So that if one remembers that judicial duties have to be performed to some extent in vacation, and the allowance is perfectly within the right of the judge to draw for the days he is absent from home, even though those days are Sundays and holidays, one will see that the conclusion can by no means be reached that in consequence of the number of days charged there must necessarily have been some very grave reason for inquiry. In the case of Mr. Justice Tellier, I have to add this, from the examination I have been able to make of the vouchers, that the sum which he is alleged to have drawn, somewhat over $1,600, for one year, covers, not an allowance for twelve months, merely, but for thirteen months. However, these are circumstances which can be inquired into, and are being inquired into, without the intervention of the House, and I am sure that it would not be the disposition of the House, on a bald charge having been made, to undertake an inquiry into the matter without giving me an opportunity, first, to examine the accounts thoroughly, and to lay the result of my examination before the House; because, if I am not greatly disappointed, I shall be able to satisfy the House, from an examination of the dockets at the various places at which the judge sat, that the sums they have charged for are fair and correct. I can ascertain exactly the places at which the judges sat on the various days for which they have drawn allowances. There is the further charge, in the case of Judge Ouimet, that he has not lived within his district in accordance with the terms of his appointment and his commission. I have to say the same of that as I said with regard to the accounts. While I do not deny that it is matter for investigation, I submit that it is not matter for investigation by this House, until, at least, the charge has been submitted to the judge himself, and his answer obtained, and the facts investigated which are alleged to have taken place with regard to that circumstance. But, as regards those charges which allege impropriety in the discharge of official duties, unfitness for the position, and all that, I have simply to reaffirm what I said to the House, that, in my humble opinion, they are not such as the House ought to entertain; but if the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) thinks proper to commit to me his accusations in proper form with proper allegations, I will see that they are transmitted to the judges concerned, and will be in a position to lay before the House the answers which the judges make, and for such action of the House as seems called for under the circumstances, if the House should desire to have the results of the investigation. I read a telegraphic communication from Mr. Justice Bossé; I should have read a letter which Judge Tellier addressed to me on the subject after he had heard what had transpired in this House. Mr. Justice Tellier's communication is dated St. Hyacinthe, 13th July, 1894, and the learned judge says:

SIR,—I have the honour to protest my innocence and I ask a full and complete investigation into the subject matter of the accusation which has been made against me in the House of Commons. I do not see how I shall be able to continue to exercise efficiently the sacred administration of justice if I do not possess the principal quality required of a magistrate, integrity. It is necessary, therefore, that the truth or the falsity of the accusation should be established by an enquete. I therefore demand immediately that Mr. Tarte specify and define the facts which have been made the basis of his action in order that I may be able to answer his accusation, and I have confidence that he will respond to my request and that your spirit of justice will induce you to afford me an enquete, which I pray you will instantly institute in this regard. I have the honour to draw your attention to the fact that the Auditor has not included that portion of the expenses incurred up to June 30th, 1893. Instead of $1,626 inserted as being drawn for the twelve months, the amount should have been entered at $1,470.

I have also received a communication, altogether without any intimation being sent by me or any communication made on my part, dated St. Hyacinthe, 14th July, 1894. It is addressed to me, and is as follows:—

We, the undersigned, considering that the magistracy of the country is one of the bulwarks of society, and that it is due to the magistrates that the most profound respect should be rendered them in order to maintain their supremacy and prestige, beg to say that the judges of the province of Quebec have been renowned for their integrity and their learning; we have seen certain accusations brought up in Parliament on 12th July inst., respecting Judge Tellier, judge of the Superior Court of St. Hyacinthe, whose name has been mentioned in the House; the judge has always merited the confidence and respect of the suitors in his district, he being considered a judge of integrity, industry, learning and courtesy to the full satisfaction of those to whom he has to render justice. He has frequently been called to Montreal to sit as a judge, and it is but just to remark that his thorough knowledge of law and his impartiality have elevated him in the esteem and consideration of the judges, his colleagues, and members of the Bar. Knowing his reputation and character, we are happy to render this testimony in regard to his merits, and we consider it to be our duty, under the circumstances, to submit this testimony for your high consideration.

This communication is signed by the bishop of St. Hyacinthe, by the coadjutor bishop, by a number of clergymen of high rank, and by citizens of high station. I thought it to be my duty to read this paper to the House, although it has not any immediate connection with the charges, because it is signed, as I have said, by a number of eminent gentlemen including many connected with banking, commerce and various classes of business and by men of the highest reputation in that community.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is hardly evidence in connection with this inquiry.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is quite as good evidence as anything that has been said.

Mr. TARTE. The right hon. gentleman has read to the House a letter which he wrote to me, and which was dated 14th July. I think in all fairness he should have read at the same time the answer I sent.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have not received it, but I shall be very glad if the hon. gentleman will read it.

Mr. TARTE. It was mailed at 2 o'clock to-day. This is the letter. It is dated Ottawa, 17th July, and is addressed to Hon. Sir John Thompson, Minister of Justice, Ottawa:

OTTAWA, 17 juillet 1894.

Au Très honorable

Sir JOHN THOMPSON,
Ministre de la Justice,
Ottawa.

MONSIEUR,—J'ai reçu hier, à deux heures, votre lettre datée: "Cabinet du ministre de la Justice, Ottawa, 14 juillet 1894," vous dites:

"Referring to the charges against certain judges of the province of Quebec, which you laid before the House of Commons, on the 12th instant, on the motion that the House should resolve itself into Committee on Ways and Means, I have to ask whether you can and will furnish me with particulars of your accusations? I do not refer to the charges relating to travelling expenses or to the complaint as to one of the judges not residing at the place of residence designated for him, but I refer to all other charges, other than these.

Je regrette la décision à laquelle vous en êtes venu, et je vous en laisse toute la responsabilité. Je vous ai donné, dans le discours prononcé par moi en Chambre, le 12 courant, des renseignements et des faits spécifiques plus que suffisants pour qu'il soit, dans mon opinion, de votre devoir de recommander au parlement une enquête sur la conduite des juges que j'ai nommés.

Je me crois donc tenu de refuser respectueusement à cette phase des procédures, d'autres renseignements que ceux que j'ai mis devant le parlement.

Mais je suis prêt, si une enquête est accordée, à fournir au sujet de mes accusations, tous les détails et renseignements qui sont d'usage en pareil cas.

I will translate in English:

SIR,—I received yesterday at 2 o'clock your letter dated, Office of the Minister of Justice, Ottawa, 14th July, 1894. You say:

"Referring to the charges against certain judges of the province of Quebec, which you laid before the House of Commons, on the 12th instant, on the motion that the House should resolve itself into Committee on Ways and Means, I have to ask whether you can and will furnish me with particulars of your accusations? I do not refer to the charges relating to travelling expenses or to the complaint as to one of the judges not residing at the place of residence designated for him, but I refer to all other charges other than these.

“My reason for addressing you this letter, is that I feel obliged to state to the House if I should be called on, for my opinion, that what you have laid before the House, in connection with the subject, does not warrant the House in proceeding on your accusations, notwithstanding the desire of the judges concerned that an investigation should take place.

“I regret the decision to which you have come and I leave with you the whole responsibility of it. I have given in the speech made by me in the House on the 12th inst., information and specific facts, more than sufficient to make it, in my humble opinion, your duty to recommend to Parliament an inquiry on the conduct of the judges whom I have named. I then feel bound to respectfully decline at this stage of the proceedings to give you other information than that I have put before Parliament, but I am ready, if an inquiry is granted, to furnish you in connection with my accusation all details and information that can be exacted in such a case.”

That is, Sir, the answer that I have addressed to the right hon. gentleman. This is the answer by which I mean to stand before this House. I claim that I gave in my speech more information than has been given in nearly all the cases upon which an inquiry has been recommended by Ministers of Justice. But the right hon. gentleman has thought proper to advise Parliament that in his opinion it would be unworthy of us to hold such an inquiry, and that we would fail in our duties as a House if we made up our minds to make such an inquiry. As I said in the letter that I have just read: let him take the responsibility of the position he has assumed. He occupies a very high position. He is responsible to the whole Dominion for the advice that he has given to this House of Commons. The right hon. gentleman began by refuting the accusations, or rather explaining the accusations, that I have made before the House, by alluding to two judges that I had not thought proper to bring before Parliament. I must immediately state, Sir, that what Mr. Justice Jetté says in his letter is perfectly true, when he asserts that strong political and personal pressure has been brought upon me to prevent me to ask for an inquiry concerning Mr. Justice Davidson's conduct. I am very much surprised indeed, knowing the hon. and learned magistrate as I do, to hear the strong and violent language that he has thought proper to use towards me. I know the hon. gentleman, and if the hon. Minister of Public Works, who says “Hear, hear,”—

Mr. OUIMET. I have not said “hear, hear.”

Mr. TARTE. At any rate, if the hon. gentleman who says “hear, hear” would kindly join me to ask for an inquiry, he would be more than surprised. I did not fish in the moon the information I got concerning Mr. Justice Davidson. I have not alluded in my speech of the 12th instant to Mr. Justice Davidson. Still, the correspondence which has been read before us to-day cannot be left, I suppose, without any answer from me at some future date. I am sorry that this correspondence has been brought before the House; sorry in one sense, because it might lead us to some larger inquiry than the one that we have contemplated. Still, the moment that the hon. and learned Mr. Justice Jetté has thought proper to speak in the violent language that he has assumed to-day—well, I have only to state to him: that as soon as I am in a position to do it—I do not surely mean to make any accusation against him—but as soon as I am in a position, as soon as Parliament meets again, we might be obliged to refer to it again. The Minister of Justice, I hope, will be the first man to help me to get an inquiry into that celebrated and famous commission in which Mr. Justice Jetté has taken part. I think Mr. Justice Jetté has laboured under some kind of a misapprehension. He has been threatened by the Conservative press on many occasions to be dragged before public opinion concerning the Mercier commission—if I may call it that way—the Baie de Chaleur Commission. The Conservative press has covered him with very violent abuse, and, Sir, it seems to me that he has taken revenge upon me to-day from the insulting language to which he has been subjected. At any rate, I do not intend to allude very much longer to Mr. Justice Jetté and Mr. Justice Davidson. The second document that the right hon. gentleman has quoted is a letter from Mr. Beauchemin, a lawyer from St. Hyacinthe, in which the learned lawyer states that he never authorized me to use a certain document, the existence of which he does not deny. He says the truth when he asserts that he never authorized me to use that document; but, Sir, that document does not belong any more to him. That document has been put into the hands of a member of this Parliament, so that Mr. Justice Tellier should be impeached. I make this statement, and I am prepared to prove it as soon as an inquiry is granted to me. Mr. Beauchemin and Mr. Mallette have put in the hands of a member of this Parliament, who has it in his possession, the very document that Mr. Beauchemin speaks about, to induce that hon. gentleman to impeach Mr. Justice Tellier. Now, I suppose that it is not necessary for me to dwell upon that document. Justice has been made with it, as justice would be made of a great many of the statements that the right hon. gentleman has been furnished with to-day. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman is in perfect good faith. I have no doubt about that. But he has been deceived. What can he expect—I want to know from him, for instance—from Mr. Justice Ouimet? Will the right hon. gentleman deny that he has ordered Mr. Justice Ouimet to reside in Sorel? He did order him to reside in Sorel. What was the answer of the judge, signed by himself? That I have put before you. The answer of the judge, a man high in position, a man who ought to give good example, and not an example of false statements, the answer has been: I have rented a house in Sorel and I reside in Sorel. The right hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Justice Ouimet did not say the truth at that time. Every one living within the twenty-five miles from Montreal or Sorel knows that Mr. Justice Ouimet has never lived in Sorel, and that he has willingly and wilfully deceived the right hon. gentleman. The right hon. gentleman may say: that he will not bring before this Chamber the conduct of judges who deceive public opinion and the highest authority. I claim that I am doing my duty in calling attention to their conduct. The Prime Minister has thought fit to read a letter from the Rev. Bishop of St. Hyacinthe and his assistant. I respect very much the right rev. gentleman, but I never learned before that he was bound to preside over the administration of justice, or to give certificates to the judges. He is an able man in his calling; he is a very religious man, but I never suspected before that he is a man very much learned in the law. I want to know if the right hon. gentleman has been justified in reading this letter before Parliament? The moral conduct of Mr. Justice Tellier, as to which the Right Rev. Bishop may have given a certificate, has not been assailed; I have not assailed his moral conduct.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly, you charged him with larceny.

Mr. TARTE. Does the right hon. gentleman mean to say that in such a charge as the one I made, it is the bishop of the diocese who should judge? I want to know from him if he holds that doctrine to-day?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I intend to make the investigation for myself; but the bishop has the right that every citizen has to testify to the character of an honest man, and to express his opinion of the character of a man whom he thinks a dishonest man.

Mr. TARTE. I do not deny the right of the bishop to sign certificates; but I doubt very much if the right hon. gentleman has taken the proper way of bringing that letter before Parliament. At any rate, that is his own business, not mine. Mr. Beauchemin, in the letter which he has written to the Prime Minister, has stated that to his knowledge—and I fully admit that he is one of the leaders of the Conservative party—Mr. Justice Tellier has never looked for candidates.

Mr. TARTE.

Well, Sir, it is just as well for me, while his name is on my lips, to address myself to his case immediately. The right hon. gentleman says that I have not given particulars enough to warrant him to advise the House to grant an inquiry. Well, I cannot claim that I have gone very deep—as deep as the right hon. gentleman may have gone himself—into the cases which have been brought before Parliament in regard to judges; but still I have made some inquiries, and I hold that in the case of every judge to whom I have alluded I have given more information and more particulars than have been given in a great many cases. In Mr. Justice Tellier's case, what did I do? I stated from my seat, and I state again, that I believe I am in a position to prove that Mr. Justice Tellier has been on the Bench a partisan. I think I am in a position to prove—I am sure I am in a position to prove—that Mr. Justice Tellier has been looking for candidates. That may be a slight offence in the eyes of some hon. gentlemen opposite; but if we stand here by the doctrine that judges having to administer justice can be at the same time politicians, I want to know where we are going. I am prepared to prove these facts; will the right hon. gentleman say that these are not particulars? What does he want more? He wants the dates, I suppose. I am not such a fool as to give beforehand the dates, so that my witnesses may be suppressed on a future occasion. Let the right hon. gentleman grant me an inquiry, and I am prepared to give him the dates immediately. I am not bound to give him the dates now. I am only bound to state the facts, and I have stated the facts from my seat in this Chamber.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not want the names of the hon. gentleman's witnesses at all; but let him comply with what I have challenged him to do in my letter, and he shall have the inquiry to his heart's content.

Mr. TARTE. Let me understand what the right hon. gentleman wants, and I will answer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will repeat it. I said that I did not expect the hon. gentleman to furnish me with the names of his witnesses, and therefore he need not be under any apprehension that those witnesses would be interfered with before the enquete. But if he will give me the particulars which I ask for in my letter, I shall be glad, after submitting the charges to the judges and obtaining their answer, to carry on the enquete if the circumstances justify an inquiry at all.

Mr. TARTE. I claim that according to the precedents, the statements I have made in the House are particulars sufficient to make it a duty on the part of the right hon. gentleman to grant an inquiry. Further particulars than those I am not bound to give—it would not be prudent for me to give. But, Sir, is it not a particular, is it not a definite basis of accusation, to say that a judge has been looking for candidates? If it were proved before the right hon. gentleman and the House that Mr. Justice Bossé—

An hon. MEMBER. Tellier.

Mr. TARTE. It is about the same thing. If it were proved that Mr. Justice Tellier is so actively engaged in politics that at times he is looking for candidates, is that not a particular that would justify the hon. gentleman in granting an inquiry? I have alluded to a great many other facts, which I am not going to recite to-day. But, Sir, let us come to Mr. Justice Bossé. Mr. Justice Bossé has contented himself with sending a telegram in which he says that he hopes that the right hon. gentleman will put an end to the slander on the administration of Justice. I never thought that by bringing before this Chamber the name of the learned and honourable Mr. Justice Bossé, I was bringing into disrepute the whole administration of justice. He is only one man—one man of some ability, but only one man; nothing more. I know him very well. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, the other day pronounced a eulogy upon him, in which I have no objection to concur to-day, in which my hon. friend stated that when he was at the Bar Mr. Justice Bossé argued his cases in a very fair way, and that on some occasions on the Bench he gives good judgments. I do not deny that at all. What I stated before this Chamber the other day, and what I repeat to-day, is this, that Mr. Justice Bossé is a violent partisan, and I am in a position to bring before a committee of inquiry dozens and dozens of most respectable citizens to bear out what I say. In his case also I have given particulars. The right hon. gentleman should have explained to us what he means by particulars. I stated that in four consecutive terms of the criminal court Mr. Justice Bossé has proved to be a partisan. I pointed out the decisions he has given; I indicated the procedures he has adopted to arrive at his political ends; I even indicated the dates. Yet the right hon. gentleman is quite prepared to say that I gave no particulars. Sir, my speech is not a speech such as the right hon. gentleman can deliver, surely not. I do not claim to be a man of his ability. But my speech is there; my speech is true, every word I uttered in it—not eloquently, but knowing that I was speaking the truth. Every word is true. I will not take one iota from it. The right hon. gentleman may say that it would not be worthy of a parliamentary inquiry. Sir, I do not stand to-day before you with any uncertainty in my mind as to the conduct I am going to follow in this matter. The right hon. gentleman has a strong majority behind him. He is all-powerful in this House, but if I have stated the truth, and I have told the truth, the right hon. gentleman will not resist very long the pressure of public opinion. The right hon. gentleman has been unwisely advised. I think that if he had followed his own inclination to justice, his own notions of justice, he would have granted me the inquiry. I do not intend to detain the House at any greater length, but still I shall say what I intend to say, in spite of the great displeasure some of my hon. friends opposite evince. I am very sorry to have to displease them on such an occasion, especially when there should be only one opinion in Parliament. This surely is not a question of party. If my charges are not true—if the hon. gentleman, taking my speech as it is, grants an inquiry, and my charges are not proved true, surely I will suffer one of the greatest humiliations a member of this House can suffer. But if they be proved true, justice will have gained a great deal. I have looked into precedents, but I will only refer the House to the case of Mr. Baron Smith in 1834. Mr. Baron Smith was accused before Parliament by Mr. O'Connell of being a violent and a partisan judge. He was accused of some other things also; but if you look at the debate which took place then, you will find, Sir, that, by a majority of sixty-nine, the House of Commons granted the inquiry, in spite of the fact that there were no other particulars given. Mr. O'Connell stated from his seat: that Mr. Baron Smith was a violent partisan, that he had sat during two nights, that he had made political speeches from the Bench—

An hon. MEMBER. Did he have any fight in any barber shop?

Mr. TARTE. I do not know what the hon. gentleman wants to say. I would be very much obliged to him if he would kindly explain what he means.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. You spoke of a violent judge.

Mr. TARTE. I am not using my language, but Mr. O'Connell's, whose language I believe to be just as good as that of my hon. friend. Mr. O'Connell accused Baron Smith of being a violent judge, of being old, of having sat during two nights. Well, if Mr. Justice Bossé, on the Bench, resorted to the violent means to which he did resort, just to defeat the ends of justice, that surely is a cause for inquiry. He did more than that. I pointed to the right hon. gentleman an instance of his procedure which he can verify to-morrow. If he will apply to the office of the Attorney General at Quebec, he will find there, I suppose, a copy of the nolle prosequi with which the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) was then provided. And I say it again, I am prepared to prove every word I say. I will be contradicted all along the line, I know; but when it comes to an inquiry under oath, you will see that I will not be as much contradicted, and you will see also if some witnesses do not seem inclined to tell the truth, whether they may not be compelled to do so. I am sorry to have to keep the House so long, but I felt it my duty, after the language the right hon. gentleman used, to reassert my position. I may be wrong, some men more able than I have been wrong, but I have the sincere and strong conviction that I am right, and that in my native province the administration of justice is not to-day what it should be. If the lawyers who practice at the Bar were not afraid, as they are, of the Bench, they would indorse, nearly all of them, what I say. After my speech of the other day, one of my colleagues said: I know you are quite right, but we cannot speak.

Mr. AMYOT. Who?

Mr. TARTE. The hon. gentleman is always asking for names. I believe he is one of those who complained more bitterly, but he will not say it, of course. I appeal to my colleagues here. They know that I say the truth. The right hon. gentleman has taken upon himself to refuse an inquiry. I beg him to-day again to make an inquiry, not only into the cases I have pointed out, but into the general administration of justice in the province of Quebec, and he will there find abuses he has no idea of. He will find evidence of things he has no idea of. I do not speak of crimes, but of political and tyrannical interference and neglect of duty.

Mr. AMYOT. As to the references which the hon. gentleman has made concerning what I have already said, they are, from beginning to end, not only to-day, but on the two occasions he spoke previously, entirely the reverse of the truth.

Mr. TARTE. Surely I have the right to make a personal explanation. I am prepared to resign my seat, if within twenty-four hours I do not prove that the hon. gentleman went himself to the department—

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a personal explanation. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to say a word with regard to the exhibition we have just witnessed. I have some experience in this Parliament, and I have had the opportunity of observing another Parliament during many years, and this is one of the most disgraceful exhibitions I have ever witnessed. What have we heard? This gentleman comes forward and accuses a number of judges vaguely, and he says if the Government will grant an inquiry, he is in possession of facts and particulars which can be laid before that inquiry and which he will call witnesses to prove. But although this is the highest court in the realm, forsooth, he can occupy the time of this great consult of the nation with these vague charges, but we are not considered worthy of being put in possession of one fact that would justify the hon. gentleman in making the statements he did. He goes further, he makes a wholesale charge against the entire judiciary of the province of Quebec. It is the same sort of charge that any disreputable man in any part of Canada could rise up and make against any Bench of judges. He says that if an inquiry is made, without giving any reason for that inquiry, the gravest misconduct will be discovered. I repeat that the exhibition was a disgraceful one and unworthy of the dignity of this House; and if such exhibitions be repeated, a course must be taken to express the opinion of this House in regard to them and to maintain its dignity.

Mr. TARTE. Take whatever course you like. Take any course you like.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman, towards the conclusion of his remarks, for perhaps fifteen minutes, indulged in repetitions and suggestions; but he made one very peculiar statement, he said, "I may be wrong." Sir, is the man who rises in this House in a position to escape the censure of this House if he calls on the Minister of Justice to institute an inquiry into the conduct of a number of judges who evidently stand high in the estimation of the citizens of Canada in their own province, if, after making these explanations and refusing to give the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice any particulars he says: "I may be wrong." How can he say "I may be wrong" if he is in possession of the facts to justify him in taking the course he has taken, and if he is not in possession of the facts to justify him in taking the course he has taken, he is guilty of a high crime and a very great misdemeanour against this Parliament and against the efficiency and dignity of the judiciary of his province.

Mr. McCARTHY. I had intended to make a few observations somewhat in the same strain as those of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. But I do not desire to use language so strong. I will not characterize these proceedings as being disgraceful, but I will characterize them as being painful in the extreme. It seems to me that this whole matter has been out of order from beginning to end. On motion to go into Committee of Supply, an hon. gentleman has risen in his place in the House, and, without venturing to make charges, has laid upon the Table certain accusations challenging the leader of the House to adopt them and make investigation into the judiciary against whom the accusations are made. This is not the method which should be pursued in such cases. Charges should be made against judges by petition of those who are injured by the misconduct of the judge—and that was the doctrine laid down in the Bothwell case both by the leader of the Government of that day, Sir John Macdonald, and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake), or by a member in his place taking the responsibility of making a charge, not merely handing it across the House and asking another hon. gentleman to assume that responsibility. And I think, if it were in order, some proceedings ought to be adopted or some means ought to be taken by which scenes of this kind should be prevented in the future. It must tend to lower the dignity of the Bench, if charges can be made by hon. members in vague terms and without those who make them taking the responsibility of pushing them to a conclusion. I quite agree with what the First Minister has said, that these charges were altogether too vague to base an inquiry upon. A judge, Sir, like any other man, when accused has the right not merely to know that he is charged, for instance, with partiality or partisanship, but he has the right to know with reasonable certainty—not with technical formality but with reasonable certainty—when and where the alleged offence is said to have been committed. It did appear to me that the hon. gentleman who brought forward the charges knew that they could not be investigated and so put them forward to shield himself in view of former statements that he had made. I desire to say, Sir, as a member of the Bar of the province from which I come, that we ought to prevent in some way this scene being repeated and this proceeding being taken as a precedent for the future. Why, Sir, what is the case? An hon. gentleman, when the House is moved into Committee of Supply brings forward certain charges. If he has charges to make against the judges of his province the opportunity will be afforded him—the Minister leading the House will be bound to afford him that opportunity—to present his accusations. These charges are made in going into Supply and in such a form that a conclusion cannot be reached upon them in a proper way.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to say a word as to the authority cited by the hon. member for L'Islet. The hon. gentleman relied upon the case of Baron Smith, who was accused in the House of having committed himself by making violent and partisan speeches, and upon that the House of Commons granted a committee. But, on the motion of the leader of the House, a day or two afterwards—I think the very next day—the House rescinded this resolution.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not care, at this period of the session to enter into any controversy with the right hon. gentleman as to the conclusion he has arrived at with regard to the accusation brought forward by my hon. friend from L'Islet. This is a subject which it is altogether too late to discuss as fully as it might be discussed. This, however, I think may be said, that it is the undoubted privilege, not only the privilege but the right, of any member of this House to accuse any man in this country, let him be high or low, against whom he has charges to bring. We may differ as to procedure, there may be a point of controversy as to that, but as to the right of the hon. gentleman to accuse judges or anybody else, I do not believe any member of this House will deny the soundness of the view I now express. As to the point of procedure, that is a different thing. I said in addressing the House the other day that the charges might have been more specific than they were, but, at all events, there is this in the statement of the hon. member for L'Islet, he charges a judge of this land with the crime, for a crime it is, of being a partisan upon the Bench; he charges a judge with actually interfering in politics. Nothing, Sir, can be more criminal in a judge than for him who is supposed to have ceased to be in the arena of politics to come into partisan fights. I hope the accusations are unfounded, but there is enough to justify an inquiry. I agree with the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that the charges ought to be reasonably specific, and in the case I have just referred to, the charge is reasonably specific. The judge would have the right to demand particulars and that is the procedure in such cases.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No; no.

Mr. LAURIER. I would refer to the case of Mr. Justice Loranger in the year 1877. I do not know that my hon. friend from North Simcoe was on the committee. At all events the matter was referred to a committee, and the very first thing Mr. Loranger did was to obtain particulars from those who had petitioned against him. But, as I said before, the session is too far advanced to discuss this question as it should be discussed. I want only to refer in a word or two to the statement about travelling expenses to which the hon. gentleman drew my attention. He stated that he was bound to have an inquiry into the subject. I think this is very properly a subject for departmental inquiry. He stated that his duty would be to ascertain the distance travelled by the judge, the number of days he was absent from his home, &c. But there is a question of principle involved which seems to have escaped the hon. gentleman's attention. I desire to call his attention to this, that, whether it was right or wrong, the accusation is that he charged travelling expenses, or, as he put it, living expenses, while he was administering the law in the courts of the district in which he resides. I think that is a case which ought to be looked into.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is one of the points to be inquired into.

Mr. OUMET. Let me tell the hon. leader of the Opposition that a judge cannot charge a living allowance when he sits at the place indicated to him as his residence, but he has a right to charge for living allowance when he travels to hold a court in any other place, even in his own district.

Mr. LAURIER. Then I commend this species of morality of his colleague to the Minister of Justice. Here is a judge who is bound by law to reside in the district of Richelieu; he disobeys that law and resides in the district of Montreal, and he charges $6 a day for living expenses for every day that he sits in Montreal, and the hon. gentleman says that is all right. Well, if that be the kind of morality which is to prevail in the courts of Quebec, Parliament need not be surprised if the hon. member for L'Islet brings charges against the judges. Now, with regard to the judge of St. Hyacinthe, I have no more to say. The judge says that instead of drawing $1,600, he only drew $1,400 in the twelve months, that is to say he would have sat outside of his district 230 days in the year. When the judge of the district of St. Hyacinthe has to hold criminal court at least twice a year in his own district, and to hold a Superior Court every month in the year, at least one week, when in addition he has to hold court in the county of Rouville and in the county of Bagot, both in his own district, at least three or four times in the year, I cannot understand how he can be away from his district 230 days in the year.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When he goes to Rouville and the other places in his district he is entitled to be paid an allowance of $6 a day, because they are not his place of residence.

Mr. OUMET. Let me say that Mr. Justice Ouimet is not a near relative of mine, but he is a judge in our province, whose honour must be as dear to us as if his name was Smith. Mr. Justice Ouimet, by his commission, has to reside in Sorel, and his contention is that personally he does reside in Sorel. He has rented permanent lodgings in Sorel for himself, but it appears that his family, for reasons which it is not necessary for me to mention here, chooses to reside in Montreal. But to all intents and purposes Justice Ouimet has his residence in Sorel, in lodgings, for which he holds an annual lease, and when he is called out from Sorel to sit in Montreal, it appears—and he contends that he has consulted all his colleagues—that he is entitled to living allowance as being away from his own residence. If he were to charge his living allowance when he sits in Sorel, I grant that he would be in the wrong.

Mr. LAURIER. Not at all, because he resides in Sorel, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement.

Mr. OUMET. I say that if he charged his living allowance for the days he sits in Sorel, his personal and official residence, he would not be justified by law. Now, it is a very singular thing that a man should reside with his wife in order to be qualified to administer justice. Has there been any charge made against Justice Ouimet that on account of his family residing in Montreal he was absent from Sorel when required to perform his judicial functions? That is what we have to look to. Justice Ouimet contends that his permanent personal residence is in Sorel; he lives there for the administration of justice, although his family resides in Montreal. But as long as it is not alleged that by reason of his family residing in Montreal he does not properly administer justice in the district of Richelieu, he is not open to the present charge. I make this explanation in answer to the charge of the hon. member for L'Islet, who said that Justice Ouimet had lied when he stated, in his communication to the Department of Justice, that he had executed a lease for lodgings in Sorel, and that Sorel was his place of residence.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I wish to remind the leader of the Opposition of the terms of the statute upon which this extra allowance of $6 a day is granted. The statute does not contemplate the actual residence of the judge, but the residence indicated in his commission. Mr. Justice Ouimet is directed to reside in Sorel, and the moment he leaves Sorel he is entitled to the allowance mentioned in the statute.

To a judge of a Superior Court attending any court held at any other place other than that at which he is directed to reside.

Mr. LAURIER. Where does he reside—in Sorel or Montreal? The Minister of Public Works says he resides in Sorel.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). The Minister of Public Works has expressed his own views, and I am expressing mine, and I say that it is not the actual residence of the judge that the law contemplates, but the residence indicated in the commission. The commission of Justice Ouimet says that he must reside in Sorel; therefore, the moment he leaves the district of Sorel, he is entitled to the allowance mentioned in the statute.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To transfer J. J. Campbell from the outside to the inside service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act $1,400

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason for transferring this gentleman in despite of the Civil Service Act?

Mr. DALY. Mr. Campbell has been employed for eight or ten years in the Regina office, where he has acquired full knowledge of the policy that has been adopted by the Government in conducting the different agencies and other matters pertaining to the Indian reserves. Owing to the removal of the Indian commissioner here, and no successor being appointed to him, it is necessary that Mr. Campbell should be in Ottawa, because a great deal of the business that was done at Regina is being carried on here. This caused a reduction on the Regina staff, and does not increase the staff here. This officer fills the vacancy of a second-class clerk.

Interior—B. L. York, increase of salary from 1st July, 1893..... $225

Mr. DALY. Mr. York is assistant private secretary in my office. Last year Mr. McGirr, who had been private secretary to my predecessor in the management of Indian Affairs, was appointed to the position of a second-class clerk, and accordingly the allowance of $600 paid to him was saved. But the work done by my secretary in the Department of the Interior, Mr. Chisholm, was so great that he could not undertake the duties of private secretary of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs in addition to the work of Interior and the Geological Survey imposed upon him. Mr. York is a typewriter and shorthand writer, and has rendered willing and efficient services.

Marine and Fisheries—W. B. Dawson, salary as assistant engineer..... $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the necessity for this appointment?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was an amount of $2,400 due to this department on the civil list owing to the death of the chief clerk. Instead of filling that office it was deemed better to appoint Mr. Dawson, who is an able engineer, and who is now in charge of surveys. Instead of filling the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Gordon, who received a salary of $2,400, this gentleman has been appointed at $2,000.

Justice—Messrs. A. Power, Q.C., and Mr. G. L. B. Fraser, each $200 additional notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act. $400

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that we are knocking the Civil Service Act into a cocked hat. All through the Supplementary Estimates there appears the remark: "Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act." That is a bad example for any department to establish, and while now and again a special case may be made out, we should not utterly disregard the Civil Service Act. Not in one case, but in a score of cases this remark appears. I recommend the Minister of Justice, if he considers it necessary, to amend the Civil Service Act rather than adopt this mode of obtaining extra payments.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. These two are the only cases in my department in which I ask that extra allowances be made. They cover the cases of the two chief clerks.

Although any provision in the Civil Service Act with respect to salaries is quite applicable to gentlemen in their position, these cases may well be treated as exceptional on this occasion. The gentlemen are both barristers of high standing and exceptional qualifications. Mr. Power was for a long time chief clerk, and reached his maximum. He has peculiar duties to perform. These are specially connected with the examination of all criminal cases that come before the department. These include about 1,000 applications yearly for clemency and change of sentence, and he has special charge of the work of making the precis, and examining into the facts in connection with every capital case, a work he has discharged with great ability and with very great care. He also has charge of all the correspondence, reports and matters connected with treaties, such as extradition treaties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is his present salary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The maximum salary of a chief clerk, $2,400. For a professional man of his standing and services this is not too much. Mr. Fraser has been chief clerk during a somewhat shorter time, namely, seven years. I had the pleasure of recommending him for promotion to that class. His services during the last three years have largely consisted of assisting me in preparing legislation, especially the difficult work connected with the criminal code.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. In my opinion, Mr. Power should have a salary of $3,000, for he deserves it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think so.

Militia and Defence—Messrs. Bliss and Campbell, difference on salaries..... $200

Mr. HUGHES. What is the difference in salary between Mr. Bliss and Mr. Campbell?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). These officers have been exchanged. Mr. Bliss came into the Militia Department from the Privy Council office. His salary is higher by $200 than is the salary of Mr. Campbell, who exchanged, but there is really no increase in the salary all round.

To make the salary of J. B. Jackson, Registrar of Copyrights, &c., $2,100..... $175

Mr. CASEY. What is this increase?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Jackson, some four or five years ago, was eligible for a promotion. He claimed his promotion, but he had to pass a promotional examination. His work is technical, and he was led away with the idea that nobody knew enough to examine him for this promotion, and he rather objected to the promotional examination and thought that, in a technical case it would not be necessary. The thing ran on for two or three years, and then he submitted to the inevitable, and passed the examination. He thereby lost that much of salary, and it is proposed to make it good to him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Mr. Chairman, before you go any further. In looking over these estimates, I see there is no provision for anything in the Department of the Minister of Finance, or for anything in the Department of Audit, which belongs to the hon. gentleman's department.

Mr. FOSTER. In a way.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In a way, yes. I notice in reading over the correspondence attached to the Auditor General's Report, that he alludes to the fact that certain promotions have been recommended to the Minister, or to the Government through the Minister, and there is no appropriation in the Estimates for any one in that department, so that I suppose, in that respect, the Minister did not concur in the recommendations of the Auditor General. Is that the case?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the inevitable conclusion if the Auditor General has, as he has taken occasion to state in a public report, made certain recommendations for promotion. If the hon. gentleman will study the Estimates that have been brought down, he will see that the cases of promotion are very few compared with the number of departments, and he will find that in the majority of the departments there have not been promotions. There has been none in my own department because I thought the staff is sufficient to do the work, and it does not require simply promotion, to make a man do just as effective work. Where men have not come to the maximum, or where it is not considered that it is necessary to make promotion, and thus increase the number of high class clerks in a department, the Government uses its discretion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I notice further that in this respect, taking a number of years together, that the branch of the public service under the Auditor General ranks below that of any of the other departments of the Government, and that the promotions in that department have been less than they have been anywhere else. The Department of the Auditor General is a department which specially concerns the expenditure of Parliament. It is a branch of the public service that is placed under the control of Parliament, and it is only in a limited degree, under the control of the Administration. It seems to me that even to that limited degree, it would be better if it were entirely independent. If I remember rightly, the provisions of the Act, all the recommendations of that department go to Council from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER. Through the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And that all the recommendations for promotion are from the Auditor General himself.

Mr. FOSTER. All promotions are done by him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is based simply upon the obvious principle that, being at the head of that department, responsible for the duties of the persons under him, he is the most competent person to decide when and where promotions should take place, and who are the parties that are entitled to promotion. Of course, the Auditor General is never likely to stand high in the favour of the Government, because it is with regard to the action of the Government, and the expenditures of the Government, that he is obliged to exercise his authority. It is not the conduct of the Opposition, but it is the conduct of the men upon the Treasury benches that he is obliged so far as financial questions are concerned, to supervise. That being so, there is always a possibility of friction between an Auditor General and Ministers of the Crown, no matter to what party the Ministers belong, and no matter to what party the Auditor General himself may have been attached before his appointment. So I think it is the special duty of this House on every occasion to see that the audit office does not become inefficient, that the staff are thoroughly competent each to discharge his respective duties, and that that department is under the absolute control of the Auditor General himself. In fact, it seems to me that interference with or disregard of his recommendations by the Administration is incompatible with the highest efficiency of his office. If he has not an efficient staff it would be most unreasonable for the House to hold him to the highest degree of responsibility; and if promotion is refused to those under him whom he may think entitled to promotion, his authority and control over his department is weakened to a very serious extent; and so far as that is done, just so far will the public service suffer. Now, when you look at the immense amount of work that has to be done by that department in the year, the accounts that have to be investigated, and the care that has to be taken, it seems to me that the work done is indeed a very fair amount of work for the cost actually incurred; and when a report is made containing such representations as are contained in the Auditor General's Report, I do not think the House ought on an occasion like this to pass them over without giving them some attention. Now, when you look at page 4 of that report, you will see what the Auditor General himself thinks is necessary to maintain the efficiency of the staff. At an earlier period of the session I looked into this report with some care, and into the facts connected with this department as compared with the other departments of government, and I found that promotion would require to take place in this department before it would be brought up to the level of the charges incurred and the character of the officials found in the other branches of the public service. If there is one department more than another, with the single exception of the Department of Justice, requiring competent men for the discharge of the duties connected with it, it is the audit office. That being so, one would expect that the salaries of the officials in that department would, on the whole, rank considerably higher than in the other departments of government; but I think it will be found that that is not the case. In looking over the Estimates for the year, it seems to me extraordinary, when the Auditor General has made recommendations to the hon. gentleman, that he should have set aside the judgment of the Auditor General with regard to his own department, and refused promotion to any of those whom the Auditor General may have recommended for promotion. Of course, Ministers may make recommendations which their colleagues do not concur in. I suppose every hon. Minister at times finds that what he has sought to accomplish in the interest of parties in his department he has failed to secure; but when this extends to a very considerable period of time in the audit office, and when that office is under the special supervision of an officer appointed by Parliament with the view of protecting the public interest in the public expenditures, preventing irregularities, and securing the proper application of the moneys voted for various public purposes, it seems to me that a recommendation made by him ought to be fully considered by this House, and that what he consider necessary to maintain the efficiency of the office ought to receive the special attention of this committee.

Mr. FOSTER. With regard to the criticisms that have been made, I wish to make two or three general statements. In the first place, since I have been Minister of Finance, through which Minister the Auditor General makes his recommendations for appointments, I may say I think with perfect safety, that there has been no interference with his wishes as regard the quality and the character of the persons who are admitted as clerks to his department. I have never sought, and I never will seek, to have any one placed in the Auditor General's department without his complete willingness to take the person; and I have never recommended any one except after having consulted with him, and except in every case on the condition that the person shall pass a period of probation, and if he approves himself for the work to the Auditor General's satisfaction, he may be appointed, and if not, he is not appointed. In some cases I have said to the Auditor General:

"If you have any person you would like to put in there, make your recommendation, and I will take it to Council for you." So much for the first appointments. Now, I think it will be found that in all the departments there is no one where more have been appointed above the minimum of the third-class clerk according to the Civil Service Act, arising from the fact, as the Auditor General says, and rightly I think, that he requires for his work men of good training, and especially men of a mathematical turn of mind; and he is partial to men who have had that training in the universities. It is impossible in many cases to get these men at the rate of $400 a year; and it has again and again happened that men of this character have been appointed in the Auditor General's department for whom Parliament has voted a greater salary than would be authorized by the Civil Service Act. With reference to the management of his office, after the appointments have been made, that is entirely in his own hands. He makes his own promotions, not only without reference to the Minister to whom he makes his recommendations for appointments, but without reference to Council. His promotions are entirely within his own power. In the consideration of promotions, there must, of course, always be salaries granted, and the voting of moneys is not the function of any department; they must be granted on the recommendation of the Minister and the Council and voted here. It is only with reference to certain promotions which he states that he has wished to make that the Council has been unable so far in all cases to meet his wishes. If you will take the past year, you will find that we are very careful about the creation of new clerkships in the departments, and have made very few in these years. I do not think there is anything to be complained of in that respect in the Auditor General's office. The Auditor General will not state that he has not a sufficient staff to do his work. Whenever he says to me that he has not sufficient, I always co-operate with him in getting the required help, whether temporary or permanent. I believe he ought to have all the help necessary to do his work, but it may happen that not on every occasion can the Government see its way clear to make promotions in that department, when refused in others. My hon. friend, I hope, will not carry away the conviction that there is any friction between the Government and the Auditor General. The Auditor General does his duty and does it well; and, although he may not see eye to eye with the Minister of a department, he has to guide himself according to his own view of the law. I do not think it can be said that there is any friction between the Auditor General's department and the different departments of the Government, other than the differences that will occur as to the payment of accounts, the meaning of an appropriation, and the like, which are bound to occur, in some circumstances, but which do not often occur.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that though there are first-class clerks in the Auditor General's office, who, by the by, are very much below the average of chief clerk, there is but one first-class clerk in the office. I should be inclined to think, considering the character of the work which devolves on those officers, that you would want rather more than four men of that type in order to carry on the work thoroughly and efficiently. I see there are three second-class clerks who appear to have attained the maximum of their grade, which is $1,400. Compare that with some of the other departments, for instance, the Department of Agriculture. It would appear to me that the number of first-class clerks in the Auditor General's office is very disproportionate compared with the number in the Department of Agriculture, where there are five chief clerks, having an average, I see, much the same as the three chief clerks in the Auditor General's office, but there are eight first-class clerks in the Agriculture Department as against one in that office. It seems obvious that the Auditor General's office is not one in which it would be desirable to starve the men. It is extremely important that they should understand that there will be a fair promotion in that office as in any other. I would not desire to see a disproportionate number of first-class clerks in that office, but it looks to me, when you find but one, and when you find eight in the Department of Agriculture, that that is not much encouragement to those officers who may reasonably expect to be promoted. I am glad to hear the Minister say that he is disposed to leave the appointments pretty much in the Auditor General's hands. I should not be at all disposed to complain of his selecting the officers, because that is his right, but it is very well he should consult the feelings of the Auditor General, who is responsible for the work done. But I do think that the promotion appears pretty slow for a number of years in that office. It has been in existence sixteen years, and it was necessary to start it, as well as I can recollect, with three chief clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. No; we made the promotions two years ago of two chief clerks.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think besides the assistant commissioner there was a chief clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. We promoted two chief clerks there a few days ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be. Still, I think in 1878 we started with a commissioner and a chief clerk besides. Still, I am rather inclined to think that three chief clerks and one first-class clerk, looking at the character of the work required to be done there, does not testify to any very rapid promotion.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the civil service list, he will find, different from what I suppose, that the three chief clerks who are there were all promoted in 1890.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of the way in which the office was originally constituted.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it then had a commissioner and an assistant commissioner.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And a chief clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. That may have been, but if it had a chief clerk, he must have died, because we have three chief clerks there now, and they all were promoted in 1890. With reference to promotions the rule we have laid down is that a man shall earn his way to the maximum before he becomes entitled to promotion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you have many promotions of men recently appointed, over those who have been in the service for years.

Mr. FOSTER. And that you do not believe is right?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am sure it is not in many cases.

Mr. FOSTER. I agree with the hon. gentleman that in the main we ought to promote according to seniority. The promotions which were recommended by the Auditor General were not promotions of men who had reached the maximum, but who were five years below the maximum; and if they had been promoted, they would have been promoted over the heads of persons who had reached the maximum. I do not say, as an absolute rule, that such course of action should always be taken, but the rule is that before we promote clerks, they should have reached the maximum of their former class by natural accretion. It may be, however, that in exceptional cases a very clever man should be promoted before he has reached the maximum, because he may be a man whom you require in a higher position.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman speaks of clerks earning their way to the maximum by natural accretion. There is no earning in getting to the maximum in that way. A man may be doing exactly the same kind of work all the time, and his salary still keeps going, and he goes up, as a matter of routine, to the higher salary without any change of duties. In the Auditor General's office that kind of thing could not go on. A man there should be fit for work of an exceptional and particular kind, and the best judge of whether he had discharged that work properly and is entitled to promotion, is the Auditor General himself. We know that in other departments, as a rule, promotion either goes on in an automatic way or is hastened by the use of political pressure. In the Auditor General's Department it appears that this political pressure has not been as active as elsewhere; and it should not be. Men should be promoted there strictly on efficiency, and, therefore, on the report of their immediate superior, the Auditor General himself. I think it may be taken for granted that the promotions have been slow in that office, and, I think, the hon. Minister should consider whether the stream of promotion should not be started to flow. The office is one where there is much more to do than one would imagine from the mere name of it, for it has to do with the expenses of all the departments. It is a department the House should take great interest in, because the Auditor is our officer rather than a member of the Civil Service. His department should offer such inducements as will enable him to attract first-class men, it may be that the gentleman at the head of that office has not been as ardent in matters of promotion, and in pressing these matters upon the Finance Minister as some political heads of departments would be. It is well to have the Minister's attention called to it, and I think no one in the House will object to an increase of liberality in the direction suggested by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills).

Additional County Court judge,
Ontario $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For which judicial district is this appointment?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. For Nipissing district, which has just been created by the Provincial Legislature.

Additional County Court judge,
Manitoba $2,000

Mr. DALY. This is for the southern division of the eastern judicial district of Manitoba, along the American boundary, taking in the counties of Dufferin, Derby and Louise, one of the most thickly settled portions of Manitoba.

Revising correspondence, &c., upon the subject of provincial and reserved Acts, to be paid irrespective of anything in the Civil Service Act..... $800

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is to republish the first volume of the reports of legislation. It is quite out of print, and a very general desire has been expressed that it should be reprinted and continued.

Mr. CASEY. I suppose that "irrespective of anything in the Civil Service Act" means that some civil servants are to be paid for working over hours?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. One gentleman, a first-class clerk in my department is usually engaged upon this work.

Mr. CASEY. I regret to see that a great many of such votes appear in the Estimates.

This provision was made part of the Civil Service Act with a view to its being observed, and I think it is inadvisable that it should be disregarded unless it is absolutely inevitable. In these cases the Government should be able to say that nobody who is qualified for the work could be secured except in the civil service.

Estate of the late Judge Scott.
Salary and pension, 12th March to 10th April, 1894.....$168 24

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Judge Scott resigned and received superannuation allowance, but for two months preceding the appointment of his successor he attended the duties of county judge, so I propose to give his estate two months' salary, except superannuation allowance.

Widow of James Stewart. Dominion Police Force, gratuity....$100 65

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No gratuities or pensions are allowed to the police, and we very seldom have to consider the subject; but this was a case of a policeman dying while in the full vigour of life and leaving a wife and child helpless. I thought I would ask Parliament for assistance.

Penitentiaries—Kingston: increase in accountant's salary, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Penitentiaries' Act..... $100

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Creighton was the late warden's son, and he was warden's clerk of the penitentiary for the last ten years. When a vacancy occurred in the office of accountant, he was appointed accountant. Under the Penitentiaries Act he is to begin at $600, increasing to $1,000. But, in consideration of his long service, I wanted to ask Parliament to start him in his duties at a slight increase.

Kingston Penitentiary—To purchase manila fibre..... $33,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who has charge of this binder twine industry?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. A man named O'Connor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has he had experience in the business before?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, he was employed in Brantford.

Sewage tank (outside labour). $200

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is for the sewage works which are being constructed on the shore of the lake in order to prevent water of the city of Kingston from being contaminated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before we dispose of this item finally, I would like to ask in what method does the Minister of Justice propose to procure this manila fibre? Has it been advertised for?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, we have correspondence all the time with the principal houses for the sale of manila in London.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I think the Minister promised me some information with respect to where the machinery was procured. Has he been able to secure that information?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The mill itself was purchased from John Goode Cordage and Machinery Company, of New York. Machinery of that kind is not made in Canada. The engine was purchased in New York at the same time with the machinery. It could have been procured in Canada, but not in time to set the machinery going when the mill was put up.

Manitoba Penitentiary—To pay John Mustard the difference between $800 and $1,000, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Penitentiary Act $200

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He was steward and we have made him accountant on the death of the late accountant. We have abolished the office of assistant accountant, and made B. F. Power steward and store-keeper.

Dorchester Penitentiary—To provide for increase of salary to surgeon R. Mitchell, M.D. $200

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is a very old officer and very efficient, and devotes his whole time to the work. Since I assumed charge, he has had to give up his practice, a fairly remunerative one.

House of Commons—To pay for six leather trunks for new members at $25 each $150

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that we had perpetrated on us a business transaction that was neither creditable to the House nor profitable to us, when we got these leather trunks. For my part, I thought we were done getting leather trunks, and I think it is about time we stopped the practice. I believe that if, in addition to that, we were to cut off the supply of stationery, pen-knives, &c., we would not suffer any loss. There is a great deal more noise made about them in the country than they are all worth. They are of very little value, and in my estimation we could buy more of what we actually need for four or five dollars, than we get in this way. As to the leather trunks, I think they ought to be done away with entirely.

Mr. SPEAKER. With regard to this item of leather trunks, I am simply obeying the order of the House taken upon a report of the Printing Committee in 1892, which recommended that a leather trunk be given to each member elected during this Parliament. Of course, the item of $150 is conjectural to a large extent. We do not know whether six new members will be elected during this Parliament or not, but the vote is asked in order that the money may be on hand if required; if not required, it will not be used.

Mr. CASEY. Although the trunk which I obtained has only travelled between my residence and this city, I have already been called to pay several dollars for its repair. This does not speak highly for the quality of the trunk.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think that all the trunks supplied during the present Parliament have been well worth the money paid for them. I took occasion to obtain samples from different manufacturers, and we selected a trunk at $25 which seemed to be the best value, and, so far as my judgment goes, the trunk is well worth the amount paid for it.

Mr. SPROULE. If reference is made to the leather trunks supplied to members, I desire to say that a similar trunk supplied to the Senators is worth twice as much as that furnished to members of the House of Commons. I understand the trunks for both the Senate and members of the Commons cost the same figure, viz., $25 each. The House of Commons trunk would be dear at $12.50.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a serious constitutional question. I think the hon. member should be appointed a committee to investigate why the members of the House of Commons should be treated so much worse than senators.

Militia, clothing and necessaries. $20,000

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). It is found that an additional sum is required this year for the purpose of great coats for the infantry, artillery and mounted artillery. A considerable reduction was made under this head last year, but it is found that this clothing will be required during the present year.

Mr. CASEY. The economies in the Estimates of the Government one year seem to be compensated by over-expenditures in the following year. An item of $145,900 in the Supplementary Estimates for militia appears to be very large, when it is not proposed to put the militia into camp. Such an amount should have been included in the original Estimates.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). The House will remember that no less than $240,000 were deducted from the Main Estimates after they were brought down. There was an item of $159,000 struck out when the Estimates were passing through the committee, and subsequently an amount was eliminated of $82,500.

Mr. CASEY. Were not these deductions on account of the militia not going into camp?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Yes; and other economies. The hon. gentleman is in error in supposing that the amount is greater this year than previous years. It is the same amount as last year, and is less than the previous year.

Mr. CASEY. For what purpose is $25,000 required for military works and buildings ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). In the Main Estimates, $91,000 is voted. Of that amount $35,000 was required for militia property, &c., only leaving $56,000 for construction and repairs. The architect, on behalf of the department, has furnished me with a detailed statement for an amount required of $12,500 additional.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who have the contracts for the clothing ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Shorey of Montreal and the W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company have some.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the Minister give us any information as to the Tete du Pont Barracks ? How do they propose to dispose of the property ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I would be glad to see a provision made for a new barracks across the river, as the Tete du Pont Barracks are in a very unsanitary condition. I think it is a property that would sell to good advantage, and I would like to see it sold for a high figure. I believe that at an early day we will have to prepare for new barracks.

Mr. CASEY. You are spending a considerable sum of money in repairing those barracks.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). We must keep it in repair while it is occupied.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am bound to say that the barracks need repair. I notice that the Minister has taken possession of certain camping grounds on the other side of the harbour ? Is it there that he proposes to erect the new barracks or has the site been decided upon ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron.) The site has not been decided upon, but I thought the slope of ground at the rear of the college on the way to the fort would be desirable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose you could not utilize the fort.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I examined it with the architect, but I am afraid we cannot utilize it, because like other buildings put up by the Imperial Government, they are not suitable to our climate, and it would be cheaper to erect new buildings than to adapt these to modern uses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has, of course, plenty of ground there. He proposes to erect the new barracks on the slope of the hill.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). That is what I would like to do, if the Minister of Finance could see his way to give me a little money and Parliament approved.

Inspection of stores..... $1,200

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a new officer ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I think it is in the interest of the service that we should have an inspector of stores who would travel around and visit the various stores at least in the older provinces. I found on my own inspection that a great deal of condemned and useless stores kept accumulating no matter how often we had sales, and I have had to have sales twice within the last ten months. The amount derived from the sales in my time, has been about $1.858, and sales are pending now at London, Montreal, Halifax, Kingston, Quebec, and Winnipeg.

Mr. CASEY. Is it not the duty of the brigade-majors and Deputy Adjutant-Generals to inspect the stores ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). The duty was performed by the brigade-majors when we had any of them left.

Mr. CASEY. When I used to be in the force there was an inspecting officer to look after the stores, and I fancy there is such an officer still. If the inspection has not been efficient the remedy is to see that the officers do their duty rather than to appoint a new officer.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I refer to stores kept at district headquarters and also at Ottawa. The clothing is now inspected by experts temporarily employed, and I think it would be economy and a check upon these experts to have such an officer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this officer appointed ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). No.

Salary of Brigade Major Roy..... $1,200

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). This is the only brigade-major retained, and we retained him at Montreal because a great many of the regiments in that district are French-speaking, and the D.A.G. only speaks English. I found that his name by some accident was left out of the Estimates, and that it was contemplated to assign him to some other command that entailed an increase in the service which I do not propose to carry out at present.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to ask the Minister of Militia, if Brigade-Major Roy has not been appointed in place of Brigade-Major Mattice, whose services were dispensed with. I may say that soon after the last camp at La Prairie, I heard a good deal said among the officers connected with the volunteer force with regard to the treatment which Brigade-Major Mattice had received at the hands of the Department. The treatment accorded him was considered to be rather harsh. He had been in the service a good time longer than Brigade-Major Roy, but his services were dispensed with and Brigade-Major Roy appointed in his place, although Col. Mattice had been a longer time in the service.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). My hon. friend is mistaken. Brigade-Major Roy and Brigade-Major Mattice were both in the public service, and I am surprised to hear that Brigade-Major Mattice considers himself aggrieved.

Mr. SCRIVER. I did not say that Colonel Mattice said so. I said that officers connected with the volunteer force had expressed the opinion to me, that Colonel Mattice had been harshly treated.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I am confident that Colonel Mattice will not say so. Brigade-Major Roy was in the service and he is retained at the same salary. There is no change in his position.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to avail of this opportunity to say that I should be sorry that a wrong impression should go abroad regarding the proper idea of discipline in the force. I wish to correct an erroneous impression created this afternoon by the statement that it is the duty of officers commanding the forces to be harsh in discipline. I was sorry to hear some military men in the House re-echo that sentiment. If you turn to section 127 of the Regulations and Orders for the Militia of Canada you will find that it says :

A commanding officer should impress upon the men under his command, by every means in his power, the propriety of civility and courtesy in their intercourse with all ranks and classes of society. * * *

In the Queen's Regulations it says as regards the treatment of soldiers :

Officers of all ranks will practice towards their subordinates such methods of command and treatment as will not only insure respect for authority, but also foster the feeling of self-respect and personal honour essential to a high standard of military efficiency.

In no sense should the officers act in the spirit of anything like the martinet or the drill-sergeant. I was very sorry to hear the sentiment to which I refer applauded in the House to-day, and I should be sorry that the sentiment would go abroad that it was the duty of any officer in the service, high or low, to be a martinet.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Denison). It might be equally bad for a member of this House to take advantage of his position.

Mr. HUGHES. I maintain that it is not equally bad. Obedience implies the duty on the part of the officer giving the command as well as on the part of the individual.

Mr. SCRIVER.

Modern firearms..... $58,600

Mr. CASEY. Is this for new rifles ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Yes ; a portion of the money for the new rifles. When the Main Estimates were passed, I explained that I would have to ask for this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many stand of arms have you ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). We have only bought 1,000 stand of arms, and we have entered into a contract with the Imperial Government for 8,000 more. The arrangement is to pay $45,000 for two years in succession, and $35,000 in the third year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you pay for each weapon ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I cannot give my hon. friend the exact figure. It is between $14 and $15 for the Martini-Metford.

Mr. CASEY. Does the hon. Minister know the price of the Lee-Metford ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I do not.

Mr. CASEY. I suppose it was on account of the difference in price that the Martini-Metford was chosen in preference ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). No ; the Lee-Metford is more complicated.

Mr. CASEY. It has been adopted by the British service, and is to be employed by them in all sorts of rough service. There are arguments both for and against the magazine rifle. It has the effect of making one man equal to all others ; on the other hand, it is a temptation, no doubt, to the user to waste ammunition. I do not know how far the Minister has considered the difference between the two.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I have not. It was supposed by the military authorities that the Martini-Metford was amply sufficient for the requirements of our Canadian militia, being less expensive and complicated than the Lee-Metford.

Mr. CASEY. I am astonished to hear that the Minister has not considered the matter as a question of policy. What is the proposed method of distributing these rifles ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). That has not been considered yet, as we have only about 500 in the country at present.

Mr. CASEY. I do not see the use of such a small consignment. There is not any more than enough to arm two or three battalions. If that is to be done, which are the battalions to receive them ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I hope to be able to tell the hon. gentleman before the House rises. I expect the 8,000 to arrive immediately, and the Imperial Government are willing to wait for their pay.

Gratuity to Thomas Rainsford for permanent injuries received in service. $1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the circumstances of this ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Thomas Rainsford was a soldier in the regiment stationed at St. John, and he met with an accident which broke his shoulder blade. He suffered a fracture of the coracoid process of the scapula. He went into hospital, but after being there some time he was very anxious to get out and was allowed to go back to his duties. He carried his rifle and undertook to go on guard, but broke down again, and it was found that the bone had never united, and he is now a cripple for life.

Quebec—Pointing walls. $10,000

Mr. AMYOT. I would recommend to the hon. Minister the advisability of taking down parts of the walls and doing away with St. Louis Gate and Kent Gate, which are of no earthly use.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I agree with my hon. friend, and desired to carry out the suggestion, but the military authorities objected. This amount is required to keep the walls in good condition.

Monuments, battlefields of Canada $4,000

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). This is to erect monuments at Chateauguay, Lundy's Lane and Chrysler's Farm. I do not think I can accomplish the three of them out of that amount.

Mr. LOWELL. In view of the fact that a definite promise was made by the former Minister to put up a monument at Lundy's Lane, and in view of the fact also that the Lundy's Lane Historical Society first brought this matter to the attention of the Government, I think that we should have a monument erected there a little better than probably some of the others. The battle of Lundy's Lane was the final victory in that campaign which preserved to us this province of Ontario, and the scene is visited by thousands every year. There is no other battle field in Ontario or in any part of Canada that attracts so many visitors, and I would like to ask the Minister if I can safely promise to the Lundy's Lane Historical Society that this monument will be put up there very soon. The anniversary of that battle will be on the 25th of this month, and the people would be very much gratified if, at the celebration then to take place I could give them an assurance of this promise.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend from Welland (Mr. Lowell) was calling attention to the Lundy's Lane monument. I thought the Government had appropriated a sum of money for that work ?

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). It has. I was there last year, and came to an understanding about the site, which I think will be satisfactory to the people there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What the hon. gentleman asked was whether he could assure the Historical Society that the hon. gentleman would commence the erection of the monument very soon.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Yes.

Printing and distributing reports of the Experimental Farms, etc. $2,000

Mr. SPROULE. In the last year or two there appears to be reluctance on the part of the House to print a sufficient number of these reports. It appears to me that it is not the highest kind of wisdom to incur the expenses of keeping up farms, carrying on experiments, securing valuable information, and then refusing to provide money enough to print a sufficient number of the reports to give that information to the people. I have here an account of the number of farmers, gardeners, stock-raisers and dairymen in the Dominion, showing a total of 775,207. We asked that 75,000 of these reports be printed, but that, I believe, was refused. This year the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization recommended that the Dairy Commissioner's Report and the Experimental Farm's Report be curtailed and incorporated in one volume. This would be a saving of expense, because, when the reports are printed separately there is duplication of information to a certain extent. If 100,000 copies were sent out, that would be one for every seventh farmer in the Dominion. If the information is valuable—and every farmer will admit that it is—it is impossible to do justice to the farmers except by wide distribution of these reports. I think it most important that these reports should be printed and distributed, not only this year but every year, because every year there is new information making the report of that year as valuable as those preceding it. There is also the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. Those conversant with that report, I think, will admit that it contains the crystallized information of the experimental farms. The different members of the staff who come before the committee devote a great deal of pains to preparing their evidence. This makes the report most valuable. Only a few copies have been printed, except last year. The committee recommended 10,000. That is a very small number. But our Finance Minister is so struck on economy that we cannot induce him to give enough money for this purpose. I desire to say a word with regard to deputations that waited upon the Minister of Agriculture. One represented the Cattle Breeders' Association, and they asked $1,000 to assist them in the publishing their reports and carrying on their work, which is very valuable to the farmers. I do not see any item for this purpose in the Supplementary Estimates, and this I regret very much, because the gentlemen who waited on the Minister of Agriculture, I believe, went away with the impression that the amount they asked would be provided. This association publish the annual report of thorough-bred stock. I would like to ask the Minister who represents the Minister of Agriculture whether representations were made to the Department of Agriculture at Washington with a view to getting them to allow the Cattle Breeders' Association, in sending thorough-bred cattle to the United States to register them in the Canadian book instead of in the books of the Stock Breeders' Association in the United States?

Mr. DALY. I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman's question, but, no doubt, if he will call at the department in the morning he will get the information he asks for.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that an apiary department has been established at the Experimental Farm. Honey is one of the extensive and profitable products of the farm to-day. The gentlemen representing that interest who waited upon the Minister of Agriculture asked that money be provided to carry on experiments in this branch in connection with the farm. But I do not find any sum for this purpose mentioned in these estimates. I am sorry that that is the case, for this is an important department, and we have given those carrying on this business no assistance up to the present time.

Exhibition in the North-west Territories	$25,000

Mr. DALY. This contribution to the North-west exhibition is given in consequence of a request made by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories and the Executive of the Assembly, in view of the fact that it is intended to hold an exhibition at Regina in August, 1895. The buildings have to be erected by the town of Regina, the Territorial Assembly is to give a vote and the Canadian Pacific Railway is to carry passengers at reduced rates. The Lieutenant-Governor and his council put it in this way: The people in the North-west live at long distances apart, and they have not any opportunity of coming together as they will at an agricultural exhibition, to discuss their various methods of farming and to exchange ideas as to what is being done in farming in various portions of the Territories. With the idea of bringing that about, and seeing the progress the North-west has made in the last few years in agriculture, in horse, cattle and sheep-raising, it was thought best to give assistance towards holding this exhibition. The date taken for opening the exhibition will be ten years from the time of the driving of the last spike in the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. CASEY. As I understand, this is an extraordinary grant for this year, and not meant to be a permanent grant?

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. DALY. Certainly not.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Before we leave this item, I would like to get some more information from the Minister respecting two items that were referred to by the standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. The first item refers to the relation that our stock-breeders have to the Americans on the other side. Our stockmen are placed in the position of having to incur the additional expense of American registration, or else they are debarred from the advantages of having their thoroughbred stock pass American customs ports free for breeding purposes when sold to go to the United States. The other item is with respect to the printing the reports of the farm. There seemed to be a feeling that there was an indisposition on the part of the Government to accede to the request either of the Printing Committee or of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization with respect to printing the reports of the farm. I think myself that there could be considerable economy exercised in consolidating the farm and dairy reports and reducing their size. I think there is a good deal of material in them that is a repetition, and has not a direct bearing on the work of the farm. But I do say this, and I think I echo the sentiments of the committee after a prolonged discussion, that a large part of the utility of the expenditure in connection with that farm, will be lost to the farming community of this Dominion if better facilities are not given for furnishing that information to the farmers of the country at large. I am not disposed to advocate a very large edition, but I think that when we look at the breadth of the area that is to be covered, and the interests involved, and the amount the farm is costing us from year to year, it would be unwise economy on the part of the Government to cut off a somewhat free circulation of the report of the Experimental Farm. I think if a little pressure was put upon the officials at the farm, they could make a report that would be more portable, more easily consulted, and more useful to the farmers at large.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. DALY moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into committee on the following resolutions:—

1. That the Governor in Council may grant to the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding 6,400 acres per mile, for a line of railway from Minnedosa to Rapid City, a distance of about fifteen miles.

2. That the said grant may be made in aid of the said railway upon the condition fixed by the Order in Council which may be passed in respect thereof, and that except as to such conditions the said grant shall be a free grant, subject only to the payment by the said company of the cost of surveying the land and incidental expenses, at the rate of ten cents per acre cash, on the issue of the patents therefor.

Motion agreed to.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, at or near Maskinongé or Louiseville towards the parish of St. Michel des Saints on the river Mattawa, in the province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidy granted to the Maskinongé and Nipissing Railway Company by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

To the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway Company, for 16 miles of their railway, from Bobcaygeon to the Midland Railway, and for another 16 miles from the end of the said 16 miles to Pontypool, in lieu of the subsidies granted by the Acts 53 Victoria, chapter 2, and 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $102,400.

2. That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively, the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

3. That the granting of such subsidies respectively shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council determines.

4. That the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than 10 miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized—except as to subsidies with respect to which it is hereinbefore otherwise provided.

COMMISSION ON THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. BERNIER asked, Is it the intention of the Government to suspend the translation of the report of the commission on the liquor traffic? If so, what is the reason?

Mr. FOSTER. The translation of the report of the Commission on the Liquor Traffic has been suspended. The parliamentary vote which was applicable to the work ran out, and consequently operations ceased.

Mr. LAURIER. I hope that in future when the hon. gentleman is without money he will not have recourse to Governor General's warrants.

Mr. FOSTER. Never do that unless it is necessary.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Some two months ago the House passed an order on a motion made by me for a return of the amount of goods imported from the United States for the service of the Government. I would like to know when that return will be brought down.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will ascertain during the day. The Controller of Inland Revenue has charge of the matter in the meantime.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There was also, Mr. Speaker, another return which I asked for showing the number of returns that had been ordered by the House and had not been brought down. When may we expect that return?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I can give the hon. gentleman the information of the returns not brought down at the time his return was moved for. Since then three or four of these returns have been laid on the Table. The following is the list of all those not presented at the time the hon. gentleman moved for his return:—

Information re distilled and fermented liquors imported into Canada or manufactured therein.

Information re distilleries and malsters' establishments in Canada in 1891.

Papers in relation to the reduction or abolition of the duties on Canadian tobacco or in relation to any possible changes in the Inland Revenue laws in that behalf.

Papers relating to certain matters connected with the post office of St. Francis de Sales, county of Laval, since 1891.

Papers relating to the dismissal of E. Loiselle, postmaster of Ste. Angèle de Monnoir.

Documents relating to the purchase or to the leasing of a property for the purposes of the post office of St. Roch de Québec.

Correspondence re certain packets of printed papers franked by a member of the United States Congress and sent to the Dead Letter Office.

Papers relating to the removal of the flag station from Mill River, on the Prince Edward Island Railway, to Howlan Road.

Information from the several departments show that these returns were all in course of preparation. One or two of them are so voluminous that it is not expected that they will be ready in time to be laid on the Table this session.

Mr. McMULLEN. What has been done with regard to the balance due the Crown by the Exchange Bank?

Mr. FOSTER. The matter is in the Department of Justice to which I sent it for an opinion on the legal points involved, some two or three weeks ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is about three months ago since that statement was made in answer to a question I put.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 164) further to amend the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. It would be preferable to make a general provision in this line instead of bringing up a short Bill like this every year. If the present sessional allowance is insufficient, the Government should bring in a general mem.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has been caught napping. It is not usual to have the same matter discussed and the same premise made twice. The other evening the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) made the same suggestion, to which the First Minister assented.

Bill reported.

