I did not mean, when I rose, to speak at such length. I only wanted to say that I thought certain things in the tariff were struck unduly, but so far as the whole tariff is concerned, I do not think it has gone far enough. It has, however, gone very much further than the tariff of hon. gentlemen opposite, and is going in a direction that will produce in the people not only thought but, by experience, action. I welcome and shall, while here, continue to ask more and more for that broad liberty that makes the trade of a nation, and thus follow in the footsteps of that little island which, small as it is, has far greater trade and wealth than any other country in the world, and not only competes with the world, but surpasses all other countries year after year, in everything that tends to a nation's greatness.

Mr. MACLEAN. I desire to take up the time of the House but for a few moments in order to reply to one or two remarks of the hon. gentleman. As regards his reference to myself and my election in East York, I can only say that in those sections which gave a majority against me that majority has been reduced; but one township is Conservative which was formerly against me, and that another township is just on the verge of becoming Conservative, and I hope that in the next election we will even convert Markham Township. If that change of opinion has taken place in the county of York, it is because it has the finest home market of any township in Canada. It is because the National Policy has built up Toronto into a city of 200,000, and furnishes the finest home market we have in the province. Not only does that market make the prices of the county of York, but for the whole of Ontario. The principle of protection, if carried out and realized, as it ought to be, would build up cities all over this country and thus create home markets for our agriculturists. The hon. gentleman professed to speak for the farmers, but what do the facts of history teach? First, that the protective principle is the most growing principle recognized in economics. The farmers of Ontario are protectionists; the farmers of the United States are protectionists; and, if there is a class of farmers in the world who are rapidly becoming protectionists, that class is the farmers of free trade England. It is a significant fact that in free trade England this is the tendency among the farmers. The farmers of Germany and the farmers of Russia are also becoming, more and more, protectionists; and the result will be that the farmers all over the world will set the example and be the most pronounced protectionists of all producers. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) the other night said it was his intention and the intention of his party to eradicate the erroneous doctrine of protection. We intend to hold them to that. We intend to go to the country in the next election on the protectionist principle. They have their opportunity now, and they are trying to wipe out that principle, but they will find out that they have made the mistake of their lives. We know how they got into power; they certainly did not get into power with a mandate from the people to eradicate the principle of protection. I see my hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. McGregor) waving his hand. I hope he will take occasion to tell us how the abolition of the duty on corn will affect his riding.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I will take care of myself.

Mr. MACLEAN. Notwithstanding what these gentlemen say, as I have already stated, the principle of protection is the most pronounced and progressive principle of economics to-day. Cobden made the prophecy years ago that protection would be wiped off the face of the earth. But that has not been realized, but, on the contrary, men are becoming more and more protectionist all the world over. Protection is a principle for which a scientific reason can be given. It is the one principle which will build up a nation. Protectionists hold that you can regulate your tariff policy so as to keep your own markets for your own products and your own work for your own workpeople. That principle has been proven and vindicated by experience. The people do believe in it; and as hon. gentlemen opposite attack that principle and propose to eradicate it, they are writing their own death-warrant. To illustrate the point: we will call this country of ours a farm. The Conservative party put up good fences around that farm. Hon. gentlemen opposite have undertaken to throw down the fences and let in the foreign cattle. Not only that, but they have turned their dogs upon the flocks upon the farm in the shape of this combine clause, and in that way they propose to harry the sheep of national industry. But when they go to the country, when the people understand what is being done, and especially, when the farmers of Ontario know that it is the deliberate intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to give the market of Canada to American corn and wheat and to Australian mutton—and they say that in this they have only begun the work—it will be found that their greatest opponents in this country, those who will condemn them most strongly will be the farmers, who do believe in a protective policy.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I rise simply to correct a misapprehension which grew out of an error on the part of some hon. gentlemen quoting the former protectionist tariff of New South Wales. It is well known that New South Wales was a free trade colony, but it relapsed into the mire of protection. But it did not stay there long, and the protectionists tariff which was inflicted upon the people, was soon wiped out. We were told a little while ago of the duty on various articles. Lumber and timber of all sorts and descriptions whether battens or boards, logs or deals, dressed or planed in any form or fashion are absolutely free.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And other articles that my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) mentioned as bearing heavy duties are also free.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friends seem to have got light during the dinner hour. But none of them knew these things before dinner.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a good thing to know them after dinner.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We had not the document at hand at the time, and preferred to quote from that.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) or the Minister of Finance if they will give some information to the House. There will be very strong competition in mutton from Australia, and from New South Wales especially, as it has been practically decided to come within the category under clause 16. It might be well therefore if the Controller of Customs or the Minister of Finance would give the House a little information. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) went into a long and elaborate argument as to how much competition in agricultural products we might expect from Great Britain. But, on the other side of the country, it does not need even his argument to establish the fact. Great Britain may or may not compete with us according to the hon. gentleman's argument, in agricultural products. I do not think it was very necessary to speak about that in this House. But it is a certainty, a dead certainly, that in lines of agricultural products which are very important in this country, New South Wales and through New South Wales the whole of the Australasian colonies, will compete with us and be a formidable competitor. Now, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Laurier) told us that before they introduced clause 16 to the House, they had very carefully considered the whole matter, so carefully considered it that they were quite willing to take all the consequences that came—not blindly, but because they had considered the question and knew what the consequences would be. Now, I would like to know from my hon. friend if he will give the House some idea of how much competition, and in what articles, we shall have from New South Wales. That is a matter that we should know now. My hon. friends were very quick when they proposed to allow the one-eighth reduction in regard to Great Britain, to raise the duties on some articles, evidently because they were not prepared to leave the "mire of protection" that my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) has spoken of so picturesquely. The hon. gentleman actually stands up here to-night and talks about the laudable example of New South Wales leaving the "mire of protection" and getting upon firm standing ground of free trade. But my hon. friend and his colleagues were so enamoured of this "mire of protection" that before they would allow Great Britain to compete in manufactured articles with the producers of Canadian industry, they added an overlapping stratum, so to speak, of this "mire" before they would allow it to be scraped off to a slight extent by the one-eighth reduction. Is it simply a play upon words with my hon. friend when he lapses into that expression the "mire of protection?" The hon. member for Guysborough said words were nothing, that you must judge a man by his acts. If that reasoning holds, we are compelled to believe that the words of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) mean nothing, because, in the case of cottons and several other articles, they made that "mire" deeper before they allowed a little of it to be scraped off by the reduction on British goods. Now, when you come to farmers' products and find yourself face to face with a competition in these products, ought you not take into consideration whether you should not raise the protection a little before you apply the one-eighth, and, by-and-by, the one-quarter reduction? Why, it is the singling out of one product and acting with regard to it so as to raise its vantage ground, and the singling out of another product and so acting with reference to it that you actually lower its vantage ground. What is the principle, the basis of action in the matter? Now we are upon this clause with reference to the farmers' products, we would like to know what is the competition that we may expect from New South Wales, as that is the embarking point for our steamers that ply to this side. The question was well raised and has not been met, as to how you are to distinguish between mutton that comes from New South Wales, and mutton that comes from any other Australian colony, and which is put on board the steamer at Sydney. Practically, under the reduction, it is opening the market of the farmer, especially of the North-west and British Columbia, to a competition along the whole line of the farmers' products. You are taking off the reduction, you have not heightened the protection before you took off the reduction. Why was it not done in this case? Will the Controller of Customs be kind enough, as he has looked over the whole field and has come to his decision that New South Wales comes under this clause, to tell us what we may expect as the competition from New South Wales on our western border, in respect to agricultural products?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the worst misfortune that any country can endure is that the people are able to get cheap and good articles. If you want to help the farmers the way is to cheapen the cost of production to them, and by reducing the tariff so that they can produce cheaply.

Mr. FOSTER. And my hon. friend was so solicitous not to do it that he puts what he calls a high protective tariff on farmers' articles for the whole of eastern and middle Ontario, but he has not reduced the protection at all, with the single exception of corn and wheat. What is the use of my hon. friend trying to turn the argument by an ejaculation of that kind?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend the Controller of Customs was in conversation with an hon. member, and did not catch the question of the ex-Finance Minister, so I will reply to it. It is not correct to say that the Controller of Customs has decided that the tariff of New South Wales entitles the products of that country to the benefits of the reciprocal tariff. What I said this afternoon, in answer to the hon. gentleman's question, was that the Government had not taken action on that point. No action has been taken to determine that the colony of New South Wales is entitled to those privileges. But I thought it was only fair to say to the hon. gentleman that my impression of the New South Wales tariff was such that it would probably become entitled, and therefore I did not object to their proceeding on that basis. But it is a fact that no formal action has been taken. I was surprised to find the hon. gentleman from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) dispute the statement that New South Wales was a free trade country, and to read from a book what might fairly be presumed to be evidence which was against my statement. I was surprised, and I thought that I had better turn up the tariff and refresh my memory in regard to it. Having turned to the tariff, I see that my hon. friend was misled, and that he did not have the latest tariff.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman had an opportunity of seeing this book, it was published in 1897 and gives the tariff precisely as he stated. But an Act was passed after the publication of that tariff, and I find that it is contained in this book that I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce to lay upon the Table. That Act provided that after a certain time these duties would disappear. That was really what has taken place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I made the statement off-hand, while at the same time saying that the Government had taken no action upon it.

Mr. SPROULE. You said you had looked over every country from pole to pole.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said that New South Wales was a free trade country, and I heard the contradiction with surprise. However, I think the hon. gentleman will now admit that the latest tariff establishes the fact that New South Wales is practically a free trade country, that is not to say that everything is free, but that my statement is substantially correct. Now, my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance wants to know how we are going to distinguish between mutton from New South Wales and mutton from some other part of Australia. I suppose we shall have to distinguish in the same way as we would if my hon. friends had their preferential tariff in force, according to their own particular ideas of what such a tariff should be. The leader of the Opposition said that by certain arrangements we might have obtained some concessions in return for this, and then we should have given them this privilege. The hon. gentleman must see that any objection he might take, arising from the possibility of confusion between the products of New South Wales and the products of some other country, would arise under any preferential treaty that you might attempt to establish, and if it is an objection to our proceeding, it would be equally an objection to the proceeding of the hon. gentleman himself. I admit it is the same question, in another form, as was suggested by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) in a previous discussion with regard to English and German goods. There are possibilities of that nature, but I do not think that because such difficulties exist, we should therefore withdraw from what we deem to be a sound policy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The difficulty is very much increased in this case, because Sydney, New South Wales, is the point from which, at present, our shipments come from Australia, it is the port of departure for the steamers to Canada.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As London and Liverpool are the chief points of departure for our steamers from Great Britain and the continent, the same principle applies. I admit there is a difficulty which we may have to meet as best we can. The ex-Minister of Finance asked, what is the probable competition? Well, as I have already intimated, I have not gone into that matter at all minutely; but if my hon. friend will look at the statistics he will find that whatever danger, if you call it a danger—from our point of view it is not a great danger—but the chief danger would be the competition of animals and their products. He will find that the chief exports from New South Wales that are likely to come into Canada are animals and their products. But if my hon. friend will look at the figures he will find that, although fresh mutton and lamb are not advanced products in the way of manufactures—if anything can be called raw material, probably they can be—yet they receive their full share of whatever protection there is in the tariff. The rate of duty is 35 per cent, the highest rate that is imposed on any cotton goods. If you reduce this rate by the eighth and afterwards by another eighth under the reciprocal tariff, you still have 26½ per cent, a pretty high rate. Therefore, the idea that the farmer is not getting his fair share of protection is, I think, a mistake. If you are to consider the matter from a protective point of view, surely it is not too much to say that if the farmers of New South Wales can send their mutton across the ocean into Canada, and override a duty of 26½ or 26¼, I must say I think that is not a very illegitimate competition, and I do not think that our farmers are going to be very much alarmed by it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend able to tell us what the exports are of New South Wales in the way of those agricultural products that he thinks will compete with us?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I had the figures this afternoon, but I sent them back. They can be found in the library.

Mr. FOSTER. They must be immense, and the difficulty is emphasized by the fact that the cheapness with which they produce these, is so great that the price comes to be almost nominal, and the ad valorem duty of 35 per cent becomes, therefore, almost inappreciable as a protection. Will the Controller of Customs, who has looked into the matter, tell us what would be probably the average export price from New South Wales of mutton? Then we could come to a conclusion as to what the protection of 35 per cent would probably give us.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. In our trade returns it is not separated from the other. I think the Trade and Navigation Returns show something under 3 cents a pound. I suppose that will be the price at the point of shipment. I think that the imports for consumption from Australasia are not given separately in our tables here, they would come in among other goods, and the total from other countries is only $413,000. Of course one large item of import from Australasia is that of wool, which the hon. gentleman knows, under his tariff, and which is maintained under this tariff, is free, and that would, perhaps, be by far the largest item of our imports. I think the hon. gentleman, though, is not saying what is improbable, that there will be importations of the article that we are considering now, and possibly some other articles that enter into competition with our farmers. But I repeat what the Finance Minister has clearly stated, that so far as the item is concerned, even with the eighth or quarter reduction when it comes about, the farmer will be in as good a position as the manufacturer, who, as he has pointed out, is receiving what, in his judgment, and correctly so, is about the highest amount of duty conceded to any article. Thirty-five per cent is about the highest rate we give, except on one or two specific articles of manufacture; and the hon. gentleman will see that this item is 35 per cent, subject, of course, to the reduction, which will also be applicable to cottons and other articles.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman does not grasp the point exactly. It is very well to say that 35 per cent is a good all-round protection; it is prima facie, but it all depends, in a case of this kind, as to the cheapness with which the product may be raised in the competing countries. I take it that the hon. gentleman will not, for a moment, traverse the ground that the cost of the production of sheep in New South Wales, as compared with the production of sheep in Canada, with our long winter season, is very different, and it is well known that sheep cannot be raised nearly as cheaply in Canada as in New South Wales. Would it surprise the hon. gentleman to learn that mutton can be put on board ship at point of embarkation in New South Wales or Australia at very little over 1 cent a pound? What is 35 per cent against that cheap price?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is not taking his figures from our trade returns.

Mr. FOSTER. I take the rate, not from our trade returns, but from the returns of the sheep trade in Australia. 2 cents per pound at the point of shipment is a good price.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman give his authority for that statement?

Mr. FOSTER. I give that price because I have looked into the question; that is the result at which I have arrived from an examination of the subject. The whole matter was gone into when the Australian conference was held here. We discussed the question a good deal. I know that in certain seasons, especially for export, the price of that article is very cheap indeed. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that 35 per cent is very good protection. It would be under equal conditions, and if the New South Wales farmer raised sheep under the same conditions, climatic and otherwise, as we do in Canada, but the circumstances are so different that 35 per cent amounts to very little protection. What I fear is that with the impetus that will be given by the one-eighth and later the one-fourth reduction, we will injure the position of the farmers in British Columbia and in the North-west who hope to supply the British Columbia market, and that they will find that this competition will throw them off their hope of supplying the miners' market in that province. I do not think it would be unwise to raise the protection upon this article before the one-eighth or one-fourth reduction comes into force.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will give the hon. gentleman some little information as to the course of trade. I have here a statement showing the amount of imports from Australasia during the last three years. This return includes butter, cheese and meats. In 1894, we imported from all Australasia, the whole five colonies, products to the value of $43,000; 1895, $22,906; 1896, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the ex-Finance Minister on this subject. He is wonderfully solicitous in regard to the interests of the farmers in the western part of this country, and he points out the dangerous competition which will ensue in case we accord preferential treatment to the Australian colonies. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman has made a considerable right-about-face since 1894, at the time when he, together with other members of the then Government attended the Intercolonial Conference at Ottawa. The hon. gentleman, in welcoming the representatives from Australia dealt with this very question of giving them preferential treatment in our market, and at that time the hon. gentleman personally moved a resolution in the conference in which he proposed that there should be preferential trade with different members of the Empire, and he wound up that resolution with the following clause:—

That, impeding the consent of the mother country to such an arrangement in which she shall be included, it is desirable that the colonies of Great Britain, or such of them as may be disposed to accede to this view, take immediate steps to place each other's products on a more favoured customs basis than is accorded to the like products of foreign countries.

In the discussion which arose the hon. gentleman had pointed out to him by the representatives of the Australian colonies that mutton was produced in those colonies at a remarkably low rate. I think the hon. gentleman has practically quoted the references made at that time.

Mr. FOSTER. I think so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One of the representatives stated that the wholesale price of mutton in Sydney market was 2 cents per pound. The hon. gentleman moved a resolution pointing in that direction, asking that the Australian colonies should have preferential treatment in our market, and, at that time, the duty placed on Australian mutton coming into our country was 35 per cent, exactly the same duty now placed on it by our tariff. The hon. gentleman proposed that those colonies should have preferential treatment just as we do now; but we provide that they admit our products at the same rates as we admit theirs. The hon. gentleman assumes an entirely different position from that which he held at that time, when he criticises the opening of our market and exposing our farmers in the western part of the country to this extraordinary and most hurtful competition, which he then was moving in favour of adopting.

Mr. FOSTER. The change of aspect is entirely due to the peculiar mental condition of the hon. gentleman. He has failed to grasp the difference between us. He is correct in stating that I moved the resolution and spoke in favour of preferential arrangements between Canada and the Australian colonies. What is the meaning of "preferential arrangements"? When the hon. gentleman says that my proposal at that time was exactly what the Government are carrying out now, my hon. friend will see that his ground is not tenable at all. Is this a preferential condition? Why, every country in the world gets into the New South Wales market with its products on exactly the same terms as Canada does.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher. That does not make any difference.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, does it not? That is, it does not make any difference as to whether my hon. friend and myself, having a large range of products, shall make a mutual bargain between ourselves that we shall give to each other certain concessions that shall solely belong to each, or, that I shall give certain concessions to my hon. friend in the course of trade which no one else shall have access to, provided he will give me certain concessions that every person in the world with like products shall have access to. Is there no difference between the two? It only needs to be stated to show the difference. What you are giving is a one-eighth and a one-fourth reduction, without any preference in the New South Wales market, because every country in the world goes into that market on just exactly the same level of duties as Canada does. What I contemplated, and the whole essence of it was, that there should be an arrangement made between the other colonies and Canada, by which we should get a preferential position in their markets, in return for giving them a preferential position in our market. That is, that when Canadian goods went into the Australian colonies they should go in at an advantage as compared with the goods of every other country, and that when Australian goods came into our market they should come in at a preference over the goods of every other country in the world—Great Britain in both cases was exempted as being part of the Empire. I am not open to the charge of inconsistency, for to-day I hold just as strongly to that position as I ever did. But that is not the position which is assumed by the Government to-night. You are giving New South Wales a preferential position in our market, but New South Wales treats your goods in her markets just the same as she treats the goods of the United States. My hon. friend may think his proposition the better one, but neither of us is inconsistent in the matter. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) said that the amount of our imports from New South Wales was so small, that it did not matter. That was a very good argument for my hon. friend the Patron representative (Mr. Rogers). He mentioned it to-day, but his chosen leader (Sir Richard Cartwright) has just burst that argument so to speak. It is not fair to suppose that under the protective tariff, for the last three years, that when you give them 25 per cent of an advantage you are not going to get a largely increased trade. It must also be remembered that up to this time the population in British Columbia was comparatively small. It was Canada, that is eastern Canada, that was looked upon as the possible market for Australian mutton, but the very moment you put an immense mining and consuming population on the western slope, that very moment you change the conditions, and you make it worth the while of New South Wales to take up the market. In view of that, and in view of the 25 per cent advantage, it is fair to suppose that the trade will be much greater. On meat worth 2 cents, or less than 2 cents a pound, 35 per cent is a very small protection, and I should very much like to see it raised.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How much do you think the duty should be?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, considering that we all like the farmers so much now, I think you ought give them at least as much protection as you give the cotton manufacturers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) lost sight of the fact, that the cold storage freight on this mutton will probably cost as much as the mutton itself, as I have been informed by those in the trade who are in a position to know. When we consider that we have the protection which nature has given us of that long distance, and that we have in addition 35 per cent, or even 26½ per cent under the preferential rate, we will have a very large protection which I think our farmers will find quite enough. We were, however, discussing the question with particular regard to the competition in mutton between Australia and Canada, and on that point, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is open to the charge of inconsistency, because it is quite clear that he had in his mind at the Intercolonial Conference, that we should admit the mutton of Australia into Canada. Therefore, if he admitted the mutton of Australia into Canada, the competition would be just as severe for our farmers as by its admission under our system. The farmer will not be one whit worse off under our arrangement than he would be had the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) been carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. Except this, and my hon. friend has forgotten that part of it conveniently, that it is all a matter of interchange, and if the Canadian farmer was subject to the competition under preferential trade, yet he would have a preference discriminating in his favour for products that he would send from Canada, and in that way he would have a compensating advantage. We had the compensating advantage then, but you have it not, and that is the difference.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was willing then that we should take New South Wales mutton, if New South Wales would give us some concession. Well, since that time, New South Wales has swept away her tariff barriers, and given us everything my hon. friend could desire, except discrimination.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the whole thing.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. New South Wales has since given us absolute freedom to her markets, and we in return are giving her a duty of 26½ per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. She has given us absolute freedom in her markets, and she has given it to the United States men, too.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In my opinion the farmers of Canada are not afraid of the competition of the United States in the markets of Australia.

Mr. OLIVER. Representing a constituency in which a large number of sheep are raised, and in which this is a serious question with the people, I would like to point out certain facts in regard to this particular item as connected with other items in the tariff. It will be noticed that the protection of 35 per cent on mutton is practically the only ad valorem duty in the list of agricultural products of this class. While mutton and lamb are 35 per cent ad valorem, eggs are 3 cents a dozen, butter 4 cents a pound, cheese 6 cents a pound, potatoes 15 cents a bushel, hay $2 a ton, and so on. A large proportion of these duties are therefore specific duties. I suppose they were made specific duties for some good reason, and those of the agriculturists who receive the benefit of these specific duties are, I presume, entitled to that benefit, if there is any benefit in it. When the late Government placed the duty on mutton at 35 per cent ad valorem, the idea that prevailed amongst the farmers in my constituency was, that the Conservative Government had made it ad valorem for the purpose of encouraging trade in mutton with Australia. They objected to it then, and I have every reason to believe that they object to it still. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee in discussing these matters, but when the question is raised as to the propriety of a specific duty being placed on a certain article, in which a large proportion of my constituents are interested, I am bound to say that that proportion of my constituents are as much entitled to the benefits of that duty as the rest of my constituents or the constituents of any other member of this House are entitled to the benefits of any other duty. In my humble opinion, and in the opinion of those whom I represent, who are more largely interested in the raising of sheep than perhaps the constituents of any other member of the House, this duty on mutton should be a specific duty, for the reason set forth by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster)—because mutton in Australia is so very low in price that an ad valorem duty on that article is not any protection at all. I am not here to argue for protection; but I do say, as representing an agricultural constituency, that so long as we have a tariff that is a protective tariff, the agriculturists of the country are entitled to a share of any incidental benefit there may be under that tariff, and, so far as my vote goes, they shall have it.

Mr. BOSTOCK. A great deal has been said with regard to British Columbia in connection with this question. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) made a great point about the farmers of British Columbia losing the sale of their sheep by reason of mutton coming in from Australia. I am aware that my hon. friend has been in British Columbia, but I do not believe that he has been in the ranching country, or he would find that the people there are only too anxious to get rid of sheep. Very few of them raise sheep at all, and between the general run of the ranchers and the one or two men who are raising sheep, there is a continual fight, because those who are raising cattle desire to get rid of the sheep altogether. At the present time the greater part of the mutton brought in comes either from Washington or Oregon. The way the sheep are handled at present is a great hardship on the ranchers, because the sheep are brought in in herds, and being pastured on the land they eat up a great deal of grass that would otherwise be left for the cattle. As my hon. friend probably knows, you cannot run cattle on land where you have been running sheep. So that this reduction of the duty on mutton will really be a great benefit to the farmers and ranchers of British Columbia if it prevents those sheep being brought in from the United States, and results in the mutton being brought from the Australian colonies instead. My hon. friend, before six o'clock, in speaking of the quarantine regulations, said a large number of cattle were likely to go into British Columbia from the states to the south. Being interested in ranching myself, I naturally took a great deal of interest in this question, and I may say that at the time the Minister of Agriculture proposed to remove the quarantine, I was afraid that an injury might be done to the farmers of British Columbia, and I took the trouble to go through the state of Washington and make some inquiries as to the number of cattle in that state at the present time to be brought into the markets of British Columbia, and I was very agreeably surprised to find that the number of cattle in Washington has been largely reduced of late years, that cattle have become very scarce there, and that the farmers and ranchers of British Columbia have no need to fear any such competition as I expected, and I have since seen in the papers from that part of the country that the cattle men who have gone down there have found the same thing. They went there expecting to be able to buy cattle, and they found that they could not get them in the way in which they were accustomed to a few years ago. From reports which I have received from cattle men in British Columbia, they have not found that the removal of these quarantine regulations has been of any detriment to them in the sale of their cattle, and owing to the increase of population in that part of the country, they are getting better prices for their cattle now than they have been getting in the past. I do not wish to detain the committee any longer, but I thought it well to make these few remarks, because what has been said might cause the members of the committee to think that to allow mutton to be brought in from Australia, would be a detriment to the ranchers in the part of British Columbia which I represent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I simply rise to say why I made the motion which I have made. I did so entirely because I understood that New South Wales would come under the preferential clause of the tariff. Had it not been for that, I might possibly not have moved in the matter, although I do think that 35 per cent is too low a rate of duty for mutton and lamb. I am a protectionist on principle. I have always supported that principle. I am elected by the county I represent to support the principle of protection for the manufacturers as well as for the farmers, the labouring men, and all along the line. I am desirous that protection should be equally distributed, and that no particular interest should suffer at the expense of another. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who addressed the House at considerable length, claimed that in Ontario we were crying: "Give us free iron." I can assure the hon. gentleman that the protectionist party in the province of Ontario never asked for free iron. They have always been reasonable. They have claimed that the policy of protection was a give-and-take policy, and that if we wanted our agricultural products protected, we must protect the iron industry, the coal industry, and all the other industries of the maritime provinces, where we found a market for our agricultural products. The hon. gentleman said that the iron industry was not unduly protected. If the iron industry is not protected at the present time, the members on this side of the House are not responsible for that, but he and his friends on that side are responsible. He says that we are teaching the farmers of this country what is wrong in principle by saying that 35 per cent is not a sufficient protection for mutton and lamb; yet a few minutes before he made that speech, he voted for protecting fresh beef and pork to the extent of 50 or 60 per cent, showing that he was altogether illogical in his argument.

The estimate generally made of the agricultural products of this country is \$400,000,000. Of that amount we only export now about \$50,000,000, so that we have a home market for \$350,000,000. In other words, we have a home market for  $\frac{7}{8}$  the agricultural products of this country, and we only require to find an outside market for  $\frac{1}{8}$ . Now, the home market, I contend, is the best market we have. We cannot get the same prices for our commodities by sending them abroad as we can by selling them at home; and so long as that is the case, we ought to keep the wall of protection around our agricultural products and thus enable our farmers to get the best returns possible for their produce. It was in that mood that I moved this resolution. I am perfectly sincere, and I hope the House will see the propriety of deciding that our farmers, in the west especially, who raise large numbers of sheep should have their market in British Columbia sufficiently protected. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said he was not here to advocate the principle of protection, but at the same time he was honest enough to say that if somebody else would advocate it, he was perfectly willing to take advantage of it. I believe there are more hon. members in this House who hold the same view. It seems to me that when an hon. member believes that a certain thing is right, he ought to be willing to advocate it, even if it be contrary to the principles of his party.

Mr. MAXWELL. I rise merely for the purpose of saying a few words regarding the consumer in British Columbia. A great many of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken this evening have expressed their solicitude for the interests of that province. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I feel deeply indebted to these hon. gentlemen for the concern they have been manifesting, but it seems to me that those who are so very anxious to protect the interests of British Columbia do not know very much about them. Now, what is required in British Columbia at present is cheap food. We are not a producing province to any extent at present. Our chief industries are lumber, mining and fish, and I do not care to whom you may happen to speak in British Columbia, that is interested in any one of these industries, you will receive practically the same answer from one and all, that what they want out there is cheap food. Each of these industries is now being crippled very materially because of the excessive taxes put upon British Columbia by excessive freight rates and excessive duties. We know that each consumer in that province pays far more for the necessities of life than the consumers of any other province of the Dominion, and just to the extent of that extra tax put upon each of us are we the poorer. I certainly would earnestly press the Government to allow the goods of New South Wales to come in under the preferential clause. What is the use of protecting mutton, so far as British Columbia is concerned, when we raise hardly any mutton at all? We have to bring our mutton from Alberta. The gentlemen who bring in the mutton have to pay excessive freight rates, so that when it appears in our markets we have to pay excessive prices. That is certainly not in the interests of the consumer of British Columbia. The reason why I press that New South Wales should be brought under this clause arises out of what hon. gentlemen opposite have done in the past. You have subsidized very largely a line of steamers which ply between Vancouver and Sydney. I commend hon. gentlemen opposite for their wisdom in establishing that line. It is not only a benefit to the city of Vancouver, but is of material benefit to a large portion of the people of Canada. Any one going to the wharf at Vancouver would be amazed to see the large amount of Canadian products being put on these ships, but what is the common sense of our subsidizing large steamers to ply between Vancouver and Sydney, if there is no mutual concessions, no earnest effort on the part of those countries to trade with each other. To me it seems the very height of folly to ask the people of Canada to pay for a line of steamships, and then have these steamers going full one way and coming back empty the other. I consider it very material, not only to British Columbia but to Canada, that these ships should come back with the produce of New South Wales. We can only prosper as we are giving to other nations and other nations are giving to us; and so I would hail with very special delight the announcement that the Government, in their wisdom, had seen fit to bring New South Wales under this clause. I cannot say that I have any particular sympathy with the preferential idea expressed by the ex-Finance Minister. I believe in preferential trade, but to me the preferential trade idea which has been promulgated by the leader of the Opposition, that we should give preference to those who give preference to us, is the very incarnation of selfishness. And I do not believe that the human race is altogether dominated by the worst principles which can find a place in the human breast. If New South Wales opens her ports to the produce of Canada, if she gives us a fair field and no favour, the Canadian who thinks that she is not giving us fair enough terms is not one who is keeping up to the trend of the times. From what I know of the Canadian, there is no one on earth better equipped to hold his own in the great competition going on in the world, and there is no class in any part of the world who are better adapted to hold their own against competition than the farmers of this Dominion. All that Canada wants is a fair field and no favour, and I am perfectly certain she will get on the top before long. New South Wales opening her ports and letting us in, gives preference enough to my mind. We are not doing her justice by imposing this tariff on her, and I hope the time will come when we will admit her goods as freely as she admits ours. I hold it is only by free relations and inter relations with countries so well disposed towards us as New South Wales, that we shall become the mighty country which we hope Canada will become in the near future. I therefore support with my whole heart this clause of the tariff because I believe in the interests of British Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that is a selfish argument.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid that my hon. friend (Mr. Maxwell) who has just taken his seat has not kept track of his own arguments. He said it was the very incarnation of selfishness to adopt the principle of preferential trade which the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) proposed. But was the hon. gentleman himself at all selfish when he spoke of the tariff as applying to British Columbia? Was it the incarnation of selfishness that led the hon. gentleman to say that they wanted free and cheap food for the people of his province? He has completely answered himself and I think it is unnecessary further to discuss the arguments he brought forward.

Now, I am afraid that hon. gentlemen opposite have not taxed their memories as they should have done with regard to their past utterances. The hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) told us as to the iron duties, that the manufacturers from one end of the country to the other had cried out against the iron duties, and that these duties were struck at right and left. That the manufacturers were actuated by the thievish instincts engendered by eighteen years of protection, and that they were the ones who demanded the reduction of the iron duties. I wondered if that had any reference to the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) or to the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost) or to the hon. Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson), all of whom are manufacturers. Have they these "thievish instincts," and was this a doubtful compliment paid to these gentlemen who sit on either side of my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser)? The cry for the iron duties was made a part of the campaign of hon. gentlemen opposite, and no speech made by any of them was complete without a denunciation of these duties. I think I have heard that the First Minister himself quoted the duties on iron at 80 per cent. If that interest has been struck and struck severely in the province of the hon. member for Guysborough he has to thank his own friends and his own leader. The hon. gentleman went further. He said it was a loyal thing on the part of Canada to adopt the tariff of Great Britain. I am not prepared to go as far as the hon. member for Burard (Mr. Maxwell) because I think it is no part of patriotism. I think that the Canadian who does not consider first his own country and its interests is unfit to live in Canada; if he has any loyalty to any country, it is not to his own. How loyal have hon. gentlemen opposite been in making this tariff with regard to Great Britain? We find that of the articles on which the duties were increased we imported from Great Britain last year $10,867,000 worth, while from the United States we imported about $2,215,000 worth, or about one-fifth. Of the articles the duties upon which were lowered, there came from England $1,900,000 worth, while from the United States there came $4,421,000 worth, or about four times as much. I shall not pursue that argument, for it seems to me that hon. gentlemen have been so inconsistent that to attempt to consider their course is simply to make a comparison of absurdities. They seem to think that we should be loyal to England at the expense of Canada. I repudiate such views. They are wholly opposed to common sense and to our interests and unworthy of further discussion. Since we are discussing the matter of agricultural products, I wish to call the attention of the committee for a moment to the item of Indian corn. Perhaps it is as well that that should be discussed at this stage as at a later one. I am glad to see the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in his place. I am afraid that he did not gain the information from the large body of farmers that he should have gained in order to advise his colleagues on the subject of the corn duty. I am certain that if the hon. gentleman had been thoroughly conversant with the subject he would never have consented, though not residing in the province of Ontario, to the removal of this duty. The putting of corn on the free list is a very serious matter for the province of Ontario, and it is a serious matter also for the other provinces, including the hon. Minister's own, for the effects of it are very far-reaching, covering not only corn, but other grain. Now, who are the persons who will profit by this change? The only persons who can profit by it are a few millers and a few persons engaged in cattle-feeding. My hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) smiles when I make that statement. I hope I shall be able to make it clear to him that I am right in making that statement, though it is a pretty broad one.

I repeat that the only persons to be benefited by it are a few persons engaged in corn milling, and a few persons engaged in cattle-feeding. There are only a few corn mills in Canada, only twenty-four in all and, I believe, Nova Scotia has one-half of them, New Brunswick comes next, then the province of Quebec, and as far as I am able to learn, last year the cornmeal millers in Quebec if there are any did not import one bushel of corn for the purpose of human food. Then, in the province of Ontario, I believe there are one or two such mills in the city of Ottawa, one in the town of Chatham, and another in the city of Toronto. The whole number importing corn last year for the purpose of grinding it for food was twenty-four. Now, surely that could not have been an object. I am certain that the Minister of Agriculture must have had better reasons than that for making corn free. Now, I will turn to those who feed cattle. I venture to say that there is not one farmer in five hundred, from one end of Canada to another, who imports corn for the purpose of feeding cattle. There are some gentlemen in Canada, probably the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) among the number, who import corn for the purpose of feeding cattle. But I want to point out that while that is a very legitimate branch of agriculture, it is not a branch of which it is possible for the masses of the farmers of Canada to avail themselves. They are not possessed of sufficient means, they are not properly equipped in buildings, and they are in no shape or condition to engage in that branch of business. Some hon. gentlemen may say: Well, the door is open, why don't the farmers of Canada engage in feeding cattle? The answer is just what I have given. I say the circumstances of the masses of the people are such that it is idle to hold out to them the probability of such advantages from that direction. Therefore, I say you have entirely lost sight of the great masses of the farmers of Canada when you have taken into consideration the two classes to which I have referred. Now, the hon. member for South Huron has argued previously during this session that he had profitably fed cattle. No one doubts that. But, I tell that hon. gentleman, and I tell those who are engaged in the same business, that any man can set up an establishment on the cross-roads, he need not necessarily be a farmer at all to engage in it. He may be able to buy cattle from others cheaper than he can produce them himself, he buys the feeds and fattens these cattle. But what is being done? Why, to favour those few persons who are engaged in a legitimate branch of agriculture, it is proposed to make corn free in order that they may have it for feeding purposes. I say it is idle to lay down such a proposition. Now, if there are any other reasons for making corn free, I am at a loss to know what they are, unless it may be said that in the maritime provinces and in Quebec, where little or no corn is grown, they should have corn cheap. I would like to ask on what grounds the people in any province should have corn cheaper than pork, why should they have it cheaper than flour, why should they have it made free as beside any other article in Canada? Will it be said that because it is produced alone in the province of Ontario, it should be made free? Let me say that in the province of Ontario to-day, and in every county in the province, according to the Bureau of Industries for the province of Ontario, prepared by the Agriculture Department of that province, corn can be very successfully grown.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that we are now discussing the item of mutton and lamb. It will be the proper time to discuss the question of corn when we come to it.

Mr. CLANCY. I shall have to obey your ruling, but I desire to draw your attention to this fact, that hon. gentleman on the other side of the House have wandered from pole to pole. If you propose that I shall sit down, I shall do so in deference to your ruling. But is it proposed by the Chair to follow one rule with regard to myself and another and different rule in regard to hon. gentlemen opposite? If it is, then I say I am placed in a very unfortunate position, and one that I do not think is right.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Certainly I will not apply one rule to the hon. gentleman and a different rule to other members of the House. But I did not understand that the question of free corn was discussed by hon. gentlemen on the other side, though perhaps I may have failed to notice it. But I think the hon. gentleman is not in order in discussing the question of free corn now as he has been doing for several minutes.

Mr. KENDRY. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot take exception, Mr. Chairman, to the technical justice of your ruling, but I think you were certainly in the Chair when the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) was speaking. Now, the member for Guysborough went over the whole lot, discussing not only the question of protection, but general ethical principles, and everything of that kind, he went over the world, and you did not call him to order. If you are going to go by strict rule, I think we ought to have the same strict rule applied to both sides. You are right in this respect, but it seems an invidious distinction to draw between the member for Guysborough, who sits on that side of the House, and the member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), who sits on this side.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think the hon. gentleman might have given a better illustration, for he himself surely diverged enormously from the item under consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. I daresay I did.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must ask hon. members of the committee to confine their remarks as much as possible to the item under discussion. Perhaps I have not made my ruling as rigid as it should be, but I now invite members of the committee to confine their remarks as much as possible to the item under discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think you, Mr. Chairman, would be so cruel as to shut off the hon. member who is now addressing the committee when he is in the midst of an argument; but when he has finished, no doubt you will be very rigid in your ruling.

Mr. CLANCY. I have to thank the Chair for acting in a generous manner. I do not desire to violate the rules, but as I observed that other hon. members were allowed latitude, I ventured upon the discussion in which I am now engaged. I was referring, when attention was called to the course I was taking in the debate, to the capability of the province of Ontario to produce sufficient corn to supply the whole of the Dominion. In 1885 there were 167,831 acres under corn in Ontario, giving a yield of 10,741,000 bushels; in 1890, 223,836 acres, yielding 14,011,000 bushels; in 1895, 302,927 acres, yielding 24,819,000 bushels. That is a most extraordinary increase, and it shows the capability of the province for growing corn. No doubt that quantity could be trebled, and if the encouragement were given to which we are entitled, we could grow without difficulty all the corn required in Canada. We were told by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) that the only value protection could be to the farmers, the only home market they could have would be available when the production was not more than the people of Canada required. His words were: the home market can only arise when you only raise enough to supply that market. I think I can advance no better argument than that made by the hon. gentleman himself. First, we grow sufficient corn in Ontario for the whole Dominion; next, we say the home market is invaluable because, by excluding that class of grain, we have the home market to ourselves. If there is a single case in which the home market lies with ourselves it is in regard to the production of corn. If the argument of the hon. member for Guysborough be correct. Let me point out that there is an invidious distinction drawn between corn and other grain. I do not understand why corn should be made free any more than oats, barley, pease, or iron or any other product. I care not whether agricultural or manufacturing, except that a feeling might arise in some of the provinces that corn is only produced in one of the provinces and that for that reason alone it has been made free. Why should corn be made free and a duty placed on coal? I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who comes from the extreme eastern province of the Dominion, whether he thinks a duty should be placed on coal when no Nova Scotia coal comes west of Montreal, and comparatively little there; when not a pound comes to Ontario, and yet corn, which is produced by our farmers, is made free, and coal has a duty of 60 cents per ton. It may be said that our farmers do not burn coal. I say our farmers do burn coal. Wood is disappearing so rapidly that we must look to coal as fuel to a very large extent in the near future. I believe, however, that we must protect our coal interest, and I am strongly in favour of a duty on coal. I think the people of Nova Scotia must have their coal protected, but I object to singling out corn and making it free for the province of Nova Scotia or any other province. This has the effect of lowering the price of wheat, and I desire to call the attention of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) who is a miller, and will be able to understand my argument, to the way in which mill feed is affected. The husks taken off the corn come into competition with the lower qualities of our coarse grains, and I am aware that all the millers, except those engaged in milling corn, are opposed to free corn. This imported corn, of course, enters into competition with our oats and every class of grain we grow for feeding purposes. I can find no better argument than that used by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), who when he was discussing the question of the importation of Australian mutton into Canada, said that it would displace an equal quantity of Canadian mutton to that which was brought in and consumed. I apply that argument to corn, and I say that the American corn brought in free will displace just so much Canadian corn, and our Canadian farmers will be shut out of the market to that extent. Chatham is in the centre of the corn district, and there are no districts in the United States which produce a higher average of corn or of better quality than the counties of Kent and Essex. Let me show the quantities of corn imported into Chatham by Mr. N. H. Stevens. In 1892 he imported 107,611 bushels; in 1893, 107,603 bushels; in 1894-95, 122,771 bushels, or, in the three years there was corn imported at the doors of the farmers in that corn centre of no less than 327,985 bushels.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How much duty did that gentleman pay on the 300,000 bushels?

Mr. CLANCY. I will tell the hon. gentleman what duty was paid, and he can take out the rebate. The duty paid was as follows:—\$8,070, \$8,070, and \$9,207. He had a rebate of 90 per cent, which would be equal on the whole to three-quarters of a cent per bushel. The hon. gentleman is not in the dark as to the duty. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman, who is a miller, should ask how much duty was paid. Dose he wish the committee to understand that it all went into the treasury. He is well aware that 90 per cent of the amount was returned as a rebate to Mr. N. H. Stevens. With respect to American corn coming in and entering into competition with our corn, in my opinion the first blow that our corn received was when it was allowed to be brought in at this rebate for feeding purposes. I must say to hon. gentlemen upon this side of the House, that whatever their intentions were as to how that would work out, it has resulted in making corn practically free since 1891. I may be asked, how so much corn came to be imported into the country when the duty was  $7\frac{1}{2}$  cents a bushel; but in reply to that, I have pointed out that the regulations of 1891 made corn practically free, and as a result the farmers in the corn-growing districts held the corn in their cribs, and could not sell it to the millers and others. This free corn policy is unfair to the corn growers of the province of Ontario. It will destroy one of the most important interests we have there. It is no argument to say that corn is as cheap in Canada as it is in the United States, because the farmers of Canada have a right to their own market first, and they have a right to demand that their grains shall not be displaced by the products of a foreign country. If there is any measure of protection to be given—and we on this side of the House believe it to be absolutely necessary—then that protection should be extended to corn as well as to wheat, oats, or any other grain. I can hardly believe that there is an hon. gentleman in the House who will say that such a distinction should be made. I venture to think that my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan) will not allow his selfishness to go so far as to cause him to say, that free corn is in the interests of the farmers of Ontario as a whole. In this case, and in the case of others engaged in feeding cattle, they have no common interest with the farmers of this country who do not feed stock, so far as that particular branch of the industry is concerned. I should be very glad to see those cattle feeders use the products of their own country first, and they have no right to expect that tribute should be paid to them by a class of farmers who are less fortunate than they are, and who cannot engage in the business of fattening cattle.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How is it, that since corn has been put on the free list, it is selling higher in the county of Kent than when there was a duty of  $7\frac{1}{2}$  cents a bushel on it?

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman does not know much about the price of corn. I can tell him that I put some 700 bushels, shelled, on a car, and I was glad to take 19 cents a bushel for it on board the car.

Mr. COWAN. When was that?

Mr. CLANCY. About the first of January, 1897.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before the duty was taken off.

Mr. CLANCY. One of these gentlemen is a miller (Mr. Campbell) and the other a lawyer (Mr. Cowan), and I fancy both of them have the same information about growing corn.

Mr. COWAN. We are all in the same boat.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, and probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) will have an opportunity to justify himself, because I warn him that I am going to ask the House to assent to a proposition, that it is not in the interests of Canada to place corn on the free list. We are told that the home market is no use, and we have been told time and again by gentlemen opposite that protection did not help the farmers in the least. In the town of Chatham, where the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) resided so long, between the first of July, 1894 and the first of July, 1895, there were 47,500 bushels of wheat imported into that town which paid a duty of $7,125. Now, that was because wheat was cheaper in the city of Detroit than in the town of Chatham, and the result was that the millers paid the freight from Detroit, paid 15 cents a bushel duty additional, and ground the American wheat for Canadian consumption.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How do the prices compare now ?

Mr. CLANCY. I have given the hon. gentleman one case, which is sufficient to illustrate my argument.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is ten cents a bushel higher to-day in Detroit than in Chatham.

Mr. CLANCY. That may be true, but I could point to the time when corn was higher than wheat in the city of Chicago. Would that be any argument ? I contend that the farmers have a right to have defensive tariffs against the products of foreign countries, and I say that we have a right to have a duty on corn as well as on other grains.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Finance Minister to this. He made corn free of duty and he reduced the duty on corn meal 15 cents a barrel, still retaining a duty of 25 cents on the latter. Those engaged in corn-growing will be most anxious to know, what was his guiding principle in that ? Was the object to protect Canadian millers, and not to protect the Canadian corn growers ? I do not object to the duty remaining on corn meal. I say that protection to farmers extends further than mere protection on the grain itself, and if the duty were taken off corn meal and still retained on corn, it would be a blow at the farmer as well as the miller. But the miller still has his protection on corn meal while the farmer is not protected. The only possible explanation is, that the miller had the ear of the Government and the farmer had not. There is neither rhyme nor reason, nor logic for the duty being taken off corn, and a protection of 25 cents a barrel retained on corn meal. Now, let us take the article of flour. I should not like to accuse the Controller of Customs of being selfish, but it is nevertheless a fact that the duty has been lowered on wheat from 15 to 12 cents a bushel, and the duty on flour has been lowered to 60 cents a barrel. There was a strong outcry, and some millers discussed in the press the unfairness of having no more than 60 cents a barrel on flour, while there was a duty of 12 cents a bushel on wheat. I do not wish to discuss that point now, but I wish to turn to the Controller of Customs, and again I will not say that he is selfish, but I will say to him that he has looked carefully after the business in which he is engaged. We will take the business in which he is concerned. Flour has been made cheaper to him and to every other person who consumes flour. I do not mean to say that was the object, but I do say the hon. gentleman has profited by it. I believe that on the whole under the protection of 75 cents a barrel on flour and 15 cents a bushel on wheat, both the miller and the farmer had a fair chance, and the consumer did not suffer. But I will take another interest in which the hon. gentleman is engaged. I see that the duty has been retained on sugar candy. The duty was  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent per pound specific, and 35 per cent ad valorem. The specific duty was taken off but the hon. gentleman put it on again. I do not know whether he was influenced by others, or whether he overcame himself in the matter. These are some of the reasons why it seems to me that it is unfair to apply one rule to the farming interest, particularly in one portion of the Dominion, and another rule to another portion. We were told that the farmers would have their burdens taken off. Let me ask attention for a moment to the burdens that have been taken off the farmers. The duties taken off flour, corn, and corn meal, and wheat, on the imports of last year, amount to \$169,000, which is a loss to them and which they must keep up in taxes on coal oil, and lubricating oil to \$78,000, and on iron to about \$200,000 ; making \$447,000. The whole of the duties that have been lowered amount in round numbers to \$610,000, on these three items the farmers have to bear a great share of the revenue to make up, and the whole sum left, after deducting these three items, amounts to only about \$163,000. True, the hon. gentlemen say that they have taken the duty off coal oil ; but if they have taken \$68,000 off coal oil, they have put on an off-set of \$69,000 on rice. They have taken \$3,000 off barbed wire, but they have favoured another class much more ; they have taken the duty off dental and surgical instruments, amounting to \$7,000. When we sum all these up, we find that the farmers have had absolutely no substantial relief whatever under the present tariff. No one will say that the farming interests are so inconsequential or so paltry in the Dominion, that a reduction of 1 cent a gallon on coal oil or the removal of the duty on barbed wire and the duty on binder twine, which was at a price so low that it did not make any difference—no one will pretend to argue for a moment that these changes lifted the burden that rested on the farmers, or relieved them in the least. Now, I desire to offer my protest at this stage against taking the duty off corn. I say it is manifestly unfair ; it is a singling out a section of a single province to be made to pay tribute to other provinces and other interests ; and I hope hon. gentlemen will see their way to restore the duty of  $7\frac{1}{2}$  cents a bushel on corn, I hope the sense of justice in this House will not sustain them in a course so manifestly unfair to the great agricultural interest in the province of Ontario as to place it on the free list.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I would make a suggestion to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. I do not want to cut short discussion unnecessarily, but it is now about a quarter to eleven, and suppose we leave this item, and take what I may call the unopposed items.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we are ready to allow this item to pass, or rather to object to its passing and allow it to be carried.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to say a few words on this important question. I did not think of speaking to-night, and would not have done so had not the subject of corn been brought up; but it is a question of so much importance to the province of Ontario and to the Dominion of Canada, that it really requires to be dealt with.

Mr. FOSTER. I must ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman, whether the hon. gentleman is in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he is consistent. He asked that his friend might be allowed to deal with corn, and now he asks that I should not be allowed to answer him. Is that consistent?

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me, I will show him where I am consistent. The Chairman ruled my hon. friend out of order in discussing corn at this stage. My hon. friend called his attention to the fact that gentlemen on the other side had been allowed to travel over the whole ground, and I suggested that my hon. friend should be allowed to finish his speech, and that after that he should keep all other recalcitrants in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. The hon. gentleman does not want an answer on that question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no desire to prevent discussion on this question; but when the Chair called attention to the fact that it was out of order to discuss the question of corn on a question of mutton, it was decided, as the discussion had taken a very wide range, not to prevent my hon. friend finishing his speech, but to enforce the rule from that time, and to keep both sides of the House to the discussion of the question before us. I think we are all disposed to support the Chair, and when the item of free corn comes up, my hon. friend will have an ample opportunity to discuss the whole question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I would suggest, then, that hon. gentleman allow us to run through the items of the tariff until we reach the item of corn.

Mr. REID. I just rise to take issue with the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers). This afternoon that hon. gentleman, and also the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) said the farmers could take care of themselves, that they did not want any protection. I represent an almost purely agricultural constituency, and when the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) makes the statement that the farmers do not want protection, he makes an assertion that certainly the farmers of my constituency will not agree to.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not say the farmers do not want any protection.

Mr. REID. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the farmers were not anxious for protection. Has the hon. gentleman looked over the Trade and Navigation Report for 1896? In that report he will find that during last year we imported $11,746,649 worth of agricultural products into this country from the United States alone. The following are the items:—

Agricultural Imports from United States, 1896 :
Animals, living—hogs, horses, sheep, swine and all other.....	$ 757,606
Grain, Indian corn, oats, rye, wheat and all other grain.....	5,474,556
Flour, bran, corn meal and all other grain products.....	648,724
Fruits, apples, oranges and other green Fruits .....	1,072,934
Hides .....	1,771,641
Hops .....	37,733
Seeds for agricultural purposes.....	584,317
Vegetables .....	171,097

$10,518,603

Provisions, viz.: Butter, cheese, eggs, lard, beef, pork, poultry, &c.....

Total.....$11,746,649

It will thus be seen that $11,000,000 worth of agricultural products have been brought from the United States into this country. I claim that the protection which the farmers have had in the past has not been too high, and that the reduction which this preferential clause will give is altogether uncalled for. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) commented on the fact that the hon. Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) had restored the protection to the particular industry with which he is connected. Well, I would find no fault with the hon. Controller of Customs if he would put the duty back on every manufactured, and agricultural product. My policy is a policy of protection—protection to the farmers, the manufacturers, the mechanics and the labourers, and I think that one of the most serious mistakes which the Conservative party ever made was the reducing of the duties by them in 1894. I believe that was one of the things which drove them out of power, and I am confident that if the Conservative party go to the polls at the next general elections with the tariff which our grand old leader, the late Sir John Macdonald, had in 1878, we will sweep this country from one end to the other.

The hon. member for North Leeds (Mr. Frost) said that the Liberal party was the party of loyalty now. Does the hon. gentleman remember the election previous to the last when he ran on the platform of unrestricted reciprocity?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not refer to a previous debate.

Mr. REID. I am referring to a statement of the hon. member for North Leeds, at a previous election, that if his policy of unrestricted reciprocity had been successful, we would have free trade with the United States in mutton.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Leeds and Grenville spoke the other night on the preferential clause, which we have passed, and consequently the debate on that clause is a previous debate, a reference to which is out of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid we shall not be able to take that view. On this question of the tariff we cannot consider anything of a previous debate which has relation to the same subject, no matter at what stage or resolution. In fact there was a distinct understanding that we should have full latitude in the discussion of the question when we went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood that at the same time there was an understanding that the general debate would be made on the question of the preferential clause, but that after that clause was adopted the discussion should be restricted to the particular item before the House. The preferential clause having been adopted, the general debate which took place on that clause is now a previous debate.

Mr. REID. I merely wished to show that this preferential clause reduced the protection, not only on mutton but on every agricultural product, and the farmers in the constituency I represent protest against any reduction of duty on articles which they produce.

Mr. MARTIN. With regard to this item, while, as the resolution was first introduced, it might be considered fair, the duty being 35 per cent, the reduction which will be effected by the preferential clause will do away, to a large extent, with the protection which our farmers have hitherto enjoyed and to which they are entitled. This is a blow struck at a product of the farm in which the whole country is very much concerned. I see here an important distinction made in the tariff. Fresh meats are charged a duty of 3 cents a pound, while mutton, and lamb fresh are only protected by a duty of 35 per cent. Now, the difference between these two figures is very large. Thirty-five per cent on mutton will not be very much more than 1 cent per pound, while the duty on meat is 3 cents per pound. I do not see why there should be this difference. The hon. the Controller of Customs told us that the duty on some other articles is 35 per cent. He might have told us that the duty on kerosene is 5 cents per gallon or nearly 100 per cent. I think this should be put on the same footing as item 14 which would make it 3 cents per pound. I do not see why the Government should object to do this, while pretending to be promoting the interests of the farmers. I do not see how the Patrons in this House can support them in this. Before they gave this preferential tariff to Great Britain, they increased the duty on cottons in order that that industry might not be crippled. Why not show the same consideration for the farmers? Hon. gentlemen opposite said they were the antagonists of the cotton manufacturers, but it seems to me that they are the antagonists of the farmers. There can be no doubt, as shown by my hon. friend who spoke before me that large quantities of agricultural products come in from the neighbouring country; and I think that the farmers should have protection. I will cheerfully support the resolution of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) to make this duty the same as the duty on other meats.

Eggs, three cents per dozen.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. Finance Minister tell us what is the proposed duty on eggs in the Dingley Bill?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is 5 cents per dozen, but I am not quite sure.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) think it would be well to put an equivalent duty on here, or take power to do so?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The view upon which we proceeded, except in the case of a few articles for special reasons, was that we would not disturb this schedule. If the principle suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) were accepted, there are a number of cases besides this to which it would apply with equal force. We thought it would be better to let the matter stand for the present.

Mr. FOSTER. It was very wise not to disturb this schedule, and of course, the Cabinet did not wish to take to themselves extraordinary powers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Of course, we were very mindful of that point.

Condensed milk (weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty), three and one-fourth cents per pound.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the old duty on that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no change.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) sure of that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. Probably my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has before him the tariff of 1894. There was a change subsequent to that, but we have left the duty as we found it.

Indian corn for purposes of distillation, subject to regulations to be approved by the Governor in Council, seven and one-half cents per bushel.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Controller of Customs how he proposes to regulate this matter so that distillation shall not be made from corn imported free?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) sees as I do, that it will be a somewhat difficult matter. Regulations have not been framed, nor has any question arisen under this clause. Of course the Controller of Customs will endeavour to discharge his duty as set forth here as well as he can. In giving what thought I could to it with other matters, it has occurred to me this clause can be carried out in conjunction with the Department of Inland Revenue, the officers of which are stationed in every distillery. Under regulations that we may frame we shall certainly be able to enforce it much better than if the circumstances were different. I will not say that it can be enforced with absolute correctness, but I think it can be enforced satisfactorily. I give the hon. gentleman an outline of what has passed through my own mind on the subject. I recognize, as I am sure, as he does, the difficulties in the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I don't think that is quite satisfactory. My hon. friend says that no regulations have yet been made, that he is thinking over the matter. But the law has been in force since the 23rd of April. Has distillation stopped between that time and this?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Have not the distillers been buying corn since the 23rd of April?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No doubt they have been buying corn. The officers of the department, having this law and requiring to enforce it, are doing so, and seeing that the corn is paying duty.

Mr. FOSTER. But my hon. friend cannot allow a matter of this kind to go by the will or course of conduct of individuals. He knows, as head of the department, that he has to act under that clause.

It seems to me that during this month which has been passing without any regulations, and the Controller of Customs not having settled on any regulations, it is quite possible for the distillers to buy corn from any person that they choose. A man brings in corn, not for distilling purposes, and when it is in this country he sells to anybody that he chooses, and can sell to the distillers. My hon. friend has not warned his officers under the regulations so that his officers could take cognizance of the importations of corn coming into Canadian ports and being used for distilling purposes. But the distiller does not import, John Jones imports, the corn passes the custom-house as a free entry. John Jones has his corn brought in perfectly free, and the entry is passed by the customs as free. He has it and stores it. What is to prevent the distillers during all this time from buying from John Jones the corn that he has brought in, and has put in his storehouse?

Mr. WALLACE. In addition to that, as there is no duty on corn for all other purposes, the corn is exactly the same price on both sides of the line, it is the same price at the distillery in Windsor as it is on the other side of the river. Suppose that American corn is worth there to-day 25 cents a bushel, and Canadian corn is exactly the same commodity and the same price. Why should the distiller then import American corn? He can take Canadian corn and he does not require to pay any duty on it. The Controller says that the Governor in Council are to make regulations, but he says that for the last six weeks the Governor in Council have made no regulations, every officer of the customs at all the ports makes whatever regulations he pleases. There is nothing here to guide him, he only knows that corn for distilling purposes is dutiable at 7½ cents a bushel. Therefore, that clause in itself must be a dead letter during those six weeks until the Governor in Council choose to make regulations specifying something that can be done. In my opinion, they can do nothing.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman says they can do nothing. Well, if we can do nothing, certainly it would be a dead letter.

Mr. WALLACE. You have done nothing so far.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman knows, I suppose, that we have recourse. If any of those gentlemen have brought in corn who are not entitled to bring it in, there is a recourse. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, in administering the department, has on more than one occasion found that the duties were not paid at the proper time, and he has had the recourse that the law provides. We have that recourse, and all I can say is that when this item passes, if it does pass, we will make regulations and go on. Certainly, every entry that is made under this is subject to amendment. All corn that is brought in becomes liable to duty; if the importer has not paid the duty he is liable to be called upon. We have security in that respect, and we have in other respects. I do not think the hon. gentleman has proposed any way out of it. He can see the difficulty, I see difficulties myself, but I do not see that any harm has resulted or any loss to the revenue. In the enforcement of this clause, I propose to use, with the concurrence of the Minister of Inland Revenue, the services of his officers, in the way of being vigilant, so far as it is within their power, to ascertain whether the corn is dutiable or not. That there are difficulties surrounding it, I do not deny. But I want to know if hon. gentlemen opposite want the item struck out, or shall it be left in, and shall the duty be collected?

Mr. WALLACE. What is the use of our telling the hon. gentleman whether we want the item struck out or not? We want a lot of items struck out, but the Government never accedes to our request.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Do you want this struck out?

Mr. WALLACE. I want the hon. gentleman to prove that this is not a bogus clause. He says there are difficulties surrounding it. Can he tell us to-day, after six weeks, whether there has been any revenue derived from this clause? He says that if the distillers break the law there is recourse, they can be punished. I do not suppose they have been so foolish as to break the law. There was no necessity for them breaking the law. They can buy Canadian corn, and if they buy Canadian corn and use it in their distilleries, can anybody call on them for the 7½ cents per bushel?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Certainly not.

Mr. WALLACE. I presume that is what they have been doing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We want them to buy our own corn.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, why do you permit Yankee corn to come in free? You are inviting Canadians to buy American corn with a duty of 7½ cents a bushel on it, which is put on to give an opportunity to Canadians to buy Canadian corn. But here that duty is taken off, and the consequence is supposed to be a continued duty upon the distiller, while I contend that it is not an additional duty upon the distiller at all. Then, as a matter of fact, the revenue would show that no duty has been collected at all. I ask the Controller of Customs whether any duty has been collected under this item of the tariff, during these forty or forty-five days since this law went into force. I think he ought to give us the information for the month of May, at any rate, because there are only a few distilleries in the country, the corn that is imported for these distilleries come in at certain ports, he has the returns from those ports day by day, and I think that he should give us what information he has so as to guide us in deciding upon this clause.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I am not able to tell the hon. gentleman at the moment what revenue has been collected on particular articles during the past month. I shall be able to ascertain, but I cannot answer to-night. Now, great fault has been found by hon. gentlemen opposite because this article of corn has been placed on the free list. But when it is proposed to tax corn, of which there is a large quantity coming into this country for the purpose of the distilleries, now hon. gentlemen are asking us to strike that off.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I understand that to be the inevitable conclusion to be drawn from what the hon. gentleman has stated. An hon. member said this was a bogus resolution. A bogus resolution should not find a place on the Statute-book. We do not view it in that light, but the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite tend in the direction of making corn for all purposes free.

Mr. FOSTER. I must protest against that statement, and protest at once, and I do not think the Controller of Customs has taken a position which is fair either to himself or to this committee. I have never yet seen an exhibition of this kind over an item. I am not discussing it in a partisan or in a temperance way, but I want to treat the matter fairly. The Controller of Customs stands at the gate of the collection of duties in this country. When the House says that certain duties are to be imposed, he has the key in his possession, and he must collect them; he is responsible in the most grave way for seeing that every cent of duty is collected and that not one dollar of revenue goes to waste or is lost. On 23rd April he frames a law. The Minister of Finance reads it, and it becomes the law at that very moment. A month and more passes by, and yet when the hon. gentleman is asked the item involving a question of the gravest difficulty, as he has himself acknowledged, where the chances for fraud are very great indeed and loss of revenue may be involved, he gravely tells this committee, and asks us to listen and keep our faces straight when he states that he has not made any regulations, that he has not even a glimmering idea of what will be the regulations that will govern this matter, and yet without regulations there may be no duty collected. Is that the position a member of the Government ought to take in connection with the revenue, and gravely think that this committee will sustain such an explanation as that. It was his duty the very moment the clause became law to have his officers instructed, so that not one single ounce of grain should be brought in for distilling purposes without the duty being paid. The hon. gentleman has not done so, and he does not yet know what he intends to do. When asked the question he replied: Please tell me what I shall do, as you are finding fault. But the hon. gentleman and the Government have created the difficulty. They have changed the duties on corn, making it free in one case and dutiable in another. Are they to ask hon. members on this side of the House to help them out of their difficulty, when for more than a month the hon. gentlemen have neglected to make provision respecting the collection of duty on corn for distilling purposes? Why? The Controller says that none has been imported and passed for distilling purposes. Why should there have been? There are no officers looking after the matter. What is being done? John Jones comes to a customs port and says: I am bringing in 50,000 bushels of corn. In what capacity are you importing this, he is asked. He replies, I am a farmer, or a trader. Then the corn is admitted free; he passes an entry for 50,000 bushels, and it is afterwards put into warehouse. Do hon. gentlemen opposite pretend that they can go back of that entry? Anybody can come and buy that corn. Tom Smith comes and buys 20,000 bushels, and subsequently sells it to a distiller. There was no application made for an entry for distilling purposes; the whole of the corn came in free. The Controller appears to think that having officers is sufficient, without passing any regulations or giving them any instructions. These officers are practically powerless unless they receive instructions, and having received no instructions consequently no duty is collected. But distillation has been going on. The hon. gentleman having failed to perform his duty, and most woefully so, so soon as we find fault uses a most unfair argument, and he knows it is unfair. The hon. gentleman mentioned my name, and said that I asked for the admission of corn free for distilling purposes.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I said your argument was in that direction.

Mr. FOSTER. As between man and man, I ask the hon. gentleman if he has the least idea that I asked for the admission of corn free for distilling purposes. Every man knows such is not the case, and no man knows it better than the Controller of Customs. That was a most unfair thing to do. I do not mind as regards myself, and it will have no weight in the country, but it was an unfair act. What we on this side argue for is a duty on corn right through; but if you are going to take the duty off corn for other purposes, it is an outrage if you do take it off for distilling purposes. The distiller has to pay the duty.

Mr. MCGREGOR. He does now.

Mr. FOSTER. Where?

Mr. MCGREGOR. At Windsor.

Mr. FOSTER. He ought to do so, but there are no regulations at present and the officers have received no instructions. Does not the hon. gentleman know how wide the door is open to avoid payment of duties. The door was shut before and the revenue was ensured; but when the announcement was made by the Finance Minister on the 23rd of April in regard to these duties, they ought to have been collected from that day. The Controller has intimated that no regulations have been made and no instructions given to his officers, but that the necessary arrangements would be made after the item passed to-night.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Will not the duty be collected? Is not the duty provided for in the Act?

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman think the Controller of Customs has nothing more to do than to present an item in an Act and then sit down?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. When an officer finds an article dutiable for a certain purpose, he exacts the duty. If there was any trouble about the regulation, he would not pass the entry until he had made inquiries. There have been no inquiries made, and in regard to corn coming in, no doubt the officers have done their duty in that respect as in other respects.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman is going to administer all the customs law on that principle, he will lose more than half the revenue.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The distiller has to account for every bushel that goes into his distillery. Distillers have been paying 7½ cents up to this time, and they are paying that rate to-day as they make their entries. The law is such that if an entry is made to-day, it is subject to the customs law. The country has not lost a single dollar of revenue in regard to corn.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very kind of the hon. gentleman to come to the rescue of the Controller of Customs in his hour of difficulty. The only weapon that hon. gentleman seemed able to wield was to take an arrow and poison it and try and stick it into some one on this side of the House, when he had no reason for doing so. I called the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that when a person comes to a port of Canada, Windsor or any other port, with a cargo of corn, he enters it, not for distilling purposes, but as a farmer or a trader, and he does not say whether the corn is for feeding purposes or not. The customs officer takes his entry, and the corn is admitted free. If he comes there with a cargo of corn and says: This is for distilling purposes, the customs officer makes it pay a duty of 7½ cents a bushel, but unless that question is raised before the customs officer the duty is not paid. Does not everybody know that there is a very general tendency to get goods in at as little duty as possible, and does not my hon. friend see how easy it is for anyone to bring in corn free of duty for the common purposes for which corn is used, and how easy it is for the distiller to buy the corn from the storehouse to which it goes? Unless the officer is instructed that for every entry of corn that comes in, he has got to have an oath as to whether or not it is for distilling purposes, the duty cannot be collected on corn for distilling purposes.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Corn is selling on the American side for 25 or 26 cents a bushel, and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says it is selling on this side for 19 to 23 cents. They are not buying corn on the American side just now, because we have more corn than is required in the western district. If a man should come over with a load of corn the customs officer will charge him 7½ cents a bushel if he has got the order from the Department.

Mr. FOSTER. The customs officer does not wait for an order from the Department to collect the duty. He has this schedule of tariff rates in his hand, and he sees that corn is free, and unless that imported corn shows on the face of it that it is for distilling purposes, he will not charge the duty.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that last year 253,631 bushels of corn were brought in for ensilage purposes. Now, that corn was free under the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Foster) own tariff, and how does he know that all that corn was used for ensilage purposes? Is he quite sure that none of it was distilled? The very same conditions existed under the last tariff as exists now.

Mr. WALLACE. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the Governor in Council made regulations regarding the importation of ensilage corn, and besides that as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) should know, ensilage corn is quite easily distinguishable from other corn.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not at all.

Mr. WALLACE. Ensilage corn is distinctly a different article of corn, and I can tell it very easily if hon. gentlemen opposite cannot.

Mr. MCGREGOR. How could you tell?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. WALLACE. More than that, ensilage corn is usually five or six cents a bushel dearer than corn used for distilling purposes.

Mr. TALBOT. Would the hon. gentleman tell me how many kinds of ensilage corn are brought in for feeding purposes?

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman will produce different kinds of corn here I can tell one from the other. Suppose he produces samples of spring wheat or fall wheat or wild goose wheat, I can pick out one from the other, but cannot tell you how I do it. It is not a difficult thing to do for one who knows, but of course it is difficult for one who does not know anything about it. Now, suppose a dealer in corn buys Canadian corn and imports American corn free of duty, and puts them all in the ore warehouse. A distiller comes along and buys 10,000 bushels from him. How are they going to distinguish between the two and charge a duty on the American corn to the distiller. The corn grown on one side of the Detroit river is exactly the same as the corn grown on the other side of the river, and I am told by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) that his county produces enormous quantities of the very best corn.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It is the best corn grown in Canada, but not equal to what is grown in the United States.

Mr. WALLACE. If corn is imported by a dealer into this country free of duty, under present circumstances, he can sell it to a distiller or anybody else, or do what he likes with it. Regulations are required in order to collect a duty from these distillers, and as this tariff has been in operation for forty days, we ask the Controller of Customs, what are his regulations and if he has received $1 of revenue from this source. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) says he has, but that hon. gentleman does not know anything about it. He has no right to have access to the entries made by any gentleman in this country. The Controller of Customs has the right to inquire into all these things, and it is his duty to give the information we ask, while we are discussing this item. The hon. member for North Essex has no right to have any knowledge on the subject.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I have been in Essex for a time.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman has no right to go to the customs-house in Windsor to ascertain who made the entries or whether there was duty collected or not.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I did not go into the customs-house.

Mr. WALLACE. The customs officer who would permit him to do that would not be discharging his duty. I am quite certain that the hon. gentleman had not any such information, but the Controller of Customs had the information; he gets it every day from those ports, and we are asking him to say whether this duty has been collected under this item during these forty days or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. I made the statement to-day, when discussing the corn question, that corn would come in free for all purposes except for distilling purposes, and that I thought most of it for that purpose would also be admitted free. Having been engaged in the grain business for the last twenty-five or thirty years, I know something about it. I know that corn was imported for ensilage purposes, and the party importing it had to make an affidavit to that effect when he made the entry. My hon. friend from Kingston knows that the firm of Richardson & Son have a large elevator in that city. They have brought in one or two cargoes of corn from the United States, and they have also brought corn from Essex, and they put it in all together into the elevator, and the collectors have been instructed to admit the imported corn free. Suppose an agent of Mr. Wiser went to Richardson & Son and made an arrangement to purchase 100,000 bushels of corn. The corn is sent down to the distillery, and no officer of the department interferes or can interfere with the transaction, and no duty is collected on the corn. This I know goes on, and no regulations can be framed to prevent it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest that this item stand until the Controller of Customs has an opportunity of communicating with his department and is able to give the House the necessary information after doing so. I think we are losing time in the absence of the information.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is another reason why I think the item should stand. There is no provision made with regard to corn imported for the manufacture of starch. The starch manufacturers had 1½ cents per pound protection when they had to pay a duty on corn, and now they will get corn free, while their protection remains. Some adjustment should take place, so that the starch manufacturers would be put on the same basis as before.

Item allowed to stand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest to my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) who is leading the House that it would be well to stop here as we have made good progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We will not press for a longer sitting of course. But I would point out that I believe that the next schedule, header "Fish and products of the fishery" is absolutely identical with the old tariff. Of course we will be guided by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we had better go through this next list if there is no change.

Salmon, fresh, n.e.s., one-half cent per pound.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that not a change in duty?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was dutiable, but afterwards made free by Order in Council.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When imported for special purposes.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 4th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 122) to amend the Acts relating to the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Davin.)

THE BRITISH COLUMBIA-ALASKA BOUNDARY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to a matter which, it is possible, may assume considerable importance. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to lay on the Table of the House, a few days ago, a report of the Governor General in Council adopting the memorandum with regard to the Alaskan boundary convention. I dare say that the attention of the hon. gentleman has been called to the fact that in the Senate of the United States, to which House that question has been referred, an amendment has been introduced. As these are matters of very considerable importance, and as we have had too much reason to know in the past how desirable it is to get the best information upon such a subject, I referred the terms of this convention and the report of the Privy Council thereon to Major General Cameron and requested him to favour me with any observations he thought it desirable to make upon it. He has done so. I may mention that Major General Cameron, was, at the request of Lord Rosebery, detailed by the War Office, some time ago, when this question of the Alaskan boundary came up, to make a report on the subject for the information of Her Majesty's Government, and his elaborate report will be found, no doubt, in the Department of the Interior or in the Department of the Privy Council. He has given me his views upon the question with which he was already very familiar: and as it is a matter of some importance and as it is likely, in view of the proposed amendment, to come back to the consideration of the Government, I propose to hand these observations, in order to save the time of the House, to the Minister of the Interior, and would ask him to have the papers which he has already laid on the Table printed, as well as these observations, together with any other information that may be available.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Sir Sifton). I am under obligation to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) for calling my attention to the report that has been made. I desire, of course, as he suggested, not only to acquire all possible information upon the subject myself, but to afford such information to the members of the House as will give them an opportunity to acquaint themselves with this important question. The hon. gentleman is undoubtedly correct in his estimate of the importance of the question. The difference between the boundary line as claimed by the British authorities, and the boundary line as claimed by the United States authorities is very considerable, and the value of the territory which may be said to be practically in dispute, in view of the mineral discoveries in that region, is, of course, very great. We have a clear illustration how very important a small strip of territory may be in the fact that the most valuable of the Yukon placer mining locations that have been discovered are just a little on this side of the boundary line. A very small difference there would have placed the most valuable mines in United States instead of in Canadian territory, as we are very happy to say they are as things exist. I, therefore, most cordially assent to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that the papers should be printed.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called—I do not see the Minister of Railways in his place, and very often the hon. gentleman is not able to be here. I would be extremely obliged if some hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches would be good enough to call his attention to three or four returns which the House ordered some weeks ago, and which would be very useful, indeed, if we could have them before the railway Estimates are considered.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). What are they?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will send a memorandum of them across. If we had them they would probably enable us to avoid a discussion which might otherwise take place.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman will kindly send me a memorandum, I will see that it is sent at once to the Minister of Railways and Canals.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, I wish to call the attention of the Government to what I consider a very important matter; it is a despatch to the Halifax "Morning Chronicle," dated May 31, from Moncton, N.B.:

James E. Magee, J. J. McKenzie, H. H. Melanson and A. McNaughton, of Intercolonial Railway Offices, left Saturday night for Campbellton to audit the accounts of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. This railway, it will be remembered, was last fall placed for winter operation under the control of the Intercolonial Railway, but did not prove a very paying institution. Lack of traffic, combined with the serious trouble of Metapedia flood to the roadbed, which for several miles was actually washed away, has resulted in considerable loss to the Intercolonial Railway, approximating $20,000. To-morrow the B. C. authorities will assume control, and it is understood that it will be under the management of a Mr. Armstrong, from Montreal.

I would like to ask the Government whether this despatch is in accordance with the facts, and what information the Government have to give to the House in regard to the extent of the loss sustained by the disappointment in the traffic, and also by this injury to the road while in the possession of the Government. I see the Minister of Railways is not in his place.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I think the matter will properly come up in connection with the Supplementary Estimates, when the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of bringing this question before the House. But if my hon. friend desires to deal with it earlier, I ask him to let it stand until the Minister of Railways is in his seat.

Mr. FOSTER. By the way, might I ask when the Supplementary Estimates for the current year will be down?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am in hopes that they will be down within a day or two.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Cornmeal, including the duty on the barrel, twenty-five cents per barrel.

Mr. McMILLAN. I did not intend to take any hand in this debate, but as corn has come up so prominently before the committee, I think it well that I should say a few words on this question. But before speaking of corn, let me say that several other subjects in connection with it have been brought up amongst them the question of cattle being brought across the line under quarantine regulations. Let me say that these quarantine regulations have been of great benefit to the farmers.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will allow me, not to interfere with his speech—but I want to carry out what we agreed upon last night. The Chairman made up his mind last night that he was going to keep us in order. The corn question cropped up, and the Chairman was kind enough to let it go a certain distance, and after that we were to be kept in order. Now, the item to-day is simply for corn for distilling purposes, and I want to ask the ruling of the Chairman, whether we must confine our remarks to a discussion of corn for the purpose of distillation?

Mr. McMILLAN. Can we not discuss the question of free corn?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The understanding at which the committee arrived last night seemed to be that a discussion of this item should include a discussion of free corn.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). It necessarily involves that.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Perhaps this item does not fall entirely under the question which has been raised by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan).

Mr. FOSTER. All right. Then I will make a suggestion and the hon. gentleman can accept it or not. The question of corn will come up again under the item for free corn. Quite a large number of gentlemen on this side of the House are not here, and have left with the idea that the discussion would take place then, and I rather thought probably that would be the case, and I encouraged them in the idea that the discussion would come on then. I must say that if we take it up now it will certainly be re-duplicated when free corn comes up; and I suggest whether it would not be better to leave the whole discussion till we get to free corn.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What the Chairman objected to, and very reasonably, I think, was that the discussion should not go over the whole range of subjects in discussing the tariff. Free corn is so intimately bound up with this question that I think we might safely leave them together.

Mr. FOSTER. If you want to have two discussions on it, that is the way to do.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We must take our chances.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am willing to postpone my remarks now with the understanding that when free corn comes up we will be allowed to go back and answer the arguments that have been already given in this House on free corn.

Mr. FOSTER. Some information was asked for by myself and by my hon. friend the late Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), with reference to the duty which had been collected on corn since the 23rd day of April of this year.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) asked if we could find the monthly returns. Under the arrangements prepared by himself, the accounts of all kinds are lumped together, and we cannot get at them until the end of June. But I have telegraphed to the different ports asking for information.

Mr. FOSTER. Has my hon. friend yet telegraphed any instructions to his officers as to guarding these ports from the entry of corn free which may afterwards be used for distillation purposes?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I have not telegraphed anything. If there is any corn coming in for distillation purposes, I have no doubt that the officers are doing their duty and collecting the revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it possible that the hon. gentleman does not see the point involved. If he does not, I think the country will. My hon. friend has here an item in respect to corn. It is admitted duty free; that is the paramount rule of the tariff. There is only an exception when corn comes in for distillation purposes and it is entered for that purpose, when 7½ cents duty will be collected upon it. But does not the hon. gentleman know that on the border corn is coming in for distilling purposes which is not so entered, for simply by not entering it for distilling purposes the importer avoids the payment of 7½ cents duty. Is he not aware that corn is coming in at all ports, is being stored in warehouses, mixed with Canadian corn, and that when once entered it is outside the control of every officer of the customs. Does the hon. Controller think he is doing his duty in regard to the public revenue when he simply does nothing for one month or two months and allows that state of things to prevail. Suppose it were a question of sugar. Suppose it were provided that raw sugar should come in free for every purpose except refining, and suppose forty days ago the House declared that sugar for all purposes, except refining, should be admitted free, and that sugar for refining purposes should pay one-half or three-quarters of a cent duty, would the Controller of Customs have been treating the revenue fairly and doing his duty if he had allowed the free entry of raw sugar, which might ultimately find its way to the refiners and be refined. This involves in some cases a tremendous loss of revenue, and in every case the principle of watchfulness of the revenue is entirely disregarded.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). My hon. friend's idea that the Controller of Customs was bound to make these regulations referring to the tariff immediately after the tariff resolutions were laid on the Table, is a somewhat extreme contention. The Controller has many things to do, and it is not remarkable that some of the regulations should not be made immediately but be delayed. That there has been no loss of revenue would appear from the statement of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who declared that no corn was coming in for distilling purposes, consequently there was no loss of revenue. There is the further fact, that all the corn used for purposes of distillation passes through establishments which are subject to excise regulations, where there is an opportunity to discover the fact if duty has not been paid in any case, and certainly this would not apply to the case of sugar refiners. If corn comes in for purposes of distillation and does not pay duty, it is quite possible to discover the fact, and it may fairly be hoped to collect the duty. It may be possible to bring in an article for one purpose and apply it to another purpose, and I think this has happened in the past in regard to corn. No doubt corn was imported for one purpose and applied to another purpose under the old tariff. The ex-Minister of Finance, who shakes his head, does not think so. I am not arguing, however, that there should not be regulations made; but the Controller of Customs should be allowed a reasonable time within which to make them, and if possibly difficulty arose in regard to corn being imported free and subsequently used for distilling purposes, there would be a better opportunity of discovering the omission in case of distilleries than in any other line of business.

Mr. FOSTER. The remarks offered by the hon. Minister of Finance make the conduct of the Controller still more surprising, for the excuse put forward for the hon. gentleman not doing his duty regarding the public revenue is that he has been very busy. That is no excuse for neglecting the public revenue. My hon. friend, if he has not time enough to do this work and direct his officers to do it, is not the man who should be in that position. It is the most important department there is in this country so far as the finances are concerned, because it is a department that must collect most of the revenues, and my hon. friend's excuse is that the Controller has not yet come around to that part of his business, and he has not had time to do so. All the hon. gentleman had to do was simply to express his will to his officers, who are technical men and know how to secure the protection required. Never before has such an example been set before the House as this. It was the duty of the Controller to have his regulations prepared before the tariff items came down. He should have foreseen the condition that would arise. Is it any excuse when a man who has a department full of officers waits forty days to issue certain orders? As regards the position taken by the Finance Minister, that in the distilleries, there are inland revenue officers and they can collect the duties, I reply that they have no instructions to that effect, they have no rights in the case. The duty is collected or not when the article comes in, and when the entry is made.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It can be collected at any time.

Mr. FOSTER. Not except it has been smuggled, or it comes in under an amended entry. Free goods do not come in under amended entry, and it is not smuggled in, for the importer takes his invoice to the custom-house and says that he has imported a carload of corn, and then that corn is admitted free. The Controller of Customs has no excuse whatever to offer. He has proved his incapacity or neglect, and he has shown that, if that is the principle on which he proceeds, he is not the man who should sit at the receipt of customs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I confess I was very much struck by the statements made last night by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) in respect to this matter, and it seems to me that they entirely destroy the arguments of the Finance Minister that the officers in the distilleries would be able effectually to prevent loss of revenue in this event. What did that hon. member say? He said there had been an immense quantity of corn grown in that part of Canada this year, and that the price is lower than that of American corn; and the hon. gentleman said there was no necessity in view of the abundant supply of corn in that part of Canada, to secure the importation of corn for distilling purposes. What follows? It follows that these distilleries are perfectly at liberty and within their right under the law when they supply themselves by purchasing from parties who have grown corn in this country, and that being the case I cannot see how any officer of the inland revenue service can go behind the fact that a distiller shows him that he made certain purchase of a large quantity, say 10,000 bushels, from Canadian producers. The fact that purchases were made from Canadian farmers at once prevents any attempt to collect the revenue owing to the corn having been used for distilling purposes, because that purchase is perfectly legal, and thus it prevents any action on the part of inland revenue officers, and in fact they have no right to interfere in such a sale. The Canadian corn having been purchased by the distiller, and subsequently American corn having been purchased by the farmer or merchant to take the place of that sold to the distiller, an inland revenue officer cannot raise any question in regard to it. I want to know what there is to prevent farmers who have raised corn selling to the distillers, and importing American corn free to take its place. The corn raised in Canada is sold to the distillers free of duty, and there is nothing in the law to prevent any Canadian farmer or merchant importing as much corn as he may please free of duty. It appears to me to be an extremely difficult question, and one that certainly does require the most careful attention on the part of those members of the Government who are charged with carrying out the intent of this law.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). It is impossible to prevent attempts at fraud, but it is possible to make such regulations as shall make fraud more easily discovered. This morning I took some trouble to find out how far the excise officers can help the customs officers in protecting the public revenue against the importation of corn free of duty for distilling purposes. I find that the following is the excise regulations: All grain entering a distillery must be recorded at once by weight in the distillers' stock-book, with the name of the party from whom it is bought, his residence, and the mode of conveyance, whether by car, by boat or otherwise. All such grain is weighed on its delivery at the distillery by the officers of inland revenue, and the distiller is required to state in his book whether the corn is of foreign or domestic production. It may be said that notwithstanding all these precautions, with which my hon. friend from Brockville (Mr. Wood) is acquainted, fraud may still continue. However, I believe that the penalty is so severe that I do not think many distillers would incur the risk. The entry in the stock-book of the name of the seller of the corn, and the other particulars, would undoubtedly help us to discover fraud on the slightest suspicion. It would appear, anyway, if these regulations are strictly followed, that it is impossible for the Excise Department to take more precautions than they have taken. The penalty for fraud by any distiller is extremely severe, and the ninety-second section of the Inland Revenue Act provides:

Every person carrying on business subject to excise, who fails to allow any person acting for him or in his employ, or shall neglect to keep a stock book or such other books as are required by this Act and the regulations under it, to make true and correct entries, shall for the first offence incur a penalty not exceeding $300 and not less than $50, and shall for each subsequent offence incur a penalty of $500, together with double the duty payable under this Act.

Every article or commodity in respect to which any fraudulent or inaccurate entry has been made, shall be forfeited to the Crown and shall be seized by any officer of inland revenue and dealt with accordingly.

With such a law as this, and with such regulations as have been made under it, it would be tremendous risk for any distiller to incur to make a false entry in his book as to where the corn came from. I look upon this law as a guarantee of safety for the revenue.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the Controller of Inland Revenue to explain a case which I will submit to him. I have a warehouse and am purchasing grain at my home in Gananoque on the River St. Lawrence. The American farmer three miles across who grows corn, puts his corn in bags, places it on the boat, brings it to Gananoque, enters it free, and I buy 100 bushels from him and store it in my elevator. The Canadian farmer comes along immediately after and I buy 500 bushels from him and put it in the same bin. I keep on doing that until I have accumulated say 20,000 bushels.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) pretend to say to the committee that the American farmer can bring his corn to Canada free of duty?

Mr. TAYLOR. Why, certainly.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think he can under the law.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, my friend (Mr. McMullen) has not read the Act which his friends have placed before him. Time and again when there was no duty on barley I have bought it from the American farmers and stored it in my warehouse. The American and Canadian farmers sell their produce to me and I put it in the same bin. Now, this corn which I buy has not been imported for the purpose of distillation at all. It is entered free of duty, and it is sold to the grain merchant by the American farmer the same as the Canadian farmer sells it. I have accumulated 10,000 or 20,000 bushels and the agent of the distillery comes along and buys that corn from me, and I load it on the cars or in the vessels as is most convenient—

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) think that I would believe that he would be capable in that case of defrauding the revenue by assisting the distillery to defraud it, and selling them the American corn that paid no duty. I do not believe my hon. friend would do that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am quite sure my hon. friend would not believe that, but he has not seized the point which I am making. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), who has been the Premier of a province, would come down to this Parliament and submit a law which actually encourages people to perpetrate frauds on the revenue.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) gives himself as an instance of the fraud, and I say I cannot believe he would do it.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend has no right to impute to any man in Canada the desire to perpetrate a fraud. I am dealing in an article of commerce—corn. Under the law, it is entitled to come in free. I may sell it to a miller to be ground into food, or I may sell it to any one else. A distiller's agent may come along and make me an offer for the corn. I sell it to him, and he loads it on to a vessel or a car and sends it to his distillery. I ask my hon. friend how he is going to collect any duty on that corn?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I will come down on my hon. friend for helping the distiller to defraud the revenue.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). My hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has put the case exactly, and it is a case which will inevitably happen unless this clause is altered in some way, or unless the Controller of Customs can devise some means by which it can be carried out. In the case put by the hon. member for South Leeds, the owner of a warehouse, who purchases corn indiscriminately from Canadian and American producers, would have a perfect right to sell any portion of that corn to a distiller, and all the machinery of the Customs Department and the Inland Revenue Department combined, and all the procedure of all the courts in Canada could not touch it.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I say that no one who respects the law and wants to help it to be respected, has any right to sell to a distiller American corn which has not paid duty. That is an illegal act.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I will submit another case, and I want to ask my hon. friend how he will get round it. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) made the statement last night that there was corn enough grown in Canada to supply the distillers of Canada. Now, the corn crop comes in, and the distillers say: "We are going to evade this duty of 7½ cents a bushel; we will send our agents up to Essex to buy all the corn which is necessary for distilling purposes." They purchase the Canadian crop, and that is replaced for feeding purposes by American corn which is imported free. The Canadian corn has gone to make whisky, and the American corn is brought in free and fed by the farmers to their stock. How is my hon. friend going to meet that case?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is no harm in making whisky with Canadian corn, but there would be harm in doing what my hon. friend suggests, namely, getting American corn, which he knows has not paid duty, and selling it to a distiller. That is an illegal act, and when my hon. friend gave himself as an instance, saying that he was keeping a warehouse and was going to buy Canadian and American corn and mix the two together, and, if an agent of a distiller came along, was going to sell it to him irrespective of its origin, I am persuaded he would not do that, because in selling to a distiller American corn which had not paid the duty, he would be committing an illegal act.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid that however much respect we may have for my hon. friend, and we all have a deep respect for himself, we cannot have much respect for his law. I think the case may be stated in this way. I am sorry that we have not the Minister of Justice in this House, but we certainly have some lawyers on the Treasury benches, and I would ask them whether this proposition is tenable or not? Your enactment does not impose a penalty upon any man for either buying American corn for distillation, or selling American corn for distillation.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It does for using it for distillation.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend goes too fast. So far as I go, he agrees with me that there is no law against any man either buying or selling American corn for distillation.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. He can only buy it on certain conditions.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no legal penalty against any man buying or selling American corn for distillation purposes. The only thing there is, is a tariff item which says that when American corn, for the purposes of distillation, comes to a Canadian port, it shall be dutiable at 7½ cents per bushel. A man who deals in corn has a large warehouse at Kingston, and he advertises that he will buy all the American corn which he can get at a certain price. One million bushels comes across the border, is entered for general purposes, and is taken to this man's warehouse and stored there. It has passed the customs, it has now a legal status, and is in the warehouse of a Canadian citizen. He sells the corn to Mr. Jones, Mr. Smith, or anybody else. There is no law which tells him that he shall make an inquiry as to the purpose for which it shall be used, or which says that he shall sell it for certain purposes, and not for other purposes. In the course of sale, that corn may pass through a dozen different hands before it ultimately finds its way into a distillery. The distiller has his record book, of course, but what does the record show? It shows from whom he bought the corn, and if he is told that it is domestic corn, he so records it, but more than that he has no possibility of knowing. So his first record is that he bought it from John Jones; next, that to the best of his knowledge it is domestic corn; and, next, that it was brought to him in a wagon to which a pair of horses were spanned. These are the conditions imposed by the law, and every one of them has been complied with. Everything is perfectly legal, and the hon. gentleman who controls the Inland Revenue Department and his officers can go no further than that record. There is no penalty against the man who sells, and it seems to me that if the Government propose to get any revenue from American corn, which either immediately or mediately, by displacing an equal quantity of Canadian corn, virtually finds its way to the distilleries, they will not get it under this clause. Some other clause or some efficient regulations will have to be framed in order to make sure that the revenue will be collected, because if the worst comes to the worst, how easy it is to carry out what my hon. friend said. If a distiller buys 50,000 bushels of Canadian corn, and then has the Canadian seller simply bring in 50,000 bushels of corn from the other side and put in the place of that he has sold, what will the Government be able to do? What I am arguing is not whether it is best to buy the one corn or the other, but whether, under this tariff, you are going to get a single cent of duty from corn for distilling purposes. I take it to be the purpose of the Government that corn for distilling purposes, brought in from another country, should pay a revenue. Do they expect to get any revenue from it? If they do, they will have to frame another clause or so surround this clause with such regulations that they will be certain to get the duty from the American corn or from the Canadian corn used in its place.

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). My hon. friend puts the case of a Mr. Jones who imports directly American corn and does not declare that he has imported it for the purpose of selling to distilleries, and then sells it to a distillery. Well, if Mr. Jones should do this, he would hear from me, and I will do my best to have him punished for helping the distiller to defraud the revenue.

Mr. FOSTER. You might have a very good intention, but you would lack the power.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The great objection which my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) makes is that no regulations have been made. It is the bounden duty of the Controller of Customs, he argues, to issue his regulations the very day the resolutions are tabled, and he says that any Controller who does not do that, does not know his business. Well, I may tell the hon. gentleman that if I felt myself lacking in business qualifications, I should not accept him as my professor. Let us see if what he has said I should do has always been done by the head of the Customs Department. I venture to say that it has never been the custom of that department to do what the hon. gentleman says should be done. Let me point out what Sir Mackenzie Bowell did, when he was head of that department. True, my hon. friend placed in writing his lack of confidence in Sir Mackenzie Bowell, but none the less I have greater confidence in that hon. gentleman as a business man than in the hon. member for York, and I think the community has too. He certainly administered the Customs Department with great vigour. Under Sir Mackenzie Bowell's administration, corn for ensilage purposes was placed on the free list, under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council, as now. According to the hon. gentleman, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, if he did not, on the day his resolution was tabled, issue his regulations, he was unfit to administer his department. What are the facts? Sir Mackenzie Bowell tabled his resolution on the 28th of March, it was not until the 31st of May that he submitted his regulations to Council, and the Privy Council did not act on them until the end of June. I shall not say anything as to the manner in which the duties of the head of the Customs Department were performed when the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) was Controller of Customs until that hon. gentleman makes his objections.

There is difficulty, I know, and it may be worth while to consider whether this clause may be made somewhat plainer. I have simply addressed myself to the fact whether it is the bounden duty of the Controller, the moment these resolutions were tabled, to have issued regulations, and before the resolutions were adopted by the House. I do not think it would be wise to make regulations, while the resolutions are before the House, subject to amendment, and before I know what the sense of the committee and the House is with regard to them, and I do not think any business man would think otherwise.

With reference to the preferential clause, general instructions were given, as the hon. gentleman knows, to the officers of the department to satisfy themselves as to the British origin of goods; but, in the meanwhile, until the tariff becomes a law, until we know what the sense of the House finally is, and what is ultimately determined upon, I do not think it wise to make regulations which may be required to guard the interests of the revenue.

I am following what has been the course invariably taken, as far as I have been able to ascertain, by the Customs Department, since it has been a department; and if the hon. gentleman is in a position to show me any case in which, when the head of that department has tabled resolutions, he has simultaneously issued regulations under Order in Council, I should like him to point it out to me now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am extremely glad to hear the statement which the hon. Controller of Customs made, and which I think a very wise and judicious statement, that he thinks it would be well, in view of the great difficulties of administering this law, to give further consideration to this clause, in order to see if it can be amended in any way so as to facilitate the collection of revenue. Perhaps, therefore, it would be well to let this item stand for the purpose of careful consideration of that point by the Government, and I am not without hope that the Government, finding the difficulties so great, and seeing that this is a matter on which public opinion is very much divided, will come to the conclusion to strike out free corn and leave the duty upon all corn. I think that will be the simplest and most efficient way of guarding public revenue and avoiding the many difficulties which, I am sure, will be encountered in the attempt to administer this clause.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has asked whether any member of the Cabinet of the legal profession would give his views on this question, I humbly submit that while his mind is very analytical and that while he and his friends around him are very clever in discovering difficulties, and while there are difficulties surrounding the importation of corn in this way, those difficulties are by no means insuperable or as great as the hon. gentleman imagines. What is the House trying to do? It is trying to declare that all American corn imported for certain purposes shall be liable to a duty. I am told by these gentlemen who took part in the debate last night and who spoke again to-day that there is no difficulty whatever in distinguishing between American and Canadian Indian corn. I am told, secondly, that there is an officer of the Inland Revenue Department in every distillery watching the operations of that distillery. I am told, thirdly, that the distillers have to make a sworn return of the quantity of corn they use. Very well. If this House declares that all Indian corn used for the purpose of distillation—

Mr. FOSTER. But it does not declare that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Wait a moment; I say "if." If this House declares that all Indian corn used for the purpose of distillation shall pay a duty, it reduces the difficulty to a minimum. Then, if the distiller chooses, instead of importing corn direct himself and paying the duty, to run the risk of buying it from somebody else who imports it, he will still be liable to pay the duty.

Mr. FOSTER. On that assumption.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. On that assumption. The agents of the Inland Revenue Department would have certain knowledge, which he would report, that a certain quantity of corn was used for distillation. The distiller would have to pay the duty and there would be no difficulty as to the revenue. The only thing that is stated is that this mythical person, John Jones, may have imported the corn and it may have passed through ten or twelve hands, but the distiller, when he went to buy it, would know that he bought it with the legal obligation to pay the duty.

Mr. FOSTER. Under this clause?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the word "used" is put there. The regulations are framed to prevent the possibility of fraud, but that fraud will be practiced to some extent, of course, we all know; that cannot be avoided. But I should have no reasonable doubt, as the matter presents itself to my mind, that if Parliament declared that all Indian corn used for the purpose of distillation is liable to pay a duty, that the revenue will not suffer. The distiller might as well import the corn direct and pay the duty, for, if he attempted to buy it from John Jones, or Brown, or Robinson, he would have to pay it anyway.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) would not suggest that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Why not?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman would not suggest putting an import duty on an article produced in this country?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. American corn.

Mr. FOSTER. You said "all corn."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All foreign corn, of course. I started with the proposition that American corn is easily distinguished from Canadian corn. Then, there are officers in each distillery who ascertain, in a proper way, how much American corn is used for distillation. So, the quantity of American corn being absolutely and accurately known, there is no possible doubt of our being able to recover the duty upon it. So, what will be the result? The distiller will say: I might as well import the corn direct and pay the duty on it, because if I do buy it from anybody else, even though it has passed through fifty hands, when it is used for the purpose of distillation, I have to pay the duty upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you put such a clause into a tariff law?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That foreign corn used for purposes of distillation shall pay a duty?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I should have no hesitation in doing so. There is no difficulty or wrong in it.

Mr. FOSTER. That would meet the difficulty, if you can make the distinction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. Minister (Mr. Davies) has suggested an improvement, no doubt. But he has not met one point, to which I would draw his attention again. The statement is made by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) that there is enough corn now raised in Canada to supply all the distilleries.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I meant all the distilleries in Canada. The Walkerville distillery is the only one that buys corn from the wagon, and we supply enough corn to supply that distillery. It requires 3,000 bushels a day when the distillery is running, but it has not been running for the last eight or nine months, so that there would be very little difficulty about American corn coming into Windsor.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the point I want to make, and it is important. I want to know how the Minister would deal with this case: There is nothing to prevent the Canadian distiller buying corn from the Canadian producer. Any person who raises corn in Canada is as much entitled to sell it to a distiller as to sell it to anybody else, and the distiller has as much right to buy Canadian as to buy imported corn. Therefore, the distiller will buy corn raised in Canada. There is nothing in the suggestion that my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) made to prevent Canadian producers selling their corn to the distillers or to the merchants, who will undertake the business of supplying the distillery, while importing corn to be used not for distillation, but for other purposes. This would be a means of effectually evading the law, even with the improvement suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) made a statement that American corn could be easily distinguished from Canadian corn—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) will understand that I made that statement on the authority of my hon. friends. I do not pretend to know anything about the matter myself.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was going to say that the hon. Minister, no doubt, made that statement on the authority of his friends behind him. I have been in the grain business for many years, and I make the statement here that I will bring three samples of corn here on Monday, and you cannot find a gentleman on that side of the House who will say that this is Canadian or that is American corn.

Mr. CLANCY. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) is from Essex, and he knows that what I say is correct. If the Government want to give employment to a horde of hungry followers who are seeking offices, they can establish these men at the American ports of entry and stamp every grain as it comes in. In that way they would be able to follow it and identify it, but in no other. I want to submit another statement to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and let him get around it if he can. He has acknowledged that the Canadian distillers can purchase Canadian corn. The hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) said there was enough corn to supply all the Canadian distilleries—

Mr. MCGREGOR. No, I said that—

Mr. TAYLOR. I know he has qualified that by saying that he referred to the Walkerville distillery. But after they bought their supply there would be a large surplus to be used by other parties. If you let in corn free for other purposes, Canadian corn can never come into competition with American corn for feeding and milling purposes. Is the Canadian distiller going to buy American corn when he has to pay 7½ cents duty on it? He will say to the grain merchants: Pick up the Canadian corn for me and you can import American corn for other purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would not that be a good thing for the Canadian farmers?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, for this reason—the Canadian farmer will get no more for his corn than the American, because the American corn can be imported free for all purposes except distilling. I can only look upon this in one way—that the Government are placing this item in the tariff admitting corn free for all other purposes except distilling knowing that the distillers can get their corn without paying the duty, and that this is being done in the interests of the distillers more than in the interest of the farmers, because it is a distinct injury to the farmers. I think the distiller will reap the benefit. The hon. Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) said that he would like to find that fellow "John Jones," referring to me, when I sell corn out of my warehouse in Gananoque. I want to submit a case. I have ten or fifteen thousand bushels of corn, some Canadian and some American, the American corn having been brought in free—bought from an American farmer whose place is a few miles from the warehouse. I say to a vessel owner: I have ten or fifteen thousand bushels of corn, what will you give me for it? We make a bargain. He has a vessel going to Toronto. He buys it and puts it in his vessel and takes it down to Toronto. He goes to Gooderham & Worts and says, I have got ten or fifteen thousand bushels of corn that I brought in a vessel from Gananoque, what will you give me for it? They make a bargain. How are the revenue officers going to get a duty on that ten or fifteen thousand bushels of corn? My hon. friend from North Essex (Mr. McGregor) won't say that he can go into court and prove that this is Canadian corn, or that it is American corn, and no other man in this House or country can do it. I know as much about corn as any hon. gentleman in North Essex who raises corn. You cannot tell the difference between American or Canadian corn.

Mr. TALBOT. The hon. gentleman says that he cannot tell the difference between American or Canadian corn. Is it not a well known fact that the principal species of corn grown in the United States is the dent or horsetooth corn? That three-fourths of all the corn raised in the United States is of that variety, and none of it grows in Canada? I have lived on corn plantations, and know whereof I speak.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend may know something about Quebec, but I can tell him that all these species are grown successfully in Ontario.

Mr. TALBOT. I have lived fifteen years where corn is grown, and I know something about it. You cannot grow dent corn to maturity in the province of Ontario.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask the hon. member for North Essex if that statement is correct?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister of Finance told us this afternoon that these regulations have not been made by the Controller of Customs because the Controller is a very busy man, and that it is impossible to have all these regulations made at once. Now, I would like to ask him whether they have made any regulations with regard to any of those different commodities for which it is provided by the Act that the Governor in Council or the Controller of Customs shall make regulations. Have any regulations been made, and if so, what regulations have been made during these forty days that the tariff has been in force? I hear no answer, and I presume that means that no regulations have been made. Now, the Controller of Customs himself says, Oh, if I am a sinner in this respect, I am in good company. When Sir Mackenzie Bowell was Minister of Customs the tariff containing this article became law on the 28th of March, and there was no regulations made until the 31st day of May, and then it did not pass the Council until the 11th of June. And the hon. gentleman also held a threat over my head that if I dare say anything he could mention something about me, too. Well, I cordially invite him to do so. I challenge him to tell one case where, if regulations were not made when I was in office to make them, and to submit them to Council, I did not take immediate steps to protect the revenue and to instruct the officers in charge, in advance of any regulations by the Governor in Council, how to proceed. But in this case the Controller does not tell us—in fact he does tell us that he has given no instructions whatever to any officer in this Dominion how this law is to be administered so as to collect the revenue. There were changes made in the last tariff which may have required the regulations to be approved by the Governor in Council, or by the Controller of Customs. Now, we will take one case that occurs to me at the moment. Goods for dyeing purposes were to be brought in at a lower rate of duty. Regulations were not made, because there was no establishment in Canada ready to proceed with the manufacture of the dyeing of those goods, and until one establishment was started and was in running order, there was no necessity for making any regulations. Then I will take another case, that of rubber goods, to which the same statement applies. Then there was another important case, books under certain conditions were to come in free under regulations made by the Governor in Council. The duty on books was changed from 20 per cent to 6 cents per pound, and a large class of books were admitted entirely free of duty that had before been dutiable, for instance, those for the use of mechanics' institutes, free libraries, universities, colleges, law libraries or organized law associations for the use of its members. Before I made those regulations and submitted them to Council, I found it necessary to communicate with the importers of this country, because I was desirous that they should have the handling of those books, and that these institutions that I have mentioned should not have to do their business through merchants in a foreign country. Now, when we made these books free it was necessary for the protection of our Canadian merchants that we should give them the opportunity of buying those books and furnishing them to the universities and other institutions—

Mr. TAYLOR.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Were they not made free in the resolution?

Mr. WALLACE. They were made free in the resolution.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Then it was your duty, according to the ex-Finance Minister, immediately to have issued your regulations.

Mr. WALLACE. I am trying to explain with regard to that, that the books became free of duty the very day the new law came into force, but any institute, any law association, or any university could import those from a foreign country and have them free, and they did have them free. But I was anxious that the merchants of this country should have the privilege of furnishing those books, instead of the merchants of some foreign country, and I wanted to make regulations by which that could be done, with no loss to the revenue, and without those books coming in on the free list for general distribution. Before I did that, I had communications with the merchants to see what safeguards could be provided and what regulations should be made so that they could have these in free. But in that case there was not a moment's loss in permitting the universities or the law associations to bring in their books free, direct from foreign countries. But I was delaying to make regulations so as to permit our Canadian merchants to have that business, and I succeeded in doing so very satisfactorily, I believe. In that instance, as the only one that occurs to me, there was a delay, and a proper delay, but there was no delay in admitting the books free for those who were entitled by law to receive them, there was not a delay of one hour, and there was no loss to the revenue. But in this case what are the facts? The Controller himself tells us that there are great difficulties, and he asks advice from this side of the House. He says that he is beset with difficulties on this question, and that statement was repeated by the Minister of Finance. The Controller himself said: I want advice from that side of the House.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, I did not want it.

Mr. WALLACE. You don't want it to-day, but you did yesterday.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. WALLACE. Then I will give him advice gratis. Put all corn on the dutiable list.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Has the hon. gentleman any alternative to that?

Mr. WALLACE. Oh, I thought the hon. gentleman did not want any advice.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. But as you are volunteering it—

Mr. WALLACE. I volunteer my advice.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Advice gratis is not usually valuable.

Mr. WALLACE. Advice free is not considered so, I admit. But I give it only in response to the invitation the hon. gentleman gave yesterday, but which he repudiates to-day. So I say, in case that may be quoted, there was no loss whatever to the revenue, but I did it in the interest of our Canadian business men so that they might import those books instead of obliging our Canadian institutions to get them from foreign countries. There was not an hour lost in permitting universities to send to England, or to send to the United States, to have those books imported, so that they might bring them in at once, entirely free of duty. That is not a parallel case. Regulations should have been made at once. And while the Finance Minister truly stated that the Controller of Customs had many other matters on hand—I know that the Controller of Customs has many matters of importance constantly before him—his paramount business is the protection of the revenue and exercising care that the laws of Parliament are not disregarded, but are carried into effect at once. I think it is quite clear from the statement made by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) that the province of Ontario could supply the distillery at Walkerville with corn. The statement was made by the hon. gentleman that the counties of Essex and Kent could supply, I understand, 7,000,000 bushels. If they could supply only six, five, four, or two, or three million bushels, that quantity would be more than was required for making all the whisky for Canada. Only one million and a half bushels of corn are used here for the manufacture of whisky. One bushel makes three gallons of proof spirits, and there are only 4,000,000 gallons of whisky made in Canada, and that would require less than one million and a half bushels of grain. So the counties of Essex and Kent can supply four times as much corn as is required for making all the whisky manufactured in Canada. If that be the case, where is the revenue to come from? No hon. gentleman opposite has stated that Canadian corn is not equally as good for manufacturing whisky as American corn. The hon. member for North Essex has stated that farmers come with teams to Walkerville and sell Canadian corn for the purpose of making whisky. If that were not the case, I should ask the Minister of Inland Revenue to state why our corn is not suitable for making whisky. But such is the fact, and the hon. member for North Essex has given proof that it is so used by stating as a fact that farmers bring their grain to Walkerville, where whisky is being made from Canadian corn. Those two counties producing three or four times as much corn as is required for distilling purposes, it follows that Canadian corn will be used by distillers, and, of course, will pay no duty; thus the Government will get no revenue, and if further corn is wanted it will be brought in from the United States for other purposes for which corn is used in this country. There were only 1,600,000 bushels of corn imported from the United States into Ontario during the past year. It may be that one-half or one-third of that quantity was used for distilling purposes, but, of course, we do not know that any quantity was used for distilling purposes; all we know is that the corn paid the duty, and corn used for distilling purposes paid the duty the same as corn used in any other way. This proposition is admittedly beset with many great difficulties, and it does not appear under it as if any revenue was going to be collected. I understood the hon. Controller would give the committee some information as to whether any duties had been collected on corn at the different ports during the last forty days, because there may be some cargoes on their way or some grain may be coming in for distillers and be liable for duty. As to the future, it appears to me that distillers will use Canadian corn, on which no duty is paid, and therefore this clause is only a buncombe resolution, intended for some particular purpose.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Since I took my seat, the officers of my department have furnished me with some information bearing on this question. There has been imported at Hamilton, 523 bushels of corn; Belleville, 8,487 bushels; Prescott, 10,597 bushels; or a total of 19,607 for those three ports, this corn being for distilling purposes.

Mr. WALLACE. I have just stated that I supposed there were some cargoes on the way.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If distillers, or other people, are importing corn, they are paying duty on it under this proposition, and every entry is being taken subject to amendment, and the Customs Department has a right of recourse if any corn or anything else does not come in properly and pay duty. I hope the hon. ex-Minister of Finance heard the statements made a few moments ago by the late Controller of Customs, and he will apply them to his remarks as to a dereliction of duty on my part in this regard. No doubt he heard the late Controller, who began to call his sins to remembrance, confess that as regards item after item—

Mr. WALLACE. No.

Mr. WALLACE.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No orders were issued. The hon. gentleman went on to state that there were reasons therefor. But they were in the tariff when it was introduced, and those items or resolutions became part of the law. If this item as regards corn is in the law and it is my bounden duty to act upon it, it was also the bounden duty of the late Controller of Customs to act on similar items. He asked me in regard to item 43, and he wanted to know if I had done anything in respect to it. I referred to an item in the tariff dealt with by the hon. gentleman, and I asked what had been done in regard to it—goods in a raw or unfinished state for the purpose of dyeing, 7½ per cent. The ex-Minister of Finance prepared this resolution, in connection with the late Controller of Customs, and according to the statement made by the late ex-Minister of Finance, the late Controller should have had his regulations ready to submit to Council for Council to act on them in order to protect the revenue.

Mr. WALLACE. There were no dyeing establishments.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. According to the ex-Minister of Finance that resolution became the law when it was laid on the Table, and it was the bounden duty of the Controller to have acted by regulation on the next day. I ran across this item in the old tariff, and I sought to find regulations established in regard to it by the then Controller. This was in 1894, when the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) was Minister of Finance, and the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) was Controller of Customs. What regulations were established in Council in regard to that item? There have never been any regulations established from that day to this, and I have to take hold and do work that should have been performed by the late Controller two or three years ago. I challenge the hon. ex-Finance Minister to quote a single instance where they have issued their regulations to the officers of a department and passed an Order in Council immediately dealing with tariff resolutions. I am free to admit that there is more or less difficulty with items of this kind. We know it, and we are anxious to make the tariff as workable as we can. The Government took the idea of putting corn upon the free list, but they wanted to make corn used for distillation purposes pay a duty. That is the object of this item. The discussion may have shown the difficulty more clearly, and it may be possible that some words might be inserted which would help to remove that difficulty. If hon. gentlemen opposite think it desirable, my colleague (Mr. Fielding) perhaps would consent to let this item stand over until the item of free corn comes up, and then we can discuss it. Meanwhile, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) will admit, that it is perhaps just as well I did not issue regulations, if there is going to be an amendment to the clause which might change these regulations.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be wise for my hon. friend to have done exactly as he did in the case of English goods under this reciprocity business. He immediately took occasion to advise his officers, that they should make themselves certain of the British origin of the goods. That was his duty. He gave caution to the officers that they should take precautions in this respect. I would not find fault with my hon. friend, if he did not at once make regulations and have them endorsed by Order in Council with reference to British goods under the one-eighth reduction, but he did do the essential thing when he immediately telegraphed the officers that they were to see that the goods were of British origin. In this case nothing of the kind has been done. In reference to fabrics brought in for dyeing purposes, the thing was carefully guarded, but the best safeguard of all was that there were no dyeing establishments in the country.

Mr. WALLACE. Up to to-day there is only one establishment.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) see, that in that case there was no dyeing establishment.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Now you see you were wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. There was no dyeing establishment, and it made the matter perfectly safe.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. But the resolution was laid on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. That was not a case of free goods. It was a case of where there had to be a dutiable entry, and the dutiable entry was subject to amendment. There was no dyeing establishment, and if my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) had such a precaution as that around the distillation business, we would not complain.

Mr. SPROULE. This item will of course be allowed to stand. Before we pass from the question, I wish to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) which is so erroneous that it should not be allowed to go uncontradicted. That statement was, that dent corn did not come to maturity and ripen in Ontario. I can tell him, that that corn has been grown in my district for the last fifteen years, and it ripens every year. There are about eleven or twelve varieties, and they ripen every year. You go further west and further south, and there are a great many more varieties and they ripen right along.

Wheat flour, including the duty on the barrel, sixty cents per barrel.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Before the item in reference to wheat passes, I wish to make a few remarks on the subject. Yesterday afternoon the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) made some statements in regard to the price of wheat in Manitoba, and the price at Duluth. Nobody knows all the ins and outs of the wheat business except those who do not want to tell. Now, the wheat that the hon. gentleman alluded to was doubtless No. 1 hard. It is a well known fact that No. 1 hard wheat that comes from Duluth, while it goes by the same name, is an entirely different article from No. 1 Manitoba hard, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) understood the manner in which the wheat market is manipulated, he would know why it is that people are willing to pay so much more for No. 1 hard in Manitoba, than they are willing to pay for No. 1 hard in Duluth. It has been one of the greatest drawbacks to the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west, that they have not been able to get the full price for their wheat. No. 1 hard wheat in Manitoba is really worth all the way from 5 to 15 cents a bushel more than the No. 1 hard which comes out of Duluth, and more than that, which comes out of Fort William—or at any rate which came out of Fort William until this last season. Under the old regulations No. 1 hard in Manitoba, was brought to Fort William and mixed with No. 2 hard, and No. 1 Northern, and scoured wheat, and was graded out of Fort William a different wheat from what it was when graded into Fort William. There is great room for reform in this matter of wheat grades. The No. 1 Manitoba hard is quoted at the same price as No. 1 Duluth all over the world, but that is an entire mistake, because as I have said, the Manitoba article is infinitely superior to that which comes from Duluth.

We have heard a great deal about the injury that would be inflicted upon farmers by the removal of the duty on wheat. The fact of the matter is, that the duty upon wheat is no benefit whatever to the great wheat-producing areas of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It is simply a means of working into the hands of these great corporations—two large milling companies and a combination of grain buyers up there. As a matter of fact we have only three buyers on our market. The duty on wheat is a means whereby these three corporations, each possessing very large capital, can purchase their wheat at low prices. They purchase that wheat when the farmers in the North-west have to sell it, and as is well known because of the burdens the farmers labour under and the hard times they have experienced up there, the majority of the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west, have to sell their wheat as soon as they thresh. Now, these three great corporations buy when wheat is at a low price, in many cases at from 40 to 50 cents a bushel, and just as soon as they have got all the wheat they want for their own purpose, and that means when they have got the great bulk of the wheat, then up goes the price. They put up the price in many cases 25 cents a bushel, and the consequence is, that the small millers who have not got the capital to lay in a large stock of wheat, are either forced to stop their mills running, or are compelled to buy wheat at these enhanced prices. As a result, they cannot compete in the markets of the world with Americans, or with the large flour millers, because they have not been able to manufacture their flour at an export basis. These are facts, and I am prepared to prove them. As I have said, nobody understands all about this flour business, but I believe I understand it a great deal better than the majority of eastern men. There is no question but that what I have stated is one chief result of the duty on flour. It throws the wheat market into the hands of these great corporations.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Rutherford) to refer to the duty on flour, or to the duty on wheat.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Both; they act in the same way exactly.

Mr. TAYLOR. May I ask my hon. friend to name the three great corporations?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. The Lake of the Woods Milling Company, the Ogilvy Company, and the Syndicate of the Grain Exchange in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. WALLACE. Is the hon. gentleman opposed to the duty on flour?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Yes. I was going to say that there was a petition presented to the Controller of Customs in Winnipeg when he was there, supposed to be signed by farmers of the North-west, asking for the retention of the duty on wheat and flour. I have here a letter from Mr. Leech, the secretary of the Farmers' Institute of Manitoba, who was surprised to find that such a petition had been presented, because the great majority of the farmers who attended the convention were opposed to the duty on wheat and flour. Here are a few facts, as stated by Mr. Leech, showing the manner in which the signatures to that petition were secured:

I have it upon the authority of one of the canvassers, that misrepresentation, lying, humbug and debauchery were the means employed to secure signatures, and money without stint was supplied for the purpose. The same authority tells me that the instructions to canvassers were to get signatures from any and all who could by any means be induced to sign, not by any means confining the canvass to farmers, and I find, upon investigation, that those instructions have been pretty faithfully carried out, for every class, calling and profession appears to be represented upon the petition, even to the Chinaman, whose farming operations are within the walls of a 10 x 12 laundry. Of the 1,789 names to the petition, I have been able, in the two or three days spent inquiring into the matter, to obtain information as to the callings of 858, and find of that number only 411 are bona fide farmers, and 447 are bogus, with callings as indicated in the annexed list. According to my information, canvassers were paid all expenses—

This I am prepared to substantiate from my own personal observations.

—(of which liquor bills were an important item; and 25 cents per name, $4 per day, $40 for two weeks' work, $260 for two weeks' work, $100 per month, &c., were the prices paid to canvassers for getting signatures to this petition.

Now, the question naturally arises why were these moneys paid, why was this canvass undertaken, and who put up the funds for these gentlemen who were canvassing for names? The answer is very simple. There is no doubt in my mind, or in the mind of any one who has given any attention to the subject, that it was the three great corporations or their agents who took this means of endeavouring to work up an apparent sentiment on behalf of the farmers in favour of retaining the duty on wheat and flour. I am sorry that any duty is left on wheat and flour, because the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west do not want it; they have no use for it; it is of no good to them; and there is no way in which the Government could do more good than by inquiring into the details of the grain trade in Manitoba and the North-west.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend said that no man knew all about this question or any other.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I said, except those who did not want to tell.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, perhaps my hon. friend is one of that class.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. No, I do not belong to that class.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I accept that statement. My hon. friend also made the statement that there were only three corporations who purchased wheat in the North-west.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I did not say that.

Mr. TAYLOR. And that they controlled the market. I want to inform my hon. friend that the firm of James Richardson & Son, of Kingston, at the earliest opening of the wheat market of the North-west, have agents all over that country to buy wheat to supply the millers of Ontario. I see a miller sitting in the gallery whom they supply almost every week.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I am quite aware of that, and if the hon. gentleman will talk to Messrs. Richardson & Son and their buyers in the North-west, he will learn some of the difficulties under which they labour.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps I am as well acquainted with Messrs. Richardson & Son as the hon. gentleman. He also made the statement that the duty on wheat and flour will not help the farmers. Then I want to ask him why it is that before the duty on flour was lowered from 75 cents to 60 cents a barrel, there was no American flour imported into the maritime provinces, but that since then two or three vessel loads of American flour have been sent from Boston to St. John.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that under a duty of 75 cents a barrel no flour was imported into the maritime provinces?

Mr. TAYLOR. Practically none.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman has much to learn.

Mr. TAYLOR. A great deal of Ontario flour was brought through Boston, but one of the maritime province papers makes the statement that that was the first American flour brought from Boston for many years, and the statement is not contradicted. I wanted to correct the statement about these three milling corporations being the only purchasers of wheat in the North-west.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. I did not say that. What I said was that those three corporations controlled the market, and I say that any one who knows the condition of the wheat market in Manitoba and the North-west will bear me out in making that statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say they do not control it.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I am glad to hear my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) asking that this duty be removed. I may say that the great desire of the whole province of Quebec is that there should be no duty on wheat or flour. We do not produce nearly as much as we consume in that province. I understood that the North-west wanted protection on these commodities, and I am really very glad to hear that the hon. member for Macdonald sides with us on that point. We are certainly willing to grant protection for our friends in Manitoba and the North-west as well as our friends in Ontario. But we have been put to very great expense to settle that country, and we think the interests of the older provinces should not be overlooked. I may tell the Ministers that not very long ago, before this tariff came into force, I met one of the travellers of the Ogilvys, and he himself did not expect that they would be treated so well. He expected that the duty on flour would be decreased at least 25 or 30 cents a barrel, whereas it has been decreased only 15 cents. I believe the maritime provinces also are very much interested in this question. I may say that in the section of country where I reside, probably not one farmer grows wheat enough for his own family; not only the workingmen, but all the farmers have to buy flour, and I believe that duty should be reduced, if not removed altogether. I am very much pleased that hon. gentlemen coming from the west share that opinion. It would be a great boon to both the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces, and I hope the Government will see their way to lower if not entirely remove this duty.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to add something to what my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) has said with regard to this question. I may say that I took a very deep interest in the proceedings of the farmers' delegates before the tariff commission, which commission was composed of the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Controller of Customs, when they appeared in Winnipeg, and I can bear out very heartily the assertions made by my hon. friend from Macdonald regarding the sentiments of the farmers on the question of the duty on wheat and flour. It is my earnest conviction that the farmers of Manitoba, as a body, do not want the duty retained on wheat and flour. A meeting of this delegation, composed of 100 of the most representative farmers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories and of delegates representing the Farmers' Institutes, was held in the Manitoba legislative assembly chamber to arrange a programme for their conference with the tariff commissioners. The opinion of that delegation, as I gathered it from the speeches made by its members, who spoke one after another, was that the duty on wheat and flour was of no value whatever to the farmers of Manitoba, but many of them did not make any representations to the committee on that point, because they had other things to press and were not so interested in bringing this particular matter before the commissioners.

Now, a great deal was said before the commission with regard to a petition which was circulated throughout the province of Manitoba and which was gotten up and circulated, I have no hesitation in saying, by these milling corporations and possibly by the syndicate mentioned by the hon. member for Macdonald; 1,789 names appear on that petition, but I may say that I have a communication from Mr. R. E. A. Leech, secretary-treasurer of the Manitoba Central Farmers' Institute, and a representative of that institute on the delegation, which I shall read to the House and which will show how utterly unreliable this petition is. So astonished were the delegates to find this petition presented to the commission that they set on foot an inquiry in order to ascertain how it was farmers could have been so foolish as to sign a petition of that kind, and if you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I shall read the letter which I received recently from Mr. Leech. Mr. Leech says in that letter:

I am satisfied that if the investigation had been completed, even a worse showing would have been made. Under another cover I send you the petition which I have marked "C," "L," "T," indicating the politics of those who signed.

An hon. MEMBER. What do these letters mean?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No doubt, Conservatives, Liberals and Patrons. Mr. Leech also sent me a copy of the letter which he had sent to the Minister of Finance, which, with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall read:

Brandon, Man., March 30th, 1897.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,

Minister of Finance, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Re the petition of "Farmers, residents in the province of Manitoba," which was presented to yourself and Hon. Mr. Paterson in Winnipeg, February 8th last, praying that the duty now imposed upon wheat and flour coming into Canada be retained, I beg to intimate that I have inquired carefully into the matter and have information as to the parties instituting the circulation of the said petition, and those most active in perpetrating in the most unscrupulous manner what to my mind is one of the rankest frauds upon your Government, Parliament and an intelligent people. I have it upon the authority of one of the canvassers, that misrepresentation, lying, humbug and debauchery were the means employed to secure signatures, and money without stint was supplied for the purpose. The same authority tells me that the instructions to canvassers were to get signatures from any and all who could by any means be induced to sign, not by any means confining the canvass to farmers, and I find, upon investigation, that those instructions have been pretty faithfully carried out, for every class, calling and profession appears to be represented upon the petition, even to the Chinaman, whose farming operations are within the walls of a 10 x 12 laundry. Of the 1,789 names to the petition, I have been able, in the two or three days spent inquiring into the matter, to obtain information as to the calling of 858, and find of that number only 411 are bona fide farmers, and 447 are bogus, with callings as indicated in the annexed list. As to the total amount spent in this nefarious business, I am unable to say definitely, but it doubtless runs into the thousands. According to my information, canvassers were paid all expenses (of which liquor bills were an important item) and 25 cents per name, $4 per day, $40 for two weeks' work, $260 for two weeks' work, $100 per month, &c., prices calculated to make the work interesting. Inclosed find statutory declarations as to two forgeries upon the petition, and a glance over the petition would convince one that there are perhaps scores of forgeries. Further comment upon the subject on my part is scarcely necessary. If your Government is disposed to appoint a committee to inquire into the matter, with power to send for persons and papers, I will be glad to supply names.

Faithfully,

R. E. A. LEECH.

Mr. Leech, as I have said, is the secretary-treasurer of the Manitoba Central Farmers' Institute. Now, I shall read a list showing the occupations of those who signed the petition in order that the committee may judge for themselves what value should be attached to this petition:

This list does not include 31 French petitioners, with residence designated Notre Dame des Lourdes, and fourteen others, Rathwell (who, possibly, don't grow as many bushels of wheat); nor 27 others, resident in Lake Winnipeg district (fishermen, 200 miles from a wheat market); nor the towns of southern and north-western Manitoba which have generously helped to swell the entire list of, said to be farmers, to 1,789 names.

I have another point to make in regard to this matter. There appeared before the tariff commission a constituent of my own whose name was Culver. He represented that he was the delegate of the Mennonites—I forget how many thousands he said he represented—and he read a typewritten statement, which the commission afterwards ascertained to have been prepared in the office, I think it was, of the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, of Winnipeg; and although he represented himself as a farmer delegated by these Mennonites and asked that the duty be retained, it transpired that he was the buyer for the Lake of the Woods Milling Company. And if my memory serves me correctly, he was questioned by the commissioners and it turned out that the document he had read was never submitted to the men he said he represented, and that he was in no way authorized to speak for these people. Now, let me give the committee an instance of the prejudicial effect upon the settlers of this duty. I think it was two years ago that a wholesale merchant in Winnipeg, Mr. A. Macdonald, was able to bring from Minneapolis a carload of flour all the way to Winnipeg, pay the duty of 75 cents a barrel, and the freight for about 500 miles, and still sell that flour in Winnipeg at the rate charged by the Manitoba manufacturer, or 5 cents below. And let me add a word to what has been said by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) with regard to how the small local millers suffer. They, as he pointed out, are unable to purchase large quantities of wheat, and the wheat is nearly all bought up at low prices by these three large corporations. Then, when they have cornered the wheat, so to speak, they put it up to such a price as to practically shut out the small millers at these local points. The farmers also suffer, because in very many cases even the farmers buy their flour. Many of them being hard-up sell their wheat early in the season, and before the next year's crop is available, they must buy flour and are obliged to pay a very high price for it.

Mr. KLOEPFER. I would like to ask these representatives of Manitoba and the North-west one question. If you take the duty off wheat, who is going to supply the lower provinces with flour? Do they not want that market? All our Ontario millers send their flour to the lower provinces. I understand that for the last three or four years the price of wheat has averaged from 12½ to 13 cents per bushel less in Detroit, Buffalo and other American points than in Ontario points. With the duty off, the Americans will get the market in the lower provinces.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think about three-fourths of the wheat at present raised in Manitoba is sent via the United States, through the Erie Canal and Buffalo and is manufactured.

Mr. KLOEPFER. We in Ontario use chiefly half of North-west hard wheat, to mix with our own wheat, and the greater part of our flour goes to the maritime provinces. I am surprised that the North-west farmers want to lose the trade of the lower provinces and allow the Americans to supply that market. In the last election the only trouble I had with the party of hon. gentlemen opposite was that they said that the Canadian farmer was not enough protected. But now they want to have the protection taken off.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to amend my statement. If I said that the bulk of Manitoba wheat was manufactured in the United States, I must have been unfortunate in the choice of the words employed to convey my meaning. I did not mean to say that the grain is manufactured in the United States; it is exported in bulk, I believe.

Mr. SPROULE. Even if the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) is right in the analysis of the petition, what does it amount to? There are some 1,700 names on that petition, and he accounts for only 300 or 400. So, it would appear, that the great bulk of the signers of the petition must be farmers. The hon. gentleman avoided stating to the House how many farmers had signed the petition.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will understand that I made no statement of my own, but read the statement of the secretary of the Manitoba Central Farmers' Institute.

Mr. SPROULE. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) in reading the statement practically fathers it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe it to be true.

Mr. SPROULE. He fathers it when he founds an argument upon it and now he says he believes it to be true. Does it not appear that the man who made that analysis is not a fair man and did not wish the proper deduction to be drawn from that petition, otherwise he would have given all the signers and shown the class to which they belonged, and then we would have drawn our own inferences. If I were the hon. gentleman (Mr. Richardson) I would not read a petition of that kind to the House again without being fair enough—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the hon. gentleman will not charge me with being unfair. In what way was I unfair? I gave the statement as given to me by the secretary of the Central Farmers' Institute. I did not wish to give any unfair impression of the case.

Mr. SPROULE. No, the hon. gentleman may not have intended it. But, if not, he is unfortunate in the way in which he presented it to the House. He based an argument, and so did the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), upon the impression conveyed to the House that the petition was neither reliable nor fair. The hon. gentleman said that the people of Manitoba do not want the duty on wheat or flour. If so, and the wheat and flour is allowed to come in free, it will assuredly come in from the United States. Is that the fact? Who supplies the mills of my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell)—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not say that the flour goes to the United States, but the bulk of the wheat exported goes through that channel.

Mr. SPROULE. I can tell the hon. gentleman, as one who has been engaged in the business, in a very limited way for some time, that we depend largely on Manitoba for the wheat we use. It is mixed with Ontario wheat to make a grade flour that is used largely in the maritime provinces.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Would the hon. gentleman give the House an idea of how much Manitoba wheat he uses?

Mr. SPROULE. I cannot say on the spur of the moment, but I can tell the hon. gentleman in a short time. But it makes no difference for the purposes of this argument how much we use. Suffice it to say, that there is scarcely a mill in Ontario but is using Manitoba wheat. I have here the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1896. They show that with the duty on flour at 75 cents a barrel and that on wheat at 15 cents a bushel, very little flour came into the maritime provinces from the United States. In Nova Scotia the imports of flour from the United States were 2,030 barrels. Where did the rest of the supply come from? It must have come from Ontario, Manitoba and the North-west. Imports into New Brunswick from the United States amounted to 936 barrels. Into Manitoba itself there were imported 1,991 barrels. Did not the parties in Manitoba who imported that flour displace so much Manitoba grain? Then into British Columbia, the imports from the United States were 27,130 barrels. Manitoba and the North-west Territories should have supplied British Columbia; it is a part of their own country and is their natural market. This import takes place in face of a duty of 75 cents a barrel and 15 cents a bushel on wheat. If you take that duty off, is it not reasonable to suppose that a much larger quantity would come in? This is proven by the fact that even with a slight reduction in the duty American flour is already pouring into the maritime provinces in large quantities. The hon. member for Macdonald said, with reference to some remarks that I made the other night, that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) did not know anything about the wheat question, that No. 1 hard in Duluth was one thing and No.

Mr. SPROULE.

1 hard in Manitoba another thing. I am well acquainted with the subject, as a man who is interested in the buying and selling of wheat, and knowing where the profits come in. Then he went on to say that Manitoba No. 1 hard, in Manitoba and Fort William, were two different things. Where is the difference? One difference is this, that when the wheat reaches Fort William they have what they call scouring machines, and they take scoured smut wheat, under the regulations made, and mix it with No. 1 hard. But it deteriorates very little, it makes but slight difference. It is practically the same wheat, and there is very little difference in value, so far as the quality of flour is concerned, between that and the wheat turned out in Manitoba. Now, with regard to these three milling companies monopolizing the wheat market, all I can say to the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) is, that they may now call on their friends under that provision in the tariff, giving power to take the duty off of any article where combines affect the prices. Will they do it? I would like to see them do it, and like to see what would be the result. I think they would find that the farmers would protest against it in a tangible manner, and petitions would come in in large numbers. But if I am operating as a miller in Ontario to-day, and if I can get better freight rates from Duluth, and can buy wheat there that will turn out as much flour and as good a quality as wheat that I can buy in Manitoba, and thereby save the duty, and if I can make a little saving, is it not the most natural thing in the world that I should buy it in Duluth? My hon. friend beside me hands me the Trade and Navigation Returns so that I may answer the argument of the hon. member for Lisgar, who said that the great bulk of Manitoba wheat went to the United States. I find that by these returns the exports from all Manitoba to the States last year was only 1,115,000 bushels.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I said the bulk of our wheat sent to Great Britain went via the United States.

Mr. SPROULE. That is quite another thing.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I did not mean, of course, that it was consumed in the United States; if my language conveyed that impression, it is not what I meant.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has been unfortunate in many lines of his argument.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like the hon. gentleman from Lisgar to furnish proof of his statement that three-fourths of the Manitoba wheat is exported via the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have been so informed, and believe it to be the case. I will make an effort to furnish the proof.

Mr. SPROULE. To take the most charitable view of the hon. gentleman's statement, I must say it was one made entirely at random. But I say now that any Ontario miller who wanted to buy wheat from Duluth, if that wheat will make as good a quality of flour, and as much flour, as wheat he can get from Manitoba, and if he can save the duty, would he not buy there if he could make a little more on it? In the condition of the wheat market at Duluth and the market at Manitoba, he could have done so many times during the last three or four years, to his own advantage. Now, with regard to the classification of wheat, I have nothing to say because it is not exactly as I would like it to be. I would like to keep all scoured wheat from being mixed with any other; I would make a grade of scoured wheat by itself. These are the reasons why the duty is beneficial to us, because it keeps out American wheat and flour. In Ontario to-day we are really grinding a large bulk of the wheat. Except the Ogilvie and the Lake of the Woods Milling companies, Ontario is grinding the largest bulk of the wheat raised in Canada, and the best market we find outside of the home market is the maritime provinces. We have been doing an interprovincial trade with them for years, and we are practically furnishing them with their entire supply; because, as I said, there were last year only 41,000 barrels of flour brought into all Canada from the United States, upon which duty is paid, and this shows that we supply largely the home consumption of the country. If it was not for that duty, we would not supply it, and it would come in from Boston as it did before the duty was put on. In my judgment, any farmer in Manitoba or the North-west would be very shortsighted if he wanted the duty taken off. I will not say whether there is a combine or not, it may be as the hon. member for Macdonald said; but I would suggest another remedy for it rather than the one that he proposed, that of taking the duty off, because, in my opinion, that would not be a suitable remedy.

Mr. ELLIS. The effect of the hon. gentleman's argument is that the people of the maritime provinces are paying taxes to Ontario makers of flour for the flour which they use. That is the legitimate result of his argument, and it is of that that we complain. The impression in the maritime provinces is that we pay between $800,000 and $1,000,000 a year more for our flour than there is any necessity for doing, by reason of the tax which is imposed. Now, if the people of the North-west and the people of Quebec are not anxious for this duty, I am sure that we in the maritime provinces are not at all pining for it. While I do not propose to interfere with this item, yet if hon. gentlemen who feel more aggrieved will move for a reduction, I will certainly support it, particularly after the statements made in the House by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Sproule). He brings clearly to my mind the fact that this tariff is making us use flour that we do not care to use, and when it would be more beneficial for us to get American flour.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman accept the statement made by his late leader (Alexander Mackenzie) in Halifax, to the effect that when you have a surplus of wheat, the tax don't raise the price to the consumer?

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Mackenzie is not here, and I am accepting the hon. gentleman's statement, as he is in the flesh.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not directing my argument to that point; if it was necessary to do so, I might go into the reasons why it does not, to my mind, raise the price to the consumer.

Mr. McHUGH. I would ask the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) on what basis the millers of Ontario fix the price of wheat that they buy from the North-west farmers. Is it not fixed by the quantity of wheat that is sent over to the British market?

Mr. SPROULE. No, because they have often paid six and seven cents a bushel more for wheat than they could realize on it in Liverpool—for Winnipeg and Brandon wheat.

Mr. McHUGH. Was not that during seasons when all the wheat was in the hands of the millers and of the large buyers?

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all. Last month nearly 700,000 bushels of wheat were bought in Manitoba from the farmers, showing that there was that much left on their hands.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I sympathize with the view of those gentlemen who regret there is to be a duty on flour at all. I would be very much pleased if we had found it possible to make the duty lower than it is. The tariff is a tariff of compromises, essentially, as I suppose most tariffs are. I do not imagine that in this item we have gone so far as some hon. gentlemen would wish. I know that many would like it if we could have gone a little further. May I say a word as to the meeting that took place in Winnipeg with the farmers' representatives? I have a very agreeable recollection of that meeting, for I am sure it is no word of flattery to say that I never saw a better representation of the people of Canada, of the farming population of Canada, than were assembled that day in the city hall in Winnipeg. Nothing gave me such a favourable impression on my first visit to Manitoba as that gathering of the representative farmers of Manitoba and the North-west country. I think the general line those gentlemen took was this: They were in favour of lower duties; they wanted a reduction of the tariff all along the line. Now, I think my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), and my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), are quite correct when they suggest that there were certain interested parties who had sent out a number of petitions, which were signed for the purpose of making it appear that the farmers regarded the duty on wheat and flour as essential. I did not understand the farmers who came before us to say that they wanted the duty on wheat and flour abolished, but what they did say was this: You must not, under plea of the duty on wheat and on flour, impose high duties on other articles. We want general tariff reform, just as much of it as you can give us; and if it is necessary to get that to take the duty off or to reduce the duty on flour or on wheat, we are perfectly content to have that done. That was the spirit of the Manitoba farmers. I do not think that the Manitoba farmers would be anxious to come here to-day and strike the item out. I think they would probably say: If you could have made your reductions all along the line greater, we would be willing to have the flour duty and the wheat duty cut down lower; but since you still have to have duties on various articles which are higher than we desire, why, then, incidentally, we will take whatever advantage there may be from the duty on flour and the duty on wheat. I could not help but admire the spirit in which Manitoba farmers acted at that meeting. When gentlemen came before the commission and presented those petitions as representing the views of Manitoba and the North-west, there was a general expression of disapproval among the farmers present. What I understood them to ask was, that they should be given tariff reductions as far as possible, and that even if it were necessary to reduce the duty on wheat and flour, they would be perfectly content. But as we were able to take only a moderate step in that direction, we did not propose to abolish the duty on wheat and flour. This is a tariff of compromise. We have endeavoured to consider the representations made by the different sections of the Dominion and their different interests, and we tried to be considerate to them all.

Mr. DAVIN. As to the duty on wheat, the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) said he represented the views of the farmers of the North-west. I have not up to the present moment met a farmer who wanted the duty taken off wheat. I do not think that hon. gentleman speaks for the farmers of the North-west. I can confirm everything that has been said by the Finance Minister as to the feeling in Manitoba. I understand the feeling there to be that we are already to abandon the duties on certain articles if the Government will remove the duties on certain other articles; but I did not understand, and I read carefully the representations made before the commission, that Manitoba farmers want the duties on agricultural products taken off without regard to the duties, for instance, on implements. However, I can say in regard to wheat, that I have talked with many north-western farmers, and up to this moment I have no other instructions from them than that the farmers in my constituency want the duty to remain on wheat. I should like to have heard the opinion of the Minister of the Interior, who has unfortunately left the Chamber, as he represents the North-west in the Cabinet.

Mr. ROCHE. I am sure the farmers of the North-west will be glad to receive this "taffy," for that is about all that is given to them under this tariff. The Finance Minister has spoken very highly of the delegates that waited on the commission, and I can certainly on the whole endorse his statements, although I doubt the wisdom of the Greenway government, which paid all the expenses of the representatives, in some of the selections they made. For instance, one representative was reported in the press as having said that the average farmer of Manitoba lived during his first year on faith, during his second on hope, during his third year on charity, all of which is a libel on the province. As I was unfortunately not in the House when other members from the North-west spoke on this question, I am therefore somewhat handicapped in replying to their arguments and can only take as my text the few remarks made by the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) yesterday, and add a few observations of my own. I was surprised to hear that hon. gentleman state that the farmers of the western country were entirely careless as to whether the duty was retained on wheat, and that substantially no benefit was derived from that duty. In view of the experience of the last few years, this was a surprising and alarming statement for the hon. gentleman to make. The hon. gentleman reiterated the old doctrine that the markets of the old country rule over the world. In theory that may be correct, but in practice its fallacy has been proved on many occasions. The hon. gentleman surely knows that during recent years prices of wheat in Manitoba have on many occasions been largely above the export prices, on account of the demand by local millers for Manitoba No. 1 hard to mix with soft wheat. The price in Manitoba has been above that obtained by Dakota farmers by the amount of the duty on more than one occasion, and I was therefore surprised to hear from the hon. gentleman that our farmers are not interested in the duty on wheat. If that Liberal doctrine be correct, why not abolish the duty entirely? If 15 cents duty was no use, why not wipe it out? Why place 12 cents a bushel on it? If it is not kept on in the farmers interests, in whose interest is it? Then, at all events, hon. gentlemen opposite would have been consistent with their professions, instead of which they have reduced the protection—for protection I claim it is to Manitoba and North-west farmers by making a reduction of 3 cents per bushel, in order to compensate the millers. Certainly this was not done in the interests of the farmers, but it was done simply to compensate the millers for their reduced protection on flour, the duty being reduced from 75 to 60 per cent per bushel. One of the best arguments that the duty is of service to our North-west is the fact that during the past week carloads of flour have been loaded at Boston and shipped across the boundary line to the maritime provinces, and this in my opinion is the beginning of changed conditions which will result in the loss of our eastern market to our millers who are supplied with our western wheat. If Liberal principles are to be carried into practice in regard to our wheat duties, I would ask whether it is not a fact that the harvest in the North-western States is earlier than our harvest in the Canadian North-west. Their grain is therefore marketed earlier, and it is much the same quality as that raised in the North-west; those states are thus able to dispose of their grain in advance of our North-west, and with the abolition of the duty, or any appreciable reduction they would supply our eastern millers, displace so much western grain and be a consequent source of injury to our North-west farmers. When the hon. gentleman declared that he spoke in the interests of the farmers, I admit he may have been voicing the sentiments of a few farmers, but he assuredly was not giving expression to the views generally held in the North-west, for while I have met many farmers who stated they were willing and anxious that duties should be reduced or abolished on manufactures, yet they were living in an agricultural portion of the country and had to pay possibly an undue share of the duties, were not willing to see the duties reduced on any of the products of the farm. If hon. members from Manitoba were representing large city constituencies, consisting of a consuming population, who had to purchase their bread supply, I could understand their position; but they, like the representatives of other agricultural constituencies, produce their own bread supply, and by the reduction of the duty on agricultural articles and allowing products to come in from foreign countries, certainly injury would be done to our farming population. Our farmers object to any reduction in duties on wheat or the products of the farm. It is paying a very poor compliment to the intelligence of the farmers when their representatives declare that the farmers do not desire any protection on their farm products, when it is well-known that when those articles were permitted to come into Canada, free of duty, it was the farmers of Canada, to the number of 100,000, who petitioned this Parliament to impose duties similar to those imposed on our products going into the United States markets, and when the representatives spoke on these lines, they were practically telling the farmers they did not know what they were talking about. I have more confidence in the judgment of the farmers than I have in the opinions expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite from Manitoba. I object to any reduction in the duties on wheat or any other products of the farm, which would allow foreign products to be brought in, and which would be followed by a reduction in the prices of our home products. The people of our country who engage in agriculture have very many drawbacks to contend against, and are deserving of every protection which can be afforded them by this Government, and to every assistance which the Government can lend them in the prosecution of their industry.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) has specially referred to my views as stated before the committee last evening, I desire to offer a few remarks. I represent a constituency which is almost entirely composed of farmers; I endeavour to voice their sentiments in this House, and I trust that I succeed in doing so. From our standpoint, the matter of the duty on wheat is one of indifference, nor do we care whether you increase it or remove it altogether. We raise such a large quantity of wheat that the home market to us is of very little importance. We look more to the foreign market, and, therefore, the quantity of wheat that may be used in Manitoba is of comparatively little concern to our western farmers. Whether you have a duty on grain or not, affects the western farmers to no great extent. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I would be right in saying that the people whom I represent ask that the duty on wheat be removed, but, at the same time, they are not at all asking that it should be increased, and if their condition can be bettered by lowering the duty, and securing a lower rate on other articles which they use, then they would be quite willing that this House should take whatever action it may think fit in reference to the duty on wheat. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has, I think, voiced very correctly the sentiment of the farmers in the west, when he stated, that they were very much in a state of mind which might be described as indifferent, on this question. The market for the North-west grain is in Great Britain. There may be some of it used in Ontario, but we look upon Great Britain as our market, and we know that Great Britain is also the market for United States wheat. We do not anticipate that the Americans are going to send wheat over to us, or that they can in any way affect our price. I state again to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche), that we do not ask that the duty on wheat should be removed, but if the removal of the duty would in any way help the Government to reduce the duties on other goods necessary to the prosperity of the people in the west, then our people would be quite willing to let the duty on wheat go. These are my views on this question, and now that I am on my feet, I wish to endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Richardson) with reference to the grading of wheat. I had the privilege of looking into this whole question last session, and I was able to get a good deal done to clear away the difficulties which then existed. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) who called in question the facts stated by my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), is himself astray. He speaks about scoured wheat being mixed with wheat of a superior quality, but he has entirely overlooked the fact, that during last session, an Order in Council was passed declaring that it should be unlawful to mix scoured grain with No. 1 hard, and that scoured grain should be sold on its own merits. That is the law to-day, so that there can be no mixture of scoured grain with No. 1 hard.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there with No. 2 ?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Nor with No. 2. Scoured wheat is to be sold on its own merits.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no separate grade for scoured wheat that I am aware of. I wish to ask the Controller of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) if there is any standard on scoured wheat, because that is what we pressed for ?

The CONTROLLER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am not aware at this moment if we made a special grade for scoured wheat, but I will get the information. I do know that we made the regulations asked for by which we forbade the introduction of scoured wheat in first and second grades.

Mr. SPROULE. I am almost sure that your department did not make any regulation fixing a standard for scoured wheat. When scoured it was originally mixed with No. 1 hard, and afterwards it was mixed with No. 2 hard, but it must now be mixed with some other wheat, whether that be No. 3 or less. There is no special grade for scoured wheat.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to the Order in Council which states specifically, that scoured wheat should be sold upon its own merits and not mixed with No. 1 hard. The Ontario farmer does not get No. 1 hard as a matter of fact, and I wish to reiterate that one of the chief difficulties under which the western farmer labours is, that he does not get the full price of his grain. That is a well known fact. In my own district on the Qu'Appelle River, you will find numbers of farmers to testify that they grow wheat which will weigh 64 and 65 pounds to the bushel, and the commercial value of grain weighing that heavy is much greater than that of grain which only weighs 60 pounds. The farmer does not get the advantage of the superior quality of his grain. The buyer mixes the superior grade with an inferior grade, and brings it up to standard, and then puts the mixed article on the market as No. 1 hard. The grain that is bought from the farmer and manipulated by the buyer goes into the Fort William elevators as one grade, and we know and can testify from gentlemen who are in the business, it goes out on another grade. The fact is that to-day, on the British market, our western farmers are getting a third-class price for a first-class article. There is a great deal of reform needed in connection with the whole wheat business, and I hope that by next session all the circumstances will be searched into very closely. I trust that matters will be set right, so that our farmers will get justice, and obtain a price for their grain commensurate with its value.

Mr. DAVIN. As the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is in the House now, I should like to ask, whether he agrees with the views that have been presented by some of his supporters. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) have represented, that the duty on wheat and the duty on flour are of no use whatever to the farmers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I have no objection to answer the question. My hon. friend ought to know that the tariff as brought down expresses my views. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) knows that, being a member of the Government the tariff expresses my views.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) will allow me, I may explain that in his absence, the Minister of Finance informed us that it was a compromise tariff.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Very good ; and I think the compromise is generally considered a very satisfactory compromise.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

AMERICAN BANK NOTE COMPANY.

The House resumed further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Belcourt for third reading of Bill (No. 68) respecting the American Bank Note Company.

Mr. BENNETT. The other evening, when this order was reached, I was addressing myself to the House in regard to the Bill for the incorporation of this company. When the general discussion was proceeding a week or so ago, I did not make any remarks owing to the fact that another opportunity would be afforded, and I propose now to address a few remarks to the House on the question. Objection has been taken to the name of this company, and the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill has had ample opportunities to endeavour to make a change. It must be clear that the similarity of the names of the two companies must in the usual course of business, particularly in connection with the correspondence which may be addressed to either company, cause considerable confusion and trouble. In this country, as in every country where names are copyrighted, a great deal of care is exercised by the Department of Agriculture to prevent a similarity of names. When this Bill was first before the committee, this was made a ground of very strong complaint on the part of the British American Bank Note Company. Therefore, I submit to the House that the Bill should for the present be withdrawn, and some arrangement should be made to change the name of this company when incorporated by this Canadian Parliament. I believe there is also a great deal of objection to granting this company the same rights and privileges that are accorded to the American company in the United States. It has not been made known to the House, nor to the committee, I believe, who the incorporators of this company are. It is a broad principle generally established in this country that the names of the incorporators of joint stock companies should be submitted to Parliament, and I deferentially submit that this is not a case in which an exception to that rule should be allowed. There is in the Bill this very sweeping clause, that the company shall be entitled to all the powers, privileges and rights as a corporation necessary to the carrying on of their general business in the city of Ottawa. Now, I submit that there is not before the House to-day anything to show what the rights, powers and privileges are which are enjoyed by the American Bank Note Company in the United States, and which will be extended to the company in carrying on their business in this country, if this Act of incorporation is granted to them. It is further provided that all the privileges and rights which this company has in the United States shall be recognized and confirmed by the Parliament of Canada. I have heard the objection taken—and to my mind there is a great deal in it—that this company should not seek incorporation in this Parliament, but that, owing to the nature of their business, which is of a mercantile kind, they should have sought the ordinary incorporation afforded in the different provinces. As to the general question which has been discussed in this House, why this company has been brought to do business in this country, before I resume my seat I wish to enter my protest against all that has been done in the premises. From the very large amount of correspondence that has been printed and laid before the House, it is clear to my mind that rights and privileges of a very large and sweeping nature have been accorded to this company. In view of the fact that the Canadian company, which had for a great many years enjoyed the privilege of doing the business which is now sought to be done by this company, and were willing to carry out the terms of the contract for which the Government asked tenders, the first chance should have been given to that company, which had been doing business for so many years to the satisfaction of the country, and to the great credit of that company. I believe that in the ordinary routine of life every opportunity should be given to men who deal fairly and squarely; and the Government should stretch a point to renew contracts with companies who have endeavoured honestly to carry them out. I know that in the Post Office Department, it has been the custom in past years—and I have no doubt that after a time we shall have a return to it—where persons have had contracts for carrying the mails for the short term of four years, after there had been fair competition and tendering, to grant a renewal of such contracts. Though I know that the present Postmaster General has seen fit to cancel some contracts of that nature, which should have been renewed, still I believe that before his tenure of office ceases, so great will be the pressure of party friends or so strong will be his own sense of fairness, that he will come to see that it is not altogether wrong to grant renewals of such contracts. Applying that principle to the present case, what do we find? We find that this British American Bank Note Company, after having established premises at great expense in the city of Montreal, erected at the request of the then Administration, very extensive premises in the city of Ottawa for the carrying on of this very business of printing the notes of the Dominion and the revenue and postal stamps. In this connection, I would ask the Postmaster General if the Jubilee stamps, which I understand have been printed, have been printed in Canada under the contract, or have they been printed in the United States?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). They are being printed at this moment. Every one of them will be printed in the city of Ottawa. I have seen them in the process of printing, and the hon. gentleman can see them himself in the process of printing down on Wellington street.

Mr. BENNETT. As to the preliminary work in engraving, is that to be done in Canada or the United States?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I asked the contractor how many days of one man's time was represented by the preparation of the plates and engraving. I forget now the exact number of days he told me, but it was most trifling. I think he said it represented altogether two or three weeks of one man's time. That is the total work done outside Canada. He said also that instead of this agreement causing loss to Canada, it would cause the transfer of a great deal of work to Ottawa which is now done in the United States. He said that his company had a very large custom in Canada in printing bank notes for the banks of Canada, all of which work will now be transferred to Ottawa and done in Ottawa instead of being done as heretofore in the United States.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not know whether the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) has introduced that plea as a slight advertisement for the new company, but I do trust, for the benefit of the Canadian company, that they may be still afforded by private parties in this country the same fair measure of support and patronage that has been hitherto extended to them, despite the vigorous advertising which the American company is getting at the hands of the present Administration. I do submit that when the late Government asked the Burland Lithographic Company to establish their premises in the city of Ottawa, the object was not to enable them to conduct the business of a mercantile nature solely, but it was rather to have the business of the Government done under the very eyes of the Administration, and when we consider the very serious nature of the business, the publishing of the bank notes of the Dominion and its postage stamps, it must be plain to every one that it is highly important that this work should be done in the city of Ottawa. Of course, under the present circumstances, there can be no complaint on that score, as the American company propose to carry on their business in this city, but I do say that the past Administration having made it a condition precedent of their contract with the Burland Lithographic Company that the business of that company should be carried on in Ottawa, and that company having gone to very great expense erecting a handsome edifice in this city, decided preference should have been given them. True, the hon. Minister of Finance justified his refusal to grant to the Burland Lithographic Company the contract on the same figures as the offer of the American company, on the ground that when two persons have made their offer, it was not a business-like proceeding to make known the lower offer to the higher tenderer, and then give him the preference at the lower figures. What I have to say in reply is that the main object of the Government was to secure the tender at the lowest possible figures; and that could have been done by giving the contract to the Burland Lithographic Company, because they had offered to take the contract on exactly the same terms as the other company.

The hon. Finance Minister also spoke of the Burland Company as having apparently considered themselves a monopoly. In reply to that, I may say that it is evident by the papers before the House that the late Administration did not at all regard the Burland Lithographing Company in that light, because when application was made for a renewal of the contract sometime before its expiry, the late Finance Minister refused point-blank to renew it, but told the company they would have to wait for the expiry of their contract. That does not evince any very deep interest in the Burland Lithographing Company by the Finance Minister of the late Government.

Although this Government had received a most polite invitation to visit the premises of the Burland Company, if I mistake not the discussion which took place a few days ago, the hon. Minister of Finance refused to in any way countenance the invitation which Mr. Burland had extended to him. The business was of a large nature, a large amount of money had been invested in the enterprise, and I think if the Minister of Finance had shown much interest in what was a large Canadian industry, he would at least have visited the premises and seen if it was not possible for him to come to some terms with the Burland people, instead of treating them in the cavalier way he did. I believe that fair-play would have been dealt out had the Burland Lithographing Company had the same privilege extended to them as was extended to the American company, namely, of taking the work at the same figures. There would have been nothing detrimental to the interests of the country if that had been done, and better faith would have been kept with the Burland Company.

I trust that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill will, before he presses it to a final reading, have the name of the company changed, so as to prevent the possibility of a conflict between the two companies in point of name in the carrying on of their general business. I trust furthermore, that the clause which confers upon this company very large rights, which gives them not only the right to carry on their business in this country, but confirms all the rights and privileges given them under their American charter, will not become law, but that the Bill will be relegated to the proper forum for decision, which is the provincial government, where the company could be incorporated for the purpose of carrying on their general business in the country.

Motion agreed; and Bill read the third time and passed.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

122. Books, viz.:—Novels or works of fictions, or literature of a similar character, unbound or paper-bound, including freight rates for railways and telegraph rates, bound in book or pamphlet form, but not to include Christmas annuals or publications commonly known as juvenile and toy books, twenty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. With regard to this item, I would ask the Finance Minister if he would be kind enough to allow it and the next item to remain over until Tuesday, as I am obliged to leave for Toronto by train in a few minutes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If there is any special reason why my hon. friend wishes this item held over, I would like him to mention it. I understood he was particularly interested in the copyright question, but that does not come up under this item.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I was prepared to say something on copyright in connection with this item, as well as on the tariff as it relates to books. I understand the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) also desires to speak on this item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I had a conversation with the hon. member for York with regard to the business of this evening, and agreed to hold over several items, but this is not one of them. Of course I would like to accommodate any hon. gentleman who desires an item left over; but unless there be some particular reason for it, I think the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity at a later stage to present his views.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that my hon. friend is anxious to deal with this item apart from the copyright question. I do not think that any time will be lost by holding this item over until Tuesday.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. But the hon. gentleman might as well state what he wants to do. Has he any objection to the change proposed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand my hon. friend is anxious to leave.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a full hour, and if it is likely to be a protracted discussion, we can adjourn it. But it is probable that a few minutes' discussion would settle it.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I desire in connection with this item, No. 122, to call the attention of the House to a subject that is very important to the people whether as book readers or as book makers. The industry of paper making, of printing, and of bookbinding is one that should not be prejudiced by tariff enactments. The earnings of thousands of bread-winners, men and women, boys and girls, should not be allowed to remain in jeopardy when there is an easy way out. Injustice has darkened the Canadian printing trade for the last fifty years of this century, and it is high time that its wrongs should be righted and its rugged pathway brightened by a measure of fair-play. Copyright is a question that ordinary men shrink from discussing. They hesitate to grapple with a question that has been threshed out letter by letter in former Parliaments. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Edgar) who presides over the deliberations of this House has perhaps more than any man in Canada helped to clear the mind of Parliament on this subject. The truth is that there is no intricate problem involved in connection with the discussion of the copyright question. The trouble is that hon. members when spoken to concerning copyright think it but a matter of minor moment or of no importance. They think that only a handful of paper makers, printers and publishers in Toronto and Montreal are concerned. They are not aware that legislation on copyright affects hundreds of manufacturers and thousands of operatives. I am speaking of this subject as it affects the paper maker, the typesetter, the electrotyper, the pressman, the bookbinder, and finally, the publisher. Numerically, thousands of mechanics are affected by this legislation on copyright. Financially, the amount involved in the different manufactures used in connection with book publishing and in wages paid reaches the million dollar mark. A knowledge of these facts impels me to stand up in this House of Commons to-night and ask that the Liberal party, some of whose leaders, when in Opposition, aided the Canadian printer, will not, now that the Liberals are in power, desert the Canadian printer in his fight for common justice. I am not going to inflict on this House a long talk on copyright. I would be the last man to waste the time of Parliament in sowing the seeds of a discussion that would be without result; but the position of the printer and publisher is a serious one, and it is absolutely necessary it should be considered before this tariff becomes law. In a few brief sentences let me give this House an outline of the question. Copyright is the right to exclusive publication on certain conditions for a number of years, of books and other publications. In Canada the number of years is forty-two. In 1842 the Imperial Government or rather the Parliament of Great Britain passed a Copyright Act, known as the Copyright Act of 1842. By this Act the British dominions were covered; British copyright books alone could be sold and the importation or sale of foreign reprints of British copyright books were forbidden either in Britain or any of its colonies. From 1843 to 1847 the Canadian legislature protested and objected most vigorously to the exclusion of those reprints, for the Canadian publishers were few and far between and British books were expensive. The authorities at Westminster or rather at Downing Street, seeing the necessity for action, in 1847 amended the Act of 1842 and allowed the importation of foreign reprints on payment of a 12½ per cent royalty duty, to be paid to the British copyright owner. This was collected in Canada from 1847 to 1895. By the British North America Act of 1867 the subject of copyright was entrusted to the Canadian Parliament, as was everything else in connection with the Government of this country. We can legislate with intelligence on all other subjects, but when it comes to copyright the Governor General has standing orders to refuse his assent to all copyright Acts without special permission from Downing Street. In 1872 Canada passed a Copyright Act. It would have given us full control of copyright, but this Act was reserved and the royal assent was refused. The essence of this Act was publication by license. The Canadian publishers thought that if the American publishers could supply the Canadian market by paying a 12½ per cent royalty duty, the Canadian printer was entitled to the same privilege. In 1874 the Canadian Parliament in an Address unanimously asked the royal assent to the Act of 1872. But Lord Carnarvon said: No, your Act overrides the Imperial Act of 1842, and I will not allow legislation that affects the British author. In 1875 the Canadian Parliament eliminated the objectionable clause, which was the license clause, and passed the Act of 1872, which of course still continued to give the American publishers and printers the Canadian market. This is the Act of to-day. In 1888 the Canadian Copyright Association was formed, and as a result of its efforts, the defects in the Act of 1875 were remedied, and a Copyright Act was passed; but the Governor General stayed his hand, and the royal assent was withheld. Sir John S. D. Thompson was truly the friend of the Canadian mechanic and the Canadian publisher. He thoroughly understood the question of copyright. He saw the difficulty of the position, but always maintained, yes, up to the very day of his death, that the Canadian Parliament had a perfect right to pass a Copyright Act for the Dominion. The official record shows the position he took, and he emphasized his action by, in July, 1895, directing that the royalty duty of 12½ per cent paid to British authors should no longer be collected at the custom-houses. I need hardly state since 1895 this duty has not been collected. This action carries us back to the Imperial Act of 1842 and places us under that Act. Under the Act of 1842 the importation of foreign reprints is strictly prohibited, so that such importations are to-day illegal, and importers are liable to the penalty. The Canada Copyright Association, representing the paper makers, and the printers, the bookbinders and publishers, urged further action by the Government. In September of 1895, Mr. Hall Caine, representing the Incorporated Society of British Authors, met the Copyright Association in Toronto, and at a conference they had a very frank and ample exchange of views on both sides of the question. An agreement was entered into as a basis of legislation, and a draft Act was prepared for submission to the Government. In December of 1895, in the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, a conference was held between Mr. Hall Caine representing the incorporated authors, Mr. Dady, representing the publishing interests in England, the Canadian Copyright Association and the Government. The Hon. Mr. Ouimet, the acting Minister of Agriculture, presided. This draft Act was submitted, discussed, and adopted, as a suggestion for future legislation by the Government. In a word—now I ask hon. members to mark this, it provided that if the British copyright holder declined to issue an edition of his work in Canada, then the Canadian publisher, under a special license and by the payment of 10 per cent on the retail price of the book, could publish that British copyright book in this country. The details were agreed to by all parties, and here we are face to face with the tariff of to-day. Having refused any longer to collect the 12½ per cent royalty as provided by the Imperial Act of 1847, the Government may be compelled to replace this order on the custom-house books, and direct that the 12½ per cent shall continue to be collected. Something must be done, however, to show the book trade of Canada exactly where they stand, because to-day, the book trade may be pounced upon and fined for the violation of the Imperial Act of 1842. The Canadian importer brings these foreign reprints into the country, under the impression that when the Government collects in the ordinary way the ad valorem duty, this importation is legalized. Such of course is not the case. Personally, I think that the course the Government has pursued in this matter, is the only course it could have taken. There is just this point, that I would call the attention of the Minister of Finance and Controller of Customs to: that in 1847 when the Imperial Government passed the Royalty Duty Act, the British author was not protected in the United States, to-day the British author is protected in the United States. I certainly do not think the British Government will do anything to interfere with the privilege that the British author has of obtaining copyright in the United States. The natural sequence, however, of this tariff legislation is, a new Copyright Act for Canada. The Government has the Hall Caine Act of 1895, and it has the Act prepared by Mr. Newcombe, Deputy Minister of Justice, and assented to, I understand, by the Colonial Office. In referring to that Act, let me say, that there is no one who is better up on the subject of copyright than the present Deputy Minister of Justice. I understand that he has also a third Act, so that there is every opportunity for the introduction of proper legislation that would meet the case. Any of these three Acts would be acceptable and would give relief. The Canadian reader would certainly be satisfied. He would get his books as cheap, and in some cases more cheaply than he does at present, and the Canadian mechanic, the paper maker, the typesetter, the electrotyper, the pressman, the bookbinder, the Canadian publisher, and all connected with the production of books would receive an enormous amount of work that is denied them to-day. I hope that the Government will not only take this matter into their serious consideration, but that at the earliest possible moment, they will prepare for next session, an Act that will right the wrong which the Canadian mechanic and the Canadian publisher have laboured under for the last fifty years.

