were looking for and hoping for a retraction on the part of Mr. Ellis, which would put an end to the whole matter. There was no desire for vengeance. I do not know the secrets of the judges' room in the Supreme Court, but there is a tradition among the barristers which I have heard, and which every member of the New Brunswick Bar has heard. It has been told me that the most strict and most severe disciplinarian on the Bench, the one most stubbornly insisting upon this power of commitment, was the Chief Justice, and the New Brunswick barristers scoff and scout the theory of the hon. member for Queen's that the Chief Justice, being an old man whose intellectual strength was not what it had been in his prime, was overborne by a stronger will, that of Mr. Justice Palmer. There is no member of the New Brunswick Bar, Liberal or Conservative, who does not scout that solution of the difficulty, and the hon. member cannot name one who will endorse his theory in that regard. As a matter of fact, I have heard months ago, after these very articles in the 'Globe' were published that the hon. member read—and I think most improperly read, attacking a judge who has resigned from his seat—that it was notorious that Mr. Justice Palmer was one of the judges who stood out most strongly for clemency. I have heard that, and I am sure that it is the common belief of the Bar that the theory of the hon. gentleman is altogether wrong. We had a citation very much in point, and I say so freely, given by the hon. member, from the late Master of Rolls, Sir George Jessel, in which he points out that this power of commitment is a dangerous power, is one capable of abuse and is one that must be exercised carefully, and is one that wise and temperate judges would use sparingly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is not all.

Mr. WELDON. Then I only go that far. I do not remember what the hon. gentleman considered to be the crucial point.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The words "and never should be resorted to in cases where any other pertinent remedy is open."

Mr. WELDON. I am very far from agreeing with that opinion if it means that a judge whose good name was assailed, as Mr. Justice Tuck's good name was assailed in New Brunswick seven years ago, is compelled to go to a court of justice and enter a libel suit, and I should deplore the fact that a judge should be driven to that extremity in order to vindicate himself. I may remind the House, however, that there is no authority for that. We remember the rule of English law, that no action shall lie against a judge of a Superior Court by reason of any word spoken or any act done in the course of the judicial proceedings, that no action shall lie in case of words used, no matter how malevolent or malicious or false or irrelevant they may appear. Why does the English law give that protection to judges of the Superior Court? Not to enable lawlessness and wrong-doing to go on untrammelled and unchecked; but the law takes knowledge of this, that these judges are professional men of the highest class, that cases of abuse in the nature of things must be few, and if there are any of a flagrant character, there is an extreme constitutional remedy; and the reason is mainly this, that it is better in the long run, in the thousand cases in any country, that occasionally some hardship should be done to the reputation of one of the Queen's subjects than that the whole body of the judges of Her Majesty's courts should be in their proceedings harassed by fear that this or the other disappointed suitor will institute a civil action. It guarantees that the judges shall be able to deal with all matters in a free and open manner, and not be coerced by fear of punishment by reason of action taken by vexed suitors, and no punishment is so mischievous as a parliamentary censure, instigated possibly by party feeling, inspired by a desire to gain party advantage, or as in this case, as has been suggested, by a desire to place a chaplet round the brow of Mr. Ellis in order to prepare him better as a parliamentary candidate for St. John, or to perpetuate a quarrel, or intensify a quarrel between the Supreme Court of my province and the whole press of Canada. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has pointed out that the whole newspaper press, both Conservative and Liberal, have for a moment forgotten party in their desire to defend a member of their own craft and put a ring of bayonets around one of their own number, neither knowing or caring whether the attacked journalist was right or wrong, taking little pains to obtain correct and accurate knowledge in regard to the merits of the case, but demanding the reason why the court punished one of their number. Even the independent or Conservative newspapers outside the province of New Brunswick have shown a lamentable lack of acquaintance with the facts of the case. They have proceeded on the supposition that Mr. Ellis has been punished for criticising the soundness of Mr. Justice Tuck's construction of the statute. Not one of the newspapers in the western provinces said, or apparently, although they attacked the action of the Supreme Court, knew the crime committed by Mr. Ellis, or were aware of the opportunity given him to apologize, and of the patience and forbearance of the court. I ask the newspapers championing the cause of the editor of the St. John 'Globe' to be as fair to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, which has no representative here and cannot speak here or make its defence, as they are to their newspaper colleague, and that they will remember that those judges are as jealous of their good name and fame as a journalist can be. They would like to be better thought of in the cities in the west than they are under the present misstatement of the facts, and I do not think the newspaper press by its action in regard to this case has increased its reputation with the reading public, by showing extreme zeal to take for granted that one of their own order has been wronged by the judges of the Supreme Court, and by doing this without having given patience and industry to an examination into the full facts of the case. I will not be so reckless as to impute a spirit of unfairness to those newspapers, but I impute to them a lack of industry and patience in obtaining details in respect to the dispute between the court and the press. The feeling I have in this regard is that the newspapers seem to have combined to throw their whole weight and strength, with a few notable exceptions, to condemn that court in our little province, a court which is as jealous of its fame as is any of the courts in any of the larger provinces. I am proud to be a New Brunswicker born, and you cannot wound a New Brunswick man more than by reflecting on the Supreme Court of his province. Our province is a little more than one hundred years old. When New Brunswick was made a province separate from Nova Scotia, a company of scholars and gentlemen, U.E. loyalists and their sons, many of whom had been educated at Harvard and Yale, came into the province and that court was organized. I could recall the old names of which we are proud, and they form a splendid body; I could speak of the Chipmans, Parkers, and Ritchies, whose names every New Brunswick boy regards with honour. The admirable traditions of the court have remained from that day to this. In New Brunswick we have no institution reflecting the best intelligence and character of our people as does the Supreme Court of the province; we are proud of it, and it is worthy of the province; and we must be forgiven if we speak with a little extra warmth and resent with unusual force any attack made on the good name of the Supreme Court of the province. I deplore and regret extremely the statements which have been made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). The effect of the hon. gentleman's statements going abroad uncontradicted would be to make the people of Canada believe that our Supreme Court judges are a gang of thieves and bribe-takers. God forbid that any such false and erroneous opinion should prevail in any part of this Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman kindly state what statement I made which he deplores?

Mr. WELDON. The half of the hon. gentleman's speech. Also, almost every paragraph of the hon. gentleman's resolution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I challenge the hon. gentleman to refer to a statement.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman's motion reads as follows in its last clause:—

That the punishment inflicted by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick upon John V. Ellis in the month of October, 1893, for an alleged constructive contempt of court contained in articles published by him on the Queen's County election herein referred to was arbitrary, excessive and inimical to the public interest and deserving of censure.

The hon. gentleman uses the words "alleged constructive contempt." But that contempt was proved by language quoted by the hon. gentleman before this House. I agree in toto with the statement made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) that we are going beyond our rights in sitting in judgment on sentences passed in this or any other court in this country. We are all human, and as members of Parliament we have no right to express the opinion that the judges should not have done this and that. I will not, however, enter into that subject or give any colour or support to the claim that Parliament has the right to sit in judgment on such matter. For this reason I will vote against the motion which declares that the court is deserving of censure. The last statement is in fact entirely inaccurate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I challenge the hon. gentleman to cite one English case where constructive contempt was made to include three punishments, fine, imprisonment, and payment of costs?

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman will not change the issue. I have not been very long in this House, but I am too old to allow the hon. gentleman to alter his resolution by word of mouth. The hon. gentleman is now hedging and bringing a new element into the controversy. I will give the hon. gentleman a number of cases, not one, two, or three, but if the patience of the House will allow me more than that number. There is the case of James Tuohy, the publisher of a Dublin newspaper, who had reflected upon a petitioner in a divorce case, and he was dealt with by the court, Mr. Justice Butt being the judge, and was held in contempt. A writ of attachment was ordered to issue and he was fined £100 sterling—two and a half times as much as the fine in the Ellis case—and the court decided that he should be compelled to pay the costs as between solicitor and client.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is a fine and costs, was there imprisonment there, too?

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. gentleman possesses his soul in patience I will give him another case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Answer, was there imprisonment there?

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. gentleman will be patient I will give him all that he wants and more than he wants. If the hon. gentleman reads up the case of Steele vs. Hutchings' 'Weekly Notes,' 1879, page 18, he will find again that costs were given.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But was there imprisonment also?

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. gentleman will look up the case of Will vs. Corcoran, Common Pleas Division, 69; if the hon. gentleman will look up the case of Little vs. Thompson, 2 Beaven 129; if he will look up the case of the Plating Company vs. Farquharson, 17 Chancery, page 57—

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will you read Lord Justice James's statement in that Plating case?

Mr. WELDON. I have read it, but I have not got it here. If the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to hand it over to me.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Lord Justice James in that case says that costs are sometimes given in lieu of imprisonment. That is the statement in the very case you were reading.

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to send over the book I will be obliged to him. I have a quotation here from the Master of the Rolls, Sir George Jessel, in which he said that: costs as between solicitor and client are sometimes given to the party moving.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) "Instead of committing to prison." You omitted those words.

Mr. WELDON. Send me the book, if you can.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have it in an extract here from Book 17, Chancery Division, page 57.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman had better leave it until we get the book. He is only putting his extracts against mine.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman challenge my statement?

Mr. WELDON. I admit nothing. I assert the accuracy of my own statements. I would refer the hon. gentleman to another case, the case of Jackson V. Mawby, Chancery Division, page 86, where the same principle was laid down. Now, Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I desire to say again that I will not lend my tongue to say one word in disparagement of Mr. Ellis. I know that gentleman well. He has sat in this Parliament with us. I know how highly he is estimated in his own city by his neighbours, and he is esteemed most by those who know him best. I will not say one word against him, except to repeat what I said in the beginning: that the one fatal mistake that gentleman made was in not taking the lead of his own mind and making an apology, when his own impulse was to make an apology, and when he knew he was wrong. There would have been no fine and no imprisonment had he done that. I should like to close my address by making an amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), were it not that the rules of the House do not permit it. I would like to move: that this House regards with disfavour any attempt to attack or disparage the judges of the Superior Courts of the country, when the accuser does not mean to go on to impeachment. Nothing can be more deplorable than that this House of Parliament, dealing with these judges of the land—and particularly when they are complained of in respect to the conduct of political trials—should keep them perpetually under the harrow, and in fear of parliamentary criticism when the person making the charge does not mean to go to impeachment. If these charges are believed to be correct by the person preferring them; if we believe our judges to be corrupt, we are bound to destroy them, if we believe them to be dishonest it is our duty to impeach them. Unless when charges are made in this House against our judges the member making such charges is prepared to go to impeachment; it would be better, far better that our judges should be left alone. It is neither fair nor just that we should keep them in perpetual fear and terror of Parliamentary censure. We have no right to do so, and no good results can be accomplished by our doing so. The dangers that loom ahead of us are not the dangers of despotism; the dangers ahead of us are the dangers of a turbulent democracy, and every prudent, faithful and patient man, anxious for the welfare of his country, must desire to strengthen all that tends towards social order, and to discourage all that points to anarchy. I have already quoted in this House the words of Jeremy Bentham: "In every commonwealth it is of supreme value that the people of the country shall believe they are getting justice; it is of supreme value that they shall have trust and confidence in their courts." The logic of that statement carries us, of course, to the duty of making good appointments to the Bench, and to the duty, also, of being patient and forbearing in the exercise of our power over the Bench of parliamentary criticism. We have put upon the judges of the Superior courts of all the provinces, a jurisdiction which they never asked for, and which they never thanked us for. We have forced on them the power to deal with these election trials, and they get no additional remuneration for exercising that function. They dislike this power which we have compelled them to exercise. We ourselves used to exercise it through a committee of the House, but we found ourselves incapable of doing it properly, and now that we have thrown this unwelcome duty on our judges, we ought, in all common fairness, to be the last persons who should go boxing them about on one ear and on the other, because they may have displeased some who are disappointed in election trials. The judges are doing our work, and we should be thankful to them. It is a work that we have compelled them to do, and they have a right to ask us, in return, to be patient and forbearing and reasonable before we attack them. If you look at the 'Hansard' of twenty years ago, you will find that many of the coolest and wisest heads in this House of Commons protested against the statute of 1874, throwing election trials upon the courts, for the very reason, that if the judges were obliged to preside at these election trials they would be liable to be dragged into political controversy, that thereby they would be attacked in Parliament subsequently, and their judicial reputations disparaged. That regrettable condition of affairs was foreseen by many in this Parliament, twenty years ago, and it is our duty as moderate and reasonable men to take care that that fear shall not be realized. I have stated the motion which I would like to move if the rules of the House would allow me, and in support of my wish to move such a motion, I shall read three or four short extracts from the English 'Hansard' to show what is the best feeling prevailing amongst responsible and able men in that old legislative chamber across the sea, to which we so often look for precedence and guidance. In the English 'Hansard' of 1872, vol. 207, page 758. Mr. Gladstone, certainly the oldest great parliamentarian living, and one of the most capable, during the course of a debate very closely resembling this discussion here to-night, is reported as saying:

What do you intend to be the relation between the Legislature in time to come and the judges of the land? At present you are strictly refrained from interference except in one most solemn and formal manner. You are not to inflict on them a minor punishment.....

Are you prepared to say that you will venture upon breaking down that fence which, by your own wisdom, prevents you from intermeddling with the character of the judges by means of votes which, if I dare say so, dare not aim at their removal, but which, at the same time, have a tendency to lower their character and to impair their credit and authority.

I have here the statement of Mr. Thesiger, afterwards an ornament to the Bench of Great Britain, taken from English 'Hansard,' vol. 66, page 1090, in which he says:

But was there no danger of the dependence of judges on a public assembly? Was there anything more calculated to shock the independence of a judge than the feeling of being constantly liable to the censure of the House of Commons on the application of any discontented suitor?

I have the statement of Sir James Graham, English 'Hansard,' page 1129, in which he says:

It is due to the cause of justice to defend the judges of the land unless we shall be satisfied that their conduct has been corrupt, and their motives dishonest.

In the same debate, Lord John Russell spoke. It was the case of a Liberal statesman resisting an attack on Sir James Scarlett, an old Tory member of the House, who was complained of as having used offensive expressions to a grand jury, and shown great lack of judgment, and, in that trying case, Lord John Russell said:

The independence of the judges is so sacred that nothing but the most imperious necessity should induce the House to adopt the course.

Lord John Russell himself, and those whom he could influence were induced to resist this motion which came from his own friends. Mr. Speaker, I have cited four or five out of a great number of quotations from the speeches of the best and most responsible men in the English Parliament, which tend to prove that this matter of every session bringing up a charge, graver or lighter, against judges whom you do not mean to impeach is a mischievous interference with their independence, and is adverse to the best interests of the nation.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to trespass five minutes upon the patience of this House. I only rise because I feel it my duty to say a word for my life-long friend, Mr. Ellis. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Albert say: "I am not able to utter one single word in detracting of Mr. Ellis's character." I was glad to hear him say that, differing as he does, politically, with that gentleman. Mr. Ellis may err in judgment sometimes, for who is perfect? But all who know him will say the same. I only rose to say a word in favour of my old friend, because of the course which the hon. member for Queen's County, N.B. (Mr. Baird), took in his remarks. I thought it was in very bad taste for that hon. gentleman to take the course he did. This discussion to me has been a painful one. I have been associated with the gentlemen who have been referred to for a great many years. I may say for a lifetime. I have been acquainted with Chief Justice Allen for forty years; I have been acquainted with Mr. Ellis for nearly forty years, and I have been acquainted for a long time with the judges on the Supreme Court Bench. I have had very strong feelings with regard to this case. I have felt that the hon. member for Queen's had been punished enough, and I would have been pleased if my hon. friends on the front benches had concluded that enough had been said about it. I was unable to see exactly what good was to come out of any further reference to the matter. Although I am not intimately acquainted with the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., yet I know he has suffered. If he has not suffered, God have mercy on him, because he ought to have suffered, under the circumstances. I know he has suffered, and I think he has suffered enough. But I regret the way he has treated my old friend Mr. Ellis. I am not the only one who knows John V. Ellis. You all know him—one of the most pure-minded and one of the most modest men, but one of the boldest men when wrong is to be attacked. He has no superior on the press or in Parliament, or on the Bench in those qualities that constitute a truthful, honourable, high-minded man. I am under no obligations to Mr. Ellis, nor is he under any to me; but I have known him under all circumstances, and I have never known him to flinch from what was right or to do a mean or dishonourable action. I regret this discussion in some respects. I am sorry that the name of my old and long-tried friend the Chief Justice of New Brunswick has been brought into discussion. I was in the Government with him thirty-seven years ago, and I never knew a better man than Chief Justice Allen. I have also been pained, because my sympathies went with my friend Mr. King, of Queen's County. I think Mr. King was an injured man; I think he was wronged and dealt with unjustly throughout the whole transaction. I do not wish to express any opinion about the legal aspect of this question, as I do not understand the law. I hope some good may grow out of the discussion. I just rose to say that I have never known John V. Ellis to do a mean or dishonourable action, or to be guilty of an untruth, and I think the hon. member for Queen's, N. B., would have done his cause and himself more good if he had pursued a different course, and had not tried to drag Mr. Ellis down to the level that he occupied before he went through the ordeal he has gone through.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I move the adjournment of the debate.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I know it is the desire of the whole House to get on with the business, and to finish this debate if possible to-night, and if I yield to the motion, I only do so in consideration of the fact, as I understand it, that the hon. member expects to occupy a considerable time, and that it would be inconvenient to him personally to continue to the conclusion of his speech to-night. I would therefore remind the House of the condition of business, and say that if the debate is adjourned now we shall continue it to-morrow as the first order, and I shall expect after that to have to ask the House to resume the debate on the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and to remain in session until both are disposed of.

Mr. LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.35 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 6th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE PROHIBITION COMMISSION.

Mr. CAMPBELL (for Mr. Flint) asked, Has the Government information as to when the report of the Royal Commission on prohibition will be ready for presentation to the House? If so, when will the said report be presented?

Mr. FOSTER. The information in possession of the Government is that the interim report of the Royal Commission on prohibition is now nearly ready for presentation to the House—has been waiting, I think, for the printing of some copies of the evidence.

Mr. LAURIER. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say interim report?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. How many reports does the Government expect, may I ask?

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid you will have to put another question on the paper.

"DAIRYING FOR PROFIT."

Mr. GIROUARD (Two Mountains) asked, Is the Government aware of the publication of a book by Mrs. E. M. Jones, of Brockville, bearing the title "Dairying for Profit, or the Poor Man's Cow?" Is it the intention of the Government to have this book translated into French, and distributed among the farmers speaking that language?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is aware of the publication of a book by Mrs. E. M. Jones, of Brockville, bearing the title stated in the question, "Dairying for Profit, or the Poor Man's Cow," but it is not the intention to have this book translated into French and distributed among farmers, for the reason that such book is not in any manner the property of the Government.

THE WHARF AT YAMACHICHE.

Mr. VAILLANCOURT (for Mr. Legris): 1. Is the Government informed that the wharf built last summer at Yamachiche has been broken up or considerably damaged by the ice this spring? 2. Is it true that this wharf is situated at a distance of about two acres from the shore at low water? 3. Is it the intention of the Government to repair the said wharf or to leave it as it now is? 4. If the Government gets it repaired, is it the intention to provide the public with the means of carrying to or from the shore the goods which may be placed on this wharf, if such at any time occurs?

Mr. OUMET. (Translation.) 1. The Department has had no information with respect to the wharf at Yamachiche, but an inspection was ordered. 2. The wharf is situated at a distance of 270 feet from the shore. 3. The necessary repairs will be made. 4. It is not the intention of the department to connect the wharf with the mainland; that will have to be done by the municipality of Yamachiche.

SOULANGES CANAL.

Mr. McMULLEN (for Mr. Lister) asked, Has the cash put up as security for the performance of the work on sections 1, 2 and 3, Soulanges Canal, been given up? If so, who is the contractor? What amount of cash was put up as security? What amount has been returned? When was it returned? What security has been substituted? If mortgage, what is the description and area of the land?

Mr. HAGGART. The cash security for the performance of the work on sections Nos. 1 and 2, Soulanges Canal, has been given up, but not for section No. 3. Mr. Archibald Stewart is the contractor. The amount of cash put up as security is $40,915.37. It was returned on the 28th of March, 1894. The security substituted is a mortgage on land 64.02 acres, of lot lettered F, in concession D, Rideau Front, of township of Nepean, valued at $69,041 by Mr. A. Pratt, Assessment Commissioner for Ottawa on the 5th of October, 1893, which valuation was confirmed by seven other competent persons, namely, Hon. F. Clemow, Mr. W. Pennock, Mr. F. H. Chrysler, Mr. John Graham, Mr. Jacob Erratt, Mr. Thos. H. Kirby, and Mr. A. MacLean.

LEASING PROPERTY IN LONDON.

Mr. McMULLEN (for Mr. Lister), asked, Have the Government recently acquired property in the city of London by purchase or lease? If by purchase, who was the vendor and what was the consideration paid? If by lease, who is the lessor and what is the term and yearly rent payable? What is the description of the property, that is to say, number or other description of the property, and street upon which it is situate? Does the lease give the Government the privilege of purchasing? If so, at what price?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). The Government have not acquired any property in the city of London recently, either by purchase or by lease. The Militia Department had under consideration the advisability of leasing a certain property for the purpose of using it temporarily as a storehouse, but the matter is not yet disposed of. I will be happy to give the House the fullest information when the matter is settled.

OUTPORT OF ENTRY AT SEAFORTH.

Mr. McMILLAN asked, Is it the intention of the Government to establish an outport of entry at Seaforth, Ont.?

Mr. WALLACE. The question is under the consideration of the Treasury Board.

CUSTOMS VACANCY IN STANSTEAD.

Mr. RIDER asked, Are there any vacancies in the Customs service in the county of Stanstead? If so, what, and when did they occur? Has any inconvenience been caused the public through delay in filling the same? If so, do the Government intend to fill the vacancies without delay? If not, do the Government propose to abolish the vacant positions, if any exist? Have the Government received any applications for appointment to any such position? If so, how many?

Mr. WALLACE. Preventive Officer David Young, at Stanhope, under port of Coaticook, Que., died 11th February, 1894. No inconvenience has been caused, Preventive Officer E. O. Baldwin having been placed in charge. Two applications have been received.

WAYS AND MEANS—IMPRISONMENT OF MR. ELLIS.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means; and the motion of Mr. Davies (P.E.I.) in amendment thereto.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This case is one of a small class of cases that are very important, because they concern not only the liberty of the subject, but also the rights of Parliament. It is my intention to discuss both of these features, neither of which can ever be unimportant. It is always of the first importance to consider everything which interferes with the freedom of the subject, and every act or matter which encroaches on the authority of Parliament. I shall begin by the consideration of this matter so far as it concerns the liberty of the subject, with which my hon. friend dealt in the motion which he submitted to the House yesterday, and in the speech by which he supported that motion. It sometimes happens that in the discharge of a public duty we come to the point where the roads part, and where we are obliged to uphold the principles of justice at what may seem to be the expense of the law, or to maintain the law at the expense of the rights of private individuals. It is very seldom that we have to complain that the law is so interpreted that it becomes a shield to acts of injustice, and that in order to uphold what we regard as the principles of natural equity and fair-play, we are obliged to dissent from the views of the law expressed by its authoritative expositors. Mr. Ellis, in the articles which have been the subject of discussion, and for the publication of which he was imprisoned, endeavoured to uphold the principles of right, to prevent wrong, and to support what may be regarded as the honest administration of the election law and the proper representation of the electors in Parliament. It is of very great consequence, in the consideration of questions of this sort, that we should take a fair view of the whole subject, that we may thoroughly apprehend not only the view of the law taken by the courts as applied to the particular case, but what opinions were in the mind of the writer, and the objects at which he aimed in what he has written or expressed. Sir, it is never to be forgotten that the age in which we live is a democratic age; that in order to secure the respect and the support of the community at large, we must undertake to convince the judgment of that community; and that the law itself can no longer rest upon force, but must rest upon popular assent, and have the sanction and the sympathy of the great mass of the population. If acts have been committed that are unwarranted in themselves, if there is a misuse of popular authority, much more will be done by those who committed the error, or who made the mistake, to weaken the authority of the officers of the law, than can be done by the most violent attacks of the most unscrupulous journals. I find everywhere in the community a feeling that judges, like other men, ought to rest for their protection upon those principles of law administered in the ordinary way, which are regarded as adequate for the protection of every other class of the community. If there is special protection afforded to the courts, however proper that might have been in a former period, except in very rare instances, it will be regarded with jealousy in our own day, and it is of more consequence that the courts should rely, as they do in almost every instance, upon the sympathy and support of the great mass of the population, in the justice of their intentions, and the fairness with which they are believed to administer the law, than upon any terror which they may inspire by any extraordinary power that may be conferred upon them. It is true that it is said there is a divinity that doth hedge kings, and the judges of the Superior Court as representing the sovereign in the administration of the law are supposed to represent the sovereign in this particular, and from perhaps the weakness of human nature rather than from the necessities of the case it is perfectly natural they should undertake to maintain those extraordinary powers so long as the Legislature of the country will permit them to remain on the Statute-book. But the courts, if they seek to maintain this authority, are doing nothing more than what the vast majority of men who are intrusted with authority in every sphere of life are disposed to do, to claim for themselves more than is actually necessary for the proper administration of the duties that devolve upon them. It is important that we should uphold the dignity of the courts. This is necessary for the security of the suitors and for the efficient maintenance of justice in every part of the country. But in many of the states of the neighbouring republic the power to punish for constructive contempt has been taken away, and I am not aware that where this has been done any very serious effort has been made to restore it on account of the inconvenience which has been felt in the administration of justice for the want of any such authority. It is well known that for many years the doctrine was everywhere accepted that the power to punish for contempt committed, against legislative bodies not in their presence was preserved by those legislative bodies wherever the English system was introduced into any portion of the Empire. That view has been very fully considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in many cases, and in every instance, except in the first case, they have held that the power to punish for contempt is not a power incident to a legislative body, and not one that it necessarily should possess for the due and sufficient exercise of its authority; and the views which have been expressed over and over again on this subject by the Lords of the Privy Council who have delivered the judgment of that body, have all pointed in the same direction, and the observations which have been made in those judgments are observations which are in most cases strictly pertinent to the exercise of such authority by the courts. Sir James Colville, in delivering judgment in the case of Doyle against Faulkner, after referring to the argument which had been put forward before the Judicial Committee in favour of such a power being possessed by the Legislature, said :

On the other hand, it may be argued with at least equal force that the power contended for is of a high and peculiar character, that it is an invasion on the liberty of the subject and carries with it the anomaly of making of those who exercise it judges in their own case, and judges from whom there is no appeal, and that while that power may be safely intrusted to magistrates who would be personally responsible for an abuse of it to some high authority, it might be very dangerous in the hands of a body which from its very constitution is practically irresponsible.

Those observations, while they may not show that there may not arise cases in which such power may not be necessary to the efficiency of a judicial body, show that it is a power which if it were intrusted to such a body at all ought to be most sparingly exercised, and that it ought to be limited by the rule laid down by a former Master of the Rolls, and to which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has referred, that when such power is employed the court ought to satisfy itself that there are no other means speedily available for the vindication of its right. This is an arrogation by the courts of a power which, as I have already said, is supposed to belong to the sovereign, and the judges in exercising that power understand the sovereign to be constructively present in the court, and each judge represents the majesty of the state in administering justice for the purpose of settling disputes that may arise between litigants and as such was entitled to the respect and obedience of those who were present in the court, and who were held to be guilty of contempt if they set at defiance the sovereign authority. In our day the ordinary Legislature of the country creates the court. The Ministry name the judges whom the sovereign is to appoint; and it does seem to me that in the exercise of judicial authority, the maintenance of the rights of the court and the rights of parties will have in almost every instance been secured without having recourse to this authority. The main protection of the courts of justice is the moral sense of the nation. They are in the exercise of their authority everywhere acting under a sense of responsibility to the public opinion of the country, and he would be indeed an unworthy judge who forgets that he is elevated to the position which he occupies to illumine the path in which it is the plain duty of men to tread, that he is intended to be the official exponent of what is right and just between disputants, and that he is on the Bench for the purpose of upholding and vindicating the rights of parties under the law and is not himself above and beyond the law. There is no one who is a better ally of the Bench in the administration of justice than the well-informed and conscientious journalist. If he is to do substantial service, if he is to vindicate the authority of the courts of justice, if he is to become a substantial contributor to the maintenance of law and order he must be free to dissent from and to criticise the views which the courts of justice express; he must be at liberty to discharge his duties freely and not be called upon to discharge them in fetters. The first Act on the subject of contempt was passed about seventy years after Magna Charta had been agreed to by the King, and it gave the right to punish for contempt for acts of disobedience to the process of the court and for contempts committed in the presence of the court. It was in time extended to acts done outside the court, to acts which were said to have interfered with the court in the discharge of its duties. There is no legislation conferring this authority on the courts, it was regarded as incidental and necessary to the due exercise of its duties; and this case we are now called upon to consider is in itself a good illustration of the danger which may attach to the doctrine of constructive contempt. The articles written by Mr. Ellis were not written so much to deal with any matters that were pending before the courts. They were not written with a view of stating to what conclusions the judge ought, in a pending suit, to arrive. They were written with reference to an accomplished fact, to the propriety of an act which was already accomplished, and if there was anything wrong in them they bore rather the character of a libel than the character of a contempt. Now there is gradually growing up (when you examine with some care the decisions of the court on this subject) a distinction between cases of libel and cases of contempt. There are grounds that they occupy in common. The one extends into the field that is occupied by the other, but there is a field peculiar to each, and the principles which have recently been recognized, serve to make clear the distinction between them, and to show when an act should fall within the purview of a libel, and when it should be regarded as a contempt. An article calculated to interfere with the court in arriving at a just judgment, an article which undertakes to overawe the court or which is written with a view of preventing witnesses appearing before the court, or which is intended expressly to prejudice the rights of some parties in a case pending before the courts, would be properly regarded as contempt. If it prejudices the public mind against the court itself generally, it would fall within the class of cases that would be regarded as libel rather than as contempt. In other words, when a matter is pending in a court, a constructive contempt bears some resemblance to a nuisance. It is an obstacle in the way of the administration of justice, which the court may find it necessary to abate in order that it may discharge the duties that devolve upon it. Now, a contempt of court is always regarded in England as a matter which calls for the superintending action of Parliament, and it does so because it interferes with the liberty of the subject. I was rather surprised at the argument addressed to the House by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen), and the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon): that if this House undertakes to criticise the conduct of a judge with reference to a matter which had been dealt with by him in his official capacity, it was making itself a court of appeal and doing that which it had no right to undertake in any way whatever. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) said, that unless you were prepared to bring charges against a judge which if established would justify the House in asking for his removal, that you ought not to undertake to discuss his conduct at all. That is as far removed from the recognized doctrine under the English constitution as anything well could be. There is nothing more frequently undertaken in the Imperial Parliament than the criticism of the manner in which justice is administered by the various courts in different parts of the United Kingdom. Let me call the attention of the House to the views expressed by two very high parliamentary authorities: Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell. Sir Robert Peel when he was Prime Minister of England, and when the conduct of Lord Abinger was brought before the House of Commons, said:

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

I cannot forget that, as the noble lord justly observes, the constitution places us as a controlling power over the courts of law. This House has not only the right to address the Crown for the removal of a particular judge, but in cases of misconduct it has the right of exercising a power even more unpalatable to the judges. It has the right of exercising a superintending control over the manner in which they discharge their duties and to institute inquiries relative thereto.

Now, that is a broad statement of one of the most important functions that devolves upon Parliament, and the House can easily understand why that is the case. This House is the representative body of the nation. We have here to personate the entire community that we represent. We have a superintending control over, not only the Executive Government of the country that is under the immediate administration of the Crown, but we have a superintending control over the courts of law which interpret that law which the Ministers of the Crown are called upon to administer. Why, Sir, it is in the name of the Crown that justice is administered no less than that in which the ordinary business of the country is conducted, and that being so, every department of Government is under the control of this House. There is not a department of Government, there is not a public officer in the discharge of any duty, who is not connected with some department of Government or other. There is not a public officer that some Minister of the Crown who sits in one of these Houses of Parliament is not responsible to this House for as a public officer; and the Department of Justice has a superintending control over the courts of this country, just as the Department of the Home Secretary has in the United Kingdom. Therefore there cannot be any public officer, whether he be an executive officer or whether he be a judicial officer, who is not responsible to Parliament for the manner in which he discharges his duty. In the same discussion to which I have referred, the English Attorney General of the day, Attorney General Pollock, said:

Lord Abinger's conduct is a fair subject of discussion and he is responsible to public opinion. This holds a salutary check over judicial conduct and over the conduct of public functionaries of all kinds.

So that public opinion may be expressed, and on that occasion it was expressed in two ways. It was expressed by the criticism of Lord Abinger's conduct in the press, and by the criticism of his conduct in Parliament. In Mr. Ellis's case, it seems to me that the effect of the position taken by the courts of New Brunswick is to destroy one of these checks. I want to know how the press of New Brunswick could enter into a criticism of the administration of justice, or of the conduct of the judges, or of the manner in which their duties are being discharged, unless they are permitted freely to discuss those actions? Sometimes, as Attorney General Pollock points out, the conduct of the court, although it may not be right, does not call for the criticism of Parliament. One hon. gentleman said yesterday that if we criticised the conduct of the judges in this matter, the conduct of the judge in every case that is decided may be brought up. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it may be, but it is not likely to be; it is not called for. It is only when there is adequate reason for criticism that the conduct of a judge in a court of justice is likely to be made the subject of discussion in Parliament. As Attorney General Pollock points out, in all subordinate matters the control of public opinion may be left to the press. We do not interfere with the press; we depend upon it to discharge certain duties, to exercise a certain restraint—such restraint as may be adequate to the case; we do not undertake the matter here, because that controlling influence of public opinion is sufficient. Public opinion is, after all, the controlling influence that finds expression here. It is because we are a representative body and because we have public opinion behind us that our expression of opinion has weight. And so, for the same reason, the expression of public opinion by the press is not without its influence upon Parliament, upon the courts, upon every official throughout the country. Of course, that influence will be great or will be insignificant in proportion as the power with which the press is clothed is exercised with moderation and fairness, or is marked by unscrupulous conduct. The courts could not be injured by a libellous press in an intelligent community, for the reason that such a press would exercise indeed very little influence. Now, Sir, let me point out to the House, in reply to the observations which were made by hon. gentlemen yesterday, a number of instances where the conduct of judges was made a subject of discussion in the Parliament of the United Kingdom. Let me refer to the case of Baron Pennefather. Baron Pennefather, in 1833, when he was going on circuit, criticised very strictly and in a hostile spirit before the grand jury the conduct of the Government in dealing with the Reform Bill. He also criticised adversely a number of the measures that were then pending in Parliament. That criticism was brought to the attention of the House by one of the Irish members, and the Solicitor General on that occasion, Sir John Campbell, made this statement with regard to the conduct of Baron Pennefather:

No one values more than I do the independence of the judges; but I most certainly think that a judge forgets his duty and runs the risk of bringing his high office into disrepute if, in addressing a grand jury he becomes a partisan, and takes a part either in opposing or defending a measure that has passed the House or is before the House for its consideration.

On another occasion, the attention of the Government was called to a speech that had been made by Mr. Justice Monaghan, who had attacked the magistrates in one of the counties in Ireland, charging them with a failure of duty in the administration of justice. Sir Thomas Bateson brought his criticism before the attention of the House, pointing out that Judge Monaghan, in holding assizes in the county of Down, had accused the magistrates there of failure of duty, and that, when one of the magistrates rose to explain himself, the judge swore and said it was all stuff and nonsense. The magistrates had consulted the law officers of the Crown, and the law officers of the Crown had approved of the course which they had taken. This matter was brought to the attention of Sir Robert Peel, and questions were put to him in regard to the conduct of Mr. Justice Monaghan, and Sir Robert Peel said that the judge was a little passionate, a little hasty, but that he was not warranted in making the remarks which he had addressed to the magistrate on that occasion. Again, in 1863, when a case was brought before Vice-Chancellor Stuart, he was informed that the parties who were before the court were wards in chancery, and that their reputation was likely to be affected by the evidence which would be given; and the court, acting upon a recognized rule of court, allowed the examination to be conducted in private. A very violent attack was made in the press upon Vice-Chancellor Stuart; it was said that he had ordered the trial to be conducted in private in order to shield Lord Vernon, who was a defendant in the case. The judge was very angry, and addressed those present in the court in language which was considered unbecoming the position he occupied. The subject was brought before the attention of Parliament and made the subject of inquiry and discussion there, and Sir Roundell Palmer gave the explanation I have stated, that Mr. Vice-Chancellor Stuart had not acted as he did with a view of shielding Lord Vernon, but with the view of protecting the wards of the court whose conduct would be inquired into before the court. Another case was the case of Mr. Justice Christian in 1874. He said, in addressing the parties before the court in Ireland, that the Government had revived the second landed estates court against their better judgment, and that a certain judge had been denied the promotion to which he was entitled because he had earned in the discharge of his public duties the hostility of the priesthood, and that the Government in England had yielded to this hostility and done him an injustice. Mr. Callan brought the matter to the attention of the House. He read what Mr. Justice Christian had said, and called upon Mr. Disraeli, whose Government was then in office, for an explanation. Then, in the case of Chief Justice Lefroy, who, in a trial of murder at Birr, it was said, was so feeble in intellect, on account of his advanced age, that he was utterly unable to pronounce sentence against the party who had been convicted, that he often mistook the evidence, that he had to be corrected over and over again during the proceedings, and that the Attorney General stood by him and dictated to him the sentence which he repeated after the Attorney General in court. This matter was made a subject of complaint in the House of Commons, and when under discussion there, the Attorney General, Mr. Lawson, said that he was sorry to say the statement was strictly accurate. The Chief Justice Lefroy, then in his ninetieth year, shortly after retired from office. I mention all these cases to show that the House of Commons constantly exercises a superintending authority over the courts, and frequently makes the conduct of the judges a subject of discussion. I have said that the exercise of this right to punish for constructive contempt is a right that is looked upon with a good deal of disfavour by the courts, and one they are little disposed to exercise. A very able American jurist, in discussing this question, says :

That the power to punish for contempt is exercised without the ordinary checks or safeguards attending criminal trials. The proceeding is inquisitorial, the accused is compelled to answer against himself, and the decision of the committing judge is in the case without appeal.

Now, Sir, that is the recognized state of things, and the result is that in cases of contempt, or where punishment for contempt might be exercised by the court, that power is exercised at this day with very great reluctance, when exercised at all. I have said that this is largely due to the changes that society has undergone and the democratic spirit that everywhere prevails, the present disposition now being to uphold authority on grounds of reason and not upon any feeling of awe or any fear of punishment on the part of a court. The change of public opinion in this respect is shown by a case which was tried a short time ago before one of the superior courts of England, where the husband claimed the right to exercise coercive control over his wife. His counsel referred to the doctrine laid down by Blackstone and the older writers, to show that the husband had the right to compel his wife to live with him, and to exercise such restraint over her conduct as would enable him to force her to do so. But the court held that he had no such control ; that the ancient conceptions of society had all disappeared ; that the social framework was changed, and although there had been no change of law, yet the theory upon which those views were upheld could no longer be supported. And the same change in the relation between the community and the courts of justice is going forward at this moment. Sir, the limitation upon the freedom of criticism is well expressed by

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. Justice Grose. In the case of King against White. The newspaper press had made a somewhat violent attack upon Judge LeBlanc in the trial of a murder case, and upon the jury, and Mr. Justice Grose, who tried this case, said :

It certainly was lawful with decency and candour to discuss the propriety of the verdict of the jury or the decision of the judge, and if the defendants should be thought to have done no more in this instance, they would be entitled to acquittal ; but on the contrary they have transgressed the law and ought to be convicted, if the extracts of the newspaper set out in the information contained no reason or discussion but only declamation or invective, and were written, not with the view of elucidating the truth, but to injure the character of the individual and to bring into hatred and contempt the administration of justice in the country.

The whole question there was a question of the object or design with which the articles were written. That is the doctrine laid down, and you have, Sir, two propositions embodied in the matters which I have brought to the attention of the House. The first is the view put forward by Attorney General Pollock in his address to the House of Commons, in which he points out the restraining influence of public opinion and its beneficial uses, and the second is the aim of the writer, as stated in this proposition laid down by Mr. Justice Grose in his charge to the jury. The question here of Mr. Ellis's case was a question as to the purity of the election. What object had Mr. Ellis in writing ? Was it not for the vindication of popular liberty ? Was it not to favour the honest representation of a constituency ? Was it not a condemnation of what he regarded as an improper use of official authority by a returning officer ? Was it not for the purpose of elucidating the truth and of upholding what was right and just ? Look at those articles which are published in the reports, and which my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) read yesterday. Is there a single sentence which shows that the object of Mr. Ellis in writing those articles was to attack the court and not to uphold what he thought was the right, and to create a public feeling against the wrong and the injustice that had been done ? If that be so, if the object was not to create a feeling of hatred and contempt for the judge, if it was not to interfere with the due administration of justice, then there was not such a writing as the court ought to have taken cognizance of or to have punished the writer of for contempt. It is not enough, Mr. Speaker, that the judge should be harshly criticised ; it is not enough that the writer should have formed suspicions that are unfounded and that are unfair to the judge ; it is not enough that the writer should, with some heat and with some colour, have expressed opinions that are not warranted. You are bound to look beyond that and to see whether, in the writing of that article, the writer's main design was to frustrate the administration of justice, to interfere with the court in the discharge of its duties, to intimidate the judge in doing what he was at law entitled to do. There is nothing of that kind indicated. An election had taken place and a gross fraud had been committed. The party whom the people had elected had been wronged and the rights of the majority had not been respected in the election. No one can read what took place in that case and fail to see that what Mr. Justice Tuck did in fact, whether it was legal or illegal, did hinder, delay and defeat justice in that case. Every judge who gave judgment admits that the returning officer was not warranted in doing what he did. Every one admits that it was the duty of the returning officer to have complied with the statute and to have returned the party who had polled the majority of votes. Now, what was it Mr. Ellis sought to do? He was seeking to uphold the rights of the majority; he was endeavouring to show that what was required by the express provisions of the statute had not been done. Let me call the attention of the House for a moment to the case of the Queen vs. the Mayor of Bangor. That case has a very close resemblance in principle to this one of the election in Queen's. In that case the returning officer was of opinion that the candidate who polled the majority of votes was not eligible as a candidate—ought not to be returned. Now, what does the Master of the Rolls say with regard to that matter? He points out that the returning officer had a duty to discharge. The words of the statute are almost the same as the words in our statute. The duty of the returning officer in that case was the same as the duty of the returning officer here. The Master of Rolls said:

The persons to whom the notice is to be given under the rules are therefore different from the persons to whom he is to make the declaration under section 2, at the time of the counting of the votes, because that declaration is to be made in the presence not of the electors (who are not allowed to be present), but of the agents (if any) of the candidates. The declaration under section 2, is therefore, in respect of a wholly different thing. It refers to the declaration of the numbers of the votes given, but the rules refer to a public notice stating who has been elected. I therefore say that the returning officer here, had no power whatever to declare Pritchard elected, and the declaration to that effect which he made in the placard issued the day after the election was ultra vires and void. The only valid declaration he could make was the declaration of the number of the votes given to each candidate. If the majority of the votes for Roberts was obtained by illegal or improper means, it could only be questioned by other persons in the proper mode.

Then, Sir, another of the courts, Mr. Justice Lopes, says:

The material part of that section is the second part, which defines the duties and powers of the returning officer when the ballot boxes have been taken charge of by him after the close of the poll. After he has opened the ballot boxes and counted the votes, "he shall forthwith declare to be elected the candidate to whom the majority of votes has been given." He has no power to inquire to whom the majority of legal votes has been given. I think that directly he has ascertained by counting to whom the majority of votes has been given, his simple duty is clearly and indisputably to declare that person elected. It cannot be that he has any power to declare with respect to the eligibility or ineligibility of any candidate. That would be a highly dangerous power to intrust to a returning officer. I am, therefore, of opinion that Roberts was duly elected.

So that the duty of the returning officer was simply to add up the votes and to return the party having a majority. But my hon. friend says the returning officer sat judicially in his matter; he decided, whether rightly or wrongly, that Mr. King was not a candidate at all, that Mr. King ought not to have been recognized as a candidate, and, that being the case, he returned the only party who was legally nominated. When the returning officer received Mr. King's nomination, then, so far as he had any judicial power, by that act of receiving the nomination he exercised that power and exhausted it. He could not go behind that fact. When, on the day of declaration he added up the votes and found that Mr. King had received 1,191, and that Mr. Baird had received 1,130, he refused to declare the candidate who had the majority to be elected. He went behind his own act and rejected all the votes cast for Mr. King. Now, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) said that no matter whether he decided legally or illegally, he had decided that there had been but one candidate; and therefore it would require an election petition to try the question whether there was more than one candidate or not, and there was no such addition of the votes as would enable any elector to apply to the county judge for a recount. Now, Sir, I do not admit that. I do not admit for one moment that the returning officer, by doing an extra judicial act, an act that is wholly illegal and void, can interpose that act to prevent the county judge from making a proper recount. Why, Sir, look at the words of the statute:

The returning officer at the place, day and hour appointed by his proclamation and after having received all the ballot boxes, shall proceed to open them in the presence of the election clerk, the candidates or their representatives, if present, or of at least two electors, if the candidates or their representatives are not present, and to add together the votes given for each candidate, from the statements contained in the several ballot boxes returned by the deputy returning officers of the ballot papers counted by them.

2. The candidate who, on the summing up of the votes, is found to have the majority of votes, shall then be elected.

The words are the same as in the English statute. The returning officer in this case added up the votes and then he heard argument as to whether there had been a legal election, and he held that Mr. King had not been properly a candidate. He gave that decision and rejected all votes cast for Mr. King. Now, as to a recount or a final addition by the judge it is provided that if a credible witness by his affidavit declares that he :

Believes that any deputy returning officer at any election in such electoral district in counting the votes (1) has improperly counted ;—

We do not say that he did that.

—or (2) has improperly rejected any ballot papers at such election—

Now, we say that he did improperly reject the ballot papers, and having improperly rejected all the ballot papers marked for Mr. King, the parties had a right to apply to the county court judge for a recount in the matter. It is worthy of remark that no judge held with the returning officer that Mr. King had not made a proper deposit as required. What did the returning officer do on the day of this declaration? He admits that he improperly appointed the deputy returning officers; that he improperly issued the ballot boxes; that he improperly had the ballots printed; that those ballots were printed with Mr. Baird's and Mr. King's names upon them; that he appointed a day for the declaration; that he met the parties on that day; that those parties whom he had named as deputy returning officers had brought to him their ballot boxes, and that he had counted the ballots. And, Sir, he did more than that; he applied to the Government to compensate these deputy returning officers for their services in that election, and that compensation was made. All these acts go to show that an election was held, and that an election being held, he had a certain ministerial duty to discharge, which he did not discharge. He said that Mr. Baird was the only candidate, the voice of the electors was unheeded, the rights of the people in Queen's County were disregarded, and a return was made of the man whom the electors by their votes had rejected. Sir, the hon. member for the City of St. John (Mr. Hazen) gave to the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., (Mr. Baird) a certificate of character, yesterday. He said he had been to school with the hon. member, and that he had a very high regard for him. I remember a few years ago there was a book published, a life of Jesse James, and it stated what a tender regard that man had for his mother. Now, there may be a great many estimable qualities in men who go wrong. I do not say that the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., is not a man whose word may be relied upon by those in business. He may be a good neighbour, a good merchant, or business man, he may be perfectly upright in his dealings with other men; but I say that as a public man, as a candidate before the electors of Queen's, his conduct in connection with the election was not, by any means, commendable, that it was wholly unworthy of him to do as he says he did. Why, Sir, what reason, or what defence, did the hon. gentleman make last night for his conduct? He says the voters' list was stuffed with the names of parties politically opposed to me, I did not think I would have a fair chance in a fair election in the constituency, under the circumstances, and I was bound to win. That was, in effect, what the hon. gentleman said, and so he adopted those means which were necessary to success. Sir, I could not help noticing the tears of sympathy which my hon. friend shed, both over Mr. Ellis and over the member for Queen's. My hon. friend was dividing his sympathy, for some reason, impartially between these gentlemen. I do not know anything that reminded me so much of, as the 'Sorrows of Werther.' But let me say this, Mr. Speaker, that I do not see anything in the speech of the hon. member for Queen's that called for very much sympathy. It is true, the hon. gentleman stated that perhaps if he had to do this matter over again, and had to run the election gauntlet again, under the same circumstances, he might have allowed Mr. King to take the seat. Well, I suppose the hon. gentleman was quite right in saying that, he did not allow Mr. King to take his seat. The hon. gentleman controlled the returning officer, if he did not control the majority of the votes. But the hon. gentleman gave a reason for his regret, and that was, that after all the trouble, the experience he had with it, it left on his mind the impression that if he had allowed Mr. King to take his seat, it would have been, perhaps, less expensive, and less troublesome to him. Now, I do not know what there is in the conduct of the returning officer on that occasion to entitle him to much sympathy, or to the high encomiums pronounced upon him by the hon. member for St. John. The hon. member says that he was brought to the Bar of this House, and no one insisted that he should be punished. Why, Sir, everybody who was then in Parliament and is in Parliament now, remembers the farce that was played on that occasion; they remember a witness being brought to the Bar of the House, with counsel to advise him as to what he might answer and what he might not answer. They know that the House had already refused to permit the election returns to be corrected in accordance with the facts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that is not correct.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). At first, there was a motion that the returning officer should be brought to the Bar of the House to correct a return and insert the name of Mr. King for that of Mr. Baird; and that being voted down, the proposition to bring him to the Bar of the House to explain his conduct, was adopted instead. Now, Sir, in this case, the chief author of the outrage upon the liberties of the people, or one of them, at least, was the complainant. The hon. member for Queen's was the party who applied for the writ of attachment. He appeared before the court with a view of securing the punishment of Mr. Ellis. What had Mr. Ellis done? He had not deprived the majority of the electors in the constituency of the rights which the law gave them, he had done his best as a public journalist in upholding the law, and in seeking to give effect to the result of that vote as the law requires that it should be done; and the hon. gentleman applied to the court for the purpose of having Mr. Ellis restrained and punished. Now, let me call the attention of the House to a rule that had been recognized in England where a party other than the judge who had been wronged, applies for an attachment. I refer to the case of ex parte Turner, where judgment was delivered by Sir George Rose. Now, in that case, the judge held that no indignity or wrong done the court, was to be taken into consideration; it was simply the wrong done the party where the party is the applicant, that the party is not to use the power or the authority of the court to gratify his own revenge, or to punish one whom he regards as his adversary. The judge said:

I take the liberty of repeating that this contempt is a profound contempt, in which the part which relates to the court itself is perhaps the least. It is not for me to say whether the learned judge who has been the subject of the learned counsel's observations should have found it necessary to vindicate himself by any process of contempt. That learned judge has never stirred in the matter at all, but when parties are involved, as the petitioners in this case have been, and when upon the whole of the circumstances being brought before it the court finds itself involved in some contemptuous language it is not to vindicate its own particular individuality that the process is now put in force.

It seems to me that this rule was not recognized in the judgment given in the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick. They did take into consideration the contempt as affecting the personality of the court, and they did that upon a motion made by the hon. gentleman. The rule in the case I have read is the rule which says that the subject-matter for consideration before the court is the wrong done to the complainant and not to the court itself. Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that the same rule of law laid down in the case to which I have referred was followed by the Court of Queen's Bench in Toronto in the case of Regina vs. Wilkinson, re Brown. In that case Mr. Justice Morrison said:

The court, in my opinion, is not obliged to take notice of libellous or contemptuous publications directed against the court itself. I cannot admit the right of any person to initiate or take a proceeding of this nature for a contempt which the court did not deem worthy of notice. This extraordinary power has hitherto been seldom used and should be rarely put in motion or exercised, and never, in my judgment, except upon the request or at the instance of the court. To permit this summary proceeding to be taken at the will of any individual would be placing in his hands, as I have already said, means which, under the pretense of maintaining the dignity of the court or respect to its authority, might be used to gratify a revengeful spirit.

This is the first occasion the court has been invoked in a matter of this nature. My duty as a judge is to administer the law as I find it, but if I am at liberty to express any personal opinion upon the expediency of exercising the power of the court to summarily punish contempts not committed in its presence, and not calculated to obstruct the course of justice, but by the publication of libellous matter unfairly criticising or impugning the action of the court, or imputing impure or corrupt motives to its members, I would venture to say that in such cases the exercise of this arbitrary power would be a questionable remedy, either for maintaining respect for the court itself or vindicating the characters of its members.

The rule laid down there is, it seems to me, the modern rule. It is the right of the party who feels he has been wronged or that any injury has been done him, if there is any other method of redress, to have recourse to that method, and if he goes to the court, and the court on account of the urgency of the case entertains the application for contempt, it must confine its punishment and its consideration of the question as to how far it affects the party himself. If the court has not undertaken to interfere in the matter, the court cannot take into consideration the question of its own dignity and the injury done to itself; it has to do solely with the question as to the injury done to the individual whose case is then pending in the court. A different rule appears, however, to have prevailed in the courts of New Brunswick. They have taken into consideration the question as to how far these criticisms published in the St. John 'Globe' affected Mr. Justice Tuck, rather than how far they affected the rights or interests of the applicant, and I will go so far as to say this: that they laid down a different rule and acted on wholly different principles from those recognized in the judgment I have just read given by the Court of Queen's Bench in Ontario, and the judgment of the English court as given by Sir George Rose. I have already referred the House to the case of Lord Abinger, and I said I would read an extract from a speech delivered by Lord John Russell, as well as from the remarks of Sir Robert Peel, which I have already quoted. I read these remarks for the purpose of showing how far leading members of the House of Commons, men of great parliamentary experience and wide constitutional information, felt they were justified in criticising the conduct of a judge in the discharge of his duties. Lord John Russell in criticising the charge which Lord Abinger had delivered in regard to the Chartist Riots, said :

He did not accuse Lord Abinger of any want of legal knowledge, but he did blame him (Lord Abinger) that he had mingled both legal and political considerations, when only legal considerations were required. What was the consequence? The Chartists who were brought before him, hearing what his opinions were concerning annual parliaments and vote by ballot, which they regarded as remedies for political evils, and that they were placed in the same category as physical force and were consequently classed as crimes, such men when brought before him would be convinced that the judge entertained prejudice against them. He entertained the opinion that Lord Abinger in introducing political topics, injudiciously departed from his office as an exponent of the law, which was the proper subject of his charge.