DOMINION NOTES.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 165) respecting Dominion notes.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MARA. I am glad to know that the Minister of Finance does not intend taking advantage of the power this Bill gives him of increasing the issue of small notes, but I wish to state here that my constituents are opposed to the principle of the Government issuing small notes. They feel, particularly those in the mining districts, that the small notes usurp the place of silver, and that, instead of placing restrictions upon the free circulation of silver, the Government should use every legitimate means of encouraging the silver mining industry. For years past, I am informed the Government have had coined from $150,000 to $200,000 of silver, but this is inadequate to meet the demands of our growing trade. Go where you will, you will find a scarcity of small change. In the western provinces, a large portion of the silver in circulation is American, and in the eastern provinces—I refer to Ontario and Quebec—whether you are travelling in a Pullman or on steamers, or are making small purchases, you are constantly annoyed by the inconvenience and difficulty of either making or getting small change. In connection with this subject, my constituents wish me to bring before the attention of the Government the question whether the time is not approaching when Canada should establish a mint and have her own gold coinage. In this respect, I think we might follow with advantage the example of the Australian colonies. In Australia two branch mints have been established—in Sydney, New South Wales, one in 1853; and one in Melbourne in 1869. It might not be out of place to make a few comparisons between our Dominion and the Australian colonies; and I propose to do so, taking the colony of New South Wales, which is the largest of the Australian group. I find that, according to the last census, New South Wales had a population of 1,132,234, whilst we in Canada at the same time had a population of 4,833,239. The revenue for the last year of New South Wales was £10,501,104, and that of Canada, $38,168,608. And we must bear in mind that this comparison is not a fair one, as regards Canada, because New South Wales owns all the railways, tramways, and telegraph lines, the receipts from which different sources appear in the general revenue, and constitute nearly one-half of the £10,501,104 that I have mentioned. Take railways, we find that while New South Wales has a mileage of 2,325 miles, we have 17,000 miles of railway. As regards shipping, the vessels entering New South Wales last year numbered 2,960, with a tonnage of 2,084,549 tons. In Canada, the vessels entering last year numbered 31,643, with a tonnage of 9,058,102 tons. But when we come to consider the mineral products, New South Wales is far ahead of Canada. I find that from 1851 to 1892, a period of forty-two years, the total yield of gold in New South Wales was £38,633,488. But we must not forget that British Columbia alone, from 1858 to 1893, produced over $54,000,000 in gold, the whole of which large sum was shipped to San Francisco to be coined there. Now, if we had a mint in British Columbia, a considerable portion of that large amount would have been retained in the province, instead of going to swell the wealth of the city of San Francisco and the state of California. Our mineral productions last year were $19,500,000, and of this, over $4,000,000 comprised gold, silver, copper and nickel. Now, Canada is a country rich in minerals. We have gold in Nova Scotia, nickel in Sudbury, silver and copper on Lake Superior, and we have all the metals, both precious and base, in British Columbia. I maintain that no better advertisement could be given to the world that Canada is a mineral country than the establishment of a mint for the coinage of our precious metals. The Minister of Finance, I have no doubt, will state that we have, at present, the advantage of the Imperial mint, and that it will cost less to have our coins minted there than to establish a mint here. Well, we have a good item to commence with in what we paid last year for coining silver. Last year, silver and copper coins were coined in the Imperial mint to the amount of $215,000, on which we paid a commission of 3 per cent. amounting to $6,450. The gold produced in the Dominion during the year amounted to a million dollars, and I may say that the whole of that million dollars would have gone to a Canadian mint, swelling up the receipts materially. In Sydney and Melbourne it is expected that the mints will be self-sustaining, and they are now nearly so. Last year the revenue of the mint at Sydney was £12,084, and the running expenses, £13,622, only a slight difference. But a mint in Canada need not be on so large a scale, and the running expenses would not be so great. I quite admit that we need not expect a mint to pay in Canada at first, but there would be an indirect benefit that, I think, would fully compensate the outlay. For instance, the country does not receive any direct benefit from the Geological Survey, but we do get an indirect benefit from the information furnished to us by the Geological surveyors concerning the structure and formation of various portions of the Dominion. The prospector, the miner, and the capitalist, in turn, step in and proceed to develop the mineral sections. Then we spend large sums of money on the agricultural farms, and a considerable sum every year for lectures on dairy farming. None of these expenditures pay directly, but they all pay indirectly; and so I maintain it would be with a mint, if run economically. I have given here a few plain practical reasons which I think should induce the Government to take this matter into their serious consideration; and I may state that there are sentimental reasons why Canada should have her own mint. Canada occupies a peculiarly favourable position for doing a large portion of the world's commerce, and if our soil is to be the highway between Great Britain, on the one hand, and Australia, China, and Japan, on the other, then I think we might look forward to the day when we will have our own gold coinage, and when the beaver and the maple leaf will be stamped on one side of our gold coins.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has raised an interesting point, particularly so, I suppose, to the constituency from which he comes, and to the gold-producing sections of our country generally. On national and patriotic grounds, and on sentimental grounds, I would entirely agree with him that, other things being equal, it would be a good thing if Canada could have a mint of her own, and coin from her own minerals the money she uses for circulation. But there are certain points to be considered, and the first is with reference to the cost. Without doubt, the most economical way for us is to proceed as we are doing now, buy our bullion in London, and have it minted for us there, and simply pay the freight of it over to this country. The small amount of silver and bronze that we would mint would be very little as compared with what a mint should do, and the cost of a mint for these purposes would, of course, make the financial transaction against us, so far as our present coinage is concerned. My hon. friend expects that the silver coinage would be largely increased, and that it would take the place of small notes. He says that there is a lack of small change for general use, and he makes a further plea that the silver should take the place of the small note circulation which is now held by the Government. Well, my hon. friend will see that if we do that we have got totally to change the character of our silver currency. The currency we have at present is nothing more than a token currency, and if we undertake to substitute a real currency for the former, we must have a currency, I think, which will be worth, in the metal that is in it, the value that is stamped upon it. If we do that, and force it into circulation, there would be the added expense of the coinage, and there would be the loss of the withdrawal from circulation of the small notes, upon which, of course, the Government gets a large profit, paying simply the cost of printing the notes, which is a bagatelle.

Mr. McCARTHY. What about the variation in value ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is no more difficult a question here than in other countries that have a silver currency. Then, with reference to gold. Our country is different in its habits and customs from Australia. Our people do not carry gold in their pockets, and use it as a circulatory medium. For that purpose, gold is inconvenient and unhandy, and if a person gets gold here his first concern is to deposit it in a bank and get bills for it, if he wants bills for ready circulation. The amount of gold, therefore, that is coined to be placed into circulation in this country, is comparatively small. It is used as a reserve against Dominion notes, and as a reserve for the banks, and if a large amount of gold coinage were ever to take place in this country, it would only take place, I think, by some measure of the Government which would substitute, or force a substitution of the circulation of gold for a circulation of bills. Taking these things into consideration, the small amount of silver currency that we have, the system of Dominion circulation of bills, which is a profitable one to us, with the change that would have to take place in the silver currency, raising it from a nominal currency to a real currency, with the small circulation of gold that we have, and, according to the habits of our people, we probably would have, unless there was a law which would rather tend to force the circulation of gold—all these are difficulties that I see in the way of establishing a mint at the present time. But, until Canada grows and population increases, and our esteem for the yellow metal as a circulatory medium, increases, I think we will have to content ourselves for some time, at least, with the present economical system of coinage. But I hope to see the time when we shall have gold and silver coinage of our own in Canada, and that time will more rapidly come as we gather a larger population and our trade increases. At present I do not think the probabilities are in favour of making the change that would be required to establish such system.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not understand the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) to suggest that the Government should decide the ratio between gold and silver; or that he suggested that an unlimited quantity of silver be placed in circulation. What the hon. gentleman did say was that there is an insufficient quantity of silver to meet local requirements. We should have more silver in circulation to serve the purpose of small change. This is a silver-producing country; there are rich silver mines in British Columbia and on the north shore of Lake Superior, and our interests as a country are identical with the interests of other large silver-producing countries; our interests, in fact, are the same as those of the United States. The Government might at least show its goodwill by furnishing an amount of silver coin adequate to the wants of the country. Any one acquainted with business centres on the frontier is aware that about seven-tenths of the silver in circulation is American silver. This coinage should be excluded, and we should use our own silver currency. We would lose no money by adopting this measure. The price of silver bullion is very much less than the nominal value of silver coin, the difference is many times greater than the cost of coinage. I have often thought that while the Government can make no arrangement to settle the ratio between gold and silver, and can do very little to assist in the adjustment of the metallic contest between commercial nations, it can at least furnish an adequate supply of silver coinage to the country, so that our people would not have to fall back on American silver coinage to meet their commercial wants.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the hon. gentleman has put the matter quite correctly. The Government does aid, and its whole interests are on the line of supplying all the silver currency which the banks and the country will take. Why should it not, because it gets a large profit on all put out, and it is in the interests of the country that the amount of silver currency should be as large as it is possible compatible with safety. Care is taken that whenever a demand is made for silver currency that is supplied, and we keep a sufficient amount on hand to supply every demand made. But it is very difficult, if not quite impossible to keep silver coinage of the United States out of the margin of this country. American people travel here, visit Canadian hotels and Canadian stores to purchase articles, and pay for them in the currency of their own country, and the hotel-keepers do not care to offend their customers and the store-keepers do not wish to lose sales, and they accept the American currency in payment and take their chance of subsequently getting rid of the money. A large amount of it is subsequently collected by the banks and sent to the United States, and in many places the banks take a slight discount in order to discourage the use of United States money. But in view of the intercourse between the two countries and the feelings at work, it is pretty difficult to keep American silver from finding its way all along the borders of the United States, and it does so to quite a considerable extent.

Mr. SCRIVER. Living on the border as I do, and knowing the facts, I cannot agree with the hon. member for North Norfolk when he says that seven-tenths of the silver coinage on the Canadian border is American silver. I know it to be a fact that on the American side of the border a good deal of Canadian silver is in circulation, and no practical inconvenience is experienced so far as I know for lack of a sufficient supply of Canadian silver.

Mr. SPROULE. The difficulty spoken of by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara), of finding change at all times when payments are to be made might be overcome by amending the Banking Act, and by issuing and placing in circulation a larger number of small Dominion notes.

Mr. MARA. That is what we do not want.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that Dominion notes are bought up by the banks, which put into circulation their own bills of larger denominations. I understand they are compelled in issuing their own bills to put in circulation a certain proportion of Dominion notes of small denominations. But if the law was amended to compel the banks to pay out a larger amount of Dominion notes of ones and twos, great convenience would be caused to the business community thereby.

Mr. FOSTER. We doubled the amount the last time the Banking Act was revised.

Mr. SPROULE. It did not improve matters very much, as there still exists the same difficulty in regard to small change.

Mr. FOSTER. It all depends on whether customers ask for small change or not.

Mr. SPROULE. I hold they should pay it out without persons asking for it.

Mr. MARA. I desire to offer a few remarks in reply to the Minister of Finance. I do not advocate any sweeping change in our money-tax system, but what I maintain is this, that the circulation of silver can be increased without involving any danger and with a large profit to the Government. At present the banks do not handle silver to the extent they might do, for the reason that they are called upon to pay insurance and cost of transportation either from Toronto or Montreal to the different agencies. But as the Government makes a large profit on Dominion coin, over $67,000 last year, it would be a good business transaction for them to increase the circulation of silver by sending it free of cost of transportation from the Receiver General to the different banks of the Dominion. In that way I am satisfied the circulation could be doubled without any special danger, and instead of $67,000 as last year the amount could be over $135,000.

Mr. McCARTHY. This seems to be an attempt to get in the thin wedge of the silver currency. I trust this demon is not going to be introduced into our politics in addition to the other troubles we already have. I should have liked the Finance Minister to have spoken in a more decided tone against the probability of establishing or introducing, or enforcing the circulation of more silver than is in circulation in Canada to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. We will have to remit the dual money question until we have settled the dual language question.

LAND SUBSIDY TO CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 159) respecting the land subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DALY. When in committee the other day on this Bill, we briefly considered clause 2, and I have remodelled the clause so as to meet the objection raised by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). The second clause will now read as follows:—

The grants of land so made may include the statutory allowance for roads between sections in the area so granted, but in such case shall be subject to the reserve of one acre out of every 50 acres for the establishment of public highways.

We strike out the word "shall" in the first line and substitute "may," and also substitute 50 acres for 100 acres. I propose that the third clause shall read as follows in the place of what is in the Bill:—

When the grants of land so made include the statutory allowance for roads between sections, the Minister of the Interior shall cause such public highways as he considers expedient to be surveyed and set off through any tract of land granted under this Act. Provided the area taken for this purpose does not exceed one-fiftieth part of the aggregate area, and upon the approval by the Minister of any survey, the area set off thereby shall become and be a public highway and shall be subject to the management, direction and control of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories for the public use of the Territories. The legal title of the land comprised in such highways shall be vested in the Crown and the company or its assignees shall not be entitled to compensation therefor.

I think this will meet all the objections which were raised by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the amendments express the idea I had in my mind, but the responsibility is with the Minister, and I am not going to object further.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 168) to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies.—(Mr. Daly)

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House receive itself into committee on resolutions (page 6049) respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

To the Bracebridge and Baysville Railway Company, for 15 miles of their railway from Bracebridge towards Baysville, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What position is this grant in ?

Mr. HAGGART. The railway is to extend from Bracebridge, on the northern division of the Grand Trunk Railway, 122 miles north of Toronto, easterly towards Baysville, a distance of fifteen miles, in the district of Muskoka. This line has not yet been commenced, owing to the difficulty of making financial arrangements.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman now has brought down a statement of the subsidies that have been granted to various railways. As it is declared to be expedient that these grants should be made, perhaps he would be able to tell us upon what that expediency is based. He might also tell us generally how many miles of railway are to be constructed in the province of Ontario under these subsidies, how many in the province of Nova Scotia, in the province of New Brunswick, in the province of Quebec, in the province of Manitoba, in the province of British Columbia and in the North-west Territories. I see, in looking over the lists, that all have been considered, and I suppose it is upon the assumption that it is expedient, for some reason or other, to make the appropriations to railways in all these various provinces and outlying territories. The hon. gentleman will be able to tell how many miles of railway are to be aided in each province, and the amount of subsidy that is to be given.

Mr. HAGGART. The new subsidies are now under consideration, and in my report of 1894 you will find all information with reference to the old ones. The amount of assistance given by the Dominion and also by the different provinces to every railway throughout the country will be found stated in the last two pages of my report of last year.

Mr. LAURIER. Is there any difference between the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, and the appropriation now asked for ?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. HAGGART. No.

To the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company, for 16 miles of their railway, from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $51,200.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this road finished ?

Mr. HAGGART. No ; there are 45 miles of it built, from Brockville to Westport.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much is under construction this year ?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no portion under construction now.

To the Brantford, Waterloo and Lake Erie Railway Company, for 18 miles of their railway, from the town of Brantford to the village of Hagarville or the village of Waterford, or some intermediate point on the Canada Southern Railway, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $4,790.

Mr. LAURIER. In what condition is this road now ?

Mr. HAGGART. The construction of this railway has not yet been commenced, owing to a long series of negotiations with the Grand Trunk Railway Company with regard to the necessity of receiving grants from the various municipalities, all of which have now been made. From negotiations with the Bank of Montreal, the company are competent of their ability to construct the line.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the hon. gentleman state the amount of the paid-up stock ?

Mr. HAGGART. I could not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before we make grants to companies of this kind, I think we should know what their financial standing is, what their subscribed capital is, and how much of the stock has been paid up. We are giving backbone to useless institutions by reviving these grants, and giving them another opportunity of placing their charters on the market or selling them. I think it is an exceedingly imprudent course to adopt. Under the Ontario system, bonuses are not granted to any railway unless it is able to show a financial basis of $3,500 a mile ; and now no grants are made except for colonization roads. It is time we adopted a similar system here.

Mr. McCARTHY. It seems to me that we should not without some explanation grant a bonus on the simple ground that it has been already granted. The very fact that the grant has been unproductive, that nothing has come of it, establishes a case against a renewal of the grant, and before making it we ought to know how it is that the company to whom the grant was made has failed to take advantage of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it would be well for the Minister to state, supposing this road were constructed, what business there is for a railway in this locality. This line is from Tilsonburg to Port Burwell on the lake shore. Is it proposed to establish a line of steamers in connection with it, running to Cleveland or Buffalo or Montreal, or any other point?

Mr. INGRAM. I may be allowed to explain. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in saying that the railway is to connect with a line of steamers. All the company ask is simply an extension of the time for the construction of the railway from Tilsonburg to Port Burwell.

Mr. HAGGART. This is a renewal of a vote made a couple of years ago. It was thought very necessary at that time, and according to information I have, there is a probability of the road being built. It is greatly in the interests of the municipalities through which it is to run, and the company have nearly completed arrangements and expect to build the road.

Mr. INGRAM. There is just one township that has not granted a bonus yet, and that is the reason the road has not been built.

To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and also the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, which was re-granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, not exceeding in the whole $86,800.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to know if a preliminary survey of this line has been made, where it will start from and where it will run to, the probable cost of the construction, and the financial basis of the company to carry out the undertaking.

Mr. HAGGART. The line is built. This is to pay the balance due under the subsidy of last year.

Mr. McMULLEN. To complete it?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The line extends from the city of Brantford to the junction of the Canada Southern Railway at the village of Waterford, a distance of eighteen miles. This line was constructed in 1890, from West Brantford to Waterford, sixteen and three-quarter miles, on which the subsidy was paid, less $790 retained for unfinished work. Owing to the cost of a large bridge over the Grand River, the company were unable to complete the line for the mile and a quarter to the centre of the city of Brantford. The whole of the eighteen miles are now completed.

To the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company, for 34 miles of their railway, from the city of St. Catharines to the city of Hamilton, in lieu of the subsidy not to exceed $108,000, granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy calculated on a basis of three and a half per cent on the amount of the said subsidy, to be paid in semi-annual instalments for such period, not exceeding twenty years, as the company may elect, representing a grant in cash of $108,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to change this resolution so as to make it read:

To the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company, for 34 miles of their railway, from the city of St. Catharines to the city of Hamilton, in view of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not to exceed $3,000 per mile, nor on the whole $108,000.

Strike out the whole of the rest.

Mr. CHARLTON. What justification does the hon. gentleman find for the purpose of promoting the building of a line of railway parallel to the Grand Trunk Railway division from Hamilton to Niagara Falls? I want to know if the amount of business through that section is so great that one railway line is not sufficient to accommodate it? One of the greatest outrages perpetrated by this Government has been the promoting of the construction of parallel lines of railway. The old Great Western Railway has a line from Woodstock to Windsor, and the construction of a competing line was promoted by this Government, and the consequence is that neither the Great Western Railway nor the new line gives an adequate return. Here is a continuation of the same vicious system in the granting of a subsidy to parallel the old Great Western line from Hamilton to Niagara Falls. The result will be that these roads will ultimately become consolidated, and then it will be necessary to charge the public rates sufficiently high to give a return for two lines of railway, which would not be necessary if we had not subsidized the parallel line. The Government are embarking in a course which is most unbusiness-like, and in the highest degree unjust to those who have invested in the road already constructed. The motive of the Government is one of a most mercenary character. It is simply to bribe ridings en bloc and thus promote its own political interests. The course of the Government, in paying no attention to vested rights, the rights of private corporators, who have invested their money, is simply outrageous, and I protest against it in the name of decency and justice.

Mr. McMULLEN. What has been done on this line?

Mr. HAGGART. The whole distance is forty-six miles, extending from Niagara Falls, through St. Catharines, to Hamilton. Twelve miles are built.

Mr. McMULLEN. If this line were in a new section where railway accommodation is really wanted, there would be a good argument in favour of granting a subsidy; but to duplicate a line now existing, and which is virtually not paying the original holders of the bonds anything like a decent return for their investment, is a gross piece of outrage and extravagance. The object of the hon. gentleman is simply, regardless of the public interest, by frittering away our money on schemes of this kind, to bribe constituencies wholesale, and benefit, at the same time, some political hack interested financially in the undertaking. What grounds are given for asking us, in the dying hours of the session, to grant this subsidy? Is any one prepared to say that the freights charged by the other line are exorbitant, that the passenger rates are outrageous, and that the service is inadequate. No such statement is made. This is simply a pure piece of political extravagance, concocted in order to buy a constituency in that particular section. The hon. gentleman ought to be ashamed to bring such a scheme before the House, if he has any shame left in him. No one can talk too strongly on matters of this kind. The resources, the credit, the responsibility of this country are played with in order to fly kites and bolster up unnecessary and imprudent schemes, thus adding to the burdens of the people and heaping up our debt from year to year. But just so long as hon. gentlemen opposite can hope, by any scheme of this kind, to keep themselves secure on the Treasury benches, they are willing to sacrifice the resources and credit of the country. The new bonuses brought down have no other object in view, and I earnestly hope the people will rise in their might and spew them out of their mouths.

Mr. BOYLE. If the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken on the other side had been paid solicitors to the Grand Trunk, they could not have done their work more energetically and zealously, though possibly it might have been done more prudently. These hon. gentlemen imputed political motives to the Minister of Railways and the Government, but when it is remembered that the constituencies through which this line will run are held by Liberals, it will be seen what little credit can be attached to that charge. The history of the Grand Trunk Railway has been one of monopoly. The city of St. Catharines is a large and important commercial centre, and at a very great expense to itself it attempted to establish a competing line with the Grand Trunk Railway. Thus the Grand Welland Railway was established, and heretofore by means of that line and lines of navigation, some competition was offered to the Great Western. But no sooner had the Grand Trunk secured possession of the Great Western than it sought to secure the other small lines, including the Welland line, and the city of St. Catharines and all the adjacent towns became dependent on the mercy of the Grand Trunk. Men with large business interests in St. Catharines undertook, at their own expense, for the sole purpose of benefiting the city, to establish a rival line, and originated the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company. These gentlemen have invested a very large amount of their own money in that line, and have completed twelve miles of it, which are paying running expenses. They have many difficulties to contend with, and the people of that district feel that this line is entitled to a Government subsidy. I have not the slightest interest, politically, or personally, in it. It does not affect the constituency I represent; but, knowing the circumstances, I felt the injustice of the remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the arguments used by the hon. gentleman are sound arguments in favour of the construction of this line, could not the same kind of arguments be presented in favour of running a line alongside the Great Western from Hamilton to Toronto? If this argument is good then we should seek to duplicate every line in Canada. The hon. gentleman says that the Grand Trunk Railway has a monopoly there, but are there not many other sections where the Grand Trunk Railway has a monopoly? If that argument is a good one then every member in whose county there is a place with only a single line of railway should ask the Government's assistance to build another line. The hon. gentleman's argument is no argument at all.

Mr. CHARLTON. The same could be said in favour of duplicating of the Canadian Pacific Railway main line.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes—duplicating the whole road.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is well that we should know what we are doing in this matter. It seems that in 1888 we passed an Act granting a subsidy to this road. In 1889 a contract was signed for the construction of the road between St. Catharines and Hamilton. I suppose we may assume now from what we have heard that that contract was not carried out and no portion of the line built. In 1890 a further subsidy was authorized for the building of this road for a distance of fourteen miles. Again, in 1892 another subsidy, an annual subsidy for twenty years based on 3½ per cent of the amount, and not to exceed $108,000, was granted for the thirty-four miles in question. Now, we see it has been put in every possible shape and form, and notwithstanding this the company have not been able to float the scheme and build the road. Why? Just for the reason pointed out by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)—there is not enough traffic to support the Grand Trunk Railway between Hamilton and St. Catharines, which, so far as I have heard, performs its duty as a carrier on no more unreasonable terms than elsewhere, and to the satisfaction of the public. I think it is monstrous that we should come to subsidizing rival lines, because not only are we injuring the existing lines but we are heaping up a burden upon the people. In the long run, the people will have to support both lines, for arrangements will be made by which the people will have to pay traffic rates to keep both lines open. And in the meantime we destroy the credit of the existing lines. The Grand Trunk Railway to-day is not earning enough money to pay interest on its first preference bonds. Those bonds are quoted at something like 44 or 45, and doubts are entertained whether the interest upon them can be met. If we keep subsidizing rival lines it must have an injurious effect upon the credit of the company. Go to England and you will find everywhere holders of Grand Trunk stocks and securities, and they all think they have been swindled by the course pursued in this country with reference to the railway.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman, I suppose, has proposed this scheme on the grounds stated by the hon. member for Monck (Mr. Boyle). The hon. member has informed the House that the Grand Trunk Company are now in possession of the Great Western line, and has established a monopoly and is charging unreasonable rates.

Mr. BOYLE. I said nothing about the rates, for I do not know about them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the rates are not unreasonable where is the point in the hon. gentleman's argument? If the rates are reasonable does the hon. gentleman think it a proper use of the public money to appropriate this sum to build a parallel line? If that section of the Grand Trunk, the Great Western division, is not remunerative to those who invested their money in it, will two lines over the same territory be remunerative, seeing that they will divide between them the traffic that is now possessed by one? The only ground so far stated for this appropriation is that it is necessary to protect the interests of the people in that locality against the oppression practiced upon them by the existing line of railway. Now, the hon. member does not venture to say that the people are oppressed; he does not venture to say that the charges made by the existing line are unduly high. Yet he defends the appropriation of $108,000 to assist in the construction of a rival line. There is no acre of property in that section of country that will be worth a dollar more in consequence of this construction. There is no town or village, or city that will have its traffic increased in consequence of the construction of this road. You are running between two points that are already connected by rail and you are proposing to damage the value of the stock held by parties in the road that already exists. How long can this country have railway schemes floated in the money markets of the world if the information goes abroad that investors have no security against new enterprises being undertaken through the instrumentality of the Government, and with aid from the public treasury? If that system is practiced no one can have the slightest confidence in the investment of money in railway enterprises in Canada. If this country succeeds in providing railway accommodation by means of a small amount of aid—and it should be only a small amount—for the construction of a line where no railway facilities exist, it would accomplish all that it ought to undertake. But the hon. gentleman is lavishly appropriating money from the public treasury for expenditure upon railways in sections of country where the railway accommodation is already adequate. It would be infinitely better if the hon. gentleman would come down to the House and say that the charges for freight and passengers on the present line are too high, and that the public ought to be protected against these exorbitant charges by the regulation of rates through the interference of the Government. There would be far more justification for that than for this proposition. If the hon. Minister thinks that the Grand Trunk between these two points is charging more for the carriage of freight and passengers than it ought, let him say so and propose a regulation of the tariff of charges. He will not propose state interference directly, and yet he proposes it in a far more objectionable form. He proposes to take a large sum of money out of the public treasury to build a rival line. We have in many cases rival lines built in this country, and what is the effect? Why, an understanding is come to, the earnings are pooled or some arrangement made by which the charges are kept just as they were before there were two lines instead of one. What guarantee have we that this will not happen in this case? If the object is to prevent the monopoly the hon. gentleman has spoken of—and that is the only defence so far made for this proposal—why has he not some provision in this appropriation that the rates shall be fixed, that this shall be granted only upon condition that the rights of the people shall be protected by the regulation of the rates so as to prevent the continuance of these high charges. As my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has said, you will have an understanding reached between those two companies and the traffic which is now carried over one will have to bear the charges for the maintenance of both. I do not think there is any justification for this appropriation any more than for some of the others that are proposed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to inquire of the Minister if a map has been placed in his hands showing the route of this railway from St. Catharines to the city of Hamilton?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will he be good enough to state to the House what is the average distance between the existing line now worked and owned by the Grand Trunk Railway, and the line that is proposed?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot tell.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does it exceed two miles?

Mr. HAGGART. There was a plan submitted to the department a few years ago, giving the details of all the bridges over the different rivers flowing into that part of Lake Ontario. I do not see the member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) here, or the member for Welland (Mr. Lowell), whose counties are particularly interested in it; but I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this line was thought to be of so much importance to those two counties and to the city of St. Catharines, that they subscribed nearly $250,000 for the completion of the road. I have been through that section of the country, and I think the people are well pleased with the service they receive from the little line of railway from Niagara Falls to St. Catharines. You must remember that it goes a little past St. Catharines, and that the Government entered into a contract with those individuals to build the whole line from St. Catharines to Hamilton. This subject was all threshed out four or five years ago. There were two subsidies given to this particular road, and this is simply a revote of those two subsidies. The House must remember that an expenditure of $250,000 has already been made on twelve miles of the road, and many gentlemen in this House must be aware that several private individuals have put money into it, one gentleman in particular having embarked nearly his whole fortune in it. Will not this House, then, renew the subsidy under which they entered into a contract with this company for the purpose of building this road, and grant a revote, and give them time to carry out an undertaking to which this House has pledged itself on three different occasions by giving subsidies to a line between these two places?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That simply means that the parties have failed to comply with the conditions on which the vote was made, and the subject is therefore properly open for discussion. There may be some grounds for it, but they have certainly not been stated to us yet. But the Minister, I submit, has failed to make out a reasonable case other than the fact that half a dozen years ago this thing was put through, and that the parties have failed to comply with the conditions on which we made the grant. Now, he did not answer the question which I put. My impression is—he can contradict me if I am wrong—that the average distance of this proposed line will scarcely exceed, if indeed it equals, two miles from the existing railway route; and I must say that it is a very grave thing indeed for the money of the people of this country to be taken to construct a railway under such conditions.

Mr. BOYLE. If hon. gentlemen opposite think there is any political object in this grant, they are barking up the wrong tree. If the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) were here—the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Lowell) was here a moment ago, but he has gone out—they would be able to throw light on that feature of the case. As I said before, I am only acting in what I consider to be the public interest, in advocating a renewal of this subsidy. The conditions under which it was granted were somewhat exceptional. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has referred to the financial condition of the Grand Trunk Railway to-day, and has pointed out, what is undoubtedly the fact, that the Grand Trunk Railway is not making money. But if all the branches and all the lines of the Grand Trunk Railway were as well patronized and as liberally supported as that branch is, it would make money. The line is particularly favourably situated, and the earnings must be very large and exceed running expenses sufficiently to pay a fair dividend on the capital invested between these two points. So much do the localities interested, and so much do the farmers of the townships adjacent, consider that they will be benefited by that line, that they deliberately voted large bonuses for this road at its inception. The fact that it has not been built, of course explains why they have not been called upon for the money. But in consequence of what this Parliament has already done, and the encouragement this line has already received, certain undertakings have been gone into, and it is not fair to take advantage of the limitation of time in order to embarrass this company, which are doing their best at present to float the scheme in the financial markets of the world.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is clear that they have had two or three opportunities of floating that scheme already, and in each case the time has elapsed, and they have been unable to put the scheme into such a condition that there were any prospects of the road being built. Now, as regards the townships through which this road runs, we have nothing to do with them. We have simply to discuss the construction of this line from the point of view of the general interest of the country; and I say that no man in this House can produce any evidence whatever that will justify this committee in virtually throwing away $110,000 in the construction of a duplicate line. You have two lines, you may virtually say, from Hamilton now. One runs to Black Rock, and the other runs to Niagara Falls. That portion of country back of Hamilton is virtually gridironed with railways. That portion of the old line that runs up the side of the mountain, still continues to run to Black Rock, and you have the Great Western in addition. There is no reason why this grant should be renewed unless it is for the purpose of helping out of financial embarrassment some particular friend of the Government who is involved in this undertaking. That appears to be the only reason the Minister of Railways can give for this revote. I would like to know if any petitions have been presented this year to the House in favour of a grant to this road. I have not heard of one. I do not know that the city council of Hamilton petitioned in favour of the grant. Has the Board of Trade of Hamilton petitioned for a grant towards the construction of this road? I have not heard of a single petition from any quarter being presented. If there was a grant asked for duplicating a road through a section of country like that between Chicago and New York, or Buffalo, there would be some sense in duplicating an existing line; but here we have a road leading virtually from Niagara Falls, past the city of St. Catharines, to the city of Hamilton. Now, this scheme was set on foot, in the first place, by Mr. Rykert, who was once a member of this House, and owing to the powerful influence that he exercised with the late Premier, he got him to consent to grant a bonus towards the construction of this road. It was done to keep that gentleman in his place, to strengthen him in his constituency. Now, we have contributed towards the construction of the first twelve miles of this road. I think about $40,000, and in doing so we have been erecting a monument to the memory of Charles Rykert, and I think that is all this country can afford to do.

To the Montreal and Ottawa Railway Company (formerly the Vaudreuil and Prescott Railway Company), for 30 miles of their railway, from Vaudreuil towards Hawkesbury, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, for 30 miles of their railway from the western end of the 30 miles subsidized by the said Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, towards Ottawa, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $118,400.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the explanation of this proposed vote?

Mr. HAGGART. The line is to extend from Vaudreuil station in the direction of Ottawa, a distance of about eighty-five miles. A distance of about twenty-five miles have been completed to Point Fortune, on the line between Quebec and Ontario. It is intended to prosecute with vigour a portion of the line next year.

Notwithstanding the expiration of the time limited by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, and by the contract entered into with the Quebec Central Railway Company, and notwithstanding anything otherwise in the said Act contained, the Governor in Council may pay the subsidy granted by the said Act to the said company, at the present worth of the twenty annual payments mentioned in the said Act (interest computed at four per cent) for and upon the completion of its railway extending from a point between the Chaudière River and Tring Station to a point on the International Railway at or near Lake Megantic, and upon the inspection and acceptance of the same by the Chief Engineer of Railways and Canals, the sum in all of $288,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the meaning of the repetition of the word "notwithstanding." We can understand the phrase "notwithstanding the expiration of the time limits," but there is also a phrase "notwithstanding anything in said Act contained." What is the distance claimed between the point on the Chaudière River and Tring station to the point intended to be reached on the International at or near Lake Megantic?

Mr. HAGGART. The total distance is fifty-nine miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the original grant to this road was $3,200 per mile. Having granted $3,200 per mile, this would be equivalent, over a distance of sixty miles, to about $192,000. Now the Ministers propose to grant another $100,000, without giving any explanation to the House. This would be equivalent to nearly $5,000 per mile, and the Ministers bring down this proposition without giving any explanation of what they are doing.

Mr. HAGGART. The original plan was to build a line ninety miles in length, and the grant to that line is transferred to a road 59½ miles long. This increased grant is made on account of the exceptional nature of the construction. It is virtually the same grant for a shorter road.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is virtually an increase from $3,200 to 4,800 per mile. This increase is equivalent to 50 per cent, without a word of explanation being offered. This trifle was proposed to be given without the slightest explanation being made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is there any company organized to construct the road?

Mr. HAGGART. It is all under construction and nearly completed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is stated in the Railway Department's report that a contract was let on June 3rd, 1892, and the work is to be completed by 1st July, 1894.

Mr. HAGGART. I believe all the road is under construction, and it is very heavy work. The Auditor General refused to pay the subsidy without this proposed change being made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is the sixty-mile road located between the same points as the ninety-mile road ?

Mr. HAGGART. The objective points are entirely different. The new road is over a very much heavier country, and will join the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the road now under construction is not for the convenience of the local community, but for the convenience of traffic beyond ?

Mr. LAURIER. Is not the International Railway the same as the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Mr. HAGGART. They are the same.

Mr. LAURIER. What is intended to be the point of junction ?

Mr. HAGGART. Moose Head Lake ; now it is going to be the station of Lake Megantic. It was intended to convey the traffic of the Quebec Central and make connection with Quebec, and with the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Moose Head Lake, which is in the state of Maine. The option was given them to make the same connection at Lake Megantic village.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is quite familiar with the locality. What point does this road start from on the Quebec Central ?

Mr. POPE. Near Tring, on this side of Beauce.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman stated a moment ago that this road was actually under construction. I think it has been constructed as far as St. Francois.

Mr. POPE. Excuse me, you are not on the right route. The line we are now dealing with starts on the opposite side of the river, and it strikes the Quebec Central before the Quebec Central crosses the Chaudiere River.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How does the settlement of the country along this road compare with that along the road originally contemplated ?

Mr. POPE. I do not think there is much difference. The first portion of both lines as they will leave Beauce up towards St. Joseph, would be through an old section of the country, and it strikes the Quebec settlement in the Tring district. The further end of either line in the state of Maine would be through the woods.

Mr. LAURIER. How much of this sixty miles has been constructed ?

Mr. POPE. It is all under construction, I believe.

To the Philipsburg Junction Railway and Quarry Company, for $6\frac{7}{10}$ miles of their railway, from Stanbridge Station to Philipsburg, in the county of Missisquoi, and branch to Missisquoi Bay, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, not exceeding \$3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole \$2,919.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. This is a revote of an unexpended subsidy granted.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The whole line appears to be less than seven miles.

Mr. BAKER. This vote is for six miles and seven one-hundredths of a mile. The subsidy has been earned, but owing to a technical objection it could not be paid.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the technical objection ?

Mr. BAKER. The subsidy was granted from Stanbridge station to the Philipsburg Quarry, and this six miles and seven one-hundredths part of a mile is for the extension beyond the quarry.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Some company have a quarry there, and they have asked the Dominion of Canada to build a branch less than a mile in length to the quarry, and they come here for aid.

Mr. BAKER. Not at all. The subsidy was granted for less than seven miles from Stanbridge station to the quarry. The plans were submitted, and they included the continuation of the railway from the quarry to the wharf. The whole road has been built, but the subsidy voted and earned could not be paid, because by the terms of the statute, it was from Stanbridge station to the quarry. It is simply to correct a technical objection.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman might be able to tell us who owns the quarry.

Mr. BAKER. I do not know. I have not the slightest idea.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) forgets that these works are for the general advantage of Canada.

To the Joliette and St. Jean de Matha Railway Company, for 8 miles of their railway, from St. Félix de Valois to St. Jean de Matha, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $25,600.

Mr. LAURIER. Has anything been done on that road ?

Mr. HAGGART. No ; it is not commenced, but, as usual, the company is very sanguine of making arrangements to commence it immediately.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This name seems very familiar to me, and it seems to me that these parties have been hawking the charter around for about a dozen years.

To the Lake Temiscamingue Colonization Railway Company, for 50 miles of their railway, from Mattawa to the crossing of the Kippewa River, also 15 per cent on the value of a wooden truss bridge over the Ottawa River near Mattawa, not to exceed $15,000 in all, in lieu of the subsidies granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, also the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, for their railway from Long Sault to Lake Kippewa, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile of railway and 15 per cent on the value of the bridges, also a sum of $1,750 additional per mile on the 50 miles of their railway from Mattawa to the crossing of the Kippewa River, not exceeding in the whole $274,940.

Mr. LAURIER. How many miles of that railway have they in operation?

Mr. HAGGART. They will have the whole length of the road, fifty miles, built this year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does that take them all the way to the shore of Lake Temiscamingue?

Mr. HAGGART. It brings them from the foot of Lake Temiscamingue up to the Kippewa Lake. I wish to change that resolution to make it read as follows:—

To the Lake Temiscamingue Colonization Railway Company, for their railway from Mattawa to the Kippewa Lake, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $160,000; also 15 per cent on the value of a wooden truss bridge over the Ottawa River near Mattawa, not to exceed $15,000 in all, in lieu of the subsidies granted by the Act 55-56 Vic., chap. 5; also the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 50-51 Vic., for their railway from Long Sault to Lake Kippewa, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile of railway and 15 per cent on the value of the bridges, also a sum of $1,750 additional per mile of their said railway from Mattawa to the foot of Kippewa Lake.

Mr. BRYSON. This road is now being built from Mattawa to the mountain, and will be in operation in a very few days. The question asked by the hon. gentleman opposite was touching Temiscamingue Lake. The road forks at the foot of the Temiscamingue Lake and runs due north-east about eight miles, and touches the most easterly corner of Lake Kippewa, at the head of Gordon River. That road was subsidized some years ago, and built by the Lake Temiscamingue Forwarding Company. That line has been passed over to the present company. The distance now to be completed is about fifteen or eighteen miles, which it is contemplated will be in running order about the 1st December, 1894.

Mr. McCARTHY. Now under the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. BRYSON. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is this branch from the Long Sault part of the same line?

Mr. BRYSON. Part of the same line.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long has this road been in operation, and what are the returns of its earnings? Has it shown any financial basis at all?

Mr. HAGGART. There is none of it in operation. This was a narrow gauge line that merely passed the rapids of the lake. It was taken over by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who built a bridge across the Ottawa River at the Mattawa, a very fine structure, and made a road equal to the Canadian Pacific Railway up to the Kippewa Lake. I think it is expected to be in operation during the coming fall.

For a railway from St. Placide to St. Andrews, 8 miles, in lieu of a subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $25,600.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this a line of eight miles only?

Mr. HAGGART. That is all. I think it is a road to make a connection from the road that runs from Montreal along the Ottawa River, which is at present in possession of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to a little town on the banks of the Ottawa River, called St. Andrews. The hon. member for Argenteuil can perhaps explain where the road is.

Mr. CHRISTIE. It is from the village of St. Andrews to a point on the Ottawa River, to connect with the line running to Lachute.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this a parallel line with some other?

Mr. CHRISTIE. No.

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, for 7½ miles of their railway, from Hull to Aylmer, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 2, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $24,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to change the wording of that to make it read:

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, for the construction or acquisition of 7½ miles of a railway from Hull to Aylmer.

This is to enable the company, instead of building a parallel line from Hull to Aylmer, to use the money that has been voted for the purpose of acquiring the line that is at present built.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if this road which it is proposed to purchase, has not already received subsidies from the Government?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes. The road I believe was built, not by subsidies from this Government, but by subsidies from the Quebec Government, and afterwards transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. gentleman must understand the necessity of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company acquiring or obtaining an entrance into the city of Hull, either by the acquisition of this line or by the building of a parallel line.

Mr. McMULLEN. This subsidy is not given to help to construct a road, but to enable this company to buy out another road which is already constructed.

Mr. HAGGART. It is given in both ways, either to construct a road or to buy out the existing road. I think it is better to assist the company in acquiring the existing road.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why not apply the same rule to the St. Catharines line running to Hamilton? There is a parallel line there now, and why not make the bonus applicable to the acquiring of the line already built? This is a new method of dealing with these roads. After a road is built and in running order, you subsidize another company to buy it.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman opposes that, I will strike out the words "construction or acquisition," and leave it as it originally was.

Mr. BRYSON. I understood the hon. gentlemen opposite to say that this portion of the road from Hull to Aylmer had been subsidized by the Federal Government. That is not the case, so far as I know. That road was built by the Local Government and sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and both the Quebec subsidy and the Federal subsidy were voted to the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway for eighty-five miles of their line, including the section from Hull to Aylmer. It is now contemplated to allow the company, instead of building a line from Hull to Aylmer, to buy over that portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. LAURIER. The position is this: this line between Quebec and Aylmer was subsidized by the Quebec Government, and we pay a subsidy to the Quebec province. Part of this money has been applied to this road. Now it is contemplated to build a parallel line, but the hon. Minister says that instead of giving money to build a parallel line, we will give the money to provide for the purchase of a road which has already been built by the aid of Canadian money. It is so obvious that there is no necessity for this road, since the Minister says, instead of duplicating the existing line, we will apply the money for the purchase of a road already built. So that this same portion of railway will be twice assisted.

Mr. BRYSON. I understand that the road from Hull to Montreal was subsidized by this Government, but that portion of the road west of Hull received no subsidy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It received a subsidy from the Quebec Government. The hon. Minister is confounding the construction of a road with aiding a company, which is a wholly different thing. The road is built. What the public aimed at requiring by appropriation is already accomplished. It is not a matter of any consequence to this Government or House who the proprietors of that line may be. It may be a matter of interest to the particular company, but let them purchase it. The public have the road, anyhow.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. I am willing to strike out the word "acquisition" altogether, and leave the resolution in its former position. This is simply a revote to enable the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway to get access to Hull or Ottawa, and the principle has already been recognized by the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the Minister of Railways will not strike out the provision for the acquisition of that road. The hon. leader of the Opposition has forgotten that although the province of Quebec constructed the road from Quebec to Aylmer they sold it to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and presumably obtained full value for the amount they expended.

Mr. LAURIER. You cannot presume that.

Mr. SPEAKER. At all events, that is the presumption that must arise from the fact. As I understand it, this Parliament paid back to the Quebec Government an amount that would represent a certain sum on the road from Ottawa to Montreal or Quebec—not from Aylmer to Montreal or Quebec. At all events, the amount paid to the province of Quebec did not cover that portion of the road between Hull and Aylmer. Under the sale by the Quebec Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the right was reserved to the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway to acquire this line between Hull and Aylmer. Inasmuch as this House has adopted the principle that the Pontiac and Pacific Railway Company are to have a subsidy from Hull to Pembroke, it makes very little difference as to whether the amount is paid to that company for a road they have the power to purchase, and which is already in existence, or whether it is paid to them for the construction of another road.

Mr. CHARLTON. The position of matters is briefly this: the people on the line of the Pontiac Railway have granted very large subsidies for the purpose of getting a railway outlet to Ottawa. The county is heavily burdened with debt, and the road terminates at Aylmer. I understand that the rates on passengers and freight are as heavy from Aylmer to Hull as they are from the northern terminus of the Pontiac Pacific Junction road to Aylmer. If there can be a condition of things anywhere in Canada where it is proper to grant a subsidy for the purpose of paralleling a line in existence, that condition exists here. The Pontiac road requires an outlet at Hull, and here is a little section, seven miles long, from Aylmer to Hull, in the hands of a rival company, which acts the part of the dog in the manger in regard to that section, so that the Pontiac line must either acquire that short section or build another one.

Mr. DEVLIN. I do not think the object is so much to get to Hull as to Ottawa. Just now the people of the Pontiac road are at the mercy of the Canadian Pacific Railway. But even if they acquire this branch from Aylmer to Hull, they will still be at the mercy of that company, because it owns the bridge from Hull to Ottawa, and they will continue to be at its mercy until a bridge is constructed at Nepean Point. If the Government were anxious to assist the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company they would enable that company to reach Ottawa, by voting a subsidy towards the construction of the Nepean bridge. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat says that his reason for defending this subsidy is that he is anxious to place the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway in such a position that it will not be at the mercy of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I wish to point out to him that even when they reach Hull City they cannot come into Ottawa, which is the point they desire to reach, without passing along a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway track and crossing the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge. I am just as anxious as any man in this House or outside of this House to see the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway to a prosperous condition, and to see it receiving the aid which the Government of this country is in the habit of giving other railways. But I do not think we should allow our judgment to be carried away altogether in this matter. It has been said that this road has done a great deal for the country, but it would be well before we go on with these subsidies to remember that a portion of this road, which ought to have been constructed a year ago, has not yet been constructed. It should not be forgotten—as I believe the fact to be—that the company is not in a position to construct the balance of the road. It should be seen to that those who have claims against that road, and they are a large number, should be protected to a certain extent as well as the company which the Government are trying to protect by granting this large subsidy. If my information is correct, the employees of this company have not been paid a dollar of their wages for five months. I do not believe that one-half the debts of the road have been paid. Still, we are voting money which I believe will not be used for years, because the company has no intention of acquiring this branch or constructing a parallel line from Aylmer to Hull, or even building the portion for which they are receiving the subsidy. A good deal of care should be exercised by the committee in the consideration of the subsidies to be given. Now, coming back to the original question, which is that of the subsidy to the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway for the purchase of this road to Hull. Suppose that in a few years hence, the Pontiac Company should feel disposed to sell this road, and a new company should be formed to buy it, will the Government propose a subsidy for the purchase of it? If that is the policy to be pursued, every mile of this road can be made to cost the country thousands of dollars. I am not in favour of this proposition that the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company should get a subsidy to purchase the branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Aylmer to Hull. I do not think that the people most interested are anxious that this road from Aylmer to Hull should pass from the hands of the present company into the hands of the company to which it is proposed that it shall be transferred.

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, for 85 miles of their railway, from Aylmer to Pembroke, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, less the subsidy granted from Hull to Aylmer, provided the Ottawa River is crossed at some point not east of Lapasse, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $73,172.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How much of this is built?

Mr. BRYSON. The road is under construction as far as the seventy-first mile. Up to the sixty-first mile has been in operation since 1887. Ten miles are being constructed this year, and will be completed, I understand, in August, carrying the line to Black River. This will leave twelve miles to complete the line to Pembroke. On the ten miles now under construction the rails have been laid, but the road has not been ballasted. They commenced work on it last September, and it is expected that this portion will be completed ready for operation in August, or early in September next.

For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway near Newcastle or via Douglstown, to a point on the River Miramichi, opposite the town of Chatham, in the province of New Brunswick, 6 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 10, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $19,200.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much of this road is built?

Mr. HAGGART. It is not commenced yet.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this the same road as originally located when the first subsidy was granted?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, exactly the same line; this is a revote.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long is it since the first subsidy was granted?

Mr. HAGGART. About nine years ago, I think.

For a railway from some point on the Joggins Railway, near the Hébert River, to Young's Mills, in the province of Nova Scotia, a distance of 5 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 52 Victoria, chapter 3, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $16,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What condition is this road in ?

Mr. HAGGART. Nothing has been done yet ; no portion of the road has been constructed.

Mr. McMULLEN. How long is it since this was granted ?

Mr. HAGGART. It was granted in 1890.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was that a renewal of a previous grant ?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it was.

Mr. McMULLEN. In these resolutions we are simply renewing grants, most of them made as long ago as 1883. These grants have been in existence for about ten years. We are granting now $635,508 towards schemes that were first introduced, I think, during the time of Sir Charles Tupper, when, by a prostituted construction of the Confederation Act, he and those associated with him took over the entire railway system of this country, by declaring that not only interprovincial roads, but all other roads connected with the principal lines, were railways for the general advantage of Canada. He then set on foot this system of wholesale corruption by the granting of bonuses for the construction of these roads.

Mr. HAGGART. As the whole of this road is in the county of Carleton, represented by your friend Mr. Colter, perhaps you will apply to him the charge of wholesale corruption.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not care where these roads are. They were brought into existence under the regime of a man who is known as a political high priest of corruption in this country. Year after year we are called upon to renew grants for the benefit of schemes that have not a vestige of financial basis. There is nothing whatever to warrant the House in believing that these roads will ever be built. But we are keeping them dangling before the eyes of the constituencies and we are giving to some particular individual favourable to the Government, a charter with a tail in the shape of a bonus attached to it, to hawk around and see if he cannot dispose of it for some consideration. I see that the mantle of the hon. gentleman who is now discharging the position of High Commissioner in London, has fallen upon the shoulders of the Minister of Railways, and he is going on with the same system by giving notice that he is going to ask us to consent to a whole lot more of new grants to bogus schemes that are concocted for the purpose of affecting constituencies through which the proposed roads are to run. He thinks evidently that it may be necessary to exercise some influence in the province of Quebec in the approaching elections, and in order to be in position to do that, he is granting a large amount of money there. When are we going to see the end of this system ? No doubt the hon. gentleman will require all these influences in the next election, but I do hope that the people of this country will see through the scheme. It is a most corrupting and debauching system, and I hope that when the hon. gentlemen opposite are hurled from power, it will not be adopted by any other Government. I care not whether they are Grits, or Patrons, or P. P. A.'s. I hope that such a change will take place, and that we will get rid of this abominable system of trying to corrupt the whole country by bogus railway schemes.

2. That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively, the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively ; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make ; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that this is an objectionable clause. It does not go quite so far as the provision that was proposed in 1889, and which the Government consented to have struck out, after discussion. It certainly gives to the Government a very wide power, and one that it does not seem to be in the public interest that the Government should possess. One would think that where there is no railway companies in existence, the Government, before anything was done, ought to submit to Parliament, as it is public moneys that are being dealt with, the name of the company that they would prefer to receive parliamentary sanction ; or that before such an order would go into operation, where there are more than one company applying for a charter, the Order in Council ought to be laid on the Table of Parliament before it goes into operation, subject to Parliamentary interference or disallowance. The Minister will see that there is no pressing necessity where there does not exist already a company; and I have not learned from the hon. Minister that there is more than one company incorporated to construct these lines of railway. I understand also that there are appropriations made here for certain lines of road which no company has yet been incorporated to construct, and it does seem to me that before any action is taken in this connection, there ought to be parliamentary action. It does not hasten the matter at all to proceed irregularly, and I do not think it is advantageous to the public nor to the Government that there should be extraordinary powers given, as if there was some great public necessity for immediate procedure.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no power being taken to create a company.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, but there is this provision for a grant:

That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose, shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively, the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council.

Now, there is no company in existence, and if a company comes here for incorporation with a view of obtaining a subsidy, it would not require governmental approval.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, but the hon. gentleman will see that these words are connected with what follows, —shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railway.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where the company is not yet in existence, would it not be well that we should say: "established to the satisfaction of Parliament"? That is, that when a company comes here for incorporation, its abilities to undertake the work should be shown to the satisfaction of Parliament.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see that even as regards companies which have already been incorporated here, an investigation is to be made by the department as to their ability to go on with the work. The provision, I think, merely means that when that company has not been named, but that the line of railway has been named, the same steps shall be taken. But the mere fact of the existence of the company is not inquired into, and would not be; of course, that must be assumed. The existence of a company is a condition which cannot be dispensed with before the contract is made. We have to contract with individuals, an existing company, which must satisfy the Governor in Council, as those companies who are named are presumed to have done, as to their ability to execute the work.

Resolutions reported.

SUPPLY—SWEATING SYSTEM AT TORONTO.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EDGAR. I will not apologize for addressing this House for a short time on a subject which affects the system under which a large portion of the wages is paid to a very poor class of the people in this country. That is what is known as the sweating system as it exists in the city of Toronto. The condition of the thermometer makes appropriate a few observations on a subject of this kind.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is a good reason for now calling it Six o'clock.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

RELIEF OF JAMES ST. GEORGE DILLON.

Mr. TAYLOR moved third reading of Bill (No. 148) for the relief of James St. George Dillon.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is not denied that desertion or separation without cause is a discretionary bar, nor that a petitioner should come before Parliament with clean hands. But this is the first time the question has been raised, and it was the action of members of the Senate Committee that prevented the petitioner answering certain questions submitted.

Mr. JEANNOTTE (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any great length on the Bill before the House. I cannot, however, dispense with offering a few remarks on the subject. When we have to deal with a Bill of that description concerning two Protestants, we Catholics generally protest by a silent vote, but, upon such an occasion as this, when we have to deal with a Bill affecting two Catholics of the province of Quebec, I think it is my duty to explain the vote I am going to give. This is the first time, if I am not mistaken, that a Bill is introduced relating to the severance of the marriage tie between two Catholics of the province of Quebec; and should we allow a precedent of the kind to be established without entering our protest against it, we would run the risk later on to see such cases multiply. I am informed that another couple are awaiting the result of this debate to appeal to this House for relief. I know that a similar petition has been made; but as it was not introduced into the House in conformity with the rules, it has been withdrawn. I am at a loss to understand why, in this case, the House did not strictly follow the rules laid down. The regular notices have not been given; they have even been dispensed with. The House, for some reason or another, excused and dispensed the petitioner with complying with the regular notice. Should the Bill be adopted, what result will follow in the province of Quebec? I am aware that the Federal Parliament reserved to itself the power to legislate upon certain matters, as bankruptcy and other matters which operate throughout the Dominion. It is a matter of genuine surprise to me that, in connection with the school question, for instance, appeals should have been made to the right of the majority to establish free or common schools, on the ground that the majority wished to have them so established; and, seeing that it was the majority, it had the constitutional right to impose the law upon the minority. In the present case a new construction is going to be put on that principle, which, at first sight, is apparently sound. Throughout the whole province of Quebec—I say the whole province, as nine-tenths of the population are Catholics—every Catholic is oppressed to divorce. And yet the Protestant majority of this House want to impose the law upon us in the matter. They want to force upon us common schools in the Northwest Territories, just as they have been forced upon the minority in Prince Edward Island and in New Brunswick. The minority have been deprived of their rights, but they have had to bow down to the will of the majority. Now they want to compel us to accept the divorce law. Who may tell what the future keeps in store for us? But in this case, the practice that has prevailed so far is to obtain no longer; instead of the majority ruling, it is now the minority that is going to hold sway; the Federal Parliament has the power to pass a Bill granting divorces to Protestants and Catholics alike, without any exception; and Parliament intends to make use of that right. I am not aware that this is British fair play; but were this Bill to pass, granting the divorce applied for by Dillon, what would be the result? This would be an encroachment upon the local power by the Federal authority. We have our civil law governing all matters relating to real and personal estate, successions, &c. These are the very rights the Federal Parliament is now going to infringe upon. Were this Bill to pass, it would amount to a repeal of Article 118 of our Civil Code, which reads as follows:

A second marriage cannot be contracted before the dissolution of the first.

Mr. JEANNOTTE.

And Article 185:

Marriage can only be dissolved by the natural death of one of the parties; while both live, it is indissoluble.

That is the civil law of Quebec. In the other provinces those matters are governed by the English common law, which applies only to them. Further, in the province of Quebec we do not interfere with the other provinces; we do not try to impose the law upon them, but we let them do just as they please. Protestants do not believe that the marriage tie is indissoluble; we believe that the tie can only be severed by death. We have also in our Civil Code certain rules laid down in unmistakable terms relating to filiation and succession to an estate. There are also in our code rules governing property, movable or immovable. Were Parliament vested with the right of passing such a law—a right which I deny them—a law practically repealing the Quebec Civil Code, the whole order of succession or transmission of property would be thereby modified. Children the issue of a marriage annulled by this Parliament would then be entitled to have the succession directly opened and the partition affected. But is the Federal Parliament vested with such powers? Can Parliament pronounce upon the validity of the marriage tie and grant the divorced parties the right to marry again? Has Parliament the right to declare that children the issue of a second marriage shall inherit in equal portions with the children sprung from the first marriage? Has the central power the power of altering the order of succession as laid down by our code? I do not believe so, because there is no provision in the Federal Act of 1867 to that effect. The constitution of 1867, it is true, gives the Federal authority power to make laws affecting all the provinces on matters of general interest, including divorce. But as far as the right of succession to real and personal property is concerned, there is nothing in the constitution giving Parliament power to interfere with and change the rules laid down by the Quebec Civil Code relating to succession and the transmission of property between private individuals, either by private sale, or by transfer, or by legacy. And should the Federal power grant the prayer of the suppliant and pass this Bill, it is my humble opinion—I do not wish to pose as an authority on the matter—that they would be going beyond their power, for they have no right to alter the order of succession, not even a single syllable of our Civil Code. If the parties to that divorce marry again, shall the children sprung from that marriage be entitled to their share of the succession with the issue of the first marriage? I think so.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Although I am opposed to the Bill, I must call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there is nothing in the Bill affecting the right of succession or any of the civil rights of children.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) The evidence does not clearly show that the petitioner is entitled to the divorce he asks for. When the House referred this Bill to the Private Bills Committee, it did so in order to enable the committee to examine the petitioner. What did the committee do? Nothing. It is a well known fact that when, at the inquiry held by the Senate, the committee of that Chamber would not allow a certain question to be put by a member, because they were afraid of the answer the petitioner might give. According to the law that governs the matter in England, if the petitioner is proved to have been guilty of misconduct conducing to the adultery complained of, his conduct acts as a bar to divorce, and the court is not bound to pronounce a decree dissolving the marriage. They declined to allow a question to be put to the petitioner about his connivance as a bar to divorce because they were afraid he might criminate himself. Therefore the Senate Committee, in refusing to allow a question to be put to the petitioner bearing on his moral conduct and his behaviour towards his wife, have done wrong, I think. The Private Bills Committee of this House, to which the Bill was referred a second time in order that the witness might be examined, did not examine him. This was a very important point, as, according to English precedents in the matter, the petitioner should be enabled to prove that he is not guilty of any misconduct conducing to the adultery complained of. In my opinion, the petitioner is not entitled to the divorce he applies for. He abandoned his wife, and she was left to shift for herself during six years. In his own declaration he says: "I left my wife six years ago without any cause. I had no reason to complain of her hitherto; she was an honest woman." And it was just after having abandoned his wife without cause, that he comes and applies for a divorce. A married man who abandons his wife without any reason is a heartless fellow. As this man failed in his duty the first, and has not justified himself as he should have done, I am of opinion that his application should be rejected.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hon. gentlemen must remember that I never speak against time, and therefore if I say a few words now, it must be because I think it is necessary.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Proceed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill has not been treated in this House as it is the custom and the habit according to the rules of the House. When the Bill came before the House first, it was referred to the Committee on Standing Orders, after it had been read the first time, and the next day or so the promoter of the Bill made a motion which I confess I did not hear—he said something in a very low tone—and it was recalled from the Standing Orders Committee and placed on the Orders of the Day. Therefore, the Bill was not treated in the ordinary way, according to the rules of the House. You remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill was then referred to the Committee on Private Bills, and the committee reported without taking any new evidence. The Bill was then referred back by a majority of the House, to the Private Bills Committee for further consideration and for further inquiries, and the committee again reported the Bill purely and simply without taking further evidence. I understand that the reason why the committee did not put the petitioner under oath was that the petitioner had left the country, and therefore he could not be called upon to give the evidence before the committee which he had refused to give to the Senate committee on the advice of his lawyer, I believe. The member for Cardwell (Mr. White) just now read a paper to this effect: "It is not denied that desertion or separation without cause is a bar in order that the petitioner should come before Parliament with clean hands. It was always understood that the petitioner should be able to show that he had not committed the offence that he reproached to his wife, and that, therefore, he had clean hands." Under these circumstances, I think the Bill is before the House is a very irregular way, and I believe that the petitioner should come here and give his evidence. I move, seconded by Mr. Belley, that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

Mr. DENISON. As chairman of the committee it is only proper that I should say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) in explanation of his remarks. The usual practice of the committee is that when these Bills come from the Senate, we take no further evidence. I think I have been on this committee ever since I have been a member of the House, and only on one occasion did we think it proper that we should call witnesses to get explanations on the different points in the case. The hon. member (Sir Hector Langevin) seems to be under the impression that an unusual course has been pursued in regard to this Bill, but I may say that it has received the same treatment as other Bills, and the reason further evidence was not taken was that it was impossible to get Mr. Dillon here as he is in England.

Mr. EDGAR. In the absence of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) who has charge of the Bill. I would like to correct another error which I think the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) has fallen into. The hon. member seemed to think that the House had acted with exceptional favour to this Bill by referring it to the Standing Orders Committee first, and then recalling that order; whereas, as a matter of fact, it was a mistake to send it to the Committee on Standing Orders at all, because long before that the committee had reported on the petition in favour of the Bill. It was a mistake to refer it to that committee at all, and the result was that it was delayed several days before being replaced on the Order paper.

SUPPLY—THE SWEATING SYSTEM AT TORONTO.

Mr. EDGAR. When the House adjourned at six o'clock, I had risen to make a few remarks on the system known as the sweating system in the city of Toronto. I do so for several reasons. One is because some remarks which I made briefly on the subject once before must have been misreported or misrepresented to a firm in Toronto, Messrs. Lailey & Co., who feel somewhat aggrieved by them. What I said about that firm was not that they engaged in that system themselves, but that sub-contractors whom they employ did so. I do not think that Messrs. Lailey & Co. are at all more to blame than a great many other firms in the same business in Toronto; perhaps they are not so much to blame; and I certainly would not voluntarily have mentioned their name in particular, only that it was drawn from me by a question put across the House by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries; and I wish distinctly to say that I do not think their position is at all different in this respect from that of nearly all the wholesale clothiers in the city of Toronto, whose sub-contractors I contend very largely employ the system of sweating. There is another reason why I bring the matter up to-day; that is, because I have been requested to do so by a number of prominent members of the Trades and Labour Council in Toronto, who take a very warm interest in it. Another reason why I wish to speak somewhat more definitely on the subject is because the Minister of Public Works has said in this House, I am sure inadvertently:

The sweating system, which I am happy to say has not yet been introduced into Canada.

Now, I regret to say that it has been, as I shall show the hon. gentleman to-night. Then, too, if by giving publicity to it in the House of Commons, the outrageous system can be stopped and prevented from extending in Canada. I think I shall have done a great deal by calling attention to it to-night. This system may be defined as a system of distributing piecework among men, women and children, in shops or at their own homes, at starvation prices, which starvation prices are maintained by playing off one of these poor creatures against another. I have taken some trouble recently in Toronto to inquire into this matter. I have read carefully a number of articles upon it which were published in the beginning of this year in the Toronto 'Evening Star.' I have seen the author of these articles and discussed the whole question with him, and I have found him an exceedingly reliable, trustworthy and intelligent man. He occupies at present, and has occupied prominent official positions in connection with the labour interest in Toronto. I have also inquired about him from a number of other people who know him as a journalist and a labour officer, and they have the highest possible regard for his reliability and truthfulness.

An hon. MEMBER. Name.

Mr. EDGAR. His name, if you wish to know it, is Mr. Banton. Now, I would like to make a few quotations from his articles, to show how the system is managed, what wages are paid, and the long hours of those who do the work. In the issue of the 1st of December, 1893, I find the following description of a visit which the writer made:—

The first of the shops run by a Jew that I visited was in the "Noble Ward." As I entered the door; my olfactory nerves were assailed by powerful smells, coming from workroom and living room combined, the hot, gaseous smell from the presses in the shop, and a strong smell of cooking from the domestic quarters. In this place, no attention whatever seemed to be given to laws of cleanliness. I visited other places in the ward to which the same remarks could not apply. The boss told a pitiful tale of low prices, and very, very hard work. The latter was very evident, for the three or four women and two men were working as slaves—colored ones—never had worked. In busy times, he told me, he employed twelve and fifteen hands. He showed me several coats of different kinds.

This is what he says about wages:

The wages vary from 30 to 35 cents. Coats that several years ago were made for 85 cents, he now makes for 55 cents. Heavy overcoats from 85 to $1.25.

Then, describing another visit to another place, he says:

The second of the Jews I visited, in my tour of the sweating shops, was a gentlemanly sort of man, whose place, it must be said, was very clean and well lighted. He declared that he was a recent arrival in the country, and professed to be sorry that he ever came here. He showed me some work he had taken out, which was evidently of a very fine grade, and in which he said he was putting the very best work, but that he did not know what price he was to get for it. There is no doubt he will be able to get plenty, as the big dealers are always on the look out for men who will take the work for any price they can get. I then went further west, and after some difficulty, discovered a place of which I was in search. And what a place it was. The ceiling very low and black with age, a miserable light and poor ventilation. This boss was also a Jew. There were seven men and seven women in the place. Their appearance was certainly in keeping with the place, looking, as they did, more sad and dejected than any I had yet seen. The boss claimed to be a victim of circumstances, and deplored the low wages of his employees, which he said, was from $1.50 to $3.00 per week.

Then I will show you what he says, in another visit he made, about the hours of the workers:

By this time the young woman had come downstairs. She told me that she made men's trousers. This branch of business is the worst paid of all.

"Of course," she said, "it is very hard work and the prices are so low, but I should not care so much if the work were more regular. It is hard to get it to do at all now at any price. Sometimes though it is better, and I have plenty to do then." "How many hours do you work," I asked, "when you have it to do?" "Oh, in busy times I would begin work about half-past five in the morning and work on till 8 or 9 o'clock at night."

That is fourteen or fifteen hours per day.

"How much can you make in a week when you work the long hours you mention?" "I can't possibly make more than $4 a week, mostly not quite so much."

Then he visited another woman who took in this kind of work. He asked:

"Do you ever work on a Sunday?" She replied, "Not at the sewing, but Sunday is generally my hardest day in the week, as although my own girl helps me very much in the housework, I still have a lot to do that she cannot do. I do not like to do it, but when I have plenty of the other work to do, I am obliged to leave house work or washing for Sunday."

Then as to the way the prices are forced down, under this system, I will read another extract:

That this firm systematically forces down the prices, I had ample evidence. The system appears to be that a sample of a certain line of goods is got up, with a little extra work introduced in some particular, and given to some specially needy applicant for work, who not only puts in the extra work but is induced to accept a few cents less, on a promise of having a larger order of the same work, if turned out satisfactory. This sample is then shown to others, who are told that it has been made for a certain sum less than the price usually paid, and that if they will make the same goods equal to the sample for the same price, they can have the work. Otherwise they must leave it for others who will. Several instances were given. Said my informant: "We cannot compete with the Jew clothiers who have come into the city the last year or two. For the very same goods I used to get $2.25 from Mr. —, now I make them for $1.25. Another class of goods for which I got $2.75 and $3, the same man is only getting $1.75."

The writer adds :

So far I have but heard of one house that does a large wholesale trade, which does hold itself responsible for wages being paid to employees. In all other cases, the contractor, whether of the honourable kind or whether it is the "sweater" pure and simple, is paid by the wholesaler, and whether the employees, under the contractors, get their wages or not is no concern of theirs.

Then, Sir, here is another extract which shows that the colony of sweat-workers is increasing in Toronto. This is on January 6th, 1894 :

My guide and I arrived at a low decrepit-looking shop at the lower end of Jarvis Street. Going inside, we found a small colony of Jews, apparently just arrived, as everything appeared to be in disorder. It is a small, dimly-lighted, dirty-looking shanty. Several men were at work at sewing machines, and several others were apparently getting ready for operations, fixing up rickety-looking work tables out of some old boards. The boss explained that a certain great retail house had given him some sample work of coats and had promised him lots of this work at the price. The price he was to get, he said, was 17 cents per coat. I have good reason for believing that what he really gets is not more than 15 cents. For this same class of article the price hitherto paid was 30 cents, and the work has been given out to women to make at that price. He further informed me that it was his intention to employ a lot of hands. He admitted that he would not make much money out of that price, as the girls would want $1.50 and $2 for one whole week.

Then, in another branch of the trade, the shirting, which, I may say, is a very highly protected industry under this tariff, we find these results of the investigation :

That three years ago all these well known flannel shirt lines were paid for at $3 per dozen, but the same class of shirts, with the same amount of work, is now paid for at $1 per dozen. For the ordinary shirts, the price now paid is at the rate of 60 cents per dozen—five cents apiece.

Then, a woman whom he interviewed, said :

Mr. EDGAR.

"I sometimes employ four or five girls, but they are better off than I am, for as a rule, they will only work certain hours."

"How many hours do you work?"

"Oh we," indicating her partner in the business who cannot do very much, "work all hours. I have never been off work at night before 10 or 11 o'clock at night, for goodness knows when."

"How much can you earn in a week?"

"Well, the two of us together can never make more than seven dollars a week work as long as we will. It is as the minister says, who sometimes comes to see us. He said the other day, 'May God have mercy on you, for man shows very little.'"

Now, Mr. Speaker, we all know that the city of Toronto is a model production of the National Policy, it is the model N.P. city of the Dominion. And, Sir, the article of clothing, cotton and woollen clothing is among the very highest protected articles in the tariff. Cotton clothing has from 22½ to 25 per cent protection; woollen clothing, 30 per cent and upwards; ready-made clothing, 32½ per cent, and shirts as high as 50 per cent. Now, Sir, there are the results. I will not say they are caused by high protection, but they are what we find existing to-day after the National Policy has had a trial for so many years. We know, Mr. Speaker, that it has produced combines and monopolies and that it has been the cause of over-production. We see in the papers this week that the cotton mills have shut down and thrown four or five hundred employees out on the street. We see in the papers of to-day a rumour that the Cornwall cotton mills will shut down. We know that the cordage combine shut down its works in a number of places in this country. You know, Mr. Speaker, that what was promised by the National Policy was steady work for the wage-earner, higher wages for the wage-earner, shorter hours, of course. And on the other hand you see the miserable picture that I have given you of what exists in Toronto to a large extent in one particular class of business. Does the tariff afford protection for these poor wage-earners.

Mr. MACLEAN (York). Would free trade give them any protection?