Now, with regard to this particular item in the tariff. The new tariff is 20 per cent, and 10 per cent ad valorem, which is to replace the old tariff of 6 cents per pound. Under the old tariff of 6 cents per pound a paper novel, weighing, we will say, one pound, would pay a duty of 6 cents. The book would cost 10 cents, so that the duty would be 60 per cent. Under the new tariff of course, the duty on such a book would be 2 cents or 20 per cent, and if these books come from England there would be a further reduction, under the preferential clause, making the duty on such a book 15 per cent. Take a bound book that will weigh, say one and a quarter pounds—I allow one quarter of a pound for the cover. The cost of the book would be $1, and the duty might vary from 7½ to 10 cents. Under the new tariff the duty will be 10 per cent ad valorem, and under the preferential tariff in two years later, it will be 7½ per cent. I do not think myself that a duty of so much per pound is the proper form of tariff for literature. I do not think that literature should be charged so much avoirdupois; we should not look on it as ordinary commodities such as tea, tobacco and sugar. I would like to ask the Controller of Customs now, which of these two items, No. 122, or 123 refers to books in printed sheet form? I have been reading the two clauses, one having a duty of 20 per cent and the other a duty of 10 per cent, and I do not see any reference to sheets.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I am inclined to think that the 20 per cent would include books in sheets. They would be regarded as unbound books and would come in under that. The point has not previously been brought to my attention, but at first view I think the sheets would come in at 20 per cent.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I am very glad to hear the Finance Minister make that statement, because I understand that the ruling already given in the Toronto custom-house has been, that they come in under the 10 per cent tariff.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the matter has already been ruled upon, I would not care to set my opinion against the ruling, but I promise the matter will be inquired into. My hon. friend the Controller (Mr. Paterson) will, I am sure, give it his early attention.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The old duty on sheets was 6 cents per pound, or about 25 per cent ad valorem. The new duty—I am speaking as if 10 per cent were the duty—would be 10 per cent ad valorem, and under the preferential clause it would be 7½ per cent. If the hon. Minister states that sheets are under the 20 per cent duty, then they come under the same tariff as the cheap paper, bound books.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If there is any doubt about it, we might make that item read "books, unbound, or parts thereof," which, I think, would carry out the hon. gentleman's idea.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I am not now speaking with any idea of putting the Minister in a corner; but this is a matter which has been the cause of considerable discussion among the trade in Toronto and in the Copyright Association, and I desire to know exactly where we stand. We pay a duty of 25 per cent on white paper, and print our books in Canada, but under the present tariff, we could buy the same paper in Holyoke, get our books printed in Boston, and bring them in under the 10 per cent rate. The hon. gentleman will see the inconsistency of the position.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will undertake to have the item so read that there will be no doubt on that point, that the books or parts of books shall be included in the 20 per cent rate.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. That is all I have to say on that paragraph. But I suppose the Finance Minister will indicate whether this copyright matter will occupy the attention of the Government during recess, so that the long and weary discussion of the past ten years shall be ended, so that the Canadian printer and publisher may secure at least some of the rights he is entitled to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has rightly said that this is one of the most difficult and complicated questions that have come before Parliament. Indeed, there are few members, I imagine, on either side who have given it very close attention. The Government have had it under consideration recently, and I am inclined to think that it is one of the subjects which will receive attention during the visit of the Prime Minister to England. Without giving positive assurance, I hope and expect that before the next meeting of Parliament we may have a clear understanding in the direction the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I am advised that no objection has been raised by the Colonial Office. The Act on the lines assented to by Mr. Hall Caine and Mr. Daldy is in the Department of Justice, and all that we are waiting for now is that it be put in proper form and placed before Parliament. I would like to ask the hon. Controller of Customs what will be the position of the book trade to-day in reference to importations. Foreign reprints are allowed to be imported without the payment of 12½ per cent royalty. Of course, that is a violation of the Act of 1842. I think the position taken by the Government is the correct one. It is unfair on the part of the Home Government to expect us to collect the royalty of 12½ per cent on American reprints, while they refuse to allow our Canadian publishers to print the book in Canada on the payment of a similar royalty, but the importers in this country are under the impression that when the Government collect the ad valorem duty, the importation is legalized.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not collect the 12½ per cent for the benefit of the author, as in former times; we simply collect it for the benefit of the Canadian treasury; and if that impression exists in the mind of the Canadian importer, perhaps this discussion will remove it from his mind. We simply leave the copyright question where it is at present, until we can look more fully into it. In the meantime, if the importers subject themselves to penalties, they will be penalties under the Imperial Act, and, while it is open to others to impose the penalties, we do not make the Customs Department the instrument of imposing them. The matter still remains in the position in which we found it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think you go further than that. By collecting a duty on the importation of an article into the country, you legalize the importation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think we exactly legalize it. We preclude ourselves from prosecuting for violation of the Copyright Act, but I fancy it is open to others to prosecute.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. The Finance Minister has just stated that the Government collected the 12½ per cent royalty for the benefit of the Canadian treasury. He must refer to the 20 per cent, not to the 12½ per cent royalty duty for the collection of that has been suspended since 1895.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not collect the 12½ per cent; we leave it where it was.

Mr. POWELL. I do not know what is meant by "novels or works of a similar character," if it has any meaning at all. I suppose that would include works of poetry and Æsop's Fables. The amendment would simply apply to novels. I understand you want to apply it to all books of a similar character to novels. It cannot refer to historical or scientific works.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In nine cases out of ten, books of that character will be bound.

Mr. POWELL. I will mention a case which is not met by the tariff at all. Law reports come in unbound in monthly instalments. What duty are they going to bear?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not suppose a law report would be regarded as a work of fiction.

Mr. POWELL. The Minister of Finance is simply establishing the point I am making. These reports are neither works of fiction nor works of a similar character. Where do they come in under the tariff?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At 10 per cent.

Mr. ELLIS. I think the 10 per cent rate should apply to books of a high character, which are sometimes imported in sheets. But the amendment of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) only applies to the poorer class of books.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is all it was intended to apply to.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Do I understand that a customs appraiser will decide as to whether these books in parts will come in under the 20 per cent or the 10 per cent duty?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Every question has to be decided for the moment by a customs appraiser, but these things will be reported at Ottawa, and after a little while there will be such rulings as will remove all doubt. At the beginning, the customs appraiser will have to exercise his best intelligence.

Mr. POWELL. Take the Franklin Square Library, which publishes, in the main, works of science, history and philosophy but which also publishes a few works of fiction. The Franklin Square Library books would not come in under section 22, because they are not works of fiction or literature of that character, but still they are unbound. Where do they come in?

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would just call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to this point. There can be no doubt that the proper duty for this class is 20 per cent ad valorem. They are paper covered books, and the importation of the class of literature, such as law reports and works in parts, is so small that it is not a drop in the bucket as compared with the entire importation, and it would be better, to say at once paper-covered books shall come in under 20 per cent. As the hon. member for Westmoreland said with regard to the Franklin Square Library. That and all libraries, whether they publish works of science or fiction or not, should come in under the 20 per cent tariff. The safer way would be to bring them all in at 20 per cent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved in amendment that after the word "pamphlets" the following words be added: "or parts thereof."

Mr. MARTIN. Before this item is carried, I wish to point out that the duty on this class of books is altogether too low, and I consider the committee are greatly indebted to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) for bringing this matter so prominently before the House. This country has been flooded with novels of a not very high character from the country to the south of us. We find that the American newspapers offer books of this class as prizes to their subscribers, and the result is we are flooded with a cheap worthless class of American newspapers and novels. I would like very much to see the duty on those trashy novels increased at least to the old rate, more especially because the American newspapers are offering such books as gifts to promote subscription. I think if we were to go back to the old duty of 6 cents a pound, we would be doing a very good thing.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

123. Advertising and printed matter, viz.:—Advertising pamphlets, advertising pictorial show cards, illustrated advertising periodicals; illustrated price books, catalogues and price lists; advertising almanacs and calendars; patent medicine or other advertising circulars, fly sheets or pamphlets; cigar box labels; advertising chromos, chromotypes, oleographs or like work produced by any process other than hand painting or drawing, and having any advertisement or advertising matter printed, lithographed or stamped thereon, or attached thereto, including advertising bills, folders and posters, or other similar artistic work, lithographed, printed or stamped on paper or cardboard for business or advertising purposes, n.o.p., fifteen cents per pound.

Labels for fruits, vegetables, meats, fish, confectionery or other goods or wares; shipping, price or other tags, tickets or labels; and railroad or other tickets, whether lithographed or printed, or partly printed, n.e.s., thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS moved that the words "labels for cigar boxes" be struck out of the first clause, and that at the beginning of the last clause the words "labels for cigar boxes" be added.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Government might explain to us why they have changed this rate since the introduction of their first tariff. Under the resolution first presented these goods were dutiable at 35 per cent. The ad valorem duty is done away with now, and that very obnoxious thing, according to hon. gentlemen opposite, a specific duty is imposed. Why was the change made?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was represented to us that a considerable portion of this printed matter that comes in has commercial value and it is difficult to fix a value for an ad valorem duty. For instance, patent medicine manufacturers in the United States send in medicines and send also printed matter, which printed matter has no commercial value—it is to be distributed free. This printed matter is invoiced at very low figures, and the ordinary ad valorem duty would fail to collect any considerable amount upon it. Believing that to be a fair representation we decided to put a specific duty upon this class, and upon the other, the value of which can be more readily arrived at, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Photographs, chromos, chromotypes, artotypes, oleographs, paintings, drawings, pictures, engravings, or prints or proofs therefrom, and similar works of art, n.o.p. ; blue prints, building plans, maps and charts, n.e.s., twenty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ERB. Before that item is passed, I desire to ask for a little information. It will be observed that in this item appear the letters signifying "not otherwise provided." Now in looking through the tariff, I find among the articles on the free list "paintings, in oil or water colours by artists of well known merit, &c." On looking through the old tariff, of 1894, I find that these were on the free list then also. I would like to know why the present Government has not seen fit to make these paintings dutiable. We know that our tariff is supposed to be for the purpose of collecting a revenue, in the first place, and, in the second place, of providing for whatever incidental protection it may afford. We also know that our tariff is supposed to bear as lightly as possible upon the necessities of life, and we have the right to infer, I think, that such articles as are not necessities of life, should be taxed. I do not think that oil paintings and works of that kind are anything but luxuries pure and simple. They are purchased only by the wealthier classes, and I fail to see why we should not legislate in such a way as to compel those who import them to contribute their fair share to the revenue. Some claim that pictures of this kind have a refining influence, that people admire them and get a great deal of satisfaction and comfort in looking at them. I will admit that. But we also know that there are some people who get a great deal of comfort, a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction out of a pipe and a plug of tobacco ; yet we do not for this reason put these things on the free list. Then there is this inconsistency : The man who is wealthy and able to buy a handsome picture hangs it in his drawing room where he and a few intimate friends can see it. He gets it free. But the poorer man who wishes to improve the external appearance of his home, who wishes to beautify his lawn or his grounds or yard by planting ornamental trees or shrubs, has to pay a duty upon those trees or shrubs. On looking through the tariff I find that ornamental trees or shrubs—which are planted outside where everybody who passes by can see them and enjoy looking at them—are taxed 20 per cent. The Trade and Navigations Returns show that the imports of that class of trees and shrubs last year amounted to $29,412, the duty collected upon which amounted to $5,882. Oil paintings were imported to the value of $213,810, on which there was no duty collected. I claim that for the sake of consistency and to increase our revenue—and we know that we need the money—these works should be taxed. I hope that the Government will see their way clear to make an amendment providing that all paintings shall be taxed at least to the same extent as pictures of a cheaper kind. Of course some will say that it is difficult to place a value on an oil painting. I think that difficulty can be overcome to a large extent. I do not see why the case should present greater difficulties than that of other classes of pictures.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The principle upon which paintings of a high class are admitted free is pretty well known. They are regarded as works of an educational character. A man who imports a good painting, even though he be a wealthy man, does not, as a rule, import it for his own gratification alone ; he wants to exhibit it, and the influence of it on the community is often widespread. That, at all events, is the theory. The importation of these works has been regarded as an encouragement to refinement and education in the community ; and I think that, on the whole, the reasons in favour of placing these works on the free list are good. Even across the border, in the United States, with all their high protective tariff, they admit paintings of this class free of duty.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) his opinion upon this matter. I heard him making an excellent disquisition in a by-election campaign. I am quite sure that he shares the sentiments of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Erb). The Ministers must be in agreement. I would like to know whether the hon. Minister of Finance has changed his mind or whether the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has changed his. It is important that we should have that made clear at this time.

Mr. ERB. In reply to what has been said by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) I would like to say that it is an easy matter to make a provision, the same as we find made under other tariff items, that when these pictures are imported for educational purposes they should be allowed to come in free. Works of art that are imported for the use of schools of art should be allowed to come in free, but when these works are imported by private individuals for the purpose of hanging them up in their own houses, I claim that they should be taxed ; and that a tariff that makes no provision for such a thing is not a consistent tariff.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to say that I support the views of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Erb). I think there are also a number of other items besides paintings that should bear a higher duty.

143. All medicinal, chemical and pharmaceutical preparations, when compounded of more than one substance, including patent and proprietary preparations, tinctures, pills, powders, troches, lozenges, syrups, cordials, bitters, anodynes, tonics, plasters, liniment, salves, ointments, pastes, drops, waters, essences and oils, n.o.p.; provided that drugs, pill-mass and preparations, not including pills or medicinal plasters, recognized by the British or the United States Pharmacopœia of the French Codex as official, shall not be held to be covered by this item; all liquids, containing alcohol, fifty per cent ad valorem; and all others, liquid or not, twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a very large increase in that item; it is from 35 and 25 per cent to 50 and 25 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the old tariff the duty on liquid medicines was 50 per cent and 25 per cent on what I may call dry medicines. In introducing our tariff at first we made the 50 per cent rate 35 per cent. We have since, however, on reconsideration, come to the conclusion that the proper line of division is, whether spirits have been used in these medicines. Therefore, we provide that in the case of medicines which are in part made of spirits, the duty shall be 50 per cent; all other liquid medicines and all dry medicines, 25 per cent. The line of division is the use or the non-use of spirits, which I think the hon. gentleman will say is a reasonable line.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is a still greater recommendation that it is nearer the tariff we had before.

148. Articles, viz.: Antiseptic surgical dressings, such as absorbent cotton, cotton wool, lint, lamb's wool, tow, jute, gauzes and oakum, prepared for use as surgical dressings, plain or medicated; surgical belts and trusses, electric belts, pessaries and suspensory bandages of all kinds, twenty per cent ad valorem.

Surgical and dental instruments, and surgical needles, (not being furniture) ten per cent ad valorem,—until 1st January, 1898, and thereafter to be free.

Mr. ROGERS. I cannot see on what grounds surgical instruments are to be put on the free list after January, 1898. These professions are pretty close corporations, and they can charge what rates they like for any services that they perform, and we have no way to help ourselves. I think these gentlemen can well afford to pay their share of revenue by paying a duty on these instruments. I know that the general feeling in the country is that they should be made to pay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think there is a reason for putting them on the free list that my hon. friend has overlooked, and that is that this is a relief to a profession who do more work without remuneration than any other profession.

Mr. ROGERS. The hon. gentleman is no doubt quite right that they render a good deal of service to the poor without pay, but those who are able to pay they charge pretty well for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) will see, on reflection, that this concession is really in the interests of the poor. To the average town physician with a comfortable practice, the question of duty upon his kit of instruments is not a matter of consequence; but to the young physician beginning in a country where he does not get much pay, but has to do a great deal of work at low rates or no rates at all, I think it is desirable that we should place it in his power to obtain an outfit of instruments at the lowest possible cost. In doing so you are not only conferring a benefit upon him, but you are better fitting him to benefit others.

Mr. BRITTON. There is another thing the hon. member for Frontenac has overlooked. This is a day of hospital extension, and in every place of any considerable population they are establishing a well-equipped hospital, and in order to equip it they are getting the very best instruments that can be obtained. It is desirable that every facility should be given to these institutions as well as to the new beginner, to procure the best instruments that are made.

160. Putty, of all kinds, n.e.s., fifteen per cent ad valorem.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have made a change in the duty on linseed oil, which will necessitate a change on putty. I propose that the duty on putty be raised from 15 per cent to 20 per cent, which will retain the same proportion between putty and linseed oil as in the old tariff.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

168. Oils, coal and kerosene distilled, purified or refined, naphtha and petroleum, and products of petroleum, n.e.s., five cents per gallon.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that this article be placed on the free list, for the reasons which I stated in the speech I delivered on the tariff.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment is lost, and the item is carried.

Mr. DAVIN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is proceeding very rapidly. You have declared the amendment lost, and I think that now discussion is in order on the item itself.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the proper way to put such a motion is to take the vote on the item itself, because this is not properly an amendment. The practice which is followed in England, and which has been followed here, so far as I understand it, is that the item itself shall be put.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman moved his motion so curtly that I had not an opportunity to speak to it.

Mr. ELLIS. I intended to offer a resolution, but I will do so on Concurrence. I will then move that the duty be reduced to 3 cents.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the Chairman is willing, I think it would be better to allow the hon. gentlemen to make their speeches now.

Mr. ELLIS. I regret very much that the Finance Minister was not able to reduce the duty on this article to a lower rate than that embodied in the tariff. The reduction of 1 cent per gallon on coal oil, which is an article very largely used, is not sufficient, as the present duty is felt to be a severe burden throughout the country, and there is a very strong feeling against the duty now imposed. Wherever the Ministers went throughout the lower provinces they found a general expression of opinion against the high duty on coal oil. Taking the maritime provinces, I find that New Brunswick imports 1,440,000 gallons, for which they pay $120,000, and on which there is a duty paid of $80,000. In Nova Scotia there is also a very large importation of American oil. I will not trouble the committee by giving the figures, for they are contained in the blue-books. In order to give the committee an idea of the way in which the duty operates, I may say that at Calais, on the American side of the St. Croix River, the price of American oil is 12½ cents per Imperial gallon by the barrel; at St. Stephen, on the Canadian side, the price is 19½ cents by the barrel, or 7 cents higher on the Canadian side than on the American side of the river, which is very little wider than the Rideau Canal, and there is an increasing rate the further you go from the American line. There is no reason why the people of the maritime provinces should pay such a high tax on this article, and therefore I move that the duty be reduced 3 cents a gallon.

Mr. ROGERS. I second the motion, although our farmers feel that coal oil should be free. As I have said, however, we want to proceed gradually and be reasonable, and we will therefore be satisfied for the time with a reduction to 3 cents. That is a reasonable and fair proposition, and there is no reason why the coal oil industry should be seriously injured by that reduction. I hope the Finance Minister will see his way to make this reduction.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. TALBOT. As a representative from the province of Quebec, I find myself in duty bound to be in favour of the motion of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis). I am consequently in favour of the reduction of the duty to 3 cents.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I shall be forced to come to the support of the Government on this occasion. The object of some hon. gentlemen opposite would not be obtained by the passage of the motion before the Chair. Every hon. gentleman who has taken the trouble to investigate the subject must come to the conclusion that the reduction of the duty on coal oil to 3 cents a gallon would completely wipe out that Canadian industry. A large amount of capital has been invested in that industry, and my impression is that instead of consulting the interest of the people in the maritime provinces or any where else, by extinguishing the Canadian industry, all that would be accomplished would be to destroy that industry which employs a great deal of Canadian labour, and in which a large amount of capital is invested, and to replace it by the building up of a gigantic monopoly in a foreign country. I believe further, that after having extinguished this Canadian industry, you would find that the price of coal oil would be higher than it is at the present time under this moderate duty proposed by the Government. If I thought it were possible to render a great service to the people, I would be quite ready to support the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis), but I believe that the adoption of the motion would have a result the very reverse of that which is aimed at, because I am of opinion that the United States monopoly would increase the price of coal oil to the consumer of Canada the moment you wipe out the Canadian oil producers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). As I have given considerable attention to the coal oil industry during the last two years, and have made several speeches upon that question, I want to put myself right before the amendment is submitted to the House. After considering the question as closely as I possibly could, I am of the opinion that to reduce the duty to 3 cents would have a very bad effect upon the industry. A few years ago when I spoke upon the question, I thought a reduction from 7 1-5th cents to 5 cents would be a very fair reduction. I would not have cared if the Government had now reduced the duty a little lower than they did, but I think that bringing it down to 3 cents would result in injuring a large industry which has been established in western Ontario. Believing that the duty fixed by my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) is too low, I will be constrained to vote in favour of the resolution of the Government. There is one thing I would like to know just here, and that is: If the Government have made any arrangements in regard to the distribution of oil in tank cars and tank vessels? I think that is more important than if the duty were reduced 1 or 1½ cents more. I never could conceive the justice of curtailing the distribution of a commercial article such as coal oil, any more than you would curtail the distribution of dry goods or hardware. I think the oil should be allowed to be sent in such a way as to meet the demands of the consumers in every part of the country, and to place before the consumers as cheaply as possible this necessary article. If there is any protection in not sending the oil to the consumers in tank cars, then it should be put in the form of a duty which the people can see and know and understand what they are paying. I trust that the Government will see their way to allow the consumers of oil in this country to import in tank cars or tank vessels throughout the various parts of Canada.

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to support the amendment. I will not delay the committee by making any elaborate argument in support of the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis), because this question has been so frequently discussed in past years, and the view taken by the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) has been so eloquently enforced by hon. gentlemen who are now enthroned in power. To use the language of the Prime Minister, they have become the gods upon Olympus and their wills are now law; they can do what they please and of course they can carry out that wish which a few years ago was dearest to their hearts, of placing this necessary of life—to use the language of my hon. friend the Postmaster General—at a lower rate of duty than that provided for in the present tariff. Mr. Chairman, I greatly regret that either through your fault or mine—I must assume out of parliamentary politeness it was my fault—that I was debarred from making an argument in favour of the motion too succinctly proposed by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). As brevity is the soul of wit, in that case brevity was the heart and soul of patriotic attachment to the interests of the farmers of Manitoba on the part of my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson). However, as the next best thing, we have the motion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ellis) in favour of reducing the duty on coal oil considerably. My hon. friend behind me who spoke at an earlier period of the session, showed that on grounds of public policy, and on grounds of justice to the poor man and the farmer, the duty on coal oil should be abolished. At the present time, coal oil is essentially the light of the poor man. The rich have gas and they have electric light, but on the farm they have still to burn coal oil, and I say we should place this necessary of life as cheap as possible in the hands of the poor man and the farmer. I shall therefore support the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis).

Mr. DOUGLAS. Before the vote is taken, I would like to ask the Controller of Customs if anything has been done to meet the wishes of the people of the west, by permitting the introduction of coal oil in tank cars. I have already stated to the House my views on this question, and I do not propose to detain hon. gentlemen by discussing it again. With us in the west, it is more a question of the method of transportation than the duty. We have no desire to injure the industry if our wishes can be met and the difficulty overcome by the mode of transportation. It is stated that the lower provinces are to have their oil carried in tank steamers, and as a matter of justice to the west, I hold that we should have the privilege of getting coal oil into our country in tank cars. If the Government can assure us that this arrangement will be carried out, we shall be satisfied without taking any stronger ground—at least as far as I am personally concerned, I shall be satisfied. I would therefore ask the members of the Government if they are prepared to satisfy us on the point that they will allow coal oil to come into our country in tank cars, and thus obviate the payment of enormously high freight rates upon it. It is out of reason that our people should be asked to pay 40 and 45 cents a gallon for coal oil. I may state this much in favour of tank cars, that we would get rid of the re-barrelling in Winnipeg, and the warehousing and reshipping, which means 5½ cents a gallon, and we would get the advantage of a through rate instead of a local rate, which means a very large amount. If the members of the Government can satisfy us that this arrangement can be carried out, I would be quite willing that the motion should be withdrawn.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Government have in course of preparation a Bill dealing with that question, with the intention of removing some of the restrictions now imposed on the transportation of oil to the North-west. The precise terms of the Bill I am not in a position to state tonight, but it will certainly be in the direction the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. TAYLOR. I regret that the Government have seen fit to make a reduction of even 1 cent a gallon in the duty on coal oil if it is likely to jeopardize the Canadian industry. I am quite satisfied that if the motion now before the House should prevail, the industry in this country would be wiped out, and who would receive a benefit? The farmers, about whom my hon. friend is so anxious, would perhaps have a saving of 2 cents a gallon, which, on ten or twelve gallons, the average yearly consumption of a farmer, would amount to about 20 cents a year; and I do not think there is a farmer in this country who, for the sake of that saving, would like to see the Canadian industry wiped out. I regret that the duty has been reduced even 1 cent, because I believe it will have the effect of allowing the Standard Oil Company to interfere with our Canadian industry. I hope my hon. friend will not secure from that side of the House enough supporters for his motion to lower the duty to 3 cents, to jeopardize the oil industry in Canada. If the importation of oil in tank cars and tank vessels is going to injure the Canadian industry, I hope the Government will stay their hand before putting such regulations into force.

Mr. FLINT. I regret very much that I do not feel at liberty to support the proposition of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis), although I am in hearty sympathy with the desire his motion indicates. At the same time, I am of opinion that those who support the Government proposition are not taking a ground inconsistent with that which they took when sitting on the other side of the House. During the closing hours of one session, I think the session of 1894, I had the honour of endeavouring, to the best of my ability to induce the Government and legislature at that time to permit the introduction of coal oil in tank cars and vessels as a fair means of relieving the people of the maritime provinces of some of the burdens which the heavy duties on coal oil imposed upon them. We were unsuccessful at that time; but I am gratified to know that the discussions which then took place, and the pressure from the public, which the Ministry have felt, have resulted in the concession which has been made in this tariff measure. Although somewhat disappointed that the Government have not felt at liberty to reduce the tariff on coal oil more than they have, yet I feel it a duty to support the Administration in the effort they are making to meet the popular wishes and feelings in the portion of the country which I have the honour to represent. We must bear in mind—as has been stated many times during the progress of the tariff discussions here—that we on this side of the House are not at liberty, in the present circumstances of trade throughout the Dominion, to legislate in an ideal way. While the debates and speeches made by ourselves when in Opposition had a freedom, looking to an ideal state of things, which they do not have when we are called upon to administer and to propose reform in the tariff laws, at the same time, I believe there is no inconsistency in the positions which were taken then and which have been taken since; because, coupled with all these single propositions, made from time to time, in which we enunciated our views as to the ideal tariff, there was always the proviso—for which we were taunted at the time, on the platform and in this House, and to which the Liberal party were faithful—that they did not desire to lend their power and influence to the destruction of any legitimate industry in the Dominion. Here and there, there may be industries which claim to be adversely affected; but, proceeding on the lines which the Liberal party laid down in the formal statements of their position, and proceeding on the lines of all our discussions, I believe the Administration have done all that could reasonably be asked in the present circumstances, in the way of reducing the burdens on the people of the maritime provinces, and the consumers generally throughout the Dominion. We have had able speeches on this side of the House, and able correspondence on the oil question in the press from technical experts who have shown that a very large reduction such as would meet our wishes might, and probably would, very disastrously affect a large interest in one portion of this Dominion; and I for one, although heartily in favour of a much lower reduction of the tariff on coal oil, if these interests would not be so affected as to be practically destroyed, yet I believe we ought to watch carefully the practical operation of the tariff as proposed by the Government before reducing it any further; and if, after the experience of one year, it is shown that these industries can stand a still further reduction of the tariff, then I for one will heartily support a still further reduction on the lines indicated by the Government. But after careful investigation which has been made into all these questions by the Government, I do not think it would be quite fair to seriously alter the conclusions which they have reached in regard to this matter. Therefore, although sympathizing with the views of my hon. friend, yet, under all the circumstances of this case, I do not feel at liberty to support his proposition.

Mr. DAVIN. I just want to call the attention of the House and my hon. friends on the Treasury benches to their utterances on this subject. Take my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), who is a most influential man in the Cabinet, and properly so, and whom we all greatly admire.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Did I speak on coal oil?

Mr. DAVIN. "Did I speak on coal oil?" What a short memory my hon. friend has. As late as the 28th of May, 1895, my hon. friend said:

Now, I want briefly to show the House how the public have been fleeced in the matter of coal oil. I will not speak of the amount the Trade and Navigation Returns show was paid by the people in direct taxes. I will show from certified invoices which I hold in my hand, that the rate of taxation we pay in the maritime provinces is over 150 per cent. These invoices, which were made last October, were handed to me by the importer, and they are certified by the customs officer with the seal of the Customs Department upon them; and what do they show? Four tanks of refined oil were imported, valued at $791, on which the amount of duty was $1,130.28, a duty of 150 per cent. Another invoice, two or three days afterwards, was for six tanks of refined oil, valued at $1,077, on which the duty paid was $1,538.70, a duty of 150 per cent. If there are gentlemen in this House who can uphold or defend the continuance of such a wrong as that, I have nothing more to say. I say it is unjust, and they know it is unjust; it is taxing the people unduly and unfairly on one of the most ordinary necessities of life.

I only wish that I could use language as eloquent, strong and expressive, but happily I am able to adopt the language of the hon. Minister of Marine. Let his language speak for me, but it has a double force because it not only represents my views, but because it comes from one who is enshrined in power now, and is one of the most influential men in the Cabinet. I ask him, therefore, not merely in the name of the maritime provinces, for which the hon. gentleman then spoke, but in the name also of the farmers of the west to carry out his views now that he is in office.

But there is in the Ministry even a more weighty man than my hon. friend the Minister of Marine. Sitting next to that hon. Minister now is not merely a man of historical position in our Canadian public life but one who is the acting Premier (Sir Richard Cartwright), and here is what he says on this very subject. And if I cannot do full justice to these eloquent words, attribute my failure to my defects of elocution:

Now, if there be a principle of political economy clearer than another, it is the principle that the worst tax which could be imposed is a tax on a necessity of life like coal. Moreover, it is a tax exceedingly partial and unjust in its operation. It will fall on the poorest classes of the community in the depth of the Canadian winter. It is absolutely sectional, pressing heavily on the people of Ontario, and not at all on the great mass of the people through the other provinces. It will form a standing grievance. It is a most doubtful benefit to Nova Scotia.

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think that is on coal oil.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I find it was on coal. but all that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce said with regard to coal applies equally to coal oil, because if coal is a necessary of life for the poor, so is coal oil; and if high-priced coal presses especially on the poor in the depth of winter, so does high-priced coal oil. I wish I had here the utterances of the present Postmaster General. In fact I could get utterances of every member of the Government, who has been in a previous Parliament, in favour of the motion of my hon. friend from St. John. Under those circumstances, I think that if the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), who is a distinguished member of the Liberal party and has spoken eloquently in favour of the proposal, will only press his influence on the executive, we may be able to carry his resolution.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). In view of the fact that my speeches have been fewer in number and of greater brevity possibly than those of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I may be pardoned, Mr. Chairman, if I ask your attention for a few moments while I attempt, in a feeble way, to give some reasons why the duty on coal oil should be retained. Hon. gentlemen who have previously expressed themselves upon this subject sought to create the impression that the consumer of petroleum is suffering great injustice at the hands of the oil men of Canada. That notion has been inculcated in the minds of the people of Canada, for the past three or four years at least by a powerful organization which has its headquarters in the city of New York. Some of my friends in the town of Petrolea, where I reside, have counselled me, time and again, to be very careful as to what I said about this organization. It is, they say, exceedingly powerful and revengeful and a very dangerous organization to attack. I do not share the fears of my friends in the town of Petrolea. I have no hesitation whatever in raising my voice against what I consider one of the most powerful monopolies of modern times. Indeed, I am confident it is the most powerful, and while I have the honour of a seat in this Parliament, I should be remiss in my duty were I to remain silent when speeches are made in this House which, if carried to their logical conclusion, would have no other result than to place the entire oil industry of Canada in the hands of the Standard Oil Company of the United States. It is also known by many other names. It is well known that it does business in Canada now under four distinct names. In Toronto, it is known as the Queen City Oil Works, and the supposed proprietor, it is known—he will not himself deny it, because he is a truthful man—is paid a large salary by the Standard Oil Company of the United States for the purpose of looking after its business in this Dominion, and he himself told me, in this very city of Ottawa, that his company proposed taking possession of the Canadian market at an early day.

I do not blame them for that, providing they do it by fair means. The oil men of Canada, if they could, would go and take possession of their market. These movements are the outcome of as old a principle as human nature itself. But I may be pardoned, if, representing as I do, to some extent at least, the oil industry of Canada, I file an objection to the methods of the Standard. I take the ground that no greater wrong could be done to the consumers of petroleum in Canada than to lower the duty on the article to the rate proposed by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) viz., 3 cents per gallon and thereby place them at the mercy of a combine. That hon. gentleman, I am sure, cannot by argument sustain the position he has taken in asking the lowering of the duty to that point. It is, I am aware, a difficult matter for a member of the Liberal party to advocate high ad valorem duties. Indeed, many Liberals are firm believers in the principle of free trade. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I am a believer in the absolute soundness of the principle of free trade myself, if we could have a universal application of it. But unfortunately for the consumers, and I believe, for the manufacturers as well, the universal application of that principle cannot be looked for during the life of the present generation.

Mr. DAVIN. Then you are a protectionist.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), to whose eloquent speeches I have listened, on more than one occasion, with some pleasure, is much more at home in the realm of fancy than he is in the realm of fact. He is much more at home upon the summit of steep Parnassus, communing with the Olympian gods, than he is in discussions upon economic questions. Why, the hon. gentleman, I am told, used to court the muses in his occidental home; he used to strike the lyre, if I may use the expression. And, Sir, I fancy I can see the gopher stealing out of his hole at sun-down and listening entranced about the city of Regina, whilst the hon. gentleman poured forth the soul-stirring strains of his music. I am not of those who believe that the buffalo was swept from the western plains by the hon. gentleman's melodious verse. No, Sir, this calamity was due to other causes entirely. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, knows nothing whatever from personal knowledge of the oil question; indeed I am sure that the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution (Mr. Ellis) knows nothing from personal knowledge of the oil industry of Canada. I respectfully invite these gentlemen or any other member of this House to visit my town of Petrolea. Every effort will be made to give him information on the subject, and, I assure him, it will be a pleasure to every person there to afford him the means of studying the question. And I am very sure that, after having visited the oil district, he will not come here and propose to reduce the duty on oil below 5 cents per gallon.

At the outset of my remarks, I stated that there had been an agitation, cultivated in this country against the continuance of the duty upon oil. Now, I hold in my hand a work entitled "Wealth against Commonwealth," one of the most noted books which has recently appeared, a book which I commend to the serious consideration of any gentleman of a literary turn of mind, such as the hon. member for West Assiniboia. I shall take the liberty of reading a short selection from this book. The author is Henry Demorest Lloyd, and the book is published by Messrs. Harper Brothers, of New York, one of the most reputable publishing houses in the world. This book is described as being an "epoch making book." It appears that in 1888 a commission was appointed by the legislature of New York to inquire into the subject of trusts and combines, and the president of the Standard Oil Company testified before that commission. In the course of his evidence, speaking of the concern of which he is the head, he said:

We are pushing into every part of the world, and have been doing so.

Then the writer goes on to say:

Their tank steamers go to all the ports of Europe and Asia, and their tank wagons are as familiarly seen in the cities of Great Britain and the continent of Europe as of America. An agitation of extensive proportions was begun in 1883 in the press of Canada—

I ask the special attention of the committee to this, Mr. Chairman.

—and in the Dominion Parliament to admit American oil at a lower duty. There was no popular demand for such a step.

I assert without fear of successful contradiction that there was no popular demand for the reduction of this duty.

No general reduction of the tariff was proposed. At that time the majority of the electors of Canada were supposed to be in favour of a highly protective policy.

The movement was simultaneous in the press of different parts of Canada. * * * * * It was resisted with desperation by the 20,000 persons employed in the Canadian oil industries, the growth of thirty-two years—"not a rich, gay, bloated population, rioting with the plunderings of the farmers, revelling in all kinds of luxuries, making merry with their friends," says a newspaper correspondent, who visited them in December, 1892, "but a hard-working community, in which all live comfortably; few are rich." I know that the statement which I have read from this standard work is substantially correct.

The oil industry of Canada has, for many years, been in a struggling condition. If ever there was an industry in this country which may be said to have been tempest-tossed and to be still tempest-tossed, it is the oil industry. It has been fighting with its back to the wall for the last fifteen years at least, possibly longer, against the most powerful monopoly of modern times. The organization that I refer to, the Standard Oil Company of the United States, has recently purchased two refineries, one in Petrolea, the town in which I reside, and the other in the town of Sarnia in which my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) resides. And they are at the present time, I am informed, making an expenditure of $250,000 in enlarging the capacity of these refineries. But there is no evidence whatever, no sign whatever, that they have invested one dollar with a view to developing the natural resources of this region, or with a view to producing crude petroleum from the earth.

Their sole object apparently is, I have no hesitation in stating it, to gain possession of the Canadian market in order that they may bring here their own oil from Ohio and Pennsylvania, especially Ohio, where they have a very large field, a very large acreage at all events, and also a very large quantity of oil. Their sole object is to bring that oil into Canada in order that the consumers of petroleum in this country may contribute to the large dividends which they pay to their few shareholders. It is perhaps not generally known, but for the information of the hon. member for Assiniboia I may say, that the shareholders number possibly eight, not more; and last year they divided in dividends no less a sum than $44,000,000. That is a sum almost beyond belief, but it is a fact nevertheless, and that vast sum is extracted from the consumers of petroleum in Canada and in the United States, in Great Britain, in Australia, in Germany, and in almost every other country in Europe; for this organization is not content with the market of the United States by any means. Now a great cry, emanating from the organization referred to, has been raised against the Canadian oil industry on the alleged ground that high prices are being exacted from the consumers. In answer to an enquiry as to the wholesale price of oil, I hold in my hand a telegram from my own town of Petrolea quoting 8½ cents per gallon for good prime white oil. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all that goes into the pockets of the manufacturer of petroleum—8½ cents. In some sections of the country, oil, I am told, is being sold as high as 50 cents retail; but I submit that all the man engaged in the petroleum industry in Canada should be called upon to answer for is the 8½ cents which he receives; the balance of it must be accounted for in some other way. It is utterly unfair and unjust—and I am sure there is no hon. gentleman in this House who has any disposition to be unfair or unjust—it is utterly unfair and unjust to hold the oil man responsible for any more money than he gets. He possibly has sins enough to answer for, and he should not be called upon to answer for the sins of others. In some remote points of the North-west I find that the carrying charges—the question of transportation comes in here—I find that the cost per gallon to carry it to some of those points, is 150 per cent more than the oil man gets for his oil, in fact in some cases nearly 200 per cent. It costs over 16½ cents to send it to some points in the North-west, and in addition to that the retail man getting at the present time, and better than in some places gets a pretty good round profit upon refined oil. But having regard to the difficulties that the retail merchant usually has in struggling through to meet his bills as they mature, I have no disposition, neither have the oil men in Canada any disposition, to find fault with the store-keeper if he tries to get as good a profit as the market will afford. All I desire to say is that the oil man should not be called upon to account for more money than he receives, and all he receives at the present time is 8½ cents, and for several months the price has not been higher than 9½ cents per Imperial gallon.

Now, be it remembered—and I think the hon. gentleman is aware of this too—that the gallon used by Canadian oil men is a fifth larger than the gallon used by the Americans. American oil is invariably quoted at so much per wine gallon, which is one-fifth smaller than the Imperial gallon that is used in Canada.

Mr. ELLIS. In the figures I gave, I used the Imperial gallon.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). Yes, I think the hon. gentleman did. He has instituted a comparison between the price of oil on one side of the line, and the price on the other side. I take it of course that he meant that there was only an imaginary line and that the only difference was the duty, taking no account of transportation charges.

An hon. MEMBER. And the smuggling.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). The hon. gentleman suggests that they smuggle it through, but I would not like to go so far as that. I am sure if they did, the hon. member for St. John would condemn it most severely in his powerful organ, the St. John "Globe." The cost upon one side of the line is so much, and upon the other side so much; so I submit that there is no possible reason why the cost upon the Canadian side of the imaginary line should be any more than the cost upon the American side, plus the duty, assuming that there is no question of transportation. Of course if there is a charge for transportation, that must be added. Since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, I have heard hon. gentlemen state that the price on one side of the line is only 12 cents and upon the other side of the line it was 35 cents. I can see no reason for that difference. All a man on the Canadian side of the line needs to do is to take his can and walk across and get 12 cent oil, pay the 5 cent duty on it, and that would only make it 17 cents under the new tariff.

Now, an impression is sought to be created at the present time on behalf of the Standard Oil Company of the United States, that if they get entire possession of this market, the Canadian consumers will get better oil for less money than they are getting at the present time, and better than they have been getting hitherto. I admit that the oil sent in by the organization I have referred to, is usually of a good quality.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Sometimes.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). The hon. gentleman undoubtedly has some information upon that point that I have not. He comes from a section of country where more American oil is consumed than in my vicinity. But I was saying that an impression is sought to be created that if the organization I have referred to only succeed in getting possession of the Canadian market, the Canadian consumer would be supplied with a better article at a lower rate than he is at present, and a great deal has been attempted to be made of this argument. A great deal also is made of the question of transportation and distribution—that is the string that they are harping on at the present time. Now let me say that the idea they have sought to create in the minds of some hon. gentlemen in this House, and in the minds of some men outside of the House, would, if carried into effect, result in driving the trade completely into the hands of the Standard Oil Company of the United States. They are the only organization on the continent who would be benefited by the changes that they are seeking to bring about. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that if some of the changes that are sought to be brought about were effected, especially the change that the hon. gentleman from St. John is now seeking to bring about—that is, to reduce the duty to 3 cents—I have no hesitation whatever in saying that the result would be very speedily to wipe out the entire Canadian oil industry. I desire also to say that the Canadian oil industry does not now, and never has, feared legitimate competition, but they do fear illegitimate competition, and that is the competition that they are at the present time, and have been for many years, confronted with.

Coming from a county upon every farm of which perhaps oil may be found, and from a county where most of the oil industry of Canada is located, I deem it to be my duty to trouble the House with these few remarks. I have a large mass of statistics at my command with which I do not care to trouble the committee. It is very difficult, I am sure, for hon. members to assimilate matter of this kind in such a way as to catch the salient points off hand, so I will not trouble the House with statistics. Suffice it to say that the Government, through the tariff commission, devoted much attention and consideration to this question, as I am sure they have to every other question they have dealt with, and the outcome of the investigation by that commission has been the fixing of the duty at 5 cents per gallon. Those engaged in the oil industry were strongly of the opinion that the tariff should be allowed to remain as it was formerly, but they now feel that in deference to the great cry which was raised against this industry they must submit to as large a reduction as possible and be able to exist. The present rate having been fixed by the Government, the industry will go on and flourish, or, at all events, will develop to some extent; and I am very sure that if it is allowed to go on, it will continue, as it has in the past, to give such competition to our American competitors as will result in giving to Canadian oil consumers a very much better service than they would otherwise receive, and no people have been better served during the past fifteen years—for, during that time Canadian oil refiners have made a first class article—than have the consumers of oil in Canada.

The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is very solicitous for the farmers' interest. There is method in this attitude on the part of the hon. gentleman. His microscopic majority renders it necessary that he should be solicitous for the welfare of those who have votes. He has sought to create the impression that the burden of the duty on coal oil falls on the farmers. By no process of reasoning can it be shown that the farmers consume the bulk of the oil. I have received a mass of letters from all parts of the Dominion dealing specially with the quantity of oil used by each family. Of those letters, only two give the quantity as being possibly 20 gallons per family; many of them place the quantity at eight gallons.

Mr. TAYLOR. Twelve gallons would be the average.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). Twelve gallons no doubt, in many cases, and by actual computation the average consumption per family, on the farm, ascertained in this way—and it is the only reasonable way you can ascertain it—is under fifteen gallons. Assuming that the farmer pays the entire duty of 5 cents—which he does not pay, as I can prove—and assuming that the consumption of his family is fifteen gallons, the entire cost per year would be only 75 cents. But let me lead the committee back to this point, that the competition, as regards price and quality, given to our American competitor has given the Canadian consumer a much better article and a lower price than he would otherwise have obtained.

Mr. ROGERS. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), who is a great friend of the farmers, has left the chamber.

Mr. OLIVER. I entertain only the best feelings towards the coal oil industry of Canada, as well as towards any other legitimate industry in the Dominion. I am prepared to give the coal oil industry, as a legitimate industry, such share of incidental protection under a revenue tariff as may be right and reasonable and fair to all classes of the community. Under these circumstances, I am perfectly willing to concede a duty which will be in the nature of protection to the coal oil industry. It is only a question of what is a fair duty. As I stated before in this House, with the people of the Northwest it is not a question of duty so much as it is a question of transportation, I do not just now quarrel with a duty of 5 cents, 4 cents or 3 cents, but when the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Fraser, Lambton) emphasizes as strongly as he does the desire of the oil refiners of Petrolea to prevent the privilege of transportation in tank cars throughout the Dominion, I certainly must protest as strongly as possible. It is the lack of that privilege, if I understand the matter aright, that makes coal oil in the Northwest so high in price; and if, as the hon. gentleman says, it is only worth 8½ cents per gallon at the point of production in any case, the hon. gentleman and the coal oil industry can have no objection to concede such reduction in the transport rates as would accrue to us from the transportation of oil in tank cars as compared with transportation in barrels. I would not have spoken except for the fact that the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Fraser) made such a strong point in that regard; which I see is on a line with other influences that are at work throughout the country. This makes it desirable and necessary that the strongest protest should be made against the argument of the hon. gentleman; not that we have the slightest desire to injure the coal oil industry or take away any part of its legitimate protection, but if in any way reduction in the cost of transportation to distant points can be secured, we are entitled to that reduction. That is a fair proposition, and I take this opportunity of presenting it. The hon. gentleman conjured up the idea that some mysterious influences were at work to slaughter the industry.

An hon. MEMBER. The "Globe" said so.

Mr. OLIVER. The "Globe" does not always tell the truth, I am sorry to say. We have had experience of the "Globe" in respect to other monopolies, and I do not propose to allow its word to go in regard to the coal oil monopoly just now. It is evidently part of an organized scheme to delude the people to be content to suffer under the conditions that exist at present. I for one am not deluded by that scheme. I want fair play for the people whom I represent. I want to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser, East Lambton) and the House, that, speaking for myself and for members who desire to see the cost of coal oil to the consumer reduced as much as possible, we are not actuated by any instigation from the Standard Oil Company or from anybody else.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). I do not wish to be understood as intimating that any hon. gentleman in this House was instigated by the Standard Oil Company. I distinctly disavow any intention of saying that.

Mr. OLIVER. I am perfectly satisfied to accept the explanation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser), but the House will bear me out in saying, that his words might have borne that construction.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. OLIVER. To my mind it is absolutely necessary that this question should be settled fairly and squarely. I may say that although we do not know about the production of oil, we do know about the paying for oil, and that is the part of it that interests us. It is the price of oil that we want reduced, and it does not require any instigation from the Standard Oil Company to make a man believe that 50 cents a gallon is too much to pay for oil, and to make him take all reasonable measures to have that price reduced. There is another reason why there is a feeling against the protection that has been given the oil industry, and that is, that the oil put upon the market by the Canadian producers is not good oil. It is known from one end of this country to the other that it is an inferior quality of oil, and there is no earthly use of any gentleman here trying to contradict such a notorious fact. It is because of the high price and the inferior quality of the oil supplied by the Canadian producers, that we object to the present duty and restrictions, and it is not because of a feeling for the Standard Oil Company, or because of any other company. The plea is made here that the producer only gets 8¼ cents a gallon. If that is all they get out of it, and if they are afraid of the competition of the Standard Oil Company, then they had better wake up and do business on business principles, and not depend upon the tariff to enable them to do business upon principles that are behind the age. Not only the oil industry has been run on such principles, but almost every other manufacturing industry in the Dominion of Canada has been depending upon the tariff rather than upon business methods. Nothing better could be done, than that the Government of this country in its new tariff, should give the manufacturing industries to understand, that hereafter they must stand on their own basis, and not depend upon legislation for their profits. One hon. member tells us that only 50 cents a year will be saved to the individual farmer and another tells us that $1 a year will be saved. I do not know whether their figures are correct or not, but whether it is 50 cents or

$1, it is just as good in the pockets of the farmer or artisan as in the pockets of the oil producers. The farmers are at least as much entitled to it as they are, and we as the representatives of the farmers are here to protect them in saving that 50 cents or $1, as the case may be.

Mr. GANONG. I represent a county that is very much interested in the oil duty, and it is all the more interested on account of statements that have been made over the county in regard to this question, by the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as well as other Liberals in this House. I was rather surprised to hear the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) talk about incidental protection in connection with oil, which to-day bears a duty of 80 per cent. If that is the class of incidental protection the present Government are giving us, they are subjecting the consumers to a pretty good dose of the incidental. During the earlier part of the session papers were distributed among the members intimating that the oil industry in Canada was capitalized at $20,000,000. If that is the case, it represents a good many of dry holes that were bored in the western part of Ontario, and if there is $10,000,000 actually invested, it is a pretty large investment. The member from East Lambton (Mr. Fraser) has made a statement to us in regard to the Standard Oil Company. I wonder if his oil friends are running this business just for fun, or on patriotic grounds. If this immense monopoly that makes $44,000,000 a year is coming into this country to scoop up the oil men, there is not a man of them who would not sell out if he gets 6 or 7 per cent on his investment. To-day the duty on oil is at least 80 per cent. The old duty was entirely too high, and I am in favour of the reduction proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis). The quality of the Canadian oil, as referred to by the hon. member for Alberta, suggests the idea that we have a good many principles of protection. We have had the protection of convenience, we have had that of patriotism, and we have now the protection of poor quality. I might ask the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whether he proposes to use Canadian coal oil in the lighthouses along the coast. The late Government did not do so, and it was brought out in evidence at the inquiry into the wreck of the steamer "Warwick" in the Bay of Fundy, that American coal oil was used at the Gannet Rock light-house.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The contracts were let a short time ago, and the lowest tender was from a gentleman in the Petrolea oil region. He got the contract, and is to supply oil up to a certain test.

Mr. GANONG. I am pleased to hear that.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). And it may be well to say that that was in competition with American oil.

Mr. GANONG. I trust that the Canadian oil will be satisfactory for such use in the future, because in the past it has not been, as has been proved by the report of the inquiry into the "Warwick." I am very pleased that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) has seen fit to move this amendment and I shall heartily support it.

Mr. PETTET. I wish to say for my part, I shall support the motion of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis). No one wants to injure this native industry, but if it cannot stand on its own basis, why does not the Government bonus it the same as they bonus the iron industry. I can see no difference between the two cases. Free binder twine and free barbed wire are of little use to the labouring classes of the country, but free coal oil would be a benefit to them. I shall therefore support the motion to reduce the duty to 3 cents.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. GANONG. I move, in amendment, that 5 cents be struck out and 4 cents be substituted therefor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What becomes of my motion that coal oil be made free? I refrained from voting for the amendment to place the duty at 3 cents, because I understood that I moved in amendment that coal oil be placed on the free list.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must tell the hon. gentleman that his motion was not properly an amendment, and, therefore, could not be put. According to the rules, that question would come on the main motion itself.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. DAVIN. I move that the duty be 1 cent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the hon. gentleman wants a seconder, I will second that.

Amendment negatived.

Item agreed to.

China and porcelain ware, also earthenware and stoneware, brown or coloured, and Rockingham ware, white granite or iron stoneware, "c. c." or cream-coloured ware, decorated, printed or sponged, and all earthenware, n.e.s., thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the duty on cheap crockery ought to be reduced. Common stoneware, which is largely used by the poorer classes, nearly all classes from the old country, and such a heavy duty on it is a great imposition on them. I would think the duty might be left on china and porcelain ware, but on earthenware and stoneware I think it should be reduced to 15 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will notice that that is subject to the English cut, so that there will be a reduction in the duty on the English ware.

Marble and granite, sawn only ; flagstone and all other building stone, dressed ; and paving blocks of stone, twenty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would make some statement why there is an increase in the duty on marble. I have received from some of my constituents a very strong remonstrance against the alteration which appears to have taken place in this item. I am informed that the effect of it is to increase the duty to 20 per cent where it formerly was 10 per cent, on gravestones of the cheaper kind. All the marble, I think, has to be imported into this country, and it is really a raw material.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I beg to tell the hon. gentleman that we have splendid marble quarries in the county from which I come, and I have no doubt that has had something to do with the readjustment of the tariff. But whether it has or not, the fact remains that we have an excellent marble quarry in the county from which I come.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Rough marble was on the free list previously, and we thought it only right that it should be placed in the same position as other stone. That necessitated somewhat of an advance. There was a distinction in the old tariff between marble sawn on two sides, and marble sawn on four sides. We put all sawn marble under the one head.

Mr. ELLIS. I have an entry which was made at the custom-house at St. John a couple of days ago, and the man who made it informs me that formerly the duty was 10 per cent, whereas it is now 20 per cent. It appears from the statement of the hon. member for Inverness that it has been done to protect his marble factory.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I merely offered the opinion.

Mr. ELLIS. Unfortunately I come from a province in which protection on coal oil or flour, is not of the slightest benefit ; and our headstones and grindstones ought to escape duty under the circumstances.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a reduction of 5 per cent from what it was a month ago.

Mr. ELLIS. It is 10 per cent increase on the old rate.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The hon. gentleman said that we had no marble in this country at all, and I simply declared that we had very valuable quarries.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. On one class of marble there will be a slight increase ; but if the hon. gentleman will look at the scale, he will see that it is arranged on reasonable grounds. Why granite should have been dutiable and marble free, it would be difficult to explain. We have put all rough stones at the lowest rate of duty, 15 per cent, which on most is a reduction ; on the next stage of manufacture we make the duty 20 per cent, and so on until you reach the highest duty on finished granite which is imported from Aberdeen. While on one particular class of sawn marble, there is an increase, the whole duties have been arranged systematically, and, I think, on a sound basis.

Marble and granite, n.e.s., and all manufactures of marble or granite, n.o.p., thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. GANONG. Representing a county which produces a large amount of granite, I think it only just to the people I represent that I should protest against this duty. We have in our county at present five concerns working in the red granite business. It is the only red granite in the country that is of such quality that it pays to work it at all. We have unlimited quantities so that the cost of the raw material amounts to very little. The whole outlay is for labour. There are 250 to 300 employed in the business, and notwithstanding the fact that we have water power convenient to the quarries and all other facilities, our manufacturers have found it very difficult to get the trade of the Canadian market. Aberdeen granite can be imported, even under the old rate of duty, and command a large portion of Canadian trade. Last year the returns show that some $45,000 worth of granite was sold in this country, that is including the duty, so that nearly $45,000 worth of labour went to foreign countries which should have been given our own men. The extremely low rate of freight, of course, facilitates this. You can freight granite from Aberdeen to the western points of Canada at lower rates than our people can from our quarries. This was proved conclusively in a recent interview between the Government and a deputation with regard to the Trent Valley Canal. The mayor of Orillia said that the freight from St. George, N.B., to Orillia was more than it was from Scotland to Orillia. We are so placed down along the border that it is almost impossible to keep our own workmen from going into the industrial centres of the United States. A few hours journey will bring them into some of the large manufacturing centres of the United States, where the rates of wages are such that it is utterly impossible for us to cut down the wages of our workingmen with any expectation of keeping them in our own country. We have, therefore, to depend, to a great extent, on the protection afforded by the Government. This Scotch granite that comes in is not sold direct from Scotland but through New York houses, so that the commission comes through New York, and the recent advance in the United States tariff will do still more to affect our workingmen, for the Scotch granite will be forced on this country at the 26¼ per cent tariff still more than it was in the old tariff, more particularly as it will be very difficult to sell it in the American market. It really looks as if this was an intimation to our men to go out of the business.

There is another feature and that is with regard to the Quincy granite. I am reliably informed by one of the largest manufacturers that the New York agents who are attempting to get control of the Canadian market, ship Quincy granite to Scotland and have it polished there and brought to Canada at less than our men can bring the rough stone to St. George and polish it. Last year the amount of this granite imported, duty paid, was about $17,400, and it is anticipated by our manufacturers at St. George that this will be doubled under the preferential clause, if that clause is made to apply to this granite. I certainly do not consider that the hon. Controller has given me a definite reply as to whether the rough stone sent to Aberdeen would come under the preferential clause and be in the same position as raw cotton sent to Great Britain to be manufactured. Our workingmen down there are entitled to some consideration. We have a great many artisans, many of whom have large families, so that not only are the workingmen themselves interested in this matter, but their families who have settled among us, and I trust that the Government will see their way to giving these people some consideration. Certainly the duty ought not to be any less than it was under the old tariff.

Item agreed to.

214. India-rubber boots and shoes ; rubber belting, rubber cement and all manufactures of India rubber and gutta-percha, n.o.p., twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

215. India-rubber clothing and clothing made waterproof with India rubber ; rubber or gutta-percha hose, and cotton or linen hose lined with rubber ; rubber mats or matting, and rubber packing, thirty per cent ad valorem.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. At the request of an hon. gentleman opposite, I have agreed that these items should be held over.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I must ask the hon. gentleman opposite to be content with the labours of the day.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I must admit that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has been extremely considerate, and I cannot possibly decline to accede to his request.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

Mr. GANONG.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 7th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CASEY moved, with the consent of the House, that Bills (Nos. 2 and 3) reported from the Select Committee to which they were referred, be placed on the Orders of this day for consideration in Committee of the Whole. He said : I may say in support of this motion that these Bills have been delayed by the necessary inquiry carried on by the Select Committee to whom they were referred, which had to be conducted to suit the convenience of the railway employees and railway employers concerned. I think we have reason, therefore, in asking the consent of the House to allow these Bills to be placed upon the Order paper for this evening, especially as this is the last day for considering public Bills this session. It would be a pity if the careful and strenuous work of the committee should be wasted by the postponement of this Bill for another year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). On Public Bills and Orders ?

Mr. SPEAKER. As I understand, the effect of this motion will be to place them on the Public Bills and Orders immediately after other Bills now on for consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are a number of very important Bills on Public Bills and Orders. I myself have twice postponed the second reading of a Bill at the request of the First Minister, owing to the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. Now I do not want to stand in the way of any other Bill, but I would like to know what opportunity will be given to reach these Bills, of which there are quite a number of important ones. This is the third session at which Public Bills and Orders have been virtually ruthlessly choked off. The last session of the last Parliament the entire time of the House was taken up with Remedial Bills ; the first session of this Parliament there was nothing done but to pass the Estimates. Now, owing to the Queen's Jubilee—and of course no person wants to stand in the way of the First Minister getting away in good time—still, after all, I do think that some fair opportunity should be given for the purpose of reaching matters on the Public Bills and Orders. For my own part I have twice allowed the second reading of the Bill that I have on the paper, to stand, owing to the absence of the Minister of Agriculture; and I would like to know whether it is the intention of the Government to give me an opportunity of reaching that Bill. It is understood, of course, that this is the last day which is to be given to private members, therefore if this resolution passes, I shall have no further opportunity of bringing this Bill up.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These Bills will not be put on the top of the list at all; it is not proposed by the resolution of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) to alter the list at all; they will simply go on at the foot, and they will stand their chance of being reached.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must say, in order to prevent any misunderstanding, that if this resolution carries, they will go on after the other Bills which are on the list for consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At the foot of Public Bills and Orders?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, not at all—they will be placed at the foot of those which are now on the Order paper, near the top, for consideration in committee. If this motion passes, that is where these Bills would go, and it requires the consent of the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. That was the conclusion that I came to, and it is for that reason I wished to draw the attention of the House to the fact. If this resolution passes these Bills will be placed in advance of other Bills now on for second reading, and the query is whether these Bills for second reading will be reached at all this session. I would like to know therefore what the Government intend to do about it.

Mr. INGRAM. Should this motion carry. I do not think it would advance these Bills one iota, because, if they are placed on the Order paper in the manner suggested by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as this is the last day for private members, they would not be reached, therefore I do not see any necessity for a motion of that kind. If it is simply to say that they should be placed on the Order paper, without any prospect of proceeding with them, all right. I would suggest that it be placed on the Government Orders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is perfectly plain that the Government are very largely in the hands of hon. members. The Government hope that from the strong disposition apparently felt on both sides to close the business of the House, they would be able to press forward the measures deemed essential, and if time did not permit public Bills to be carried through, they would be allowed to stand over. But hon. gentlemen know that the Government may propose but the House will dispose. We can do nothing more than suggest, and if the House determines that Parliament shall sit beyond Jubilee, the Government are helpless. Every facility will be given, so far as time permits, to facilitate the passing of Bills, but it is quite apparent that much will depend on the view taken by the House. The acting leader of the House is not present this afternoon, but will be here to-night, and I should not like to make any promise until he is here, when, indeed, he can speak for himself, but it is perfectly plain that if it is the wish of hon. members, the House may sit in July. The Government hope, however, to be able to close the business in time for the Jubilee; but it may not be possible to realize that hope, and if hon. gentlemen are determined to consider all the public business on the Order paper, the Government are not going to use any brute force in regard to the matter. The hope was, however, entertained, from the general expression of opinion given by members on both sides of the House, that there would be such a general disposition to facilitate the public business as, after proper discussion, to enable prorogation to take place at a reasonably early date.

Mr. FOSTER. I am a little surprised at the statement made by the hon. gentleman leading the House. The Government has already disposed of this matter, for they came down to the House several days ago with a proposition, which was adopted by the House, that all the days should be Government days with the exception of this day. Private members have to-day allotted them, and they can get as much as possible out of it. If hon. gentlemen opposite think it will serve some purpose to place Bills on the paper, let this be done. The House cannot, however, withdraw from its own action, and now take from the Government certain days to be used as private days.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the Government might make some arrangement which would meet the wishes of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and other hon. gentlemen who have Bills on the paper, to which I understand there is no objection. Take, for instance, Bill No. 5 in regard to alien labour. That Bill passed through a special committee, and I understood the Government were going to take hold of the Bill, and it was so heralded throughout the country, and great praise was given to them on that account. I saw it so stated in the "Globe."

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not discuss this matter at length.

Mr. DAVIN. I will not discuss it, but I may discuss what is in the "Globe."

Mr. SPEAKER. No.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the Government should put the Alien Labour Bill on the Government Orders. Then there is Bill No. 22 regarding Controverted Elections, the hon. introducer of which asked me to move the second reading this afternoon, if it were called. He assures me that hon. gentlemen opposite agree with his amendment. I have looked at it cursorily, and I cannot see any objection to it. Why should not that Bill be placed on Government Orders? If I may say a word in regard to one of my Bills, Bill No. 107, is to amend the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, and its aim is to cause tenders to be invited when large quantities of supplies are needed, just as is now done in regard to public works. Hon. members are generally under the impression that such supplies at the present time are called for by tender. I suggest that this Bill be placed on Government Orders. In regard to the general view, I support the hon. member for North Wellington. It is a reprehensible thing that a time comes in the course of a session when business is closed for reasons other than public reasons. I remember that seven or eight years ago Parliament had to be prorogued because an exalted personage wanted to go fishing on a certain day.

Hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. DAVIN. I have only incidentally referred to the matter. No doubt a large number of members will wish to go away, but a number of members have public Bills which they wish to have passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. We can meet early next January.

Mr. DAVIN. That is what was said before. I entirely sympathize, as regards the general question, with the view represented by the hon. member for North Wellington, and I ask the Government to place the Bill to which I have referred on Government Orders.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Until the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is leading the House, is in his place, I shall not be in a position to say what the course of procedure will be. The matter, however, will be properly considered.

CUSTOMS SUB-COLLECTOR, GRETNA.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

1. Has Mr. J. F. Tennant, for several years sub-collector of customs at Gretna, been dismissed?

2. Were any charges made against him? What was the nature of the charges and by whom preferred?

3. Was Mr. Tennant given the opportunity to defend himself?

4. Is he entitled to any allowance under the Superannuation Act?

5. If so, how much?

Mr. DAVIN.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1. Yes. 2. Charges to the effect that he took an offensive and public partisan part in the last Dominion general election, were preferred against him by the hon. member for Lisgar, and were supported by other gentlemen. 3. Mr. Tennant was notified of the charges and his reply thereto was received. 4. This question is still under consideration. 5. The answer to question No. 4 applies to this.

PREVENTIVE OFFICER McNEILL.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked :

Is the following a true copy of a letter addressed by the Commissioner of Customs to the customs preventive officer at Grand Narrows, Cape Breton :—

“ Ottawa, 20th May, 1897.

“ Michael McNeil, Esq.,

“ Acting Preventive Officer, H.M.C.,

“ Grand Narrows, C.B.

“ Sir,—I am directed by the Honourable the Controller of Customs to advise you that your services as an acting preventive officer in Her Majesty's customs at Grand Narrows, under the survey of the port of North Sydney, C.B., are dispensed with, to take effect from the date of receipt of this notice.

“ I have the honour to be, sir,

(Sgd.) “ JOHN McDOUGALL,

Through the collector at North Sydney, C.B.

If so, what reasons have the Government to give for dismissing the preventive officer?

Was there any complaint against him? If so, by whom, and what was the nature of the complaint?

Was there an investigation? If so, by whom? Was there a report of such investigation, and, if so, will the Government lay a copy of the report on the Table of the House at an early date?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. 1. Yes. 2. For taking an active partisan part in the last Dominion general election. 3. The charges were preferred against him by Dr. Arthur Kendall, of Sydney, and S. C. Campbell, of Baddeck. 4. An investigation was held by commissioner Captain Bloomfield Douglas, and a report was made by him to the Department of Customs. A copy of the report can be laid on the Table if the hon. gentleman so desires.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then I wish to have a copy of the report laid on the Table of the House.

MARINE HOSPITALS—MRS. LE CAIN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. How long was Mrs. John LeCain keeper of the Marine Hospital at Bunker Island?

2. When were her services dispensed with, and on what grounds?

3. What notice was given her?

4. Did she or her late husband, at their own cost and charges, erect fencing and buildings on the hospital grounds?

5. If so, has she been paid for this expenditure?

6. Did she supply bedding and furniture for the hospital?

7. If so, has the Department of Marine made any allowance for this?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). 1. Mrs. LeCain was never appointed keeper of the hospital, but allowed to continue in charge from the death of her husband in 1892. 2. On the 2nd January, 1897, on the ground that her services were no longer required, as a new keeper was appointed. 3. Mrs. LeCain was notified on 2nd January, but allowed to remain on the premises till 1st March. 4. Yes. 5. No, but it is proposed to allow her a reasonable sum for this expenditure; $100 for an addition to the building and $10 for fencing. 6. Yes. 7. The department proposes to make allowance. The value of these articles per inventory is $23.55, and it has been agreed to allow this amount.

THE ALASKA BOUNDARY.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

Is the Government aware officially of the action of the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs in making the following amendment to section 1 of the treaty for determining the Alaskan boundary line, signed by Sir Julian Pauncefote and Secretary Olney, viz. :

"Inasmuch as the summit of Mount St. Elias, although not ascertained to lie in fact upon said 141st meridian, is so nearly coincident therewith that it may conveniently be taken as a visible landmark whereby the initial part of said meridian shall be established" ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The quotation in the question is not from a proposed amendment, but from the treaty itself as signed by Sir Julian Pauncefote and Mr. Olney, and submitted to the United States Senate. Article 1 of the treaty gives the commissioners who may be appointed power to use Mount St. Elias as a visible landmark if they see fit. The Government is not aware officially of any action of the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs looking towards any amendment to the said article 1, but, according to newspaper reports the committee proposes to add an amendment to the effect that the provisions in article 1 of the treaty for the acceptance of Mount St. Elias shall not operate as a concession of any claim on that portion of the boundary line which, extending south-easterly from Mount St. Elias, parts off the "Coast Strip" of Alaska from the province of British Columbia.

BANK NOTE CONTRACT.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

With respect to the bank note contract —

1. How many plates (not tint plates) will require to be engraved in order to furnish the quantity estimated as necessary for one year in the call for tender of $1, $2 and $4 notes respectively?

2. How many tint plates will be required to be engraved for the same supply of these notes respectively?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The answer to the first question is : $1 notes—18 plates—two of them not retouched ; $2 notes—6 plates—two of them not retouched ; $4 notes—2 plates—neither retouched. The answer to the second question is : $1 notes—9 plates—one not retouched ; $2 notes—3 plates—one not retouched ; $4 notes—2 plates—no retouching required.

THE PLEBISCITE BILL.

Mr. DAVIN (for Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Is the promise made by the Premier to the temperance people and to this House, viz. : "That at the present session he would introduce and pass a Plebiscite Bill," to be fulfilled, and will such a Bill be introduced and passed at the present session?

2. If so, when will the said Bill be introduced ?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to pass a law enforcing prohibition in the provinces in which the plebiscite has already been submitted by the Liberal Governments, that is to say, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, with the distinct understanding in each province that if it carried a law would be passed giving effect to the will of the people?

4. It is the intention of the Government to submit the same question again to those provinces which have already pronounced in its favour?

5. And if when submitted, are there to be other questions asked, such as, "Are you in favour of direct taxation to make up the loss of revenue." or "are you in favour of compensation to the manufacturers whose business would be ruined by the enforcement of such an Act" ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) in whose name this question is placed on the Order paper, not being present, the question had better stand as I wish to refer to the form of it.

Mr. DAVIN. If there is any objection to the form it might be amended.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is obvious that the first part of the question makes an assertion, which may or may not be controverted. If the question were put in the form "was such and such a promise made by such and such a person" it would be more in order.

Mr. DAVIN. I will put the question in that form as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is very anxious to have the question answered.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Premier's compulsory absence from Parliament attending the Diamond Jubilee of Her Majesty will necessitate the postponement of several measures which it was the intention of the Government to recommend to the Parliament this session. Amongst these are the Franchise and Plebiscite Bills. The Government has concluded that as the former Bill ought to determine the franchise on which the plebiscite should be taken, and as the Premier was personally desirous of being present when they were under consideration by the House it was necessary to postpone further action with respect to them till next session. The details of the Plebiscite Bill will be pronounced on its introduction.

U. S. IMMIGRATION AGENTS.

Mr. LEMIEUX asked :

1. Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint an immigration agent at New York, U.S. ?

2. How many agents have been appointed in the United States, and at what places?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. 1. The question of appointing an agent at New York is under consideration. 2. The Department of the Interior has appointed immigration agents at the following places in the United States :—

One at Detroit, Michigan.
 One at Reed City, Michigan.
 One at Watertown, South Dakota.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman any explanation of the expression "paid by results?"

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the answer sent to me by the department.

PARIS EXHIBITION IN 1900.

Mr. LEMIEUX asked :

1. Has the Government decided whether Canada should take part officially in the Universal Exposition at Paris in 1900?

2. What are the intentions of the Government in this matter?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Government has decided that Canada shall take part, and the Minister is making arrangements for space.

A JUBILEE MONUMENT.

Mr. TALBOT (for Mr. Lemieux) asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to call for competition for the erection of a monument commemorative of the Jubilee of Her Majesty Queen Victoria?

2. Is the monument to be limited to Canadian artists?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes ; if the necessary funds are voted by Parliament. 2. No.

BIRD ROCK CASUALTY.

Mr. TALBOT (for Mr. Lemieux) asked :

What steps were taken by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to save the unfortunate woman abandoned last winter on the Bird Rock ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). As soon as the department was advised of the casualty, a telegram was despatched to the collector of customs at North Sydney, inquiring whether he could obtain a steamer to go to Bird Rock, but the collector replied that no steamer could be procured for any purpose. At the same time a telegram was sent to Mr. Peter Bourque, Amherst Harbour, instructing him to render assistance if possible, at once, and a reply was received from Mr. Bourque on Saturday, 13th of March, stating that temporary assistance would leave the Monday following. It would appear, however, that a crew of five men left Bryon Island on the 8th of March for Bird Rock to seal, that these men reached the Rock, and attended to the light from the 8th March until the regularly appointed keeper took charge.

C.P.R.—CARRIAGE OF GRAIN.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

What number of bushels of grain of all kinds did the Canadian Pacific Railway carry east from the North-west Territories and Manitoba in 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897? What number of bushels of grain did that railway carry east from the North-west Territories in each of the above years? How many from Manitoba in each of the above years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The information is not in the department; but if the hon. gentleman desires me to get it, I will endeavour to procure it for him. I had not noticed until this moment that he had made the inquiry.

Mr. DAVIN. I shall be very glad. I was told it was in the Railway Department.

AZARIE BIBAUD, VETERINARY SURGEON.

Mr. DUGAS (for Mr. Bergeron) asked :

Has Azarie Bibaud, veterinary surgeon, been an employee of this House during this session?

What is his salary?

How much has he received up to date?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). No information has been placed in my hands which will enable me to answer this question. It is one affecting the internal economy of the House, and I suppose the Speaker will furnish the information.

Mr. SPEAKER. So far as the Chair is able to furnish the information, there is no such person in the employ of the House.

SALE OF HAY ON "INDIAN GARDENS" RESERVE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Was any other notice in 1897 than the following given for the sale of hay on the Indian reserve known as "Indian Gardens," county of Antigonish, N.S.?

"To be sold at public auction on Saturday, 22nd day of May, this summer's hay of the Indian Gardens, sale to be held at Heatherton Church."

2. On what day and at what hour did the sale, if any, take place?

3. For what amount was this hay sold in 1895 and 1896 respectively?

4. For what did the right to cut this hay sell in 1897?

5. Who was the successful bidder?

6. Will the successful bidder be allowed to cut the hay this season, and if so, will a license be granted therefor?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The department has no information whatever respecting the sale of hay on this reserve at any time, nor has any money ever been received by the department on account of the sale of such hay. If hay has been disposed of it has been sold by the Indians themselves or by the local agent without communication with the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman to request his colleague, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), to ask for a report on that from his agent, as to what really was done.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will.

RAILWAY LANDS AND TAXATION.

Mr. OLIVER moved :

That the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, the Regina, Long Lake and Qu'Appelle Railway Company, the Manitoba North-western Railway Company and the Alberta Railway and Coal Company have become entitled to large areas of land in the North-west Territories.

That only a part of these lands have as yet been scheduled as the property of the companies, and only a much smaller part has been patented.

That only the part which has been patented is taxable.

That no intent was expressed by Parliament in the Act under which these companies became entitled to these lands, that they should be exempt from taxation for municipal and educational purposes.

That by failing to patent to the railway companies their lands as soon as earned, the Government has given them an exemption from taxation contrary to the intent of Parliament, and greatly to the detriment of the settlers of the North-west, who are thereby compelled to bear that share of the necessary municipal and school taxation which should be borne by these railway companies.

Therefore, in the opinion of this House, measures should forthwith be taken by the Government to issue patents to those companies for all the lands to which they are entitled, so that these lands may become taxable at the earliest possible date, according to the intent of Parliament when the Act granting the land was passed.

He said : In preparing this motion for presentation to the House, I have tried to set out the case as fully as possible. The facts herein stated were placed before the House last session as the result of certain questions asked of the Government by myself. There is no dispute as to the facts. I only wish to state to what extent these facts affect the country at large and the people of the North-west Territories in particular. The quantity of land involved is about 5,000,000 acres. This land being granted to railways built specially for colonization purposes is, to a very large extent, situated in more or less settled parts of the country, where the people find it necessary to have schools, to build roads, to support churches and to carry on the ordinary affairs of life as they are carried on in other civilized parts of the world. To support these schools and build these roads, taxation must be levied on the land of the country. The people then find themselves in this position—that half of the land of the country that is benefited by the establishment of these schools, which is improved by the building of these roads, is not liable to pay one cent towards the expense of schools or roads. That was not, so far as I can learn, any part of the intent of Parliament in making these grants of land. There was no exemption from taxation expressed or implied. The companies were given these lands in consideration of certain work done; that is to say in consideration of the roads being built. The railroads having been built, the land belongs to the railroad companies and should be in the same position as any other land in the country which is private property, in bearing its fair share of the burdens of the country. But this land is not subject to taxation. I am not able to explain to this House the reason it is not made available for taxation, nor can I explain fully the method by which it has escaped taxation so far. But I will go as far as I can to explain this fact, which, no doubt, hon. members will consider strange. While the railway companies have earned this land and while the Government acknowledge their right to the land to such an extent that certain lands are marked on the map as belonging to these companies, these lands are not registered in the names; in fact, in regard to one of the companies, the land has not even been selected by the company. In every case the land is held in the hands of the Government, while nominally held by the company. The company, having a private understanding, as it were, with the Government, that certain lands belong to the company, suppose that Smith, or Brown, or Jones comes along and wants to buy a piece of this land. He goes to the agent of the company and says: Is this your land? The agent says: Yes. What is the price? They give him the price and he makes the purchase. He pays to the company the price agreed upon, and when he has completed the payment to the company, then, and not until then, does the title of the land pass out of the hands of the Government, and into the hands of Jones. In the meantime, even the land that is actually in occupation by the settler, as well as the land that is not in occupation but has been actually sold by these parties, is in some cases held not to be liable to taxation. It is simply a system whereby the companies escape their fair share of the burdens of the country. I do not know that that was the intent of the late Government in making these arrangements with the railway companies, but I want to take this opportunity to tell the House how very unfair this arrangement is to the people of the North-west Territories. Let me give one case that has come to my knowledge. A man bought land, completed his payments, and is unable to-day to get his patent because the land is still held in the hands of the Government, and the company has not yet completed its arrangements with the Government to get the patent for the land. I know of another case where a settler was established on land before the railway company acquired its charter, even. The railroad company claims the land that that settler occupies, and it is a question yet whether he or the railroad company is going to get it. Notwithstanding that the man who has been there and has had his improvements there for years, still that land is not taxable. In the interest of the settlers of the country—the people who have to provide the schools, who have to build the roads, who are doing everything that is done directly to improve the country—this burden that they are compelled to bear for the benefit of these railroad companies should be lifted, and these railroad companies should be compelled to take the position it was the expectation of Parliament they would take when they received the charters—instead of being parasites upon that country, they should help to build it up. If they are not willing to build up the country, if they are not willing to do their fair share in the way of improvements, I say that it is a fair subject for this House to consider how to make them do their share, as far as they can be made to do it. As showing the effect upon the people of the country let me read a few figures. There are 5,000,000 acres affected, and this land is valued at $3 per acre, so that it represents a total value of $15,000,000. The ordinary rate of taxation upon land in that country is say ½ cent on the dollar. At the rate at which these lands of the railroad companies would be taxable, were they owned by settlers, they would yield $75,000 a year. The possibility of having to pay this amount or a part of it is escaped by a secret understanding with the Government of the country. Now, as to how it affects the individual settler:—Suppose that a school district is five miles square. That is larger than a school district should be, but, on account of the sparse settlement of the country, it is necessary to take that amount of land in order to get enough taxes to run the school, largely on account of so much of the land not being available for taxation. In the school district there are twenty-five square miles of land, or 16,000 acres which, at a value of $3 per acre would be $48,000. But only half of this land is taxable, so, instead of the people being able to raise $480 at one cent on the dollar, they are only able to raise $240 by the taxation of the land in the district. It is easily seen that if half the probable revenue of any municipal institution of any kind in this country is cut off, it renders the difficulty of carrying on that institution very much greater. These people in each school district escape the payment of $240 actual cash each year, which they actually owe to the district for the support of its institutions. In that country each quarter section is also supposed to contribute to the extent of two days' statute labour each year to improve the roads; so, in a district, say, four miles square, where there are sixteen sections, eight of these sections would be exempted from statute labour under this arrangement; that is to say, in a district four miles square where there should be 128 days of statute labour, there would only be sixty-four days of actual statute labour available, and the other sixty-four would not be available because these companies cannot be compelled to contribute their fair share of the labour which improves their property. All I wish to do is to bring this matter to the attention of the Government in its different bearings, in the hope that they will turn their attention to it, understanding how important it is in the aggregate, and in the individual case. It is simply a case wherein certain parties are getting an advantage that the Parliament of Canada did not consider they were entitled to at the beginning, which certainly people of the Territories do not consider that they are entitled to now, and in regard to which the people of the Territories appeal to this Government and to this Parliament for protection and for justice.

Mr. DAVIN. I am very glad to support the motion of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). In my opinion, he could not speak too strongly of the hardships that the settlers in the townships suffer in consequence of the exemptions in regard to these railways. This matter, I may say, was brought before the attention of the predecessors in office of my hon. friends. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Lister) put a question to the Minister of the Interior asking when the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway would be liable, and how long the exemption lasted, and the Minister answered:

As to the second part of the question, the exemption runs from the date when the patent issues.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But there is special legislation, is there not, with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway lands?

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, but the question is the general question of patents.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not, of course, as well up in this matter as the hon. gentleman; but what I understand is this: The Government's hands are tied by legislation with respect to certain lands, and I understood from the statement of the hon. gentleman behind me, they were not tied with respect to lands about which he is speaking.

Mr. DAVIN. Quite so. But if the Government failed to issue patents in the case of this five million acres of land, which have been given these railway companies mentioned in the motion of my hon. friend, the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, the Regina, Long Lake and Qu'Appelle Railway, the Manitoba and North-western Railway, and the Alberta Railway and Coal Company—if the Government does not issue patents for these lands until the land has been sold by the railway companies, the Government will place these lands in precisely the same position as they are placed by the special arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway. So although there is special legislation in regard to the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, these companies can practically do almost the same things. I know what I am talking about, because we have had this thing up since 1887. One of the first things that we from the North-west did when we came up here in 1887, was to go on a deputation to the then Minister of the Interior, the Honourable Thomas White, a record of which will be found in the Department of the Interior, and represent to him the hardships that the settlers in the North-west suffered in consequence of exemptions. Let me point out that in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway lands, they do not take conveyance of lands from the Government until they sell them. The consequence is that if you were now to do, either by order in council or legislation, what we urged the former Government to do, make them select their lands and have those lands conveyed to them, then, according to this opinion of the Minister of the Interior, the time at which those lands would be taxable would not come until twenty years after the issue of the patents. But the hon. gentleman will see that by delaying to take over the alienation of these lands from the Government, the Canadian Pacific Railway can, after twenty years from the date of the contract has run, avoid bringing the twenty years within computable limits. Suppose the twenty years expired, then all the lands will not be in the same position as the land of these railways, but if the Government does not compel these railways to take over the lands and to take patents for the land as given them, then these lands will not be taxable, because they are still in the hands of the Government, and you cannot tax the Government land. So that the conclusion of this resolution is one that this House should affirm :

In the opinion of this House, measures should forthwith be taken by the Government to issue patents to those companies for all the lands to which they are entitled, so that these lands may become taxable at the earliest possible date, according to the intention of Parliament when the Act granting the land was passed.

I may say that for some reason or other it is a most difficult thing to get the Department of the Interior to take the course which is urged by this resolution. The answer of the Minister of the Interior to which I refer, was given on May 26, on page 2,978 of the unrevised "Hansard," and on page 2,883 of the revised "Hansard." What I fear is that we shall find ourselves face to face with a power of which Mr. Bright speaks in one of his speeches. Mr. Bright says he was once talking to a Minister of the Crown, and Mr. Bright asked him a question. The Minister said to him : Mr. Bright, if you become a Minister of the Crown, you will find there is always some power which you cannot define and cannot grasp that is preventing you doing good, and you will find it the hardest thing in the world to do right or to do good. I do not know what Mr. Bright's experience was when he became a Minister ; but Mr. Bright goes on to dwell upon it, and to point out how difficult it was in the English Parliament for a Minister to do right, even when he knew that the Ministers themselves probably meant well, and would like to act from good motives. I hope that the Government will turn their attention vigorously to this question raised by my hon. friend from Alberta, and in regard to every acre of that five millions to which he refers, and that they will insist on this Government issuing patents, and so relieve the settler in regard to roads, and in regard to statute labour, and in regard to schools. At present the settler is treated, in my opinion, very badly, in other ways that are cognate to this. Here you will find sixteen sections bearing the whole brunt of thirty-six sections, all over the North-west Territories, and that is what we want to get rid of. All these sections are odd sections that are, of course, untenanted, and then there is the Hudson Bay land and the school sections, so that sixteen sections have to do the work of the thirty-six. I had hoped that there would have been an opportunity to discuss that whole question this session. However, this part of it is a very important one, and I give my hon. friend's motion my hearty support.

Mr. DAVIS. I am very glad to hear that the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) had already brought this question before the House some years ago, as he says he must have done so, because we have heard nothing about it this session; and I am surprised that if he brought it to the attention of the late Government something was not done in the matter. However, it is a very important question, and as reference has been made to the land grants given to the Regina and Long Lake and Qu'Appelle and the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company, I should like to say a few words in regard to it. A difficulty under which settlers are labouring arises from the fact, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia, that there are only a few sections in a township six miles square which they can tax for school and parochial purposes. That hon. gentleman made a mistake in stating that the Hudson Bay Company was exempt from taxation so far as regards their lands. The company pay taxes.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend misapprehended what I said. I did not say they were exempt from taxation. What I did say was that this was part of a general question of great importance—the whole land question ; and what I pointed out was that sixteen sections have to do the work of thirty-six sections ; but I did not say the Hudson Bay Company's land was exempt from taxation.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). They are not exempt from taxation, but the company own only a small proportion of the land in the Territories, the larger part being held by the railway companies. They have taken up lands wherever there are any large settlements. They pay no taxes, and the sections which have been homesteaded have to pay all the taxes. As the hon. member for Alberta has pointed out, the question of the construction of roads will arise, as new ordinances have been passed. The time will soon arrive when the settlers will have to build the roads, and this will place another burden upon them. It is not fair that these railway companies should be able to hold their lands free of taxation until they prove valuable. Every settler who comes in makes the land more valuable, and at the end of ten or fifteen years, when improvements have been made on adjoining lands, the railway companies will receive the benefit. I do not think that is fair in a large territory like the North-west, into which settlers are coming, it is frequently found that settlers cannot obtain school advantages on account of the land being largely held by the railway companies, which are not liable for taxation for school purposes. The Government should take some action in connection with this matter. If the companies wait for twenty years before taking out patents, and are exempt from taxation for twenty years this matter will be almost indefinitely postponed. I am very glad to have the opportunity of endorsing and supporting the resolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I observe that this resolution makes the assertion that :

Therefore, in the opinion of this House, measures should forthwith be taken by the Government to issue patents to those companies for all the lands to which they are entitled, so that these lands may become taxable at the earliest possible date, according to the intent of Parliament when the Act granting the lands was passed.

It appears to me that this matter resolves itself very largely into a question as to what was the intention of the Act. If the intention of the Act when passed was apparent, and if the agreement with those companies were based on the understanding that those lands were to become taxable before patents were issued and before the companies knew to whom the patents were to be issued, it would become a very serious question for the House to change the spirit of the law. But there is another question, and it is one of some little importance from a public point of view, and I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman leading the House to it, because it requires to be taken into consideration before any action is adopted by this House, and that is that the policy of Parliament has always been to utilize the public lands for the purpose of securing the construction of railways in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I am afraid that the effect of making these lands taxable, before the companies have been able to dispose of them, will be to render railway construction on these terms impossible for the future. I am afraid if it was found that lands which were supposed to be exempt from taxation until they were disposed of, were now held to be liable to taxation, two results would follow : first, it would be impossible to secure the construction of railways in the North-west and Manitoba to any extent by land grants, which has been the policy hitherto pursued ; and second, it would create an impression of bad faith on the part of Parliament. The parties that have undertaken the construction of these roads on the understanding that the lands would not be taxed until the companies were able to dispose of them, would then find that the principle on which they acquired the lands and proceeded to build the roads had been overruled and a different principle, and one opposed to their interests, had been adopted. It must not be forgotten that all parties in this House long ago arrived at the conclusion that there is nothing so important to the North-west and Manitoba as the opening up of those lands by railways. Every effort to make considerable progress or development in the prairie section of the western country, apart from providing railway facilities, had resulted, speaking in general terms, in failure. Railways have become, from a variety of causes absolutely indispensable to any great progress and development in that great prairie region. No one will question the fact that this road connecting at Calgary with the Canadian Pacific Railway and extending to Edmonton should have been constructed. It has been the means of opening up one of the most valuable and important sections of the North-west, and the lands thus opened up are exceedingly fertile. Settlers are going upon them, which would not have been the case except for the construction of the road. I am not looking at it exactly from the local standpoint of the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House and who are greatly interested in spreading as broadly as possible whatever taxation falls upon that section of the country ; but I want to call the attention of the Minister to the point, that the construction of this road—I take as an example the road to Edmonton which opens up an important section of the North-west Territories—has been of great value to Canada generally, and of great importance to that section of the country especially. I also want to call attention to the fact, that the money found for the construction of that road was to a very large extent based upon the supposed value of these lands, and yet, notwithstanding all that was done to aid in the construction of the road by the Government, the fact remains, that the bonds sold in London at or near or above par, are now only worth 40 or 50 per cent. That is a very dark outlook for the English capitalists who furnished the money to build this road. If in addition to that, this Parliament introduces new and different legislation, imposing obligations on these lands that hitherto have not rested upon them, I am afraid that the effect would be very disastrous so far as obtaining loans in England based upon land grants, is concerned, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads in the North-west Territories, and the development of that country. I just draw the attention of the hon. gentlemen to that, because it strikes me that we have to look upon it from a national point of view, as well as from a local point of view.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Were it not for the statements of the leader of the Opposition, I would not have felt it necessary to add anything to the remarks made by my hon. friends from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) on this very important question to the North-west, because they have very fully explained the grievances under which the people of that part of Canada labour in this respect. While endorsing their views, I wish to take issue with the leader of the Opposition in regard to some of his remarks. I do not believe that any member on this side of the House, any more than any supporter of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), would desire to in any way repudiate any obligation which the Dominion of Canada has assumed in respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is a matter of regret, however, that when hon. gentlemen opposite made this contract or bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate, they did not realize to what extent they were bartering away the birthright of the people. The map of the North-west, with the railway lands coloured in it, is an object which must be exceedingly painful to any true Canadian patriot. The enormous territory which has been sacrificed in the interest of that railway, and in the interest of railroad building generally, is a disgrace to the late Government. After all that, I was surprised to hear the leader of the Opposition saying, that he was afraid that perhaps we would be unable to obtain further railway building in the North-west Territories if there was any question of taxing the lands granted in this way. Sir, I hope and trust, we will never have any more railroads built in the North-west Territories at the same sacrifice of public territory as has been experienced in the case of the railways already there. Why, in portions of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, the prices which the Canadian Pacific Railway were able to obtain for their railway lands totalled up to an enormous sum; in some instances, as high as from $14,000 to $20,000 per mile; whereas, the Manitoba Government, when they made their contract with the Northern Pacific, got many miles of railway built for a cash subsidy of $1,750 a mile, and they also had a great deal of the line built for $1,500 per mile. Where there is a necessity for a railroad which is really going to benefit the country, it is not at all necessary to give away the territory belonging to the people in order to have that railroad constructed. I do not propose to take up the time of the House by discussing this question further. As I have said, I do not believe there is any desire on the part of members supporting the Government, nor on the part of the gentleman who moved this resolution, to act in bad faith with the Canadian Pacific Railway; but it is the desire of every one who is interested in the welfare of the North-west, and who realizes the tremendous sacrifices which the present system has inflicted on the people of the North-west in regard to taxation, that the Government should take steps in some honourable way to come to a definite conclusion in regard to this matter, so that the people of the North-west may be relieved from the unjustifiable burdens which they are now bearing.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say to the hon. the leader of the Opposition, that the entire fault lies at the door of the late Government in not calling upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to take a conveyance of their lands. I will read to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) the clause of the statute which clearly provides as follows:—

Upon the construction of any portion of the railway hereby contracted for, not less than 20 miles in length, and the completion thereof so as to admit of the running of regular trains thereon, together with such equipment thereof as shall be required for the traffic thereon, the Government shall pay and grant to the company the money and land subsidies applicable thereto, according to the division and appropriation thereof made as hereinbefore provided.

Now, had the Government, on the completion of that work, called upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to accept patents for their lands, as each twenty miles were constructed, every acre of the 25,000,000 would have been patented years ago. The Government should have forced the Canadian Pacific Railway to accept their patent, as the law provided, and then the land would have become taxable immediately after the expiration of the twenty years. This Government put it off from year to year, this important duty, and so the time for the taxation of these lands has been unduly and unnecessarily prolonged. There is no doubt that if the lands are sold and occupied they are taxable, but while they remain the property of the Canadian Pacific Railway they are not taxable until twenty years after the patents issue. If the Government had complied with the provisions of the law, these lands would now be approaching a period when they would be subject to taxation. I am sorry that our North-west Territories have been burthened and their settlement so seriously delayed by the manner in which the late Government dealt with the question of the sale of lands. More information has been given to this House, as to the unfortunate manner in which the North-west lands have been manipulated, since my hon. friends now representing North-west constituencies have come to this House, than has been given during ten years in the past. My hon. friend from Western Assinibola (Mr. Davin) says he has brought up this question. I can say from my recollection that he has never before plainly and distinctly stated the grievance which the people of Manitoba and the North-west are subjected to with regard to these lands. I contend that the present Government should move in this matter at once. I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have not selected the balance of the 25,000,000 acres of lands coming to them, and I am further informed that of the total quantity they have not received patents for over 2,000,000 acres. This is a most unfortunate and deplorable state of things, which has seriously interfered with the settlement of the North-west; and for this state of things hon. gentlemen opposite are wholly responsible. They have enabled railway companies to play ducks and drakes with the lands of the North-west, and to hold a large portion free of taxation that would otherwise become subject to the conditions which would at the end of twenty years make them subject to taxation. What my hon. friend has stated with regard to schools, roads, and other improvements indicates that the people of that country are suffering very great inconvenience from this condition of things. I hope the Minister of the Interior will give his personal attention to the matter at once, with the view of relieving the people of the inconvenience under which they labour, owing to the neglect of hon. gentlemen opposite to discharge their duties in the premises.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). There is no doubt whatever of the very great and grave importance of the question underlying the hon. gentleman's resolution, and I am pleased that he has brought it to the attention of the House, and in this way forced it upon the attention of the Government. I appreciate the motive which has prompted him to move the resolution, and I understood from him that his great desire was to get the assurance that the matter would receive immediate attention at the hands of those responsible for the government of the country. I deeply regret that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) cannot be present this afternoon. He was suddenly called away on business to Montreal, otherwise he would be able personally to give the assurance that it becomes my duty to give, that the question is already receiving very earnest consideration at the hands of the department. A memorandum which I have received states that the department is seized of the importance of the question, and that the Minister for some time past has been giving it his consideration. There are two questions which must not be mixed up—the patenting of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands, and the patenting of the railway lands of other railway companies. Whether the legislation was wise or unwise, provident or improvident, it is needless now to discuss. The fact remains that the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are not liable for taxation until twenty years after they are patented. I understood from the Minister of the Interior the other day that a million and a half acres in round numbers had been patented by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company out of the large quantity to which they were entitled, and the twenty years which must elapse before these lands can become liable to taxation must run from the date of those patents. The question with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway lands is not on the same footing as the question respecting the lands ceded to the Calgary and Edmonton and other railway companies mentioned in the hon. gentleman's resolution. There can be no doubt, from the statements made to-day, that this question is important from a local standpoint. To obtain sufficient funds to educate children and construct roads it is necessary that the largest area possible should be subject to taxation; and that the vast areas held by railway companies should not be tied up, and all the burdens of education and road-making placed on the shoulders of the existing settlers. The argument from that standpoint is a very strong one. On the other hand, as the leader of the Opposition says this question is a very large and broad one, which has to be looked at from a national as well as a local standpoint. Hon. gentlemen know that to a very appreciable extent the funds for carrying on the government of the North-west are provided by the Dominion of Canada, and, therefore, every taxpayer in Canada has a special and direct interest in the solution, on a national and honest basis, of this intricate question. I admit all that. I shall take very great pleasure in calling the very special attention of the Minister of the Interior to the very interesting facts which have been brought to the attention of the Government by my hon. friends and to the debate which has taken place; and I can promise that the matter will not be pigeon-holed, but will receive earnest consideration on the part of my hon. colleague. That, I believe, is the object my hon. friend has in view—not a mere academic discussion of this question, but to have it practically dealt with by the department. In that respect his object has been achieved, and I was glad to hear him say that, having succeeded that far, he would leave the matter in the hands of the Minister of the Interior, and withdraw his motion.

Mr. OLIVER. I will accept the promise and suggestion of the hon. leader of the House, and I would like to say, distinctly and clearly, on my own behalf, what has been said by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), that there is no intention or desire on the part of myself, in moving this resolution, nor do I believe on the part of the hon. gentleman who seconded it (Mr. Davis), to repudiate in any way any agreement or understanding legally entered into by this Government or by the Parliament of Canada with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other corporate body or individual in the country. I did not include the Canadian Pacific Railway bargain in this resolution, because I looked upon that as a different affair. Last session I put a motion on the paper with regard to these companies, and another motion with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I thought it desirable to bring this question before the House in its present shape this session, because it stands alone, and without the slightest justification by any agreement contained in any Act of Parliament. There is no foundation for the assertion that there is any public understanding that these companies should be relieved from taxation on their lands. If Parliament had any understanding of the kind, it has never been expressed in any public document. I have reason to believe that Parliament never had any such understanding, and I will go further and say I do not believe that Parliament would have agreed to any such understanding at the time the subsidies were granted to these companies. I want to distinguish the position of the Hudson Bay Company's lands from these railway lands. The Hudson Bay Company were the original owners of the country. They did not receive a grant of lands from any Government; they retained out of their total lands 7,000,000 acres. That was their land without a patent. That land has always been subject to taxation, and the Hudson Bay Company, have, in all cases, paid any taxes assessed against their land; once it was clearly proved that any part of their land was liable to taxation, a cheque was forthcoming. It is the railway companies that are in default, and it would not be parliamentary for me to give here expression to the opinions held in the North-west with regard to them and their transactions in that country. These companies may be set up to be philanthropic institutions, which have opened up the country and to which we are indebted to such a great extent, but that is not the opinion of them held in the west. I shall not further detain the House, but merely wish to allude for a moment to the question of the bonds of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company. I think it is unfortunate that it should have been brought before the House in this discussion. Here is a company which has issued bonds to the amount of $5,500,000 on a railway which they themselves allege only cost $3,717,000, and which competent railway experts say did not cost anything like $3,000,000. On these bonds, which they have issued, an interest of $300,000 a year is supposed to be paid, and all the money which the company have available, including the subsidy granted by this Parliament, is $117,000, leaving nearly $200,000 of a yearly shortage in the payment of interest on these bonds. This deficit cannot fail to discredit the company, and thereby hinder or prevent the floating in Great Britain of other railway enterprises for the development of the North-west. I do not know whether that was the intention when these bonds were issued and this arrangement made, but certainly that is the result and a most unfortunate result.

Let me repeat what my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) said, that we in the North-west do not want any more railways at the price we have had to pay for them in the past. It is freely alleged that it was the money that was realized out of the bonds of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway and the Regina, Long Lake and Qu'Appelle Railway over the actual cost of the roads, that went to buy up the Toronto, the Montreal and the Winnipeg Street Railways.

Mr. DAVIN. Would it not strengthen the hands of the Government to pass this motion?

Mr. OLIVER.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are statements in this resolution to which the House would be very chary to commit itself without full inquiry. Then the legal aspect of the question would have to be inquired into by the Minister of Justice, and I am sure my hon. friends do not want to commit themselves to a general statement until they know exactly where they stand. I have given an assurance, which the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution is willing to accept, and, under the circumstances, I think he should be allowed to withdraw his motion.

Motion withdrawn.

DISMISSAL OF WILLIAM BATEMAN.

Mr. HUGHES moved for:

Return of all correspondence, reports and papers in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Wm. Bateman of Port Perry from, and the appointment of Mr. Williams to the position of agent to the Scugog Island Indians.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The other day there was a slight error made in the reply which the hon. First Minister gave to a question put by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), and I desire, before this resolution passes, to give the correct reply, so that the hon. gentleman will be in possession of the correct information. On the 22nd of last month, the hon. member for North Victoria asked the following questions:—

1. Has Mr. Wm. Bateman, of Port Perry, Ont., been removed from the position of Indian agent to the Indians on Scugog Island?

2. Was there an official inquiry into Mr. Bateman's conduct before he was dismissed from the position of Indian agent?

3. Who recommended the dismissal of Mr. Bateman, late Indian agent to the Scugog Island Indians?

4. What were the charges preferred against Mr. Bateman, late Indian agent for the Scugog Island Indians?

5. Who is Mr. Bateman's successor as agent to the Scugog Island Indians? Can Mr. Bateman's successor (whose name, I believe, is Williams) write or read?

6. Was Mr. Williams, in his recent visit to pay the Scugog Island Indians, accompanied by his brother who sells liquor in Port Perry?

7. Did Hon. John Dryden communicate with the Government, or any member thereof, regarding the dismissal of Mr. Bateman or the appointment of Mr. Williams as agent to the Scugog Indians?

In my absence the Prime Minister made the following replies in accordance with a statement furnished him by the department:—

1. Mr. William Bateman has been removed from the position of Indian agent to the Indians of Scugog Island. 2. There was an inquiry, a departmental inquiry, not by commission. 3. As to who recommended the dismissal of Mr. Bateman, this is a question as to which the Government does not feel bound to answer. 4. The charges preferred against Mr. Bateman was offensive par-tianship. 5. Mr. Albert Williams is the successor of Mr. Bateman. The department has no reason to doubt that Mr. Williams will discharge the duties of his office efficiently. 6. The department has not yet received any report of the visit referred to, and has no knowledge of any one accompanying Mr. Williams on that occasion. 7. The department has no knowledge of any such communication having been made.

Unfortunately, the memorandum furnished the Prime Minister was incorrect, and the replies to the questions of the hon. member for North Victoria should have been as follows: —1. Yes. 2. No. 3. The member of Parliament for the district in which the Indian agency is situated. 4. Active political partisanship. The answers already given to questions 5, 6 and 7 are correct. There is no objection to the papers asked for being brought down.

Motion agreed to.

COASTING LAWS OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BRITTON moved for :

Return showing the correspondence, if any, between this Government and the Government of the United States in reference to an equalization or readjustment of the coasting laws, rules and regulations in force in the two countries ; and in reference to any arrangement or proposal for any arrangement under which Canadian vessels shall be granted by the American Government and officials the same privileges as those accorded to American vessels by the Canadian authorities under the laws, rules and regulations now in force.

He said : This motion has reference to an international arrangement with regard to the coasting laws of the two countries, and the International Wrecking Law, which was passed in 1893, and brought into force by proclamation in that year. I should judge, from the importance of this subject, that there must have been some correspondence between the two Governments regarding points to which I shall call the attention of the House, but I must confess that I have been unable, on inquiry, to find out any such correspondence, and the whole matter of the inland shipping seems to be in an unsatisfactory condition at present. In the first place, as I understand it, the registration is with the Controller of Customs. In the second place, the correspondence hitherto has been with the Minister of Marine or through his office, but I understand that lately correspondence or negotiations have been with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, so that it is a little difficult to find out what has taken place between the representatives of the two Governments on a subject which I regard as most important. If these arrangements are reciprocal, according to the letter of the law, they are not reciprocal at all, in actual practice. For example, the American steamers trading with our inland Canadian ports are not subject to inspection. Our Government inspectors, as a matter of practice, accept American certificates and allow the American boats, which have American certificates, to carry passengers and be equipped according to these certificates.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That may be the case, as a matter of international practice and courtesy, but if American steamers started from our ports with Canadian passengers, they would be liable to inspection and could not carry passengers without conforming to our law.

Mr. BRITTON. As a matter of fact, they do. The American certificates are always accepted. I am quite correct in saying this, because, in general practice, when the American certificate is accepted the boat is allowed to carry passengers according to the American certificate. And this is important because, according to the American regulation, a steamer of the same tonnage as a Canadian steamer, is allowed to carry a considerably larger number of passengers. The difference is about one-quarter. For instance, an American steamer of a certain tonnage will be allowed to carry a thousand passengers, while a Canadian steamer of similar tonnage is allowed to carry only 750 passengers. There would be nothing to complain of in that, as fixed by our regulations, if the Americans in any other respects allowed our vessels to go according to the Canadian certificate. But they do not. For instance, according to our regulations in Canada the equipment is different from the American ; it is not based on tonnage altogether. When I speak of equipment I refer to life-boat, fire appliances, and that sort of thing. Nor is it based on the passenger capacity of the steamer, but on certain other things which are furnished by the department. Now, the American Government will not accept the Canadian certificate, but will have a Government inspection of the steamer and will compel a Canadian steamer carrying passengers from an American port to comply with the American law in reference to its equipment, which is greater, as I said before, than the Canadian regulations require, while, on the other hand, they will limit the Canadian steamer to the reduced number of passengers, that the Canadian Government require. So the House will see that this is an unfair carrying out of reciprocal regulations, if there are such. In short, our Canadian steamers are subject to two distinct inspections and are bound by the laws of both countries whichever one is most against the steamer. I suppose we ought not to complain of it if it is for the protection of life and property. Still, these arguments ought to be reciprocal and there ought to be some understanding in regard to the matter. So far, I have spoken in regard to the inspection and the carrying of passengers ; now, I want to call the attention of the House to another point.

According to our coast regulations, we permit an American steamer to come to a Canadian port and carry excursion parties out of that port to another Canadian port, on condition—the hon. Minister (Mr. Davies) shakes his head, but he will see that I am right and that what I say is done in practice—on condition that the American steamer calls at one American port between two Canadian ports.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Just so.

Mr. BRITTON. But the Americans will not allow a similar thing to be done by Canadian vessels. I will give you a case in point, because what is done in actual practice better illustrates and proves what I have to say than anything else that I can bring before the House. The steamer "North King," a Canadian vessel, makes weekly excursions from the port of Charlotte, which, as hon. members know, is the port of the city of Rochester, to Alexandria Bay, during the excursion season. But, in order to send her American passengers from Charlotte to Alexandria Bay, notwithstanding the fact that she touched at Brighton, Colborne, Belleville, Picton and Kingston, she is not allowed to carry her passengers herself to Alexandria Bay, but must take them to Rockport, a Canadian port, and employ an American steamer to carry her passengers from Rockport to Alexandria Bay. After the passengers have had their day's outing, the American steamer must carry them back to Rockport and then the "North King" may take them on board and carry them back to Rochester. This, as it will be seen, is a greater restriction than the Canadian Government have placed on American vessels. They have allowed American steamers to carry from one Canadian port to another, if they call at an American port between. This is not reciprocity; it is not fair. The matter should be put upon some basis fair to Canadian vessels; and, at this particular time, when there is a little jealousy between the two countries and there is an unfair discrimination against Canadians, when they go over there to work, these matters should receive the attention of our Government, and, as I said before the regulations should be reciprocal. Further than that, under the law which is popularly known as the International Wrecking Act, it is provided that Americans may come into Canadian waters to carry on wrecking, and Canadians may go to American waters for the same purpose. But in the carrying on of this arrangement another piece of unfairness is daily practiced. When a Canadian vessel goes into American waters to do wrecking, raises an American wreck and tows it to an American port, no objection, I believe, is raised. But, in connection with wrecking, perhaps, floaters are used, American property. The Americans have been so jealous of their rights in this matter that in case these vessels, the one raised and the other accompanying it, or in case of two vessels raised—as may happen in case of collision or anything of that kind—they would not allow one to be left by the Canadian wrecking boat at one dock and another at another dock of the same city. I say that is something we ought not to permit, and the attention of the Government having been called to this matter, it should see to it that the regulations are reciprocal in fact and in practice. It is well known that in case of wreck there are generally more than one vessel, as the wreck is occasioned, perhaps, by storm or fog which affects a number of vessels. The matters to which I have called attention are important in the actual carrying out of the terms of the International Wrecking Act. I would ask for the correspondence, if there is any, or if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) who is leading the Government to-day thinks that it is enough to have called attention to the matter, I should be content. But these are matters of unfairness which Canadians ought not to submit to.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There can be no objection whatever to the passage of the motion of my hon. friend. So far as I am personally concerned, I have not had my attention called to this matter by correspondence since I became Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not mean my statement to imply that there may not be such correspondence in the department carried on by my predecessor. With respect to the two distinct matters to which the hon. gentleman has called attention, I wish just to say that as regards the limit placed upon the carrying of passengers by the Canadian statutes, that is not an international matter. Parliament has repeatedly determined that vessels of a certain size going from our ports should be permitted, when surveyed by the inspector of Hulls and Boilers, to carry a certain number of passengers. Whether our decision accords with the decision of the American Government or not is a matter with which we have no concern, it is not a matter of international agreement, we decide for ourselves.

Mr. BRITTON. In mentioning that, I referred to carrying American passengers from an American port and taking them back again.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far as the number of passengers is concerned, the limit of this number and the regulations under which they are to be carried, are now fixed by Canadian law, altogether irrespective of the number of passengers fixed by American laws, or the regulations under which they should carry them. This is not a matter of international agreement at all, it is perfectly open for us to provide that an American boat should not carry passengers beyond that limit from an American port to an American port, if she touches a Canadian port in the interim. We can provide that if desirable; that is a matter which we can discuss, but our law does not compel us to do that. With reference to the other matter of international wrecking, that is a matter of statute law, the rules and regulations are international, and any discrepancy that exists as pointed out by my hon. friend, may be discussed, and it should not be continued. The same regulations which the Americans have in force and are carried out under international law ought to be, so far as they are reasonable, adopted by Canada in carrying out our side of the matter. The matter will be called to the attention of the officers in my department.

Mr. COWAN. I desire to say only a word or two with reference to the statements of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) regarding coasting regulations and wrecking privileges. I desire to state a case which arose near the city of Detroit a short time ago. The tug "Home Rule" was employed to assist two American vessels that were in distress, and tow them to the city of Detroit. The vessels being laden with different kinds of merchandise, the owners desired to land one at the foot of 24th street and the other at the foot of 1st street. Mr. Frank Hackett, the owner of the Canadian tug "Home Rule" was unable to take the vessel to the foot of 1st street, and was compelled to hire an American tug at an exorbitant price for the purpose of bringing the vessel up, on account of being barred by the coasting regulations of the United States. On the other hand, if American tugs should relieve Canadian vessels, as they have done to my personal knowledge, the tug may land one vessel at the town of Sandwich on the Canadian side of the river, opposite 24th street, and tow the other up to the city of Windsor without any violation, or at all events, without any complaint being made of any violation of the Canadian restrictions. I simply desire to rise in my place and say that to my personal knowledge that sort of thing has gone on and is going on every day.

Motion agreed to.

PHYSICIANS TO THE INDIANS OF BRANT COUNTY.

Mr. DAVIN (for Mr. Clancy) moved for :

Copies of all correspondence between the Government and any parties in the county of Brant relating to the dismissals of Dr. J. A. Langrill and Drs. Walter and Ashton Langrill from the position of resident physician and assistant physicians to the Indians on the reservation in the township of Tuscarora, county of Brant.

He said: I move this motion on behalf of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). I take a great interest in it, because I know all these parties, and I know Dr. J. A. Langrill to be an officer of ability and trustworthiness.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AGENT, HAGARSVILLE.

Mr. DAVIN (for Mr. Clancy) moved for :

Copies of all telegrams and letters between the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, and Mr. Charles B. Heyd, M.P. for South Brant, and Mr. Davis, of the county of Haldimand, relating to the appointment or otherwise of Mr. Daniel Lynch, of the village of Hagersville, or Dr. Stuart of the same place, as Indian agent in the room and stead of Dr. Jones of Hagersville.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) who this Daniel Lynch is? Is he a livery-keeper in Hagersville?

Mr. HEYD. I think he is a general merchant, and not a livery stable keeper.

Motion agreed to.

SCRIP FOR THE HALF-BREEDS.

Mr. DAVIS moved for :

Copies of all petitions, letters and other papers respecting scrip for the half-breeds in the North-west Territories, and to approve of claims of half-breeds born in the North-west Territories between 1st July, 1870, and 1st July, 1885.

He said: I was given to understand that when a question of the same kind came up before in the House, the Prime Minister stated that the question of scrip in the North-west Territories would be taken up during the recess. If it is the intention of the Government to take the matter up and consider it during the recess, I shall be perfectly satisfied to withdraw the motion. If not, I desire to proceed with it. I would like to hear from the hon. Minister of Marine, who is leading the House, on this matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I am not in a position to make any authoritative statement on the matter. I was under the impression, as was the hon. gentleman, that the Premier had made a statement in regard to it; but in the absence of the Minister of the Interior, I am not in a position to say how the matter stands, or as to what is the intention of the hon. gentleman. I have no objection to the adoption of the motion, and when the papers are brought down the hon. gentleman can ascertain from the Minister of the Interior what is the policy in regard to this subject. On any motion to go into Committee of Supply the hon. gentleman can ascertain exactly what the Government policy is.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). This is a very important question, and it should be settled one way or the other. The people in my district are dissatisfied with the supposed settlement of seven years ago. That dealt with our half-breeds on the same basis as with the half-breeds of Manitoba, and under it the Government gave scrip to all children of half-breeds up to 1870. The half-breeds of the North-west complain that the settlement made with the half-breeds of Manitoba did not apply to them, and believe they are entitled to be paid for every child born up to July, 1885. The Government have not seen the question in that light, and an agitation is going on in the Saskatchewan district for the settlement of the difficulty. My attention was brought to the matter during the last election. In the half-breed settlement there is an agitation going on, and during the election I promised that I would call attention to the matter and have the Government deal with it one way or the other. The Government should end the difficulty. And if justice is to be done to those people it should be done at once; if not, the people should be informed that they have nothing to expect in this regard. A petition has been sent here setting forth the half-breed claims. It is as follows:—

Dominion of Canada,

To wit :

The 1st day of June, 1895.

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council :

The petition of Her Majesty's half-breed subjects residing in the North-western Territory of Canada humbly sheweth :

Whereas, it has always been the invariable and fixed policy of the British Empire, when acquiring any territories, to treat with the native inhabitants, and make them compensation in order to extinguish their natural title to the soil ;

And whereas, it was, in fact, stipulated by the Imperial Government and undertaken by the Government of Canada that such a policy would be pursued with the aborigines upon the transfer of Rupert's Land to Canada, as is evidenced by the Imperial Acts, the Addresses of the Houses of Parliament of Canada, and the Order of the Privy Council, authorizing the transfer, from which the following extracts are quoted :—

Imperial Act, Cap. CV., 31 and 32 Vic. (31st July, 1863) :

" And whereas, by the British North America Act, 1867, it was (amongst other things) enacted, that it should be lawful for Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, on address from the Houses of Parliament of Canada, to admit Rupert's Land and the North-west Territories, or either of them, into the union on such terms and conditions as are in the Address expressed, and as Her Majesty thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of the said Act."

Ibid, Sec. 2.—" For the purposes of this Act the term Rupert's Land shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held by the said governor and company."

Ibid, Sec. 3.—" Provided, however, that such surrender shall not be accepted by Her Majesty until the terms and conditions upon which Rupert's Land shall be admitted into the said Dominion of Canada shall have been approved by

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan).

Her Majesty, and embodied in an Address to Her Majesty from both the Houses of the Parliament of Canada in pursuance of the one hundred and forty-sixth section of the British North America Act, 1867."

The following conditions were embodied in the first Address of the Senate and Commons of Canada, 31 Vic., clause 7, and also in their second Address, which was approved by the Imperial Privy Council :—

" That upon the transference of the territory in question to the Canadian Government, the claims of the Indian tribes to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement, would be considered and settled in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the Crown in its dealings with aborigines."

There is also embodied in the said second Address of the Houses of Parliament of Canada a memorandum of 22nd March, 1896, being the details of agreement between the delegates of the Government of the Dominion and the directors of the Hudson's Bay Company, of which the eighth clause is as follows :—

" 8. It is understood that any claims of Indians to compensate for lands required for purposes of settlement shall be disposed of by the Canadian Government in communication with the Imperial Government, and the company shall be relieved of all responsibility in respect to them."

There is also embodied in the said second Address the following resolution :—

" That upon the transference of the territories in question to the Canadian Government, it will be our duty to make adequate provision for the protection of the Indian tribes whose interests and well-being are involved in the transfer, and we authorize and empower the Governor in Council to arrange any details that may be necessary to carry out the terms and conditions of the above agreement."

The Order of the Imperial Privy Council of 23rd June, 1870, authorizing the transfer, approves of the terms and conditions recited by the Address, as follows :—

" It is hereby ordered and declared by Her Majesty, by and with the advice of the Privy Council, in pursuance and exercise of the powers vested in Her Majesty by the said Acts of Parliament, that from and after the fifteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, the said North-western Territory shall be admitted into, and become part of the Dominion of Canada upon the terms and conditions set forth in the first hereinbefore recited Address, and that the Parliament of Canada shall from the day aforesaid have full power and authority to legislate for the future welfare and good government of the said territory.

" And it is further ordered, that without prejudice to any obligations arising from the aforesaid approved report, Rupert's Land shall from and after the said date be admitted into and become part of the Dominion of Canada upon the following terms and conditions, being the terms and conditions still remaining to be performed of those embodied in the said second Address of the Parliament of Canada and approved by Her Majesty as aforesaid."

Ibid, Clause 14.—" Any claim of Indians to compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement shall be disposed of by the Canadian Government in communication with the Imperial Government; and the company shall be relieved of all responsibility in respect to them."

Ibid, Clause 15.—" The Governor in Council is authorized and empowered to arrange any details that may be necessary to carry out the above terms and conditions."

The Dominion of Canada proceeded to carry out these conditions by the Manitoba Act (12th May, 1870), confirmed by an Imperial Act :

"Sec. 31.—And whereas, it is expedient towards the extinguishment of the Indian title to the lands in the province to appropriate a portion of such ungranted lands, to the extent of one million four hundred thousand acres thereof for the benefit of the families of the half-breed residents, it is hereby enacted that, under regulations to be from time to time made by the Governor General in Council, the Lieutenant-Governor shall select such lots or tracts in such parts of the province as he may deem expedient, to the extent aforesaid, and divide the same among the children of the half-breed heads of families residing in the province at the time of the said transfer to Canada, and the same shall be granted to the said children respectively, in such mode and on such conditions as to settlement and otherwise as the Governor General in Council may from time to time determine."

The British North America Act, 1871, clause 6, provides that it shall not be competent for the Parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the last-mentioned Act.

Afterwards, under the authority of the Manitoba Act, Orders in Council were passed, authorizing the issue of scrips instead of land in satisfaction of the claims of half-breeds, and they have since been compensated in that way.

These Acts are quoted to repel the argument, that such compensation is an act of grace on the part of the Crown in Canada, and may at any moment be dispensed with.

It would appear, rather, that the transfer was an act of grace on the part of Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, in permitting it, and that such permission was granted upon the terms and conditions hereinbefore stated, which remained to be performed by the Parliament of Canada. That, in fact, the transfer was a solemn act of contract and treaty between the Dominion of Canada and the Hudson's Bay Company, through the intermediation and sanction of the Imperial Government, which the Parliament of Canada undertook and bound itself to perform. And that the policy of issuing scrip to the half-breeds in settlement of their claims to be compensated for lands, was in accordance with this contract and a performance of its terms.

This policy was pursued in Manitoba from the time of the transfer until May, 1886, when it ceased by proclamation, after having been continued for about sixteen years.

Early in the conduct of this matter in Manitoba, the question arose as to whether children living, but unborn at the time of transfer, the 15th July, 1870, should be entitled to such compensation.

It was then, after due deliberation by the officers of the Crown, decided that such grants of land or scrip should be given to the half-breed children born after the transfer, up to the expiration of the year 1870.

The Government prescribed the same policy for the North-west Territory by the Dominion Lands Act, 1883, sec. 81, clause E, as follows:—

"The following powers are hereby delegated to the Governor in Council:—

"(e.) To satisfy any claims existing in connection with the extinguishment of the Indian title preferred by half-breeds resident in the North-west Territories, outside of the limits of Manitoba, previous to the fifteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, by granting land to such persons to such extent and on such terms and conditions as may be deemed expedient."

Privy Council, Ottawa, 30th March, 1885.

"Notice is hereby given that His Excellency the Governor General, on the recommendation of the Honourable the Minister of the Interior, has this day been pleased to approve of the appointment of the following commissioners for the purpose of making an enumeration of half-breeds resident in the North-west Territories, outside of the limits of Manitoba, previous to the 15th of July, 1870, who would have been entitled to land had they resided in Manitoba previous to the transfer, with a view to an equitable settlement of their claims, &c."

The intention of the Government was to pursue the same policy to the North-west half-breeds as had been adopted in Manitoba; it was so stated by the commissioners, and by a letter from the Department of Interior published in the public press. Yet the commissioners issued no scrip to half-breed children in the North-west born after the transfer and within the year 1870, owing, it was said, to some technical defect in their instructions which was expected to be remedied.

Notice was given by proclamation that such claims should determine and cease on the 1st day of May, 1894, after having been continued for about nine years.

Your petitioners respectfully submit:

That a proclamation that such claims should cease and determine is not "a consideration and settlement in conformity with the equitable principles which have uniformly governed the Crown in its dealings with aborigines," such as was promised by the Parliament of Canada; that, in fact, it is no settlement at all, as far as the individual half-breed is concerned.

The proclamation is a breath which would extinguish the Indian title, as it were a candle, contrary to the spirit of the agreement stipulated by the Hudson's Bay Company, wherein "It is understood that any claims of Indians for compensation for lands required for purposes of settlement, shall be disposed of by the Canadian Government," that is, disposed of by compensation. Any other stipulation is a contradiction in terms repugnant to the understanding.

It is well known that in the North-west the settlements are more sparse, distances greater, and means of communication less than they were in Manitoba, so that fully as much time should have been given the half-breeds in the west to file their claims as in Manitoba.

It is submitted, too, that the same equitable principle should have been carried out, by which children born after the transfer and within the year 1870, should have been paid, as was established in Manitoba.

Your petitioners would point out, that, in conformity with the resolutions embodied in the aforesaid Address or the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, a policy has been pursued with the Indians totally separate and distinct from that taken with the half-breeds. The latter have been dealt with and compensated individually as having personal political rights, which, indeed, they did have, and exercise, prior to the transfer. Whereas the Indians have been treated with in bands and placed on reservations under the immediate protection and guardianship of the Government.

The distinction was a natural one, founded upon the fact that these two classes were in reality separate peoples, and was established in practice by the Government.

So that, though half-breeds may have been residing in territory not yet ceded by the Indians under treaty, their claims were nevertheless recognized and paid, under the authority of Orders in Council made from time to time.

This seemed to be a just performance of the conditions undertaken by Canada at the time of the transfer.

The reasons used in the last Order in Council for this purpose, justify the advisability of such a course in very clear and apt language, as follows :—

“ On a report, dated 6th February, 1894, from the Minister of the Interior, stating that, since the date of the Order in Council of the 11th April, 1892, thirty-one claims to share in the North-west half-breed grant of scrip, under sub-clause F of clause 90, chap. 54 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, have been preferred by persons whose names appear on the subjoined schedule, such persons having been resident on the 15th July, 1870, in a portion of the Territories or the district of Keewatin which has not yet been ceded by the Indians under treaty.

“ The Minister is of opinion that it would be advisable in the public interest, that these claims should be finally disposed of, notwithstanding the residence of the claimants at the time of the transfer in territory not yet ceded by the Indians under treaty, on the same terms as were the claims of half-breeds who were residing on the 15th July, 1870, in territory that had been ceded, and he (the Minister), therefore, recommended that he be empowered to deal with the claims in question in the manner suggested, and to issue scrip in satisfaction thereof to such of the claimants as may be proved to be entitled thereto.”

This was approved on the 23th February, 1894, and the claims mentioned were paid. Other similar claims were paid up to the 1st May, 1894. The Government then cited the proclamation as the reason why no further claims of this kind could be approved.

It was, however, pointed out that the proclamation was expressly limited in its application to residents in the ceded territories. The Government then took the position that the claims could not be approved because the territory was not yet ceded by the Indians.

Manifestly, this is no answer. It has never been suggested that it is the duty of these half-breeds to secure treaties by the Indians with the Government. They have, as yet, no representation in the House. It is the duty of the Government to proceed and finally dispose of these matters, as the Governor in Council is authorized and empowered to do. No reason is given to alter the value of the opinion of the Minister already quoted : “ The Minister is of the opinion that it would be advisable, in the public interest, that these claims should be finally disposed of, notwithstanding the residence of the claimants at the time of the transfer in territory not yet ceded by the Indians under treaty.”

That opinion must, therefore, be as good now as then. It is so ; because it is founded upon the very core and essence of the whole matter, namely : “ the transference of the territory in question to the Canadian Government ” by the Hudson's Bay Company, that is (we have nothing here to do with ceded or unceded territory). “ Rupert's Land,” which “ term ” the Imperial Act says, “ shall include the whole of the lands and territories held or claimed to be held by the said governor and company.”

Your petitioners, therefore, pray :

That Orders in Council be passed to dispose of claims to half-breeds in unceded territory.

To approve of claims of half-breeds born in the North-west Territories after the transfer and within the year 1870.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan).

And to give further time for the filing of applications in the North-west Territory.

Your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

This is a very long petition and I am sorry I had to weary the House by reading it, but it is a matter of great importance to these people, and it was expected that I should bring the question before the attention of Parliament. I hope the Government will take some action during the recess in connection with these very important claims in the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. At an earlier part of the session I brought a cognate matter before the House. My hon. friend (Mr. Davies) is quite right in saying that the Prime Minister gave assurances. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries then moved the adjournment of the House because the Prime Minister was absent, and on May the 10th the Prime Minister was present and this is what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) said :

We have received numerous petitions from all parts of the territories, and especially from the seat of the rebellion, stating that many of Her Majesty's subjects who suffered at the time grievous losses, have not yet obtained the satisfaction which they sought to obtain. Another class of claimants are also pressing their views on the Government. My hon. friend is aware that the half-breeds have petitioned for the extinguishment of the Indian title and to be treated as the Manitoba half-breeds were treated. The Manitoba half-breeds were treated in this way : In 1870, when we took possession of the country, the law which was then passed was to the effect that all those half-breeds at that time, that is all the heads of families and all the children born before 1870, were entitled to scrip. The head of a family received 120 acres of land, and a child born before 1870 received 240 acres. A commission was issued in 1885 to settle the half-breed claims. Shortly after the opening of the rebellion, they were settled with under that law, that is to say, the half-breeds of the North-west were treated in the same manner as the half-breeds in Manitoba had been treated, and arrangements would go back to 1870 and not before that year ; whereas, the claim now put forward by the half-breeds of the North-west is, that the date of their claims should go back to 1885—that fathers of families and children born since 1885 should receive scrip. I am not prepared to say whether it would be fair or unfair, just or unjust to accept these claims made by the half-breeds. But one point I want to press on the attention of my hon. friends is this : It is the intention of the Government during the recess to investigate all these claims, those of the Wood Mountain Scouts, those of the half-breeds for additional scrip in order to extinguish Indian claims arising out of rebellion losses, and, in so far as possible, to acknowledge all these claims for scrip. I would, therefore, ask my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) not to press his motion further at the present time. I may add this : My hon. friend is aware that the scrip which has formerly been given to compensate half-breeds or others, has not been a source of profit to those in whose favour it has been issued. My hon. friend will, I think, agree with me, that the scrip issued in the settlement of claims has been squandered, and that it would perhaps be advisable for the Government to endeavour to find some method by which the scrip thus issued should be more profitable to the parties receiving it than has been found to be the case up to the present time. That is a question as to which also the Government intend to have some investigation. I repeat, that it is the intention of the Government, during the recess, to investigate all these claims.

Having that assurance from the Prime Minister, I withdrew my motion, because nothing could be more direct and positive than that assurance that all these claims, including those now put forward by the hon. gentleman from Saskatchewan, would be inquired into.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). The matter which the hon. member has read from "Hansard" is, of course, new to me, as I was not in the House at the time. As the Prime Minister has made a promise that these claims will be investigated during the recess, I beg to withdraw my motion. I hope that the matter will be investigated at the very earliest moment, because it should be settled one way or the other without delay.

Motion withdrawn.

PILOTAGE BILL.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 67) to incorporate the Pilots serving between Quebec and Montreal.—(Mr. Guay.)

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that nearly every clause in this important Bill has been amended and redrafted in committee, and as it is a very long Bill, we would require to have it reprinted in its amended form in order to be able to understand it thoroughly. The Bill will not stand in danger of being slaughtered by being held over until reprinted, as there are at least four or five opportunities remaining for it to come up. Unless the general feeling of the House is otherwise, I would move that the committee rise and report progress, and that the Bill should then be reprinted for the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. SCRIVER. I may say that the Bill was very thoroughly discussed by the Private Bills Committee, and that by the amendments to it, many of the objections of the shipping interests of Montreal and the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal have been removed. In a conversation which I had with an official representative of the shipping interests of Montreal, he admitted that these amendments had removed many serious objections which they had to the Bill. Of course they objected to the principle, but as that was sustained by a large majority in the committee, he had nothing else to say on that subject.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. So far as I am concerned, the statement of my hon. friend is very satisfactory, so far as it goes, and I would be the last one to make any captious objections to the measure. But there are four or five opportunities still available, and it is absolutely impossible to properly consider these amendments unless the Bill be reprinted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I do not think the request of my hon. friend is at all unreasonable. The Bill is a very important one and received very great consideration at the hands of the committee. There are many controversial points in it. It affects very largely the pilotage law which has been in existence for many years, which gave the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal exclusive control of matters relating to pilotage, and this Bill takes a very large slice of that control from them. The Bill is one which we could not ask hon. members to accept without deliberation, and as there will be several opportunities to bring it before the House again, I would ask the House to accede to my hon. friend's request in order that the Bill may be reprinted in its amended form before being put through the committee.

Committee rose and reported progress.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 38) respecting the Kingston and Pembroke Railway Company.—(Mr. Britton.)

INTERCOLONIAL EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before we proceed to the Orders of the Day, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) to two or three matters that will perhaps materially expedite the closing business of the House. I want, in the first place, to draw attention to the fact that the arrangement which we were informed at the beginning of the session had been concluded for bringing the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, which is a very important measure, would be greatly facilitated in its consideration, if the papers connected with that matter were laid on the Table. This is desirable in order that we may be able to familiarize ourselves with the position the question occupies, which is of very considerable importance. I shall be glad if that course is followed and the papers laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I have made a note of it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In the next place, there is a matter which I conceive to be of great importance, and that is the alterations made in the administration of the Royal Military College at Kingston. In the absence of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Tyrwhitt), who obtained an order of the House for papers, and which order has not yet been complied with, I ask that those papers be brought down. It is of the greatest importance to every one in the country who takes an interest in the institution that we should know what changes have been made, and what the proposed organization of the college is to be in the future; and it is just possible that a still wider question may be raised, and that is how far it is desirable to maintain the institution, if the changes have been such as to radically alter the whole principle on which the Royal Military College was founded. It was established by the Government of the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie with the view of providing the means of obtaining a military education for the young men of the country. So far as I am able to judge from the best knowledge I have been able to obtain, the changes proposed are not at all such as to retain the principle on which it was established, but rather to depart from that principle; and the general question may be raised, whether under such circumstances the House should spend public money for the purpose of maintaining an institution that practically is competing with institutions of a higher and a better class for the purpose of affording education, outside of military education. I merely throw out these points in order that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Militia Department may bring before the House the necessary papers for the purpose of giving the information to the House and the country to enable it to discuss the effect of the changes proposed. In the third place, I want to ask if the hon. gentleman leading the House will comply with the order issued for:

Copy of Schedule B, showing recommendations of the Treasury Board as submitted by report of Council to His Excellency the Governor General on the 6th and 7th July, 1896, and intended to be approved by him, laid upon the Table of the House last session, with a statement of the action taken by the Government on each of these appointments as made by the said Order in Council approved by His Excellency, or, where no such action has been taken, the reason for such a course.

The hon. gentleman will agree with me that this order having been made as long ago as 3rd May, I am not unreasonable in asking that the papers be laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will see that these matters are attended to forthwith. I might say by way of removing misapprehension, that I think erroneous ideas have gone abroad respecting the Royal Military College. The alterations to be made are not intended to destroy its military character, and will not have that effect. The college had, however, fallen to a low ebb; not more than eight or nine candidates presented themselves for examination under the old system.

Mr. HUGHES. I hope the remark made by the acting Minister of Militia in regard to the changes not being such as to interfere with the military character of the institution are correct, because as a literary educational institutions at the present time. I hope that under no consideration will it possess a less military character than at the present time, because that is its only recommendation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In my judgment, the acting Minister of Militia is entirely mistaken. The Royal Military College never occupied a higher position than it did at the time these changes were proposed. When the time for discussing this subject arrives, I shall be able to show that the standing of the college, both here and in England, never was higher than at the time when these changes were made.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDUCTION AND ABDUCTION.

Mr. SCRIVER (for Mr. Charlton) moved that the amendments made in committee on Bill 13 be concurred in. He said: These amendments consist in striking out the second and third clauses of the Bill, leaving only the first clause, which provides for raising the age of consent from sixteen to eighteen years. I may add that the Bill as it now stands has met with the approval of the leader of the Government.

Mr. BRITTON. Is it desirable to have double legislation on this matter? I think a similar provision is contained in a Bill introduced by the Minister of Justice in the Senate. If that is so, it certainly is better to have one Bill dealing with this among other subjects, than to have a separate Bill on this subject.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Scriver) would do well to consider whether he should proceed with the present Bill. The First Minister gave his consent to this provision, and it was incorporated in this Bill, a public Bill introduced by a private member; and he not only assented to the Bill, but he took steps to have it incorporated in a Government Bill introduced in the other Chamber. That Bill contains the same provision. We have, of course, no official knowledge of what has taken place in the Senate, but this matter was dealt with by the Government in a Government Bill, and the Government has no power to compel one Chamber or the other to adopt it. It does seem to me, and I would submit, whether it would not be wrong and wasting what has now become very valuable time if, while this matter is under discussion at the Government instance in that Chamber, we put it in another Bill and send it up from here.

Mr. SCRIVER. But we are not supposed to know what the other Chamber are going to do; as a matter of fact, we do not know.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right, but I was telling him what the Government did. The Government, through the Minister of Justice, introduced this very clause in a Bill of their own, and presented it to the Senate as a Government measure. Now, that Bill will come before us at a later stage as a Government measure. The Bill before us with this clause cannot be carried at this stage of the session as a public Bill; as a Government measure, if passed through the Senate, we will have it before us, and if a majority of the House consents to it, it will no doubt be carried.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is another grave reason why we should stop action on this matter. In the first place, as the hon. gentleman points out, this clause forms part of a Government measure which will, no doubt, come before us in due time. The subject is a very serious one indeed, and it requires a great deal of thought and consideration. In 1892 this House will recollect this subject, having been previously discussed, was very carefully considered by a competent committee. The measure went through both Houses of Parliament and became the Criminal Code of the country; and this particular clause was adopted and discussed. The subject, of course, is a very delicate one, indeed; and my reason for urging that no particular haste should be shown in this, lies in the fact that leading men on both sides of the House, accustomed to the administration of criminal justice in Canada, expressed very serious doubts as to whether anything whatever could be done in this direction by proceeding hastily, or going in advance of the provision now in the Criminal Code of 1892. The hon. gentleman, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, assisted me when I held the position of Minister of Justice, in defeating a measure of this kind in 1895; and when the Government proceed to bring that measure into this House, they will no doubt be able to meet any objection which prevailed when this subject was under consideration in 1895. I was able then to state, as Minister of Justice, that up to that time there was no reason urged by the Attorneys General in the different provinces in connection with criminal prosecutions, and there was no reliable information in the Department of Justice which would indicate that there was occasion to proceed in this direction. In regard to that question there were obvious dangers that, in seeking to do right, and in seeking to meet what no doubt is a very strong sentiment in many portions of the country, Parliament, by acting at all hastily, might be doing a grievous wrong to Her Majesty's subjects, and putting honest and law-abiding citizens in a position of peril. There have been leading members on both sides of this Chamber who have great experience in connection with the administration of criminal justice, and who have protested in the strongest way against any measure of this kind, or against proceeding too hastily with a laudable enough desire to meet what might be a public sentiment among a class of people who are in no way accustomed to the courts, or in no way have experience in connection with these matters as they come up in the courts of justice. I may perhaps be permitted to read the views I expressed in 1895, and also to call attention to the views expressed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who was especially able, from his knowledge of his part of the country, to give a valuable opinion. I said—

This whole subject was very carefully considered by this Parliament in 1892, and it is my duty to call the attention of the House to the fact that I find, further, that from no attorney general connected with the administration of criminal matters in the provinces, or any of the judges—

That is a most important point.

—who watch these matters and take interest in them, has there been any statement or representation which would warrant me in coming to the conclusion that there was a desire on the part of those concerned with the administration of criminal law, to secure the changes proposed. In England, it was not till 1885 that the age was placed as it is in our code of 1892. The Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons in that year gave much attention to this subject. Now, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said in his place at that time:

For my part, I concur in the reasons which the Minister of Justice has given that this House should not assent to the Bill. When the hon. gentleman introduced his Bill, some years ago, to make seduction a criminal offence, punishable by this Parliament, he had my sympathy and support. The question of the arbitrary age at which Parliament should make the offence a criminal one, is one which aroused much discussion, and the matter was thoroughly threshed out at that time. The principle adopted at that time was, that a child below a certain age ought not to be held, in the eyes of the law, responsible in the sense of giving consent; and Parliament fixed the age at sixteen years. We must fix some arbitrary age, although no one can say that it is absolutely correct; but the general consensus of opinion was, that sixteen was about the age at which the line should be drawn. Nothing has occurred in the part of the Dominion from which I come to induce me to vote to alter the age. Government should not be tinkering with these laws every year. When we have a law which works fairly well, and the general consensus is that this law is working fairly well, and requires no amendment, we would be taking a leap in the dark and moving in a wrong direction, if we altered the age.

I offer no apology for reading either of those statements, because, in 1895, they were sufficient to induce the House to pause. It is of particular importance that this should have the mature consideration and deliberation of the present Minister of Justice, if he has looked into this subject and, subsequently, the opinion of the department, as represented in this House by the Solicitor General, who is well able to give the opinion of the Department of Justice, and so guide us in this matter. The hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill would have great difficulty himself, as any one else would, for instance, in meeting that sentiment which is behind the Bill, and which might say: Why not fix the age of consent at twenty-one instead of eighteen? Therefore, in that matter there is, as it seems to me, a safer guide than merely catering to the sentiment of very respectable people, as I said before, earnest people, who have looked into this subject, but who, from the very nature of the case, are not in a position safely to guide us in connection with legislation relating to crime. The age has to be fixed somewhere, it has been fixed, and unless Parliament is given substantial proof and satisfactory evidence that that has not prevented the crime that we are attempting to repress, I think there is every reason now for pausing, as we did in 1895.

Mr. SCRIVER. After what has fallen from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and from the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I do not think it advisable to press this motion further, and, with the consent of the House, I beg leave to withdraw it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 16) to again amend the Railway Act.—(Mr. Casey.)

IMPORTATION AND EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 5) to restrict the importation and employment of aliens, with which is consolidated Bill (No. 6) to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labour in Canada.—(Mr. Cowan.)

On section 3,

Mr. TAYLOR. Clause 3 has been amended by the special committee to which Bill No. 5 and Bill No. 6 were referred. As the House is aware, a special committee was appointed to which both Bills were referred, and of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was chairman. But when the report of the committee was presented it was signed by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan) as chairman.

Mr. COWAN. No, for the chairman.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was signed by the hon. gentleman as chairman. I notice by the Order that Bill No. 6 is stated to have been consolidated with Bill No. 5. But Bills

Nos. 5 and 6 as passed by the committee are word for word and line for line the same, and I do not understand how they could have been consolidated. The committee have reported that the Bills were the same. Last year the Prime Minister promised the House that if any Bill were passed here, it would be a Bill word for word with the American Act. The Bill I have introduced during six successive years was an exact copy of the American Act, and it was a Bill I intended, if this Parliament passed any Bill, should be enacted. However, Bill No. 5 was placed on the Order paper this year, and it was an exact copy of my Bill up to section 7, after which three or four additional sections were added. Those sections the committee struck out, because they were not in the American measure, and therefore the Bill as brought down is practically the identical Bill I have introduced year after year. But the committee has seen fit to mutilate it, so that it is not workable. It is not a Bill applicable to the United States as their Alien labour law is applicable to Canada. The Bill as introduced by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Cowan) was a different Bill, but in committee the hon. gentleman yielded to the wishes of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and other hon. members representing the Government, as hon. gentlemen opposite had four members on the committee as compared with three members from this side of the House. I object to any change being made in the Bill I introduced, which was word for word a copy of the American Act, and which the First Minister promised to adopt. As now presented, the Bill will be worthless, and so I will oppose its passage through committee, unless we go back to the original Bill I introduced, and adopt a Bill word for word and line for line the same as the American Bill. I think this Bill should be reprinted and placed in the hands of hon. members of the House. The American Bill, section 3, reads as follows:

For every violation of any of the provisions of section one of this Act, the person, partnership, company or corporation violating the same by knowingly assisting, encouraging or soliciting the immigration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners into Canada, to perform labour or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parole or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners previous to becoming residents or citizens of Canada, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of one thousand dollars, which may be sued for and recovered by the Dominion of Canada, or any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement.

All the words from "which may be used for" have been struck out, and provision has been made that suit must be brought by the Attorney General of Canada or some person duly authorized by him. In the United States, either the United States Government or any person can bring the action. Here no person except the Attorney General or some person authorized by him can do so.

An hon. MEMBER. Is that not better ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No. This is not a copy of the American law, There any person can set the law in motion ; here no person is able to do except the Attorney General or some person authorized by him. In the American Bill there is a provision similar to this embodied in my Bill "at the expense of the Dominion of Canada." That has been struck out. That is struck out altogether. Then there is a new section added, section eight, which is not in the American Bill at all.

No proceedings under this Act, or prosecutions for violations thereof, shall be had or instituted without the consent of the Attorney General for Canada, or some person duly authorized by him.

Another clause of the Bill says :

This Act shall only apply to such foreign countries as have enacted, and retained in force, or may enact and retain in force, laws and ordinances applying to the Dominion of Canada, of a character similar to this Act.

That section has no business here, because the United States law is made against every foreign country, and ours should be a copy of theirs. Such a law was promised by the Premier last session, but it has now been departed from, and there has been much injury done to such an Act as I am satisfied this House was in a temper to carry when this Bill was introduced. Before the Bill was referred to the committee, the general expression of opinion was that we should pass a Bill similar to the law of the United States in every respect. This Bill is not similar, and therefore I am opposed to the report of the committee. It is true I was a member of the committee, but I was in the minority there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am afraid that my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) has not made very clear to the House the reasons for his objection to this Bill. The Bill was not one which had much personal sympathy from me.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The amendments made in the committee were not amendments which I promoted, or which met the views I entertained, but they were amendments which were the result of a compromise. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) was the gentleman who made this very amendment which my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) objects to. The House will understand in one moment the reason for the amendment ; although my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) not being a lawyer may not see it. The United States Bill provided that it should be the duty of the county attorney in all cases to prosecute. Now, if my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) had had his way, and had a Bill passed which was a verbatim copy of the American Bill, it would have been a dead letter, because we have no such officials as county attorneys in the maritime provinces, and therefore there would have been no one to prosecute. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) sees that that clause in his Bill had to be amended. You have county attorneys in the province of Ontario—I cannot speak for the province of Quebec—but in the maritime provinces we have no county attorneys.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What does the expression "Attorney General" mean in the Bill. Does it mean the Dominion Attorney General ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, my lord.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think any of us would be very sorry if it turned out that I was right.

Mr. SCRIVER. Coming events cast their shadows before.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The third section of the Bill was amended to meet this condition of things which exists in Canada, but does not exist in the United States of America. We were not on the committee to hold a tea party, but we were there to amend this Bill so that it should be workable, and to carry out the pledge which the leader of the Government gave. I therefore think that there is not an hon. gentleman on the committee, but who will assent to my view, that it was necessary to amend the Bill in that respect. Here was a Bill the effect of which might be seriously to imperil the international relations of two great Christian nations, and the question was : whether any individual, without responsibility, and without incurring a dollar of cost, was at liberty to enter prosecutions under this Bill, and to compel the law officers of the Crown at the public expense to carry his prosecution on. Such a person may not have had any ground whatever for his prosecution ; his object may have been simply to throw the two countries into turmoil,—even war if need be—he may have been a scalliwag not possessing $5 in the wide world ; a person without reputation ; yet, as the Bill was originally drawn, such a one had the power not only to introduce proceedings of an international character, and throw the two countries into conflict with each other, but to invoke the powers of the county attorney and put the public to the expense of carrying out his will. The Attorney General of the province, the whole public opinion of the province might be opposed to his object, but still, if the Bill had not been amended in that regard, it would have been at the power of any one to imperil the kindly relations which I am pleased to know exists so far between these two great nations. The amendment provides, that Her Majesty's Attorney General, or some person duly authorized by him shall bring the law into effect in every case. I am quite sure that every one who thinks over it for a moment, will assent to that amendment as being a reasonable and fair safeguard, so that the law shall not be made use of as a political engine by those politicians who would not scruple to invoke its aid, even if it did imperil international relations.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) has not answered my objection altogether. He simply referred to the last section that is struck out and which read :

And it shall be the duty of the county attorney of the proper county to prosecute every such suit at the expense of the Dominion of Canada.

The excuse he gives for that is, that they have no county attorney's in the province whence he comes. That could easily be amended by saying "the county attorney or other official." The hon. gentleman overlooks the great fact, that the few lines preceding that in the American Bill, says :

It may be sued for and recovered by the United States, or any person who shall first bring his action therefor.

The Bill that I introduced read this way :

It may be sued for by the Dominion of Canada, or any person who shall first bring the action.

That left it open to any person to bring the action, and the United States Bill does the same thing.

Mr. COWAN. We have improved this Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Cowan) will have an opportunity of speaking by-and-by and I trust he will not interrupt me.

Mr. COWAN. Go on.

Mr. TAYLOR. The 6th section of this Bill provides that the Attorney General of the United States or any citizen of the United States can bring an action.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hardly think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) is in order in discussing the 6th section, when we are only on section 3.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very well, I will deal with that afterwards. I am afraid the Bill is so mutilated in this section 3, that it is practically unworkable. If any person wants to bring an action he has to approach the Attorney General and get his consent, and no matter how good the case may be, if the Attorney General does not give his consent, it falls to the ground.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) is undoubtedly right, so far as my recollection is concerned, that during last session the leader of the Government, not only stated that he was prepared to support a measure of this kind, but that he was prepared to adopt precisely such a measure as existed in the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I see very great force in the statement made by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Davies); that if we adopt verbatim the United States Bill, the result would be to render our Bill a dead letter, because of its inapplicability to the conditions in some of the provinces. I think that furnishes a good reason for making the amendment in the Bill. There is no doubt a good deal of force in the objection which is also taken by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Davies), that it might perhaps open the door to ill advised action, if we were to retain that feature of the Bill which enables any person to take action without reference to the law officers of the Crown. I think that perhaps will not create an insuperable difficulty, because I am inclined to think that if any person is able to establish a clear case in which this Bill should be brought into operation, the Attorney General would not take the responsibility of refusing to carry out the law. At all events, I should be sorry, if my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) went so far as to reject this Bill in consequence of the amendments that have been made by the committee which carefully considered it. I think a step will be taken in the right direction by the passage of the Bill, and if it be needed at a future period we can press for carrying the Bill further than it goes now.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman. I had not an opportunity, when this Alien Labour Bill was up for its second reading, of expressing my opinion upon it. To-night, at first view, I felt much inclined to agree with my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor); but, after the explanation made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), I think the position taken is the proper one. We should surround this Act with every safeguard, so that it will not be used indiscriminately, and at the beck and call of irresponsible persons throughout the country who may desire to put its clauses into operation from, perhaps, not the best of motives. If there ever was a time in the history of Canada when it is obligatory to uphold our self-respect and protect the interests of Canadians it is on the present occasion when we are called upon to determine the measure of self-defence—call it retaliation if you please—which we shall take against the operation of the American labour law. What is more, I can tell the Government that there never was a time when a Canadian Parliament could with more certainty feel that its legislative action would be more unanimously endorsed by the Canadian people than in connection with the Bill now before this House. With regard to retaliation against the aggressive law-making of our neighbours to the south of the lakes, if I ever had any scruples based on a refinement of international courtesy, I have none now. For ten years past, permanent domicile has been necessary before a Canadian could get employment in the United States. During that period every Canadian seeking employment there has been subjected to insult, indignity and hardship at the hands of American officials, whose rabid zeal seemed to be intensified in a determination to enforce to the very letter this obnoxious alien labour law. Yes, and this in face of the fact that for the past century this country has kept its doors wide open for every alien to come in and compete with Canadian labour, without restriction, and earn the wages their talents entitled them to. This American alien labour law was not the outcome of business necessity, nor was it designed permanently to protect the wage-earners of the United States? No, Mr. Chairman, it was designed as a studied and merciless attack upon the labour interests of Canada, aimed specially at our workmen and against the general interests of the people of this Dominion. The enforcement of this law has been so brutal, its operations so dishonest, and its results so disastrous, that the people of this country insist—yes, they demand—either that the Americans should wipe that Act from their Statute-books or that our Parliament return like for like by enacting a similar law. If our mechanics or workmen are excluded from working in the United States because they are Canadians, surely it is our duty to see that they are not excluded from working in Canada by reason of the competition of American labour. Since 1885 Canada has been keeping in line with the scriptural injunction and has been turning the other cheek to the smiter on the south side of the Lakes. Our patience, however, I think is exhausted, our long-suffering at an end, and our memory is refreshed by another maxim well known to our forefathers, “an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.” If a Canadian finds American legislation a bar to employment south of the frontier line, let him not find an American citizen a bar to employment north of the frontier line. If it is a crime for a Canadian to carry his dinner-pail in the United States of America, let us see whether we cannot get along without American dinner-pails in the Dominion of Canada. If our axemen cannot contract to cut down the forests of Michigan, shall we not surely preserve to them the forests of our own Ontario? By the enactment of this law, we shall have meted out to the United States the same measure that has been meted out to us; and what our American friends proclaim as only justice for the American mechanic at Washington, can surely be deemed no more than justice for the Canadian mechanic at Ottawa. Let us show the world by our legislation that we can respect ourselves, and then other nations will respect us. The country demands from this House an Alien Labour Act for Canada aimed at the United States, as nearly as possible, similar to the Alien Labour Act of the United States aimed at Canada. This Act should not be less wide in its application, nor less restrictive in its provisions. Our dignity and self-respect must be preserved. Outrageous as has been the treatment accorded to us by the American people for the past ten years, we are neither vindictive nor revengeful. But an Alien Labour Act for Canada we must have as similar as possible to the Alien Labour Act of the United States.

Mr. BRITTON. Coming from a frontier town, I know that the sentiments which have been expressed by the last speaker (Mr. Ross Robertson) are those that prevail almost universally on this question; and I only want to ask my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to see what exceptional legislation it would be if the section were left as he wants it left, and as he says would conform to the law passed by the United States. The administration of the criminal law by the provincial officers in the different provinces is always at the expense of the province, the county attorney being the prosecuting official. You would have to recognize, if this section were passed as it was originally introduced, that it would be legislation of a very exceptional character. Speaking of it merely in reference to the administration of justice or the punishment of offences, I do not know that there would be any real objection to allowing what lawyers call a qui tam action to be brought; that is, an action brought by any person, with perhaps half the penalty going to the informer and half to the Crown. That action could not be brought by every Tom, Dick and Harry, because when an action of that kind is brought, one of the conditions is that the person bringing it must give security for costs. However, I submit that it would be in the interest of the Dominion to allow the section to pass as it has been sent to us by the committee. It would probably meet the case, and would not be open to the objection I have mentioned of being exceptional legislation in providing that a provincial official in a particular county should take action at the expense of the Dominion—something that has not been done in any other case with which I am acquainted.

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, interested as I am in any legislation affecting workmen, and particularly interested in what is known as the alien labour law, I regret very much that this change has been made in the Bill, or that the members of the special committee who support the Government thought it necessary either to protect the Government or to obscure their views by making all prosecutions subject to the approval of Her Majesty's Attorney General for Canada. I think with my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that it will be found that there will be very few prosecutions, indeed, taken under this Act, and I do not think it was the intention that there should be any prosecutions. I think the object is probably to pacify, in some way, the labouring classes in Canada by leading them to believe that it is the intention of the Government in perfect good faith to allow a Bill of this kind to be submitted; at the same time inserting a clause which makes it absolutely impossible for the labourer to protect himself. Now, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries says it would be absurd to allow any citizen, except a man of means, to take proceedings in a matter of this kind. But, Mr. Chairman, we make no such distinction in our criminal law. The highest citizen in the land is not protected from prosecution by the most obscure.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If my hon. friend will pardon me, I did not go into details, because I knew that he, as a lawyer, would thoroughly appreciate the force of my position, by drawing his attention to the section which the Attorney General is called upon to enforce. It has no relation to any specific act of immorality or wrongdoing, but to a breach of an express or implied contract. The hon. gentleman will see, on reading the section, that it deals with a very delicate matter. The clause reads:

Any person encouraging or soliciting the importation or immigration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners into Canada, to perform labour or service of any kind in Canada, under any contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied,—

So that this refers to an agreement, the effect of prosecuting for a breach of which might imperil international relations. The hon. gentleman will appreciate how necessary, therefore, it is that men skilled in the law should have authority to supervise the proceedings, and that it should not be left to anybody to bring action just as he pleased.

Mr. QUINN. I do not think that the pleading of the hon. Minister meets the case I put, because I am satisfied that any prosecution would be taken under the supervision of a qualified barrister. There can be no question that proceedings would be only taken by some labour organization, which would be properly advised as to the precise means to adopt. My hon. friend from Kingston suggested that proceedings might be taken by way of a qui tam action, and I do not see why such proceedings as those required in such an action should not be taken in this matter. I fail to see why authorization of the Attorney General of Canada, or somebody appointed by him, should be required. Take the case of a breach of this law in the city of Montreal. It would be absolutely necessary for anybody like the Knights of Labour either to send a delegation to Ottawa to interview the Attorney General or otherwise communicate with him, in order to get his authorization to institute proceedings. I do not think that ought to be necessary. If this be a good law, the procedure of carrying it out should be so simple that the most humble could benefit by it. If it be the intention of the Government to give practical effect to a law, which is generally recognized as necessary, no difficulties should be thrown in the way of citizens taking advantage of it, and there should be certainly no necessity for a trip to Ottawa to interview the Attorney General or even for communication with the Attorney General by mail, before entering a prosecution. This is special legislation introduced in fulfilment of the promise made to the labour organizations of Canada by the First Minister, but evidently the intention of the Government is, while having the appearance of carrying out the promise, to prevent any practical effect being given to it, by hedging the law around with a procedure which will render its being operated extremely difficult. To show that such is the intention let me refer to clause 6, which reads, as amended:

The Attorney General of Canada, in case he shall be satisfied that an immigrant has been allowed to land in Canada contrary to the prohibition of this Act, may cause such immigrant, within the period of one year after landing and entry, to be taken into custody, &c.

The clause as originally drafted had the word "shall" instead of "may," but as amended there is nothing compulsory in it at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I object to discussing a clause which is not now before the committee, and which relates to a different offence altogether. The first provision of this Bill relates to contracts, express or implied, to bring immigrants into the country. That is declared to be an illegal act, and provision is made to punish it; and the only question before the committee is whether the prosecution may be instituted without the consent of the Attorney General. That is distinct altogether from the clause to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which provides for the punishment of the captain of the vessel and the immigrant himself. The hon. gentleman should keep the clause before the committee.

Mr. QUINN. I was only reading clause 6 for the purpose of showing that it is discretionary on the part of the Attorney General to institute proceedings or not. It was with that view that I was reading in clause 6 with clause 3. The hon. gentleman is providing that it shall be absolutely necessary for a person residing, say in British Columbia, and who wishes to institute proceedings under this Act, to obtain the authorization of the Attorney General of the Dominion before he can do so. It is simply absurd to say that any person in the extreme end of Canada would institute proceedings under such circumstances.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman leaves out the words, "or authorize some one to act for him." We provide for obtaining the consent of the Attorney General or somebody whom he may authorize to act for him.

Mr. QUINN. If the Government will provide that Her Majesty's Attorney General shall be bound to authorize some one to act for him in the different centres of the Dominion, the law would be workable, but he is not bound to do so. There can be no doubt that this amendment is intended to defeat the object of the law and break faith with the working people.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am sure that there is no greater demand for any kind of legislation than there is for legislation of the character we are seeking to obtain at present by this Bill, and I am confident the country will be disappointed if, in enacting legislation of this character, we fail to make it answer the whole purpose which the Bill was originally destined to cover. Last session the First Minister promised this House that in the event of the Government failing to induce the American Government to withdraw the obnoxious legislation which they have placed on the Statute-books, he would cause legislation to be enacted by this House which would be, word for word and letter for letter, that in force in the United States. That is the kind of legislation our country demands, and we should be extremely careful not to give the country any half-measures, but something that will be effective. The Bill, as amended, places the whole power of putting it into force in the hands of the Attorney General, and to my mind this gives one man too much power. It is another of the cases to which we have had to refer during the past few days of one-man power, which seems to be a kind of legislation popular with hon. gentlemen opposite. They have given to one man the power of saying what the tariff of the country shall be, and now they propose giving another man the power to say when a certain law shall come into operation or decide whether any punishment shall be meted out under it. I think that is a dangerous power to entrust to any one person. The inconvenience referred to by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Quinn) of having to travel to the capital in order to secure the consent of the Attorney General to put the law into operation is one that would be felt very much. I think the power is more than should be confided to one person. The Minister of

Mr. QUINN.

Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) said, that this might be used as a political engine. Well, that is one of the things I fear, and it is one of the reasons why I would oppose this power being vested in the Attorney General. That the Alien Labour Bill has been used as a political engine, is a matter that we have the fullest evidence of. I had occasion during the last session of Parliament to give this House an illustration of the manner in which the American Bill was used as a political engine, and I then read a letter sent to a gentleman who wanted to come from Buffalo to vote for me, and who was prohibited from doing so by reason of the threat of the American officer. The letter is as follows:—

Buffalo, June 20th, 1896.

My Dear Sir,—I have received a list of names of parties who work in this state and are about going to Canada to vote in the coming Dominion elections; your name appears on the list.

Now, I would advise you to remain where you are, as steps will be taken to prohibit you returning to New York State, should you go to Canada and cast your vote at this election.

Yours very sincerely,

(Sgd.) J. DeBARRY.

Now, if during the last general elections in the Dominion, a man on the outside like Mr. DeBarry, was willing to use his influence on behalf of the Liberal party in this country, to prevent Conservatives who came over to vote, from returning; if that was the case then, is it not a dangerous thing now to place in the hands of one of the present Government, the power to say whether our Alien Labour Bill shall be put in force or not. That would be an instance where such a Bill could be made use of as a political engine. I for one do not feel that we are doing justice to the demands of the labouring people of this country, when we insert a clause which to my mind has the effect, very largely, of destroying the Bill. I am in favour of an Alien Labour Bill. I will vote for almost anything the Government would be willing to give us, in order to carry out the promise made to my constituents to support legislation of this kind, but I hope the Government will do nothing that will cripple the Bill or destroy its usefulness. I want a Bill that will be effective. We feel in our part of the country to-day, that American citizens are coming over, displacing Canadian citizens, doing work that ought to be done by Canadians, and we want this Bill passed in such a way that it will be worth something. I trust, that before the Bill receives the assent of this House, everything will be eliminated from it that tends in any way to destroy its usefulness.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to say a word or two in order to show how in my opinion section 3 of this Bill will apply. Section 3 provides the penalty that may be inflicted for the infraction of clause 1, and clause 1 reads as follows:—

1. From and after the passing of this Act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership or corporation, in any manner whatsoever to prepay the transportation, or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or immigration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners into Canada, under any contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or immigration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labour or service of any kind in Canada.

Let me give to the House a case that may happen. There is a large contractor, or some large corporation, employing a great number of men; they are squeezing these men in their wages to such a limit that the men cannot stand it, and this corporation, or this contractor, may say: Take that wage or leave. The men have to leave, and that contractor brings over from the United States a shipload of Italians to take their place. If some person on behalf of these Canadian workmen approaches the Attorney General, and says: I want to prosecute that corporation for having imported foreigners to take the places of our Canadian workmen, the Attorney General may reply, or if he does not reply he may act on the principle of saying: Oh, that corporation contributed funds to help to run our elections; they are our supporters, and I will not put the law in motion as regards them. Under such circumstances how could this law be enforced? In the United States, the United States itself or any individual is authorized to institute the prosecution.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Evidently you do not want the Bill yourself.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do want the Bill, and I want it on the lines promised by the premier. I want the whole Bill. I want it to be a copy of the American Bill which is workable, but I do not want it to be made a machine to bolster up the present Government in whom I have no confidence. I think it ought to be in this country, that when the Prime Minister pledges his word to the House and to the people of Canada, his word shall be respected and carried out, and that his promise should be crystallized into legislation this session as he said it would be.

Mr. CRAIG. No one in this House can say, that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) does not want this Bill, because he has been trying to get it passed for a number of years, and in fact he has been the mover in it when a great many members of the House, myself among the number, were entirely opposed to a law of this nature. There is no doubt that at the present time this Bill is asked for by a great many of the people of this country; notably by Canadian workmen and men employed by large corporations. They have asked for it because they find that a great many Americans have been imported into this country, and because Canadians going into the United States have been sent back without much ceremony, and without much chance of saying anything in their own defence. There is no doubt, therefore, that there is a strong feeling in favour of this Bill all over the country. For my part, I regret, and I am sure we all regret, that there is any necessity for such a law. I regret the cause of this Bill, which cause is the action of the United States Government and the people of the United States in this matter. I regret very much that the neighbouring republic, which in many ways is a great nation, is in this matter a very small nation, and I am in hopes that after a while the people of the United States may see their folly in this respect, and may repeal their law. If this Government can induce the United States to repeal the law, I would give them great credit, and I hope they will continue their efforts in that direction. While we may regret the necessity for our having to pass a law of this kind, yet there is no use in our having such a law at all unless it is an effective law. I am not sufficiently posted in legal matters to give an opinion as to whether this Bill, as introduced originally or as amended by the committee, is the more effective. However, I agree with what the Minister (Mr. Davies) has said, that this is different from a great many laws. It assumes international importance, and we do not want any Canadians to take such action as might stir up angry feelings in the United States. The people of that republic are not quite as patient as we are, but we must remember after all that Providence has placed us alongside of them, and we have to get on with them as best we can. We may think that in some things they do not treat us very well, but we have to put up with it, and do what we consider best for ourselves. While we feel constrained to pass a Bill of this kind, at the same time we must be careful of the manner in which it is to be carried out. Now, I am willing in this matter—I am not willing in every matter—to trust the Government. I am willing in this matter to place the responsibility on them. The objection is raised, that if we leave this matter to the Government, and if the Attorney General is to be made responsible for taking action, then perhaps action will not be taken. Sir, I will place that responsibility on the Government. I say to the workmen all over this country: I supported this measure, and they say: Why did you leave it in that way so that action cannot be taken without the consent of the Attorney General, without he is the mover in this matter? I will say: The Government wished to have it that way, and I am satisfied to place the responsibility on the Government of taking action in this matter, and if you are not satisfied, you can blame the Government and not me. I want to have this Bill effective, and I think it will be more effective this way than to leave it as it is in the American Bill. I am willing to take them at their word, and let them take the responsibility of enforcing this measure, and of giving satisfaction in this matter to the labouring men of this country.

Mr. QUINN. If this were a matter in which the members of the House were simply suiting their own convenience, it would be very easy for us to leave the responsibility on the shoulders of the Government. But we are dealing now with a Bill which affects a class which must be protected, and which ought to be protected in this House. I think under the circumstances, when it is shown so conclusively, I believe, that it is very difficult to work the Bill as it stands at the present time, we ought at least to have the assurance of the Government that the wording of this Bill is not altogether a sham, and that it is the intention of the Government to appoint a representative of the Attorney General of Canada in the different cities or towns for the purposes of that Act as soon as this Bill becomes law. Otherwise I think the provisions will be a perfect sham, because I think the Bill will be utterly unworkable, and impossible ever to be carried into effect. It would be impossible to collect from anybody, in the name of Her Majesty's Attorney General for Canada, any penalty under the Act as it stands. I think it is only fair that the Government should give us some assurance that there will be appointed in the different important towns and cities in the country, some representative or some person duly authorized for the purposes of the Act, immediately after it is passed.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUILDING AND LOAN SOCIETIES.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton) moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 12) further to amend the law respecting Building Societies and Loan and Savings Companies carrying on business in the province of Ontario, be now taken into consideration and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Will my hon. friend state the exact nature of this amendment?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Simply leaving out the words in the title of the Bill "carrying on business in the province of Ontario," and making it apply to the whole Dominion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is to make it general instead of provincial?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Yes.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. CRAIG.

SAFETY OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES AND PASSENGERS.

The House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 2) further to secure the safety of railway employees and passengers.—(Mr. Casey.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CASEY. This is the Bill that was put on the Orders this afternoon by special order of the House, and is, therefore, written, but not printed, on the Order paper. The House will remember that when this Bill obtained its second reading, I asked that it be referred to a special committee instead of to the Committee on Railways and Canals. That Select Committee has since been sitting on the Bill, and on the Bill of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), which was referred along with it; has had a large number of sittings, and heard a great deal of evidence. It has heard the evidence of railway employees and of railway employers, and the counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway, Judge Clark, and has had laid before it a vast deal of outside evidence, railway statistics and quotations from the legislation of other countries. After a long consideration, which was protracted to suit the convenience, sometimes of witnesses, sometimes of the railway counsel, we only this morning succeeded in coming to a conclusion to report these Bills with certain amendments.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think any person who looks at this Bill will see the impossibility of this committee undertaking to deal with it unless it is reprinted. It is simply Hebrew characters so far as it looks at present. Any person who looks at it, will see at once that it is all written over.

Mr. CASEY. It looks a little bad, but if the clauses are read individually, the difference is very clearly seen, and I think the committee will have no difficulty in understanding either the original clause or the amendments made to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This Bill must be reprinted.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is no denying the position taken by the leader of the Opposition, and we must have the Bill reprinted before us. My hon. friend has given great attention to the subject, and so has the Railway Committee. I was not aware that it was coming up to-night, and it was not on the Order paper.

Mr. CASEY. Before the acting leader of the House decides this matter, I should like to press this point. This is to all appearances the last occasion, unless the Government relax their grip on the remaining days of the session, on which this Bill can be considered. If the committee will hear the clauses read, they will find the matter a much more simple one than it appears from the manner in which the amendments have been written in. This subject has engaged the attention of the House for two sessions. It is one which concerns the interest of many thousands of the best class of our population, it has been demanded year after year by the railway men, and it is a Bill which is only following British legislation. Mr. Asquith, in 1893, proposed the Employers' Liability Bill, which goes further than the present one, and Sir Matthew White Ridley has got through the committee stage a Bill which goes a great deal further than this Bill. I have the means of showing this from the reports of the London "Times" of May 4th. I should not feel inclined to press this Bill in its unprinted form except for the fact that this is possibly the last chance that will be afforded me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think you may get another opportunity.

Mr. CASEY. If the acting leader of the Government will hold out any hope that there will be another opportunity offered, I have nothing more to say to-night. I would urge on him, however, that this is an important Bill, that it is one demanded by a large and important class of the people, that it is one which has engaged the attention of the Railway Committee and select committee, including a legal gentleman, one of practical railway knowledge, and a number of members who possess at least common intelligence. This special committee has elaborated the Bill now under consideration, after hearing all the facts and arguments. There is no doubt great force in the argument urged already that this is the third session in which we have had no legislation. This is a case in which legislation is demanded, and I am anxious to have the Bill passed this session.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman has only to glance around the Chamber to see that the House is exceedingly thin from various causes, and certainly this Bill is one that should be considered in a full House, and after reasonable notice. The reason I object to proceeding is that in common with the vastly greater number of hon. gentlemen present, I am in utter ignorance to what these amendments are, and it is not possible to give them due consideration on hearing them read from the Chair. A member must have a Bill before him for some days in order to consider it properly. My hon. friend has given great attention to the subject, his mind is full of it and his judgment ripened; but our minds are not so full of it and our judgment is not ripened, and I desire an opportunity to have our judgment matured and made more mellow. I cannot make any promise in regard to this Bill, but I will consider the matter, and I now ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. I should like this Bill to be considered in a full House. Considering the promise of consideration given by the acting leader, I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it the intention to have the Bill reprinted?