The newspapers which criticised those objections by Lord Abinger went very much further than did Mr. Ellis in the articles which led to his committal. The London 'Times' in referring to the sentences which had been pronounced by the learned judge in the trial of the Chartists, said :

We must guard ourselves from being exposed to express an unqualified opinion on all that Lord Abinger has said and done in the performance of his trying office. We are inclined to regret the severity of some of those punishments with which he has visited many of the subordinates in this ill-judged and ill-fated rising. We regret that acts, scarcely amounting to tumultuous begging, and with no proof of violence, should in these excited times have been visited with transportation, which, as robbery has been awarded.

The 'Morning Chronicle' said :

If the sentiments attributed to Lord Abinger in reports of his previous charges are objectionable, those attributed to him in this last charge are infinitely more so. Indeed we can hardly conceive it possible to cram a larger number of questionable, nay, absurd propositions into the same space. We pass over the insinuations levelled at the Anti-Cornlaw League in the allusion to the "schemes of persons who considered that a general turn-out might be advantageous to their peculiar political objects" and proceed at once to notice some of the gross misstatements contained in this report. It is always our wish to treat with deference those who are clothed with judicial authority. Had Lord Abinger in his charges, imitated the wisdom and moderation of Chief Justice Tindal, he should equally have commanded our appreciation. But the noble and learned lord has chosen to quit that path in which he could tread securely, for one in which his gait is most unseemly. It is not for a judge to propound from the judgment seat doctrines of a questionable character, and if any one judge less than another is entitled to dogmatize on subjects such as these we have noticed—it is Lord Abinger. When in the House of Commons he was never able to rise to the level of any general question, and in the House of Lords he has never distinguished himself by the comprehensiveness of his views.

Then the 'Morning Herald' also criticises this judgment, and that criticism is not less severe than that of the 'Morning Chronicle.' This is what the 'Morning Advertiser' said of him :

Lord Abinger is proving himself to be to the Tory Government what his Lordship appositely described Suisse to be to the Marquess of Hertford, "an invaluable servant," to whom no dirty work comes amiss.

I fancy that is very much stronger than anything that is to be found in the articles written by Mr. Ellis.

Yesterday we commented upon his Lordship's charge to the grand jury at Chester, and to-day we refer to the report in another part of our paper of a similar charge on opening the special commission in Liverpool. We have no hesitation in pronouncing both of these charges a disgrace to the Bench, whereto the public have been taught to look rather for an impartial and temperate exposition of the law, than for political disquisitions, or such liberticide harangues as those by which Lord Abinger has desecrated it. We have already expressed our conviction that the object of the Tories is to suppress all expression of public wrongs and opinion, under pretense of quelling insurrectionary manifestations, and Lord Abinger's charges most fearfully confirm this apprehension. By his Lordship's exposition of the law, the mere fact of seeking any change in the system of Government, by means calculated to alarm the authorities, is equivalent to an overt act of treason; so that the people, in such case, have nothing to do but to hug their chains, lest their very rattling might disturb the repose of their taskmasters. We have merely space thus briefly to direct attention to the speech preparatory to the analysis, exposure and denunciation of its flagrant aggression against the constitutional rights of the people.

The Macclesfield 'Chronicle' said of him :

Lord Abinger delivered a lengthy charge to the grand jury at Liverpool, on Monday, which, for bigotry and violence of language, far exceeded his former one. It was composed almost entirely of attacks upon the Anti-Cornlaw League and the Chartists. This learned judge—this renegade Whig vents his Toryism in the most ignorant comments upon free trade, and takes upon himself to be the guardian par excellence of public opinion. We venture to assert, that there is scarcely a single man, whose office leads him to animadvert upon human wickedness, in whose history will be found crowded a greater mass of political infamy.

Now, these are criticisms from the English press, with regard to the conduct of that judge in the discharge of his duty. Lord John Russell pointed out—and there are long extracts given from his address in the speech of Mr. Duscombe, which I need not trouble the House with—but they go to show that Lord Abinger discussed the conduct of the Chartists from a legal, as well as from a political standpoint, and in this respect his address differed widely from that delivered by Chief Justice Tindal. He was criticised in the House of Commons for this, and he was not defended by the Attorney General, but on the contrary the Attorney General deprecated the discussion of his conduct in the House, because he thought it was adequately discussed, and that the public were adequately protected by the discussions outside of the House. How his conduct was discussed outside the House is shown by those extracts which I have read from the newspapers, and I ask any hon. gentleman in this House, whether there is anything in the three articles written by Mr. Ellis which animadverted upon Mr. Justice Tuck, that in severity can at all be compared with those articles which I have read from the English newspapers of half a century ago, upon the conduct of Lord Abinger? There are very strong expressions used by some of the law officers of the Crown in some of the cases. Mr. Pepys, afterwards Lord Cottenham, discussing the conduct of Mr. Baron Smith, pronounced his address to a grand jury in an Irish court :

A disgrace to the Bench and an insult to at least one-half those who were upon the jury.

Those extracts go sufficiently far to establish what I have said : that the House of Commons in England is regarded as having a superintendence over the administration of justice by the courts, that the press are held to be entitled to indulge in criticism, and that that criticism, although it may be occasionally harsh and in some cases unjust, does not call for or warrant interference unless it is written maliciously ; unless it is written, not with a view of promoting any just public right or interest, but with the sole view of damaging the judge and of weakening his authority, and so interfering with the administration of justice by the court. Having said this much, Mr. Speaker, on this particular question, I wish to call the attention of the House to another matter, and that is the legal right of a superior court to intervene by writ of prohibition in a case such as that of Mr. King when he applied for a recount. One hon. member said : that this House was not a court of appeal, and that we are not here for the purpose of reversing the judgments that have been pronounced by the judges in the administration of justice throughout the country. That is perfectly true. It would, perhaps, be scarcely proper on my part to say anything with regard to the judgments that have been delivered by the court in New Brunswick were it not that this judgment, it seems to me, interferes with the privileges of Parliament. It is always a proper thing for Parliament to consider its own privileges and to inquire whether these privileges have been invaded, and whether that invasion has been due to the unauthorized proceeding of any private person or to the improper interference of any court, however high that court may be in judicial authority. The hon. gentleman from St. John (Mr. Hazen) admitted that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench in the Centre Wellington case, was seemingly at variance with the judgment of Mr. Justice Tuck and the Supreme Court of New Brunswick upon this matter of restraining the county court judge from making a recount. But he said : that there was a distinction between a writ of mandamus and a writ of prohibition, and that while the court might probably refuse the one it could not properly refuse the other. I may say that I was totally unable to follow the argument of the hon. gentleman in that respect. If you look at the judgment of the court which was delivered by Mr. Justice Hagarty, you see that it based upon these principles : that the holding of an election is within the law of Parliament, that the consideration of whether there has been a due return or not belongs to Parliament, except in so far as Parliament has parted with its authority, and that you cannot extend that authority beyond the express words of the statute which may call it into existence. Let me read an extract or two from this judgment for the consideration of the House. Mr. Justice Hagarty says :

When the first application was made to me in Chambers for a mandamus, I declined to interfere, pointing out the gravity of the proposed step, and its unprecedented character. Nothing that I have heard on the argument of this rule has removed from my mind the leading difficulty of the propositions ought to be established, viz., that the court is asked to interpose its authority in the direction of proceedings which appear to belong altogether to another jurisdiction, which has always asserted with success its right to regulate the conduct and execution of writs for the election of its members.

I am satisfied that the legislation which has provided a new mode of trial of controverted elections, transferring such trial from the House to the judiciary, has in no way affected the question now before us, and that we have to deal with it as if this important change had never taken place.

The House retains all powers that it has not expressly given up.

Further on, in the same judgment, he says :

The main objection seems to be this, that the person against whom the writ is asked is, as it were, the officer of another jurisdiction, which can exercise control over him, if necessary, and to whom, and not to us, he is amenable.

I assume, as I said in my former judgment, that the House of Commons has the power of enforcing returns to the writs issued for the election of their members. They have the right to inquire why any one or more constituencies may be unrepresented.

Further on still, he says :

On the whole, I am satisfied that there is no jurisdiction in this court to interfere in the manner proposed ; that the right to deal with all such matters belongs to the House of Commons, except so far only as the Legislature has expressly devolved on the courts certain express duties and powers respecting elections by mandamus is not one of those so devolved.

If that is good law, then Mr. Justice Tuck had no legal right whatever to undertake to restrain Mr. Steadman, the county court judge, from making a recount. Mr. Steadman was not acting as a common law judge. He was an officer of this Parliament, appointed by statute for a specific purpose. He was neither inferior nor superior in that official capacity to any judge of the Superior Court. He was an officer standing distinct and apart from them, and they had no more jurisdiction over him than if he lived in another country. Let me call the attention of the House to this fact, that the administration of justice is vested in the courts as servants of the Crown. They administer justice on behalf of the Crown, and the Superior Court could see that every inferior officer, whose duty it was to discharge any function on behalf of the Crown, was acting within the limits of his authority, and in accordance with the law. But Mr. Justice Steadman, in making a recount, was an officer of this House, a parliamentary officer. The Crown had no jurisdiction over him. It had no right to undertake to control him in any way in the discharge of that duty. The powers and privileges of this House are known to the House itself, are under the control of the House, and in so far as they are under the control of any other party, they are put there by the express authority of the House, and that can give to an officer of the Crown no jurisdiction in such a matter. That rule is fully recognized by the Privy Council in the case of Theberge vs. Landry. In that case, which was an appeal from the courts of Quebec to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the question of the jurisdiction of the Privy Council arose. The Privy Council is in an eminent degree an advisory body of the Crown. It derives its authority from the Crown; and, although it acts judicially, in form as a committee of Council, its judgments are given effect by an Order in Council, sanctioned by the Crown. Now, what does Lord Chancellor Cairns, who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee in that case, say? Referring to two statutes of the province of Quebec, relating to the subject, he remarks that these two Acts of Parliament are peculiar in their character, and then goes on to say:

They are not acts constituting or providing for the decision of mere ordinary civil rights; they are acts creating an entirely new, and up to the time unknown, jurisdiction in a particular court of the colony for the purpose of taking out, with its own consent, of the Legislative Assembly, and vesting in that court, that very peculiar jurisdiction which, up to that time, had existed in the Legislative Assembly of deciding election petitions, and determining the status of those who claimed to be members of the Legislative Assembly. A jurisdiction of that kind is extremely special, and one of the obvious incidents or consequences of such a jurisdiction, must be that the jurisdiction, by whomsoever it is to be exercised, should be exercised in a way that should as soon as possible become exclusive, and enable the constitution of the Legislative Assembly to be distinctly and speedily known.

Further on, in the same judgment, he says:

Now, the subject-matter, as has been said, of the legislation is extremely peculiar. It concerns the rights and privileges of the electors of the Legislative Assembly to which they elect members. Those rights and privileges have always in every colony, following the example of the mother country, been jealously maintained, and guarded by the Legislative Assembly. Above all, they have been looked upon as rights and privileges which pertain to the Legislative Assembly, in complete independence of the Crown, so far as they properly exist. And it would be a result somewhat surprising, and hardly in consonance with the general scheme of the legislation, if, with regard to rights and privileges of this kind, it were to be found that in the last resort the determination of them no longer belonged to the Legislative Assembly, no longer belonged to the Superior Court, which the Legislative Assembly had put in its place, but belonged to the Crown in Council, with the advice of the advisers of the Crown at home, to be determined without reference either to the judgment of the Legislative Assembly, or of that court which the Legislative Assembly had substituted in its place.

Now, it seems to me that that judgment completely covers this case; and when we look at the rights of Parliament as distinct from the common law, prior to any legislation on the subject, I think we cannot help coming to the conclusion that the courts could have no jurisdiction whatever over the county judge in undertaking to recount the votes in an election. I will briefly refer, and then I will have done with the subject, to three cases that are mentioned in Hallam, Carte, and d'Ewes with regard to the powers of Parliament in this particular. The first case I will mention, and I will mention it very briefly, is the case of Mr. Alexander Nowell, who was Prebendary of Westminster, and who was elected to a seat in the House of Commons. A committee was appointed to inquire whether he was entitled to take his seat or not, and the committee reported that he was a member of the House of Convocation, that he had a voice in that House, and was therefore disqualified for a seat in the House of Commons. And so they ordered that a writ should be issued for the election of another member. Now, the second case was one that occurred in the time of Queen Elizabeth, which concerned certain irregularities in the elections in the county of Norfolk. The Lord Chancellor had issued a writ for new elections on the ground that those which had previously been held were irregular and that other parties ought to be returned. The subject was discussed in the House of Commons. The Speaker received a notice from the sovereign that the House had been troubling itself with a thing that did not concern it and with which it ought not to meddle, but the House disregarded Her Majesty's inhibition, and considered the subject, and made a report. They said that they did not regard what had been said or done by the Lord Chancellor or the judges, because they thought it would be well to protect their own rights by not seeming to recognize anything that might have been done by the Chancellor or by the judges, and they recalled the writs that had been issued by the Chancellor and ordered the members that were elected to be sworn in. Now, a third instance I will mention is that of Sir Francis Goodwin and Sir John Fortescue, both of whom ran for the county of Buckinghamshire. Sir John Fortescue had the support of the King, but Sir Francis Goodwin had the support of the majority of the electors and was returned to Parliament. He had been outlawed some time before, and the King objected to his appointment, and ordered that a new writ should be issued. The matter was the subject of dispute between the sovereign and the House of Commons. He insisted that a conference should be had with the judges. The Commons at first refused, but agreed at last that they would hold a conference in the presence of the King and Council, and after they had done so, the King admitted that the Commons had jurisdiction over the matter of election returns, but maintained that the Chancellor had concurrent jurisdiction. The matter in dispute was settled by Sir Francis Goodwin resigning his seat, and a new writ was issued. That, says Mr. Hallam, is the last instance in which the Crown undertook to interfere with the prerogative of the House of Commons to judge of a return of its own members. The validity of those returns and their regularity was therefore always judged by the House. The Crown had not power to interfere, and the courts, as representing the Crown, had no jurisdiction over the election. That has been the settled law of Parliament from that day to this, and the recognized power of every Parliament where representative institutions have been introduced, and it is utterly impossible to conceive that a judge appointed by the Crown for the trial of common law or equity cases could have any jurisdiction over anything pertaining to the election of a member to the House of Commons unless such jurisdiction was expressly conferred upon him. This was the view recognized by constitutional writers in England. Every reader of Hallam knows what the English view of the law is in this particular. Every one who is conversant with the Centre Wellington case, and that was frequently discussed at the time of the elections of 1887, knows what view was taken by the courts of the province of Ontario, and everyone knows what view had been taken by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of the appeal to it from the province of Quebec. All these things were before Mr. Ellis's mind when those articles were written, and all these things it is important to keep in mind when we are judging as to the propriety of what Mr. Ellis has written. Let me suppose for one moment that the court of New Brunswick had found the contrary of what they did. Let me suppose that they had found that Mr. Justice Tuck had no jurisdiction and no right to issue a writ of prohibition to restrain Mr. Justice Steadman from making a recount. What view would have been taken in that case, with regard to the moderation and fairness of those articles which Mr. Ellis had written? There could be scarcely two opinions in the public mind that the facts were such as to warrant what he had said, and it is from that view that we must regard those articles, when we consider whether they were properly or improperly written. I do not pretend to say, Mr. Speaker, that every word in those articles was duly weighed, and that there was no injustice done to Mr. Justice Tuck. I am not questioning the purity or the intention of the judge. I am not calling into question the uprightness or integrity of any one of these judges connected with this case. But I say, from my point of view, that the rights of Parliament have been invaded. There has been a contempt of the authority of this House, and we might, with more propriety have summoned Mr. Justice Tuck to our Bar, than the court exercised in summoning Mr. Ellis to appear before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. If we have exercised forbearance, if we have not called those judges before our Bar, as Justices Pemberton, Jones and others were called before the Bar of the House of Commons in England, under similar circumstances, these distinguished luminaries of the law ought to have exercised more forbearance, more consideration to a journalist who, in the discharge of his duty, was writing in the interest of what is just and proper in respect to elections. I say, that being so, I cannot help but feel that the judgment of the Court of New Brunswick was a harsh judgment, that the punishment to which Mr. Ellis was subjected was unduly severe, that there was a wide departure from the practice of the English courts and the courts of Ontario in undertaking to consider his conduct, as it affected the court itself, on the application of a private individual, and that for all these reasons the course taken by the court is one the facts and circumstances did not warrant, and one which is calculated to weaken the authority of the court very much more than anything Mr. Ellis wrote on that occasion.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. For my part, the speech of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) on the resolution moved by him, entirely convinced me that the resolution ought not to pass; but if there has been any hesitation or doubt in the mind of any member of this House, that doubt should have been removed by the speech we have just heard, although it is directly in contrast with that in which the resolution was moved. The speech in which the resolution was moved was so extremely violent that the House would have been led into a false position—even if there were some grounds for adopting it—by giving the resolution its assent. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has led us to the same conclusion by a speech far more temperate and far more free from the great body of objections which might be made to the speech of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). So that whether the decision of the House is asked, on this question, in the tones of invective which were raised by the mover of the resolution, or calmly and logically, as in the speech we have listened to this afternoon, we fortunately arrive at the same conclusion. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has mentioned to the House, and mentioned usefully, a great variety of cases in which the conduct and language of judges have been brought in question in Parliament; and he has done so in such a way as to illustrate well the sphere of Parliament with regard to inquiry into the conduct of judges. The hon. member has mentioned some eight or ten instances in British history in which, in the Imperial House of Commons, the conduct and language of judges, or their demeanour on the Bench of their fitness to serve upon the Bench has been brought in question. But I ask the House, I ask every hon. member who listened to the hon. gentleman, if the cases which he cited, and which show the range of discussion with regard to the judiciary in Parliament, do not prove that that range has been absolutely limited to these questions—the fitness of the judge, his deportment upon the Bench, the partisanship of his conduct, or his expressions in addressing juries, as showing that he was departing from his business of laying down the law, and that he was dealing in politics instead of law. That is the entire range that the discussion has taken in the British Parliament, that Parliament to which we look for an example. That is the entire range which the discussion of the judiciary has taken in any Parliament, so far as I have been able to learn from an investigation of the subject. But what the hon. gentleman is asking us to do to-day is to commit the very offence for which judges have been censured in Parliament. Judges have been censured for having left their business of judgment and having gone into politics. We are being asked to leave our business of politics and to go into the business of judgment. Now, while these instances are fresh in the recollection of the House, and while the House remembers the range of the discussions in the Imperial Parliament with regard to the conduct of the judges, I wish to ask the House—and to couple with my request a challenge to the hon. members who have supported this resolution—whether there is an instance in British history or in colonial history in which such a discussion in Parliament was in review of a judgment, either of a judge or of a court? In all the discussions that have taken place, in all the instances which the hon. gentleman has enumerated, or which I have been able to discover, in which there have been reflections upon the conduct of judges, there has never once been a resolution moved or a speech made attacking the validity and soundness in point of law of a judgment given by a judge of a British or a colonial court. But I wish to carry that challenge further, and to ask hon. gentlemen if they can point out an instance in British or colonial history in which even criticism in Parliament—to say nothing of a resolution of censure—was directed against the judgment of a court constituting a tribunal like the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. Such an instance cannot be found, not in the English language, or, I venture to say, in any other language, does a resolution exist—I might go so far as to say does a speech exist by a member of Parliament, criticising and pronouncing invalid or contrary to the law the judgment of a tribunal like that which sits in the province of New Brunswick, and of whose judgment we are now deliberately sitting in review. Sir, the constitution is perfectly plain on this point, it seems to me, and hon. gentlemen have not shown it to be otherwise. The path of the judges is clearly marked out. Their business is to administer the law. When they deal with politics, we, in our own sphere of politics can censure them, and criticise them and pronounce our opinion upon them. Our business is confined to the politics of the country—I use the word "politics" in its larger sense, as embracing legislation—and when we step out of our sphere and undertake to deliver judgment between subject and subject, much more when we undertake to reverse or to sit in review on the judgment of one of the highest courts of the country, we lay ourselves open to the very condemnation that this resolution would pronounce against the court whose opinions it criticises. The censure of this House is worth something or it is worth nothing. If it is worth nothing, we need not spend a day or two in discussing whether we will pronounce that censure against Mr. A or Judge B. But I do declare that the censure of this House, if this resolution were to pass, would be held in utter contempt by every reasonable man. How does it proceed at the very outset? It proceeds to pass judgment against a man who has not been heard in his own defence. There was a time, seven years ago, when he stood here on his defence, stood in the face of the judgment of the House with Mr. Speaker in the Chair, was interrogated at the Bar and gave his answers—assisted by counsel, because his examination might have been followed not only by the reversal of his action as returning officer, but also by his imprisonment. When he stood there seven years ago, he at least had the advantage of being heard. And what action did the House take? The hon. gentleman who moves this resolution was here then, but many of the gentlemen who were here and heard his defence then have gone from this Assembly. And when his examination was finished, a resolution was adopted by this House. The House had heard him, and had heard his advocate, so far as he thought it necessary to have the assistance of advocacy, and the resolution adopted then and there was that Mr. Dunn be—discharged. And he was discharged. My hon. friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Fraser) said last night that it is not too late to deal with this case, that this is the very close of the whole transaction. So far as Mr. Dunn was concerned, that was the close of the transaction. Fifty or sixty or seventy gentlemen who sat here and heard his defence and his explanations have since passed away from this House. And now, after the lapse of seven years, a new House is asked to pronounce judgment upon his acts, and to declare him guilty of most dishonest and improper conduct with regard to this House. In the meantime is he summoned back? Is he given an opportunity to make his defence? Is the charge communicated to him? Not at all: not one of these things is done. The policy of the resolution, while repugnant to every principle of decency, according to my opinion, is not inconsistent with that which was adopted by gentlemen opposite at that time, when the House had to divide in order to ascertain whether Mr. Dunn should have the privilege of having counsel attend him at the Bar, or not. The same line of conduct follows him now, and we are not only to condemn him after a lapse of seven years, we are not only to condemn him without hearing, but we are to condemn him without giving him an opportunity to answer one syllable of this resolution, to appear either in person or by counsel, or have the charge communicated to him; and we are to have all this done in pursuance of a speech which, forsooth, in every second line of it, refers to the practice of the Star Chamber of old. Sir, there is not a feature connected with the objectionable practice of the Star Chamber of old that is not repeated in every feature and phase of the resolution before the House to-day. The binding nature of the punishment, the severity of the censure, the absence of the accused, the omission of any opportunity for him to be heard, the omission to communicate the charge to him—these were the severest charges that were ever made in history against the Star Chamber of old; and the hon. member who professes Liberal principles has succeeded, for the first time in history, in grouping all these abominations into one resolution. Now, Sir, I said that the hon. member who had just resumed his seat had given to the House the best proof that had been given yet that this resolution ought not to pass. Why? The hon. gentleman proceeded to deliver to the House a long argument—not too long at all for me—but a most interesting argument upon the legal branches of this case. At every turn and phase of that argument he discussed legal decisions pro and con. Now, I ask a gentleman so familiar as he is with the records of British parliamentary history, whether he can find in the pages of the British 'Hansard' one instance in which a judge or court was under consideration, where the member who brought forward the charge or made the criticism, was obliged to open a law book and prove that the judge was wrong in point of law. When a question is before this Parliament with regard to the judiciary, as to whether a judgment pronounced by the judiciary is right or wrong, the moment an hon. member opens books, the moment he undertakes to prove to the House what the law is between fifty or sixty apparently conflicting cases, it requires no great intelligence to see that we are out altogether of our sphere.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him—all my arguments in that respect was addressed to one point, and that was with regard to the privileges of Parliament being invaded by the courts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is not a question of the privileges of Parliament being invaded by the court.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is, if I am right in my view, that the prohibition was a prohibition of an officer of this House responsible solely to this House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We are not trying a question of prohibition to-day. Did not the hon. gentleman who offered the resolution say it was a matter quite immaterial whether Judge Tuck was right or wrong? Of course it is, and I do not intend to waste the time of the House to-night by arguing whether Judge Tuck had or had not jurisdiction; in any case it was not an interference with the privileges of the House, because the House had no jurisdiction at all in the premises. The question of law at the root of that objection was that the county judge alone had jurisdiction, and that the judges of the Supreme Court could not interfere with him. But the hon. gentleman, for the purpose of excusing this elaborate legal argument, introduced an altogether new reason, and that is that in England cases have been cited to Parliament to show that the courts were interfering with their jurisdiction. Let him show me in the British 'Hansard' a resolution like this reflecting upon a judge or upon a court, reflecting upon a judgment, in which any member discussed a question as to whether the judge was right or wrong in his judgment. There is not such a case in British parliamentary history, either in the mother country, or in any of her colonies.

Sir, if a single word more were necessary to show how utterly inappropriate to our institutions and to our procedure anything like this is, let me recall to the House the style in which this resolution was moved. Mr. Dunn was called a villain, a scoundrel, a conspirator; it was said that he should be in the penitentiary; it was stated that not a word could be uttered in Parliament to justify his course. All these things were asserted; but it was said to be a most shocking thing, and a thing requiring the intervention of this Parliament, that Mr. Ellis should have been tried by his accusers. Mr. Dunn, however, is not even tried by his accusers, but the sentence is moved without his being tried, in spite of the fact that he was acquitted when he was tried six years ago; and these epithets, the worst that the English language affords, were shouted by his accuser, who is about to vote as his judge, amidst the wildest cheers of his fellow-judges. That is the kind of procedure that this House is asked to adopt. After the speeches which have been made by the hon. member of St. John (Mr. Hazen) and the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), it was not needful for me to address the House, because there was nothing of interest, I think, left to say in the case; but I would not be doing my duty if I did not deprecate this assumption on our part of functions which the constitution does not give us, and the discussion of which only brings this House into the contempt of the country. We are asked to-day to undertake the serious business of reversing the judgment of one of the highest courts in the country, second only to the Supreme Court of the country itself, and we are asked to do that with no more powers over the question than a moot court sitting in any part of the country, or a debating club has; and for the House to enter upon its Journal judgments of that character, is to reduce the prestige and honour of this House, and to make it a laughing-stock, at least in professional circles, in this country. If we are to judge of this motion by the language of the mover, it was not moved with any hope of its being adopted, it was moved for the purpose of getting political revenge for Mr. Ellis, by using invective such as is seldom heard in this House, and ought not to be very often heard in it. The hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird) was assailed in the most violent language. He was repeatedly called a conspirator in the alleged felonious conduct of Mr. Dunn; it was said that he would not dare to go into court and submit to a jury the question whether he had a character which was injured; that he went whining into court with a long affidavit complaining of his grievances; that he was a man who had committed a great wrong, and who had suffered ever since the agony of remorse. All this, of course, had not the slightest bearing upon the case, and would not have been uttered if there were any foundation or excuse for it; but it was a convenient way, one would judge from the hon. member's speech (inasmuch as the resolution had no chance of passing), of getting some party revenge for Mr. Ellis by plastering the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., with every insult the English language would afford. So far as my experience goes, the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., even if it were relevant to this question to say so, has done no single act to deserve such censure. He was returned to this House by the returning officer, erroneously, I believe, erroneously I never hesitated to say; but the man does not live who has had the courage—though insinuation, insult and invective we have had galore—who has had the courage or the honour to point to any evidence that Mr. Baird instigated it, or that anything occurred from beginning to end which would justify any honest man, with a spark of regard for his character or his word, in calling him a conspirator in regard to that wrong. Mr. Baird took his seat in the House as the representative returned, and he sat here under the judgment of this House. The House investigated the case, it brought the returning officer here, it had the ballots, the writ and the return; the case was investigated by a committee of this House, and that committee declared that the House ought not to exercise jurisdiction with respect to the matter; and Mr. Baird sat and waited for the attack which his opponent might make by a petition in the courts. We affirmed the principle in this House that the courts having ample jurisdiction to give redress by election petition, the matter should be left to them. But his assailant declined to bring him before the court for the obvious reason, a reason which was made patent to everybody here at the time, that the lists, I will not say through any fault, but through accident, probably, were in an entirely artificial state, and contained three or four hundred names which should not have been on them at all, and Mr. King knew perfectly well that if the lists were revised while the petition was current, and if he unseated the sitting member, the member would be returned to this Parliament if he went again before the electors. No petition was presented, but Mr. Baird resigned his seat, although he was not under any legal obligation to do so, and he was returned, and returned handsomely, by the county in which it was asserted last night he would not dare to enter a court of justice to seek redress without being ejected. When the general election came on, Mr. Baird was elected again.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. CASEY. What is that?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Baird had just as good a title to the seat as the hon. member who has just interrupted me, and he has sat in this House ever since with quite as much credit as he. But something must be done to insult again and again a man who has triumphed over his political enemies in that way, and hence this resolution. Then we come to consider the case of Dunn himself. I have discussed the ordinary principles on which men act in every-day life, especially when they have to administer anything like judicial functions, as some of us are called to do from time to time, although, perhaps, in a subordinate sphere. We expect every man to be heard before he is condemned, we expect him to have notice of any charge or complaint made against him. But let all these principles of common decency, justice and procedure be waived, I ask the House what evidence the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) or anybody else has presented of all that alleged villainy on the part of Dunn which has been denounced in this invective and in the language of the resolution itself. What evidence has the hon. member, or has any one offered in regard to Dunn? Hon. gentlemen opposite had not the fairness to read the answers that he gave at the Bar of this House. While I do not hesitate to say that I believe his decision was wrong, we are not referring to the wrong to-day; we are not asked to pronounce the decision wrong, we are asked to pronounce it corrupt and fraudulent without any hon. member undertaking to produce evidence to show that it is either one or the other, except by asserting that it is so and by asserting it in very loud tones and with very vehement gestures. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not had the fairness even to read the answers he gave at the Bar.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the right hon. gentleman allow me to say that he is not quoting from the resolution correctly. There is nothing about corrupt or fraudulent about it. The resolution says his action was a gross violation of law and justice.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will read the resolution presently. I will adopt, however, for the present what the hon. gentleman has quoted from it; I was not, however, pretending to quote from it. If the answers which Dunn gave at the Bar are true, although his decision was a wrong one, it could not be fairly stigmatized as a gross violation of law and justice, because while the evidence would not go to the extent of showing that his decision was right or wrong, because that was not matter of evidence, it was evident that he acted according to his best judgment and, on questions of law, by legal advice. We are not accustomed in this country to treat every case in which an error of law is committed by a returning officer or by a deputy returning officer as a gross violation of law and justice and to stigmatize it in the language which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has used, and in language which he poured across the Table in an unceasing stream for two hours, but which he did not place on the face of the resolution. We are not accustomed to treat cases of that kind in that way. I see a countryman of my own sitting here who was deprived of his seat by the error of two deputy returning officers, who refused to count four hundred of his votes, and the man who took his seat. I will not say stole it, because that would be a quotation from the other side, which I do not wish to make; but the man took his seat and kept it for a year, and sat in the closest councils of hon. gentlemen opposite, and was not called a thief, a conspirator, a man who stole his seat or any of the foul names of yesterday, but who was treated as a good, honest, true, pattern Liberal until the constituency caught him by the collar and put him out of the House, to which he has never returned since. We are not accustomed to treat these subjects in the language that was used yesterday. We leave these matters to the courts. The hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) presented his petition, and the judge denounced from beginning to end the proceedings instituted by which he had been deprived of his seat. The election took place, and the present member for Lunenburg was restored. At the same time, I would have regretted if, even in that which was a much more glaring case than the present, the party with whom I have been accustomed to co-operate in this House, had called upon the House not only to interfere and pronounce judgment on the question, but to pronounce judgment on the question overruling the decision of the highest court in the province in which the transaction took place. Now, let me call the attention of the House for a moment to what the facts are; and I will run over them very briefly, because I think very few of them have any practical bearing on the question before the House. The articles were published by Mr. Ellis in a paper in St. John, a very short time after Judge Tuck had granted an order nisi for a writ of prohibition. I suppose every member of this House, even those who do not possess any legal training, is aware by this time that what Judge Tuck did was not to prohibit the county judge from recounting the ballots, but to order that the subject should be argued before the full Bench of the New Brunswick court, and that in the meantime proceedings in the case should be stayed. I do not think it is necessary to argue, or that it is worth while to argue, as to whether Judge Tuck had jurisdiction to prohibit the recount or not. I think he was bound to permit the question. There may be doubts, and some members of the House for whose legal opinion I have great respect entertain strong doubts as to whether he had jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition; nevertheless there was strong opinion on the other side, and he acted properly. He was sustained by the unanimous decision of the Bench of his province, and at least he was justified in giving an opportunity for the case to be argued. That was all he did. Mr. Ellis made the mistake to attack him; indeed he made a two-fold mistake. He was under the impression that Judge Tuck had given an absolute prohibition, and that that was the end of the matter, and he assailed him in the worst language that could be applied to a judge, language in comparison with which the language used in any of these cases which have been cited, was childlike and loving itself. An extraordinary attempt has been made here to say, that not one word should be withdrawn from the severity of Mr. Ellis's language; at least, as regards Mr. Dunn, and at any rate as regards Judge Tuck, the contention has been made here that we owed Mr. Ellis a debt of gratitude for the language he used in reference to Judge Tuck. I confess, for my part, that I do not owe him any debt of gratitude with regard to that matter at all; and Mr. Ellis did not think so himself, because when he came before the court to answer the interrogatories which were put to him, he said, in explanation of the reason why he had made this extraordinary attack: "I thought that the prohibition had put an end to the matter," implying, perhaps—although I am sorry he did not say so—that he would not have made use of that language under other circumstances. But it is reserved to this day (so many years afterwards), for political purposes, that some people should say that although the judge had merely ordered that the question should be argued before his brother judges, that he was liable to be stigmatized as a man, only to be resorted to when justice was not wanted; a man who had thrust himself into the case, a man from whom no honest judgment could be expected. I have heard a good deal said of Mr. Ellis's character and bearing. I only know him as a fellow-member who sat in this House; but knowing him that much and only slightly in that way, I have no hesitation in believing that he would not have made use of that language or published it in his paper if he had known what the facts were and just what Judge Tuck had done. But the gentlemen who have used the language that we heard yesterday are apparently men of a different pattern from Mr. Ellis, because they justified the writing, while Mr. Ellis himself admitted that it was written under a mistake. In the meantime, Mr. Ellis had done a great injury to Mr. Baird, and he had done a foul injustice to Judge Tuck. He would have done that injustice by simply stating that Judge Tuck had prohibited a recount, which, under the circumstances, would have been, I think, an improper thing for a judge to do; but then he went further and slandered Judge Tuck's private character as a man of honour, and applied to him epithets which, if Judge Tuck deserved, he had no right to sit upon the Bench at all, in this or any other country. He had in the meantime done that grave wrong to the judge as well as to the suitor and his offence merited punishment, even if he admitted he had erred; and it deserved punishment tenfold more, (according to all the precedents which will be found in regard to this subject), when he stood there absolutely refusing to make the slightest apology for the unwarranted wrong which he had done. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) treated it as perfectly clear that there was no jurisdiction on the part of a Supreme Court judge, and that the county court judge was a parliamentary officer: an officer of this House. I admit that there are questions, as to whether he can be controlled in the exercise of his judicial authority by the judges of another court, but I do not conceive that there is the slightest warrant for the contention that he is simply a parliamentary officer: an officer of this House. I am glad to know that an opinion similar to this has been very strongly expressed by a gentleman of very high authority: one who will be recognized as a high authority by this House, and that gentleman spoke in reference to a case in which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was himself concerned. An attack was made in this House by Mr. Hawkins, who one session sat for Bothwell, upon the county court judge because he would not recount, and the contention which Mr. Hawkins made was, that the county court judge was only a parliamentary officer: an officer of this House, and that his bounden duty was to recount the moment the application was made to him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He did recount, and the returning officer disregarded it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That only shows that Mr. Hawkins was not justified in attacking him because he did not recount. If the hon. member (Mr. Mills) will look at the Debates of April 9th, 1883—which I dare say he looked at at one time with more interest than he does now—he will find that that day was occupied by a discussion on the conduct of the county court judge because he would not recount. Whether they brought the horse to the water to drink a second time or not, I have no knowledge. This is what the Hon. Edward Blake said upon the subject:

What does the hon. gentleman put upon the paper? He puts a notice of motion for a select committee to inquire into the conduct of the judge in refusing the application made on his behalf for a recount of the votes. The judge may have been right or may have been wrong in refusing the recount. I purposely abstain from discussing a single word of the particulars.

The Hon. Mr. Blake did not leave his moderation behind him when he left hon. gentlemen opposite.

It is not because he was wrong in law that we would inquire into this case any more than we would inquire into the case of an erroneous judgment in the discharge of any judicial function, for

I differ from the hon. member for Bothwell in the opinion that we have the right any more to interfere with a judge in the discharge of this judicial function than in the discharge of any other. We did not make him an officer of the House, but we imposed upon the county judges of Ontario and of some other provinces, and the judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, certain functions in their judicial capacity; and I would have been one of the last to sustain the proposal that these functions should have been imposed on the judges, had I dreamed for a moment it could ever be suggested that they could discharge those functions in any other than a judicial capacity, had I thought they could be considered in any other sense than as judges discharging that particular function, under all the sacred obligations which appertain to a man that fills the Bench of Justice. In this matter we must hold, all the more because these are matters that do excite party feeling, that the judge who is discharging this political function is discharging it in the same spirit, protected in the same manner, and subject to the same liabilities as in the discharge of any other judicial function. We could not complain of a judge because he erred in his judgment, or misconstrued the law, or misapplied the facts.

But hon. gentlemen opposite could complain of Mr. Dunn if he erred in his judgment.

Why? What have we Courts of Appeal for? We have one Court of Appeal after another. You find the County Court judges' decisions reversed in the Court of Appeal, those of the Superior Court reversed in the Court of Appeal, and those of the Appeal Court reversed in the Supreme Court, which may find that the primary judge is right, and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council finding something else altogether. There is a constant error of judgment, because judges, like other men, are fallible, and it is an error in judgment that should form the subject even of an observation here. Therefore, upon the face of the hon. gentleman's notice of motion which simply said: I want a select committee to inquire into the conduct of this judge for refusing to grant me a recount; we could find nothing, we could find no accusation against the judge, we could not even find subject for an argument as to whether the judge was right or wrong in refusing the recount, or as to whether there had been a proper application made at the proper time, accompanied by the proper formalities, and what the reasons were. We had none of that even before us for an interesting legal argument. But that would not have been enough if we had had all that. What was the cause, then, which could properly bring this judge's action under our consideration? It was a charge of impartiality, of malfeasance in office.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) presented to this House the argument that Mr. Justice Tuck, in making the order which brought the subject of a writ of prohibition before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, was acting beyond his jurisdiction, he called on this House to enter into a very difficult legal inquiry for the purpose of inducing the House to sustain a resolution reversing the judgment of that court. When I said that I did not think that that was material to the case, I said so under the impression, which I still entertain, that the hon. gentleman had a somewhat mistaken view of the proceedings which occurred in the courts in New Brunswick. The question whether Mr. Justice Tuck had jurisdiction or not to issue an order nisi for a writ of prohibition—the question whether a judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick had jurisdiction over a county judge in his procedure for recounting the ballots—was the very question which was coming before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick; and it was while that very question of jurisdiction was pending before that court that Mr. Ellis interfered and committed the contempt. Now, if the argument of the hon. member for Bothwell, that there was no jurisdiction on the part of a Supreme Court judge to interfere with a county judge, is correct, it follows that judges, in hearing an argument on a question as to whether they have jurisdiction in a certain case or not, are utterly without protection—that they can be assailed and their functions hampered by any person who chooses to commit a contempt against them. The position in New Brunswick was this: Mr. Baird applied for and obtained an order nisi calling upon Mr. Ellis to show cause why a writ of attachment for contempt should not issue against him. What was the position of affairs with regard to Mr. Baird himself? The matter has been argued here as if it were simply a question with regard to the propriety of Mr. Justice Tuck's conduct, or with regard to the fairness of the comments upon his conduct. But Mr. Baird had rights in that matter too, and whether he was right or not in his contentions was not the question. He had at least the right, which every suitor in a court of justice has, to have his case fairly heard without being prejudiced by an attack against the judges who were to hear his case. Every suitor in the country has, by the well-established principles of law, the rights—and surely we all recognize these rights—that the witnesses who are to testify in his behalf shall be able to appear before the tribunal which tries his case without alarm that their property will be injured, that they will be assaulted themselves, or that their characters will be traduced by any person interested in interfering with the proceedings of the court; he has the right that the jurors shall exercise their functions freely, without alarm that their property, their persons or their characters will be injured; and he has the right that the judges shall hear and deliberate upon his contentions until the case reaches its conclusion, without feeling that they are subject to attack if they shall dare to do him justice. Mr. Ellis did not recognize those rights. He took the view that

Mr. Baird was simply a humble suitor before the court, and that he (Mr. Ellis) might in his paper lash everybody interested in the proceedings—that he was free to assail Mr. Baird with every description of calumny which he could put in print, and had an equal right to attack every judge on the Bench in order that, so far as his pen could have any influence whatever, he might enter into the struggle and influence the proceedings and the decisions of the court. What is the answer to that? Has it been contended, in the argument of this question yesterday or to-day, that Mr. Baird had no right to have his case fairly considered, or to have counsel in order to establish the justice of his case, without having to fight every enemy in the country, who chose to traduce his character and assail his case? That has not been contended; but it is contended that it was fair to suppose that no judge on the Bench would be influenced by an attack on his character—that it was an extreme thing to say that Mr. Justice Tuck, for example, would be influenced by an assertion that he was a man of no honour or probity, that he could not do justice, that he was only called in when justice was not wanted, but when justice was to be perverted. But the same hon. gentleman who laid down that doctrine told us that undoubtedly Mr. Justice Palmer's mind was influenced to greater severity by another attack which Mr. Ellis made upon him. Now, Mr. Baird was strictly within his right as a suitor before the court in asking that until the litigation was determined he should have a fair hearing on the merits of his case, and that he should not be held up to the country as a thief, or the judges as perjured scoundrels if they should do him justice. That was a principle which Mr. Ellis ignored and denied, and upon which he boldly challenged the powers of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. It is to be borne in mind that his contempt was committed, not as regards Mr. Justice Tuck personally, but as regards the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, because it was there that the case was to be heard. Now, the language that was used by Mr. Ellis I need not repeat to the House after the general description of it which I have given. But it was strange to hear it contended yesterday that these expressions, utterly infamous as regards any judge, if they were undeserved, and rendering the judge utterly infamous if they were true, would not bear the interpretation of being malicious contempt, that they were inspired by high constitutional motives, that any jury in the country would justify the language used, and that we, forsooth, owe to Mr. Ellis a debt of gratitude for having used it. Sir, it would be trifling and paltering—to copy again the language of the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution—to argue that these expressions which were used by Mr. Ellis, if they had any intent at all, intended anything else than a wanton, wilful interference with the proceedings then pending, and a bold and violent attempt to prevent Mr. Baird getting a fair hearing in the case. It is true that Mr. Ellis pleaded, not, perhaps, by way of excuse, but still the only justification which the case admitted of, namely, not at all that he was actuated by high constitutional reasons, not at all that he was using strong language with regard to a great public scandal, but that he did not know that proceedings were pending, that he thought Mr. Justice Tuck had put an end to the whole affair by the process he had issued, although such was not the case. His position, then, when he came to justify his language in the court, was simply this: I accused this man of dishonesty and corruption, but I find now, what I did not know then, that he had not committed that dishonesty and corruption at all. But while he stood before the court, he did not utter one word of amend or apology for the language he used, and the judges who gave the final judgment, expressed their astonishment that when he admitted this charge was unfounded and absolutely false, and that the character of the judge, who had not even the opportunity to reply, had been plundered and violated in that way, not one word of amend came from the man who acknowledged himself guilty of that offence. And yet, forsooth, no punishment should have been meted out to him, according to the contention of the other side. Nay, the hon. member for Queen's P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), by the time he got to that point, had worked himself into the position of assuming that the judges were the culprits, and that Mr. Ellis was the man to try them, because, he said, when the case had come back from the Supreme Court, a long time had elapsed, the elections were over, and the judges had time to reflect upon their conduct. Now, it is worth while for us to consider, especially as we are charged by this resolution with the duty of saying whether the penalty were too severe or not, what the defences of Mr. Ellis were. That is all important. Mr. Ellis has had the benefit of able counsel here. I will not say, because I do not know, that the counsel who appeared for him at the Bar of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick was less able, less ingenious, or more ingenuous, but the defences on which Mr. Ellis relied in the Supreme Court of New Brunswick were these. Not that Mr. Baird was a great thief, as was said yesterday, not that he was a conspirator, not that Mr. Dunn ought to have gone to the penitentiary, not that there was great heat and excitement on a great public occasion, but his defences were these: that he thought the whole thing was over, and he had stolen the judge's character by mistake; that certain newspapers had slandered the judges—and he produced the Toronto 'Globe' and the Ottawa 'Free Press,' and he quoted that well of English defiled, the language of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) went further than that. Mr. Ellis raised also this question about the jurisdiction of Judge Tuck, and he said that Judge Tuck was only sitting in chambers. In substance, that although Justice Tuck sat in the court-house, sat in the seat of justice, heard the parties, heard the arguments, gave the order as a judge, yet the technical description of his office was that of a judge in chambers, and not a judge sitting in court. And for these reasons Mr. Ellis ought not to have been punished; and we were asked to pronounce a review of the sentence passed upon him. What does the House think of these defences to-night? Most of them have been abandoned in the course of this discussion, and after a lapse of some years, some gentlemen think themselves ingenious enough to invent an excuse or justification for Mr. Ellis, which Mr. Ellis never thought of before, and, I venture to say, would utterly repudiate now. It is said in these defences, forsooth, that Judge Tuck ought to be called a judge in chambers only, and that other papers had abused him, and that the hon. member for South Oxford had a worse tongue than Mr. Ellis had a pen. For these reasons it is urged the case ought to have gone to a jury, and that if a jury had once been empanelled, it would never have convicted him. I am sure that the man who says that—and it has been said here—maligns, whether intentionally or not, the intelligence and probity of the people of New Brunswick. Because when a man stood up in court and said: I wrote that article, I accused the judge of a crime which he had not committed, but which I thought he had committed—there would be but one duty upon any jurymen who valued his oath a snap of his finger, and that was to pronounce a verdict of guilty. It would not be a question for a jury, under the old statute law or under the new statute law on libel, to say whether it was malicious or not, because when you accuse a man of a great crime, when you accuse him of having violated his oath of office, of having been guilty of disgraceful conduct, it is not necessary to prove that you did so maliciously, if you did so falsely. And according to Mr. Ellis's own confession he did the act, and he did it falsely. And if the hon. member says that no jury would have convicted him under the circumstances, he simply says that no jurymen would have regarded his oath under the circumstances. What had Mr. Ellis to complain of as regards the want of a jury in such a proceeding? I grant that he had to complain of just this: that he lost the opportunity of a jury disregarding their oaths and committing a great crime. It might be possible that if a jury had been empanelled they would have disregarded the duty they owed to the public, to justice and to themselves. He had not that advantage, but I do not think that it is in the mouth of any offender to complain of that. But it is to be observed, as the judges themselves remarked, that the procedure they did adopt was peculiarly favourable to Mr. Ellis. If he had been indicted and brought before a jury, or if a process had been instituted by way of information, or any other proceeding taken than the one adopted, the prosecutor might have struggled to the last point for a conviction, in spite of adverse testimony, if adverse testimony were produced. But the peculiarity of this proceeding which the judges did adopt is this: that the offender brought up under the attachment for contempt has the case in his own hands. He is called into court to answer interrogatories, and if he answers that he is not guilty, that he has not committed the offence, or gives any excuse or justification in law, his answer, be it true or false, is conclusive in his own favour. There can be no possibility then of a conviction and punishment by a court, or even a verdict by a jury. His answer is the law in the case, and the end of the whole proceeding. Therefore I do not think that the judges were so vindictive or intemperate or regardless of Mr. Ellis's rights, when they gave him an opportunity of saying whether he was guilty or not, and of making his own answer conclusive with regard to the circumstances. Well, then, it was said—and it is the point of the whole argument of hon. gentlemen who have spoken for the resolution—that other remedies might have been taken. It is said that Mr. Justice Tuck—who had nothing to do with these contempt proceedings at all—could have applied to the grand jury for an indictment against Mr. Ellis. But Mr. Justice Tuck was not the prosecutor; he did not care to be the prosecutor; so far as he was concerned, these proceedings for contempt might never have been commenced. The contempt was the contempt of a court of which Mr. Justice Tuck was but a member. The injury done was done to the rights of a suitor in that court, and there could have been nothing more unbecoming, in my humble opinion, than that, under these circumstances, the judge should leave the Bench to hunt the man who had attacked him in the press. The matter is very well put in a judgment that was given in a case in the United States, which was cited in the Ellis case itself. President Johnson, referring to the contention that the judges should not exercise any jurisdiction in contempt, but should pursue their assailants by prosecution, said:

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Such a suggestion is disgusting to a man of honour. It will be a sorry day when the practice shall obtain among judges of the court of last resort who hold the dearest interests of the people in their hands, when in their judicial capacity they may be grossly libelled, to leave their high positions and go before a jury in a libel suit, be subjected to the coarse criticism of defendant's counsel,— of which we heard a sample yesterday.

and if they succeed in their suit, have it cast in their teeth, that they were influenced by sordid motives. Who could have any respect for a judge who would pursue such a course? Would he not, under such circumstances, deserve the contempt of every citizen? Besides, what right would he have individually to recover damages for a wrong committed against him in his judicial capacity for an injury done the people in his person?

And let me ask here what kind of a remedy it would have been for a wrong done to the suitor, that Mr. Justice Tuck should recover damages for himself or inflict a penalty on the offender. Would such a decision be any protection to the rights of a suitor who might be prejudiced by a gross assault upon his character, while he was a litigant in one of the courts of the country?

The court has no right to punish as for contempt one who libels an individual who happens to be the judge, but it is a contempt of the court, as such, and an insult to the people represented by the court, which alone the court can punish as such. Scarcely less repulsive to all sense of judicial dignity is the suggestion that the judge should play the role of prosecuting witness in the trial of an indictment for libel. If the day shall ever come, when such shall be the only protection left to courts of justice against publications affecting their judicial integrity, none but the base and vicious can be expected to occupy judicial position.

These expressions, I am sure, will carry conviction to the mind of every man who may read them. Let us imagine the preposterous position of a judge one day sitting in the city of St. John earnestly engaged in the laborious work of the commercial cases that arise in that city, suddenly obliged to jump up, whip off his gown, and hurry into another room, where he is carrying on the prosecution of a man who had slandered him in a case he had been trying. The position of a judge, under such circumstances, would be an exceedingly anxious and trying one. The hon. gentleman read authorities for the purpose of showing that other remedies are to be resorted to, if possible, that the judges are reluctant to use their powers in cases of contempt; and for the purpose of showing the indisposition courts of justice have to exercise these strong powers of punishment for contempt, the preference they have for taking any other adequate remedy. But, in every case, the law is distinct and clear, and every one of the authorities cited in the course of this discussion shows that the choice of remedies is in the discretion of the courts themselves; that they are to be the judges of what remedy is most suitable and most applicable to the case, and, using justice with forbearance and with discretion, it is for them to say what the suitable remedy is; just as it is for them to say eventually what penalty is to be inflicted. Now, Mr. Speaker, the next extraordinary thing was the attempt that was made here to show that the penalty was a very severe one. So far as I am concerned, I think that the penalty inflicted was an exceedingly light one. The fine was small, and the period of imprisonment the shortest that could have been inflicted under the circumstances. It is said, by way of accounting for the penalty inflicted—for its severity, forsooth—that the chief justice had a weak mind, as shown by the fact that four years after he wrote his judgment he had an attack of paralysis. It is true that what the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) actually said, with regard to that, was that not many months or weeks after he pronounced sentence he was attacked by illness. Those who know the chief justice and those who have heard of him know that he was in the full vigour of health down almost to the hour when he suffered that attack. I think he was actually presiding in court the very day the attack occurred. No one noticed any diminution of his vigour, and as regards the possibility of his mind having been weakened, let any one read the two judgments given by him in this case. They are the judgments of a strong judge, of a strong-minded man, as well as of a keen logician. And, Sir, if the judgments are sound and correct, which he pronounced four or five years before, in point of law, and as regards the narrative of the facts, he was exceedingly temperate in the sentence by which he followed them. But it is said: there was another judge upon the Bench who possibly over-ruled the judgment of the chief justice. We are asked to pronounce judgment upon that hypothesis. Few of us have ever seen the respected chief justice. Few of us know Judge Palmer, but the hon. gentleman said—and we are to take it on the assumption of the hon. member for Queen's, and adopt a resolution on that ground—that he suspects that Judge Palmer had a stronger mind than the chief justice. What though he had? The crux is that Judge Palmer had been slandered too. True, it was a great offence to slander Mr. Justice Tuck. But, in the meantime, and before sentence was pronounced, Mr. Ellis had slandered another judge too, and therefore he should not have been punished so severely. Either the hon. gentleman's argument means that, or it means this: that, two months before sentence was pronounced, Mr. Ellis deliberately came out in the same paper and assailed with the strongest charges that could be made against a judge another member of the court, in order that that judge might be hindered from sitting in judgment upon him. Why did he not follow that to the logical conclusion and attack them all? He would then have had them all disqualified, and we should have had the hon. member for Queen's speaking to his resolution yet, and declaring the wickedness of this court, because, though Mr. Ellis had slandered them all, they still persisted in trying him. Well, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member presented that argument to the House, did he tell us that there were other judges than these two gentlemen, and that these two did not even constitute a majority? Did he tell us that Mr. Justice Wetmore, since dead—dead before the sentence was pronounced—had left his judgment on that question, agreeing with the chief justice and Mr. Justice Palmer? Did he tell us that Mr. Justice Fraser, who is known too well in the Maritime Provinces to need one word of commendation from me, to eulogize whom would be superfluous—a man of the highest probity, a man who never wanted a respectful word of a fellow-being, unless that word had to be denied him in order to make political capital against his friends—also agreed in this judgment. Why did he not tell us then that Mr. Justice King, who sits in the Supreme Court of Canada now, an exceedingly respected judge in his own province, as he is here, after expressing his profound regret that when Mr. Ellis had to admit that his accusation was false and unfounded, he had not made an apology or an excuse to the court why the sentence should either be withheld or made less than it was, proceeded to concur in all that the Chief Justice and Judge Palmer said, and went just as far as any of them. So that there were three other judges of the court whom Mr. Ellis had forgotten to slander, and for whose presence there the hon. member for Queen's had no explanation, upon his brief to offer. Now, I want to say a word or two with regard to the hon. gentleman's argument as to constructive contempt, because in this resolution we are invited not only to lay down principles of law as to which many of us do not agree, we are not only asked to say that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick unanimously erred in deciding upon this question of law, but we are asked to lay down certain legal principles with regard to the law of constructive contempt. The contentions that were made in this regard, were utterly unsupported by the authorities, because while they lean in the direction of leniency, forbearance, and the preference for other remedies, not one of them has the slightest relation to the power possessed by the judges. One of the most forcible quotations that were read by the hon. gentleman was a note to Volume III of the lives of the Chief Justices of England, by Lord Campbell, a note commenting upon the decision in the case of Rex vs. Almon, an old case, in which Judge Wilmot, said among other things:

It is as ancient as any other part of the common law; there is no priority or posteriority to be found about it; it cannot, therefore, be said to invade the common law.