Mr. EDGAR. I will talk about that. We never said that free trade would give them protection. The system of protection protects everybody but the consumer and the wage-earner. The manufacturer is protected but not the wage-earner, and the wage-earners are beginning to find it out. Does the hon. gentleman think he is going to answer me by asking if free trade protects them? I say no, it does not protect them. But I say that the National Policy levies the taxation upon the consumer, while by its protection to monopolies and the over-production of which it is the cause and by the increased cost of living for the poor people, it has discriminated enormously against them. But, more than that, what has been the great undoubted effect of the National Policy? It has gathered the population from the rural districts, the townships and the villages and has swept them into the great cities, and left them there. And there they are to-day overcrowded and suffering the evils of over-production, fighting and elbowing for an opportunity to earn a pittance. In this sense the National Policy is responsible for the condition of these people. If the population had not been swept into the cities by this promise of steady work at higher wages we should not have seen such results among the people of Canada to-day. Canada is the last country in the world where we should see such things as this. Our broad and rich lands should be able to support a large population without crowding them into the cities, without artificial manufactures which are not suited to the country, in which over-production is rife on account of the high protection. The policy and the only policy that can prevent that sort of thing is the freedom which will promote the welfare of the masses of the country and not the welfare only of a few manufacturers in Toronto and a few other cities.

Mr. COATSWORTH. When my hon. friend began I was a little at a loss to know why he brought up this subject at this stage of the session when we are on the eve of prorogation. And I was none the less surprised when he started out with the statement that he desired to make an explanation in regard to a firm whose name he had mentioned, I think, on both the occasions when he formerly spoke on this question, and my surprise was not decreased to any extent when, instead of withdrawing what this firm regarded as an insult to them, he extended it to all the wholesale clothiers in Toronto. I am sure my hon. friend could not have started his speech for the purpose of offering a gratuitous insult to many of the respectable citizens of Toronto, the city from which he derives his living and to which he owes his allegiance as a citizen, although he does not represent any riding in it. It was to some extent an explanation when he stated that he had been written to by the Trades and Labour Council asking him to bring forward the question. But I think the latter portion of his speech showed what was the true reason for bringing it forward, and I think it is very much to be regretted that the hon. gentleman developed what ought to have been an earnest speech in relation to our working-people into a means of making political capital out of them. There is no doubt that the instances the hon. gentleman has related—and I have no reason to doubt that he has fairly looked into them—are very much to be regretted. I think that wherever the system of sweating is carried on, it ought to be discountenanced and prevented. I think, at the same time, that any hon. gentleman who takes up this question for the purpose of making political capital out of these poor hard-working and half-starved people ought to be ashamed of himself. Now, Sir, he attributes the sweating system, as I understand his speech, or endeavours to attribute it, to the National Policy. But he himself says, in the first place, that this sweating is carried on by foreign Jews, who come here from the slums of other cities where they have carried on this business, and who plant themselves in Toronto and endeavour to carry on their business there. Yet in the same breath he tells us that this is the result of the National Policy sweeping the people into the cities so that they have to seek to make their living by this means. I think the hon. gentleman has exaggerated the evil. I have lived in Toronto all my life and I know that city pretty well. But in the first place I would call the attention of the House to the fact that it is only in one line of business that there is any suggestion of sweating, and that is in the making of clothes. Now, the hon. gentleman rather led the House to understand that he had intentionally confined his remarks to one line of business, and I do not think he was fair in making that statement. If the hon. gentleman had not brought this matter before the House for the purpose of making political capital, he would have been led by a feeling of loyalty to the city where he makes his living, and to which he owes his allegiance, to state that there was sweating only in one line of manufacture and that is in the making of clothing. I am very glad to say, although the hon. gentleman did not say it, that that prevails to a very small extent. Now, I have had instances of it come under my notice in the paper the hon. gentleman has referred to, and he has been very careful to conceal from this House the extent to which the system prevails; because those of us who live in Toronto know very well that such a system as that could not be carried on for any length of time before there would be such an outcry against it as would lead to its being done away with. The hon. gentleman himself, in referring to the instances that are mentioned in the newspaper, only mentioned at most five places where the reporter had called and found this kind of work going on. Now, it was not claimed, even by the newspaper that reported it, that this system existed to any great extent. No doubt in a city like Toronto, evils of this kind are liable to creep in, and I suppose it must be admitted that this evil has crept in to a certain extent in this line of business, and in this line alone. I very much regret it myself, and I think every person who is interested in the city, will regret it. But, Sir, if the hon. gentleman was so desirous for the well-being of the people of Toronto, and of the people of this Dominion, as he professes to be, I think he would realize that that evil has come about, to a certain extent—I will not say to what extent, it may be to a very great extent—from the demand for cheap goods which has been brought about by the large promises that have been made to our people by the free traders in this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. COATSWORTH. Hon. gentlemen on the other side may laugh, but they have been protesting on the hustings all over the province of Ontario that you are paying too much for your clothes, you are paying too much for everything you have to buy, and this very feeling has produced among the people a certain amount of discontent and dissatisfaction, and that has led to what might be termed sweating-shop prices. If this kind of feeling is to be inculcated among the people by the political preachers belonging to the Liberal party that they ought to get goods for half the prices they are paying for them now, then so long as such views are urged, so long will there be a demand that these sweating-shop prices shall prevail.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How is it that it is confined to clothing?

Mr. COATSWORTH. Because, as my hon. friend suggested himself, the evil possibly is just beginning. It has not existed for any length of time in the city of Toronto. It may be that if the hon. gentleman continues to insist that the people of Toronto and other places ought to get suits of clothes for $2.50 instead of $5 as they pay now, the people will begin to think they are paying too much, even under the sweating-shop system, and will insist on having them made for $2.50.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman think that the Liberal party should settle the price of clothing?

Mr. COATSWORTH. The Liberal party are endeavouring to do so now. It has been their endeavour through all the elections, it has been their cry upon the hustings, that we are paying too much for everything. Now, Sir, I challenge any hon. gentleman in this House to deny that under the National Policy, which has been supported by the people of this country for so many years, the prices of all the necessaries of life, without the introduction of any sweating-shop system, have gone down from 30 to 40 per cent. I say it is not reasonable to ask for more than that, in that length of time. When you tell the people that, although the necessaries of life have decreased in price 30 to 40 per cent—as hon. gentlemen know, although some of them are laughing about it—if you tell them that they ought to have decreased 75 per cent, that is the very kind of talking that has the effect of introducing the sweating-shop system. It is the demand for cheap goods, which are already cheaper than can possibly be made with fair wages to the working people. I think if my hon. friend is sincere in his desire to benefit the working people, he ought to have brought this matter to the attention of the Local Legislature.

Mr. EDGAR. We have nothing to do with the tariff.

Mr. COATSWORTH. The tariff has nothing to do with the sweating-shop?

Mr. McMULLEN. Nor the National Policy.

Mr. COATSWORTH. No, nor the National Policy, it has nothing to do with the sweating-shop. But the Local Government has undertaken, and properly, as we believe, to deal with questions relating to our working people. They have passed the Factory Act, they have passed an Act for compensation to workmen, they have appointed an inspector of factories, and if he had been doing his duty he ought to have been going around among these people to see that they were not bound down in slavery, as the hon. gentleman says they are. Therefore, I think it was the duty of the hon. gentleman to have reported these facts to the Local Government, and to have seen, in his zeal for the working people, that the Local Government took such action as would compel the closing up of the sweating-shops in Toronto. Now, this question involves a very much larger one, it involves the relations between labour and capital, a question that I do not propose more than to suggest to-night. I sincerely hope that in this country we will be enabled to arrive at such a solution of the problems between labour and capital as will have the effect of preventing such disastrous strikes as have taken place upon the other side of the border. I think it is our duty as legislators to turn our attention to this subject, and I sincerely hope that some scheme of arbitration, or some other method, can be adopted whereby the difference between labour and capital, including just such differences as my hon. friend has referred to, may be satisfactorily adjusted, so that we may have no strikes in Canada such as have taken place in the United States.

IMPORTATION OF ALLEGED IMMORAL BOOKS.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not propose to follow up the question which has been brought to our notice by the hon. member for West Ontario, but as this is probably the last opportunity that may be afforded, I desire to direct the attention of the House to a grievance, and to ask from the Government that some prompt remedy should be applied. On the 4th May last an importation of books, brought in by Mr. Norman Murray of the city of Montreal, was seized by the customs authorities on the ground that they were of an indecent and immoral character, and that, therefore, under the Customs Act, they were liable to be seized, detained and confiscated. Mr. Murray objected to it; he contended that the books so imported by him were not liable to seizure or forfeiture; and, at all events, he asked that the question should be dealt with according to the law. Well, the law was very plain. If the customs authorities think a work is an indecent work, they have certainly the right to seize it. According to the provisions with reference to seizures, the customs officer at the port where the seizure is made, reports to the commissioner, and the commissioner makes a report upon the subject to the Minister. Now, in this case Mr. Murray got a notification from the Commissioner of Customs that twenty-four books had been seized as being of an indecent and immoral character, and that if he had any evidence to present to the contrary, he could present it within thirty days. Now, Mr. Murray had no evidence to present. As I said, the commissioner is to report upon the case within thirty days to the Minister, then the Minister is to determine whether the customs laws have been violated, and if he thinks they have been, he may, in his judgment, say that the importation should be confiscated. In regard to this case I asked a question the other day, and the reply given by the Controller from his place was that the commissioner had made no report, and further that the matter had not come up for decision. If the Minister has decided, then the importer has a right to claim that his decision is erroneous and insist on a reference of the question to the court. But in this matter more than two months have elapsed; this importation has been placed under seizure; no attempt has been made under the law to see whether the seizure has been properly made or not, and that is the reason why I troubled the House with this matter to-night. When Mr. Murray communicated with me on the subject, I stated that it was not a question for parliamentary inquiry or investigation; the law was perfectly plain, and all he had to do was to insist that the commissioner should report and the Controller should act on his report. According, on 12th June, he wrote a letter to the Controller, asking what action would be taken. He received no reply. When I asked the Controller if that letter had been received he said, no such letter had been found. Mr. Murray took the trouble to register the letter, and I have here the certificate of registration. He has done all he could in the matter. The certificate of registration is dated 1st June. The letter was addressed to the Controller of Customs. This is a free country. No man can be convicted except according to the forms of law, and while I am not going to offer any opinion as to whether the book was moral or immoral, innocent, or otherwise, I say the officials charged with certain duties have failed to perform them, and under these circumstances the attention of the House must be called to the fact. The book I may mention purports to contain extracts from a work by St. Alphonse Li-gouri, which I have taken the trouble to ascertain is a well recognized authority, belonging to the Roman Catholic Church. I am told by Mr. Murray that this work in the original, in Latin, is imported and used in all the seminaries of the Roman Catholic colleges.

Mr. LAURIER. Is that the work imported?

Mr. McCARTHY. No, the work imported is in Latin, with an English translation. I do not profess to be able to determine whether the work is worthy of condemnation or not, but it does not appear on the face of it to be a work that should be confiscated, and at all events it is a question which the court should determine. Since that time another seizure of Mr. Murray's works has been made, a book called, "Maria Monk," which he says has been published in Toronto without question, but when imported by him into Montreal the copies have been seized. I think these matters, although small in themselves, are of sufficient importance to receive the attention of the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Controller of Customs is not here, but he sent to me, before he left, the papers connected with the matter, in consequence of an intimation made to him by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) intimating that he would bring up the subject on motion to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MULOCK. Where is the Controller?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is not here.

Mr. LAURIER. Where is he?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I must reply to the hon. gentleman with great respect that he may find out. The Controller was under the impression that the complaint to be met in the House was with respect to the accuracy of the answer he gave to a question asked by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). The matter was brought up in the House by a question put by that hon. gentleman on 9th July, when he asked whether a seizure had taken place, to which inquiry the Controller answered, yes. The hon. gentleman then asked whether the commissioner had made any report, and the Controller answered, no. Then a question was asked whether a letter had been received from Mr. Murray dated 12th June last, and the Controller replied, that so far no such communication could be found in the department. The fact is that at that time the communication had probably reached the department, but had not come to the knowledge of the Controller himself. I have the letter of his secretary, which I will read if there is any object in explaining the matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It appears that the letter which was dated 12th or 13th June was mislaid in consequence of pressure of business, but I have it here at hand.

The seizure was made. It is not necessary that I should say anything about the nature of the publication itself. It purports to be a translation of one of the works of St. Alphonse Ligouri, but it contains illustrations of an objectionable kind. As to the accuracy of the quotations and the question of the tendency of the book as published in a moral sense, it is not necessary that I should say anything; but the seizure was made on the grounds stated by the hon. gentleman. A report has since been made by the Commissioner of Customs—in fact it was made on 9th of July, and proper steps will be taken in order to give Mr. Murray the benefit of the legal provisions which entitle him to a further consideration of the matter with a view to redress.

Mr. LAURIER. The right hon. gentleman will not find it surprising if his reply to the inquiry made by me respecting the absence of the Controller evokes a reply. If I understood the hon. gentleman's answer perfectly, it is not a novel one; it is as old as the world itself, for I understand that he says: he is not his brother's keeper. The hon. gentleman knows as well as anybody, or he ought to know it, that it has been stated in the press that the Controller is on his way to Ireland to take part in an Orange demonstration. As to that, I do not know, and it appears the Minister does not know himself, but I would have expected that he should know.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman carries out his own parallel he would have suspected me of having killed the Controller of Customs.

CIVIL SERVANTS SALARIES.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to inquire from the Government the cause of the delay in paying the Civil Servants. I have received information from Toronto that certain employees in the Post Office Department, letter-carriers and others, have not received their salaries, which are now overdue for some time. This default on the part of the Government has operated in a specially hard way on some who have not been, perhaps, thrifty or forehanded, and the result is that they have not been able to pay their taxes so as to gain the rebate for payment on the 10th July, and consequently they have been practically fined for default. It does seem to me a most undignified position that the Dominion of Canada should be in default for payment of the ordinary wages of their employees. We know that when the 1st of July arrives, supplies run out, but that is no reason why the Government should not have done as they did in former years, and take, say, a one-sixth part of the Estimates so as to pay the letter-carriers and others. I presume the servants of other departments are in the same position as those of the Post Office Department, if the cause is that the Government are waiting for the Supply Bill to pass, but it seems to me to be a great laxity in the administration of business that every person in the employment of the Government throughout Canada has an overdue claim for wages. That state of affairs indicates a most unbusiness-like method on the part of the Government, and a disregard for the wants of those who are toiling for wages. If it were to happen in the case of private citizens, it would result—

Sir JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. BAKER. In a strike.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, or at all events, in a very strong protest. It could not happen in the case of any well regulated business unless the concern was going into insolvency, and surely the Government will not pretend that they are in that position. I hope the Minister will explain how this default has taken place.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman in deploring the fact that the salaries have not been paid, but it is, I believe, the first time in the history of the country that the Auditor General has refused to pay these salaries until the Supply Bill was sanctioned. Even when the session was late on former occasions it was found possible to pay the salaries of the civil servants.

Mr. MULOCK. It occurred in 1885 as well.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am sorry to say that on account of the strong views held by the Auditor General now, it is impossible to pay the civil servants. The session, I hope, is not going to last very much longer, and after the sanctioning of the Supply Bill the civil servants will be paid their salaries.

LACHINE CANAL—WELLINGTON STREET BRIDGE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I propose, Sir, to place a motion in your hands, before we go into Supply, but before I allude to that, I take occasion to say that in my opinion it is a practice which is not recognized by the constitution or by Parliamentary law, that subordinate Ministers, paid servants and officials of this Dominion, should be absent from their place in Parliament without the knowledge and sanction of the Prime Minister of the day. It is very clear from what has occurred that the business of the Controller's department failed to be properly attended to while he was canvassing the country, electioneering against Sir Oliver Mowat, and is not being properly attended to while he is engaged in his, perhaps, more important mission of organizing an invasion of Ulster or preparing to supply volunteers for the invasion of Ulster in conjunction with the grand lodge of that province. However, Sir, if the Prime Minister thinks he has no authority over such an important personage as the Grand Master of Canada, on him rests the responsibility of allowing the business of that department to be imperfectly and improperly conducted. The point to which I wish to call the attention of the House has not reference to the department of the Controller of Customs, but the department of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, whom I am glad to see in his place. We are about to be asked to place large sums of money in the hands of the Government, and it is as well that before we comply with that request we should devote a little time to seeing how they have used the sums which a few months ago we placed at their disposal. It is not my intention on the present occasion to occupy any very great length of time in analysing the very voluminous evidence which has been placed in our hands by the Committee on Public Accounts; nor is it very necessary. The one point, of which I may congratulate the House in this sorry business is, that there are certain broad facts which are established beyond dispute, and it is to them and to them only that I am going to invite your attention. Now, Sir, we have before us the report of a commission issued in connection with this very subject under the authority of the Government. We have also the report of the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, and if that is not enough, and if any hon. gentleman wants to probe this matter still further, I believe they can have access in the records of the Exchequer Court to a most remarkable series of detailed evidence, showing in great minuteness how, and in what manner, what I must call the robbery of this country has been effected in this matter. Now, Sir, I want to call the attention of the House briefly to the facts, which I say are disclosed beyond the possibility of dispute, through these several witnesses. First of all, Sir, it is clear—it is admitted by all parties—that the cost of the works recently erected on the Lachine Canal have been huge and excessive beyond all precedent. Next, that this huge cost is due, to a very great extent, to very gross frauds; next, that those frauds could not have been committed had the department been efficiently and properly conducted, and lastly, although of that the evidence is, perhaps, not quite so clear—that over the whole there hangs a very strong savour of corruption, as, indeed, has been the case with most of the excessive expenditures for other purposes. Now, Sir, I want the House to consider where all these things occurred. These expenditures, this extravagance, this fraud, did not occur in the case of contracts carried on at a great distance from the seat of Government, or under circumstances which might have rendered it difficult for the Government of the day to ascertain the facts in proper time. They occurred in the chief city of Canada; they occurred in broad daylight, in a city which is within three hours' distance by railroad from Ottawa; they occurred in a place with which, I believe, the Government could communicate by telephone if so disposed; they occurred in constructing a work, the necessity of which had been known to the department for years; they occurred in a place which must have been familiar to a great number of the officials there, and apparently all this went on until the money was largely expended, the department all the while remaining in happy ignorance of the transactions which were thus occurring under their very noses. It was only when the newspapers of the country took alarm at the fact that thousands of men were being employed to do the work which might have been done by one-tenth of their number, that any action whatever appears to have been taken upon it. Well, Sir, the result of this kind of management was what might have been expected. All kinds of extravagances seem to have taken place. Three men, or I might more correctly say ten men, seem to have been paid for doing one man's work, if, indeed, the men who received the pay were there at all. Large quantities of material were openly stolen, and, worst of all, a very considerable number of stuffed pay-lists appear to have been created, and these persons appear to have received pay for many days that they were not present on the work. Many men appear to have received pay who never attended at the work at all. In one way or another a huge expenditure, estimated at anywhere from $200,000 to $250,000, was incurred for which no value whatever appears to have been received by the country. Now, as I have said, I am not going to analyse this huge volume of evidence to-night; but I will take a witness to whom hon. gentlemen opposite cannot object, because it is the language of the commission appointed by themselves to investigate certain matters which have arisen in connection with the Lachine Canal. I propose to call the attention of the House to a very few extracts from this report, which will show, I think, beyond question, how excessively inefficient was the supervision exercised by the department over this work, which was carried on in our chief city within three hours rail communication from Ottawa. The first statement I will quote is this:

The temporary buildings and other false works, platforms, roads, &c., were built on an extravagant scale, and it does not appear that provision was made for the greater portion of the temporary work in the bill of timber and lumber furnished those tendering for the supply.

And here comes a very pretty evidence of the care and supervision which were exercised over these works:

By calculations made from the evidence and plans, we estimate there could have been used of all kinds of timber and lumber about 2,594,800 ft. b.m. The total quantity charged to the bridges is about 3,613,600 ft. b.m., which leaves a shortage of some 1,018,800 ft. b.m.

Very tolerable picking and stealing ; on an estimated consumption of 2,500,000 feet of lumber, about 1,000,000 feet appears to have disappeared. What the exact value of that was I am not exactly prepared to say ; but, speaking generally, and looking at the prices charged, I suppose about $15,000 was there stolen :

We cannot ascertain where this latter quantity of timber and lumber was used ; it is probable some of it never reached the works.

Then, Sir, the commissioners proceed to say and I call the attention of every business man, not merely in this House, but in this community, to this—on the subject of stone cutting :

The estimated cost of the stone cutting solely in cutters' hours for the bridges and lock No. 1, taking the ordinary rate paid for piecework, face measurement, would be about $6,000 ; the amounts rendered for wages in cutters' hours amount to $39,896.04.

Work that should have cost $6,000 is valued to us at $39,896.

Of this sum the contractor for labour would have paid his men, at the rate established by evidence, about $30,060, if—

Mark the exception, Mr. Speaker—

—if the pay-lists are correct.

On that point I shall have a little more to say in a few moments. Then they go on :

Upon the Wellington bridge, by the hours charged for stone cutting at the rate of wages paid by the contractor, the cost of stone cut is $12,516 ; the amount charged to the Government including contractor's profit, is $16,715. The cost by piece work would be some $3,000.

The Grand Trunk and Lock No. 1. being mixed in time-keeping, are taken together, and the cost, at the rate of wages paid by the contractor, is $17,548. The amount charged the Government, including contractor's profit, is $23,180. The cost by piece-work would be some $3,000.

Again, on a comparison of the cost of works on the Wellington and Grand Trunk bridges, they say :

The evidence, as stated previously, showed that the work on the Wellington bridge was done extravagantly and that there are some doubts as to the correctness of the pay-lists ; notwithstanding this, the cost of laying masonry per cubic yard in mason's wages, was $1.22 on the Wellington bridge, and on the Grand Trunk $7.00.

What was extravagant at $1.22 in the case of the Wellington bridge came to $7 in the case of the Grand Trunk bridge. Then, they go on :

The night work of masons on the Wellington bridge terminated on the 1st of April ; on the Grand Trunk it is charged until the 19th of April, while evidence shows that the masons worked at night at the commencement only of the laying of masonry on the Grand Trunk.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Upon the Wellington bridge, the cost of cartage, per cubic yard, was approximately 78 cents, while on the Grand Trunk Railway it was $1.80, or nearly two and a half times that on the Wellington. *

* * If we calculate in a like manner the cost of labour per cubic yard for work done, skilled labour on the Wellington bridge amounts to 57 cents per cubic yard ; on the Grand Trunk, $1.69 ; ordinary labour on the Wellington bridge, $1.20 ; Grand Trunk, $2.80.

Here, Sir, is a suggestive statement. The commissioners say :

Grand Trunk bridge substructure should have cost $56,000. The pay-list for labour alone, without taking into account materials and supplies, plant and false works, amount to $139,622.

And this on a work, the whole of which should have cost $56,000, everything included.

The excessive cost of the works is to a great degree attributable to the cost of the Grand Trunk bridge, even when compared with the cost of the Wellington bridge. On the latter the evidence showed that there were more men than necessary, there was a great amount of loafing and idling, an excessive cost of cartage ; stone being carted from Terrebonne, a distance of about 20 miles, with a railway siding running into the quarry and available to carry the stone at a much less rate ; carters, idling, sent with an unnecessary number of men to load and carry lumber ; an unnecessary number of foremen, and general extravagance in the conduct of the works.

Here is another most suggestive item :

The amount charged in the pay-lists for the cutting of the stone for lock No. 1 is $19,238.25 and the amount cut was 284½ cubic yards. This would make the cost of the stone cutting more than $67 per cubic yard.

I am not aware what the proper cost would be. That, very likely, the hon Minister, having probably by this time become an expert in bridge-building, will be able to tell us. But, to my mind, $67 per cubic yard does appear a very high figure to be paid even by a paternal Government, which, the Minister of Finance told us the other day, had to feed and clothe and provide for a great number of applicants. Then the commissioners go on, by way of conclusion, to say :

Taking items of work which have cost large sums, one of these—masonry : There were responsible contractors at the date when the rough stone was contracted for, who would have supplied the dressed stone on time and without delaying the work, at less rates than the Government could have done it by day's labour, even if there had been no labour contract, which increased the cost, considering the manner in which the stone cutting and time-keeping was done. Masons are not occupied during the winter and could have been easily obtained at a set rate by the Government without a contract.

During the season when this work was executed there is very little cartage to be done in the city of Montreal, a number of master carters, as well as others had no employment for their horses and carts, and would have been only too willing to accept a fixed rate rather than have their horses idle. This was exemplified by evidence of carters who worked on Sundays and nights at day rates.

Although, be it remembered, the Government did not get the benefit of that :

An excessive quantity of material and supplies were purchased. The plant was unnecessarily expensive and extensive. The temporary works, or false works, were too costly, even considering the method adopted in construction which appears more expensive than might have been other methods of execution. The temporary buildings, &c., were on a scale for works ten times the magnitude of this.

Carters and men were hidden so that the number unoccupied would not be too conspicuous. Forty or fifty men, doing nothing in a lumber yard, their time taken by a time-keeper in the yard, sent with carts for lumber which should have been loaded and hauled by the contractor. An unnecessary night force seemed to have been employed, to obtain the increased profit over day work. There was a wholesale classification of skilled labour whereby the most common and cheapest class of labor was charged as skilled.

Now, I might very well rest the case, perhaps, entirely upon these extracts, but I will just call attention to one or two details which were brought before the committee, and which will be found in some of the exhibits submitted to us by Mr. Doheny and others, and which will give the House a very brilliant illustration of the mode in which these charges were made, and these expenditures incurred. From the 20th to the 30th of March, according to one of these pay-lists, forty-six men were employed, neither more nor less, each day. Now, while the pay-lists showed forty-six men each day, the time-keeper's private time-book shows as follows :—

21st do	11½ do
23rd do	22½ do
23rd do	26 do
24th do	25 do
25th do	25 do

And yet on each of these days the pay-list showed forty-six. These gentlemen had a great knack of remaining steadily at work. It appears. I might multiply that, but I think that that illustration will show well enough how these gentlemen contrived to swell the expenditure in the manner the commissioners' report indicates. Now, we had another little piece of evidence brought before us, from a person whose word will hardly be disputed, I think, by hon. gentlemen opposite, or anybody else. I refer to a gentleman who has conducted very important works on behalf of the Grand Trunk, Mr. Hannaford, one of their chief engineers. Here is what Mr. Hannaford, being sworn, said :

Mr. Scriver, I will tell you what I will do. I will have the bridge ready for navigation, on the 1st May, and let the Grand Trunk jump on me, and they will jump on me quickly enough if it is not ready for the railway. I would have taken the contract for $70,000 ; that is to say $35,000 for the superstructure and $35,000 for the substructure.

And this substructure, be it remembered, cost us, I believe, $136,000 for wages, without counting the plant and material.

I would have taken the contract for $70,000, and would have pocketed $10,000 for the company.

He was asked afterwards :

Q. You consider there would be a profit of $10,000 for the Grand Trunk after that. That would leave the actual cost $60,000 ?—A. Yes, it would not have cost more than $60,000.

I refer hon. gentlemen to Mr. Hannaford's evidence in detail, if they wish to examine the matter. Here is evidence to show that what we had to pay $136,000 for in wages, not counting material, not counting plant, not counting a variety of other charges, a very competent authority believes could have been done for $35,000. There was no dispute about the cost of the superstructure. It was simply the cost of the substructure which was at issue. There we see, clearly and distinctly, what results were achieved by the department in this work, which was carried on almost under their very eyes and supervision. I do not intend to say that the evidence furnished by Mr. St. Louis, who was also examined before the Public Accounts Committee, is entitled to quite as much respect as that of Mr. Hannaford, or of the commission generally, but it may be interesting to the House to say with respect to the causes which led to these trifling irregularities. Briefly, Mr. St. Louis's plea was that, having to supply election funds, having been a steady subscriber to the party for twenty-five years, having been heavily drawn upon for the purpose of recent elections, he had to make things square. Practically, his plea was that, having been robbed, he had to rob. Sir, Mr. St. Louis's evidence is very much like that of the renowned Jay Gould, who, being once cross-examined by an American committee as to how many subscriptions he had made to the fund of the political parties in various states said, that they might as well ask him how many trains ran from day to day on the Erie road as to ask him how many subscriptions he had been obliged to make for political purposes. It is an interesting detail that, for reasons best known to himself, Mr. St. Louis burned his books and thus prevented his feeble memory from being refreshed as to the ways and the times he had contributed to the public weal. Now, here is a straightforward, plain statement from the hon. gentleman's own reports of the way in which great public works have been managed under their special supervisions, and it only remains for me, to give some idea of the peculiar modus operandi of these same contractors of labour, and to call your attention to one or two statements which were made in the evidence given before the Public Accounts Committee as to the profits reaped by the contractor under this mode of farming out labour. The question was asked: "What was the profit?"—that is the profit to the contractor, and the answer was: "A foreman that was getting $3 on week days would get on Sunday, $4.50, and St. Louis would get from the Government $8," so that the man would get $4.50 and St. Louis would get $12, leaving the reasonable profit of $7.50 on a charge which ought to have been something like $4.50. And on another occasion he was asked—this had reference more especially to night work—

Q. You would get how much?—A. We would pay stonecutters $3.50.

Q. And how much would you get?—A. $9.20.

A pretty reasonable profit, Mr. Speaker, and a pretty good illustration of the wisdom of the department in employing contractors to get labour with which Montreal was swarming at the time, and with which it was known to be swarming, because these works were all constructed during the dead time of winter when, as everybody knows, carters and masons, and all such workers find it exceedingly difficult, in a city like Montreal, to obtain any adequate employment. Now, Sir, what are the excuses that were put forward, more or less, on behalf of the department? Briefly they were these—that at the time this work was going on there had been a change of deputy-head, also that the work was hurried, although it was known for a long time such a work must be put through within a certain fixed period, and, lastly, that the department did not know what was going on, but when they did they issued a commission to investigate how the steed had been stolen. Now, Sir, I beg to point out that this was a work the necessity for which was perfectly well known years ago. There was no reason on earth that I can see—no reason was given to us at any rate—why, with the knowledge that these bridges required repair, with the knowledge that these things had to be done before a certain period, preparations could not be made in ample time for the work. So far as I am acquainted with this kind of work, I should say there would have been very little difficulty, or ought to have been very little difficulty in having the bulk of the masonry that was required prepared a considerable time before the canal required to be unwatered, and I am advised that such could have been done. And remember, Sir, that all these things seem to have occurred in a space within the compass of a few hundred yards. They occurred in connection with the work for which an ample staff was maintained and paid for by this country, and which, apparently, had mighty little to do during these months except to supervise and attend to the proper execution of these works. Now, Sir, these facts being shown, these facts being established by the reports of hon. gentlemen's own commission, these facts being corroborated by the evidence taken before a committee of this House, these facts being strongly corroborated by the evidence of engineers like Mr. Hannaford, I would like to ask the House what they think private employers would do to agents of theirs who had conducted a work of this kind in such a manner? Are we to say that nobody is to blame, are we to say that at least $200,000 of the public money is to be thrown away and that it is an ample justification for this waste to say that the department—a department with a staff costing us some $50,000 or $60,000 a year, not to mention the Minister at the head of it—are free from blame if they issue a commission and dismiss one or two underlings? Sir, what will this House choose to do? Will this House choose to vote that they have full confidence in the efficiency and ability with which the department is conducted by its able and eminent chief, with its competent and experienced staff under this wise and paternal Government, or will they, as I rather think they ought to do, agree with me and in saying:

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and the following inserted instead thereof:—"it appears from the Report dated 19th January, 1894, made by the Commissioners who investigated certain matters connected with the construction by the Government of the Wellington Street and Grand Trunk Bridges on the Lachine Canal in the city of Montreal; and from the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee during this Session:

1. That the said bridges were constructed chiefly during the first four months of the year 1893, by the Department of Railways and Canals, the superstructures being contracted for and completed by the Dominion Bridge Company within the estimates of the Department therefor.

2. The Department decided to have the work on the substructures done by day labour under contract for its supply and a contract for such labour was entered into by the department with a contractor who carried out the work as laid out by the department and under its superintendence and direction.

3. The original estimate of cost of the substructures was $122,000, and the Commissioners estimate that any reliable contractor could have executed the same amount of work at the same season and in the same time for $160,000, whereas the accounts presented to the department for such work amount to $430,325, whereof $394,000 has been paid.

4. The supply of timber and lumber certified to by the officers in charge of the works for the department is over a million feet board measure more than could have been used in the said works as in their construction.

5. The cost of stone-cutting on the Wellington Bridge by piecework would have been some $3,000, whereas the amount charged to the Government therefor, including contractor's profits, is $16,715, and the cost of stone-cutting on the Grand Trunk Bridge was still more excessive.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

6. The prices paid by the department to the contractor for labour were greatly beyond current prices, in some instances being as high as $12 for work for which the contractor only paid $4.50 and $9.20 for other work for which the contractor only paid $3.75.

7. That in many other respects the construction of said bridges was conducted in a wasteful and improper manner.

8. That in the opinion of this House the Department of Railways and Canals is deserving of the severest censure for inefficiency, neglect of duty, extravagance and gross mismanagement in connection with the said works.

Mr. HAGGART. Even at this late hour of the evening, and of the session, I may be pardoned if I take some time in explaining the full details of the construction of what is now the celebrated Curran bridge. In 1891, as you are aware, there was an agitation in Montreal in favour of more extended facilities for crossing the Lachine Canal, where the old Wellington bridge was situated, and in 1892 an estimate was prepared by the Government and a sum was voted by Parliament for the purpose of constructing that bridge. This involved not only the construction of that bridge, but the renewal of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge, with a span the full width of the canal. In the session of 1892, $170,000 was voted by Parliament for that purpose, which embraced both structures, as was shown both in the evidence taken by the commission, and in the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. The bridges were to be built for an eighteen-foot navigation. On the 16th October, 1892, a written estimate of the cost of the reconstruction of these bridges for an eighteen-foot navigation, was prepared by the department. That included a new pivot pier, and the construction of the land piers on which the bridge was intended to be built. Under that estimate, the retaining walls were to be retained, they were merely to be rebuilt, or retopped. These were originally built for a fourteen-foot navigation, and the walls were to be torn down and replaced. The cost of this work was estimated by the engineer at $170,000, and when he furnished me the estimate, he suggested that the superstructure should be erected by contract, that the material should be secured by tender, and that the work on the substructure should be done by days' labour. The chief engineer communicated his approval of this course on the 19th October, 1892, and, on the 22nd of the same month, an Order in Council was passed adopting the recommendation of the chief engineer. At the same time there was under consideration the deepening of the lower section of the canal from St. Gabriel's lock to where it met the St. Lawrence River. It was decided then to build a lock at the entrance of the Lachine Canal which would have a sufficient depth on the mitre sill to give a twenty-two foot navigation. That depth was to be excavated up to St. Gabriel's lock. I inquired of Mr. Trudeau, the chief engineer, to furnish me with an estimate of what that would cost, but he declined, saying that he was unable to do so without consulting with Mr. Parent, who was the superintending engineer of the Lachine Canal. Mr. Parent was sent for from Montreal, and between the two of them they made up an estimate of the extra cost of building that bridge for a twenty-foot navigation, which would necessitate a depth of twenty-two feet in the canal. They furnished an estimate of what it would cost to build that bridge above the previous estimate of $170,000. The two engineers reported to me that the extra cost required for doing this particular kind of work would be $40,000 in excess of the estimate which they had furnished me before. They estimated that the construction of the bridges would require an expenditure of $210,000. In January, Mr. Parent asked if the bridges were to be built for a twenty-two foot navigation, and the chief engineer of the department instructed him that they were to be built for a twenty-two foot navigation, which necessitated a depth of water in the canal of twenty-four feet. Those who are acquainted with canals know that the actual depth of water required in the canal itself is a couple of feet in excess of the navigation. Mr. Schrieber instructed him to build piers for a twenty-two foot navigation, which would entail an additional cost of $13,000, making a total of $223,000. Upon this extra cost being communicated to me by the chief engineer, I at once authorized the work to be undertaken on that basis. Superintending-Engineer Parent to have full charge. In reference to a twenty-two foot navigation, I may state here that a mistake of the chief engineer of the department, in the instructions which he gave to Mr. Parent, entailed the extra cost of a depth of two feet more than was required in the canal. That responsibility my Deputy or Chief Engineer of Canals fully accepts, and they say it was a mistake to have that extra cost entailed, which resulted in an increased expenditure of at least $13,000. That brought up the estimate to $223,000. As I have already stated, Mr. Parent was instructed to take full charge of the work, and Mr. Kennedy, Superintendent of the Lachine Canal, to have direct charge on the grounds under him. Mr. Desbarats was given the position of assistant engineer, to lay out the work, prepare plans, &c. On 28th November, 1892, Mr. Parent instructed Mr. Kennedy as to his duties. When arranging to carry on the work, Mr. Parent, in consultation with the Chief Engineer, arranged to procure the labour by tender—that is the allegation of Mr. Parent. There were no written instructions to that effect given, and afterwards, when his attention was called to the fact that he had no written instructions for labour, he said that verbal instructions must have been given him by Mr. Trudeau. The fact is, I know of no such instructions by Mr. Trudeau to Mr. Parent, and he is not able to produce any evidence that instructions to that effect were given him. Early in December, tenders were invited by Mr. Kennedy for timber, stone, labour, and those were in due course forwarded to the department by Mr. Parent and submitted to me by Chief Engineer Schreiber. In all cases the lowest tender was accepted. The tender for lumber, for which a specific bill was prepared was of the value of only about $14,000, and Mr. Henderson's tender, being the lowest, was accepted; but subsequently a complaint was laid with the Chief Engineer, and he, considering that the bill of particulars did not give an opportunity for a fair competition, invited other tenders. A letter was written by Mr. Parent, remonstrating with him, and giving instructions that in future the dimensions of the timber must be given, in order that tenders might be prepared to give fair and free competition for the work to be done. Months before this, instructions had been given by me to my Deputy that all materials furnished the canals were to be furnished under open competition and tender, and these instructions were supplemented by further instructions given by Mr. Schreiber to the superintendent of each canal. On December 5, 1892, Mr. Trudeau retired from the public service, and his office was assumed by Chief Engineer Schreiber on that day. Mr. Schreiber was instructed to visit all the canals and make himself familiar with them and their requirements. On December 23, 1892, he addressed instructions to Mr. Parent for his guidance, which set forth that as regards the Lachine, Chambly, Beauharnois and St. Ours canals that he had full charge of the staff and was held responsible for the economical conduct of the work and the efficiency of the operation, further, that all orders in regard to works would be given through him, and that he would be held responsible for their efficient management and conduct, and he was further instructed to be careful to report on all these points frequently to the department as to the manner in which the work was being carried on. We are told that shortly afterwards tenders were sent to the department for different materials required for the work under construction, and also for the labour. The Chief Engineer submitted them to me. That was the first knowledge I had that labour was asked for by tender. I demurred taking action, and I refused to sign the papers at the time, and instructed the Chief Engineer to send Mr. Parent from Montreal to Ottawa in order to give me all information possible, and to state the reason why this labour should be given out by tender. Mr. Parent duly arrived at Ottawa, I think on 12th January, and urged me to let the labour by tender. I ask hon. gentlemen who have been present at the Public Accounts Committee to remember that, according to the evidence, the tenders were not for day labour, that the proposition of Mr. Parent to myself was as respects furnishing skilled labour, such as mechanics required for stonecutting, for mason work and labour of a similar character, and that at the same time Mr. Parent stated to me that he was prepared for all the day's labour that was required for the construction of the work, and that he could use the ordinary hands employed on the canal. He urged me strongly to adopt this system. He gave, as to the Chief Engineer, as a reason why this system should be adopted, that it was better to contract with persons who were in the habit of employing labour in Montreal, and that if this was done there would be less liability to strike. The prices asked for the labour seemed to be fair, and on the recommendation of Mr. Parent and Mr. Schreiber I awarded the contract for skilled labour, accepting in each case the lowest tender. At the same time I warned Mr. Parent and Mr. Schreiber that all the labour required for carrying out that work should be obtained on requisition either through Mr. Parent or Mr. Kennedy to the parties employing the labour, and Mr. Parent was instructed instantly to discharge any man who was not efficient and did not do his work. He was also to be careful that the time of the labourers was kept by the Government time-keepers. He was to have a staff appointed purposely to keep their time, and he was to be very careful as to the time those men were employed. Further, the pay rolls were to be made up in his office, and they were to be certified by himself, Mr. Kennedy and the head Government time-keeper, and he said he would see this was strictly observed. Mr. Schreiber, on hearing this, and after having a conversation with Mr. Parent on the subject, urged on me the necessity of letting contracts for labour. I accepted the contract, and Mr. Parent was instructed to accept Mr. St. Louis's tender, his offer being the lowest. It has since transpired, but it was not then known, that Mr. Kennedy first received tenders for this labour, and that Mr. Parent, considering the opportunity given for competition insufficient, invited further tenders. There were four tenders in all, namely, W. G. Turner & Co., E. St. Louis, J. B. Rose, J. E. Trotter, and the tender sent in by Mr. St. Louis was the lowest. Stonecutters and other kinds of labour were employed. As I have before stated, Mr. Desbarats was assistant engineer, and looked after the plans and took out the quantities. There was a long negotiation with the Grand Trunk Railway Company with reference to building what is known as the Grand Trunk Railway bridge. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) read from the evidence of Mr. Hannaford that he calculated the cost of that bridge would be $70,000. A promise was made by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and, until the last moment, we were expecting the company would build a bridge, but neither the company nor Mr. Hannaford ever made a tender to the Government that they would build it for $70,000. The only offer we ever got from the Grand Trunk Railway Company was that they would undertake the construction of the bridge, employ the men themselves, and receive 15 per cent on the amount of expenditure for their superintendence. At the last moment, when we were expecting them to erect a bridge, they refused to enter into the contract as the time was too short. There being a large staff of engineers in the Montreal office, who, during the winter season had very little or nothing to do, the chief engineer considered the employment of Mr. Desbarats as superintendent of the work unnecessary, and he recommended that the Montreal staff was ample to look after it. Mr. Papineau, who had charge of building the drain from Lachine down to the River St. Pierre, had no work to do at the time in that portion of the Lachine Canal, and he was at the head office and was given the superintendence of the work. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) says that on the 1st of March, 1893, the Government had plenty of time, and that they ought to have had all the material ready. The Government fully expected that they had all the material ready, because, on the 1st of March, 1893, Mr. Parent reported by letter that all the stone for the pivot pier of the street bridge was delivered, except a few coping stones. He reported over two-thirds of the stone ready, and with the excavation above water commenced, and with 75 per cent of the stone for the railway bridge delivered, he said his only anxiety was about the superstructure. Therefore, nearly all the material necessary for the construction of the work was prepared and ready before the water was let out of the canal. At this stage of the proceedings I may state that Mr. Parent reported to the department that all the time necessary for the building of the bridge, after unwatering of the canal, was in the neighbourhood of forty days, and the canal was unwatered on the 8th of March. He was instructed to make arrangements with the different parties in Montreal interested in the mills along the canal, as to the most convenient time for letting out the water. I understand that the mill owners along the canal employed about five thousand hands, and the stoppage of the work for a longer time than was necessary was a matter of great concern to them, and to the whole community. The work had to be done in the quickest possible manner. By arrangement with these manufacturers, and with others interested, the canal was to be unwatered on the 1st of March, and the water again let into the canal on the 1st of

May. On the 8th of March, the vigorous prosecution of the work was proceeded with and six Government time-keepers were appointed to look after it, namely, Coughlin, chief time-keeper, and the time-keepers under him were Glenny, Baillaigé, Davin, Dolan, and Warburton; Doheny being time checker. That was an ample staff to look after and check the time of all the men necessary for the work. On the evening of the 9th of March, an article appeared in the Montreal 'Star,' which was communicated to me, I think the next morning, in which it was stated that there were 1,300 men employed upon the work. I forget now whether it was I who drew the attention of the Deputy Minister to this article, or whether the Deputy Minister came in and showed me the article. I did not know how it could be possible that 1,300 men could be employed on the work, and I drew the attention of the Deputy Minister to it, and he immediately telephoned instructions down to Mr. Parent that if such were the case a large number should be immediately dismissed. At the same time, the Deputy Minister communicated with Mr. Parent, I think by writing, drawing his attention to this statement, and stating that if the number reported were actually employed, it was too great, and he also warned Mr. Parent to conduct the work with due regard to economy. On the same day, Mr. Douglas, who had visited the work in connection with the superstructure reported the number of men on the work was very great, and that the work was being done in an expensive manner, and that the bills would be large. Mr. Parent was immediately ordered to report, but, instead of doing so, he came to Ottawa, and, on the 12th of March, explained that the 'Star's' statement of the number of men upon the work was greatly exaggerated but still he gave the Department to understand that there was a very large force employed, and he was instructed to dismiss a great number of them, and he did so. I find that about that time the number of men was reduced by about 450, and the teams were reduced by about 110. Mr. Parent was further requested to report weekly upon the state of the work, but this he failed to do for the reason he has given in his evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. His reasons were that it was impossible for him to get the information to report upon, either from Mr. Kennedy or the time-keepers. About the 13th of the month a dispute arose as to the wages which would have to be paid to Mr. St. Louis. This is the first time that I was aware that Mr. St. Louis was furnishing the ordinary day labourers for the work upon the canal. A Mr. Emard, from Montreal, came up with the same complaint about the charges which were being allowed to the men for the purpose of carrying on the work. He claimed that all the ordinary labourers were entitled to $1.89½ per day, as they were under what he called his contract price, and that they were skilled labourers. I understood until this time that the ordinary labourers who were engaged on the work were employed by the Government foreman, and that Mr. St. Louis supplied no labour except the skilled artisans. He claimed that eleven of these parties were entitled to $1.89½ a day, and I objected to it, and stated that I would not allow anything of the kind. I objected to it, saying that that price was in excess of what I thought labour could be obtained for at Montreal. I knew at the time that the job on which they were employed was a very nasty job. The men were working a good deal in water, and the wages necessary to be paid would be perhaps a little in excess of what were paid for ordinary labour. I knew nothing about the circumstances whatever. The only knowledge I had was that the price required for the men's labour was in excess of what I thought it ought to be. I instructed Mr. Schreiber to inquire what would be a fair price per day for a man labouring on that work. He consulted with Mr. Parent. I had no knowledge either from Mr. Kennedy or from any one else employed on the work that men could be got for 25 cents or 50 cents a day less than they were paid. All that came to me as the head of the department was that 15 cents an hour was a fair price for a man's labour. The hon. gentleman states in his amendment that for work for which Mr. St. Louis was paying the men $4.50 a day he received $12, and that for workmen whom he was employing at $3.70 a day he was getting $9; but the hon. gentleman forgot to state that the department took no such interpretation of the contract as Mr. St. Louis put upon it. His interpretation of the contract was that men employed on Sunday and at night were employed in overtime. My interpretation, which was confirmed by the Minister of Justice, was that when a man was employed for ten hours a day, and worked a couple of hours extra, the two extra hours were overtime—that if men worked by shifts, they were not entitled to overtime, and I refused to pay it. The Government held that they were not entitled, under the contract, to pay the prices demanded by Mr. St. Louis, and they did not pay them. I never heard, until the evidence was given in the Public Accounts Committee the other day, that there were a number of men transferred from Mr. Kennedy's roll to Mr. St. Louis's pay-roll, and I may as well here show how impossible it was for me to find out the frauds which I knew were being committed there. I knew that the timber charged for was in excess of what was required for the purpose of building that bridge; I knew that the labour charged for could not possibly be employed in its construction, and I knew that the demands made upon the department were in excess of what was honestly used in the construction of the work. I tried every possible means to get at the bottom of the frauds, and to that end I had the detective force employed on the Intercolonial Railway sent up and put on the Montreal works; but I found it impossible to discover where the frauds were committed. I had great difficulty in obtaining the evidence of the time-keeper, Mr. Doheny, for the purpose of defending the Government against an action brought by Mr. St. Louis in the Exchequer Court for a sum of money, amounting, I think, to $67,000 or $68,000. I had great difficulty in getting evidence sufficient to prove that there had been frauds on the work. I obtained information that the Government had been defrauded in the pay-rolls—that numbers of men who had no existence were put upon the pay-rolls; that fifty or sixty men, or perhaps double the number actually at work, were returned on the pay-rolls by Mr. St. Louis, when, in fact, Mr. Doheny stated the number actually employed was far less than the number he returned, and it was only in the Public Accounts Committee the other day that I was able to get from Mr. Frigon evidence that the return made by the contractor to the Government for the horses and carts employed on the work was far in excess of the quantity and time actually employed on the work. I think it is possible that this evidence may be corroborated, because the time-keeper gives in detail the names of 100 or 120 men whose time he kept upon the work. If thirty or forty men had five or six days added to their time, it is possible to obtain information now whether the statement of Mr. Frigon was correct or not. I merely state this in passing to show the difficulty the department had in obtaining information in regard to frauds which were evident in the accounts and the pay-rolls themselves. On the 6th of April the chief engineer visited the works, and was shown over both bridges by Superintendent Kennedy, who explained matters generally, and the chief engineer instructed him to collect all the time-keepers in the office, as he wished to examine their books. This he did, there being, the chief engineer thinks, four time-keepers present, of which P. Coughlin was chief, and explained the various time-books, which were certainly well kept; but they complained that they had to provide their own time-books, and the chief engineer informed Superintendent Kennedy that he must at once see that the time-keepers were paid for the books, and they must be the property of the Government and become records of the canal office. The number of men visible upon the works, though large, did not appear to be so very excessive; but Mr. Schreiber gave Mr. Parent instructions for a further reduction of the force. I myself visited the works on the 19th of April, as soon as I could go. I looked at the work, and outside of the men who were employed in putting up the steel bridges, which was being done by contract, there appeared to be very few men on the work. There were twenty or thirty men employed in breaking stones, and I immediately instructed the engineer to have them dismissed, as I did not see any necessity for them. The limited number of men employed on the work might be accounted for by the backing up of the water on the canal, in consequence of ice in the St. Lawrence River, which would make it difficult for many men to be employed. The chief engineer, about the 12th of April, sent Mr. Douglas down to Montreal to investigate, and on the 14th of April he reported as far as he was able to ascertain the amount of the pay-rolls, etc, for March and the first week in April to be about $177,000, and that there would probably be a further expenditure of $100,000 by the 1st of May. And he reported, of course, that he had impressed upon all the parties the necessity for curtailing the expenditure. On the 18th of April, a part of the pay-roll only for March was received by the department. The chief engineer always told me, when I questioned him, as I was very anxious about the work; you will be correctly informed when you get in the pay-rolls and the accounts for the different months. I urged upon him continually the necessity for getting the information at once. I knew that he telephoned and wrote to Mr. Parent, urging upon him, again and again, the necessity of sending up the pay-rolls in order that the department would be fully informed as to what the work would cost. He found it impossible to get these; and as I said before, in the Public Accounts Committee, you will see how carefully the facts were kept back. It was only late in April that the March pay-rolls were received, a lot of the wages earned in March were slipped over into April, and the April pay-roll was only returned in May after the work was completed. On the 18th of April, a part of the pay-rolls for March were received by the department, and on the 24th of April the department received the balance of the pay-rolls for March. Upon receipt of these, the chief engineer, on the 24th of April, instructed Mr. R. C. Douglas to look thoroughly into everything in connection with these works and to take nothing for granted. On the 19th of April, I went down myself, and on the 25th of April, the chief engineer reported the condition of affairs to me, setting forth that, so far as Mr. Douglas had been able to investigate, he believed the cost would reach not less a sum than $360,000, but that Mr. Douglas would continue his investigation. Mr. Douglas continued his investigation, and reported that he believed the cost of the bridges would exceed the amount he had already named; and on the 10th of May, the chief engineer conveyed this information to me, suggesting that some person or persons be appointed to thoroughly investigate all matters in connection with the expenditure. Upon this, a commission was appointed to inquire into the expenditure. That committee reported, as the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution has stated, and a portion of whose report he read. They reported that the department had placed confidence in their chief officers on the grounds, whose duty it was to watch over things and keep down expenditure, and report from time to time the progress and condition of the work. It turned out, however, that they entirely disregarded orders, and purchased timber and other materials in large quantities by private purchase and without authority, far in excess of the requirements of the work. The chief Government time-keepers, the superintendent, and the superintendent engineer, certified to the pay-rolls, and other Government officers joined in certificates of the correctness of accounts, the amounts of which they afterwards swore they knew nothing about. The whole business seems to have been one of fraud and collusion. I do not know whether it is collusion or not, because I hardly think the superintending engineer, Mr. Parent, was guilty of collusion. I think it was through ignorance and incapacity that he was deceived. But the Government time-keepers, I have not the slightest doubt, connived with the contractors for the purpose of defrauding the Government. Let me show how little idea I could have had of the heavy amount of liabilities incurred during the time the work has been carried on, before the 1st of May or before it was completed. I will state the amount of payments made for labour and material each month during the progress of the work:

August, 1892.....	$ 48.85
September, 1892.....	29.10
October, 1892.....	60.50
November, 1892.....	117.11
December, 1892.....	3,597.19
January, 1893.....	10,118.34
February, 1893.....	23,716.56

At that time Mr. Parent reported that nearly all the stone was cut for the bridges and that 75 per cent of the material for the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge was on the ground:

March, 1893.....	$29,826.26
------------------	-------------

And I have shown the particular time when the March roll came in:

April, 1893.....	$102,870.40

which did not appear until well on in May. For the whole time the work was being constructed, up to the 1st of May, when the work had to be completed, in order to be ready for the opening of navigation, the whole expenditure upon this particular work, as furnished to the department and which we were called upon to pay, was $3,957 in December; $10,118 in January; $23,716 in February; $29,826 in March; and $102,870 in April. In May the accounts came in to the alarming sum of $155,383, and in June the amount of $51,076. So that you will see that the department had no means of informing themselves by the accounts that came in, whether the expenditure was in excess of the estimated cost or not, until the work was completed. Then, as regards the pay-rolls, which are embraced in the expenditure I have already given, in November, the amount paid under the contract was nil. In December also there was nothing. In February the amount was $11,879.26, and in March, $100,806.55. As I have observed already, up to the 28th of April, the contractors for labour had only been paid the sum of $13,541, and up to the 18th of April that was the amount of the contractors pay-roll received from the local officers by the department. You will therefore readily see, Mr. Speaker, how little opportunity I had of knowing, until the work was completed, the extent to which the contractors' pay rolls had been run up. The chief Government time-keeper swore before the commission that he kept the time on the Grand Trunk bridge, as well as on the Wellington, so that the deception with regard to the pay-rolls appears to have been kept up all through the time during which the work was in progress. When the Chief Engineer called the time-keepers together on the 6th of April, neither Superintendent Kennedy nor the time-keepers gave any intimation that they were not keeping time on the Grand Trunk bridge. I had no information, nor had the department, either by letter or other communication from Mr. Parent, that the work was costing anything in excess of the estimate which he furnished himself. On April 19th, I said to him: why, Mr. Parent, when you say that you are having difficulties which you did not contemplate when you made the estimates of the work and furnished it to me, was it not your duty to have kept the department informed, week by week, of the progress and the amount of money expended, and especially if the estimate was exceeded. But no such information was furnished. Remember also that during the time that work was being completed, as far as regards myself, as the head of the department, Parliament was in session until the 1st of April, and I had not the opportunity to visit the work. But as soon as I had the opportunity, on the 19th of April, I went down to see the work. So far as the department is concerned, there was nothing in the information as to the material furnished on the works, to lead the department to believe that the amount to be expended in the construction of the work would reach such an alarming sum—for I say that this amount of $394,000 is an alarming sum, and I have no hesitation in saying that a large portion of that is money fraudulently obtained by parties employed in the construction of the work. Assuming Mr. Parent's evidence to be correct when he estimates that the removal of the ice caused an additional expenditure of $30,000, it is to be remembered that he estimated $223,000 as the cost of the work, so that, under the circumstances, $253,000 was the amount for which he thought the work could be constructed. And I believe now that $253,000 ought to have finished that work. But let me say as to the evidence which was then before the Exchequer Court the other day, the Government had not been in possession of Mr. Desbarats's evidence and had not had time to look over it. I have forgotten the name of the witness—a Frenchman—who gave evidence as to the disappearance of material. But I can hardly believe that five hundred pieces of timber ten or twelve inches thick and varying from twenty-five to thirty feet thick could disappear in a night or two. Mr. Frigon's evidence shows that the time-rolls were padded and that names representing men who never had an existence were upon that roll, while the time of many who had only worked a few days was greatly extended. That evidence was only given to the Public Accounts Committee a few days ago. The evidence is hardly printed yet. I intended to bring the whole matter under the consideration of my colleagues when they have time to consider it, so that we may see what is to be done for the purpose of punishing those who have been guilty of the frauds which I have not the slightest doubt were perpetrated upon the Government.

Mr. TARTE. The hon. Minister has frankly admitted that the Dominion exchequer has been defrauded of a very large amount of money. His admission was not necessary; all those of us who have followed the case before the Public Accounts Committee have, day by day, ascertained that, as the hon. Minister has said, the public treasury has been defrauded. But, Sir, if we agree upon that point, I am very much afraid we shall hardly be able to agree as to the parties upon whom the responsibility of these frauds must rest. The hon. Minister has given us a history of the case, and he added that the Government had no means of knowing at the time that frauds were being committed. Well, it seems to me that the course of the Department of Railways and Canals was the very course to allow thieves, if there were thieves, to commit their crimes. The hon. Minister has said that Mr. Parent was put in full charge of the works. At the same time he says that he believes that Mr. Parent is not criminally guilty, but is guilty of incapacity. The hon. Minister is not quite right in stating that Mr. Parent was put in full charge of the works. He was put in charge so far as two or three letters could put him in charge, but what are the facts of the case? If you look at the evidence we have before us, page 251, of the volume of the evidence taken in Montreal, you will find that Mr. Kennedy was appointed overseer, that is, he was given—over Parent's head—full charge of the work. Mr. Kennedy had behind him very strong influence, it appears. The influential men who were friendly to him came to Ottawa and had interviews with the Department of Railways and Canals, the result being that Mr. Kennedy was given full charge of the works. Here, for instance, is what Mr. Ogilvie says after having had an interview with Solicitor General Curran and Mr. Trudeau in the city of Ottawa :

When we went into the passage, we met Mr. Kennedy and he said, "I do not want to undertake the work as a contractor," or something of that kind. Mr. Ogilvie said to him, "that is all right now ; you take charge of the work and put it through and have our water back in the canal on the first of May, and you will make a name for yourself. Mr. Kennedy left us and went to Mr. Trudeau's office.

That conversation took place after Solicitor General Curran and Mr. Ogilvie had had an interview with Mr. Trudeau. What took place after that ? Mr. Parent wrote to Mr. Kennedy a few days afterwards informing him that he had been appointed overseer and telling him that he had full charge of the works. I quite agree with the Minister that a great responsibility rests with Mr. Parent, but to say that he had full charge of the works is not fair to Mr. Parent and is not true, according to the evidence, as the hon. Minister knows. Kennedy felt that he was above all influence, and if it was necessary to prove it here, I should only have to read the letter he wrote to Mr. Parent himself, in which he stated that if any one dared to make any report except through him or ask any information from the foremen except through him, he would dismiss immediately the men who would give such information. Mr. Parent himself went to get information from the foreman. Coughlin, one of them, has stated before us that he refused point-blank to give information to Mr. Parent himself because he had received positive orders from Mr. Kennedy. Now, the hon. Minister says, and he dwelt very much upon that point, that the Government had no possible means of knowing what was going on. Mr. Trudeau had appointed Mr. Desbarats, as resident engineer on the works. He had appointed him at a salary of $150 a month. Mr. Desbarats had prepared the plans ; he was well acquainted with the works. He went to Montreal in the month of October, and I may say that he organized the works. I desire to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the dates I am going to give. On the 4th of February, Mr. Kennedy writes to Mr. Parent a letter about Mr. Desbarats's interference. Mr. Desbarats's crime was to go to the foreman and men and to ask for information. On the 6th of February, two days after, the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, writes to Mr. Parent the following letter :—

The subject of your pay rolls in connection with the Wellington-street bridge has been under consideration, and it appears that the hon. Minister has given no authority for Mr. Desbarats' salary being increased from $105 to $150 per month, and to return the pay roll for correction, and I am further to ask who employed an office boy and by what authority it was done. The work of looking after the Wellington-street bridge should be done from your office without extra cost.

I say again, that this letter was written on 6th February, that is to say, two days after Mr. Kennedy's complaint. It is not proved, I must admit, that this letter was communicated to the Minister, but there is something that cannot be explained. How is it that Mr. Desbarats was practically dismissed two days after he had been complained of by Mr. Kennedy, whose influence at the time, was dominant on the works ? Mr. Parent, who knew that Mr. Desbarats was a very valuable man, wrote immediately to Mr. Schreiber on the following day, as follows :—

If in your opinion the work of looking after the execution of the plans of the two Wellington-street bridges should be done from this office without extra cost, then it would mean that you consider Mr. Desbarats's services are not required and to my great regret, although I consider his services most valuable under existing circumstances, I shall have to dispense with them.

Well, if the department had only read this letter with a reasonable amount of care, would they have dismissed Mr. Desbarats in face of the protest of the chief engineer in Montreal ? Were Mr. Schreiber and the Minister wise when, in face of the strong protest of their engineer, they dismissed the man who had prepared the plans, who had begun the work, and who, it has been proved since, had been a most efficient officer ? The department seemed very anxious that Mr. Desbarats should not be retained much longer on the works. On the 13th February, the following letter was written by Mr. Schreiber :—

I have your letter of 7th inst., with reference to the staff pay list in connection with the Wellington-street bridge for January, and covering a copy of a letter signed by the late chief engineer of canals, placing Mr. Desbarats in charge of the construction of the new Wellington-street bridge at a salary of $150 during the execution of the work. The department does not take the same view of this matter as you do, and I quite agree that one engineer can readily attend to the giving of the lines and levels at the bridges in Montreal, and look after the Lachine drain matters, and one only can be kept, that is Mr. Papineau.

Well, Sir, without consulting the chief engineer in Montreal, Mr. Schreiber appointed Mr. Papineau instead of Mr. Desbarats. A few days afterwards, on the 27th February, Mr. Schreiber again writes to Mr. Parent :

I presume you have carried out my instructions of dispensing with Mr. Desbarats's services at the close of this month.

Here were four letters in a few days to dispense with Mr. Desbarats's services. The department may not be criminally guilty, but, on this occasion, they are certainly amenable to the charge of being more than imprudent. They had a man there who had been placed in charge of the works by Mr. Trudeau, a man who had been there for three months, who had done his duty, and they dismissed him without giving any reasons.

Mr. HAGGART. What date was he dismissed?

Mr. TARTE. He was really dismissed on the 6th February

Mr. HAGGART. Just a month before the work commenced.

Mr. TARTE. I can prove to the Minister that the work was then going on. He says that the work only began in the month of March. He has said inaccurately that Mr. Desbarats went on the works in Montreal only in the month of April; but if you turn to page 4 of form F 1½, you will find that on the 17th February, Mr. Douglas, one of his most important officials was in Montreal, and was sending in reports. I think the Minister has mentioned Parent's name when it should have been Douglas' name. I have the evidence before me.

Mr. HAGGART. You are mistaken in the date.

Mr. TARTE. Let the hon. Minister turn to the evidence of Mr. Schrieber at page 4, form "F":

By Mr. Tarte:

Q. What date?—A. The 17th, 18th and 19th February. On the 18th of February there is a memorandum from R. C. Douglas, who was down there looking after the substructure.

Mr. HAGGART. I think that must be a mistake for March.

Mr. TARTE. I hope my hon. friend won't ask us to believe that there was another clerical error. On the 17th, 18th and 19th February, work was going on there.

Mr. HAGGART. There was stonemasonry going on.

Mr. TARTE. In the month of February, Mr. Douglas, one of the officials of the department, was on the works and he made three different reports about their progress, and when the Minister gives Mr. Parent as having made reports at that date, he is simply giving the name of the wrong man; it was Mr. Douglas who made the reports. Well, when the Minister says that he had no means of knowing what was going on, he is mistaken, and the House cannot believe him. He has made the mistake unwillingly, no doubt, but it is nevertheless a mistake. He had one of his most important officers on the work making reports to him. How is it that Mr. Douglas, at that time, did not call the Minister's attention to what was going on? Mr. Desbarats's dismissal was the real cause of the loss that has taken place. That dismissal took place because Mr. Kennedy felt he was all-powerful, and that he could dismiss any one. Mr. Parent was afraid of him. If Mr. Parent had been a man of energy, after Mr. Kennedy's letter to which I have alluded, in which he threatened any man who would report to Mr. Parent with dismissal, Mr. Parent should have dismissed Mr. Kennedy immediately. But Mr. Parent knew by what influence Mr. Kennedy had been appointed, that he was backed by the influential men of Montreal, that Solicitor General Curran had caused him to be appointed Superintendent of the Lachine Canal and overseer of the works, and Mr. Parent was afraid of being dismissed as Mr. Desbarats was dismissed. Mr. Parent has been guilty of weakness, without doubt; but the Government have been guilty of imprudence. The Department of Railways and Canals had before it the protests of the chief engineer, they did not keep any account of them, but they dismissed the man who could have prevented this trouble. Why should they have dismissed him? No information on that point has been given. It is in evidence that the department kept himself thoroughly informed as to the progress of the works by communicating by telephone with the officials in Montreal. There is no record, however, of the telephone messages by which the Minister was kept informed. The Government had one of their most important officials on the work, from the date of its inception in February, and still they state they could not keep themselves informed. The Minister has admitted that very high rates of wages have been paid. He says the Government are disputing the charges as being enormous. The Minister of Railways has followed the inquiry no doubt with care, but he has failed to note some important points. If he will turn to Mr. Villeneuve's evidence at page 25 he will read as follows:—

Q. Do you know what price you paid for the men?—A. Well, the foremen on the Grand Trunk bridge were paid on the average about 30 cents an hour.

Q. By whom?—A. By Mr. St. Louis. That was for day time. The price from the Government that Mr. St. Louis charged was $4. That is $1 a day profit. At night time I believe there were a few hours added to the time and St. Louis got $6 for them.

Q. What did he pay?—A. He paid $3. I believe there were five hours added to their time for night work.

Q. What was the profit for foreman?—A. That will be $1.50 at night, but that is on every day.

Q. What was the profit on Sunday?—A. On Sundays we gave time and a half at the same rate as we paid them on week days.

Q. What was the profit?—A. A foreman that was getting $3 on week days would get on Sunday $4.50 and St. Louis would get from the Government $8.

Q. At night?—A. The man would get $4.50 and St. Louis would get $12.

Q. According to his tender?—A. Yes.

On the next page 26, the following reply was made to Mr. Lister:—

Q. Have these accounts been paid?—A. Most of those accounts have been paid.

This is perfectly true.

Mr. HAGGART. At that rate?

Mr. TARTE. Yes. There is no dispute in regard to anything but overtime. Again, the Department of Railways and Canals is directly responsible for the scandalous rates that the department paid as wages to the men. The tenders were placed before the department. It is said that Mr. Parent recommended the tender accepted. I fully agree that Mr. Parent made the recommendation. I think it was a mistake. Mr. Parent was sent for by the department, and came to Ottawa; he saw the Minister and the chief engineer and discussed the matter with them, and the scale of prices was agreed upon between them. It has been proved before the Public Accounts Committee that when Mr. St. Louis entered into his contract with the Railways and Canals Department, Mr. Kennedy had actually engaged 800 men who were working at $1.25 per day. It is stated that the department did not know this. The department knew it well, could not reasonably ignore that fact. Mr. St. Louis got the contract on 18th January. The first correspondence is dated 10th January. I repeat that the Minister saw Mr. Parent, that Mr. Parent was sent to come to Ottawa, that the question was fully discussed here, that the rates were before the department, that the department agreed to those rates. On Sundays there were at times 1,000 men working day and night. It has been proved that 70 or 80 carters often worked at night at the excessive rates quoted. We know, then, to a very large extent where the money is gone. No doubt Mr. St. Louis's profits out of the work must have reached nearly $150,000. These were made, for a great part at least, on account of the imprudence of the department and the ill-advised contract made with Mr. St. Louis. There was some difficulty at the commencement of the contract in regard to the term "skilled labour." Mr. St. Louis came to Ottawa with Mr. Emard and saw the Minister, and the Minister agreed that the men who were going to work with pick and shovel should receive $1.50 per day. It has been proved that Mr. St. Louis paid those men $1.10 and $1.15 per day. The Government surely could ascertain the price of labour in Montreal at that time. But as a matter of fact the Department of Railways and Canals closed their eyes, I will not say in an intentional way, but in a most condemnable way. I wish to again call the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Douglas was on the work in February and remained there for a time. He went down again in the month of April when the work was in full blast, and he remained on the Grand Trunk bridge. The hon. Minister stated that he never knew, and that nobody could tell, that there were no time-keepers for the Government on that bridge. I want to know from him, how is it that his own engineer, Mr. Douglas being there all the time, could not know that the Government had no time-keeper? Is there any possible explanation of that? It cannot be denied that Mr. Douglas was there during the months of April and May—and in March also, I think—for several weeks. He made reports to his chief, and during all that time the Government had no time-keepers on the railway bridge, and the Minister says he did not know anything about it. What has been the cause of that, and what explanation can the Government give? I must confess that even though I should exercise all my ingenuity, I myself, cannot find any. The hon. gentleman has alluded to the correspondence and negotiations which passed between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Department of Railways and Canals. As the Minister very truly says, that Grand Trunk bridge has cost us an alarming amount of money, but nevertheless the Department of Railways and Canals had before them a most positive offer from the Grand Trunk Railway Company to build that bridge for $70,000. Here is what Mr. Hannaford says in answer to Mr. Gibson:

Q. But at that time you were quite willing, in October or November, had you been allowed to proceed with the work?—A. Quite so.

That is for $70,000. Mr. Hannaford has stated under oath—

Mr. HAGGART. What page is that, I never heard that before.

Mr. TARTE. My hon. friend can read it as I do.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to lead this House to believe that Mr. Hannaford offered to do it for $70,000?

Mr. TARTE. Sir, I will read the evidence and leave the House to draw its own conclusions.

Mr. HAGGART. Read it then.

Mr. TARTE. Here is what Mr. Hannaford says:

Q. Can you remember about the time that those communications passed between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Government engineer?—A. They commenced in October, 1892.