Mr. CASEY. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. It will be well to do so, because between this and another session we will have time to consider it.

Committee rose and reported progress.

INTEREST.

Mr. QUINN moved second reading of Bill (No. 15) to amend the Act respecting interest.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Will the hon. gentleman explain the Bill?

Mr. QUINN. I understand there is a Bill introduced in the Senate covering this subject—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For that reason I ask the hon. gentleman to allow the Bill to stand. The Government Bill will come down in due course.

Mr. QUINN. Then the whole subject will be considered when the Government Bill comes down, for I do not think the Government Bill covers the point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Let the Order stand.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. McMULLEN moved second reading of Bill (No. 47) in further amendment of the General Inspection Act. He said: This is a Bill for the purpose of amending the General Inspection Act. I have already stated to the House the object of this measure. The cheese industry in Canada is an exceedingly important one, and during the last year or two very serious disputes have arisen between buyers and sellers. There are certain boards throughout the province of Ontario where manufacturers or their representatives meet buyers. At those boards the principal cheese factories are represented by persons for the purpose of selling the cheese they have manufactured. A large number of buyers usually attend for the purpose of making offers for whatever is on the market; each buyer has his own inspector, and he buys the cheese subject to inspection. The seller asks a certain price, and eventually he and the buyer come to terms, and the cheese is sold subject to inspection. In the course of a month the buyer sends around his inspector, and after looking over the cheese he declines to pronounce it of that quality he anticipated, and will not take it. In several cases in western Ontario that has been done during the last two or three years, and cheese factories have been submitted to serious loss in consequence. Between the time that the Board meets and the inspector of the buyer comes round to take the cheese, he may if he likes take advantage of that peculiar provision in the bargain which says: "The cheese is bought subject to inspection," and he may say that it is not up to standard, and decline to close the bargain at the original price. He may perhaps offer a lower price, and the result is that the seller may be forced to sell the cheese at a reduction of half a cent a pound, or he may hold his cheese in the hope of getting a better price. During the last season, in cases where the price fell from the time the bargain was made until the inspector came to inspect the cheese, I know that such a thing has happened, and I know of a factory which lost as much as $500 on one transaction. The result is, that the patrons of the cheese factories are getting exceedingly suspicious that they are being taken advantage of. Whenever the market goes up there is no complaint, but when the market recedes it is said that the inspector finds fault and tells the seller: You must come down in price because your cheese is not so good as I anticipated. It is desirable, Sir, to restore confidence. I am not prepared to say that the buyers all take advantage of the parties who have sold cheese, but the general impression is that they do, and the patrons of these factories are disposed to withdraw their patronage. In one or two cases which I personally know of, the factories are closed simply because the patrons are under the impression that advantage is taken of them and that they do not get the full value of their cheese. Every member in this House will admit, that the cheese industry is an exceedingly important one, and if any legislation will secure to the makers of cheese that measure of justice and equity to which they are entitled, I am sure this House will be willing to pass it. I believe that the result of the passage of this Bill will be to do away with disputes, because then the buyers will be afraid to grade cheese below the proper standard. They will hesitate to run the risk of the Government inspector being called in, for if his decision is against the buyer, that buyer will be looked upon with suspicion. I have no doubt that in some cases the makers of cheese have been responsible for the difficulties that have arisen. All that is asked for by this Bill is, to secure that which is absolutely necessary to keep the cheese industry on a solid and permanent basis. I admit that in some sections of the Dominion the Bill has not been asked for, but as I have already stated, I attended a meeting in western Ontario at which the representatives of 57 cheese factories unanimously passed a resolution demanding legislation of this kind. The difficulty is overcome to some extent in the province of Quebec, and in those districts of eastern Ontario which sell their cheese in Montreal. Although there is an inspector in Montreal under the Government, he is not clothed with all the power which this Bill gives the inspector. His decision is not declared to be final, but nevertheless I understand that the decision of the Montreal inspector has generally been accepted and consequently in Quebec and in eastern Ontario, the cheese makers have a certain measure of relief, but in western Ontario they have none. It is said by some cheese buyers, that each section has a board of arbitration to settle disputes of this kind. That may be true, but it takes two or three weeks to get this board of arbitration into working order, and it does not pay the cheese factory to wait so long for a settlement. There should be some person to decide immediately any question with regard to the quality of the cheese. I contend that an arbitrator of the kind provided for in the Bill is the proper person to act in such cases. It is said, that the patrons of cheese factories give their cows vegetable food which should not be given under the circumstances, but I may say that the factory to which I have referred, and which last year lost $554 in one sale, issued a circular to each one of its patrons, which circular distinctly outlined what food should be given to the cows while they were supplying milk to the cheese factory, and made other provisions. That factory also passed a by-law to the effect that any person known to violate the rules should be fined $10. They put forth every effort to keep the milk pure, and to insure that cleanliness and care should be exercised in every way. Every effort is made, but after all, in this one factory, as I said last year, they lost the amount of money I have stated by the refusal of the buyer to take the cheese. I therefore move that this Bill be now read a second time.

Mr. MACLAREN. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take up the time of the House at any great length; but as I happen to have grown up with the cheese industry of Canada, having been connected with it for twenty-eight years, I think I should say a few words upon this Bill. In the first place, as a cheese maker, a cheese buyer and a cheese seller, I do not think there is any necessity for a Bill of this kind at all; and after I read the evidence which I hold in my hands from the different cheese boards, I think the House will be convinced that there is no necessity for a cheese inspector appointed by the Dominion Government. When this Bill was first printed, I sent copies of it to the different cheese boards in Canada—London, Ingersoll, Woodstock, Listowel and Brockville; and in every case they voted against it, with the exception of four men at Listowel. At the first meeting of the London Cheese Association held a few weeks ago, at which twenty-seven salesmen and six buyers were present, after the election of officers, this Bill came up for consideration. This is a clipping from one of the London papers:

Mr. J. S. Pearce, at the request of A. F. MacLaren, M.P. for North Perth, and president of the Western Ontario Dairymen's Association, brought up the matter of the McMullen Bill, an amendment to the general Inspection Act relative to the appointment of a Government inspector of cheese, which passed its second reading on April 23.

Of course that was a mistake as it had not passed its second reading.

Mr. Pearce said the Bill in its present form was not practical. There was no recognized Government standard of cheese, and until there was, a Government inspector, so far as Ontario was concerned, was of no use whatever. If the Government graded cheese by standards, the same as wheat, it would be a different thing.

Mr. Scott, a salesman of Sparta, wanted to know how disputes between buyer and seller had been settled in the past.

He was informed, that when differences arose, the buyer appointed one arbitrator, the seller a second, and these two a third, and whenever these boards of arbitration had officiated, they had given the greatest of satisfaction.

Mr. Decker, also a salesman of Delaware, was strongly opposed to the Bill.

D. McMullen, of Evelyn, said he had never known buyers to reject cheese that was all right. The London board had a standard of cheese for its own use, and the makers knew what that was, and they were prepared to stand by it. "We want," he said, "to make cheese that will suit the English trade, and be hampered by as few restrictions as possible. Some Tories have been trying to make capital out of my opposition to the Bill, because I am a red-hot Grit; but it doesn't make any difference to me. I am opposed to anything that will hurt the cheese trade, and I think this Cheese Bill will."

The following resolution was then carried unanimously:—"Resolved, that this meeting does not approve of the McMullen Bill respecting the appointment of a Government inspector of cheese."

The resolution was carried unanimously, there being twenty-seven salesmen and six buyers at the meeting. At the Ingersoll meeting, which took place on the 12th of May, this Bill was also discussed, there being something like thirty salesmen and five or six buyers present; and they also voted unanimously against the Bill. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) represents that riding and no doubt has a copy of the resolution that was passed at that meeting. At Brockville:

Mr. Derbyshire spoke with reference to that provision of the McMullen Bill relating to inspection, putting himself on record as opposed thereto for the reason that it was not practical, and also because in the person of Inspector Publow the factorymen on this board already had an arbiter.

Remarks in the same strain were made by Messrs. J. H. Singleton and R. G. Murphy, after which the following resolution was placed before the board:—

"Moved by D. Derbyshire, seconded by J. H. Singleton, and resolved, that the Dairymen's Board of Trade, having seen the Bill introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. McMullen, 'An Act in further amendment of the 'General Inspection Act,' considers it unnecessary, as this Board has such an officer in Mr. Publow, one of our instructors, who is competent, and conveniently located for settling any disputes that may arise in regard to quality. We would respectfully recommend that each Dairymen's Board of Trade in the Dominion manage its own affairs in regard to any disputes that may arise between buyers and sellers of butter or cheese."

The resolution was carried unanimously.

I also sent copies of this Bill to a great many of the cheese makers throughout western Canada. Here is a telegram from Mr. George E. Goodhand, who was one of the most active speakers at the meeting to which my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) refers. I think the meeting was held at Harriston. Mr. Goodhand, who is a cheese maker and salesman, wired me to this effect:

Milverton, Ont., May 5th, 1897.

A. F. MacLaren, M.P., Ottawa.

Trade generally considers McMullen's legislation re inspection between buyer and seller unnecessary. All cheese board trades in western Ontario have already made provision for this in appointing their own arbitrators. We wish no interference.

(Sgd.) G. E. GOODHAND.

I have also a telegram from Mr. John W. Cooke, a buyer at Ingersoll, and one of the largest cheese buyers in western Ontario:

Ingersoll, Ont., May 5th, 1897.

A. F. MacLaren, M.P., Ottawa.

All buyers to whom I have mentioned Mr. McMullen's Bill, are opposed to it and consider it unnecessary legislation. You are aware that the various cheese boards provide for arbitration in the event of disputes, which should be sufficient between buyer and seller. In the event of the Bill passing, in my opinion, buyers will decline to buy upon any other basis than subject to their own inspection, and, therefore, the Bill will serve no purpose, unless the Government are prepared to supply the inspector with the necessary funds to pay for the cheese he inspects, and finds a market for him in which to place them.

(Sgd.) JNO. W. COOKE.

In other words, this gentleman means that he will not buy any cheese subject to the Dominion Government inspection; he will himself inspect the cheese he buys, or will not buy at all. At the annual meeting of the Listowel Dairymen's Board of Trade, held on the 27th day of May, it was moved by M. Crowley, Kinkora, seconded by S. Bennet, Newry, who are both salesmen in two of the best factories in the Listowel section, close to my hon. friend's own riding, as follows :—

That, in the opinion of this association, the appointment of a cheese inspector by the Government, as proposed in the Bill now before the House, is wholly unnecessary, and that this association desires to express itself against the principle of the Bill, and that a copy hereof be forwarded to the mover of the Bill and to Mr. MacLaren and to Mr. Sutherland.

After discussion the motion was carried on a vote of 15 for to 4 against.

Now, all of these five boards of trade were unanimously opposed to this Bill, with the exception of the board at Listowel, and of that board only four members voted in favor of it. It must be evident therefore that this Bill is totally unnecessary. I have another telegram here from the Ingersoll Packing Company, a very large packing firm who do a very large business in cheese. They say :

Re the Cheese Inspection Bill. We think the Government are acting unwisely, if they entertain this Bill, as we do not hear of any one who wants it, outside of a few factories in the neighbourhood of Harriston. We fancy, if there were some legislation passed to prohibit farmers feeding turnips, &c., it would be far more beneficial to the cheese industry on both sides of the Atlantic. If you wiseacres could legislate the farmers into taking proper care of their milking utensils, return no whey in milk-cans, allow their cows only pure feed and water, then to regard cleanliness next to godliness, your time would be much better spent in the interest of this fair Dominion than in tinkering up something to settle disputes after the cheese are spoiled. The Britishers want cheese, and will laugh at our legislators when they have to accept cheese because some fortunate Government officials, clothed in authority, says they are all right. We fear, when claims come back from the other side, and we are asked to settle it, it will not be sufficient when we reply : The Government inspector says they are finest cheese. We don't think the good old Grit Government are so anxious to court trouble as to pass any such legislation.

INGERSOLL PACKING COMPANY.

As far as my experience goes, and I have been for over twenty years inspecting and buying and selling cheese, I do not think there is any trade under the canopy of heaven which is conducted in a more honourable and straightforward way. The business is all done by word of mouth. Very seldom is there a signed contract or any money paid in advance. I have made contracts for millions and millions of dollars' worth of cheese myself without a stroke of the pen having passed or a dollar of money having been paid, and I never had any trouble. But although our farmers all over have continually been strongly advised not to give improper food to their cows, they did last year feed them very largely with turnips, apples, rape and rye. In the section north of Stratford, there must have been $25,000 less taken for cheese last fall than would have been had some of the farmers not given these improper foods to their cows, and that is where the whole mischief originated. In the town of Harriston, which has a factory, the Hon. Thomas Ballantyne & Sons, bought September and October cheese at 10½ cents per pound. The September cheese, which was fine cheese, was shipped, and the contract price paid without any demur, but the October cheese, which was left in the factory to be cured, was found, when inspected, to have developed a very bad turnip flavour, and the buyer refused to take it unless at a reduction in the price. At the same time, he gave the sellers the privilege of placing the cheese on the markets and selling it to the highest bidder. Of course, the factory was bound to lose money by this transaction, but whose was the fault? Was it the fault of the people who fed their cows with improper food or of the buyers who bought first-class cheese and got instead inferior quality? These people besides had the privilege of going to the board at Listowel and having an arbitrator appointed by that board who would act with the arbitrator appointed by the buyer and a third arbitrator appointed by the other two, and in this way have the dispute settled. I have often arbitrated and never had any trouble whatever in settling disputes. As a matter of fact, disputes seldom do arise, and in this case none would have arisen had it not been for the improper feeding of the cows. I can therefore see no necessity at all for an appointment of this kind, and that is evident by the fact alone that only four people in the whole western country have voted for it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I have taken considerable interest in this Bill, and in the facts which its mover has laid before the House. In accord with what the hon. member for Perth (Mr. MacLaren) has said, I have also received a number of representations concerning the subject matter of this Bill and a good many telegrams and resolutions similar to those which the hon. gentleman put before the House have been sent to me as Minister of Agriculture. I fully concur in the representations of the condition of affairs which has been presented by the hon. mover of the Bill, so far as the history of this trade is concerned. I am aware that in the province of Quebec and in eastern Ontario there was a good deal of this thing going on in years past. That is to say, buyers would buy cheese at a certain price, and after the cheese was shipped to them in Montreal, make cuts upon that price in consequence of the cheese not being, as they said, of the quality they had expected. These difficulties arose to such an extent in that part of Canada, whose trade centres in Montreal, the greater number of factories now insist upon selling their cheese delivered and accepted at the factory or railway station whence it is shipped to Montreal. In my own section of the eastern townships this practice has almost entirely obtained, and the result has been that difficulties of this kind no longer exist. The cheese has to be accepted by the buyer before shipment, which prevents the buyer from making any cuts. The hon. mover of the Bill referred to the appointment of the Government inspector in Montreal as removing these difficulties. I may say that while there is a Government inspector in the city of Montreal, he has no authority either by instructions from the department or by law, to intervene as an arbitrator or exercise any such authority as this Bill proposes to give the inspector. That gentleman was engaged by the Department of Agriculture before I came into office, for the purpose of inspecting and looking after cheese which is exported in cold storage, and to see that, under the law requiring American cheese passing through Canada to be stamped, such cheese is so stamped before it is exported. He does not undertake to inspect the cheese for quality at all, and any reference of disputes between buyers and sellers which may come before him, are simply made by virtue of an understanding or agreement between the buyers and sellers to accept his judgment as a referee, and not by reason of any authority given him by the Government or by statute. Still, I do think that his position there and the acknowledged fact that he is a good judge of cheese has lent a certain authority to his decisions, which has prevented further litigation in many instances, the parties concerned having preferred to leave their disputes with him to going before the court and incurring expenses and delay.

The condition of affairs in western Ontario is somewhat different. As a general rule, the cheese is sold there on cheese boards, often without the buyer seeing it at all, though in the majority of instances, I believe the buyers see it before it is put up. Where the latter practice obtains, there can be no dispute, because the buyer knows just what he is bidding on, and he bids according to his judgment of the cheese which he or his agent has actually seen or tested. I consider that that is a real safeguard in the business, and that anything which would tend to the buyer seeing and judging his cheese before he buys it would largely remove all difficulties. If that were the regular practice, there would be no necessity for further interference.

To come to the matter of this Bill itself, I can quite understand that, under the practice in western Ontario, where the buyer does not inspect the cheese some differences of opinion and difficulties may arise. These cheese boards recognize that there is opportunity for differences of opinion and have made arrangements for boards of arbitration, and I understand that these boards of arbitration are in existence in connection with every cheese board in the province of Ontario. The board of arbitration is a perfect tribunal. But there may be difficulty, in consequence of some little clumsiness or delay in the operation, and that would naturally be considered as a reason for the appointment of an inspector as proposed. But there are difficulties in connection with the carrying out of this Bill, which, for myself, I cannot quite see the way to overcome. It seems to me that if this Bill were to pass at once the Government would be obliged to appoint an inspector for practically every cheese board in the province of Ontario, and I must tell this House and the hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill that I do not know where the Department of Agriculture could, at the present moment lay their hands upon competent officials to carry out the idea of this Bill. Almost everybody who is competent to take such a position as is provided for under this Bill is to-day actively engaged in the cheese trade either as a buyer or as a seller, and, therefore, would be out of the question for appointment. And we could hardly afford—and the Bill does not provide—such sufficient payment as would justify such men as would naturally be appointed to this position in leaving their present business and accept such positions. But that difficulty, might, and would no doubt, in time, be overcome. The question as between the buyers and sellers is one of considerable consequence; and I confess I feel a great deal of sympathy with the patrons of the cheese factories generally in the difficulty they have in getting a fair price for their cheese. I do not wish to accuse the buyers of cheese in the country of taking advantage of their position in this matter. I think they conduct their business in a reasonable way as the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren) has said. Where they make these cuts in the price of cheese, there is no doubt that, in most instances, there is something wrong in the cheese itself, and they are justified in the cut. At the time there is no doubt the patrons would be benefited, and it would be a better thing for the trade at large if there were some prompt and easily reached referee to whom such disputes could be quickly and efficaciously referred. I can see, therefore, that if some arrangements such as this Bill intimates could be carried out satisfactorily, it might help the cheese trade rather than hinder it. This is a matter that requires to be discussed. I would suggest that the Bill be read a second time, on the understanding that we do not commit ourselves or the House to it, for I think it is important that this question should be brought up at the great dairy conventions of the country where all branches of the dairy business are represented, and thoroughly threshed out. This would be the means of bringing before

hon. members information with regard to this subject that could hardly be gained otherwise. I would suggest that the Bill be read the second time on the understanding I speak of, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce or the Committee on Agriculture for consideration and report.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It seems to me that the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) if carried out would commit us to the principle of the Bill, while his speech has been directly opposed to the principle. I understand the hon. Minister to be perfectly satisfied with the mode in which the trade has been carried on, and, unless we are able to reject the mass of testimony which has been laid before us by the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren), we cannot but acknowledge that the opinions of buyer, seller and manufacturer of cheese all over the country are opposed to the Bill. Under the circumstances, it appears to me, the House is hardly warranted in passing the second reading of the Bill, which pledges the House to the principle of the measure. To do so would be to put the House in an inconsistent position, particularly in the case of a Bill which comes before us practically without any support whatever.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think that in our legislation we should seek to interfere as little as possible with the business of the country. Listening to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) I thought he had made out a fairly good case for the Bill. But after hearing the hon. member for North Perth, who is a thoroughly practical man and has had a long experience in this business, I cannot but admit that the case for the Bill is not so strong after all. If we pass the second reading we shall commit the House to the principle of the Bill, and the effect of this will be to create uneasiness among those dealing in the article, as they would not know what their position would be. According to the evidence which has been laid before us, the business has gone along very well and no interest has especially suffered. I am opposed to adopting a principle that this House is not really prepared to carry out, more particularly as the effect would be to disturb an important trade in the country to no good purpose.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). There is no doubt that the question which my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) has raised is one of great importance and interest. At the same time he can hardly expect, under the circumstances, that this Bill can possibly pass the House in the present state of public business. It is very important, as my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) suggested, that this matter should be thoroughly considered by the dairy parliaments which meet at various times throughout the year; and I think, as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has had his Bill before the House and has stated his views, it would meet his wishes, and, I think, would ensure a full discussion of the question if he would allow this debate to be adjourned. Considering, also, how scanty the House is to-night, my hon. friend will hardly proceed to pledge the House to a recognition of the principle involved. I move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. CRAIG. I am very sorry this Bill has not been entirely defeated. I have one or two objections to it which I think should lead to its being defeated instead of being dropped. I know the Government are very anxious not to antagonize the Bill of the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and I do not blame them at all. I have no doubt that he has given this matter some consideration. I think this Bill is objectionable for one reason, because it is a coercive measure. On the face of it it looks as if it was optional; it says every party "may," and the word "may" would lead a person to think that it was optional. But I think it makes it coercive, and the seller has an opportunity of forcing the buyer to submit to the decision of an inspector appointed by the Government. The buyer would have no option at all, and the result would be, as I am informed, that buyers would not buy cheese at all if they were subject to a decision of this kind. A buyer would be entirely at the mercy of the seller, because on every occasion that the buyer objected to take the cheese, then the seller might ask to have the matter submitted to this cheese inspector, and the buyer would be compelled to submit to his decision, and we are told his decision would be final. But it would be merely his opinion, and buyers are not going to do business in that way. He buys cheese as first class cheese and then, if that cheese comes to him as not first class, he says, I won't take that cheese, but the seller says, you must submit the matter to this inspector, and if he says it is first class, you must take it. I consider that would have an injurious effect on the country. I object to this measure because it is not asked for except by a very few people. It has not been asked for by parties who deal in cheese, nor by cheese associations. I suppose the debate being adjourned means that the Bill is killed for this session, but I think instead of adjourning this debate, the Bill should be defeated. I think it is vicious in principle, and instead of doing good to the cheese industry, the tendency would be to deteriorate the quality of the cheese, because it would have the effect of making men more careless. They feel now that if they want the cheese to be accepted, it must be of first class quality, because it is practically subjected to the inspection of the buyer. He buys first class cheese and he is going to get it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not objecting to the adjournment of the debate, but I feel called upon to refer to the objection made by the cheese board, or that section of the Board of Trade in my county, against this Bill. They have passed a resolution unanimously against it, both in North and South Oxford, and the county of Oxford was one of the first counties that went into the manufacture of cheese on a large scale, and still continues to produce perhaps as much cheese, or as good a class of cheese, as any other county in the Dominion of Canada. The meetings of these cheese boards, composed. I may say, by a large majority of the representatives of the different factories throughout the county, have forwarded the resolutions to me asking me to oppose this Bill. I must say, also that we have had no particular complaints with regard to the way that the business is being conducted. In addition to that, it is only right for me to mention because I have been requested to do so, that cheese boards in other parts of Ontario have done the same; especially the Listowel Board of Trade forwarded me a copy of a resolution passed at the meeting stating their objections, and that they had voted almost unanimously against this legislation. These boards are composed by a majority of the representatives of the factories, representing the Patrons, the farmers and the people who sell their milk to the factories to produce cheese. Therefore, it is unfair to say that these meetings are controlled by the buyers, though they may have a certain amount of influence at these meetings as being members of the same board, but they would be in a small minority. I know in the north riding of Oxford the buyers would be in a small minority at any meetings held representative of the cheese industry. I dare say it would be the same in regard to all those cheese boards, and as they have unanimously requested that this legislation should not pass, I think the Government ought to pay some attention to their request. If there was a difference of opinion with the buyers on one hand and the sellers on the other, or those representing the production of cheese, then it might be worth the consideration of the Minister of Agriculture. However, whether this Bill is referred to a committee or not, there is no doubt that the subject, now having been brought up in the House, it will be brought to the attention of the dairymen at all their meetings throughout the Dominion, and if there is any desire for legislation, we will hear from them. But at the present time the cheese boards in the county that I have the honour to represent, are unanimously opposed to any legislation of this description. Personally, unless there was some such demand, I would be opposed to the principle of the Bill. I think we ought to be very careful in interfering by legislation with matters of trade and commerce. These matters generally regulate themselves. Any one acquainted with the cheese industry knows that a class of cheese that would suit one buyer for the market for which he is buying would not suit another buyer at all. It must be a matter of bargain and sale, and of agreement between the producer of the cheese and the buyer, as to what price the former shall receive. I simply take this opportunity of making these remarks, and of communicating to the House the fact that the cheese industries in my county are unanimously opposed to this legislation.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can assure the House that I have no desire whatever to injure the cheese industry in this country. In introducing this Bill I was prompted by a desire to encourage and foster that industry. The meeting that was held at Harriston, represented fifty-seven factories, and some of the parties present came as far as 100 miles. Circulars had been issued by the secretary, and I was invited to attend that meeting. The discussion was kept up all the afternoon, and in the evening they came to a unanimous decision that unless something of this kind was done, the cheese industry in that section of the country was going to suffer seriously. As representative of a riding that has a number of factories, I felt it my duty to say that I would press upon the Government the consideration of this question, and that if they did not take it up, I myself would introduce a Bill for the purpose of testing the sense of the House with regard to the legislation. I have carried out my promise to the constituency and to those cheese factories that were represented. Now, the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren) says that a large number of cheese factories are opposed to this. I can easily understand the buyers so influencing these meetings that they might secure a resolution against it. I have a letter in my possession from a party who attended the meeting in Listowel, where it is said all but four voted against the Bill. I have statements showing that, apart from the influence exercised by the buyers, a very large number, if not all, the cheese manufacturers, were in favour of the Bill; but that they had no desire to place themselves on record in opposition to the expressed wish of the buyers, they had no serious difficulty with them. Now that may be the case in many other places. Of course, I know the buyers are very strongly opposed to this Bill. My hon. friend is opposed to it, and I am not charging him with doing anything that is wrong. I do not know any man in Western Ontario that has a better reputation as a cheese buyer. Still, after all, there are buyers I have no doubt, taking advantage of the position they hold, who reject the cheese they have purchased, if the price in the meantime has receded, and saying, your cheese is not up to what I expected, and I decline to take it except at a reduced price. I know there are good grounds for suspecting that this has been done. My hon. friend shakes his head. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman considers that buyers are all reliable men. Permit me to state what occurred in one case. The inspector for the buyer came along; he inspected the cheese and said it was not up to the standard. The reason he gave was that the cows had been fed too much on turnips, and he said the buyer would not take the cheese. After the inspector had left the factory, he stated to a person, who is prepared to prove the accuracy of this statement, that the reason why the cheese was not up to the standard was the maker had neglected his duty; that it was not on account of excessive feeding of turnips, but because the party employed to manufacture the cheese had neglected his duty and therefore loss had occurred. The reason he put it on the patrons was because they could afford to lose their percentage rather than that the poor manufacturer should be turned out of doors disgraced and not have an opportunity of making any more cheese. The hon. gentleman says the buyers as a rule are very honest and honourable men. I can furnish another case to show that this opinion does not always apply. A buyer in my section bought a lot of cheese, and had it branded in the factory "Bluevale." It was not the cheese of Bluevale, but he placed that name on it in order, if possible, to improve his prospect of selling it.

An hon. MEMBER. Give the name of the buyer.

Mr. McMULLEN. I state on my word of honour that this has been done. All these facts prove the necessity of some legislation being adopted, and the very fact of this Bill having been introduced this session, and the discussion that has occurred in the House will in all probability secure more careful action on the part of the buyers, and avoid further ground for pressing legislation of this kind through at another session. So far as the discussion of this Bill is concerned, I quite agree with the Minister of Agriculture that it is desirable such a Bill should be fully and amply discussed by the agricultural organizations before it becomes law. I am willing that these associations should have an opportunity this summer of discussing this Bill at length, especially in view of the bitter opposition it has met with from the other side of the House. I am perfectly willing that ample time should be given to fully discuss it. The hon. gentleman who addressed the committee a few moments ago spoke of the peculiarity of this measure. He said it would injure the cheese business rather than improve it, that the standard of cheese would be reduced rather than improved; I fail to understand how he arrived at that conclusion. He stated that an inspector would invariably be called in. He would be, in my opinion, called in only when buyers refused to take the cheese at the price at which they bought it. If he did not grade the cheese properly, the inspector would be called in. With regard to the necessity of having an inspector in every cheese district, I do not think it necessary, but I believe one inspector would be able to cover the province of Ontario, for this reason. Buyers would be very anxious to avoid the possibility of the inspector being called in. They would be very careful in regard to buying the cheese, knowing that their reputation would suffer seriously if they branded the cheese lower than should be the case and they would seek to avoid being the first parties to come under the condemnation of the Government inspector, for it would destroy their chance of subsequently selling their cheese as of the highest standard. The result would be that they would seek to avoid the necessity of calling in the Government inspector, and they would try to carry out their bargain. Whenever the inspector was called in they would seek to throw the responsibility on the manufacturer. On the other hand, I do not say that all the patrons are sufficiently careful in sending their milk to the factory. I think, perhaps, the buyers are as honest men as the sellers, or as some of the patrons who send their milk to the factory; but in order to preserve the industry which is at present suffering under this unfortunate condition of things, some legislation of this kind is necessary; otherwise there will be from time to time such disappointment among the patrons of each factory that the factories will one by one be closed, as I know to be the case in my section of country. Three have been closed there and the fourth is on the eve of closing, because the patrons do not consider they get full value for the cheese. As the leader of the House has suggested an adjournment, in order to allow a discussion of the subject during the summer by agricultural organizations, and in face of the bitter opposition shown by hon. gentlemen opposite, I am willing that the consideration of the Bill be postponed. I intend, however, next year, if the cheese manufacturers have the same complaints in respect to the manner in which they are handled by the buyers, to again bring forward this measure and press it to a further consideration of the House, until some relief is afforded to those who suffer under the unfortunate condition that has existed during the past year.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am fully in sympathy with the principle of the Bill. I do not know anything of the buyers of Ontario, but they are generally able to take care of themselves. In my section it is perfectly useless for a factory to contract for the sale of its cheese. I do not believe in legislating to interfere with buyer and seller, but I hold this Bill does not do so. It is legislating on the line that where a buyer comes to a factory and tells the salesman that he is prepared to give him so much for his cheese and enters into a contract, that contract should be carried out. The way our buyers get out of the contract is by saying that the cheese is not up to the mark. We are satisfied that the cheese is up to the standard. They refuse to accept the cheese, however, and leave it on our hands if we do not take what they offer. I am willing that in such cases any independent man may be called in to determine whether the cheese is first, second or third class. I am perfectly in accord with the hon. gentleman who has introduced the Bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. As I have been a salesman for cheese during many years, I wish to say a word. In western Ontario the different boards make rules and regulations for the settlement of all the differences between buyers and sellers, and this system is better adapted to the province than any Government measure by which there may be appointed an officer to travel over the whole of Ontario. I cannot believe that the appointment of an inspector would make the cheese-maker less careful. In regard to the cheese produced last season, no doubt hon. gentlemen are well aware that there were special conditions affecting it. We in Ontario were short of feed; there was, however a large quantity of turnips and abundance of apples, and these were fed to the cattle, and I have seen a statement that on account of feeding apples a certain factory lost from 1 cent to 1½ cents per pound in value on its cheese. We should not interfere by this Bill with the cheese industry, but we should allow the different cheese boards to appoint their arbitrators, these boards being composed more of salesmen than of buyers; in fact, there are about ten salesmen to every purchaser who attends the board. In case of dispute arising, individuals chosen from among members of the board should be appointed, who would be skilled in regard to the quality of cheese, and such an arrangement would prove more satisfactory than the appointment of any inspector by the Government. That would certainly give more satisfaction than the appointment of any Government official.

Mr. GILMOUR. I rise, Sir, to say that after a personal experience of twenty-seven years in the selling and manufacturing of cheese, I do not like the idea of legislation of this kind being passed which interferes between the buyer and seller. There are many reasons why this proposed legislation can do no good. It is altogether out of place, and it should not be attached to the Inspection Act, because although the Inspection Act deals with many articles, in no case does it provide for such an arbitration as this between the buyer and seller. I believe, further, Sir, that this legislation is unnecessary. It meddles with a business which is now conducted fairly satisfactory, and it is the experience of those engaged in the trade that as a rule the cheese buyers are willing to submit to the arbitration arranged by the different cheese boards throughout the country. Buyers are men of honour; indeed, they have to be men of honour, for the very good reason which makes all men of good sense in their own interests men of honour, namely, that they have to do what is right in order to trade at all. If they buy cheese and refuse to take it afterwards, just because the market price is decreased in the meantime, then the sellers would refuse to deal with these buyers again. I have been engaged in the business for many years, and I have seldom felt that the buyer was in the wrong. I hope that this legislation will not pass now, and if it should be introduced next session, it would require to be more elaborate and should be in a different form. Any Bill interfering between buyer and seller in this way should provide for indemnity, and there is no such provision in this Bill. I am, Sir, on these and other grounds, opposed to its passage.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 8th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DAVIN moved:

That Bill (No. 122) relating to the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company (from the Senate), be placed on the Order paper for its second reading this day.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman had better alter the resolution to read second reading to-morrow, because no private Bills will be taken up to-day.

Mr. DAVIN. I accept your suggestion.
Mr. Speaker.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

CATARACT POWER COMPANY OF HAMILTON.

Mr. MacPHERSON moved :

That that portion of the 49th Rule which limits the time for the introduction of Private Bills, be suspended respecting the Cataract Power Company of Hamilton (Limited), in accordance with the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, as contained in their Fourteenth Report, presented this day.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I would say to my hon. friend that this practice could hardly be pursued. The practice is an objectionable one, a very objectionable one, that these measures, some of which are of very great importance, should be brought in at the extreme end of the session. While I would suppose my hon. friends have grave reasons for their action in the present instance, I hope they will not repeat this course, if this motion goes through.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This Bill was considered at the last meeting of the committee. I promise that we will not have any more such cases during the present session.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I thought my hon. friend was going to say that this was a very little baby.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No, this is a very important Bill.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacPHERSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 124) respecting the Cataract Power Company of Hamilton (Limited).

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I trust there will be no objection to give this Bill a second reading so that it can be referred to committee. If objection is made to this, it may be impossible to pass the Bill this session.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The House has already suspended the Orders with reference to this Bill, and I hope that no objection will be raised to the Bill being placed in a position to be referred to committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. The technical difficulty has arisen, that the order has been passed for the second reading of the Bill to-morrow. I presume that the unanimous consent of the House that order could be rescinded.

Mr. MacPHERSON moved :

That the Order for the second reading on to-morrow of Bill (No. 124) respecting the Cataract

Mr. SPEAKER.

Power Company of Hamilton (Limited) be now rescinded.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is read a second time to-morrow, would it not have sufficient time to get before the committee ?

Mr. LANDERKIN. These Bills have to hang up for seven days after passing the House before they can reach committee. I believe we have shortened that time to four days, but if we put the second reading off until to-morrow it will not likely reach the committee stage this session. This Bill is imperatively asked for by a large body of the people of Hamilton, and if there is no objection to it in principle, it might be read a second time now and referred to the committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 123) respecting Forged or unauthorized Endorsements of Bills (from the Senate).—(Sir Richard Cartwright.)

CONTROLLERS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 125) to repeal 50-51 Victoria, chap. 11, Statutes of Canada, and to make new provisions in lieu thereof.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Explain.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. At present there are twelve Ministers of the Crown and two Controllers. By this Bill, the office of Controller of Customs and the office of Controller of Inland Revenue will be abolished. This Bill will revive the offices of Minister of Inland Revenue and Minister of Customs, without increase of salary to these Ministers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What about the Minister of Trade and Commerce ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The office of Minister of Trade and Commerce remains as at present.

Mr. DAVIN. The House did not hear what the Solicitor General said. Do we understand that the Department of Trade and Commerce remains as at present ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will not this lead to some confusion ? I may say at once, that I am entirely in favour of the Controllers of Customs and Inland Revenue occupying the position of Ministers. I do not know any persons connected with the Government, whom it is more important to have in the Cabinet than the holders of these important offices, and especially so in consideration of the resolution we have passed under which important duties devolve upon the Controller of Customs. It is absolutely necessary that he should be in a position to explain to his colleagues personally, in the clearest possible manner—in a much more clear manner than he has been good enough to explain to the House—the reasons for his action under the resolution I have referred to. Will not anomaly exist, if the Controllers are made Ministers, and if the machinery of the measure is not altered, which placed them in a subordinate position to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. leader of the Opposition has referred to the fact that under the existing statute the position the Controllers occupy is that of practically dealing with the members of Council through the Minister of Trade and Commerce. That anomaly will be removed by this Bill. I think I may also point out to the leader of the Opposition that the leader of the last Government had given Cabinet rank, practically, to the Controller of Inland Revenue, which was, to some extent, an anomaly. The intention is to remove these anomalies.

Mr. DAVIN. Is the salary to be the same?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This Bill does not make provision as to salary.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member will remember that the Prime Minister wrote to the Minister of Customs, as I suppose I must now call him, telling him that he would get Cabinet rank and the same salary as a full Minister.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman must know that the Prime Minister at present is at sea.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE VOTERS' LISTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 126) respecting the Voters' Lists of 1897. He said: This Bill practically re-enacts 58 and 59 Victoria, chapter 12, and its object is to dispense with the revision of the voters' lists for this year.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FISHERIES ACT—SAW-DUST IN STREAMS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 127) further to amend the Fisheries Act. He said: The purport of this Bill is to postpone for one year the operation of the law which punishes the dumping of saw-dust into streams. The Act which was passed a year or two ago provided that on and after the 1st day of July, 1897, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should not have the power to make any regulations exempting any streams from the operations of the Fisheries Act. If that law remains without amendment, on and after the 1st of July next, all the mills on the Ottawa River and the Chaudière Falls will be liable to prosecution, not having arranged their machinery to provide for the consumption of saw-dust other than by throwing it into the stream. The mill-owners have been petitioning the Government for further time. After a very great deal of consideration, and it having been brought to the attention of the Government that it was not possible for at least one of these mill-owners to get his mill in such a condition as would enable him to dispose of the saw-dust in any other way than he has been accustomed to heretofore, the Government consented to introduce a Bill enlarging the Act so as to give another year for that purpose, at the end of which time it is to be hoped that not only this mill-owner but all the others will have taken measures to consume their saw-dust in some other way than by throwing it into the stream.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the law enforced in other parts of Canada?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no change made by the Bill, except the substitution of 1898 for 1897.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—MORNING SITTINGS.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved:

That after Tuesday, the 8th June, there shall be two distinct sittings of the House on each sitting day until the end of the session, one from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m., and the other from 3 p.m. until the hour of adjournment, and Government Orders shall have precedence at each such sitting after questions put by members, an hour being reserved for Private Bills on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, from 7.30 to 8.30 p.m.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask my hon. friend when the motion is to come into operation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It will come into operation tomorrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I am afraid it will not have the effect which is intended. I am heartily with the object of this motion; but no person knows better than the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that a very important committee, the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, is a small parliament of itself, and that there are a few very important Bills that require to be immediately dealt with by that committee; and, as that committee is called to meet at ten or half-past ten to-morrow, I think it would facilitate business to exempt to-morrow, in order that that committee may complete its work.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will accept my hon. friend's suggestion, and, with the leave of the House, I will alter the motion to read "after Wednesday" instead of "after Tuesday."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

RELEASE OF D. B. SULLIVAN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the attention of the hon. Solicitor General to an order of the House, passed on the 3rd of May last, for an address to His Excellency the Governor General for copies of all papers relating to the release of Daniel Brien Sullivan, committed to jail in Toronto on the 18th of November, 1896, including the reports of the police magistrate of the 21st and 27th of November, 1896. I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman would see that this order is complied with.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I shall attend to it.

JUBILEE CELEBRATION MEMORIAL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the hon. leader of the House to the fact that a Bill which came down from the Senate and of which the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue took charge stands for its second reading since the 5th of May, and is among the Public Bills and Orders. Unless it be put among Government Orders, there is no probability that this Bill, which provides for the commemoration of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria by making her birthday a perpetual holiday, will be again reached.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I shall look after that and call it to the attention of Council.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Iron or steel scrap, wrought, being waste or refuse, including punchings, cuttings or clippings of iron or steel plates or sheets, having been in actual use; crop ends of tin-plate bars, or of blooms, or of rails, the same not having been in actual use, $1 per ton.

Nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel fit only to be remanufactured in rolling mills.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The subject that is introduced by this resolution is one of the very greatest importance, and apparently one which has given the Government considerable trouble. The changes between the resolutions as they are now in our hands, Mr. Chairman, compared with the resolutions as first introduced, constitute perhaps the most radical of all the changes that have taken place since the Budget speech, and I regret that, from the best information I can obtain on the subject, the consideration has not been extended to this important industry, the iron and steel industry, that some others have been so fortunate to receive. A day or two ago, the representative of Lambton (Mr. Fraser) speaking on behalf of the oil interest, was able to make a statement which I would be very glad to hear from some one equally familiar with the iron and steel interests. That hon. gentleman was able to say, with regard to the oil industry, that the promises or some of the promises of the hon. leader of the Government had not altogether been lost sight of. The hon. gentleman said:

Those engaged in the oil industry were strongly of the opinion, that the tariff should be allowed to remain as it was formerly, but they felt that, in deference to the great cry which was raised against this industry, they would make as large a concession as possible to be able to exist. The present rate was, therefore, fixed by the Government, and the industry will go on and flourish, or, at all events, will develop to some extent.

All protectionists would be glad to see that expectation realized, and if the hon. gentleman spoke with knowledge, the Government have been careful to see that the policy outlined by the First Minister in 1894, when leader of the Opposition, has been carried out. Speaking of the coal oil duties, the hon. First Minister then said:

You cannot remove the protection without, to some extent, endangering a large portion of the capital of the country. Well, I admit that is always a grave issue, and a thing which has to be carefully considered. I am clear upon one thing, and that is, that such protection, such taxation as this, is unjust; but, at the same time, I am also free to say that, though the tariff in this respect has to be reformed, it has to be reformed cautiously, so as to effect the minimum of injury, and, if possible, no injury at all. I would not be the man to say, much as I deprecate the protective system, much as I believe it to be injurious to the well-being of the country—I would not be the man to say that it should be wiped out at one fell swoop.

At a very interesting time during the general election, an important correspondence took place between the First Minister and a representative of a certain industry in Canada who desired to obtain from the First Minister some assurance that the advent to power of the Reform party would not mean the ruin and wreck of Canadian industries. The leader of the Government, in this correspondence which took place between him and Mr. G. H. Bertram of the Bertram Cotton Works of Toronto, said:

I submit, also, that, apart from the community as a whole, the manufacturers have not only not to suffer, but much to gain from the substitution of a revenue tariff for the present system. A revenue tariff, being based upon the fixed charges of the country, and not, therefore, subject to fluctuations and alterations made to suit and please now one interest and now another, would establish those conditions of stability and permanency which experience has shown are essential to the security and prosperity of manufacturing interests.

And after the election was over, and when the leader of the Opposition became leader of the Government, there was considerable fear in various parts of the country concerning the first budget, and the First Minister wrote to Messrs. Dunn Bros. a letter which had wide circulation. This letter was written in July last, and in it he said :

I have your favour, for which accept my sincere thanks. I can renew you, after the fight, the assurance which I gave during the fight, that the tariff will not be inconsiderately tampered with, but that due consideration will be given to all interests. I would also like to impress upon the business community that no hasty change is to take place, and that no opportunity should be lost of developing trade in every direction during the coming season.

It is clear, therefore, that by the many promises and assurances by the Reform party, before they came into power and afterwards, those who had capital to invest were to some extent lulled into the happy certainty that this Government would deal carefully and considerately with their interests, and would not, at any rate at the start, do anything that would prejudice those interests or work their ruin. And, as I said, the oil interest seems to have been, to a large extent, cared for. And I am glad of it, though in the part of Canada from which I come a large amount of political capital was made by the Reformers from one end of the province to the other by denouncing as outrageous, by denouncing in the most extreme language, that duty, and by claiming that among the many delightful things that would happen when the Reformers came into power would be the removal of this onerous, objectionable and unpopular duty altogether. However, I never supposed that that part of the programme would be fully carried out. I was, therefore, very glad, bearing in mind the assurances to which I have referred, when, a little over a month ago, the Finance Minister, who knows the importance of the interest to which I propose to refer, having heard those who represent that interest, having heard the captains of labour, having heard the workers themselves, having brought these men face to face with his colleagues, and having given the subject a great deal of careful study, came down to the House with a resolution on the 22nd April which left the steel and iron interests in a position where they had some hope at any rate of being able to exist and make a good fight for their existence, as those concerned in the oil interest now feel in regard to it. But I regret, I regret extremely, that in so short a time the Finance Minister has been forced to give up the fight on behalf of the iron and steel interests. I regret that he has so surrendered, and that he has not been able to secure even that measure of justice for the iron and steel interests that he has been ready to concede to the oil interests and others in the western part of Canada. The hon. gentleman himself is in no pleasant position. He said in his Budget speech that the reductions in the iron duty were heavy or extensive—I forget the exact word. Then he must be not altogether comfortable when he has to come now in so short a time with so very great reduction still further to the injury and detriment of that important interest. Some hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches said not long ago that this tariff was a tariff of compromise. So far as this feature of it is concerned, it seems to me more like a tariff of surrender, and I am sorry that in the surrender of some interests, the great interests in the part of Canada from which I come have been almost totally given up. Even the protection temporarily held out for coal is explained to be a matter of very short duration, or, at any rate, not a matter depending upon what the people of this country think, or believe, or want, but on the action of a neighbouring country. The hon. gentleman, I believe, still holds to the opinion he so often, so strongly expressed in his own province—his aim is to make the article of coal altogether free. Now, in discussing the iron and steel interests, as I propose to do shortly, I refer, and necessarily refer, to the sister interest of coal, because, in striking iron and steel, so far as they are represented in the province of Nova Scotia, the hon. gentleman is striking at the coal interest at the same time, and striking it a very heavy blow indeed. The hon. gentleman, as I say, represents a tariff that cannot be described accurately as a free trade tariff, as a revenue tariff or as a protectionist tariff. There are some free traders among hon. gentlemen opposite who are pleased that there is free trade in articles that do not immediately concern their pockets, so far as the manufacture is concerned; and there are protectionists there who are pleased because the interest in which they are directly interested has been more highly protected. For instance, an hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost), representing the agricultural implement interest finds that protection is left to his industry, and he is happy. There are behind the leader of the Government free traders, protectionists and revenue tariff men. A regular hotch-potch tariff has gained their support, and their party feeling will, no doubt, enable this tariff to be finally put into effect. But the unfairness, and the striking feature of the tariff, is that protection has been extended to some favoured interests according, largely, to the strength in population of the country in which they are particularly concerned. This contrasts strongly with the sacrifice of interest in other parts of the country which have not been able to find in the Reform ranks, in the Cabinet or out of it, such strong friends to protect them. There are some manufacturers who are illogical enough to claim coal, iron and steel at certain stages as the raw materials of manufacture because they wish to use them in that way. I do not attempt to go so deeply into the question as to expose fully the absurdity of that argument so far as it applies to any particular article the production of which a great amount of labour and a great amount of capital are required. In connection with the mining of coal, the working of pig iron and steel in the ingot stage, hon. gentlemen are aware that the expenditure for labour, as well as the initial expenditure for plant and machinery is enormous by reason of the expensive machinery required. The production of these articles represents in labour, as compared with the whole cost, about 80 per cent. These are points particularly interesting to the labourers of the country, and they show that these articles are in every sense as much entitled to a measure of protection as any other articles to be found in the tariff list. These are articles that every country that has desired to become or has become a great manufacturing nation, has given the largest possible measure of protection. No iron interest or steel interest in any country on the face of the earth has been able to get on its feet and become one of the established industries without extraordinary protection being extended to it. These are general facts and not altogether unimportant when considering the resolutions now before us. In the incongruous arrangement before us we find the Government adopting a phase of the protectionist policy that was denounced by their friends all over the country, the bounty system. If there was anything more widely and more generally used against the Conservative party than another in the last campaign and previously, it was the argument, addressed to the agricultural portion of the community—attempting to stir up their jealousy—asking them to consider whether it was right or reasonable that bounties should be given to these iron kings and iron monopolists to assist them in making money, and no bounty given to the farmers to assist them in tilling the soil and in the development of agriculture. That argument is familiar to all of us. And the Reform press of my province teemed with these arguments to such an extent that they even denounced Sir Oliver Mowat for having adopted the most obnoxious phase of the protectionist system, when he proposed to give, and did finally by legislation give, $1 a ton in addition to the Dominion bounty for iron made in the province of Ontario.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Yet we see to-day this Government, that pretends to look kindly upon free trade principles, this Government which, in this particular case, is absolutely wrecking interests created by a protectionist policy, coming down and, in connection with these very items, increasing the bounty. On the other hand, what do they do? They ask you to give a larger bounty than we gave, they ask you to double or treble the old bounty. On the other hand they lower, and make so low the duty on the finished article as to render very doubtful the success of the scheme. From what I have heard, many of those interested in the business are almost hopeless of being able, in connection with the manufacture of steel and iron, to do much more than earn the bounty, and there would not be much satisfaction in that. What they want to do is to sell in this country the products of their industry, and to do that, the bounty proposed is inadequate. The hon. gentleman's position was more reasonable when the resolutions were first introduced, because then the hon. gentleman was able to claim, as I think he did, at any rate his friends claimed for him, that he had taken great care of the iron and steel interests, especially of those industries concerned in the first stages of the production of iron and steel; that whereas he had largely reduced the protection in the tariff for the benefit of the trade at large, as he claimed, he had for that reduction given a corresponding amount of bounty, so that in the long run the position of the industry would be left secure. If that position is right, how does the hon. gentleman explain now, having any regard for those interests, the extraordinary cut that he has made in the protection on these items of the tariff, while leaving the amount of bounty at the old figure? To be consistent even with himself, to exhibit the fairness that he was disposed, apparently, to exhibit under the first resolution, the hon. gentleman is in every sense bound to come down to this House and ask for an increased bounty for the iron and steel interests, or he should in fairness confess that he has been beaten in his fight which I hope and believe that he endeavoured to make in Council, and beaten so hopelessly that he is utterly unable to protect these interests from his more ungenerous colleagues. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the importance of this steel industry and of the manufacture of iron, is fully appreciated. The Minister of Trade and Commerce not long ago had a most contemptible idea of this industry. I recollect him, if I may say so, sneering at those interests when I spoke in this Chamber touching their importance. Since his visit, however, to Nova Scotia, which I believe he made not long ago with the Controller of Inland Revenue and the Minister of Finance, I trust that hon. gentleman's misapprehension has been entirely removed, and that he is now aware that under the National Policy, not altogether as satisfactory in regard to iron and steel as it would have been had the Conservatives been able to live a little longer, and to have applied their experience in the direction of the protection which was enjoyed since 1887, these interests have become so important as to have more than a provincial standing. Take, for instance, the steel works at New Glasgow. I find that in 1896, their last best year, they used, outside of the materials purchased, excepting coal, iron, and ore, materials the cash value of which amounted to $345,500. They paid out in wages in that one year $277,500; and there were paid out in that one industry no less than $480,000 in wages to supply that one interest in 1896 with coal and ore. Then take the furnaces at New Glasgow, take the furnaces at Radnor, and the furnaces at Hamilton—the Hamilton furnaces only started recently—and I find that they produced in that year 61,839 tons of pig iron, and that represented an increasing output up to that year. Now, let me put before the Controller the language of the labouring men, the men who get the great percentage of the cash that is involved in the turning over of these articles of iron and of steel in our own country. As to the importance of one industry—and I take it because it happens to be in the county that I have the honour to represent and the one of which I am most familiar—in the petition which was brought to the notice of the tariff commission, they say, as workmen :

The steel works, with which we are connected, were started in 1882. In 1884, there were 130 hands employed; this number gradually increased, till in 1896 it reached 450 at the steel works, not counting the mines and blast furnace. There are 40 earning over $3 per day; 80 over $2; 110 over $1.50; 220 over $1. The average wage for 1896 was $1.51 per day.

Of the 450 working in Trenton, 180 live there; on these about 90 per cent, or 700 of the people of Trenton depend, the total population being about 900. Number of houses, stores, &c., 174, valued at $120,000; yet much of the trade of these 180 goes to New Glasgow, where 250 of the men live. The prosperity of this town, with its 5,000 population, depends largely on the steel works. Twenty-one of the men live in Stellarton. Of the 180 who live in Trenton, 70 own houses, valued at $50,000. Of the 250 in New Glasgow, 86 own houses, valued at $130,000. All the men, with the exception of two, are Nova Scotians, most of whom are now trained in the iron business and know no other. If deprived of work here, they would have to go to the States or some other iron-producing country.

These are the facts vouched for by the men, and familiar to all who know anything of that locality. Now take the language of another petition from the labourers of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, addressed to the present Finance Minister. This appeal, I regret to believe, has been almost wholly ignored and disregarded. In their petition they say :

That the greatest portion of our labour and our interests lies in the production of these raw materials, and that any radical changes in the tariff in these, and not in other products of this country, would be a serious discrimination against our interests, very hurtful to us, and apt to deprive us of our means of earning a living, and to cause us great hardship;

That the tariff laws be so framed as to protect us, who form the commercial, labouring and agricultural interests of our various sections, by giving a uniform rate of customs duty to all products, according to the amount of labour expended upon them by us and others.

That is an important point, and one which the labour element had a right to deal with and to emphasize, and it is a point which, I am sure, was pressed home on the tariff commission, that is, that the true test in scheduling the duties in connection with iron and steel is to consider the amount of labour involved to produce the article at the different stages and to grade the protection accordingly. But, according to this tariff, as I have already hinted, and as I shall show in a moment or two by referring to the items, the Government have gone out of their way, and while professing to give the article in the first stages of both steel and iron protection in the form of a bounty, they open the door and destroy the professed benefit by reducing the protection largely on articles in a more or less finished stage, and consequently neutralizing, or almost destroying the benefit which, on the face of it, one would suppose was afforded to the articles themselves. So the labourers point that out and underline it in their petition, and they go on to say :

That the operation of the Londonderry Iron Ores plant to its full capacity,—

That is another important iron industry in the province of Nova Scotia, wholly different from the one to which I have called attention, and it is situated in the county of Colchester.

—which includes ore mines, coal mines, railroads, blast furnaces, coke ovens, puddling furnaces, bar and sheet-iron mills, cast-iron pipe shops, general foundry and machine shops, and many minor interests, means direct employment to from seven or eight hundred men, which means a population of from 3,500 to 4,000 people, and an average distribution of about $1,000 per day; that these employees and their families support a large number of people dealing in trade, the professions, agricultural products, boarding, &c.; that, further, the Iron Company uses about 130,000 tons of coal, ore, limestone and other materials per annum, and that in the mining of this coal, ore, limestone, &c., about 350 men are employed, which means a population of about 1,800 persons at mining towns other than Londonderry, which population, in turn, supports its proportion of people engaged in trade, &c.; that the business of the Iron Company involves an annual expenditure of about $100,000 per annum in freights, &c., on the Intercolonial Railway and other roads for such coal, ore, limestone, &c., as well as for the resultant pig iron, puddled bar, cast-iron pipe, castings and machinery, which freighting means employment for a large number of additional men, and the distribution of their proportion of money to storekeepers, &c., and also increasing the earning capacity of the Government's road to this extent; in all, it is probable that not less than 5,000 persons are affected, more or less directly, by anything that will cause a total or partial stoppage of the iron plant at Londonderry; and we pray the hon. Ministers and our representatives may not lose sight of this when they are urged to reduce duties on raw material by those parties who make more finished products, but whose very same finished products are, after all, only the raw materials of others buying them from them.

For instance, no single argument is used with more force than this by those who desire protection, and it is just, and it is in dealing with this that a protectionist Government finds its greatest difficulty. It might as well be claimed that the cloth which the ready-made clothing manufacturer uses is a raw material. As regards that special manufacturer it is his raw material, but he has no more right to expect that to be considered raw material than to expect his product to be deemed raw material. So, in this connection, as I shall show later on, it is an important consideration, and it is one on which I hope hon. members from my own province, regardless of politics and party, will take a firm stand, and will make the stand which the Finance Minister was prepared to make at the outset, but from which he retreated, and that is to show opposition to selfish interests which should not be considered by a free trade Government, because those interests are demanding and securing protection, and very generous protection, on many articles and in many respects, and endeavour to protect the interests of the province of Nova Scotia particularly, which are receiving anything but the same measure of justice. With a protectionist Government, these difficulties to some extent exist. They can be fairly met. They were, on the whole, largely met, not by sacrificing one interest at the demand of another, but by increasing all the duties; and the complaint of the manufacturers of implements was that there was a reduction made on other raw materials without a corresponding reduction in the material out of which they made the finished article. I believe that contention is a sound one. The only way of treating those interests, while there is an element of protection running through these resolutions, is not to sacrifice one interest for another or one interest that is strong for one that is stronger, but to give protection in such proportion as to secure them all a certain amount of protection, according to the amount of labour required in the production of the manufactured article in each case. I have referred to the petitions, and the committee has been most patient in permitting me to read pretty fully from them, because they were the general demand and outspoken request of representatives of labour in those districts in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. In order to give an idea of some of the difficulties those industries have to meet—and the Finance Minister is familiar with the fact, because he has the information under his hand—I may say that the New Glasgow Steel Works had to keep on hand a stock of 630 different sizes and shapes of steel bars, ingots, plates, and other materials. These are difficulties, of course, with which similar industries have had to contend at the outset, and especially in any country not very largely settled with population as the Dominion is at present. Let me refer to these reductions in order to show how extensive they have been, and within what a short time they have occurred. I have referred to the statement of the Finance Minister made on April 22nd on the resolutions he first brought down, when he said:

It has already been stated that we are making very material reductions in the duties on iron.

His argument was: while I have made these very large reductions, I have given you an increased bounty and remodelled, practically, in regard to steel, the tariff so much more in your favour; and, as the resolution at that time stated, not much complaint was made, and, at all events, no serious complaint could have been made, except with further experience on the part of those interested. Those large reductions took place on 22nd April. On 25th May, these further reductions I observe. One dollar is proposed to be the duty under the tariff item, iron or steel scrap. On that item there was a duty of $1.50 in the tariff as submitted on 22nd of April. In item 219, iron or steel ingots, cogged ingots, or other forms less finished than iron or steel bars but more advanced than pig iron, except castings, &c., are now $2 per ton, whereas on the 22nd of April they were put down at $4 per ton. In item 221 of the tariff, rolled iron or steel angles, &c., it was considered on the 22nd of April that in fairness to these interests the rate charged should be 15 per cent, but under this proposed resolution there is a further reduction to 10 per cent. So with other items, there is a further reduction from 15 to 10 per cent since the 22nd of April. Fifteen per cent was the duty proposed on the 22nd of April by this Government, on item 229, steel in bars, &c., after careful study, after discussing this subject pro and con, and after obtaining information upon it in open meeting, but on the 25th of May there was a further reduction to 5 per cent proposed. I regret to say there are many more items in the tariff showing this state of things. There was a large reduction on the 22nd of April in regard to the protection on iron, but there was an increased bounty to compensate for it. However, on the 25th of May, we are face to face with still further and radical reductions, and there is no suggestion from the Government that there is to be any corresponding increase in the bounties on iron and steel to compensate both the labourer and the capitalist for this heavy raid that is to be made upon them. We must assume, of course, that there is no further proposal from the Government in connection with these resolutions as regards iron and steel. If there is to be any change, the Government should at once take the House into its confidence and state what it is to be. The Minister of Finance says that I am right in assuming that there will be no change.

Some may think that in connection with the reduction of one-eighth for the first year and one-fourth in the second year in favour of England, that even if we lose somewhat in Canada or in the provinces down by the sea, after all there would be a gain to those manufacturers in the west who get this material cheap, and who are to enjoy for some time a very fair amount of protection. It might be assumed that the reduction in favour of England in the Jubilee year, while it took the bread out of the mouth of Canadians in Nova Scotia, would give it to English labourers, and that at any rate the work would be done under the flag. It might also be assumed, that it would be a benefit to the shipping trade, and that ships would bring this pig iron and these ingots into our ports, and thus a profitable trade would be created between England and Canada. If any one labours under that idea it is an entire delusion. The labour that is wiped out in the maritime provinces will not go to England, but to the United States of America. Every man in the business knows that, and I am sure the Minister of Finance has been notified of the fact, because he has political friends who are experts in this business, and who have been able to keep him well advised in the matter. Under this tariff, it is convict labour that will largely take the place of the honest work of our own Canadian labourers. No matter whether there is a clause in the tariff dealing with that subject or not, it is impossible to keep it out, and therefore the convict labour of the south, and the labour of the United States are to be benefited by the proposed changes. I shall quote to the House an authority to prove this, because after all, on such a technical question my views can only be formed on the information furnished by those interested, and on the authorities to which they have referred me. I submit, Sir, that these reductions in the tariff, threaten our home industries and favour the industries of the United States and favour United States labour as against British labour. Those who were before the tariff commission called the attention of the commissioners to an article published by a high authority in England, and I have two or three articles of the same character in my possession which I think ought be placed before the Government, and before the House, in considering this important proposition. "The Engineering Review and Metal Worker" under date November 20th, 1896, states as follows:—

Some of the daily newspapers have recently been congratulating British manufacturers on the evident desire of the Canadian Government to release Canada from the protectionist shackles which Sir John Macdonald imposed eighteen years ago: and speak of a complete revision of the tariff as imminent. It does not, however, follow that any amount of revision will greatly help some of our leading industries, and it is assuredly doubtful whether the iron or steel industries of this country would be greatly assisted if the tariff duties were entirely abolished. This may seem a bold statement to make, but it is a true one, all the same. Canada imports from 240,000 to 250,000 tons of iron and steel annually, and manufactures about 50,000 tons more. The time was when the mother country supplied the whole of the import, but that time has gone, and nowadays Canada takes a larger value of iron and steel imports from the United States than from Great Britain. It is to be presumed that the home supply would continue the same, and the imports from the United States would be quite as large if the tariff were cut right off, but certainly, no impending change in the tariff is likely to benefit the mother country, as against our rival on the Canadian frontier.

I have referred, Sir, to the statement of the labourers themselves, whose views on this subject are not to be lost sight of, they are men who know the ins and outs of the trade, know exactly what iron costs and what labour is paid for in the production of it, and in the petition to which I have referred they called the attention of the tariff commissioners to the fact, that it is to the United States they themselves will have to go if the protection of this industry were interfered with, and not to England, and not under our own flag could they hope to be employed. I wish to refer to a high Canadian authority on this subject. Mr. George E. Drummond, in a paper prepared by him, gives us valuable information, and I shall refer to it on this point: as to what country is to be benefited, and what labour is to be benefited by the proposed tariff changes. In a paper published on the iron question, for the purposes of this very revision, he says:

American and Canadian iron was sold at fully $4 per ton below these figures, so that the Scotch ironmasters were quite unable to compete. The home trade was the salvation of the British iron-producers in 1896. Large ship-building orders and the prospect of large Government contracts for warships served to stimulate matters considerably during the year, but while the general tone remained favourable at the close of the year, constantly increasing shipments of American pig iron and products thereof to the English market, and the ever-decreasing export trade in iron from the British market itself, form a combination of circumstances that are not promising.

Again, in the same publication—and I only refer to the remarks pointedly bearing on this phase of the subject—he says:

History attests that Great Britain gave seventy-three years' efficient protection (from 1787 to 1860) to her iron industry. The trade returns of to-day show that, not only has the British ironmaster been driven out of the Canadian and other foreign markets, but the protected iron-makers of the United States and Germany are successfully invading the English market itself, the facts raising a very grave question as to whether Great Britain did not make a serious error when she abandoned the principle of protection.

Again, this writer, who is an expert on the subject, says :

A reference to Canadian Government statistics, say from 1885 to 1895, or to the same figures given in the "Canadian Mining Iron and Steel Manual" for 1896, page 321, &c., will demonstrate the fact that the iron-producers of the United States are rapidly driving the ironmasters of Great Britain out of the Canadian market. As a matter of fact, British iron is now but rarely used in the iron foundries of Ontario, the largest consuming market in the Dominion. Take the figures on pig-iron :

In 1885, we imported from Great Britain 34,773 net tons, and from the United States, 7,389 net tons.

Within ten years it will be found that these figures are completely reversed.

In the fiscal year 1895-96, we imported from Great Britain 6,525 net tons, and from the United States, 32,597 net tons, and the same progress is going steadily on in almost all other manufactures of iron and steel. Where formerly we used British steel boiler plates, structural iron for steel, &c., &c., we now use American. The only possible rival now and hereafter to the American producers of iron and steel will be our own native furnaces and mills, and it is for the people of Canada to consider which is best, in the general interests of our country, to sustain and encourage.

Quotations on British pig iron for delivery in Ontario towns run fully $2 to $3 per ton over those of equal quality of American make.

There are, however, other authorities which no one will dispute, whatever may be thought of our own Canadian experts. The "Iron Age," published in New York, which is familiar to all in the trade and is accepted by all as a most reliable authority, has a reference in its issue of May 6th to this tariff; and as it puts the case more briefly than I can possibly put the same facts, and makes more conspicuous the contrast which I have endeavoured to bring out, I will quote it; and from the examination which I have been able to make, I think that its statement will be found to be correct. Referring to the Canadian tariff, it says :

Of all the changes made in the general tariff, the most sweeping were those made in the duties on iron and steel and manufactures thereof. Large slices were taken off most of the old duties, and some of the most important articles, of mining machinery and (next year) barbed wire, were put on the free list. What foreign country will receive most, if not all, the advantage of this? Clearly the United States. It is true, Britain gets her goods in at a rate of duty now 12½ per cent, and next year 25 per cent less than the general rate, but nobody supposes, the Government least of all, that she can ship iron and steel goods into this country against United States competition. Looking over the whole list of Canadian imports of iron and steel goods, we find in nearly every article that the balance is enormously in favour of the United States. Even of bar iron, of which until recently we imported altogether from the United Kingdom to supplement our own output, a larger quantity is now supplied to us from over the line than from Great Britain, our imports of bar iron in the fiscal year ending June 30 last amounting to $52,827 from Britain, and to $66,587 from the United States. Of railway engines, locomotives, and parts thereof, we imported in the same year to the value of $80,147 from the United States, and none from Great Britain. Clippings of wrought iron or steel pipe we brought from the United States to the value of $66,916; from Great Britain to the value of $1,758. Hardware from the United States amounted to $261,914; from Great Britain to $23,891. Pig iron from the United States amounted to $332,212; from Great Britain to $74,704. Of machines and machinery we import little from any source but the United States. Sewing machines to the value of $108,956 came last year from the United States, while only $4,839 worth came from Great Britain. In windmills, fanning mills, portable machines, portable steam engines, portable sawmills and planing mills, sewing machines and typewriting machines the difference is vastly in favour of the United States, while of "all other machinery composed wholly or partly of iron or steel," we imported from the United States to the value of $929,016, as against $154,014 from the United Kingdom. In structural iron the countries are now nearly equal, the United States having furnished us of the lighter angles and channels with $29,028 worth, while the value of Britain's share was $27,254; of the heavier imports from the United States amounted to $26,545, and those from Britain to $38,631. Of girders, joists, beams, &c., we got from the United States to the value of $25,662, and from Britain to the value of $36,039. Of tubes and tubing, our imports from the United States and Great Britain, respectively, were as follows:—

	U. S.	G. B.
Boiler tubes.....	$ 74,908	$38,291
Lap-welded tubing.....	39,560	.....
Rolled steel tubes, not over 1½ inch.....	68,099	29,186
Wrought iron or steel tubing over 2 inches.....	286,713	9,322
Other wrought iron or steel pipes.....	95,063	36,575

From the United States we got steel ingots to the value of $9,288; from Britain, to the value of $18,847. From the United States we got steel bars, rolled or hammered, &c., to the value of $182,141; from Great Britain, to the value of $128,518. This item is one in which the United States has crept up swiftly. In tools and implements this is how our imports from the two countries compare :

	U. S.	G. B.
Axes.....	$ 31,848	$ 59
Saws.....	79,514	3,263
Carpenters' &c., tools.....	173,882	26,803
Files and rasps.....	53,714	11,223
Picks, mattocks, &c.....	5,542	501
Tools of all descriptions.....	41,079	4,076
Track tools, crowbars, sledges	3,683	1
Unenumerated articles of iron and steel.....	562,154	104,828

Now, if any one will take the trouble to look into the authorities, whether English or American, he will not consider me rash when I say that this competition is very marked in favour of the United States and becoming more marked as the years roll by. The iron authorities in Great Britain hold out no hope that time will bring any change in favour of the mother country on the part of the United States, which has enjoyed the benefit of a protective policy. Let me read a short statement from the president of the British Iron Trade Association, which I find in "The Iron Age" of 27th May :

Between 1880 and 1886, the United States took from Great Britain close on 8,000,000 tons of iron and steel, an average of nearly 900,000 tons per year. In the history of the iron industry, this demand is the greatest that any single country has ever made. To show its enormous relative proportions, I will only add that this demand is practically as large as that made by the whole of our colonies, including India, for the same period. It is difficult for us here to realize that the American demand was in full force less than ten years ago. Conditions have completely changed. The question now is, not what quantity will the United States take from us, but what quantity is likely to come here from the States. The pig-iron makers and the steel makers both appear to be threatened. Under present conditions, it seems probable that both pig-iron and steel blooms and bars may be brought here at a profit from the United States.

I couple with that the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance with regard to the operation of freight rates and distance—all against England and in favour of the United States; and no one knows this better than these experts in the iron and steel interests of Great Britain, who are continually complaining of it. This statement of the British Iron and Trade Association shows therefore that I am warranted in saying that the effect of all this, while injurious to Canadian labour, injurious particularly to a large part of it in the province from which I come, has added to the advantage, not of Great Britain, but of the United States.

On that same subject, I have another authority also, taken from the "Iron Age" of 3rd June, in which these figures are referred to concisely :

During the last few years, a very great increase has taken place in our exports of iron and steel, and of manufactures of iron and steel. The increase has been particularly marked in the calendar years 1895, 1896. Our exports in 1895 amounted to $35,071,563, and in 1896 to $48,670,218.

Now, then, I think I have fairly made that point, and it is not an unimportant point, sustained as it is by authorities of great repute.

Then the hon. Finance Minister has included in these resolutions a provision to protect us from the competition of convict labour: "Goods manufactured or produced, wholly or in part, by prison labour," are prohibited. We all agree that they should be, but I am sure that the hon. Controller of Customs will admit that it is practically impossible to tell, when southern iron comes into the ports of Canada, whether that is the result of convict labour or not. It will be impossible, by any known means, to tell whether convicts mined the ore or were in the furnace, or assisted in making the iron or in mixing up the various products for the manufacture of iron or steel. I am sure that his experience in the department and the experience of his officers would induce him to say that he had very little hope of that provision being effective.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). It is much broader than it was.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is in terms, I believe, but the practical difficulties are obvious. I shall not dwell upon the difficulties, because the matter is one upon which we are all agreed, but in connection particularly with iron and steel and the manufactures of iron and steel, it is absolutely impossible for him and his army of officers, no matter how efficient they may be, to keep out those products into which convict labour has gone in some form or other.

But there is another difficulty from which our Canadian people should be protected, and there is no class more respectable and better conducted or who make better citizens than the iron and coal workers and miners of the country—and the hon. gentleman knows it as well as I do—and that is the difficulty of the degraded Negro labour of the south. We have coloured citizens in Canada whom we all respect, and between whom and the Negro labour of the south there is no more similarity than there is between the white men of Canada and that degraded condition of labour, but it is that class which submit to be held in the hollow of the ironmaster's hand and be dealt with on primeval principles, or on the old system of barter and truck, with which the labour element of this country is face to face; and it is by reason of the competition of that degraded class that the United States are with such rapidity forcing themselves to the front and forcing all others out of the race. The hon. gentleman's prohibitory clause does not pretend to touch that class of labour, and it is that competition that is being let loose upon Canadian and British labour to-day. I have spoken strongly of this southern labour, but here is what Mr. Meissner, a gentleman of great experience and manager of the Londonderry Iron Works, tell us, in an interesting paper submitted to the Canadian Mining Association :

The next point is the labour question, which is a serious matter in favour of the southern furnaces, and yet of such a nature that I am certain no Canadian would be willing to see it inaugurated in his own country. I have lived and worked five years with the southern coloured labour, and while it was a very satisfactory labour in one way, in another it holds the country down to a very much lower grade of civilization and progress, as a whole, than any similar amount of white labour. The Negro does not strike, he works hard when properly pressed, he is good-natured and willing as a rule, and can stand climatic conditions; but he is naturally ignorant and lazy; he will only work when watched closely, and can seldom be relied upon to do any work without slighting it. He lacks all feeling of responsibility, of morality, means well, but, like a child, cannot see the difference between right and wrong, as we view it. He is usually shiftless, seldom saves his money, yet when closely watched and in localities where there is not much other employment to be obtained by him, he will work steadily and quite faithfully; he gets about the same wages as the white labourer in the north, and if this were all, there would not be a marked difference in his labour as a cost factor against the average white labourer, but it is through his ignorance and indifference that he becomes a cheaper labourer, because through him the company store system flourishes as it is absolutely impossible to flourish with any white labour. The Negro, in most cases, is paid through the company's store. Some few will have a large portion of their pay coming to them at the end of the month, especially in town districts, but in more remote districts there is no question but that any considerable amount of cash on pay-day is a rarity. Owing to his ignorance, the temptation arises to charge him high prices, and the result is, that while our iron costs are more than those of the southern iron, yet this is largely due to this peculiar labour condition, as you can readily see, when you consider that the mining of coal, ore and limestone is almost entirely labour, and that it is just in these processes largely carried on in more remote places, that the conditions above-mentioned of inordinate store profits cause the extreme cheapness with which those articles from which iron is made, can be produced. Canadian labour is so vastly the gainer by none of these conditions existing among it, that it cannot afford to lose sight of them for a moment in any discussion of our industrial systems.

The worst feature of the southern labour conditions, however, is the contract prison labour, which is a virtual system of legalized slavery. All state prisoners are auctioned off to the highest bidder, usually a mining company, and then penned up in a camp near the mines and made to work, the company feeding and housing them, besides paying the stipulated price to the state per man. This system naturally allows of very cheap mining, for, while the men are usually treated quite fairly, yet every effort is made to get the most work out of them for the least expenditure. Now, these are considerations which cannot be wholly ignored; these are statements, too, of very serious effect, and they go to establish the point which I endeavour to present—that this cheapness of the United States iron products which is now to come in and take the place of our own Canadian product, is due to conditions which no one can prove, and is due to a rivalry that we should endeavour to prevent, and certainly a rivalry which is not fair to Canadian labour. I have referred to the statement made by the Finance Minister, and I want to remind him, in connection with this struggle, that, no doubt, did go on in the Cabinet, that he is back to the old condition of affairs apparently, and I begin to have some sympathy for him, though I never had it before. I find that, in connection with the working of the National Policy, there was no section in the country allowed to gratify its greed through the tariff. We had to fight, in various parts of the country, the Reformers who endeavoured to arouse the feelings of one section against another because some interests which were protected were not generally enjoyed, but were confined to particular districts. But those who appreciate the National Policy—and I believe that the majority of the electorate of Canada ever since 1879 and down to the present time, have been wedded to that system as a whole—were willing to make concessions for concessions between the different sections of Canada, just as, for instance, the present Government and the late Government too, were prepared to make fair concessions to foreign countries where a mutually beneficial trade arrangement could be reached. One cannot always get his own way, and, in connection with the working of the National Policy, which was for the benefit of all, it was considered that every reasonable interest in the country should have the same fair amount of protection. The great iron and coal interests, it was recognized, must be protected, for these interests must be protected if a country is to be great. The protection accorded to these interests under the National Policy was, in the end, represented by most gratifying results. But, in the old times, one of the reasons why the present Finance Minister wished to break the bonds of Canadian confederation, to take his province out of the union altogether, one of the strongest grounds, one upon which he continually dwelt, was that a tariff—and he did not signalize one party more than another—was regulated for the benefit of the western provinces. It is not so very long ago since the hon. gentleman inveighed against Canada right and left. It is not so very long since he complained that in the tariff arrangements there was discrimination against the maritime provinces. For instance, he said:

To-day, we have a high tariff, not—

And this is speaking as leader of the Nova Scotia Government in 1886——not for the benefit of the lower provinces, but largely for the benefit of the western provinces, with which we have little common interest.

And he has lived to see the day when he can make that statement with far greater weight and far greater authority than he could in 1886; for it was the custom of his party and himself to take, not so much the protectionist features of the old policy, so far as they related to the interests of our own provinces, but oil, flour and all the products of the west which, according to these hon. gentlemen, were unduly favoured and unduly protected at the cost of the consumer down by the sea. And, as I say, the hon. gentleman has lived to assist in, or at any rate, be responsible for, tariff propositions that are remarkable for the discrimination, and the intended and avowedly unjust discrimination, against important interests in the maritime provinces and in the province of Nova Scotia in particular. I refer especially to the coal and iron interests. And it is from him the support comes for the statement that this tariff is to be for the benefit, so far as benefit can be got out of it, of those interests that are so largely represented in the west. I am aware that the hon. gentleman, even later than 1886, had very little regard for even these interests, the coal and iron of Nova Scotia. Happily Nova Scotia does not represent alone the iron interests, though, fortunately for the province, that is the interest of commanding importance in the province. In 1887, in the legislature of that province, this is the advice of the present Finance Minister :

Let us cease our efforts to produce iron, and devote our energy to catching fish and digging potatoes.

There was a proposition before the House then in connection with some iron project and the hon. gentleman in that way, that slighting way, referred to an interest which has certainly been considered in every other country one of the proudest possessions of a country. The hon. gentleman has beside him one who holds that opinion, or held it until very recently, utterly ignorant of the importance of this industry. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce has again had his revenge in his wrestle with the Minister of Finance, if the Minister of Finance ever attempted to stand by his resolution of the 22nd of April, because those resolutions of the 22nd of April could not have obtained the sincere approval of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Only in 1896 that hon. gentleman referred to those interests, the interests for which I have endeavoured to say something, as "pampered exotics," and attacked them in language such as the following :—

There is not a man who deals in iron in any shape who is not grossly oppressed by the hon. gentleman's tariff. The agricultural implement men are grossly oppressed by it ; the stove men are greatly oppressed by it ; those who manufacture tubes and other ware of that kind, are grossly oppressed by it. The hon. gentleman and his friends inflict upon these classes of men a tax of 40, or 50, or 60, aye, in some cases, as high as 70 per cent upon certain portions of the raw material they use. What justice is there in that ; what reason is there in that ; what wisdom is there in that ?

Mark these words, and the spirit of a member of the present Administration, and we will see how it was that the Minister of Finance was forced from the position that he took on the 22nd of April :

But, for the sake of pampering one or two in establishments away down in Nova Scotia, these men, who employ ten hands for one that these Nova Scotia industries can employ in the iron industries, are put to extreme hardship and inconvenience.

There is exposed an avowed and most selfish spirit ; it is for the benefit of the manufacturers of the west that these interests "away down in Nova Scotia" must be sacrificed. The hon. gentleman gave expression to that spirit before he became a member of this Cabinet. To-day he is one of the strongest, if not the strongest man in that Cabinet, and he has the satisfaction, whatever there may be in it, of finding that he has been, to a great extent, successful in stamping out what he calls these pampered exotics, these interests "away down in Nova Scotia." To show that I am not unreasonable in interpreting this language to denote a selfish spirit and a sectional policy, and a sectional policy so avowed, not free trade, not revenue tariff, and not protection—because protection had a general regard for the interests all over Canada—I propose to ask the indulgence of the committee, which has already been very great, while I read some extracts from the Toronto "Globe," which fought a campaign against the iron and steel industry on the lines of the sneering remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that I have just quoted. Possibly Ontario, and those who are enjoying protection to-day, no matter how they voted, were cajoled and led into the belief that by supporting the Reformers, free trade principles would not reach their industries to a dangerous degree, but that at the cost of the interests in the smaller provinces, their relative protection would be all the greater. The Toronto "Globe," in an unmistakable manner, elaborated that campaign to a large extent, and in my own province I in vain called attention to the proposition that was before us, and to the position we would be in if a Reform Government came in, and if the present Minister of Trade and Commerce became a member of it, and if the "Globe" retained its influence. So unreasonable was it, so narrow was it, that I have no doubt the difficulties in my way were greater than I expected, because even until the 22nd of April it was difficult to get men, whether Conservatives or Liberals, to believe that any Government in Ottawa would tread down their interests, and remove even the vestige of protection from them while retaining it in a marked degree for interests in another part of the country. It was believed that whatever happened, the policy would be a general policy, and that it would not matter when an interest came before the Government of Canada what particular part of Canada that interest was situated in. But this was the style in which the people of Ontario were canvassed by the Liberal organ, and I wish to show how the Liberal organ now claims that all its promises have been, to a large extent, redeemed at the cost of Nova Scotia. In February, 1895, the Toronto "Globe" said :

The Government can do nothing, for the coal and iron duties are the linch-pin of the National Policy. Abolish them, and the whole fabric, as at present constituted, collapses.

Then, on the 5th of January, 1895, the "Globe" says :

Meanwhile, Ontario, the manufacturing province and the chief consuming province, wants cheaper iron and steel.

On the 15th of August, 1895, in the meanwhile steadily writing in the same direction, the Toronto "Globe" says :

New Glasgow is about the only place that has gone ahead, and the Dominion at large is paying a terrible price for iron and steel in order to boom it. The attempt to force coal from Sydney to Toronto and Hamilton, a distance of 1,500 miles, when coal can be got at points just across Lake Ontario, 1,200 miles nearer, has come to grief ; and the New Glasgow and Londonderry furnaces find it increasingly difficult to send pig iron all the way, the freight being nearly 50 per cent of the cost price of a ton at Pittsburg, Chicago or Tonawanda.

Later, on the 23rd of November, 1895, the "Globe" said, speaking of the old Mackenzie tariff :

The free list was a generous one, including pig iron, coal, and, generally speaking, all the chief raw material of the Ontario manufacturer. Hence this tariff was in reality more protective to some industries than the National Policy, which taxes their raw material most unmercifully.

There was language to which I particularly refer, that the articles that were manufactured into which this labour went in the province of Nova Scotia, were ranked as raw material because, forsooth, the manufacturers of Ontario required them to handle and to treat as raw material for their purposes. Mark you, Mr. Chairman, I do not grudge protection to the Ontario manufacturer, I do not complain of protecting any Canadian interest. If they are satisfied with what they have got, I rejoice ; if they fairly require more, I will vote for it, I would vote for it from this side of the House as readily as I would from the other side, I would vote for it at the hands of this Government as readily as I would at the hands of a Conservative Government. What I complain of is that that class of manufacturers support a sectional and selfish policy ; they wish to support a policy of protection so far as it protects interests which immediately concern themselves, and refuse that same measure of protection to other districts, and to other people who are concerned in other interests in other parts of the country. Before the election in 1895, the "Globe" supported such a policy so far as it could, as a leading Liberal organ, and I refer now to an issue on October 31, 1895 :

The repeal or reduction of the raw material duties will, no doubt, be one of his first acts. Something, perhaps, may be said, from a Nova Scotia standpoint, for the taxes on iron and coal, though as Nova Scotia is the only coal and iron region in the civilized world where population is at a standstill, it is clear that the experiment of building her up at the expense of Ontario is not very successful.

I think there are some people of Ontario who do a pretty thriving business in the province of Nova Scotia, and many of them would admit that the people of that province, with a population of 450,000 more or less, have built up and sustained in a large part many interests outside of the province, as well as being able at the present time to show a commercial front equal relatively to that of any other province of Canada. This paper, however, after claiming that the National Policy was carried out at the sacrifice of Ontario, goes on to say :

Notwithstanding the terrific tariff and the bounties.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, the peculiarity of the present situation is that the terrific tariff and the bounties are to be more than doubled under the Reform Government ; but I complain not, and I should like to see them heavier. They are so framed, however, that they will utterly fail, I fear, in their object, and that is to furnish a certain amount of protection that will allow them to make, for a time at least, some return.

Therefore, we are still an almost infinite way from the protectionist idea of making all our own iron and steel goods at home, while the tax that was to give Ontario coal from Cape Breton as cheap, or cheaper, than foreign, turns out to be a fine of $800,000 a year on the manufacturers of this province.

I am happy to say that so far the Finance Minister retains the duty on coal. I understand, though I was not present at the time, that on an early day in the session the hon. gentleman stated that the policy of his Government looked in the direction of making it free altogether, but that much depended on the action of Congress ; and if Congress, for instance, imposed a duty of 75 per cent, the duty on bituminous of 60 cents would be retained and the Government would consider the question of the imposition of a duty on anthracite. I hope some accident will arise by which the 60 cents will be retained, and I think the country would not suffer from a duty being imposed on anthracite, for if the Finance Minister looks up the prices of anthracite paid when there was a duty imposed on Canada and since—if my information be correct—he will find that the anthracite combination in the United States, for many years since coal came into Canada free, has regulated the price in such a way that the Canadian consumer receives no benefit whatever from the removal of the duty, and the treasury loses $400,000 or $500,000 a year revenue. I have referred to these statements of the great Liberal organ as having been made before the elections. Here is the triumphant ring of that paper after the elections had taken place. The paper said to the Ontario people : The protection afforded has helped to some extent the interests of the Dominion, we propose to give you relief in regard to the duties on the so-called raw material; we propose to break down the interests of the provinces by the sea, and we will take care of you, we will give you what you call raw material at lower rates. Accordingly, the Minister of Finance on 22nd of April—whether he made an earnest fight on the question or not I am unable to say—came down to the House and showed that among many promises made by Reformers this was one of the promises which was not to be kept. So the "Globe" was not very happy. But on the 25th of May these amended resolutions were presented. On 27th of May the "Globe" thus refers to the comparative position of affairs:

The best feature of the changes announced on Tuesday is the disposition to give encouragement to manufactures by lowering the taxes on raw material rather than by increasing the duties on the product. For instance, spring steel, spiral spring steel, spiral springs for railways, steel billets and steel axle bars for the manufacture of carriage springs and axles, are placed on the free list. Steel for toolmakers is reduced from 15 per cent to 5 per cent. Scrap iron under the old tariff was $4 per ton; under the first resolution, $1.50 per ton; it is now $1 per ton. Steel ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, puddled bars, &c., under the old tariff were $5 per ton; under the first resolution, $4 per ton; now reduced to $2 per ton. Structural iron is reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent. Bridge plates for steel-plate manufactures are reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent ad valorem. Rolled iron or steel plates, used by boilermakers, are reduced from 15 to 10 per cent ad valorem. Iron and steel are the basis of so many industries, we may say virtually of all, that we regard it as of the utmost importance that progress in this respect is steadily in the direction of reduction.

I have to express to the committee my debt of obligation for the very great courtesy they have shown to me while speaking as I have done, and it was largely out of respect to the committee and to some extent due to possessing only a superficial knowledge of the intricacies of this industry, that I referred so much to authorities, and authorities of high standing all the world over, and at considerable length. But I desire to point out to the Government, although I think it will be useless so far as averting this disastrous blow is concerned, that when they found on April 22nd difficulties in touching the iron and steel duties, they should have allowed them to remain in the tariff as they were, instead of tinkering with the tariff in that respect. They had the whole recess before them in which they could consider the subject and endeavour to deal with it, instead of coming down to the House with the proposition which they said would involve large reductions. It must be remembered that all men are more or less selfish in regard to tariff changes, and hon. gentlemen opposite frankly say that they have made radical reductions based upon no other desire than that of pleasing the largest number of people. Is it a proper principle on which legislation should be enacted that if the Government finds more people interested in industries that use certain products than are employed in the production of the raw material in its first stage, they should seek to meet their views and let the rest of the community go. I submit that there is no true principle underlying these proposed tariff changes. The Government do not profess that free trade is to be found in them; certainly no protection is found in connection with the industries involved, and my great complaint is that the changes in the tariff have been partial instead of universal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would suppose it would be deemed discourteous if I did not say a few words in reply to the hon. gentleman, although I have not the slightest intention of following him through his very lengthy and elaborate speech. I listened to him with very great attention, for which I hope he will be grateful. I find that the scrap-book of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is well known in the House, and when he gets it out it becomes a terror of the majority of members. I do not think that his speech of to-day is any departure from his reputation in that respect. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) began by stating, that there was too little protection for the iron industry in this tariff, and he had not proceeded very far before he began to complain that the Government had granted a bounty, and he appealed to the country to notice that this Government was increasing the bounty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) say, that I complained of the bounty?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman did, in the earlier part of his speech.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) did not do me that courtesy he said he did, of listening to my speech. I would like to see the bounty larger, and I said that once or twice.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The purpose of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was evidently to excite opposition against the Government, and opposition against the tariff, on the ground that it was giving an increased bounty to the iron industry. That was his purpose, unless I mistake the purport of a portion of his speech. He also professed to quote from some Liberal speaker who described a bounty as the most vicious form of protection. I think my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) will have difficulty in obtaining any competent authority to endorse that statement. So far as my opinion is worth anything, I do not hesitate to say, that I do not regard a bounty as the most vicious form of protection. On the contrary, I think it is about the most sensible and defensible form of protection, because one has the advantage of knowing exactly what he is paying, and perhaps he may be able to discover what he is getting in return for the bounty. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made a studied effort to create difficulty as between the east and the west, by representing that this tariff was made at the sacrifice of the maritime provinces. That was a proposition over which the hon. gentleman laboured. Now, if he would only induce his friends in the west to take the same view, I do not know that I would have very much to complain of, but the friends of the hon. gentleman in the west are representing that this tariff has been made in the interests of the maritime provinces, and representations are being made that the maritime members of this House have had too much influence in the moulding of the tariff. The statement is as unfair and untrue in the west as it is in the east. The tariff has been made for the purpose which the hon. gentleman himself stated at the close of his speech; a purpose which he implied was a great wrong. "Why," he said, "this Government have really prepared this tariff in the interest of pleasing the largest number of the people of Canada." These were his words. Well, Sir, I confess that that is exactly the aim of this tariff. It was our aim to please, as far as we might be able to do, the largest number of the people of this Dominion.

The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made various allusions to struggles in the Cabinet. Perhaps that is a subject upon which he is better qualified to speak than I am. Perhaps he has had a larger experience in the matter of struggles in the Cabinet than I have. I am bound to tell my hon. friend that, in the light of his own experience, I can forgive him for not being able to understand that it may be possible to carry on a Government without struggles in the Cabinet.

With regard to the particular duties affecting the iron industries of Pictou county, my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has complained of some of the duties, which in so far as they have any relation to that particular industry, are, in my opinion, really in its favour. He complained that we made the duty lower on scrap iron. If that has any effect whatever upon the iron industry in Pictou county, it is not adverse to that industry, but on the contrary, it will be to their advantage that scrap iron should be as cheap as possible. My hon. friend went on to allude to the danger that this iron tariff would encourage American iron to come into this country. Well, Sir, we regard it as of great importance to the manufacturing industries of Canada, to the general industries of Canada, that these raw materials shall be supplied to the manufacturers as cheaply as possible. That is the line upon which the tariff has been prepared. It may be that many of these iron goods will come in from the United States, although I think the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) magnifies that danger. He quoted at length, from what he regarded as authorities, to show that England is going to be destroyed in this competition with the iron industries of the United States. My hon. friend has a weakness for discovering that England is going to be easily ruined. The somewhat famous phrase which he once used in this House, must have come to the minds of many of us when to-day he was speaking about the destruction of England's iron industry in competition with the United States. It was but a repetition of that phrase wherein he said that England had been driven from the markets of the world under her system of free trade, and was compelled to force her wares upon the uncivilized countries of the world. That was the substance of what the hon. gentleman stated upon a previous occasion. Well, we have a better of opinion than he has of the ability of England to deal with her competitors in industrial matters, and while it is possible that the development of the iron industries in the United States may for the moment give rise to the impression that England will not be able to compete as fully as we expect, yet, when business interests come back to a more solid condition, and when the present depression of trade in the United States shall have passed away, we think it is reasonably probable that in the matter of the iron industry, England will be able to compete with the United States, and that under our preferential tariff we shall be able to bring even iron goods into Canada from England, as readily as from the United States. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has again gone over the whole question of protection, and free trade, and revenue tariff. I do not believe it would be profitable to follow the hon. gentleman in that, because it would be going to the foundation of the whole question which has been discussed in this House so often. The hon. gentlemen on that side of the House view it from one standpoint, and we on this side of the House view it from another. We view it not from the absolute standpoint of free trade, from the point of view of a revenue tariff, which involves the principles of free trade as far as we can adapt them to our present circumstances. We do not think it is of such vital importance to build up industries of a particular character in our country. We think it is more important to develop the industries which are closely connected with our natural resources; the industries we can carry on with profit. We think that this is better than to attempt to force industries on the country which do not seem to adapt themselves to our condition. My hon. friend has spoken of the interests of Nova Scotia being bound up with this policy of protection. Sir, if there is any part of the Dominion which has the right to complain of the result of this policy of protection, it is the province of Nova Scotia from which the hon. gentleman and I come. There was a time when no man would rise in the province of Nova Scotia and question the wisdom of what was then called free trade; a revenue tariff. We understood then that the tariff meant a tax, and we all wanted the least tariff and the least tax we could possibly have. And though many who believed in that old faith had strayed away from it, yet, I am satisfied that to-day the great mass of the people down there believe that the best policy for the progress of the maritime provinces is that policy under which they enjoyed their greatest prosperity. That was a time when they had a tariff away below the figures of the present tariff. We do not deny, we do not question that you may, by a policy of high protection, as applied towards particular industries, divert men from the ordinary occupations, and you may be able to build up here and there favoured industries, but we believe that in the end, viewing the question from the standpoint of the whole country, the general good cannot be advanced by such a policy. We can take as an illustration of that, the county which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) represents. He has spoken of coal, and he has spoken of iron, and he has in that county of Pictou both of these industries. They have had coal mines in Pictou for generations. They had successfully carried on the coal-mining business long before the days of the National Policy. They have had the benefit of protection on coal, and they have had the benefit of this protected iron industry, but what do we find? Why is it that the maritime provinces have gone backward in their competition with the sister provinces, and with the world at large? Not only do the census returns show that the whole of the maritime provinces have retrograded, and that the province of Nova Scotia has virtually gone back, but the hon. gentleman's own county, after ten years of fostering by protection, had fewer people in it when the census of 1891 was taken than it had ten years before. What are the figures? Why in the census of 1891, the county of Pictou represented by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), had 35,585 people, and if his view be correct, if it is possible by this policy of fostering a few industries, if it is possible by a policy of protection to make a place prosperous, then the county of Pictou should indeed prosper. It had all the advantages of coal protection; it had the iron industry; it had whatever advantage the hon. gentleman was able to give it in the way of patronage and in the building of railways; it lived under favoured conditions, so far as protection was concerned; and yet its population fell from 35,585 at the beginning of the ten years down to 34,541 at the close, or 1,000 less. In the face of these facts, and they are but simple facts, it is nonsense for the hon. gentleman to hold up to the people of the maritime provinces the idea that a protective policy is sound. What the people of the maritime provinces want is that we shall get back to the good old days of a low tariff, the policy which enabled us to trade with the world; and if we set our faces in the right direction, and gradually, so as not to disturb too much the established industries of the country, travel back to the principles which were recognized by the leaders of both political parties in the old days, we may hope for the maritime provinces, and particularly for Nova Scotia, a measure of prosperity which has never been enjoyed since the National Policy began.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I am rather surprised to hear the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), with such warmth re-introducing into the public discussion of this country the rather hackneyed and I think the somewhat exhausted arguments drawn from the census. It does him a wonderful degree of credit as a debater that he is able to work himself into such a heat and such apparent sincerity in dealing with what may not incorrectly be called a long-exploded humbug.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am dealing with the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman was dealing with the census figures, and he must have known that in that sense he was dealing with a long-exploded humbug. If he made that speech in the county of Pictou, where the Liberals, though extremely loyal to him in the past, would know from their daily experience that there was no solid substratum of fact "in the statement he made, he would fail to arouse them to any such enthusiasm as he appears himself to possess. These census figures have always been disputed, from the fact that the people of the county of Pictou have been compelled to increase their educational expenses, to enlarge their school-houses, to employ more teachers, and to take all those steps which are called for by an increase of population. The fact is that the county of Pictou, and indeed the maritime provinces as a whole, have prospered, and the people believe that they have prospered under the system of protection. It is true, during the election that is just past, the people of Nova Scotia, or one-half of them at least, have voted for gentlemen who support the present Government and the Finance Minister; but I have had the assurance of electors of the county of Pictou within the last three days that pledges were given by the Liberal candidates there that if they were elected they would support the National Policy, and would as far as possible prevent that system being attacked or broken down. So far from adopting such a tone as that adopted by the Finance Minister on this occasion, our principal opponent in the contest did not meet us by attacking protection or denouncing the duty on coal, but he attacked us because we had not succeeded in getting the protection on coal raised to a much higher point. It cannot have escaped the notice of the Finance Minister that Mr. Edward Macdonald, in canvassing the county—and he was the only candidate who appeared before the people in the county—claimed that we had not given to the coal industry even so much protection as the revenue tariff to which the hon. gentleman referred, and maintained that we had been derelict in our duty in not seeing that 20 per cent protection at least was given to coal, which he maintained was not done. He attacked us also because we had been supporting a party which had made anthracite coal free, thereby to a certain extent displacing from the markets of Canada the bituminous coal of the county of Pictou. During the whole of that contest, the Liberal candidates, far from adopting the same tone as the Finance Minister, went to the other extreme, and represented themselves as being thoroughly and heartily in favour of increasing the protection on coal; and I think it would have been a most amazing thing to the people of our county, if they could have been here to-day and heard the very vigorous way in which the Finance Minister attacked that position. At the close of that canvass our opponent, not satisfied with giving the electors of the county the assurance that he would support protection, produced a telegram from the Hon. Mr. Laurier, the leader of the Liberal party, and as they hoped soon to become the Premier of Canada, in which he assured the people of the county of Pictou that protection to coal would be continued, and that the interests of the coal miners of that county would be carefully guarded. In order that no evasion or mistake might exist in reference to this matter, occasion was taken by my hon. colleague (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to ask the Premier of Canada in this House precisely what he meant by the statement that the interests of the coal miners of the county of Pictou would be carefully guarded; and the Premier in his reply did everything short of confirming by an oath his previous statement, because he repeated in the strongest possible way his previous statement, merely changing the order of the terms of it. He said that in saying that those interests would be carefully guarded, he had meant that they would be guarded carefully. He went to the extreme in saying that he was honestly in favour of thoroughly supporting those interests, and I am not sure that but for that statement the gentleman who polled a very good vote in the county of Pictou would not have come within hundreds of polling the vote he got. I merely mention this to show that the Finance Minister is entirely mistaken as to the temper and opinions and hopes of the people of the county of Pictou on this question. Here is another thing to show how the friends of the hon. gentleman approached the miners when speaking in the interests of the Liberal party in that county. Here is a little circular which was issued in the county of Pictou in the local elections:

A Roorback Exploded—A Campaign Lie Nailed.

The "special despatch" issued by the Conservative party, is untrue from beginning to end. It was written by arrangement, with a view to mislead the electors. Coal is not to be free under the new tariff. But there will be a duty of 75 per cent on soft coal, and a retaliatory duty on hard coal.

Anthracite coal and coke will not be free, as it was under the late Government, but will have to pay duty under the Liberal Government.

Electors, do not be misled by false telegrams, sent out at the last moment, but stand by the men who alone to-day are able to help the coal industry.

Vote for McDonald, McGregor, and McIntosh, the true friends of the coal industry.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will my hon. friend read the other one to which reference is made?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I have not the other in my hand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought not. I see from what the hon. gentleman reads that it refers to something else. I understand that it refers to a statement which, I was informed, was circulated throughout the county of Pictou on the eve of the last election, that the Government had declared to somebody that they were going to abolish the coal duty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was said by your own leader, too.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has shown nothing of the sort.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). It was said by him at Windsor Hall and at Sohmer Park.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman did not refer to something said at Windsor Hall or Sohmer Park, but to something stated at Ottawa during the present session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Which was consistent with the statement made at Sohmer Park.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). What the friends of the hon. gentleman said was that coal was not to be free under the new tariff.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is true, but the other statement is not.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). But that there would be a duty of 75 cents on soft coal and a retaliatory duty on hard coal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That remains to be seen.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). This is what was canvassed. I do not say anything about the merits of the case, but I am merely stating, in reply to the very warm statement of the hon. Minister of Finance, the ground upon which his political associates appeal to the county of Pictou for support :

Anthracite coal will not be free, as it was under the late Government, but will have to pay a duty under the Liberal Government.

From the language the hon. gentleman has used and the warmth of his utterances, it will be very difficult for the people of Pictou to know how far in the future they may believe his political friends when they come to that county and try to make the people believe that they are in favour of protection to coal. It may be perhaps that the hon. gentleman on this occasion lost his temper and has not left this point any longer open to misunderstanding or question, because, so far as the Government of Canada is supposed to speak through his mouth, he has taken the strongest ground in favour of the policy which in the past was supposed to be the policy of the Liberal party, namely, the policy of free trade. He has advanced one or two strong arguments used by free traders, but what has the course of the Government been? Has it been consistent with the arguments used by the hon. gentleman this afternoon? He used the familiar argument of the free trader that every attempt by means of protection to develop any particular interest is a diversion in a particular direction of the general strength of the country and a dangerous and delusive system. He went on to argue that protection induced the people to bend their energies and devote their attention to work in which they cannot engage to the best advantage. But how far can we believe the hon. gentleman? If these are his sentiments, they are evidently sentiments which he can change to suit the occasion. They are certainly not the sentiments which guided the Government in the framing of the tariff, because, as has already been pointed out over and over again, no matter what may be the professions of the hon. gentleman and his friends, their tariff, taking their main schedule, is a protective tariff. It does go out of its way to protect certain industries. It is not a revenue but a protective tariff, because it provides for the strengthening and supporting of certain industries in this country, and therefore makes an exception in their favour. The most conclusive evidence of this is the fact that after the Government got through with the amended tariff, we found that that tariff was still more in the direction of protection than the tariff first brought down. The Government did not move in the direction of free trade or a revenue tariff, but they did that which I believe the interests of the country required. Judging them by the tariff they have submitted, they do not believe one word of the principles which the hon. Minister of Finance has just enunciated, but acted in the opposite direction. They moved in the direction of assisting the industries of the country. I am sure that my hon. colleague (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said distinctly, what I repeat, that he would support the Government in protecting our industries, and would vote as readily for protection coming from that side as coming from this, and so would I. I believe the Government would have acted wisely if they had not touched the old tariff at all, and refrained from entering upon the dangerous process of touching any single part of the intricate and highly organized system of protection which it had taken eighteen years to bring up to its late state of perfection. If the Government had desired to affirm the principle of free trade by their preferential clause, they might just as well have continued the old tariff and have tacked on to it their preferential clause 16, as to have submitted this new tariff with the addition of that clause. Their present tariff is almost identical with the one they found in existence when they took office. It differs in some respects, and in every one of these it is a poorer tariff than the one which the Government professed to improve. The proof of this lies in the fact that no sooner were the provisions of the tariff they first submitted made known, then gentlemen from all parts of Canada, delegations representing trade interests from every section, came to Ottawa and vigorously represented that the changes made were imperilling the existence of our national industries. What did the Government do in view of these representations? Did the hon. Finance Minister impress upon them his views regarding free trade? Did he address to them the argument he has just now submitted to the House? Did he say to them: Gentlemen, you are entirely mistaken, you are engaged in industries which are not native to Canada, which cannot be maintained successfully in Canada, give up the manufacture of carriages and steel springs and devote yourselves to agriculture in which the province of Ontario must always take the lead? Give up making carriages, springs and axles and devote yourselves to the raising of wheat, and the production of dairy products, and the feeding of cattle. Not at all. He extended to these men the protection they asked for. There are various ways in which protection can be given. It may be given by restoring the duties taken off or by increasing them if necessary. What we complain of is that to those industries in Ontario which were threatened, he gave protection, not by restoring the tariff to a point that would be really serviceable, but by giving them raw material free or nearly free; and in order to do that, he imperilled, and I fear has destroyed, the greatest industry that Canada has yet developed.

. It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Mr. BELL (Picton). When the committee rose for recess, I was referring to the manner with which the present tariff deals with Nova Scotia interests, and pointing out that, in order to assist some industries which were complaining of inadequate protection, the Government, instead of increasing the protection of those industries, decreased the price to them of what they called their raw material, thereby injuring these great interests in Nova Scotia whose finished products are the raw material of the carriage-makers and other consumers of steel and iron in Ontario. It seems to me a regrettable circumstance that the Government should have decided to take this course, and that it would have been very much better if they, having set out upon what I think may be fairly described as a protectionist course—as was plainly made manifest in their main schedule—had carried that out and had not sought to benefit some industries by impairing the protection to industries in the maritime provinces. For, by so doing they have, to a certain extent, undone the work which has been going on in Canada ever since the first bounties were given to the iron industry here. It is evident that the Government does not quarrel with the bounty system, because they not only continued the bounties but increased them. It is evident they do not quarrel with the idea of protecting and extending our iron industry. But I contend that by the action they are taking they have practically nullified a great deal of the work accomplished and made it extremely improbable that the iron industry will make the progress, for some time, that all friends of development in Canada would like to see go on uninterrupted.

I shall not, at this stage of the session, detain the committee by making a long speech, but I would urge the Government to consider that by, in a sense, undoing the work of their predecessors and themselves, they are striking at what is really a basic industry, the foundation of many of the great industries that should grow up in this country, that is not only our opinion, it is substantiated by the quotation read here to-day from that great organ of public opinion, the Toronto "Globe," which speaks of these industries as the pivotal points upon which all the industrial system of the country turns. It would not require much argument to show how important it is that those industries should not only not be interfered with but should be guaranteed success. The production within ourselves and by ourselves of our iron which, we are told, is the foundation of so many industries, would give a stability, a permanence and security which we can never attain so long as we depend upon outside sources for our supply. Now, a point has come up in this connection which I regret to have seen raised. I am sure that my hon. colleague (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had no idea of doing what the hon. Minister of Finance charges him with doing—setting east against west, or raising sectional feeling; nor do I believe that the Finance Minister was well advised when he raised that point. I would be one of the last men—and I am sure that in this my colleague thoroughly sympathizes with me—to suggest that the Minister or this House should regard any of these questions from a sectional standpoint. We have too much provincialism in our politics, and it should be the desire of every man who wishes to see Canada become a great nation to frown down the sectional and provincial spirit and endeavour to view everything from the Dominion standpoint. Nor would I like to attribute any sectionalism to the Minister of Finance by saying that he had any feeling against the industries of his own province. I have no doubt he is actuated by an honest desire to benefit the industries of Nova Scotia so far as is consistent, in his opinion, with the welfare of the Dominion. What we find fault with is that there is an inconsistency in the action of the Government, that while practically pledged to the hilt to a system of protection, they carry on a system of supporting some industries by striking down some even more important industries that lie much nearer the basis upon which the development of the country must be built. Therefore, while I am perfectly ready to believe that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, coming, as he does, from the province of Nova Scotia, is friendly to the industries of that province, while I cannot attribute to him a desire to injure the industries of Nova Scotia, I would regret to attribute to him any desire to strike down the industries of Ontario or any other province, because, upon him, as a Minister, it devolves to view all the industries of Canada so as to secure the greatest national development. I would rather do what I can safely do—attribute to him a desire to serve the interests of the province from which he comes. Therefore, I regret to hear the tone and temper of the latter part of the speech which he addressed to the committee this afternoon. A great many Nova Scotians look upon the presence of the hon. gentleman as the safeguard of their particular interests in this House. But the tone of his remarks to-day seems to indicate that he held strongly an opinion which would be inconsistent with the guarantee of support and assistance to our great iron and coal industries in Nova Scotia. I do not attribute to him any feeling of hostility.

I have already said that I think I would not be going too far if I attributed to him an honest desire, as a son of Nova Scotia, to assist his own province as far as is consistent with the interests of the Dominion, but I attribute to him the belief that he should not regard so much sectional interests as the interests of the country as a whole. Therefore, viewing the matter as I do, believing that he and those with whom he is associated are practically committed to the idea of protection, I regret that they should have ministered to the support of institutions and interests in other parts of Canada by striking a special blow at the welfare of the two great interests which are most important to the province from which I come. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman speak in support of the bounty system. He could not well have done otherwise, because, on the Order paper stand resolutions to be moved by him in which he declares himself ready to support and even to increase the bounty protection which has been given in the past. But I would like to call to your attention this view of the matter—if it be the deliberate purpose of the Government to adopt this system of protection by bounty—which the hon. Minister declared one of the most defensible forms of protection and in that showed that he had chosen one form of protection and thus committed his Government to the protection idea—I think it is to be regretted that he should have made such changes in the tariff as will imperil those industries, and will, to a great extent, undo the work which he and the Ministry are prepared to do in protecting and building up on a sure foundation the iron interests of the lower provinces. I notice that the hon. gentleman, in the closing part of his address, spoke as though in supporting these industries and giving these bounties and thus committing the Government and himself to a system of protection, he was doing something that he could not honestly defend. He spoke as though these industries, so important to us, were not capable of successful development, that the action of the Government would result in diverting the energy of the people from a line in which success could be achieved to a line in which there was no chance of success. There are no circumstances in the case to warrant such a conclusion as that. If he were as familiar as I would like to see him with the history of iron production in Nova Scotia, he would know that protection has attained a large degree of success, that the iron masters of Nova Scotia are not at this moment afraid of English competition, but are perfectly prepared to meet that competition even without protection and in the open market. What they are afraid of, and that to which the action of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues have laid them open, is a competition that is absolutely unfair, and is at this moment the most severe competition to which they can be subjected. It is not the competition of England's ironmasters that the Nova Scotian fears, it is the competition of ironmasters of the United States, a country in which at this moment, on account of the remarkable discoveries in manufacture, low-priced ore, so low that it can be delivered at the furnaces at a marvellously small cost, owing to the fact that labour is exceedingly cheap, where they use convict labour, and coloured labour, and labour paid under the truck system, in which these ironmasters not only have a profit on the manufacture of iron, but a profit actually on the wages of the employees—I say under the operation of these circumstances, and under the operation of the tremendously developed proportions in which iron is now being produced in the United States, it is almost impossible for the ironmasters in Canada, even with the bounties that are given them by the Government, to compete at all. But that is not the whole of it. The point is this, that in that competition the iron producer in the lower provinces is not having fair-play, he is not competing in an open field. The Englishman can come here and sell iron very cheap, but on the other hand the Canadian can go there if the freights suit him, he can go into the English market and sell there. But that is not the case with our great rivals to the south, that is not the case with that nation to whom our Government has thrown open the iron market of Canada to-day. The tariff on iron and all its products is so high in the United States that the Canadian producer is absolutely shut out of that market, and so he is compelled to submit to the competition of the United States producer in his own market, and he is not allowed to take advantage of favourable rates, or of the convenience of neighbourhood, to sell in any part of the United States any portion of his products. Therefore it seems to me it is a most unfortunate thing for the iron interests of our province that the Government did not consistently protect such interests as required protection, without cutting down, without reducing at all, that protection to which the iron interest of Nova Scotia were certainly entitled upon every consideration. Even if you regard this matter from any point of view which the hon. gentleman can select, I maintain their position is untenable. If you regard it from a free trade standpoint, it is absolutely untenable, it is inconsistent with their whole tariff. If you regard it from the standpoint of a revenue tariff, it is inconsistent. The protection left to the producers of iron and steel in Nova Scotia falls far below the point at which a revenue tariff would place such protection. In every shape in which it can be regarded, I maintain that, while I do not attribute any feeling of hostility to any member of the Government, and particularly to my hon.

friend, towards Nova Scotia, I still maintain that the Government have been most unfortunate in the system that they have adopted to aid the industries of Ontario. Now, the most important thing for us in Nova Scotia is our manufactures. The hon. gentleman, in speaking as I have already said, used such language as would warrant the House in believing that the iron and coal industries were not such industries as should be practically protected in Nova Scotia. I would like that hon. gentleman, from his knowledge of our province, of its resources and of the different industries in which our people can engage, to tell me to what other industries they could direct attention, if it is not towards the development of our iron and mining interests. Nova Scotia does not possess those advantages of climate and of soil which would make her a great agricultural province. We are so situated that we do not at this moment produce our own food in the lower provinces. Perhaps one of the best customers that Ontario and Manitoba have for their products, one of their best markets, is to be found in those very same lower provinces. We are so situated that we have a great diversity of interests, and among others those that have always seemed to us to afford such employment as would keep the people at home and prevent them from leaving their native country, and retain them at home to become good citizens and producing citizens for the Dominion, was a development of the manufacturing interests. Therefore, I maintain, that all that portion of the hon. gentleman's remarks which seemed to imply that industrial or manufacturing development was not native or not fitted to the lower provinces, was made in entire misapprehension of the facts, and this he will recognize himself as soon as his attention is called to it. I therefore am glad to take this opportunity as a Nova Scotian and as a representative of that country in which these interests are found, to protest as strongly as I can against the fact that the Government in this matter, while doing something for them, has not done what those interests require, and their policy on the whole has not been favourable to those industries in the lower provinces. I regret to have to say that having just returned from those provinces, I have been informed that the masters who preside over these large works have been compelled, in view of this policy adopted by the Government, to announce to all their employees that if they do not choose to submit to a reduction of 10 per cent in all wages and salaries paid, it would be necessary to close up these great works, works that pay out nearly $300,000 yearly in wages, distributing a large amount of money which goes into circulation, and which amount of money is absolutely essential in order to keep the wheels of trade revolving in our province.

Mr. BELL (Pictou)

That large amount of money is to be diminished by 10 per cent reduction in the salaries of these men, and if they are not willing to submit to that reduction, it will be necessary to close these works because they can not be continued at a profit. For the last year they have been struggling along, and they have not been able to make a profit. Now, the hon. gentleman may say: Well, if they have not been able to make money, that is sufficient proof that they should not be there. If he were to say so, it would be an excellent exemplification of the fact that a half truth or a truth half understood, is one of the most dangerous things in the world. At this very moment, after having being in operation fourteen or fifteen years, the stress of competition has been so great in the world, the iron manufacturer having been subjected to the practical competition of the whole world, that prices have been reduced 14, 15 or 16 dollars a ton below the rate which they formerly received. They have been obliged to improve their processes, to cheapen their processes, and to economize sufficiently to do this, and on account of the cutting down of cost and by becoming masters of their own business, they are now able to live at prices nearly 40 per cent less than those they were getting when they first went into the business. Now, they have been able to do that because the system of bounties given to them by the Government, held them upon their feet long enough to enable them to meet their rivals, and while fighting the battle of competition, to make such profit as would enable them to throw out expensive machinery they had put in, and replace it with other machinery. A large part of the plant of one of these great industrial establishments, has to be renewed every few years. The world moves so fast, processes are so rapidly changing and improving, that they need to have the most modern appliances, and unless they keep up with all new improvements they are inevitably compelled to fall behind in the race. Now, at a time when, on account of the industrial condition in the United States, and on account of a certain amount of depression in various parts of that country, permitting people to sell at almost any price, at a time when, I maintain, competition in these lines is greater and more severe than ever before, this is the last time in the world for the Government of Canada, which has during the last fourteen years assisted to build up these industries, to withdraw any part of the support that they have given. That they should do so is a most unfortunate thing. I tell you that these men upon whom depends these industries, who are at the head of them, are struggling along now in the hope that better ideas will come to the Government of Canada, and that a reconsideration of the circumstances will induce them at the first opportunity, when they again meet in Parliament, to reconsider their action and to make up their minds to give to these industries in the maritime provinces that same honest and hearty support that they give to similar industries in the upper provinces. I wish to say, with all the sincerity and earnestness that I possess, that I do not wish for one moment to be held to be drawing any distinction between industries in the upper provinces and the lower provinces. We wish to suppress any such idea, we wish to give a true interpretation to the National Policy, to make it a policy in which no interests are neglected, but under which the Government will extend to all industries a paternal and fostering care. That is all we ask for the interests of Nova Scotia, and that we hope and expect to receive. No one could regret more than I do the tone and temper of the speech delivered by the Minister of Finance. I know, from an inmate acquaintance with them that his friends in Nova Scotia look to the hon. gentleman, not for severe criticism or unfriendly thought, but for earnest assistance, and I do not think they will look to him in vain. I believe the hon. gentleman regrets what he has said to-day. No doubt he spoke with some degree of warmth which he now regrets, and I trust, and have every confidence, that he will, in dealing with these industries, especially with this great iron industry, treat them in the same spirit exactly in which he has treated other industries in the upper provinces that have appealed to him for assistance. I wish the people of Canada to understand that in so far as they may have been led by the speech of the Finance Minister to believe that the people of the county I represent are not united in their desire for protection, they are mistaken. I know, from direct personal assurance, from the nature of the political contest waged, that the people of the constituency of Pictou and of the localities lying in that neighbourhood and interested in the iron industry will not support any candidate who does not honestly avow his belief in and determination to maintain that protection under which, and under which alone, the industries of that portion of the country have become what they are to-day.

Mr. FROST. The Government certainly had a mandate from the people to lighten the burdens of taxation. They would not have been returned on 23rd June last had the people been satisfied with everything connected with the tariff policy of the late Government, and perhaps no item in the whole of the tariff is more objectionable to the people generally than the item of the duties upon iron. At the inception of the National Policy, Sir Leonard Tilley, in his speech delivered in 1873 spoke cautiously as to the duty on iron. In fact, prior to that time, no Government scarcely dare touch this question, because it was one that was bound, to a very large extent, to dislocate a great many existing industries. However, the Government proceeded very cautiously, and by placing a small duty and a small bounty on Canadian iron, which at that time did not amount to more than 10 per cent on the value of the article, and by increasing the tariff duties on a great many articles manufactured from iron, they succeeded in enabling the ironmasters to produce the article. It was not until 1887, when the present leader of the Opposition came in as Finance Minister, that the duties were very greatly increased, to as high as $4 per ton on iron and $2 bounty. I have here a clipping from the hon. gentleman's speech when introducing his policy, and his remarks will give some idea of what was expected to be the result of the heavy duties which, at that time, were levied for the purpose of producing iron. The hon. gentleman said :

We have applied the National Policy to innumerable industries all over Canada with marvellous success. But, Sir, there is a field, perhaps the most important, still untrodden. There is a field still unoccupied that presents great possibilities and greater opportunities than any other for developing Canadian industry, and it lies at the very root and foundation of the National Policy in all countries where it has been adopted. I refer to the iron industry. * * *

Now, Sir, if there is a country in the world to which the iron industry is important, it is Canada. And why? Because we possess the coal, and we possess the iron ore, and we possess the fluxes—having everything necessary to develop the great iron industry within our own borders—and yet, down to the present moment, we have left almost untouched this enormous, this almost illimitable field for the extension of the National Policy.

This occurred fifteen or sixteen years ago, and yet up to the present time, we have not seen blast furnaces established at any one of these points. The hon. gentleman made a calculation as to what the duty of $4 per ton on iron would amount to. He said :

Leaving out steel rails, it is equivalent to 250,000 tons of pig iron. To make this, you will require 750,000 tons of iron ore, 120,000 tons of limestone, and 750,000 tons of coal to produce the first stage of pig iron, involving a freight of no less than 1,625,000.

Then, as to the number of men that were to be employed, he said :

Now, Sir, the result is, that by the adoption of this policy you will give permanent employment to an army of men numbering at least 20,000, increasing our population from 80,000 or 100,000 souls, and affording the means of supporting them in comfort and prosperity.

We did not hear that the population of Pictou had increased very largely, according to the Finance Minister's statement this afternoon. The present leader of the Opposition further said :

Now, this estimate of increased population of 100,000 souls does not take into account the manufacture of castings, cutlery and edge tools, &c., or steel rails. Were we to manufacture these articles, now imported—and why should we not progress steadily to that point—the population I have mentioned, of 100,600 souls, would be no less than trebled.

This was the glowing picture presented in 1883 by the present leader of the Opposition as the effect which the duties on iron would have on the country. We may now look in this present year of grace at the latest statistics and ascertain what has actually been done up to the present time. I find from the returns that the Nova Scotia Steel Forge Company, during the past year produced 20,470 tons of pig iron, the Londonderry Company, 10,497 tons; the Hamilton Forge Company, which has only been in operation a year or so, 25,270; the Radnor Forge Company, Three Rivers, which makes charcoal iron, 5,602 tons; making a total, including the products of two other small concerns, of 62,000 tons. This really does not supply one-half the consumption of pig iron in the country. An immense quantity of ore and coal was to be used. Of ore there was used 125,000 tons, a large portion of which came from foreign countries; the whole quantity of coal used was 115,200 tons, with 32,000 or 35,000 tons of coke.

We were told that a great army of workmen—twenty thousand, which would be trebled in a few years—would be engaged in those industries into which iron entered, but we find that at the present time the Nova Scotia Steel Company, including the manufacture of over 13,000 tons of steel and 1,200 tons of forging, now employ 700 men; the Londonderry Works, 425; the Hamilton Works, 120, and all others in Canada about 200, making a total of workmen employed—after sixteen or seventeen years nursing by a high protective tariff—of somewhat less than 1,500 men all told. Why is it that after so many years of nursing by protection, there have been such poor results from this industry that it is not able to supply the entire consumption of iron in Canada? Why is it necessary to load down the raw material of so many manufacturers in Canada; for we know very well that iron enters into more than 200 industries of various kinds. The hon. gentlemen from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper and Mr. Bell) complain that the Government, in this new tariff, have done injury to Nova Scotia for the benefit of Ontario and other provinces. The Government had a perfect right, as they did, to make an investigation into the various industries of the country, and it was their duty to bring about the greatest good for the greatest number. In doing that they have made such a rearrangement of the duties on iron, as to enable scores of industries now using that article to manufacture more economically, and at the same time the Government have done precisely what they promised to do when in Opposition, namely, to so rearrange their tariff as to give to the consuming classes of this country every article they used at the very cheapest possible figure.

It is said by my hon. friend (Mr. Bell), that it will not be possible for the steel manufacturers of Nova Scotia to go on with their business, and that the tariff has practically opened the door for United States competition. These hon. gentlemen opposite do not fear English competition, but they fear United States competition. Well, the manufacturers of Nova Scotia have had a good many years of very high protection. There is no one who sympathizes with them more than I do, but I believe that under the present tariff the manufacturers in Nova Scotia will be able to make steel, and turn out pig iron, equally as profitably as they have done up to the present time. Besides that, the tariff will enable other manufacturers to start their works, which they have not been able to do, in Montreal, and in Hamilton, and other places, for a considerable time past. We know that the bar iron men have been complaining, and to-day we are getting bar iron, since this tariff came into force, at 45 cents a hundred less than before. We are getting pig iron for $3 a ton less, and we are getting steel at $5 and $6 a ton less than before the tariff. When you come to apply these prices to the manufacture of stoves, radiators, springs, bolts, carriages, and everything that iron enters into as a raw material, you can readily see the great advantage which the consumers of Canada are going to get as the result of the magnificent rearrangement of the tariff which the present Government have made. The hon. the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made the remark, that the tariff was practically a surrender. Well, if the Government have surrendered, they certainly have surrendered in a very good cause, for they have surrendered for the benefit of the classes who for a great many years have been anxiously awaiting in vain to see the fruits of what our friends opposite called the National Policy. My hon. friend (Mr. Bell) has said, that the Nova Scotia people have reduced their prices. I can tell the hon. gentleman, that almost every manufacturing industry in Canada during the last ten years, have been reducing their prices, until they are in some cases 50 per cent, and in other cases 60 per cent lower than formerly; and while the manufacturers have been reducing their prices, we know that during the last few years the prices of farm products, and everything which the farmer has to sell, have also been greatly lowered. It is the usual course of manufacturing business, that from year to year there is a constant change in patterns, a constant change in business, a constant change in machinery, constantly new inventions, and these things are contributing all the time to a reduction in the price of manufactured goods. It would be a very unfortunate thing if such were not the case, because as we progress, we certainly ought to be making improvements in our manufactures. The Nova Scotia Steel Company is therefore not alone in having had to reduce their prices. I expect that in the course of the next two years, this very Nova Scotia Steel Company will so rearrange the manufacture of their goods, that they will be able to compete, not only with England but with the United States and all other countries. They are making a good article, and as a customer of the Nova Scotia Steel Company to a very large amount, I must say that I always found them to be most honourable and straightforward men to deal with. I know very well that they will be able to meet the rearrangement of the new tariff.

The "Canadian Manufacturer," a very strong protectionist paper printed in Toronto, speaking of the new iron duties, says :

This makes a very substantial reduction in the cost of the material of many branches of the iron industry, and in the wide range of industries in which iron is a very important factor.

Take the matter of steel ingots, we know that our bar iron people were complaining that scrap iron was too high at $4 per ton. Scrap iron in my estimation ought to have been free, but $1 a ton will make very little difference here or there. This particular rearrangement of the tariff will enable bar iron men in Montreal to reopen their works, and proceed with their very important industry. The reduction of the duty on steel ingots from $5 to $2 a ton, will also enable them to commence the manufacture of steel, and we will have in Hamilton, and perhaps in Toronto, and in Montreal, factories where they can begin to manufacture steel. Only this spring, you could not buy a steel ingot in Canada for less than $32 a ton, while steel ingots in England were $22 a ton. It has practically prohibited the manufacture of steel anywhere else than at one place in Nova Scotia. Therefore, the Government, in making this change, are practically carrying out the promise they made to the people that under their tariff there would be no chance of monopoly; and this is very good proof of the sincerity of their professions and statements while in Opposition.

There are one or two other things that I propose to refer to while on the iron duties. I am satisfied as a manufacturer using iron very largely, that almost every article into which iron enters as a factor will be cheapened this year and in the coming years, and we shall see thousands of dollars saved to the farmers and the consuming classes throughout the country. It is quite true that sectionalism is a very bad thing. For my own part, I have been desirous of seeing all that could be manufactured in Canada made here; I have been desirous of seeing every article that could be produced at a profit, and without laying a burden on the people of the country, made in Canada; and I am satisfied, from what little study I have already made of the present tariff, that our friends in the Government have more than fulfilled the expectations of the country. We have heard of delegations coming here. How many delegations came here three years ago when an attempt was made to alter the tariff in a few items. But we have been endeavouring on this occasion to alter the whole tariff, making it more in the interest of the consuming classes; and to-day we do not hear of any delegations coming to Ottawa; we do not hear of any complaints, comparatively speaking, throughout the country. Where are the complaints coming from? Everywhere you go you hear of reviving industries. Take up this "Manufacturer," and read how many industries are being started. Take the last issue, and you find that scores of companies are being formed all over the Dominion for the purpose of going into the manufacture of machinery, the manufacture of stoves, the manufacture of engines and boilers, tanneries, woollen and cotton mills. These are being started everywhere. Any one looking over the list in the last "Manufacturer" will be satisfied that if there are any persons afraid of the tariff of Canada, it is not the manufacturers or the people who have capital; but any fear that exists is confined practically to the House of Commons and to our friends in the Opposition. To-day there is greater hope throughout the country than ever before. The object of the Government, in reducing the duties on raw materials, was to equalize a great many industries in which there were differences between the duty on the manufactured article and the duty on the raw material. In many instances the duty on the raw materials was higher than the duty on the manufactured goods—so much so that many people found it almost impossible to manufacture. The Government have restored the equality in the duties, and this of itself will revive many industries, which in the past few years have been in a very languishing condition. Looking at the tariff as a whole, and at the general policy of the Government, it seems to me that very little exception can be taken to it. As we look at it to-day, after having gone almost through a session of Parliament, with scarcely an amendment made to the general policy of the Government, we conclude that the feeling throughout the country is favourable to all that the Government have done. The people of this country know that it would not be wise to make too drastic a change now, knowing all the industries that have grown up around the old tariff, and knowing also that many men had their all invested in the industry in which they were engaged. The Government have pursued a cautious course, and I am sure that the manufacturers of Canada as a class thoroughly understand and appreciate what the Government have done for them. I am satisfied that the consuming classes also will fully appreciate the great reductions that have been made in the tariff all along the line. I know that the agricultural classes will be more than thankful for the interest which the Government are taking in them in very many ways; and, with a revival of prosperity among our agricultural population, without any undue extension of the protective tariff, our manufacturers may expect to make a great deal more money from year to year than they could possibly make by any addition to the protective tariff. On the whole, I am very much pleased as a manufacturer with the re-arrangement of the iron duties. I think it is a step in the right direction, and I believe it will be the means of reviving trade, not only in all the iron industries of the land, but in sister industries; and throughout the length and breadth of the country we shall soon see wheels revolving, more men employed, and more money in circulation. I believe that through the tariff action of this Government, we are on the eve of the greatest prosperity which this country will ever have seen in the course of its history.

Mr. McISAAC. I desire to make a few remarks in reply to the speech of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). That hon. gentleman complains of the speech delivered this afternoon by the hon. Minister of Finance. He finds fault with the aggressive tone of that speech; he also finds fault with it because it is, as he says, a free trade speech; and he concludes by telling this House that it would be unwise for the Finance Minister to go down to the county of Pictou, after delivering that speech in this House, and deliver it to his friends in that county. I know something of the Liberal party in the county of Pictou and of the Conservative party in that county, and I know also something about the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), and I beg to assure this committee that the hon. Finance Minister might go down to that county and repeat the speech he made here this afternoon without running the slightest danger. I know of a gentleman who at one time delivered a lecture in the very town of New Glasgow, within the very shadow of the steel works and the iron works, and in that lecture he used these words:

I consider the argument of the free trader unanswerable. I believe, at this moment, that if Canada took a liberal step in the direction of free trade, it would go a long way to place her upon the road to the greatest prosperity, and the reasons why I consider she could turn about and adopt the free trade policy are:

(a.) We might free ourselves from the dominating influence of the United States;

(b.) On account of the failure of the National Policy;

Mr. FROST.

(c.) Because of the startling revelations of the census returns.

The gentleman who delivered that speech, within the shadow of the steel and iron works of the county of Pictou, was never molested at that meeting, was never driven out of the town, and never had to leave the county of Pictou. Nay, more, that very gentleman, who delivered that free trade speech after due deliberation—for it was not a speech delivered in a moment of weakness, but a written lecture—was afterwards nominated, not by the Liberal party in the county of Pictou, but by the Conservative party in that county, and elected; and I am informed that up to the very moment when he received the nomination of the Conservative party, he never made an act or utterance of reparation for the opinions he expressed on that occasion. I am not aware that he has yet recanted or repudiated one word of that lecture. Yet that is the same gentleman who this afternoon made the startling statement that it would be unwise and unsafe for the Finance Minister to go down to Pictou after the speech he made this afternoon.

I am told that there was one gentleman in the county of Pictou who did not like the nomination of my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) last June and that is his colleague, the senior member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I am told that he kicked vigorously because the Conservative party nominated my hon. friend. Personally, I know nothing of this, but if we look at the matter in the light of what has taken place, no one would wonder that the hon. member for Pictou should have viewed with some disgust the nomination of the hon. gentleman at the last election. I can prove to you, Mr. Chairman, by the records, what the position of my hon. friend was. In 1887 he was what some people call a bolter. He was not true to the old Tory faith, and it is recorded that he ran an election in 1887 in that county, and that the hon. leader of the Opposition also took a part in that campaign on behalf of the candidates of the Conservative party. My hon. friend the junior member (Mr. Bell) was rather a prominent figure in provincial politics in Nova Scotia, and was jealous because he had not a seat in the federal Parliament, and perhaps it was on that account that he was not then the admirer of the National Policy that he is to-day. At any rate, there was some little trouble in the Conservative party of the county then, and the leader of the Opposition went down, and the result of his visit was that my hon. friend the junior member abandoned the idea of running for Pictou County.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must interrupt my hon. friend and call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the rule laid down, that during this discussion we must only speak to the item. We are now at the closing hours almost of the session, and the hon. gentleman is entering into a long discussion upon the political history of some member of this House, which has nothing whatever to do with the item under discussion.

Mr. McISAAC. If the hon. gentleman had not interrupted me, I would have been through.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am simply calling the attention of the Chair to the rule and asking that it be enforced.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Brodeur). There is a difference between discussing another item and the one under discussion. I do not think the hon. gentleman is quite out of order when he answers the speech made by the hon. member for Pictou, but at the same time I would ask him to confine himself as much as possible to the item under discussion.

Mr. McISAAC. I have no intention of doing otherwise, and did not suppose the hon. leader of the Opposition would try to prevent my reading what I was about to quote.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must protest in the strongest manner against the rule you laid down being violated. You, Mr. Chairman, have just ruled that the hon. gentleman must keep himself to the item, and he is not answering the speech of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), which was a clear and logical and temperate argument upon the item. He did not go into any political disquisitions or rake up past history, as the hon. gentleman is doing. If the hon. gentleman is to be permitted to go back some ten years into the political history of Nova Scotia, there will be no possible means of keeping this discussion within the proper limits.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) devoted some considerable time to the discussion of the coal duties, which was not the item under discussion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, I understand the hon. Minister of Finance desires that in a discussion of this nature we should be given free range over the whole range of politics. If my hon. friend this afternoon transgressed a rule of the House, attention should have been called to it, but I may tell the hon. gentleman that the question of coal and iron are so closely allied, that it would be impossible to discuss thoroughly the question of protecting the iron industry without discussing the question of the coal duties which bears upon it most vitally.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All I wished to submit was that when one hon. gentleman is allowed to depart from the rule, I do not think that those who reply to him should be kept too closely to the item.

Mr. McISAAC. I beg to assure this committee that I shall detain them but a moment while I read the manifesto issued by the chairman of the Conservative party of East Pictou. Mr. Thos. E. Fraser, denouncing the course pursued by my hon. friend (Mr. Bell). This document is also signed by Mr. John Cameron, secretary of the Liberal Conservative party of East Pictou :

To the Liberal-Conservatives of East Pictou.

Gentlemen.—Having taken pains to ascertain the fact in reference to the action of Mr. A. C. Bell, lately one of our representatives in the local House, and the leader of our party in provincial matters, I thought it my duty to lay the same before you by circular letter, so that those residing at a distance and not having the opportunities of finding out the truth, might not be misled or seduced by the report of Mr. Bell and his present political friends, our enemies.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What was the date of that letter ?

An hon. MEMBER. 1887.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise again to call attention to this matter. Here is a gentleman introducing a letter written in 1887 on a question of local politics in the county of Pictou. I have no objection whatever to the fullest discussion of the subject it refers to. So far as I am concerned, this is a mere question of time. If you wish to sit until midsummer listening to matters of this kind, let the House so decide. But it is inconsistent with your ruling. Mr. Chairman, and if the Chair permits this course to be taken there is an end to the rule you have laid down. It will be impossible to enforce it in any case, and impossible to get through with this discussion within any reasonable period. I ask the hon. gentleman who leads the House to say whether this is a reasonable objection that I raise. I have not the slightest objection to the fullest discussion of the question if we desire amusement, and wish to stay here a month doing nothing.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Mr. Paterson). I am sure it would not suit any of us to remain here for a month, and I am sure also that my hon. friend (Mr. McIsaac) has no wish to detain the House. I am bound to say that he very rarely claims the attention of the House and is usually very pertinent in his remarks and sticks close to the question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How has this anything to do with the subject ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As I understand, the hon. gentleman is replying to something said by my hon. friend the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). Of course, I am bound to say that there is no denying the position taken by the hon. leader of the Opposition that we ought to discuss the question before the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am unable to find that the hon. gentleman who has been addressing the House is absolutely out of order, because, as I understand it, he is trying to show that the hon. gentleman who preceded him has already expressed ideas different from those he has expressed on the floor of the House to-day. At the same time, I must admit that it may not have a very close bearing upon the question immediately before the House, the iron duty, and I would invite the hon. member (Mr. McIsaac) to confine himself as much as possible to the item under discussion.

Mr. McISAAC. I will promise that the remarks I shall make after the reading of this document will be very brief :

Mr. Bell might well be proud of the honour done him last June by the Conservatives of this county, but, instead, he has seen fit to hurl back, with apparent contempt, the trust imposed in him last June, without notice, too, or consultation with a single Conservative, by resigning his seat in the legislature.

Messrs. MacDougald and Tupper pledged themselves to abide by the action of our convention, and support our nominees, whoever they might be. I, myself, with Mr. W. B. Moore, as a committee from the meeting of our friends in New Glasgow, waited upon Mr. Bell two nights before the meeting of the convention, and Mr. Bell pledged himself, like MacDougald and Tupper, to accept and abide by the action of the convention. The morning of the convention, within two days, Mr. Bell receded from this position and repudiated his promise.

Several good Conservatives conscientiously supported Mr. Bell until the night of the 7th instant, when Mr. Bell, with six of his Conservative supporters, met Sir C. Tupper and discussed the situation. Mr. Bell then and there, of his own motion, decided to give up his intention of contesting the county in opposition to our party nominees, pledged himself again to his supporters present and to Sir C. Tupper to give up the fight, to accept the nomination from Guysborough, and authorize the publication of this, his determination, in the Halifax "Morning Herald" and otherwise.

The next morning, within twelve hours, Mr. Bell again receded, without consulting a single Liberal-Conservative, and has since confessed that he made this last somersault at the instance of certain prominent Grits of New Glasgow.

This last act has so unmasked Mr. Bell that his Conservative sympathizers determined not to follow him into the Grit camp, and are now all, or nearly all, with us in supporting MacDougald and Tupper.

Mr. Bell's deceptions and impostures do not end here. He poses as the nominee of the labouring man, when it can be proven that such is not the fact. In that respect he is the nominee of R. Drummond, the man whom he denounced last summer, and a few Grits, and nothing more.

I call upon all to ponder these facts, to recall the speeches of Mr. Bell against Mr. Drummond seven short months ago, and not to allow themselves to be deceived. The voice may be like the voice of a Conservative, but the hands are the hands of a Grit engaged with Mr. J. D. McLeod in an endeavour to destroy our constitution and dismember our Dominion.

Do not fail to inform your friends and neighbours, and vote for MacDougald and Tupper.

Yours, &c.,

THOMAS E. FEASER.

Chairman of Lib.-Con. Party, East Pictou, N.S.
John Cameron, Sec. Lib.-Con. Party,
East Pictou, N.S.

New Glasgow, February 11th, 1887.

This is the document which was sent broadcast through the county by the chairman and secretary of the Liberal-Conservative party on that occasion. Only that I do not wish to detain the committee, I might also give extracts from speeches made on that occasion by both the senior and junior member for Pictou. But it is well known that for a long time, and especially from 1887 to 1891 the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) never ceased in his invective against the Liberal party and his vituperation was never so malignant as when he was pouring it forth against the hon. gentleman who is his colleague in this House. So it ill-becomes the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) to lecture hon. members on this side, and particularly the Finance Minister on the ground, forsooth, that we are not sincere or consistent in our trade policy. It does not come with such ill-grace from the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) because so far as the National Policy is concerned he has been straight upon that question; but the hon. junior member, surely, surely, he will never again engage in lecturing hon. members on this side upon the subject of consistency and steadfastness in the maintenance of a policy. The hon. member (Mr. Bell) has referred to the local election in Pictou and has spoken of a circular which was distributed in the interest of the Liberals in that county during the last provincial election. But he forgot to read the circular that was distributed in his own town, left from door to door throughout the county. It is printed in red, and here it is :

SPECIAL DESPATCH.

Coal and Iron to be Sacrificed by the Tariff to be brought down by the Ottawa Government on Thursday.

While this is the Case, Tea, Coffee and Sugar are to be Taxed,

And the Free Breakfast Table will Become a Thing of the Past.

Montreal, April 18.—Despite all attempts on the part of the Government to conceal their tariff policy, there does not seem to be any doubt but that their friends in Montreal know pretty accurately what is to be. The withdrawal from warehouse during the last two days by leading members of the Liberal party show that current rumours as to the new tariff are well founded.

Coal is to be made free, or, at least, to be reduced to a point that will satisfy those who have for years been clamouring for free coal.

Iron is certainly going to be hit hard. Indications are that it will be made free.

Vote for Cameron, Tanner and Fitzpatrick, and protect our coal and iron industries.

That is the document, in letters of blood, that was circulated while my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) and his colleague (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) were down in the county. And of the three candidates named here they managed to get one in by the skin of his teeth.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member—

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig) is out of his seat.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not occupy my seat when I am speaking.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman is out of his place.

Mr. CRAIG. I was about to say that it seems to me the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) is under a misapprehension as to the item which we are discussing. He has been discussing the item of Bells, and we have not reached that yet.

Mr. McISAAC. The hon. gentleman is too fresh altogether. I am answering the hon. member for Pictou, and referring particularly and specifically to the points that he brought out. He has endeavoured to give reasons why his party suffered defeat on that occasion in Nova Scotia. I tell him what the Conservative party in Halifax thought was the reason that brought about that disaster. In the Montreal "Gazette" of the 22nd of April, there is a telegram from Halifax which says :

Yet another theory is, that the Liberal-Conservative party in Nova Scotia needs reconstruction and the infusion of younger blood. Most of the men elected are young men, and in many cases new to political life. A majority of young voters added to the lists seem to have fallen in with the Liberal party. This would indicate that the management and methods of the Conservative party should be taken out of the hands of the old men and entrusted to younger men.

That is the explanation given in the "Gazette" by a correspondent, who was certainly voicing the sentiments of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia on the day after the local election.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I regret that I shall have to occupy the time of this committee with anything that is of a personal nature. I feel very much complimented from the fact that on the two or three occasions that I have addressed the House, the Government have thought it necessary to put up some of their back-seat supporters who, though not apt at making speeches, are able to read newspaper extracts. It is not very high evidence of originality or ability, but still it is a convenient function for some of those gentlemen. I am much gratified that the Government find it necessary, when I have made remarks in this House, to trot out this rather antiquated and wholly unfounded legend, that I have been anything in politics but a protectionist. Since this thing has occurred for the second time, it may be as well to put the House in possession of the facts of the case. So far as protection is concerned, I went through the first fight in 1878 with the Hon. J. Jas. Macdonald on a platform of protection, and from that day to this I have been a consistent protectionist at every election in which I have taken any part, and I defy any one to produce any evidence to the contrary. I may say that I know that these gentlemen who have read these false newspaper extracts, either know nothing about the facts of the case, or if they do, they are aware that they are promulgating a falsehood. It would not be difficult at all for me to draw attention to some little idiosyncracies on the part of some hon. gentlemen opposite so far as a change of opinion is concerned. I believe the gentleman who has just taken his seat rather distinguished himself upon one burning question by speaking on one side and voting on the other. I presume it was in that way that he was trying to buy the suffrages of a county, and he may have succeeded in doing so, although the fact that he is elected for any county whatever, is a matter of surprise. We have seen a notice in an organ of public opinion in Ontario, the "Canadian Freeman," which is not of very great importance, but which trotted that hon. gentleman out as one of the most brilliant representatives from Nova Scotia who ever sat in this Parliament. It is not surprising, if he believes such fulsome adulation, that he should be impatient to get on his feet occasionally. Now I have stated that so far as this question of protection is concerned, I have always been a protectionist. On one occasion I lectured on the free trade theory, pursuing the arguments in favour of that theory to a logical conclusion, and I made some statements which were reproduced by the "Eastern Chronicle," an ardent opponent of mine, and which, I presume for the sake of making political capital, misinterpreted some of my words and put others into my mouth that I did not utter. Those words are in existence in the "Eastern Chronicle," an organ which I do not recognize as a good authority, but it is competent for any person who has the necessary education to read those extracts at any time when he sees fit. I may say that this course does not at all disconcert me. In fact, I should feel flattered to think that an intellectual giant, such as that referred to by the "Canadian Freeman," should be set up to read those extracts. Now, I think there is a great lack of taste shown by those gentlemen who have chosen to attack me for inconsistency. Suppose I had been inconsistent, and that ten years ago I was a free trader and to-day I was a protectionist. Have these gentlemen no regard for the feelings of their leaders? If

I am to blush with shame as the hon. gentleman says I should, and never dare to speak in this House again because I do not hold opinions that I am misrepresented to have held ten years ago, with what burning blushes must the faces of the Government be covered when they reflect on the fact that they have swallowed all their utterances within a few months, that having gone to the country on a policy of free trade, they are now openly and avowedly protectionists? But who would deny to these gentlemen the right of changing their opinion? I am sure it ought to be a compliment, because it shows an exercise of reason that is very gratifying indeed. I am aware that a frequent course of juvenile essayists of political efforts is to charge their opponents with inconsistency, and to quote the old line "consistency thou art a jewel," and so on. That is not a difficult role, almost any one of moderate ability can carry it out. But I have been inclined to look rather with admiration upon those who have changed their opinion. I should regret very much to think that any gentleman of intelligence, thrown into such a school as that furnished by Canadian politics, has been able to pass through life without learning anything, and without having had occasion to change his opinions. The fact that a man has done so, affords reasonable assurance that he has attained further light and further knowledge. Therefore it strikes me that this charge of inconsistency is one that should not be levelled against any man as a reproach. To my mind it is much more of a compliment. Many of the greatest men that we have in politics have been guilty, if guilty it be, of this form of wrong-doing. Gladstone, the great leader of the Liberals, commenced life as a high Tory, and was one for a long time. We know that some hon. gentlemen opposite, even those whom they most delight to honour, have begun life as Conservatives. I see before me now one hon. gentleman who was a Conservative for a long time, and I am sure nothing will provoke him to laughter more readily than to accuse him of anything in the nature of wrong-doing from the fact that he saw fit to change his opinions. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on the fact that he has developed, if development it be. And there are others among them. Immediately behind that hon. gentleman there is another member of the Cabinet who was at one time a prominent Conservative. In fact when I look over the ranks of the Government, I find that if I have been a sinner in the direction of changing my opinions, I have sinned in the most honourable and most respectable company that sits in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know from the Minister of Finance what were the considerations that induced him to change the duty upon this from $1.50 to $1?

Mr. BELL (Pictou).

There must have been good reason for that, and the committee should know it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid there is no further reason to offer than the fact that we placed scrap iron at as low a rate as possible. It was formerly $1.50, and we made the reduction because we thought the duty could be reduced a little further.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very good and lucid explanation. How long did the hon. gentleman take to understand that $1 was lower than $1.50?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Really I cannot answer that question any more lucidly than I did the other. This change may have been made in a moment of weakness.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid it is becoming chronic. The hon. gentleman had perhaps better leave over the item until to-morrow, when he may come to the conclusion to reduce it to 50 cents.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not, however, be sure how the hon. gentleman would think of the matter to-morrow, or how his judgment might be.

Mr. FOSTER. Judgment has been passed so far as I am concerned. But does not the hon. gentleman think that allowing scrap iron to come in at so low a rate of duty, will have a prejudicial effect on the development of our iron industry, such as making puddled bar, and in fact the whole manufacture from the ore.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think so. In my opinion, the iron industry generally will view this item with favour, and I think there will be very little objection taken to it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not generally acknowledged that iron made from scrap is inferior in grain, texture and power of endurance? Has there not been a very strong objection raised by iron manufacturers with respect to iron made from scrap? Does the hon. gentleman expect that puddled bar will be made in view of the low duty at which scrap is brought in? Or is the hon. gentleman arranging for the importation of all first-class bar iron other than that made from scrap, because I think this arrangement will have that effect?

Mr. FROST. I should like to ask the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) if he knows how many puddled bars were made when there was $4 a ton on scrap?

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman knows as much about the manufacture of iron as he knows about the manufacture of agricultural implements, he will recognize the fact that we cannot establish the manufacture of iron from the ore in a few days, a few months or a few years. The hon. gentleman knows that for a country like Canada with its enormous resources, there is no industry which, when it becomes an established industry, can in a greater measure conduce to the prosperity of the country than the iron industry.

Mr. FROST. We might keep the duty on for eighteen years more, and make no further advance.

Mr. FOSTER. That is against the history of every iron manufacturing country, and more especially against the history of the United States. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has read history to very little purpose if he does not understand that fact.

Iron or steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, billets, puddled bars, and loops or other forms less finished than iron or steel bars but more advanced than pig iron, except castings, two dollars per ton.

Mr. FOSTER. About what ad valorem duty was imposed on the best class of puddled bar?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not any calculation at hand which I can give my hon. friend on that point.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he placed a duty on puddled bar and arranged duties on manufactured articles into which puddled bar enters as material, and does not know what ad valorem duty was placed on puddled bar when he placed ad valorem duties on manufactured articles?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I went into the matter very carefully with those whom I was able to consult, but I have not at hand a statement in regard to ad valorem duties. The former duty was $5, and the old duty was an average of 28 per cent. The reduction made is very considerable.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, according to the hon. gentleman's calculation, he is giving 10 per cent protection on puddled bar.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not made to any large extent at present. It is a form of iron industry which is not being continued, the tendency of the trade is not to the manufacture of puddled bar. There is still some puddled bar made, but it is not made as largely as formerly.

Rolled iron or steel angles, tees, beams, channels, joists, girders, zees, stars or other rolled shapes, or trough, bridge, building or structural rolled sections or shapes, not punched, drilled or further manufactured than rolled, n.s.s., and flat eye-bar blanks not punched or drilled, ten per cent ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Why does the hon. gentleman propose to reduce the duty on those articles that come in for bridge building from 15 per cent to 10 per cent, as it stands at present, when after the reduction which the hon. gentleman has already made, a large contract was entered into by parties from the United States, who had to bring in their bridge material for the construction of a large work at Montreal under the duty of 15 per cent. It appears to me that if the tariff, as the hon. gentleman had arranged it in the first instance, enabled parties from the United States to come in and compete with the bridge-builders of Canada and secure a large contract, that is evidence that there is no necessity for making a further reduction from 15 to 10 per cent.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr Paterson). We did not know anything about the contract to which reference has been made; but the hon. gentleman will see that the effect of the reduction will be the very opposite from that which he has represented. The reduction from 15 to 10 per cent is in favour of our bridge-makers. This duty will apply to materials they would have to import, and when the duty is reduced from 15 to 10 per cent, our bridge manufacturers will have received an additional advantage of 5 per cent as against foreign manufacturers. It was because we had reduced the rate of duty upon bridge material below the rate that our manufacturers of bridges had previously enjoyed, and which they thought was sufficient to protect them against foreign competition, which the hon. gentleman said has been successful in one job, that relief was given them, and 5 per cent less duty was imposed. Incidentally, I might say that this argument might apply to the statement made by the senior member for Pictou this afternoon, when he announced that this would injure the Nova Scotia steel works. The $7 duty per ton is limited to classes of iron that can be produced by the New Glasgow Steel Company, and this reduction of from 15 to 10 per cent on bridge material is simply to enable our own manufacturers to compete. I trust I make myself plain to the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid I fail to make my hon. friend understand my objection, or else I have not appreciated his statement. When these resolutions were first introduced by the Government, the duty was placed at 15 per cent. Under that duty the manufacturers in the United States were able to compete successfully with our Canadian manufacturers. That being the case it would not seem to indicate a necessity for still further reducing the protection that the manufacturers of bridges had in this country.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The bridge manufacturers to which the hon. gentleman refers would be brought in under item 235 of the tariff, at 35 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are very large enterprises engaged in the manufacture of bridges in Canada, and in proportion as you lower the duty you allow outside parties to come in and compete with them. Under the former duty foreign manufacturers obtained large contracts in this country, and the position of the Canadian manufacturers certainly will not be improved by still further reducing the duty.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension. This clause is rather in favour of the Canadian builder of bridges, and the reduction is in the line of giving a benefit to our own bridge builders. Persons bringing in steel bridges would pay 35 per cent duty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These are the raw materials which are used in the construction of bridges, and so far as the element of protection is in this item, it will be beneficial to the Canadian bridge maker.

Forgings of iron or steel of whatever shape or size or in whatever stage of manufacture, n.e.s.; and steel shafting, turned, compressed or polished; and hammered iron or steel bars or shapes, n.o.p., thirty per cent ad valorem.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I move that the words "or steel" "or shapes" in the last line be struck out. These words make the item conflict with item 229.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend surely is not going to make a distinction between an iron shape and a steel shape. Iron and steel are practically the same in cost, and there is no conflict between this item and item 229, which deals with straight bars.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is not an appraiser in the service who can tell where steel ends and iron begins. You cannot tell whether a hammered bar is iron or steel.

Mr. FOSTER. But you can tell a hammered bar from another bar.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It has been well considered by our hardware appraiser.

Mr. FOSTER. An appraiser is sometimes a good man to take an opinion from, but there are two things to be considered: one is to make an item which will be easy for the customs appraiser to understand, the other is to make an item so that proper proportion of duty will be had. If you are going to admit all hammered bars at 5 per cent, and then make a distinction between the hammered iron and the steel bar, charging hammered shapes of iron 30 per cent, and steel shapes 5 per cent, I am quite certain you will get into deep water. I should think it would be better to let this item stand.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. This was well thought out by one capable of judging. But we will let it stand, and bring it under consideration again.

Springs, axles, axle bars and axle blanks, and parts thereof, of iron or steel, for railway and tramway vehicles, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Springs, axles, axle bars and axle blanks, and parts thereof, of iron or steel, including cart or wagon skeins or boxes, n.e.s., thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest that these two items be made one by striking out the words, "for railway or tramway vehicles," and striking out the second altogether. I think both kinds of axles should bear the same duty. In the old tariff the duty was 1 cent a pound and 20 per cent. The smaller axle bore very much the higher duty, and I know that if the duty is left at 30 per cent, it will very seriously cripple a large industry in this country engaged in the manufacture of carriage springs and axles. The change I suggest would make all springs and axles 35 per cent, and would simplify the working of the tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. That might very well be done. These are very small articles, and the heightened duty does not give them very much.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As we have let another item stand, I think we might let these stand, and we will look into the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Wire nails of all kinds, n.o.p., three-fifths of one cent per pound.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend first charged 35 per cent ad valorem, and considered the ad valorem the orthodox duty, but he has now gone back on his faith and considers a specific rate the orthodox duty. What has led to the hon. gentleman's change of faith? Did he find that his first tariff would not protect the industry?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not admit that the specific is the orthodox duty. In the tariff of the late Government the duty was 1 cent a pound, or a dollar a hundred. We now charge a duty of 60 cents a hundred pounds, which shows a reduction of a very substantial character.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the average rate of the old tariff?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. About 46 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend did not tell us how it is he came to the conclusion at one time that the orthodox duty was the ad valorem duty and then, in a little while afterwards, adopted the view that the orthodox duty was the specific duty. It is really so interesting that we would like to understand the reason of the change. Perhaps the hon. Controller of Customs can explain.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. For the purpose of valuation, in the case of under-valuation, the specific duty would tell.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very satisfactory to find my hon. friend admitting that we must guard against under-valuation, and to do so we must adopt the specific duty.

Mr. MONK. The importance of this item and the fact that the town of Lachine has a very large nail factory and has made heavy sacrifices for the establishment and maintenance of that industry, compel me to take up a few moments of the time of the committee while I set forth the claims of this industry to better protection. It is evident that the intention of the Government was to give some measure of protection to this article. What I submit is that the protection given is insufficient. If it were the desire of the Government to extend to that industry that amount of support which we were given to understand by the speech of the hon. Finance Minister would be given to existing industries, that object has not been attained. Nothing less than a duty of $1 per 100 pounds could possibly enable that industry to maintain itself, and it might be just as well without protection as with the duty now imposed. The raw material from which these wire nails are made is wire and the sources of supply are in Canada and the United States. Some of the factories draw the wire themselves and supply also the non-drawing factories. In the United States some factories go through the whole five processes, from the pig iron to the finished nails, and these large factories are thus in a position to produce the nails at a very low cost.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Our people want cheap nails.

Mr. MONK. They want industries as well. The average price of nail wire in the United States is $1.15 per 100 pounds, and in Canada $1.42, or a difference of 27 cents in favour of the United States. Out of the 27 cents protection, about 14 cents is paid in freight on the rods from the United States, leaving 13 cents to pay duty on mill supplies, fuel and the difference between the cost of production in the Canadian and American factories. As regards the price of the nails which are made out of this wire, there is considerable difference between the prices in the United States and this country. In Ontario the price is $2.42 per 100; in Pittsburg, U. S., it is $1.50; in New York it is $1.55; in St. Louis, $1.70; in Chicago, $1.60. But the best method of comparison is to take the price ruling in the province of Ontario, where is a larger number of nails used than in any other province, and which is also nearer the centres of American production, and compare that with the price in Pittsburg. The difference is 92 cents, but the American nails are of a heavier calibre, and consequently in a hundred pound American keg there are fewer nails than in a hundred-pound Canadian keg, so that an allowance of 15 per cent can be generally made. The actual difference, therefore, taking into consideration this percentage, would not be 92 cents, but 68 cents. When the duty was $1 per 100 pounds, the difference in price was 92 cents, but if you allow 14 cents for the freight on the rods for the wire mills, and 13 cents protection for the wire-drawer in this country, and 15 cents for freight on the wire to the nail factory, which is a fair allowance, and 20 cents for the margin to the jobbers who handle the nails and sell the goods, you arrive at a total of 62 cents, leaving a margin of 30 cents to pay the duty on all supplies and the fuel and the difference in cost to our manufacturers, and also to give 100 nails instead of 85 corresponding nails which you find in the American keg.

If we turn to the cost of the nails in the United States, we find that in reality the Americans make their profit on the primary process, because they cannot, it is claimed, get a profit out of the cost of the nails. The American nail averages $1.45; but the wire from which the nail is made costs $1.15 and the keg 10 cents, making a total of $1.25, which leaves only 20 cents as the margin for manufacture in the United States, on which, it is claimed, it is impossible to manufacture the nails. Now, our own costs of manufacture are greater than those in the United States factories. Most of the large American factories which turn out the nails have been purchased at comparatively low prices, many of them, I am informed, at auction. That is one cause of the difference. But another is the immense production of nails in the United States. They turn out over six million kegs of wire nails every year, against 200,000 kegs in Canada. Some American factories turn out as many as 3,500 kegs every day, the demand being so great that they are able to work for a long time—some factories, even, as I am informed, exclusively—on certain sizes of nails, rendering the cost of production much less. And, as I have already intimated to the committee, the Americans take their profit upon the earlier processes, of which there are five. Now, what I submit to the Government and the committee is this: If the object of this tariff is to save this industry, this does not attain it, because, with 60 per cent duty, the industry cannot possibly continue.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not 60 per cent.

Mr. MONK. Three-fifths of a cent per pound or 60 cents per 100 pounds. Nothing less than one cent per pound, I am informed, will enable this industry to go on. It would be better, if the industry is destroyed, to wipe out the duty completely. But, as I understand, that is not the intention of the Government. In regard to many industries, the Government have carried out what was foreshadowed, and the duties have been maintained at a point necessary for the carrying on of the industry. Why should there be any discrimination? Why should not this industry be saved as well as others, particularly if they establish, as I believe they have done, with the utmost sincerity and submitting figures, that it was impossible for them to maintain the industry at any lower duty than one cent per pound? As I stated, the town of Lachine is interested in the maintenance of this as well as other industries affected by the tariff, and for this reason especially I have thought it my duty to bring this to the attention of the Government and of the committee.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) was loaded upon this question before the tariff was brought down. I know something of the wire nail trade, and I am free to say that, on the whole, the wire nail manufacturers are fairly well satisfied. They were not satisfied with the tariff as it came down in the first instance. I myself handle a very large quantity of nails the production of manufactures in the west, and I know, as a matter of fact, that the manufacturers are fairly well satisfied—not as well as if they had one cent per pound, but well enough to be willing to go on and see what they can do, and I am quite satisfied that they can hold their own and keep the American nails out. As to the speech we have just listened to, I have the material for it in my desk, made up by Mr. Whittin, of Hamilton, who got these facts together. But, they were furnished before the change was made in the tariff making it 60 cents per 100 pounds instead of one cent per pound.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) made a mistake, I think, which will leave the impression that three-fifths of a cent per pound would be 60 per cent. The duty under this tariff is 60 cents per 100 pounds, which is not 60 per cent. I may say that in my own town of Gananoque we have a large industry engaged in wire nail manufacturing. They do not draw their wire but purchase it in the coils from the factories in Montreal. Those who control this factory tell me that it cannot possibly go on. I have a suggestion to make as between hon. gentlemen opposite and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. The difference between the duty of one cent per pound and the duty of three-fifths cents per pound is two-fifths cent. Now, I would suggest that we split the difference and make it four-fifths cent. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood) thinks that the manufacturers can hardly exist under the present tariff, but may go on for a while. I do not believe that it is the intention of the Government to leave the manufacturers merely hanging in the air. I think a duty of four-fifths cent, under present prices of raw material, would probably be a fair protection. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has quoted some figures, giving prices in the United States. What he has given is what is called the based price for nails. If you ordered a car load at that price you would receive all large sizes, the sellers would not give small nails at that price. The factory in Gananoque is engaged wholly in the manufacture of the smaller sizes. The factory is closed, and I am satisfied that it will remain closed unless better protection is given.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Those drawing their own wire can compete with the Americans.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps, but it will be very close. They will have to reduce the wages of the men 10 or 15 per cent. But the factory that does not draw its own wire must simply close up. My friend, Mr. Parmenter, whom my hon. friend (Mr. Wood) knows, and whose word is as good as his bond, tells me that under the present duty the factory will have to remain idle.

Mr. MCGREGOR. We want to give the poor fellow who uses the nails a chance.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is something like for coal oil. The average farmer does not use 25 cents worth of nails in a year.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes. I speak of the average. Of course, if a man is building a barn or something of that kind, he will use a few kegs of nails. But, under ordinary circumstances, five or ten pounds will do him for a year. The difference between three-fifths cent and four-fifths cent will not amount to half as much as the increase you make on tobacco.

Mr. PENNY. I was in conversation with one of the largest nail manufacturers in Montreal, and he did not say anything about the closing of his factory. He expressed himself as satisfied with the tariff as it is to-day.

Mr. MONK. I would not have taken up a moment of the committee's time, if my information were such as that intimated by the hon. member for Hamilton. There is a large factory in Lachine, which draws its own wire, and my information is from those in charge of that factory. I do not pretend to know the facts myself. I am a lawyer, and, though we do a great deal of nailing, we do not manufacture nails. My information is quite different from that of the hon. gentleman. The representative of the factory to which I referred assumed that they are unable to continue under this duty. The hon. gentleman may say that they are able to run, but the representations made to me are to the contrary.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The drop from $1 to 60 cents per 100 pounds is a severe cut—no doubt about that. But, for those who do not draw their own wire the duty on the wire is reduced, while the rod from which the wire is drawn comes in free. These wire nails are an article that go into very general use and it is desirable that they should be made as cheap as possible. Of course no one would desire to extinguish this industry. Any one can see that they will have less margin at 60 cents than at $1. But, after all, we do not anticipate the evil results that hon. gentlemen seem to fear. But I think that we must not anticipate, or look upon the matter as gloomily from the manufacturers' standpoint as my hon. friends opposite do. I confess it is a very large cut, but it is made in the interest of the consumers.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be a great pity if my hon. friend, in keeping the duty ostensibly with the view of maintaining the industry, were to miss it by a very small amount. You see in that case you would not be giving the consumer the full benefit, you would give him that if you took the duty off entirely, and you would be running the risk of shutting up the industry. Now, if you come to the difference between three fifths and four-fifths, it is so infinitesimally small as applied to the general consumer, the average consumer of nails, the farmer, the average consumption of nails by him is so small that it is a small amount at best. Suppose he paid it all, or suppose he gained it all, it would be but a very small amount. But, again, you simply reduce that by one-fifth, and I venture to say that it won't appreciably lower what the farmer, the ultimate consumer, has to pay. I venture to say that nearly the whole of that, may be the whole of it, will go into the pockets of the middlemen between the manufacturer and the ultimate consumer, whilst this small amount to the ultimate consumer may be that which makes the difference between actually being able to carry on the industry, and ruin and loss. The manufacturer has to bear the whole of that. The small amount of one-fifth would be, I am satisfied, taken up by the middlemen. I do not believe that the average consumer of the article would feel the burden relaxed by a single feather's weight. My information is that it will not be possible for this industry to exist on present rates of wages, if this reduction is made. My hon. friend said: But the rod comes in free. I think my hon. friend will know, if he has inquired into this matter, that it has often occurred that they will sell you nails at Pittsburg cheaper than they will sell you the rods out of which you are to draw the wire out of which you are to make the nails. That has occurred again and again, it is one of the peculiarities of this iron business. It would be a great pity if my hon. friend strained his free trade or revenue views in the least with the idea of making the industry self-sustaining, if he failed to sustain it by omitting to put on one-fifth of a cent, which my information is would enable the industry fairly well to exist. Besides, if my hon. friend makes a reduction in reference to imports, he is favouring entirely the United States. The whole bulk of our nails come from the United States, and not from Great Britain at all. About a quarter of a million pounds of nails come in from the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to say to the hon. member for Essex (Mr. McGregor), who appears to want to get nails cheap in this country, that the Canadian farmer to-day is buying his nails by the keg cheaper than the American farmer across the line. I made an inquiry a few weeks ago in a hardware store in Cleveland, and compared with our prices in Gananoque, I find that our prices are lower than they are in Cleveland. It may be that under the three-fifths, all these large mills that draw their own wire and make the larger sizes of nails, may go on; but I can assure the hon. gentleman that it is not so with the industry at Gananoque and others similarly situated throughout the country, that have to import and pay freight on their wire to their factories. They have plant there now running, they have experienced men running these machines, and it is simply a question of throwing it all into the hands of the big men and closing up these smaller establishments that are filling a gap in this country. The large ones may exist, but as my hon. friend said, you can buy large-sized nails at Pittsburg, and they will give quotations to export them cheaper than they will for the rods.

Mr. MCGREGOR. If they keep on, they will give them to us for nothing.

Mr. TAYLOR. They will do anything they can to close up Canadian industries, and if these smaller shops are closed, such as the one in Gananoque that employs ten or fifteen hands, and several others like it in the country, the bigger ones will amalgamate with the large concerns over in the United States, and they will have the same prices in Canada as in the United States. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Canadian farmer to-day is getting his nails cheaper than the American farmer.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I would like it if the Government could see their way to make the duty three-quarters of a cent a pound. I think that would give general satisfaction. I do not want to urge them to do it, but in the interest of the nail factories of which we have several in the west, who are doing a very large business, I would be pleased if the Government could do so. It would enable these factories to carry on their business.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The consumer has been paying for a long time a large amount of duty on these nails, and if you are going to cut at all, I think we ought to say two-fifths instead of three-fifths and give the consumer a little chance. The manufacturers have been protected for many years.