But here yesterday it was said not only to invade the common law, but to be utterly unknown to English procedure and the English constitution; it was inquisitorial, and unknown to the English law.

It acts in alliance and friendly conjunction with every other provision which the wisdom of our ancestors has established for the general good of society. Truth compels me to say that the mode of proceeding by attachment stands upon the very same foundation as trial by jury; it is a constitutional remedy in particular cases, and the judges in those cases are as much bound to give an activity to this part of the law as to any other.

The hon. member for Queen's read it as though the foot-note wiped out the text. Well, the foot-note enjoins discretion, and indicates the care with which the judges exercise that power; but does it go the length we are asked to go, of saying that the power is practically extinguished by the changes which have taken place in recent times?

And although there can be no doubt as to the power to proceed by attachment in such a case—if a prosecution or a libel on judges be necessary, the preferable course is to proceed by information or indictment, so as to avoid placing them in the invidious situation of deciding where they may be supposed to be parties.

"There can be no doubt about the law," is the language which the author uses in his note, and as regards the preference to proceed by information or indictment so that they may not appear to be the parties, it has no application to a case like this, where the suitor claims that he has been wronged, and that his rights in the litigation have been interfered with. Does it not show more boldly than anything else that can be suggested, the impropriety of this House being asked to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, when we find that there is attached to it a declaration that that judgment is without precedent in view of the fact that it awarded a fine, imprisonment and costs? Now, I wish the House to understand me as making two propositions upon that subject. The authorities are perfectly clear that the power of the court in such a case is to award imprisonment and fine, or both, and costs. So with all the authorities with regard to the practice laid down—and the hon. gentleman was far from citing any authority to the effect that that is not a proper mode of proceeding—and now he wishes us to come to that conclusion without a single authority against that position, but with a clear authority in support of it; because he has not been able to find or produce in any of the cases which have been decided, where there was a contest, that that happened to be the sentence pronounced. The dictum is perfectly clear in the books of practice upon this subject:

If the court is not satisfied, it may commit him to prison for a certain time, or may impose a fine, or may do both; and in every case the court may further order the defendant to pay the costs of proceeding in every case. But the costs are, of course, in the discretion of the court, and will not be granted where proceedings are clearly vexatious and the party instituting them is himself to blame. —[Ogar's Libel and Slander.]

Yet we are asked to censure the Supreme Court of New Brunswick because it added costs to the remainder of the penalty. I do not think such is the function of the House, and if this were the law—which I do not believe it is—it would be rather rash to lay it down to this House as the law, simply because the hon. member for Queen's tells us that he has not been able to find a proceeding like the one under discussion. Now, in saying a few words upon the propriety of these attacks upon the judiciary, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not claim for the judges, as they have not indeed claimed for themselves, that they are above criticism. I do not claim for this power of attachment for contempt that it is a power which extends to every offence committed against a judge. The hon. member for Bothwell seemed to think that we ought to reverse this judgment of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick because he discovered that two newspapers in England said what he thought were worse things of Lord Abinger, than Mr. Ellis said of Judge Tuck, and yet were not prosecuted for contempt. Well, Sir, the libels, if they were libels—and they did not seem to me to have anything like the severity which was attributed to them—were not made on the judge in his judicial capacity at all. The complaint made in Parliament was that Lord Abinger had harangued grand juries by denouncing a Liberal Government in England for having given too much encouragement to the Chartists, by their measures in favour of reform and by their proceedings in favour of reform Bills; and upon that the press drew attention to certain events of his early career when he was in the House of Commons, showing, in the opinion of the editors, that his opinions did not amount to much, and, therefore, need not be regarded very highly upon the Bench. These were strictures, whether right or wrong, that might be made on a judge, certainly without incurring the penalties for contempt; just as a judge may be attacked on the street, foully beaten, injured and his property taken, and whatever his assailant may incur in the way of penalty, he does not incur the penalty of attachment for contempt. But to attack a judge in relation to judicial proceedings respecting a case that is before him is a matter altogether different, involving the rights of a different class of persons and involving the judiciary. No one contends that the press is not perfectly free to criticise the judges. They may, day after day, show to the people if they can, and the judges of the tribunals of the country are wrong in point of law; but they may not assail the characters of the suitors in the courts, and may not attribute untruthfully corruption to the judges in relation to their judgments. That is all we contend for, and it is a principle that would be struck at by this resolution. As regards the treatment of judges in this

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Chamber, let me recall what I said with respect to the illustration given by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that whenever a judge steps out of his legitimate functions he is open to censure, observation and criticism here. The one thing we cannot do is to reverse his judgment, because we have no jurisdiction to do it, our arm falls helpless when we attempt to do it and we cover ourselves with ridicule and contempt. Another thing we ought not to do is to assail the characters of these men, or undertake to weaken the respect which the public have for their judicial authority, unless indeed a case should arise in which we are bound to go forward and remove the judge from the Bench, on the complaint of some one who has the courage to make the charge, and undertake to prove it. But in a collateral way, for the purpose of giving revenge or redress to Mr. Ellis, to undertake to assail the characters of the judges who sentenced him, or to review their judgment, it is only, as I ventured to say a little while ago, beneath the dignity of this House, but outside of its legitimate powers, and, therefore, would subject the House to the contempt it would deserve if it did so. But the position we should occupy is this, that when we undertake to proceed against a judge by reason of an erroneous judgment or a corrupt judgment, we should proceed in the way pointed out by the law; that is to say, as was contended last night by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) and the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), we ought not to be satisfied with undertaking to pronounce other penalties than those which the law provides. The law prescribes the penalty, namely, that if the judge is incompetent or corrupt he shall be removed by an address of both Houses of Parliament; and it is against the constitution that he shall be censured or subjected to any different penalty from that which the constitution prescribes. The principle is not new. The hon. gentleman has sought to give us illustrations to the contrary. Not in any case, however, was the result such as this resolution calls for. On one occasion, in consequence of a judge on the Bench not only having used very intemperate language, which he was not authorized to use as a judge, but in consequence of his demeanour having been alleged to be very violent—I refer to Baron Smith—the House of Commons was induced to pass, not, mark you, Mr. Speaker, a resolution reversing his judgment, not a resolution asking that censure be passed upon him, but a resolution appointing a committee to make inquiry into his conduct and into the allegations made before the House immediately afterwards. Sir Robert Peel rose in his place in the House and moved to rescind the motion, immediately after it was granted, on the ground that the appointment of a committee was outside the law, which requires an address from both Houses of Parliament to authorize the removal of a judge, because if the judge were a man of honour, and if the House implied the slightest stain on his honour, he would be well aware that he could no longer render effective service as a judge. That was in 1834, with respect to Baron Smith, and it was cited in July, 1890, when a member, Mr. Dillon, having put a motion on the paper to inquire into the conduct of Judge Harrison, in Dublin—in consequence of certain statements which he had made from the Bench in the course of a charge. I think, to the grand jury—Mr. Smith, the leader of the House of Commons, after the judge's answer had been read by Mr. Balfour, insisted that that should close the incident, refusing to grant the committee moved for, even although it had been pressed for not only by Mr. Dillon, but by the Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone; and Mr. Smith refused time and opportunity for discussing the question on the ground that it should be discussed no longer. The same question came before this House on the occasion to which I referred, when I read what took place on the Bothwell election in 1883, and I was glad to notice that there was practically a concurrence of opinion between the leaders of both sides of the House as to what rule should regulate proceedings of this kind against the judiciary. The Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald having stated, in pretty general terms, to which I will refer a little later, as to the latitude that might be taken by a member in reflecting upon the character of a judge, and the remarks seeming to give some colour to the view that after the proceedings were terminated they could be referred to here, Mr. Blake made the following remarks:—

There is no function of higher importance or greater consequence to the public weal than the function that we hold of inquiring into or censuring or dealing with the conduct of the judiciary. Upon the character of the judges rests no doubt to a large extent, that confidence in the masses of the population in their decisions which is essential to the good administration of justice, and that their conduct should come in question in a political assemblage of this kind, and particularly in connection with the discharge of a judicial duty closely concerned with an election, is a circumstance which shows how delicate our relations are to a judge in this particular regard. I am not one of those who at all object to this great, this highest court of all; this great inquest inquiring by proper means into the conduct of the judges. As I have said, I believe that to be our highest, our most important and also our most delicate function. We have had occasion before now in which the conduct of judges of a higher rank, holding their offices by a tenure in one sense more secure than of a county court judge—we had occasion to consider what the procedure should be, what manner of crime or offence it should be that would be properly imputed to a judge in order that his conduct might be here called in question. I have no quarrel with the statement of the hon. the First Minister in part, when he declared that a judge's conduct ought not to be attacked, at any rate with a view to an inquiry such as this, unless the charge against him be one of serious impropriety—a charge I think the hon. member said, which, if true, would warrant his dismissal from office. That is a just proposition to which I assent.

Further on the hon. gentleman said:

It was not a charge of impartiality, or malfeasance in office—not that the judge erred, for all may err in judgment, but that he degraded his office, betrayed his trust, wilfully and knowingly did a wrong thing, perverted justice and judgment—that is the nature of a charge which could alone make it proper to have been brought here.

Of that there is no allegation in the notice of the motion; of that there was still less statement of fact, and it was not until in the course of his harangue, which was largely devoted to the vindication of the returning officer rather than to the attack upon the judge, that the hon. member stated that there had been some caucus—I think he called it—in the office of the judge, of political parties to decide—or the residence of the judge, to decide what course should be taken. He then proceeded to state that it had been declared upon the street beforehand, the judge had declared precisely the course he was about to take in the court. Now, sir, I maintain that these statements, which are the gravamen of the charge against the judge, which the hon. gentleman has brought forward, ought in common justice, in common decency, to have been stated beforehand, so that the officer might have had an opportunity of making his statement to the tribunal before which the charges were brought. What opportunity has he had? What opportunity is he now to have to make his statement and to clear his character? The hon. gentleman does not state his charge against him; he does not make it public until he springs it in this House in the evening, and in an hour afterwards the motion is to be disposed of, and it is to be disposed of out of this High Court without the judge having an opportunity to say a word.

There is considerable analogy between that position and the position here to-day, when we reflect that this judgment is to be pronounced to be wrong and that the principles of law upon which it is based are to be pronounced to be wrong, without argument, without any one being heard, and without the tribunal itself having the slightest notice that these proceedings were to be taken against this judgment. And Sir John A. Macdonald, following Mr. Blake, made it perfectly clear that what he had said when he spoke previously to Mr. Blake was not to be understood at all as justifying any treatment of the judiciary in any other way. I shall not detain the House by reading at length his remarks, further than to say that the result of them was completely in accord with the sentiments expressed by Mr. Blake, which I have read. I think, Sir, an examination of all the authorities will show that these are the true rules as regards inquiry by this House into the conduct of the judiciary, and that, apart from the conduct of the judiciary, as to the soundness of their judgment we have no reason or right to inquire here. The only cases which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) could suggest upon which an argument was ever made in the British Parliament, were cases in which it was contended that there was a conflict between the courts of law and Parliament itself as to the exercise of the jurisdiction of Parliament. This resolution relates to no conflict of that kind. It is a resolution undertaking to review a judgment which was pronounced with regard to language uttered in contempt by Mr. Ellis as to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. The mere fact that at the beginning Mr. Ellis's offence related to an election case, would not give this Parliament any jurisdiction over the proceedings for contempt, or any jurisdiction for interfering with them. It is, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that I have felt bound to express, as one member of this Parliament, my insistence that this resolution is not a proceeding according to the usage of Parliament in any country; but that it is a proceeding that would be a most unsound and undignified departure from our constitutional rules, and our jurisdiction if we undertook to enter upon it. I can understand just as well as I can understand this: that any suitor disappointed in the courts, if he happened to be a member of this House, could come here and upon his bold assertions and his abuse of the judges, could move a resolution here asking the House to reverse the judgment from which he feels he suffered. I can understand just as well as I can understand this: that a party outside of this House, who has not a seat here, could acquire the services of a political or professional friend, who having failed in the courts below could come here, and if he could not reverse the judgment, could at least obtain an insult to the judges from the debate that would take place in this Parliament—if indeed he should not be so fortunate as to succeed in obtaining a resolution censuring the judges who dared to pronounce judgment against him. If parties were reversed, and if hon. gentlemen who moved and support this resolution sat upon this side of the House; then if they are consistent and sincere, as we must suppose them to be: the day of their coming into power would usher in the new system under which a member sitting among the majority has only to stand up and make the assertion that he believes the judgment of a court to be wrong, and undertake to prove it by citations of cases, some of doubtful authority, some of difficult interpretation, some conflicting with others; he has only to do that in order to obtain a decision by this House that the judgment against his client below, or the judgment against himself, was not one that should have been rendered. That would be the legitimate result if this practice is to become the practice of Parliament. And, if hon. gentlemen who favour it should ever sit in the majority in this Chamber; when that day comes, not only will the judiciary have been degraded by the adoption of that practice, but this House itself would have been degraded, and will have lost all true appreciation of the bounds that ought to be set to its jurisdiction.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the discussion of this case should be limited entirely to lawyers. Indeed, I think it were better that it should not. A Bill was proposed once in this House by a prominent member (Mr. McCarthy) to establish a Railway Commission, and in order to safeguard the public he provided: that one member of this commission should be a lawyer, the other a railway man, and the third a man of common sense. The lawyers have spoken so far on this question; I have heard nothing from a railway man yet, but I intend to make the best effort I can to speak from the standpoint of an ordinary man of common sense. I do not profess to have uncommon sense. I have not a mind of the character possessed by the hon. leader of this House. I have not a mind which by some alchemy peculiar to itself can transmute the issues before the House, even the very facts laid before it, into some thing which appears to be very different from these issues and facts as at first laid before us. I cannot, for instance, take into my intellect the resolution as presented to this House by the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), and say, as the right hon. the Premier has said: that this motion is to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. Now, Sir, it does not ask us to do anything of the kind. It asks us to express an opinion about the punishment inflicted on Mr. Ellis by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. It asks us to express an opinion as to the propriety of exercising jurisdiction for constructive contempt in the way it was exercised by that court; but it does not ask us to reverse the decision of that court. The right hon. the Premier says that we are asked to declare the law in opposition to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. Here is another statement which his alchemic mind has taken hold of and transmuted into something very different. The resolution before us does not ask us to express any legal opinion as to the decision of that court in New Brunswick; but the right hon. gentleman's mind, which is capable of transmuting one statement into another, and one fact into another, takes hold of that resolution and tells us that by it we are asked to declare the law. We are asked to declare nothing of the kind. He says we are asked to decide the points mentioned about the recount and so on. We find nothing of this in the resolution. It was the hon. gentleman's uncommon sense and his uncommon imagination which found this alleged assertion in the motion before the House. Now, Sir, I cannot do all that.

I cannot get any meaning out this resolution except that which an ordinary man of ordinary common sense would get out of it, and that is a very different thing from the meaning which the hon. Premier has attempted to read into it, with the evident purpose of discrediting the motion and its mover before the House. I cannot imitate him in that respect. I cannot even imitate his remarkably judicial manner, his impassivity of countenance, which vainly strives at times to conceal the irritation which evidently possesses him inwardly. It was quite easy to see, during his remarks, that a very slight interruption brought the irritation to the surface, and disturbed the beautiful flowing lines of the impartial countenance which were seen a short time before. I could not pretend to that degree of control over my features. Nor could I assume the pathetic tone he did in describing poor Dunn at the Bar of the House, when he had to request the permission of the House to sit down in a chair because he was very tired. I could not imitate that; but I will try to imitate the coolness and calmness which the hon. gentleman generally adopts in his addresses to the House, but which he has departed from on this occasion. He has accused us of using very bitter and improper language against Mr. Dunn, against the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), against the judges, against lots of people. But, Sir, when he says that Mr. Ellis was guilty of a vile attack, and when the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) imitated him by anticipation in saying that a foul injustice had been done by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). I do not think there is much to be said on that line. I do not intend to call names as I go along, but I shall inquire, and help the House to inquire, calmly into the question before it. Referring to one part of the hon. Premier's speech, where he said that a great many who were members of the House in 1887 are not now members, I am justified, I think, in going, in some detail, into the matter of Mr. Dunn's examination, for the information of those who, like the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen), were not members of the House on that occasion. It is unfortunate that the defence of Mr. Dunn should have fallen into the hands of an hon. gentleman who was not in the House at the time Mr. Dunn was called before us and examined. It is unfortunate, also, that he adopted the tone he did; I may come to that more particularly later on. I now mention it merely to express my regret that so young and able and pleasant a man should have adopted the tone he did. It can be excused in him on the ground of his youth; more can be excused to the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), but to these excuses the hon. Premier can lay no claim. Now, Sir, the question raised by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I.,

(Mr. Davies), is not a question of law, as the hon. Premier said, but a question of fact, and a question of public policy. It may be divided into three heads. It calls for a censure upon an official of this House for the manner in which he discharged or failed to discharge his duties; it calls for an expression of opinion that the jurisdiction in regard to constructive contempt, as claimed by the court in New Brunswick, is hostile to the public interest, and should not be exercised when there is another remedy for the judge who feels himself insulted; and, in the third place, it asks us to say that we think the punishment inflicted on Mr. Ellis was arbitrary, vindictive, and too severe. Now, let me take Mr. Dunn's case first. As to our jurisdiction in this case, nobody has attempted to raise any doubt, least of all, the Premier, who, in 1887, when we had Dunn before the Bar, defended our jurisdiction. It will be remembered by those who were then members of the House that Dunn was called before the Bar on the motion of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard). He appeared there asking to be heard by counsel; and when the first question was put to him, his counsel raised the objection that the House had no jurisdiction over him. That question was then argued, the Premier, then Minister of Justice, giving his opinion, which was, of course, coincided in by this side of the House, that we had jurisdiction, and that his examination must proceed. Now, the hon. Premier, as I say, makes pathetic allusion to the case of Dunn, saying that he had not notice of the present proceedings in the House, that he is not now even called upon to make his defence, and so on, speaking of him in the most lachrymose tone imaginable, almost as if he were to be lamented equally with those fifteen or sixteen members who had departed this House and this life since that memorable occasion. When Dunn was before the Bar to make his defence, as the hon. Premier wittily calls it, what did he do? What impression did he make upon the House? Sir, the impression he made upon the House was that he was a very impudent fellow, refusing to answer any question until he took the advice of his counsel whether it was a proper question or not, and answering it then as scantily as possible, evidently relying upon the powerful support of the hon. gentleman who was then Minister of Justice, who is now Premier, and those who sat at his back, to bear him out, as far as possible, in evading the Order of the House by the nature of the evidence he gave. He admitted in this so-called defence, in the first place, that he had applied for the position of returning officer, being at the time a public school teacher, with no experience in political matters; that he had applied to the hon. gentleman who is now the member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), who was then a candidate; that he had reason to believe that this gentleman had applied on his behalf to have him appointed to that position. I have the examination here if anybody cares to hear it read, but I do not want to take up too much time. The hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), supplemented this explanation in part by his own statement made in the House at the time. He told us that it was usual in that county to appoint the sheriff as returning officer; that he had reason to believe that the sheriff—I think his name was Henry—was hostile to him; that there had, moreover, been a mistake in the revision of the lists for the county; that some parishes had been revised by an assistant of the revising barrister who was not duly qualified for that position by having been a barrister for five years; and that the lists for these parishes were therefore not legally revised. Mr. Baird, in his speech, said he knew that these lists were not legally revised, and that he was informed that the sheriff intended, if he were the revising officer, not to count the votes given in those parishes because the lists had not been legally revised. That is rather a strange proposition on the face of it, because if the statement as to their legality were true, there were other older lists which had been legally revised and could have been used. So that I do not see how it could have been possible for the sheriff to cut the hon. gentleman out of the vote of those parishes. These were the parishes in which the Conservative party had an advantage, and the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird) said he was told that if the sheriff were the returning officer he would not count the votes of these Conservative parishes, and that therefore he (Mr. Baird) had no hope of getting elected. He said that he was urged to pass by the sheriff and have somebody else appointed. The then Minister of Marine (Mr. Foster) advised him not to do that, but he made up his mind to see the sheriff and be guided by the result of the interview. He drove fifty miles to see the sheriff, but could not find him at home, and he then wrote a peremptory demand to Ottawa to have the sheriff passed over and Mr. Dunn—a man without experience either in politics or the management of an election—appointed in his place. This Mr. Dunn was the secretary of the Conservative association and evidently a close personal friend of the hon. gentleman himself. At all events, the hon. gentleman made the application and was successful. Then we come to a very peculiar proceeding. Mr. King had made his deposit, Mr. Dunn had accepted it, the polling had taken place, and the adding up of the votes, and then came the point at which Mr. Dunn had a distinct duty to perform, laid upon him by the statute, and which he did not perform, namely: the duty of returning as elected the candidate who had the greatest number of votes. Now, the right hon. the First Minister has said that nobody has had the courage to attempt to show that the present member for Queen's (Mr. Baird), the then candidate, had any connection with the transaction, by which he got his seat, or that there was anything to show that Mr. Dunn had acted dishonestly. It seems to me that the fact that the sheriff was passed over because he was a Liberal, that the old friend of the Conservative candidate was appointed at his request, that the new appointee was a man without experience and likely to go wrong, if he did not make mistakes intentionally, the fact that this nominee of the Conservative candidate carried out the will of that candidate, and not the will of the people of Queen's County, by returning the man who had the minority of votes, directly in the teeth of the election law,—these facts are sufficient to show that there was something like collusion, or an arrangement, between these two gentlemen or some others on their behalf, that Mr. Dunn should be appointed in order to effect a certain purpose. Mr. Curry, the agent for the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Baird), approached Mr. Dunn, or met him, at all events, the day before the declaration, and told him that he was going to raise the point about the irregularity of Mr. King's deposit, and that is all Mr. Dunn has told us as to what passed between them. That is part of Mr. Dunn's evidence, as given here at the Bar. Having had notice beforehand that this point was to be raised, he held the declaration meeting the next day, he heard argument on both sides, and decided of course in favour of the man who had nominated him, at his own request, to the post of returning officer. I think that in these facts there is a presumption of unfair and dishonest dealing on the part of Dunn. We go further. We find that Mr. Dunn was served with an order from the county judge to hold a recount of the votes; that he was proceeding to do so when he got a writ under the rule nisi from Judge Tuck, telling him not to recount until the case had been argued before the court. In the face of those two orders—the order for a recount on the one hand, and the order staying proceedings for a recount on the other—without waiting for any decision by the court as to whether a recount should be held or not, without waiting to find out in the proper legal manner who had the final majority of votes, Mr. Dunn made haste to return the minority and defeated candidate, and sent up his return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, without the ballots and other documents he should have sent along with it. He obeyed the injunction of the Supreme Court, in so far as it enabled him to avoid a recount, but he disregarded it when it was convenient to him to make a return of the defeated candidate. In a case of that kind, where the injustice was so glaring, where the breach of the election law was so apparent, it does seem to me that it is asking too much of this House to assume that this man Dunn acted innocently. He had every inducement to act dishonestly. His conduct bears every appearance of dishonesty on its face. The only defence he made in his own behalf, when he stood here at the Bar, was that he acted on the advice of counsel. We all know, without any disparagement to the legal profession, that one can always get counsel to advise him to act in the way he wishes, unless that be distinctly criminal and might involve the adviser in serious difficulties. Mr. Dunn succeeded in getting counsel, who is now a member of this House (Mr. McLeod), to advise him to send on that return and give the seat to the defeated candidate, and let the other man go to the courts for his remedy, if he chose. That is all the defence that Mr. Dunn made at the Bar of this House. The right hon. the First Minister says that was a defence. I leave it to the House if it was any defence. If Mr. Dunn has no more to say for himself now than he had then, there would be no use whatever in bringing him again to the Bar of this House, and going through the whole tiresome proceeding of wrangling with himself and counsel, and his friends on the other side as to what questions should be put to him and what value should be attached to his answers. We have got through with Mr. Dunn's evidence, and we come to the point to which the First Minister alluded with fine theatrical effect. It would have taken very well on the stage. He asked what was done to this man after being examined by this House. What motion was proposed with regard to him? A motion of censure? No; the hon. gentleman said, and he turned to his party friends at his back as he said it: the motion was "That the witness be dismissed," and the hon. gentlemen behind cheered at the top of their voices as if they thought that had great significance. What are you going to do, Mr. Speaker, with a witness when through with him except to dismiss him? If that motion had not been made, Mr. Dunn would have had to remain here ever since, day and night, during all those years. There must be a dismissal of the witness, and that dismissal is held by the Premier to mean that no fault was to be found with Mr. Dunn or the answers given. Such a contention is childish. It was childish enough on the part of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) to use the same argument, but it was absurdly finical and childish on the part of the First Minister. No action was taken that day with regard to Mr. Dunn. What action was taken later? After a day or two taken to consider Mr. Dunn's answer and the whole case, Mr. Weldon, then member for St. John, moved:

That the second report of the select committee on privileges and elections be not concurred in, but that it be resolved: That, in view of the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act and also in view of the facts elicited on the examination of Mr. John R. Dunn, returning officer of the electoral district of Queen's, N. B., it was the duty of the said John R. Dunn, at the said election to have declared and returned Geo. G. King as the member elected for the said electoral district.

This motion, the House did not see fit to adopt. The hon. gentleman who is now Premier, after discussing it at considerable length, moved an amendment to the motion of Mr. Weldon:

That the House adopts the report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections on the case of the election for Queen's County, N. B.

And the feature of the report of that committee which it is important to note, is this:

That the question raised as to the holding of the said returning officer, as respects the candidature of the said George G. King is one cognizable by the Supreme Court in the province of New Brunswick under the provision of the Contested Elections Act, and that no objection has been made to the qualification or eligibility of the said George F. Baird to sit in the House of Commons if he be duly elected for the said electoral district. Resolved, that in the opinion of the committee the House ought not to declare that the said George F. Baird is not intitled to sit in the said House, but should leave the case to be disposed of under the provisions of the Controverted Elections Act, it being the intention, spirit and policy of Parliament that all questions as to the validity of the election of members of the House of Commons should be decided by the ordinary legal tribunals of the country instead of by the House of Commons.

Now, Sir, in the face of the argument used to-night by the hon. Premier that no action had been proposed from our side of the House in regard to Mr. Dunn, and that if there were a case against Dunn it might have been tried in the courts, and in the face of this motion moved by the hon. gentleman himself in 1887 to adopt the report I have read, will it be believed that the hon. gentleman, the present Premier, knew that the day was passed on which Mr. King could apply for the remedy referred to, that the time for petitioning the court was over, and that, by the action of this House in refusing to declare Mr. King elected—a refusal decided upon by the motion of the present Premier himself—Mr. King was deprived of the only remedy he had in the case? And now, the hon. gentleman sneers and says that we took no action in the case of Dunn, and that Mr. King had a remedy in the courts. I think his action at that time can hardly be counted as one of those which do the highest credit to the hon. gentleman since his entry into this House. The hon. junior member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) said the other night that the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) had made no motion of censure upon Dunn in connection with this case, after the examination was concluded. Whereupon the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) interrupted to say that he had moved a motion. The hon. member for St. John said—I read from the unrevised report:

He was allowed to leave the House uncondemned, and hon. gentlemen opposite never had the courage to move a resolution concerning [I suppose he said censuring] Mr. Dunn for what he did in that election.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I moved a resolution myself.

Mr. HAZEN. I am stating what I believe is a fact and what hon. gentlemen who were present then tell me is a fact.

After recess the hon. junior member for St. John, having looked up the matter in the meantime, stated that he had found the resolution made by my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., and he read that resolution to the House. I shall only quote it in part. After reciting the facts, the resolution says :

That the returning officer nevertheless returned the defeated candidate the said George F. Baird as elected, and that it was his duty instead to have returned the said George G. King, who received the said majority of votes, as the member elected ; and the said returning officer (by name John R. Dunn) be forthwith summoned to attend at the Bar of this House.

Mr. WALLACE. For what purpose ?

Mr. CASEY. The motion was also to summon him to the Bar to amend his return accordingly. If it is not a censure to say that an officer of this House has violated his duty, has violated his oath, I do not know what a censure is. Yet with these words before him, the hon. member for St. John overlooks the censure, and sees in this simply a resolution that the returning officer be summoned to the Bar to amend his return. So much as to the examination of Dunn on that occasion, and all the good that it did. It impressed this House with a great respect for Dunn's check, but very small respect for his uprightness as a returning officer. And I doubt if his being called half a dozen times more would make it any better. Let us go back to the point at which I branched off to refer to Dunn's appearance before the House. What reason did he give for declaring the defeated candidate elected ? It was his duty as returning officer to know before he accepted the deposit, before he declared Mr. King a candidate, whether Mr. King was properly nominated or not. He declared that Mr. King was properly nominated, he accepted his deposit, he reminded him of the necessity of appointing a financial agent. But then he turns around on declaration day and says : I did not know what the law was then ; I know better now. I have been looking over some law books ; I have been taking lessons from Mr. Currey, the Attorney for the Conservative candidate, and now I know that the law says that Mr. King, under the circumstances, was not a candidate at all, and therefore Mr. Baird was elected by acclamation. Now, Sir, I think that pretended change of opinion on his part—I can hardly bring myself to admit that it was a real change of opinion, for Dunn must have had advice all along as good as he had at the close—that pretended change of opinion, taken in connection with his action after the declaration, and taken in connection also with the manner of his appointment, raises the very strongest presumption against the honesty of his course. Add the fact that he was acting in direct opposition to the law, and the case against him is as clear as you can expect a case to be before pronouncing the censure of this House upon any of its officials. If we are told that although he was examined, he had no opportunity to explain, I must remind the House that before the motion to dismiss him was made or agreed to, he was given an opportunity to say anything he wanted to say in defence or explanation of his acts, and he said nothing whatever. Now, in regard to this Dunn case, of course, the jurisdiction is clear, the law is clear, it is only a question on our part as to whether we think that Mr. Dunn was honestly in error, or that he did wrong knowingly. The hon. Premier admits now that he did wrong. It is a pity he had not been willing to admit that in 1887, when he did his best to sustain the action of Mr. Dunn, and carry out the results of his mistake, if mistake it were. But he admits now that he was in the wrong, and it is for us to decide whether he was knowingly or ignorantly in the wrong. I submit, from the evidence before us, that he was knowingly in the wrong, that it was part of a concerted arrangement to obtain the seat in the last resort for the man who had the minority of the votes. I won't say it was all planned before the election, because it was then possible that Mr. Baird might get a majority of the votes ; but when it was found that he had not a majority, some excuse had to be discovered to prevent Mr. King from taking the seat, and this was found by the assistance of Mr. Baird's attorney, Mr. Currey. Now, we come to discuss the question of the action of the judges, and the wide question of constructive contempt, and how it ought to be treated by the courts, and how the action of the judges in connection with it should be treated by this House. This is a question that would probably occupy a great deal of time if it was gone into thoroughly. I will simply refer to some of the points that have been made by the Premier. I suppose the first one to be taken up is the question whether we should discuss this subject at all. He said that our business was legislation, was politics in the widest sense of the word ; that of the judges was law ; that we had no business to interfere with the judges in their law, and they had no business to interfere with us in our legislation. Now, Sir, if politics in the widest sense, as expressed by the Premier, does not include the question of public policy, the question raised in the second paragraph of the resolving part of this resolution, as to the opinion of the House in regard to this power—if, I say, politics in the widest sense does not involve the question of public policy, whether it is politic or just to allow this power of committal for constructive contempt to remain in vigour; then I do not know what politics mean, then I do not know what the rights of citizens mean, then I do not know what the rights of the press mean. And we cannot shirk the consideration of the rights of the press as if it were a matter of slight importance. The press has, by common consent, acquired for itself in reality that position which was given to it at one time, in a sort of figurative sense, as the fourth estate of the realm. If the Queen, Lords and Commons discuss and legislate, the press no less discusses, and is almost as effective in securing legislation as either of the other three branches. Now, if we are not at liberty to discuss this, I do not see what we are at liberty to discuss. The Premier, waxing irritable and excitable under all his coolness of demeanour, said that if we adopted this resolution or any other in regard to the same question, we should make ourselves the laughing stock of the country, we should reduce ourselves to the level of a debating school. Well, I did think, during a good part of the hon. gentleman's speech, that he was coming down very near to the level of a debating school; and that if this House deliberately renounced the power to express its opinion on questions of this kind, on the action of the judges, on the policy that should be followed in a case like this of constructive contempt, we should deserve to be ranked as a debating school. If we are merely able to talk about things that are of no importance, and are debarred from talking of matters of such importance as this, debating school would be the right name for us. But to imagine that we would be lowering our own dignity by discussing a matter of this consideration, is absurd. Before coming to what he said on this point, I wish to call attention to what I think is the right view to take of the matter, and I will refer to his remarks as I go along. I think that in cases of flagrant contempt in the face of the court, or undue criticism 'pendente lite,' intended to prejudice the jury, the power should be summary and almost unlimited. That is necessary in order to carry out an investigation with a view to justice. But when it comes to hostile criticism after a case has been tried in court, I say it is servile, and slavish, and beneath the dignity of the youngest member of this House, not to mention the man who is leader of the House and Minister of Justice, to say that we have not a right, that the press have not a right, or that individuals have not a right, to criticise the way in which judges have acted. Are we going to put our judges on a pedestal, and the moment they are made judges, to say they can do no wrong, to say that we will not criticise them? Why, Sir, what are judges made of? They are made of lawyers. And what are lawyers made of? Well, most of them are human beings, I believe. There may be occasionally one or two fit to lead the House, or to preside over a court in New Brunswick, who are angels; but the great majority of the judges are ordinary human beings, and so far from being injured by free public criticism, they are all the better for it in every way. They are not only the better for it in regard to their conduct, but the respect in which they are held by the public will be greater when it is known that they are not administering justice within a cast-iron safe free of attack, on account of the nature of their actions, or even in a wire cage similar to that in which an American naturalist has been camping out amongst the gorillas in Africa to learn their language. Our judges are not demi-gods, they are, and must be subject to public criticism of their acts. Speaking as a common-sense man, it seems to me it is only when criticism passed upon them by outside parties can injure or affect the ends of justice, that they should have summary power to commit for contempt of court. Now, in regard to that, my humble and feeble lay opinion is endorsed by that great authority, Sir George Jessel, who admits, as the hon. Premier insisted on, and as we do not deny—because this resolution does not deny it,—that the courts have power of committal for constructive contempt. Sir George Jessel said:

It seems to me that the jurisdiction of committing for contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited should be most jealously and carefully watched, and exercised, if I may say so, with the greatest reluctance and the greatest anxiety on the part of the judges to see whether there is no other mode which is not open to the objection of arbitrariness and which can be brought to bear upon the subject.

What are the terms of the resolution now before the House? They are:

That in the further opinion of this House, the jurisdiction claimed by the judges of Superior Courts of Record of punishing by fine and commitment to prison for constructive contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited and exercised by judges, who are at the same time judges of the law, of the fact, of the intention and of the sentence, and whose decisions are given without the aid of a jury and without being subject to review, is opposed to the genius and spirit of constitutional liberty and ought never to be exercised where any other pertinent remedy can be found or recourse had to any other method of obtaining justice.

These are almost the words of the opinion of Sir George Jessel, who has been recognized by the Premier himself as one of the highest authorities on the subject. The hon. gentleman, however, said that this appeared as a foot note. I submit that the motion before the House is in strict accord with the highest English authorities, and, in my opinion, the Premier has not improved his reputation as a constitutional lawyer by trying to make hon. members believe that the resolution differs, in any way, from these views, expressed by these authorities. The First Minister said that the House was asked to say that the Supreme Court was wrong on a point of law. Such is not the case. The resolution merely asked the House to express the opinion that the power of the court should not have been exercised except in the way in which the highest British authorities have set out. I suppose that nearly all hon. members, lay as well as legal, are aware that the judges have other remedies than that of commitment for contempt. A judge may apply to a court for permission to enter a criminal information, and then the case is brought up without going before the Grand Jury. But the trial must be held before another judge and before a jury, and a man is called upon to answer with his liberty or property, for utterances in criticisms of a judge, before a jury of his peers, as prescribed by the constitution. The Minister of Justice would have the country believe that such a course would have done Mr. Ellis no good in the present case. He said that the jury would not be the judge of the criminal intent in the case, because when a man is accused of such a charge as violating his oath, the mere proof of the act is taken to be proof of the criminality of the intent. That latter statement is quite true, but the attempt to apply it to the Ellis case is absurd. Mr. Ellis, in making these criticisms on the judge, whether he was right or wrong in making them, was not breaking an oath and was not doing an act in itself criminal, but was expressing an opinion on the conduct of a judge; and before he could be punished in any trial before a judge and jury, the jury would have to be satisfied as to the criminality of the intent, as well as the fact of publication, and also whether the strictures were justified by the facts of the case or not. So that by the course taken by the court, Mr. Ellis was deprived of the protection of an impartial judge and jury in his case. In that respect, this House has a right to censure the court in pursuance of the authority of Sir George Jessel, who said that the summary process should only be adopted as a last resort. If the judge did not wish to adopt the course of a criminal information, he might institute a civil suit for damages. All he should want was to get into court and have the facts established and made clear that he was acting honourably and justly as a member of the Bench, and had not stained the ermine or done violence to his seat. But it seems in this case the court wanted something more. They thirsted, metaphorically speaking, for Mr. Ellis's blood. They could have adopted one or other of the two processes

Mr. CASEY.

I have indicated, if they had not wanted revenge on Mr. Ellis. The First Minister has said that we are trying to get revenge for Mr. Ellis. It seems to me that the severe punishment meted out to Mr. Ellis by the judges looked like revenge too on him. And why? After six years have elapsed, after the matter had been forgotten, after the hon. member for Queen's had begun to sit comfortably and not feel that he was pointed to by the finger of demonstration, not to call it by any other name, as a member who had got his seat in such and such a way, the judges sentenced Mr. Ellis in cold blood to a vindictive punishment. Why was it made a vindictive punishment? That had been explained by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). A short time before the date on which the sentence was given, although it was after the time the court had decided that the articles amounted to a contempt of court, Mr. Ellis published a most violent attack on Judge Palmer, one of the judges of the court. He accused that judge, if I am not mistaken, of having received a heavy bribe for dispensing justice, or dispensing with justice, as Mrs. Malaprop would say. While that attack was fresh in Judge Palmer's mind, and the minds of other judges, this case came up for decision. The Premier said in a very childish way, for I cannot call it anything else, that Mr. Ellis attacked Judge Palmer in the hope of getting a lighter sentence. I suppose Mr. Ellis knew Judge Palmer quite as well as did some of the older members of this House who were acquainted with him when he sat in this Chamber, and if he thought such action, that is to make a charge against the judge of corruption and receiving $5,000 as a bribe to violate his oath of office, was likely to lead to a lighter sentence, Mr. Ellis was very much mistaken in his man. What did Judge Palmer do? Did he turn round and commit Mr. Ellis for contempt of court, or contempt of the judge, at all events? Did he sue him at law, or did he try to institute criminal proceedings against him? Not at all; there was no action of that kind on the part of Judge Palmer to vindicate himself; but when after all the long-drawn out proceedings had been gone through, and when the Supreme Court decided the court below had a right to pronounce sentence, there is where Judge Palmer got in his work. He and his colleagues punished Mr. Ellis, not so much for the old contempt of court as for the attack which he had recently made on Judge Palmer and which Judge Palmer had not dared to resent in any other manner. You can imagine, Mr. Speaker, under all the circumstances, whether Mr. Ellis was likely to get just treatment from that court. You can imagine whether it was right to leave in the hands of judges who are mortal men, some of them supremely mortal, and some of them superlatively human, the power of passing judgment on others when their minds are in a state of irritation, as the minds of those judges must have been on that occasion. This motion asks us to declare by inference that it is unwise to leave that power in their hands. I do not see why a judge, after a case is over, when there is no danger of prejudicing the jury or the litigants, should stand in a different position from any other officer. If the Speaker of this House, if the highest civil servant in the land is slandered, he has only one course to obtain substantial rehabilitation of his character, and that is to go to a court of law and prove that the statements made about him are lies. That is all the power a judge should have to vindicate his character, unless where there is danger of intimidating a jury. The right hon. the Premier says that in this case the court might have been intimidated by the articles which Mr. Ellis wrote in public. It is not very likely indeed that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, which has been described to us in such glowing terms, would have been intimidated by two or three newspaper articles. It is far more likely that the result would have been what did happen, namely: that they would insist on going on to the bitter end, not only with their proceedings in the case itself, but with their proceedings against Mr. Ellis for his criticism of them. The hon. the Premier was very anxious to prove that we were wrong in discussing the conduct of Judge Tuck in regard to the recount. He will, however, observe that we have made no attempt to do that, and that there is no reference in the motion to the action of Judge Tuck or the Supreme Court as a whole in regard to the recount. But the right hon. Premier after pointing out that Judge Tuck is not in the question at all; devoted a large portion of the time of the House, and read three or four pages of quotations to show that Judge Tuck was right in that matter. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) did the same thing. They may convince both sides of the House that Tuck was right and that Ellis was wrong; that Mr. Ellis libelled these judges with malice aforethought and with criminal intent, but even though they succeed in that, we are no nearer a conclusion on the subject of the resolution itself. This resolution does not ask us to say that Mr. Ellis was justified in his criticism of the judges, or that Tuck was wrong in regard to the recount. It simply asks us to say that the manner in which this prerogative of commitment for constructive contempt was exercised is contrary to public policy and public interest, and should not have been exercised under the circumstances. I now come to the consideration of the nature of the punishment inflicted upon Mr. Ellis. I am very sorry indeed that the First Minister has done his better self a great wrong in saying that that punishment was too light. He has shown himself in a position in which it were much better for all parties that the Premier of a great country should not show himself. He has shown himself to be vindictive in his whole treatment of the case, and more especially in his statement that the punishment was too light. The right hon. gentleman says that the House must not accept the statement that there is no parallel for this punishment, just because the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), has not been able to find a parallel for it. I say that it does not depend upon the member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) to find a precedent, but that it lies with the Premier and Minister of Justice to show a precedent for such punishment. He has been challenged, and I challenge him again to point to a case where any such punishment was inflicted either in England, or in the British colonies for an offence of this kind. The hon. the First Minister said about the motion: that no such motion as this could be found in Britain or in any of her colonies, or in the United States or anywhere else where the English language is spoken. I hope not, Mr. Speaker, and for the reason that no such occasion for a motion of this kind has ever arisen. There is no case on record in the British dominions where any judge has imposed fine, imprisonment, and costs for one and the same offence. The Premier says that no doubt they have authority to do so. We do not dispute that, but we say that they are wrong in exercising it in that vindictive and arbitrary manner. I say that it was vindictive, because in the first place it was a punishment in part for the original offence, and in the second place it was a punishment on Mr. Ellis for the charges he made against Judge Palmer, and which the judge could not avenge in any other way. I leave it to the apologists for the court and for Mr. Dunn to bring forward a parallel case. Till then we have the best argument of the case, and are able to say that this punishment is totally unprecedented. Now, he says further: Why did not Mr. Ellis follow up this attack on Judge Palmer in law, and prove that he was unfit to take a seat on the Bench? That is a pertinent question, of course. Still, it is a very serious thing for a private individual to try to unseat a judge. The more pertinent question is why has not Judge Palmer proceeded against Mr. Ellis for that attack, and given him an opportunity to prove in open court the truth of his allegations in respect to that judge? Talk about respect for the Bench. Does any one suppose that respect for the Bench is going to be increased in this way, by judges punishing summarily all the attacks upon them which they believe to be unjustifiable, without giving their assailants an opportunity to go into court and prove the charges they make? Is that the way the judges shall obtain respect? No, Sir, that is the way they shall obtain the contempt of the whole country. How can contempt of justice be avoided? Only by the judges themselves meriting the respect and confidence of the community by their actions. I submit that, in criticising their committal of Mr. Ellis, and the severity of the punishment they imposed upon him, in the strongest terms, we are not committing any contempt of justice, although we may feel some contempt for men who would use their position in such a manner. Now, it is also said—and the hon. Premier has again and again harped upon it—that it is too late to consider Dunn's case now; it is so long since it happened. Well, Sir, if the judges, in their overwhelming zeal for their own position, and in order to punish the contempt which Mr. Ellis seemed to feel for them, had not acted so vindictively and bitterly against him, it is highly probable that Mr. Dunn might have been allowed to rest. In saying this I do not mean that we are trying to get any revenge for Mr. Ellis in discussing this matter; but I do mean that it was a matter which, on the part of the judges, had better be let lie, in the interest of Mr. Dunn and in the interest of the hon. member for Queen's County, N.B. (Mr. Baird). But they have ripped it up: they have acted vindictively; they have punished a highly respected citizen of St. John in a way that they evidently meant to be degrading and injurious to him, and they have thus opened up the whole matter and brought on Dunn and his friend who sits in this House this renewed attack and this renewed ventilation of the whole business. I am sorry that the Government should have taken up the matter as a Government question. They were not bound to do so in any way. The attack upon Mr. Dunn did not compromise them in any way whatever, unless they chose to become Mr. Dunn's champions. The expression of opinion in regard to the action of the court did not compromise them unless they chose to be the champions of the judges in their vindictive treatment of Mr. Ellis. They have made themselves the champions of Dunn, whom everybody regards as having been entirely dishonest in this matter; they have chosen to become the champions of the judges in their vindictive action, and they must bear the consequences of the censure which will be passed upon this House in the minds of the public if this House does not see fit to adopt the resolution now before it. The censure will apply to the Ministry as well as to the judges and Dunn, whose champions they have made themselves. Now, the hon. Minister of Justice chose to say—which was also an ill-advised thing on his part—and was evidently said in a moment of irritation—that the hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird), held his seat by as good a title as I myself or any other member of the House. If my recollections are not all astray, the fact as to whether that hon. member was elected at the last election or not, remains still in doubt. Through misunderstandings or mistakes, or some failure in the legal machinery, the petition against him in regard to that seat never came to trial, and it was never decided whether he was legally elected the member for that riding or not. I think it is not for him, in his place, because he has had the good luck to retain the seat, to brag about the confidence which he enjoys among the people there, or for his leader to brag on his account. Upon the face of the actual voting it would appear that the hon. gentleman was defeated then, as in 1887, by a considerable majority; but the court has never given a final decision on the matter, and it had better be allowed to rest, by his friends, at least. Now, Sir, I think, in view of all we have heard to-night, and in view of the absolute failure on the part of the hon. Premier to justify Dunn, or to produce any precedent for the action of the court of which we complain, I am justified in asking the House to support the motion of my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies).

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I should not at this late hour attempt to occupy the attention of the House at all, especially as I cannot bring anything new to the discussion, were it not that the resolution which the House is asked to pass upon is one reflecting on the court of my own province. Under these circumstances, I do not feel that I ought to give a silent vote in regard to it. This resolution seeks to do three things: first, it asks this House to condemn Mr. Dunn for his conduct in the election of 1887; second, it asks us to say that the conduct of the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick was wrong when they convicted Mr. Ellis of what is known as a constructive contempt; and third, it asks us to say that, having convicted him of that offence, they imposed too severe a sentence upon him. With reference to the first of these questions, it has been said, and very well said, that so far as Dunn was concerned, he was called before the Bar of this House and tried and examined in reference to the very charges made against him, and was sent away without any resolution of the House having been passed condemning him for what he had done. It does seem to me that to almost any fair-minded man that ought to settle the question. At all events, this is true, and it must be doubly true from the standpoint of the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution and talked so long and loudly and violently in reference to it, that Mr. Dunn ought not to be tried here, ought not to be condemned here, without first being heard, and that is what this resolution seeks to do. I think that part of the resolution may be dismissed at once. Mr. Dunn has had his trial. Whether he was right or wrong in declaring Mr. Baird to be elected in 1887 is not now the question. This is true, and I think I have a right to say it, that so far as Dunn was concerned, he acted conscientiously. He may have construed the statute wrongly, but he is not the first man who has given a wrong decision, and it has never yet been heard that when a responsibility is placed upon a man to give a decision, and he happens to give a wrong decision, he should be condemned for it by a vote of Parliament. I know this, that whether Mr. Dunn was right or wrong, he acted according to his best judgment and endeavoured to decide rightly whether he did or not. And that gentleman, as I have already said, has been before this House and has been heard in the matter. With reference to the second part of the question, and it is an important one, because this resolution seeks to condemn the court for what it has done, it is said that the court were wrong in finding Mr. Ellis guilty of constructive contempt. It has been argued that there is no such thing practically known as constructive contempt. But any one familiar with the matter, knows very well that cases like that are continually arising, and it is of the utmost importance that the power should be in court, not to protect the individual members of the court, but the suitors who of necessity must come before it. It is of the utmost importance that a court of justice should have the power to protect those obliged to come before it for the redress of their wrongs. That is all that is claimed on behalf of the judges of the court of New Brunswick. The facts of this case have been very well stated by those who have discussed it from this side; and I am glad that this question has been discussed here, because I think that, after this discussion, there will be less excuse, if there ever was an excuse, for the various misrepresentations of facts printed in the newspapers in different parts of the province. It has been said that Mr. Ellis was tried and condemned by the judge whom he had assailed. That is not the fact. Judge Tuck, in his capacity as a judge, took no part in the matter, in so far as he was concerned, and was not the moving party. He had issued, as it was his bounden duty to do, when application was made to him founded upon sufficient affidavit, a rule nisi, calling on Judge Steadman to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue against him to prevent his proceeding with the recount of the votes. It was his bounden duty, when counsel appeared before him with sufficient affidavit, to consider their application, and the court had, in the first instance, to consider whether or not they had jurisdiction to issue that writ. That was the first question they had to consider. The rule nisi having been granted, Mr. Ellis wrote the article complained of. It does not seem to me, on reading those articles, that they are at all a fair criticism, or in any way a criticism of what was done, they simply attacked Mr. Dunn and Mr. Justice Tuck in his capacity as judge. Let me refer to some of the remarks made in those articles. Under the heading: "Government by fraud," Mr. Ellis wrote:

A judge assumes, if he does not usurp, the power to remedy the evil, and the boast is made that two years must elapse before the man chosen by the majority can take his seat. Can justice and right and principle be trampled down with impunity.

Again:

We ever have confidence that free institutions, if left to themselves, will purify themselves, but the assumption of power by officials and the prostitution of judicial authority for the purposes of party are sufficient to weaken the foundations of the strongest faith in freedom.

Again:

We doubt if Tuck has any power to send such an order as a judge, but he may not have been acting in the capacity of a judge but in some other capacity, when he sent it. While Judge Tuck's order to the county judge is disobeyed, because, as is generally conceded, Tuck went beyond his powers, the effect of his interference is to delay justice and prevent the will of the majority of the people from being carried out.