Q. Was the Grand Trunk asked to make any offer as to the construction of the bridge—

The answer of that question is very long, but I will go straight to the point to which I have referred. At page 4 of the evidence we find the following :—

By Mr. Lister :

Q. In October, I understand the first correspondence commenced?—A. Yes.

Q. The Grand Trunk Railway Company at that time would have undertaken the construction of the substructure and the superstructure for $70,000?—A. At that time we would have.

That is very clear evidence.

Q. Then it drifted along into January?—A. Yes.

Q. But at that time, you were quite willing, in October and November had you been allowed to proceed with the work?—A. Quite so.

This is Mr. Hannaford's evidence.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman stated that he could read from the evidence that Mr. Hannaford offered to do it for $70,000?

Mr. TARTE. And I answered the hon. Minister in reading the evidence.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is there a word in the evidence that would corroborate your statement?

Mr. TARTE. I have just read what I think confirmed my statement.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think the hon. gentleman did.

Mr. LAURIER. Order.

Mr. TARTE. This is a very important question and I am prepared to be interrupted. The Grand Trunk Railway Company would have undertaken the construction of the substructure and superstructure for $70,000?

Mr. HAGGART. Where do you find that they ever offered to do it?

Mr. TARTE. If the hon. gentleman does not admit that, I will have to read the whole evidence.

Mr. HAGGART. Read it and show me a single sentence which goes to show that he made that offer.

Mr. TARTE. The hon. Minister is bound to get out of this trouble by using every means he can.

Mr. HAGGART. No, no.

Mr. TARTE. Will he lead the House to believe that when communications, written and verbal, had taken place for weeks and weeks between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Department of Railways and Canals, and when the Grand Trunk Railway Company were ready to go on with the work, does he mean to ask us to believe that he did not understand the Grand Trunk Company were ready to build the bridge?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman asked me a question, and let me answer it.

Mr. TARTE.

The hon. gentleman stated that the Grand Trunk Railway Company made an offer to the department to do it for $70,000.

Mr. TARTE. Yes, and I will prove it.

Mr. HAGGART. He has not produced a single tittle of evidence to that effect as yet, nor can he do so.

Mr. TARTE. I believe I can. I am very sorry that I am obliged to read more than I expected to, but I see that the hon. Minister has not followed the case with all the attention that he should have given to it. I will read more.

Mr. HAGGART. All right.

Mr. TARTE. All right, I will read more. The first answer from Mr. Hannaford was—

Mr. HAGGART. Let me read the answer and the hon. gentleman will see.

Mr. TARTE. I can read for myself.

Mr. HAGGART. I want to read what Mr. Hannaford says—that he could not do it for $70,000.

Mr. TARTE. To the first important question put to him, here is what Mr. Hannaford says :

Q. Was the Grand Trunk asked to make any offer as to the construction of the bridge?—I may perhaps be allowed to explain, so as to save time. In October, 1892, the late Mr. Trudeau acting on the part of the Government, wrote the Grand Trunk Railway Company, informing them that it was the intention of the Government to build a different class of railway bridge across the Lachine Canal, Wellington-street, Montreal, to what then existed, the idea being to remove the two piers and to allow the centre pivot to remain, and to span the whole of the canal by two spans, by a bridge turning on its pivot in the centre. Mr. Trudeau asked the Grand Trunk if they would like to build the superstructure of the bridge, that is, the steel or iron portion of the bridge, and if so, to give them an estimate of the cost. This was in October, 1892, and the Grand Trunk replied, the latter part of the month, that the estimate they placed on the construction of the superstructure of the bridge was $35,000. That was the cost of the superstructure. In 1892, in the latter part of November, Mr. Trudeau again wrote the Grand Trunk Railway Company acknowledging the receipt of the first letter, and saying that perhaps the Grand Trunk would like to make an offer for building the substructure of the bridge as well as the superstructure. This letter, for some unforeseen reason, never got to my office. It was addressed to Mr. Sergeant, general manager of the road. He refers these things across to the officers that are concerned. It did not get to my office till the latter part of December. I made an estimate of the cost, and Mr. Sergeant wrote the department on the 28th December, 1892, saying that the railway company placed the cost of the substructure of the bridge at $35,000, a similar sum to the amount for the superstructure. Therefore, the two amounts together would be $70,000 for building the railroad bridge complete, but he suggested that as it was then so late in the season, the fact, being, gentlemen, that the quarries were all closed, our derricks were dismantled, everything was in a state of repose for winter, it was then 28th of December. He suggested that we should, if we undertook it, do it for the government by day's work, so to speak; that we were to show our expenditure, the pay-rolls, the name of every man, and also the cost of all the materials we used, and that in addition to that, a reasonable sum was to be put on for the cost of superintending, the use of plant, steam derricks, and tools of that kind. There was a series of messages passed, and finally Mr. Schreiber came to Montreal in January, 1893. His wish, I think, was that the Grand Trunk should take the bridge contract for $70,000. We said: "No, the season is so far advanced that we hesitate to do it, but we will do it for you and we will charge you what it costs."

That was in the month of January, but my hon. friend cannot lose sight of the fact that in October or November the Grand Trunk Company had declared themselves ready to build the bridge:

There was never any doubt about the possibility of its being ready to be opened by the first of May. There was never any doubt in my mind, as the engineer of the company, as to that, but to have it finished, sand-papered, in common parlance, by the 1st of May, 1893. So matters stood, and on the 8th of February, 1893, the Grand Trunk received a notice from the Government that the work had been put in hand, and that is our last communication from them.

These are the facts; but I will read further on:

By Mr. Lister:

Q. In October, I understand, the first correspondence commenced?—A. Yes. The Grand Trunk Railway Company at that time would have undertaken the construction of the substructure and the superstructure for $70,000?—A. At that time we would have.

In the face of such evidence, in the face of the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway Company had declared that for $70,000 they would have built the bridge, where is the reasonable excuse for the Government asking this country to pay $250,000 for the same work?

Mr. HAGGART. We have not got that offer yet. I am waiting on it.

Mr. TARTE. I suppose my hon. friend means this:

Q. Did the chief engineer, Mr. Schreiber, want you to take the contract at $70,000 in January?—A. Yes. He offered it to us.

Mr. HAGGART. No, I am waiting for the offer of Mr. Hannaford to the department to build the bridge for $70,000.

Mr. TARTE. There is this question, by Mr. Lister:

Q. He offered it to you in January, but for the reason that your plant was dismantled you refused to take the contract?—A. Well, we talked it over with him. I will speak candidly to you, gentlemen; I thought my estimate of $35,000 was a very high one for the superstructure, and I thought it would be better and fairer as between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Government to have it done by days' work, and for this reason that the Government, as I understood it, had a quantity of stone on the ground that could have been used in the bridge.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Hannaford, representing a large company thought he had made an estimate that was too high; and, as my hon. friend knows, he stated that for that sum of $70,000 he would have built a stronger bridge and have realized for his company $10,000 profit. This is Mr. Hannaford's evidence. We are not here to play on words; we are not here to make quibbles. The real facts of the case are these. In October or November, and even in January, the Grand Trunk Railway Company declared themselves ready to build the bridge; but the Government did not again communicate with them after the month of January. After having been for weeks in communication with them, and after having ascertained in an unmistakable way that the Grand Trunk Railway Company estimated the cost of the bridge at $70,000, the Government began the execution of the work in the way we all know now.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think the hon. gentleman wishes to be unfair. If he will just read Mr. Hannaford's answer to a question on page 7, he will find that he said:

Q. What particular portion do you think—might I trouble you to read it—it seems to me they merely give an opinion as to its costing that amount, but state only a readiness to do it for whatever it will cost, keeping an account?—A. Quite so.

Q. Not an offer to do it for $70,000?—A. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And again, Mr. Gibson's question:

Q. But at the time you were quite willing, in October or November, had you been allowed to proceed with the work?—A. Quite so.

Q. But you were not willing to do it after it was delayed till February?—A. No.

The point in dispute is really this: the Grand Trunk would have done the work if you had given them the contract in proper time; they would not do it if you delayed it.

Mr. HAGGART. What I stated was that we had not an offer from the Grand Trunk Railway Company to do the work for $70,000. I have never seen a tittle of evidence to prove that we had.

Mr. TARTE. What is the reason the Grand Trunk Railway Company did not get the contract?

By Mr. Lister:

Q. But $70,000 would have covered substructure and superstructure and everything else?—A. Yes, sir, and the only difference between us and the Government was this: I did feel and feel to-day that the estimate of $70,000 was too high. I wanted to clear myself of it; I put in the estimate the day before Christmas.

The hon. Minister cannot deny that the Grand Trunk Railway Company went so far as to send in their own estimate of the cost of the work. Was that not a formal offer to build that work?

When I made the estimate, I said to our people there is going to be a margin of ten thousand dollars.

Why, again, did the Grand Trunk Railway not get the contract? The reason is given:

Q. By your people, you mean Mr. Sergeant?—
Yes. Then Mr. Schreiber came down and he was quite satisfied with everything, as he always is. There is no difficulty in dealing with Mr. Schreiber, because he is always very practical. Now, this is what Mr. Schreiber telegraphed from Ottawa, on 4th January: "Construction of your bridge over canal near Wellington-street, Montreal, must be proceeded with at once; and completed without fail at the opening of navigation. Inquiries instituted since I saw you convince me that it can be accomplished. Tenders for superstructure should be received within ten days. Will you undertake it or shall we proceed? You having kindly stated to me the other day that you were ready to facilitate the matter in every way gives me confidence. Please reply by wire."

Now, this is what Mr. Schreiber says about that:

The only difference between the Grand Trunk and the Government was in these words—"and completed," I did not like to sign for my company, "and completed," because when a thing is completed, it is completed. The bridge is not completed to-day.

As a matter of fact, the Government then quibbled as they have quibbled to-day. I do not intend to occupy the time of the House any longer. The Government acted unwisely in dismissing Mr. Desbarats. They had every means in their possession of being informed, throughout the execution of the work, of what was being done, because they had their engineer, Mr. Douglas, there nearly all the time. They had appointed Mr. Edward Kennedy overseer, in full charge of the work, through political influences. It is in evidence that Mr. Parent wanted to unwater the canal long before March, but political influences interfered, and he was overruled on that occasion, as he was during the whole progress of the work. Now, we have to pay for the music. The Government have disputed Mr. St. Louis's account of $63,000. They have not disputed the account on the scheduled prices, but only as regards overtime. I hope the Department of Railways and Canals will succeed in their suit, as we have wasted and lost money enough on the work. The hon. Minister stated that as soon as the session is over, he will call the attention of the Minister of Justice and his other colleagues to the frauds that have been perpetrated, with the view of having criminal proceedings instituted and civil proceedings also for the recovery of the amounts alleged to have been stolen. I hope that on this occasion the Government will go a little quicker than they did in the case of some other lawsuits which we all know of. On former occasions the Government took proceedings, and those proceedings are still before the courts. Criminal proceedings were taken and the accused put in jail, but they were very soon liberated. They had, I suppose, political secrets or other means of obtaining their liberty. The Government is responsible for the conduct they intend to follow. But it seems to me that they are the most guilty parties themselves. Their neglect, their indifference, their political interference, was the cause of that work being conducted in the most scandalous way possible. They had every means of obtaining information. Montreal is but a few hours railway ride from Ottawa. The hon. Minister went on to the work, his deputy visited them many times, a gentleman from the Department of Railways and Canals was in attendance for several weeks, but the whole of them, after all their researches, were unable to find that on a work, which is costing us $250,000, the Government had not even time-keepers to check the time. More than that, it has been proved that the Department of Railways had no plans prepared for the work. Under such circumstances, how could it be expected that the work could be done in a reasonable way? I am sorry to have detained the House so long, but I think I have shown conclusively that the Department of Railways and Canals is guilty of neglect, and deserves the censure of the House.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat has so long dwelt in the atmosphere of romance and conjecture that it would seem almost impossible for him to depart from it. For that reason, I presume he has not kept to the evidence, but has rather gone in for conjecture and wild assertion. To-night there has been, by the Minister of Railways, a frank and fair admission that wrong-doing was committed in this connection, and the hon. Minister has assured the House—and I am prepared to accept his statement—that a thorough inquiry will be made into all the facts. That being the case, it would seem that little is to be gained by a discussion this evening, but I will, for a few moments, direct myself to some of the hon. gentleman's remarks. At the outset, there would seem to be on his part a cause of great complaint that one Kennedy had been given full charge or control of the work. This was not at all the case. On the contrary, according to instructions issued on the 23rd December, 1892, in a letter from Mr. Schreiber to Mr. Parent, the latter was placed in full control of the whole work, and from the outset until his dismissal later on he, and not Mr. Kennedy, had full charge. The hon. gentleman also saw fit to dwell at considerable length on the dismissal of Mr. Desbarats. It is quite plain that Mr. Desbarats's dismissal was not brought about by any influence outside the discretion of the Minister, or apart from a desire for economy, because on the 5th February, long before the work had commenced to any extent, the superintending engineer was written to and told that the services of Mr. Desbarats could be dispensed with, and that Mr. Papineau would be named in his place. So that it is quite clear, so far as the department is concerned, that Mr. Desbarats's dismissal was not brought about by any other motive except a desire for economy. Had he been dismissed for political motives, it is not likely his services would have been retained as they have been, for he has continued ever since in the employ of the Government, and was simply transferred from one post to another. Coming down to the other matters of inquiry, I notice that Mr. Douglas was on the works on the 17th, 18th and 19th, but a reference to the evidence will show that he reported what he actually saw, because at that time the canal had not been unwatered. The unwatering did not take place until the 18th of March, and on that occasion, the 17th of February, Mr. Douglas reported exactly what he found, that there was a large quantity of material on the ground and that the work was in a fair way to be commenced promptly when the canal should be unwatered. But there was no evidence to give notice that an unduly large number of men were being employed, or anything of wrong-doing, or of a fraudulent nature perpetrated. Now, the hon. gentleman dwells at considerable length upon the interview with Mr. Emard, representing the contractor, and the hon. Minister. The facts shown by the evidence are that on the 13th of March, Mr. St. Louis and his solicitor, Mr. Emard, come to this city to interview the Minister in reference to the work. A dispute had arisen as to the wages to be paid, whether $1.87 a day was to be paid for labourers or not. The Minister at once remonstrated, and said that that was not a fair amount to be paid to labouring men, and, as a consequence, on an overture being made by Mr. St. Louis, Mr. Schreiber, the Chief Engineer, wired Mr. Parent at Montreal as follows:—

Is $1.50 a day a fair rate for common labourers in Montreal, such as shovellers and pickers? If not, how much less? Please reply to-night.

Mr. Parent replied the same evening:

Considering the risk of contractor for strikes and average for wages all through, I would not consider $1.50 too high for choice men, as these he supplied are supposed to be.

So the House will see that as to making anything out of the increase of the wages or allowing the contractor for common labourers $1.50, there is no ground for hon. gentlemen to go upon. So far as the evidence concerning the tender—or rather the offer, for no tender ever was put in—on the part of Mr. Hannaford, representing the Grand Trunk Railway, to build a bridge in their own interest, I have a few words to say. Now, the hon. gentleman has read the evidence at no inconsiderable length, but it is quite plain from all that the hon. gentleman has read, that the Grand Trunk never made a formal offer that they would accept the contract and undertake the work to build a bridge at $70,000. And, on the other hand, a reference to the evidence of Mr. Schreiber will show that time and again overtures were made to the Grand Trunk asking them if they would go on with the work. The final answer is shown in the telegram dated 16th January, 1893, from Mr. Seargant:

We prefer that you proceed with our canal bridge works. We will render all assistance required and heartily co-operate in every way possible and at once.

Now, that disposes of all the points the hon. gentleman has attempted to make, or has made, and, so far as the rest of the matter is concerned, it is simply in this position: In a department of the magnitude and importance of that of the Railways and Canals of this Dominion, it cannot be expected or hoped that the Minister will have personal surveillance over every item. He must of necessity repose some confidence in those under his control. What are the facts? This gentleman, Mr. Parent, was, for many years, a highly respected and trusted engineer in the department. The fact that he was trusted is apparent from the concerns he had in hand. The different canals in the province of Quebec were under his personal supervision. If he saw fit to abuse the trust reposed in him by the Minister, the Minister is not to blame for that. The Minister would be to blame, if, after notice came to him, of wrong-doing on the part of this gentleman, if he had not done what he did and summarily dismissed this official. When $100,000 was paid on account of the work, the Minister, knowing that the original contract would amount to $240,000, knowing that the superstructure would cost $60,000, and having intimations that there would be a large further bill for wages, at once caused an investigation to be made. Hon. gentlemen opposite need not flatter themselves that they were the means of setting on foot this inquiry. It was not at their suggestion at all that the inquiry was undertaken, but on the motion of the Minister himself. Statements have been made of a wild nature, and the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), who is not in his seat, saw fit rather to endeavour to outdo the others, and, in an interview published in the Montreal 'Star,' he has made statements of a very grievous nature. Among other things he says that the Opposition last session had in their possession all the facts and would have brought the matter forward, but that they were prevented from doing so by reason of the fact of the Government not daring to place a vote in the estimates for the work. That statement is outside the facts altogether, because Parliament was closed at the time this large bill came in, so that the evidence was not before the department to show that this large amount was then due or owing. Let us treat the matter as it is. That a great wrong has been done no one will deny. That that great wrong should be rectified no one will deny. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has given us the assurance that he will bring the matter before his colleagues, and he tells us, and I believe his assurance, that the subject will be given the consideration it deserves. A great wrong has been done, and the ends of justice will not be satisfied until these men have been brought, as they should be brought, into a criminal court. I trust that the Government will prosecute these offenders to the bitter end, but as to voting censure to-night upon the Minister of Railways and Canals on the evidence before the House, as to censuring the officials now in the service on the evidence before the House, that would be going too far. I am prepared to accept the assurance of the Minister that the subject will be fully considered and dealt with, and I trust the Government will "Hew to the line no matter where the chips may fall."

Mr. McMULLEN. I had intended to address the House at some length on this subject, but the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) has so fully dealt with the whole case in reply to the Minister of Railways and Canals that there is nothing left for me to say except a few words of reply to what has been said by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Bennett). The hon. member admits that gross frauds have been perpetrated upon the country, and he now states that it is the intention of the Government to take action for the purpose of bringing to justice those who have been guilty of the fraud. Immediately after the close of the work the Government appointed a commission to investigate and to report upon the frauds that had been perpetrated. That report was placed in the hands of the Government six months ago, showing clearly that gross frauds had been perpetrated, that looseness existed in connection with the way skilled and ordinary labour was contracted for. But notwithstanding that that report has been in their hands six months, the Government have never made a single move to bring to justice those who have been by that report shown to be guilty of fraud. Another thing to show the looseness with which the Government handled this whole matter, the contract entered into for labour is on the face of it a loose contract, the interpretation of which has been in dispute before the Exchequer Court. The Government have paid for all the time, they do not dispute the time, they only dispute the overtime. They do not dispute their own contract, they admit that they agreed to pay the very exorbitant prices that have been charged, and the only point in dispute is the price charged for overtime. Now, the Minister has admitted that there has been $394,000 actually paid out for the construction of these two bridges, when a close and careful estimate of his own engineer gave the cost as only $223,000. In addition to the $394,000, there is also a claim of something over $60,000 before the Exchequer Court, a decision on which has not yet been given. The manner in which the labour was contracted for shows that the Department of Railways was guilty of carelessness and recklessness. I do not say that the entire blame lies at the door of the Minister personally, but he is at the head of the department, and is supposed to be responsible for every transaction that takes place in the department. The Government must have been aware of their contract with St. Louis for the erection of the Wellington-street bridge, and they not only contracted with him in a loose and careless way for that bridge, but no tenders were asked for to supply work for the Grand Trunk bridge. They let Mr. St. Louis a contract for the labour on the Grand Trunk bridge just as they did for the labour on the Wellington-street bridge. They did not try to contract, they did not advertise for any new tender for labour to be supplied, but they took from him the labour for the Grand Trunk bridge the same as they had taken it for the Wellington-street bridge, and on the same prices. The contract for the Grand Trunk bridge was let on 23rd February, and it was let at the same price, on the same terms, with the same looseness, and the same opportunity for charging for double time, as in connection with the Wellington-street bridge. The whole thing from beginning to end shows a looseness and a carelessness that is exceedingly to be deplored. It is sad to think that over $200,000 of the money of this Dominion has been virtually thrown away through the inefficiency of the department. But we have the assurance of the Minister, as a source of relief to the people, that he is going to prosecute these individuals. Well, six months ago the Government received the report of their own commission which declared, as the hon. member for South Oxford has read, that gross frauds have been perpetrated, and yet up to the present time none of these men have been placed under arrest, no movement has yet been made in the direction of reaching these men. They are still going around in the enjoyment of their liberty, notwithstanding that he admits to-night that they have been guilty of gross fraud. It is unnecessary to follow up this case, the Minister himself admits the whole charge, and there is nothing for us to answer. The hon. gentleman that he put up to answer the member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) admits the whole case, he frankly confesses that gross frauds have taken place. Now, I want to say a word with regard to the Grand Trunk. The hon. Minister tried to evade the point that has been made by the member for L'Islet with regard to the offer of the Grand Trunk Company to construct the Grand Trunk bridge. Mr. Hannaford, in his evidence, clearly stated that the Grand Trunk were willing to undertake the construction of that bridge. The hon. Minister said : We have no letter, no document in our office to show that the Grand Trunk agreed to construct the bridge for $70,000. They sent their own engineer to Montreal, he went to the office of the Grand Trunk and interviewed Mr. Hannaford, and in the course of that interview, Mr. Hannaford stated to Mr. Schreiber that the Grand Trunk were willing to undertake the construction of that bridge for $70,000; and yet the Government attempts to shield themselves behind the statement that they have no written offer. Mr. Speaker, it is seriously to be deplored that the affairs of this country should be conducted in the loose and reckless manner that they have been handled in connection with the construction of this bridge. We cannot tell what has been the cause of it, we do not know how the leakage has been permitted, we cannot ferret out where the money has gone. Mr. St. Louis, in his evidence, stated that he had been asked for subscriptions and that he had contributed money to election funds; and he swore before the committee that one of the reasons why he had destroyed his books was that he did not want the subscriptions he had entered in his book to see the light of day. Between the Government and Mr. St. Louis and those who were in collusion with him, the country has suffered this great loss, and the only satisfaction we are given is that the Government are going to punish those men after the House rises. Well, if the punishment is no more severe than that which has been visited on those who have been caught red-handed in actions of this kind whereby the country has lost immense sums of money, it will be but poor satisfaction to the people. Possibly some fellow will be caught and sentenced to jail for three months, and will be liberated at the end of the first month.

Mr. MASSON. After the full presentation of this case made by the mover of this motion, and the frank statement of facts given by the Minister of Railways and Canals, there is but little need of any more discussion. I was a little surprised when the hon. member for L'Islet strove by long reference to the evidence to take issue with the statement of the Minister that there had been no offer from the Grand Trunk Railway to build the Grand Trunk bridge for $70,000, as declared by the hon. gentleman who moved this motion. The statement of the Minister of Railways was so frank and so fair that I really expected that every member of the House would accept it, at least in its main features. However, the hon. member for L'Islet did take issue with the Minister on that point. Now, I will not trouble the House with reading from the evidence, because I think that hon. gentleman read enough of the evidence to refute his own position. I think he read enough evidence to show that at no time, at no place, and in no manner, did the Grand Trunk, or Mr. Hannaford speaking for that company, ever offer or suggest that they would undertake to build the bridge for $70,000.

Mr. TARTE. Let me refer the hon. gentleman to page A of the evidence, and read what is at the top of the page.

Mr. MASSON. I have the page before me. I prefer making my statement in the manner I propose. The hon. gentleman read sufficient from the evidence to show that at no time was an offer made, that what Mr. Hannaford said was that in his opinion at one time the Grand Trunk could have undertaken the work; his expressions were "that the Grand Trunk could have done so," "the Grand Trunk should have done so," "the Grand Trunk in proper time would have done so." There is no emphatic statement that the offer was made or even suggested that they would carry it out. But further, in a long answer, which the hon. gentleman took the trouble to read, when the question was put if they would take the work for $70,000, they suggested that that should be done by day work, charging a fair sum for supervision, etc. Therefore, it was clearly shown that, so far as Mr. Hannaford's statement was concerned, it was simply an expression of his own opinion, and it is no uncommon occurrence to find engineers and contractors, after a work has been completed, stating how cheaply it could be done and the large profits that could have been obtained out of it. Mr. Hannaford is not the first engineer who has stated that if he had the superintendency of certain works he could have made large profits. The animus of Mr. Hannaford is clearly shown in his evidence. The hon. gentleman read part of the evidence, which showed why the Grand Trunk could not undertake the work, because Mr. Schreiber insisted on a contract at so much for "the bridge completed." He said he would not talk about completing the bridge :

Not as Mr. Schreiber would call completed, because he is just and upright, and keeps people as old Silas Wegg says—"with their noses to the grindstone." He keeps them flat. Mr. Schreiber would have said : "you did not finish that bridge, sir."

Mr. TARTE. Read the balance.

Mr. MASSON. He would not accept Mr. Schreiber's definition of the word "completed."

Mr. TARTE. Read the balance.

Mr. MASSON. I will read what I please. Every hon. member has the book before him, and any hon. gentleman can stop me if I read incorrectly.

Mr. TARTE. I beg your pardon.

Mr. MASSON. This evidence clearly shows why Mr. Hannaford would not make an offer—he did not wish to be bound by any terms, and he did not wish Mr. Schreiber to be a judge as to when the work was completed. We have this, therefore, clearly proved by Mr. Hannaford's own evidence. And if anything further were required, we have the question and answer which have been twice read in this House: "Would you have taken the work for $70,000?—No, Sir." There is as emphatic a statement as it is possible to make; it clearly establishes that no offer was made. I was surprised that the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) should have taken issue with the Minister on that point, and I was still more surprised that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) should have closed his remarks by endeavouring to raise the same issue. The statement submitted to the House leaves no dispute in issue as to material facts that the bridges cost more than they should have done, that certain parties combined—how many it is not proved—that three or four or more combined for the purpose of defrauding the public, and that payments were made on an extravagant scale. These facts being admitted, it is not unreasonable that hon. members should differ as regards the deduction to be drawn from them, and as to the quarter to which they desire to attach the blame. I have been much surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite should have endeavoured to lay the whole burden on the Minister of Railways and Canals and on his department. But what evidence has been produced in any way reflecting blame on either the Minister or his department? The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has said that this report was made six months ago. The fact that the report was made six months ago clearly shows that no time was lost in conducting the investigation, for it must be remembered that it was about the middle of March before the actual work of constructing the bridge was commenced, and that up to that time all arrangements as regards materials were very small, and it was not until about 1st of May that any return was sent in showing a large expenditure on labour. The amount of $13,000 covered several month's labour, and from that account it was not apparent to the Minister that great frauds had been perpetrated and the lists were being stuffed. There was nothing until a large account for labour was received, which was sufficient to raise his suspicion that anything appeared wrong. When the first large account for labour was sent in, Parliament was in session. The Minister in charge of a large department was fully occupied with his duties, especially during a busy session. Moreover, it was during the closing hours of the session when the House was rushing business through at a great rate, and members were desirous of returning to their homes, that suspicion was aroused in the department. How can it be said that the Minister was responsible for not foreseeing that frauds would be perpetrated, when it appears that these men, who were acting together, arranged to hold back their returns, with a view to having the work completed before the department would be apprised of the fact that the estimated cost was being doubled? But it is said that the report was out six months ago, and nothing has been done. What does the report show? Does it show the parties who were guilty of these frauds, or the manner in which they were perpetrated? The commissioners come to the conclusion, from the large expenditure, that there must have been large extravagance, and they suggest that the lists must have been stuffed, that is, they say: "if all the parties did attend." But there is no evidence presented on which we would be warranted in stating positively that fraud had been perpetrated and improper lists prepared. Nor is there any evidence as regards the removal of the 1,000,000 odd feet of lumber. It was only in the Exchequer Court the discovery was made as regards frauds on the time-lists. It was only at the investigation before a committee of this House that the full extent of these things was disclosed. Would it have been well for the Minister to have rushed in, and have information laid against the parties upon whom suspicion lay, and have them arrested before the evidence was discovered. Was it not more prudent to wait until, in the development of the case, the evidence was forthcoming. But during the interval the Minister did not allow the matter to remain in abeyance. St. Louis's claim was refused and he brought it into court, and the suit has already been partially heard of St. Louis vs. the Queen. Besides that the Minister has instituted proceedings against St. Louis to recover portions of the money wrongfully received. These things must always be borne in mind when we consider the action the Government has taken. I think great credit is due to the Minister for the prompt manner in which he instituted the inquiries appointing a commission, and having their report so far as it went; and for the prompt measures he took, as the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) says, in suspending the engineer in charge within two days afterwards? I do not wish to follow any hon. gentleman in saying on whom the blame lies, between these four or five parties in Montreal. The Minister has promised that the law shall be enforced against them, and they shall be prosecuted, and that being the case it would be improper to comment upon their evidence. They have all given evidence and one has blamed the other. If you read each one's story by itself they are all honourable men. Mr. Kennedy, on whom the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Tarte) lays the great blame as the man who assumed the whole control, is according to his own account the greatest sinner against in the lot. He says that he was an abused man, abused by the Government, abused by his associates, and abused by those above and below him. I would not for a moment consider it proper to criticise the evidence as to which of those witnesses we should believe. It is sufficient for the present moment that the evidence falls far short of showing that the blame is really attachable to the Minister of Railways and Canals or to any of the officers in the department. The points in my mind are reduced to these: It is admitted on all sides that the bridge has cost more than it should, it is admitted upon all sides that the parties in immediate charge, by the stuffing of the time-lists, by the fraudulent spiriting away of large quantities of lumber, by misrepresentations and deceit, have in some way perpetrated a fraud upon the Government, and it is also clearly shown that as soon as the large expenditure was shown and suspicion aroused, the chief engineer ordered inquiries, which inquiries not being satisfactory a commission was issued, detectives put on the works for the purpose of finding out who were the guilty parties, resulting in the discovery of nearly all the facts that the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) relied on, although as I said before, it failed to show who were the perpetrators of the fraud or in what manner they were committed. It was not incumbent upon the Minister to press criminal prosecutions then, and the point raised by the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen): that because the report of the commission was in the hands of the Government for six months, and they had made no arrests, they had been guilty of a dereliction of duty in not pressing the matter more vigorously, falls to the ground. I think, considering all these points, that the Government have not been guilty either of delay or malfeasance in the matter.

Sir JAMES GRANT. At this late hour of the evening, and inasmuch as nearly all the facts about this bridge—which is almost entitled to be called "The Bridge of Sighs"—have been placed before the House, I shall not detain the House by any lengthened observations. It is evident from the discussion already presented to the House this afternoon, that an effort is being made to impress the country with the idea that the Conservative party has been endeavouring to do an injustice to the revenues of the country, and to themselves, which is not absolutely the case. If we inquire into the construction of this bridge from its very inception, we shall see that there were great difficulties to contend with. The bridge had to be built and built in a hurry in order not to interfere with the progress of trade and commerce, or otherwise the country might be subject to very great expense. We know perfectly well that the Government did the best they could under the circumstances. We have heard the whole statement of the case as presented to the House by the hon. the Minister of Railways, and certainly I must say, that in boiling the question down, he has given us the common-sense view of it. What is that view? It shows nothing more nor less than a betrayal of confidence. These were men who were officers in the Government, whom the Government had trusted for years past, never supposing for a moment that they would do anything but what is right and proper? With the work of the session progressing day after day, and trusting this matter entirely to his officers, the Minister of Railways was just as much astounded when he ascertained the facts as any member of the Opposition could be to-night in presenting that voluminous evidence taken before the committee. We know very well that when that report is presented to the country the majority of the people will not be able to sift it to the bottom, or to obtain the real facts. I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House at this late stage of the session, but I have given the matter full and thorough consideration, and after that consideration, I have formulated a few facts, that with your permission, Sir, I will read to the House, and then present my remarks upon them. In consequence of the large increase in the traffic, over the Wellington bridge, which is on the main thoroughfare, Wellington-street, between Montreal and Point St. Charles, it was decided to enlarge the bridge, and for that, and other purposes an appropriation of $175,000 was made, during the session of 1891-92. At the same time it was decided to increase the width of the navigable channels, on each side of the centre, or pivot pin, by removing the old rest piers, and making the new bridge long enough to cover the whole width of the canal (which is 200 feet at right angles). To carry out the widening of the channel, it was necessary also to lengthen the Grand Trunk Railway bridge, which crosses the canal about 200 feet east of the Wellington bridge. There was a probability that the depth of the water in the canal would be increased, it was therefore thought advisable to place the foundations of the new structures at a depth suitable for 22 feet navigation. The original estimate upon which the appropriation was based, was made for a navigation of 14 feet. The new depth of 22 feet caused a considerable increase in the quantity of work required to be done, and increased the difficulties. The time allowed for the completion of the works was also shortened to the period between the 1st of March, and the 1st of May, 1893, though the preparation of plant and material was commenced in December and January, 1892-93. The Grand Trunk Railway Company proposed to build the new railway bridge, the cost to be afterwards refunded by the Government, but on the 16th of January they withdrew from this arrangement, alleging that the time allowed was too short for the completion of the work. The Government was, therefore, required to carry out the work on both bridges. The superstructure for each bridge was let by contract to the Dominion Bridge Company, and that portion of the work was performed by them. Mr. E. H. Parent was superintending engineer of the Lachine and other canals, and he was intrusted with the carrying out of the works. Mr. E. Kennedy was superintendent of the Lachine Canal, and he was directed to superintend the works, under Mr. Parent. Mr. Parent advised the department that the work of substructures should be done by day's labour, and he subsequently recommended that the supply of labour should be furnished by contract. Tenders for labour were called for and the contract was awarded to Mr. E. St. Louis. Tenders were also called for plant and for the materials necessary, except cement, and contracts were made for the same. The original estimate for the two bridges was $170,000. An estimate for the increased depth of navigation, 22 feet, instead of 14 feet, was made as follows:—

Original estimate	$ 170,000
Less for coffer-dam, dispensed with.	15,000
	155,000
Add for the increased depth.....	40,000
	195,000
Estimated cost of superstructures.....	73 000
do do substructures.....	122,000
The total amount of accounts rendered for the construction of the bridges, including labour, material, &c., is.....	490,725
Less contract price of superstructures....	60,400
	430,325
Cost of substructures	430,325
Deduct what work should have cost.	200,000
	230,325
Deduct plant and material on hand, engineering and travelling expenses.....	34,629
	195,696

This large excess of cost over an estimate made, taking all the circumstances, of season, hurried work, and other difficulties, into consideration, can only be accounted for by the want of proper supervision of the labour contract, and those for the supply of materials. Mr. Kennedy exercised no control over the works of the Grand Trunk bridge, and only a partial control over the Well-

Sir JAMES GRANT.

ton. Mr. St. Louis controlled the Grand Trunk bridge works, and the stonecutters on the Wellington. The time of the men was taken by Mr. St. Louis's time-keepers, and the pay-lists were compiled in his office. Though the substructure of the Wellington bridge contains three times as much as that of the Grand Trunk, yet the labour account is about equal for both. The quantity of timber charged for is very largely in excess of the quantity necessary for the works. Mr. Kennedy did not keep Mr. Parent informed of the number of men employed, and Mr. Parent failed to keep the department at Ottawa informed, as he was instructed to do. They did not work in harmony with one another. The largest expenditure was made in the short interval of time between the 1st of March and the 21st of April, and the pay-lists for this expenditure were not received by the department until some time after the expenditure was made. An appropriation of $37,800 was made during the session of 1891-92 for the taking down and rebuilding of old lock No. 1. A contract was made with Mr. St. Louis to furnish the necessary stone, and he was also given the contract for supplying the labour necessary for the stone-cutting. The work of stone-cutting was commenced on the 27th February, 1893, and the work was ordered to cease on the 14th of March following. These instructions of the Chief Engineer were not carried out, but Mr. Parent and Mr. Kennedy permitted the stone-cutting to continue up to the 25th of April. The quantity cut was 284 cubic yards of lock stone, the amount charged for the same is $19,238, or nearly $68 per cubic yard, instead of about $10, which is a high price for that class of work. The stone-cutting for the Grand Trunk bridge was done in the same sheds as that for lock No. 1, and although separate pay-lists are put in for each, yet the amount properly chargeable to each cannot be ascertained. The pay-lists for the stone-cutting were not received at the department until after the work had been done. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have given you this summary, because I think it well that the people of the country should have as succinct a statement as possible of the facts of this case. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has given to the House to-night an elaborate statement. He has gone over every point in connection with the matter: he has shown positively that he had no intention to conceal one single fact, and that the Government had not the slightest intention to hide a fraud. Their desire has been to expose this matter. They have given all the facts to the country and kept nothing back; and I hope that in the future those who have charge of the public works of the country will not write letters from the head of the department, but will go themselves and see that our public works are carried out systematically, and that when men are found to be at fault, will be discharged. I regret exceedingly that this circumstance should have taken place to bring discredit to our country, when no wrong was intended on the part of the Government; and I fully approve of the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals to-night of his intention to look after these men, to prosecute them if necessary and bring them to justice, and to show that the Government of this country has every intention to do what is right and proper under the circumstances.

Mr. GUAY. The hon. member for Essex and the hon. member for Iberville did not vote.

Mr. BECHARD. I paired with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard).

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Construction, Cape Breton, Oxford and New Glasgow section. $57,500

Mr. HAGGART. This is for the purpose of paying the balance of the Hard-pan claims. The amount that was awarded Mr. Isbester, on the finding of the court, was $145,472, and the amount paid is $142,264.69, leaving unpaid, $3,208. Sims & Slater, finding of the court, $31,613. McNeil, McDonald & Co., finding of the court, $11,261.88; paid, $6,518.31; unpaid balance, $4,843.57. John McKean & Co., $4,000, finding of the court; unpaid, $90. McGregor, Kennedy & Graham, finding of the court, $2,400; unpaid, $60. Daniel McGregor, $1,200; unpaid, $30. S. C. Graham, $1,000; unpaid, $60; Daniel McGregor, $1,200; unpaid, $30. McLymont & Grant, finding of the court, $6,000. W. J. Sims, $416.23. Sims & Slater, $5,650.60. Legal expenses, $3,000. McDonald & O'Brien, $940. Stewart & Jones, $860. McManus, Grey & Co., $700. Total, $57,441.60.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought those had all been paid for.

Mr. HAGGART. This is the balance.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How much have they received in excess of the contract ?

Mr. HAGGART. In each case there is the finding of the court. We are giving them the actual cost, which was proven in the court, of taking out the hard-pan, and deducting from that any profit they made in any other portion of the work.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What sums have been paid in excess of what they would have obtained, had they been held strictly to the contract ?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not got the particulars in each case, but only the findings of the court, and the deductions made.

Mr. McMULLEN. What will this branch cost us when completed, and what is its length ?

Mr. HAGGART. You will find the total cost in my report of 1894. The length of the road is 72½ miles, and the total cost, $1,833,114.94, to which will have to be added the amount voted this year, about $2,400 or $2,500.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister has frequently used the phrase "this is the amount due by the finding of the court." We cannot allow him to say that, since the court found there was nothing due, and non-suited the applicants. This is what was found by Judge Burbidge, sitting as commissioner.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to make a statement. I voted on the last motion, forgetting that I was paired with the leading whip of the Opposition. I jumped up without thinking, and would like to have my name struck off the vote.

Mr. LAURIER. That relieves you of a bad vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman's name cannot be struck off the list.

Mr. TAYLOR. I did not think of it until I stood up ; and I am paired with the chief whip of the Opposition.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the fact that the Committee on Public Accounts is called for this morning at 11 o'clock. I suppose that that meeting will be cancelled as the House is to meet at 11 o'clock.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I suppose so.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. (Thursday).

Mr. HAGGART.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 19th July, 1894.

Morning Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CONSOLIDATED FUND.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What was the amount of receipts and expenditures charged to Consolidated Fund from 1st July, 1894, to 10th July, 1894, together with the sums so charged in similar period of 1893 ?

Mr. FOSTER. In 1893 the receipts were $511,800.38 ; expenditure, $1,982,584.98 ; 1894, receipts, $411,981.92 ; expenditure, $1,466,722.69.

ROMAN CATHOLIC SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA AND NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL asked, Has the Government taken into consideration the petition of His Eminence, the Cardinal-Archbishop of Quebec, the Roman Catholic Archbishops, bishops and prelates of the Dominion of Canada, presented to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, the Honourable the Senate and the House of Commons ; praying for the intervention of the Federal Government on behalf of the Roman Catholic schools in the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories ; and if so, has it been decided to give effect to the said petition and grant the prayer thereof, that is to say :—1. To disallow the Manitoba Act, 57 Vic., ch. 28 (1894), intituled : "An Act to amend the Public School Act" ; 2. To issue such directions and adopt such measures as His Excellency the Governor General in Council shall deem best calculated to afford relief under the grievances suffered by the Roman Catholics of the province of Manitoba, in consequence of the school laws passed in their province in 1890 ; 3. To communicate with the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories, to the end that the Ordinances may be so modified, as to remove the grievances complained of by the Catholics of the North-west, and which are the result of Ordinance No. 23 sanctioned at Regina on the 31st December, 1892 ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Government have taken into consideration the petition referred to in the hon. gentleman's question. I am not in a position to announce to the House the decision of the Government, because the advice of the Ministers has not yet been tendered His Excellency. As to the third branch of the question, communication has been made to the Lieutenant-Gov-error of the North-west Territories on that subject. Communication has also been made to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories of the petition referred to.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would say, though I am not strictly in order in asking the question, whether there has been any further communication with the bishops in connection with this subject.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. Of course the action of the Government will be communicated to the petitioners.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House resolve itself into committee, at the next sitting, to consider the following resolution:—

1. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—

To the Montfort Colonization Railway Company, for 12 miles of their railway from the end of the 21 miles already subsidized westward to a point on the Rouge River, in the county of Argenteuil, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

For a railway from a point on the Caraquez Railway, at or near Pokemouche siding, towards Tracadie village, 12 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

2. That the subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively, the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively; all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, which agreement the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

3. That the granting of such subsidies respectively shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connecting with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council determines.

4. That the said subsidies respectively shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon the completion of the work subsidized.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask if the return I moved for three months ago of the expenditure on public buildings in Manitoba and the North-west since the last return was brought down—which I think was in 1890 or 1891—will be laid before the House. The Order of the House was granted three months ago and the return covers only three years. I cannot understand why it has not been brought down. It seems to me there must be a nigger in the wood pile or it would have been brought down.

Mr. OUMET. I explained the other day to the hon. gentleman that through some mistake in the punctuation of the motion, my officers thought that the hon. gentleman wished a return of all the buildings and building repairs since the North-west Territories were made part of the Confederation. It was only when the hon. gentleman told me the other day that he only wished to cover the last three years that I instructed my officers as to that effect. I was told that the report would be ready in a few days. I will inquire about the matter.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Resolutions reported from Committee (July 18th) respecting subsidies in money to railway companies, and towards the construction of certain railways, were read the second time, and agreed to.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 168) to authorize the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I must say that I object altogether to the appropriation of lands towards the construction of railways in the direction of the Rocky Mountains. It is altogether premature to propose to construct railways there. In my opinion, if the land along the road from Calgary to Edmonton were settled, no appropriation would be necessary towards the construction of those roads.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Also, it appears to me that it is very undesirable that this subsidy should be left at the disposal of these people for, it may be, half a dozen years. So far as I understand, this road need not be commenced for three years, and need not be completed for half a dozen. Now, the land subsidy, at any rate, ought to be limited in time, I think, to one year for the commencement, and three years for the completion.

CRIMINAL CODE.

House proceeded to consider amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 126) further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the nature of the amendment?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Senate has not adopted the amendment for the reduction of the number of the grand jurors.

Mr. EDGAR. At this stage of the session, I suppose we must bow to the will of the Lords.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY— DRAWBACKS.

Mr. HAGGART moved second reading of Bill (No. 166) to amend the Act to provide for the allowance of drawback on certain articles manufactured in Canada for use in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to draw the attention of the House to some of the sections in the statute, and some of the provisions that are to be found on record touching this matter, because I think this proposed legislation, if given effect to, is liable in the end to be a most expensive arrangement to the people of Canada. How does this question arise? It arises under what is said to be the proper construction of a certain clause in the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, which entitles that company to a drawback on materials used for the original construction of the work, and a difficulty is said to present itself to the Government as to whether the words "original construction" are wide enough to include materials now sought to be imported, or which may have been imported and put into the road in lieu of other materials used when the road was originally constructed. That involves, of course, a reference to the contract, and one can hardly find, I think, plainer language as to what it comprises than is set forth in the contract itself. The question is, what is the meaning of the words "original construction." If the words themselves do not afford a clear construction, is there anything in the circumstances attending the building of the road, or the time when it was built, or in the standard of construction, to throw light on the meaning of those words? If the word "original" had been left out one might perhaps have had some doubts. If it had stated that a drawback was to be allowed on materials in the construction of the road, then the provision might not have been so clearly limited as to the time when the road was actually being constructed for the first time. But when you have added to it the word "original," and it is said that this drawback is only to be allowed on the material put into it originally, it is clear that Parliament meant the word "original" to have some significance and force. It meant as clearly as one can understand anything, that the word "original" should have its original meaning and should refer to a period of time identical with the time when the road was under construction. But if we have any doubt upon that point, let us turn to section 3 of the contract itself, and see what was the character of the road in contemplation, both by the railway company and the Government in the subject of this contract. Section 3 of 44 Victoria says:

The company shall lay out, construct and equip the said eastern section and the said central section of a uniform gauge of 4 feet 8½ inches, and in order to establish an approximate standard whereby the quality and the character of the railway and of the material used in the construction thereof, and of the equipment thereof may be regulated; the Union Pacific Railway of the United States, as the same was when first constructed, is hereby selected and fixed as such standard.

We there have a standard given to us, and surely it cannot be argued that the country was entering into a contract to give a bonus for a road of a higher standard than the standard adopted by the contract. The contract required the road to be of a certain character, which, of course, includes grades and material, together with equipment. We are not considering what fancy road might have been built, but Parliament was entering into an obligation with regard to the character of the road, the subject of the contract, and the road which was the subject of the contract was a road the standard of which was the Union Pacific when first constructed. Section 10 of the contract echoes section 4 of the Act confirming the contract, and again includes the words "original construction," showing that the point of time is material in this connection. It really resolves itself into this question of fact: was the road constructed originally of the standard adopted. On that point I will refer the House to Sessional Papers 34—B, which contains reports, correspondence and Orders in Council bearing upon the matter. On the 28th May, 1886, Mr. Schreiber, chief engineer of railways, inspected the railway and made a report. Speaking of the eastern section, he says:

With the exception of finishing work up to the value of $25,000 scattered over this section, the road is completed and has been built fully up to and in some respects in a superior manner with that required by the standard of quality demanded by the contract.

Therefore, as to the eastern section, the chief engineer declares that it has been completed according to standard, and if completed according to standard, how comes it that to-day we are told that it has not been completed according to standard. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that the completion according to standard was to be the condition on which the railway was entitled to receive pay in land and money, and it satisfied the Government that it had been completed according to standard, and received from the Treasury $25,000,000, and from the public domain, 25,000,000 acres of land. Mr. Schreiber further reports:

As to the Lake Superior section, this section is completed and in excellent running order. The bridges are of wood, of good design, well and strongly put together with the exception of the bridges crossing the two arms of the Winnipeg River near Rat Portage which are fine steel bridges resting upon solid masonry piers and abutments. Many of the culverts are of masonry of excellent quality, others are of timber.

I do not draw the inference from those words that Mr. Schreiber regarded the bridges on that section as of a temporary character. In fact, every one of these bridges was equal to the standard, and as regards the iron bridges, in excess of the standard. Mr. Schreiber reports as regards the central section:

The bridging and culverts are all of wood substantially and well built. There are two very high trestle bridges; one long trestle at the second crossing on the Columbia River and others of a smaller size. The only truss bridges of any considerable size are those over the two crossing the Columbia River and over the Eagle River. In addition to these there are quite a number of spans of the smaller sizes. The culverts with two exceptions are beams.

Then he says:

The work remaining to be done excepting the building of the nine miles of permanent line to take the place of the temporary line built alongside of it under Mount Stephen is estimated to cost about $285,000. This is composed of station buildings, the erection of the permanent trusses over some of the rivers, ballasting and scattered work in finishing up. When this and the nine miles of permanent line are completed, the road in all respects will be fully equal to the standard required by the company's contract, and it is believed that a permanent train service with British Columbia will be established within a short time.

There we have it, Mr. Speaker, that as regards the central section, with the exception of certain items enumerated and which are not the subject of this Bill, we have it stated that with those few exceptions the central section of the road has been completed in all respects equal to the standard required by the company's contract. So that according to Mr. Schreiber's construction of the contract, the bridges then erected represented the bridges involved in the original construction. As to the western section, he goes on to say:

The bridging is generally of wood, the exception being the bridge over the Fraser River, which is of steel resting upon massive stone piers and abutments. There are a number of wooden truss bridges, ranging from 40 to 200 feet span, the most important being Pitt and Harrison Rivers. The trestle work is of considerable quantity, it is well put together and the trestles are good strong structures.

He identifies these structures as structures of the quality required by the contract, and on the 15th of July, 1886, he telegraphed to Mr. Bradley, Secretary of the Department of Railways and Canals, as follows:

Canadian Pacific Railway completed except permanent line under Mount Stephen alongside the temporary line.

That refers to the nine miles. So that we have him telegraphing that the line was completed, having examined the bridging and other works. Further on, he makes a report on the 12th October, 1886, to the Department, in which he says:

During last month (September) I made a tour of inspection over the entire line. The eastern section (Callander to Port Arthur) and the central section (Red River to Kamloops) are completed, fully up to and in some respects above the standard required by the contract, excepting the nine miles of line passing under Mount Stephen, which is yet untouched.

Now, I press that upon the attention of the Minister of Justice, because I must assume that he has overlooked the report of the chief engineer and the Order in Council of that date. Is it to be argued that we have to allow a drawback for a work, the character of which is in excess of the standard required by the contract, even if we waived the matter of time? On the 6th of July, 1886, the railway company applied to the Government for payment of the sum of $460,000 odd, the balance of their subsidy, which they would only be entitled to upon the theory that they had completed their contract. Before the Government would pay over this balance of the $25,000,000 it was deemed advisable by the Minister of Railways to make a report to Council and to have passed an Order in Council recognizing the completion of the work according to standard; and he makes a report to Council upon the strength of the report of his engineer. On page 125 of Sessional Paper 34 of 1887, appears a letter from Mr. Schreiber, dated "Office of the Engineer in Chief, Ottawa, 20th —, 1886." The month is not stated; the omission appears to be a typographical omission; but I judge from the context that the letter was written in the month of October, because the next document is dated the 23rd October, 1886, though as to that I may be in error. In this letter the chief engineer says:

I have no hesitation in pronouncing the road superior, both in quality and character of construction and equipment to that of the Union Pacific Railway in 1873, but that it is in some degree inferior in respect of the three-mile grade upon the nine miles of road passing Mount Stephen. I consider the sections of railway built by the company have been constructed and equipped, both as to the quality and the character of the railway, and of the materials used in the construction thereof, of an approximate standard of the Union Pacific Railway of the United States as the same was when first constructed in 1873.

So that we have Mr. Schreiber telling us, whatever may have been the little shortage referred to in previous letters, that on the date named, October 20th, 1886, "I have no hesitation in pronouncing the road superior both in quality and character of construction and equipment, to that of the Union Pacific Railway, the standard." If that is the true construction and meaning of the contract, all we contracted to do was to allow a drawback on such materials as should be imported into Canada for the building of a road of the standard of the Union Pacific when first constructed in 1873. Mr. Pope, the Minister of Railways, in his report to Council on the 23rd of October, 1886, says:

That the Canadian Pacific Railway has been constructed and equipped of a quality and character equivalent upon the whole to the approximate standard agreed upon between the Government and the company—that is to say, the Union Pacific Railway of the United States, as accepted by the Government of that country, the railway being in many respects of superior quality and character to the said approximate standard, and only in some degree inferior in respect of the gradients of a portion of the line in the province of British Columbia of nine miles in length passing Mount Stephen.

He, therefore, goes on to recommend, on the theory that the contract has been completed:

That the Government accept the said railway as equivalent in its quality and character, in the materials used in its construction and its equipment, to the approximate standard agreed upon between the Government and the company, namely, the Union Pacific Railway of the United States as the same was when accepted by the Government of that country.

Then he goes on to recommend that, in consideration of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company having fulfilled their contract, the Government hand over the portions of the railway they were to complete, and the $5,000,000 of land grant bonds held as security, and so on. This report went before Council, and on the 2nd of November, 1886, Council dealt with the whole matter. By Order in Council of that date the Government found as follows:—

That the Government accept the said railway as equivalent to its quality and character in the materials used in its construction and its equipment to the approximate standard agreed upon between the Government and the company, namely, the Union Pacific Railway of the United States as the same was when accepted by the Government of that country.

Another section:

That in consideration of the completion of the construction and equipment of the railway under the construction contract, the Government pay over to the company the balance of the subsidy remaining in its hands.

There we have the Government pronouncing the contract completed according to their version of the contract; upon the faith of that Order in Council, the country pays over the money, and the company accepts the money; and now, after a period of seven years, we are asked to declare that the construction of the road on which they received the money was not a construction such as the contract contemplated, for the purpose of enabling the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to receive more money. When it was necessary that the company should receive money, the Government found that it had performed its contract and it handed over the money. And now, when it sought to give the road money, it is necessary to declare that the contract has not been lived up to, and the Government ask the House to say that there are sufficient doubts on the subject to entitle us to conclude the contract was not carried out, and therefore there is some more money to be paid the Canadian Pacific Railway. If the Canadian Pacific Railway is entitled to this money, as a matter of law, let them have it. There is a provision in the Act by which if any question arises as to whether the railway has been built according to contract or not, that question is referable to arbitrators; and apart from that provision, we have the courts of law to determine any claim of that kind. I would be the last one to interfere with the legal rights of the company. I do not wish to add to or take from its rights under this contract, but I maintain that to go outside of the courts and decide to pay this money, without any reference to arbitration or to the courts, is simply making a voluntary gift to the company. As a representative of the people who have to bear these burdens, I am tired of seeing these grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway in excess of their rights. Only in 1891, just after the general elections, we were asked to do what we are called on to do now. In 1884, a statute was passed authorizing the Government to make a grant of land to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the extension of the Manitoba and South-western Railway, on a westerly and south-westerly direction; but that there might not be any question as to the total amount of land to which the company would be entitled, the statute provided that, no matter what the length of the railway might be between its terminus and White Water Lake, the grant should not exceed so many thousand acres. What happened? On the eve of the elections of 1891, the Canadian Pacific Railway came to Ottawa and procured the passage of an Order in Council, which saw the day of light subsequently.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was the Government who did the wooing and not the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MULOCK. My hon. friend from South Oxford says that the wooing came from the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Do not credit anything of the kind.

Mr. MULOCK. From whatever direction the wooing came, it suffices to know that the company constructed the road and received its grant under the statute. But, no doubt, trouble arose between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government. There is always some sort of trouble arising between them to disturb the peace and order of the family compact between the two bodies, which peace and order can only be restored by an increase of subsidy from the head of the family.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I believe there has been an attempt made on the other side to alienate the affections of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MULOCK. If there has been, the Government have taken good care to see that it is unsuccessful. But let me refer for a moment to a parallel in history, which is now repeating itself. We are now on the eve of another general election, and are asked to repeat what happened on the eve of the general of 1891. The Government and the company then came together, and the result was the passing of an Order in Council, which was not made public until after the new Parliament met. That Order in Council recommended, in view of some hazy understanding said to have been in the minds of some unknown persons seven years before, that public lands to the extent of, I think, some 320,000 acres should be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, because the number of miles this line covered exceeded the number allowed them as a subsidy. Bear in mind that this line had been constructed and in operation for a period of seven years without any claim, so far as the public knows, having been made on the Government, and yet Parliament was compelled, in the session of 1891, by a vote of the majority, to make good an ante-election pledge and grant this land to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was just as clear a present, based on no legal right, as if we had deliberately declared it was a bonus given without any consideration. On the testimony of a deputy minister that, according to his recollection, there was an understanding that the company should get so many more acres of the public domain, that grant was given them. I used to be under the impression that understandings could not possibly involve the Treasury, unless ratified by the people's representatives. I was under the impression that only the people, through Parliament, had the right to control the alienation of their property; but we appear to have entered upon a new regime now, when understandings can be crystallized into obligations by Orders in Council, and Parliament called upon, by its masters, to legalize these Orders in Council, in order to maintain the good relations between the Government and its favourites. We are now on the eve of new elections, and we find history repeating itself. We find the Government asking Parliament to alter the terms of the contract and declare its meaning, when there are courts in every part of the land to do the work of construction in the contract. On what principle does the Government ask us to remove a doubt? Why do they not openly say that this is proposed in order to make a continuing present to the Canadian Pacific Railway for all time to come? This proposition is presented as an apparent drawback in favour of the merchants, whereas in reality it is a gift to the Canadian Pacific Railway, because the manufacturers who supply these materials to the Canadian Pacific Railway will, no doubt, be paid more or less according to whether they get the drawback or not, so that it is an indirect payment to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and although to-day we are told that this proposition will involve only a few thousand dollars, yet, if we alter the contract in this respect, we alter it in respect of every item of bridge building that can be contended to have been of temporary character over the three thousand miles of railway, and open the door to enormous claims for drawbacks, which will probably amount to one-third of the whole cost. We know that the Canadian Pacific Railway are spending $700,000 or $800,000 yearly in taking out old worn-out bridges and replacing them by others of a different character, and this precedent will be used, for all time to come, as a leverage to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway to get a drawback on every one of these, and thus avoid payment of its fair share of its liabilities. Being of that opinion, I deem it my duty to invite the attention of the House to the question, and ask them to halt before changing this law for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is a widespread feeling in Canada to-day, and members of Parliament ought to take cognizance of it, that in this Parliament the people's representatives do not always represent the right. There is a feeling that we have not courage enough or have not discernment enough to hold the scales of justice evenly when weighing the rights and claims of the public as against those of powerful petitioners for relief. There may be much colour given to that view if Parliament voluntarily steps in and delivers judgment in favour of a suitor when there is a tribunal created for the very purpose of dealing with questions of this kind between the Government and a subject. No case whatever is presented why Parliament should intervene and decide against the interests of the country. I would not interfere for one instant with the carrying out of the contract in its entirety, but within the four corners of the statute are declared the rights of the company, and those rights having been thus declared, we have no right, under cover of removing a doubt, in a cowardly way to present a bonus to the railway company which, God knows, is as well able to pay its debts as the tax-payers of this country individually are. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move in amendment :

That this Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day three months.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should like to address the House for a few minutes on the argument which the hon. gentleman has presented with respect to the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway under this contract and under statute relating to these drawbacks, for the two are entirely distinct. I beg to assure the House, in the first place, that no ground whatever exists for the hon. gentleman's suspicion that this is another bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is not to redeem any pledge whatever that has been given in the past, because we have made no promise with regard to it. We have done nothing more than to state to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that we would submit the case to Parliament. Nor does it depend upon any promise of support in the future; and I think that the House will observe that the hon. gentleman's suspicion in that regard, and especially as regards past transactions, in which he said there was improper intimacy between the company and the Government, are due to his feelings as a rejected suitor.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. LAURIER. They may be true all the same.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. May be; but I am afraid that is the cause of the hon. gentleman's comments. The hon. gentleman has presented an argument which is well deserving of consideration. That argument has two branches. The first branch is based on the words "original construction," and upon the fact that the road was to be constructed and subsidy payment made upon it, according to a certain standard. Now, I am not going to contend that this is a perfectly clear matter in which the company is entitled to the decision of this Parliament. If it were perfectly clear this Bill would not be before the House. In considering it we have not overlooked either the reports of the engineer stating that the road had been finished according to the standard, and that the company were entitled to the subsidy payment. On the contrary, it is these reports and that Order in Council which created the doubts that exist as to the words "original construction." Now, the doubt is based upon this possible argument that the words "original construction" mean, as the hon. gentleman says, the construction down to the point of time when the railway is opened for traffic. The contention of the company, on the other hand, is, that the words "original construction" are put there to exclude any contention that the company would have the right to receive a drawback upon renewal of bridges, that it is entitled to make what kind of a road it pleases, provided it is at least up to the standard of the Union Pacific, but that it is not and should not be entitled to claim any drawback or allowance in regard to renewals and repairs. Now, there being a doubt, in view of the declaration that the road had been constructed, we come here and ask Parliament to resolve that doubt in favour of the company under the circumstances which I will mention in dealing with the second branch of the hon. gentleman's argument. Now, the second branch of the hon. gentleman's argument is this, that there was a distinct agreement, a contract, with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that a subsidy is to be paid to them when they built the road up to a certain standard, and they were to receive this drawback only with respect to bridges which would be required to bring the road up to that standard, namely, the standard of the Union Pacific. If the hon. gentleman can show me that that is the contract, that that is a fair construction of the contract, this Bill will not pass another stage. But the fact is that there was a deliberate contract with the company that they should be paid subsidies when they built a road of a certain standard, but that standard was not fixed in any way by word or implication as qualifying the contract that they should have the right to a drawback on iron or steel bridges put into their road in "original construction." The contract simply was that we should pay them a subsidy. They had a right to build a road up to any standard in excess of that of the Union Pacific that they pleased, and they had a perfect and undoubted right, in my humble opinion, to get a drawback upon bridges of iron or steel to make their road superior to the Union Pacific. When you look at the words of the Act about the allowance of the drawback, you find that the standard is not in it at all, but, on the contrary, it provides that the Governor in Council may from time to time make regulations for ascertaining the qualities and value of these articles manufactured in Canada and used for the Canadian Pacific Railway, as defined by the Act 37 Victoria, chapter 14. That is the Act of 1874, not the contract Act, which provided for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the company.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the provision of that Act?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Act of 1874 describes no standard whatever. It provides for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the intention at that time being to construct it as a Government work.

Mr. MULOCK. But that does not designate the character of the work. It only refers to the length of the road, the termini, &c.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. But the hon. gentleman is contending that the Act under which the drawbacks are to be given refers us to the standard and the contract. It does nothing of the kind, but it carefully passes that all by, and says: Go back to the Act of 1874 under which it is provided that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be constructed, but gives no definition or limitation of the quality of the road or of the class or number of bridges that shall be put in it. But from the fact that it leaves the road to be constructed of any degree of efficiency the company may please, and says the road as built under the Act of 1874, no matter how much better than the standard of the Union Pacific, shall be entitled to drawbacks—

Mr. MULOCK. Is not that a question of law?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I never heard any contention with regard to that. I do not think there is any question—

Mr. MULOCK. Why do you not leave it—

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is nothing to leave. This Act says that it is on the railway as constructed under the Act of 1874 that the drawback is to be paid. The hon. gentleman has to depart entirely from the words of the law in order to get in some construction that there should be a standard. There were two Acts of Parliament with regard to this railway, one provided a standard and the other did not, and this Act distinctly says that in ascertaining what drawbacks they were entitled to, you shall go to the Act which describes no standard for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MULOCK. That is a question of law.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No question of law was ever raised. I never supposed there would have been a doubt, and it would have been impossible for us to base any measure upon a doubt of that kind, as none whatever existed in the minds of those who have had to deal with the matter hitherto. Therefore, if it were not a question of mere time as to whether the construction is to be considered past or not, I would have had no doubt whatever as to the right of the company to receive a drawback under these circumstances. Parliament passed this Act which the hon. gentleman refers to, apart from the contract of the company. A departure has not been made from the contract of the company by this Bill at all. The Act with respect to drawbacks on articles such as bridges manufactured in Canada, is not in the contract at all, it is in a separate statute of this Parliament, and the application has been made to us by the manufacturers. Of course, no one will pretend that the company does not get any benefit from the drawback, that is inevitable. First of all, the contract enables the company to get this drawback on imports; then in the interest of the industries of Canada, it was provided that a like drawback should be allowed to the manufacturers of iron bridges and certain other materials, provided those were articles manufactured in Canada, and we say, adopting the contention of the company as regards the original construction, that it is to include all that class of bridges which they had a right to put in under the terms of their contract, although they were not required to put them in for subsidy purposes, but those they had a right under their contract to put in and receive a drawback for, as forming part of the original structure, but not, of course, as to repair or renewal of structures of that kind.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the Minister of Justice is satisfied with the argument he has presented to the House; certainly he has not satisfied me, and I do not believe it is an argument calculated to satisfy the people of this country. The talk about the Act of 1874, and the company being permitted to construct a line of a higher standard than that agreed upon in the contract, is entirely aside from the question. This Government made a contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that contract established a standard, and up to that standard the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was to construct the road. That standard was the Union Pacific road, as completed in 1873, and accepted by the United States Government. It was a definite standard; it was a definite arrangement; a contract explicit in its character. There was no ambiguity about the matter at all. When the road was completed and the promoters and constructors of that road applied to the Government of Canada for their subsidies, the only question to decide was: Is that road built equal to the standard of the Union Pacific Railway of 1873? The road was built, the company made application for their subsidy, the chief engineer of railways of this country was sent over the line of that road, he traversed that road from end to end for the express purpose of ascertaining whether it was built according to the standard agreed upon. He made his report; he reported that the road came up to the requirements of the standard with the exception of the grades around Mount Stephen, a distance of some nine miles. After that report was received, the Government of Canada acted upon the report, and acted upon the application of the Canadian Pacific Railway for its subsidy. In the Order in Council, passed on the 23rd October, 1876, it was declared that:

The Government accepted the said railway as equivalent in its quality and character, in the materials used in its construction and its equipment, to the approximate standard agreed upon between the Government and the company.

"Agreed upon between the Government and the company"—not some indefinite standard, going back to the Statutes of 1874, which permitted the company to build a road of almost any standard it pleased, leaving the matter in abeyance as to whether they might apply at some future time for the construction of a road of a higher standard than that which existed, but referring to the standard agreed upon, a definite agreement made between the Government and the company, namely, "the Union Pacific of the United States, as the same was when accepted by the Government of that country." Now, Sir, when that agreement was made, when that standard was established, there was no thought on the part of the railway company, there was no thought or purpose on the part of the Government, that that road should be required to put in steel bridges or iron bridges upon its line. At the time that road was built, it was not customary to put in iron or steel bridges. When the Union Pacific was built in 1873, I venture to say that there was not a steel bridge or an iron bridge upon any line or road from Omaha to Ogden; I venture to say that there was not a steel or iron bridge upon that road ten years afterwards. The Canadian Pacific Railway was built upon the same standard, it was built with wooden bridges, with the exception of the steel bridge at Rat Portage, a steel bridge over the Nepigon River, and one over the Fraser, and some other permanent structures. It was a better road than the Union Pacific, with the exception of the grades around Mount Stephen. It came up to the standard; it fulfilled its contract; the Government accepted it as up to the standard, and paid it its subsidy. Now, in the usual course of construction and railway operations, the wooden bridges put upon this line, as the wooden bridges put upon all main lines at that time, wore out; they had served their purpose; they had lasted seven years, the average life of a wooden bridge, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, having built the road according to the standard agreed upon, having received its subsidies for the completion of this road, the subsidies having been granted by the Government upon the express declaration by Order in Council, that the conditions of the agreement had been fulfilled, and that the road had fulfilled all the requirements that were entered into with the Government—I say, after the road had been constructed in that way, application was made for the subsidies, payments were made, the road was accepted, the whole thing closed up. The bridges have been used for seven years; they begin to wear out, just as wooden bridges do upon all railway lines, and this company, as all well-managed railway companies do, begins the work of completing, improving and perfecting its line, begins the work of substituting permanent structures for the wooden structures that have served their purpose, and have worn out, and determines to put in, as all well-managed railway lines do, steel and iron structures. They now come to this Government, seven years after this transaction is closed, seven years after their road had been accepted, seven years after they have fulfilled the terms of their agreement, seven years after they received their subsidy from the Government, with this trumped-up claim that they are entitled to a drawback on those bridges they are putting in now, as if they were a part of the original construction. The claim is a preposterous one. I do not wonder that my hon. friend should refer to some rather suspicious transactions in the past, the transaction when they were granted a subsidy on sixty miles of railway already completed, the transaction when they were granted a large increase on their mail subsidies, just prior to the election of 1891. Why, we do not know—these things look suspicious. We know that the Government need election funds. We see this transaction sprung upon us just upon the eve of an election. It is in the highest degree suspicious. I pronounce this transaction anything but an honourable, straightforward transaction, in which the Government are watching the interest of the people and are guarding the interest of the taxpayers of this country. Sir, this House ought not to consent for one moment to grant the demand of this Bill. It is a preposterous and an outrageous demand made upon the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It seems to me, according to the argument of the Minister of Justice, the Canadian Pacific Railway would be justified in asking for a rebate upon the renewal of iron and steel bridges, as well as on wooden bridges.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. The words, "original construction," the company contend, were put in for that purpose.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Why should not the term, "original construction," apply as well to iron as to wooden bridges, when they were put in at the same time and under the same contract? Whatever doubt there might be as to the provisions of this Bill it has been entirely removed by the extracts read, which show that the Government accepted the work as completed and did not regard it as a temporary work. It appears singular that not until several years have elapsed has a claim of this kind been put forward. There is, moreover, no provision in the Bill guarding the rights of the country on any legal questions that may arise, and if this Bill should pass, there will be many such questions arise. The people of the country will not accept the explanation of the First Minister, they will, on the other hand, accept the argument that the Government regarded the road as completed, and the contract as having been carried out, and that this Bill involves a request for a rebate which was not intended to be given at the time the contract was entered into between the Government and the company. Under these circumstances I feel justified in voting for the amendment of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), for I consider this claim is one which this House should not admit.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have listened to the speech delivered by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and also the reply of the First Minister. I am sure there is the most kindly feeling in this House towards the Canadian Pacific Railway. We all feel very proud of it, as we have a right to feel, and we are willing to deal with it honourably, along the lines of the agreement between the company and the Dominion. But the Bill now before the House is not based upon an intelligent construction of the Act relating to this company as involving rights to which the Canadian Pacific Railway is entitled. The claim presented to the House cannot hold water. I repeat that I am willing to deal fairly with the company, but if no better arguments are presented to the House than have been submitted, including the statement of the First Minister, I claim that, looking at the statutes relating to the road, a case has not been established, and I must vote for the amendment.