The hon. gentleman opposite says, give the manufacturers an opportunity, let them get on their feet and they will compete against the Americans. They have been on their feet for eighteen years, and they are not prepared to compete to-day. Now, I say, give the consumer a chance, let him get on his feet and see how he will stand. If you are going to cut at all, cut it down to 50 cents. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said that nails are higher in the United States than they are in Canada. Now, surely that is not so.

Mr. TAYLOR. By retail to the farmer?

Mr. McGREGOR. There is a difference between sense and nonsense. We are supposed to talk sense when we come here, and not nonsense.

Mr. TAYLOR. I took a deputation of five farmers through the United States some three years ago to compare prices, and I think my hon. friend has seen the report that I made. If my hon. friend from Essex and my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) will come home with me on Saturday, I will take them over the river and I will pay their expenses in case my statement is not true; if it is, they will pay the expenses and make a contribution for the benefit of the poor.

Mr. McMULLEN. I visited the United States last August and I found that the price of nails in Kansas City, to the consumers, is one cent a pound less than they are sold in Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. The member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has told us that finished nails are sold cheaper in Pittsburg than the plain wire is; then he tells us the next minute that finished nails are dearer in the United States than they are here; and that after the wire is brought into Canada and made into nails by Canadian labour, earning higher wages than the labour of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

Mr. OLIVER. It may be, but it does not sound all right to me.

Mr. FOSTER. One is the wholesale price and the other is the retail price.

Mr. OLIVER. As the retail price is necessarily based on the wholesale price, I may be forgiven by saying that I think the expression of the hon. member for Essex fills the Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said that Pittsburg quotation was for exporting. In Pittsburg they will give quotations for export to Canada at a lower rate than they will quote the rods.

Mr. CRAIG. I think the hon. member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) takes an entirely wrong view of business affairs when he is constantly talking about giving the consumer a chance. Now, I say that we are all consumers, the manufacturers are consumers. I do not know who he is talking about when he talks about consumers. I suppose the hon. gentleman means the farmers. We desire to give them a chance by giving them some population to whom to sell their produce. We do not want the factories closed. Take any farmer and he will pay for a farm a larger price if it is in the vicinity of a manufacturing town than if it is in the vicinity of a town that has no manufactures. The farmers use common-sense, and the hon. member should use common-sense also. There is a false idea prevailing in regard to the farmers. I lay down the proposition that almost everything is too cheap at the present time. Take clothing, boots and shoes—they are examples. If everything was somewhat dearer it would be better for the country.

An hon. MEMBER. You think that would increase the price of farm produce?

Mr. CRAIG. I hold that the prices of farm produce would increase. I can point to one town which furnishes an example, and that is Peterborough. There is a splendid market there, and a great many of the farmers from my riding go there twice a week with their produce.

Mr. McGREGOR. The farmers of Essex cannot go there.

Mr. CRAIG. I am giving Peterborough as an illustration. If the hon. gentleman cannot understand it, other members will, no doubt. Farmers living in the neighbourhood of Peterborough fully appreciate the manufacturing industries there, because they have a first-class market for their produce. Those farmers do not require to ship their butter or eggs by cold storage because they have a market at their doors. I believe the Government would be wise if they accepted the advice of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) and imposed a duty of three-quarters of a cent instead of three-fifths of a cent, if manufacturers consider it will make all the difference in regard to the prosperity of this industry. I do not believe the farmers are so selfish as they are represented to be, and in my opinion they would not object to this slight increase of duty if thereby the factories were kept employed instead of the employees being thrown out of work and compelled to go to the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would urge the Government to put wire nails on the free list. If there was any article that was cursed as regards the duty placed on it in the North-west, it was wire nails. On every platform throughout Manitoba and the North-west this duty was denounced. I should like to see this article placed on the free list, and not only so, but that a bounty should be given to the farmers to recoup them for the way in which they have been robbed by this duty.

Mr. McMILLAN. I cannot believe that the produce of the farmers is increased in price by the manufactures. Farmers believe that all our surplus produce goes to the British market and is disposed of there. While our small fruits and vegetables are more easily disposed of in the proximity of manufacturing towns, our beef, mutton and cheese go to the old country, and it cannot be pretended that the home market rules the price of the exported article. The farmers know too much to hold that opinion. There is no hon. gentleman who presses his arguments more strongly against the farmers than the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Craig), who at the same time pretends to be their friend; and it is high time we should let the House understand that the farmers understand their own business, and that our prices are ruled by those prevailing in the British market and not by the prices in the Canadian market.

Mr. CRAIG. Every one will agree with the hon. gentleman that the price of our exports is ruled by the price they can realize in the foreign market. I am not, however, talking about our exports, but as to what our farm produce can realize at home. It would be very interesting to obtain a correct statement as to the proportion of the farm produce that is consumed in the home market. I contend that a large part of it is so consumed—I am told seven-eighths. The hon. gentleman may talk about seven-eighths not amounting to anything; but it must be remembered that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) is engaged in the business of raising cattle for export. I have always considered that our farmers have much common-sense; I am practically elected by them, and I represent their views.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You are an equal righter, not a farmer.

Mr. CRAIG. It is true I believe in equal rights to the manufacturers and the farmers, and that we are all bound together as regards our interests. One simple statement I have made proves what I have said, that you may take any farmer and he will pay more for a farm near a prosperous manufacturing town than elsewhere; and that proves the proposition, that the farmers are greatly benefited by manufactures, and I do not believe they are so selfish as to oppose the granting of moderate protection to our manufacturers.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). The hon. member for Durham (Mr. Craig) has talked a good deal about the home market for farmers, but he has not taken into consideration the fact that while the home market may benefit the farmers in the east, there is no home market to benefit the farmers in the west, and we have to export our whole product. The hon. gentleman said that 10 cents would pay for all the nails a farmer used.

Mr. CRAIG. I did not say anything about nails.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Farmers use many dollar's worth of nails in a year for fencing. We had hoped that the Government would make a greater reduction than has been proposed if any change is to be made it should be to reduce the duty 10 per cent.

Mr. DAVIN. In respect to this important matter as regards the farmers of the North-west, I hold that faith should be kept with them and that the promises made by hon. gentlemen opposite should be carried out. I agree with the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) in regard to the desirability of reducing the duty, but I do not agree with him in the statement that the farmers of the North-west are not interested in the home market. If my hon. friend will look at the returns, he will find that both the North-west and Manitoba are interested in the home market. However, what we are interested in at this moment is nails. We all expected in the North-west Territories, that the Government would put nails on the free list, and, therefore, I move that this item be struck out of the tariff. I want to see these things placed on the free list. I want to see faith kept with the farmers. I want, in some detail of the tariff, to see hon. gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches in the novel position of keeping a single promise they have made. Therefore, I move that this item be omitted from the tariff.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You cannot get a seconder.

Mr. ROCHE. I will second it.

Mr. HEYD. Before that motion is put, Mr. Chairman, it would be just as well for us to get back to the realm of common-sense, and leave aside these buncombe resolutions. I had the pleasure of introducing a deputation of nail men to the Government in order that they might ask that their grievances should be redressed, and which grievances they would be subject to if the duty were left at 35 per cent ad valorem. They urged that the competition from the United States was so keen that 35 per cent would not enable them to continue the manufacture of nails, and I presume it was in consequence of this competition that the Government has made the duty 3-5ths of a cent per pound. As we have a wire nail industry in the city whence I come, I am in a position to say that they are satisfied with the tariff as the Government now proposes to make it. There is one disadvantage in raising the tariff, and that is that it might stimulate the industry of making nails in this country, so that the wire nail-makers would eat one another up. That would be the tendency if the duty was too high. I presume it is the desire of every one in this House that the nail men should live and that they should have a reasonable profit, but not too large a profit. The reduction in the price of nails of 40 cents on the hundred pounds which will be brought about by this new tariff is a considerable concession to the consuming classes of this country. I think the Government were wise in reducing the duty on nails, because the tendency undoubtedly would be to make the competition in Canada ultimately so keen that the nail-makers would not be able to make a living. As it is now, it would have this effect: That while we have in Canada I am informed fourteen nail-making concerns, seven of them buy the rod and draw the wire, while seven others buy the wire and make the nail. The concern in the city of Brantford is one of the seven which buys the wire, but owing to the reduction of duty they are compelled to put in a wire drawing machine, and the benefit accrues to the country that it has increased the demand for labour by compelling these seven wire concerns each to put in a wire-drawing plant. Brantford is being benefited by the reduction to the extent that it will double the number of employees engaged in nail making, while it will reduce the price of nails to the consumer exactly 40 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. DAVIN. I think, Sir, the hands are the hands of Esau, but the voice is the voice of Jacob. The gentleman who contested Brant (Mr. Henry) with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd), who has just addressed this House: his voice is heard here to-night, although we have another member in his place. The speech of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) is the speech of a high protectionist. He says that these nail manufacturers should live, and he lays down the proposition that this Government should make a tariff to enable these people to live. I had been educated in regard to this, sitting at the feet of the Gamaliel who is now the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I learned from that gentleman that these manufacturers were robbers, scoundrels great and scoundrels small.

Mr. FOSTER. Somebody has changed.

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, yes; the point of view is the great difference. Sir, I am not convinced by the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Heyd), and I must ask him to be more considerate for hon. gentlemen who are his leaders. The idea of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) coming into this House and characterizing a motion such as I make here in regard to this item as a buncombe motion: why, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) should be more considerate for his leaders. It is not respectful for a gentleman who has just come into this House to throw a slur on a man of the standing of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, on a man of the standing of the Minister of Customs, on a man of the standing in this House of the Minister of Finance. The idea of these gentlemen, who are Nestors in politics, being flouted by one of their newest fledglings in this House, causes even me to come to their defence, when their hon. friend (Mr. Heyd) asperses them in this contemptuous manner. I agree with the sentiments of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in regard to this item. I consider that we should have nails on the free list, and in the interests of the farmers of this country, I hope that my hon. friends who are now in power and in the majority in this House, will remember their professions, remember their pledges when in opposition, and place patriotism above party, and place their duty to the farmers of this country above their duty of the moment in this committee.

Motion (Mr. Davin) negatived.

Iron or steel shoe tacks, and ordinary cut tacks, leathered or not, brads, sprigs and shoe nails, double pointed tacks, and other tacks of iron and steel, n.e.s., thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the relative degree of protection as between the old tariff and the present one?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It is difficult to ascertain the uniform ad valorem rate. On many of these items, I dare say, the duty would run as high as 45 and 50 per cent, while in others it was not so high. We have placed these on our highest list of duties.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The old duty ran from 26 to 60 per cent in some of the items.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) venture the opinion as to whether the present duty, which certainly is a great lowering on the small tacks, will be able to maintain the industry?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The representatives of these various industries who come to see us generally allege that the protection is not enough for them; but we still hope there is enough. Certainly it is a very severe reduction, and I cannot answer my hon. friend's question further than to say that our expectation is that they will still do business.

Mr. FOSTER. For the very small cost on the quantity used by the general consumer, does my hon. friend think that it would be well to endanger the industry? It is not likely that the very small reduction in the cost of shoe tacks will appreciably lower the price to the consumer. I think it is simply a squeeze that the shoe-tack maker will get, while the consumer will get no advantage at all. It may be of considerable advantage to the manufacturer who uses these tacks largely; but he will not reduce the price of his material to the ultimate consumer on that account. I very much fear that the tack industry will be gone under this cut.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Representing as I do an agricultural constituency, a constituency of consumers, I beg to call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman who has just sat down and some of his friends have calculated, as various items of this tariff have come up, the very small amount in which the reduction on each article was going to benefit the consumer. But he must bear in mind that the consumer consumes all these articles, and that a very small reduction in the price of all of them mounts up to a good deal in the aggregate. Our farmers in Canada, and in the North-west, particularly, having no advantage of that home market to which our hon. friend from East Durham (Mr. Craig) alluded, have to figure on the export price for their produce; and every dollar they can save on any item in the tariff just counts so much in their annual income. We who are supporting the Government feel inclined to approve of reductions in this tariff. We do not think that in many cases the reductions are enough; but we do not wish to upset the balance of trade entirely in Canada at present. We wish to be reasonable, and, while desirous of giving the manufacturers a fair show, we must on behalf of the farmers of the North-west protest against the arguments adduced by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side. It is true, a farmer may save only a few cents a year on wire nails, a few cents on coal oil, a few cents on this, that, and the other thing; but these few cents added together, and taken into consideration along with the price he gets for his products, make a considerable item in his income every year. A prosperous set of individuals makes a prosperous country, and when we consider the large number of those engaged in agricultural pursuits in proportion to those engaged in manufactures, the interests of the farmers should be considered in this House. I was rather amused at the ingenious argument of the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Craig) in regard to the home market. I would like to ask how much more the farmer in the neighbourhood of Peterborough gets per pound for his butter or per dozen for his eggs than any other farmer in Canada. The price is ruled by the export price; and when the hon. gentleman takes into account the very small export of manufactured goods compared with the export of agricultural products, I would like to know if his theory is correct where the money is to come from to provide a home market for the farmers. The condition advocated by the hon. gentleman would be like a man with his family going on a quarter section, raising produce and cattle, and eating up everything themselves. On behalf of the farmers, I must protest against all these arguments that we are constantly hearing. As the old Scotch proverb says, many a little makes a muckle, and the farmers' interests must be looked after in this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how much the farmer in the North-west consumes of 16-ounce-to-the-thousand shoe tacks in the year, and how much difference it makes in his living expenses whether these shoe tacks have a duty of 35 per cent or 1½ cents per pound. He has grown eloquent as to the immense saving this would be to the farmer. Two seats behind him there sits a gentleman who this evening declared that the makers of agricultural implements were now getting their iron $9 a ton less than before this tariff came in. That gentleman made a very enthusiastic and rosy speech. He has saved $9 a thousand on his raw material, and he makes the agricultural implements which the farmer of the North-west uses. They cost money—$100, $115, $125. If the farmer of the North-west could only have had at the other end the advantage of the saving which my hon. friend gets on his raw materials, that would have been something; but on 16-ounce-to-the-thousand shoe tacks he does not get much.

Mr. CLANCY. It is quite evident that the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) is not a farmer. If he were, I am quite sure the farmers would repudiate him as a spokesman for them. It is pretty evident that the hon. gentleman knows very little about farming when he supposes that the condition of the farmers is such that they are driven to a saving on an ounce of shoe tacks. It is paying a very poor compliment to the farmers of one country to suggest that they are to be beggared by this sort of thing. A great number of these gentlemen have a particular aptitude for talking about small things. In the elections they talked about many small things, such as wire nails and binder twine. The farmers are just as anxious to save as other people; they are obliged to save, owing to the small margin they have; and now the hon. member for Macdonald has discovered that their farms are likely to be mortgaged because they have to buy an ounce of shoe tacks in the year. These hon. gentlemen are essentially gentlemen of small grievances. I submit that the farmers of this country are quite as intelligent as these hon. gentlemen who presume to teach them. They are not looking for impossibilities. They cannot stand alone, but must look for consumers among those who are engaged in other pursuits, and it is a most unsound doctrine to say that our farmers are not interested in finding consumers. If they are not, why do we spend large sums in trying to open to them outside markets where they must compete against the cheap products of other countries. When hon. gentlemen say that in every case the export price governs the price at home, they show that they have thought considerably less and know considerably less about the trade of the country than the men whom they profess to teach. Is there any hon. gentleman who does not know, does the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), who is a miller, not know that within the past two years our millers have been paying higher prices for wheat than the export market would warrant, I do not say that such is always the case, but I say that it occasionally does happen, and it is evident that hon. gentlemen opposite talk a good deal of rant about this matter.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) says that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House talk a great deal of small things. That cannot be always the case, because we talk occasionally of the great Conservative party and sometimes also of the hon. member for Bothwell himself. He alleged that I am in the habit of selling coal oil at a profit of 100 per cent. He evidently does not know much about the coal oil question in the North-west Territories, or he would not make such an absurd statement, but no doubt he felt impelled to follow the lead given him by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), the other day, when that hon. gentleman said that the freight on coal oil from the wells to Winnipeg was 3 cents a gallon. A statement of that kind does not reflect very much credit on his knowledge of the business. Had he said that the freight was more like 12½ cents per gallon, he would have been much nearer the truth. When the oil gets to our country, it costs us about 38 cents wholesale, and we have to retail it at 40 to 45 cents, which I do not think can be called an exorbitant price. These gentlemen are evidently trying to create the impression that the farmers out west are suffering at the hands of the retailers, but such is far from being the case, because the retailer out there has to pay such high freight rates, that he cannot possibly make as much profit as retailers do in the east, and could not possibly charge the exorbitant prices which the hon. member for Bothwell and the ex-Finance Minister talk so glibly about.

Screws, commonly called wood screws, of iron or steel, brass or other metal, plated or not, including lag or coach screws, and machine or other screws, n.o.p., thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS moved that the words "plated or not" be struck out of the second line and inserted after the words "screws n.o.p.," in the third line.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. FOSTER. Why raise the duty on some screws when it is lowered on others?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I do not think there is much of an advantage.

Mr. FOSTER. How is it, now that you have lowered the duty on iron and steel, and taken such glory to yourselves for doing it, that you are raising the duty on screws made of iron and steel by 5 per cent?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. To what screws do you refer?

Mr. FOSTER. Iron, steel, and brass, which were formerly 30 per cent and are now 35.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The reason is because all the screws seem to go into one class, and on the whole 35 per cent was thought to be a fair rate. As respects that particular item, the hon. gentleman is right, but as respects the other items included in the number, the reduction is very substantial. If the whole item were made 30 per cent, the reduction would be very severe indeed. Of course the item could be divided as before, but there is something in favour of bringing the articles under the one item.

Mr. FOSTER. That is one of the oddest reasons for an increase of duty I have ever heard.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is a very good one.

Mr. FOSTER. In order to avoid the trouble of having two items, they go to work and combine in the one item two kinds of manufactures altogether different. They say to one set of manufacturers, we will reduce the duty upon your product, and they reduce that so low that the results, I think, will be rather serious to those who make wood screws. Then they went to work and reduced the duty on iron and steel, under the idea that everything made from iron and steel could be manufactured more cheaply. And just for the sake of crushing two items into one, after they have lowered the duties on iron and steel, they raise the duty 5 per cent on the manufactured article. And when asked for a reason, they say it is better to have one item rather than two.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The duty is not raised after all, because the 35 per cent is subject to the preferential reduction; and the great class of screws here enumerated is the class which, under the hon. gentleman's tariff, paid 35 and 50 and sometimes 60 per cent. The object is uniformity of tariff, and the screws to which the hon. gentleman alludes form a very small proportion of those used.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman can hardly get out of the difficulty that way because the preferential reduction applies to every item in the tariff. The hon. gentleman goes to work, in the one case, and raises the duty on the manufactured article, although he had reduced the duty on the raw material out of which it is manufactured, but in another case he reduces the duty both on the raw material and the manufactured article. In both cases, the duties are subject to the preferential reduction, so that the inconsistency still exists. I cannot see why he makes fish of one and flesh of another.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We did that for the purpose of having uniformity of rate. Under the old tariff the duty on wood screws, reduced to ad valorem, amounted in some cases to 35 per cent, in some cases to 48 per cent and in others to 58 per cent. We put them all together. Then there was an item which at some ports might be classed in with these, and which we have included with this item. This raises it, it is true, from 30 per cent to 35 per cent, but the item is a small one, and the increase is necessary in order to secure uniformity. As a duty of 35 per cent represents such a large reduction in many lines of wood screws, we thought it would be unfair to put it at 30 per cent—that that would be too much of a drop.

Mr. FOSTER. But it was not necessary to do that.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It was, in order to secure uniformity.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman might as well have put in biscuits with something else, instead of simply raising them 2½ per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) did not, in his old tariff, have such a duty on biscuits as there was on wood screws.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no principle in the changes made by the hon. gentleman. In the case of the duty on steel and iron, he made a reduction, but still kept up the duties on the goods for which they were the raw material. In other cases the reduction of the duty on the raw material is an excuse for reducing the duty on the manufactured article.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman knows that one of the main points was to simplify the tariff. That is a most desirable object, and we have succeeded in attaining it. In some cases, in order to secure simplicity and uniformity some articles have been slightly raised according to the general tariff, but in no case has there been an increase, I think, allowing for the reduction under the minimum tariff. As in this case those items that are increased are of small importance, and the uniformity and simplicity secured are a very desirable feature.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) had to go to the custom-house as often as merchants do, he would see the advantage of this. Under the tariff for which the hon. gentleman was responsible, the difficulty of passing entries was almost incredible. In a large house it took a man doing nothing else but writing out these various items and arranging them for the custom-house. I think the Government deserves a great deal of credit. In the consolidation of these things, the effect will be to reduce the work in a large house very greatly. To make this saving, the merchant would be willing to pay a small percentage more.

Mr. FOSTER. How about the poor consumer in the North-west.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I cannot tell about that.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. He pays the expense, whether in duties or in clerk hire.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The consumer will get this important class of articles at 35 per cent on some of which he formerly paid 58 per cent, and if they come from England, he will, in fifteen months, get them for one-quarter less.

Mr. FOSTER. How much better, then, if the hon. gentleman had gone a little further, and given them the other article a little lower.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That would have stood in the way of simplifying the tariff.

Mr. WALLACE. I don't think that that is simplifying the tariff; it is jumbling it up, making it more complex. In the hardware schedule in the old tariff, I think there were ninety-five items, while in the present tariff there are 104. This is making it not easier but more difficult for the importer. But what about the effect upon the industries of the country? This is all left out of account, and the only thing we are told is that this will simplify the tariff. We are told about the reduction of one-eighth now and one-eighth later on screws imported from Great Britain. But these goods are almost entirely imported from the United States. For instance, the imports from Great Britain in one clause amounted to 163 pounds, and from the United States 21,689 pounds. In another class the imports from the United States were 3,000 pounds, from Great Britain 39,000 pounds. So, this reduction of one-eighth or one-quarter amounts practically to nothing with regard to wood screws, as the imports come almost entirely from the United States. With more items in this schedule than under the old tariff, I cannot see that we are simplifying it very much.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. When the hon. gentleman again becomes Controller of Customs and returns to the department he will be surprised to find what wonderful improvements have been made.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

Barbed wire and galvanized wire for fencing, Nos. 9, 12 and 13 gauge, 15 per cent ad valorem, until 1st January, 1898; thereafter, free.

Mr. FOSTER. Why was not my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) equally careful with reference to other industries, where he made a large reduction to give them a chance to get rid of their stocks.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, I think not. Surgical instruments were made free, but I think there is a provision in this to allow them a certain length of time to sell their present stock.

Mr. FOSTER. The duty on this article was not very heavy, and the hon. gentleman is going to take it off, and he leaves a certain amount so that those who have a stock on hand may get rid of it. The principle is that he does not wish to depreciate unduly the stock a man has on hand when a change is made. Why does he not apply the same principle to the heavy goods? Barbed wire and binder twine are two instances on which the hon. gentleman keeps the duty for a while. It does seem odd that you are going to introduce the principle that when you depreciate goods which are in stock by lowering the duty, you shall allow one man six months to get rid of his stock, but you shall not allow the other man the same privilege.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. My hon. friend can see that barbed wire is to be placed upon the free list.

Mr. FOSTER. So is binder twine.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We are treating both alike. The case he alludes to is one in which there is a reduction in duty, in some cases a larger reduction.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman reduced any article as much as 12½ per cent?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, we have.

Mr. FOSTER. You have reduced binder twine, but nothing else. You are giving the binder twine contractor, who has a large stock on hand, a certain time to get rid of his stock off which you have taken 12½ per cent duty. You have reduced other duties on large articles by much more than 12½ per cent.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman made some reductions himself, they were not very great, but he did not follow the plan of giving them any time on which to sell the stock that they had on hand.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my hon. friend know that the amount of reduction is equivalent to the reduction in the value of the article? If you take 12½ per cent off from all cotton goods in store, or all woollen goods, you depreciate their value by that much presumably. It does not make any difference whether you make a 12½ per cent article free, or whether you make a 30 per cent article 12½ per cent, the amount of depreciation in the article is the same. You have adopted the principle of giving certain favoured ones eight or ten months in which to get rid of their stock.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The barbed wire and binder twine manufacturers are not at this time considering themselves the favoured individuals that the hon. gentleman mentions. I think he fully understands the distinction between the two cases. These are articles which go on the 1st of January, on the free list, and it was thought only right to leave them the rate of duty—the barbed wire duty is reduced to 15 per cent, which is much lower than it was—till the 1st of January, and the binder twine is left at the same rate until the 1st of January. I think the hon. gentleman will not be able to consider these as parallel cases with others in which there have been reductions made, but on which there is still as an incident of the duty that is levied, a considerable amount of protection left.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the Controller of Customs, since he has drawn a broad distinction between goods placed upon the free list and those upon which he still retains a duty, will tell us why the distinction was not made in favour of the holders of Indian corn that is placed upon the free list. There is no time given those gentlemen, the farmers. My hon. friend's logic is gone with regard to that. The farmer is sacrificed, he has been given no time. Those hon. gentlemen have been crying out for the farmers lately. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be able to explain why those who are dealing in the instruments of dentists and surgeons have had time to get rid of their stock, and the farmers have not had time to get rid of their corn and other articles.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Has the hon. gentleman not sold all the corn he has to sell, yet?

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman asked those engaged in selling dental instruments if they had sold them all. Has the hon. gentleman sold all his goods himself? I tell the hon. gentleman that anything that he has to sell has not been touched. I remember a speech the hon. gentleman made in the city of London not more than 12 or 15 months ago. He was answering a query put by a Conservative who declared that the hon. gentleman had been making money on the goods he had been manufacturing, and the hon. gentleman said: If I have made money, what must be the condition of the consumer? The hon. gentleman has made money, and the consumer still languishes as he did before.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). If any person has a right to complain with reference to the effect of taking off duties, it is the merchant. But so far as I know throughout the country, the merchants are not complaining, they are rather complimenting the Government upon the satisfactory tariff that they have given to the country.

Mr. FOSTER. What merchants?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I can give you a whole host of them. Some of the hon. gentleman's warmest supporters in Toronto have made a declaration almost, that they are perfectly satisfied with the tariff, and glad to see, particularly, the way in which the tariff has been simplified so that an enormous amount of work will no longer be thrown upon their clerks in making entries from time to time, as they have had to do in the past. The duty taken off iron has hit my own firm pretty severely, but I am not finding any fault, somebody has got to be hit when a tariff is reduced. But it is the merchants and not the farmers who have most reason to complain at the present time, but I am glad to say that very few of them are doing it.

Mr. MONK. I cannot allow the item to pass without making some protest. Whatever doubt may have existed in regard to wire nails, there is no doubt that this item entails the absolute destruction of a considerable amount of capital invested in this industry. We have eleven factories in all in Canada, there is a large one in the town of Lachine, in my county. There is no doubt that their output of 6,000 tons a year is going to cease now, there is no doubt that they are unable to compete with the Americans, and this for various causes. In the first place, as I said a moment ago in speaking about wire nails, the same remark applies to this. The Americans make their profits upon several processes, and, therefore, are enabled for that reason alone, if for no other, to manufacture for lower prices than our own factories. In the next place they pay much less for coal than we do, and they run winter and summer. In that respect we are less fortunately situated than they are. Now, Sir, when these industries are wiped out, a large number of skilled hands are thrown out of employment, and kindred industries are affected. The barbed wire factories spend over $6,000 a year in wooden rollers upon which the wire is wound. They spend over $20,000 a year for transportation. Since the first duty was put on, which I believe in its inception was $1.50 per hundred pounds, they have been steadily reducing it until the duty got down to 75 cents. Now, that duty of 75 cents was applied by them in this way—I give the details because the impression exists that they make a great deal of money, and get that money out of the farmers and poor men. The duty on galvanized wire was 32 cents per 100 pounds; the freight was 17 cents, disbursements to jobbers 5 per cent or 14 cents, excess of freight in Canada as compared with the United States, 4 cents; or in all 67 cents, leaving 8 cents for protection, to cover excess of cost of coal, deficit for limited output, etc. Of course under these circumstances it is easy to understand how this industry may be affected. It may not be an indifferent matter to the committee to learn that 150 workmen are employed at $50,000 for wages annually. Then there are freights paid railways and steamers on materials, which may be placed at $25,000; coal at $6,000, acids $12,500, cartage $2,500. I have already mentioned lumber for reels, $6,000. All these items make a total of $102,000. The question is constantly being put, what is this going to do for the farmer? The farmer must realize, as Cobden says, that his interests is not different and distinct from the interest of the manufacturer. The manufacturers and those surrounding him contribute largely to the farmer's prosperity. But the farmer is protected very considerably by this tariff. Under the tariff there are many specific duties in favour of the farmer, and if hon. gentlemen will examine the items and compare prices with the prices of farm produce in the United States, they will find that there is a protective duty for our farmers varying from 30 to 100 per cent, very frequently 35 and 40 per cent, that is taking the prices at the present time of farm produce in the United States. I find no fault with that concession; I am aware, although I am not a farmer, that our farmers claim they are at the present time insufficiently protected. I do not claim that the farmers in my county are more intelligent than farmers elsewhere, but if a jury of farmers were in possession of all the facts connected with this particular industry, very few of them would condemn the protection given. So far as regards the North-west, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) said he was very anxious to see the duty on wire nails disappear completely. The North-west representatives must realize the fact, which they have apparently not realized, that the North-west is not the whole universe. There is the East, and it must not be forgotten what the east has done for the west, and what it is now being asked to do for the west. If a calculation were made it would be found that the west is considerably in debt to the east. Of this output of 6,000 tons of wire, statistics show that about 2,000 tons are used by railway companies for fencing purposes. This leaves 4,000 tons. According to the last census, our farming population is a little over 500,000, and the removal of the duty will give 12 cents to each one engaged in farming. The hon. member for Macdonald said that they were economical, and he stated a proverb to that effect. But there is another Scotch saying, which members from the North-west seem to have adopted very generally, and that is, "Take all, keep all, and give nothing away." I scarcely hope the Government will reconsider their decision in regard to this item, but I thought it my duty to present these views to the committee, and I trust the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) will support them.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to make a bargain in regard to items of this tariff. If it can be arranged that by an alteration in the tariff, prices will thereby be raised to the farmers, as it is claimed they will be on manufactured articles, by the advocates of the protective tariff, I will guarantee that the farmers will support any tariff on manufactured articles if we are given corresponding changes in the agricultural schedule. Hon. gentlemen opposite have told the committee that an alteration of an almost infinitesimal amount means prosperity or ruin to the manufacturing industry. If they will show that the addition of 2 cents or 10 cents or more as we may ask to the tariff on agricultural products will raise the price to that extent to the farmers, we will agree to any rate of tariff that the manufacturers may ask.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the taking off of duties on agricultural products raise the price?

Mr. OLIVER. We are not asking for duties to be taken off.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then you should not ask us to take the duties off manufactured articles.

Mr. OLIVER. I am prepared to give the manufacturer any duty, provided you guarantee an increased price in farm products as a result of correspondingly increased duties on those products. Will any hon. gentleman accept the offer?

An hon. MEMBER. Put it in writing.

Mr. OLIVER. If hon. gentlemen are not willing to accept the offer, they had better stop talking on the identity of the tariff interests, of the farmer and manufacturer.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman's offer was not altogether correctly presented, nor was it made in writing. The offer to be a fair one should be this: that if by leaving duty on manufactured goods, you would raise their price, then the Government should impose duties which would have a similar effect as regards agricultural products. That would be a fair proposition. If the hon. gentleman would put that in writing, we shall all be ready to sign it at once.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. CLANCY. Does this item include all kinds of wire for fencing purposes? The hon. gentleman is aware that there are other kinds of wire fencing than barb wire. There are a dozen different kinds besides the two mentioned, buckthorn and barb wire.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No; it covers exactly what it says. It covers barb wire and buckthorn and Nos. 9, 12 and 13 gauge, which are the kinds of wire used almost exclusively for the purpose. There is in the next item buckthorn and strip fencing, 20 per cent, and in another item we provide for wire fencing n.e.s.

Mr. CLANCY. Does that include all other kinds of wire fence manufactured?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, that will cover all kinds not specifically mentioned elsewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. This item is peculiarly worded. Barbed wire and three grades of galvanized wire for fencing will come in free. How is the customs officer going to tell whether this latter kind of wire is for fencing or not? My hon. friend might just as well strike out the word "for fencing" and leave these three kinds of wire free of duty.

Mr. WALLACE. Of course it has simplified the tariff. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) had a tariff a month ago which is quite different from this, and which provided that all the materials that entered into the construction of this wire were to be admitted duty free. They have struck out that provision in the last edition of the tariff. The first tariff submitted read as follows:—

Barbed wire and other wire for fencing, until 1st January, 1898, fifteen per cent ad valorem.

Thereafter to be free; and all articles upon which duties are levied which enter into the cost of the manufacture of the said barbed or other wire shall, for this purpose then be free, the whole subject to regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs.

I should think that would be delightfully definite, and would please our friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood).

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. That is not in this tariff.

Mr. WALLACE. But we had it in the tariff for a month, and now we have that Nos. 9, 12 and 13 are to be free if used for fencing. If you make this free for fencing it will not be possible to prevent it being free for other purposes. The merchants cannot follow the wire around to see whether it is used for fencing or other purposes.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). It would work the same as free fishing twine worked in your tariff.

Mr. WALLACE. If I had the framing of that item I would not have made it.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman did make it.

Mr. WALLACE. Oh, no, it was the law before.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) had the privilege of altering it.

Mr. WALLACE. That item was not the same as this. It could only be imported by the twine manufacturer.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Oh, no, it could be imported by anybody.

Mr. WALLACE. It was a most unsatisfactory item and should not be perpetuated in this tariff. This twine was used for no other purpose practically, but this wire can be used for other things in addition to fencing.

Mr. MCGREGOR. That kind of wire is what is used for fencing.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The old tariff would have limited the free entry to barbed wire. This new item is a further concession to the farmers, because in addition to barbed wire they will be now able to get free galvanized wire of the numbers mentioned, and which is largely used for fencing. There is a difficulty in this as my hon. friend has pointed out, but it is a difficulty which is connected with some few items in the tariff. You had it in the old tariff. Tubing was not free, but when it was imported for oil wells it was free, and wherever you have these exceptional items you are liable to have some abuses. Our desire was to give the farmer his wire for fencing free, but we do not want it free for every other purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Tubing for oil wells was a localized industry, and it was imported practically only by the oil men.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It was imported and kept in stock by the trade.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Pater son) knows that you have hundreds of thousands of farmers extending into every corner and part of this country. You have an item here providing that wire when imported for fencing will be free. How is it possible to have anything but free wire the whole country through, so far as these three numbers are concerned? You pretend to help the wire industry, and you take on the three staple numbers, and make them free ostensibly for farmers, but really for the whole consumption of the country. Let us face the fact that it is free wire on these three numbers, and you might as well make it all free.

Mr. MCGREGOR. The twine that was brought in for the fishermen was in the same position, and oil piping was in the same position. By this change, instead of having the cruel barbed wire for fencing, the farmers will be able to have plain wire that does not cut the cattle.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest to the Controller, if he is going to leave this item in the tariff, that he make it read, "barbed wire and galvanized wire, Nos. 9, 12 and 13 gauge, when used exclusively for fencing," and strike out the words, "wire for fencing," because, as it reads, any person could import the wire for fencing and use it for anything.

Mr. FOSTER. That will help it somewhat, but my hon. friend is striking the wire industry, as he knows.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Is not the hon. gentleman's proposition striking it harder—to make wire free for all purposes?

Mr. FOSTER. I was simply pointing out to my hon. friend what his tariff did—that it was practically making all wire free.

Mr. CRAIG. I think there is a great deal in the point raised by the hon. member for York. If a merchant is importing a lot of this wire, how does he know whether it is going to be used for fencing or not? It is usually used for fencing, but he could not say that it is going to be used for that. The result, I hold, will be that the United States dealers will get the selling of this wire to parties who want to use it for fencing, while our wholesale men will be thrown out of it altogether. I would like to know what the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) has to say about this.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). There is a great deal of difficulty in having these three items made free, because, as the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has stated, these numbers can be used for many other purposes. In the case of fishermen's twine, a declaration was made at the time of the entry that it was for fishing purposes, and then it came in free, and when that declaration could not be made, the duty had to be paid. It was the same with iron pipe for oil purposes, but in some cases the pipe was sold for other purposes. In many cases the honest importer was undersold by others who do not import honestly. If the Government can see their way to make some other disposition of this item, I think it would be in the interest of the revenue as well as in the interest of the honest importer. If they insisted on a declaration being made at the time of the entry that the wire was for fencing, I suppose the balance would be left to the honesty of the importer.

Mr. MCGREGOR. To the honesty of the importer and the judgment of the collector. We have got to the stage in this country when wire has become the fencing of the country, and it is a great relief to the farmer to be able to buy these three numbers of wire free of duty. If you put the duty on any, I would say, put it on the barbed wire, which is very cruel to the animals.

Mr. CLANCY. Looking at the items that follow this one, I am unable to see that more than two classes of wire are free—barbed wire and the wire of these three classes used for fencing. There is another kind of wire fencing manufactured in the town to which the hon. member for North Essex belongs, which it would seem is protected. I desire to ask the Controller of Customs whether it is the intention that fencing-wire of every description, barbed, woven or otherwise should be free.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No, it will not be free if the committee adopt the Government proposition.

Mr. CLANCY. The reason I ask is that the very pertinent question arises why a distinction should be made in favour of one class of manufacturers as against another. I am not advocating that the duty should be taken off in either case, but I want to know whether one industry is to be cut down and another protected. It does seem to me that my hon. friend has not a very strong case, when we find one class of wire protected and the other not. My hon. friend may say that the class admitted free is a very much more desirable kind than the other, but that does not affect the principle in the least. We should leave to the farmers to choose what kind they will use.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Numbers 9, 12 and 13 are the numbers generally used for woven fencing on this side of the water at present. It is made on the ground, and I understand that there is only one other number used by the Page Wire Company. I think they use No. 7.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We have no desire to strike down any manufacture, but to benefit the people. It is true that one manufacture may, through the operation of this clause, be in a worse position than another, but the object of the Government is to secure for the farmers their fencing free of duty, which is most in demand. The classes used more for garden lawns, and other such purposes, we thought should fairly contribute to the revenue, while giving to our farmers such wire as they generally use free. When the words "galvanized wire Nos. 9, 10, 12 and 13" were inserted in the amended resolutions, it was with the view of giving him a larger range of wire free. When we reach an item a little lower down, the hon. gentlemen will find that we will ask the committee to assent to the introduction of the words "other wire fencing, n.e.s." which will cover other kinds of fencing and make it dutiable.

Mr. MCGREGOR.

Mr. CLANCY. As a matter of fact, wire fencing that is woven and is not barbed wire at all is daily coming into use. The fact is that our farmers are almost exclusively fencing with what is called the Page wire.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. What numbers is that made out of?

Mr. CLANCY. It includes all the numbers mentioned here.

Mr. MCGREGOR. For top wire they use No. 7.

Mr. CLANCY. And a lighter wire below. I have no sympathy with barbed wire for fencing, but while the parties who make woven fences have their interests protected, we are not giving any protection to the makers of barbed wire. There is only one way of making wire cheap to the farmers and that is by allowing all kinds of wire in free. If the hon. gentleman does not do that, he will do the farmers very little good and kill an industry.

Item agreed to.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 9th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 85) to incorporate the Hull, St. Louis Dam and Victoria Springs Railway Company.

EASTERN TOWNSHIP BATTALIONS.

Mr. STENSON asked :

1. Have orders been issued to have the 54th, the 58th, the 60th and the 79th Battalions of Infantry go into camp on the 22nd June instant, at Rockland, county of Richmond, province of Quebec?
2. If so, have these orders been countermanded?
3. For what reasons?
4. At whose request?
5. At what place are these battalions to go into camp this year?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Orders had been issued in the first instance that the battalions named should go into camp on the 22nd of June. These orders were since countermanded. This was done on account of an engagement which turned out to have been entered into with the municipal council and mayor of St. Johns. These battalions are going into camp this year at St. Johns.

LIGHT-KEEPER—GEORGE B. PICKETT.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Has George B. Pickett been dismissed from the position of light-keeper at Oak Point, King's county, New Brunswick? Were any charges preferred against him? If so, what, and was an investigation granted?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The answer to the first two questions is "yes." He was dismissed for active political partisanship. An investigation was not deemed necessary. The statement of the representative of the county, made from his personal knowledge and on his responsibility as a member was accepted.

GRAIN TRANSPORT FROM NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

What number of bushels of grain of all kinds did the Canadian Pacific Railway carry east from the North-west Territories and Manitoba in 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897? What number of bushels of grain did that railway carry east from the North-west Territories in each of the above years? How many from Manitoba in each of the above years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The information which the hon. gentleman asks is not in the possession of the department, but if the hon. gentleman desires, I have no objection to make an effort to obtain it from the proper quarters.

Mr. DAVIN. I should be very much obliged if the hon. Minister will do that. It is very kind of him to make the offer.

OFFICERS OF GOVERNMENT STEAMERS.

Mr. CAMERON asked :

1. What is the pay of the captains and officers of the various cruisers and survey boat or boats now and in 1896?

2. Are such officers or any of them paid in the winter months when such boats are not on duty? If so, how much are such officers paid, and what duties do they perform for the wages so paid in the winter months?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to continue to pay when such officers are off duty?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). 1. The captains and officers receive the same pay this year as they did in 1896. 2. Payments of amounts during winter as shown in statement. It is necessary to retain these officers and engineers in the service during the winter months, and their services are available at any time when required. 3. Yes. It is not proposed to make any change in the practice of the department in regard to retaining these officers during the winter. Engineers are employed during the winter in making repairs to engines when necessary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me, in that connection, to call his attention to the case of two officers, Bennett and Mackenzie, and inform me at his convenience whether it is not possible, under the exceptional circumstances to which he refers, which compelled them to be laid off during the summer as well as during the winter, owing to the ship being laid up, to allow them half-pay as well as in the case of officers laid off during the winter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will take a note of that, and submit it to Commander Spain, and see what he thinks about it.

SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved that the House resolve itself into committee, to-morrow, to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section 25 of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be made for twelve days in the case of a member who has been absent from a sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some committee thereof, during such number of days, but that this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section

Mr. DAVIES.

25 of the said Act, and that in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present session it shall not apply to days prior to his election.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CRAIG. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege. I do not care to obtrude myself on the House in a matter of this kind, but in this case I consider it necessary, in justice to myself. In the "Globe," of yesterday, is a report of what I said on the Alien Labour Bill. My attention was called to this by a friend of mine, who said the report would give the impression to any one reading it that I was opposed to this Bill. The report says:

Mr. Craig said he was one of those who had always been opposed to such legislation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

What I did say was this: I was referring to the fact that some one had said that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) was not desirous that the Bill should pass, and I said that no one could say truthfully that the hon. member for South Leeds did not desire the passage of this Bill, because for years he had advocated this measure when the majority of the House, myself among the number, had been opposed to it. But I went on to say that I was in favour of the Bill now, because I felt that there was a great necessity for it. I only wish to put myself right on this matter, and to correct this report, which represents me as being opposed to the Bill, which I am in favour of and which I supported.

PROTECTION OF FISHERMEN.

Mr. KAULBACH. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the attention of the Government, and more particularly the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) to the following article in the Montreal "Witness":—

POOR MACKEREL CATCH.

Villagers of Nova Scotia Threatened with Want. Fish did not Strike Inshore—Destruction of Nets by Gloucester Schooners.

Halifax, N.S., June 7.—A serious degree of want is likely to be felt by the populations of the western shore villages, if fishing does not improve. Fish vendors have visited Prospect and neighbouring places in search of mackerel, and have been unable to get any. Very few have been taken. The fish passed the coast and did not strike inshore until near Canso. Numbers were taken to the eastward and shipped to Boston via Halifax. The western shore people are now depending on the second run of mackerel proving better for them. If this fails, it is a serious question what the people will do for the summer. Some of the western people complain bitterly of the destruction of their nets by the Gloucester schooners. A large number of nets have been torn when set lately, and a heavy loss caused to the owners. One man had five nets, valued at a hundred and fifty dollars, destroyed. The people say the Gloucester schooners deliberately sail through the nets, quite indifferent of the damage which must follow. The skippers of these vessels take this means of venting their ill-will upon innocent people for the enforcement of the three-mile limit and its restrictions. It was remarked this week that a large fleet of Gloucesters sailed up and down inside the three-mile limit for several days. They did not dare to take any fish, even if they had seen any, but they sailed through every net they could see, and the aggregate damage caused the shore fishermen had been very heavy. In many cases all the nets of individuals were destroyed, which would have left the unfortunate owners helpless to catch any mackerel, had the fish happened to strike in. A complaint is to be made to the Dominion Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is well known that the fishermen on the shore of Nova Scotia are not in a position to resort for a living to any fertile fields. Their little cots or homes are placed on the barren rock, and they are dependent entirely on the product of the sea, and when they are interfered with in this way, they are deprived of their means of livelihood.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman is going to make any extended remarks on the subject, he must make a motion.

Mr. KAULBACH. I will conclude with a motion. I wish to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether the masters of the patrol schooners in charge of the Government have any instructions to look after foreign vessels sailing within the three-mile limit, doing injury in these waters, or whether they are merely instructed to look after them when fishing within these limits? It appears to me that orders should be given to the masters of the patrol schooners to carefully look after the interests of the fishermen, particularly in regard to the destruction of their nets. The facts are that these fishermen are frequently deprived of their nets, and are in the same position as a mechanic would be if deprived of his tools, which would mean his living. I would therefore ask the hon. Minister to see that these American schooners are watched and carefully looked after in case of infringements of rights, if he has not already given instructions to that effect. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I heard somewhat imperfectly the remarks of the hon. gentleman and the extracts he read, but from what I did hear, his complaint was that a number of American or Gloucester fishermen, when within the three-mile limit, sailed their vessels through the nets of the local fishermen and destroyed the nets and the chances of these fishermen catching fish. I may say that it is desirable to take these newspaper reports "cum grano salis." You cannot accept them unreservedly. Commander Spain and his officers are accustomed to follow the Gloucester fleet, from the time it reaches Canadian waters until it leaves in the fall. I have reports weekly showing what the operations of the American fleet are and how they are being watched, and I can hardly imagine, judging by the vigilance which I am bound to say Commander Spain and his officers have always shown, that an outrage such as the hon. gentleman has described could have taken place without Commander Spain having had knowledge of it and taken proper action. I think the hon. gentleman knows Commander Spain well enough to feel assured that if any attempt of the kind he refers to were made by the American fishermen, he would have taken effective measures to put a stop to it. But, of course, the hon. gentleman, having deemed this matter of sufficient importance to bring it to the notice of the House, I shall have a copy of "Hansard" sent to Commander Spain and ask him to make a special report, which, as soon as received, I shall be very happy to communicate to my hon. friend.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite agree with the hon. Minister that the experience of the department shows that frequently these reports in the newspapers will not stand very close investigation. Nevertheless I am glad to see that he will follow the usual course and not take it for granted that those rumours are unfounded. Sometimes there is foundation for them, and only too often are the nets destroyed, not only by foreign vessels but sometimes indeed by our own. I wish to suggest to the hon. gentleman that when asking Commander Spain for a report, he should see that Commander Spain causes inquiry to be made and the names of the offending vessels, if any, noted, and notice sent on to the different collectors to aid the fishery cruisers in securing any vessels against which the Government may come into possession of evidence.

Mr. KAULBACH. I may say that I have a very high opinion of Commander Spain and am convinced that at all times he will protect the interests of the fishermen when patrolling the coast and in charge of his fleet. However, I take this opportune moment now to draw attention to the fact that years ago, when the mackerel fishing was looked after by the Americans and the maritime province people, and when the deadly purse seines were used, that method was condemned by both the American Congress and the Government then in power and an arrangement was made for putting a stop to it. But after a time the Americans again engaged in the same deadly method, and our Government took no action that I am aware of to prevent it. Anyway, all the plant and implements that had been in use by the fishermen of the maritime province have remained unused and probably are still idle and unemployed. It appears to me that if the Government were to enter into correspondence with our neighbours across the border and ascertain whether some arrangement could not be made whereby this method could be prevented, it would be in the interests of all concerned, American as well as Canadian fishermen. The American fishermen at present sail within the three-mile limit, and when the flag of one of the patrol schooners or one of the cutters is not in sight, they take the opportunity of catching fish by the use of the purse seines. This fleet of American fishermen beside the injury of destroying nets tend to drive the fish from the coast. I think it would be right that every American fishing vessel found inside of the three-mile limit should be looked upon with a deal of suspicion, and be made to report itself in such a way, that the commander of the fleet would be satisfied that it was not there for any other than legitimate purposes other than the legitimate one of passing into or out of port. If this were done, I think a great deal of the loss which our poor fishermen are suffering from would be avoided in the future and a more satisfactory and reconciled feeling would exist along the shore, and our fishermen would be able to feel they could prosecute their industry in such a way that would cause them to feel they were able to support their families without being subjected to those risks and losses.

Motion to adjourn, negatived.

CLAIM OF MR. C. J. WALSH.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to invite the attention of my hon. friend leading the House to a letter which I have received from Mr. C. J. Walsh, requesting me to put on the Orders a notice of motion for papers, but as it would be too late to reach the matter in that way, I would simply state that Mr. Walsh, a civil engineer, was employed by the Government of the Leeward Islands, which had applied to the Department of Railways and Canals for an officer to carry on certain public works. Mr. Walsh was so engaged for some time, but subsequently his services were dispensed with, and he makes a claim for a considerable sum, in consequence of payment of his salary having been delayed a long time and thus prevented his return to Canada. The object of this letter is to get the Government to lay on the Table the letters and reports in the possession of the Government on this subject. I shall send this letter over to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and if he finds it consistent with his duty, ask him to have these papers, without formal motion, laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Is it in the nature of a claim on the Government of Canada or the Government of the Leeward Islands?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On the Government of the Leeward Islands, and it is possible some of this correspondence may be with the home Government and of a confidential nature. My hon. friend will be able to ascertain if these papers can properly be laid on the Table.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I shall look into it.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 129) to amend the Post Office Act. He said: The first part of the Bill is to make such provision that the department may arrange for security to be given by persons connected with the post office, either in the way of taking guarantees from companies or by establishing a fund, or by both combined. I wish to avoid, if possible, the necessity of separate bonds in respect of each officer and, if possible, to arrange for insuring generally without regard to the person who, for the time being, may fill a particular office. We have a great many hundreds of officers and a great deal of trouble and expense is involved in keeping track of the various bonds, seeing that they have not expired, collecting the premiums, &c. By the method proposed in the Bill, I think it is quite possible to simplify this branch of the department. Then, instead of wholly depending upon the bonds of the companies for the fidelity of officers, it is proposed to have a fund raised by contributions from the officers. This will not be an additional charge upon the officers, but will simply be a division of their contribution, part going towards the premium payable to the companies and part being turned over to this fund. The Bill also proposes to establish a branch in the Post Office Department known as the Railway Mail Service Branch and to create officers such as the controller and superintendents. These are not new officers, but will be transferees from the existing staff. The controller, it is proposed, shall be a member of the staff who has had at least fifteen years' experience, while the superintendents will be men who have had at least ten years' experience in the railway mail service. There is also a clause in the Bill providing that the mail clerks shall be liable, yearly, to what is called a "case" examination.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the expense of security borne by the officers entirely?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Wholly so. It does not involve any additional expense to the officers or any charge upon the country.

Mr. ELLIS. I regret that the Postmaster General did not provide in his Bill a scheme for the insurance of registered letters. I think that that is a matter that the post office ought to deal with.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 130) to amend the Civil Service Act. He said: This is a Bill to give effect to the provisions of the Bill which has just been read the first time, so far as regards the controller of railway mail service and the superintendents of railway mail clerks. This Bill also creates a new class of officers, called stampers and sorters, in the city post offices. At present there are first-class clerks in city post offices engaged in the work of stamping and sorting letters, a duty that could be well discharged by this new class of clerks, as is the custom in Great Britain. There is also a clause in the Bill amending clause 60 of the Civil Service Act, and permits the Government to make certain changes in the staff where officers have been in the civil service prior to the 1st July 1882, and have not passed the necessary examination. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) has a case in point which he will explain when this provision comes to be discussed.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it to revive the old provision that officers may be appointed without an examination?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No; it does not deal with new appointments. The case which has pointed out the necessity for this amendment arises out of the fact of there being in the Department of Agriculture a third-class clerk who has been there for twenty-five years, who did not pass the civil service examination, because at the time of his appointment no such examination was compulsory. He is practically unfit for the work of a third-class clerk, and it is not possible, under the present Act, even to give him an inferior position because he has not passed the examination.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MARTIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) to a return called for by the House at an early part of the session—the papers relating to the extension of the breakwater at Belle River. I would like to know when the return will be brought down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I will see to it to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN. I would also call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to an order of the House passed last session, calling for a statement of the expenditure by the Dominion Government on the railways of the Dominion since 1873.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The statement has been prepared and I will bring it down at once.

Mr. MARTIN. I would also ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) with regard to several returns which I have asked for once or twice before. Two of the returns I have asked for have been laid on the Table, but I wish to point out that one of these especially is very incomplete. This is that correspondence in regard to the dismissals of the postmaster at Hopefield. The correspondence refers to a petition which is not among the papers. I would like to have this return brought down in more complete form, and I would also ask that two other returns which have been moved for and of which I sent a memorandum to the Postmaster General a few days ago, should be brought down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). With regard to alleged incompleteness of the return, I will make inquiry in the department. I did not examine the return laid on the Table, but the officers were directed to comply with the order of the House.

Mr. MARTIN. I would point out that there is a letter in this Hopefield correspondence addressed to Hon. D. A. McKinnon, and dated Hopefield, December 15th, 1896, in which it is stated that "our petition contained nine names." This petition must be in the department.

REPORT.

Annual Report of the Minister of Justice. — (Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Buckthorn, and strip fencing, of iron or steel, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought the Controller of Customs proposed to look into the matter including another kind of fencing for farmers which, it was developed in the course of conversation last night, was being made in some parts of Ontario, but it appears to have the raw material dutiable, although at what duty it is not stated here; presumably it would come under the unenumerated class at 20 per cent. But the point was, if barbed wire fencing and plain wire fencing is on the free list for farmers' use, and if, in order to make it free for farmers, the manufactories have to be closed and the industry stopped, on what principle it was that another kind of fencing made out of wire, the materials being free and used by farmers, was allowed to be protected with a duty—how much, we do not yet know. My hon. friend stated that this fencing was used for lawns and the like of that, but I am informed that it is largely used by farmers, and that it is one of the best of farmers' fences, although not the cheapest.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The matter was discussed, as the hon. gentleman states, but the Government thought that in making the concessions they have done in this matter of fencing, they had gone as far as they could at present. With reference to the other kinds the hon. gentleman alludes to, I think they are not as commonly used as the items we are making free. I suppose it would not be amiss to say that when we reach an item further down, we propose to insert the words: "Wire fencing, n.e.s." at a rate of 5 per cent. We think we have gone as far in this way as we can do at present, and I think the hon. gentleman will think that we have gone a good distance in that direction. As I said last night, we do not wish to strike at one industry or another, because it was desired to give cheap wire fencing to the farmers of the kinds that, as I understand, are most largely used by them.

Mr. CLANGY. I am sure the country will hear that statement with a great deal of disappointment. If the Government wish to show that they are serious in giving the farmers the benefit they were promised, by the pretense of making wire fencing cheap by cheapening barbed wire alone, I tell the hon. gentleman that it is not only disappointing but manifestly unfair. If the Controller of Customs has information to lead him to believe that the class of wire fencing to which I made reference last evening, I mean woven wire fencing is not generally used, he is entirely misinformed, for that class of wire fencing is one of the most useful, and is coming constantly into larger use. Barbed wire is gradually going into disuse, and the class of fencing that is being made now is that class which is not dangerous to animals in pastures, and does not maim them. I point out the unfairness of wiping out one industry and giving what is almost undue encouragement to a wire fence that is much more used for the purpose of making fences. Now, the wire is made entirely free for both barbed wire and woven wire fencing; and still there is a very high protective duty on the fence most in use—I am not complaining of the duty being retained—but there is a high protective duty maintained on that class of fencing. It would show that it is made a pet of the hon. gentleman, or of the the hon. gentleman's friends, I know not what the case may be.

Mr. TAYLOR. The factory in Windsor.

Mr. CLANGY. I would be glad to see the factory in Windsor reasonably and fairly protected as well as the manufactories of barbed wire. If the hon. gentleman makes that distinction, I do not understand it. I desire to say that it is unfair to the farmers, and that making barbed wire free is a bald sham. So far from it increasing in use, it is going out of use. If the hon. gentleman desires to give the farmers that boon that he has promised, then let him make it all free; if not, put all the manufacturers on the same ground.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that we have had a reasonable answer from my hon. friend. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the way that it appears to stand. If it does not stand in that way, then I am giving a wrong representation. It develops in the discussion of this item that the Minister has decided to make barbed wire fencing that is manufactured in this country, free. In doing that he has shut up every barbed wire factory in the whole Dominion, of which there are a large number. He is also making numbers 9, 12 and 13 wire, which is used very largely in fencing, and used in the manufacture of barbed wire, free. The whole plea of the hon. gentleman is that he is doing that because they have come to the conclusion that wire fencing must now be the farmers' fence, and that it ought to be made free. Now, it develops that there is another kind of fence made, woven wire fence, it is made out of these same numbers of wire with the exception of the top wire, and that is the wire that is free. When we ask what duty is placed upon this kind of fencing, and it is the most desirable fencing, and is coming into use amongst the farmers, we find that the Controller of Customs says he is going to ask that the committee put 25 per cent upon this in addition to free raw material. When asked why he makes the distinction between the two kinds of wire fencing, putting a protective duty on the best wire fencing for the farmer, and taking it off upon what is not the best, he says they have gone as far as they think they can go. Now, the hon. member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) last night wanted either the whole duty taken off upon wire nails, or he wanted it reduced, because they wished to help the farmers. I would like to hear that hon. gentleman rise now and ask that the duty be taken off woven wire fencing in order equally as well to help the farmer. Otherwise it would appear to the committee and to the country that the Government were making their tariff open to the charge of favouritism, of giving concessions to manufacturers for certain kinds of fencing, and that not the best kind, while on the best kinds of wire fencing they are placing a duty equivalent to 30 or 35 per cent, and that this kind to which concessions are made is specially manufactured by a factory in a county represented by one of the Government supporters.

Mr. MCGREGOR. There is in my county, at Walkerville, a factory that uses 1,000 tons of wire a year for the manufacture of plain wire fencing, and it is very good fencing. I received a telegram from the firm a short time ago, stating that they wanted Nos. 7 and 14 substituted for No. 12 wire. The hon. gentleman can scarcely blame hon. members on this side of the House for the present arrangement, for these numbers do not suit the manufacturers of my county, yet I believe they will be able to use the wire on this list. Similar factories are in operation in London, Ingersoll, Toronto and other places. A large number of the farmers, however, are now making their own wire fences, and weave their own wire, and have five or ten strands as they desire, and the machine thus used has given general satisfaction. I should like to have the numbers I have mentioned, Nos. 7 and 14, placed on this list, but the Government have taken a stand in regard to these three numbers covered by the tariff, and I feel that the Government have made a wonderful stride towards giving the farmers free fencing, and that it should prove satisfactory to all. It is true a very large number of our farmers do not require barbed wire fencing, but when we go to Manitoba, where, in a great many cases, fencing is composed of only three strands, barbed wire is required. In these provinces, however, we are dispensing with barbed wire, and the sooner it is dispensed with the better it will be for the country and for the animals. This proposition is one in the right direction, and we are moving in the direction of giving our farmers free wire for fencing purposes.

Mr. CLANCY. The Controller of Customs has not given an answer to the question, but he has merely stated that the Government have not yet arrived at a decision to place both classes of fencing on the same footing. The committee and the country are entitled to hear some reason why all classes of wire for fencing purposes are not included under this item. When the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) has stated that a hundred thousand tons of wire are annually manufactured into this class of fencing in one factory, besides other four or five factories engaged in the same business, it is evident that if the Controller requires any proof as to the extent to which it is used, it is furnished by the statement made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WALLACE. I regret the Government are not going to give the explanation asked. It has been pointed out that barbed wire is to be admitted free, and the kind of fencing which the hon. member for North Essex said was most popular among the farmers, is to receive a protection of 25 per cent on the manufactured article. In a word, these manufacturers are to have their raw material admitted free and have 25 per cent on the manufactured commodity. This proposition makes the tariff look as if it were a political tariff. Other industries of a similar kind are in existence, but they are receiving much less protection; and, moreover, this excessive duty is entirely unnecessary because duties of a protective character should be proposed in proportion to labour expended on the manufactured article. In this case the manufactured article is woven wire. Its manufacture is a simple process, and it can be done with a machine, for it is simply the gathering together of different strands and fastening them. Yet this industry obtains raw material free, and a protection of 25 per cent on the so-called manufacture, while the barbed wire industry is wiped out because it obtains no protection, and will be unable to compete with barbed wire imported from other countries. There are as many people engaged in the manufacture of barbed wire as in other wire industries. If this kind is to be made free, I do not see why the whole remaining class should be given a protection of 25 per cent on the manufactured article, with the further concession of free raw material. I think the Government should make an explanation that should be satisfactory as to the course they are taking on this question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think any explanation need be added to that given by the Controller of Customs. It is not intended that all wire fencing should receive this exemption, but simply that most commonly used by the farmers. By admitting barbed and galvanized wire free, we are giving a concession to our farmers. If hon. gentlemen opposite mean that we might have gone further and given a larger concession, I cannot deny that, but we have thought that a reasonable reduction has been made in regard to wire fencing, and one which will be recognized by the farmers.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has given the very strongest reason in the world why he should make the other fencing free. He said that he gave a concession which he believed was the most useful, but when it was brought to his attention that he did not select the most useful article for this concession, and that the other class of wire is coming more into use with the farmers, then, if he acts on the principle he announced, he should remove the duty on that class of wire the use of which is becoming more prevalent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a point upon which opinions differ. We were advised by gentlemen, who I am sure advised us in good faith, that the wire which we have made free is that which is most commonly used, and the freeing of which from duty would be the most acceptable to the farmers. The hon. member (Mr. Sproule) expresses the opinion that the woven wire fencing is the most useful, but our information was in the other direction.

Mr. SPROULE. Probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) got his information from the men who manufacture that class of fencing, and not from the agricultural community.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is no doubt aware of the source from which information was obtained in the past. While we were glad to hear the manufacturers, we did not in all cases rely upon them, and our information with regard to this item did not come from the manufacturers, but it came from the practical farmers of the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad that this discussion has arisen. The impression has gone abroad in the country that the Government has benefited the farmer by giving him his wire fencing free, but it turns out now, that this impression is wrong, and that only the kind of fencing which is popular with the farmers is made free, while that class of fencing which is most desirable is still placed under a high protection. I do not find fault with the Government so much for their action in this matter as for their deception. It is just as well that the farmers of Canada should understand, that they are not getting what the Government has apparently promised them they should have.

Mr. FOSTER. It is well that before the item passes, the remark made by my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. McGregor) should be repeated, because it will bear repetition. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) is very decided in his opinion, that barbed wire is a very bad fence and that it is going rapidly out of use. Being a very bad fence and going rapidly out of use, my hon. friend Mr. McGregor is very much in favour of that being made free. But, the other is an excellent fencing and is coming widely into use, and my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) who is eaten up with zeal for the farmers, is in favour of having the bad fencing which is going rapidly out of use, made free, and also in favour of putting a 25 per cent protection upon the fencing that is good and rapidly coming into use.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is very like the preferential trade which is nominal. This preference to the farmer is nominal also.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. If our information is correct, over 6,000 tons of barbed wire were sold in the year, and instead of it being a waning industry as some argue, it is contended on the other hand that the sales are constantly increasing. If the hon. gentlemen opposite consider, that giving 6,000 tons of wire fencing to the farmers free of duty, is of no advantage to them, well, of course we will have to leave the statement as it is made by them. In addition to that, galvanized wires of the numbers we have mentioned are also on the free list, and whatever hon. gentlemen opposite may say in reference to the matter, I think our agricultural friends will believe that there has been an honest effort made, and a successful effort made, to give them relief in this item.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, I shall have to ask my hon. friends opposite for some information. We have been very chary in asking for information. I do not think that in the whole course of this discussion on the items, we have asked more than a very few questions seeking real information, and to nine-tenths of those we have received no answer—either the notes were not here or there was no answer to be given. My hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) has undertaken to do away with the protection on barbed wire, and he says his information tells him that 6,000 tons of that wire are used each year. My hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) has also undertaken to put 25 per cent duty, with free raw material, upon another industry. Will he tell this committee how many factories there are, that are making this wire fencing, and about how many thousand tons of wire they are supposed to use in the year? Hon. members will see, that no well based conclusion could be come to without information covering the question I am asking. I hope the Controller of Customs will be able to give that information.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I certainly cannot, and I do not think the Controller of Customs can tell off-hand, the number of factories engaged in that industry. I may inform the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), that this item was put in the tariff, from the point of view of what would be agreeable to the farmer rather than what would be agreeable to the manufacturer.

Mr. FOSTER. I commend this answer of the Government to the House. Here is a line of conduct taken, which branches off in two directions as adverse from each other as pole is from pole. One item is free and the other has a duty of 25 per cent on it, and free raw material. The Minister of Finance and the Controller of Customs have come to their decision, and neither of them is able to tell us the reasons why; neither of them is able to tell us the extent of these manufactories or any facts about them; and when we ask for facts, they say: We were completely indifferent to the facts; we just framed this item of the tariff in deference to what we think would be agreeable to the farmers. Now, does this committee approve of an answer like that? Agreeable to the farmers. Does any one mean to tell me, that farmers would not be agreeable to having this woven wire fence, which is the best kind of fence, at a reduction of 25 per cent on the duty, so that they could use it upon their farms at 25 per cent less cost, according to the contention of gentlemen opposite? Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) mean to say that the farmers would throw that opportunity over their shoulders? Take the hon. gentleman's own petty reason that he gave, insufficient reason that he gave, absurd reason which he gave: That when they framed this tariff and put a big duty on one kind of fence, and took the duty off the other kind, they were not looking into the facts at all, but they were just doing what they thought would be pleasing to a class. I commend that answer to the committee and to the country. I say, that hereafter, the committee will be obliged to ask for more information before these items are passed. It should not be possible for gentlemen in the Government to pass an important question in the tariff item like this, while they had not, and have not to-day.

any information on it. My hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) told us, that one single industry used a thousand tons of wire, and he mentioned two, or three, or four others. Does my hon. friend know, whether or not the woven wire fence manufacturers will consume 6,000 tons of wire this coming year?

Mr. MCGREGOR. They do not use barbed wire at all.

Mr. FOSTER. No one said they did. No one uses barbed wire until it is made out of plain wire, with the barbs on it. My hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) in his benevolence is so glad that this is a bad fence, and that it is going out, because it adds to the monopoly they have established, with 25 per cent on it and free raw material.

Mr. TAYLOR. And a patented article as well.

Mr. FOSTER. Very likely patented. The hon. gentleman who framed this tariff ought to be able to give the committee some information. I would like to know, when they framed this tariff, about what they calculated on as the output of this wire on which they have placed a 25 per cent protection.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) forgets that a very large proportion of this wire is used by the farmers themselves on the ground when they build their fence, and it does not go into the factory at all. This wire is sold by merchants all over the country, to farmers, for that special purpose, and there is no factory at all so far as I know. I did not know about the factory that my hon. friend (Mr. McGregor) refers to in Windsor. I handle a very large quantity of this wire, and I know that it is sold to the farmers, and that they themselves weave the fence on the ground as they are putting it up.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Wood) is right to some extent, but how many farmers can get the machinery which is necessary, or have the facilities necessary to do that.

Mr. TALBOT. Every one of them.

Mr. FOSTER. The very fact that one factory in Essex uses a thousand tons of wire in a single year, shows that the farmers do not, and cannot, all make their own fences.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I do not know that the fence referred to by the hon. member for North Essex is the same kind of fence that the farmers make themselves. It may be a different kind of fence altogether, and therefore I think that the bulk of this 9, 12 and 13 is wire that will be used purely and simply by the farmer in making his fences as he puts them up.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Controller if this wire fence is patented?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. There is no patent on the wire which the farmer will bring in and make his fences with.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not ask that question, and the hon. gentleman knows I did not. I did not ask him whether there was a patent on wire, but whether there was a patent on that wire fence to which he is giving a protection of 25 per cent and free raw material.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. gentleman kindly name the fence he refers to?

Mr. FOSTER. I will refer my hon. friend to the hon. member for North Essex.

Mr. WALLACE. I think hon. gentlemen opposite are begging the question. When making these changes, they should not ask this side of the House what kind of fence is meant. Did not the hon. member for North Essex give them the information, and do we not know that every one of these different kinds of fences is patented? Even the straight line fence, made of a little wire with upright posts, cannot be made except with the permission of those who have the patent right for the locality. Every kind of wire fence is protected by a patent right. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) talks as if he were talking from information obtained from the farmers. He is a wholesale dealer; he does not sell a pound of wire to a farmer; he sells to the retail dealer, and he has no personal knowledge of what the retailer does with the wire. The hon. member for North Essex says that the Government have made a wonderful stride towards giving the farmers free fencing, and giving satisfaction to all. Of course, they are giving splendid satisfaction to the enterprise in which he is interested, and which he has been booming these two days in Parliament. The Controller of Customs told us that there were 6,000 tons of barbed wire used in Canada, and when the ex-Minister of Finance asked him how many tons of this fencing were used which it is now proposed to make dutiable at 25 per cent and free raw material, the Minister of Finance was compelled to say that they did not know anything about it. If they know all about one wire manufacture in this country, they should be able to give us information about the other. I would like to ask whether these three kinds of wire are the kinds used in the manufacture of barbed wire in this country to-day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We so understand.

Mr. WALLACE. And practically the sizes of the wire used in the manufactory at Walkerville. The hon. member for North Essex told us that instead of No. 13, they would have preferred No. 14; but if No. 14 does you will find that No. 13 does very well too. The next point is this. This industry is protected by a patent. Hon. gentlemen say that the farmers can buy a machine and make their own fences. They cannot do it.

Mr. TALBOT. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. There is a machine which has been sold throughout the country during the last four or five years, costing $50, with which every farmer can make his own fencing.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if that is the same kind of fencing that is made at Walkerville.

Mr. TALBOT. No, it is not exactly the same. It is made with either five, ten or six strands, and with a diamond-shaped pattern. It is made with 9, 10 and 12 wire, the weakest being put at the bottom and the strongest at the top.

Mr. WALLACE. It is not the same as the fence made in Essex at Walkerville, because the hon. member for North Essex says they prefer 9, 12 and 13 wire. The hon. gentleman said there was a kind of fencing which was not protected by a patent, but which a farmer could make with a machine costing $50. He has to buy the machine for $50; but the hon. gentleman has not told us whether the farmer has to pay any royalty on the fencing afterwards.

Mr. TALBOT. None at all. He has only the machine to buy.

Mr. WALLACE. We do not know anything about that fence, but we know that it is not the kind of fencing made at Walkerville. I think the Government should give us some information about these manufactories that are going to get their raw material free and an uncalled-for protection of 25 per cent on their manufactured article—a greater protection than was given before, because they had formerly to pay a duty on their raw material.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to say just a word in reply to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace). In my section of the country there is a very large amount of wire used in the construction of fences, and there is no patent at all. The wire used is not barbed wire, but common galvanized wire; and each farmer, with very little instruction, and with his son or with another man, can build all the fences on his farm. It is no doubt for that purpose that are used such large quantities of wire as were referred to by the hon. Controller of Customs.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is wrong in saying that 9, 12 and 13 wire is used in the construction of rail fences lapped with wire. It is very much smaller wire—4 or 5 gauge exclusively. The hon.

member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) talks about a machine that can be purchased for $50 to build a fence. $50 will purchase all the wire required to fence the average farm in this country.

Mr. TALBOT. Oh, no.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend may laugh, but there are very few farmers who will invest $50 in a machine to build a barbed wire fence or any other kind of fence. I want to submit this question to the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood), who says he is a large dealer in this wire and will import it after the 1st of January for fencing purposes. If I come to him and purchase large quantities to string on telephone or telegraph poles, where will the duty come from? The same wire which I use for telephone and telegraph purposes is that which my hon. friend will have imported free for fencing purposes.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). That point was discussed last night. The Controller of Customs, of course, will have to make regulations for the protection of the revenue, and I am quite satisfied he will be able to do so. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) makes a rather rash statement when he says that I do not know what use is made of the wire which is sold in my place. I know perfectly well what the farmers do with it in our section. They use a very large quantity in making their own fences, and it is for that special purpose that I sell it. The wire which comes in and which is used in the making of those fences is free, and surely hon. gentlemen cannot object to the farmers being given that advantage.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am quite sure the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) is rather misleading the House when he gives the impression that the farmers build those woven fences themselves. In my section I have seen a good many fences built, but know of no instances in which the farmers have built them. Men go about the country who are practical fence builders. They have the machinery for putting up the fences and they charge the farmers for their work. It is true that the farmer may furnish the wire, but still it requires a certain amount of mechanical skill to weave those fences, and they are not put up by the farmers themselves. In my opinion, the duty on this class of fence is altogether too high, when we take into consideration the promise of the Government that the farmers should have free fencing material.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I think a little confusion has arisen in the minds of hon. gentlemen who are not familiar with farm work. There is, it is true, a large number of different patent fences used in the country, but, at the same time, there are thousands of miles of fencing which are not patented in any way whatever, but are simply wire strung upon posts and fastened by staples. Very frequently barbed wire is used, but plain wire is also frequently used, and the plain wire used for this purpose are the gauges put in here as free, and it was for the purpose of allowing the farmers to obtain these gauges at the lowest rate possible, that they were made free. A farmer can build his fence with this wire without paying any royalty or being interfered with by anybody. He simply buys rolls of plain wire and stretches the wire on posts and fastens it to these posts by staples. When we come to deal with patent fences, that is an entirely different matter. The duty on those should be as low as possible, but, at the same time, the men who make that fencing will have to be taken into account. The fence alluded to by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), the Page Wire Company's fence, which is made in Walkerville, is a patent fence. It is a fence which has horizontal wires that are drawn out from a coil spring, and the gauges run all the way from as low as seven to as high as fourteen, and they have, besides, across them a thin light wire to bind them together. That kind of fence is done up in rolls and shipped all over the country and is excellent for certain purposes, but it is expensive compared with the kind that the farmer can build for himself out of the wires put in this item as free. Those who wish to put up a moderately cheap fence are not going to buy the Page Wire Company's fence, or any of these patent fences, but will buy the plain or barbed wire in rolls, and put it up themselves, without paying any royalty or being interfered with by any patent.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Agriculture is as well informed with regard to the custom of other parts of the country as his own, because I know that in my section several suits are pending at present with regard to the right of farmers to use the Page wire fence. I think he will remember that I submitted to him a question only a short time ago on that same subject on behalf of some of the farmers of my section. They complain that it was a very onerous burden imposed on them to compel them to pay a heavy rate to the patentee for using this fence. It has seemed to me very doubtful that a patent should be given for this or any other kind of wire fence. If the hon. Minister looks into the matter I think he will agree with me that the twisting of wire one way or another is not an invention that ought to be patented. All over the country actions are being instituted against the farmers for having used the Page fence, and we find that the Page Company have not only the right to claim something on account of their patent from the farmer, but are protected to a great extent over and above that. If there is any kind of fence which should be made free, it is the Page wire fence, because it is largely in use, and our farmers have been harassed and annoyed by parties coming around to them selling the fence, and then others coming around to collect damages because the farmers have used it.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister of Agriculture is mistaken when he says that fences constructed with rails and wire are not patented. I took the trouble last autumn to inquire from the Department of Agriculture, and I found that there was a patent on record, and that it had been renewed, and I think the hon. gentleman will find that that patent is still in existence. I think the fence was called the Shad fence.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. What I said was that there was nothing to hinder anybody planting posts and stretching wire from one to the other. The fence to which the hon. gentleman refers is a peculiar construction with wires woven together. I believe there was a patent issued for some such fence in years gone by, and in my section of the country considerable disputes arose out of it. Some men built that kind of fence and refused to pay the royalty and the courts were appealed to, and those who sued for the royalty were defeated.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had better reserve the item. The intention of the Government, of course, was not to include woven fencing in the free list; and I do not reserve the item with any expectation that we shall be able to put it on the free list, but I think it is a fair question, in view of what we have heard, whether we should not fix a lower rate of duty than 25 per cent on woven wire fencing. We might postpone the item with a view to further discussion, and we will consider it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would submit again the suggestion I made to the hon. Minister of Finance that the Government should consider also the placing of telephone and telegraph wire on the free list. Nos. 9, 12 and 13 are generally used for this purpose. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood) has stated that he has sold a great deal of galvanized wire to be used for fencing. Every person will import these numbers for fencing, and then the material will be sold for any purpose. If the item were worded "when used exclusively for fencing" that would improve it, but without some such provision these numbers of wire will be imported for all purposes, and this cannot be prevented.

Mr. DAVIN. I am glad the Finance Minister has decided to reserve this and I hope the result of his reserving it will be that the wire other than the barbed wire that the farmer uses will be placed on the free list. My hon. friend the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) said that 6,000 tons of barbed wire was used. That means 12,000,000 pounds. Now, suppose we take $100 as the average amount that the farmer would spend on wire, which is lower, I believe, than would be required. Counting it at three cents per pound, which is much lower than is paid for it, this material would be used by 3,600 farmers out of 790,000 farmers in Canada. That shows that the other wire is coming into use, and the statement made by the Controller of Customs is an argument against the clause as it is; it is really an argument in doing what I hope will be done when the Minister comes to consider this matter—place all wire used by farmers for fencing on the free list.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. As the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) knows, the removal of the duty on barbed wire by the Government has met with the very hearty approval of the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west. The conditions of life in that country are somewhat different from the conditions of life here. The people of this part of Canada can afford to put up a more expensive fence than can the farmer of the North-west. I believe that there is not a rod of woven wire fencing in Manitoba and the North-west for every twenty miles of plain barbed wire fencing. The farmer is poor, very often; he has very long fences to put up to inclose his crop, and the only thing he can use, though dangerous and disagreeable, I admit, is barbed wire. The posts are put far apart and there are usually three strands of wire. Barbed wire is a necessity in the North-west. I think the Government deserves credit for making us this concession, and I trust they will see their way clear to reduce the duties on other wire fencing. On behalf of the farmers of the constituency of Macdonald whom I represent, I beg to thank the Government heartily for the reduction they have made.

Mr. SEMPLE. There is no doubt that the wire that has been put on the free list by the Government is the wire that has been approved by the farmers for a number of years past. The wire that hon. gentlemen opposite are so anxious to have reduced, is only on its trial as yet. But the farmers are making inquiry as to its merits. However, we know that the barbed wire has stood the test of time. If a farmer puts up a proper fence there is no danger of animals being hurt under ordinary conditions. As timber becomes scarce, wire will be used for fencing to a greater extent than at present. I heard the hon. member for Assiniboia on one occasion state in this House that wire was manufactured in this country for less than $3 per 100 pounds, but the farmers of the North-west had to pay $7 per 100 pounds. So I can readily understand that free wire for fencing will be a boon to that country, and to Ontario as well, to have it placed on the free list. If the wire fencing referred to by hon. gentlemen turns out to be what is claimed for it, I am sure my hon. friends on the Treasury benches, who have been studying the interests of the farmers and are ready to do what is possible for them, will place that fencing wire on the free list also, if it proves satisfactory for fencing purposes.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend (Mr. Semple) refers to my previous struggles in regard to this matter. He is aware that, in consequence of my efforts in this House, the previous Government reduced barbed wire by 50 per cent. If they had remained in power they would have done what is done under this tariff as regards this item. I do not see that I suggest anything unreasonable in contending, as I contend now, that not only should barbed wire be on the free list, but, as my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) has suggested to his friends in the Government, we should, in the interests of the farmers everywhere place other wire on the free list. For the hon. gentleman admits that it would be a desirable thing if the farmers were to use wire not barbed in their fences.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. DAVIN. I hope it will be carried. I hope that the Minister of Finance and the Controller of Customs, when they put their heads together, will carry out our wishes in this matter.

Item allowed to stand.

Wire, single or several, covered with cotton, linen, silk, rubber or other materials, including cable so covered, n.e.s., thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the former duty on that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Thirty per cent.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The duty on this was 25 per cent in the first place and now it is made 30 per cent. I would like to know why this is done. This material is largely used by electricians, and I have received letters complaining of this change. This wire is not manufactured in the country, and I think it should be put back to 25 per cent at the most.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has been misinformed; this wire is manufactured in the country to a considerable extent. The rate at which we leave it is the rate that it bore under the old tariff.

Wire, viz. :—Brass wire, plain, ten per cent ad valorem.

Copper wire, plain, tinned or plated, fifteen per cent ad valorem.

Wire cloth, or woven wire of brass or copper, twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Wire of all metals or kinds, n.o.p., twenty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance why the Government ask the House, in the first instance, to make brass wire 20 per cent and have now gone back to 10 per cent. It seems to me another case of sudden conversion, and we should be made acquainted with the basis of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is in the direction of cheaper raw materials for the benefit of the manufacturer, whom my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would like to help, and we are not so hard-hearted that we should not help him whenever we can.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) is travelling north by south on this question. First he travelled north by doubling the duty on this material, and then he travels south and gets back to the old and reliable tariff.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is not the old, and it never was the reliable tariff.

Mr. FOSTER. This is exactly the old tariff. Brass wire was 10 per cent under our tariff. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) proposed to make the duty 20 per cent, but now he has gone back to the rate under the old tariff.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. It is 7½ per cent under this tariff, the hon. gentleman will notice.

Mr. FOSTER. How?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What does 25 per cent off 10 leave?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) is a little ahead of time. The Government have been going forward and backward and—

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. What does 25 per cent off 10 leave?

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the hon. gentleman to answer my question, but I have put so many posers to him of late that I hardly care to press this one.

Mr. MONK. I would ask the Government whether it would not be possible to simplify that item. There is first a duty of 10 per cent, then 15, then 25, and then 20. Now, the information I have is that it is really impossible for this industry to maintain itself successfully with the duty in that position. What the manufacturer requires is a duty of 15 per cent on brass and copper wire; and the last item, wire of all metals, that is wire not provided for in item 255, should be 25 per cent. We have already had an experience of the reduction to 20 per cent. In 1894 there was a reduction from 25 to 20 on four kinds of galvanized wire. Under that reduction the industry was crippled to a considerable extent and the effects were felt in the importations which took place from the United States. Thus, from March to June, 1894, 1,500 tons were imported, valued at $57,000. During the year ended June, 1895, 2,800 tons were imported from the United States, valued at $87,000. From June, 1895, to June, 1886, 1,400 tons were imported, valued at $46,000. Therefore, the industry during that period of time was affected by the reduction to 20 per cent. Now, we have heard that the Government have done much for the farmers. There is no doubt that they (the farmers), may receive some benefit under the terms of item 255. They get what benefit may be derived from barb wire and certain gauges of wire being free, but the manufacturer loses his output of 6,000 tons yearly. It is further claimed, as I suggested yesterday, that with the reduction 1 to 20 per cent on the steel wire and to 10 per cent on brass and copper wire, we cannot compete on account of coal being dearer here, on account also of the increased prices of sulphuric acid, and the freight rates generally being dearer all over this country than they are in the United States. When you add to that the fact that our output is diminished by 6,000 tons a year, it is easy to see that the diminution to 20 per cent is calculated to cripple us beyond what I think is the intention of the Government. Now, in connection with this I will mention a fact which I think I am correct in stating, that of some of those woven wire fences to which allusion has been made, the best are covered by patents. Now, it is a curious thing that these patents manufactured from Nos. 10 and 12 are the gauges that are going to be admitted free under 255; the other patents manufactured from Nos. 7 and 9 are not admitted free; so there is an anomaly which I think would justify the Government in holding over this item for consideration. Now, as regards these woven wire fences which are covered by patents, the duty of 25 per cent upon wire represents a cent and one-eighth per rod, I think, or a cent and three-eighths on each rod of these patented fences. Well, these patentees have never complained of the duty and it is not probable that if there is any reduction, they on their part, will diminish the cost of these fences, of which they have a monopoly, to the consumer. I think that if the Government intend at the same time to favour the farmer and to protect this industry, they should take into consideration this representation, which I do not make in any carping spirit of criticism. The duty should be 15 per cent on brass and copper wire, and on the other gauges that are not provided for in 255 and steel wire should be maintained at 25 per cent. I must be remembered that this is a very large industry, manufacturing over a million dollars' worth of products every year, in which there is a capital of $600,000, employing 350 workmen or more, paying wages to the extent of $150,000 a year, paying immens freight rates, I think over $160,000 a year, to the railways, consuming 12,000 tons of coal a year, most of that coal coming from Nova Scotia, and also, if I mistake not, over $30,000 worth of acid, and $5,000 worth of muriatic acid, employing carters to whom they pay in the aggregate over $10,000 a year. The committee will see that this is a large and important industry, and the town of Lachine will be materially affected if these representations are not taken into consideration by the Government, as the town of Lachine is largely interested in the maintenance of that industry, and is crippled by the fact that the barbed wire industry is going to cease. It is only fair, I think, that these representations should be taken into consideration by the Government.

Iron or steel nuts, washers, rivets, and bolts with or without threads, and nut, bolt and hinge blanks, and T and strap hinges of all kinds, n.e.s., three-quarters of one cent per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. DAVIN. Why has this specific duty been kept here?

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest that the word "and" in front of the letter T be struck out, and after hinges put in the words "and hinges." I may inform the hon. Controller that there is a certain kind of hinge that is neither T nor strap. It is screwed into a post and afterwards fixed by bolts, and they are used for heavy doors. I understand that last year there was some difficulty in regard to them under the tariff. They are made at Gananoque and another factory in the west. No doubt the present item is intended to cover these hinges, but I suggest the amendment in order to make the wording clear.

Mr. DAVIN. Under the old tariff the duty was 1 cent and 25 per cent. It has been reduced to three-quarters of a cent and 25 per cent.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. This reduction in the duty was made because the manufacturers did not consider it sufficient. We have adopted, in this case, and in one or two other cases, specific duties and ad valorem duties combined. Under the old tariff the duty was 1 cent and 25 per cent, which we have reduced to three-quarters of a cent and 25 per cent. In regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for North Leeds (Mr. Taylor), we have provided for different varieties of hinges, as the hon. member will see by looking at the item.

Skates of all kinds, roller or other, and parts thereof, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the former duty?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Ten cents per pair and 25 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman considered the keen German competition in the skate industry? If so, has the hon. gentleman come to the conclusion that 35 per cent will be sufficient to retain our skate industry as against cheap German labour? I made a reduction in the duty on skates, but I found that unless a small ad valorem duty was imposed, German skates of inferior quality but of good appearance, would certainly take this market out of our hands.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. No doubt the representations made to the Government in regard to German skates point in the same direction as the remarks made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. Skates are undoubtedly a luxury in a certain sense. They are paid for by a class of people who can afford to buy them, and they are not used every day in the year. It would be only a small heroic action to place our industry in a safe position, and prevent our workmen being turned out of work on account of the goods being brought in from Germany.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The representations made by parties engaged in the manufacture of skates were in the direction indicated by the hon. gentleman. However, it was pointed out, on the other side, that the duty was 35 per cent and that this was a fair protection, even if we adopt the principle of protection as being sound. In fact, most of the advocates of protection consider that a duty of 35 per cent is adequate. I am well aware that parties interested in this question are very anxious as to this competition. I hope their anxiety will prove to be without foundation.

Mr. FOSTER. The statement that the manufacturers will have free steel and a protection of 35 per cent may sound very well, but when you come to consider the amount of steel which enters into this manufactured article, the duty will be found to be utterly inadequate to meet the low rates secured by cheap German labour. Besides, the hon. gentleman is estopped from pleading that he cannot give more than 35 per cent, because he has already done so in several instances.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should be very glad if the hon. Minister of Finance could see his way clear to the further revision of this item. Under normal conditions the duty proposed should certainly be considered sufficiently high, but it is very much lower than that which has heretofore existed, and I am not sure that the Government is not moving too rapidly in respect to this industry in the direction in which I am bound to support them in moving, and in which I thoroughly believe they should move. I do not propose to make any motion, for I fear that from the point of view of abstract justice the proposed duty is as high as the industry has a right to ask for, but I shall be very glad if the Government will reserve the item for further consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In view of the representations made by both sides of the House, I will let the item stand over and look further into it. With every desire to help the industry, the Government thought they were doing as much as was expected under the circumstances, but we will reserve the item and again go over the figures.

Item allowed to stand.

Files and rasps, n.e.s., thirty per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CRAIG. I wish to say a few words on this item, and in doing so I shall not speak for politics, nor for "Hansard" but purely as a matter of business. I want to talk to the Minister of Finance and to the Controller of Customs, and I trust that they will be able to accede to the reasonable request that I shall make. We have in Port Hope a rasp and file factory which has been in business for many years, and which employs about 70 hands. Even with a duty of 35 per cent they have not been able to make a great deal of money. They pay about $350 a week in wages which, is a very important thing for a town like Port Hope. I do not suppose that this is a convincing argument, but I may say, that nearly all the merchants of that town belong to the Liberal party, so that the money goes in the right direction.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The same all over the country now.

Mr. CRAIG. I wish to lay before the Minister of Finance and the Controller of Customs, the arguments which have been placed before me by the manufacturers in reference to this matter. They object to the duty being reduced from 35 to 30 per cent, because the Americans send in a low grade of files at a very low price, and a reduction of even 5 per cent in the duty makes it very difficult for them to compete with this second-rate class of American goods. When the duty was 35 per cent these manufacturers asked me several times to try and get a specific duty on this low grade of files, but I was not able to get that done. I think myself that a specific duty ought to be placed on these very inferior articles, because they ought to be kept out of the country altogether. There are enough of them made here without importing them from the States. The Americans unload these inferior files on Canada, and so keep up the prices of the first-class article in their own country. Our Canadian manufacturers believe that this reduction in the duty will encourage the importation of low grade files, and consequently will seriously cripple their business. I know that at the present time they are looking into the matter, and they are afraid they will have to reduce the wages of their working people, which are none too high at present, and to run on short time, as they have been obliged to do on some occasions in the past. They tell me that they are not afraid of English competition, because the files which come from England are of a higher grade and are bought by persons who want the expensive articles. The price of the low grade of American files being very low, the ad valorem duty does not amount to very much. These manufacturers would be satisfied with a duty of 35 per cent instead of 30, and it does not seem to me that it is an unreasonable request to make. I do not believe that any one in the country would have the slightest objection to the Government restoring the old rate of duty. If hon. gentlemen opposite can show that this request of mine would increase the price—I do not believe it would—then I have nothing more to say. But, as this reduction of 5 per cent is not going to reduce the price to the consumers, and as it will have only the effect of reducing the wages of the working people and crippling the industry, I think I have made out a good case why the old duty should be continued. I ask the Government to give this matter their best consideration, and to comply with my request and the request of those interested in this industry at Port Hope, if it is possible for them to do so.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I am surprised to hear the eulogy passed on these files by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig). If there is a poor class of files made in this country, it is the file made at Cobourg.

An hon. MEMBER. Port Hope.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). When he talks about a low quality of file coming in from the United States, I can tell him that there is not so low a grade made in the United States that I know of as is made in Cobourg.

An hon. MEMBER. Port Hope.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Yes, Port Hope. A large quantity of American files are brought into this country, but they are of a far superior grade, and are sold at prices much higher than my hon. friend's constituents can get for their files. The people who want a first-class article would never think of buying a Port Hope file. I suppose they make them as well as they can, but they do not put the material in. They get their steel free of duty, but they buy an inferior quality of steel, and employ inferior workmen, and therefore must turn out an inferior article. We would never think of importing anything so common as is made in Port Hope. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig) that 30 per cent and free raw material is all that file is entitled to. If they were making a first-class file such as we import from England and the United States, I would be happy to buy large quantities of them, but you cannot expect people who are using large numbers of files in their workshops to use an inferior article, made of inferior steel, and by inferior workmen.

Mr. CRAIG. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood, Hamilton) is not an unprejudiced witness in this case, because he is an importer and a dealer, and that class of our business men do not want to pay any duty at all if they could help it. I do not blame them for trying to get goods in without duty, if they can. Personally I am not a judge of files, and I do not pretend to discuss the technical aspect of the question. But, I do not think the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Wood) is justified in saying that the factory in Port Hope employs inferior workmen. How does he know that?

Mr. WALLACE. He said Cobourg.

Mr. CRAIG. Yes, he said Cobourg, but he meant Port Hope. He was trying to say Port Hope, but he did not want to talk as he has done about the place in which I live. If all the information of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood) is as reliable as that which he has just given to the House, we need not pay much attention to him. I understand that the Port Hope people brought some of the very best workmen they could find in Montreal. They employ 70 hands and keep their factory going. They do not make very much money, because as they tell me it is hard to compete with these poor files which come from the United States. That is their statement to me, and I believe it to be correct. The additional 5 per cent duty is not too much to ask from the Government, and especially so as the reduction of 5 per cent will do nobody any good, while it will do this file factory at Port Hope a great deal of harm. I merely put it on that ground. I do not know anything about the quality of the files. I know that the importers, as a rule, would rather sell an article made in England or in the United States than a Canadian article, if one is as good as the other; and that is one reason why they do not like this factory. I want to ask the Government to reconsider this matter. If they can see their way to restore the duty to 35 per cent, it will not injure anybody. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) himself has said that these people sell their files very cheap. That is an argument in favour of what I ask the Government to do. I repeat that I am merely speaking for the working people employed in that factory, and I am sure that the merchants of the town, of whom a majority are Liberals, will endorse what I say. They do not want to see the factory closed up. The reduction in the duty will do no one any good except the importers. I have no doubt the hon. member for Hamilton will pocket that 5 per cent; but I do not think the wages of these working people should be cut down in order to give him an extra five per cent. If the Government will allow the item to stand, and can see their way to increase the duty to 35 per cent, they will do a good thing, will not hurt anybody, and will earn the gratitude of these men.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I am perfectly willing, if the Government think proper that these people should have an extra per cent. That is not the ground on which I object to the hon. gentleman's remarks. If he says that they manufacture a first class article—

Mr. CRAIG. I did not say so. I said nothing about the quality of the files.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). If the Government put on the extra 5 per cent, I have not the slightest objection. From the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite, one would suppose that it was a crime to be an importer. I do not feel that way. The interest of the workingman seems to be their present cry; but the Government, by the tariff they have brought down, are showing themselves to be the friends of the workingman. I can tell the hon. gentleman that when Canadian goods are equal in quality and price to imported goods, my firm give the home manufacture the preference. We judge workingmen by the work they turn out, and I can say that the class of good made at that factory are not up to the standard of goods which first-class merchants will sell. They may peddle a few files through the country, but the large houses do not care to buy them. I know the gentleman who manufactures them; I buy large quantities of other lines of good from him; so that I have no prejudice against the files. If they came up to the standard, we would buy as many of them as we do of others.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is very unfortunate that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Wood) should advertise this firm as turning out inferior goods and keeping inferior workmen. I think it is gratuitous on his part and unkind to the firm. The hon. gentleman is not perhaps aware of the fact that a number of the workmen employed there were originally from Hamilton. If they were employed in Hamilton, they would be first-class workmen; but when employed elsewhere, they are of an inferior grade. If the hon. gentleman has considered the injury he might do the firm by that advertisement, I am sure he would not have done them that injustice.

Mr. CRAIG. I would like to hear what the Government have to say in regard to the request I make.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If necessary, before the tariff is concluded, we will be glad to reconsider it; but I do not think the hon. gentleman has made a sufficient case for an increase. This reduction is clearly in the interest of workingmen and mechanics, and for that reason I think th hon. gentleman will see, on reflection, that we ought rather to be complimented upon it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I believe that 90 per cent of the manufacturers all over the country use these files. We use them in our carriage factory. The number used by carpenters does not amount to 20 per cent of the whole.

Mr. CRAIG. I hold that this reduction will not reduce the price to the workingmen at all. The price of a file is a very little thing, after all; and, as the hon. member for South Leeds says, 90 per cent of these files are used by manufacturers. These have protection on their own industry, and if the matter were put to them, I am satisfied that they would be quite willing that the duty should remain at 35 per cent. I believe that if I put the case squarely before an audience of farmers, they would be willing to have it remain at that figure. I trust the Minister of Finance will allow the item to stand. If it is once carried, I am satisfied that it will be the end of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is always room for hope.

Mr. CRAIG. I will not have so much hope if it is carried as I would have if it were allowed to stand. I am satisfied that this change is going to injure the workmen at Port Hope, who are the only men I am considering.

Mr. MACLEAN. I think the Minister could fairly accede to the request of the hon. member for East Durham, because that hon. member is a protectionist and is asking for something in the line of protection. A few moments ago an hon. gentleman who represents Halifax asked to have an item stand in the interest of a manufacturer in his constituency, and I would ask him how he can justify that action, because I find that in the parliamentary herd book he is described as "a free trader in theory, believes this should be the ideal to be pursued, with due regard to condition created by the bad policy of the Liberal-Conservatives."

Mr. RUSSELL. It surely does not call for the brilliant intellect of the hon. member to perceive that what he has read is exactly in line with my present suggestion. I am asking the Government to have due regard to the "conditions created by the bad policy of the Liberal-Conservatives."

Mr. MACLEAN. The hon. gentleman is only a free trader in theory, but when the question comes home to him he is a protectionist.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Government's proposal in this instance is not very far wrong. Thirty per cent protection and free raw material ought to be quite adequate for this industry.

Item agreed to.

Shovels and spades, iron or steel, n.e.s.; shovel and spade blanks, and iron or steel cut to shape for the same; and lawn-mowers, thirty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Considering the fact that steel and iron have been reduced, this is too high a protective duty on spades and shovels. These implements are used by the labouring classes, and I think the Government should reduce the duty to at least 25 per cent. I can see no reason why spades and shovels should be charged 35 per cent when axes, scythes, reaping hooks, &c., are charged only 25 per cent. I hope the Minister will reserve this item.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a factory at Gananoque, which turns out, according to its own statement, about 9,000 dozen spades and shovels, of which the average price is $7 per dozen; 35 per cent duty would give this institution a protection of $22,500, which is altogether too much.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who put the price on them?

Mr. McMULLEN. I did.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will give my hon. friend all the shovels and spades he requires at $4.50 a dozen.

Mr. McMULLEN. Even that would be $15,000 protection, which is too much to give one factory.

Mr. ROGERS. I cannot see why we should put lawn mowers in the same class of goods as spades and shovels. I think myself that 25 per cent is ample for this low class of workmen's tools. In all these matters, where there has been a reduction in the duty on the raw material, there should be a corresponding reduction in the duty on the manufactured goods.

Item agreed to.

Britannia metal, nickel silver, Nevada and German silver, manufactures of, not plated, and manufactures of aluminum, n.o.p., twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) what he thinks of silverware being charged only 25 per cent and spades and shovels 35 per cent?

Mr. FOSTER. The workmen of this country are going to use silverware after this.

Item agreed to.

Stereotypes, electrotypes and celluloids of newspaper columns, and bases for the same, composed wholly or in part of metal or celluloid, one-fourth of one cent per square inch.

And matrices or copper shells for the same, two cents per square inch.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the words, "one and one-half cents" be substituted for "two cents," in the second paragraph of the item.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE.

Clothes wringers for domestic use, and parts thereof, twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like some explanation of that.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is that an increase or not?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will reserve this item.

Item allowed to stand.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

PILOTS—QUEBEC AND MONTREAL.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 67) to incorporate the pilots serving between Quebec and Montreal.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. HENDERSON. It is very important that we should have the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) here to give an explanation of this Bill. I understand that it is of more than usual importance.

Mr. LANGEЛИER. This Bill has been discussed in the Private Bills Committee at two sittings and all interested parties have been heard at length. It is quite unusual to discuss again a Bill that has been so closely considered as this has been. I never saw a Bill more freely discussed in committee than this.

Mr. HENDERSON. It may be quite true that the Bill has been discussed in the Private Bills Committee. Still, I understand, it is a Bill of very great importance, and we should certainly know from the Government what their position is in regard to the matter.

Mr. PENNY. I do not wish to raise opposition to this Bill now, but I think it should be distributed in printed form before it is passed.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the Bill has been distributed.

Mr. PENNY. I have not received a copy.

Mr. MAXWELL. I have not received a copy; I do not know the first thing about it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will read the clauses.

Mr. PENNY. But I think we should have copies of the Bill before us.

Mr. GUAY. The Bill has been distributed, according to the report of the clerk of the committee. He told me on Monday, when the Bill was called, that it had been distributed to all the members.

Mr. PENNY. I have not had my copy.

Mr. GUAY. It may be in the post office.

Mr. PENNY. I have had my mail every day and have received no copy. I do not wish to raise any serious opposition to the Bill, but I think we should have the re-printed Bill before us.

On section 3,

Mr. HENDERSON. As the Minister of Marine is in his place, I think we should have his opinion as to this Bill, and the statement whether the Government approves it and takes the responsibility of it. This is an important measure and it ought to be in the hands of the Government, or so drafted so as to meet their approval.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). As the Bill was introduced, the Government did not think it in proper shape, but after the discussion and hearing the commercial interests of Montreal represented in the Private Bills Committee, and also hearing pilots who are more especially concerned, the Bill was very materially altered. As it came in first, it was a compulsory Bill, but it is now a voluntary Bill. Nobody is obliged to join this trade guild unless he wishes to do so, and if he wishes to do so, he becomes amenable to the rules of the society. If he does not wish to join he can apply to the Pilot Commissioners, known as the Harbour Commissioners, who have jurisdiction over these matters, and obtain a pilot's license from them, and not come under the jurisdiction of the corporation created by this Bill at all. So there will be two distinct bodies of pilots in Montreal after this passes. It is true they may all come under this Bill, but they are not obliged to do so, and the Harbour Commissioners can license others than those who belong to this corporation to act as pilots on the St. Lawrence.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 77) to incorporate the Hudson's Bay and Yukon Railway and Navigation Company.—(Mr. Oliver.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 122) to amend the Acts relating to the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company (from the Senate).—(Mr. Davin.)

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We will now proceed with the items on the free list.

Mr. TAYLOR. The ex-Finance Minister expected that he would be in the House by the time that we got this amount done. I would suggest that we should take up the free list, and go through it all but reserve the item of corn, on which there will be a discussion, and let the discussion be general on the whole of the clauses.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Very good.

Travellers' baggage; and articles by mail or by express, valued at not more than fifty cents for the whole importation, under regulations prescribed by the Controller of Customs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The object of exempting from duty parcels valued at not more than 50 cents, is one which, I am sure, will have the sympathy of the House. It is a great inconvenience both to the individuals importing and to the customs authorities, to have to deal with small items of that nature. The bother is greater than the money is worth. Still, on reflection, we see that it is capable of being abused, and we have concluded to drop that portion of the item.

Mr. TAYLOR. Which portion of the item?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. We propose to strike out the following words in the item:—"And articles by mail or by express valued at not more than 50 cents for the whole importation."

Mr. TAYLOR. Very good.

Books, viz.: Books on the application of science to industries of all kinds, including books on agriculture, horticulture, forestry, fish and fishing, mining, metallurgy, architecture, electric and other engineering, carpentry, ship-building, mechanism, dyeing, bleaching, tanning, weaving and other mechanic arts, and similar industrial books; also books printed in any language other than the English and French languages, or in any two languages not being English and French, or in any three or more languages; and bibles, prayer-books, psalm and hymn-books and religious tracts.

Mr. ERB. I wish to ask the Minister of Finance under which of these headings Sabbath school lesson pictures would be classified? There has been considerable complaint about the duties charged on these pictures that are used for illustrating Bible history. Sometimes they were charged 25 per cent duty, sometimes 35 per cent, and sometimes they were allowed to come in free. Apparently doubts existed in the minds of the collectors as to which item of the tariff they should be classed under. It apparently is the intention of the Government that all these things used for educational purposes should be free. Under this item 445, bibles and prayer books and religious tracts are allowed in free, and it occurs to me that Sunday school lesson pictures should be included in this item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe the Controller of Customs would interpret that clause to mean that they would come in free. Religious tracts are of the same class as those mentioned by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Erb), and I think the Customs Department would allow these pictorial lessons in free. They are not religious tracts, but they are designed for the same purpose. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Erb) would allow the item to stand for a moment, we will try to add some words which will meet his views.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Acting on the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, I propose at the end of 445 to strike out the word "and" so that it will read: "hymn books, religious tracts and Sunday school lesson charts."

Mr. HENDERSON. I scarcely think the word "chart" will comprehend what the hon. gentleman intends. I understand that he refers to pictures illustrative of the Sunday school lesson.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then let it read: "Sunday school lesson pictures."

Item, as amended, agreed to.

Books, not printed or reprinted in Canada, which are included and used as text books in the curriculum of any university, incorporated college or normal school in Canada; books specially imported for the bona fide use of incorporated mechanics' institutes, public libraries, libraries of universities, colleges and schools, or for the library of any incorporated medical, law, literary, scientific or art association or society, and being the property of the organized authorities of such library, and not in any case the property of individuals,—the whole under regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs,—provided, that importers of books who have sold the same for the purpose mentioned in this item, shall upon proof of sale and delivery for such purpose be entitled to a refund of any duty paid thereon.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I wish to ask the Controller whether, if a bookseller has these books in stock and sells them to any public library or university, he will obtain a refund on the production of a proper certificate?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I think so.

Newspapers, and quarterly, monthly and semi-monthly magazines, and weekly literary papers, unbound; and tailors', milliners and mantle-makers' fashion plates.

Mr. HENDERSON. How would this clause be affected by the Bill which is being passed through the Senate, prohibiting the importation of newspapers which contain accounts of a prize fight? It seems to me that there would be a conflict between the legislation of this House and the legislation of the other House if this clause were passed as it stands.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the question were to arise, I fancy that a special Act passed in that relation would govern. However, that Bill has not yet become law.

Mr. FIELDING.

Paintings, in oil or water-colours, by artists of well-known merit, or copies of the old masters by such artists; and paintings in oil or water-colours, the production of Canadian artists, under regulations to be made by the Controller of Customs.

Mr. ERB. On this item I wish to make a few remarks. I will not take up the time of the committee in repeating what I said the other night. I will simply add that so far as I can see, the main reason given for allowing works of this kind to come in free was their refining influence. Well, their refining influence will not be lessened by the fact that the owner of them pays duty upon them. Music to my mind exerts a greater refining influence even than paintings, and yet, musical instruments are taxed from 25 to 30 per cent; so that on the ground of consistency we should either allow musical instruments to come in free or we should tax oil paintings. Then we are told that in the United States paintings of this kind come in free. That may be quite true; but I cannot see the force of that argument. If we are to imitate the tariff of the United States, we would not have been wasting two or three days in discussing free corn. Further, the tax imposed on this class of imports would fall on shoulders that are well able to bear the burden. For these reasons, I move that this item be amended by adding thereto the words: "when imported for the use of schools of art," and that the following item be added to schedule A:—

Paintings in oil or water-colours, by artists of well-known merit, or copies of the old masters by such artists, n.o.p., twenty per cent ad valorem.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend had better confine his motion to this particular item. I do not think he can go back and make the amendment he proposes in schedule A. He proposes not only to strike paintings out of the free list, but to go back and impose a duty upon them. If he strikes them out of the free list, they become dutiable as unenumerated articles. Addressing myself to the main part of my hon. friend's motion, while it seems to be rather plausible that the wealthy classes who buy pictures shall pay duty on them, it seems to be generally conceded as sound policy to encourage the importation of good pictures. These are necessarily valuable, and a duty upon them would be large enough to prevent even a wealthy man importing them. We have not many men who can afford to bring in good pictures, and I do not think we ought to discourage their importation by imposing a greater restriction upon them than we have done in the past. I admit that there is something to be said on the other side, but I think the balance of the argument is in favour of admitting them free, as we have done in the past. I hope my hon. friend will not press his motion, because I fear that if we adopted the policy of placing high-class paintings on the dutiable list, we would not be taking a progressive step.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I trust that this House will do nothing to discourage what I regard as of great importance to this country. The importation of articles of this kind is declared by all the authorities in art and literature to be a most effective means of inculcating in the people a love for art and cultivating their taste in what every civilized country looks upon as one of its chief sources of national pride. The result of my hon. friend's amendment would simply be to prevent the importation of valuable paintings, because people will not bring in works of merit and great value if they have to pay a duty on them. This would be a great disappointment and a great drawback to our art schools, because every work of an old master, which is brought into the country, is a source of education in itself that cannot be too highly valued. In fact it is to obtain access to such works that our artists cross the Atlantic and make great sacrifices in order to frequent the art centres of Europe, and it seems to me we would be taking a step backwards if we were to adopt this amendment.

Mr. ERB. From all that has been said, I am not yet convinced that a tariff which allows such articles to come in free and which professes, at the same time, to be a tariff in the interests of the labouring classes, is one that can be justified on the ground of either consistency, justice or common-sense. My amendment makes provision for the free admission of these things, when imported for the use of schools of art, just as we allow books to be used for educational purposes to come in free. Of course if any change be made in the free list, it would in my opinion necessitate the transfer of the item to some other part of the tariff.

Mr. ROGERS. While I should be sorry to do anything that would interfere with the progress of the people in the culture and love of art, I sympathize with the object of the mover of the resolution; and as we shall have an enormous amount of revenue to raise, we ought not to hesitate raising it on articles of this kind which are, after all, articles of luxury imported only by people who can well afford to pay the duty. I am in favour of reducing the taxation on the necessaries of life as much as possible and levying it to the fullest extent on the luxuries.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Erb) to levy a duty on certain articles is not in order and I cannot put it to the committee.

Item agreed to.

Duck for belting and hose, when imported by manufacturers of such articles for use in the manufacture thereof in their own factories; and canvas or fabric, frictionized for the manufacture of bicycle tires when imported by the manufacturers of bicycles for use exclusively in the manufacture of bicycle tires, in their own factories.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I may just as well now as on any other item raise the point I have raised once or twice before. I object to any manufacture having the right to import anything free that I, as a merchant, am not permitted to import free also.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is a big question.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). It is a big question. I do not see why there should be legislation in favour of one class alone. I as a merchant, should have the right to import articles for the use of manufacturers, who perhaps, are not able to import, at just as cheap a rate as those manufacturers who import for themselves. I do not care whether the articles are dutiable or free; I contend that I should be placed on the same footing as others in the country. There are several items of this kind, and, to my mind, they are vicious legislation. I draw the attention of the Minister of Finance and Controller of Customs to the fact that there are manufacturers who are not able to import these goods as the large manufacturers are, and they have to apply to a merchant to import these goods for them. We may be told that we can import the goods and have them delivered direct to the party who wishes to use them. But that may not always be convenient. We may not be willing to hand over to a weak man a large importation of goods that may not be used for six months; we have to hold the goods and supply him day after day out of stock. But, in such a case, the merchant has to pay a duty while the large manufacturer can import duty free.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think I shall have to come to the rescue of the Government on this occasion. It seems to me that this is a principle that has been settled long ago, and, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood, Hamilton) has accepted nearly the whole of the National Policy, he need have no hesitation in taking this part with the rest.

Dyeing or tanning articles, in a crude state, used in dyeing or tanning, n.e.s.; berries for dyeing or used for composing dyes; tumeric, nut galls and extracts thereof; lac, crude, seed, button, stick and shell; indigo, indigo paste and extract of, and indigo auxiliary or zinc dust; persis, or extract of archill and cudbear; terra japonica, gambier or cutch, extract of logwood, fustic, oak and oak bark; camwood and sumac and extract thereof, tanner's bark, hemlock bark and oak bark; ground logwood, ground fustic, and ground oak bark; iron liquor, solutions of acetate or nitrate of iron for dyeing and calico printing; madder and munjeet, or Indian madder, ground or prepared, and all extracts of; red liquor, a crude acetate of aluminum prepared from pyroligneous acid, for dyeing and calico printing,—free.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will ask the Minister of Finance if he will be good enough to make a slight addition to this item, and after the word "bark" in the sixth line, add the word "quebracho" so that it will read "oak bark and quebracho." This is an extract of the bark of a tree produced in Argentina. It is only in recent years that it has come largely into use by tanners of glove leather, for tanning purposes. As nearly every other extract used by them is on the free list, you might just as well put this one on also. I would be very happy to hand the Minister any further information he might require with respect to it. It would simplify the tariff by making this addition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will favour me with a memorandum, we will be glad to give it attention, and in the meantime reserve the item.

Hides and skins, raw, whether dry, salted or pickled, and raw pelts,—free.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not see why hides should be put upon the free list. If we are to carry out the avoirdupois system, we will not be able to sell our hides in the west to advantage. It is a well-known fact that at the present time they have no value. The freight rates from Australia are so low that hides from that colony can be placed in Montreal at 75 cents per 100 cwt., while the rate from Winnipeg is 73 cents. I hope the Government will take this matter into their consideration, and that some change will be made in the interest of the farmers of the west.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman stated the other day that the farmers of the Northwest did not require protection on their farm products or on anything else; yet the hon. gentleman now advocates protection on hides. I do not think there is much consistency in his attitude.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think that the members on the Opposition side of the House should allow this statement to go unchallenged. In this country we require a great many more hides than we produce, and it is certainly in the interest of our industries that hides should come in free. Hides from South America do not come into competition with hides we produce in this country. If we should tax hides imported for making sole leather, we would simply be placing a tax on the finished article, because we do not produce them of sufficient weight to make sole leather. This country has no difficulty in consuming all the available hides. If the farmers in the west could find means of sending hides to the eastern market, they would find no difficulty in disposing of them at fair prices. The demand here is far more than we can possibly produce.

Mr. DOUGLAS. We cannot get any price at all there—that is the trouble.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. While generally I have very much pleasure in endorsing the remarks of the hon. member for Assinibola (Mr. Douglas), I think the hon. member is not so well informed on this subject as he is generally. I may make a quotation from the report of hides market at Winnipeg on 28th May, as follows:—

Market for hides is weak and the tendency is lower. About 6 cents is the price paid for some brands, and this price, they claim in the local market, is about the Chicago basis.

I acknowledge that the hide market is a very variable one, but during last year very good prices have been paid for hides in the Manitoba market.

Oleo-stearine and degreas, when imported by manufacturers of leather and binder twine for use in the manufacture of such articles in their own factories.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. I propose to amend the item by striking out all the words after "degras," so that oleo-stearine will be placed on the free list for all purposes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will this oleo-stearine coming in free, interfere with the coarse grease which the farmers produce in this country?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think I shall have to take exception to the question of my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor). I feel satisfied that the putting of oleo-stearine on the free list will in no way interfere with the sale of the farmer's tallow, nor any other grease that is produced on the farm. In 1894 I was instrumental in having this article put upon the free list, for the benefit of the harness leather tanners in this country. It was discovered that it was the best grease that could be obtained as a dressing for harness leather, and that without stearine, which is the proper name—the word "oleo" should never have been put there—Canadians were unable to compete with the harness leather makers of the United States in England. I was assured of the fact, that if oleo-stearine were admitted free into this country, in a very short time a larger market would be created for farmer's tallow to mix with this oleo-stearine, than was obtained before. I have watched the market carefully since, and I know that farmer's tallow has not decreased in price. I believe that a larger amount of farmer's tallow is used by tanners to mix with oleo-stearine than was formerly used alone, so much has the manufacture of harness leather increased in this country. I am perfectly satisfied that the Government is right in placing this on the free list, and I am sure that it will in no way depreciate the value of the farmer's tallow.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw my objection then.

Salt, imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession, or imported for the use of the sea or gulf fisheries.

Mr. McMILLAN. The salt industry is a very important industry in this country, and it has been in a very depressed condition for some time. One of the causes of this depression is the large quantity of salt that comes into this country duty free. No less than 215,000,000 pounds of salt are imported into Canada duty free, while only 84,000,000 pounds of salt are manufactured here. In the province of Ontario, we manufacture all the salt produced in the country, and the industry is in such a depressed condition that three-fourths of the wells are out of running order. There are two reasons for this. One, the large quantity of salt that comes into the country free of duty for the gulf and sea fisheries, and the other, the high railway freights charged in Canada. I am perfectly satisfied, from an examination of the amount of salt that comes in duty free, that a very large quantity is imported free of duty, which is not used for the gulf and sea fisheries, and this is a great injustice to the salt industry in the province of Ontario. Let me give an instance of the heavy rates charged by railways in Canada for carrying salt. From Syracuse to Hamilton, 215 miles, the rate is 7½ cents per one hundred pounds, or 3·48 cents per hundred pounds per hundred miles; while the rate from Seaforth to Hamilton, 84 miles, is 9 cents per one hundred pounds, or 10·71 cents per hundred pounds per hundred miles. Salt is carried in the United States for one-third the rates for which it is carried in Canada, thereby preventing our salt manufacturers from supplying the market of eastern Canada, which they would be able to do if the railway rates on salt were as low in Canada as those charged in the United States. I would also point out that 35,000,000 pounds of salt are imported, not from Britain, and not from any of her possessions, but from foreign countries, free of duty. While it may be necessary to bring in free salt from Britain and her colonies, I hold it should not come in from foreign countries, free of duty. We imported from the following foreign countries, free of duty, these quantities of salt :

	Pounds.
Dutch West Indies.....	7,707,780
French West Indies.....	2,823,430
Italy.....	13,123,800
Spain.....	6,371,800
United States.....	5,349,120

Now, I hold that that is an injustice to our salt manufacturers. They are placed at a disadvantage compared with the United States in the fuel that is used in the manufacture of salt. In the United States they have their coal dust or coal slack free of duty, whereas in Canada there is a duty on that article. I hold that the Government should impose a duty on salt coming from foreign countries, and that they should give the Canadian producers of salt, the slack free of duty. The Government should either do that or impose a duty upon what salt comes into the country, and give a rebate of that duty upon the salt that is used in the gulf and sea fisheries. By that means, all the salt that comes into the country would pay a duty except what was used for curing fish. Including the 176,000,000 pounds of salt we get from England and her colonies, about 215,000,000 pounds of salt are annually imported free of duty, and it is absurd to say that all that is for use in the gulf and sea fisheries.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We can hardly adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) to remove salt from the free list, but the statement my hon. friend has made as to the quantity of salt that is brought in, outside of what was the intention of the tariff law, is well worthy of consideration, and I have no doubt that my hon. friend the Controller of Customs will investigate that, and see that if the present Act is passed we will impose upon the free importation of salt all possible restrictions.

Mr. TAYLOR. Might I ask the Minister: If we impose a duty upon salt will it not be injurious to the farmers of this country?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not want any further duty to be imposed upon salt. The salt manufactured in Canada is used on the farms, but the salt that is imported is not used by the farmers.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad to see that my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan) is becoming an ardent protectionist.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am not a protectionist, but I believe that as long as protection exists in this country, every industry in Canada should have its fair share of protection, and it ought not to bear unduly heavy upon any one industry.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I must say with regard to the salt industry, that I endorse the sentiments of my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan). I believe that the salt industry has been overlooked, so far as western Ontario is concerned. I do not for the minute admit that in taking this position I am advocating the system of protection. I agree with my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that taxation is an injury to every one who has to bear it, and especially so to the farmers of this country. We would be all very glad if it could be swept away. I am not advocating in any sense the system of protection, but so long as we have this system of collecting taxes, I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mc-Millan) that it should be equalized, and that every person should pay his fair share of taxation. Other industries are being protected, and the salt industry, which is a very legitimate one in this country, has not, in my opinion, had the same consideration that has been given to other industries which do not provide as much employment.

Mr. CAMERON. The time of the committee, in my judgment, is not of the slightest importance compared with the importance of this industry. Before salt was discovered in western Canada some years ago, we depended largely on English salt, which was then selling at from $2 to $2.50 a barrel. Salt was first discovered in Goderich, the town in which I live, and shortly afterwards the price of salt was reduced largely, and it has gone down gradually until it can be bought at the wells at about 50 cents a barrel. I say openly to the Minister of Finance that, of all the industries in Canada from first to last, there is no industry which has received such scant consideration at the hands of the late Government and at the hands of the present Government as the salt industry. Up to 1890 coarse salt from Great Britain or any British possession for the sea and gulf fisheries was admitted free. The salt manufactured in western Canada had not and have not now any objection to that provision of the law. But we in the west have to pay duty on the coal we use, not only in our houses, but in the manufacture of salt, and we protest against fine table salt being admitted free from Great Britain or elsewhere. It is well known that in Goderich, in Clinton and elsewhere, fine imported salt is sold side by side with the Canadian salt, because it comes in free, and the freights from east to west are very low, as it is carried in bulk. We cannot compete in the United States market because their duty is 12½ cents per hundred weight, while ours is only 7½ cents per hundred weight. If we could get into the American market on even terms with the Americans, we would be prepared to compete with them and beat them; but we cannot get in there. In 1894 a change was made in our tariff by the late Government, by which the duty on salt was reduced very largely, and fine salt was admitted free from Britain and the British possessions. If the hon. Minister of Finance wants to do equal justice to all the industries in Canada, he ought to take into consideration the important salt interest of the west. In the town of Goderich alone, before 1890, there were thirteen salt manufacturers. The effect of the tariff of 1890 was to cripple all these but three, and the effect of the change made in 1894 was to wipe them all out but one. In Clinton, prior to 1894, there were three, and there is only one now; at Seaforth there were three, and there is only one now; at Exeter I believe there was one, and I do not think there is any now. The effect of the change in 1894 was in fact to wipe out of existence the whole salt industry of the west. Surely that is not a desirable condition of things. Suppose our salt industries were all closed up, what would be the result? We would go back to the condition that we were in when salt was first discovered in Goderich, and instead of paying 50 or 75 cents a barrel, we would be paying $1.50 or $2. Surely, it is time for this paternal Government, composed of the wise men from the east and from the west, to take into consideration the necessity of extending some consideration to the salt industry of Canada.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there any combination?

Mr. CAMERON. There is no combination now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There was.

Mr. CAMERON. There was a combine, just as there was a combine of the flour men and the mill men. There is no combination, but of the three or four salt manufacturers who are now doing business it was found that each one had to employ an agent and keep up a staff of officers, and they have combined to sell all their salt through one agent. This saves a large expense, otherwise they could not live at all. All we ask is that the Finance Minister should consider the claims of the salt industry. We do not ask that salt used in the sea and gulf fisheries should be taxed, but we want some tax imposed on American salt, and salt coming from any other country which is not so used. This is not protection in the ordinary sense of the word, as hon. gentlemen opposite understand it. It is maintaining and keeping alive one of the most important industries ever established in Canada.

Mr. MCGREGOR. One of the great reasons for the closing up of some of the salt factories my hon. friend speaks of was the great find of salt in Essex, which has now the honour of being the greatest salt field in this country, producing 800 barrels a day. In 1893 we found a vein of over 200 feet in depth of solid salt; but we have more veins than that. Another advantage we have is that the salt is dried by a new process, which does the work much more cheaply than the old process, and the fuel required for the purpose is taken from the earth, in the form of natural gas. I believe it would be in the interest of all that fine salt coming from the older countries should have a small tax on it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Say protection.

Mr. MCGREGOR. No, Sir. I am not particular about having a heavy tax imposed.

I think we can beat the world. We have the cheapest and best quality of salt used in America. 99 per cent of it is pure salt, and we have nothing to fear except perhaps some of the very cheap salts that come to this country as ballast.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I wish to corroborate the statement of the hon. members for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) and West Huron (Mr. Cameron) with regard to the importance of the salt interests.

An hon. MEMBER. Another protectionist.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I am not a protectionist, but I say that when an incidental protection is given to an industry it should be given in the fairest manner possible. As my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has said, the salt industry has never been treated in a fair and just way. It employs a very large number of men, pays out a large amount of wages every year, and is taxed for its raw material to a great extent. On the coal and iron and nails and everything else it uses it is heavily taxed, and for every one barrel it manufactures there are two imported from abroad free to compete against it in the Canadian market. All we ask is that a tax be put on the fine salt imported. We are not opposed to coarse salt coming in free for the use of the deep sea and Gulf fisheries, but are opposed to this fine salt being imported here into our markets and brought into the middle of the territory where our salt is found. In 1894, I think a clerical error took place in the wording of the item. If the hon. Minister of Finance will look at it for a moment, he will see what we want. "Salt imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession or imported for the use of the sea or Gulf fisheries," is the reading of the item as it stands at present. Now, if the words "or imported" after the word possession be struck out then the item will read: "Salt imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession for the use of the deep sea or Gulf fisheries." This change will be quite satisfactory to the salt manufacturers. I hope the hon. gentleman will let the item stand so as to give it further consideration and do justice, as far as possible, to the salt interests.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I am surprised to hear such strong free traders talk protection. If they propose to offset the duty on coal by a duty on salt, let me say that the fishermen of the maritime provinces, in whose behalf a duty is said to have been placed on coal, are heavily taxed for the clothes they wear and the beef and pork and mutton they consume, and last though not least, for the coal oil they use, and if they should happen to use any farming implements, they are heavily taxed for them also for the benefit of the western farmers and manufacturers, so that the fishermen of the maritime provinces will certainly not be very much favoured even should the salt manufacturers of the west fail to secure protection,

Item agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are a number of items from "A" to "L" under No. 568, and I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Finance Minister to the fact that I would like to have another item added to these, which would read as follows:—

Norway iron and steel in bars, round or flat or square, when imported by manufacturers of drop forgings, carriage hardware or threshing machines, for use in their factories and in the manufacture of these articles.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will write out the item and hand it to me, we will consider it, and in the meantime pass those we have here.

Mr. TAYLOR. I shall do so.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What is the object.

Mr. TAYLOR. The manufacturers of carriage hardware use exclusively Norway iron not made in this country, and which is dutiable, and they are as well entitled to their raw material as the other class of manufacturers.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not know that I would object on that score, but it occurs to me that charcoal iron is the same quality as Norway iron.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What is the distinction between Norway iron and charcoal iron?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know, but I know that Mr. Gillies imports Norway iron for his industry and so do other manufacturers.

Tea and green coffee imported direct from the country of growth and production, and tea and coffee purchased in bond in the United Kingdom, provided there is satisfactory proof that the tea or coffee so purchased in bond is such as might be entered for home consumption in the said United Kingdom.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I wish to draw the attention of the Government to the desirability of having a small duty on tea. One great reason is that it is a first class revenue bearer. We do not produce anything of this kind in this country, and every pound brought in would have to pay a revenue into the treasury. Again, if you have a small specific duty on tea, it will have the effect of driving a lot of lower Congou teas out of the market. Teas are being imported at 7 cents and 8 cents per pound which are not fit for any person to use. I believe it would be in the interest of every one concerned that there should be a small specific duty on tea.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In consideration of the extreme assiduity and attention to business manifested by the House, and the unparalleled progress which they have made with the tariff in committee, I think we are entitled to adjourn, although it is rather early in the evening. I therefore move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would ask in the usual way what business the leader of the Government proposes to take up to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think probably, on the occasion of the first sitting, we will take up the Fast Line Service, and thereafter, either the Estimates or the Tariff, as the case may be. Possibly some of the minor Bills later on may be taken a stage.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 10th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 131) respecting the Supreme Court of Ontario and the judges thereof—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

HENRY MUMA, OF DRUMBO.

Mr. SOMERVILLE asked :

Is Henry Muma, of Drumbo, official referee, still in the employ of the Government? If not, has he been dismissed? Has the office been abolished? Has he been superannuated? If so, what is the amount of his superannuation allowance?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am advised that that gentleman is still in the employ of the Government. The other portion of the question is answered thereby.

QUEBEC LANDSLIDE CLAIMS.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Was a commission appointed to investigate the claims of certain citizens and inhabitants of the city of Quebec in connection with the landslide from the Citadel rock into Champlain street?

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan).

2. When was this commission appointed?

3. Who are the members and officers of said commission?

4. Has the commission made a report, and if so, when was said report made and received by the Government?

5. What does said commission recommend?

6. Is it the intention of the Government to carry out the recommendation of said commission?

7. When does the Government intend to come to the relief of the sufferers from the said landslide?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). 1. Yes. 2. In February or March last. 3. The members of the commission are William Cook, Q.C., Fergus Murphy and Dr. John Howe; and the secretary is T. D. Beattie. 4. The Commission has made a report, and recommended the payment of a certain amount in settlement of the claims made. I think the amount is in the vicinity of $38,000 or $40,000. 6. Yes, it will be dealt with in the Supplementary Estimates.

MR. CARSTENS, IMMIGRATION OFFICE, WINNIPEG.

Mr. DAVIN (for Mr. Roche) asked :

1. Has Mr. Carstens of the Immigration Office, Winnipeg, been dismissed? If so, why?

2. Has his place been filled by the appointment of another gentleman? If so, who received the appointment?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. Carstens, of the Immigration Office, Winnipeg, has been dismissed; cause, active political partisanship. The place has not been filled.

NANAIMO AND COMOX MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. McINNES asked :

1. Did the Government advertise for tenders for a semi-weekly mail service between Nanaimo, Comox and intermediate points?

2. If so, when did the advertisement first appear, and how long did it run? Up to what time were tenders receivable? Were any tenders so received, and if so, from whom and for what amount?

3. What amount is paid the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company for the present weekly mail service between the said points?

4. Were any of the said tenders accepted? If not, why not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The Government advertised for tenders for a semi-weekly mail service between Nanaimo, Comox and intermediate points. The notices calling for tenders were dated the 20th November, 1896, and instructions were given for publication for at least six weeks, and the department has no reason to believe that it was not fully published. The 5th February, 1897, was the last day for receiving tenders, and only one such tender was received, namely, that of the Esquiraalt and Nanaimo Railway Company at the tender price of $10,400 a year for a service twice a week. The amount paid for a weekly service is $630 and the Government regarded the tender of $10,400 as excessive, and for this reason was unable to accept it.

ST. GERVAIS AND ST. CHARLES MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Have tenders been invited for the carrying of the mails between St. Gervais and St. Charles in the county of Bellechasse ?
2. If so, who were the tenderers and what was the amount of each tender ?
3. To whom was the contract awarded ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Tenders have been invited for the mail service between St. Gervais and St. Charles railway station. 3. On the expiration of the time for receiving tenders the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer and the matter placed in the hands of the inspector for completion. The department has not yet been advised as to whether the contract has been completed, but so soon as it is the other information asked for in the question, if then desired, will be furnished.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee, to-morrow, to consider the following proposed resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, in his discretion, repay to any person heretofore or hereafter dismissed from the public service the whole, or such portion as he deems advisable, of the amount contributed by such person to any civil service superannuation fund, with interest, to the date of dismissal, not exceeding...per cent per annum.

Motion agreed to.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT.

Bill (No. 113) further to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act (Mr. Davies), was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Under the law at present, a fourth class engineer can only act as assistant to a second or third class engineer. This permits him to act as assistant to a first-class engineer.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved that the word "temporary" be inserted before the word certificate after the word "A" in the third line.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

REGISTRATION OF CHEESE FACTORIES AND CREAMERIES.

Bill (No. 117) to provide for the registration of Cheese Factories and Creameries and for the branding of dairy products, and to prohibit misrepresentation as to the dates of manufacture of such production (Mr. Foster), was read the second time and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 7,

Mr. CHARLTON. I have one question to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) in regard to this provision. When is it intended that this Act shall be brought into force? The provisions of this section might work, at first, with undue harshness in the case of individuals innocently acting in ignorance of the provisions of the law. Time should be given to allow the public to become apprised of this law, but I do not see that any provision is made as to the time when it shall come into operation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). This Bill is permissive in its character, not compulsory. The registration of factories is entirely permissive. If the factories do not wish to register, they do not need to do so. If they do register, they are protected in their rights. The only penalty imposed is where a person wilfully and with knowledge misrepresents things. I do not think it would be necessary, in that case to give any further than the ordinary notice of the coming into force of the law. But I may say that it is my intention, immediately on the passing of the Act, to notify by circular letter all the cheese factories in the country.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 120) further to amend the Patent Act, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I am asked to explain this Bill. I may simply say that the object of the Bill is to abolish the office of Deputy Commissioner of Patents, and to restore the former arrangement under which the Deputy Minister of Agriculture acts as Deputy Commissioner of Patents. It repeals the Act which provided for the establishment of this new office and restores the office to the old form. That does away with an expenditure of $2,800, the salary of the Deputy Commissioner of Patents, as the Deputy Minister of Agriculture does the work without any addition to his salary.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Bill No. 115) to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.—(Mr. Sifton.)

FORGED ENDORSEMENTS OF BILLS.

Bill (No. 123) respecting forged or unauthorized endorsements of Bills, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On subsection 3 of section 1,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman able to say what the similar English provision is ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). This is intended to introduce into our law section 60 of the English law.

Mr. CHARLTON. I submit that the provision here "within a reasonable time" is indefinite. What is meant by within a "reasonable time." It might be half a dozen days, or as many months.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We allow it to remain indefinite so as to put the matter at the discretion of the court. At the present time, under the first section of this paragraph, the notice must be given within the year, but there are times when a year will be much too long. Therefore we leave it as it is provided for in the Bill of Exchange Act, for the court to determine what is a reasonable time.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would not that be inviting litigation in reference to this matter ? Would it not be possible to make a more definite statement ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think myself that it is better to leave it in this way. Take, for instance, subsection 3 of section 36 as to bills payable on demand, where we leave the courts to determine what is a reasonable length of time. That is the principle which is generally adopted throughout the Bills of Exchange Act. In subsection 2 of section 45, the same principle is embodied. It is better to leave it to the court to decide whether under the circumstances, the delay has been reasonable.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not an unusual way of dealing with these matters, because, if the Bill fixed the time, in some cases it might be too long, and in others, too short.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE VOTERS' LIST.

Bill (No. 126) respecting voters' lists (Mr. Fitzpatrick) was read the second time and considered in Committee.

THE FISHERIES ACT—SAW-DUST IN STREAMS.

Bill (No. 127) further to amend the Fisheries Act (Mr. Davies) was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). This Bill is for the purpose of extending the time during which saw-mills in operation can put saw-dust in streams, the time given being one year. Some of the mill-owners, particularly those on the Ottawa River, cannot get new machinery necessary to deal with the saw-dust other than by putting it in the river, within that time. Some of these mill-owners waited on the Government, and convinced the Government that they would suffer almost irreparable loss unless they were given an extension of time for one year. The Government resolved to come to Parliament and ask for this extension, at the same time resolving to give an intimation that Parliament would not give any more extensions, and that at whatever cost the mill-owners would have to obtain the necessary machinery next year, at which time the Fisheries Act would go into full operation. Of course, this Act will not apply to new mills, and is confined entirely to mills in operation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the policy of the hon. Minister in regard to emptying saw-dust in the streams ? Is it his intention to enforce the law rigidly, or to go easily ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is pretty hard offhand to make any statement in regard to going easily. I have endeavoured to carry out the policy of the department without change. I could not, however, resist the application of these gentlemen. One owner of a mill, which cost a very large amount, and who has every desire to conform to the law, stated that it was quite impossible to get his mill in shape to handle the saw-dust, otherwise than by putting it in the stream, for another year. I do not believe that Parliament will listen to applications for any more extensions, and it was with the greatest possible reluctance that I consented to recommend this extension. There is a very strong feeling in Ottawa and outside this city that the time has come when the mill-owners must make provision to deal with the saw-dust otherwise than by throwing it into the stream. I wish to take this opportunity to emphasize this announcement, and to say distinctly that we cannot give any further extensions, and this will be the last time an extension will be given.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I feel inclined in all these matters to do what I can to support the administration of the law by the department. There is no department where the duties are so unpleasant often as the Marine and Fisheries Department. I wish to suggest for the consideration of the Minister, that the time has come for the Government to turn over very seriously a good many of these clauses of the Fisheries Act. As a matter of fact, the weakness on the part of the department for many years has been that those who are very severely punished by the law in connection with the dumping of saw-dust, are able to point to the fact that those who commit the same offence on the Ottawa River, are let go scot-free. It is often times most difficult to explain to the parties most interested, how it is, that the conditions are such in these cases, that one party is punished and the other not. In consequence of this, the department has not had that public support which is so essential for the enforcement of all these laws. If in the experience of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) as Minister, he finds there are some clauses in that Act which cannot be universally enforced even after the efforts that have been made during many years, then I think it would be well to wipe them off the Statute-book altogether, and to insure that only such restrictions are imposed in connection with our fisheries as the department is determined in every case to have carried out.

Mr. CHARLTON. The criticism of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) apply with peculiar force to the administration of the Fisheries Department under himself and his friends while they were in office. I do not remember them having taken any action similar to that taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) for the terminating of this, what I must call a nuisance of dumping saw-dust into the Ottawa River. That thing was permitted to go on year after year by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and his colleagues, and the first Government of Canada that has grappled with the question is the Government now in power.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. I say so unhesitatingly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The present Minister of Marine will not corroborate you in that.

Mr. CHARLTON. No notice has ever been served on the mill-owners on the Ottawa River, as is now done, that this dumping of saw-dust must cease within a reasonable time. To-day, the first practical step is taken to abate this nuisance, and the Government in my opinion have acted judiciously in the course they have taken. The mill-owners must have time to make preparations to erect burners to consume the saw-dust and notice is given them that they must do that. The mill-owners will understand that arrangements must be made for disposing of saw-dust in some other way than at present. I believe that the mill-owners will find that this is not so difficult or expensive as they now anticipate. As a lumberman, I heartily endorse the action that the Government has taken in the premises. I think the lumbermen of the Chaudière must themselves recognize the fact that this pouring of saw-dust into the Ottawa River has gone on long enough, and that their own interests even are in peril, through causing an obstruction to navigation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has been so often at Washington when this Parliament was sitting, that the discussion on this subject must have gone on when he was absent. Session after session the House of Commons considered the action of the department in this regard when I presided over it. No one accused the department (nor were they successfully able to do so) with anything like leniency in the treatment of the different mill-owners of this country with regard to this section of the Act. The charge that I had to meet was, that of cruelty and oppression, and that the officers of my department were enforcing the law to the detriment and injury of many of the citizens of this country. A great many men on both sides of the House approached the subject, I am bound to say, without any party spirit, but there was considerable difference of opinion as to what the policy should be, and as to what extent this law should be enforced. I appeal with confidence to the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) to repudiate the statements which have just been made to the committee by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton). He told us, that this was the first time that the Department of Marine has taken anything approaching a firm stand, and that this was the first time that notice had been given to those mill-owners that they must put themselves in a proper condition to comply with the law. Well, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has evidently not read this very Bill itself. This very Bill shows on its face, that the very same notice was given by Parliament a year ago, that within the time limited in the Bill the law would be enforced. I am not complaining of the Minister (Mr. Davies), but I wish to point out that instead of firmness being shown by the introduction of this Bill, the Minister actually says to the mill-owners: A distinct legislative notice was given to you that the law would be enforced at the end of a certain time, but I now propose to postpone the enforcement of the law until another day, and I introduce this Bill to enable me to do so. I made my suggestion to the Minister of Marine in good faith, because there is the danger, that because of these constant postponements the lumbermen who do not approve of this class of legislation, may come to the conclusion that it only remains for them to wait until the statutory period expires in order to get further indulgence at the hands of Parliament. I know the embarrassment and difficulty that surrounds the Minister of Marine, and it would not be frank on my part if I did not extend to him such support and sympathy as I can when he is honestly trying to grapple with these difficulties. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) has not yet had sufficient time to conclude as to which policy he will uphold—the abolition of that law altogether or its strict enforcement. I believe that during the year he will be able to consider the matter, and that next session he will be able to announce to us that he has taken a stand on one ground or the other.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has correctly stated the position I stand in. This is a very difficult department to administer. There are so many applications made from all parts of the Dominion, to the Minister, to endeavour to get him not to enforce the law, that the department sometimes hardly knows what to do. I have not yet been able to master the details of the administration of the department as thoroughly as I would like to, but I hope that before next session I shall have thoroughly made up my mind as to what portions of the law should be enforced, and what portions should not be enforced. With respect to those provisions which ought not to be enforced, I will try to remove them from the Statute-book altogether, in order that the portions of the law that remain shall be enforced; and enforced vigorously. There are certain branches of the administration of the law with regard to which I have made up my mind, and orders have gone out—whether it be at the expense of the loss of popularity or otherwise—that they shall be strictly enforced. I may say frankly, that during the last year or two—and I make no personal reflections on anybody—there was a little laxity introduced into the administration of the department which has imposed on me untold trouble. When once laxity is introduced, and the officers think that the department does not want the law enforced, whether from political considerations arising from elections or otherwise, the administration of the law becomes loose, and it takes a long time to get the machinery again in operation as it ought to be. There are some points where I think the law has not been enforced as it ought to have been. But in respect to the immediate matter before the House, I have already stated the view of the department, and I am glad that some little discussion has taken place, so that the mill-owners may know what the mind of Parliament is. I know as well as I am standing here that application will be made next year for further time. They will want another year, and then another year; but, so far as I am concerned, speaking my own mind, I think this will be the last time of asking.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The last time of granting.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I mean the last time of my asking Parliament.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I would like to emphasize what my hon. friends on both sides have said, and there is another reason for it. It is exactly six and twenty years since I put through the first Bill making the throwing of saw-dust into rivers an offence. Six and twenty years notice has been given to our friends on the Ottawa river to set their houses in order, and I think that is time enough.

Mr. KAULBACH. I quite realize the injury which saw-dust does to rivers, especially navigable rivers. At the same time, I would particularly request the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to exempt the small mills that are all but worn out or nearly out-of-date, but which still have a certain quantity of timber to saw. I think it would be hard treatment to compel them to come under this restriction as to saw-dust.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is worse in a little river than a big one.

Mr. KAULBACH. I have had to contend very seriously with the hon. Minister's predecessor, the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, in consequence of the severity with which I thought he was dealing with some of the mill-owners in my county, who have been subject to very serious loss and inconvenience in consequence; and I ask now very particularly that these small single mills, as they are called, should be exempt from the operation of the Act. At the same time, while on my feet, I would ask the hon. Minister if his ruling with regard to the suspension of the operation of this Act on the Ottawa River is universal, and extends to the other parts of the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (N. 126) respecting the Voters' List.—
(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

SESSIONAL INDEMNITY.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that for the present session of Parliament the deduction of eight dollars per day mentioned in section 26 of the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons, chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be made for twelve days in the case of a member who has been absent from a sitting of the House of which he is a member, or of some Committee thereof, during such number of days, but that this provision shall not operate to extend the maximum amount mentioned in section 25 of the said Act, and that in the case of a member elected since the commencement of the present session it shall not apply to days prior to his election.

Mr. FOSTER. Having regard to the limited time before us, I only take occasion to ask my hon. friend who is introducing this resolution if he has lately read over his own utterances when on this side of the House, on the occasion of the appearance of such a Bill as this during the last three or four years? My speech would be simply to read from "Hansard," if it did not take up too much time, the earnest protest my hon. friend made against the bringing up of this legislation year after year—it had such a deleterious effect on the independence of Parliament, it was so small a thing to be dabbling in session after session, and if you were going to do it, you should bring in an Act and make it general. My hon. friend is halting in following our good examples, but when he has a bad example to follow, he jumps right in.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no occasion for my reading my speeches, because I had them in clear recollection. I have not changed my mind, but the circumstances were too much for me. We all know that this has to be done, and the question is whether it should be done by a special Act or by a general Act. My opinion was that we should do it generally, so that members would know how many days they would have; and had it not been for the disposition shown on both sides of the House to hurry up the close of the session so as to get through if possible by Jubilee Day, I would have pressed on my colleagues the advisability of bringing in a general Act; but, under the circumstances, I thought we would do this session what had been done before, and begin with a new resolution next year.

Motion agreed to, resolution considered in committee, reported, read the first and the second times, and concurred in.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 132) respecting the Senate and the House of Commons.—(Mr. Davies.)

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

The House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

The Department of Marine and Fisheries, including $1,800 to W. J. Stewart, $1,700 to Cameron Stanton, and $800 to E. H. Gilbert, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act. $55,780

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to remind my hon. friend of a subject which I brought to his attention on a previous occasion, and which I do not wish the hon. gentleman to lose sight of. It is very gratifying to me to know that, as a whole, the staff of the department is most efficient, and I do not wish to make any invidious distinctions, but with regard to a certain class of technical officers who were brought into the department from Kingston Military College by me, regardless of any political or provisional or personal considerations whatever, and who were required to do certain work, such as hydrographic surveys, to do which we were accustomed to borrow officers from the Admiralty—high-class officers enjoying good salaries, to whom we paid the salaries they had in the Navy besides what is called the colonial allowance—I wish to point out in what respect they are entitled to special consideration. Mr. Stewart, a Kingston cadet, is now doing for $1,700 a year the work which Commander Boulton, who was borrowed from the Admiralty, was doing for the sum of $5,000 a year, and Commander Boulton is reported as having said that the work of Mr. Stewart is just as efficiently done as was his own, and it has been accepted by the Admiralty, so that a British chart is made on the work of Mr. Stewart and the officers under him, and circulated over the whole world, and is just as good authority as if it had been directly prepared under the supervision of an officer of the British Navy.

Now, I hope that when we have that class of men in Canada we will not run the risk of losing them through being in any way niggardly towards them. I am very glad, for instance, to see Mr. Stewart's name. He is getting slow promotion and steady increase. But, when I asked for these men to be sent to the assistance of Mr. Stewart in that service, while, of course, making no positive promise, I held out to them the hope, having regard to system that obtained in the Geological Survey, that, while they would not get an increase from year to year as a matter of law, or as under the civil service proper, it would be for them to expect an annual increase in their salaries in connection with the satisfactory work performed by them. We got men of a very high class, some of whom had obtained commissions at salaries, beginning at $600, a mere nominal amount. Take, for instance, a man whose name is not here. He happens to come from my county, it is true; but I can assure the hon. Minister that he has had no communication with me since I left the department in regard to his affairs, or interests, or the business of the department. It is quite proper in his own interests that he should not be misunderstood in this connection. He is a graduate of that college and a gold medalist. He distinguished himself as a mathematician. The chief engineer of the department, in my time, has the highest appreciation of his services. It will be found that he received a very small salary, considering his ability and what the chief engineer will say in regard to him. I mention him as the one with others who are men of ability, men whom it would be worth the Government's while to take care of and remain in the service. So, I press upon the hon. Minister the merits of these technical officers—of course I do not wish to press their claims against those of men who are not strictly called technical officers. I am most earnest in their regard in connection with the official correspondence on file in which I held on hopes and encouraged these officials to believe that if they came to the Canadian service they would be treated fairly and not in a niggardly manner.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). I am glad to hear what my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has said with regard to these officials. His views coincide largely with those I hold myself. The matter has been talked over by members of the Government from time to time, and I think my hon. friend the leader of the House (Sir Richard Cartwright) has strong views upon the desirability of offering to those passing through the Kingston College the incentive of employment in the public service in preference to those who do not pass through that college. Coming to my own department, I called attention to the fact that Mr. Stewart should have a small increase, and the House was pleased to vote the sum I asked, $100. I shall be happy to bear in mind the gentleman to whom he has especially called my attention—I presume he refers to Mr. Fraser. His name has been mentioned to me by several people, and I find on application to the chief of his branch that he bears a most excellent character. I can only say that I will look up the files in which he (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) as head of the department, made some statements to these gentlemen which he thinks it right that I should consider, and I shall be very glad to consider them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In connection with the addition of county court judge in the province of Manitoba, is the hon. gentleman able to say whether the appointment has been made?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot answer at the present time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I call your attention to the fact that in September last it was deemed so urgent that this appointment should be made at once, owing to the congested condition of business in certain districts of that province, that the Government came down and, in advance of any Order in Council, under the Manitoba Act—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I suppose my hon. friend is referring to the appointment of Mr. Prendergast, is he not?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That appointment is made.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understood the Solicitor General to say that he was not certain.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I meant that I could not now officially say whether he was sworn in or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I believe the papers say he was sworn in the day before yesterday. The Solicitor General, however, is unable to state here officially whether he is sworn in or not. But my point is this: If he was sworn in, it was only a matter of a day or two ago, in this month of June, 1897. I want to call attention to the position the Government took in September last. This was said to be so urgent a matter in connection with business in Manitoba and the litigation in that country, that the Government were unable to proceed in regular form and introduce an Act here constituting that office, but they came pell mell into the Chamber and asked for a vote, even in advance of the required action of the province of Manitoba whereby the judicial districts were constituted, which of course had to be constituted before the appointment of a judge or before the commission of the judge could issue. And strange things have happened. The money was voted in September, but no appointment was made at all, possibly—the Government are not quite sure about that—until a day or two ago.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). He was sworn in a day or two ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Government are unable to tell us when he was appointed, but certainly he is performing no judicial functions in any part of the province of Manitoba even at this time. But extraordinary things have happened. I do not wish to say anything about Judge Prendergast, now that he is no doubt after all, either appointed, or about to take his seat on the bench. I do not believe in attacking judges in any other way than that appointed by the law, and whatever may be said in regard to Judge Prendergast or any other judge in connection with the county court, it is a matter for inquiry by commission in connection with the judges of the Superior Court, it is a matter for inquiry for impeachment in proper form. But I am referring to the position of the Government, which is a most extraordinary one, because notwithstanding that extraordinary haste very nearly a year ago, there was not only a delay in the appointment, but there were negotiations; there were negotiations, for instance, in which the gentleman who is said to be now appointed judge, was an important actor. There were negotiations in connection with which the present Minister of the Interior was an important actor. And it was not until a settlement was reached—and this is a significant fact,—between the Government of the Dominion of Canada and the Government of Manitoba, that the Minister of the Interior agreed to come into the Government of Canada, and that Judge Prendergast agreed to go on the bench of Manitoba. Those facts are apparent, and imply that the position the Government took last September, and the fact that now, as I understand it, the Government do not propose to ask for legislation to provide for a judge in the regular way, but leave this duty to the caprice of the executive who may not, as they may see fit, vote the salary in the Estimates, that is a matter which requires a great deal of explanation at the hands of the Administration. It is a proper time now for me to ask why was it of such importance to take that vote in September last, that has not been required and has not been expended, before there was provision under the Manitoba Act constituting the office; and why was it, if the appointment was made during the last few days, that the Government were able to wait? Had those appointments anything to do with the Manitoba school question? That is a fair question, and I hope it will be answered in a spirit of candour. The Government surely does not propose to let judgment go by default on such grave suspicions, without giving substantial reasons for their course. If so, they are guilty, and we will take their silence as an admission.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They are purely matters of inference.

Mr. FOSTER. What my hon. friend behind me (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has brought out is certainly a grave matter so far as criticism is concerned, leaving aside certain developments which are said to have taken place lately in the court at Winnipeg as the result of preliminary objections which were taken in a certain election case. Here we had the Government, as my hon. friend has said, hurrying through the House in an unusual way a vote for a judge outside of the regular authorization by law. That was done on the plea of urgency. They have not yet made it statutory. They are coming down this year and asking again for a vote. Now, everybody knows that when you put a judge on such a tenure of office, you are unfair to the judge himself, and you are certainly degrading the proper administration of justice in this country. Every time that you ask this House to vote an individual salary for a judge on this extraordinary tenure, you invite criticism of that judge, you invite criticism of the item itself in every respect, and that is not healthy as regards the administration of justice. More than that, you put that judge in the position of insecurity and uncertainty. He knows that he does not stand as other judges, he knows that he is dependent on the will of Parliament every year. Surely this is not a principle which should rule in reference to the judiciary of this country. He knows that he is dependent upon the good-will of Parliament, and that is not all the principle which holds with reference to the judiciary in this country. These are statutory offices, their salaries go as a matter of statute, they are not dependent upon the criticism and the judgment of the House each year for their salary. Now, is the Government going to allow an occasion of this kind to pass, and say nothing as to what has caused this change, and give no explanation at all? But there is another and a graver aspect to this case, taken in connection with what my hon. friend has said of the extreme haste to get a vote before they had any intention, as appears now, of making the appointment, leaving the Government open to the suspicion that the vote was asked for a purpose, and if that purpose were fully carried out, then the appointment would be made, and if it were not, that, and what was contingent upon it, might fall to the ground. You have got the vote, it is said that you have carried out the negotiations successfully, you have gained two men, and now you are just appointing the judge. Altogether this has a very bad look upon it. Then there is the important item of news which came down from Winnipeg not long ago. Mr. Lauzon was elected in St. Boniface, and was protested; preliminary objections were put in, and what came out at these preliminary objections is a matter of newspaper record. What actually took place in court, and what was proved, and what happened as the result of that proof? It was proved that a Mr. Prendergast was guilty of illegal practices at that election. Is there any doubt that he was guilty of illegal practices? The attorney who had the case in hand for the protest against Mr. Lauzon came very quickly to the scratch and next day agreed that all these proceedings should cease. The case could not stand in a worse position. Yet here is a Government, with all these circumstances staring them in the face, and yet when explanations are asked, there is no member who will rise and give the necessary explanations. Is a judge to depend on individual votes got year by year? Is the administration of justice to depend on the successful carrying out of certain negotiations, and not to be properly carried out unless those negotiations are successful? More than that, are they going to pat on the back a man who has violated the fundamental principles of the election law, and who has written himself down as a boodler?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman say that there is any evidence that Mr. Prendergast was admitted to be a boodler or he was shown to be a boodler?

Mr. FOSTER. We recollect—and it has not been denied—a report of the proceedings before the courts, in which the evidence was that Mr. Prendergast paid for illegal services. To that extent he was a violator of the law, and if it had been pressed, he would have been a criminal under the evidence as it exists. I know that is a touchy point with the hon. gentleman opposite, and equally pressing circumstances might have brought out a very great similarity in the case as compared with the case of my hon. friend.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have often been favoured with objections which hon. members opposite, who were then sitting on this side of the House, offered when any attempt whatever was made to allude to the practices of members of the bench. This is the first time since I have been in Parliament that I have heard a member of Parliament charge a judge with being a boodler.

Mr. FOSTER. He is not a judge.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is now a judge. This is the first time in the Parliament of Canada that any member has ventured to charge an occupant of the bench with having been a boodler at any period of his life. Much less I think is it justifiable in the present instance, inasmuch as the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has not proper evidence on which to make the charge. He has made the charge on some statements he read in a newspaper. If an inexperienced member of Parliament had so far forgotten himself as to make such a statement from his place, even he would be open to censure; but when an hon. member who has filled high positions as a member of the Government takes such grounds, makes such observations, he is specially censurable. In this case the hon. gentleman says that Mr. Prendergast was a boodler, and has been a boodler. He has not the slightest evidence in support of that statement. In such a case, the statement should not have come from his lips, and he deserves to be classed as a common slanderer on the floor of Parliament. The hon. gentleman should either produce the evidence in support of his statement, or he should withdraw the charge.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should not use the words "common slanderer."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will qualify my expression, in deference to your opinion, Mr. Speaker. No man should use his position—and the higher his position the worse the offence—to spread broadcast a statement respecting another man unless he is able to prove it, or there is good and proper reason to believe that the public will accept his statement as being sufficient proof of such statement. I come back to my question—has the hon. gentleman any evidence in support of his statement? If not, it is due to Mr. Prendergast's position as a judge that the hon. gentleman should withdraw his statement. It is against the decencies of Parliament that a member should be allowed to place on "Hansard" and sow broadcast throughout the country any statement, unless he is prepared to make it good. We all know that in matters which are technically offences against the election law, there are degrees of moral guilt in connection with them, while the offences may be all equally against the law. I understand the only possible foundation for the statement made by the hon. gentleman that Mr. Prendergast was a boodler is found in the particulars filed in the application in question, namely, that he paid cab-hire.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was sworn to in court.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will presume that the payment was for the illegal purpose of conveying electors to the polls; but assuming as much as you can assume in regard to payment, there still remains the bald fact that the transaction was simply one of payment of cab-hire. Does that make a man a boodler? Such is not the fact, if we take the popular acceptance of the word. What is a boodler?

Mr. FOSTER. There is a representation right opposite.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is well deserving of the observation, which you, Mr. Speaker, ruled out as unparliamentary. I call on the hon. gentleman to withdraw the statement he has just made.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my index finger.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I call on the hon. gentleman to withdraw that observation he made.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend asked me what I thought was the definition of a boodler. I pointed to the hon. gentleman, and I said : "there is a representation."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I say that is a most unparliamentary expression.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am sure the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) will withdraw it.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, if the House understood that he was a representation of a boodler, I shall have to withdraw it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Unqualifiedly.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, unqualifiedly ; and I say, in addition, that when I want an example of gentlemanly proceeding, I will take the Postmaster General, who takes private correspondence and reads it in public.

Mr. SPEAKER. In regard to the point raised by the Postmaster General as to the use of the word "boodler" with respect to a judge on the bench—

Mr. TAYLOR. He has not got there yet.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand Mr. Prendergast is on the bench. Hon. gentlemen are proceeding to a certain extent on newspaper reports, and are making charges simply on newspaper reports. The Government say this gentleman has been appointed and sworn in as a judge. It is scarcely proper for any member of the House to use language such as a "boodler" to a gentleman who is now on the bench—assuming he is on the bench—members of the Government say he is—

Some hon. MEMBERS. He has been sworn in.

Mr. SPEAKER. Our rules do not protect outsiders from language of that kind ; but we find in "Bourinot," it stated :

But the Speakers of the English Commons now always interfere to prevent as far as they can all personal attacks on the judges and courts of justice. They have always felt themselves compelled to say that "such expressions should be withdrawn," and that "when it is proposed to call in question the conduct of a judge, the member desiring to do so should pursue the constitutional course of moving an address to the Crown."

I therefore think the hon. gentleman should withdraw the expression.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether you consider that ruling covers a statement characterizing the conduct of a gentleman who may be at the present time a judge, but which refers to his conduct anterior to his appointment as a judge ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I am assuming that Mr. Prendergast is now a judge.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, you have not caught my idea.

Mr. SPEAKER. Allow me to go on. I am assuming, in the first place, that Mr. Prendergast is a judge. I think also that if that gentleman is on the bench now, it is derogatory to the dignity of the bench that one of its occupants should be characterized as a "boodler" even for past acts.

Mr. FOSTER. If that is the ruling of the Speaker, and it covers the entire of the conduct, of course it opens up an old vista as to possibilities. If that be so, certainly I do not wish to be in the position of saying anything that would detract from the dignity of the bench. But, Sir, the detraction from the dignity of the bench has been in the appointment that has been made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That does not quite cover the point. I submit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is obliged to withdraw the statement.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It was understood that we should adjourn at 1 o'clock. With respect to this matter which has been represented by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), namely, the desirability of every judge being paid under statute, I think there is no difference of opinion between us, and with all reasonable speed that should be done. I now move :

That the further consideration of these resolutions be deferred to the next sitting of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.05 p.m.

Second Sitting.

KINGSTON POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. McMULLEN asked :

1. When was James Shannon appointed postmaster at Kingston?
2. When was he superannuated?
3. What was his age when superannuated?
4. Was he an efficient postmaster?
5. Had the late Government instituted any inquiry as to his efficiency?
6. Had they any report in regard to such efficiency?
7. Had he been recommended to the late Government to be retired? If so, on what ground?
8. Had the said James Shannon an opportunity of improving himself as to the duties of his office?
9. If so, had he improved his opportunity and become a capable officer?
10. Was he a man in reasonable vigorous health?
11. Who is Mr. Shannon's successor?
12. What are such successor's qualifications for the office?
13. Is he now in charge of the office and discharging the duties of the office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Mr. James Shannon was appointed postmaster at Kingston on the 6th of January, 1880, and was superannuated in the year 1897. He was born on the 2nd of June, 1829, and was just completing his 68th year when superannuated. In the opinion of the chief post office inspector he was not an efficient postmaster. The administration of the Kingston post office under his management had been unsatisfactory and the late Government had instituted an inquiry in regard to the management and on the 25th of June, 1895, the chief inspector reported to the Government that Mr. Shannon knew little whatever of post office duties or of the management of men; that he had been in feeble health for some years—was affected with epilepsy, and reported that it would be in the interest of the service if Mr. Shannon were placed on the retired list and a stronger and more capable man was appointed to the postmastership.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is what we did. We appointed a man of more experience. The attention of the present Government having been called to this report, the chief inspector was consulted as to whether he still adhered to his view as therein expressed, and that officer merely gave it as his opinion that the management of the Kingston post office was unsatisfactory and had been so for many years and was in a more or less demoralized condition, amongst other reasons, owing to the inefficiency of the postmaster, including his inability to manage the staff, and that the Kingston post office was not rendering such service as the public had a right to expect, that the expense thereof was greater than it should be and that a reform in the management should begin in a change of postmaster. As a circumstance showing the inefficiency of the management of the post office, and the need for a reform, it may be stated that under the late postmaster's administration two succeeding assistant postmasters were guilty of embezzlement of the post office funds, one of whom fled the country and the other was convicted and sentenced to a term of years in the penitentiary.

As to whether the postmaster had had a reasonable opportunity of improving himself in the discharge of his duties, it may be stated that he has had seventeen years opportunity and that there was no reason to believe at the time of his superannuation that the management of the office under his administration would improve.

In reply to the 11th, 12th and 13th questions the answer is, that Mr. Shannon was succeeded in the office by Mr. Alexander Gunn. That gentleman is now in charge of the office personally discharging the duties and taking an active interest in its management. He has had a large and extensive business experience and is reported as an excellent business man, and it is reasonably expected that under his supervision there will be a marked improvement in the management of the office.

NINGA, MAN., POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. Has W. McKnight, postmaster at Ninga, Man., been dismissed?
2. If so, what charges were preferred against him?
3. Has any investigation been held?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Mr. W. McKnight postmaster of Ninga, has been dismissed. 2. An investigation by the post office inspector showed that Mr. McKnight had violated certain regulations of the department in delivering a registered letter from his office to a person other than the addressee, and in having divulged information obtained in his capacity as postmaster. 3. See answer to No. 2.

KINGSTON POSTMASTERSHIP.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. In connection with the change of postmaster in the Kingston post office, did the hon. Postmaster General obtain any report showing that the late postmaster was unfit for his work, and if so, in what respect was he considered unfit?
2. Before appointing Mr. Gunn, did the Postmaster General ascertain his age?
3. In what particular, if any, was it considered by the Postmaster General that the retirement of Mr. Shannon and the appointment of Mr. Gunn would improve the office?
4. Is the Postmaster General able to say whether Mr. Gunn is superior to Mr. Shannon in mental or physical strength, or vigour, or better qualified to perform the duties of the office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The whole of this question has been answered by the answer given to the preceding question, with the exception of question No. 2, the answer to which is, no.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would call the attention of the Postmaster General to questions 3 and 4, which have not been answered specially, and I think not in effect.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If the hon. gentleman will read the answer carefully, I think he will see that I have dealt with them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not with the comparative statement with regard to Mr. Shannon and Mr. Gunn, involved in the third and fourth parts of my question. I hope the question will be again allowed to stand, and I think the hon. gentleman will see that he has not answered it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to avoid answering the hon. gentleman's question in the slightest degree; but, having given my answer with regard to the shortage of qualification in Mr. Shannon, and having stated that Mr. Gunn is a man of great business experience, I think I answered the two questions.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I ask for a comparative statement about mental and physical strength, for instance. That is not answered.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman may allow the question to stand till to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is what I wish. The hon. gentleman may persist in his view, but I think he will see, on reflection, that he has not answered these two questions.

Question allowed to stand.

DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTION LITERATURE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Have speeches that have been delivered by Hon. A. S. Hardy, Premier of Ontario, and Hon. R. Harcourt, Provincial Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, been printed in pamphlet form?

2. Are said speeches being sent here from the office of publication in Toronto in mail bags free of postage?

3. Are said speeches being folded by the employees of this House?

4. Are Government paper and envelopes being used for this purpose?

5. Are the employees of the Government engaged addressing said speeches to the electors of Ontario?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The Government is not aware whether speeches delivered by Hon. A. S. Hardy, premier of Ontario, and Hon. R. Harcourt, provincial treasurer, have been printed in pamphlet form or in any other form; nor is the Government aware of such speeches being transmitted through the mails in any form, free or otherwise.

McINTYRE'S LAKE AND SYDNEY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. HALEY asked :

What was the contract price payable to Mr. Morrison for carrying the mail between McIntyre's Lake and Sydney, and was the contract let by tender? If not, have the Government taken any, and if so, what steps to terminate the contract and secure the performance of the service at a fair price?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). When the present Government assumed office, it found that $8,505 per annum was paid for this service, the amount being fixed at the time the mail service between Port Hawkesbury and Sydney was cut off at McIntyre's Lake; the rate of the latter service, $9,000, being reduced to $8,505 to correspond with the decrease in the length of the route. As this rate of $9,000 was made after a tendering in 1894, which afforded little opportunity to those desiring to offer in that only five days was allowed between the opening of the tenders and the commencement of the contract, the present Government cancelled the contract at $8,505 per annum, and proposed to put the service up to tender, but as it was represented that to put the service up on the approach of winter would fail of securing the best results from tendering, and as the contractor, Mr. Morrison, asked to be allowed a greater length of time than three months to arrange for withdrawing from the contract, the service was offered to Mr. Morrison at the rate of $6,586.65 per annum, until the 30th June inst. This is the rate of a tender received at the time of tendering in 1894, but which was withdrawn on account of the difficulty and expense of equipping in midwinter. By this arrangement a reduction was secured of $1,918.35 per annum until the 30th June, and tenders were invited for the service divided into two parts which connect at St. Peters. The tenders have been opened and the contracts awarded to the lowest tenderers, and the matters placed in the hands of the inspector for the completion of the contracts. At this point it would be premature to say more than that a saving will be effected which, as compared with the price paid when the Government took office, will not be less than $18,000 for the contract term.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1897, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, June 10th, 1897.

ATLANTIC FAST STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I am afraid we shall not be able to proceed with the resolution regarding the fast steam service as there are some clerical errors in it on the Order paper. We shall go on with it to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend be good enough to take it up to-morrow afternoon, as the Railway Committee sits in the morning?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Very well.