Those are only some of the extracts from the three articles written. Mr. Baird complained, and properly complained. Mr. Justice Tuck did not complain that there was an attack upon him, because it is not to protect the individual judge but to protect the court and the suitors in the court, in order that justice may be fairly and properly and judiciously administered, that the power of the court to commit for contempt is exercised. Mr. Baird complained of those articles. He said: I am a suitor before the court. I have a cause pending before the court, the question for the court to determine is whether or not a prohibition shall issue to prevent Mr. Justice Steadman from proceeding to a recount of the votes. I am entitled to know whether the court has the right to issue that writ or not. I am entitled to have the question fairly tried. I am entitled to have it heard without fear or intimidation, and Mr. Ellis has no right to interfere. Mr. Baird, therefore, brought the matter before the court. Judge Tuck did not interfere, did not even sit when the case was heard, was not a part of the court that heard the question. That was heard before the Supreme Court, and as has been pointed out by the Minister of Justice this evening, not only was judgment given by the chief justice, but also by Mr. Justice Fraser, now Governor Fraser, and by Mr. Justice King, now a member of the Supreme Court of the Dominion. All of them concurring, and the unanimous judgment of the court was that the language constituted a contempt of court. Now, some hon. gentlemen here have argued that it was not contempt of court. The court held a different opinion, and I must say that I attach more weight to the decision of my own court than I do to the opinion of these gentlemen; and I have this to say with refernece to it—and I say it as a man who has had a good deal of experience practicing before that court—I say, as was said by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) last night, that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick is one which we in that province have always been proud of, and which to-day stands second to no court in the Dominion. In proof of that assertion, I might point to the decisions of the Supreme Court in Ottawa on the appeals from the various provinces, which will show that there are less decisions from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick reversed than from any other province in the Dominion. We, therefore, have a right to speak with some pride of our courts. It has been pointed out that the defence that was made by the mover of this resolution in his violent speech, was not the defence made by Mr. Ellis. His defence was that Judge Tuck was not acting in a judicial capacity, that his order was an order made by a judge in chambers, and that, therefore, the reflections on it were not a contempt of court. All those matters have been passed on. Mr. Ellis did not deny the writing of the articles. He was not tried for any language written by any body but himself, he offered no excuse or explanation, and so the case went on. The delays for six years were caused entirely by himself. The case had gone before all the courts in the Dominion, it had been heard before the Supreme Court at Ottawa, and that court decided that it had no jurisdiction, that there was no appeal it came back to the court of New Brunswick. Mr. Ellis had six years to consider what he had done, and all will agree in the remarks made by Mr. Justice King in giving the judgment of the court, that it was to be regretted that Mr. Ellis, after having had all that time to consider, had not thought fit to make an apology. And here I would like to say that I think it is unfortunate that Mr. Ellis did not let his own better judgment govern him. He himself, at one stage of the proceedings thought that he ought to make an apology and was prepared to offer such an apology as the court were willing to accept. But, owing to an attack made upon him by his own friends—not by those opposed to him, but by the St. John 'Daily Telegraph,' an improper and unfair attack I admit—he decided not to act upon his better judgment and declined to apologize as he himself had thought best to do. And so the matter stood. It having been determined that the contempt of court had been committed and it having been determined—though it is not material to this question—that Mr. Justice Tuck was right in issuing a rule nisi and that a writ of prohibition might properly issue, the court then had to deal with the question of contempt. The only question left was as to the sentence that had been given. It is said that the sentence was too severe, that Mr. Ellis should not have been sentenced to a fine and that he should not have been sentenced to imprisonment. And various reasons for this have been given, among others the fact of the attack upon Judge Palmer, an attack made unfairly and improperly. I say that unhesitatingly knowing the facts referred to in the article. But it is said that because Mr. Ellis attacked Judge Palmer as he did his sentence should not have been so severe. I do not say that the sentence was too severe. But, even admitting that a good many gentlemen here would consider the sentence too severe we must consider the position of the court. It is very well for us to sit here without the responsibility of giving sentence, it is very well for these gentlemen who have not the responsibility of the proceedings of the court, who are not charged with the duty of maintaining the dignity of the court and the respect that is due to the court, to say that the sentence was too severe. But the men who gave sentence were charged with that duty and that responsibility. I may say also, speaking of his honour the Chief Justice, that no fairer man ever sat on the bench of any country, and I repel the insinuation that has been made that his mind had been failing at the time that sentence was given and that he was overborne by the other judges. Such is not the fact: he was in his full vigour and health—I know that personally. I attended the court which he was attending when he was attacked with the disease that now afflicts him. He was at a circuit court in Charlotte County. I was present with others who remarked the good health and the vigour that the Chief Justice then displayed. He was attacked suddenly, but at the time sentence was given he was in good health and in his full vigour, and was not the man who would be overcome by any judge. The editor of another paper, who had not long been a member of the province, and who came before them a few years before for a similar offence, had been sentenced to a fine and imprisonment for two months. The judges felt, and naturally felt, that they should be governed somewhat by precedent. There were no palliating circumstances with reference to the present case. Mr. Ellis had not attempted to apologize for what he had done, but simply defended as long as he could, saying that when he had made the comment he did not know what Mr. Justice Tuck had done, that he had attacked him for doing that which he had not done, for issuing, as he believed he had, a writ of prohibition and preventing the recount from being held, not knowing it to be a rule nisi to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue. But whether the court were right or wrong, whether we agree with them as to the sentence they passed upon Mr. Ellis or not, I submit that that is a question that we should not here consider. I regret that this resolution had been moved. I think it is not a resolution that should be brought before Parliament. It does seem to me that, in a case such as this, the court, having the right and being obliged to pass some sentence, whether their sentence is too severe or not, is a question over which we have no jurisdiction and no right to consider. The duty and responsibility was upon the court. Men are certain to differ on a question of the severity or lightness of a sentence, but the judges who are charged with the responsibility of giving it are in the best position to judge what the sentence should be, and such matters are much better left to them. I wish simply to say further that the course of Mr. Justice Tuck in this matter has been a fair and manly one. He has taken no part in these proceedings. The case was brought before the court; Mr. Ellis was condemned, he offered no extenuation, no retraction or apology. And when the case came for decision, the court did the only thing that they could do, in my opinion, in sentencing him for the contempt he committed. Whether the sentence they gave was severe or not is not a question this House should be called upon to consider. I agree with the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that if the rules of the House would permit it, that an amendment should be moved expressing regret that such a resolution has been brought forward. But, as such an amendment cannot be presented, I trust that this resolution will be voted down by a large majority and that this House will express in the strongest manner it can that it will not countenance this attempt—as it seems to be—to intimidate the court in dealing with such important questions.

Mr. FORBES. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLEOD. Certainly.

Mr. FORBES. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is the person referred to in the evidence given by Mr. Dunn at the Bar of the House as Ezekiel McLeod, Q.C., ex-Attorney-General of the province of New Brunswick, who advised Mr. Dunn to return Mr. Baird as member for Queen's in 1887?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes; I am the person referred to.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise, Sir, not to detain the House at any length, but to make only a few remarks on the question before the Chair. I think that the motion and speech of the hon. learned gentleman who opened this debate illustrates the famous saying of Lord Derby, "The Rupert of debate," who said that a certain act was worse than a crime—it was a blunder. I think the motion of the hon. and learned member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) whether we regard it from the point of view of the public interest or from the point of view of the interest of his own party, was worse than a crime—it was a blunder. Sir, nothing could illustrate more forcibly what a blunder it was, than the fact that a man so erudite, a man so experienced, a man so able as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), when he came to bring up his forces to strengthen the position of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), floundered so hopelessly and helplessly as he did. The hon. member for Bothwell made some quotations to strengthen the positions he took up. One position he took up was that this Parliament was properly employed in discussing the question brought forward by the hon. member for Queen's, and would be, of course, doing the right thing in passing the motion that has been placed before us. In order to substantiate that position he quoted from Lord Russell in the debate that took place on the conduct of Lord Abinger. Now, Sir, the hon. member for Bothwell behaved, as it seems to me, with a singular want of candour. He quoted Lord Russell in regard to that, but he never told you that Lord Russell utterly disapproved of the motion, and that when it came to a vote, the name of Lord Russell is found amongst the large number that voted down that motion. I will not trouble the House by reading in extenso what was said by Lord Russell on that occasion. However, this illustrates the crushing statement made by the Premier, namely, that the cases quoted by the hon. member for Bothwell really proved the opposite proposition from that he was trying to establish. Lord Russell disapproved of bringing such questions before Parliament, but he said: I certainly have to complain that Lord Abinger discussed questions that were calculated to irritate the Chartists, in his charges to the jury. Now, Sir, if the opinions of the most eminent men that the British Parliament has produced, are to weigh with us, I have here the opinions of Lord Palmerston, in Talbot against Talbot. And the language of that eminent parliamentarian may well be pondered by us on the present occasion. He said:

He would not attempt to lay down on the present occasion the functions of the House of Commons, but it was at all times desirable that they should not press these functions to their extreme confines in cases on which doubt might arise, whether they were not transgressing the limits assigned to them by the constitution. Now, an interference in the administration of justice was certainly not one of the purposes for which the House of Commons was constituted. He thought nothing could be more injurious to the administration of justice than that the House of Commons should take upon itself the duties of a court of review of the proceedings of the ordinary courts of law, because it must be plain to the commonest understanding that they were totally incompetent to the discharge of such functions. Even supposing they were fitted for them in other respects, they had no means of obtaining evidence, and taking those measures and precautions by which alone the very ablest men could avoid error. Cases of abuse in the administration of the law might arise, it was true—cases of such gross perversion of the law, either by intention, corruption, or by incapacity, as to make it necessary for the House of Commons to exercise the power vested in it of addressing the Crown for the removal of the judge; but in the present case his honourable and learned friend could not single out any individual judge with regard to whom his observations principally applied as having acted in his sole and single capacity in pronouncing the judgment of which he complained.

Quotations of that sort might be multiplied indefinitely, but I have not risen to weary the House by useless and superfluous quotations from the books. Now, Sir, I think I will make one reference to my hon. friend the member for Elgin (Mr. Casey). He confines himself to arguing mainly the guilt or otherwise of Mr. Dunn. I think that has been disposed of; but he made one remark which surprised me as coming from a gentleman who occasionally poses as the Nestor of this House. I think I heard him describe the King, Lords and Commons as the three estates of the realm. Sir, it is not a thing to be passed over lightly that in this House of Commons, the second House of Commons in the Empire, so grave a mistake should be made by an old parliamentarian as to say that the three estates of the realm are the King, Lords and Commons. However, that is by the way. Now, it so happens that something like eighteen years ago a great journalist committed precisely the same offence that is charged against Mr. Ellis. Mr. Justice Wilson had made some remarks on what was known as the Brown-Wilkinson case, and thereupon Mr. George Brown assailed him in the 'Globe' newspaper in language wild, vituperous and unwarranted. At first it was thought that nothing should be done, as the court did not take action, and as the Attorney General, Mr. Mowat, did not interfere. But subsequently, on the affidavit of Mr. Wilkinson, the matter was brought before the court and argued, and a judgment was given by Mr. Justice Harrison and one was given by Mr. Justice Morrison. Now, the judgment of Mr. Justice Morrison was quoted by the member for Bothwell, but the judgment of Mr. Justice Harrison was not quoted. Mr. Justice Harrison was as strong and as emphatic as he could possibly be, and he supported his position with a lavish reference to cases, as was his manner, in affirming the propriety of the court taking cognizance of Mr. Brown's misconduct and punishing him therefor. I will not be guilty of the impropriety of explaining why, I think, it was that the ends of justice were not at that time attained; but I will say this, because I was in Toronto at the time, that every judge I knew, every eminent lawyer I knew, held that the view taken by the Chief Justice was the correct view, and that if Mr. Brown had been punished, it would have been in the public interest, and of service to the dignity of the Bench. I hold in my hand the Law Journal, published in Toronto, and apropos of contempt, it contains an article, in which it says:

The judgment of the court of Queen's Bench in the case of the Queen v. Wilkinson, has been the innocent cause of probably the most atrocious and uncalled for libel on the Bench that has ever disgraced Canadian journalism. Foul abuse has been heaped upon a most impartial, upright and pains-taking judge, and that with a cowardice and reckless disregard of decency which would make even the most bitter partisan cry shame. And not only has this been done, but an attempt has been made to prejudice the public mind in reference to a cause still in litigation. On both grounds the article in the 'Globe' newspaper was utterly indefensible. Events follow each other so rapidly now-a-days, and are so fully and so immediately discussed that it would be a waste of words to detail the legal bearings of a matter with which our readers are already familiar; but a Bar which, as well as the public, is justly proud of its Bench, cannot and ought not to overlook this wanton and shameful attack upon Mr. Justice Wilson. It is not likely that the libeller will be prosecuted.

A subsequent number of the same periodical, contains an article dealing with the same subject, and it concludes as follows:—

The profession will deplore that Mr. Justice Morrison did not take the high ground assumed, and rightly so, by the Chief Justice. He may possibly have felt straitened by what are, we believe, generally thought to have been two great mistakes: firstly, the omission by the Court itself, or the Attorney General on its behalf, to take notice of the insult offered to the Court in the person of Mr. Justice Wilson; secondly, granting the rule nisi at all, if Mr. Justice Morrison's opinion be correct that the application was made too late. And here we may refer to what we respectfully submit was another mistake, though we fully appreciate the motives which therein actuated the learned judges—allowing the delinquent to repeat and add to these insults in the face of the Court itself.

This circumstance—and I was present at the time—led Mr. Christopher Robinson to say that the libel which he thought he would have to deal with when he entered the court, was thrown into the shade completely by the libel committed in the face of the court itself. How was it that the late Mr. Brown escaped punishment on that occasion? I will give my opinion candidly. I believe the reason was that the 'Globe' was a powerful newspaper, and that Mr. Brown was one of the most powerful men in Canada. Those not familiar with Ontario twenty years ago have no idea of the power of the 'Globe,' and the overwhelming influence of Mr. Brown at that time. The importance of upholding the judges in a case like this between the Supreme Court of New Brunswick and Mr. Ellis is, in my opinion, illustrated by the case of Mr. Brown. We had a member from one of the lower province constituencies talking to us about Mr. Ellis having shown courage, and stating that he was a very bold man; and we occasionally hear about a journalist displaying great boldness and being a fearless journalist. There was a time when that language was most appropriate, and as regards those men who laid the foundations of journalism, the great publicists of a hundred years ago, it was great praise to say of them they were bold men. But the time has long since past when boldness is an epithet you can apply by way of eulogy to a journalist. Bold, forsooth! What boldness does it require for the master of an established paper, possessing a wide circulation, to attack a judge or any person in a high position? Why, Sir, it is a very common thing, and instead of requiring boldness, the truth is we have come upon a time when the press has such overwhelming influence and possesses such a tremendous power that if there is a force in the country that should awe us at all, that certainly should take its place as one of the forces. I consider that we should look to the independence of the courts to be a bulwark, not merely as against too great license in the press, but as against other forces that may rise up, and the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) said last night that as we were on the eve of a turbulent democracy, the position of the judiciary is most important. We are on the eve of a time when wealth may not be as evenly divided as it is now in Canada. We may come to a state of things in Canada such as prevails in the United States, where wealth is unequally divided and where vast fortunes are in few hands, and we may find that under these circumstances the people would be glad to learn what a bulwark to the freedom of the people generally and to the freedom of the individual is a judiciary highly respected, strong in the confidence of the people, and upholding its ancient power and dignity. My hon. friend who proposed this motion, a motion which I am bound to say was not fully supported by his speech, calls on this House to declare that Mr. Dunn has acted very badly on a certain occasion, and then goes on to say:

That in the further opinion of this House, the jurisdiction claimed by the judges of Superior Courts of Record of punishing by fine and commitment to prison for constructive contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited and exercised by judges, who are at the same time judges of the law, of the fact, of the intention and of the sentence, and whose decisions are given without the aid of a jury and without being subject to review, is opposed to the genius and spirit of constitutional liberty and ought never to be exercised where any other pertinent remedy can be found or recourse had to any other method of obtaining justice.

Here we have a general proposition pointing to a sweeping change in our judicial procedure. We have here a proposition pointing to the taking away of a power from the judiciary, which is a safeguard to the judiciary itself, and a safeguard to its dignity, and safeguarding that dignity is a safeguard to all the interests of the community, and of the freedom of the community as well. Is it not a most extraordinary circumstance that an hon. member having a seat in this House, and desirous of taking away this ancient privilege—and it has been shown that it is an ancient power, we know it is an ancient power, and that up to the present time it has not been felt to be contrary to the spirit of the British constitution—that this hon. gentleman who has been twenty or twenty-five years at the Bar, who has been Premier of his province, and is a man of large experience, should have put in this resolution dealing with an event that took place a few years ago, a general proposition like this, instead of which he should surely have brought in a Bill to deal with the matter. No doubt it is intended that we should give our assent to that sweeping general proposition, with a view to condemn the action of the Supreme Court in New Brunswick. Then he goes on to say:

And that the punishment inflicted by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick upon John V. Ellis in the month of October, 1893, for an alleged constructive contempt of court contained in articles published by him on the Queen's County election herein referred to, was arbitrary and excessive.

But when we turn to the speech of the hon. gentleman as reported in 'Hansard,' we find him saying this:

I do not desire to ask the House to pass an opinion as to whether the court of New Brunswick was right or the court of Ontario was right. I am not going to ask the House to sit in appeal in this matter, and to decide in one way or the other.

Why, Sir, that is the very thing he asks the House to do in his resolution, and yet he declares emphatically in his speech that he does not ask the House to do it. Therefore, taking his motion with his speech, and knocking the speech against the motion, whichever is the more hard-headed of the two will have the better chance; and probably it may be a struggle, not in hardheadedness, but of the opposite kind. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) says, again, with reference to punishment of contempt on motion:

I say that this power is unknown to the constitution, is a power vested in no other body, and is a power which may produce the most glaring wrongs.

He says that this power of punishing for contempt of court on motion is unknown to the constitution. Why, Sir, I have "black-letter" law here which shows that it was known to the constitution at the earliest period, and coming right down to modern times we find cases where this power was exercised. I assert that it is a most extraordinary thing to comment on that a man of the prominence of the hon. member (Mr. Davies), should take such a course in this Parliament; a man who, if what the Prime Minister glanced at as a possibility—a possibility getting every day more and more remote—occurred, of parties crossing the floor of this House, would occupy a high position in the country. Why, among all the calamities that might overtake this country, if parties did cross the floor, I know of no calamity so great, as that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies), who made that speech last night, should be Minister of Justice of Canada.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. He is going to be there before long.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Choquette) says he is going to be there before long, but I have noticed that my hon. friend (Mr. Choquette), who used to be as gay as a cockerel in other years, is mighty quiet now, and one of the reasons that he is so quiet is this: that coming events cast their shadows before and have somewhat dampened the ardour of that Gallic heart.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. You are quite mistaken.

Mr. DAVIN. If I am quite mistaken I am bound to say that appearances are deceitful. I may not diagnose the hon. gentleman's political case properly, but the chances are that I have made a correct diathesis, and that the hon. gentleman is really losing heart. I repeat, that if what he says were at all likely to happen, if the hon. member (Mr. Davies) who introduced this subject, that which should have been introduced so judiciously, and who introduced it in the manner as he did last night; it would be a calamity if he should ever become Minister of Justice. I have been in criminal courts, and I never heard a criminal lawyer in his most violent fit of passion act more violently than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) acted last night. It reminded me of Achilles howling and roaring under the walls of Troy; but it must be remembered that Achilles was not making an indictment against the judges of Agamemnon. He was in a state to be highly enraged; he had lost Briseis, and Patroclus, not less dear, and he was determined to have vengeance, and he shouted and roared to bring Hector out. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) outdid Achilles, he out-heroded Hector, he out-Heroded Herod, and he bawled so loud that I thought myself that a drum head must have been boiled in his broth. Now, my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) goes on to say that if Judge Tuck felt that his honour or his dignity or his reputation had been unjustly or unfairly assailed, he might have taken a certain course. But, Sir, take the three last paragraphs of that resolution and we are not called upon to deal with Judge Tuck at all. We are called upon to express an opinion about Dunn, we are then called upon to express a wide abstract opinion as to certain powers exercised by the judges, and then we are called upon to express the opinion that the punishment inflicted was too severe. Now, Mr. Speaker, I confess to you that I do not think the punishment was too severe. I consider that it is a very serious thing to do anything that would break down the dignity and authority of our judiciary; and the judges themselves felt that this might be done and that there was danger of it. I have the case here of the King vs. Watson and others, which will bear on several questions raised by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). The side-note is:

This court will not grant a criminal information against the members of a corporation for a misapplication made of the corporation money. An order made by a corporation and entered in their books stating that A B against whom a jury had found a verdict with large damages in an action for malicious prosecution for perjury, which verdict had been confirmed by the court, was actuated by motives of public justice, &c., in preferring the indictment, is such a libel reflecting on the administration of justice, for which the court will grant an information against the members making that order.

Mr. Justice Buller said:

Nothing can be of greater importance to the welfare of the public than to put a stop to the animadversions and censures which are so frequently made in courts of justice in this country. They can be of no service, and may be attended with the most mischievous consequences. Cases may happen in which the judge and the jury may be mistaken. When they are, the law has afforded a remedy and the party injured is entitled to pursue every method, which the law allows to correct the mistake. But when a person has recourse either by a writing like the present by a publication in print, or by any other means to calumniate the proceedings of a court of justice, the obvious tendency of it is to make weaken the administration of justice and in consequence to sap the very foundation of the constitution itself.

Now, Sir, there is the opinion of an eminent judge:

The tendency is to weaken the administration of justice and in consequence to sap the foundation of the constitution itself.

I will call attention, Sir, to a motion that was made in the ninth year of Queen Anne for an attachment against a defendant by affidavit. That being served with the rule of court to show cause why the information should not be filed against him, he said "he did not care a snap of his fingers for the rule of the court." Northey, Attorney General, insisted that he should be first heard to show cause against it. The Attorney General was appearing for this man in the case, yet the whole court held:

He shall answer in custody for it is of no purpose to serve him with a second rule who has slighted and despised the first. It is to expose the court to a further contempt. And accordingly the defendant was brought in, and entered into a recognisance to answer interrogatories.

Now, Sir, Mr. Spencer Walpole has published a very interesting little book entitled, "Todd's Parliamentary Government in England," in which he deals with this question.

In fact, he deals with the whole question of judicial independence, and gives all the references—the references to cases in the books and the references to 'Hansard'; and what does he lay down?

Constitutional usage forbids either House of Parliament from entertaining any question which comes within the jurisdiction of a court of law to determine; or from instituting investigations into the conduct of the judiciary, except in extreme cases of gross misconduct or perversion of the law, that may require the interposition of Parliament in order to obtain the removal of a corrupt or incompetent judge. * * * To the same effect Mr. (afterwards lord chief justice) Denman, stated at the Bar of the House of Commons, when appearing as counsel on behalf of Sir Jonah Barrington, that independently of a parliamentary address or impeachment for the removal of a judge, there were two other courses open for such a purpose.

And he has stated, leading up to that, that the only question that Parliament ought really to discuss is some question that would lead them to take action to remove the judge. Now, Sir, in that connection, let me ask what would be the object of passing this resolution? Does the hon. member mean to remove the five judges from the Bench? Does he intend to do anything more than pass a resolution calculated to cast a slur upon their judicial standing? I remember there was a case brought before the British Parliament about one of the judges, and Mr. Disraeli, who was then leading his party, got up in the House and asked, "What is to be the end of it? What do you aim at? Do you intend to take any action? Or is this resolution to be placed on the books against the judges?" Now, is that the situation here? Is this resolution, if passed, to be placed on our records, to stand against those judges, and we to do nothing whatever? I think I remember in another case that Lord John Russell says it is much better, unless the supreme remedy is to be resorted to, even though the judges should have done something that might possibly challenge discussion and comment, that no action should be taken by Parliament. Says Mr. Walpole:

"The House of Commons, to whom it peculiarly belongs to take the initiative in such matters, should remember the words once addressed to them by Edmund Burke: "We may, when we see the cause of complaint, administer a remedy; it is in our choice by an address to remove an improper judge; by impeachment before the peers to pursue to destruction a corrupt judge; or by bill to assert, to explain, to enforce or to reform the law, just as the occasion and necessity of the case shall guide us. We stand in a situation very honourable to ourselves and very useful to our country, if we do not abuse or abandon the trust that is placed in us."

Now, Sir, I know that one point in a case like this that will appeal to the popular mind is the imprisonment of Mr. Ellis. That one point evokes at once sympathy for him and a contrary feeling for the judges. Now, I should like to remind the people and remind the Parliament of Canada, that one reason why this House is so careless of attacks upon itself is this, that its members can defend themselves; they can enter into the arena and fight for their own hand. But, Sir, it must be remembered that if the judges are not to be armed with this protection against licentious criticism, they are in this position, that they may be assailed; shot after shot, mud after mud, may be flung at them, and they have no remedy; they cannot go down into the arena; they cannot take off their coats and fight their assailant. And so, if you deprive them of the power that thus inheres in them, as is suggested by my hon. friend in the second paragraph to which I have referred, you leave them perfectly helpless before the country. Mr. Speaker, there has been no case made out by the hon. gentleman who moved this motion. I have pointed out where he contradicted the motion. He states, at page 3799 of 'Hansard':

We have nothing to do with the legal question whether he had the right to issue the writ of prohibition or not, because, in giving their judgment in the court below, the judges declared distinctly that that was a question that did not enter into their consideration.

Now, Sir, my hon. friend from Bothwell argued the case as though we had all to do with the legal question; not only that, but he evidently thought that we should try the conduct of Mr. Dunn, and pronounce an opinion here to-day; that 215 of us, as my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) said, should also pronounce an opinion on all the questions arising out of the circumstances that gave rise to the decision of the Supreme Court. Mr. Speaker, I confess to you, as I stated before, that although I have followed as closely as I can the argument of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), it seems to me, instead of strengthening the position of the hon. member for Queen's, to have made it more deplorably weak. The hon. member for Queen's contradicts himself; and the hon. member for Bothwell takes a position contrary to the position taken by the hon. member for Queen's in his speech, and I do not think he adhered very closely to the lines of the motion. For these reasons, Sir, I certainly cannot do other, if this motion comes to a vote, than to record my vote against it. But, Sir, what I would suggest is this. Evidently the hon. member for Queen's has made a gross blunder. His leader is here now, and I would suggest to him that he should advise the hon. member for Queen's to withdraw his motion, which, if it goes to the vote, can only result in covering him with confusion.

Mr. SCRIVER. Oh, dear.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says "Oh, dear."

Mr. SCRIVER. He is not easily confused.

Mr. DAVIN. I dare say he is not; but, Mr. Speaker, a defeat may be so crushing morally, intellectually and politically, that even my hon. friend from Queen's will feel the confusion, and the confusion will reflect itself upon his whole party. I am perfectly serious when I advise him to withdraw the motion. I say it is for his own dignity, it is for the dignity of the party of which he is a prominent member, and it would be for the dignity of this House, and the country generally, that he should acknowledge having made a great mistake. There can be no doubt whatever that Mr. Ellis made a mistake as Mr. Justice King and the hon. Chief Justice Allen pointed out, when he did not come forward and acknowledge the error, and thus finish the matter, and the man who makes a grave mistake makes a still greater one in persisting therein, because the further he goes the deeper in the mire he gets. No man could give a better advice than I give the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) when I urge him to withdraw his resolution—a resolution that is contradicted by his own speech, and which so learned a man as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was unable in the least to buttress up. And although it is none of my business to give advice to the leader of the Opposition, yet if he cares for a good piece of counsel, the counsel I have thus given him is entirely at his disposal.

Mr. LAURIER. I should not be grateful at all to my hon. friend if I did not thank him for the advice which he has just given me. Out of the abundance of my heart, I shall be thankful for small favours, and therefore thank him very much. But I cannot take his advice, though it is given very seriously. And if I must tell the hon. gentleman the whole of my mind, let me say that I am surprised that he, a member of the profession to which Mr. Ellis also belongs, should give me such advice as he has just tendered. Whatever may be the result of this motion in this House, this effect it must have in the country, that it must vindicate and most effectively vindicate, a man who assuredly, for loftiness and purity of sentiment, for a high sense of honour, is the peer of any man in this House or out of it—a man who for the offence—since offence it was held to be—of having discharged without fear the duties pertaining to the free citizenship of a free country, was visited with cruel punishment. The hon. member for Queen's, N.B. (Mr. Baird) yesterday thought it in good taste to refer to the character of Mr. Ellis. He thought it in good taste to assail Mr. Ellis's career. All I have to say in respect to this is: that the friends of Mr. Ellis do not find that his fair fame has at all been impugned by the stringent remarks of the hon. member for Queen's, N.B.—not even by the assertion that Mr. Ellis was an annexationist. If it be an offence on the part of Mr. Ellis—and after all that was said of him—to be an annexationist, Mr. Ellis can claim good company in the ranks of the party to which the hon. member who attacked him belongs. Nor do I know that the charge was made any stronger by the chief point made by the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., that Mr. Ellis had been called upon by the St. John 'Telegraph' to resign his seat on account of his so-called opinion. I am not aware that any member of the Conservative party has been called on to resign his seat on account of his so-called opinion. I am not aware that any member of the Conservative party has been called on to resign his seat on that account—not even Mr. White of Essex—even when he proclaimed his annexationist proclivities on the floor of the Ontario Legislature. I think nothing of that. The case is higher than those petty considerations. I say this, that whatever may be the fate of this motion, the result must be that predicted by one of the newspapers which was quoted here yesterday by my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., that the imprisonment of Mr. Ellis is the last that shall ever be pronounced in this country for this offence, which is called a constructive contempt of court. There is a great difference, as all will acknowledge, between a contempt of court and a constructive contempt of court. Whenever an offence is committed on a court, whenever an insult is offered to a court, or whenever the orders of the court are disobeyed, nobody contests that the court has the right and the power and the duty to deal summarily with such an offence. And the reason is obvious. If the offence is not dealt with summarily, the courts of justice would be impeded and blocked. But if the insult is offered outside of the court, the offence is one which does not block the court of justice, but simply reflects on its conduct, and it is an outrage to deal with such an offence in the way the case of Mr. Ellis has been dealt with. It may be law—I do not contest it; but if it be law, it is not the substantial justice we should have in this enlightened age. It may be law, but I refuse to submit to that law. We are here, the legislative power of the country, and if it be law, the time has come when such a law should be removed from our statutes. What are the facts in this case after all? Mr. Ellis is brought before the courts for an offence which is not a contempt of court, but which is simply, by an exaggeration of language, called a "constructive contempt." It is a libel and nothing else. Is there any reason, when a judge is libelled, that the man who has libelled him should be dealt with differently than if he had committed the offence against any other citizen? If a libel is published on any man in the land, let him be ever so high or so low, it is the privilege of the accused to be tried by a jury. Not only that, but it is his right to offer a defence. Not only that, but he is entitled to plead that the libel is true in every particular, that he was not animated by malice, but simply by the good of the country and for the public benefit. And upon that plea, the jury will be called upon to pronounce. But if the libel is published concerning a judge, the accused is not given the privilege of having a jury, he is not allowed to be judged by his peers, he cannot say that he was actuated by public motives, the benefit of the public. But according to the law laid down in this case by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, he has to take his choice between an abject apology or abject lies covered by perjury. Let me quote the law, as laid down by one of the judges who passed the sentence on Mr. Ellis. The language used by Mr. Justice Palmer will be found in the case submitted to the Supreme Court on page 26. This is what Mr. Justice Palmer said :

I have heard objection made against this law, that the mode of trial is not fair to the accused, as it deprives him of the right to have a jury pass upon the facts that are alleged against him. But this is not so. In no branch of the law has the humane principle of English jurisprudence been made so manifest as in this very proceeding for contempt. It never was the law that a jury took part in a criminal trial when the party charged confessed the offence, and no person can be punished for a contempt of court unless it is committed in the face of the court itself (when the law authorizes the court to make a record of it), or the party charged confesses it, so that the moment a person charged with contempt denies it on oath the court has no alternative but to acquit him, although they do not believe him or they know he has sworn falsely.

I leave this to the consideration of every man in this House. Could a more monstrous, a more demoralizing doctrine ever be maintained? He is a man charged before the court with an offence of libel, he is given no right to defend himself: he is not given the opportunity of pleading that he was actuated by considerations of public benefit; he is not even allowed to plead that what he said was true. But the option is given him to take one or two courses—to confess and apologize, or if he does not, then to take his oath and deny everything. He can perjure himself in the face of the court, as the judge says. Well, Sir, that he may be law, but if it be law, such law ought to be remonstrated against and purged from the Statute-book of this country. We have been told again and again, yesterday and to-day, that respect for the courts of justice was the very basis of the social order. Sir, I do not deny that proposition. I admit it, fully; I admit everything that is said upon this point by my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon.) But I have to add this, that if respect for the courts is the basis of the social order, I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that respect has never been wanting for judges who respect themselves. That respect has never been wanting for judges who have a proper regard for their own dignity, and for the sacred duties with which they are entrusted. I say, further, if you want to have the respect which is due to the courts maintained throughout the land, this is to be obtained only by showing no mercy to prevaricating judges, by showing no leniency to those judges who have no regard for the Bench upon which they sit, and who, too often, forget that they are judges. I have this to say, further—judges are men like other men; they are not made of any other stuff than the human stuff; they can err, and, I am sorry to say, they often prevaricate. And we have been told by the hon. member for Albert, we have been told by the Prime Minister, that, even though judges may err, even though they may prevaricate in their office, yet Parliament, which is the inquest of the nation, is to sit dumb, that it has no power to review their actions or censure their decisions. I say that the theory of British Government is that there is no power in the land, judicial or other, that is above the review of Parliament. I confess I do not understand the words of the Prime Minister when, this afternoon, he dared to contradict such a doctrine as this. I quite agree with him that this court will not review the judgment passed by the courts of justice, but I say that if a judge err, or if a judge prevaricate, whether in political matters or in civil matters, or in criminal matters, at all times it has been the theory of British government that Parliament had the right to review, to criticise and to censure the conduct of that judge. Let me, Sir, fortify my statement by a quotation from a standard book upon this question—by the authority of Todd himself. This is what Todd says in volume one of the latest edition, page 571 :

The great function of Parliament has been declared to be the maintenance of the law and the redress of grievances. Thus it is one of their principal duties and functions to be observant of the courts of justice and to take due care that none of them, from the lowest to the highest, shall pursue new courses unknown to the laws and constitution of this kingdom or to equity, sound legal policy or substantial justice. By the theory of our constitution those to whom the administration of justice is entrusted are not responsible to Parliament except for actual misconduct in office. Otherwise they occupy a position of complete independence, and necessarily so, for they are bound to administer the law without fear or favour and it may become their duty to pronounce judgment, and to take proceedings, of which the House of Commons itself may disapprove. The express power which is given to the two Houses of Parliament by the Acts 12 and 13 Will. III. c. 2, and 1 Geo. 3, c. 23, to address the Crown for the removal of judges from office who are otherwise declared to be irremovable, is indicative of the duty that devolves upon Parliament to watch the course of the administration of justice.

Now mark this :

And Parliament has not only the right to address the crown for the removal of a particular judge, but, in cases of misconduct it has the right of exercising control over the manner in which they discharge their duties and to institute inquiries relative thereto ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the cheer for, I should like to know ? "To institute inquiry ?" Is the power of Parliament limited to that only ? Well, I invite the attention of the House to what follows now :—

The judges of the land act under responsibility ; and any misconduct of which they may be guilty may be inquired into, and animadverted upon by either House of Parliament.

And, Sir, the doctrine has been maintained again and again, in the British House of Commons not only in matters of great importance, but, as I shall show, in matters of the most simple moment. Thus I refer the House to the English 'Hansard,' vol. 163, page S23 :

The Earl of Leitrim.—The noble Earl, in presenting the petition, said that the state of things in Donegal was owing, in great measure, to the course pursued by the authorities ; and if among the rest, judges acted as political partisans, he apprehended that there was very little anticipation of peace in any country.

The Lord Chancellor thereupon made the following remark :—

The judges of the land acted under responsibility and any misconduct of which they may be guilty may be inquired into and animadverted upon by either House of Parliament.

Exactly as we are doing in the present case—animadverting upon the conduct of the judge.

An hon. MEMBER. But without inquiry.

Mr. LAURIER. Are not the facts patent ? If there is anything to be brought up, let us inquire into it. But so far as my knowledge goes we have nothing to learn in this matter beyond what we have before us. But this is not all. I will show presently that sentence of judges in the most trivial matters was called in question in the House of Parliament. You will find this in the English 'Hansard,' vol. 175, page 1061 :

Mr. Clay said he rose to ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention had been directed to the sentence of ten years' penal servitude passed at Middlesex sessions on a man named White, for an act which, if an offence at all, appears to have been at most attempt at larceny ; and whether also he has noticed unusual severity in the sentences passed not unfrequently at the Middlesex sessions and whether Mr. Payne's tenure of office was 'quam diu se bene gesserit.'

Now, Sir, there was a question put to the Home Secretary upon a most trivial matter

Mr. LAURIER.

—whether a man was properly convicted of larceny and whether the sentence was too severe or not. There is no inquiry there—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was there a resolution ?

Mr. LAURIER. No ; there was a mere question put. But the fact was animadverted upon, the question was asked of the Home Secretary and the Home Secretary at once entered upon a lengthy argument to show that the sentence was not too severe. That is exactly what is done here. What is done by the motion of my hon. friend ? It is to call the attention of the Government to a special sentence and to challenge the opinion of Parliament upon it. My hon. friend is following exactly the lines of the precedents laid down again and again in the British Parliament, affirming the principle, which stands to the present moment, that this Parliament is the great inquest of the nation, and that nothing that is done in any part of the country by a judicial tribunal or any other is above the censure of the review of this House. This was the doctrine long before the freedom of the press was recognized. This was the doctrine when Parliament was the only place where the voice of public opinion could be expressed. However, in this age, in all countries having parliamentary institutions, the power of the press is such that we can hardly conceive how parliamentary government could be carried on without it. The press to-day is considered almost as much a necessity to the working of parliamentary institutions as Parliament itself. We know, however that it was not always the case ; we know that this power of the press is of recent growth. We know there was a time not far distant in the history of the mother land, when even to report the proceedings of Parliament was a misdemeanour punishable by Parliament. But as time went on it has gradually been found out that the publicity given by the press was the best guarantee of good government, that publicity was the best guarantee of the good behaviour of all the servants of the state. The judges are servants of the state, and there is no reason whatever why they should not also be amenable to the tribunal of public opinion, as are the Ministers who sit on that side of the House, as are the members who sit on this side of the House. We are all servants of the public, and I hold that the judges are no more free from the criticism of the press than any one of us. If they err, if they prevaricate, I have yet to learn the reason why they should not be amenable to that tribunal to which Ministers of the Crown are amenable, to which members of the Opposition are amenable, to which all men who hold a trust before the public, have to answer. But the thing is so obvious, the thing is so manifest, that it is conceded to a large degree by the very men who passed sentence upon Mr. Ellis. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been far more guilty in that respect than the judges who passed sentence on Mr. Ellis. I will quote on this point the opinion of Mr. Justice Palmer as found on page 27 of the printed case :

From what I have said it must not be supposed that I think that the decision of the court or the actions of the judges or other persons composing the court, are not to be discussed ; on the contrary, I would allow the freest criticism of all such acts if done in a fair spirit, only stopping at what must injure or destroy the court itself and bring the administration of the law into disrepute, or be an outrage on the persons whose acts are discussed, or when such discussion would interfere with the right decision of the cause before the courts. It is this last reason that makes it wrong to discuss any case while it is sub judice, but when once ended, the latter reason does not apply. I know some judges object to what they have done being called in question, and consider it unfair that they should be called upon to defend their action or be compelled to allow such actions to be misjudged by the public, because only one side of the controversy has been presented ; but I think the right will generally be seen in the end, and if a hard worked judge with sufficient ability to fill his office, does go on doing his duty without seeking approval or fearing censure, he will in the end be rightly judged by the people.

Here, Sir, the judge gracefully concedes that the opinion of judges can be reviewed and criticised. I ask, if the opinion of a judge can be reviewed and criticised, what reason is there why his actions and intentions should not also be reviewed and criticised ? The court maintains the opinion that if a judge has erred he can be criticised, but it draws the line at opinions, and maintains that his actions and intentions cannot be reviewed and criticised. I say that if it be allowed that the opinion of a judge can be reviewed and criticised, there are ten times more reasons why his actions should be reviewed and criticised. If the words of the judgment are liable to criticism, are we to be told that if the judge prevaricates, he shall not be liable to criticism ? I say there is more reason to review his prevarication than simply to criticise his judgment. We were told yesterday by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) that the actions of judges are sacred, that they should never be reviewed by Parliament, unless with a view to impeachment. Sir, I take a different view from the hon. gentleman. I say there are cases, and I can point to some cases, where the actions of a judge would not, perhaps, warrant an impeachment, but would warrant the censure of the press. I have a case in my mind that I can quote at the present time. Some sixteen or seventeen years ago a judge was impeached at the Bar of the House. The matter was referred to a committee for investigation. One of the charges against him was that he was in the habit of taking his seat on the Bench under the influence of liquor—certainly a charge sufficient to warrant impeachment, if proved to be true. The judge asked for particulars, and when particulars were given, the charge in this respect was not that it was a habit, but that on one occasion, on a circuit in the country, the judge had taken his seat under the influence of liquor. Thereupon the committee decided, and decided wisely, in my estimation, that they would hear no evidence at all upon this charge, and the reason they gave was that even if the charge were true, and that on one occasion, and one occasion only, the judge had taken his seat under the influence of liquor, they would not, for that solitary offence, advise his removal from office. I think that was a wise decision under the circumstances. Now, I put this case to my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House. Supposing it had been true that the judge on one occasion had taken his seat under the influence of liquor, though gentlemen opposite would not have been prepared to advise his removal for that single offence, if a paper published in the locality had denounced the judge for that offence—because it was after all an offence against the public—according to the principles laid down by hon. gentlemen opposite, it would have been in the power of the judge to bring the journalist before him, to fine him, to imprison him, and to make him pay the costs. Would not the journalist on such an occasion have been doing his duty to the public and the country in calling the judge to task for that offence ? Certainly he would. But, Sir, what would have been the fate of the journalist according to the law laid down in the province of New Brunswick, nay, according to the law maintained on the opposite side of the House ? The man would have been brought to the Bar, he would not have been allowed to prove that the charge was true, he would not have been allowed to say that he had published his article in the interest of the public, but the judge would have compelled him to make an abject apology, in default of which he would have fined him, imprisoned him, and made him pay the costs. Such is the law which has been maintained by hon. gentlemen opposite. Is that the view which they take of the position judges should hold in this country ? Whatever their view may be, I say that law under which such a thing is possible, should not be tolerated, even if it has been law down to the present time. I will not enter into the many issues of this question as it has been presented to this House. Many things have been imported into the debate which I believe are not conducive to the elucidation of the point we have under discussion. The Prime Minister this afternoon undertook to whitewash Mr. Dunn, the returning officer. I will not attempt to follow him upon this point. If I did, however, I would say this : that the Prime Minister has been very lenient indeed with Mr. Dunn. The Prime Minister said, in exculpation of the conduct of Mr. Dunn, that he had acted to the best of his judgment when he declared that Mr. Baird had been elected by acclamation, that there had been no election at all.

Therefore, though he had received the deposit, though he had received the nomination paper, though he had granted a poll, all that was done was null and void, because there had been an election by acclamation. Now, that was the view of the Prime Minister of the action of the returning officer when he was acting in favour of Mr. Baird; but when he was dealing with his own case, he charged and was paid by the country for his services in an election at every poll in which those illegal votes had been recorded. The returning officer had a certain law for Mr. Baird, but for his opponent he had another law. There had been a contested election and other proceedings. However, I discard all these matters. The case with me involves greater issues. It is not as to the conduct of Mr. Baird, or of Mr. Dunn, or of Judge Steadman, or even of Judge Tuck. I will not even review the question as to whether Mr. Ellis outstepped the bounds of proper criticism, whether Mr. Ellis was guilty or not guilty of a libel. The only point I wish to establish at this present moment is this: if Mr. Ellis was guilty, common justice demanded that he should have been given an opportunity of meeting the charge and making his proof that he did it for the public benefit. Moreover, he should have been tried by a jury of his peers. If we are to preserve our free institutions intact we must brush away all despotic powers claimed by the judges, and let the judges know they are like anybody else, free citizens of a free country, entitled to all the privileges of their office, but also subject to all the responsibilities of their office. The other point I want to establish is this, and to this point I specially call the attention of the House. Let us admit for a moment that Mr. Ellis was guilty of a libel; let us admit that if he was brought before a jury of his peers he would have been found guilty, I put it to the judgment of every fair-minded man in this country that the sentence passed on Mr. Ellis was simply outrageous in its severity—condemned to thirty days imprisonment, a fine of $200 and costs, which I am told are claimed to be over $3,000. This is an outrageous sentence in severity. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Davies) put a question yesterday: what was the cause which prompted the passing of a sentence of such unusual severity? The cause is not far to seek. The reason was simply a desire to gag the press, to make it impossible for any man to review the conduct of the judges, even if they were found to prevaricate, because there are very few men in this country who would be able to pay $3,000 of a fine and undergo all the cruel punishment to which Mr. Ellis was subjected. The reason, I repeat, was to gag the press, to crush the press, and to make a repetition of Mr. Ellis's action impossible. I am speaking by authority—I am speaking by the authority of Judge Palmer himself. I will quote his own words. Here is what he said—I am not quoting from the sentence, but before the judgment rendered in 1887 or 1888. Judge Palmer said:

All I at present say is that sufficient is shown to make it our duty to bring him into court to answer for the act charged against him, when here it will be the duty of this court to give him an opportunity to fully defend himself, and if it turns out according to his own oath that he has not violated any of the principles I have endeavoured to state it will be the pleasant duty of this court to acquit him; if otherwise it will be our duty, no matter how unpleasant, to inflict upon him the punishment that the law directs, which is just such punishment as will prevent a repetition of the crime by him or by anybody else.

Here is the cause. And by whom was this language used? By the man who, when four or five years later he passed sentence on Mr. Ellis, had been charged with having sold justice, with having $5,000 in his pocket from a suitor. Judge Palmer, forsooth, could not allow any imputation to rest on the character of Judge Tuck, but Judge Palmer never took any steps whatever to defend his own reputation when he was met not by vague insinuation, but by the charge, made by the very man who had made the attack on Judge Tuck, that Judge Palmer had at that moment in his pocket $5,000 which he had received from a suitor. This is the man who lays down the doctrine that the punishment according to the law must be such as to deter any journalist for ever from attacking a judge. And Parliament did not dare to say a word, says my hon. friend. No, I beg pardon. There are men in Parliament who dare utter words. When the conduct of Judge Palmer, who is now in receipt of a pension from the Government, was called in question, and the charge was brought against him that he had received the sum of $5,000 for having sold justice, when that matter was brought before this House there were some hon. members that said that Judge Palmer should not be made the subject of attack. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) said yesterday that we were in danger of invasion of democracy in this country. Let me say this to the hon. gentleman: that Liberal as I am, I will lament the day when the democratic practices which prevail in some other countries are introduced here, but if we want to maintain pure and intact the foundation of justice, the first step to be taken is to call to the Bench men who are qualified for the office by their official capacity and integrity, and not as a reward for political favouritism, and the second step to be taken is this: that when a judge is found guilty of malfeasance in office he must be dealt with without mercy, and not rewarded, as has been the case of late.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take any part in this debate, as the question has been so fully discussed on both sides of the House; but after the speech that has been made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I feel I could not honestly record my vote without giving some reasons for the course that I intend to pursue. The hon. gentleman has addressed the House with his usual ability and eloquence, but I think he has rather forgotten the matter which this House is called upon to discuss, and the question on which we are shortly to vote. We are here, Sir, not to say whether the law should or should not be amended, but we are here called upon solemnly to determine whether we are prepared to record our censure on the court of New Brunswick for a violation of the law as it stands, and there is very great difference, it appears to me, between pronouncing in favour of an abstract proposition, and recording our opinion that the law is capable of amendment, and censuring a Bench and destroying the usefulness of the Supreme Court of a province, because such would be the result of the adoption of the resolution now before the House. Now, what is the matter and what is the charge we are here to investigate? We are not dealing, at least certainly I am not going to deal, nor am I going to record any vote, in regard to the course pursued by the returning officer, Mr. Dunn. That question, I think, ought not to have been brought into this motion at all; I cannot understand its relevancy; I am unable to appreciate what it has to do with the main matter we are called upon to discuss. I was a member of the House when that question was brought before it during the last Parliament, and although I felt then, as I feel now, that the course of Mr. Dunn was quite inexcusable, although I felt then, as strongly as any hon. gentleman can feel, that Mr. Dunn had no justification for the return he made in putting Mr. Baird's name instead of Mr. King in that writ, nevertheless, rightly or wrongly, I came to the conclusion, and I still adhere to that view, that it was our duty to say that we ought not to resume the power and authority to deal with election matters, that on the whole it would be better for us to leave election trials to be disposed of by the courts than to assume that jurisdiction again. I never doubted then, I do not doubt now, that Parliament had full power and authority, if it thought fit, to order that writ to be amended. But I have not been able to find, since the jurisdiction had been given to the courts, that Parliament had ever assumed that power except in a case where the man returned was personally disqualified. Now, that being so, what has that question of Mr. Dunn's conduct to do here in this discussion? Surely this matter is too grave and too serious for us to involve it in the question of the election of Queen's County, or in anything else beyond the plain issue which is presented to us in the concluding paragraph of the resolution. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier), who has just addressed the House, that we are to condemn, if proper, the prevarication and misconduct of judges. But that again begs the whole question. Speaking of Judge Tuck, what prevarication—a word which my hon. friend used over and over again—has he been accused of? What wrong do you attribute to him? Does any lawyer, does any layman, does any man who knows anything of the subject pretend to doubt, that when that judge was appealed to by Mr. Baird's counsel, and asked for that writ, that he was bound to grant it? I do not pretend to sit in judgment upon the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, and to set up the judgment of the court of my own province against it. My own opinion agrees with the court of my own province, and I believe that a writ of prohibition was not a proper writ to go; but surely no person will deny that as the law was then understood, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Baird) appeared with his counsel before the judge, when he represented to him that in this matter the county court judge was presuming to exercise a jurisdiction which was not vested in him under the circumstances; that Judge Tuck could not have refused a writ particularly when it was not a writ absolute, but an order merely calling on the other side to show cause why the writ should not go. In all the strong language that has been used—and undoubtedly very strong language has been used—in all the assertions that have been made, I have not heard one word to impugn the perfect honesty and integrity of Judge Tuck in granting that writ. Well, that is the whole question; because it was with reference to Judge Tuck that Mr. Eliis published in his paper what no person here has pretended to defend. If that be so, if the judge has been assailed in his honour and in his character; if an accusation has been made against him in the language of this charge so gross, that—as fairly put by the hon. gentleman who leads the House—if true he was no longer fit to sit on the Bench; if such language was used as:

But it is not justice that is wanted, and therefore, Judge Tuck intervenes.

That justice was not what was to be sought, but that when an unjust judgment or an interference with the rights of the people was to be obtained, they were to go to Judge Tuck. If that language was used, I would like to know, in this law-abiding country, whether against a charge made like that there is to be no protection? I do not suppose any person will contend that. But what is contended by hon. gentlemen who support this resolution? It is said: that the course and the practice that was pursued was not one that under the circumstances should have been followed. As I have said before, that may be a very fair and very proper subject to investigate. There might have been good cause and justice for my hon. friend (Mr. Davies), who moved the resolution, to have asked us to decide as an abstract proposition that the law should be changed; but surely it is a very different thing to wind up the charge as in this case, not by an abstract resolution that the law as it stands is an improper law, but that the conduct of the court :

Was arbitrary, excessive, inimical to the public interest and deserving of censure.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That refers to the sentence.

Mr. McCARTHY. That refers to the sentence it is quite true, but the preceding paragraph refers to the jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman read the preceding paragraph ?

Mr. McCARTHY. I will read with very great pleasure.

That in the further opinion of this House, the jurisdiction claimed by the judges of Superior Courts of Record of punishing by fine and commitment to prison for constructive contempt being practically arbitrary and unlimited and exercised by judges, who are at the same time judges of the law, of the fact, of the intention, and of the sentence, and whose decisions are given without the aid of a jury and without being subject to review, is opposed to the genius and spirit of constitutional liberty and ought never to be exercised where any other pertinent remedy can be found or recourse had to any other method of obtaining justice.

Now what I say, Sir, is this : that that resolution is condemnatory of the judges, and it means that as the law now stands those judges acted improperly in entertaining the application that was made to commit Mr. Ellis. There is no use discussing in this House propositions of law. One might as well make a statement of what the law is as to cite cases in support of that opinion. I do not think any person will pretend to deny, that as the law stands in England and as the law stands in Canada to-day : it is not merely competent for the court, but that when a matter of this kind is brought to the court, the court are bound—I say that advisedly—the court have no discretion in the matter but are bound to give effect to the law of the land which says that for offences of this kind the parties can be punished in the process and in the manner which was followed in this case. If that be so, then I want to know where the court is to blame. It is not denied that Judge Tuck was slandered, was libelled, and was defamed. The only question that remains is : if he were slandered and defamed, whether the proceeding that was taken was proper, or whether the Court of New Brunswick travelled out of their way to find a new proceeding in order to uphold their supposed dignity, or went out of their way to punish Mr. Ellis and destroy the liberty of the press. It will be remembered that the charge was not brought by the court. For my part I think the court would have done better if they had instituted this charge on their own motion, but they did not do so. The charge was brought to their notice by Mr. Baird, who had a perfect right to make the charge, because, Sir, contempt consists of—and for that I would like to give an authority in the words of the writers :

A contempt of this kind consists in three matters or may consist: Those which scandalize the court itself; those which scandalize, calumniate, vilify or intimidate the parties concerned in cases before the court, and those which prejudice the public before the case is heard, or the cause itself before the court.

Now this charge of Mr. Ellis violated at least two of these principles. It did undoubtedly scandalize the court in the attack that was made upon the judge. It did undoubtedly calumniate and vilify Mr. Baird. We may all think that Mr. Baird got nothing more than his deserts, but, Sir, Mr. Baird has the right of every citizen of this country to appeal to the law, and in the appeal which he made to the law, the court has a right to protect him as it would have the right to protect any witness or any juror who is called and summoned to assist in the administration of justice. No man is to be abused; no man is to be driven out of court; no man is to be hounded in court, who is simply appealing to the court for protection and for the vindication of his rights. Therefore, in both these matters did Mr. Ellis commit an offence against the majesty of the law. But not only so; if Mr. Ellis had a right to commence this species of newspaper warfare he had a perfect right to keep it up. I would like to know what is the effect upon the Bench. I want to know whether hon. gentlemen think—because if they do, perhaps they have not had the experience that some of us have had—if that kind of thing is kept up, what is the effect upon the judge. Do you suppose he is perfectly impervious to this kind of criticism, and this species of attack? The interest of the public, who desire to see justice done, cannot be obtained or promoted unless attacks of this kind are put down.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was there no other pertinent remedy ?

Mr. McCARTHY. In my judgment there was no other pertinent remedy. But whether there was or not, I do not think that is a fair question. We are called upon now to censure the judge and the court. My hon. friend, with his experience as a lawyer, will not deny that the courts have this jurisdiction, and no case is found in which a judge has said to the man who applied to him: There is another pertinent remedy, and I will not interfere.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh, yes; there is an Irish case.

Mr. McCARTHY. Generally there is an Irish case.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is the case decided by the Master of the Rolls, which is quoted by Mr. Justice Morrison in re the Brown case.