Mr. TARTE. I am sorry I cannot agree with the amendment made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). The Canadian Pacific Railway is one of the greatest instruments of our national prosperity—and I might say the same in regard to the Grand Trunk Railway. As a matter of fact we should be proud of the success of our railway companies in competition with the American roads. Under such circumstances we should deal with them in a liberal manner, and we should so deal with them as regards any questions of doubt, and for that reason I am obliged to vote against the amendment.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This matter is one of considerable consequence, and it is because I do not agree with the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) that I desire to place my views before the House. I agree with my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Tarte) that we should deal fairly with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and however hard the bargain may have been, we should carry it out in good faith. When the question was under discussion in Parliament at the time the arrangements was proposed it was stated by the First Minister, Sir John Macdonald, that the road when entirely completed would contain steel or iron bridges throughout its entire length, and while that might not be the case in the first instance the road when completed would be superior to any other transcontinental road. I admit that I was among those members who regarded that statement with a good deal of incredulity; nevertheless the company are constructing the bridges and completing the road as one of a high class. Supposing the words "original construction" are to be strictly construed, and construed as in a contract between one party and another, which I do not think is the proper rule of construction in this case, because I consider this contract should be construed as one which is between one sovereign authority and another, and as a contract between the East India Company and the Crown was formerly construed—supposing this contract was being construed according to the arrangement that steel or iron bridges would be built throughout its whole length, no member of this House would say that the Canadian Pacific Railway were not entitled to the drawback. If, as a matter of convenience to the public and to the company, temporary structures were permitted—and I would regard wooden structures as of that character, after the statement made by the Prime Minister of that day—until steel or iron bridges could be built at a later period, I do not think this House would object, because the country does not in any respect stand in a different position to what it would have occupied if iron bridges had been constructed in the first instance. In fact the company are not gaining one dollar by the transaction.

An hon. MEMBER. Would that be done with respect to the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is no compact between the country and the Grand Trunk Railway as there is between the Dominion and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Yet, I am prepared to say that so far as our railways are concerned, the taxation of material used for construction purposes has always been a mistake, for it means the imposition of taxes on the people at large; when the cost of construction is increased there are increased rates of transportation. You are taking the money out of the people indirectly, which in the other case you would take directly. But I am not now discussing the general policy, what it is best to do. I admit as a rule and as regards general policy that the cheaper the railway companies obtain their supplies the better for the public at large. But I am specially discussing the original understanding between the Government on the one hand and the Canadian Pacific Railway corporation on the other, and whether you make that a general rule or not it seems to me that as regards the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway in this particular instance, Parliament, if it refused to adopt this Bill, would be adopting an unfair construction, so to speak, taking advantage of a mere technicality, if they were to deal with the railway company as if the contract did not oblige us to allow them to construct the road in this particular way. Looking at the debate that took place, and on what was said in that debate, as well as looking at the terms of the contract and the statutes relating to the subject, my interpretation of the contract is that where you once put in an iron or steel bridge you have no right whatever to put in a second; but that every wooden bridge, in face of the promise given on behalf of the country by the Government, must be regarded as a temporary structure.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman, who is always an advocate of the people's rights, recognize the right of the Government to bind Parliament without the sanction of Parliament?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am speaking, Mr. Speaker, as to how I understand the contract, between the Government and Parliament on the one side, and the company on the other, is to be construed. I think, Sir, that we are doing many things for the company that are not in the public interest, and that we are not called upon to do. We have voted in aid of tributary lines running through the lands of the company, aiding by other lands in the construction of these roads. We have done that this week, and yet I remember distinctly that an assurance was given that all these branches would be constructed by the company without further aid because they would have an interest in opening their own lands. I am prepared to oppose what we have a right to oppose, and what is not part of the compact as I understand it, but I am not prepared to alter what I regard as the original intention of both the Parliament on the one side, and the company on the other.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. MULOCK. Where do you find that intention?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I find it in the statutes and in the discussion that took place at the time the compact between the company and the Government was entered into.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House resolved itself into committee to consider resolution (p. 6253) respecting the granting of lands to the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What position is that railroad in?

Mr. DALY. The road is built and in operation, and satisfies the wants of a large section of people. The bonus is given in consideration of twenty-five or thirty petitions from the resident ratepayers in the different municipalities along the route of the railway. The road is operated by the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company as their branch running from Minnedosa southerly to Rapid City, and gives the people in the Rapid City district, which is an old settlement, an outlet.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was there any previous agreement that this road should receive a bonus?

Mr. DALY. Yes, a couple of years ago. The Manitoba and North-western people made application to the Government at that time for this land grant, which is the same as has been given for the rest of their railway; and this portion was built on the faith of their expectation that a land grant would be given.

Mr. McMULLEN. This appears to be a most singular proceeding. It seems as if we were here simply to register the work of the Government in granting bonuses of this kind. If this railway company wished to get aid for the construction of the road, why did they not apply in the ordinary way prior to its construction? Instead of that, they go on and build the line, and then ask for a land grant for a line that is actually built and running. I cannot understand on what principle the Minister asks for this. It appears to me to be a very absurd proceeding.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What correspondence passed with the Government with reference to the understanding or agreement with the company?

Mr. DALY. There are a number of petitions from the various municipalities requesting the Government, as follows:—

That the people living in the municipality of Blanchard Oak River, Miniota, Archie and Ellice, are practically cut off from ready communication with a railroad, both from the Manitoba and North-western Railway to the north of them by the Little Sackatchewan River, Oak River, Arrow River, Bird Tail Creek and the Snake Creek, and from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the south of them by the Assiniboine River.

That these municipalities are thickly settled, and comprise one of the best grain-producing portions of Manitoba, in which the people find great difficulty in crossing the above-mentioned streams to reach a market.

That were the Sackatchewan and Western Railway now running from Minnedosa, a point on the Manitoba and North-western Railway to Rapid City, extended through these municipalities, it would afford the relief needed.

That were a land grant given to the Saskatchewan and Western Railway, that company would be afforded means to carry on construction through the above-mentioned municipalities.

That the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company are not able without the land grant to avail themselves of the provisions of the Railway Aid Act of Manitoba.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray that the Saskatchewan and Western Railway Company be given a land grant in aid of the construction of the road through the above-mentioned municipalities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is this land to be given?

Mr. DALY. Among the resolutions brought down by the Minister of Railways is one giving aid to the Manitoba and North-western Railway to the extent of $3,200 per mile in cash, for which the company relinquish 3,200 acres per mile of their land grant; and the grant will be taken from their relinquished land, and I presume will be along their main line?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman not fixed where the land will be taken from?

Mr. DALY. I have not fixed it, because we shall have to get the land where it can be got.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What are the terms of the Order in Council mentioned here?

Mr. DALY. The usual terms that follow all these railway resolutions. The usual Orders in Council provide that the land shall be fairly fit for settlement. In this case, as in the case of all other grants given this session, the Orders in Council will not contain that condition.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this grant taken from lands opened to settlement by the construction of the road?

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Because it seems to me a very improper proceeding to grant large tracts of land to aid in the construction of a road, when the lands granted are not in any way to be benefited by that construction. To grant lands five hundred miles away from a road to assist in its construction is most preposterous, because those lands will require railway facilities and there will be nothing to fall back upon.

Mr. DALY. These lands will come out of their present grant.

POST OFFICE ACT.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved second reading of Bill (No. 167) further to amend the Post Office Act. He said: The object of section 1 is to extend to the articles therein mentioned the rate paid of 1 cent per pound under section 2 of chapter 20, 52 Victoria. This extends the rate to almanacs in sheets, chromos, lithographs, prints or engravings issued by any such newspaper specially and not as part of its regular issue, also to the same articles issued from a known office or published in a regular series of intervals of not more than one month. The practice was to allow this, but there was no authority for doing so, and I thought I would change the law so as to authorize the practice which has been followed for some time. In the next section the following words are added to the 11th line of section 2 of the present law: "and all the printed circulars, inviting subscriptions, and the printed envelopes addressed to such publishers." It is well known that most of the newspapers and large dailies send out printed envelopes to their customers in which to inclose their subscriptions. That was contrary to the law as it stood. But it has been the practice during the last eight or ten years to allow that, and I am changing the law to make it legal.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider resolutions (p. 6254) respecting subsidies in money to railway companies, and towards the construction of certain railways.

Mr. LAURIER. Several times in the past we have had to complain of the manner in which these resolutions for railway subsidies were introduced in this House. In fact, every time they have been introduced, they have been introduced as they are to-day, within thirty-six hours of prorogation, and this year the proceeding is worse than ever, because formerly, as a rule, we have had the correspondence upon which these resolutions are based placed in our hands at least twenty-four hours before the day set for the discussion, but this year we have not had a word of correspondence until 12 o'clock to-day, when the Minister placed upon the Table a batch of letters which it has been utterly impossible for any one to go through before this discussion came up. I enter my protest against such proceedings. The session has lasted four months, and the Government have had more time than was necessary to prepare these resolutions. How is it possible that this House can discuss these resolutions intelligently, covering as they do about sixty different railway schemes and involving an amount aggregating over three millions of dollars? It is quite impossible under such circumstances that any man in this House can give intelligent attention to this question.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it would be far more satisfactory to the House, and certainly should be no disadvantage to the Government if the hon. gentleman would indicate which of these resolutions are matters of urgency requiring the attention of Parliament in consequence of railway construction being undertaken, and confine the attention of the House this session to the consideration of these particular items. There are some thirty or forty projects here, many of which have no existence except as projects. In many cases no line is surveyed and in some instances scarcely anybody lives along the projected line. It can hardly be supposed that all these are matters of urgency requiring to be taken up during the present session of Parliament. We are here in the fifth month of the session—the fifth month began this week—and we now have for the first time brought under our attention a number of railway projects, the merits of which we have no opportunity to consider. If the hon. Minister, at an early period of the session had submitted to us what reasons he had for favouring these projects, upon what grounds he thought the projects meritorious and requiring an appropriation in the public interest, we would have had an opportunity to judge of the soundness of his decision. Under present circumstances we have no chance to perform the duties which the public impose upon us. We are here for the purpose of exercising our individual judgment for the public good, and, in the discharge of public duties as public trustees, as persons who are exercising authority as trustees, honestly and with due regard to the public interest. Surely, the hon. gentleman knows that nineteen-twentieths of these projects are not likely to interest anybody for a long time to come. If he were to indicate those that he thought likely to be undertaken at an early day, we could devote our attention to the consideration of these, and would be able to see how the hon. gentleman has come to the conclusions he has in reference to their merits, allowing others to stand over until another session of Parliament.

Mr. TARTE. Mr. Speaker, on the 26th of April, I moved for the correspondence on the Manitoba and North-west Territories school question. Two months have passed, and still not a single sheet of paper has been brought down on that very important question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can hardly bring up that question on this order.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Perhaps I may be allowed to answer the hon. gentleman now, as it will save repeating the question. The hon. gentleman's information is not accurate. All the papers were brought down about two weeks ago.

Mr. TARTE. No.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I myself brought down two returns about two weeks ago, and they have gone to the Queen's Printer.

Mr. TARTE. I went upstairs to inquire about the matter, and I was told that not one single report had been brought down in answer to my motion of the 26th April. I think the hon. gentleman will see that he is mistaken.

Mr. HAGGART. Nearly every one of the resolutions which the House will be asked to consider giving assistance to any road is in favour of a road that has already been in existence, some portions of it built, and it is for the extension of these roads that the assistance is asked. Nearly all the roads have been under consideration by the House in previous sessions, and the House has had their favourable qualities explained. Nearly every one is a necessity, for only those that were absolutely necessary were included in these resolutions as worthy of assistance. With reference to the lateness in bringing down the correspondence, it is only two days since I got the resolutions through Council. It was impossible for the department to make copies faster than we did, though I gave instructions at once.

Mr. LAURIER. I will withdraw one-half of my charge, and blame the hon. gentleman for having brought his resolutions down so late.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This abuse is one of long standing, and, therefore, all the worse. We ought, in all conscience, at the time of the Budget, or about that time, to get a description of what our obligations are, and what further obligations it is proposed the country should incur. Here we have had a long discussion as to the railways of the country, as to the extent of our resources, and our obligations and, all told, there are about four millions of dollars of obligations of which we had no hint at the time the discussions were going on. More than that, every human being knows that this practice of putting these railway resolutions off until the end of the session is carried on for the express purposes of stifling and preventing inquiry. It is owing largely to that, that very objectionable grants in the past have been put through, from time to time. We have no opportunity of getting printed what meagre information is given us, so that the majority of the members can avail themselves of it. One or two may possibly look through the returns which are brought down, but the great body of members in the House know nothing of them, and vote on all these things in the most perfect ignorance of what they are doing.

Mr. MULOCK. I concur in the remarks that have fallen from my hon. friends, and I think they could have put the case with even greater force. We are called upon not only to consider the propositions involved in these resolutions, but we ought by rights to consider the whole situation with a view to determining whether this is the wisest mode in which to grant aid in promotion of railway enterprises. It is quite impossible for the House to receive information from outside quarters where resolutions are submitted to the House at this moment. This is an age when public opinion and public advice is communicable and communicated to the people's representatives in various ways, more particularly through the press. If we have so many millions of dollars of the public money at the disposal of the country from year to year for the promotion of railway enterprises, it not only involves a consideration of the specific propositions submitted to the House, but a review of the whole situation, to see whether there are not other localities and other enterprises of a similar character more deserving of aid than those which we are now asked to aid. Now, how can this House get information and advice from outside sources when the outside world does not know what we are purporting to do with the public money? Who knows, outside the committee of the House now assembled, what we are going to do with these millions of the public money? One-half the House has gone home. A week ago the Government gave notice that practically the work of the session was over; to-day we have scarcely more than one-half the House sitting, and not one of us has had an opportunity of communicating with the outside world before we are asked to vote away public money. It is on the line, Mr. Speaker, of the whole financial administration of this Government. They are practically engaged in wrecking the finances of Canada to-day. A Government that has shown less regard for the finances of Canada, has never occupied the Treasury benches since we have had responsible government. Hon. members may be surprised. I am but voicing, as I believe, the sentiments of the thoughtful people of Canada when I say that the finances of our country to-day are in the hands of reckless men who are prepared to sacrifice the interests of our country in order to maintain themselves in power.

Mr. McDUGALL (Cape Breton). That is your opinion.

Mr. MULOCK. That is my opinion, and I believe it is the opinion of the country. Is there any country in the world that is in the position ours is to-day? From one end of Canada to the other, the employees of this Government are creditors for overdue wages, and the financial administrators are sitting opposite unable to deal with the situation. Is there any greater evidence of incapacity to transact public business than that very circumstance itself? The idea of our being asked to vote away millions of dollars for railways, when the unpaid servants of this Government, unpaid creditors, joiners, workmen, clerks and so on, are waiting for money with which to pay their necessary obligations. Sir, what sort of financial conduct do you call that?

Mr. McDUGALL (Cape Breton). Talk less and we will get through sooner.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, if we are powerless to prevent it, at all events, we can protest. I am not the keeper of the hon. gentleman's conscience. He may rejoice in this method of doing business, it may be entirely satisfactory to him. I am expressing my opinion, and, I believe, the opinions of a very large portion of the community. Sir, the recklessness with which the rights of the people are being dealt with, the recklessness with which our finances are being handled, the recklessness with which our credit is being dealt with, the recklessness with which the possibilities of this country are being disregarded, convince me that the interests of the country are entirely subsidiary to the interest of the men who are on the Treasury benches.

Mr. McMULLEN. I concur in the views expressed by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) with regard to the objects and aims of the Government in bringing up these resolutions and forcing them through an almost empty House. Now, they are setting on foot here about forty railway schemes, with regard to which there is not one tittle of evidence that a financial basis is already laid with the view of carrying out these schemes. Many of them are new, just recently formed under a charter, or the renewal of an old charter. The Government are virtually offering bonuses to some particular corporation that will control the charter for three or four years, and peddle it around with the hope of being able to make money out of it. It is a most debasing and demoralizing scheme from beginning to end. It is a very great pity that the Tory party are driven to such extremes that they are compelled to carry on a corrupting system of this kind, by offering to build with the people's money, or to subsidize, roads through sections of country where they think they may possibly secure some political interest in their favour. It is done for that purpose. Before the last three elections we always had these subsidies brought down, new schemes set on foot, members sent home with the announcement to their constituents that they have got a grant towards the construction of a road through some portion of the constituency that they represent, and they will, no doubt, say that if the Government is only sustained the probabilities are that that road will be built, and if they are not sustained, of course they cannot hope to get any aid. These will be the arguments used. Now, I sincerely deplore the condition to which political morality has dropped, as exhibited by hon. gentlemen opposite. Any scheme, any movement, any sacrifice of money that will possibly contribute to their retaining their positions on the Treasury benches, is resorted to unblushingly and without the least hesitation. In the face of a falling revenue, in the face of the enormous amount of indebtedness of this country, in face of the fact that we are sending across the Atlantic about $10,250,000 a year to pay the interest on borrowed money, in face of the fact that the people of this country are now taxed to an extent beyond that of any other portion of this continent—because there is no other portion of this continent to-day whose people are paying a heavier taxation than the people of this Dominion at the present moment—in face of all these facts we are asked to-day still to increase our responsibilities, to add to the burdens of our people, to offer financial aid to fly-kite schemes for the purpose of helping the Government in the approaching election; and if the Government can by these means secure a renewal of the confidence of the people, they are prepared to make the sacrifice. Well, Sir, this is a clear evidence of the kind of political morality that exists in Canada to-day. It is to be hoped that the end of this system is drawing near. It is to be hoped that the people of Canada will see through these schemes, will see through the object of the Government in bringing forward measures of this kind at the close of the session; and it is to be hoped that although it is late in the day, although the country is heavily burdened with debt, although the annual expenditure has now reached an enormous sum—that even at the eleventh hour the country will get relief from this abominable truckling, and, I may say, the political rascality that is exhibited in this whole scheme.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

For 90 miles of the railway from Newport or Windsor to Truro or to a point between Truro and Stewiacke, and from a point on said railway to a point at or near Eastville, and from Eastville through the valley of the Musquodoboit River towards a point on the proposed Dartmouth branch of the Intercolonial, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, in lieu of the subsidies granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, and also for a railway bridge over the Shubenacadie River on the line of the said railway, a subsidy of 15 per cent on the value of the structure, nor exceeding in the whole $300,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a very important branch. I trust the Minister will give a full explanation.

Mr. HAGGART. The object of constructing one section, about fifty miles in length, is to secure a short line from western Nova Scotia to eastern Nova Scotia, and from the western portion of the Dominion by the construction of a direct line from Windsor to Truro. At present the distance is eighty-four miles. The object of building the other section is to reach coal deposits near the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a going railway or is it simply projected?

Mr. HAGGART. It is in contemplation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why is there so much indefiniteness? The resolution reads Newport or Windsor, and also Truro or Stewiacke.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. These places are close together, and it is in order to allow a little latitude in the location of the line. Newport is very near Windsor, and Brookfield very near Truro.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Newport is within five miles of Windsor, which is the terminus of the Windsor branch. The only question is the desirability of giving the company some alternative route and points.

Mr. LAURIER. Is there a company organized?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, and part of the road surveyed.

Mr. McMULLEN. How often has this subsidy been revoked?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In 1886, in 1890 and also in 1892.

Mr. MULOCK. Are these exactly the same conditions as were attached to the former subsidies?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The same as to amount, but the location is different.

Mr. LAURIER. To whom is the subsidy to be paid?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. To the company who will build the road.

Mr. LAURIER. What company is that?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The grant is to any company.

Mr. LAURIER. Then the Government have not decided what company shall receive the subsidy?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was a company organized and a contract was entered into. But the contract has terminated and a subsidy has not been earned. The people in the county of Hants, Colchester and Halifax are most anxious that this line should be constructed, if not by the old company, by an amalgamation. There were two companies organized, Hants Central and Stewiacke and Lansdowne. The latter company had the contract, but it never earned any subsidy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the companies have died from old age; but they seem to have left heirs. Is there any organized company in existence to carry out this work?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, there is an amalgamation of the various interests, but they have not yet placed themselves in a position to make a contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Really this cannot be one of those questions of urgency of which the Minister of Railways has been descanting.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The construction of the road will be proceeded with as soon as this money is available.

Mr. LAURIER. By which company?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. By the amalgamated company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A company which at present does not exist will then come to light. This case has a close resemblance to a certain short cut railway of which we heard many years ago. Is there not some railway communication at or near the points mentioned ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is a distance of ninety miles from Newport to Brookfield.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any railway communication ?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no railway in that section.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course there are railways between the two points named.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope this case will not be like a case a few years ago, when we were promised a saving of forty-five miles and found the saving was only six.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is to connect Windsor, which is the terminus of the Windsor branch, with Truro, and the road will not be parallel to any existing lines.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there any communication between the two points named ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, by going around by two railways you can reach the terminal point named, but the intervening country is not served by any railway.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I desire to correct my statement as regards a distance of ninety miles. The distance by the present route is eighty-four miles, running down the Windsor and Annapolis to Windsor and up to Brookfield. The distance between Newport and Brookfield is across the country not served by railway facilities and is fifty odd miles.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman is asking $140,000 more than is required for the subsidy ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The additional miles are required for extension purposes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Really $160,000 are required, and not $300,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then there is a bridge. That fifty-four miles takes you to this point on the Intercolonial Railway, and then you go through the iron fields to Eastville, about thirty miles.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot understand the idea of subsidizing a road ten or fifteen miles each side of the existing line. If you were subsidizing a road through a district of country which was not served with railway communication, there might be some reasonable excuse.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Railway Report of 1893 shows the districts that will be served by this line: the Ste-wiacke Valley, affording communication with the Iron Mines, Spring Side, Upper Stewiacke and Musquodoboit settlements. That country is not served now by the Intercolonial Railway.

To the Nipissing and James Bay Railway Company, for 25 miles of their railway, from at or near North Bay Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, towards James Bay, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile; also for 43 miles of their railway from North Bay towards Lake Tamagamang, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $217,000.

Mr. HAGGART. This road runs from North Bay to Lake Temagamang. It passes through, I think, the best portions of the pine country that is at the disposal of the Ontario Government. It is a line that is very much wanted in the interests of developing the great lumber district in that country.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who are the men that hold this charter ?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. McMurrich, of Toronto is president. I believe there is no doubt about the road being built.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the subscribed capital ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know. There was a subsidy granted last year for twenty-five miles of that road, and they said it was impossible to negotiate that twenty-five miles without having a subsidy for the whole sixty-eight miles. I think there is no doubt whatever it is the intention of the company to see that road completed.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. gentleman say whether there is an agricultural district there or whether it is entirely a timber country ?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it is, to a great extent, the greatest timber country in Ontario.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the lumber held by ?

Mr. HAGGART. The entire section is held by the Ontario Government at present. It has not been surveyed.

To the Drummond County Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway, from St. Leonard northerly towards a junction with the Intercolonial Railway at Chaudière Junction, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the position of this company ?

Mr. HAGGART. The Drummond County Railway is constructed from Ste. Rosalie station on the Grand Trunk Railway, near St. Hyacinthe, through Drummondville and St. Leonard, forty-six miles. It is now proposed to subsidize a further portion of thirty miles from St. Leonard to the Chaudière junction on the Intercolonial Railway. When this road is completed it will form another and an easier route on the Intercolonial from Montreal, as the grades are lighter than those on the Grand Trunk Railway.

To the Strathroy and Western Counties Railway Company, for 25 miles, of their railway, from St. Thomas through the counties of Elgin and Middlesex, towards Forest Station or Park Hill on the Grand Trunk Railway, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $80,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this a new line ?

Mr. HAGGART. This is a new line.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has it been surveyed ?

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot tell. The intention of the first twenty-five-mile section is to connect the Canada Southern Railway and Grand Trunk Railway air line with the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does it cross any lines in its route ?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it crosses three lines.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then here is a road only twenty-five miles long, which crosses three existing lines of railway, being subsidized to run in opposition to existing lines.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This road crosses the St. Clair branch of the Canada Southern, the Air Line of the Grand Trunk between Glencoe and St. Thomas, and the Grand Trunk main line from London to Sarnia.

Mr. ROOME. It only crosses the main lines of the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. This scheme is on a par with the one we were speaking of the other day, of subsidizing the line from St. Catharines to Hamilton. We are subsidizing lines to duplicate existing lines. When we get through granting bonuses of this kind, any man who thinks he is under the heel of a monopoly will come and ask for a bonus in order to get competition ; and how hon. gentlemen opposite will refuse to grant such aid, I do not know.

To the Parry Sound Colonization Railway Company, for 20 miles of their railway, from Parry Sound, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where does this line run from ?

Mr. HAGGART. From Parry Sound to Ottawa.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is for a portion of the road running from Parry Sound this way ?

Mr. HAGGART. Part of it is to complete the section to Parry Sound, and the other part is for about ten miles of the eastern section, which is amalgamated with the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. What portion of the subsidy is on each ?

Mr. HAGGART. I believe about exactly half goes to each. On the western end, it takes the line from Elmsdale to Parry Sound.

To the United Counties Railway Company, for 32 miles of their line from Iberville to Sorel, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and not exceeding in all $102,400.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) I have already, at a previous session, given expression to my views concerning the opportunity of subsidizing the United Counties Railway. I have not changed my opinion since. I still believe that this railway line is not entitled, by its merits and its importance, to the favours granted by the Government to important roads. In my opinion, it would have been more conducive to the general advantage and interest of the public, to build a railway line through the Richelieu valley, accommodating localities which will not, for a long time to come, be served by railway facilities ; whereas the actual line runs through several parishes which are within accessible distance of railway stations. Along the Richelieu River are situated several parishes, as St. Marc, St. Charles, St. Antoine, St. Denis, St. Roch and St. Ours, which are numbered among the earliest Canadian settlements. Since the policy of granting subsidies towards the construction of railways has been inaugurated, these parishes have largely assisted in establishing means of transportation favourable to trade in general, and have received nothing in return. It is a matter of surprise to me that the Government should not yet have seen their way to assist this enterprise. I think it would have been preferable for the Government to have given assistance to the promoters of a company willing to build a road running through the Richelieu valley, rather than voting away money to subsidize a line running a region which is already crossed by a whole system of railways. I trust that should the Government and the Minister of Railways think it fit to grant bonuses to another company, in addition to those granted to the United Counties Railway Company, they will subsidize, at the earliest opportunity, a line running through the valley of the River Richelieu, and affording better railway facilities and accommodation to the parishes just mentioned.

Mr. BECHARD. (Translation.) I cannot help expressing my surprise at the position taken by the hon. member for Bagot (Mr. Dupont), in connection with the subsidy granted to the United Counties Railway Company. The hon. member stated that such parishes as are situated along the River Richelieu, as St. Ours, St. Denis and St. Charles, had a better claim to the estabishment of a railway line than the parishes through which runs the United Counties Railway. Surely, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing to prevent a company being organized for the purpose of building a railway along the Richelieu River, should it be needed; but this is no reason why the United Counties Railway should not be looked upon as an eminently useful scheme. I speak knowingly, after having travelled over the road, which is partly in operation, since last fall; and I may say, that it is well built, in good repair, and that there is already a considerable traffic done, although the road is operated only from Iberville to St. Hyacinthe. This, as is well known, is only a portion of the road, which is going to be extended from St. Hyacinthe through the parishes of St. Jude, St. Barnabé and St. Aimé, as far as Sorel; from Sorel to Iberville, it will run through the parishes just mentioned, and extend further through the parishes of St. Hyacinthe and St. Damase, thus passing through the counties of St. Hyacinthe, Rouville and Iberville. It will thus be seen that this line is a very important one. This road connects with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Iberville, and, further up, with the Vermont Central Railway, thus affording direct connection with the United States. This line shall make connection with the Canada Atlantic Railway at Lacolle, thus securing direct railway communication with Ottawa. It will also make connection with the Maine and Boston line at Highgate Centre, in the State of Vermont. It will thus be seen that the road will, later on, assume a great importance. I hope my hon. friend the member for Bagot will not press his objection to this subsidy. As I have just stated, and I speak with a thorough knowledge of the matter, the road passes through my county, and runs through parishes which hitherto had not been served by any railway facilities. It is true that hitherto there were two lines of railway, running within half a mile of each other, at one end of the parish where I live, and which could accommodate but a small portion of the population; but, to-day, if we take into consideration the fact that there are thirty miles of road built and there is already a large freight traffic, we must come to the conclusion that before long there will be a considerable traffic on that line. The traffic will be much larger once the several counties will have been served with railway communication.

Mr. DUPONT. (Translation.) It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that the remarks just fallen from the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard) come in support of the views I have expressed. He has just told us that the parishes through which the United Counties Railway pass are already run by two other lines, half a mile distant from each other. Therefore, we have the evidence of the hon. gentleman himself that those parishes are actually served by two railways.

Mr. BECHARD

But he wants to have another line that will pass in front of his house. I have not the least objection to that; for I am not opposed to the hon. member's parish being served by the best railway facilities. I, therefore, allow that contention of his to pass unchallenged. But, Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman has allowed that these parishes were well served by railway facilities. Therefore, the inhabitants of that region cannot complain on any just ground. Should the hon. member succeed in building another line in addition to the duplicate line already existing, I shall be the first to congratulate him. Still, I think it would only have been fair for the Government to have first considered the needs of those localities which are deprived of all railway accommodation, and which are not within accessible distance of those railway facilities, such as the parishes situated in the counties of Vercheres, Iberville and Richelieu. The claims of these parishes should have been first attended to by the Government, prior to the applications of localities already served by sufficient railway facilities.

To the Railway Company from Joliette to St. Jean de Matha, for 12 miles of their railway from St. Jean de Matha to Ste. Emélie de l'Énergie, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $38,400.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of regret to me that the Government should have come to the conclusion of renewing the subsidy granted four or five years ago to the railway company from Joliette to St. Jean de Matha, on the following ground: This company was incorporated under an Act of the Quebec Legislature; it was subsidized by both Federal and Local Legislatures, and although the charter was granted several years ago, not an inch of work has been done, not a cent has been disbursed for the building of this railway. The charter, as also the subsidies granted, have actually lapsed. When the citizens of the parish of Ste. Emélie sent a petition to Parliament applying for an Act of incorporation, we had to face an opposition so unwarranted that when they had to draft a report for submission to the House, not one single plausible reason could be found. The position is this: there actually exists a railway extending from Montreal to St. Gabriel of Brandon, which is operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The morning and evening trains run regularly. The distance between St. Gabriel of Brandon and Ste. Emélie is twelve miles. The line has been surveyed, the cost estimated, and it was ascertained that the road could have been built for half the sum that will be expended for the projected line between St. Jean de Matha and St. Felix de Valois, should it ever be constructed. I may further state that the Canadian Pacific Company have been interviewed within the last two years by the promoters of this road, who have first insisted upon the Canadian Pacific Railway undertaking to build the road on condition that the Government subsidies should be transferred to them. The Canadian Pacific Company declined the offer. They were then asked whether, in case the road should be built, they would agree to operate it. The company's reply was in the negative, on the ground that the distance between St. Felix and St. Jean de Matha, being only 8 miles, is too inconsiderable a distance to allow of a permanent service being established over that distance, as the working expenses would be out of all proportion to the receipts. And it is in the face of such facts as stated, that the Government grants a renewal of subsidy to a road which was doomed and whose fate was sealed; and this in order to thwart and to hamper an important scheme, and prevent the construction of a road which is quite feasible. Therefore, I enter my protest against the grant of this subsidy. I will not ask the House to divide on that point; but I record my protest against the granting of this subsidy, on the ground that it is unjustifiable, because unavailable.

Mr. LIPPE. (Translation.) This railway scheme is, beyond doubt, a very important one. The object of this road is to give railway facilities to a territory fit for colonization, which, when opened up, will afford space for the settlement of forty or fifty thriving parishes. The object of the company is to open up this territory to colonization, and I think they are entitled, on that ground, to a generous assistance from the Government. The company have already been subsidized by this Government, and they have made a considerable outlay. They have had surveys of the road made, and acquired the necessary land; and now obstacles are being thrown in their way to thwart their enterprise and kill the scheme. This subsidy is granted for the extension of the road to Ste. Emélie, and in order to further the interests of the parishes mentioned in the Bill, which the Rev. Mr. Laporte asked this House to pass this year. The object they have in view is to prevent the road passing through St. Jean de Matha, and being extended to the parish of Ste. Emélie, and to accommodate the parishes of Ste. Beatrix, St. Alphonse, St. Come, St. Zenon and St. Damien, while if the views of the hon. member for Berthier were to prevail, the only parishes that would be served by this railway scheme would be Ste. Emélie and St. Damien. It was stated that the charter of the company had lapsed, but such is not the case, for the act of incorporation only enacts that a certain number of gentlemen are incorporated under the name of the Joliette and St. Jean de Matha Railway Company, and it does not provide that the charter shall lapse, on certain conditions taking place. The powers of the company only are curtailed and the Government subsidies have lapsed. The company, it is true, have not yet graded their road; but they have had surveys and location plans made. They have located their line from St. Philippe de Valois to Ste. Emélie. They have a large quantity of ties on the spot. Further, they have bought a portion of the necessary ground, and they are ready to start their operations. They have also made arrangements with a company, who have visited the premises and taken a survey of the territory up to the Mattawin and the neighbouring parishes. This company have come to the conclusion that this road is a necessity, and in the general interest of that portion of the country. Therefore, I fail to see any reason why this House should vote down a subsidy which the Government have decided to grant in the public interest, and more so in the interest of the localities which this road will serve.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) The hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Lippé) is of opinion that the charter of the railway company from Joliette to St. Jean de Matha has not lapsed. The hon. member should bear in mind that it has been proved in evidence, before the Committee on Railways, during the present session, that this charter no longer existed, as the hon. member himself agreed to. I shall further call his attention to the fact that at the last session of the Quebec Legislature, the subsidies granted to a certain number of railway companies have been cancelled, and that the Joliette and St. Jean de Matha Company is one of those which have lost their bonus. I am aware that the Government may revive or renew this grant, but even then the promoters will have to wait till the next session of the Legislature. This scheme has been found impracticable by the authorities of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to whom the promoters have applied, as just stated, and who declined to have anything to do with the projected enterprise. The object of the company was to prevent the building of a railway running from St. Gabriel of Brandon, and which would serve the parishes of St. Damien, Ste. Emélie, St. Zénon and St. Michel des Saints. It is the only practicable line and one that could be easily built, and at a small cost. It is the only road which could be operated by means of the train going to St. Gabriel. The road promoted by the Rev. Mr. Laporte would run entirely through the county of Berthier, and would strike the county of Joliette only at Ste. Emélie. I make the statement before the House, with a full knowledge of the facts, that the road which is now subsidized, is not going to be built; and I say it will prevent another railway being built in another direction in the near future, either by the Canadian Pacific Company or by any other parties who might have taken hold of the enterprise. As to the subsidy having lapsed, I hold the proof of it in the Statute of the province of Quebec, passed at the last session. Statute 57 Vic., ch. 5, schedule A, reads as follows:—

A list of the railway companies whose subsidies have become or are considered as lapsed up to the 1st of November, 1893, according to the tables A and B annexed to the general report of the Commissioner of the provincial crown lands for 1893.

Among the railways mentioned is found that of Joliette and St. Jean de Matha, $27,400.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) As I take the import of the Statute, the subsidies are lapsed, and not the charter.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) Both subsidies and charter are cancelled, because the company did not start the works within the prescribed delay. I may appeal on this point to the recollections of the hon. Minister of Railways. The charter has lapsed, and the Government, taking into consideration the fact of the charter having lapsed, and of the impossibility of the road being built under such conditions, they have, at the same time, declared that the company had forfeited the subsidy granted to them. And now they are trying to galvanize a corpse, and to kill a scheme that was able to live, and would have opened to colonization a vast territory and afforded railway communication to the parishes of St. Damien, Ste. Emélie, St. Zenon, and St. Michel, which are already thickly settled.

For a railway from Port Hawkesbury towards Cheticamp, 25 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $80,000.

Mr. LAURIER. This requires some explanation.

Mr. HAGGART. This road is intended to extend from Port Hawkesbury, northerly along the Gulf of Canso to Cheticamp. The distance is twenty-five miles. It passes through Inverness and Cape Breton, and the whole distance is ninety miles.

Mr. LAURIER. Who are the promoters?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was a company formed some four or five years ago, which went into operations and graded part of the road. The municipality gave them a subsidy conditionally, which has not been realized. This House gave the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company a subsidy in consideration of the fact that the municipality had given them aid. That was in the session of 1886 or 1887.

For a line of railway from the junction of the Elk and Kootenay River to Coal Creek, a distance of 34 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $108,800.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This line, I suppose, is somewhere up in the vicinity of the Rocky Mountains. Indeed, the whole policy connected with it requires some explanation. If we are going to give every inch of the North-west, that chooses to clamour for railway accommodation, subsidies, the Minister of Finance had better be prepared for a very large increase of taxation at a very early date. I cannot conceive anything more mischievous than the policy of subsidizing little railways in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, in regions of country where the population is something at the rate of two to the square league.

Mr. HAGGART. This is perhaps the most important railway grant we are giving this year. It is for the purpose of building a line of railway from what are known to be the most valuable deposits of coal in British Columbia, and will afford means of transportation from the coal mines to the junction of the Elk and Kootenay River, where they will strike a navigable stream and be able to get access to the United States and to the town of Nelson. It starts from Lethbridge on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the company has taken over the Galt road, and has taken up the narrow gauge track and put down a broad gauge track from Dunmore to Lethbridge. Their intention is to build through the Crow's Nest Pass, and eventually connect with the mining districts of that section of country. In that section the people are clamouring for the development of the coal mines, and a number of parties have joined in the request that if the Canadian Pacific Railway do not build their line they may be authorized and assisted to build a line of their own, in order to develop this coal-mining region, which those who have seen it say contains the most wonderful deposits of coal, perhaps, in the world.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For whose benefit is this to be developed?

Mr. HAGGART. This is a road asked for by the British Columbia Government, toward which they have granted a large subsidy. Whether that particular company will build the line, or some other company, I am not prepared to say at present. But the British Columbia Government have granted a very large land subsidy to the company for the purpose of developing that particular section.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But we do not own a scrap of this coal. Let the people who own it develop it. Why should we be called upon to tax the ratepayers of Canada $108,000 for the development of some valuable coal mine, whether it belongs to the British Columbia Government or to private individuals? What justification is there for helping on our overburdened people all these expenditures for enterprises of the merits of which we know nothing at all, and which, if they be one-quarter as valuable or one-tenth as valuable as they have been represented to be by the hon. gentleman, ought to be able to pay their own way. I object to the whole system for the matter of that, but particularly it seems to me that going into the wilderness in this fashion, on the vague statement that there are valuable coal mines, in which, even though they are as valuable as they are represented, the people of Canada have no interest, is something worse than throwing away our money. Who are the parties who own this coal?

Mr. HAGGART. A portion of it was granted to the railway company for building the railway. Some gentlemen in Montreal and some in British Columbia, I believe, are interested in the company.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is the president of this company?

Mr. HAGGART. I think Col. Baker, one of the members of the Local Government, has the charter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman say who are the members of the corporation?

Mr. MARA. I will get the statute giving the names.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would remind the Government that we are giving away something that we cannot take back, the public lands of this Dominion.

Mr. HAGGART. This is worse—it is money.

Mr. CHARLTON. And money—for the development of coal property belonging to the company. We have a very liberal way of promoting private interests at public expense, and this notwithstanding that we have a deficit this year, a debt of $240,000,000, an expenditure twice per head that of the United States, recklessness, waste and extravagance on every hand. In spite of all, this Government continue their gifts, largesses and benefits to private interests.

Mr. FOSTER. Your countenance is not half as severe as your words.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have always felt it an outrageous thing to charge to capital account these expenditures for which we have not one copper of value to show. If you are going to make these grants and benevolences at least you should charge them to annual expenditure.

Mr. HAGGART. So we do, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; they are charged to capital account. We have had deficit after deficit concealed by the fact that we have most improperly placed to capital account items like this which should be paid out of revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. These are paid out of consolidated fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not a cent of these expenditures is charged to annual expenditure. We part with our money and we have not a copper's worth of value or interests in any one of these enterprises to show; they are not in the sense generally understood charged to consolidated fund, but they are charged to capital account. This will be seen at the commencement of these Public Accounts of ours. Last year we have charged an expenditure to capital account for various railways, $811,384. The only possible check we can have now that we have entered upon this most debauching and pernicious system will be to charge these items to the ordinary annual expenditure. If they are so charged, the hon. gentleman's deficit next year, instead of being a million and a half or two millions, would be honestly stated at three or four millions. Apart from that, I want to know where this is going to stop. We have a territory four thousand miles across. If we are going from one end of it to the other bonusing and benefiting every person who chances to land upon a good coal mine, or nickel, or silver, or iron mine, where in the name of all that is wonderful does the hon. gentleman expect to pull up? There is not one of these grants but will be a precedent upon which a score of others will be demanded, and I am bound to say that if you grant one individual or corporation this benefit, others have as much—or as little—right to get a grant from the public resources as these people. I should not be surprised to find, after all said and done, that the different proprietors of these coal mines are among our enterprising neighbours on the other side.

Mr. MARA. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know who they are?

Mr. MARA. I have sent for the statute which gives the names of the incorporators of the company. The coal lands are owned by some Montreal people, I believe Messrs. Hanson Bros., Mr. Greenshields and Mr. Gault. In Victoria there are Mr. Pemberton and Col. Baker, and a number of others whose names I have forgotten for the moment. The coal lands are held altogether by British subjects. As the Minister of Railways has said, the mines there are believed to be not only valuable, but the largest seams or veins of coal discovered on the continent. The hon. gentleman asks what good this will do the tax-payers of Canada. I can tell him that it will afford a large market for the farmers of the North-west. It will also afford a large market to the manufacturers and others in the eastern provinces. In British Columbia at the present time a large interprovincial trade is done with the other portions of the Dominion, and I think that the manufacturers and wholesale merchants of Montreal will tell the hon. gentleman that they have no better customers than those in British Columbia. If you inquire at the banks you will find that in no province of the Dominion is paper taken up with greater regularity on the 4th of every month, than in the province of British Columbia.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is there bituminous coal?

Mr. MARA. We have bituminous, anthracite and cannel coal. There appears to be an extraordinary quantity of coal deposits in those mountains. Any hon. member who has read Professor Selwyn's report of two or three years ago, will have seen that. There is one vein—I am almost afraid to give the width of it—of over forty feet.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has there been any test as to its corresponding quality with the Scranton coal?

Mr. MARA. Yes; tests have been made in the laboratory here. All this information is in the blue-books.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am very glad to hear that valuable coal deposits have been discovered. But the more valuable they are, in all conscience, the less need there should be for our taxing the people at large. The practical result of all this is that these gentlemen whom the hon. gentleman has just named, these capitalists, as I believe some of them are, not content with having got, and probably got very cheaply, an extremely valuable deposit, must needs come to the Parliament of Canada and demand that the ratepayers be obliged to contribute $108,000 for the purpose of making their individual fortunes. Now, we know perfectly well that large amounts of money have been realized on the Pacific coast by the fortunate proprietors of valuable coal mines there. We do not grudge them what is due to enterprise and energy, but what I do object to is taking public money for the purpose of assisting persons who are absolutely able, if they control a mine one-tenth part as valuable as we are given to understand this is, to raise all the money that is required for the purpose of exploiting it. That is what I complain of, and to that no answer has been made. The more valuable these things are, the more solid and substantial value there is in them, the less reason and the less justice is there in their coming to us for assistance to develop them. Now, as was the case in Nova Scotia, and as ought to be the case all over the Dominion, if the Government were to impose a reasonable tax or royalty on these natural products which ought to belong to the whole community, and not to this or that individual, I could understand the propriety of the Minister coming down to us and saying, we are going to develop a great coal mine out of which a considerable sum will return to the community at large. The fact, however, is that a number of wealthy men have got hold of an extremely valuable mine which may be worth many millions, which, judging from what has occurred on the Pacific coast, very likely is worth many millions; and, not content with having obtained that mine, in all probability for about one-hundredth part of its value, they must come and demand $100,000 from the community at large to make their rich prize a little richer.

Mr. FOSTER. Just before the debate closes I wish to correct an error of my hon. friend who states that these are chargeable to capital. They are not chargeable to capital, and have never been so treated in our accounts. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Public Accounts on the first page he will find capital expenditures of about $3,079,000, consisting of railways, canals, public works, and Dominion lands. If he will turn again to page 27 of the Public Accounts, he will find payments for different works under capital, and in these railway subsidies are not included. If he will turn again to page 57 of Public Accounts in which the summary is made of the expenditure chargeable to capital, he will find that railway subsidies are not included. They have always been paid out of the surplus of the Consolidated Fund.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Exactly, out of a sum which ought to have gone to reduce our capital debt. They are just as much a charge against the capital.

Mr. FOSTER. If we collect $38,000,000 and only spend $7,000,000 of it, you might say that all the rest will have to be taken out of capital, but that is a different thing to saying that we charge this to capital and borrow for it each year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not at all. Every penny which is paid for these railways is so much deducted from the sum which would be available to go in reduction of our capital expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. Equally so with immigration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a charge against capital in the strictest sense of the term. Now, if the hon. gentleman were in a position to do it, I would willingly make a bargain with him. I would be quite content to let all these go on condition that they be paid out of the surplus of 1894-95, for 1895-96.

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell you what I will do. I will agree that not one cent shall be paid for these subsidies when the amount that is paid, taking into account also the amounts that have been paid for subsidies heretofore under the Subsidy Acts we have passed, is greater than the total amount of the surplus which we have had in these years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman say whether, in the report of the annual expenditure in the years in which these subsidies were paid, this was included as a part of the expenditure of the year, and counted, or whether it was excluded from the hon. gentleman's statement of the expenses for the year?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman claimed a surplus of $1,300,000. He made no allowance for the $811,000 he had expended in railways, and he is going to deduct this out of the surplus.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not much matter against what account this is to be charged; but there is one thing clear, and that is that the money comes out of the pockets of the people. The people earn this money, it is a tax against them, and how you may put it in your books is another matter. But the hon. gentleman seemed to think that thimble-rigging with the books will relieve the tax-payers. All the same, it comes out of the people's pockets.

Mr. MULLOCK. The hon. gentleman has not charged it to either, according to his method of counting. It is neither in the expenditure of the year nor charged against capital.

Mr. FOSTER. It was an account by itself.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is no more valuable property in the western portion of this Dominion than coal mines. They are going to be a source of enormous wealth to the owners of them. Now, here is a coal mine not far from the American border that will be an enormous mine of wealth to those who control it, and I think they should be left to develop it alone, at their own expense, in place of asking the tax-payers of this country to give them $108,000 to assist them in developing what is in itself an enormous mine of wealth. What particular advantages are the farming community going to receive from the development of these coal mines? The hon. gentleman who spoke a moment ago, told us that the manufacturers were going to be benefited, that the wholesale merchants of Toronto and Montreal were going to get certain benefits. The manufacturers are always looked after, they are the coddled children of hon. gentlemen opposite. They look after their interests, but there is not one word about the interests of the great mass of the tax-payers of this country. We have this system of endless bonusing of anything and everything, which is a result of the blind following of the late Sir John A. Macdonald, on the part of the Tory party in the province of Ontario. Under the leadership of the late Sir John Macdonald and the present High Commissioner members of this House were persuaded that the granting of subsidies to different roads was all right. We remember the glowing picture presented of the advantages that would follow the construction of railways in Nova Scotia, and the Short Line, the St. Charles branch, the Oxford and New Glasgow line; when those right hon. gentlemen presented these schemes in eloquent terms, they were adopted by their followers, and hon. gentlemen opposite are evidently prepared to follow their example.

It is now proposed by the Government to build a branch line for the benefit of a great corporation, towards which it will pay nothing.

For a railway from Abbotsford Station on the Mission Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the town of Chilliwack, 21 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $67,200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman please explain this vote?

Mr. HAGGART. This line will run along the Fraser River, parallel to the Canadian Pacific Railway, through one of the best sections of agricultural land in British Columbia. There is no railway in that part of the country. The road will run to New Westminster and along the Fraser.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Considering what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have already received from this country, we might be spared constructing branch roads to run in connection with it. In one case we have the plea put forward that coal lands will be tapped, in another case the plea is that the line will run through one of the best agricultural districts. Before this plea is concluded several millions will have been spent in further developing the railway system of the country. What is the population expected to be served by this line of twenty-one miles long?

Mr. MARA. I would reply to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) that the Canadian Pacific Railway have neither initiated nor advocated either this line or the last one. The promoters are British Columbians; they have pressed their claims on the British Columbia Government, and that Government has agreed to guarantee the interest on the bonds. The Provincial Government made strong representations to the Dominion Government to aid this particular line. This line will tap a rich agricultural district, a district that suffered severely by the late floods—I do not give that as an excuse for granting this subsidy—and one of the richest agricultural portions of the whole country. The settlers are some distance from the river, and during two or three months they are shut out from the outside world altogether, so far as marketing their farm produce is concerned. The settlement will number from 2,000 to 3,000 souls. They produce large crops, which are shipped to the coast, and only by this railway can they have all year round communication with the coast.

Mr. McMULLEN. During how many months of the year is the river closed?

Mr. MARA. During some years, six weeks, and other years three months. This statement applies to steamboat navigation; but the river, so far as canoe navigation is concerned, is closed only from one month to six weeks.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then this is a Bill directly in competition with the sailing craft on the Fraser, which river is not closed more than two months a year?

Mr. MARA. I did not say that. I said that the railway would run some distance from the river. As that part of the country has been overflowed to such an extent recently, hon. gentlemen can imagine the difficulty of building a road so that farmers may be able to haul their produce.

Mr. McMULLEN. The distance cannot be far from the river, because the territory is not very wide there—it is only twelve miles distant from New Westminster to Vancouver.

Mr. MARA. The hon. gentleman is altogether wrong in his geography. The road will run in an entirely different direction.

Mr. McMULLEN. Where?

Mr. MARA. In the valley of the Chilliwack, and between the river and the international boundary.

To the Nicola Valley Railway Company, for 28 miles of their railway, from the western end of the section of their road subsidized by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, towards Nicola Lake, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $89,600.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this another road running through one of the best districts?

Mr. MARA. It is not on the Fraser, but in the interior, and in what is called the bunch grass country. It will run from Spence's Bridge, a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the Nicola Valley. This also is a proposal advocated by the Government of British Columbia. That province has agreed to guarantee the bonds, at a rate, I think, of 4 per cent. The original Act was for $24,000 a mile, but the Act was amended last year. This subsidy will not go to the promoters of the road, but is to be paid into the Treasury of British Columbia. The Provincial Government has already entered into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway to operate the line for twenty-five years, paying over 40 per cent of the gross earnings, which will be hypothecated to the Government and form a sinking fund out of which the Provincial Government hope to recoup themselves. When the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is willing to enter into an agreement to lease a road for twenty-five years, this House may fairly consider that some business will be done there, and when the British Columbia Government is willing to enter into such an agreement whereby 40 per cent of the gross earnings will be set aside to recoup them, we may also conclude that the Government has confidence in the railway.

Mr. MULLOCK. If that is the bargain it should form one of the terms of contract.

Mr. MARA.

Mr. McMULLEN. Very important information has been given by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara), to the effect that the interest on certain bonds had been guaranteed by the Provincial Government. There should be a clause in the contract providing that the subsidy is given subject to the British Columbia Government agreeing to guarantee the interest on the bonds.

Mr. DALY. That is a condition that is made by the British Columbia Government with the company.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have the right to put it in this grant.

Mr. DALY. Why is the hon. gentleman and his friends so persistent in their opposition to railway grants in British Columbia? British Columbia pays nearly $1,250,000 a year into the treasury through customs duties, and is entitled to consideration at the hands of this House. Every single one of these railways is to develop portions of that country, the same as lines of railway through the other provinces. We would be doing an injustice to the people of British Columbia if we did not subsidize these lines of railway for the benefit of that country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be all correct provided enormous sums of money had not been already spent in British Columbia.

Mr. DALY. British Columbia does not consist altogether of the mile-belt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know, but enormous burdens have been placed on the people of this country by these railway grants. I have no grudge against British Columbia or any other portion of this Dominion. My objection has been to this most mischievous system of aiding local roads. An unjust interpretation of the British North America Act brought us into the position of being entitled to give state aid to local roads. That is what I regard simply as an atrocious fraud on the plain meaning of the British North America Act. I do not object to any grants being made to British Columbia per se as British Columbia. I object just as much to a similar grant in Ontario and Quebec as I do in British Columbia. But there are special reasons, owing to the extreme sparseness of the population, which makes it objectionable and difficult and dangerous to go on granting in this country of enormous distances, subsidies of land and money to every little railway on the ground that it is advisable to assist a few hundred families here or a few hundred families there. Where you can show that a large number of people are benefited, bad as the system may be, there is some excuse for it. But when you inflict large burdens on the tax-payers for the benefit of a very small number of people, and when you remember that the older portions of Canada have substantially provided $7,000,000 a year out of their resources for the benefit of these outlying portions of the Dominion, surely we are justified in saying that it is time to call a halt.

Mr. MARA. Surely the hon. gentleman will admit that the danger is minimized when the Provincial Government is willing to guarantee the bonds, and when the Canadian Pacific Railway agrees to lease and operate the line and pay over to the company which is to hypothecate to the Provincial Government 40 per cent of its gross earnings.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no doubt that that is important information, and I am glad to get it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has the Provincial Government entered into a covenant with the railway companies for this ?

Mr. MARA. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why is it not stated in the resolution ?

Mr. MARA. Because we have nothing in the world to do with it.

Mr. SEMPLE. There is no province receiving so much injustice as Ontario in this subsidy business. In looking over this list of subsidies, I find that they amount to $4,662,360, and of this sum Ontario receives a very small portion. Two instances were pointed out where subsidies were granted that province to competing lines, and which were not needed, and Ontario has to pay fully half the amount of all the subsidies granted. This voting away of millions is done very quickly at present, but in the present state of the country there is good reason why the Government should cease making such large grants. In spite of our protest, the Government are determined to carry out this pernicious system, and so long as they occupy the Treasury benches it is in vain to ask them to cease voting such large sums of money to subsidize railways. So long as the present Government is in power they will increase the expenditure in the future as they have done in the past. The ratepayers in the country are continually burdened by them, and we can expect no relief until a change of Government takes place.

To the Nakusp and Slocan Railway Company, for 38 miles of their railway, from the town of Nakusp to a point at or near the Forks at the Carpenter Creek, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $121,600.

Mr. HAGGART. This is for the purpose of building a railway which is, I think, nearly built, between Arrow Lake and the celebrated mines in the Kootenay district at Slocan. It goes from Arrow Lake into the Slocan district, where these mines are situated. It is intended eventually to go down the Slocan River, and to connect with the railway that runs to Nelson.

Mr. McMULLEN. What company is operating the line now in construction ?

Mr. MARA. The line is not being constructed yet. It is graded, and rails are laid probably half-way. It would have been much further advanced had it not been for the recent floods.

Mr. McMULLEN. What road does it connect with ?

Mr. MARA. It is a line connecting the mineral sections of Kootenay with the waterways connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the fall of 1891, rich argentiferous galena, which is believed to be the richest mineral body on the North American continent, was discovered in that section. Although it was only discovered in 1891, over $1,000,000 have been expended in opening up and developing the claims, and many of these claims are now ready to ship ore, and will ship as soon as this line of railway is completed. This is another line of railway that is bonused and guaranteed by the province of British Columbia.

Mr. McMULLEN. The principle on which we grant bonuses to these lines has always been that they were for the general advantage of Canada, and that they connected with the main lines of the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. This line connects with none of the great railway systems, and is purely a provincial line. But I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite have the power to grant bonuses to anything, whether it is for the advantage of Canada or not.

Mr. HAGGART. This road was built for the purpose of getting to one of the richest mining countries in the world. The Americans have built a railway to Nelson, eighteen miles into our territory, for the purpose of diverting the trade of that section of the country, and to utilize the richness of it for the people of the United States. The policy of the Government was at first to assist a railway from Revelstoke to Arrow Lake, but they struck a magnificent waterway which takes them down to Nakusp.

Mr. LAURIER. They use the water-stretches there ?

Mr. HAGGART. We are following the example that was set us long ago in this particular instance by the hon. gentleman and his friends when they were in power.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that the hon. gentleman has made it a road for the general advantage of the Dominion.

Mr. MARA. On that point I may state that there is no line that has been bonused by the Dominion Government that is more for the general advantage of Canada than this one. It will obtain for Canada a large and valuable trade that would have been lost to us if this line of railway were not constructed. The line is situated midway between the Arrow Lakes and the Kootenay Lakes ; and it was a question whether Canada or the State of Washington would get the trade of that country. Realizing its importance, the Dominion Government have aided this more than other lines on condition that it should be completed within twelve months.

To the Pontiac and Kingston Railway Company, for 22 miles of a railway, from Portage du Fort to Upper Thorne Centre, via Shawville, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $70,400.

Mr. McMULLEN. What position is this company in ?

Mr. HAGGART. This is for the purpose of making connection between the thriving little town of Portage du Fort and Shawville on the line of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. What county is this in ?

Mr. HAGGART. The county of Pontiac.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the population of this important town which the hon. gentleman proposes to grant this amount of money to make connection with ?

Mr. BRYSON. I may say that this road will accommodate about 8,000 people. The village of Portage du Fort is south of the present line ten miles, and the village of Upper Thorne Centre north-east of it about twelve miles, and this line will give both villages connection with the Pontiac Railway. This whole section of country has been settled about forty years ; it is a thriving part of the county ; and, in the circumstances in which the county is at present, I think it only fair that that district should be considered. This is a portion of the line contemplated to run to the Désert, and it is in an air line with the Gatineau Valley Railway.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the meaning of the word "Kingston ?"

Mr. BRYSON. Our charter gives us power to go to Renfrew, where we propose to connect with the Ontario system of railways.

Mr. McMULLEN. I presume that this will give the hon. gentleman a claim for re-election in his county. At the time of the last election, I believe that county had a very heavy debt, which it anticipated getting rid of by the election of the hon. gentleman. His predecessor was not a friend at court, and had not influence to aid the county in getting out of debt. Now the hon. gentleman will have a fresh argument. He will say : "Gentlemen, if we cannot relieve you of past indebtedness, we will give you a fresh grant."

Mr. BRYSON. I will answer the hon. gentleman in one word. This section has been chartered for some time, it had a local subsidy prior to the last election, and in no way can it affect the election.

For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway, between Norton and Sussex stations, towards Havelock, 20 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

Mr. LAURIER. This requires some explanation.

Mr. HAGGART. The object of this road is to give this new section of country railway facilities. The length of the road from the Intercolonial Railway to Havelock on the Petitcodiac is about thirty-four miles. It is proposed to aid in building the first section.

Mr. LAURIER. To whom is the subsidy to be paid ? Is there a company incorporated ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Studholm and Havelock Railway Company.

Mr. LAURIER. Is that company to have the subsidy ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, if they are able to build it.

Mr. LAURIER. Do you expect anybody else to be able to build it ?

Mr. FOSTER. If they are not able to build it, I expect somebody else will.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the nature of this country ?

Mr. FOSTER. Entirely an agricultural country. This is for the farmers.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there any railway through that section now ?

Mr. FOSTER. None where this railway runs. It will be a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. McMULLEN. More likely a sucker. There have been very few feeders to the Intercolonial Railway. For ten miles on each side of any railway the country is supposed to have accommodation. If you asked for this subsidy for a portion of a road extending beyond ten miles, and it were a section of country fairly entitled to it, there might be some reason for it. But this road will compete with the Intercolonial Railway for traffic for one-half its length at least. I would like to know what county this is in.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the hon. gentleman the information ; but I wish first to point out the difficulty of avoiding the unhappy condition which he deplures. If you build a road from far out, and make it join another railway like the Intercolonial, you must perforce have a junction with that railway ; consequently some portion will be within ten miles of it. You cannot have a junction without building to the road. The hon. gentleman wants to know what county this runs through. It runs through the good county of King's, in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the hon. gentleman will see that in building a road twenty miles long as a tributary to another, he is scarcely accommodating any population that is not already accommodated by the existing road. There would be some justification for tributary roads if they were long and extended through the country at a very considerable distance. If this road were one hundred miles long, there might be a good deal in its favour.

Mr. FOSTER. It is quite possible to make the road longer. If we had brought down a request for a hundred miles, the argument then would be against the great expense.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If there was no population to be accommodated by the road, that would be a greater outrage even than the proposition of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. But happily this runs through a section which is well populated.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). A section of country which is within accessible distance of a line of railway. If the hon. gentleman were to build roads for the accommodation of all parties at a greater distance than ten miles from a railway, he would require railways equal in value to the entire capital of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. The principle that a country ten miles on each side of a railway has sufficient accommodation, has been recognized by the Ontario Government in granting subsidies. In no case have they granted bonuses for lines that came within ten miles of existing railways. But under the system of the hon. gentleman, for the first ten miles this line comes in direct competition with a road owned by this country, on which the people are paying $2,000,000 annually, and which is not now earning running expenses—a road which has been a burden on the people from its construction up to the present. On the same principle, the hon. gentleman might claim that we should duplicate lines all over the country. But it all depends on whether the county interested is represented by a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite. I suppose this will be an additional lever to be used on behalf of the worthy gentleman who represents that county. Mr. Baird, I believe, represents it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister represents it.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is a man with a beard represents it unquestionably, and I suppose this will be an additional argument to be used in that county on behalf of the hon. Minister in that connection.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not use it as a lever.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman will require to use powerful arguments. It was by the skin of his teeth he got in at the last election, and no doubt this will be of powerful assistance to him in the next.

For a railway from St. John's to Barneville, a distance of 10 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $32,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this road a continuation of an existing road, or is it only ten miles altogether?

Mr. FOSTER. The whole distance is twenty-two miles.

To the Great Northern Railway Company, for thirty miles from its junction with the Lower Laurentian Railway near St. Tite, in the vicinity of the River St. Maurice westward, in lieu of the subsidies granted to the Maskinongé and Nipissing Railway Company by the Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 5, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. This is an entire change of programme. The grant was, in the first instance, when these resolutions were brought down, for a railway to connect the Canadian Pacific Railway with the parish of St. Michel des Saints, which is an important centre. Instead of going into the interior, it is proposed to connect with a different enterprise, i.e., the Lake St. John Railway. It will not open a county for colonization, but run through parishes now populated and of great importance. What has brought that change of policy?

Mr. HAGGART. This is for the purpose of connecting with the St. John Railway, which runs to Lake St. John. A portion of that line runs in a westerly direction, and the object is to make a junction eventually with Carillon, on the Ottawa River.

Mr. LAURIER. That is very eventual.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the grand object, and eventually to connect with Georgian Bay.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has asked Parliament for a certain appropriation. Now he makes a change of a radical character. He ought to tell us what are the reasons that have led him to make such a change.

Mr. OUMET. The reason is that the company that got this subsidy has abandoned this project and has not applied for a renewal of the subsidy. Actually that subsidy has lapsed and does not belong to that company. Under these circumstances it is only fair that the subsidy should not be charged to the province.

Mr. LAURIER. Charged to the province?

Mr. OUMET. That is, to the reasonable share of the province of Quebec in the distribution of these subsidies. If the company should resume operations I should say then it would be a question for the Government to consider whether they have fair expectations that the road will be built, and if so, I do not see why they should not be given another subsidy.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to add that the position is that the Maskinongé and Nipissing Railway Company have merged into the Great Northern Railway Company. The Maskinongé and Nipissing road has a subsidy for thirty miles, but after amalgamation of the two companies, so far as the Maskinongé and Nipissing is concerned that subsidy was transferred to the Northern Railway Company, and the Great Northern is now asking the Government for the ratification of this transfer of the subsidy.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. It is about three days since the Government brought down these resolutions, and I do not think that anything has happened to justify the change proposed to-day. The information that the hon. gentleman has spoken of was in possession of the Government when the resolutions were brought down. I do not dispute that it is right that this subsidy should be given to the Great Northern Railway Company; but it seems strange that in three days such a change should be made in the policy of the Government.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the following be added as section 5:

5. Resolved, That the subsidy to the Great Northern Railway Company granted by the Act 56 Victoria chapter 2, for 15 miles from Montcalm to the Canadian Pacific Railway which shall be paid as follows:—On the completion of the 18 miles from New Glasgow to Montcalm and of 2 miles out of the 15 miles from Montcalm to the Canadian Pacific Railway, an instalment proportionate to the value of the 10 miles out of the total mileage subsidized by the Act 56 Victoria, chapter 2, to be established as aforesaid, and the balance of the said subsidy on the completion of the remaining 13 miles of the said Railway.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I should like to inquire if this does not cover a bridge over L'Assomption River?

Mr. HAGGART. It is all they ask to enable them to get a subsidy for twenty miles. If they completed three miles on the second subsidy this year they would not get the money until they had completed ten miles. This is to enable them to get the money for twenty miles of the road.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I would like to inquire if there is not a bridge to be built on L'Assomption River to connect the two sections of the road, and if it is intended that they should have the subsidy notwithstanding that the bridge has not been built?

Mr. HAGGART. No; the road must be a completed one, and if a bridge is necessary to the completion of it they will not be paid the subsidy until the bridge is built.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this motion is carried, I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the Government, for the satisfaction of a great many members on both sides of the House, if he is prepared to state on what day he expects Parliament to be prorogued.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I expect to be able to intimate to His Excellency that business will be ready for the prorogation of Parliament on Saturday afternoon.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 5.50 o'clock, p.m.

THURSDAY, 19th July, 1894.

Evening Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that, at its next sitting, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:

1. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment of a bounty of two dollars per ton on all pig iron made in Canada from Canadian ore, a bounty of two dollars per ton on all iron puddled bars made in Canada from Canadian pig iron manufactured from Canadian ore, and a bounty of two dollars per ton on all steel billets manufactured in Canada from pig iron (made in Canada from Canadian ore) and such other ingredients as are necessary and usual in the manufacture of such steel billets, the proportion of such ingredients to be regulated by order of the Governor in Council.

2. That it is expedient to provide that in the case of the products of furnaces now in operation the said bounties shall be applicable only to such products manufactured therein between the 27th day of March, 1894, and the 26th day of March, 1899, both days included, and that in the case of the products of any furnace which commences operations hereafter, but prior to the 27th day of March, 1899, the said bounties shall be applicable to such products manufactured therein during a period of five years from the date of commencing operations.

Motion agreed to.

AMALGAMATION OF MONTREAL BATTALIONS.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to correct a statement which appears in the Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto papers. In the Toronto 'Mail' of this day, I find the following item :

Lt.-Col. Burland, of the 6th Fusiliers, and Lt.-Col. Butler, of the Prince of Wales Rifles, deny the statement made by the Minister of Militia in Parliament that the proposal for the amalgamation of the two regiments originated from them, and not from Major General Herbert.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is out of order. He cannot read every newspaper article commenting on the debates or proceedings of the House.

Mr. PATTERSON (Huron). I wish to correct the statement by quoting from the 'Hansard.' What I did say, as it is reported in the unrevised edition of 'Hansard' for Tuesday, 17th July instant, is as follows :—

As regards some of the statements made by my hon. friend from North Victoria respecting the amalgamation of certain battalions in Montreal, I really do not see why that should come up here. Nothing has been done in that regard. I may say that if the volunteer officers misled Major General Herbert as to their views and wishes, and then changed their minds, they could not expect the General to change his. The officers in command of the two battalions in Montreal consented to the amalgamation, and Major General Herbert recommended that amalgamation to me, but I refused to carry it out, because, after full consideration, I did not think it in the interest of the force, or of the battalion in question. I did not wish to see a historic battalion like the Prince of Wales' wiped out, and its name forgotten, by an amalgamation with another corps.

There is a wide difference between consenting and proposing.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the order for third reading of Bill (No. 168) be discharged, and that the House again resolve itself into committee for the purpose of adding a resolution respecting the Saskatchewan and Western Railway.

Motion agreed to, Order discharged, resolution considered in committee, reported, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Resolutions adopted in Committee, at the first sitting of the House, this day, respecting the granting of subsidies in money to certain railway companies, and towards the construction of railways, were read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. HAGGART moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

House resolved itself into committee to consider resolutions respecting the granting of subsidies in money to a certain railway company, and for the construction of a railway.

(In the Committee.)

To the Montford Colonization Railway Company, for 12 miles of their railway from the end of the 21 miles already subsidized westward to a point on the Rouge River, in the county of Argenteuil, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a renewal. Has anything been done on that railway ?

Mr. HAGGART. This is a colonization railway. It starts from a junction on the Montreal and Western Railway, and runs in a north-easterly direction towards the Desert. The first twelve miles are constructed, and nine miles are under construction. This resolution is to aid the construction of a further twelve miles, making thirty-three miles in all.

For a railway from a point on the Caraquez railway, at or near Pokemouche siding, towards Tracadie village, 12 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have we not paid enough for the Caraquez Railway, and got little enough, in all conscience, without giving $38,400 more, after the $200,000 or $250,000 that have already gone into this work ? What is the present income of the Caraquez Railway ?

Mr. HAGGART. You will find it stated on page 464 of my report for 1894. The mileage is sixty-eight miles ; the amount received for passenger traffic is $5,210.36 ; for freight traffic, $12,913.30 ; and for the mails and express freight, $1,946 making the total gross earnings, $20,069. The expenditure is, maintenance of the line, buildings, &c., $7,336 ; working and repairs of engines, $6,750 ; working and repairs of cars, $761 ; general operating expenses, $7,247 ; a total of $22,095 ; a loss of about $2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a very pretty illustration of the way the money of the country has been wasted. That railway cost us from $200,000 to a quarter of a million, and it now appears that the total receipts are about $300 per mile, and, after wasting that $200,000, which was used in such a fashion in floating bonds on the London market as greatly to discredit the credit of Canada and the Government thereof, we are asked to vote $38,400 more. I do not think a more unreasonable proposal was ever submitted to any Parliament, and on this assuredly I think we shall have to take the sense of the House. The hon. gentleman has not so far advanced any reason whatever for granting this sum, good, bad, or indifferent. Possibly he may have some reasons, but they would require to be extremely strong ones in my opinion to justify adding one cent to the expenditure already incurred on this railway. I cannot conceive a more utterly useless and profligate waste of public money than the expenditure in building this same Caraquet Railway. It stands condemned on the very face of it. It is now ten years since the money was given, the road has been some years in operation, and you have these pitiful results. If I am not mistaken, a very large sum of money, in the shape of bonds, was floated in England for this railway. Can the Minister inform us what the bonded indebtedness of the Caraquet Railway is, and whether any interest has been paid on these bonds, and if so, when?

Mr. HAGGART. I believe that no interest has been paid on the bonds within a couple of years.