DISMISSALS OF BRIDGE TENDERS IN PICTOU.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am sorry the hon. Minister of Railways is not in his place as I wish to refer to a certain return ordered, but the fact can be brought to his notice. In our last session an order was passed for a return of the correspondence in connection with the dismissals of two bridge tenders on the railway bridge over Pictou harbour. The papers brought down refer to other letters not brought down, written by Mr. McDonald, one of the candidates at the last election, and are rather an important part of the correspondence as they doubtless contain charges against these men. This session the House, on my motion, ordered these other letters to be brought down, and I should like to have the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways called to the fact that they have not yet been laid on the Table, and I should like to have them when the Estimates of his department are under consideration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). That is the supplemental order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What I desire to have is the correspondence referred to in the papers brought down and which are covered by the supplemental order.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Immigration—Salaries of agents and employees in Canada..... $35,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the hon. gentleman to give the names of the agents, their salaries and where they are working.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman I beg to say that the following is the information he desires:—

John A. Kirk, Halifax .....	$1,200 00
T. E. Clay, Halifax .....	720 00
M. Kennedy, Halifax .....	410 62

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman also state in what cases these parties appointed have taken the places of others dismissed, and the names of those who were dismissed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not absolutely sure that I could do that accurately now. I could give a statement later on of the changes, but from the statement I have in my hand I could not give the information the hon. gentleman asks for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman is not prepared to give us the names of those dismissed and of those who are filling their positions, we shall have to defer consideration of this item.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give the names of the officers who are there now and their salaries, but I am not absolutely sure that I could say accurately in every case whether there was a change made or not. I can, however, furnish that information later.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would save time to let the item stand until the hon. gentleman has the information. It is absolutely necessary that the information should be given before this item is passed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A return was sent over from my department some days ago and laid on the Table, showing the changes that have taken place, and the hon. gentleman has access to that.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend has that return, it is a very easy matter for him to give the information.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the paper I have is not noted. Possibly, speaking from recollection, I might give some information, but could not be absolutely sure that it would be always accurate. The hon. gentleman, however, can take the returns and see what the changes are which were made.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like my hon. friend to understand that when a Minister is explaining his Estimates, he has to give the information then and there, and he might as well bow to the rule and give it, for I can assure him, as far as I am concerned, this item will not pass.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman assumes that I am not desirous of giving the information, which is not the case. What I said was that the hon. gentleman could better get the information from the return before him than from a verbal statement of mine, which possibly might not be in every case absolutely accurate. I have not the slightest desire to conceal any changes made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend has laid a return on the Table giving the information required, he ought to be able, with that return in his hand, to repeat it to us when considering the item.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman would also be capable, with the return before him, of seeing the changes.

Mr. WALLACE. There are 213 members of this House and only one copy of the return. How then are the members of this House to get the information? I never heard of it until within the last five minutes. The Minister has the information; let him bring it before the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no use wasting time. If the hon. gentleman objects, I will have the abstract made, and I will read it. But the hon. gentleman will not have any more information, nor will he have it in any better form.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would suggest that we could reserve one item upon which all these questions could be taken up.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am afraid not, and I will tell my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) why. Now is the time to take this matter up when the item is being passed for salaries of officers in this country, just as appropriate information is required when you are passing items in reference to officials in Great Britain or foreign countries. We want the information which has never been refused to the House by any Minister of the Interior or under any circumstances before.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I wish to repudiate entirely the idea that there is any intention to refuse information. I stated distinctly that I would give the information. I suggested to the hon. gentlemen that they could get the information more satisfactorily in the manner I proposed. But if they do not accept my suggestion, I am perfectly willing that the item shall stand over.

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest that this whole item had better stand, because at the end of the list we find an appropriation for contingencies for all these offices. So they are all bound up together. It is all one subject, and I think the whole matter had better stand.

Item allowed to stand.

Railways and Canals--Chargeable to Capital--Intercolonial Railway..... $348,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) will take this opportunity to state to the House the policy of the Government with reference to these railway questions that are of so much importance. In the hon. Minister's absence a few days ago, I drew the attention of the hon. leader of the House to the fact, that down to the present moment, we have never had that information that the House was entitled to on the day it met as to the arrangements made for bringing the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal. We are now in the last days of the session, and from one cause or another, even as to what was declared by the Governor General in the Speech from the Throne to be an arrangement absolutely concluded, this House has been placed in the position of not knowing what hon. gentlemen opposite have done, or what policy they had adopted. This is a most important measure entailing a very heavy expenditure upon the country. I hope that my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) will now be in a position to, at least, give to the House that information which we have been entitled to for a long time, if the Speech of the Governor General at the opening of the House was a correct one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It was my purpose to have asked the permission of the committee, when the Estimates for Railways and Canals were entered upon to make a statement with respect to the arrangements that have been entered into or proposed to be entered into between the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Drummond County Railway Company and the Government, touching the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal. In doing that I would be redeeming the promise I gave the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) the other day, when I said I would take the opportunity to furnish the House with a brief statement upon the subject in advance of tabling the resolutions. This I thought would be convenient, because hon. members would desire, before the resolutions were adopted, to have the fullest opportunity of considering the details of the proposed arrangement, and I was very desirous that they should have that opportunity. In furtherance of that pledge, I may begin by stating that the arrangements have been entirely concluded, so far as they can be concluded without the sanction of Parliament. Terms have been agreed upon between the Grand Trunk Railway Company on its part, the Drummond County Railway Company on its part and the Government, whereby it is proposed, if the arrangements are approved by Parliament, to secure an extension of the Intercolonial Railway system into Montreal by not later than the 1st of November next. I do not propose to invite, at this juncture, a debate upon the proposal, because, I suppose, it would be inconvenient all around. But I will state briefly the terms of the arrangement and will furnish the committee with a portion of the reasons, at least, which induced the Government to make the arrangements which have been made. I assume that there will scarcely be any difference of opinion whatever as to the advisability of our extending the Government system of railways into the city of Montreal. As the terminus of the road has been situated for many years past it has been most inconvenient not only for the people who have done business with the railway, but in the interest of the road itself. I am not assuming at all that in entering upon these arrangements and adopting this policy we have taken a course that has not suggested itself or has not been desired, perhaps, by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in control of the Government of the country. But it has so happened, probably, that circumstances have been more favourable to our completing the arrangements; and I think that when I have stated those arrangements in detail they will be regarded as very favourable and will meet the approval of the House. Shortly after the conclusion of the last session of Parliament I took occasion to ascertain from the leading officials of the Grand Trunk Railway Company whether they would be open to discuss the question of the Government acquiring running rights over the bridge, the use of their terminals and such portion of the railway south of the St. Lawrence and in the direction of Lévis, as we might conclude that it would be desirable to acquire. I found a very ready disposition on their part to enter into a discussion of the question, and we had many interviews upon the subject, with the result that finally they proposed terms to us for the use of their terminal in Montreal, not only the station, but all their terminal facilities, extending as far as Point St. Charles, and all the intermediate points, and the lines and branches in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. As I say, they made a proposition to us including the use of all those facilities in Montreal, with the Bonaventure station, and named a figure which ultimately was reduced somewhat, and which we finally agreed upon. I will tell what that figure is later. Then as to the bridge, we found that it was in contemplation by the Grand Trunk Railway Company very much to enlarge their bridge. They felt the need of a double track being laid down for the purposes of their business; the single track has been very much congested at certain seasons of the year, and they had in contemplation at the same time, while laying down a double track for railway purposes, to afford some facilities for tramways and highways, and a foot bridge across that river. Altogether they contemplated an outlay of something in the neighbourhood of two million dollars in extending the bridge facilities. Our negotiations with them, however, only had reference to the use of the railway tracks, and we agreed ultimately upon a sum of money which we would be willing, Parliament approving, to pay them for the use of those facilities. Having found that we could come to an understanding with the Grand Trunk Railway Company in respect to the terminals at Bonaventure, and in respect to the use of their bridge, we then had to consider the question how we would bridge the hiatus between our present terminus at or near the Chaudière Junction and the bridge. No doubt, a majority of the members of the committee who are aware of the local situation in that neighbourhood, know very well the various lines of railway that are now running between those points and those which have been projected. If they do, they will be aware that the Grand Trunk Railway now has a line via Richmond between Chaudière and the bridge, and it was important for us to consider whether we should seek to make arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway Company to acquire rights over that line; and upon a consultation with the officers of my department, and upon general consideration of the question, I concluded that there were objections to our adopting that line as a connection between the present terminus of the Intercolonial Railway and the bridge, and these objections seemed to be of such a character as to be fatal to that plan. In the first place, the length of the line is greater than we could secure by other routes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By how much?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About twenty miles.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole length?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The distance from the Victoria Bridge to the Chaudière, I think, is about 160 miles. As I said, there was the objection of distance. There was another objection, that of grades. There are one or two very severe grades on that line, and we felt that it would be very undesirable to take that section of railway over unless we failed to secure another route at a price which we would feel justified in paying. Having, then, discarded the idea of seeking to arrange with the Grand Trunk Railway over their line via Richmond, then it became a question whether we would negotiate with the people who have partly built, and who are thinking of completing, a line running along the south shore of the St. Lawrence—I do not know by what name you would call it; some call it the South Shore. I believe it is now called the Great Eastern. At all events, the line to which I have reference runs from St. Lambert along the south shore of the St. Lawrence to connect with the Chaudière.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is familiarly known as the Drummond Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the Drummond Railway is another line; this is on the south shore. The Drummond line runs between the south Shore line and the Grand Trunk Railway via Richmond.

Mr. FOSTER. Where does the South Shore come into Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At St. Lambert, I think. I think it connects with the Grand Trunk Railway at Sorel; at all events, it connects with the Grand Trunk Railway on the south side of the St. Lawrence, because they must cross the Victoria Bridge at Montreal. Now, there was the objection of distance as respects that route; there was the further fact that but a small portion of that line had been constructed, and to complete its construction there would need to be several very costly bridges built, and there would be no comparison between the objection arising from the additional distance and the cost of the road intermediate between that line and the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman know about what length that is on the south shore?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is some ten miles longer than that which was ultimately chosen. There then remained the Drummond Railway Company to consider. That road was projected from St. Rosalie, a point about thirty-five miles from the south end of the Victoria Bridge. It has been built and is in running operation to a point about thirty-two or thirty-three miles from the Chaudière. Then the hiatus between these two points would need to be filled up. The Drummond County Railway is in actual operation so far as it is constructed, and a branch has been built from about the present terminus to the shore at a place called Nicolet, sixteen or seventeen miles in length. In negotiating with the Drummond County Railway I may say at once that we had a decided preference to purchasing their road and completing it ourselves, if they had been willing to sell it upon reasonable terms, but they did not appear to be willing to do so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How near does it come to Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Thirty-five miles, as I mentioned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is thirty-three miles from the eastern terminus to the Chaudière, and thirty-five miles from its western terminus to Montreal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps I have not made myself clear. The Drummond County Railway connects with the Grand Trunk Railway system at St. Rosalie, a point thirty-five miles from the bridge; and it runs then in an easterly direction towards the Chaudière, stopping thirty-three or thirty-four miles short of reaching that point.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is precisely what I said. Can the hon. gentleman name the place where the Drummond County Railway terminates, which is about thirty-three miles from Chaudière?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the name is Forrest Vale.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Moose Park.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the point where the Drummond Counties Railway terminates, going towards Chaudière.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are two or three places named Forrest Vale and Moose Park. In determining whether or not it would be in the interest of the Government to arrange the taking over the Drummond County road, we, of course, had to ascertain as best we could what it would cost to build the shortest line between those two points, and how that estimate of the cost would compare with the figures which were being debated between the railway company and the Government. We ultimately came to the conclusion that it would be better to close a contract with the railway company, by which the company would complete the road from the point at which it now connects with the Intercolonial Railway at Chaudière, and under which the Government would lease the whole road when completed. That is the nature of the arrangement we have made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is, for the company to build the thirty-three miles from Moose Park to the Chaudière?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and the road is to be according to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. We require the company to put down rails of not less than seventy pounds to the yard, and in other respects to make the road of the standard of the Intercolonial. The company have undertaken to do so, and the Government are to go into possession of the whole road not later than 1st November next.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman ascertained what is the heaviest grade from Chaudière to St. Hyacinthe?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes; it will not exceed fifty-three feet to the mile. We ascertained there were two spots upon the completed portion of the road which somewhat exceed that figure, and we made a stipulation in the contract that the grade should be reduced so as to comply with the uniform standard, and that the portion of the road from Ste. Rosalie would not exceed that grade.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is the grade on the Grand Trunk?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not say.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought the hon. gentleman took the grade as one of the objections to acquiring that portion of the Grand Trunk from the Chaudière to Montreal, and held they were excessive grades. In this view, it is important to know what the grades on this projected line will be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have stated that that was the objection offered. I have always understood that the grades were very high, and my engineers have so reported; and while I cannot state exactly what are the grades between those two points on the Grand Trunk, I am satisfied they are very heavy, I think considerably over 1 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will be able, no doubt, to furnish that information to the committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, before the discussion is over. The estimate as to the probable cost of the road between these two points, as made by our engineers, is $1,600,000. That did not, and could not, include the land damages, because we were not in a position to form anything like a correct judgment as to what the land damages would be. In the event of our deciding upon laying down a new line ourselves, and not making any arrangement with the Drummond County Railway Company, we would necessarily have to make a considerable allowance for the probable amount of land damages.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Are the land damages included in the arrangement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. The arrangement with the Drummond County Railway Company includes the delivery to us of the completed road, according to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway as to that portion of it which they are now completing, with a rail laid down on that portion of 70 pounds to the yard, and generally up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway; and absolutely and wholly unencumbered. As I shall explain later, it is practically unencumbered. It was considered by us as to whether or not it would be preferable, instead of making an arrangement which was the best we could make with the Drummond County, to lay down a new line ourselves, and we came to the conclusion that we could not construct such a road, under the most favourable circumstances, for less than $1,600,000; and then we would be left uncertain as to the probable amount of land damages we would be obliged to pay. The Government have some little experience in times past with regard to this question of land damages, particularly in that section of the country, and it presented a formidable consideration for us.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is the condition of the country between Moose Park and Chaudière?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have never been over it, but I am informed that it is farming, and probably lumber.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Most of it is in forest.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I assume, that the land damages would be very little; that in fact the value of the country opened up would be more than the land damages would amount to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That remark would probably be correct if we were only considering the cost of land damages as between the point where the railway is now completed, and the Chaudière. But, if we were going to entirely decline the propositions which were made by the Drummond County Railway Company, and to build a new line ourselves, we would have to deal with the question of land damages for the entire length of the road we were building. That, I say, seemed to us to be a very formidable consideration. We concluded, for the reasons which I stated to the committee, that it would not be advisable for us to build a new road, and also for the further reason, that in building a new road we would be planting it alongside a line already constructed, and have this line as a competitor for business, and we would be practically destroying that amount of invested capital. We concluded then, that it would be better to accede to the propositions which were made, which were very fair I am bound to say, and which I think the committee will consider fair, and to—perhaps with the hope of effecting a possible saving of $100,000 or $200,000 in the total cost—to close with the Drummond County Company. They offered to us finally to give us a perpetual lease for $64,000 a year, of the line from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière. That would be the interest at 4 per cent on $1,600,000, and they transferred to us their rights and interests in the balance of the line, from the end of the Chaudière junction across the bridge and to the Intercolonial Railway connection, which was arranged between themselves and the Grand Trunk Railway Company. They had made an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, under which the Grand Trunk Railway Company for $6,000 a year, agreed to give them the use of the bridge and the tracks on either side of the bridge on the balance of the road, towards, and connecting with the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, connecting at Ste. Rosalie.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, at the Chaudière. We took over as it were, the arrangement that the Drummond County Company had made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At Chaudière.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. Instead of building a new bridge, and laying down a new track, for the purpose of making the connection ourselves, we simply took over the arrangement which was made by the Drummond Company with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, under which we acquired, for $6,000 a year, a lease of these privileges.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is in addition to the $64,000 a year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is for the terminal facilities at the Chaudière ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. Our arrangement with the Drummond County Company is in terms, a lease in perpetuity. We have it for 99 years for an annual rental of $70,000 ; taking in the line which I have described, and the terminal facilities, and bridge at the Chaudière end of the line. It is one of the conditions of this agreement, that at the expiration of the 99 years the railway becomes the property of the Crown, entirely free of all encumbrances. We take it in fee, unencumbered, as our own property, at the expiration of that period, so that we are practically paying, as the purchase price, $64,000 a year for the term of 99 years. In other words, we are paying 4 per cent upon $1,600,000 for that term, and at the expiration of it the property is ours. That is the nature of the arrangement which we have entered into with the Drummond County Company.

Mr. TISDALE. May I ask the Minister, whether the terminal facilities he speaks of were included in the $1,600,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. They were not. The estimate of the engineers did not touch this at all. I will now state to the committee the nature of the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

Mr. FOSTER. Before you come to that ; at the termination of 99 years does the Crown get the possession of the portion for which you are paying the $6,000 a year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. We are only taking over the Grand Trunk Railway arrangement, and paying what the Drummond County Company stipulated they would pay the Grand Trunk Railway Company. As respects that end of the undertaking, we acquire the ownership—we acquire a half undivided interest as it were in that end of the line. We have the same rights and the same property in it as the Grand Trunk Railway Company have ; no more and no less.

Now, as to the other end, the arrangement you will see which we have made with the Drummond County Company, gives a connection at Ste. Rosalie, and therefore, we would need to agree with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for rights over their line, from Ste. Rosalie to the bridge. The arrangement we have concluded with the Grand Trunk Company is to pay them $37,500 per year rental.

Mr. FOSTER. That brings you to the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That brings us to the bridge. In the leasing arrangement with the company, we acquire, not only the customary right to run our trains over their track, reaching the Grand Trunk Railway via Ste. Rosalie, but exactly the same property rights in the track and the same right to do business, to pick up traffic and carry passengers, that the Grand Trunk Company have. A similar arrangement has been made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway between Toronto and Hamilton ; but under that arrangement the only right acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway is the right to run their trains over the line. If they do any business, they have to pay the Grand Trunk Company 85 per cent out of every 100 per cent of their receipts. They are not allowed to use the road as if they were the owners. Under this arrangement we have secured the right to use this railway as fully and completely as if we owned it—as fully and completely as the Grand Trunk Company itself.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the term of that agreement ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is for ninety-nine years, renewable. It will be observed, also, upon a comparison of our arrangement with that entered into between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway between Toronto and Hamilton, that the mileage in that case is thirty-eight or forty miles, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as I am credibly informed, pay $40,000 a year to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for such use as they get of that track ; whereas, we pay $37,500 a year for the ownership of one undivided half of this road. For the bridge we pay $40,000 per year, and for the terminals in Montreal $62,500 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the length of that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These arrangements are all included in the one leasing contract, and are for the one period, and for the total rental of $140,000. That is the arrangement we have entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I may add that the contract has been executed, and I am now in a position at once to lay the contract on the Table, in connection with the notice of motion which I will give for the purpose of ratifying these contracts—both that with the Drummond County Railway Company and that with the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is my hon. friend in a position to state how much this shortens the distance? From Chaudière to Montreal, I think, he estimated that it shortened the distance twenty-four miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask what the comparative distance will be over the Intercolonial Railway by this route, and over the short line of the Canadian Pacific through St. John?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could run that up with the hon. gentleman, but I have not the exact mileage in my mind. It would scarcely be a fair comparison, because St. John would have a line in a directly opposite course from the direct line of the Intercolonial Railway. After you got to Moncton, you would have to run over much the same ground.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend, I think, misapprehends me. The object of this measure, I assume, is largely to shorten the distance between Halifax and Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway. When this expenditure has been made and this shortening attained, I want to know how the distance between Montreal and Halifax, via St. John, over the Canadian Pacific Railway, will compare with the distance over the Intercolonial Railway via Chaudière. These are objective points, and I assume that my hon. friend has carefully made the comparison before incurring this expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend quite misunderstood me if he understood me to rest the justification of this policy upon the ground that the distance between Halifax and Montreal was being materially shortened. I have not mentioned that as yet, and I am free to confess that I did not have that consideration very much in mind. I had a different idea altogether in my mind, as others have who have regarded the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal as important. I regarded it as of the first consequence to the Intercolonial system that it should reach a commercial terminus, a large city, where it could drop down and take up business; and it is so regarded by every railway owner or operator—that he should get into a place where business originates, where population is, where he can be in a position to make his connections, and make traffic arrangements with advantage with other lines of railway. The ample justification for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal appears to me to rest in these considerations, and does not at all depend on the question of distance. The only way in which the question of distance suggested itself to my mind as an important consideration was in determining whether we should acquire from the Grand Trunk Company their present line. We chose the more direct route, on the ground of distance as one consideration.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Will the passenger trains, after leaving St. Charles, pass St. Henri and Chaudière, or by the St. Charles Branch and the Grand Trunk, as at present?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is a matter that will, of course, have to be considered. I would not like to make any announcement at the present moment what the course will be. That, I presume, will be a matter which the general manager will look into and advise upon.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. If the trains leaving St. Charles are to pass nine miles from Quebec, it will make a great difference. That is a most important consideration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to give the hon. gentleman any positive assurance as to how the trains will run after the connections are made. That has not yet been considered, and until the whole arrangement is concluded, the time has scarcely arrived for determining that question. I think it extremely unlikely, however, that the trains would take a route which would leave out an important and populous centre. I should think Lévis would not be overlooked; but I am not in a position to make a positive statement about the matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that the expenditure to be incurred in connection with this matter will be $210,000 per year. I ask my hon. friend if he really undertook to enter upon an arrangement of this kind without considering the competition that he will have to meet? The hon. gentleman says that he has made a calculation of the distance between Halifax, which is the objective point, and Montreal, by the route he now proposes, but he has not entered into a calculation as to how that distance will compare with the existing line of the Canadian Pacific Railway running to St. John and thence by the Intercolonial to Halifax. It appears to me that this is the cardinal point to consider. He certainly should have taken that competition into account, and if so, I should suppose he would be able to state the relative distances. Surely the hon. gentleman, before incurring this enormous expense must have made the calculation to ascertain whether there was already a line between these two points a great deal shorter than the new line he has arranged for.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess that I cannot see the direct object of the hon. gentleman's criticism. If he means to say that the Intercolonial ought not to seek to do its own trade between Lévis and Montreal and to increase that trade, if possible, because, forsooth, it would thereby be competing perhaps successfully with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that is an argument which does not commend itself to my mind at all. I think it is the duty of the Government to look after the interests of its own railway, no matter what other lines of railway it may enter into competition with. We know very well that people do now travel by the Intercolonial to Lévis and take the Grand Trunk Railway from Lévis to Montreal, and we do know that a great deal of traffic is carried over the Intercolonial and transferred to the Grand Trunk Railway at Chaudière. Is it to be said that we ought not to take means to increase that business and augment the revenue of the Intercolonial and put it on a more prosperous basis, because the Canadian Pacific Railway is a rival and competitive road? I cannot see the force of that argument. I think it is our duty, no matter what other railway may enter into competition with our own, to do all the business we can. There could be no other object in operating the Intercolonial. I did not ask myself whether or not the actual mileage between Halifax via St. John, over the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal, would be greater or less than the mileage by this railway when it is completed. I knew, I suppose, what the exact mileage is, and I daresay I made a comparison, but I do not carry it in my mind and I have not got it with me to state to the committee at this moment, but I will have it shortly. But whether the mileage be greater or less, everybody who looks into the question knows that the Intercolonial cannot do business upon business principles the way it has been located, and it is the duty of the Government to take such course as will make the road more successful and prosperous. If the result shall be that we will be able to command more of the business of the maritime provinces going west and also of the business from the west to the east than we have heretofore been able to obtain, and if we be able to enter into more successful competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway than we have hitherto succeeded in doing, so much the worse for the Canadian Pacific Railway and so much the better for us. We are not going to regulate our affairs by the consideration whether we shall prejudicially affect any other railway or not. There will be, after the new line is completed, something like 75 or 76 miles difference between the two roads, in favour of the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Montreal and Halifax.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is what I wanted to get from the hon. gentleman.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have said that the contracts have been completed and are printed, and I shall be able to give a notice of motion with respect to them and put them on the Table at once, so that they may be in the possession of hon. members.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Under this arrangement with the Drummond Railway, will the Government be prevented from giving a subsidy, as promised, to the Quebec bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) understood me to take the position he has just charged me with taking, he is the only hon. gentleman in this House on either side who has formed any such opinion. The hon. gentleman has found it convenient to put up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking it down. The point which I raised was this, and I think it will commend itself to the judgment of business men, that the Minister of Railways, before incurring an additional expenditure in connection with the Intercolonial of at least $7,000,000, was bound to ascertain what his position would be after he had reached the city of Montreal. When the hon. gentleman undertook to say that I had questioned the right or propriety of the Government entering into competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, he must have known perfectly well that he had no ground whatever for making that statement. I did not raise the question as to whether it was right and proper on the part of this Government to use the public money of the country in order to promote competition between the Intercolonial and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but what I asked the hon. gentleman was whether, before incurring this enormous expenditure, he had assured himself that he would get any commensurate advantage for the country in return. Is there a business man in this House who will not say that the first question that the hon. Minister should have put to himself was this: What will be my prospect, with this new line, of obtaining increased business? And if that does not commend itself to the hon. gentleman as a business proposition, I would like to know whether there is another member of this House who is so obtuse as not to see—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes—I say, whether there is a man in this House who will stand up and say he is so obtuse as not to recognize the duty of the Minister of Railways to take into his consideration as a prime question, in deciding whether this should be carried out or not, what prospect there was of obtaining business for which he was incurring such an enormous expenditure. And yet the hon. gentleman intimated that he had not taken the trouble to ascertain whether there was another road already built and in operation that would be in a position to compete with him for business between Montreal and Halifax, seventy-six miles shorter, as he now admits it will be. Sir, there is no member of this House who would be so delighted as myself to see anything done that would facilitate business over the Intercolonial Railway between the city of Montreal and the city of Halifax. But when it becomes a question of incurring enormous expenditure by the Government of this country, I say that any person who entertains a proposition to that end is bound to ask himself whether he is going to attain the object aimed at. Does the hon. gentleman think that his ability in the management of a railway is so transcendently superior to that of Sir William VanHorne or Mr. Shaughnessey, that with a difference of seventy-six miles against him, he is going to capture the business between Halifax and Montreal? Why, Sir, the thing is so very absurd on the face of it that I can well understand the hon. gentleman attempting to withdraw from it the attention of the House by entering upon a discussion that was entirely foreign to the question, and that nothing that I had said had justified in the slightest degree. The hon. gentleman has left out of consideration another mode of obtaining access to Montreal, one which was worthy of his attention. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) has asked a very pertinent question indeed; and no wonder. The fact is known to every person in this House that the late Government, like all Governments in Canada, recognized the great importance of securing the building of a bridge across the river that would bring the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Quebec. Every person knows that the late Government pledged themselves in the face of the country to assist that project. The leader of that Government, the late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald authorized me to declare to the people of Quebec and in the face of the whole country, that his Government was prepared—I was not then a member of it—if the city of Quebec, the province of Quebec, and the parties interested would join in the undertaking to make a very substantial contribution for the purpose of carrying out a project of such great importance not only to the city of Quebec, but to the maritime provinces, in securing railway connection with that important city. No person can contend but that the measure which is now before the House is a death-blow to that project. Why, Sir, the only ground on which the Government of Canada could be asked to make a large contribution to the construction of a bridge to Quebec was that it would bring in the Intercolonial Railway into Quebec, instead of having the road reaching that city by a ferry, which was found to be a very inefficient mode of communication. With this complete communication could be had with the city of Montreal by means of a road constructed and in operation—the Canadian Pacific Railway from Quebec. Had the hon. gentleman forgotten that the late Government were pledged, as the present Government is pledged, to give substantial assistance to the great and important project of a bridge to connect the Intercolonial Railway with Quebec, that that pledge was on record on the part of these Governments, thus pledging the country to the proposal? That bridge would have given access to Quebec, not only by the Intercolonial, but to the Grand Trunk Railway, now running to Lévis, as well as the other railways running to the south from that point. Every person knows that the moment the project now before the House is endorsed by this House, we may at once and for ever cease to talk of any hope or chance of securing the construction of that bridge. Why? Because this project would sweep away one of the great objects to be gained by building it, for the Government will have obtained other means of access to Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway than that which would be afforded by the construction of the bridge. If the hon. gentleman was taking up that question as a matter of business, why did not he, in the first instance, knowing that the Government of which he was a member were pledged to give substantial aid to the Quebec bridge, and that the Liberal-Conservatives were likewise pledged, and were in a position, on this side, though not in power, to aid and support any Government in carrying out that pledge—why did not the hon. gentleman ascertain on what terms he could get running powers for the Intercolonial Railway over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Quebec to Montreal, just as the Canadian Pacific Railway are dependent to-day on the Intercolonial for running powers from St. John to Halifax? There was every ground, every reason, every opportunity, for him to make arrangement, while, at the same time, accomplishing a great object that the people not only in the city of Quebec, but I may say to a large extent, the people of the province of Quebec are deeply interested in. The hon. gentleman has rushed into this, what for? I cannot understand for the life of me. If he had been arranging to bring the province of Nova Scotia and the province of New Brunswick nearer to Montreal than they are by existing means of communication, if he expected to accomplish any great and substantial improvement in the interest of the country, I could understand it. But, Sir, this is a project that requires to be carefully looked into. I ask the hon. gentleman—no, I need not ask him. After listening to his speech to-day, nobody can be surprised that this House has been treated in the manner that it has in regard to this great question. On the day Parliament opened, the Governor General declared in the Speech from the Throne that these arrangements were concluded and that they would be submitted to this Parliament. Yet here we are, at this late hour of the day, begging these hon. gentlemen to carry out their pledge, to show that the words that they put in the mouth of the Governor General were true, by placing on the Table of the House the documents setting forth these arrangements that the Governor General declared not to be under consideration, but to have been absolutely concluded. Yet down to this hour it has not been laid upon the Table of this House, and the hon. gentleman waits until the dying hours of the session to stand up and make a statement to which it is impossible for any hon. gentleman in this House to give that full and complete consideration which a question of such importance demands, a project loading down this country with an additional debt of seven million dollars. Sir, I ask this House—I do not ask my hon. friends on this side of the House—but I ask every independent man on that side of the House whether he thinks that he has been treated, that this Parliament has been treated, with the respect to which it is entitled when down to this very hour those arrangements declared by the Governor General to have been concluded when this House met, are not before us, when we have only got a verbal statement, and are compelled to go into a discussion of a verbal statement of the Minister of Railways who, while detailing this matter to the House, confessed that he did not know, and had never taken the trouble to ascertain, whether Halifax would be a hundred miles nearer or a hundred miles further from Montreal by this arrangement, although this fact was one of the very first elements in a calculation as to whether this project would be beneficial to the Intercolonial Railway in view of the competition that would exist. Sir, I believe the hon. gentleman has altogether overstated the short distance of twenty miles that he intimates would be saved; I believe it will be found that he has overstated the saving of distance by at least a third, and that twelve or thirteen miles would be a much more accurate statement. But if the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to look at the map, he would have found that there was already a railway projected that would be much shorter than this one. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to make arrangements with this Drummond County Railway at a great cost to the people of this country, and I have no doubt that when we get to the bottom of this transaction we will find that the hon. gentleman had good, and substantial, and sterling reasons for making this arrangement with the Drummond County people. I say it is impossible to look at it as a business transaction, it is wanting in every single feature of a business transaction; therefore, we are compelled to look behind and beyond anything that the hon. gentleman has stated to this House, to find the reason why a citizen of Montreal should be so enormously enriched at the public expense of Canada—for that is what it comes to, and we might as well understand it at once. It appears that the proprietor of this Drummond County Railway had a white elephant on his hands, that he had a very unprofitable property, and that he was anxious to get rid of it, I can quite understand; but I cannot understand any person occupying the position of Minister of Railways and Canals of this country, entering into a transaction which, taken in the light of the information that at last we have been able to drag out of him on the floor of this House, is destitute of all those business elements that would justify such an expenditure. Sir, have we not sunk money enough already in connection with the Intercolonial Railway? Is it not a sufficient burden upon the country already, without loading it down with a capital expenditure of seven millions in addition to all that has already been expended upon it? I say that a more unwarrantable, a more unjustifiable project, it appears to me, could not well have been undertaken. And where are we? The hon. gentleman knows that while leasing this line for 99 years, he comes into competition with the Grand Trunk Railway, and as he has only running powers over the road of that company, he will be entirely at the mercy of, and dependent upon, that company. Any person who will look upon the map will see that instead of getting such a line as the Great Eastern projected railway would have given, while the present line of the Grand Trunk Railway circles away around in one direction, the line which he has undertaken and which has become a part of the Intercolonial Railway, is a circuitous route, it is a zig-zag line running in and running out through that section of country, and is anything but a direct line of railway communication. So I am afraid that we shall have to seek beyond and outside what appears in the bald details the hon. gentleman has given us, to ascertain what induced this Government to engage in an enterprise that they were so determined before they had undertaken it, to carry through, that they did not even take the trouble to ascertain whether, when they got to Montreal in this way, they would be able to compete with the existing lines of railway for the business between that and Halifax. I have no hesitation in saying that I have never listened to any statement in this House that was so utterly lacking any kind of justification, for a measure of such magnitude. But after hearing the statement the hon. Minister has given to this House, I can quite understand why it is that at this period of the session these arrangements that were declared by the Governor General at the opening of the House, to be concluded, have been withheld from us down to the present hour. I believe the hon. gentleman felt that the only chance of getting this measure accepted by this Parliament was to hold it back, was to conceal the arrangements that had been made by the Government, was to conceal that information that the House was entitled to demand, down to the last moment of the session when there would be no opportunity of giving this question that deliberate and business-like consideration that a measure of this kind demands at our hands. I can understand now why it was impossible to induce the hon. gentleman to treat this House with that respect which was due alike to the House and to the credit of the Government themselves. Now, after listening to the hon. gentleman and finding what he had to present to the House, I do not hesitate to say that neither to the Intercolonial Railway nor to the people of any portion of this country, is this undertaking of the slightest value whatever. The hon. gentleman has made a bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway to pay them $6,000 a year for their terminal facilities at Chaudière; he has made a bargain to give them $37,500 more for running over their line from St. Rosalie to the bridge at Montreal; he has given them $40,000 a year more for going over the bridge; and he has given them $62,000 per annum more for their terminal facilities, and what is all this worth to the country? Why, Sir, it is worth absolutely nothing, because the Grand Trunk Railway is a competitor from the point where the hon. gentleman leaves the Intercolonial Railway at Chaudière, all the way to Montreal. The Grand Trunk Railway is a competitor along that very line to Montreal, and when he gets to Montreal, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is a competitor for the trade of Montreal between that city and Halifax, with a distance of no less than 76 miles in its favour. Why, Sir, it only requires to state a proposition of this kind to the committee to show that if the hon. gentleman had dealt with this House in the manner that he was bound to deal with it in a question of this importance, if he had laid these papers upon the Table for consideration, it would have been impossible for him to hope to secure the support of the hon. gentlemen who sit behind him. And how is any hon. gentleman interested in the city of Quebec to support this project? Any man with a head on his shoulders knows that this project takes away from the Government of Canada all possible excuse for contributing a single dollar for the construction of a bridge to take the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Quebec. Where is the hon. gentleman interested in the province of Quebec who is prepared to endorse a project that not only gives nothing to the city of Quebec, but strikes the most fatal blow at its fond hopes of securing a work of vital importance to its welfare? Where is the man, a representative in this House of the province of Quebec, who can consent to loading down the Government of Canada and the revenue of Canada with this enormous expenditure that can have no good results whatever? There is no county on the road that is not already served; there are no interests benefited, so far as I can see, except two parties. One is the Grand Trunk Railway, which has made a magnificent bargain with the Government. It is no wonder the president of that company was unable to restrain himself from telling the shareholders the glorious news of the manner in which he had been able to circumvent the Minister of Railways in Canada and secure an advantageous bargain. There is no ground for surprise at the pleasure evinced by the shareholders of the Grand Trunk at receiving $140,000 a year out of the treasury of Canada for nothing whatever, for that which would give Canada no return, which would leave the Intercolonial at the mercy of the Grand Trunk; for, after this arrangement is completed throughout the entire line from Chaudière to Montreal, the Grand Trunk will be enabled to compete with the Intercolonial so as to render these pretended advantages entirely worthless to the Dominion. I can understand the position taken by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, but I cannot understand an hon. gentleman, who is interested in protecting the revenues of the country being willing to place on the shoulders of the people additional burdens, except an hon. member who may use the same argument on this occasion that I am told was used on a recent occasion when it was desired to put a measure through—you must either support us or we will resign. After the spectacle we have had to-day on the Treasury benches, and, indeed, have had in past days, I think I could select a better Government from that side of the House, men who would be prepared to carry out the promises made from the Treasury benches. If they would not be able to make a better bargain and more fully protect the interests of Canada than they have been protected by the Minister of Railways, I would form a much lower opinion of the character, standing, and ability of hon. gentlemen opposite than I entertain at the present time. I repeat that I can find no reasons whatever except two for this action taken by the Government. The first is as regards the Grand Trunk Railway. It is a powerful corporation in Canada; it holds the fate of many constituencies in its hands, and the company may be able to return, if not anything to the treasury, political support for this depletion of the public revenue and the additional burden placed on the shoulders of the people. It is possible that hon. gentlemen opposite in this way may be able to obtain something they consider of more value than the interests of the country. The second party benefited is the gentleman who is proprietor of the road which has been taken from his overburdened shoulders and placed on the shoulders of the people at an enormous cost, and no doubt he is gloating with delight at the fortune he has made out of this transaction with the Government and the Minister of Railways, and he will be prepared to prove his gratitude in the most substantial way whenever and wherever called upon.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I am not going to discuss the statement made by the hon. the Minister of Railways. The time to do so will be when the papers relating to the contract are placed on the Table of the House. The leader of the Opposition has referred to this matter as regards Quebec. We all know that the leader of the Opposition, when he came to Quebec some years ago, made pledges respecting the proposed bridge. We all were aware at the time that these promises were made for election purposes, and we the representatives of the Quebec district and the electors there never took any stock in the hon. gentleman's pledges because we knew they were simply pledges given for election purposes and would not be fulfilled by the Tory Government. I remember that a prominent member of the party, who is now a member of this House, made the statement: No bridge, no vote; but we had no bridge, and he voted Tory all the same.

An hon. MEMBER. Who said that?

Mr. CHOQUETTE. The hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) said that.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I deny that statement absolutely.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I have to accept the word of my hon. friend; but I may inform him that the Quebec "Chronicle," the organ of the Tory party, of the late Government, and of the hon. gentleman, on the next day boasted that he had said: "No bridge, no vote."

Mr. CASGRAIN. I deny absolutely that the Quebec "Chronicle" ever said anything of the kind.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I saw it there.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman is obliged to withdraw the statement he made. He made a statement in regard to what the hon. member for Montmorency said; this the hon. member for Montmorency denied, and the hon. member for Montmagny accepted the statement made. He has just said that he has seen such a statement reported in a newspaper. The hon. member for Montmorency has denied that such a statement appeared, but I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) is obliged to withdraw his statement.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I was not going to take it back.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. gentleman has withdrawn his first statement.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. Yes; I accepted the negation of my hon. friend. But I say that the Quebec "Chronicle" contained that statement, because I remember having read it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was never there.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. It was in that paper. All these pledges made by the Tory party were simply election pledges, and we in Quebec never expected to have a bridge built by the Tory Government, and so Liberal candidates were elected, not only in Quebec city but in the surrounding constituencies. We have been told that this Government are willing to give a fair subsidy to any company which will be in a position to go on with that bridge. We do not expect any more than that. The Government are obliged to take care of the money of the people of this country, and when the Government see that there is a company strong enough to carry out the bridge project, I am sure they will give a subsidy, and I am sure also that this agreement to continue the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal is not a death-blow to the Quebec bridge. In my own name, and in the name of my constituents, I say, that if I were convinced that this agreement would prevent the construction of the Quebec bridge, I for one would not hesitate to vote against it. The promises that have been made by the present Government are not election promises, as were those made by the leaders of the Tory party, but they are the promises of a Government which is willing to carry out all its obligations.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I challenge the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) to show any pledge that I ever made, on behalf of the Government with which I was connected, or on behalf of the Government of which Sir John Macdonald was the head; I challenge him to show any pledge I ever made that has not been redeemed.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Laughter will not settle a question of this kind. We are dealing with facts and not with assertions. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) said, that we failed to implement our promises. I deny it. I challenge the hon. gentleman to show any pledge of mine that was not redeemed. When I went to Quebec in 1891,

I was not a member of the Government, and when the people of that city asked me, what the Government would do in regard to the bridge which they took such a deep interest in, I told them I would telegraph to Sir John Macdonald and I did so, and he sent me an answer which I read to the people. It was not my pledge, for I was not a member of the Government, but it was Sir John Macdonald's pledge and the pledge of the party. Sir, I hold to that pledge to-day. I repeated it at the last general election in the city of Quebec, and whether I am in Opposition or in the Government that pledge will be faithfully redeemed whenever and wherever an opportunity is offered, by the parties to the other side of the bargain doing that which I then stated was essential in order to obtain assistance from the Government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) when he attacks a great party in this House, who have always pledged themselves to assist, and to assist to a very large extent in accomplishing that great work; may think that he is promoting the interests of the Quebec bridge, but I do not believe that either his own constituents, or the people of the city of Quebec, will agree with him.

Mr. LAVERGNE. This line runs through the county which I represent, and I wish to say a word in reference to it. I understood from the Minister of Railways that this was not the proper stage of the measure at which to debate the project. And, if hon. gentlemen opposite are going to debate this question when the resolutions are placed upon the Table, I invite their attention to the fact, that they should not trust that map which has been placed in their hands. That map has been provided by a rival company, and it does not give any exact idea of the position of the projected line. I trust that before the debate comes up again, they will secure better information than they have to-day. The leader of the Opposition says that we are going to incur an expenditure of $8,000,000. I cannot see how he makes $8,000,000 out of an annual expenditure of $210,000. It is nothing like $8,000,000. At 4 per cent it is about $5,225,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I would say to my hon. friend (Mr. Lavergne) that this $210,000 annually is equal to about $7,000,000 at 3 per cent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He said 4 per cent.

Mr. LAVERGNE. There is $1,000,000 difference, and that will be sufficient for the subsidy to the bridge between Lévis and Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) has made certain statements which are not correct. I had the honour of presiding at the meeting at which the leader of the Opposition made, what the hon. member for Montmagny called a pledge. At that time everybody in Quebec was in favour of the bridge between Quebec and Lévis—when I say everybody, I mean all the Conservatives because the Liberals at that time were standing aloof. The best proof I can give of that is, that when we came to Ottawa, time and again on deputations from Quebec, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) who now leads the Government, several times refused to join us on those deputations, although he represented a very important part of the city of Quebec. The promise made by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) at that time, was, that when a responsible company was formed, that when the railways which came into Lévis and to Quebec subscribed a certain amount, and that when the city of Quebec subscribed a substantial amount towards the building of the bridge, then the Government would be prepared to entertain the proposition of aiding the enterprise.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is no difference between the pledge given in 1891 by Sir Charles Tupper, and the pledge given time and again by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) who leads the Government. In 1896, Sir Charles Tupper again made that pledge to a Quebec audience, and it was applauded to the echo. This Quebec bridge scheme was inaugurated by the Conservative party, and the Liberals of Quebec at that time were against us, or if they were not, they never came on our deputations, or joined the company, or invested one solitary cent of their money towards the building of the bridge. Now, when they find that the bridge project which was inaugurated in Quebec by the Conservatives, is a popular question in Quebec, they try to make political capital out of it.

I wish to say, Sir, that personally I never gave any such pledge as my hon. friend (Mr. Choquette) mentioned. Never on any platform, never under any circumstances, and never on any occasion did I say: that if the Conservative Government did not give a substantial subsidy towards the Quebec bridge I would not vote for the Conservative party. I defy, and I challenge my hon. friend (Mr. Choquette) before this House to produce a single newspaper, the Quebec "Chronicle" or any other, which reports me as having uttered the statement that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Choquette) attributes to me. This speech was made on a certain day, in a certain month, in a certain year, and he can easily find it. I challenge him to bring the paper here to-day, or any other day, which will substantiate his statement. These statements made by hon. gentlemen on the other side are statements which we know are not correct. They are statements which we can challenge at any time. They are like the promises made by them in Opposition and which got them into power, but which never were carried out. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about pledges. Sir, the pledges which were given by the Conservative party have been kept, but what has become of the pledges made by the Liberal party when they were in Opposition? They broke every pledge, they went back on every declaration and promise they had made, and the only way they could redeem themselves was by taking the pledges of the Conservative party and implementing them.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman state what he said at that meeting about the bridge?

Mr. CASGRAIN. My hon. friend was a very young man at that time; he was almost a baby. He was so young that I do not think he could read the papers. At the time of that meeting there was no question about the bridge.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What did you say, then?

Mr. CASGRAIN. If I repeated the speech I made, I might convert my hon. friend to this side of the House. There was no question of the bridge. It was a question of the short line between Quebec and the maritime provinces. What I said then I say now, and advocate as a reasonable policy, that when a responsible company and the railways that come to Quebec will contribute, then the Government of Canada should contribute to the building of a bridge between Quebec and Lévis. But that is not the question under discussion here. My hon. friend from Montmagny (Mr. Choquette) has in a very able manner diverted the attention of this House from the question before it, and it is a most momentous question. It is momentous, not so much to the party on this side of the House or to the country, but to the party on the opposite side of the House; and it will be a much more momentous question to them before we get through with it. I see the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) casting his eye this way. We will hear more of that before we get through. The question before the House is the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, or rather to St. Hyacinthe. We have always understood that the Intercolonial Railway was built to carry out a pledge made before confederation that the maritime provinces should be connected with the upper provinces by a railway to Quebec or Lévis. The Intercolonial Railway connects at Lévis with the Grand Trunk, the Quebec Central, and all the trunk lines which extend from that point on to western Canada. What is the position made by the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Point Lévis to St. Hyacinthe? We shall be in the same position as we are in to-day at Lévis. We connect at Lévis with the trunk lines from east to west. What better position shall we be in by bringing the Intercolonial Railway to St. Hyacinthe, or even to Montreal? We are not bettering the position of the maritime provinces or of the eastern part of Canada—not a bit. I say here, on my responsibility, that behind this there is a scheme not benefiting Canada, but benefiting some parties on the other side of this House. That is my statement, and I think that before we are much older that statement will be proved to this House. Let us revert for an instant to the bridge. One of the principal reasons we urged in support of building a bridge between Lévis and Quebec was that it would give uninterrupted railway connection between the Atlantic and the Pacific through Canadian territory. That was the sole argument which had any weight with the Government of Canada. From a military strategic standpoint, that was the great argument we used every time we came here in deputations from the city of Quebec. But if the Intercolonial Railway is extended from Lévis to St. Hyacinthe or to Montreal, then this enterprise, which all the people in the city of Quebec and in the surrounding counties have so much at heart, will be deprived of that argument. I am surprised that my hon. friend from Montmagny should support this measure, because I understand he has always been in favour of the bridge, and the question he put to-day to the hon. Minister of Railways proves that he is still in favour of it. How, then, is it that he consents to be deprived of this great advantage? But, Sir, we shall probably have occasion to discuss this question later on, and we shall probably be in a position to see whether or not there is any advantage to the Dominion of Canada in this extension of the Intercolonial Railway. Everybody knows that our hon. friends on the other side boast that the city of Quebec is the great Liberal citadel in the province of Quebec; but I will ask them to go around the city of Quebec, to go to the Board of Trade, to go to the great commercial corporations, and find one man outside of those who have some Government favours, who is in favour of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to St. Hyacinthe or to Montreal. It is universally condemned by all the business men in Quebec, and I ask those gentlemen who particularly represent the city of Quebec in this House how they can vote for such a project, which is going to deprive that city of the greatest and richest part of its commerce. What do the merchants and tradesmen of the city of Quebec say? They say that if this extension is carried out, they will lose the greater part of their trade with the maritime provinces and with the counties along the Intercolonial Railway, and that it will go to the city of Montreal. I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman who represents Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) is not here to defend the scheme of the Government; I am not surprised that he has left the House. I say there is not a man in this House representing the city of Quebec who dares to stand up and defend it. I see that my hon. friend the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) is also absent. Is not this evidence that not one gentleman in this House who represents the city of Quebec dares to stand up and defend this extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Lévis to Montreal? Sir, it is a question which will probably come up in the House again, and it is one which will probably have more bearing on the politics of this country, than certain gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to believe to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask one or two questions of the hon. Minister of Railways. I do not propose to discuss the merits of the case, but to get information which the committee may have as a basis for discussion afterwards. I want to ask whether in all these calculations of sums to be paid, my hon. friend has taken into account any possible sum to be given to the Grand Trunk Railway Company in order to assist them in double-tracking and enlarging the Victoria Bridge? Is there something outside of all this to be given?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Government have engaged to give to the Grand Trunk Railway the usual 15 per cent upon the expenditure in the reconstruction of their bridge, not exceeding $300,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is besides the $40,000 you pay them for going over?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask another question, and it is this, whether the hon. gentleman is able to lay before the House the terms which the Grand Trunk Railway were willing to make for running powers over their road now constructed and running between Lévis or Chaudière and Montreal? There were three routes. One was the Southern or Great Eastern, which we might have taken up and completed; then there was the middle one which my hon. friend chose; and then there was the Grand Trunk. In order that the committee may be able to decide whether a provident bargain has been made, we ought to know what we could have got running powers for over the present Grand Trunk Railway from the Chaudière to Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have procured no figures from the Grand Trunk Railway at all as to the other portion of their road from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière. We concluded it would not be desirable for us to enter into any negotiations with them touching that portion of their line, as the grades and distances were such as to make it unwise for us to have anything to do with it. I am credibly informed that you could not haul over their line more than one-half the freight train that you can over the Drummond County line. That is, you could not climb the grades with one-half the load.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not the exact grades?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, but I will have them when the matter comes up.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend give the committee two other items, namely, the cost of operating this road from the Chaudière into Montreal, and the cost of maintenance after the Government undertakes to operate it? This, I suppose, according to the hon. gentleman's interpretation is a business arrangement. We are to pay out, in the first place, $210,000 per year; then we must pay the operating expenses, and then the maintenance expenses. Against these we have to calculate what will be the acquisition of business by this arrangement, and the merits of it as a business transaction will depend upon the balance between revenue and expenditure. That will entail a very careful inquiry as to what accretion of business we may hope to get when we enter Montreal beyond what we have now. The revenue from that increase of business will be the one side and the maintenance, expenses and interest account will be the other. If my hon. friend will give us the general average of operating and maintenance and expenses and the mileage, we will be able to form an idea as to that side of the account at least. Then we shall have to exercise our best judgment as to what new business will follow.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will furnish the hon. gentleman with our estimate of the receipts and income from the new road and the expenses, and the margin between the two. That information I have not here just at the moment.

Mr. FOSTER. When you get over the bridge and into Montreal, is there any connection for railway traffic between the Canadian Pacific Railway system and the Grand Trunk Railway system by means of which you can take freight in car right through from the Grand Trunk Railway terminus? Or is it a fact that when you get into the city of Montreal, every ounce of freight that you may hope to transfer from the Canadian Pacific Railway western system—which, I suppose, is one of the things you are looking for—will have to be transferred from car to car? If I am rightly informed, there is no connection.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not right when he says there is no connection. We have provided for connection.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The ordinary means of connection. There are switches and tracks laid down at the Grand Trunk Railway terminus which enable cars to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway line, and we have arranged that we are to have the full use of those lines and be able to make those connections. That is one of the things we have been very careful to arrange for.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad to hear that, but the hon. gentleman will see to what condition he has reduced the independent members of the House of Commons. We are within nine days of the limit set for prorogation. This is one of the most important matters that could come before the House, involving an addition to the debt immediately of $7,000,000 for this matter alone, and yet although this scheme was entirely concluded when the House met, we are kept within nine days of the term set for prorogation before we have one single document put before this committee to enable us to make up our minds. That is not treatment which any Government should give to independent supporters of its own and not the treatment which the country will consider fair when there is in question a proposed outlay of $7,000,000 out of our capital account. That is the amount beyond doubt; no calculation can get over that. Now, I want to ask the attention of the committee, between this and the time when we shall take up the resolution, to two points. The first is what I have already made, that entering into this arrangement involves an addition to the country's debt of $7,000,000 at the least.

Mr. CHARLTON. At what rate of interest ?

Mr. FOSTER. Three per cent, which is a fair percentage to take. Now, I ask the attention of this committee to another most important point. The only thing that we get of our own from this expenditure is a section of a road between two parts of the Grand Trunk Railway system. Then we get the use of a section of the Grand Trunk Railway on the Chaudière side, and the use of a section of the Grand Trunk Railway and its terminus on the Ste. Rosalie side. The Government have, I suppose—the hon. Minister of Railways will correct me if I am wrong—arranged that the Grand Trunk Railway will pay the whole cost of maintenance of these sections of the Grand Trunk Railway over which we get running rights.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In each of what cases ?

Mr. FOSTER. The two sections where the Government get running rights over the Grand Trunk road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all; the arrangement is the same as is usually entered into between railway companies. There is, where a right is acquired, such as we acquire, a fixed rental for that right. Then there is the division of the cost of maintenance between the two companies based on the proceeds.

Mr. FOSTER. That is most excellent. We are getting information little by little, and I have a much stronger argument than I thought. On the Ste. Rosalie side, let the committee just see what it means. The Grand Trunk Railway have to keep up their road there, they have to keep up their terminals, whether we go over it or not. They have to enlarge and double track their bridge, whether we give them anything for the cost or not. They would be put to every dollar of expense that they are put to now. They would have inevitably, as a corporation, to incur that expense. They incur it and we go in. What do we give the Grand Trunk Railway for these two terminals? We set aside out of that $7,000,000, $5,000,000 as a payment to the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway are not put to one single dollar extra expense on account of what they do in maintaining their road in order to give us running privileges over it. More than that. Not only do we give them $5,000,000, but we actually, over and above that, pay our part of the cost of maintenance of that road on each of these end sections.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why not?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, why not? Now the committee has something to think over; the country has something to think over. The Grand Trunk may well have been permeated with joy from one end to the other of its great corporate system, when it received a present of $5,000,000 and an assurance of a certain contribution in addition every year for ninety-nine years for the two end sections of the road. There is another point worth looking at. Your Intercolonial Railway, terminating at Lévis, was given the opportunity of making connection by bridge with Quebec, the construction of which would have kept faith—if you set any store by that—with the people. This connection made, you would find the Intercolonial connected side by side, a track meeting track, with the two roads that connect with the city of Montreal, the Canadian Pacific Railway on one side, and the Grand Trunk Railway on the other. In what position are you now in the city of Montreal, so far as traffic is concerned? Your position is not so good as it would be connecting with Quebec, for you have to make terms in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway which, in the traffic for Europe, is interested in taking every dollar of traffic they can over this road which is 76 miles shorter than your own. If you had made the connection with them at Quebec, you would have given them the inducement of the haulage between Montreal and Quebec over this road which they have to keep up. As the matter is before the committee now, this seems to me a most indefensible arrangement. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that if there were no coercion, no previous pledge, no hard and fast contract made that the men in Parliament know nothing about, and you were to bring this proposition before the committee purely as a business proposition, you would not find ten men in the committee who would approve it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). It seems to me that the question before us is a very simple one. True, we have heard speeches to make it as clear as mud. But what are the facts? The Intercolonial Railway, so far, has had its terminus at Chaudière. It is a well known fact that the Intercolonial Railway has cost millions and millions to the country. At times the deficit upon its operation amounted to nearly a million a year. It is true that of late years the state of affairs has improved, all the same, the Intercolonial Railway has never paid its working expenses. Now, is there a man in this committee prepared to stand up and say that a great railway like the Intercolonial, should, for all time, be deprived of the advantage of having some great centre as its terminal point? As it is to-day it has no such terminal point. The Minister of Railways and Canals has thought fit to make an arrangement by which the Intercolonial Railway shall, in future, have its terminus in the great city of Montreal. But hon. gentlemen opposite say, amongst many other things to which I shall have occasion to allude—

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before the hon. gentleman passes on, will he allow me to ask him a question?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If this railway is to cost seven or eight millions of dollars to come to Montreal, why would not my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) have the terminus of the road in the city of Quebec by means of a bridge costing four millions.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will certainly answer the question the hon. gentleman has put to me. But I was just going to address myself to another point. Our friends from the other side say that this will involve an expenditure of seven millions of dollars. I would like to know how that can be. The leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) first said that it would cost seven millions—

Mr. FOSTER.

An hon. MEMBER. Eight millions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Between seven and eight millions, I said.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A million more or less does not make a great difference in the utterances of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper). Let us say it will cost seven millions. Let us address ourselves to facts as they are.

Mr. FOSTER. Give us all the facts.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, if my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows any facts that he is anxious to state to the House, let him stand up and state those facts like a man. We will, not any of us, stand any improper insinuations. If the hon. gentleman or any other hon. gentleman on that side knows anything wrong about this matter, let him state it right now. We are ready to listen to them; we are anxious to listen to them.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Not so anxious.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain), who should not laugh about such a thing, has anything to say, let him say it now. And, on behalf of this Government, I challenge any one on the other side to say that there is anything wrong. Sir, we are here discussing a question of affairs. What are the facts? The Minister of Railways and Canals has made an arrangement by which he has agreed to pay $210,000 a year for the use of the Grand Trunk facilities and for the use of the Drummond County Road. If we admit that the Intercolonial Railway should have its terminus in Montreal, we have to decide whether it would be better to build up a railway to Montreal, or whether it would be better to make such an arrangement as has been made. Now, I am surprised to hear a man of affairs, a man of ability, the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) speaking as he speaks to-day. He knows the city of Montreal; he knows the railways of Montreal; he is in a position to tell how much the terminal facilities of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Montreal have cost. I state here, knowing the city of Montreal as I do, that it would have been impossible to have secured terminal facilities in Montreal for a Government railway without spending between twelve and fifteen millions of dollars. No business man will deny that. The question then is whether it was better to secure terminal facilities on such terms. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that we are going to increase the debt of Canada by $7,000,000. Sir, I make this prophecy—that, by the arrangement that has just been made not only shall we not have a deficit, but the revenues of the Intercolonial Railway will increase to such an extent that we shall have a large surplus. The future will decide whether I am right or wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. What do you base that on ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I base it on the simplest possible reason. The Intercolonial Railway has to-day no great centre for its terminal point. Does my hon. friend mean to say that a terminal point in the city of Montreal for a great railway will not mean anything ? Is there any man in his senses who will state such a thing ? My hon. friends say : You should not have made that arrangement, but you should have trusted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If we had adopted the plan that they propound to-day, we would simply have been at the mercy of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there is no doubt about that. I am not unfriendly to the city of Quebec, very far from it. And I say that the scheme which is now before us will not at all interfere with anything which may have been promised in respect to the Quebec bridge. But coming back to the question itself, I say this : Having made up our minds that it was necessary for the Intercolonial Railway to have its terminus in the city of Montreal, we had to choose between two plans, either that of building a railway of our own, or making the arrangement that we have made. Well, how much would a bridge cost opposite Montreal ? Would it have been possible to build a bridge there without expending five or six million dollars or more, besides the cost of the road itself ? We would have been obliged to build a railway of our own, and we would have been obliged to acquire terminal facilities in Montreal where property is very high indeed. I say again, that aside from the bridge altogether, these terminal facilities would have cost ten or twelve millions. Now, how much would it have been necessary to spend to build a railway from Lévis to Montreal ? The distance, I suppose, is about 150 miles in round numbers. Has any railway been built in Canada in the past that has not cost at least $15,000 a mile ? Let my hon. friend add all those figures together. Now, Sir, I shall have to use a strong word—is it not a preposterous proposition to come before the House and say that a railway connecting the Intercolonial Railway with Montreal will not pay a dollar. I repeat what I said a moment ago. Not only have we not increased the indebtedness of Canada, but we have taken the best possible means of making the Intercolonial Railway a paying railway. That is the policy that we have followed. I will not say much more, but I will repeat that if any hon. gentlemen opposite think that any member of this Government has acted in an improper way, let them say so and let them say so now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let them not say "hear, hear," but let them make their charge now openly and like men.

Mr. CASGRAIN. We are not generally afraid.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not generally afraid, because I have not generally done wrong. I think, Mr. Chairman, in these few words I have disposed of all the arguments which have been put forward against this scheme. In the first place, it would have cost a great deal of money to build a railway to Montreal ; in the second place, it would have been almost impossible to acquire terminal facilities in Montreal ; in the third place, the construction of a railway by this Government would have involved the necessity of building our own bridge opposite Montreal. All these schemes combined would have cost a very large amount of money, while by the arrangement that we have made, the Intercolonial Railway will become a paying concern.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Intercolonial Railway..... $348,000

Mr. QUINN. When we rose at six o'clock, the question of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, I think, was not concluded. I do not think that the Minister of Public Works has, after all, given satisfaction generally to the House in the remarks that he thought fit to make. It seems to me that the proposition has not been taken into consideration by the Government or by the Minister of Railways in a business-like manner. There are many views to be taken of the question before adopting such an enormous expenditure as seems to be necessary for the purpose of extending the road to Montreal by the route which has been chosen by the Government. I think if we look at it in a business light to begin with, it would be well to consider whether it is at all necessary that running facilities are necessary to be obtained on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. The object, of course, is to obtain traffic for the Intercolonial Railway, and to put it in a position, I fancy, to compete with the other roads doing business with the maritime provinces. Unless this object is attained, it will be utterly useless to think of extending the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, and unless this can be obtained in a satisfactory manner, it would not be a transaction that would commend itself to the country. Now, the Minister of Public Works has asked that charges be made. I do not think that this is the time when charges should be made. Whatever our ideas may be concerning the road, or the means that have been adopted for the purpose of obtaining this road, we will select, of course, the proper time, if any, to make any charges that may be made in this matter. But I think it would be well to consider if the object could not be attained as well by constructing a railway bridge at Quebec, for example, as by obtaining running privileges over the Grand Trunk Railway or any other railway coming into Montreal. Now, one of the first things that would strike a business man in looking at this proposition, would be the advantages that may be obtained by securing these running privileges into Montreal. Will the Intercolonial road be in a different position from what it is in Quebec to-day? Will it obtain privileges that it cannot obtain by retaining its position in Point Lévis and avoiding all this extra expenditure? If it comes to Montreal does not it at once meet the competition of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway? Neither of these oppositions is destroyed by the fact of the road coming into Montreal. Is it worth while, then, to spend an enormous sum of money for the purpose of bringing the road into Montreal if neither opposition can be overcome by constructing the road? If the Intercolonial were left in Lévis, the terminus it has at the present moment, and a bridge were constructed from Quebec to Lévis, an expenditure of about $4,000,000 would be involved. By carrying out this project we would have, as tributary to the Intercolonial railroad all that traffic which comes from the city of Montreal by the Canadian Pacific Railway on the north shore of the river, and that which comes by the Grand Trunk from Montreal by the south shore, as well as that of the lines which are tributaries of the Grand Trunk. There would be an expenditure of about $3,000,000 less than is necessary to construct the road to Montreal. This would be an advantage, not only to the Intercolonial, but, I apprehend, it would be a great advantage and one that would be highly appreciated by the people of Quebec; because it would not only afford communication between the Intercolonial and the city of Quebec direct, but it would afford communication for the people of Quebec generally with the south shore of the river, a communication which they have asked for for a number of years, and which, it seems, has been promised by the different Governments. Now, if it were necessary to continue this line, it would be well to take into consideration the amount of money that must necessarily be expended for the purpose, and learn if some cheaper mode could not be devised than the one which has been adopted by the Government. It costs $6,000 a year for the small piece of road at Chaudière; it costs $84,000 for the road from Chaudière to Ste. Rosalie; and $37,500 for the use of the road from Ste. Rosalie to the bridge; $40,000 for the use of the Victoria bridge, and

Mr. QUINN.

$62,500 for the use of terminal facilities in Montreal. The Minister spoke of arrangements for connection between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk at Montreal. As a matter of fact, there is no connection between the two roads in the city of Montreal. There is an interchangeable line six or seven miles west of the city of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand that it is four miles. There is another connection inside the city.

Mr. QUINN. There may be an intention to make a connection of that kind, but, at present, no such connection exists. There is a line running along the wharfs in the summer time, but that is not the time when the road will be of use. The great use of this road—and I wish to speak of that point more fully in a moment—will be in winter. But, as to the connection between the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway, the only existing connection is some distance west of the city of Montreal. Now, what is the position of the Intercolonial when it comes into the city of Montreal? It possesses the right of half of the road between Montreal and Ste. Rosalie, as I understand it, but it does not possess the ownership of that road. It does not possess the ownership of the stations or other terminal facilities, which are altogether in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The Intercolonial Railway would derive the greatest benefit from this road during the winter months, and at that time of year the Grand Trunk Railway is the strongest opponent of the Intercolonial Railway for freight traffic. We therefore find, that the Intercolonial Railway is actually at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Railway Company as far as Ste. Rosalie is concerned, and as far as all its terminal facilities to the city of Montreal are concerned.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. How is it at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What do you mean by saying it is at its mercy? It is no more than you would be at the mercy of the landlord, if you rented a house for a long term of years.

Mr. QUINN. I will show you how the Intercolonial Railway would be at the mercy of the Grand Trunk Railway. The Grand Trunk Railway owns the stations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have just as much right to them as they have.

Mr. QUINN. Yes, and no more. You have just as much right to the use of the road, but you have not the management of the road, and the precedence given to one train over the other will be in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. QUINN. The Minister says, no, no. But, after all, you are the lessee, and your lease does not give you the right to oust the owner. Every one knows that during the winter months there is a continual block of freight on the road between Montreal and Portland, which would include the line between Montreal and Ste. Rosalie as far as Richmond. When you have the increased traffic of the Intercolonial Railway going over that road, is the Grand Trunk Railway going to allow you to block its traffic for the purpose of getting the Intercolonial Railway freight through? You will have the same rights as the owner, but you are at the mercy of the owner of the road, and it is safe to say that your freight will be blocked during the whole winter season.

Mr. PENNY. What about the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. QUINN. I do not know how that comes into the argument, but probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. Penny) is thinking of what would happen if running arrangements had been made with the Canadian Pacific Railway over the North Shore road.

Mr. PENNY. I mean, would not the Canadian Pacific Railway block the traffic as well as the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. QUINN. Not on that line.

Mr. PENNY. But on the line between Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. QUINN. That is not the question. I am not contending that it would be well to obtain running facilities over the North Shore line, but I am pointing out the difficulties that stand in the way of the arrangement that has been made by the Government. I maintain that the consequence of that arrangement will be, that during the winter months, between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, the Intercolonial Railway freight will be constantly blocked. Now, any one who has had experience knows, and no one knows it better than my hon. friend (Mr. Penny), that during the winter season the Canadian Pacific Railway between Montreal and Quebec is not tested to its full capacity. If a bridge had been constructed at Quebec, and running facilities obtained over the North Shore road, there would be no difficulty in the transportation of freight between Montreal and Halifax during the winter months. I do not argue that an arrangement should be made with the Canadian Pacific Railway for running facilities between Montreal and Quebec, nor do I think that that would be necessary. What I do say is, that if the Quebec bridge had been constructed, it would be much better for the Canadian Pacific Railway to use the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway as feeders, and to exchange freight with both these lines. One of the hon. gentlemen who spoke referred to the difference between seven and eight million dollars, and said that that difference of a million dollars could be contributed to the construction of a bridge. We are paying to-day seven millions for the use of this road between Montreal and Quebec, and one million more would make eight millions. The Minister of Public Works smiles at that. It is all very well for the Government to say to its followers: We have adopted this policy and as loyal supporters you must endorse it, but I warn the followers of the Government from the district of Quebec, that it is not the first time promises have been made and not carried out by Governments in this country. It is not the first time that a Government, after it had succeeded in carrying out the measure it had in view when the promise was made, turned round and said to its followers: It is impossible for us to do what you ask owing to the enormous expenditure that would be incurred. I feel satisfied that should the Government carry out this arrangement, they will say to their followers: On account of this heavy expenditure it is impossible for us to contribute the million dollars necessary for the building of the Quebec bridge. Now, Mr. Speaker, this question has been sprung upon the House at this late hour of the session, and without any papers being before us, so that it is impossible to discuss it fully on the mere verbal statement made by the Ministers. I will say, however, that at first blush, this appears to be a contract that should not be carried out. What the real meaning of it is, it is difficult to say, but I draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the reports that are in the newspapers in connection with this matter, and I have no doubt he has seen them, because they have appeared, not in one newspaper, but in many papers throughout the country. He has asked to-day for charges. Well, Sir, it is not necessary to have charges made in the House. There is a first-class opportunity given to the Minister of Public Works to indict some people for libel, as he has done before. I trust that he will indict them, and if he does so, I hope he will push the cases for trial in such a way as to vindicate himself from the charges made in the newspapers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I shall not detain the committee, because we will have an opportunity of discussing the question when it comes before the House by resolution. The city of Montreal is looked upon as destined to be the Liverpool of this Dominion, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Quinn) who has the distinguished honour of representing that great commercial city, has certainly not done it any credit by the manner in which he has dealt with this question this afternoon. No one will deny that the Intercolonial Railway, from its inception to the present time has been a drain upon the resources of the people of this country. I greatly deplore that this railway, after all the public money that has been sunk in it, is not yielding a better return to the Dominion. It is disheartening to see that year after year the Intercolonial Railway is not able to pay its running expenses, and that at this present year there is a deficit of $100,000, notwithstanding that the people of this country are paying two and a quarter million dollars in interest on the money invested in that railroad. I contend that it is a laudable act on the part of the present Government to endeavour to get the Intercolonial road into the great commercial centre of Montreal, on an independent basis. As the Minister of Railways has said, he feels satisfied, from all he has gathered, that the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal will result in it paying running expenses, and if this is accomplished, I want to know if it would not be a good bargain. The hon. leader of the Opposition criticised the Minister of Railways for deciding in this abrupt way to carry the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, without first ascertaining the extent of the increased traffic the railway would get. I was rather amused at a man of his extended experience giving that as an evidence of oversight and incapacity on the part of the Minister of Railways. I would like to ask the leader of the Opposition if, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company carried their line into the Windsor station in Montreal at a cost of $2,000,000, that company went from door to door in the city of Montreal and inquired of the merchants what possible increase of business would result from that change? I would like to ask him if, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in place of having their line run behind the city of Toronto, spent about $1,250,000 to bring it to the Union station, they went to the business men of Toronto and inquired what increase of traffic and what increased number of passengers they might expect by making that change. I am amazed at the arguments the hon. leader of the Opposition has used. He says he questions that the road from Quebec to Montreal will be twenty miles shorter. He says he has a strong suspicion that it will be one-fourth of that. I dare say that the hon. leader of the Opposition is measuring the corn of the present Minister of Railways in his own bushel measure. We can well remember when he announced in such glowing terms, and with all the eloquence and persuasiveness he could command, the immense advantage it would be to the Intercolonial Railway, and how it would shorten the mileage, to build the Oxford and New Glasgow branch. He said that it would make the line forty-five miles shorter, and that the grades on the Intercolonial Railway were so heavy that it was impossible to make it a financial success unless that short road were built, and the grades lowered thereby. The hon. gentleman described in glowing terms how it would vitalize the Intercolonial Railway; but what was the result? Was the line forty-five miles shorter? It was only four and a-half miles shorter. Were the grades on that road less? The grades were actually heavier than on the old line, notwithstanding that it cost this country about $2,000,000. With regard to the bridge at Quebec, I have not a single word to say against it. I earnestly hope to live to see the day when that bridge will be built. If the predictions which the hon. leader of the Opposition made in such glowing and eloquent terms when he sat on this side of the House as to the enormous output of the North-west are fulfilled, or even 50 per cent of those predictions, it will take every line that runs out of Montreal, after we have deepened our canal system, to carry the surplus produce that will flow through that city to the sea-board. The hon. leader of the Opposition says we should have taken the Canadian Pacific Railway line on the north shore, and have come to Montreal in that way after the bridge was built. That would put the Intercolonial in a very little better position than it is now. If there is one thing which the Intercolonial Railway needs, it is to have an entrance into the city of Montreal that it will not be hampered by a competing line. The Canadian Pacific Railway is a competing line, with it to the sea board, while the Grand Trunk is not a competing line in the same sense, as it carries its freight to Portland; it does not carry it to the sea-board in the Dominion. The hon. leader of the Opposition regrets that there is going to be such an addition to the debt to bring about this extension. When the hon. gentleman undertook to build the St. Charles Branch, which has unquestionably been a political sink, in which $1,500,000 has been sunk, he declared to this House that it would not cost over $300,000. If at that time he had extended the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, he might have done something to vitalize that road; but, instead of that, he squandered that large sum of money without any advantage to this country. He says this extension is going to add $7,000,000 to the debt on account of the Intercolonial Railway. It comes badly from him to charge the present Government with the adding largely to the debt of the Intercolonial Railway. When the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie was in power, he closed the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway; it then stood at $35,000,000. When the leader of the Opposition came into power, he reopened it, and spent money right and left, until he increased the capital account of that road from about $35,000,000 when he came into power to about $55,000,000 when he went out. The hon. gentleman built roads in all directions to give accommodation to different sections of the province he represented. I do not blame him for that; but it does not look at all well for him to charge the present Government with largely increasing the construction debt of the Intercolonial Railway. If the Government carry through this measure, I hope it will be done with care and economy. I have every confidence in the Government, notwithstanding the taunts that are cast across the House about wrong-doing in connection with this transaction. The hon. gentleman says there are charges made in the public press. Why does he not get up and make charges here and now, on the floor of Parliament, which is the proper place to make charges? We are here to criticise the acts of public men and to listen to charges if the hon. gentleman has any to make. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about newspaper charges, but they dare not get up in this House and declare on their responsibility that they believe there is wrong-doing in this matter. The career of hon. gentlemen opposite in the past has not been a very clear one. It has been surrounded with a great many questionable transactions. It is very often the man who cries "thief" who is himself the thief. Hon. gentlemen opposite are beginning early to cry thief. They had better wait until this matter is got into shape, when they can better judge it; and when they examine it, I believe they will realize that a fairly good bargain has been made. If, as I believe, it will result in the Intercolonial Railway being made self-sustaining, the people of this country will be getting something for the very large amount of money they have sunk in that road. I have every confidence, from what the Minister of Railways says, that we shall attain that result, and that hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Quinn), will feel that they have made a mistake in criticising, as they have done, his action in this matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not at all surprised that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat—as he no doubt feels very uncomfortable in having to support the Government on this measure—should have found it necessary to wander all over Canada instead of confining himself to the question now before the House. I ask the hon. gentleman why he did not meet the question I put to the Minister of Railways why he did not look at this matter from a business standpoint—why, in adding $7,000,000 to the debt of the country, he did not first ask himself what the advantage of extending the Intercolonial to Montreal would be. Is that business-like, or is it not? Is it business-like, if a person is undertaking an enormous expenditure to accomplish an object, to address himself to the question as to what is to be the result of that expenditure? Does that commend itself to the hon. gentleman or not? I say that is the very first thing, and now I ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to state to this committee where he expects to get the traffic for the Intercolonial by going into Montreal. Where is it to go?

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman, and I do not propose to go into the question of the Oxford branch or any of the other questions he has referred to, because they draw attention away from the question before the House. We have a grave proposition before us. We have to decide the question put to us by the Minister of Railways and Canals: Will you saddle this country with $7,000,000 of debt for the purpose of bringing the Intercolonial into Montreal? That is the question. If my hon. friend wants an answer in regard to the Oxford and Windsor branch, I will not waste the time of this committee in giving it to him here, but I will tell him where he will find it. He will find an elaborate answer on that subject in an address delivered by me in the town of Windsor in 1891 and reported at length. That speech has never been answered to this day, for the reason that no man in this country was ever able to answer it. If my hon. friend wants my answer to that question, he will find it there, and I am ready to meet him with regard to it; but I do not want to go away from the question now before the House. It is too solemn a question for the hon. gentleman to meet by a tu quoque argument. Suppose I made a mistake or did wrong as Minister of Railways, with the best aid I could get in the Railway Department at Ottawa, is not that a reason for care and caution and for making some investigation in this instance? The hon. gentleman misunderstood me when he said I supposed that a third of the distance would be saved. I do not believe from the best information that I can get, that twenty miles would be saved, but that twenty miles less one-third, or thirteen miles would be saved, and therefore you would have to take one-third of the saving off.

The hon. gentleman has correctly told the House of the enormous expense which the Intercolonial has been to Canada. We all admit that an enormous capital has been sunk in that undertaking on which we have to pay interest every year, and no man in this House would hail with greater pleasure than I any proposal calculated to lighten that burden, but we are not going to improve matters by increasing our capital expenditure by seven million dollars more and getting nothing in return. The hon. gentleman was bound to have laid on the Table long ago the fullest details with reference to the whole of this transaction, so that we might be in a position to express a deliberate judgment upon it, and not be hurried into it upon a mere verbal statement made in the dying hours of the session. I have shown the hon. gentleman that he cannot get increased traffic for the Intercolonial from Montreal to Halifax. How can the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. McMullen) pretend that the Intercolonial is going to compete successfully with the Canadian Pacific Railway when, according to the statement of the Minister of Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway has a difference of seventy-six miles in its favour? Why, one of the things that struck us forcibly long ago and which led me, at any rate to the conclusion that no Government, whether Liberal-Conservative or Liberal, should undertake the construction or the operating of railways, was the impossibility for a Government to construct or to operate a railway as favourably and economically as a private company. If you want an illustration of that, contrast the Intercolonial with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Running from the city of Halifax through the city of St. John and all these towns on the North Shore, running through an open, cultivated country up to the city of Quebec, we find, nevertheless, that the Intercolonial has entailed on the country, not only an enormous expense in the building of the line itself, but a large yearly expenditure in the operating of it. Contrast that with the Canadian Pacific Railway, starting at Nipissing and running 3,000 miles across the continent and tapping only one village of some 400 or 500 inhabitants on its way, and which is yet a great commercial enterprise. The one is a sink-hole into which money is continually poured and disappears, and the other is a commercial and financial success. True, the Canadian Pacific Railway has been largely assisted by the Government, but the assistance we have had to give it is relatively nothing in comparison with what we have been obliged to pay for the Intercolonial.

To come back to the point, the hon. Minister of Railways is bound to tell us, before calling on us to add an additional $7,000,000 to the burden of the people of Canada, on which they will have to pay interest for all time, how he expects to improve the revenue of the Intercolonial. Is that a reasonable question or is it not? Does he not owe it to the Government, the House and the country, to submit to us a careful estimate of the sources of revenue and compare that with the expenditure he is about to make. The hon. gentleman who has just expressed such unbounded confidence in this Government (Mr. McMullen), a confidence which I regret I am unable to share, ought not to allow that confidence to shut his eyes and close his ears to argument and induce him to travel all over Canada to get away from the question. But he ought, instead of opposing me, to exercise his influence, as a leading supporter of the Government, on the Minister of Railways to induce him to explain on what ground he proposes to make this enormous expenditure, and where the money is to come from which will recoup the treasury for the interest. If it could be shown where the traffic is to come from to meet this enormous expenditure, I would join at once with my hon. friends in giving my hearty support to the Government, but I cannot see where it is to come from, and the Minister of Railways has not shown us. On the contrary, he treated the subject so cavalierly as to satisfy me that he was utterly indifferent whether this operation was to be successful or not. He had simply made up his mind to it, and do it he will. When I asked him: Supposing you save twenty miles on the present line from Montreal to Halifax, in what position will you be as regards competition at Halifax? the hon. gentleman said he did not know, he had not considered that; but, as a business man, he was bound to take that question up at the very outset. I have shown that the traffic cannot come from the business in Halifax, because the hon. gentleman will have to meet there, in competition, abler management than the Intercolonial has ever had. He will have to compete against one of the keenest and ablest railway managers to be found in America. If he cannot get his business at Halifax, where else will he get it? Where is the town? There are a number of small places between Quebec and Halifax, but he cannot expect any business from them to recoup him for this enormous expenditure. What about St. John? My hon. friend may say: Is not St. John showing that it is going to be a great winter freight port for Canada, and has it not been demonstrated that grain can be carried down to the port of St. John and shipped in competition with the town of Portland? I am glad to say that the experiment that has been made in that respect has been completely successful, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have shown that by a combination between the shippers and that company, St. John can compete with Portland as a winter freight port. Will this great expenditure enable us to increase our business with St. John? I have told the committee that they can do nothing so far as Halifax is concerned, because they have 76 miles of additional distance against them, and in favour of their competitor the Canadian Pacific Railway. How does the question stand as regards St. John, the only great port, the only important market for traffic between Montreal and Halifax. Why, my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) who has just sat down, will hardly believe me when I tell him that the distance to St. John by the proposed line is 268 miles greater than by the Canadian Pacific Railway. What does my hon. friend think of that? Is there any hope of increasing business between Montreal and St. John? Is there any hope in assisting in the grain trade or anything else as regards St. John? The hon. gentleman has only to look at the timetable, and he will find that by the Intercolonial from Chaudière to St. John via Moncton is 577 miles, and from Montreal to Lévis by Grand Trunk is 172 miles, or a total from Montreal to St. John by the Grand Trunk, and the Intercolonial of 749 miles. The Minister of Railways and Canals says he is going to shorten that. I am told that thirteen miles is the utmost that he can shorten it. The hon. gentleman thinks he can shorten it by twenty miles. Suppose he does, what difference will it make? He will still have a distance of 248 miles against him. I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen), I ask any man in this House, I ask any candid man in this country, to tell me: Where is the traffic to come from? My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) said that he anticipated tremendous results, by getting the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, getting communication with that great commercial centre. Well, it is possible to hope for that if you look at the matter generally and without examining the facts of the case. But the facts are against him. When you come to Montreal you encounter keener competition than at present. From the present terminus, Chaudière, there is no competition. But when you come to Montreal, you meet the competition of the Grand Trunk, a system paralleling your own from Montreal to Chaudière and you have the Canadian Pacific Railway which is 76 miles shorter to Halifax and 246 miles shorter to St. John than the Intercolonial. Now, is it not trifling with the intelligence of this House for any person to pretend that this enormous expenditure is going to result in securing additional traffic for the Intercolonial? In my judgment, it will enormously increase the difficulties of the operation of that road. In my judgment, you will have to pay not only the interest on $7,000,000 added to the debt of Canada to carry out this project, but you will have to pay an additional sum for the maintenance of the road over and above all that it will give you. Why? Because from Chaudière to Montreal you have the keen competition of the Grand Trunk, running side by side with this, and enriched out of the treasury of Canada with the enormous subsidies poured into their coffers, and that without any return whatever.

There is another thing. Any person who will look at this map—and I invite my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen), if he is capable of seeing or hearing anything except what will induce him to say that he has unbounded confidence in the Government and that if they declared that black is white he would corroborate their statement, to consider this matter—will find that one of the difficulties is that the Grand Trunk running between Chaudière Junction and Montreal does not run through the open, cultivated portions of the country such as are calculated to make a line profitable. He will find, particularly with regard to the Drummond County Railway, which was constructed, I believe, piece-meal as a mere lumber road and in connection with the utilization of the forest, is of the same character. It runs through a country that offers no prospect of improved traffic. But there is a railway which has already been subsidized by the Government to the extent of $3,200 a mile, the Great Eastern Railway, running from Chaudière, not to Ste. Rosalie, but to the bridge itself, shortening the distance by twenty-five miles and running through one of the finest portions of Canada, a country likely to yield a great deal of traffic. If my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) had been anxious to promote the interests of Canada and the interests of the Intercolonial Railway, I think he would have been more favourably impressed than he seems to have been with this line. But the interests of the country have been sacrificed to an alarming extent. No person is more favourable to railway extension than I am. Anything that the hon. Minister will bring forward that shows itself to be necessary for the development of the country, even if it incur heavy expense, I shall feel bound to give it support. Hon. gentlemen opposite may not believe it, but it is a fact that it would give me infinitely more pleasure to support them in this matter than to oppose them as I feel bound to do in the interests of the country.

This line, by which the hon. gentleman proposes to bring the Intercolonial into Montreal exposes him to a great difficulty which would have been avoided if he had taken the Great Eastern running through a good section of the country. A portion of the road over which he is to get running powers is the great channel for traffic between Portland and Montreal. Traffic is continually obstructed by delays on this portion of the road. I do not know whether the hon. Minister's attention has been called to that point, but I think it is a matter of some little importance.

One word more. I find that this road has already received large public subsidies. I find that according to the reports of the Department of Railways and Canals for 1896, the company had then constructed a line of seventy-three miles from St. Rosalie to Moose Park, and a branch of seventeen miles to Nicolet, in all, ninety miles; that the subsidies voted to the company by the province of Quebec, were: Drummondville to Nicolet, thirty-nine miles, at $4,000 per mile, $156,000; from Drummondville to St. Rosalie, 10,000 acres per mile for twenty-seven miles, and from Cunnell to Arthabaska, 10,000 acres, for twenty-three miles—in all 500,000 acres of land, which was converted into cash at 52½ cents per acre, amounting to a cash subsidy, $262,- 500; that there was contributed towards bridges, $50,000; that the Dominion Government has granted in addition to what the Government of Quebec granted, $297,920; so that we are buying back, it appears, our own money. From the town of Nicolet $10,000 were contributed and the municipality gave $5,000. In all $781,420 have been granted for this miserably constructed road that is quite unfit to perform the work of the Intercolonial Railway. And here I would like to ask my hon. friend the question, as I did not quite catch what he said when he was making the statement, whether it is the new portion from Chaudière to Moose Park, the thirty-three miles, that they are obliged to put 70 pound rails upon to bring it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, or whether it is the entire line from end to end, to St. Rosalie, that they are obliged to bring up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, or is he to take the road as it is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only the new portion of the road is to be laid with these heavier rails, only the new portion, as I stated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then the other portion remains in its present condition, and has to be put in order by the Minister of Railways at public expense.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the hon. gentleman's information is as regards its present condition, but my reports show that the road is in very good condition. When was the hon. gentleman over the road?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the hon. gentleman information that has been placed in my hands, and I call his attention to it, because I believe that he will find it accurate and authentic:

This railway was built chiefly to transport the lumber products of the private firm which was incorporated for its construction, and is in no way fit to carry on the business of the Intercolonial Railway. (See report of engineer who examined this lately.)

I think I can furnish my hon. friend with the report of an able engineer who has made that statement:

It is well known that the line was for a long time under offer of sale—

And I call the attention of my hon. friend to this, as important:

--at $5,000 per mile, and a cash offer would probably have secured it at a considerably lower figure.

That speaks volumes as to the condition of that road:

The line was built so as to reach various lumber tracts, and without regard to alignment. It passes through a very inferior country, unsettled, and in great part unfit for settlement, and that will produce no traffic when the balance of the lumber products are removed. The population on the last 50 miles of the line does not reach 5,000.

Now, Sir, if that be true, and I have reason to believe that it is a true statement, I think the hopes that my hon. friend has founded as to the improved traffic that will be brought to the Intercolonial Railway—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who is the hon. gentleman's authority for those statements?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have given the hon. gentleman my authority.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have not named anybody at all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not the engineer's report under my hand, but I will furnish him with it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will pardon me for one moment. He has very strongly endorsed a gentleman upon whose information he is now making these statements, and I apprehend he must know who he is, or he would not endorse his statements.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have given the hon. gentleman the facts, and there are probably gentlemen behind him, and on both sides of the House, who know this country well and who know whether these statements are well founded.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman decline to give the name?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I think I will probably favour my hon. friend with it to-morrow.

A saving of distance of 13 miles is claimed between St. Rosalie and Chaudière, but unless the line is reconstructed, it will certainly be unsafe to attempt to make the same time that the Grand Trunk Railway can make on its better tracks.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who says that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A gentleman who is, I suppose, as thoroughly acquainted with this road and its present condition and everything relating to it, as any person in Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman tell me, if I guess the first letter of his name?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would not hesitate to mention the gentleman's name, but having asked him for the facts in connection with it, knowing that he was in a position to understand the subject thoroughly, he placed this statement in my hands. I have not his authority to disclose the source of my information, but I have no doubt that I can obtain it.

By continuing the aid already granted to the Great Eastern Railway Company, of $3,200 per mile, with an additional sum in aid of the large bridges on the line, a line 25 miles shorter than the Grand Trunk Railway would have been obtained. This line possesses particularly favourable gradients, and it passes through the most fertile and thickly-settled district between Lévis and Montreal. The construction of this line would have given the Intercolonial Railway the shortest and best line to Montreal, and at very little cost to the country. This line was also approved by the Quebec Government, and the consensus of opinion throughout the country, was also in favour of it.

Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who know this locality well, will be better able to judge of the accuracy of those statements than myself.

The line could have entered Montreal by the Grand Trunk Railway bridge, or the new one proposed to be constructed, and all railways reaching Montreal could have had an independent connection with it.

Now, Sir, I think I have given the House the reasons why I felt it my duty to oppose this measure, a measure so important that this House is entitled to have all the facts and all the statements upon which the Minister of Railways has undertaken to impose this great obligation upon Canada. I have given the reasons for the conviction I have that it was absolutely a duty on the part of the Government long ago to have laid upon the Table of this House a clear and succinct statement of all the facts and reasons that led them to this conclusion. I regret that the Government should have placed my hon. friend from North Wellington in the painful position either of supporting so monstrous a proposition as this, or of voting against the Government. It is a deplorable position, I admit, but I entertain no doubt whatever that if the Government had been good enough to take this House into its confidence before this contract was signed, and had laid these statements and proposals on the Table, and invited a frank expression of the House as to whether that was a wise and judicious measure or was one fraught with great damage to the best interests of the country, I have no doubt that my hon. friend for North Wellington would have been found side by side with me, for once at all events, in condemnation of this proposal.

Mr. McMULLEN. A word in reply to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper). I challenge his statement that we are adding seven millions a year to the debt of this country. He is making a mountain out of a mole-hill, and he knows when he makes the statement that it is virtually not correct. I admit that by the proposed change the drain upon the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway will be increased to the extent of $210,000 a year, but it is now run at a positive loss of $100,000 a year to the people of this country. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) prefers to see the Intercolonial Railway making that an annual loss rather than support an honest effort to bring the line into touch with the commercial centre of the Dominion, and to make it pay its working expenses at least. If the Intercolonial Railway, under the new arrangement, earns in addition to its present earnings, sufficient to cover the annual deficit, and to cover the $210,000, the annual sum that it will cost to bring it to Montreal, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) if this will not be a good bargain. The hon. gentleman has asked: Where is the trade to come from? Well, the hon. gentleman knows that at one time the western terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway was Detroit, and it entered Chicago over the Michigan Central and Michigan Southern. The Grand Trunk Railway came to the conclusion that their line would never pay until it entered Chicago, and notwithstanding that there were fourteen lines centering in that city from the east at the time, they reasoned that the financial life of the Grand Trunk Railway depended upon getting into the city of Chicago, and so I say, Sir, that the financial life of the Intercolonial Railway depends upon the road getting into the Chicago of Canada, and Montreal is that city. I congratulate the Government upon their effort to try to make the Intercolonial Railway a paying concern, or at least to try and make it pay its working expenses. Where is the trade to come from, asks the hon. gentleman? Does he not know that Montreal is the head of ocean navigation, and the terminus of our great canal system which we are now deepening. My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Quinn) smiles at that, but I know he hopes as I do, that Montreal is going to be an immense trade centre, and therefore it is of vital interest that the Intercolonial Railway should get connection with that city. I believe that the words of the Minister of Railways will be verified, and that when the Intercolonial Railway is running directly into the city of Montreal, its earnings will be increased, and the people of this country will no longer be called upon to pay an annual deficit of $100,000. I have not the slightest doubt but that will be the result. The leader of the Opposition sympathizes with me, because, as he says, I am compelled to support the Government in this matter. I have been fourteen years in this House and no one more than I deplored the unfortunate financial position of the Intercolonial Railway. I believe we are now entering upon a new era in the history of that road, and I have good reason to believe, and I am prepared to test the statement of the Minister of Railways, that under this arrangement the Intercolonial Railway will pay its running expenses. I hope the leader of the Opposition will live to see the Intercolonial Railway running into Montreal, to see it earning its expenses, and to see it a very valuable addition to the carrying trade of the country. I hope the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) will live to see that day, and if he does, I trust that he will blush at the imprudent attack which he has made on this scheme now before the House.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I wish to reply briefly to the remarks of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) as to the condition of this road. I am well acquainted with the Drummond County Railway, and I passed over it very recently. I am sure that the gentleman who gave the information to the leader of the Opposition perhaps never travelled over that road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the first letter of his name Armstrong ?

Mr. LAVERGNE. I can say that this road is in perfect condition. I am surprised to hear it stated that it passes through a country which is not settled. This road from Ste. Rosalie passes through St. Hyacinthe, which is thickly populated, thence through Bagot County, which is also well settled, thence through Drummond County, which is also well settled, thence through Nicolet County, which is also settled, and thence through part of the county of Arthabaska, and half of that is settled.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought it was a branch to Nicolet ?

Mr. LAVERGNE. It passes through the county of Nicolet, and there is a branch running to the town of Nicolet. In Arthabaska, and in part of the county of Lotbinière, about half of the line which is not yet constructed is in the forest, but far from that being a useless country for a railway, it supplies a very large traffic. In fact, at present it is a very paying traffic. From Lotbinière this railway adjoins the county of Lévis, which is also settled. The report of the gentleman who gave the information to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) is very much exaggerated. This road is in a perfect condition, and it does not pass through a desert, as the gentleman who supplied this information wants to make believe.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My authority that the last twenty-three miles went through a forest was the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. LAVERGNE. A little more than half of that part is in a forest, but there is a large lumber trade, and the line is the only means of getting out this lumber. Now, I think the hon. gentleman has magnified the competition with the Intercolonial Railway that it would meet from the Canadian Pacific Railway between St. John and Halifax.

Mr. McMULLEN.

It is well known that even if the distance is longer that competing companies will transport goods at the same rate. I admit they may not derive the same profit, but they do transport the freight at the same rates, and the Intercolonial Railway will have the same advantage of getting the business in Montreal as the Canadian Pacific Railway has.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is to say, they will bring the freight to Halifax by charging the same as the Canadian Pacific Railway does, although the latter road is 76 miles shorter ; and they will get the business of St. John by carrying it at the same rate as the Canadian Pacific Railway does, although the Canadian Pacific Railway is 240 miles shorter.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I admit that the Canadian Pacific Railway distance is shorter, but I say that the companies will carry at the same rates ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know, but will that be profitable to the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. LAVERGNE. Certainly it will. It may not pay as well, but certainly it will be profitable if we can get the business. There is no doubt but that the report supplied to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is the report of a rival who has another scheme on hand. The map on which the hon. gentleman bases his statement that the Drummond county road is crooked, is not a correct map. Next week we will have a proper map of the road and that map will show that the line is one of the straightest in Canada.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will that map be made under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Works and Railways in the province of Quebec ?

Mr. LAVERGNE. It is an official map.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Well, if it is you will see the road is pretty crooked.

Mr. LAVERGNE. Yes, we will see it, and have all the correct information. I say that you cannot trust that map which you have in your hands.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Look at the map that the Minister of Railways laid on the Table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not lay any on the Table.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, some one had a map here in addition to this one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I sent that to you.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Lavergne) will look at this map he will see that this road is a very crooked one.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I have seen that map and that is the one I object to. It makes the Drummond County Railway very crooked, but that is not the fact. I believe that when my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has an opportunity of seeing all the information that will be laid before the House, he will perhaps alter his mind as to many details.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This matter is so serious that after the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lavergne) has made, challenging the accuracy of the views I have placed before this House, I feel bound to give him briefly the detailed statement of an engineer who has recently examined the road. I shall be happy to place this in the hands of the Minister of Railways and Canals for the information of the officers of his department. Before he proceeds with this matter, he ought to send down an engineer from his department with this statement, and have that engineer either verify it or refute it. What does it say? This is a description of the road which the hon. Minister of Railways described as being in very good condition and one which the Dominion should purchase as a connecting link with the Intercolonial Railway. This report says :

This road commences at Ste Rosalie, in the county of Bagot, a point on the Grand Trunk Railway 38 miles distant from Montreal, thence to Drummondville, a place of some importance in the county of Drummond, on the St. Francis River. From Drummondville, the line extends to Forestdale, in the county of Nicolet, through a country the most of which is uncultivated.

Mr. LAVERGNE. That is not correct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER—

From Forestdale to Moose Park, 8 miles, the line is in operation, but in an incomplete state.

Mr. LAVERGNE. That is not a true statement. Most of the land is settled.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am informed by the hon. member for the county that that is not correct.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I say it is correct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The report proceeds to say :

This railway has been constructed in as cheap a manner as is possible. The grade of the line to a very large extent is a surface one, consequently having bad grades that would have been avoided in a first-class line by accepting heavier work.

Grading has been done, in a great many cases, in a very injudicious manner; in most places where the banks have been made from side work, the ditches have been made too close to the bank, leaving no berm, consequently allowing the slopes of the embankments to reach into the ditches. The banks are so low that, in numerous cases, the water in the ditches is only a few inches lower than the rail, keeping the embankment in such a wet condition that it must be very difficult to keep the track up to its proper shape, and causing sags in the rail.

Another defect is, that drainage has not been properly arranged for, the water lodging in the culverts not having proper outlet by tap-drains, as are usually provided.

The track is very good in places, but there are sketches where the lining and lifting is not what it should be. The rails have not been bent on the curves, and a great number of rails are getting badly worn. There are several places on the line where the tangents have bad bents in them, notably just west of Aston Junction and close to St. Wenceslaus. The curves on the line, as a rule, are light, there not being many of a very heavy degree of curvature. Some of them, however, are badly in need of lining, one in particular, just going into Forestdale, being from six inches to a foot off centre by their track centres. The rails are the 56-pound section, joined together by common fish-plate.

The ties are chiefly hemlock, mixed with a few cedar, &c.

Between Aston Junction and Waddington Falls, the right of way has only been partially cleared up, the logs and brush being only partly burnt, and there is quite a stretch of the line not fenced.

The culverts are chiefly wooden beam, built mostly of hemlock. The workmanship on them is rough. The culverts, not having the proper deck, are without any guard-rail, as the common tie is used.

In addition to the wooden culverts, there are some masonry beam culverts in good condition, as also some masonry boxes.

The pipe culverts on the line are not protected at the ends as they should be. This is a source of danger, as the banks at outlet and inlet are sure to be damaged in high water by scouring.

The quality of the ballast on the line is, as a rule, fairly good, with the exception of some few places, but the whole line needs a good lift.

Between St. Leonard and Carmel, there is a great deal of ballast of a very sandy nature.

The track in that district is also entirely too low, needing a heavy lift of ballast to make a good track.

At Drummondville Station, the track is in bad condition, ties bedded down in the mud, badly lined, and heaved with the frost.

At Blake's Mills, between Mitchell and Carmel, there is a very heavy grade which necessitates the cutting of the trains when they consist of more than ten cars, making two trips to surmount the grade.

The hon. Minister has stated that this portion of the Grand Trunk was not purchased on account of the heavy grade; yet here is a section of this road over which only ten cars can be drawn. In my opinion it would have been better to have purchased this portion of the Grand Trunk, for thereby we would have avoided the keen competition which will for ever prevent this connection with the Intercolonial Railway being able to compete with its rival.

An hon. MEMBER. Where will the great competition come from?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will come from the Grand Trunk, and will be strengthened by the influence possessed by the company in Montreal. The report continues :

This defect in the line can be got rid of by building to the north of the present line.

The bridging on the line is very good, the masonry, ironwork and timber superstructure being in good condition. The principal rivers crossed are :

The St. Francis, at Drummondville, four spans.

West Branch Nicolet, near Mitchell, one span.

East Branch Nicolet, near St. Leonard, steel trestle.

Becancour River, near Waddington Falls, four spans.

There are some other small bridges in good order, with the exception of one just east of Forestdale, which is a small girder, probably 30 feet, resting on timber abutments which seem to be of a weak description.

At the bridge over the East Nicolet there is a very heavy sag in the grade, which should have been avoided by keeping up the grade, especially as a trestle bridge has been used there.

The fence on the road is built of the cheapest kind ; the bulk of it is the common 4-wire fence with one board on top.

The posts are mostly split ones and spaced too far apart to make a good solid fence without an intermediate small post to brace the wire. Between Drummondville and St. Hyacinthe there is a considerable stretch of board fence, four boards high. This is in bad condition, as it is badly heaved by frost, consequent to the post being insufficiently sunk in the ground.

The station buildings on the road are mostly of a very cheap nature, small, unfinished and unpainted. This is accounted for by the bush country through which the road runs.

That my hon. friend who has just addressed the House will suppose is a very great mistake, because it appears according to him that this is not a bush country, but an open country :

Drummondville has the best station on the line and also a repair shop, which is a building 75 or 78 feet long with a single track running through it. It is a very inexpensive building.

The water supply is provided by tanks at Drummondville, St. Leonard and Forestdale.

The main defects in the line are, the narrowness of the banks, the need of another lift of ballast before any fast running can be made, and the condition of the wooden culverts and cattle-guards. Ties also need replacing, but new ties are already distributed in many places.

Now, when the House rose, one hon. gentleman said to me : "How much would it cost to put this road in good order?" I said : "There is no question about that. I did not allude to the condition of the road, because I understood the Minister of Railways and Canals to say that it was to have a 70-pound rail throughout and be equal in every respect to the Intercolonial Railway."

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not to be ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, the hon. gentleman has now admitted that my hon. friend was right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have made no different statement from the statement I made in the first instance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend misunderstands me. I did not say he did.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman says I am now admitting, implying that I stated something different before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I said that my hon. friend asked me what it would cost to put this road in running condition. I said : "That question does not arise, because, as I understood the Minister of Railways and Canals, it is already provided for in the contract, that the parties who are getting these moneys are to put the road in as good a condition as the Intercolonial Railway, and to provide 70-pound rails." When I came back I asked the Minister of Railways and Canals whether it was possible I could be mistaken on that point ; and, to my amazement, the hon. gentleman admitted that the part of the road that was to have 70-pound rails and to be put in as good condition as the Intercolonial Railway was thirty-three miles not yet built. So I have no hesitation in saying—and I speak as one of experience, having occupied the same high office as the hon. gentleman holds—that in my judgment the amount of public money that will be demanded to put that road in any kind of running condition to meet any sort of competition, with the Grand Trunk Railway running alongside of it, will be an immense sum. After what my hon. friend who has just preceded me has said, I felt obliged to give this detail, which otherwise I did not intend to go into. But I do say that in my judgment, late as it is, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, before pressing on this House the adoption of such a proposal as this, evidently involving an enormous demand on the treasury of Canada for the purpose of putting that road into a proper condition between this and next November, or whenever it is to be brought into operation, ought to be able to submit some calculation to the House. Surely my hon. friend must have sent an engineer over this road to examine and report upon it ; and if he has evidence to refute this statement, the House ought to be favoured with it, because we ought to have all the light and information on such an important question which it is possible to submit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In making the statement which I did this afternoon, I was acting on a promise which the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition had exacted from me, to present to the House, on the first occasion when we got into the Estimates for Railways and Canals, a statement of the conditions and terms upon which this arrangement had been concluded. In making that statement, I did not undertake to present to the committee all the arguments, or any of the arguments or reasons which I thought would justify the adoption of that policy by the Government. That I thought it would be very much more convenient to enter upon when the House would be asked to take some action upon the proposals of the Government. Now, the discussion which has taken place naturally must be bootless, because we have no motion before the committee by which it can pass its judgment upon the Government's proposal. I want hon. gentlemen opposite to understand, however, and none more than the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, that this proposition is one which can be sustained in every point of view in which it may be examined. It can be sustained, Sir, above all on the ground that it is a business proposition, and will commend itself to the business judgment of the people of this country. I have listened to the hon. gentleman with unusual interest. Not that I expected to get a great deal of information from him, because I saw at once that he was in such an impetuous hurry to get a chance to denounce this proposition, that he was not willing to take the time that would elapse between now and the submission of the resolutions to the House, to study the question and to get something like an intelligent appreciation of it. I thought the hon. gentleman was going to present us with an argument; but he has presented us with a philippic from beginning to end. The first address he gave was nothing but a complete denunciation, beginning with my poor, unfortunate self. I was utterly incompetent, and we were all incompetent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend is mistaken. I do not think I said he was incompetent. I would have been making an apology to the hon. gentleman if I had said that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman did not say it, he implied language which I think could only convey to the intelligent listener that that was the idea he intended to convey. I extremely regret that I do not stand well in the estimation of my hon. friend—that he does not place my capacity on a very high plane. But I shall have to submit and bear up under the infliction of my hon. friend's condemnation with as good grace as I possibly can; and I hope I shall be able to carry myself through the ordeal with a fair measure of comfort and success. Now, what are the reasons which were assigned by the hon. gentleman against our entertaining this proposition? One was, and the first one, that this idea is too profoundly absurd to be entertained by competent men for one instant.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As stated by the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the class of argument which the hon. gentleman has addressed to the intelligence of this House, as though the very moment that he sets the seal of his condemnation upon a proposition, it cannot be adopted and no further argument need be heard. There may be a body of intelligent men, or fairly intelligent men, who have some reputation for business experience and ability, who may have carefully considered this question and come to a conclusion upon it, but when the hon. leader of the Opposition thunders out his condemnation, why, the whole thing is at an end. It is too profoundly absurd, the hon. gentleman says, for anybody to entertain the idea for one instant. Will the hon. gentleman consult the business men of Montreal? Let him go into the counting room of any man carrying on mercantile business or manufactures in Montreal, and ask him what he thinks of the idea of extending the Intercolonial to that city. He will find but one expression of opinion, and that expression in favour of the project, except perhaps on the part of some people who are so strongly opposed to the Government that they could not possibly approve of any measure which the Government might bring down or consider it at all on its merits. He will find that the business community are not only a unit in favour of this proposal but are of the opinion that it should have been carried out long ago. Let him go down to the city of Halifax, and I suppose the hon. gentleman has some little respect for the judgment of the business men in Halifax, and what will he find? He has only to refer to the newspaper reports of what transpired before this proposition was actually concluded—not before we were considering but before we had concluded and made it public—and he will find the expressions of opinion unanimous in its favour. He will find that the Board of Trade of Halifax gave the very strongest expressions of approval of the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Board of Trade in Halifax had this proposition before it? If he does, then we have been treated worse than I had supposed we were.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Now, my hon. friend can take comfort out of a very trifling circumstance. This proposition, that is the proposition to extend the Intercolonial to Montreal, they had before them, and that is the suggestion which the hon. gentleman says is so profoundly absurd that no competent business man would for a moment approve of it. There are some business men in Halifax, and the hon. gentleman will find that no reasons need be urged to them to convince them that it is not only in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway as an undertaking, but in the interests of the business community, that this proposal should be carried out.

In order that the hon. gentleman may know that this is not only the idea of the present Government, I can tell him that it has been under the consideration of the Government which preceded the present Administration. This profoundly absurd idea had found a lodgement in the brains of some of our hon. friend's opposite who were in the late Government. And there are documents in my department which show that the late Government had made progress in coming to an arrangement with respect to this question, and the judgment of the officials of the Railway Department with regard to the character of the road, with regard to its value, and with regard to the estimated cost of construction with the view of the acquiring of it by the Government, was obtained, before this Government came into power, by our predecessors in office. I do not wish to rob my hon. friend's opposite of all the credit which may attach to them of having thought favourably of the undertaking, but I think it will appear to members of this committee as being somewhat singular that the hon. leader of the Opposition should have found nothing but to condemn in this whole undertaking, when his former associates in office had been entertaining the idea of carrying out, I will not say exactly the same arrangement in all its details, but a similar arrangement. I do not suppose that the arrangement in all its details which we have agreed to is such as would meet with the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite, but I am justified in saying that they had their calculations made and were basing their arrangements on the same materials which were before me and which looked to the early extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal.

I could furnish the hon. gentleman with some reasons which, I think would appeal even to his judgment in favour of the completion of this work. What is the fact? It is that the Intercolonial has not been in a position to make any traffic arrangements with the merchants of Montreal for shipments to the maritime provinces. Why? Because the Grand Trunk Railway stood between them. The Grand Trunk Railway owned the line between Lévis and Montreal, and we could not arrange with any shipper to send freight to any of our merchants in the maritime provinces, unless we could succeed in inducing the Grand Trunk Railway people to make such terms as would be favourable to the completion of such arrangement. The possession by the Grand Trunk Railway of that piece of railway made it utterly impossible for the managers of the Intercolonial to do any business, or at all events to do business to the extent they had a right to expect, until we had removed this great obstacle between the business men of Montreal and the maritime provinces. The Grand Trunk Railway was ever disposed to raise objections and impose conditions, and I need only state that reason to the committee to show how powerful and convincing it is. The Grand Trunk

Mr. BLAIR.

Railway had the very strongest possible interest then, as it has still to-day, against allowing the business men of Montreal to ship their freight via Richmond to Lévis and along the Intercolonial to the ports in the maritime provinces, because they own a railway which connects with Portland and they want to force all the freight they can handle or control on to Portland, so that their line may have the benefit of the longer hauling, and then they carry it from Portland by steamer to Halifax or Yarmouth or other ports in the maritime provinces. Until, therefore, this arrangement was completed, we were practically cut out from business connection with Montreal. Let me ask the business men of this House how long would the manager or owner of a railway, 1,200 miles in extent, such as the Intercolonial, tolerate the continuance of any such position as that? There would be no effort or expenditure which they would not make in order that they might reach the great business metropolis of the city of Montreal and be in a position there to take up such reasonable portion of the traffic of that city with the maritime provinces as they might reasonably expect to obtain.

Not only that, but railway men will tell you that unless the Intercolonial comes to Montreal it does not acquire the right as a railway to be represented at the meetings of the traffic managers where rates are settled and arrangements concluded among railway companies for the trans-shipment and transport of freight. At these traffic conventions, where the schedules are made out, we were not allowed to have any representative. The Intercolonial Railway, although it cost the country $50,000,000 and traversed 1,200 miles of Canadian territory, was excluded from the merest shadow of representation at the meetings of the railway magnates of Canada, where arrangements are concluded upon which the freight east and west and west and east is carried. Now, having completed these arrangements, as we hope we shall be able to do with the authority of Parliament, we can send our traffic manager to these conclaves and these conventions, and he will have the right to say that the Intercolonial—as any other representative would have the right to say as to his own road—must be considered in all the schemes and plans and arrangements made with reference to the shipment of freight. Our representative will have a potent voice there; he will be able to secure for us a fair show among the railways carrying freight from the west, and so we shall stand as fair chance as the Grand Trunk has done for the carrying out of Montreal of the trade coming from the west for the maritime provinces. Then, as the House will see when the papers are laid on the Table, we have made such terms that we can send our freight-men all over Canada. We can send them to any point on the Grand Trunk and can arrange terms on which traffic will be carried to and fro, and can compel the Grand Trunk to hand the business over to us at Montreal when it comes there. I venture to say that the contract that has been entered into between this Government and the Grand Trunk and Drummond County Railway Company, if examined in the light of sound information, and not of mere political hostility, if examined in the light of judgment and business experience, will be found to be one that will commend itself to the country, and will redound to our credit as business men. It will be seen that every detail has been guarded, as far as possible. I for one, as Minister of Railways, and therefore, perhaps, more directly responsible than any other member of the Government in this matter, am willing to have the success of my administration of the affairs entrusted to me judged by the success of the arrangement which I shall propose to Parliament in relation to this matter.

Now, the hon. gentleman raised another objection. He said that no Minister would be justified in going to this enormous expense unless he had succeeded in showing that there would be a reduction of the distance between Montreal and Halifax as compared with the distance by any other route; we ought not to do these things if, when a rule is put upon the track from Montreal via St. John to Halifax, you find that the mileage is greater by this route than by another. What force is there in such a contention? How far did that argument guide the hon. gentleman when he was Minister of Railways and had proposals to make to Parliament for the extension of the Intercolonial? When he conceived the idea that it would be in the interests of the country that the line from River du Loup to Lévis should be bought, did he lay a rule down to see whether any other road could be built from Montreal to Halifax shorter than the line he was proposing to purchase? Not at all; he bought 125 miles of railway and paid a million and a half for it, and he is speaking from sad experience as to the subsequent expense, for it took about another million and a half to put the road in order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman himself says "hear, hear." Unquestionably what I say is true. He made it part of the arrangement that the iron rails then on the 125 miles of road should be handed over to people from whom he was buying the road, and so, of necessity, he had to furnish new rails, which he had to purchase. Now, why did he buy the road from River du Loup to Lévis? Was it to shorten the distance, to enable one to reach Lévis more quickly than by the Grand Trunk? No; the question of distance did not enter and does not enter into the calculations of the hon. gentleman when he is engaged in a transaction of this kind. It is only when he is searching for some ground upon which he can condemn a proposition of his opponents that he hits upon this as something that may catch somebody's ear or impress somebody's mind. It will not impress anybody in Parliament, but it may be caught up by somebody reading the newspapers who will be impressed by the argument.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) like me to tell him why I bought that 125 miles of road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the slightest objection.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will soon give the hon. gentleman the reason if he wishes it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I trust the hon. gentleman will not imagine I am afraid or unwilling he should give the reason. He does not terrify me one particle by threatening that he will give the reason. I am not saying he had any improper reason; I am willing to admit that he had reasons that were quite proper. He had not the reason which the hon. gentleman who spoke this afternoon gave us, that there was a contract between the older provinces under which they entered into confederation to buy that portion of the Grand Trunk and make it part of the Intercolonial. If the hon. gentleman should say that, he would assign a reason having no basis whatever; there is nothing in the compact which made it the duty of the Government of Canada in carrying out the federal arrangement to buy a piece of road. They bought it, why? Because they wanted to get nearer the centre of business and population. I only wonder that they did not long ago complete and make effective the step that they took, by continuing on to Montreal. If they had done so years ago, even on less favourable terms than those the Government are proposing, it would have been an enormous advantage to the railroad system owned by the Government, a great advantage to the city of Montreal and a great advantage also to the provinces which the road traverses.

I was particularly entertained when I heard my hon. friend dwelling with such earnestness and with such apparent sympathetic feeling upon the subject of the Quebec bridge. I thought to myself that it is in vain that the sportsman spreads his net in the sight of any bird. I should have thought that my hon. friend, with all his experience, would have learned by this time that that little scheme of his was altogether too specious, too open, too apparent, to make any impression on the minds of any of the gentlemen who may be representing the province of Quebec. Does any one suppose for a moment that that hon. gentleman is deeply enamoured of the Quebec bridge project, that his soul is bound up in seeing a bridge built over the St. Lawrence at Quebec? If any one does so, he is doing the hon. gentleman an injustice. I know enough about the hon. gentleman to feel convinced that this matter is not torturing his thoughts, that he is not losing sleep over it, that he is not losing a comfortable moment because of the non-existence of a bridge at Quebec. The hon. gentleman can stand the deprivation, I think, about as well as anybody. Now, I think the gentlemen from the province of Quebec, and I think the leader of this Government from the city of Quebec, are likely to take as much interest in what concerns the welfare of the city of Quebec as is my hon. friend, and that whenever they see any movement taking place which seems to be prejudicial to that section of the country, when they see that the interests of their section are being struck at unfairly or unfavourably, I apprehend that they will be as careful to protect those interests as well as the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton (Sir Charles Tupper) can be.

Well, now, my hon. friend to-night and this afternoon has begun to be alarmed lest there may be an increase in the public debt. My hon. friend feels that it will be a most grievous thing if, as the result of any proposal that we may make to Parliament, no matter how meritorious the proposal is, no matter how much return we are to get for the expenditure, no matter how solemn may be the reasons which justify the proposition, the thought that this proposition may increase, as he says, the public debt of this country by seven or eight millions, is a controlling thought with him. Now, how long has the hon. gentleman been afraid of increasing the public debt? How long has the hon. gentleman been so cautious against incurring any increase to the public debt? Why, Sir, if my memory serves me right, the hon. gentleman started in his flight from a remote section of Cape Breton and went clear across this continent, touching at various points as he went along, and promising his millions here, there and everywhere. I am not going to say that the hon. gentleman was making these promises to the people of Canada on the eve of the election, without any thought of fulfilling them if he should be returned to power. I am bound to assume that the hon. gentleman was dealing fairly with the people of this country, and with the various localities to which he addressed himself when he held out these hopes. When he made these pledges to the people of Canada, I am bound to believe that he was in earnest. When he went to the province of Prince Edward Island and gave the people to understand—if he was not there personally, then through his agents—that that province should have seven new railroads, the fear of debt did not alarm the hon. gentleman then. A railway to the Hudson Bay did not affect the hon. gentleman with a single tremor; a bridge across the River St. Lawrence at Quebec received his support, and all the bridges ever mentioned in Parliament or in the public press, met the heartiest approval at the hands of the hon. gentleman; he promised them all, right and left. He threw out those Bills which were going to mature, as he thought, and which he was prepared to retire when they did mature, but which he felt with all confidence, never harbouring the shadow of a doubt but that after the 23rd of June he would be able to retire at his own discretion. Now, then, who would think that the hon. gentleman would be the one who, when a business proposition is submitted to Parliament, would raise a clamour against it because it adds to the public debt? I do not think that we can, with every desire to do justice to the hon. gentleman, acquit him of treating the House unfairly, or give him credit when he takes that stand, of speaking his honest and sincere sentiments upon this question. He is not afraid of public debt. Why, a hundred millions would not startle the hon. gentleman if it were necessary to answer the purpose which he might think, I am willing to admit, would promote the public interest. I do not know that the hon. gentleman is to be condemned because he is willing to incur any reasonable burden when, as he believes, the interest of the country require that the expenditure should be made. But to answer a mere temporary purpose at the moment, in a criticism of a proposal of the Government, he is willing to cast all these convictions, all these evidences, which he has given in his entire public career, of his readiness to incur debt when the occasion arises—he is willing to cast them all aside with the view of making a mere temporary argument against his opponents upon a proposition which is submitted for his acceptance. Now, I want to state to the committee most emphatically that I think it is unfair to say that the proposal which we are about to submit to Parliament for the leasing of these two lines, means an addition to the public debt of the country. It does nothing of the kind. We engage, it is true, to pay $210,000 rental to the several railway companies for the use of their lines. Why do we do it? Because we have the strongest possible business reasons for believing that we will not only get that $210,000 back, but more. Is there a member of Parliament, I do not care what his political views may be, who will say sincerely that he does not believe that the transaction is a good one, that he does not believe that we will make more than the cost of the rental, and the cost of running the railway added, in revenue from the operation of that road? Therefore, I say it is unfair for the hon. gentleman to seek to create, not here but in the country, the impression that we are adding seven million dollars to the public debt. We are doing nothing of the kind. We are engaging to pay rental for the use of a property, not an exorbitant rental, but a reasonable one, a rental which any railway man, I do not care who the hon. gentleman may appeal to, will say is a fair rental to pay for the privileges that we are getting. He says, why didn't you build the railway by the south shore? Why didn't you take the Grand Trunk system? Our judgment did not approve it, that is the reason; and, going on our best judgment we selected the other line in preference to either of the two which the hon. gentleman has proposed. He has read here from some quarter an authority which he is unwilling, I almost think he is afraid, I think I may almost venture to say that he is ashamed, to give to Parliament for the statements that he has made. He reads these statements in condemnation of this road, picturing the road as being entirely unfit for our purposes, as being inferior in many particulars, and as being in every way a property which should not be taken over by the Government under these terms. Well, if this gentleman is an independent authority, if he has no interest in any other undertaking, if he is not feeling chagrined because we did not take up his scheme in place of taking up the Drummond County Railway, if he is free from any of these suspicions, then I say it would be fair to put that gentleman's opinion beside—whose? Beside the opinion of the officials of the Department of Railways and Canals; and I would say that I am justified, at all events, in recommending my colleagues and recommending the Administration to act upon the judgment and opinions of the officials of the department rather than haphazard statements which may be made by anybody who may be picked up in the corridor, and though he may be in the act of leaving this Parliament building. Now, I am perfectly willing to submit these proposals in all their details to the examination of the committee, I am willing that every feature of them may be taken up and closely scanned, and I am convinced that they will stand the ordeal of the most careful scrutiny. They will not, perhaps, stand to the satisfaction of my hon. friend opposite. They will not stand to the satisfaction of the ex-Minister of Finance, because the ex-Minister of Finance was amazed when he heard that we had made an arrangement whereby we are to pay annually a fixed rental upon these railroads, and that we were then going to pay towards the cost of maintenance of the road on those lines; he was amazed at that. It is quite apparent to me, as I think it must be apparent to you, that neither of my hon. friends are approaching the consideration of this question with much general knowledge as to how these arrangements are made. We, of course, agree that we will bear our share of the cost of maintenance and repair of the road. We will do it, but no more than our business requires. If we do one-half of the traffic, then we pay one-half of the cost of maintenance, but in using the road we will only pay our share with the Grand Trunk and other roads that may be using the line and our bridge and the terminus at Bonaventure. This arrangement is in accordance with the usages of railway companies, and it is one to which no company can object. I have not invited the present discussion, and I thought it would take place at a later period. But I do not wish to avoid it; I am quite prepared to submit these matters to hon. gentlemen, and at the same time I ask that they should criticise in a spirit of fairness and judgment and not indulge in general condemnation without giving the reasons why the proposals should be condemned.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite sure when a grave proposition, which will place on the country a burden for ninety-nine years of $210,000 each year, equivalent to $7,000,000, on which interest will have to be paid at 3 per cent, is submitted by the Minister of Railways and Canals to Parliament and he asks ten days before the closing of the session the House to adopt such a proposition as the present, and when he endeavours to substantiate his position by such arguments as he has addressed to the committee during the last three-quarters of an hour, it must be apparent to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House that his position is not a tenable one or one that appeals to the good sense of the members of the House. The hon. gentleman has not commenced his career in this House as Minister of Railways and Canals in a very business-like way. The hon. gentleman had no mandate from either the Government or himself to Parliament last session or this session to make a hard and fast arrangement to increase the public debt by $7,000,000. The hon. gentleman may say—any child may say—this proposition is now before you, and you are at liberty to accept it or reject it. But every man knows, and no man knows better than the hon. gentleman himself, that the Government having come down and the hon. gentleman having called on his supporters to see him through, if it can be done, and the Government having bound themselves to this contract, the hon. gentleman has clipped the wings of any fair discussion and open judgment with respect to this matter. My hon. friend would have done better and would have started more favourably on his career in this House, which is not a mere guessing school, as my hon. friend tried to turn it into a few minutes ago, when he was prepared to make a guess in regard to the authority of a certain letter—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The first letter.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be still more enigmatical, and exhibit the power of the hon. gentleman to a greater degree. The hon. gentleman should have deigned before he proposed to add to the public debt the sum of $7,000,000, to ask the advice of Parliament, especially before he bound the Government hand and foot by a contract with a most powerful corporation and its shareholders in Great Britain and elsewhere. The hon. gentleman and the Government of which he is a member have undertaken to do what they have denounced in all moods and tenses ever since they have been in politics. The party has denounced the principle that the Government should undertake without the sanction of Parliament any large disbursement. Hon. gentlemen opposite have entered into a contract for a fast line service of steamships, for which there is to be a subsidy of $750,000 annually, of which $500,000 is to be paid by Canada. This arrangement has been entered into because Parliament has already discussed the proposition and has, year after year, endorsed the project. In the present case Parliament has done nothing of the kind. The Minister of Railways appeals to the House now as a business man, and yet he proposes the adoption of a contract which is equal to a capital expenditure of $7,000,000, and he says to his followers, not one of whom was consulted beforehand: We must hang together, or we must hang separately, and you must blindly assist me in pressing this arrangement through. To-night hon. gentlemen have been talking in the dark, we have spoken of this road without full information. The hon. gentleman asks: Why are you discussing this question to-night, cannot you wait till the resolutions come down? When will the resolutions come down? Within nine days of the close of the session we have not received any information—and yet the Governor General, the symbol of truth, speaking in his capacity as Governor General, declared on the opening day of this session that the arrangement was concluded. How long is the hon. gentleman going to keep these resolutions before the House? How long is he going to keep the details of the contract and the information in his department without informing this House in regard to it? Where is the information, and why has it not been brought down? What answer has the hon. gentleman made? My hon. friend is not to-day in the New Brunswick legislature. He is in a larger sphere, and he has a larger space to fill than in the other House. He has to deal with a wider public sentiment and a stronger light than prevailed in his native province; and his reputation as a business man and a Minister suffers to-day by this transaction and the fact information in regard to it has been withheld until the very last moment. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) was so brave. He declared that the leader of the Opposition went from one end of this country to the other, and promised his millions, and was filled with a perfect confidence that he would be returned to power and that his promises would be implemented and the notes would be retired. In that, there was a wonderful difference between the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) and the leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) who to-day figures in so brave a role, was so brave that he did not step into the arena until the 23rd of June told him that his party would be victors, and that he could be lifted into the role of a ministership at $7,000 a year. He hung on to the Premiership of the province of New Brunswick, and when men of the Liberal party were fighting there for years and years, he enjoyed the sweets of the smaller office in his province. When men of the Liberal party never failed to present their front to the battle whenever the contest took place, and took its risks as well as prospective honours, that hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) sat quietly within the shades of his own little tent, until he found out that the victorious Liberal party was going to take office after the 23rd of June, and then he was willing to monopolize the higher sphere. That is the bravery of my hon. friend (Mr. Blair), and that is the strong contrast between him and the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper).

Now, Sir, I am not going to enter into this argument to-night. Why? Because I am not equipped for it, because the information is not before the House, but do any hon. gentlemen opposite say that this discussion has not borne its fruit. If this discussion had not taken place, this House and the country would have been kept in the dark until the last fading hours of the session, and when a very small proportion of the members were present, it would have been rushed through and nothing heard about it. This discussion has fixed the attention of this House upon the matter, and hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House are going to think this matter out in a business fashion. Let me strip it from one specious covering which my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) strove to put upon it. He was unfair in his argument in this respect, for he combatted the leader of the Opposition on the ground that he (Sir Charles Tupper) was opposed to the expenditure of money for any public purpose. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) took the trouble to tell him—so that the Minister of Railways could not use that argument—that he (Sir Charles Tupper) was in favour of spending public money for objects of public utility. The Minister of Railways took the ground, that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) was opposed to the increase of the debt, if that was brought about by the extension of this railway to Montreal. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) told the Minister, that he did not count that the increase in the public debt ought weigh against a great work of public utility. Does not my hon.

friend (Mr. Blair) see the difference between an idea, and the way in which he may propose to carry out the idea. The Halifax Board of Trade were in favour of the idea of extending the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, but does the Minister mean to say, that the Halifax Board of Trade has in any way given its imprimatur to this particular plan of the Minister, by which that idea is to be carried out. The argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) was lame from top to bottom on that ground. He confounded the idea, which may be good, with the method in which he proposes to carry it out, which may be very bad. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) can now leave that branch of the argument, because I tell him as he was told before: that it is not the idea we are combatting, but it is this particular arrangement which he has made for carrying out the idea; and that arrangement we feel is not the best one. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) said that I was amazed. I was, but I suppose I should not have been amazed at anything my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) would have brought before this House. But I was amazed, to find out when I came back after dinner, that the price we pay for the Drummond County road just simply takes it as it is to-day, in its incomplete and broken down condition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why, it is nearly a new road.

Mr. FOSTER. Nearly a new road. Then I want to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Blair)—for he has the seat of advantage in this respect; he sits where he may have the information as to what that road is—why is he keeping it up his sleeve; why does not he let us know? I ask him: has he reports from reliable and competent engineers as to the quality and condition of that road at the present time?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I have not at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, Sir, I did not expect that answer from a business man. We have a conclusion to draw, and hon. gentlemen opposite must themselves draw a conclusion from that answer. The Minister of Finance told us yesterday, that there was no necessity for looking into facts about woven wire fences and barbed wire fences, when you wanted to protect one and did not want to protect the other. He told us that they did not go so far down as to look at facts, when they were looking to see what would please the farmers. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) is on the same track. Facts count for nothing with him. He is doing something which is to please somebody, but is this the business proposition of a business man, that business men will uphold, when he has actually concluded, what? A bargain to buy a road and to pay well for it, and he has not to-day the report of a reliable engineer as to the quality and condition of that road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, will my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) tell us what is correct? I asked him if he had the report of a reliable engineer as to the quality and condition of that road to-day? Has he? He said he had not. He (Mr. Blair) proposes to ask this Parliament, and to ask his followers, to make a purchase and pay over the purchase money, without having the report of a reliable engineer as to the condition of that road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would the hon. member (Mr. Foster) allow me to ask him to explain his question, as to whether he means to ask me, if I have to-day in my possession or in the department the report of a reliable engineer as to the condition of the road. If that is the question my answer is, that I have. If he asks me, if I have a report as to the condition of the road to-day my answer is that I have not.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) tell us how far he hopes to quibble over that question. Has this astute business man, this great man translated into this sphere, has he then the report of a reliable engineer of yesterday? Has he? Of if not of yesterday, of the day before; or of the day before that?

Mr. McMULLEN. That would be Sunday.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I became a little confused. When one of the agents of the Government was asking Sunday cars in Toronto, I thought the Government were on the same track and might do work on Sunday. But, let the Minister of Railways treat this House as a serious body, and just tell us now, as to what he has, as a report, as to the condition and quality of that road for which he asks us to pay $64,000 a year. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) give us that information?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not got the information here, but I propose to furnish the information to the committee when I am moving the resolution. I will furnish all the information I have in my possession, and at my disposal then. That I am not in a position to do to-night. I do not carry it around in my pocket, and I have not it in my mind.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) may carry lots in his pockets, but I did not ask him whether he had it in his pocket or not? My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) has not yet given notice of his resolution.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I intend to do so immediately.

Mr. FOSTER. Does he intend to keep all these reports and papers until he brings his resolution down and moves it? Is he determined that he shall take this House at the vantage point of complete ignorance in this matter and by surprise, and in the very last days of the session carry it through. Nine days are still left, one of them is Sunday, and he has not given notice of his resolution. He proposes some time during that nine days to give notice; he has the report but he has not it in his pocket, and when it suits him, and he brings in his resolution, he will lay his report on the Table. Will my hon. friend not treat the House as a business body and tell us that he will bring that information down to-morrow and lay it on the Table of the House, so that we may have an opportunity of looking it over before he asks us to pass his resolution? Does my hon. friend think that is too exigent a position to take?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will say this, that if the hon. gentleman had desired to have all this information laid on the Table, I am a little surprised that he had not made a motion to that effect, when it could have been brought down earlier. I stated to the hon. gentleman who is leading the Opposition that I would, when this Estimate came up, state the terms of the arrangement between the two companies and the Government, and I have done that. I shall take occasion to give notice at once of the resolution, and with that I will bring down any information I have at my disposal touching this question; or, if the hon. gentleman desires it, I will furnish that beforehand. I do not know that I could bring it down to-morrow. It might be that it would take me longer to put it in shape for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. And has my hon. friend just waked up to the fact that we have wanted that information? Should my hon. friend have waited one single hour to bring that down after having in the Queen's Speech stated that this arrangement had been concluded? At the time this House was called together the hon. gentleman had committed the Government to an expenditure of $210,000 per year for ninety-nine years, had concluded the arrangement, had put into the mouth of the Governor General the statement that he had concluded it, and to this day he has not laid on the Table of the House the papers which were the basis of that arrangement. Is that the track my hon. friend has been running on in the local legislature? He will find that he has a different body to deal with here. The hon. gentleman should have placed those papers on the Table of the House at the very first opportunity after the Address was passed; he knows it, and every parliamentarian in this House knows it. He says: If you had just asked for the papers, it would have been all right. Does not the hon. gentleman know that my hon. friend who leads the Opposition has asked for those papers over and over again? Why, Sir, I have here, on the 30th of April, an insistent appeal from my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will you read what the appeal was, and the reply?

Mr. FOSTER. I will. Before the Orders of the Day, which is the time to emphasize the importance of a matter of this kind, Sir Charles Tupper rose and said:

I would like to draw the attention of the Government to the following statement contained in the Speech from the Throne:—

"I have much satisfaction in informing you that arrangements have been concluded which, if you approve, will enable the Intercolonial Railway system to reach Montreal."

I would like to ask the hon. leader of the Government, a long time having elapsed since we had this positive declaration from the Throne that these arrangements had been concluded, if he would be good enough to lay on the Table of the House the papers in relation to the matter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier). As my hon. friend is aware, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has been laid up for some time,—

Well, he has not been laid up of late.

—and is not perhaps able to give an answer now. I shall be able at the next sitting of the House to say whether or not the papers will be brought down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is that all?

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Railways and Canals was not laid up that day. He said:

I think I may say to the hon. gentleman that the documents, which are in course of preparation, and which will have to be submitted, as between the two contracting parties, are not yet quite completed. Some of the important details of the negotiations are not finally agreed upon. We are making all possible speed in bringing matters to a head, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that there will be no unnecessary delay in presenting the whole matter to Parliament. At the earliest possible moment the papers will be laid on the Table. They have been somewhat delayed by my indisposition of the last three or four days, but I think perhaps towards the latter end of next week I may be able to furnish the House with the desired information.

And to-night the hon. gentleman tries to shield himself behind the excuse that if we had asked for the papers we might have had them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was never any return moved for.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend know so little about parliamentary practice as not to know that we never have to move for a return about a matter of great importance that has been concluded by the Government and mentioned in the Queen's Speech? Does he not know that the very first thing a parliamentarian should do is to lay it on the Table of the House. But my hon. friend says these arrangements were not then concluded. Why did he let the Governor General utter a falsehood in saying:

I have much satisfaction in informing you that arrangements have been concluded which, if you approve, will enable the Intercolonial Railway system to reach Montreal.

To get into the terminals, so to speak. On the very first day of the session the arrangement was made, and the hon. gentleman told the Governor General to tell everybody that it was actually concluded; and we have not the papers yet. The hon. gentleman tries to shelter himself behind the miserable fiction that we ought to have asked for the papers; and when we show that we did ask for them, he tries to hide himself behind the smaller excuse that we had not made a motion for a return of these papers. As if we ought to be obliged to do that. Now, we have not the information. The hon. gentleman says he has it; he is going to keep it up his sleeve, until he brings down the resolution, and he will not say when it will be brought down. Well, I commend that as a business operation of a business Government. When the time comes for us to take this matter up as a business arrangement, and to try it and see whether it is worth while to make that large expenditure to get the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, there will be the business side of this arrangement to be discussed, and we will be prepared to discuss it on this side. There are parts of this country that have no railroad communication at all, and that are longing for railroad communication.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, who resides at the Junction hears the rumble of wheels every day, and he is not dying for railways. My hon. friends who come from remote portions of this country—from the North-west, from the broad lands of British Columbia, from the back portions of even the older provinces—which have no railway communication at all, may well ask themselves why $7,000,000 should be put upon a scheme of this kind in a part of the country where there are railways in abundance; and they must ask whether or not there is to be the certain and sure return of business accretion to follow upon this arrangement, before they can feel that they are doing justice to the whole country by voting this immense sum of money for this purpose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not intend to take up the time of the committee for more than a single moment, and only to refer to two rather important statements which the hon. Minister of Railways made; and the reason I do not propose to take up any further time is, because the hon. gentleman addressed the committee for a long time without venturing to grapple with the fundamental question of the basis of arriving at the conclusion that he was going to improve the traffic on the Intercolonial Railway. But the hon. gentleman drew the attention of the House to the fact that when I was Minister of Railways and Canals I purchased some 120 miles of railway from Rivière du Loup to Point Lévis, and I wish to explain to the House why I made that purchase. The Grand Trunk Railway, when confederation was accomplished, had built its railway down to Rivière du Loup. The Government of Canada, under the management of hon. gentlemen opposite, had expended a great many millions of public money in building the Intercolonial up to Rivière du Loup. We then found ourselves in this position. As it did not pay the Grand Trunk Railway to run their road from Lévis to Rivière du Loup, they allowed it to fall into utter dilapidation, so that it was not safe for life or property. The Intercolonial was therefore obliged, in order to have anything like reasonable communication with Quebec, to purchase that 120 miles of road from Rivière du Loup to Lévis and put it in proper condition. The hon. gentleman made a wild statement in reference to a part of the arrangement, and that was that the Grand Trunk Railway were to have the iron rails. Well, that was part of the bargain, but it was submitted for the approval of Parliament, and it received the hearty endorsement, I think I am safe in saying, of every gentleman on both sides, as a wise and necessary arrangement.

The hon. gentleman made one other reference to which I wish to draw the attention of the House, because he turned round to his supporters and laid a great deal of emphasis on it, and that was that when I went to the country as leader of the Government, I proposed the expenditure of millions and millions from Cape Breton to British Columbia. I ask the hon. gentleman now to point to one expenditure which he will not have increased before the House rises. I did go to the country, and in a manly, straightforward fashion I put before the people the policy I proposed, and where I felt that the expenditure of large sums of public money was demanded in the public interest I did not hesitate to express the views I held. But it ill becomes the hon. gentleman, when before this House rises he will have asked this Parliament to vote more money than would cover all the expenditure I had proposed when I went to the country before the general election, to taunt me with making extravagant pledges and promises.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman explain the increase at Moncton?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This item is not only for the building of a station-house, but also the construction of a freight shed, the laying down of an additional track, and the completion of the proposed arrangements which had been made when tenders were invited. I had not proposed to go any further than the scheme which had been outlined and determined upon by the hon. gentleman who preceded me in the department.

Mr. FOSTER. Who has the contract for the building?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Rhodes & Currie. Tenders were invited before the change of Government, and I may say to the committee that there is only one change in the contract. The whole work, including the plumbing and heating, was embraced in the specifications for this first contract. The general manager and some of the other officials were of the opinion that the specifications for the heating and plumbing were not sufficient, and we have extracted from the contract the sum it was proposed to charge for that portion of the work. We think of having an independent contract let for that portion, but the contract in all other respects remains identical with the contract which was accepted by my hon. friend's opposite.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to say when the parties who tendered were instructed that they would receive the contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I mistake not, they had instructions before the change of Government. That is my impression, and they were notified that the matter would be held in suspense. The session was late, nothing was done last fall, and they were not instructed to proceed with their work until this spring?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend will refer to the date of the Nova Scotia election, he will find that that was the time when he decided to notify these parties, the lowest tenderers, that they would be allowed to go on with the work. I believe the result was eminently beneficial from a political point of view to the hon. gentleman's friends in the county of Cumberland.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sure that my hon. friend's suspicions have been unduly aroused.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know of what I am speaking, and I know the result. One of the strongest supporters of this party in the country was paralyzed by that Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope my hon. friend is not going to suggest that that respectable firm of contractors could be influenced in that way. I think these gentlemen have a reputation to defend in this matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have the strongest reason for stating that the hon. gentleman did exercise a powerful influence over these contractors who were in the hands of the Government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These contractors are very prominent and distinguished members of the Conservative party.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They were.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And I do not think they could be influenced. Trained up as they were so many years under the guidance of the hon. gentleman, their virtue should have been stronger.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is only fair to say that these gentlemen were given to understand most explicitly by myself personally that the contract would be let to them just as it was. I gave them that assurance, not so recently as the Nova Scotia election, but weeks or months before. They had no official information, I think, from the department until late this spring.

Mr. McDUGALL. With regard to the deep water terminus of North Sydney, have any steps been taken to select the place for that terminus? Has any further arrangement been carried out with the townspeople with regard to the right of way. There were two routes selected for the building of that extension of the road to deep water. What I want to know is whether a location has been selected and any arrangement carried out with the people of the town with regard to the right of way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing definite has lately been done, and no arrangement has been concluded, but the matter remains, I think, substantially as it was a year ago. The town of North Sydney made an agreement which they have not yet signified their readiness or ability to carry out; and, pending some notification of that kind from them, we are in no position to act with respect to the matter. But we thought it right, since there was arrangement of this character made with the town of Sydney that we should ask for the grant that was in the Estimates a year or two years ago, lest they should be in a position to ask us to carry out the arrangement.

Mr. McDUGALL. I think this a matter that demands a little more consideration on the part of the Government than they seem to have given it. As the House is aware, in a very few months important communications will take place with the Intercolonial Railway through its terminal point in the Island of Cape Breton, with the Newfoundland Railway which is to be in operation and which will be connected by steamer from Port aux Basques to the port of Sydney. Perhaps it was at one time thought that the people of North Sydney only were interested in the building of this road to deep water. But now, I consider, it is a matter of the greatest interest to the Government with respect to the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway. If they want earnings, I think it is their interest regardless of any consideration of cost for right of way to extend to deep water at the earliest possible date, and take advantage of the communication with Newfoundland which must necessarily bring a great deal of traffic to the road. I understand that the Newfoundland service is to be in operation within the next month or so, at the latest, early in the autumn. It is not for me to point out the importance to the Intercolonial of the traffic that will be brought to that point. When the road was brought to the town of North Sydney, I may as well inform the Minister of Railways, as I believe he is not in possession of the facts, there was a dispute with regard to the route by which the water terminus should be reached. It was considered best that the people of North Sydney should undertake to pay the right of way five miles next to the town at the time the building of the road was taken hold of by the Government, provided they could get a suitable water terminus and other terminal facilities in that town. But without what was considered by the people of the town sufficient communication with them as to where they desired that terminus to be built, the Government engineers proceeded with the work. They built a station a considerable distance out of the town at a most inconvenient, unsuitable and improper place. Dispute arose between two sections of the town about getting to the water at that point. No doubt, advantage was taken of the dispute by the officers of the Department. My own protests written from time to time will be found on file in the department, as well as the protest of the people through resolutions of public meetings, resolutions of the town council, and otherwise. Owing to the mistake by the officers of the department in expropriating property through the town for the building of the road which property was in litigation and about which there was a great deal of dispute, which had to be settled in the courts of law, the work of constructing the water terminus was not proceeded with. In the meantime an agitation rose for the construction of the road over another route, and the people of the town undertook to ask the Government to build over the other route.

The Government refused on the advice of their officials to undertake to build by that route. The town went to the expense of making a survey and submitted plans and profiles of the route to the department. But nothing was done to bring the road to the water terminus. This is the position of this important work up to almost the day when this important communication is to be opened with the Newfoundland Railway, a communication that must affect most favourably the earnings of the Intercolonial. I make this appeal to the hon. the Minister of Railways and to the Government on behalf of the people interested in making that communication with the harbour of Sydney and furnishing the best possible facilities for this communication with Newfoundland, to leave the petty consideration of the cost of the right of way to the town of North Sydney aside altogether. The question of pressing the people of North Sydney for paying for the right of way should not be allowed to stand in the way of the work, as the benefit will be derived mainly by the railway, and longer delay, I consider, would be a great mistake for the Government. In any case, I see no reason why the Government should not proceed with the building of the terminus and then settle their right of way dispute with the town afterwards. They have expropriated, I understand, two routes at the water terminus at North Sydney. But whether they have expropriated one or two, by all means let the Government get the road to the water terminus in order to get the communication with Newfoundland.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can the importance of the point that my hon. colleague (Mr. McDougall) has brought to the notice of the Minister of Railways and Canals. At great expenditure of money as the hon. gentleman knows, a railway has been constructed for hundreds of miles from the city of St. John, Newfoundland, to Port aux Basques, and the very enterprising contractor of that road, Mr. Reid, has secured the construction of a very fine steamer to be put on immediately between Port aux Basques and Sydney, as my hon. friend has said. It is of the utmost importance that not a day, not an hour, should be lost in providing the necessary accommodation at the point at which the steamer will arrive, so as to make communication with the Intercolonial Railway. I am certain that the hon. Minister will appreciate the great importance to the Intercolonial Railway of having it made the means of communication with the Island of Newfoundland by means of connection by this steamer. I am advised, and I believe there can be no doubt as to the accuracy of my information, that, by the middle of next August the road will be completed and in operation from St. John's to Port aux Basques and the steamer, if not now on her way from England will certainly be ready to begin the service by the middle of August. It is of the greatest importance that this difficulty whatever it was between the Railway Department and the town of North Sydney, should be disposed of in some way so as to secure the facilities for handling the large traffic which, I am quite satisfied, will require to be handled at that point by the Intercolonial when the steam communication is established. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is not in his place, but I wanted also to draw his attention to the importance of providing a subsidy for that very important steam communication between Newfoundland and North Sydney by this means, a communication that I believe will be not only very advantageous to Newfoundland, but in promoting trade between Canada and that Island.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways whether he is in a position to inform the House whether Mr. Reid, the contractor of the railway in Newfoundland, who is putting this service in operation, has had any communication with the department with a view to traffic over the Intercolonial Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not that I am aware of. I now learn for the first time that there is a probability of this line of steamships being established between Newfoundland and Sydney at the early date the hon. gentleman mentions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no reason to doubt that it will be in operation by the middle of August.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will bring the information given me to the attention of the officers of the department and of the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway, with the view of ascertaining what his views would be upon the subject.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wanted to ask the Minister of Railways whether the Halifax extension, the Victoria Cotton factory branch, is to be made? The item seems to have been voted the last two years, and again this year, and I am not aware that anything has ever been done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not in a position to assure the hon. gentleman whether the expenditure will be immediately entered upon. I think it not unlikely that it may be done during the coming year. But that will depend upon the result of some further negotiations that are going on with the people, as explained at the last session of Parliament.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what direction is the proposed extension? I do not think I heard the explanation last session.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The extension was to pass over the high ground back to the rear of the city. It was really an extension of the present line; and the matter was and is in negotiation between the department and the street railway people.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the extension to be on the North Common?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In that direction, I think.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This proposed extension will go down to the new works of the People's Light Company, down to the shore of the Arm. It was proposed that the extension should run on the high ground down to the old penitentiary ground. That was the proposition, but it has not been agreed to by the Government.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Speaking of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway down to North Sydney, I would like to ask the hon. members from the county of Cape Breton who are interested in that extension, whether it is not a fact that there was a proposition to diverge the Intercolonial Railway from a point at or near George's River along the Little Bras d'Or and the Sydney Mines, going through North Sydney, and, therefore, getting upon this proposed extension in that way.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) has referred to this matter, because I intended to draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that when I was in a position to be responsible to some extent for these matters, I submitted to the Railway Department the advantage that the Intercolonial Railway would derive from having an improved condition of things in that section. I dare say my hon. friend knows that at present the railway runs to North Sydney and then backs down in the direction of the Sydney Mines, a most improper proceeding, in fact attended with danger, and I am not quite certain that it is not absolutely illegal. I submitted to the Railway Department the question of making an alteration that would be attended with a small change in the line of the road in that district, so as to give communication to an important section, the Sydney Mines and to North Sydney, so as to avoid that backing down of the trains. The department referred the matter to Mr. Pottinger, who is the manager of the railways, for a report, and he reported that he believed that it would be greatly in the interest of the business of the Intercolonial Railway to make this comparatively small expenditure, and that it would give proper communication and railway facilities to a very large number of people at Sydney Mines, besides obviating the dangers that I have mentioned. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman's attention has been drawn to that, but I would like very much if he would take the views upon the subject of the officials of the department, and I hope he will arrive at the conclusion that it would be wise to carry out that proposal.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I think the Minister of Railways and Canals will have no difficulty now in getting at the difficulties that existed for years with regard to the extension at North Sydney, I think the people of North Sydney hold their representatives largely responsible for the delay in question, in view of the fact that they proposed from one election time to another to divert the Intercolonial Railway in the direction that I have indicated, and in which the hon. leader of the Opposition now agrees with me. This, I think, will explain to the Minister of Railways and Canals why it was that the people of the town of North Sydney, that important shipping port, were deprived for many years past of the proper terminus of the Intercolonial Railway. If there is not to-day a proper terminus for this new steamship line at the town of North Sydney, I think the Minister of Railways and Canals and this House will agree with me that it was owing to this proposal on the part of the hon. gentlemen who represented that county, to divert the road from its present route around to Little Bras d'Or and Sydney Mines, thus obviating the backing down of the trains to the town of North Sydney. But the great trouble for the town of North Sydney has been that these gentlemen never carried this proposition out, and hence it is to-day that if this new steamship line is established the terminus will be wanted in order to carry out the project suggested by the junior member for Cape Breton when he wanted to post the Minister of Railways and Canals with regard to this difficulty. I think the suggestion made and the point now raised will add to the information of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and that the latter will find that the proposition made by these gentlemen for several years and never carried out by them, has had considerable to do with the delay in carrying out this most important measure for the people of the town of North Sydney.

Mr. McDUGALL. The hon. member who has just spoken I think will require to get information himself, because he is entirely in the dark as to the circumstances connected with the building of the proposed terminus to deep water at North Sydney.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The leader of the Opposition sustains me.

Mr. McDUGALL. The question of diverting the road from George's River round by Little Bras d'Or and Sydney Mines to North Sydney, only came up about a year before the leader of the Opposition visited Cape Breton in connection with his first election there.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). When he was running his election?

Mr. McDUGALL. The people there made representations to the Government only a short time before the leader of the Opposition visited that country to run his first election there. It was his duty, as a member of the Government, to listen to the representations made by the people of the district, and lay before the Department of Railways those representations, and subsequently communicate the result of the inquiry to the people of Sydney Mines and Little Bras D'Or, as was his duty, occupying the position of head of the Government. My hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) endeavoured to lead the House to believe that the terminus was not built to North Sydney because of the representations made in regard to the construction of the road to Sydney Mines and Little Bras D'Or. There was no agitation at the time of building the road for the route around Little Bras D'Or and Sydney Mines to the water front. The reason was the difficulty which arose in regard to the right of way through properties in the vicinity of North Sydney. The route adopted by the Government engineers did not seem acceptable to a majority of the people of North Sydney, as was proved by a meeting held in that town, when the people resolved to adopt another route and employ engineers to lay out a route that was, in their opinion, feasible and practicable. Another route was surveyed, and so the people of North Sydney were left without a terminus. So the statement of the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan), so far as the cause of delay in the building of the road is concerned, is entirely incorrect. There was no agitation at Little Bras D'Or or Sydney Mines until about a year before the date when the leader of the Opposition ran an election there.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Was there not an agitation there before that in favour of building the road around Little Bras D'Or and Sydney Mines?

Mr. McDUGALL. Not until about a year or two before the leader of the Opposition, in 1896, visited that county to run his election.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid I must have misunderstood the member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan), and I am afraid he has done a great injustice if he considers the late Government failed to avail themselves of the opportunity to carry into effect this proposition. I desire to refer to the election of 1896. I then had this matter brought before me. I found a strong feeling prevailing on the part of a large body of gentlemen all over Cape Breton in favour of this undertaking. I took the matter up; I obtained the best information I could on the spot; I referred the subject to the officers of the Railway Department, and I obtained a report and an estimate. But my hon. friend will remember that, in the session of 1896, the Government, owing to the obstruction offered by the Liberal party, were unable to obtain Estimates for any purpose, and therefore this appropriation could not be made. Having obtained for this project the approval of the department, and ascertained that it would be valuable in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway, I have no hesitation in saying that, if I had not been defeated at the general election, this work would now have been carried out, in conformity with the plans of the department, and in accordance with the opinion of the manager of the Intercolonial Railway, who considered it would be a very valuable means of contributing to the receipts of the road. So it cannot be said that I lost any opportunity, or that I am chargeable in any way with neglect; and now that I have been deprived of the opportunity of carrying this work to completion, I draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to it, and I express the opinion, that on investigation he will find that its completion would be of the greatest advantage to the Intercolonial, and I hope he will carry the undertaking to completion.

Mr. McDUGALL. The hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) would have the House understand that this question was up during several elections before the last general elections. It was not considered by the people at a general election before the last elections.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). No; I said a year ago—and I hold to that declaration.

Mr. McDUGALL. I contend that my hon. friend is entirely mistaken. The elections to which I refer, were the elections of 1891, the general elections previous to the last. There was not a syllable uttered with respect to the proposed change in the road until years after the election of 1891. It was about a year or more before when the leader of the Opposition ran in Cape Breton—that was in 1896—when it was proposed to make this change in the road, to meet the wishes of the people of Little Bras D'Or and Sydney Mines. This matter was not discussed by any party at an election before the elections of 1896.

Mr. QUINN. Is an amount of $220, due A. A. Murphy, included in the vote of $48,500 for increased accommodation at Lévis?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid not.

Mr. QUINN. I should like to draw attention to that claim. It has been before the hon. Minister already. Mr. Murphy was employed in connection with certain work, and sent in a bill for $370, on which he received on account something like $120. He was engaged in obtaining bonds from different parties to be used for the extension at Lévis—this was in the spring of 1896—and promises of sale from the proprietors of lots at Lévis. He remained there for thirty-seven days, sent in his bill, and he has not been able to obtain payment since, although his bill was approved of by the then Minister of Railways. At the request of the present Minister of Railways, Mr. Murphy had the late Minister of Railways certify to the bill, and it was forwarded in connection with an affidavit, but still payment was refused. He then made request for permission to sue, but that was refused on the ground that the sum involved was too small. Although $220 may be a small amount to a Minister of the Crown, under some circumstances it may be of great importance to another man, and the fact that it is a small amount should not prevent a suppliant getting justice about it. The Minister is, no doubt, very busy, but I wish to get from him the assurance that he will give this matter his attention. Mr. Murphy cannot afford to remain out of his money for any length of time, and I trust that the Minister will see that Mr. Murphy is paid or give him the right to take his action before the court.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My attention has been called to this matter, and if my memory serves me right it arose in this way. Mr. Murphy being without employment, he was anxious to find something to do, and he prevailed upon the late Minister of Railways to give him a commission to proceed to Lévis and ascertain about what this property would probably cost. His services were not of a specially skilful character, the object being that he should inquire from the neighbours as to about the value of land in that locality. He was afforded the chance of earning a trifle in the then needy circumstances in which he was placed. That is my information upon the subject. Mr. Murphy rendered an account for $20 a day, but the Deputy Minister thought that $10 a day, with some little allowance for travelling expenses, was a fair and adequate remuneration. The Deputy Minister did not feel that he could certify for any larger sum than $10 a day, and that was paid to Mr. Murphy. I do not feel that, under the circumstances which were detailed to me, I would be justified in authorizing the payment of the other $10 a day. I do not think that a petition of right should be granted in such a case, unless in the judgment of those who are charged with the responsibility there is a fair case, and a reasonable doubt exists. The amount is trifling although perhaps not so to Mr. Murphy, but I do not think that any one who exercises a fair judgment on the question will say that the amount awarded to Mr. Murphy was not a fair compensation for the services he rendered. I have no feeling at all in the matter.

Mr. QUINN. I am informed by the late Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that the practice almost uniformly has been to grant these petitions of right when asked for. I am prepared on behalf of Mr. Murphy to accept the statement of the Minister that the Government will allow him at the rate of $10 per day, because my information is that that is all Mr. Murphy has ever asked for. I would like to have further emphatic assurance from the Minister, so that I can write to Mr. Murphy and tell him that he will be paid at the rate of $10 per day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Murphy has already been paid at the rate of $10 per day. Perhaps I should have said that Mr. Murphy claims he was entitled to be paid for a larger number of days, and the real dispute between the department and Mr. Murphy may rest there. The department knows that Mr. Murphy did not give more than seventeen days to this particular service, and he was allowed $10 a day and some other expenses in addition to that.

Mr. QUINN. I am afraid there is some misunderstanding about that. If there be any difference of opinion as to the number of days spent by Mr. Murphy there, then it makes it all the more a case in which permission should be granted him to take out his action. If he should fail in proving the number of days the cost, of course, would be against him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was not doing any real service. He was sent there just to have a chance of earning a little something at that time; not that there was any work to do. He went down to Lévis and lolled around there for thirty-five days, and then came up and rendered a bill for the amount. That is what the department says.

Mr. QUINN. I am informed that he was asked to get bonds and promises of sale from the proprietors of the property at Lévis required by the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand that he suggested to the department that he could find something to do if they would commission him. When they said they had nothing for him he suggested that he should go to Lévis and look the ground over and give a report. I believe the department got the report, but nobody would say he was not well paid for the services he rendered. That is my view, and I desire to be as liberal with Mr. Murphy as possible.

Mr. McDUGALL. Where is the work on which this $2,000 is to be expended for original construction?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is not a new item. There are some small sums left over from year to year which we require to meet. Sometimes the sum we require to pay is less than this, but the usual course is to put in $2,000 for that purpose. During the year ending the 30th June, 1896, $1,948 was paid for that service. These claims are coming up year by year, and I do not know that we can say when they will cease to come up.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend could hardly have heard the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) bring a grave charge against me of having opened the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway, which he said had been closed by my predecessor (Mr. Mackenzie). I think the hon. gentleman is wrong in both particulars; but if I did wrong in opening the capital account, I would like to know how he would justify the present Minister of Railways and Canals in a charge on capital account for the coming year of $350,000. I have no doubt he will arrive at the conclusion that it is quite right for the present Minister of Railways and Canals to do it, and it was very wrong for me to do anything of the same kind. But, I want to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals whether he thinks he is going to improve the resources of and the returns on the Intercolonial Railway by such a course of procedure as is adopted towards one who was for a great many years the inspector of buildings on the railway. A gentleman was employed for a great many years as the inspector of buildings at a salary of $1,300 a year, and his services were considered by the department so valuable that, without any application on the part of anybody, I believe, the officials of the department proposed to increase his salary to $1,500. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has seen fit to dispense with the services of that official and to employ a gentleman, Mr. Killam, who I believe was one of his supporters in the legislature of New Brunswick, to discharge a portion of those duties, at a salary of $1,800 a year; and he has employed another gentleman, Mr. McGrath, to perform the same services at $1,200, and a third man at $75 a month as an additional inspector for a part of the year. So that, instead of $1,300 a year, which has been paid for many years, or $1,500 to which it was proposed to increase the salary of a very efficient officer, we have these three persons employed to do the same work at a greatly increased cost, along with the travelling expenses of three officials instead of one. I draw my hon. friend's attention to that as not indicating a desire to economize or to effect such reductions on the Inter-colonial Railway, as will be likely to balance the accounts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Whatever may be the sources of information which have enabled the non-gentleman to make this statement, I can assure him that he has been misled. There has been no authorized arrangement by which the expenses connected with the inspection of buildings, the inspection of lumber and the inspection of masonry have been increased. On the contrary, my purpose and intention is to reduce the cost of these services.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What office does Mr. Killam hold?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He has been appointed inspector of bridges and buildings at a salary of $1,800, which duties were being performed by two gentlemen who, if my memory serves me, were in receipt of salaries amounting to $2,200.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Who was the inspector of bridges before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think a person of the name of Sifton; I am not sure, but I will ascertain. If the hon. gentleman will take occasion to refer to this matter when the Estimates are up later, I shall be very glad.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will do so, and I would be glad if the hon. gentleman would furnish me with information on that point. I would like also to take the opportunity of calling the attention of the hon. gentleman to a reply which he gave to a question which the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Gillies) had put on the notice paper, and which in his absence I asked, though I knew nothing of the matter. It was with reference to the cause of the dismissal of Mr. Findlay Macdonald from the position of stationmaster at Point Tupper, in the county of Richmond. The answer which the Minister of Railways and Canals gave as to the cause of his dismissal was:

Because it was not in the interest of the road to have this man studying law in Halifax while drawing a salary as agent at Point Tupper.

The attention of Mr. Macdonald had been called to that statement, and he declares that it is not true. Therefore, I feel bound, in justice to him, to give the statement he makes to me. He says:

It is not true. I did not draw one cent of salary for the time I was off duty.

Mr. GILLIES. While this matter is up, I would like to say one word in connection with it. I feel sure that the Minister of Railways and Canals must have been under a wrong impression when he dealt with Mr. Macdonald in the summary manner he did. I think that when I bring the facts to his notice, the hon. Minister of Railways will do Mr. Macdonald the justice of reinstating him. What are the facts? In September, 1896, Mr. Macdonald applied to the general manager, Mr. Pottinger, at Moncton, for six months' leave of absence to go to Halifax. The general manager wrote to him that he could not give him the six months' leave of absence, but would give him three months. Mr. Macdonald availed himself of that permission and went to Halifax, and there entered upon the study of law. On the 12th of December, he received the following letter from the district superintendent, F. D. Laurie:

New Glasgow, December 12, 1896.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly let me know what are your intentions about resuming duty? Or do you wish your leave extended? If you do, I think it might be arranged. An early reply will oblige.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. D. LAURIE.

To this letter Mr. Macdonald replied as follows:—

Halifax, December 13, 1896.

F. D. Laurie, Esq., New Glasgow.

Dear Sir,—Your favour received. I will go to work on the 19th (December), as I advised you. Many thanks for your kind offer to extend my leave.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. MACDONALD.

Then he received a reply from Mr. Laurie which read as follows:—

New Glasgow, December 14, 1896.

F. Macdonald, Halifax.

Dear Sir,—Yours received. I inclose pass to Point Tupper. It will be O.K. for you to resume duty when you say. Do you wish to get off later on? If so, when and for how long?

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. D. LAURIE.

Mr. Macdonald returned to Point Tupper at the time specified, and resumed his duties where he left them off to attend the law school at Halifax during the holidays. About the 1st of January, as he wanted six weeks more to complete his term at the law school, he wrote to Mr. Laurie the following letter:—

Point Tupper, January 2, 1897.

F. D. Laurie, Esq., New Glasgow.

Dear Sir,—I should like to get off on the 9th instant for six weeks, if it could be arranged.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. MACDONALD.

He received the following letter in reply:—

New Glasgow, January 2, 1897.

F. Macdonald, Point Tupper.

Dear Sir,—Your letter of the 2nd. I will arrange as you ask about getting off. This arrangement is, of course, subject to the approval of the department.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) F. D. LAURIE.

Now, these facts, I presume, were not within the cognizance of the Minister of Railways when he had Mr. Macdonald dismissed, later on. Mr. Macdonald went to Halifax in consequence of these promises from Mr. Laurie. Of course, Mr. Macdonald had not any correspondence with the Minister; he would not have dared to enter into correspondence with him; but he had the sanction and promise of his superior officer, Mr. Laurie, who told him he could leave and that he would arrange about it. Relying upon Mr. Laurie's promise, Mr. Macdonald went to Halifax and put in the six weeks allowed him; but, to his great surprise, he received on the 19th of February, notice of dismissal. This he could not account for in any way, inasmuch as he held in his pocket the letters I have read, from his superior officer, giving him leave of absence. Inasmuch as Mr. Macdonald is a capital officer and an able man in every respect, I hope that the presentation I have made of his case will induce the hon. Minister to reconsider it and do him justice. Not a cent of salary was paid to Mr. Macdonald during his absence, and the hon. Minister was entirely under a misapprehension when he said, in reply to a question of mine that the department feel that its interests were being subserved by having Mr. Macdonald studying law in Halifax when in receipt of a salary. I presume the hon. gentleman made that statement from a misapprehension of the facts. Not a dollar was paid to Mr. Macdonald during his absence. He was absent by permission of his superior officer, he returned at his request, and was dismissed for reasons unknown to him, and I think the hon. Minister must have acted without a due appreciation of the facts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I desire to say that the facts as they have been stated by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, were presented to me by him a few days ago. They made a very strong impression upon my mind, and I am free to confess that I feel like having the matter looked into as soon as I possibly can get time—probably very shortly after the close of the session. I did feel, when it came to my knowledge, and it was pressed upon me very strongly, that here was an official of the railway studying law in Halifax, and it seemed rather inconsistent with the idea of his retaining service in the railway it looked as if he were simply using the railway as a means of getting into the profession and leaving the service as soon as he was in a position to take up the practice of law. However, I was not aware at the time of the facts the hon. gentleman has brought out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Was the hon. gentleman aware he was not getting any pay?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume that instead of receiving pay himself the pay was given to somebody whom he substituted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to hear the hon. Minister proposes to reconsider that matter. I shall have to call the attention of the Minister to the case of Mr. Arthur Mitchell, a very respectable man, formerly in the Royal Artillery, who was appointed many years ago inspector at Con's Mills in the county of Cumberland. This is a flag station which was taken care of by this man and his wife. He says:

About ten years ago, I was employed with James Dickie, chief divisional engineer at Wallace, on the Intercolonial Railway in Nova Scotia, when this short line was under construction. So, sir, you may remember me. I was in that place for three years. At the end of that time, I asked for the simple position of sectionman, and it was given me. When the section was laid off and this was a flag-station, I was given the station to live in, being a married man with a family, and employment as sectionman, our foreman living in Oxford, as I have been here now these seven years.

This poor man, who has been very faithful, I believe, in the performance of his duties, informs me that he has been superseded and thrown out of the employment that he had so long enjoyed, and he has written me to bring the matter to the notice of the Minister, which I have now done.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not see in this item any appropriation for the running of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. I would ask the Minister if it is the intention of the Government to continue to run that railway. I understand that trains have been stopped for some time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The item in connection with the Baie des Chaleurs does not appear in these estimates because these are estimates for the coming year. There will be an item in the Supplementaries.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I see that there is an item in the Supplementaries for the expense of maintaining and running the road this year until the 30th instant.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman desires, when we reach that item, I will be glad to give him the information he asks.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I see an item here.

To pay for land damages, Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton Divisions..... $2,000
I would like to know where those claims are. What county do they concern?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This item, the hon. gentleman will perceive, is a re-vote. Nothing was paid out of the item last year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I thought that this indicated that there were some other claims.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I see here a re-vote of $48,500 for increased accommodation at Lévis. Does the hon. gentleman think that with the policy of the Government of extending the railway to Montreal, this expenditure will be necessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am going to make a personal examination into the very question which the hon. gentleman has asked. I think it not unlikely that we may require some increased accommodation there, not necessarily in the direction of a new building, but in the direction of more ground.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What are the "rest-houses at 9 engine stations" for which $4,500 is proposed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These are houses which it is proposed to erect for the purpose of enabling the engine men to find some sort of comfortable quarters.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a new item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, so far as the Intercolonial Railway is concerned, though it is an old item of railway charge. These rest-houses are provided by other railways, that is by the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway. This is an item that I think, perhaps, we might, with some advantage, have provided long since.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. Minister say whether it is the intention to increase the pay of the Intercolonial trackmen and shopmen?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say that that is my intention.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman asking for any provision to enable him to do that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am asking no provision for that purpose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A very strong appeal was made to the late Government for an increase of the pay of the trackmen, and, upon investigation, I think, it was learned, in fact, I believe, they admitted that their pay was the same as that on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Grand Trunk, and under these circumstances, we did not feel able to increase it. But is the hon. Minister aware whether there has been an increase of the pay of the trackmen on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk? I saw some statement to that effect some time ago, and did not know but that the claim for increased payment was strengthened by a change having occurred in these other lines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware that there has been any increase on these other lines, in fact, my impression is that there has been none. I understand that the rate of wages paid on the Intercolonial is fully up to the rate paid upon other roads.