Mr. McCARTHY. The case the hon. gentleman quoted this afternoon?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No; I did not quote it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have not seen the case. Certainly there is no English case and no Canadian case. If that be so, is it not going a little too far to ask us to censure the court for its act? I do not at this hour of the night do more than draw attention in these few words to the true question which this House has to determine. I would only add this: this is not a privilege of the judges as men. I agree with my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition when he says that it is sufficient for the judges to have the rights of ordinary citizens of this country as men. But, Sir, when they are sitting in court, they are not representing themselves; but they are representing the majesty of the law; they are representing the body of the citizens, whose agents, whose administrators of the laws of the land, they are. It is in that capacity that we require to have them respected, and it is for that purpose that from the earliest days this power of punishing for contempt has been allowed as a part of the common law of the land. It is not derived from the statute; it has been allowed from the earliest times as a necessary incident of the courts, in order that they may fittingly discharge the high and important duties which devolve upon them, and let me add that if that be so in the old land, it is more important here than anywhere else. What have we to appeal to in this country but our courts? It is not merely the rights of our citizens, but the question of our constitution that has to be determined, and is constantly determined by the judgment of our courts, and it is the duty of the people of this country to uphold the dignity of our courts, and to uphold them in the proper exercise and discharge of their high and important functions.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman occupies such a high position at the Bar that his opinion may have very great weight, not only in the House, but out of it; and I would like to ask him whether in his opinion there were or were not other pertinent remedies which the judge could have resorted to, to vindicate his position and his conduct and his character, rather than to have resorted to the arbitrary one of punishing by summary attachment.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have not the slightest objection to answer the hon. gentleman's question: but the hon. gentleman must always remember that it was not the judge who put this matter in motion at all. My point is this—and I do not think the hon. gentleman will differ from me—that upon the application made to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick by Mr. Baird, who had a perfect right to make that application, the court had no power, there being a contempt, to refuse to entertain the proceeding and to punish the offender. I will go further. I am quite in accord with the quotation from the judgment of one of the learned judges which was read this afternoon. I cannot imagine it being consonant with the dignity of a chief justice, who has been abused and libelled and defamed in this way, to go down from his high seat of justice and appear before the grand jury, and afterwards go into the witness box and have the case tried in what is called the ordinary way. If it were only a matter of the judge himself, I admit that he stands no higher than any other person; but if it is a matter of the court, then I mean to say that the dignity of the court cannot be upheld in any other way than by this process, and, for my part, if it were an abstract resolution of that kind that was before us, I should not be willing to endorse the proposition that the jurisdiction should be abolished. Now, Sir, while I have said so much—and at this hour I do not propose to do more than state thus briefly the points on which I think the hon. leader of the Opposition has misstated the question before us—I desire to add that I do not agree altogether that we are not to have a certain freedom of speech with reference to the conduct of judges as well as with reference to every other matter. There is this great distinction, however, to be drawn. It appears to me that this is not a competent tribunal to determine whether the judgment of a court is right or wrong. We can easily imagine a judgment so outrageous that Parliament would be able to consider it and be able to assume from it either the incompetency of the judge, or that he had been actuated by improper motives or improper conduct. But take the ordinary case. Take this case, and look at the discussion that has gone on in this House for these two days, in which citations have been made on one side or on the other side, and I appeal to the common sense, to the good sense of the House, which I am quite sure will agree that this is not the tribunal to determine whether the judges have or have not exercised their jurisdiction. On the other hand, it is the conduct of the judge that is impugned. The case in our own Dominion, that was referred to by my hon. friend, as he will see in a moment, was not in reference to the judgment of a judge. In that case a judge was accused of sitting on the Bench while under the influence of liquor. That had reference to the conduct or the misconduct of the judge, not to his judgment, and therefore did form a proper subject of investigation in this House, and a proper subject for discussion in the press. What I say is that with regard to matters of judgment it is not wise or prudent for this House to attempt to review what we have not the power to rectify or set aside, while, on the other hand, we have full power and authority, when the proper case arises, to investigate, consider, and, if need be, to rebuke, the conduct or misconduct of a judge. Take this case. No charge of misconduct has been made against Judge Tuck. Of the chief justice every hon. gentleman who has spoken in this House has spoken in the very highest terms. Against Judge Fraser, the present Lieutenant-Governor, no word has been uttered. Against Mr. Justice Palmer there have been charges made which, I think, had better not have been made here. Though quite proper to be made and investigated on a fitting occasion, in reference to this particular matter, I do not see their relevancy or their point. But, leaving, that aside, what have we? We have two deliberate judgments, concurred in not merely by those three judges whom I have mentioned, but by Mr. Justice Wetmore on one occasion, and by Mr. Justice King, now of the Supreme Court, on another occasion. They all agreed that there had been a contempt of court and that there ought to be punishment. It is quite true that when the punishment came to be inflicted, Mr. Justice King had then been removed to the Supreme Court, and that the other three judges only took part in the determination of what the sentence should be, but in the main charge on the question now before us, these five judges have all agreed, and against them—four of them at all events—no word has been uttered. I submit, therefore, that under these circumstances, to pass this resolution would be going very far indeed. I will just add that, for my part, without knowing—and I think it is always dangerous, and possibly it were better I did not give utterance to my opinion on the subject—but without knowing all the incidents, my impression is that it would have been better, so far as I know, if the sentence had not been so severe. I can understand Mr. Ellis's feelings, though I can hardly understand his language, with reference to Judge Tuck, but I can understand his feelings sufficiently, and, on the whole, there was great aggravation. We cannot forget either that six years had elapsed before it became the duty of the court to pass sentence, and regard being had to all the circumstances, I do think the discretion of the judges would have been better, more prudently, more wisely exercised, if they had limited the punishment either to a fine or very short imprisonment. I am quite free to say that, so far as I know, is the best opinion I have been able to form from all I have heard. But on the other hand, let us see the position Mr. Ellis took. This long and protracted litigation was very largely owing to Mr. Ellis himself. He fought the case at every point; and although every opportunity was afforded him, he never took back this one sentence containing the reflections he made on Judge Tuck. Now, surely it was not unbecoming any man, no man need be ashamed to admit an error which he has committed, and I do not see why, because a gentleman is the editor of a newspaper, that it is beneath his dignity to acknowledge his fault. While standing by his accusations against Mr. Baird and Mr. Dunn and holding to all that he said regarding the Queen's County election—which it was all right and proper to stand by—I am unable to understand why he did not feel himself competent to withdraw the charge that he made by error against Judge Tuck. So that we find the litigation going on, disputed at every point, every objection made, everything done to prevent an appeal and final determination, and then in the end we have a sentence, which, notwithstanding all, I think was unduly severe, and which I think on the whole it would have been wiser on the part of the judges to have modified.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have just sent over to my hon. friend 10th Equity Irish cases, and would ask him to read the concluding paragraph on the right hand page.

Mr. McCARTHY. The reference the hon. gentleman gives me is as follows:—

The master of the Rolls, after referring to other cases of contempt, says page 101: the case therefore comes to this: a libel has been published of the plaintiff pending the pleadings in this cause. The court has no authority whatever to commit for a libel unless it is calculated to obstruct the free course of justice. I am not satisfied that it is so calculated. * * * I think it is much more proper that the plaintiff if he shall be so advised, should proceed by action, information or indictment, in proceedings the party accused would have the benefit of a trial by jury. I shall therefore make no rule on the motion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see there that the court did not hold it was absolute upon it to grant a writ of attachment.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Under the circumstances of that case.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not quite see the relevancy of it to the point I made. I say that a case of contempt was made out, and the hon. gentleman will find no case in the books in which a court felt itself at liberty to refuse to carry out the law. That is what I understand the law to be, and what I still adhere to, and certainly there are no English or Canadian cases to the contrary.

House divided on amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I shall have to ask that my motion that House go into Committee of Ways and Means be negatived, as, at this hour it is impossible to make any progress.

Motion negatived.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved :

That the House again, resolve itself, at the next sitting of the House, this day, into Committee of Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and the House adjourned at 1.05 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 7th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MR. TURCOTTE, M. P.

Mr. EDGAR. The report of the Privileges and Elections Committee, which has just been read to the House, shows that two witnesses have been very contumacious, and have on two occasions refused to attend before the committee, although duly summoned to do so ; and the report states that they are material and necessary witnesses. The usual course, I believe, is to move that the witnesses in default attend before the Bar of the House on a certain day to be dealt with. I therefore move :

That J. B. Provost and O. E. Larose, the witnesses named in the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections submitted to this House this day, do attend at the Bar of this House on Monday, 11th June, 1894, at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope the Minister of Justice will take cognizance of this report and motion. Let me begin by saying that I do not know these two gentlemen that are mentioned, therefore I speak only in reference to the practice of the House. These two gentlemen were notified by telegraph that the Committee on Privileges and Elections required their presence here before the committee ; they did not come. Afterwards a subpoena, or a document of some kind, was sent to them through the sheriff of Quebec, notifying them in like manner to appear here on the 5th or 7th June. That notification was made to them, and they have not appeared to-day. Now, the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has moved that these gentlemen be brought up before the Bar of the House to answer such questions as may be put to them. In the province of Quebec, when a witness is required to attend before the court, especially when he lives at some distance, his travelling and ordinary expenses are tendered to him by the bailiff who hands him the subpoena. In this case nothing of the kind has been done, not a cent has been tendered, and witnesses are not bound to expend money to come to Ottawa for the purpose of attending before a committee of this House. If it is desirable that they should attend here, their travelling and other expenses should be tendered them, as is customary in all cases in Quebec, and therefore I do not think that these gentlemen should be placed in the position of being brought before the Bar until they are first offered the ordinary allowance for travelling expenses as are other witnesses appearing before the courts. They have done nothing to justify the indignity being placed upon them of being taken into custody and brought here, when their travelling expenses have not first been offered them. I mention these points because it is desirable this matter should be decided once for all, namely, whether witnesses are compelled to come here without first being tendered their expenses. Suppose the Serjeant-at-Arms or the Deputy Serjeant is sent to bring these gentlemen here as witnesses. They would be taken into custody by the Serjeant, and would be conveyed to the train. On board the train they would be asked by the conductor to show their tickets. They would reply that they had no tickets; and then the Serjeant-at-Arms would be obliged to pay for the tickets of his prisoners. Would it not be very much better that the ordinary practice of the court should be followed, and that the expenses should be tendered to the witnesses before compelling them to attend here, as has been suggested? Besides I am pretty sure that those gentlemen on being offered their expenses would come here of their own free will.

Mr. AMYOT. I may say, in support of the remarks of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), that section 249 of our code provides, as is well known to every lawyer practising in the province of Quebec, that in all cases when parties are summoned they must be offered an amount of money sufficient to defray their travelling expenses at the ordinary rate allowed by the judicial tribunal. No one in the province of Quebec would dream that the Parliament of Canada would force him to borrow money or pledge his goods as security to buy a ticket to come to Ottawa at the pleasure of a member of a committee or even of this honourable House. We cannot presume that witnesses would refuse to comply with an order of the House, if they were placed in a position so to do. But the first step is to send them the money for travelling expenses, and if they then failed to come, I would be the first to ask that the order of the House be complied with. Until their expenses are tendered, it would be unfair to bring them before the Bar of this House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. One difficulty in considering this question arises from the fact that the motion is made on the spur of the moment, and hon. members have not an opportunity of looking into the practice and precedents. But it strikes me that witnesses have been summoned in all such cases without being tendered in the first instance their travelling fees, although in all cases the fees have been paid afterwards, and of course a witness could not be treated as subjecting himself to penalties if he failed to come in consequence of his indigent circumstances. But the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) appears to have misapprehended the motion made. It is not that these persons be taken into custody for contempt and brought to the Bar, but it is that they be summoned to appear at a certain day at the Bar. If the House should consider the matter of sufficient importance in this instance, it would be well to allow it to stand over until to-morrow, so that hon. members could examine the practice on the subject; but in the meantime I would ask the hon. members who have spoken on the subject of practice in the province of Quebec whether the rule mentioned applied to witnesses summoned in Crown cases, because I believe in other provinces the practice has not been in such cases to tender them travelling fees, but that such witnesses were obliged to attend.

Mr. LISTER. We pay the witnesses in Ontario, but not until they have come.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is the practice in my own province.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) But the practice in the provinces would not necessarily be followed in regard to Parliament.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Quite so.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no necessity, I think, of postponing the case until to-morrow. This is a matter of urgency, and there is no precedent quoted in favour of the position taken by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin). The reason the practice referred to in civil cases prevails is quite obvious, and it is this, that a party may be summoned on behalf of some one who is insolvent and unable to pay his expenses. The witness has the privilege of refusing to attend until his travelling expenses have been tendered him, but when the Parliament of Canada summoned a witness it is impossible that the witness should be in danger of not being paid his expenses.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) has misapprehended the present practice. In 1891 we had some experience in regard to this matter. At page 454 of Journals of 1891 the case is recorded of André Senecal, in which he failed to attend before a committee. I followed the wording of that motion, "mutatis mutandis." In the present report of the committee the witnesses are described as material and necessary witnesses, whereas in the Senecal case the witness was only an ordinary one. I followed that precedent, and I have never seen or heard of an Order of the House in which an offer was made to pay the witnesses their expenses. Moreover, the witnesses in the present case have been twice duly summoned before a committee of this House and on neither of those occasions have they filed a plea before the committee that they could not attend for lack of money. That has only been suggested by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) to-day.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I did not say that.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. gentleman said they should not be compelled to come unless their expenses were first tendered. But the witnesses themselves never suggested it, and it would be rather trifling with the dignity of the House, especially as at present they are substantially in contempt for not turning up at the order of the committee.

Mr. AMYOT. The precedence and practise cannot be very old in this Dominion, because we are only in Confederation since 1867. Suppose a witness would be called from British Columbia, it would be very hard to compel him to find the money to come here. When the leader of the Opposition speaks of the practice in Quebec, he only refers to our small judicial districts, but it is 300 miles from Quebec to Ottawa, and if these witnesses have not the means to come, shall we subject them to the humiliation of coming before the Bar of this House for not having money? Shall we force them to borrow money to come here? If we have begun with a wrong practice, it is the proper time to change it and make it conform with justice and common sense. We cannot suppose that these witnesses have the money to come.

Mr. LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," but judging from the speeches of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier), the Dominion is bankrupt and every citizen of the Dominion is bankrupt, so we cannot presume they have money. I contend that it is our duty to establish the precedent in this case of putting the witnesses in the position to comply with the order of the House, or at least before we bring them to the Bar of the House, we ought to establish that they are in a position to come here.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It was decided last month in my district by Judge Pelletier, who said he had consulted the judges in Quebec, that the Crown is never obliged to tender any money to a witness, and that this decision was given. In a case of a Mr. McKenzie, collector of Inland Revenue, a relation of the member for Bellechasse, who has just spoken against Mr. Charbonneau, for having sold liquor without a license, witnesses were called before the court and no money was tendered them. On the basis of article 249 of the Code, I objected to a rule nisi being issued against them for contempt, because they did not respond to the subpoena. They were poor people, who lived pretty far away from the court, and had no money to come to court, and I considered that it was a hardship to compel them to come. I pleaded all the reasons my hon. friend has given, but Judge Pelletier, after consultation with the judges in Quebec, decided that the Crown is never obliged to offer a cent to a witness, and the judge fined these people $20 or thirty days in jail for not having answered the subpoena. That, therefore, is the practice in Quebec now.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When I spoke before—the matter coming up so suddenly—I did not remember that there was any rule of the House on the subject, but hon. gentlemen will find that there is a specific rule at page 524 of Dr. Bourinot's work, headed "Payment of witnesses":

By a rule common to the Senate and Commons, the Clerk of either House is instructed to pay every witness summoned to appear before a committee, a reasonable sum for his attendance (to be determined in the Commons by the Speaker), and also for travelling expenses, upon the certificate or order of the chairman of the committee, but no witness shall be so summoned and paid unless a certificate shall have been first filed with the chairman of the committee by a member thereof (or of the Senate), stating that the evidence of such witness is, in his opinion, material and important, and no witness residing at the seat of Government shall be paid for his attendance. Under this rule, it is the practice to pay witnesses their travelling and hotel expenses, but nothing is necessarily allowed for loss of time, even in the case of professional men. Printed forms are provided under the rule and certified by the clerk before payment is made by the accountant. No witness who comes as a witness at the solicitation of parties interested in a private Bill is paid by the House. The rule only applies to those persons who are present in case of public inquiry.

In the case of witnesses, for instance, with regard to a private Bill, inasmuch as they are attending in the interest of the person pro-moving the Bill and have only him to look to for payment of their expenses, the rule does not apply to them, and they would have the right, I suppose, to require their travelling expenses to be paid before they came. By this rule the practice must be assumed to be settled: that the witnesses' expenses are to be paid after they have attended, and after they have given evidence. There is no practice, I think, which can be found by which witnesses are entitled to expect, in relation to a public inquiry, that their expenses will be tendered them first. That is indeed the practice in all the other provinces—I was not aware before that it was so in Quebec—as to witnesses summoned by the Crown. I would think it better, under these circumstances, not to ask the House to reserve the question until tomorrow, because it might seem to imply a doubt which ought not to exist in view of the authority. I would suggest as a fair precaution that the officer of the committee should telegraph to these persons that their expenses would be duly paid.

Mr. EDGAR. The Clerk of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Provost and the other gentlemen are merchants, and it is simply playing with the propriety of the House to say that these men have not enough money to come here.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is evident that these gentlemen, whether their means be much or little, are standing upon what they suppose are their rights, and have assumed that they are not obliged to attend unless their expenses are tendered them. If their attention be called to the rule of the House no doubt they would realize that that does not apply as a reason for not attending.

Mr. AMYOT. Monday is too soon, anyway.

Mr. EDGAR. I think Monday is not too soon. A telegram can go to Quebec this afternoon, and if they are not served with it they won't be expected to come. I would remind the First Minister who was, I think, present a week ago in the Privileges and Elections Committee, that a witness swore that one of these witnesses, Provost, I think, said he would not come until he was forced.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I presume he meant by that: unless he were obliged.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not seem to me right that the House should demean itself by intimating to these gentlemen that their expenses should be paid.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understand the Clerk always does that when witnesses are summoned by the House.

Mr. McCARTHY. It might be well when a witness is summoned that that fact should be mentioned; but these gentlemen are in contempt of the House, and it appears to me that we would demean ourselves by mentioning to them that if they be good enough to come their expenses will be paid. I have not the slightest doubt that they have the means of knowing what the law of Parliament is, and that they have contumaciously refused to obey the order of the committee. I think under these circumstances we had better wait until they come to the Bar of the House and give some reasons for their disobedience.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTATIONS OF GRANITE.

Mr. GILLMOR asked, How many tons of finished red granite or Peterhead granite, in the shape of monuments or ornamental work for buildings, have been imported into Canada during the fiscal year of 1893, and what is the value of such importations?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No separate record is kept for imports of red granite or Peterhead granite, whether imported in the shape of monuments or ornamental work for buildings or not. The statistical classification covering a record of imports of such goods is divided into two headings, as follows: "Granite and freestone, dressed, and all other building stone except marble"; "manufactures of stone, n.e.s." The importation under the first heading amounted to 1,063 tons of the value of $8,901; under the second heading, the importations were valued at $49,816. The monuments, and doubtless the greater portion of the ornamental work for buildings, would be classified as "manufactures of stone, n.e.s."

KEMPTVILLE POSTMASTER.

Mr. LISTER asked, Have charges been made against the present postmaster at Kemptville? If so, what is the nature of such charges? By whom, and when were they made? Has an investigation been made, and if so, when, and by whom? If an investigation was held, was it open to the public, and was the evidence taken under oath? Was a report made by the officer who investigated the charges? Was the evidence, if any, taken down in writing? Does the report show that the charges are true? Have further charges been made against the same person since the making of such report? Have such further charges been investigated? If not, why not? What action, if any, do the Government intend to take respecting such charges?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Charges have been made against the postmaster of Kemptville. The charges were that letters to the address of Mrs. D. Leslie, Kemptville, had been tampered with. They were made by Mrs. D. Leslie, in February, 1891, and September, 1893. An investigation was made by the post office inspector in February, 1891, and again in September, 1893. The investigation was open. On the first occasion the evidence was taken on oath and reduced to writing. On the second inquiry evidence was not taken on oath and was not reduced to writing. Reports were made by the officer who conducted the investigations. The post office inspector was of the opinion that Mrs. Leslie's letters had to all appearance been tampered with in the Kemptville post office, but if tampered with there was no evidence to show by whom. No other charges against the postmaster are on record in this department. The postmaster was given strict orders not to employ again the assistant who was charged with having tampered with Mrs. Leslie's letters.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. McCARTHY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the Controller of Customs when I may expect the return to the order of the House made on the 21st of May with reference to the Woodstock Custom-house matter?

Mr. WALLACE. The return will be brought down at once.

SUPPLY—DOMINION LANDS.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Foster:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply; and the motion of Mr. Charlton in amendment thereto.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, as nearly a week has elapsed since I moved the adjournment of the debate on the resolution of the hon. member for North Norfolk, it might be well for me, for the information of hon. gentlemen, to read that resolution, as follows:—

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"in the opinion of this House the public lands of this Dominion should be sold to actual settlers only, upon reasonable terms of settlement, and in such areas as can be reasonably occupied and cultivated by the settler; that no sales of public lands to speculators or middlemen should be permitted; that liberal provisions should be made for free homestead grants to settlers; and that land grants to railway corporations have been made by the Government with reckless lavishness, and to the serious detriment of the public interest."

So far as the first portion of this resolution is concerned, I presume that it affirms what the majority of this House will agree with. But the sting of the resolution is in the tail. I do not think there is any difference of opinion amongst the members of this House that it is in the interest not only of the people of the western portion of our country, but in the interest of Canada as a whole that the lands of our Dominion should be reserved for actual settlers only, and upon reasonable terms of settlement. One would imagine from this resolution that this Government and former Conservative Governments that have been in power since the North-west was acquired by Canada, had administered the lands of that great country in a way detrimental to the interests of the settlers and the interests of the country generally. Now, Sir, I am prepared to state as a fact that the Government of Sir John Macdonald that was in power in 1872, and the Government of Sir John Macdonald that was in power from 1878 up to the time of that right hon. gentleman's death, administered that great trust in a way that admits of no such criticism as the motion would imply. On the contrary, I think it will be seen before I have taken my seat, that the administration of that great trust under the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a supporter, from 1874 to 1878, was directly opposed to that which was in vogue prior to that Government coming into power. If there was a time in the history of this country when the lands of this Dominion were not sold to actual settlers upon reasonable terms of settlement, when public lands were sold to speculators and middlemen, and when those public lands were not administered in the way in which the hon. gentleman indicates they should be, it was during the time Mr. Mackenzie's Government was in power. Now, Sir, the first Dominion Lands Act was passed in 1872. In that Act there was the wise provision that any person of the age of 21 years, upon making application, would be entitled to a free homestead of 160 acres upon payment of his entry fee. That Act remained on the Statute-book until 1874, when the Mackenzie Government came into power. In that year it was amended by changing the age at which a person was entitled to make a homestead entry from twenty-one years to eighteen years. But so far as the conditions were concerned, they remained the same. Now, the mode of survey in that country was adopted after the principle that obtained in the United States and Australia, and the policy of granting free homesteads adopted by the Government of Sir John Macdonald in 1872 was similar to the policy that had been adopted in the United States. The age of twenty-one years fixed by the Act of 1872 was the same as that fixed by the laws of the United States, and with the exception of changing the age from twenty-one to eighteen, so far as the homestead entries were concerned, the same law prevailed during the administration of Mr. Mackenzie that prevailed prior to it. And from that day to this, with that exception, the only changes that have been made in the law, were made to suit the changing purposes of the country. The law in this respect remains as it was then. Another important change made by the Mackenzie Government was that, in addition to the homestead rights, a pre-emption right was given. Not only had a man the right to acquire 160 acres as homestead, but to acquire, further, 160 acres as pre-emption, on the payment of a certain sum of money. In 1890, however, pre-emptions were abolished. My hon. friend has attempted to show that the policy of the United States Government was more liberal towards homesteaders than that of this country. I fail to follow the hon. gentleman in that. I contend that, on the contrary, our policy has been more liberal. In the United States, in order that a man could obtain a homestead, he had to be, in the first place, an American citizen; in the second place, he had to be twenty-one years of age; and in the third place, he was required to have resided five years continuously on the homestead before he was entitled to a patent. And when he became entitled to a patent, he had to give notice of his intention, he had to go with two witnesses before the nearest land agent, and make his application through an attorney. On the contrary, under the laws of Canada that have obtained since 1874, a man simply requires to be eighteen years of age, to have lived upon his homestead for six months in each year during three years, and at the expiration of that period he does not require to give any notice of his application for the homestead, but goes to the nearest land office with his witnesses and applies for the patent; or, if that is not convenient, he informs a land agent that he desires to make an application, and an inspector is sent who, upon the payment of a five dollar fee, at the settler's own homestead, takes the corroborative affidavits of two of the neighbours at hand, and takes the application. The applicant employs no attorney, because the rules and regulations of the department say that no attorney shall be employed. More than that, it is not required that when he makes his application he should be a British subject. It is only when he applies for the patent that he is required to substantiate the fact to the agent that he is a British subject, at the time of making the application, having completed the three years residence required. This short recital of the difference between the laws of the two countries will convince any one that our laws in connection with homesteads are the more fair and liberal of the two, and it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. gentleman or anybody else to state that they are not. The greatest change made by Mr. Mackenzie in the homestead law was that of permitting a man to pre-empt 160 acres, and entitling him to a patent for that, after the expiration of three years, and on the payment of some fees. So far as the condition of things that existed from 1872 to 1874 is concerned, that period was so short that we are not in possession of many facts in relation to the condition of the country then, so far as settlers are concerned. But this is to be borne in mind, that during that time the only means the people had of getting into the country was through the United States or by the Dawson route. The expenses were great, either by one route or the other, and the people going out had to experience many hardships, so that there was not much chance for speculators from 1872 to 1874. But from 1874 to 1878 it would appear that numerous applications were made for homesteads, and numerous homestead entries were made. It would appear that in 1874, no less than 1,376 homestead entries were made, of which 888 were cancelled in that same year, making 64 per cent of cancellations as compared with the entries. In 1875, the number of entries was 499, of which 60 per cent were cancelled. In 1876, there were 347 entries, and 44 per cent cancelled. In 1877, the number of homestead entries amounted to 845, and the percentage of cancellations was 53. In 1878, the entries numbered 1,788, and the cancellations were 76 per cent. The percentage of cancellations in the following years, after 1878, runs 50, 32, 30, and so on. It is evident from these figures, that, although a number of homestead entries were made from 1874 to 1878, the percentage of cancellations of those entries was greater than at any other period, and the reason was that the entries were made for speculative purposes, and not by men desirous of becoming permanent settlers. From 1874 to 1878, both years inclusive, for every 100 acres homesteaded, there were sold, otherwise than as pre-emptions, 174 acres. From 1879 to 1888, both years inclusive, for every 100 acres homesteaded, there were sold, otherwise than as pre-emptions, 49·8 acres, showing that during the period from 1874 to 1878, the speculator was abroad, and that although during that time the average sales amount to 174 acres, yet from 1879 to 1888, they only averaged 49·8. Between the years 1874 to 1878, the percentage was 3·5 times that of 1879 to 1888; that is, there were three and one-half times more sales of land from 1874 to 1878 in proportion than from 1879 to 1888, showing that if there was a speculative feeling abroad, showing that if lands were being purchased by speculators and not being taken up by settlers, from 1879 to 1888, that evil obtained in greater ratio from 1874 to 1878 than ever since. To show the liberality of the Government of Mr. Mackenzie towards the settlers, to show how they and the party which the hon. gentleman supported at that time were desirous "that the lands should be sold to actual settlers only upon reasonable terms of settlement and in such areas as can be reasonably occupied and worked." I would call the attention of the House to the fact that it was very shortly after Mr. Mackenzie came into power that changes were made with reference to the lands that could be homesteaded or purchased by settlers. We find the following Order in Council adopted on the 26th December, 1874:—

On a memorandum, dated 24th December, 1874, from the hon. the Minister of Interior, stating that in view of the location of the Canadian Pacific Railway line westerly from the present limits of the province of Ontario, he submits that in all probability during the coming season there will be a disposition manifested on the part of settlers going into the province of Manitoba to squat upon lands along the route, thus possibly embarrassing the Government in carrying out the provisions of the Railway Act of last session, and under the circumstances he recommends that he be authorized to give public notice to the effect that all lands within twenty miles on each side of the line surveyed, and upon which the telegraph is now under construction, are for the present withdrawn from sale or settlement under the Dominion Lands Act, and that no rights of entry upon the said lands by parties who may have settled thereon after the issue of this notice will be recognized by the Government until further notice.

The lands so withdrawn to include also a district twenty miles to the westward of Fort Pelly.

Now, the meaning of the Order in Council of the 26th of December was that for twenty miles on each side of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not then located, but to be located, all lands, both the even-numbered and odd-numbered sections, were withdrawn from settlement. It is within the memory of those who lived in that country at that time, it is within the memory of those who have gone to live in that country since and are there now, that no greater injustice was done to the settlers of that country than by the passing of that Order in Council and no greater grievances existed than those which arose from its working. But the hon. gentleman was not satisfied with withdrawing twenty miles on each side of the proposed line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and preventing people purchasing or homesteading on that strip from Winnipeg to Fort Pelly. By a subsequent Order in Council in 1886, they extended this withdrawal west of Fort Pelly to a point twenty miles west of the mouth of the Battle River. In addition to that, as a means, no doubt of showing their desire that the lands of the country should be held for the settler and not for the speculator, in this same order of the 28th of February, 1876, in addition to the reservation of twenty miles on either side of the line to a point twenty miles beyond the Battle River, it contained the following:—

That in view of the above he recommends that a block four miles square, making in all a block of 16 square miles, be reserved at such a point in the vicinity of the junction of the Battle and Saskatchewan rivers as may be found most convenient for a town site, which may be constituted the future seat of the Government of the North-west Territories.

Then by a subsequent Order in Council, dated 22nd of April, 1876, in pursuance of the policy laid down in the two Orders in Council I have quoted, the following is provided:—

On a memorandum dated 21st April, 1876, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, stating, with reference to the question of a withdrawal of lands in the vicinity of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from ordinary sale and settlement, to be disposed of at a future period in connection with the construction of the railway, that in view of avoiding possible difficulties with persons taking up land upon or in the vicinity of the line as surveyed, to the westward of Battle River, it is, in his opinion, expedient to extend the reserve authorized by the Order in Council in that behalf, dated the 28th February last, and recommending therefore that the lands for twenty miles on each side of the line of railway, from a point twenty miles westerly of the Battle River to Jasper House in the "Yellow Head" Pass through the Rocky Mountains, be withdrawn accordingly.

Now, the effect of these three Orders in Council is that for twenty miles on each side of the line of the railway, that is for a strip forty miles wide in what was then known as the fertile belt of these prairies, from Winnipeg to Jasper House, the lands were reserved from settlement or sale. And that was the policy adopted by hon. gentlemen who now seek by this resolution to bring odium upon the administration of the lands by the several Conservative Administrations that have been in power since that time. And to show, Mr. Speaker, that the then Minister of the Interior and the Government of which he was a member were alarmed by the representations made by the people as to the harm being done and the great injustice wrought by this reserve, I need only quote an order of the 9th of November, 1877, repealing the first Order in Council. This latter order on the face of it contains a condemnation of the former action of the Government:

On a report dated 30th October, 1877, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, stating that in consequence of the rapidly increasing demand for land for settlement in Manitoba, and also the continued dissatisfaction at the locking up of the lands withdrawn for twenty miles on each side of the line surveyed of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the Order in Council of the 26th December, 1874, he is of the opinion that it is expedient to effect some amelioration of the conditions of the said Order in Council, so far as relates to the lands within the province.

Mind you, it only provides for the amelioration of the condition brought about by the Order in Council of December, 1874, so far as the lands in the province are concerned. Beyond the province the same twenty-mile reserve existed.

He therefore recommends that the lands in Manitoba withdrawn as above be thrown open to actual settlement, but not for homestead or pre-emption entry, or for entry by military bounty or police warrants, or for ordinary sale. No person to be allowed to acquire more than one half-section, or 320 acres, and such land to be paid for by the occupant at whatever rate and upon such terms as may be fixed therefor by the Government when the remainder of the lands in the province of this class are disposed of.

I would call the attention of the House to the fact that, by way of ameliorating the condition of the people, as stated in the recommendation of the Minister, they did not open these lands for homestead entry, they did not open them so that men could apply a military bounty warrant or a police warrant on the payment for them, or even for sale, so that a man should acquire more than a half-section. It was held at a price and upon terms to be fixed thereafter. Instead of ameliorating the condition of the people, they left them practically in the same condition they were before. And there are hon. gentlemen in this House who were residents of Manitoba at that time and they know the feeling aroused by this action of the then Government. But, further, by the way of ameliorating the condition of these people, the hon. gentleman's Order in Council went on:

He further recommends that persons desiring to acquire such lands shall, previous to settlement thereon, be required to be entered therefor at the nearest Dominion Lands Office, and in order to prove their good faith, the applicants shall be obliged in each case to make a payment in advance at the time of entry of one dollar per acre in cash on account of the purchase and further be required to settle on and commence to cultivate the land within one year from the date of entry, or, in default thereof, the payment so made to be forfeited. No scrip of any kind, or military bounty or police warrants to be receivable in payment of the lands above described.

That was "the amelioration of the condition of the people" in Manitoba at that time. That Order in Council was passed by the Government of which the hon. member who moved this resolution was then a supporter. Yet he would give the House and the country to believe by his resolution that the actions of this Government and previous Conservative Governments have not been in the interest of the settler. I want to know if a greater condemnation can be had of the policy of Mr. Mackenzie's Government and of the action taken by that Government by way of inducing settlement in that country than is to be found within the four corners of the Order in Council I have now read. In order "that the land should be sold to the actual settler on reasonable payments, and in such areas as can be reasonably cultivated," they tie up twenty miles on each side of the proposed railway from one end of the country to the other, and, after keeping it tied up for some years, in order "to ameliorate the condition" of the people, they invite the people to go and occupy these lands, not to homestead them, not to purchase them, but that they may have the chance of purchasing them later at prices and on terms to be subsequently fixed. But, in order to show their good faith—not the good faith of the Government—in carrying out their promises, but the good faith of the people in being willing to be bound by conditions of this kind—the Order in Council makes it a condition that they must first deposit a dollar an acre and afterwards perform certain duties. And that was done by a Government supported by the hon. gentleman who would give this House and this country to understand by this resolution that he is in favour, and that the Government of that day were in favour, of these lands being held for the settler and being withheld from the speculator. Further, in this Order in Council it is said:

The Minister observes that the withdrawal of the lands in question was effected under section 105 of the Dominion Lands Act, circumstances not permitting the application thereto of the Act 37 Victoria, chapter 14, which provides for the construction of railway, and as no statute exists authorizing the special mode above suggested of disposing of the lands with ground, it will be advisable to confirm the action proposed to be taken as above in that respect by legislation during the ensuing session of Parliament.

When the hon. gentleman ascertained the feelings that existed among the people of Manitoba when this order was promulgated, and proposed legislation, as a matter of fact, although another special mode is suggested: "It would be advisable to confirm the action proposed by legislation during the ensuing session"—no such legislation was obtained. The hon. gentleman and his friends became ashamed of their action, and the adverse force of public opinion in Manitoba was so great that they not only had to withdraw the provisions of this Order in Council of 1877, but they did not carry out the suggestion made here, and did not bring in legislation to confirm it. Now we go on in the history of the administration of the lands of Manitoba and the North-west. After Mr. Mackenzie's Government went out of power and the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald returned, by an Order in Council of 9th July, 1879, the former orders were rescinded. So far as the lands situated along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway were concerned, it is provided that they should be laid out in certain belts, A, B, C, D, and E, and the prices were fixed by the Order in Council, and the terms upon which these lands could be acquired, thereby saying to the intending purchaser that these lands could be acquired in a certain way, that the sum to be paid was fixed, and that he was not in any way under obligations to the Government, as he had to be under the Order in Council of 1877.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are they in force still?

Mr. DALY. They are not, and the hon. gentleman knows it. This Order in Council of 9th July, 1879, provided as follows:—

Dominion Lands in belt A shall be absolutely withdrawn from homestead entry, also from pre-emption, and shall be held exclusively for sale at $6 per acre.

Belt A was composed of five miles on either side of the railway and immediately adjoining the same; belt B, of fifteen miles on either side of the railway adjoining belt A; belt C, of twenty miles on either side of the railway adjoining belt B; belt D, of twenty miles on either side of the railway adjoining belt C; and belt E, of fifty miles on either side of the railway adjoining belt D. As to the lands in belt B, within ten miles of the railway, it is provided as follows:—

The even-numbered sections within the belt shall be set apart for homesteads and pre-emptions, and the odd-numbered sections shall be regarded as railway lands proper. The homesteads on the even-numbered sections to the extent of 80 acres each, shall consist of the easterly halves of the easterly halves, also of the westerly halves of the westerly halves of such sections.

As to belt C the lands were to be sold at $2.50 per acre; and in belt E, at $1 per acre.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the price in belt B?

Mr. DALY. Belt B lands were to be $2.50 an acre. That Order in Council was in force until October 14, 1879, for a period of about three months. Now, before I go on to this Order of October 14, 1879, anticipating some criticism from hon. gentlemen opposite as to its conditions, I think the first criticism that may be brought against it is that the lands in belt A, five miles on each side of the railway, were held exclusively for homestead and pre-emption. That was done in accordance with the policy that had been pursued by the United States Government in relation to their lands along the lines of railway. The 80-acre homestead provision was also in accordance with the law of the United States as it existed at that time, but has since been changed. Those are the only features of the Order in Council of July, 1879, that I think can be taken exception to; but that Order in Council did not remain in force as long as the objectionable Order in Council of the hon. gentleman that I have previously referred to. More than that, it was less objectionable than the hon. gentleman's Order in Council, in this, that it provided that within six miles of the railway named in belt B, a man could get a homestead entry upon the ordinary terms. This Order in Council of July, 1879, was abrogated by the Order in Council of October 14, 1879, which provided as follows:—

Until further and final survey of the said railway has been made west of the Red River, and for the purposes of these provisions, the line of the said railway shall be assumed to be on the fourth base westerly to the intersection of the said base by the line between ranges 21 and 22 west of the first principal meridian, and thence in a direct line to the confluence of the Shell River with the River Assiniboine.

And the width of the belts is the very same as I have quoted already from the Order in Council of 9th July, 1874. But it provided further:

The even-numbered sections in each township throughout the several belts above described shall be open for entry as homesteads and pre-emptions of 160 acres each respectively. The odd-numbered sections in each of such townships shall not be open to homestead or pre-emption, but shall be specially reserved and designated as railway lands.

And the railway lands in belt A are to be sold at $5 per acre; in belt B, at $4; in belt C, at $3; in belt D, at $2, and belt E, at $1. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that although the Order in Council of July, 1879, had the objectionable features of withdrawing homesteading within five miles of the railway, and it only provided for 80-acre homesteads, these provisions were removed almost immediately, and within a few months after the passing of that Order, the lands were again opened to homesteading, and from that time to this, the law exists as I have recited it in the Order in Council of October 14, but so far as the price of the lands was concerned, it has been changed in some particulars. Now, by this Order in Council of October, 1879, that I have read, in order that the injury that has been inflicted by the Orders in Council of the Mackenzie Government might be removed, it is provided as follows:—

These provisions shall be retroactive so far as relates to any and all entries of homestead and pre-emption lands or sales of railway lands obtained or made under the regulations of the 9th July, hereby superseded: Any payments made in excess of the rate hereby fixed shall be credited on account of sales of such lands. The Order in Council of 9th November, 1877, relating to the settlement of the lands in Manitoba which had been previously withdrawn for railway purposes, having been cancelled, all claims of persons who settled in good faith on lands under the said Order in Council shall be dealt with under these provisions, as to price of pre-emptions, according to the belt in which such lands may be situate. Where a person may have taken up two quarter-sections under the said Order in Council, he may retain the quarter-section upon which he has settled, as a homestead, and the other quarter-section as a pre-emption, under these provisions, irrespective of whether such homesteads and pre-emption may be found to be upon an even-numbered section or otherwise. Any moneys paid by such person on account of the lands entered by him under the said Order in Council, will be credited to him on account of his pre-emption purchase, under these provisions. A person who may have taken up one quarter-section under the Order in Council mentioned, will be allowed to retain the same as a homestead, and will be permitted to enter a second quarter-section as a pre-emption, the money paid on account of the land previously entered to be credited to him on account of such pre-emption.

Now, those terms are most liberal, those terms are not only liberal, but they were necessary. The people were in such a condition of uncertainty having taken up lands under the provision of 1877, and the provisions of that Order in Council never having been carried out, that it was necessary that the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald should come to the rescue of these people, and they did come to their rescue by providing, as I have stated, the manner in which they should hold or pay for those lands obtained under the Order in Council of 9th November, 1877. Now, so much for the administration of lands under the Government of Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You have been discussing the lands under the two Governments.

Mr. DALY. I discussed at some length, and read to the House, the Orders in Council that were passed from 1874 to 1878 during the time Mr. Mackenzie was in power.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you did more.

Mr. DALY. Yes, I went beyond, and discussed the changes that were made by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald in 1879, showing that those changes were made in the interest of the settler, and showing to the House and to the country that the Conservative Government of Sir John A. Macdonald had only one idea, and that was to hold and administer these lands in the interest of the settler.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman says "No," but I challenge the mover of the resolution to show the contrary. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) made a speech on his resolution. His resolution was framed on general terms and his speech failed to contain any specific charges or embody any specific statements showing in any way whatever that the Conservative Governments which from time to time have administered the North-west lands have not administered them in the interest of the settler and against the speculator. It does not, therefore, lie in the mouth of the hon. gentleman or of the Liberal party to condemn the Government for the administration of those lands in view of the fact that they have failed to make any specific statements or charges.

Mr. CHARLTON. How does the hon. gentleman reconcile that statement with the fact that the Government granted a number of townships at half the regular price to colonization companies?

Mr. DALY. I will come to the question of colonization companies presently, and I will show the liberal terms which hon. gentlemen opposite were prepared to offer in order to secure settlers. In order to substantiate the statement embodied in the present resolution and in the hon. gentleman's speech, and to support the resolution passed by the Reform party in its convention held in the city a year ago in regard to the administration of the North-west lands, it would be well that some specific statements and charges should be made, because within the four corners of the resolution there are assertions to the effect that there has been corruption, that the lands have not been properly administered, and in fact this Government, and former Conservative Governments, are charged with maladministration of the lands of the west, and before such serious charges are made by an hon. member holding the position in the House and in his party as occupied by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), he should come down with specific statements, and not with general charges such as are contained in his speech and resolution. I now come to the question of colonization lands, to which the hon. gentleman has referred. It is the only subject with which he deals specifically, and in the course of his remarks he said:

We had in 1882 the introduction of a policy called the Colonization Grant Policy, and in one year the Government had received applications from 251 parties, 24 of whom were members of Parliament, and had granted 2,295 townships of land, or 82,520 square miles of the public lands to companies, to speculators, and on easy terms of payment, and also at one-half the price that the Government charged to actual settlers. That was an outrageous act, that was a policy conceived, not in the interest of the settler, but it was a policy designed to forward the interests of the speculators.

That is a very serious charge. The hon. gentleman's statement is that there were 251 applications. He is right, there were that number. He also says further on, that twenty-four members of Parliament applied. He is right: twenty-four members of Parliament did apply. He says 2,295 townships were granted. He means, I presume, that that number was allotted, for they were not granted; as a fact only 64½ townships were allotted and granted. He said that 82,250 square miles were granted. In fact 2,323 square miles were granted. He said 52,640 acres were granted; in fact 1,486,940 acres were granted. The total area actually patented was 463,931 acres, or 725 square miles, or equal to twenty townships. So the hon. gentleman is 11,000 per cent astray in his figures given to the House. I ask the hon. gentleman to stick to the facts and not make general statements, because the details have bombs in them which sometimes explode. This question, however, is not new. The hon. gentleman discussed it in 1882; but as the complexion of the House has changed considerably, a number of the hon. gentlemen who occupied positions here having gone over to the majority or are no longer members of the House, I must ask the indulgence of the House in order that I may be able to combat the statements presented by the hon. gentleman, because former debates may have by this time been forgotten. But so far as the colonization companies are concerned, the statements made by the hon. gentleman are not borne out by facts. This question may probably be as well taken up now as at any other time, and I may point out on what terms the colonization companies were permitted to acquire lands and under what conditions they were entitled to secure public lands, because it is to be remembered that the Order in Council under which they were given, dated March 25th, 1881, was passed at a time when there was much excitement in the country, when there was a boom in Manitoba and the North-west, when people were flocking to the country to settle, and when, no doubt, many people were flocking there in order to speculate. But before it can be charged against the Government that the colonization scheme was a speculative one and was not in the interest of the country and the settler, it may be well to examine the terms on which those lands were granted. There was plan No. 1, as follows:—

COLONIZATION.

PLAN NUMBER ONE.

8. Agreements may be entered into with any company or person (hereinafter called the party) to colonize and settle tracts of land on the following conditions:

a. The party applying must satisfy the Government of his good faith and ability to fulfil the stipulations contained in these regulations;

b. The tract of land granted to any party shall be in class D.

9. The odd-numbered sections within such tract may be sold to the party at $2 per acre, payable one fifth in cash at the time of entering into the contract and the balance in four equal annual instalments from and after that time. The party shall also pay to the Government five cents per acre for the survey of the land purchased by it, the same to be payable in four annual instalments at the same time as the instalments of the purchase money. Interest at the rate of six per cent per annum shall be charged on all past due instalments:

a. The party shall, within five years from the date of the contract, colonize its tract;

b. Such colonization numbered shall consist in placing two settlers on homesteads on each even section, and also two settlers on each odd-numbered section.

c. The party may be secured for advances made to settlers on homesteads according to the provision of the 10th section of the Act 44 Victoria, chap. 16 (the Act passed in 1881 to amend the Dominion Lands Act).

d. The homestead of 160 acres shall be the property of the settler, and he shall have the right to purchase the pre-emption lot belonging to his homestead at $2 per acre, payable in one sum at the end of three years from the date of entry, or at such earlier date as he may under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act obtain a patent for his homestead.

e. When the settler on a homestead does not take entry for the pre-emption lot to which he has a right, the party may within three months after the settler's rights has elapsed purchase the same at $2 per acre, payable in cash at the time of purchase.

10. In consideration of having colonized its tract of land in the manner set forth in subsection b of the last preceding clause, the party shall be allowed a rebate of one-half the original purchase money of the odd-numbered section in its tract.

a. During each of the five years covered by the contract an enumeration shall be made of the settler's place by the party in its tract, in accordance with subsection b of clause 9 of these regulations, and for each bona fide settler so found therein a rebate of one hundred and twenty dollars shall be credited to the party; but the sums so credited shall not, in the aggregate, at any time, exceed one hundred and twenty dollars for each bona fide settler found within the tract, in accordance with the said subsection at the time of the latest enumeration.

b. On the expiration of the five years, an enumeration shall be made of the bona fide settlers on the tract, and if they are found to be as many in number and placed in the manner stipulated for in subsection b of clause 9 of these regulations, a further and final rebate of forty dollars per settler shall be credited to the party, which sum when added to those previously credited will amount to one-half of the purchase money of the odd-numbered sections and reduce the price thereof to one dollar per acre. But if it should be found that the full number of settlers required by these regulations are not on the tract, or are not placed in conformity with subsection b of clause 9 of these regulations, then for each settler fewer than the required number or not placed in conformity with the said subsection, the party shall forfeit one hundred and sixty dollars of rebate.

c. If at any time during the existence of the contract the party shall have failed to perform any of the conditions thereof, the Governor in Council may cancel the sale of the land purchased by it, and deal with the party as may seem meet under the circumstances.

d. To be entitled to rebate, the party shall furnish to the Minister of Interior evidence that will satisfy him that the tract has been colonized and settled in accordance with subsection b of clause 9 of these regulations.

PLAN NUMBER TWO.

11. To encourage settlement by capitalists who may desire to cultivate larger farms than can be purchased where the regulations provide that two settlers shall be placed on each section, agreements may be entered into with any company or person (hereinafter called the party) to colonize and settle tracts of land on the following conditions:—

a. The party applying must satisfy the Government of its good faith and ability to fulfil the stipulations contained in these regulations.

b. The tract of land granted to any party shall be in class D.

c. All the lands within the tract may be sold to the party at $2 per acre, payable in cash at the time of entering into the contract. The party shall, at the same time pay to the Government five cents per acre for the survey of the land purchased by it.

d. The party shall, within five years from the date of the contract, colonize the township or townships comprised within its tract.

e. Such colonization shall consist in placing one hundred and twenty-eight bona fide settlers within each township.

12. In consideration of having colonized its tract of land in the manner set forth in subsection e of the last preceding clause, the party shall be allowed a rebate of one-half of the original purchase money of its tract.

a. During each of the five years covered by the contract, an enumeration shall be made of the settlers placed by the party in its tract, in accordance with subsection e of clause 11 of these regulations, and for each bona fide settler so found therein a rebate of one hundred and twenty dollars shall be repaid to the party, but the sum so repaid shall not, in the aggregate, at any time exceed one hundred and twenty dollars for each bona fide settler found within the tract, in accordance with the said subsection at the time of the latest enumeration.

b. On the expiration of the five years, an enumeration shall be made of the bona fide settlers placed by the party in its tract, and if they are found to be as many in number and placed in the manner stipulated for in subsection e of clause 11 of these regulations, a further and final rebate of forty dollars for each settler shall be repaid, which sum when added to those previously repaid to the party, will amount to one-half of the purchase money of its tract, and reduce the price thereof to one dollar per acre. But if it should be found that the full number of settlers required by these regulations are not on the tract or are not placed in conformity with the said subsection, then for each settler fewer than the required number or not settled in conformity with the said subsection, the party shall forfeit one hundred and sixty dollars of rebate.

c. To be entitled to rebate, the party shall furnish to the Minister of Interior evidence that will satisfy him that the tract has been colonized and settled in accordance with subsection e of the clause 11 of these regulations.

Now, I think, Mr. Speaker, it will be seen from the reading of those two plans of colonization, that the conditions laid down by the Government were most onerous, and that if these conditions were fulfilled they would have to be fulfilled by men who had every idea of acting up to their provisions. The lands were not taken up by speculators, and the best answer that could be made to the idea that there was speculation is: that there is not one of those colonization companies in existence to-day. That is a complete answer to the statement that there was any speculation in it. It is a fact that out of the 251 applications that were made, only 28 signed the contract, and only 11 of them went into operation; and of the 24 members of Parliament, 6 of them were Grits, 3 of them Conservatives, 5 were senators, making 11 in all. So that, if according to the charge that was made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), when he discussed this question in the House in 1882, these colonization companies were formed for the purpose of tying up large tracts of land in the hands of favourites of the Government: the figures I have given show conclusively that it was not the friends of the Government alone who were anxious to enter into this speculation—if there was speculation in it—but others went into it, including the late lamented leader of the Reform party, Mr. Alexander Mackenzie.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that is a mistake.

Mr. DALY. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) thinks it is a mistake, but I have to correct him. It is a fact.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What company was it?

Mr. DALY. I will tell you in a minute. The colonization companies paid $857,461 in hard cash, and $30,460.50 in scrip into the treasury. The Saskatchewan Colonization Company alone paid $156,000 to the Government and expended $367,932 in roads, seed grain, placing settlers on the land, &c. Notwithstanding these large expenditures made by that company, and notwithstanding the fact of so many applications having been made, not a single colonization company exists to-day that was formed under the provisions of that Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before you leave that point, just find out what particular company you refer to as Mr. Mackenzie being concerned in, because I think there must be some error there.

Mr. DALY. If the hon. gentleman will send for the 'Hansard' of 1886, he will find stated there the name of the company that Mr. Mackenzie was interested in. It was given to the House by the Hon. Thomas White in a speech, which will be found in the 'Hansard' of 1886, at page 1042; if not in Mr. White's speech, you will find in the speech of some other gentleman who spoke in the debate the name of the company that Mr. Mackenzie was the president of. I can say from recollection that Mr. Mackenzie was the president of a company with a capital stock of $1,000,000, that was formed for the purpose of purchasing lands in the Northwest for colonization and other purposes. I am sorry that I have not my memorandum here, but it can be found as I have said. Now, Mr. Speaker those were the conditions under which these colonization lands were given to settlers. As I said before I think the conditions were very onerous and the best proof of that is, that not one of these companies exist to-day. The facts that I have given to the House show conclusively that before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) made such broad statements, he should have come to me or to some officer of my department who would furnish him with the facts I have given to the House. It is unfair, and it is not in the interests of the country, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) should take the course he did in this matter. It is not well that the debates of this House should be read by people in other lands, and that the statements made in the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should go to the world uncontradicted. If I have taken up a considerable portion of the time of the House in referring to these matters it is in order that the facts should be known, not only to the people of Canada but to people outside of Canada who take an interest in our country. If the charge of the hon. gentleman be true that we were desirous of promoting speculation, what will be said of the action that was taken by the Government of Mr. Mackenzie in reference to promoting settlement in that country—and I take it that the whole idea underlying this question of colonization companies at that time, was one of settlement. The colonization companies were formed for the purpose of settling the country, and it seems to have been the desire of all Governments since that great territory was acquired by us to pursue every possible means of settling it. But if the terms contained in these colonization agreements that were formulated in December, 1881, were extravagant, as the hon. gentleman has charged, what do we find under the Government of Mr. Mackenzie? On the 31st January, 1876, prior to the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) being Minister of the Interior, his predecessor, Mr. Laird, being anxious to formulate a scheme to settle that country promulgated the following:—

On a memorandum dated 30th December, 1875, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, submitting a letter of Mr. A. Spencer Jones, dated 24th inst., applying for the withdrawal from public sale and the general settlement of townships No. 15, in range 9 and Nos. 15, 16 and 17 in range 10, west of the principal meridian in the province of Manitoba, to be colonized by English and Welsh immigrants, under direction, in accordance with the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act as amended during the session of 1874.

The Minister states that Mr. Jones's application is recommended by the Hon. R. W. Scott, acting in the temporary absence of the Minister of Agriculture, and he, the Minister of the Interior, recommends that the townships indicated be withdrawn from public sale and general settlement, and set apart for colonization by Mr. Jones, upon the conditions set forth in sections Nos. 14 and 15 of the Dominion Lands Act, 37 Vic., chap. 19, that is, to settle 64 families annually in the said townships until half the lands (exclusive of the Hudson's Bay Company and School sections and lands already disposed of) are occupied, and he recommends the sale to Mr. Jones of the residue of the Dominion lands in the said townships at fifty cents an acre when he has fulfilled the said conditions.

Now, these conditions are more liberal than any contained in the colonization scheme of 1881. But Mr. Jones apparently was not satisfied with the liberal treatment extended to him by Mr. Laird. The hon. member for Bothwell, who was then the Minister of the Interior, was more liberal, and here is what he did for his friend Mr. Jones:

On a memorandum dated 24th July, 1878, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, reporting that numerous applications were received by his department during last spring from persons wishing information respecting the conditions of taking up land in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, the means of getting there, and in many instances asking also to be aided with a loan towards the expenses of moving their families.

That in all such cases the fullest information was supplied to the applicants in the way of maps, pamphlets, land lists and regulations, but that it was intimated to those who applied for money aid to enable them to remove from the older provinces and settle on Dominion lands, that such policy was not consistent with the views of the Government.