Mr. MULOCK. There has been no interest paid on the bonds since the beginning, except the interest taken out of the principal money.

Mr. HAGGART. They paid the interest, I believe, for a while.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister should not state that; I have no doubt he has been misinformed. That road has been a notorious defaulter since the commencement, and if the Minister implies that it has ever earned a single cent of interest on the bonds, he is entirely in error.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not say it had ever earned any interest on the bonds. The information I have received from my deputy is to the effect that the interest had been paid on the bonds, but I think it was taken out of the capital, or the money the bonds sold for. The interest has been paid for three or four years.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know what the hon. gentleman's source of information is; but even the statement he has made shows that the company has never earned any interest on the bonds. Ministers must not take shelter behind their deputies to make statements which give erroneous impressions. There may have been some stoppage of the principal money in the process of construction, but the railway company defaulted as soon as the principal money ran out. The bond-holders had a meeting in England and passed a resolution to the effect that inasmuch as the Dominion Parliament had led them into this transaction by bonusing the railway, they considered that they had a claim against the Government to have the road taken off their hands. It was a notorious defaulter from the beginning, and it never earned from the commencement until this day enough to pay working expenses. If you look at the returns—I have seen them laid on the Table many a time—they show figures like these: earnings, perhaps $18,000; disbursements to earn that money, $26,000 or $28,000. With the exception of the return laid on the Table now, I do not think the receipts have ever been within as close a distance as $2,000 of the outlay. That being the case, these figures prove that we have given a very large sum of money to build this line of railway; we have induced English people to pour in capital to this enterprise, and to lose it, and to that extent this country is discredited. In addition to all that, the whole enterprise is a failure, for the Minister has told us that the gross receipts per mile per passenger are about 25 cents a day. Did you ever hear anything more ridiculous than that? Does it not prove that there is no demand for the railway there? The railway has been in operation for a period of about seven years, and even to-day there is not traffic enough to give the road 25 cents per day per mile passenger fare. And yet, with that ridiculous result, we find the Government asking for more money for the road. I remember well the case which Sir Charles Tupper presented to the House when he first asked us to vote money for the Caraquet Railway. He told us that there was an enormous wealth of fisheries on the Baie de Chaleurs, and that if we would only connect this wealth with the Intercolonial Railway, the people of the Maritime Provinces would send up their fish for food to the western people, and the western people would send the products of their industry down to the Maritime Provinces, and there would spring up a great inter-provincial trade between the people of Baie de Chaleurs and the west. That was the picture he presented to the House, and after eight years of active operation of that railway, the result is that it earns 25 cents per day per mile railway fare. The report of the Minister as to the earnings of the road reminds me of the prospectus the company gave to the world shortly after the line was built. It was necessary to send a report to the English bond-holders to satisfy them as to how lovely everything was, and the prospectus stated that the road was in operation, and that the traffic had increased and exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the promoters, and exceeded the capacity of the rolling stock. That last statement was literally correct, because the rolling stock consisted at the time of one or two old passenger cars, a few box cars and wheezy old asthmatic engine, that had been discarded by the Intercolonial Railway, and when during a portion of that period, that the traffic exceeded the capacity of the road, was lying on its side in the ditch, near one of the broken-down bridges. That is the enterprise the people of this country are asked to pour more money into.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Baie de Chaleurs Railway has been discussed a good many times in this House, and I do not propose to renew the discussion here to-night. The proposition before the House now is for twelve miles of road from a point on that railway towards Caraque village. If the arguments used by the gentlemen who have spoken against this vote are true, they are strongly in favour of the resolution. The point to be reached by this twelve miles of railway will be the central point of four of the most populous parishes in that section of the country, and it may account for the meagreness of the traffic, both in freight and passengers that that important point has not been hitherto reached. It is to reach that point and to accomplish the object originally in view that it is proposed to build the twelve miles covered by this subsidy. The wisdom of the project has been proved by the Provincial Government of New Brunswick—a Liberal Government, an economical Government, and one necessarily economical on account of the small resources at their command—subsidizing this same twelve miles, knowing better than we do, generally speaking, that the railway is one deserving of a subsidy. The effect of the construction of that twelve miles will be to add very largely to the receipts of the road, and to the traffic generally, as it will touch one of the most populous districts of the whole section.

Mr. MULOCK. What additional population can be brought in to be contributory to this road?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Six or eight thousand in the district.

Mr. McMULLEN. What town of six or eight thousand population is there there?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not say there was any town of six or eight thousand population. I suppose the hon. gentleman will admit that if a railway touches a central point in a certain district, that it will attract the traffic of that district for several miles around. I said that this line would approach a point that would be central to four of the largest parishes there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is Tracadie village the place where the unfortunate leper settlement is established?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is towards that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that included in the population the hon. gentleman refers to?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The population there is not very great, some twenty-five or twenty-seven lepers. It does not enter into the consideration of granting the subsidy at all, and I do not know why the hon. gentleman makes allusion to it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The whole business may be described as leprous in a high degree, particularly in its effect upon the credit of this country. I want to call the serious attention of the House and of the Government, to the fact that for many years no one circumstance has occurred which has been more commented upon in railway circles in England, than the utter collapse of this Caraque Railway, and the fact that the bond-holders in England are aware that they have been swindled—I use that word advisedly. The greatest misrepresentations were made to them of the value of the prospects, and of the earnings of the line, and the result has been that four or five hundred thousand dollars have been abstracted from the pockets of certain unfortunate Englishmen, and have gone into the pockets of certain persons who appear to have been selected as specially deserving of reward, in consideration, I suppose, of having helped to pillage these Englishmen. This matter has been brought before the House, if I am not mistaken, more than once, and it does appear to be more disreputable every time it has been examined. However, I want to call the special attention of the House to the fact that our credit in England has been very seriously affected by the results of this Caraque Railway and by the fact that in recommending the road to the House, former Ministers spoke of it in a way which has been entirely contradicted by the result. I find at present that on this road of sixty-eight miles, we get such results as these: Total manufactured goods conveyed in the course of the year, 500 tons; all other articles are put down at 1,500 tons, with the exception of lumber, of which about 5,000,000 feet were drawn. Of live stock, I find that sixty head were conveyed during the year, besides 5,000 bushels of grain, and 5,500 barrels of flour. Whether any fish were conveyed or not, the records do not state. Here you have a road in which nearly a quarter of a million of public money has been spent, producing absolutely no result. Why, half a dozen wagons, in the course of a year, would draw more than this sixty-eight miles of railway contrives to draw, if they were properly handled. Yet, in the teeth of those facts, the hon. gentleman advises the House to fling $40,000 more after the $200,000 of our money already sunk, for no better purpose than to enable certain promoters to unload their bonds on the English market and put an enormous percentage of the money into their individual pockets.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the item passes, I wish to correct a statement which the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) seems to think I made. He led the House to believe that I said that the interest on the bonds was paid out of the earnings of the road. I did not wish to convey any such impression. The bonds were sold, and a certain amount of the product was retained by the parties purchasing the bonds, in order to pay the interest for a number of years. After that amount was expended, there has been no interest paid either from earnings or anything else

Mr. MULOCK. So that it never earned a dollar of interest.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Caraquet Railway has done more to damage the credit of Canada and the prospects of any company floating their bonds in the English market than any other scheme set on foot in this Dominion. Its record has been a disgraceful one. The capitalists of England were virtually robbed out of their honest money, and by granting a bonus to another branch of that road, we will be virtually condoning the iniquity this company was guilty of, and are asking investors to invest again in another scheme of this kind. If the hon. gentleman wanted to have a bonus granted to any road in the hope that its promoters might thereby be enabled to borrow the money to build it, he certainly should not have coupled that road with the Caraquet Railway, for certainly the fact of being associated with the Caraquet Railway will be no credit to any scheme for the purpose of borrowing money either in England or Canada. In place of the Caraquet Railway, the road would be better named the Wild-cat railway, for such it has been proved to be. The way in which that line was started, by taking the money subscribed for stock and paying that out as interest on the bonds in order to give the company standing in the English market and make the bonds saleable, was unquestionably a course of proceeding which we should not countenance. But now, by virtually granting a bonus to a branch of this road, we are virtually declaring that the conduct they pursued was, after all, justifiable. I do not know very much about some of the schemes which the hon. gentleman proposes to subsidize, but if any of them have such a record as the Caraquet Company, there is very little hope of their being able to borrow money to build the line, and the only redeeming feature about this grant is that the record of the Caraquet Railway will completely preclude the possibility of the money being raised in the English market in connection with it.

Mr. LAURIER. It is more important in this than in any other case that we should know to whom this subsidy is to be made payable. Is it to be made payable to the Caraquet Railway Company, whose name stinks in the nostrils of the bond-holders?

Mr. HAGGART. No doubt it will be, if the Caraquet Railway Company enter into a contract to build the branch.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it possible the hon. gentleman says seriously that this money is to be given to the Caraquet Railway Company? He knows that that company is bankrupt, that it is not able to meet its own liabilities, and are we to expect that such a company, which is in default of its bonds, will be able to build a mile of this branch line.

Mr. HAGGART. The branch may be of assistance to it, and make it more profitable. If the principle the hon. gentleman lays down, that every railway company which is in default with regard to some of its bonds, is not to be subsidized, there are very few railways in the country which are not in default with respect to some class of their bonds.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no railway, I am glad to say, whose record smells as badly as that of this company. It is impossible for this company to obtain a cent of money in any market on its bonds. It is impossible that any decent business men would have anything to do with it, and to grant a subsidy under the circumstances is simply an insult to common sense.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Under those circumstances, no money will be paid them. They have obtained twice as much as we give them in order to obtain the subsidy.

Mr. MULOCK. What other resources have the company to build the road?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know of any. If the hon. gentleman will look back to the debate on that subject, he will find that, in reply to the Hon. Mr. Blake, I went fully into the whole question. The question has been debated again and again. These accusations were made against this railway company, and the whole history of the transaction was gone into. The bond-holders sold their bonds, and the actual money that the company got out of the bonds was very little over 20 per cent—I am speaking simply from memory—and the fact that the whole amount that went into the road precluded the possibility of their being any foundation for the charge then made and disproved by myself of any fraud having been committed on any person with respect to the bonds or of any money being made out of them. The probabilities were that the promoters of the scheme honestly put into the road the proceeds of the bonds and all other money they got in the shape of subsidies, either from the Local or Federal Governments. There would not be a tittle of evidence to sustain the charge that any frauds had been perpetrated by parties building the road.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is well, sometimes, to remember some of the statements made when this Caraquet railway was under construction.

Mr. HAGGART. What was the date ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am going to give the hon. gentleman extracts from the speech recommending this road for a subsidy by the Minister of Railways of that day, Sir Charles Tupper. The hon. gentleman was good enough to declare that :

The railway will, in the future, at all events, be of incalculable benefit to the Dominion at large.

We are now seeing the value of Sir Charles Tupper's statements on that point. He proceeds :

But, sir, the scheme is not put forward on that ground alone ; it is put forward, perhaps with even greater force on other grounds, and that is the immense trade the road would develop and would tend to build up, not only in that particular locality, but over the Dominion as a whole. By the construction of that road an enormous trade would be given to the Intercolonial Railway : as a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway it is not second in importance to any other road, and because it is a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway, I assume that my hon. friend opposite can have no objection to it. As I understand him, he is in favour of any road that will feed the Intercolonial Railway.

So are we all, Sir, if it is a feeder and not a sucker, as my hon. friend behind me (Mr. McMullen) interpolated a little while ago.

To give an idea of the amount of trade done along that road, and of the population interested in it, I may inform the House that between the point where it is proposed to connect the Intercolonial Railway and the terminus of the Caraquet or Shippegan, a distance of forty-five miles, there is a population of 18,000 souls. The whole country from end to end of the proposed road, is settled. The value of the products of that section of the country during the past year amounted to some $1,000,000, made up as follows : lumber, $300,000 ; fish, comprising canned goods, codfish, salmon, herring, mackerel and oysters, $500,000 ; grindstones, $50,000—

I am afraid that we are the subjects of the grindstone's operation in this case.

—farm produce, $150,000. There are a number of other industries which would contribute to give the road a large trade, and all of which would find its way to the Intercolonial Railway. To the west this road will be a great benefit, in as much as it will afford the people an opportunity, which is now denied them, of getting their fish in a fresh condition, and they will have a larger market for their products, as well as the east a larger market for theirs.

I may remark for the information of the hon. gentleman that I am availing myself of the summary of the history of the Caraquet Railway made by gentlemen for whom gentlemen opposite now express the greatest respect, Mr. Edward Blake, who devoted considerable attention to making a statement of the case. I find that a very considerable amount of vituperation appears to have been indulged in at Mr. Blake's expense for having opposed this road. Later on in Mr.

Blake's statement there is a description of the way in which this road appears to have been run, and it reads as follows :—

They have two pretty old looking second-hand locomotives, one cheap second-class passenger car, two freight cars, and ten or twelve flat cars. This fall they bought a snow plough. There is a station house at the junction worth about $700, one at Burns' Mill, Bathurst, one at Clifton, one at Grande Anse, one at Burns' Mills, Caraquet—now called Burnsville—and one here at the village of Caraquet. The average cost of these would not exceed $350 each. You will have a better idea of the cost of rolling stock and rails than I. I heard the company's engineer state, at a dinner given by the president, that the subsidies would be sufficient to build and equip the road. He had then about completed his survey and based his estimate upon it.

The same correspondent says :

I think Burns—

I presume that is the illustrious owner of the road, now a Senator of the Dominion—

—I think Burns procured his rails by hypothecating the first mortgage bonds of the company to the full amount of issue authorized by the company's charter. A small portion of them only have been actually sold. This would leave Burns his two subsidies to grade and equip his road, and I am quite convinced that he would not have more than from $2,000 to $2,500 to good out of these subsidies, but he would most certainly have that much of a margin. It is a well known fact that Burns was in pecuniary straits at the time he went into the railroad, and he is now in good standing. I am satisfied ——— is right as to Burns being the company and owning the whole undertaking, and that not a dollar of private moneys has been put into the enterprise by any here connected with it.

Then, here, Sir, is a specimen of the way in which the English bond-holders appear to have been induced to go into this operation. Here is the prospectus of the road, and it is worth while that we should understand how statements such as I have read made by a responsible Minister of Railways are utilized for the purpose of inducing unfortunate English investors to risk their money in utterly rotten schemes :

The Governments of the Dominion of Canada and the province of New Brunswick have given a joint guarantee to the Caraquet Railway Company of £1,280 per mile, amounting in all to a free grant of £76,800, being more than one-fourth of the cost of construction. As security for the payment of the interest on the whole amount of the bonds for three years, viz., up to the 1st July, 1889, inclusive, a sufficient sum has been set aside and will be deposited with the Imperial Bank in the names of the trustees. The Caraquet Railway is a branch from the Canadian Government's main line, connecting with the Intercolonial at Bathurst, and thus with the Canadian Pacific and the whole of the Canadian railroad system. It runs from the Bathurst Junction to Shippegan Harbour, the eastern extremity of the province of New Brunswick, establishing a through communication right across British North America from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard. The line has been built in the most substantial manner by contract, at a cost of £290,000, under Government supervision. Already over forty miles are in operation, and the remaining twenty miles being far advanced towards completion, will, it is expected, be finished and opened by September. The location of the Caraqueet Railway is eminently favourable for the earning of steady revenue.

I believe its revenue, in point of fact, has remained very steady; it began with zero and it has remained at zero ever since.

The amount of mortgage bonds authorized by Act of Parliament is limited to £100,000 and represent a charge of only $1,700 per mile upon a railway costing $4,883 per mile.

Well, Sir, I share Mr. Blake's doubt whether £1,500 per mile were really spent on that road.

The ordinary share capital of the company is $950,000 (or £190,000), the whole of which has been allotted in Canada.

I believe it was, and it was allotted to one hon. gentleman who used to be with us, and has now gone higher up.

The mortgage bonds take priority before the share capital.

Well, I suppose they would——both as to principal and interest, and are further secured by a mortgage under a trust deed of the value of the railway, rolling stock and other assets of the company, besides the uncalled capital, namely, by mortgage of sixty miles of railway, whereof, forty miles are in operation, having been completed and equipped at a cost of £4,833 per mile, or equal to £193,320; by twenty miles of railway in course of construction, under contract, for, say, £96,660; by uncalled capital of the company, £44,460, making a total of £334,440, or more than thrice the amount of the entire issue of bonds authorized; thus affording security of the highest class. The amount required out of the revenue to pay the interest upon the whole of the bonds is only $100 per mile annually.

That would be about £7,000 sterling, the total income of the road, I think, was about £4,000; and £100 per mile, no doubt, seemed to English ears as an insignificant sum on any railway moderately decently located through any country which had any powers of developing a railway traffic.

A carefully prepared estimate based on the traffic already existing shows that a revenue of at least £200 per mile may be expected. Since the opening of the line now in operation the earnings have been highly satisfactory. Mr. K. F. Burns, M.P., the president and general manager, reports: "Thus far the receipts from both passenger and freight have exceeded the company's most sanguine expectations." And, indeed, he adds: "Since regular daily trains commenced running the carrying capacity of the line has been taxed to the utmost, with every likelihood of continually increasing business. The working expenses and cost of maintenance will be exceptionally low owing to the absence of steep grades, sharp curves and heavy bridges."

Now, Sir, those are the kind of statements on which Englishmen were induced to put their capital into such enterprises: those are the kind of prospectuses which were issued by gentlemen formerly members of this House, and now members of the Dominion Senate; and we have got before us in the Minister's traffic returns, the proof of how utterly worthless all those statements were, whether in the prospectus, or whether in the statement of the Minister who recommended them; and yet, with the knowledge of all these facts, the Government come down and propose to us to grant for this worse than bankrupt concern, $38,400, together with the $200,000 we have already flung away.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we should have some explanation from the Minister of Railways before we grant a subsidy to a link or a line of the disreputable character and record that this road has got. We should have some assurance that it is now working its way out of the mire and disgrace it had dropped into, and that there is some hope of its being placed on something like a decent footing. The statements made by the former Minister of Railways unquestionably must have largely influenced the English capitalists to put their money into that scheme. The Minister of Railways, perhaps, had not an opportunity personally of examining the whole track; he may have had to rely to some extent upon the information received. If he did, he has been sadly deceived. This kind of statement being uttered by the Minister of Railways, must have given a status to this scheme that secured for it a large amount of money in the English market. Now, while we, as a country, are not directly responsible to those men who have taken those bonds, in point of honour we have got to share a certain amount of responsibility, and in granting a further aid for the construction of a branch line to a road with such a disgraceful record, we are virtually condoning the whole scheme, and saying to the English bond-holders that we have no sympathy with them, that if they got fooled, they deserved it, and we are positively injuring every other railway scheme for which people may hereafter attempt to get money in the English market. We admit that the railway system in Canada is not complete; we earnestly hope that there are many sections which will yet be developed by new railway enterprises that will tend to fill up the country and develop it, if they are built honestly and when wanted. But if we have got to face the record of this railway when we are trying to float other schemes, we shall find our credit seriously injured in the English market. I hope that the Minister of Railways will seriously consider this whole grant before he renews an expression of confidence in a scheme so utterly rotten from start to finish as this whole scheme has been. Now, at the end of ten years, with that disgraceful history before us, the Government propose to revive the whole thing by granting another bonus in order to build a branch to this line. I hope the Minister of Railways, before he asks us to pass this item, will offer some sound reason why this House should again besmear its record by granting a bonus to this abominably rotten scheme, that is a disgrace to this House and a disgrace to the country.

Mr. HAGGART. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I will give a statement from Mr. Burns himself, made at the time this railway was discussed in the House. I had all the figures at the time, and I gave such information to the House as convinced it that the charges made in regard to fraud on this railway were totally unfounded. I will read from the reply of Mr. Burns, and the House will be able to judge how much has been taken by the parties who are charged with benefiting from the grant of money made for the purpose of building this seventy miles of road. He goes into a long statement, shows the amount he received from the Local Government, shows the amount he received from the Dominion Government, shows the amount he realized in cash for the bonds; and the total amount that he received was a little over $8,500 per mile. He states:

It is constructed as well, if not considerably better, than any local line in New Brunswick. The Caraque line of railway from beginning to end is the best local line in New Brunswick.

This gentleman promoted this railway in the interest of his constituents, for the purpose of giving them communication with the market, and the road, no doubt, is of greater benefit to that section of country than the amount of traffic on the road represents. He, like all other gentlemen interested in railways in their own constituencies was very anxious to have a local road for the benefit of his constituents, he was anxious to show them that he was doing something for them. He succeeded, at a great sacrifice, I have not the slightest doubt, instead of receiving a single penny of benefit. At a great sacrifice to his private means, and at a great expenditure of time, he managed, by his industry, to get seventy miles of that road constructed. If his statement was correct, and I think it is correct, he built the whole road, built the stations on it, and put the rolling stock, such as it is, on the road, for a sum of a little over $8,500 per mile, and that in a very difficult country. The hon. gentleman may make his statement in every section of the country, but the facts and figures show that the allegations against that gentleman bore upon their face their inaccuracy, and it was impossible that any gentleman—and I remember the gentleman in question made a similar statement in the House, which bore the impress of truth on the face of it—could have made one cent out of the undertaking, and in fact he stated himself that he was out of pocket a large amount.

Mr. MULOCK. In my criticism I did not wish it to be assumed that I was making any charge that there had been a misappropriation of money. I did not assume it, I did not state it, I did not suppose it. I am perfectly satisfied to accept the statement of the Minister of Railways. My criticism was directed to the fact that the expenditure was an unwise one as a financial investment, and was apparently not in the interests of the country, as the receipts from the traffic show. Inasmuch as this proceeding has resulted in bringing disgrace to the country in a financial way, I think it is due to the House that it should have some guarantee in regard to this proposed grant. The Minister will remember that the bond-holders of the road, no matter how they acquired their bonds, and I suppose they had a good title to them, called a meeting in London, Eng., and they passed a resolution, which was published in the financial journals of England, and also in the Canadian press, to the effect that they had been induced to embark their capital in this road principally because the Dominion Government and local authorities had invested public moneys in the enterprise, and the investing public of England considered that to be the very best guarantee that it was an enterprise legitimate in its character and likely to be of public service, and they cast the responsibility for having been drawn into that enterprise by the Dominion Government. They passed a resolution that the Dominion Government should take these bonds off their hands, and relieve them from the position into which they had been drawn owing to the action of this Government. I am sure the Minister of Railways will give me credit for accurately describing the attitude of the bond-holders. If that is the case, it is reasonable now for the House to learn whether a sounder financial basis exists in this case, so that there will be no danger of repeating this unfortunate experience. I am not wishing to say anything against the promoters. There may be very much in what the Minister of Railways has said, and I am willing to concede that hon. members desiring to show their activity on behalf of their constituents, sometimes involve themselves in financial schemes of such a character and to involve in the end great loss. This may be a case of that kind. Knowing nothing of that section of the country, I assume it was so. But we should have some guarantee given before we are asked to repeat that undertaking.

Mr. HAGGART. After the debate in the House on Mr. Blake's motion, the bondholders sent out to this country two of their number to make an investigation. Their report was published in full in the Canadian 'Gazette' in London—I am sorry I have not had time to look it up—and it completely exonerated Mr. Burns, the man against whom these charges were made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When was that report made?

Mr. HAGGART. The debate in the House took place in 1880; that investigation must have been made in 1891. The full report was published in the Canadian 'Gazette.'

Mr. MULOCK. Assuming it was all right, and I am quite prepared to assume it was so, does not the Minister think that before entering upon a scheme of like character, Parliament should receive assurances that the company has some financial backing, that there is some way by which this subsidy will be made effective without resorting to exploiting. The Ontario Legislature requires to be satisfied as to the financial standing of a company before it gives aid.

Mr. HAGGART. The course pursued here is to first pass a subsidy vote through this House. There are certain appropriations made for railway construction. It is the duty of the Railway Department to obtain from those companies evidence as to their financial status. Upon the report of the department, Council acts, and if it approves the report, it authorizes the Minister of Railways to enter into a contract. These are the precautions taken.

Mr. MULOCK. The House should be satisfied before granting public money that the enterprise is in every respect a sound one and there is reasonable prospect of the subsidy being availed of; in other words, that the whole scheme does not depend on the public grant. The hon. gentleman proposes that the whole matter should be left with him, but that is government by Order in Council, not government by the people.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not examined that report made by the shareholders. It may be what the hon. gentleman said, or it may not. I am dealing more particularly with the promise made to us when this road was originally started and with the results attained. But I have this to add, that within the last few years I have seen again and again in financial journals in England of very high standing, despite this report, most disagreeable references to the Canadian Parliament, the High Commissioner, over the Caraqueet Railway, and to Mr. Burns. The matter is often alluded to and is severely condemned. Whether the report whitewashed him or not, I do not know.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. HAGGART.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—DRAWBACKS.

Bill (No. 166) to provide for the allowance of drawback on certain articles, manufactured in Canada, for use in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was carried in committee and reported.

SUPPLY—CANADIAN TOBACCO.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) Before this motion is adopted, I wish to say a word or two on a question of the utmost interest to our farmers—I mean the tobacco-growing industry. This industry constitutes one of the most important branches of the farming interests in the province of Quebec. Even in Ontario tobacco is grown. It is quite a paying industry. It may yield a farmer a net revenue of $100 an acre. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that a certain number of people entertain prejudices against tobacco of native growth; they think it is inferior in quality to that imported from warmer climates. Still, it is within our recollection that in May last, at New York, a certain quantity of tobacco was seized by the Customs authorities. This tobacco, called Sumatra, which sold for $2.50 a pound, was merely Canadian tobacco. We do not want the Government to alter the Excise duties; we simply want a duty of 5 cents a pound to be laid upon imported tobacco, equivalent to a discriminating duty in favour of our Canadian tobacco. Our contention is that this increase of duty would not enhance the price of tobacco. At any rate, a duty of 5 cents a pound would hardly be felt by those who buy and smoke imported tobacco. With an additional duty of 5 cents a pound, the price of Canadian tobacco would, I think, be enhanced, and would sell about 4 cents higher. But even if this increase should be only of 3 cents a pound, it would still be very beneficial to our tobacco-growers. In order the better to understand, Mr. Speaker, how important that industry is, and the interest we should attach to its protection, allow me to give you a few figures that speak for themselves. In 1881, the production of tobacco for the province of Quebec alone amounted to 2,356,581 pounds. In the other provinces the production reached only 171,381 pounds. For the whole Dominion, the total production was 2,527,962 pounds. Now, let us see what development that culture took during the following decade. If we take the figures for 1891, ten years later, we will find that, without any direct or important encouragement being received from the Government, the production has been quite large. The figures in connection with this item are the following:—For the province of Quebec, the production of tobacco for 1891 was 3,958,737 pounds of tobacco. For all the other provinces the production was only 319,199 pounds: while for the whole Dominion, the production was 4,277,936 pounds, or an increase of a million and a half pounds for the whole decade. From the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1893, page 392, it appears that the quantity of foreign tobacco imported into Canada was 14,340,741 pounds. The tobacco thus imported was either imported directly for consumption or for use in manufactures by cigar-makers. Out of these fourteen million pounds of imported tobacco, 13,072,691 have been manufactured, showing a value of $1,717,495. Should the Government, as suggested, impose a Customs duty of 5 cents a pound on imported leaf tobacco, such increase, while not materially affecting the price of that article, would tend to encourage the growing of Canadian tobacco, and to give a new stimulus to that industry, so as to make it more remunerative than it has been so far. There is still another consideration which should commend itself to the Finance Minister, and it is this: The Government are complaining that the revenue is falling off. Well, let them adopt our views and impose this additional duty of 5 cents a pound on imported tobacco, and that increase of duty will yield them $750,000 a year. It is a suggestion that should weigh with the Minister, I think. I know that whenever it is proposed to introduce a new industry, sceptics are to be found as to the success which may attend it. So with Canadian tobacco, which, it is alleged, will never be of a superior quality. If that tobacco yields now a reasonable profit to the farmer, when sold at 5 or 8 cents a pound, undoubtedly, if it could sell at 10 or 12 cents a pound, that would be an incentive to the farmer to improve its growth. That would enable him to establish large drying-sheds, and the tobacco being better prepared, that would enhance its market value. I may further add that some superior brands of this tobacco of native growth sell at from 50 to 75 cents a pound, this increase in value being secured by the special care bestowed by the farmer on the cultivation of these brands. Were Canadian tobacco protected so as to make its market value 8 or 10 cents a pound, the producer would take more trouble in raising it; the quality would be improved, and a large sale would thereby be secured. It is well known that grain-growing is no longer a paying affair, and that some new system of farming must be resorted to. Tobacco-growing, on the other hand, yields at the same time a fair profit and a large produce. It was as late as in 1860, if I remember aright, that the cheese and dairying industries were mentioned for the first time. A Montreal merchant, who is now gone over to the great majority, was seeking parliamentary honours in Montreal Centre. At a public meeting he stated that he was running in the Conservative interest and that he wished to talk to them about a new industry which was going to regenerate and redeem farming in the province of Quebec—the cheese industry. What reception did he get from the electors? He was styled the “cheese candidate,” and he was never returned to Parliament. In 1872, at the election in Montreal East, the cheese question again cropped up before the electors. It was agreed then that, as far as the province of Quebec was concerned, farmers should turn their attention to the dairying industries, that it was essentially connected with the future prosperity of the farming community; so much the more so as the raising of breadstuffs was no longer a paying business, and that the North-west wheat production would glut the market so as to make it impossible for the Quebec farmers to raise a sufficient revenue to compensate the expenditure incurred in raising wheat. The province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories raise more wheat now by acre than is raised in ten arpents in the province of Quebec. I do not think I am making an exaggerated statement: but I know of farmers in the county of L’Assomption, in the parish of Mascouche, who did not raise two bushels of wheat to one sown. I stated at the outset, when speaking about the dairying industry, that final success was disbelieved at the time, at least to the large extent now realized. At the elections of 1872 mention was also made of that industry, but, unfortunately, the Liberal party did not believe in the success of that industry. The electors were told not to place any confidence in the predictions as to the future of this industry; they were told it was mere clap-trap to catch electoral votes, and that the promises held out to the electors would never materialize. Ten years later, in 1882, when the Hon. Mr. Chapleau, then Premier of the province of Quebec, tackled the same question and laid down as one of the chief planks of his political platform a substantial encouragement to be given to the dairying industries of the province, his opponents again cried out that it was mere humbug, and that this industry was doomed to failure. It was all clap-trap, they said, directed to catch, under false pretenses, the confidence of the electorate. But what has since happened has fully justified those who believed that the dairying industry would develop into a source of wealth to the farming community. Now the success of that industry is a well-established fact, and it is admittedly one of the best-paying industries. The high standard reached by the dairying industry is admitted on all sides, especially since the Columbian World’s Fair, where our exhibits have won such distinction. What was the state of this industry about thirty years ago? In 1860, our production in that line was 124,320 pounds of cheese, estimated at $13,675. In 1893, our production was 133,946,365 pounds, estimated at $13,407,470; or, to put it in a different light, we have as many million dollars in 1893 as we had thousands in 1860.

If tobacco growing received the same material encouragement as it bestowed upon the dairying industry, the same results would be reached. In 1860, when the question of the dairying industry was first brought before public notice, and means were devised to make it a valuable source of wealth for our farming community, the promoters of the enterprise were ridiculed, laughed at, bantered. Still, a number of persons persevered in their attempt, and finally saw their exertions crowned with success. The Conservative party then passed a law creating a school of dairying industry, and success on all the line has been reached. That industry is admittedly linked with the fortune of the province of Quebec and of the whole Dominion. Should the cultivation of tobacco receive the same degree of encouragement at the hands of the Government, the same splendid results would be reached. The present Government is a protective Government; they have pledged themselves to protect, and they do really protect the farming community. The fact is, that all the changes the tariff has been made to undergo this year were favourable to the farming community. It is true, as has often been said before, that the farming class stand in need of protection. The yield of our farm lands is not large, and the expenses run high. Since the Government have pledged themselves to a protective policy, I believe it to be their duty to protect those industries which require fostering. I simply want them to earnestly give their attention to the means best calculated to promote the progress of the tobacco-growing industry, and, in my opinion, the suggestion I now offer is the one best calculated to reach that end. I bring these remarks to a close, for at this late hour of the night, and at this stage of the session, it would be out of place to insist at any further length, when all need a well-deserved rest. I hope I said enough to fully convince the Government. The session is drawing to a close, and I do not expect the Government to initiate any step in that direction this year; but I offer the suggestion now in order to enable the Government to bring, at the next session, some measure calculated to promote and encourage tobacco-growing. Should they be willing to indorse the views I have given expression to, they will have done a great deal in the way of protecting our farming community, especially in the province of Quebec. I do not wish the Government to alter their excise duties. Those duties, to my mind, are perhaps too low; still, I do not advocate any change in that direction. All I ask for, is, that, without altering the excise duties, the Government should impose a duty of 5 cents a pound upon imported tobacco. There is not the least doubt, Mr. Speaker, that with such a duty a satisfactory result would be reached. We import from twelve to fifteen million pounds of tobacco; and this small duty will not prevent one single pound of tobacco from being imported into the country. Manufacturers will manage matters, and raise perhaps a little the market price of their tobacco. Smokers will hardly notice the change, as they will probably make a mixture in order to realize the same profits. By means of this small duty of 5 cents a pound, the Government would realize a revenue of $750,000, without a single cent of extra charges; for that change would not involve any increase in the staff of customs officers. The staff is large enough for all purposes without this small change necessitating an increase in their number. I hope the Government will take into their serious consideration the suggestion offered, and that they will, after properly examining into the matter, take the necessary means to foster and encourage the cultivation of Canadian tobacco. The better this industry will pay, the better the produce raised will prove. Some brands of native-grown tobacco already sell from fifty cents to one dollar a pound. Make the growth of tobacco a paying affair, and you will thereby secure a magnificent growth. Let me add a last word before closing my remarks. It will perhaps be a matter of surprise for the hon. gentleman to learn that Canada is the only country into which tobacco is introduced free of duty. In Austria-Hungary, for instance, there is a duty of $4.49 per hundred pounds laid on tobacco. In Germany, the duty is $9.24 per hundred pounds. In Belgium, it is $5.75; in Denmark, $4. In the United States, a country to which our hon. friends opposite turn with admiration as a model country, the duty ranges from $35 to $275 per hundred pounds.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) What are the excise duties?

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) I do not know. In France the private importation of tobacco is prohibited, for there is a state monopoly on tobacco. In Great Britain, the duty ranges from $77 to $85 per hundred pounds. In Italy the importation of tobacco is prohibited. In Greece, a duty of $41.43 per hundred pounds is laid on tobacco. In Holland, the duty is $12.72 per hundred pounds. In Norway, it is $21.32 per hundred pounds. In Russia, the duty is $26.38 per hundred pounds. And in Canada there is no duty at all. How is that accounted for. The Government have it in their power to bring about a change in that state of things, and I think it is their duty to do so. Whenever we address our electors we tell them that we are working in this House in their interests. We should give them a proof that we are really and earnestly working in their interests, and the best proof we can give them is by protecting the farming industry. With a protective policy, farmers, instead of realizing $100 an acre by raising tobacco, will make $130 or $140. With such a protection, their production might be doubled and so also their profits. The Government will thereby secure a yearly revenue of $750,000 from that source alone, which is by no means a despicable sum in the present state of the Treasury. This additional income will help them materially to subsidize public undertakings, and as they have not yet disbursed a single farthing for my constituency, I may reasonably hope that out of this increase of revenue I may come in for a small share.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The subject to which the hon. gentleman draws the attention of the House is one that has been before the Department of Inland Revenue for some years. Briefly, it is to change the mode of taxation on tobacco from the present system of excise duties to that of a customs duty on the raw leaf.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. No; it is not that. Leave the excise duty as it is, but put a customs duty of 5 cents per pound on the raw leaf of imported tobacco.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I never heard of that before, and there is not a document in the Inland Revenue Department that contains such a proposition. I have before me a return, asked by some hon. gentlemen, of all the papers connected with this subject, and I intend to bring it down to-morrow. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Jeannotte) knows that Mr. J. M. Fortier, of Montreal, has been pushing this matter for some years. His proposal is to put a pretty high duty on the raw leaf, and so change our whole mode of taxing tobacco. He would tax the raw leaf at the customs port, and instead of allowing it in free, he proposed that it should go to a bonded warehouse, and then be taken to one of the bonded warehouses of the department, and after it is made into tobacco or cigars, then tax it in accordance with the present mode of taxation. I may say to the hon. gentleman briefly, that the Quebec farmer who grows tobacco has a protection of 400 per cent. The hon. gentleman will not deny that. There is a tax of 5 cents per pound on the manufactured article out of the Canadian leaf, and 25 per cent on tobacco made from the foreign leaf. If under that protection you cannot succeed, for the life of me I fail to understand how you are going to succeed if we put a slight tax of 5 cents per pound at the customs port, as the hon. gentleman proposes. I do not suppose, if I talked for an hour, that I could say more than that. I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman will attempt to make the rest of Canada smoke lower Canadian tobacco. Mr. Fortier himself admits that if his own proposition of 35 cents per pound were imposed on the foreign leaf, as protection to the native grown tobacco, that it would be some years before the farmers of Lower Canada could grow enough tobacco to supply the needs of the country. All the manufacturers of tobacco in this country—and I have their petitions here—state that they do not want that. The hon. gentleman stands alone in favour of what he now proposes; that is, a tax of 5 cents per pound, and it is the first proposition of that kind I have ever heard. I may say that the whole matter is the subject of consideration in my department, and between this and next session I will give it my best attention. If I can improve the condition of the growers of tobacco in Lower Canada, believe me it will give me great pleasure to do so.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. That is all I want.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR BOUNTY.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not rise in my seat to address the House at any great length, nor to deal extensively, as I have done in a previous speech, with the question of a protective policy as regards the beet-root sugar industry in Canada. I simply wish to remind the Government that, in the month of April last, a deputation, headed by the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec (the Hon. Mr. Beaubien), including at least fifteen members of this House and the Controller of Customs, waited upon the hon. Finance Minister, with a view to lay the matter before him and ask him that the bounty of 2 cents per pound which is still in force, be continued during ten years. The object we had in view was to secure a sufficient protection for this industry, so as to enable the farmers to improve the growth of beet-root, and so develop saccharine richness in the beet raised. The deputation pointed out to the Minister that, after the lapse of ten years, the bounty might be dispensed with, as the industry, once started, could stand on its own bottom. The hon. Minister replied that he would ponder the reasons given in support of our request, which, to his mind, were of the utmost gravity, and that he would give his answer within a short time. We stand at the eve of the prorogation of Parliament, and the Government have not yet put on the notice paper any resolution to the effect of continuing during ten years the grant of the bounty now in force, as applied for. The bonus now in force will expire on the 1st of July next, and therefore will only apply to the crop of this year; and were it not renewed, the Berthier factory will have to close down. The future of that industry, one of the most promising, not only from the standpoint of the farming community of the province of Quebec, but the whole Dominion, would be irretrievably ruined. The figures laid before the Finance Minister and his colleagues show that the cost of production and of manufacture of beet-root sugar is higher than its market value. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary that a bounty should be granted, for, without it, the beet-root sugar factories will have to suspend operations. I hope the hon. Ministers who are now in their seats—I regret that the Finance Minister is not in his seat—will be able to give us the assurance to-morrow that a resolution shall be introduced to the effect of continuing the bounty which has been granted for several years past with such beneficial results. I understand that the beet-root cultivation has assumed, this year, a considerable development, owing to the fact that the Berthier factory is now under the control of men who enjoy public confidence. I may add that the yield of the farm lands under beet-root cultivation is most abundant, and that, as this culture yields fair profits, it is assuming considerable development. Last year the production of beet-root was not over a thousand tons; this year it will reach twenty-five or thirty thousand tons; and so, the Berthier factory will be kept going for the three months during which it may manufacture beet-root into sugar. The amount of the yearly imports of sugar into Canada is over two hundred and twenty-six million pounds. That figure is equivalent to the production of thirty-five factories having the same manufacturing power as the Berthier factory; and capable of supplying work to thousands of workmen and farmers. It seems to me that agriculture, which bears the burden of public taxation, should come in for a share of the encouragement so lavishly extended to other industries, which, though far less deserving of encouragement than this one, have nevertheless succeeded in enlisting the sympathies of the Government.

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) The Government fully appreciate the importance of the beet-root sugar industry just referred to by the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil); and, I may say that, for my part, I have exerted myself to bring out before my colleagues to the best of my ability the necessity for the Government to encourage this industry which, I am sorry to say, has not apparently struck root in any other province beside that of Quebec. In the province of Ontario, I think, the farmers who had gone into this industry, have given up making experiments in that direction. The trouble is that, so far this industry has not been quite as successful as might have been expected. I think the cost of production has been more considerable than it should have been, owing to several causes which the hon. member is more conversant with than I am, seeing that he has taken an interest in the matter from the very start of the industry in the country. Instead of making headway, the beet-root industry has been going backwards. Only the other day, a statement was handed down to me showing the bounty paid for the last three years. The bounty paid the first year was twenty thousand dollars, whilst last year it was only from six to seven thousand dollars. That evidences the fact that this industry has remained stationary. I am quite sorry for it, because if there is one industry that ought to be implanted in the province of Quebec, the sugar beet industry is the very one. For it requires a considerable hand-labour, and our large Canadian families could supply this hand-labour to better advantage than elsewhere. If this industry has not been as successful as expected or wished for, the reason is to be found in the lack of capital on the part of the manufacturers, and in a lack of experience as well, on the part of our farmers who had undertaken to supply the raw material, or the beet-root out of the three factories established in the province, the Berthier factory is the only one in actual operation. It is a matter of satisfaction to me to see that the Berthier factory is in the hands of a company at the head of which are to be found men whose skill and energy have been put to the test in several industrial concerns, which they have successfully managed. I say without hesitation that with the required capital and the energy which distinguishes these gentlemen, they will succeed in overcoming all difficulties, with the help of the natural advantages this industry offers. For my part, I heartily wish, and I do hope that it may succeed. I do wish they may succeed in establishing this industry on a sound basis, not only for their own sake, but for the sake of the country as well; as their success would be the most convincing proof for our farmers that this industry is highly beneficial to them. It is a melancholy feature in the history of this industry, that the results so far reached should not have come up to our expectations; and, as just stated, the lack of capital on the part of the promoters of this industry, has largely contributed to the failure. Farmers who have engaged in the production of the sugar beet always had some ground of complaint in connection with it. They were not paid as they should have been for supplying the factories with beet. I have some experience in that line, as, in my county, I had to interfere in order to have certain claims settled. The consequence was that a large number of farmers gave up beet-growing, and I am afraid it will be no easy task to prevail upon them to retrace their steps. Now that Messrs. Lefebvre are at the head of the Berthier sugary, I think these difficulties will altogether disappear. As to the request of the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil). I may say that the bonus still holds good for this year; therefore, the absence of action on the part of the Government, during this session, cannot interfere with the operations of this factory, at least for this year. Should the company's success correspond to their wishes, no better means could be devised of convincing the Government that this industry may thrive and prosper. Its success would prove very beneficial to the farming community. I have no hesitation in saying that, should our experiments prove a success in the province of Quebec, Ontario will follow in our footsteps, and the Government will find themselves under the most agreeable necessity of continuing the protection they have hitherto granted to this industry. I had the honour of making a similar statement, this very day, to the Messrs. Lefebvre, in conveying to their knowledge the Government decision in the matter. The result of the operations of the present year will influence greatly the future of this industry. From a study of the facts and of the advantages resulting from the growth of the beet-root, the Government will, I trust, come to the conclusion of acquiescing to the wishes of the citizens of the Quebec province, who so far stand alone in prosecuting the establishment of that industry in Canada. Next year, should the state of the Treasury permit so, the Government will find themselves in a better position to renew the grant for the future.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker. I wish to say a few words on the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has not a right to speak a second time.

Mr. JEANNOTTE. That was on the tobacco question.

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The question is on the motion that I do now leave the Chair.

CANADIAN TOBACCO.

Mr. DUGAS. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker. I have listened with pleasure to the remarks fallen from the hon. member for l'Assomption, in connection with the encouragement which the Government should give the tobacco-growing industry, specially in the province of Quebec. It is a most agreeable duty that devolves upon me of supporting his demand. I am also of opinion that were the Government to make imported leaf pay a duty of five cents a pound, the growth of Canadian tobacco would thereby be greatly encouraged. In the county which I have the honour to represent in this House, tobacco is grown on a large scale. In the parish of St. Jacques l'Achigan, last year the yield reached an aggregate of 800,000 pounds. With a protective duty of 5 cents a pound, the producer would be enabled to put up large drying-sheds for the dressing of tobacco. If the quality of Canadian tobacco is not all that could be desired, it is owing to the absence of proper care in the cultivation of the weed. Tobacco selling at a very low price on the market, the farmer finds no incentive to incur the expenses involved in the putting up of the necessary buildings. As the hon. member for l'Assomption has given all the statistical information relating to the matter, I may dispense with going over the same ground. I trust the Government will accede to our request.

Mr. GIROUARD (Two Mountains.) (Translation.) I will only say a few words in addition to what has been said by the hon. member for l'Assomption (Mr. Jeannotte), and by the hon. member for Montcalm (Mr. Dugas), about the Canadian tobacco-growing industry. I can speak of it with a thorough knowledge of the matter, and I may first say that the culture of Canadian tobacco is carried on on a large scale in the province of Quebec. This House might, perhaps, be led to think that farmers do not go into the cultivation of tobacco very extensively. But it is quite the reverse, as the production of the tobacco-growing industry represents several millions of pounds in the province of Quebec alone. The tobacco grown in our province is, generally speaking, superior in quality, as evidenced by the experiment made by cigarmakers. The experiment made shows conclusively that cigars manufactured out of the Canadian leaf often bring as high a price on the market as cigars manufactured out of tobacco grown in the United States or in Havana. The fact is that our tobacco-growing industry should receive a larger measure of encouragement. Such a policy would be beneficial to the farming community, not only of the province of Quebec, but of the other provinces as well, for the latter would find in such a protective policy an incentive to engage in the cultivation of tobacco on a larger scale, with considerable profit to themselves. Therefore, I hope the Government will see their way to give substantial encouragement to the growth of Canadian tobacco, and thereby promote the general interests of the country.

SUIT AGAINST THE MESSRS. CONNOLLY.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, the House has not forgotten, I am sure, that when the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was presented to this House in 1891, the concluding portion of that report recommended that proceedings should be instituted against the parties who had defrauded the country to the extent of more than half a million dollars, and in the month of April following a suit was entered in the Court of Exchequer for the recovery of that sum, amounting to $570,064.51. That suit is still pending. The public generally are quite familiar if not with the suit itself, at all events with the names of the parties; and the public have been generally under the impression up to the present moment, and may perhaps be still under the same impression, that the suit was instituted upon the recommendation of this House, which in 1891 approved of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. But, Sir, the public are under a misapprehension in regard to that suit. It was not instituted in obedience to the mandate of this House; but, strange to say, it was instituted in pursuance of a contract entered into by the Department of Public Works with the firm of contractors composed of M. K. and N. Connolly, on the 26th of January, 1892. It is between the following parties :

Between Nicholas K. Connolly, of the city of Quebec, in the province of Quebec, and Michael Connolly, of the city of Kingston, in the province of Ontario, contractors of the first part ; and Her Majesty the Queen, represented by the Minister of Public Works, for the Dominion of Canada, of the second part.

And it recites :

Whereas Her Majesty the Queen, claims that there are due and owing to Her Majesty, by the parties of the first part, jointly with Owen E. Murphy, Patrick Larkin and Robert H. McGreevy, divers sums of money arising out of a certain contract for the construction of the graving dock at Esquimaux, in the province of British Columbia.

And whereas the Quebec Harbour Commissioners allege that they have certain claims against the said parties of the first part and the said Owen E. Murphy, Patrick Larkin and Robert McGreevy, arising out of a contract relating to the Quebec Harbour improvements and the Lévis graving dock, and Her Majesty has undertaken to procure an assignment of the said claims from the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and to assume any liabilities towards the parties of the first part and the said Owen E. Murphy, Patrick Larkin and Robert H. McGreevy of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, arising out of any of the said contracts.

And whereas Her Majesty the Queen has requested that the parties hereto, of the first part, do give security for the due payment of any liability which may be found to exist from the parties of the first part and the said Owen E. Murphy, Patrick Larkin and Robert H. McGreevy or from any one or more of them under the proceedings hereinafter mentioned.

Sir, this is a strange transaction, to say the least of it. Here were parties, acknowledged on all sides, proved before this House to have defrauded the country, to have deceived in more than one particular the Department of Public Works; here were parties against whom this House had ordered proceedings, not only of a civil nature, but even of a criminal nature ; and before those proceedings are entered into, the Government of Canada enters into a compact with these very parties, and what is the object of that contract ? The object of it is that those parties, who were ordered to be prosecuted, may give security to the Crown for the payment of liabilities which they were alleged to owe to the Crown. This, I say, is a most extraordinary contract. I do not believe that any thing has ever taken place where two parties in the relation of creditor and debtor go into court, and the alleged debtor agrees to give security in advance for the due payment of the judgment to be rendered against him. So it appears that the impression was strangely erroneous that this suit was instituted to vindicate the honour of the country or to obtain the just rights of the people of this country. It was a friendly suit entered into between the Quebec Government and the Canadian Government and Messrs. N. K. and M. Connolly. The Government had a claim against the contractors ; the Quebec Harbour Commissioners had a claim also ; and for my part I do not see that there was any difference between the claim of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners and the claim of the Government, because the money that was to come out of the contract with the Quebec Harbour Commissioners had been supplied to them by votes of this Parliament. Yet the Government undertook to have a transfer of the claim of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners—not a very good claim at best—and undertook at the same time to discharge towards the Messrs. Connolly, the liabilities, whatever they might be, of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. Therefore, the agreement goes on :

And whereas the said Nicholas K. Connolly and Michael Connolly do not admit that there is any sum due by them and the said Owen E. Murphy, Patrick Larkin and Robert H. McGreevy, or any of them, to Her Majesty the Queen or to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, but on the contrary contend that there are divers large sums of money due to them in respect of the said contract both by Her Majesty and by the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, and it has been agreed between the parties hereto that certain proceedings shall be taken in the Exchequer Court of Canada by Her Majesty the Queen against the parties of the first part.

It is also stipulated that the parties of the first part, Messrs. N. K. and M. Connolly, shall have the right—there was no necessity for such an agreement——to raise such defence or file such counter claims set-off as they may be advised, both in respect of or their alleged claims against her Majesty and against the claims of the said Harbour Commissioners, so to be assigned to Her Majesty as aforesaid.

Then it is agreed that :

And whereas in the meantime and until the rights and liabilities of the said parties have been determined by the proceedings above mentioned, the said parties of the first part have agreed to give the security requested by Her Majesty above mentioned, and for that purpose have become parties to this agreement and have executed the same.

And they transferred over to the Government the following property :—

The following machinery, plant and material, the property of the parties of the first part, which is at present situated and lying at the city of Kingston, Ontario, that is to say, the dredge 'St. Joseph,' with her tackle, apparel and furniture, all the deck scows and two dump scows used with the said dredge in the construction of the Kingston Graving Dock, one tug, the 'Stormy Petrel,' registering at the port of Quebec, all the steam derricks, engines, boilers, electric machines, in use or heretofore in use in the construction of the said dock.

Then it is stipulated :

It is hereby agreed and distinctly understood between the parties that notwithstanding the assignment and transfer of the machinery, plant and material above mentioned to Her Majesty, the parties of the first part shall have the right to use the said machinery, plant and material on any work they may require them on.

A suit was entered in consequence of this agreement. In the defence put up on the part of N. K. and M. Connolly, far from denying all liability, they pleaded a set-off to the amount of $120,941, the balance which they claimed to be due to them under the contract then in issue before the Court of Exchequer. At the same time, the Messrs. Connolly had a claim against the Government for the work which they had done upon the Kingston graving dock, amounting to the sum of $43,000. Strange to say, although there was a claim of more than $500,000 against them, and though they had reserved in the agreement the right to set off against the claim of the Government all sums they might claim as a set-off, they never brought, as a set-off against the claims of the Government, the amount which they claimed to be due them for the work done on the Kingston graving dock. They might have set off the sum of $160,000; but they reduced that to the sum of $123,000, leaving the other claims altogether ignored in the suit. What was the reason? The reason was that evidently, when this plea was drawn, they had contemplated what took place afterwards, that is to say, that notwithstanding the suit of the Government, notwithstanding the mandate which the House had given the Government to sue them for whatever they owed the Government, the Government had agreed at the time evidently to give to N. K. and M. Connolly the sum which was afterwards paid them in July, 1892. Now, I say it is altogether unprecedented that a creditor, having a law suit against his debtor, should pay to that debtor, before the law suit was decided, a sum of money, even if it were legitimately due. It is something absolutely unnatural that a creditor should pay money to his debtor, which he might retain in part payment of the amount for which he was suing that debtor; yet the Government, at the time they had a claim against Messrs. Connolly for over $500,000, and when that claim was pending before the courts, instead of keeping this money in the Treasury as a set-off, deliberately paid it over to Messrs. Connolly. What justification can there be for that course? We will be told that there was security given to the Government for the payment of any amount which the court might decide was due them. But there is no evidence, so far as my information goes, that the security would be anything like sufficient to cover the claim of the Government against the contractors. But there is more than this question of money in this matter. There is a question of principle, which is of most vital importance. We have before us a firm of contractors who deliberately defrauded the country, according to the judgment passed by the Committee of Privileges and Elections, and ratified by this Parliament, to the amount of over $500,000. There was the mandate of this House to the Government to prosecute these parties, both civilly and criminally, for their divers felonies and misdemeanours. Yet, in the face of this, we find the Government entering into a bargain to have a friendly suit with the parties over this amount. Could any more immoral transaction be imagined? Could anything more subversive of the ends of justice be perpetrated? If that is all the punishment that is to be meted out to these criminals, certainly no criminals will be deterred from similar proceedings in the future. If contractors are to be assured that when they deceive the Government, that when they contract under fictitious names, when they defraud the Government of thousands of dollars, the matter will be amicably settled by agreement, and a friendly suit entered upon, certainly they will be encouraged to continue their evil courses. No excuse can be given for this transaction. It seems to me that the Government have been guilty of far worse than a mere dereliction of duty. What can be the explanation of their conduct? At the time this agreement was made, the 26th of January, 1892, there happened to be an election in the city of Kingston, and it so happened also that the Messrs. Connolly took an active part on behalf of the Government candidate. Now, Sir, I will not characterize this conduct of the Messrs. Connolly under the circumstances. The hon. Minister of Justice has already characterized it, because at a meeting held by him in his own county of Antigonish, last fall, he said that there had been an election in Richelieu County, in which Messrs. Connolly and McGreevy had worked on behalf of the Liberal candidate, and he proceeded to castigate the Liberal party for accepting the support of these gentlemen. I would accept his criticism, if it were based on fact, but the hon. gentleman must be aware by this that he was strangely mistaken and strangely misled his audience, because, shortly after, it was proved to him, under the signature of the very gentleman who had been his own candidate in that county, Mr. Morgan, that far from taking part in behalf of the Liberal candidates, Messrs. Connolly and McGreevy had always supported the party with which they had been allied. Therefore, the hon. gentleman can apply to his own party all the odium he sought to fasten on the Liberal party on that occasion. I beg, therefore, to move the following amendment:—

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"in March, 1889, a contract for the construction of a graving dock at Kingston, Ontario, was entered into by the Government with a contractor tendering as A. C. Bancroft, who, in reality, was a non-existent person, but the name was used to represent the contracting firm of N. K. and M. Connolly, who were accepted by the Government as contractors and who completed the said work.

That on the 8th day of April, 1892, an information was filed in the Exchequer Court on behalf of the Dominion Government making claims against the said N. K. and M. Connolly and others, to recover from them, moneys alleged to have been wrongfully obtained from the Government by the defendants and amounting, as stated in such information, to $570,064.51.

That by a statement of defence filed by the defendants, N. K. and M. Connolly, in answer to such information, on the 7th May, 1892, the said defendants made a counter claim against the Government for the sum of $123,941.85.

That the trial of the said case is still pending and undisposed of.

That it appears by the Auditor General's Report and by the statement of the Minister of Public Works in this House, that the Government did, on the 13th day of July, 1892, pay to the said N. K. and M. Connolly the sum of $43,621.50 in connection with their claim for works done on the Kingston Graving Dock, under the fictitious name of N. C. Bancroft.

That the said payment to the said N. K. and M. Connolly was highly improper under the circumstances herein set forth and is deserving of the censure of this House."

Mr. OUMET. Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman's memory must have failed him, as to the facts in this case. The facts that he has mentioned were all set before this House in 1892, when the whole question was fully ventilated, and a conclusion arrived at by which the department of which I have the honour to be the head was authorized to pay the amount for the payment of which he now wishes to censure the Government. If he refers to the 'Hansard' for 1892, page 2715, he will see that the amount of $51,000 was asked from Parliament under the head of building Kingston graving dock. It was stated then by myself that this sum of $51,000 was asked in order to make provision for the completion of the Kingston graving dock during the next fiscal year, and to pay for the construction of different works, and especially a balance due on final estimate of M. and M. K. Connolly, $43,621.54. A long discussion took place on the subject of this contract. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) brought before the House all the facts which, he contended, had been disclosed during the long inquiry before the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the McGreevy case. The charges were: First, that Messrs. Connolly had attained the contract by filing or producing a tender under a fictitious name, in the name of A. C. Bancroft, and that this procedure had enabled them to get the contract under fraud, and to the detriment of other bona fide tenderers. The further charge was that the contract had been obtained through some false calculations that had been made of a specification by the engineers of the department, that these specifications have been underestimated, and by that process the tender of A. C. Bancroft had been shown to be the lowest, although it was not really so. True enough, Mr. Speaker, as I stated at the time, the specifications had been underestimated, as was proved, when the work was completed. It was shown then that there was a larger amount of work than the specifications showed. But, extending the figures according to the work as completed, it was, however, found that the tender of A. C. Bancroft was still the lowest by several thousand dollars, as compared with the next lowest, and by some $150,000 as compared with the highest tender, which, I think, was the one filed by the firm of which Mr. Gibson, the hon. member for Lincoln, was at the time a partner. I showed, I think, at the time to the satisfaction of this House that the contract was not obtained through fraud, that Bancroft's name was not a fictitious name, but the name of a man employed by the Connollys, under whose name they had filed the second tender. As I said then, I could not come to the conclusion that the contractors had no right to have a second tender filed in the name of another party, provided that this party in whose name he puts in the tender, is disposed to give the required security and to fulfil the contract to its full extent and to the satisfaction of the department. The fact is that the contract was duly carried out, and the work was executed, as shown at the time, in the best possible manner. It is known that the Kingston graving dock is one of the best public works we have in the whole of Canada, and that the Connollys, whatever political misdeeds they may be accused of, have done their work most satisfactorily. After the inquiry in the McGreevy case was completed, proceedings were instituted by the Department of Justice. These proceedings did not mention anything about the Kingston graving dock, and for the very good reason, Mr. Speaker, that the contractors had not received one cent that was not legitimately due them. And, as head of the department, I take the responsibility of stating here that every cent that has been paid to them has been paid for work done, and for work done at reasonable prices and in the best manner possible. After the proceedings were instituted, the Government, through our department, notified Messrs. Connolly that in future they would not receive any money, that the whole amount earned by them would be withheld until the decision in the case instituted against them by the Crown. Sir Frank Smith was then acting Minister of Public Works. The answer by the Connollys was this: that if they received no money, according to their contract, they would be unable to complete the work, and they notified the department that unless they received the amount earned by them according to the Estimates, they would have to abandon the work ; as a consequence, the department would have to ask for new tenders, make a new contract, provide for new plant, and submit to a delay of six months or perhaps a year before the work would be completed. That public work was necessary for navigation, and, in view of these facts, the acting Minister, with the approbation of the Government, came to the conclusion that it was better to let the Connollys complete their contract and pay them accordingly than to allow the work to stand and enter into new litigation. The agreement was arrived at that if they were willing to continue the work, the money would be paid as it became due. This agreement was communicated to the House and fully explained by me, and the House, after the discussion that took place, was convinced that the charges made against the department concerning the Kingston Graving Dock, were wholly unfounded, with the exception—and it will go for what it is worth—of the fact that Messrs. Connolly had used the name of Bancroft, and filed a tender in that name, and afterwards had obtained the contract on the prices mentioned in that tender. It was also proved at the time that the charge of miscalculating the specifications was not founded. I brought the specifications themselves before the House, and I handed them to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), and he satisfied himself that the only error there was in the extension of the specification was not made in favour of Bancroft, but was made in favour of Randolph McDonald. In the extension of the tender of Mr. Randolph McDonald a mistake had been made in his favour, showing conclusively that if there had been a mistake made in the extension of these tenders, it had not been made to benefit the Connollys or Bancroft, but had been made by inadvertence by the engineer in charge of these calculations. It was shown that it was not intended to benefit the Connolly's but it was in favour of another man who did not get the contract, even with that mistake, his tender was not the lowest. Now, these facts were all given to the House then, the House was satisfied, and the hon. member for Lincoln, who was the principal speaker in that debate, and who had, from his profession, the best knowledge of the subject, came to the conclusion that the work had been done cheaply, had been done well, and that the money the Connollys got for this work had been earned by them. Besides, the House came to the conclusion to approve the agreement which, as I have said, was made out by the then acting Minister of Public Works, and of which I, as his successor in office, took full responsibility. The House approved of the agreement made by him, according to which the amounts earned by the Connollys on that contract were to be paid. In addition, the Government took the precaution of exacting from these people an additional security representing, in actual value, more than the amount they were to receive, that is, an amount of about $90,000, consisting in plant of all kinds which was valued by the chief engineer of our department to that amount. I may add that the contract was positive, making it obligatory on the part of the Government to pay the contractors as estimates were given of the work performed. I think that after these explanations, the House will come to the conclusion that the department was fully authorized by the House itself to make the payment that was made in July following, and that the department cannot be censured for having done what it had been authorized to do in paying this legitimate claim of the Connollys for the completion of the Kingston Graving Dock. I am sorry to say that I cannot explain the motion of the hon. gentleman otherwise than by supposing that he must have entirely forgotten the debate that took place on that occasion. If he had not forgotten it, he would not propose a vote of censure on the action of the House, since the House itself had authorized the payment of which he now complains.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is a very peculiar case when we remember the different disclosures that have been made in connection with it from month to month, and year to year, as it has crept along. At first, the Government held up their hands in horror at the evidences of collusion between the Minister of Public Works and the contractor, whereby the country had been done out of a considerable sum of money. They declared they were ready to prosecute to the utmost these people, that they were prepared to pronounce them culprits and thieves for the manner in which they had taken advantage of the Government in the construction of this public work. But while they were presenting to the country evidences of a determination to prosecute to the utmost rigour all these men whom they claimed were guilty, at the same time they were quietly and secretly hand in glove with them, and had entered into an arrangement with them to advance them money, as was proved by the leader of the Opposition to-night. The hon. gentleman now says that they had to advance the money in order to enable them to go on and to complete the work. It is only now made known to the House.

Mr. OUMET. It was made known then and there.

Mr. McMULLEN. There has been an undercurrent of kindness evident between these men and the Government all the time. The punishment to be inflicted on them for crimes of which they were supposed to be guilty was condoned by allowing them to go on for months and months after the Government had declared that fraud had been committed. In the meantime money was advanced, and the Minister carried on the work as a public work. If the plant at Kingston graving dock was good security for any sum found to be due to the country, was it not good security for the completion of the work? Was there any necessity for keeping on a gang of men who had cheated the country? Certain approximate estimates had been made, and on them moneys paid to Connolly & Co. in connection with the graving dock. The Minister of Public Works will not admit that the advances made were in excess of the work performed. Will he say that the plant belonging to the Connolly's was not sufficient security for the completion of the work, if it had not been taken over then.

Mr. OUIMET. What right had the Government to take over their property?

Mr. McMULLEN. It belonged to them, but they had been found unworthy to carry out Government works. The Government had a right to cancel the contract.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not for that reason.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Government could have cancelled the contract, taken over the plant and finished the work. The Government, however, were disposed to treat the Connolly's in the most kindly manner possible; in fact they did so. The whole matter possesses some very peculiar features, and at all events an enormous amount of money was lost to the country.

Mr. OUIMET. Not on that work.

Mr. McMULLEN. It has been lost. The Minister will not deny that money was advanced to them, and that subsequently it was resolved to prosecute them. We know that the prosecution ended in—it looked like a friendly affair all through. The whole evidence taken and the statement made by the leader of the Opposition makes this case appear black for hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the leader of the Opposition did well for the encouragement of his own party to state that this was a case about which no excuse could be given. No excuse need be given, because there is no cause whatever or the slightest foundation for any attack or reproach; and when the facts are examined, they will be found to be as they were explained to the satisfaction of this House two years ago, when they were shown to be not such as would cause censure or attempted censure or reproach against the Minister of Public Works; the House expressly gave him authority to go on and make the payments. So it is perfectly clear, after an examination of the facts in this case, that the hon. gentleman must have forgotten the facts before he undertook to submit a motion to this House respecting this matter. To dispose of a few preliminaries in the first instance, I desire to say this: The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has said that we held up our hands in horror at the evidence that there was collusion in 1891 between the Minister of Public Works and the contractors, by which the country was defrauded of a large sum of money. We did not hold up our hands at anything of the kind, because no evidence of that kind transpired, for evidence to the contrary was most distinct and was placed before the Committee of Privileges and Elections, to such an extent that this House adopted the report declaring that that statement was false in every particular. So much for that attempt to throw insult on an hon. gentleman who is now a private member of this House, and who was then in office as Minister of Public Works. The evidence I allude to is now given a political gloss when it is supposed that perhaps the people have forgotten some of the details. The statement has been also made that there was a quiet and secret arrangement in regard to payments to the Connollys. For that there is not the slightest foundation in fact. The arrangements that were made with the Connollys were open to everybody who chose to inquire, they were published in the press of the day, and at the very next session, about two years ago, the details were submitted to this House. It has also been stated that the Connollys were found unworthy of being trusted, and that, therefore, the Government might have cancelled the contract. The Government had not the slightest right to cancel the contract; but if they had possessed that right the result would have been to enhance very much the expense of completing the dock. It has been stated that payment was made because an election was coming on about that time. I do not know at what date the leader of the Opposition imagines the election was held. The payment was made in July, 1892. The agreement for the payment, as it is called by the leader of the Opposition, but which is simply a chattel mortgage given in pursuance of the arrangement, was made, I think, in May, 1892.

Mr. LAURIER. In January, 1892.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The election took place in the first week of January.

Mr. LAURIER. On 28th January, 1892.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. So far as my information was then, and is now, our cause was not warmly supported in Kingston at that time by the Connollys. And the hon. gentleman is very far wide of the mark when he talks about the Antigonish speech. I there stated that we lost Richelieu because we prosecuted Messrs. Connolly and McGreevy, in pursuance of the mandate of the House—and so we did. The Connollys, Mr. McGreevy and the Richelieu Company were opposed to us in the Richelieu election at that time. The hon. gentleman has said that I knew the reverse because over his signature the Conservative Candidate, Mr. Morgan, had stated that Messrs. Connolly and McGreevy had supported him. I have never seen such a statement made over the signature of Mr. Morgan, but I have seen the report of an interview with Mr. Morgan in which that statement was declared to have been made. I have seen Mr. Morgan, and his assertion was that no such statement ever passed his lips. Those parties, however, supported the Liberal candidate in Richelieu, and we lost Richelieu in consequence. To come now to the question of the chattel mortgage. This investigation took place in 1891, as the House knows. About September the report of the Committee was laid before the House, in which report the Connollys and their associates in the contracts for the construction of the Quebec works and for the construction of a graving dock at Lévis were asserted to have acted fraudulently and in a manner such that the country was considered to have lost a considerable sum of money. The mandate of this House was delivered that they should be prosecuted, and that there should be an attempt to recover the money. Steps were taken to prosecute them; they were prosecuted, they were convicted, and I have nothing to conceal or nothing to be ashamed of with regard to the conduct of that prosecution, or with regard to what subsequently transpired in this matter. But the matter of the criminal prosecution is not touched upon in the resolution of the hon. gentleman, and I shall refrain from discussing it because I know at this hour of the session the House would prefer to have the question dealt with briefly and to the point. The misconduct of the Connollys and their associates was altogether in connection with the execution of the works in Quebec Harbour. They were at that time under contract with us for works at Kingston graving dock, and in connection with the works at Kingston there never has been the slightest reproach against them or against the department with which they contracted, or against the work which they did. At that date there was not the slightest imputation against them nor the slightest suggestion of suspicion, except, as the Minister of Public Works has said, that it was alleged that there was no such man as Bancroft, and that they had got the contract by using Bancroft's name. That turned out not to be a fact. It was investigated by this House, a resolution was moved, and it was proved that they had put in a tender in the name of Bancroft, a tender by which this country not only lost no money, but by the acceptance of which the country saved some thousands of dollars, and when Bancroft was brought forward to sign the contract he came forward and showed that he had made arrangements with the Connollys. They executed that work at Kingston without the slightest reproach, and with great credit to themselves, for the work is a very creditable piece of work and not a very costly one, considering the quality of it.