Mr. BELL. Some time ago I brought to the attention of the hon. Minister, through a question on the order paper, the subject of the inspection of fuel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is, of coal?

Mr. BELL. Yes. There was an officer, Mr. William Moore, who was fuel inspector, and, from the papers submitted to me, he seemed to have done good service for the road, because it would appear from the papers that many cases were referred to him for investigation where coal was said to be of inferior quality or deficient in weight. Now, in many cases, according to the correspondence I have looked into, these deficiencies both in quality and quantity were quite serious, and the railway made large reductions from the claims of the coal companies for fuel supplied. I understood the Minister to say that this officer's services were dispensed with on the ground that they were not sufficiently valuable to justify his retention. Since that time it has come to my knowledge that an officer is, or was recently discharging that duty in Montreal, and that this officer had found that the coal supply there, which I think, came from Cape Breton, was not of the kind that should be supplied—it contained too large a percentage of small coal. Apparently it would be impossible for the railway to do without the services of such an officer because, I understand, that the bill for coal is a very large one, and the salary paid the inspector would be but a small matter in comparison with the loss that would result if it became a general thing for the coal companies to supply coal of short weight or of inferior grade to that contracted for. I would like to ask if any officer has been appointed to fill this position.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been no person appointed for such purpose—that is, not a permanent appointment. In consultation with the general manager he gave me to understand that there was really no permanent employment to justify our retaining an officer of that kind at the considerable salary that we were paying him. There are no doubt occasions when it becomes necessary to employ somebody to look after the shipments which we are receiving, but a very small trifle will cover all the expense which is involved in such employment. Mr. Moore, I think, was the name of the former inspector, he was appointed five or six years ago. I think there had been no permanent inspector in the service prior to that date. It was frankly conceded to me by the general manager that the object was not so much the inspection of the coal as it was to find some place in which to put Mr. Moore, and the office of coal inspector was created for that purpose. I have no fault to find with that, because I suppose that sort of thing will occur occasionally with all Governments. But I could not justify myself in continuing Mr. Moore as inspector when I was under no special obligation to do so, and when the service did not appear to call for it. Therefore, I intimated to Mr. Moore that we would not continue him in that capacity longer. There has been no person appointed since. I have no doubt that the other day when we were receiving some coal at Halifax, we sent somebody to look the coal over as it was being received. I think the person so engaged was required a couple of days, and the amount he would get for it would not be very much.

Mr. BELL. From the correspondence of the officers of the department, I think the engineer had informed him that his services were dispensed with for some reason that I did not understand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The general manager will be able to give him full information on that subject. It was entirely for the reasons stated.

Mr. BELL. The impression the correspondence gave to my mind was that there was no adequate reason to their knowledge for his dismissal. I understand that the chief engineer—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had no communication with the chief engineer on the subject; my communications would be altogether with the general manager.

Mr. BELL. Some years ago, in the course of the evidence before the Civil Service Commission, the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways testified to the effect that it was very necessary to have this particular work discharged, and that a large saving to the department could be effected by having a competent officer to inspect the fuel. Mr. Moore submitted to me facts that seemed to indicate that sometimes these cars were deficient to a very serious extent, tons in some cases. The larger cars which would hold nineteen or twenty tons each showed sometimes a deficiency of three or four tons. In one case in which he investigated the quality of the coal from a certain colliery the department deducted 60 per cent from the bills of that company. He furthermore maintained that through his work he has ascertained which is the better coal for the engines to use, which is the more economical coal for steaming.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that can be so, because the engine-drivers furnish a report of the amount of coal which they use, and the mileage they make, so that we have the information constantly before us.

Mr. BELL. I observed in the correspondence that there were several complaints of engine-drivers about the quality of the coal that had been passed by the inspector.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The general manager thinks that we have plenty of people in the service who are very competent, and who, if occasion arises, may give all the necessary attention to the inspection of the coal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the Minister say whether he did not contemplate, not long ago, in April, for instance, the appointment of an officer in the position Mr. Moore held, a Mr. Connolly, of New Glasgow?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I contemplated no such appointment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was that not discussed with the Minister?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Many things may have been discussed, but there is a manifest distinction between things being discussed with me and my contemplating action.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister did not propose himself, I am informed, to appoint Mr. Connolly to this position from which Mr. Moore had been removed. Is that information correct?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Propose to whom? I made no suggestion of that kind, and I had no intention of doing so. I may say that when it was understood that there would be a change of that kind, I was not asked to appoint Mr. Connolly alone, but various other persons. I find that as soon as there is any likelihood of a vacancy, it is suggested to me that there are persons who are willing to take the office that becomes vacant.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Every one knows that. My point, however, is answered if the hon. gentleman tells me that he did not contemplate appointing Mr. Connolly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Contemplate making a new appointment at the time that this gentleman was dismissed?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Or subsequently. I do not wish to cross-examine the Minister. That information of mine, then, was erroneous, and it was not proposed to appoint Connolly?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is entirely correct.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Am I to understand the Minister to say that he acted upon the report or advice of the general manager to the effect that the office of Mr. Moore was not required?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I had a conversation with the general manager on the subject before his dismissal. I conferred with him as to the necessity of retaining the officer. He informed me of the circumstances under which the appointment was made; if my memory serves me, I think it was less than seven years ago, but I know the period seemed to be very recent within which we were having this inspector of coal as a permanent officer in the service; and I came to the conclusion, after consultation with the general manager, that we might just as well dispense with the services of the inspector.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No written report, I suppose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not. I had a verbal conversation with him.

Mr. BELL. I understand there is no fuel department on the Intercolonial, but that the coal comes into the store-keeper. That being the case, it seems to me that without some special officer it would be difficult or impossible to have a regular inspection of coal or to have the coal weighed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we must adjourn at that point.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What business will be proceeded with to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think the business of the Railway Committee will require my attention to-morrow, as nothing of general interest will come before it. We can, therefore, proceed with the Estimates to-morrow morning.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I shall have to be present at the Railway Committee, but the Estimates may be proceeded with. I should like to ask the Minister of Railways when he proposes to make a statement in regard to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already tabled the resolutions.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 11th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

GOODWIN VS. THE QUEEN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. Has the attention of the Government been called to an article in the Toronto "Globe," of June 22nd, 1896, wherein the following statements appear:—

"Just as was anticipated, the Goodwin case has been hurried to a conclusion and judgment given against the country. * * * Why this breathless haste on the part of the Government? A few days ago the "Globe" protested against the presentation to the courts of the case by this Government. Instead of their interests being identical with those of the public, it is not hard to see that they are totally opposed. A verdict against the contractor would have convicted Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper and Mr. Haggart of extreme carelessness, to use the mildest phrase that could be used, of the public funds. Every instinct of self-preservation, therefore, would lead them to desire that the public should lose the law-suit.

"When it was determined to push the case through post-haste, we urged that at least eminent counsel should be employed, counsel in whom the public would have confidence, who would be trusted to make the best case possible on behalf of the public. The names of Messrs. Christopher Robinson, S. H. Blake and Mr. B. B. Osler were mentioned in this connection. As a fact Mr. J. A. Macdonell, who had just assisted Sir Charles in his attempt to disavow the authorship of the famous confidence-in-the-breed letter, was employed. Mr. Goodwin appears to have had more confidence in our judgment and he secured Mr. Osler. * * * We think we speak the public mind when we say that no final action should be taken in this case until Parliament meets, and that the whole subject must have thorough consideration by the representatives of the people."

2. Who was employed by the Government to protect the interests of the Crown in the Exchequer Court case of Goodwin vs. the Queen, arising out of the contract of Mr. George Goodwin for certain sections of the Soulanges Canal.

3. What counsel was retained and employed by the professional gentleman thus entrusted with the case for the Government?

4. Who is now employed as solicitor in the case by the Government ?

5. Have the present law officers of the Crown who are now seized of all the facts of the case, any reason to complain of the manner in which the case was handled by the gentlemen first appointed ? Did he in any manner omit anything which should have been done in the interests of the Crown, or was anything done of which the present law officers of the Crown or the Department of Justice disapprove ?

6. Are the present law officers of the Crown aware that it was charged in the "Globe" and other newspapers that Mr. Macdonell had been selected with a view to the interests of the Crown being sacrificed ?

7. Do they consider that there was any shadow of justification in Mr. Macdonell's management of the case for so gross an accusation against a professional man charged with the conduct of important Crown business ?

8. Has any change been made in the counsel first retained and employed by Mr. Macdonell ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). In reply to the first question of my hon. friend, I beg to say, yes. In reply to the second, Mr. Macdonell. In reply to the third, Mr. Ritchie, of Toronto. In reply to the fourth, Mr. Chrysler. To the fifth, the gentleman who originally acted with Mr. Macdonell for the Crown handled the case in every respect so as to give satisfaction to the Crown. To the fifth, no. To the sixth, there was no justification for any charge that Mr. Macdonell did not act as a professional man should have acted. To the sixth, the counsel first retained by Mr. Macdonell still acts for the Crown and the success of the case in the last instance depended entirely on the manner in which it was conducted originally before the court.

MONTREAL "GAZETTE" AND "STAR."

Mr. DAVIS asked :

Is the Government aware that from the 14th to 30th of December, 1895, 6,386 pounds of a special edition of the Montreal "Gazette" marked copies were passed through the mails from the Montreal post office, free of charge ?

That from the 27th to the 30th of January, 1896, 770 pounds of Montreal "Gazette" Almanacs were passed through the mails from the Montreal post office, free of charge ?

That from the 21st of December, 1895, to the 8th of January, 1896, 3,230 pounds of "Star" Almanacs were passed through the mails from the Montreal post office, free of charge ?

Have complaints been made of irregularities in the post office at Montreal ? If so, do the Government intend to hold an investigation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Information has been given to the department to the effect that certain newspapers were transmitted through the mail free at Montreal being, I think, those mentioned in the question. With regard to the latter part of the question, certain complaints of the nature mentioned have been made, and when the session is over they will be looked into and, if necessary, an investigation will be held.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 128) relating to the Canada Investment and Agency Company, limited (from the Senate).—(Mr. Davin.)

MANITOBA SCHOOL FUND.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) that the House, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from the moneys invested under the provisions of subsection 3 of section twenty-five of chapter fifty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, forming the School Fund for the province of Manitoba, pay over from time to time to the Government of Manitoba, on the request of the said Government, such sum or sums as the said Governor in Council thinks proper, not exceeding one hundred thousand dollars in any one year, and not exceeding in the whole the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, the sum or sums so paid over to be expended by the said Government of Manitoba in the support and maintenance of public schools in that province.

Motion agreed to.

COLD STORAGE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved that the House, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

1. That it is expedient to ratify certain agreements between the Government and certain companies, entered into under the authority of an Order in Council, dated the 4th of May, 1897 (copies of which Order in Council and agreements have been laid before Parliament), for providing cold storage on steamships from Montreal to the United Kingdom during the season of 1897, 1898 and 1899, as follows:—

With Messrs. H. & A. Allan and Messrs. David Torrance & Co., for two steamships each, and a regular and if possible, weekly service to Liverpool; with Messrs. H. & A. Allan and Messrs. William Thomson & Sons, for three steamships each, and a weekly service to London; with Messrs. H. & A. Allan and Messrs. R. Reford & Co., for one steamship each, and a fortnightly service to Glasgow; with Messrs. Eider, Dempster & Co., for five steamships, and a weekly service to Avonmouth;

Each steamship to have cold storage capacity of about 10,000 cubic feet (to Avonmouth, about 20,000 cubic feet), the cost of the refrigeration plant and insulation being estimated at $10,000 per steamship (to Avonmouth, at $12,325), one-half of which is to be paid by the Government in three equal annual instalments.

2. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into contracts with any person or company, for providing cold storage accommodation at Toronto, Quebec, Halifax, St. John and Charlottetown, the Government guaranteeing a dividend of 5 per cent annually for three years on a sum not exceeding $40,000, on the cost of the cold storage premises and refrigerating plant, at Quebec, at Halifax, and at St. John; on a sum not exceeding $50,000 at Toronto, and on a sum not exceeding $20,000 at Charlotte-town.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Railways and Canals, chargeable to Capital—Prince Edward Island Railway:—
Cost of survey of proposed bridge over the Hillsborough and railway route towards Murray Harbour, $7,500; increased accommodation and switch at Mount Stewart, $1,500; to shorten the main line by the removal of certain curves therein, $10,000..... $19,000

Mr. MARTIN. Before this is passed, I wish to say a few words. Though a sum is proposed for the survey of the proposed bridge over Hillsborough, and of the railway route from Belfast to Murray Harbour, it is very unsatisfactory to the province, that a longer step has not been made. We were given to understand, during the campaign of 1886, that when the Liberals came into power, long-delayed justice in this respect was to be done to Prince Edward Island. I think this is a very short step, a very feeble step in that direction, when we consider the promises that were made. It had been charged against the late Government that they went slow in this matter. I believe they did go slow in this matter. But when we consider that after what was said during the campaign by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Davies), I presume on behalf of the Liberal party, we had the right to expect that some active steps would be taken to carry out this project and supplement the promise made with more than we fixed in the Estimates before us. We found the Premier of the province asserting on every platform, as did the Minister of Marine also, that long-delayed justice would at last be done to Prince Edward Island. And it has come down to this—that while we are voting millions for railways throughout the Dominion, only $7,500 is proposed for the work of extension in Prince Edward Island. Slow as the Conservative party went, still we had the late Government committed this far—that when the general question of railway extension came up, the claims of Prince Edward Island would be considered. But to-day, we are not on as good a footing as we were then. The late Government went further. They introduced a resolution providing for the construction of the Belfast and Murray Harbour Railway as well as for the construction of other branch railways in the province. That conclusion was arrived at by the late Government, after receiving petitions and memorials from the people—and a resolution passed by the legislature of

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Prince Edward Island, a legislature, a large majority of whose members were Liberals. One session of this Parliament has passed, and the second session is nearly at its close, but all that has been done is to propose a small item for a survey. I find by a return which was placed on the Table of the House yesterday, that, since the year 1873, when Prince Edward Island entered confederation, the sum of $106,026,567.66 has been expended by the Dominion for railway construction. How much do you suppose, out of these many millions, has been given to Prince Edward Island? Only the small sum of $635,830. And a great deal of that money, under legislation introduced in this House in 1883, was paid to relieve the local governments of the expense of building railways in their several provinces. Prince Edward Island, as a matter of fact, has not received one dollar of that expenditure, made since 1883; the expenditure in Prince Edward Island referred to having been made previous to the year 1883. Now, according to that return, showing an expenditure of $106,026,567.66, Prince Edward Island's share would be over $2,600,000, nearly the sum which I said some time ago was due Prince Edward Island. So this return after all bears out the statements I made to the House in regard to the claims of that province. I do not know what value is to be attached to some of these returns. This may be a very good one; but I have been looking over the returns laid upon the Table of the House in regard to this matter, and I find a great discrepancy among them indeed. I do not know how the compiler of these returns arrived at these figures of $635,830 expended in Prince Edward Island. I hold in my hand a return brought down showing the railway expenditure in the Dominion previous to 1882, and I find therein that Prince Edward Island had only received $247,000. But will any member of this House say that any expenditure on railways in Prince Edward Island has been made since that year? There has been none. How they jumped from $247,000 to the sum mentioned in this return, I fail to see. I find out also in regard to this return that it is unsatisfactory in another respect. How is this amount of $106,026,567, stated to be the Dominion railway expenditure since 1873, arrived at? We do not know, it may be guess work. We have no basis to show in this return how that item was arrived at. We have only a bald statement that this sum is expended, without giving any details whatever. I asked for a statement showing the railway expenditure; and this is only what I receive. But besides that, we find I asked for the number of acres of land, but the return I hold does not give that. While one statement puts the claims of Prince Edward Island on good footing, I do not think this statement went far enough. But I wish to say this, and I do not care who I am going to hit in saying it. I find in a return a statement to which I wish to call the attention of the House, because I believe the returns have misled the House. In 1895 the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries asked for a return similar to this one, which was brought down in 1896; and we find in that return that Prince Edward Island, up to 1896, had received $3,750,000 for railway expenditure. Now, I question the accuracy of that statement. How is it that the return of 1896 says that Prince Edward Island received $3,750,000 and the return that is now laid before the House says Prince Edward Island only received $637,000? The return asked for in 1891 says Prince Edward Island had only received $247,000. I lay these facts before you, Mr. Chairman, and before this committee, to show how little reliance can be placed on these returns. Why did not the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries call attention to this mistake in April, 1896? The statement misled the House. Now, I call the attention of the committee to the course of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the representative of Queen's County (P.E.I.) When that return of 1896 was laid on the Table of this House, containing those gross mistakes and inaccuracies, that hon. gentleman, as representing a county of Prince Edward Island, should have at least called attention to these inaccuracies, in order that hon. members of this House should not be misled by such returns. Now, I see by the correspondence which has been brought down in the other Chamber, that there is a proposition on foot to submit the claims of Prince Edward Island to arbitration. Now, while I am not at all afraid of having the railway claims of Prince Edward Island submitted to arbitration, considering the stand that has been taken in Prince Edward Island by the present Minister of Marine, I think the claims of that province are beyond dispute, that there is no necessity of submitting them to arbitration, and that arbitration means delay. While we see millions of money being spent for the Intercolonial Railway, and other proposed millions for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and other schemes, Prince Edward Island has to stand aside, and we must be satisfied to submit to an arbitration. They say that seven millions are now to be expended on the Intercolonial Railway. Sir, should not the Government of this country be just before they are generous? Have the terms made with Prince Edward Island when she came into the confederation, been fulfilled? Has Prince Edward Island ever been connected with the Intercolonial Railway or with the railway system of the Dominion, as was promised when she entered confederation? Is there not a missing link between Prince Edward Island and the mainland which the Parliament of Canada has never yet attempted to supply? The terms said there was to be continuous communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and that the province was to be connected with the Intercolonial Railway and with the railway system of the Dominion. Before the Dominion Government spends seven millions of money to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, the first thing they should do is to attempt to carry out the terms of confederation with Prince Edward Island. What is that missing link of which I speak? There are nine or ten miles of water between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. What has been done to improve that communication since Prince Edward Island came into confederation? That Island remains nearly in the same circumstances to-day as she did 25 years ago. When I came to this Parliament last March and had to cross this small gap, had to be strapped to a boat, had to carry Her Majesty's mail in a boat, and I had to put my hand in my pocket and pay my two or three dollars for the privilege. That is the state of affairs that exists in Prince Edward Island. Sir, I say that in no part of the civilized world is there such defective communication as exists between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. And here we find this Government going to establish two or three competing lines over the same section of country between Quebec and Montreal. I see no necessity for it, certainly there is no commercial necessity for it, but I believe there is a political necessity that forces the Government to go into that scheme. Now, I am going to refer to this proposal made by the Premier of Prince Edward Island, a copy of which I hold in my hand, to refer the claims of Prince Edward Island, and among them the railway claim, to arbitration. The proposal made by the Premier is to refer the question of communication with Prince Edward and the mainland, and railway, as well as other claims, to arbitration. I see no objection to this, so far as the question of damages on account of the non-fulfilment of the terms of union with Prince Edward Island with respect to continuous communication with the mainland is concerned, but I object to the claims of the island in regard to railway construction being referred to arbitration. The Conservative party has already admitted the claims of Prince Edward Island in regard to railway construction, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) has committed the Liberal Government and party to the construction of these railways. Both parties being committed, I submit that justice will not be done if these claims are referred to arbitration, as it will necessitate delay. In regard to the item of $7,500, I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not be so weak-kneed as to allow millions of money to be expended on the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal and more millions on the Crow's Nest Pass Road, and admit for one moment that the little province has no right to be considered. I am afraid that the members of the Cabinet are too strong for him, and that this fact explains the item of $7,500, while millions are being voted for railway construction in different parts of the Dominion. The Minister of Trade and Commerce asked me the other day if Prince Edward Island would be willing to take back its railway. I ask the Minister, does he believe that Ontario would be willing to take back the canals? The original cost was $66,000,000. The interest is $2,500,000 a year. What are the total receipts from the canals? While in 1868 only $20,000,000 had been expended, the tolls were $400,000, and yet to-day, after an expenditure has been made of $66,000,000, the tolls are only $330,000 a year. While the expenditure has increased three-fold, the tolls have actually decreased. Will the Minister of Trade and Commerce agree to pay that interest and accept the tolls? No less than $55,000,000 has been expended on the Intercolonial Railway, which, at 4 per cent, means a payment of $2,250,000 yearly for interest. This interest has to be met every year, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite are making further expenditures of millions on this road. Are they not supposed to be just before they are generous, and yet political exigencies compel them, even against their better instincts, to make these expenditures, while at the same time they make no effort whatever to carry out the compact with Prince Edward Island. I am sorry there is not a large vote in the Supplementary Estimates to carry out the promises made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in 1896. It was then stated that if a Liberal Government came into power justice would be done to the Island. Instead of going forward we have been going backward. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries allows the Government to make expenditures in other directions, permits himself to be pushed on one side and is granted an item of $7,500, while millions are proposed to be expended on the Intercolonial Railway extension and the Crow's Nest Pass Road.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Until the hon. gentleman spoke, I was not aware that I had been so naughty, as the hon. gentleman suggests. There are some men in this world who have the unhappy faculty of introducing a question near and dear to them always at the wrong moment. The hon. member has a good case as regards Prince Edward Island. In my judgment there is a good case, if presented at the proper time, under suitable circumstances and with effective arguments. What, however, has been the result of the hon. gentleman's action? The members of the House have laughed.

Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. MARTIN. I only alluded to the claims of the east as against those of the west.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When the hon. gentleman introduces a serious question in an irrelevant manner, at a time when the House is obviously not ready to consider it, he is doing a great deal to prejudice the case of the little island. I am trying to do my best in this matter. The proposal is that a sum of $7,000 or $8,000 be granted to the Minister of Railways for the purpose of constructing a bridge across Hillsboro' River, or rather for surveying a site for the bridge and the railway. That is a necessary initial step before entering upon the work. Does the hon. gentleman want that money not voted? Does he want to proceed with the work before a survey is made? This is the businesslike way of proceeding. I am determined that this matter shall no longer be made a political football. We will have a survey made, and it will be my duty to press on my colleagues the necessity of having the work carried out. The other vote is for the purpose of straightening the curves of the Island Railway, so that life and limb may be safer than in the past. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) knows that this road was built as a surface road in 1872 and 1873, and that the contractors were paid so much a mile, and it was their interest to lengthen the road as much as possible. They ran around every little hillock they could find in order to get more mileage. The proposal before the House is, that a certain sum of money be granted, not to straighten the road altogether, because that cannot be done, but to take out the two dangerous parts which have actually in the past frightened people to pass over them. The proposal is to survey for the bridge and a portion of the railway, and to somewhat straighten these curves out. The hon. gentleman, in connection with this vote, drags in the claims of Prince Edward Island for better terms, and seems to make it a laughing stock before the House. The question of the claims of Prince Edward Island is another matter altogether, and it will have to be considered on its merits. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has done a great deal of harm going around among hon. gentlemen in this House, and causing it to be a subject for jeering. When that question is brought up, it will be brought up before the House in a proper way, and as a matter requiring serious consideration, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin) has no warrant for dragging in the question here as a kind of side show, when a vote to survey for a bridge is under consideration. It has been requested by the local legislature that this matter should be submitted to arbitration, and the Premier of the province pressed that question on this Government, when he was here a short time ago. It is a question which will have proper consideration from my colleagues when they have time to take it up, but why it should be discounted in advance, and an attempt made to turn it into ridicule by the hon. member (Mr. Martin) is certainly most extraordinary conduct on his part.

Mr. MARTIN. I know it is very hard to please my hon. friend (Mr. Davies), and I know that I have never been able to do so, nor do I think that I shall be able to please him, so long as I am a member of this House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) has a very high idea about the right time to bring these matters before the House, and he has also very lofty ideas about the style in which the House should be addressed. I am very sorry that I do not come up to the hon. gentleman's standard of oratory. I am a plain man, and I speak what I have to say in a plain way. I cannot use the flowery oratory which is the gift of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) has said, I believe that my remarks about Prince Edward Island were perfectly pertinent on this occasion. If hon. gentlemen will look at the record, they will find that whenever a statement is made by a Prince Edward Island member in this House the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) rises immediately afterwards, and expresses his sorrow that the remarks were not in proper time, or that they were not couched in oratorical language. They were either too low or too high in tone. We allow the hon. gentleman the palm as far as the choice of words is concerned, but considering that he occupied so much of the time of the House in the last Parliament, he might not be so exacting when a member from his province speaks of the claims of Prince Edward Island in this House. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself has neglected the claims of the Island. I repeat, and I state most distinctly, that he has overlooked the claims of the Island for the last two terms of Parliament. I was justified in calling the attention of the House to the fact, that when incorrect returns, unjust to the Island province were laid on the Table of the House, it was the duty of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) to stand up, and point out that these reports were not correct. When these returns stated, that three millions of money were spent in Prince Edward Island, the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) instead of being the political hack that he was, should have got up and resented such an incorrect statement as that. Those returns were asked for by himself in 1895, but it appears when they were brought down, full of mistakes, he had not called attention to them. When I came to this House I found that these incorrect returns had done their work, and I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) himself admitted to me that even the members of the Government were saturated with the idea that Prince Edward Island never paid for its own railway. Now, what does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) say about arbitration, and how does he stand in regard to that question. He tells us, that he has $7,500 in the Estimates for the survey of the road and a bridge, and he says that they are pressing on the attention of the Government to submit to arbitration the whole question of the claims of Prince Edward Island. The difference between the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) and myself is, that he wants arbitration so far as the claim of the province in regard to railway extension is concerned, and I do not want arbitration, on our railway claims, because arbitration means delay. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) has no right to charge that I made a laughing stock of this question. He may have been laughing at it, but I am not responsible for that. Nero laughed while Rome was burning, and I believe the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) would laugh when Prince Edward Island was being dealt with unjustly. I believe he would laugh when seven million dollars were being voted away, and not a dollar for Prince Edward Island, except a small sum for a proposed survey. If this survey was bona fide it would not be so bad, but he (Mr. Davies) says that after voting this sum of $7,500 for a survey, he is going to ask the Government to submit the question to arbitration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all, I never said that.

Mr. MARTIN. Does the hon. gentleman say not at all? Well, I have here a letter which was addressed to the Minister (Mr. Davies) by the Premier of Prince Edward Island, and does the Minister deny that it is proposed that the claims in regard to railway extension should be submitted to arbitration. Does he not know that that language is in the letter addressed to himself, a copy of which I hold in my hand. He cannot deny it, for I have a copy of the letter right here to prove it. The hon. gentleman the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) has always some complaint to make when a member from the Island urges its claims in this House. He tells us that the remarks of one member were inopportune, that another did not use choice words, that the hon. member for King's spoke too low, and I suppose that he thinks that I speak too high, or that I do not use the rising inflection—or that my gesture is not as graceful as his own. At all events, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is always ready with some objection of that kind. Every time there is some objection raised. It is hard to please him, but I am afraid he will not please Prince Edward Island by the course he is now pursuing. Instead of coming down here with $7,500 for a survey, he should implement the promise he made in 1896 in Prince Edward Island, and build that railway to Belfast. Why have we not had the survey finished, and a sum in the Estimates to-day for carrying out that promise? The hon. gentleman says this is a side issue. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is trifling with this question. I can tell him that he is watched in the province from which he comes. I feel humiliated when I see the Supplementary Estimates coming down here without that sum in them which I expected would be there on this occasion. With many large sums voted for other purposes, he should have come down with the small sum which is due to the province of Prince Edward Island for carrying out the policy of the late Government, and the policy which the hon. gentleman promised that this Government would pursue when they got into power.

Mr. PERRY. I must congratulate the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin) on the able way in which he has presented the rights of the people of the little province from which he and I come. I also congratulate the people who sent him here on having such an able champion of the rights of the people. The first speech he made was well enough, but he spoiled his whole case when he made the second one. He has found fault with the Estimate which the Government has brought down, because they are not going to build that branch railway on the island immediately. Why, the hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) warned the present Government not to enter into a contract before having a survey made by a competent engineer, so that they would be acting intelligently. I can readily endorse the statement of the hon. member for East Queen's that Prince Edward Island has not received justice since we entered into confederation—that the contract under which we entered confederation has not been carried out. He charges the present Government with all these slips; but what charges has he made against the late Government, which had the control of all these matters for eighteen years? What steps did the late Government ever take to carry out the terms of confederation with Prince Edward Island? My hon. friend was a member of the local legislature in 1885, when that celebrated Address was passed demanding that the Government of Canada pay the province of Prince Edward Island $5,000,000 for failing to fulfil the terms of confederation. Here was a prominent supporter of the Ferguson-Sullivan Government, who passed that Address and who were in accord with the Government of Canada at that time; and what was the result of that Address? Did they ever press it any further than to send a delegation to Ottawa, and also across the Atlantic to make an appearance in England? I do not know what kind of plea they made, but they came back with nothing. The hon.

Mr. MARTIN.

gentleman says there is a missing link. We all admit that, and the present Government will not deny it; but the late Government undertook to supply that link. In 1891 they went through the province of Prince Edward Island preaching the tunnel, after the subway scheme had failed; but it was only on the eve of the elections of 1891 that they began to advocate the tunnel. They even imported the late High Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, and when he got to Amherst on his way to the Island, he telegraphed to Senator Ferguson, who was at that time a candidate for Queen's County: "I dare not trust my bones to the ice-boat to cross, but I am satisfied that the tunnel can be built for $6,000,000, and as soon as I get back to England, I will see that that great work is commenced at once." That was on the 28th of February, and the elections were to be in the 5th of March. What have they done since? They have misspent $12,000 in making borings. They had one of the best engineers from England out here, and they fooled him, bled him, almost robbed him. In the course of a couple of months he had nine successful borings made across the Straits. How many did the late Government have? I believe two in the course of five or six years. This is the way the late Government carried out the terms of confederation. My hon. friend from East Queen's has said a great deal about how far the late Government went to build these branch railways. They tabled resolutions providing for building them, on the very eve of the general elections. They merely gave notice that on a certain day these resolutions would be taken up in the House; but that day never came. The day did come, but they were asleep; they did not want to take them up. It was done merely to catch votes. Now, I do not want to exonerate the present Government from the heavy responsibility that lies at their door, to give the island justice. It is very well known that the people of Prince Edward Island have not received justice under confederation. It is well known that we pay more money into the exchequer of Canada than we receive in return. My hon. friend from East Queen's is right when he says that we have no right to be charged with $3,500,000 for the building of railways on the Island, because we paid for those railways with our own money. When we entered confederation we were so many millions less in debt than the confederated provinces, and the Dominion Government agreed to take the Island road and charge us with $3,500,000, which left $1,500,000 or thereabouts, for which we were paid interest at 5 per cent. When my hon. friend was in the local House, supporting the local government, he gave a silent vote to allow that Government to draw from Ottawa $200,000, which reduced the annual interest due to the Island yearly by $10,000. Is it any wonder that the Island's finances are not in a wholesome condition to-day? He says my hon. friend the Minister of Marine, after voting $7,500 to survey this branch railway, has given up the whole case by asking that the matter be left to arbitration. My hon. friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has done no such thing. He is not asking a commission or arbitration to decide upon the necessity of building these branches, but merely to determine how much is due by Canada to the people of Prince Edward Island for the non-fulfilment of the terms of confederation. Let me tell my hon. friend that the present Government have done more to recognize the rights of the people of Prince Edward Island, in the short time they have been in office, than the late Government did in the last eighteen years. I hope and trust that this Government will do justice to Prince Edward Island. I hope it will build the bridge we require and also a branch railway to pass by the door of my hon. friend from East Queen's but I believe that even if it did, he is so opposed to the Government that he would not give it any credit. I hope also that the hon. Minister of Public Works will at once enter into contract to build a wharf at Westpoint. It would have come better from the hon. gentleman if he had began his remarks by a castigation of his own friends who were in power for eighteen years and in all that time did nothing to satisfy the just claims of the Island, instead of laying the whole blame on this Government, which has not been in office longer than twelve months. My hon. friend says there is no need for arbitration. Why not? There are hon. gentlemen here from the other provinces who do not believe, as the people of the Island do, that we are entitled to our share of the $200,000,000 of public money which has been spent on public works in the rest of Canada; and where there is such difference of opinion, is it not just and reasonable that this difference, especially in a complicated case of this kind, should be left to arbitration and not to the ipse dixit of one or two men.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways to the case of Sullivan, formerly car and oil inspector at Stellarton. A great wrong, no doubt unintentionally, was done this man. I find, after very careful inquiry, that his character in the district where he has lived is unimpeachable, and the hon. Minister himself has not, in his communications with me, imputed to him any direct wrong, but simply that he was not sufficiently active in preventing or exposing wrong-doing on the part of another employee in the service connected with him in some way. If the hon. gentleman had found Sullivan guilty of carelessness or laxity in the discharge of his duties, after anything like a fair investigation, I would not have a word to say, but what I complain of is that this man, who had hitherto borne a first rate character and held a responsible position, should have been dismissed without any investigation in the proper sense of the word. The officer of the hon. gentleman's department who inquired into the subject, did not examine any one in this man's presence, and there was nothing approaching to an open investigation. What was charged against Sullivan was that another man, the real offender, had remarked that he intended to tap some letter which was in the custody of the Intercolonial Railway, and that Sullivan did not report that fact to the inspector or take any means to prevent it. Now, Inspector Sullivan and his friends tell me that the delinquent, the real offender, made that remark in the presence of others as well, and made it as, they supposed, a jocular manner, and Sullivan never had any reason to believe that there was the slightest possibility of his doing anything of the kind. I am not sufficiently acquainted with all the facts to be able to say how far the offender was connected with the car and oil Inspector Sullivan. I do not know how far duties were connected with those of the man who, so far as I can understand, was properly dismissed, and I am not going to take up any further time—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). As the hon gentleman is about taking his seat, I may say I will gladly allow him to have access to the evidence which was gathered on the subject, and I would be willing to confer with him upon the case generally, with a view to doing anything that would be just to the person to whom he refers. I think that the matter was practically decided by the officials before I came into the department and that I had nothing to do with it except that it came before me rather as a matter of review. I felt that, under the circumstances, and with the facts as presented to me, there was no course for me to take but to approve what had been done by the officials. Notwithstanding that, I am free to say to the hon. gentleman that I am willing to show the hon. gentleman the communications which took place and the evidence brought out in the investigation, and generally, to talk the matter over with him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is, of course, satisfactory to me. I was not attempting to make a point against the Minister personally. I know nothing of these matters. But I did believe, and I believe yet, that I can make this point in connection with so respectable a man as I know Mr. Sullivan to be—to get a fair and open inquiry. Even let the hon. Minister appoint his own officers, but let the man be brought face to face with his accusers.

There is another matter to which I wish to call the hon. Minister's attention. No doubt it has escaped his attention, for otherwise he would have been guilty of a very great and undeserved discourtesy towards myself. Last session, I brought up on several occasions the subject of the gross injustice being done through the defeated candidate in Pictou to two men in the service of the Intercolonial. The Minister of Railways acted, so far as I can ascertain—though papers are withheld that are referred to in the correspondence brought down—on the statement of Mr. E. M. McDonald, I have investigated that statement and no more ruthless or unwarranted statement was ever made than that made by Mr. McDonald, if that statement, was as intimated in the discussion last session, that either of these men was an active partisan in the late election, or had done more than poll his vote, or had neglected his duty, or had said anything that could offend my political opponents either candidates or others. Last session the Minister intimated when this subject was before the House that he would allow an investigation to be made into the facts and see whether injustice had been done to these men. I received a request from them, which I forwarded to the Minister, asking him to be good enough to say when the investigation would take place and also whether these men would be permitted to have a representative at the investigation, as I was myself desirous of attending in connection with them. Though that letter was sent in September or October last, I have never received an acknowledgment of it—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. member will allow me, I must say that I do not recall the receipt of that letter. It may be that in the mass of correspondence that reaches me his letter may have been passed over—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I intimated in beginning, that I did not charge the hon. Minister with overlooking this matter intentionally, because that would be an act of discourtesy that I should not expect at his hands. But the letter has remained unanswered and unattended to. I rise now not only for the purpose of asking the hon. Minister's attention to the case—for it is a case in which, I think, we can expose the unfair policy that has been adopted, in accepting the statements of defeated politicians against the interests of men in the service of the Government, high or low—but also to say that an order of the House was granted for the papers in this case, and that I had a discussion both inside and outside of the House with the Minister and pointed out that letters referred to in the papers were not brought down. Nothing having been done to supplement that return, I moved again this session, though not strictly necessary, for an order of the House for such papers as had not been brought down. I call the attention of the Minister again to the fact, because, if he grants the investigation—as no doubt he will; he promised it—it is most important that we should have a complete file in regard to the transaction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The statement that the hon. gentleman makes in regard to the additional return is entirely correct. I may say that, asking at the department, as I do nearly every day, whether papers which have been called for have been prepared, I had my attention called this very morning, to this supplementary statement, which has been practically completed. I said I would look at it at the very first leisure moment I had. I repeat that to the hon. gentleman—I will look over the statement and bring it down as soon as possible. There was no intention to delay the matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I accept that.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I see that the item under discussion is as follows:—

Railways and Canals, chargeable to Capital—Prince Edward Island Railway—
Cost of survey of proposed bridge over the Hillsborough and railway route towards Murray Harbour.....	$7,500
Increased accommodation and switch at Mount Stewart.....	$1,500
To shorten the main line by the removal of certain curves therein.....	$10,000

I think that this is the most fitting time to refer to the matter of the Prince Edward Island branch roads notwithstanding that my good friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) has criticised my hon. friend from East Queen's (Mr. Martin) for taking up this matter at an improper time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). My hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) misunderstood me—

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) The hon. Minister of Marine said that the hon. member for East Queen's had brought the matter up at the wrong time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. I was speaking of the claims of Prince Edward Island which are a distinct matter and had nothing to do with this question.

Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) That is all very well, but my contention is that there could be no more proper time this session to bring up and discuss the matter of the Prince Edward Island railroads than the present. I must say that I entirely disagree with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he criticises the hon. member for East Queen's for bringing up this matter at a wrong time. He also tried to ridicule the hon. member by saying he had made this matter the laughing-stock of the House. The only gentlemen whom I saw laughing about the matter were the hon. Minister's and his own friends. I think the matter is too serious a one to be made a laughing-stock by any party. I do not intend to make an extended speech; this matter has been before Parliament before. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has accused the Liberal-Conservative party of playing with this matter for the last twenty years. Well, they played it up to the point where they were prepared to come down to this House and place a sum of money in the Estimates for the construction of certain branch railways; and I think that was playing with it to some purpose. The Liberal-Conservative Government, when they went out of power, were fully committed to the construction of certain branch railroads in Prince Edward Island. Not only that, but the hon. gentlemen then representing the western section of Prince Edward Island, my two hon. friends from Prince (Mr. Yeo and Mr. Perry) also favoured the construction of branch railways, some of them being in favour of certain lines, and others of other lines which were then talked of and for which an estimate was made by the late Government. So that we not only find the Liberal-Conservative members of that day being in favour of the construction of the several branches in Prince Edward Island, but we find that the hon. gentlemen who were then in Opposition, we find that the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries also committed himself to an expenditure on the Belfast branch. He is also committed to the construction of a bridge across the Hillsboro' River, which he contemplates will cost half a million dollars. I do not want to criticise the Minister of Marine and Fisheries improperly, or to put him in a false position, but I must say that he tried, during the election campaign, to show that we were committed to a vast expenditure of money in Prince Edward Island for six or eight branch railways, but I want to show in a few minutes that that hon. gentleman himself was committed to a larger expenditure even than we were. It would seem that the branches, the construction of which was contemplated by the late Government, according to an estimate laid before Parliament at that time, including the necessary rolling stock that would be required for these several branches, passenger cars &c., amounted in all to $1,088,000. Now, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was committed, according to his statements in this House on several occasions, as well as during the election campaign, to the construction of the Murray Harbour branch, which, according to the estimate laid before Parliament, would cost $660,000. Add to that the construction of the contemplated bridge which he placed at $500,000, and it would make in all $1,160,000, or $72,000 more than the construction of all the branches that were mentioned in the estimate brought down by the late Government. So we find the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is committed to a larger expenditure than that contemplated by the late Government. It would seem at the present time that the Premier of Prince Edward Island has laid before the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and before the present Government, a memorandum to leave these matters which are in dispute between Prince Edward Island and the Federal Government to arbitration. While I for my part have no objection whatever to leave any matters that are in dispute between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion Government to arbitration, on which there should be at least one Prince Edward Islander and one Canadian, and let them choose a third, which I suppose would be a fair way to go about it—I must entirely object to leaving the matter of the construction of the branch railways in Prince Edward Island to any such arbitration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him that no such proposition has ever been made or thought of by myself. The whole thing is a figment of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I am informed that such is not the case. However, I will at the present time put myself on record as being entirely opposed to any such thing. The Conservative party are on record with respect to those branch railways. If the present Government don't think that they are proper, they can say so. If they think they don't go far enough, let them go further; if they think they go too far, let them say so and take the consequences. But so far as the Liberal-Conservative party in Prince Edward Island are concerned, they are committed to certain branches which they believe are not only in the interest of Prince Edward Island but are in the interest of the present Prince Edward Island Railway. We know at the present time that that railway is not a paying institution. There is a yearly deficit between the revenue, and the wear and tear, and everything else. But I believe that the construction of these contemplated branches would be a good paying investment, and the railway would become a good piece of property for the people of this country. Further than that, I want to corroborate the statement that was made by the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin), and to say that the people of this country are very apt to look upon Prince Edward Island Railway as something that was constructed by the people of Canada. That is not the case. To prove that, I may say that if that railway had not been constructed when we came into confederation, we would have been drawing interest on the amount of the cost of that railway from the Dominion Government. Therefore it can be said that the people of Prince Edward Island have paid for every mile of railway that was constructed when we came into confederation, and, therefore, the Dominion of Canada cannot turn around and say that they built the road in any shape or form. The little branches that we are asking for now are a very small item in comparison with the vast expenditures that are taking place on the railways, canals, and other public works throughout the length and breadth of the country. We have to bear our share of that expenditure, and we don't object to it; but we think that in fair-play we should get an offset to such expenditures which were not at all contemplated when we came into confederation. Now, all these branch railways which we have been looking for in Prince Edward Island, amount in the aggregate to about one million dollars in round numbers, and the Prince Edward Island share of the vast expenditures that were not contemplated when we came into confederation and on which the terms of union were fixed, amounts to two and a half million dollars, so that if the construction of these railways were carried out now, we would still have a large amount of money properly due to the province of Prince Edward Island. So far as the non-fulfilment of the terms of union are concerned I would be quite prepared to support that matter being left to arbitration. I think it is one that should be so disposed of. I am sorry to have had to delay the committee on the present occasion, but I thought it was necessary to say a few words on this matter, which is to me so important.

Mr. YEO. As one of the members from Prince Edward Island I may say I am much pleased to see this sum placed in the Estimates. I was much surprised to hear the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin) and the hon. member for King's (Mr. Macdonald) censure the Government for not having been a little more active in this matter. When we remember that the Conservative Government were in power for eighteen years, and remember what they did for Prince Edward Island, I think modesty ought to have kept those hon. gentlemen silent. Now, I have always been of the opinion, and I have not hesitated to say so, that the only chance Prince Edward Island ever had of obtaining anything like justice was when we had a Liberal Government in power. That has been my opinion in the past, and I am of that opinion still. As one of the representatives of Prince Edward Island, I would not presume to ask for anything that was unfair, and I feel sure that any representations we may make to this Government in a fair spirit will have due effect, and that justice will be done to the province. I think the Government have lost no time in attending to this matter. We all know that a survey must be made before anything else is done. I think my hon. friend from King's will remember that some surveys were made in his county years ago, and that no further progress was made. Now, I hope that won't be the case now; I believe and I am sure that it will not, and if everything else is right, this matter will be proceeded with. I am surprised that my hon. friends have spoken in this way of the claims which the Government of Prince Edward Island have against the Dominion Government. I do not think this is the proper time to bring them up. As far as I am concerned I believe these claims are just and fair, and I for one should not be at all afraid to submit them to any fair arbitration, because I am sure that when those claims are put forward in a right way, they will be dealt with properly. As a representative of the island, I am very glad to see these amounts in the Estimates to provide for survey for a bridge over the Hillsboro' River and to make a survey and do other work in connection with straightening the curves on the railway on Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). I desire to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Yeo) that in a former session of Parliament he stated that he did not like these questions brought up just previous to an election.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Would not the hon. gentleman like to settle this matter between one and three o'clock?

Mr. FOSTER. Why was this suggestion not made when the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Yeo) was at work?

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). This is a matter that I press on the attention of the Government, because they will undoubtedly seek to keep it over until the next elections and then endeavour to bewilder the people in regard to these branch lines. The hon. gentleman accused me of having had a survey made in regard to one of these branch lines. I am glad to say that a survey was made towards Elmira, as it showed that a line could be easily constructed and is one much required throughout that part of my county.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do with a vote of $10,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The proposition is to ascertain what can be done in the way of straightening out the worst curves on the Island Railway, to obtain an engineer's report on the subject, and endeavour to have the work carried out. This can be done for the amount made.

Mr. FOSTER. That is as regards the two worse curves. Where are those curves?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between Summerside and Charlottetown.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman is going to endeavour to straighten all the curves on the railway, it will cost a very large sum of money.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). There is a very sharp curve on the branch line from Mount Stuart to Souris through my county. I trust this will be straightened.

Soulanges Canal—Construction..... $1,250,000

Mr. FOSTER. How is this large sum to be expended in 1897-98?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can only say that it will be spent in the same way that a smaller sum would be spent; of course, we hope that a larger amount of work will be done than if a smaller sum were expended. Our desire is to have the work prosecuted with all possible despatch. For purposes of construction it is proposed to increase the force, and to do within a short time what was intended to be carried out in a longer period.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the sum estimated for the completion of the Soulanges Canal; what proportion of the work has already been done, and what contracts are now being carried out?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was originally estimated that the construction of the Soulanges Canal would cost in the neighbourhood of $5,000,000. Up to February 25th, 1897, there had been expended in round figures $2,400,000. We estimate that $400,000 more will be required for the work up to 30th June. This will bring the estimated expense up to that date to about $2,800,000. There will then remain an amount of $2,200,000 necessary to complete the work according to the estimate.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion of the canal is under contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All the sections are under contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they all been let?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and the work is progressing on all the sections from 1 to 13.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I understand the whole of the work on the Soulanges Canal is let, and under contract and the work is being proceeded with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should like to qualify my statement by saying that there is some delay in regard to contracts in the hands of Mr. Stewart, but we think that an arrangement will be made so that there will be no further delay.

Cornwall—Enlargement..... $185,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will this amount complete the enlargement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is only for one-half. It is the first expenditure on that branch of the work. The contract has been let.

Galops—Enlargement..... $1,635,000

Mr. FOSTER. Will that complete the work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We expect it will complete it.

Mr. FOSTER. This work is under contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

North Channel—Straightening and deepening..... $375,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this for new work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What proportion does it bear to the whole cost. Is this half the cost of the work? What is briefly the nature of the work the hon. gentleman is going to do?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deepening of the channel requires rock excavation.

Mr. FOSTER. What draft of water will you have when it is done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will have fourteen feet, and perhaps fifteen. We will have navigation there fully as good as on any stretch of the canal system.

River Reaches..... $50,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are several points between the Cardinal and Cornwall Canals where it is thought extremely likely some work will have to be done. In the north channel we have a good deal of boulder work. We propose to take some effective method of testing the uniform condition of the channel so that there may be no doubt as to our having sufficient depth of water all the way through.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the work be done by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume it will be done by contract, although it is a description of the work which it would be difficult to give a contract upon. We might find that there would be very little work to be done, or we might find that there would be a great deal. We might possibly agree on some scale to be paid to the contractor according to the amount of work that should be considered necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. And with reference to the north channel?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be done by contract because we know what we have to do.

Trent Valley Canal—Construction..... $650,000

Mr. ROGERS. I understood that, for the time being, the Government intended to suspend operations upon that canal, and not to carry it through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Rogers) that I think no declaration has been made that we intend to suspend operations upon it at present. But, we are not asking Parliament to appropriate any amount for new work. All we are asking for is sufficient to keep the contracts going which have already been let.

To meet expenses of litigated matters which may be paid for services in connection with the litigation conducted within the Department of Justice, notwithstanding anything in "The Civil Service Act"..... $15,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would the Solicitor General be good enough to state how that $15,000 is to be expended?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). This vote is in consequence of a change I have made, so as to enable the department to make payments out of this to employees. My special object is to pay the Deputy Minister of Justice some remuneration for services that he is rendering now, and that were not rendered heretofore. When I came into the department, I found that the expenditure each year for the last five years for counsel fees, had been something in the vicinity of $35,000. That continued up to last year. Under the new system that was adopted, and which system cannot be carried out without the effective assistance of the Deputy Minister of Justice, we hope to save the greater portion of this sum of $35,000. In fact, for the last twelve months the Deputy Minister has done all the Solicitor's work in the Department. All the work that has heretofore been done outside is now done by our own staff in our own office. Under these circumstances, we think it advisable that we should be enabled to make some terms with the Deputy Minister for the services, which are very great, which he is now rendering.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to congratulate the hon. gentleman upon attempting this reform. It was one which commended itself to me, and the subject was discussed when I was connected with the Department of Justice; but nothing had been done when I left the Department. These expenses of litigation are not altogether popular, and are considered a very heavy burden on the country, and I have no doubt that by centralizing a great deal of the work in the manner proposed, even if there is not the strength of staff necessary at the head office, not only will much of the cost be saved to the country, but the work will be kept better in hand and be more satisfactorily performed. This is similar to the system that prevails in England, where I think the Treasury or the Privy Council have to attend to work of this kind through a special class of officers who act for the Crown.

Mr. BRITTON. I want to say, because I may not have another opportunity of saying it, that I object now, as I have objected on other occasions, to large extra payments being made to officers of the department who are already paid large salaries for the work they do. I do not know what special payments are proposed to be made to the Deputy Minister of Justice. I have no objection to the work that gentleman does, I shall be the first in this House or anywhere else to recognize his ability, and to say that so far as I know the work he has done has been done well. But if, in addition to the large salary he gets, it is proposed to give him another large sum in bulk or in any other way. I shall object most strongly. I think the system is a bad system. It has worked badly in other departments than the Department of Justice. It is a temptation that ought not to be placed in the way either of the Deputy or any other officer in the department. It is a system that ought not to be used except in very exceptional circumstances.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may say, to prevent misunderstanding, that it is not intended to pay the Deputy Minister of Justice any extra salary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was not proposed. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), as a member of the profession, will, I am sure, agree with me that any man fit to fill the position of Deputy Minister of Justice, is certainly entitled to a larger remuneration than he receives, which is some $2,000 less than is paid to similar officers in other departments. All these officers have to come to him, and do come to him continually, to be advised in the most important matters coming before them; and it has always seemed an anomaly to me that those men, who outside would not rank with him in ability or be relatively better off, are relatively better off in the service. It does not matter whether you increase the salary or allow the remuneration in another form. The main point to the country is that by putting additional work on the officers of the department, you not only save money directly, but have the work more promptly and efficiently done.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no intention to add anything to the present Deputy Minister's salary; but I may say that we have now twenty-two cases pending in the Exchequer Court and the Supreme Court managed by the Department of Justice exclusively; and that cannot be done without getting extra assistance for the Deputy Minister.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.10 p.m.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 133) to amend the law relating to aliens.—(Mr. McMullen.)

THE KINGSTON POSTMASTERSHIP.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. In connection with the change of postmaster in the Kingston post office, did the Honourable Postmaster General obtain any report showing that the late postmaster was unfit for his work, and if so, in what respect was he considered unfit?

2. Before appointing Mr. Gunn, did the Postmaster General ascertain his age?

3. In what particular, if any, was it considered by the Postmaster General that the retirement of Mr. Shannon and the appointment of Mr. Gunn would improve the office?

4. Is the Postmaster General able to say whether Mr. Gunn is superior to Mr. Shannon in mental or physical strength, or vigour, or better qualified to perform the duties of the office?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I thought I had fully covered this question in my reply to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) yesterday, and see no reason to change my opinion, but as the hon. gentleman wanted a more definite expression of opinion from myself personally, I may add, with regard to question No. 3, that two matters were involved, one the fitness of the late postmaster and the other the fitness of the present postmaster. As regards the fitness of the late postmaster, the evidence I referred to in my answer yesterday showed that the late postmaster was not an efficient officer, and, therefore, a change was necessary. The question therefore of a new appointment arose, and I am perfectly satisfied that Mr. Gunn will show the necessary ability for the proper management of the office.

DISMISSAL OF MRS. LeCAIN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Is it true that when the late Mr. LeCain, keeper of the marine hospital, Bunker Island, N.S., was appointed the buildings were out of repair, and Mr. LeCain built at his own expense a wing to the old house and a wing for hospital use, also a workshop and several outhouses; that he improved the land, clearing about ten acres thereof, and put it in first-class condition?

2. Is it true that when the late keeper went to the island about six tons of hay could be cut thereon, and that now fifty tons besides other crop and pasturage are possible?

3. Is it true that the late keeper constructed a frost-proof barn cellar?

4. When Mr. LeCain died was Mrs. LeCain appointed his successor? If not, what instructions were sent to her, if any?

5. Was the following communication from the Department of Marine and Fisheries sent to her:—

“ Marine and Fisheries, Canada, “ Ottawa, 2nd January, 1897.

“ Madam,—I am to inform you that your services as keeper of the marine hospital at Bunker's Island are no longer required by the department, and I have to request you to vacate the premises as soon as possible, and hand over charge of the hospital and all Government property to Mr. Edward Cosman, who has been appointed keeper in room instead.

“ I am, madam, your obedient servant,

“ F. GOURDEAU,

“ Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

“ Mrs. LeCain, Bunker Island, Yarmouth, N.S.”

6. After this notice did the member for Yarmouth direct Mrs. LeCain not to remove fencing from the island?

7. Did an officer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries make an official visit to the island and take an inventory of Mrs. LeCain's effects, and promise payment on the part of the Government? If such inventory was taken, what articles does it enumerate, and when was it received by the department?

8. Has any communication been sent to Mrs. LeCain since the date of the above mentioned letter, 2nd January, 1897?

9. Is the Department of Marine and Fisheries aware that Mrs. LeCain is seventy years of age, with no means of livelihood?

10. Does the Government propose to provide for a retiring or other allowance for Mrs. LeCain? If not, what is the total amount, if any, the Government propose to pay for such articles referred to in the foregoing questions?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say : 1. The department has no report as to condition of building when the late Mr. LeCain was first appointed. Mr. LeCain built at his own expense an addition to the building, and he also built a workshop and several outhouses. We have no official knowledge of his improving the land, but as he received the use of the land as compensation in part for performing the duties of keeper, it would be his interest to cultivate and improve the land. 2. The department has no knowledge of this. 3. The department has no knowledge of this. 4. Mrs. LeCain was not appointed keeper and it was not found necessary to send any special instructions. 5. Yes. 6. The department has no knowledge of the member for Yarmouth giving such directions. 7. Yes, an inventory was taken of Mrs. LeCain's effects and their value taken, viz: $23.55 as per following list, and it is proposed to allow this amount to Mrs. LeCain. The inventory was received on the 4th of February last.

Inventory No. 2.

4½ pairs blankets, $2 a pair.....	$ 9 00
4 pillows (feather), 75 cents each.....	3 00
2 mattresses, $1 each.....	2 00
5 shirts (worn), 10 cents each.....	0 50
3 counterpanes, $1 each.....	3 00
3 tables at 25 cents.....	0 75
2 chairs at 20 cents.....	0 40
1 close stool-chair.....	1 00
1 stove, zinc and pipe.....	3 50
8 pillow-cases at 5 cents.....	0 40
	$23 55

8. No communication was sent Mrs. LeCain from Ottawa, but an officer of the department from Halifax had an interview with her since the date of the letter, viz: 2nd January, 1897. 9. No. 10. The Government does not propose to provide for a retiring or other allowance for Mrs. LeCain as she has no claim to such allowance. The Government proposes to allow Mrs. LeCain the sum of $100, but Mrs. LeCain is at liberty to remove the workshop and other buildings if unable to effect an arrangement as to their purchase with the new keeper.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would ask the hon. gentleman's attention to his answers to questions 4 and 5. I suppose that the answer to the 4th is right.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes; she was not appointed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The letter was wrong in referring to her services as keeper of the marine hospital not being required.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She was keeper, but not appointed. There was no formal appointment; she remained after her husband died.

DEEPENING OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. ELLIS asked :

How much money has been expended by the Government of Canada in deepening the channel of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Quebec and otherwise in facilitating and improving the navigation of the river in the interest of trade and commerce, such as the placing of buoys, construction of wharfs and erection of light-houses or in any similar way?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). The total amount expended in deepening the channel of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Quebec, and in the construction by the Department of Public Works of wharfs and other facilities for improving the navigation of the river between those two points is $3,800,000—$2,725,500 of that sum being the amount expended by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and assumed by the Government upon the transfer to the Government of the ship channel works between Montreal and Quebec in 1888.

POSTMASTER AT FITCH BAY.

Mr. MOORE asked :

Regarding the change of postmasters at Fitch Bay in the county of Stanstead:—

1. Was there any charge against John S. C. Gage, the late postmaster?

2. What was the nature of the charge, if any was made?

3. Was the said Gage informed of the cause of his dismissal?

4. Was there any investigation before dismissal?

5. Was Mr. T. B. Rider, the late defeated candidate for this House, appointed in Mr. Gage's place as postmaster at Fitch Bay?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are as follows:—1. Yes. 2. Undue political activity. 3. He received the usual official notice some time before the transfer of the office. 4. No. 5. Yes.

NOVA SCOTIA CENTRAL RAILWAY BONUS.

Mr. MILLS asked :

Is there any balance of subsidy granted to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company still remaining unpaid? If so, what is the balance? When will it lapse? Will the decision of the late Right Honourable Sir John Thompson, when Minister of Justice, as to the payment of this balance be adhered to? Is such decision or opinion on file in the Department of Railways and Canals?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There is a balance of subsidy granted to the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company still remaining unpaid, that balance being $4,500. The railway being completed, the balance will not lapse. I cannot, without further consideration, say whether the decision of the late Right Hon. Sir John Thompson, when Minister of Justice, as to the payment of this balance will be adhered to, but so far it has not been departed from. The decision is on file in the Department of Railways and Canals.

DROWNED LANDS, COUNTY OF PONTIAC.

Mr. MARCOTTE (for Mr. Poupore) asked :

1. Is the Government aware that there are several claims for drowned lands still unsettled in connection with the construction of the Roche Fendue and Calumet dams, in the county of Pontiac ?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to provide in the Supplementary Estimates for the payment of the different claims which have been adjusted by the Government appraisers in connection with those claims ?

3. Does the Government intend to send its appraisers to examine and adjust the other claims in this connection, which have not yet been dealt with ?

4. Is the Government aware that a portion of the main road on the Calumet Island, at the Calumet village, has been washed away in consequence of the construction of the dams in question, and is it the intention of the Government to take the necessary steps to repair such damage ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The Government is aware that there are several claims, not settled, for drowned lands alleged to have been damaged by the construction of the Roche Fendue and Calumet dams, in the county of Pontiac. 2. The Government has not determined to provide an amount in the Supplementary Estimates in connection with those claims. 3. The Government has not decided to send appraisers to look into these claims. 4. No ; the Government is not aware that a portion of the main road on the Calumet Island, at Calumet Village, has been washed away in consequence of the construction of these lands.

THE LATE ERNEST GRUNDY.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan) asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to provide for the widow and children of the late Ernest Grundy, postmaster of Duck Lake, Saskatchewan, who was killed while assisting to arrest the Indian, Almighty Voice ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The matter which is referred to in the question is now under the consideration of the Government. No decision has been come to.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that on Monday next the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to grant and appropriate for a line of railway from Lethbridge, in the Territory of Alberta, through the Crow's Nest Pass to Nelson, in the province of British Columbia, and in consideration of the concessions hereinafter set forth, a sum of eleven thousand dollars for each mile of said railway, not exceeding in the whole the sum of three million six hundred and thirty thousand dollars, payable by instalments on the completion of the several sections of the said railway of the length respectively of not less than ten miles, and the remainder on the completion of the whole, subject to the condition that a contract and agreement between Her Majesty the Queen, acting in respect of the Dominion of Canada and therein represented by the Minister of Railways and Canals, of the one part, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, hereinafter called "the company," of the other part, shall be first entered into in such form as the Governor in Council may think fit, containing covenants inter alia on the part of the company to the following effect, that is to say :—

(a.) That the company will construct or cause to be constructed the said railway by such route and according to such descriptions and specifications and within such time or times as may be provided for in the said agreement, and, when completed, will operate the same for ever.

(b.) That the said line of railway shall be constructed through the town of Macleod, and a station shall be established therein, unless the Governor in Council is satisfied by the company that there is good cause for constructing the railway outside of the limits of the said town, in which case the said line of railway shall be located and a station established at a distance not greater than five hundred yards from said town limits.

(c.) That so soon as the said railway is opened for traffic to Kootenay Lake, the local rates and tolls on the railway and on any other railway used in connection therewith and now or hereafter owned or leased by or operated on account of the company south of the company's main line in British Columbia, as well as the rates and tolls between any point on any such line or lines of railway and any point on the main line of the company throughout Canada or any other railway owned or leased by or operated on account of the company, including its lines of steamers in British Columbia, shall be first approved by the Governor in Council or by a railway commission, if and when such commission is established by law, and shall at all times thereafter and from time to time be subject to revision and control in the manner aforesaid.

(d.) That a reduction shall be made in the general rates and tolls of the company as now charged, or as contained in its present freight tariff, whichever rates are now the lowest, for carloads or otherwise, upon the classes of merchandise hereinafter mentioned, westbound, from and including Fort William and all points east of Fort William on the company's railway to all points west of Fort William on the company's main line, or on any line of railway throughout Canada owned or leased by or operated on account of the company, whether the shipment be by all rail line or by lake and rail, such reduction to be to the extent of the following percentages respectively, namely:—

Upon all green and fresh fruits, 23½ per cent.

Coal oil, 20 per cent.

Cordage and binder twine, 10 per cent.

Agricultural implements of all kinds, set up or in parts, 10 per cent.

Iron, including bar, band, Canada plates, galvanized, sheet, pipe, pipe-fittings, nails, spikes and horse shoes, 10 per cent.

All kinds of wire, 10 per cent.

Window glass, 10 per cent.

Paper for building and roofing purposes, 10 per cent.

Roofing felt, box and packing, 10 per cent.

Paints of all kinds and oils, 10 per cent.

Live stock, 10 per cent.

Woodenware, 10 per cent.

Household furniture, 10 per cent.

And no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be hereafter charged by the company upon any such merchandise which shall be carried by the company between the points aforesaid; such reductions to take effect on or before the first of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

(e.) That there shall be a reduction in the company's present rates and tolls on grain and flour from all points on its main line, branches or connections, west of Fort William to Fort William and Port Arthur points east, of three cents per one hundred pounds, to take effect in the following manner:—One and one-half cents per one hundred pounds on or before the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, and an additional one and one-half cents per one hundred pounds on or before the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine. And no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be charged after the dates mentioned on such merchandise from the points aforesaid.

(f.) That the Railway Committee of the Privy Council may grant running powers over the said line of railway and all its branches and connections, or any portions thereof, and all lines of railway now or hereafter owned or leased by or operated on account of the company in British Columbia south of the company's main line of railway, and the necessary use of its tracks, stations and station grounds, to any other railway company applying for such grant upon any such terms as such Committee may fix and determine, and according to the provisions of the Railway Act and of such other general Acts relating to railways as may from time to time be passed by the Parliament of Canada. Nothing herein shall be held to imply that such running powers might not be so granted without the special provision herein contained.

Mr. BLAIR.

(g.) That the said railway, when constructed, together with that portion of the company's railway from Dunmore to Lethbridge, and all lines of railway, branches, connections and extensions in British Columbia south of the main line of the company in British Columbia shall be subject to the provisions of the Railway Act, and of such other general Acts relating to railways as may from time to time be passed by the Parliament of Canada.

(h.) That if the company or any other company with whom it shall have any arrangement on the subject shall, by constructing the said railway or any part of it, as stipulated for in the said agreement, become entitled to and shall get any land as a subsidy from the Government of British Columbia, then such lands, excepting therefrom those which in the opinion of the Director of the Geological Survey of Canada (expressed in writing) are coal-bearing lands, shall be disposed of by the company or by such other company to the public according to regulations and at prices not exceeding those prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council, having regard to the then existing provincial regulations applicable thereto; the expression "lands" including all mineral and timber thereon which shall be disposed of as aforesaid, either with or without the land, as the Governor in Council may direct.

(i.) That if the company or any other company with whom it shall have any arrangement on the subject shall, by constructing the said railway or any part of it as stipulated for in the said agreement, become entitled to and shall get any lands as a subsidy from the Government of British Columbia which in the opinion of the Director of the Geological Survey of Canada (expressed in writing) are coal-bearing lands, then the company will cause to be conveyed to the Crown, in the interests of Canada, a portion thereof to the extent of fifty thousand acres, the same to be of equal value per acre as coal lands with the residue of such lands. The said fifty thousand acres to be selected by the Government in such fair and equitable manner as may be determined by the Governor in Council, and to be thereafter held or disposed of or otherwise dealt with by the Government as it may think fit on such conditions, if any, as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council, for the purpose of securing a sufficient and suitable supply of coal to the public at reasonable prices, not exceeding two dollars per ton of two thousand pounds free on board cars at the mines.

Motion agreed to.

EXPORT DUTIES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As it may not be convenient to proceed with the tariff resolutions to-day, I wish to make a remark on a point which, I think the House will regard as of some importance; and perhaps the statement may facilitate the business of dealing with the tariff. I wish to say that it is the intention of the Government, before the tariff resolutions are completed, to ask for the re-enactment of the resolution in the old tariff law which authorizes the Governor in Council, under certain conditions, to impose export duties by proclamation upon logs, to include in this case export duties on pulp-wood. It is also the intention to include in the authority to be so taken, power to impose export duties upon certain ores. I may explain, in regard especially to logs and pulp-wood, that we have no intention of applying these resolutions at once. An intimation was given by the leader of the House some days ago as regards this matter that whatever action was taken it would not prejudice the business then in progress. But it may be possible that, before the next meeting of Parliament, we may have occasion to exercise this power and therefore it is our intention to ask, in the form of a resolution, that this authority be conferred upon His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure the House will hear with great pleasure the announcement made by the Minister of Finance. There is no doubt that while it is not desirable to adopt any policy that might be considered a policy of retaliation, the time has arrived when it is absolutely necessary that the Government and Parliament of Canada should look solely to Canadian interests in regard to these matters. Face to face, as we are, with the proposed legislation in the United States, which is now of a very advanced character—as I see that the Senate have agreed to the imposition of this large increase of duty on lumber—I think it is absolutely incumbent on this Government not only to take power, but to use that power, if they find that these measures, so repressive on Canadian trade, are carried into effect on the part of our great neighbours. The hon. gentleman has stated properly that in bringing into operation any act of that kind regard would have to be had to existing contracts and work that is now in progress. But, assuming that this proposed legislation in the United States is carried into effect, I believe that no movement on the part of the Government of Canada would be more advantageous to the people of this country than to carry out the policy which is indicated in the statements just made by the hon. gentleman, and that they should not only obtain that power, but carry it into effect. I have not myself looked into the question beyond that effecting logs and pulp wood; I have not heard anything about ores until the present time, because I did not know that that matter was prominently before the attention of the Government. But so far as the question of logs and pulp wood is concerned, I believe the Government would fail in its duty to Canada if they did not promptly resort to that measure in protection in the interests of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know if I understood the hon. gentleman rightly to say that he proposed to carry out the precedents established by the late Government. If so, that means that we should deliberate upon and pass an Act here, setting the maximum limit, and that power should be given to the Government by Order in Council to put that in force within those limits.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will probably re-enact the old clause.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to ask the Government whether it is desirable or permissible to discuss this question at all as it has been discussed by the leader of the Opposition, or whether discussion should be postponed until the resolutions come up for discussion.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I may say to my hon. friend that I think it would be inexpedient, and that we should wait until the resolution comes up, which must be within a very short time. He will observe, of course, that all that is being asked for is power to act. That is all we take.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, it is a very dangerous power, in my estimation, to put into the hands of the Government. I would ask the Government whether they will set a day for the consideration of this resolution, which I shall feel bound to oppose, and shall, at that time, give my reasons for opposing it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will promise that the hon. gentleman shall have ample notice. I cannot, at present, name a day, but I will see that a day is fixed, and that the hon. gentleman is publicly informed of it.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sault Ste. Marie Canal—Construction and equipment..... $75,000

Mr. FOSTER. The whole construction of that canal is now finished, is it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The construction is finished, practically. Of course, there is a good deal of dressing up to be done in connection with the canal. The amount we ask for here is to cover the cost of removing that pier. We find it absolutely necessary that that pier should be removed.

Mr. FOSTER. Are the two approaches finished as well?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes; the substantial work is all over in the canal proper. We provide for $15,000 to clear up and level the surface. The wall work of the canal is all done.

Lachine Canal—Enlargement..... $216,000

Mr. QUINN. I understand that one of these items is to be left over in this list. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals for a report containing the names of those who have been dismissed from the Lachine Canal; also the reasons for which they were dismissed, the complaints that were made against them, and by whom, and the persons who were appointed to fill their positions afterwards, so that these things may be discussed when this item is to be taken up. I simply wanted to let the Minister know that I would require that information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was there an order of the House for it?

Mr. QUINN. No, but I wanted to ask for that information, so that it may be ready when this item, or some item to be reserved, is discussed.

Mr. FOSTER. I would recommend that this item stand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let it stand.

Grenville Canal—Enlargement..... $90,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In connection with these canal resolutions, I want to call the attention again of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the great injustice that I think he has inflicted upon a large number of honest and valuable servants of the Government employed on those canal works. I had occasion to spend a day at Cardinal a short while ago, and I learned that the engineer in charge had been instructed to inform every Conservative that his services would no longer be required in connection with the canal work. Now, the hon. gentleman has taken the ground that these persons who have been employed on the canals in Canada, as they are only employed during the summer season, are not permanent employees, and that it is open to the Government, as each season rolls round, to obtain the services of another staff and to sweep away all those that have been in the service of the Government previously. A more cruel and a more unjust policy it is impossible to contemplate. You call these parties temporary employees; I deny it. I say that where honest, industrious and good men have been brought into the service of the Government, and have been induced to spend their own earnings, as in many cases they have done, in erecting houses along the canal for the purpose of enabling them more promptly and better to discharge their duties in connection with the canal, and have been for ten, fifteen, or eighteen years thus employed, to introduce a new rule that dismisses these men after they have spent their hard-earned savings in providing a shelter for themselves and their families, is cruel in the extreme, and is repugnant to every man who loves justice and fair-play. Of course, the Government is continuous, and without bringing any charge or finding fault with employees, except that they have gone to the polls and recorded their votes, the Government have dismissed them, and in doing so they have adopted a policy that will be repugnant to every one who has any sense of justice. I do not intend at this late period of the session to discuss this matter at length, but I may say in conclusion that I was recently informed that the last Conservative employees in connection with the canal near Cardinal have received notice that their services are dispensed with. I have felt it to be my duty to the committee and to honest and industrious employees to again call the attention of the Minister to the course taken.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is scarcely fair to assume that the statements made by the persons to whom he has referred are accurate, and to base a charge against me on those statements. Neither directly nor indirectly, neither expressly nor impliedly have I instructed any of the officers of the department to dismiss men from the Government employment simply because they were Conservatives, and the hon. gentleman in making such a statement has made a statement that is absolutely unwarranted. So far from that being the case, I directed the officers not to act on such lines. I have said that while it was impossible for me to follow all the individual cases, I did not desire them to be dealt with on political grounds, and that the officers of the department must be satisfied that these employees have made themselves obnoxious in these matters; and I have reason to believe from the number of persons who have been retained in the service on the canals, that my instructions have been carried out. The instructions I gave were in this language: that I would not countenance the removal of men from the public service simply for the purpose of placing political friends in their positions. I consider that is a pernicious system, and I agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition in that regard, I will not countenance it; and so far as I am aware, it has not been done. Possibly there may have been some individual instances in which injustice has been done in this particular. I would not be unwilling, if my attention were called to particular cases, either to give them my personal investigation, or to take steps to have the facts ascertained. There was scarcely in the service of the Government in this department one employee who was not known as an active partisan and who was not appointed because of his activity in support of his party; and those men held those positions because they were in active sympathy with the party opposite and were appointed because they were party men. In every part of Canada where the canals are located there is a deep-seated feeling that the men employed on the canals are there because they have actively participated in political contests. That has made the administration of this department more difficult to me than would otherwise have been the case. If those men had been allowed to attend to their business, and had not actively interfered in elections, that feeling would not have grown up. I do not cast any doubt on the sincerity of the hon. gentleman in making his statement, but I say that it is entirely unfounded. Nothing I have said is capable of such a meaning, and nothing I have done can be construed as supporting any such view.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I should be only too glad to accept the statement of the hon. Minister, if I had not very conclusive evidence in the other direction. The hon. gentleman must not forget that on the floor of this House he distinctly declared that it was not possible for him to go into questions relating to employees, and that such cases he would leave in the hands of the member for the constituency if he supported the Government, or the defeated candidate. This was an invitation given by the hon. gentleman in broad and general terms to all his supporters to eject employees from office, without giving their cases investigation; in fact the hon. gentleman himself declared that he could not give attention or consideration to the reasons why these men had been removed. Having given that information, the hon. gentleman must not forget that one of his supporters declared, and he took credit for the declaration, that he had been given carte-blanc to sweep out twenty Government employees in his neighbourhood and put his friends in their places, but he had not done so and the men retained their positions. I am very sorry that the hon. Minister took that course instead of adopting the policy he has just stated he is prepared to follow. The hon. gentleman may say that it would be better for those people to have nothing to do with politics. But my hon. friend must not forget that by law these employees have the right to exercise the franchise, and the Government employee was naturally desirous to support the candidate of the Government by which he was appointed. I do not think the fact that any Government employee goes to the polls quietly and peaceably, without doing it in an offensive way, and exercises a privilege accorded to him by law, should weigh against him. I have stated on former occasions that if any employee takes an active and offensive part in elections and makes himself grossly offensive, he cannot expect to secure immunity from being dealt with, but employees who discharge their duties faithfully and exercise their franchise in a quiet and peaceable manner and without giving offence to any one should be protected.

Mr. McCLEARY. I desire to say a word or two in regard to the question now before the committee. It has been stated by the Minister of Railways and Canals that no man so far as he knows has been dismissed from his position on these canals because he was a Conservative. I want to refer the Minister (Mr. Blair) to an answer he gave me to a question I asked on the 12th of May, in reference to the dismissal of some forty-five men on the Welland Canal, in and about the town of Thorold, where I live, in my county. I have no hesitation in characterizing that answer as being unworthy of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), and derogatory to the high position he holds as head of a very important department in this Government. He first told us that none of the persons named in the question were dismissed from employment on the canal. I presume he based that statement on the idea that because these men were not appointed by Order in Council, or were not on the superannuation list, they were therefore not permanent employees. I can inform him that these men had been on the canal for from fifteen to eighteen years, and so long as they were giving good service, they expected to remain. They were not particularly Tories, for the Conservative party while in power employed Reformers as well. I want to say, however, that the Government are so very careful in their selection of employees this year, that they kept on the Reformers on the canal and put off the Conservatives. The Minister told us that no man was dismissed because he was a Conservative, and let me refer to the answer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) gave. He said:

Before selecting the staff for the current year, I gave explicit instructions to the Superintendent of the Canal, Mr. Thompson (as I did to other superintendents) that he was to take up the list of the employees of last year and give to persons on that list the preference who had given satisfaction in the past, and who had not made themselves obnoxious by active partisanship or participation in the last general elections.

It would follow, I presume, that the men who recorded their votes at the poll would be participating in the election, and if there was no other excuse, this was used as a means to deprive these men of their means of livelihood.

Now, Sir, with all due respect to the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), I want to tell him that I know something of how these men were put off the canal. I have not one word to say derogatory to Mr. Thompson, the superintending engineer of the canal. I think he is a man who would do what is fair and right between man and man, but I know that he had nothing whatever to say as to the men who were put off the canal and as to the men who were to take their places. I know that he was subject to the dictation and direction of the wire-pullers of the Liberal party in the counties of Lincoln and Welland, as to what men should be put off the canal and as to what men should be employed thereon. I challenge the Minister of Railways and Canals, or the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr.

Gibson), if he were here, to deny the statement that the Liberals held caucus meetings time and again up there, and that for weeks and months they were quarrelling among themselves as to who should be put off and who should be taken on the canal. It is misleading to make the statement to the House that Mr. Thompson, the superintending engineer, was directed to keep the best men on, and to use his judgment in that regard. Not only did the Minister of Railways and Canals give the answer I have read, but he continued to say:

It may be true that on one or more of the canals a practice had grown up of buying and selling the places of lockmasters and bridge tenders, and many persons having bought these places from persons who had influence with the late Government, or with members of Parliament, might have come to consider that they had thereby acquired a permanent title to employment; but inasmuch as no portion of the purchase price passed into the Dominion treasury, such a transaction could not be regarded as conferring any such right upon the employee.

I consider that statement as entirely unworthy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair). He has not only deprived these men of their means of making a living, which they had for all these years, but he has added insult to injury by setting them down as men who paid for obtaining the paltry positions they had upon the canal. In their name, I protest against such a charge as that, and in the name of hon. gentlemen who have represented the county of Welland in this Parliament for years, I also protest. I protest against the statement in the name of the public men of the Conservative party of the county of Welland, and I throw back to the Minister of Railways and Canals the insinuation that these men would stoop so low as to accept a pecuniary consideration from the employees on the canal. It may have been that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) had in his mind the political standard that was set up in the province of New Brunswick at a certain time, when hon. gentlemen who were controlling the affairs of that province were charged on the floor of the legislature with this kind of work. Sir, I have never known—and until now I have never even heard it insinuated—that any public man connected with the county of Welland ever looked for financial aid in consequence of getting men a position in the public service. I repeat that the answer of the Minister (Mr. Blair) was uncalled for as it was unnecessary. It is beneath the dignity of the high position he holds as Minister of Railways and Canals. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) further stated that only forty-five men out of about 170 were dismissed from employment on the canal. Let me tell him that the forty-five names of men which I put on the Order paper as being dismissed included only those in my own immediate neighbourhood, whereas, as a matter of fact, some fifty or sixty men near my home in the county of

Mr. McCLEARY.

Lincoln, and on the southern end of the canal, have been dismissed as well. I say such conduct is most uncharitable. It is unheard of in the history of politics in this country, that such a thing should take place, and I sincerely hope that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will put on the brakes and not allow his wire-pullers and heelers in that neighbourhood to further influence him in inflicting injustice and wrong upon the workmen up there.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the Minister (Mr. Blair) how many of the old employees of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal were re-engaged this season?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not give the hon. gentleman the information which he asks, as I have not got it before me. I could get it.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a letter from a friend of mine, dated the 29th of May, and I assume that navigation was open then and that these men would be employed there if their services were continued for the present year. My information is that they were all dismissed except the superintendent of that canal. I have had given to me a list of names, and if this be correct it seems to be altogether unreasonable that these men who were employed there with the understanding that they would be continued in the position during good behaviour should be, without any notice, thrown out of employment. The names that were given to me are as follows:—J. W. Montague, head mechanic and electrician; J. H. Johnston; two clerks, G. E. Griffin and J. W. Hughes; two foremen, A. Carney and T. A. Brown; Sidney Penhorwood, Joseph Marshall, Raymond Miron, William Knight, Walter Williamson, James Dunn, John Biggings, Peter Brown, William Ralph, Thomas Hynes, Joseph Miller, George Shields, William Bell, Herbert Hearst, and two watchmen, one of whom is a widower, who has a family to support, and who has only one leg. This man, believing that he was a permanent employee, put up a small house for himself, and was doing his best to support his family. The others were making similar preparations under the expectation that they would be permanent. I am informed that all or nearly all were men who had taken no active part in politics whatever, but were desirous of faithfully discharging the duties entrusted to them; and yet I am informed that they were all dismissed without any warning. If it is a fact that these men have not been re-employed—and I fancy they would know something about it by the 29th of May—I think it is a great hardship to them, and it is establishing a very bad principle, and one which will not tend to make public servants discharge their duties as faithfully as they otherwise would. I know many of these men personally, and I have known them to be worthy and respectable men, British subjects and good citizens, anxious to do their duty faithfully and honourably in any position in life. If such men are to be thrown out of the employment of the country without a moment's notice, and without any charges being made or sustained against them, I think it is establishing a principle which will tend to the disadvantage of the civil service of Canada.

Mr. McMULLEN. As we are now dealing with the question of canals generally I think it would be well to direct the attention of the Government to various ways in which great saving could be effected. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) spoke in very pointed terms with regard to the action of the Minister. On looking over the expenditure in connection with the Welland Canal, I find that during the last eight or ten years my hon. friend from Welland has participated very largely in the advantage of furnishing lumber supplies without having put in a tender or being called on to tender, the contract being renewed from year to year. The hon. gentleman has drawn the following amounts from the treasury of Canada on this account:—

1885.....	$ 8,652 93
1887.....	8,827 03

Which the hon. gentleman and his partner have received for lumber supplied without tender for the Welland Canal. I have the Auditor General's Report, from which I can prove every item. I draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to this, and I want distinctly to state that we expect that after this the men who want to furnish supplies shall be asked to tender in competition with others, and that where there is reasonable security for the fulfilment of the contract, the lowest tender shall in each case be accepted. The idea of one man with his partner, because he is a favourite of hon. gentlemen opposite when in office, having the privilege of drawing $104,000 from the treasury of this country for supplying lumber to the Welland Canal, and that without tender, is something that I earnestly hope will not be repeated. I want the Government to understand that if they handle matters in that shape, they will have very great difficulty in keeping me in line at any rate,

Mr. McCLEARY. I shall be very brief in dealing with the remarks of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). If he states in his place in this House that the firm with which I have been connected have received $104,000 from the Government of Canada since the year 1885, without tender—

Mr. McMULLEN. You gave one tender, but only one.

Mr. McCLEARY. What the hon. gentleman stated was that my firm had received $104,000 from the Government of this country for supplies to the Welland Canal without tender. I defy the hon. gentleman to prove his statement. He cannot do so, because it is utterly without foundation in fact.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not. I am prepared to prove it before a committee of this House.

Mr. McCLEARY. Let me explain: I think I am entitled to make an explanation. From the time I knew anything about canal matters—and I was born on the Welland Canal, and I know something about the way matters were managed under the regime of the Reform party—the Department of Railways and Canals called for tenders, by advertisement in all the local papers, at any rate; and from 1874 to 1879 there was one firm which alone supplied the lumber and material to the Welland Canal—the firm of N. & O. J. Phelps, of Merritton, who were Liberals.

Mr. TAYLOR. Without tender?

Mr. McCLEARY. I think it was by tender. I think the arrangement was that the Government could discontinue the contract on giving six months' notice, or if the tenderers wished to discontinue, they were to give the Government six months' notice. That firm continued during those five years to furnish the supplies without tender in the same sense as my firm or at least without giving notice, under the same tender and at exactly the same price. When the Conservative Government came into power, or in 1880, I think, they asked for tenders, the Liberal firm continuing to supply lumber up to that year. Well, Sir, we were in the business and we tendered with others. Some hon. member in this House at that time thought there might be something wrong because the firm of McCleary & McLean got the contract and called for the papers. The tenders were brought down, about a dozen or more, I think, and ours proved to be the lowest. That contract was continued. It was exactly on the same lines as the other, as far as the wording was concerned, that is we had to give six months' notice to the Government or the Government had to give us six months' notice before it could be cancelled. The Government, I think in 1885 or 1886, gave us notice of cancellation, and new tenders were invited. We again tendered and competed with every man in the business along the line of the Welland Canal, and miles and miles away from it, and we again got the contract. We were the lowest tenderers every time, and I challenge the hon. gentleman to have the tenders laid on the Table and prove the contrary. Afterwards, we ourselves gave notice that we wanted the contract cancelled, and new tenders were invited. Again we competed with others, and again we were the lowest and got the contract. In 1891, or 1892, I think it was, the Department of Railways and Canals changed its policy of contracting for supplies on the canals and other Government works, and adopted the system of calling for tenders every year. We got notice from the superintending engineer of canals that our contract was cancelled, and we were invited with others to bid for the supplies, which we did, and got the contract. The only time that we got the contract without putting in a bid was when the acting superintending or the superintending engineer of the canals wrote us to know whether we would be willing to supply the Government at the same rates as for the previous year, and we replied that we would. That was in 1893 or 1894, I think. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have given you the history of my connection, and my firm's connection, with the supplying of material for the Welland Canal. Let me say that while the supplies, in some years, have been large, in others they have been small, and we never got one dollar out of the public exchequer for which we did not give good value, and I defy the hon. gentleman to prove the contrary before any committee he may choose. I declare here that we never got the supplies of material for the Welland Canal without tender. There may have been certain items not scheduled in the contract which the Government might want, and they would ask us by letter at what rates we would supply them, and they would ask other people at the same time. Several times that was done. The superintendent of the canal would write us that there were certain items not specified in the contract, which were required, and ask us to name a price. With that exception, the statement of the hon. gentleman is utterly without foundation.

Mr. McMULLEN. All I have to say in reply to the hon. gentleman is this: The papers are before Parliament, and if we live to meet again, I want him to understand that this matter will be investigated. He has charged me with making a statement which is false. I am prepared to prove that it is true. Since 1885, not a tender was asked but one, and that was smothered up. The hon. gentleman got excessive prices, and I want him to understand that we will have an investigation.

Mr. McCLEARY. I hope the hon. gentleman will remember that he is addressing this House, and that what he says goes down in "Hansard," and I here challenge him to ask for an investigation at our next session.

Mr. CLANCY. We have had a most extraordinary scene brought about by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). My hon. friend from Welland was properly calling attention to dismissals, and instead of the Minister of Railways and Canals defending his conduct, we had the hon. member for North Wellington, who is the standing apologist for the Government, coming to his defence. How did that hon. gentleman answer the charge of improper dismissals? He answered it by making a personal attack on my hon. friend from Welland, by sending out broadcast to the country slanders which my hon. friend challenges him to have investigated by a parliamentary committee. The hon. member for North Wellington, however, has done all that he proposed to accomplish by circulating the slander, but I do not think the House will envy the position which that hon. gentleman holds of being slanderer in general, as well as apologist in general for the Government. The hon. gentleman has declared that tenders were not asked for. Has he discovered that too much was paid or that the country has suffered any loss? Let him turn to his friends in Ontario who have laid down the doctrine that it is a great sin to invite tenders, that goods can be bought much cheaper in the open market. The hon. gentleman's conduct was worthy of him, and no one will be inclined to dispute his possession of a role which fits him so well.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we should pay a little more attention to the statement of the hon. member for North Wellington. He said to this House, without qualification, that the hon. member for Welland had furnished supplies to the Welland Canal for ten years without ever having tendered for the contract. And when he is confronted by the hon. member for Welland with the untruthfulness of that statement, he makes another statement which he says he can prove to the House. His first statement he evidently admits to be untrue by substituting, when challenged, another one for it. It is time that charges of this kind should be brought to the attention of the House and investigated. The hon. member for Welland says that he knew the facts long ago and proposes to have them investigated at some future period. But that is not satisfactory. The hon. gentleman sends forth slanders which, if not contradicted, would be very damaging to the hon. member for Welland. Every man has a character to sustain, and the House should not allow the character of hon. gentlemen to be subjected to such unwarranted attacks as the one made by the hon. member for North Wellington without taking some steps to protect itself and assert its own dignity.

With reference to another matter, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said in the strongest terms he could use that the statement that the Government had dismissed employees simply because they were Conservatives was absolutely unwarranted. He said further that he had given instructions to the engineers on the canals to ascertain if the men were good men, and that their services were required, and that they had not taken any partisan part in the election. Why, that statement was absolutely contradicted by the hon. member for North Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost), who told this House that he had carte-blanche on the section of the Rideau Canal in his own constituency, to dismiss twenty-two men. He told us that he had absolute authority from the Railways and Canals Department to do this. That was his statement to the House. He further said that he had not exercised his power to dismiss those men, because they were good men, presumably, and performed their duties faithfully. It is highly creditable for the hon. member for North Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost) that he acted fairly. But how does that affect the Minister of Railways and Canals, who has made that statement to-day as he had made it before, that he had given his engineers these impartial directions of which he speaks. I have no doubt that the hon. member for North Leeds and Grenville spoke the truth when he made that statement. Then what becomes of the statement of the Minister of Railways that he had not given such authority? If that authority was given to the hon. member for North Leeds and Grenville, we know, from the results along the Welland Canal and in other places, that the same power was given to other members of Parliament or to other committees, simply at their wish to dismiss these men from the positions they had held and appoint others. If men have acted as offensive partisans in the election, there can be no objection to the Government taking the course they have taken. But, as a general rule, the men working on the canals have simply exercised their right of voting. There is no crime in that. The law confers that right upon them and calls upon them to exercise it, and to dismiss a man for recording his vote, especially where dismissal subjects him to hardship and loss of property, as in the case of men who have built houses to live in depending upon their employment, is a serious grievance. Especially is this the case when men have but small remuneration. These men on the canals do not work in the winter time, and I suppose they are not paid for the winter time. It may be said that these men were influenced by the Government to take an active part in the election. If they did so, they became active partisans and must suffer the consequence. But, in some cases at least, this was not the case. Several cases have come to my knowledge of men who simply exercised the right to vote, indeed, I know of one case of a man who had not even done that, because there was not a candidate to his mind; and it is quite unjustifiable for the Minister to dismiss these men. But the Minister said that the instructions he gave were to the effect that men who had not taken an offensive part in the election but had simply exercised their right to vote—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, no.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; that is the effect of what he said. I took his words down, I think. He said that these men had sympathy with the Conservative party, and there was a deep feeling against them on account of their "taking part in politics or participating in the election." Well, now, recording one's vote is "participating in the election" in the most effective way. So, if a man simply records his vote he is liable to dismissal.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). No, that has always been allowed.

Mr. WALLACE. But it is no longer allowed according to the statement made a few minutes ago by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). I am sure that he will find his statement recorded in "Hansard" as I have given it—that participating in the election (which may be simply recording one's vote) is regarded as a ground for dismissal. I would like to give some cases within my own knowledge. One was that of a man who said that there was no candidate who had his sympathy—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) allow me? I do not think it will be found when "Hansard" comes out, that he correctly quoted the words I used a moment ago. But if what I said is taken together, every word with its context, I think it will be seen that I have no thought of suggesting to the committee that I considered the mere fact of a person voting in an election a reason why his tenure of office should be disturbed. I think it will be found that I said "active participation" and "offensive action" in the election. I would ask the hon. gentleman to accept my statement that that is what was in my mind, even if I failed to give correct expression to it.

Mr. WALLACE. I accept what the Minister says as to his statement of this afternoon. But I have here a statement which, no doubt, he read to the House, and for which he must be held responsible. In answer to a question he said that he gave instructions to give the preference to persons who have not made themselves obnoxious "by active partisanship or participation in the last general election." So we find the very words repeated that I attributed to him. Simple participation is a ground—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On what page is that?

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman will find it at the bottom of page 2199 and the top of page 2200. Now, there is a statement which, I presume, was written by the Minister and read to the House, in which he said that participation in the last election was sufficient ground for dismissal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) will do me the justice to read the statement as it is. It clearly refers to "active partisanship" and "active participation." If a man has made—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman said what he meant, I am glad to hear it, but I think the construction of the sentence would not carry the word "active" beyond the word "or."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I meant; for, to imply that merely voting in an election was to be a ground for dismissal is altogether an error.

Mr. WALLACE. Then take the Minister on his own statement that he meant what he did not say, that he meant "active participation." Active partisanship and active participation are exactly the same thing. There is a large number of men who have not taken an active part in the election, who were not active partisans or active participants in the election, but who were dismissed. I would ask the Minister of Railways if he will restore the men who he has unjustly dismissed and who have taken no part in the election. That would be the sequence of his own statement. I think he is in duty bound if these cases are called to his attention, as they will be right away, to restore these men to the position he has taken from them, because of his having been informed that they were active participants in the election. I would ask the hon. Minister: Will he restore these men who were not active partisans or active participants in the election?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will answer the hon. gentleman when he is through.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to have an answer now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not prepared to say what I will do as to that. I am willing that the hon. gentleman should call my attention to any case he has in mind. I will inquire and endeavour to satisfy my mind whether the charge of active and offensive partisanship could be brought home to the party.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. WALLACE. The Minister said that he was going to take the word of a member of the House as relieving him from the necessity of an investigation. Now, if he is going to take the word of a Liberal member of Parliament, surely the word of a member on this side of the House is just as good as the word of a member on that side. Our word in matters whereof we have personal knowledge, should be taken in just the same way; and if the Minister is going to act on the word of a member of Parliament, he must disregard the words of the minority of members of Parliament.

Mr. FISSET. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, from the very outset of this session, and almost at every sitting of the House, we have heard hon. gentlemen opposite raking up in season and out of season this question of dismissals from the public service; but I think, this afternoon, the debate has been assuming a rather alarming character. The hon. gentlemen opposite have no doubt forgotten the wholesale dismissals that occurred in 1879. Of course, the hon. gentlemen opposite, for the most part, did not sit in this House, at that time; but, as I then happened to occupy a seat in Parliament, I remember perfectly well what took place. I have not forgotten the manner in which Regis Cardinal was dismissed from employment on the Beauharnois Canal, and how it broke the poor man's heart. And yet the hon. gentlemen have been whining and complaining with respect to a few dismissals made by the Government of the day. Why, to mention only the riding of Rimouski, which I represent in this House, and the dismissals that formerly took place there, after the defeat of Sir Hector Langevin in 1878, what did we see then? Not only were the Liberal employees summarily dismissed from their positions, but even those who were suspected of having Liberal proclivities were turned out. Of course, we have no canals in the county of Rimouski, but we have the Intercolonial Railway. Let me give to the House the names of a few employees who were decapitated, as I have not a full list of the names before me. In 1879, the late Government proceeded with beheading the postmasters. And they were dismissed without any warning, without any investigation having been held. They were merely told that their services were dispensed with. But now, it is quite the reverse, and when we go to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and press for the removal of some employees who have taken an active part in politics, we have all the trouble in the world to prevail upon him doing so. And yet it would only be dealing even-handed justice to our friends who have suffered great hardships in times past, if they were restored to the positions that have been taken from them. Let me give the names of a few station agents who were dismissed from the Intercolonial in the county of Rimouski. D. Bouchard, station agent at St. Simon; Francis Rioux, station agent at St. Fabien; J. A. Talbot, agent at Rimouski; John Trottier, agent at St. Luce; A. Godbout, at Ste. Luc. These six employees were thrown out of their former employment without trial. And yet, since the Liberals have come into power, there has not been one station agent dismissed upon the Intercolonial, in the county of Rimouski, notwithstanding that numerous complaints have been lodged against many of them. The hon. Minister of Railways, I hope, will no longer turn a deaf ear to my prayer and will make the investigations I have been asking for. I may further mention the case of Joseph Bourdeau, superintendent of the shops at St. Flavie. That gentleman had been turned out, but I may say that he has been re-instated in his old position by the Hon. Mr. Borden, the then acting Minister of Railways. P. Comeau, roadmaster, from St. Flavie to Riviere du Loup, was formerly dismissed without cause and without trial. This gentleman has been re-instated in his old position, owing to the fact that a vacancy had occurred, through the death of the former occupant, but nobody was driven out of his position to make room for him; and I am pretty sure, if the office-holder was still living, the hon. Minister of Railways would never have consented to remove him in order to provide a place for Comeau.

Here are the names of a few employees and foremen who were also summarily dismissed, without any investigation having taken place: Mathieu Bouchard, of St. Simon; Fabien Ouellette, of St. Fabien; Cyprien Rioux, of Le Bic; Michel L'Evêque, of Rimouski; Marcellin Beauchesne, of St. Fabien; Elzear Dubé, section No. 2 of St. Fabien; Pascal Beaulieu, of St. Flavie, and many others whose names I could give. Let us now come to the dismissals that were made in the Government shops at St. Flavie, in the same county of Rimouski. These men were thrown out of employment and their positions given to new men, without any investigation, without any notice. I will give only the names of a few men who were turned out at the time: Joseph Bourdault, superintendent of the shops at St. Flavie; Alex. Madore, Jos. Trepanier, Chas. Madore, Paul Gagnon, James Pagé, Narcisse Michaud, Georges Beaulieu, senior, Georges Beaulieu, junior, Johnny Gillois, Paul Dubé, John Grant, Octave Valcourt and Ferdinand Emond. Remember, Mr. Chairman, that I do not give all the names of those who were dismissed from employment in 1878, in the county of Rimouski alone, and all of them employed in the railway shops at Ste. Flavie. I have only given the names of those men who are now re-instated in their positions, after having been turned out by the old Government. Naturally, the Government of the day have dispensed with the services of a few men who were not required, but the number of the late dismissals sinks into insignificance when compared to the wholesale dismissals made by the Conservative administration in 1879. Those poor workingmen who were then ruthlessly driven out of their positions and deprived of their bread were as worthy of our sympathies as the men who have been dismissed on the Welland Canal, and upon whom the hon. gentlemen opposite are now lavishing their sympathies. What part had those men taken in the elections of 1878? They had hardly participated in them at all. Some of them had merely attended public meetings, and that was all. But things were quite different at the last elections. After having so long been on the winning side, and being far from presuming that the Liberals would defeat the Conservative administration, those men rushed headlong into the struggle. Not only did they all vote, to one man, at this last election, but they took a most active part in the contest. The Intercolonial Railway employees, in the counties of Rimouski and Temiscouata, represent a very large vote, three hundred, I believe. Those people gave a solid vote against us, at the elections of 1891 and 1896, hardly one of them having registered his vote in favour of the Liberal candidate. I now come to deal with the matter of the dismissal of postmasters in the county of Rimouski. When the Mackenzie Government acceded to power in 1874, they made no dismissals in the county I represent here. And yet, notwithstanding that fact, in the case of these men, when the Conservatives came into power in 1878, all those who were Liberals or supposed so, were turned out. I may say, in this connection, to the credit of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) that he has, upon my demand, made a few dismissals, but there still remains a good deal of work to be done in that line. We have an important post office at Rimouski, yielding an income of from $800 to $1,000 a year, the postmaster of which, Mr. Alphonse Couillard was dismissed from his position at that time. I may mention several other dismissals that then took place, and amongst others Mr. Rouleau, postmaster of Pointe-aux-Péres, Philippe Saucier, of Sandy Bay, L. N. Blais, of Matane, which comes next to Rimouski, as a revenue producing post office, Mr. Vidal Roy, of St. Fabien, Mr. Jos. Dubé, mail-carrier, who were all turned out by the Conservative Administration. I could mention many other names, but I confine myself to the most important post offices in the county of Rimouski, the occupants of which were dismissed. We have two lighthouses for the maritime service, one of them at LeBic, and the other at Matane. In 1879, the guardians of these two lighthouses, Thos. LeBel and François Dionne, were summarily dismissed without notice, without trial being severally told that their services were no longer required. Would it not be dealing fairly by Mr. Dionne to reinstate him in the position which was taken from him? I consider it would only be fair-play, and I hope the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies) will deal out even-handed justice in this case and in many other cases which I am now pressing upon my hon. friends, in the hope that they will redress all the grievances of these poor people. We have also at Rimouski two Government steamers. In 1879, the officers on board these steamers were turned out without trial, having merely been notified that the Government no longer required their services. The officers in question were Captain Pierre Lavoie, Joseph and James Lavoie. A year after they had been dismissed, Lavoie and his sons perished at sea, as, in order to earn their living, they had been obliged to betake themselves to their former avocation on board their small schooner. All these people had taken no active part in politics and were, at any rate, guilty of less offensive partisanship than the men I am now in vain asking the Ministers to dismiss did exhibit upon several occasions. Bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, that I only mentioned a few of the most conspicuous names in the list of the dismissals which took place in 1879. All those dismissals were decided upon after Sir Hector Langevin had been defeated in the county of Rimouski, in the fall of 1878, and without any investigation being held, without any trial. Now, would it not be proper for the hon. gentlemen opposite instead of raking up the question of a few dismissals made by this Government, to first consider what the Conservative Administration did in the same line in 1879? The Government now in power have redressed a few cases of grievances, in reinstating in their former positions the men who had been unjustly driven out of them. That was a mere act of justice and fair-play on the part of the Government and I give the credit for it to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). The Government, I hope, will go ahead in the same direction thus meting out justice to the old Liberal employees of the county of Rimouski, who were so ruthlessly treated by the Conservative Government.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. Minister tell me what charges are made, if any, against those who were dismissed from the canal, and by whom they were made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the information before me. I am not aware that any changes have taken place in the personnel of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Mr. SPROULE. I am instructed that at least 22 of them were dismissed, and so far as my information goes, none of them have been re-engaged. The information I have is of the 29th of May, and I presume they would be employed on the works by this time, if they were re-engaged.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I mean the charges that were made against them, and the correspondence in connection with it—would the Minister have any objections to bring that down?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no information upon the subject at all in my possession; but if there is any information of the kind to procure, I shall procure it certainly. I will take means to ascertain just what the state of the list is as respects that canal.

Mr. SPROULE. And let us have it before all the canal items are passed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will endeavour to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. As one item is to be kept for general discussion, I would ask the Minister if he would be kind enough to furnish the House, either at that time or before, with information as to the number of men who have been either discharged or whose employment has been allowed to lapse and their places filled by others during the present season on these different canals. Would he also give us the reason of the dismissals? I think we ought to have that information, on account of the discussion which has arisen, and it will not be a difficult statement for his officers to make up.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Before we pass from this discussion in which we are now engaged, I want to say that I hear now for the first time from one of the members of the House, that the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost) had stated in the House that he had absolute authority from me to dismiss 18 or 20 men on the Rideau Canal. I was not present in the House when such a statement was made, but I will look into the "Hansard" and ascertain just what the statement is which has been referred to. I think it must appear that the hon. gentleman did not put it just in that form, because I do not hesitate to say that the hon. gentleman would not be justified in making so direct a statement as that on that subject. The hon. gentleman would no doubt feel that upon his being satisfied from his own knowledge that any of these persons in the canal service within his riding had come within the description of those who had forfeited their rights to remain in the service, he would probably be justified in inferring that he had such authority. It may possibly be that to the hon. gentleman personally, in conversation, I may have said something which would lead him to draw that inference. But as for giving to any hon. gentleman in the House supporting the Government or otherwise, a carte-blanche to turn out people from the public service, either on the canals or railways, I did not do so to my own knowledge, and intending to give any such authority.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 1939 of the "Hansard," he will read there what the hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost) said :

In my own constituency, where there is scarcely a Liberal office-holder, not one single man has been discharged. I know that on the Rideau Canal, where there were over 22 officials suspended last fall, when the Minister himself gave me a list and I could put any official in that I liked,—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FROST. Certainly I could, I had that privilege ; but what did I do? I told the Minister to put back every man ; not one single man in the whole riding was dismissed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not been able yet to refer to the citation from "Hansard" which the hon. member has just read, but I will have an opportunity, I dare say, to do so later. Now, having reference to what was said by the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) respecting the Welland Canal, entirely irrespective of what he may have heard or what he may know, I wish to reaffirm the statement I previously made that my instructions to the general superintendent, Mr. Thompson, were clearly and explicitly as I have stated. We had in the office, as he had doubtless in his office, a list of the persons who were employed on that canal during the past year, and Mr. Thompson received my instructions. I made them clear to him and to other superintendents of the canal who were in my office at the same time and they heard the direction I gave, the Deputy Minister was also present, and I think I did not fail to make myself clear on the subject. As a result of the instructions which I gave to the superintendent, he returned a list of the employees on the Welland Canal with his suggestions and recommendations as to the changes that should be made, and that list was approved and sent back to the superintendent, and accordingly the persons were employed. Now, when the hon. member for Welland says that in addition to the persons whom he named the other day, he can furnish the names of fifty or sixty others who were dismissed and who were not then named by him, I wish to tell the hon. gentleman that, though I know nothing at all with regard to the facts, I have not verified the lists since they were placed in my hands some time ago, I believe that if he names fifty or sixty persons beyond those which he has mentioned here in the notice that he gave a while ago he will name a large number of persons who are to-day in the employ of the Government upon the Welland Canal.

There were no such numbers as he has stated of 100 people removed from the service on that canal. There are, I believe, as he correctly stated, 180 or perhaps 190 persons employed on the canal, and I am satisfied that there have been no such considerable number of persons removed. If he will furnish me with the names of 50 or 60 people to whom he refers, I will furnish him with the names of persons who are now employed on the canal.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman says that he gave his instructions to Mr. Thompson, the engineer of the Welland Canal, to report as to the necessary and desirable men. Did he give the same instructions to the superintendent of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The superintendent of the Sault Canal was not present with the other superintendents. He has not been here, and he did not receive any instructions from me.

Mr. McCLEARY. I have no doubt the instructions given by the hon. Minister of Railways were as he has stated ; also, that he instructed Mr. Thompson to only put off men who were active partisans.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Offensive partisans in elections.

Mr. McCLEARY. While I accept that statement made by the hon. Minister, I am bound to say this, which is absolutely true, that Mr. Thompson obtained his information and directions from outside sources. I know there were men, some of the names being those of men whose names I have already given, who asked if they were going to get back on the canal, that spring was coming and they would like to make arrangements for the summer's work ; and Mr. Thompson was unable to tell them. I believe the Minister wishes to be fair, and that he intended no man should be put off unless he had been an active partisan. Now, I will go a little further, and I will ask this : If I show that the bulk of these men, 90 per cent of the names to which I referred in regard to dismissals, only voted, and some of them did not vote, will he restore them to their positions ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It appears to me extraordinary, as no doubt it does to a majority of members of the House, that hour and hour, and day after day, if not month after month, the time is taken up, when there are very important propositions to be considered, in discussing the action of a Minister or the Government with respect to dismissals. For myself personally I stated early in the session that I would be sorry to see any member of the civil service dismissed, without good cause, even if he had exercised to some considerable extent his political privileges as a politician. I do not wish to be understood, however, as admitting that it is desirable or in the interest of the public service that any one occupying a position in the service should be engaged in politics. I think it is against the officer's own interests, against the interests of the civil service and against the public interests. At the same time I feel that we have been kept hour after hour and day after day with miserable discussions on this subject, many of them being very ill-timed and unfortunate. As regards temporary employees, because the employees in question are nothing more or less, if the Minister and the Government take the responsibility of saying who is capable and who is not, they act on the recommendations of the officers of the departments, and this has been the answer given in almost every case by Ministers. With respect to the gentleman to whom the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) has referred, the Minister should make an inquiry into his conduct. If we are paying to this superintendent of the canal a large salary, then he should have some duties to perform other than hobnobbing with the hon. member and keeping him posted hour by hour and day by day in regard to what is being done. The hon. member seems to have more information than the Minister received from the superintendent of the canal. The hon. member has knowledge of every little detail, and it is time the conduct of the superintendent should be inquired into. I repeat that the country is paying the superintendent a large salary, and he should have something better to do than to occupy his time in posting the hon. member to come here and raise these issues in regard to temporary employees. During the many years the party opposite occupied the Treasury benches, can any member give the name of a Liberal in politics who received employment? After that party came into power, was any position ever given to such a man cut of the hundreds and thousands of positions available?

Mr. McDUGALL. I could name hundreds of strong Liberals in my county who were given Government employment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. After 1878 the Minister of Railways made dismissals by wholesale, without investigation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I state here most emphatically that that statement is not only untrue, but is the very reverse of the truth. I have stated, and I challenge the closest investigation, because the truth can be brought out by officials of the Railway Department, that when I reorganized the department, I instructed my officers in making large reductions in the staff to do so without favour or affection, and to retain the best men, whether Liberals or Conservatives, and I was attacked by my own friends for having relieved a number of them from their employment, while I retained strong Liberals in the department. I can show that from the highest positions down through the department, we selected the most responsible and efficient men, and retained a great many strong Liberals who had been appointed by Mr. Mackenzie. I desire to repeat that the statement made is not only untrue, but is the very reverse of truth.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I still abide by the statement I have just made to the House about the county of Rimouski, and I accept the challenge of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). I maintain that, after the elections of 1878, when Sir Hector Langevin was defeated, all the Liberal public servants, and even those who were suspected of being so, were dismissed without any investigation, without any trial. Let me advance a still stronger evidence. The other day, as I happened to inquire from one of the most important officials in the Railway Department why they were not following now the same course they had pursued in 1878; the reason is, he said, that our instructions are quite different from what they were formerly. We must now comply with the instructions of the Minister. If any evidence were needed in support of what I say, I might call to witness Mr. Pineauit, the member for Matane, who was an ear-witness. Therefore, in 1878, they were instructed to dismiss public employees without any investigation or trial, and the hon. leader of the Opposition cannot substantiate his statement. I may say that all what is said about dismissals, with the exception of Regis Cardinal, refers only to the county of Rimousiki.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I accept the statement made by the hon. leader of the Opposition as to the instructions given by himself personally. But I want to submit this point, that whatever were the instructions he gave and whatever was his desire, the result was that many men were dismissed. With respect to the province of Ontario, the few Liberals appointed, were given humble positions, but permanent positions, and it cannot be denied that hon. gentlemen opposite took the earliest opportunity to dismiss them because they had been appointed by a Liberal Government. Proof of the statement I can make. I want now to come to the discussion of the more honest and manly position with respect to this whole matter. I say it is the duty of the Government so far as ordinary officers, temporary employees are concerned, to give those appointments to their friends, or on recommendations made by their friends.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The facts relating to the Weights and Measures matter, are not familiar to me, and it is a long time since it happened, but I think the circumstances of the case were as follows. A vast number of persons were appointed, and the Weights and Measures Department was reorganized and a great reduction effected, by which it was absolutely necessary to dispense with the services of a large number of officers.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That measure, originally introduced by the hon. gentleman himself, was put in force by the Mackenzie Government. What happened was this. An Act of Parliament was passed abolishing the whole thing, and all the officers whom we appointed, with perhaps two or three exceptions out of several hundred, were dismissed. The year after, the department was reorganized and circumstances caused a totally new set of officials to be appointed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They could not have been dismissed if the offices were abolished by Act of Parliament.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) can have it that way if he prefers. It was something like the dodge by which gentlemen who could not take contracts in their own name while members of Parliament obtained contracts under the interposition of a limited liability company. These weights and measures officials were all disposed of, and new men were put in their places.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is very easy for hon. gentlemen to make statements pro or con with regard to these matters, but I am in the judgment of members of this House, and of the people of the country when I say, that the facts are as I have stated them. During all the long years the Conservatives were in power, no person ever heard of any Liberal receiving an appointment or a favour from them. It is small, and narrow, and childish for gentlemen on that side of the House, now that they are out of power, to grumble because their recommendations for appointments are not taken. That is what it amounts to. They want, for one reason or another, to say what men shall be appointed on the canals this summer, and they seem to forget that circumstances have changed. Personally I take issue with the action of the Government in this matter. I say that the Government are elected to administer the affairs of this country, they are responsible for their administration, and when they are dealing with a permanent official they should give him fair-play. No matter what his politics may have been, he should not be interfered with so long as he is faithfully discharging his duties, and if there is a complaint against him and he demands a hearing, he should have a fair and just opportunity to defend himself. But, Sir, if in the opinion of the Minister, an official is not capable and is not faithful in the discharge of his duties, then, to my mind, it is simply a waste of time and money for a Minister to appoint commissioners. The Minister should at once take the responsibility of dismissing that man, and then look to the support of Parliament and the country to sustain him. I have reason to respect my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) for his political knowledge and sagacity, but if he were in charge of an important department, and if he were satisfied that an official, high or low, was not performing his duty properly, he would be the last man to be embarrassed and hampered in his department by retaining an official with whom he was not satisfied.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not the point under discussion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the point under discussion. If a Minister is satisfied that an official in his department is not discharging his duties, it is his duty to make a change at once, and to ask Parliament and the country to sustain him. I believe, Sir, that if a Minister acts in good faith in this respect, the people of this country will sustain him. Now, with regard to these temporary positions, and these little contracts, we find the present Government from day to day and from week to week dealing in a most generous manner with their opponents. It doubtless is the best business method to give the contract to the lowest tenderer, irrespective of politics. That is the system adopted by the present Government, and it is a new system. We never heard of such a thing in the past, and I trust, Sir, it will work for the public interest. Let me ask any Conservative member of the House who was here in previous Parliaments, would he not raise a nice row if the Minister made an appointment in his constituency without consulting him, and without regard to the political persuasion of the person who got the appointment? What was done in the past was that the Government appointed the friends of their supporters. This Government has adopted an entirely different system from that heretofore in vogue in the matter of granting contracts. They let the contract to the lowest tenderer, and we know that if that system is honestly carried out it will work to the best interests of the country at large. But with regard to appointments, I say that the Ministers are responsible for their conduct and they should take the full responsibility. It is unfortunate that the time of the House should be taken up by hon. gentlemen opposite grumbling and complaining, and demanding that this Government should do what they themselves never for a moment proposed to do when in power. These hon. gentlemen opposite never appointed their political adversaries to office, and we know they would raise the biggest possible kind of row if their party were in power, and if the Government made these temporary appointments in their constitucies without consulting them. The Ministers of the present Government, and the Minister of Railways especially, have been erring on the generous side, and in almost every case the officials of the late Government have been reappointed to office, unless there have been reports against them for improper conduct, for incapacity, or something of that kind. If any gentlemen in this House have reason to complain, it is the Liberal supporters of the Government whose friends are asking them for positions, while the Government are giving the positions to those who opposed these Liberal members. It is very easy for an hon. gentleman to stand up in the House and say, such and such a man did not take an active part in politics, but the people in the vicinity know whether that man was an active politician or not, and the member of this House who recommends his dismissal on that ground, is responsible to his constituents for his action. Anyhow, I do not know that these temporary employees have any particular claim. They know that they were only getting temporary employment. It is a fact that when the Conservatives were in power, they did not make the same appointments every season. We have plenty of evidence in this House, that the Conservative Government left it to the member for the county to make nominations, and we know that certain of the Conservative members not being satisfied with the men they had appointed one year, recommended that others should be appointed in their places for the ensuing year. I do say, that the Minister of Railways has dealt most generously with these dismissals in giving the instructions he has, and in carrying them out, more than to the letter, because he has reappointed to these temporary positions almost every man that served under the late Government. And still, for the few changes that have been made, the time of the House is taken up by grumbling and finding fault and making all kinds of representations which I do not think any sensible man would take any stock in. It is a misrepresentation to say that these are dismissals. These people all know that when the season comes round, whatever party is in power, it is by the favour of those who hold the patronage whether they are re-engaged or not. So far as I am personally concerned, I would be very sorry if any member of the Government did an injustice to any man in the service; but, after the generous way in which they are dealing with these matters, and after all this grumbling, I think it is time to tell these hon. gentlemen that we are responsible, and are prepared to answer to the House and the country for the way in which we deal with these matters.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has adopted a very curious mode of promoting the business of the committee or of directing the attention of the committee to the question before it. The hon. gentleman has opened up a wide field for discussion on a very serious question. He treats with supreme contempt the idea of the time of this House being taken up with such petty matters as the dismissal of civil servants who have honestly and faithfully discharged their duties for many years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not say any such thing. The hon. gentleman contradicted me by saying that the statement I made was not true. He knows that I stated, as I did on a former occasion, that I would be no party to dismissing a permanent official who did his duty, and I think he ought to accept that statement, and say exactly what I did say.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. From the time the hon. gentleman rose to his feet until he sat down he was occupied in ridiculing the idea of the time of this House being wasted with the petty story of the dismissal of public employees.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. It was not about dismissals; it was about the re-employment of temporary employees during the season.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman say that a man who eighteen years ago was placed in the public employment on the canal system of this country, who has been steadily employed for eighteen years whenever the season came round, who was induced to invest his hard earnings to build a house to shelter himself and his family, is not entitled to be protected in the position he has occupied during all those years, because he is not in the permanent civil service of the country. I say a more frightful act of injustice it is impossible for any person to put before this House. I say more: this is one of the most important questions which this committee or this House has ever had before it. We have had, Sir, since the regime of this new Administration, the spoils system introduced for the first time—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, for the first time in the history of Canada we have had the doctrine propounded, "to the victors belong the spoils;" and it has been carried to an extent to which no party in this country ever before dreamed of carrying it. From the very highest position under the Government, that of Deputy Minister, down to the canal employees and the employees on the Intercolonial Railway, who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, from one end of this country to the other, hundreds of honest and faithful public servants have been driven out of their positions, and their positions filled by the hungry partisans and supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite. In the Department of Railways and Canals that system has been carried to an extent to which no gentleman who has ever filled that office before has carried it. Hundreds of persons, who for the time being are in the power of that hon. gentleman, are now driven out of the positions in which they had been honestly earning their bread, and doing faithful service to this country, for the purpose of providing for the partisans of the Government, and for no other reason. I say that under these circumstances it is time that the country understood that this is a new policy, for which no justification has existed in the past. Take any department of the public service, and what do you find? You find all over this country a policy introduced of driving out of the public service men who have faithfully discharged their duties, and against whom nothing can be alleged except that they are Conservatives and have been accustomed to record their votes in favour of their party. Now, Sir, let me as a matter of evidence read a letter from a gentleman, who, for a long time sat in this House as the representative of the county of Inverness. It is dated Mabou, Inverness, 13th May, and is signed by H. Cameron, a gentleman who is well known to the members of this House. He says:

Sir,—I notice that the dismissal of Dominion officials has been discussed in Parliament.

Walter Lawrence, postmaster, Cheticamp, vigorously opposed the late Dominion Government for eighteen years, yet he still holds his office.

For eighteen years he had fought the late Government and the gentleman who was sent here to support it; and yet he was allowed to retain his position, and holds it to-day.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). They were afraid to dismiss him, because there was nobody else to take the position.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is not a man who has sat in this House with the late hon. member for the county of Inverness who will venture to question the accuracy of any statement he makes:

John P. McFarlane, postmaster, Margaree Harbour, vigorously opposed the late Government at the general elections of 1887 and 1891, while Dr. McLennan, M.P., then supported the Government.

The hon. gentleman who now sits in this House as the member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) was then a Conservative, and this gentleman opposed him when he was a Conservative.

It was said that McFarlane was favourable to John McKeen in the late Dominion election. Although the Government declined to entertain charges then made by Dr. McLennan against McFarlane before his own conversion, yet the present Government dismissed him from the position of postmaster shortly after taking the reins of government.

Dr. McLennan, as a Conservative, made charges of political partisanship against this man, and called upon the Conservative Government to dismiss him; but he was retained, in spite of the application of the Conservative candidate, and he has been dismissed by the present Government from his position.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Will the hon. gentleman allow me one moment?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will allow the hon. gentleman after I finish this letter, because he will find that he has a good deal to answer besides that:

Charles McDonald, postmaster, East Lake Ainslie, vigorously opposed the late Government for eighteen years, yet he holds his office.

The sons and assistants of Mrs. McDonald, postmistress of Whycomah, vigorously opposed the late Dominion Government, yet they were not dismissed.

Donald McDonald, postmaster, Mabou Harbour, and his sons vigorously opposed the late Government, and he was not dismissed.

Alexander Thompson, late postmaster, Port Hood, opposed the late Government, and he was not disturbed, he himself having resigned on leaving the place.

Alexander McDonald, postmaster, Seaside, opposed the late Government, while holding his office, and was not disturbed.

Duncan Cameron, postmaster, Creymore, vigorously opposed the late Government, and he was not dismissed.

John McMaster, postmaster, Princeville, vigorously opposed the late Government all his lifetime, yet he acted as postmaster for a quarter of a century, and is not yet dismissed.

Peter Campbell, postmaster, Glencoe, opposed the late Government, yet he holds his office.

James McDonald, postmaster, West Bay, vigorously opposed the Conservative party for eighteen years, and is now M.P.P. for Inverness; yet he was left in his office.

There were two Conservative postmasters, Lachlan McDougall, Whycomah, and Donald Campbell, of Margaree Forks, dismissed after an investigation; also, Angus McDonald, of Port Hood, and Isaac McLeod, of Strathlorne, after investigation, without my consent, as Conservative member for Inverness, during the reign of the Conservative party, as the official papers will prove.

In a word, there was not one Dominion official in Inverness dismissed for political reasons, and only for gross neglect of duty proven before a proper tribunal, after sufficient notice had been given them for self-defence; and even in such cases Conservatives were dismissed, as well as Liberals.

The present Government dismissed John P. McFarlane, postmaster, Margaree, without trial.

Severin Aucoin, sub-collector, or preventive officer, Cheticamp, was dismissed without investigation because, it is alleged, that he seized smuggled goods and was too efficient an official in the eyes of the Grand Etang Doucettes, one of whom is now M.P.P. for Inverness. The Customs Department has the particulars of such seizures within the past three years. He was dismissed without notice.

The present Government dismissed Joseph Deveaux, fishery overseer, Cheticamp, and appointed a strong partisan Liberal in his place.

A large number of fishery guardians have been dismissed, and partisan successors have been appointed in their places by the present Dominion Government.

It is said that every Conservative official in the county will be dismissed as soon as the election petition against Dr. McLennan will be settled.

Letters have been sent by at least one Minister, warning his officials to give no employment to any opponents of the Government.

A short time will cure the evil of such contemptible treatment of the people.

Yours faithfully,

A. CAMERON.

There is a statement which shows conclusively that in the county of Inverness, during eighteen years, not one official was dismissed from his office on account of any political action on his part. More than that, it was proved that we retained in their offices many of them despite their long-continued and vigorous opposition to the Government. That was the policy we pursued. Our policy never was to dismiss employees unless for unfitness or other just cause, apart from politics, or for violent and offensive political partisanship. That, I maintain, is the true policy which ought to govern both parties, and this Government is responsible for inflicting a most serious evil upon this country in departing from that policy and adopting the one of "to the victors belong the spoils." To them belongs the odium of driving men out of their positions, from the highest down to the lowest, for no other reason than to provide places for their own supporters. No one denies the right or propriety, whenever a vacancy occurs, of the Government filling that vacancy by a man best entitled to the position out of their own ranks, but a greater injustice was never perpetrated upon the employees of the country and the people generally than this ruthless depriving men, high and low, of the positions they filled, simply because they happened to hold opinions in politics opposed to the Government and their places were wanted by hungry supporters of the Administration. I should not have felt it necessary to go into this statement, were it not for the taunt thrown down by my hon. friend who last addressed the House, and who certainly did not take the best means of expediting public business. Knowing the deep wrongs inflicted by the Minister of Railways and Canals, who holds the bread of thousands of honest and deserving poor men in his hands, it would have been an act of infidelity to the best interests of the country if these remarks had been permitted to pass unchallenged, and the opportunity not taken of exposing to the country the cruel and harsh course which the hon. Minister of Railways has seen fit to pursue.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). In reply to the hon. leader of the Opposition and the very innocent letter which he has just submitted to the House, I may say that one of the gentlemen who should be indebted to Dr.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Cameron's generosity and mentioned in his letter is Walter Lawrence, Esq. Mr. Lawrence is a business man doing a large business in a place called Cheticamp in the county of Inverness. This is an Acadian settlement, principally composed of fishermen and small farmers, who are a very industrious and respectable class of people. Mr. Lawrence has always been looked up to by them as a leading man and one from whom many of them got their fishing and other supplies for the past forty or forty-five years, and Dr. Cameron, no doubt, found it very much indeed to his interest to leave Mr. Lawrence severely alone and not crush him by depriving him of a small $10 or $15 per year office, forsooth. Mr. John P. Macfarlane was postmaster at Margaree, and while I agree that I helped Dr. Cameron to come here while McFarlane opposed him, it is equally true that I did not want McFarlane to abuse the position of postmaster at Margaree, and upon the occasion—one of many—of one Mr. J. B. Paton, the agent of the Manufacturers' Insurance Company in the city of Halifax, coming to Margaree, and asked to have a money order cashed, McFarlane treated him in such a manner that I was actually ashamed that an official of his stamp should be found who could act thus towards a stranger in the village where I resided. I at once gave Mr. Paton what assistance I could to have the matter brought to the attention of the Government in order to have McFarlane punished for using this gentleman in such an utterly unwarrantable manner. McFarlane is known to be a most violent political partisan, and got only his deserts when dismissed for this and other causes, by the present Government as their predecessors should have done if efficiency should count with them. McFarlane conducted a rather extensive trade in that community, and apart from being an obsequious follower of Dr. Cameron for years previously, he no doubt found it convenient to leave McFarlane alone for the reason that he left Mr. Lawrence. But I would ask whether Dr. Cameron treated Mr. Lawrence's brother, who is not so well off as regards the world's goods as his brother of Cheticamp, and who depended upon his salary for the maintenance of himself and a large and weak family. The brother in Cheticamp is well off, as I have said, and the ten dollar office sought him, not he the office. Mr. Lawrence of Port Hastings was not treated with the same consideration. The brother at Port Hastings was in receipt of a salary of $1,000 or $1,200 a year as railroad station agent at that place, and lived on his salary. Without even a charge or inquiry he was dismissed, and his family and himself thrown into the cold; and yet the hon. leader of the Opposition declared that it was ruthless cruelty to deprive these men who served the Government so faithfully of their positions and the means of maintaining themselves and their families, and yet he is writing to this House—the only way he can ever be heard in it—that he—the innocent—never dismissed an official for eighteen years. The bulk of the salaries he cited as secured to the other official he so mercifully spared would not total one hundred dollars; and in every instance the office sought the man. Yes, Mr. George C. Laurence, of Port Hastings, station agent of the Intercolonial Railway, was dismissed by the same Dr. Cameron and by this same Government for which the hon. gentleman opposite claims so much virtue in this regard.

Mr. POWELL. Who appointed Mr. Laurence station master?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). If my memory serves me well, he was appointed under the Mackenzie Administration, shortly before they went out of office.

Mr. POWELL. Had they the road down there at that time?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). They had the eastern extension. Mr. Laurence was station agent at the Cape Breton terminus of the Eastern extension. Mr. James McDonald, the respected M. P. P., for Inverness held a post office in West Bay under about the same conditions as that which Mr. Walter Laurence held his in Cheticamp. The salary in the office was about $10, the same as that of Mr. Laurence. He stood in the same relation to Dr. Hugh Cameron as Mr. Laurence did. It is well known in Inverness that, if Dr. Cameron had considered it to be to his interest or that of his party, he would have removed Mr. McDonald from office, as he did Mr. Laurence, of Hastings. But he considered it more prudent to let sleeping dogs lie in that case also. Mr. Charles McDonald is a farmer living at Lake Ainslie also holding a $10 post office. I contested an election against Dr. Cameron on the 23rd of June last, and I feel confident that Mr. McDonald voted against me and for Dr. Cameron, as he has been in the habit of doing for several years past. What is more, no suggestion from either side of politics has been made that Mr. McDonald should be disturbed in office. To supplement the hon. gentleman's information I may observe that Mr. Joseph Deveaux, fishery overseer at Cheticamp, has been dismissed for the reason that he compounded, so to speak, a crime, that he bribed a few of his neighbours to spear salmon in the Cheticamp River, in order that he might demonstrate to the Government that he was such an efficient officer when he should seize certain fishing or spearing gear used by his associates and lodge complaints. His unsuspecting neighbours did go to spear salmon in the river, and this official speared with them. But he gave information against his neighbours to Mr. Bartram, fishery overseer for Cape Breton Island, and brought these inoffensive people on trial, with the result that they were fined by the authorities. I reported the matter to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who at once took steps to have Mr. Deveaux removed from office, not on the ground of any representations made by me as to political acts, but because of the representations that came in the sworn evidence taken before the officials in the county. These are the "victims" that Dr. Hugh Cameron sheds tears over, while his friends in this House join him. The post office at Creigmore, held by Mr. Duncan Cameron, is a wayside post office, a $10 affair, which it was not convenient for Dr. Cameron to remove because Mr. Cameron does business in the community, and it is found more convenient to have him than any of his neighbours attend to post office matters. As I have already said, the office sought him. Mr. McDonald, of Port Hope, was dismissed for political, and no other reason, by advice of Dr. Cameron. Here is where the hon. leader of the Opposition and myself met on an interesting occasion. It is the shire town of Inverness and the post office was, therefore, of interest as to salary, and hence a dismissal. Mr. Aucoin, sub-collector of customs in Cheticamp, was dismissed, and he, I believe, is the only one of the number the hon. gentleman has cited who was dismissed on my representation, solely on the ground of being an offensive political partisan. He is the Tory municipal councillor for Cheticamp in the municipal council of Inverness, to begin with. He was my opponent's agent at Cheticamp on election day last June, and otherwise conducted himself in a most partisan manner. I have given a list of the officers whom Dr. Cameron and the party he supported were generous enough to leave in office. They were all men whom Dr. Cameron did not find it to his political interest to molest in office. Where he thought he could do so to advantage, he secured dismissal, as in the case of Mr. George C. Laurence, and others. I think I have now pretty fully disposed of this mare's nest that the hon. leader of the Opposition discovered in Inverness from perusal of his dear departed friend's melancholy letter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think it comes with very bad grace from the chief whip of the Government (Mr. Sutherland) to charge this side of the House with wasting time. If he had been in the House as regularly as some of the other members, he would have found that whenever a row has been raised, the starter of it has always been the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). That hon. gentleman is responsible for the time that has been wasted to-day. The chief whip of the Government knows, or ought to know, that when he and his friends occupied seats on this side of the House, whenever an attack was made upon the Opposition by a member supporting the Government, the Opposition of that day answered three or four-fold. I think that the Government have no fault to find with the Opposition this year; I think the criticisms have been fair and that no time has been wasted. But when a member sitting behind the Government rises to defend the Government, and, failing to defend them throws mud at the Conservative party, they must expect to get a Roland for their Oliver. But the hon. gentleman made some statements that are not correct. He challenged the late Government, or any one supporting them, to cite the case of a man employed by the Conservative Government who did not agree with them in politics. I have a letter here that covers the point. I do not know whether it refers to the Department of Public Works or the Department of Railways and Canals, but as both Ministers are in their places, I will take the liberty of reading the letter:

Gananoque, May 17th, 1897.

Dear Sir,—For the last seven years I have held a position under the Dominion Government in the Public Works Department, as tug wheelsman, latterly on the tug "St. Paul." During this period no charge has ever been brought against me, nor has any fault ever been found with me. Each spring, I was notified as to the time I should return to duty, and, receiving no notice this spring, I telegraphed to Mr. James Howden, the superintendent of dredges, but received no reply. I then had a prominent Liberal write to the department, and he informs me that he has received no reply. Consequently, I consider myself dismissed. I sent in my application for reappointment for this season in February. Had I then been informed that I would not be re-engaged, I might have endeavoured to secure another appointment. I was not so informed, and now I am left without a job, with a family to support. I know of no reason for my dismissal, except that I went and voted at the last general election. I had always been a Reformer, and I told no one how I voted at the last election, and, of course, took no part in the same. I consider that the Opposition in Ottawa are doing good work in bringing such cases before Parliament and the people, and I authorize you to use this letter for that purpose.

(Sgd.) DANIEL J. KENNEDY.

Now, I may say that Mr. Kenny is a Liberal living in my county. He came to me asking if I could get him a job—he was a sailor—on some Government boats. I gave him a letter of introduction to Mr. Howden, and asked him to forward it to the Department of Public Works. He got instructions from Mr. Howden to go to work, and had been at work ever since, until he got his dismissal this year. My hon. friend the Chief Whip of the Government (Mr. Sutherland) made the further statement, referring to these dismissals, that they applied only to temporary officers. I want to ask the Minister of Railways if lockmasters, these men who have been dismissed in the county of Welland, are temporary officers when their employment is the year round, and they are being paid by the year. The lock labourers, of course, are only paid by the season when the canals are open. But lockmasters everywhere draw their pay yearly, and have been drawing it for eighteen or twenty years, yet some of them are turned off. These are permanent officials. I would not have said a word except to read this letter, had not the Chief Whip of the Government taunted the members of the Opposition with wasting the time of this House. I am satisfied that if any person will look at the "Hansard" they will find that more time has been taken up by members supporting the Government throwing mud at the late Conservative Government, than has been taken up by members of the Opposition in reply.

Mr. SNETSINGER. Many complaints have been made about dismissals from the Cornwall Canal. I can say that out of the large number who are employed on that canal there has been but one single dismissal, to my knowledge. The Government has dealt very liberally with those gentlemen. I have talked with a large number of those men since the elections were over. They went to nearly every Conservative convention in the county, and left the locks, left their employment on the canal, to attend these conventions. When spoken about it they simply told me that they were obliged to go, and that otherwise they were likely to be dismissed. I claim that only one employee on that canal has been dismissed. There was another individual who was not dismissed but who was dropped because he was not required on the canal. He always supported the Conservative Government, but he was taken back on the canal, and is there to-day. Under the late Government there were a number of dismissals, and I can prove to the House that they were dismissed simply because they voted against the late Conservative Government, and for no other reason.

Mr. McCLEARY. I want to put myself straight in connection with a reference made by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland). He stated that I had been in collusion, practically, with the superintendent of the canals, and that that gentleman had nothing else to do but to give me information, and that the Government had better inquire into his conduct. I want to say that never, directly or indirectly, had I any communication with Mr. Thompson about this matter. I have not spoken to him for more than six months, I have not seen him to speak to him; and neither by letter or in any other way have I heard from him at all about this matter. These meetings are a matter of public notoriety, and to prove my statement I will read a short article which will show the source from which we get our information in this regard. I find in the St. Catharines "Journal," a Liberal paper published in that city, the following notice of their meeting:—

The meeting of Liberal workers of the counties of Lincoln and Welland, held yesterday afternoon in this city, was attended by representative members of the party from all quarters of the two ridings. The matter of the appointment of a central committee for the purpose of recommending the dismissal and appointment of civil service employees in the ridings was discussed at some length.

So the meeting together of these committees was a matter of public notoriety, as was their intimation of who was to get positions. In my own town the party is divided into three factions. After the meetings I have always known what was going on, because the men who would not get places were dissatisfied, would be kicking about it, and they would give information about these matters. So it is not fair to charge any official of the Government with giving me information in this matter. Let me give the names of some of the persons who were present at this meeting. I find that addresses were made by the chairman, and by Messrs. Captain Perritt, of Port Dalhousie, W. H. J. Evans, of Niagara, Captain Sheppard, of Queenston, and others. Captain Perritt, of Port Dalhousie, is, I believe, collector of customs and canal tolls there, so if there is to be any inquiry into the conduct of officials, you might take this gentleman into your consideration.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

Bill (No. 28) relating to Canada Investment and Agency Company, Limited.—(Mr. Davin.)

RESTIGOUCHE AND VICTORIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton) moved that the House again resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 99) respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company.

Mr. McALISTER. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in regard to this Bill. In 1885 an Act was passed in the New Brunswick legislature incorporating a company called the Restigouche and Victoria Colonization Railway Company to build a railway from a point on the Intercolonial at or near Campbellton to a point at or near Grand Falls on the St. John River. This railway would run through the counties of Restigouche and Victoria. In the autumn of the same year, 1885, instructions were given by the Railway Department here to have the road explored, to have an exploratory survey made, for according to the instructions sent to Mr. Duffy, the engineer in charge, we find it was merely an exploration. The instructions were sent by Mr. Schrieber, the chief engineer of Government railways, in August, 1885. The instructions were as follows :

Under instructions from the department to have an exploration made of the proposed route for this railway, I detailed Mr. Duffy for the service.

This proposed railway is to form a junction with the Intercolonial Railway about 8 miles west of Campbellton,—

I may say here that that is the point started from by the engineers. Instead of starting from Campbellton, they started from a point six or eight miles west of Campbellton.

This proposed railway is to form a junction with the Intercolonial Railway about 8 miles west of Campbellton, to cross the divide between the waters of the Restigouche and those of the St. John rivers, and form a junction with the New Brunswick Railway at Grand Falls.

I think the wording of the Act is "at or near Grand Falls." In August the engineers went down to Campbellton, and after some days spent in getting ready, they started and explored the routes, and they merely explored it from Campbellton to Grand Falls, a distance of about 108 or 110 miles. They returned to Ottawa and the engineer made up his report, and sent it in on the 29th of September. That will show the House that it would be a matter of impossibility to have anything like a survey made of the road in the short time at their disposal. There was only one party, composed of some eight or ten men, and they went over all this distance through the wilderness, the entire route there being through a wilderness. The House will see that it was merely an exploration, and that it would be impossible to make anything like a survey in that time. Further, that was all the survey or all the exploration made on that entire route, with the exception of thirty-five miles that were located in 1894 and 1896. The engineer at the time of making his report, also made a rough plan of the route, and he filed it with the Minister of Railways. Nothing further was done, and by the terms of the charter it lapsed in 1888, but the matter was allowed to stand until 1891, when an amendment to the Act was passed extending the time for a further period of three years. Again nothing was done, and the charter lapsed again by the limitation of time in 1894. At the session of the New Brunswick legislature in 1894 a further amendment was granted extending the time for a period of three years ; that is, three years from the time of the passing of the amendment to the Act, which is of date 21st of April, 1894. Therefore, the charter would lapse on the 21st of April, 1897, if nothing further was done in the way of surveying the whole of the route. Mr. Speaker, I will read the limitation of time set out in the Act of 1894, section 2 of which is merely copied from the Acts of 1888 and 1891.

Mr. BRITTON. Might I ask the hon. gentleman one question. Is his limitation of time one hour ?

Mr. McALISTER. I want to explain the circumstances of the case, and I think, Mr. Speaker, I have the right to do so. Section 2 of the Act of 1894 says :

In order to entitle the said company to the privileges of their said charter, the necessary surveys of the contemplated line from a point on the Intercolonial Railway, in the parish of Addington, at or near Campbellton, in the county of Restigouche, to a point on the Saint John River, in either of the counties of Victoria or Madawaska shall be made within three years, and the construction of the said line commenced within six years from the passing of this Act, and the construction bona fide continued from year to year, so that the whole may be completed within ten years from the passing of this Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the limitation of time clearly set out, and I contend that the charter lapsed on the 21st of April last, in consequence of the whole line not being surveyed in accordance with the provisions in the Act and amendments thereto. The charter therefore is no longer in existence. It is not at all contended on the part of the promoters of this road that anything further was done in the way of surveying on this road than I have mentioned. There is no dispute of that fact, and whatever dispute arises is merely on the construction of this section as to whether it means that the survey that was made was sufficient ; or whether it means that the necessary surveys of the whole line were to be done. I would draw attention to the fact that the wording of the section is not that the survey shall be done, but that all the necessary surveys shall be done. It would therefore seem quite clear that the necessary surveys required for the building of this road should be made within three years in order to have that charter kept alive. But no survey at all was made since the passage of the Act of 1894, with the exception of the thirty-five miles I have mentioned here, and that was from the Campbellton end of the road, nor did they survey over the same route, because this location started from a point eight miles west of Campbellton, while what was located started from the town of Campbellton, eight miles further east, and therefore this part that was surveyed did not go over the original exploration at all. Then, in the fall of 1894, in order to get this road built, the company of which I was a member at the time, undertook to survey fifteen miles which was subsidized by the Dominion and local governments, and they were taking steps to complete that part of the road. They surveyed the fifteen miles at a cost of about $2,000. Nothing further was done until the fall of 1895, when the company agreed to take over the charter and build the road. The company passed resolutions authorizing the directors to transfer the charter to any company which would show sufficient financial ability to build the road. The company who undertook to build it entered into a contract with the railway company to take over the charter and build the road, and they paid the directors of the company $2,000, the sum asked, to pay the expenses which the company were put to in surveying the fifteen miles. In the spring of 1896, I think in the month of March, the new company, after getting legislation passed in New Brunswick ratifying the transfer of the road, and giving further bonding powers and several other powers, started work, got a staff of engineers, and began at the town of Campbellton to survey the road. At the end of the first month, the bills amounting to $2,300 or $2,400 were paid, when the next month's bills became due they were not paid ; still the engineers continued their work, employing men as before, and in the month of July the accumulated bills amounted to some $4,000 or $5,000. The engineer in charge wanted money to pay his expenses and to pay for supplies ; but no money had been forwarded to him by the company, and he wrote and telegraphed to the president, Mr. Boselly, several times, asking for money to pay the bills. He received replies promptly for some time that money would be forthcoming, that it would be sent in a few days. The few days passed, a week passed, a month passed, and no money had come. The engineer wrote to Mr. Demets, of New York, the only man who had put money into this road, knowing that he was anxious to have the road built ; and Mr. Demet's reply was that he was surprised to find that matters were in the shape in which they were. I will read a part of his letter, which is dated 3rd September, 1896. He says :

It surprises me immeasurably to learn that only $2,500, in round figures, have reached your hands. I agreed to advance $5,000 to meet the expense of surveying the first section of the road, and the $1,000 which I sent you direct on the 8th June, completed my part of the contract.

The engineer then wrote to Mr. Demets a second letter, after he had received a statement from Mr. Boselly purporting to show what moneys he had received and what moneys he had paid out in connection with the road. In reply to that Mr. O'Dwyer, the engineer in charge, received from Mr. Demets a letter, bearing date 8th September, 1896, from which I will read the following:—

New York, September 8th, 1896.

Dear Sir,—I am very much obliged to you for the frank statement you make in your favour of the 5th instant, at hand this morning. I had not the slightest suspicion that anything was wrong in Toronto, until I received your telegram of the 16th July, and I regret very much that you did not communicate more fully with me after receiving the letter I addressed you the same day, acknowledging the receipt of the telegram.

The statement of accounts rendered by Mr. Secord is very much at variance with your own, but I can easily conceive of the purpose, which was to render the amount appropriated to their own use as small as possible.

Much as I would desire to get you out of the hole, the misconduct of the head of the company has placed you and your men, and all those who have trusted the company, you can understand that only a fool could be induced now to sink any more money into this sink of iniquity, for Boselly & Secord, controlling the majority of the stock, would undoubtedly continue to swallow one-half of whatever any one would entrust them with. Whether Canada has any laws against such practices, I do not know, but I have just written to Boselly, that unless he settles with you immediately, to the extent of $5,000—for the purpose of making and paying, as I understood—I would lay the matter before the Minister of Railways at Ottawa. I will be pleased to hear from you, even by wire, that he has done so.

The whole thing was represented to me very differently, of course, Boselly having every incentive to make the scheme attractive as possible, having pocketed some $11,000 thereby; that is, he and Secord, from what I learn now.

I may say here, that I have absolutely and unconditionally refused to advance one dollar more since I awoke to the situation, and all Boselly or Secord has either written or wired you concerning the treasurer, are monumental lies.

That is the reply of Mr. Demets, one of the directors who had the charter transferred to them, and who undertook to build that road. I may say that Mr. Demets was the only man in the company who had any money to advance towards the surveying or the building of the road. The first directors of the company were Francis R. Boselly, Edmund A. Charters, George Demets, Herbert C. Secord, and William Murray. In consequence of some dissatisfaction with Mr. Murray as one of the directors, an application was made by the local representative to have a change made. A change consequently was made, and Dr. Lunam, of Campbellton, was appointed in his place. A circular was sent out by Mr. Boselly or on his behalf. I may say that the pressure mentioned in that circular was not brought upon the directors to make the change; but the local representative knew that if Mr. Murray continued to be one of the directors, he would use his influence against them, and it came to their notice that instead of $2,000 being paid, $5,000 was paid. The $2,000 went to the company. Yet but $3,000 went into the pockets of two of the directors of the company who had taken that road over. That was therefore a very unsatisfactory state of things, and there was a desire to have a change made in the directorate. A change was made, and Dr. Lunam was appointed a director. Later on Mr. Demets wrote on the 22nd of September, 1896, to Mr. O'Dwyer as follows:—"From Mr. Boselly's ambiguous correspondence, I am led to believe that your expenses amount altogether to $8,000. Now, Mr. O'Dwyer, the engineer, sent in an honest and straightforward statement showing exactly what was due, something between $4,000 and $5,000, and afterwards Mr. Demets went over the account, and the account not only varied from the statements sent in by Mr. Boselly with regard to the expenses, but showed that there was a much smaller sum due than was represented by him. Evidently the directors of that company, who now seem to be reunited and working in harmony to promote this Bill, were not altogether a happy family at that time. On the 1st of October, 1896, Mr. Charters wrote to Mr. O'Dwyer with regard to the manner in which work was going on, and with regard to the manner in which the funds supplied by Mr. Demets had been appropriated, and referring to Mr. Boselly, he said:

But if we can whip him into line, get this money and square up our bill, it will be pleasanter than a public exposition, and I am convinced the work will go ahead all O.K. in due season; but you may be sure that, under the direction and control of Mr. Boselly, who has proved himself, to my mind, wholly ignorant of the principles of business management and common courtesy and honesty. If you felt like it, I would be much pleased to have a copy of this precious accounting for this $5,000, but perhaps you have not time.

This letter contains much more matter of a personal character not necessary to refer to here, and I merely mention the facts to show how this company was carrying on the work, how they were appropriating the money that was advanced by one of the directors to build the road, and how all of them were aware that everything was not right. I quote this to show the opinion that Mr. Charters had of Mr. Beausoleil, the president of the company, and that Mr. Charters was aware that the money which had been advanced by Mr. Demets for the purpose of surveying, was misappropriated. Matters continued so until Dr. Lunam, the local director, in the month of October, 1896, I think, requested a meeting of the directors to be called to take into consideration the advisability of doing something to pay off the liability. Consequently, a meeting was called in Toronto, at which all the directors were present, but after going over the whole matter nothing satisfactory was arrived at. Dr. Lunam suggested to the directors that each one should contribute so much towards the payment of the pressing claims.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I see that the object of the hon. gentleman is simply to talk the Bill out, and I am quite ready to admit—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it is right for the hon. gentleman to impute motives of that kind. The hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) is perfectly in order.

Mr. McALISTER. I may say in reply to the hon. gentleman that the matter I wish to go over will occupy more than two hours, and I am not addressing the House for the purpose of talking out the hour, because there is so much ground to cover that it will take me two hours at least to cover it.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I quite understand your motives.

Mr. McALISTER. I was going on to say that Dr. Lunam, the only local director, and a man of honour and integrity, who is very much annoyed at the way the business of the company was being conducted, wanted to have matters straightened out and proposed that each of the directors would contribute so much towards the payment of the pressing claims. That was agreed upon, and each one agreed to put up $100 in order to pay the men and some of the board bills. After a while, Mr. Boselly sent Dr. Lunam a cheque of $100 for his share. Dr. Lunam knew that Mr. Boselly had sent some cheques before and they were dishonoured, and he took the precaution of sending this one through the bank for collection. When the cheque was presented at the bank in Toronto on which it was drawn, it was found that Mr. Boselly had nothing to his credit at the time he gave it or at the time it was presented, or at any time between the two dates, and it was returned dishonoured, so that nothing came of that proposition. Matters went on this way, nothing further was done, the debts were accumulating, and not one cent was forwarded to pay them. The result was that public feeling in the town of Campbellton and in the whole county of Restigouche ran very high against this company, and when the legislature of New Brunswick met in February last application was made for a new charter, the old charter having lapsed on the 21st of April in consequence of the non-fulfilment of its conditions. A meeting was called in Campbellton to consider the advisability of going on with the application for a new charter. The meeting was unanimous in its approval of the proposed legislation, and an application was made for a new charter in the month of February, notice of which was given on the 11th February, 1896. This circular says that no notice at all was given, but that is incorrect. It was given on the 11th April, and was a longer notice than that given by the promoters of the Bill I am now opposing. The first notice of this Bill appeared on the 22nd April of this year, and the petition was brought before the Standing Orders Committee on the 4th of May and reported by that committee. The president of the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company, which was in existence at that time, seeing the application made for a new charter, then began to try to do something in the way of raising funds to pay off the liabilities of the company. He made several propositions, but none of them to pay down the amount due. He always wanted time. The local representatives, Messrs. Mott and Labilloy, knew very well what this promise amounted to, and they went on with the application for a new charter. Then the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company employed counsel and opposed the charter as strongly as they possibly could. Naturally, there were differences of opinion amongst the members of the Railway Committee. Some thought that as the Restigouche and Victoria charter was in existence, it was not proper to grant a new charter. But when the facts were laid before the committee and the manner in which the company had dealt with the people was exposed, the committee decided, that, under the circumstances, it was quite just to grant the new charter, and it was granted on the 6th of March last. After the charter was granted the president of the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company entered into negotiations to have the charter transferred to them. Had this been done they would have the benefit of both charters, and would be enabled to go on with the work. But the feeling in the county of Restigouche against any company with which Mr. Boselly was connected was so great that they would not approve of any negotiations with him. Consequently, nothing came of the negotiations. A short time ago Messrs. Malcolm and Ross, the contractors, who are well known all over New Brunswick and throughout Canada, entered into an agreement with the Restigouche and Western Railway Company to build the road. They were ready to deposit any amount from $50,000 to $200,000 as evidence of good faith and ability to build the road. They are prepared to do that any day. In consequence of the offer made by the contractors, the company entered into an agreement with them to give them the contract for the whole road. But before entering into this agreement they made a stipulation that the debts of the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company should be assumed by Messrs. Malcolm and Ross. The contractors agreed to assume the just liabilities of the old company,—that is, the debts incurred in locating and surveying the road. The agreement to give the contract was then entered into. After that, application was made by the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company for legislation from this Parliament, to confirm a charter, which, I contend, had lapsed before the application was made. Under the limitations of the charter, it lapsed on the 21st April, and no application was made until the 22nd April. Now, in this circular to which I have referred, there are charges of collusion on the part of the engineer with parties in Campbellton against the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company, and also a charge against the stockholders of that company of intriguing against the party promoting this Bill, since the transfer was made. Let me say that there is not a word of truth in these charges. To substantiate what I say, I may relate what took place here in Ottawa after the transfer was made in 1896. Mr. Boselly, the president of the company, approached me time and again about endeavouring to get a Dominion subsidy for the whole line. I assisted him in every way I could. Not only that, but I got a promise from the Government that the whole line would be subsidized. This seemed to be satisfactory to Mr. Boselly. He went down to the province of New Brunswick to get legislation passed to confirm what had been done in the way of transferring the property and the stock. Messrs. Mott and Laballois, the local representatives who are charged with being in league against him, gave him the most hearty support, as the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) knows. They assisted him in every way possible. I assisted him also up to the time when the company broke faith with the people and would not carry out what they undertook to do. As a natural result every one having any connection with the road or any interest in it, opposed the company. The further charge is made that I am opposing the Bill from party motives. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a word of truth in that. As evidence of this I may tell you that the president of the company, Mr. Shives, is a well known Liberal in New Brunswick. He is, in fact, one of the vice-presidents of the Liberal Association of the province of New Brunswick. Mr. McKenzie, another of the directors, is also a well known Liberal. He is the secretary of the Liberal Association of the county of Restigouche. These facts do not indicate that there is any party feeling in the matter. But Mr. Shives and Mr. McKenzie are men of honour, men of integrity, business men, men who have the interests of the country at heart, and who would not allow party politics to interfere with anything likely to benefit the county. The other three directors are Mr. Kennedy, agent of the bank of Nova Scotia in Campbellton, Mr. David Richards, the well known lumberman, who lives in Campbellton, and Dr. Lunam. All these are men in whom every person has the fullest confidence. All who know them know them to be gentlemen of honesty and honour, men who would despise doing a mean act.

The board of directors is composed of five men in whom the people of the county of Restigouche have the most implicit confidence. These men have not undertaken to put this road through for the purpose of making anything out of it; they do not expect to benefit to the extent of one cent from that road, but their whole object and desire is to have the road built. Now, to show further the feeling in the county against the granting of this legislation, I will read to you a protest that has been entered by the municipality of the county of Restigouche. As we all know, that county is not composed exclusively of Conservatives; there are a good many Liberals there. Our municipal council is not composed altogether of Conservatives; I think there are nearly, if not as many Liberals as there are Conservatives in the council. When notice of this application came to their attention, a special meeting of the council was called for the purpose of taking into consideration the advisability of opposing this legislation. They met on the 20th of May, and I will read the resolution that they passed. I may remark that the resolution was passed unanimously, every councillor being present, showing the interest the people took in the matter. The resolution makes reference to another Bill introduced here, which has not yet come from the Railway Committee, called the Restigouche Railway and Bridge Company, and the resolution protests against both:

To the Honourable the Parliament of Canada:

At a meeting of the municipal council of the county of Restigouche, province of New Brunswick, held at Dalhousie, in said county, on Thursday, the 20th day of May, 1897, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—

Whereas, the application is being made to the Parliament of Canada, at its present session for the passage of two several Acts, entitled respectively, "An Act respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company," and "An Act to incorporate the Restigouche Railway and Bridge Company," and

Whereas, the said Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company, as we are informed and believe, have allowed their charter to lapse, by reason of not filing the necessary surveys of said railway, as provided for by the Act of the Legislature of New Brunswick passed in the year 1894, and a company called the Restigouche and Western Railway Company, incorporated this year, are now making arrangements to construct the same line of railway; and

Whereas, the company seeking incorporation for the purpose of constructing a bridge across the Restigouche River connecting the said line of Railway with the Baie des Chaleurs Railway at Cross Point, largely represent the interest of the said Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company, which is adverse to that of the said the Restigouche and Western Company, and we believe the connection with the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company and the traffic over the same would be seriously affected by the grant of the said bridge charter, and that the interests of the said Restigouche and Western Railway Company would suffer by the passage of the said above-mentioned Acts; and

Whereas, we deem it advisable, taking into consideration past experience of the company first above named, that no obstacle should be placed in the way of the construction by the said the Restigouche and Western Railway Company:

Be it, therefore, resolved, that a copy of this resolution be at once forwarded to the Parliament of Canada, with a prayer from this Municipal Council of Restigouche, that the said Acts do not pass, or, at all events, that they be not considered until the session of 1898 ; and Further resolved, that a delegate be appointed by this board to attend a joint meeting of the councils to be held at New Carlisle on Saturday, the 22nd instant, for consideration of the matter.

Therefore, may it please your Honourable Body, we, the warden and secretary of the municipality of Restigouche, for and on behalf of the county council of the said municipality, ask that the Acts entitled "An Act respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company," and "An Act to incorporate the Restigouche Railway and Bridge Company," do not pass, or, at all events, that they be not considered this year, or until your session of 1898 ; and, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

THOS. HAYES, Warden.

A. A. JOHNSON, Secretary.

Mr SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of Private Bills having expired, the Committee of Supply will resume its sitting.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Grenville Canal—Enlargement ..... $90,000

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I do not intend to detain the House very long. We have heard so much upon the question of dismissals during this session, that I will not inflict a long speech on the House at this stage of the session. But again this matter appears to have been brought up this afternoon by the members of the Opposition, and the Minister of Railways and Canals is charged with dismissing civil servants without just cause or provocation. I feel that I cannot allow the present opportunity to pass without expressing my opinion in regard to those parties who appear now to be incensed at the action of the Government. It is well known to every person who understands business that the present Administration is charged with the conduct of the affairs of the country, and therefore they have a perfect right to surround themselves with men in whom they have confidence. Would any member of the Opposition who should be entrusted with the conduct of a large business surround himself with servants, clerks and others in whom he had no confidence, and they no confidence in him? Would he not surround himself with men in whom he had confidence, and who were always willing and ready to do anything their masters required. The fault I have to find with the Government is not that they have dismissed too many, but that they have not dismissed one to every five they should have dismissed. Indeed, if the strong partisans who surround the present Government in the various departments of the service were dismissed, there would be five dismissed to every one who has been dismissed in the past. Hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly the leader of the Opposition, appear to be very much incensed at the cruelty that is being inflicted, from their standpoint, on those who were in the service. Does the hon. gentleman not remember what he did when he was one of the leaders of the Conservative Government in 1879? Does he remember well that the Government, which came into power on November 18th, 1878, dismissed during the first year they were in power far more in number than the present Government have dismissed during the year they have been in power. Why, the heads of civil servants were cut off right and left, and one had hardly time to reach the floor before another followed.

Mr. McALISTER.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). If the hon. gentleman who said "oh, oh," studied present history, and also examined the history of the Conservative party, he would find some interesting reading, and if he studied the number of dismissals in the first year of the Conservative regime he would find that for every man dismissed by the present Government, two, three or four were dismissed at that time from the permanent civil service. There was a return asked for in 1880 in regard to the number of dismissals from 13th February, 1879, to 23rd February, 1880, and a return was brought down answering that question, and that return is before me. I find by analysis of it, which contains the names and causes—and they were very flimsy ones—given of the dismissals, that of permanent civil servants there were between those dates eighty permanent civil servants dismissed; no less than sixty-nine superannuated, many of them against their will and at comparatively early ages; seventy civil servants were retired, having been threatened, and preferring to retire than be dismissed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask my hon. friend what return that is?

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I will read the heading of the return. It is: "Statement showing the names of persons dismissed or removed from the public service, the reasons for such dismissals or removals; also the names of persons who have resigned or been superannuated or transferred from one office of employment to another, between the 13th day of February, 1879, and the 23rd day of February, 1880; also the occupation and residence of each, together with the reasons for the superannuation or transference, and the amount of superannuation or allowance paid to each, as called for by an Order of the House of Commons, dated 23rd day of February, 1880." In answer to that request the return before me was brought down. I find there were 153 dismissals and superannuations; there were twenty-nine officers transferred from one office to another, and seven resigned their positions. There were 153 vacancies created during that year, and those were filled by the friends of the new Government. But they had more friends than they had positions after the dismissals had taken place, and the result was that instead of practising principles of economy, they created offices for their friends and put them in, not by the score, but by fifties and by hundreds, into these new offices thus made during the first year of their Administration. I should like to ask the leader of the Opposition if that is not true?

Mr. FOSTER. Does that appear in the return?

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I am asking the leader of the Opposition this question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I do not think it is.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hon. gentleman has a most tenacious memory regarding some events that occurred twenty or thirty years ago, but in regard to this matter with which he was particularly connected, standing in rank next to the then leader of the Government, and who in all probability gave advice that these offices should be created in order that their friends should receive compensation at their hands, does not recollect this fact. When the Government dismissed eighty civil servants, they maintained it was necessary to do so in order to reduce expenditure, to cut down the extraordinary expenditure of the Mackenzie regime, and therefore we find it frequently stated as the cause for these dismissals, "not required." That, in fact, is the only reason given for the dismissals. We must therefore come to the conclusion that this was done for the purpose of economy, and for the purpose of carrying out principles of economy. It was unfortunate for the Liberals that they were always picked out as the men to be dismissed, while the Conservatives were kept on in the service. I will now come to the denial made by the leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman has stated that there were no offices created in order to make room for his friends. I may inform him that while there were dismissals numbering 153, by superannuation and by dismissal, only 153 offices were thereby rendered vacant, but during that year I find there were no less than 533 appointments to the service. I can prove my statement; in fact, I do not wish to make any statement unless I can prove it. A return was asked and obtained in regard to the appointments made by the Government then in power. The Government were asked to submit a statement showing the names of persons appointed to office in the public service between 13th February, 1879, and 23rd February, 1880, the particular offices to which such persons were appointed, the remuneration or emolument attached thereto, whether by salary or fees," as called for by an order of the House of Commons dated 23rd February, 1880. In answer to that request the return was brought down, and I find here 533 appointments, the names given one after the other. It was an impossibility to make 533 appointments by opening 153 offices, and therefore no less than 380 new offices were created for the friends of the Conservative Government in that year. These are the very hon. gentlemen who are now speaking in such strong language in regard to this matter, as the leader of the Opposition is always able to do, for he speaks in the superlative degree, and he wishes to leave the country to believe that the Government is guilty of malfeasance of office in dismissing these parties. I should like to ask the leader of the Opposition what answer can he give as regards this extraordinary number of appointments. Is it possible that he, the right-hand supporter of Sir John Macdonald, the then Premier, advised the First Minister to create 380 offices for the purpose of filling them with his friends, when he had dismissed so many officials on the ground of economy and to save expenses to the country. We have these very men who have been guilty of all that, and we have the men who support them, sustaining them now and trying to make the country believe that we are doing wrongly towards those who are in the civil service to-day. I rose, Sir, to put this piece of ancient history upon the record, so that hon. gentlemen opposite may have an opportunity of seeing themselves as others see them, and in order to show the country that when they were in power, and during the very first year of their regime, they went on extravagantly in filling up offices, and creating new offices, by which the country was mulcted in a large expenditure. These facts are now before the House, and when hon. gentlemen opposite speak further as to dismissals, I hope they will remember the conduct and character and history of their own party.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I thought I should say a word or two in connection with this matter of dismissals, because I have been more particularly arraigned by some hon. gentlemen opposite on account of my alleged misconduct in this connection. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has gone so far as to charge me with cruelty to persons whom, he says, I dismissed from the public service, and with having degraded that service by the manner in which I have discharged the duties of my office in this respect. I cannot help thinking that many of the hon. members opposite are in entire accord with the views expressed by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), when he stated to the committee that it would have been more becoming, if gentlemen opposite who have been whining and complaining with respect to dismissals, should let the matter rest, and recognize the force of circumstances which have transpired, and which impelled the Ministers who are administering the affairs of the Government, and the members of Parliament supporting them, to take the course which commended itself to their best judgment. There is, I am sure, not one member in this Administration who took any pleasure at all in removing any of the employees in the public service. There are, I am sure, no members in this House, upon the Government side at all events, who took any pleasure in making these recommendations. These gentlemen were acting from a sense of duty, and they felt constrained, by reason of what had transpired, to advise the Government in respect to these dismissals. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition has left the Chamber.