That the very general favour, however, with which such settlement appeared to be regarded in the different provinces suggested to certain private individuals the expediency of engaging in some scheme by which the same might be facilitated, and it was sought to apply the provisions of the Act 37 Vic., cap. 19, sections 14 and 15, which offer a premium in the form of a sale of alternate quarter-sections at a reduced price, for placing settlers on Dominion lands.

That this Act could not be adopted, as its provisions were intended to have reference exclusively to emigrants brought from Europe, and a scheme was submitted to him, the Minister, by which persons desiring to promote the settlement on Dominion lands of families from the older provinces or from the United States, should, by previous agreement with such settler, receive a return therefor, not in money, but in the form of a lien upon or gift of part of the settler's land.

That this position he, the Minister, regarded favourably, for the reasons that it involved no money aid and was consistent with the spirit of the Act above mentioned, intended to promote settlement on the public lands.

That, moreover, evidence was furnished to him that many settlers would avail themselves of such an arrangement, and certain of the persons alluded to above were accordingly advised that they might proceed to place settlers on the terms and conditions following, which would be recommended to the favourable consideration of Council, that is to say:

And here comes the important part of the hon. gentleman's Order in Council:

That for every family which such persons might satisfy the Minister that they had been the means of placing upon the homesteads in townships open for settlement in Manitoba or the North-west Territory during the present season—

Not confined to belt D, but in any portion of the North-west Territories.

—a legal subdivision of 80 acres, a portion of the half-section or 320 acres, which, under the Dominion Lands Act, would include the homestead and pre-emption right of the head of such family, should be conveyed free to such person upon fulfilment of the homestead conditions in respect of the lands so entered, provided that the settler in whose favour such land might be entered, should be a party to the agreement, by which such person should receive the 80 acres in question.

That before any right to receive a patent for such eighty acres could be acknowledged by the department (the homestead conditions having been duly fulfilled, as called for in the next preceding paragraph) the person claiming such 80 acres be required to file with the Department of the Interior a declaratory statement in the form subjoined marked A.

That he now asks the sanction of Council to the above arrangement, authority for which is given in section 105 of the Dominion Lands Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the effect of the Order in Council which I have quoted is that 80 acres were to be given free to Mr. Jones or to any other person who might bring in a settler. All Mr. Jones had to do to entitle him to those 80 acres was to get an affidavit from the settler. I think that after reading the Order in Council of the 31st of July, 1878, and the Order in Council of the 1st of January, 1876, and taking into careful consideration the conditions of the country at that time, and after carefully reading those I have quoted relating to the colonization scheme of 1881, any person who is conversant with the subject will come to the conclusion that the terms offered by the Government of Mr. Mackenzie were far more liberal and far less justifiable than the terms of colonization offered by the Government of Sir John Macdonald in 1881. So much for colonization. I see that Mr. White, in answer to the hon. gentleman, said :

I find that one of those members was Hon. Alexander Mackenzie.

He did not state the name of the company, but I may be able to give it to the hon. gentleman before I close. Now, Mr. Speaker, that next charge brought against the Government is in regard to its timber policy. In reference to that, the hon. gentleman says :

Then the Government adopted as another part of its policy the system of giving away timber areas, not inviting competition, not putting them up at auction, not seeking to secure for those properties their actual value, but partitioning out among their favourites tracts of not less than thousands of square miles of the most valuable timber land of this Dominion, and in this way no less than 25,000 square miles were granted by the Government to its favourites at a nominal rate of $5 per square mile, as I have said, without competition and without regard to actual value.

Now, that statement is as sweeping and general as the statement made by the hon. gentleman in reference to the Government's colonization policy. As a matter of fact, the first Dominion Lands Act, which was passed in 1872, contained the following provision in reference to the sale of timber lands :—

The right of cutting timber on such limits shall be put up at a bonus per square mile, varying according to the situation and value of the limit, and sold to the highest bidder by competition, either by tender or at public auction.

That was the law passed by the Conservative Government in 1872 after we had acquired the North-west Territories. The Liberal party came into power in the fall of 1873, and so desirous was that party of preserving the timber, and disposing of it in a way that would be best for those who acquired it, and would yield the highest revenue to the Government, that they were not satisfied with the provisions of the Act of 1872 requiring that the timber limits should be sold to the highest bidder at public competition; but, extraordinary to say, they repealed that section, and provided as follows :—

Provided further that in cases where application may be made for limits on which to cut timber in unsurveyed territory, the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Interior, authorize the same to be leased for such bonus as may be deemed fair and reasonable,—such leases to be subject nevertheless to the foregoing conditions of this section, except as to that part of subsection one which provides for the erection of mills, which provision, in respect to limits in unsurveyed territory may, if considered expedient by the Minister of Interior, be dispensed with.

Now, according to the quotation I have made from the timber regulations enforced in 1872, it will be seen that the policy of the Conservative Government was that the timber should only be sold to the highest bidder and by competition. But the policy of the Mackenzie Government changed that. They did not require that the timber should be sold to the highest bidder or that there should be competition, either by tender or by public auction, and if the hon. gentleman is sincere now he must admit that the ideas which he now expresses did not animate the Mackenzie Government at that time. Now, in pursuance of the authority given by the Order in Council of 1874, which I have quoted, the Mackenzie Government, from 1874 to 1878 sold or granted 605 square miles of timber without any competition, and all they received for dues during that time was $6,160. On the other hand, we received $98,795.71 in fees in 1893 alone, and since 1878 we have received a grand total of $1,567,793. In one year we got $98,000, while in the whole time the Mackenzie Government were in power all that they received from timber dues was $6,160, and they disposed of their timber limits without competition. They took power to dispose of the timber limits by private arrangement, and yet the present Government and the Conservative party are assailed by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) for not selling our timber by public competition, and for not preserving it in the interests of the settler and the people. The average revenue from timber dues during the five years hon. gentlemen opposite were in office was $1,500 per annum, and the average since has been $77,120 per annum, and during the past three years the average has been $105,000 per annum. We had this matter under discussion a short time ago, and were treated to speeches from the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), condemning the policy of this Government selling timber by public competition. They say that our timber should not be sold by tender, that it should not be sold in any other way than by public auction, and yet we find that when these gentlemen, who make statements and arguments of that kind and lay down the proposition and principle laid down in the resolution before us, had the opportunity of governing the country and of making regulations for the selling of timber, they did not require that it should be sold by public competition or by tender, but they sold it by private sale to any one who came along. And at this moment, Sir, the policy of the Government and the regulations which govern the sale of timber provide that all licenses for such timber shall be disposed of by public competition. Soon after the Government of Sir John Macdonald came into office in 1878, the regulations made in 1874 were abolished, and we returned to the condition of things that now exists, namely, that no timber can be disposed of except by public competition. So much for the hon. gentleman's charge as to the selling of timber. Then the hon. gentleman brought up the question of grazing leases. He is as extravagant in his language with reference to the policy of the Government in the matter of grazing leases as in relation to the other questions I have discussed. The hon. gentleman said :

The Government at the same time granted millions upon millions of pasture lands on leases, at the nominal price of 1 cent per acre, asking for no competition, inviting no men to bid, but granted those leases to their old favourites at this nominal sum, as it granted those applications for colonization grants of townships to a large extent to its own favourites.

Now, what are the facts? It appears that in 1882, at the time when that country was fast filling up, it was found, on examination by the officers of the Government, that in the far western portion of the country, in the foot-hills of the Rockies, for some distance east, there were large grazing lands, with grass far superior to the grasses of the lands in any of the United States, and it was the opinion of the Government that some effort should be made to get men of capital and means to go in and develop that country by starting the ranching business. Now, the leases which were made of ranches were made under the conditions set forth in the Order in Council of the 6th of May, 1881, which provides as follows:—

Under the authority of the Act 44 Victoria, chap. 16, leases of tracts for grazing purposes may be granted on the following conditions:—

a. Such leases to be for a period of not exceeding twenty-one years and no single lease shall cover a greater area than 100,000 acres.

b. In surveyed territory, the land embraced by the lease, shall be described in townships and sections. In unsurveyed territory, the party to whom a lease may be promised shall, before the issue of the lease cause, a survey of the tract to be made, at his own expense, by a Dominion lands surveyor, under instructions from the Surveyor General; and the plan and field notes of such survey shall be deposited on record in the Department of the Interior.

c. The lessee shall pay an annual rental at the rate of $10 for every one thousand acres embraced by his lease, and shall within three years from the granting of the lease, place on the tract one head of cattle for every ten acres of land embraced by the lease and shall during its term maintain cattle thereon in at least that proportion.

d. After placing the prescribed number of cattle upon the tract leased, the lessee may purchase land within his leasehold for a home farm and corral, paying therefor $2 per acre in cash.

e. Failure to fulfil any of the conditions of his lease shall subject the lessee to forfeiture thereof.

17. When two or more parties apply for a grazing lease of the same land, tenders shall be invited and the lease shall be granted to the party offering the highest premium therefor in addition to the rental.

When it is remembered that at that time there was no railway through the country; that the nearest railway was at Portage la Prairie, hundreds of miles away from these pasture lands, and that the only possible means of getting there was through the United States by overland and steamer journey through Missouri and Montana, and that these men, in addition to taking all that trouble and bringing in their cattle from the south, had to fulfil the conditions laid down here, I do not think any gentleman will come to the conclusion that there was much of a bonanza in the acquiring of a ranch lease on the conditions I have cited—$10 for every 1,000 acres, or a cent per acre for every head of cattle. That means that ten acres of land is the lowest an animal can do with upon those ranches, and that has been established by experience, and that one cent an acre was more than was being charged by the United States Government for their ranch lands at the time this order was passed. And, Sir, more than that, we have the statements of these ranchmen that they have not been so successful as they had expected to be; and, I think, that if the hon. gentleman could learn the facts, he would find that instead of there being a speculation in these ranch lands, it has been the reverse. If the hon. gentleman were to interrogate these people I think he would find that there has been very hard work and very little profit for them, and that the conditions required of them by the Government in some instances have been onerous. Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to the crux of the hon. gentleman's resolution, namely, the final part of it, which reads:

And that land grants to railway corporations have been made by the Government with reckless lavishness, and to the serious detriment of the public interest.

I know that that portion of the resolution will commended itself to the seconder (Mr. Martin) because I have not the slightest doubt that he can say to the House that the people of Manitoba, at all events, have thought that this Government have not been sufficiently liberal in their land grants to railways. At all events, I think it can be proved that no land grants made by the Government have been made except where they have been required, and only for one purpose—that of colonizing the country. These land grants have not been granted "with reckless lavishness," nor have they been granted "to the serious detriment of the public interest," and I shall say before I sit down that if these land grants were lavish, those made by the hon. gentlemen opposite when in power were doubly so, that their policy was a far more liberal one. I could show further—and this fact can be borne out by the hon. member for Winnipeg—that there has not been a single railway to which a land grant has been given that has been able to finance its enterprise on that alone—every one of them has been obliged to go for aid either to this Government or to the Government of Manitoba. Let us go back to the beginning of our land grants to railways. Let us go back to 1874, when hon. gentlemen opposite undertook to build the Canadian Pacific Railway. First, it is within the recollection of hon. gentlemen who were in the House at that time, that so little, apparently, did Mr. Mackenzie value our lands, or so desirous was he to build this line of railway, that he offered Mr. Foster, the contractor of the Algoma branch, 20,000 acres per mile. And the greatest grant that this Government has ever given to any railway was 12,800 acres per mile, and that was given to the Hudson's Bay Railway Company on that portion of the line outside the northern boundary of the province of Manitoba. By the Act of 1874 it was provided :

That the total sum to be paid to the contractors shall be stipulated in the contract, and shall be ten thousand dollars for each mile of the section or subsection contracted for, and that such sum shall be paid to the contractors as the work progresses, by monthly payments in proportion to the value of the work then actually performed (according to the estimates of the engineers designated for the purpose by the Minister of Public Works), as compared with the value of the whole work contracted for, including rolling stock and all things to be done or furnished by the contractors.

And by section 4 :

That a quantity of land not exceeding twenty thousand acres for each mile of the section or subsection contracted for, shall be appropriated in alternate sections of twenty square miles each along the line of the said railway or at a convenient distance therefrom, each section having a frontage of not less than three miles nor more than six miles on the line of the said railway, and that two-thirds of the quantity of land so appropriated shall be sold by the Government at such prices as may from time to time be agreed upon between the Governor in Council and the contractors, and the proceeds thereof accounted for and paid half-yearly to the contractors free from any charge of administration or management—the remaining third to be conveyed to the contractors. The said lands to be of fair average quality and not to include any land already granted or occupied under any patent, license of occupation or pre-emption right; and when a sufficient quantity cannot be found in the immediate vicinity of the railway, then the same quantity or as much as may be required to complete such quantity, shall be appropriated at such other places as may be determined by the Governor in Council.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What railway is that ?

Mr. DALY. I am quoting an "Act to provide for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway," assented to on the 26th of May, 1874. We find that by that Act Mr. Mackenzie's Government was to give 20,000 acres per mile for each section or subsection contracted for, and also $10,000 per mile. If we take the mileage from Callendar to Vancouver as 2,562 miles, the cash bonus to be given will amount to $25,620,000. The Government were also to guarantee interest for twenty-five years. That I did not refer to, but I might as well quote it also—the latter part of section 3 provides :

No further sum of money shall be payable to the contractors as principal, but interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum for twenty-five years from the completion of the work, on a sum (to be stated in the contract) for each mile of the section or subsection contracted for shall be payable to the contractors, and guarantees for the payment thereof shall be given from time to time to the contractors in like manner and proportion, and on like conditions, as payments are to be made on the principal sum above mentioned.

Thus, in addition to the $25,620,000, calculated on the present mileage from Callendar to Vancouver, the Government was to guarantee interest for twenty-five years at 4 per cent on sums specified in the Act. In addition, they were to give 20,000 acres per mile, which, on the mileage I have given, would be over 51,200,000 acres of land. It is within the knowledge of every hon. gentleman in this House, and of every person acquainted with Canadian history, that all that the Government gave to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in 1881 by the contract was $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. MARTIN. Surely the hon. gentleman will not say that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How many hundred miles of completed road did they give ?

Mr. DALY. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows that I did not intend to include everything that was given the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. But I say that, so far as the land grant is concerned, while Mr. Mackenzie's Government were willing to give over 52,000,000 of acres of land, all that the Conservative Government gave was 25,000,000 acres.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was the land grant to be given by Mr. Mackenzie not to extend from one end of the line to the other, including the mountain section and the worthless sections north of Lake Superior, and would not such a land grant have been much less valuable than the 25,000,000 of acres to be selected in the fertile belt?

Mr. DALY. No. Now, that was the proposition made by the Government of Mr. Mackenzie so far as the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, and it will show that if we are chargeable with a reckless extravagance in giving lands to the people and to the railways, the Government of Mr. Mackenzie is equally chargeable. But, Sir, we find that there were other people at that time who were desirous of building lines of railways, and who had ideas as to how those lines of railways should be built; and we have a many-sided gentleman in this House in the person of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who put his ideas on record on that subject. The hon. member for Bothwell has told us within these last few days what he knew about hay and timothy; he told us yesterday that he knew about constitutional law; and I have got a document in my hand that will give to the people of this country an idea of what the hon. gentleman knows about building railways. I have in my hand a Bill that was introduced by the Hon. Mr. Mills into this House of Commons in 1878. It was received and read the first time on 27th February, 1878, and the second time on Tuesday, 5th March, of the same year, and I presume it died the same day; because after a discussion on the second reading, the Bill is never referred to again, and it died a natural death. Now, we are charged here with reckless lavishness in our land grants to railways. What does the hon. gentleman for Bothwell propose in his Bill of 1878? It is "An Act to facilitate the Colonization of Dominion Lands by providing for the incorporation of Railway Companies and in aiding the construction of railways traversing such lands." In it we read:

Whereas it is expedient to provide facilities for colonizing and settling the public lands owned by the Dominion; and whereas, the construction of railways will afford the best means for the purpose and it is desirable to facilitate the incorporation of companies with such view, and to afford aid to such works by grants or through sales, as hereinafter provided, of Dominion lands, which may be enhanced in value thereby: therefore, Her Majesty—

And so on. Now, this Bill provides for the formation of railway companies by making and signing articles of association; it provides for capital shares, and so on. In section 6 we find this provision:

Such articles of association shall not be filed and recorded in the department of the Minister of the Interior, until at least 50 per cent of the stock required shall have been subscribed in good faith, and 10 per cent of the amount so subscribed paid to the Receiver General, and there is endorsed thereon, or annexed thereto, an affidavit made by at least three of the directors named in the said articles of association, that the amount of stock required by this section has been subscribed in good faith, and 10 per cent paid, in cash, as aforesaid, and that it is intended, in good faith, to construct, maintain and operate the road mentioned in such articles of association, which affidavit shall be recorded with the articles of association aforesaid.

That will give you an idea of what is contemplated by the provisions of this Bill. Then we find in subsection 8 of section 10, the following:—

Provided that the interests of the public may, until the railway is in operation, be represented on the board of directors of any company formed under this Act by a director who may be appointed by the Governor in Council, and it shall not be necessary for any director so appointed by the Governor in Council to hold stock in the said company.

Then in section 18:

No company shall be incorporated under the provisions of this Act for the construction of any railway having the same general direction as the Canadian Pacific Railway or any branch thereof, at a nearer mean distance than 40 miles.

They were to have colonization railways, but they were not to be nearer the Canadian Pacific Railway than forty miles. Then subsection 2 of section 21 provides:

The directors of the company, by a vote of two-thirds of their whole number, may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, change the route of any uncompleted part of their railway if it shall appear to them that the line can be improved thereby, and in such case they shall make a survey, map or plan, profile, and certificate of such alteration or change.

The railways were not to be built within forty miles of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and from time to time they may wobble their lines of railway in any direction they choose. Then we find another provision in section 22:

If any company formed under this Act shall not, within three years after its articles of association are filed and recorded in the department of the Minister of Interior, actually begin the construction of the railway, and should the proposed railway be under 100 miles in length, shall not finish the road and put it in operation within the five years of the time of filing its articles of association as aforesaid, its corporate existence and powers shall cease.

Three years to begin and five years in which to finish. Then section 23:

Any company formed under this Act for the construction of a railway over 100 miles in length, and less than 200 miles, shall, within three years after its articles of association have been filed and recorded in the department of the Minister of Interior, have actually begun the construction of the railway, and shall within seven years finish the road and put it in operation; and if the line proposed to be constructed is over 200 miles in length, the company shall within three years have actually begun the work of construction, and shall finish such road and put it in operation within ten years.

But what I want specially to call the attention of the House to, is in relation to the land grant that this Bill provides for in section 26:

The Governor in Council may, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of any railway to be constructed under the provisions of this Act, reserve every alternate section of ungranted land by odd numbers, to the extent of 10 sections per mile, five sections per mile on each side of the line of the railway, exclusive of the sections which under the Dominion Lands Act, may have been reserved as school sections, or may have been allotted to the Hudson's Bay Company.

Carrying out exactly all the land grants that have been by this or any other Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway and branch lines, or to any other railways that have received land grants from this Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not quite.

Mr. DALY. Exactly, 6,400 acres to the mile, the same as the grant that has been made by this Government, and further on I will point out to you that 6,400 acres to the mile is provided by this section, which says:

And for any line or part of a line of railway west of the 102nd meridian of west longitude, 12 sections per mile, and for any line of railway connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway and extending into the Peace River district, 20 sections per mile; and whenever 25 consecutive miles of any portion of any railway shall have been completed, equipped and in operation, the Governor in Council may convey to the company the lands so reserved, or a part thereof, along the said railway so far as the same is completed, and for each consecutive ten miles of the remainder of the railway, the Governor in Council may, as the same may be completed, convey the lands so reserved along nine miles thereof to the company.

Now, the provisions I have read commit the hon. member for Bothwell, and commit the hon. member for North Norfolk, who spoke on that occasion, to the same policy that has been pursued by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, by the Government of Sir John Abbott, and by the present Government, in relation to their land grants.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. DALY. In the first place it provides here for 3,200 acres per mile, in the next place for 6,400 acres per mile, and in the next place for 12,800 acres per mile. The greatest land grant we have given is 12,800 acres per mile, to the Hudson's Bay Railway, outside the province.

Mr. DALY.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see that there is in that Bill a restriction. There is the controlling influence of the Government over the lands, as to the price.

Mr. DALY. Subsection 4 of section 26 provides:

The Governor in Council may vary or entirely change the mode of disposal of Dominion lands lying within a certain distance of the railway constructed under this Act, as regards homesteads, pre-emptions, sales and bounty land entries from those contained in the Dominion Lands Act, by reducing the quantity of land which may be granted in free homesteads or by withdrawing the homestead right altogether on such lands, and may fix a price for such lands and order that such lands may be sold exclusively for cash, with or without conditions of actual settlement, as may be deemed expedient.

Showing that under the provisions of the Bill those gentlemen could build a line of railway anywhere so long as they did not come within forty miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and after they had got it partly started, they could wobble it about in every direction. For the building of that railway they were to get, for some sections 6,400 acres, and for others, 12,800. And then the Government were permitted to withdraw all their lands from homesteads, and to possess them again. But the point I wish to make is that by the Bill introduced by the hon. gentleman in 1878 he permitted his Government—I cannot say he permitted his party, because apparently the Bill was so objectionable to the other members of his party that it never became law—but the Government of which he was a member showed that they were willing to make grants of land similar to those that have been made by the Governments of Sir John A. Macdonald and those that have succeeded them down to this time. In view of the fact that most of the members of this House are young members, it is desirable that the House should know the position which the mover of this resolution (Mr. Charlton) took on that occasion. This hon. gentleman who made such broad statements in his speech introducing the resolution, and who charged the Government with reckless extravagance in regard to land grants. That hon. gentleman the other night took exception in the following words to the land grants given to railways:—

I want to refer to-night to a most glaring instance of incapacity and folly on the part of the Canadian Government with reference to the management of its North-west land trust. Since the year 1880 this Government has granted to railway corporations, 44,242,000 acres of land, representing 442,240 farms of 100 acres each, an extent of land representing somewhat more than 70,000 square miles, an extent of land double the area of the cultivated land of this entire Dominion, an extent of land capable of sustaining double the present population of the Dominion. Seventy thousand square miles of the choicest lands of the North-west, I repeat, capable of supporting 10,000,000 inhabitants, were granted by this Government to railway corporations, some of them necessary, and many of them unnecessary.

Could any statement made by an hon. gentleman be couched in more extravagant language than that? The hon. gentleman charged the Government with having made lavish grants of lands to railways. What do we find was the hon. gentleman's position in 1878, when speaking on the Bill introduced by the hon. Minister of the Interior, the present member for Bothwell? Speaking in reply to the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said :

He considered this measure, notwithstanding the unmeasured denunciation it had received at the hands of the hon. member for Northumberland, was a statesmanlike measure and embodied a wise policy. It was essential to the development of the North-west that that country should be furnished with railways. The rivers flowing through that region flow to the north, and this region had no natural highway to mark it as was furnished to the Western States by the Mississippi and the great lakes ; and if railways were essential to the development of the Western States, they were tenfold more essential to the development of the North-west. It was useless to think of opening up and settling this country without furnishing it with railway facilities.

Further, the hon. gentleman said :

He recollected paying a visit to Iowa about twenty years ago. Then it had but a few miles of railway, and but a sparse population, chiefly located along the line of the Mississippi ; yet, by means of a liberal railway policy, by subsidizing several lines crossing the state from east to west, it had suddenly risen into an important state, with a population of nearly, if not quite 1,500,000. Some of the railways had perhaps been subsidized more than was necessary, but capitalists would not embark their money unless they had a prospect of a fair return, and it was folly to haggle with them about an unimportant difference when important interests were at stake. The United States Government held the alternate sections, which were reserved within the limits of railway land grants at double the price of lands outside the limits of railway grants, and more distant from railway communication.

Further, the hon. gentleman said :

The question was how that land should be utilized and for that purpose the Minister of Interior had devised a Bill which, in its conception was admirable, and which in his opinion would if carried out attain the object of populating this vast country. The maximum rate but very slightly exceeded the minimum of the United States railway grants, and they must bear in mind that if railways were essential to the opening up of Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin, they were far more essential to the opening up of the territory on the upper waters of the Saskatchewan or in the Peace River region ; and the Government could never properly utilize that country or get any adequate return for the money it had expended without adopting a policy of this kind. They had committed themselves to the building of a trunk line through that country. Were they going to do that and make no provision for feeders to bring traffic to that line?

Further, the hon. gentleman said :

If it was necessary to construct lines through the Peace River valley, the Mackenzie valley, the valley of the Saskatchewan valley or any other valley, these lines would be built there. If the aid offered by the Government proved a sufficient inducement to capitalists to embark in these various enterprises. Why under this Bill, the Government were providing for the growth of Canada as a nation ; they were providing for peopling that vast region which now lay in a state of nature, and for developing its resources. They had already lost too much time in developing the resources of Canada.

Further, the hon. gentleman said :

In the North-west they had lands which would give sufficient sustenance for fifteen or twenty millions of people. Let them get inhabitants for it as soon as possible. If they could pour fifty thousand a year into it, those settlers would pay into the coffers of this country in the shape of customs duties $250,000 per annum, and the Government would derive a far greater revenue this way than from the sale of these lands. The United States Government had never accounted their public domain a great source of wealth from proceeds of sales ; they deemed it of more importance to get settlers on their land than to gain a paltry sum for the sale of them. He held that the only policy to open up and develop these large tracts of country was a liberal railway policy ; and that while it was proper to exercise due caution, it would not be good policy to postpone the building of lines for the sake of saving a few hundred acres to the mile. They could not induce capitalists to embark in a speculation of that kind unless they offer liberal terms.

Further, the hon. gentleman said :

If they built that main line to the construction of which the country was pledged by the right hon. gentlemen they must adopt a liberal policy for the purpose of developing the country ; they must secure the construction of branch lines and feeders, and then they would have a sufficient amount of business brought to the main line to make it pay a dividend.

These quotations I have made from the hon. gentleman's speech commit him indisputably, beyond any chance of cavil, to the absolute necessity on the part of the then Government, or of any other Government, of making large land grants to railways in the North-west in order to secure their construction, and in accordance with the policy adopted by the Government of the United States to which the hon. gentleman referred in his speech: and yet sixteen years after that speech was delivered by the hon. gentleman, he comes here with a resolution to condemn this Government and the Conservative party for pursuing the very policy which he advocated in such strong language. We find further that the Government of that day were committed to that policy by a speech delivered by the Minister of the Interior. I ask, in view of the speeches made by these hon. gentlemen, how they can condemn this Government for carrying out the very policy which they enunciated at that time. Mr. Mills said:

The Government did not propose to say to the population that they should settle in this or that particular vicinity, or they would be left without railway communication. They knew by the experience of the progressive settlement and development of the adjoining country, especially that section which lay west of the Mississippi River, during the last fifteen or twenty years, how largely railway accommodation contributed to the progress of colonization and settlement.

That is in contradiction to the position taken by the hon. gentleman when he complained that the Canadian Pacific Railway should not be built in advance of settlement; yet here he contends that the proper policy both in the United States and in this country is to build railways in advance of population in a new country. The hon. gentleman, continuing, said:

If railways could be built by the aid of public grants of land or money obtained by the sale of that land, the country could not make a better use of the public lands than thus to open them up for settlement, and to give capitalists the opportunity of investing money there. It was largely by the construction of railways that the lands in the North-west were to be made valuable. Their value depended upon the facilities afforded for the transport of the products of the settlers. By constructing railways through the North-west, reaching to every fertile point where a colony could be established, we would largely contribute to increase the traffic and travel over that railroad, which must, for many years to come, be a single line from Winnipeg, eastward to the shores of Lake Superior.

Now, Sir, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) had heard the declarations that were made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) at that time, he must come to the conclusion that these gentlemen were committed up to the neck in the furtherance of a policy that the then Government, and any future Governments, should give large tracts and liberal grants of land for the building of railways in that prairie country. But, Sir, what are the facts? The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has made a speech on this subject since 1882. I find that on 15th September, 1891, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) spoke as follows ('Hansard' report) in the debate that took place then:—

Mr. DALY.

In 1878 the North-west was without a mile of railway, it was entirely undeveloped, but since that time the Government, by land grants and by giving a bonus of $60,000,000 has built a railway across the continent and the contrast between that country now and its condition in 1878 is very marked. Now there are three times as many railways constructed in that country as are required by the inhabitants.

I particularly call the attention of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) to that statement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) continued:

Instead of confining ourselves to building railways there, as the population develops and in accordance with the actual wants of the settlers, we have run lines through the various parts of the North-west and have created scattered settlements from Winnipeg to Calgary with great stretches of uninhabited land between them. No one can doubt that 200 miles of railway would have given accommodation for all those settlers, but instead of exercising due caution, we have been making those grants lavishly and extravagantly.

I have no doubt that it amuses the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) to listen to that. I have no doubt but that the Reform friends of the hon. gentleman in the west will be very much amused to listen to language of that kind, in view of the fact that the Reform party there have committed themselves, through the Government of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) was a member, not only to the policy that they wanted 6,400 acres per mile, but that in addition to that they must have aid from the Local Government. In addition to the lines of railway that have been built through the aid of the land grants that have been given by this Government, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) knows, that other lines of railway have been constructed by substantial money grants made by the Government of which he was a member. In view of these facts, the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) will be rather amusing to the Reform friends of the hon. member (Mr. Martin) in Manitoba and the North-west. Now, Sir, let us get at the facts. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has made the extravagant statement that 44,000,000 acres of land have been given to aid railways. As a matter of fact, although the Government have committed themselves to give 44,242,298 acres of land, some of the railways to which these land grants were given have not earned them, and there remains 16,718,384 acres unearned. The total area of land grants promised was about 44,242,298 acres, the area to which the companies are entitled is 27,523,914 acres, leaving not yet earned 16,718,384 acres. Now, Sir, in order that the country and the members of this House may have some idea as to the extent of our western territory, I propose to give them some figures. It was estimated that the area fit for agricultural and pastoral purposes at the time the North-west was acquired by the Dominion Government from the Hudson's Bay Company, was approximately 300,000,000 acres of land in the fertile belt. If you deduct from that, for water areas and arid patches 60,000,000 acres, it will leave 240,000,000 acres approximately within the fertile belt.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would be obliged if the hon. gentleman could give me the number of miles of railway built which earned this 27,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. DALY. Four thousand six hundred and thirty-four, and if on that you take off the Emerson and Sault Ste. Marie branches it leaves 4,388 miles.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, before Six o'clock I was giving to the House a statement showing that there was an estimated area in the North-west Territories fit for agricultural and pastoral purposes, amounting to 300,000,000 acres approximately; less 20 per cent deduction for water areas and arid patches, 60,000,000 acres; leaving for homestead, pre-emption, grazing and other purposes, 240,000,000 acres. Now, from that we have to deduct 6,287,360 acres for Hudson's Bay Company's lands, 13,333,333 acres for school lands; 3,000,000 acres for Indian reserves; 15,555,910 for homesteads, pre-emptions, sales, half-breed grants, and Manitoba Act grants; and 38,687,098 for railway subsidies which have been earned; making a total of 76,863,701 acres to be deducted from the 240,000,000 acres; leaving a balance available to-day of 163,136,299 acres. Of this quantity of land the odd-numbered sections comprise 62,639,668, and the even-numbered sections, 100,496,631 acres. So that, according to this statement, after providing for the Hudson Bay Company's one-twentieth of the lands under the terms of the purchase from them, the school lands, the Indian reserves, homesteads, pre-emptions, sales and grants made in the way of railway subsidies which the hon. gentleman mentioned, we have still left a balance of over 163,000,000 acres, of which over 62,000,000 acres are odd-numbered sections, and over 100,000,000 acres even-numbered sections.

Mr. MARTIN. What latitude does that go up to?

Mr. DALY. Up to the northern boundary of Manitoba and North-west Territories.

Mr. McMULLEN. How far do you go west?

Mr. DALY. We go west to the Rocky Mountains, of course. The hon. gentleman knows, or if he does not he ought to know, that these 300,000,000 acres were ascertained at the time of the purchase from the Hudson Bay Company to be the area fit for agricultural and pastoral purposes in the territory known as Rupert's Land, then acquired from the Hudson Bay Company.

Mr. MARTIN. Does that include the land grant to the Hudson Bay Railway outside of the province?

Mr. DALY. No, it does not. I was coming to that in a few minutes. In that area we have over 62,000,000 acres of odd-numbered sections still left to grant to railways if necessity requires it, or to sell to those who choose to purchase, and over 100,000,000 acres to be given to those who desire to homestead. In these 38,000,000 acres odd granted as railway subsidies I have not included 5,440,000 acres of land grant given to the Hudson Bay Company, nor 115,200 acres given to the Lac Seul Railway; so that we have 5,555,000 acres over and above what I have mentioned as being available for homesteading and purchase. This statement is given in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for North Norfolk the other night on this branch of the subject. In addition to what I have already quoted, the hon. gentleman said:

I want to compare the results of this land grant system and the magnitude of the grants, with the policy pursued by the United States which, for years, has been admitted in that country to have been a lamentable one. Since 1850, the United States have granted to railways, 58,461,000 acres of land.

I may say, in passing, that the hon. gentleman's figures are not correct; they are entirely within the mark.

These land grants commenced forty-three years ago, and our policy in that respect began about twenty-three years ago. You will observe that the total amount of land grants in the United States is only 30 per cent greater than our own. Their population is twelve times greater than ours, so that our excess of land grants to railway corporations upon the basis of population, is nine times to one that of the United States; or our excess of land grants over that of the United States on the basis of population and time over which these land grants extend, represents a disparity of sixteen to one. We have given on the basis of extent and time, sixteen times as much land to railways as the United States have. These United States land grants promoted the construction of 21,898 miles of railroad. The exact number of our railway miles that our land grants will promote the construction of I am unable to say, but I do venture to think that the American mileage of railway was at least five times greater than the mileage promoted by our land grants in Canada, and consequently that the American grants have been from four to five times more effective in proportion to the acres granted than our land grants have been.

Now, Sir, this is a most important statement for an hon. member of this House to make, because any one reading that who is not conversant with the facts would come to the conclusion that, in the terms of the resolution which the hon. gentleman has moved, our land grants had been made with reckless lavishness. But, Sir, when we examine into the facts we find that not only has the hon. gentleman not given correct figures to this House, but he has not made that inquiry into the subject which he ought to have made before committing himself to an important statement of that kind. We will take, for instance, by way of comparison, what has been given by the Government of the United States to their railways. In the first place, all the land grants to railways west of the Mississippi, and in Illinois to the east of it, were the odd-numbered sections. According to the way in which we have laid out our lands in the North-west, as you are aware, two sections are reserved for school purposes, and two for the Hudson Bay Company in each township. We have reserved for school purposes two odd-numbered sections, while the reservation for school purposes in the United States are even-numbered sections. So that the land grants for railways given by the United States west of the Mississippi, amounted to 50 per cent of the lands along the lines of railway, while our land grants would not exceed 45 per cent. Now, the width of the area of lands granted to railways in the United States varied. Thus, in the case of the Northern Pacific the limit in states was twenty, thirty and forty miles, and in the territories, forty, fifty and sixty miles on each side of the railway. The area granted was twenty sections per mile in the states and forty sections per mile in the territories. It might be well to state here, what is now known to people outside of his House as well as it is to hon. gentlemen, that our land grant to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is only twenty-four miles on each side of the railway.

Mr. MARTIN. That is scarcely correct, is it? Provided they cannot get sufficient land within that limit, they can go outside.

Mr. DALY. Yes; and the same thing exists in the United States, and the same idea prevailed when the Mackenzie Government gave their first land grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, in the 'Public Domain,' the United States official report for 1883, on page 268, this statement will be found:

It was estimated that if the lands embraced in limits of grants to railways to 30th June, 1880, were all available, and that the corporations, state and national, built their roads and complied with the laws, it would require 215,000,000 acres of public domain to satisfy the requirements of the various laws.

As against 58,000,000 acres stated by the hon. member for North Norfolk the other night; so that these figures in that respect are as misleading as others. It goes on to say:

Mr. DALY

The estimate of the General Land Office, in 1878, was that it would require 187,000,000 acres, which, in all probability will be reduced by actual selections, forfeitures, &c., to 154,000,000 acres. The present estimate is 155,514,994 acres.

Which will be required to fulfil the obligations of the United States Government to the different railways, as against 58,000,000 acres mentioned by the hon. gentleman. Now, in what may be called the eastern states, those east of the Mississippi, not including Wisconsin and that portion of Minnesota east of the Mississippi, there were given for railway grants the following areas:—

Illinois.....	2,595,053·00
Mississippi.....	935,158·70
Alabama.....	2,931,780·59
Florida.....	1,764,412·03
Louisiana.....	1,072,406·47
Michigan.....	3,229,010·84

making a total of 12,527,821·63 acres given to railways by the different states I have mentioned. That statement will be found in the House Executive Documents 1888-90, volume 10, Report of the Secretary of the Interior, Volume 1, 1888, page 248. Now, for Pacific roads proper, being in the states and territories west of Mississippi, Wisconsin, and that portion of Minnesota east of the Mississippi, there were granted 176,950·780·55 acres for 16,400 miles of railway, at the rate of 10,790 acres per mile. Of that amount, 42,000,000 was granted the Northern Pacific for 2,317 miles of road, being equal to 18,559 acres per mile. The Union Pacific, the mileage of which is 1,783·28 miles, was granted 12,800 acres per mile, and for the balance of their system 227 miles, they got 6,400 acres per mile. The Central Pacific, for their system, amounting to 1,157·66, received 12,800 acres per mile. The Southern Pacific, for their system of 934·70 miles, received 12,800 acres per mile.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman will allow me. I hold in my hand the Land Office report of the United States up to the 30th June, 1893. According to this report, on page 190, it appears that the land concessions by Acts of Congress to states and corporations for railway and military wagon-road purposes, were as follows. Then follows the statement, and the summary is 58,463,075·22 acres of land grants, of which there were forfeited by Congress 1,387·60 acres, making a net total grant of 58,461,687·62 acres to the 30th June last in the whole of the United States.

Mr. DALY. My figures are taken from the 'Public Domain,' United States official record, and I will back them against the figures of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CHARLTON. The figures I have given are not mine, but taken from the United States authorities.

Mr. DALY. My figures are not my own, but taken from the public records of the United States, and they show that the present estimate of the total acreage, making all deductions for forfeitures, &c., is 155,000,000. But that does not get over the fact that by the figures I have established, the United States has given, on an average, to all the lines of railway in the states whereas we have never given more than 6,400 acres per mile, except, as I have said. I have mentioned, 12,800 acres per mile, to the Hudson's Bay Railway, outside of Manitoba. And the Union Pacific grant, the Northern Pacific grant and the Central Pacific grant, are all 12,800 acres per mile.

Mr. CHARLTON. The mistake the hon. gentleman has made is in taking the original grants, from which he has not deducted the lands sold and the lands taken at the time the grants were made. Whereas, under our policy, if the lands in the belt are not all of the quality provided, the company need not take them at all from the belt, but can go elsewhere, and the amount I had given is the amount received up to 30th June last for railway purposes.

Mr DALY. The hon. gentleman was not present when I quoted the figures this evening, or he would have known that I said that these were what Congress had granted to satisfy the requirements of the law; but after the deductions were made, the amount was brought down to 155,000,000 acres of land.

Mr CHARLTON. And it was further brought down to 58,000,000.

Mr. DALY. If the hon. gentleman's figures are as reliable as the rest of his statements, the House will know what reliance is to be placed on them. I have given my figures and the hon. gentleman has given his, and we will be able to verify them in course of time. As I have stated, the acreage per mile given to railways in the United States has been greater, in every instance, than that given here. The hon. gentleman's argument the other night was based on the theory that we had gone beyond even the excessive grants made to railways in the United States, whereas, as a matter of fact, we are within the mark in every instance, except, as I have mentioned, with reference to the Hudson's Bay Company. The mileage that was given, under the celebrated Railway Act of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), which I quoted this afternoon, was 12,800 acres per mile, and by Mr. Mackenzie, in his first Canadian Pacific Railway Act of 1874, was 20,000 acres per mile; and if these hon. gentlemen choose to charge us with lavish extravagance in our railway grants, I say that when they make statements of that kind, they are not in accord with the policy the Mackenzie Government pursued when in office.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman remember that there was a Railway Act before the Mackenzie Act, and that it made provisions for land appropriations?

Mr. DALY. Certainly I am, but the hon. gentleman does not appear to be aware of that. He has forgotten that they ever had any legislation in reference to grants to railways, and I am trying to impress upon him that his party adopted the policy of the Macdonald Government of 1872, that they saw that policy and went it two better, and were willing to give 20,000 acres per mile, when we only went to the extent of giving 25,000,000 acres in all.

Mr MILLS (Bothwell). The land appropriations in the Acts of 1872 and 1878 were exactly the same.

Mr. DALY. Taking it for granted that they were, the hon. gentleman only followed in that instance the policy laid down by the late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). As you claim to be following ours now.

Mr. DALY. Well, the hon. gentleman may be a little mixed, but I do not think we are. We followed exactly the line of policy laid down by the hon. gentleman in that celebrated Bill of his which died such a very quick death.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not quite.

Mr. DALY. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said the other night that when the Americans gave this land grant, they gave no privilege of rejecting lands not fit for cultivation and of going outside the belt to get lands of the required standard. I take issue with the hon. gentleman, and I would call the attention of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) to the fact that in the provision of the Canadian Pacific Railway allowing them to go outside their belt to get land fit for settlement, we were but following the same lines laid down by these hon. gentlemen in their Pacific Railway Act of 1874. They provided in that Act, subsection 4 of section 7:

The said lands to be of fair average quality, and not to include any land already granted or occupied under any patent, license of occupation or pre-emption right; and when a sufficient quantity cannot be found in the immediate vicinity of the railway, then the same quantity, or as much as may be required to complete such quantity, shall be appropriated at such other places as may be determined by the Governor in Council.

Now, the provisions in the Canadian Pacific Railway grant provided that the land in the belt should be fairly fit for settlement, and that if it be not, the company could get lands elsewhere, and that provision was also in the Mackenzie Act.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, in that Act the Governor in Council makes the selection.

Mr. DALY. And he will make the selection now under the Canadian Pacific Railway Act. Now, in addition to the enormous land grant made by the United States Government to its railways, we find that bonds were issued to the following roads, and that there was due by the United States Government to those roads the following sums: On the 30th June, 1884, according to the last figures I have been able to get, the Union Pacific road owed the Government $52,192,000. The Union Pacific received from the Central Government at Washington, $50,142,090; the Central Pacific received $46,557,045; the Sioux City and Pacific, $3,159,178; the Central Branch of the Union Pacific, $3,076,480, making a total of $102,934,794 due to the United States, in addition to the 155,000,000 acres of land that had been given up to the 30th of June, 1890. The indebtedness of the Union Pacific was $50,142,090, and you must add all the interest that has accrued since. So that the statement I read from the hon. gentleman's speech is at variance with the fact. He said:

The policy of the United States which I have referred to has been abandoned for over twenty years, and not a public man in the United States conversant with the question will venture to assert at the present moment that the whole policy was not a gigantic mistake, taking as it did from the settlers of the United States lands that would have been sold to them at $1.25 per acre, or given to them afterwards under the Homestead law, and putting these lands in the hands of railway corporations that sold them to settlers at any price from $4 to $20 an acre. Now, Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that it is time that this country should follow the example of the United States in this respect, and put an end to this policy. We have run the course almost as extensively as they did.

Now, Sir, I am showing you what the United States did for their railways, and if the hon. gentleman, or any hon. member on that side can show to the House or the country that we have been as extravagant in our land grants as the United States Government, if we had run the course almost as extensively as they did, there might be some ground to declare by resolution of this House that these land grants were lavish and extravagant. No land grants have been given by this or previous Governments that were not required in the settlement and development of the country. The Mackenzie Government and those who supported it are committed to that policy by the Bill I read and the quotations I made from the hon. gentleman's speech. We are following out the lines laid down by the hon. gentleman and by Sir John Macdonald's Government of 1872. Now, we come to our own railways. There have been granted as earned by railways, according to the returns, 27,923,000 acres. The mileage construction—

Mr. DAVIN. Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him for a moment? He is quite right in his figures. The figures given by the hon. gentleman from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) include grants from states to railroads. I have the figures here and they show that the statement as prepared and given by the hon. Minister is quite right.

Mr. DALY. That is what I asked the hon. gentleman from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

Mr. CHARLTON. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has made rather too hasty an examination of the figures. Some railroad grants were made to states for railway purposes, some were made directly to the corporations, and the returns cover both these classes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The states have no lands; they are not proprietors of the public lands.

Mr. DALY. I said before that the grants in Illinois, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, and Michigan amounted to 12,527,821 acres, while land grants to railways in the Territories represented a total of 155,000,000 acres. Now, coming back to where I was, the mileage construction upon which we have given the land grants is as follows:—

	Miles.
Canadian Pacific Railway Main line, Callendar to Vancouver.....	2,562
Winnipeg to Emerson	64
Winnipeg to Selkirk, west side	23
do to Stonewall.....	20
do to Gretna.....	69

Total mileage	4,388

Now, if we take the mileage I have given and the acreage I have given, we find that the land subsidies granted out of our lands have averaged 6,272 acres per mile.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the hon. gentleman include the portion of the road built by the Dominion Government?

Mr. DALY. Certainly, why should I not include it?

Mr. MARTIN. Why should the hon. gentleman take out the Emerson and Winnipeg line and not the line from Winnipeg to Port William—some four hundred miles.

Mr. DALY. Because that from Winnipeg to Emerson was not a part of the main line and the grant of 25,000,000 of acres was given for the main line from Winnipeg to Vancouver.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But it was not given for those portions that were built by the Government.

Mr. DALY. It was given for the total mileage, and the only way to get the average, is to divide the total mileage into the total acreage. I am simply following out the course pursued by the hon. gentlemen. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) shakes his head. The hon. gentleman looks very wise.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am not so wise as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DALY. I think the House will come to the conclusion that we have just as much wisdom on this side, even if it is not as old as the hon. gentleman's, it is probably not so rusty. I think this basis of calculation is a fair one. The Government gave this subsidy of 25,000,000 of acres of land to the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, just as the subsidies were given to the American lines by the Government there, and the only way to arrive at the average is by dividing one total into the other, as I say. The subsidies granted out of North-west lands in Canada have averaged 6,272 acres per mile; those granted by the United States Government, admitting the mileage given by the hon. gentleman to be correct, have averaged upwards of 9,800 acres per mile. Those west of the Mississippi, which are similar to our North-west railways averaged 10,790 acres per mile, the Northern Pacific, as I have said, having received 18,559 acres per mile and the Union and Central Pacific 12,800 acres per mile. I would ask the hon. seconder of this resolution if he will say to this House or to his constituents or to any portion of the people of Manitoba that there has been a single line of railway bonused by the Government to the extent of 6,400 acres per mile that was not required by the business of that country. The best evidence that these railways were required, and that these land grants were properly made is that the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite in the Government of Manitoba augment these land grants by substantial money subsidies and by guaranteeing the bonds of the railways.

Mr. MARTIN. What railway did we guarantee the bonds of?

Mr. DALY. The Manitoba North-western to the extent of a dollar an acre.

Mr. MARTIN. No.

Mr. DALY. Have your own way of it. They guaranteed the bonds of the Manitoba North-western and the Manitoba South-western to the extent of one dollar an acre. And a further evidence of the fact that these gentlemen did not believe that these railways were built unnecessarily, or that there were too many railways in the country is the fact that when they came into power, in Manitoba the first thing they did was to build a line of railway with some branches, first known as the Red River Valley and now the Northern Pacific and Manitoba from Emerson to Winnipeg, with a branch to Portage la Prairie and a branch to Brandon, and they subsidized this railway to a very considerable amount per mile. I do not intend to enter into the discussion of that question.

Mr. MARTIN. How much was that subsidy per mile? The hon. gentleman says "a considerable amount." I would like the House to be able to judge.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MARTIN. It was $1,750 a mile.

Mr. DALY. I do not think the hon. gentleman is anxious to discuss the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway question in this House. The only regret I have is that when the hon. member for Bothwell was preparing the Act I quoted, the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) was not the statesman he is now. He was then in embryo, because the hon. gentleman could have given him a pointer, and he might have put in a clause providing for $500 a mile., &c., &c. Well, the hon. gentleman's ability for building lines of railway is fully appreciated by the people of Manitoba. But the point I was going to make is that in addition to the lines of railway that have been subsidized by this Government, the Local Government have built lines of railway by giving money subsidies. When the hon. gentleman laid down, as he did in his speech that I quoted, made in 1891, that 200 miles of railway would be sufficient for the requirements of the people of Manitoba and the North-west, he said something in which he will not find a single member of his party to agree, not even the seconder of this resolution, in the whole of Manitoba or the North-west Territories. On the contrary, instead of the people being satisfied that we have given them enough aid towards building railways, they are crying for more. Now, what acreage have we given, and to what railways have we given this acreage? I will read the schedule:

Of that total of 44,242,298 acres of land, we find that the areas which the companies are entitled to is only 27,523,914 acres, showing areas not yet earned, of 16,718,384 acres. Possibly a great deal of that 16,718,384 acres will never be given, because some of these lines of railway that are mentioned in the schedule I have read have ceased to exist, others again have allowed the land grants to lapse. But for the 27,523,914 acres, the people of Canada have to show a mileage of 4,634 miles of railway, as against the mileage in the United States, given by the hon. gentleman opposite, of 21,819 miles, for a little over 155 million acres of land. Now, Mr. Speaker, the remarks I made this afternoon have possibly been extended somewhat unduly, but the subject is a large one, and requires to be dealt with fully. When we are dealing with 300,000,000 acres of land, an empire in itself, and dealing with the administration of lands in that vast extent of country during a period extending from the time we acquired them in 1871 down to the present time, a period of nearly thirty years, one must, of necessity, speak at considerable length, and adduce many facts in order to give to the House and to the country a knowledge of the course that has been pursued by the different Governments that have been administering those lands since they were acquired by Canada. I say, Sir, in opposition to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman during his speech the other night, in opposition to what is laid down in the resolution that he asks this House to adopt, in opposition to the platform that has been laid down by the Reform party in the province of Ontario and elsewhere, but not in the province of Manitoba—I say, as against the statement of the hon. gentleman and as against the platform his party have laid down in reference to the administration of our lands by the Conservative Government, I put the facts and figures I have adduced to this House to-day, and no hon. gentleman who desires to give to those facts and to those figures a proper consideration, can fail to come to the conclusion that so far as that great trust is concerned, it has been well managed by the different Conservative Governments, supported by the Conservative party, from the time those lands were acquired by Canada down to this day. I say more, that not only have the different Conservative Governments well and properly managed those lands, but I say, Sir, and I say it without fear of contradiction, that the management of those lands by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald from 1872 to 1874, and again from 1878 up to the time of that hon. gentleman's death, and the management of those lands under Sir John Abbott, and under the present leader of the Government, stands out in bold relief as against the management of those lands during the time the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, from 1874 to 1878. The hon. member for North Norfolk would lead the people to believe, by his resolution, that those lands have been improperly managed by the different Conservative Governments. He would not only lead us to believe that they have been improperly managed, but that they have been corruptly managed, in the interest of the speculator, and not of the settler. Sir, I think the facts I have given to the House this afternoon, and the quotations I have made from the Orders in Council, and from the Acts passed by the Mackenzie Government, show clearly that these men had no comprehension and no idea of the management of so vast a domain and so great a trust as was put into their hands by the people of this country. Actions speak louder than words, and I am willing to contrast, in this House or out of it, the conduct of this Government or of the former Conservative Governments, with the conduct of the Mackenzie Government, in their management of the Dominion lands. I believe in my heart, and the majority of the people of the North-west believe, that the Reform party have no use for that country, they have never had any use, apparently, for that country; they have never extended that amount of liberality in sentiment and in action towards our people up there, that has been extended by the different Conservative Governments. There was a time, and it was the only time in history since we acquired that country, when it was absolutely necessary for whichever Government was in power, to follow a broad and liberal policy towards that country, and that was from 1874 to 1878. It is in the memory of hon. members older than myself, that the tide of emigration from Great Britain and continental countries, was turned principally towards America during the years from 1874 to 1878, or more properly from 1873 to 1878. At that time thousands of people were pouring into the western states, because those states were being opened up and developed by the Union Pacific, the Northern Pacific and other railway lines, which were necessary for the development of that country. While our American friends, whom the hon. member for North Norfolk admires so much, were going ahead and building railways and giving land grants, hon. gentlemen opposite, who were then in power, were building water stretches from Port Arthur to Winnipeg.

Mr. CHARLTON. Did not the Almighty build the water stretches?

Mr. DALY. I was going on to say that under the policy of the Government of that day they were endeavouring to utilize the water stretches lying between Port Arthur and Winnipeg by building lines of railway to connect them, and they were endeavouring to settle that country by bringing people over that route. It is beyond question that it should have been their policy to have built the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Arthur to Winnipeg as quickly as possible, so as to give an outlet to that country, and also that settlers flowing into America from the old countries of Europe might have had an opportunity of going in and settling in Manitoba and the North-west in preference to the western states. If that policy had been adopted and followed out, we would have had to-day thousands of people who have gone to Dakota, Iowa and Minnesota, settled in Manitoba and the North-west, and we would have obtained at that time those settlers who are now coming to us to-day from those states. I am perfectly satisfied that if hon. gentlemen had properly administered the affairs of the country at that time, instead of our present population in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, we would have had the benefit of a larger population. Who has proved the greatest immigration agent? What means adopted on the other side of the line have proved the most attractive agency in inducing immigrants to settle in the United States? It has been the settler who has taken up land there and written home, and in that way started a stream of immigration to that particular state. If hon. gentlemen opposite had built the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, as it was their bounden duty to have done, we would have had thousands of settlers in Manitoba and the North-west who would have written home to their friends, and a stream of population would have flowed in there as it has done to the western states. But they did not build the railway. They wanted to utilize the water stretches and build little lines of railway, and when they had wasted those four or five valuable years the stream of immigration had set in towards the western states and could not be diverted to this country, especially as the immigrants would have had to travel either by the Dawson route or through the United States, by a long railway journey through St. Paul and afterwards transportation by steamer and cart. There is no doubt that we lost from 1874 to 1878 the brightest and best opportunities the people of Canada ever had to start a proper and efficient immigration to this country. If the country has not filled up since, I unhesitatingly attribute it to the inaction of the Mackenzie Government at that time in not building the railway to which I have referred. I have discussed this question on the public platform in the west, and the best indication that the people of the prairies are not in accord with the Reform party is that from the time we have had representation in this House there has not been more than one Reform representative here from Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. MARTIN. What about 1882? In 1882 the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) now sitting in this House, the hon. gentleman's predecessor for Selkirk, and Mr. Watson, were three members, out of the five members sent by Manitoba, supporting the Liberal party.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). I never ran as a Liberal in my life.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You attended a Liberal caucus after you came here.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). I never did.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I attended the caucuses and I saw you there.