As soon as the report was adopted by this House that we should recover back the money, we took steps to do so by entering an action in the Exchequer Court of Canada. It was said that this was a friendly suit. It was no more a friendly suit than was the most bitterly conducted suit that was ever carried on in the Exchequer Court. The suit is without parallel in that regard, and it is being prosecuted to-day, and the trial was about to be finished last month in the city of Quebec, when on the application of the defendants' counsel, and in spite of the stout resistance of the counsel for the Crown, its further hearing was postponed until the month of December next. Not one step in that transaction has had a friendly character, or a friendly appearance from beginning to end. Then we were in this position: When they were near the completion of their contract in Kingston—all the disputes being in relation to the works on the harbour in Quebec—and when it became known by our declaration that we not only intended to recover back, if we could, the money which they had obtained in the shape of overpayments, but that we did not intend to pay them for any further work they might do in Kingston, they brought the matter to a point in this way: They said, We are not able to carry on the contract at Kingston, if you do not pay us; we have earned now, something like $30,000 or $40,000, and if you stop your certificate for that we are ruined; we have nothing but our plant on which to raise money. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has suggested that we should have torn up that contract and seized and sold the plant, and worked out the contract ourselves. We had no authority from Parliament to do that. We had no vote to do that, and if we quarrelled with them unjustly, and broke their contract, and refused to pay them the amount due, we would have to re-examine the whole work, relet it, and postpone the completion of that dock for another year. Under those circumstances we agreed that they should go on and complete their work, and that we should take security from them by way of chattel mortgage on their plant for any payment that we might make them. It was not as the leader of the Opposition has said: the case of a debtor going security for the plaintiff for the amount involved in the suit, but we were merely taking security from them for the amount that we were paying them on the Kingston graving dock, so that they should pay it back to us, if the court should decide that the amount which they owed us by reason of the Quebec work was greater than the amount they had been paid for those works, and for the Kingston work besides. I omitted to say, Mr. Speaker, that of course there were charges in connection with Esquimalt. I should add that to the works of the harbour in Quebec, but I mentioned the Quebec works for the purpose of showing that the complaints had nothing to do with the Kingston works at all. Therefore in making that arrangement we secured the completion of the Kingston dock instead of having the contract thrown upon our hands, to re-let it, at perhaps a very great sacrifice, and certainly at a very great inconvenience to navigation there. We secured at the same time, the benefit of our set-off practically, by taking security that the amounts which we paid on that contract for the work done should be repaid to us if the court should decide we were entitled to recover in the existing suit. Under these circumstances the paper which the hon. gentleman has read was taken as a chattel mortgage or as security of that nature, specifying the plant upon which we should have a lien, and that which the hon. gentleman has read as being a narrative of the whole transaction, is simply a single detail of the whole transaction, simply a document drawn up to specify clearly that we were not waiving our rights, that we were not condoning the complaints in any way which arose out of the Quebec works and Esquimalt by making any payment, but that on the other hand we were reserving all the rights which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) has said tonight that we ought to have kept. Under these circumstances they went on and completed the contract as I have already said, and as the hon. Minister of Public Works has explained, this payment was fully put before the House and the authority of the House taken in regard to it. Yet, the accusation is made now, that this is a friendly suit, that payment was made by reason of an election, and that we were dealing covertly and secretly, and losing the benefit of the set-off which we had a right to claim.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has given an explanation of this transaction and he would lead us to understand that in consequence of the action of the Government, as directed by the House to take steps to collect moneys alleged to have been incorrectly obtained out of the public treasury; that thereby a certain other public work was going to be blocked in its completion, and thereby the public service was going to be interfered with. For that reason he says that a modification of the Kingston contract was arrived at under which this money was paid. Now, Sir, the Minister of Justice must have spoken without recollecting the facts. He says that this modification and this concession was made in order to save the interruption of shipping, and in order to prevent the interruption of a great public work which was urgently required in the public interest. Does the hon. gentleman know the nature of the Kingston work? Does he know the amount involved? Does he know the proportion that was unfinished? Does he know the details of the unfinished portion? Does he know to what extent the non-completion in the way he suggests, would have effected the public interest. If not, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he can stand up there and tell us that the uncompleted portion of that work was of a character, that had the Government taken it over it would have involved delay and injury to the public service. If he does not let me tell him. The contract, if the Minister of Public Works correctly informed the House—and I speak altogether from what he has placed on the record here—he tells us that the Kingston graving dock involved the expenditure of some $344,000 and at the time that he spoke, and asked for a vote in this House there was only required, in order to complete the contract, some $41,000.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice says "hear, hear."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. MULOCK. That would amount to one-eighth, or nearly one-ninth part of the work uncompleted. The Minister knew in the fall of 1891 that there was only a one-ninth part of the work uncompleted, and yet he tells us that the public interest would have greatly suffered if they had not done what they did, and made arrangements with the Connollys whereby they were able to get that work in shape by the opening of navigation in the following spring—a period of nearly six months. Does he mean to tell us that his department are so unable to deal with the public service that they could not find the means to complete a mere bagatelle of the contract, some mere matters of detail on the land between the time of taking the chattel mortgage and the opening of navigation? Does he mean to say that the Government have drawn their contracts in such a shape that they cannot enter on the work, and make available for its completion the plant of the contractors?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Certainly not.

Mr. MULOCK. Then it is a disgrace to the department.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is nice to use large words, but the hon. member knows that nobody enters into a contract by which he can cancel the contract without the contractor being in default.

Mr. MULOCK. I know very well that every public contract properly drawn provides that in case the contractor defaults in completing his contract, the other party has the right to step in and complete it at the expense of the contractor, and make use of his plant for that purpose.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is another affair altogether. They were not in default at all.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Public Works said that the contract was going to put them in default.

Mr. OUIMET. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to make an explanation? I think he makes a slight mistake of fact when he says that there were only about $40,000 worth of the works to be completed. I said that when the agreement was entered into with the Hon. Frank Smith, who was then acting Minister of Public Works, there was work to be done, amounting to $75,000, of which $32,000 was paid in February, and the balance in July; and the agreement was for the whole amount.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman supplement his statement by stating the date of the agreement in question?

Mr. OUIMET. The agreement, as I said, was made, I think, some time during November or December, 1891, immediately after the Messrs. Connolly notified the department that if they could not receive their money, they would be unable to go on with the work.

Mr. MULOCK. Very well, I will take those dates. In November, 1891, the Government learned that the contractors would not complete the contract unless they were paid some of the moneys on account of arrears.

Mr. OUIMET. Not arrears.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice said so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not say so at all.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Justice said, if I understood him correctly, that there was $30,000 of money earned, and that if that was not paid the contractors could not complete their contract. I suppose we are to accept both statements and try to fit them together.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Unless you torture my language.

Mr. MULOCK. If I am in error, I will ask the Minister to correct me.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will not correct you any more, because I have endeavoured to correct you twice, and you have distorted my language.

Mr. MULOCK. I deny that I have distorted. I understood the Minister of Justice to say that after the money had been earned by the contractors after Parliament had issued a mandate to the Government to collect the alleged claim in respect of the transaction in question, and after the money had been earned on the Kingston contract, the contractors said that they would be unable to complete that contract unless the sum was paid to them which they had already earned on that contract $30,000, I understood the Minister to say.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is attempting to make that statement of mine applicable to the month of November; whereas, what transpired, as the hon. Minister has explained, was, I think, on the 4th of January. Let me first remind the hon. gentleman that I stated that as soon as the mandate was given by Parliament we commenced the proceedings; I do not mean that we issued the writ immediately. The hon. gentleman says the Connollys were in the position of having to choose between accepting our attitude and throwing up the contract, that is to say, between our not paying them and leaving them to fulfil the contract and to get no money from it until the decision of the Exchequer suit, or else giving up the work and saying: We cannot go on because we cannot stand being treated in that way. Mr. Smith made the arrangement with them, whereby, until the matter was brought before Council, the work should go on, if he had to pay for it himself; and he promised to bring it before Council at an early date. When the matter came to be adjusted, there was about $30,000—or perhaps $40,000—due to the Connollys. How much of that had accrued in November or afterwards I do not know.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not responsible for any inaccuracy on the part of the Minister in stating the case. What he stated—and when his remarks come to be read this will be found to be correct—was that unless the arrears due to the contractors and earned at that time were paid, they would be so crippled that they would be unable to complete the work. If that is not the statement he made, of course it alters the argument I would have presented. If that is the statement he made, then I present this argument. There was at that time in the hands of the Government $30,000 of earned money which the Government had the right to set off, I presume, against the $570,000 claim. At all events, it had been ordered by the House and determined by the Government that that should be their attitude; they would pay nothing so long as their claim was unsatisfied; and in that view the Government were in this position. If their contract was properly drawn, as I assume it was, they had the right to step in and make use of the plant and materials on the spot and complete the contract without any interruption whatever. It was not necessary for them to advertise again for tenders. If the contract was loosely drawn, that is a different matter; but, if properly drawn, there must have been provisions in it whereby the Government could have completed the work. It would have gone on uninterruptedly, except under different management, and the whole matter afterwards would be a matter of balancing up between the Government and the contractors. So that if the $30,000 was paid, as the Minister gave me to understand after it had been earned, it should not have been paid.

There was a drawback of 20 per cent on the contract—I do not know whether on the extras or not—but on the contract of $260,000, there was a drawback to the amount of $52,000. Was not that on hand? I fail to understand the reason for this laxity in the transaction. I did not intend to dwell on the matter any further, but I cannot let one remark of the First Minister pass unnoticed. He chose to go outside of this motion, for what reason I do not know, to say he was not ashamed of anything connected with the criminal prosecution or anything that followed it. Well, I am ashamed of what followed, and I think the time has come when the hon. Minister should explain what followed and why he gave the advice to His Excellency which led to the prostitution of the administration of justice in this country. I may say with regard to his action in that matter, that his predecessor, the late Sir John Macdonald, whose political actions did not always commend themselves to my judgment, during his long career in public life, never once was known to have disregarded the purity of the Bench or to have done anything to interfere with the administration of justice. I remember well, as a young man, the most trying position Sir John Macdonald was in—reading of it in the public press—when one near and dear to him made a mistake and paid for it in the cells. I can remember many instances in his life where he rose superior to all personal considerations, when the administration of justice was involved, and I can conceive no more important duty of any public man than to see that the laws are lived up to. What is the use of our passing laws if they are to become dead letters. If one could have read the heart of Sir John Macdonald in his last moments, it would have probably disclosed that he lay down his life because of these transactions, which were then a source of grief to him and which would have involved, either the abandonment of his life record of standing up for the administration of justice, or perhaps yielding to the importunities of others. And when he died, I believe he died of a broken heart because of the circumstances brought to his notice. I turn to his successor, on whom his mantle was to fall, who was to be the custodian of the administration of justice, and I believe that if there was one circumstance that commended the present Minister of Justice to the public it was the representations and the promises he made that he would see that justice was administered and that not one guilty man should escape. This is the third time this session I have brought this matter to the hon. gentleman's notice, and I will continue to bring it up until he justifies his action or stands convicted before the country of having prostituted justice.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Let me make a very short statement in answer to the Irrelevant and abusive attack of the hon. gentleman. I have only to state, without going into details, that he has made this attack by insinuations time and time again, and has not been man enough to challenge my conduct in that matter on any occasion when I had an opportunity of answering him in this House. But he is that description of man who can make these dirty insinuations at the close of a long debate on an entirely different question. I have only to say to him that he can search the records of my department, whether under Sir John Macdonald or his predecessors or successors, and he will find in no case has an application for clemency been refused, under the representations that were made and put on the Table of this House in the case of Messrs. Connolly and McGreevy.
Mr. MULOCK.

(In the Committee.)

Rapide Plat Canal—enlargement.. $130,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Is this about completed?

Mr. HAGGART. The estimated cost was $1,600,000, and the amount expended is $900,000.

Trent Valley Canal—Construction $130,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Where is that to be spent?

Mr. HAGGART. Between Peterborough and Lakefield and Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe. That will give navigation of 160 miles on the canal.

Cornwall Canal—To extend the Cornwall sewer..... $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How much does this Cornwall sewer cost altogether? Was there not something spent upon this a number of years ago in connection with the construction of the canal?

Mr. HAGGART. I believe so. The total cost estimated is $10,000. This is the result of an arbitration. The town of Cornwall has been threatening action to enforce the agreement, and we are obliged to do the work.

Welland Canal—Rebuilding wall above Lock No. 24..... $14,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Where is this work?

Mr. HAGGART. On the level above lock 24. The sides of the prism, 1,300 feet, are supported by a dry wall built of stone, not of a durable nature. The stone is crumbling away and the wall has settled from six inches to one foot ten inches on the west side, and, considering the narrowness of the embankment and the serious consequences threatened it has been decided that the wall shall be rebuilt.

Mr. MULLOCK. Whose report is that?

Mr. HAGGART. The report of the engineer, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. MULLOCK. How do you propose to have this work done?

Mr. HAGGART. All this work is done under contract given after tenders have been publicly called for, the contract being given to the lowest tenderer.

Lachine Canal—To pay land damages..... $19,200

Mr. CASEY. Is that the result of an arbitration award?

Mr. HAGGART. It is the result of the award of the Government appraisers who valued the damages.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who were the Government appraisers?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Wood and Mr. Paradis.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. gentleman give the cost of the arbitration?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not a memorandum of that by me.

Repairs and alterations to car "Victoria"..... $3,200

Mr. McMULLEN. What car is this?

Mr. HAGGART. The Governor General's car.

Mr. CASEY. How long is it since it was built?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember. The Governor General suggested some improvements and the car was sent to the workshops at Moncton to be fitted up according to his suggestions.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what kind of improvements have been made upon it?

Mr. HAGGART. The car is in the workshops at Moncton, being altered according to suggestions of the department, approved by the Governor General.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think we have the right to keep up a car of this kind for the Governor General even if he is the representative of Her Majesty. He gets a good round salary and a large amount of money otherwise, and I do not think we ought to be required to keep building and altering and reconstructing a car for the purpose of carrying him around through the country. It is an absurd proceeding. I do not think the people are prepared to endorse such action.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman asked the nature of the changes. I will tell him. Metal work, replating, $145; cleaning and varnishing car, $75; repairs to trucks, $126; new patent roller window shades, including alterations necessary to window facings, $199; steam heating apparatus, $200; three extra water tanks and enlarging others and making pipe connection, and also changing pipes in kitchen, $176; four new patent water closets, $180; fitting car with electric light and storage batteries, $1,000; add five per cent, $114. Then there is the painting and varnishing.

Salaries of engineers, draughtsmen and extra clerks, which may be paid notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary $17,420

Mr. CASEY. I suppose the Minister can give a full explanation of this?

Mr. HAGGART. These salaries were left out by mistake from the Main Estimates. They are: Thomas Ridout, engineer; R. C. Douglas, engineer; J. B. Spence, chief draughtsman; Johnson, Mothersill, Leslie, Daly, clerks; Chamberlain, Loftus, Desjardines, and Graham, messengers.

Mr. CASEY. Why that proviso, "notwithstanding anything in the Act?"

Mr. HAGGART. They are not on the civil service list at all. A good many of them have been in the department twenty-five or thirty years.

Mr. CASEY. There can be nothing in the Civil Service Act against paying them, then.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are temporary officers, and strictly, they have to be chosen from the list of candidates before they pass an examination.

Mr. CASEY. Some of them, I understand, are new appointments?

Mr. HAGGART. Not one of them.

Towards compensating A. H. Archibald for the loss sustained by him by the breaking up of the roads between North Sydney and port Hastings (over which he was then carrying the mails) by the construction of the Cape Breton Railway. . . . $4,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Archibald held a contract to carry the mails between North Sydney and Port Hastings by the highway, a distance of eighty-seven miles, the rate of speed to be six miles an hour, the mode of conveyance to be by vehicle, drawn by one horse, the service daily, the price $5,004. He claims that in the years 1889-90, during the construction of the railway between Point Tupper and Sydney, the highway over which he carried the mail was expropriated for long distances by the Government for building a railway. The Government contractor laid rails and ties in at least fifteen places across the highway; in other places water-courses were diverted, so that the highway was turned away and destroyed in such a manner as to require him to leave it at many points. He had in some instances to cut roads through the forest. At other points he had to adopt other and more difficult, lengthy and dangerous routes, which compelled him to provide additional teams and conveyances, and caused him to lose many valuable horses and vehicles. He put a claim before the department for the sum of $11,235.28. After looking into the case very fully, the amount provided in the Estimates was granted to him. After Mr. Archibald made his first claim the matter was inquired into by our inspector at Halifax, who reduced the amount to $9,473.20, and the Government decided to allow him $4,000.

Mr. LAURIER. Was the damage from which Mr. Archibald suffered caused by the Government contractor?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The contractor expropriated the public highway in several places, and on account of the railway being close to the highway, ties and other material used in the construction were piled on the highway, so that the road was completely diverted for long distances.

Mr. LAURIER. Did the Department of Justice report upon the legality of the claim?

Mr. HAGGART. The Government expropriated ten miles out of the ninety miles of this highway.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Strictly speaking I suppose there is no legal liability, because he had contracted to carry the mails on a four years' contract, and he was bound to carry them if there had been no roads at all. But considering that his actual losses were found on investigation to be upwards of $9,000, and considering that they were due to the construction of a public work, we decided to grant him this compensation.

Mr. LAURIER. I find no fault with this. I may have been wrong in my understanding of the explanation given by the Postmaster General. The contractor might have been responsible and not the Government. Of course, if the impediment arose as a direct result of the work of the Government, the case might be different.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I gave that as an instance. I have already explained, however, that during the construction of the railway the highway was interfered with at fifteen different places. The contractor had been in the habit of using one horse and was compelled to add a second, he was so compelled to take a longer route.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he remembers having received some communications respecting the construction of a sewer at Valleyfield, some letters from myself and the Council of the town, asking the Dominion Government to take charge of the sewer which crosses the town, and which belongs to the Government. Further, whether, on receipt of those letters from myself or from the Council the hon. gentleman asked a report from his engineer. I further desire to know whether the hon. gentleman has that report, and what are its recommendations, as I believe there is no appropriation for the work in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. The Government resolved not to place an amount in the Estimates.

Mr. BERGERON. Was there a report submitted from the Government engineer on the subject?

Mr. HAGGART. I think there was a report as to the cost of the work, but as to whether the Government should undertake the work or not, that was not the business of the engineer.

Mr. BERGERON. What was the estimate of the cost?

Mr. HAGGART. Between $30,000 and $36,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Could I obtain a copy of that report from the department.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the engineer recommend the construction of the work?

Mr. HAGGART. It was not his duty to make the recommendation.

Mr. BERGERON. Perhaps I am not understood. The engineer was, no doubt, asked whether this work belonged to the Government or not. If I had not thought he did, or if the Council had not so thought, the request would not have been made. I should like to know whether the Dominion engineer made a report in that spirit?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know the way in which the engineer reported. The report made to the department was to the construction of the sewer. I do not know whether the engineer dealt with the question of the liability of the Government or not, but he entered fully into the circumstances connected with the matter, and I shall have pleasure in furnishing the hon. gentleman with a copy of the report.

Payment of Damages—Railway
Accident at Lévis. $12,000

Mr. HAGGART. This vote is rendered necessary by an accident that occurred on the Intercolonial Railway, by which a number of persons were killed and injured.

Mr. LAURIER. How many persons?

Mr. HAGGART. Thirty-three claims were filed; three persons were killed, and one or two more wounded.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did not the investigation show that the train was running at a very high rate of speed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was proved not to have been the cause of the accident, but the cause was an unforeseen defect in an axle, which was not capable of being ascertained. For that reason, the Government were exonerated. The Government are simply asking for a vote on the principle pursued by railway companies. The amount asked for is very small, and it may be necessary to apply for a supplementary amount. There was some examination of the case by the Solicitor General, who thought an abatement might be made, so as to bring them all within $15,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understood the train was running at a very high rate of speed, that it was twenty minutes behind time, and on a down grade and going round a curve, it ran so swiftly that the hind car went clear over. I was told that in the investigation several passengers had given evidence to that effect. What was done with the engineer?

Mr. HAGGART. The accident was caused by a broken axle on one of the cars. No fault was attributable to the engineer.

To compensate Mr. Martin for injury sustained on the Intercolonial railway. $1,500

Mr. HAGGART. The son of this man, living in the town of Rimouski, was injured by a train of the Intercolonial Railway at Rimouski station, on 19th July. He is alleged to have been ejected from a car in motion by a brakeman, and, his leg having been crushed, he was made a cripple for life. The father brought an action against the Government, the cost of which in the courts are said to exceed $1,000, and the cost of medical assistance was $500.

Mr. LAURIER. It is not a pleasant task to criticise an item of this kind, but I understand in this matter there is really no claim at all for sympathy. My information is that this boy of seven or eight years was in the habit of going aboard the cars, and had been frequently warned by the brakemen and conductors. At last he was ejected somewhat forcibly, but all through his own fault. Under such circumstances, I understand that the father sued, but the action was dismissed, and very properly dismissed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The circuit court awarded him $3,000. We appealed, and succeeded on the ground that at the time the accident occurred, the statute did not make the Crown liable for an injury taking place on a public work.

Rideau Canal—To pay Thomas Sweetman, land damages..... $220

Mr. DAWSON. In connection with this item, I would like to call the attention of the Minister to a reply he made to me last April concerning land damages. He stated that the Government had received a communication from certain residents in the township of Bedford in reference to damages suffered by their lands in consequence of the construction of a dam on West Rideau Lake. I would just like to say that several farmers in the neighbourhood of this lake suffered considerable damage last year, when 137 acres of land in Stinson's Creek valley were flooded. They suffered the total loss of their crops, and hay, and a considerable damage to the land. I urged the Minister to send an engineer at as early a date as possible in order to look into the matter thoroughly, with a view to compensate these parties. At the time the dam was built, it was urged by the farmers that the dam was too high, and would flood their lands, but, they allege, a promise was made to them that the dam would never be closed to its full extent. For two or three years it was not closed, but last year it was closed up and the water rose some twenty inches over their land. It is also claimed by them that by the expenditure of $500 in dredging the outlet to the lake, the sills of the dam could be lowered three feet. I do not know whether this could be done or not, but when the engineers are there, I think they should examine this statement of the farmers, because if it is correct, the dam could then be so lowered as to avoid flooding and yet save as much water for the canal as is now held back by that dam. I would ask the Minister at what time the engineers will be able to visit that lake?

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. HAGGART. This is a dam for the reservoir for the upper Rideau Lake in the township of Bedford. There was a dam erected at the foot of the lake, and it was alleged to have done damage to these parties. The superintending engineer of the Rideau Canal was instructed to inquire into it, and I think he did report that there was some damage, and an appraiser was ordered to find out what it was. He also reported, as the hon. gentleman says, that by deepening the wall on the dam at the foot, and lowering the creek for some distance below, that they would be able to use the water in the lake for the purpose of navigation, and get a good deal more by a slight expenditure.

Post Office Staff, Vancouver, B.C. $8,760

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the cause of this?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is proposed to make this post office a city post office, and in doing so we are making an economy of $1,060. The present income of the postmaster is $8,980. The proposed disbursement will be $6,320; balance to good of department, $2,660, and out of that we will pay four letter carriers $1,600, which would leave a balance of $1,060 to the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. This appears to be a very large amount to pay for the service there compared with the receipts. The hon. Minister says that it only leaves a balance of about $200 to the good. Does this include the sale of stamps, and everything connected with the office?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. What I have mentioned is simply what the postmaster receives. The revenue of the office is some $30,000.

Aid to Basile Beaulieu towards reconstruction of bridge destroyed by fire across Little river, N.B. . $300

Mr. LAURIER. Why do we pay for this?

Mr. DALY. This is for a bridge that was formerly erected by a contribution of $300 from the Government and an equal contribution from the municipality. It was destroyed by fire, and we are simply giving the original contribution, the municipality supplying the balance. It is on ordinance land, so that we get the whole benefit of it.

Harbours and Rivers, Ontario—
River Kaministiquia..... $15,000

Mr. OUMET. This is to cut a channel through the bar at the mouth of the river four hundred feet wide by twenty feet deep. I am advised by my engineer that if this is done the whole of the water of the river will go through that channel and keep it open. Last year we had to expend $55,000 to keep the channel of the river open.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do you intend to let this work by contract?

Mr. OUIMET. No, we have an elevator dredge now on Lake Huron, and we expect to send it there, and do the work much more cheaply ourselves than if we let it by contract. The cutting is through sand and other soft material.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I called the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works last year to the state of the navigation in the River Sydenham. There is more traffic upon this river than any other in Canada except the St. Lawrence, and the hon. gentleman informed me last year that the matter would be attended to during the summer. The whole summer is gone by and nothing done. I called his attention to the subject again this year, and also the attention of the Minister of Marine, and would like a statement from those hon. gentlemen as to what is to be done for the improvement of the river navigation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The officers of my department had their attention called to this some time ago. The difficulty is in connection with a lot of sunken timber as well as some silting up of the bottom of the river. We have tried to deal with it by asking for tenders from parties who are willing to undertake the removal of these logs, but the scheme seems to be impractical. The tenderers in some cases wanted property in all these cases, and we found, on looking into it, that it would be hardly proper to undertake to give property in this wood. My officers are now endeavouring to come to some other conclusion, and I think, with the co-operation of public works, so far as dredging is concerned, we will be able to get the wood out of it by another scheme so that we will not have any claim for property in timber.

Public buildings, Nova Scotia .. $14,600

Mr. GILLIES. Does the hon. gentleman intend to do anything in the way of erecting public buildings in the town of Arichat in my county? A few years ago the Government acquired the site for a public building at the cost of $1,000, but since then they have been paying rental for the several public offices there. I have had some correspondence with the hon. Minister and understood he fully intended to make some provisions this session for a public building in that town.

Mr. OUIMET. I have submitted to Council a great many applications, some of which I recommended very strongly as being urgent but unfortunately the state of the revenue for the present year does not warrant the Government to go on with any new expenditure.

Stratford County Buildings..... $10,000

Mr. REID. With regard to this vote of $11,000 towards Stratford post office, is it the intention of the department to add another story to the present structure?

Mr. OUIMET. It is.

Committee rose, and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Morning Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

PRAYERS.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 166) to amend the Act to provide for the allowance of drawback on certain articles manufactured in Canada for use in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. HAGGART moved second reading of resolutions reported from committee (19th July) respecting the granting of the subsidies therein mentioned to railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also therein mentioned.

Mr. LAURIER moved that the said resolutions be not now read the second time, but that they be referred back to committee to consider the following amendment:—

That within four days after the opening of each session, the Minister of Railways shall lay upon the Table of the House, copies of all agreements made by any of the companies with the Government together with a statement of all payments made by the Government up to date, for subsidies earned by any of the said companies, and the Orders in Council authorizing such payments.

That within a month after the payment to any company of any portion of the subsidies, the president and manager of said company shall furnish to the Auditor General a statement under oath showing if the whole of the subsidies so paid to the company have been applied in the manner herein intended, and that a similar statement shall be supplied by every contractor of the company who is to receive or has received the payment out of any such subsidies or out of the proceeds thereof, and that, within four days after the opening of each session, the Auditor General shall lay all such statements upon the Table of the House.

That all such documents thus laid upon the Table of the House shall be referred to the Committee on Public Accounts to be by them investigated in the same manner as the Public Accounts.

That every officer and director of the said companies and every person having a contract with any of the companies for the performance of any work, the doing of anything, or the furnishing of any goods, effects, or materials, and having or expecting to have any claim or demand against the company by reason of such contract, who either directly or indirectly, by himself or by any person on his behalf, subscribes, furnishes or gives, or promises to subscribe, furnish or give, any money or other valuable consideration for the purpose of promoting the election of any candidate to a Legislature or to Parliament, or with the intent in any way of influencing or affecting the result of a provincial or Dominion election,—is guilty of a misdemeanour and liable to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars and not exceeding one thousand dollars; unless the value of the amount or thing paid, offered, given, loaned, promised, received or subscribed, as the case may be, exceed the last mentioned sum, in which case the fine may be raised to a sum not exceeding such value, and also to a term of imprisonment not exceeding one year and not less than one month, and in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for a further term not exceeding six months.

He said: For several years past we have adopted the policy of granting subsidies in aid of railways, and strange to say, we have never made any provision that the payments thus made should be audited, as all moneys paid out of the public treasury are audited. It seems to me that this is a practice altogether at variance with the principles of British administration and British government; and I intend to provide by this amendment that these moneys shall be audited, as are all other moneys paid out of the Treasury. Moreover, we know now, the facts have been made patent by investigation, that more than once, subsidies voted in aid of railways have been diverted from the intention for which they have been voted, and that they have been applied to other purposes, in several instances, as parliamentary funds for election purposes. After what has taken place during this session, we have reason to fear that this system will continue. We have heard a member of this Government on the floor of this House, after he had been convicted of obtaining money thus voted by Parliament, state that he had nothing to regret, and that he would do the same thing again as often as the case arose. As we have been voting here three million dollars, such occasions will again arise, and in face of the declaration I have referred to, Parliament would be recreant to its duty if it failed to make provision to prevent the recurrence of such offences.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is an amendment we cannot accept. I do not understand the objections made in the resolution as to the audit of the payment of railway subsidies. The payments made to the companies by way of subsidies are certainly audited like any other items, and therefore, I take it that the hon. gentleman desires an audit to ascertain how the companies have expended the subsidies. The Bill, as amended, would make a curious mixture of appropriation and criminal law, two things which would never be combined. The amendment proposes to re-establish that which Parliament deliberately abolished, the designation of misdemeanour, and so forth. We struck that out of the criminal law, and it is proposed to put it in by an Act like this. The Bill proposes in the same way to repeal to a certain extent the law of contracts. There is on the Statute-book a law with respect to subscriptions by contractors of the Government. The Act would then contain this extraordinary feature, that while the president, secretary, manager, members and contractors of all those railway companies are eligible to sit in Parliament, they would be prevented from subscribing to their own elections or that of a co-director, who might be a personal friend, and would not be able to furnish him even with the necessary money to put up a deposit or any other legitimate expense of an election, either to the Dominion Parliament or Local Legislature. Such action would be punished by both fine and imprisonment. I am not able to agree with the hon. gentleman, although I have no doubt he asserted it with perfect sincerity, that these subsidies have been diverted sometimes to form a parliamentary fund. So strong is my dissent from that opinion that I consider it to have been distinctly disproved in the case to which he referred, and so far from it being correct that any member had been convicted of that offence, and that he declared he would do what he had done again, the hon. gentleman referred to made that declaration because it had been proved that he had done nothing of the kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I regret the right hon. gentleman has not accepted this proposition, because if he had done so he would have removed a feeling of suspicion and distrust that exists in the public mind with respect to the use made of appropriations voted by Parliament to certain railways. The hon. gentleman knows that in Parliament a charge was made that on Section "B" a very considerable sum was taken from the subsidy and used for election purposes.

Mr. HAGGART. There was no subsidy at all on Section "B."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was public money, which amounted to the same thing. The House, at the instance of the hon. gentleman, refused any investigation in that case.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was a Government work.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The charge was that the work had been remeasured when it was impossible to measure it accurately, and the prior engineer had refused to undertake the work of remeasurement, because he said, he had in the first instance measured it accurately. The sum of nearly $400,000 was paid in excess of the first estimate, and it was alleged that a very considerable portion of that sum had been appropriated for election purposes. The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Edgar) charged the Postmaster General with having obtained from some parties certain money appropriated by Parliament to aid in the construction of railways, $100,000 having been alleged to have been diverted to election purposes, and I think there were receipts produced which would go to establish the fact that the money was so obtained. Our view as to the obtaining of the money may differ from that of the hon. gentleman, but I believe the majority of the people agree with the opinion we entertain with respect to the moral character of that transaction. Where is the impropriety of having a proper investigation into the moneys voted by this House to aid in the construction of railways, to ascertain whether that money had gone to the purposes for which it was voted, and had not been diverted to any other purpose. Let me call the attention of the House to this fact, that there is nothing at all in the present condition of affairs to prevent a Minister coming to an understanding with a railway corporation or with persons promoting a certain enterprise that if a certain sum was appropriated, a portion of it should be placed at the disposal of the hon. gentleman's friends for election purposes. There should be no possibility of suspicion in regard to members of this House.

Mr. HAGGART. Is it not a crime already, for which either a minister or member of Parliament could be punished?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says it is a crime. It is a crime against the law of Parliament, and is liable to be investigated by the House under the law of Parliament. But it is not done. It was not done here some time ago. The objections which the right hon. gentleman has mentioned are all illusory, and the statement that there is a proper investigation into the expenditure, is not a correct view of the actual facts. What check has the Auditor General over the appropriations? The investigation by the Committee on Public Accounts shows that he has none. His business is simply to see that the money is nominally applied for the purpose for which it is voted, and that receipts from the proper parties have been given. Beyond that he cannot go—he cannot go beyond the mere formal Act, as of course the Committee on Public Accounts can do. There is no possibility of making an investigation before that Committee, and of course the proceedings with respect to such appropriation are the same as with respect to public money generally.

Mr. MULLOCK. The Minister of Justice attempted to dispose of this amendment by pointing out what he deemed to be objections to it, the principal one being that it would involve confusion in various laws. What is the amendment? It is that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider that resolution, not to adopt it, but to consider it, and if there is anything good in it, to select it, and recommend that it be made into law; so it is rather a captious objection to say that the resolution which has not yet been considered, should be decided against. What is the principle involved in the proposed amendment? That is the question, not the mere language or the machinery proposed to be used to put the principle into force. The principle involved is whether we should not as regards votes of public money adopt measures by which to take all needful precautions to see that the money has not been diverted from its original purpose. The proposition is that when Parliament votes public money, for public enterprises, there should be machinery adopted by which Parliament, through its committees, can trace any money improperly used. Is not such a measure in the public interest? Look at the large sums of public money that we are voting. Within the last hour or two of the session large sums are appropriated for public works. Where are two-thirds of the members of this House? They have gone home, and yet at this stage of the session the Government are asking the House to vote further large sums for public enterprises. There should be a proper auditing of the accounts in order to see that the public money so voted has not been diverted from its true purpose, and the Government should be the first to endorse a proposition of that kind instead of endeavouring to prevent its adoption. The proposition is essentially in the public interest, and if it is not approved of by the Government, it will be another proof of the attitude of the Government to be superior to the people, and to disregard the rights of the people to control their own funds.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has not voted.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am paired with the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar).
I would have voted against the amendment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I beg to move as an amendment to the second reading of the Resolutions the following :—

That in view of the fact that the said road is a branch of the Caraque road, and that the said

Mr. MULOCK.

Caraquet road as appears from the report recently laid on the Table of this House by the Minister of Railways, is utterly insolvent and unable to pay working expenses and to keep this line in due repair; and also that the statements on the faith of which the original grant was made have been entirely falsified by the results; there is no justification for granting any further sums of public money to such an enterprise.

division.

Amendment negatived on same division, and resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. HAGGART moved second reading of Bill (No. 169) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make one observation or two with reference to the reply received by me on the 5th of last month from the hon. Minister of Railways with regard to the relief of the county of Pontiac for which I made application. I quite appreciate the reply made by the Minister of Railways, and I understand the great difficulty there is in the way; but I wish to call the attention of the Government to the fact, that at an early date next session, I shall call the attention of the House to the subsidy to the railway bridge, or in other words, a rebate upon the present railway bridge from Hull to the city of Ottawa.
That bridge was built entirely out of provincial money, and as I understand the subsidies granted in the year 1884, that portion of the road from Hull to the city of Ottawa was not considered. I purpose at an early date next session to bring the matter thoroughly before the House, and at this moment I merely call the attention of the Government to the fact that I desire to do so, so that it may be perfectly understood that my contention is: that the portion of the road between Hull and the city of Ottawa has not received the consideration from this Government which it deserved, and that an allowance should be made over that bridge so as to give the county of Pontiac some relief in the way of allowing the right of way over the said bridge.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

BOUNTY ON PIG IRON.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolutions :—

1. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment of a bounty of two dollars per ton on all pig iron made in Canada from Canadian ore, a bounty of two dollars per ton on all iron puddled bars made in Canada from Canadian pig iron manufactured from Canadian ore, and a bounty of two dollars per ton on all steel billets manufactured in Canada from pig iron (made in Canada from Canadian ore) and such other ingredients as are necessary and usual in the manufacture of such steel billets, the proportion of such ingredients to be regulated by order of the Governor in Council.

2. That it is expedient to provide that in the case of the products of furnaces now in operation the said bounties shall be applicable only to such products manufactured therein between the 27th day of March, 1894, and the 26th day of March, 1899, both days included, and that in the case of the products of any furnace which commences operations hereafter, but prior to the 27th day of March, 1899, the said bounties shall be applicable to such products manufactured therein during a period of five years from the date of commencing operations.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Resolution 1 was amended by adding the words :

In computing the bounty, no payment shall be made in respect to foreign ores used in the products before mentioned.

On Resolution 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to raise a discussion now as to bounties on pig iron. I disapprove of the whole business altogether, but it would be idle at this time of the session and in this state of the House to raise it. The concluding paragraph here is specially objectionable. Nothing could be more opposed to all sound principle than an attempt to tie the hands of Parliament for a period of ten years. For myself I utterly refuse to be bound by it, and I say so expressly for the benefit of those manufacturers, that I, for one, will utterly refuse to be bound by any such proposition. I do not recognize the authority of this Parliament to tie the hands of our successors for any definite term of years. You might as well make that 100 years as ten years as a matter of principle, and no human being would contend that we are bound by any such proposition. When you state that with respect to existing manufacturers, there shall be a term of four or five years is enough, and more than enough; but to state that any concern that may be established in a period of not less than five years from the present date may obtain a like subsidy, appears to be without parallel or precedent and is utterly and entirely opposed to every principle of sound legislation. And to that portion of it I not merely object here, but I will move that it be stricken out.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the Government, in making this proposition; have confused two things that are wholly different. A Government, in entering into a contract from which the public receive some benefit or advantage in return for some service rendered, may ask Parliament to make a contract or engagement that will be binding for a certain period of time.

But, as a matter of public policy, where there is no contract between the Government and the party, where there is no service rendered by the party to the state, for which a consideration is being given, the Government has no power, and this Parliament has no authority, whatever to fix a period of time. There is nothing better settled than that one Parliament cannot bind its successors, nor make as a matter of public policy an engagement that will pledge the public faith. I could in half an hour turn up a dozen cases in which Ministers in England have expressly laid it down that such an attempt to pledge Parliament is a most unconstitutional proceeding. You have no authority whatever to put the party in a position of saying: The public faith is pledged to us. No rule is better settled than that one Parliament cannot bind another Parliament, or make any engagement which will interfere with its authority. Here is a question of public policy. It is open to every man in this country to invest his money in whatever he pleases: it may be a farming operation, or it may be a manufacturing operation; but you cannot tie the hands of Parliament by enabling him to say: I am carrying on a private business in milling or manufacturing, and you cannot alter your legislation, because it will be a breach of faith with me in carrying on my private business. The whole thing is most monstrous, and I hope the Government will not persist in a declaration of that sort. There is no contract between those parties and the Government; there is no service being rendered; and that being so, I hope the hon. Minister will agree to abandon the proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. This is not a contract at all. It is simply an expression of the intention of Parliament at the present time as embodying the well-known policy of the Government at present in power. The hon. gentleman is objecting to legislation of this kind. If his objection had prevailed in the past, our statute-book would have been rather bare as compared with what it is. A tariff Bill which puts a duty of 30 or 35 per cent upon woollens or any other article is an expression of Parliament; but the logical outcome of my hon. friend's argument is that we have no right to pass that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Because, with his views of the tariff, looking upon it in the nature of an encouragement of a certain business man, he has just as good a right to say that under that tariff there is a moral obligation on Parliament to keep him in the position in which he commences his work under that tariff. We would have had no bounty legislation at the present time. From 1883 there has been bounty legislation running for a period of years, being the expression of Parliament that so long as that policy were maintained, a bounty of $2 would be paid on a certain product of the country; and the man, or firm, or company who undertook business under that knew that it was simply an Act of Parliament expressing the will of Parliament at the time, and that any succeeding Parliament, if it wished, might annul that provision. But, of course, it is plain and clear that so long as the party then in power keep in power, this policy initiated by them and carried into legislation by them will be pursued; but that if they go out of power, and another party come in, then the question is to be considered again by that party with their views upon it. I grant my hon. friend that under any tariff or bounty legislation, such as this, which has been in operation for a number of years, and under which capital has been invested and operations carried on, there is a grave consideration introduced as to how Parliament shall deal with it. The hon. gentleman admits that. In speeches which he has made in this House and in the country in discussing the tariff, he has pointed out that, inasmuch as under the legislation which has been in operation in this country since 1878 certain interests have been vested and certain operations have been going on, it would be necessary to modify what he and his party proposed to do in regard to that legislation. So that I do not think my hon. friend can argue that this is a contract or that it is beyond the power of Parliament to pass it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was not urging that this was a contract. I was arguing that the rule which the hon. gentleman has undertaken to apply to a question of public policy is a rule only applicable to contracts. The hon. gentleman himself will not pretend to say, nor has he proposed, that there shall be a duty of 35 per cent on woollen goods for the next five years. The tariff speaks for the present, and every question of public policy ought to speak for the present. The hon. gentleman has no right to say that a bounty shall be continued for five or ten years. In doing so he is violating every constitutional rule or principle applicable to the case, and the motion of my hon. friend is perfectly right.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side are quite in accord. If I understood the hon. member for South Oxford, he objects first of all to the bounty principle, and that is consistent. But, as I take it, all will agree that in any application of the bounty principle to the iron industry there must be a period of years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, you speak for the present.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, I think reasonable critics would agree, even though averse to the proposition, that there must be a period longer than the mere present policy. But if I understood the hon. member for South Oxford, he did not object to a short period; I think he named the period of four or five years, and protested against a ten year period. I merely rose to call attention to that, and to the fact that so long as you have this system, there must be a fixed period. This is a declaration of policy of this Government, and we are, at any rate, morally bound to observe it and keep good faith with the people who invest, on the understanding that that is the policy of the country. But no man needs to be told that any incoming Government could repeal statute after statute, and do things even which might be unfair and even involve breach of faith. It seems to me the argument of the hon. member for Bothwell is only one of the subsidiary points taken against the bounty principle altogether, and for that reason he might urge, as a ground against that policy, the fact that you have to fix some period, and that that is objectionable.

Sir RICHARD CAMPBELL WRIGHT. What I was more particularly contending against was the special abuse contained in the last few words of this clause. Not content with the application of the bounty principle to existing industries, the hon. gentleman goes on to provide that any industry which may be established within a period of five years from date shall have a bounty, not of five years, but of ten years from this date. That is a specially objectionable clause, and it was against that I directed my remarks, reserving to myself, wholly and entirely, the entire question of bounties. To the best of my recollection, this is the first time, here or anywhere else, that it has been proposed, not merely to give a bounty running from a certain date, but to give that bounty to industries which may come into existence any time within five years. We ought to be explicitly careful about putting any such legislation upon the statute-book, if only for this reason, that however clearly we, on both sides, understand Parliament cannot tie the hands of its successors, no doubt the ordinary investor, reading such a statute, would suppose that this was an indefeasible grant, which could not be interfered with without grave breach of public faith. I take the opportunity to protest against that in advance, so that parties hereafter, should there be a change of policy on the part of the people, may not be able to say they never had any warning, but understood that if they established a factory in 1899, they would get the bounty from 1894, and had reason to complain that the public faith had not been kept towards them. On every possible ground of expediency, constitutional law and public policy, I object, as earnestly as I can, to the proposition that non-existent industries, which may not come into existence until, not merely this Parliament, but its successor, has finished, should be entitled to bounty for this term of years.

Mr. McMULLEN. Unquestionably, if this law is adopted, any person establishing industries under it would have an undoubted claim for vested rights.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know about that. He could make a claim.

Mr. McMULLEN. If he established an industry, on the understanding that this Act was to last for ten years, and if hon. gentlemen opposite went out of office and the people changed their policy, under this Act he would have a claim. With regard to the principle adopted in the iron industry, I have stated before that if the production is to be encouraged in this country at all, it should be done by a bounty and not by a duty. When you impose a heavy duty, you make those who are the users of the iron pay the whole of it. But when you grant a bounty, every one who contributes to the revenue pays his share, whereas, if you impose a duty, it falls only on those who use the iron. The United States, when they developed their iron industry, did it entirely by bounty. I am not prepared to say that either one or the other is a desirable course to adopt, but if we are to develop the industry we should do so by means of a bounty.

Mr. MULOCK. As regards this $2 a ton on pig; that same pig, when developed into puddled bars, would be entitled to another $2 on the same ton.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. This puddled bar is the raw material of steel billets?

Mr. FOSTER. Puddled bar is the raw material of the man who makes bar iron. The raw material of the steel billet is the pig iron.

Mr. MULOCK. It means that puddled bar has a bounty of $4—$2 on pig and $2 on the bar, and the same raw material that passed into the form of puddled bar draws the bounty.

Mr. FOSTER. That only makes $2 on puddled bars.

Mr. MULOCK. The same iron in the raw, that has gone through two stages, gets $4 per ton.

Mr. FOSTER. The same material.

Mr. MULOCK. It may change its character, but there will be a bounty of $4. What will this involve?

Mr. FOSTER. That will depend entirely upon the working of the scheme. You will recollect that the duty upon the bar before was $9 a ton. That has been reduced to $5 per ton, so that the customs rate has suffered a very heavy reduction. That was in order to put puddled bar, the raw material of bar iron, at a more reasonable rate. This $2 is added as a bounty, so that the manufacture of puddled bars has the protection of $5 and the $2 bounty, equal to $7, if you look upon both as being equally protective. How it will work in the initial stages and later, can only be demonstrated by experience. Probably, in the beginning, a considerable amount of puddled bar will be imported, and there will be no $2 bounty on that. But the idea is that—I do not know how nearly it will work out—the operation of the whole thing will be, in the course of three or four years, to at least double the amount of iron now made. The amount of iron that was made in 1891-92 was 30,000 tons. In 1892-93 it increased to 47,000 tons, and in 1893-94 it reached 62,000 tons. So that there has been a large increase in the manufacture of the iron, and the margin that is left on the present consumption, if I remember right, would be probably 160,000 tons.

Mr. MULOCK. If the policy is successful the result will be the increase in the manufacture of pig iron, puddled bar, steel billets and so on in Canada. This will cause an increased demand on the treasury. I am asking the Minister if he is able to tell us what charge upon the revenue this will involve.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very difficult thing to tell; you cannot tell how long it will take the home product to secure the market in competition with puddled bar that is allowed in at $4 per ton less than formerly. There will be a gain to the consumers generally through the cheapening of iron by reason of the bounty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true, as least it is true in a roundabout way. What you take out of the treasury will go to benefit the consumers of iron. It will not go to benefit the people at large. But this matter may prove to be a considerably more serious matter than the hon. gentleman seems to think. I rather think he is underestimating the amount of iron of that class consumed in this country. He says that the maximum will be 160,000 tons. I do not think that the whole production was included. I think that the maximum is something over 200,000 tons. On that quantity, if his calculation be correct, we will have to pay about $4 per ton.

Mr. FOSTER. Two dollars. Our only bounty hitherto has been on pig iron.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In that case there would be two losses to the revenue, the loss, in the first place, of the bounty, which, if his estimate is correct, might amount to between three and four hundred thousand dollars. Then I understand he says—and that I believe to be correct—there is a present duty amounting to $5 per ton on puddled bar. Now, it is quite evident that under circumstances which we cannot see or control, the tendency would be to throw this manufacture into the hands of the Canadian producer, as, between the bounty and the duty, they have a tremendous protection, equal to at least $7 per ton. Should this be the result we may be making provision for throwing away about a million dollars of revenue which we now receive from the customs and lesing about three or four hundred thousand more in the shape of bounties. That, together, would amount to a million and a quarter or a million and a half of dollars. Looking at the great improvements that we know to have been made in the production of iron and the reduction of its cost, it is quite conceivable that that may occur in a period of three or four years.

Resolutions reported.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Bill (No. 128) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act, was read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This Bill is intended to make provision with respect to the counties in which special delays are provided for, including Nipissing, the new electoral district. My hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Mr. Belley) wishes to move an amendment making provision for a portion of the coast similar to that with regard to the Magdalen Islands. However, the House will hear his amendment in a moment. We intend to have an improvement in the ballot paper, adopting the same ballot paper as is now in use in the city of Ottawa. The die for producing it will cost about ten cents each and a die has to be furnished, of course, for each electoral division. I was asked whether the ballot paper belonged to the Government. It does not; the ballot paper is patented. But an arrangement has been made by which, if the Government should choose to use the ballot, we obtain the right to use it for the sum of $2,500. We say that it would be very beneficial to adopt this form of ballot paper throughout Canada for the purpose of preventing the spoiling of ballots. Hon. gentlemen will see by looking at the copies of the ballot paper I have here that it renders the spoiling of ballots by marking in the wrong place almost impossible. In Ottawa, where it is in use for municipal elections, the spoiling of ballots from this cause is unknown. This overcomes one of the great difficulties in connection with the administration of the ballot law. I suppose every hon. member has had experience of this difficulty. In my own constituency in the first election I ran for this Parliament, in one polling place alone there were upwards of thirty spoiled ballots. The proportion in the rural districts is so large as to be somewhat serious. The object of this is to provide a remedy. I will explain the first clause more in detail.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was going to suggest to the hon. gentleman that the provision of the law with regard to giving the returning officer power to return any candidate other than the one having the majority of votes should be amended by this Bill. In the case of a man having been a member of the Local Legislature, he is allowed to judge whether he is a member or not after he has been to the poll, which ought never to be in any case.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The first section is to amend the existing law, which reads thus:

The Governor General shall, except as herein-after mentioned, fix the date of the nomination of candidates at elections, and shall at every general election fix one and the same day for the nomination of candidates in all the electoral districts, except in the electoral districts of Algoma, in the province of Ontario, Cariboo, in the province of British Columbia, and Gaspé, in the province of Quebec.

So that we will have now the exceptions of Algoma, which is at present exempt, Cariboo, Gaspé and Nipissing.

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker. I wish to move an amendment to the Bill now before the House. In the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay we are situated in a peculiar position: owing to the extent of the county the elections cannot take place in the ordinary manner. That county extends from Tadoussac to the northern line of the province of Quebec. There are polls almost everywhere in a territory three hundred and fifty miles in extent, and there is no communication, or hardly any. I think that county should be granted the same delays that are given to the county of Gaspé. Therefore, I move in amendment, that the words "Chicoutimi and Saguenay" be added after the word "Gaspé" in section 4.

Mr. LAURIER. Chicoutimi and Saguenay are on the whole rather a compact territory. It is true that there is a portion of the coast which is sparsely populated, but that portion is traversed by telegraph through and through. All the establishments are on the coast, or not more than three or four miles from the shore. I do not see any reason for making an exception in the case of these counties.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think that the case of Chicoutimi and Saguenay is identical with the case of Gaspé. My hon. friend will recollect that between Tadoussac and Pointe aux Esquimaux, at the extreme eastern limit of the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay there is a distance of over 300 miles. Moreover, as the hon. gentleman knows, the means of communication are rather difficult at all seasons of the year.

Mr. LAURIER. There are telegraph lines.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No doubt; but the Act provides in the case of Gaspé for getting over the difficulty, to a great extent, by means of the telegraph; and my hon. friend (Mr. Belley) wishes to have the same facility in Chicoutimi and Saguenay as is enjoyed in Gaspé in respect to the issuing of proclamations; so that in case of necessity, the telegraph wires may be used for the purpose of the proclamation and for the other purposes which are provided for in the statute so far as Gaspé is concerned. In any case, I really see no objection to my hon. friend's proposition. No doubt, when the means of communication are developed and improved, it will not be necessary to make a distinction in favour of Chicoutimi and Saguenay. But it is a huge county, almost a province in itself, and I fully understand the reason why my hon. friend desires the same facilities in that county which are enjoyed in Gaspé.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not convinced, but still I will make no further objection.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I wish my hon. friend had told me before that he could not be convinced, and then I would not have spoken.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I move the insertion of a clause as follows:—

That section 2 of chapter 13 of Canada be and is hereby repealed.

My objection to the present section is that it places a member of the Local Legislature on a wholly different footing from a judge or an alien or any other one disqualified by law. The returning officer will have the same right to judge of the eligibility of a candidate for nomination as to judge in regard to the case of an alien; he will not possess greater or less powers; he will have the same right to pass on the eligibility of a person to be a candidate in the one case as in the other. While this section is law a returning officer may go behind the nomination which he has received after a candidate has received a majority of votes; he may say that the candidate is not qualified, that he is still a member of the Local Legislature. We should not place that power in the hands of a returning officer, we should not give him an opportunity to pass judgment on his own actions after the time has passed, and thus be able to say that a certain person was not eligible as a candidate, when he had not made that declaration on nomination day. Let me give an illustration. A gentleman who is a member of a Local Legislature becomes a candidate for the Dominion House. He consents to accept the candidature, he puts in his resignation, his nomination is received. Under this provision a returning officer would have the power to declare when the election is over: It is true you have a majority of votes, but you should not have been nominated, and I will, therefore, return your opponent. If the returning officer had made that declaration on nomination day another candidate might have been nominated. In a word, a returning officer will be in a position to be a judge of his own acts, which Lord Esher and Lord Lopes and other members of the Court of Appeals in England say is a position which a returning officer has no right whatever to occupy. The returning officer exercises his judgment when he receives the nomination of the candidates, and if there has been anything irregular and improper in receiving the nomination, then was the proper time for the decision of the returning officer to be given. I consider this proposed section to be at variance with the general policy of law, and one which should not be retained on our statutes.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman proposes to repeal a section of an Act which does not come within the scope of the present Bill, which is one "to further amend the Election Act." The proposition of the hon. member for Bothwell is to repeal a clause in section 13 of "the Act respecting the House of Commons." That does not come within the scope of the title of the present Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These sections might all with great profit have been included in one statute.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I agree with Mr. Speaker, that it is very undesirable to have one Act deal with amendments to two Acts. Difficulty might arise in ascertaining whether the Act is amended or not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We have done so frequently?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not frequently, I think. I would prefer that they should be dealt with in a separate Act. I am very much inclined to the view of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) that the returning officer having once accepted a nomination, he should not reverse his own judgment and declare a candidate disqualified.

Mr. OUIMET. I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) will become convinced when he thinks of it during recess, that he ought to remove that disqualification that he has himself put in the statute depriving all members of Local Legislatures from having the privileges of a seat in this Parliament. I think it is one of the worst laws that ever was put on the Statute-book, and to-day it is more evident than ever, that instead of its being an advantage to prevent members of the Local Legislatures from sitting in this House the same as members of this House have been prevented from sitting in the Local Legislatures; it has been a source of inconvenience and weakness for both this Parliament and the Provincial Legislatures.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman has considered the principle that was involved in that Bill, and I do not wish to detain the House at this last day of the session by discussing it. The hon. gentleman knows that if a member of this House were eligible to sit in the Local Legislature, there would be no reason why a Minister of the Crown from this House should not be a member of the Local Legislature; actually, if he were a member of the minority, controlling the Lieutenant-Governor. He would also have no interest in maintaining the rights of the province as against this House. There would be confusion of jurisdiction and very great difficulty arising out of such legislation.

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) I beg to move an amendment. Under the law, as regards the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, whenever the Governor General shall deem it convenient so to order, on the ground of the inclemency of the season or the difficulty of communication by water with the Island of Anticosti; which, by the way, is included in my county, the proclamation for an election may be transmitted by telegraph. This enactment is to be found under article 132 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. I wish to have the Bill so amended as to bring a certain portion of the county of Chicoutimi under the operation of that clause of the statute, providing that whenever the Governor General in Council shall deem it fit, on account of the difficulty of communication by land with such portion of the county, the proclamation or any other paper in connection with the election shall be forwarded by telegraph. Such provision is to apply to that portion of territory to the east of Bersimis. Winter communication by land in that portion of the territory of Chicoutimi and Saguenay is very difficult, and unless this amendment were adopted, such electors as live in that section of the county would be liable to be deprived of their vote.

I move that the following be added as clause 7:—

Section 132, chapter 8 of the Revised Statutes is amended by striking off in the 5th, 6th and 7th lines the words "That communication by water between the Island of Anticosti or Magdalen Islands as the case may be and the mainland" and substitute the following: "That communication by water between the Magdalen Islands and the mainland, in the electoral district of Gaspé; and by water or by land between the polling districts to the east of Bersimis, in the electoral district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, or between such polling districts and the place of nomination."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I assume that the hon. gentleman has considered this well, because I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. BELLEY. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Is not that provision included in the local law?

Mr. BELLEY. (Translation.) No; that portion of territory is unorganized as yet. To the east of Bersimis there are to be found about one thousand voters. Unless the law be amended, they would be deprived of their vote, and I think the House will agree that it is in the public interest that these electors should exercise their franchise.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

It being One o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Lieutenant-Governor's Residence,
Regina—Improvements, etc. . . . $2,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total amount expended up to date on this House?

Mr. OUIMET. $32,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It does appear to me, looking at the position of the North-west and the total grant we make for all purposes there, that the expenditure of $33,000 or thereabouts, and $5,000 or $6,000 more, for the Lieutenant-Governor's residence, is out of all proportion to the real needs. The Lieutenant-Governor has a salary of $7,000 a year, and after all is said and done, whether we need a Lieutenant-Governor at all is a question. The attempt to keep up these little "two-penny-ha'penny" courts all over the country is one very open to question. My impression is that, as a rule, they do not add to the dignity or honour of the people of Canada, and we would be better without them. Whether or not, in a place like the North-west, it does appear to me that to have a new residence for the Lieutenant-Governor, costing $30,000 or $40,000, when the whole revenue is only $7,000 or $8,000, is preposterous. If we must have a representative of our Government there it would be better to do away with the Lieutenant-Governorship altogether and be represented by a commissioner.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In looking over the accounts I see that the charge for heating Government House last year was about $2,000. The cost of maintaining the Government House there has been in the neighbourhood of $17,000 a year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Maintaining it?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes; the cost of maintaining Government House has been about $17,000 a year. I think that is an enormous sum to spend in maintaining Government House in a territory so sparsely populated. I notice that of that $1,000 was for school purposes. Now, there is a distinct appropriation for school purposes. Whether this $1,000 was for the education of Mr. Royal's family I do not know, but it is entered as part of the expenditure on Government House. I had intended to bring this matter to the attention of the Public Accounts Committee, but the committee has been occupied with other matters and I have been unable to get the information that it is desirable should be in the possession of the House. I dare say the Minister of the Interior may be in possession of these facts and may be able to give us the information we desire. I have no hesitation in saying that an expenditure of $17,000 of public money in maintaining Government House in the North-west Territories is utterly preposterous. The average expenditure for the province of Ontario is only about $14,000, and that has been attacked—whether justly or unjustly I am not going to say here, though I am prepared to discuss that outside.

Mr. DALY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman where he gets his information. Let the hon. gentleman give day and date. It is perfectly absurd, no such sum has been spent, no appropriation of the kind has been made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman may say what he pleases about that. I have gone over the accounts and made a memorandum covering eight or ten pages of foolscap showing the amount expended. But, not expecting that the matter would be brought before the House, I have left the memorandum at my residence. But the hon. gentleman will find that the expenditure is as I have stated. There is a salary for a messenger, an extra messenger, a private secretary, expenditure for heating, lighting, repairs, schools and other items making up the sum I have mentioned. It is something under $17,000, but it is over $16,000.

Mr. DALY. What can schools have to do with the Governor's residence?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not know; but there is an appropriation in the Lieutenant-Governor's account for school purposes.

Mr. DALY. I think I understand now. There is an amount of $1,000 or $1,200 for Indian schools outside the ceded territory.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They are not reported as Indian schools. There are several amounts, one of about $700, one $150, and one $300. I do not wish to be understood as saying that it was exactly $1,000, for I know it was more than that.

Mr. DALY. They may not be called Indian schools, but they are attended only by Indian and half-breed children.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That may be the explanation, but it is entered as part of the expenses connected with the Government House.

Mr. DALY. That is the Auditor General's fault; he mixes up everything.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No; I am not talking about the Auditor General's accounts. I have taken the vouchers as they have been presented to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. DALY. In that $17,000 must be included the cost of furnishing the residence.

Mr. MULLOCK. At page A-63 of the Auditor General's Report the hon. gentleman will find the entries.

Mr. DALY. That is for the office, not the residence.

Mr. DAVIN. The Governor's office would include accounts of a different character. These accounts refer to the Lieutenant-Governor's office at the Government building. The secretary is Mr. Gordon, who is also Clerk of the Assembly. Of course there are clerks in the Governor's office, and my hon. friend is quite mistaken in supposing that Government House is responsible for these expenditures.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My estimate does not include any payment made to Mr. Gordon in his capacity as Clerk of the Legislature, but only that made to him in his capacity of Lieutenant-Governor's secretary. Of course the Lieutenant-Governor's residence is charged with the expense of the office, and the account only differs from that for Rideau Hall in this respect. If you were to include the Governor General's department here you would make them exactly the same. The charges in connection with the office, it struck me, were very much out of proportion to any business that was done.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Gordon acts as Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the Government had brought down the returns I asked for three months ago, and which I have been urging the Secretary of State to lay on the Table, we should have the information with regard to the cost of buildings in Manitoba and the North-west. I heard some hon. gentleman say that the cost of the Lieutenant-Governor's residence would amount to $33,000.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He has got things all mixed up. What the hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Mulock) refers to at page A-63 is the accounts of the Lieutenant-Governor's office.

Mr. MULLOCK. I did not say that the cost of the Lieutenant-Governor's office was $33,000.

Mr. DALY. The accounts have nothing to do with the Lieutenant-Governor's residence.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman who, no doubt, is familiar with the Auditor General's Report, say where the figures for the Lieutenant-Governor's residence are to be found. That report is so voluminous it is almost impossible for any man to master all the details.

Mr. DALY. There is no member of the House so conversant with the Auditor General's Report as the hon. gentleman. I am not as conversant with it as he is, nor do I seek to be. If the hon. gentleman will give me the page of the items of which he complains, and not speak in this vague and general way, I will endeavour to give him the information. But when he makes this sweeping statement that the accounts of the Lieutenant-Governor's office—

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not dealing with the Lieutenant-Governor's office; I was speaking of the cost of the Lieutenant-Governor's residence. Some hon. gentlemen say that the cost will be $33,000. But when all the figures in connection with the construction, fitting and furnishing are taken together, I venture to say that the cost will be over $60,000. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) shakes his head. Let the Government bring down the report I have asked for and which I have teased the Government to bring down for the last three months.

Mr. OUMET. I have just received that report. I received it too late to be laid on the Table at the opening of this sitting.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does it show as to the cost of the Lieutenant-Governor's residence?

Mr. OUMET. The total cost is $28,000.

Lieut.-Governor's residence — Outstanding accounts for works performed, furniture, fittings, &c., to render the new residence ready for occupation—Revote.....$2,879 46

Mr. McMULLEN. Now, here is an item that covers exactly these items we want to know. Now, we want to know what the entire structure cost us. We are entitled to that information.

Mr. OUMET. I can give the hon. gentleman the information. He will notice that this is a revote of a lapsed appropriation given to pay the divers accounts mentioned here. These accounts include papering, furniture, carpenter work, electric bells, glassware, &c.—a total of $2,879.46. These accounts were made when the Lieut.-Governor occupied the new residence. He received instructions to move into the new residence during the fall, and as is always the case when moving into a new house, various fixings were necessary, and had to be done at once, before the usual departmental authority could be had. When the appropriation was given last year, or the year before, I undertook to have all these accounts looked over and controlled. The Auditor General also gave us his services in doing the same thing, and for that reason, payment has been delayed until today. Now that everything seems to be correct, and the Auditor General says that everything is correct, we have to ask for a revote of the amount.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister has not given us the entire cost of the Lieutenant-Governor's residence, including furniture. The item that is before the House only covers the information we have asked under that head. Will the hon. gentleman give us the entire cost of the furniture and everything connected with the Lieutenant-Governor's residence, including the surroundings?

Mr. OUMET. I cannot give him that information now, although I had it on the main estimates. I said the furniture alone had cost $5,000, and my deputy confirms that statement.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the Minister in the same way give us the cost of the buildings, with all the additions?

Mr. OUMET. My deputy says that the new building and everything connected with it, has cost between $35,000 and $40,000. The amount entered in that report is $28,000, but he tells me that the return only contains what was spent during the last three years, and the rest was spent before that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman's deputy say if that includes stables and everything connected with the residence?

Mr. OUMET. No; the stable was built with the old residence. The cost of the old residence and the outbuildings is not included. This is the new residence.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then the old buildings that were there before have been unutilized for the purposes for which they were originally intended? I claim that the whole thing, including the new and the old, cost about $60,000 or $62,000.

Mr. OUMET. As I said, the old residence is not used. The stables, conservatory and all the outbuildings, are those that are now used.

Mr. McMULLEN. Could the hon. gentleman give us the cost of the buildings that are now being used in connection with the new residence?

Mr. OUMET. I am afraid I shall have to get another return. My deputy tells me that it will be easier to give a list of all the expenditures for the new residence, and also the expenditures for the old. I will give it to-morrow.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to know if billiard rooms are erected in connection with the new residence?

Mr. OUMET. There is a billiard room in the new residence, with one table.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not believe that the electors of this country are prepared to endorse an expenditure of this kind. In the province of Ontario, a province that is as well able to bear the expenses of a Lieutenant-Governor's residence as any province in the Dominion, an agitation has arisen amongst the labouring classes and the farmers in favour of abolishing the Government House, simply because it is an expenditure that the country can well do without. If that is the opinion of the taxpayers in a province with over 2,000,000 of a population, I would like to know how we can be justified, in a territory with only 60,000 population, only one-third of the population of the city of Toronto, in spending $45,000 to $50,000 on the Lieutenant-Governor's residence, and paying an enormous annual expenditure in addition to his salary? I notice that the people are rising to a point when they are determined to secure economy in the administration of public affairs, and will not submit to heavy expenditures in connection with the North-west. The Government establishment at Regina has been marked by great extravagance, and the people will not support the proposition to invest such a large amount for a Lieutenant-Governor's house there.

Mr. DALY. The hon. gentleman and the party to which he belongs are entirely responsible for the appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor for the North-west Territories. At the time the North-west Territories Bill was introduced, Sir John Macdonald, then leading the Opposition, took exception to the provision in the Bill for the appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor, stating that the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba was in a position to fulfil all the duties. But this was not acceptable to the hon. gentlemen opposite. They wanted the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories to be created, they desired to find an office for one of their supporters, and Mr. Laird was appointed. The hon. gentleman has talked of extravagance. Let the hon. gentleman go to Battleford, and he will see there that almost as much was spent in building the chimney of a public building as was spent on the Government House at Regina. The hon. gentleman has referred to the old Government House. At the time it was erected, lumber was worth from $40 to $45 a thousand. As to the present building, it is one in which the people of the country obtained full value for their money. It is a beautiful structure, worthy of the Public Works Department, one that will meet all the requirements of the Lieutenant-Governor, and one which twenty years hence will be as good as it is to-day. Adopting the hon. gentleman's own argument, why are not the people of the North-west as much entitled to a Lieutenant-Governor as the people of Ontario? They are people largely from the province of Ontario, and they have been accustomed to a Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not here to condone or condemn the acts of the Mackenzie Government or any other Government, but I am here to deal with matters as we find them. We are not going to be governed by the experience of the Reform Government or of the Conservative Government. The condition of the people as regards taxation, the restricted condition of the development of our resources, our slight increase of population, all point to a necessity for economy, and the people cannot afford extravagance in connection with public buildings. We might allow the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west a moderate house, such a house as the gentleman occupied in this city before he went to Regina. The people of Manitoba will find that the people will not tolerate these heavy expenditures, and they have set their foot down and are determined that they shall not continue.

Mr. DALY. We have heard that from hon. gentlemen opposite for fifteen years.

Mr. McMULLEN. Both Conservative and Reform Governments may have erred. I will not say whether the Mackenzie Government erred or not, but the people will insist that extravagance must terminate, and that they shall obtain an economical administration of public affairs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Minister of the Interior, if he will make a little inquiry into their temper, will find that the greatest want of the people of Ontario is not a Lieutenant-Governor. There is no doubt these are very heavy expenditures to keep up, and the present proposal is likely to operate injuriously against the true interests of the North-west. This statement of extravagant expenditure will prejudice the minds of the rate-payers of the older provinces against extravagance in the North-west, and I would advise the Minister to consider seriously whether the system cannot be reformed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of the Interior has stated that Sir John Macdonald did not want a Lieutenant-Governor in the North-west, but desired the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba to discharge the duties, and that we disregarded his advice. It is perfectly true that Sir John Macdonald opposed the appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west, and that he wanted Mr. Morris to continue to discharge those duties. But the state of things which existed at the time of the arrangement had come to an end. There were people scattered all over the Territories.

Mr. DALY. I thought our railways scattered them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They were hunters, and not agriculturists. We had to send a police force there to protect the surveyors of the Canadian Pacific Railway. A North-west Council was appointed. Some members of the Council resided at the Forks of the Saskatchewan, and if the hon. gentleman's view had been carried out it would have been necessary that they should travel 700 miles to sit in Council with the Lieutenant-Governor. That arrangement was not considered to be in the public interest. When the hon. gentleman spoke about the extravagance on the building at Battleford, he was drawing on his imagination. Nothing could be plainer than the building erected there.

Mr. DALY. No plain buildings could have cost more.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The cost of the Government House at Battleford during the five years of Mr. Laird's administration, was not as much as one year's expenditure during the past five years.

Mr. DALY. I take issue with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is making a statement unwarranted by the facts. It is quite out of place to drag in what happened in 1878. Whenever the hon. Minister, at a proper period of the session, wishes to discuss this subject, I shall be prepared to meet him.

Mr. DALY. I shall be most delighted, and I shall be able to bear out every statement by facts, and show that the residence of the Lieutenant-Governor at Battleford cost more than did the residence of the Lieutenant-Governor at Regina.

Mr. McMULLEN. Not one-fifth as much.

Mr. DALY. It is there as a monument to you.

Mr. McMULLEN. That was before there were any railways.

Mr. DALY. Certainly.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Regina residence was not built before there was any railway.

Mr. DALY. The railway just reached there.

Mr. McMULLEN. And lumber cost $100 a thousand, when the Battleford residence was built.

Mr. DALY. I have no doubt, if it was worth $40 a thousand the Liberal Government paid $100 for it.

Mr. McMULLEN. You better not talk about over-payments. You cannot find anywhere in the Mackenzie Government that there were 1,000,000 feet of lumber stolen as there was in connection with the Curran bridge. If the hon. gentleman is going to refer to stealing or boodling, we can match him any day, and double over.

Mr. DALY. Hear, hear; you can match us any day.

Mr. McMULLEN. We can show you that you carry off the palm for boodling. You have graduated in the business. We never knew anything about it.

Mr. DALY. You are past-masters in the art?

Mr. McMULLEN. We never knew anything about it. If the hon. gentleman is so anxious to maintain a Lieutenant-Governor's residence in the North-west, how is it that there is no Lieutenant-Governor's residence in New Brunswick?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Mr. DALY. There is one in New Brunswick, and a magnificent one, too.

Mr. McMULLEN. How is it, then, that Sir Leonard Tilley did not live in it, but preferred to live in a block?

Mr. DALY. I suppose he found it more convenient.

Mr. McMULLEN. They have double the population in New Brunswick that there is in the North-west, and yet they have no Lieutenant-Governor's residence. The Government have spent $62,000 on this residence in Regina.

Mr. DALY. You say so.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will prove it to you.

Mr. DALY. I never heard it before.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of Public Works admits that there were from $40,000 to $45,000 spent on the new building, and the returns show that there were over $22,000 spent on the old.