Mr. FOSTER. He will be back in a moment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I desire to call the attention of that hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) to his own record, and to make a comparison between it and the course which he now urges should be adopted by the members of the Government. I have before referred in this House to changes made by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) when he was in power, not in respect to permanent civil servants, but with reference to temporary employees and temporary employees upon the Government railway, the administration of which was assumed by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) after the defeat of the Mackenzie Administration. In this same month of February, 1880, the question of dismissals upon the Intercolonial Railway came before Parliament. A motion was made by Mr. Anglin asking for a return of the persons who had been dismissed from the Intercolonial Railway, and in the course of the discussion which took place, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) admitted that he had, shortly after he assumed the duties of Minister of Railways, dismissed at least 400 persons—and it is quite safe to suppose that he removed even more than that number. He did not stop to consider that these 400 were poor men, nor was he influenced by the consideration that he was taking the bread out of the mouths of these people. He did not stay his hand from any consideration of kindly feeling or kindly thought. The hon. gentleman then told the House that these dismissals did not take place on any political ground, but that a considerable proportion of the 400 were removed for the sole purpose of promoting economy in the public service. That is the ground on which the hon. gentleman justified an act, which, if done by me, he would characterize as wholesale dismissals from the Intercolonial Railway. I believe a return was then brought down showing who were the persons, and the cause assigned for their dismissals, but I regret to say that I have not been able to lay my hand on that return, although I have been at some pains to obtain it. However, I am procuring it from its original source, and will have it available for future reference, when the hon. gentleman, in accordance with the habit which has apparently possessed him, next ventures to rake up in season and out of season, this question of dismissals from the public service. I find, that on this occasion, when Mr. Anglin brought the subject up, Sir Charles Tupper made the following observations:—

I would suggest to the hon. gentleman from Gloucester, that he change the terms of his motion, and add the words "dispensed with or dismissed." I draw a great distinction between those terms. If he asks me to make a return of the number of persons dismissed, I am happy to say the return will be a very small one; but if he asks me to make a return of the number of persons whose services have been dispensed with, it will be a very large one. I can state to the hon. gentleman, that I am prepared to lay upon the Table of the House a return of all the persons in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway in September, 1878, and a corresponding return, covering the same portion of the road that was in the possession of the Government in 1878, that is, to Rivière du Loup, showing 400 less persons on the staff as officers or employees. The hon. gentleman will, therefore, see that the number of persons whom he would cover by the word "dismissed," would be a large one. I am happy to say, the number of persons who have been dismissed, is not large, and I do not think the hon. gentleman would consider it right that we should put in the same category persons who have been dismissed from the service for misconduct or neglect of duty, and men against whom there was no charge whatever, but whose services were dispensed with because the road could be operated with equal efficiency, and, at the same time, effect the saving of a large amount of money. I would, therefore, suggest that the hon. gentleman use the term "dispensed with or dismissed," because I would mark those who have been discharged for failure in duty or misconduct, and draw a distinction between them and persons whose services have been dispensed with to save cost.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, that is all right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. "All right," says the hon. gentleman, and no one would complain if the leader of the Opposition, from a sense of duty in administering his department, had concluded that it was in the public interest to dismiss four or five hundred employees of the Intercolonial Railway, but I think I will be able to prove that the record does not bear out the statement he has made. I think I can convince even the hon. gentleman that economy in the public service was not his object in dismissing these 400 men. In February, 1880, there were in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway, as the official documents show, 2,596 persons. That was the number which remained on the pay rolls of the Intercolonial Railway after the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) had plied his little axe, and had decapitated the 400, as he says—but as I am inclined to think, more than 400—from the public service on the alleged ground of economy. We know that the services go on from year to year in the ordinary, regular way, the only changes occurring being those rendered advisable in certain seasons of the year, when it is necessary either to cut down the staff somewhat or when, as the service increases; it is necessary to put them on again or to augment the number of employees. Any changes resulting from that fact, I could well understand and approve; but whether that was the reason that influenced the hon. gentleman in making these changes, I think we shall discover. When we come down to the corresponding month of 1881, we find that he had added about 800 people above the number employed in February, 1880. Whereas in February, 1880, there were 2,596 people on the pay-roll of the Intercolonial Railway—the hon. gentleman, having reduced the number to that figure, impelled by his desire to economize—in February, 1881, a corresponding period of the year, when business would be in the same condition, and when any greater staff than in the previous year would be unlikely to be required, he had increased the number to 3,310. I think it would tax the ingenuity of the hon. gentleman himself to justify such a condition of things; and it strongly convinces me, as I think it will carry conviction to the mind of any fair person in this House, that, instead of the hon. gentleman being moved to make that number of dismissals solely with the view of reducing the cost of the service, to put it on a plane more conformable with the public interest, he was moved solely by the desire to decapitate the people whom he wanted to get out of the way in order to make places for his own friends and supporters. In this connection it may be interesting to hon. members that I should furnish some information showing how the services has grown, and how the number of employees increased under our friends opposite. I find that in the month of June, 1895, there were in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway, 3,941 persons, as against 3,310 in February, 1881. But in 1896 there came to be a most marvellous increase in the business of the Intercolonial Railway, demanding more labour, and filling up the shops; because I find that in the corresponding month of June, in that year, there were on the pay-rolls on the Intercolonial Railway no less than 5,296 persons. And this is the condition of things which the hon. gentleman justifies and sustains with such majestic intrepidity, getting up in this House and charging people who have been trying faithfully to do their duty in this regard with being cruel to public employees and degrading the public service. While I am referring to this point, I may state that during the month of April—I have not the return for the month of May, but I know there is no substantial difference one way or the other—according to the information furnished me, the number on the pay-roll was 4,083, a difference of 1,213 between the month of April, 1897, and the month of June, 1896. Now, I would have thought that hon. gentlemen opposite—I believe many of them do, but I thought they all would have realized the unwisdom of pursuing the policy they have been pursuing from day to day, and from week to week in this Parliament. I would have thought they would have realized that there was a possibility that these unfounded and unjust attacks, repeatedly made from their places in the House against this Government and their friends in Parliament, might go beyond the limit which the forbearance of even the members of the Government would allow them to withstand. Since I have been in this office, I have felt no disposition to yield to legitimate demands beyond what I could reasonably support and justify. I have felt averse to making these changes. I would have very much preferred that there had been fewer than there have been, although I will show the committee, before I sit down, that the number of those who have been removed is comparatively small; but I want to tell hon. gentlemen that they can, if they persist, force the members of this Government to go further than they have gone, and yet within limits which they could fully and entirely justify. Now, Sir, let me call the attention of hon. gentlemen to some facts with regard to this matter. I have been accused of having dealt unjustly, harshly and cruelly with the employees on the Intercolonial Railway and in other services of the country. The hon. gentleman has hazarded the statement that I have dismissed hundreds of people from the railways and the canals. He dwelt on the statement as if he had positive knowledge, and was justified in making the accusation from facts in his possession. He has not furnished us with these facts, and he cannot furnish them. He cannot examine the statements which will be brought before this House without seeing that in the administration of my department I have dealt most tenderly with the employees in following the rule laid down as a guide for our conduct in matters of this kind by hon. gentlemen opposite. He has circulated broadcast the statement that six or eight hundred people have been dismissed from the Intercolonial. Now, I have a statement of the number who have been dismissed, and it will show how complete and ample a justification I would have had if I had gone ten times further. I know it will create a feeling of disappointment on the part of some of our friends that I have not meted out to those people even a small measure of the justice that I would have been fully warranted in doing. The statement gives the total number removed down to the 11th of May last, and since that time no changes have been made of which I have any knowledge. I telegraphed to the general manager at Moncton to send me a full statement of every man who had been removed in any riding at my instance, or under my direction, or at the instance of any member of Parliament or candidate since the change of Government down to the date at which I asked for the information. I have the return in my hand, and I will read it to the committee; and the result of reading it will be to show hon. gentlemen opposite that in thus recklessly hurling accusations against me they have been utterly astray and have been guilty of erecting tremendous charges upon the slimmest possible data. I will give the names of the different counties, starting with the province of Quebec. I find that in Lévis county there were 18 employees of the Intercolonial dismissed; in Bellechasse, 9; in Montmagny, there were 8; in L'Islet, 3; in Kamouraska, 9; in Temiscouata, 5; and in Rimouski, 29. In the great majority of these cases, the dismissals were made upon the representations on their own personal knowledge, of the gentlemen who represented these counties in this Parliament; that the parties for whose dismissals they asked had been guilty of offensive partisanship, as we understand the term. Now, looking over the names of these several counties in the province of Quebec, and taking the number of dismissals in each, I find they made the total of 81. Among those counties, the one in which the greatest number of dismissals was made was Rimouski, and I would have wished that the whole House could have followed the hon. gentleman who represents that county (Mr. Fiset) in the statement he made, a statement which he made from his own knowledge, and which I am able from what the general manager of the Intercolonial told me himself, to confirm. That hon. gentleman told the committee that when hon. gentlemen opposite came into office, the Minister of Railways and Canals of that period (Sir Charles Tupper) did not wait for any charges of offensive partisanship in order to dismiss employees on the Intercolonial. Why, Sir, the general manager of the Intercolonial was instructed that if the member representing the county of Rimouski—and that by no means was the only county in the various provinces regarding the representations of which the general manager was given the same instructions—called for the dismissal of any one in the employ of the Government—not alleging offensive partisanship but simply calling for his dismissal—it was the duty of the division superintendent to make the dismissal, without even being under the necessity of referring the matter to the general manager at Moncton or even to the Minister of Railways and Canals. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset) told this committee that the general manager at Moncton—whom no one will charge with having political bias or at all events with being friendly to this Administration or likely to colour his statements in our interest—informed him that it was not necessary in these days, under the mild, considerate and humane administration of the hon. member for Cape Breton, (Sir Charles Tupper), for the member representing the county—and supporting the Government, to make any charge against any employee of the Intercolonial, but that all he had to do was to demand his head, and off it went. I fully realized when a number of these demands came to me from the county of Rimouski, the position in which the hon. member representing that county was placed. He knew how, in times past, when he had contested that county, the Government employees who dared to vote for him were dismissed from office ruthlessly, and dismissed, not because they had actively taken part in the election or made themselves obnoxious by public and offensive partisanship, but merely because they had voted for him. That fact alone was deemed by the gentleman who succeeded in the elections against the Liberal candidate, a complete reason for their instant dismissal.

Then we come to the province of Nova Scotia and I find that in the county of Cumberland there were four employees on the Intercolonial dismissed; in Halifax, 4; in Pictou, 4; in Antigonish, 8; and in Richmond, 1; making 22 employees of the Intercolonial removed by this Administration in Nova Scotia.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). How many in the county of Inverness?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). How many in the county of Colchester?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None. There were none dismissed except in the counties I have named, and they total up the tremendous number of 22.

Now, we come to the province of New Brunswick, for which I am perhaps myself personally and in my private character more particularly answerable, and for the dismissals in each county, I suppose, I will be held directly responsible. Here I have had a free and fair field. Here these cruel impulses, this hard, unfriendly disposition, these heartless, cold-blooded tendencies of mine to decapitate employees, to send them out of the public service, and do all these horrible injuries described to-day—here, in this province of New Brunswick, where I may be supposed to have free will and be able to give full scope to these hereditary impulses of mine without restriction at all, I have cut off the magnificent number of seven heads in all, employed on the Intercolonial.

Mr. POWELL. Why there were sixty dismissed at Moncton alone.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I challenge the accuracy of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. POWELL. I reiterate it most positively.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will not allow the hon. gentleman to contradict the statement which I make. I make it with the full knowledge of the facts. Of course the hon. gentleman can take the responsibility of denying it, but I do not yield to his contradiction, and I assert with all positiveness that the information I now give this committee is absolute verity and capable of establishment by proof which cannot be controverted. Let not the hon. gentleman tell me that fifty or sixty people have been dismissed, I will tell him what has taken place. I will show him the correspondence, I will produce the officer and put him on oath and let him tell the whole story. And what will he tell? He will say to any committee of this House, under the solemn sanction of his oath, that he himself communicated to me that the season of the year had arrived when it would be proper and necessary to reduce the number of employees on the Intercolonial. And what was my reply? I said to Mr. Pottinger: If it is right, you should do it. How many do you think you will have to dispense with in that way? And he gave me an idea of the number. I then said to him: I will tell you what to do. Let those who have been most recently employed by the gentlemen on the other side be the ones you will select for setting aside for the present. And now I can say, in addition, that a large number of those very men who were set aside have been reinstated and are now in the service. I am moving in these matters with a full sense of the responsibility which attaches to my position and with the knowledge that what I am doing and shall do will be fully made known, because I know that among a large number of the employees upon the Intercolonial I am surrounded by men who are not my friends.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They were put in just before the election.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they were and I have acted with caution, perhaps with even greater caution than I would have thought necessary under other circumstances, knowing that every deed I did, every instruction I gave throughout my official connection with the railway would be known to the men who are the bitter opponents of this party, and who are making every effort to destroy this Government. It would not be very long before every act would be made known to hon. gentlemen opposite. These are the facts, and I think they are such as must carry conviction to the minds of hon. gentlemen, and I trust will have some effect on the country in dispelling the illusion, if there has been any created in the minds of those who have followed these debates and have read the statements which have been so plentifully put forward by hon. gentlemen opposite. They will see how utterly fabulous, how utterly without foundation these statements are, and I think I can claim from the independent and enlightened and fair-minded judgment of this country that if I have erred at all in administering my department with respect to the dismissal of employees, I have erred on the side of leniency and against what I might honestly and justly and fairly have been expected to have done.

Mr. McINERNEY. Will the hon. gentleman give the counties of New Brunswick in which dismissals have taken place?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The counties of New Brunswick in which the dismissals took place on the Intercolonial Railway are: Gloucester, 1; Westmoreland, 5; King's, 1.

Mr. McINERNEY. None in Kent?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No dismissals took place from the Intercolonial in Kent since the advent of the present Administration to power down to the 11th of May last.

Mr. McINERNEY. Michael Swift was dismissed in Kent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If Michael Swift was dismissed, he was dismissed not with my instructions or knowledge, or in consequence of any suggestion, directly or indirectly, made by me. He was not dismissed on the representation of any candidate in the interest of the Liberal party or of any political organization, so far as I know, and so far as the general manager, who has given me this information, has been willing to disclose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is Tory enough.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so. We in the maritime provinces have heard a great deal about the conduct of the persons managing the Intercolonial Railway in June, 1896, and statements have been made upon the subject in a general way. I was led to believe that the way in which the Intercolonial Railway had been used in the last election was not only most injurious to the interests of the Liberal party, but disastrous from every point of view. I felt that the Intercolonial Railway had been simply prostituted, that it had been converted into a political machine, and had been used in the most ruthless way to serve the purposes of the Conservative party, in order to insure their success in that election contest. So strongly was I impressed with the reports which reached me from various sources, that I felt it my duty to direct that a formal investigation should be made, at all events, as to the conduct of those concerned in the management of the road at Moncton, as a commencement at least, and in order that we might be put in possession of actual facts on sworn testimony, and in order that there might be no shadow of question as to the extent to which, if at all, the Intercolonial service had been used in the manner which I have intimated. A gentleman was sent there for the purpose of holding an investigation. He went there in November and held a very lengthy inquiry. He called up the various officials of the road from the general manager down, including the chief engineer, the divisional superintendents, the secretaries, the clerks, the train despatchers, and other officials charged with being implicated in this work of a political character, which it was alleged, had been going on. And all this evidence has been furnished. It is available, it can be seen and read and used. Hon. members of the House and the people generally will have an opportunity to reach their own conclusion from this sworn testimony as to whether or not the imputations cast upon the bona fides of the administration of the Intercolonial Railway have been well-founded or not. The results of the investigation startled me. They proved beyond all peradventure that almost from the head, in a sense the head at Moncton, down to the leading officials and officers of a permanent character, all of them, almost without exception, were banded together in order that that machine, that organization should be turned to the best and most profitable account so as to perpetuate Conservative rule in this country and to defeat the hopes, the aspirations, and ambitions of the Liberal party. Why, Sir, it appeared that almost the first thing that took place was a meeting of many of the divisional superintendents. They were summoned from Nova Scotia, they were brought from the northern part of New Brunswick, and they met there in solemn conclave, and they came to the conclusion—that it would be necessary that action should be taken in order to control the employees of the Intercolonial Railway who might have Liberal proclivities and could not be depended upon to vote for the Conservative party. That is not a controverted statement. I am not giving you that which is in dispute, but the admissions of the men themselves who met in conclave. And you shall hear the state of things as I develop it to you as briefly as I can, which has existed under the regime of my hon. friend opposite (Sir Charles Tupper). I do not know how often in times past, during how many elections, that state of things I shall disclose existed, but I do know that it became more marked, more conspicuous, more reckless and indefensible under the administration of the hon. gentleman and after he assumed power than ever before. Is it any wonder that I have sat here transfixed with amazement when I have heard him delivering himself of these high-sounding platitudes with regard to propriety of conduct in office? Is it any wonder, I say, with such a record before me? No man will say that the officials of the Intercolonial would have dared to go out of their way, to trammel, and hamper and destroy the free will of the employees on that road unless they knew that what they were doing they were doing with the entire approval of the men who were their superiors in office. I should be sorry to think that as to the general manager of the Intercolonial at Moncton. I am free to say—and I say it with all candour and fairness to him—that I do not regard him as a man having strong political opinions or leanings one way or the other. I do not think he cares whether the Conservative party or the Liberal party is triumphant in Canada; I believe that his thoughts are largely centred upon the work of his office. Therefore, I am bound to believe that that gentleman could not have countenanced what was going on. He admits that he winked at it, but he would not even have winked at it if he had not felt confident that his course in that regard was in complete accord with the wishes of his superiors, the head of the department and the leader of the Government of that day. Well, Sir, these officers held their conclaves, and what was the result? Why, the fiat went forth that they should put themselves—these divisional superintendents, secretaries, and other officials—into immediate communication with the officers and secretaries and leading members of the various Conservative associations in the different counties. The county of Westmoreland was immediately visited by one or more of these officials. The same is true of the county of King's. And we have not yet begun to learn the facts. We have only got upon the threshold of this investigation; we have had only a little peep into the procedure that took place in connection with that organization. What we have discovered, as I was going to say, shows that the various canvassing committees in the counties of Westmoreland and King's, and I presume in other counties, though I am bound to say that I have no direct evidence upon that point, but as for those counties these gentlemen went to these committees and procured from them, or had prepared, lists of the voters who were upon the Intercolonial Railway pay rolls and who were in the Intercolonial Railway service; and they were requested to make, and did make, out of those lists, records of the political complexion of the persons whose names were on the list. You can take up those lists, I have them in my possession, containing the crosses, containing other marks indicating what the political stripe of the men were. I have one of these lists, I do not know but I have more, but one was enough to satisfy me as to the character of the work that was going on. I have not had time to pursue an examination into the vast mass of papers which were forwarded to me, further than to get an inkling of the nature of these doings. Take the list for one of the divisional districts in the town of Moncton, and upon that list there are 130 or 160 names. I forget which, and opposite those names are crosses to indicate that they were Tories, and other signs to indicate that they were Liberals, and then opposite the name of every Liberal was written the word "out." What was that for? Well, when it came to be interpreted by the people who know, by the very officers themselves, it was frankly acknowledged that that meant that the whole machinery of the railway was to be put in motion to get these people out of the way so that they could not vote. That was the fact, and these lists were checked over by the Conservative association in King's county, and other lists were treated in the same manner. This was the Government which, according to my hon. friend is so tender in its sympathy for the poor workmen; this is the Government whose hearts are bleeding for those people who were dismissed from the public service in this way, who are driven out to seek other employment and seek their bread as best they might. But while they have this profound sympathy for the poor workmen who are dismissed from the Government employ upon these grounds, and were obliged to go out and seek their daily bread elsewhere, they had no sympathy for the exercise of the freedom of that right which I maintain should belong to every man in this country, whether he is a servant of the Government or not. These are the gentlemen, I say, who have set in motion this style of converting the great Intercolonial Railway of Canada into a political machine. Well, Sir, that is not all. After they had got these names settled upon, when they ascertained how the employees of the Intercolonial Railway might possibly vote, when they had reason to believe that A, B, C and D, who are on these lists, would be likely to vote Conservative; then they set their ingenuity to work, and they sent a man to Dan, and another to Beersheba, they sent one man down to the end, almost, of Nova Scotia in order to pay a bill of $3.50 that had been standing for months. Why, Sir, who will say that our friends opposite are not endowed with ingenuity? Who dares to say that they are not equal to almost any emergency that might arise? Well, they did that, trains were sent out, special trains of men were sent forward in all directions in order that they might not have an opportunity of depositing their ballots according to their judgment, in the exercise of their free rights as citizens. Well, Sir, that was not all. I am only able to give you a little taste, just a mere sip, from this flowing bowl which I would like to tender to you.

They thought that probably it would not be enough, that it would not answer the purpose, if they simply resorted to that method of coercing the voters. They must apply other methods; and, Sir, the official examination which has taken place has enabled us to establish out of the mouths of these people themselves, it has been admitted, that the issue of passes had reached such a phase as almost passes belief, and must exceed the credulity of any one on this committee. Why, Sir, passes were sent out unlimited—they were only limited, I suppose, by the capacity of the printing press to produce them. We have obtained, I suppose, but a tithe of the number of passes that were sent out. Books of passes were distributed here, there and everywhere. Why, all that was necessary in order to give a man a title to a book of passes over the Intercolonial Railway, was that he should have the endorsement of the Conservative committee for that county. Well, we found fourteen of them, but there are fourteen at least that are missing.

Mr. McCLURE. We saw them in the county of Colchester.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But the books did not come back just as they went out. It would be idle to take it for granted that they came back just as they went out; they were somewhat emptied of their contents. Except fourteen of the books which, according to sworn evidence, were sent out, we have no tidings of the others in any shape or form. We have only got, as I say, a portion of the record, and on this record we hope to be able to reach a little deeper into this mire of political outrage, and we hope to get somewhere nearer the bottom of the facts. But what we have discovered suffices, at all events, to show that these gentlemen should for ever hereafter hold their peace in this House and elsewhere on the subject of this discussion. Why, Sir, as I say, I have evidence before me, not as I say contradicted evidence, not evidence in which you have a witness on one hand meeting a witness on the other who swears the other way, not evidence about which any person could have any doubt at all, but admitted facts coming from the people who did it themselves, constrained to acknowledge under the press of circumstances, probably, and when compelled to make a disclosure under oath. Why, Sir, we find the officials of the Intercolonial Railway allowed as many people as they pleased, as long as they were of the proper complexion, we will assume, to travel on passes. It was not necessary that his name should be on it; his name need not be upon it so long as he was known to be engaged in the election campaign. And these men were passing backwards and forwards on the Intercolonial Railway, along that great stretch of railway in the province of New Brunswick and in the province of Nova Scotia during election times. I find on looking at the evidence as reported that there were at least 2,575 people who are transported for election purposes on passes and from one point alone. We find that at that locality, and within the reach of these three or four counties, 2,575 people were given free passes for election purposes upon the Intercolonial Railway. Why, in connection with the election of 1896, we find that on 203 passes, 430 people were permitted to travel for election purposes; the evidence is that on 157 passes, 312 more people were permitted to travel; the evidence is that on 97 passes, 372 people were permitted to pass on the Intercolonial Railway, and that on the whole, there are 1,427 passes missing of which we can get no tidings whatever. Now, Sir, I do not think it would be possible to exaggerate the gravity of such a state of things as that. I would not have dreamed it, no man I believe in Canada would conceive it possible that these things could have been done by the Government under the regis and direction of my hon. friend opposite, who has many excellent qualities, and whom, for many personal qualities, I greatly admire. I know that he does not do things on a small scale. I am constrained to believe that it is nothing but the colossal attitude of the hon. gentleman which enabled him to use passes to the extent to which he used them in the late elections. That is not all. That does not entirely exhaust the evidence of the ingenuity of our hon. friends opposite. Since this discussion on the Estimates for railways came up there has been a little bit of curiosity in regard to a gentleman who filled an office on the Intercolonial and was dismissed, who, I think, is a close connection of the hon. leader of the Opposition—and the hon. gentleman mentioned his name—Mr. Hillson. He can claim the distinction of being a nephew of the hon. gentleman. Great powers were conferred on Mr. Hillson in regard to the Intercolonial Railway, and large discretion was vested in that gentleman. It appears from the evidence that his will was law, largely due to the fact that there is this strong family relationship, and probably the consanguinity between the two gentlemen gave a better status than almost any one else possessed. There were some interesting features connected with the experience of this friend of the leader of the Opposition. The commissioner who held the investigation naturally had his curiosity aroused by some peculiar facts. He discovered among other things that came under his observation that wherever this gentleman happened to be on the days which immediately preceded the election, there arose an unaccountable demand for shingles for that particular locality. That hon. gentleman, we will say, was at Amherst at ten o'clock in the morning. A telegram was flashed over the wire to the chief engineer, Mr. Archibald, of Moncton, desiring that there be immediately sent to him at that point 25,000 shingles. In another hour or two another telegram from a more distant point flashed over the wire, "send at once 50,000 shingles." At some other point, almost within speaking distance, there would arise the same extraordinary and unexplainable demand for more shingles. "Send immediately 75,000 shingles." So the demand for shingles increased with startling rapidity in all these different points on the line within the purview of Mr. Hillson, just preceding the election. It will not be surprising to hon. members that such an unusual and unprecedented demand for shingles at various points, particularly when it happened to be accompanied by the presence of the nephew of the hon. gentleman, excited the attention of the commissioner, who was investigating these railway matters, and he took action to ascertain why the demand had arisen. Pursuing the inquiry a little closer, there was proof of an understanding between the chief engineer of the Government railways and this official, by which it was agreed that a demand for shingles would mean a demand for passes. This matter was kept a profound secret from the general public and no one was allowed to know about it; but even at the telegraph office there is sometimes a little leak, and accordingly this ingenious method was adopted, no doubt with a feeling of security that the general public would not acquire knowledge of it, and this aided those gentlemen in this conspiracy against the country in their improper use of passes and in their undeniable prostitution of the railway for election purposes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That was Foster's home market.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I felt it was right, inasmuch as the hon. gentleman has taken occasion to assail me on every possible opportunity for having treated the people in the employ of the Government in the cruel and heartless manner he has described, to throw a little bit of light on the methods and procedure followed by the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition. I want to say here, in drawing my remarks to a close, that the course which the late Government adopted in its management and use of the Intercolonial, the way it converted it into a political machine, the means taken to convince every man employed on it that in order to be sure of permanence he had to be a tool in the hands of a political party, have done much to disorganize the railway service of Canada and have increased the difficulties connected with my administration of the office and in dealing with those people in the way they ought to be dealt with, and in the lenient way in which I endeavoured to treat them. It has tended to weaken the loyalty which the employees should have to the road, it has tended to weaken the discharge of their duties, and I am sure that hon. gentlemen will all admit that it were infinitely better in the interest of the whole country, even in the interest of the political party which might, for the time being, be in power, that the Government should discountenance in every possible way such an improper use of the railway service.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not suppose that if I were to address the House for a much longer period than the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has addressed it, and endeavoured to portray the want-of-candor characteristics of the Minister of Railways, I could not do it half so effectually as the hon. gentleman has done it during the brief period he has addressed the House. Sir, the hon. gentleman commenced his statement by giving the number of persons who had been dismissed, by stating that 400 had been dismissed by me when I assumed the management of the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman then drew the attention of the House to the fact that at a later period he found a large number of employees added to the Intercolonial service, and he said he found the staff of the Intercolonial Railway had been greatly increased. Then the hon. gentleman went on to a further period to show that a still greater number of employees were engaged in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I put it to the hon. gentleman himself whether it be possible in the English language to address a more false argument to the House than the one he has presented. I ask the hon. gentleman if he, as Minister of Railways, is not ashamed to stand up in the presence of this assembled legislature and attempt to practice one of the grossest pieces of duplicity to which I have ever listened from any hon. gentleman in any place. When I tell this House that the Intercolonial Railway, of which the hon. gentleman has been speaking as an entity and that he was making comparisons between the number of employees occupied on the work from one period to another, but there could be but one opinion entertained, and that was that he was making a fair and candid comparison, which would show how the number of employees had been increased on the same work. But did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) tell the House what had led to this increase? He did not. I will let a little daylight into these disingenuous and false statements of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair); and I would be warranted in using stronger language to describe the dishonest attempt made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) to mislead this House. In 1878 when I succeeded the late Hon. Sir Alexander Mackenzie as Minister of Public Works, (which then embraced the Department of Railways and Canals) I found that during the year, the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway was nearly three-quarters of a million dollars, or, subject to some qualifications and deductions, it was still over half a million dollars. That was taken out of the pockets of the people to run the Intercolonial Railway after all the receipts derived from it had been expended. I called upon the ablest men in the department to make me an exhaustive report towards a remedy for this grave state of affairs. The gentleman whom Mr. Mackenzie placed at the head of the Intercolonial Railway, put over his own signature the statement, that it would cost the country three-quarters of a million per annum to operate the Intercolonial, over and above its receipts. Was not that a startling fact? Was not that sufficient to warrant a Minister of Railways to set before himself the important task of ascertaining how half a million dollars a year could be saved to the people of Canada.

With the assistance of the ablest men connected with the road, I made a thorough examination and I found that a great reduction could be made. I first reduced the salaries paid to the officials, and I frankly expressed my regret to these gentlemen, that I was compelled to do so in the public interest, and I told them also, that when the condition of the Intercolonial Railway would admit it, I would gladly consider the question of increasing their salaries again. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) accuses me of dismissing 400 persons. Sir, I am not aware that I dismissed any person. After a most exhaustive examination which has doubtless been made by the Minister (Mr. Blair), and with all the documents under his hand, he has been able to parade a single case before this country in which a young man was dismissed from the service I take it for granted that he is obliged to limit the extent of the dismissals to that one case. Even in that case, I have been able to show that the person was guilty not only of offensive partisanship, but that he had gone to the length of using physical force at a public meeting in support of his opinion. And, suppose I did dispense with the service of 400 employees, was I not justified in doing it, when the ablest men in the department told me that I could make the reduction without impairing the efficiency of the road. What was the result of that? If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) examines the documents under his hand, he will find that the deficit of over half a million was reduced to below $100,000, during the first year of my administration of the Intercolonial Railway. He will find further, that up to the time I resigned the portfolio of railways to go to England as High Commissioner for Canada, I continued to bring down that deficit on the Intercolonial Railway until the accounts more than balanced. I ask the House: was I not justified in dispensing with the ser-VICES of 400 unnecessary employees, when the result was that a saving of over half a million a year was effected for the benefit of the tax-payers of this country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has the very men in his employ to-day who can confirm my statement, that I asked these gentlemen to make the reductions in the staff without favour or affection. I asked them to retain the services of men appointed by Mr. Mackenzie, the warmest supporters of the Liberal party, wherever they felt that in doing so, they were retaining the services of the best men. I dispensed with the services of hundreds of supporters and friends of the party to which I myself belonged, because I felt that in making the reductions, I must look at the interests of the public service alone, and regardless of political considerations must retain the services of the best men whether they were Liberals or Conservatives. I have in my mind's eye at this moment a gentleman who was retained in one of the most influential positions of the Intercolonial Railway, a man with hundreds of men under his control and influence, and who was one of the strongest supporters of Mr. Mackenzie, and one of the most ardent Liberals in Canada. That was the manner in which I discharged the duties which then devolved upon me.

But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has asked, why is it that a few years afterwards the staff of the Intercolonial Railway was swollen by hundreds, and he obtained the plaudits of those behind him, whom he deluded into the belief that he was making a fair and candid statement worthy of an honest man. What will these gentlemen say, when I tell them, that a more complete delusion never was attempted to be practised in the face of an intelligent assembly, when the hon. gentleman concealed the fact that during this period the mileage of the Intercolonial Railway more than half doubled. When I tell the House that the hon. gentleman concealed that fact, I brush away with one sweep his entire argument about the increased number of employees.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How many did you add between 1895 and 1896?

SIR CHARLES TUPPER. I will tell the hon. gentleman how the mileage stands. When I took charge of the Intercolonial Railway, and made that reduction of 400 employees, in endeavouring to balance the account, the distance from Halifax to Rivière du Loup was 560 miles, from New Glasgow to Truro, 41 miles, and from Moncton to St. John, 90 miles; in all 691 miles; and, adding the 32 miles of road from Halifax to Windsor, which was then and is now under the control of the Intercolonial Railway and practically forming a part of it, the whole mileage of the Intercolonial Railway was 723 miles. And, Sir, had the hon. gentleman had the candor, the honesty, to state to the House the mode in which this mileage had been increased? When I tell the House that to-day and for many years there has been added to that mileage the distance from New Glasgow to Sydney, 175 miles, from the Intercolonial to Pugwash, 15 miles, from Pugwash Junction to Pictou, 69 miles, and from Rivière du Loup to Lévis, 120 miles, these figures show that not less than 379 miles were added to what the hon. gentleman called the Intercolonial Railway without giving this increase. I wonder that the hon. gentleman could have the powers of face to look at intelligent men, and attempt to practice such a miserable deception upon them. Does that not account and more than account for all the increased number of employees? Does the hon. gentleman suppose that you can raise a railway from 723 miles to a railway of 1,186½ miles, which it is now, without increasing the number of employees? A more monstrous attempt at deception never has been made by any gentleman on the floor of this House; and if I had spent hours—ay, days—in depicting the character of the hon. gentleman, I could not have done it better than he himself has done it in the miserable attempt he has made to mislead and delude this House? What more? The hon. gentleman complains of my statement that he had dismissed hundreds of employees since he has held the position he now holds. I repeat it, Sir. I say if the Government had dared, which they have not dared, to comply with the order of this House which I moved for—if they had dared to furnish this House with the information I moved for, and pressed them to bring down and lay on the Table, it would have proved my statement that the hon. gentleman had dismissed hundreds of honest, intelligent and industrious employees since he assumed the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, to have been under the mark and not over it; and until the hon. gentleman does lay upon the Table of this House a statement of the number of employees dismissed from the public service in connection with the Department of Railways and Canals, he is not in a position to challenge my statement with any confidence. Now, Sir, I do not require to prolong this discussion. The whole superstructure which the hon. gentleman built up has been swept away simply by letting a little daylight in upon this miserable attempt to mislead the House. But I think the hon. gentleman went a little beyond what might have been expected from a gentleman in his position when he undertook to discuss on the floor of this House the conduct and character of a relative of mine. I had not complained of the dismissal of that gentleman. I never named him or referred to him in this House in any shape or form.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You referred to him yesterday.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not name him. I referred to the fact that the hon. gentleman had dismissed an official who for many years had held the office of inspector of public buildings. The father of Mr. Hillson married a half-sister of mine; and when I tell hon. gentlemen that on the 22nd day of last May I had been forty-two years in public life, and that for a considerable portion of that period I had represented the county of Cumberland, my native county; when I remind them of the official positions I have held, which would have enabled me to provide for relatives and friends; when I tell them that you can count on the fingers of one hand all the relatives I have in the public service of Canada to-day, and that, among them all, the gentleman holding the highest and most important position held by any of them in the maritime provinces was Mr. Hillson, who held the office of inspector of public buildings; and when I tell them that that gentleman discharged his duty to the department with such fidelity, that, without any suggestion from any person, the officials who are charged with the duty of representing to the Government who of their employees are entitled to promotion recommended that in consequence of the able, diligent and effective manner in which he had performed his duties for many years, his salary should be advanced from $1,300 to $1,500 a year; hon. members will, I think, agree with me that the hon. gentleman ought to be ashamed of himself for attempting to bring such a question as that before this House. The hon. gentleman was hard driven; he was occupying a very indefensible position when he felt compelled to so violate every gentlemanly instinct as to make the references to that gentleman which he did. I say that there was not in the public service a man who had more faithfully, more zealously, or more in the interest of the public service, discharged his duty; and I drew the attention of the hon. gentleman yesterday to the fact that the services which he was performing for $1,300 a year, and ably performing, are now costing under the administration of the hon. gentleman over $2,000 a year, in addition to a large increase of travelling expenses. Now, Sir, I have said enough to expose the attempt which the hon. gentleman, with every desire to wound but without the power to strike, has exhibited here on the floor of this House to-night. Has the hon. gentleman been able to touch my position? Has he ventured to point to one single act in my whole public career that would reflect any discredit upon myself? With respect to the management of the Intercolonial Railway, I could point with pride to the position I occupy. Well, if there was anything that would warrant a gentleman in claiming the confidence not only of his friends behind him, but of every intelligent man in this country, it is the record made by myself during the period when I was Minister of Railways and Canals. I found that railway taking from the revenue over half a million dollars per annum, and I rescued it from that position. In the first year I reduced the deficit to below $100,000, and before I resigned office, I completely wiped it out. When the hon. gentleman can show such a record, when he can show that while charged with the painful and unpleasant duty of interfering with the positions held by the employees of the Intercolonial and effecting, in the public interest large reductions in the staff, he acted in the independent and fair and impartial spirit in which I am prepared to prove that I acted, he will then have some title to claim consideration for the services he has rendered his country. Instead of striking down opponents regardless of their worth and ability, I retained in the service my strongest political opponents and dispensed with the services of many of my friends, when I found that the public interest demanded it. And when the time came when I was able, in the changed condition of things, to increase the salaries of the employees and replace from time to time those with whom I had been compelled to dispense, I again set an example to the hon. gentleman, which he is not at all disposed to follow. But the hon. gentleman's whole misconduct in this matter is summed up in the single word that he used in characterising these dismissals. "Petty dismissals," he called them. Petty dismissals—what does the hon. gentleman mean? Does he mean that to deprive an honest man, who is discharging his duty to his country from Monday morning to Saturday night, and against whom he can bring no charge—does he mean to say that to deprive such a man of his bread and turn him out of his house and home, to deprive his family of their means of support, is a petty matter? Is there a man with a spark of manly feeling in his breast who would so describe it? Does he consider a starving wife and hungry children as petty objects, fit objects for his contempt on the floor of this House? That is the spirit in which the hon. gentleman has entered upon the discharge of his duties. He is drunk with power, he is drunk with the idea of finding himself a mighty autocrat who holds the fate of these poor men and poor women and children in his hands. He is drunk with power and regardful only of one thing—not what justice and fairness and regard for the interests of his country demand at his hands, but how he can best gratify the demands of his supporters in this House and out of it, even at the ruin of honest, hard-working men and their families. Sir, I would be more or less than a man if I could witness this utter violation of every principle that should govern a man with a heart or feeling without raising my protest against it. I would be more or less than a man if I did not, on the floor of this House, as I will in the presence of my assembled countrymen in every section of the country, hold up to execration the man who, having obtained a position of power and influence, abuses that position by crushing the helpless, and then adds insult to injury by turning round to his friends and seeking their plaudits by saying that he did not cut off half enough heads. "Petty dismissals" is the idea running through the hon. gentleman's mind. If it be the case of a man of influence and position and means, no gentleman is more ready to do everything to buy and obtain his support by any means than the hon. gentleman himself, but if it be a question of some one in a humble position, some one who is helpless in his grasp, why the autocrat of all the Russians could not trample on the serfs of his dominions with more ruthlessness than the hon. gentleman has exhibited. I need not detain the House further. The hon. gentleman himself has given us an insight into his public character and into the means he is prepared to adopt. He seeks to cover up his own misdeeds and mislead the House by trying to show that a state of things existed under my administration which I have proved did not exist. His statements, I have shown, were utterly without the slightest foundation.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Explain about the shingles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the first time I have heard of the subject and therefore know nothing about it.

Mr. POWELL. I would like to make a remark or two concerning the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways respecting the number of dismissals in New Brunswick. I am sure that the people of the constituency of Westmoreland, which I have the honour to represent, will be very much surprised to find that by some process of calculation peculiar to the hon. Minister of Railways, the number of dismissals in that county has been reduced to five. Why, I could show the hon. gentleman letters by the dozen—and I have one particularly in my mind—which show that there were sixty men dismissed in a block. The hon. gentleman knows it well. Whether the dismissals were justifiable or not is another matter which I shall not attempt to argue, but the fact remains that these dismissals were made. I know the fertility of resource of the hon. gentleman, I know what a happy faculty he possesses of reducing by his brilliant imagination exaggeration to a fine art; but I know further that so far from these dismissals being the dismissals of men who were employed but a short time before the election, the contrary is the case. I have in my mind the instance of one old servant, who had been on the Intercolonial from ten to fifteen years—a Conservative it is true, an Acadian Frenchman—and who had been four or five months on his sick bed, and who, the day after he was able to go to Moncton, received notice of dismissal, and his family have since been obliged, I understand, to look to the parish for help. The hon. gentleman has the records before him, and I state boldly that there were not sixty people put on the pay-roll of the Intercolonial immediately previous to the election. I refer to permanent employees.

The hon. gentleman gave another evidence of unfairness which escaped the attention of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman took the number of employees on the road in February and compared that with the number in the month of June. But does he not know well that every year special men are employed for the purpose of ballasting the road? Does he not know that generally from one to two thousand extra hands are taken on in the summer for the purpose of ballasting the road, and that therefore there can be no possible comparison between the number of employees on the road previous to this addition and the number on it in the month of June in 1896, when the ballasting was done. I know whereof I speak when I say that the largest shops of the Intercolonial Railway, the constructive and repair shops, and the largest number of employees in any constituency in Canada on that road, are to be found in the constituency I have the honour to represent. And I make this statement boldly, that if the hon. Minister meant to convey the impression that the permanent employees on the Intercolonial Railway had been increased in one year by some 1,300 by the late Government, he sought to convey an impression which is utterly unfounded. Far from that being the case, I have it from the mouth of the chief commissioner, who told me, when time and time again I applied to have people put on that road—and he told me that also a year previous to the election—that so far from increasing the staff, the late Government were decreasing it, and that their policy was to continue decreasing the number of ordinary employees on the road. But when the hon. gentleman asserts that this road is used for political purposes, he sets forth as facts things which are not known to me. But I will say that while things may have taken place during the election, I am not prepared to take the word of the Minister of Railways when he states that these things appeared from sworn testimony. I have never seen the sworn testimony he speaks of, I have never heard of it, and I venture the assertion that no gentleman on this side of the House has ever heard of it. There may have been such an examination as he speaks of; I am not in a position to deny it. But I will say that, so far from that railroad, in my constituency, being run on political principles, the very opposite was the case. During my short term in office as the representative of the people here and previous to my election, when I had something to do with the administration of patronage when my friend Senator Wood represented the county, at no time was any man put in the works unless there was a demand made for him by the head of some mechanical department. The hon. gentleman has gone further. He says that the railroad has been run entirely to promote the interests of the Conservative party. And some hon. gentleman—I think it was the chief whip of the Government side (Mr. Sutherland)—in the course of the debate challenged any gentleman on this side to name a single individual from the Liberal ranks who was appointed to office under a Conservative Government. I will give him the names of some not in the shops, but in the general office, of men on the permanent staff of officials of the Intercolonial Railway. Messrs. Walker, Sutton and Cruise were so employed. We employed a man, not on the railway, but in the post office—Mr. Atkinson—who voted against me and whose vote has always been given in the interests of the Liberal party. Not only that, but when the raises of pay were recommended, and when some were made by the late Administration before they went out of power, so far as the county of Westmoreland is concerned, there was not the slightest interference on the part of myself or the members of the Conservative party with these increases. They were allowed to be made and made alone on good, wholesome principles of public policy, without any political interference whatever. Some of the gentlemen I have mentioned were on the list for the raise of pay, and Mr. Walker, a respectable young man and an intense Grit, who has been but a few years in the employ, has been given an increase amounting to $200 or $300.

Now, the hon. gentleman has waxed warm over this matter. The delicate sensibility which is characteristic of the hon. gentleman has been touched, and he has indulged in great weeping and wailing over the wrong wrought by the Conservative party contrary to the high-toned principles of statesmanship so dear to himself. I shall not enter upon a discussion of his course in those spheres of political life which he has occupied in our province. But I must say that when the hon. gentleman acceded to power in New Brunswick in 1883, he found a province that, in respect of public morality, in respect of high ideals of statesmanship, had no superior in this Dominion; and during his short regime from 1883 to 1886 he brought more vileness into the politics of the province, he debased public sentiment more than all the other men combined who had been in power in that province. This is not the occasion to enter into these questions, or to take up the time of the House to expose the misdemeanours which has called down upon his head the denunciations of the leading men of his party; even of gentlemen who are now supporting him in this House. They have charged him, charged him publicly, through the columns of the newspapers, though not upon the floor of this House, with these misdemeanours. And this is the gentleman who is displaying to-night this delicate sense of public propriety. Who has not heard of the Northumberland deal? Who has not heard of the thousand and one offences against public morality chargeable to the hon. gentleman which I shall not attempt to discuss to-night? I am sorry that this discussion has taken so wide a range. We all feel like getting home next week, if possible, and I would wish the discussion to be brought to a close as soon as possible so that we may get on with the pressing public business before us.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall make but one or two observations and shall not attempt to answer generally either of the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the committee, for that, I think, would be unnecessary at this time of the night. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition evidently is touched in a tender spot. I think that the temper, the excited feeling which the hon. gentleman exhibited bears abundant testimony to the completeness of the answer which he received from me to the attacks to which he has not scrupled to make upon me from time to time with reference to my conduct in regard to these dismissals. I leave the hon. gentleman just where I left him at the close of my remarks a little while ago. Let him take what comfort he feels he is able to take out of his reference to my reply, references which, as he made them, were a complete perversion of the statement which I made to the committee and by means of which he very skilfully and cleverly evaded the point which I presented to the committee on the subject of the employees of the Intercolonial Railway. I pointed out that between February, 1880, and February, 1881, there was no reduction, but a very slight increase in the number of persons employed—at all events, there was no substantial reduction. The hon. gentleman seems to think that he can answer the conclusion which has been drawn from that fact by referring to extensions made on the Intercolonial anterior to 1880 and to extensions made long subsequent to 1881. I called the attention of the committee to the fact that in June, 1885, there were on the pay-rolls of the Intercolonial Railway 3,941 men, and that in the corresponding month of 1896 that number had increased to 5,296. Does the hon. gentleman think that he is making an argument against that which I presented when he states that anterior to June, 1885, there was an extension of the Intercolonial Railway of three or four hundred miles? I do not know how an extension of the road which took place long years previously could have the slightest bearing on the number of men employed in June, 1895, and in June, 1896, for which period the comparison was made. Were extensions of the Intercolonial made between February, 1880, and February, 1881, or between June, 1895, and June, 1896? Everybody knows that there was none. The hon. gentleman catches at what he thinks will be a clever evasion of the real point I was making with a view to misleading the judgment of the committee and fastening upon me some perversion of the facts. The statement that the hon. gentleman characterizes as inaccurate is a statement I received from the general manager of Government railways at Moncton. I wired him to send it to me, and he sent it. I have had no other information from him on the subject. I assume that the information he gave me is accurate. I know no reason why he should mislead me. If there is a misstatement it belongs to him and not to me. I venture to give the statement to the committee as he has given it to me, abating nothing and adding nothing. I leave it before the committee as a correct statement of the facts. I do not answer the allusion by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) to matters of provincial politics. On many occasions have I heard this speech of the hon. gentleman in the local legislature, but more extended and prolonged. It has become an old story all over the province. But so little effect has it had that the party that he belonged to failed to make any impression, failed to maintain its numbers, became reduced and dwindled away, until the hon. gentleman himself thought it well to leave provincial politics and find a more fitting and larger sphere in the politics of the Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask my hon. friend if he would kindly read the question in which he asked information from the general manager, and the answer to that. I have not been able distinctly to find out what was compassed by the general manager.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated to the committee what my question was. There were two or three different questions, but the question as to the number of persons who were on the pay-roll was in these terms: I asked him to send me the numbers of the employees on the pay-rolls at the several dates which I have read to the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the dates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not read the committee all the dates, but I could read them all if they were desired.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend need not read all of them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will give the dates which I referred to awhile ago. I asked for the pay-roll, for a statement of the number of employees who were on the pay-roll of the Intercolonial Railway in February, 1880, and in February, 1881, in order that I might have the corresponding date with that which the hon. gentleman referred to in his statement, in that month of February, 1880. I asked the general manager also to furnish me with a statement of the number of men on the pay-roll in June, 1895, and the pay-roll in June, 1896, and the last full month of 1897. The information which I have given to the committee is the information which that gentleman furnished me. I also asked him if he would forward me a full statement of the number of persons who had been dismissed from the Intercolonial Railway service by my direction, or at the instance of any member of Parliament, or of any candidate—I think I included that—on political grounds; and the information which I have given to the committee is precisely the information that was furnished me, and having given this truthfully before, I could not give it any differently now. That is the information that I asked for, and that is the statement that he furnished me. I have already stated that the general manager himself stated to me that the season of the year had arrived when, having regard to the necessities of the railway, it was customary to make a reduction in the staff, and he asked me if it would be agreeable to my wishes that such a reduction should be made.

Mr. FOSTER. At what time was that reduction made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot exactly say, but I can procure that information; the general manager will no doubt be able to furnish me with it. I think that Mr. Pottinger was here at the time. I am not sure but that the conversation took place in the presence of the Deputy Minister, but on that point I would not like to state positively. I stated to Mr. Pottinger that I wanted him, in dispensing with the services of men, to have regard to a proper principle, and I said that I thought—I tell the committee frankly what I did say—that I thought, in dispensing with the services of the men, he should apply this rule to those who were last taken into the service of the Intercolonial Railway prior to the change of Government, as far as he could possibly do so. I may unhesitatingly say that those were my instructions. If he has varied or departed from them in any particular, I believe it has been only to the extent to which he himself felt it necessary to do so in the public interest. Those were my directions, and they are directions which

I thought I was justified in giving, and which I can defend under all circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman what month it was in 1897 for which he got the information?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The month of April. I got a statement in May.

Mr. FOSTER. How many in the month of April?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The number was 4,083.

Mr. FOSTER. What were the numbers in June, 1895, and June, 1896?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In June, 1895, 3,941; in June, 1896, 5,296. I can supplement the information which I gave the committee, since the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) has endeavoured to make a point which it is not open to him to make in accordance with the facts. I may state that while, in the month of June, 1895, it was found necessary to have upon the pay-roll 344 men who would not be required probably as permanent men, or as men who would be employed all the year round, in the month of June, 1896, the number had swollen to the unaccountable figure of 1,569. Now, my hon. friend can compare the two figures and see how far this usual rule, this imperative need which arises in that season of the year, in the month of June, had led to the increase.

Mr. POWELL. If my hon. friend will consult his chief engineer or Deputy Minister, he will find that the balance of 1895 was appointed in July, and the balance of 1896 was appointed in June, and that would explain the rise. It had to be done in either June or July, and this time it was done in June. That is the explanation.

Mr. FOSTER. It only needs a very little analysis and close questioning to find out that the airy statements of the Minister of Railways will not bear criticism. The hon. gentleman is frankness itself so far as words go, but so far as his statements go, he is devious, intricate, indistinct and misleading; and the statements that he has made in the last five minutes in answer to half a dozen questions have proved that, beyond a doubt. And the quick little man by the side of him, the Minister of Finance, when he saw that the hon. gentleman had hopelessly put his foot in it by neglecting to tell what he knew, or if not, he is not fit for his position, that whereas, in making a comparison between the month of the year when the ballasting was done with a similar month in the year in which the ballasting was not done—in which case his argument went for nothing, and worse than nothing—the quick gentleman beside him, in order to help him out, thought he was doing him a service by asking the question as to why it was done in June and not in July. The two hon. gentlemen who sit together ought always to sit together. They understand it, they have gone through the mill, but it did make one laugh inwardly who had lived in the province of New Brunswick and who knew something of my hon. friend who to-day is Minister of Railways and Canals in this House, and who lectures the Liberal-Conservative party for devious election tricks and knowing "how to do it." The hon. gentleman may well laugh. There are gentlemen sitting in this House who know his tricks just as well as I do. The hon. gentleman knows them himself, and he knows that when the Queen's county election case comes on, as it soon will, some of these peculiar cases will no doubt be open to the public gaze. But my hon. friend assumed great political virtue when he turned to this side of the House and accused us of being immersed in the mire of political corruption. The hon. gentleman needs more than a small nozzle hose to purify himself from the mire of corruption, of which he proved himself past grand master in the election of Queen's and Sunbury. If there was any idea that the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) grasped clearly when the Minister of Railways and Canals was making that triumphant declaration that only seven persons had been dismissed in New Brunswick, it was this, that all the dismissals which took place amounted to 7, while we wicked Tories declared there were from 60 to 90. When asked the reason, his answer became whittled down to a different thing. What he asked his chief was, not how many had been dismissed but how many were dismissed on political grounds? Does not the hon. member for Grey see what a great difference there is between these two things. The hon. gentleman grasped the one and applauded it; he grasps the other but does not applaud it. The hon. Minister has done to-night what he may think to be a very clever turn in political debating, but it is a turn which stamps him as an unfair man in debate—I was going to add another adjective to "unfair," which would be the opposite of brave. If there is anything an hon. gentleman holding the position of a Minister should do, it is certainly to give the House an opportunity of sifting facts which have been presented to the House and ascertaining if they are true. The hon. gentleman has been appointing political commissions for the last six months. He has had his provincial henchmen acting as judges and travelling from one end of the province of New Brunswick to the other, sitting on men as much their superiors in all that makes for respectability, character and standing as it is possible to imagine. I asked him in the early part of this session for a return of those commissions and the evidence and of the findings of those commissions. The hon. gentleman has quoted to-night information he has got from those commissions. To this day neither he nor any member of the Government has implemented the promise the leader of the Government made over and over again in this House, that I should have that return before the discussion on the Estimates took place. The hon. gentleman, keeping this information up his sleeve, refusing it to the House, refusing it to myself, to whom the House ordered him to give it, refusing it to myself to whom his leader publicly pledged himself in this House that it should be furnished before the Estimates were discussed—the hon. gentleman is brave enough and ingenuous enough to use that information in bits and in shreds, refusing the document to his opponents so that it could be criticised fully and with the force that would come from a criticism made when in possession of all the facts. When two, three or four questions were put to the hon. gentleman, analysing some of the information furnished, he had to make a statement to the House that bore on its face a diametrically different meaning and a different aspect. Are all his arguments of the same tenor? From one, learn all. From the four which I punctured by four short questions, until they had to stand in a very different light, we may learn that possibly, if all the facts of the case were available, we would be able to show that the hon. gentleman's statements were as unreliable in the other case as they have been in this. But does the Government think it honourable, does this Liberal Administration think it honourable to refuse to the House information which was ordered, which was said by the leader would be brought down before this time, and then for one of its members to use shreds and bits of it to support his argument? Is it honourable and brave political warfare? I leave it to the press and I leave it to the people of the country to say. So far as I am concerned, I want to say that I wish to obtain that return. I want to have an opportunity of analysing it to the full before this House prorogues, and it is my intention, if that document is not forthcoming, so far as my endurance enables me and any friends of mine who choose to join with me, to draw it from them by the only constitutional means available to members who are deprived of their just rights. I would not have said anything if the hon. gentleman had not used information which so far he has refused to furnish to the House. Will he lay on the Table now the instructions given to his chief superintendent, and which he quoted here to-night?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman lay on the Table the information he telegraphed for, and the precise way in which the answer came back?

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How generous this is on the part of the hon. gentleman, after he has already used the information! I asked the hon. gentleman, because I thought the hon. gentleman would repeat his answer of last night, viz.: that I had not asked for or moved for that order, and he did not think it worth while giving it. What the hon. gentleman did last night, was to come down and make a statement on an important question when he had not laid a scrap of information in respect to it before the House. What the hon. gentleman has done to night is to follow on the same line; and that hon. gentleman lectures us on parliamentary methods, lectures us on parliamentary and political purity. That hon. gentleman refers to his record in New Brunswick. Yes, his record is known; and that record will not assist me a single whit in believing one single statement that hon. gentleman makes, unless I have the proof of it. The different gloss he had to put on these statements after I had asked a few questions, from the meaning he conveyed when he was sailing on in the plentitude of his hysterical oration, is proof of what I have stated. The hon. gentleman should give the House this information, and then we can sift it and find out how far the assertion is in accordance with the facts. To lead this House to believe that on the whole of the Intercolonial only seven men had been dismissed by the hon. gentleman in New Brunswick is to undervalue altogether the intelligence and memory of his own supporters from the province of New Brunswick, and it is to make a draft on hon. gentlemen on this side of the House which we do not propose to honour. The hon. gentleman will have to learn one thing—he will have to learn to treat this House as a deliberative body ought to be treated. Was anything more humiliating than the absolute tangle in which the hon. gentleman involved himself this afternoon as to his position about dismissals of officials? Was anything more unparliamentary and unmanly than his heated threat to-night, that if we dared open our mouths about dismissals, more men would be dismissed than have been already? Does the hon. gentleman think a threat of that kind is going to shut the mouths of one honest man on this side of the House? If he does he is mightily mistaken, but it is an evidence which I would not care to give; it is an evidence which my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) may be disposed to give; it is an evidence which would do neither himself nor myself credit if we did give it: to threaten, that if too much is said about petty dismissals, more of the dismissals will take place. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) may call them petty or not; it all depends upon the point of view. From the point of view of common humanity, from the point of view of the bread winner's anxiety to provide for his family, these are not in any sense petty, and I think my hon. friend's characterization of them might well have been spared, to the credit of our common humanity, and to the credit of my hon. friend's reputation as well.

Mr. McCLURE. The request of the last speaker for information from the Government in regard to these investigations, impresses itself strangely upon my mind. While I had no access to these investigations and had no communication with the Government upon the question—the hon. Minister' when he referred to the manner in which the Intercolonial Railway had been used as a political machine in the elections of 1896, did not state a single fact which is not well known in the county in which I live. If hon. gentlemen opposite are ignorant of the manner in which the Intercolonial Railway was used in the elections of 1896, then I charge them with being recreant to their duty as Cabinet Ministers, for there was not a man in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway in the county of Colchester, who did not know that the statements of the Minister (Mr. Blair), with regard to the coercion of employees by the Tory Government, were absolutely true. I would be willing to let the record of the Conservative party in connection with the Intercolonial Railway be buried in the past, if gentlemen opposite did not have the audacity and effrontery to stand up here, after their record of eighteen years, and charge this Government with doing the very thing which they themselves have been perpetrating in this country during their long term of power. These gentlemen opposite need not think they are talking to persons who know nothing about this. I live in the town of Truro, one of the principal railway centres in the province of Nova Scotia, where there are nearly 400 employees of the Intercolonial Railway, and I tell hon. gentlemen opposite, that every man of the 400 will admit, that during these eighteen years he held employment under the condition, that he should vote Tory or get out. Sir, have I not seen these men ordered on certain occasions to attend Conservative committee meetings in the town of Truro, and if they failed to attend they were marked men, and soon lost their places. The leader of the Opposition told the House to-night, that he allowed many strong political opponents to remain in office when he went out of power in 1873. Where are these men on the Intercolonial Railway? I know these employees as well as the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) does, and I tell him, that there have been no strong political opponents of his among these employees who dare to open their mouths. There have been a few men who during these eighteen years have dared to be Grits in a weak and trembling way, and who with fear and trembling may have gone to the polls and cast their votes, and Sir, if they did not lose their jobs, their pay was cut down to a pretty small figure. I know men who to-day are working on the Intercolonial Railway for $30 a month, and who are doing the very same work that other men are getting $60 for. And why? It is because the $30 man was suspected of being a Liberal, and the $60 man was known to be a Conservative. If they did not dismiss the Liberal employee, they kept him back, and he could get no promotion. I was not surprised that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) should close his speech with a pathetic appeal that this debate should stop. I do not wonder that his friends should desire that the debate should stop, because they are not in a position to have their record investigated. The statement of the Minister about the distribution of passes on the line is absolutely true, to my own personal knowledge. I have seen the books, I have seen the passes distributed, and I have had them in my possession. Friends of mine obtained them, not from officials of the Intercolonial Railway, but from chairmen of Conservative committees, who circulated them throughout the county of Colchester. In June, 1896, they brought Tory voters into the county of Colchester on these passes. Not only that, but they brought a special train from the county of Pictou, and they stopped it, not at a railway station, but out on the line near a polling booth, and they landed thirty men on free passes to cast their votes against me at that election. If ever there was a political party that had a strong temptation to exercise the power of dismissal, it was the Liberal party in the county of Colchester, and yet, not one of the 400 employees in the town of Truro was dismissed? Why is that? Sir, it is because, as far as I have any voice in the matter, I felt that it was not the employees of the Intercolonial Railway who were to blame, but it was the hon. gentlemen opposite who when in power made these employees slaves, and compelled them to do that which they did not want to do. There was an election run in the county of Colchester since the general elections of June, 1896, and I defy the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), and I defy any of his political friends—since they are so ready to hurl defiances across the floor, to show that this Government, or any agent of this Government, ever exercised the slightest influence, to compel, or to induce, or even to persuade any employee on the Intercolonial Railway to cast his vote in any other way than as he wished. There was even a free pass circulated in that county during the by-election when the Liberal Government was in power. Not even an employee of the line could get a pass during that election. Outsiders got free passes, and employees got free passes, and everybody got free passes in June, 1896, but when we fought the election in April, 1897, not a man, not even an employee was carried over the Intercolonial Railway on a free pass. And, what was the result in that election? In the town of Truro a large number of the railway employees, as they had a perfect right to do, abstained from voting altogether, and some few of them voted for me and some against me. I assume from the results, although I do not know otherwise, that some voted for me and some against me, but the great majority stayed away as they had a perfect right to do so. Those who wished to vote against me were not sent away, as those who might vote against the Conservative Government were, to my personal knowledge, sent away in 1896. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is very anxious that we should give him information. I am not a member of the Government. I am not a member of this commission, and I had nothing to do with this investigation, but I could give him the names of gentlemen of his own party who could give him all the information the Minister gave him to-night. I am not going to believe that the hon. leader of the Opposition, with all the vast sagacity and experience he has, could be at the head of a Government in this country, and permit all this kind of thing to go on under his supervision, and know nothing about it. He taxes me too much when he asks me to believe anything like that. I heard some gentlemen say here this afternoon that up in the province of Ontario the employees of the Government were not partisans. I was glad to hear it. I was glad to hear that there was a province where they were not partisans. But down in Nova Scotia, where the Conservative party has been nurtured upon the doctrines of the hon. leader of the Opposition, a man in the employ of the Government would not be there very long unless he was a partisan. They were not content that these men should vote for them, but they must shout for them, they must attend committee meetings, they must show that they were on the right side, or they were marked men. I wish to tell hon. gentlemen that so far as I am concerned there is no spirit of revenge in my breast. I do not want any revenge on these men. I have not asked for dismissals on the Intercolonial, and I do not intend to ask for any; but I want the House to know, what the hon. gentleman knows very well, that the Intercolonial Railway was a political machine, and was used by the Conservative party for political purposes. The hon. gentleman said that the Minister of Railways was drunk with power. So, we may say that some hon. gentlemen opposite, judging from their language, are drunk with the loss of power. Because this political machine has been wrenched from their hands, they get up here and shout in the hope that they will frighten us and the Government, and frighten the country by their much speaking. I think the hon. gentlemen might just as well leave this question alone. I do not think they will make anything by the investigation. I simply wish to make this statement, that the political methods of hon. gentlemen opposite are well known, and that they have used the Intercolonial Railway as a political machine in the past. I make this further statement, that so far as the information we have goes—and I think I know something about the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway—it has not been a political machine under the present Government, and I challenge hon. gentlemen to bring their evidence to show one single case, so far as the county of Colchester is concerned, in which a single person has been dismissed, disturbed, approached, or made uncomfortable; and the county of Colchester is an important county, having a large number of employees, and I do not think the Minister of Railways or the Government had any special reason for treating it differently from any other county. In fact, there was a tremendous temptation for treating it the other way, because we had a by-election, and we were anxious to carry the county. But under the present Government the employees have been treated fairly, and will be treated fairly so long as they continue to discharge their duties and leave politics alone.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is evident, from the course pursued this afternoon and since dinner time by the Minister of Railways and those supporting him, that they are not very anxious to get on with business. I know nothing about the management of the Intercolonial Railway, and I am not going to say anything about it; but I presume, from the speech made by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that some hon. members from the province of New Brunswick or the province of Nova Scotia will be disposed to say something more. But I wish to ask the Minister of Railways a question. He gave some figures a few moments ago of the number of employees on the Intercolonial Railway. I understood him to say that in 1878, when the Mackenzie Administration left power, there were 3,300 employees. As I understand that the mileage of the railway at that time was about 700 miles, that would be about five men to the mile. The next figure he gave was 2,900, to which the number had been reduced for the same mileage by the hon. leader of the Opposition when he became Minister of Railways in the new Administration. Next, the hon. Minister gave the number of employees in June, 1895, as 3,241. At that time the mileage had increased to about 1,000 miles, so that that is less than four men to the mile. In June, 1896, the number was 5,296, during the time they were ballasting; but even then that was only five men to the mile, no more than the number required to run the railway without the ballasting under the Mackenzie Administration. The last figure the hon. gentleman gave was 4,083 as employed in the month of April, 1897. The mileage has not increased from June, 1895, to the month of April last; yet the regular staff has been increased from 3,941 to 4,083, or an increase under the present Administration of 142 men.

• The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not speak of the regular staff. I spoke of the number on the pay-rolls.

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume that that was the number of the regular staff, because you would not be ballasting in April. It is evident that they were ballasting in June, 1895, and in June, 1896, while in April, 1897, they were not ballasting. It is a comparison of the number of men per mile that I want to make. Under the Mackenzie Administration, it took five men to the mile, whereas under the Conservative Administration it took only four, except when they were ballasting, according to the figures the hon. gentleman gave. If the figures are not correct, I would like him to correct them.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that shingles meant passes, and that in one telegram a man had called for 75,000 shingles. Does my hon. friend mean the House to understand that each shingle meant a pass, and that he called for 78,000 passes? It is very important to know for that is rather a monstrous thing.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think 1,000 shingles meant one pass.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before this vote passes, I wish to call the attention of the Acting Minister of Militia to a dismissal, and I will do it in a very few words. At the English military tournament, the Toronto Highlanders has just beaten all comers in the bayonet contest. Last June the Royal Military College cadets beat the Toronto Highlanders in the military tournament bayonet contest. The cadets were trained by Sergeant-Major Morgan, late of the Scotch Guards, and I would like to know if it was for that service Sergeant-Major Morgan was dismissed from the staff of the Military College?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is a question I certainly cannot answer. If Sergeant-Major Morgan has been dismissed, it was on the report of Colonel Kitson, the present commandant, who, I know, would make no report advising the dismissal of any man without good cause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before this resolution is adopted, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals whether any of these commissions are now outstanding in the province of New Brunswick, with respect to the dismissal of officials from the Intercolonial Railway? I was very much surprised, indeed, to hear the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals that only four men in the county of Halifax had been dismissed from the service of the Intercolonial Railway. I am bound, of course, to accept his statement, but it is a matter of great surprise to me, because I would venture to say four times that number have been dismissed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have given the hon. gentleman my source of information; I have not any personal knowledge.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There must be some misapprehension because I am sure that four times as many men have come to me and told me they were dismissed. Perhaps the reason for the misapprehension is this, that while they have not been dismissed at the instance of a member or a defeated candidate, they may have been dismissed at the instance of some one else. I do not know how that may be, but certainly the statement of the hon. Minister is very surprising. I would like to know whether any commissions for the purpose of investigating the conduct of officials are now outstanding in the province of Nova Scotia, particularly with reference to the hon. gentleman's department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman means whether there has been any commissioner appointed and is open to hold any further investigations if instructed to do so, I know of no investigations that are now pending. There have been some. Mr. John T. Ross has been commissioned to hold some inquiry, but there is none now pending which I can call to mind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to state, with regard to that, that I consider Mr. John T. Ross a very capable and worthy gentleman to fill that position, and I would be the last person in this House or elsewhere to question both his great capacity and his perfect integrity and fairness, and I believe he has acted throughout in a way that commends itself to all those who have had any opportunity of forming a judgment. But I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister one circumstance that seems to be slightly inconsistent in the matter. As I understand it, the principle upon which the Government has proceeded is this, that Government employees are not free to express their opinion except by the simple act of voting, and that any participation in an election contest, either by canvassing or by representing a candidate at the polls or otherwise, is held sufficient to justify the dismissal of such a person, although he may have efficiently performed the duties of his office and have in no way transgressed the discipline of his department. That principle is one which I never could quite acquiesce in, because it seemed to me that offensive partisanship to justify dismissal, must mean a partisanship which either interferes with the discipline of the office or with the efficient performance of its duties. But what I desire to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister is this: that if men are to be dismissed for participation of that character in elections, it is only right that the men sent to judge them should refrain from similar partisanship, and I desire to point out, without any reflection upon Mr. Ross, for whom I have the highest regard, that that gentleman was an active member of the Liberal committee during the last local election in the county of Halifax and had charge of a district on behalf of the Liberal party. If participation in public affairs is to be construed as political partisanship, then the men sent to judge these officials should not be guilty of the same act, while acting as judges. They should not, while in the position of judges, commit the same offence which they were appointed to try. It might be well that the instructions given these gentlemen in Nova Scotia and elsewhere should contain some intimation of that kind. I do not think that the participation of Mr. Ross in political affairs would, in the slightest degree, swerve his judgment. I have every confidence in his judgment, although he is a strong Liberal, and no better man could have been sent there, but I think that the fact that he himself has indulged in participation in political affairs while holding this position as judge of such conduct on the part of Government employees is a striking commentary on the course of the Government, and is pretty good evidence that the whole proceeding is a farce from beginning to end. To say that postmasters getting $50 and $100 a year are to be dismissed from office for the sole reason that they have canvassed a man or represented a candidate at the polls seems to be carrying the doctrine altogether too far.

It has been charged over and over again in this House that men were dismissed from positions which they held during the regime of the Liberal-Conservative party because they took an active part in political affairs. Now, I thought it worth my while to make some investigation in the province of Nova Scotia, and I have documents under my hand with which I shall not trouble the committee, but which I am ready to produce if any gentleman sees fit to question the accuracy of my statement. I can produce the names in at least eight or ten counties in the province Nova Scotia of office-holders, postmasters and custom-house officers, who openly and repeatedly, year after year, took an active part in opposition to the Conservative party during the last eighteen years and against whom complaints were made on that score, and who were not dismissed from office. I know that in the county of Antigonish, to which I will refer only as an instance, some half dozen officer-holders, Liberals, actively participated in political affairs in opposition to the late Sir John Thompson, that complaints were made to him in regard to the matter and that his answer was—what I think should be the answer of any Government under similar circumstances—If you can show that these men have not efficiently performed the duties of their offices, I will dismiss them; if not, I will not dismiss them. That is only one instance out of many throughout the province of Nova Scotia. I can give similar instances in counties now represented by Ministers of the Crown in this House, and I venture to say that when hon. members have made statements such as I have heard over and over again, it is because these gentlemen have not seen fit to investigate the facts. I do not say that some officials may not have been dismissed for this reason, but I say that I have made a pretty careful investigation in some of the counties in Nova Scotia and up to this time I have not found any official such as a country postmaster or custom-house officer who has been interfered with by the Conservative Government even though he may have participated in elections in the most open manner while holding office.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is very late in the evening to continue this discussion, but I can hardly allow the committee to pass the item without making a reference to the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax). If he had made an investigation in the county of Halifax such as he has made in other counties east of Halifax and west of Halifax, he would have satisfied his mind that there had been dismissals in that county for political reasons by the Conservative party. I have investigated that matter because I felt bound to know what the precedents were under our provincial and Dominion practice as well as the constitutional rule laid down by the constitutional authorities who have written on the question. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) does not care for the constitutional authorities on this question; he demonstrated that in his speech last session. But the fact that the hon. gentleman does not care for the constitutional authorities on this question does not in the slightest degree invalidate their doctrines. If the hon. gentleman had taken the pains to consult the books on this interesting question, he would have seen it laid down as a constitutional principle—

That active interference—

Not an offensive interference, though the words mean the same to my mind—not that it must be something violent, furious, exceptional or out of the way, but "active" interference——in politics on the part of a non-political office-holder would be a case of misconduct sufficient to justify his dismissal.

I do not want plainer words, I do not want to have a principle more clearly laid down. So clear is this that it is not necessary for me to go to the original authorities upon which this statement of the rule is founded :

It is a well-understood rule of constitutional government, that all such functionaries should abstain from taking an active part in political contests, and should observe a strict neutrality therein.

I will not trouble this committee with any further quotations from constitutional writers, but I may say that the principle has been thoroughly well established, and that it has been well established in this country, certainly since 1849, when Earl Grey sent his despatch which will be found in the journals of the House of Assembly, with which my hon. friend must be acquainted. The hon. gentleman tells us that he does not know of a case of a postmaster being dismissed for political reasons. I will read a document which he must have seen in print showing that there are cases of postmasters having been dismissed for political reasons. It is brief, or I would not trouble the committee with it. This is the statement of a man whose word will be accepted by any one who knows him. It is the statement of Mr. Gilbert W. Walker, hotel-keeper :

I, Gilbert W. Walker, of Halifax, in the county of Halifax, hotel keeper, do solemnly declare that I was postmaster at Milford for four years and upwards, and in 1887 I was removed from my office as postmaster without any cause being assigned, and without any inquiry or investigation, and without any charge made against me, and an active Tory was appointed my successor. The reason for my removal, as I verily believe, was that I was an active Liberal. I had always discharged the duties satisfactorily, and no complaints had ever been made against me, and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and of the same force and effect as an oath under the Canada Evidence Act.

GILBERT W. WALKER.

Solemnly declared before me this 5th day of December, A.D. 1896, &c.

Now that is a statement which I think nobody will question, which nobody can question. But when you look below the facts of the case and into the philosophy of the thing, it must be seen that a postmaster, above all others in the public service, should be above suspicion of being an active political partisan. The postmaster has a great deal of opportunity to do political mischief. I am not a political campaigner to any great extent, but when I was engaged in a political campaign about a twelve month ago, I remember seeing copies of eloquent speeches which were delivered in this House and sent through the post office with the compliments of the talented gentlemen who delivered them. And we know that our friends have suffered through the action of the post office in such matters. Is it not possible that when a political postmaster finds campaign literature coming in that expresses ideas contrary to his own political faith and feeling, he will take good care that it does not reach the persons to whom it is addressed but that it shall go to his wood-house or scullery or some annex that he may have to his premises, and shall not be perused by the persons and in the way in which it was intended, but by entirely different persons in an entirely different way? I remember a speech delivered by the ex-Minister of Finance, whom I will not call "a sophistical rhetorician," though he is sometimes "intoxicated by the exuberance of his own verbosity," in which the hon. gentleman, who does not mix anything else, had mixed his figures and talked of nailing his compass to the standard of truth, justice and right, or something of that kind. I would never have made the discovery of that speech had it not reached the hands of the person for whom it was intended. Now I think it is very necessary and proper that a postmaster should be above the suspicion of political partisanship. I think that it is right, therefore, that when a postmaster mingles actively in political contests, he should be dismissed, because in every community in this country, and especially in rural communities, there is great suspicion aroused if the postmaster has very strong political feelings. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition in this House (Sir Charles Tupper), to whom a fresh access of power seems to have come since the festive event of an evening or two ago, made some observations—and that reminds me, by the way, that history repeats itself. I was reading a few nights ago from Lord Malmesbury's Memoirs, of a great party that was given by Lord Palmerston. He says :

There was a great party last night at Lord Palmerston's and the language of the Opposition was very bitter—

That is the kind of party that they had the other night.

—they look upon office as their birthright, and upon those who deprive them of it as brigands who have robbed them of their property.

It occurred to me when I heard the ferocious attacks of the leader of the Opposition made upon the Government last night, and again to-day, that something had occurred of this sort which Lord Malmesbury tells us of in his memoirs. And I was struck this evening with the statement he made that during the Conservative regime no poor man, no labouring man, had ever been dismissed from his position, no man who earned his bread by the sweat of his brow was ever removed from his place, that it was a "brutal thing" to deprive him of his bread and butter. I thought I ought to read to him, so that he should not go away with a false impression, a couple of statements that were published in the newspapers at Halifax, statutory declarations, upon which the parties can be convicted and punished if they are not true, and which show the way in which things were managed when the hon. gentleman was a member of the Government, for if not actually in office at the time, certainly he was in entire sympathy with that party which he now leads, and I think he was actually a member of this House and of the Government. I am going to read two declarations and it will only take me five minutes to do it—I would not think of imposing upon the patience of the House for any longer time. One is that of Mr. Samuel Case, of Halifax, shipwright.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is the date?

Mr. RUSSELL. This declaration was made in or about December, 1896.

I, Samuel Case, Halifax, in the county of Halifax, shipwright, do solemnly declare as follows:—

I had been in the employ of the Government about three years down to the year 1878, having been first in the railway service, in the repairing department, on steady work by the Mackenzie Government. I was dismissed about four weeks after the election and almost immediately after the Tory Government came into power. I immediately called on the two Conservative members representing the county, by one of whom I was referred to the other. On calling upon the latter I asked him why I was dismissed. He said "Because we have to make room for those who supported us." I said, "How do you know that I did not support you?" He made very little reply that I can remember. I thanked him, however, for the satisfaction he had given me. The man who took my place was an active canvasser and committeeman who had worked hard for the Conservative party. I had taken no part at all in the election, or in any election before that, beyond voting. At the same time that I was dismissed, a number of other employees in the railway department were also dismissed, all of whom were Liberals. No Tories that I know of were dismissed, but a number of Tories were put on in the places of the Liberals who were dismissed. Several of the Liberals so dismissed were obliged to leave the province and seek employment in the United States. In no case of such dismissal was any inquiry held, or any charge made against the persons so dismissed.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and of the same force and effect as an oath under the Canada Evidence Act.

SAMUEL CASE.

Declared before me, &c.

I have another declaration from a gentleman who was a carpenter, Mr. Edward Warner, who was permanently employed on one of the Government steamers:

I, Edward Warner, of Dartmouth, in the county of Halifax, coal merchant, do solemnly declare as follows:—

In 1878 I was carpenter on board the steamer "Newfield," having been appointed by the Mackenzie Government, and had been so employed for about three years. On the day of the Dominion election in 1873, I remained on board the steamer all the morning at Dartmouth, where she was undergoing repairs on the Dartmouth marine slip. In the afternoon she went to Halifax and was moored at the wharf. I remained for the most part on board and took no part whatever in the election, having no vote. We then went from Halifax to Pictou a few weeks after the election. When at Pictou Captain Purdy handed me a paper to be filled up with the particulars as to my appointment, stating by whom I was appointed and on whose recommendation; and similar papers were handed to the other hands and the captain as well. I filled up my paper, stating, as was the fact, that I had been appointed by Hon. Mr. Jones and the late Mr. Power, and on the recommendation of Mr. Dominick Farrell, Mr. James W. Turner, Mr. F. C. Elliott, Mr. George Adams and others. The steamer proceeded from Pictou to Whitehead, thence to Sable Island, and from there to Halifax. On our arrival at Halifax Captain Purdy, who had been appointed by the Mackenzie Government, was discharged, and a few days afterwards Captain O'Brien, who took charge of the "Newfield" after Captain Purdy's dismissal, told me he had the papers containing my discharge. I was paid off with only half a month's wages, although I had been employed and paid by the month. At the same time that I was dismissed all the other employees and hands who were understood to be Liberals were also dismissed, and only those who were believed to be Tories were retained. We had no trial or investigation of any kind, and there was no charge against us of incapacity or violation or neglect of duty, and we were dismissed solely on the ground that we were Liberals and had been appointed by the Mackenzie Government, and that our places were wanted for supporters of the Tory party.

I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, under and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

EDWARD WARNER.

Declared before me at Dartmouth, &c.

Now, I think after these declarations, and there were half a dozen others of the same purport that were published about the same time in Halifax papers, and the originals of which I myself saw, it is too late in the day for any person to say that it was not the policy of the Conservative Government to dismiss persons not even because they were actively engaged in politics, but solely because they were supporters of the other side, without any activity at all, and simply because their offices were wanted in order to make room for Tory applicants; it is too late in the day for anybody to say that this was not a common practice with the Conservative party. I do not think it is a right practice, or one that I would ever support this Government in following, for I will not support them in following it. But, I say there is certainly a principle of respectability and decency that should prevent those gentlemen on the other side of the House from bringing accusations of this sort against the Government, even assuming that this Government did exceed the bounds of propriety in the dismissals that they have made. I say they have not done so, but that on the contrary they have not satisfied the legitimate expectations of their party friends in the different counties in that province. I say they have not satisfied the fair and reasonable expectations of their political friends in the different counties of Nova Scotia, and I say it for this reason: Reports have been made, I believe, against different persons in the province of Nova Scotia of having been guilty of active partisanship, but these reports, through the clemency of the Ministers in the various departments, have not yet been acted upon. It has required the greatest amount of activity, persistence, and pressure to be brought to bear upon the members of this Cabinet to induce them to make dismissals for political reasons. Even after cases have been clearly presented to them, they have allowed matters to rest for months. Some cases have been made out against parties in the Government service, establishing the charge of partisanship with perfect clearness, and yet the parties have been retained in office for months and months after the facts were proved clearly. Now, I say these persons ought to be dismissed. All those persons who, in the language of Mr. Alpheus Todd, and of all great constitutional authorities, have been shown clearly to have actively interfered in the practical work of party politics, are liable to dismissal, and they ought to be dismissed upon those facts being proved to the reasonable satisfaction of the Minister of the department. I think the country would support the Government in doing that; but in going a single step beyond that I will not for one support them, and I do not believe the country would support them. I do not believe anybody asks for dismissals to be made upon the spoils system, I do not believe dismissals have been made upon the spoils system. It is a mere attempt to humbug this country to assert that dismissals have been made upon the principle of the spoils system. The hon. gentleman knows how averse this country is to the spoils system. He knows we do not want it, that it is unpopular on both sides of the House. Therefore he is seeking with great ingenuity and persistence to convince this country that dismissals are being made on that system, but he will fail in bringing home that conviction to the minds of the people, of common sense people, who know that the spoils system has not been introduced. I do not know how many hundred Dominion officials and Government employees there are in the city of Halifax, but I do not believe that you will find that half a dozen have been dismissed. I believe that there were not more than four men dismissed in the whole railway department in the city of Halifax; I can only think of three men having been dismissed from the service of the Railway Department. There may have been four, I suppose there must have been or else it would not be so in the return which has been sent to the Minister of Railways. But there have been men discharged because there was no work for them to do. That is an unfortunate thing that always happens; and to my certain knowledge men have been dismissed from the employ of the railway against my remonstrance, and against my strong desire that their services should be retained, simply because there was no work for them to do. This was done not by the Minister, not by myself, but by order of the general superintendent, that there must be reductions made in the staff. With the exception of the dismissals made in this way, it is a fact, as the Minister of Railways has stated, that there have not been in his department more than four dismissals in the county of Halifax on the complaint of active partisanship at elections. I can think of two other cases of dismissals in the city of Halifax in other departments, and in each case active partisanship was clearly proved. I can think of two or three cases in East Halifax, which has a population of 30,000, and one or two cases in which dismissals have been called for, but I do not believe yet made, in West Halifax, with several thousand inhabitants. With the exception of perhaps a dozen dismissals for political reasons in the county of Halifax, where there are hundreds of officials in the city and all over the county, no dismissals have occurred, and none have occurred there at all except in cases where active political partisanship has been proved. In connection with some of the departments, the Government has sent a judicial commissioner to investigate the facts on sworn evidence, and an opportunity has been given for cross-examination, and dismissals have been made after such investigation has taken place. I should imagine that these facts would have some weight and consideration from hon. gentlemen opposite. Was this policy ever pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in power? When did they ever make such an investigation, or send a commissioner, or give an employee an opportunity of being heard before dismissal? Nothing of the sort ever occurred under the regime of those hon. gentlemen; yet because this Government has given these employees in various departments the opportunity of being heard and having their cases investigated, and by gentlemen who are perfectly reliable and trustworthy, as my hon. colleague has freely admitted, instead of the Government obtaining credit for the judicial and deliberate manner in which they have proceeded in this matter, they have received tirades of abuse, day after day, and in fact, I think, this is about the tenth occasion on which we have had a field day upon this question in this House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before this resolution is passed, I should like to say a word or two in reply to the observations made by my hon. colleague from Halifax

(Mr. Russell). The hon. gentleman considers that a "constitutional principle" is in existence which supports his position and which has been properly applied in these cases. I would hardly suppose that the policy which he advocates could be called a "constitutional principle." But we will let that pass, and we will assume that a constitutional principle is involved. I desire the Postmaster General to listen, because my hon. friend has laid down rules of conduct for the hon. Minister, which I propose to invoke. My colleague has stated that a postmaster above all other men is a man who should not interfere in the slightest degree in election contests, because he may purloin letters and delay correspondence and political literature. I would suppose that if a postmaster committed that offence it would be ample ground for dismissal, and that it would not be necessary to invoke this constitutional principle. I recall the fact that D. W. B. Reid, of Middle Musquodoboit is the centre of Liberalism in that district, and he is also postmaster. He was postmaster for a number of years during the Liberal-Conservative regime, and he was not dismissed. I desire to call the attention of the Postmaster General to this case, and to point out that under the constitutional principle which has been laid down, this postmaster should be dismissed for actively interfering in election contests. He takes charge of all Liberal interests in his district. He comes to Halifax and attends political conventions, then he returns to Musquodoboit and runs around the county from one end to the other during each election, while at the same time he occupies the proud position of postmaster. He resides within a few miles of a gentleman who was dismissed without investigation for the very same reason, and who was postmaster of Upper Musquodoboit. I invite the attention of the Postmaster General, also, to the case of Mr. Hall, postmaster at Sheet Harbour, who takes an active part in every Liberal campaign, and yet who held office during the Liberal-Conservative administration. Under the constitutional principle invoked by my hon. friend, and on account of the peculiar circumstances which surround the position of postmaster, he should be dismissed in all common honesty and decency if other postmasters have been rightly dismissed without investigation. I also call attention to the case of Mr. Kidd, postmaster at Musquodoboit Harbour. He is an active and offensive partisan, and even my hon. friend from Halifax will not deny that he takes a very active part in elections. I also call attention to the postmaster at Crook's Brook—I do not know his name.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is that in Halifax county?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know such a place.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has forgotten it. It is near Musquodoboit, which is one of the finest districts in Canada. He took an offensive part as a Liberal, and yet he was not disturbed by the Liberal-Conservative Government; but as the constitutional principle has been invoked, I trust the Postmaster General will also look into his case. I do not know to what extent the hon. gentleman will depend on assurances given by members on this side of the House; but I can give him this assurance, that this information has been supplied, as regards those three gentlemen, on the very best authority, and so far as Mr. Reid is concerned, I personally know that he is an active and offensive partisan within the definition laid down by the members of the Government. My colleague read a number of newspaper clippings from the "Morning Chronicle" with respect to events in 1878. They are couched in somewhat vague language, and their effect depends a good deal on the belief of the men who read them and of the young newspaper men who took down the reports.

Mr. RUSSELL. They were made on sworn statements.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not notice anything very definite beyond the impression those gentlemen derived from the fact of their dismissal.

Mr. RUSSELL. I read a statement showing that the men were asked to fill up a schedule setting forth by whom they were appointed, and on whose recommendation; and when it was known that they were appointed by the Mackenzie Government and recommended by good Grits, they were always dismissed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is well aware of the extent to which a witness often varies his statements under cross examination.

Mr. RUSSELL. These statements were published in the newspapers, and not contradicted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman's recollection is different from my own.

Mr. RUSSELL. I assure the House that my statement is absolutely correct.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In regard to the newspaper controversy, which I did not closely follow, all the affidavits and statements made were answered by correspondents or comments made in a paper published in the city of Halifax by the Liberal-Conservative party. That is ancient history, and I need not go over it now. As far as my hon. friend's position is concerned, it is this, that if he carries out as a member of this Parliament the principles which he has announced here to-night, and in which he considers that he is supported by the reference to the constitutional work which he has quoted, it would be his duty to instantly recommend to the Postmaster General, that he should dismiss Mr. D. W. B. Reid, postmaster at Musquodoboit, Mr. Hall, postmaster at Sheet Harbour, Mr. Kidd, postmaster at Musquodoboit Harbour, and the nameless gentleman at Crook's Brook. I have too much confidence in the desire of my hon. friend (Mr. Russell) for fair dealing, to doubt for a moment that if he has no personal knowledge of these matters, which I think he has, he will instantly make the necessary inquiries, and forward the necessary recommendations to the hon. the Postmaster General, which I hope and believe would of course be followed by the usual result.

Mr. SPROULE. The statement made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) that there were no dismissals made on the spoils system, is in the language of the school boy "too thin and won't go down." If the hon. gentleman had confined his remarks to his own locality—

Mr. RUSSELL. I did.

Mr. TAYLOR. He did not.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman made a general statement. If he confined his remarks to his own locality, and to dismissals which he is supposed to know something about, I would not have referred to the matter. But to my mind, there is no explanation of why 22 men were dismissed on a small canal, but a quarter of a mile long, and not one of them reinstated. I asked the Minister of Railways if there were charges of active and offensive partisanship against these men, and he answered, that so far as he knew there were not. Even the dismissed men did not themselves know why they were dismissed. So far as my information goes, and I believe it to be correct, because I have had it from some of the men themselves, there was no investigation given, they had no opportunity to defend themselves, and they were not told why they were dismissed. In view of this, I cannot believe the statement of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell).

Mr. RUSSELL. If the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) thinks that in regard to any man, whether he is a Liberal or a Conservative, or whatever he is, I am going to hunt around for reasons for dismissing him, the hon. gentleman misjudges me. I will never ask for the dismissal of any man until I am absolutely compelled to do so, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) knows, that to ask for the dismissal of any man is the last thing I would care to do. But, in every case where a complaint is made to me, and I am set in motion by persons whose advice I am honourably and honestly bound to accept, I shall take good care that justice is done in the premises.

Mr. BORDEN. I agree, that I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Russell) has any desire to dismiss officials. The only criticism I desire to make of my hon. friend (Mr. Russell) is, that perhaps he might possibly have made a little more resistance in some of these cases.

Mr. RUSSELL—

What's done you partly may compute,
You know not what's resisted.

The principle I laid down, was simply that which is stated by Todd: that active interference in politics was misconduct sufficient to justify the dismissal of a civil servant.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall end up this discussion fittingly by recalling to mind a certain fact of not very old date. I shall read a short extract from an old and well established authority in this House, to wit "Hansard." In the "Hansard," of 1897, page 62, appears the following:—

We announced on the floor of Parliament last session, that no member of the civil service, whether of the inside or outside service, would be dismissed, except for cause. We declared that every man against whom a charge was brought, would have an opportunity of defending himself before a court of inquiry.

That was a statement made by the Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, the head of the Government which at this time is cutting off the heads of the civil servants now without inquiry.

There is one question which I wish to ask my hon. friend. With reference to a civil servant who has been dismissed, we will say for undoubted partisanship, against whom there is no charge as to his having conducted his office fairly and done his work well, and who has paid into the superannuation fund—in the case which I have in view the official was dismissed, the office abolished and economy introduced—has it been considered by the Government, or will it be considered by the Government, that it is but fair to make such an officer a recompense for the money which he has actually paid into the Receiver General's fund?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I believe there was a legal doubt as to whether that could be done, and we have to pass an Act to enable ourselves to do it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Notice of the resolution has been given.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the extent of it?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). To the extent of the payments into the superannuation fund, and interest thereon.

Resolutions to be reported.

EXPENDITURE ON HARBOURS.

Mr. PENNY asked :

In reply to a question put on the 6th February, 1893, by Mr. A. T. Lépine, Member for Montreal East, a statement was presented by the Department of Public Works showing that $17,835,420.22 had been expended from 1st July, 1867, to 30th June, 1892, on construction and improvement of harbours, breakwaters, rivers, etc.

1. What amount has been expended on that account from the latter date up to the present time ?

2. And what amount, if any, has been spent on the harbour of Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). No. 1. The amount spent by the Department of Public Works on the construction and improvement of harbours, breakwaters, rivers, &c., from the 30th June, 1892, to the 1st June, 1897, is $2,600,000. No. 2. No amount has been spent during that period on the Harbour of Montreal.

CERTAIN QUESTIONS NOT IN ORDER.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Is it a fact, and are the Government aware :—

1. That in the course of the summer of 1896, a newspaper called "La Libre Parole," of Montreal, published an article against one of the Ministers of the Cabinet, viz., the present Minister of Public Works, Hon. J. I. Tarte, in which the said Hon. J. I. Tarte is, among other things, accused of having extorted money from the Conservative party ; of having obtained by unlawful means divers sums from one Whelan and one Demers ; of having diverted for his own use certain sums subscribed into his hands by members of the Liberal party for political purposes ; of trafficking in public situations and contracts ; of being a "boodler," and of having introduced "boodling into the Department of Public Works.

2. That some time after the publication of the said article, the said Hon. J. I. Tarte instituted criminal proceedings for libel against the editor of "La Libre Parole," one Grenier ; and also civil proceedings against the same, before the competent courts sitting in and for the district of Montreal.

3. That the said Grenier, the defendant in the above mentioned proceedings in answer to the charge brought against him by the said Hon. J. I. Tarte, pleaded that the facts alleged in the aforesaid article were true, and published in the public interest.

4. That since the said proceedings were instituted the said Hon. J. I. Tarte has done nothing to bring them to trial.

5. That since the said proceedings were instituted there have been four terms of the Court of Queen's Bench, criminal side, in the district of Montreal.

6. That the defendant in the above proceedings, the said Grenier, has, during the said terms, declared on several occasions that he was ready to proceed and demanded a trial, but owing to the absence from the court of the said Hon. J. I. Tarte, the said proceedings and trial have, from time to time, been postponed.

7. Do not the Government consider that the public interest demands that no person lying under such grave charges, so publicly made, should, without active efforts to clear his reputation, continue to occupy the position of a Minister of the Crown ?

8. What action, if any, do the Government propose taking with respect to such charges, and with respect to the Minister of Public Works in regard thereto ?

Mr. SPEAKER. With reference to question No. 6 (the above question) I do not think it is at all in order.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I would ask the privilege from you, Mr. Speaker, to allow the question to be put, as I wish to answer it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say a single word. If the Speaker rules that a question of that kind is not in order, I think it should not be put, even at the request of an hon. Minister. I may say that I have had no communication whatever with my hon. friend who put this question on the Order Paper, but I can see the great abuse to which questions of that kind might lead in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think I can allow the question to be asked or answered. There are several reasons why this question should not be allowed. It is dealing with a matter which is under adjudication by the courts, and it is perfectly clear that it is not a proper question.

A matter whilst under adjudication by a court of law should not be brought before the House by motion or otherwise.—(May, 10 Ed., p. 264.)

It is improper to put questions with regard to proceedings pending in the courts of law, and to make animadversions thereon.—(Dennison, in Blackmore's "Speakers' Decisions," p. 268.)

Again, this is certainly a question which makes or implies charges of a personal character, and that is not allowed.

A question is not permitted which makes or implies charges of a personal character.—(May, p. 239.)

Again, this question asks for an expression of opinion merely, from the Government and a question of that kind is not allowed.

The expression of an opinion cannot be sought for by a question.—(May, p. 238.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Will you permit me to say one word, Mr. Speaker. Of course the hon. Minister, as I understand, submits to your ruling; but you will see what a very great injustice may be done to some hon. gentleman, if questions of this kind are allowed to go on the Order Paper at all. The House understands the willingness of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works to answer it; his anxiety and desire to answer fully, but he is not allowed to. This question goes out to the country, and is commented upon in all the newspapers, and thousands of people will not understand the reasons why the Minister of Public Works was not permitted to answer. I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, whether such highly improper questions should be allowed to find their way on the Order Paper, in the first instance. They are contrary to the rules of the House, and they reflect seriously upon the character of an hon. member of this House. They should be struck off in accordance with some well established order of the House, as being highly improper, and hereafter it should be understood that they will not be allowed on the paper.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a great deal in the suggestion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Davies), that questions going so far in the wrong direction as this question does, should not appear on the Order Paper. It is undoubtedly open to the Minister of Public Works to make a personal explanation, if he desires to do so, when the Orders of the Day are called.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, as this question has been a little discussed would you allow me to say one word. I entirely agree with your ruling in this regard, and I hope it will be strictly enforced from this time on. But, I must call the attention of the House to a practice which prevails here for a considerable period before the last Government went out of power, and by which practice questions of this kind were put by the then Opposition day after day. They were improper questions without doubt, and it is not a species of political warfare which either side of the House should wish to indulge in. On the other hand, it is pretty difficult for you, Mr. Speaker, to constitute yourself a judge of what shall go on the Order Paper.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Speaker has to judge ultimately.

Mr. FOSTER. I am quite willing that this abuse, so far as it is an abuse, should be stopped. I do not like that kind of warfare at all. On the other hand, I should not like to see the privileges of the House curtailed on any legitimate question.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is another consideration which arises out of this, and which I would like to mention to the House. A practice had been in vogue in former sessions, it has gone on to some extent since I have had the honour of presiding over this House, and it is a practice which I think should not continue. Some hon. gentlemen select quotations from newspaper articles, and then ask whether certain hon. members have seen those, and what their opinion is on them. That should only be properly done, if the hon. member who puts the question holds himself responsible for what the newspaper contains. I think we ought in future, change the rule in that respect.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. While we are on this question, Mr. Speaker, would you permit me to make a few observations. I wish to draw your attention to what I consider are very irregular proceedings on the part of members of the Government in answering questions. A question that is put on the paper should be succinctly answered as asked, but I do not think it should be permitted to the Minister to enter into an elaborate argument, and go into a long disquisition that is not called for by the question. I think I shall have the concurrence of the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) who is now leading the House, and who has such great experience, in the statement, that if that course is to be pursued, it would almost inevitably lead to a motion for the adjournment of the House in order to deal with the answer given by the Minister. That would not tend to facilitate public business. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the necessity of a question being answered exactly, and nothing more.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). In a general way, there is no doubt the leader of the Opposition is right, but I may point out to him, that it is possible so to word a question as to make it almost absolutely necessary for the Minister to reply at some length. I think something must be left to the discretion of the Minister in a case of that kind. As to the mode suggested, I may recall to the mind of the hon. gentleman (I am not sure whether he was in the House then) that once or twice when we were on that side of the House, we tried that, and we were not permitted to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of replying.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That must have been because the House was not so great as it is now.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Under the predecessor of the hon. the Speaker, some ruling of the kind was laid down. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) that it is not desirable, that in replying to questions, lengthy disquisitions should be inflicted upon the House, and I do not think, under correction, that there has been much disposition to do it.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule on that question renders it somewhat difficult for the Speaker to interfere, because, by a number of English decisions which I shall refer to, it is made quite clear that Ministers are allowed a great deal of latitude. It is laid down :

In reply to a question more latitude is given to a Minister than to a private member.

A Minister in replying to a question relating to an individual, and the action of the police, is allowed to give full particulars illustrating the case.

Great latitude is allowed to a Minister in answering a question, with a view to making his answer complete.—(Denison's Decision, Blackmore, pp. 274 and 275.)

In view of these decisions, it is difficult for Mr. Speaker to interfere, and it must be largely left to the discretion of Ministers. I have no doubt that what has been said in the House to-day, will have its effect.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I agree, Mr. Speaker, that your ruling is a sound one. I can see that the Speaker must allow a Minister considerable latitude in answering a question which does not raise counter charges and reflections upon the preceding Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. Nothing should raise a discussion.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask attention to your ruling with regard to the right to ask questions based upon an article in some newspaper. Now it seems to me that that the rule is clearly laid down in the wording of it.

A question may be put to a Minister relating to public affairs, and to other members relating to any Bill, motion or public matter connected with the business of the House in which such member may be concerned.

Suppose, for instance, that in respect to the fast steamship line some member wished to ascertain from a Minister whether an article in a newspaper was correct, and represented the views of the Government, would it not be in order for any member to base a question upon that, reading the article and then asking the question ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Such points as this have been decided in England :

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

An hon. member reading telegrams from newspapers and founding questions upon them, objection was taken. The Speaker pointed out to the House and the hon. member the extreme inconvenience of founding questions on every telegram in every newspaper. I am bound to say, that it does appear to me that, before questions of such gravity are put, an hon. member should take some measures to ascertain the truth of the telegram.—(Brand's decision, Blackmore, p. 270.)

I think that quotation answers the hon. gentleman's question. Certainly no charge should be based on a newspaper quotation alone.

RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton) asked :

Is it the intention of the Government during the present session to bring in a measure to create a railway commission for the Dominion ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). It is not the intention of the Government to create a railway commission during the present session.

ATLANTIC FAST SS. SERVICE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I beg, Mr. Speaker, to move the following resolutions, of which notice has been given :—

That the Governor in Council having entered into a contract under the terms of the Act, 59 Victoria, chapter 3, section 3, with Messrs. Petersen, Tate and Company, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, for a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, it is expedient that this House do ratify and approve the said contract, which is as follows :—

Articles of agreement made this twenty-fourth day of March, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven, between Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, herein represented by the Honourable Sir Richard Cartwright, Knight of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, Her Majesty's Minister of Trade and Commerce for the Dominion of Canada, hereinafter called "the Minister," of the one part ; and William Petersen, of the city of Newcastle-on-Tyne, in that part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called England, and Arthur Tate of the same place, trading together under the name and style of "Petersen, Tate & Co.," shipowners, hereinafter called "the contractors," of the other part.

Whereas, by an Act passed by the Parliament of Canada in the fifty-seventh-fifty-eighth year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter eight, entitled "An Act further to amend the Act respecting Ocean Steamship Subsidies" as amended by a further Act passed in the fifty-ninth year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter three, and entitled "An Act further to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies," His Excellency the Governor General of Canada is authorized and empowered to enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherwise as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year; and whereas in a despatch from the Right Honourable Joseph Chamberlain, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to His Excellency the Governor General, bearing date the twenty-first day of November in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five, respecting the proposals as to steamship communications made at the Ottawa Conference, it is stated that "As it appears that the Canadian Government is unable, without assistance, to secure an improved service, Her Majesty's Government are now prepared to contribute towards the cost of such a service," and further, that Her Majesty's Imperial Government "consider that all the arrangements for the new services should be under the superintendence and control of the Dominion Government, and that the responsibility of this country should be limited to a fixed contribution to cover all services rendered in connection with the transmission of mails;" and whereas the Government of Canada did, in reliance on the said in part recited despatch, on the second day of May now last past, by advertisement duly published invite tenders to be received up to and including Wednesday the tenth day of June then next, "for the performance of a weekly steamship service, including the carriage of mails, between Canada and Great Britain, by first-class steamers, to make an average speed from port to port of not less than 20 knots per hour, and according to terms and conditions particulars of which may be obtained on application at the office of the High Commissioner for Canada, 17 Victoria street, London, S.W., England, or at the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada; and whereas in response to such notices two tenders were made, one by Mr. James Huddart, of 22 Billiter street, London, subject, however, to a letter written by him accompanying his tender, offering, subject to the conditions in the said letter stated, for the sum of one million one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars to perform the said service; and another tender from or on behalf of Messrs. Hugh and Andrew Allan of Montreal and Messrs. James and Alexander Allan of Glasgow to perform the said service for the sum of two hundred and twenty-five thousand pounds sterling, which, however, was accompanied by a written communication which imposed certain qualifications on the tender as submitted, and attached conditional interpretation upon some of its clauses; and whereas neither of the said tenders were considered satisfactory nor was either of them accepted by the Government of Canada, who were not bound to accept the lowest or any tender; and whereas on or about the 13th day of March instant the contractors proposed to perform the service required with vessels of a better class and for a subsidy much less in amount than the offers previously made, complying nevertheless in all essential matters with the terms and conditions referred to in the said notice, but giving other and improved conditions and terms on the whole much more advantageous for the Dominion, amongst the said improved terms being the following, that is to say:—

(a.) To furnish steamships of 10,000 gross registered tons, instead as therein required of 8,500 gross registered tons, and to maintain on a round trip from port to port across the Atlantic an average speed of 500 knots per day, being nearly 21 knots per hour.

(b.) To have a cargo capacity of from 1,500 to 2,000 tons.

(c.) To have accommodation for not less than 300 first-class passengers, instead of 275.

(d.) To carry on each outward trip 150 emigrants to be designated by the Honourable the Minister of the Interior, at a price not exceeding the sum of $15 per head.

(e.) And in connection with the said service and as forming part thereof, to provide and maintain a fast tender of the torpedo boat type, of a speed of not less than 22 knots per hour, to meet the steamers on their approach to the ports in Canada, to act as a pilot boat, so as to ensure in the navigation of the said ships both safety and speed.

(f.) That the said steamships should be constructed, fitted and maintained in all respects equal to the best Atlantic steamers now afloat, say the "Campania" and "Lucania" of the Cunard line, and that the Canadian port should, in summer, be Quebec, to continue to Montreal when navigation permits of their doing so; in winter, Halifax, N.S., or St. John, N.B., at the option of the contractors.

And the said contractors offered to establish and maintain the said line, to consist of four steamships for the period of ten years, for the annual subsidy or sum of one hundred and fifty-four thousand five hundred pounds sterling; and

Whereas the Government of the Dominion of Canada, in reply to such proposal, offered to accept the same on the understanding that Her Majesty's Imperial Government would contribute or pay of the said annual subsidy the proportion or sum of fifty-one thousand and five hundred pounds sterling, leaving the sum of one hundred and three thousand pounds sterling to be paid by the Government of Canada, subject, however, to the approval thereof by resolution of the House of Commons, in pursuance of the provisions of the statute passed in the fifty-ninth year of Her Majesty's reign, hereinbefore in part recited. And whereas the contractors have agreed thereto on the condition that the assent of Her Majesty's Government to the payment of the said proportion of the said subsidy, as hereinbefore stated, should be obtained and communicated to them on or before the first day of May next ensuing the date hereof.

Now this agreement witnesseth that the contractors for and in consideration of the promises and of the covenants and agreements on the part of Her Majesty hereafter contained, for themselves, their executors and administrators, do hereby covenant, promise and agree to and with Her Majesty, Her heirs and successors, in manner following, that is to say:—

1. That they, the contractors, shall and will either personally or by a company which they may form (and it is hereby understood and agreed that this contract may be executed, performed and fulfilled by a duly incorporated company, formed or to be formed by or at the instance of the contractors, which company when formed, shall be accepted by Her Majesty instead, in lieu of and in substitution for the contractors)

(a.) To build, equip, provide, establish, and during this contract to continue and in the manner hereinafter mentioned, a regular steamship service between the port of Liverpool and the Canadian ports hereinafter named, of four steamers of not less than 520 feet in length, with a draught of water not exceeding twenty-five feet six inches, when fully equipped, loaded and ready for sea, such ships to be of not less than 10,000 tons gross register, designed to carry from 1,500 to 2,000 tons of cargo, of which 500 tons at least shall be suitably fitted with cold storage accommodation and appliances.

(b.) The said steamers shall be constructed, and each of them shall be constructed, fitted and maintained in all respects equal to the best Atlantic steamers now afloat, such as the steamship "Campania" or steamship "Lucania" of the Cunard line of steamers—and having accommodation for not less than 300 first-class, 200 second-class, and at least 800 steerage passengers, with seating accommodation in the first-class dining saloon for at least 300 persons. The area space for passengers and cargo, and the general details and specifications to be in accordance with the plan, figures and specifications which have been submitted to the Minister, and which marked as "Plans and specifications for Fast Atlantic Service by Petersen, Tate & Co." are incorporated with, and are to be read and treated as part of this agreement, subject however to such changes and modifications therein as the Minister may, from time to time, approve.

(c.) The said vessels are to be built under the supervision of the Admiralty, and in conformity with the requirements of Her Majesty's Imperial Government, respecting armed cruisers, and also of the British Board of Trade.

(d.) The said vessels are to have a speed of twenty-one knots per hour.

2. The contractors do further agree,—

(a.) That the said line of steamers so to be established shall run between the port of Liverpool and in summer to the port of Quebec, and if and when navigation permits, to the port of Montreal, and in the winter season to the port of Halifax, N.S., or the port of St. John, N.B.—at the option of the contractors, such option to be declared by them before the date hereinbefore fixed for the commencement of the service—and the said vessels are to make and maintain on each and every trip a speed of five hundred knots in every twenty-four hours from port to port in ordinary weather.

(b.) During the summer season when the Canadian port is Quebec (or Montreal as aforesaid), the steamers are in sailing from or to Quebec, to stop at or near Rimouski, or other port in the Lower St. Lawrence, if required by the Minister, to receive and discharge the mails, and to embark and disembark first-class passengers. Provided always that the Canadian Government is to provide a steam launch to be in attendance at Rimouski or such other point in the Lower St. Lawrence as may be determined on to carry to and receive from the ship the mails and passengers to be taken on board or discharged or disembarked as aforesaid.

3. The said steamers are,—

(a.) To carry all mails sent under the authority of the Postmaster General of Canada for transmission from Canada to the United Kingdom and the Continent of Europe, irrespective of their origin or ultimate destination, and under the authority of Her Majesty's Postmaster General from the United Kingdom to Canada, irrespective of their origin or ultimate destination.

(b.) Except such letters as are not required by law to pass through the post office, the contractors shall not receive or permit to be received for conveyance on board any mail ship any letters other than those mentioned. No mails shall be conveyed by any such steamship on behalf of any colony or foreign country without the permission of the Minister or Her Majesty's Postmaster General. The whole postage of any mail conveyed by any mail ship shall, under all circumstances, be at the disposal of the Minister.

(c.) The term "mails" to include all boxes, bags, baskets or packets of or containing letters, books or printed papers or parcels, and all other articles which under the Post Office Act and regulations for the time being are transmissible by post, without regard either to the place to which they may be addressed or to that in which they may have originated, and also all empty bags, boxes, baskets or other receptacles, and other stores and articles, used or to be used in carrying on the Post Office service.

(d.) The contractors, at their own cost, to provide sufficient and convenient accommodation and space for the mails in each steamer to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General of Canada (such accommodation to be as far removed from either end of the ship as may be reasonably possible), to be under lock and key, and to be fitted up, lighted and heated as he may approve for keeping the mails whilst under conveyance therein; and the services of the crew of every vessel shall from time to time be given in the conveyance of the mails to and from the mail room or rooms.

(e.) The mails are to be received and delivered respectively by the contractors at the post offices at Quebec or Halifax, or St. John, as the case may be, and the expense of conveying the mails to the steamships from the post office at the said places and from the steamships to the same, to be borne by the contractors, and in like manner the embarking, landing and transfer of all mails in the United Kingdom shall be performed by the contractors at their own cost and to the satisfaction of Her Majesty's Postmaster General.

(f.) The contractors shall be responsible for the loss or damage of any parcel or registered postal packet of any kind conveyed or tendered for conveyance under the contract, unless such loss or damage be caused or occasioned by act of God, the Queen's enemies, pirates, restraints of princes, rulers or peoples, jettison, barratry, fire, collision, or perils or accidents of the seas, rivers and steam navigation, and in the event of any such loss or damage except as aforesaid, the contractors shall be liable to pay to the Minister in respect of each parcel or registered postal packet so lost or damaged subject to the proviso hereinafter contained, such sum of money as shall be equal to the amount which may have been awarded and paid by the Minister at his sole option and discretion to the sender or addressee of such parcel or registered postal packet as compensation for the loss or damage thereof, but not in any case exceeding one pound sterling per parcel or two pounds sterling per registered postal packet instead of penalty.

4. The contractors further agree,—

(a.) That two of the steamers shall be ready and complete in all respects to commence the service before the thirty-first day of May in the year 1899, and the remaining two steamers shall be in like manner ready not later than the first day of May, in the year 1900, and at the option of the contractors all the said steamers on or before the first named date, and the service shall, from the time at which the said first two steamers are ready (not later than the said 31st day of May, 1899), be a fortnightly service, and from the date (not later than the aforesaid 1st day of May in the year 1900), the service shall be a weekly service, that is to say, a fortnightly and weekly service respectively, from and to Great Britain and Canada.

(b.) The days and times of sailing from the port of departure of the steamers are to be fixed subject to the approval of the Minister.

(c.) The right is hereby given to the Minister from time to time, on three months' notice to the contractors, to change the time of sailings from the port of departure.

(d.) The Minister to have the right in case of need to delay the sailing of any steamer for a time not exceeding twenty-four hours.

(e.) The contractors are to advertise both in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and in the Dominion of Canada in such manner as the Minister may direct.

5. The contractors are further to provide and maintain during the continuance of this agreement a fast tender of the torpedo boat type, of a speed of not less than twenty-two knots per hour, which said tender is to meet each steamer on her approach to the Canadian coasts when required and pilot her in or towards her destination so as to ensure her safety and enable her to reach port without delay.

6. And Her Majesty, for herself, Her heirs and successors hereby covenants to and with the contractors, their executors, administrators and assigns that the said contractors, well and faithfully performing all and every the covenants, agreements and stipulations hereinbefore set forth and contained by the said contractors to be done and performed, shall well and truly pay or cause to be paid to the contractors, their heirs, administrators or assigns, during the continuance of this contract an annual subsidy of the sum of one hundred and three thousand pounds sterling from and out of the Consolidated Fund or other proper moneys of the Dominion of Canada (which said sum includes the sum of ten thousand pounds for the cold storage accommodation herein provided for), and the further sum of fifty-one thousand five hundred pounds sterling out of the moneys provided by Her Majesty's Government (should the sum be furnished to the Government of the Dominion of Canada, but not otherwise), the same to be paid and payable in the city of London in four equal quarterly instalments, payable on the first days of January, April, July and October in each and every year during the continuance of this agreement: the first instalment of the proportionate amount that may then be due to be paid on the first of the said days falling after the commencement of the said service.

7. Provided always that when the contractors are only giving a fortnightly service but one-half of the said respective sums of one hundred and three thousand pounds and fifty-one thousand five hundred pounds shall be due or payable to them.

8. Her Majesty further covenants and agrees that the contractors are to be free from and are not to be required to pay to or for the Government of Canada any Dominion light or similar dues except the rate of duty payable in respect of every vessel to the Sick Mariners' Fund and except harbour dues.

9. And it is mutually covenanted and agreed by Her Majesty and the contractors that this contract is to continue in force for the full period of ten years from the time when the first trip is made by any of the steamers to be provided under the terms thereof.

10. And it is further mutually agreed and understood that the contractors are not to be allowed to receive or accept any subsidy or aid, pecuniary or otherwise, from any colony or foreign country, or any provincial, civic or municipal authority, and should any such subsidy or aid be received by the contractors Her Majesty may deduct the amount thereof from the amount of the next quarterly payment due and owing under this contract, and so from time to time and as often as the contractors receive such subsidy or aid from any colonial or foreign government, provincial, civic or municipal authority, but this provision is not to be deemed as a permission or authority for the contractors receiving any such subsidy or aid.

11. And the contractors, for themselves, their executors, administrators and assigns hereby covenant and agree to and with Her Majesty, Her heirs and successors, in manner following, that is to say: that no discrimination shall be made by them, their officers or agents, as regards passengers or freight rates either directly or indirectly against Canadian railway routes, and they are further to engage to land passengers and freight at Quebec during the St. Lawrence season on such side of the river as may be desired by the Minister.

12. And further, that the contractors shall and will on each on every trip or passage from Liverpool, if thereunto required, carry emigrants not exceeding one hundred and fifty in number on any one trip who may be named by the agent of the Government of Canada appointed for that purpose, at a rate of passage not exceeding the sum of $15 per head, and it is understood that for such price or passage money, the emigrant shall have all the service including good wholesome food usually supplied to emigrants on first-class steamers; provided always that due notice be given to the agents of the contractors at Liverpool of the names of the said emigrants three days at least before the sailing of the steamer for which they are to be booked.

13. And the contractors do hereby further promise and agree that they shall and will within sixty days from the time that they shall be notified that Her Majesty's Government is willing to pay towards the said subsidy of one hundred and fifty-four thousand five hundred pounds sterling, the proportion which it is anticipated Her Majesty's Government will contribute, namely the sum of fifty-one thousand five hundred pounds sterling:

(a.) Deposit with the Minister of Finance of Canada the sum of ten thousand pounds sterling, and

(b.) That at the same time they, the said contractors, will give to the Minister a guarantee to his satisfaction for a further sum of ten thousand pounds sterling, which said deposit of ten thousand pounds and the guarantee for the further sum of ten thousand pounds are to be deposited and given as security that they, the contractors, will supply the steamers in accordance with the terms of this agreement, and within the time or times hereby contracted therefor (for which purpose it is agreed that time is to be of the essence of this contract).

14. And it is agreed and understood that in the event of the contractors making default in having two of the great steamers ready by the time hereinbefore named in that behalf, that then the said deposit of ten thousand pounds and the guarantee for the said further sum of ten thousand pounds is to be forfeited to Her Majesty as agreed upon and as liquidated damages for such default; and it is further agreed that should the contractors furnish the first two steamers in accordance with the provisions of the contract that the said default and the said guarantee shall remain as security for the said contractors' performance of the agreement in respect of the remaining two steamers, and that should default be made in supplying the said lastly mentioned steamers within the time hereinbefore limited in that behalf, that then and in that event the said deposit and the said guarantee shall be forfeited to Her Majesty as and for the agreed on and liquidated damages in respect of such default.

Provided always and it is hereby distinctly agreed and understood that, should the contractors be unable to have the said vessels built and equipped as herein agreed within the time limited in this behalf by reason of a strike or strikes of ship-workers or engineers, or other causes beyond the control of the contractors, that then the loss of time occasioned thereby shall be added to the periods hereby fixed for the completion of the said steamers as may be just and reasonable under the circumstances.

Provided, always, secondly, that Her Majesty is to pay to the contractors semi-annually interest on the said deposit of ten thousand pounds from the day of the date of the deposit thereof at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum until the same is either repaid or forfeited for the default of the contractors under the provisions hereof, and after the service of the said four steamers has been commenced the said deposit is to be returned and the said security released.

15. And the contractors do further covenant and agree with Her Majesty that the steamers belonging to the said service are not, nor are any or either of them while this contract exists, to call at any foreign port.

16. Provided always and this contract is made and entered into on the express conditions following, that is to say:—

Firstly.—That subject to the conditions hereinafter contained, there shall be paid to Her Majesty as liquidated damages agreed to by the contractors,—

(a.) The sum of five hundred pounds on each occasion when the contractors fail to provide at the appointed Canadian or British port a mail ship in accordance with the contract ready to put to sea at the appointed time or when such mail ship shall not actually put to sea and proceed on her voyage at the appointed time.

(b.) A further sum of one hundred pounds for every successive twenty-four hours which shall elapse before such mail ship shall actually put to sea and proceed on her voyage, but so that these sums shall not in the aggregate exceed by more than one thousand pounds the proportionate part of the subsidy applicable to a single voyage.

(c.) On each occasion when the contractors fail to perform a voyage between the appointed Canadian and British port within the stipulated time, there shall be forfeited and paid by the contractors to the Minister the sum of eight pounds ten shillings for every hour or portion of an hour consumed on such voyage beyond the stipulated time, provided always that the total sum thus forfeited shall not exceed the proportionate part of the subsidy applicable to a single voyage.

(f.) Provided always that should any failure or default for which the payment of damages are herein stipulated or provided for, happen or be occasioned, or occur from any circumstance or accident beyond the control of the contractors, and not due in any way to the default or neglect on their part or on the part of any officer, agent or servant of theirs (the burden of proof of which shall be on the contractors), then and in that event the damages stipulated for, or the sum or amount forfeited shall not be payable or be forfeited notwithstanding the apparent default.

17. And it is further provided and agreed that in the event of any of the said vessels being at any time disabled, so as to be obliged to be docked for repairs, that the failure to fulfil the terms of this contract, owing to such accident, and for the time reasonably occupied in the repairing of the damaged ship, shall not be taken as a default or breach of any of the terms or stipulations of this contract—or subjecting the contractor to any claim for damages by Her Majesty, under the terms hereof; and should any of the vessels be wrecked or be so much disabled as to prevent the said vessel being employed in making her trips for a period of one month, then and in that case the contractors shall be bound, with all reasonable despatch, to replace the vessel so wrecked or disabled by another of equal class, speed, equipment, character and capacity to the satisfaction and approval of the Minister, and continue the service herein contracted for with such substituted steamer, provided, however, that there shall be deducted from the subsidy hereby agreed to be paid a proportionate amount for each trip or passage which for any reason aforesaid the contractors are unable to provide a steamer for.

18. And provided always, that the Government of Canada has the power to determine the contract at any time in case the vessels furnished by the contractors for the service are not capable of performing the voyages contracted for at an average speed of 500 knots per twenty-four hours, or ordinarily or frequently fail when on service on the round trip, from port to port, across the Atlantic, to maintain such speed, or should the contractors in any other respect fail to fairly carry out the terms and conditions of the contract according to their true intent and meaning.

19. Except to the company to be formed by the contractors as hereinbefore provided for, to whom this contract may be assigned, no other assignment thereof, either by the contractors or by the said company, is to be or shall be made, nor any right or interest therein without the consent in writing of the Minister having been first obtained.

20. It is a further condition of these presents that no member of the House of Commons of Canada shall be admitted to any share or part of this contract nor to any benefit to be derived therefrom.

21. It is further agreed and understood that this contract is subject to the approval by resolution of the House of Commons of Canada, and until so approved, is not to be binding on any of the parties hereto.

22. And it is also further agreed that this contract is not to be binding on the contractors unless on or before the first day of May next ensuing, the date of these presents, Her Majesty's Imperial Government consent to contribute the said proportion of fifty-one thousand five hundred pounds sterling of the said subsidy, and such assent is notified to them by the Minister as hereinbefore provided for.

In witness whereof the Honourable Sir Richard Cartwright, Knight Commander of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, "the Minister," hath hereunto set and affixed his hand and seal as such, and the contractors have hereunto set their hands and seals by the hand of William Petersen, one of the partners of the firm of Petersen, Tate & Co. aforesaid.

R. J. CARTWRIGHT, (L.S.)
Minister of Trade and Commerce.

PETERSEN, TATE & CO. (L.S.)

Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of (Sgd.) JOHN J. MCGEE.

He said: In requesting the consideration of the House to the contract lately entered into between this Government and Messrs. Petersen & Tate, of Newcastle, I think I need not dwell on the fact, which has been universally admitted on both sides of the House, that it is very desirable, so far as our means will permit, to obtain an improved service between Canada and the United Kingdom. There is no doubt that when the present line of steamers, known as the Allan Line was first established, that service was fairly well performed, but in the process of time it is equally clear that the service has fallen far below what a country like Canada requires, and should expect. On that point, I think there was no difference of opinion. There was undoubtedly great difference of opinion among many members, I believe, on both sides of this House, as to whether the resources of Canada permitted of so large a subsidy as $750,000 a year being granted; and I must confess, for my own part, that I always entertained very grave doubts indeed as to whether it was expedient. Nevertheless, a statute was passed and an Act now stands on our Statute-book whereby a sum of not more than $750,000 is authorized to be granted for that service, and the British Government, having been approached by our predecessors, consented to supplement that by a further vote of $375,000 a year, in round numbers, making, in all, provision for this service of $1,125,000 a year. As is known to the House, certain contracts were asked for about a year ago; I think the contracts were proposed in the month of May, and the tenders were opened some time in June of 1896. Under these, two parties seemed to have proposed to complete this service, the Messrs. Allan and Mr. Huddart. It is open to serious question whether either of the so-called tenders submitted by these gentlemen could be considered as tenders in any proper sense or degree. In the first place, they failed by having stipulated that it should be open to them, after a lapse of four months, in one case, and of six months in the other, to proceed or not as they might see fit; and in the next place, the Messrs. Allan added a letter in which they qualified to a considerable extent, their acceptance, and laid down certain proposals which, in my judgment, would have rendered it very doubtful indeed whether anything approaching to a 20-knot service could have been exacted from them. However, it is not necessary for me to spend much time in dwelling on that point. The details of that proposition, and also the details of the present contract, are well known; they have been before this House and before the public for some weeks. I think I may say that the contract to which the Government now solicits the consideration of Parliament, and which they have entered into, is in every possible respect very greatly more to the advantage of Canada than the contract which it was proposed to enter into with the Messrs. Allan. The ships are larger, the standard is higher, the ships must be faster, and the whole service is to be obtained for a much smaller sum than it was proposed to pay to the Messrs. Allan. In place of vessels of 8,500 tons, we are to obtain vessels of 10,000 tons; in place of a speed, and doubtful at that, of 20 knots per hour, these vessels bind themselves to cross the Atlantic, from port to port, at an average speed of 500 knots per day, being as nearly as possible, 21 knots an hour. We have obtained a larger amount of space for the transshipment of merchandise, and a considerable portion of that must be under cold storage. The type of vessel is improved. The vessels are to be equal in accommodation and general construction to the "Campania" and "Lucania," which are of the highest type now known in the Cunard service. We have also got the right of sending across at our own pleasure a number of steerage passengers at a very moderate rate, $15 per head.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
What is the freight accommodation?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Two thousand tons. You will see that in clause "a" of section 1:

Designed to carry from 1,500 to 2,000 tons of cargo, of which 500 tons, at least, shall be suitably fitted with cold storage accommodation and appliances.

On each outward trip, 150 emigrants must be carried at a price not exceeding $15 per head, to be designated by the Minister of the Interior. Now, Sir, I think there is only one question as to which exception can be taken in this contract, and that is the question which has been raised as to the ability of the contracting parties to perform the contract that they have entered into. As to that, all I can say is that after making a careful inquiry, the Government have every reason to believe that Messrs. Peterson & Tate will succeed in completing their financial arrangements, and so far as that is concerned, we are not afraid but that the contract can be satisfactorily carried out. In any case, I need hardly point out to the House that if these gentlemen do not perform their contract, we will not be called on, on our side, to provide any funds. The consent of Her Majesty's Government, to whom this scheme is submitted, has also been obtained, they have agreed to furnish a proportionate sum, equal to that which they formerly agreed to furnish. Under the original scheme they were to give one-half the amount that we gave, that is, £75,000, we furnishing £150,000. Under the present scheme they will give £51,000 in round numbers, as against our £103,000. I will say to my hon. friends that they are not to suppose that this proposal will entail a further cost to the country of $500,000 per annum, or anything like it; on the contrary, I hope that between the saving on the Allan subsidy and between the saving on certain other subsidies which are now granted, and which, I think, may fairly be discontinued if this scheme goes into operation, the total cost will not much exceed $250,000, or, at the outside, $300,000 additional to the sum that we now pay. On the point of a winter port, that matter has been left optional with the contractors. They are to decide whether they will select the port of Halifax or the port of St. John, and they must make their option before the contract goes into operation. Such, briefly, are the terms of the contract, and such are the reasons which have induced the Government to recommend its acceptance to this House. I think that both sides will agree with me in saying that so long as it can be done, with due regard to our means, so long as we do not pay too heavy a price for the luxury, it would undoubtedly be a great advantage to Canada at large if we possessed a fast service across the Atlantic. We are, in some respects, I have always felt, at considerable disadvantage, owing to the comparison which has been made between the service lately rendered by the Canadian steamers and the service obtainable, particularly at the port of New York; and, bearing in mind that we have the advantage of a much shorter route from land to land, I think there is considerable ground for hoping that a large amount of traffic, at any rate, from the north-western states, may be diverted to the present route. As I have said, it is a question of cost and come to. The thing is desirable; the Government have endeavoured to obtain it at the cheapest possible rate, and, I think—although, on that point I am aware there has been some hesitation and doubt—I think that the proposition to obtain a service of 21 knots per hour, or thereabouts, at an additional cost not exceeding $300,000 a year, is one which may be fairly considered by the House. At any rate, the matter is now before the House: we have obtained the concurrence of Her Majesty's Government, and I think I may fairly recommend it to the consideration of Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have listened with very great pleasure to the statement which has just been made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). I need not remind the House that I have always, from the time this subject was first taken up, attached the greatest possible importance to the establishment of this fast service. I felt that nature had given us geographical advantages that it was absolutely imperative we should avail ourselves of in order to place Canada in a position to be the shortest and most direct means of communication between Europe and America. Therefore, I need not say how glad I shall be to find that the arrangements that have been made by the present Government prove to be successful. I should think that, perhaps, the most convenient mode of discussing this question would be, as each clause is moved separately, to make any remarks that require to be made in connection with the clause. But I may just say, Sir, that my fear is—and I hope I may be altogether wrong—that it will not be possible to obtain the service that has been stated by my hon. friend for the amount that is set forth in this contract. My main reason for making that statement is that Mr. Huddart, a very energetic and enterprising man, who had the advantage of being at the head of the steam service between Canada and Australia and who thus occupied an especially advantageous ground in connection with this measure, spent a year of most active and energetic effort among the financial men in Europe, not only in England, but on the continent as well, for the purpose of obtaining financial support to carry this measure through, for a subsidy of the same amount now provided—$750,000. Lord Brassey, who was one of the directors of the Naval Armament Construction Company, one of the great ship-building firms, parties who are most anxious to enter into such enterprises—gave his most hearty support and co-operation. Other parties deeply interested in ship-building and matters of this kind also were very anxious to co-operate. But, despite all that, Mr. Huddart, with all his energy and activity, with all the special advantage he possessed as being at the head of the Australian service, with which, to a certain extent, this would be connected and with which it would co-operate, was utterly unable to obtain the financial aid necessary to carry out the enterprise. Under these circumstances, I was directed to approach Her Majesty's Government, and I was able, as my hon. friend just stated, to obtain from the Secretary of State for the Colonies a pledge that they would make this an Imperial as well as a Canadian service, and that they would contribute one-half of the amount that was found to be necessary, assuming that it was $750,000 or £150,000 sterling, for the purpose of securing this impartial service. I think we cannot attach too much importance to this matter, and I am quite sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce will fully appreciate the immense importance and advantage it is to Canada to have Her Majesty's Government joining with us in providing so large a portion of the subsidy, and recognizing therefore, its Imperial as well as its colonial character. The fear that I expressed is based upon the fact I have stated that a service which, so far as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated it to the House, possesses some advantages over that proposed could not be obtained at the subsidy which is now named. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce whether there is a difference in the character of the ships, whether these are to be what is known as turret ships, or whether they are to be of the class that the contract would lead us to suppose—the type of the Cunard service and—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I laid the plans on the Table of the House at the same time that I presented the contract, and I suppose they are in the custody of Mr. Clerk. The type is undoubtedly what is called the turret ship, and that, after considerable discussion, I understand, has been approved by the Admiralty and by other parties to whom it has been submitted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid that that is a very important qualification, because one of the very first considerations in reference to a service which is to compete with the Cunard steamships, the White Star line and others now running into New York must be an equally attractive service, as every person will at once perceive; and, if the fact that these are turret ships is to render the line less attractive—I will not undertake to say that it will, but I may assume that to be the case, because I am not aware of any fast line of steamships of that character in the world—while it may account for the difference in the expenditure required to equip the service may have a very important effect in deteriorating from its character and thus defeating the great object that Canada has in view. The object that Canada has in view is to take advantage of our geographical position and establish not only the fastest but the best—or at least as good as the best—service and having the geographical advantage which we possess, to establish a more rapid communication between Europe and America than now exists. I should be very sorry if speed is obtained by the adoption of a class of ships that would be less attractive than the others, and that will, therefore, fail to enable us to become what, I think, under the circumstances, we should become—very successful competitors for ocean travel and traffic.

What the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said is undoubtedly correct—that there were some qualifications in the tender sent in by the Messrs. Allan and Mr. Huddart. So far as the Messrs. Allan are concerned, they were virtually removed by a communication which was subsequently made to the Government. As the House will remember, at the close of a session in which the Government were not permitted to do any business except with the approval of the Opposition, owing to the peculiar position in which they were placed, an Act was passed which authorized us to ask for tenders and obtain them promptly in the hope of saving a year. Now I want to call my hon. friend's attention to another very important qualification, as I understand it, in this tender as compared with the one we had before us which the Messrs. Allan and Mr. Huddart sent in. Those tenders specifically provided for a weekly service to come into full operation after two years, the same time as is provided for the commencement of this service. As I understand it, this provides for a fortnightly service, and the weekly service is only to come into effect in three years.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is a fortnightly service for the first year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a most important qualification. The House will at once see the difference between our commencing this service as a complete service, and commencing it fortnightly with a view to making it a weekly service in a year. I regret extremely that it has been found necessary on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to make such a qualification, because the very fact of this being a fortnightly instead of a weekly service is, in my opinion, going to deprive it of the opportunity of fair and equal competition with the steamers already running between England and New York. I am afraid we shall start in a very unfortunate position to meet the competition that—

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It becomes a weekly service a year after the fortnightly service begins.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is at the end of three years, instead of at the end of two, being for the first year, a fortnightly service. But I think the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce will appreciate the point I make, that, in starting the service, it is vitally important that it should start in a position to provide the best means of competition. The fortnightly service cannot possess the advantage that a weekly service would possess as a competitor with those lines of steamers running constantly between England and New York.

I think, perhaps, it will be more convenient—and I presume there will be no objection—if the hon. Minister will move the contract clause by clause, and, as each comes up we may be able to ask for information and offer any comments that may be deemed necessary. I presume there will be no objection to that.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend sees that we have to present the contract as a whole. I do not object, however, to answering any number of questions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite understand that the contract must be accepted as a whole, and that it cannot be modified by the House without involving a new contract. But I wanted to draw the attention of my hon. friend to certain points which I think require some attention, and I thought that might be more conveniently done by taking it up clause by clause. I am quite in the judgment of the House, however.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not think we require to go into committee on this.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to close his speech under any misapprehension. I think this is not a matter that can be taken up clause by clause. The reference to the House is provided for by the Act of 1896, which contains a clause providing that such contract shall not be binding upon Canada until it is laid before the House of Commons and is ratified by such House. We are considering the contract as a whole, and I think there is only one motion required.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not want to introduce any innovation. I will say, in the first instance, that I think there would have been an enormous advantage if we could have had this service undertaken by the Messrs. Allan, who were the pioneers in this great question of an Atlantic service between England and Canada, and who, from their long experience, their knowledge of everything connected with the trade, and the great resources which they possess on both sides of the Atlantic, would have given us an undoubted guarantee of their ability to carry the work to completion; and I cannot conceal from myself the danger that, unless there is something in the character of the ships and in the mode of constructing them as turret ships to reduce enormously the cost of such ships as the "Lucania" and the "Campania" of the Cunard line, and the "Teutonic" and the "Majestic," it may not be possible for any firm, however strong and energetic, to secure the necessary capital to carry out the project. My hon. friend, having admitted the great importance of this question to Canada, knows that it becomes a very important consideration to us that it should not fail. In fact, if the parties who are obtaining the contract should not be able to carry it through, it would be a great disaster. It would not only throw us back, but it would place us in a worse position than before we entered into the contract; and I am afraid that the security the Government have exacted is altogether insufficient, unless the contract were made with parties of such undoubted wealth and resources as to place beyond all doubt their ability to finance it. I am afraid the amount of the penalty, £10,000, is altogether inadequate.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. £20,000—£10,000 cash and £10,000 guarantee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Satisfactory guarantee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A matter of £20,000 may become altogether inconsiderable, and the forfeiture of that amount to Canada would be no compensation whatever for the failure of the contractors to carry the enterprise through. Now that we are all agreed, happily, at last as to the importance of having not only a new service, but a fast service which can compete with any other service that crosses the Atlantic, we are equally and deeply interested in having such a contract, and having it in such hands, as will without any question secure its being carried to completion. Now, I am advised by parties who have some knowledge of the matter, that it is very doubtful whether ships of the tonnage required, when fully equipped and loaded and ready for sea, can reach Montreal, with the draught of water stated—that, in fact, it is very doubtful whether it is practicable to construct ships of the tonnage of these ships so that when fully equipped and ready for sea they will not draw more water than is provided for in this contract. While on this point, I may say that the adoption of this service is an additional reason why the improvements in the navigation between Montreal and Quebec should be completed at the earliest possible moment, so as to be ready by the time the service will begin; because it will become a very serious matter if any impediment should arise to the service being promptly carried out, from any want in that navigation. The clause which says that Montreal is to be made the ultimate terminus of the line if and when navigation permits, is, I am afraid, a very indefinite clause, and one that will leave it very uncertain indeed whether the object the Government have in view under that clause can be at all secured. It is provided that the steamers are:

To carry all mails sent under the authority of the Postmaster General of Canada for transmission from Canada to the United Kingdom and the Continent of Europe, irrespective of their origin and ultimate destination, and under the authority of Her Majesty's Postmaster General from the United Kingdom to Canada, irrespective of their origin or ultimate destination.

I presume that this contract is intended to provide that on all mail matter obtained either in Europe or on this continent, all postage shall accrue to the Government; and that if it will be possible by the Canadian route to deliver the mails in New York earlier than they can reach New York by the most direct line and means of conveyance known, all the postage will accrue to the Government, and no portion of it is to be shared by the contractors.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is a fact.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because there is some statement here about paying mail matter being carried to any other colony or any foreign country, and I supposed that it was intended to secure that whatever receipts should be derived from that source would go to the Government in return for this service. Then, in clause 5 there is a statement which I do not quite understand:

The contractors are further to provide and maintain during the continuance of this agreement a fast tender of the torpedo boat type, of a speed of not less than twenty-two knots per hour, which said tender is to meet each steamer on her approach to the Canadian coast when required and pilot her in or towards her destination so as to ensure her safety and enable her to reach port without delay.

Now, in case of detention by fogs or ice, I do not quite understand how this torpedo boat going out from the Canadian port is going to be of any material service. I do not see how, in such a case, it can find the steamer. But if it is important that such a service should be rendered, it appears to me equally important to pilot the steamers outwards as well as inwards. It is well known that the majority of accidents that occur in connection with the navigation of the St. Lawrence, have occurred in going out from Canada, and there appears to be no provision for any assistance on the part of this torpedo boat when assistance is most required, that is, on the outward passage, as well as on the inward passage. Then, I find a very serious clause—clause 7:

Provided always, that when the contractors are only giving a fortnightly service, but one-half of the said respective sums of £103,000 and £51,500 shall be due or payable to them.

That, I assume, is intended to apply to the period up to the commencement of the service at the end of three years, because, if not, it is a most dangerous clause, as I think the House will at once see when it is shown that as these steamers will probably have during the winter season to incur a very heavy loss, five or six thousand pounds per trip, the penalty of not making a weekly trip and only making a fortnightly trip will be possibly found ineffective, as it would be to the advantage of the company to make only fortnightly service and incur the penalty. As I read the contract, it would pay them to fail in the performance of keeping up a weekly communication because instead of sustaining any loss thereby they would be really in pocket.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think we have full power to determine the contract if they fail in performing it. Undoubtedly that power would be used if they attempted any such proceeding as the hon. gentleman suggests.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite see the point the hon. gentleman raises, but I do not think it covers the case, because you have a specific provision in the contract for a certain penalty and you cannot impose any other. If they fail to perform the weekly service in winter and only make a fortnightly service, you can deduct a portion of the subsidy, but that is all, and you have no provision for determining the contract in such an event.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Look at clause 18, and you will find that meets the case.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That clause reads:

18. And provided always, that the Government of Canada has the power to determine the contract at any time in case the vessels furnished by the contractors for the service are not capable of performing the voyages contracted for at an average speed of five hundred knots per twenty-four hours, or ordinarily or frequently fail when on service on the round trip, from port to port, across the Atlantic, to maintain such speed, or should the contractors in any other respect fail to fairly carry out the terms and conditions of the contract according to their true intent and meaning.

You cannot say that they have not carried out the contract according to the true intent and meaning when they say it is true we were bound to run once a week and we have only run once a fortnight, but we propose to incur the penalty provided by our contract, and you cannot impose any other. At all events, I draw my hon. friend's attention to this, which I consider a very serious matter. I consider the penalty altogether inadequate, and I am not at all confident it will ever operate as I should like it to.

Then there is another clause, clause 14, which reads:

Provided always and it is hereby distinctly agreed and understood that, should the contractors be unable to have the said vessels built and equipped as herein agreed within the time limited in this behalf by reason of a strike or strikes of ship-workers or engineers or other causes beyond the control of the contractors,—

So that if the contractors cannot raise the money, where will you be? That will be another cause quite beyond their control. If they are unable to get the money to carry out the contract, you have no remedy. This clause appears to me to be very loosely drawn. It appears to me to enable those gentlemen, at any period, to say that from causes not under their control they will not be able to carry out the contract without a year or two additional extension of time. What I fear is that the service undertaken by these contractors is not one that will secure the confidence of the financial men able to supply the means of carrying it to completion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Surely the hon. gentleman will read that clause as meaning all other clauses beyond their control of a like character to those mentioned. Every lawyer knows that if he specifies in a contract a certain number of reasons and then adds "or others," the others must be reasons coming under the same category.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to hear my hon. friend say that, because he is a lawyer and I am not. But I believe there is a legal maxim that common law is common sense. If that be true, having defined strikes of ship-workers and engineers and then added "any other causes," it would appear to cover other causes beyond the control of the contractor.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In the letter of Messrs. Allan of the 9th of June, to my predecessor, they use precisely these words :

It may prove impossible to obtain delivery of the four mail steamers in time to begin the service on the 1st of May, 1898, as their construction may be delayed by strikes of ship-workers or engineers or other causes beyond the control of the contractors. We assume that, if all diligence is used in obtaining speedy delivery, no penalty or forfeiture will be incurred for unavoidable delay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend has quoted the best authority he could, and that is the course pursued by his predecessors, and which we are always ready on this side to recognize as removing every possible ground of complaint. But I am inclined to think he will find that we took exception to the clause as suggested by the Messrs. Allan, and did not adopt it. I remember now distinctly that our attention was drawn to it, and that we thought while strikes were a matter beyond the control of the contractors, which might take it out of their power, whatever their resources might be, to implement the contract, it would not do to allow so wide a latitude as "other causes beyond the control" of the contractor. But I will assume for the moment that is not the case. Every person knows that the financial resources of Messrs. Allan are beyond question. Any person who has any knowledge, to say nothing of the eminent firm so well known in Canada, of the Allans' house in Glasgow, who were one of the parties to this contract, knows that they are people of immense wealth and resources, and therefore you have a guarantee in that fact alone, apart from any question of penalty or anything of this kind, for the prompt and efficient carrying out of the contract. In fact, I may say that the firm of the Messrs. Allan in Glasgow and in this country occupy such a position that they could not afford to fail in carrying out any contract with which they made with the Government of Canada or anybody else. But no such knowledge has been supplied to us as regards the financial ability of Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Co. I notice that the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in reply to a question on that subject in the House of Commons in England, was only able to say, not that Her Majesty's Government had satisfied themselves of the ability of Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Co. to carry this contract through, but that Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Co. had been able to satisfy the Government of Canada to that effect. Therefore, our responsibility is a very grave one, and I call the attention of the House to it as one of considerable importance.

Here is the clause to which I have already referred :

(c.) On each occasion when the contractors fail to perform a voyage between the appointed Canadian and British ports within the stipulated time, there shall be forfeited and paid by the contractors to the Minister the sum of eight pounds ten shillings for every hour or portion of an hour consumed on such voyage beyond the stipulated time, provided always that the total sum thus forfeited shall not exceed the proportionate part of the subsidy applicable to a single voyage.

So that if these gentlemen do not make the voyage at all, the only remedy provided by the contract is that they shall forfeit the proportion of the subsidy for one voyage, and if it be true, as I am advised it is, that during the winter every voyage will cost them £5,000 or £6,000 more than they will receive in subsidy, it will pay them to make a fortnightly service in the winter instead of a weekly service, and pay the penalty, which is no way commensurate with the advantage they shall obtain by their default.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would again point out to the hon. gentleman that those penalties are precisely the penalties which were proposed by himself and his Government in the case of Messrs. Allan.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can give my hon. friend the credit of producing the strongest argument he can, and I must say I feel greatly complimented to find that my hon. friend should be able to rest his case always on the unanswerable argument that our contract was open to the same objection. I think that will go a great way to satisfy the House that he had a pretty valid excuse.

I find in clause 18 the following :—

18. And provided always, that the Government of Canada has the power to determine the contract at any time in case the vessels furnished by the contractors for the service are not capable of performing the voyages contracted for at an average speed of five hundred knots per twenty-four hours, or ordinarily or frequently fail when on service on the round trip, from port to port, across the Atlantic, to maintain such speed, or should the contractors in any other respect fail to fairly carry out the terms and conditions of the contract according to their true intent and meaning.

I would ask the attention of the House to that clause, and call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that the right to determine the service would not be sufficient compensation for Canada. If that is all the penalty, then, if they cannot make this pay, they will be in a position to abandon the contract at any moment. If they find they cannot carry out this contract they are in a position to abandon it without losing anything except the very inconsiderable sum to which attention has already been drawn.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I shall only be too glad—no person in this country will be more glad or more ready than I—to congratulate the Government upon the success of their action in this matter, provided the result proves that they are able for the amount payable, to secure such a valuable fast Atlantic service for Canada. I wish for a moment to call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) to a question of law which is involved, and that hon. gentleman is, of course, a very high authority. Where was the authority found for making this contract? We passed an Act in this House to provide for a fast weekly service, but that Act which authorized the Government to contract for a fast weekly service only, did not enable them to make a contract for a fast fortnightly service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). As the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) knows, the Act authorized a fast weekly service, but it did not state from what date that weekly service should start. This contract which we have made, provides for a weekly service on, and from the year 1900, and in the meantime it provides for a fortnightly service.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In making a contract under an Act of Parliament, you must take the spirit of the Act, and I hold that the spirit of the Act, and the authority we receive from Parliament, was not to establish a fortnightly service at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But, to establish a fast weekly service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And as a matter of fact, the Messrs. Allan and Mr. Huddart, had either received the contract, were bound to commence a weekly service at the end of two years, and not a fortnightly service for the first year. I admit, that my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) is a much higher authority on that legal point than I am. It appears to be running very close to the wind, and I believe that lawyers have a faculty of doing that upon legal questions.

I would like to ask my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) if he has obtained any information, as to the relative cost of these turret ships as compared with the "Campania" and the "Lucania" of the Cunard line, or the "Teutonic" and "Majestic" of the White Star line. I do not at all hesitate to say, that I would have been quite satisfied with ships of the character and speed of the "Teutonic" and "Majestic," although they are not quite as fast as the "Campania" and "Lucania," because, with the geographical advantages we possess, with the "Teutonic" running between Liverpool and Quebec or Halifax, we could deliver in shorter time than they could be delivered by either the "Campania" or "Lucania" at New York, notwithstanding their greater speed. I would have been satisfied with that, but what I would like to know is: What is the character and cost of these turret ships, which as I understand have never hitherto been used for fast mail and passenger communication in any part of the world. If there is anything in the construction of these ships of the type of the "Teutonic" and "Majestic," I should like to know it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As a matter of course I will offer any opinion as to this new type of ship with great diffidence. I believe, that men whose experience entitles them to speak with authority, entertain a high opinion of the possibilities of this particular type of ship which is depicted in these plans laid on the Table of the House. I am rather inclined to think it is a misnomer to speak of them as turret ships although they approximate more or less to what is known as a turret ship. I do not think, however, that they are exactly a turret ship.

As to the other point which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) mentions, it is expected that they can be built for £500,000 sterling or thereabouts; a little more or a little less.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is, each.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Each. The total cost will be, I imagine, two million pounds sterling (£2,000,000) for the four when completed. I am told, that because of various causes, improvements in construction and reduction in the price of the particular class of iron and steel employed, and other things of that kind, that these ships can now be built at a considerably cheaper rate than ships of a similar quality could have been built, even so short a time as a year or eighteen months ago. That probably has had a good deal to do with the tendering at this reduced rate. Of course, those are matters upon which you will find a great divergence of opinion between shipbuilders and shipowners all the world over; and I understand there is some rivalry between the shipbuilders of the Clyde, and the shipbuilders of the east of England where these vessels will probably be constructed. Each of them fancies his own work, as is natural, much better than that of his neighbour. I think, one thing the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) will find is, that the Messrs Petersen and Tate will receive substantial financial backing. We made all reasonable inquiries into that, and I think there is no doubt they will be well supported, and that they will do their very best, as will the shipbuilders employed, to produce a class of vessels which will be quite equal to the types we have referred to. If the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) had time to look over these plans we have laid on the Table, he will see that the convenience and comfort of passengers has been very fully provided for. Of course, he has made, like myself, a good many Atlantic voyages, and a study of the plans will show him, that particularly as regards the second-class and steerage passengers, an unusual amount of care and pains has been taken to see that these classes of passengers are fully provided for and accommodated. I have taken careful note of the remarks of the hon. gentleman on the other points, and I think he will find, that we have reserved sufficient authority to deal with them; and while it is, as he says, always more or less of an experiment to deal with new firms, still I think that these men have every possible inducement to give us a good service. I myself formed a favourable opinion of the energy and ability of Mr. Petersen, the person with whom I had conversation on this subject. My hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Dobell) made a voyage across the Atlantic especially to satisfy himself and us on this point, and he brought back a very favourable report.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure we would be very glad to hear our hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) who has a personal knowledge of the matter, that others of us have not.

Mr. DOBELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity of laying before the House a few details, and explaining briefly some of the striking features of what is commonly called the turret type of steamers. I will say at first, and in a general way, that I believe the introduction of this style of steamer will earn for the Government of this country the congratulations of the hon. the leader of the Opposition. I believe, that after these steamers have been running for twelve months, the hon. member (Sir Charles Tupper) will frankly admit that we have performed a good service by departing from the old style of steamer, and that their introduction will cause a revolution in the Atlantic fast steamship service. I admit that no large steamer of this type has been built up to the present time, but for some years Canada has derived great benefit from steamers somewhat of the type of these new steamers, and the introduction of which enabled the coal trade of Nova Scotia to be developed, and the coal to be brought to Montreal at a much less cost than was ever anticipated.

If I mistake not, a contract was made some years ago at a price that was called by every one that knew the trade, to be absolutely impossible to fulfil. I think the rate of freight was 70 cents per ton, against the ordinary contracting price at the time of $1.50, and although ruin was predicted, and it was stated that they could never carry out the contract, the result has been satisfactory. Ever since Petersen, Tate & Co. entered into this fast steamship contract we have heard the same prediction as to the results. I believe it is absolutely incorrect. Although I do not claim for Petersen, Tate & Co. that they are a wealthy firm, I know they have the confidence of the large ship-builders in Newcastle and Sunderland, and also of the financial firms in London. I need give no other instance than the head of Lloyds, perhaps the largest underwriter in Great Britain, who told me himself that whatever Mr. Petersen undertook we could rely upon him to carry out. Well, I consider that better testimony regarding this firm than a statement that a firm is backed by very large means, but lacks character. I would rather at any time enter into a large contract with a firm possessing limited means and a high character and intelligence, than with a firm, no matter how large their means may be, but who do not inspire confidence in other respects. In saying this, I am not at all referring to, or reflecting upon the Messrs. Allan. When I was in Great Britain looking into this question, my first letter, written after a visit paid to the Messrs. Allan, in Glasgow, contained a sentence to the effect that we should exhaust every effort to continue with the firms that had been carrying the mails under contract with us for so many years; and I claim that we did exhaust every effort, and gave the Messrs. Allan every opportunity to offer us a service more in accord with this country's wishes. They distinctly laid down that they would co-operate with no other firm, that they must have all or none. And when I saw them they said that the indecision of this Government and the delay that had taken place prejudiced their position, and they were not sure that they could carry out the contract then, as the cost of building such steamers as they would tender had advanced 15 per cent. But I do not mean to convey the idea that they did not lead me to suppose that if we would then and there close a contract on their proposal they would not be willing to do so. We maintain that we never had a complete tender, and to my knowledge we never had a straight tender, and it was in my hands that the first papers were submitted for a report, and I had no hesitation of taking the responsibility of condemning the proposal as too extravagant to the country and too loose in its provisions. True, I did advocate an 18-knot service, because it could be obtained at much less cost, and I stated before this House that I considered $750,000 a year was too large a sum for this country to pay even for a 20-knot service, and I at that time advised my colleagues rather to give $500,000 for an 18-knot service than to burden the country with such a heavy annual payment as $750,000.

The leader of the Opposition has criticised the clauses of the contract, and very fairly, too; but if he will only look at the Allan contract, he will find that there is scarcely a clause through which you cannot drive a coach and four. The conditions for the fast performance of the service were absolutely in no degree binding upon them, while they would bind us. It is perfectly clear that we would have had to pay the Allans $750,000 a year, but on the other hand, the Allans could have given us almost any steamers they liked so long as they were of 8,500 tons. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say more as to the merits of this kind of steamer known as the turret steamer. This is an improvement on the turret steamer. A turret steamer will give no deck space, while these steamers give you fifty per cent more deck space than either the "Campania" or the "Lucania." They provide a walk for passengers, without any impediment, sixteen feet wide and a fifth of a mile round, no boats in the way, nothing at all to prevent passengers from promenading a fifth of a mile. They give you fifty per cent more cabin accommodation. Now, and you can easily understand that if they were simply of the turret type of steamer, they could not do that. Another advantage is that it makes the steamer much more rigid and strong, and, therefore, it has less vibration. If any of you have made a passage on any of the fast Atlantic steamers, or any other ocean steamship, you have noticed the long, wall-sided vessel, and there is a vibration running through the whole length of them. You may have a steamer of extreme size, and immense horse-power, say from 20,000 to 25,000, and her engines capable of forcing this through the water at a speed of 20 knots or over per hour, but unless she is exceptionally strong you cannot avoid this vibration. Now, if you will only study these plans, you will see in a moment the immense advantage that will be derived from the adoption of this new style. It is the difference between a long straight sheet of iron and the same made in the form of a girder. These ships have a bend in them, and that bend will provide the additional strength, and also another advantage, which is that when a sea strikes the side of the steamer, instead of its running up the side and on to the deck, it will be broken up by this bend or curve, and will be thrown out. Besides that, it does not give the same air space to lift the steamer up; therefore, the steamer will roll less than an ordinary steamer. The leader of the Opposition drew attention to the 25 feet 6 inches depth, which he thought was a drawback.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I suggested that it would not be possible to build a 10,000 ton steamer that would only draw that depth of water.

Mr. DOBELL. Then I misunderstood the hon. leader of the Opposition. But the advantage is this, that that bend lightens the upper part of the steamer materially, and it makes her draw much less water. I claim that a steamer that draws 25 feet 6 inches, instead of over thirty feet, has the advantage, because there is far less bulk to be forced through the water, and it can be driven much easier than a steamer drawing 30 feet, besides the additional safety in ascending our river. Now, if you will look at these plans, you will at once admit the advantage of the feature of what may be called the bottle-necked steamer. It is like the neck of a bottle, and will afford more passenger accommodation and enable the builder to bind the steamer together and make her firmer from end to end. The drawback in many of these steamers is the large area that you have got inside without any means of bracing them. I believe this very type of steamer that Petersen, Tate & Co. are to supply under their contract will prove very successful, and my prediction is that that contract is going to be a very profitable one for them, that they have hit it exactly at the right time, and that they will get all the money that they require. In fact, I had a private cable lately saying they had secured it already to carry out this contract, and that they are only waiting for the ratification of the contract to put these vessels in hand and have them completed. The leader of the Opposition has criticised certain clauses in the contract regarding the frequency of the trips. Those clauses are in almost every steamship contract that is made. They are the ordinary phraseology of steamship contracts, and I think there is every provision safeguarded that we can consistently ask Petersen, Tate & Co. to agree to. I cannot see the slightest room for the contention that this only provides for a fortnightly service, and that we cannot insist upon them making a weekly service with four steamers. That clause "a" of section 1 distinctly provides that the contract is for four steamers of a certain class definitely laid down, and there is no room to say that we will only have a fortnightly service. I think the leader of the Opposition could not have been serious when he stated that there was any very serious damage in our only having a fortnightly service the first year. The Cunard line and the White Star line only commenced with one or two. I remember when the "Persia" was first built she was a great departure, then the "Scotia," and so it ran on. I believe these steamers will be a profitable investment, and that they will give satisfaction to the people of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether any of these bottle-necked monsters are travelling around now, or is this the first experiment in the matter?

Mr. DOBELL. I admit that we are embarking upon a venture; that these are the first of this class of vessels to be put on the Atlantic service. And I say that we deserve credit for this. I remember the time when Canada did lead in the Atlantic service in the steamers, both as regards speed and capacity. I know that of late years we have fallen much behind, and I will tell you why: It has been because the wealth of the firm in question, to which the hon. leader of the Opposition has drawn attention to, has become so great that they are afraid of losing their money. I do think that they have taken a very unworthy part in the way they have criticised our contractor's position. They have descended to a line of criticism that they should not have adopted, and that it has had the effect of causing them to lose their influence, and they have not maintained their ancient reputation. In England they like open fair-play. The Messrs. Allan state that they would not touch the contract on the terms we have made, and at the same time, they have done all they possibly could to damage Petersen and prevent him carrying out his contract. I say that this is unworthy of a great firm that have made their money out of Canada—for they have made their money out of Canada. They say that we have treated them indifferently; I say we have extended to them every consideration, and I may say this—that when Mr. Petersen arrived in this country the first man I introduced to him, telling him the purpose for which Mr. Petersen had come over, was Mr. Hugh Allan, of Montreal. I sent for Mr. Petersen, and introduced him and left them together that they might talk things out. After acting in that way, they should not say that we had gone about things secretly, or that we used their tender to secure better terms. We used no tender for the purpose of securing better terms. Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Company approached me in England; I told them to perfect their plans, prepare their scheme, come to Canada, and, in a straightforward way, lay their scheme before the Government and make their offer. No other conditions nor progress was arrived at in England. Mr. Petersen came out here and made his offer, which was accepted; and I claim that it is a creditable contract. It is a very severe reflection upon hon. gentlemen opposite, for the $500,000 that we save on this contract is a substantial amount, and is worth a little trouble, and repays us for taking a little risk; and I maintain that we not only get a far better service, but we get a service that will be a credit to us for the ten years that it is running. I contend that we have put the matter on a true footing. Because one firm have had the contract for thirty or forty years, I do not admit that they should have the grappling-irons on us and must continue to have the contract for ever. I think we have done wisely and well, and I am satisfied that before long we shall receive the congratulations—because he is always frank—of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) when this line is perfected and running.

Mr. McNEILL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman one question. The hon. gentleman said, as I understood him, that none of these vessels have been plying as passenger boats. Do I understand that any of them have been plying as freight vessels?

Mr. DOBELL.

Mr. DOBELL. None exactly the same. The turret steamers have been plying as freight vessels; but these are a combination of the turret and the bottle-neck steamers. I believe they are building three passenger steamers, one for a Glasgow firm and two others at Sunderland. But I believe they are the first passenger steamers that have been built. But the best evidence that there is something in this line is that the Admiralty have approved of these plans; and not only that, but I may tell the hon. gentleman that I am informed that Mr. Dunlop, the active manager for the Allans has actually written an article in a marine paper advocating the use of the turret ships. I do not speak of that with authority; I say that it has been told to me. Not only is there no question that the Admiralty approve of this type, but I may say that the Right Hon Joseph Chamberlain told me that he was very much interested in the plans.

Mr. SPKOULE. But they have never been proved by practical experience.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). In view of the fact that the Government and the Opposition are almost united upon this question, it seems almost useless for anybody on the back benches to say anything against it. But, Sir, I wish to enter my protest against the expenditure of such a large amount of money as this will entail upon the country for a service that, I contend, is not necessary in the interests of Canada. I oppose this on three grounds: In the first place, it is not necessary; in the next place, it is altogether too expensive; and in the third place, the St. Lawrence is an unsuitable route for a fast service. This contract has been entered into, signed, sealed and delivered without consulting the members of this House or, in fact, consulting the House at all. The reason that is given is, I believe, that at the last session of Parliament a resolution was passed authorizing the Government to enter into such a contract with any persons for a fast service. But, Mr. Speaker, since that time those who proposed that resolution have been condemned by the people. On the 23rd of June last the country decided against the policy advocated by the late Government, and brought the present Government into power.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Wood, Hamilton) allow me to remind him that the Act authorizing the late Government to invite tenders at a cost to Canada of $750,000 per annum passed this House unanimously.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). It may be so, Sir. But since then, the country has declared against their policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). Yes. I believe that on many hustings this very question was brought up and discussed and it was declared that the country would never support a fast service at such an enormous expense. Therefore, I say that this Government were not bound, either legally or morally, to make a contract for this fast service; and on behalf of my own constituency as well as on behalf of a great number of voters throughout the length and breadth of Ontario, I declare that this contract is not in the interest of the country from my point of view. I object to it on the ground that the St. Lawrence is an unsuitable route for such a service. I have crossed the Atlantic oftener, perhaps, than any gentleman in this House, except the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) who spoke just before me, and it has been a rare exception for me to cross by the St. Lawrence route, either backwards or forwards, without being detained for hours by fogs and ice. I contend that it is not possible to run a fast line service on the St. Lawrence, because of the fog and ice consequently to be found on the route. We all know why the Allan line ships met with such disaster in the first instance. They undertook to carry the mail within a certain length of time, and in order to keep up with the contract, they had to drive through the fogs wherever they found them, and the consequence was that in many cases they came to grief. Latterly, when they were not bound to such great speed, when the fog came on, the steam was turned off; and I myself have laid there in the midst of a fog bound up in the ice for ten, or twelve, or even twenty-four hours at a time. When hon. gentlemen tell me that a course subject to such difficulties is suitable for a fast line, it satisfies me that they do not know the route they are talking about. I do not know that even the leader of the Opposition has crossed by that route very often. He may have gone that way sometimes, but I think he usually takes the New York route and leaves the St. Lawrence route for other people to travel. We know what took place last August. On two occasions two steamers collided going at about four miles an hour. Suppose that these vessels had been running at the rate of 20 miles an hour—the vessels would inevitably gone to the bottom with the sacrifice of a vast amount of property and of many valuable lives. Therefore, I think the Government should stay its hand before entering into an enterprise of this kind. There is no need for this fast service to justify such a large expenditure. We have the New York route which we can always rely upon. As for the Government securing 300 passengers for each ship by this route, where are we to draw them from? Certainly not from Canada. We are told that we may expect to attract the traffic of the north-western states. Gentlemen who know something about travelling will tell you that those who travel are going to take the most popular route. What have you to offer the people of the north-western states coming to this section of the country? For a month or two in the summer time it may be a very pleasant route, provided it is free from fog or ice; but the great bulk of the North-west travellers from the North-west will go via New York, where they will see that city, and where they will have a choice of fast ships every day in the week. So I am quite satisfied that you are not going to attract a very large amount of traffic from the North-west. Then, supposing you could manage it in the summer time, how are you going to do it in the winter time? You are going to ask people to travel to Halifax a thousand miles, taking all the risk of being snowed up on the way. Gentlemen may laugh, but I presume there are no snowstorms and no danger of passengers being snowbound on the Intercolonial Railway. People are not going to take that risk when they can reach in a very few hours one of the best ports on this side of the Atlantic, and get out to sea at once.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Where is that?

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). New York. There fore I say we are asked to expend $500,000 a year for a service that is really not required in the interest of the business men of this country, but to provide a few passengers with a service a few hours shorter than what they have at present. So far as cold storage is concerned, I am quite at one with the Government. I am prepared to support the expenditure of a very handsome amount to provide cold storage, so that the farmers of this country can place their products on the London markets at the earliest possible date; but that is a very different thing from paying $500,000 a year to provide a fast service to give a few passengers a day less on the way. I have no doubt that many gentlemen have read Mr. Sandford Fleming's pamphlet on this subject. He is a gentleman who knows this route perhaps as well as any other man in this country. He has travelled it, as I have done, many times, and he knows the dangers to be met with in travelling a route of that description, which is constantly subject to fog and ice. He says:

It appears to me that the time has arrived when the Canadian people may profit by the experience which has been gained in subsidizing public undertakings. Many will remember cases when subsidies have been granted to enterprises that have been found impossible of successful accomplishment. The result has been grievous loss and disappointment, and sometimes ruin, to innocent investors, with much discredit to Canada. As more directly connected with the present question, I may refer to the experience gained in the history of Canadian mail steamships, though I do not wish to recall the series of disasters which at one time befell the Allan line, when eight passenger ships were lost in eight years, or the shipwrecks and losses sustained by the Dominion and Beaver lines. I have been called to account by the press of Quebec for mentioning that the navigation of the St. Lawrence offers many dangers to the rapid steaming of vessels of heavy tonnage. Some writers state that my knowledge of the navigation is very limited, and my opinion respecting it not worth much. As they will possibly recognize a Quebec authority as more competent to speak on this point, I would refer to the work of Mr. Henry Fry, published so recently as 1896. This work, entitled "The History of North Atlantic Steam Navigation," has been carefully prepared by one of the most respected residents of Quebec, long familiar with every circumstance connected with the St. Lawrence route. In this volume will be found a record of details fully supporting all I have stated respecting the difficulties in the way of fast steaming, and the dire consequences to which these difficulties have already too frequently led, even in the case of comparatively slow steamships.

Among other things stated by Mr. Fry, is, that the distressing loss of life and property were not due to any want of skill or experience on the part of the owners or captains. He, however, expresses the opinion that the Government was not blameless in exacting speed, in the face of the serious obstacles which were presented to rapid steaming, and in imposing heavy duties for non-punctuality in the delivery of the mails within the periods stipulated by contract.

Obviously, no one wishes to see similar losses repeated, and it is to prevent them being repeated, possibly in an aggravated form, that words of caution are now being used. It matters little who proclaims the necessity of caution.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman proposes to continue his remarks, I would suggest that he move the adjournment of the debate, because the hour for the adjournment of the House has arrived.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1 p.m.

Second Sitting.

MONDAY, 14th June, 1897.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SAFETY ON RAILWAYS.

Mr. CASEY moved :

That that part of the Report of the Select Committee to which were referred Bills Nos. 2 and 3, recommending the printing of the evidence for distribution, be adopted, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said : I have merely to say that that evidence is of great importance to the understanding of the question. Whether the measure passes the House this year or not, the evidence is of such value that I think it should be laid before the public.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERY BULLETIN REPORT.

Mr. MACDONELL (Selkirk) (for Mr. Lemieux) asked :

Is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries aware that the Fishery Bulletin Report is not sent regularly on the Gaspé coast?

2. What are the regulations concerning that report?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). 1. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not aware that the Fishery Bulletin Report is not sent regularly to the Gaspé coast, and inquiries will be made from the officer in charge of that service. 2. The bulletin is to be posted up daily at the telegraph offices of the most important fishing centres along the sea-coast of the maritime provinces.

WM. O'BRIEN, OF SS. "LANSDOWNE."

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) asked :

1. Has William O'Brien been dismissed from the position of coxswain on the SS. "Lansdowne" ?

2. If so, when was he so dismissed?

3. On whose complaint, for what cause and on what charge was he so dismissed?

4. Was there any, and what, investigation into any such charge?

5. For what length of time has he been in the service of the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). 1. Mr. O'Brien not now in employ. 2. Discharged on the 31st November last when "Lansdowne" went out of commission. 3. Not aware of any complaint. Mr. O'Brien was a member of the crew of the "Lansdowne" and served as boatswain. The crew is not permanently appointed but subject to changes from time to time as deemed expedient. 4. No. 5. In service for some years, but have no record of his appointment at Ottawa.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimate of a sum required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1897, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends this Estimate to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, 14th June, 1897.

SUPPLY—DISMISSALS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish briefly to refer to two cases connected to the subject of dismissals. One is a case that was mentioned last session and in reference to which some papers were laid on the Table of the House. I refer to the case of special agents of the Department of Marine and Fisheries at Pictou, and I desire to point out to the hon. Minister that last session he laboured under a totally erroneous impression with regard to the action these agents had taken in the late elections. I was not myself aware of the facts at the time, and I admitted the possibility of these gentlemen having been members of an election committee, but subsequently I ascertained that so careful had these gentlemen been that they had refrained from taking any active part in that election and were not members of any political committee. Now, I do not know that it is possible to induce the hon. gentleman to look into this matter again or take further action looking to the reinstatement of Messrs. Noonan and Davis. It may be—and I am not concerned in discussing that question one way or the other at present—that the hon. gentlemen regards these positions as quasi-confidential in connection with the administration of the service and the distribution of patronage at that port, and for that reason he might possibly desire to have some one not identified with the Conservative party discharging the duties of special agent; but I desire to call attention to the fact that he has based his action upon totally erroneous information, and I would ask him to reconsider this matter in the light of the policy which I understand the Government have already adopted of granting officers retired under certain circumstances from the civil service allowances to recoup them for the amounts paid in by them to the superannuation fund. I think some allowance should be made to these men for having faithfully discharged their duties and having been removed without any negligence or misconduct on their part. I think if the opportunity were afforded, they could satisfy the hon. Minister that in no respect had they done ought to forfeit his confidence or the confidence of the head of the department, be he Conservative or Liberal. Again, I want to point out to the hon. gentleman what seems to me, from the papers, to be an irregular action on his part, and one which, in any event, must be made regular. These men held their appointments by Order in Council, approved by the Governor General. That Order in Council has never been cancelled, and, consequently, the appointments have never been properly cancelled. Their dismissal was made simply by a letter which, I fancy, would have no legal effect on a claim that might be pressed by these special agents for their salary up to the time the Order in Council under which they held office was rescinded. The letter is dated 28th July, 1896, summarily informing the special agents that Mr. Oliver had been appointed in their place as special agent, but the Order in Council under which these gentlemen held office, was dated 15th July, 1890. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will take that as a ground—if he is disposed to deal with this matter on broad and just grounds and avoid the investigation I have suggested—for allowing these men their salaries up to the time their dismissal is put in regular shape by the rescinding of the Order in Council, because the hon. gentleman cannot override an Order in Council by departmental instructions or letter. I may say, before leaving that case, that the hardship of the hon. gentleman's action is shown by the fact that if the hon. gentleman were to search the county of Pictou over—and it is a large county with a very large electoral list—he could not have found a more bitter opponent of my colleague and myself than the gentleman whom he has appointed to succeed Messrs. Noonan and Davies. Mr. Oliver has always been an active and energetic and perhaps unscrupulous canvasser in every political contest in which I have taken part, and from the best information I can get, he has never ceased his active partisanship since he has been put in office as special agent for the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Leaving that case for the consideration of the Government, I beg to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the case of Mr. J. W. Hughes, in which there does not seem to have been, as far as I can judge, any regular course pursued. Mr. Hughes, who is well and, I think, favourably known to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was appointed to the position of clerk in connection with the Sault Canal at a yearly salary of $800. Before the year had run out, without any charge whatever having been made against Mr. Hughes, his salary was stopped and his duties ceased, but he has not received, that I am aware of, any formal notification of dismissal from the service, or, at any rate, if he has received one, it is only within a short time, whereas his salary, which is payable monthly, was stopped some time in December last. Mr. Hughes has ever held himself in readiness to go on with his work, and assumed his work would go on, as usual, at the opening of navigation, but navigation has opened and he has not been ordered to return to his duties, and I think there are circumstances in his case which will warrant the hon. Minister—if Mr. Hughes is to be discharged or if the action taken is intended as severing his connection with the department—in paying him up to such time as formal notification was given him that his services were not further required. It seems to me he is entitled, at any rate, to a full year's salary unless some charge of misconduct or neglect has been preferred against him. But I understand nothing of that kind is contended, but it has been assumed by the department that a message instructing him to dismiss the staff was sufficient notice to him that his own services were also to be dispensed with. It seems that about December 12th, 1896, he was instructed to dismiss the staff, and he wired to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals as follows:—

Staff dismissed to-day. Waiting your instructions here. Considered position permanent.