Mr. DALY. It is immaterial whether the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) ran as a Liberal or not, but it is material that the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) has denied that he was a Liberal, and it is on record.

Mr. MARTIN. No.

Mr. DALY. I can prove it, and the hon. gentleman wanted to bring an action for libel against the Winnipeg 'Free Press' for calling him a Liberal. Just so soon as a message can be flashed to Winnipeg and I can obtain a reply by mail I can produce his own handwriting that he denied he was a Liberal.

Mr. MARTIN. I denied I was the Liberal candidate, which I was not at that time.

Mr. DALY. At no time in the history of Manitoba have we had more than one Liberal on the floor of this House. The hon. gentleman's answer was that the hon. member for Lisgar was a Liberal, and that my predecessor, Mr. Sutherland, was a Liberal. If they were elected as such, they were like hundreds and thousands of others who became tired of the Reform party and went over and supported the Government of Sir John Macdonald. But whether the Liberals have been represented by two or three Liberals, it is an undoubted fact that the Conservative party has had a majority all along in Manitoba and have presented a united front in the North-west Territories. More than that, I am bound to say that just so soon as the people of Manitoba have another opportunity to exercise their franchise, they will do as they have done before, notwithstanding anything which hon. gentlemen opposite may say. I have endeavoured to show in a speech, that has been probably too lengthy, that instead of this House adopting the resolution of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), instead of coming to the conclusions set forth in that resolution, the facts, and indisputable evidence I have adduced, conclusively prove that, instead of condemning this Government for failing efficiently to administer the great public trust in the North-west, it would be well, if such a thing were parliamentary, that we should place on record our condemnation of the conduct of affairs in this country from 1874 to 1878; but it is not necessary to do so, because the people have denounced it by their verdict at the polls, and the people will do so again.

Mr. MARTIN. I certainly do not intend to take up anything like the time of the House which has been occupied by the Minister of the Interior, on the resolution which is now before it. I have a few remarks to make, applicable to the question under consideration, but these remarks shall be brief indeed compared with the very lengthy and extended dissertation we have listened to to-night. The hon. Minister has devoted the major part of his speech to a consideration of the policy of the Mackenzie Government with respect to Manitoba and the North-west. The hon. gentleman pointed out particularly that at one time a large portion of Manitoba and the Territories had been reserved from non-settlement by the Mackenzie Government, and he also pointed out that within a short time that reserve had been annulled on account of the opposition it had excited in that country. Now, as I say, I do not intend at all to discuss questions connected with the administration of Mr. Mackenzie in that country, for several reasons. The first and principal reason being: that I know nothing at all about it.

Mr. DALY. And you would not second the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, I would. I find nothing in the resolution with regard to the Administration of Mr. Mackenzie in Manitoba and the North-west. As I understand it, the resolution refers to the administration of the present, and of previous, Conservative Governments, and while I know nothing as to the administration of Mr. Mackenzie in that country, I do know a great deal as to the administration of the present Government, and its predecessors. Therefore, I shall confine my remarks to the question before the House, which is not the administration of Mr. Mackenzie, but the administration of this Government in the North-west, and as I say, the administration of Mr. Mackenzie occurred before I went to that country, so I know nothing about it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Daly) has referred to the reservation that was made by the Mackenzie Government which was so soon abrogated on account of the intense feeling it had excited in Manitoba. That being so, from the hon. gentleman's own statement of it, and not discussing whether it is correct or not, it seems very strange, indeed, that, having that experience to guide them, the present Government should have made the same mistake and incurred an equal, if not a greater degree of hostility from the people of that country. I can say that for years after I went to Manitoba, and during the years immediately preceding it, that country was in a state of strong excitement with regard to the land regulations adopted by the Government of the day. After the experience that the hon. gentleman points to, what did the Government of the day do with regard to the reservation of the land? Let us look further and see what was the purpose and what advantage was likely to result to the country from the reservation of which I speak. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed, the Government reserved two miles of the belt from all settlers; absolutely withdrew it from sale or settlement. There was a belt of two miles on each side of the railway, so that there were four miles in which no homesteads could be taken all along the line of railway.

An hon. MEMBER. You are all wrong.

Mr. MARTIN. I may have made a mistake as to that, it may have been two miles. It was either two miles on each side, or one mile on each side. We call it the two-mile belt. The result was that after the construction of the railway, you might go from one end of Manitoba to the other in the portion in which the Government had lands, west of Portage la Prairie, and you would not find a settler; you were not able to see a settler scarcely, because they were not able to get the land.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. It was from the boundary of Manitoba west. It did not obtain in Manitoba at all.

Mr. MARTIN. I am quite sure it did. The railway belt obtained in the Brandon district.

Mr. DALY. Not at all. You can see the Brandon district settled to-day as it was in 1882, all the way through.

Mr. MARTIN. I do not think so. I am quite sure of it. I will investigate that. I am quite certain the same rule applied in Manitoba, and, in fact, I am sure of it. Now, Mr. Speaker, what was the object of that reservation? Was that for the purpose of reserving this land in order that the country might make more money out of it, or anything of that kind? No; it was purely for speculative purposes, not to the country, but to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That policy caused a great deal of harm to that country at the time. The hon. gentleman complained that there was likely to be a stream of settlement into that country from 1874 to 1878, and that it was cut off by the failure of the Mackenzie Government to construct proper means of ingress into that country. His statement as to that stream of immigration is entirely suppositious, and entirely in his imagination. It may or may not be correct, but as to the period of which I am now speaking, the years 1881 and 1882 especially, when there were large numbers of Ontario farmers coming up there to spy out the land with the intention of settling in the country—and I may say a considerable number did settle in the country—not only did the Government reserve the land in the manner that I have pointed out, but they did everything in their power to harass and embarrass those intending settlers in obtaining homesteads for themselves. I know to my own personal knowledge that there were large numbers of the very best farmers in Ontario who came up to Manitoba at that time desirous and anxious of making a settlement in the country if they could get suitable locations, homesteads close to their friends; and dozens and scores and hundreds of them were driven from the country because they could get no satisfaction whatever from the land office. In every possible way, these settlers were harrassed; in every way possible the department was administered in order to drive these settlers from us, and the result was that instead of settling in Manitoba they went to Dakota and other states.

Mr. MACDONALD (Assiniboia). And they are coming back now.

Mr. MARTIN. I may say that I was in the constituency of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) just before the meeting of the House, and at three or four meetings that I held there, composed, probably half of Liberals and half of Conservatives, I asked the people in the audience if they could inform me, if there was a single man in the meeting who could tell me that he knew of any considerable number of persons who had returned from the United States into that country, and I was unable at any of these meetings to get the names of those persons who had returned. This statement made now by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Macdonald) and also by the Minister of the Interior, that there are large numbers of persons who had left Manitoba and the Territories who are now returning to it from the United States, is, so far as I am aware, without foundation in fact. I may say that along the years 1884, 1885 and 1886, a considerable number of settlers left Manitoba—I speak more particularly with regard to Manitoba, because I know more about it—and went to the United States; and a very small percentage of those persons have returned, because they happened to locate in a portion of the state of Dakota which was unfortunate in the matter of rain. But the number of those who have come back to us is so very small as not to be worth mentioning in this House. There has been no large return of settlers. I am satisfied that so far as Manitoba is concerned for every twenty that went out in those years, when Manitoba was suffering very severely from the effects of the boom, not one has returned. I have noticed, from time to time, a very great deal made in Government newspapers of some unfortunate person who has returned to some portion of Canada—in some cases to Manitoba—and has made this extraordinary statement: that he had gone to the United States to settle because he had learned from the Liberal newspapers—it is generally the 'Globe' that is mentioned—that Dakota was a much better country to settle in than Manitoba and had returned to Canada because he had found that Dakota was not the place which it had been represented to be. Now, I venture to say that every one of the persons who have been got to make such statements were Tories of the worst kind, who probably never saw the 'Globe' newspaper in their lives. What they did see were assertions in the Conservative papers that the Liberal papers had made those statements—that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and other hon. members of this House had advised settlers to go to the United States rather than to Manitoba. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is well-known that there has been a very large emigration from the province of Ontario to the western states—a much larger emigration, I am sorry to say, than there has been from that province to the province of Manitoba and the Territories. But I will venture this assertion, that of those who have gone from Ontario to the United States in preference to Manitoba, for every Liberal that has gone there have been five Conservatives. I will take, for instance, the county of Carleton, which adjoins this city, in which it is impossible almost to find a Liberal—where in four elections out of five the Liberals do not attempt to put up a candidate. There has been a very large emigration from that county, and I venture to say that of those who have left it and gone westward as emigrants, not one out of twenty has gone to the province of Manitoba and the Territories, compared with those who have gone to the western states.

Mr. BOYD. Have you got any figures to prove any of those statements?

Mr. MARTIN. I say it of my own knowledge. I have a very good knowledge of the people who have gone from that county. It is not necessary to produce figures here to show the enormous number of Canadians who have gone to the United States. If the hon. gentleman is not convinced of that fact no figures would convince him. Why, I remember the late Consul Taylor making a speech in one of the North Dakota towns, I think it was Grand Forks, before a very large audience on some public holiday—I think it was the 4th of July; and he asked the people what their nationality was. First, he asked how many were from Germany, then how many were from Ireland, then how many were from England, mentioning the different foreign countries, and he got responses by a show of hands to his different questions. But when he came to ask how many were from Canada, a very large majority of the whole meeting held up their hands. Now, this emigration has occurred very largely indeed, not during the period from 1874 to 1878, but during the period since the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The great exodus from Canada to the United States has occurred during the decade preceding the last census—from 1881 to 1891. Of course, a very considerable portion of that exodus took place from the province of Quebec: a very considerable portion took place from the Maritime Provinces; but there was at the same time a very large emigration from the province of

Mr. MARTIN.

Ontario. So that, if the hon. gentleman's argument was of any value, that had there been railway communication between eastern Canada and Manitoba during the period from 1874 to 1878 there would have been a very large immigration into the North-west, because the settlers would have written home to their friends and urged them to come, it ought to have applied to the period after the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Winnipeg to Port Arthur. But we find that it is not so. We find that since that time immigration has been most unsatisfactory. The only time when there was a satisfactory immigration into Manitoba and the Territories was prior to the time of the completion of that line. In 1881 and 1882 there was every appearance of a very large immigration, and there was as a matter of fact a very large immigration to the province of Manitoba; but it came not over a railway through Canadian territory, but over railways passing through the United States. Now, a great deal has been said by the hon. Minister in ridicule of a Bill which was introduced into this Parliament by the present hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), respecting aid to railways in that country; and as that criticism is most pertinent to the question we have before us for discussion, namely: the manner in which the Government have disposed of the public lands and have applied public lands to the construction of railways, I propose to say a few words with regard to it. While the hon. Minister has ridiculed the provisions of that Bill, and attempted to discredit the hon. member for Bothwell for having introduced it into this House, I have no hesitation in saying that if that measure had been carried out, if the land devoted to railway construction in the North-west had been applied in the manner laid down in that measure, it would have been a great deal better, not only for the Dominion, but for the province which it has been attempted to benefit by these land grants. I do say that the public lands of this Dominion have been recklessly squandered, so far as they have been attempted to be applied to the construction of railways. I do not consider that there is any dispute upon this point, that it was a proper policy for the Dominion to aid railways by means of public lands. That was the policy of the Sir John Macdonald Government prior to 1874, and of the Mackenzie Government from 1874 to 1878. That has been the policy of the Government now in office, from 1878 to the present time, and there is no dispute as to that being the proper policy. The only point in dispute is the manner in which that policy has been carried out. Now, the charge that I have to make with regard to the application of lands to the purposes of constructing railways is this: I say that large land grants have been given, and have resulted, not in the construction of railways, but in simply putting so much money into the pockets of the favourites of the Government to whom the grants were given. Under the provisions of the Act of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that would have been absolutely impossible. Every dollar that the land produced, under the restrictions of that Bill would have gone to build the railway up to the sum of $10,000 per mile; and if the lands brought more than $10,000 per mile, the surplus would have gone to the Government. Every one could take advantage of that. That was no question of wire-pulling or coming down here in order to obtain a charter for a certain favoured few. There was no question of getting Orders in Council passed from time to time, and renewed from time to time, allocating a certain land grant to a certain purpose. No; it was open to every company to file their articles of incorporation, make their survey, have it approved, build the railway, and get their land grant. And there could be no question of contract brokers or intermediaries taking an undue share of the profits. There was no question of profits. Under the provisions of that Bill, there could be no question as to the land being properly applied to the object for which it was given, the construction of the railway. What has been the history of the railways to which land grants have been made in that province? Take, in the first place, apart from the Canadian Pacific Railway, to which I will refer later, the company to which the most valuable land grant was given, was given in that province—the Manitoba South-western Colonization Company. That was a company which had a land grant of 6,400 acres per mile for a road running in a south-westerly direction from Winnipeg—a land grant which has turned out to be most valuable. The Canadian Pacific Railway became possessed of that charter and built a railway under its provisions, and became entitled to have the grant patented to them, or rather have the land allocated, and have patented to them a large amount of public lands. Now, I am satisfied that the Canadian Pacific Railway, so far as they have disposed of that land grant—and they have sold a great deal of it indeed—have received an average of $5 an acre. In many instances, they have sold the land as high as $7 and $8 an acre, but I am satisfied that the average exceeds $5 an acre. That means that that company, for the construction of the line which, with the exception of one short portion of it, was an extremely easy one to build, have received from the Government, $32,000 per mile as a bonus, through these lands for the construction of that railway. Under the provisions of the Bill of the hon. member for Bothwell, which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly) laughs at and derides, the Government would have received out of that $32,000 per mile, $22,000 for the public chest, and the railway company would have got $10,000 per mile, which, I may say, would have constructed the line, as it has been constructed, with the exception, perhaps, of ten or fifteen miles in the Pembina Valley, where it crosses the Pembina. That is one of the results that would have flowed from the Bill of the hon. member for Bothwell. Then, take the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company. In that case, there was a grant of 6,400 acres per mile; and I have no hesitation in saying that a very large proportion of the profit of that land grant never went to the railway company at all, and the present railway company got no advantage from it whatever. It was appropriated by those fortunate friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, as a reward, I presume for political services rendered by them to the Government when they came to sell the charter. It is a matter of theory that these railway charters are given for the purpose of building railways. There never was a greater mistake. No, Mr. Speaker, not one of these incorporators has the remotest notion of building a railway. They come here to get a charter, not for the purpose of constructing a railway, but in order that they may afterward secure from the Government a land grant. And that land grant is secured for what purpose? For the purpose of constructing a railway? No, Sir. But in order that they may sell the charter and the land grant to those persons who desire to build the road. What advantage is that to the Government? What advantage is it to the Government or the country that there shall be intermediary parties who shall take a large portion of the profits of these land grants, and put it into their own pockets and take that much out of the coffers of the railway company. Because, if the charter owners absorb one-half of the value of the land, then the company, instead of being benefited to the full extent of the land grant, only receive one-half of it. That is precisely what occurred in connection with the Manitoba and North-western railway, which was the recipient of a very large amount of land, something like 1,500,000 acres, to aid the construction of their 200 odd miles of railway. What resulted? The result, partially attributable to the fact that the large portion of their land grant went into the pockets of the promoters instead of into the exchequer of the company, was that the Manitoba and North-western railway company is to-day in the hands of a receiver, unable to pay the interest on the very large amount of money that the company was obliged to raise to construct the road, the land grant having been largely absorbed by those fortunate individuals who were the original owners of the charter. Then again, take another railway company which has been before this House, until, I am sure, the House is sick of it, and all of whose troubles, are, or nearly all of whose troubles are directly or indirectly attributable to this reckless and extravagant policy, this fallacious policy of the Government in connection with their land grants to railways. As opposed to the proposition of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), under whose Bill none of these things could possibly have occurred, I refer to the Great North-west Central Railway Company. That was another company endowed by this Dominion with a most valuable land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, much of it situated in a very fertile portion of Manitoba and the North-west. The railway, instead of being aided by that land grant, has been retarded. I am in a position to say that a very considerable portion of the road would have been constructed and in operation four or five years ago had it not been for the unfortunate course of hon. gentlemen opposite in placing the charter with its land grant attached, not in the hands of capitalists who desired to build the road, but in the hands of favourites, political favourites of theirs, who were there for the money that was in it without regard to the construction of the road, without regard to the needs of the settlers in that country. These charter-brokers refused to part with the land grant and the franchises unless they received a price which the persons to whom I refer who were prepared to build the road, thought too high. The parties have built 50 miles, but they have ceased operating, and are not going on with it. There the road lies, of no possible use to the country, the land grant tied up, a large amount of capital from England that had got into the road tied up, and of no use to the settlers concerned, of no use to them because the 50 miles which were built are no longer operated. Another road in the same position is the Lake Dauphin line, which has a land grant, and which is at the present moment, unless newspaper reports are to be believed and a sale has been made, in the hands of political favourites of hon. gentlemen opposite who have received that land charter and land grant, not for the purpose of building the road—with no such idea in their minds—but with the idea that they would be able to sell the charter and the land grant to some capitalists who would construct the railway. This Lake Dauphin country is a most fertile country. The settlement that has been made here is some 80 miles from a railway—the Manitoba North-western Railway—but, in spite of that fact, a large settlement has gone into the district, and I believe that this year will see a very considerable augmentation of that settlement. It is most important for the development of the district that this railway should be constructed. As with the Great West Central line, so with the Lake Dauphin line, it would have been fully constructed and in operation three or four years ago had it not been for the unfortunate fact that the charter was in the hands of speculators who demanded a large sum of money from those who proposed to build the road, a sum which those proposing to build it did not think they could afford to pay for the privilege of getting possession of the charter and the land grant. Before the hon. gentleman ridiculed the proposition of the hon. member for Bothwell, under which such a state of affairs could not possibly exist, he must put forward some justification of the policy his Government has adopted of handing over these valuable public franchises to a few friends and favourites of their own, who are very useful to them, no doubt, at election times, but who have no other claim for such favours as these from the country. What would be done in these instances if the Bill of the hon. member for Bothwell were in force to-day or had been at the time when responsible capitalists were, to my personal knowledge, ready to build this line? Those capitalists would not be obliged to negotiate with the Lake Manitoba and Canal Company, which was the name of a company controlling the charter of the Lake Dauphin Railway. All they would have to do would be to survey the line, file the plan, file their articles of incorporation, show that they had paid up 10 per cent upon their capital stock and had subscribed a certain amount, construct the railway, and then demand their land grant, which the Government would then have no power to withhold from them. I know that it may be said that, so far as these land grants are concerned, the Government have adopted such stringent regulations and conditions as to entirely protect the public. Why, Mr. Speaker, the regulations and conditions that have been adopted have no effect whatever in protecting the public. For instance, before the company are entitled to their land grant, it is necessary for them to file in the department a survey of the line. Before they can get their land grant located to them it is necessary for them to satisfy the Government that they are in a financial position to construct the road. What does that mean? It simply means that that land grant is tied up, not until these people make their survey and show their financial ability to construct the line—if that were the condition it would never be done—but until they are able to meet with capitalists who are able to give them for their personal use a sufficient sum of money to induce them to part with their charter. Then these capitalists have to go on and earn their grant by making the survey and showing their financial ability to construct the road. What then have the owners of this charter done that they are entitled to receive a large sum of money? as they did in the case of the Manitoba North-western Railway Company, and the they did in the case of the Great North-west Central Railway Company, and as they either have done or undoubtedly will do in the case of the Lake Manitoba and Canal Company, the owners of the charter cov-er'ing the Lake Dauphin district? On what ground of public policy can the hon. gentleman defend the course of the Government in handing over these public lands, voted in a proper spirit and upon the sound policy of promoting the construction of railways, not with a view for the construction of the railways, but in order that these incorporators shall be able to put a large sum of money into their own pockets, taking it ultimately out of the coffers of the company which construct the road? Again, take the case of the Manitoba South-eastern Railway. I may say that is the line as to which it is urged at the present time that the local Government should give a very considerable grant. That matter has been discussed in Manitoba, and it is not material to go into it here. But there again is found the same difficulty that I have referred to in connection with these other companies. The Manitoba South-eastern Railway Company has been in existence, I think, for five or six years, and has had its land grant and its franchise. All that was lacking was to file a survey and show its financial ability to construct the line. These charter-mongers, who are in possession of the charter, have been trying all these years—to build a railway? No; but to find some one who was able and willing to build the railway, and at the same time to give them some thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars for this charter, which they had obtained for nothing, and for which they had done nothing. I know something of the constitution and history of this particular company, and the only thing they have done is to appoint a solicitor; that solicitor was a year in office, and the only thing he did was to draw up a by-law providing that the annual salary of the solicitor should be $3,000. I say that solicitor drew from the coffers of this company, from the small amount of capital they had representing the small amount paid in by the chief shareholders, $3,000 for his year's work, consisting in drawing up the by-law by which he was entitled to receive the money. That is a sample of the kind of work that these incorporators do, for which they expect and actually get from the coffers of the country a very large sum of money. Now, this Manitoba and South-eastern Railway is proposed to be built by men who have capital. They have been obliged to go to the owners of this charter and say to them: we want to buy the option of purchasing your line for a certain time: If, within that certain time, they can make their financial arrangements, then they hand over to these original corporators a considerable sum of money. I do not wish to state how much; I do not wish to take advantage of the information I have to say how much, but I say that a very large sum is diverted in this particular instance, as it was in the cases of the other railways to which I have referred, from the coffers of the company into the pockets of those persons who have given no value for it, who have done nothing whatever for it, whatever they have done to secure the favour of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, I have this to say with regard to these grants or bonuses in the shape of lands or money to railway companies: that I believe history has shown, certainly it has in our province, that these grants, instead of facilitating the building of a railway, have in every instance retarded it. That follows from the nature of the transaction. A grant is given to persons who have no financial ability to build a road, who never intended to build it. When men come along and desire to build a road, instead of having the right freely to incorporate themselves, as the hon. member for Bothwell would have allowed them to do, and without let or hindrance to go on and build their railway and get their land, they have first of all to negotiate and buy out these fortunate individuals. I know that in this very case to which I have referred, that of the Manitoba and South-eastern, while I was yet in the Government, it must have been fully four years ago, the Duluth and Winnipeg Railway Company, whose road was then in course of construction from Duluth towards Winnipeg, came to Manitoba and endeavoured to get control of this Manitoba and South-eastern Railway charter, with a view of building through Manitoba about 100 miles, and getting the benefit of the land grant, and the price that was asked by these gentlemen was so extortionate, in their opinion, that they allowed it to drop, and did not go on with it. It is not necessary for me to say that the crisis coming on, and times getting harder in the United States, the time has passed by when these people were in a condition to build the road. I believe that at that time, in all probability, if this land grant had been open to them, as it would have been under the provisions of my hon. friend's Bill, they would have held the road, and built, perhaps, 50, or 60 or 100 miles in Manitoba. I may say that that road has since been acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway—I am speaking of the Duluth and Winnipeg.

Mr. DALY. The Duluth and Winnipeg has no land grant.

Mr. MARTIN. But the Manitoba and South-eastern had a land grant, and the Duluth and Winnipeg Company were desirous of getting it and building the railway. That is the object of the land grant—to build the railway. If they could have got the land grant, they were willing to build the road, but because these individuals were between the land grant and the road which was intended to be benefited by it, and because they asked such a sum as these capitalists thought was beyond their means to pay, the matter was allowed to drop. Another case which the hon. gentleman has used unfairly, and not in the interest of the public at large, is the case of the land grant that was appropriated for the building of a line down into the Souris coal fields. The Canadian Pacific Railway had extended its line to Deloraine, and they had a land grant for a line of railway from Deloraine extending into the Souris coal fields, some 150 or 200 miles from Deloraine. The North-western Railway, to which the Minister of the Interior has referred, in 1888 and 1889 built some 300 miles of railway in Manitoba. At that time the Northern Pacific Railway were willing to extend their line from its terminus at Brandon, or from some point on the Brandon and Morris branch, down into the Souris coal fields, provided the Government would take away from the Canadian Pacific Railway that land grant and hand it over to them, in order that they might construct the railway. That was a very reasonable thing to do. The land grant was appropriated, not for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway, nor for the benefit of any particular individual or any particular company. The policy of the Government is to appropriate certain portions of land for the construction of railway lines. Here was a company financially able, and ready and willing to construct that line into the Souris coal fields district, the result of which would be to give to the people of Manitoba coal at a largely reduced rate, and the Government here, on being applied to, refused absolutely to transfer the land grant from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and give it to the Northern Pacific, or in other words, to say to the Canadian Pacific Railway: if you do not go on at once and construct that line, we will take the grant from you and give it to this other company. There, again, on account of the political support that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were at that time extending to the Government, they refused to take the course which, under the circumstances, they should have taken, and again, they tied up the scheme and prevented the Northern Pacific from building into that country. There was a case where the existence of a land grant had absolutely prohibited the building of a railway, for if the land grant had not been given, the Northern Pacific Company were prepared to build a line to the coal fields simply on the grant of the Local Government of $1,750 per mile; but they could not afford to take the risk of building into the country when another company had a grant of 6,400 acres per mile, because the moment the Northern Pacific commenced to build a line to the Souris coal fields, the Canadian Pacific would commence to build there also. As the country was not able to support two railways, the Northern Pacific declared they could not afford to build there in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The result was as I have said, that the existence of the land grant in that particular instance had the effect of preventing the building of that line until years after, when it was constructed by an arrangement made between the Local Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DALY. How many years afterwards?

Mr. MARTIN. Several years afterwards. That line was not completed until 1892, and those negotiations took place in 1888, so the line was not built until four years afterwards. There is one matter that is connected with this resolution, although not directly in the line of it, to which I should like to refer. Hon. gentlemen opposite, for the reasons I have given, have been guilty of the faults set out in this resolution in regard to the manner in which they administered the lands generally, in the erratic way in which they have treated settlers who desired to come into the country, and in the way in which they have allowed their friends to appropriate to themselves the land grants which were supposed to be for the benefit of companies building railways. There is another matter in which their administration of the land has been very unsatisfactory, and for which they are culpable: I refer to the school lands in the province. Reference has been made in this debate by the Minister of the Interior to the fact that in Manitoba, two sections, sections 11 and 29, in each township, are set aside for a school fund. The Government have taken the course that instead of handing over these lands to the Local Government, which controls the education of the province, and which is obliged to furnish money for the support of education, either directly by grants from the province, or by imposing local taxation on the people, and they have adopted both modes, the Government have given liberal grants and obtained money from the municipalities—instead of handing over, as any one would expect they would do, these two sections to the province, constituted as it is as a fully developed province, capable of managing such matters, the Government have undertaken to manage these lands themselves, because they consider they can do it better in the public interest. Have they, or have they not acquitted themselves well of this trust? The manner in which they have administered these lands is to allow persons to squat on them. Almost every school section in the province of any particular value has been squatted upon. Of course, circulars have been issued from time to time, threatening all kinds of dire punishment on those who would dare to squat on those lands, but the lands have been regularly squatted on in spite of that notice, for the reason that those threats have been made for years and have never been carried into effect. These lands have been offered for sale from time to time. The result, of course, has been that the squatter has, in almost every case purchased the land and has paid a very small proportion of its value.

Mr. DALY. They paid the upset price.

Mr. MARTIN. That was only very lately.

Mr. DALY. Always.

Mr. MARTIN. If they paid the upset price, that price was a very inadequate sum, because, to my personal knowledge, section after section of these lands have been sold for a very small percentage of their value, simply because the Dominion Government allow men to squat on them, and their neighbours refuse to bid against them, and so the squatters were allowed to purchase them at their own price. Not only has this diminution in the value of the lands occurred on account of people being allowed to squat on them, but the lands have been much depreciated in value on account of the facts that they were not properly cultivated, as the people did not know how long they would be allowed to remain in possession.

Mr. DAVIN. Does the hon. gentleman know the price at which they were sold per acre?

Mr. MARTIN. I would not like to bind myself to exact figures in any particular instance, as the prices vary very much. No doubt the Minister of the Interior can furnish that information.

Mr. DALY. The report of the Interior Department will give it.

Mr. MARTIN. In many instances within my own knowledge, the lands have brought much less than they were worth, for the reason to which I have referred, and although it may be said that a very small proportion has been sold, the best have been disposed of. The fact that squatters have been in possession of the lands for years has led to the lands being allowed to become filled with weeds, and besides the lands have not been summer fallowed. Besides, and this applies only to more strictly settled communities such as Portage la Prairie, squatters have been on these two sections in each township for years; they have been in exactly the same position as their neighbours, but they have paid no taxes. The maintenance of the schools is a very heavy burden on many on account of the sparse population, but it has been intensified by the fact that in two school sections in every township there has been land occupied very often by four people who have paid no taxes, either to school district, or the municipality, although at the same time those people enjoyed the advantage of schools.

Mr. DALY. The average price per acre realized for school lands in Portage la Prairie was $13.80.

Mr. MARTIN. In all probability, the average value of those lands was $30 or $40 per acre. The average value of land on the Portage Plans during the time those sales were made, would certainly range from $25 to $40 an acre. Some of the school lands that realized less than that were worth at the time fully $25 or $30 an acre. Land on the Portage Plains has reached a very considerable value. I am quite sure that an investigation will show that in every case where school lands have been sold on the Portage Plains, that their proper value has not been received, and that for the reasons I have suggested. I may say that if these lands were administered by the provincial authority, no squatters would be allowed on them. They would be sold at their proper price, and if they were not sold, where they were worth leasing, they would be leased and rents obtained from them and in every instance the occupant would be obliged to pay his school and municipal taxes like any one else. So much for what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Daly) has said with regard to the Conservative Government's administration of land in that country. The hon. Minister has referred to the fact that immigration was not as satisfactory to Manitoba and the Territories in the regime of the Mackenzie Administration as it should have been. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he considers that immigration is as satisfactory in that country at the present time as it should be? I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, if, considering the immense sums of money that have been spent by the Conservative Administration in opening that country, expended in surveying Dominion lands and expended in immigration, if the returns are at all satisfactory to him or to the country? The hon. gentleman referred to this fact, and it is the key of the whole situation. He said that if the Mackenzie Government had done its duty there would have been settlers in that country who would have written home to their friends year after year and brought out large numbers of additional settlers. I quite agree with him that if the country was treated as it should be, that if affairs were administered in Manitoba and the Territories as they ought to be; that there should be no need of immigration agents, for the settlers themselves ought to be, and would be, the best immigration agents that could be obtained, because they would write home to their friends and bring them into the country. But the hon. gentleman knows full well, as I know, that the settlers do not so write to their friends, but that they write to them rather advising them that they have not been able to do so well as they expected when they came to this country. If that is the case, why is it the case? It is to a considerable extent on account of the reasons I have adverted to: that the Government has not administered the lands as they should have done, but it is due much more to the facts that have been referred to in other debates, namely, that the trade policy of this Government is not such as to develop Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It is also due to the fact that under the practical monopoly created by hon. gentlemen opposite in the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; the freight rates charged by that company are so high that it is impossible to grow wheat—the great staple of the country—at a profit, so as to make the settlers who have gone there in a position to say to their friends, that they are doing well in the new country to which they have come. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's principle is the correct one. I will leave it to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and others to discuss how much and how far the Mackenzie Government violated that principle, and so conducted the affairs of that country as to keep out immigration. I confine myself to a criticism of to-day. I confine myself to the situation as it is to-day. This House cannot improve things that were done in the years between 1874 and 1878. No action of this House can change the misdeeds—if such they were—of the Mackenzie Administration; but action of this House can alter the present situation. While the past is gone, while the Mackenzie Administration is blameable for whatever it did wrong, and while the Conservative Administration is blameable for the things it has done wrong, as I pointed out; that after all is past and gone and we cannot help it. But the future we have before us, and if this Parliament is desirous that Manitoba and the North-west Territories shall indeed become a greater Canada, they must take, and take soon, some measures with a view of making the lot of the settler in that country, a happy and contented one. Those of us who live in that country have confidence in it, and we should be most glad that the condition of the settler there was made happy, contented and prosperous. But before that can be, these conditions must be changed for which this Parliament is responsible, and which this Parliament is in a position largely to change now. I trust that this Parliament will devote their attention to the grievances that exist there, and that they will remove them as soon as possible. If that is done, instead of depression in Manitoba and the North-west, instead of dissatisfaction, instead of retrogression, we will see in that country a large influx of people, we will see an increase of wealth, we will see there a great nation growing up, justifying, as I believe it will in time, the large sums of money that have been expended upon it by the older provinces of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I think, Sir, after the speech we have listened to from my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), that I may congratulate those gentlemen of the Opposition who have from year to year given violent and contradictory views to the country and to this House, and indulged in violent and conflicting criticism on the policy of the Conservative party; on having been reinforced by a congenial supporter. The question before the House has been but very slightly dealt with by the hon. member from Winnipeg (Mr. Martin). He has confined himself in the main to criticising the granting of charters to certain railways. He had not discussed all the questions that were suggested, rather than dealt with, by the hon. member from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), nor has he attempted to answer the conclusive and exhaustive speech made by the Minister of the Interior. I ask any of those who listened to the speech of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, which answered completely, exhaustively, effectively, and conclusively, the positions taken up by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)—I ask them whether there is a word in the speech of the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) that can be said to have replied to the speech of the Minister of the Interior. Mr. Speaker, I shall not trouble the House at any great length, but I shall, in the first place, ask the House to give me its attention while I deal for a short time (as supplementing the reply of the Minister of the Interior) with the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Now, Sir, the hon. member for North Norfolk, taking the population of the United States at 65,000,000, and the population of Canada at 5,000,000, said: you have granted 44,000,000 acres of land in Canada, while in the United States they have granted only 58,000,000 acres. He then took the number of miles of railway, and the number of possible homesteads, and he seemed to think that he had exhibited a contrasting picture of a very striking character. The hon. Minister of the Interior replied to that statement. What he stated was that a far larger amount had been granted to railways in the United States—that up to 1880 some 215,000,000 acres had been granted, instead of 58,000,000, as the hon. member for North Norfolk made out. I hold in my hand here the Public Domain, an official book issued from the Department of the Interior at Washington, which says:

The estimate of the general land office in 1878 was that it would require 187,000,000 acres of land to meet the land grants, which in all probability will be reduced by actual selections, forfeitures, &c., to 154,000,000 acres; the present estimate—that is, in 1883—is 155,514,994.

So that instead of some 30 per cent more having been granted to railways in the United States, as the hon. gentleman ignorantly said—I do not say he did it designedly; I do not say he did it to deceive this House—

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman will permit me, perhaps I may as well make the correction now as later. In preparing to move this motion, I wrote to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington a few days ago, and requested him to send me a statement of the date of the first land grant made to railways in the United States, the number of grants that had been made, and the total number of acres of land that railways have received. Of course, these grants were indefinite, because much of the area covered by grants were already occupied by settlers and squatters, whose rights were reserved. There may have been 100,000,000 acres or 500,000,000 acres nominally granted. What I wished to inquire was the number of acres of land which the railways had actually received. I received a letter from the General Commissioner of the Land Office; I received the volume which I hold in my hand; I received from him a note directing my attention to the tables which I have quoted. I received in addition to this volume a statement of all the railways in the United States that have received grants of land, from the grant to the Illinois Central in 1850 down to the last grant that was made, and, notwithstanding the statements of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and notwithstanding the wild and ignorant statements of my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I have given the official figures made by the United States Government on the 30th of June last, showing the number of acres of land actually granted, certified and patented to railways in the United States up to 30th June last, namely, 58,463,000, the grants made to states for the purposes of being granted to railways, the grants made to railways in territories—definite and detailed particulars of all these grants. Here is the official statement, and whatever statements may be made by the hon. member for Assiniboia or by the hon. Minister of the Interior, they simply require to set aside the authoritative statement of the Land Commissioner of the United States of America to change these figures.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for North Norfolk is not the Land Commissioner. Will the hon. member hand me that book?

Mr. CHARLTON. No; I will not. You have already had it.

Mr. DAVIN. He is afraid to hand me the book. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have here just as official a document as the hon. member has, and it shows that the figures which he gave were figures of what the State Governments have granted to railways.

Mr. CHARLTON. The State Governments have no lands in the United States. They must receive those lands for that purpose from the general Government.

Mr. DAVIN. The books say that they made those grants. I have seen before now, Mr. Speaker, a convicted person get very angry indeed, and flush up with something that was not quite indignant virtue, and I know what it looks like: all that sort of thing is lost on me. I do not ask the hon. member to take my word. I read here from a document as authoritative as any document can be, and it states that the estimate of the General Land Office in 1878 was that it would require 187,000,000 acres, which in all probability would be reduced by actual selections, forfeitures, &c., to 154,000,000 acres.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is an estimate.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend need not be in such a terrible hurry either, because we will drive this nail home so completely that the hon. member for North Norfolk, after I have done, will feel even worse than he feels now.

An hon. MEMBER. He will give you the book, then.

Mr. DAVIN. He will probably give me the book then; it really matters very little. Here we have the areas of the land grants to railways, the number of acres actually patented and certified, the various administrations under which the grants were made, from 1850, under President Filmore's administration, down through President after President. That is to say, the number of acres actually patented to the railways were: 45,647,347 acres, and the amount granted according to the estimate in 1883 was 155,514,994 acres.

Mr. CHARLTON. This statement makes it 58,000,000 acres.

Mr. DAVIN. Exactly, that was the hon. gentleman's mistake, and it is the most merciful thing that can be said of the hon. member that he made the statement ignorantly. He did precisely what would be done if a member of Congress took the number of acres patented and certified by the Department of the Interior of Canada to railways as the amount of land that had been granted to them, and I need hardly say that it would make a ridiculous fraction of the amount of land that has been granted. I have commenced what I have to say by pointing this out, because it is an instance of the extraordinary ignorance that characterizes the disquisitions of the hon. member for North Norfolk when he comes to deal with these matters.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to rest under the imputation which the hon. gentleman has made, and I repeat that these figures are authentic.

Mr. DAVIN. Give me the book.

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly, you can have the book—wait till I am through with it. The first grant, as I stated a few moments ago, was made in 1850, and—I speak under correction—the last grant was made a few years ago. The policy of the United States Government with regard to land grants was reversed a good many years ago, and this statement is brought down to the 30th June, 1893, covering the land certified to railways many years after the land grant was made; and although the amount of land to be certified to roads may not be entirely completed by this statement, yet I assert, what I have asserted before, that this return of the United States Government disposes of the magnificent theory of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and the Minister of Finance, and I think we are bound to go by the statement of the United States land office as to the amount of land the United States have granted to railways. My hon. friend can not only take the book but also this statement of the land grant made by Congress to aid the construction of railways, and wagon roads and canals and internal improvements, and he will find in these documents a corroboration of the figures I have given.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman stated in his speech that since 1850 the United States have granted to railways 58,461,000 acres of land.

Mr. CHARLTON. Fifty-eight million.

Mr. DAVIN. I have given the figures from American official authorities. It is a history of all transactions connected with the public domain, and so on—Washington Government printing office—issued by the Department of Interior, with statistics; and it says the number of acres granted from 1850 to 1883 was 155,504,149.

Mr. CHARLTON. And that the number of acres certified was 45,000,000 odd.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. That is a grand total of the transaction, and as I have sent the hon. gentleman one book, will he be kind enough to send me the one from which he has quoted?

Mr. DAVIN. With pleasure; I am not afraid to send it to the hon. gentleman. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the resolution of the hon. gentleman. He says that the public lands of the Dominion should be sold to actual settlers only, should be sold to them on reasonable terms of settlement, and in such areas as can be reasonably occupied and cultivated by the settlers. Now, that is the first proposition. You see, Mr. Speaker, that it is a complex proposition. And the second is that no sale should be made to speculators or middlemen. I think that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should have shown that public lands were being sold to people who are not actual settlers. I am not aware that that is done. If at present no sales are made to people who are not actual settlers, what is the object of putting a resolution like this on the paper, and what does he mean by talking about selling to actual settlers in a country where we give away our lands to actual settlers? What is the meaning of talking about selling to actual settlers, and then qualifying this by saying that the land should be sold to them on reasonable terms of settlement? Does he mean reasonable terms as to price, or what does he mean? He must have some reference to duties performed; but if a man performs the duties as settler, he gets his land for nothing. Then the resolution says, "in such areas as can be reasonably occupied and cultivated by the settler." I confess that I fail to understand what the hon. gentleman means by reasonable occupation and cultivation. What would be an unreasonable occupation or cultivation? An unreasonable occupation and cultivation in the case of one man would be quite reasonable in the case of another. So that I must confess I do not exactly understand what the hon. gentleman is driving at. I cannot see what abuse he is aiming at by this, his first proposition. "No sales should be made to speculators or middlemen." Again, I am not aware that sales are made to speculators or middlemen. So far from that being done, I understand our land laws to be framed in such a way as to avoid, as much as possible, allowing lands to go into the hands of speculators or middlemen. Liberal provisions, he says, should be made for free homestead grants to settlers. What more liberal provisions can be made than are made in Canada? The fact is the hon. gentleman is a belated free soiler. He takes us back to the time in the United States when you could not get there a free homestead, and when one of the planks in the platform of the free soilers was free lands for landless settlers. It was a rational plank in their platform until 1862, when a Bill passed Congress enabling people to make settlements. But in what manner? Precisely in the same way as settlers can go to Manitoba and the North-west and settle to-day—by paying $10, and then performing the settlement duties and getting their lands. "Land grants have been made to railways with reckless lavishness," is the last proposition, and "to the detriment of the public interest." That proposition one can understand. It is practically the only proposition to which the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) directed his attention. The first part of the resolution is absolutely meaningless. The first part, if the hon. gentleman will not think it impolite on my part to say so, is sheer nonsense, just as sheer nonsense as the resolution passed at the Liberal convention which took place in this very city, and which was proposed by the late member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). The gentleman who seconded that resolution, when he came back, made no secret that he had used all his influence to prevent its being proposed, but nevertheless he seconded it. That gentleman was from the North-west and he was here the other day, and he certainly made, as I understand, no bones of letting it be known, when he came back to the North-west Territories, that he entirely disapproved of the resolution. The resolution before us is a vague nonsensical one, as regards its first part, because you cannot put your hand on a grievance in connection with the land policy of the Government in that respect. It is loosely put together, and, as I suppose, is intended to sound in the ears of the public as if there was something wrong going on in the administration of the land in the North-west Territories. And how is it going to sound, pray, in the ears of people outside? The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) talked a little about immigration, and he spoke of emigration to Dakota. And, Sir, he justified what I said when I commenced to address the House this evening, that he was a congenial confederate for hon. gentlemen opposite, because the moment he spoke of Dakota, there was a tender inflection in his voice that reminded one very much of the way Dakota used to be referred to from those benches in former years. He said, combatting the statement that persons had come back to Manitoba, that he had occasionally read of some unfortunate individual who had gone to a part of Dakota, which, according to him, unfortunately was not so well watered, or something of that kind, as other parts. And, as I say, there was a tenderness when he referred to Dakota. Of course, he did not believe that this person was sent there by means of the 'Globe.' Sir, we need not go into this, because we have proved it often before. But not only the 'Globe,' but Mr. Blake, one of the most illustrious men that the Reform party has produced, in our time any way, when he was in this House, and Mr. Mackenzie also, when he was here, spoke in a manner well calculated to lead people to go to Dakota or Texas, or anywhere else outside of Canada. I have a speech made by Mr. Mackenzie in 1874, when proposing the Bill dealing with the Canadian Pacific Railway. He discusses the difficulty of building the line. He points out that we have not the attractions that are to be found elsewhere. And if this emigrant to Dakota had seen Mr. Blake's speech and read of the attractions of Texas and other places to the south of the line, he might well need no more to induce him to go.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. "Hear, hear" comes from the hon. member for Bothwell. With his permission I will read him what was said by his some-time leader. Here is the way he discusses the attractions of Kansas and the difficulty of carrying out any immigration policy in regard to the North-west:

The population of the State of Kansas in 1870, was 360,000, and in 1879, 850,000.

Now, if that great increase took place by reason of immigration from Canada, as the hon. gentleman made out, the western states were swelling by emigration from Canada. I want to point out to you that from 1870 to 1879—and for four and a half years of that period this country was under the rule of the Mackenzie Government—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does Mr. Blake say anywhere that these people in Kansas are from Canada?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not think he does; I did not say he did. I am replying to the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are leaving that impression.

Mr. DAVIN. By no means. I would not do that. That would be doing what I have seen done in a certain place, where a gentleman quoted from a debate in order to show that a statesman held a certain view on a question, though that statesman had expressed the contrary view on that subject and had voted accordingly. I would not like to do anything like that, I can assure the hon. member.

The population of the State of Kansas in 1870 was 360,000 and in 1879, 850,000, making an increase of 490,000 in the nine years. In this was to be included a large natural increase, as well as an increase owing to large immigration from the Eastern States. This was not an indication that the population of the North-west would, in ten years, reach 550,000. But the state of things was not equal. What was the position of Kansas at the commencement of the epoch which the hon. gentleman had taken as his starting point? Besides a population of 360,000 it had no less than 1,500 miles of railway in operation, so that at the commencement of the epoch of rapid increase there had been a considerable development of railway facilities, and during that decade those facilities had increased, so that there were 2,300 miles in operation in 1879. In 1866, Kansas ranked twenty-fourth among the States of the United States as a corn-growing state while in 1879 it had gone up so that it was the fourth. In the earlier period it was the twenty-fourth as a wheat grower, while by 1878 it had run up so it was almost the first in that respect, having produced thirty-two millions of bushels. With all these evidences of progress, and all these advantages, with a large natural increase from a population of 360,000 we find but 490,000 added to the population of that state in nine years; and yet we are told that over 550,000 irrespective of the natural increase, would altogether be added to the population of the North-west in ten or eleven years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the point Mr. Blake is seeking to establish in that speech?

Mr. DAVIN. The point is that it will be very difficult for us to people the North-west with the rapidity that we hoped for at that time.

Mr. MARTIN. And was not this prophecy fully borne out by the facts?

Mr. DAVIN. He himself did all he could to fulfil his own prophecy.

Mr. MARTIN. Does Mr. Blake say one word to point out that Kansas is a better country to go to than Manitoba?

Mr. DAVIN. I say, Mr. Speaker, there is.

Mr. MARTIN. Read it.

Mr. DAVIN. I have read what he said. He says that Kansas has gone up from the twenty-fourth in the list as a corn-growing state to the fourth. And from being twenty-fourth as a wheat-growing state it had reached almost the first position.

Mr. MARTIN. Is that anything against Manitoba?

Mr. DAVIN. Does it not indicate that this was a very prosperous place to go to? The first man in the Reform party was doing for Kansas what is sometimes done in order to advertise certain classes of wares, when a man is sent out in the street with a placard on his breast and another on his back bearing in large letters the name of the thing to be advertised. He made himself a walking advertisement for Kansas by that speech. And, so far as the small can imitate the great, the hon. member for Winnipeg, though he represents the capital of Manitoba, with the same extraordinary instinct, the same malign instinct, the same Ichabod-like curse that has rested upon the Reform party, is impelled to speak against the interests of the country. And the railway companies showed that they understood what Mr. Blake was doing, because they took his speeches and put them in their immigration pamphlets, so that every man in the rural districts of Britain who thought of emigrating, was shown these speeches of Mr. Blake, with his greatness as a leader described, and his eulogy of Kansas—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Published at the expense of your party's fund and circulated in the United States.

Mr. DAVIN. That was the statement made by the hon. gentleman, and I believe, like other statements from the same source, without foundation. Mr. Mackenzie also spoke in this manner:

If the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is proceeding on the hypothesis that in Canada alone is there any land available, he will find himself greatly mistaken. We have found it very difficult indeed in Canada to promote settlement, even where the land was given away by the Government. It is still more difficult to send settlers to the far off western country, where they have the initial difficulties of a new country to contend with, not less in amount, though different in kind, than the settlers of our own wooded district.

Mr. DAVIN.

They (the Canadian Territories) have a long winter, absence of lumber and building materials and difficulties of transportation. We must therefore make up our minds, if we are to settle that country, that it will be done only at the expense of a large amount of money to aid settlers in going in and in giving them land free after they get in. That is my conviction.

Now, Sir, the hon. member for Norfolk, in his speech in 1882, dealt at some length with the colonization companies. He referred to them here again in his opening speech in this debate. It is not necessary for me to go into that question, because, as the Minister of the Interior said, the best answer to what the hon. gentleman said about these companies is that, as I believe, not a single colonization company now exists.

Mr. CHARLTON. That, however, did not invalidate the statement that Orders in Council were issued in response to applications for grants covering a very large extent of territory. The fact that these parties failed afterwards to apply for allotments and make payments does not invalidate the statement that the Government had made regulations under which a great number of applications were made, Orders in Council were passed granting these applications, but these parties failed afterwards to fulfil the terms upon which these grants were made.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, could anything be a better answer to himself than that statement? He made his suggestion the other night, and now let me speak of an extraordinary peculiarity of my hon. friend. The other night he refers to these colonization companies, and he blames whom? Is it this Government? If it is a practical attack, it must be an attack on this Government to-day. The only way he can make his attack about colonization companies practical, is either by showing that this Government is inaugurating colonization companies, or is continuing them; not merely carrying out arrangements made by a previous Government, but in some way continuing this policy by branching out in some direction. If he cannot show that, what is the practical use of coming here and making this attack, even if the colonization companies were still in existence? But when the colonization companies have passed out of existence, fancy a man of my hon. friend's experience standing up here and giving us a speech as to the evils of colonization companies, taking up the time of the House in dealing with that which is past and gone.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. What my hon. friend means when he says "hear, hear," I do not know, I cannot sound the depths of that philosophic mind. I have watched him—because he is an interesting person—I have heard him say “hear, hear,” under all sorts of circumstances. I have heard him say it when it may have been a derisive “hear, hear;” I have heard him say it in exactly the same tone when he meant altogether something else. Because, gifted as my hon. friend is, a variety of note and voice is not his supreme endowment. So when he says “hear, hear” meaning to cheer on his leader, and when he says “hear, hear,” meaning derision and mockery of a humble individual like myself, the tone is exceedingly alike. So I do not really know what he means at this time by saying “hear, hear.”

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman's tone is rather melancholy just now for one who is defending the Administration.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Sir, if I am getting melancholy, I will gradually approach the hon. gentleman, and then we can pair and go down as twin mutes; because if I get like him, I know well that I shall be a good candidate for a mute at a funeral, and we should make an admirable pair. But to my mind there is a long chasm to bridge before I can approach anything so complete and perfect as the hon. gentleman in this respect. Well, Sir, leaving these amenities on one side, let me say that this policy about colonization companies is past and gone. Now, when this policy was propounded, I went through the obligations. I read carefully, with one of the astutest lawyers in Canada, the obligations that were imposed on these colonization companies. He was much more of a business man than I am, a man of great experience, and we both came to the conclusion that no rational man who understood the question, would go into these colonization schemes. Sir, I may tell you that I happen to know when some gentlemen, Grits and Tories—because my hon. friend showed who were the original colonizers—went to Sir John A. Macdonald, and were eager to get hold of the land as colonization companies, he pointed out that they must remember that they would be some twenty odd miles from a railway, that they could not hope to get settlers in unless they could give them advantages equal to having a railway near them because they had to compete with lands within a few miles of a railway. One of the gentlemen, Mr. Cosgrove, of Toronto, said to him: “Why, Sir John, are you going to cry out stinking fish?” “Well,” he said, “I have nothing to do with that; I want merely that you should go into this thing with your eyes open.” I saw Sir John A. Macdonald myself at Stadacona Hall, on some matter of business, after this conversation I have spoken of, and I said to him: “Sir John, is it not a very serious matter, putting all this land into the hands of these men?” He said to me: “Have you read their obligations?” I said I had. “Well,” he said, putting his hands over his knees, “Davie, they can never make a penny out of it. Every bit of that land will revert to the Government of Canada, as sure as I am speaking to you.”

Mr. CHARLTON. What did he make the regulations for?

Mr. DAVIN. Because they wanted them. “Meanwhile,” he said, “these men will have acted as immigration agents, and will have advertised the country; and as they desire to get them, let them have them.” To my knowledge, he gave them clear warning that there was no bonanza in it, and it has turned out that the right hon. gentleman was perfectly right. Now, we will pass away from that, because I think it is unnecessary to deal with it, as these colonization companies no longer exist, and, therefore, the answer of the Minister of the Interior is complete. The answer given by the Minister of the Interior to the hon. member for North Norfolk in regard to railway grants, that is to say, in regard to his statement as to the amount of land granted, is also complete. Now, one word with regard to middlemen. There are no middlemen, as I understand. I know no middlemen who are buying lands at the present time. But under the regulations that were in existence when the Liberal Administration came in, and while they were in, and which were in existence for some time after they went out. I think middlemen did have some chance of buying lands in general. I think I heard of Mr. M. C. Cameron making a good deal of money out of lands under the regulations made by the Liberal Government. I remember Lord Elphinstone sending his agents here, who bought lands for his tenants, and he got quit-claims from those tenants, and had the lands patented in the name of Lord Elphinstone, and paid for in scrip which, I believe, was then worth about 50 cents in the dollar. The member for Bothwell will remember that. Now, there was a middleman—I am not saying that the hon. member was personally responsible for that, I am not going to blame him; but I say that under his regulations, that was possible; and I am going to refer to those matters in passing, although they have been very fully dealt with by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. I say that was possible under the management of the hon. member for Bothwell, and nothing of the sort has occurred under the administration of the Conservative Government. So that my hon. friend from Norfolk, if he is hitting at anything that occurred, must be hitting at some thing that occurred during a Liberal Administration; and if he is hitting at any laws, he must be hitting at laws that existed, and which no longer exist, those arrangements for selling lands which existed under the Mackenzie regime. Now, I want to say one word about the leases. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has answered that completely, in my opinion, but I want to make one remark on it. In the first place, when those leases were given when an arrangement was made whereby grazing land might be leased, was there a hoof or a horn in that country? There were no cattle or horses in that country. Now we have plenty of horses and cattle. Let me say to the hon. member who seems to be amused at that remark—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not know of what kind of a horn the hon. gentleman was speaking of, when he said there was not a horn in that country.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not know I was speaking of any horn in which the hon. gentleman was interested. An hon. friend beside me says that the hon. gentleman is interested in the horns of the dilemma, on which he is impaled at the present moment. However, I will enlighten him by saying that that was a figurative way of stating that there were no cattle or horses in the country. Let me say, further, that there is nothing to prevent a lease-holder or rancher from allowing his cattle to graze on the public domain, any more than there is to prevent a homesteader's cattle grazing on the public domain, and the only astonishing thing is that the lease-owner ever leased the land. What has happened is that so much money has been gained and men have been induced to go in there, and we have reaped advantage in that way. I ought to have said, when I was speaking of colonization companies, that something was said by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) about favouritism. He will find out—because he can find it out from his own friends—that no questions were asked as to a man's politics, but that Mr. Gunn, who had run against Sir John Macdonald, and was a vigorous Grit, was one of the beneficiaries, if they could be so described. I desire to say a word about forest culture. The Secretary of the Interior, I think, in 1885 or 1886, said that a greater fraud than forest culture was never conceived by the brain of man, and that it did not lead to the planting of as many trees as would stop a zephyr. The hon. member for North Norfolk also referred to the North-west as not being supplied with schools, post offices, churches and grist mills to the extent it ought to be.