Mr. DALY. That is since 1882—during twelve years.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is since the hon. gentleman's Government came into office.

Mr. DALY. That is not spent on the building itself.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is, and the returns prove it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Really, this is a matter which deserves, even at this late date a trifle of attention. We do not object to reasonable sums being expended for the purpose of maintaining authorities in the North-west, but I will just read from this return what has been spent at Regina, not including apparently this last $40,000. It is worth while to see how our money has been going in that part of the country. Here it is:

Regina Council Chamber (whatever that may be), $9,877; Court-house, $6,503; Dominion Lands Office, $329. (How we escaped with that I cannot imagine.) Indian Office, $10,000; Industrial School, $4,872; Jail and Lunatic Asylum, $54,224; Lieut.-Governor's residence (old), $22,371; Mounted Police barracks, $154,729; Post Office, $8,361; Public buildings, dam for water supply, $5,240; Riding and Drill Hall, $41,651.

Add to that the $40,000 which we have just spent and you have, speaking roughly, about $360,000 spent within the course of a few years, in that town of Regina.

Mr. MULLOCK. What is its size?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know, but I suppose if you were to deduct the Mounted Police and Government officials, and those who derive their living from them, there might be fifty families.

Mr. DAVIN. The last remark of the hon. gentleman shows the spirit with which he has come to criticise these items. He said that if you take away the officials and the mounted police there might be fifty families in Regina. Even he, with the extraordinary ignorance that he has shown, and shows, whenever he criticises anything connected with the North-west, must know that that statement belongs to the category of extravagant and vindictive utterances that belong to his preachments on finances in this House. He takes an item there of some $329 for a land office, and he says he is surprised how we got off with that. That shows again incompetency to criticise these matters. The land office is not a separate office. The land office that is referred to there is the land office connected with the Department of the Interior, I presume, and if so, it is in the old court-house. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) and my friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) talked about the amount spent on the Government building. The reason why it was necessary to put up a solid building was because of the expense that attended the trumpery building that was originally erected. The history of that old building is: that a very small and a very cheap building was originally put up, and in order to meet the needs of the Territories—Territories that have risen to the importance of a great province—we required the Government House extended constantly, and for the comfort and health of those who live in it we required to have that old Government House constantly tinkered up. The result was that the old Government House was a most extravagant thing to keep in repair, because it had been originally built and projected on so small and trifling and parsimonious a view. Now, as the Minister of the Interior says, you have a Government House that, speaking in common and ordinary language, we may say will last for all time. You have a solid structure, and a structure that, while a handsome one, is not one that has any extravagance as to ornamentation. It is such a structure as a person representing the Government of Canada, and representing Her Majesty, and who is the head of society as well as of political life in the North-west, should have. Sir, if those hon. gentlemen want to discuss the question as to whether or not we should have Lieutenant-Governors, let them bring it up at the proper time and we shall discuss it. I do not know that I might yield to the general proposition in regard to the whole of them, but if you were to abolish the Lieutenant-Governors in all the provinces, there is one place probably in the whole Dominion of Canada where you would still have to adhere practically to having a Lieutenant-Governor, because in the North-west Territories the Lieutenant-Governor is something more than a mere ornament; he has important duties to discharge as the representative of this Government in those Territories. Now, Sir, let me say this: Never is the North-west brought up here; never is anything connected with the North-west brought up, that North-west which has—although their numbers are sneered at—going on one hundred thousand people; never is any subject connected with the North-west brought up, never is any expenditure for the North-west proposed, that we have not to meet, not merely hostility to the North-west and all expenditure for the North-west from the Opposition—whether the words come from an eminent leader like the hon. gentleman who was formerly Minister of Finance, or from an eminent man like my hon. friend from Bothwell, or from one only less eminent like the hon. member for North Wellington—but we have to meet as well from these hon. gentlemen ignorant constructions of items, maliciously placed upon them, so as to sound in the ears of persons abroad as if gross extravagance were going in the North-west; and the object is to prejudice if they could the old provinces—

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Order.

Mr. DAVIN. Then I will say, calculated to prejudice the old provinces against the North-west. That is the kind of criticism we have to meet, persistently from the hon. member for North Wellington, and spasmodically from the hon. gentleman who was formerly Finance Minister. The latter hon. member when a few items are placed before him, takes up the paper and looks at it as if it were altogether a surprise, and says: "Now, really Mr. Chairman, we must know something about these figures; really, it is too bad." Then he reads out the whole thing, knowing absolutely nothing of the circumstances that might enable him to criticise the expenditure, as on one occasion when from the gallery I heard him criticising an item of hay and displaying such extraordinary ignorance about it that I could not help being amused at such a display from a former Finance Minister.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is in the habit of accusing members on this side of the House, of ignorance. The hon. gentleman affects a superiority of knowledge and judgment, and statesmanship with regard to everything connected with the North-west Territories quite beyond the powers not only of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, but also of any of the antiquies who sit on the Treasury benches. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman will not in any degree succeed in impressing the House with a sense of his superior knowledge or ability by constantly asserting it. I must say—but the hon. gentleman will no doubt attribute it to that prejudice which arises from my ignorance and hostility to the North-west Territories—that I have never been able to see, in the observations which the hon. gentleman addresses to the House, that minuteness of knowledge or that superiority of judgment which on all occasions he ascribes to himself when he undertakes to discuss any matter connected with the Territories. Now, I do not admit for one moment that the people of the North-west Territories are at all interested in that financing which leads to the waste of public money in the North-west Territories. The hon. gentleman assumes that wherever money is misspent in the North-west Territories every one who criticises that expenditure or undertakes to show that the money is misapplied is hostile to the North-west Territories; and he is wanting in those large views which many spendthrifts on many occasions have exhibited in dealing with other people's money rather than their own. I am sure that if the hon. gentleman had in his private possession any considerable proportion of these moneys which belong to the public at large and which he is ready to deal with so generously and liberally, he would apply wholly different principles to their expenditure. Now, we on this side of the House regard ourselves as trustees of the people, and we have some regard for those on whose behalf we act. We recognize this money which the hon. gentleman proposes to expend so lavishly as the possession of the entire population. The hon. gentleman says that the first building erected at Regina was wholly unsuited to the rank and position and character of the gentleman who was appointed Lieutenant-Governor. Well, Sir, that was not the opinion of that statesman whom the hon. gentleman followed with such unquestioning obedience in a former period of our parliamentary history. That work was undertaken during his administration of the office. That building has cost this country $22,000, and it has been abandoned; and I say that if it had been constructed with any care or proper supervision, a building costing that sum ought to have been ample for any gentleman who will represent this Dominion in that new section of the country. The expenditure on that building was quite as large as the expenditure on many gubernatorial residences in the older provinces, and I think it would have been no indignity to one who was appointed Lieutenant-Governor to occupy a building of that cost. The hon. gentleman's friends admitted that the money was misspent. The building has been abandoned, another building has been erected at a cost of $40,000, and my hon. friend read statements to show that $360,000 had been spent in the village of Regina, and the hon. gentleman says that it is an indication of hostility to the North-west Territories to refer to the amount of expenditure at all. Well, Sir, that is not the view the people of this country are taking, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that with regard to all these matters there is a disposition to criticise hostilely; and it is only by the exercise of prudence and care that you will be able to maintain the Lieutenant-Governor's residence in any one of the provinces of this

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Dominion. I say for myself that I do not think that is a desirable state of things; but when you know the public feeling and temper you have to have some regard for it; and if you fail to do so then you will bring about the very result which the hon. gentleman himself will admit would be a misfortune.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to say a few words in reply to my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), as he made some reference to me. The hon. gentleman is ready on all occasions to get up in this House and pronounce every man ignorant. Apparently no man knows anything but himself. He appears to be a modern Solonon, and he talks as if wisdom will die with him. He is quite willing to endorse every expenditure in the North-west, no matter if it were for the purpose of digging a hole and filling it up again; it makes no difference to him so long as the money is spent there; and he talks flippantly about the Opposition's criticisms of that expenditure, and vilifies and maligns and calls ignorant every gentleman who cannot see as he does. We know very well that his remarks in that respect are not confined to the Opposition. We can well remember when, in a very violent temper, he charged the Controller of Customs with being a man ignorant and incompetent, with whom he would not think for a moment of comparing himself; and we remember the last year he compared the present members of the Cabinet to a collection of antiques, and said that he was the funnel of hon. gentlemen opposite, through which flowed into them information and understanding to enable them to discharge their duties. We admit the great ability of the hon. gentleman. I have often thought what a pity it is that such intelligence, ability and eloquence should be buried away back in the prairies of the North-west. Is it not a wonder that some other portion of Canada did not discern the enormous ability with which my hon. friend is endowed and take him up and put him into some, high, dignified position. And if not in Canada, is it not surprising that some section of Greenland or the United States should not have recognized his ability, because he has travelled all over the world and become disgusted at the want of recognition which his abilities met with everywhere, until finally, in his utter disgust, he went off to the prairies of the North-west and there buried himself, and aims at becoming a burning and shining light. My hon. friend unquestionably at times entertains the House, and we are all glad to listen to him; but when we come to deal with matters of State earnestly, he is utterly at sea, but is always willing to condone any expense provided it is only made in and around Regina. He speaks about our animosity. Well, we are not at all actuated by any such feeling. We are here to protect and vindicate the interests of this Dominion by curtailing unnecessary expenditure, whether in connection with the Regina 'Leader' or anything else. That paper has been a pap-sucker for many years under the guidance of my hon. friend. No doubt he makes that paper a fruitful source of revenue out of Government expenditure, and no doubt he does a great deal of very useful work for the party he supports in that particular district. I would advise my hon. friend, when he gets up to criticise hon. members in this House, who, possibly, may not be blessed with the enormous amount of intelligence and the great advantages he has had the privileges of enjoying, to reflect that he is not considered by this House the Solomon of this age, which he fondly imagines himself to be.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have been looking diligently, but am sorry to say in vain, to find what the actual population of Regina may be. It is a terrible oversight, no doubt, on the part of the census commissioners to have lumped in its population with that of Assiniboia, which is divided into four or five counties. Take Assiniboia West, in which Regina is situated, and its total population is 9,800 souls, with a square area of some 66,000 miles, being at the rate of one family to every thirty square miles, and it is the capital of that district in which not very far from half a million dollars of public money has been expended in the last two years. I repeat to the Government and the Minister of the Interior the warning that I have given, that there is the greatest dissatisfaction at the way in which, during the last few years, the people of Canada have been taxed for expenditures in the North-west, which they do not believe to be in the slightest degree for the real benefit of the people there. We have spent several million dollars throughout the North-west Territories in erecting public buildings of one kind or another. Considering its small population, scattered over such a huge area, that is nothing but profligate waste; and it is doubly to be deplored because it renders impossible those other expenditures for the real benefit of the people which I would like to see incurred there. In all human probability, so far as it is possible to judge from the very imperfect information in the census, there are not more than three hundred people in Regina at present who do not derive their livelihood, either directly or indirectly, from Government pap, and a more useless description of population for a new country it is hard to find than those who do derive their existence from the crumbs that may fall from the Government of the day.

Mr. MULOCK. How does it come that this new building, said to have cost some $40,000, and which was supposed to be completed for all time, costs for repairs over $2,800 and $2,500, or over $5,000?

Mr. OUIMET. These accounts have been incurred in divers furnishings, &c. The other repairs, I have explained to the hon. gentleman, were in connection with the engines and hose to protect the building against fire. Then the drainage was defective on account of insufficient ventilation, and in consequence of the very severe weather out there, the roof has been leaking and some of the rooms have been spoiled, necessitating repairs and new papering.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. Minister will remember that the $2,500 he mentioned in the first item was to provide for fire appliances and ventilation. But what is this $2,800 for?

Mr. OUIMET. This second item is for fixtures and furnishings which were necessary when the Lieutenant-Governor entered the building three years ago, and which were left standing, because at the time there was not the proper authority from the department to make them. There were some difficulties as to whether the department was responsible for these accounts or not. And, although the amount was voted two years ago, we have not been able, through the difficulties that arose after the dismissal of our clerk of works there, to come to the conclusion that these different items were due. Since then we have come to the conclusion that these accounts are properly payable, and I am sorry that these people have been waiting all this time for their money.

Mr. MULOCK. Who authorized the expenditure?

Mr. OUIMET. The Lieutenant-Governor had received direct instructions from his department, the Department of the Interior, which was presided over at the time by Sir John Macdonald himself, to move into the new building. It was about the opening of the first or second session of the North-west Legislature, and it was thought proper at the time that the Lieutenant-Governor should move into the new building, so as to do honour to the new representatives. The things charged for in these accounts, being, in the opinion of the Lieutenant-Governor, absolutely necessary for his installation into the new residence, he undertook the expenditure without previously securing authority from the department. The department have taken all the necessary precautions to ascertain that these accounts were legitimately due, and we now ask for a revote of the amount.

Victoria—New Post Office—(Re-vote, $24,000)..... $54,000

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman please explain?

Mr. OUIMET. Last year I asked for an appropriation, which was voted, for the purpose of purchasing a site for a new post office in Victoria. The site has since been purchased from the Canada Western Hotel Company. The price asked was something like $90,000, but after long negotiations I succeeded in getting the land for what I consider was a very cheap price, $75,000. Part of the appropriation, $24,000, is a revote, and the balance is for the purpose of proceeding with the erection of the building, whose cost will be about $150,000. We have not yet asked for tenders, but intend doing so at once.

Mr. MULLOCK. What is the size of the lot?

Mr. OUMET. This lot has a frontage on Government street of 150 x 240 feet depth on Courtney street. It is opposite the new Parliament buildings. This site has an additional value from the fact that excavations have already been made, which can be made use of for the new building. I was informed—and I have made such inquiries as to enable me to say that I believe—that these excavations cost as much as $24,000. As this expenditure would otherwise have to be incurred, it reduces the real cost of this site to a very reasonable figure indeed.

Mr. MULLOCK. The fact is that you have paid $500 a foot frontage for it. Do you compute by the square foot?

Mr. OUMET. Yes. This site has a frontage on four streets. It is a complete site by itself. We do not expect to occupy the whole site with the present building, and we expect to realize a fair amount for what will be left.

Mr. MULLOCK. I am surprised at $500 a foot being paid for a site for a building which was estimated to cost $50,000.

Mr. OUMET. According to my calculation, it only amounts to $2 a square foot. There are 34,000 square feet.

Mr. DALY. Property containing 500 feet has sold on the same street for $700 and $800 per foot frontage.

Cattle Quarantine Station..... $2,000

Mr. MULLOCK. I would like to ask the Minister if he has abandoned the plan that was disclosed in the course of the debate we took part in respecting the quarantining of American cattle, that is, of appointing railway officials as guardians in charge of trains carrying American cattle through the country?

Mr. DALY. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman to-night.

Harbours and Rivers, Nova Scotia..... $27,552

Mr. GILLIES. On this item I desire to bring a small matter, but yet of considerable interest, to the notice of the Minister of Public Works, concerning which I have had some correspondence with him and his department. On several occasions I have endeavoured to get some improvements made at a place called Fourché harbour, a place of some considerable importance as a fishing locality, situated, as the hon. gentleman will notice by the map, on the southern coast of Cape Breton, about twenty miles west of Louisburg, and thirty miles east of St. Peter's. A large fishing business is carried on at this point, and the hon. gentleman will understand how desirable it is that some improvements should be made at this point in order to afford shelter to fishermen, because, for a distance of fifty miles on that coast, on either side of this point, there is no proper shelter or harbour of refuge for fishermen. I had an interview with the chief engineer of the Public Works Department, and that courteous gentleman and obliging and efficient officer was disposed to give me every assistance in the matter. He had a survey of the place made last winter, and a report, I think, is lodged in the Minister's department. There is no construction required at all in the way of a breakwater or anything of that sort; all that is necessary is that a dredge be sent there for a few days, and I venture to say that a very excellent harbour can be made. There is already a good harbour, but it is shut out from the ocean by a small bar. If the dredge were sent there for a few days she would be able to do a good deal in the way of affording the necessary shelter for fishermen at that point. The dredge is now in the county of Halifax, and when she finishes there I would ask the Minister to send her to this point, and if she were able to work there for the remainder of the season, I am sure that such shelter could be secured as we have been for a long time asking.

Mr. OUMET. The hon. gentleman has not exaggerated the importance of that harbour, which is situated on a coast about sixty or seventy miles long, and this is the only place of refuge. But it will cost a good deal to take off the bar at the opening of the harbour—I think the estimate is about $7,000. If it is possible to dispose of the dredge during the fall, after she has done the work she is now engaged in, I shall be very glad to meet the hon. gentleman's wishes.

Lower St. Lawrence—To provide for the establishment of safe landing places for fishing boats along the south coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence below Matane..... $2,000

Mr. LAURIER. How is this to be expended?

Mr. OUMET. This appropriation is asked for to give the fishermen on that coast certain places where they can seek refuge in stormy weather. Unfortunately, a long extent of coast, from 250 to 300 miles, has no harbour of refuge for the fishermen, and in stormy weather they have to land upon the coast at the risk of their lives. We are undertaking to clean out the rocks and boulders at several places, so as to make a place about 500 feet each way, where there will be no stones at all, and where the fishermen can go during stormy weather and land in safety. This is an experiment which I hope will be successful in giving to these fishermen the necessary harbours of refuge, which they ought to have had before this day, if they are to be treated in the same way as other fishermen are treated. I think this sum will be sufficient to make four such places of refuge at $500 each.

Rivière du Lièvre—To provide for settlement of claims for damages to riparian properties by backwater due to the construction of the Little Rapids lock and dam..... $5,000

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to ask a few questions with regard to this vote, questions which I have asked before in the House, but did not obtain the information. Could the Minister give some of the claims which this vote is to meet?

Mr. OUMET. Yes; a number of claims have been filed in the department from municipalities, and from individuals in the townships of Portland East and West. There is one from Joseph Grondin for damage done to his mill property on the north-east bank of the Lièvre. The water at the mill was raised about twelve feet. A claim has been made for $5,500, and the amount recommended to be paid is $951.50, with which I think we can settle without going to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. DEVLIN. I wish specially to ask whether in the list of parties whose claims were allowed you have the names Carroll and Wood?

Mr. OUMET. Yes.

Mr. DEVLIN. What is the revenue, if any, derived from the canal?

Mr. OUMET. The hon. gentleman knows that this work was constructed in expectation of the development of the phosphate business, and during the last few years that business has been at a standstill.

Mr. DEVLIN. Is there any staff employed?

Mr. OUMET. Only one, the lockmaster.

Mr. DEVLIN. What is his salary?

Mr. OUMET. $300 or $400 a year.

Mr. DEVLIN. I offer my congratulations to the Minister that he has been able to place in the Estimates a sufficient sum to cover the claims presented for damages caused by the water being thrown back by the construction of the lock. I am in favour of any money grant expended judiciously in the county I represent, but I must say that I do not approve of the original expenditure in connection with those locks. The hon. gentleman from Pontiac smiles. There is not an hon. gentleman who can approve of the extravagance I am going to point out. The hon. gentleman will remember that his former colleague in the representation of Pontiac had the contract. The facts in connection with this work are these. Here is a lock which has been constructed, that returns no revenue, but the people are obliged to pay for its maintenance; it is a lock which was estimated to cost not more than $44,000, but which up to this moment has cost $255,000, a lock against which there is yet a claim in the department of from $60,000 to $90,000. I do not approve of that expenditure; I do not think there is any hon. member who understands the facts connected with the construction of the lock who can approve of it. I consider it is worse than the expenditure in connection with the Curran bridge or the Tay Canal, for while an expenditure on the Curran bridge may have been wasteful and extravagant, the work will be of public service. But here is a lock, which returns no revenue, which cost, instead of $44,000, $260,000. If that money was expended in the county I represent I regret it—it was a wasteful and extravagant expenditure of the public resources. It is serving the purpose of allowing a vessel to pass up and down; but that vessel passed up and down the river before the lock was constructed. The construction of this work has, however, brought about great destruction of property, and to-day the department is taking a vote of $5,000. That vote I approve, because it is to pay damages done to residents who suffered from the construction of this work.

Mr. OUMET. Unfortunately the engineer who had charge of preparing the Estimates for this work under-estimated its cost, in fact he made a very great mistake, so that the work has cost three times at least the amount estimated. Not one cent has been paid except for work done. No special favour has been conferred on the contractor, Mr. Poupore. There was a serious mistake made in estimating the cost of the work, due to ignorance, inability or a mistake on the part of the engineer who had charge of the preliminary surveys. To-day I am willing to admit that the work does not confer much benefit on that part of the country, compared with the amount expended. But if the phosphate industry, which we regret to see is under the weather now, revived, this work would be utilized, and the revenue over expenditure would certainly compare favourably with that from any other work in the Dominion. It is obvious that the hon. gentleman who has spoken does not intend to be a candidate for that part of his present county; if so, he would remember the great anxiety shown by the people of Buckingham for that improvement. If he intended to be a candidate in the county of Labelle, he would not have spoken as he has done.

Mr. DEVLIN. The Minister of Public Works rose to correct me. He has stated that the work has cost three times the amount originally intended and estimated. The hon. gentleman will perhaps allow me to correct him. I will read his own answer to a question. The question was put by me on the Notice paper last session :

What is the total amount paid out in connection with the construction of the Little Rapid lock or locks on the Du Lièvre River.

The total amount paid out in connection with the locks on the River du Lièvre is $255,384.91.

Add to that the sum of $5,000, to be now voted, and the hon. gentleman will find that my statement a moment ago was perfectly correct, namely, that $260,000 is the figure. I made a further statement: that the claims still held against that canal ranged between $60,000 and $90,000. I put a question also on the Notice paper last year: if there were any further claims against the department in connection with the construction of this lock, and the answer given me, as I see here, was: there is a still further claim for extras of $60,971.74, and the answer of the Minister further went on to say: that that claim was not entertained. So that the hon. gentleman, in correcting me, simply gives me an opportunity to prove that my figures and my statements were perfectly correct. With regard to the hon. gentleman's assertion about my possible candidature in that section of the county, I must say that it has little or nothing to do with this expenditure. If a man, in order to be the representative of a county, or in order to have any chance of obtaining a seat in this House, must sanction horrible extravagance, and must bow to Curran bridge scandals, and every other scandal that is perpetrated, I am willing to decline the honour of a seat in this House, even for the county I represent. I think that such a position is not one that would be to the credit of any one. Such a representation of claims to the honour of a seat in this House is not one that should be stated as it was stated by the Minister of Public Works in this House a few moments ago. I would furthermore tell the Minister that so far as that is concerned, if I were honoured with the nomination for that section of the county, I might have no difficulty in accepting it, nor in coming back with the same triumph I had on the last occasion.

Magog Wharf $2,500

Mr. RIDER. What particulars has the Minister to give in connection with this item?

Mr. OUIMET. The wharf now at Magog is not a public wharf, and it appears that the owner of it is unwilling to give the necessary accommodation to the public. This vote will enable us, if possible, to purchase the wharf and make a public wharf of it. Magog is an important place, and I hope if this money is enough to purchase the wharf and repair it, and put it at the disposal of the public, that the wharf will be able to pay its own expenses of maintenance.

Mr. RIDER. In case this amount is not sufficient to purchase the wharf, is it still the intention of the Minister to purchase the wharf and make it open to the public?

Mr. OUIMET. That will be for the Government to decide afterwards.

Mr. RIDER. This is a very important matter, as the Minister has said. Magog is a very important manufacturing town: the Canadian Pacific Railway passes through there, and the station is very near this wharf, which is an outlet to quite a large lake. As I understand it, the wharf is at present owned by a private individual, and there has been some difficulty in the public having access to it. I think, before the Government would be justified in any expenditure connected with this, that they should acquire the property and open it to the public. Is it the intention of the Government to do that?

Mr. OUIMET. It is our intention to do that.

Mr. RIDER. Has there been anything done whatever in connection with it?

Mr. OUIMET. Nothing, except an interview I had the other day with a gentleman from Magog, who told me he hoped that the amount would be sufficient.

Mr. RIDER. Who is the present owner of the wharf?

Mr. OUIMET. I am not quite sure.

Mr. RIDER. How will this money be expended? Will there be a plan of the works given, and tenders asked for?

Mr. OUIMET. I have not said that it was the intention of the Government to build a new wharf. I said it was the intention to purchase the present wharf, and to repair it and open it to the public.

Toronto Harbour—Works at eastern entrance, &c.; the city of Toronto having contributed $100,000..... $50,000

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works who is conducting that work, and on what terms?

Mr. OUIMET. The work has been contracted for by Messrs. Murray & Cleveland, of St. Catharines, Ontario. Date of contract, 31st of May, 1889. Work is still going on at schedule prices. Work expected to be completed in the autumn of 1895.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the total amount already expended by the Government on the work?

Mr. OUIMET. $249,920.

Mr. MULOCK. Does that include the $100,000 contributed by the city of Toronto ?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes ; that is all that has been paid until now.

Mr. MULOCK. The total amount paid by the Government would be $149,000 ?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes ; but besides that we have expended for the protection of the Island, $135,083.14.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman state how the expenditure in connection with the Island was contracted for ?

Mr. OUIMET. The stone was contracted for, and the work was done by day's labour under the superintendence of our own engineer.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the cost of the stone ?

Mr. OUIMET. I cannot say now.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like full explanation as to this expenditure.

Mr. OUIMET. The hon. gentleman will find all that in the Auditor General's Report of the last year and the year before, but if the hon. gentleman desires it, I shall get a statement made in the department, and send it to him.

Mr. MULOCK. Very well. Is the work being done by Murray & Cleveland, principally dredging the sand ?

Mr. OUIMET. No, it is building and laying cribs. As the hon. gentleman knows, the present work consists of two jetties. The width of the channel is about 400 feet ; and a berth has to be dredged where the cribs are to be sunk a depth necessary to keep the cribs in place after the channel has been dredged to a depth of sixteen feet.

Mr. MULOCK. Do you get rock at sixteen feet ?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. MULOCK. What is paid per cubic yard for the dredging, and where is the sand deposited when it is taken out ?

Mr. OUIMET. The price is 11 $\frac{3}{4}$ cents per cubic yard, and the sand is deposited about a mile out in the deep water.

Mr. MULOCK. How far out does the contract require the sand to be taken before it is dumped ?

Mr. OUIMET. The place is to be indicated by the department. It is to be sufficiently far in deep water to prevent it coming back to the work.

Mr. MULOCK. Who is in charge to see that this direction is carried out ?

Mr. OUIMET. The Government engineer, Mr. Temple.

Mr. MULOCK. Who is in supervision day by day, from morning till night, to see that the contract is carried out ?

Mr. OUIMET. There are two inspectors—one of the name of Kelly, and the other of the name of Hurden.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the Minister say that while the work is going on one or other of these inspectors is constantly in attendance to see that the Government instructions are carried out ?

Mr. OUIMET. Yes, that is my information.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who is inspecting the work ?

Mr. OUIMET. The chief engineer of the department pays monthly visits to the work. The work I may say is done in the most creditable manner, as any man who visits it can see.

Mr. McMULLEN. My reason for asking that question is this : In the time of my hon. friend's predecessor, we had an investigation in the Public Accounts Committee into the expenditure of this very work ; and it was proved that what are known as blind bolts were used ; that is, a bolt with a head, and perhaps one or two inches in length was driven into the woodwork, instead of a proper bolt which is supposed to pass through from side to side and to be fastened by a nut. This was done in the absence of the engineer, and the result was that the whole thing went to pieces when the winter storms came, and the money was virtually lost. What I want to know is whether a Government officer is there continuously to see that that is not perpetrated again ?

Mr. OUIMET. Nothing of the kind happens now. That unfortunately took place with the work constructed for the protection of the island ; but this special work is done with the greatest possible care.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt my hon. friend is anxious that it should not occur again. He says the Government engineer is in charge of the work ? How often is he there ?

Mr. OUIMET. Every day. This is the only work he has to attend to.

Mr. McMULLEN. In the case of the previous work it was proved that the engineer and the inspector were there every day, and yet blind bolts were used to an enormous extent.

Mr. OUIMET. When there were some irregularities connected with the work for the protection of the island, I am informed that there was no resident engineer, but only an inspector. Since then we have stationed an engineer there to see that the work is properly done, and the work of this engineer is inspected monthly by the chief engineer of the department. If the hon. gentleman pays a visit to the work, he will see for himself that it is being done in the most creditable manner.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I understand that when any work goes to pieces, the contractor is responsible. There is no doubt that there is an inspector on the work now. Mr. Kelly Evans is in continual supervision over the work that is going on at the entrance, and there is another inspection of the crib in course of construction on the city side. I would like to say also that there is no doubt that if this work had not been done, it is the judgment of many persons who consider themselves competent to judge, that the harbour would have been practically destroyed by this time; there would have been two or three channels through the island from the lake into the harbour. In regard to the work which is being done at the eastern entrance, from my personal knowledge of it—for I lived on the island one summer—it is one of the finest entrances to any harbour in the province of Ontario. It is 400 feet wide, and it shortens the distance to Niagara and the distance to Montreal by ten miles. Before the works were constructed, when the channel was made by natural causes, I have known steamers in many instances to get stuck in the sand; whereas now we have a magnificent entrance, which allows of dredging to a depth of forty feet or more before the rock is reached. So that when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals consents to the deepening of the canals to twenty feet, as I expect he will in the near future, we will have a splendid entrance there for sea-going vessels.

Lakes Simcoe and Couchiching—
Regulation of waters of..... $5,000

Mr. OUMET. This is to improve and widen the outlet of the lake so as to regulate the waters by means of a movable dam that will be partially removed when the waters are high, and replaced in order to prevent the waters getting too low. I understood this will benefit a large area, three or four counties which suffered greatly from the flooding of the water in the spring, and during the summer there is very little water in the lake. Very careful surveys have been made.

Mr. MULOCK. Where is the dam to be erected?

Mr. OUMET. On the eastern branch of the Severn River. It will not interfere with the running of mills.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad to bear tribute to one good act at least on the part of the Minister of Public Works. The scheme, if properly carried out, will be a good protection.

Mr. OUMET.

Columbia River—Protection of bank at Revelstoke, &c..... $5,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the precise reason for this? Are we the owners of any property here?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The town site of Revelstoke belongs to the Dominion Government. The Provincial Government, some years ago, made a struggle to take possession of it and to issue patents for the lands; but during the recent flood, these works threatened to give way, and cause great damage to the town site. We propose to undertake the work of strengthening the dam, but only intend to do so on its being understood that the claim of the Provincial Government is abandoned.

Slides and Booms—Ottawa District $750

Mr. BRYSON. I would like to call attention to the fact that a dam was built at the Grand Falls, at the head of the Coulonge River, in 1890 or 1891. That dam was built somewhat higher than the one that had been there for many years previous, and has caused considerable damage to a number of farmers for a distance of three or four miles up the Coulonge. For a certain time, the engineer in charge said the dam was not any higher, and that the damage was due to the spring freshet. However, in the spring of 1893, he went over the ground with the farmers and became convinced that, to some extent, the lands were damaged through the construction of the dam. This spring he sent out a surveyor to take measurements of the lands submerged, and I would ask the hon. Minister, since the amount required to pay for these damages has not been placed in the Estimates, that he would have the amount taken out of some other vote, if possible, or that he would send an arbitrator up there to find out what amount the farmers are entitled to.

Mr. OUMET. The report was received too late to bring the matter before Council, and will have to stand over for another year.

Mr. BRYSON. Will the hon. gentleman see that an arbitrator is sent there to ascertain what compensation should be paid, so that the hon. gentleman may come down next year and ask for the amounts absolutely necessary.

Mr. OUMET. I will do that.

Bridges across the Saskatchewan at Edmonton, North-west Territories; the municipality furnishing 25 per cent of the cost..... $25,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is it proposed to build the bridge on a level with the surface on each side? It seems to me that if the railway company have a crossing there, a passenger bridge and a railway bridge could be built in one structure and it might be one on a level with the surface on each side.

Mr. DALY. It appears that the railway, when it passes, will pass considerably below the town. The arrangement suggested by the hon. gentleman was laid before the Railway Committee, but they had no intention of crossing the river at present and it is an absolute necessity to the people of Edmonton and St. Albert and North Saskatchewan that this bridge should be built. The length is about half a mile, not a mile and a half as the hon. gentleman says.

Swing bridge over the Burlington
Channel..... $5,000

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Where is this Burlington channel?

Mr. OUIMET. At the entrance to Burlington Bay.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Is this vote expected to be sufficient to complete the bridge?

Mr. OUIMET. No, the estimated cost of the bridge is $20,000. This is to ask for tenders, so that the exact cost will be known, and to begin work.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I suppose that that means that the Minister intends finally to complete the work?

Mr. OUIMET. If our Government is sustained, it is very likely that—

Mr. HENDERSON. The necessity for the bridge across this channel is very great, and I hope that this year a commencement at least will be made and the work finished early next year.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I agree with my respected friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) that the present mode of conveyance across this channel is discreditable to the Government of the day. The old facilities were not very good, but one day last winter even they left and we were compelled to take to the antiquated mode of crossing in use in the early days of the canal. But with the improvements going on at Burlington Beach and the additional travel across the beach, the present facilities are utterly insufficient.

Mr. OUIMET. That is not the fault of the department. The antiquated ferry had been replaced by a very good one, but it was carried away on the lakes last winter by a storm, and never was heard of again.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). But that was no justification for reverting to the antiquated method of forty years ago.

Mr. OUIMET. That was used pending the decision as to the building of the bridge.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The municipality would erect this bridge in the course of a month or two. What is the object of the Government taking part of the appropriation only? If the work is to be done it ought to be done immediately. Why do a little this year and a little the next?

Mr. OUIMET. This work cannot be done with equal cheapness and care and convenience to the people until next winter. During the summer traffic is very heavy—three or four hundred carriages pass there daily. Plans have been prepared, tenders will be asked for and probably work can be carried on during the winter. As hon. gentlemen may expect to be called here some time during January next, as early as possible—we shall be lonesome while all are away—we shall then ask for another appropriation in time to complete the work.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have no objection to the proposed improvement at the city of Hamilton. Has a careful investigation been made of the cost, and has the hon. gentleman the word of his chief engineer that the cost will not be more?

Mr. OUIMET. The plans have been prepared and if the hon. gentleman has any curiosity on the subject he can see them at my office, as several members of the House have already done. The estimate of my chief engineer is between $20,000 and $21,000. I hope we shall be able to do the work somewhat cheaper than that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why does he not take the appropriation for the amount of $20,000 and let the work be tendered for and carried out.

Mr. OUIMET. I stated that my intention was to ask for tenders. The work cannot be carried through except in the winter. When tenders have been received they will be submitted to Council, and the Government will decide whether they will go into the expenditure. This vote is merely to submit the matter to the House and tell them what we intend to do and get an appropriation in advance. If we do not take the whole amount it is because we do not need it. The balance will be needed next spring when, it is expected the bridge will be completed.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). It is about three months since I was told in answer to a question across the floor, that plans had been prepared for this bridge and the cost would be about $21,000. I know that the city of Hamilton is very much interested in this work and made strong representations to the Government. While I am not finding fault with the vote of $5,000, it does seem to me that the Minister was almost too frank in saying he proposed to delay the work until after the next general election.

Mr. OUIMET. I did not say that. If you have any objection I might drop the item.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I am not objecting, but I am saying, in the interest of the community that a reasonable degree of energy should be shown. It is cruel to the people there to allow any unnecessary delay.

That canal has never been a burden upon the Government, and for a long time it was a source of revenue. It is the entrance to a very important commerce and the crossing is becoming every year more important to the inhabitants on both sides. It is discreditable to the Government to keep these people crossing with the antiquated means we have now. It is true there was a better service, but even that was of a very inferior kind. I think the Minister mistakes very much the feeling of the people in the county represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) and the adjoining county of Wentworth, if he thinks the people will be satisfied to have this work left over for another year when the preliminary work might be going on.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot say that I am dissatisfied with the answer given by the hon. Minister. An appropriation of $5,000 is now made, and he has explained the plan upon which he intends going, and by next spring we fully expect this bridge will be fully completed. I do not think any man could reasonably expect that it could be completed much sooner. There is reason in what he says, that the work cannot be carried on so readily during the summer months, when the travel across there is constant, and the bridge will have to be built just about where the present ferry now crosses. The better season to construct the bridge is in the winter or late in the fall, and as we will certainly have no general election until after the bridge is completed, I do not see that my hon. friend can make very much capital out of that. I am glad that the Government have seen fit to make an appropriation for this bridge. For the last two years I have been drawing their attention to it, and I know that other representatives from that section of the country have done the same; and I am pleased that the Government have at last met our views upon this matter.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I would like to remind my hon. friend that this bridge can hardly be constructed out of a vote of $5,000, and before the House meets again, we will be pretty well along in the winter, unless we get together earlier than we have done this season. I am afraid it will be nearer a year from now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the hon. member for Wentworth will not urge his objection so strongly, that the Government should even drop the little vote we have got.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I did not propose anything of the kind.

Monument to the late Sir John A.
Macdonald--(Revote $7,700.).. $12,000

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). How soon will we have the pleasure of seeing that monument erected?

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth).

Mr. OUIMET. I cannot fix the date. I expected it would be ready to be inaugurated during the fall, but I am not in a position to hope for that now. I received a communication from Mr. Hébert day before yesterday, sending me what was supposed to be a model, or reproduction, for approval. There was something in it that I did not like, and I have written him to correct it. Mr. Hébert is the French-Canadian artist who received the prize for the model amongst forty-five competitors. He is now in Paris working on the statue, which is to be of bronze.

Mr. FLINT. Have the Government decided on the site for the statue?

Mr. OUIMET. Not yet.

Towards erection of the Maisonneuve monument.....$1,000

Mr. OUIMET. This monument, costing about $25,000, is to be erected on the Place d'Armes, Montreal, and we are giving this small amount in assistance.

Retiring allowance to Joseph Rosa, Esq., civil engineer, who spent 37 years in public service, equal to six months' of his salary.....$1,003 75

Mr. McMULLEN. I object to this item. Men who have been thirty-seven years in the public service, and have been receiving a good round salary all the time, ought to be able to provide for themselves. I notice there were two items in the Estimates this year granting six months' salary to two individuals who discharged the duties of immigration agents in the old country, and who received a good salary all the time. The people cannot afford this kind of thing.

Mr. OUIMET. These four officers, three of whom are subsequently named, have been granted a gratuity of six months' salary on account of having been for a long time in the employ of the department. They do not get any superannuation. Their services were dispensed with for the sake of economy.

Mr. DEVLIN. I am not objecting to these items, but I would like to ask a question that has no reference to any of the gentlemen mentioned here. Are the employees of any department, for instance, draughtsmen and so on, who are constantly employed by the department, allowed to tender for works outside the department?

Mr. OUIMET. No.

Mr. DEVLIN. Of course I have no information to give, but I wanted to get the Minister's answer in order that those who are interested in this matter, may understand the position they are in. I put the question two or three years ago when complaints were made by engineers and by draughtsmen who were not connected with the service in this country in any way, that works from which they were able to draw their living were frequently tendered for by employees of the departments, engineers and draughtsmen. I am glad to hear the Minister of Public Works say that such a practice is not tolerated.

To provide for the maintenance of new steamer now under construction in England..... $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What would be the cost of the new steamers?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. $86,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Could not those vessels have been built in Canada?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, at a cost of over $136,000. We have a tender for about that figure.

Mr. MULOCK. What is there peculiar in regard to the vessels to explain the reason why they cannot be built in Canada?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We do not build ocean steamers in Canada.

Mr. MULOCK. Where are they to ply?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They are for ocean and river service connected with the lighthouses.

Mr. MULOCK. Why cannot builders in Canada construct these vessels as cheaply as ship-builders in England?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not ask them.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the hon. Minister does not care to mention the fact that the duty on materials entering into the construction renders the cost of such vessels here higher than in England, and prevents iron ship-building in Canada being a success. I think the Minister of Marine had also to get vessels for inland waters that had been built on the Clyde.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No. All the vessels used on the lakes were built in Canada.

To pay Macdonald Bros. for their services for saving the boiler and engine of the steamer "Napoleon III."... $4,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The steamer "Napoleon III." was wrecked three years ago off the coast of Cape Breton, and Macdonald Bros. saved the engine and boiler, which were valued at about $19,000. This is really a salvage claim. There was no legal claim put forward, but it was considered that this was a fair amount to allow them.

Amount required to pay George Ganley, for hire of tug during fall of 1891, while employed on fishery service on Lake Superior..... $675

Mr. MULOCK. Why was this account not settled before?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The expenditure was incurred by the overseer without instructions. The overseer is now dead. The claim was not recognized. It was subsequently represented that this trip undertaken by the overseer resulted in great benefit to the Government, and that subsequently no less than $1,500 was received in fines and license fees. Accordingly, the account was subsequently passed.

Geological Survey—To provide for the cost of boring for petroleum at Athabasca river. $7,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Was this a successful experiment?

Mr. DALY. It is only now being carried out. We expect to learn the result within a month or six weeks.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this experiment being made at the nearest point in the North-west Territories where the deposits are known to exist?

Mr. DALY. This is where the tar sand is exposed on the Athabasca River, and where there is every expectation of petroleum being found. This amount is required to ascertain whether it exists there in paying quantities.

To pay J. W. Powell, Victoria, B. C., balance of cost of a collection of Indian curios furnished the Department of Interior in 1879-80..... $129

Mr. DALY. This account is for a collection of curios ordered by the late Deputy Minister of the Interior, Col. Denis. It has been in dispute between the department and Mr. Powell. There is no question as regards the claim itself. The papers between the Department of Indian Affairs and the Geological Survey were mislaid, and have only recently been brought to light.

Indians—To provide for expenditure at Caughnawaga, P. Q., in building school-houses, building roads and ditches, and surveys..... $3,500

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wish to bring under the attention of the Minister the claims of an Indian band in the south-western Peninsula. About a century ago, in the western portion of Canada, the Indians received certain islands in Lake Erie. Among other lands obtained by them was Point Pelee, and an island now known as McCormack's Island. A man named McKee obtained from the Indians a lease of the island for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, upon condition of making a payment of three bushels of corn. I believe payment was not made for about a century, and also that the Indian title was not extinguished. By the treaty of 1790 the Indians surrendered all claims on the mainland from the Detroit River eastward to a point in the county of Elgin, and from the river south to the borders of Lake Erie. After the war of 1812 the Indians claimed compensation for their services. Mr. Ellis, acting then as Indian agent, authorized the Indians to enter into possession of Point Pelee. They took possession, with the promise that this land would be guaranteed to them as an Indian reservation. Mr. Ellis died shortly afterwards. No conveyance was made. They remained there until 1863, when a number of hunters and trappers went on the reserve and crowded out the Indians. Those Indians are without any annuity and without any funds. They ask that the Government should compensate them for McCormack's Island, that they should extinguish the Indian title; and they also ask that some arrangement be made between the Dominion and Ontario Governments to allow them to go into possession at Point Pelee in accordance with the promise of the Indian Department. They say that they served during the war of 1812-15, and they went into possession of the Point as compensation to them for their services at the instance of the authorities at that time, who thought it was desirable for the Indian population who were in active service on behalf of the English, should reside in that south-western Peninsula, because at that time there were no settlers of any account in that district except a few refugees from the United States. I think these people have an equitable claim against the Government, and that they ought to receive some compensation. In my opinion there are no persons owning that point, and there are several hundred acres at the extreme point that belong to the Government as a military reserve. I do not know that it has any value as such, and the Minister might inquire whether that may not be conveyed to these Indians as a reserve, subject to the right of the Government to use it for military purposes if they require, and also to make some compensation. I will not go into the case further now. The parties in possession of McCormack's Island at one time endeavoured to get a patent, but the courts held that they were not entitled to the patent until the Indian title had been extinguished.

Mr. DALY. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) has given me the benefit of his knowledge in reference to this matter, as it is a question that has engaged the attention of the department from time to time. The information the hon. gentleman has given me will enable me to go more fully into the matter than I have been able to do during the time at my disposal. The hon. gentleman may not be aware of the fact, but the papers disclose it, that the Indians received the consideration for their surrender of this Point, and as the hon. gentleman has said, the courts have held that McCormack is not entitled to the Point on account of not having a surrender from the Indians. An attempt has been made to get a surrender from the Indians from time to time, but they refused. As to the suggestion that we should give them a reserve on Point Pelee, that is a matter for consideration. It is ordnance land, and has been under lease to some game club, and a portion of it is occupied by the lighthouse keeper there. The whole matter will be taken into consideration at the earliest opportunity that can be given.

Further amount required to meet cost of Royal Commission on Liquor Traffic $10,000; printing, &c.,
$20,000..... $30,000

Mr. MULOCK. What has been paid out in all for this commission?

Mr. FOSTER. I had a complete statement made out, but I am sorry to say that some of the papers have been mislaid. I will give the hon. gentleman all the information in the morning.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the information show the total cost of the commission, and all that has been paid out, including this $30,000?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it will give all the details.

Committee rose and reported resolutions.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

FRIDAY, 20th July, 1894.

Evening Sitting.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the Public Service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1895, the sum of $23,361,432.65 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Bill (No. 162) to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting land in the Territories again considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY PASSENGER TICKETS.

Bill (No. 163) to amend the Act respecting the sale of railway passenger tickets was read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. It is a pity such an Act should pass. We passed a Bill some years ago relating to the sale of passenger tickets, which I thought, at the time, and have continued to think ever since, was an unreasonable Bill. When a railway company enters into a contract to take a person over its road and return, and they get payment for the return ticket, no great injustice is done, if one party should use the ticket one way and another party use it on the return trip. The railway company is put to no trouble whatever and has been paid what they considered a fair price. This Bill, if passed, will be an inconvenience to the public. Any passenger who wishes to get a refund of the money upon that portion of the ticket not used, will have to go to a station agent and declare that he is the purchaser and purchased it at such a station. It is an inconvenience and trouble to which the public should not be put. Every change in the railway law is in the direction of additional restrictions against the public in favour of the company.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I regarded that measure, which was introduced by Sir Charles Tupper some years ago, as a most improper and arbitrary measure, and I shall oppose every attempt to extend it and support every motion made to repeal it. I can well understand that where a railway company sells an excursion ticket far below the ordinary price, they might, with some plausibility, insist upon undertaking to control the sale they made; but to sell a return ticket to a party who may find himself unable to return, who may be taken ill and cannot return, and to refuse to that party the opportunity of selling the ticket to be used by somebody else, is a most monstrous interference with private rights. It is subjecting the people to a condition of inferiority to the great railway corporations. We are being, under such legislation, reduced to the same position as the serfs were by the nobles in the middle ages. It is true we have not arrogant lords, such as they have, but the lords who are exercising jurisdiction and control over us, are the great corporations that are being created in our day. Now, I am not willing to confer this power; in the first instance, I am not willing to make this extension. It seems to me it is a matter of no consequence to the railway company. They are in honour bound to carry somebody for the ticket, they have got their pay, and it can make no difference to them whether they carry "A," "B," or "C" for the ticket which they have sold. They are not putting on any extra car, they are put to no additional expense; and, that being so, it is none of their business who travels upon the ticket. They know they have got their money, and that somebody has a right to travel upon it, as evidenced by the ticket itself. I think this is legislation in the wrong direction. We ought to give some little consideration to the rights of private parties; it is in their interests that these rights are being created. I am not in favour of this legislation. I was in hopes that the hon. Minister would be prepared to go in the opposite direction, and undo the mischief that has been done by one of his predecessors in office.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman mistakes entirely the object of the Bill; it is to prevent fraud. The party may have travelled on the ticket, and the ticket may be presented after it has been used, and the object of the Bill is to prevent a fraud like that. For instance, a party purchases a return ticket from Toronto to Montreal; he travels down to Montreal, the ticket is punched by the conductor of the road, and after he arrives at Montreal it is taken and broken in two, and the return ticket is given to the party to use. If the return ticket is not punched, the party may get upon the train and travel the whole way from Montreal to Toronto, and what is to prevent the holder of that ticket afterwards presenting it to the ticket agent at any place and getting pay for it, though it has been used? It is to prevent frauds like that upon the railway company.

Mr. LAURIER. That is the result of the negligence of the company's officers.

Mr. HAGGART. It is impossible to prevent it. That ticket may be good for a day or two only, and it may be impossible for the party, after coming down to Montreal, to return in time to commit the fraud. But if the ticket is good for thirty days, the party travels down to Montreal and goes back in four or five days; he has used the ticket, has enjoyed all the rights he had under the ticket to Toronto, still, that ticket may be presented to an agent and the company may be obliged to repay that part of the money.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not if the conductor does his duty.

Mr. HAGGART. That is true enough. But at this late hour of the session, if hon. gentlemen opposite are opposed to the Bill, it is only five or six months before another session, and I will not press it any further.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. All this difficulty the hon. gentleman has mentioned is due to the neglect of the conductor. The Bill will put a large number of people to a good deal of unnecessary trouble, perhaps make them lose their money altogether, not being able to comply with the provisions of this Bill. The hon. gentleman proposes to meet one or two instances, perhaps, out of fifty or a hundred, owing to the neglect of duty of the officers of the company. It seems to me unreasonable. I think it is felt to be so throughout the country, and I have heard a great many speak about it.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman states what is true. It may put the honest holder of the ticket who is entitled to a return of the money, to a good deal of trouble. I have tried to guard against that in every way. I compel agents all along the line of the road to have blanks in which they have only to fill in the names and present the blank to the party who bought the ticket. I have heard it stated by people connected with the great railway companies that they are losing $100,000 or $150,000 a year from frauds of this description, and they are pressing for the legislation.

Mr. LAURIER. That speaks very badly for the conductors.

Mr. HAGGART. It may be done in other ways also. However, there is no immediate necessity for pressing the Bill, and I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. MULOCK. If it is the intention of the Minister to introduce legislation next session, I think he might fairly add to such a Bill some obligation on the part of the railway company to pay the money. Now, the practice adopted by railway companies is very different from the spirit of the law. The spirit of the law and the language of the law is that the railway company shall redeem the ticket when presented; but if you present the ticket now for redemption, the railway company does not give you the money; they ask you to sign a receipt or a voucher of some kind, they receive your ticket, and it is forwarded to some head office, and after a while you get a communication that there is something waiting for you, and you go to the station and get your money. Now, that is not the spirit in which Parliament passed that Act. I was not in the House myself at the time, but I remember from reading the proceedings that it was adopted in order to do away with the scalping business, and in order that the purchaser of a return ticket, or of a ticket not altogether used, should not be the loser in respect to the unused portion. The scheme was adopted in order that he might be able to get his unearned portion redeemed, and not be allowed to speculate upon it.

Mr. HAGGART. He is entitled to it under the Act. He need not go to the trouble you mention.

Mr. MULOCK. But he never gets his money. I was going to make a proposition to my hon. friends in regard to the matter. The Bill the hon. Minister is introducing is in no respect a change of the existing law, except that it requires the ticket-holder to sign a declaration; in every other respect he is leaving the law as it is. I was going to suggest that instead of dropping the Bill he should go on with the Bill and add a clause to it that would satisfy my hon. friends, because they would be getting something then by their proposition. I suggest that he cast some responsibility upon the railway if it does not comply with the law; for example: say that if on such a demand they refuse to pay the money, the railway company shall be answerable to some extent, for instance, be liable to lose 10 per cent of the unearned portion. I do not think they should have a right to interfere with the travelling public in that way. Would the hon. Minister put in a clause like that?

Mr. HAGGART. I will consider it, and introduce a new Bill next session.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. HAGGART moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it the intention to prorogue to-morrow?

Mr. DALY. Prorogation will take place on Monday.

Motion agreed to: and the House adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, July 21st, 1894.

Morning Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BINDING TWINE.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Premier to an advertisement which has appeared in the newspapers, to the effect that binding twine manufactured in Kingston Penitentiary is to be sold at 6½ and 7 cents per pound for very best quality, and that it will be delivered all over the country as far west as Owen Sound free of freight charges. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would extend that offer to the North-west Territories.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should very much like to be able to do so, but I am afraid I cannot make such a promise. Companies already engaged in the binding twine business are in the habit of paying the freight as far west as Owen Sound, but we would not be able, without involving loss and without calling on Parliament to make good that loss, to pay the freight on binding twine sent to the North-west Territories.

Mr. MULOCK. I should like to ask if binding twine is being sold under cost?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, it is not. I mentioned the rates the other day, and I forget them for a moment, but binding twine is not being manufactured under cost—the price covers the cost and an allowance for the labour of the prisoners.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that calculated as free labour, or as convict labour?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As convict labour, 50 cents per day, because their hours are shorter and work lighter than free labour. The product is sold at a price covering the cost of the material, also interest on the expenditure for plant, allowance for deterioration and everything that enters into the calculation of a private manufacturer.

Mr. MULOCK. Except the labour.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not excepting the labour, but excepting free labour prices. We charge for the labour, but less than free labour prices.

Mr. MULOCK. A question here arises with respect to goods manufactured by convict labour and the prices at which they are put upon the market. The Government are calculating the price at convict rates, and are placing convict labour in competition with free labour. There is a large question involved; I do not wish to enter into it now, but I want to be sure as to what is the practice of the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That question does not arise in this instance. The labour is computed at 50 cents per day, and it is worth no more than that. Convict labour terminates in winter at four or five o'clock in the afternoon; the prisoners are also later in beginning work, and the work is lighter than with free labour. In addition I may say that we are selling the product at the same prices as the Central Prison in Toronto, the firm at Brantford, and the Consumers' Cordage Company, although I have not made an agreement with any of them.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LAURIER. I received yesterday a telegram from Mr. A. E. D. Morgan, who was a Conservative candidate at Richelieu election, asking me to correct what appears to have been a misstatement made by me. The telegram is as follows:—

HON. WILFRED LAURIER.

You said last evening that I had stated that the Connollys had assured me in the Richelieu election. I never made any such statement, and it would have been untrue, as I have previously contradicted it in the press. I ask you as a gentleman to correct your misstatement.

PROPOSED DOMINION REFORMATORY.

Mr. McLENNAN. I desire to ask the Prime Minister a question in regard to the Dominion Reformatory, as there has been nothing stated in regard to the location chosen for that institution. Has the Government decided on the location, and what time will be occupied in erecting the necessary buildings?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The representations which the hon. gentleman himself made on the subject of a suitable location, and the claims of the county of Glengarry as a site for the reformatory, have convinced me and my colleagues that that county is a most desirable one for such an institution, on account of its position as being almost central as regards the provinces of Ontario and Quebec from which the population of the institution will come, and also the great railway facilities possessed by the district—by Alexandria, for example. If I can, therefore, select a suitable site in the hon. gentleman's own county, I propose to make that the site of the reformatory. The vote of $10,000 is taken with a view of purchasing a site, opening quarries, and preparing plans, and making preliminary arrangements. Of course I must come to Parliament and ask for another vote before the work of construction reaches any advanced stage.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 169) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railways therein mentioned.—(Mr. Haggart.)

WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of the following resolutions :—

1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the Public Service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1894, the sum of $1,217,956.15 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty, on account of certain expenses of the Public Service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1895, the sum of $23,361,432.95 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 171) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1894, and the 30th June, 1895, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first, second and third times, and passed.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

Bill (No. 170) to provide for the payments of bounties on iron and steel manufactured from Canadian ore, was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 143) respecting the Electoral Franchise. He said: A word of explanation on this, Mr. Speaker. The House understands, I think, pretty fully the scheme of this. Briefly, it brought into operation for the purposes of the revision the Redistribution Act of 1892, and it contained a provision for the arrangement of lists for the by-elections, previous to the coming into force for electoral purposes of the Redistribution Act of 1892, and re-arranged the basis of franchise altogether. But for various reasons, which I need not detail now, the conclusion was come to which I announced to the House a few days ago, that all the provisions of the Bill for changes in the franchise system would be deferred until next year, when I hope to present it again for adoption by this House. In the meantime, the provisions which I ask the House to adopt will be found on the last page on the file of hon. members. It is reprinted in the form of a new Bill, but contains some provisions which are in the old.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the hon. gentleman presumes upon the intelligence of the House when he said the House understood fully the purport of this Bill. The thing has been so mixed up that it is difficult to understand it at all. We are just on the eve of prorogation, and we do not know what the policy of the Government may be to-morrow, or whether the Government knows what it may be itself. Their record has been a series of goings backward and forward on this measure. Is the hon. gentleman sure it will be introduced next year?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Of course.

Mr. LAURIER. During the past four years we have had Bills introduced and never carried out, but this time the hon. gentleman says it will be final. I notice that the proposed revision shall commence the 1st of August. Perhaps it would be preferable it should commence the 1st of September, as we are now within one week of the 1st of August, and it may not be conducive to the best interests if we are to go into revision immediately on the close of the session.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved in amendment to the first clause :

The expression "Redistribution Act," when hereafter used means the Act for the redistribution of representation of the House of Commons, being chapter 11 of the Statutes of 1892, as amended by chapter 96 of the Statutes of 1893. The expression "by-election" hereafter used means any election held after revision and bringing into force of the voters' lists for the present year and before the dissolution of the present Parliament.

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that clause 2 be amended as follows :—

Except as hereinafter provided the list of voters shall be prepared and revised and completed for the present year and for any subsequent year previous to the dissolution of the present Parliament, as if the Redistribution Act were in force and for and with reference to the electoral districts as they will be constituted when that Act comes into force.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 3,

Mr. MULOCK. If I remember rightly the 1st June is named in the Act. It simply allows the revising officer any time between 1st June and 1st September to prepare his first draft of the list, but nothing is to be done before 1st June. The date you really want to fix is that on which the preliminary list shall be completed, to provide that it shall not be completed before a certain day. Under the present law he is obliged to have his first list for revision on 1st August.

An hon. MEMBER. Make that 1st September.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that long enough? Nothing can be done in the province of Ontario between now and 1st September, especially in the rural districts, because every one will have his work to do. You will have nothing done between now and 1st September.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is proposed to provide that the revising officer shall begin as soon as possible after the passing of this Act and have the preliminary list ready by 1st October.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would now say "as soon as possible after the passing of this Act."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The public is supposed to know what he is doing.

Mr. LAURIER. The public are supposed to show an interest in their own business.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The preliminary list is clerical work. The restriction in the statute is not to hinder him from doing mere clerical work at any time.

Mr. COCHRANE. The public is not concerned when the preliminary list is prepared.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The notification to the public should not be earlier than 1st September.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The 1st of October.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand that under the present scheme electors have a right to furnish the revising officers with information. So the time between 1st June and 1st August is not merely to enable the revising officer to do clerical work, but to enable the electors to furnish him with information to make up his list. We should allow a reasonable time for the electors to furnish information, so that the preliminary lists may be as perfect as possible. The question is, what can be done between now and the 1st of October. To my mind the real point is to have the list out of the hands of the revising officers within a reasonable time. I think that under the present law they have only to the end of the year to make a return of the list to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The question is whether we can advantageously allow more time for the preparation of the preliminary list without running the return of the lists into next year. The more time is given to the preparation of the preliminary list, the less time will be required to correct it. How would it do to make the date for the preliminary list the 1st of November? There will be no time for the people in the rural districts to attend to the lists until well after the fall seeding.

Mr. COCHRANE. That would not allow time for the annual revision.

Mr. MULOCK. We could extend that time a little, perhaps.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. According to the dates fixed in this draft, the list would not be completed until 28th February. I do not think we can extend the date for the preliminary lists beyond 1st October without unduly delaying the completion. The first proposal was to begin as soon as possible after the passing of the present Act. I propose to make that as soon as possible after the 1st of August, and to make the limit for filing declarations and for the completion of the preliminary list the 1st of October. I think these delays will be enough.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the Minister not in error in saying that if we extend the time for the preliminary list to the 1st of November, the final list would not be published at the end of February?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; in that case I think it would be the end of March.

Mr. LAURIER. It makes no practical difference whether it is the end of March or the end of November when it comes into force.

Mr. COCHRANE. You would have the final revision going on while we are here attending the sitting of Parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. The delays provided here are practically the same as provided in the Act itself. It is provided in the Act that the revising officer shall commence as soon as possible after 1st June; and this makes it as soon as possible after 1st August. The Act provides that the preliminary list shall be ready on 1st August; this makes it 1st October. Under this amendment the final list is to be ready on 28th February instead of 1st December. So that there is the same delay throughout.

Mr. LAURIER. That is quite right—the delays in each case are relatively the same, and that is quite proper. But the only thing I raise an objection to is as to commencing. We are now within ten days of the 1st of August. The members must help the revising officer, if they want to spare work afterwards. They must check the list of applications of their opponents and prepare their own applications.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the revision is commenced on 1st of June, we would have had no opportunity to do the work which the hon. member says is required to be done by members of Parliament. From the 1st of August to the 1st of October, seems to me to be a reasonable delay in which those interested in the preparation of the list can see that the names are filed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think I will ask the House to make the words "as soon as possible after the passing of this Act" read: "as soon as possible after the 1st of August," and to go on and fix the date for the 1st of October for the completion of the preliminary list, and then, according to this amendment, the 28th February for completion instead of 31st of December.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister if he sees any objection to make it the 15th October instead of the 1st? While, in looking at the calendar, there is a great deal of what Mr. Speaker says, when the public had the idea the Franchise Act was to be changed, there was, I suppose, little if any work done during the right season for doing it. The only time this sort of work is done in rural districts is either in winter or spring, or in the fall after the principal work on the farm is over. Now, inasmuch as from the supposed abandonment of the Act, no work was done during the season when the farmers and people engaged in rural pursuits, would have and could have attended to it, they are now left to a season when they are otherwise engaged, and in rural districts it will be impossible for anything to be done until towards the end of September. I think any one who is familiar with the ways of the country, will see that; so I think you ought, for the purpose of the preliminary list, to allow, if possible, a little more latitude, say about the 15th of October.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am inclined to think that in practical experience it will be found that the objection of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) will not hold. If the work of preliminary revision begins in August or September, or a little later, it will be found that a good deal less time will be required, for this reason: that the municipal rolls will be accessible for the work; whereas, if the revision takes place in midsummer, during June and July, these rolls are not accessible. Comparatively few of them are available at that time, and a great deal of labour is entailed in ascertaining what names are on the municipal rolls, and what are not. So I think that in practical operation it will be found that less time and less trouble will be required in carrying on the work of revision during a later period of the year than in midsummer.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I was going to make the same observation. I think for all purposes the 1st of October will be the most convenient time, judging by my own experience.

On subsection 2,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Before we proceed further, I wish to suggest this change with a view of cheapening the revision of the list. I would suggest that the measure be amended by providing that in all cases of tenancy, where it is found by the assessment roll that the name of a tenant on the existing voters' list is not upon the assessment roll, that on the assessment roll shall be substituted for that on the voters' list. Often when a tenancy expires, a good deal of difficulty is found in getting the name off the voters' list, because you must call either the tenant himself or the proprietor for the purpose of showing that; and if the party is of the opposite political persuasion, it is sometimes a very difficult thing to get the necessary witness, and there is always some expense attendant upon the calling of witnesses for the purpose of striking names off the roll. Now, as the list is old and there will be a good many new names, it would facilitate the work and make it very much cheaper for the members upon whom the cost of this work of revision will largely fall, to substitute, in the case of tenants, the name on the assessment roll for the name on the voters' list, wherever the name on the voters' list is not found on the assessment roll. As the list is old, there will be a great many tenants whose tenancy has expired, who are, perhaps, out of the district altogether, and it will make a more perfect list at very much less cost.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That leaves in the hands of the revising officers a very large arbitrary power.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Yes; because identity comes in, and you leave that entirely to him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are assuming prima facie that when a man's name is not on the assessment roll at all, his tenancy has expired. Now, it is certainly no greater hardship to him, if he is a tenant still—but in 99 cases out of 100 he will be found not to be a tenant—it will be no greater hardship to him to appear and to show that he is still a tenant, than it would be to call upon some party to be at the expense of striking off 100 such names.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I mean to say that the revising officer now has the power, and in my opinion, as I understand it, it is his duty, to make entries in a case of that kind. That is if the name of a person is on the old voters' list, and the name of that person as tenant is not on the assessment roll, it is within his power and his right now to make entries as to that, and exercise his own judgment.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think my hon. friend is mistaken. I have had means of knowing cases of that sort. A revising officer who follows the law of evidence will not take a name off unless you produce either the tenant himself or the proprietor to show that he has no longer an interest in the property as tenant.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). As owner..

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am speaking of a tenant.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). But as owner. The revising officers, I think, follow that rule, but not with regard to tenancy. In Leeds and Grenville I can vouch that wherever a revising officer found that the name of the tenant was not on the assessment roll and still appeared as tenant on the old list, he almost invariably struck the name off.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have again and again been refused by the revising officer to strike a name off unless legal evidence is produced. He will not strike the name off simply because it does not appear upon the new assessment roll. Now, what I am asking is that when a man's name disappears from the assessment as tenant, and he is no longer upon the assessment roll, it shall be assumed by the revising officer that he has ceased to be a tenant, and that his name shall come off the voters' list without putting anybody to the trouble and expense of subpoenaing him or subpoenaing the proprietor. The proprietor may be a non-resident, and the tenant may have left a constituency, or may have no means of getting his name off.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I think I can point out to the hon. gentleman where he is wrong, and that he will admit it. Now, it should be left largely to the discretion of the revising officer, because, although his name is on as tenant on the old list and does not appear as tenant on the assessment roll, nevertheless the Act provides that he may still remain on the assessment roll and vote if he has any other qualification. Now, though he has ceased to be a tenant on the assessment roll, he may have become an owner, and still has no right to remain on the list. Therefore, I think your view that ipso facto that name should be struck off, is wrong, because you may be striking off the name of a man who has a perfect right to be on in another capacity, and in that other capacity has a right to vote as such. Therefore, I would leave it to the revising officer.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have known half a dozen cases—I am speaking of what has come under my observation—where the revising officer will not take that name off without evidence. The case the hon. gentleman mentioned will not be touched by this provision, because if he has become a proprietor, his name would appear on the assessment roll as such, and there would be no reason for taking him off. He will be left on for another reason.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Not necessarily. He may have only recently purchased.

Mr. COCHRANE. He may be a tenant within the meaning of the Franchise Act, and not be assessed as a tenant on the assessment roll.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My hon. friends will find that they will have thrown upon themselves the expense of at least one dollar for every name they attempt to get off. If there is a revising officer in this country that takes a name off on any other testimony than that of the party himself, he takes it off on evidence that is not warranted by the law.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Even though he is dead. Does the hon. gentleman not know that if a man is dead, the revising officer strikes his name off as a matter of course?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). When you have proved him dead.

Mr. SPEAKER. Besides that, the revising officer takes the assessment roll and frames additions on prima facie evidence offered by that roll. Of course, it may be subsequently attached.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I can show an assessment roll in which tenants who occupied property in succession stand there as tenants for the same property. So long as the law remained what it is, that is the legal consequence.

Mr. SPEAKER. Evidence can be produced that a man who is on the assessment roll is not the tenant of the property in question, and surely it will be very easy to prove that some one else is tenant.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose a proprietor of property in Kent resides in Toronto, how could he be able to tell whether the present tenant's name alone is on the list? It might be necessary to bring witnesses long distances in order to establish the fact.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). That would be part of the natural work of the revising officer, and it would come within the scope of his authority.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Perhaps a clause to this effect would meet the case: "When the revising officer has ascertained that the tenant has lost his qualification as such, and has not other qualification, he may omit his name from the preliminary list, and substitute the name of the tenant who succeeded him."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The assessment roll should be taken as prima facie evidence and assumed to be correct.

Mr. SPEAKER. We made a provision that a voter's name shall not be struck off the list if he has a qualification other than that for which he is entered on the list. The hon. gentleman proposes that if a man ceases to be a tenant in one particular part of a town or city, and is still a voter under the Act through some other qualification, his name shall be first struck off by the revising officer, and the man will then be put to the trouble and expense of having the name again put on the list. Is it any greater trouble and expense to those looking after the revision of the lists to attack the qualification of a man not entitled to vote than it would be to a person who is entitled to vote being called upon to again apply to have his name on the list? He may have another qualification, he may have rented another property in the same subdivision, or he may have a qualification under income. That would not appear on the assessment roll.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). All these matters should appear. The list should show the ground on which the man is qualified. There is very little trouble or expense in having the name placed on the list. His name should not stand on the list as being qualified for property with which he has parted, or of which he was tenant years ago.

Mr. MULOCK. The suggestion of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is in harmony with the spirit of the Act. The express language of the Act is that the assessment roll shall be prima facie evidence of the right to vote.

Mr. COCHRANE. The assessment roll would not show any financial qualification unless he was assessed for property.

Mr. MULOCK. Would not the assessment roll show the wage-earner who pays taxes in any other respect than as a wage-earner?

Mr. COCHRANE. No, a man could be a tenant under the meaning of the Franchise Act, and not appear on the assessment roll as a tenant at all. I may have 200 acres of land, and I may rent 50 acres, to avoid having to do too much work and if I split up the property and be on the assessment roll for two distinct amounts, the statute labour is a great deal higher than it would be if I assessed myself. I may have a man renting from me and he would not be on the assessment roll at all only as a manhood franchise voter.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is a fraud.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think it is, it is often done.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

BIRTH OF AN HEIR-APPARENT.

If there is no objection, I would move that the House adjourn until 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1894, and the 30th June, 1895, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.

to which I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words :—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Fourth Session of the Seventh Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In bringing to a conclusion this laborious session of Parliament, I have to thank you for the assiduity and zeal with which you have attended to the various matters which have been brought before you.

I congratulate you upon the notable fact that the invitation which my Government extended to the Governments of the other Colonies to send representatives to Canada to confer on matters affecting their mutual interests was so promptly accepted; and that Her Majesty's Government also enhanced the dignity and usefulness of the Conference by sending a representative to assist at its deliberations. It is confidently hoped that the results of the Conference will be found beneficial to the Colonies and to the Empire generally.

The ratification of the Treaty of Commerce with France will lead, I hope, to a large increase in our exports and an extension of friendly relations with that country.

I trust that the arduous work which has engaged you in readjusting the Duties of Customs will accomplish the desired result of adapting the tariff to the present conditions of the various classes of our population.

The Statutes of the session will show that the laws affecting many public interests have been revised and greatly improved by your efforts, and I observe that you have likewise made generous provision for public improvements which are designed to increase the facilities for travel and transportation throughout the country.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provision which you have made for the services of the current year.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In relieving you from your present duties I pray that your labours may be fruitful of benefit to the country and that on returning to your homes you will find that a generous harvest is about to reward the toil of our farmers and that the blessing of Providence has been likewise bestowed abundantly on all the other interests of the people whom you represent.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the first day of September next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the first day of September next.