(Sgd.) J. W. HUGHES,
Clerk.

And, as I said before, he was appointed, wisely or unwisely, so far as he was concerned, at a salary of $800 a year, and, when this notice was sent to him, he very properly assumed that it in no way referred to his position. On the 15th December, 1896, this rather ambiguous letter, in this connection, is received by him from the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals:

In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, I may explain, that all the employees on the canals hold office merely during the pleasure of the Government, and, as it was considered that the full staff for the season of navigation was not needed during the winter months, whilst the canals were closed, instructions were issued to dispense with the services of such members of the staff as were not considered necessary to conduct the business of the canal during the period during which the canal was closed, hence it is that you received the notice from the superintendent to which you refer.

I am, of course, always sorry when circumstances necessitate the dispensing with the services of employees.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) COLLINGWOOD SCHREIBER,
Chief Engineer.

Hon. gentlemen will see that even that letter does not refer, in terms, or, I think, even inferentially, to the particular case of Mr. Hughes, who was not one of the employees, in the sense of the letter, was not on the same footing as the staff who were laid off during the winter on the understanding that their employment was temporary, by the month, but was an officer with a yearly salary, and, therefore, in a different class altogether, being nominated as a clerk over all these so-called employees. Since then, Mr. Hughes has been endeavouring, by correspondence with the head of the department to ascertain his status and exactly where he was. As I am informed, it was not until recently that he got anything in the way of a conclusive answer from the Minister of Railways that his services were not to be re-engaged. Under these circumstances, if I have correctly stated them, and considering the nature of the engagement of Mr. Hughes and the fact that he did discharge his duties efficiently, I hope that at least the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, in considering his case, will give him his full salary, even if he cannot re-engage him and send him to the position to which he was appointed or to one with similar duties.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). Just a word with reference to the first case which the hon. gentleman mentioned—the dismissal of Messrs. Noonan and Davis as agents of the Department of Marine at Pictou. The hon. gentleman assures that there were circumstances connected with the change which require further investigation at my hands, and, of course, if he thinks there are, I shall be very happy to reopen the matter and give it further investigation. But my recollection of the case is perfectly clear. The papers have been brought down. In my humble judgment—and I am sure the hon. gentleman will coincide with me—the agent of the department at Pictou ought to be a person with whom the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could hold confidential communication, and that, therefore, I should have a person in whom I have confidence. The hon. gentleman is under the impression that Messrs. Noonan and Davis were appointed by Order in Council. I do not think that that is the case. The first appointment of Messrs. Noonan and Davis was for them to act under commission. Afterwards the department commuted that appointment for an annual payment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) allow me to read to him the Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to state it as I understand it first. After commuting the commission for an annual allowance of $200, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) when Minister of Marine and Fisheries, applied to the Governor in Council to fix a higher salary than had been allowed departmentally. He had the impression—and I think he is right—that it would be well to have an Order in Council sanctioning the increase. He went into the Council, not to have them appointed as agent, but to fix their salary. They were not appointed by Order in Council, as no duties were fixed under that order, but the amount to be allowed them was fixed at $400. There was no appointment in that Order in Council, in my opinion. If he thinks that it is an appointment, I shall be happy—as I have respect for his opinion—to go into the papers and see if I am wrong.

At present I cannot see that I am wrong, but I shall be happy to go into the matter. As to repaying them, if they paid into the superannuation fund—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, they did not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then, of course, they did not come under the Superannuation Act.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, but it is the spirit of that that I appeal to. But I may be allowed one word. Instead of discussing the point that the hon. gentleman raises as to the Order in Council, I will barely refer to what I think was the only tenable point to be advanced—the necessity of having an agent in whom he had confidence. I appeal to him to deal generously with these men, if he finds that their record in the department is a satisfactory one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has called my attention to the case of Mr. Hughes who was an employee in the office at Sault Ste. Marie. I am not, at the moment, in possession of the particular circumstances which belong to this case, but I think Mr. Hughes was supposed by the Deputy Minister and the chief engineer of the department to come within the rule which had been laid down last winter after the close of the canal. It was deemed desirable and eminently proper that all the employees on the canal who were not required in the winter season should be set free, and a circular to that effect was sent to the superintendents of the canals, and they were instructed to inform this class of employees that their services would not be required during the winter, and that, if they were required when the canals opened in the spring they would be notified. They understood that Hughes came within that class of employees, and I think from what the hon. gentleman has read, that notice was received by him which he understood, at all events, to mean that his services were dispensed with for the time being, and he did not continue in the employ during the winter season. I am advised in a general way, that Mr. Hughes' case belongs to a class and does not involve any special circumstances. However, I should have no objection at all to giving my personal attention to the matter at the earliest moment, and looking into the case to see whether there is any ground on which Mr. Hughes can reasonably claim his salary after his services were dispensed with.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The main difference. I would remind the hon. gentleman, was that there was a yearly salary.

TRADE AND NAVIGATION RETURNS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I would like to call the attention of the House to a matter which, I think, must be regarded as of importance. Now that we are adopting a vigorous immigration policy, it is of the utmost importance that the reports of the Government, especially the Trade and Navigation Returns, should be compiled so as to show the products exported from the different provinces. I am sure there was no intention on the part of the late Government to mislead anybody or misrepresent anything, but the difficulty arose in entering the goods as from the different ports from which they are shipped, regardless of the province in which they were produced. Now that we have immigration agents in the old country and in the United States as well, it is of the utmost importance that if our Trade and Navigation Returns fall into the hands of parties in those countries that are looking into the condition of affairs in Canada, a correct representation should be made. For instance, in the matter of wheat, I find, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, that the exports were, from Ontario, 7,490,530 bushels, while from Manitoba the exports were only 1,216,450 bushels, and the North-west exported only five bushels. Now that the reports have gone abroad that Manitoba and the North-west are raising large crops of wheat, if the Trade and Navigation Returns fall into the hands of any person in England inquiring into the condition of things in the several provinces, he will naturally come to the conclusion that there is something wrong. Then, in the matter of butter, I find that the exports from the province of Ontario were 102,352 pounds, while from the province of Quebec the exports were 5,115,000 pounds. That is certainly not a correct representation, according to the products of the two provinces. The exports of butter from Nova Scotia were 445,812 pounds, from New Brunswick, 40,207 pounds; Manitoba, 66,994; British Columbia, 12,828; and Prince Edward Island, 92,184. I think that, perhaps, these returns are nearly correct, except as between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. According to these returns, we find that the province of Ontario exports 27,667,000 pounds of cheese, while the province of Quebec exports 134,861,000 pounds. This is certainly not a correct statement. Then, take the case of animals—that is, horses and cattle. Horses over one year old, exports from Ontario 4,248; from Quebec, 15,452; from Manitoba, 183; from New Brunswick, 1,199; from Nova Scotia, 224. I think that here again the discrepancy is between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario, all our cattle and horses being shipped from the port of Montreal. It would be an easy matter for the two commissioners who have to examine all the animals put on board the vessels there, to ascertain where they were produced and to give the annual returns of the same. Of cattle one year old. I find that, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, 97,005 were shipped to Great Britain, of which Ontario sent only 389, whereas the province of Quebec sent 95,619. This discrepancy arises from the fact of all the cattle having been shipped from Montreal. Nova Scotia is credited with 1,883; New Brunswick with 2,082; Manitoba, 1,684; British Columbia, 3; Prince Edward Island, 1,226; and the North-west Territories, with all those vast ranches, and the large number of cattle that I know are exported out of that country, according to these returns, are only credited with 5 cattle exported. Now, I hold that in justice to this new country the exports from each section should be fairly represented. It is of great importance that our Trade and Navigation Returns should be compiled with as great exactitude as possible. While I do not believe that there has been any intention to mislead. I still think that proper care and attention have not been exercised in the past. I do not bring this up in a party spirit, or in any spirit of provincialism, but because I think these facts should be correctly set forth in our Trade and Navigation Returns. The immigrants coming from different countries would like to know the products of the different provinces, and what the exports are which they send forth. I hope, therefore, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Controller of Customs will give this matter their attention, and have the Trade and Navigation Returns compiled so as to show as correctly as possible the source of our agricultural exports.

THE CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. The subject the hon. gentleman has mentioned is one of great importance, and the end he has in view is very desirable. The House has observed that he has found no fault with the department in its manner of doing this work hitherto, nor in the way the work is done at present; but he is seeking, if possible, that we may have statistics that will more accurately describe the exports sent out from the different provinces and territories. This subject no doubt engaged the attention of my predecessors in office. Whether the department may be able in future to arrive at results that will more clearly indicate the place of production of our different exports, I am not yet able to say. It is evidently a very desirable object judging from the manner in which the case has been presented by the hon. gentleman. But there are difficulties that might arise as I find on having given some thought to the subject, although I have not yet been able to see how we could reach results with anything like accuracy. For instance, take the shipments of wheat from Quebec and from Montreal. A great deal of this wheat, if it is Manitoba wheat, will be manifested on Fort William, as it may go into store at Fort William. It may be manifested on Montreal, it will lie in Montreal, some of it may go into home consumption at Montreal, and another part of it be exported. If the export entry was made directly at the port of shipment, there would be no trouble, but the trouble comes in where it is manifested on some other Canadian port, and goes into storage there, a portion of which may go into home consumption, and another part be exported. That explains largely how it is that our cheese and butter exports from the port of Montreal are manifested on Montreal; they lie in storage there, and after a time may be exported, and go out as exports from the port of Montreal. I mention these points to show the hon. gentleman how difficult it is to arrive at the source of production. I have no doubt my predecessors have given the subject attention, and have not been able thoroughly to solve it. It is only by the census taken every ten years that we ascertain with some accuracy the source of production of these exports. Of course the different provinces and the leading cities through, their boards of trade, perhaps, are able to gain information and tabulate it, information that is of importance to the different provinces; and I suppose it has not been considered by the department hitherto that it would be proper to take the statistics gathered from outside sources instead of through officers of the department. Whether any improvement can be made in that direction, I am not able to say; I know, however, some improvements may be made. But to be able to get an accurate compilation of the exports from the various provinces and territories, is a subject that will require considerable thought. I recognize the value such a compilation would be. I have no doubt the desire of the hon. gentleman is the desire of the House, and if the department are able to devise any way by which that can be done in future, I will be glad to carry it into effect.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. McMillan) has brought this matter to the notice of the Government. While they are giving it consideration, I wish to draw their attention to a matter still more important, in my judgment, because it is desirable that Canada should have due credit for its trade. When in England my attention was called to a matter with reference to which I had some correspondence with the board of trade, although without reaching so desirable a result as I could have wished; I refer to the fact that a large portion of the trade of Canada is credited to the United States; a large portion of the trade of Canada going to Great Britain and sent via the United States, appears in the trade returns of the United Kingdom to the credit of the United States instead of to Canada. I think that is a subject which might be followed up with advantage by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and by the Controller of Customs, with a view, if possible, of getting such an alteration made by the board of trade in the United Kingdom as would give Canada full credit for all her trade, both exports and imports.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. Could the hon. gentleman tell me if, in the compilation of British statistics, Canada has credit for exports the product of the United States passing through our ports?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it very likely we do, but that is so much smaller than the trade of Canada going through the United States, that it leaves a large balance in favour of the United States against us. I will send my hon. friend a copy of the correspondence that I had with the boards of trade, which will put the Government in possession of the facts from our standpoint.

Mr. MACDONELL. I think this difficulty could be easily settled by compelling the railway companies to make returns of their shipments of produce from each of the provinces. At present the province of Quebec really gets credit for material shipped from all western provinces, because it is shipped at Montreal and the city of Quebec.

DISMISSALS FROM LAND OFFICE, MANITOBA.

Mr. TISDALE. I have taken no part so far, or very little, in discussions in relation to dismissals. But some one has sent me, I presume as being an ex-Minister of Militia, a quotation from the Winnipeg "Nor'-Wester" which I wish to call to the attention of the Minister of the Interior. I do so with the desire that, if it is true, to call his attention to it and to leave him responsible for it, because it is a matter relating exclusively to men in the militia force who risked their lives in the rebellion that took place in the North-west. If it is true, I hope that the Minister will rectify the complaint. I am not in a position to say whether it is true or not, but it seems to me a serious matter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Does the hon. gentleman refer to the case of Mr. Perrin?

Mr. TISDALE. There are two or three cases. The quotation is as follows:—

Much has been heard of late regarding offensive partisan officials, by a set of Ministers who have zealous partisans of their own side desirous to get an office. Two cases of dismissal are reported from the Interior Department illustrating the merciless way in which the spoils system is being applied. The Winnipeg "Nor'-Wester" says that one of the clerks dismissed from the Dominion Lands Office is Mr. Herbert B. Perrin. Mr. Perrin is a young man who, on the breaking out of the Saskatchewan rebellion, offered his services as a trooper in Major Boulton's troop of scouts. He was one of the first men shot in the engagement at Fish Creek. His left arm was shattered; and he is mentioned in General Middleton's despatch among those wounded seriously. It was necessary to amputate his arm, and his recovery was for a long time doubtful. He lived; but his prospects in life were blasted. It was then that the Government, as an appropriate, if not adequate, recognition of his sacrifice in the cause of his country, gave him a small position in the Interior Department. That position he has filled most efficiently. He has never been guilty of an act of partisanship, and there is no blot in his official record. Surely this was a case in which the most remorseless of spoilsmen might have been expected to stay his hand. But not so Mr. Sifton. He has thrown this young man suddenly into the street, without reasonable notice, with a wife and family dependent upon him, with the official experience attained during twelve years of faithful service quite useless to him, and handicapped in acquiring a new calling by the loss of the arm the rebel's bullet shattered.

Another similar dismissal is that of Mr. M. O'R. Jarvis, of the Minnedosa Land Office. Young Jarvis, when the rebellion broke out, was a member of the 90th Battalion. He, too, was shot in the arm at Fish Creek; and he, like young Perrin, was given a minor position in the Interior Department by the late Government as a recognition of his sacrifice in the cause of his country. Like young Perrin, too, he has, without any cause, been made a victim of Mr. Sifton's heartless partisanship, and has been turned adrift to make a place for a camp-follower of the army of Reform. Still another dismissal, equally odious to every loyalist, may be mentioned. Miss McLean, who, with her father, was captured by Big Bear during the rebellion, and who suffered all the suspense and hardship of a prisoner during that chief's celebrated northward flight, was given a small position in the Indian Office in Winnipeg by the late Government. She has been an exemplary official; and her familiarity with the Indian dialects is of the greatest service to the department.

I would call the attention of the Minister to these cases. Personally, I know nothing of the matter, but the Minister undoubtedly does.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale). I may say that the officials to whom reference is made in that newspaper article are employed in the office of the Commissioner of Dominion Lands at Winnipeg, and it being the intention to abolish that office, nearly all the officials have received notice that their services would not be required after the 30th of this month. I was not aware of the facts of the particular cases which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) has referred to. With the exception of the case of Mr. Perrin, they have not been called to my attention. It has been stated to me that Mr. Perrin was given this position on account of the fact that he had served the country in a military capacity, and that he had suffered injury which incapacitated him from being as well able to take care of himself in the ordinary affairs of life as he would have been if he had not been wounded. Immediately upon those facts being brought to my attention, I at once gave instructions that he should be retained and that his notice should be recalled. As for the other cases, I will be very pleased to consider them and see what can be done.

MICMAC INDIANS—MEDICAL ATTENDANT.

Mr. GILLIES. There is another matter connected with the Department of the Interior to which I wish to draw the attention of the Minister. It is in the knowledge of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) that we have in the province of Nova Scotia a band of Indians called the Micmac tribe. Several of these Indians live on the Island of Cape Breton and are placed on the different reserves in different counties. A certain number of them live upon the Salmon River reserve in my county. For many years this band was attended medically by Dr. John A. Macdonald, who was employed in 1884 by the Rev. Mr. McDougall, Indian superintendent of the division. Although the Rev. Mr. McDougall differed from me in politics he was a personal friend of mine, and inasmuch as he differed so strongly from me in politics, I assume that he had no political predilections in favour of employing the medical gentleman to whom I refer. For years and years Dr. Macdonald attended upon that Indian band with every satisfaction to the Indians, and they had the utmost confidence in him. Last September in this House, I had a petition sent to me from the Indians upon that reserve strongly remonstrating against the medical attendant being changed and the services of another medical gentleman being retained. They sent a petition to the Department of the Interior through me, and I had it transmitted to the hon. gentleman (Senator Scott) then in charge of the department. Weeks passed on, and I had no answer from that gentleman. I then waited upon Senator Scott, and he said he had been so beleaguered and beset by correspondence from hon. gentlemen on the Liberal side of the House that he had not time to attend to any other matter in his department, except to answer these letters. Having failed in getting an answer from Senator Scott, I had the matter brought up in the House, and the hon. gentleman from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), who was then answering for the Department of the Interior here, was good enough to give me the assurance that the matter would be looked into, and that there would be no change in the medical attendant of the Indians on Salmon River. I am bound to say that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) acted up to his word given on that occasion. Now, I take the liberty of reading to the Minister (Mr. Sifton) the petition which was sent to the Interior Department last year by the chief of the band and his three captains. I will read it for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), because I assume that he has not been in possession of the facts, or otherwise he would not have acted as he evidently has done. The petition reads as follows :

St. Peter's, Cape Breton,
September 3rd, 1896.

To the Minister of the Interior :

Sir,—We, the undersigned, in behalf of the Indians of Salmon River Reserve, desire to bring to your notice the gross injustice of being coerced by the Indian agent here of employing a physician who is objectionable to us. We deplore the prospect of being deprived of the services of our old physician, Dr. J. A. Macdonald, who has treated us for years successfully, in whose generosity, ability and skill we have the most implicit confidence, and for whom we entertain every feeling of respect. In politics he has never been known to be an active partisan ; on the contrary, we are well aware that during party conflicts he has quietly attended to the duties of his profession.

We have full confidence in your generosity and sense of justice to have our grievances remedied, and humbly desire you to have our old and trusted physician's services continued.

On behalf of the Indians of Salmon River Reserve.

Your obedient servants,

JOHN DENNIS, Chief.
THOMAS W. SCOTCHMAN,
ALEX. SCOTCHMAN,
PETER RICHARD. } Captains.

I then asked the hon. gentleman from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) if any change had been ordered direct from the department, and he gave me this answer :

Mr. DOBELL. No order has been given to change the physician and to discontinue the services of Dr. Macdonald, and no order on the subject will be given without grave consideration.

Mr. GILLIES. Will the hon. Minister see to it that instructions are at once sent to the Indian agent at St. Peter's to have Dr. J. A. Macdonald's services engaged?

Mr. DOBELL. I cannot promise that ; I can only promise that the matter shall receive favourable consideration, and all the more after what the hon. member has said to the House.

Matters went on in this way. Dr. John A. Macdonald's services were not continued. He had some claims against the department for his services, but he could not get a reply in answer to his letters. I wrote myself on several occasions on his behalf. This is peculiar courtesy introduced into the Department by this new Minister. In February last, Dr. Macdonald received this letter from the department, shortly after the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) had taken charge. It will be noticed that the letter is dated 15th February, and is in reply to one sent in October by Dr. Macdonald. It is as follows :—

Department of Indian Affairs, Canada.
Ottawa, 15th February, 1897.

Sir,—With reference to your communication, dated the 6th October last, I beg to inform you that the delay in replying to the same is regretted; it was, however, unavoidable, as the Superintendent General had under consideration the subject of medical treatment, &c., to be afforded the Indians of the Salmon River Reserve, with the result that in future Dr. Bissett's services will be called upon.

In inclose herewith cheques Nos. 185 and 184, amounting respectively to $38.50 and $31.10, in payment of your accounts for professional attendance given to Indians of the above-mentioned reserve during June and September quarters, 1896. I regret the necessity for the reduction of these bills from the amounts rendered. This is, however, unavoidable, as funds are limited. You have been allowed mileage at the rate of 35 cents, in pursuance of the policy of economy.

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) HAYTER REED.

Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

John Macdonald, Esq., M.D.,

St. Peter's, Richmond County, N.S.

The scale that had been in vogue up to this date was 50 cents a mile. That was reduced by the department to 35 cents a mile. With that I have no quarrel, because it was done on the ground of economy, and I assume that the reduced scale will be continued for the future. But I want to ask the Minister how he came to change the medical attendant at St. Peter's in the face of the remonstrance sent by the Indians themselves, asking that the services of Dr. Macdonald be continued, and in the face of the statement of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), who was then representing the Indian Department in this House, that no change would be made in that service without the gravest consideration. I ask what the reason was for that change. No political reason can be assigned, because the contrary was represented by the Indians themselves. If it was on the ground of the professional efficiency of one man over the other, that cannot be set up, because the Indians themselves in their petition set forth that they have the most implicit confidence in the professional skill and ability of Dr. Macdonald, who had been in attendance upon them for twelve years previously. I ask the Minister to give me now the reason why Dr. John A. Macdonald's services were dispensed with, in the face of the remonstrance of the Indians, and in the face of the statements given and made in the fulness of Ministerial responsibility by the hon. member for Quebec West.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.

In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that the history of the particular matter to which he has referred was not brought to my attention in any way when I was dealing with the matter, and I am not able at this moment, without the correspondence before me, to say what the exact reason for the change was. I may say that I found considerable difficulty in regard to the question of medical attendance for the Indians in Nova Scotia, by reason of the fact that its cost had been constantly increasing; and steps were taken for the purpose of reducing the cost and also for the purpose of placing it on such a basis that the department would know what it was going to cost in any one year, and they would not be receiving bills for a larger amount than they had estimated for. Several suggestions were made with the view of paying for the medical attendance by salaries instead of by fees. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that a pledge was given that no change would be made; but I do not understand that anything further was promised than that the petition of the Indians would be fully considered. That was not brought to my attention, and, therefore, it was not considered before the change was made. As to the exact reason why the change was made, I am not able to say without looking at the correspondence, and, therefore, I shall have to defer giving a more definite answer until I have an opportunity of seeing the papers.

GAME LAWS OF QUEBEC.

Mr. POUPORE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) if he has heard anything further from the Quebec Government with regard to the game laws, so far as they affect the Indians in the Abbitibi district. On the 19th of May, in answer to a question, he stated that the Government intended to ask the Quebec Government to relax the game laws so far as they affected the Indians in the Témiscamingue and Abbitibi districts; and I would like to ask him if he has any further information on that subject?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no further definite information to be given; but the statement I made to the House on that subject is being carried out. An Order in Council has been passed setting forth fully the views of this Government in regard to the matter, and has been forwarded or will be forwarded in a day or two to the Quebec Government for its consideration, and I have no doubt the matter will be dealt with at a very early day.

DISMISSALS OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) whether he has reconsidered the dismissal of Mr. Tennant from the Gretna sub-collectorship. It seems to me, from the facts which have been brought before me, that this is a case in which, if the hon. Controller of Customs reconsiders the matter, he will find it very hard indeed not to remedy what he has done by reappointing Mr. Tennant. What seems to have happened is this. Mr. Hastings got a letter from Mr. Scott informing him that he had been instructed from Ottawa to dismiss him, as his services were no longer required. On inquiry, he heard that there was some charge against him of offensive partisanship; but on going over his memory he was unable to charge himself with any action whatever of a political character. The only meeting he ever attended was a meeting of local politicians, and the only thing he ever did was to reply to a statement about his co-religionists. It seems that he is a Roman Catholic, and hearing a statement made about his co-religionists, he got up and spoke about it. Any of us, if our religion were aspersed, would be inclined to do that. As we know, Roman Catholics are more sensitive than any other body of Christians, and are much more likely to resent any aspersion cast upon their religion. This case is an exceptionally hard one. Mr. Tennant has not only been a long time in the public service, but he has a wife and seven children. In a letter to John McDougald, Esq., commissioner of customs, he says :

As you are aware, I have paid superannuation for many years, and I have now to ask what amount the Government intend to offer me as a gratuity in lieu of my superannuation allowance, which, I hope you will agree, I am honestly and equitably entitled to, because of the years of service and the payments made.

On looking at these papers, I think that the Controller of Customs, instead of considering what gratuity he is to give, should consider how he could reinstate this man once more in the public service.

Now, as we are cleaning up, and as the session is drawing to a close, I will, with the permission of the Controller of Customs, before he answers that question, call the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to one or two matters. I understand that Mr. John Dobbin, of the Regina agency, has been removed. I have not yet learned why the Minister has removed him, but if he has done so on any political ground, I am quite sure that he has been misinformed, because I cannot believe for one moment that Mr. Dobbin took any part in politics. He was a strong Conservative, an Orangeman, and a strong supporter of mine; but apart from that, I do not think he took any part in politics. Since I have called the Minister's attention to the dismissal of Mr. Stemhorn, I have had a letter from him containing what I think is a reasonable request, that we should get the letter which charges him. As long as there was a Liberal opposed to me in the field, Mr. Stemhorn could not be got to speak a word in my favour. So long as Mr. Grant was in the field, he would not utter one word, because he thought that occupying the position he did as a civil servant, he should not take any part in politics when taking part would be taking a side. Afterwards the supporter of the Prime Minister withdrew, and then I was fighting, not Mr. Grant, but a Patron, and fighting, mind you, not a Patron who said he was supporting the Liberal party but a Patron who had been the other day a Conservative and who had been denouncing me for years as not sufficiently Conservative. Whenever I spoke in this House independently, he assailed, what he called, my want of loyalty to the Conservative party. Well, that gentleman came out as a Patron, and again, and again, did I try and get him to say that he was a supporter of Mr. Laurier, but failed. He would always repudiate Mr. Laurier.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the reason he was defeated.

Mr. DAVIN. I shall not go into that, but I may tell my hon. friend that Mr. Grant, who came out strong for Mr. Laurier, retired, and I think that if I could have got Mr. McInnis to come out straight as supporting the Liberal party my majority, colossal as it was, would have been still more mountainous. However, I am not going to make a political point but simply appeal to the justice of the hon. Minister and to what I hope he has behind his sense of justice, a large amount of the milk of human kindness.

Mr. FOSTER. Unwatered.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course. I hope that when he comes to consider those cases, the milk of human kindness will be all unadulterated. I would urge the hon. Minister to reconsider the case of Mr. Dobbin. A better or more faithful servant no Government ever had, just as walking this earth to-day there is no whiter soul than the soul of that same John Dobbin.

I wish also to call the attention of the hon. Minister to some dismissals up north. The last dismissal is that of Mr. Almon at Edmonton. Mr. Almon was not only a good officer but politically one of the most colourless persons you could find.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Notice was sent to Mr. Almon because I could not see that there was any necessity for two officials in addition to the agent. I consulted the member for the constituency, Mr. Oliver, and he said that one of the clerks spoke French, and it was necessary to have in the office some one who understood French, so I kept the one who did.

Mr. DAVIN. Then, I would urge, if there should be a vacancy elsewhere, the appointment of Mr. Almon. In the early part of this session I asked a question with reference to Mr. P. J. Williams, who was Indian agent at Battleford. I asked whether he had been dismissed, and why, whether Mr. C. M. Daunais had succeeded him, whether it was the same C. M. Daunais who was instructor on Red Pheasant's reserve, Battleford, why he left the department, and whether he was dismissed for immorality. The hon. First Minister gave me an answer which was copied in full in the Saskatchewan "Herald," in which he said that Mr. Williams had been dismissed and that Mr. Daunais had been appointed in his place. It seems that Williams, so far as I have been able to learn—and I have made special inquiry—is one of the most deserving servants of the Indian Department. I wish the hon. member for Russell were here, because the family of Mr. Williams is well known to my hon. friend the member for Russell. Mr. Williams is the son of a prominent farmer and a supporter of the hon. member for Russell, and went up in 1879 as farm instructor to Fort Pitt. At that time it was taking one's life in one's hand to go to Fort Pitt, and Mr. Williams was so successful that he was afterwards promoted, and I may say that with regard to the Sarcee Indians, whom he has had to deal with, that these Indians who are hard to manage, he managed with great success. Well, this man has been removed, and I am told not a very creditable substitute provided.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Williams was removed after consultation with the Indian Commissioner because he was represented to have neglected to make proper provision for the wintering of the cattle, in consequence of which neglect they lacked food and a very large number died. He was unable to give any satisfactory explanation, and upon consulting with the Indian Commissioner we decided that there was no excuse for his conduct and dispensed with his services. I do not know the gentleman and have nothing against him except the official report. His successor was appointed on consultation with the member representing the constituency and on reference to the Indian Commissioner, Mr. Forget, who for a long time has been in the Government service and enjoyed the confidence of the preceding Government as he does of the present one, and who is a most efficient officer. I asked him if he thought the person named would make a competent and efficient officer, and he unhesitatingly replied that he thought a better appointment than Mr. Daunais could not be made.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, I want to call attention to the dismissal of Mr. Justus Wilson, removed from the Red Pheasant reserve. He was a lieutenant in the volunteers at Duck Lake. I also wish to call attention to the dismissal of F. A. D. Bourke, and a man named J. C. DeGear, who, I am told, were first class men. In place of some of these we have the appointment of Maxime Lepine and Chas. Nolin. The hon. Minister is aware who Maxime Lepine is.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where was he appointed?

Mr. DAVIN. Nolin was appointed at One Arrow. Louis Marion, farm instructor, was dismissed, and Nolin appointed in his place. Maxime Lepine was appointed to another agency as farm instructor. Now, I do not want so much to speak of the men appointed as to condemn the dismissals. Louis Marion succeeded Dumas, and in 1895 was farmer to One Arrow and Beardy's Band. He was chosen because he was the best man to quiet the feelings among the Indians and succeeded admirably. In Five Hills, Mr. A. J. McNeill has been appointed agent of the Sarcees. I am told that he is related to the Minister of Marine, but I do not care if he is a good man. I know this that McNeill was sent to Sarcee and J. P. Wright was in suspense. Mr. Wright was an old agent and a most competent, honest and upright man. His agency was one of the best run and most economically managed and yet he has been dismissed and so has Keith. I knew Keith, and I must say he was a most capable man and if there is any partisanship charge against him there cannot be the least ground for it. I should like to get from the Minister of the Interior some explanations of the dismissals that have taken place on the Saskatchewan. I suppose the hon. Minister has received an account of the meeting that took place at Regina.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have heard of it.

Mr. DAVIN. So far as I know only one Conservative was at that meeting. Looking at the report in the "Free Press," every name I see is that of a prominent opponent of mine in the last election. For instance, there is Mr. J. W. Smith, Mr. McInnes, the gentleman who ran against me; Mr. Walter Scott, who is known, I think, to be a strong opponent of mine, and so on. And, at this meeting, they emphatically condemned two things. They condemned the taking away of the Indian Department—and I hope that at the suggestion of a powerful meeting of his own supporters, my hon. friend will leave the Indian Department at Regina—and they condemned the reduction of the Mounted Police. Strong resolutions were passed on these subjects. I need not read the resolutions, because, no doubt, the hon. Minister has received a report of the meeting, or it will be sent to him. These strong Reformers held that the police should be restored to its full number of 1,000 men. However, the hon. Minister (Mr. Laurier), who deals with the Mounted Police, is not present now. What I would urge at the present moment is that these representations from his supporters ought to be attended to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) and the Indian Department left at Regina.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has referred to a circumstance which illustrates the dangers which beset the path of a Minister who endeavours to effect any economy. It will be within the knowledge of hon. members who have been in this House longer than I have, that the establishment and continuance of the Indian Commissioner's Office at Regina has been under discussion before, and the advisability of its continuance there has been questioned. I found, upon looking up the evidence taken before the Civil Service Commission a few years ago, that Mr. Vankoughnet, the late Deputy Superintendent General, strongly recommended that the office should be abolished, and, upon consultation with the officers of the department and with the Commissioner himself. I came to the conclusion, a conclusion which I see no reason to change, that the large staff maintained at Regina was entirely unnecessary for the proper conduct of the business there. It is an extremely unpleasant thing for any Minister to have to dispense with the services of the employees of an office of this kind. There is nothing against the officers themselves, there is no reason why they should be retired from the service, except the simple fact that they are not required. That unpleasant duty I have had to perform. As to the question of location for the Commissioner at Regina, and the two or three assistants that he will have, I have not changed my mind on account of the receipt of the resolution which the hon. gentleman has referred to, and which, I have no doubt, as the hon. gentleman says, were passed at a meeting composed almost entirely of supporters of the Government. I have the matter under consideration yet, and it cannot be said that the decision is final. It is merely a matter of convenience to the Commissioner in transacting the duties of his office. If, after consultation with the Commissioner, I come to the conclusion that Winnipeg is a more convenient place for him to do his work, he will have to go to Winnipeg. I recognize that in connection with changes of this kind there are always sure to be difficulties. In the reduction of this staff and of the Mounted Police, no doubt the people of the North-west will see something to find fault with. The expenditure of the Government amongst themselves, is of course, something of an assistance in a territory where the towns are small. But, having made up our minds that the expenses of this department had to be reduced, I do not think that the hon. gentleman can reasonably expect that, for the purpose of avoiding a little local friction of that kind, we should allow ourselves to be deterred from carrying out a policy that we think in the interest of the department and in the interest of the country.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). As the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has referred to some dismissals in the riding which I have the honour to represent, I want to say something about these dismissals. He spoke first of Mr. P. J. Williams, the Indian agent at Battleford. I may say that Mr. Williams is quite incapacitated from looking after the Indians of his division. He is now in Ottawa and not able to do anything through illness. His office was not looked after last winter, and a great number of the cattle died, and that was the reason why Mr. Williams was removed from office. I hope the Minister will do something in the way of superannuation for Mr. Williams, seeing that he is not able to do anything to support himself. Now, the hon. member for West Assiniboia has mentioned the gentleman who succeeded Mr. Williams, Mr. C. M. Daunais, and has insinuated that he has not a very savory reputation. I can tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. Daunais has a first-class reputation. He was in the Indian Department years ago. The hon. gentleman asked if Mr. Daunais was the gentleman who was dismissed from the department on account of some charges made against him. I may say that Daunais was dismissed. He was an employee of the department, appointed during the Mackenzie Administration. Charges were trumped up against him, but no investigation was held, and he was dismissed from the service simply because he was a Liberal, and not because there was anything wrong with him. He has mentioned Mr. Justus Wilson. I may say, in connection with this case, that the object of the Government in spending so much money on the Indians of the North-west Territories is to teach the Indians to become self-supporting. If the Government employs men to teach the Indians how to farm, they should be men who know something about farming. Mr. Wilson has no knowledge of farming and never had. He hardly knows one end of a plough from another. I have seen him trying to fix up a plough when he had to send for one of the Indians to show him how to do it. I do not think that the Government would be right in keeping a man like that to teach the Indians how to farm. Another gentleman had charge of the Government cattle, and he let the cattle die. There is no reason for their dying because the settlers' cattle all around the district of Battleford came on in good shape, while the Indian Department cattle were dying like flies. We found during the administration of the late Government that on each reserve they had a man, which was not necessary. Many officers dismissed have not been replaced. Instead of having one instructor on each reserve in the Battleford district, there is only one instructor to two reserves, and that is quite enough. The hon. gentleman has referred to Mr. Louis Marion. I do not know whether he is aware that Mr. Marion was a very active partisan. But I know. Personally he was an active canvasser, and worker, and was not attending to his duties on the reserves. For that reason he was dismissed, and properly dismissed. He has also mentioned Mr. Nolin. Mr. Nolin is a practical farmer, and if he is appointed to this position, will show good results for his work. He understands farming and he understands the Indians, and he will give a good account of himself. The hon. gentleman has stated that Mr. Lepine has been appointed as Indian instructor. Such is not the case; Mr. Lepine was appointed as interpreter. It is necessary to have a half-breed as interpreter, as you cannot have anybody else who can talk with the Indians. Now, as to Mr. Keith, who was also mentioned, I do not know what has been done in this matter. I should think, however, the hon. gentleman should hesitate about bringing up this case. Mr. Forget, the Indian Commissioner, is going to investigate charges of intemperance made against Mr. Keith, and if he finds them true, no doubt he will report against him. I may draw the attention of the hon. gentleman and of the Government to the fact that Mr. Keith's house was a sort of committee room for the Conservative party, and that his clerk, Mr. Halpin, was the deputy returning officer in the June elections. He has always been a partisan of the most pronounced type. I have nothing more to say other than that the officials in my district have been treated very leniently, taking into consideration the fact that every one of them has been an active partisan. In fact, the Conservative committee in my district was composed chiefly of these gentlemen. One could hardly walk about without stumbling over officials, whose duty seemed to be simply to attend meetings and applaud the Conservative speakers. We could get on with half of them. Take, for instance, the land office in Prince Albert. We have two men drawing large salaries for the work that one man could do. Reductions could take place with the result of saving to the country a great deal of money.

Mr. DAVIN. The Controller of Customs did not answer my question regarding Mr. Tennant, the sub-collector at Gretna.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. My remembrance of that is that Mr. Tennant was dismissed, and, speaking from memory, there were very explicit and direct charges made against him by the member for that riding, and by other gentlemen. Of course, as to Mr. Tennant, personally, I know nothing of the statement that the hon. gentleman makes in reference to him. However, I will look the papers over again. I am inclined to think that the hon. gentleman does not know the whole facts of the case. I am sure a recommendation went to Council, and I acted upon the evidence I had. With reference to the superannuation, that question will be considered when we get power, because I think he has been in the service for some time.

DISMISSAL OF MR. DOBBIN—LAND OFFICE AT WINNIPEG.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a word with regard to Mr. Dobbin, who has been dismissed at Regina, and who is referred to by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). He was originally a resident of my county, and a man whose family was very much respected there, an intelligent man, and very attentive to his duties, and a man who, I am quite sure, would not be a partisan anywhere. I am told that the place that he occupied must be filled by some one, therefore his services could not have been dispensed with for reasons of economy. If the place is to be filled again, I respectfully submit that no better man could be put in the position than Mr. Dobbin. While I am on my feet I would like to say a few words with regard to doing away with the Indian agency at Regina and the land office at Winnipeg. I remember some years ago, when it was difficult to settle troubles in that country, both in regard to the Interior and to the Indian agency. Applications were made down here, members of Parliament were written to, and when you went to the department, the department was obliged to get a report from some of its agents in the North-west, and it took a long time before the information was available here upon which they could deal with the cases. From time to time, requests came from the people of that country, from those who were doing business in the interests of the settler, that the Government would establish a land agency in Winnipeg and an Indian agency somewhere in the North-west. At last the Government established an agency there. I know, as a member of Parliament, something of the difficulties that took place in connection with the original settlers in that country. It was a great convenience to the original settlers when the land office was established in Winnipeg. It was an easy matter for the agency there to send out some person to investigate the claims, and report upon them in a short time. The cases were dealt with much more satisfactorily than they could be dealt with by the department in Ottawa. I think it was one of the best improvements made in the Interior Department, when the land agency was established in Winnipeg. It gave great satisfaction to the settlers, because they could apply to that agency when they could not deal directly with headquarters here. So also with those dealing with the Indians out there. I know it saved us writing a great many letters, and relieved us of much work that we had to do before that time. In my judgment, it was not in the interests of the people up there to do away with the land agency, nor do I think it will conduce to the best management of the department to have the work done down here. I have no doubt that the Minister meant to do what was right, and that he thought he was acting in the public interest and the efficiency of the service; but I think he will find in a short time that the same work which was done there can still be done there more easily and to better advantage, and to the greater satisfaction of the people, than it can possibly be done down here.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say to the hon. gentleman that careful observation of the correspondence between the commissioner's office at Regina and the office here, and the commissioner's office at Winnipeg and the office here, shows that the work is simply duplicated; that the officers there cannot and do not take the responsibility of acting in matters of importance, and it simply means that the work is duplicated. In many instances the establishment of the office there and the fact that there is a commissioner's office there rather delays the performance of the work than otherwise; because, instead of reports coming in directly here and being dealt with here, they go to the commissioner there, and if the matter is important, he refers to the head office, the head office has to write back to the commissioner, and the commissioner has to transact the business there. But it is necessary, in the case of Indians, to have a responsible office there, and to have a commissioner there to deal with matters as they arise. That office will be still carried on, the commissioner will be there; that which is being abolished is the large staff which practically carries on a duplication of the work that has been done down here.

Mr. SPROULE. Speaking with reference to the land office in Winnipeg, my experience is that many difficulties are settled up there without referring them to headquarters afterwards.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend the Minister did not say anything with regard to Mr. Dobbin. He is a gentleman with whom I have been acquainted for a long time, he goes from my own constituency. I hope that my hon. friend will deal with him as leniently as possible, because I am quite sure that he is a very good officer.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It seems to me that Mr. Dobbin has a great many friends among hon. gentlemen opposite, he evidently is very popular there. The report I got indicated that in the election he was trying to make himself still more popular, and the evidence to that effect was very strong. But I want to make it clear that, on the other hand, there is nothing to reflect upon Mr. Dobbin's character, either as an officer or as a citizen. When a man is dismissed for political partisanship, I think he is entitled to such a declaration as this, and I cheerfully make it. But I must say to my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) that the evidence which was laid before me, while there was not a formal investigation, was very clear. I think that the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) must have been wilfully shutting his eyes to what was going on in the neighbouring office of the committee at Regina, and that he did not know that Mr. Dobbin was taking the active part in the election. In fact, I am surprised at the lack of knowledge of the hon. gentleman as to what was going on in his neighbourhood at Regina. But, knowing, as I do, that the member for Western Assiniboia is a man of truth and veracity, and that he would not mislead the House, I am compelled to come to the conclusion that he adopted the tactics of the ostrich and hid his head in the sand while some of these things were going on. As to Mr. Dobbin, I am quite prepared to say that, so far as I recollect, nobody has yet been placed in his position. In view of what my hon. friends have said, I am prepared to look into the matter again, and if the evidence is not conclusive, I am prepared to reconsider my action.

Mr. DAVIN. I may say to the Minister that I never saw Mr. Dobbin in a committee room.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has really no right to speak again—nothing more than a word or two.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has spoken several times, he is wasting the time of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the leader of the House when I may expect to get those poor neglected returns of mine that I asked for on April 5th and May 3rd respectively.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I suppose he alludes to those he mentioned in a note to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I admit that the hon. gentleman ought to have these returns. I will endeavour to get them for him.

Mr. MARTIN. I would remind the Minister of Public Works of an order of the House passed some time ago for returns which the hon. gentleman promised to lay on the Table.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is it?

Mr. MARTIN. It is an order for papers and correspondence in reference to Belle River Breakwater. The Minister promised to lay the return on the Table of the House a few days ago, and I am sorry to say he has not done so. I trust that this return will be a little more complete than some other returns that I have asked for from the Government. I hope the Minister of Public Works will include all the correspondence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTIN. Including, if possible, a letter which I wrote to the department about a week ago.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Immigration—Salaries of agents and employees in Canada..... $35,000

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) why Captain Holmes has not been employed as immigration agent this year? He was at the head of the staff in the United States, and I think did some good work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. Holmes was not in the employ of the department, so far as I know, when I took charge of it. In arranging for the work in the United States I selected the men as a rule with whom the department was acquainted, and Mr. Holmes, as far as I know, made no application for service, and his name was not officially brought before me at all; I am satisfied upon that.

Mr. WILSON. Captain Holmes was in the regular employ of the department as immigration agent, for years, I believe. He had charge of the work in the United States for some two or three years.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He must have been dispensed with before I took charge, as his case never came before me. Of course I was aware from current newspaper reports, that Captain Holmes was in the employ of the department, but he was not in the employ when I took charge.

Mr. WILSON. Is there any correspondence in the department from Captain Holmes with reference to his being employed this season again? I understood he had written to the department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If there is I am not aware of it. I never remember having Captain Holmes's name before me.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Minister make some inquiry about it, and let the House know at an early day?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the Minister give us the names of the agents employed in Canada, where they are employed, and their salaries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The officers whose salaries are chargeable to this item are as follows:—J. A. Kirk, Halifax, salary $1,200.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that the place offered to Mr. Ross, and which he refused?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In whose place?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In the place of Mr. E. M. Clay, who was removed on account of the results of the investigation which took place with regard to the accounts of the institution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman state what was wrong with the accounts?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A charge was made by one of the men connected with the institution, that Mr. Clay had been guilty of some embezzlement in connection with the accounts of the immigration building there. A commission was issued to investigate the charges, and the result was, that it was proven that accounts had been falsified by Mr. Clay. I was, therefore, compelled to remove him from the position.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have been informed that the facts were: That Mr. Clay had made a charge for cleaning the office and doing certain things of that kind, and as the work had been performed by his wife, he did not wish to have his wife's name appear in the account, and so the name of a servant was substituted. But there was nothing wrong so far as the public money was concerned, as this money was actually paid for the purpose for which it was intended. It was a proceeding which has not been confined to Mr. Clay alone in the past. He substituted the name of another person when drawing the money.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Several charges were made, and the charge which was clearly proven was something in the nature of that referred to by the leader of the Opposition. It was not shown upon the investigation, that the amount of money that was paid by the department had been expended, or that value had been given for it. It was simply shown that the agent had put in a fictitious name, but it was not shown that work was done to the amount charged. It is perfectly clear to my mind, that the transaction was improper, and was one which the Government cannot possibly overlook. I may say, that there was no pressure of any kind brought on me to dismiss this gentleman, and I did it most reluctantly. There was no desire to remove him to make place for anybody else, and I had no knowledge of the man except that I saw his name in the lists of the officials of the department. He was reported, I believe, to be a good officer. It was in the knowledge of all the other officers in connection with that institution, that there had been some crookedness in connection with the accounts, and I could not see how it would be possible that we could expect the officials to be careful in their dealings, if this offence were allowed to go. There were circumstances connected with the case which made it most unpleasant to take the course I did, but unfortunately I had to do so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) used rather a strong term when he said "embezzlement." These accounts amounted to a very small expenditure, and the explanation given to me is such as I have given to the House: That the work had actually been done for which the money was charged, but the name or another person had been used in order to avoid the name of Mr. Clay's wife appearing in the accounts. I can say that Mr. Clay is the son of a very highly respectable man, that his connections are of a very respectable character, and that so far as I have any opportunity of knowing him, he was a most painstaking, efficient and energetic officer, who always attended to the discharge of his duties. I am very sorry that any question of the kind should have arisen.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall proceed to give the names to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule). T. E. Clay, clerk, Halifax, salary $720; M. Kennedy, caretaker, Halifax, salary $410.62; Charles Stemshorne, guardian, Halifax, $228; William Evans, Gideon Martin, W. H. Corrigan, guardians, salary $228; Mrs. Cullen, matron, salary $300; Joseph Martin, nightwatchman, salary $480; F. Gardner, St. John, N.B., salary $740; P. C. Doyle, agent, Quebec, salary $1,400; L. Stein, clerk, Quebec, salary $1,200; Wm. Anderson, interpreter, Quebec, salary $730; John P. Stafford, Quebec, salary $912; T. Lamontagne, clerk, Quebec, salary $900; F. O'Reilly, messenger, Quebec, salary $456.25; Edward Talbot, chief guardian, Quebec, salary $700; T. M. Deschene, guardian, Quebec, salary $456.25; three guardians, namely, E. Galarneau, Marc Lessard, James Fitzgerald, salaries $388.25; Mrs. Corneil, matron, salary $600; John Hoolahan, agent, Montreal, $1,200; Joseph Daigle, salary $1,200; A. Rachimbai, messenger, $700; J. M. McGovern, agent, Port Arthur, salary $1,000; W. F. McCreary, commissioner at Winnipeg, $2,200; W. G. King, clerk of statistics, Winnipeg, $1,200; John W. Wendelbo, interpreter, $800; Charles Hislop, clerk and caretaker, $800; Miss K. Duff, clerk, $540; Dr. S. C. Corbett, medical officer, $600; Leon Roy, French interpreter, $900; C. W. Speers, agent at Brandon, $1,500; W. Braun, clerk and caretaker at Brandon, $800; C. W. Sutter, agent at Calgary, $1,200; John Cushing, caretaker at Calgary, $600; Thos. Bennett, clerk at Edmonton, $720; J. Moat, caretaker at Dauphin, $400; A. Akerlinah, interpreter, &c., at Ottawa, $1,000. I was asked the other day, when this item came up, to specify the changes which have been made, that is to say, to name the men who have been placed in the positions of others who have been dismissed. John Cushing, caretaker at Calgary, has replaced C. F. Herbert. The cause of the dismissal of Mr. Herbert was active political partisanship. At Montreal H. Hurteau and A. J. Charlebois have been removed, and Joseph Daigle has been appointed in place of them. Mr. Daigle had the qualifications which would enable him to perform all the duties required. The medical officer at Winnipeg has been changed. The officer was appointed not as a permanent official, his services being simply called in as required. Dr. Gray was removed when Dr. Corbett was appointed. A French interpreter at Winnipeg, G. P. Cloutier, was removed, and Leon Roy appointed in his place. The cause of Mr. Cloutier's dismissal was that he devoted a large part of his time to political work. At Quebec three guardians, men who were employed temporarily and were paid by the day, named Hamel, Lepine and Mullins, were removed, and three others named Deschene, Galarneau and Lessard put in their positions.

Mr. BERGERON. What were the salaries of Hurteau and Charlebois, why were they dismissed, by whom were they replaced, and at what salary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Hurteau and Charlebois were removed, and Joseph Daigle was put in the position. Daigle receives $800. I have not a memorandum of the salaries paid to the two officers whom he replaced, but if I remember rightly they amounted to about $1,200.

Mr. BERGERON. Why were they dismissed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were removed because it was believed that there was no necessity for two officials there—that a man who was able to perform the work of a clerk efficiently could perform the duties of both; and the change was made accordingly.

Mr. BERGERON. In Quebec I understand that three guardians were also replaced. What were their salaries, and by whom were they replaced?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The salaries are the same. They were men whose employment was merely of a temporary character, and under these circumstances I thought it was quite proper for me to place men in those positions who were friends and supporters of the Government.

Mr. MONK. Was there any complaint at all against Charlebois or Hurteau?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. None whatever. The information I have received from the officers of the department was that Charlebois was appointed on the day before the election on the 23rd of June, or within two or three days of it. I inquired and ascertained that that was the fact, and the indications were that Charlebois had been placed there at that critical period for political reasons, and not because there was any special duty for him to perform.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know much about Charlebois, but I can tell my hon. friend that Hurteau was appointed ten years ago.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was speaking about Charlebois.

Mr. MONK. The charge is that Charlebois was appointed on the eve of the election. I think the Minister might have taken the trouble to investigate that charge, because it is not true. He was appointed a considerable time before the election, and he was a perfectly qualified civil servant, and there was no complaint against him.

Mr. BERGERON. If I understand the Minister, the three guardians at Quebec were dismissed because they were Conservatives, and they were replaced by three Liberals.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be well if the hon. Minister could give us the number of agents employed in Halifax before, and the number employed there now, and the same information with regard to the other places. The list of names he has given us does not afford information on which to base a comparison.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been no change in that respect, so far as I am aware. Some men have been taken on at Quebec and some at Lévis, at the request of the officials in charge, who stated that it was necessary to do so at this period of the year; but there has been no change in the organization or in the number of officials, so far as I am aware. I have not had time to overhaul the system for the purpose of satisfying myself whether or not the work can be done with fewer officials.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the same at the other stations—Montreal, Port Arthur, Winnipeg, and Brandon?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was one officer at Port Arthur, and there is one now. At Winnipeg the organization has been changed altogether. The work was done by some employees at the immigration building, who were under the charge of the Commissioner of Dominion lands, and the papers connected with immigration were kept in his office. One of the changes I thought it necessary to make at once was to separate the Dominion lands work and the immigration work. The officials connected with the Dominion lands office are not men who naturally take an interest in immigration work, or who can devote their time fully to it; and after some conversation with Mr. Smith, the late commissioner of Dominion lands, which indicated the difficulty he had in looking after the immigration work, I became fully satisfied that it was quite impossible to handle the immigration work properly unless there was an officer there who had not other matters on his mind, or other duties to perform; and the operations of the staff this spring have fully justified the change. The staff employed under the new commissioner, Mr. McCreary, has been very fully occupied—in fact, has been hardly able to keep up with the work in connection with the new immigrants coming in. The staff is partly composed of the men I have named, and partly of new officials. In as much as the work was done hitherto largely through the Commissioner of Dominion lands and his staff, it is not possible to make a comparison.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. McCreary the mayor of the city of Winnipeg, and Mr. King an alderman of the city of Winnipeg?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McCreary is mayor of Winnipeg; Mr. King is not an alderman.

Mr. FOSTER. Is any other official in Winnipeg an official of the city?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not that I know of. Referring to the point raised by the hon. gentleman, which is quite worthy of consideration of the committee, I had great difficulty in selecting a person who I thought would give complete satisfaction in that position. Mr. McCreary's acceptance of the position implied that he would not accept the position of mayor in future.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume those men employed in the land office and doing the double duties of that office and as immigration agents would have more knowledge of the work and that, therefore, the hon. Minister, when reorganizing his office, would avail himself of the services of those men who were discharged from the land office, as far as possible, by putting them in the immigration office. I presume they would be more valuable for that work than new men coming in. How many men employed in the land office previously are now employed in the immigration office?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where men with some special qualifications are not required in the immigration office, I am making use of men from the lands office. For instance, the gentleman referred to by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), Mr. Perrin, I have given a position to in the immigration office. And where it is possible to make use of the services of any gentlemen in the commissioner's office, I am doing so. James W. Wendelbo and Miss Duff are employees who are being kept on. Mr. King, clerk of statistics, is a man who speaks four or five languages and able to converse with any European immigrant who comes in. One or two of the other men are also employed for special reasons. Generally speaking, I have filled vacancies in the immigration office with men from the Commissioner of Dominion lands' office, which is to be abolished.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

In the case at Halifax, I believe the offence alleged to have been committed is one that was committed several years ago. If the facts were such as the hon. Minister has mentioned, no great complaint could be made of his action, but how does it contrast with his appointment as immigration agent of a man branded by the Supreme Court of his own province as a perjurer. I refer to the case of Mr. W. J. King, who swore to an affidavit which enabled a petition to be presented against the return of one of the members of this House, and who, on being cross-examined as to the contents of that affidavit, gave such evidence that the court forthwith ordered all further proceedings to be stayed on the ground that the statements sworn to by this man were false, and that the action taken on his affidavit was an abuse of the procedure of the court. That was the case of King versus W. J. Roche, one of the members of this House, and that affidavit was made as recently as the 23rd of December last. The judges unanimously decided that the affidavit of Mr. King, since appointed one of the hon. gentleman's immigration agents, was false and made the order to which I have referred. That case excited considerable comment.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). As much as the ballot box stuffing did.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Whether the offence was ballot-box stuffing or perjury, the House should give its expression of opinion on the appointment of any person guilty of such a criminal offence or, otherwise, there might be no limit to such appointments. When the hon. Minister asks the House to support him in dismissing an officer for conduct, criminal or quasi-criminal, he is bound to explain to us how it is he came to appoint such a man as Mr. King to any office in his department.

Mr. SIFTON.

Under an amendment to the Election Act, passed some sessions ago, the petitioner must swear that he believes that each and every allegation set out in the petition signed by him is true. In this case of King versus Roche, the petitioner practically charged the respondent with having violated every section of the law, and he subscribed to the affidavit that he believed and had reason to believe that each and every allegation of his petition was true. On examination he had to admit that he knew nothing of the matter, that he had no reason for believing that any one of the charges was true, and that he had not even read the petition, to the truth of which he had sworn. He confessed sufficiently to be practically branded as a perjurer by the court, and the judges unanimously dismissed the petition and declared that to take any action upon such an affidavit was an abuse of the procedure of the court.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If a statement such as that which has just been made by the hon. gentleman had been made by a gentleman who had not the advantage of legal training, I would not be, perhaps, very much surprised; but I must confess to my astonishment at hearing a gentleman who has occupied the very high position of Minister of Justice make the statement that this man King was branded by the Supreme Court of the province of Manitoba as a perjurer. The facts show that there is no foundation whatever for any such statement. In order that a man be guilty of perjury, he must have made a statement on oath, not only that was untrue, but that he knew was untrue. And I put it to any lawyer in this committee if it would not be a most absurd and ridiculous contention to hold that any man who makes an affidavit and who should, upon cross-examination be shown not to have been fully aware of all the facts which would furnish sufficient ground for that affidavit, was a wilful and corrupt perjurer? There is no lawyer who knows anything of the proceedings of the courts who does not know that it would be perfectly absurd to lay down any such doctrine. No doubt Mr. King was culpably careless in connection with the matter; but every lawyer who has any practice knows that, under those circumstances, the blame would very largely lie, not with the man himself, but with the solicitor, under whose advice and direction he gave the affidavit. Men engaged in litigation know that most constantly affidavits are made by litigants with regard to proceedings, the tenor and effect and meaning of which they do not understand. Of course, it is careless on the part of clients to do so, but it is none the less the fact that conscientious and honest men often do it. They go into a lawyer's office, they look the paper over, and the counsel in whom they have confidence advises them that it is a correct statement.

It is couched in legal language which very often they cannot understand, setting forth certain facts which must be deposed to. Why, even when the most honest men make affidavits, you cannot absolutely rely upon them as full and correct statement of facts, and we have, therefore, provided for cross-examination. Our law provides that any man who makes an affidavit may be cross-examined about it. There is no lawyer of the least experience who does not know that it is of every-day occurrence for men who have made affidavits to be cross-examined and to find out that they have made misleading affidavits without, perhaps, having had the slightest intention of so doing, and to lay down the doctrine that a man who makes an affidavit under the advice of his solicitor and who, under cross-examination, the court decides had not sufficient grounds for making it, is a wilful and corrupt perjurer, is to lay down a doctrine which has not the slightest foundation, and I do not think that any member of the legal profession, in a calm, unbiassed frame of mind, not desirous of making a political point against an opponent, would think of submitting a proposition of that kind.

I have known this man King for a number of years. He was appointed by me if my recollection is correct, before this judgment was given by the Court of Queen's Bench—certainly before this judgment was drawn to my attention. He was appointed by me solely and entirely for what I believe to be his peculiar fitness for the duties of his office. He was a civil engineer by profession, had spent years in various countries, had been a farmer in Manitoba and had had the benefit of a varied experience in knocking about the world, besides having command of several languages. My attention was drawn to this matter to which my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has referred, and I looked over the proceedings and judgment of the court for the purpose of ascertaining the ground for supposing that the man had not been guilty of any direct or intentional impropriety. I could not see that there was the slightest proof of anything of the kind, and I say now that, so far from agreeing with my hon. friend from Pictou, I think that the charge he makes is unwarranted; and if he will read the proceedings carefully I am sure he will see there is no ground for making the charge that this man had been branded by the Supreme Court of Manitoba as a perjurer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am rather surprised, indeed actually pained, that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has taken such a light view of the case which I have drawn to his attention. I am satisfied that he cannot lay the evidence given for that court by King before his own colleague the present Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) and bring down to this House a report from the Minister of Justice that will support his own view of the conduct of King. I undertake to say that the Attorney General in almost any province outside of Manitoba would, in a similar case, consider it his duty to proceed against the man for perjury. I have read every line of it, and I say that not only does he there disclose what the Minister himself has admitted to be culpable negligence in connection with an affidavit which it seems to me, and I think will strike most lawyers in this House as sufficient to support a charge of perjury—but he is forced to admit that he knew nothing in reference to the statements that were made and could give not the slightest shadow of an excuse for having stated that he believed these different charges to be true. For the hon. Minister, himself a member of the bar, to suggest that where a man has made a reckless affidavit, false from beginning to end, he is not to be held guilty of perjury, the man says that he subscribed his name to the affidavit because counsel drew it, and that he swore to the statements because he was advised by counsel to swear to them, is something entirely novel to me. I venture to say that no member of the bar in this House, on either side of it, will agree with the hon. Minister in the opinion he has so quickly given. I hope that, on reflection, he himself will withdraw that statement. It is very well for his colleague, the Minister of Justice, to be dealing with the criminal law in the other Chamber, but what is the use of criminal legislation if a colleague in this House of the Minister of Justice is to be permitted to say that it is no offence but only an irregularity for a man to swear to an affidavit false from beginning to end, so long as he is advised by counsel to swear to it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is the purport of the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sifton's) argument. If not, what was there in it? Why did he take me to task? Can he deny the statement I make that King swore to the truth of a petition without knowing or being able to give any reason for the statement that the facts alleged were true? Can he deny that King himself confessed that he made this affidavit without taking any trouble to inquire into the actual facts of the case? Or can he deny, or does he deny, that the judges to whom I have referred, characterized that affidavit as dishonest? And will he tell me that the judges were right in characterizing that affidavit as dishonest and that there was culpable negligence on the part of King in making it, and then say that all the elements that constitute the crime of perjury were not present? It is a novel doctrine that the Minister has assumed to lay down to-day, and I hold that it is making entirely too light of so serious an offence. There are the facts that will not down; there are the facts that inform the Minister that this man whom he appointed, and whose appointment he now justifies, was branded, not by me, but by the court of his own province as a perjurer. And with the facts stated in court, it was the bounden duty of the Attorney General, the late colleague of the Minister of the Interior, to prosecute him. But instead of that officer doing his duty, we are now told that the offence was one of carelessness only, and that the man who commits an offence characterized by the judges of the land as amounting to dishonesty, is entitled to recognition at the hands of the Department of the Interior and that any member of the House who stands up and protests against conduct of that kind is to be twitted with having no knowledge of the criminal law. The only reason that can be quoted why this man should not be called a perjurer should have induced the hon. Minister to refrain from speaking of another officer as an embezzler—the fact that he has not been convicted after trial. It is true that the man was not convicted in the ordinary course, but certainly he should have been given an opportunity to clear his skirts of this serious charge fastened upon him by the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba, before being put in a position of trust under the Crown.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before you take up the next resolution—though it is not strictly regular—I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the Minister of the Interior to a rather disturbing telegram from Winnipeg which has been published in the "Free Press," and in regard to which I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to relieve the public mind. The telegram, with its heading, is as follows:—

INDIANS ON THE WARPATH.

More of Them Killing Cattle in the North.

Mounted Police Out.

Efforts Being Made for a Voluntary Surrender. Special to the "Free Press."

Winnipeg, June 14.—An unofficial despatch yesterday from Regina stated that Indians yesterday killed all the cattle on the farm of Mr. Gerudon, near Duck Lake, and then went to another farm, where they contented themselves with threats. In consequence of the report, a detachment of eight police and a corporal left Regina to proceed to the spot, where they will join a small detachment recently sent to Nut Lake. An official report from Regina, received at an early hour this morning, says the later news about the Indians up north is to the effect, that it is not known positively that any cattle were killed, though it is highly probable. The Indians belonged to the reserve where Almighty Voice was living. They complained they did not receive rations and had no food; therefore, they left the reservation to dig roots, and it is believed they did not hesitate to kill cattle. These facts were telegraphed by Commissioner Herchmer to Commissioner Forget to-day. He is on a west-bound train, and reported from Swift Current, that if the men would go back to the reserve, they would be fed. Inspector Wilson, at Duck Lake, has, therefore, been instructed by wire that the police will endeavour to persuade the Indians to go back to the reserve. Only those Indians who have been cattle-killing or stealing have been arrested. Every effort will be used to induce a voluntary surrender.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

My object in drawing the attention of the hon. gentleman to this matter is the hope that he may have some information to relieve the anxiety which will naturally arise and avoid the injury that would be caused by the publication broadcast over the country of statements calculated to produce the impression that the Indians are in an uneasy condition, and that there is apprehension of trouble.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When the disturbance took place caused by the attempt to capture the Indian, Almighty Voice, I sent instructions to the Commissioner, Mr. Forget, that he was to keep me fully advised with regard to any possibility of difficulty or turbulence amongst the Indians, and he replied that he would keep me fully advised by telegram. I have not received any advice from him in regard to this particular matter, and I am perfectly satisfied, from my knowledge of Mr. Forget's carefulness in carrying out my instructions and also his competency, that there can be nothing serious or else I would have been advised. The fact that I have received no official telegram is, to my mind, conclusive evidence that there is no such difficulty as that to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). As this difficulty occurred in my riding, I may state that I am in constant communication with people there. I am satisfied that there is no such difficulty as reported. There was a rumour that the Indians had killed certain numbers of cattle, but on investigation, it was found that there was nothing in it. It arose from a mistake in the wording of a telegram, which should have read that the Indians are disturbing cattle. The police investigated the matter and found that there was nothing in it. But after an occurrence of the kind, and the exploits of Almighty Voice, the settlers do feel a little nervous. I think it would be well for the Indians to be kept on the reserves and that rations should be given them, especially the Indians on the reserves of One Arrows and Nut Lake.

Immigration—Salaries of agents and employees in Great Britain ..... $25,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a large increase in this item over last year. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to give us the names of the agents employed, where they are employed, and their salaries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The names of the agents employed in Great Britain and Ireland, and their salaries, are as follows:—C. R. Devlin, headquarters at Dublin, salary, $2,000, new appointment.

Referring to the remarks of Sir Charles Tupper a few moments ago, I may say that I hold in my hand a telegram received from Commissioner Herchmer, of the Mounted Police, indicating that there is no serious difficulty of any kind, and that the reports have been exaggerated.

Edward O'Kelly, agent, employed for the south and west of Ireland, salary $120 per month. W. L. Griffith, Wáles, salary $1,200. Alfred Jury, $150 a month; directed to work mostly in the north of England, reporting to the office at Liverpool.

Mr. BERGERON. Why are some employed by the month and others by the year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Perhaps I was wrong. The engagements are all by the month, except Mr. Devlin's, who is hired by the year.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the difference between engagements by the month and those by the year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Those who are supposed to be employed more or less in a temporary way, and whose services it may be desired to dispense with during the year, or to remove from duty, we employ by the month, so that we may not give them any tenure of office. Thomas Duncan, working from Glasgow, $100 per month. John Dyke, who has been in the service of the department for a long time, $3,200. G. H. Mitchell, clerk in the office at Liverpool, $958 per annum.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad you still retain Mr. Dyke.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is still in the employ of the service. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I have under consideration the question of the retention of Mr. Dyke's services; and if it is possible, I will have him come over here that I may consult with him with regard to the matter. I am desirous of retaining his services if he is able to perform the duties that will be required of him. I fully recognize the fact that Mr. Dyke's long services in the Government require consideration at our hands, and from the fact that he has great experience in immigration matters, we desire to retain his services. Then there is Mr. E. Rothweiler, clerk in the office at Liverpool, who gets $379.60 a year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is there an increase in the salary of Mr. Mitchell? Mr. Mitchell is a very able as well as indefatigable officer, his services are of the greatest value, and I would be extremely glad if it had been possible for the hon. gentleman to increase his salary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have decided to increase his salary from the 1st of July, but I have not finally decided as to how much the increase will be. Then there is Thomas Grahame, Glasgow, an officer who has been for years in the employment of the Government, $2,151. He is still retained in the employ of the Government, but correspondence is going on as to the question of his retirement. John Webster, working in the north of Ireland, a new appointment, $900. E. J. Wood, Birmingham, $1,200; W. G. Stuart, Inverness, $1,200; P. Fleming, Dundee, $1,200; E. McLeod, junior clerk in the office at Liverpool, $126 a year. Those are the officers in Great Britain and Ireland.

It being Six o'clock, the Committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Wood (Hamilton):

That Mr. Speaker leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee on Bill (No. 99) respecting the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company.

Mr. McALISTER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). The hon. gentleman has already made his speech on this matter. He talked an hour the other night.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) has the floor.

Mr. MORRISON. With the hon. gentleman's permission, I would ask a favour of the House, and that is that No. 66 on the Order paper be permitted to be proceeded with. It will only take a very few moments.

Mr. SPROULE. You cannot change the Order paper like that.

Mr. MORRISON. I am asking the permission of the House. It will only take a short time. I am afraid if that is not done, I may not get another chance of taking up my Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course the hon. gentleman cannot intervene without the consent of the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister).

Mr. McALISTER. I consent, with the condition that I may go on afterwards.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I shall object to any other Bill being taken up till this Bill is disposed of.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, that puts an end to the proposal.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I appeal to the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) to allow these Bills to get through. Afterwards we are very anxious to hear his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Hamilton has objected.

Mr. McALISTER. If the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has any interest in that Bill, I would like to hear it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have no interest in that Bill, but I have an interest in some of the others. I think we can get the hon. member for Hamilton to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). No, you cannot.

Mr. MORRISON. With the hon. gentleman's permission again—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think this ought to go on all the time. The hon. member for Hamilton has objected to changing the order.

Mr. MORRISON. I think if the hon. member had a moment to reflect upon the consequences of taking this step, he would withdraw his objection. The only motive he can have in objecting to these Bills being heard now is that it may take up time which he might have to consider his Bill. Now, I would point out to him that it does not at all lessen his chances by granting this indulgence. I am sure there is no member in this House who can afford to stand strictly upon his rights, as the hon. member is doing, because they are not disputed. I am only asking the hon. member now for an indulgence which he may in a short time desire for himself.

Mr. SPEAKER. Has the hon. member a motion to make? If so, I will put the motion.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that order 63 be now proceeded with.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I object in toto to any Bill taking precedence of the Bill that is under my charge. The hon. gentleman opposite objected in the first place, because my Bill was not printed in French; then he talked it out on the second reading. Next, he occupied the whole time in the committee when it was in committee. Then on the motion to go into committee, he talked it out another hour; his sole object is to talk the Bill out. I do not think that it is fair that an arrangement should be made between that hon. gentleman and any other hon. gentleman in the House to put my Bill to one side and to take up other Bills. The only chance of getting this Bill through is in maintaining its position on the Order paper, and I think I have a right to do that.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman objects to this motion being passed; therefore, I rule that it is lost, and we will proceed with the order.

Mr. McALISTER. In reply to the hon. member for Hamilton I may say that I did oppose this Bill all through. I did not offer any factious opposition to it. It is a Bill that has no right in this Parliament, as I think I will show before I am through. I did not occupy the time of the Railway Committee, nor half the time, when this Bill was before it. The greater part of the time was taken up by the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Wood) and his friends. I do not find fault with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood) for supporting his Bill, but he should not impute improper motives to me for opposing it. It is my privilege and right to oppose, and I shall avail of that privilege. When you left the Chair on Friday evening, Mr. Speaker, I had just read a unanimous protest against this Bill which was entered by the municipal council of the county of Restigouche. That protest clearly shows that my opposition to the Bill is not factious and that it is not prompted by any party spirit. It shows that there is a strong feeling in the county against the Bill, and it shows that I am only carrying out the request and the desire of the constituents whom I have the honour to represent. The request made in that protest is to defer the consideration of the Bill until next session, is not unreasonable, and when such a unanimous protest against legislation is entered by any constituency it ought to be treated with respect by this House. The county of Victoria represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Costigan) is equally opposed to the passage of this measure. I characterized, the other night, certain statements contained in a circular distributed amongst members, as untrue and misleading in every respect. One statement in that circular is, that over $20,000 has been spent in surveys on this railway. Now, as a matter of fact the Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company spent in surveys only $2,375, and in addition to that they paid $2,000 to the old company for the work they had done. The company transferred the charter without asking one cent, but they asked that they should be reimbursed the two thousand dollars spent in surveys. In face of that, the president of the company and others interested make the statement in this circular, that there was $20,000 expended. We find the following names attached to that circular:—Francis R. Boselly, president; Herbert C. Secord, secretary; George de Mets, Edmund A. Charters, Wm. Murray, and the contractors, Pigott and Ingles. I am much surprised to find that Mr. Pigott, whom I have met and formed a very favourable opinion of, should attach his name to statements which he could know nothing about. I thought he was a straight and upright man, and the fact of his signing such a circular as this does not elevate him in my opinion. The Restigouche and Western got a charter granted by the local legislature of New Brunswick at its last session on the 6th of March, 1897. There is no question about that charter being in existence, and those who are supporting this Bill admit it. The Restigouche and Victoria Railway Company are claiming that they have a charter which is in force. That charter was passed on the 21st of April, 1894, and it therefore lapsed on the 23rd of April last. That charter provided that all the necessary surveys should be made within three years of the passing of the Act, and I have already shown that only 35 miles out of 110 miles was surveyed. In support of my contention, I will read a letter from the Hon. H. R. Emmerson, commissiomer of board of works for the province of New Brunswick. Mr. Mott one of the local representatives wrote to him in the month of May last asking his opinion as to the validity of the plans that were filed in his department on the 21st of April, which was the very last day allowed by the Act, and the Hon. Mr. Emmerson, replied as follows:—

Dorchester, May 21st, 1897.

My Dear Mott,—With reference to the Restigouche and Victoria Colonization Road, I can only say that the plans filed are not at all in accordance with the requirements of the Act, and it would seem to me that the charter lapsed. If it were not for the new Act passed at the last session, you would, in my opinion, be unable to go on with the road; that, of course, would enable you to do so.

The Hon. Mr. Emmerson says that, in his opinion, the charter lapsed, as the plans filed were not at all in accordance with the requirements of the Act. I think considerable importance should be attached to his report from any point of view. Now, what does this Bill ask? It asks us to confirm the local charter of 1885, and its amendments. Section 2 of this Bill provides:

The company, as now organized and constituted under the statutes of New Brunswick, is hereby declared to be a body corporate and politic within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada.

If the charter of the local legislature is dead, I ask how can you confirm a dead charter? Unless you put life into that dead body, how can you clothe it with powers? You cannot do so; and therefore I contend that this Bill, in asking us, not to revive, but merely to confirm a dead charter, is entirely out of place, and this Parliament has no right to take it into consideration at all. The last charter, granted in 1897, is, beyond question, in force; but here is a charter which we contend is dead, and as soon as the charter lapses, the company under it ceases to have any powers whatever. But for the sake of argument let us admit, that there is a doubt whether the charter is dead or not. If there is a doubt, why should this Parliament pass legislation of a doubtful character? But I will go further, and take for granted that the charter is still in existence. If it is still in existence, it will continue in existence for three years longer.

The section I refer to provides that all the necessary surveys on the whole line must be made within three years, and the work shall be commenced within six years. If the charter remains in force for three years longer, and this legislation is refused, no injustice will be done to the Restigouche and Victoria Company, and they will not be denied any privilege that they should have. If their charter is in existence, they will have the same rights and privileges that they ever had; and why should this Parliament interfere with local legislation and confirm this charter. I trust that this House will not attempt to pass any legislation of such a doubtful character. If this Bill is passed, it will be doing an injustice to the counties of Restigouche and Victoria; it will be doing an injustice to the new company, the Restigouche and Western Company, and to all parties connected with it; it will be doing an injustice to the province of New Brunswick; it will be overriding legislation passed by the legislature of New Brunswick because that is what it practically does. The promoters of this Bill said: "We will go to the Dominion Parliament and get legislation passed there to override your charter." The Restigouche and Western Company protested against it in the strongest manner; the county which I have the honour to represent protested against it unanimously through its municipal council; the county of Victoria, the other county through which the railway passes, has also protested against it; and all but one of the members from the province of New Brunswick have protested against it. I appeal to every member of this House who is present to reject this Bill. If this were his own case, if legislation of this character were sought to be enforced against the interests of the people he represents—legislation which, to say the very least, is doubtful, and which we maintain is entirely out of place—I think he would feel that he and the province he represented were being treated very unfairly. Therefore, I appeal to this House to reject this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 22) respecting the Trans-Canadian Railway Company, and to change the name of the company to the Trans-Canada Railway Company.—(Mr. Davis.)

Bill (No. 65) respecting the British Columbia Southern Railway Company.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

Bill (No. 110) to incorporate the Montreal and Southern Counties Railway Company.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

Bill (No. 118) to incorporate the Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

RED DEER VALLEY RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 122) relating to the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to ask if there was any amendment made to this clause in the Railway Committee.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. There was not.

Mr. OLIVER. I received a very strong resolution from the city council of Calgary declaring that the time for the completion of this railway should not be extended, and I would like to ask the hon. mover of the Bill (Mr. Davin) if he would agree to shorten the extension that is granted here which is for two years. Would the hon. gentleman allow it to be cut down to one year, in deference to the expressed wish of the city council of Calgary?

Mr. DAVIN. I should be very glad, Mr. Chairman, if I could see my way to oblige my hon. friend, but I cannot do so, because the representations made to me are different from these made to him. I should like very much to assent, but, under the circumstances, I can hardly do so.

Mr. OLIVER. The city of Calgary is very much interested in this railway and they have sent a strong resolution that the time should not be extended, on the ground that the charter has been in existence for a number of years, that there has been no proper effort made to build the road, and that the extension of the charter would not be in the interest of the country or be likely to secure the building of the line. I presume that the company have made representations to the Railway Committee that have satisfied that committee as to their standing, but I think that this committee will agree with me that the extension granted is unusually long, considering that this Bill is for the revival of a charter that has lapsed by a effluxion of time. If an extension of one year were granted, that would be sufficient to enable the committee to show what their standing is, and this would probably meet the wishes of the people who are most deeply interested.

Bill reported, and read the third time, and passed.

CATARACT POWER COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 124) respecting the Cataract Power Company.—(Mr. Wood, Hamilton.)

In the Committee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies). By accident the Mr. McALISTER.

clause limiting the time for commencing and completing the work was omitted in committee. I move that the following clause be added to the Bill:—

The construction of the said work shall be commenced within three years and completed within six years of the passing of this Act; otherwise the power granted by this Bill shall cease and be null and void as respects so much of the said work as then remains uncompleted.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not make it two years to commence and five years to complete?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The reason is because in a previous Act, that to incorporate the Welland Power Company, which was to take the water from these very locks, the time limit fixed was the same as I have proposed—three years to commence and six years to complete.

Amendment agreed to, Bill reported, and read the third time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The title of the Bill requires some amendment. As introduced the Bill was to amend a local charter, but we have made a new charter, and the word "respecting" should be replaced with the word "incorporate." I move:

That the Bill do now pass and it be entitled an 'Act to incorporate the Cataract Power Company (Limited)."

Amendment agreed to, and Bill passed.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of private Bills having expired, the Committee of Supply will resume its sitting.

SUPPLY:

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Immigration—Agents in Great Britain and Ireland ..... $25,000

Mr. SPROULE. Before six o'clock the hon. gentleman had given us some information concerning the agents in Great Britain and Ireland, and their salaries. I notice that Mr. C. R. Devlin has $2,000, the highest salary of any. Has he supervision over the other agencies.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Over the other agents in Ireland.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understood the hon. gentleman correctly it was to the effect that the other agents were sent to certain localities. For instance, Mr. O'Kelly was sent to the south and west of Ireland; another agent whose name I did not catch, was sent to the north of Ireland. I notice that the agent in the north of Ireland gets $800, the agent in the south and west gets $1,800, and the central agent, $2,000. How does the hon. gentleman account for the difference in the scale of salaries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Devlin is the general agent for Ireland, and has supervision over all the other agents. In fixing the salaries we have been guided by the general rule of people employing men, who pay them salaries commensurate with their abilities as nearly as they can, and we did the same thing.

Mr. SPROULE. What general rule was the hon. gentleman guided by in giving the agent for the north of Ireland $800, and the one for the south of Ireland $1,800? Are the immigrants which he gets from the north of Ireland not as good subjects as those from the south and west?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I account for it in the way I stated. If a man is employing different persons to do certain work, he pays them in a manner commensurate with their abilities. The hon. gentleman knows that in appointing agents we cannot measure their character and their capacity until they prove it. These are new men, and it remains for them to show whether they will be able to prove their capacity to be commensurate with their salary or not. Of course, these appointments, with the exception of Mr. Devlin's, are temporary, and they are made upon the understanding that their retention in their employment depends upon the nature and satisfactory quality of the work that is done.

Mr. SPROULE. Still I cannot understand why this difference between the salaries. If one was only worth $800 and the other $1,800, I would imagine that the hon. gentleman would not employ an inferior agent for the sake of giving him a smaller salary, because the work that he must do will be equally important with the work done by the other.

Mr. BERGERON. Are these men paid anything else besides their salary and travelling expenses?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The agents get their actual expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Does Mr. Devlin get nothing more than his actual expenses, and do any of these gentlemen have offices?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not in a position to say whether a permanent office has been procured for Mr. Devlin, but there will be one. That is all he gets besides his expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he also a clerk, or some person in the office?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not as yet. Whether he will have, will depend upon the way in which the work develops.

Mr. FOSTER. What does my hon. friend think of the way the work has developed so far?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not in a position to say. Mr. Devlin has only been there a short time, and he has been occupied in writing to the newspapers, and making himself generally known, getting the work started.

Mr. FOSTER. It would seem that the newspapers have been doing the writing and not Mr. Devlin. The reception given to this gentleman does not seem to have been very cordial. Does my hon. friend think Mr. Devlin will be able, by the sweetness of his disposition and his sunny ways, learned here, to overcome all that rough and ready greeting?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am afraid we cannot account for Mr. Devlin's reception except it might be that some of our hon. friends opposite have some of their missionaries over there. But, speaking seriously, I have not the slightest idea who is the author of the attack made upon Mr. Devlin or his work. As the hon. gentleman is aware, I presume, from what he says, the appearance of Mr. Devlin there as our agent was made a signal for a very violent attack upon Canada, and particularly upon Manitoba and the North-west. It is evident that some person has been preparing an attack, with what motive we have not been able so far to ascertain. There were a considerable number of people who were applicants for employment, and it is barely possible that some disappointed applicant is at the bottom of what is taking place.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the Minister received any reports from Mr. Devlin, or any other agent over there?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We get reports from all of them.

Mr. BERGERON. Can they be brought down?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The reports can be brought down, if they are moved for. Of course, it is not customary to bring down monthly reports. The custom heretofore has been to print in the report of the Department of the Interior, the report of each agent.

Mr. SPROULE. How do these agents carry on their operations?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are expected to carry on their operations by canvassing, by making themselves and their work known through the newspapers, by visiting agricultural fairs and exhibitions, and by giving lectures wherever it is practicable to do so with any prospect of success.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they all hired by the year or by the season, or is their salary fixed upon the number of men they send out? It seems to me that if the selection is made from among good men, there should not be the difference in their salaries that we find here. If the men are employed during the same period of the year, and are doing the same work, why this difference in their salaries? I ask the Minister, if some of these men are employed the whole year and some of them only a portion of the year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have already told the hon. gentleman, but I have no objection to repeating it.

Mr. SPROULE. You speak so low we cannot hear you.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Devlin is employed by the year, Mr. O'Kelly is appointed by the month, Mr. Griffith by the month, Mr. Jury by the month, Mr. Duncan by the month, Mr. Dyke, who gets a salary of $3,200, by the year. Mr. Dyke has been in the service of the Government for fifteen or twenty years, and for some years past the salary has been the same. Mr. Mitchell is employed by the year. He is an appointee by the late Government. Mr. Rothweiler the same. Mr. Graham, who gets $2,150, is appointed by the year, his tenure of office being the same as under the late Government. Mr. Webster is a new appointment. He gets $900. I paid him $900 because I thought probably he would be worth that. Wood, Stuart, Fleming and McLeod, all employees of the late Government are engaged by the year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it understood that those who are paid by the month are not to be employed the whole year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have employed these gentlemen by the month so that if their work does not justify their continuance, it can be terminated at any time.

Mr. SPROULE. Then if it is found that they are successful at the work, they will be continued the year through.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Their continuance in office depends upon the work they are doing being satisfactory. Their engagement may be terminated at any time.

Mr. SPROULE. Assuming it is satisfactory, is it the understanding that their services will be retained the whole year through?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no understanding about it. It rests with the department and it can terminate their appointment at any time it so chooses.

Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, I must be too obtuse to understand what the hon. gentleman means, or else he does not understand what I have asked. My question had reference to the men employed by the month, and I asked him if it was the intention to continue them at work the whole year if they are successful. The Minister has not given an answer to my question.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If they are successful I have no doubt that I shall continue them.

Mr. WALLACE. What allowance is given to each of these agents?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The actual expenses.

Mr. WALLACE. What is meant by "actual expenses"; their living expenses while they are at headquarters, or, their travelling expenses?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The usual rule is, that when an officer is at headquarters his living expenses are not paid. When he is away from there, his living and travelling expenses are paid. That is the rule, but I do not know that there is any specially logical reason for it.

Mr. WALLACE. What expenses for travel have been incurred by these agents so far, in addition to their salaries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can bring down a return.

Mr. WALLACE. Is the Minister not prepared to state it now?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly not. I have no objection to bring them down, but I have not got them here.

Mr. WALLACE. When the Minister is asking for the expenses of these men in addition to their salaries, he should bring down their expense account so as to show us what the amount is.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When we get a little further I will show the hon. gentleman what we estimated for the expenses. If the hon. gentleman desires me to bring down a return of the expenses so far, I have no objection to do it.

Mr. WALLACE. The information given to the House with regard to the work of these agents and the different remuneration allowed to each, is not satisfactory. When I consider what we see in the public press as to the reception given to Mr. Devlin, I am forced to the conclusion that he is not in a very promising field for emigration to Canada, and that the money expended for sending Mr. Devlin there might as well be thrown away. The newspapers representing the great majority of public opinion in that part of Ireland, have declared bitter hostility at the very idea of emigration to Canada, and the Minister had better consider whether it would not be proper to recall that agent, because evidently he is going to get no assistance in his emigration scheme from the representative press or the representative people there. Mr. Devlin, has, I think, the largest salary paid to any emigration agent, and I have no doubt we will have a very handsome bill for his expenses in addition. We ought to know upon what ground the Minister is sending men there to attempt to bring emigrants to this country, and also what ground he had for sending Mr. Devlin in the first instance. Did he know that Mr. Devlin was going to get such a very hostile reception, or did he know the conditions that existed, of open hostility to the proposal of emigration to Canada? If the Minister did know, it was an unwise thing to send Mr. Devlin or any one else there, and particularly Mr. Devlin who apparently has provoked this hostility. It was an unwise thing to send an immigration agent there at all, because apparently there will be no emigration of a good class from that part of the country. That hostility is apparently an hostility largely inspired by hostilities to British institutions. If men are hostile to British institutions we do not want them here. We do not want a class of men in Canada who are inspired by the sentiments expressed in these Dublin newspapers. That is not the class of emigrants that will assist in building up this country and making a loyal population, because the only ground for hostility to Canada is the very fact that we are a loyal portion of the British Dominions. The Minister had better explain more fully, and justify to this House why he sent immigration agents there, or else he should admit he has made a mistake, and assure us that he proposes to recall the immigration agents that he has sent to that portion of Ireland. It is quite evident that there can be no satisfactory results in sending out a class of men who will not be loyal to our country, and loyal to British institutions; even if he sends out the other class his mission will not be satisfactory. The Minister in starting out on his career to promote immigration, has made a false step, and he should retrace that step as quickly as possible. I do not think the Minister made a very happy choice any way, in selecting the man he did, to be an immigration agent anywhere. From what I know of Mr. Devlin I do not believe he would be a successful immigration agent to any country. We all know that he holds extreme views on many questions, and we know further that Mr. Devlin was quite hostile to certain portions of the policy of the present Government. We know more than that, for it is no secret that on account of his hostility to the Government, it would not be very pleasant for him to come to this Parliament and support their policy. In order to get rid of him, I presume, so that he would not be a thorn in their side, a position was procured for him as immigration agent, not because of his fitness for that office, but in order to relieve the Government from difficulties and embarrassments. That is the way it looks to me, and I think we should fairly look to the Government, when they are promoting immigration, to do it on justifiable lines, to promote the emigration of desirable men to come to this country, and to send men who will have the confidence of the people from whom they are sent to invite emigration to this country; and none of these conditions exist in the case of Mr. Devlin, and what has proved so far his abortive mission to Ireland.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know that I would go so far as my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Wallace), that Mr. Devlin would not be successful anywhere; but I think I can explain why it is that Mr. Devlin has not been successful, and is not likely to succeed in Ireland. The reason Mr. Devlin was received with the carressing chorus that met him on his arrival is, I apprehend, this. Mr. Devlin had the reputation here, which went before him to Ireland, of being a Nationalist. He was also known to be a devout professor of that religion which is the religion of the majority in Ireland. Anybody who is acquainted with Ireland knows that no one can be more unwelcome to the Nationalists of Ireland than a man who goes to promote emigration—who goes to urge forward a thing which they abhor, and to do that which, if he is successful in it, would make Ireland less populous than it is, and thus do again one of the things which they abhor. Again, if the population were reduced, according to the opinion of many political economists, Ireland would be more prosperous, and prosperity on these terms is not a prosperity that is desired by the Nationalists. Then the Catholic Church in Ireland, either by its officers or by its ordinary professors, does not believe in emigration; it does not want emigration. If you talk to a bishop or a priest or to any devout Catholic, you will find that he does not want the people to emigrate from Ireland. So that when it was known that a man who apparently had two qualifications eminently fitting him to appeal to the mass of the population of Ireland, the Nationalist press naturally put their readers on guard lest this man should persuade them by his blandishments. I should be very far indeed from concluding that the Minister could have done other than supposed, as anybody would have supposed, that a man like Mr. Devlin would have been successful; because, though born in Canada, he is eminently an Irishman, a Nationalist, a Home Ruler, and not only a devout Catholic, but one who proclaimed the fact to the four winds of heaven; and anybody would naturally have supposed that among the mass of the people of Ireland he was likely to make a strong impression. But the mass of the people of Ireland, and especially the Nationalists, and the leaders among the Nationalists, would regard such a man, in seeking to induce the people to emigrate, as dangerous, and as something of a traitor to the class to which he belongs. So that I entirely excuse the Minister. He naturally came to the conclusion that Mr. Devlin would be successful; but after the carressing chorus with which Mr. Devlin has been received, I think the Minister must come to a different conclusion. I must say, after what occurred, that I think Mr. Devlin's usefulness in Ireland is gone; because nobody who knows the Nationalist press and the Nationalist character can doubt that they have with great success prepared beforehand the people whom Mr. Devlin will approach. They have prepared them for receiving Mr. Devlin with distrust, and for resenting his proposals and arguments. I would therefore suggest that Mr. Devlin be removed from Ireland and sent to England or France. He speaks French well, and he might succeed in France or he might succeed in some part of England or Scotland; but if there is one part of this earth where Mr. Devlin has lost his usefulness, it is that Green Isle about which he could grow so eloquent, and of which he was in a remote way so distinguished a son; and it is because of the qualifications which from a superficial standpoint he seemed to possess that he has been a lamentable failure.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask whether or not the removal expenses of these gentlemen from Canada to the places of work have been paid by the Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And have their families gone with them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The families of Mr. Devlin and Mr. Jury, I think, went with them.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the removal expenses of the families paid?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There were certain proportions of the expenses paid, which I cannot at the moment give. I will give them to the hon. gentleman to-morrow, if he wishes.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the expenses of Mr. Devlin and Mr. Jury out west paid before they went?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. So that altogether it is a pretty expensive propaganda which my hon. friend is undertaking, and I must say I do not think my hon. friend can expect to get commensurate results from it. It has always appeared to me, and I think it has always been generally agreed on both sides of the House, that Ireland was a pretty difficult place from which to get immigrants. The reasons stated by my hon. friend to my left (Mr. Davin have been well stated, and I believe they cover the ground; and it does seem to me that the amount of money my hon. friend proposes to expend in Ireland under the present circumstances, with the reception that has been given to the superintendent and organizer of the whole emigration business there, does not give the House much reason to hope for good results. I was a little surprised at my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) floating around so long before he came to the right reason why Mr. Devlin went to Ireland. Mr. Devlin went to Ireland because the Government and Mr. Devlin thought it better that he should go—not so much for Ireland's sake or for the sake of immigration, but for the sake of Mr. Devlin and the Government. Mr. Devlin was to be provided for, and there was no other thing which seemed good and appropriate, and which could serve as so good an excuse as to send him to Dublin, the city of learning and the capital of the Green Isle; and it was, we might well understand first as last, rather for the sake of getting a place for Mr. Devlin, that this nice little billet was prepared. What is the use of my hon. friend saying that he is taking these men just by the month, after he has paid a round sum of money to teach them what the country is like, and then a round sum to take themselves and their families across the Atlantic? Of course, they will go on by the year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I made that statement with regard to the temporary agents I had appointed—not with regard to Mr. Devlin.

Mr. STENSON. During the speech of the hon. ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), I tried to listen as attentively as possible, but I was unable to catch all he said. Nevertheless, the impression remains with me that in one portion of his speech he said that the immigrants that might be brought from the south of Ireland might not be loyal subjects to the Dominion of Canada. I would like to ask the ex-Controller of Customs if he meant that, and I would ask him to speak with a voice loud enough to be heard in this part of the House.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sorry I was not able to make myself heard. What I did say was that Mr. Devlin was sent to a place where the whole population apparently, as represented through the public press, the press representing the people, did not give him any encouragement, but on the contrary had vilified both him and the country he represented; and that the only ground that I knew of for the vilification of Canada by those people was that we were a portion of the British Empire, and a loyal portion too; and that if that was the only ground they had for attacking Canada and Canada's agent, it was not a good place to seek immigrants, and I say so still; and I will say it a little stronger if the hon. gentleman does not understand it.

Mr. STENSON. I am quite aware that the hon. ex-Controller of Customs has said things a great deal stronger than that. But I am not ready to accept newspaper reports when, according to them, the Irish people of the south of Ireland or of any part of Ireland condemn Canada. There are in Canada people from all parts of Ireland, the south, north, east and west, and these people are all equally loyal and good citizens of Canada. And even though some newspaper reports should condemn Mr. Devlin because he goes to Ireland to seek immigrants, I think these reports should be taken with the same allowance as the reports we have read in the newspapers of statements made by the hon. ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace). We should not believe all, and it would not be to the credit of the country or of the ex-Controller of Customs that we should believe all the newspaper report of him. I am glad therefore to see that the ex-Controller does not maintain what I understood him to say, that the people from the southern portion of Ireland would not be good settlers in Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. Minister be good enough to tell us when these several agents were appointed and from what dates their salaries began?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Speaking from recollection, Mr. Devlin began his duties on the 1st of May and so did Mr. O'Kelly. Mr. Griffith began on the 1st of April. With regard to Mr. Jury and Mr. Webster, I could not give the exact dates without referring to the books.

Mr. SPROULE. The question asked by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) was whether these men were under pay when they were travelling in British Columbia, and I understood the hon. Minister to say they were. If that be so, we must conclude that Mr. Albert Jury was under pay in Toronto when he was lecturing there on the Sunday car question.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I explained that item when it was brought up in the House some time ago. Mr. Jury was given a week to go to Toronto for the purpose of preparing his family for removal to Europe. The address he delivered was apparently delivered when he was there in that week. My information is that he did not intend to take any part in the campaign, but was at a meeting and was called on to express his views, and did so.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is aware of the fact, but it is currently reported that Mr. Jury has always been an atheist and boasts of it, and I would ask the hon. gentleman if he finds that class of man suitable to send to any country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not inquired into the theological tenets of Mr. Jury, and am not in a position to say whether he is an atheist or not, I have seen that stated in the newspapers and have seen it vehemently denied, but am not in a position to give a positive opinion. We do not put the immigration agents through a theological examination.

Mr. SPROULE. I think they would have to go to some other school, if you did.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to say in reply to the statement of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Stenson), who said that I had made some statements, not to the credit of myself.

Mr. STENSON. I did not say that you made the statements; but I said you were reported in the newspapers as having made statements in your speeches, which reports I did not wish to credit, because the statements were not at all creditable to you.

Mr. WALLACE. I invite the hon. gentleman to quote any statements of mine that I am not able to justify on the floor of this House. I am not in the habit of making statements in one place and making contrary statements in another place, as some hon. gentlemen I could easily point to have done and are doing. When I make a statement in one place, I believe it is true, and am prepared to stick to it on the floor of this House or any place else.

Salaries of agents in foreign countries.... $17,500

Mr. OLIVER. Before this resolution is adopted, I beg to call the attention of the House to the necessity of greater care being exercised by the agents of the Government in foreign countries in the selection of immigrants. The work of the agents in the province of Galicia, in the Empire of Austria, has been remarkably successful in point of numbers for the past year or so, but I am sorry it has not been as successful in point of quality, if quality is reckoned by wealth. As a matter of fact, there has been a large emigration from the province of Galicia to the North-west Territories, and a large proportion of these immigrants are very poor. A great many of them are absolutely without means, and I wish to warn the Government that if that immigration continues, they will find that they will have to issue a very large amount of relief to those people for the first two or perhaps three years that they are in the country. Although the section to which they come is fertile and offers advantages for settlement, the settlers must have some means to support themselves until they can make the ground produce enough to support them. If people come barehanded into a country where there is no employment to be had at fair wages, and there is not in the Territories, they are simply going to be a burden on the other settlers or the Government until such time as they either leave the country or finally get on their feet, which is a slow process. In the meantime, the fact that they will be dependent on charity from some source will be held up as proof that the particular part of the Territories in which they live is a failure because the people are starving there, whereas the fault may not be with the country or the people but merely with their circumstances. I shall not discuss the merits of these people, but I say that it is a great mistake to suppose that all the people who come from Galicia are of the same nationality or the same desirable class. We have in the district in which I live, and to which these people are coming, a number of settlers who are in many ways very desirable and who come from Galicia. They are of German nationality. They came out poor but have been successful. They did not, however, come out actually barehanded, but had some little means and by thrift and industry are succeeding in life. But these other people, so-called Galicians, are Russians, a different race altogether from the Germans, who have not the same ideas of thrift and economy and industry; and if the Germans, with their industry and thrift, found it hard enough to get along with little means, certainly the Galicians, who have not those ideas and have still less means, are likely to be a burden on the community or the Government. As a representative of the North-west, I wish to say that the quality of immigration is of much more importance than the quantity. A small number of a desirable class is very much to be preferred to a large number of undesirable people, and while it is right and proper that every effort should be made to induce people to come and settle in our country, it also should be the effort of the department to bring out only desirable settlers who will not be a hindrance but a help to the country. We are poor enough, and do not want our poverty increased by the importation of paupers from Europe. If we are to be asked to vote a large sum for immigration, that money should be expended in the attempt to bring out, not an inferior but a superior class of people, having some means to develop our resources.

I will go just one step further in criticising the immigration policy of the late Government, not from a party point of view. I believe that the efforts of our immigration department have been directed too low. We have tried to get quantity rather than quality; we have tried to get numbers rather than people of a good class, and I contend that has been a mistake and that it would be better to spend the same amount of money getting people of a desirable class rather than going about spending as large an amount as we have been spending in getting a large number of people who are of an undesirable class, who are not able to stay with us even if they wanted to, and who, in a large number of cases, do not want to. It is a notorious fact that a large part of our immigration money has been spent to bring people from Europe through Canada to the United States, people for whom the field of settlement in Canada was not suitable, people belonging to the poorest class, who had to find work or they could not live, and who, not being able to find work in Canada, had to go to the United States, and who, as a matter of fact, started from Europe for the States, so that the assistance they received from our immigration fund was simply to help immigrants to the United States. At present the United States have an alien exclusion law under which they exclude pauper immigrants from their shores. It is the business of the steamboat companies, so far as we use them as agents, to get passengers; it does not make any difference to them whether they are settlers or not. Now, if the United States excludes the pauper class, the only thing the steamship companies can do is to turn the paupers our way. So that we are in a different position now from that we occupied before. If these people are going to emigrate, the steamship companies on whom we depend, to a certain extent, for assistance in this matter are liable to take the good passengers to the States and the poor ones to Canada. In asking the House to vote this large amount of money, it is, above all things, desirable that the agents of the Government on the continent of Europe should be charged with the duty of a careful selection of the immigrants they bring, not only as to the persons themselves, but as to their means, because, as I said before, there is no use turning a man out on the prairie barehanded and asking him to make a living—the thing is impossible.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister in what foreign countries he employs agents, what fields they are operating in, the names of the agents and their salaries.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The names of agents in foreign countries are as follows:—Hector Fabre, Paris, France, $1,200; D. Fortin, Brussels, $1,800; M. D. McInnes, chief agent of the staff in the United States, $1,500, general headquarters in Detroit; C. O. Swanson, $1,400; R. H. Swallow, $900; James Greene, $1,200; J. Crawford, $900; E. L. Coffin, $900; J. B. Morin, $800; O. Corbell, $500; and J. H. Rousseau, $500. Those whose names I gave without their location are travelling agents, having no permanent headquarters. They are travelling in different parts of the United States. Messrs. McInnes, Swallow, Greene, Crawford and Coffin, are working in the states of Michigan, South Dakota, Kansas, Illinois and Iowa. Messrs. Morin, Corbell, Rousseau and Swanson are working largely in the New England States. The four last named gentlemen, with the exception of Mr. Rousseau were in the employ of the department before I became Minister, and their duties and their salaries remain unchanged.

Mr. SPROULE. I saw an item in the newspaper the other day to the effect that an agent of the Government of Canada—it did not say whether provincial or Dominion—carrying on his operations in Massachusetts, endeavouring to repatriate the French Canadians, was offering them, if they would come to Canada, 100 to 120 acres of land, and at least $500 in cash to help them to begin operations. Was the agent seeking to mislead the people, or was the report incorrect? Does the hon. Minister know anything about it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I saw the report to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) refers. I think it was an exaggeration of what the agent said, probably. If I remember aright, the name given was the name of one of the gentlemen I have mentioned. Of course our agents are not authorized to offer any such munificent terms.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like an explanation of the modus operandi by which the Minister proposes to carry on the work in the United States. The other day one of his colleagues read us the figures of sixty-one agents scattered throughout the United States who were to be paid by results. Would the hon. Minister please explain?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These names, of course, do not appear here because these men are not upon salaries. These men whose names I have given are doing in the United States for Canada what was, for many years, and until very lately and I presume even now, is done in Canada of American railways. We have employed the ticket-agents of American railways in towns and villages of the western states and we pay them a commission for the people they send to settle in the North-west, and the commission is paid upon the report of our immigration officer at Winnipeg, which report he makes after the settler is located in the North-west to his satisfaction.

Mr. FOSTER. What commission is paid, and how does the hon. gentleman propose to make it certain that the payment is made to the right person, and that it is the actual work that is paid for, and now claims simply.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount paid is $3 for each mail adult. That is the whole arrangement. We have a system whereby there is a certificate given to the settler by the agent who sends him to the North-west. The immigrant presents that certificate to the immigration commissioner when he reaches Winnipeg. They have a system of checking, from time to time, to see that no frauds are committed, but the immediate process is the presentation of the certificate that the agents has given to the immigrant to the immigration commissioner. After the settler is located to the satisfaction of the commissioner, he gives an order for the money which he forwards here and the money is sent from here to the person entitled to it.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these all the agents employed in foreign countries, or has the hon. gentleman any agents in Germany or in Norway and Sweden. I understand that we get some very desirable immigrants in Norway and Sweden, and I would like to ask if he is making further effort to secure more immigrants from that country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have no agents in Norway and Sweden. We have sent over there a gentleman for the purpose of making a report to us upon the possibility of commencing work successfully, but he is permanently located. The gentleman is one concerning whom, I think, the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) asked a question early in the session—Mr. Jones, late of Montreal.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. gentleman no agents in Germany?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Contingencies, Canadian, British and Foreign Agencies, and General Immigration Expenses..... $96,500

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman give us the amount for contingencies alone, as nearly as possible?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give the hon. gentleman the details. For the expenses of all the agencies in Canada, including Quebec, Montreal, Halifax, St. John, Winnipeg, and of all the men whose names I have given as being agents in Canada, $12,000; for the contingencies in Great Britain and Ireland, including the travelling expenses of the men whose names I have mentioned and the expense of the Liverpool office, $16,000. The expenses of the agencies in foreign countries, including the United States, are, altogether, $6,000. We estimate for bonuses on settlers from the United States, $2,000. That, of course, we can only estimate very roughly; it depends upon the number of people that we get. We estimate for advertising in Canada and United States newspapers, purchasing special editions, &c., $3,000. Hand-books and other pamphlets, printing and stationery, $6,000. Then we estimate for the repatriation society of Montreal, a society the operations of which I explained some days ago, $3,050. We estimate for the treatment of immigrant patients in the North-west hospitals, $1,500. Inspection of pauper children, $1,000; for bonuses on these children, $3,500; British and continental bonuses to steamship agents, $8,000; for veterinary inspection fees upon settlers' cattle, which has been customary for some years past, $2,000. For the expenses of delegates, and special transportation of persons who sometimes have their expenses paid for the purpose of sending them to different parts of the country when they come here to make special reports, $1,000. Freight charges at the head office, $250; expenses at the High Commissioner's office in London, connected with immigration, $15,934.64. Hon. Hector Fabre, agent in Paris, publisher of a newspaper called "Paris-Canada," the same grant he received last year, $1,000. Printing pamphlets for circulation upon the continent, $4,000; postage, $583; advertising, $2,000; total, about $94,000.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the Minister if it is out of this item that money has been given for bringing back some of the Canadians who went to Brazil last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What we are discussing is the vote for next year. We have paid out of the immigration appropriation this year a sum of $3,370, speaking from recollection, for passages of French Canadian people—I think they were altogether French Canadians, so far as we are aware—who went to Brazil and there became destitute, and were sent back to this country. This was charged in the first instance to immigration, and I am asking for a supplementary vote to recoup the immigration appropriation, which will be presented to the House.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the Minister to say that that money was paid for the repatriation of French Canadians. The people who went there last year when I called the attention of the Government to their departure, were French Canadians; but I am told, and this is what I want to find out, that the money which was paid lately was not for the repatriation of the French Canadians who went to Brazil from Montreal, but it was paid for immigrants who had come from the other side of the water at our expense, and who had gone over to Brazil, and whom now we are bringing back here, that is to say, we are paying three times for the transportation of people who do not belong to Canada. I was told this the other day in Montreal, and I want to find out if it is true. Has the Minister any means of finding out whether the money was paid for French Canadians or other Canadians, or paid for immigrants who had come here from Europe, and who then went away to Brazil, and are now coming back here at our expense again?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The money was paid on a draft of the British Consul at New York, according to my recollection. But I think that I am in a position to say to the hon. gentleman that the money was paid for people who had gone from Canada to Brazil. Of course it is possible that in a case of that kind there may have been one or two people who did not come within that category; but our information is to the contrary, and I am satisfied that it is correct.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like definite information. I am informed by people who have returned from Brazil that the money that was paid out was paid principally on behalf of people who had come from Europe and not for Canadians. Canadians who came back lately from Brazil have complained that they could not get money, because it was all expended on immigrants who came from abroad.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that is the case, but I will take means to satisfy myself.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. gentleman give me his information before we come to concurrence?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman mentioned one item of some $3,000 for pauper children coming to this country. Will he be good enough to tell us for what particular purpose this money is expended?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. For the inspection of pauper children, the expenses of officers going around and inspecting the children. There has been for some years an arrangement whereby a Government officer inspects these children, and makes a report, on certain forms, to the local Government boards in England, giving information as to how these children are getting on.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that all that is given to these institutions who bring them in?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is for inspection.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a bonus mentioned.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a bonus of $2 a head to certain philanthropic societies in the old country, to persons who have for some years past been recognized by the department, on juvenile immigrants brought out under the auspices of these societies. I may say so far as that is concerned, it is carrying out an arrangement that has obtained in the department for years past. I have some doubts in my own mind as to the wisdom of the arrangement, but I have not felt disposed to change it without full examination.

Mr. BERGERON. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that some $3,300 were paid already. Is it the intention of the Minister to pay any more money to the same end?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Instructions were sent forward a few days ago that the Government would honour no more drafts except under very pressing circumstances, an intimation in a gentle way that if it was possible to avoid paying any further expenses, we would like to do so. We are placed in a difficult position. The question was as to whether, when our unfortunate countrymen were deluded into going away—and I am told they went after the strongest remonstrance from the officers of the department—having got themselves into that unfortunate position, whether it was proper for the Government to allow them to remain there and to refuse to pay their expenses altogether. It is a debatable question, and the Government would not be justified in going very far in that direction, but we thought that under all the circumstances it was a very special case, and reports came to the effect that people were enduring great hardships, that under the circumstances it was only the part of humanity for us to furnish the necessary money for them to get back. Of course, we recognize the fact that this is a thing that cannot be carried very far, and we hope it will not happen again.

Mr. BERGERON. Last September I called the attention of the Government to the fact that, about 300 of our people were being induced to go to Brazil. The Prime Minister then did not seem to understand the matter, or else he treated it in a very light way. He said in a chaffing way: That this was a better country and that Canadians should stay at home. I then pointed out to the Prime Minister, that the governments of Italy of England and of France prevented such emigration by forcing the agents or the steamship lines, to deposit a certain amount of money which would be used to bring the emigrants back in case the representations were found to be false. The suggestion was not seriously taken, as was evidenced by the remarks of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). If my advice had then been followed, and if these Brazilian immigration agents were compelled to make a deposit, we would not to-day be voting money to bring them back. This may happen again, and I hold that it is the duty of the Canadian Government to copy the policy of the Italian, British and French Governments in this respect. The tales of these people who have returned from Brazil are heart rending, and the whole proceedings in connection with the matter were disgraceful. Even though the Government is guilty to a certain degree, it would be patriotism to bring them back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How do you hold the Government guilty?

Mr. BERGERON. They should have prevented them from going away.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How could they do that?

Mr. BERGERON. By forcing the shipping companies or agents to make a deposit as these other Governments have done.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We cannot prevent people leaving Canada if they want to. I inquired about this matter from Mr. Burgess the late Deputy Minister, and he told me that the officers of the immigration department at Montreal, had taken the strongest measures to induce these people to remain. They went to Brazil in the face of the strongest remonstrances from our officials. If people make up their minds to leave the country, all that the Government can possibly do is to advise them not to go. If they are so foolish as to leave Canada and go somewhere else, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) cannot hold the Government responsible. In bringing them back we acted largely in the spirit of performing an act of charity, and I do not think the House will find fault with us for so doing.

Mr. BERGERON. It would be better to not let them go; but since they are there, it is an act of mercy to bring them back. The money devoted for this purpose, was given not to Canadians, but to foreign immigrants who came to Canada and who had to be brought back here again at the expense of this Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The draft came from the British consul at New York, but the British consul at Rio was the person who superintended the embarkation of these people. The impression we got from the correspondence was that he was extremely careful, and I do not think it at all likely, that to any serious extent, the facts stated by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) are correct.

Mr. SPROULE. What supervision does the Minister exercise over immigrants from European countries, to ensure that they are suitable for Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) refers to the question raised by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver). That would require considerable time to discuss, but I am not at all adverse to the discussion if hon. gentlemen on the other side desire it. These Galicians are brought here through the efforts of two or three persons who are somewhat prominent in the service of the Austrian Government. These people have hitherto followed agricultural pursuits for a livelihood, and out of the 1,800 who arrived at Winnipeg during the last three or four months, not more than 100 or 150 have given any difficulty to the officers in providing for them. Considering that all are well adapted for agriculture, and do not suffer from a cold climate, that is not at all a discouraging result. The great majority are well able to take care of themselves and have some money.

Mr. SPROULE. What country do you refer to?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have not this spring received any considerable number from continental Europe, except the Galicians. The immigration that is coming, is coming as a result of the distribution of literature. We take the people who come, and we have no means of winnowing them out. I considered the advisability of making an inspection at the port of landing, and insisting upon any who are found to be destitute being returned, but I am free to say that I found that impracticable. The result would be, that we would place ourselves in antagonism with the steamship agents, and after an examination of the question I am satisfied, that would stop people from coming here at all. They would direct the people to New York or possibly South America, and the immediate result in all probability would be, that we would lose the whole immigration. Unless we are prepared to face that probability, it is not possible at the present time to take any steps in the direction suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. SPROULE. I also refer to the immigrants from Great Britain and Ireland, because in times past our agents were operating in the towns and villages where they could hardly expect to get agriculturists. What instructions are given to the agents with regard to the localities in which they should operate, and the class of persons they should bring out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We feel that the supply of labouring men and mechanics in Canada is quite equal to the demand, and our agents have positive instructions not to encourage that class. We tell them to encourage none but those who are accustomed to agricultural life.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the literature distributed by the department, largely giving information about Manitoba and the North-west Territories, or is there also information given with regard to the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Heretofore the information has largely related to Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I have in preparation a pamphlet which will deal with the whole of Canada, and which will be printed in sections so that the different sections can be distributed. The desire is that the information shall be with regard to the whole of Canada. The largest portion of the literature is devoted to that portion of Canada lying west of Lake Superior, viz.: the Lake of the Woods district, Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia. There are also sections referring to the eastern provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe, with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), that we should have the best immigration possible; and when he speaks of these Galicians, I am ready to believe what he says, because he saw them himself. But I desire to say that two or three weeks ago, there landed in Montreal about three hundred Galicians, and the people who saw them all declared that among them were the finest lot of men and women that ever landed on the shores of Canada; and the Montreal papers on both sides of politics congratulated the Government, and expressed the hope that many more of these people would be brought to this country. I will congratulate the Minister if he can bring more immigrants of that sort.

Mr. OLIVER. I have only to say that a number of these Galicians were begging around the streets of Edmonton last fall, and, from the number that have come in this summer, I expect that there will be a great many more begging next fall.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not hear whether there are any immigrant agents in St. John, N.B. Has that city been left out in the cold?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Gardiner has been there for some years, I think.

Geological Survey..... $57,000

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that there is a decrease here. With the mining boom that is on, and the great desire that exists for information regarding mining locations in our country, does the hon. Minister think it wise to ask for a smaller amount of money, or to curtail the operations that are being carried on by this branch?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount asked last year was $60,000. After consultation with Mr. Dawson, the chief of the Geological Survey, I came to the conclusion, and he agreed with me, that the work of the season could be prosecuted without curtailing operations to any appreciable extent, for $50,000. I went into the matter pretty carefully with Dr. Dawson, and he thought we could do the work pretty well for that sum.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the result of the artesian boring in the North-west?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been no satisfactory result as yet. No deposit of oil has been found so far, and the intention this season is to put down, under Dr. Dawson's supervision, two bore holes near Athabasca Landing.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how many men he has now in the field making these explorations, and where they are located ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Bell, on the north side of Hudson's Bay Straits; Professor Macoun, at the foot of the Rocky Mountains; Dr. Ells, in the counties of Lanark, Renfrew, Frontenac and Addington, in Ontario; Mr. Hugh Fietcher, in the Cumberland coal fields of Nova Scotia; Mr. McConnell, in West Kootenay, B.C.; Mr. Tyrrell, about Lake Winnipeg; Mr. Low, on the south side of Hudson Bay Straits; Mr. Robert Chalmers, at various places in the province of Quebec; M. Fairbault, in Nova Scotia; Mr. William McInnes, in the Manitou region of western Ontario; Mr. A. E. Barlow, near Haliburton, in Central Ontario; Mr. James McEvoy, in West Kootenay, B.C.; Mr. C. W. Willmot, in collecting specimens in various localities; Mr. A. W. Brock, in West Kootenay, B.C.; Dr. Frank Adams, in Central Ontario, in the neighbourhood of Haliburton; and Mr. L. W. Bailey, in making an examination into the mineral resources of New Brunswick. Each of these gentlemen has a certain amount of assistance with him.

Indians—Removal of Lake of Two Mountains
Indians from Oka to Gibson..... $200

Mr. SPROULE. Every year for a great many years I have noticed in the Estimates an item for the removal of these Oka Indians—I think every year since I have been in Parliament, which is nineteen years. They appear to be very hard to remove, or there must be a large number of them. Has the Minister any knowledge of how long it will take to get them removed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The information I have is to the effect that there has been an average expenditure of $200 a year for seven or eight years. A reserve was set apart in the township of Gibson, by arrangement with the Ontario Government, and efforts have been made to get the Indians to go there. When any particular Indian signifies his willingness to go, his expenses are paid.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. Minister tell us whether any Indians were moved last year to the township of Gibson ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no information as to that.

Manitoba and North-west Territories—
Indian Supplies, &c..... $751,374

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to call attention to something that seems to me anomalous.

The information given in calling for tenders for 1896-97 differs materially from that given in calling for tenders for 1897-98. In the schedules for 1897-98, there is no information for Manitoba, and it would seem, therefore, that there is no intention of calling for tenders, and yet bacon, biscuits, flour, soap, tea, powder, shot, and a dozen other things have to be supplied. I want to call attention to what actually occurred, and what I fear may, therefore, become general, looking at these schedules. I asked for some correspondence, in the early part of the session, between the Department of Indian Affairs at Ottawa and the officers of the department at Regina and Winnipeg respecting the furnishing of supplies to the St. Paul Industrial School, and also correspondence between the department at Ottawa and the Hudson Bay Company, at Winnipeg. On turning to October 10th, I find that Mr. Chipman, on page 25 of the returns, wrote a letter to the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Ottawa, stating that the Hudson Bay Company, for the year ending 30th June, 1896, had secured the contract for the above school, and since the expiration of the contract had been furnishing supplies at the same rates, when it would have been quite within their right to have exacted the ordinary selling price of the goods. He complained that the privilege of furnishing these supplies, from the 1st of October, had been awarded to Mr. J. H. Cockburn, a local grocer, without tenders having been called for, as had always been done in previous years, and he asked whether the present arrangement was of a temporary nature or whether the department intended to call for tenders as in the past. On page 23, there is a letter addressed to Mr. McColl, inspector of Indian agencies, at Winnipeg, by Mr. Hayter Reed, as follows:—

I have your letter of the 12th instant. Until its receipt I was unaware that you had called for tenders for the supply of meat to the Rupert's Land Industrial School.

Kindly forward the meat tenders to the department; also, tenders for groceries or other supplies, should any such have been received by you.

At page 7 of this return, we have the answer of Mr. McColl. He says:

Winnipeg, Man., 24th October, 1896.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant, and in reply I beg to inclose herewith, as requested, copies of the tenders received by me for the supply of meat, groceries, coal and wood to the Rupert's Land Industrial School during the current fiscal year.

In this connection, I may say that, on the strength of your letter of the 30th July last, directing me to be guided by the instructions of the Indian Commissioner for Manitoba and the North-west Territories with regard to expenditure during this year, I asked that officer for authority to call for tenders for the above-mentioned supplies, and he referred me to the Hon. Joseph Martin for a list (copy herewith inclosed) of the parties whom he would recommend for the patronage. Forms of tender were, therefore, sent only to the dealers mentioned in the list, and the contracts were awarded to the lowest tenderers, as follows:—

J. W. Cockburn, for groceries.

F. Sagrott, for meat.

Hartstone, Windatt & Co., for hard coal.

D. E. Adams, for soft and blacksmiths' coal, and

T. D. Robinson, for wood.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) E. McCOLL,

Inspector of Agencies.

On page 4 we have a letter from Mr. Hayter Reed, addressed to Mr. Chipman:

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th ultimo, respecting the supply of groceries and other supplies required by the St. Paul's Industrial School; and, in reply, I beg to inform you that the Indian Commissioner directed that tenders from a limited number of local merchants, as formerly, be asked for, and contracts were let to the 30th June, 1897, under conditions similar to last year.

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) HAYTER REED,

Deputy Supt. Gen. of I. A.

Before this, what used to be done was to issue schedules such as I have in my hand, and the public got the advantage of proper competition, and so did the Government, but, under the present system there is no proper competition. On page 9 there is a letter which was evidently addressed to these few people, with schedules, but nothing was done at all commensurate with what—I think the hon. Minister will agree with me—should have been done. I do not want to delay the committee, but I point out that what was done was to peddle these contracts around Winnipeg to the friends of Mr. Joseph Martin. That was a very improper proceeding. I want specially to call attention to the fact that in the return I ask for we have only schedules for the North-west Territories, and none for Manitoba. I wish to have an explanation of the course taken at the instance of Mr. Forget, and then I want an assurance from the hon. Minister that care will be taken to call for tenders in the future, in the proper way, for Manitoba supplies.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The practice has been to call for tenders when large quantities of supplies were wanted, but where only small quantities were wanted from time to time, it has been the custom to send written applications to three or four or half a dozen merchants and thus save the expense of advertising. I may mention that the matter to which the hon. gentleman referred happened before I took office, but I discussed the question with the Indian Commissioner and the officers of the department, and I directed that there should be no change in the practice. The instructions were that the tenders should be called for in the usual way, and I think the hon. gentleman must be under a misapprehension in thinking that has not been done. I am satisfied that tenders were called for as on former occasions, but I can inform the hon. gentleman positively to-morrow.

Manitoba and North-west Territories—

Indian Education: Day, boarding and industrial schools..... $295,231

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to call attention to this item of Indian education. In my opinion, this is an item on which economy could be practiced to advantage. It has been found necessary, I understand to economize in many ways with regard to governmental offices in the North-west Territories, to reduce the officers in connection with the land department and also to reduce the Mounted Police. I think no item, could better be reduced than that for the education of the Indians. The amount that is asked to educate the Indians in Manitoba and the North-west Territories is greater than the total amount of their annuity and the total amount of the supplies furnished them. That is to say, the treaty obligations entered into by the Government are not as heavy as this obligation which has been assumed since the treaty was made. I do not wish to argue the point as to the desirability of educating the Indians, but I may say that in the North-west Territories there is one branch of this Indian education which is fitted out with buildings, which in cost and appointment would be considered desirable additions to any city in the Dominion; buildings that have cost, I suppose, something like half a million of dollars. They are used in teaching the Indians different industries, which industries, even if the Indians acquired a proper knowledge of them, there would be no field for them to carry on satisfactorily. The position is this—that we are educating these Indians to compete industrially with our own people, which seems to me a very undesirable use of public money, or else we are not able to educate them to compete, in which case our money is thrown away. In any case, I contend, this education of Indians not being a treaty obligation is a matter in which economy might very well be used. When it has been found necessary to cut down the expenditure on the Mounted Police I think that economy could well be used in this matter of Indian education. I took the opportunity of calling the attention of the House to this matter last session, and I see that there has been a slight reduction in the amount. Still, the amount is altogether out of proportion to any possible benefit that can be derived from it.

Indians—British Columbia—Surveys and reserve commissions..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is this surveys and commission business pretty well through yet?

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have asked here for a re-vote of what was provided last year. I have not had time to make a very definite estimate of what will be required, but I do not think that so large an amount as this will be necessary. The Songhees Indians are upon a reserve that is inside the limits of the city of Victoria, and it is proposed to remove them.

Mr. FOSTER. But this is for surveys, and the hon. Minister could not use it for the removal of Indians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is to cover the expenses of the survey of a new reserve and the removal of the Indians as well as the expense of conducting the work. The hon member (Mr. Foster) will probably remember that before the change of Government the arrangements were entered into. I have not seen my way yet to complete the arrangements, because we could not come to an exact understanding with the provincial Government as to what should be done. The provincial authorities are very desirous that the Indians should remove and are ready to provide a reserve, but the dispute was as to the terms to be made.

Mr. FOSTER. Has an agreement been reached yet?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Practically. Mr. Turner, the Premier of British Columbia was here the other day.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to get the old reserve?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Arrangements have been made between us that the old reserve shall go to British Columbia Government if they furnish a reserve of equal value. I may say that the difficulty heretofore has been that I insisted that when the change was made the difference between the reserve the Indians are leaving, and the reserve they are entering upon should be paid by the British Columbia Government and funded for the benefit of the Indians. They refused to entertain a proposition of that kind, but from what Mr. Turner said it appeared that there had been a misunderstanding, because he said there would be no question about the matter, as the reserve they propose to furnish was more valuable than that in the city. I said that that would do, and I was very glad to hear what he said because it will avoid necessity for further delay. Immediately after the session, I hope the arrangement can be carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. The new reserve might be of equal value so far as the Indians are concerned, that is larger, but it might not be at all worth the same amount of money in the market.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I insisted that it should be worth the same amount of money, because the Government, being in the position of trustee for the Indians, was bound to require that the new property should be of equal value.

Mr. FOSTER. It should be of equal value or the difference should be paid over for the benefit of the Indians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the position I have taken and that will be provided for.

Indians—General—Two inspectors, 1 at $1,400, 1 at $1,000..... $2,400

Mr. FOSTER. Who are these inspectors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McRae and Mr. Chitty.

Mr. FOSTER. The same ones as before?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

North-west Mounted Police—Pay of Force..... $200,000

Mr. DAVIN. I would appeal to the Minister and to the Government generally in regard to this vote. I think that they will have received from their friends in the North-west Territories, as they have recently received from the capital, Regina, strong representations against the decrease that this vote represents. Those who know the North-west will know that the Mounted Police have been of the greatest possible advantage to the North-west Territories, and will continue to be of the greatest possible advantage to that country until it has become more thickly settled and perhaps long afterwards. Naturally the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sifton's) attention, before he became Minister, was more directed to his own province, but since he has been a Minister, his attention must have been directed largely to the North-west Territories, and facts must have been brought before him to shake his convictions if he had such convictions in regard to the decision arrived at by the Prime Minister and the Government to reduce the North-west Mounted Police and to cause him to see the advantage of increasing the grant. I would urge the Government to reconsider whether next year they will not place the Mounted Police upon its old footing of strength.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman tell us how many officers and men the force consists, and where they are distributed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not give the hon. gentleman the distribution. There are 742 officers and men.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed some time ago there was a contingent of the North-west Mounted Police sent to the Yukon District. Was the selection made from the force in Manitoba and the North-west, or were they new men enlisted for that purpose?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were not new men. I think on a former occasion I made unwittingly a misleading statement. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) asked me one evening when the Prime Minister was out, whether a newly enrolled detachment had been sent, and I, not catching the whole of the question, answered in the affirmative. But it was not a newly enrolled detachment, it was a part of the force that had been in the North-west Territories.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to say that in the estimation of a large number of people in the Territories, the reduction of the Mounted Police at the present time is a mistake; and I think that view will be greatly strengthened by the events which have taken place within the last few days. I do not wish to put myself in the position, and I do not think the representatives of the west should put themselves in a position before this House, of opposing economy. There has been an idea, perhaps too prevalent on the part of the people in the Territories, and of representatives of the Territories, that any expenditure, so long as it was territorial expenditure, was desirable; and as a consequence, a majority of the members of the House have taken the position that the Territories are merely a sort of sink hole into which money is poured, and from which adequate results are not received. Therefore I say that it is good policy for every territorial representative to support any reasonable measure of economy that is brought before this House; and therefore I do not wish to oppose a reduction of the police force in so far as it is a measure of economy. I do not ask for a dollar's expenditure in the territories that is not necessary on the police force; I wish to see economy in the territories as well as everywhere else. But if it is a fact that a certain force is necessary, and that that force requires a certain expenditure in order to make it efficient, then it becomes a grave question whether the reduction in the amount of the expenditure is real economy. That is the question that is before us now. I know it is said that many years ago when the territories were in a much more turbulent state than they are now, a smaller number of policemen managed the country to very good advantage. That is a fact. The country was in a more dangerous condition than it is now, and they did manage it very satisfactorily with a smaller number of men. But while the country is not in the same condition that it was then, while in one way it has become more peaceable, in other ways it has not become more peaceable. It was possible at that time, by making a sort of treaty with the Indian tribes, to have the support of the several tribes towards the maintenance of law and order, at the present time, owing to the disorganization of the tribes, and the general disorganization of the Indian element of the country, it is not possible to enter into any such arrangement. Therefore you have to deal now with the Indian as an individual instead of dealing with Indians in tribes; and as a consequence, a larger number of men are required to deal with the same number of Indians as law breakers in the ordinary sense of the word. That is the reason why it is not possible at the present time to preserve law and order in the territories with the same number of men that it was some years ago. I know a great many people figure on the matter in this way: They say, The population of the territories is about 100,000, and 100,000 people in Ontario do not require the services of more than one or two policemen. But the circumstances are different in the territories from what they are in any other part of the Dominion of Canada. There is a small population and a very large territory. A few people here, a few people there, and a few people yonder; and it is not possible to enforce law and order in a country of such geographical extent as the territories on the same terms as it can be enforced in a country where the population is dense, as it is in the older provinces of the Dominion. I think if people would look at the matter in this light, especially in view of the circumstances that have occurred within the last couple of years, they will realize that one or two or three Indians can make trouble for a whole settlement, a whole country side, and require a large force to deal with them. That would not be the case if the country were in a different condition, but it has to be dealt with as it is. While the Indians have changed their condition and are not as warlike as they were, and there is not the same necessity for a large military force in the territories as there was some years ago, I want especially to point out certain duties that are required to be fulfilled in the territories in their present condition that were not required many years ago. In the first place, there is a drift of cattle from the south side of the boundary line into the territories. There is something like 700 miles of an imaginary line dividing the prairie belonging to the States from that belonging to Canada. On the south side of the line there are herds of cattle numbering thousands and hundreds of thousands. The grass there is to a great extent exhausted, and the cattle have a natural tendency to drift north into our prairies where the grass is better any way, and where it is not exhausted. That drift of the herds is increasing steadily from Montana; the tendency to come northward is increasing every year; and unless we intend to allow our prairies to be eaten out by the cattle of our neighbours, we will have to take some steps to prevent them from coming north. Now, the Mounted Police force is there to be used for that purpose; if they are not there, some other men will have to be engaged in order to do that duty. Another duty that requires to be attended to is that of preventing prairie fires. As you know, the territories are principally prairies, but are partly timbered. Because they are principally prairie and only partly timbered, the timber is very valuable, not as a commercial commodity, but in promoting the settlement of the country. Where the country is settled the settlers can look after the prairie fires, but where the country is not settled, on the public domain, the timber that belongs to the Crown is year after year decreased in quantity, and decreased in value by those running fires. The settlers are not to be expected to put out the fires which do not damage or endanger their own property. This is public property, and it is for the Dominion Government to say whether they will attempt to preserve that property or not. Then there is an extension of trade into the Mackenzie River country and the Yukon, and it has been found necessary to send men into those regions in order to preserve law and order. There are these three services that require to be performed at present that were not required years ago; and if the Government can meet the case, can satisfactorily perform these services with the smaller number of men they will have at their disposal, certainly I have nothing to say against a reduction of the force. But I want distinctly to point out that these services require to be performed, that it is of value to the country that they should be performed, and it is a question for the Government to consider whether there is any economy in restricting the number of men if, as a consequence, these interests will be neglected. Then there is another side of the question to which I would like to draw attention. The cost of the police force is charged up against the North-west Territories, as an essentially a North-west Territories' expenditure, as if the North-west Territories were responsible to the Dominion for that expenditure. That is not a fair way of looking at it. If this Dominion sees fit in its wisdom to support a military force, a force of infantry, of artillery and of cavalry in the eastern provinces, some in St. John, N.B., some at Quebec, and some at Kingston, there is no reason why this Mounted Police force should not also be considered as a part of the military establishment of the country, and there is no reason therefore why that force should be charged against the North-west Territories any more than the force which is stationed at Kingston should be charged against Ontario, or that at Quebec should be charged against that province. If it is necessary to support a regular force in this country I claim that the Mounted Police Force is entitled to be considered part of a military force, and not to be charged against the North-west Territories as a special expenditure on behalf of that country.

Grant for Schools, North-west Territories..... $248,979

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move to reduce that item by $6,000. There was a mistake in making up the figures.

Mr. OLIVER. Is there any intention on the part of the Government to increase the grant to schools and to the Government of the Territories this year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have it under consideration.

Dominion Lands..... $90,938

Mr. SPROULE. I thought the commissioner was dismissed and that the Government were closing up the offices in Winnipeg?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The commissioner will do the work here that has been done in Winnipeg by the commissioner there.

Mr. SPROULE. Then there would be no economy in it? The only difference is that the office will be here instead of at Winnipeg.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will look at the item he will see that there is a decrease of $27,000.

Mr. SPROULE. But there will be no saving with regard to that particular item for the commissioner. I think the Minister will find, after a trial, that a great deal of the work could be done much more satisfactorily in Winnipeg, than it can possibly be done from headquarters here.

Mr. CASEY. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a matter which I think is of very considerable importance in connection with surveys. I hope the Minister has taken some steps towards delimiting the boundary between British Columbia and the Territories. I have no doubt that that process will require some preliminary negotiations with the British Columbia Government, but I would like to have an assurance from the Minister that he will shortly take the necessary steps.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say that I have taken any preliminary steps. I have had it under discussion with the Surveyor General and it is one of the matters to which I propose to give my attention when the House rises, for the purpose of seeing if an arrangement can be arrived at. I cannot assure the hon. gentleman that any progress has been made yet.

To meet cost of arbitration respecting the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. (Payments on account of services rendered may be made to members of the civil service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act)..... $10,000

Mr. SPROULE. Can the Minister of Finance give us any information as to what state of advancement the settlement of these accounts is in ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter I am afraid is not likely to be settled at a very early day. It has made very considerable progress, but it is one of those very slow matters and will occupy some time.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the Minister give us any detailed information as to what line of settlement they have reached ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would rather promise to give the information to the hon. gentleman on concurrence, than to attempt to give it from memory now.

Mr. SPROULE. Very good, give the information on concurrence.

Amount required to pay the city of Winnipeg one-half of the expenses incurred by the city in respect of an outbreak of small-pox among European immigrants in 1893..... $6,389 36

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if any provision has been made for the expense that was incurred by the city of Winnipeg in connection with the epidemic of small-pox at the end of last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that no claim was made on that account, and in consequence no provision has been made for it.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior if this vote is the result of any arrangement with the civic authorities, because the amount actually expended by the city of Winnipeg was some $15,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is half of it. This liability arose from the fact that when small-pox broke out amongst some immigrants who landed in Winnipeg and who had to be taken care of by the city, the city authorities telegraphed to the late Minister of the Interior (Mr. Daly) and he telegraphed back that he would contribute to the expenditure. The question of what that telegram meant was referred to the Department of Justice, and that department gave the opinion that the interpretation of it must be that the Government would be called upon to pay one-half of the amount. I do not know by what process of reasoning that opinion was arrived at ; but I presume it was in this way. When a contribution is agreed upon between individuals, if no definite proportion of the contribution is provided for, it is supposed to be in equal shares. I suppose that is the process of reasoning by which the Deputy Minister arrived at the conclusion. Mr. Daly then endeavoured to settle with the Winnipeg authorities, and a dispute arose as to what amount ought to have been expended, and the officials of the department undertook to tax the bill of expense. Mr. Daly finally offered $5,000 as half of what he thought would be a reasonable expenditure. The city of Winnipeg refused positively to accept that, and when the matter came before me, I came to the conclusion, after looking through all the papers, that there was no basis on which the bill could be taxed down, and while I would not be prepared to say that the officers who said that the bill was too high were wrong, neither would I be prepared to say that the city was wrong. The city authorities dealt with the case to the best of their ability, with no desire to waste any money, and I decided to pay one-half of what the city of Winnipeg had paid. I may say to the hon. member for Winnipeg that so far as the department is concerned, this is final.

Mr. JAMESON. I may say that this is a perpetually-recurring nuisance to the city of Winnipeg. Through the negligence of the officials of the Dominion Government, disease is brought into the city by these immigrants, and we have to go to the expense of isolating the patients, and it is not fair that the whole expense should be imposed upon the city. A case of small-pox occurred in the immigration buildings under the direct care of the Government officials, and the officer in charge sent the patient to the General Hospital and put him in the measles ward, thereby spreading the disease, and rendering our children liable to contract it. When I discovered the disease last year, I took the precaution to place the patient in the isolation hospital, in order to protect the health of the city. I am glad to say that we succeeded in limiting the cases to about four, two of which were those of our own citizens, one of whom died from the disease. This was traceable to the negligence of the officials of the Dominion Government. These cases arose out of a case that developed in the steamer and was brought to the city of Winnipeg ; and this is the sort of thing to which we are liable, and which may occur over and over again. It is not at all a light matter for my constituents. It is a matter in which we have a right to claim the full expense from the Dominion Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says, and, with the object of minimizing the danger as far as possible, I have taken steps to have a temporary isolation building provided in connection with the immigration building at Winnipeg, and I have reason to believe that, under the arrangements that will be made very shortly, the danger will be minimized to such an extent that there will be no reason to apprehend any real danger in the future.

Mr. DAVIN. My attention was directed to this case, and I can entirely support my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Jameson). I consider it a hardship that the full expense that Winnipeg was put to has not been met by the Government. We had a similar case in the North-west Territories. We had two patients in the hospital at Medicine Hat, and we have never been able to get the pay from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). The same danger exists in the city of Halifax and in the city of Montreal as in Winnipeg; but in the various hospitals in these places care is taken to isolate cases of contagious disease. If a small-pox patient were let loose in a general hospital, the city would be rendered liable to some expense, and I believe, to the whole expense.

Mr. ELLIS. If the people of Winnipeg, simply because a case of small-pox occurs among the immigrants, can saddle the whole expense of dealing with it upon the country, we on the Atlantic seaboard shall be glad to do the same thing. In the seaport towns it often happens that sailors and others, acting in the interests of the commerce of the country, who come in bring disease with them, and the city or the province is put to the expense of stamping it out. What is good for one part of the country ought to be good for another part. I protest against the city of Winnipeg getting anything. These immigrants are brought in at the expense of the whole country for the particular benefit of Manitoba and the Territories, and simply because there is a little sour with the sweet, they must escape all the burdens, and place them on the entire country. I do not know anything about the management of the hospital at Winnipeg, but this would seem to be a matter of local concern. The Minister is opening the door for a considerable demand from all the ports of Canada where cases of small-pox occur.

Mr. JAMESON. The difference is this: These immigrants passed through Grosse Isle, where the medical officer was supposed to have given them a clean bill of health.

Mr. ELLIS. That makes the case all the stronger against the hon. gentleman. The immigrants were inspected, and passed the medical inspection.

Mr. JAMESON. What is the use of the inspection?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). They were inspected by the quarantine officers, and there was no disease among them: when they came into the country.

EXTENSION OF THE I. C. R.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved that the House, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to confirm the following agreement entered into, with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and the Drummond County Railway Company and Her Majesty in the interest of Canada, for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal.

This agreement, made this fifteenth day of May, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven.

Between the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, hereinafter called "the Company," of the first part, and Her Majesty Queen Victoria, represented herein by the Honourable the Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, who is herein referred to as "the Minister," Her Majesty so represented being hereinafter called or referred to as "Her Majesty," of the second part.

Whereas Her Majesty purposes extending the Intercolonial Railway, a government railway of Canada, from Chaudière Junction, in the province of Quebec, to the city of Montreal, in said province, with termini in that city;

And whereas Her Majesty has made arrangements with the Drummond County Railway Company for the lease of all its railway now completed or hereafter to be completed between Chaudière Junction and Ste. Rosalie, in the said province of Quebec;

And whereas for the purpose of carrying out the said extension the said company is willing that, for the conducting of the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, Her Majesty shall have an undivided one-half share or leasehold interest in the company's railway and property between and including Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert station at the eastern end of the Victoria Bridge, together with the use of the company's railway and property between and including Ste. Rosalie and Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal, the use of the Victoria Bridge across the River St. Lawrence and of the terminals and connections hereinafter more particularly described, together with an undivided one-half interest in and use of the bridge across the Chaudière River, and of so much of the tracks and line of the said company in connection therewith as are hereinafter described, all of which right, title, property, interest and user shall be used, enjoyed and exercised to the same extent as if the said railway and property were owned by Her Majesty, in the manner and upon the terms and conditions herein contained ;

And whereas this agreement has been executed subject to confirmation by Act of Parliament as hereinafter provided and also by the shareholders of said company ;

And whereas by order of the Governor General in Council dated the twenty-fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, authority is given to the Minister subject to the sanction of Parliament to enter into a contract with the company for the acquisition of the above rights

Now this indenture witnesseth that the expression "Joint Section," wherever used in this indenture, shall mean the company's line and connections at Ste. Rosalie, and the whole line and branches and appurtenances hereby demised from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert and the Victoria Bridge, together with the terminals at Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal, and at Point St. Charles and intermediate points between Point St. Charles and Bonaventure station, and the connections and junctions of the company's lines with other lines of railway and the Chaudière Bridge and connections, except when the meaning shall conflict with the context or otherwise plainly expressed terms of the clause in which the same is used. That the said company in consideration of the rents, covenants, conditions and agreements hereinafter contained and reserved hath given, granted, demised and leased and by these presents doth give, grant, demise and lease unto Her Majesty, Her successors and assigns all an undivided one-half share, interest, right and title to all the company's line of railway roadbed and property from and including Ste. Rosalie station in the county of Bagot, in the province of Quebec to the Victoria Bridge, and also the undivided one-half right, share, title or interest in the company's line of railway from a point on the western side of the Chaudière Bridge at the proposed junction of the Drummond County Railway with the company's line, and including the Chaudière Bridge and to and including the switch at the eastern side of the Chaudière Junction station, being the same rights and privileges agreed to be leased to the Drummond County Railway by the company, with the full and unlimited right and privileges such as the company itself enjoys of running the engines, vehicles, rolling stock and trains of the said Intercolonial Railway either separately or combined and as frequently and at such times as its business and traffic may require and in both directions over any and every portion of the said company's railway between and including the said points aforesaid and the use of the Victoria Bridge across the River St. Lawrence as it at present exists or as it may at any time during the subsistence of this lease be improved, re-constructed, enlarged or extended and over the company's line and lines of railway over the said Victoria Bridge and into the Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal and the other terminal points, junctions and connections of the said company on the said Island of Montreal hereinafter more particularly described, together with the full and unlimited right and privilege of having the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway done in and about the stations and premises of the said company upon any portions of the company's line hereinbefore described and of the terminals and connections herein mentioned and all intermediate stations and premises of the company and in and about and upon all stations, tracks and sidings, branches or extensions belonging to or leased by the company or connected with the tracks of the company, together with the full and unlimited right in Her Majesty of constructing stations, tracks, branches and sidings, and connecting said tracks, branches and sidings, with the main branch and leased line of the company at any point or points between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained for the term of ninety-nine years from and after the first day of November, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, with the right of renewal as hereinafter provided. The construction of such stations, tracks, branches and sidings, with the main branch and leased lines of the company as herein provided for shall, however, be made under the supervision and subject to the approval of the chief engineer of the company, which right of approval shall be reasonably exercised.

To have and to hold said rights and privileges unto Her Majesty, Her successors and assigns from and after the first day of November, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, for the term of ninety-nine years, yielding and paying therefor to the said company, its successors and assigns, a yearly rental of one hundred and forty thousand dollars ($140,000), and such rent to be payable in equal sums monthly, that is to say, eleven thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents ($11,666.66) on the first week day of every month in each year or a proportionate sum for any fractional part of a month, the first payment to be made on the first week day of the month next following the day on which Her Majesty goes into possession of the said leased lines and property and begins to run trains over the same :

And these presents are made upon and subject to the provisions and conditions hereinafter expressed and contained for the due performance and observance of all of which, on the part of each of them to be done and performed, Her Majesty and the company bind themselves and each of them respectively, their successors and assigns, that is to say :—

First.—That Her Majesty shall and will during the continuance of this lease or any renewal thereof pay to the company the rent hereby reserved in the manner and at the times hereinbefore mentioned without any deduction whatever, save for the reasons and on account of the happening of any or either contingency or contingencies hereinafter mentioned.

Second.—That the company shall and will keep up and maintain at all times in good repair and in a thorough efficient working condition the whole of the railway tracks, bridges, switches, sidings, signals, buildings of all kinds, platforms, water-tanks, water supplies, telegraph lines and appliances, fences, crossings and all other appurtenances and appliances belonging to the company's railway between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, and of the terminals and connections herein described and between the Chaudière Bridge and connections, the right and privilege of using which is included in this demise.

Third.—That Her Majesty shall and will pay to the company a share of the cost of maintenance of this railway between and including Ste.

Rosalie and Point St. Charles and Chaudière Bridge and connections, including tracks, bridges, switches, sidings, signals, appliances of all kinds, platforms, water-tanks, water supplies, fuel stations, fences, crossings and all other appurtenances and appliances it has the right and privileges of using which is included in this demise, such share of the cost of maintenance to be in the proportion that the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains running over the above mentioned sections of railway bears to the total combined engine and car mileage over the above mentioned sections of railway during each month, every engine, passenger and freight car counting each as one car, and from Point St. Charles and west to Bonaventure station, including the yards, such share of the cost of maintenance as aforesaid to be in the proportion that the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains running over the above last mentioned railway section and yards bears to the total combined engine and car mileage running over the above last mentioned section of the railway during each month; but notwithstanding anything herein mentioned, the cost of maintenance of the Victoria Bridge shall not include the cost of maintaining any part or portion thereof except that which shall be used by the Intercolonial Railway and the company, and for that class of railway purpose, which cost of maintenance shall be apportioned as aforesaid.

Fourth.—That Her Majesty shall have the right for all purposes of the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, under the reasonable rules and regulations of the company, to the full and unlimited use and the full and unlimited access thereto, as the same is or may be enjoyed by the company itself, of, to and from all engine houses, car houses and sheds, fuel sheds, water-tanks, station houses, freight and ticket offices, warehouses, freight sheds, baggage rooms, dining rooms, and all furniture and fittings appertaining thereto; all weighing scales and baggage and freight trucks; all tracks, sidings, branches or extensions either belonging to or leased by the company at Montreal, including the terminals and other connections of the company at Point St. Charles and intermediate points between Point St. Charles and Bonaventure station, and of the connections with other railways as the same now exist or as they may hereafter be built, rebuilt or improved upon terms as herein specified.

Fifth.—That if any of the said buildings or accommodations or facilities or anything appertaining thereto be destroyed by fire or other casualty, either in whole or in part, Her Majesty shall have no claim against the company for damages on account of loss of accommodation, but Her Majesty shall have, free of any other charge than the aforementioned rental, a proportionate share of such accommodation as the company may be able to provide for the use of its business and traffic and of the new accommodation as soon as the same may be provided, and reconstruction shall be proceeded with of such buildings and accommodation by the company at its own cost with all reasonable despatch.

Forty-second.—That in order to facilitate and develop the business of the Intercolonial Railway and the company, every effort shall be made to cause close and suitable train connections to be made at Montreal between the trains of the company west of Montreal and the Intercolonial Railway.

which case the division of rates and fares shall be settled on a reasonable and equitable basis by mutual agreement, and in default of agreement, by arbitration as herein provided.

Forty-fourth.—That as regards traffic shipped to and from Europe and the British Isles through Halifax per Intercolonial Railway, the rates of the company for the carriage of such traffic east of Montreal shall not be higher per passenger per mile, and per ton of freight per mile than the amount per passenger per mile, and per ton of freight per mile, charged by the company on similar classes or descriptions of traffic carried by it for others to and from the same places, and intended for or coming from the same place in Europe or the British Isles. In ascertaining such rates of freight, all drawbacks or deductions allowed are to be taken off before fixing the rates.

Forty-seventh.—That should any difficulty arise between Her Majesty and the company under any clause of this agreement, or respecting the carrying out of the same according to its true intent and meaning, such differences shall from time to time, as the same may arise, be referred to the award and determination of three arbitrators, one of whom shall be nominated by the Minister, one by the company, and the third by the two so nominated; provided always, that if either party should for one month after notice that the other has nominated its arbitrator, omit or refuse to make a nomination, or if the two nominated should refuse or omit to nominate the third, then the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, or in his absence or refusal or inability to act, the Senior Puisne Judge present in Ottawa and willing to act, may on the application of either party on notice to the other nominate the required arbitrator.

Forty-eighth.—In case of the death or refusal to act of any arbitrator, or if for any other cause the office of any arbitrator becomes vacant, his successor shall be nominated in the same manner as is provided for his appointment in the first instance, unless the parties otherwise agree, and in case such successor be not nominated by the party entitled to nominate him, within one month after the happening of the vacancy, and after receiving notice requiring him to make such nomination, then the said Chief Justice, under the circumstance aforesaid, or the Senior Puisne Judge willing to act, may on the application of either party, nominate such successor.

Forty-ninth.—The arbitrators so chosen shall, within one month after the last appointment, proceed to determine the matters referred, and they, or a majority of them shall make and publish their award within one month thereafter, or within such further time as they shall in writing appoint, such extension of time to be made by a majority of the arbitrators, and the award of a majority of them shall be final.

Fiftieth.—Nothing herein contained shall in any way merge or affect the claims or rights of Her Majesty, if any such there be, as they now exist against the company or the property of the company other than that which is the subject matter of this agreement.

In witness whereof these presents (in quadruplicate) have been signed by the Honourable the Minister of Railways and Canals, pursuant to Order in Council dated the 24th March, A. ### TRADE WITH THE EMPIRE.

Mr. McNEILL. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to call the attention of the House, and of the Government especially, to a very startling statement that comes across the Atlantic to us. It is a matter, I think, of the very greatest possible importance, not only to this country but to the Empire at large, and I sincerely hope that we shall be able to obtain from the Government some statement that will set at rest the very grave fear that will be entertained here when this statement becomes known and widely circulated in Canada. I will, with your permission, just read a telegram to the "Evening Post," of New York, from London, and which is reproduced in this morning's Ottawa "Citizen," and which contains statements of the gravest possible nature, and statements which, if they are true, would be, I am sure, to many of us, most distressing :

Mr. Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian Premier, has given a new and somewhat dramatic turn to the talk of schemes of Imperial unity and agrandizement of which the air in England is very full just now. Every other colonial premier now here, while overflowing with expressions of loyalty, is assuring England of the dire consequences if she will not barter away her free trade in exchange for tariff preference in colonial markets. The Duke of Devonshire's speech at Liverpool on Saturday, following Mr. Chamberlain's lukewarm attitude towards free trade, is interpreted as indicating the readiness of the Imperial Government to make some move in the direction of Imperial customs union, when the question comes up in conference between Mr. Chamberlain and the Premiers. This may include duties on such foreign imports as wheat, flour and wheat from America, and the Argentine, as competing with Canadian and Australian products.

This was part of Mr. Chamberlain's Zollverein idea. It is at this interesting moment that Mr. Laurier steps forward and declares the Zollverein to be mere protection, and asserts that protection, which has been the curse and bane of Canada, to be the greatest possible mistake for England and the Empire. "By our tariff," says Mr. Laurier, "we in Canada give you preference as a free gift. We ask nothing in return; we do not desire you to abandon the grand principles of free trade; we desire rather to follow in your free trade lead, trading where trading is most natural. Protection must weaken you, and so hurt the Empire, and Canada as part of it."

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to do more than ask a question on calling orders of the day, he will have to take some other course.

Mr. McNEILL. If you rule so, I will conclude with a motion. You will agree that the facts are of such importance—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not object to the question, but the hon. gentleman must confine himself to the question.

Mr. McNEILL. It requires very little comment indeed, and I have very little intention of commenting upon it. I hope that we shall be able to obtain from the Government some statement, or an assurance that the Prime Minister has been in no way authorized by the Government, and that it is not the desire of the Government that the Prime Minister should do anything to discourage preferential trade within the Empire in the sense of a preference given to British colonies by the mother country and by the colonies to the mother country and to one another as against foreign nations. We have the statement here, it was unnecessary that that statement should be made, because it was very well understood that Mr. Chamberlain's great speech, his epoch marking speech, last year pointed to the fact that he was in favour of some such arrangement.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman conclude with a motion?

Mr. McNEILL. I will conclude with a motion if you say so. If there ever was an occasion when it was justifiable to do so, this is one.

Mr. SPEAKER. I only desire that the hon. member should comply with the rules.

Mr. McNEILL. That is Mr. Chamberlain's policy, that is the policy of the Colonial Secretary. It is evident from the speech of the Duke of Devonshire that that is the direction in which the present Imperial Government are moving, in the direction of a policy of that kind, and I would like to have, and I am sure this House would like to have, and I feel satisfied that the country would like to have, from the Government an assurance that on their part there is no desire to put any obstacle in the way of Canada getting a preference as against foreign nations in the British markets for her goods, nor in the way of this great policy which applies, not merely to Canada, but to the Empire as a whole. And certainly the hon. gentleman will remember, and the Government will remember, that this was the policy of the great Colonial Conference representing the whole of the Colonial Empire held here some years ago. Any movement in the direction which is pointed out in this cablegram is a movement to break up the concert of the colonies on this great question; it is not only a retrograde step, but a retrograde step of the most dreadful nature at the present moment. It is taking that step at the very moment when we had every reason to suppose that our efforts would be crowned with success; it is at this moment of all others that the Prime Minister of Canada steps forward, according to this statement, which I sincerely trust is not a true statement—steps forward and throws his weight into the scale against that concert of the colonies which was established here some few years ago. When I say concert, I do not mean to say it was an absolute concert, but I mean to say it was practically a concert of the colonies. Of course this is only a newspaper paragraph, but it will carry a certain amount of weight, and it is one that certainly contains circumstantial evidence within itself which gives it the appearance of truth. That is my excuse, therefore, for calling the attention of the Government to the matter, in order that we may have, if possible, from them a repudiation of the policy that is stated here in this paragraph to have been pursued by the Prime Minister. I hope that the statement contained in this cable message is not true. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to another statement, which is contained in this message sent to us across the ocean:

Asked as to the Duke of Devonshire's scheme of Imperial naval defence, under which the West Indies are being fortified, Mr. Laurier said: "There is only one country with whom Canada ever could be at war. That country is the United States, and war with the United States is a contingency I refuse to discuss. Such a war would be not only a folly, but a crime. That being so, what need has Canada of great schemes of naval defence? We are devoted to the British rule, and grateful for it; but we are satisfied as we are until the need arises in the course of our national development for a change."

Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me—if that be a statement of Mr. Laurier's—that he has surely taken a most extraordinary stand. What is the meaning of saying, that the only country with which Canada could be at war, is the United States? Surely Mr. Laurier, and surely every statesman in Canada knows, that if any other country declares war upon the United Kingdom, that is a declaration of war against Canada. If, for instance, Russia should declare war; if out of this unhappy trouble in the East there should be a declaration of war by Russia against the mother country, that is a declaration of war against Canada. Under such circumstances we would be at war with Russia, and we would be one of the very first countries to suffer. It is to me almost inconceivable that such a statement should be made by Mr. Laurier, and I sincerely hope that the Government will be able to assure this House, that so far as they are concerned, they do not entertain the sentiments and views in this cable message, which I trust is but a travesty and a misrepresentation of anything that Mr. Laurier could have said in England.

I beg, Mr. Speaker, to move the adjournment of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I regret that my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill) should have thought it worth his while to occupy the time of this House with a matter of this kind. I for my part wholly and absolutely refuse to discuss any of these cable messages or cable reports. I have perfect confidence that my hon. friend the Premier will act with due care and discretion in all his utterances. I have had ample experience, as every man in this House in his own individual case has had of the utter folly and absurdity of trusting to newspaper reports as to the language that may be used by responsible statesmen in cases such as these that are now occurring in England. Until we obtain full and perfect reports of what Mr. Laurier has said, from much better sources, I for one entirely decline to be drawn into any discussion on vague hypotheses and imaginations, as to what construction may be placed on his words, conveyed to us through the medium of a cable message.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can quite understand the course pursued by the hon. the leader of the House on this occasion, because we have learned from the most conclusive evidence, how easy it is in the transmission of cable messages, to have very misleading views placed before us. The leader of the House, therefore, is quite in a position to take the ground that there is not sufficient evidence before the House to require the Government to deal with this matter. My hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) based his comments on this cable message, and I am glad that the case so ably and forcibly made out by that hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) has not met with any repudiation from the Government benches. I am extremely glad that no member of the Government is disposed for a single moment, to assume that the Prime Minister of Canada has adopted in England a course entirely at variance with the policy laid down by a vote of this Parliament on more than one occasion. I am glad that the members of the Government have refused to entertain the impression, that the Premier of Canada has repudiated the action of the other colonies, announced at the Colonial Conference in Ottawa, in regard to the great question of preferential trade within the Empire. I refuse to believe that the Prime Minister of Canada, having gone from hustings to hustings with the positive declaration that he was as emphatically in favour of preferential trade within the Empire as Sir Charles Tupper, and that if the people of Canada returned him to power, he pledged himself solemnly that one of the first uses he would make of that power, would be to send a commission to England to negotiate with Lord Salisbury, preferential trade within the Empire—I refuse to believe, that in view of that pledge to the people, and in view of the resolutions of the conference between Australasia and South Africa and Canada, Mr. Laurier could have made any such statement in England. I believe there has been a misconception as to what Mr. Laurier has said in England. For him to have adopted such a course as this report indicates, would not only be a breach of faith with the representatives of all the other British colonies, but it would be a declaration that he did not intend to implement the assurances which he gave to the people of Canada, and upon which he obtained power. I think my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) is quite warranted under the circumstances in assuming, that the statements in these cable messages do not warrant him bringing the matter at all under the consideration of the House. These cable reports often come from persons who hold such strong opinions of their own, that they naturally colour the information sent, and until we get more authentic news the leader of the House is justified in the statement he has made.

Motion to adjourn, negatived.

THE EXPORT OF LOGS.

Mr. BENNETT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to call the attention of the leader of the House and of the Controller of Customs, to the following which appears in the Midland "Free Press" of June 10th:—

Collector of Customs Parkhill has been instructed by the Dominion Government not to give clearance papers for rafts of logs from Canada to the United States until he has received the orders of the Government.

In such connection, I would like to ask, if it is correct that such orders have been given, and secondly, if such an order has been given, under what principle of law or practice has it been given. And, what are the orders that is intended should follow this notice?

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). It would be a little more convenient if the hon. gentleman would allow me, during the recess, to make inquiries in reference to the matter, and I can give him the information at the afternoon session.

Mr. BENNETT. Very well.

THE WESTERN MILLS.

Mr. TAYLOR. As the Postmaster General is not in his place, I wish to ask the leader of the House, what arrangements have been made for carrying the mails west from Brockville, which leave Ottawa in the morning by the Canadian Pacific Railway at 11 o'clock. The Grand Trunk Railway inaugurated a new time-table yesterday, by which the mail train passes Brockville before the arrival of the Canadian Pacific Railway train. As I understand it now, the mail leaving here at 11 o'clock in the morning will reach Brockville in due time, but will have to remain there till three o'clock the following morning before it goes west. Surely we could have a better mail service to Gananoque and Kingston and other points, than under the present system?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have no information at all on the subject, but I quite see that if the matter is arranged in the fashion that the hon. gentleman mentions, very great inconvenience would be caused to the public. If it be in the power of the department to remedy it, I should think they will lose no time in doing so.

ISAAC'S HARBOUR POST OFFICE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand the Postmaster General is not in town to-day.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Postmaster General is absent on very special service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have no doubt. I would like to take this opportunity, as it may be the only one open to me, to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General, through his colleagues, the case of the postmaster at Isaac's Harbour, in the county of Guysborough, so that he may state before the close of the session the grounds of the dismissal of that postmaster, who for twenty-two years has held the office.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like the hon. member to observe that a question of that kind is not of sufficient public interest to be mentioned before the Orders of the Day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am quite aware of that, and I was going to say, if attention were called to the matter, that I am not going to discuss it at all. I am asking the indulgence of the House to allow me to put the question, which at this period of the session I am not able to do in the regular way.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). If the hon. gentleman would kindly send me a memorandum of the matter, I will endeavour to obtain an answer for him as soon as the Postmaster General returns.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Instead of troubling the hon. gentleman, I will conclude the sentence I began by saying that the postmaster held the office for twenty-two years, and that seven-eighths of the electorate of the district petitioned for his retention; and my question was simply what the reason was for his dismissal.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, although I do not wish to inflict on the House too much of Tupper's "proverbial philosophy," I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) when he will be able, if he has not already done so, to lay on the Table of the House the memorandum which I handed to him with reference to the Alaskan boundary, and which he said he would have printed and distributed among the members of the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I referred the memorandum at once to Mr. King, the chief astronomer of my department, and in reply I received from him a memorandum in which he stated that there were certain inaccuracies in the report which the hon. gentleman had given to me, and he questioned whether it would be advisable to print it. I had intended to show Mr. King's report to the hon. gentleman, which I will do.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman have both the report and the criticisms printed, and submit them both together. It is a question of great importance, involving a long strip of twenty miles of the richest territory of Canada, which perhaps may be alienated from Canada to the United States.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is possible that the course suggested by the hon. gentleman might be followed; but I have not been able, in the pressure of the business of the session, to make up my mind positively whether it would be safe to follow that course or not. The objection taken by Mr. King was that the inaccuracy referred to was such as, if confirmed in any way by the Canadian Government, might be taken as an admission, and used against them afterwards in the dispute which may arise, and it was entirely from motives of caution that I hesitated to have the document printed. The hon. gentleman will see that when a paper is printed and circulated by this Government, unless it is done with distinct limitations, it may be quoted against us, whether we will or no, at a future date, and in a matter of such importance I thought it inadvisable to act hastily or before I had time to give the matter a careful personal examination.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would ask the hon. gentleman either to fulfil the assurance he gave me that the paper would be printed and distributed to the House, or return the paper to me, because it is a matter that does not admit of delay. Action is being taken in the United States Senate, and a year hence this information will be useless. These criticisms, I may say, come from a source that has been recognized again and again by Her Majesty's Government as the highest authority they had in regard to the Alaskan boundary.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the leader of the House if he is in a position to answer the questions with regard to the Royal Military College?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have just received a telegram that the papers were sent last night. I presume they will be here in time to answer the questions this afternoon.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to ask in regard to a return ordered in reference to schedule "D" of the tariff, and also a return in reference to the dismissals which have taken place since the present Government have been in power. I hope no time will be lost in laying these papers upon the Table of the House.

The CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The return asked for by the hon. gentleman from the Department of Customs is very nearly prepared. I would like to say to the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) that the return he moved for involves very much more work, and I fear that it will be impossible, so far as my department is concerned, within a short time to prepare it; but the report asked for by the late leader of the Government (Sir Charles Tupper) will, I think, contain almost all the points which the ex-Finance Minister will particularly care about. I hope that report will be on the Table to-morrow, or at a very early day.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. leader of the Government if he would be kind enough to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the fact that he proposes, as per notice given to-day, to discuss to-morrow the resolutions with regard to the Intercolonial Railway, and that there is certain information which it is absolutely necessary should be laid on the Table of the House to-day. This includes the traffic returns of the Drummond County Railway, reports as to the state and condition of the Drummond County Railway, and a statement of the rolling stock and railway supplies, as mentioned in section 8 of the agreement.

Mr. HAGGART. I would ask at the same time that a report in reference to the same railway, made by the Deputy Minister of the department when I was at the head of the department, be brought down.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Do you know the date of it?

Mr. HAGGART. No. It would be a little over a year ago.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As we are so near the close of the session, I am sure it would be a matter of great interest to the House, if, some time before prorogation, the hon. leader of the House took an opportunity of stating the present position of a question of great public interest, that is, the Pacific Cable, upon which action has been taken both by the late Government and by the present Government, but as to which, down to the present time, for reasons which I dare say are sufficient, no report has been laid before the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I may state at once all that I am able to state in reference to that question. That is one of the matters which I understand, as soon as the ceremonial pageants are through, will engage the attention of the Colonial Premiers. Beyond that I am hardly in a position to make any statement, but it will be one of the subjects for discussion.

NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved second reading of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 105) to amend the Act respecting the Protection of Navigable Waters. He said: The amendment is a very slight one made by the Senate to the Bill respecting the protection of navigable waters. It merely gives a fuller definition to the word "owner" so as to make that term include not only the registered owner at the time of the wreck, but any subsequent purchaser, the idea being that when the owner of the wreck wishes to get rid of liability, he transfers the wreck to a person not worth a cent and so escapes liabilities for the cost of removal.

Amendment read the second time and concurred in.

DEPARTMENTS OF CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Mr. Davies) moved second reading of Bill (No. 125) respecting the Departments of Customs and Inland Revenue. He said: I do not wish to go into committee until the afternoon. The resolution authorizing the payment of salaries to the officials mentioned in the Bill was passed this morning, and I cannot go into committee until the afternoon. I wish to say that when the Bill was reprinted there was a clause, which was inserted in the Bill originally, left out. That is the clause providing that the salary of the said Ministers be $5,000 and continue at that rate until readjustment of the departments of the Government shall reduce the number of Ministers holding departments to thirteen or less, whereupon and thereafter the salary of each Minister shall be $7,000 per annum. When we go into committee this afternoon, I intend to move that clause which was originally in the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Bill (No. 114) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

2. The paragraph lettered (c.) of section 2 of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"c. The expression 'Lieutenant-Governor in Council' means the Lieutenant-Governor of the Territories, by and with the advice and consent of the Executive Council of the Territories, or in conjunction with the Executive Council of the Territories, as the case may be."

Mr. FOSTER. What is the difference?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). We are simply bringing the definition of Lieutenant-Governor in Council in the Territories into line with the definition of Lieutenant-Governor in Council in the provinces.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are taking away the personal action of the Lieutenant-Governor and making him act with his Council.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

On section 8,

8. Subsection one of section six of chapter twenty-two of the statutes of 1891 is hereby amended by striking out the words "at any time in force in" in the fifth line thereof, and substituting in lieu thereof the words "declared to be applicable to."

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move in amendment to strike out the words "subsection 1 of" so that the clause will read "section 6 of chap. 22 of the statutes of 1891." At the time the Bill was introduced I explained that one of the provisions was we should strike out the limitation in the Act relating to the Northwest Territories, preventing the legislative assembly legislating with regard to insurance companies. The clause was accidentally omitted to have that effect, and I beg to move the amendment which will effect the intention explained at the time the Bill was introduced. The Act at present in force gives the legislative assembly authority on certain subjects, among which are the following:—The incorporation of companies with territorial objects with the following exceptions"—and among the exceptions are "insurance companies." The amendment that I move would strike out this exception of insurance companies.

Amendment agreed to, and section was amended agreed to.

On section 9,

9. Section eighteen of chapter seventeen of the statutes of 1894 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"18. No person holding any office, commission or employment to which an annual salary from the Crown is attached, shall be eligible as a member of the Legislative Assembly, or shall sit or vote therein, during the time he holds such office, commission or employment; but nothing herein contained shall render ineligible any member of the Executive Council of the Territories, by reason of any salary, fee, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind or amount attaching to such membership, from being a member of the Assembly, or shall disqualify him from sitting or voting therein: Provided he is elected while holding such office, and is not otherwise disqualified."

Mr. DAVIN. I think that the old section No. 18, passed in 1894, was quite right under the circumstances of that time:

No member of the Executive Committee of the Territories shall, by reason of any salary, fee, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind or amount attaching to such membership, be disqualified from sitting or voting in the Legislative Assembly.

As I understand the new clause it simply provides that when a member of the Assembly accepts office he will have to go back for re-election.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, that is the usual clause; it provides that members accepting office shall go back to the people for re-election.

Mr. SIFTON.

On section 10,

Section forty-nine of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"49. The court shall sit in banc at such times and places as the Lieutenant-Governor in Council appoints; the senior judge present shall preside, and three judges of the court shall constitute a quorum."

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I understand that there is some objection to that section and I am prepared to move that it be struck out.

Amendment agreed to,

On section 11,

11. Subsection one of section fifty-six of the said Act, as amended by section eight of chapter twenty-two of the statutes of 1891, is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:—