Mr. CHARLTON. No. I said that the system of homestead grants was one not calculated to permit settlers to have schools, churches, and other privileges as another system would permit if the settlements were contiguous.

Mr. DAVIN. It is, however, a question of fact, how the people in the North-west are served as regards post offices, churches and so on. The following are the figures:—

Mr. DAVIN.

Manitoba.
—	1881.	1886.	1891.
Post offices	104	310	389

It would seem as a fact, therefore, that there has been no such poverty in these matters as the hon. gentleman urged should have existed, and no doubt would have existed if his theory had any foundation. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) in his speech, and in this he followed closely in the track of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and also in the line of his motion, not only assailed the railway policy of the Conservative Government, but he lauded the policy of the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, and especially the Bill for which the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was responsible. He stated that the Bill for which the hon. gentleman was responsible would have prevented speculators getting hold of the public lands, and he actually stated that the Bill would have given to the Government everything over $10,000 that was received for the grant of land per mile. He said that if 6,400 acres per mile sold at a price of more than $10,000, the surplus would pass into the hands of the Government. The hon. gentleman was speaking as recklessly in regard to this Bill as he spoke when he assailed the policy of granting lands to certain railways. He was speaking just as recklessly as the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) spoke the other night, and as recklessly as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) will speak if he condescends to enlighten the House in this debate. What were the facts? Section 26 of the Act provided as follows:—

That the Governor in Council may for the purpose of aiding in the construction of any railway to be constructed under the provisions of this act, reserve every alternate section of ungranted land by odd numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile, five sections per mile on each side of the line of the railways, if exclusive of the sections which under the Dominion Land Act may have been reserved as school sections or may have been allotted to the Hudson's Bay Company; and for any line or part of a line of railway west of the 102nd meridian of west longitude twelve sections per mile, and for any line of railway connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and extending into the Peace River district twenty sections per mile.

And whenever 25 consecutive miles of any portion of any railway shall have been completed, equipped and in operation, the Governor in Council may convey to the company the land so reserved or a part thereof along the said railway so far as the same is completed, and for each consecutive 10 miles of the line of railway, the Governor in Council may, as the same may be built, convey the land so reserved along nine miles thereof to the company.

That is the first subsection of section 26. That would enable the company to take this land and to get all that it could produce in the market. There is, I grant you, a second subsection. It is alternative. But does anybody suppose that if these men made their company that they would not take good care that they would have all the franchises that the first subsection would give them. You have the alternative provision, saying:

Should the Governor in Council deem it expedient, instead of conveying lands to the company, the company may be paid the money received from the sales of land on the line of, and within six miles of such railway from time to time, until the company shall have received a sum not exceeding $10,000 per mile, after which the companies claim to any further aid from the sale of such lands shall cease. Provided always, that not more than 90 per cent of the value of the actual work done shall be paid out of the proceeds of any land sales, until the road is finished and equipped and in operation to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council.

Now, Sir, it will be seen that this arrangement not to pay over $10,000 a mile is an alternative arrangement, and nobody supposes for one minute that any company that would have come in under the Bill of the hon. member would have ever had anything to do with the second subsection.

Mr. MARTIN. They could not help themselves.

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, nonsense. That is perfect nonsense. Take subsection 4:

The Governor in Council may vary or entirely change the mode of disposal of Dominion lands, lying within a certain distance of a railway constructed under this Act, as regards homesteads, pre-emption, sales, and bounty lands entries, from those contained in the Dominion Lands Act, by reducing the quantity of land which may be granted in every homestead, or by withdrawing the homestead right altogether of such land, and may fix the price of such lands and order that such lands may be sold exclusively for cash, with or without conditions of actual settlement, as may be deemed expedient.

Thus, at one fell swoop, all the villages and townsites are pounced upon and clutched for the benefit of the railways.

Mr. MARTIN. No.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, certainly. Under that subsection 4, that is what would happen.

Mr. MARTIN. No, for the benefit of the general Government. That is where they should go, instead of where they went when the hon. gentleman's friends gave them to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DAVIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Under that subsection 4 of section 26: the railways would undoubtedly have got the benefit. Now, Sir, in regard to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) said about the mile belt. The mile belt was reserved by Sir John Macdonald to do the very thing that the hon. member (Mr. Martin) says the Government should aim at, namely: To avoid valuable lands getting into the hands of speculators. I may say, Sir, that I was opposed to the mile belt, and after I went into the country, I urged the Government to do away with it; and in 1883, owing to my action, as Mr. Burgess can testify, it was done away with. But undoubtedly the object of it was to prevent speculation. I always disapproved of the policy. I am not quite sure that it would ever have existed but for the criticism that came from the opposite benches. Here is what Mr. Blake said in 1882:

Now, it does seem to me that the state of things under which it is possible for a railway company to acquire almost the whole of this advantage, the public getting nothing and the real settler getting nothing, or an insignificant fraction is objectionable, and that steps should be taken under the control of the Government that the Government should communicate to the railway company the importance of their being sharers in the enhanced value of the land selected for station grounds or town sites, so that by their being sold, on joint account or in some other way, the right of the public to get the benefit of the enhanced value of the stations and towns being established on the line of railway should be recognized. At the present time, as I have stated, the practical result is that the Railway Company is gobbling up the enhanced values of the Dominion lands as of their own, and are thus to a large extent paying the cost of building the road from public lands of which the public ought receive the benefit.

Now, Sir, here is the then leader of the Opposition advocating precisely what was done by the late Sir John Macdonald in regard to the mile belt, and pleading for the very thing that was done by the Conservative Government in regard to the pooling of townsites. I happened to be with a gentleman from the west who is a strong Reformer, and we were talking with a leading member of the present Government the other day about these townsites. And I said that Mr. Blake forced this on the Government of Canada, and the gentleman seemed to get a little rusty about it, and said: "Oh, you must not put that on Mr. Blake's shoulders." But the fact is that there it rests. Mr. Blake was thundering against the Government for allowing the lands to be put into the hands of speculators, and it was to avoid that, and to meet the criticism of the Opposition that Sir John Macdonald fell in with the policy of closing up the mile belt. The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin) when addressing the House did not seem to know—until I called out to him, "It was one mile,"—anything about this matter. Although by frequently interrupting the Minister of the Interior he posed as if he was thoroughly up in regard to everything in the North-west, so little did he (Mr. Martin) know about it, that he said it was two miles on each side of the line, whereas the mile belt consisted of only one mile on each side of the line. This is what Sir John Macdonald said in response to the remarks of Mr. Blake, which I have read :

That land has been deliberately withdrawn from immediate settlement for the purpose of gaining the end which the hon. gentlemen desires by his motion. I fancy it will answer no purpose for the hon. gentlemen to press his motion.

So that Sir John Macdonald, in the presence of Mr. Blake said that the land had been withdrawn from settlement for the very purpose that Mr. Blake himself wished to effect. Now, Sir, in regard to this extraordinary Bill that has received the endorsement of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin). It is a very curious thing to find him endorsing that Bill now, because when the hon. gentleman with an overwhelming majority at his back, brought in that Bill it could not stand. Such was the criticism that was given it in this House and in the press, that they never dared to carry it out. It is a most ludicrous provision that any fifteen persons could form themselves into a company and by paying a small fraction of money, find themselves able in any place they liked—provided they are forty miles apart, and at a certain distance from the Canadian Pacific Railway, north, south, east or west, to build railways where and when they please. And Sir, when some hon. member, I think it was the late member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), pointed out what a tremendous lot of land would thus come into the hands of railway speculators, this is what the hon. member for North Norfolk said :

If railways were essential to the development of the western states, they were tenfold more essential to the development of the North-west. It was useless to think of opening up, and settling this country without furnishing it with railway facilities. * * * Some of the railways have perhaps been subsidized more than was necessary ; perhaps more land had been given than was advisable ; but capitalists would not embark their money unless they had a prospect of a fair return, and it was folly to haggle with them about an unimportant difference when important interests were at stake.

Mr. DAVIN.

This hon. member, who comes forward here and grows indignant and wailful about the fact that 44,000,000 acres have been granted for railway purposes—not earned, not alienated to the railways yet—although apart from that we still have 100,000,000 acres open for settlement, speaking of the companies to be formed under the Bill :

Under no circumstances can they absorb more than half of the lands.

Well, Sir, if they absorbed half the lands, and if the 54,000,000 acres which the Mackenzie Government was to give to the Canadian Pacific Railway were added to half the 150,000,000 acres available, which would be 75,000,000 acres, there would be only 20,000,000 acres left for settlement. So that, according to the plan that was eulogized in 1882 by the hon. member for North Norfolk, which was fathered by the hon. member for Bothwell, and which is now supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg, we should in all probability, if that plan had been put into force, have been left with only 20,000,000 acres for homesteading purposes. The hon. member for North Norfolk would perhaps say : what difference does that make ? We must have railways. The hon. member for North Norfolk talks of railway builders as speculators. I do not know whether the hon. member for Bothwell is his leader or not ; probably they are co-equal in the ranks of the Opposition. At any rate, they are equally prominent, and the hon. member for North Norfolk, in his speech in 1878, if he remembers it, declared that railway builders were speculators. But the hon. member for Bothwell said, I think in his speech in 1882, that railway builders could not be regarded as speculators. I therefore leave them there ; if the hon. member for Winnipeg and the hon. member for North Norfolk stigmatizes railway builders as speculators, they can settle the matter with the hon. member for Bothwell. Now, Sir, as regards the land grants that the hon. member for Winnipeg denounces as given to railways in his own province, I am not going into each of them ; it is not necessary for me to do so. Will the hon. gentleman in this case do what is not done, I am sorry to say, by any of the hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House when they assail any policy of the Government ? When they assail any policy of the Government, I apprehend that they ought to suggest a policy to take its place. But, Sir, the Opposition, led with such brilliancy by my hon. and learned friend to-day, in this year of our Lord 1894, is precisely in the same position as it was when led by Mr. Blake in 1881. I remember in 1881 'Grip' had a picture of Mr. Blake searching his pockets, and somebody asked him what he was looking for, and he said : "I thought I had a policy about me somewhere." That is the position the Opposition are in to-day. The hon. member for North Norfolk broaches this extraordinary motion, dealing with nearly everything which the Department of the Interior can touch; but he does not suggest a single positive thing that he or the party with which he acts would do. In the same way, the hon. member for Winnipeg, when dealing with these railways in Manitoba, denounces charter sellers. No one will denounce a charter seller, if he behaves improperly, more loudly or vigorously than I will. But the only comparison we can have is a comparison with the Government that preceded the Conservative Government. We have to compare the railway building of this Government with the railway building of the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, or, if hon. gentlemen would give us a policy, we could make a comparison between that and the present policy of the Government. But when an hon. gentleman gets up and denounces charter sellers, his statements may be true or they may not be true, because he does not mention a single case in which improprieties have been committed in regard to these charters. That is akin to all he does in this House. For instance, he denounced the price received for school lands, and when I asked him what price they sold for, he could not tell me. Now, I apprehend that it is a very improper thing for a man to denounce the price that is received for a thing if he has no approximate idea in his mind as to what price that thing fetched. In the same way the hon. gentleman gives the names of four or five railways in Manitoba which he says would have been built if charters and land grants had not been given to them. Is not that a most extraordinary statement for an hon. gentleman to make? He says that a charter and a land grant given to a company actually prevented a railway being built. I understand that one of these lines is in litigation, and that is all that is wrong with it. The hon. gentleman mentioned another line which he said had a land grant from the Dominion Government; but the hon. Minister of the Interior told him that it had no land grant, but that on the contrary it had been subsidized at so much a mile by the Government of the province of which the hon. gentleman himself was a member. And so with regard to every one of the lines he dealt with: we have nothing definite; we have only his statement that something wrong had been done. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is enough to say that not one of these railways could have got a single acre of land until it earned it. No charter is given that will enable a railway company to get land without building the railway. They cannot get a grant until they have earned it and have performed certain works. In what other way, will you build railways? I shall be very glad, and this will bear on the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk, if the Opposition will support me in urging on the Government to borrow $20,000,000 to buy back the odd sections. I will bring forward a motion in the House and will urge it privately on the Government, if the Opposition will support me. But if they will not, in what other way than by land grants will they build railways? Would they subsidize them? If they want a railway in the North-west, will they vote all the money required and not give any land? But that is not the hon. member for Bothwell's (Mr. Mills's) idea of doing things, because, in 1878, he said that the result of his policy would be to make those persons who settle on the land pay for the railways. The hon. member nods his head in assent, and, therefore, I suppose, would not support the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. McDonald) and myself if we were to bring forward a proposal here that the odd sections should be bought back again by the Government and thrown open to settlement. If you are not going to do that, Sir, how else are you going to have lands to accomplish public ends? There are two ways: you can either give the lands in large blocks to a railway or in odd sections. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is always comparing our policy with that of the United States. Well, he knows that the checker-board system of subsidizing railways we have borrowed from the United States. They adopted that course; and I confess that if I am to choose between giving large blocks to railways, whereby we might fail to get a yeomanry into the country, and get into it large estates and men not suitable to our institutions—if we are to choose between that and the checker-board system, with all its defects—and I grant you it has defects—I will choose the latter. What are we to do? We must be practical. We are not living in the republic of Plato. We must get some practical scheme; and if I am to choose between the checker-board system of subsidizing railways and the system of giving them land in large blocks, I echo what would be the opinion of every farmer and settler in the North-west, when I say that I prefer the odd sections. The hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. McDonald), who knows the sentiments of his constituents well, and I have talked with him on this subject, says there is not a man in his constituency who would not prefer our present system to that of giving large blocks of land. The hon. member for Winnipeg spoke about the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway and about granting lands to this monopoly. I live in that country, and I know something of Manitoba, and it came with extreme significance to my ears when he spoke of this in connection with our trade policy. Why, the hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that our trade policy has not interfered one iota with the prosperity of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It is to the knowledge of my hon. friend from Eastern Assiniboia and myself, that that policy made a marked improvement in the position of the settler compared with what it was in 1879. But the hon. gentleman spoke of this in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he spoke about the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway. And I suppose he was referring to freight rates. Why did not the hon. gentleman, when he was a member of the Greenway Government and had the chance, strike a blow at that monopoly? He had negotiations with the representatives of the Northern Pacific Railway. He had very extraordinary negotiations with them about bringing in their railway. Why did he not then, as was expected of his Government, fix a maximum rate? Why did he meet the representatives of that company surreptitiously? Why did he afterwards deny that he had met them surreptitiously? And why did he let pass this opportunity, which everybody was looking for, not merely in Manitoba but in all the North-west, of breaking the monopoly, and give railway competition in Manitoba which would have brought about competition also in the North-west? All eyes were then upon him, and yet what is the fact? It is established that he saw the agents of the Northern Pacific Railway surreptitiously, that he afterwards denied having seen them surreptitiously, that he befooled gentlemen who had a right to his confidence, and thought they had his confidence, and the result is that suspicion now attaches to the hon. gentleman of having allowed—for some reason or other into which I do not want to inquire—that opportunity to pass of having a maximum rate fixed on the Northern Pacific. And the fact is, as every man from Manitoba and the North-west knows, that the bringing in of the Northern Pacific has not had the effect of the weight of the wing of a butterfly on the freight rates from outside Manitoba and outside of the North-west. Not the least influence. Yet, Sir, the Legislature of Manitoba and the whole people of Manitoba were befooled into the idea that that would be done. It is in evidence, it is established, that there was discussion on the subject; and it is in evidence that the dark spirit which came over the proceedings was the hon. gentleman who represents Winnipeg in this House. Now, the hon. member for North Norfolk also spoke of timber limits, and I want to say a word about that. The Minister of the Interior disposed of that contention of the hon. member for North Norfolk completely. What I would say is this: Mr. Mackenzie found, as the Minister of the Interior pointed out, that he could only dispose of those lands by auction or tender. I do not believe that the hon. member for Bothwell was in the Government at the time, but, anyway, Mr. Mackenzie got the Act amended to do the very thing of which the hon. member for North Norfolk now complains. And let me say this. In the state of the country at that time Mr. Mackenzie was right. He did the right thing, because it was absolutely necessary that we should get men in there to build mills, and the only way we could get them in was by making it as easy as possible for them to go in. There was no use in making it difficult, and I believe that Mr. Mackenzie adopted the right policy in changing the Act, and so making it facile and profitable for men to go in there and build mills, and the consequence is that to-day in Manitoba and parts of the North-west also, we have these mills. But after the Conservative Government came into power they changed this, and at the present time, and for some years the only way that timber limits can be given to any one is by competition. The rule was changed, I think in 1886. A few moments ago I glanced at what the hon. member for Winnipeg had said about school lands. He complained of the policy of the Dominion Government in keeping the administration of these school lands in their own hands. He complained that men had squatted on these lands. He said also that a sufficient price was not got for the lands. And when the Minister of the Interior said an upset price had been received for them, the hon. gentleman said it was an inadequate price. I asked him how much it was and he could not tell me. Now, how could the Government prevent people squatting upon these lands? And will men squatting depreciate the value of the lands? My experience in the North-west, and all I have heard and read on the subject leads me to believe that when men squat on lands they enhance their value. Whether you call a man a squatter or a settler, he does the same things—he builds a house, ploughs the land and sows a crop. The hon. gentleman did not tell us how he would have prevented squatting. I want to call attention to the prices which have been received and which the hon. gentleman says are inadequate. During the months of January and February, 1892, auction sales of school lands were held at eight different points in Manitoba the result of which was as follows:—

Place of Sale.	Area sold in acres.	Total price.	Average price per acre.
		$	$
Morden.....	2,080 00	13,760 00	6 61
Pilot Mound.....	480 00	2,560 00	5 24

The hon. gentleman indicated that things would have gone much better if the Local Government had had administration of these lands. He did not explain how the Local Government could have got more than the Dominion Government for them. What does it matter whether the lands are put up for sale by the representatives of the Local Government or by the representatives of the Dominion Government? In the North-west, the trustees of some of our school sections wanted money, and we urged the Minister of the Interior to have certain school lands sold. I believe that local parties were instructed to put them up for sale. What else could the Local Government have done if the lands had been under their administration? I am in the hearing of western men. Nobody will say that lands up there will bring the price stated by the hon. member—$30 per acre. Take this terrible monopolist that is spoken of so often—the Canadian Pacific Railway. They are selling splendid lands near the railway for from $3 to $5 per acre—lands within the mile belt. I do not suppose they are doing that for philanthropic reasons. Do you suppose that if the market price of land was anything like what the hon. member indicated it was, this company would sell their lands at these prices? The whole statement of the hon. member in that respect is precisely the same as his statement in regard to other matters—it is instinct with an utter recklessness. But I must say that the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg is more excusable than my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), because the gentleman from Norfolk is an old parliamentarian, while the hon. member for Winnipeg is comparatively a new one. But it is hard to say which of these gentlemen is more reckless in his vituperative assertions. But certainly the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg fails entirely to make good his point. The only question upon which he descended to detail—and upon that he descended to detail only when I forced him—was in regard to these school lands, and there he failed to show that if these school lands were in the hands of the Local Government a higher average price than $7.10 per acre would have been realized for them. When land was booming in the North-west in 1882, I came down here, and, being asked by the then Minister of Interior, Sir David Macpherson—Mr. Macpherson he was then—the value of land in southern Manitoba, I had to tell him that the average value there then, in that garden of Manitoba, was $7 per acre. And yet, in 1893, when we have passed beyond the booming days and beyond the booming traditions, the Minister of the Interior realizes upon his sales an average of $7.10 per acre. The hon. member for Winnipeg does not seem to know that there is a very good reason why the Dominion Government could not part with these lands and hand them over to the Local Government. That reason is that the responsibility with regard to the schools is with the Dominion Government. Even if they were to alienate these lands to the Local Government, they could not at the same time part with their responsibility in connection with the schools, and they could have no guarantee that these lands would be dealt with in the manner which they deem it their duty to deal with them. So, whether we look at it from the point of view of the duty of the Government to hold these lands as the trustee for the education of the present and future generations, or whether we look at it from the point of view of the prices obtained for the lands that have been sold, we are driven to the conclusion that the hon. member for Winnipeg fails utterly to prove his case. The hon. gentleman said that people were driven from the country in 1881 and 1882 by the land regulation. I was in the country in those years, as was my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. McDonald), and I am sure that hon. gentleman will agree with me that there was no foundation whatever for the statement made by the hon. member. Again, it belongs to that class of reckless statements that characterized his whole speech. Now, one of the statements made by the hon. member—if I may revert to it again—about the mile belt, was that that was done to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to get more for its town sites. I have shown that that policy was thrust upon the Government by the criticism from the Opposition; I have shown that the object of the Government was really to keep the land out of the hands of speculators. Now, Sir, I have simply to say this, that the one thing that leading gentlemen on the Opposition remind me of is a story that I heard of a Legislative Council in the Lower Provinces, the members whereof were very old, and in regard to whom a trick was played on a Yankee visitor. A friend took him to the legislative council and said: "Let me take you into our museum." He took him into the legislative council and said: "this is our museum." When they were going out the Yankee said: "I could have taken my oath that some of them were alive." Now, that is really about what can be said, politically, of my hon. friends opposite. Physically, I rejoice to know, they seem to be in pretty good health, but, Sir, politically, what can we say of them? Here is the hon. member for North Norfolk coming forward and denouncing things that are dead and gone, just as if a ghost were to come up and talk about the politics of past years. Here we find the latest acquisition to the ranks of the Opposition in the person of the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Martin), and he himself has caught this tone of belated debate. And so, in fact, with nearly everything in regard to policy, that we hear from those benches. My hon. friends cannot, apparently, conceive or bring forth a new idea, they cannot strike on a new means of attack. Anybody who entered this Chamber when this debate was on before, and heard the hon. member for North Norfolk, would have thought that he was continuing the speech he made in 1882; and on reflecting still further, he might think to himself: That is very like what I heard from the hon. member in still earlier years. I have little doubt that if the hon. member for Norfolk sits here for ten years more, he will bring forward like motions, and give us like belated utterances. I think myself that we ought to expect something better than that when they have a young leader.

Mr. LAURIER. Sometimes it takes a long while to operate reform.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes; and besides that, 'nos-citur a sociis,' we are known by our company, by which we are sometimes demoralized. But I will say this, and I say it with regret, that I have been watching them, especially this session, and I see no evidence that my hon. friends opposite can escape from the old standpoints, from the old ways, from the old cries, from obsolete and belated utterances; and in fact, when we come to finance, one of the strongest men on that side is an enormous fossil. My hon. friend from Norfolk—well, I won't say he is an enormous fossil, but he is a very palpable and at the same time a very interesting specimen. We could not have better evidence of that than we have had in the motion and in the speeches that we have heard in this debate; and I must say that never, probably, have charges been made or positions taken up that it was so easy to clear away, and that have been so completely destroyed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Speaker. I dare say the First Minister is somewhat tired of this discussion, but he must remember that, although the debate was begun shortly after three o'clock, only about forty minutes of the time has been consumed by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. At first, we had a speech of three hours and a half from the Minister of Interior, and we have had a two hours' speech from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I think it would be very difficult for any hon. member on that side of the House to say what particular views the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has been undertaking to defend, or what principles of administrative Government he has been seeking to elucidate. If ever there was a case of an hon. gentleman whose speech has darkened counsel by a multitude of words, it has been the speech which the hon. gentleman has just addressed to the House. He has put almost everything in his speech connected with the North-west Territories except some of the red men. Those have been left out on the present occasion, because, I suppose, the hon. gentleman required the paint that is used to adorn them, for the purpose of adorning the speech which he addressed to the House. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has complained that my elocution does not fall pleasantly upon his fastidious ears. There is no doubt the hon. gentleman thinks himself, whether others do or not, a great master of the art of elocution. Why, Sir, it is only necessary to observe the hon. gentleman's gestures, and his genuflexions, and the shrugging of his shoulders, and the expression of his face, to see that the hon. gentleman believes that he is a perfect master of the art of elocution. Well, I am rather old in years to begin now to take lessons in that very useful art; but I must say to my hon. friend in all frankness, that if I were obliged to choose a master in that art, I would hardly go to the hon. gentleman for the purpose of receiving instructions; for although the hon. gentleman may occasionally amuse his friends in this House, I am not sure that the hon. gentleman ever seriously impresses even those who are most inclined to favour him. Now, I am not going to say more with regard to what the hon. gentleman has said, except to refer to one matter, and that is the quotation the hon. gentleman made from a speech delivered years ago by Mr. Blake, and which he has revived on the present occasion with a sort of commentary which hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, who have stooped to make commentaries of this sort, have sometimes addressed to the House. I have heard that address in the last sessions of an expiring Parliament, or upon the platform, but I never knew of any hon. gentleman, even on that side of the House seriously to undertake to put the construction upon Mr. Blake's observations which the hon. gentleman has put upon them to-night. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Blake, when he was leader of the Opposition, endeavoured to persuade people that Kansas was a better country to go to than the North-west, and that he endeavoured to secure the settlement of that country rather than the settlement of his own, in fact, that he spoke with a view of discouraging the settlement of the Territory belonging to Canada. The hon. gentleman told us about a pamphlet published and circulated by railway corporations in the United States, containing Mr. Blake's speech, and adorned with Mr. Blake's likeness. I remind the hon. gentleman that pamphlet was not published by any railway company on the other side, but was published by hon. gentlemen opposite, that it was published by Mr. Belford, and circulated by him, and paid for by hon. gentlemen who thought they could make political capital out of it at the expense of the Opposition. What did the extract read from the speech show? It showed that Mr. Blake said that in 1866, in the production of corn, Kansas was the twenty-fourth State, of the Union, and in 1879 it was the fourth State; that in the production of wheat in 1866 it was the twenty-fourth State, and in 1879 it was the first State of the Union; and Mr. Blake, pointing out the increase that had taken place in the population of that State, not for the purpose of showing it was admirably adapted for settlement, not that it was well calculated to attract immigration, but he was combating a statement that we in Canada could secure in the Northwest in the same time, an equally large population; he was pointing out that they in Kansas had behind them fifty millions of people, while the North-west had behind it less than five millions. Those were the arguments employed by Mr. Blake to show that the statements made to the House were entirely illusory. What do the facts show? What is the condition at the present time? Has the production in the North-west of wheat for export reached 620,000,000 bushels, and have we half a million of people there as was predicted? The hon. gentleman now says that such is not the case, because of the speech delivered by Mr. Blake in which Kansas was referred to. I am not going to say anything further with respect to this calumny, but that it is precisely of a piece with accusations that have been frequently levelled against hon. members on this side of the House. Having said this much with respect to the remarks made by the hon. member from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), I wish to say a few words in reply to the very long speech delivered by the Minister of the Interior. The Minister reminds me of a story told in regard to the death of a western man. A friend of the dead man went to the minister and told him his good qualities, what a number of men he could thrash, what quantity of whisky he could drink without staggering, how good he had been to his friends, and at the end of every one of his statements he said, "Cannot you put it in your sermon?" So the hon. gentleman, who has addressed the House, seemed to be disposed to put everything he thought ought to be said in regard to the North-west in his speech to-night. I am not going to follow the hon. gentleman in all his meanderings on the present occasion. He has made a very long speech, he has told us a great deal about what is and what might be. The speech was built up very much after the plan of the Knickerbocker history of New York—the history of the country from the creation to the end of the Dutch dynasty. So the hon. gentleman put into his speech everything which is or was or might happen to be in connection with the North-west and the province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman said: "Oh, you lost a great many more people in the settlement of the country when you were in power than we have done since, and a much larger number of persons have left." The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He will find that the facts do not uphold that view. What was the condition of the country when we were in power? The American railways at that time did not approach within 150 miles of the boundary; the means of access were very difficult, and it was only during the last two years of our administration that we were able to furnish any facilities to enable settlers to enter the country.

Mr. DALY. The more reason for building the Canadian Pacific Railway from Port Arthur to Winnipeg.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hon. gentlemen says we are responsible for that condition of affairs. But the hon. gentleman's friends were in power seven years, and what did they do towards the settlement of the North-west? What was the condition of the country in which we found it? We found officers there, but there was nothing for them to do, and it was not likely they would have anything to do so long as those hon. gentlemen controlled the administration. The hon. gentleman further said that the policy of Mr. Mackenzie and his friends was all wrong, that the course adopted was not a wise one; but our defence was this, that the policy which Mr. Mackenzie pursued was the very policy which Sir John Macdonald had adopted before that time, and which had been followed ever since. While the hon. gentleman argued that our policy was all wrong, yet his policy was exactly of the same character. If the hon. gentleman was right in his proposition, I would apply to him the Turkish proverb, "I would rather change every day than to be always in the wrong." If we were wrong, and hon. gentlemen followed in our footsteps fifteen years, it was high time that hon. gentlemen rectified the wrong. I do not admit, however, that the hon. gentleman's statement is correct. The hon. gentleman says that in the beginning—and the years he mentioned as those in which there was the largest number were years before I was a member of the Administration—a number of men entered for homesteads who failed to take possession of them. That was sometimes the case, undoubtedly. Young men went up from Ontario and sought to take up homesteads, and afterwards returned, and perhaps never went back to the North-west. Something occurred which prevented their return. There were occasionally such cases, and there are, no doubt, cases of that sort in a larger number to-day. Unfortunately, however, they did not come back to Canada, but they crossed over the border, and are lost to this country altogether. Let me ask the hon. Minister this: What distinct nationality of Europe are settled in the North-west and Manitoba? The Mennonites from Southern Russia, and the Icelanders from the Island of Iceland. These are the only two national communities that you can find in the North-west.

Mr. DALY. I must take exception to that statement made by the hon. gentleman. There are Swedes and Norwegians in large numbers, as well as people from other continental countries.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says they are there in large numbers; I say they are there in very small numbers. Let me say that there are those people mentioned by him scattered over the country in some few places, and they have largely come from Dakota and elsewhere in to the North-west; but you have but two communities distinct, as regards nationality, belonging to the continent of Europe. Those two are the Mennonites and the Icelanders, and they were brought into that country while Mr. Mackenzie's Government was in power, and you have done nothing to promote settlement from these countries in any appreciable degree during the past fifteen years. The hon. gentleman has referred to our policy with regard to the railway lands, and he says: You adopted a policy in the first instance to exclude people from the railway belt, and afterwards you admitted them upon conditions that were illiberal conditions, and that stood in the way of a settlement of the railway belt. Well, what was the policy of the Government of Sir John Macdonald in 1872 with regard to these lands. It was, as far as possible, that with no increase of taxation, and with no additional sum beyond the $25,000,000, to build by the aid of a grant of over 50,000,000 acres the railway in that country. It was further agreed upon that the railway should be built through the instrumentality of a company, and should not be constructed by the Government. That was the policy which had been adopted in 1872, and the hon. gentleman will see this: that so far as these lands were concerned, if the Government were to deal with a company for the construction of that road, the Government had to keep its hands free so as to enable the parties who undertook to build the road to have some voice in saying what price should be fixed upon the lands, and upon what conditions they should be settled. Now, Sir, we say this (and we say the same thing with regard to the railway lands generally): that the price put upon the lands is not after all an actual charge upon the lands; but it is a contribution from those who settle in the neighbourhood of the railway to aid in the construction of the road. Therefore, this railway located where it was, intended as a transcontinental road, located with a view of promoting the general interests of the interior of the country, while, at the same time that it made the North-west an accessible country, yet that road was located north of the actual settlements and north of the districts where the people were most inclined to go. I say that, in that very district which the hon. gentleman says we improperly excluded the people from, there are few settlers to-day. There is a large section of the country, which he says it was a grievance not to open up for settlement then, and into which the settlers up to this hour have not gone. The hon. gentleman has altogether failed to make out a grievance in that particular. Then the hon. gentleman said: that in that district we did not permit the parties to pay for the land by bounty warrants received for services in suppressing the North-west rebellion, or for police service. That is true. These lands were to be sold for cash or taken by the railway company at a particular price to aid in the construction of the road, and if they were made free for actual settlement they could not at the same time be made available for the construction of the road. The hon. gentleman told us how Sir John Macdonald had reserved lands in belt "A," and fixed the price at $6 an acre, and in belt "B" and fixed the price at $2.50 an acre. Does that make these lands free? Was that any more liberal than the policy we adopted? We said to them: Gentlemen, you will pay $1 per acre if you go on these lands; but what further sums you will pay will depend upon the terms of the contract between the Government and the parties who will undertake to construct the road.

Mr. DALY. It might have been $5 per acre.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was not likely to be.

Mr. DALY. Oh, yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says it might be a large sum. Why, Sir, that would depend upon the sum that we thought the road ought to cost. If the road were to cost $100,000,000, the price of the land would not be fixed at above $2 an acre, and the hon. gentleman will see that everything depended upon the estimated cost at which the road was to be constructed. But however that might be, it was not until you could change the whole plan or policy of construction that you could change the policy with regard to the settlement of these lands specially reserved to pay for the construction of this road. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Daly) said that if he were younger than I am that he was at all events wiser. That is, that wisdom was not indicated by a man's age. Well, the hon. gentleman may be wiser than I am. I am not pretending to say how much wisdom the hon. gentleman possesses, but I think, Sir, it would have been quite as modest if the hon. gentleman had permitted somebody else to make that estimate, rather than to have made a boast of it himself. Referring, Mr. Speaker, to the observations made by the hon. gentleman and from which I dissented, that lead the hon. gentleman to tell us how much he knew; the hon. gentleman was estimating the amount of lands appropriated for the construction of railways, and in that estimate he included the several hundred miles of road that had already been built for cash. There was the 420 miles of road extending from Port Arthur to Selkirk, and there was a large stretch at the western extremity of the line. Now, Sir, when you look at the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's Act it will be seen that the company and the Government who entered into that contract did not adopt that view of estimating the distribution of the lands. They did not undertake to say: We shall appropriate a portion of this land to aid in the construction of a road that is already built, and built by sums of money borrowed and charged against the country. I find that the Government in their contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company provided that 900 miles of the road should receive an appropriation of 12,500 acres per mile; that 450 miles should receive 16,666 and 2-3rd acres per mile, and that another section of 650 miles should receive 9,615 acres, and so it will be seen, if these three are added together and the mean taken, that there was in the neighbourhood of 14,000 acres per mile appropriated for the construction of the road.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. DALY. From what is the hon. gentleman quoting?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am quoting from the Canadian Pacific Railway Act of the session of 1881, under which the road was actually constructed by the present railway corporation. Now, I do not think it is a matter of any consequence whether you appropriate the whole of the lands for the construction of a portion of the road, and build the rest with cash. What we have to consider is: what has been the actual cost of the road. There has been $25,000,000 in cash first contributed; there were several hundred miles of railway that cost over $31,000,000 contributed, and there were also 25,000,000 acres of land contributed, and all these have gone to aid in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not saying anything against the propriety of the enterprise. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) spoke about the resolution of my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) raising dead issues, but if ever we had a case before this House when matters that belong to history and not to practical politics were discussed, it was in the speech which the hon. Minister of the Interior addressed to the House on the present occasion. The hon. gentleman devoted himself to a discussion of a number of subjects relating to a condition of things that has long since passed away.

Mr. DALY. That you want to be forgotten.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, we have not forgotten them; it would be quite impossible to forget them. We hear them every session, and we have heard of them every session for the last fifteen years. It the hon. gentleman did not employ them, what would become of the wit of the hon. member for Assiniboia, and what would become of the argument of the hon. Minister of the Interior? There would be neither wit nor argument left to the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches or to those who support them. Now, Sir, let me say a word or two with regard to the colonization schemes to which the hon. gentleman referred. He has told us that there is a difference between the allotments and the grants. Why, Sir, we all know that. We know that there were great expectations which have not been realized. We know that those men who were deluded into investing their money in those enterprises, who expected to make large profits, who went into them for speculation, being perhaps over persuaded, have not gained what they looked for. On the contrary, they have lost what they invested, and have had to abandon the speculation. The hon. member for Assiniboia told us what a former Premier, Sir John Macdonald, said to him on the subject. One would suppose, from what the hon. gentleman said, that he was the confidential adviser and special friend of the former Premier as he was the hon. Minister's assistant to-night. The former Prime Minister, who we supposed always relied upon himself, if we are to believe the statement of the hon. member for Assiniboia, relied chiefly upon him, and never saw light until he was illuminated by the brilliancy of the hon. gentleman, when he was able to see clearly the path in which it was his interest and the interest of his party to walk. When you consider the statement of the hon. member for Assiniboia, you will see that Sir John Macdonald did not want to see any person engage in these enterprises; he was afraid they might lose their money. He said, "Davin, the whole of them will lose every cent they put into these speculations." And the hon. member said, "Yes, Sir John, there won't be nary a red left." And so we have the vivid picture given to us of the conversation that took place between the Prime Minister and his most confidential adviser. Well, Sir, those were not the representations that were made throughout the country. Why, Sir, I know men that were written to and encouraged to engage in those speculations. I know of temperance colonization companies being formed; I know of Christian colonization companies being formed; I know of colonization companies of this church and that church being formed. I know that clergymen were persuaded to go into them, and were told how convenient it would be in the settlement of the country to have all those of the same religious faith living together—how much easier and better they could support a clergyman of their own particular views. These were the representations made, and many people subscribed just as people subscribed to the philanthropic enterprise which undertook to bleach the coloured men of Southern Africa in the society described by Tom Hood. Now, Sir, these speculations failed. The hon. gentleman said there was no money made by them; but he says: We are not responsible; there was nothing wrong in the matter; there was no intention to speculate when these parties went into them. It was purely a matter of benevolence and patriotic self-denial; they contributed their money to promote the interest of their country. But to-day there is not one of these institutions left in existence. What a commentary this is on the organization of these institutions! What a commentary it is on the policy of the Government! This was one of the means seemingly relied upon to promote the settlement of the North-west; and the result according to the hon. gentleman's own confession, is that the schemes wholly failed, that the grants were insignificant in consequence of those failures, and that to-day there is not a single one of these institutions in existence. Now, let me say a word or two with regard to the timber competition which the hon. gentleman spoke of. The hon. gentleman says they are doing now just what we did with regard to the timber.

Mr. DALY. Not at all; we are doing what you did not do.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says they are not putting up the timber at auction.

Mr. DALY. We are putting up the timber by public competition, which you did not do.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He knows that the first statute provided for sale at public auction, and that the experiment was tried and failed for the reason you could not get a bidder. What would people in that country cut lumber for? Who was going to invest large sums of money in the establishment of saw-mills? Who was going to go to the enormous expense of taking heavy machinery up there for the cutting of timber? What we had to do was to repeal the Act because it could not be lived under. Those who preceded us succeeded, but they did it in defiance of the statute, and we repealed the law in order that we might secure the establishment of saw-mills in the country.

Mr. DALY. You left out the saw-mill conditions.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman knows that Messrs Dick & Banning, Mr. Fuller, Mr. Dennis and several other parties went into that country, and went in at the earnest persuasion of the Government; and under these circumstances to talk of not putting up the timber at auction is to talk nonsense. The hon. gentleman argues as if that state of things should continue after the conditions had altogether changed. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman says they have always put up the timber for sale by public tender, or by public competition, as he calls it, which is a delusive phrase, because it embraces a form of sale which the hon. gentleman declines to follow. Was that the case in regard to Rykert's purchase? Did he not purchase without competition?

Mr. DALY. I never understood that Mr. Rykert purchased anything at all.

Mr. McMULLEN. You are not posted.

Mr. DALY. I am posted. It was Mr. Adams that purchased.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Against whom did Mr. Adams compete? Who were the parties who tendered for that limit? We know that there was a Mr. Laidlaw who sought to get a limit in that district, but it was not by competition. The price was the same, no matter who purchased, but it so happened that one had the opportunity to purchase but the other had none at all. No, the hon. gentleman admits that the state of things from 1870 to 1878 was different from what it was at a later period. If I understand him now, he admits that it was impossible to obtain competitors during that period of time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. DALY. From 1874 to 1878?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Mr. DALY. No, I did not admit anything of the kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If he does not, he must maintain that the condition of things was the same then as at a later period, and that there was no necessity for repealing the statute, and that the Government was censurable for repealing it. But that is not the fact. I know myself that numerous parties were written to for the purpose of inducing them to make offers for the establishment of mills to manufacture lumber for the people of the Saskatchewan and the Battleford River, and they absolutely declined to build mills in that district. And it was with the greatest possible difficulty that the Government were able to get any one party to undertake to erect a mill in that quarter. But at a later period timber limits were sold to parties who built no mills. The quantity of land allotted was a minimum quantity which would not likely keep a large mill running for more than four or five years; but newspaper men that I could name applied for timber limits and obtained them, and assigned them to parties who desired to get possession of them; and in that way large areas passed into the hands of single men, although it would seem, on the face of the regulations, that it was intended that no one should hold more than a certain limited quantity.

Mr. DALY. Who are these newspaper men?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I can name one. Mr. Farrer obtained a limit and assigned it almost immediately to the party who urged him to apply, and that party was a mill man who had already a limit; and I understand that several others did the same and assigned their interest to that same party, and that, too, at a time when he was editor of the 'Times' in Winnipeg.

Mr. DALY. It is all in the 'Hansard' of 1882.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Now let me say this. The hon. gentleman has referred to the Bill which I introduced and which he said permitted any man—

Mr. DAVIN. Fifteen men.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). To build a road anywhere.

Mr. DALY. Wobble all over the country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There could not be any wobbling done under the Bill. There never was a measure more steady on its legs. The party would have to build the road upon the most convenient lines, the most direct lines, because the company building the road could not make an unfavourable location or undertake to lengthen their line beyond what was necessary, else they would not prevent another company building a competing line and taking away their traffic. There could have been no such speculations as my hon. friend pointed out, under that measure, as have been engaged in since, because the parties had to be substantial parties and contribute a substantial sum before they received a charter at all. There could be no speculative organization without a large contribution of money, and there could be no object in such a speculation because the amount of money was such that the company, while it would be well aided in the construction of the road, would receive nothing which would enable them to carry on railway operations unless the road paid some dividends. I am not going to enter into a discussion of that measure. It was proposed sixteen years ago, and this country is a new country. We are moving with some degree of rapidity, I hope, if we are not in every respect moving satisfactorily; and that being so, it is perfectly absurd not to consider present circumstances when called upon to consider a policy. Why, the hon. gentleman quite forgets that we are fifteen years away from the time he mentions, and that the condition of the country has altered. I believe that if that scheme had been carried out, we would have had a very much larger population—three or four times the present population—with very great railway facilities, and with very much less mileage of road, and we could have concentrated that population in a way that it is not likely to be concentrated for a quarter of a century, at least, to come. But we are to look at what was done, we are to look at the roads already constructed, we are to consider what this immense mileage of road has cost this country in land, and we are to consider whether that has been the wisest use that could have been made of the territories at our disposal. Why, when Lord Clarendon sold Dunkirk to the French, nobody conceived that the sale could be recalled; but everybody was willing to admit that, notwithstanding the fact that the mischief had been done and could not be undone, His Lordship was responsible for the evil he had inflicted upon his country. And my hon. friend, by his motion, does not propose to say that what has been done can be undone, or that we could start out to-day from precisely the position we occupied in 1878, when hon. gentlemen opposite succeeded to office. But we say this, that the course which the hon. gentleman and his friends have pursued since is not a satisfactory one, and ought not to be persisted in from this time forward.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker. I desire to call attention to the fact the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) and the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) have not voted.

Mr. TISDALE. I was paired with the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar). Had I not been paired I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was paired with the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver).

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Committee rose and reported resolution.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 8th June, 1894.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF— CONCURRENCE.

Resolutions adopted in Committee on Ways and Means (May 29th) reported and read the first time, as follows:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to revise and consolidated the Acts and parts of Acts now in Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

force respecting the duties of Customs, and that for this purpose it is expedient to repeal the following Acts or parts thereof not heretofore repealed, viz. :—

The Act, Chapter 33, Revised Statutes, intituled: "An Act respecting the duties of Customs."

50-51 Victoria, Chapter 39, intituled: "An Act to amend the Act respecting the duties of Customs."

53 Victoria, Chapter 20, intituled: "An Act to amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs."

53 Victoria, Chapter 21, intituled: "An Act to amend the Act of the present session, intituled: 'An Act to amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs.'"

54-55 Victoria, Chapter 45, intituled: "An Act to amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs."

55-56 Victoria, Chapter 21, intituled: "An Act further to amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs."

56 Victoria, Chapter 16, intituled: "An Act further to amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs."

And to provide otherwise by enacting that the following be substituted in lieu thereof:—

1. That unless the context otherwise requires—

(a) The initials "n.e.s." represent and have the meaning of the words "not elsewhere specified";

(b) The initials "n.o.p." represent and have the meaning of the words "not otherwise provided for";

(c) The initials "f.o.b." represent and have the meaning of the words "free on board";

(d) The expression "gallon" means an Imperial gallon;

(e) The expression "ton" means two thousand pounds avoirdupois;

(f) The expression "proof" or "proof spirits," when applied to wines or spirits of any kind, means spirits of a strength equal to that of pure ethyl alcohol compounded with distilled water in such proportions that the resultant mixture shall at a temperature of sixty degrees Fahrenheit have a specific gravity of 0.9198 as compared with that of distilled water at the same temperature;

(g) The expression "gauge," when applied to metal sheets or plates or to wire, means the thickness as determined by Stubbs' Standard Gauge;

(h) The expression "in diameter," when applied to tubing, means the usual inside diameter measurement;

(i) The expression "sheet," when applied to metals, means a sheet or plate not exceeding three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness;

(j) The expression "plate," when applied to metals, means a plate or sheet more than three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness.

2. That the expressions mentioned in section two of "The Customs Act," as amended by section two of "The Customs Amendment Act, 1888," whenever they occur herein, or in any Act relating to the Customs, unless the context otherwise requires, have the meaning assigned to them respectively by the said sections two; and any power conferred upon the Governor in Council by "The Customs Act," to transfer dutiable goods to the lists of goods which may be imported free of duty is not hereby abrogated or impaired.

3. That the whole or part of the duties hereby imposed upon fish and other products of the fisheries may be remitted as respects either the United States or the Island of Newfoundland, or both, upon the proclamation of the Governor in Council, which may be issued whenever it appears to its satisfaction that the Governments of the United States and the Island of Newfoundland, or of either of them, have made changes in their tariffs of duties imposed upon articles imported from Canada in reduction or repeal of the duties in force in the said countries respectively.

4. That whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that the Governments of France and Spain, or either of them, have made changes in their tariff of duties imposed upon articles imported from Canada, in reduction or repeal of the duties now in force in the said countries, he may by proclamation, order the whole or part of the duty of thirty per centum ad valorem hereby imposed upon wines imported into Canada to be remitted as respects importations from the said countries, or from that one of the said countries by the Government of which such change in its tariff of duties has been made as aforesaid.

5. That any goods or packages being the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada, and having been exported therefrom and intended to be returned, may be admitted free of duty on being re-imported into Canada, provided such goods or packages were entered for exportation, and branded or marked by a collector or proper officer of Customs, and are fully identified by the collector or proper officer at the port or place where they are so re-imported; and provided further, that the property in such goods or packages has continued in the same person or persons by whom they were exported, and that such re-importation takes place within one year of the exportation thereof.

6. That all medicinal or toilet preparations imported for completing the manufacture thereof, or for the manufacture of any other article by the addition of any ingredient or ingredients, or by mixing such preparations, or by putting up or labelling the same, alone or with other articles or compounds, under any proprietary or trade name, shall be, irrespective of cost, valued for duty and duty paid thereon at the ordinary market value in the country whence imported of the completed preparation when put up and labelled under such proprietary or trade name, less the actual cost of labour and material used or expended in Canada in completing the manufacture thereof or of putting up or labelling the same.

7. That all medicinal preparations whether chemical or otherwise, usually imported with the name of the manufacturer, shall have the true name of such manufacturer and the place where they are prepared permanently and legibly affixed to each parcel by stamp, label or otherwise; and all medicinal preparations imported without such names so affixed shall be forfeited.

8. That on imported Indian corn, to be kiln-dried and ground into meal for human food, or ground into meal and kiln-dried for such use, under such regulations as are made by the Governor in Council, there may be allowed a drawback of ninety per cent of the duty paid.

9. That any person who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which shall be on the person accused, sends or brings into Canada, or who, being in Canada, has in his possession, any bill-heading or other paper appearing to be a heading or blank capable of being filled up and used as an invoice, and bearing any certificate purporting to show, or which may be used to show, that the invoice which may be made from such bill-heading or blank is correct or authentic, is guilty of a misdemeanour and liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, in the discretion of the court, and the goods entered under any invoice made from any such bill-heading or blank shall be forfeited.

10. That the export of deer, wild turkeys, quail, partridge, prairie fowl and woodcock in the carcase or parts thereof, is hereby declared unlawful and prohibited; and any person exporting or attempting to export any such article shall for each such offence, incur a penalty of one hundred dollars, and the article so attempted to be exported shall be forfeited, and may, on reasonable cause of suspicion of intention to export the same, be seized by any officer of the Customs, and, if such intention is proved, shall be dealt with as for breach of the Customs laws: Provided, that this section shall not apply to the export, under such regulations as are made by the Governor in Council, of any carcase or part thereof of any deer raised or bred by any person, company or association of persons upon his or their own lands.

11. That regulations respecting the manner in which molasses and syrups shall be sampled and tested for the purpose of determining the classes to which they belong with reference to the duty chargeable thereon shall be made by the Controller of Customs; and the instruments and appliances necessary for such determination shall be designated by him and supplied to such officers as are by him charged with the duty of sampling and testing such molasses and syrups; and the decision of any officer (to whom is so assigned the testing of such articles) as to the duties to which they are subject under the tariff shall be final and conclusive, unless upon appeal to the Commissioner of Customs within thirty days from the rendering of such decision, such decision is, with the approval of the Controller, changed; and the decision of the Commissioner with such approval shall be final.

12. That in the case of all wines, spirits, or alcoholic liquors subject to duty according to their relative strength of proof, such strength shall be ascertained either by means of Sykes's hydrometer or of the specific gravity bottle, as the Controller of Customs may direct; and in case such relative strength cannot be correctly ascertained by the direct use of the hydrometer or gravity bottle, it shall be ascertained by the distillation of a sample and the subsequent test in like manner of the distillate.

13. That subject to the foregoing provisions and to the requirements of the "Customs Act," (Chapter 32 of the Revised Statutes, as amended) there shall be levied, collected and paid upon all goods enumerated, or referred to as not enumerated in Schedule A hereto appended,—the several rates of duties of Customs set forth and described in the said Schedule and set opposite to each item respectively or charged thereon as not enumerated when such goods are imported into Canada or when taken out of warehouse for consumption therein:

(2.) That subject to the same provisions and to the further conditions contained in Schedule B hereto appended, all goods enumerated in the said Schedule B may be imported into Canada or may be taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, without the payment of any duties of Customs thereon :

(3.) That the importation into Canada of any goods enumerated, described or referred to in Schedule C hereto appended, is prohibited, and that any such goods if imported shall thereby become forfeited to the Crown and shall be destroyed, and that any person importing any such prohibited goods or causing or permitting the same to be imported shall in each case incur a penalty of two hundred dollars.

14. That the value of all bottles, flasks, jars, demijohns, carboys, casks, hogsheads, pipes, barrels and all other vessels or packages, manufactured of tin, iron, lead, zinc, glass or any other material, and capable of holding liquids,—and all packages in which goods are commonly placed for home consumption, including cases in which bottled spirits, wines or malt liquors or other liquids are contained, — and every package being the first receptacle or covering inclosing goods for purpose of sale, shall in all cases not otherwise provided for, in which they contain goods subject to an ad valorem duty or a specific and ad valorem duty, be taken and held to be a part of the fair market value of such goods for duty, and shall be charged with the same rate of ad valorem duty as is to be levied and collected on the goods they contain ; and when they contain goods subject to a specific duty only, such packages shall be charged with a duty of Customs of twenty per cent ad valorem, to be computed upon their original fair market value : and all or any of the above packages described as capable of holding liquids, when containing goods exempt from duty under this Act, shall be charged with a duty of twenty per centum ad valorem, provided the contents thereof are not of such a nature that the destruction of the package becomes necessary in order to release the goods,— and all other packages containing free goods and being the first receptacles or inner covering inclosing goods for the purpose of sale, shall be dutiable at the same rate as if imported empty ; but all packages not hereinbefore specified, and not herein specially charged with or declared liable to duty under regulations, and being the usual and ordinary packages in which goods are packed for exportation, according to the general usage and custom of trade, shall be free of duty.

Provided further, that all special packages or coverings unlike those in which such goods as they contain are usually packed for home consumption, and all such packages or coverings as are apparently designed for use other than in the importation of the goods they contain, shall be subject to the same rate of duty as they would be if imported empty or separate from their contents.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to cancel all Orders in Council and all departmental regulations contrary to or inconsistent with any of the provisions of the foregoing resolution or of the Schedules thereto.

3. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the foregoing resolutions and the alterations thereby made in the rate of duties of Customs pay-
